REGULAR SESSION OF 63D CONGRESS TO BEGIN AT NOON

For First Time in Years Congress Steps Over From One Session to Another Without a Break.

PRESIDENT WILL READ HIS MESSAGE TUESDAY

Session Promises to Be Crowded With Important Projects and Prolific in Legislative Enactment.

Washington, November 30.—The interest usually surrounding the opening of a new session of congress will be absent from the events of tomorrow. While the first session of the sixty-third congress will end at noon, and the second session will be ushered in by formal proclamation of the president and the speaker of the house, the status of legislation will be little different from what it was when senate and house adjourned Saturday afternoon.

President Wilson will appear before the two houses at 1 o'clock Tuesday, and read his annual message at a joint session in the house chamber. Aside from this formality, inaugurated by President Wilson last April at the start of the special session, and the presentation in the house tomorrow of the annual estimates for federal expenditures, the first days of the new session will be scarcely distinguishable from the closing days of the old. For the first time in many years, congress will step over from one session to another, without a break in the routine of business.

Regular Session Begins at Noon.

The senate will meet at 10 o'clock tomorrow, and there will be an intermission of only a few minutes at noon before the regular session begins.

The significance of the new session is in the fact that it opens the floodgates for legislative activity, and inaugurates a period that promises to be crowded with, the consideration of important project and profits in legislative enactment.

The extra session just ending was united by informal agreements with President Wilson, to the consideration of tariff and currency reform, and nothing that might interfere with these issues was taken up. The currency bill still dominates the situation as the new session begins; but the administration program of anti-trust and interstate railroad legislation, which is to follow, must share the field with a number of other important subjects.

It is the hope of democratic leaders that the currency bill can be disposed of in the senate by the end of December, and can be completed by both houses of congress and sent to the president in January. In anticipation of this, the plans for anti-trust legislation will be taken up this week by President Wilson, in conferences with representative Clayton, the house leaders and other members of the judiciary and interstate commerce committees of the two houses.

To Outline Anti-Trust Laws.

The administration is to lay stress upon the proposed strengthening of the anti-trust laws from the outset. It is proposed to have the general plan of legislation laid out in advance of the opening of the subject in house and senate. Other important projects to be taken up in congress early in the year, and that will run concurrently with the anti-trust bills, include:

Further regulation of railroads as to rates and stock issues, government valuation of railroads for Alaska, the trial of trading in cotton and grain futures, federal aid for vocational training, the establishment of a system of rural land banks, independence of the Philippines, constitutional amendment for woman's suffrage, codification of working conditions for merchant sailors, legislation for an interstate commerce commission of the two houses.

Railroads for Alaska.

The bill to give San Francisco water supply rights in the Hetch-Hetchy valley, over which a conservationist fight has raged for more than a year, is set for a vote in the senate December 8. Another agreement calls for consideration immediately afterward of the bill to authorize the construction by government railroads in Alaska. A similar measure has been favorably acted upon by a committee of the house. These bills, it is the senate ratification of a treaty which recently passed the senate, probably will be the first measure of a general character considered by congress.

Extensive hearings will be given by the house committee on judiciary preliminary to any decision as to the form of anti-trust legislation. The first measure to be brought forward probably will be designed to curb the interlocking directorates among industrial concerns. This interlocking has been the subject of repeated attacks by congress and federal investigating bodies. Other subjects of anti-trust program will include prevention of monopolies, overcapitalization, restraint of trade, and the more adequate control of corporations, probably through an interstate corporation commission.

Increased Cost of Living.

Investigations to determine the cause of increased prices in food products are expected to begin soon after the session opens. Resolutions demanding such inquiries are now before congress. Representative McKellar, of Tennessee, has introduced a comprehensive bill to provide for the adequate regulation of cold storage operations and to penalize combinations that control food prices or parcel out selling territory, and other measures of like character will be introduced this week.

President Wilson has indicated his keen interest in the development of a system of rural land banks or credit agencies that will relieve the needs of country districts more adequately than can existing commercial banks. The recent recommendations of the commission that studied rural credit systems in other countries have emphasized the need of such a system. It is expected that soon after the passage of the currency reform bill the work of devising a somewhat like system of rural banks will be undertaken by congress, and an effort made to enact legislation before adjournment next summer.

Naval Building Program.

The naval building program of the year is expected to develop a keen fight between the so-called economy forces, who last year held congress to the authorization of one dreadnought, and the administration forces who will support Secretary Daniels' recommendations for two ships. Other important features of national defense are to be considered by congress, including the Padgett bill to give the naval militia a national standing similar to that enjoyed by the national guard, and the Hobson bill to create a council of national defense to outline the future military and naval policies of the nation.

Plans have not yet been matured by the administration in the Tex bill for Philippine problem. It is expected that renewed efforts will be made by the anti-imperialists to pledge congress to a measure giving early independence to the islands. The fight will be led by Representative Jones, of Virginia, chairman of the house committee on insular affairs.

Aid for Vocation Schools.

The attempt to secure laws giving federal aid to vocation schools and to agricultural extension work also will be renewed early in the winter. These projects, coupled with the fight for laws giving federal aid to the construction of roads in all states, will unite forces that have been at work for several sessions to secure such legislation.

The new session probably will witness more activity prior to Christmas than any session of recent years. Democratic leaders propose to hold the senate to thirteen-hour sessions, with no Christmas vacation, unless the currency bill is passed before the time set for the holiday.

In the house, meantime, an effort will be made to dispose of several of the annual appropriation bills before Christmas so that appropriation legislation will interfere as little as possible with the consideration of other matters.

HUSBAND WAS TOO DULL FOR THE GAY PRINCESS

Beautiful Russian Grand Duchess Leaves Prince William of Sweden.

Stockholm, Sweden, November 30.—Incompatibility of temperament is believed here to be the real reason for the expected divorce of Prince William, second son of the king, from his wife, who was the Grand Duchess Maria Pavlovna, daughter of the Grand Duke Paul Alexandrovitch, and a cousin of the czar. The princess left Stockholm about the same time the Russian minister, M. Savinsky, took his departure. The minister departed soon after the military attache, Colonel Assanovitch, was practically dismissed from Sweden for spying.

All sorts of gossip was caused by this exodus of the Russian contingent. Some reports had it that the princess had been engaged with the minister in the espionage which caused the attache's downfall.

In court circles, however, it is said that the rupture between the young royal couple was not unexpected. The atmosphere of the Swedish household is about the most puritanical to be found in any European court, while the Grand Duchess came from a set of quite opposite tendencies. The prince, although only 29, is a man of serious and scholarly tastes, and without great personal magnetism. He is a captain in the navy, but prefers his books to the quarter deck and has some reputation as a poet. The gay princess, 23 years old, found life in Sweden under the chaperonage of her husband's extremely conventional parents very dull. Hence, it is said, she fled to her father in Paris and refuses to return.

A high court official, the Marshal Printzskjoeld, is in St. Petersburg negotiating terms for a separation of the royal couple. Prince William has announced that part of his wife's fortune that would have come to him according to the terms of the marriage settlement.

The young Prince Lennart, 4-year-old son of the prince and princess, will inherit Oakhull castle, near Stockholm. William is starting for Africa on a big game shooting expedition.

SOLDIERS TO PARADE FOR CORN CLUB BOYS

Treat Arranged for Visitors by Seventeenth Infantry Next Wednesday Afternoon.

WINECOFF AIDS.

Frank Harrell, lessee of the Winecoff hotel, last night notified The Constitution that he would provide rooms at his hotel for twenty of the corn club boys. Mr. Harrell stated that he was very glad to be able to help the chamber of commerce care for the youths who are doing so much toward the betterment of agricultural conditions in Georgia.

There's hardly a boy in the land to whom the sight of military marching and the sound of martial music is not entrancing, and for the Corn club boys coming to be in Atlanta this week Colonel J. T. Van Orsdale, commander of the Seventeenth infantry, United States regulars, at Fort McPherson, has arranged a rare treat.

Next Wednesday afternoon the boys will be guests of the fort and the soldiers will turn out on full dress parade for a review by the Corn club lads. There will also be a musical drill as part of the afternoon's entertainment.

Homes for 650 boys who will be in Atlanta Tuesday for the Corn club exhibits have been provided, and as there are approximately 1,000 boys expected the committee in charge is looking every effort to secure additional homes. The boys will be asked to report directly to the capitol when they arrive Tuesday and from there they will be assigned to places to stay.

It is expected that there will be about thirty exhibits from the Girls' tomato clubs also and these will be placed in the rotunda of the first floor near the governor's office. The boys' exhibits will take up part of the first floor and a great part of the second floor.

EXPECT ATLANTA TO DO HER PART

This Was Reason Other Cities Subscribed So Liberally to Oglethorpe, Dr. Jacobs Tells Congregation.

CAMPAIGN OPENS TODAY.

This morning will see the inauguration of a great whirlwind campaign on the part of over 100 loyal Atlantans, under the direction of Ivan Allen, to raise the $250,000 fund for the Oglethorpe university. The fund raisers will start out during the early hours and meet at a luncheon at the Hotel Piedmont today at noon when they will, during the lunch hour, announce their success. A tally will be made of the amounts reported and from day to day this tally will be published in full. Every day until the full fund is raised the various workers will meet at lunch.

Exactly why it is up to Atlanta to raise the $250,000 to found Oglethorpe university, was explained by Dr. Thornwell Jacobs in an address at the Westminister Presbyterian church yesterday morning.

The whole south outside of Atlanta, he said, had given magnificent support to the fund, on the assumption that Atlanta would do her share.

This implicit confidence in Atlanta on the part of other cities, he said, was due to the fact that the Atlanta Spirit has never failed in a noble undertaking in the past, and a sincere belief that she could not fail to measure up on this occasion.

All Have Done Their Part.

Dr. Jacobs told of how he and his associates had gone over the south and raised $300,000 on the assumption that Atlanta would raise $250,000, and that nowhere had any individual or any community doubted that Atlanta would do her part.

He cited the magnificent subscriptions made in Newnan, Griffin, Conyers, Covington, LaGrange and a dozen other towns both in Georgia and outside the state. He called attention to the pace set by the village of Chamblee, which has given an average of over $34 per person. He showed that the average subscription outside Atlanta has been about $400.

The "Atlanta Spirit," he said, had reacted all over the south, and that the confidence of the whole south in this spirit was the thing that made it easy to raise the outside money.

Make Good, Atlanta!

Now, he pointed out, the time had come for Atlanta to make good and justify the confidence expressed throughout the south. The eyes of the south, he said, would be on Atlanta. The active campaign would begin Monday morning. The strongest committees ever organized for such a purpose would begin the active canvass He expressed the greatest confidence in the sure success of the big movement.

An evidence of the fine spirit in which all Atlanta is rallying to this cause is shown in the fact that all denominations, all creeds are lending their material help and moral support. In fact, Dr. Jacobs' first address on the subject last Sunday week was from the pulpit of the St. Mark's Methodist church. Next Sunday he will speak from the Central Congregational pulpit, and later in the First Baptist church. All denominations are aiding in the work.

SYMPATHY IS SHOWN FOR GENERAL ZELAYA

Latin-American Students Tell Wilson That Zelaya Is Victim of Political Plot.

New York, November 30.—A delegation of students from Latin-American countries, who are attending Johns Hopkins university and other colleges in Baltimore, arrived here today to offer their sympathy to Jose Santos Zelaya, the deposed president of Nicaragua, who is held in the Tombs awaiting a decision as to his extradition upon a warrant charging him with murder of two Nicaraguans.

The students brought with them a copy of a petition to President Wilson in which they assert that General Zelaya is the victim of a political plot formed partly in this country and partly in Guatemala, and that its purpose is to get him out of the way because he knows too much about the operation of concession hunters from the United States in Guatemala and in his own country. It is asserted in the petition that the plot is merely continuation of the plot through which General Zelaya was ousted from the Nicaraguan presidency.

The plan of the Baltimore students, as outlined by one of their number, is to have the petition given to Lansing-in-American students in New York as well as those in Baltimore, and to carry it by a special train to Washington to present it to the president and to the senate and house.

General Zelaya received Rigio Rosales, a representative of the Baltimore students, today, but Rosales refused to speak of his visit.

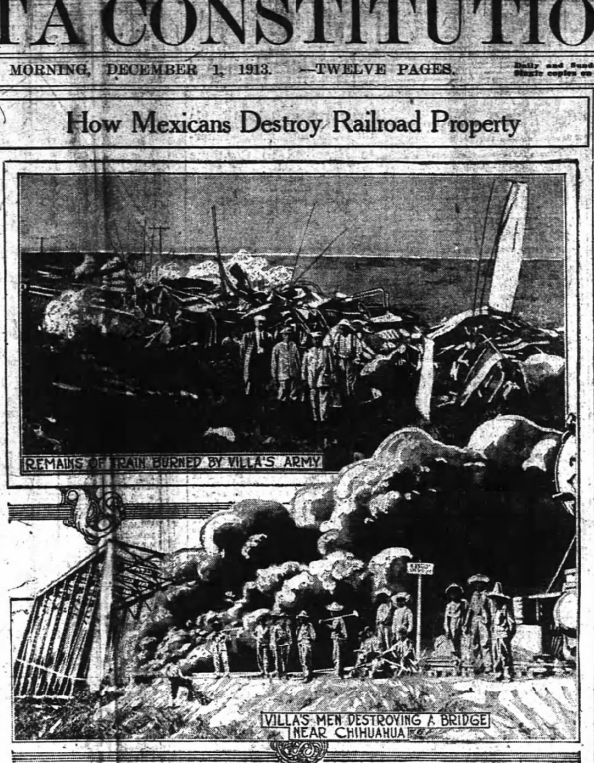
DECISIONS EXPECTED BY SUPREME COURT

Washington, November 30.—The justices of the supreme court, in closed conferences, have given final touches to a number of decisions to be announced tomorrow. More than 75 cases are now awaiting final action by the court, but which of these the justices have been considering during the Thanksgiving recess remained a mystery tonight.

The Kentucky state rate case, the railroad oil land grant cases from California, the so-called book publishers' anti-trust suit, the interstate rate cases and the New York harbor sugar lighterage case have been under consideration since last spring and decisions in them have been awaited for months.

Several important cases argued recently include the pipe line cases and the Oklahoma grandfather clause cases.

How Mexicans Destroy Railroad Property



General Villa, the rebel leader, is now aiming to capture Chihuahua as his next step toward attacking the national capital itself. He is said to have more than 10,000 men gathering for the siege to the city. The photos herewith show how Villa's men have destroyed railroad tracks and trains to prevent, so far as possible, the sending of reinforcements to the federal garrison at Chihuahua. Villa, however, claims to have an open working line leading direct to Chihuahua from Juarez and over which he will transport his army. Many millions of American and English capital have been destroyed through the depredations of the Mexicans of both federal and rebel armies.

ANOTHER STRIKE AT INDIANAPOLIS

Union Ordered Teamsters Out at Midnight--Order Includes Commercial Chauffeurs—Police Prepared.

Indianapolis, Ind., November 30.—The Teamsters' union voted unanimously late today to go on strike at midnight tonight. The strike order includes the commercial chauffeurs, is one of the strongest in the city, and has between 1,500 and 2,000 members.

A special dispensation for milk wagons driven by union teamsters was made at the meeting, on suggestion of Thomas J. Farrell, general organizer of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, Stablemen and Helpers. Drivers of hearses are exempt from the strike order. Farrell also announced there would be no interference with the mail, or other government wagons or automobiles, or with the wagons or machines of express companies. He said arrangements would be made for delivering supplies to hospitals; so there would be no added suffering among the sick.

Ordered Not to Report.

Several employers have signed the agreement, but their men will join the strike to make it more effective. The men were ordered not to report for work this morning, but to picket the barns.

Employers of teamsters who are members of the National Vehicle Owners' Protective association have practically decided to abandon all attempts to move their wagons on the first interference. They say they will put their wagons in the barns and send their horses to the country and await developments. Wholesale dealers have notified their customers they will not attempt to make deliveries if there is interference with their vehicles.

The teamsters' demands were drafted last Sunday and submitted to the employers during the week. The demands include a wage scale and changes of working conditions. The wage scale for drivers of horses would run range from $15 to $18 a week, and for chauffeurs from $14 to $18 a week. The hours of labor range from 8 to 12 hours a day.

Police Department Prepared.

The police department, reorganized under the direction of Captain George V. Coffin, acting superintendent of police, has been making preparations for a week to handle the strike. An order was issued Saturday prohibiting congregating of crowds. A system of military patrol has been mapped out for the down-town districts, and additional mounted and foot police have been added to the force.

In addition to the extra patrolmen, 250 business men were sworn in as a reserve force this afternoon. These reserves are commanded by officers of the Indiana national guard.

Large squads of patrolmen and mounted police were on duty in the downtown district tonight, and had little trouble in keeping the streets clear.

Continuous Labor Troubles.

For four months Indianapolis has been agitated with labor troubles which have resulted in the resignation of Mayor Shenk, Superintendent of Police Martin J. Hyland and W. E. Davis, president of the board of public safety, and a general shake-up in the city administration.

The trouble started last August, when the motormen and conductors on interurban lines entering the city conducted an unsuccessful strike. This was followed by the organizing of the local street car men, which was attended by a number of riots.

GASES WILL BE USED TO KILL THE OUTLAW

Mexican Desperado, Who Has Killed Six Men, Is Trapped in a Mine.

Bingham, Utah, November 30.—While Ralph Lopez, the slayer of six men, was attempting to batter down a bulkhead at the entrance of the tunnel in the Utah-Apex mine today a posse penetrated an incline and brought out the bodies of Deputy Sheriffs Dulgas Hulsey and Tom Nadrich, who were killed by the desperado in a subterranean fight yesterday afternoon. The development late today was the report that Mike Cranovich, who sent and serious ly wounded his wife several days ago, also is a fugitive in the mine and is co-operating with Lopez.

Two deputies on guard at the mouth of the mine opened fire with rifles when Lopez began breaking down the bulkhead and he retreated into the mine after prying away one board. That he is suffering from hunger is the belief of the officers, as he has been in the mine with only a small supply of food since Thursday.

Fuller's earth chemicals and foreigners begged in a dozen different tongues today for the opportunity to search the mine for the murderer. Only five, led by E. P. Strauper, mayor-elect of Bingham, were allowed to penetrate the workings. After making two attempts they brought out the bodies which had been dragged by Lopez some distance up an incline.

Outwitted repeatedly since Lopez began his career of bloodshed on November 21, the pursuing sheriffs of seven counties today decided to fasten up the mine and attempt to asphyxiate the fugitive with poisonous gases. Accordingly, fourteen of the fifteen exits were stopped with bulkheads and the work of preparation for forcing in gas is under way.

MELLEN IS EULOGIZED BY LABOR UNION HEADS

Boston, Mass., November 30.—Charles S. Mellen heard himself eulogized today by the heads of all the labor organizations connected with the Boston and Maine railroad. Nearly 250 employees of the road tendered Mr. Mellen a dinner and presented him with a set of engrossed resolutions expressing their appreciation of his relations with his employees while he was president.

Mr. Mellen left hurriedly on the power and rights of labor. He referred to the tremendous latent power in labor organizations and said the reason he did not receive greater reward was because of jealousy between the different bodies and lack of loyalty to the common cause.

"Be always your power with prudence," he said, "and remember that haste makes waste. Be fair, be prudent, be sure, but be steadfast one to the other. You have the power and others must pay the price I would rather have your good will than all the salaries that could be paid me by all the corporations in the country. I would like to lead you, to advise you, I want to help you. Possibly the time will come when I can do so, and when you call you will not find me wanting."

SOLDIERS PATROL STREETS OF ZABERN

Zabern, Alsace, Germany, November 30 Soldiers patrolled the streets today in order to hold in check the townspeople, who are highly incensed at the repressive measures of the German army officers and the arrest and detention for alleged disorderly conduct of thirty citizens who, however, were discharged by the civil courts yesterday. So strict were the measures taken that there was no signs of rioting.

CHICKEN LOVERS THRONG ATLANTA

The Southen International Poultry Show Will Open in the Auditorium at Noon With 4,000 Entries.

Chicken lovers by the thousands will be attracted to the Auditorium-Armory this week by the Southern International Poultry show which opens at noon today with one of the largest and finest exhibits of fowls ever shown in the south. There will be individual birds of rare types and beauty, and there will also be pens of birds exhibited. Handsome cups and ribbons have been offered for the individual birds shown and also for the best showing made by classes.

Besides chickens of various breeds, including practically all the standard and popular ones, there will be ducks and pigeons and rabbits shown. In the latter line there is plenty of amusement for the young folks, who will also have a special department in which the exhibits will be made by children.

The arrangements for the exhibits have been practically completed and they will occupy not only the main Auditorium, but will overflow into Taft hall.

Much interest has been shown in Atlanta and throughout the south in the poultry show, and fully 75,000 people are expected to view the 4,000 fowls on exhibit. The first day will be given over to exhibition purposes, and on Tuesday morning, at 9 o'clock, the work of judging the fowls will be started.

Besides the birds placed in the show as possible prize winners, there are a number of famous fowls that are there for exhibition purposes only. One of these is "Mrs. Dooley," a bandoma Wyandotte, said to be the most celebrated hen in the world.

Several of the judges, all of whom are chicken fanciers, will have fowls in the show for exhibition purposes only.

There will be a meeting of the committee on arrangements on Tuesday for the purpose of preparing for the 1914 show, and the officers of the association will also be elected during the week.

FOR STEALING $76,000 SHAW IS ARRESTED

New York, November 30.—Mervyn Shaw, 26 years old, who is wanted in Toronto, Canada, on a charge of appropriating $76,000 from the Toronto offices of Swift & Co., when in the employ of that company as a $12 a week collector and salesman, was held without bail today for arraignment before United States Commissioner John A. Shields in extradition proceedings.

Shaw was arrested here last night by detectives. The police say Shaw admits the theft of $1,000, but denies that his appropriation of funds total $76,000.

ON TO MEXICO CITY, SLOGAN OF ENEMIES OF GENERAL HUERTA

Rebel Chiefs Are Organizing Their Forces to Capture Chihuahua City and Then March to Capital.

SOUTHWARD ADVANCE BEGUN BY THE REBELS

Chihuahua City Expected to Fall in a Few Days, as the Food Supply Is Practically Exhausted.

Juarez, Mexico, November 30.—General Francisco Villa, constitutionalist commander, said today that northern Mexico, embracing the states of Sonora, Chihuahua, Coahuila, Nuevo Leon and Tamaulipas, and including the territory from the border to a line 600 miles southward, will be wholly under the authority of the rebel forces within two weeks.

The forces which are fighting Huerta will then join at Guadalajara with a view of marching on to Mexico City. This campaign, he said, contemplated not only the capture of Chihuahua City, but also the spreading of the constitutionalist authority further south. He is to be joined in the interior later by General Venustiani Carranza, head of the revolutionary movement.

So far as the north is concerned, Villa said the campaign is between 14,500 federal troops, mostly in garrisons, and 30,300 rebels or constitutionalists in garrisons and roaming the country.

Strength of Opposing Forces.

The approximate strength of the opposing forces in the north as gathered from official sources by Villa and made known by him today is:

At Guaymas, Sonora, 2,000 federal troops commanded by Pedro Ojeda.

At Chihuahua City, 5,000 federals, commanded by General Salvador Mercado.

At Saltillo and Monclova, Coahuila, 2,500 federals.

At Monterey, Nuevo Leon, 2,000 federals.

Scattered, 1,500 federals.

Opposed to the federals and their positions, are:

In Sonora, about 5,000 rebels under command of General Carranza, head of the constitutionalists.

At Juarez and en route to Chihuahua City, 5,000 rebels, commanded by Villa.

Scattered and at other cities, 8,000 rebels.

To Attack Chihuahua City.

In preparation for the attack on Chihuahua City 3,500 troops with sixteen machine guns and equipment which filled three trains left Juarez up to today and has reached a point fifty miles south.

Villa expects to join his men within a few days and, if possible, to keep open a train and telegraph service behind. He said he would be in Chihuahua City within ten days.

But the capture of that city, he insisted, will be only an incident of a further advance later, in conjunction with Carranza and other rebel leaders.

Villa pointed out that the only important points along the United States border not held by rebels now, are Nuevo Laredo, opposite Laredo, Texas, and Piedras Negras, opposite Eagle Pass, Texas, and that his forces already had captured the larger cities of the north except Chihuahua City, Saltillo, Monclova and Monterey.

On to Mexico City.

"We will move right on to Mexico City," Villa said. "That is our destination. Our forces are working together with Carranza. Carranza will move southward, attacking Guaymas on the way. Those in the east now concentrated around Victoria will move southwest, while I will go right down through the heart of the country. On the way I will take Chihuahua, where I will be in command within ten days. Then I will join the eastern and western wings of our army at Guadalajara. Combined we will march to Mexico City."

Chihuahua City has been cut off from communication for more than two weeks. At that time, it was said the federal forces had made every preparation to oppose the rebel attack, but most all food supplies have been exhausted.

To Move Capital to Juarez.

Francisco Escuero, minister of foreign affairs in Carranza's cabinet, on arriving from Hermosillo today, conferred with General Villa regarding the future capital of the revolutionary government. Senor Escudero said that it virtually had been decided to move the capital to Juarez, and that it would be conducted much as the Madero's capital after the success of the revolution against Diaz.

Members of General Diaz's entourage point out that the ex-president is in his eighty-fourth year, and is somewhat deaf, and they add that his family agree that peace and tranquility are essential to him. An apartment has been taken in Paris for his occupancy until spring, which would tend to confirm the belief that General Diaz has no idea of going to Mexico.

U. S. ARMY DIVISION TO WINTER IN THE OPEN

Texas City, Texas, November 30.—The second division of the United States army, under Major General William H. Carter, is preparing to winter in open field camp here. Their city of brown tents, covering a square mile along the water front, has been prepared for the northers which bring freezing temperatures into this section by partially boarding up the tent sides and flooring them all by laying a sewage system through the military streets and connecting it with the Texas City system.

November completes the ninth month of camp life since the division mobilized here after the assassination of ade late President Madero of Mexico. There are 12,000 soldiers in camp.

Between drills the men have developed a wide range of field sports, including tennis, golf, polo, baseball, basketball and football, especially the soccer game.

ALDAPE SEEKS LOAN FOR GENERAL HUERTA

Santander, Spain, November 30.—Manuel Garza Aldape, who recently resigned the portfolio of minister of interior in the Mexican cabinet, reached here today on the steamer Ezcaray. He is bound for Paris and later will go to Berlin to visit one of his children, who is being educated there. He is accompanied by his wife and six children.

The ex-minister said he had no special mission abroad, but he gave it to be understood that he would try to arrange a loan in France in behalf of the Huerta administration for military purposes, which, he explained, already had been partly arranged for, expects to obtain in Europe about seven months.

Senor Aldape declared that the economic situation in Mexico was not desperate. The financial condition of the government was weak, but all obligations would be met, he said. The country was rich, vacuous and full of vitality. He spoke of the political situation, which he considered grave in gravity, he said, arose from the strained relations between Mexico and the United States. These once improved the pacification of the country would be easy, thanks to General Huerta's energy.

Although no special mission has been imposed upon him, Senor Aldape said he would endeavor to enlist the sympathies of the European countries for Mexico. He did not believe the United States would intervene actively in the difficulties now rending his country.

REBELS ARE GATHERING TO TAKE NUEVO LAREDO

Brownsville, Texas, November 30.—Constitutionalists will soon lay siege to Nuevo Laredo, Mexico, opposite Laredo, Texas, according to well informed rumors among anti-constitutionalist headquarters in Matamoros. General Pablo Gonzales, commander of the troops which recently captured Victoria, is in Matamoras for a conference with General Jesus Carranza, and it is reported that a column of 1,000 constitutionalists which recently left Matamoras is advancing along the border toward Nuevo Laredo.

CARRANZA IS WAITING TO HEAR FROM WILSON

Hermosillo, Sonora, Mexico, November 30.—General Carranza and his advisers appeared today to have assumed a policy of awaiting the result of Francisco Villa's attack on Chihuhua City and the outcome of William R. Hale's conference with President Wilson at Washington before making either a military or diplomatic move.

Passenger traffic was opened today, as far south as Maytorena, the insurgent base above Guaymas.

A party of constitutionalist civil officials and army officers left today for Culiacan, capital of Sinaloa, to reorganize the military and civil government of the state. Mazatlan, a west coast seaport, is the only spot in the state not controlled by the insurgents.

MOHENO MAY CONFER WITH ENVOY JOHN LIND

Vera Cruz, November 30.—The Mexican Minister of Foreign Affairs Querido Moheno, who arrived here late last night on a special train to the object of his visit is to meet his father. It is reported, however, that he intends to confer with John Lind, President Wilson's personal representative, who is expected to return here tomorrow from Tampico.

On the same train with Senor Moheno were Manuel Madero, uncle of the late president, and Eriberto Casas, said to be an insurgent leader, under a guard of fifty soldiers. They were taken to military headquarters and from there to the San Juan de Ulua prison.

HUERTA GETS CASH BY FORCED LOANS

Dictator Also Raises Funds on Gambling Hells—Huerta Resolved to Continue His Dogged Resistance.

Mexico City, November 30.—The possible treatment of the Mexican question by President Wilson's coming message has aroused considerable interest among Mexican government officials, but there is a notable absence of alarm because of the deep-rooted conviction that neither intervention nor the supplying of arms and ammunition to the rebels will be recommended.

The continuation of the financial blockade President Huerta will regard as a vital blow to his administration, however enfeebling it may be. Anything short of intervention or the supplying of munitions of war to the rebels will be regarded with comparative complacency by General Huerta, who is prepared to pursue a dogged line of resistance against his enemies, although he realizes it means indefinite warfare.

Huerta to Make Forced Loans.

But, while dominated by the fact although the government may be bankrupt, the provisional president is far from being without funds, and is not likely to be entirely without money as long as private institutions and corporations possess funds. They are of the opinion that the president will not fail, for the sake of what he considers right, to resort to forced loans. Indeed, persuasive methods already have been used, and in several cases have borne marked similarity to the forced loan.

In the Mexican republic there are many men rated as millionaires, and several large corporations whose properties might be available for protective taxation. There are millions to be had for the taking, and General Huerta's advisers declare he would be acting in accordance with justice and his duty to the country if he utilized this means of defense.

To Raise Money on Gambling.

Special taxes have been announced, which will become effective tomorrow, and will net at least $5,000,000 pesos ($17,500,000) annually to the government. It would be quite feasible, it is pointed out to augment this amount materially by the simple method of still further increasing the tax on the avenue which might produce funds for the government is being overlooked.

For years Mexico City was known as a city where gambling was greatly restricted, but now there are many resorts of this class operating openly, and are paying its quota in the shape of license fees. It is announced that all these gambling places will be closed temporarily, in order that they may be reopened under a new arrangement. It is understood that the arrangement will be the granting of a concession to one person for all the gambling in the city. This would make the collection of the tax more simple and certain.

No confirmation is available of yesterday's report that the government has obtained a 7,000,000 pesos loan, nor is there evidence of any immediate optimism that further foreign loans will be obtained. The banks will stand as the hope for small loans from time to time.

Military Situation Not Improved.

The military situation throughout the country has shown no improvement in the last week so far as the government is concerned, and while reports and indications that much progress will be made the coming week, these have been taken to strengthen the garrison at Tampico, but there is known to be a greater force of rebels to the north and west. The federal force will move finally toward the coast, but this movement is problematical. It is a position to go either way.

The movement of rebels south of Saltillo dominated by Carranza and Villa today, the rebels entering Cedral, on the branch railway leading to Matehuala, occupied and sacked by the rebels earlier in the week.

Federal troops have been sent north from San Luis Potosi in an effort to check the movement, and brisk fighting has occurred in the last few days, but without holding back the rebels.

In the state of Zacatecas, to the west of San Luis Potosi, according to government reports, some advantage has been gained by Huerta's troops, but the mobility of the rebel cavalry has thwarted neutralizing the advances made by the government.

Operations in Michoacan and other regions further south have been about equalized as between the constitutionalists and the federals, but the situation in the north, it is conceded, is practically dominated by the rebels, although the government still expresses hope of being able to relieve Juarez.

Rigorous Military Censorship.

Exactly what is going on throughout the republic is impossible to ascertain because of lack of communication and rigorous military censorship at places where the telegraph wires are still being operated.

Notwithstanding that the government has imposed a censorship on the local newspaper, the head of the department of the interior has intimated to the newspapers' representatives in the government is not pleased with the manner in which the news is being handled. He has suggested that the government would appreciate a slackening note.

The same intimation has been given by the military governor of the state of Vera Cruz to the newspapers there. There is now being published in the capital of Vera Cruz no article affecting the political and military situation except that which emanates from the government departments.

Considerable has been shared on paper dispatches out of Mexico, but it is reliably reported that such a step is being considered.

General Rubio Navarette, commanding the federal advance on Victoria, who has been out of communication with the government here, has reached Linares, at Monterey. His retreat is styled as "strategic" by the war department here, where it is insisted that he has defeated the rebels.

The government claims that General Kanales has been reported to have killed himself after losing Victoria, has reappeared alive and well at Cerritos, 100 miles to the south.

Russian Cruiser Aground.

Sebastopol, Russia, November 30.—The Russian protected cruiser Kagul ashore today on a reef lets went aground near Feodosia, a critical position. The crew was landed, two seamen were drowned and three are missing through the capsizing of a boat sent to her assistance.

London, November 30.—The London police are searching for a quantity of valuable jewelry which is missing from the residence of the Duke of Connaught, the governor-general of Canada. The missing articles include the jewelled order of the garter and other jewels of worth.

ANOTHER STRIKE AT INDIANAPOLIS

was begun the night of October 31 last, and continued one week, during which time two men were killed and much property destroyed. During the strike there was no such rioting that the entire state militia was called out by Governor Ralston. The employees and street railway officials, by agreement, finally placed their dispute before the public service commission of Indiana for adjustment. The men demanded more money, better working conditions and recognition of the union. Hearings in the case will be started by the commission this week.

In the meantime the teamsters and chauffeurs' union began recruiting members, and last Sunday drafted their demands, which were presented to the employers this week.

It has been thought for a week that the teamsters and chauffeurs would strike Monday, and it became known definitely last Friday, when Mayor Shank resigned, because the labor leaders could not assure him there would be no strike.

Threatened to Impeach Shank.

Mr. Shank had been threatened with impeachment proceedings by a committee of business men if the threatened strike materialized, and he resigned rather than face that.

The impeachment proceedings were threatened because of Shank's attitude during the street car strike and because of his statement to the patrolmen at roll call that he did not wish to see men on duty on wagons in case of the teamsters' strike. Hyland resigned from the board of public safety exonerated 31 patrolmen against whom he had filed charges of insubordination for failure to ride on street cars during the strike. Davis voted to sustain Hyland's charges, and also resigned because of the board's action.

Shank was appointed to the mayor's office by Harry R. Wallace, city comptroller.

Mayor Wallace said that in case of a strike he would call in the entire police station and personally direct the work of the department. He appointed a new board of public safety, but retained Captain Coffin as acting superintendent of police.

ANOTHER WEATHER FOR WEEK TO BE DISAGREEABLE

Washington, November 30.—Another week of disagreeable weather is ahead for the southern portion of the country, according to the weather bureau.

The eastward movement of a disturbance now over the lower Arkansas valley, says the weekly bulletin issued tonight, "will result in a continuance of the unsettled rainy weather during the early days of the week over the eastern half of the country, with possibly some snow over the extreme northern districts. Generally fair weather will follow for a day or so after, but the eastward movement of another marked disturbance now over Arizona will probably be attended by rains across the southern districts and rains and snows over the northern districts from the Rocky mountains eastward, beginning about Monday morning, along the west slope of the mountains, reaching through the plain states into central valleys and the lower lake region about the middle of the week, and the lower lake region and the east about Thursday or Friday. This disturbance will be followed by fair and colder weather that will reach the central valleys after the middle of the week and the eastern states by the end of the week. However, temperatures will not be unusually low in the south and southwest the weather will be generally fair, except that rain is probable Monday in the South Atlantic states. It will be somewhat colder in the gulf states, but in Arizona disturbance probably will prevent any fall in temperature of consequence for several days at least."

WASHINGTON IN STATE OF PASSIVE WATCHING

Washington, November 30.—President Wilson found no change in the Mexican situation today on his return to the capitals. Official Washington is in an attitude of passive observation at present, particular interest being manifested in the angle of the situation of territory by the constitutionalists.

The possibility that the visit to Vera Cruz of Querido Moheno, Mexican minister for foreign affairs, might mean the reopening of negotiations with the United States government, and a new awakened speculation again, but official tonight were inclined to think if Moheno contemplated such a purpose. High government officials here have said repeatedly that the only question on which negotiations could be reneged was the assurance of Huerta's elimination.

The return to Washington of William Bayard Hale, who conferred with General Carranza and the constitutionalist chiefs on the border, is awaited with much interest. Mr. Hale may get his report today or tomorrow. His observations of the character and strength of the constitutionalist movement will be placed before President Wilson and Secretary Bryan, and are expected to be an important factor in the Washington government's future attitude toward the constitutionalists. Meanwhile, Mr. Hale has sent long dispatches and letters to Villa, what he saw and heard in Chihuahua, Sonora, it is believed he will supplement the report of the Kennedy conference with the president and Mr. Bryan.

Sir William Tyrrel, private secretary to Sir Edward Grey, is also here on a mission as a medium of communication between the British foreign office and the American government during the illness of Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, left here today for New York. He will sail Tuesday for England. The British ambassador was able to take a long walk.

DON'T FORCE YOUR LIVER TO WORK

When Liver Gets Lazy it Needs Only Jacobs' Liver Salt.

We have progressed beyond the calomel and blue mass age. Calomel is a dangerous drug which crashes into the system with mercurial force and punches a way through the sour bile, leaving organs ruined and weak, and sometimes with serious after effects. Thinking people realize it is better to keep the liver, kidneys and bowels working regularly and normally.

One becomes constipated and bilious because all food has a percentage of indigestible waste, the richer the diet the greater this percentage, and in time it packs and retards the eliminative processes of liver and kidneys. But all you need is Jacobs' Liver Salt to give a gentle flushing which loosens and carries away waste and fermentation in the natural elimination.

Jacobs' Liver Salt is the most natural liver tonic. Sodium sulphate and lithium citrate stimulate and augment the natural digestive sulphates in the blood. Instead of forcing it acts naturally, gently, but promptly. If not up to the mark on arising, take Jacobs' Liver Salt and in an hour you feel splendid. Agreeable to take and never gripes. Jacobs' Liver Salt is better for your liver than calomel. Get a bottle now with us and after trying it your money back at the store where you bought it. 50 cents drugists 25c. WOMEN CAMPAIGN FOR THE BALLOT

They Will Urge Congress to Adopt Constitutional Amendment—Appeal Is Made to President Wilson.

Washington, November 30.—A week's campaign by the National American Woman Suffrage association to secure the adoption of a constitutional amendment to enfranchise women was launched today at a mass meeting in a local theater. It was the formal opening of the forty-fifth annual convention of the association. An assemblage, which packed the edifice from footlights to gallery, listened for nearly three hours to discussions on various phases of the suffrage cause by conspicuous advocates of the woman movement. Suspended above the drop certain was a huge yellow banner bearing the legend:

"We Demand an Amendment to the United States Constitution Enfranchising Woman."

An Appeal to Wilson.

The association adopted almost unanimously a set of resolutions introduced by Mrs. Helen Ring Robinson, a member of the Colorado state senate, calling upon President Wilson, in his forthcoming message to congress to adopt the woman suffrage constitutional amendment as an administration measure and to urge congress to take immediate and favorable action upon it, urging the senate to pass the amendment; and asking the house to create a committee on woman suffrage.

The only protest was voiced by one of the delegates from Louisiana, backed by a small following. The opposing delegates, however, were not even given an opportunity to explain the reasons for their attitude.

Dr. Anana Howard Shaw, president of the association, presided over the meeting, and in her brief address voiced the belief that "a deliverance—a speedy deliverance of woman, is about to come through the action of the American congress and through the president of the United States."

Knows No Political Parties.

Oliver P. Newman, president of the district commissioners, welcomed the convention to the national capital. Introducing Mary Anderson, Margaret Hinchey and Rose Winslow, all women industrial workers, Dr. Shaw said "the right of the people to a voice in their own government is the one point to which we are directing our efforts. We know not politics—no political parties. We stand for no class—for no race, but only for a voice for all the people in their own affairs."

Miss Anderson, a member of the Industrial Workers of the World, told of her experience before the Illinois legislature, and maintained that if the women had had votes they could have accomplished much by district conference. Miss Hinchey, a practical laundry worker of New York, discussed particularly, "the underpaid and underfed woman industrial workers," reciting some of the trials they were compelled to undergo on account of low wages and bad working conditions.

Miss Winslow ridiculed the establishment of working girls' homes and similar philanthropies. She, too, demanded equality of rights and equal chance for each girl to accomplish something for herself at a living wage.

Women As Legislators.

Mrs. Robinson, the Colorado senator, delivered the principal address in the afternoon, her subject being "Women as Legislators."

"The one great motive that has brought the woman movement to its present proportions," she said, "is the determination of women to protect the home. We still meet occasionally men and women left over from yesterday, who persist in the moth-eaten assertion that the home must suffer if new and then a woman takes a ballot in her hands instead of a broom, and yet there are beautiful, well-ordered and inspiring homes in America where the mothers and grandmothers have been handling the ballot for forty-four years."

In a brief address at the conclusion of the meeting, Miss Jane Addams, settlement worker of Chicago, declared that the country and the world were approaching a new order of things in politics. Basic changes were about to be made, she said, and as in all basic principles and in all phases of human life, women were and would be involved in the changes.

Morning, afternoon and evening sessions of the convention will be held daily until next Friday. Plans for submitting the demands of the women to the president and congress have not been made public, but the suffragists expect to put in a busy week at the capital aside from the routine of association meetings.

Hundreds of delegates from all parts of the country are here for the convention.

TO CODIFY THE LAWS GOVERNING WIRELESS

London, November 30.—Two commissioners—one international and the other English, in organization—soon will begin a series of investigations in the hope of being able to codify the various natural laws which are believed by scientists to govern wireless telegraphy. The English commission, known as the committee of the British association, will devote its investigations to the qualitative phases of the problem, while the other organization, called the International Radio-Telegraphy commission, will study the quantitative aspects.

The British committee will endeavor to discover, by extensive simultaneous observations at various parts of the earth, those regularities of phenomena commonly described as "natural laws." It is hoped that if these laws are codified it will be possible to extend greatly the commercial possibilities of wireless.

The international commission will begin its work from a power station near Brussels, from which, on a specified date, signals will be sent out for the reception of investigations and national committees now being organized in every participating country. Certain technical measurements will be made by the transmitting experts at Brussels and by the receivers in various countries. The international commission will compare the results, especially with regard to the effects of time, direction and distance on the strength and regularity of the received signals.

The objective of the investigations is the elimination of such obstacles as the "strays" or "X's" of the operators, and the difficulties of communication encountered near the periods of sunrise and sunset and from atmospheric conditions generally.

Sylvia Pankhurst in Italy.

Milan, Italy, November 30.—Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, one of the leaders of the English militant suffragettes, was the guest today of a number of prominent Italian women, before whom she delivered a lecture on the history of militant suffragism in Great Britain.

To Clarkesville, Habersham county, first honors and the prize of $10 for the best list of Georgia-grown, Georgia-made products suitable for a menu. Robert McMillan submitted the list, including 204 dishes, and his residence is in Habersham county. With the possible exception of the rarest of rabbits, spices and condiments, from this list a Waldorf-Astoria chef might satisfy the tastes of his most fastidious patrons. The banquet board at Clarkesville on Georgia Products day was actually laden with every one of these various products, so that it was not for the want of materials that the time-honored delicacies of the old south could not have been excelled.

To Byromville, Dooly county, first honors and the prize of $10 for the best menu actually served on Georgia Products day. Printed on corn husks, in polkberry ink, tied with a string of grass, was this menu. Not only every item which entered into the banquet itself, but the menu, the program and other incidentals, were actually produced upon one farm in Dooly county. The original owner of this farm was John S. Byrom, for whom the town is named, and now survived by his sons, Seymour Byrom and William Hardwick Byrom. Not only have these two progressive specialists of the younger generation been the prime movers in building Byromville into the biggest city of its size in Georgia, but by their enterprise and business foresight the original plantation has been transformed into a model, twentieth century demonstration of farming for a profit, under approved modern methods and machinery.

The splendid menu which good old mother earth gave up to such intelligent care and treatment on the Byrom farms is as follows:

GEORGIA PRODUCT MENU.
Dooly county, the Byrom Farms.
Relishes.
Salted Peanuts, Shelled Pecans
First Course
Vegetable Soup. Croutons
Second Course.
Stuffed Baked Trout, Potato Balls
Georgia Hoe Cake
Third Course.
DINNER.
Scuppernong Wine. Peach Pickle
Corn Salad, Hashed Brown Potatoes
Stuffed Peppers, Candied Dooly Yams
Cold Cooked Roast Turkey
Quince Jelly, Palm Turnip Salad
Georgia Cornbread
Chicken Salad, Bread Sticks
Fifth Course.
Sunderin Pudding, Wine Sauce
White Cream, Georgia Belle Peaches
Sixth Course.
Rebel Coffee. Smear Case and Crackers.

With the slogan appended: "This county is the natural location for the twentieth century garden of Eden."

Over sixty cities in all submitted menus in this connection, which were actually served on Georgia Products day.

ATLANTANS LEAVE THIS WEEK ON TRIP TO VISIT PANAMA

"Off for Panama!" will be the happy cries of a party of Atlanta people, and others from various parts of Georgia, who will leave on next Tuesday afternoon at 5:20 o'clock on an 18-day trip to Panama and Central America. The party will sail from New Orleans the following day on the steamer "Cartago," and will arrive at Colon, Panama, the following Monday. They will spend two days in the isthmus, viewing the construction work on the canal from every angle.

Side trips will then be taken to Port Limon and to San Jose, the latter city being the capital of Costa Rica, and one of the most remarkable cities in Central America. On Saturday, December 13, the party will sail for home from Colon, arriving back in Atlanta on December 19.

The party will be in charge of John T. North, 121 Peachtree street, who conducted the Presbyterian assemblies' trip last May, and among the Atlanta people in the party will be Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Connally, Mrs. Luther Z. Rosser, Miss Sally Brown, P. G. Hanaman, Mrs. F. T. Lamb, Louis Camak, L. N. Hudson, Dr. Harry E. Stockbridge, W. M. Nichols, Miss Lizzie Macauley, Mrs. Horace Jones, Elijah A. Brown, Mrs. M. Wallace, Mrs. Horace Jones, Miss M. Walker, Charles A. Conklin and Thomas W. Connally.

POLICE BELIEVE NEGRO VICTIM OF FOUL PLAY

County police believe that Bob Trimble, a negro who was found on the Campbellton road early Sunday morning with his head badly crushed, had been carried there in a hack from town. The police arrested Julius Jones, another negro, with whom they claim Trimble had a difficulty Saturday afternoon on Peters street.

The negro's head appeared to have been mashed with a blunt instrument, but, despite his injury, he was still alive at a late hour last night at Grady hospital, where he was rushed when he was found. He is not expected to live.

WEATHER ON SUNDAY FAR FROM PLEASANT

Sunday's weather proved the exact opposite of the pleasant weather that has lingered through the greater part of the fall. A slight mist that at times threatened a rather cool rain hung over Atlanta practically all the day. Occasionally it appeared as if the skies would clear and the temperature drop to where the weather would be really cold.

While the local weather bureau was closed on Sunday and no forecast was made, there was every appearance that the skies would clear early Monday morning and that the day would be decidedly cooler than any in the past week.

2,500 MEN IMPORTED INTO STRIKE DISTRICT

Calumet, Mich., November 30.—About 500 workmen were imported into the Michigan copper region during last week to take the places of striking miners, making a total of about 2,500 imported since the strike began. The forces will be further augmented this week by more outside men, it was announced today. Strikers held meetings today and the leaders urged continuance of the strike until the Western Federation of Miners is recognized. The introduction of the 8-hour day in all mines tomorrow will leave recognition about the only demand not granted by the operators.

Fatally Hurt in Auto Accident.

Tulsa, Okla., November 30.—Ben Block, a prominent oil producer, and Maurice Price, of this city, were probably fatally injured, Miss Helen Koonts was seriously hurt and several other persons were slightly injured late today when the automobile in which they were riding struck a street curbing here and was wrecked.

MORE SILVER THAN CLOUD.

Speaking of clouds with a silver lining, there is more silver than cloud in the visitation of the boll weevil expected to arrive in Georgia next autumn. The first advantage in the fight is that of preparedness, and Georgia is preparing with a whoop. An illustration is the commendable activity of the state chamber of commerce. Headed by President C. J. Haden, a delegation from this organization waited on Governor Slaton recently and asked that he issue a proclamation urging vigilance on part of the people of the state. The proclamation was speedily forthcoming, and is in line with the governor's steady and intelligent attention to all questions bearing on the fundamental issue of agriculture. A powerful factor in the preliminary campaign has also been Lee Worsham, state entomologist, whose efforts in perfecting an early maturing variety of cotton, with which to fight the weevil, and in hammering home the value of diversification, have met with signal success.

The southwestern states were unprepared for the weevil when it appeared. They had to learn how to offset its ravages while these latter were being visited upon them. Not so with Georgia. The lesson for her is already nine-tenths learned. And, by a singular bounty of Providence, the past year seems to have been the winning of a special handicap in the beginning of actual hostilities with the pest. She is rich from her cotton returns. Debt impedes her less than ever. Diversification of every class has spread magically. And when it is said that diversification and early cultural methods for cotton are the keynotes in the anti-weevil campaign, the situation has been stated in a nutshell.

Experts estimate that if next winter and spring farmers plant liberally in corn and food crops generally, and hedge carefully on cotton, the weevil will be half conquered before he puts in an appearance. They say also that increased revenues from these sources will more than offset the depredations of the insect.

An additional advantage is that the encroachment of the weevil will encourage the Georgia farmer to the greater production of good, packing house hogs and beef. And once this industry is re-established in Georgia on a commercial scale the state will be almost independent of cotton.

Reports from the south Georgia counties are that the cattle tick is being rapidly eradicated, and that farmers are learning the details of hog conservation. North Georgia is already sufficiently cleared of the tick to embark upon the cattle industry wholesale.

In every respect, therefore, Georgia is shipshape for the coming invasion. Rather than a calamity it will prove a benefaction, for the brains and management to make it so have already been set actively to work.

EDUCATION AND SOCIAL EVIL.

In a recent address before the International Purity Congress, Judge Harry Olson, of the Chicago Municipal court, established a close connection between the school room and the brothel in the way of prevention of prostitution. Judge Olson's premise was that prostitution is largely fed from the feeble-minded. Identify the feeble-minded child and train it before reaching the age of 12 and prostitution will lose one of its most prolific sources of recruital.

The reasoning applies not only to the social evil, but to crime and abnormality in general. The classic case of the Jukes family, for instance, illustrates the point to a nicety. One vicious marriage and subsequent vicious environment, gave birth to a long train of degenerates, expressing themselves in prostitution, crime, what-not.

The Constitution would not limit education to the mere searching out and training of defective children. Its use as a weapon against the social evil is infinitely more replete with possibilities. If feeble-mindedness is a feeder of vice, ignorance is also one, and perhaps an even larger source.

The current and, we think, permanent enthusiasm that has sprung up for sex hygiene recognizes this principle. There is today hardly a city of importance in the land that does not hope ultimately to lessen its crop of fallen women and diseased-ravaged men through the preventive application of education. And, in fact, no crusade against vice, however well-intentioned or spectacular, is complete unless it includes tactful tuition of children in their formative years.

Whether the great principles of life, so noble when practiced and so vindictive when abused, shall be taught in the school room or the home, is a moot question. At this stage The Constitution has given its vote to the home. The subject is so entirely new, and as yet unentangled from cowardishness and tainted suggestion, that it is difficult to see how it can be safely or effectually broached except by blood relations.

Whatever the outcome, and if we are to make progress through this use of education, it is evident that the first parties to be educated are the parents. Their diffidence in approaching the topic and their clumsiness in handling it, are two of the hurtful objects to a splendidly-conceived movement.

BOOKKEEPING IN LIVES.

Dr. Cressy L. Wilbur, chief statistician of the census bureau, recently told the members of the Southern Medical association, at Lexington, Ky., that the greatest menace to the progress of the health propaganda in the south was lack of vital statistics. He declared that nowhere in America was the importance of vital statistics adequately recognized, but said that the fault was visited most lamentably in the south.

Calling the collection and analysis of such information "bookkeeping in lives," Dr. Wilbur thus emphasized the urgency of the work:

> A fundamental means by which government has put at the service of humanity in safeguarding the health of the nation, the health of its men and its women and its children, as well as their rights in the struggle for existence, is the recording of vital statistics—the true bookkeeping of humanity. It is to our shame that we have neglected this duty so long; that legislatures and state boards of health have wasted the people's time and money and frittered away the people's lives through ignorance of the important facts and fried liver once a week for vital statistics—alone can reveal.

As concrete proof of his statements, Dr. Wilbur submitted the fact that the campaign against infant mortality throughout the entire country was brought to a halt, almost, because of absence of the necessary data for intelligent measures.

The Constitution has often criticised Georgia's as well as Atlanta's remissness in this respect, and urged reformation. Indeed, one of the chief indictments brought against Atlanta by the health expert of the Russell Sage foundation was laxity in registration of births and deaths, and disease of a transmissible nature.

We watch our more tangible assets with a jealous eye. Blooded horses and dogs and cattle are registered. But we pay only nominal attention to vital statistics as they touch human beings.

It is likely that the relatively few dollars required to maintain a proper vital statistics bureau in Atlanta would be several times liquidated in less than a year by greater knowledge of the source of disease, and consequent prevention. The same principle holds with Georgia. The next legislature can act to no more constructive purpose than in enacting measures looking to correcting this omission. Its preoccupation with the new tax bill might have excused it in the past, but there is no contingency should now interfere with the supreme duty of steps to safeguard the public health.

AGAINST SHOTGUN FARMING.

One of the newest and most commendable activities of the Southern Settlement and Development organization, of which S. Davies Warfield is president, is the employment of Dr. Cyril G. Hopkins, a specialist of national reputation, to study the soils of the southern states with a view to ascertaining their agricultural possibilities.

In a recent issue The Springfield (Mass.) Republican commends the plan and vouches for Dr. Hopkins in the following language:

> Dr. Cyril G. Hopkins, of the University of Illinois, takes a year's leave of absence to study the soils of southern states for the Southern Settlement and Development organization, and believes that this new movement has enormous possibilities. Half a century ago England and Germany were raising 14 bushels of wheat to the acre, as the United States does now; by scientific study of the soils the land has been increased by the bushels in Germany and 32 in England. In Illinois he has achieved striking results, and he believes the possibilities of the south to be still greater because of the ideal climate for agriculture. The legislature of Mississippi recently appropriated $10,000 for experimental work, and the other southern states are expected to take similar action.

It is significant that The Republican, situated at what may be termed an unbiased and judicial angle, finds that the soils of the south have infinitely greater potentialities than those of other sections of this country or even of Europe. The Constitution has for years been preaching this fact as an inducement to the railroads and commercial agencies of the south to bombard the entire nation with developmental propaganda.

Modern science has established soil analysis as one of the most valuable and quickly-paying aids to agriculture. A host of farmers in the south, as elsewhere, are today forcing their soil to unnatural work. That is, expecting them to yield products for which they are not naturally adapted. The money, energy and time lost in this shotgun method of agriculture can hardly be estimated.

Soil analysis and study of climatological conditions establishes just what crops will give best returns on certain soils. It makes the use of fertilizer an exact science and not a haphazard gamble. It lessens labor and forestalls disappointment. It is highly encouraging to see that the Southern Settlement and Development organization is going in under such auspices. The federal government has already accomplished much in this direction. The co-operation now promised should materially facilitate results.

Because a fire-eater is spectacular is no reason he should be recognized by dignified governments.

Sorrows of a Singer.

I'd write a song of violets, but mighty well I know
The lilies, ten minutes after, would be shrouded in the snow.
When lilies are on dress parade I say song of the
The biggest blizzard of the year comes down the line!

Sad for a singer
Every other day;
To take the trembling rose of song
And storm its leaves away!
'Tis vain to set the weather man to up me off, for he
Is likewise lost in doubtful dreams and pret- ty much at sea;
And when on blissful violet banks my dreams- The weather-angels of the clouds won't send me down a word!

Sad for a singer
In a garden dim!
A blizzard comes when roses
Are saying things to him!

Proverbs by the Wayside.

Prices are so high on this old earth it's a wonder anybody wants to live in the stars.

There's no doubt that keeping up the fight for the world is the best way to avoid it in the next.

If riches don't exactly bring happiness they come near enough to it to make us shout "Hallelula!"

Sometimes, on an excursion with Joy, we make the engineer put on so much steam the track jumps the rails.

Looking wise may be half the battle, but you've got to have the real article to pull through this rocky old world.

The Editorial Cow.

The editor of The Warrensburg Times makes this explanation:

"The Times man is trying to walk around with the aid of crutches this week. Last Friday evening, while milking The Times cow, she gave a sort of kick, bit The Times man on the wrist and then to add to the insult and injury turned his foot over and stood on it. As a result, his ankle is very much swollen and walking is a difficult matter. But he manages to get around just the same."

Right Sort of Welcome.

The editor of The Indiana Enterprise knows how to make good Times feel at home:

"Told Good Times good morning
On a happy day;
Made the place so pleasant
They said: 'We've come to stay!'"

All Serene There.

"The Rustler," of The Cedartown Standard, celebrates "Good Times in Polk" as follows:

"Good health, good crops, good prices,
And money in the banks—
More cause in Polk than e'er before
For giving heartfelt thanks."

And The Whitsett Courier man strikes a similar note:

"With barns piled high with plenty
In the cotton lands of Lee,
We're all about as happy
As the Lord would have us be!"

The Disappointed.

This from the sweet singer of The Dalton Citizen:

"And what about the poet chap;
Ain't it enough to tire?
He looks for an 'acceptance,'
And he gets a butcher's bill."

The Youngest Pupil Knew.

The "Statesman" man of The Kansas City Star overheard this:

A school teacher was explaining to the children what oxygen was, and when she finished she asked:

"Now, who can tell me what oxygen is?" After pausing awhile one little fellow spoke up and said:

"It's one of them things they used before they got horses."

Voices of the Bells.

Atlanta the Place.

Editor Constitution: I think Atlanta is a logical place for one of the regional reserve banks provided for in the Owen-Glass bill. I believe it would be a great thing for all this section of the country. Cotton brings an enormous amount of money to this country, but it is surprising how quickly it all disappears. The bulk of the cotton product goes more than it brings. There are few farmers but that make me wait till fall for all I do for them after the first of January. This has been true for the more than twenty years that I have practiced medicine in Georgia. What I have lost in professional services would amount to thousands of dollars. With more credit and a lower rate of interest, the farmers could equip themselves better for farming and make a great deal more. The south is badly in need of capital for development.

A Story of the Moment

By WALT MASON,
The Peasmore Prose Poet.

HARD OF HEART.

We insist every poet person in this neighborhood to have a good Christmas dinner, and we'll pay the bills. Then going around with a subscription paper seeing how much each is going to contribute for the purpose. How much will you chip in, Rumbelow?

"Not a red cent," replied Rumbelow. "If the poor want Christmas dinners, let them get out and rustle for them. It's all I can do to raise money enough to pay my taxes. They're infernally needful things to exact at this time, and attaching new wrinkles to the old kinds, and every time a man has 75 cents saved up, the county treasurer calls on him for it. The poor have my sympathy, but that's all I can afford to let them have this year. Even if I could contribute to such a fund, I wouldn't hand over the money to you, for I'm afraid you'd spend it on booze, and if the poor are depending on the money you collect for their Christmas dinners, I'm afraid they'll have to eat their overshoes."

"I ought to punch your head for such an insult, exclaimed Zedliker, "but I'll pass it over this time. You surely are not in earnest when you refuse to give anything. Think how much pleasure you may bring to some desolate home by loosening up a little. Consider that poor woman who lives across the alley from Hardtack Hutchuck. She is a widow with eight children and she toils like a nailing to support them. She barely manages to make ends meet. How is she going to supply a turkey or goose for Christmas?"

"Why does she want to supply a turkey or goose for Christmas?" inquired Rumbelow. "I'm branded philanthropist like you never look to see what you're doing, with your promiscuous charity. I wouldn't kick about that if you spent your own money to buy luxuries for the poor. But you don't do that, Zedliker. You put up the hot air and expect hard working citizens like myself to put up the real money. If the indigent could be fattened on conniption you and Fessenden and the rest of you would be great benefactors.

"Your whole scheme is all wrong. I have watched Mrs. Tenterhook for a long time, and it would be a great mistake to hand her any unearned gifts. She has her eight children so perfectly trained that they might be exhibited in a circus. She has trained them to put the fact that they are as poor as Job's owls and always will be poor until they grow up and work out their own salvation. Those children are perfectly satisfied with boiled turnips and fried liver once a week for a change. They have no fault to find with their present bill of fare, because they have never had any experience with anything better. Under present conditions Mrs. Tenterhook can handle them beautifully, and she never has to read their riot act.

"But what do you propose to do, in your fatuous way? You propose to take a bushel baskets full of expensive delicacies to that home and sow the seeds of anarchy. You are like the reformers who went up and down Mexico telling the people that they had been perfectly satisfied with things as they were, that they needed no changes of administration and a lot more lawyers. The Mexicans listened and got up a revolution, and we see where it landed them.

"Suppose Mrs. Tenterhook has a big spread on Christmas day, and feeds her children turkey and cranberry sauce, and celery, and oysters, and mince pie, and all the expensive things the millionaires feed on. I don't deny that the Tenterhooks may have a merry Christmas if this is done. But how about the day after Christmas? What will happen when that unfortunate widow dishes up her corn meal mush and her boiled turnips? There will be a riot, right off the bat. Those kids will have learned the difference between turkey and mush and they'll turn from mush in disgust. Mighty fare with loathing. The widow will have to take a spiked club to them—"

FAVORITE RECIPES OF DISTINGUISHED WOMEN

By MRS. ALBERT JOHNSON,
Wife of Representative Johnson of Washington.

(Copyright, 1913, for The Constitution.)

Raisin bread is an old-fashioned favorite whose popularity is not confined to any one section, though it is undoubtedly used in greater quantities among families who incline toward German cookery. It is a sort of a cross between a cake and a bread, and serves best for luncheon or supper.

Raisin Bread.

Two cups of Graham flour.
One cup of white flour.
Half teaspoonful of salt.
One tablespoonful of sugar.
Half cup of molasses.
Four eggs.
One cup of raisins.
Two cups of buttermilk.
Two teaspoonfuls of cooking soda.
One tablespoonful of butter.
One teaspoonful of ginger or other spice.

Take two cups of Graham flour and sift it, also sift one cup of white flour and sift the two together with salt and spice. After creaming the butter and sugar, add eggs, molasses and soda, which has been dissolved in a little bit of boiling water. Stir in the raisins, which have been seeded, washed, chopped and floured, and with the buttermilk make the mixture into a thin batter. Bake in regular bread pans in a moderate oven for thirty minutes. The above amount is sufficient for two loaves. When done they may be rubbed lightly with butter and dusted with powdered sugar or covered with a sugar icing, such as the confectioners use.

If whole raisins are used they may be either soaked in water for a while, or else cooked for a few minutes. This swells and freshens them and gives a better result in the cake, besides making them much easier to seed. The seeded raisins may be tied in a cloth and given a slight soaking also.

Constitution Echo.

Editor Constitution: I heartily indorse your editorial on Governor Blease's recent abuse of his pardoning power.

Blease, however, is not the only offender on this line. A few years ago the then governor of Arkansas pardoned out several hundreds of criminals, and Governor Patterson, of Pennsylvania, made an unenviable record as a pardoning governor. Georgia has been fortunate in this respect, but some day she, too, may have a governor of this type. "In time of peace let us prepare for war."

In my opinion, our state constitution should be so amended that the governor should no longer have the absolute power of pardon vested in him alone. This power should be greatly limited, and restrictions thrown around it so that it would be impossible for any future executive of Georgia to abuse it as these governors of our sister states have done. What say you?

Respectfully,

W. A. R. BROYLES.

The World's Mysteries

WHO CONSPIRED AGAINST SIR WALTER RALEIGH?

In spite of what may have been the stories told of Sir Walter Raleigh, he undoubtedly deserved a better fate than to die in his country then an execution brought about through a coterie who were conspiring against him. To what extent this conspiracy had grown is not quite clear, but it was sufficient that at the death of his protector, Queen Elizabeth, he immediately fell into disfavor and his end was brought about with as much speed as possible.

Although his enemies denounced Raleigh as proud, covetous and unscrupulous, yet the circumstances of his death concentrated men's attention on his bold exploits against his country's enemies, and he was undoubtedly entitled to their regard, for he was the typical champion of English interests against Spanish aggression. Physical courage, patriotism, resourcefulness may be unpredicatedly ascribed to him.

The chief objection to Raleigh may be put down to be small regard for truth—and reckless daring was the main characteristic of his stirring adventures as politician, soldier, sailor and traveler.

Following the death of Elizabeth and with the accession of James the First there began a great struggle between courtiers and statesmen for place and power. The Cecils, those tight-clinging barnacles on the ship of state, but still in their own time impede the poor old craft, were determined, if it were possible, to cling to office. They prided themselves on their loyalty, but loyally, whatever the brand of it, did not prevent the great Robert Cecil, Earl of Salisbury, from accepting bribes of Spanish gold in the reign of James the First.

Raleigh and the Cecils were not friends, and Sir Walter found himself, with others, in prison, charged with conspiring to place Arabella Stuart on the throne. Other charges were brought against him, of conspiring to encompass the death of the king, and of betraying England's interests to Spain.

Raleigh, of all men, the scourge of Spain, who hated a Spaniard as warmly as a good Christian should hate the Evil One, accused of paltering with such; the thing seems incredible, and was, of course, a malignant lie. But the ruin of that great captain and gallant adventurer had been resolved upon, on some count, for he had distinguished himself in the last years of Elizabeth by his hostility to the superstitious that her successor should be the King of Scots.

That king had not succeeded unfortunately for the moment Elizabeth's death Raleigh's sun had set. No time was lost in bringing him to trial, and in November, 1603, he was condemned to death at Winchester, after a hearing that remains one of the gravest blots upon English justice in all the ages before or since.

The new king dared not murder Raleigh in those first days of his reign; the doing of it would probably have cost him his crown. So on the day before that appointed for the execution he was reprieved and sent for a long imprisonment in the Tower. His prison was the upper chamber of the Bloody Tower, but he was not ill housed or closely confined. With him were his wife and son. A man of many and brilliant parts, he beguiled the time in chemistry experiments and in literature. Here he wrote his fragmentary "History of the World," begun in the eleventh year of his imprisonment.

For fourteen years Raleigh remained in the Tower. He had hosts of friends who tried to gain for him his freedom, but the unknown power against him were too strong to permit of his release. Prince Charles, who had a romantic interest in the old traveler, who had founded a colony in America and who had brought so still in their own time things from strange lands.

Had the Prince lived to be king, Raleigh's end would have been different. But the prince died in his youth. When Raleigh was finally released and made his last illfated voyage, it was because of friends who had sprung up in the place formerly occupied by the favorite Prince Charles, to the Spanish Infanta, and the policy of king and state was to be guilty of no offense to Spain.

The Spanish ambassador, through revenge, demanded the head of Raleigh. He was again committed to the Tower, where it was hoped to murder him. Sir Thomas Wilson, an emissary of the king, was deputised to this work, and to give out that Raleigh had taken his own life. This scheme did not work and the king called for the execution of the former judgment Raleigh saw his old cage no more and from the Gatehouse of Westminster he was taken to the place of execution in Palace Yard.

THE RIO GRANDE.

By GEORGE FITCH,
Author of "At Good Old Siwash."

The Rio Grande is a long, medium sized, meandering river which forms the southern boundary of civilization in North America.

It is one of the world's most peculiar rivers. In places it can be waded with ease by chickens, and boatmen make good money poling travelers across in small flat bottomed scows. But civilization cannot segregate it. While man and beast are swarming across it cheerfully and with such ease as to make the customs officers scratch their heads and look extremely dubious as civilization remains on the north shore yelling for help. And no one seems able to come forward with a solution.

The Rio Grande is only a quarter of a mile in width and is profusely decorated with sand bars. There are plenty of bridges across it and one may insert himself into a parlor car and ride from shore to shore for a quarter, but for the most unrestricted ballot, general education, the habeas corpus, and most of the commandments we have never gotten across it from north to south with any degree of success.

On the other hand, the bull fight, the political dictator and the pulque mill have remained permanently on the south side.

It will thus be seen that while the Rio Grande has worked wonders for the country north of it, it is exceedingly hard on the people who are so unfortunate as to reside south of it and who do not possess the necessary car fare and bridge tolls.

In fact, humanity would suggest that the Rio Grande should be moved immediately to a point several hundred miles south in order that at least a portion of Mexico may be admitted to the beneficent atmosphere which prevails on the north side.

The Rio Grande itself recognizes the virtue of this suggestion occasionally by shifting its channel and transferring large slices of Texas to Mexico or vice versa.

If only all governments were as wise as some rivers!

Turkey Lore.

"It sounds very simple to direct housewives in search of the whereabouts to make a Thanksgiving feast to "select a young tender turkey." In reality it is difficult to choose a fowl from among the heaps of dressed poultry offered on market at this season. The best plan is to select a live bird and watch it as to its good feed for a week before killing it. When this is done the following tests may be helpful:

Pinch the skin of the bird. Where the wing joins the body; if very tender, the turkey is probably young. I say "probably" because poultry dealers have a way of plying the dressed fowls with water "plump" them; this practice makes the skin tender and deceives the purchaser.

In young birds the cartilage at the tip of the breast bone will bend easily and this is a sure test of youth.

Having caught your turkey, clean it immediately after killing, and have the stuffing ready to stuff. Then rub it inside and out with salt, pepper and soft butter. Stuff the breast first and see that there is room to reside stuff the body lightly and skewer or sew the large opening shut.

Our best teacher, experience, says that one hour's baking for every three pounds of turkey is the proper time allowance. After the first hour the oven should not be very hot, but the heat should be even.

A covered roasting pan is the ideal utensil for baking the Thanksgiving or any other turkey, for there is no loss of aroma through evaporation and no basting is needed. These roasters save their initial cost quickly in the decreased amount of fuel used with them.

If you are too fond of turkey why not have a slice of rabbit or a fine plump duck this season and invest the money you would have spent for a turkey in one of these roasters. And Americans, by the way, should prefer to retrench in some other way than at the expense of a bountiful Thanksgiving feast, as intimately woven into the holiday woven into our family life. Yet, I do wish every woman who has a turkey might have all the implements that make her work simpler.

But to get back to our stuffed turkey—if you must bake the creature in an open pan fasten thin pieces of fat pork over the breast and keep it well basted. Otherwise the first hour the oven should not be very hot, but the heat should be even.

ORGANIZATION.

By GEORGE MATTHEW ADAMS.

Probably the greatest law of success is organization. Nothing so marvelously emphasizes the infinite, mind of the Creator of this world, as His wondrous solar system. Its organization is perfect. Organization means results—real triumphs. Before any man or business is able to get results, there must be organization.

The greater your organization is, the greater will be your success.

Every healthy human being is fitted out in the first place with every factor and faculty for a powerful organization. There is no brain with scores of elements ready to act in the organization. There is every member and organ of your body ready—waiting and willing to do your will. Get all these things into a sound, workable organization. For—

The greater your organization is, the greater will be your success.

If you feel yourself in the position of many a failure—take heart. Organize yourself! Write down upon a piece of paper your faculties. Then endeavor yourself gifted with. Plan out how your different abilities may help each other. Then write down the names of every possible avenue of endeavor where your abilities seem most adapted. Give every one of them something to do. Set them to work. Realize what organization is. Realize that—

The greater your organization is, the greater will your success be.

EXPOSE OF SMITH SHOCK TO MACON

League's Candidate for Chief of Police Agreed to Withdraw if Given $10,000 by Saloonists.

Macon, Ga., November 30.—(Special.) Macon people, especially the members of the Macon Law Enforcement league and those aldermen who had pledged their votes to A. F. Smith for chief of police, have scarcely recovered from the shock of the exposure of Smith, who offered to retire from the race after his election was assured if the whisky interests would pay him $10,000.

Friends and foes alike are congratulating Alderman R. C. Hazlehurst on his expose of Smith, and many have admitted they were never more badly fooled in a man than they were in Smith. Supposedly a pious, Christian gentleman, who never went out on his sanctum without kneeling down to say his prayers, and who has always been a leader in the cause of prohibition and other reform movements, his own admission that he offered to retire from the race for chief on payment of $10,000 has completely discredited him here.

It is reported that the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, of which Smith is a member, will take some action in the matter at the next meeting.

The story of why Smith withdrew from the race for chief of police at the eleventh hour, after his election had been assured by a vote of eight to four, has been disclosed by a signed statement given out here by a number of aldermen and friends of Mr. Smith, who investigated the circumstances. The meat of the whole thing is that Smith agreed to withdraw from the race if the whisky interests would pay him $10,000 for doing so.

The announcement has been startling in its effect here. Smith, who is one of the best known railroad engineer in the state, running between Valdosta and Macon on the G. S. & F., was backed for the office of chief of police by the Macon Law Enforcement league and had declared that when he became chief there would not be a drop of whisky sold nor a house for lewd women operated in Macon.

Withdrawal a Surprise.

He had been pledged the votes of eight of the members of the city council, and when Alderman Pittman read a letter of withdrawal at the meeting last Tuesday night considerable surprise was occasioned. It was apparent at the time there was some hidden meaning back of his action, but it was not then disclosed, though there have been various rumors afloat for several days.

One report was that Alderman R. C. Hazlehurst had "put one over" Smith and forced him to withdraw from the race. The rumor was that Alderman Hazlehurst had arranged an interview with Smith last Tuesday and had made him an offer of $10,000 to withdraw from the race and after prevailing upon Smith to accept the proposition, had immediately conferred with Alderman Pittman and told him that the man he was going to support for chief of police had agreed to withdraw for a certain money consideration. Alderman Pittman took the matter up with Smith, with the result that Smith had agreed to write the letter withdrawing his application.

When this rumor began to get in general circulation it was seen that it was bound to injure Alderman Hazlehurst, and members of council and friends of Mr. Smith decided it would be best to have Mr. Smith appear before them and state the true facts. This was done, and the hearing developed he following:

Smith Made Proposition.

Last Tuesday afternoon at 5 o'clock three hours before council was to meet, Mr. Smith sought an interview with Alderman Hazlehurst. He went to Alderman Hazlehurst's office and after telling him that he had the race won and knowing that the whisky people would give almost anything to get him out of the race, made the naked proposition that he would be willing to withdraw for $10,000.

Alderman Hazlehurst was dumfounded at the proposition and asked Mr. Smith where he would be an hour later. Smith told him he would be at the Exchange hotel. Alderman Hazlehurst immediately went to the office of Alderman J. B. Riley and laid the whole matter before him. They decided to call in Alderman Pittman, a friend of Mr. Smith's.

Hazlehurst and Pittman then went to see Smith at the Exchange hotel at 4 o'clock and the latter admitted in the presence of both men that he had sought the interview with Hazlehurst and made the proposition to him that he would be willing to withdraw for $10,000. He stated, however, that if elected chief he could not be bought for any money, considered he had a right to sell out before the election, if he wanted to.

Withdrawal Demanded.

Alderman Pittman then told Smith that he could not let any alderman vote for him in ignorance of what had transpired, and demanded that Smith withdraw his withdrawal.

Smith told the committee that his object in offering to sell out was to trap Alderman Hazlehurst and expose him to the people of the city of Macon, knowing that Hazlehurst was opposed to him and believing that he was the representative of the whisky interests, for that reason he said he desired to trap him and expose him to the people of Macon. He acknowledged, however, that in trying to trap Hazlehurst he had been trapped himself.

The committee which investigated the matter was composed of Aldermen Pittman, Lee and Riley and Messrs. Holloway and Wallace Miller.

NEW PASTOR OF TRINITY PREACHES FIRST SERMON

Rev. Luke Johnson Appeals to Congregation to Make 1914 Best Year in History.

Rev. Luke Johnson, former presiding elder of the Gainesville district, of the Methodist Episcopal church, south, preached his first sermon to his new congregation in the Trinity Methodist Episcopal church Sunday morning.

Rev. Johnson, who succeeded Rev. John B. Robins, whose sudden death was a shock to the community last week, used as his initial text, "Faith."

During his sermon he spoke significantly of the problems confronting Trinity and said in part:

"I am not a stranger to the situation here in old Trinity. There may be fearful hearts here as to the future, but they are few.

"The only question to ask yourself is 'Has God put it into your hearts to carry this work to a blessed end?'

Give Your Faith to God.

"That's all I ask of this congregation; just put the question to your soul.

"I challenge you to give all of your faith to God and He will work out our problems.

"This unique auditorium—I believe it is one of the most magnificent church edifices I have ever seen—stands as a monument to the congregation of Trinity. Let us put our aims and purposes on just the same high level and strive for the best things in our church life.

"Let us determine that where our fathers builded well, we shall go further. If the son is not better than the father, the father has failed in his purpose.

"The coming year, 1914, must be the best year in the history of old Trinity. Let us make Trinity the greatest church force ever felt in this city. We can do it. We will do it. It shall please God.

Credit Comes to You.

"I am your servant here. I am not the master or dictator, but the servant. If we accomplish anything, the credit will not come to me, but to you.

"All that I personally ask is your sympathy and prayers. With faith working in us this old church will accomplish wonders to the glory of His name."

A large congregation gathered to hear Rev. Mr. Johnson despite the inclement weather. At the close of the morning service the only display in the form of a reception to the new pastor took place when over half of the congregation remained after the benediction to shake hands with the new pastor.

DR. HOLDERBY PREACHES ON "CHRISTIAN UNITY"

Preaching on "Christian Unity," Dr. A. R. Holderby, pastor of Moore Memorial church, Sunday morning urged a unity of spirit among the people of all churches. That there was not this spirit, even in one particular church, was his declaration, and he asserted that in each church there was a disgruntled element which was never satisfied with the pastor or the work, and which kept the work of Christ from being carried out.

"The fact that a pastor has people in his own congregation who are opposed to him and who would like to see him resign is no sign of itself," said Dr. Holderby, "that the pastor is not the right man for the place. Christ was the most popular preacher who ever came to earth, and he was persecuted, criticised and killed.

"All people who call themselves Christians are not of one heart," he added, "for there are some who will not partake of holy communion because of the presence of others. This is not only foolish, but an insult to Christ who sat at the sacramental table with Judas Iscariot, whom he knew to be a devil. The devil comes to every sacramental table, and is present at every church service."

That the churches need not so much organic union as they do a unity of the spirit in the bond of peace was a point that the pastor stressed in his sermon.

THIRTEEN LIVES LOST KILLING 5,180 DEER

Boston, November 30.—The killing of 2,190 deer in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont and Massachusetts this fall cost the lives of thirteen persons and more or less serious injuries to seventy-two others. The deer season closed in Massachusetts a week ago and will end in Vermont tomorrow, but hunters in Maine and New Hampshire have two weeks left in which to track their quarry.

Maine leads the northern New England states in the number of fatalities. Of seven persons killed in that state, four were mistaken for deer and shot by other hunters; six were killed by the accidental discharge of their own weapons and a little girl was accidentally shot by an elder brother. More than sixty persons were wounded.

The New Hampshire and Vermont hunting seasons were accompanied by one fatality each. Four persons were wounded in New Hampshire and two in Vermont. No one was killed during Massachusetts' open week on deer, but four persons were [illegible] wounded.

MILLIONS ARE SAVED BY PLANT QUARANTINE

How Entomological Department Keeps Infested Plants and Trees Out of Georgia.

It is impossible to estimate in dollars and cents says the Georgia state board of entomology what this state has saved in the recent past on account of strict quarantine laws against plant insects and diseases. Hundreds of thousands of dollars more might have been saved, if the quarantine laws had been enacted in time to keep out such pests as the destructive San Jose scale.

Native enemies to vegetation, says the department, in a recent buletin, have grown steadily worse with improved agriculture, and it is the duty of the state, through the department, as well as through laws governing the shipment here of plants and trees, to meet these problems of seriously injurious insects and diseases, to eradicate them where possible, and in any event to minimize their power to destroy.

If the quarantine laws were not enacted in time to keep out the San Jose scale, they came soon enough. State Entomologist E. Lee Worsham points out, to hold back the Mexican cotton boll weevil, until he gets here by his own unaided efforts. If it had not been for strict observance of the Georgia quarantine laws the cotton boll weevil and other pests would have been in this state twelve to fifteen years ago.

Makes Careful Inspection.

Through the state department of entomology, Georgia now makes an annual inspection of all plants and trees offered for sale in the state, and does not permit the sale or distribution of a single specimen that is diseased. The department, likewise, maintains, under the Georgia laws, a strict quantine against infested nursery stock from other states and foreign countries. No nursery stock can be shipped into Georgia from anywhere unless it has a certificate of inspection from the entomologist in the state or country in which it originates, as well as a certificate from the Georgia department of ntomology. Any shipments made otherwise are in violation of the Georgia law and subject to prosecution. No person can even give legally to his friend or neighbor trees or plants unless they have been inspected by the state board of entomology and found to be free.

With the exception of the boll weevil there are no serious insect pests occurring in this country than brown tail and gypsy moths now present in New England and many parts of Europe. There is a strict quarantine on all plants from New England and other infested areas of Europe. This is regarded as so important that a careful inspection of all shipments of nursery stock from foreign countries is made upon arrival in the state, even though such shipments bear a certificate of inspection from an official inspector.

Other Dangerous Pests.

Some of the pests which are serious, and do not now occur in Georgia, are the Morellos fruit worm found in Mexico, the olive fruit worm of the Mediterranean countries, and various scale insects and sucking flies found in China, Japan and other Oriental countries, which are just as serious as San Jose scale. Some of the plant diseases are such diseases as "potato wart" found in Hungary and now occurring in England and other European countries and in New England, and the white pine blister rust of Europe which would probably mean complete destruction of our pines.

The Georgia quarantine against Mexican cotton boll weevil consists of a strict prohibition of the shipment of all articles from boll weevil areas that are liable to contain weevils such as seed cotton, cotton seed, cotton seed hulls, cotton seed sacks, pickery sacks, corn in shuck, Spanish moss and household goods packed in any materials liable to contain weevils. Until recently there was a strict quarantine against cotton lint in bales or compress, but it is believed by all entomologists to be entirely safe to permit such shipments and the quarantine has been lifted by the state on cotton lint.

PREACHERS ACCEPTING TOM PAINE'S DOCTRINES

Marks of Sin Seen on Every Side, Declares Rev. Allen C. Shuler.

Using for his theme "The Old-Time Religion," Allen C. Shuler, in a sermon at the East Side Tabernacle last night, startled his congregation when he declared that many churches and preachers today are accepting the doctrine with which Tom Paine horrified Christendom a little more than a century ago.

"I am not a pessimist, but an optimist," said Rev. Shuler.

"Neither am I a sensationalist, except to the extent that truth is sensational. I am not a pessimist because I believe in the Christ of God, and know that truth will triumph over error, sin and death.

"But I am not blind to conditions as they are, and to the needs of the souls and welfare of humanity. Every student of the signs of the times will tell you that we live in an age different from any other age; that with all our boasted twentieth century civilization, we are in the midst of a time of unrest, a time of need in many ways.

"Changes must needs come; progress is a law of righteousness. But the question I want you to think upon tonight is this: Are we, with all our boasted civilization, our achievements and advance along all lines of human endeavor, withstanding the powers of sin and satan which threaten the basis of our spiritual hope and impede the progress of the gospel of Christ? Rather is it not true that in the effort to adjust ourselves to the new conditions of the century we are doing so cold on God and our faith in the cardinal doctrines of man's redemption?

"Is there not a giving away on the part of the church and ministry today? The marks of sin are seen on every side; the works of the devil are prospering. The church, in a way, is marshaling her forces, but is she doing it in God's way? Even the daily press of the land sees the great need for something and extends a willing hand to help. I repeat the question, are we in the will of God?

"Sin and salvation, heaven and hell, blessing and banishment are no longer popular themes for preachers. On the contrary, there are men, not a few, but many, all over this country standing in pulpits as ministers of Christ preaching the very doctrine with which Tom Paine horrified Christendom a century ago. And of the number who have not thus fallen, away from the truth, only a small majority are speaking forth to the world the truth without apology. The greatest need of Protestantism today is a baptism from above and a consecration to the eternal truths of the cross of the blood."

The lecture will be given under the auspices of the Young Men's Bible class of the Second Baptist Sunday school. Much interest has been manifested in the ticket sale, admission to the lecture being 25 cents.

Dr. Poteat, who is well known in Atlanta, is one of the strongest men in the Baptist church in the south. DANIELS OUTLINES POLICY FOR NAVY

Government Oil and Government Armor Plate Favored--More Dreadnaughts Urged.

Washington, November 30.—Immediate acquirement and operation of oil wells and refineries to furnish fuel for the navy, an international conference to secure a reduction of naval construction, the addition of two dreadnaughts, eight destroyers and three submarines for the navy during the coming year, government manufacture of armor, more naval chaplains and religious leaders, better educational facilities for enlisted men and a graduated retirement law are chief recommendations in the annual report of Secretary Daniels, made public today.

The secretary departs from the usual custom in addressing the president in the first person singular, thereby adopting the directness and force of the report's statement. The report reflects his enthusiasm over the navy, declaring that the story of the year's work "by this patriotic body of citizen defenders of the republic is replete with examples of courage, devotion, sacrifice and progress."

Navy Very Efficient.

The secretary says the navy was never in such a high state of efficiency as today, and that in considering its future needs he has given less thought to the guns than to the men behind the guns. Believing that the efficiency of the navy as a fighting force will be in the highest sense promoted by the adoption of a serious and systematic course of instruction afloat and ashore stations, he points out that the department is trying to make the navy a great university. Not only enlisted seamen, but even petty officers have four years' courses known to them, and this will be corrected by a systematic course of instruction. Midshipmen of the graduating class will be utilized as instructors "with mutual benefit to the men and themselves," and to fit them for the work of the future. Such course will be added to the naval academy curriculum. As the war college is the apex of the navy system of education the department will try to have all officers pass through this training, using mail courses where available.

To Reduce Armaments.

The recent proposition of Winston Churchill, first Lord of the British admiralty, for a "naval vacation" meets with the secretary's hearty approbation in view of the tremendous increase in American naval expenditures. Pointing out that ten years ago the largest battleship cost $5,382,000, while the next dreadnaught will cost $14,464,000, Mr. Daniels says he sees no accelerating expenditure to be reduced. He adds that if he can get a vacation that we need, but a permanent policy inaugurated against extravagant expansionists," he says, "he will gladly consent given to ship-builders to guard against loss from a cessation of the building programs. The report recommends that the United States take the initiative and invite all the powers to a conference to discuss reduction of the heavy cost of armies and the navies.

Secretary Daniels says his building program is not large, but is progressive and has been recommended "as a middle course of wisdom," the revenues of the country not permitting so large an expansion in naval building as the department might desire to enter upon at this time. This is an explanation for the proposed reduction of the building program recommended by the general board, which contemplated construction of four battleships, sixteen destroyers and one destroyer tender; eight submarines and one tender; two oilers, two gunboats, one transport, one supply ship and one hospital ship.

Government Armor Plate Factory.

The secretary thinks that the time has come when the department should be freed from excessive prices charged by private manufacturers of armor plate, guns and gun forgings, powder, torpedoes and other supplies and munitions, so he recommends appropriations for an armor plate factory and an ind factory and the torpedo works. He refers to his efforts to secure reasonable prices from the armor companies, and asserts that without its own plant the government will be at the mercy of three manufacturers in time of war. History does not warrant an assumption, he adds, that the patriotism of these companies will prove superior to their desire for profits, inasmuch as during the time war with Spain was imminent they refused to accept the prices fixed by congress and declined to manufacture any armor until they got their own price of $700 per ton, which congress had determined on. The report outlines proper contracts made by the companies to supply for below those charged their own government, and directs particular attention to the fact that the department supply armor for the Japanese cruiser Harima at $468.8 a ton while charging $504 to $440 a ton for armor for the American battleship No. 35.

The recommendation regarding oil wells and refineries follows the transformation of modern navies from coal to oil burners. The report says the price of oil is steadily creeping upward, and is now twice as much as in 1911, and will be a staggering item in the expense account of the navy in the future unless the navy controls its own wells. Even now the navy is using 30,000,000 gallons of oil, which and there is likelihood that this will be increased in the future to 125,000,000 gallons, which must be purchased from the oil companies at their own price.

Government Should Produce Own Oil.

Therefore, Mr. Daniels urges, by the time the Panama canal is opened the navy should be producing its own oil from its petroleum reserves in the Elk Hills and Buena Vista fields in California; its refineries should be in operation; oil lands should be acquired in the mid-continent fields and oil tanks erected at various points.

The report declares that too much money has been spent ashore for buildings, and too little for docks and warships, though no definite recommendations are made for the location of new docks pending the handing of the "inadequate and well proportioned navy."

Desertions, formerly a serious problem, have decreased in a gratifying degree, the secretary reports, owing to better educational facilities, trips abroad for the benefit of foreign travel and a closer intimacy between the enlisted men and the officers, which has priceless results, it is added, have followed the policy of the latter, which are really schools of correction rather than prisons. Those sent to them for desertion have justified being returned to their ships.

More Chaplains Needed.

More chaplains, many more, is the crying need of the navy, according to Daniels says it is a reproach to the country that it now has only the same number that it had in 1842. He recommends not only an increase, which to one-half of the chaplains, but an appropriation to enable him to employ on every ship that has no chaplain a young religious leader to be known as "welfare secretary." He thinks enough chaplains should be a chaplain for every 1,000 men in the service.

Because youths admitted to Annapolis by fair competitive examination rank higher than those who enter without competition, the report suggests that congressmen hereafter should name midshipmen on the basis of such examinations. Carrying out the same principle—recognition of fitness demonstrated in honest competition—the secretary urges the passage of efficient protection to possible favoritism by the arbitrary method of "geographicality" in making appointments to the marine corps, held in New York and Boston to the rear and he hopes it will never again stand in the way of real merit.

In conclusion the secretary says that the appropriations of $8,235,564 of the annual appropriation for naval pay for retired officers will "long survive" unless officers recommended for retirement because of defective vision, perfectly qualified for any service except as a line officer. Mr. Daniels refuses to retire him because he would receive $17,000 in pay if he lived to the ordinary life. Therefore, the report suggests a graduated retirement law, by which the young men in good health but with slight defects shall receive the same retired pay as an old officer entirely incapacitated.

Admiral Dewey's Views.

Admiral Dewey's views of the naval program the United States should adopt if it is to guard its international policies in the family of nations, are transmitted to President Wilson with the report of Secretary Daniels.

The admiral's views, which embody the recommendations of the general board, are that the fleet should consist of forty-eight battleships of the line before 1925, if possible; that the building program should begin this year with four dreadnaughts, eight destroyers, eight submarines and minor craft. Admiral Dewey points out that if four first-class ships were laid down this year they would not increase the strength of the navy, but would only replace the Indiana, Massachusetts, Oregon and Iowa, which he declares should be written off the navy list as reserve line. Contending for a continuing building policy by congress, no political parties or change of administration, the report says:

"The general board does not believe the nation stands ready to abandon or modify any of its well-established policies.

"The forecast of the board with regard to naval development in other countries has been remarkably accurate. The absence of any definite naval policy on our part, except in the general board, and the failure of the people, the congress and the executive government to recognize the necessity for such a policy, has already placed us in a position of inferiority which may lead to war. Such inferiority is progressive and will continue to increase until the necessity for a definite policy is recognized and that policy put into operation.

Setback Received by Tammany Only Temporary, Says Johnson

Former Atlantan, Who Is Now in City, Says Time Will Come When He Will "Beat" Bob Adamson.

JOE JOHNSON.

One of the two Atlantans, who probably more than any other two men hailing from the Gate City, are in the nation's eye today, is Joe Johnson, fire commissioner of New York, and manager of the successful campaign by which many, in which Bob Adamson, another former Atlantan, managed the campaign for John Purroy Mitchel, who defeated the Tiger element. Mr. Johnson is in Atlanta on a visit, visiting relatives and has been renewing the hundreds of friendships he made while a newspaper man here.

Confidence in the ultimate victory of Tammany is the keynote of everything that Mr. Johnson has to say in regard to New York politics. The recent overthrow he attributed mainly to issues outside the municipal fight.

Causes of Defeat.

"The fact that Tammany had turned down disgruntled Democrats and ousted from the gubernatorial chair were the main things that caused the defection on the election day that put Mr. Johnson. "When you find 284,000 people sticking together, however, as they did for Tammany," he added, "you need not fear that there will be any disorganization of the forces.

"There's always talk of the disintegration of Tammany whenever Tammany has a setback," commented Mr. Johnson cheerfully, "but it usually ends in talk."

While declaring that it was too soon after one election for a man to be making any predictions as to the future, Mr. Johnson was perfectly willing to state his confidence in the world famous political rivals are warm personal friends and carry out in the same spirit their differences that they had in the days in Atlanta when they directed rival news organizations.

Both Were City Editors.

Previous to his going to New York Mr. Adamson was city editor of The Constitution and Mr. Johnson held the same position on The Journal. In those days the rivalry was in gathering the news. Today it is in gathering votes.

Recently Adamson put over a big "beat" on his rival, as he sometimes did in the old newspaper days in Atlanta. All that the fire commissioner has to say is that he can recall the days when he would return Adamson's "beats" when one that was just a little larger.

Both Mr. Johnson and his wife have relatives here and during their stay in Atlanta they have been the guests of Mrs. A. S. Hook, of East Lake, a sister to Mr. Johnson. They will go to Savannah expect to return to New York today.

COTTON TRADE WAITS FOR BUREAU REPORTS

Returns From Gins on Dec. 8, and Government Crop Estimate on Dec. 12.

New Orleans, November 30.—It hardly will be possible for the cotton trade to think of much else but statistics this week because of important bureau reports to be given out soon. Today closed the present period of ginning and on December 8 the census bureau will come out with the returns from the gins. On December 12 the department of agriculture will make its annual estimate of the size of the crop. This means that trading this week will be light and featured by much liquidation from both sides in preparation for these two events.

The census figures on ginning will be important, simply because they may shed more or less light on the crop estimate that follows a few days later. This report is partly the basis for the crop figures. The census returns probably will be followed by several private crop estimates of more than usual interest. This week the market probably will be influenced to a great extent by private forecasts of the amount of cotton ginned. As opinion now stands it favors the bear side, as it is generally thought that favorable weather has resulted in heavy picking and ginning.

Outside of the pending bureau reports, the trade will be interested in mill takings and exports. The latter show some signs of improvement, owing to bearish traders, while the former have been no large as from the first of the season that early every week it is predicted that the next week will see a shrinkage. Bulls point out that takings are on a larger basis and may be allowed by the small crop they claim has been raised and that, therefore, takings must fall off before long. Bears cannot see this argument, because they believe in a moderately large crop, but they do contend that takings will fall off because they think mill business is none too good. The matter of mill takings, exports and consumption will loom up large as soon as the trade can take its attention off the government's crop guess.

Farmers want at least another week of good weather in which to complete picking and ginns therefore might result in higher prices.

BRIDGES ENGAGES STAR ATTRACTIONS FOR LYCEUM COURSE

President Russell Bridges, of the Alkahest system, has just returned from an extended eastern trip, where he has been hearing and engaging attractions for the southern chautauquas and lyceums next summer and fall. A conference was held in New York by Mr. Bridges with ex-Governor Bolter and a contract drawn for a lecture tour of the south by the deposed governor early next spring, when he will appear in Atlanta and tell all about his troubles with Tammany and the incidents that led up to his impeachment.

Definite contracts were also closed by Manager Bridges with the following list of celebrities, all of whom will appear on the six-day Alkahest platform for the southern chautauquas during last May, June and July. The New York city marine band and other soloists. The Neapolitan orchestra, Frederick Warde, the noted Shakespearian student and actor; Senator Robert M. La Follette, Mrs. Lafon Corbitt Pickett, the widow of General Pickett; Miss Sybil Dunnis and assisting artists in a grand opera recital; Dr. Robert Parker Miles, of New York; Miss Ruth Sears, humorist; Miss Hallie Gasaway, play-reader; Miss Capvat, the Indian magician; Ernest Gamble concert party, of Pittsburg; the Apollo concert quintet, of Boston; the Avon Sketch club and Glean Wells, and the Hawkeye Glee club.

More than fifty cities and towns in Georgia and adjoining states have already contracted for this chautauqua and lyceum, and many others will join the system before the opening.

BRIDAL PAIR KILLED ON THEIR HONEYMOON

Kokomo, Ind., November 30.—Ed Grishaw, 45, a farmer, and Mrs. Wilbur Youngman, 24, both of Kempsville, Ill., were killed and Wilbur Youngman, 25, husband of the dead woman, was fatally hurt this afternoon, when the carriage in which they were riding was struck by a Lake Erie and Western passenger train at a crossing near Fairfield.

Mr. and Mrs. Youngman were on their honeymoon and were going to Grishaw's home for a visit.

The curtains on the carriage prevented Grishaw and Mrs. Youngman driving, from seeing the approaching train.

Darling has tendered his resignation as special agent of the department of justice at Washington to become effective about January 1, next. It was announced here tonight. Every True Patriot Should Long To Make His Nation Christian

Declares Rev. Hugh K. Walker

That every true patriot should yearn to make his nation Christian is the idea of the statement of Dr. Hugh K. Walker, pastor of the First Presbyterian church, in his sermon Sunday morning. Dr. Walker took his text from Philippians 3:20, "For our Citizenship is in Heaven."

"The task that faces America is greater than that of any other nation," said the pastor in discussing his sermon. "We have, as has no other nation, a mass of humanity pouring in upon us each year and our task must be to see that the spirit of these incoming citizens is truly Christ-like.

"There are no longer any such things as foreign missions. We continued: "They are practically all home missions, whether they are in the mission field or at home. The world has got very close together in these days."

Dr. Walker's Sermon.

The sermon in full is as follows:

"It is necessary to remind ourselves sometimes that the highest type of patriotism is not popularity, to remember that some of earth's best men have been hounded to their death by those whom they most desired to help. Despite their devotion they have been buried under a heap of pelting stones. That is fair saying of earth but love begets love' proves oftentimes as false as it is true. Love of country does not insure a country's love. Devotion to a people does not assure that a people's devotion. The pages of history are blotted with the tears and the blood of persecuted patriots. Jesus of Nazareth was the chief sufferer," said the only lover of His people who has been despised and rejected by men. The same Jerusalem that crucified the loving Saviour of God had stoned the fearful habit of discrediting and doing away with the prophets. The Hebrew prophets, who were stoned and strove under by their fellow countrymen, loved their native land with a passionate fervor, only to be misunderstood. It was the worst hated and most cruelly treated of all. It was in love of his own country that the noblest of patriotic sentiments was enforced exile from one's native land was a fate far worse than death.

"In this same company of despised and rejected patriots we find Paul. His was a beautiful devotion. We ourselves hardly realize the true worth of him as a magnificent apostle and a glorious citizen of the world. Never truly ever as the superb patriot. And yet in love of his own country and of his own people, he excels. In spite of the fact that the demagogues of Jerusalem cursed him roundly and declared that he was a fellow not worthy to live, cried out over and over again that he wished that he might be anathema for the sake of his brethren. His only regret was that he could not hate God for his own people, but he loved them on to the end with a love that knew no bounds, when can we find a more inspiring picture of true patriotism.

"Patriotism is not earth; he lets us into the secret. His earthly patriotism is shadowed with the ideals of his heavenly citizenship. Its noblest characteristics are self-forgetfulness and surrender of his life to the highest. His example teaches us that self-effacement is the very bed-rock of patriotism.

He Is Never Truly Patriotic.

"The true patriot is never a braggart. Patriotism is like charity, it vaunteth not itself. It is too busy doing things that are worth while today to waste any of what it did yesterday or expects to do tomorrow. The instinct to boast over one's country is as ineffaceable that it is contemptible. Sir Walter Scott's heart was bound to 'the honest gray hills' and the 'bonnie woods' of the Tweed. An English poet speaks of England as the 'sceptred isle,' and calls it 'this little world, a precious stone set in the silver sea.' And the French exile, speaking of the very city of his birth, shuddered and cast him out, declared that 'in the sweet bosom of his beloved city he longed to die and to rest his weary soul.' At his home and abroad, the soul of Paul was the same as that of the country as the sweet land of liberty.' Such endearing terms make self-effacement glowing and imparts that spirit of heroism which makes all joy in the welfare of the country.

"But the distinctive characteristic of the kind of patriotism of which Saint Paul is the exponent is that of the text in the phrase 'surrendered to the highest.' It was the secret of Paul's true citizenship. There is just a suspicion of aloofness in the spirit of all other-worldliness, which would discount our every day tasks. Such, however, is not the case. In our text, we are told that the secret of Paul's world's citizenship. It is the assertion of a higher allegiance which does not two concurrent loyalties. It is no spirit of opportunism that tries to serve God and the world. Here is the glorious idea, we live in two worlds at the same time. To make the best of the one we are now living in, that is the end of the ideal. The secret of the one we are now living in, that is the end of the ideal. The secret of the one we are now living in, that is the end of the ideal. The secret

BASKETBALL SEASON OPENS THIS WEEK

Ten Captains on All-Stars Who Play Soldiers Saturday; Devore Will Play in the Line

Probably the greatest aggregation of southern football players that ever have been collected to play on one team will be seen in action when Lewis Hardage's all-stars play the fifth infantry soldiers December 6 at Ponce de Leon Park.

The team sounds like an all-time all-southern selection and will present a line-up of gridiron celebrities that should stir the heart of every football fan in the south.

To summarize—Ten captains of big southern colleges teams are all to play together. Here are the players:

Jenks Gillem—Captain of the 1912 Sewanee team. Three years an all-southern selection and one of the best punters and drop-kickers the south has ever produced.

Majors—Auburn captain of 1912, a wonderful end and defensive player as well as a punter and place kicker.

Tom Brown of Vanderbilt, four years an all-southern man and reputed the best tackle who ever played south of the Mason-Dixon line.

Peacock—Captain of Georgia's 1912 team and all-southern guard for two years.

E. Brown—Vanderbilt captain of this year and all-southern choice three years, a wonderful smasher of interference.

Hay Morrison—Captain Vanderbilt 1911, all-southern choice three years, a wonderful smasher of interference.

Kirk Newell—Auburn's speedy half back, captain of this year's eleven, and an all-southern three years.

Bob McWhorter—The peerless captain of Georgia's 1913 near champions, all-southern four years.

Lewis Hardage—Captain of Vanderbilt 1912 team, an all-southern half four years.

Homer Cook—Captain of this year's Tech team, an all-southern one year.

Bill Davis—Auburn's 1911 captain and all-southern two years.

In addition the following men will be seen in action: Conklin, University of Georgia, at end; Meadows, Auburn, at tackle; Joe Smith, Gordon Institute and Cornell, quarterback; Sheep Lamb, Auburn's eccentric tackle and all-southern three years; Red Hasslock of Vanderbilt, all southern guard four years; Eric Cheape, Sewanee, guard, all-southern one years; Pitts of Auburn, all-southern center two years; Loeb of Tech, the best center Tech has ever had, all-southern one year.

To oppose this wonderful team of individual stars the soldiers will have perfect team work and the great Devore as tackle. Devore's 215 pounds of muscle and thorough knowledge of the game will help the soldier's line up powerfully and give them that confidence which only the presence of a great player and their coach can give.

Taking it all in all, a great game is to be played on December 6; one that no true follower of football will care to miss. Atlanta fans are surely fortunate that the game is to be staged here.

Birmingham has put in a bid for the game but Atlanta is to be given the first chance and it has been definitely decided that Atlanta gets it. A second game may possibly be arranged later on at Birmingham, which, in event, it will be up to the Atlanta lovers of football to show by their attendance at next Saturday's game that Atlanta is still in the lead and always will be as a patroniser of sports.

JACK COOMBS BETTER AND LEAVES HOSPITAL

Philadelphia, November 30.—"Jack" Coombs, Philadelphia American League Stubs pitcher, who has been a patient in a hospital here since before the world's series last October, left the institution today. He will remain in this city for about three weeks before undertaking the journey to his home in Maine.

Coombs contracted typhoid of the spine during last spring's training season. After considering at his home he attempted to go on the games toward the end of the season, but suffered a relapse. Coombs expects to be in shape to join the Athletics next year.

NAVY STILL LEADS EASTERN ELEVENS

In Scoring Points, Despite Defeat by Army Saturday. The Carlisle Indians Are Second.

Although the Army sprung one of the biggest surprises of the current football season, they did not go up any in the standing of the teams, but still rank third.

The Navy, although they only scored 7 points Saturday, continue to lead the fans of the eastern division in points scored against the opposition.

The way the teams are ranked below will be the final ranking, as the Army-Navy game Saturday brought the season to a close.

It is interesting to note that, although Harvard and Princeton rank fourth and eighth respectively, they have had only 21 points scored against them by opposing teams.

WILSON IS PLEASED WITH MONEY MEASURE

Washington, November 30.—President Wilson returned early today from New York, where he saw the Army-Navy football game Saturday and after a long automobile ride, got in touch with the democratic leaders who are engineering the currency bill in the senate.

The president is highly pleased with the progress of the democratic conference and hopes for the enactment of the bill before many weeks. Conferences between the president and members of the senate currency committee are expected to take place during the week.

Cates' Hand Not Crushed.

Richmond, Ind., November 30.—Eli Cates, star pitcher of the Indianapolis Federal League club, who is wintering on this farm near here, today asserted that the report that his right hand had been crushed in a corn shredder was greatly exaggerated. He said he had slightly injured his right arm a few days ago and supposed the report started from that incident.

BILL SMITH LEAVES ON SCOUTING JAUNT

Will Attend National League Meeting at New York in Search of Players.

Manager Billy Smith of the Crackers will leave Atlanta Saturday morning for the National League meeting, which will be held in New York December 4.

Bill will stop off in Washington en route to New York to have a conference with his old side kick, Clark Griffith. Griff may have another infielder that he will be willing to let the Crackers have. If he's good enough, Bill will take him.

This is the object of Bill's visit to the National League meeting. Bill has Eible for first, McConnell for second, Jennings for short and Manush for third.

This makes a pretty fair infield, according to Bill's notion, but Willie Andrew is not going to be caught asleep at the switch. Bill loves to win pennants about as well as a small boy loves candy, and the present infield may not win a rag, at least Bill is not certain that it will.

McConnell is known. It is a certainty what he can do. Eible and Jennings are touted highly. Maybe they'll deliver, but if they did not, Bill would be in a fine pickle if he did not have some one to take their places.

Bill will have a talk with McConnell while he is in New York and Bill hopes to come back to Atlanta with the signed contract of the little second sacker in his wallet.

HOW FRANCIS OUIMET NEARLY LOST TITLE

Boston, Mass., November 30.—His golf clubs put away for the winter, Francis Ouimet, of Brookline, the youthful amateur whose victory in the United States open golf championship surprised the golfing world, told friends recently how nearly he missed winning the title.

"I sigh now to think how I might never have had a chance at the championship," said Ouimet. "I did not want to compete in the United States golf association's championship tournament, because I felt I had no chance to win. I told close friends I would not enter, saying I would rather learn something of the game from prominent golfers who would play.

"Later, during the tournament at Atlantic City, President Watson, of the association, asked me why I had not sent in my entry for the championship, and I replied: 'What's the use of a player of my standing attempting to compete in such an event. I don't want to make a boob of myself.'

"That's all right' the president said, 'but we are trying to get a good entry of amateurs, so just hand in yours.'

"I did so, but as it turned away, said to myself, 'I'm doing this under protest.'

The rest is recent golf history.

One thing which is not causing widespread worry is the proposed increase of taxation on incomes over $100,000.

NATIONAL GUARD LEAGUE TO CLOSE

Final Basketball Games of the Season Will Be Played Wednesday and Friday. Title Match Friday.

The last games of the National Guard Basketball league will be played this week, and the league will end a season that has not been quite as good as had been expected.

Three games more remain to be played. Two Wednesday night and one Friday night. The battle Friday night will be in all probability for the championship of the league. Company G and the Governor's Horse Guards regulars will meet. Neither of these teams have lost a game yet, and it will be for blood when they tie up.

The Horse Guards have played and won six games, while the Company G team has only played four, two of their games being postponed.

The Horse Guards have experienced little difficulty in winning their games, and the team is in the best condition it has been in during the season.

A clause in the league's constitution provides that should a team win the league honors, but not lead the team occupying second place by two games, a series of three games must be played by these two teams. Therefore, if Company G wins the struggle they will have to play the post-season games with the Governor's Horse Guards.

TECH ELEVEN WILL NAME ITS CAPTAIN

Official Photo to Be Taken Either Today or Tuesday, at Which Time Captain Will Be Elected.

The official photograph of the Georgia Tech varsity football team will probably be made today or Tuesday, Hirshburg and Phillips are the official photographers.

At this time the team captain for 1914 will probably be named. Alf McDonald, the Jackets' brilliant halfback, seems to be the logical choice for the position.

"Tg" will also be awarded at this time.

Athletic Club Five Opens Season Saturday Night

The Atlanta Athletic club basketball team will try open the lid next Saturday night against Bessemer, A. C., from Bessemer, Ala.

The team has been practicing for about a month and are gradually rounding into playing form. They are looking for a much harder game than they had last season with the same team as word has been received that Bessemer is much stronger.

The line-up of the club team has not been decided upon and will not be until the whistle blows for the game to start. The team will in all probability be chosen from the following boys and, believe me, they are all anxious to start:

Dubard, center (captain); Forbes, Smith, Abbott, Wight, forwards.

Carter, Weaver, Locke, guards.

The club team have been having some scrimmages with the best teams of the military league and the basketball fans are going to have a lively winter.

The line-up of the Bessemer team will be:

Houston, center;

B. S. Clay (captain), Donaldson, Bailey, forwards.

I. Clay, Edmonson, Filmore, guards.

VICTORIOUS ARMY TEAM GIVEN ROYAL WELCOME

At Annapolis the Navy Boys Are Cheered, and the Cry Is, "Next Year."

West Point, N. Y., November 30.—The Army football team, returned over its victory from the Navy, returned to camp at noon today. The squad was met at the wharf by the 600 cadets of the battalion and hauled up the long hill in the same stage which has been used for that purpose for many years. Six hundred pairs of willing hands was the motive power.

A real army mule, taken from the pack train on duty here, with a "Navy" goat strapped to his back, was a feature of the parade. The goat was bound fore and aft with a sailor's navy twisted by the Army cadets to resemble the figure "7," the Army's winning score, and the "dead" Navy mascot rested on a black pall thrown over the mule's back.

Cheers for Players.

The procession up the hill to the mess hall was headed by the academy band. Cheers were given for Captain Hoge, head coach; Lieutenant Daly, Trainer Harry Tuthill and members of the team. Speeches and football songs were indulged in during dinner in the mess.

The football squad circled its next year's captain on the train trip home this morning. They chose Vernon E. Prichard, a second class, as their leader. Prichard has played quarterback for two seasons, and got in every game except one, on the Army's schedule this season. His brilliant forward passing, spectacular open field running and excellent generalship has made him one of the season's leading quarterbacks. He is 22 years old; was admitted to West Point from the eleventh congressional district of Iowa in June, 1911, and will be graduated in 1915.

Welcome for Vanquished.

Annapolis, Md., November 30.—The vanquished Navy football team was given a loyal welcome by the brigade of midshipmen, the naval contingent, and the townspeople when it returned tonight.

The special train, bearing the coaches, players and substitutes, was an hour and a half late, but the crowd waited patiently in a cold, damp twilight until they came. According to the usual custom, the horses were unhitched from the busses into which the players were hustled and they were drawn by their classmates.

There was no bonfire, no burning of brooms and no torchlight procession, nor were there any speeches, but each player and substitute was given an individual yell. The celebration broke up with the famous "siren yell," followed by "next year, next year, next year."

SIX-DAY CYCLE RIDERS IN TRAINING FOR RACE

Walthour and Collins Entered in Big Event at Madison Square Garden.

New York, November 30.—The entire contingent of sixteen teams entered for the six-day bicycle race in Madison Square Garden, which starts at midnight Sunday, December 7, began final training today on the roads in this vicinity and at the Newburg, N. Y., motordrome. The German team, Packe Buschi and Applehans and the French team, Perchicot and Breton, were out for practice. Perchicot is also entered for the feature event in the preliminary race next Saturday night against Frank Kramer, Jackie Clarke and Francisco Verri for the world's short distance championship.

This year, for the first time in the history of the six-day race, foreign teams overshadow the American contrics. There are only six American teams in the contest. There are five distinct foreign teams and five combinations, four of which are composed of one American and one Australian each, and one in which an Englishman will ride with an American.

Among the prominent entries besides those already mentioned are Clarke and Hehir and Walker and Fye, of Australia; the Australia-Canadian combinations of Coullet and Fogler, Pamda and Moran, Root and McNamara, and John Hedell and Corry, Fred Hill and Ryan and Walthour and Collins, America, and Verri and Brocco, Italy.

No Stage Manager Ever Lives

So Says Britt Craig After Ben-Hur Rehearsal

To Reach the Grandfather Age

By Britt Craig.

During the plastic though unfortunate period of my career I have or other managed to acquire the stage carpenter ship of the only opera house in Gainesville, Hall county, Georgia, U. S. A.

A popular one-night-stand musical comedy with three rather pretty girls and twenty ugly ones—not to mention a drunken stage carpenter—came to town for a single performance. The carpenter got illuminated on mountain moonshine and subsequently into the village calaboose. The show had to have a carpenter to play the next night's engagement, which wasn't Bingville, but was just about as bad. So they took me along in the emergency.

I will never forget that engagement. The town constable brought his whole family and occupied half of the orchestra pit. One of the footlights blew out and we had to light it with a match.

Naturally, I consider myself now a full-fledged ex-stage carpenter and an honorary member of the profession. I take great pride in it, nevertheless, but I have yet to see an honest-to-goodness stage manager who lives long enough to become a grandfather or who even outlives a chorus lady.

A Task for Job.

If you want to appreciate this fact go down to the Atlanta theater and witness a rehearsal of Ben-Hur this week and watch Philip Brady, stage manager, exhaust nervous energy trying to drill histrionic ability into a herd of professionals all the way from book agents to plumbers. That is to say, the local supernumeraries who help the 200 Ben-Hur actors stage the show.

I have always believed that I knew quite a deal of the fascinating world "back stage," inasmuch as I had traveled with this musical comedy until it went utterly stranded and completely out of the running away up in the Blue Ridge in a little place called Ducktown, where, thanks to the providence that cares for babies and stranded actors, there was a printing office that gave me a job at which I made money enough to ride halfway home.

But, this Philip Brady could undoubtedly convince me or anybody else that we were utterly unable to distinguish a "tormenter" from a "flood lamp," and that we didn't know enough about stage carpentership to lash a "jog" next to "center door." He had that crowd of supernumeraries last night standing on their ears, and, although they entered the theater absolutely ignorant of the Thespian trade, they left it with the proud knowledge that they knew enough about it to draw down $3.50 weekly.

Tonight and Last Night.

Tonight you who witness Ben-Hur will see a huge crowd of stately Roman legionaries, centurions and citizens marching and swaying in rhythm with the swelling music, and you can't distinguish them from the real actor-folk. But you ought to have seen them last night! If you had, you would readily understand why I say no stage managers live to reach the grandfather age.

Here's an Instance.

Brady was insisting that the mob of "supes"—extra folks they call 'em in stage parlance—yell "bloody murder" at Ben-Hur after the famous race scene. The "supes" yelled it all right, but they didn't get enough "murder" or "blood" into it. Brady tore his iron gray hair, yelled to the gods in the "flies" and drove his heel through a 2x4 scantling.

"Hey, you locho!" he shrieked. "If this Ben-Hur had lost you four-bits in a race, what'd you do to 'im? What'd you do to 'im? Say! What'd you do to 'im?"

"Murder 'im!" howled the mob.

"Then, that's what he's done. Now, murder 'im! Murder 'im, confound it! Murder 'im—"

They did. If Ben-Hur had been present, he'd have lasted just about as long as his satanic majesty would have sat on a cake of ice.

Strenuous Teaching.

There were fifty of them. Fifty supernumeraries! That's some mob to crowd on a stage, especially when you consider the 200 regular members of the company. And, they were all herded together. Can you imagine one slender, little stage manager, whom any one of the plumbers or steamfitters in the supernumerary list could have thrown into the orchestra pit without any especial exertion, storming and fuming at this bunch and drilling actors into them at the top of his voice?

They crowded about the stage like a flock of frightened sheep, and how on earth he ever got them into shape, it's not expected of a newspaper reporter to know. But, he managed to do it, and why his nervous system wasn't a shattered wreck when he had finished the task is another thing that a mere newspaper reporter isn't expected to know.

He made Atlanta plumbers and book agents and waiters and teamsters and ex-policemen and barkeepers and blacksmiths into real, regular Romans and showed them how to march according to the style that prevailed along about the time Nero played and Rome flamed.

Trio the Roman Tango.

He had them tripping light-footedly all over the stage and doing the Roman tango in thirty different steps. He made tribunes out of steamfitters, emperors out of innocent, gladiators of book agents, patricians out of bartenders and vestal virgins of chorus girls-out-of-jobs-for-the-time-being.

Oh, yes, there were plenty of girl "supes" present. Most of them persisted in talking "off stage," while the male "extra men" were being put through their rehearsals.

"Say," Brady would rebuke them, "if you want to do a monologue, come on out here. Chuck that line of gab. You're hired to do pantomime—not chin music."

Teaching fifty supernumeraries how to act is no sinecure—not by a jugful. Ask Brady! He's one man with the "Ben-Hur" outfit who earns his wages. And, teaching the "supes" is not all he does. When the "supes" half-hundred had finished with their night's work, he called in the regulars and set them to labor.

Kissing Must Be Real.

The first stunt rehearsed was a ballet scene where two principals perform a dance that ends with a kiss. A youthful actor with a thriving pompadour and evidently much pride in his ability, whirls about the stage with a very willing little girl whose hair is red and whose ambition is to excel Pavlowa.

Their first kiss was more or less half-hearted. He merely touched the cheeks of his sister-dancer.

"Listen, here," stormed Brady. "Are you going to kiss that girl or not?"

"I kissed her," the actor-dancer answered.

"You did NOT!"

"But, if you had to do it six nights in the week and three matinees—not to mention rehearsals—you'd be different," replied the actor youth.

"I could kiss my mother-in-law, if I was paid to do it," retorted the stage manager.

Their next kiss could be heard plumb to the box office.

Big Company Arrives.

The big company and production of "Ben Hur" was brought in on a special train from Macon, which was run in two sections, so large is the company and so many cars are required. The first train brought the company of 200, and consisted of four day coaches, three Pullman cars and two dining cars, while the second consisted of eight baggage cars loaded with scenery and accessories and a string of forty horse cars loaded with the thoroughbreds used in the great racing scene.

In moving the scenery and baggage, the transfer company has to provide forty trucks for scenery, each piled so high as to look like small mountains. A force of 100 men were required to handle the baggage in its transfer, and the work of unloading and removing began shortly after the stroke of midnight.

Previous to the arrival of the company, a car of special scenery and equipment arrived on Friday, and all day Sunday a force of mechanics were at work on the stage, removing the flooring and arranging for the placing of the big treadmills upon which the twelve horses race during the thrilling scene when Ben-Hur wins the chariot event. This work will be finished today, and by 8 o'clock this evening everything will be in perfect shape for the production of the play, which is by far the most stupendous on the American stage today.

U. S. COURTS KNOCKED BY AN ENGLISH AUTHOR

Allan Upward, Renowned Publicist, Says American Tribunals Unjust to Foreigners.

London, November 29.—Allan Upward, the English novelist, playwright, publicist and barrister-at-law, whose name reminds one irresistibly of the title of one of "Oliver Optics" books, and who has had an uncommonly interesting career, has just published a new work which he calls "The Divine Mystery." What is more, he has published it himself, having so he states in a flyleaf accompanying the copy hent me, withdrawn the work from two leading publishers and refused it to several more "in order to make a stand against the practice of selling American sheets, which he believes to be injurious to English authors." I asked Upward, who, amongst other things, is an honorary bard of the National Welsh Gorsedd and a member of one of the most famous learned societies of Athens, what he meant by the statement above quoted, and have received the following letter from him. It was written, by the way, from the Royal Societies club in St. James' street.

Why He Withdrew Book.

"I withdrew 'The Divine Mystery' from two London publishing firms because they stipulated for the right to sell unbound copies to an American publisher. By that system the English publisher is enabled to pass the printer's bill, and is thus relieved from any necessity to exert himself, while the author is left practically dependent on the caprice of the American publisher. The last with whom I have had dealings has ceased to render me accounts, or to answer letters from me or my solicitor. It may be news to you that the English Society of Authors has laid down that it will not take up a case of a member injured by an American publisher, on the ground that the American courts are not impartial between natives and foreigners.

"Personally, these business details are utterly distasteful to me. I consider that when an author has put his whole powers into the task of writing a good book, there ought to be some public agency to relieve him of the task of being his own commercial traveler. I have just printed a thousand copies of 'The Divine Mystery' at my own expense, rather than surrender the rights of my literary brethren; but, having done that, I shall now be pleased to make a free gift of the entire edition to any suitable charity in England or America."

Needs Literary Agent.

Evidently Mr. Upward needs a literary agent badly. Whether the English Society of Authors has laid down any such rule as he mentions one takes the liberty of doubting. I have not yet read "The Divine Mystery," but I note that William Archer describes it as "a brilliant sketch of the natural history of religion." As a matter of fact, anything of Upward's is pretty sure to make good reading, and his adventure stories, particularly, are full of "ginger." The author, by the way, has had a few adventures himself. He went to Greece as a volunteer in 1897, ran the blockade of Crete and took part in the invasion of Turkey by the Greek army of Epirus. Four years later, he became British resident in northern Nigeria, a fearsome land if ever there was one, and he also spent some time in Macedonia. At home he has "stood" for parliament once and been defeated, and written many poems and serious books. He is just 50 and gives as his recreations, "bicycling and bridge."

Extract From the Diary of a Reformer.

(Ellis O. Jones in December Lippincott's.)

I am wondering logical whether it pays to try to uplift the human race. As I walked among the slums this afternoon, I passed thousands upon thousands of people, not one of whom seemed to have the slightest inkling of what I would do for them if they would only listen to me and repose a little confidence in me. Not one of them realized how I grieve for their unregeneracy or how glad I should be to put into effect the many splendid ideas for their welfare that I have worked out.

Sometimes, however, it seems these people are so wilful. They really act as if they knew better than I what was good for them. What is a person to do with such people? Why should they presume to think that they know what they want of what is good for them?

I am not sorry I am a reformer. Not even the ingratitude of the entire human race can make me sorry for that. Nevertheless, I am often discouraged, and tonight I almost feel it would be better if I deliberately locked up in my breast all the important theories I have worked out, and left civilization to its fate.

ALL-EASTERN NAMED BY LEADING COACHES

Yale Is Given Four Men, and Three Are Selected From Harvard's Eleven.

New York, November 30.—Although the football season of 1912 ended officially with the playing of the Army-Navy game here Saturday, the leading coaches, players and authorities sustain gridiron interest during the early days of December by selecting All-American and all-sectional teams. These mythical strongest elevens of the year express the opinions of close followers of the game and furnish food for football discussion during the months when gridiron paraphernalia gathers dust in dark lockers and corners of the gymnasium. Many of the coaches follow every action of pupil and opponent during the entire season with the idea of an "all" team always in mind, and the first fruits of their observations already are available.

While several of the leading gridiron instructors and authorities are still puzzling over the program there is enough material at hand as a result of selections by prominent coaches and players to form the basis of an all-eastern eleven. Some of these authorities, of the intersectional contests of the season have selected All-American teams, but the majority having confined their choice to eastern combinations, the all-eastern team, being the consensus of opinion, appears to be as follows:

Hogsett, L. E.	Dartmouth
Talbot, L. T.	Yale
Kelleher, L. G.	Yale
Harding, C.	Yale
Mahan, R. G.	Princeton
Baillie, R. T.	Princeton
Hitchcock, R. E.	Yale
Wrightington, Q. B.	Yale
Mahan, L. H.	Harvard
Gerow, R. H.	Harvard
Dillon, F.	Harvard

In the western football pick, which includes Ohio State on the east extremity and the University of Nebraska on the other end, the consensus of opinion is that section named has developed this fall some of the greatest players it has ever known. There were so many stars that a great variety of selections are being made for the all-eastern eleven by experts.

An approach to unanimity is found in the make-up of the backfield. Critics agree that Eichenlaub, Notre Dame fullback, his position, Craig, of Michigan, and Norgren, of Chicago, were given the halfback places, and Dorais, of Notre Dame, seems the favorite for quarterback. Solon, of Minnesota, is given one end almost unanimously, though Hoskins, Notre Dame captain, was pronounced nearly as good. Butler, Wisconsin's "All-American" tackle, is generally selected for tackle on the All-Western, but the critics differ widely in his running mate. Brown, of South Dakota; Pontius, of Michigan; Shull, of Chicago, and Halligan, of Nebraska, all were considered available. Allmondinger, Michigan, and Keller, Wisconsin, and Gallagher, Missouri, have received prominent positions as guards.

Desjardin, Chicago, apparently, is center, regarding unanimity for hard work in the line, his ability to cover ground and tackle and his good head work; it is declared by the critics, put him in a class by himself.

Despondent Over Health, Homerville Postmaster Ends Life With Bullet

Homerville, Ga., November 30.—Despondent because of ill health and business reverses, Postmaster D. E. Kirkland, who was also a prominent merchant here, committed suicide tonight by shooting himself.

Fell to His Death.

Tampa, Fla., November 30.—Edwin B. Jones, a carpenter, of Washington, D. C., fell from a second story balcony of a rooming house at St. Petersburg this morning and was instantly killed, his neck having been broken. Four men were with him at the time. A coroner's inquest will be held tomorrow.

Premier Borden Returns.

Ottawa, November 30.—Robert L. Borden, premier of Canada, arrived home, after a sojourn at Hot Springs, Va., where he took the baths. Mr. Borden announced that he was feeling in the best of health. The premier declared there was nothing official in the visit he made to Washington on his return journey.

THOUSANDS OF WOMEN ARE BOYCOTTING EGGS

Members of National Housewives' League Fighting to Lower Prices.

New York, November 30.—In response to a message from Chicago stating that 110,000 women had joined in the boycott in that city for cheaper eggs, Mrs. Julian Heath, president of the National Housewives' league, which instituted the crusade, today sent the following telegram to Mrs. John C. Eley:

"Happy congratulations to you and the women of Chicago, particularly the women's clubs. All members of the league well in line. Non-members joining crusade daily. All will join when situation is understood. We must not retreat legally until national victory is assured."

Mrs. Heath said the crusade in New York is progressing rapidly and that results in the form of cheaper eggs are practically assured. As fast as conditions are understood by housewives generally, she explained, they join in the boycott, promising to stand by the league until the prices for both storage and fresh eggs are reduced.

COLYAR FREE ON BOND.

GRAIN-LADEN VESSELS ON WAY DOWN LAKES

Fort William, Ontario, November 30.—In the final rush to get on their way down the lakes before midnight and thus avoid the necessity of having their insurance extended, twenty-five freighters, carrying about 8,000,000 bushels of grain, cleared for the east today. All the week past the elevator men have been working from fourteen to twenty hours a day in loading the vessels.

November has been a record month for grain shipments, and more than 250 vessels cleared from this harbor. During last season the total only reached with something like 40,000,000 bushels of grain, but this year it is estimated that about half of these vessels were bound for American ports.

Beat World's Record.

Paris, November 30.—Paul Tissandier today beat the world's record for speed on water in a test with his new type glider submarine boat. Tried on the Seine, he attained an average speed of 24 kilometres (58.5 miles) an hour.

Culebra Cut

The thirsting for a fight with the odds all stacked against them was the lure that led the Americans into the greatest battle with Nature the world has ever seen.

The event slated was the breaking of a Continent's backbone. The prize offered—Culebra Cut.

It was a fight to the finish.

On one hand stood a grim mountain range, its face covered with the dense tangle of the Tropics, its feet imbedded in the steaming, stinking jungle—a place no white man had a right to be; a place so hot and poisonous that it might well be called the borderland of Hell.

Against this barrier of the ages marched your Army Engineers with their science, your gang bosses with their courage, and the faithful negro workers with their brawn.

They tackled that mountain with their steam shovels, they bored into its sides with their pneumatic drills, they shot it up with tons of dynamite, they went at it with bare hands.

The mountain fought back with infernal spite. It hurled down everything, from great boulders to giant land-slides.

Over night it would drop a 40 acre lot into the cut, burying cars, tracks and shovels three weeks deep.

Not once but 26 times did the mountain "backfire" with Nature's weapons of rock and rubble.

And this in a land of torrential rains and withering heat—where the fighters were alternately roasted, drenched and parboiled.

For seven years this savage, upstanding fight between man and the mountain went on.

Then slowly and inevitably the mountain gave way to the "I will" of human purpose.

Today a man-made nine-mile cayon is the trophy of that conflict. On its peaceful waters the commerce of the world is quickly shifted from ocean to ocean.

And it is this awful and majestic chasm which will stand for eternity as a monument to American love for a fight to the finish.

It is the "mightiest deed the hand of man has done."

Farms and Farmers

Address all letters intended for this Department to Col. R. J. Redding, Editor of Farms and Farmers Department, Griffin, Georgia

Do You Want a Rich Soil?

I recall but one crop for which a thin, poor soil is claimed to be best suited. When one who wishes to the requirements of a crop of onion sets is getting ready to sow the seeds he selects a poor, light, clean soil that is free from pebbles or coarse gravel—if possible. Why? Because he wants the sets (which are nothing more than young onions) to grow slowly and mature into round, hard bulbs not larger than a musket ball, knowing that if they grow to a much larger size before maturing as sets many of them, when transplanted the following season to rich soil, will be inclined to throw up seed stem instead of developing into plump, firm, full-sized onions.

Further, it may be added that there are some crops that do better on poor land than do some other crops. Among these are rye, peanuts, cowpeas, Bermuda grass and—would you believe it?—cotton. But I know of no crop that will return on poor land a larger yield or one of better quality, or more profitable than it would if planted on a rich, productive soil. There is no demand for poor land—as such—for any purpose, other than the one exception—growing onion sets. Now if any farmer wants to grow onion sets he will have no great difficulty in selecting a square rod or so, or even one'or more acres, that would be poor enough for this purpose.

Support the Family.

Of course the first or immediate object in view in planning for a year's operations on the farm should be to make a support for the family and livestock of the planner. That is a fundamental consideration. But the consideration next in importance is to make the land more and more productive each year so that the farmer and his growing and numerically increasing family may not only be abundantly supplied with the necessaries and ordinary comforts of life but that they may live better and better and be provided with more and more of the desirable things of life—education, books, travel, good clothes, modern conveniences and luxuries, etc.

Most farmers even at the outset are inspired, to greater or less extent, by the hope of better things, more comfortable living in the future. The man is to be pitied who is content to drift along, year after year, making only a bare living, amounting never to plenty of substantial food and plain clothes, but not enough to properly educate his children and provide some of the higher enjoyments of life.

Enrich the Soil.

It therefore should be a daily thought in the mind of a farmer, a constant inquiry for the most approved methods by the use of which we may bring the soil up to a high degree of productiveness while at the same time he realizes annually increasing amounts of home-created comforts. In other words his object should be to grow richer while his land is also growing richer. The old proverb has it—"Make your soil and your soil will make you rich"—and its truth may be verified and realized according to the amount of thinking skill and sound judgment the farmer brings to bear in his farm management.

The farmer who goes along year after year planting, and tilling, and only a scant 8 or 10 bushels of corn per acre, or one bale of cotton to three or four acres, and other crops in like proportion, and keeping a family of children at work instead of at school, is not living up to his duty and his opportunities.

"But what's the use of writing about it?" Such farmers do not read agricultural books, nor agricultural journals; and it would seem like writing in the pencil, printers' ink and paper to lecture them. But not so. There are many living farmers—thousands and thousands of them—and these men are reading and this farming matter should do missionary work each in his own neighborhood.

A Serious Mistake.

One of the most serious mistakes that many farmers are guilty of, is the too great reliance on commercial fertilizers. Too much is expected of these artificial aids to growing crops and it is a significant providence that developed their expensive introduction into the south, just when we were at the lowest ebb in the matter of farming—just after the close of the war between the states. It was a good thing indeed to get Peruvian guano in the late sixties at $100 to $150 per ton, and it was a mighty help to the farmers in that 10-year period of demoralization of labor that followed the war.

But concentrated fertilizers are not the best thing always. Alone, and very liberally used, they will never make the land rich, or even keep it productive. They help to make good yields of cotton, tobacco and other crops, but they are doing what is necessary to build up the soil. What our soils need is more humus, or decayed vegetable matter. This humus may either be first grown on the soil to be benefited, or it must be supplied in the form of humus from animals fed on the products of that very soil itself. Both methods ought to be put in operation. The soil should not be permitted to rest and "rest," because the soil does not become tired and in need of rest, as does a mule or horse that has pulled a heavy plow all day. If you let it alone—and it is the wise way for it—it refuses to rest; but, according to seasons, it pushes up grass and weeds and briars and sprouts that don't amount to much and rot and shed their leaves and roots of these weeds are all the benefit it receives, and that does not rest. Thus nature—if we have had no experience as a teacher—tells us to keep the soil busy and to apply as possible all the time. But we should assist nature by planting the land to rye, vetches, clover, cowpeas or other renovating crops, along with or in the gap between the regular crops that are relied on for money or food for man and beast, and enable the soil to gather up and retain the enriching supply of vegetable matter.

Live Stock.

To this end—that is in order to consume the extra amounts of provender grown on a rotation crop—the live stock of the plant food that was taken from it by the crops grown in previous years and the larger amount that the same crops took from the air—we should grow more livestock. We need mules, cattle, beef cattle, swine, sheep, goats, fowls, not to mention the better protection mules and horses.

It is frankly admitted that the south is not now prepared to go into the business of stock-raising on an extensive scale, all of a sudden, but the farmers ought to commence at once to make the most of the opportunities at hand. In the fall of 1913 we should stop butchering calves and let them grow up into cattle. In the spring let the farmer who has a yearling cattle that not sufficient food to fatten them, get some home-raised steer from a needful farmer, and cross on them with a Jersiahire, or Durham. Also with a worth while. After getting a number of stock to the prosper on the farm, sell to some other male, and so on. Let us get steadily, surely and wisely to the event of the Texas boll weevil and not be caught unprepared.

COMPARATIVE FEED VALUE OF OAT STRAW, CORN FODDER, COWPEA HAY AND CRABGRASS HAY.

R. T., Richland, Ga.—How does baled oat straw compare as a roughage with fodder, crabgrass hay and peavine hay? Does it lose its strength after Christmas? Please answer through The Constitution.

Answer—(1) The proportionate or relative values of the four roughages and Indian corn grain, according to analyses, are as follows:

Corn blade fodder	56
Oat straw	57
Crabgrass hay	73
Peavine hay	100
Indian corn (grain)	100

(2) No, if kept dry under cover. (Why not sign your name?)

SOWING OATS.

Dr. Lawrence Boyer, Pickens, S. C.—Please advise me as to the proper way to sow oats on land where there has been peas last summer and the vines cut from the land. Would it be best to use a cutaway harrow or turn plow to prepare the land, or would it be better to use a cutter plow and leave the soil on the surface? How about sowing, turn plow and then using the cutaway and mixing thoroughly the soil and oats?

Answer—It is now too late to plow the land deeply for oats or other small grain to be sown immediately. Deep plowing for small grain should be done a month or two before planting so as to give time for the compacting effects of one or more good rainfalls. I think it would answer well to run over the field about as soon as the oats are sown and then sow according to the "open furrow" plan, which puts the seed safe and fertilizer in open (uncovered) furrows, 14 to 16 inches apart. Of course you have heard and know of the open furrow method of sowing fall oats—now rapidly becoming the standard method, which is the only security against winter-killing of oats. I described it for the—then many years ago—in The Tri-Weekly of November 13, 1888. The title of the article was in Pickens county, S. C., any other way.

CORNED BEEF.

A "Subscriber" (he does not give his name) asks for the best method of "corning" beef, unless there is some better way to keep it for future use.

Answer—We know no better method of preserving beef for future use than the old-time way of corning or pickling. The following recipe selected by an experienced housekeeper in Ole Virginia, and is doubtless all right:

After the beef has cooled, cut into convenient-sized pieces and salt well on as usual, adding a "pinch" of saltpeter to each piece. Let this stand for three days, drain off the bloody brine formed and then salt and wipe each piece. Put in clean towel and repack in the tub—a crock or molasses keg will answer. For the brine: For 200 pounds of beef take as much water as would cover it and add salt until it will no longer dissolve it, a raw potato will show when it's "strong enough." Add to each gallon of brine one pint of sugar (or its equivalent in sorghum or sugar). Boil all together and skim well. When entirely cool pour over the beef so as to cover it three our four inches deep. Place a board with a heavy weight on it so as to keep the beef under the brine. Should the brine mold in very warm weather, which is likely, add a heaping pound of cooking soda, and you can cold return it to the beef in the cask. Corned beef should be boiled (for the table) until tender, when it should be taken out and allowed to cool in the liquor in which it was boiled. Never "cut it while warm." Don't forget to send me a few of your corned beef for my New Year's dinner—if it is good.

WORMS DESTROYING FOLIAGE OF PINE TREES.

W. L. Singleton, Cumming, Ga.—I send you specimens of a kind of worm which is eating the top leaves from the pines of this section of the country. They appeared here last summer, and the cold and few weeks ago did not seem to affect them; they are still working on the trees. What is the name of the worm? What effect will they have on our pines? What is the worm make? How does it multiply, etc.?

Answer—I am not enough of an entomologist to determine what species of insect it is from an inspection of merely the caterpillars, but I suspect that it is an insect (name forgotten) that has been ravaging the forest interests of Virginia and West Virginia parts of several years past and threatening their wholesale destruction. Send specimens of the caterpillars to E. L. Worthington, State Entomologist, Atlanta, Georgia.

RADIUM—WHAT IS IT?

A. J. Holden, Dawson, Ga.—C.—Will you kindly inform we what "radium" is? Where it is found? Is it valuable? Its value?

Answer—Radium is a newly discovered element (not a compound of other elements) of great activity, casting off minute corpuscles at the velocity of 10,000 miles per second, and without appreciable loss of weight in substance. It is exceedingly rare and costly, commercially speaking. It blends yielding only a minute quantity of radium. Carnotite (a yellow oxide of uranium via very scarce metal). Mr. and Madame Curie, the discoverers of radium, state that a pound of radium is worth over two million dollars and that to produce a gram (about 15 grains) of radium requires the treatment of a million pounds of pitchblende. It is affirmed by many scientists that radium can not be had without heat or combustion. It has been found to be potentially in the treatment of certain obscure diseases, and in that connection William Ramsey has demonstrated that under certain conditions the emanations of this wonderful substance have the power to transmute certain gaseous substances. Only a few grains—much less than a pound, have so far been discovered. Talk with your physician about it.

WARTS ON COW'S UDDER AND TEATS.

J. P. Flowery Branch, Ga.—I have a fine heifer calf that is due to calve coming spring and her udder and teats are covered with warts. You would see her teats for the warts. If she were to calve with the warts on her she could not be milked. I want to know is there a remedy to take off the warts and not injuring her teats. Please answer through the Tri-Weekly Constitution, giving the remedy.

Answer—Warts may often be removed from a cow's teat and udder by smearing the portion—after washing when the cow is in milk—with sweet oil, or sweet cotton seed oil rubbed daily.

If any project from the surface like a silken thread cut them off tightly and it will slough off in a few days; then touch the stump with a little butter of antimony (terchloride of antimony) or with caustic or powdered bluestone every few days. The warts are flat scarify the surface with a knife, or a sharp knife, or simply scrape it with the back of the knife until it bleeds a little. When bleeding use water to wash with the caustic or caustic. The best dressing to heal the sore after using the caustic or caustic a few times is the following: Take a silken thread and tie tightly and it will slough off in a few days; then touch the stump with a little butter of antimony (terchloride of antimony) or with caustic or powdered bluestone every few days. The warts are flat scarify the surface with a knife, or a sharp knife, or simply scrape it with the back of the knife until it bleeds a little. When bleeding use water to wash with the caustic or caustic. The best dressing to heal the sore after using the caustic a few times is the following: Take a silken thread and tie tightly and it will slough off in a few days; then touch the stump with a little butter of antimony (terchloride of antimony) or with caustic or powdered bluestone every few days. When bleeding use water to wash with the caustic or caustic. The best dressing to heal the sore after using the caustic a few times is the following:

Two drams carbolic acid and eight ounces of rain water. Shake well and apply a little twice a day. But try the first remedy. One or two before resorting to surgery.

(1) RUST OF COTTON ON SANDY, CRAWFISH LAND. (2) FERTILIZER FOR COTTON.

W. C. Davis, Hodges, S. C.—(1) I have the misfortune of having my land red and some of it crawfishy. It is a sandy, clay subsoil. The cotton on the last fall it had lain out several years. It had a heavy crop of volunteer crab-broom-sedge which I turned under in the fall of 1912 and planted in cotton last spring. The cotton grew and looked well until about the middle of August, when it took rust. It should have yielded 2 ½ bale per acre. I applied per acre about 400 pounds of acid guano. Please tell me how to prevent rust and what kind of fertilizer and how much to use to get 3-4 of a bale per acre. (2) Also what would be best for corn and how much to prodce a bale of cotton per acre.

Answer—It is altogether probable that the rust indicated is the result of potash and that a liberal application of a fertilizer containing a high percentage of potash in the form of kainit would correct the defect and thereby prevent the attack of rust. Moreover, 8-3-3 fertilizer is a good cotton fertilizer. I suggest that you apply one such and analyze about 100 or one and a mixture of 1000 pounds of 16 per cent acid phosphate, 700 pounds high grade cotton seed meal and 400 pounds of kainit. This would analyze about 7.80-2.40-3.20, which would be in about the same relative proportion as the suggested formula but of a little better grade. You cannot get a high grade fertilizer when using cotton seed meal and kainit; but never mind about grade, because five dollars worth of a comparatively low grade will often make more than a larger number of five dollars' worth of the higher grade. It is quite probable that the crawfishy land would be benefited by under-draining.

You cannot say how much of the above mixture per acre would be necessary to produce a bale per acre, with no more information than you give about the land. I would apply not less than 500 or 600 pounds per acre. Why stop at 175 pounds?

For corn, on the same land, increase the cotton seed meal by one-fourth and reduce the kainit by one-half, or, 1,000 pounds of 16 per cent acid, 1,000 pounds cotton seed meal and 225 pounds of kainit (or 50 pounds of muriate of potash) and apply 300 to 400 pounds per acre.

MULE MAY HAVE DEFECTED TEETH; ALSO WORMS; ALSO DYSPEPSIA.

W. L. Neese, Audalusia, Ala.—I have had my mule two years and she has never eaten dry feed heartily. At this time she is in good work order, but she will not eat at the best more than a ear of corn and a hundred of fodder in a day and night. Half the time she doesn't eat half that much. Her dung is generally dry and hard, and once in a while they are loose. She bites herself all about, rubs her head on the shoulders some when bitched. There are small bumps all over her. Her mane is one of the symptoms of worms—pin worms—and these worms may be due to a defective liver or offensive impure water. The fact of her eating so much corn and only a pint of corn and 2 drams of cedar may be due to some defect of her teeth which making a laborious and painful operation.

Answer—(1) First clean out the rectum by injecting into it plenty of warm water. Then give a drench of 2 ounces of quassia chips over night in one pint of water, or 2 drams of tincture of chloride of iron in one pint of water. If this does not bring the worms, then first treat for worms and indigestion as follows: Give a dram of turpentine in ½ pint of raw linseed oil at a dose on an empty stomach morning and night, for 3 or 4 days, and then give one dose of raw linseed oil as a purge. Then, when purging is over, give 2 drams each of copperas and saltpeter every night for two or three weeks. Have her teeth examined by an expert at the end of the tonic treatment first mentioned, if she does not eat heartily.

BROKEN WIND.

T. B. Ward, Cowarts, Miss.—I have a 15-year-old mule, seems to be hearty in all but has cough and gets breath all the time just as one off a long race with his wind. Please tell me what can be done and oblige.

Answer—It is probable that your mule has heaves, or broken wind, which is a disease which once fully established is considered to be incurable although there are many remedies for it. But much can be done to alleviate the distressing symptoms and food should be of the very best quality. Feed but little hay or fodder and sprinkle with water before feeding. The hay or fodder should be almost entirely shelled oats. Always water before feeding. Give a tablespoonful of salt or an hour after feeding. Also let her rest from work for hour after eating full meal. If the cough becomes very bad after dressing give her one teaspoonful of Fowler's solution of arsenic every week for three or four weeks at a time.

How to Attain Old Age.

The chances of attaining old age are much greater if we live much of our life in fresh country air. Statistics have shown, according to Dr. Dedso, of Budapest, that the fourth generation of the town dweller is unknown but one exists in the current generation. The conclusion inevitable that the sine qua non of longevity is country air.

The city child is subject to a number of disturbing influences which are absent in the creature comforts, which undermine the constitution by throwing too heavy a burden on the sense organs, thereby (which exhaustion of the central nervous system follows; among these conditions are noises, a perpetual round of hurry, and unending selfishness of mankind, absorbing our attention, to which are superadded the many discomforts of vitiated air and effluvia from human beings and waste organic products, besides offensive gases and infection-laden dust. To attain old age we have to relieve ourselves from worry, strains and anxieties, withdraw periodically from the whirl of effortful existence, modify our diet, omit the use of stimulants and narcotics, and spend reasonably long periods at time under pleasant conditions in practical retirement. Above all, amusement should be simplified and accepted rather than sought after. Only vegetable and semi-animal foods should be eaten.

Commander of the United States Border Army

Major General Carter, in command of the United States troops on the Mexican border, has been receiving re-enforcements and now has over 10,000 men ready to cross the Rio Grande at a moment's notice. General Carter was commander of the great mobilization of troops that occurred at San Antonio, Texas, two years ago. He is thoroughly familiar with the topography of the country and in case of armed intervention this knowledge will prove of great value to the American forces.

Nowadays one approaches a play made on a really powerful novel with misgivings, but with "Ben-Hur" the attractive dramatization of General Lew Wallace's masterpiece, which comes to the Atlanta theater for one week, beginning tonight, with matinee Wednesday and Saturday, this is different. TO RIPEN COTTON BY NEW PROCESS

Method Invented by Which Green Bolls Can Be Cut From Stalks and Then Matured.

Philadelphia, Pa., November 30.—(Special.)—To mature cotton bolls artificially, saving millions of dollars annually to planters, producing a better seed and eventually exterminating the boll weevil, is the dream of John R. Hall, inventor, and the Hall Cotton Reclaiming company, incorporated in the state of Delaware with a $100,000 capital of $100,000.

It reads like a Mulberry Sellers prospectus, yet the dream of the inventor and his company gives promise of early realization. This is strengthened by the results of a number of practical demonstrations in the presence of southern cotton-growers, bankers, editors and experts whose testimony is to the effect that cotton bolls may be snipped off the stalks as soon as they ornament weeks, if necessary,* before they would mature naturally, and by either a chemical or a mechanical process, designed at the convenience of the ginner.

Figuring on a 10 per cent loss of a cotton crop in immature, unopened and frostbitten bolls, the Hall process would have saved to the planters of the south this year approximately 1,500,000 bales.

Tests in Philadelphia.

Tests of the Hall processes with bolls brought from the south in various stages of maturity—green, and the frost-bitten—were conducted at the Philadelphia Commercial museum in the presence of growers and ginners. Among these were T. S. Cave and J. M. Easterling, of Hartwell, S. C. Bolls from an experimental two-acre plantation near Philadelphia also were matured, by the mechanical or chemical process. The experimental plantation belongs to J. Lowood Lott, head of the Tire and Rubber company, who is vice president of the Hall Cotton Reclaiming company. It is asserted that field tests will confirm those which were made at the Commercial museum; that it will be within the range of possibility to grow cotton profitably in Pennsylvania and other northern states where the soil is adapted to its culture. This view is predicted on the ability to pluck the bolls in advance of frost and ripen them by incubation.

The results of both the chemical and mechanical treatment of bolls were submitted to Governor O'Neal and Commissioner Kolb, of Alabama; Governor Hall, of Louisiana, and Governor Colquitt, of Texas, all of whom, it is stated, are favorably disposed and promise, if the claims of the inventor are further borne out, to encourage the introduction of the processes in their several states. Commissioner of Agriculture E. J. Watson, of South Carolina, who is president of the Southern Cotton congress, has given much study to the reports of the several experiments made with 200 pounds of bolls from South Carolina, and in a letter addressed to him by Inventor Hall a few days ago, Commissioner Watson says that at this time he lost in placing at the disposal of ginners facilities for chemical treatment of the fag end of this season's top crop, but followed up by the installation of incubators for next season. Mr. Cave also is impatient in getting the process to practical use in South Carolina ginneries.

Contracts Being Made.

With this end in view, contracts are in process of execution with a number of ginners on a basis that relieves them and the planters from all risk whatever. The contract provides that the ginner is to pay the planter 65 per cent of the money received by him from the sale of cotton bolls furnished immature and frost-bitten bolls furnished by the planter. It is further stipulated by the owners of the invention that the Hall Cotton Reclaiming company—is to pay the ginner $1 per bale of 500 pounds and an additional 5 per cent of the money received from the sale of the cotton and seed, the Hall company to receive the remaining 80 per cent in royalty. It is purposed, with the introduction of the machine, that the planters will pay to the ginner $5 per bale for cotton produced from bolls that otherwise would be lost, the ginner to retain 50 per cent of this sum and pay the remainder to the Hall company.

Briefly, mechanical ripening of the bolls, forcing them to disclose their wealth of snowy, fluffy raw cotton of commerce, is simply incubation applied to plants. The bolls are "hatched out" in from two to three hours, a machine and an operator maturing from five to eight bales of cotton per day. The time consumed by the chemical process may be several hours or several days, depending upon the character of the building, temperature and degree of moisture, in which the bolls are treated—conditions wholly within the control of the ginner or planter. Whilst both processes promise to save nearly $100,000,000 annually in cotton, perhaps the most startling claim made for them is that by their employment the boll weevil will eventually be exterminated. The death of the boll weevil and other destructive pests is being sounded in the laudatorious manner of the reclaiming frost-bitten and immature bolls in a warm bed, by the prolonging the hibernating period of the boll weevil by several weeks, which is to be accomplished by artificially ripening the bolls that long in advance of the time when nature would do the work the weevil will be virtually starved out. There will be nothing for him to feed upon during the few weeks that must elapse from the time he crawls from his winter quarters until the crop has been planted.

Improves on Nature.

The Hall processes is pronounced by several planters as marking an epoch in the history of cotton production no less important than the introduction of the gin. R. G. Musgrove, a cotton expert, of Brood street, New York, who witnessed the mechanical process of ripening bolls and frost-bitten ward submitted the fiber to the usual tests, is quoted as saying that the staple of bolls matured by the process is longer and stronger than that left on the stalk. He says the cotton has a firmer, and more silky lustre than that which was ripened naturally; that it is of a finer spinning quality, and that the heat of the sun injures the textile strength and quality of cotton left to ripen in the field. Mr. Musgrove was chairman on awards of cotton at the St. Louis exposition, also at the Jamestown exposition, and judge of cotton at the American Land and Irrigation exposition, New York.

W. J. Williams, a government chemist at the United States arsenal, in Philadelphia, reporting on tests of seed from bolls matured both artificially and naturally, says that it is found that the artificially ripened cotton seed contained about 5 per cent more oil and fat than that which had been allowed to ripen in the field. Other tests are held as having demonstrated that seed from artificially ripened bolls germinates even more readily and grows than that from bolls that were matured on the stalk.

The bolls from Barnwell, which were subjected to frost and to incubation, were classified—some being taken three weeks before maturity, others four weeks and an intermediate class ten days before maturity, even the fields, respectively, of T. J. Grubbs, Mr. Hardaman and Mr. Cave.

Artificially ripening of cotton bolls will, it is contended, go far toward solving the labor problem from more than one of its angles. It is designed to defy the elements to a considerable extent and outwit Jack Frost.

Southern Printers Meet.

A score of prominent publishers from all over the south will arrive in Atlanta today to attend the annual convention of the Southeastern Printers' association. Headquarters will be opened at the Hotel Ansley, where a meeting will be held this morning. It is at this convention that the printers and publishers discuss important matters pertaining to overhead items, the price of paper, etc.

Mass Meeting Big Feature In S. S. Adult Campaign

At a mass meeting of Sunday school workers to be held next Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock in the Central Congregational church, the three days' "Sunday School Institute" will be launched.

Rev. William A. Brown, field worker for the International Sunday school association, will be heard at the mass meeting Sunday afternoon, and he will remain in Atlanta for the two days following, to make addresses. On Monday and Tuesday of this week he is addressing an institute in Macon, and he will be present at a similar institute in Augusta on Wednesday and Thursday.

The Sunday school superintendents of Atlanta are also planning an enthusiastic meeting of the Superintendents' congress on Tuesday, December 9, at the Baptist Tabernacle. At the November meeting of the congress, a plea for the Sunday School institute were placed in the hands of a committee composed of J. T. Floyd, C. J. Kamper, Grier Martin, C. V. LeCraw and M. M. Gaines.

The attendance report for this Sunday showed a decided falling off, caused, probably, by the threatening weather of Sunday morning. The total attendance of the thirteen schools included in the weekly report was 5,445, which is a decrease of 552, as compared with a total of 4,893, or an average of 374 a school ago. The average gain was therefore only 19 scholars per school. The complete report is as follows:

AMERICAN BATTLESHIPS CHEERED BY FRENCHMEN

Bands of the Departing Vessels Answer Cheers by Playing the Marseillaise.

Ville Franche, France, November 30. The United States battleships Wyoming, Utah and Delaware sailed from here this afternoon. As they slowly drew out the Wyoming's band struck up the Marseillaise and the decks of spectators who lined the shores fluttered handkerchiefs, and cheered the departing Americans.

The ships of the American fleet with join the company off Gibraltar and proceed together to the Azores. There the Fourth division, comprising the Connecticut, Kansas and Louisiana, will proceed for Guantanamo, where the ships will coal, prior to sailing for Mexican waters.

The American sailormen won all hearts during their stay on the Riviera, and their departure is viewed with genuine regret. The newspaper Petite Republique de Nice voices the general sentiment in an editorial, in which it says:

"Now that the fine American naval division is leaving us, we should like to place on record our admiration for the remarkably good behavior of the officers, not only aboard their ships where the discipline is strict, but ashore. Altogether they formed a body of real gentlemen. The bearing was irreproachable; their manners showed good education and frequently rose above mere banal politeness. They taught us French, who pay no heed to the Marseillaise a lesson when they stood rigidly at attention during the rendition of the 'Star Spangled Banner.'"

Secretary Daniels, who has ordered the cruise, did more than he foresaw. He intended to educate the crews, but has also educated us by showing us such splendid ships and men."

Are Ordered Off Spain and Florida Sail.

Naples, November 30.—The United States battleships Arkansas, Florida and Utah sailed from here this afternoon on the return voyage to the United States. As the warships moved out they were saluted, and were followed by flotillas of torpedo boats, various yachts and the bands on the battleships played Neapolitan airs and the crowds along the shores shouted "Viva America."

The battleships Connecticut and Kansas and the collier Cyclops also left Naples from Genoa this afternoon, and will join the Arkansas and Florida west of Gibraltar, where the squadron will continue the voyage together to Hampton Roads.

Officers and men aboard the battleships were unanimous in declaring the visit one of the most enjoyable they had ever had.

The Vermont and Ohio Sail Today.

Marseilles, France, November 29.—The United States battleships Vermont and Ohio were taking on coal all day in preparation for their departure. They will sail at 9 o'clock tomorrow morning to join the rest of the fleet.

Mrs. McLendon Leaves To Attend Convention Of Woman Suffragists

Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, president of the Georgia Woman Suffrage association, and Leonard J. Grossman, legal adviser of the association, have been appointed as delegates from Georgia to the forty-fifth convention of the National Woman's Suffrage association, to be held this week in Washington, D. C.

Being one of the oldest workers for suffrage in the south, Mrs. McLendon goes with considerable prestige to the convention, and will be one of the leaders in the advocacy of an amendment to the federal constitution enfranchising women, which is one of the principal issues to be discussed at the convention. Mrs. McLendon has already left for Washington, and will remain there for several weeks. Mr. Grossman, however, will not leave till Tuesday, being detained on business.

INDIAN ELEPHANTS ARE SUSCEPTIBLE TO KIND TREATMENT

Miss Orford and her elephants, the headline act for the Forsyth this week, arrived here Saturday night from New Orleans. The big act was the feature at the Orpheum in that city, and had to rest up for a week between the Crescent City and eastern engagements.

Upon arrival at the Terminal station the party was met by two of Chief Reavers' mounted men and escorted through the streets to the Forsyth garage, on Jackson street, where the elephants will be quartered during the week. The garage was lofty and wide large enough to accommodate the great animals, so place for a stall, for them in the garage.

That the elephants, especially the Indian elephants, are the most susceptible to kind treatment of any animal, domestic or wild, or of any size, is the declaration of Miss Orford, the young lady who is appearing in vaudeville with the three elephants. Miss Orford cites her own experience as an illustration of the principle of this statement.

"Elephants," says Miss Orford, "are not only the strongest, but positively the most gentle of animals. They have another characteristic that we all might follow to advantage, and that is that they are forgiving. Even when mistreated, as they sometimes are by unwise and brutal keepers, although they become irritable for a time, they quickly forget under a short reign of kind treatment and become as docile as ever."

PLAYING WITH RIFLE, BOY KILLS BROTHER

Asheville, N. C., November 30.—Little George Chastain, the 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Chastain, was shot and almost instantly killed this morning by his 4-year-old brother, Eddie, the weapon used being a 22-caliber rifle. The elder boy had just secured the gun a few days ago, and was playing with it on the back porch of the Chackels' home, when in some manner it was discharged, the bullet striking the smaller boy in the back. He was rushed to a hospital, but died before reaching there. The mother created quite a scene, and is prostrated over the death of her baby.

MUTINY IS REPORTED ON A BRITISH BARK

Seattle, Wash., November 30.—The British bark Lynton, bound from Santa Rosalia, Mex., for Iquique, Chile, reported that she was sighted off Cape Flattery today signalling assistance. She reported mutiny. The revenge cutter Manning is standing by, and the cutter Perry, which is believed to have gone to the Lynton's assistance.

The Lynton, which was bound for Portland, is supposed to have been prevented from entering the Columbia river by the storm which has been raging on the north Pacific the last few days.

ARREST OF ZELAYA HAS CAUSED SENSATION

San Juan Del Sur, Nicaragua, November 30.—The news of the arrest in the United States of Jose Santos Zelaya, former president of Nicaragua, has caused something of a sensation in Nicaragua. There is much speculation regarding the intentions of the government in his case, as the legislature has declared he may be tried on a charge of assassination.

The public is anxiously awaiting the outcome of the habeas corpus proceedings instituted in New York yesterday.

CONFERENCE ENDS AT MACON TODAY

Appointments in the South Georgia Conference Will Be Made—Deacons and Elders Ordained.

By Rev. W. A. Brooks.

Macon, Ga., November 30.—(Special.) Many visitors from nearby towns and cities were here today to mingle with the ministers of the South Georgia conference and hear Bishop Candler's discourse at 11 a. m. at Mulberry street church. All the Methodist churches in the city, as well as the Presbyterian, Baptist and Christian churches, were open and occupied by the Methodist ministers were well attended; but the popular center of church attendance was at the Mulberry street church. Bishop Candler ordained the class of deacons at the conclusion of the morning's discourse, and the class of elders at the close of the gospel message of the evening.

Annual Love Feast.

An annual conference love feast held this morning at 8:30 is a most sacred and inspiring service, and the service held today was especially so.

The memorial service was held this afternoon at Mulberry at 3:30. Appropriate memoirs of Revs. George C. Ingram, of Talbetton; Wesley Lane, of Macon; D. R. McWilliams, of Savannah, and W. A. Watson, of Bainbridge, deceased members of our conference, who have died during the year. Beautiful tributes were paid to the noble character of these brethren who have fallen on sleep.

Pierce Institute.

An encouraging report of the Pierce institute, located at Blackshear, has been made by Rev. W. A. Huckabee, the successful president of the institution.

"A young minister who stands without a superior and possibly without a peer among the younger princes of the pulpit is our own Otis Hoskins is Rev. Walter Anthony, of Bainbridge. No minister of our conference is more popular with the South Georgia conference, nor is any minister of our conference a greater favorite with some of our leading appointments than he. The fact that a few contorted newspaper reports have been circulated about Rev. MF. Anthony during the past few days has been thoroughly resented by every member of our conference. It is expected that the conference will adjourn some time tomorrow, possibly at noon. The conference will most certainly not hold later than tomorrow night. Bishop Candler will have to preside Wednesday at the opening session of the Mississippi conference.

R. D. STINSON SPEAKS TO A. M. E. CONFERENCE

Hawkinsville, Ga., November 30.—(Special.)—Richard D. Stinson, of the Atlanta, Normal and Industrial institute, addressed the Georgia annual conference of the A. M. E. church the last night. Every available seat in the new brick edifice was taken.

Much praise could be said. The second great need of the negro masses is a school training them in the boys and girl to do something with their hands. Second, I would like to impress this idea on the very minds of the negro preachers and leaders in the large body of men. If we would save the girls of the race from sin, ignorance, disgrace, idleness and crime let us have schools and teach them how to be employed at something that is decent and respectable.

A liberal contribution was made to the school.

Bishop J. S. Flipper, Drs. J. O. Iverson and R. V. Branch, with several other pastors, filled the pulpits at the seat of the conference and other colored churches of the town. Memorial exercises were held in the afternoon. Rev. L. A. Strong, who has been in trouble during the year, by vote of the conference, will be put on trial by his presiding elder. The trustees at Swainsboro, Ga., were asked by the conference to withdraw from the court and settle with them if they have in connection with the church.

Bishop Sherman read a resolution which was unanimously adopted by the conference thanking The Atlanta Constitution for its kind notice which he thought showed the friendly spirit of the people of the south toward what the deserving negroes were trying to better their race.

Bishop Flipper read the assignments and also transferred many of the leading pastors to different parts of the state and the denomination.

THOMASVILLE SCHOOLS WILL HOLD ARBOR DAY

Thomasville, Ga., November 30.—(Special.)—Arbor day on Friday, December 5, will be observed by the public schools of Thomasville, and also by the majority of the schools in the county districts. The members of the Thomasville study class are anxious that the sentiment in regard to the planting of trees for the good of the coming generation should be inculcated by the teachers of all the schools in the county, consequently the study has taken the matter up.

There is also a movement to induce the farmers to help in this work by planting trees on the sides of the roads near their homes.

H. T. M'INTOSH SPEAKS AT BARACA MEETING

Thomasville, Ga., November 30.—At a mass meeting for men held at the Episcopal church theater this afternoon Henry T. McIntosh, of Albany, was the principal speaker. He was one of a series of greater men's meetings that are being held here under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian association.

The program for this afternoon was a very pleasant one, the music being in charge of the Baracas, of which organization Mr. McIntosh is a prominent member. There was a chorus of twenty voices and several fine quartettes.

Mr. McIntosh spoke in the morning at the Presbyterian church on Sunday school work, he being in charge of one of the Presbyterian churches in Albany, whose membership is greater than that of the church.

SACRED CONCERT HELD AT HOLMES INSTITUTE

A mass meeting and sacred concert held yesterday afternoon at Holmes institute, of which B. R. Holes is president, drew a large crowd of people who are interested in the educational work of the negro race and a subscription was taken up for the school. In the course of the opening address the president stressed the fact that the idle negro boys and girls roll society of the time that makes future thieves and murderers. He stated that the children at the institute are taught printing, broom-making, laundering, mattress-bottoming, tailoring and upholstering.

MILK MAY COST MORE IN ATLANTA VERY SOON

According to information reaching patrons of the Atlanta milk shed today, on Sunday, the price of milk will shortly be raised in this vicinity.

The reason for the advanced price is given as the increased cost of feed for cows. It is not known whether or not the move for higher price is a concerted action of all of the dairymen serving Atlanta, as many dairies had given no notice Sunday.

Ad Men Meet Today.

The Atlanta Ad Men's association will lunch at the Ansley today. All members have been urged to attend, as the meeting will be one of the most important in some months.

Savannah, Ga., November 30.—(Special.)—Fire did considerable damage to the plant of The Savannah Press early this morning. The business office was completely gutted, there was considerable damage to the press and the editorial and composing rooms suffered. The plant was located at St. Julian and Whitaker streets in the heart of the city.

If the press cannot be put in condition by today the Press will issue from The Morning News building.

MRS. BECKER TO HEAR ARGUMENT FOR HUSBAND

Albany, N. Y., November 30.—Mrs. Charles Becker arrived here tonight and tomorrow will attend the hearing of arguments before the court of appeals on the appeal from the sentence of her husband, hanging over her husband, former Police Lieutenant Becker, in New York, for the alleged instigation of the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler. Her husband requested her to be present during these proceedings.

Mrs. Becker attorneys, Joseph Shay, Leonard F. Fisher and Arthur E. Palmer, refused to secure the additional testimony which, she says, Sam Schepps called in from Paris he can furnish. They stated, however, that they might ask the court of appeals to withhold decision until the nature of Schepps' story could be learned. They intimated that, in the interest of justice, District Attorney Whitman should investigate the Schepps' cablegram.

The appeals of the four gunmen, convicted for the Rosenthal murder, have precedence over the Becker appeal on tomorrow's calendar. It was stated tonight, however, that the Becker appeal probably would be argued first.
