NEGRO FREED BUT JAILED AGAIN ON SUSPICION

Rosser Declares 'Gibbering Statements' Point Out Sweeper as Guilty of Slaying.

James Conley, self-confessed accessory after the fact in the murder of Mary Phagan, Friday was discharged by Judge L. S. Roan entirely from the custody of the State on the petition of Solicitor Dorsey.

Technically free, Conley was at once rearrested and held by the police on suspicion in the murder mystery. The action of Judge Roan constituted a victory for Solicitor Dorsey, who was fighting to prevent the authorities returning Conley to the Tower, from which he had been taken on the representation of his attorney, William M. Smith, that the negro was threatened and intimidated in the Tower.

Luther Z. Rosser, attorney for Leo Frank, made a bitter protest against the liberation of the negro, which, in the opinion of Judge Roan, was the only legal alternative of returning him to the county jail. He made a still stronger protest in a formal written statement placed on file as a record in the case.

Accuses Conley as Slayer.

In this he charged that the negro's series of "gibbering and incoherent statements," together with the attendant circumstances of the crime and Conley's subsequent actions, pointed to him as guilty of the murder beyond any reasonable doubt.

Less than ten minutes was occupied in the disposal of the case. Judge Roan did not read either the statement of Attorney Rosser or that of Attorney Smith, who submitted the reasons he wished his client kept at the police station. The dispatch with which the petition was acceded to was a complete surprise. A protracted and hard fought legal battle had been expected.

Judge Roan said he was without authority to hold the negro in the custody of the State so long as he had no formal application from either side. The Solicitor, he said, was asking for the release of the prisoner, and Attorney Rosser had characterized his statement only as a "suggestion."

Smith's Charges.

Attorney Smith's statement to the court charged intimidation, and that influences unfriendly to Conley and friendly to Frank were at the back of the movement to transfer Conley back to the jail. He alleged that neither the interests of justice nor the interests of Conley could be safeguarded by removing Conley from the police station.

Sheriff Mangum branded as an infamous lie the charge that the interests of Conley could not be safeguarded in the county jail, and had not been safeguarded. The only person involved in the charge of intimidating and threatening Conley characterized the accusation as absurd and grossly and wilfully exaggerated. He was present to testify at the hearing, but was not called.

The formality of releasing and rearresting Conley took place in front of the police station. The negro was brought to the sidewalk, where he had his freedom for about a second and was then again taken into custody.

Text of the Petition.

Mr. Rosser's paper was headed:

Application of Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor General, to release James Conley from Legal Custody.

In answer to the petition and order in the above stated cause, served upon us, as attorneys for Leo Frank, w herewith answer and show cause as follows:

1. If the intention of the Solicitor General is to discharge this negro from custody because (a) he is in fact not a material witness against Frank, or (b) although he is a material witness, his integrity and character are such that he ought

Friday, the 13th, Ends Atlanta Jinx; Big Pump Working

Friday, the 13th, was a lucky day for Atlanta, viewed from the angle from which "Zode" Smith, manager of the waterworks, looked at the situation. The day brought nothing but good luck to him, and he walked into his office at the City Hall wearing a smile like unto the one worn by the gentleman in the moon.

"Why shouldn't I smile?" he asked, when questioned about the cause of his ultra-pleasant disposition. Then he answered the question: "That 10,000,000-gallon pump at the river is working to-day, the first time since last April. If you had had the same bunch of trouble lifted from you that I've had lifted from me, you'd be smiling, too."

The big 10,000-000-gallon pump not only got out of order in April, but it almost went to pieces.

VICE INQUIRY IS RESUMED BY GRAND JURY

Action Creates Surprise, as Probe Was Thought at End—R. R. Jackson on Stand.

The Grand Jury again took up an inquiry into the vice situation Friday afternoon, when a number of witnesses were called to ascertain the exact methods used by the Atlanta police department in their endeavor to stamp out vice.

The announcement that the Grand Jury would probe deeper into the vice situation came as a complete surprise, for it was stated several days ago that the Grand Jury had finished with this question.

R. R. Jackson, a former justice of the peace, now a member of the law firm of Gober & Jackson, was summoned to appear before the Grand Jury, together with John H. Gossatt, a former bailiff, who is now employed in Jackson's office.

Jackson Ignorant of Reason.

Mr. Jackson stated that he knew of no reason why the Grand Jury should call him. He admitted, however, that for many years he represented in an official capacity many women of questionable character, and that his knowledge of the residents of the tenderloin at one time was fairly accurate.

It is now thought that the Grand Jury will uncover the exact condition of vice in this city previous to the closing of the houses, for the purpose of determining whether conditions are worse now than they were at the time the houses were closed.

Many other witnesses are scheduled to come before the Grand Jury, and there is no doubt that the probe is on in earnest.

R. R. Jackson was before the Grand Jury for more than an hour. He testified at length explaining many matters relating to vice in this city and was questioned closely regarding the order of the court in granting a restraining order prohibiting the police from closing up the house of Mrs. M. P. Powell.

Mr. Jackson quoted the law to the Grand Jury, and stated that under the law the judge in the Powell case had no other alternative than to grant the restraining order. Jackson gave a great many important facts concerning vice as a general proposition. He is considered the most important witness that has been examined by the Grand Jury during the whole of the vice probe.

Washington detectives are scouring that city in an effort to locate young George Gentry, the stenographer whose affidavit that the published dictograph report was "padded" was the sensation of the controversy between Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford and Colonel Thomas B. Felder.

Gentry Not Found Yet.

Chief of Police James L. Beavers, who is in Washington, secured the aid of the District detectives to have the youth located. Although the search has been in progress two days, it has carried the detectives no further than to locate Miss Jeannette Henning, a law clerk, who said she witnessed the affidavit without reading it or making any inquiry. Miss Henning said the paper was signed by her in room 802 of the Westery Building, occupied by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

Colonel Felder said there was no especial difficulty in locating Gentry and that he would be produced to testify if the Grand Jury wanted him. He said the young man had accepted a position as stenographer for one month, and that as soon as the month was out he would return to Atlanta.

Gentry was located about two weeks ago by a Burns detective of the Washington branch. Descriptions of him had been furnished every agency in America and there was a sharp lookout in every large city.

Foreman L. H. Beck stated that the jury had determined to make an exhaustive investigation.

SAVAGE AND WHITE FIT FOR HOT BATTLE

Heavyweights Who Clash at the Auditorium To-night Await the Gong.

Everything is in readiness for the big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. All the boxers are on edge and some real milling is promised the fans.

Jim Savage and Sailor White, the wind-up boxers, did light work this morning and look to be in great shape for a tough bout. The promise of a Gunboat Smith match for the winner has added much interest to the fray and the ringmen are expected to try doubly hard for a victory.

Although the bout is scheduled to go ten rounds, many of the fans who have been watching the men work out the last couple of days, are looking for a knockout. Both boxers have been showing great punching power and are anxious to end the mill in a hurry.

Savage jumped on the scales this morning after taking a light workout and tipped the beam at 191 pounds. Jim says this is his best fighting weight and will enter the ring around this mark. Sailor White will outweigh his rival approximately ten pounds, as he weighed 201 pounds after taking a rub-down. Both are confident of victory.

Two other ten-round bouts will be staged. Mike Saul and Terry Nelson, the semi-wind-up boys, are also on edge for a tough scrap. This will be Saul's first engagement since attempting his come-back effort, and he promises a knockout win. On the other hand, Nelson is just as confident as his opponent.

The opening clash on the program will be a ten-round bout between Meyer Pries and Spider Britt. The two bantamweights have been rivals for years and promise to settle their grude this evening.

The first scrap will be put on at 8:30 sharp and the boxers will be on the battle-ground an hour previous to the start.

CONLEY, FREED, AGAIN JAILED ON SUSPICION

to have his liberty and be trusted to obey the subpena of this court, then considered as a witness only, he ought to be discharged and indeed he should not have been imprisoned at all. But in such case to enact the farce in the court's presence of releasing the negro and immediately return him to his wet nurses at the police station would resemble child's play.

2. But if the Solicitor believes that one of a number of contradictory statements made by this negro may, if properly preserved, be made valuable in the prosecution of Frank and that the negro may destroy its value if left free to talk, and in order to stop his mouth it is necessary that the detectives should keep him in charge, then we think we have the right to protest against any order of a court of justice that winks at such a purpose.

Release Not Considered.

3. We are constrained to the conclusion that it is not the purpose for any reason to release this negro, but, by obtaining the ordar here sought, continue the present illegal confinement.

4. But Frank is himself deeply interested in this proceeding. That the consent of the Solicitor and the will of the negro is all that is required to reverse the will of the law is erroneous. The State has the right in the interest of justice to put a witness in custody, but where in custody and in whose custody is of the highest importance. The law has given such custody to the Sheriff, and wisely so. The Sheriff is not a prosecutor; the jail itself is not usually a place of punishment, but a temporary place of detention. The Sheriff is supposed to stand impartially between the State and his prisoners, and may be trusted to neither coajole, threaten nor suppress testimony by third degree methods. The law never meant to place a witness who for lack of character needs confinement under the control of a partisan prosecutor.

5. That the detectives should wish to keep Conley in custody and entertain him at the city's expense is not at all surprising. They have already extracted from him extravagant, unthinkable confessions, three or four in number. To these statements they have given the widest publicity, and to the credibility of the last one they have staked their reputations and hope of place.

All Staked on Conley.

6. Upon the constancy and stability of this witness they have staked their all. They would be less than human if they did not bend all their power and ingenuity in holding him to his present statement, adding to and taking therefrom only such things as will aid his credibility.

Can any fair-minded man believe that Lanford is a fair man to be the custodian of this ignorant negro? What chance would he have to retract any lies he may have told, or if in a repentant mood he should wish to tell the truth? This negro in the city prison, in the power of Lanford, apart from all questions of truth, would be just as dangerous as Lanford would wish him to be. No one knows that better than Lanford, and no one would feel it as acutely as will this negro.

How well Lanford knows it can be seen from his interview in The Georgian of June 12. In that interview he demonstrated that he thinks he has full, unrestricted ownership of this negro. He graciously expresses his willingness for this negro to go before the Grand Jury upon such terms as he suggests. Neither the negro nor the negro's lawyer nor the Grand Jury is considered. Nor was this court to be consulted—his will and not the order of this court was to determine when and under what circumstances the negro should leave the police station.

Lanford's Power Questioned.

If Lanford vaunts in the face of jury and court his power over this negro, what must be his bearing when he deals privately with the negro himself? What chance has he to abstract a lie or add a truth to the foolish statement which Lanford approves and wishes to maintain? If this man will, when he is holding this negro under your honor's order, declare such ownership over this negro's person and movements to what length would he go if the court released its power over him and turns him over to Lanford's unrestricted power?

6. It is just to Frank, as well as in the interest of public justice, that this negro should be detained by unbiased, fair men, whose reputations and positions are not at stake.

The law recognizes this right and has put that duty upon the Sheriff. Will there be less fairness and less decency in the county jail than in the police station? When did Lanford become a wiser, fairer, better man than the Sheriff of this county?

7. Apart from this negro's position as a witness, his detention in the custody of the detectives would be a public calamity. Many unbiased people believe this negro is the murderer of little Mary Phagan. The facts of the case, apart from his own confession, point most strongly to him as the guilty man.

Evidence Against Negro.

(a) On the day of the murder he was drunk and concealed himself in a position where he could readily commit the murder.

(b) On Monday morning he was unduly excited, so much so as to arouse the suspicions of the employees. On Saturday night after the murder he was caught hiding in his own house.

(c) When the police were in the building he was caught hiding in an obscure part of the factory, where he has no business.

(d) When questioned about this excitement, he said he would give a large sum to be a white man. When asked why, he said he could then get safely past the police.

(e) He for a long time persistently denied that he could write, and did not admit that he could until longer denial was useless.

(f) He was caught washing a shirt, a thing he had never done before, and when caught gave a foolish excuse.

Trapped Into Confession.

(g) He denied all participation in or knowledge of the crime until he was driven by the charge that he wrote the notes found near the body.

(h) On May 18 he made a signed statement outlining his actions on April 26, making no mention of the murder.

(i) On May 24 he made an affidavit. He said that on April 25, before the murder on April 26, he wrote the notes at the request of Frank, for which Frank gave him cigarettes and $2.50, and added statements about Frank's people in Brooklyn and an inquiry by Frank as to why he should hang.

(j) On May 28 Conley made a long affidavit, full of contradictions and absurdities, beginning it as follows:

"I make this statement, my second statement in regard to the murder of Mary Phagan at the National Pencil factory. In my first statement I made the statement that I went into the pencil factory on Friday, April 25, and went into Frank's office at five minutes to 1 o'clock, which is a mistake. I made this statement in regard to Friday in order that I might not be accused of knowing anything of this murder, for I thought if I put myself there Saturday they might accuse me of having a hand in it, and I now make my second and last statement regarding the matter freely and voluntarily, after thinking over the situation, and I have made up my mind to tell the whole truth, and I make it freely and voluntarily, without the promise of any reward or from force or fear of punishment in any way."

"First Confession Rambling."

(G) After this beginning he sets out with variations the writing of the notes on Saturday instead of on Friday, and in a long, rambling statement his movements at home and on Peters Street on Saturday and on Monday at the factory, most of which is wholly disconnected with the murder.

(l) On May 29, 1913, although he had already sworn that he had made "this true, full and last statement," he made another statement in which he purported to aid Mr. Frank "in concealing the body of Mary Phagan. This statement is full of contradictions and wholly irreconcilable with itself and with the known facts surrounding the murder.

(m) He closes this remarkable affidavit in the following words: "The reason I have not told this before is that I thought Mr. Frank would get out and help me out, but it seems that he is not going to get out, and I decided to tell the whole truth about the matter."

(n) These are some of the facts well known to the public and to the detectives, showing Conley's guilt. There are other powerful facts which could readily be brought before the Grand Jury.

8. These incoherent, gibbering statements will, it is believed, impress the Grand Jury if the negro Conley's case is submitted to it.

9. The Grand Jury can be trusted to scan these queer statements in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and, taken in connection with all the other facts implicating Conley, they proclaim his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt.

(10) The detectives, obsessed as they are with the assumption that Conley is a fool and not a murderer, are unfit to keep him in their sole care and unlimited power. Under their protecting care Conley, instead of being left to tell the truth, will at length deceive himself into the belief that instead of being a murderer he is an unfortunate victim.

"Detectives Protecting Negro."

(11) That Conley and his counsel wish it is the best reason why it should be done. As long as he sticks to a story pleasing to the detectives or builds upon that story as additions may be needed, he is assured that the detectives will save him as far as possible from the court and Grand Jury, and will, so far as they can fix upon him no greater crime than a misdemeanor.

(12) Conley and his counsel are wise. There is for them no other hope than for the detectives to keep Conley and save him from a confession that he committed the crime, giving him immunity, provided he continues to put the guilt on Frank.

Sheriff Shows Up Smith.

Denial of practically every assertion made by Conley or his attorneys, William M. Smith, regarding his jail regulations or the treatment of the negro while in the county prison, was made by Sheriff Mangum when informed of the contents of the affidavit and petitions submitted to Judge Roan.

"Smith's statements are infamous lies," said the Sheriff. "There is absolutely no foundation for belief by Conley that he was being poisoned when he was given the sandwiches. The negro lied when he said he did not eat the food. He did eat the four sandwiches. They were given to him by a reporter, who told me all about his interview. The newspaper man said he wanted to get on Conley's good side and get information for his paper. In the story he wrote he told frankly of the tactics he had used to get information.

"The regulations in the Fulton county jail are as good as those in any county prison anywhere. If Smith says that the jail is not competently guarded he is maliciously falsifying, and he knows it. We have no spies for use in matters that do not concern us, nor have we prying attendants at this jail.

"As I said before, Smith's assertions are too preposterous to take heed of."

Intimidation Charged.

Conley's attorney, William M. Smith, in a petition accompanying the negro's affidavit, declares that the county jail is scantily guarded and that prison regulations were extremely lax.

"The county prison has at times but one guard inside its walls," the petition declares; "it is a physical impossibility for this deputy to be at all points and know what is going on; that the actual custody of the prisoners is placed in the hands of trusty prisoners, some of whom are absolutely unreliable; that deponent visited James Conley at the county prison and that it was difficult for anything to be done or said without the espionage of these trusty prisoners, who were overly anxious to know the character of deponent's connection with Conley's case.

Smith Sees Bias.

"That deponent talked with a man who, he is advised, is of Jewish extraction and who deponent believes is doing all he can reasonably to place the blame for this crime on his client (Conley), and who is desirous of seeing the defendant (Frank) cleared; and this man admitted to this deponent that he did visit the cell of said Conley and offered him sandwiches and promised whisky and however he specifically disclaimed his being the party who had threatened said Conley at a later hour, and stated that the sandwiches and whisky were offered in good faith with no intention to harm Conley, that the identity of this party is known to deponent and can be given the court upon request; that knowing the conditions as they exist at the county jail, deponent declares that the ends of justice will not be served by detention of James Conley at the county prison, but that same will be materially harmed and damaged."

Conley Repeats Charges.

Conley, in his affidavit, declared that during his stay in the county jail he was constantly being menaced by persons whom he suspected of the intention to poison him.

"Affiant swears that he was visited by numerous persons, strangers to him, while he was held in the county prison," the affidavit reads; "that deponent was visited by a young man at one time who appeared to be of Jewish descent, who offered this deponent sandwiches to eat; that deponent did not eat the sandwiches, for fear of being poisoned; that late in the night, after the lights had been turned out, a man came to the cell of deponent and struck a match and looked in and asked deponent if he did not know he would be hanged; told deponent that he was telling a d—d lie on Frank, and would be hanged sure as h—l; asked deponent if he did not know he could shoot him in his cell, if he was a mind to do so; that on account of the darkness deponent was unable to find out who this was; that the only desire of deponent is that he be given protection and be in hands of sworn officers of the law and not turned over to any prisoner or to 'trusty turnkeys' where there is any possibility for this deponent to be harmed in any way."

Slap at Sheriff.

Conley, in answer to the rule nisi, further attacks the regulations at the county jail, and the treatment accorded him in that institution:

"Respondent is advised that the keys to practically all of the cell blocks are carried by 'convicted criminals,'" the answer states; "that owing to this condition, men have been known to saw through steel bars and cages and escape.

"That this respondent was imprisoned while in the county jail directly over the cell block in which said defendant (Frank) is detained; that this respondent is advised and believes that the Sheriff of this county publicly proclaimed that the defendant looks him in the eye like an innocent man."

Release and Rearrest.

A dramatic moment attended the release and rearrest of Conley Friday morning in connection with the working of the court's order that the negro be given his liberty.

Chief of Detectives Lanford appeared at the door of Conley's cell at 11 o'clock.

"Well, Jim," said the Chief, "I am going to release you."

The negro received this statement with a look of fright, but was silent as well as bewildered.

Taken from his cell, Conley was led by the Chief through the sergeant's office and to the side door of the police station, which opens into an alley. The negro followed his captors with silent bewilderment.

The party proceeded down the alley to the sidewalk. There a small crowd greeted the negro with curious eyes. Chief Lanford took his hand from Conley's arm. Conley was a free man.

His freedom was but for an instant, though. Before Conley could move or recover from his astonishment, Detective McGill took him by the arm.

"I will have to arrest you and take you back, Jim," Chief Lanford said.

Conley's face brightened perceptibly.

"That's all right," he smiled. "I didn't want to get out, anyhow."

Appearing opposite Conley's name now on the police register is the word "Released," and, following it, "Suspicion," the charge upon which he was rearrested.

RETAIL AVTIVITY PORTENDS BIG BUSINESS

Dealers Report Sale Increases in All Lines, With Unusually Good Collections.

Retail trade in Atlanta is making a remarkable showing. Nearly every Whitehall Street merchant reports an increase of sales over 1912, good collections and a remarkable amount of cash trade.

Were they not so cheering, the statements would be monotonous in their unanimity. Busy streets, busy clerks, and busy office forces bear out the assertions of prosperity and further emphasize the fact that the depression in New York is by no means to be taken as typical of the conditions in this city.

"I don't like a croaker," remarked F. J. Paxon. "The other day it rained. A friend, head of a conservative business, dropped in to see me. He certainly was blue.

"'Business is rotten,' he ejaculated.

"'I don't know anything about the inside of your business,' I told him, 'but I'll bet you a box of cigars that your sales are ahead of last year.'

"'I'll take you,' he remarked. 'I'll get some cigars anyhow.'

"But he sent me the box of Havanas you see on my desk. He had his accounting department run a total of his sales, and wrote me a note saying it was worth the cigars to get cured of the blues. His sales showed several hundred dollars' gain over last year, which was an excellent season.

"So it goes, all down the line. The business man and the financier get bilious. They need calomel. They need a wider viewpoint. They are too easily influenced by a rainy day or one or two complaints.

"Jones comes to me and says he can't pay his bill and wants an extension. Smith drops in next day with the same tale. Robinson has a wall of identical nature. I get depressed and decide collections are poor. In the meantime, 97 other people have paid their bills at the cashier's window and I haven't seen them. At the end of the month, I find collections up to normal.

"January, February and March brought us sales equal to the first quarter of 1912. April and May brought substantial gains. We look for continued good business."

Steel Trust 'Stung' $35,000,000 Worth

NEW YORK, June 13.—Testimony given to-day by Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the finance committee of the United States Steel Corporation, brought out the fact that the purchase of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company in 1907 resulted in an outlay of approximately $50,000,000 by the corporation. Gary also said the corporation expended over $14,000,000 in four years to improve the property.

Judge Dickson pointed out that the corporation had paid out approximately $50,000,000 for property valued at less than $15,000,000.

FRIENDS OF BOY FORGER SEEK HIS RELEASE

Suspended Sentence Movement Active in Behalf of Wayward Youth in Prison Here.

An effort to gain the release from prison of Paul H. VanDeusen, 19 years old, who several months ago forged a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, is being made by influential citizens throughout the United States who are active in the suspended sentence movement.

United States District Attorney Tate, of Atlanta, has received nearly twenty petitions asking that VanDeusen be given another chance.

VanDeusen several months ago lived in Atlanta with Roy Rubenstien. The two boys look much alike. Rubenstien had a postal savings account at the local postoffice. On two different occasions VanDeusen took the account book of Rubenstien to the postoffice and drew a total of $15 in Rubenstien's name.

Soon afterward VanDeusen went to Los Angeles, where he got a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company as a telegrapher. In some manner he appropriated $53 of the company's money and was arrested.

VanDeusen pleaded guilty and was sentenced to three years. The judge taking into consideration the age of the prison, suspended sentence and paroled VanDeusen back to his mother, Mrs. Susan VanDeusen, of Jamestown, N. Y. After he had been paroled in Los Angeles he was rearrested on the charge of forging a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, and arrangements were made to bring VanDeusen to Atlanta for trial.

Mexican States in South Are Seceding

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, June 13.—The long predicted secession in Southern Mexico has actually begun. Governor Manuel Castilla, of the State of Campeche, to-day formally proclaimed his State independent of the central government.

The governments of Yucatan, Tabasco, Chipas and the Territory of Quintana Roo are expected to take similar action.

A confederacy of the South probably will be formed unless the Federals are able to crush out the rebellion.

Motorcyclist Injures Bicyclist Internally

Edward Stewart, a negro, started across Marietta Street at Thurmond Friday morning to go to his work at the Stein Junk Company's plant.

C. A. Cabe, a Southern Railway switchman, who was riding his motorcycle at a high rate of speed down Marietta Street, failed to see the negro and his machine knocked Stewart down and injured him internally. He was taken to Grady Hospital, where his condition was stated to be serious.

A charge of speeding was lodged against Cabe.

Chicago Fan Dies in Hal Chase's Defense

CHICAGO, June 13.—Fred J. Porter fell dead while in the midst of a heated argument with baseball fans over the trading of Hal Chase by the Yankees to the White Sox.

Porter grew excited in his defense of Chase, staggered into a chair and died.

Layton To Be Buried In West Virginia

Ice Man Fights Tax; Denies He's Peddler

J. H. Crane, an ice dealer, filed a petition with the Clerk of the Superior Court Friday against Tax Collector A. F. Stewart, preventing him from enforcing the collection of $50 as a special tax for delivering ice.

Crane claims that he is not a peddler, as he has his regular customers and does not solicit business from house to house, and is not liable to this special tax.

Lucky '13' Follows President Wilson All of Hoodoo Day

WASHINGTON, June 13.—As usual, the fatality of the number 13 followed President Wilson on this Friday, June 13. The President awoke this morning to the realization that this was his "lucky day."

The hands of the simple alarm clock which serves to awaken the Chief Executive pointed to 7:13 o'clock as he arose. Exactly one hour later the President sat down to breakfast, and 9:13 marked his entrance to the executive offices, where he found that Joseph Tumulty (13 letters) had placed 13 roses in his vase.

Thirteen names in connection with the Industrial Commission were presented by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, who arrived at 10:39 (add the figures). The cabinet session was unusually late, it being 11:13 before the President called the meeting to order, noting that five of the men assembled (William J. Bryan, Franklin K. Lane, David C. Houston, William Wilson and William McAdoo) each had 13 letters to his name.

Observance of Flag Day in State Urged By D. A. R. Regent

A request that the citizens of Georgia observe Flag Day, Saturday, June 14, has been made by Mrs. S. F. Foster, State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She asks that flags be displayed on all public buildings, school houses and private residences, and that every man show his patriotism and loyalty in this way. Flags will be displayed on every building belonging to Uncle Sam, both in the United States and in his island possessions.

Saturday is the 136th anniversary of the adoption of the Stars and Stripes as the flag of the American Republic. Years ago the D. A. R. started an agitation to have the anniversary celebrated each year with a display of the flag, and their efforts have met with much success. Last year practically every city and town in the country was literally alive with flags, and this year it is hoped that the citizens will again show their patriotism.

Normal Weather Is Promised Again if Jinx Doesn't Tamper

Friday the Thirteenth promises to be notable for at least one good thing. Unless the Jinx has fooled with the Weather Man's instruments, the day will go down in history as the day on which Old Man Winter gave up the fight and Kid Summer came into his own.

Saturday will be even warmer, and if the weather runs on schedule the thermometer will reach 85 or 86. Sunday, unless all indications fail, will be one of those sticky June days that are prayed for in December and cursed when they arrive.

Horse Guards Give Last Dance, Before Annual July Outing

A reminder of the summer encampment, always a memorable occasion with the Governor's Horse Guards of Atlanta, came Thursday night in the dance of that organization held in Taft Hall. The members of the Guards will go soon to the coast for their annual outing, and the dance was given as the final social gathering before their departure.

More than 100 couples were on the floor of Taft Hall, all of them loyal to the Horse Guards, talking of the Horse Guards, singing of the Horse Guards. The dance was an informal hop, at which no uniforms were worn; and where, with the camaraderie which marks the organization, a private was as good as a non-com, and a non-com as an officer.

PLAN BOULEVARD ON IVY, TRACKS ON PIEDMONT

Council Committee and Arkwright Tentatively Agree to Scheme to Ease Congestion.

Ivy Street for a boulevard and Piedmont Avenue for double track car service was the plan tentatively favored by the street railway committee of the General Council and President P. S. Arkwright, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, Thursday afternoon.

Pending grading and repaving, Ivy Street has been stripped of car tracks. It is the desire of the street railway committee to keep the tracks off, making the street an unobstructed boulevard, and to compensate the street railway company for loss of is Ivy Street franchise by permitting the laying of double tracks on Piedmont Avenue.

President Arkwright agreed this scheme would be advantageous to the street railway company as well as to the city.

The double track service on Piedmont would extend from East Pine Street to Decatur. It would take care of traffic from all of North and Northeast Atlanta, affording relief from congestion to Pine Street.

The Ivy Street boulevard proposition came up when President Arkwright asked the Street Railway Committee for two franchises, one on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer, and one on Ivy Street from Edgewood to Auburn. These franchises are for short rights-of-way, designed to facilitate ingress and egress to and from the car barns.

It was when this request was made that George H. Boynton, chairman of the Street Car Committee, made known the desire of the committeemen to convert Ivy Street into a boulevard and divert street car traffic to Piedmont.

This plan would include the short franchise sought by the street car company on Piedmont from Decatur to Edgewood. President Arkwright signified that the plan would be acceptable to his company, but he wanted further time before agreeing.

Owners of property on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer Streets object to the new plan, but the Street Car Committee thinks they must yield for the benefit of the whole city.

Council to Consider Tax Office Reform

An amendment to the city charter consolidating all the departments of the tax office and placing them under the City Assessors has been put through the Tax Committee by Alderman James R. Nutting.

DIES WATCHING SENSATIONAL MOVIE FILM

Heart Failure Takes Off C. G. Maner, Drug Company Collector, in Picture Theater.

C. G. Maner of 386 South Moreland Street, a collector for the Elkin Drug Company, died in the Alcazar Theater Friday morning about 10:30 o'clock as he was watching a picture advertised as "hair-raising incidents, cleverly woven into an astounding story of jungle terror." Death is believed to have been due to heart failure, as Maner left his office Friday morning apparently in the best of health and spirits.

Maner took a seat in the theater in the third row, left, near the back. No one noticed anything unusual until 10:30 o'clock when a spectator, passing up the aisle, reported to the office that a man was "snoring" on the third row. The doorkeeper responded and shook the man to wake him up.

Dead When Removed.

The man who later proved to be Maner, was found to be dying. Manager Jackson says he believes he was dead when the doorkeeper reached him, as his eyes were glassy and his mouth open.

The dead man was taken to Patterson's, where he was identified as C. G. Maner, by means of a collector's card in his pocket.

The family, consisting of wife and one daughter, Mrs. Dr. Warnock, were notified immediately.

In Best of Health.

Maner, apparently, had no warning of the end. He left Elkin's drug store Friday morning in buoyant spirits, according to T. E. Jennings, assistant manager, who said he joked with Maner just before he left about 8:30 o'clock.

Maner, according to Mr. Jennings, told him Thursday night how fine he felt. Maner was about 55 years old and had been employed by the Elkin Drug Company about three years.

Autos on Peachtree Disturb Man's Sleep

Edward McDowell, 647 Peachtree Street, complained to Assistant Chief of Police Jett Friday morning that he can not sleep at night because of the unearthly noise made by automobilists who pass his domicile.

They run with their mufflers wide open, McDowell declared, and they violate every known automobile law. He declared that "while Atlanta may be tight in other respects, it is a wide-open town when it comes to automobile mufflers."

He characterized the autoists as "road hogs."

Boy Slayer, 14, Given Sundae at Cell Door

JOLIET, ILL., June 13.—Before Herman Coppes, aged 14, entered the State penitentiary here he was taken to an ice cream parlor, where he ate a chocolate sundae—probably the last he ever will have. Half an hour later he had entered on the first day of a life sentence for the murder of Mrs. Maude Sleep and her two children, of Elgin, Ill.

He was given his first long trousers—part of the convict uniform—and to-day he will be assigned to work.

Hot Race on for Presidency of Georgia Senate

Allen and Anderson Both Claim Victory Is Sure

Claims of Pledged Votes Are Heard With Doubtful Ears by Political Experts.

The most interesting race for political office in Georgia is the contest between John T. Allen, Senator from the Twentieth District, and J. Randolpr Anderson, Senator from the First District, for the Presidency of the Georgia Senate.

Both men claim to have sufficient votes already pledged to elect, but the impression is that neither man really has.

There are quite as many men willing to bet on Allen as on Anderson. Each has his avowed following in the new Senate, but not nearly enough Senators to elect either are talking right out loud in meeting.

Senator John T. Allen, who represents the Twentieth District.

Senator J. Randolph Anderson, of the First District.

Judge Allen is a former member of the Senate. He is one of Middle Georgia's best known and most prominent attorneys. He is a fine parliamentarian, a good mixer, and a man of poise and common sense.

Mr. Anderson is one of South Georgia's best known attorneys. He has been a member of the House several times, is skilled in political diplomacy, and is known as a most resourceful man in the gentle game of politics.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the last House, and took a very prominent part in its proceedings. He long ago announced his candidacy for the Presidency of the Senate, and was named Senator in the elections last fall, without opposition, and with the distinct understanding that he was to be in the race for the Senate Presidency.

Judge Allen likewise was named Senator from his district, without opposition, but did not enter the race for the Presidency until after his election to the Senate.

Both men have secured headquarters in the Kimball House, where things will be kept on the jump until the contest is decided.

As between Allen and Anderson personally, there seems to be very little room for choice.

Politically, moreover, they have not been avowed enemies, although they have differed widely on many subjects.

Besides being a practicing attorney in Savannah, Mr. Anderson has large and extensive commercial and manufacturing interests there, while Senator Allen, besides being a practicing attorney in Milledgeville, is interested in banking enterprises.

WILSON IS SCORED FOR LOBBY STAND

Senator Gallinger Styles President's Speeches "Worst Kind of Influence."

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, turned the lobby investigation into a political debate to-day when he declared that President Wilson's recent warning to business men not to cut wages unfairly or attempt to start a panic because of the tariff situation was "about the worst kind of influence I can imagine," and that the President's charge of an "insidious lobby" was "a species of lobby influence and most unfortunate."

Senator Reed asked him if the supply of inspired articles sent to the country press was not a species of lobbying. The Senator replied that it was sharp practice. He had previously upheld the right of the sugar interests to come to Washington to present their case. He did not regard this as lobbying if publicity or other legitimate means were employed.

"Then you believe that the sugar interests may make their arguments, but that the President should not?" inquired Senator Reed.

"I am sorry to see the Executive encroach upon the legislative powers," replied Senator Gallinger.

Senator Gallinger declared that anyone whose business is about to be injured has a right to protect himself. He also stated he knew of no particular case of coercion, and that he had no interest in the tariff bill.

PROBE BEGUN OF JUDGE SPEER'S RECORD

Inspector of Department of Justice in Macon Investigating Official and Private Character.

MACON, GA., June 13.—The entire official record of Judge Emory Speer is being investigated by a special agent of the Department of Justice. J. T. Lewis, an assistant in the United States Attorney General's office, and a personal representative of Attorney General McReynolds, has been in Macon for a week engaged in this work.

Not only the official acts, but also the personal character of Judge Speer is also being scrutinized, with the view of determining if there is any foundation for charges of an impeachment nature.

Judge Speer is fully informed as to the purpose of the visit of Inspector Lewis to Macon.

Started by Huff Charges.

It is said that the investigation was promoted by the charges made last year by Colonel W. A. Huff, who has since been found guilty for sending to Judge Speer the letters which contained the accusations. However, the Huff civil case does not, it is said, figure to any great extent in the investigation, the probe being concerned with the judge's record for the past 28 years. Inspector Lewis has interviewed numerous Macon attorneys, court officials and citizens, and he has begun the taking of affidavits. Newspaper files are also being consulted.

District Attorney Alexander Akerman declines to make any statement as to the investigation, referring inquirers to the Attorney General for information. Mr. Lewis also refuses to discuss the assignment.

Not Opposed by Bartlett.

It is believed here that Congressman Bartlett was approached by the Department of Justice with regard to the investigation of Judge Speer, and that he did not oppose it.

Colonel Huff states that regardless of the activity of the Department of Justice he is proceeding with his plan of petitioning Congress to investigate charges which he will make against Judge Speer. He says that his charges have slight connection with his case, but deal almost altogether with other acts which he imputes to Judge Speer. Colonel Huff is expecting a visit from Inspector Lewis, and he says he will freely give the special agent all information that he has in his possession.

The disclosure that Judge Speer is under fire has caused a genuine sensation here.

Mrs. Dodd's Will Upheld by Judge

Efforts to break the will of Mrs. Barbara Dodd, who bequeathed the bulk of her $120,000 estate to Mercer University, received a check by the decision of Judge Wilkinson Friday which sustained the validity of the wealthy woman's bequests. Unless a compromise is effected the case will be further contested before a jury in Superior Court.

The relatives represented in their caveat that Mrs. Dodd was led to give away most of her fortune to the university because she was afflicted by the hallucination she had been wronged by them.

Special Underpass Meeting Saturday

Special conference on plans for closing the underpass in Forsyth Street bridge will be held in the City Hall Saturday morning at 11 o'clock. J. W. Thomas, president of the N. C. and St. L., members of the special committee and others interested will be present.

The committee recently obtained consent of President Winburn, of the Central of Georgia Railroad, for the roadway across the Central's property to be used temporarily, and now consent of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad, lessee of the Western and Atlantic, is desired.

Wilson Breaks Rule to Greet Atlantan

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13.—J. K. Orr, of Atlanta, was the guest to-day of President Wilson, who broke his rule of "no-engagements" for the day in favor of the prominent Atlantan.

Mr. Orr stopped off in Washington en route to New York and, through Senator Hoke Smith, expressed a desire to see the President.

TIFTON IS AFTER EXPERIMENTAL BRANCH FARM

Representative Ellis Has Matter in Hand, and Scrap in Legislature Is Expected.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

A serious effort is to be made in the next Legislature to obtain a branch experiment station for South Georgia, to be located at Tifton.

Representative R. C. Ellis, of Tift County, has the matter in charge, and already claims to have made much progress with his measure.

The citizens of Tift and surrounding territory have indorsed his plan heartily, and there is a good chance that it may succeed. This is particularly true, it seems, because of recent suggestions that the agricultural station at Experiment, near Griffin, be removed to Athens.

At a meeting of the board of governors of the Tifton Chamber of Commerce a committee, consisting of Colonel R. E. Dinsmore, Briggs Carson and E. O. Hood, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions indorsing Colonel Ellis' bill, and the Chamber of Commerce will give him its hearty support in putting the measure through the Legislature.

A bill providing for the establishment of a branch experiment station at Tifton, introduced by Representative Ellis in 1911, was favorably reported by the committee, but failed of passage during the closing days of the session.

The conditions in South Georgia at the present time make an experiment station more of a necessity than ever before, in the opinion of Representative Ellis. The approach of the boll weevil, the paralyzed condition of the Sea Island cotton market, the rapid development of fruit and nut growing and agriculture in South Georgaa, all are matters of first concern in that section.

It is not at all unlikely that Mr. Ellis' proposed bill will open the entire question of removing the present agricultural station from Griffin to Athens, and if it does, one of the very liveliest and most interesting fights of the entire session will thereby be precipitated.

Judge John Allen, of Baldwin, and Senator Randolph Anderson, of Chatham, rival candidates for the presidency of the Senate, met in the Kimball House lobby this morning and shook hands cordially.

They had occupied adjoining but not communicating rooms the night before, and had just discovered that they had been assigned to headquarters after the same fashion.

"I overheard you talking in your sleep last night, Senator," said Senator Allen, "and your soliloquy was quite interesting."

"What did I say?" inquired Anderson.

"You were petitioning the Lord to make those 25 votes you claim stick," laughed Allen.

"Well, I've got 'em—how many have you?" said Anderson.

"Twenty-seven," drawled Allen.

"Humph! That's more than there are in the Senate," mused the Chathamite.

"Well, I don't care how much you talk in your sleep, so long as you don't walk in it," remarked Allen, as he walked away.

"We seem to keep together in the matter of rooms, headquarters and claims," said Anderson, as Allen strolled away.

Muscogee County, for the first time in its history, will have three Representatives in the Legislature when the House is called to order on June 25.

Under the last census, Laurens lost its place as the junior "big six" county, and Muscogee slipped in. That entitles her to three members of the House.

As a matter of fact, however, Muscogee will have four members in the Legislature, for the Senator from that district also is a resident of the county in which Columbus is located.

Judge Henry Revill, of Meriwether, is an advocate of a board of tax equalizers.

Discussing the matter, he said: "Our present tax machinery is antiquated. It does not reach the dodgers. Burdens are unequally distributed, and should be made to bear equally upon all. The present method amounts to nothing more than passing the hat around. Almost every taxpayer gives in as little as possible, and it is well nigh impossible to make the financial buckle and tongue meet. A board of equalizers in each county would reach a lot of hidden property and force all species to pay on its proper valuation. No good reason can be urged against a board of tax equalizers in every county, and I hope to see the General Assembly provide for them. We can only meet our financial obligations by raising more revenue, and we can not—must not—raise the tax rate."

One of the members from Clarke County will introduce in the next Legislature an "anti-pistol toting" bill.

The following is the gist of the measure:

"1. It shall be unlawful for any dealer in firearms to make a sale, loan or gift of any pistol or pistol cartridges unless an application for such sale, loan or gift be presented to the dealer that has the indorsement of at least two responsible citizens vouching for the applicant's good character.

"2. It shall be the duty of the dealer to file daily a sworn statement with the chief of police a copy of each application, giving name, description, etc., applicant as well as the caliber and number of the pistol, and make; also brand and size of pistol cartridges.

"3. It shall be the duty of the dealer to include in the sworn statement that the two indorsers are personally known to him as possessing good character, etc.

"4. Providing penalty for violation."

This bill follows closely the recommendations of two grand juries of Clarke County and has been very carefully thought out.

GRADUATING GIFT WEDDING PRESENT

Stepfather Takes Roses Home to High School Girl and Finds Her Daughter-in-Law.

Thursday night of last week Marie Pate, daughter of Mrs. M. D. Mitchell, 19 York Avenue, graduated from the Girls' High School. Just two days later Miss Pate was married to Walter Kelly Mitchell, son of Mr. Mitchell, at their parents' home, Mrs. Mitchell only being in on the secret.

At supper time Mr. Mitchell, two days later, came in with a belated graduation present for his fair stepdaughter.

"Here are some June roses for a graduation remembrance," he said to his stepdaughter.

"Why, they are bride roses—and just in time, too," the girl replied. "They are just the thing after our wedding."

Young Mitchell explained to his dazzled daddy that he and Marie had just been married. Mr. Mitchell was surprised, but not at all angry, for he extended his warmest congratulation to his son and his stepdaughter who turned daughter-in-law.

Young Mitchell is 24 and an auditor. His stepsister-bride is 17. They left for Asheville, where they will spend their honeymoon. Later they will be at home with their parents, step-parents and parents-in-law.

INSANITY FACES PORTER CHARLTON

Italian Prisons Seem Sure to Drive Young Consumptive Raving Crazy.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—If Porter Charlton pays the extreme penalty in an Italian prison for the murder of his beautiful and impetuous wife—and there now appears to be no hope of his escaping trial there—it is generally conceded that the highly-strung young man will be driven mad before he has been long within the gloomy walls.

Italy knows no death sentence. The Italian law does not exact one life for another. But the dread punishment that is inflicted is feared far more by the general run of criminals than the electric chair, the hangman's noose, the garrotte or any other form of execution.

The extreme sentence in Italy is life imprisonment, but this is hedged with such methods of mental torture that few who last more than a short stretch of years retain their minds. Many are driven stark, raving crazy. Charlton, with his sensitive, nervous temperament, can hardly endure the agony of mind that the Italian prisons induce.

For the first ten years of a life sentence, the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness, and in the strictest solitude, and with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most phlegmatic and unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Charlton's sole remaining hope lies in an appeal to President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. If this fails and the Italian tribunal gives him the fearful life sentence, he can only pray that the White Plague, of which he is a victim, may bring him soon to a merciful end.

Charlton, after fleeing to the United States, confessed to the killing of his wife at Lake Como, Italy, in June, 1910. She was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer, who went to the Alaskan wilds to bury the sorrow of his unhappy marriage.

COLD WAVE FLEES FROM STICKY HEAT

Weather Man's Predicted Change Arrives on Schedule Time. Temperature Rising.

The weather man's reputation for freaky stunts has been fully established at last—with one fell swoop (observe the date) Friday, June 13, he has brought upon Atlantans again that sticky, sizzling brand of weather which gives the street-corner gossipers something to talk about.

The shift from real winter to summer was indicated Thursday afternoon when the mercury went up, although not enough to bring out straw hats and uncovered peek-a-boos. Friday morning, however, saw a real change and many venturesome citizens, with brand new summer clothes, straw hats and things, looking ahead a few hours, prepared themselves for real hot weather.

It wasn't a bad guess, for the temperature rose steadily all during the morning until about noon, when it was almost normal again. The weather man says this will continue without a break—but who can tell, for it's a freaky day, and it may be just freaky weather.

SEGREGATION UP TO COUNCIL ON MONDAY

Ordinance Is Approved by Police Committee After Many Appeals in Its Behalf.

The Ashley segregation ordinance, which was passed by the Police Committee Thursday, will come up for consideration by the General Council next Monday.

The ordinance was unanimously recommended by the Police Committee after heated addresses by citizens pleading for speedy relief as a preventive of racial conflicts.

The only objection against approval of the ordinance was made by Henry A. Rucker, a negro, who formerly was a deputy internal revenue collector in Atlanta, and who is influential among his race. He told the committee negroes purchased homes in white neighborhoods only on invitation of white property owners.

Negroes Will Go to Court.

He gave warning that negroes would feel compelled to go into the courts and test the constitutionality of the Ashley ordinance.

"I don't care if we knew this law was unconstitutional, I would still insist that it pass," said Councilman Ashley, speaking in defense of his measure. "It is the same situation here which has arisen in California, and we must settle this question early or have trouble. I want to say, though, that this ordinance is perfectly legal. The City Attorney and other prominent lawyers have pronounced it free from constitutional defects."

Mr. Ashley had in mind particularly conditions in the Fourth Ward. L. C. Green, real estate man representing property holders in the Fourth, and B. Lee Smith, resident of the Fourth, who twice had been driven away by negro invasion, advocated indorsement of the Ashley measure as the only method of preventing trouble.

White and Negro Children Fight.

"Out on Johnson Avenue and other streets I could name," said Mr. Smith, "hardly a day passes but what white children meet negro children in the road and they have a pitched battle. This is only the beginning of a sentiment which is going to result in the worst race conflict Atlanta ever heard of, unless this negro encroachment upon white residence districts is stopped right where it is."

E. M. Mitchell, formerly president of the Board of Education, said the only way Atlanta could grow without passing through negro settlements, negro colleges or something else undesirable, was north and northeast, and negro invasion of these two outlets should be stopped. He termed the Ashley ordinance a police measure.

Sentiment in favor of the ordinance was so overwhelming the Police Committee announced no other speakers would be heard unless they had something new.

After an hour's discussion, the committee went into executive session and approved the ordinance unanimously.

Who Wants $300? Nobody Claims Sum

CHICAGO, June 13.—Harry Tansey, deputy clerk in Judge Tuthill's court, found three $100 bills on the lawyers' table, as he was clearing away a pile of rubbish. He couldn't get rid of it. Martin said he didn't accept it and would not have it.

FORSYTH, GA., June 13.—The elimination of Miss Raiford Sneed from the staff of teachers in the public schools of Forsyth has provoked a controversy which is just now the most engaging topic of conversation in this city. When the board meets again next week, the friends of Miss Sneed will urge that she be retained.

H. J. Fullbright, representative from Burke County, has prepared a measure for introduction at the coming session of the Legislature further to curtail the promiscuous carrying of firearms.

CHICAGO, June 13.—The Inter Ocean says:

"This is Friday, the 13th, and traders who are superstitious will not be surprised at anything the market does. It was the belief of the wheat traders last night that most of the local operators were bullish and that it is a weather market. The speculative atmosphere has changed and the traders generally favor the buying side of corn on every little break. It was said that generally bulling of corn on dry weather in June has not always been successful at a 60c level.

"Bears said a good soaking rain might reverse the action of prices."

ATLANTA IS MECCA FOR NEWLYWEDS

Three Couples Arrive in the City. Two Occupy Adjoining Rooms in Same Hotel.

With three newly married couples arriving in Atlanta in the past 24 hours to spend their honeymoons, local hotel men are wondering if the Gate City is to become a mecca for the honeymooners of the State.

Two of the couples—Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Selman, of Rockmart, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Harding, of Douglasville, Ga.—are stopping at the Kimball. The other couple—Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Hight, of Rome—spent last night at the Piedmont, but plan to leave Thursday for an Eastern trip, returning to Atlanta within a few weeks to spend the last days of their honeymoon here.

All of the young people come of prominent families in their respective towns, and all were married Wednesday morning. They arrived in Atlanta on the same train, and two of the honeymooners, the Selmans and the Hardings, registered at the Kimball at the same time and are in adjoining rooms.

Pretty Miss Brown Guest at the White House

First Atlanta Society Girl Entertained This Year

Miss Marjorie Brown, society girl and kin of President Wilson, who is first from Atlanta to be entertained at White House this year.

Cousin of Wilson's Daughters Leaves for Week in Capital.

To live a week in the White House, at a season when the new social set of the national capital is still in the first flush of its gayety, is the delectable lot in prospect for an Atlanta girl, Miss Marjorie Brown. She left Atlanta Friday for Washington, at the invitation of President Wilson's family.

Atlanta society congratulated her with a wee bit of envy. Miss Brown is the very first of the city's social set to receive an invitation from the President's family, and the first representative of Atlanta society to be entertained at the capital since the new administration went in.

Miss Brown is a cousin of the Wilson girls, her father, Edward T. Brown, being related to the President. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have often entertained the Wilsons, during their visits to Atlanta. Years ago, when Woodrow Wilson, a brilliant young lawyer, lived in Atlanta, he was intimate with the Browns, and a friendship was formed that to-day lives warmly.

Atlanta society is proud of its first representative at the capital. Miss Brown is described as being very pretty, with a slender, blonde beauty that is exceptionally winsome. She possesses much of the personal charm and attractiveness which made her mother one of the most admired women in Atlanta.

Her part in the gayety of the national capital will be prominent during the next week. She will be one of the guests of honor at a number of social functions, and lavish entertainment will be arranged during her visit.

Miss Brown has known the Misses Wilson for some time, and between them an intimacy has sprung up, an intimacy that was reflected in the warm tone of the invitation which came to her.

Aware of her relation to the daughters of the President, many persons in Atlanta have likened Miss Brown to the Wilson girls in the way of intellectual attainments and artistic gifts.

Washington, Atlanta society forecasts, will capitulate to its first Atlanta guest. The popularity already achieved by the President's daughters insures a delightful visit for Miss Brown. She will return to Atlanta the latter part of the week.

A number of Atlanta men and women have been guests in the White House during the regimes gone by, and it is expected that Georgia society will be freely recognized and welcomed in Washington, with the Wilsons in the presidential mansion.

25 Lots in Ansley Park Annex

Are Going

AT AUCTION

At this time history—real estate history—will repeat itself. Everybody knows what happened after every other auction of Ansley Park lots. Those who know say the same thing will happen again.

Thousands upon thousands of dollars were made for purchasers. Values have steadily climbed and are still climbing. This is the one section of residential Atlanta where doubt as to the future does not exist.

Ansley Park Annex has been developed in the same high-class manner which made Ansley Park famous. Every one of these 25 lots is high and overlooks Ansley Park. Many of them front on North Boulevard.

These lots are in a section within a mile or a mile and a half from three tracts which have been bought for development within the next few years by some of Atlanta's wealthiest men. It is the logical property. It has profits concealed in it.

Put the date down—Thursday, next Thursday, June 19. Remember the date as one which will increase your bank account if you attend the auction. Sidetrack every other engagement and go out. Twenty-five lots are going to make money for as many people. Be one of the twenty-five.

General Evans Praises Work of Riflemen

Pays Visit to Range With Gov. Brown

Brigadier General R. K. Evans and Governor Joseph M. Brown watching rifle shooting at Camp Evans range.

Men. New in Competition Forge to Top of List in Skirmish Firing.

With Governor Brown and Brigadier General R. K. Evans of the regular army looking on, new blood took the lead in the Georgia National Guard elimination shoot at the Camp Evans rifle range in the second day of the meet. Both the first and second men are from the Fifth Regiment, Atlanta.

Oscar C. Holleran, of the Gate City Guards, forged to the front after a day of 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing, with a percentage of 259. Right behind him was J. R. Cothran, of Company D, who is competing for the first time. The "old-timers" took their drop in the standing with good grace, extending congratulations to the youngsters on their showing.

To-day the squad divided into ten teams of five men each to compete for team trophies.

New Scores To Be Added.

Individual scores will be adde to the scores already made and the 30 highest men will be selected to return to Atlanta next month, when the final elimination for the selection of a team to go to Camp Perry, Ohio, will begin.

That the team which will be developed through this shoot will be able to uphold the Georgia record is the belief of the officials who are in charge and who have witnessed the competition for many years.

Governor Brown and General Evans were delighted at the records made. General Evans spoke in high compliment of the Georgia men. He will be the chief executive officer at Camp Perry this year.

"The Georgia National Guard is wonderfully well organized," said General Evans. "The officers are men of judgment and there is a spirit of enthusiasm throughout that shows up mighty well to the regular officers. Throughout the country there has been great progress among the National Guard, and I am glad to know that Georgia is doing so well."

Visitors Given Barbecue.

Governor Brown and General Evans arrived at the range in time to witness the skirmish firing. The ten-men teams moved down the range with precision.

Following the completion of the day's shooting, the party moved to the mess tent, where the visitors enjoyed a barbecue.

Several other officers of the regular army accompanied General Evans. Among them were Colonel C. H. Barth, of the Department of the Gulf, and Colonel VanOrsdale and Major W. A. Martin, of the Seventeenth Infantry, stationed at Fort McPherson.

The 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing caused a shake-up in the standing, which was featured by Holleran and Cothran forging to the lead. Holleran is leading Cothran by but two points. Beginning of the shoot this morning, though, found the "veterans" getting down to business in their old-time form, determined to recover their lost laurels.

Following is the standing of the men through Thursday's shoot:

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Hits at Forsyth.

The bill this week at the Forsyth continues to draw the capacity of the busy theater at all performances. Bud Fisher, the cartoonist who makes the "Mutt and Jeff" pictures for The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American, will be the headline feature next week, presenting an act in which he introduces the famous characters. Fisher is one of the highest-salaried cartoonists in the world, and his vaudeville salary runs into four figures—but it is known that there is nothing too good for the Forsyth.

The other acts are all clever, and Pauline Welch, the singing comedienne, is assured of a real welcome.

The Sunday American goes everywhere all over the South. If you have anything to sell The Sunday American is "The Market Place of the South." The Sunday American is the best advertising medium.

A., B. & A. MAY QUIT OLD UNION STATION

Rumored That New Connection With Southern's Line Indicates Road Will Use Terminal.

Is the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad to abandon the Union Depot and hereafter use the Terminal Station?

This intimation has come through action of the Georgia Terminal Company in making a definite move for the establishment of a branch line or extension connecting the A., B. and A. between Thurmond and Newton Streets with the Southern at a point near Magnolia Street. The length of the line would be about one-quarter of a mile.

The Georgia Terminal Company passed resolutions recently touching the subject, and it is understood that the company is now waiting for permission from the Federal Court to change its charter so as to permit the extension. The resolutions provided that there should be built "a branch running from a point on its main line or extension of its present railroad between Thurmond and Newton Streets in a general southeasterly direction across Mangum Street, Newton Street, Foundry Street and Elliott Street to a connection with the Southern Railway at a point near Magnolia Street," and that "attorneys are hereby authorized to take all steps necessary for the purpose of amending this company's charter authorizing the building of this brahch or extension."

Neighborhood Row Caused by Chickens

The story of a sanguinary neighborhood battle will be told in Judge Broyles' court when Clarence Barnes, his wife, Pearl Barnes, of 12 Murphy Avenue; Mrs. Annie Hicks, Mrs. Hattie Crash and Mrs. Marguerite Long, all of 15 Murphy Avenue, are tried on charges of disorderly conduct. The trial was to begin Friday.

The row started when the Barnes chickens invaded the domain of the Hickses, the Crashes and the Longs.

Officers Ryan and Head made cases against all of them.

MEN OF MILLIONS SAVED FROM SEA

Atlantic City Life Guard and Swimming Master Heroes of Perilous Situation.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13. Fourteen men of wealth, representing railroad and car building interest in the United States running into hundreds of millions of dollars, trusted their lives to the skill of Martin Harris, swimming instructor, and Abe McCullen, chief life guard, when the steam launch Naushon stranded in shoal water last night, three miles off Rhode Island Avenue.

In the party were W. J. Coons, vice president of the Illinois Central Railroad; C. W. McDaniels, a New York corporation lawyer; A. F. Bedell, a Pittsburg steel magnate; A. W. Hubbard, of Kentucky, brother of the owner of the boat; Robert Mason, steel car manufacturer of Pittsburg, and B. F. Markley, a New York railroad man.

They were loud in their praise of Harris and McCullen. The latter left the beach in their risky craft at 8:30 o'clock after the Naushon had begun to blow a whistle and brighten the ocean with flashes from her powerful searchlight. At ten minutes before midnight they had the 14 men safely ashore, having made two separate trips to the yacht and rowed 12 miles through a choppy sea and a highly dangerous surf.

HERITAGE TAX IS PLAN OF SOLONS

At Least Two Members of Legislature Will Offer Scheme for Raising More State Money.

At least two legislators—Representatives W. F. Slater, of Bryan County, and H. H. Swift, of Muscogee—will introduce in the Legislature this summer a bill imposing a tax on inheritances. Advocates of the measure, which is not new in Georgia, will wage a vigorous fight for its passage, it is said.

The Slater bill will provide a tax on collateral inheritances only, leaving direct inheritances exempt, while Mr. Swift's bill imposes a tax on all inheritances in excess of $1,000.

The inheritance tax advocates claim there is reason for such a levy as the constitutional limit of 5 mills, reached in ad valorem taxation, has placed the General Assembly in a quandary as to how to raise sufficient revenue. The proposed income tax, they say, is a dead letter now that the sixteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution has been ratified.

Comptroller General W. A. Wright disagrees with the plan, saying the time is not ripe. If such a bill is passed, he says, the minimum amount taxed should be $50,000.

We know they are the prettiest of the season—and so will you the moment you see them.

Yes, by comparison they are worth more than their Saturday price.

Included are little tailored waists, with low round collars—perhaps the collar is embroidered a bit, the front tucked or plaited—these of dimity or a lightweight linene—all white.

Then there are the sheer batiste waists with dainty laces—Valenciennes, cluny and imitation Irish—and with embroidery that looks much like hand work on the front.

Then again we have the tailored shirts that travelers will want by the twos and threes—these of striped percales and brown linens.

ATLANTANS WILL WITNESS CANAL OPENING

Plan Trip as Members of Commercial Congress, Which Will Send Big Delegation.

Many of Atlanta's most prominent and progressive business men discussed Friday a trip to the Panama Canal Zone. Louis C. Irvine, of Mobile, general director of the Panama Canal celebration of the Southern Commercial Congress, was in this city Thursday outlining the trip and telling of a gigantic celebration in Mobile preliminary to sailing.

One thousand members of the Southern Commercial Congress, with many business men, will meet at Mobile the last week in October. The Latin-American trade tour, limited to 50 selected guests, who will visit the chief Latin-American States for 90 days to give thorough study to commercial conditions, will there be organized.

The route of the party has been changed because of slides in the Culebra cut, which delayed the opening of the canal. The travelers will leave Mobile about October 25, reaching the Isthmus before November 1, the date set for the official opening of the canal.

After the ceremonies at Panama, the travelers will touch Pyta, Colon, Eten, Pacasmayo, Salavery and Callao, Peru, and from Callao by train to Lima. They will leave Lima for inland points and thence back to Callao, Mollendo, Arequto and Guayaquil, thence to La Paz, Bolivia; Antofagasto, Chile; Cequimbo, Valparaiso, Santiago, Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, Montevideo, Uruguay; Santos, Brazil, and Rio de Janeiro. They will sail from Rio de Janeiro; call at Bahia, Trinidad, Barbados, and will arrive at New York about Christmas.

It is expected that after attending the opening of the canal many of the travelers will return direct.

A permanent memorial of the completion of the canal is proposed by the Southern Commercial Congress as an outgrowth of the convention in Mobile. Prizes of fifteen complimentary appointments as honor delegates and guests of the convention to the Panama Canal and the trip with the Latin-American expedition are offered for the best suggestion for this memorial.

These prizes are offered to arouse study on the question and bring in suggestions of a proper form for a permanent memorial. The selection of the form is left to an official jury, comprising Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, chairman, and Hon. John Barrett, Director General of the Pan-American Union.

Asa G. Candler and Harvie Jordan, of Atlanta, are directors of the congress, which includes some of the most prominent men south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Can't Happen Again in 100 Years

Mr. Business Man Wakes Up and Finds Everything Has Gone Wrong on Hoodoo Day.

Mr. Peach, of Peachtree, got up this morning, stepped on a tack, found two holes in his new silk socks, lost his collar button down the hot-air radiator, bumped his head on the chiffonier when he stooped to look for the button and came down to breakfast with a grouch.

"The cook has quit and the gas stove's out of fix and the milkman left a quart of milk too sour for your cereal," announced Mrs. Peach, pleasantly, or nearly so. "And there's a hat sale on at the Emporium and I need $38.49 for that, and the sleeping porch must be rescreened, and I've found my last year's matinee gown positively won't do another season.

"And the chauffeur says you can't drive in this morning, for the car has broken its galliwampus and needs a new set of gears, three tires, a coat of paint and a cylinder made over.

"Well, John, I'm sorry the bacon isn't edible, but you must remember you didn't marry a cook. That's right, run off without kissing me!"

Mr. Peach missed the trolley, had to wait for the next one, and struck a crowd. A fat man stepped on his pet corn, the conductor jabbed him in the ribs and urged him to move inside, and a baby smeared molasses candy over his summer suit.

He stubbed his toe stepping into the elevator; broke his new straw kelly trying to be polite when a woman got in; was carried three floors past his own, and then found he had left his office keys in his other clothes. He dropped to the basement, climbed to the roof and finally found the janitor with a master key Mr. Peach was firmly convinced something had hoodooed him. At last he opened his desk. Three things stared him in the face. A summons for jury duty, a notice of overdraft at his bank, and his calendar pad. And on the latter was inscribed:

FRIDAY,
13th,
Nineteen-Thirteen.

It won't happen anything like that for 100 years, and maybe not then.

After dinner more guests will be received and 13 automobiles will take them on a trip to 13 places of amusement. Just before midnight Mr. and Mrs. Kral will start on a 13-day honeymoon trip in the East.

Health Restored by Eckman's Alterative

If you are a sufferer from Glandular Tuberculosis, or know of anyone so afflicted, it might be well to investigate this case, where the writer declares after a year of suffering, he found permanent relief and full recovery to health by using Eckman's Alterative, a medicine which has been effective in many cases of Tuberculosis:

257 Laruston St., Phila., Pa.

"Gentlemen: In March, 1909, my doctor pronounced my case 'Tuberculosis in the Glands,' and a number of operations in a hospital failed to benefit me. In the meantime, a friend of mine advised Eckman's Alterative. The wounds in my neck were still open and in a frightful condition when I started to take it. After using two bottles I found I was improving, having gained weight, could eat and was able to sleep. I continued using it until I was well, which was in November, 1910. Before I took the medicine I had three hemorrhages; since I have been taking it I have not had any. On November 11, 1910, I started to work, and since that time I have not lost one day's work through sickness. I highly recommend Eckman's Alterative to anyone who is suffering from Gland trouble."

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

PLAN CORN PRIZES FOR POOR FIELDS

Boys Forced to Plant Grain in Unfertile Land to Get Recognition in Show.

A new series of prizes, planned for the benefit of boys who are compelled to plant grain in unfertile land, will be offered at the annual corn show under the auspices of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The show again will be held in the corridors of the State Capitol.

While the new awards will not affect the regular prizes, they are designed to lift the "poor land handicap" under which many have been laboring.

The new prizes are offered for the greatest proportionate increase an acre, and are expected to serve the purposes of increasing the interest in the show, and in inducing the boys to cultivate their land and make it better. Many boys last year planted in bad land and showed splendid increases in the volume of grain. They were not given prizes because their best efforts were not equal to the normal yield of the richer lands.

The show committee of the Chamber of Commerce has begun its work and will hold meetings at intervals through the summer. It is planned to make the next show the best in the history of the State.

But Superintendent Woods, of the Capitol, hearing predictions of "the hottest tariff fight yet," put his electricians to work early.

U. S. POLO PLAYERS STILL 2-TO-1 BET

Little English Money Is in Sight Despite American Team's Best Player Is Disabled.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The American and British polo teams to-day went through a light practice in final preparation for their second battle, which will be staged to-morrow on the Meadowbrook, N. Y., grounds.

The Americans, despite the fact that J. Monte Waterbury, star of Tuesday's game, will be unable to play, are 2 to 1 betting favorites. There is little English money in sight.

Louis E. Stoddard, who will replace Monte Waterbury, is a player of exceptional ability, and it is felt by the American polo enthusiasts that he will be a fit substitute. Stoddard will play No. 1; Larry Waterbury, No. 2; Harry Payne Whitney, No. 3, and Devereaux Milburn, back.

The line-up of the Britons will be the same as Tuesday, although there has been some rumors that F. M. Freake would play at No. 2 in place of Captain Edwards.

Practically every reserved ticket for the game to-morrow has been sold. Speculators are said to have secured a big bunch of choice seats and are demanding—and getting—fancy prices for them.

Only Two Decatur Children Failed To Attend School

Decatur probably is the only town on the Georgia map that really does not need a compulsory education law, as proposed by Representative Fullbright, of Burke County, for there are only two children between the ages of 6 and 14 that have not attended school during the past 12 months, an investigation just completed shows.

And this is not all—Decatur hasn't a single illiterate white child and she has a hundred more school children than any other Georgia town of equal size. A building permit for a new school building, costing $22,000, has been issued, also.

These and other things, indicative of Decatur's progressiveness, including statement of Decatur's building record increase of 35 per cent over last year, are being scattered broadcast by the Decatur Board of Trade, which is one of the livest organizations of its kind in the State.

In addition to an autograph copy of the proclamation, every manager, superintendent or custodian of public buildings to-day received telephone messages apprising him of the Mayor's wish.

"It therefore is ordered that the flag be hoisted on all public buildings of this city, and it also is requested that all citizens owning buildings or controlling same, with flagpoles upon such building, are requested to display the national colors."

ENGLISH CABINET CLEARED OF GRAFT

Lloyd-George and Isaacs Exonerated in Wireless Scandal. Another Report Probable.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 13.—Members of the British ministry, accused of irregular connections with the British Marconi Company during negotiations for a Government contract with that enterprise, were exonerated to-day in the report of the parliamentary committee which for about six months has been investigating the accusations.

The members involved were Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd George and Attorney General Sir Rufus Isaacs. Both admitted having bought shares of the American Marconi Company for investment, but denied dabbling in stocks of the British Marconi Company at a time when they had "inside information."

Indirect accusations were brought against First Lord of the Admiralty Winston-Churchill and by innuendo other members of the Cabinet were impugned. Another report likely will be issued later.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS reading a piece in the paper," said the Head Barber, "about a rich young girl that had a Vassar education, and that married a man who couldn't read nor write. She taught him so much in five years that he became the president of a bank the other day and is the leading citizen of his town."

"He must have been a awful bright man or else she was some teacher," declared the Manicure Lady. "I have heard of cases like that, but I never seen one. It always sounds kind of fishy to me, because even after a man has went to school a few years he finds out that there is plenty he can learn from his wife. Anyhow, I'd hate to marry a man that didn't have no schooling at all. Of course I would be willing to learn him what I was learned at school, like arithmetic and grammar and history, but I should think it would be a kind of a nuisance to be a wife and school teacher at the same time."

"It ain't a man's fault if he never had no opportunities," said the Head Barber. "I know a lot of bright men that never went to no school or college."

Not So Sure.

"I know," said the Manicure Lady, "but I don't like to think that after waiting all these years I might have to marry a illiterate man. Of course, if he was handsome and accomplished and rich I wouldn't expect him to know all about Greek and Latin, because I ain't sure myself just when Oliver Goldsmith made so much trouble for King Charles of England, or when Cromwell crossed the Alps to fight the Romans under Lord Napoleon. I don't think any girl ought to expect her husband to know and remember all about them old classics, especially if he is busy getting the money to keep up a apartment in Atlanta or Chattanooga. All I want my husband to know is to be able to talk intelligent in a cultivated crowd, and not set around murdering no queen's English. And I think a husband ought to have some kind of accomplishment like playing the piano or making a good after dinner speech or knowing pinochle good enough to hold his own with the Germans. I wouldn't like to marry a man that never did nothing but grub out a living."

"The wife has got all the accomplishments in our family," said the Head Barber. "I never had much chance when I was a kid to do anything except get up when the alarm clock rang in the morning, so I didn't get into music or golf or any of them fine arts. All the fun I get is a day off once in a while to go to the ball game, and I guess the wife must think I'm a kind of ordinary guy alongside some of the friends I invite to the house. She is musical and a good pianist, and some of the fellows I know can spiel a lot themselves, so I just sit back and let them shine."

Some Compliments.

"I'll bet you are a dear, good husband, just the same," said the Manicure Lady. "You don't need no accomplishments, George, to stand a lot higher with me than some of the actors and boy comics that comes in here to have their nails did. I never liked the way you keep doping out them race horses, and I smelt something like a highball when you blew in the other morning, but there's a lot more good in you than most men, George, and that's no salve, either. I don't think I'm a very poor picker, George, but if you was single I'd say ya mighty swift when you proposed."

"If I was married to anybody else except the missus," said the Head Barber, "I'd wish I was single. You are going to make some lucky guy a swell wife. Gee, we're getting along great this morning, ain't we?"

See Them, Too.

Club Woman—If you come to our meeting you'll hear some plain things.

Male Thing—Oh! And see them, no doubt.

A Conundrum.

"Look here," said the landlord; "why don't you pay your rent?"

"I give it up," replied Slowpay.

"But you don't," insisted the landlord; "that's what I'm kicking about."

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Caln, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Caln follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly. comes upon Gordon Kelly. In the meeting each learns of the other's love. Kelly is sought everywhere by the press.

Now go on with the story.

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"You may not realize it, Miss Deery, but you have just told me a very important piece of news. It will create a big sensation all over the country. My paper was crazy about it. They're getting out an extra on it."

"Don't forget our bargain," said Mildred, with a smile.

"Absolutely no," declared Farnsworth with fervor. He was pretty well pleased with himself. He had unearthed, through his own efforts and without aid, the biggest piece of news of his career. He had visions of a substantial cash present and a raise in salary from his boss. This pleasing thought reminded him that he hadn't smoked a cigarette in 20 minutes. He asked and received permission to smoke.

"This is pretty soft," he said to himself as he threw away the match. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia, having a cracking big piece of information handed to me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it? I guess this isn't my lucky day."

But business is business, and Farnsworth proceeded to it after three or four puffs of his cigarette.

"Now, Miss Deery," he said, "please tell me the rest of the story."

"Gordon Kelly has lived in this neighborhood all his life," began Mildred. "After he left the hospital he came up here. I met him one day while I was fishing in the brook. I hadn't the faintest idea that he was within a hundred miles of here. I didn't even know at the time that his home was near here. My father built this bungalow recently and I think my parents wanted me to come here on account of what the papers said about me, or, rather, to escape the embarrassment I had brought on myself. At any rate I came up and found everything so delightful and so cool and nice that I have stayed here ever since.

Then Disappeared.

"Well, anyway," she continued after a pause, "you want to know about Mr. Kelly. As I said, I was very much surprised when I saw him here. I think it was the last part of May. I saw him quite often for several weeks. My mother came up again—she is here now—and there was a little boy here, the son of my father's superintendent, and we all used to go fishing and tramping around. Mr. Kelly was good company and he knew every inch of the mountain country.

"One afternoon, late in July, Mr. Kelly started off on a walk along the brook that runs near where he lives—I get this from the people at his home—and about half an hour after he started out a cyclone swept along the edge of that brook and from that day to this Mr. Kelly hasn't been seen."

"Was he killed?" asked Farnsworth.

"A good many people around here think so, but I don't. Something tells me he is alive and well and will turn and it is sure that he didn't perish in the storm. That's all I know about the appearance and disappearance of Mr. Kelly, Mr. Farnsworth," said Mildred in conclusion.

The young man arose from his chair and went to the telephone again. He was gone fifteen minutes.

"I want to thank you for all this information, Miss Deery," he said. "But I want to warn you that there will probably be a score of reporters up here to-morrow. I would advise you to keep under cover—return to Atlanta, maybe; otherwise, you will be annoyed a whole lot. While I have kept my promise and will continue to keep it as regards using your name, the other reporters will find out that you live near here and you will have an unpleasant time of it."

"I think that is good advice; I shall speak to my mother about it," replied Mildred.

Useless to Remain.

"I don't believe it would do any good for me to stay up here any longer. I suppose the people around here have searched for Gordon Kelly in every conceivable place?"

"They have, Mr. Farnsworth. It would be useless for you to remain, expecting any news of Mr. Kelly."

"Then I will thank you again and start for the celebrated summer resort, known as Pew Creek."

Mildred laughed as he arose to go. "You can not get a train before 3:18. Why don't you send that Cracker back by himself and take lunch with us? I will drive you to the station in an automobile."

Clever Mildred Deery. She was so nice to the young man that he would be sure to keep his promise to her.

"Miss Deery," returned the young man, "you are not only very kind, but you are a mind reader. I accept with pleasure. If you could only have seen the meal that jehu prepared for me this morning!"

Farnsworth settled with Case from a big roll of office money. His bill was $1.25, made up of the following items: Supper, 25 cents; breakfast, 25 cents; lodging, 25 cents; hire of horse and carriage and services of driver, half a day, 50 cents.

"I should worry," remarked the young man to himself, as Gabe Case drove away.

"This is pretty soft," said Farnsworth to himself. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia having a cracking big piece of information handed me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it?"

CHAPTER XXVII.

IT is necessary to go back and pick up the loose threads of this narrative.

When the crisis in the illness of Forrest Caln's sister had passed and she was on the road to recovery, Caln wrote Mildred that he was coming to the mountains again, and two days later he appeared where Mildred was, claiming his automobile and also claiming the fulfillment of the promise she had made him to go riding with him alone. Her mind was already prepared for this demand, so after she had learned all about his sister's condition, she expressed her sympathy and told him she would go with him that afternoon if he cared to have her.

Mildred had warned Elmer Shephard not to say anything to anyone about their meeting Gordon Kelly and she was glad she did so, as the boy appeared just as Caln was leaving. After Caln had gone the lad joined her on the porch, his face clouded.

"I don't like Mr. Caln," he declared, petulantly. "What does he want to keep coming up here for?"

"Why, Elmer," said Mildred, reprovingly, "you shouldn't talk that way. He has always acted like a gentleman, hasn't he?"

"I don't care; I don't like him just the same. Gordon Kelly is the kind of man I like. He can do something. All Mr. Caln can do is to drive an automobile and dress in fancy clothes and hang around. I heard him say he would come again at 3 o'clock this afternoon. I wish he would stay away."

Thoughts Were Busy.

Mildred made no answer. Her thoughts were busy. Elmer had said just what was in her own mind, if he only had known it. The lad's quick perception had seen through the shallow, selfish visitor. After a while she said:

"Elmer, I have promised to go out riding with Mr. Caln this afternoon in his automobile. After I'm gone, if you care to do so, you may take the runabout and drive up to the bridge and stay around there a while. I will probably see you on my way back home. That isn't very exciting, I know, but I would like to have you do it if you don't mind."

Days ago she had taught the lad how to run the car and he was now quite an expert. The request she had just made of him was the result of a vague something in her mind. It had to do with Forrest Caln and the engagement she had made with him. She almost regretted making it, yet she knew what he had to say would have to be said, so she braved herself to go through the ordeal.

In the meantime Forrest Caln was speeding toward his shack in his car. He passed the point where the road crosses the bridge and about three miles farther came to the place where a road led off to the left through the large granite posts. Every time he had passed this point Caln had observed the granite posts. He knew they must be on what was supposed to be Gordon Kelly's property. Evidently, therefore, the road led to the habitation where Kelly lived before he went to Atlanta and broke his leg. Since his personal encounter with Gordon Kelly, Caln had often thought of him in connection with his mountain home, recalling what Deery had told him about the young man's father killing himself by jumping off a mountain while crazed with liquor. The weirdness of this act had created a profound impression on Caln.

The Granite Posts.

Approaching the granite posts on this particular morning, the incident of the strange death suddenly flashed across the mind of Caln. He brought his car to a stop and gazed curiously at the pillars, which seemed to stand as guardians of a mysterious realm. He then let his gaze wander to the road which passed through the posts and was soon lost to view, winding through a fine forest of hardwood trees. The road itself was hard, firm and well made and had a top dressing of granite, ground fine, the same kind of stone the pillars were made of. Within the open gate, even the woods and the ground underneath seemed to be the recipients of care. The trees were trimmed and there were no dead branches lying on the ground. The idea created in Caln's mind was that it was the entrance to some millionaire's vast mountain estate. On Deery's maps the property was marked "Prescott Trust Company." What had Gordon Kelly to do with it all? he wondered. Where did this ball player fit in?

Overcome with curiosity, Caln started his car and turned in the road that led through the granite posts. He would investigate, he said to himself. What better chance would he have, with Gordon Kelly on his way north to join his ball club?

Caln was not a slow driver. He threw his car into high speed and raced up the winding road. The road was as smooth as a billiard table and the crunch of gravel under his tires was music to Caln's ears. He had covered more than half a mile of the driveway and there was still no sign of a habitation, when he suddenly heard the sound of a horn, followed by a sharp cry. He looked up quickly to see an automobile coming down upon him. It looked like a sure collision, but Caln gave the emergency brake a jerk and turned sharply to the right just in time to avoid a smashup. The occupant of the other car had acted in the same manner and, after missing each other by a hair, the two machines came to a stop not ten feet apart.

As soon as he had convinced himself that there had been no mishap, Caln, without even looking back to see who was in the other automobile, proceeded to put his car in motion, but before he could do so he was halted by the sharp command: "Stop!"

It was Gordon Kelly in the other machine. As soon as his car stopped he glanced back and read the number of the other machine. It was "50,000 Ga." Like a flash he recalled that this same car nearly ran over him in front of the Atlanta ball grounds. He jumped to the ground and reached the side of Caln's automobile just as the latter was about to start it. The two men faced each other, and Gordon could see the look of surprise that flashed over the face of the other.

"You seem bound to kill me with that car, one way or the other," observed Gordon. "You were headed toward my home. Did you wish to see me?"

Caln did not know what to say in reply. He did not want to acknowledge that curiosity had drawn him there and he knew he had no business on the driveway. Yet his arrogant nature refused to allow him to apologize, especially to Gordon Kelly. When he did reply he did so in a half-insolent tone.

"No, I have no wish to see you."

"Anyone here you desire to see?"

"No."

"What are you doing here?"

"Just rubbering around; that's all."

"You know these are private grounds?"

"I assumed they were." Caln had drawn a cigarette from his case. He now lighted it.

Gordon paused a moment before he spoke again. Then he said:

"Your tone is insolent. You are entitled to no consideration from me. Get off the grounds!"

"Suppose I refuse?" sneered Caln.

"I'll answer that question in just one minute, if you force me to, by kicking you through those stone pillars."

Caln Is Cowed.

The recollection of a previous experience with the toe of Gordon Kelly's shoe brought Caln to his senses. Without further words he turned his car and moved off down the winding driveway. Kelly, in his own machine, followed him. Passing through the granite posts, Caln turned north toward his own shack. Kelly, entering the main road, turned south.

Chagrin, mortification and anger had a three-cornered battle for supremacy in Caln's breast as he drove along the road. When he reached his mountain abode he did perhaps the worst thing he could have done, considering his engagement with Mildred Deery. He told his man George to fetch a bottle of whisky and some fresh water, and he sat at a table and drank and brooded and swore at George and swore vengeance on Kelly and swore at himself.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

PROPOSE AT ONCE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

For two years I have been calling on a young lady two years my junior. I love her dearly and I know my love is returned. Sometimes I feel as though my time is wastefully drifting by calling on her because she sometimes refuses to listen to me when I feel like proposing, and the next night she is all in a flutter awaiting me. I earn a good salary and feel that I can support a wife. With this view in mind I am almost on the verge of proposing. Then I lose all courage. Please advise me, as I am a total wreck.

N. B.

Put an end to your misery by proposing on one of those nights when she is all in a flutter. The longer you delay it the less courage you will have.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man and am quite infatuated with a young lady two years my senior. When I last called on her I said I wished the difference in our ages was just the opposite, but she said that two years count for nothing when one is in love. Am I right in keeping up our love?

J. W. F.

Two years count for nothing when one loves. The girl is right.

But your question implies that you have doubts. For this reason I am sure you don't really love her.

CERTAINLY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Will you please give your opinion to settle an argument on—if a tall girl can be called cute?

S. C. P.

The correct meaning of the word is "clever," "sharp," "smart," and is in no way dependent on physical size.

Do You Know---

Someone fond of statistics has figured out that in Great Britain alone about 1,600,000,000 miles are covered annually by all sorts of vehicles, including motor cars. During the past year 750 persons were killed by vehicular traffic—that is to say, one person for every 2,133,333 miles. Motor vehicles to the number of 50,000 covered approximately 300,000,000 miles and killed 200 people, or one person for every 1,500,000 miles.

The engagement of Duke Karl of Croy to Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the American Ambassador to Berlin, recalls a curious law of that noble house. Should the head of the family or his heir desire to marry outside his own rank, he must previously obtain the unanimous consent of all the males bearing the name of Croy who are of age; otherwise his children can not succeed either to the title or estate.

Cullman, Ala., claims to be the most prosperous township in the world. It is said that every man in the town who is the head of a family has a clear title deed of ownership to his home, and every one of them has a banking account. Co-operative farming is practiced in the county.

The discovery of oil in Papau, British New Guinea, was the result of a native boy being whipped for placing kerosene in a miner's tea. The youth declared his innocence and led the miner to the well from which the water had been taken. It was found that the surface of the water was completely covered with oil, the source of which is being developed into a huge commercial enterprise.

The Parent and the Undutiful Child

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

WE bestow a great deal of pity upon the parent of an undutiful child, but how often do we stop to consider who is to blame for the state of affairs?

"Poor Mrs. Smith!" a woman sighed. "I am very sorry for her! She is one of the sweetest and gentlest of women, and her son is all she has in the world. Yet he speaks to her roughly, and has a royal disregard for all her wishes. He pays her poorly for all her care of him."

Had the partisan of the abused parent been of an analytical turn of mind she might have changed her sympathy to criticism of the mother herself. We hear—and say—much of the responsibility of children, of the duty of the parents to train the child properly, but, when parents neglect to do this, we condemn the grown son or daughter rather than the person who trained him or her. One overindulgent mother of sons—all of whom are up-to-date examples of ingratitude and selfishness—says, with tears in her eyes, "I never considered my own comfort compared with that of my boys, and I always set aside my own wishes to make them happy."

The result has been just what might have been expected.

A young child, when left to his own devices, is little better than a small savage. He has the selfish and brutal impulses of the primitive human. It rests with the parents to curb his natural desires and passions, and to guide and direct these so that they may become the strength of the child instead of his weakness. If they neglect this duty, and the boy develops into a man of ungovernable passions and of evil life, the father and mother are pitied and the son condemned.

I acknowledge that there are cases in which parents have done their best and the children have gone astray. But, unless there has been a very evil strain of blood back of the child, or his associates have, in spite of the parental care, been a very bad lot, one seldom sees a properly trained lad go completely wrong.

I was moved to amusement, yet strongly impressed by a conversation that I heard between a mother and her sixteen-year-old daughter. The mother was reproving the child for disobedience.

"The trouble with you, Mary," said the parent, "is that you were not punished enough when you were a child."

The girl's eyes flashed with temper.

"Well, if not, who was to blame for it?" was the impertinent retort. "Surely you need not lay that omission to my account!"

Impertinent? Yes. Unkind and rude? Undoubtedly. Yet the insolent speech contained a poignant truth. And the mother recognized this fact too late.

"When did you train your boy to obey you so promptly?" asked one mother of another. "My son is just the age of yours, and I can not make him obey. When did you start the implicit obedience plan?"

"As soon as he was born," was the grave reply. "He has never been allowed to feel that he can disobey."

I know there are parents who will declare that such obedience is slavery. It is not—if properly obtained. The mother has lived to little purpose if she does not know better what is good for the tiny child than he does. Gentleness and firmness will win the day sooner and more surely than threats and temper.

Some people take it for granted that, because a mother has endured anguish to bring a human being into the world, that being will intuitively accord her loyalty and love through his entire life. One might as well say that because a seed is planted in the ground it will sprout, flourish and bear fruit without further care.

The mother who suppresses her own individuality, who ignores her own rights for the sake of the temporary happiness of her child, is not the mother who is most loved in childhood, or who is, in later years, most honored and respected. It is just that she is not thus regarded, for she has not been a good mother in the deepest sense of the word. It takes far more resolution and strength of character to deny a harmful thing to one we love than it does to yield to him and comply with all his desires.

"He is the best son a woman ever had!" I heard an elderly mother say in the presence of her first-born—a prosperous lawyer and exemplary citizen.

I respected her and her stalwart offspring the more when he said, with a tender smile:

"I wish I deserved that praise—but if I did you would have yourself to thank for it!"

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

MAY 20.—It is possible, I have learned recently, for a man to have as warm red blood in his veins at fifty as he had when he was twenty-five.

My conclusion from this decision is that no man is old enough to be trusted alone with a woman not his mother, his sister, his grandmother or his aunt.

May 23—I regret that I am not a learned man. If I were I would know, without the embarrassment of making the inquiry, who it was who said that "Kissing is the beginning of sinning."

May 26—If I knew who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" I might spend a few of my surplus millions in erecting a monument to his memory.

It would be a strange monument. It would not be beautiful, but I am sure its effect on the minds of beholders would be forceful. I would have carved on its marble sides pictured stories of what one little kiss has led to: Disgrace, dishonor, abandoned women, reckless men, broken hearts and the breaking up of homes.

Its Danger.

I would have engraved on tablets set in every corner so that one might read, no matter from what direction he came, the real truth about the kiss. So sweet, so innocent, so pure in poem and prose. I would have scholars better versed in expression than I ever hope to be, tell what is in real life when a man's blood runs warm in his veins.

And I would blame all the sin that has such an apparently innocent beginning on the ignorance of woman! Or, perhaps, I would grow so bold as to blame some of it on her cupidity, her duplicity and her UNDERSTANDING OF MEN.

She gives the first kiss in ignorance sometimes, but just as often Diary (and I would have that engraved on the monument, though it would result in women smashing it overnight) she gives it in full realization of its power and effect!

She uses the highest expression of love as a means of appealing to the lowest!

I can't quite decide if I would have a broken-hearted girl as a crowning figure or a man bound and shackled with the chains of matrimony. Either figure could be made appealing by a sculptor who understands human nature.

Perhaps the bowed and bent figure of a man with the chains of matrimony wound around his limbs would be the more modern version of what a kiss has done for mankind. So many girls these days use kisses to cry their wares when they go to market, and suffer no appreciable damage, that the broken-hearted girl as a crowning figure, would not give expression to the changed sentiment of the times.

May 28—The man who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" interests me. I wonder if he was an old bachelor like myself and had a good friend whom he loved as he would a favorite sister. I wonder if this friend ever came to him with her troubles because of a neglectful husband, and if he tried, in honest, brotherly fashion, to soothe her.

I wonder if one day she suddenly kissed him, and I wonder if that kiss seemed in comparison to all others life had ever offered him, the one supreme kiss.

I wonder what he did next. I wonder how he found that "Kissing Is the Beginning of Sinning."

Did his sin consist only in thinking about another man's wife much too often?

Not Platonic.

Did he accept it as the kiss a sister would give a brother? But no, he couldn't have done that. All the sisters since the world began never put into all the kisses they have given their brothers the one little vital spark Sally Spencer put in that kiss she gave me!

Brother and sister, bah! What's the good of self-deception? We were never brother and sister, and the kiss revealed we were not. Maybe once we were Platonic friends, and that we can never be again!

When a man and woman do wrong, it is the customary thing, the gallant thing, and exceedingly proper, to blame it on the man.

Diary, I have kept nothing from you. I was sitting with Manette in my arms, and thinking only of Sally's trouble that day in the nursery. I had no thought of myself, but when a man says he has no thought of himself no one on earth believes him, so perhaps that statement is discredited even by your parchment ears.

There was nothing in our conversation that should have led up to such a climax; there has never been in all the conversations I have had with her.

A Special Apparatus.

She kissed Me, Diary, I did not kiss HER! How could I with Manette asleep in my arms? I could neither force a woman to kiss me under such conditions, nor could I resist when she forced me. Of course I could have screamed for help. I can see in that particular that I showed weakness and indecision of character, unfitting a man.

But I couldn't scream before she kissed me, not realizing the awful designs she had on me. And I couldn't scream when her lips were pressed against mine!

If you doubt the absolute inability to scream at such a psychological moment, ask any physician. He will tell you no man can scream when his wind is cut off. Then, again, I am sure, though surgeons have never discovered it, that when the Lord made woman He put in her a special screaming apparatus He left out of man.

Had I kissed Sally Spencer against her will as she kissed me, somewhere (either just before the bestowal of the kiss, while it was being adjusted in position, or afterward) she would have found opportunity and breath for a scream.

That is, of course, if she had wanted to scream. My experience with the women is that they don't scream. It is only in the books that they cry for help.

Neither would it have done any good had I screamed after she kissed me, for what's the use of crying over spilled milk? I have been told all my life that there is absolutely no use.

So, as I said, we must follow tradition and blame all that may happen since that kiss on the man. I may have been physically powerless to resist, but that makes no difference. I am the man, and therefore the guilty one.

All the tragedy that may arise from that kiss is to be blamed on me. That I know, and being a man and proud of my strength, I am telling myself every morning that I will not run from temptation. I will just hang around and take a look at it!

All of which I have told you, Diary, to explain why I am looking at Sally Spencer these days with different eyes, and am not so much concerned as I was over the prospect that the widow may run off with her husband.

Up-to-Date Jokes

"What," said the visitor to the village of his childhood, "what's become of the one boy I hated—Willie Hawker, the sneak? In prison, no doubt—he bore that fate on his face."

"Hush!" said the villager. "He is now Mr. Hawker, the famous millionaire."

"What?" cried the visitor, "my dear schoolfellow a millionaire! I must call upon him and revive the old friendship."

Mr. Litchfield, the art dealer, when exhibiting some panels of tapestry, telegraphed for the return of one thus: "Send panel eight by ten, Venus and Adonis. Litchfield."

A puzzled clerk sent on the message to the city of Litchefield, and received the reply: "No such firm as Venus and Adonis known here. Try Manchester."

"You have called regarding the situation of footman?"

"Yes, my lud."

"Was there not some one in the ante-room as you came in?"

"There was, my lud. It was a man with a writ for your ludship, but I threw 'im hout."

"You are engaged."

A young Englishman on a visit to one of the Irish local gentry once remarked on the number of donkeys in use among the peasantry, and, turning to the priest who was present, inquired, with a certain insolence of manner, whether it was true that "the natives" kept them in their own homes.

"Yes," replied the padre, gravely, "they do. The English, I perceive, send them abroad."

"They say that Tennyson frequently worked a whole afternoon on a single line."

"That's nothing. I know a man who has been working the last six years on one sentence."

FASHIONABLE HATS MILADY IS WEARING THIS SUMMER

STRAW AND FLOWERS. A SMART MODEL

A circular-shaped straw with a ruche and a bow of white moire ribbon. Surrounding ribbon is a wreath of daintily colored flowers.

This is most effective for a small hat. The crown is of folded silk encircled with a band of moire ribbon and at the back is a mass of Paradise plumes.

PLUMES AND STRAW. A LEWIS MODEL. FOR COUNTRY WEAR.

The center cut shows a Lewis model of dust-colored straw which is most artistic. A wreath of variegated flowers encircles the small crown and gives it a very natty appearance. On the left is another black hat of the oblong shape. On each side of the brim is a plume of paradise feathers and at the front is a smartly tied ribbon bow. The hat at the right is the latest model for country wear or for morning in town. It is very plain, the sole trimming being a bow of embroidered ribbon.

The Girl With a Married Sweetheart

By DOROTHY DIX

Tears and Sorrow Is the Price She Is Bound to Pay

A YOUNG girl writes me that she is very much in love with a married man, who tells her that he is devoted to her, but that he does not intend to divorce his wife in order to marry her. She says that she has lost all interest in her young companions, and is very unhappy and she doesn't know what to do, and that she will take my advice as to whether to give her married sweetheart up or not.

I am afraid that it is too good to be true that this poor, silly child will be guided by my counsel in this matter, but in case it should be possible that any word of mine could influence her or any other girl in such a dilemma, I urge her with all the earnestness that I can possibly command to break with the man before another hour rolls over her head.

Time and again I have written on this subject, trying to make girls realize not only how wrong, but how foolish they were to waste their youth, their sweetness, their chance in life in love affairs with married men. Again and again have I pointed out to them what a sorry bargain it is when a girl gives all and gets nothing in return.

I ask this girl who writes me to sit down and to calmly figure out her case. On one side of the page let her write down Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children. These are things that she forfeits if she continues her affair with the married man.

A Bad Companion.

She may not think much of Morality, but a gnawing Conscience is a bad companion to have with you night and day, and what about Self Respect, and the Respect of One's Circle of Acquaintance, and the black mortification of knowing that one has brought dishonor on one's name?

Do you believe that the love of any man on earth ever pays a girl for knowing that her family is ashamed of her, or that any dagger could pierce a soul with such an agony as seeing other women draw their skirts away from her? And do you think that any worthy young man, the sort of a young man you would like to marry, would care to marry a girl whose name had been bandied about as the former sweetheart of some married man?

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children—these are pretty good things for a woman to have, little sister. You throw them over the windmill if you continue your love affair with a married man. What are you going to write on the other side of the ledger?

Scandal? Oh, yes, you are. Don't think you can keep it hidden and secret. Such things always come out. Don't think people won't talk about you. Gossip has a thousand tongues, and not one of them will spare you. The first time a girl goes out to dinner in a cafe with a married man, she leaves her good name behind her.

A guilty Conscience? Yes, no matter how you lie to yourself, you will always have that on your soul, that will wake you up in the night with a cold sweat on your forehead. You know that you are doing your best to rob a woman of her husband, and little children of their father. You are breaking up a home and slaying the happiness of another woman, and beside those crimes, burglary is a commendable pastime and murder a trifling misdemeanor.

Not Your Affair.

Perhaps the man is tired of his wife and untrue to her, anyway. That isn't your affair. You don't have to steal and kill because there are degenerates that do. Be sure of this, little girl—no woman ever built any secure happiness on another woman's misery.

Then write down Waiting. Years and years of hopeless, aimless waiting for a man who has no right to love you, a man whom you have no right to love, one who can give you only stolen minutes of his society, who can not be seen with you, or visit you without shame to you both. Anything attractive in that prospect, little sister?

Then write Fear. Fear of desertion. The hideous fear that gnaws at the heart of the woman who has given everything to a man and has no way by which she can bind him to her side. The wife has the bond that the law and society has forged, that holds her husband to her. He can not break this tie with impunity, but between the married man and his unmarried love there is nothing but his fickle fancy.

No other woman knows such torturing jealousy, no other woman knows such deadly fear as this woman who realizes that nothing but her beauty and her youth and her charm holds her married sweetheart, and that some day these must go, and that then he will turn to a fresher and fairer face.

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children, on the one side. On the other, Scandal, A Guilty Conscience, Waiting, Fear, No Home nor Husband nor Children of one's own, no settled place in society, to be looked at askance instead of being welcome among the people one would like to know. How does the account balance, little sister? Don't you think that you will have to pay a pretty high price for your romance with a married man?

And look at the man squarely. Don't you think that any man, who would win the heart of a young girl when he knew that he couldn't carry her, is about the most consummate cad that ever came down the pike? And doesn't he deserve a medal as the most selfish man on earth when he asks you to do a thing that will make you the target for all the mud slinging in your circle?

WITHIN THE LAW

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, an orphan, employed in Edward Gilder's department store, is unjustly accused of theft and sent to prison. She is hounded by the police on her release, and finally goes to live with Joe Garson, a forger, and Aggie Lynch, a blackmailer, both of whom treat her with respect. Mary resolves to keep "within the law." She becomes the leader of a band of swindlers. Gilder's son, Dick, falls in love with her, and she marries him to be revenged on his father—and then finds that she is in love with him. Dick refuses to give her up, a demand made by his father, Mary disappears. Police Inspector Burke in an effort to aid the elder Gilder schemes to secure the arrest of Mary through "English Eddie" Griggs, a police informer. Garson plans to rob the Gilder home on a tip from Griggs. Mary hears of it and tries to prevent it, going to the Gilder home. Mary pleads with Garson to drop the robbery, and Dick enters. Garson kills Griggs when Mary corners the latter and he admits he is working for the police. Burke enters the house, a searchlight throwing its rays on the dead man's body. Mary and Dick are arrested, because Mary tells Burke that Dick shot Griggs in defense of his home.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Cringingly, Chicago Red, who so gloried in his strength, yet was now altogether humble in his precarious case, obeyed as far as the getting to his feet was concerned. * * * It never occurred to him even that he should carry his obedience to the point of "squealing on a pal!" Had the circumstances been different, he might have refused to accept the Inspector's blow with such meekness, since above all things he loved a bit of bodily strife, with some one near his own strength, and the Inspector was of a sort to offer him a battle worth while.

So, now, while he got slowly to his feet, he took care to keep at a respectful distance from the official, though his big hands fairly ached to double into fists for blows with this man who had so maltreated him.

"Send 'Em In."

His own self-respect, of its peculiar sort, was saved by the interference of Cassidy, who entered the Inspector's office to announce the arrival of the District Attorney.

"Send 'im in," Burke directed at once. He made a gesture toward the doorman, and added: "Take 'em back!"

A grin of evil humor wreathed the lips of the police official, and he added to the attentive doorman a word of direction that might well be interpreted by the malevolent expression on his face.

"Don't be rough with 'em, Dan," he said. For once his dominating voice was reduced to something approaching softness in his sardonic appreciation of his own humor in the conception of what these two men, who had ventured to resist his importunities, might receive at the hands of his faithful satellites. * * * The doorman grinned appreciatively, and herded his victims from the place. And the two went shamblingly in sure knowledge of the things that were in store. Yet, without thought of treachery. They would not "squeal!" All they would tell of the death of Eddie Griggs would be: "He got what was coming to him!"

The Inspector dropped into his swivel chair at the desk while he awaited the arrival of Demarest, the District Attorney. The greetings between the two were cordial when at last the public prosecutor made his appearance.

"I came as soon as I got your message," the District Attorney said, as he seated himself in a chair by the desk. "And I've sent word to Mr. Gilder. * * * Now, then, Burke, let's have this thing quickly."

The Inspector's explanation was concise:

Burke's Face Crimsoned.

"Joe Garson, Chicago Red and Dacey, along with Griggs, broke into Edward Gilder's house last night! I knew the trick was going to be pulled off, and so I planted Cassidy and a couple of other men just outside the room where the haul was to be made. Then I went away, and after something like half an hour I came back to make the arrests myself." A look of intense disgust spread itself over the Inspector's massive face. "Well," he concluded sheepishly, "when I broke into the room I found Gilder along with that Turner woman he married, and they were just talking together."

"No trace of the others?" Demarest questioned crisply.

At the inquiry, Burke's face crimsoned angrily, then again set in grim lines.

"I found Griggs lying on the floor—dead!" Once again the disgust showed in his expression. "The Turner woman says young Gilder shot Griggs because he broke into the house. Ain't that the limit?"

"What does the boy say?" the District Attorney demanded.

Burke shook his head dispiritedly.

"Nothing," he answered. "She told him not to talk, and so, of course, he won't, he's such a fool over her."

"And what does she say?" Demarest asked. He found himself rather amused by the exceeding chagrin of the Inspector over this affair.

Burke's voice grew savage as he snapped a reply.

He Admitted the Fact.

"Refuses to talk till she sees a lawyer." But a touch of cheerfulness appeared in his tones as he proceeded. "We've got Chicago Red and Dacey, and we'll have Garson before the day's over. And, oh, yes, they've picked up a young girl at the Turner woman's place. And we've got one real clew—for once!" The speaker's expression was suddenly triumphant. He opened a drawer of the desk, and took out Garson's pistol, to which the silencer was still attached.

"You never saw a gun like that before, eh?" he exclaimed.

Demarest admitted the fact after a curious examination.

"I'll bet you you never did!" Burke cried, with satisfaction. "That thing on the end is a Maxim silencer. There are thousands of them in use on rifles, but they've never been able to use them on revolvers before. This is a specially made gun," he went on admiringly, as he took it back and slipped it into a pocket of his coat. "That thing is absolutely noiseless, I've tried it. Well, you see, it'll be an easy thing—easiest thing in the world—to trace that silencer attachment. Cassidy's working on that end of the thing now."

For a few minutes longer the two men discussed the details of the crime, theorizing over the baffling event. Then, presently, Cassidy entered the office, and made report of his investigations concerning the pistol with the silencer attachment.

"I got the factory at Hartford on the wire," he explained, "and they gave me Mr. Maxim himself, the inventor of the silencer. He said this was surely a special gun, which was made for the use of Henry Sylvester, one of the professors at Yale. He wanted it for demonstration purposes. Mr. Maxim said the things have never been put on the market, and that they never will be."

"For humane reasons," Demarest commented, nodding approbation.

"Good thing, too!" Burke conceded. "They'd make murder too devilish easy, and it's easy enough now. * * * Well, Cassidy?"

"I got hold of this man Sylvester," Cassidy went on. "I had him on the phone, too. He says that his house was robbed about eight weeks ago, and among other things the silencer was stolen." Cassidy paused, and chuckled dryly. "He adds the startling information that the New Haven police have not been able to recover any of the stolen property. Them rube cops are immense!"

Demarest smiled slyly, as the detective, at a nod from his superior, went toward the door.

"No," he said, maliciously; "only the New York police recover stolen goods."

"Good night!" quoth Cassidy, turning at the door, in admission of his discomfiture over the thrust, while Burke himself grinned wryly in appreciation of the gibe.

Demarest grew grave again, as he put the question that was troubling him most.

"Is there any chance that young Gilder shot Griggs?"

"You can search me!" the Inspector answered, disconsolately. "My men were just outside the door of the room where Eddie Griggs was shot to death, and none of 'em heard a sound. It's that infernal silencer thing. Of course, I know that all the gang was in the house."

"But tell me just how you know that fact," Demarest objected very crisply. "Did you see them go in?"

"No, I didn't," the Inspector admitted, tartly. "But Griggs——"

Demarest permitted himself a sneer born of legal knowledge.

"Griggs is dead, Burke. You're up against it. You can't prove that Garson, or Chicago Red, or Dacey, ever entered that house."

The Inspector scowled over this positive statement.

"But Griggs said they were going to," he argued.

"I know," Demarest agreed, with an exasperating air of shrewdness, "but Griggs is dead. You see, Burke, you couldn't in a trial even repeat what he told you. It's not permissible evidence."

"Oh, the law!" the Inspector snorted, with much choler. "Well, then," he went on belligerently, "I'll charge young Gilder with murder, and call the Turner woman as a witness."

The District Attorney laughed aloud over this project.

Wife Cannot Testify.

"You can't question her on the witness stand," he explained patronizingly to the badgered police official. "The law doesn't allow you to make a wife testify against her husband. And, what's more, you can't arrest her, and then force her to go into the witness stand, either. No, Burke," he concluded emphatically, "your only chance of getting the murderer of Griggs is by a confession."

"Then, I'll charge them both with the murder," the Inspector growled vindictively. "And, by God, they'll both go to trial unless somebody comes through." He brought his huge fist down on the desk with violence, and his voice was forbidding. "If it's my last act on earth," he declared, "I'm going to get the man who shot Eddie Griggs."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Experience.

"My dear boy," said Enpeck, who happened to be in a confidential mood, "you will never know what real happiness is until you get married."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Singleton, astonished at such a remark from such an unexpected source.

"It's a fact," rejoined Enpeck, "but then it will be too late for you to appreciate it."

BRADY PITCHES TODAY; HOWELL MAY FACE HIM

By Joe Agler.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 13. "King" Brady will twirl today's game with Dunn receiving his slants. Kid Elberfeld will probably use his new college pitcher, Howell, or maybe Sommers, his star southpaw.

The Crackers opened their series here with a winner. Grimes, the twirler who won eleven straight games in the Central Association, made his debut against us, and, as usual, we got to him in the fifth, after the fans thought the Lookouts had the contest sewed up. We kept on going after we once started and could not be stopped till we had five runs across the plate.

Joe Conzelman twirled the kind of ball that will win many a ball game. The runs scored against him were made on errors. He will save many a game on the right side of the ledger with the Crackers hitting behind him.

Joe Dunn caught a grand game, and his two-ply smash broke up the contest after yours truly singled with the bases full. Wallop Smith got another triple, hitting it far over Elston's head in right field, and scored on Bisland's fly.

Welchonce broke his favorite bat in the contest, but is not a bit superstitious and will be out to-day hitting just as hard as in previous games.

Coyle is out of the game with a bad wrist. He was hit by a ball in the Nashville series, which cripples the Kid's infield somewhat. Williams is not the hitter that Coyle is.

We should take at least two out of three of these contests. With "King" pitching as he can and with the Crackers hitting that ball as we should, we ought to take an easy game.

The Lookouts are drawing fairly well. The crowds are coming out to witness the games, and they certainly are loyal fans and good rooters.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Everything is in readiness for the big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. All the boxers have completed training and are on edge for the fray.

* * *

Sailor White and Jim Savage clash in the main bout. Mike Saul will take on Terry Nelson in the semi-final, while Spider Britt meets Meyer Pries in the opening set-to. All the scraps are scheduled to go ten rounds and the fans should see enough real milling to last them for months.

* * *

Tickets for the big show are going fast and a banner house should be present. Saul and his followers will be at the ringside to cheer the Hebrew on to a good start in his come-back effort.

* * *

Charlie White has grabbed two more matches. He has signed to box Harry Trendall, a St. Louis lightweight, in the latter city on June 18. After this affair Charlie is to take on Jack Britton in a 20-round engagement at New Orleans on July 4.

* * *

Frank Whitney writes from Cedar Rapids that he is anxious to pick up some bouts. His wife died recently and he says he must hustle and get some money. "I am ready to meet any of the lightweights," he writes. Whitney has a standing challenge to any 133-pounder in the world. A bout between Whitney and Charlie White should prove a hummer for any promoter.

* * *

Frankie Burns is working hard in Chicago for his ten-round battle with Johnny Coulon a week from Friday night at Kenosha, Wis. This will be the fourth scrap between the pair. They have agreed to make 116 pounds ringside.

* * *

Jimmy Britt and Jimmy Dunn are perhaps the greatest boosters for Bud Anderson, the coast sensation, who meets Leach Cross on July 4. Both claim that Bud is made of championship material and pick him to hand the dentist a neat lacing.

* * *

On the other hand, Jim Savage and K. O. Brown are strong boosters for Cross. Savage picks Leach to stop Anderson in twelve rounds and says K. O. Brown who recently met Anderson picks Leach to win sure. "Any boxer who will stand up and slug with Cross is sure to be stopped," says Savage, "and Anderson is rated on the coast as a boy who loves to slug.

* * *

Tommy Murphy will likely meet the winner of the Dundee-Jack White bout, which is billed to take place at Los Angeles on June 17. Tom McCarey, who is staging the go has offered Murphy the match.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion, is a firm believer in newspaper publicity. In order to attract attention Freddie announces his willingness to meet Willie Ritchie on a winner take all basis. And no one knows better than Freddie that this is impossible as long as Billy Nolan is Ritchie's manager.

* * *

Ad Wolgast's injury to his thumb may be of a permanent nature. Anyhow the ex-lightweight champion contemplates a trip to Honolulu. That's where some of the other so-called champs should migrate.

* * *

Can you beat this? Danny Morgan has bet $350 that Young Ahearn defeats Mike Gibbons when the two clash at New York to-night. Furthermore, Danny has borrowed the money. This news comes from Jim Savage, who is being managed by Daniel.

* * *

Jack McCarron and Young Jack O'Brien, the stars of Jack O'Brien's stable, are resting up after a somewhat strenuous season.

* * *

The French boxing authorities must be looking for easy game for their heavyweight champion, George Carpentier, when they offer Rodel, the Boer boxer, a bout with Carpentier.

* * *

Al Kubiak is the latest to challenge the winner of the Savage-White match at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Al writes that he is feeling better than ever in his life and is sure he can beat either of the big heavyweights.

PHILA. FAIR GOLFERS WIN.

COAST BATTLE WILL BE GREAT BETTING AFFAIR

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 13.—Not in years have the boxing fans been presented with a fighting card that has so completely torn them out on the Pacific Coast as this little affair between Willie Ritchie, lightweight, and Jose Rivers. The scrap is set for the Glorious Fourth and surely should be one royal battle. But at the same time it is such an open affair and such a hard one to dope out that it doubtless will prove one of the biggest betting affairs ever known on the coast or anywhere else.

* * *

BY way of making it an exceptionally good one the State of California, perhaps the strongest district in the Union for boxing, will be split exactly in twain over the battle. To begin with, Rivers will get almost the unanimous support of the southern part of the State, while San Francisco, unwavering in its support of its own, will go to the Ritchie end as if the whole thing were over right now. This will make one most exciting contest, and it is certain that the remainder of the country will follow suit and plunge on this encounter.

* * *

THE peculiar ending of the Wolgast match, in which both men were accused of fouling and the referee came in for a lot of censure, and the equally strange ending of the Ritchie-Wolgast battle, which was given to Ritchie on a foul, have always created puzzling questions for the fight fans to argue over. Many were led to believe from the Los Angeles reports that Rivers proved to be the master of Wolgast that afternoon and a good many others will always believe that Wolgast was robbed by that foul decision with Ritchie. Thus it goes with the eternal question of supremacy never fully or completely decided. Now we are to have Rivers booked up with the clever Ritchie in a long contest. Surely that should settle a whole lot of arguments.

* * *

TOMMY WALSH, who should know the coast situation as well as anybody, thinks Ritchie will have a rather strong shade over Rivers in the milling on the Fourth. Tommy returned to the city the other day on a scouting tour for Tom McCarey of Los Angeles. He wants to scare up some good fighting material in the lightweight division for a tournament that McCarey is thinking of staging during July and August. Tommy is of the opinion that superior speed and size will have much to do to encompass the downfall of the Los Angeles boy.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—The Giants must regain their batting stride if they are to repeat on the pennant. The club has not been hitting consistently all season. First one man bats well for two or three days and then another. But we do not appear to get going all together. The pitchers are doing better than they were. Both Marquard and Tesreau are in fine shape, and Demaree is fit to take his regular turn once more. I believe that the pitching staff and hard hitting that is bound to come will eventually push the Phillies out of the lead. My confidence still is in the Giants, of course. The hard work in the early spring will finally wear the edge off the Philly twirlers when the real hot weather sets in, and we should close up the gap, if it does not get too wide in the meantime. Marquard started off the season like a whirlwind a year ago, you will recall, and won nineteen straight games. But all the hard work in the early stages of the race wore him out for the midsummer toil, and he slumped badly for a month or so. I expect to see the same thing happen to the Philadelphia pitchers. The Quakers are bound to slump, but I do not know how far that slump will go. At least our chance to return home from this trip in first place is gone now.

* * *

THE Cubs do not look to me like any more of a pennant possibility now than they did when they were in New York on their first trip East. They are weak in the pitcher's box. The rest of the team is fine, but I cannot figure any club with the pitchers possessed by the Cubs as a pennant winner in the National League this year, when there are such staffs as the Philadelphia, Pittsburg and New York corps.

The Pirates have surprised me. Just when it looked as if they were going to slide into their true gait and begin climbing, they dropped the series to the Quakers. I cannot understand why that club does not get going consistently, because the material is certainly there, both in the field and the pitcher's box. I suppose Clarke's team will just about hit its stride against us this week.

* * *

THE rest of the clubs in the National League, with the possible exception of Brooklyn, are clearly out of the going. The Superbas have a very outside chance, but it does not look good with their pitchers moving as badly as they are at present. Brooklyn has not the robustness to withstand the rigors of a hard campaign, to my mind. The team is good for only a short spurt. It was some fancy pitching which put it up with the leaders for a time. I had figured Philadelphia to fade in the same way, but these boys seem to be trying to show me up by sticking. I still adhere to my notion that Pittsburg will begin to climb shortly, and the race will narrow down to a battle between the Pirates and Giants in September. Pittsburg has always been a better road club than when it is playing on the home grounds. Perhaps that may partially explain its present showing.

Ty Cobb, of the Tigers, and Joe Jackson, of the Naps, are engaged in a see-saw battle for the batting leadership of the American League. Both are hitting around .450 and they are taking turns in leading.

* * *

The Athletics outran, outfielded and outbatted the Naps yesterday in the first of their four-game series, and annexed an easy 6 to 1 victory.

* * *

Falkenberg, the "human hatpin," who essayed the twirling role for the Naps yesterday, was bombarded from the slab in the eighth inning, suffering his second defeat of the season.

* * *

The Giants went to bat in the eighth inning of their game with the Pirates two runs to the bad and promptly harvested three tallies as the result of a few hits, which additional runs won the game.

TY COBB OUT TO COP HITTING CROWN AGAIN

ADMIRERS of Tyrus Raymond Cobb have a right to be proud of the record amassed by the Georgia Peach during the first month of the present campaign. Participating in 24 games, of which his team won 11, Cobb hit safely in 20 combats and in one of these it should be remembered that he was an added starter and got a chance to bat only once, which opportunity he improved by poling a sacrifice fly.

The gunners who slipped ciphers into the Southern's baseball column were Ray Keating and Ray Fisher, of the Highlanders, on May 7 and 8, respectively; Harry White and Bill Lange, of the White Sox, on May 4, and Tom Hughes and Tom Drohan, of the Senators, on May 16.

3 Hits 5 Times This Year.

In the score of contests in which Cobb hit safely he obtained 32 singles, three doubles and three triples, his batting average from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, being .475. He has made three hits five times this season, two hits eight times and one hit seven times. His best record in the way of consecutive clouting came in the games of May 19 and 20 with the Athletics, when he got six hits in the same number of trips to the plate.

Tyrus Raymond, who seems bent on carrying off the Chalmers American League trophy for the third time, has put the finishing touches to fourteen of the Tigers' tallies, sending in seven on clean hits, four on aerial sacrifice and three on infield outs. He is not the Tigers' leading batterin of runs as yet, for Bobby Veach, who has played in ten more contests, has driven in four more counters. On the percentage basis, however, Cobb outranks Veach as a timely thumper.

Only Four Fanned Ty.

Cobb faced 30 American League pitchers from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, and only four men succeeded in fanning him. Bob Russell, of the White Sox, whiffed Tyrus on May 3; Ray Keating, of the Highlanders, struck him out twice on May 7 (that day the Dixie Demon complained his eyes bothered him). Buck O'Brien, of the Red Sox, claimed Ty as a strike-out victim on May 13, and twelve days later Walter Leverenz, of the Browns, set him down via the strike out line.

Cobb has drawn 17 passes in 24 games and has been successful in 12 out of 16 steals he has essayed. The men who turned him back when he tried to steal were Henry, of Washington, twice; Carrigan, of Boston, once, and Lapp, of Philadelphia, once.

Sports and Such

THE SPRING KINKS IN THE baseball dope are being straightened out and the big league teams are gradually fitting into their appointed positions, to the great glorification of the aforesaid dope.

Of the two leagues the National promises the better race, a situation that was more or less forecast. In the American League no one would be particularly shocked if the excitement were all over by the middle of July. If the Athletics maintain their present industrious lick and the Boston team continues to improve, this combination of events is likely to result in an overwhelming lead for the Mack outfit within the next few weeks. Boston is earnestly doing its best to wallop Cleveland, and later on it will have a chance to slam the Washington gang, all of which is the best little sort of ally work for Connie Mack.

* * *

THE SOLEMN PROPHETS OF the spring-tide unanimously held that if Connie Mack kept his men on the reservation there would be no stopping them this season, and seemingly it will work out so.

* * *

THERE HAS BEEN ONE UP-set—or rather two—of magnitude in the older league. There is not the slightest doubt that on paper the Giants this spring were fully a 20 per cent stronger club than they were last season, when they won the pennant. By an amazingly simple process of arithmetic you could thus figure out that they would win the pennant in a walk this summer; but, though they have played to form, they have failed to win the games that were cheerfully counted for them last April.

* * *

IF THE PIRATES NOW occupied that high position fortuitously held by the Phillies we should worry. As it is, the Phillies are likely to blow. Brooklyn started out to break up the league, and Brooklyn blew. The Phillies are a little stronger than the Dodgers and are holding up a litle longer, but it will be the biggest shock baseball ever got if they keep up this pace for another six weeks. So if the Giants find themselves and develop a real winning streak they have every chance to nail the lead and hold it.

New Date Set for 'Drome Races Hold Meet Saturday Afternoon

SHARP at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Starter Noon Hudson will fire the first gun for the first race in the new Atlanta Motordrome. A minute later Announcer Erskine Brewster, from his raised platform, will be booming the results through a giant megaphone. And Atlanta's season of thrills and sensations will be in progress.

Always providing it doesn't rain.

Ten thousand Atlanta speed fans are awaiting the verdict of the weather man. If he will provide a couple of hours sunshine Saturday afternoon there will be nothing to it but a big success. Nearly five thousand people plowed their way to the track Friday night, June 6, right through the rain, on the off chance that there would be racing. Another five thousand stayed at home because they saw the case was hopeless. They will all be there ten thousand strong Saturday afternoon, if the weather is fair. And there will be room for all. Twelve thousand people can be seated in the grandstand alone. Twice that many can be looked out for in the infield. So there will be no crowding if the crowd grows to 36,000. Seats all around a quarter mile track, five rows deep, mean a lot of accommodations.

The sport which will be offered Saturday afternoon cannot be otherwise than thrilling and sensational. Ninety miles an hour on a four-lap track offers hair-raising possibilities. The nearest Atlanta speed bugs ever came to seeing such speed was at the Atlanta Speedway. There the cars raced on a two-mile oval. At the motordrome the best record of the speedway will undoubtedly be equaled or surpassed—and it will be done on a four-lap track, banked like a brick fence, lighted by blazing tungstens, and surrounded by a solid bank of shrieking, hat-waving humanity. Three and four riders will be on the track at the same time and each will flash past at ten second intervals.

The racing will be in dead earnest. The riders need the money. There hasn't been any "sugar" stirring around racing headquarters in months. Now, with a chance to race for the coin, they will not overlook any bets.

Special cars will be run to the Motordrome, leaving Five Points at two-minute intervals. The run to the show grounds takes but five or six minutes. After the races the cars will be backed up and ready to carry the speed fans back to the city at top speed.

This may be Atlanta's only chance to see speedway racing in the day time. The track was built for night racing. The electric lights are all in place. It was only because of the repeated postponements made necessary because of the recent rains and because of the coolness of the weather, that an afternoon meet was decided on. This show Saturday afternoon will give the fans a fine chance to get a line on the board track racing game by daylight. It may also give Jack Prince a chance to slip up on the weather man. Anyhow, if the weather is fair, there will be nine thrilling races Saturday afternoon. And all Atlanta's speed fans will be there to see them.

UNCLE SAM TO EXTEND COURTESY TO PLAYERS

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Uncle Sam's consular and diplomatic officials in parts of the world to be visited next fall and winter by President Comiskey's White Sox and the New York Giants will be asked to extend the touring athlets every courtesy.

Secretary of State William J. Bryan, harking to the request of Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Chicago, has provided Manager Callahan, of the Sox, with the necessary credentials.

The document is in the form of a general letter addressed to officials in the United States consular and diplomatic service throughout the nations on the itinerary of the globe-girdling ball clubs and introduces the members of the party.

MAY ORGANIZE LEAGUE TO PLAY ON WEDNESDAY

A movement has been started to organize a baseball league to play on Wednesday afternoons. The moving picture and theater men will combine with the clothing store men who are closing their places of business on Wednesday afternoons. Some of the teams that will probably enter this league are the Consolidated Film Company, Mutual Film Company, Daniel Bros. Company and McConnell Clothing and Shoe Company.

Other teams that can play on Wednesday afternoon are requested to call up Shelley Ivey, over phone Ivy 4989, at once.

GIBBONS AND AHEARN CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, June 13.—Mike Gibbons, of St. Paul, may strike a snag in the person of Young Ahearn, the Dancing Master, when they meet in a ten-round bout in the Garden tonight. Ahearn is rapidly growing into the middleweight division. It is conceded that he is one of the finest boxers in the ring.

Best of White Hopes Will Meet at Auditorium-Armory

SAVAGE AND WHITE BATTLE HERE TO-NIGHT

By Left Hook.

A FEW hours after Sailor White and Jim Savage conclude their ten-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory to-night a special representative of the local military companies will embark for New York for the express purpose of closing with Gunboat Smith to come to Atlanta July 4 to meet the winner.

To-day Gunboat Smith looks the best heavyweight of them all. His record entitles him to more consideration than any of them. A battle between Smith and the winner tonight would be an affair of international interest.

The dicker for Smith adds vastly to the interest in to-night's bout—which becomes more than ever a championship affray. Sailor White and Jim Savage have both been looked upon as logical opponents for Smith in the title battle. One or the other must be eliminated before the lights are turned off in the Auditorium-Armory to-night.

Both Men Ready.

Both contestants turned up in good order this morning. They look the better for their hard work since they arrived in Atlanta and should enter the ring in top-notch condition. Savage has been training viciously here. White, who arrived in the best possible trim, has been taking it easy.

Both men will enter the ring tonight at their best scrapping weight and when Referee Lou Castro gives the word and the ball clangs there should be action and gobs of it.

This looks like the battle of his career to Sailor White. He has battled a lot of the best of them. But this night he meets one man he believes he can beat. He admits that Savage can smear it all over him at boxing, but he does not intend to encourage any boxing.

White Is a Scrapper.

White knows it is possible to carry a battle to a man so hard that nothing but rough work will be possible. That's his style of doing business. He loves to mingle. Any time his opponent gets off at long range he sorrows. The exchange of blows is where he shines. He has everything but science on Savage — weight, height, reach, strength and a punch. He has admitted that he will lose if he doesn't get his man early. So he is going in for the early stuff.

The Sailor figures that if he can land a few good blows on Savage he can make him forget all he ever knew about boxing. He has trimmed a lot of other clever scrappers that way and he believes it will work with Jim. Anyhow it is the only system of attack he knows and he is going to try it out. If that method loses he loses. But he figures that he stands a swell chance of putting Savage to sleep.

Saul and Nelson Scrap.

The loud noise in the semi-windup doings will be made by the Saul-Nelson preliminary. These lads take their battle as earnestly as though it was the main bout. They are getting a good piece of money for scrapping and they are both anxious to win. It is a waste of type to say much about this bout, for local fans know it will be good. Anything Saul goes into will be lively. Any time Terry Nelson scraps there will be action. Get the two together and it means fireworks. It will go the full ten rounds, easily enough, for both boys are as tough as gads. Of course a lucky punch might end it, but nobody looks for that. What the fans expect is ten slashing rounds of give-and-take stuff, with no let-up except for the minute intervals.

The Meyer Fries-Spider Britt affair looks promising too. These lads haven't any use for each other and have long been pining for a chance to go the route. This is the first time they have ever been put on for the full ten rounds. It may result in a verdict. They love to hammer each other so well and are willing to take so much punishment for the pleasure of an exchange that a knockout is likely to come off at any old time.

The bouts to-night will be run on the same high plane as all those at the Auditorium-Armory. The military companies will be in charge and will serve as ushers and will police the building. The battles will be put on and pushed through at top speed and no long waits need be feared.

Reserved seats are on sale at Shepherd's Segar Shop, corner of Edgewood and Pryor.

Thornton in Finals Of Old Dominion

RICHMOND, VA., June 12.—By defeating Pollard and Coke Thursday afternoon, 6-4, 6-2, Thornton and Shaner qualified for the finals in men's doubles in the Old Dominion tennis tourney, which is scheduled to be played at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon. Their competitors will be Buford and Dunn.

Thornton's work on the courts is declared to be the most brilliant ever seen here. He was in exceptionally fine form Thursday.

At 4 o'clock Friday, Mrs. Willard Sullivan is scheduled to contest with Mrs. Saunders Taylor for the challenge cup, Mrs. Sullivan having forced her way to the front Thursday afternoon when she easily defeated Miss Colston. The winner of this contest will be entitled to permanent possession of the cup. Mrs. Taylor is now the holder of it.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

MATTY.

"You are sick, Father Matty," the young man said,
"You have lost your old fadeaway curve.
Your arm is a bum and your sinews are dead,
And you haven't a thing but your nerve."

"It is true I am sick," he arose to remark,
"It is true I am feeble and lame."
And having concluded, he hiked to the park
And proceeded to capture a game.

It is said that Christy Mathewson never has played ball on Sunday. Nor would seven National League teams go into mourning if he were to lay off seven days per week.

In addition to peddling life insurance it is rumored that Mr. Mathewson is a passably good heaver.

One horrible example of wasted endeavor is the case of the young man who forged a check in order to see the Yanks in the act of playing baseball.

One is forced to wonder at the feat performed by Marcel G. Brindejonc des Moulinais, who flew from Paris to Berlin in an aeroplane without getting his name tangled in the propeller.

There are some misguided persons who still refer to Lew Richie as the Giant Killer.

FABLE.

Once upon a time there was a baseball fan who did not know how to manage a baseball team.

While we grieve with Mr. Wolgast over his fractured thumb, it would not cause us any poignant grief if Tom Jones were to sprain his speaking apparatus.

ENOUGH IS SUFFICIENT.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
Though the hope of a pennant has flown,
But the fan worth while
Is the fan who can smile
When they show an assortment of bone.

COTTON SOARS; LATER RECEDES

Turner's Crop Report and Bearish Statistics Cause Active Selling in Late Session.

NEW YORK, June 13.—There was a renewal of heavy buying at the opening of the cotton market to-day and prompt response by prices, which were 2 to 10 points higher than last night's close. Interest centered chiefly in the new crop positions, of which Wall Street was a heavy buyer. August, however, showed the best gain, opening 10 points higher. One broker took 10,000 bales of December alone. This was supposed to represent covering.

Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm.

The market continued on the upward scale during the first fifteen minutes and prices increased their gains 1 to 5 points over the opening.

The advance came in the face of a favorable weather map, with indications pointing to fair weather over Sunday.

During the forenoon a wave of general selling dominated the market, which looked to be profit-taking, resulting in prices dropping 5 to 8 points under the initial level. Later the market rallied a few points and during the late forenoon the range was 1 to 6 points over the previous close.

Reports as to the condition of the crop and the spot situation was practically nil. However, sentiment continues bearish.

The principal selling was said to come chiefly from Liverpool and the South. The speculative element also sold. It is estimated that fully 200,000 bales of short cotton was sold yesterday, of which the bulk of it was sold by speculators.

During the afternoon session offerings became freer, based on expectations of a bearish week-end statement and a report by J. B. Turner, of Memphis, giving the condition of the crop as of June 10, 81.2 per cent, an improvement of 2.1 per cent for the fifteen days, when the crop condition was 79.1 per cent on May 25, according to the Census Bureau, resulting in prices receding some 5 to 10 points in most active positions from the opening quotations.

At the close of the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 1 to 5 points from the closing quotations of Thursday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 12.05; August, 11.92; October, 11.38; January, 11.31.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Weather developments overnight were favorable. Fair and warmer weather prevails, except for some cloudiness in south and west Texas and in North Carolina where there was a light rainfall. Indications are for cloudy and probably rainy weather in west Texas, fair and much warmer over remainder of the belt. Montgomery, Ala., says: "Crop progressing favorable. Cool weather of no consequence."

Liverpool was poor at the start, but rallied sharply as soon as New York showed further strength in July. Spots higher, sales 10,000 bales.

Our market opened about 4 points higher on the strong opening in New York, but there was no buying power and prices soon eased. The technical situation has evidently been weakened by extensive short covering and professional advices from New York are to this effect:

Trading here settled around 11.44 for October and very quiet. Feeling is bearish on the general situation, but the fear of the possibility of an advance on technical conditions as recently demonstrated checks selling and makes the market respond readily to the least buying. There is no new mill demand of consequence, but the high July prices, with the expectation of possible squeeze prices to follow, gives confidence to holders and there is no pressure to sell.

CONDITION OF COTTON TO JUNE 10, 81.2 PER CENT

MEMPHIS, June 13.—Turner's crop reporting bureau by Miller & Cotter makes condition of cotton June 10, as compared with the Agricultural Bureau, 81.2, an improvement of 2.1 for the fifteen days.

In compiling these figures the report of the United States Department of Agriculture to date of May 25 are used as a basis and the percentages given herewith are made to compare with those of that authority as of May 25 last, showing thereby the improvement or deterioration of the crop that has occurred within the fifteen days:

STATE—	June 10.	May 25.
North Carolina	80	76
South Carolina	72	68
Georgia	74	69
Alabama	79	75
Mississippi	81	81
Tennessee	86	87
Arkansas	86	85
Louisiana	80	81
Oklahoma	87	87
Texas	85	84
United States	81.2	79.1

The notable improvement shown in eastern States is the direct result of rains, which have given generally good stands and put the soil, where formerly dry and cloddy, into good tilth. It was generally reported that up to the 10th ample rain had fallen and that further extended precipitation might so far retard cultivation as to make grass a threatening factor. As yet, however, this is an anticipated rather than a real menace.

In the Mississippi Valley and the southwest, where the condition was already high, the status was maintained. Plant growth, owing to cool weather, has not been so rapid as desired, but the young plant is quite thrifty.

COTTON GOSSIP.

NEW YORK, June 13.—J. M. Anderson: The trading was rather active for the first hour. Brokers representing the uptown crowd and Wall Street were good buyers of the old and new crop which was said to be short covering. The selling was scattered, coming mainly from Liverpool and the South. Speculative element also sold.

"Weather favorable, but crop news mixed. Regardless of conditions, there is a steady demand for old crop which is the strength of the market. The question now advanced by a great many operators is "how much cotton is needed" and from the way the old crop is being absorbed, it appears that the world's needs are more than many believe it to be. While there is a bearish feeling existing, those inclined to the bear side are timid about selling the market short until they see further into the situation."

Look who's here! Friday, 13, 1913!

* * *

It is said not a single boll weevil complaint has been heard of in Kingston, Ark., which is one of the worst boll weevil territories in that State.

* * *

According to information received from Georgia, crop conditions over that State as well as the Carolinas are generally favorable.

* * *

If McFadden is still short of July, he is not worrying about it, through the gossip in many conservative circles.

* * *

The United States Department of Agriculture is taking active measures to help farmers fight the boll weevil in Louisiana. These take the form of advising them how best to get rid of the pest. A. A. Morrow, of the Federal demonstration work, calls upon the farmers of East Baton Rouge to take immediate steps to exterminate the pest or reduce the possibility of injury. In a circular addressed to the farmers of that parish he says, under date of June 6:

"The appearance of the boll weevil in East Baton Rouge is no surprise and sohuld cause no alarm. We have been expecting it even earlier. The farmer that wants to make cotton under boll weevil conditions must make up his mind to fight the weevils, first by gathering the weevil in the bud of the cotton and later by gathering forms or punctured squares, and destroy them by burning. Owing to the fact that most cotton is young and the weevil infestation heavy, owing to the hot days, the pest can easily be found on top of the young cotton, and the work of picking it off can be done cheaply by children at a small cost. Every weevil gathered now is a saving of from 50 to 75 squares later. With the present condition of the crop and the good cultivation it has received up to date with intense, late and shallow cultivation, there is no reason in the world why the farmers should not make a better crop of cotton to the acre than before the advent of the weevil with the old methods of cultivation."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable, showing fair and warmer over the entire belt, except cloudy in South Texas. No rain except a little in Northwest Texas, South Texas and a few points in North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy in West and South Texas, probably more there, but fair and much warmer weather in East Texas, Oklahoma, central and eastern States.

Spot revision: Strict middling and above ⅝d higher. Rest unchanged."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Crop progress delaying temperatures have revived the bullish claim, repeatedly made throughout the planting season, that the crop got a late start. In any event, yesterday's cotton market climbed without encountering effective opposition, and the bearish assertion that technical conditions alone supply a basis of strength fell on unappreciative ears. As a matter of fact, nobody, in professional circles at least, believes the present cool weather has actually damaged the cotton plant, but there seems to be no reasonable ground for doubt that low temperatures during the past three or four days have caused the crop as a whole to lose the progress it would have made had the weather been warm and favorable. In this connection, comparison between the weather now and at this time in 1911 are particularly interesting, because large crop people are predicting a yield this year fully as great as the monster yield of 1911-1912.

"Almost without exception, yesterday morning and the morning before the Government's central stations in the cotton belt reported maximum temperatures lower than the minimum temperatures reported on the same days in 1911. Meanwhile, the New York July position continues to hold the center of the stage. The entire stock of cotton, both certificated and unertificated, at New York is now only 46,701. The talent as a whole is convinced so small a stock is entirely inadequate to protect the outstanding short contracts in the Nothern market. The situation, however, is made more acute by the premium over New York contracts at which actual cotton is selling in the South, and by the scarcity of desirable grades, which foreshadows a keen trade demand for the early receipts, which, as a rule, are of good grade cotton.

"Because of this scarcity, the grades above middling were marked up ⅛c in the New Orleans market yesterday."

RENEWED BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Large Institutions Absorb Big Issues Freely—Easier Feeling Generally.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 13.—New York, New Haven and Hartford was one of the weakest issues on the list at the opening of the stock market to-day, opening at 100, or 1⅞ under Thursday's final. After half an hour it rallied ½. Canadian Pacific was under pressure and declined to 216¾, for the loss of 1⅝, but rose to 217 under supporting orders.

The undertone was wavering and the list was irregular. The copper shares reflected strength, but most of the issues in which there is a strong international interest sustained declines. Some bankers professed the belief that Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo's emergency currency announcement is having its effect discounted by the actual need of credit rather than of money.

Among the gains were Utah Copper ½, Amalgamated Copper ⅝, Chino Copper ½, United States Rubber ⅜, American Car and Foundry ½, American Can 1, Anaconda Copper ⅛, Louisville and Nashville 1½, Reading ⅜ and Southern Railway ¼. United States Steel common began with a gain of ¼, but later lost it and shaded. Union Pacific commenced unchanged, but later suffered a net decline. Southern Pacific lost ⅜, while Norfolk and Western declined ½, American Telephone and Telegraph and St. Paul also declined fractionally. Lehigh Valley began with the loss of 1 point, but later recovered.

European news was bullish, despite the announcement of two failures on the London Exchange.

Trading in the last hour, especially in Reading, was active. Reading fluctuated between 156 7-8, which was 1 1-4 above the noon level, and 156 5-8. The rally was partly due to the bank statement, which showed a gain of nearly $8,000,000, and easier cable money. There was also some covering. The following advances above the midday quotations were recorded: Steel, 1-8; American Can, 5-8; Union Pacific, 1; Lehigh Valley, 3-8; Canadian Pacific, 3-4.

The market closed steady. Government bonds unchanged; other bonds firm.

TRADE IS 'SPOTTY' IN WOOL MARKET

Mill Buyers Have Reduced Their Purchasing Limits—Receipts Show Big Decrease.

BOSTON, June 13.—Conditions have not materially changed in the local wool market. Sales the past week have been well up to three-quarters of a million pounds, including a fair proportion of the new wools, both fleeces and territories. Trade is "spotty" and irregular. Some houses reported a moderate interest on the part of manufacturers, while others complain of the lack of demand. In the West dealers have been operating on prices fairly well, as primary markets are still above a parity with this market, according to the estimates of leading wool men, but buyers pay them rather than allow competitors to secure the desirable wools.

Foreign wools are quiet, with only small lots selling. The feature of the week is the change in attitude toward primary wool markets. Mill buyers have reduced their buying limits and, therefore, may be said in a sense to have retired from the field.

Receipts in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

CHICAGO, June 13.—Those who bought large lines of wheat on the reports of crop damage or prospective crop damage in the spring wheat country were on the selling side as the day wore away. Instead of absorbing the offerings at the declines, the trade seemed to back away, and resting spots of the day showed net losses of 5-8@3-4, and closings were around 3-4 below the best prices of the session.

Texas is threshing out wheat that is turning out 15 to 20 bushels. Minneapolis reported too much July wheat for sale there and prices easier in consequence.

Corn closed 1-4@3-8 lower and oats were off 1-8@3-8.

Provisions were firmer.

MODERN MILLER CROP REPORT.

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—The general rains in the Southwest and cooler weather in the winter wheat belt have been of much benefit to the wheat crop. The rapid deterioration, because of dry and hot weather, not only was checked, but considerable wheat that was backward, was restored and will give fair yield.

The harvest is well under way in the South, most of the wheat in Texas having been cut and shocked under favorable conditions and harvesting has extended northward into southern Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas and next week will be general. There are complaints about weather for the harvest, which has been favorable, and so far as can be judged by the wheat thus far thrashed, the quality of grain will be good.

Term "Crop Bound" Explained by Expert

Also What to Do in Case Fowl Is Affected With It—Read Carefully.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Judge F. J. Marshall.—We have a hen that has an abnormal sized crop. It seems to be inflamed and is all swelled up hard, like it was a great wad of grain and grass. What do you think is the matter with her and the cause? Also, what shall we do to help her?

S. C. R., Pickens, S. C.

Answer.—Your hen is troubled with what is called crop bound. There are various things that cause it. The most common are the swallowing of a piece of jagged bone or other substance too rough and large to pass through to the gizzard, stopping the passage of all other food. Then, again a fowl will eat a lot of oats or similar grain when overhungry; clogging the crop so that fermentation will ensue before it passes out. This will cause distention and the crop will simply remain inactive and do no work. At other times a fowl that has been kept where there is no grass or green stuff will, when it gets where there is some, fill up with such a wad that it literally stops everything.

They will continue to eat about the same for several days and this makes matters worse all the time. The simplest method of emptying the crop, if it succeeds, is to pour all the hot water down the bird's throat that it will hold. Have the water just as hot as you would drink yourself and not hotter. After this is done, hold the fowl with one hand, kneading the contents of the crop gently but thoroughly; then hold the head down and the mouth open, giving a slight jerking motion which will have a tendency to dislodge the packed matter with the water. Repeat this operation several times, if it seems at all successful in its work. If this will not do the work, the only other alternative is to open up the crop with a sharp knife and clean it out. It is best to have a helper to hold the hen firmly while you do the work. In the first place, remove the feathers from over the center of the crop, where you are going to cut. Have a keen knife, clean and bright. Cut through the outer skin a slit about two inches long, allowing it to bleed all it is going to before going on into the crop. Wipe it clean and dry with a little clean cotton or soft linen. After this is clean, make your cut into the crop about an inch long, when you will be ready to begin removing the packed contents. It is most easily done with something about like a shoe button hook with which you can pull it out a little at a time. Do not be in too big a hurry about it or you will cause trouble. Take your time to it and when it is cleaned out, clear down to the outlet, then you can give it a good washing out with a weak solution of pure carbolic acid and water, or dioxogen and water. If you have nothing of the kind at hand use a litle salt in the water, which is about as good anything.

Then you are ready to sew it up. First sew the crop with about four stitches, and then the outer skin, taking about five or six, using a needle and white silk thread. After it is all over, give the fowl a few teaspoonfuls of hot milk, just as hot as you would dare to give it and if the bird is quite weak repeat the nourishment in about two hours.

Milk will make a good diet for a week at least; with a little soft bread added in about three days. Nothing solid should be given under a week. A little nux-vomica in the drinking water will act as a gentle tonic—say about six to ten drops in a quart of drinking water.

We often see cases of enlarged crop which is a hanging or sagging crop, just as if it were made of thin rubber and had not the strength to hold it in position. In fact, such is the case. It is caused by fowls gorging themselves by eating too much at a time, and particularly of mashes. It is really not as annoying to the fowl as it may be for the owner to look at. It is as relaxed or lax condition of the muscles of the crop which should hold the food up in position but does not. This is more common to old hens which have been heavy eaters for a long time. There is but little remedy for it that is advisable. We do not think your hen has that kind of trouble.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Good Local Demand For Residence Lots

Agency Sells $4,000 a Day—Big Barbecue Saturday—Business and Building Show Gains.

At no time in the present year, say well known real estate men, has the demand been better for residence lots. The L. P. Bottenfield agency, for instance, sold fourteen lots for a total of $16,850, in the first four days of the week, or more than $4,000 a day. Eleven of these were in Clairmont Park, Decatur, and they brought $14,000. Three were in Peachtree Highlands, at an aggregate of $2,850.

Dr. Dan H. Griffith bought lot 1 in block 3 of the Clairmont Park subdivision for $2,000, and will erect a $5,000 home on it. Thomas M. Turner, of Florida, bought 19 Seal Place thruogh Hugh J. Lynch, associate sales manager, for $5,000, and has become associated with the Bottenfield agency as salesman. This lot is 47 by 150 feet.

Realty Barbecue Saturday.

All is in readiness for the barbecue of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock at Cold Springs. Judging from a poll of the real estate men, about 200 will be present. A brass band has been engaged and there will be something doing every minute. Lemonade has been ordered for the realty men who don't care for anything stronger. This barbecue is taking the place of the May and June monthly banquets of the board.

Bumper Crops Reported.

J. H. Ewing, of the real estate firm of Smith & Ewing, returned to Atlanta Friday from a trip into North Carolina, and reported the biggest wheat, oats, corn and cotton crops he had ever seen, despite the three inches of snow that fell. "With Secretary McAdoo's tender of $500,000,000 to help the financial situation, and such big crops coming," declared Mr. Ewing, "every kind of business is going to wake up as never before, and naturally the effect will be felt in real estate. There won't be any place for the calamity howler."

Other real estate men who expressed confidence in stable conditions were Edwin P. Ansley, who noted with great satisfaction the better conditions in the New York markets; Charles H. Black, of Turman, Black & Calhoun; Lowry Porter, of Porter & Swift; Ralph O. Cochran and John D. Babbage.

Remodeling Adair Offices.

Extensive alterations intended to give more room are going on in the real estate offices of Forrest & George Adair in the Atlanta National Bank Building. One or two new rooms will be added and a complete rearrangement made.

East Paces Ferry Paving.

The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company, developers of the Hedgerose Heights subdivision east of Buckhead, have begun to pave East Paces Ferry Road with macadam and chert, and the county has promised to pave a strip of it westward to Buckhead. The aggregate paving will be about three-quarters of a mile. This concern will also pave a new street, Maple Avenue, leading southeast from Peachtree Road, in conjunction with the Walton Realty Company. Holmes & Luckie have already laid tile sidewalks along Piedmont Road east of Peachtree, and will extend the same along East Paces Ferry Road half-way back to Buckhead.

Jump in Building.

Real estate men learned with interest Friday that building permits for the twenty-third week of 1913 far outstripped the figures for the same period last year. The number was the same, 60, but 1913's aggregated $302,194, while 1912's totaled only $92,800.

Changes on Real Estate Row.

Auburn Avenue, colloquially known as "Real Estate Row," has recently gained a convert in the Claude E. Sims Company, but is soon to lose two other agencies. The Lochridge-McClain-Moon Company and G. T. R. Fraser have received notice that they must vacate the old Y. M. C. A. building, which is to be remodeled by the Chamber of Commerce. The former will go to 4 North Pryor Street, the Kimball House, while the latter will seek space in an office building.

Other realty agents on "Real Estate Row" are George P. Moore, who named the street; John J. Woodside, Mercer W. Gilmer and the Willingham Real Estate Agency.

For Piedmont Car Line.

On account of its possible bearing on property values, real estate men heard with much interest Friday of the plan for the street railway company to use Piedmont Avenue rather than Ivy Street. The city made the suggestion that Ivy Street be left free of car tracks in order that big vehicles might use it and keep off Peachtree. President Arkwright ies said to be willing to the new arrangement if Piedmont Avenue property owners will consent.

Permit for $6,000 Home.

A permit was issued Friday to J. H. Bennett to erect at 48 Westminster Drive, Ansley Park, a two-story brick veneer residence, to cost $6,000.

What Is a Hero? Usually a Life Saver

You Can Be a Life Saver Very Easily BY KILLING FLIES

(Copyright, 1913)

You should kill flies. THE FLY IS THE MOST DANGEROUS INSECT ON EARTH. IT IS MORE DEADLY THAN THE COBRA, MORE DANGEROUS THAN THE TIGER.

It is your duty to kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM TYPHOID FEVER.

All good citizens must kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM INTESTINAL DISEASES.

Please kill flies. EVERY AUTUMN THERE IS A RISE IN THE DEATH RATE FROM TYPHOID. THIS RISE IS TRACED BY THE SCIENTISTS DIRECTLY TO THE FLY.

We beg of you to kill flies. THE FLY KILLS TENS OF THOUSANDS OF CHILDREN EVERY YEAR.

The fly causes more blindness in children than all other causes combined.

The fly spreads every known disease to children and to adults, for it frequents every disease breeding spot and hunts purposely for filth.

Early in the season KILL FLIES.

In the middle of the Summer KILL FLIES.

And in the Autumn and in the Winter, if you can find them, still KILL FLIES.

Treat the fly as our ancestors in the old days treated the red Indians and the wolves.

First, shut them out of your house, make sure that they won't get in; then kill them off as rapidly as possible and pray for the day when you will no longer have to protect your house against them.

Screen your windows.

Screen your doors.

New fly screens made of wire netting that will not rust are more important than a new coat of paint or a new automobile, for fly screens means protection for children.

Protect your house from the flies as absolutely as possible. Protect your food supplies and protect your babies' faces separately.

As the child lies asleep, keep mosquito netting over it.

Keep your sugar bowl, butter dish and food supplies covered.

Don't forget that if you see flies their breeding place is nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table, or in the cuspidor.

If there is no dirt or filth there will be no flies.

If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood write at once to the Health Department.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises. All refuse should be removed at once or covered with lime or kerosene.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

See that your sewerage system is in good order. Pour kerosene into the drains.

Cover food after a meal. Burn or bury all table refuse. Screen all food offered for sale. Buy no food that has been exposed to flies.

It is only by earnest intelligent co-operation that the fly can finally be abolished.

The citizens should combine, the national, State, city and village governments should combine with them to wipe out the unseen enemies of man, the flies that carry all the diseases, or very nearly all, and the mosquito that alone infects men with malaria and yellow fever.

THE THING CAN BE DONE, for it has been done by governments in Cuba, in Panama and in New Orleans.

The trouble is that the country will not take the matter seriously.

Darwin told us that one single pair of flies in forty-eight hours—the quick-breeding African fly—will lay enough eggs and breed enough maggots to devour a lion, leaving nothing but the white bones.

A few flies surviving through the Winter start the plague afresh the following year.

And one careless citizen leaving a breeding ground for mosquitoes supplies enough to infest the whole country.

Fortunately, for two or three years the people have been alive to the fact that their enemies are the tiny fly and mosquito and the invisible disease germs—enemies more deadly and dangerous than ever were the great monsters of prehistoric times or the wolves and lions of our day.

Discussion has begun, newspapers have taken it up and offered prizes. A few public officials have at last TRIED to do something. But only a beginning has been made.

The country must realize the danger and the duty. Children must be taught that the killing of flies is a good and necessary act, painful as it is to take life.

Do what you can to arouse public feeling for the sake of public safety.

And in the meanwhile DO WHAT YOU CAN INDIVIDUALLY.

Kill the flies.

Letters From The Georgian's Readers

DOGS IN GEORGIA.

Editor The Georgian:

I wish to thank you and indorse every word of your editorial on the dog. All the good deeds of ten million dogs can not counterbalance the death of one human being, and I would rather see every dog on earth slain than to see one little child die of the rabies.

Dogs have cost this State millions of dollars. A good many years back every farmer in the State raised sheep and had wool and mutton to sell. I have bought thousands and thousands of pounds of wool throughout Georgia, but to-day you won't find one pound where there used to be thousands. Ask any old farmer and he will tell you dogs are the sole cause of the disappearance of the sheep industry.

I have never heard one iota of evidence that the dog does anything for the good of humanity.

GOOD ROADS.

Editor The Georgian:

In the campaign for the general good of everybody in this territory, permit me to suggest that something be done toward not only the mere building of better roads, but better maintenance. If you have recently ridden over the Howell's Mill and Colyer's Ferry Roads you know what a mess was made of those nice roads by putting DIRT on fresh oil in such quantities that it was like an original dirt road with dust, instead of using sand or screening.

Here's for good roads! And let's have them oiled, too, but I think anyone with wide experience in the matter will say that common dirt as a "topper" is a mistaken idea. A. H. SAYRS.

"We Must Better the Mothers to Better the Race"

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

A BRIGHT woman named Elva D. Kellog has taken me to task for some verses wherein woman, as the mother, is accused of failing in her duty.

Mrs. Kellog quotes the final line of the poem and her criticisms follow:

"'We must better the mothers to beter the race.'

"Granted. But it will do no good until the fathers have become human beings instead of creatures lower than animals. Why not preach at the man DIRECTLY—why not speak to this generation, instead of merely urging mothers to make the next generation of men what it should be? After all, a mother can't do more than half anyway. A mother may bring up a girl alone quite creditably, but a father must have a hand with the son. And fathers are SHIRKING.

Then What?

"Another side of the question. Why do men shirk fatherhood? Oh, I know most every man WANTS TO HAVE CHILDREN. But after he gets them, then what? First, his is the sexual delirium, then the pleasure of anticipation, later real plans and the joy of possession, MINUS THE RESPONSIBILITY. For the mother, fear, dread, pain, agony, worry, an ever-present sense of responsibility—can this be offset by the pleasure of possession?

"We mothers are working ALONE to bring up our little men and women. Ever since the time of Adam, man has shifted responsibility of everything except the bread and butter side of the question. All too often the mother has her half of this responsibility thrust upon her also.

"Yet your cry is for MOTHERS to do their duty better. What in the world do you expect of the men? If men had the race responsibility laid at their door, the whole world would undergo a revolution. Men are only BIG CHILDREN—and they OUGHT to be MEN. Then they read your pleas to WOMEN and they begin to see where their own wife, the struggling mother of a band of seven or eight tots, is deficient; and straightway she is belittled in their eyes and they pat themselves on the back for doing THEIR duty. Dear knows, the male man is already an egotist, already a spoiled child, without anything a noted woman can write to make him more so.

"We must better the FATHERS to better the race.

"I would like to see you plead with men for better manhood, true fatherhood, and for the subduing of the much abused, too much indulged sex element, which is in itself a great cause of unwelcome babies and woman's rebellion against motherhood. We want to plan our babies as we would any other grand piece of work, and we can NOT do this until our husbands have become enlightened—have learned control along this line.

"Respectfully yours,

"ELVA D. KELLOG."

Mrs. Kellog has evidently failed to read many articles and verses in this column which have dealt with the subject she desires discussed.

Sex Hygienics.

It has often been urged that our preparatory schools and colleges for young men should include in the curriculum a thorough course in sex hygienics, in what is now known as eugenics, and that married men and fathers should be compelled by law to attend lectures on these subjects at least three times a year.

"Schools of Good Fatherhood" have also been advocated. As soon as a young boy is old enough to attend school he should begin his preparation for marriage and fatherhood by being taught the sacredness of his body, and the necessity to keep it clean and strong and full of healthful vigor. He should be warned of the danger which lies in obscene conversation, vulgar language or habits which could not be known by his mother and sisters. Woman should be made an object of reverence in his eyes, and any woman who is not worthy such reverence he should be taught to pity.

A Mother's Influence.

The scientific facts regarding the transmission of bad blood, made impure by nicotine, alcohol, drugs or sexual vices, should be taught him by teachers properly trained in such knowledge. Vice should be presented to him from its dangerous physical side as well as from the moral standpoint. And the innate pride every man feels in producing worthy descendants should be cultivated in him from early youth, until he as naturally protects his unborn sons and daughters from contamination as he guards himself from mutilation.

But I disagree with the bright woman when she says "The mother can do only half in bringing up a child."

A mother's influence over a child is just as much greater as her part in creating the child is longer in time than that of the father. It is not the mere sowing of the seed which makes a beautiful flower garden.

The caring for the ground in which the seed is sown, and the weeding and fertilizing and training of the plants after the sprout are what determine their vigor and perfection.

For three-quarters of a year before the human plant comes to the light the mother is molding it and influencing it with her thoughts, her habits and her physical condition.

The New Science.

For a year after it is visible its life depends upon her, not upon the father; and its first language, its first ideas, its first habits, are patterned upon the maternal plan.

This is a most important part of a child's life, and too much can not be said to make mothers realize their responsibility.

Mrs. Kellog wants the men of this generation to be talked to. That is well and good; but it is somewhat late to make these men what they might have been had their mothers begun with them in childhood. A wise, good, broad, wholesome-minded mother can make her boy exactly what she wants him to be, if she begins soon enough and is persistent and tactful in her methods—those early years of a child's life are of such vast importance in shaping his mind.

The new science of eugenics (new in its modern practical application to social problems) will make a great change in the ideas of men and women regarding domestic life and marriage relations.

The advent of women into medicine is gradually bringing a change of sentiment, and will eventually do away with some old traditions. Particularly the tradition that man can not exercise control over his passions, and that by nature he is so constituted that his immoralities are justifiable on the plea of health.

New Light on the Descent of Man

The Ancestors of Spiders and Scorpions Give Birth to the Family of Vertebrates.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE affirmation of science that apes and monkeys are our collateral relatives, sprung from the same ancestral stock, was once very offensive to many good people, some of whom still obstinately refuse to accept it. They think that it robs man of his dignity.

What, then, will they say when told that the ancestors of spiders and scorpions must now be included in the main trunk of the great genealogical tree whose topmost branch terminates, for the present, in man, and that without their intervention neither man nor monkey would have existed?

Nature Invents Backbone.

This assertion is based upon the discovery by Professor William Patten, of Dartmouth College, of the long-missing link between the vertebrate, or backboned animals, and their predecessors, the invertebrates, or animals without backbones.

Until nature invented the backbone there was no possibility of the existence of an upright animal constructed on the plan of the human skeleton. But the first back-boned animals were fishes. After the fishes came the amphibians, living part of the time in the water and part of the time on land. From the amphibians sprang the land reptiles and the birds, and from the reptiles arose the mammalians, or "mother animals," nourishing their young with their milk. The most progressive branch of the mammalians gave origin to a partially upright creature, which became the common ancestor of apes on the one hand and men on the other.

Thus the line of descent is clear from man back to the first vertebrates, the fishes. But ever since the days of Darwin zoologists have been puzzled by the question, "What animal was it that marked the change from the invertebrates to the fishes?"

There was the great "missing link" in the chain of animal life on this globe. Professor Patten believes that he has discovered this link in a curious extinct animal called the ostracoderm, which was developed out of the family of the arachnids (Greek arachne, "spider"), to which the scorpions also belong. The arachnids themselves are not vertebrates.

He Studied Scorpions.

The story of this discovery is intensely interesting. Professor Patten was led to it by observing the peculiar way in which the eyes in the embryo of a scorpion are transferred from the outside of the head to the blind ends of medium tubes projecting from the brain. This was so similar to what takes place in vertebral animals that he began to study the embryonic development of other species of arachnids, and was astonished to find the most striking resemblances with vertebrates. Among other things, he found that the brains of arachnids closely mimic those of vertebrates, both in general shape and subdivision, and in their functions.

Still, he could not conclude that the vertebrates sprang direct from the modern scorpions and spiders, because it is known that the first vertebrates were marine animals. But he remembered that the arachnids of to-day are also of marine descent, their ancestors having been marine arachnids, which flourished before any vertebrate animal had appeared. Evidently he must look for the missing link afar back in geological time.

Accordingly, he went back millions of years and fixed his suspicions upon the mysterious marine animal ostracoderm, which, although it was related to the marine arachnids, zoologists had always been puzzled to classify. He traveled wherever the fossils of this creature could be seen, and studied them minutely. But, unfortunately, all that had been collected were more or less imperfect, and his inquiry might never have been completed if he had not discovered a wonderful deposit of ostracoderms in the Devonian rocks on the shore of the Bay de Chaleur in Canada. The deposit was a small one, disclosed by the falling of a cliff. Professor Patten concluded that, millions of years ago, it had been the muddy bed of a shallow, brackish water pool, in which the animals had been trapped by the sudden running off of tide water, and had perished in a heap.

"One," he says, "in its death agony, had plunged into the mud with sufficient force to remain there, head down, in a vertical position. Others were arranged in a horizontal series, uniformly headed in a northeast direction."

Worked for Three Years.

He believes that their heads were turned against a gentle current of water, because the tops of all the fossil ferns found in the same bed were pointed in nearly the opposite direction. Was there ever so dramatic a picture of life on this earth countless ages ago? And then, to think that if these trapped creatures had been the only representatives of their kind, the great race of the vertebrates might have been extinguished in its cradle!

Many of the specimens were so perfectly preserved that the discoverer was able to ascertain the location of their principal sense organs, of their jaws, gills, stomach, etc., and their mode of locomotion, mode of feeding, and the nature of their food. For nearly three years he has worked upon these specimens in his laboratory, gradually disclosing their internal structure, until now he is able to affirm that the ostracoderm was neither a vertebrate nor an invertebrate, but intermediate between the two. In other words, it is the long-missing link, and it shows that the marine arachnids, the great-grandfather of the spiders and the scorpions, gave rise to a race of creatures in whom nature made her first experiments toward the production of a backbone, which no true arachnid was ever to possess, but which, when set erect in man, was topped with a brain that has made its possessor the master of the world and its secrets.

NEGRO FREED BUT JAILED AGAIN ON SUSPICION

Rosser Declares 'Gibbering Statements' Point Out Sweeper as Guilty of Slaying.

James Conley, self-confessed accessory after the fact in the murder of Mary Phagan, Friday was discharged by Judge L. S. Roan entirely from the custody of the State on the petition of Solicitor Dorsey.

Technically free, Conley was at once rearrested and held by the police on suspicion in the murder mystery. The action of Judge Roan constituted a victory for Solicitor Dorsey, who was fighting to prevent the authorities returning Conley to the Tower, from which he had been taken on the representation of his attorney, William M. Smith, that the negro was threatened and intimidated in the Tower.

Luther Z. Rosser, attorney for Leo Frank, made a bitter protest against the liberation of the negro, which, in the opinion of Judge Roan, was the only legal alternative of returning him to the county jail. He made a still stronger protest in a formal written statement placed on file as a record in the case.

Accuses Conley as Slayer.

In this he charged that the negro's series of "gibbering and incoherent statements," together with the attendant circumstances of the crime and Conley's subsequent actions, pointed to him as guilty of the murder beyond any reasonable doubt.

Less than ten minutes was occupied in the disposal of the case. Judge Roan did not read either the statement of Attorney Rosser or that of Attorney Smith, who submitted the reasons he wished his client kept at the police station. The dispatch with which the petition was acceded to was a complete surprise. A protracted and hard fought legal battle had been expected.

Judge Roan said he was without authority to hold the negro in the custody of the State so long as he had no formal application from either side. The Solicitor, he said, was asking for the release of the prisoner, and Attorney Rosser had characterized his statement only as a "suggestion."

Smith's Charges.

Attorney Smith's statement to the court charged intimidation, and that influences unfriendly to Conley and friendly to Frank were at the back of the movement to transfer Conley back to the jail. He alleged that neither the interests of justice nor the interests of Conley could be safeguarded by removing Conley from the police station.

Sheriff Mangum branded as an infamous lie the charge that the interests of Conley could not be safeguarded in the county jail, and had not been safeguarded. The only person involved in the charge of intimidating and threatening Conley characterized the accusation as absurd and grossly and wilfully exaggerated. He was present to testify at the hearing, but was not called.

The formality of releasing and rearresting Conley took place in front of the police station. The negro was brought to the sidewalk, where he had his freedom for about a second and was then again taken into custody.

Text of the Petition.

Mr. Rosser's paper was headed: Application of Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor General, to release James Conley from Legal Custody.

In answer to the petition and order in the above stated cause, served upon us, as attorneys for Leo Frank, w herewith answer and show cause as follows:

1. If the intention of the Solicitor General is to discharge this negro from custody because (a) he is in fact not a material witness against Frank, or (b) although he is a material witness, his integrity and character are such that he ought

Friday, the 13th, Ends Atlanta Jinx; Big Pump Working

Friday, the 13th, was a lucky day for Atlanta, viewed from the angle from which "Zode" Smith, manager of the waterworks, looked at the situation. The day brought nothing but good luck to him, and he walked into his office at the City Hall wearing a smile like unto the one worn by the gentleman in the moon.

"Why shouldn't I smile?" he asked, when questioned about the cause of his ultra-pleasant disposition. Then he answered the question: "That 10,000,000-gallon pump at the river is working to-day, the first time since last April. If you had had the same bunch of trouble lifted from you that I've had lifted from me, you'd be smiling, too."

The big 10,000-000-gallon pump not only got out of order in April, but it almost went to pieces.

VICE INQUIRY IS RESUMED BY GRAND JURY

Action Creates Surprise, as Probe Was Thought at End—R. R. Jackson on Stand.

The Grand Jury again took up an inquiry into the vice situation Friday afternoon, when a number of witnesses were called to ascertain the exact methods used by the Atlanta police department in their endeavor to stamp out vice.

The announcement that the Grand Jury would probe deeper into the vice situation came as a complete surprise, for it was stated several days ago that the Grand Jury had finished with this question.

R. R. Jackson, a former justice of the peace, now a member of the law firm of Gober & Jackson, was summoned to appear before the Grand Jury, together with John H. Gossatt, a former bailiff, who is now employed in Jackson's office.

Jackson Ignorant of Reason.

Mr. Jackson stated that he knew of no reason why the Grand Jury should call him. He admitted, however, that for many years he represented in an official capacity many women of questionable character, and that his knowledge of the residents of the tenderloin at one time was fairly accurate.

It is now thought that the Grand Jury will uncover the exact condition of vice in this city previous to the closing of the houses, for the purpose of determining whether conditions are worse now than they were at the time the houses were closed.

Many other witnesses are scheduled to come before the Grand Jury, and there is no doubt that the probe is on in earnest.

R. R. Jackson was before the Grand Jury for more than an hour. He testified at length explaining many matters relating to vice in this city and was questioned closely regarding the order of the court in granting a restraining order prohibiting the police from closing up the house of Mrs. M. P. Powell.

Mr. Jackson quoted the law to the Grand Jury, and stated that under the law the judge in the Powell case had no other alternative than to grant the restraining order. Jackson gave a great many important facts concerning vice as a general proposition. He is considered the most important witness that has been examined by the Grand Jury during the whole of the vice probe.

Washington detectives are scouring that city in an effort to locate young George Gentry, the stenographer whose affidavit that the published dictograph report was "padded" was the sensation of the controversy between Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford and Colonel Thomas B. Felder.

Gentry Not Found Yet.

Chief of Police James L. Beavers, who is in Washington, secured the aid of the District detectives to have the youth located. "Although the search has been in progress two days, it has carried the detectives no further than to locate Miss Jeannette Henning, a law clerk, who said she witnessed the affidavit without reading it or making any inquiry. Miss Henning said the paper was signed by her in room 802 of the Western Building, occupied by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

Colonel Felder said there was no especial difficulty in locating Gentry and that he would be produced to testify if the Grand Jury wanted him. He said the young man had accepted a position as stenographer for one month, and that as soon as the month was out he would return to Atlanta.

Gentry was located about two weeks ago by a Burns detective of the Washington branch. Descriptions of him had been furnished every agency in America and there was a sharp lookout in every large city.

Foreman L. H. Beck stated that the jury had determined to make an exhaustive investigation.

Life Threatened Is Charge by Wife in Petition for Divorce

A petition for absolute divorce was filed Friday with the clerk of the Superior Court by Mrs. Daisie B. Bixby from her husband, Sam E. Bixby, an expert electrician employed by the United States Government at the Federal Prison.

Mrs. Bixby alleges that her huband used profane and obscene language in the presence of the children, and that on several occasions he threatened her life.

In 1906 Mrs. Bixby filed petition for divorce, but Bixby promised to treat her better, and she withdrew the petition.

SAVAGE AND WHITE FIT FOR HOT BATTLE

Heavyweights Who Clash at the Auditorium To-night Await the Gong.

Everything is in readiness for the big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. All the boxers are on edge and some real milling is promised the fans.

Jim Savage and Sailor White, the wind-up boxers, did light work this morning and look to be in great shape for a tough bout. The promise of a Gunboat Smith match for the winner has added much interest to the fray and the ringmen are expected to try doubly hard for a victory.

Although the bout is scheduled to go ten rounds, many of the fans who have been watching the men work out the last couple of days, are looking for a knockout. Both boxers have been showing great punching power and are anxious to end the mill in a hurry.

Savage jumped on the scales this morning after taking a light workout and tipped the beam at 191 pounds. Jim says this is his best fighting weight and will enter the ring around this mark. Sailor White will outweigh his rival approximately ten pounds, as he weighed 201 pounds after taking a rub-down. Both are confident of victory.

Two other ten-round bouts will be staged. Mike Saul and Terry Nelson, the semi-wind-up boys, are also on edge for a tough scrap. This will be Saul's first engagement since attempting his come-back effort, and he promises a knockout win. On the other hand, Nelson is just as confident as his opponent.

The opening clash on the program will be a ten-round bout between Meyer Pries and Spider Britt. The two bantamweights have been rivals for years and promise to settle their grude this evening.

The first scrap will be put on at 8:30 sharp and the boxers will be on the battle-ground an hour previous to the start.

CONLEY, FREED, AGAIN JAILED ON SUSPICION

to have his liberty and be trusted to obey the subpena of this court, then considered as a witness only, he ought to be discharged and indeed he should not have been imprisoned at all. But in such case to enact the farce in the court's presence of releasing the negro and immediately return him to his wet nurses at the police station would resemble child's play.

2. But if the Solicitor believes that one of a number of contradictory statements made by this negro may, if properly preserved, be made valuable in the prosecution of Frank and that the negro may destroy its value if left free to talk, and in order to stop his mouth it is necessary that the detectives should keep him in charge, then we think we have the right to protest against any order of a court of justice that winks at such a purpose.

Release Not Considered.

3. We are constrained to the conclusion that it is not the purpose for any reason to release this negro, but, by obtaining the order here sought, continue the present illegal confinement.

4. But Frank is himself deeply interested in this proceeding. That the consent of the Solicitor and the will of the negro is all that is required to reverse the will of the law is erroneous. The State has the right in the interest of justice to put a witness in custody, but where in custody and in whose custody is of the highest importance. The law has given such custody to the Sheriff, and wisely so. The Sheriff is not a prosecutor; the jail itself is not usually a place of punishment, but a temporary place of detention. The Sheriff is supposed to stand impartially between the State and his prisoners, and may be trusted to neither coajole, threaten nor suppress testimony by third degree methods. The law never meant to place a witness who for lack of character needs confinement under the control of a partisan prosecutor.

5. That the detectives should wish to keep Conley in custody and entertain him at the city's expense is not at all surprising. They have already extracted from him extravagant, unthinkable confessions, three or four in number. To these statements they have given the widest publicity, and to the credibility of the last one they have staked their reputations and hope of place.

All Staked on Conley.

6. Upon the constancy and stability of this witness they have staked their all. They would be less than human if they did not bend all their power and ingenuity in holding him to his present statement, adding to and taking therefrom only such things as will aid its credibility.

Can any fair-minded man believe that Lanford is a fair man to be the custodian of this ignorant negro? What chance would he have to retract any lies he may have told, or if in a repentant mood he should wish to tell the truth? This negro in the city prison, in the power of Lanford, apart from all questions of truth, would be just as dangerous as Lanford would wish him to be. No one knows that better than Lanford, and no one would feel it as acutely as will this negro.

How well Lanford knows it can be seen from his interview in The Georgian of June 12. In that interview he demonstrated that he thinks he has full, unrestricted ownership of this negro. He graciously expresses his willingness for this negro to go before the Grand Jury upon such terms as he suggests. Neither the negro nor the negro's lawyer nor the Grand Jury is considered. Nor was this court to be consulted—his will and not the order of this court was to determine when and under what circumstances the negro should leave the police station.

Lanford's Power Questioned.

If Lanford vaunts in the face of jury and court his power over this negro, what must be his bearing when he deals privately with the negro himself? What chance has he to abstract a lie or add a truth to the foolish statement which Lanford approves and wishes to maintain? If this man will, when he is holding this negro under your honor's order, declare such ownership over this negro's person and movements to what length would he go if the court releases its power over him and turns him over to Lanford's unrestricted power?

6. It is just to Frank, as well as in the interest of public justice, that this negro should be detained by unbiased, fair men, whose reputations and positions are not at stake.

The law recognizes this right and has put that duty upon the Sheriff. Will there be less fairness and less decency in the county jail than in the police station? When did Lanford become a wiser, fairer, better man than the Sheriff of this county?

7. Apart from this negro's position as a witness, his detention in the custody of the detectives would be a public calamity. Many unbiased people believe this negro is the murderer of little Mary Phagan. The facts of the case, apart from his own confession, point most strongly to him as the guilty man.

Evidence Against Negro.

(a) On the day of the murder he was drunk and concealed himself in a position where he could readily commit the murder.

(b) On Monday morning he was unduly excited, so much so as to arouse the suspicions of the employees. On Saturday night after the murder he was caught hiding in his own house.

(c) When the police were in the building he was caught hiding in an obscure part of the factory, where he had no business.

(d) When questioned about this conduct, he said he would give a large sum to be a white man. When asked why, he said he could then get out of past the police.

(e) He for a long time persistently denied that he could write, and did not admit that he could until longer denial was useless.

(f) He was caught washing a shirt, a thing he had never done before, and when caught gave a foolish excuse.

Trapped Into Confession.

(g) He denied all participation in or knowledge of the crime until he was driven by the charge that he wrote the notes found near the body.

(h) On May 18 he made a signed statement outlining his actions on April 26, making no mention of the murder.

(i) On May 24 he made an affidavit. He said that on April 25, before the murder on April 26, he wrote the notes at the request of Frank, for which Frank gave him cigarettes and $2.50, and added statements about Frank's people in Brooklyn and an inquiry by Frank as to why he should hang.

(j) On May 28 Conley made a long affidavit, full of contradictions and absurdities, beginning it as follows:

"I make this statement, my second statement in regard to the murder of Mary Phagan at the National Pencil factory. In my first statement I made the statement that I went into the pencil factory on Friday, April 25, and went into Frank's office at five minutes to 1 o'clock, which is a mistake. I made this statement in regard to Friday in order that I might not be accused of knowing anything of this murder, for I thought if I put myself there Saturday they might accuse me of having a hand in it, and I now make my second and last statement regarding the matter freely and voluntarily, after thinking over the situation, and I have made up my mind to tell the whole truth, and I make it freely and voluntarily, without the promise of any reward or from force or fear of punishment in any way."

"First Confession Rambling."

(k) After this beginning he sets out with variations the writing of the notes on Saturday instead of on Friday, and in a long, rambling statement his movements at home and on Peters Street on Saturday and on Monday at the factory, most of which is wholly disconnected with the murder.

(l) On May 29, 1913, although he had already sworn that he had made "this true, full and last statement," he made another statement in which he purported to aid Mr. Frank "in concealing the body of Mary Phagan. This statement is full of contradictions and wholly irreconcilable with itself and with the known facts surrounding the murder.

(m) He closes this remarkable affidavit in the following words: "The reason I have not told this before is that I thought Mr. Frank would get out and help me out, but it seems that he is not going to get out, and I decided to tell the whole truth about the matter."

(n) These are some of the facts well known to the public and to the detectives, showing Conley's guilt. There are other powerful facts which could readily be brought before the Grand Jury.

8. These incoherent, gibbering statements will, it is believed, impress the Grand Jury if the negro Conley's case is submitted to it.

9. The Grand Jury can be trusted to scan these queer statements in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and, taken in connection with all the other facts implicating Conley, they proclaim his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt.

(10) The detectives, obsessed as they are with the assumption that Conley is a tool and not a murderer, are unfit to keep him in their sole and unlimited power. Under their protecting care Conley, instead of being left to tell the truth, will at length deceive himself into the belief that instead of being a murderer he is an unfortunate victim.

"Detectives Protecting Negro."

(11) That Conley and his counsel wish it is the best reason why it should be done. As long as he sticks to a story pleasing to the detectives or builds upon that story as additions may be needed, he is assured that the detectives will save him as far as possible from the court and Grand Jury, and will, so far as they can fix upon him no greater crime than a misdemeanor.

(12) Conley and his counsel are wise. There is for them no other hope than for the detectives to keep Conley and save him from a confession that he committed the crime, giving him immunity, provided he continues to put the guilt on Frank.

Sheriff Shows Up Smith.

Denial of practically every assertion made by Conley or his attorney, William M. Smith, regarding his jail regulations or the treatment of the negro while in the county prison, was made by Sheriff Mangum when informed of the contents of the affidavit and petitions submitted to Judge Roan.

"Smith's statements are infamous lies," said the Sheriff. "There is absolutely no foundation for belief by Conley that he was being poisoned when he was given the sandwiches. The negro lied when he said he did not eat the food. He did eat the four sandwiches. They were given to him by a reporter, who told me all about his interview. The newspaper man said he wanted to get on Conley's good side and get information for his paper. In the story he wrote he told frankly of the tactics he had used to get information.

"The regulations in the Fulton County jail are as good as those in any county prison anywhere. If Smith says that the jail is not competently guarded he is maliciously falsifying, and he knows it. We have no spies for use in matters that do not concern us, nor have we prying attendants at this jail.

"As I said before, Smith's assertions are too preposterous to take heed of."

Intimidation Charged.

Conley's attorney, William M. Smith, in a petition accompanying the negro's affidavit, declares that the county jail is scantily guarded and that prison regulations were extremely lax.

"The county prison has at times but one guard inside its walls," the petition declares; "it is a physical impossibility for this deputy to be at all points and know what is going on; that the actual custody of the prisoners is placed in the hands of trusty prisoners, some of whom are absolutely unreliable; that deponent visited James Conley at the county prison and that it was difficult for any thing to be done or said without the espionage of these trusty prisoners, who were overly anxious to know the character of deponent's connection with Conley's case.

Smith Sees Bias.

"That deponent talked with a man who, he is advised, is of Jewish extraction and who deponent believes is doing all he can reasonably to place the blame for this crime on his client (Conley), and who is desirous of seeing the defendant (Frank) cleared; and this man admitted to this deponent that he did visit the cell of said Conley and offered him sandwiches and promised whisky and however he specifically disclaimed his being the party who had threatened said Conley at a later hour, and stated that the sandwiches and whisky were offered in good faith with no intention to harm Conley, that the identity of this party is known to deponent and can be given the court upon request; that knowing the conditions as they exist at the county jail, deponent declares that the ends of justice will not be served by detention of James Conley at the county prison, but that same will be materially harmed and damaged."

Conley Repeats Charges.

Conley, in his affidavit, declared that during his stay in the county jail he was constantly being menaced by persons whom he suspected of the intention to poison him.

"Affiant swears that he was visited by numerous persons, strangers to him, while he was held in the county prison," the affidavit reads; "that deponent was visited by a young man at one time who appeared to be of Jewish descent, who offered this deponent sandwiches to eat; that deponent did not eat the sandwiches, for fear of being poisoned; that late in the night, after the lights had been turned out, a man came to the cell of deponent and struck a match and looked in and asked deponent if he did not know he would be hanged; told deponent that he was telling a d—d lie on Frank, and would be hanged sure as h—l; asked deponent if he did not know he could shoot him in his cell, if he was a mind to do so; that on account of the darkness deponent was unable to find out who this was; that the only desire of deponent is that he be given protection and be in hands of sworn officers of the law and not turned over to any prisoner or to 'trusty turnkeys' where there is any possibility for this deponent to be harmed in any way."

Slap at Sheriff.

Conley, in answer to the rule nisi, further attacks the regulations at the county jail, and the treatment accorded him in that institution:

"Respondent is advised that the keys to practically all of the cell blocks are carried by 'convicted criminals,'" the answer states; "that owing to this condition, men have been known to saw through steel bars and cages and escape.

"That this respondent was imprisoned while in the county jail directly over the cell block in which said defendant (Frank) is detained; that this respondent is advised and believes that the Sheriff of this county publicly proclaimed that the defendant looks him in the eye like an innocent man."

Release and Rearrest.

A dramatic moment attended the release and rearrest of Conley Friday morning in connection with the working of the court's order that the negro be given his liberty.

Chief of Detectives Lanford appeared at the door of Conley's cell at 11 o'clock.

"Well, Jim," said the Chief, "I am going to release you."

The negro received this statement with a look of fright, but was silent as well as bewildered.

Taken from his cell, Conley was led by the Chief through the sergeant's office and to the side door of the police station, which opens into an alley. The negro followed his captors with silent bewilderment.

The party proceeded down the alley to the sidewalk. There a small crowd greeted the negro with curious eyes. Chief Lanford took his hand from Conley's arm. Conley was a free man.

His freedom was but for an instant, though. Before Conley could move or recover from his astonishment, Detective McGill took him by the arm.

"I will have to arrest you and take you back, Jim," Chief Lanford said.

Conley's face brightened perceptibly.

"That's all right," he smiled. "I didn't want to get out, anyhow."

Appearing opposite Conley's name now on the police register is the word "Released," and, following it, "Suspicion," the charge upon which he was rearrested.

RETAIL AVTIVITY PORTENDS BIG BUSINESS

Dealers Report Sale Increases in All Lines, With Unusually Good Collections.

Retail trade in Atlanta is making a remarkable showing. Nearly every Whitehall Street merchant reports an increase of sales over 1912, good collections and a remarkable amount of cash trade.

Were they not so cheering, the statements would be monotonous in their unanimity. Busy streets, busy clerks, and busy office forces bear out the assertions of prosperity and further emphasize the fact that the depression in New York is by no means to be taken as typical of the conditions in this city.

"I don't like a croaker," remarked F. J. Paxon. "The other day it rained. A friend, head of a conservative business, dropped in to see me. He certainly was blue.

"'Business is rotten,' he ejaculated.

"'I don't know anything about the inside of your business,' I told him, 'but I'll bet you a box of cigars that your sales are ahead of last year.'

"'I'll take you,' he remarked. 'I'll get some cigars anyhow.'

"But he sent me the box of Havanas you see on my desk. He had his accounting department run a total of his sales, and wrote me a note saying it was worth the cigars to get cured of the blues. His sales showed several hundred dollars' gain over last year, which was an excellent season.

"So it goes, all down the line. The business man and the financier get bilious. They need calomel. They need a wider viewpoint. They are too easily influenced by a rainy day or one or two complaints.

"Jones comes to me and says he can't pay his bill and wants an extension. Smith drops in next day with the same tale. Robinson has a wail of identical nature. I get depressed and decide collections are poor. In the meantime, 97 other people have paid their bills at the cashier's window and I haven't seen them. At the end of the month, I find collections up to normal.

"January, February and March brought us sales equal to the first quarter of 1912. April and May brought substantial gains. We look for continued good business."

Cunningham, of 299 East North Avenue, were married last Thursday evening at the home of the bride's parents, by Rev. Dr. H. M. DuBose, of the First Methodist Church. They are now at home at the Hotel Kimball, where they will live for a few weeks before they go to housekeeping.

Steel Trust 'Stung' $35,000,000 Worth

NEW YORK, June 13.—Testimony given to-day by Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the finance committee of the United States Steel Corporation, brought out the fact that the purchase of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company in 1907 resulted in an outlay of approximately $50,000,000 by the corporation. Gary also said the corporation expended over $14,000,000 in four years to improve the property.

Judge Dickson pointed out that the corporation had paid out approximately $50,000,000 for property valued at less than $15,000,000.

FRIENDS OF BOY FORGER SEEK HIS RELEASE

Suspended Sentence Movement Active in Behalf of Wayward Youth in Prison Here.

An effort to gain the release from prison of Paul H. VanDeusen, 19 years old, who several months ago forged a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, is being made by influential citizens throughout the United States who are active in the suspended sentence movement.

United States District Attorney Tate, of Atlanta, has received nearly twenty petitions asking that VanDeusen be given another chance.

VanDeusen several months ago lived in Atlanta with Roy Rubenstien. The two boys look much alike. Rubenstien had a postal savings account at the local postoffice. On two different occasions VanDeusen took the account book of Rubenstien to the postoffice and drew a total of $15 in Rubenstien's name.

Soon afterward VanDeusen went to Los Angeles, where he got a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company as a telegrapher. In some manner he appropriated $63 of the company's money and was arrested.

VanDeusen pleaded guilty and was sentenced to three years. The judge taking into consideration the age of the prison, suspended sentence and paroled VanDeusen back to his mother, Mrs. Susan VanDeusen, of Jamestown, N. Y. After he had been paroled in Los Angeles he was rearrested on the charge of forging a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, and arrangements were made to bring VanDeusen to Atlanta for trial.

Mexican States in South Are Seceding

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, June 13.—The long predicted secession in Southern Mexico has actually begun. Governor Manuel Castilla, of the State of Campeche, to-day formally proclaimed his State independent of the central government.

The governments of Yucatan, Tabasco, Chipas and the Territory of Quintana Roo are expected to take similar action.

A confederacy of the South probably will be formed unless the Federals are able to crush out the rebellion.

Motorcyclist Injures Bicyclist Internally

Edward Stewart, a negro, started across Marietta Street at Thurmond Friday morning to go to his work at the Stein Junk Company's plant.

C. A. Cabe, a Southern Railway switchman, who was riding his motorcycle at a high rate of speed down Marietta Street, failed to see the negro and his machine knocked Stewart down and injured him internally. He was taken to Grady Hospital, where his condition was stated to be serious.

A charge of speeding was lodged against Cabe.

Chicago Fan Dies in Hal Chase's Defense

CHICAGO, June 13.—Fred J. Porter fell dead while in the midst of a heated argument with baseball fans over the trading of Hal Chase by the Yankees to the White Sox.

Herman Schweitzer and J. B. Willet told Porter that Chase was the Yankees' "hoodoo," and the Sox would land in the "cellar" before the season was over.

Porter grew excited in his defense of Chase, staggered into a chair and died.

Ice Man Fights Tax; Denies He's Peddler

J. H. Crane, an ice dealer, filed a petition with the Clerk of the Superior Court Friday against Tax Collector A. F. Stewart, preventing him from enforcing the collection of $50 as a special tax for delivering ice.

Crane claims that he is not a peddler, as he has his regular customers and does not solicit business from house to house, and is not liable to this special tax.

Lucky '13' Follows President Wilson All of Hoodoo Day

WASHINGTON, June 13.—As usual, the fatality of the number 13 followed President Wilson on this Friday, June 13. The President awoke this morning to the realization that this was his "lucky day."

The hands of the simple alarm clock which serves to awaken the Chief Executive pointed to 7:13 o'clock as he arose. Exactly one hour later the President sat down to breakfast, and 9:13 marked his entrance to the executive offices, where he found that Joseph Tumulty (13 letters) had placed 13 roses in his vase.

Thirteen names in connection with the Industrial Commission were presented by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, who arrived at 10:39 (add the figures). The cabinet session was unusually late, it being 11:13 before the President called the meeting to order, noting that five of the men assembled (William J. Bryan, Franklin K. Lane, David C. Houston, William Wilson and William McAdoo) each had 13 letters to his name.

Observance of Flag Day in State Urged By D. A. R. Regent

A request that the citizens of Georgia observe Flag Day, Saturday, June 14, has been made by Mrs. S. F. Foster, State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She asks that flags be displayed on all public buildings, school houses and private residences, and that every man show his patriotism and loyalty in this way. Flags will be displayed on every building belonging to Uncle Sam, both in the United States and in his island possessions.

Saturday is the 136th anniversary of the adoption of the Stars and Stripes as the flag of the American Republic. Years ago the D. A. R. started an agitation to have the anniversary celebrated each year with a display of the flag, and their efforts have met with much success. Last year practically every city and town in the country was literally alive with flags, and this year it is hoped that the citizens will again show their patriotism.

Normal Weather Is Promised Again if Jinx Doesn't Tamper

Friday the Thirteenth promises to be notable for at least one good thing. Unless the Jinx has fooled with the Weather Man's instruments, the day will go down in history as the day on which Old Man Winter gave up the fight and Kid Summer came into his own.

Saturday will be even warmer, and if the weather runs on schedule the thermometer will reach 85 or 86. Sunday, unless all indications fail, will be one of those sticky June days that are prayed for in December and cursed when they arrive.

Horse Guards Give Last Dance Before Annual July Outing

A reminder of the summer encampment, always a memorable occasion with the Governor's Horse Guards of Atlanta, came Thursday night in the dance of that organization held in Taft Hall. The members of the Guards will go soon to the coast for their annual outing, and the dance was given as the final social gathering before their departure.

More than 100 couples were on the floor of Taft Hall, all of them loyal to the Horse Guards, talking of the Horse Guards, singing of the Horse Guards. The dance was an informal hop, at which no uniforms were worn, and where, with the camaraderie which marks the organization, a private was as good as a non-com, and a non-com as an officer.

PLAN BOULEVARD ON IVY, TRACKS ON PIEDMONT

Council Committee and Arkwright Tentatively Agree to Scheme to Ease Congestion.

Ivy Street for a boulevard and Piedmont Avenue for double track car service was the plan tentatively favored by the street railway committee of the General Council and President P. S. Arkwright, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, Thursday afternoon.

Pending grading and repaving, Ivy Street has been stripped of car tracks. It is the desire of the street railway committee to keep the tracks off, making the street an unobstructed boulevard, and to compensate the street railway company for loss of is Ivy Street franchise by permitting the laying of double tracks on Piedmont Avenue.

President Arkwright agreed this scheme would be advantageous to the street railway company as well as to the city.

The double track service on Piedmont would extend from East Pine Street to Decatur. It would take care of traffic from all of North and Northeast Atlanta, affording relief from congestion to Pine Street.

The Ivy Street boulevard proposition came up when President Arkwright asked the Street Railway Committee for two franchises, one on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer, and one on Ivy Street from Edgewood to Auburn. These franchises are for short rights-of-way, designed to facilitate ingress and egress to and from the car barns.

It was when this request was made that George H. Boynton, chairman of the Street Car Committee, made known the desire of the committeemen to convert Ivy Street into a boulevard and divert street car traffic to Piedmont.

This plan would include the short franchise sought by the street car company on Piedmont from Decatur to Edgewood. President Arkwright signified that the plan would be acceptable to his company, but he wanted further time before agreeing.

Owners of property on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer Streets object to the new plan, but the Street Car Committee thinks they must yield for the benefit of the whole city.

Council to Consider Tax Office Reform

An amendment to the city charter consolidating all the departments of the tax office and placing them under the City Assessors has been put through the Tax Committee by Alderman James R. Nutting.

The amendment is said to have been proposed because of friction between the three Assessors and G. B. Beauchamp, Chief Clerk and Tax Receiver. It will be considered by Council Monday afternoon.

DIES WATCHING SENSATIONAL MOVIE FILM

Heart Failure Takes Off C. G. Maner, Drug Company Collector, in Picture Theater.

C. G. Maner of 386 South Moreland Street, a collector for the Elkin Drug Company, died in the Alcazar Theater Friday morning about 10:30 o'clock as he was watching a picture advertised as "hair-raising incidents, cleverly woven into an astounding story of jungle terror." Death is believed to have been due to heart failure, as Maner left his office Friday morning apparently in the best of health and spirits.

Maner took a seat in the theater in the third row, left, near the back. No one noticed anything unusual until 10:30 o'clock when a spectator, passing up the aisle, reported to the office that a man was "snoring" on the third row. The doorkeeper responded and shook the man to wake him up.

Dead When Removed.

The man who later proved to be Maner, was found to be dying. Manager Jackson says he believes he was dead when the doorkeeper reached him, as his eyes were glassy and his mouth open.

The dead man was taken to Patterson's, where he was identified as C. G. Maner, by means of a collector's card in his pocket.

The family, consisting of wife and one daughter, Mrs. Dr. Warnock, were notified immediately.

In Best of Health.

Maner, apparently, had no warning of the end. He left Elkin's drug store Friday morning in buoyant spirits, according to T. E. Jennings, assistant manager, who said he joked with Maner just before he left about 8:30 o'clock.

Maner, according to Mr. Jennings, told him Thursday night how fine he felt. Maner was about 55 years old and had been employed by the Elkin Drug Company about three years.

Autos on Peachtree Disturb Man's Sleep

Edward McDowell, 647 Peachtree Street, complained to Assistant Chief of Police Jett Friday morning that he can not sleep at night because of the unearthly noise made by automobilists who pass his domicile.

They run with their mufflers wide open, McDowell declared, and they violate every known automobile law. He declared that "while Atlanta may be tight in other respects, it is a wide-open town when it comes to automobile mufflers."

He characterized the autoists as "road hogs."

Boy Slayer, 14, Given Sundae at Cell Door

JOLIET, ILL., June 13.—Before Herman Coppes, aged 14, entered the State penitentiary here he was taken to an ice cream parlor, where he ate a chocolate sundae—probably the last he ever will have. Half an hour later he had entered on the first day of a life sentence for the murder of Mrs. Maude Sleep and her two children, of Elgin, Ill.

He was given his first long trousers—part of the convict uniform—and to-day he will be assigned to work.

Hot Race on for Presidency of Georgia Senate

Allen and Anderson Both Claim Victory Is Sure

Claims of Pledged Votes Are Heard With Doubtful Ears by Political Experts.

The most interesting race for political office in Georgia is the contest between John T. Allen, Senator from the Twentieth District, and J. Randolpr Anderson, Senator from the First District, for the Presidency of the Georgia Senate.

Both men claim to have sufficient votes already pledged to elect, but the impression is that neither man really has.

There are quite as many men willing to bet on Allen as on Anderson. Each has his avowed following in the new Senate, but not nearly enough Senators to elect either are talking right out loud in meeting.

Senator John T. Allen, who represents the Twentieth District.

Senator J. Randolph Anderson, of the First District.

Judge Allen is a former member of the Senate. He is one of Middle Georgia's best known and most prominent attorneys. He is a fine parliamentarian, a good mixer, and a man of poise and common sense.

Mr. Anderson is one of South Georgia's best known attorneys. He has been a member of the House several times, is skilled in political diplomacy, and is known as a most resourceful man in the gentle game of politics.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the last House, and took a very prominent part in its proceedings. He long ago announced his candidacy for the Presidency of the Senate, and was named Senator in the elections last fall, without opposition, and with the distinct understanding that he was to be in the race for the Senate Presidency.

Judge Allen likewise was named Senator from his district, without opposition, but did not enter the race for the Presidency until after his election to the Senate.

Both men have secured headquarters in the Kimball House, where things will be kept on the jump until the contest is decided.

As between Allen and Anderson personally, there seems to be very little room for choice.

Politically, moreover, they have not been avowed enemies, although they have differed widely on many subjects.

Besides being a practicing attorney in Savannah, Mr. Anderson has large and extensive commercial and manufacturing interests there, while Senator Allen, besides being a practicing attorney in Milledgeville, is interested in banking enterprises.

WILSON IS SCORED FOR LOBBY STAND

Senator Gallinger Styles President's Speeches "Worst Kind of Influence."

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, turned the lobby investigation into a political debate to-day when he declared that President Wilson's recent warning to business men not to cut wages unfairly or attempt to start a panic because of the tariff situation was "about the worst kind of influence I can imagine," and that the President's charge of an "insidious lobby" was "a species of lobby influence and most unfortunate."

Senator Reed asked him if the supply of inspired articles sent to the country press was not a species of lobbying. The Senator replied that it was sharp practice. He had previously upheld the right of the sugar interests to come to Washington to present their case. He did not regard this as lobbying if publicity or other legitimate means were employed.

"Then you believe that the sugar interests may make their arguments, but that the President should not?" inquired Senator Reed.

"I am sorry to see the Executive encroach upon the legislative powers," replied Senator Gallinger.

Senator Gallinger declared that anyone whose business is about to be injured has a right to protect himself. He also stated he knew of no particular case of coercion, and that he had no interest in the tariff bill.

PROBE BEGUN OF JUDGE SPEER'S RECORD

Inspector of Department of Justice in Macon Investigating Official and Private Character.

MACON, GA., June 13.—The entire official record of Judge Emory Speer is being investigated by a special agent of the Department of Justice. J. T. Lewis, an assistant in the United States Attorney General's office, and a personal representative of Attorney General McReynolds, has been in Macon for a week engaged in this work.

Not only the official acts, but also the personal character of Judge Speer is also being scrutinized, with the view of determining if there is any foundation for charges of an impeachment nature.

Judge Speer is fully informed as to the purpose of the visit of Inspector Lewis to Macon.

Started by Huff Charges.

It is said that the investigation was promoted by the charges made last year by Colonel W. A. Huff, who has since been found guilty for sending to Judge Speer the letters which contained the accusations. However, the Huff civil case does not, it is said, figure to any great extent in the investigation, the probe being concerned with the judge's record for the past 28 years. Inspector Lewis has interviewed numerous Macon attorneys, court officials and citizens, and he has begun the taking of affidavits. Newspaper files are also being consulted.

District Attorney Alexander Akerman declines to make any statement as to the investigation, referring inquirers to the Attorney General for information. Mr. Lewis also refuses to discuss the assignment.

Not Opposed by Bartlett.

It is believed here that Congressman Bartlett was approached by the Department of Justice with regard to the investigation of Judge Speer, and that he did not oppose it.

Colonel Huff states that regardless of the activity of the Department of Justice he is proceeding with his plan of petitioning Congress to investigate charges which he will make against Judge Speer. He says that his charges have slight connection with his case, but deal almost altogether with other acts which he imputes to Judge Speer. Colonel Huff is expecting a visit from Inspector Lewis, and he says he will freely give the special agent all information that he has in his possession.

The disclosure that Judge Speer is under fire has caused a genuine sensation here.

Mrs. Dodd's Will Upheld by Judge

Efforts to break the will of Mrs. Barbara Dodd, who bequeathed the bulk of her $120,000 estate to Mercer University, received a check by the decision of Judge Wilkinson Friday which sustained the validity of the wealthy woman's bequests. Unless a compromise is effected the case will be further contested before a jury in Superior Court.

The relatives represented in their caveat that Mrs. Dodd was led to give away most of her fortune to the university because she was afflicted by the hallucination she had been wronged by them.

Special Underpass Meeting Saturday

Special conference on plans for closing the underpass in Forsyth Street bridge will be held in the City Hall Saturday morning at 11 o'clock. J. W. Thomas, president of the N. C. and St. L., members of the special committee and others interested will be present.

The commitee recently obtained consent of President Winburn, of the Central of Georgia Railroad, for the roadway across the Central's property to be used temporarily, and now consent of the Nashville, Chattanooga and St. Louis Railroad, lessee of the Western and Atlantic, is desired.

Wilson Breaks Rule to Greet Atlantan

WASHINGTON, D. C., June 13.—J. K. Orr, of Atlanta, was the guest to-day of President Wilson, who broke his rule of "no-engagements" for the day in favor of the prominent Atlantan.

Mr. Orr stopped off in Washington en route to New York and, through Senator Hoke Smith, expressed a desire to see the President.

CAROLINA CRACK SHOT DEAD.

TIFTON IS AFTER EXPERIMENTAL BRANCH FARM

Representative Ellis Has Matter in Hand, and Scrap in Legislature Is Expected.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

A serious effort is to be made in the next Legislature to obtain a branch experiment station for South Georgia, to be located at Tifton.

Representative R. C. Ellis, of Tift County, has the matter in charge, and already claims to have made much progress with his measure.

The citizens of Tift and surrounding territory have indorsed his plan heartily, and there is a good chance that it may succeed. This is particularly true, it seems, because of recent suggestions that the agricultural station at Experiment, near Griffin, be removed to Athens.

At a meeting of the board of governors of the Tifton Chamber of Commerce a committee, consisting of Colonel R. E. Dinsmore, Briggs Carson and E. O. Hood, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions indorsing Colonel Ellis' bill, and the Chamber of Commerce will give him its hearty support in putting the measure through the Legislature.

A bill providing for the establishment of a branch experiment station at Tifton, introduced by Representative Ellis in 1911, was favorably reported by the committee, but failed of passage during the closing days of the session.

The conditions in South Georgia at the present time make an experiment station more of a necessity than ever before, in the opinion of Representativ Ellis. The approach of the boll weevil, the paralyzed condition of the Sea Island cotton market, the rapid development of fruit and nut growing and agriculture in South Georgaa, all are matters of first concern in that section.

It is not at all unlikely that Mr. Ellis' proposed bill will open the entire question of removing the present agricultural station from Griffin to Athens, and if it does, one of the very liveliest and most interesting fights of the entire session will thereby be precipitated.

Judge John Allen, of Baldwin, and Senator Randolph Anderson, of Chatham, rival candidates for the presidency of the Senate, met in the Kimball House lobby this morning and shook hands cordially.

They had occupied adjoining but not communicating rooms the night before, and had just discovered that they had been assigned to headquarters after the same fashion.

"I overheard you talking in your sleep last night, Senator," said Senator Allen, "and your soliloquy was quite interesting."

"What did I say?" inquired Anderson.

"You were petitioning the Lord to make those 25 votes you claim stick," laughed Allen.

"Well, I've got 'em—how many have you?" said Anderson.

"Twenty-seven," drawled Allen.

"Humph! That's more than there are in the Senate," mused the Chathamite.

"Well, I don't care how much you talk in your sleep, so long as you don't walk in it," remarked Allen, as he walked away.

"We seem to keep together in the matter of rooms, headquarters and claims," said Anderson, as Allen strolled away.

Muscogee County, for the first time in its history, will have three Representatives in the Legislature when the House is called to order on June 25.

Under the last census, Laurens lost its place as the junior "big six" county, and Muscogee slipped in. That entitles her to three members of the House.

As a matter of fact, however, Muscogee will have four members in the Legislature, for the Senator from that district also is a resident of the county in which Columbus is located.

Judge Henry Revill, of Meriwether, is an advocate of a board of tax equalizers.

Discussing the matter, he said: "Our present tax machinery is antiquated. It does not reach the dodgers. Burdens are unequally distributed, and should be made to bear equally upon all. The present method amounts to nothing more than passing the hat around. Almost every taxpayer gives in as little as possible, and it is well nigh impossible to make the financial buckle and tongue meet. A board of equalizers in each county would reach a lot of hidden property and force all species to pay on its proper valuation. No good reason can be urged against a board of tax equalizers in every county, and I hope to see the General Assembly provide for them. We can only meet our financial obligations by raising more revenue, and we can not—must not—raise the tax rate."

One of the members from Clarke County will introduce in the next Legislature an "anti-pistol toting" bill.

The following is the gist of the measure:

"1. It shall be unlawful for any dealer in firearms to make a sale, loan or gift of any pistol or pistol cartridges unless an application for such sale, loan or gift be presented to the dealer that has the indorsement of at least two responsible citizens vouching for the applicant's good character.

"2. It shall be the duty of the dealer to file daily a sworn statement with the chief of police a copy of each application, giving name, description, etc., applicant as well as the caliber and number of the pistol, and make; also brand and size of pistol cartridges.

"3. It shall be the duty of the dealer to include in the sworn statement that the two indorsers are personally known to him as possessing good character, etc.

"4. Providing penalty for violation."

This bill follows closely the recommendations of two grand juries of Clarke County and has been very carefully thought out.

GRADUATING GIFT WEDDING PRESENT

Stepfather Takes Roses Home to High School Girl and Finds Her Daughter-in-Law.

Thursday night of last week Marie Pate, daughter of Mrs. M. D. Mitchell, 19 York Avenue, graduated from the Girls' High School. Just two days later Miss Pate was married to Walter Kelly Mitchell, son of Mr. Mitchell, at their parents' home, Mrs Mitchell only being in on the secret.

At supper time Mr. Mitchell, two days later, came in with a belated graduation present for his fair stepdaughter.

"Here are some June roses for a graduation remembrance," he said to his stepdaughter.

"Why, they are bride roses—and just in time, too," the girl replied. "They are just the thing after our wedding."

Young Mitchell explained to his dazzled daddy that he and Marie had just been married. Mr. Mitchell was surprised, but not at all angry, for he extended his warmest congratulation to his son and his stepdaughter who turned daughter-in-law.

Young Mitchell is 24 and an auditor. His stepsister-bride is 17. They left for Asheville, where they will spend their honeymoon. Later they will be at home with their parents, step-parents and parents-in-law.

INSANITY FACES PORTER CHARLTON

Italian Prisons Seem Sure to Drive Young Consumptive Raving Crazy.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—If Porter Charlton pays the extreme penalty in an Italian prison for the murder of his beautiful and impetuous wife—and there now appears to be no hope of his escaping trial there—it is generally conceded that the highly-strung young man will be driven mad before he has been long within the gloomy walls.

Italy knows no death sentence. The Italian law does not exact one life for another. But the dread punishment that is inflicted is feared far more by the general run of criminals than the electric chair, the hangman's noose, the garrotte or any other form of execution.

The extreme sentence in Italy is life imprisonment, but this is hedged with such methods of mental torture that few who last more than a short stretch of years retain their minds. Many are driven stark, raving crazy. Charlton, with his sensitive, nervous temperament, can hardly endure the agony of mind that the Italian prisons induce.

For the first ten years of a life sentence, the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness, and in the strictest solitude, and with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most phlegmatic and unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Charlton's sole remaining hope lies in an appeal to President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. If this fails and the Italian tribunal gives him the fearful life sentence, he can only pray that the White Plague, of which he is a victim, may bring him soon to a merciful end.

Charlton, after fleeing to the United States, confessed to the killing of his wife at Lake Como, Italy, in June, 1910. She was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer, who went to the Alaskan wilds to bury the sorrow of his unhappy marriage.

COLD WAVE FLEES FROM STICKY HEAT

Weather Man's Predicted Change Arrives on Schedule Time. Temperature Rising.

The weather man's reputation for freaky stunts has been fully established at last—with one fell swoop (observe the date) Friday, June 13, he has brought upon Atlantans again that sticky, sizzling brand of weather which gives the street-corner gossipers something to talk about.

The shift from real winter to summer was indicated Thursday afternoon when the mercury went up, although not enough to bring out straw hats and uncovered peek-a-boos. Friday morning, however, saw a real change and many venturesome citizens, with brand new summer clothes, straw hats and things, looking ahead a few hours, prepared themselves for real hot weather.

It wasn't a bad guess, for the temperature rose steadily all during the morning until about noon, when it was almost normal again. The weather man says this will continue without a break—but who can tell, for it's a freaky day, and it may be just freaky weather.

SEGREGATION UP TO COUNCIL ON MONDAY

Ordinance Is Approved by Police Committee After Many Appeals in Its Behalf.

The Ashley segregation ordinance, which was passed by the Police Committee Thursday, will come up for consideration by the General Council next Monday.

The ordinance was unanimously recommended by the Police Committee after heated addresses by citizens pleading for speedy relief as a preventive of racial conflicts.

The only objection against approval of the ordinance was made by Henry A. Rucker, a negro, who formerly was a deputy internal revenue collector in Atlanta, and who is influential among his race. He told the committee negroes purchased homes in white neighborhoods only on invitation of white property owners.

Negroes Will Go to Court.

He gave warning that negroes would feel compelled to go into the courts and test the constitutionality of the Ashley ordinance.

"I don't care if we knew this law was unconstitutional, I would still insist that it pass," said Councilman Ashley, speaking in defense of his measure. "It is the same situation here which has arisen in California, and we must settle this question early or have trouble. I want to say, though, that this ordinance is perfectly legal. The City Attorney and other prominent lawyers have pronounced it free from constitutional defects."

Mr. Ashley had in mind particularly conditions in the Fourth Ward. L. C. Green, real estate man representing property holders in the Fourth, and B. Lee Smith, resident of the Fourth, who twice had been driven away by negro invasion, advocated indorsement of the Ashley measure as the only method of preventing trouble.

White and Negro Children Fight.

"Out on Johnson Avenue and other streets I could name," said Mr. Smith, "hardly a day passes but what white children meet negro children in the road and they have a pitched battle. This is only the beginning of a sentiment which is going to result in the worst race conflict Atlanta ever heard of, unless this negro encroachment upon white residence districts is stopped right where it is."

E. M. Mitchell, formerly president of the Board of Education, said the only way Atlanta could grow without passing through negro settlements, negro colleges or something else undesirable, was north and northeast, and negro invasion of these two outlets should be stopped. He termed the Ashley ordinance a police measure.

Sentiment in favor of the ordinance was so overwhelming the Police Committee announced no other speakers would be heard unless they had something new.

After an hour's discussion, the committee went into executive session and approved the ordinance unanimously.

Martin said he didn't accept it and would not have it.

FORSYTH, GA., June 13.—The elimination of Miss Raiford Sneed from the staff of teachers in the public schools of Forsyth has provoked a controversy which is just now the most engaging topic of conversation in this city. When the board meets again next week, the friends of Miss Sneed will urge that she be retained.

Fullbright Intends To End Pistol Toting

H. J. Fullbright, representative from Burke County, has prepared a measure for introduction at the coming session of the Legislature further to curtail the promiscuous carrying of firearms.

Mr. Fullbright was active in the framing and advocacy of the law now on the statute books. He now proposes to discourage "pistol-toting" still more by limiting the sale of revolvers and cartridges.

No one who has not a license to carry weapons can procure cartridges under the bill.

CHICAGO, June 13.—The police are seeking a mysterious blond man who is said to be a white slaver and who was wounded in a fight with Michael Wilson, night clerk in a downtown hotel. The police say the fugitive attempted to drag Charlotte Russell, aged 20, from her room in the hotel, having boasted that he would force her into a life of shame.

The girl screamed and Wilson ran to her room with a revolver.

ATLANTA IS MECCA FOR NEWLYWEDS

Three Couples Arrive in the City. Two Occupy Adjoining Rooms in Same Hotel.

With three newly married couples arriving in Atlanta in the past 24 hours to spend their honeymoons, local hotel men are wondering if the Gate City is to become a mecca for the honeymooners of the State.

Two of the couples—Mr. and Mrs T. G. Selman, of Rockmart, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Harding, of Douglasville, Ga.—are stopping at the Kimball. The other couple—Mr. and Mrs. Gordon Hight, of Rome—spent last night at the Piedmont, but plan to leave Thursday for an Eastern trip, returning to Atlanta within a few weeks to spend the last days of their honeymoon here.

All of the young people come of prominent families in their respective towns, and all were married Wednesday morning. They arrived in Atlanta on the same train, and two of the honeymooners, the Selmans and the Hardings, registered at the Kimball at the same time and are in adjoining rooms.

Pretty Miss Brown Guest at the White House

First Atlanta Society Girl Entertained This Year

Miss Marjorie Brown, society girl and kin of President Wilson, who is first from Atlanta to be entertained at White House this year.

Cousin of Wilson's Daughters Leaves for Week in Capital.

To live a week in the White House, at a season when the new social set of the national capital is still in the first flush of its gayety, is the delectable lot in prospect for an Atlanta girl, Miss Marjorie Brown. She left Atlanta Friday for Washington, at the invitation of President Wilson's family.

Atlanta society congratulated her with a wee bit of envy. Miss Brown is the very first of the city's social set to receive an invitation from the President's family, and the first representative of Atlanta society to be entertained at the capital since the new administration went in.

Miss Brown is a cousin of the Wilson girls, her father, Edward T. Brown, being related to the President. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have often entertained the Wilsons, during their visits to Atlanta. Years ago, when Woodrow Wilson, a brilliant young lawyer, lived in Atlanta, he was intimate with the Browns, and a friendship was formed that to-day lives warmly.

Atlanta society is proud of its first representative at the capital. Miss Brown is described as being very pretty, with a slender, blonde beauty that ... exceptionally winsome. She possesses much of the personal charm and attractiveness which made her mother one of the most admired women in Atlanta.

Her part in the gayety of the national capital will be prominent during the next week. She will be one of the guests of honor at a number of social functions, and lavish entertainment will be arranged during her visit.

Miss Brown has known the Misses Wilson for some time, and between them an intimacy has sprung up, an intimacy that was reflected in the warm tone of the invitation which came to her.

Aware of her relation to the daughters of the President, many persons in Atlanta have likened Miss Brown to the Wilson girls in the way of intellectual attainments and artistic gifts.

In Washington, Atlanta society forecasts, will capitulate to its first Atlanta guest. The popularity already achieved by the President's daughters insures a delightful visit for Miss Brown. She will return to Atlanta the latter part of the week.

A number of Atlanta men and women have been guests in the White House during the regimes gone by, and it is expected that Georgia society will be freely recognized and welcomed in Washington, with the Wilsons in the presidential mansion.

Youth Drowned in Lake at Demorest

CORNELIA, GA., June 13.—Roy Pitchford, 17-year-old son of Mrs. George Pitchford, was drowned while bathing alone in Lake Demorest. The body was recovered in five minutes, but, on account of muddy condition of the water, all efforts of physicians to revive him were fruitless.

25 Lots in Ansley Park Annex

Are Going

AT AUCTION

At this time history—real estate history—will repeat itself. Everybody knows what happened after every other auction of Ansley Park lots. Those who know say the same thing will happen again.

Thousands upon thousands of dollars were made for purchasers. Values have steadily climbed and are still climbing. This is the one section of residential Atlanta where doubt as to the future does not exist.

Ansley Park Annex has been developed in the same high-class manner which made Ansley Park famous. Every one of these 25 lots is high and overlooks Ansley Park. Many of them front on North Boulevard.

These lots are in a section within a mile or a mile and a half from three tracts which have been bought for development within the next few years by some of Atlanta's wealthiest men. It is the logical property. It has profits concealed in it.

Put the date down—Thursday, next Thursday, June 19. Remember the date as one which will increase your bank account if you attend the auction. Sidetrack every other engagement and go out. Twenty-five lots are going to make money for as many people. Be one of the twenty-five.

General Evans Praises Work of Riflemen

Pays Visit to Range With Gov. Brown

Brigadier General R. K. Evans and Governor Joseph M. Brown watching rifle shooting at Camp Evans range.

Men New in Competition Forge to Top of List in Skirmish Firing.

With Governor Brown and Brigadier General R. K. Evans of the regular army looking on, new blood took the lead in the Georgia National Guard elimination shoot at the Camp Evans rifle range in the second day of the meet. Both the first and second men are from the Fifth Regiment, Atlanta.

Oscar C. Holleran, of the Gate City Guards, forged to the front after a day of 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing, with a percentage of 259. Right behind him was J. R. Cothran, of Company D, who is competing for the first time. The "old-timers" took their drop in the standing with good grace, extending congratulations to the youngsters on their showing.

To-day the squad divided into ten teams of five men each to compete for team trophies.

New Scores To Be Added.

Individual scores will be adde to the scores already made and the 30 highest men will be selected to return to Atlanta next month, when the final elimination for the selection of a team to go to Camp Perry, Ohio, will begin.

That the team which will be developed through this shoot will be able to uphold the Georgia record is the belief of the officials who are in charge and who have witnessed the competition for many years.

Governor Brown and General Evans were delighted at the records made. General Evans spoke in high compliment of the Georgia men. He will be the chief executive officer at Camp Perry this year.

"The Georgia National Guard is wonderfully well organized," said General Evans. "The officers are men of judgment and there is a spirit of enthusiasm throughout that shows up mighty well to the regular officers. Throughout the country there has been great progress among the National Guard, and I am glad to know that Georgia is doing so well."

Visitors Given Barbecue.

Governor Brown and General Evans arrived at the range in time to witness the skirmish firing. The ten-men teams moved down the range with precision.

Following the completion of the day's shooting, the party moved to the mess tent, where the visitors enjoyed a barbecue.

Several other officers of the regular army accompanied General Evans. Among them were Colonel C. H. Barth, of the Department of the Gulf, and Colonel VanOrsdale and Major W. A. Martin, of the Seventeenth Infantry, stationed at Fort McPherson.

The 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing caused a shake-up in the standing, which was featured by Holleran and Cothran forging to the lead. Holleran is leading Cothran by but two points. Beginning of the shoot this morning, though, found the "veterans" getting down to business in their old-time form, determined to recover their lost laurels.

Following is the standing of the men through Thursday's shoot:

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Hits at Forsyth.

The bill this week at the Forsyth continues to draw the capacity of the busy theater at all performances. Bud Fisher, the cartoonist who makes the "Mutt and Jeff" pictures for The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American, will be the headline feature next week, presenting an act in which he introduces the famous characters. Fisher is one of the highest-salaried cartoonists in the world, and his vaudeville salary runs into four figures—but it is known that there is nothing too good for the Forsyth.

The other acts are all clever, and Pauline Welch, the singing comedienne, is assured of a real welcome.

A., B. & A. MAY QUIT OLD UNION STATION

Rumored That New Connection With Southern's Line Indicates Road Will Use Terminal.

Is the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad to abandon the Union Depot and hereafter use the Terminal Station?

This intimation has come through action of the Georgia Terminal Company in making a definite move for the establishment of a branch line or extension connecting the A., B. and A. between Thurmond and Newton Streets with the Southern at a point near Magnolia Street. The length of the line would be about one-quarter of a mile.

The Georgia Terminal Company passed resolutions recently touching the subject, and it is understood that the company is now waiting for permission from the Federal Court to change its charter so as to permit the extension. The resolutions provided that there should be built "a branch running from a point on its main line or extension of its present railroad between Thurmond and Newton Streets in a general southeasterly direction across Mangum Street, Newton Street, Foundry Street and Elliott Street to a connection with the Southern Railway at a point near Magnolia Street," and that "attorneys are hereby authorized to take all steps necessary for the purpose of amending this company's charter authorizing the building of this branch or extension."

Neighborhood Row Caused by Chickens

The story of a sanguinary neighborhood battle will be told in Judge Broyles' court when Clarence Barnes, his wife, Pearl Barnes, of 12 Murphy Avenue; Mrs. Annie Hicks, Mrs. Hattie Crash and Mrs. Marguerite Long, all of 15 Murphy Avenue, are tried on charges of disorderly conduct. The trial was to begin Friday.

The row started when the Barnes chickens invaded the domain of the Hicksea the Crashes and the Longs.

Officers Ryan and Head made cases against all of them.

MEN OF MILLIONS SAVED FROM SEA

Atlantic City Life Guard and Swimming Master Heroes of Perilous Situation.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13. Fourteen men of wealth, representing railroad and car building interest in the United States running into hundreds of millions of dollars, trusted their lives to the skill of Martin Harris, swimming instructor, and Abe McCullen, chief life guard, when the steam launch Naushon stranded in shoal water last night, three miles off Rhode Island Avenue.

In the party were W. J. Coons, vice president of the Illinois Central Railroad; C. W. McDaniels, a New York corporation lawyer; A. F. Bedell, a Pittsburg steel magnate; A. W. Hubbard, of Kentucky, brother of the owner of the boat; Robert Mason, steel car manufacturer of Pittsburg, and B. F. Markley, a New York railroad man.

They were loud in their praise of Harris and McCullen. The latter left the beach in their risky craft at 8:30 o'clock after the Naushon had begun to blow a whistle and brighten the ocean with flashes from her powerful searchlight. At ten minutes before midnight they had the 14 men safely ashore, having made two separate trips to the yacht and rowed 12 miles through a choppy sea and a highly dangerous surf.

HERITAGE TAX IS PLAN OF SOLONS

At Least Two Members of Legislature Will Offer Scheme for Raising More State Money.

At least two legislators—Representatives W. F. Slater, of Bryan County, and H. H. Swift, of Muscogee—will introduce in the Legislature this summer a bill imposing a tax on inheritances. Advocates of the measure, which is not new in Georgia, will wage a vigorous fight for its passage, it is said.

The Slater bill will provide a tax on collateral inheritances only, leaving direct inheritances exempt, while Mr. Swift's bill imposes a tax on all inheritances in excess of $1,000.

The inheritance tax advocates claim there is reason for such a levy as the constitutional limit of 5 mills, reached in ad valorem taxation, has placed the General Assembly in a quandary as to how to raise sufficient revenue. The proposed income tax, they say, is a dead letter now that the sixteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution has been ratified.

Comptroller General W. A. Wright disagrees with the plan, saying the time is not ripe. If such a bill is passed, he says, the minimum amount taxed should be $50,000.

See What a Charming Waist One Dollar Will Buy Before One o'Clock Saturday

We know they are the prettiest of the season—and so will you the moment you see them.

Yes, by comparison they are worth more than their Saturday price.

Included are little tailored waists, with low round collars—perhaps the collar is embroidered a bit, the front tucked or plaited—these of dimity or a lightweight linene—all white.

Then there are the sheer batiste waists with dainty laces—Valenciennes, cluny and imitation Irish—and with embroidery that looks much like hand work on the front.

Then again we have the tailored shirts that travelers will want by the twos and threes—these of striped percales and brown linens.

Indeed, a remarkable collection of waists for $1.00.

ATLANTANS WILL WITNESS CANAL OPENING

Plan Trip as Members of Commercial Congress, Which Will Send Big Delegation.

Many of Atlanta's most prominent and progressive business men discussed Friday a trip to the Panama Canal Zone. Louis C. Irvine, of Mobile, general director of the Panama Canal celebration of the Southern Commercial Congress, was in this city Thursday outlining the trip and telling of a gigantic celebration in Mobile preliminary to sailing.

One thousand members of the Southern Commercial Congress, with many business men, will meet at Mobile the last week in October. The Latin-American trade tour, limited to 50 selected guests, who will visit the chief Latin-American States for 90 days to give thorough study to commercial conditions, will there be organized.

The route of the party has been changed because of slides in the Culebra cut, which delayed the opening of the canal. The travelers will leave Mobile about October 25, reaching the Isthmus before November 1, the date set for the official opening of the canal.

After the ceremonies at Panama, the travelers will touch Pyta, Colon, Eten, Pacasmayo, Salavery and Callao, Peru, and from Callao by train to Lima. They will leave Lima for inland points and thence back to Callao. Mollendo, Arequto and Guayaquil, thence to La Paz, Bolivia; Antofagasto, Chile; Coquimbo, Valparaiso, Santiago, Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, Montevideo, Uruguay; Santos, Brazil, and Rio de Janeiro. They will sail from Rio de Janeiro; call at Bahia, Trinidad, Barbados, and will arrive at New York about Christmas.

It is expected that after attending the opening of the canal many of the travelers will return direct.

A permanent memorial of the completion of the canal is proposed by the Southern Commercial Congress as an outgrowth of the convention in Mobile. Prizes of fifteen complimentary appointments as honor delegates and guests of the convention to the Panama Canal and the trip with the Latin-American expedition are offered for the best suggestion for this memorial.

These prizes are offered to arouse study on the question and bring in suggestions of a proper form for a permanent memorial. The selection of the form is left to an official jury, comprising Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, chairman, and Hon. John Barrett, Director General of the Pan-American Union.

Asa G. Candler and Harvie Jordan, of Atlanta, are directors of the congress, which includes some of the most prominent men south of the Mason and Dixon line.

If a Jinx Seems Following You---Remember It's Friday 13, 1913 Can't Happen Again in 100 Years

Mr. Business Man Wakes Up and Finds Everything Has Gone Wrong on Hoodoo Day.

Mr. Peach, of Peachtree, got up this morning, stepped on a tack, found two holes in his new silk socks, lost his collar button down the hot-air radiator, bumped his head on the chiffonier when he stooped to look for the button and came down to breakfast with a grouch.

"The cook has quit and the gas stove's out of fix and the milkman left a quart of milk too sour for your cereal," announced Mrs. Peach, pleasantly, or nearly so. "And there's a hat sale on at the Emporium and I need $38.49 for that, and the sleeping porch must be rescreened, and I've found my last year's matinee gown positively won't do another season.

"And the chauffeur says you can't drive in this morning, for the car has broken its galliwampus and needs a new set of gears, three tires, a coat of paint and a cylinder made over.

"Well, John, I'm sorry the bacon isn't edible, but you must remember you didn't marry a cook. That's right, run off without kissing me!"

Mr. Peach missed the trolley, had to wait for the next one, and struck a crowd. A fat man stepped on his pet corn, the conductor jabbed him in the ribs and urged him to move inside, and a baby smeared molasses candy over his summer suit.

He stubbed his toe stepping into the elevator; broke his new straw kelly trying to be polite when a woman got in; was carried three floors past his own, and then found he had left his office keys in his other clothes. He dropped to the basement, climbed to the roof and finally found the janitor with a master key Mr. Peach was firmly convinced something had hoodooed him. At last he opened his desk. Three things stared him in the face. A summons for jury duty, a notice of overdraft at his bank, and his calendar pad. And on the latter was inscribed:

FRIDAY,
13th,
Nineteen-Thirteen.

It won't happen anything like that for 100 years, and maybe not then.

Health Restored by Eckman's Alterative

If you are a sufferer from Glandular Tuberculosis, or know of anyone so afflicted, it might be well to investigate this case, where the writer declares after a year of suffering, he found permanent relief and full recovery to health by using Eckman's Alterative, a medicine which has been effective in many cases of Tuberculosis:

257 Laruston St., Phila., Pa.

"Gentlemen: In March, 1909, my doctor pronounced my case 'Tuberculosis in the Glands,' and a number of operations in a hospital failed to benefit me. In the meantime, a friend of mine advised Eckman's Alterative. The wounds in my neck were still open and in a frightful condition when I started to take it. After using two bottles I found I was improving, having gained weight, could eat and was able to sleep. I continued using it until I was well, which was in November, 1910. Before I took the medicine I had three hemorrhages; since I have been taking it I have not had any. On November 11, 1910, I started to work, and since that time I have not lost one day's work through sickness. I highly recommend Eckman's Alterative to anyone who is suffering from Gland trouble."

(Affidavit) JOSEPH B. WHITE.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

PLAN CORN PRIZES FOR POOR FIELDS

Boys Forced to Plant Grain in Unfertile Land to Get Recognition in Show.

A new series of prizes, planned for the benefit of boys who are compelled to plant grain in unfertile land, will be offered at the annual corn show under the auspices of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The show again will be held in the corridors of the State Capitol.

While the new awards will not affect the regular prizes, they are designed to lift the "poor land handicap" under which many have been laboring.

The new prizes are offered for the greatest proportionate increase an acre, and are expected to serve the purposes of increasing the interest in the show, and in inducing the boys to cultivate their land and make it better. Many boys last year planted in bad land and showed splendid increases in the volume of grain. They were not given prizes because their best efforts were not equal to the normal yield of the richer lands.

The show committee of the Chamber of Commerce has begun its work and will hold meetings at intervals through the summer. It is planned to make the next show the best in the history of the State.

U. S. POLO PLAYERS STILL 2-TO-1 BET

Little English Money Is in Sight Despite American Team's Best Player Is Disabled.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The American and British polo teams to-day went through a light practice in final preparation for their second battle, which will be staged to-morrow on the Meadowbrook, N. Y., grounds.

The Americans, despite the fact that J. Monte Waterbury, star of Tuesday's game, will be unable to play, are 2 to 1 betting favorites. There is little English money in sight.

Louis E. Stoddard, who will replace Monte Waterbury, is a player of exceptional ability, and it is felt by the American polo enthusiasts that he will be a fit substitute. Stoddard will play No. 1; Larry Waterbury, No. 2; Harry Payne Whitney, No. 3, and Devereaux Milburn, back.

The line-up of the Britons will be the same as Tuesday, although there has been some rumors that F. M. Freake would play at No. 2 in place of Captain Edwards.

Practically every reserved ticket for the game to-morrow has been sold. Speculators are said to have secured a big bunch of choice seats and are demanding—and getting—fancy prices for them.

Only Two Decatur Children Failed To Attend School

Decatur probably is the only town on the Georgia map that really does not need a compulsory education law, as proposed by Representative Fullbright, of Burke County, for there are only two children between the ages of 6 and 14 that have not attended school during the past 12 months, an investigation just completed shows.

And this is not all—Decatur hasn't a single illiterate white child and she has a hundred more school children than any other Georgia town of equal size. A building permit for a new school building, costing $22,000, has been issued, also.

These and other things, indicative of Decatur's progressiveness, including statement of Decatur's building record increase of 35 per cent over last year, are being scattered broadcast by the Decatur Board of Trade, which is one of the livest organizations of its kind in the State.

MAYOR ISSUES FLAG DAY ORDER

Woodward Wants Old Glory to Float From Public Buildings on 136th Anniversary.

Mayor James G. Woodward Friday issued a Flag Day proclamation, ordering custodians of public buildings to fly the colors Saturday and requesting owners of private structures with flagstaffs to issue similar orders.

In addition to an autograph copy of the proclamation, every manager, superintendent or custodian of public buildings to-day received telephone messages apprising him of the Mayor's wish.

Following is the Mayor's Flag Day proclamation:

"Tomorrow, June 14, 1913, being the one hundred and thirty-sixth anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the flag of this country, it is but meet and proper that every patriotic and liberty-loving citizen of this country should do that flag honor.

"It therefore is ordered that the flag be hoisted on all public buildings of this city, and it also is requested that all citizens owning buildings or controlling same, with flagpoles upon such building, are requested to display the national colors."

LONDON, June 13.—Members of the British ministry, accused of irregular connections with the British Marconi Company during negotiations for a Government contract with that enterprise, were exonerated to-day in the report of the parliamentary committee which for about six months has been investigating the accusations.

The members involved were Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd George and Attorney General Sir Rufus Isaacs. Both admitted having bought shares of the American Marconi Company for investment, but denied dabbling in stocks of the British Marconi Company at a time when they had "inside information."

Indirect accusations were brought against First Lord of the Admiralty Winston-Churchill and by innuendo other members of the Cabinet were impugned. Another report likely will be issued later.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS reading a piece in the paper," said the Head Barber, "about a rich young girl that had a Vassar education, and that married a man who couldn't read nor write. She taught him so much in five years that he became the president of a bank the other day and is the leading citizen of his town."

"He must have been a awful bright man or else she was some teacher," declared the Manicure Lady. "I have heard of cases like that, but I never seen one. It always sounds kind of fishy to me, because even after a man has went to school a few years he finds out that there is plenty he can learn from his wife. Anyhow, I'd hate to marry a man that didn't have no schooling at all. Of course I would be willing to learn him what I was learned at school, like arithmetic and grammar and history, but I should think it would be a kind of a nuisance to be a wife and school teacher at the same time."

"It ain't a man's fault if he never had no opportunities," said the Head Barber. "I know a lot of bright men that never went to no school or college."

Not So Sure.

"I know," said the Manicure Lady, "but I don't like to think that after waiting all these years I might have to marry a illiterate man. Of course, if he was handsome and accomplished and rich I wouldn't expect him to know all about Greek and Latin, because I ain't sure myself just when Oliver Goldsmith made so much trouble for King Charles of England, or when Cromwell crossed the Alps to fight the Romans under Lord Napoleon. I don't think any girl ought to expect her husband to know and remember all about them old classics, especially if he is busy getting the money to keep up a apartment in Atlanta or Chattanooga. All I want my husband to know is to be able to talk intelligent in a cultivated crowd, and not set around murdering no queen's English. And I think a husband ought to have some kind of accomplishment like playing the piano or making a good after dinner speech or knowing pinochle good enough to hold his own with the Germans. I wouldn't like to marry a man that never did nothing but grub out a living."

"The wife has got all the accomplishments in our family," said the Head Barber. "I never had much chance when I was a kid to do anything except get up when the alarm clock rang in the morning, so I didn't get into music or golf or any of them fine arts. All the fun I get is a day off once in a while to go to the ball game, and I guess the wife must think I'm a kind of ordniary guy alongside some of the friends I invite to the house. She is musical and a good pianist, and some of the fellows I know can spiel a lot themselves, so I just sit back and let them shine."

Some Compliments.

"I'll bet you are a dear, good husband, just the same," said the Manicure Lady. "You don't need no accomplishments, George, to stand a lot higher with me than some of the actors and boy comics that comes in here to have their nails did. I never liked the way you keep doping out them race horses, and I smelt something like a highball when you blew in the other morning, but there's a lot more good in you than most men, George, and that's no salve, either. I don't think I'm a very poor picker, George, but if you was single I'd say ya mighty swift when you proposed."

"If I was married to anybody else except the missus," said the Head Barber, "I'd wish I was single. You are going to make some lucky guy a swell wife. Gee, we're getting along great this morning, ain't we?"

See Them, Too.

Club Woman—If you come to our meeting you'll hear some plain things.

Male Thing—Oh! And see them, no doubt.

A Conundrum.

"Look here," said the landlord; "why don't you pay your rent?"

"I give it up," replied Slowpay.

"But you don't," insisted the landlord; "that's what I'm kicking about."

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Cain, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly. comes upon Gordon Kelly. In the meeting each learns of the other's love. Kelly is sought everywhere by the press.

Now go on with the story.

"You may not realize it, Miss Deery, but you have just told me a very important piece of news. It will create a big sensation all over the country. My paper was crazy about it. They're getting out an extra on it."

"Don't forget our bargain," said Mildred, with a smile.

"Absolutely no," declared Farnsworth with fervor. He was pretty well pleased with himself. He had unearthed, through his own efforts and without aid, the biggest piece of news of his career. He had visions of a substantial cash present and a raise in salary from his boss. This pleasing thought reminded him that he hadn't smoked a cigarette in 20 minutes. He asked and received permission to smoke.

"This is pretty soft," he said to himself as he threw away the match. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia, having a cracking big piece of information handed to me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it? I guess this isn't my lucky day."

But business is business, and Farnsworth proceeded to it after three or four puffs of his cigarette.

"Now, Miss Deery," he said, "please tell me the rest of the story."

"Gordon Kelly has lived in this neighborhood all his life," began Mildred. "After he left the hospital he came up here. I met him one day while I was fishing in the brook. I hadn't the faintest idea that he was within a hundred miles of here. I didn't even know at the time that his home was near here. My father built this bungalow recently and I think my parents wanted me to come here on account of what the papers said about me, or, rather, to escape the embarrassment I had brought on myself. At any rate I came up and found everything so delightful and so cool and nice that I have stayed here ever since.

Then Disappeared.

"Well, anyway," she continued after a pause, "you want to know about Mr. Kelly. As I said, I was very much surprised when I saw him here. I think it was the last part of May. I saw him quite often for several weeks. My mother came up again—she is here now—and there was a little tel boy here, the son of my father's superintendent, and we all used to go fishing and tramping around. Mr. Kelly was good company and he knew every inch of the mountain country.

"One afternoon, late in July, Mr. Kelly started off on a walk along the brook that runs near where he lives—I get this from the people at his home—and about half an hour after he started out a cyclone swept along the edge of that brook and from that day to this Mr. Kelly hasn't been seen."

"Was he killed?" asked Farnsworth. "A good many people around here think so, but I don't. Something tells me he is alive and well and will turn and it is sure that he didn't perish in the storm. That's all I know about the appearance and disappearance of Mr. Kelly, Mr. Farnsworth," said Mildred in conclusion.

The young man arose from his chair and went to the telephone again. He was gone fifteen minutes.

"I want to thank you for all this information, Miss Deery," he said. "But I want to warn you that there will probably be a score of reporters up here to-morrow. I would advise you to keep under cover—return to Atlanta, maybe; otherwise, you will be annoyed a whole lot. While I have kept my promise and will continue to keep it as regards using your name, the other reporters will find out that you live near here and you will have an unpleasant time of it."

"I think that is good advice; I shall speak to my mother about it," replied Mildred.

Useless to Remain.

"I don't believe it would do any good for me to stay up here any longer. I suppose the people around here have searched for Gordon Kelly in every concelvable place?"

"They have, Mr. Farnsworth. It would be useless for you to remain, expecting any news of Mr. Kelly."

"Then I will thank you again and start for the celebrated summer resort, known as Pew Creek."

Mildred laughed as he arose to go.

"You can not get a train before 3:18. Why don't you send that Cracker back by himself and take lunch with us? I will drive you to the station in an automobile."

Clever Mildred Deery. She was so nice to the young man that he would be sure to keep his promise to her.

"Miss Deery," returned the young man, "you are not only very kind, but you are a mind reader. I accept with pleasure. If you could only have seen the meal that Jehu prepared for me this morning!"

Farnsworth settled with Case from a big roll of office money. His bill was $1.25, made up of the following items: Supper, 25 cents; breakfast, 25 cents; lodging, 25 cents; hire of horse and carriage and services of driver, half a day, 50 cents.

"I should worry," remarked the young man to himself, as Gabe Case drove away.

"This is pretty soft," said Farnsworth to himself. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia having a cracking big piece of information handed me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it?"

CHAPTER XXVII.

IT is necessary to go back and pick up the loose threads of this narrative.

When the crisis in the illness of Forrest Cain's sister had passed and she was on the road to recovery, Cain wrote Mildred that he was coming to the mountains again, and two days later he appeared where Mildred was, claiming his automobile and also claiming the fulfillment of the promise she had made him to go riding with him alone. Her mind was already prepared for this demand, so after she had learned all about his sister's condition, she expressed her sympathy and told him she would go with him that afternoon if he cared to have her.

Mildred had warned Elmer Shephard not to say anything to anyone about their meeting Gordon Kelly and she was glad she did so, as the boy appeared just as Cain was leaving. After Cain had gone the lad joined her on the porch, his face clouded.

"I don't like Mr. Cain," he declared, petulantly. "What does he want to keep coming up here for?"

"Why, Elmer," said Mildred, reprovingly, "you shouldn't talk that way. He has always acted like a gentleman, hasn't he?"

"I don't care; I don't like him just the same. Gordon Kelly is the kind of man I like. He can do something. All Mr. Cain can do is to drive an automobile and dress in fancy clothes and hang around. I heard him say he would come again at 3 o'clock this afternoon. I wish he would stay away."

Thoughts Were Busy.

Mildred made no answer. Her thoughts were busy. Elmer had said just what was in her own mind, if he only had known it. The lad's quick perception had seen through the shallow, selfish visitor. After a while she said:

"Elmer, I have promised to go out riding with Mr. Cain this afternoon in his automobile. After I'm gone, if you care to do so, you may take the runabout and drive up to the bridge and stay around there a while. I will probably see you on my way back home. That isn't very exciting, I know, but I would like to have you do it if you don't mind."

Days ago she had taught the lad how to run the car and he was now quite an expert. The request she had just made of him was the result of a vague something in her mind. It had to do with Forrest Cain and the engagement she had made with him. She almost regretted making it, yet she knew what he had to say would have to be said, so she braved herself to go through the ordeal.

In the meantime Forrest Cain was speeding toward his shack in his car. He passed the point where the road crosses the bridge and about three miles farther came to the place where a road led off to the left through the large granite posts. Every time he had passed this point Cain had observed the granite posts. He knew they must be on what was supposed to be Gordon Kelly's property. Evidently, therefore, the road led to the habitation where Kelly lived before he went to Atlanta and broke his leg. Since his personal encounter with Gordon Kelly, Cain had often thought of him in connection with his mountain home, recalling what Deery had told him about the young man's father killing himself by jumping off a mountain while crazed with liquor. The weirdness of this act had created a profound impression on Cain.

The Granite Posts.

Approaching the granite posts on this particular morning, the incident of the strange death suddenly flashed across the mind of Cain. He brought his car to a stop and gazed curiously at the pillars, which seemed to stand as guardians of a mysterious realm. He then let his gaze wander to the road which passed through the posts and was soon lost to view, winding through a fine forest of hardwood trees. The road itself was hard, firm and well made and had a top dressing of granite, ground fine, the same kind of stone the pillars were made of. Within the open gate, even the woods and the ground underneath seemed to be the recipients of care. The trees were trimmed and there were no dead branches lying on the ground. The idea created in Cain's mind was that it was the entrance to some millionaire's vast mountain estate. On Deery's maps the property was marked "Prescott Trust Company." What had Gordon Kelly to do with it all? he wondered. Where did this ball player fit in?

Overcome with curiosity, Cain started his car and turned in the road that led through the granite posts. He would investigate, he said to himself. What better chance would he have, with Gordon Kelly on his way north to join his ball club?

Cain was not a slow driver. He threw his car into high speed and raced up the winding road. The road was as smooth as a billiard table and the crunch of gravel under his tires was music to Cain's ears. He had covered more than half a mile of the driveway and there was still no sign of a habitation, when he suddenly heard the sound of a horn, followed by a sharp cry. He looked up quickly to see an automobile coming down upon him. It looked like a sure collision, but Cain gave the emergency brake a jerk and turned sharply to the right just in time to avoid a smashup. The occupant of the other car had acted in the same manner and, after missing each other by a hair, the two machines came to a stop not ten feet apart.

As soon as he had convinced himself that there had been no mishap, Cain, without even looking back to see who was in the other automobile, proceeded to put his car in motion, but before he could do so he was halted by the sharp command: "Stop!"

It was Gordon Kelly in the other machine. As soon as his car stopped he glanced back and read the number of the other machine. It was "50,000 Ga." Like a flash he recalled that this same car nearly ran over him in front of the Atlanta ball grounds. He jumped to the ground and reached the side of Cain's automobile just as the latter was about to start it. The two men faced each other, and Gordon could see the look of surprise that flashed over the face of the other.

"You seem bound to kill me with that car, one way or the other," observed Gordon. "You were headed toward my home. Did you wish to see me?"

Cain did not know what to say in reply. He did not want to acknowledge that curiosity had drawn him there and he knew he had no business on the driveway. Yet his arrogant nature refused to allow him to apologize, especially to Gordon Kelly. When he did reply he did so in a half-insolent tone.

"No, I have no wish to see you."

"Anyone here you desire to see?"

"No."

"What are you doing here?"

"Just rubbering around; that's all."

"You know these are private grounds?"

"I assumed they were." Cain had drawn a cigarette from his case. He now lighted it.

Gordon paused a moment before he spoke again. Then he said:

"Your tone is insolent. You are entitled to no consideration from me. Get off the grounds!"

"Suppose I refuse?" sneered Cain.

"I'll answer that question in just one minute, if you force me to, by kicking you through those stone pillars."

Cain Is Cowed.

The recollection of a previous experience with the toe of Gordon Kelly's shoe brought Cain to his senses. Without further words he turned his car and moved off down the winding driveway. Kelly, in his own machine, followed him. Passing through the granite posts, Cain turned north toward his own shack. Kelly, entering the main road, turned south.

Chagrin, mortification and anger had a three-cornered battle for supremacy in Cain's breast as he drove along the road. When he reached his mountain abode he did perhaps the worst thing he could have done, considering his engagement with Mildred Deery. He told his man George to fetch a bottle of whisky and some fresh water, and he sat at a table and drank and brooded and swore at George and swore vengeance on Kelly and swore at himself.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

PROPOSE AT ONCE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

For two years I have been calling on a young lady two years my junior. I love her dearly and I know my love is returned. Sometimes I feel as though my time is wastefully drifting by calling on her because she sometimes refuses to listen to me when I feel like proposing, and the next night she is all in a flutter awaiting me. I earn a good salary and feel that I can support a wife. With this view in mind I am almost on the verge of proposing. Then I lose all courage. Please advise me, as I am a total wreck.

N. S.

Put an end to your misery by proposing on one of those nights when she is all in a flutter. The longer you delay it the less courage you will have.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man and am quite infatuated with a young lady two years my senior. When I last called on her I said I wished the difference in our ages was just the opposite, but she said that two years count for nothing when one is in love. Am I right in keeping up our love?

J. W. F.

Two years count for nothing when one loves. The girl is right.

But your question implies that you have doubts. For this reason I am sure you don't really love her.

CERTAINLY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Will you please give your opinion to settle an argument on—if a tall girl can be called cute?

S. C. P.

The correct meaning of the word is "clever," "sharp," "smart," and is in no way dependent on physical size.

Do You Know---

Someone fond of statistics has figured out that in Great Britain alone about 1,600,000,000 miles are covered annually by all sorts of vehicles, including motor cars. During the past year 750 persons were killed by vehicular traffic—that is to say, one person for every 2,133,333 miles. Motor vehicles to the number of 50,000 covered approximately 300,000,000 miles and killed 200 people, or one person for every 1,500,000 miles.

The engagement of Duke Karl of Croy to Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the American Ambassador to Berlin, recalls a curious law of that noble house. Should the head of the family or his heir desire to marry outside his own rank, he must previously obtain the unanimous consent of all the males bearing the name of Croy who are of age; otherwise his children can not succeed either to the title or estate.

Cullman, Ala., claims to be the most prosperous township in the world. It is said that every man in the town who is the head of a family has a clear title deed of ownership to his home, and every one of them has a banking account. Co-operative farming is practiced in the county.

The discovery of oil in Papau, British New Guinea, was the result of a native boy being whipped for placing kerosene in a miner's tea. The youth declared his innocence and led the miner to the well from which the water had been taken. It was found that the surface of the water was completely covered with oil, the source of which is being developed into a huge commercial enterprise.

The Parent and the Undutiful Child

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

WE bestow a great deal of pity upon the parent of an undutiful child, but how often do we stop to consider who is to blame for the state of affairs?

"Poor Mrs. Smith!" a woman sighed. "I am very sorry for her! She is one of the sweetest and gentlest of women, and her son is all she has in the world. Yet he speaks to her roughly, and has a royal disregard for all her wishes. He pays her poorly for all her care of him."

Had the partisan of the abused parent been of an analytical turn of mind she might have changed her sympathy to criticism of the mother herself. We hear—and say—much of the responsibility of children, of the duty of the parents to train the child properly, but, when parents neglect to do this, we condemn the grown son or daughter rather than the person who trained him or her. One overindulgent mother of sons—all of whom are up-to-date examples of ingratitude and selfishness—says, with tears in her eyes, "I never considered my own comfort compared with that of my boys, and I always set aside my own wishes to make them happy."

The result has been just what might have been expected.

A young child, when left to his own devices, is little better than a small savage. He has the selfish and brutal impulses of the primitive human. It rests with the parents to curb his natural desires and passions, and to guide and direct these so that they may become the strength of the child instead of his weakness. If they neglect this duty, and the boy develops into a man of ungovernable passions and of evil life, the father and mother are pitied and the son condemned.

I acknowledge that there are cases in which parents have done their best and children have gone astray. But, unless there has been a very evil strain of blood back of the child, or his associates have, in spite of the parental care, been a very bad lot, one seldom sees a properly trained lad go completely wrong.

I was moved to amusement, yet strongly impressed by a conversation that I heard between a mother and her sixteen-year-old daughter. The mother was reproving the child for disobedience.

"The trouble with you, Mary," said the parent, "is that you were not punished enough when you were a child."

The girl's eyes flashed with temper.

"Well, if not, who was to blame for it?" was the impertinent retort. "Surely you need not lay that omission to my account!"

Impertinent? Yes. Unkind and rude? Undoubtedly. Yet the insolent speech contained a poignant truth. And the mother recognized this fact too late.

"When did you train your boy to obey you so promptly?" asked one mother of another. "My son is just the age of yours, and I can not make him obey. When did you start the implicit obedience plan?"

"As soon as he was born," was the grave reply. "He has never been allowed to feel that he can disobey."

I know there are parents who will declare that such obedience is slavery. It is not—if properly obtained. The mother has lived to little purpose if she does not know better what is good for the tiny child than he does. Gentleness and firmness will win the day sooner and more surely than threats and temper.

Some people take it for granted that, because a mother has endured anguish to bring a human being into the world, that being will intuitively accord her loyalty and love through his entire life. One might as well say that because a seed is planted in the ground it will sprout, flourish and bear fruit without further care.

The mother who suppresses her own individuality, who ignores her own rights for the sake of the temporary happiness of her child, is not the mother who is most loved in childhood, or who is, in later years, most honored and respected. It is just that she is not thus regarded, for she has not been a good mother in the deepest sense of the word. It takes far more resolution and strength of character to deny a harmful thing to one we love than it does to yield to him and comply with all his desires.

"He is the best son a woman ever had!" I heard an elderly mother say in the presence of her first-born—a prosperous lawyer and exemplary citizen.

I respected her and her stalwart offspring the more when he said, with a tender smile:

"I wish I deserved that praise—but if I did you would have yourself to thank for it!"

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

MAY 20.—It is possible, I have learned recently, for a man to have as warm red blood in his veins at fifty as he had when he was twenty-five.

My conclusion from this decision is that no man is old enough to be trusted alone with a woman not his mother, his sister, his grandmother or his aunt.

May 23—I regret that I am not a learned man. If I were I would know, without the embarrassment of making the inquiry, who it was who said that "Kissing is the beginning of sinning."

May 26—If I knew who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" I might spend a few of my surplus millions in erecting a monument to his memory.

It would be a strange monument. It would not be beautiful, but I am sure its effect on the minds of beholders would be forceful. I would have carved on its marble sides pictured stories of what one little kiss has led to: Disgrace, dishonor, abandoned women, reckless men, broken hearts and the breaking up of homes.

Its Danger.

I would have engraved on tablets set in every corner so that one might read, no matter from what direction he came, the real truth about the kiss. So sweet, so innocent, so pure in poem and prose. I would have scholars better versed in expression than I ever hope to be, tell what is in real life when a man's blood runs warm in his veins.

And I would blame all the sin that has such an apparently innocent beginning on the ignorance of woman! Or, perhaps, I would grow so bold as to blame some of it on her cupidity, her duplicity and her UNDERSTANDING OF MEN.

She gives the first kiss in ignorance sometimes, but just as often, Diary (and I would have that engraved on the monument, though it would result in women smashing it overnight) she gives it in full realization of its power and effect!

She uses the highest expression of love as a means of appealing to the lowest!

I can't quite decide if I would have a broken-hearted girl as a crowning figure or a man bound and shackled with the chains of matrimony. Either figure could be made appealing by a sculptor who understands human nature.

Perhaps the bowed and bent figure of a man with the chains of matrimony wound around his limbs would be the more modern version of what a kiss has done for mankind. So many girls these days use kisses to cry their wares when they go to market, and suffer no appreciable damage, that the broken-hearted girl, as a crowning figure, would not give expression to the changed sentiment of the times.

May 28—The man who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" interests me. I wonder if he was an old bachelor like myself and had a good friend whom he loved as he would a favorite sister. I wonder if this friend ever came to him with her troubles because of a neglectful husband, and if he tried, in honest, brotherly fashion, to soothe her.

I wonder if one day she suddenly kissed him, and I wonder if that kiss seemed in comparison to all others life had ever offered him, the one supreme kiss.

I wonder what he did next. I wonder how he found that "Kissing Is the Beginning of Sinning."

Did his sin consist only in thinking about another man's wife much too often?

Not Platomic.

Did he accept it as the kiss a sister would give a brother? But no, he couldn't have done that. All the sisters since the world began never put into all the kisses they have given their brothers the one little vital spark Sally Spencer put in that kiss she gave me!

Brother and sister, bah! What's the good of self-deception? We were never brother and sister, and the kiss revealed we were not. Maybe once we were Platonic friends, and that we can never be again!

When a man and woman do wrong, it is the customary thing, the gallant thing, and exceedingly proper, to blame it on the man.

Diary, I have kept nothing from you. I was sitting with Manette in my arms, and thinking only of Sally's trouble that day in the nursery. I had no thought of myself, but when a man says he has no thought of himself no one on earth believes him, so perhaps that statement is discredited even by your parchment ears.

There was nothing in our conversation that should have led up to such a climax; there has never been in all the conversations I have had with her.

A Special Apparatus.

She kissed Me, Diary, I did not kiss HER! How could I with Manette asleep in my arms? I could neither force a woman to kiss me under such conditions, nor could I resist when she forced me. Of course I could have screamed for help. I can see in that particular that I showed weakness and indecision of character, unfitting a man.

But I couldn't scream before she kissed me, not realizing the awful designs she had on me. And I couldn't scream when her lips were pressed against mine!

If you doubt the absolute inability to scream at such a psychological moment, ask any physician. He will tell you no man can scream when his wind is cut off. Then, again, I am sure, though surgeons have never discovered it, that when the Lord made woman He put in her a special screaming apparatus He left out of man.

Had I kissed Sally Spencer against her will as she kissed me, somewhere (either just before the bestowal of the kiss, while it was being adjusted in position, or afterward) she would have found opportunity and breath for a scream.

That is, of course, if she had wanted to scream. My experience with the women is that they don't scream. It is only in the books that they cry for help.

Neither would it have done any good had I screamed after she kissed me, for what's the use of crying over spilled milk? I have been told all my life that there is absolutely no use.

So, as I said, we must follow tradition and blame all that may happen since that kiss on the man. I may have been physically powerless to resist, but that makes no difference. I am the man, and therefore the guilty one.

All the tragedy that may arise from that kiss is to be blamed on me. That I know, and being a man and proud of my strength, I am telling myself every morning that I will not run from temptation. I will just hang around and take a look at it!

All of which I have told you, Diary, to explain why I am looking at Sally Spencer these days with different eyes, and am not so much concerned as I was over the prospect that the widow may run off with her husband.

Up-to-Date Jokes

"What," said the visitor to the village of his childhood, "what's become of the one boy I hated—Willie Hawker, the sneak? In prison, no doubt—he bore that fate on his face."

"Hush!" said the villager. "He is now Mr. Hawker, the famous millionaire."

"What?" cried the visitor, "my dear schoolfellow a millionaire! I must call upon him and revive the old friendship."

Mr. Litchfield, the art dealer, when exhibiting some panels of tapestry, telegraphed for the return of one thus: "Send panel eight by ten, Venus and Adonis. Litchfield."

A puzzled clerk sent on the message to the city of Litchefield, and received the reply: "No such firm as Venus and Adonis known here. Try Manchester."

"You have called regarding the situation of footman?"

"Yes, my lud."

"Was there not some one in the ante-room as you came in?"

"There was, my lud. It was a man with a writ for your ludship, but I threw 'im hout."

"You are engaged."

A young Englishman on a visit to one of the Irish local gentry once remarked on the number of donkeys in use among the peasantry, and, turning to the priest who was present, inquired, with a certain insolence of manner, whether it was true that "the natives" kept them in their own homes.

"Yes," replied the padre, gravely, "they do. The English, I perceive, send them abroad."

"They say that Tennyson frequently worked a whole afternoon on a single line."

"That's nothing. I know a man who has been working the last six years on one sentence."

FASHIONABLE HATS MILADY IS WEARING THIS SUMMER

STRAW AND FLOWERS. A SMART MODEL

A circular-shaped straw with a ruche and a bow of white moire ribbon. Surrounding ribbon is a wreath of daintily colored flowers.

This is most effective for a small hat. The crown is of folded silk encircled with a band of moire ribbon and at the back is a mass of Paradise plumes.

PLUMES AND STRAW. A LEWIS MODEL. FOR COUNTRY WEAR.

The center cut shows a Lewis model of dust-colored straw which is most artistic. A wreath of variegated flowers encircles the small crown and gives it a very natty appearance. On the left is another black hat of the oblong shape. On each side of the brim is a plume of paradise feathers and at the front is a smartly tied ribbon bow. The hat at the right is the latest model for country wear or for morning in town. It is very plain, the sole trimming being a bow of embroidered ribbon.

The Girl With a Married Sweetheart

By DOROTHY DIX

Tears and Sorrow Is the Price She Is Bound to Pay

A YOUNG girl writes me that she is very much in love with a married man, who tells her that he is devoted to her, but that he does not intend to divorce his wife in order to marry her. She says that she has lost all interest in her young companions, and is very unhappy and she doesn't know what to do, and that she will take my advice as to whether to give her married sweetheart up or not.

I am afraid that it is too good to be true that this poor, silly child will be guided by my counsel in this matter, but in case it should be possible that any word of mine could influence her or any other girl in such a dilemma, I urge her with all the earnestness that I can possibly command to break with the man before another hour rolls over her head.

Time and again I have written on this subject, trying to make girls realize not only how wrong, but how foolish they were to waste their youth, their sweetness, their chance in life in love affairs with married men. Again and again have I pointed out to them what a sorry bargain it is when a girl gives all and gets nothing in return.

I ask this girl who writes me to sit down and to calmly figure out her case. On one side of the page let her write down Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children. These are things that she forfeits if she continues her affair with the married man.

A Bad Companion.

She may not think much of Morality, but a gnawing Conscience is a bad companion to have with you night and day, and what about Self Respect, and the Respect of One's Circle of Acquaintance, and the black mortification of knowing that one has brought dishonor on one's name?

Do you believe that the love of any man on earth ever pays a girl for knowing that her family is ashamed of her, or that any dagger could pierce a soul with such an agony as seeing other women draw their skirts away from her? And do you think that any worthy young man, the sort of a young man you would like to marry, would care to marry a girl whose name had been bandied about as the former sweetheart of some married man?

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children—these are pretty good things for a woman to have, little sister. You throw them over the windmill if you continue your love affair with a married man. What are you going to write on the other side of the ledger?

Scandal? Oh, yes, you are. Don't think you can keep it hidden and secret. Such things always come out. Don't think people won't talk about you. Gossip has a thousand tongues, and not one of them will spare you. The first time a girl goes out to dinner in a cafe with a married man, she leaves her good name behind her.

A guilty Conscience? Yes, no matter how you lie to yourself, you will always have that on your soul, that will wake you up in the night with a cold sweat on your forehead. You know that you are doing your best to rob a woman of her husband, and little children of their father. You are breaking up a home and slaying the happiness of another woman, and beside those crimes, burglary is a commendable pastime and murder a trifling misdemeanor.

Not Your Affair.

Perhaps the man is tired of his wife and untrue to her, anyway. That isn't your affair. You don't have to steal and kill because there are degenerates that do. Be sure of this, little girl—no woman ever built any secure happiness on another woman's misery.

Then write down Waiting. Years and years of hopeless, aimless waiting for a man who has no right to love you, a man whom you have no right to love, one who can give you only stolen minutes of his society, who can not be seen with you, or visit you without shame to you both. Anything attractive in that prospect, little sister?

Then write Fear. Fear of desertion. The hideous fear that gnaws at the heart of the woman who has given everything to a man and has no way by which she can bind him to her side. The wife has the bond that the law and society has forged, that holds her husband to her. He can not break this tie with impunity, but between the married man and his unmarried love there is nothing but his fickle fancy.

No other woman knows such torturing jealousy, no other woman knows such deadly fear as this woman who realizes that nothing but her beauty and her youth and her charm holds her married sweetheart, and that some day these must go, and that then he will turn to a fresher and fairer face.

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children, on the one side. On the other, Scandal, A Guilty Conscience, Waiting, Fear, No Home nor Husband nor Children of one's own, no settled place in society, to be looked at askance instead of being welcome among the people one would like to know. How does the account balance, little sister? Don't you think that you will have to pay a pretty high price for your romance with a married man?

And look at the man squarely. Don't you think that any man, who would win the heart of a young girl when he knew that he couldn't carry her, is about the most consummate cad that ever came down the pike? And doesn't he deserve a medal as the most selfish man on earth when he asks you to do a thing that will make you the target for all the mud slinging in your circle?

WITHIN THE LAW

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, an orphan, employed in Edward Gilder's department store, is unjustly accused of theft and sent to prison. She is hounded by the police on her release, and finally goes to live with Joe Garson, a forger, and Aggie Lynch, a blackmailer, both of whom treat her with respect. Mary resolves to keep "within the law." She becomes the leader of a band of swindlers. Gilder's son, Dick, falls in love with her, and she marries him to be revenged on his father—and then finds that she is in love with him. Dick refuses to give her up, a demand made by his father, Mary disappears. Police Inspector Burke in an effort to aid the elder Gilder schemes to secure the arrest of Mary through "English Eddie" Griggs, a police informer. Garson plans to rob the Gilder home on a tip from Griggs. Mary hears of it and tries to prevent it, going to the Gilder home. Mary pleads with Garson to drop the robbery, and Dick enters. Garson kills Griggs when Mary corners the latter and he admits he is working for the police. Burke enters the house, a searchlight throwing its rays on the dead man's body. Mary and Dick are arrested, because Mary tells Burke that Dick shot Griggs in defense of his home.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Cringingly, Chicago Red, who so gloried in his strength, yet was now altogether humble in his precarious case, obeyed as far as the getting to his feet was concerned. * * * It never occurred to him even that he should carry his obedience to the point of "squealing on a pal!" Had the circumstances been different, he might have refused to accept the Inspector's blow with such meekness, since above all things he loved a bit of bodily strife, with some one near his own strength, and the Inspector was of a sort to offer him a battle worth while.

So, now, while he got slowly to his feet, he took care to keep at a respectful distance from the official, though his big hands fairly ached to double into fists for blows with this man who had so maltreated him.

"Send 'Em In."

His own self-respect, of its peculiar sort, was saved by the interference of Cassidy, who entered the Inspector's office to announce the arrival of the District Attorney.

"Send 'im in," Burke directed at once. He made a gesture toward the doorman, and added: "Take 'em back!"

A grin of evil humor wreathed the lips of the police official, and he added to the attentive doorman a word of direction that might well be interpreted by the malevolent expression on his face.

"Don't be rough with 'em, Dan," he said. For once his dominating voice was reduced to something approaching softness in his sardonic appreciation of his own humor in the conception of what these two men, who had ventured to resist his importunities, might receive at the hands of his faithful satellites. * * * The doorman grinned appreciatively, and herded his victims from the place. And the two went shamblingly in sure knowledge of the things that were in store. Yet, without thought of treachery. They would not "squeal!" All they would tell of the death of Eddie Griggs would be: "He got what was coming to him!"

The Inspector dropped into his swivel chair at the desk while he awaited the arrival of Demarest, the District Attorney. The greetings between the two were cordial when at last the public prosecutor made his appearance.

"I came as soon as I got your message," the District Attorney said, as he seated himself in a chair by the desk. "And I've sent word to Mr. Gilder. * * * Now, then, Burke, let's have this thing quickly."

The Inspector's explanation was concise:

Burke's Face Crimsoned.

"Joe Garson, Chicago Red and Dacey, along with Griggs, broke into Edward Gilder's house last night! I knew the trick was going to be pulled off, and so I planted Cassidy and a couple of other men just outside the room where the haul was to be made. Then I went away, and after something like half an hour I came back to make the arrests myself." A look of intense disgust spread itself over the Inspector's massive face. "Well," he concluded sheepishly, "when I broke into the room I found Gilder along with that Turner woman he married, and they were just talking together."

"No trace of the others?" Demarest questioned crisply.

At the inquiry, Burke's face crimsoned angrily, then again set in grim lines.

"I found Griggs lying on the floor—dead!" Once again the disgust showed in his expression. "The Turner woman says young Gilder shot Griggs because he broke into the house. Ain't that the limit?"

"What does the boy say?" the District Attorney demanded.

Burke shook his head dispiritedly.

"Nothing," he answered. "She told him not to talk, and so, of course, he won't, he's such a fool over her."

"And what does she say?" Demarest asked. He found himself rather amused by the exceeding chagrin of the Inspector over this affair.

Burke's voice grew savage as he snapped a reply.

He Admitted the Fact.

"Refuses to talk till she sees a lawyer." But a touch of cheerfulness appeared in his tones as he proceeded. "We've got Chicago Red and Dacey, and we'll have Garson before the day's over. And, oh, yes, they've picked up a young girl at the Turner woman's place. And we've got one real clew—for once!" The speaker's expression was suddenly triumphant. He opened a drawer of the desk, and took out Garson's pistol, to which the silencer was still attached.

"You never saw a gun like that before, eh?" he exclaimed.

Demarest admitted the fact after a curious examination.

"I'll bet you you never did!" Burke cried, with satisfaction. "That thing on the end is a Maxim silencer. There are thousands of them in use on rifles, but they've never been able to use them on revolvers before. This is a specially made gun," he went on admiringly, as he took it back and slipped it into a pocket of his coat. "That thing is absolutely noiseless, I've tried it. Well, you see, it'll be an easy thing—easiest thing in the world—to trace that silencer attachment. Cassidy's working on that end of the thing now."

For a few minutes longer the two men discussed the details of the crime, theorizing over the baffling event. Then, presently, Cassidy entered the office, and made report of his investigations concerning the pistol with the silencer attachment.

"I got the factory at Hartford on the wire," he explained, "and they gave me Mr. Maxim himself, the inventor of the silencer. He said this was surely a special gun, which was made for the use of Henry Sylvester, one of the professors at Yale. He wanted it for demonstration purposes. Mr. Maxim said the things have never been put on the market, and that they never will be."

"For humane reasons," Demarest commented, nodding approbation.

"Good thing, too!" Burke conceded. "They'd make murder too devilish easy, and it's easy enough now. * * * Well, Cassidy?"

"I got hold of this man Sylvester," Cassidy went on. "I had him on the phone, too. He says that his house was robbed about eight weeks ago, and among other things the silencer was stolen." Cassidy paused, and chuckled dryly. "He adds the startling information that the New Haven police have not been able to recover any of the stolen property. Them rube cops are immense!"

Demarest smiled slyly, as the detective, at a nod from his superior, went toward the door.

"No," he said, maliciously; "only the New York police recover stolen goods."

"Good night!" quoth Cassidy, turning at the door, in admission of his discomfiture over the thrust, while Burke himself grinned wryly in appreciation of the gibe.

Demarest grew grave again, as he put the question that was troubling him most.

"Is there any chance that young Gilder shot Griggs?"

"You can search me!" the Inspector answered, disconsolately. "My men were just outside the door of the room where Eddie Griggs was shot to death, and none of 'em heard a sound. It's that infernal silencer thing. Of course, I know that all the gang was in the house."

"But tell me just how you know that fact," Demarest objected very crisply. "Did you see them go in?"

"No, I didn't," the Inspector admitted, tartly. "But Griggs——"

Demarest permitted himself a sneer born of legal knowledge.

"Griggs is dead, Burke. You're up against it. You can't prove that Garson, or Chicago Red, or Dacey, ever entered that house."

The Inspector scowled over this positive statement.

"But Griggs said they were going to," he argued.

"I know," Demarest agreed, with an exasperating air of shrewdness, "but Griggs is dead. You see, Burke, you couldn't in a trial even repeat what he told you. It's not permissible evidence."

"Oh, the law!" the Inspector snorted, with much choler. "Well, then," he went on belligerently, "I'll charge young Gilder with murder, and call the Turner woman as a witness."

The District Attorney laughed aloud over this project.

Wife Cannot Testify.

"You can't question her on the witness stand," he explained patronizingly to the badgered police official. "The law doesn't allow you to make a wife testify against her husband. And, what's more, you can't arrest her, and then force her to go into the witness stand, either. No, Burke," he concluded emphatically, "your only chance of getting the murderer of Griggs is by a confession."

"Then, I'll charge them both with the murder," the Inspector growled vindictively. "And, by God, they'll both go to trial unless somebody comes through." He brought his huge fist down on the desk with violence, and his voice was forbidding. "If it's my last act on earth," he declared, "I'm going to get the man who shot Eddie Griggs."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Experience.

"My dear boy," said Enpeck, who happened to be in a confidential mood, "you will never know what real happiness is until you get married."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Singleton, astonished at such a remark from such an unexpected source.

"It's a fact," rejoined Enpeck, "but then it will be too late for you to appreciate it."

BRADY PITCHES TODAY; HOWELL MAY FACE HIM

By Joe Agler.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 13. "King" Brady will twirl to-day's game, with Dunn receiving his slants. Kid Elberfeld will probably use his new college pitcher, Howell, or maybe Sommers, his star southpaw.

The Crackers opened their series here with a winner. Grimes, the twirler who won eleven straight games in the Central Association, made his debut against us, and, as usual, we got to him in the fifth, after the fans thought the Lookouts had the contest sewed up. We kept on going after we once started and could not be stopped till we had five runs across the plate.

Joe Conzelman twirled the kind of ball that will win many a ball game. The runs scored against him were made on errors. He will save many a game on the right side of the ledger with the Crackers hitting behind him.

Joe Dunn caught a grand game, and his two-ply smash broke up the contest after yours truly mingled with the bases full. Wallop Smith got another triple, hitting it far over Elston's head in right field, and scored on Bisland's fly.

Welchonce broke his favorite bat in the contest, but is not a bit superstitious and will be out to-day hitting just as hard as in previous games.

Coyle is out of the game with a bad wrist. He was hit by a ball in the Nashville series, which cripples the Kid's infield somewhat. Williams is not the hitter that Coyle is.

We should take at least two out of three of these contests. With "King" pitching as he can and with the Crackers hitting that ball as we should, we ought to take an easy game.

The Lookouts are drawing fairly well. The crowds are coming out to witness the games, and they certainly are loyal fans and good rooters.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Everything is in readiness for the big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. All the boxers have completed training and are on edge for the fray.

* * *

Sailor White and Jim Savage clash in the main bout; Mike Saul will take on Terry Nelson in the semi-final, while Spider Britt meets Meyer Pries in the opening set-to. All the scraps are scheduled to go ten rounds and the fans should see enough real milling to last them for months.

* * *

Tickets for the big show are going fast and a banner house should be present. Saul and his followers will be at the ringside to cheer the Hebrew on to a good start in his come-back effort.

* * *

Charlie White has grabbed two more matches. He has signed to box Harry Trendall, a St. Louis lightweight, in the latter city on June 18. After this affair Charlie is to take on Jack Britton in a 20-round engagement at New Orleans on July 4.

* * *

Frank Whitney writes from Cedar Rapids that he is anxious to pick up some bouts. His wife died recently and he says he must hustle and get some money. "I am ready to meet any of the lightweights," he writes. Whitney has a standing challenge to any 135-pounder in the world. A bout between Whitney and Charlie White should prove a hummer for any promoter.

* * *

Frankie Burns is working hard in Chicago for his ten-round battle with Johnny Coulon a week from Friday night at Kenosha, Wis. This will be the fourth scrap between the pair. They have agreed to make 116 pounds ringside.

* * *

Jimmy Britt and Jimmy Dunn are perhaps the greatest boosters for Bud Anderson, the coast sensation, who meets Leach Cross on July 4. Both claim that Bud is made of championship material and pick him to hand the dentist a neat lacing.

* * *

On the other hand, Jim Savage and K. O. Brown are strong boosters for Cross. Savage picks Leach to stop Anderson in twelve rounds and says K. O. Brown who recently met Anderson picks Leach to win sure. "Any boxer who will stand up and slug with Cross is sure to be stopped," says Savage, "and Anderson is rated on the coast as a boy who loves to slug.

* * *

Tommy Murphy will likely meet the winner of the Dundee-Jack White bout, which is billed to take place at Los Angeles on June 17. Tom McCarey, who is staging the go has offered Murphy the match.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion, is a firm believer in newspaper publicity. In order to attract attention Freddie announces his willingness to meet Willie Ritchie on a winner take all basis. And no one knows better than Freddie that this is impossible as long as Billy Nolan is Ritchie's manager.

* * *

Ad Wolgast's injury to his thumb may be of a permanent nature. Anyhow the ex-lightweight champion contemplates a trip to Honolulu. That's where some of the other so-called champs should migrate.

* * *

Can you beat this? Danny Morgan has bet $350 that Young Ahearn defeats Mike Gibbons when the two clash at New York to-night. Furthermore, Danny has borrowed the money. This news comes from Jim Savage, who is being managed by Daniel.

* * *

Jack McCarron and Young Jack O'Brien, the stars of Jack O'Brien's stable, are resting up after a somewhat strenuous season.

* * *

The French boxing authorities must be looking for easy game for their heavyweight champion, George Carpentier, when they offer Rodel, the Boer boxer, a bout with Carpentier.

* * *

Al Kubiak is the latest to challenge the winner of the Savage-White match at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Al writes that he is feeling better than ever in his life and is sure he can beat either of the big heavyweights.

COAST BATTLE WILL BE GREAT BETTING AFFAIR

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 13.—Not in years have the boxing fans been presented with a fighting card that has so completely torn them out on the Pacific Coast as this little affair between Willie Ritchie, lightweight, and Jose Rivers. The scrap is set for the Glorious Fourth and surely should be one royal battle. But at the same time it is such an open affair and such a hard one to dope out that it doubtless will prove one of the biggest betting affairs ever known on the coast or anywhere else.

* * *

BY way of making it an exceptionally good one the State of California, perhaps the strongest district in the Union for boxing, will be split exactly in twain over the battle. To begin with, Rivers will get almost the unanimous support of the southern part of the State, while San Francisco, unwavering in its support of its own, will go to the Ritchie end as if the whole thing were over right now. This will make one most exciting contest, and it is certain that the remainder of the country will follow suit and plunge on this encounter.

* * *

THE peculiar ending of the Wolgast match, in which both men were accused of fouling and the referee came in for a lot of censure, and the equally strange ending of the Ritchie-Wolgast battle, which was given to Ritchie on a foul, have always created puzzling questions for the fight fans to argue over. Many were led to believe from the Los Angeles reports that Rivers proved to be the master of Wolgast that afternoon and a good many others will always believe that Wolgast was robbed by that foul decision with Ritchie. Thus it goes with the eternal question of supremacy never fully or completely decided. Now we are to have Rivers booked up with the clever Ritchie in a long contest. Surely that should settle a whole lot of arguments.

* * *

TOMMY WALSH, who should know the coast situation as well as anybody, thinks Ritchie will have a rather strong shade over Rivers in the milling on the Fourth. Tommy returned to the city the other day on a scouting tour for Tom McCarey of Los Angeles. He wants to scare up some good fighting material in the lightweight division for a tournament that McCarey is thinking of staging during July and August. Tommy is of the opinion that superior speed and size will have much to do to encompass the downfall of the Los Angeles boy.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—The Giants must regain their batting stride if they are to repeat on the pennant. The club has not been hitting consistently all season. First one man bats well for two or three days and then another. But we do not appear to get going all together. The pitchers are doing better than they were. Both Marquard and Tesreau are in fine shape, and Demaree is fit to take his regular turn once more. I believe that the pitching staff and hard hitting that is bound to come will eventually push the Phillies out of the lead. My confidence still is in the Giants, of course. The hard work in the early spring will finally wear the edge off the Philly twirlers when the real hot weather sets in, and we should close up the gap, if it does not get too wide in the meantime. Marquard started off the season like a whirlwind a year ago, you will recall, and won nineteen straight games. But all the hard work in the early stages of the race wore him out for the midsummer toil, and he slumped badly for a month or so. I expect to see the same thing happen to the Philadelphia pitchers. The Quakers are bound to slump, but I do not know how far that slump will go. At least our chance to return home from this trip in first place is gone now.

* * *

THE Cubs do not look to me like any more of a pennant possibility now than they did when they were in New York on their first trip East. They are weak in the pitcher's box. The rest of the team is fine, but I cannot figure any club with the pitchers possessed by the Cubs as a pennant winner in the National League this year, when there are such staffs as the Philadelphia, Pittsburg and New York corps.

The Pirates have surprised me. Just when it looked as if they were going to slide into their true gait and begin climbing, they dropped the series to the Quakers. I cannot understand why that club does not get going consistently, because the material is certainly there, both in the field and the pitcher's box. I suppose Clarke's team will just about hit its stride against us this week.

* * *

THE rest of the clubs in the National League, with the possible exception of Brooklyn, are clearly out of the going. The Superbas have a very outside chance, but it does not look good with their pitchers moving as badly as they are at present. Brooklyn has not the robustness to withstand the rigors of a hard campaign, to my mind. The team is good for only a short spurt. It was some fancy pitching which put it up with the leaders for a time. I had figured Philadelphia to fade in the same way, but these boys seem to be trying to show me up by sticking. I still adhere to my notion that Pittsburg will begin to climb shortly, and the race will narrow down to a battle between the Pirates and Giants in September. Pittsburg has always been a better road club than when it is playing on the home grounds. Perhaps that may partially explain its present showing.

Rumor has it that a deal is under way by which Nap Rucker, the star pitcher of the Dodgers, will go to the Cubs in exchange for Roger Bresnahan, the catcher, who is drawing a huge salary from the Cub coffers for warming the bench. Archer is doing most of the catching for the Cubs.

TY COBB OUT TO COP HITTING CROWN AGAIN

ADMIRERS of Tyrus Raymond Cobb have a right to be proud of the record amassed by the Georgia Peach during the first month of the present campaign. Participating in 24 games, of which his team won 11, Cobb hit safely in 20 combats and in one of these it should be remembered that he was an added starter and got a chance to bat only once, which opportunity he improved by poling a sacrifice fly.

The gunners who slipped ciphers into the Southern's basehit column were Ray Keating and Ray Fisher, of the Highlanders, on May 7 and 8, respectively; Harry White and Bill Lange, of the White Sox, on May 4, and Tom Hughes and Tom Drohan, of the Senators, on May 16.

3 Hits 5 Times This Year.

In the score of contests in which Cobb hit safely he obtained 32 singles, three doubles and three triples, his batting average from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, being .475. He has made three hits five times this season, two hits eight times and one hit seven times. His best record in the way of consecutive clouting came in the games of May 19 and 20 with the Athletics, when he got six hits in the same number of trips to the plate.

Tyrus Raymond, who seems bent on carrying off the Chalmers American League trophy for the third time, has put the finishing touches to fourteen of the Tigers' tallies, sending in seven on clean hits, four on aerial sacrifice and three on infield outs. He is not the Tigers' leading batterin of runs as yet, for Bobby Veach, who has played in ten more contests, has driven in four more counters. On the percentage basis, however, Cobb outranks Veach as a timely thumper.

Only Four Fanned Ty.

Cobb faced 30 American League pitchers from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, and only four men succeeded in fanning him. Bob Russell, of the White Sox, whiffed Tyrus on May 3; Ray Keating, of the Highlanders, struck him out twice on May 7 (that day the Dixie Demon complained his eyes bothered him). Buck O'Brien, of the Red Sox, claimed Ty as a strike-out victim on May 13, and twelve days later Walter Leverenz, of the Browns, set him down via the strike out line.

Cobb has drawn 17 passes in 24 games and has been successful in 12 out of 16 steals he has essayed. The men who turned him back when he tried to steal were Henry, of Washington, twice; Carrigan, of Boston, once, and Lapp, of Philadelphia, once.

New Date Set for 'Drome Races

Hold Meet Saturday Afternoon

SHARP at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Starter Noon Hudson will fire the first gun for the first race in the new Atlanta Motordrome. A minute later Announcer Erskine Brewster, from his raised platform, will be booming the results through a giant megaphone. And Atlanta's season of thrills and sensations will be in progress.

Always providing it doesn't rain.

Ten thousand Atlanta speed fans are awaiting the verdict of the weather man. If he will provide a couple of hours sunshine Saturday afternoon there will be nothing to it but a big success. Nearly five thousand people plowed their way to the track Friday night, June 6, right through the rain, on the off chance that there would be racing. Another five thousand stayed at home because they saw the case was hopeless. They will all be there ten thousand strong Saturday afternoon, if the weather is fair. And there will be room for all. Twelve thousand people can be seated in the grandstand alone. Twice that many can be looked out for in the infield. So there will be no crowding if the crowd grows to 36,000. Seats all around a quarter mile track, five rows deep, mean a lot of accommodations.

The sport which will be offered Saturday afternoon cannot be otherwise than thrilling and sensational. Ninety miles an hour on a four-lap track offers hair-raising possibilities. The nearest Atlanta speed bugs ever came to seeing such speed was at the Atlanta Speedway. There the cars raced on a two-mile oval. At the motordrome the best record of the speedway will undoubtedly be equaled or surpassed—and it will be done on a four-lap track, banked like a brick fence, lighted by blazing tungstens, and surrounded by a solid bank of shrieking, hat-waving humanity. Three and four riders will be on the track at the same time and each will flash past at ten second intervals.

The racing will be in dead earnest. The riders need the money. There hasn't been any "sugar" stirring around racing headquarters in months. Now, with a chance to race for the coin, they will not overlook any bets.

Special cars will be run to the Motordrome, leaving Five Points at two-minute intervals. The run to the show grounds takes but five or six minutes. After the races the cars will be backed up and ready to carry the speed fans back to the city at top speed.

This may be Atlanta's only chance to see speedway racing in the day time. The track was built for night racing. The electric lights are all in place. It was only because of the repeated postponements made necessary because of the recent rains and because of the coolness of the weather, that an afternoon meet was decided on. This show Saturday afternoon will give the fans a fine chance to get a line on the board track racing game by daylight. It may also give Jack Prince a chance to slip up on the weather man. Anyhow, if the weather is fair, there will be nine thrilling races Saturday afternoon. And all Atlanta's speed fans will be there to see them.

Sports and Such

THE SPRING KINKS IN THE baseball dope are being straightened out and the big league teams are gradually fitting into their appointed positions, to the great glorification of the aforesaid dope.

Of the two leagues the National promises the better race, a situation that was more or less forecast. In the American League no one would be particularly shocked if the excitement were all over by the middle of July. If the Athletics maintain their present industrious lick and the Boston team continues to improve, this combination of events is likely to result in an overwhelming lead for the Mack outfit within the next few weeks. Boston is earnestly doing its best to wallop Cleveland, and later on it will have a chance to slam the Washington gang, all of which is the best little sort of ally work for Connie Mack.

• • •

THE SOLEMN PROPHETS OF the spring-tide unanimously held that if Connie Mack kept his men on the reservation there would be no stopping them this season, and seemingly it will work out so.

• • •

THERE HAS BEEN ONE UPset—or rather two—of magnitude in the older league. There is not the slightest doubt that on paper the Giants this spring were fully a 20 per cent stronger club than they were last season, when they won the pennant. By an amazingly simple process of arithmetic you could thus figure out that they would win the pennant in a walk this summer; but, though they have played to form, they have failed to win the games that were cheerfully counted for them last April.

• • •

IF THE PIRATES NOW occupied that high position fortuitously held by the Phillies we should worry. As it is, the Phillies are likely to blow. Brooklyn started out to break up the league, and Brooklyn blew. The Phillies are a little stronger than the Dodgers and are holding up a litle longer, but it will be the biggest shock baseball ever got if they keep up this pace for another six weeks. So if the Giants find themselves and develop a real winning streak they have every chance to nail the lead and hold it.

NEW YORK, June 13.—Mike Gibbons, of St. Paul, may strike a snag in the person of Young Ahearn, the Dancing Master, when they meet in a ten-round bout in the Garden tonight. Ahearn is rapidly growing into the middleweight division. It is conceded that he is one of the finest boxers in the ring.

Best of White Hopes Will Meet at Auditorium-Armory

SAVAGE AND WHITE BATTLE HERE TO-NIGHT

By Left Hook.

A FEW hours after Sailor White and Jim Savage conclude their ten-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory to-night a special representative of the local military companies will embark for New York for the express purpose of closing with Gunboat Smith to come to Atlanta July 4 to meet the winner.

To-day Gunboat Smith looks the best heavyweight of them all. His record entitles him to more consideration than any of them. A battle between Smith and the winner tonight would be an affair of international interest.

The dicker for Smith adds vastly to the interest in to-night's bout—which becomes more than ever a championship affray. Sailor White and Jim Savage have both been looked upon as logical opponents for Smith in the title battle. One or the other must be eliminated before the lights are turned off in the Auditorium-Armory to-night.

Both Men Ready.

Both contestants turned up in good order this morning. They look the better for their hard work since they arrived in Atlanta and should enter the ring in top-notch condition. Savage has been training viciously here. White, who arrived in the best possible trim, has been taking it easy.

Both men will enter the ring tonight at their best scrapping weight and when Referee Lou Castro gives the word and the ball clangs there should be action and gobs of it.

This looks like the battle of his career to Sailor White. He has battled a lot of the best of them. But this night he meets one man he believes he can beat. He admits that Savage can smear it all over him at boxing, but he does not intend to encourage any boxing.

White Is a Scrapper.

White knows it is possible to carry a battle to a man so hard that nothing but rough work will be possible. That's his style of doing business. He loves to mingle. Any time his opponent gets off at long range he sorrows. The exchange of blows is where he shines. He has everything but science on Savage — weight, height, reach, strength and a punch. He has admitted that he will lose if he doesn't get his man early. So he is going in for the early stuff.

The Sailor figures that if he can land a few good blows on Savage he can make him forget all he ever knew about boxing. He has trimmed a lot of other clever scrappers that way and he believes it will work with Jim. Anyhow it is the only system of attack he knows and he is going to try it out. If that method loses he loses. But he figures that he stands a swell chance of putting Savage to sleep.

Saul and Nelson Scrap.

The loud noise in the semi-windup doings will be made by the Saul-Nelson preliminary. These lads take their battle as earnestly as though it was the main bout. They are getting a good piece of money for scrapping and they are both anxious to win. It is a waste of type to say much about this bout, for local fans know it will be good. Anything Saul goes into will be lively. Any time Terry Nelson scraps there will be action. Get the two together and it means fireworks. It will go the full ten rounds, easily enough, for both boys are as tough as gads. Of course a lucky punch might end it, but nobody looks for that. What the fans expect is ten slashing rounds of give-and-take stuff, with no let-up except for the minute intervals.

The Meyer Pries-Spider Britt affair looks promising too. These lads haven't any use for each other and have long been pining for a chance to go the route. This is the first time they have ever been put on for the full ten rounds. It may result in a verdict. They love to hammer each other so well and are willing to take so much punishment for the pleasure of an exchange that a knockout is likely to come off at any old time.

The bouts to-night will be run on the same high plane as all those at the Auditorium-Armory. The military companies will be in charge and will serve as ushers and will police the building. The battles will be put on and pushed through at top speed and no long waits need be feared.

Mrs. Sullivan having forced her way to the front Thursday afternoon when she easily defeated Miss Colston. The winner of this contest will be entitled to parmanent possession of the cup. FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

MATTY.

"You are sick, Father Matty," the young man said,
"You have lost your old fadeaway curve.
Your arm is a bum and your sinews are dead,
And you haven't a thing but your nerve."

"It is true I am sick," he arose to remark.
"It is true I am feeble and lame."
And having concluded, he hiked to the park
And proceeded to capture a game.

It is said that Christy Mathewson never has played ball on Sunday. Nor would seven National League teams go into mourning if he were to lay off seven days per week.

In addition to peddling life insurance it is rumored that Mr. Mathewson is a passably good heaver.

One horrible example of wasted endeavor is the case of the young man who forged a check in order to see the Yanks in the act of playing baseball.

One is forced to wonder at the feat performed by Marcel G. Brindejonc des Moulinais, who flew from Paris to Berlin in an aeroplane without getting his name tangled in the propeller.

There are some misguided persons who still refer to Lew Richie as the Giant Killer.

FABLE.

Once upon a time there was a baseball fan who did not know how to manage a baseball team.

While we grieve with Mr. Wolgast over his fractured thumb, it would not cause us any poignant grief if Tom Jones were to sprain his speaking apparatus.

ENOUGH IS SUFFICIENT.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
Though the hope of a pennant has flown,
But the fan worth while
Is the fan who can smile
When they show an assortment of bone.

COTTON SOARS; LATER RECEDES

Turner's Crop Report and Bearish Statistics Cause Active Selling in Late Session.

NEW YORK, June 13.—There was a renewal of heavy buying at the opening of the cotton market to-day and prompt response by prices, which were 2 to 10 points higher than last night's close. Interest centered chiefly in the new crop positions, of which Wall Street was a heavy buyer. August, however, showed the best gain, opening 10 points higher. One broker took 10,000 bales of December alone. This was supposed to represent covering.

Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm.

The market continued on the upward scale during the first fifteen minutes and prices increased their gains 1 to 5 points over the opening.

The advance came in the face of a favorable weather map, with indications pointing to fair weather over Sunday.

During the forenoon a wave of general selling dominated the market, which looked to be profit-taking, resulting in prices dropping 5 to 8 points under the initial level. Later the market rallied a few points and during the late forenoon the range was 1 to 6 points over the previous close.

Reports as to the condition of the crop and the spot situation was practically nil. However, sentiment continues bearish.

The principal selling was said to come chiefly from Liverpool and the South. The speculative element also sold.

It is estimated that fully 200,000 bales of short cotton was sold yesterday, of which the bulk of it was sold by speculators.

During the afternoon session offerings became freer, based on expectations of a bearish week-end statement and a report by J. B. Turner, of Memphis, giving the condition of the crop as of June 10, 81.2 per cent, an improvement of 2.1 per cent for the fifteen days, when the crop condition was 79.1 per cent on May 25, according to the Census Bureau, resulting in prices receding some 5 to 10 points in most active positions from the opening quotations.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 1 to 5 points from the closing quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Weather developments overnight were favorable. Fair and warmer weather prevails, except for some cloudiness in south and west Texas and in North Carolina where there was a light rainfall. Indications are for cloudy and probably rainy weather in west Texas, fair and much warmer over remainder of the belt. Montgomery, Ala., says: "Crop progressing favorable. Cool weather of no consequence."

Liverpool was poor at the start, but rallied sharply as soon as New York showed further strength in July. Spots higher, sales 10,000 bales.

Our market opened about 4 points higher on the strong opening in New York, but there was no buying power and prices soon eased. The technical situation has evidently been weakened by extensive short covering and professional advices from New York are to this effect.

Trading here settled around 11.44 for October and very quiet. Feeling is bearish on the general situation, but the fear of the possibility of an advance on technical conditions as recently demonstrated checks selling and makes the market respond readily to the least buying. There is no new mill demand of consequence, but the high July prices, with the expectation of possible squeeze prices to follow, gives confidence to holders and there is no pressure to sell.

CONDITION OF COTTON TO JUNE 10, 81.2 PER CENT

MEMPHIS, June 13.—Turner's crop reporting bureau by Miller & Cotter makes condition of cotton June 10, as compared with the Agricultural Bureau, 81.2, an improvement of 2.1 for the fifteen days.

In compiling these figures the report of the United States Department of Agriculture to date of May 25 are used as a basis and the percentages given herewith are made to compare with those of that authority as of May 25 last, showing thereby the improvement or deterioration of the crop that has occurred within the fifteen days:

STATE—	June 10.	May 25.
North Carolina	80	76
South Carolina	72	68
Georgia	74	69
Alabama	79	75
Mississippi	81	81
Tennessee	86	87
Arkansas	86	85
Louisiana	80	81
Oklahoma	87	87
Texas	85	84
United States	81.2	79.1

The notable improvement shown in eastern States is the direct result of rains, which have given generally good stands and put the soil, where formerly dry and cloddy, into good tilth. It was generally reported that up to the 10th ample rain had fallen and that further extended precipitation might so far retard cultivation as to make grass a threatening factor. As yet, however, this is an anticipated rather than a real menace.

In the Mississippi Valley and the southwest, where the condition was already high, the status was maintained. Plant growth, owing to cool weather, has not been so rapid as desired, but the young plant is quite thrifty.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—J. M. Anderson: The trading was rather active for the first hour. Brokers representing the uptown crowd and Wall Street were good buyers of the old and new crop which was said to be short covering. The selling was scattered, coming mainly from Liverpool and the South. Speculative element also sold.

"Weather favorable, but crop news mixed. Regardless of conditions, there is a steady demand for old crop which is the strength of the market. The question now advanced by a great many operators is "how much cotton is needed" and from the way the old crop is being absorbed, it appears that the world's needs are more than many believe it to be. While there is a bearish feeling existing, those inclined to the bear side are timid about selling the market short until they see further into the situation."

Look who's here! Friday, 13, 1913!

* * *

It is said not a single boll weevil complaint has been heard of in Kingston, Ark., which is one of the worst boll weevil territories in that State.

* * *

According to information received from Georgia, crop conditions over that State as well as the Carolinas are generally favorable.

* * *

If McFadden is still short of July, he is not worrying about it, through the gossip in many conservative circles.

* * *

The United States Department of Agriculture is taking active measures to help farmers fight the boll weevil in Louisiana. These take the form of advising them how best to get rid of the pest. A. A. Morrow, of the Federal demonstration work, calls upon the farmers of East Baton Rouge to take immediate steps to exterminate the pest or reduce the possibility of injury. In a circular addressed to the farmers of that parish he says, under date of June 6:

"The appearance of the boll weevil in East Baton Rouge is no surprise and sohuld cause no alarm. We have been expecting it even earlier. The farmer that wants to make cotton under boll weevil conditions must make up his mind to fight the weevils, first by gathering the weevil in the bud of the cotton and later by gathering forms or punctured squares, and destroy them by burning. Owing to the fact that most cotton is young and the weevil infestation heavy, owing to the hot days, the pest can easily be found on top of the young cotton, and the work of picking it off can be done cheaply by children at a small cost. Every weevil gathered now is a saving of from 50 to 75 squares later. With the present condition of the crop and the good cultivation it has received up to date with intense, late and shallow cultivation, there is no reason in the world why the farmers should not make a better crop of cotton to the acre than before the advent of the weevil with the old methods of cultivation."

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable, showing fair and warmer over the entire belt, except cloudy in South Texas. No rain except a little in Northwest Texas, South Texas and a few points in North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy in West and South Texas, probably more there, but fair and much warmer weather in East Texas, Oklahoma, central and eastern States.

Spot revision: Strict middling and above ⅛d higher. Rest unchanged."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Crop progress delaying temperatures have materialized the bullish claim repeatedly made throughout the planting season, that the crop got a late start. In any event, yesterday's cotton market climbed without encountering effective opposition, and the bearish assertion that technical conditions alone supply a basis of strength fell on unappreciative ears. As a matter of fact, nobody, in professional circles at least, believes the present cool weather has actually damaged the cotton plant, but there seems to be no reasonable ground for doubt that low temperatures during the past three or four days have caused the crop as a whole to lose the progress it would have made had the weather been warm and favorable. In this connection, comparison between the weather now and at this time in 1911 are particularly interesting, because large crop people are predicting a yield this year fully as great as the monster yield of 1911-1912.

"Almost without exception, yesterday morning and the morning before the Government's central stations in the cotton belt reported maximum temperatures lower than the minimum temperatures reported on the same days in 1911. Meanwhile, the New York July position continues to hold the center of the stage. The entire stock of cotton, certificated and uncertificated, at New York is now only 46,701. The talent as a whole is convinced so small a stock is entirely inadequate to protect the outstanding short contracts in the Nothern market. The situation, however, is made more acute by the premium over New York contracts at which actual cotton is selling in the South, and by the scarcity of desirable grades, which foreshadows a keen trade demand for the early receipts, which, as a rule, are of good grade cotton.

"Because of this scarcity, the grades above middling were marked up ½c in the New Orleans market yesterday."

RENEWED BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Large Institutions Absorb Big Issues Freely—Easier Feeling Generally.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 13.—New York, New Haven and Hartford was one of the weakest issues on the list at the opening of the stock market to-day, opening at 100, or 1⅞ under Thursday's final. After half an hour it rallied ½. Canadian Pacific was under pressure and declined to 216¾ for the loss of 1⅝, but rose to 217 under supporting orders.

The undertone was wavering and the list was irregular. The copper shares reflected strength, but most of the issues in which there is a strong international interest sustained declines. Some bankers professed the belief that Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo's emergency currency announcement is having its effect discounted by the actual need of credit rather than of money.

Among the gains were Utah Copper ½, Amalgamated Copper ⅝, Chino Copper ½, United States Rubber ⅝, American Car and Foundry ½, American Can 1, Anaconda Copper ⅜, Louisville and Nashville 1½, Reading ⅜ and Southern Railway ¼. United States Steel common began with a gain of ¼, but later lost it and shaded. Union Pacific commenced unchanged, but later suffered a net decline. Southern Pacific lost ⅜, while Norfolk and Western declined ½. American Telephone and Telegraph and St. Paul also declined fractionally. Lehigh Valley began with the loss of 1 point, but later recovered.

European news was bullish, despite the announcement of two failures on the London Exchange.

Trading in the last hour, especially in Reading, was active. Reading fluctuated between 156 7-8, which was 1 1-4 above the noon level, and 156 5-8. The rally was partly due to the bank statement, which showed a gain of nearly $8,000,000, and easier cable money. There was also some covering. The following advances above the midday quotations were recorded: Steel, 1-8; American Can, 5-8; Union Pacific, 1; Lehigh Valley, 3-8; Canadian Pacific, 3-4.

The market closed steady. Government bonds unchanged; other bonds firm.

TRADE IS 'SPOTTY' IN WOOL MARKET

Mill Buyers Have Reduced Their Purchasing Limits—Receipts Show Big Decrease.

BOSTON, June 13.—Conditions have not materially changed in the local wool market. Sales the past week have been well up to three-quarters of a million pounds, including a fair proportion of the new wools, both fleeces and territories. Trade is "spotty" and irregular. Some houses reported a moderate interest on the part of manufacturers, while others complain of the lack of demand. In the West dealers have been operating more freely. Prices in primary markets are still about on a parity with this market, according to the estimates of leading wool men, but buyers pay them rather than allow competitors to secure the desirable wools.

Foreign wools are quiet, with only small lots selling. The feature of the week is the change in attitude toward primary wool markets. Mill buyers have reduced their buying limits and, therefore, may be said in a sense to have retired from the field.

Receipts in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	2,986,256	4,491,584
Foreign	490,135	2,873,390
Totals	3,476,391	7,364,974

Total receipts of 3,476,391 pounds, compared with 3,295,647 the preceding week, of which 2,531,777 were domestic.

Receipts in pounds from and including January 1, 1913, as compared with the corresponding period of 1912 were as follows:

CHICAGO, June 13.—Those who bought large lines of wheat on the reports of crop damage or prospective crop damage in the spring wheat country were on the selling side as the day wore away. Instead of absorbing the offerings at the declines, the trade seemed to back away, and resting spots of the day showed net losses of 5-8@3-4, and closings were around 3-4 below the best prices of the session.

Texas is threshing out wheat that is turning out 15 to 20 bushels. Minneapolis reported too much July wheat for sale there and prices easier in consequence.

Corn closed 1-4@3-8 lower and oats were off 1-8@3-8.

MODERN MILLER CROP REPORT.

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—The general rains in the Southwest and cooler weather in the winter wheat belt have been of much benefit to the wheat crop. The rapid deterioration, because of dry and hot weather, not only was checked, but considerable wheat that was backward, was restored and will give fair yield.

The harvest is well under way in the South, most of the wheat in Texas having been cut and shocked under favorable conditions and harvesting has extended northward into southern Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas, and next week will be general. There are complaints about weather for the harvest, which has been favorable, and so far as can be judged by the wheat thus far thrashed, the quality of grain will be good.

Poultry, Pet and Live Stock

Term "Crop Bound" Explained by Expert

Also What to Do In Case Fowl Is Affected With It—Read Carefully.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Judge F. J. Marshall.—We have a hen that has an abnormal sized crop. It seems to be inflamed and is all swelled up hard, like it was a great wad of grain and grass. What do you think is the matter with her and the cause? Also, what shall we do to help her?

S. C. R., Pickens, S. C.

Answer.—Your hen is troubled with what is called crop bound. There are various things that cause it. The most common are the swallowing of a piece of jagged bone or other substance too rough and large to pass through to the gizzard, stopping the passage of all other food. Then, again a fowl will eat a lot of oats or similar grain when overhungry, clogging the crop so that fermentation will ensue before it passes out. This will cause distention and the crop will simply remain inactive and do no work. At other times a fowl that has been kept where there is no grass or green stuff will, when it gets where there is some, fill up with such a wad that it literally stops everything.

They will continue to eat about the same for several days and this makes matters worse all the time. The simplest method of emptying the crop, if it succeeds, is to pour all the hot water down the bird's throat that it will hold. Have the water just as hot as you would drink yourself and not hotter. After this is done, hold the fowl with one hand, kneading the contents of the crop gently but thoroughly; then hold the head down and the mouth open, giving a slight jerking motion which will have a tendency to dislodge the packed matter with the water. Repeat this operation several times, if it seems at all successful in its work. If this will not do the work, the only other alternative is to open up the crop with a sharp knife and clean it out. It is best to have a helper to hold the hen firmly while you do the work. In the first place, remove the feathers from over the center of the crop, where you are going to cut. Have a keen knife, clean and bright. Cut through the outer skin a slit about two inches long, allowing it to bleed all it is going to before going in into the crop. Wipe it clean and dry with a little clean cotton or soft linen. After this is clean, make your cut into the crop about an inch long, when you will be ready to begin removing the packed contents. It is most easily done with something about like a shoe button hook with which you can pull it out a little at a time. Do not be in too big a hurry about it or you will cause trouble. Take your time to it and when it is cleaned out, clear down to the outlet, then you can give it a good washing out with a weak solution of pure carbolic acid and water, or dioxogen and water. If you have nothing of the kind at hand use a litle salt in the water, which is about as good anything.

Then you are ready to sew it up. First sew the crop with about four stitches, and then the outer skin, taking about five or six, using a needle and white silk thread. After it is all over, give the fowl a few teaspoonfuls of hot milk, just as hot as you would dare to give it and if the bird is quite weak repeat the nourishment in about two hours.

Milk will make a good diet for a week at least; with a little soft bread added in about three days. Nothing solid should be given under a week. A little nux-vomica in the drinking water will act as a gentle tonic—say about six to ten drops in a quart of drinking water.

We often see cases of enlarged crop which is a hanging or sagging crop, just as if it were made of thin rubber and had not the strength to hold it in position. In fact, such is the case. It is caused by fowls gorging themselves by eating too much at a time, and particularly of mashes. It is really not as annoying to the fowl as it may be for the owner to look at. It i sa relaxed or lax condition of the muscles of the crop which should hold the food up in position but does not. This is more common to old hens which have been heavy eaters for a long time. There is but little remedy for it that is advisable. We do not think your hen has that kind of trouble.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Good Local Demand For Residence Lots

Agency Sells $4,000 a Day—Big Barbecue Saturday—Business and Building Show Gains.

At no time in the present year, say well known real estate men, has the demand been better for residence lots. The L. P. Bottenfield agency, for instance, sold fourteen lots for a total of $16,850, in the first four days of the week, or more than $4,000 a day. Eleven of these were in Clairmont Park, Decatur, and they brought $14,000. Three were in Peachtree Highlands, at an aggregate of $2,850.

Dr. Dan H. Griffith bought lot 1 in block 3 of the Clairmont Park subdivision for $2,000, and will erect a $5,000 home on it. Thomas M. Turner, of Florida, bought 19 Seal Place thruogh Hugh J. Lynch, associate sales manager, for $5,000, and has become associated with the Bottenfield agency as salesman. This lot is 47 by 150 feet.

Realty Barbecue Saturday.

All is in readiness for the barbecue of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock at Cold Springs. Judging from a poll of the real estate men, about 200 will be present. A brass band has been engaged and there will be something doing every minute. Lemonade has been ordered for the realty men who don't care for anything stronger. This barbecue is taking the place of the May and June monthly banquets of the board.

Bumper Crops Reported.

J. H. Ewing, of the real estate firm of Smith & Ewing, returned to Atlanta Friday from a trip into North Carolina, and reported the biggest wheat, oats, corn and cotton crops he had ever seen, despite the three inches of snow that fell. "With Secretary McAdoo's tender of $500,000,000 to help the financial situation, and such big crops coming," declared Mr. Ewing, "every kind of business is going to wake up as never before, and naturally the effect will be felt in real estate. There won't be any place for the calamity howler."

Other real estate men who expressed confidence in stable conditions were Edwin P. Ansley, who noted with great satisfaction the better conditions in the New York markets; Charles H. Black, of Turman, Black & Calhoun; Lowry Porter, of Porter & Swift; Ralph O. Cochran and John D. Babbage.

Remodeling Adair Offices.

Extensive alterations intended to give more room are going on in the real estate offices of Forrest & George Adair in the Atlanta National Bank Building. One or two new rooms will be added and a complete rearrangement made.

East Paces Ferry Paving.

The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company, developers of the Hedgerose Heights subdivision east of Buckhead, have begun to pave East Paces Ferry Road with macadam and chert, and the county has promised to pave a strip of it westward to Buckhead. The aggregate paving will be about three-quarters of a mile. This concern will also pave a new street, Maple Avenue, leading southeast from Peachtree Road, in conjunction with the Walton Realty Company. Holmes & Luckie have already laid tile sidewalks along Piedmont Road east of Peachtree, and will extend the same along East Paces Ferry Road half-way back to Buckhead.

Jump in Building.

Real estate men learned with interest Friday that building permits for the twenty-third week of 1913 far outstripped the figures for the same period last year. The number was the same, 60, but 1913's aggregated $302,194, while 1912's totaled only $92,800.

Changes on Real Estate Row.

Auburn Avenue, colloquially known as "Real Estate Row," has recently gained a convert in the Claude E. Sims Company, but is soon to lose two other agencies. The Lochridge-McClain-Moon Company and G. T. R. Fraser have received notice that they must vacate the old Y. M. C. A. building, which is to be remodeled by the Chamber of Commerce. The former will go to 4 North Pryor Street, the Kimball House, while the latter will seek space in an office building.

Other realty agents on "Real Estate Row" are George P. Moore, who named the street; John J. Woodside, Mercer W. Gilmer and the Willingham Real Estate Agency.

For Piedmont Car Line.

On account of its possible bearing on property values, real estate men heard with much interest Friday of the plan for the street railway company to use Piedmont Avenue rather than Ivy Street. The city made the suggestion that Ivy Street be left free of car tracks in order that big vehicles might use it and keep off Peachtree. President Arkwright ies said to be willing to the new arrangement if Piedmont Avenue property owners will consent.

What Is a Hero? Usually a Life Saver

You Can Be a Life Saver Very Easily BY KILLING FLIES

(Copyright, 1913)

You should kill flies. THE FLY IS THE MOST DANGEROUS INSECT ON EARTH. IT IS MORE DEADLY THAN THE COBRA. MORE DANGEROUS THAN THE TIGER.

It is your duty to kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM TYPHOID FEVER.

All good citizens must kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM INTESTINAL DISEASES.

Please kill flies. EVERY AUTUMN THERE IS A RISE IN THE DEATH RATE FROM TYPHOID. THIS RISE IS TRACED BY THE SCIENTISTS DIRECTLY TO THE FLY.

We beg of you to kill flies. THE FLY KILLS TENS OF THOUSANDS OF CHILDREN EVERY YEAR.

The fly causes more blindness in children than all other causes combined.

The fly spreads every known disease to children and to adults, for it frequents every disease breeding spot and hunts purposely for filth.

Early in the season KILL FLIES.

In the middle of the Summer KILL FLIES.

And in the Autumn and in the Winter, if you can find them, still KILL FLIES.

Treat the fly as our ancestors in the old days treated the red Indians and the wolves.

First, shut them out of your house, make sure that they won't get in; then kill them off as rapidly as possible and pray for the day when you will no longer have to protect your house against them.

Screen your windows.

Screen your doors.

New fly screens made of wire netting that will not rust are more important than a new coat of paint or a new automobile, for fly screens means protection for children.

Protect your house from the flies as absolutely as possible. Protect your food supplies and protect your babies' faces separately.

As the child lies asleep, keep mosquito netting over it.

Keep your sugar bowl, butter dish and food supplies covered.

Don't forget that if you see flies their breeding place is nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table, or in the cuspidor.

If there is no dirt or filth there will be no flies.

If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood write at once to the Health Department.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises. All refuse should be removed at once or covered with lime or kerosene.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

See that your sewerage system is in good order. Pour kerosene into the drains.

Cover food after a meal. Burn or bury all table refuse. Screen all food offered for sale. Buy no food that has been exposed to flies.

It is only by earnest intelligent co-operation that the fly can finally be abolished.

The citizens should combine, the national, State, city and village governments should combine with them to wipe out the unseen enemies of man, the flies that carry all the diseases, or very nearly all, and the mosquito that alone infects men with malaria and yellow fever.

THE THING CAN BE DONE, for it has been done by governments in Cuba, in Panama and in New Orleans.

The trouble is that the country will not take the matter seriously.

Darwin told us that one single pair of flies in forty-eight hours—the quick-breeding African fly—will lay enough eggs and breed enough maggots to devour a lion, leaving nothing but the white bones.

A few flies surviving through the Winter start the plague afresh the following year.

And one careless citizen leaving a breeding ground for mosquitoes supplies enough to infest the whole country.

Fortunately, for two or three years the people have been alive to the fact that their enemies are the tiny fly and mosquito and the invisible disease germs—enemies more deadly and dangerous than ever were the great monsters of prehistoric times or the wolves and lions of our day.

Discussion has begun, newspapers have taken it up and offered prizes. A few public officials have at last TRIED to do something. But only a beginning has been made.

The country must realize the danger and the duty. Children must be taught that the killing of flies is a good and necessary act, painful as it is to take life.

Do what you can to arouse public feeling for the sake of public safety.

And in the meanwhile DO WHAT YOU CAN INDIVIDUALLY.

Kill the flies.

Letters From The Georgian's Readers

DOGS IN GEORGIA.

Editor The Georgian:

I wish to thank you and indorse every word of your editorial on the dog. All the good deeds of ten million dogs can not counterbalance the death of one human being, and I would rather see every dog on earth slain than to see one little child die of the rabies.

Dogs have cost this State millions of dollars. A good many years back every farmer in the State raised sheep and had wool and mutton to sell. I have bought thousands and thousands of pounds of wool throughout Georgia, but to-day you won't find one pound where there used to be thousands. Ask any old farmer and he will tell you dogs are the sole cause of the disappearance of the sheep industry.

I have never heard one iota of evidence that the dog does anything for the good of humanity.

J. W. R.

GOOD ROADS.

Editor The Georgian:

In the campaign for the general good of everybody in this territory permit me to suggest that something be done toward not only the mere building of better roads, but better maintenance. If you have recently ridden over the Howell's Mill and Colyer's Ferry Roads you know what a mess was made of those nice roads by putting DIRT on fresh oil in such quantities that it was like an original dirt road with dust, instead of using sand or screening.

Here's for good roads! And let's have them oiled, too, but I think anyone with wide experience in the matter will say that common dirt as a "topper" is a mistaken idea. A. H. SAYERS.

"We Must Better the Mothers to Better the Race"

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

A BRIGHT woman named Elva D. Kellog has taken me to task for some verses wherein woman, as the mother, is accused of failing in her duty.

Mrs. Kellog quotes the final line of the poem and her criticisms follow:

"'We must better the mothers to beter the race.'

"Granted. But it will do no good until the fathers have become human beings instead of creatures lower than animals. Why not preach at the man DIRECTLY—why not speak to this generation, instead of merely urging mothers to make the next generation of men what it should be? After all, a mother can't do more than half anyway. A mother may bring up a girl alone quite creditably, but a father must have a hand with the son. And fathers are SHIRKING.

Then What?

"Another side of the question. Why do men shirk fatherhood? Oh, I know most every man WANTS TO HAVE CHILDREN. But after he gets them, then what? First, his is the sexual delirium, then the pleasure of anticipation, later real plans and the joy of possession, MINUS THE RESPONSIBILITY. For the mother, fear, dread, pain, agony, worry, an ever-present sense of responsibility—can this be offset by the pleasure of possession?

"We mothers are working ALONE to bring up our little men and women. Ever since the time of Adam, man has shifted responsibility of everything except the bread and butter side of the question. All too often the mother has her half of this responsibility added to the other three-quarters.

"Yet your cry is for MOTHERS to do their duty better. What in the world do you expect of the men? If men had the race responsibility laid at their door, the whole world would undergo a revolution. Men are only BIG CHILDREN—and they OUGHT to be MEN. Then they read your pleas to WOMEN and they begin to see where their own wife, the struggling mother of a band of seven or eight tots, is deficient; and straightway she is belittled in their eyes and they pat themselves on the back for doing THEIR duty. Dear knows, the male man is already an egotist, already a spoiled child, without anything a noted woman can write to make him more so.

"We must better the FATHERS to better the race.

"I would like to see you plead with men for better manhood, true fatherhood, and for the subduing of the much abused, too much indulged sex element, which is in itself a great cause of unwelcome babies and woman's rebellion against motherhood. We want to plan our babies as we would any other grand piece of work, and we can NOT do this until our husbands have become enlightened—have learned control along this line.

"Respectfully yours,

"ELVA D. KELLOG."

Mrs. Kellog has evidently failed to read many articles and verses in this column which have dealt with the subject she desires discussed.

Sex Hygienics.

It has often been urged that our preparatory schools and colleges for young men should include in the curriculum a thorough course in sex hygienics, in what is now known as eugenics; and that married men and fathers should be compelled by law to attend lectures on these subjects at least three times a year.

"Schools of Good Fatherhood" have also been advocated. As soon as a young boy is old enough to attend school he should begin his preparation for marriage and fatherhood by being taught the sacredness of his body, and the necessity to keep it clean and strong and full of healthful vigor. He should be warned of the danger which lies in obscene conversation, vulgar language or habits which could not be known by his mother and sisters. Woman should be made an object of reverence in his eyes, and any woman who is not worthy such reverence he should be taught to pity.

A Mother's Influence.

The scientific facts regarding the transmission of bad blood, made impure by nicotine, alcohol, drugs or sexual vices, should be taught him by teachers properly trained in such knowledge. Vice should be presented to him from its dangerous physical side as well as from the moral standpoint. And the innate pride every man feels in producing worthy descendants should be cultivated in him from early youth, until he as naturally protects his unborn sons and daughters from contamination as he guards himself from mutilation.

But I disagree with the bright woman when she says "The mother can do only half in bringing up a child."

A mother's influence over a child is just as much greater as her part in creating the child is longer in time than that of the father. It is not the mere sowing of the seed which makes a beautiful flower garden.

The caring for the ground in which the seed is sown, and the weeding and fertilizing and training of the plants after the sprout are what determine their vigor and perfection.

For three-quarters of a year before the human plant comes to the light the mother is molding it and influencing it with her thoughts, her habits and her physical condition.

The New Science.

For a year after it is visible its life depends upon her, not upon the father; and its first language, its first ideas, its first habits, are patterned upon the maternal plan.

This is a most important part of a child's life, and too much can not be said to make mothers realize their responsibility.

Mrs. Kellog wants the men of this generation to be talked to. That is well and good; but it is somewhat late to make these men what they might have been had their mothers begun with them in childhood. A wise, good, broad, wholesome-minded mother can make her boy exactly what she wants him to be, if she begins soon enough and is persistent and tactful in her methods—those early years of a child's life are of such vast importance in shaping his mind.

The new science of eugenics (new in its modern practical application to social problems) will make a great change in the ideas of men and women regarding domestic life and marriage relations.

The advent of women into medicine is gradually bringing a change of sentiment, and will eventually do away with some old traditions. Particularly the tradition that man can not exercise control over his passions, and that by nature he is so constituted that his immoralities are justifiable on the plea of health.

New Light on the Descent of Man

The Ancestors of Spiders and Scorpions Give Birth to the Family of Vertebrates.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE affirmation of science that apes and monkeys are our collateral relatives, sprung from the same ancestral stock, was once very offensive to many good people, some of whom still obstinately refuse to accept it. They think that it robs man of his dignity.

What, then, will they say when told that the ancestors of spiders and scorpions must now be included in the main trunk of the great genealogical tree whose topmost branch terminates, for the present, in man, and that without their intervention neither man nor monkey would have existed?

Nature Invents Backbone.

This assertion is based upon the discovery by Professor William Patten, of Dartmouth College, of the long-missing link between the vertebrate, or backboned animals, and their predecessors, the invertebrates, or animals without backbones.

Until nature invented the backbone there was no possibility of the existence of an upright animal constructed on the plan of the human skeleton. But the first back-boned animals were fishes. After the fishes came the amphibians, living part of the time in the water and part of the time on land. From the amphibians sprang the land reptiles and the birds, and from the reptiles arose the mammalians, or "mother animals," nourishing their young with their milk. The most progressive branch of the mammalians gave origin to a partially upright creature, which became the common ancestor of apes on the one hand and men on the other.

Thus the line of descent is clear from man back to the first vertebrates, the fishes. But ever since the days of Darwin zoologists have been puzzled by the question, "What animal was it that marked the change from the invertebrates to the fishes?"

There was the great "missing link" in the chain of animal life on this globe. Professor Patten believes that he has discovered this link in a curious extinct animal called the ostracoderm, which was developed out of the family of the arachnids (Greek arachne, "spider"), to which the scorpions also belong. The arachnids themselves are not vertebrates.

He Studied Scorpions.

The story of this discovery is intensely interesting. Professor Patten was led to it by observing the peculiar way in which the eyes in the embryo of a scorpion are transferred from the outside of the head to the blind ends of medium tubes projecting from the brain. This was so similar to what takes place in vertebral animals that he began to study the embryonic development of other species of arachnids, and was astonished to find the most striking resemblances with vertebrates. Among other things, he found that the brains of arachnids closely mimic those of vertebrates, both in general shape and subdivision, and in their functions.

Still, he could not conclude that the vertebrates sprang direct from the modern scorpions and spiders, because it is known that the first vertebrates were marine animals. But he remembered that the arachnids of to-day are also of marine descent, their ancestors having been marine arachnids, which flourished before any vertebrate animal had appeared. Evidently he must look for the missing link afar back in geological time.

Accordingly, he went back millions of years and fixed his suspicions upon the mysterious marine animal ostracoderm, which, although it was related to the marine arachnids, zoologists had always been puzzled to classify. He traveled wherever the fossils of this creature could be seen, and studied them minutely. But, unfortunately, all that had been collected were more or less imperfect, and his inquiry might never have been completed if he had not discovered a wonderful deposit of ostracoderms in the Devonian rocks on the shore of the Bay de Chaleur in Canada. The deposit was a small one, disclosed by the falling of a cliff. Professor Patten concluded that, millions of years ago, it had been the muddy bed of a shallow, brackish water pool, in which the animals had been trapped by the sudden running off of tide water, and had perished in a heap.

"One," he says, "in its death agony, had plunged into the mud with sufficient force to remain there, head down, in a vertical position. Others were arranged in a horizontal series, uniformly headed in a northeast direction."

Worked for Three Years.

He believes that their heads were turned against a gentle current of water, because the tops of all the fossil ferns found in the same bed were pointed in nearly the opposite direction. Was there ever so dramatic a picture of life on this earth countless ages ago? And then, to think that if these trapped creatures had been the only representatives of their kind, the great race of the vertebrates might have been extinguished in its cradle!

Many of the specimens were so perfectly preserved that the discoverer was able to ascertain the location of their principal sense organs, of their jaws, gills, stomach, etc., and their mode of locomotion, mode of feeding, and the nature of their food. For nearly three years he has worked upon these specimens in his laboratory, gradually disclosing their internal structure, until now he is able to affirm that the ostracoderm was neither a vertebrate nor an invertebrate, but intermediate between the two. In other words, it is the long-missing link, and it shows that the marine arachnids, the great-grandfather of the spiders and the scorpions, gave rise to a race of creatures in whom nature made her first experiments toward the production of a backbone, which no true arachnid was ever to possess, but which, when set erect in man, was topped with a brain that has made its possessor the master of the world and its secrets.

NEGRO FREED BUT JAILED AGAIN ON SUSPICION

Rosser Declares 'Gibbering Statements' Point Out Sweeper as Guilty of Slaying.

James Conley, self-confessed accessory after the fact in the murder of Mary Phagan, Friday was discharged by Judge L. S. Roan entirely from the custody of the State on the petition of Solicitor Dorsey.

Technically free, Conley was at once rearrested and held by the police on suspicion in the murder mystery. The action of Judge Roan constituted a victory for Solicitor Dorsey, who was fighting to prevent the authorities returning Conley to the Tower, from which he had been taken on the representation of his attorney, William M. Smith, that the negro was threatened and intimidated in the Tower.

Luther Z. Rosser, attorney for Leo Frank, made a bitter protest against the liberation of the negro, which, in the opinion of Judge Roan, was the only legal alternative of returning him to the county jail. He made a still stronger protest in a formal written statement placed on file as a record in the case.

Accuses Conley as Slayer.

In this he charged that the negro's series of "gibbering and incoherent statements," together with the attendant circumstances of the crime and Conley's subsequent actions, pointed to him as guilty of the murder beyond any reasonable doubt.

Attorney Rosser pointed out these highly suspicious circumstances in detail and went on to say that there was still more evidence which might be regarded as incriminating if the negro's case could be brought to the attention of the Grand Jury.

Less than ten minutes was occupied in the disposal of the case. Judge Roan did not read either the statement of Attorney Rosser or that of Attorney Smith, who submitted the reasons he wished his client kept at the police station. The dispatch with which the petition was acceded to was a complete surprise. A protracted and hard fought legal battle had been expected.

Judge Roan said he was without authority to hold the negro in the custody of the State so long as he had no formal application from either side. The Solicitor, he said, was asking for the release of the prisoner, and Attorney Rosser had characterized his statement only as a "suggestion."

Smith's Charges.

Attorney Smith's statement to the court charged intimidation, and that influences unfriendly to Conley and friendly to Frank were at the back of the movement to transfer Conley back to the jail. He alleged that neither the interests of justice nor the interests of Conley could be safeguarded by removing Conley from the police station.

Sheriff Mangum branded as an infamous lie the charge that the interests of Conley could not be safeguarded in the county jail, and had not been safeguarded. The only person involved in the charge of intimidating and threatening Conley characterized the accusation as absurd and grossly and wilfully exaggerated. He was present to testify at the hearing, but was not called.

The formality of releasing and rearresting Conley took place in front of the police station. The negro was brought to the sidewalk, where he had his freedom for about a second and was then again taken into custody.

Text of the Petition.

Mr. Rosser's paper was headed: Application of Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor General, to release James Conley from Legal Custody.

In answer to the petition and order in the above stated cause, served upon us, as attorneys for Leo Frank, w herewith answer and show cause as follows:

1. If the intention of the Solicitor General is to discharge this negro from custody because (a) he is in fact not a material witness against Frank, or (b) although he is a material witness, his integrity and character are such that he ought

Friday, the 13th, Ends Atlanta Jinx; Big Pump Working

Friday, the 13th, was a lucky day for Atlanta, viewed from the angle from which "Zode" Smith, manager of the waterworks, looked at the situation. The day brought nothing but good luck to him, and he walked into his office at the City Hall wearing a smile like unto the one worn by the gentleman in the moon.

"Why shouldn't I smile?" he asked, when questioned about the cause of his ultra-pleasant disposition. Then he answered the question: "That 10,000,000-gallon pump at the river is working to-day, the first time since last April. If you had had the same bunch of trouble lifted from you that I've had lifted from me, you'd be smiling, too."

The big 10,000-000-gallon pump not only got out of order in April, but it almost went to pieces.

Life Threatened Is Charge by Wife in Petition for Divorce

A petition for absolute divorce was filed Friday with the clerk of the Superior Court by Mrs. Daisie B. Bixby from her husband, Sam E. Bixby, an expert electrician employed by the United States Government at the Federal Prison.

Mrs. Bixby alleges that her huband used profane and obscene language in the presence of the children, and that on several occasions he threatened her life.

In 1906 Mrs. Bixby filed petition for divorce, but Bixby promised to treat her better, and she withdrew the petition.

Mrs. Bixby now asks for absolute divorce, custody of the three children and that her husband be required to provide permanent alimony.

Legislators Plan to Save Innocent From Abuse of Dictograph

Three members of the Legislature are working on bills to restrict the use of dictographs. The abuses to which the instrument has been put at various times and the possibility that innocent persons may be defamed if the device is in the hands of unscrupulous persons led to the movement to limit their use to persons known to be entirely responsible.

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—Tony Jannus and Arthur Isminger had a thrilling fight with fire 2,000 feet in the air at Alton, Ill., this morning. Jannus is flying to Chicago in a hydro-aeroplane. Near Alton one of the tail rods worked loose and Isminger turned in the machine and caught the rod, intending to hold it.

Isminger had to stand over the exhaust pipee and his coat caught fire from the engine sparks. Jannus released the levers quickly, and, seizing the burning coat, tore it from Ismingr's back.

VICE INQUIRY IS RESUMED BY GRAND JURY

Action Creates Surprise, as Probe Was Thought at End—R. R. Jackson on Stand.

The Grand Jury again took up an inquiry into the vice situation Friday afternoon, when a number of witnesses were called to ascertain the exact methods used by the Atlanta police department in their endeavor to stamp out vice.

The announcement that the Grand Jury would probe deeper into the vice situation came as a complete surprise, for it was stated several days ago that the Grand Jury had finished with this question.

R. R. Jackson, a former justice of the peace, now a member of the law firm of Gober & Jackson, was summoned to appear before the Grand Jury, together with John H. Gossatt, a former bailiff, who is now employed in Jackson's office.

Jackson Ignorant of Reason.

Mr. Jackson stated that he knew of no reason why the Grand Jury should call him. He admitted, however, that for many years he represented in an official capacity many women of questionable character, and that his knowledge of the residents of the tenderloin at one time was fairly accurate.

It is now thought that the Grand Jury will uncover the exact condition of vice in this city previous to the closing of the houses, for the purpose of determining whether conditions are worse now than they were at the time the houses were closed.

Many other witnesses are scheduled to come before the Grand Jury, and there is no doubt that the probe is on in earnest.

Jackson Tells Vice Facts.

R. R. Jackson was before the Grand Jury for more than an hour. He testified at length explaining many matters relating to vice in this city and was questioned closely regarding the order of the court in granting a restraining order prohibiting the police from closing up the house of Mrs. M. P. Powell.

Mr. Jackson quoted the law to the Grand Jury, and stated that under the law the judge in the Powell case had no other alternative than to grant the restraining order. Jackson gave a great many important facts concerning vice as a general proposition. He is considered the most important witness that has been examined by the Grand Jury during the whole of the vice probe.

Washington detectives are scouring that city in an effort to locate young George Gentry, the stenographer whose affidavit that the published dictograph report was "padded" was the sensation of the controversy between Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford and Colonel Thomas B. Felder.

Gentry Not Found Yet.

Chief of Police James L. Beavers, who is in Washington, secured the aid of the District detectives to have the youth located. Although the search has been in progress two days, it has carried the detectives no further than to locate Miss Jeannette Henning, a law clerk, who said she witnessed the affidavit without reading it or making any inquiry. Miss Henning said the paper was signed by her in room 802 of the Westery Building, occupied by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

Chief Beavers would not comment at any length on the new affidavit. He was of the same opinion Chief Lanford had expressed—that the paper was not genuine and if Gentry were produced he would testify that the first dictograph publication was correct.

Felder Sees No Difficulty.

Colonel Felder said there was no especial difficulty in locating Gentry and that he would be produced to testify if the Grand Jury wanted him. He said the young man had accepted a position as stenographer for one month, and that as soon as the month was out he would return to Atlanta.

Gentry was located about two weeks ago by a Burns detective of the Washington branch. Descriptions of him had been furnished every agency in America and there was a sharp lookout in every large city.

Foreman L. H. Beck stated that the jury had determined to make an exhaustive investigation.

JUDGE SPEER UNDER FIRE; RECORD IS PROBED

Inspector of Department of Justice in Macon Investigating Official and Private Character.

MACON, GA., June 13.—The entire official record of Judge Emory Speer is being investigated by a special agent of the Department of Justice, J. T. Lewis, an assistant in the United States Attorney General's office, and a personal representative of Attorney General McReynolds, has been in Macon for a week engaged in this work.

Not only the official acts, but also the personal character of Judge Speer is also being scrutinized, with the view of determining if there is any foundation for charges of an impeachment nature.

Judge Speer is fully informed as to the purpose of the visit of Inspector Lewis to Macon.

Started by Huff Charges.

It is said that the investigation was promoted by the charges made last year by Colonel W. A. Huff, who has since been found guilty for sending to Judge Speer the letters which contained the accusations. However, the Huff civil case does not, it is said, figure to any great extent in the investigation, the probe being concerned with the judge's record for the past 28 years. Inspector Lewis has interviewed numerous Macon attorneys, court officials and citizens, and he has begun the taking of affidavits. Newspaper files are also being consulted.

District Attorney Alexander Akerman declines to make any statement as to the investigation, referring inquirers to the Attorney General for information. Mr. Lewis also refuses to discuss the assignment.

Not Opposed by Bartlett.

It is believed here that Congressman Bartlett was approached by the Department of Justice with regard to the investigation of Judge Speer, and that he did not oppose it.

Colonel Huff states that regardless of the activity of the Department of Justice he is proceeding with his plan of petitioning Congress to investigate charges which he will make against Judge Speer. He says that his charges have slight connection with his case, but deal almost altogether with other acts which he imputes to Judge Speer. Colonel Huff is expecting a visit from Inspector Lewis, and he says he will freely give the special agent all information that he has in his possession.

The disclosure that Judge Speer is under fire has caused a genuine sensation here.

Painter Analysis Goes to Coroner

BALTIMORE, MD., June 13.—The analysis of the organs of E. O. Painter, the late fertilizer man of Jacksonville, was completed to-day by Dr. Charles Glaser, a chemist of this city. The report was mailed to Coroner C. D. Abbott, at Jacksonville, this afternoon.

Although refusing to discuss in any way his findings, Dr. Glaser let drop remarks that intimate that a long court fight will ensue before the large Painter insurance claims are settled.

Mrs. Dodd's Will Upheld by Judge

Efforts to break the will of Mrs. Barbara Dodd, who bequeathed the bulk of her $120,000 estate to Mercer University, received a check by the decision of Judge Wilkinson Friday which sustained the validity of the wealthy woman's bequests. Unless a compromise is effected the case will be further contested before a jury in Superior Court.

The relatives represented in their caveat that Mrs. Dodd was led to give away most of her fortune to the university because she was afflicted by the hallucination she had been wronged by them.

CONLEY, FREED, AGAIN JAILED ON SUSPICION

Dorsey Wins Over Rosser in Contest Over Negro Implicated in Phagan Case.

to have his liberty and be trusted to obey the subpena of this court, then considered as a witness only, he ought to be discharged and indeed he should not have been imprisoned at all. But in such case to enact the farce in the court's presence of releasing the negro and immediately return him to his wet nurses at the police station would resemble child's play.

2. But if the Solicitor believes that one of a number of contradictory statements made by this negro may, if properly preserved, be made valuable in the prosecution of Frank and that the negro may destroy its value if left free to talk, and in order to stop his mouth it is necessary that the detectives should keep him in charge, then we think we have the right to protest against any order of a court of justice that winks at such a purpose.

Release Not Considered.

3. We are constrained to the conclusion that it is not the purpose for any reason to release this negro, but, by obtaining the order here sought, continue the present illegal confinement.

4. But Frank is himself deeply interested in this proceeding. That the consent of the Solicitor and the will of the negro is all that is required to reverse the will of the law is erroneous. The State has the right in the interest of justice to put a witness in custody, but where in custody and in whose custody is of the highest importance. The law has given such custody to the Sheriff, and wisely so. The Sheriff is not a prosecutor; the jail itself is not usually a place of punishment, but a temporary place of detention. The Sheriff is supposed to stand impartially between the State and his prisoners, and may be trusted to neither coajole, threaten nor suppress testimony by third degree methods. The law never meant to place a witness who for lack of character needs confinement under the control of a partisan prosecutor.

5. That the detectives should wish to keep Conley in custody and entertain him at the city's expense is not at all surprising. They have already extracted from him extravagant, unthinkable confessions, three or four in number. To these statements they have given the widest publicity, and to the credibility of the last one they have staked their reputations and hope of place.

All Staked on Conley.

6. Upon the constancy and stability of this witness they have staked their all. They would be less than human if they did not bend all their power and ingenuity in holding him to his present statement, adding to and taking therefrom only such things as will aid its credibility.

Can any fair-minded man believe that Lanford is a fair man to be the custodian of this ignorant negro? What chance would he have to retract any lies he may have told, or if in a repentant mood he should wish to tell the truth? This negro in the city prison, in the power of Lanford, apart from all questions of truth, would be just as dangerous as Lanford would wish him to be. No one knows that better than Lanford, and no one would feel it as acutely as will this negro.

How well Lanford knows it can be seen from his interview in The Georgian of June 12. In that interview he demonstrated that he thinks he has full, unrestricted ownership of this negro. He graciously expresses his willingness for this negro to go before the Grand Jury upon such terms as he suggests. Neither the negro nor the negro's lawyer nor the Grand Jury is considered. Nor was this court to be consulted—his will and not the order of this court was to determine when and under what circumstances the negro should leave the police station.

Lanford's Power Questioned.

If Lanford vaunts in the face of jury and court his power over this negro, what must be his bearing when he deals privately with the negro himself? What chance has he to abstract a lie or add a truth to the foolish statement which Lanford approves and wishes to maintain? If this man will, when he is holding this negro under your honor's order, declare such ownership over this negro's person and movements to what length would he go if the court releases its power over him and turns him over to Lanford's unrestricted power?

6. It is just to Frank, as well as in the interest of public justice, that this negro should be detained by unbiased, fair men, whose reputations and positions are not at stake.

The law recognizes this right and has put that duty upon the Sheriff. Will there be less fairness and less decency in the county jail than in the police station? When did Lanford become a wiser, fairer, better man than the Sheriff of this county?

7. Apart from this negro's position as a witness, his detention in the custody of the detectives would be a public calamity. Many unbiased people believe this negro is the murderer of little Mary Phagan. The facts of the case, apart from his own confession, point most strongly to him as the guilty man.

Evidence Against Negro.

(a) On the day of the murder he was drunk and concealed himself in a position where he could readily commit the murder.

(b) On Monday morning he was unduly excited; so much so as to arouse the suspicions of the employees. On Saturday night after the murder he was caught hiding in his own house.

(c) When the police were in the building he was caught hiding in an obscure part of the factory, where he had no business.

(d) When questioned about this conduct, he said he would give a large sum to be a white man. When asked why, he said he could then get safely past the police.

(e) He for a long time persistently denied that he could write, and did not admit that he could until longer denial was useless.

(f) He was caught washing a shirt, a thing he had never done before, and when caught gave a foolish excuse.

Trapped Into Confession.

(g) He denied all participation in or knowledge of the crime until he was driven by the charge that he wrote the notes found near the body.

(h) On May 18 he made a signed statement outlining his actions on April 26, making no mention of the murder.

(i) On May 24 he made an affidavit. He said that on April 25, before the murder on April 26, he wrote the notes at the request of Frank, for which Frank gave him cigarettes and $2.50, and added statements about Frank's people in Brooklyn and an inquiry by Frank as to why he should hang.

(j) On May 28 Conley made a long affidavit, full of contradictions and absurdities, beginning it as follows:

"I make this statement, my second statement in regard to the murder of Mary Phagan at the National Pencil factory. In my first statement I made the statement that I went into the pencil factory on Friday, April 25, and went into Frank's office at five minutes to 1 o'clock, which is a mistake. I made this statement in regard to Friday in order that I might not be accused of knowing anything of this murder, for I thought if I put myself there Saturday they might accuse me of having a hand in it, and I now make my second and last statement regarding the matter freely and voluntarily, after thinking over the situation, and I have made up my mind to tell the whole truth, and I make it freely and voluntarily, without the promise of any reward or from force or fear of punishment in any way."

"First Confession Rambling."

(k) After this beginning he sets out with variations the writing of the notes on Saturday instead of on Friday, and in a long, rambling statement his movements at home and on Peters Street on Saturday and on Monday at the factory, most of which is wholly disconnected with the murder.

(l) On May 29, 1913, although he had already sworn that he had made "his true, full and last statement," he made another statement in which he purported to aid Mr. Frank in concealing the body of Mary Phagan. This statement is full of contradictions and wholly irreconcilable with itself and with the known facts surrounding the murder.

(m) He closes this remarkable affidavit in the following words: "The reason I have not told this before is that I thought Mr. Frank would get out and help me out, but it seems that he is not going to get out, and I decided to tell the whole truth about the matter."

(n) These are some of the facts well known to the public and to the detectives, showing Conley's guilt. There are other powerful facts which could readily be brought before the Grand Jury.

8. These incoherent, gibbering statements will, it is believed, impress the Grand Jury if the negro Conley's case is submitted to it.

9. The Grand Jury can be trusted to scan these queer statements in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and, taken in connection with all the other facts implicating Conley, they proclaim his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt.

(10) The detectives, obsessed as they are with the assumption that Conley is a tool and not a murderer, are unfit to keep him in their sole and unlimited power. Under their protecting care Conley, instead of being left to tell the truth, will at length deceive himself into the belief that instead of being a murderer he is an unfortunate victim.

"Detectives Protecting Negro,"

(11) That Conley and his counsel wish it is the best reason why it should be done. As long as he sticks to a story pleasing to the detectives, or builds upon that story as additions may be needed, he is assured that the detectives will save him as far as possible from the court and Grand Jury, and will, so far as they can fix upon him no greater crime than a misdemeanor.

(12) Conley and his counsel are wise. There is for them no other hope than for the detectives to keep Conley and save him from a confession that he committed the crime, giving him immunity, provided he continues to put the guilt on Frank.

Sheriff Shows Up Smith.

Denial of practically every assertion made by Conley or his attorney, William M. Smith, regarding jail regulations or the treatment of the negro while in the county prison, was made by Sheriff Mangum when informed of the contents of the affidavit and petitions submitted to Judge Roan.

"Smith's statements are infamous lies," said the Sheriff. "There is absolutely no foundation for belief by Conley that he was being poisoned when he was given the sandwiches. The negro lied when he said he did not eat the food. He did eat the four sandwiches. They were given to him by a reporter, who told me all about his interview. The newspaper man said he wanted to get on Conley's good side and get information for his paper. In the story he wrote he told frankly of the tactics he had used to get information.

"The regulations in the Fulton County jail are as good as those in any county prison anywhere. If Smith says that the jail is not competently guarded he is maliciously falsifying, and he knows it. We have no spies for use in matters that do not concern us, nor have we prying attendants at this jail.

"As I said before, Smith's assertions are too preposterous to take heed of."

Intimidation Charged.

Conley's attorney, William M. Smith, in a petition accompanying the negro's affidavit, declares that the county jail is scantily guarded and that prison regulations were extremely lax.

"The county prison has at times but one guard inside its walls," the petition declares; "it is a physical impossibility for this deputy to be at all points and know what is going on; that the actual custody of the prisoners is placed in the hands of trusty prisoners, some of whom are absolutely unreliable; that deponent visited James Conley at the county prison and that it was difficult for anything to be done or said without the espionage of these trusty prisoners, who were overly anxious to know the character of deponent's connection with Conley's case.

Smith Sees Bias.

"That deponent talked with a man who, he is advised, is of Jewish extraction and who deponent believes is doing all he can reasonably to place the blame for this crime on his client (Conley), and who is desirous of seeing the defendant (Frank) cleared; and this man admitted to this deponent that he did visit the cell of said Conley and offered him sandwiches and promised whisky and however he specifically disclaimed his being the party who had threatened said Conley at a later hour, and stated that the sandwiches and whisky were offered in good faith with no intention to harm Conley, that the identity of this party is known to deponent and can be given the court upon request; that knowing the conditions as they exist at the county jail, deponent declares that the ends of justice will not be served by detention of James Conley at the county prison, but that same will be materially harmed and damaged."

Conley Repeats Charges.

Conley, in his affidavit, declared that during his stay in the county jail he was constantly being menaced by persons whom he suspected of the intention to poison him.

"Affiant swears that he was visited by numerous persons, strangers to him, while he was held in the county prison," the affidavit reads; "that deponent was visited by a young man at one time who appeared to be of Jewish descent, who offered this deponent sandwiches to eat; that deponent did not eat the sandwiches, for fear of being poisoned; that late in the night, after the lights had been turned out, a man came to the cell of deponent and struck a match and looked in and asked deponent if he did not know he would be hanged; told deponent that he was telling a d—d lie on Frank, and would be hanged sure as h—l; asked deponent if he did not know he could shoot him in his cell, if he was a mind to do so; that on account of the darkness deponent was unable to find out who this was; that the only desire of deponent is that he be given protection and be in hands of sworn officers of the law and not turned over to any prisoner or to 'trusty turnkeys' where there is any possibility for this deponent to be harmed in any way."

Slap at Sheriff.

Conley, in answer to the rule nisi, further attacks the regulations at the county jail, and the treatment accorded him in that institution:

"Respondent is advised that the keys to practically all of the cell blocks are carried by 'convicted criminals,'" the answer states; "that owing to this condition, men have been known to saw through steel bars and cages and escape.

"That this respondent was imprisoned while in the county jail directly over the cell block in which said defendant (Frank) is detained; that this respondent is advised and believes that the Sheriff of this county publicly proclaimed that the defendant looks him in the eye like an innocent man."

Release and Rearrest.

A dramatic moment attended the release and rearrest of Conley Friday morning in connection with the working of the court's order that the negro be given his liberty.

Chief of Detectives Lanford appeared at the door of Conley's cell at 11 o'clock.

"Well, Jim," said the Chief, "I am going to release you."

The negro received this statement with a look of fright, but was silent as well as bewildered.

Taken from his cell, Conley was led by the Chief through the sergeant's office and to the side door of the police station, which opens into an alley. The negro followed his captors with apparent bewilderment.

The party proceeded down the alley to the sidewalk. There a small crowd greeted the negro with curious eyes. Chief Lanford took his hand from Conley's arm. Conley was a free man.

His freedom was but for an instant, though. Before Conley could move or recover from his astonishment, Detective McGill took him by the arm.

"I will have to arrest you and take you back, Jim," Chief Lanford said.

Conley's face brightened perceptibly.

"That's all right," he smiled. "I didn't want to get out, anyhow."

Appearing opposite Conley's name now on the police register is the word, "Released," and, following it, "Suspicion," the charge upon which he was rearrested.

RETAIL AVTIVITY PORTENDS BIG BUSINESS

Dealers Report Sale Increases in All Lines, With Unusually Good Collections.

Retail trade in Atlanta is making a remarkable showing. Nearly every Whitehall Street merchant reports an increase of sales over 1912, good collections and a remarkable amount of cash trade.

Were they not so cheering, the statements would be monotonous in their unanimity. Busy streets, busy clerks, and busy office forces bear out the assertions of prosperity and further emphasize the fact that the depression in New York is by no means to be taken as typical of the conditions in this city.

"I don't like a croaker," remarked F. J. Paxon. "The other day it rained. A friend, head of a conservative business, dropped in to see me. He certainly was blue.

"'Business is rotten,' he ejaculated.

"'I don't know anything about the inside of your business,' I told him, 'but I'll bet you a box of cigars that your sales are ahead of last year.'

"'I'll take you,' he remarked. 'I'll get some cigars anyhow.'

"But he sent me the box of Havanas you see on my desk. He had his accounting department run a total of his sales, and wrote me a note saying it was worth the cigars to get cured of the blues. His sales showed several hundred dollars' gain over last year, which was an excellent season.

"So it goes, all down the line. The business man and the financier get billous. They need calomel. They need a wider viewpoint. They are too easily influenced by a rainy day or one or two complaints.

"Jones comes to me and says he can't pay his bill and wants an extension. Smith drops in next day with the same tale. Robinson has a wail of identical nature. I get depressed and decide collections are poor. In the meantime, 97 other people have paid their bills at the cashier's window and I haven't seen them. At the end of the month, I find collections up to normal.

"January, February and March brought us sales equal to the first quarter of 1912. April and May brought substantial gains. We look for continued good business."

Steel Trust 'Stung' $35,000,000 Worth

NEW YORK, June 13.—Testimony given to-day by Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the finance committee of the United States Steel Corporation, brought out the fact that the purchase of the Tennessee Coal and Iron Company in 1907 resulted in an outlay of approximately $50,000,000 by the corporation. Gary also said the corporation expended over $14,000,000 in four years to improve the property.

Judge Dickson pointed out that the corporation had paid out approximately $50,000,000 for property valued at less than $15,000,000.

FRIENDS OF BOY FORGER SEEK HIS RELEASE

Suspended Sentence Movement Active in Behalf of Wayward Youth in Prison Here.

An effort to gain the release from prison of Paul H. VanDeusen, 19 years old, who several months ago forged a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, is being made by influential citizens throughout the United States who are active in the suspended sentence movement.

United States District Attorney Tate, of Atlanta, has received nearly twenty petitions asking that VanDeusen be given another chance.

VanDeusen several months ago lived in Atlanta with Roy Rubenstien. The two boys look much alike. Rubenstien had a postal savings account at the local postoffice. On two different occasions VanDeusen took the account book of Rubenstien to the postoffice and drew a total of $15 in Rubenstien's name.

Soon afterward VanDeusen went to Los Angeles, where he got a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company as a telegrapher. In some manner he appropriated $53 of the company's money and was arrested.

VanDeusen pleaded guilty and was sentenced to three years. The judge taking into consideration the age of the prison, suspended sentence and paroled VanDeusen back to his mother, Mrs. Susan VanDeusen, of Jamestown, N. Y. After he had been paroled in Los Angeles he was rearrested on the charge of forging a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, and arrangements were made to bring VanDeusen to Atlanta for trial.

Mexican States in South Are Seceding

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, June 13.—The long predicted secession in Southern Mexico has actually begun. Governor Manuel Castilla, of the State of Campeche, to-day formally proclaimed his State independent of the central government.

The governments of Yucatan, Tabasco, Chipas and the Territory of Quintana Roo are expected to take similar action.

A confederacy of the South probably will be formed unless the Federals are able to crush out the rebellion.

Motorcyclist Injures Bicyclist Internally

Edward Stewart, a negro, started across Marietta Street at Thurmond Friday morning to go to his work at the Stein Junk Company's plant.

C. A. Cabe, a Southern Railway switchman, who was riding his motorcycle at a high rate of speed down Marietta Street, failed to see the negro and his machine knocked Stewart down and injured him internally. He was taken to Grady Hospital, where his condition was stated to be serious.

A charge of speeding was lodged against Cabe.

Chicago Fan Dies in Hal Chase's Defense

CHICAGO, June 13.—Fred J. Porter fell dead while in the midst of a heated argument with baseball fans over the trading of Hal Chase by the Yankees to the White Sox.

Herman Schweitzer and J. B. Willet told Porter that Chase was the Yankees' "hoodoo," and the Sox would land in the "cellar" before the season was over.

Porter grew excited in his defense of Chase, staggered into a chair and died.

Layton To Be Buried In West Virginia

Harry B. Layton, 42 years old, formerly secretary of the Tifton, Ga., Chamber of Commerce, died in an Atlanta private sanitarium. The body was shipped Thursday afternoon to Morgantown, W. Va., for funeral and interment.

Mr. Layton is survived by his mother, Mrs. Louia Layton, of Pittsburg, and one brother, H. F. Layton, of the same city.

Ice Man Fights Tax; Denies He's Peddler

J. H. Crane, an ice dealer, filed a petition with the Clerk of the Superior Court Friday against Tax Collector A. P. Stewart, preventing him from enforcing the collection of $50 as a special tax for delivering ice.

Crane claims that he is not a peddler, as he has his regular customers and does not solicit business from house to house, and is not liable to this special tax.

Lucky '13' Follows President Wilson All of Hoodoo Day

WASHINGTON, June 13.—As usual, the fatality of the number 13 followed President Wilson on this Friday, June 13. The President awoke this morning to the realization that this was his "lucky day."

The hands of the simple alarm clock which serves to awaken the Chief Executive pointed to 7:13 o'clock as he arose. Exactly one hour later the President sat down to breakfast, and 9:13 marked his entrance to the executive offices, where he found that Joseph Tumulty (13 letters) had placed 13 roses in his vase.

Thirteen names in connection with the Industrial Commission were presented by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, who arrived at 10:39 (add the figures). The cabinet session was unusually late, it being 11:13 before the President called the meeting to order, noting that five of the men assembled (William J. Bryan, Franklin K. Lane, David C. Houston, William Wilson and William McAdoo) each had 13 letters to his name.

Observance of Flag Day in State Urged By D. A. R. Regent

A request that the citizens of Georgia observe Flag Day, Saturday, June 14, has been made by Mrs. S. F. Foster, State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She asks that flags be displayed on all public buildings, school houses and private residences, and that every man show his patriotism and loyalty in this way. Flags will be displayed on every building belonging to Uncle Sam, both in the United States and in his island possessions.

Saturday is the 136th anniversary of the adoption of the Stars and Stripes as the flag of the American Republic. Years ago the D. A. R. started an agitation to have the anniversary celebrated each year with a display of the flag, and their efforts have met with much success. Last year practically every city and town in the country was literally alive with flags, and this year it is hoped that the citizens will again show their patriotism.

Normal Weather Is Promised Again if Jinx Doesn't Tamper

Friday the Thirteenth promises to be notable for at least one good thing. Unless the Jinx has fooled with the Weather Man's instruments, the day will go down in history as the day on which Old Man Winter gave up the fight and Kid Summer came into his own.

Saturday will be even warmer, and if the weather runs on schedule the thermometer will reach 85 or 86. Sunday, unless all indications fail, will be one of those sticky June days that are prayed for in December and cursed when they arrive.

Horse Guards Give Last Dance Before Annual July Outing

A reminder of the summer encampment, always a memorable occasion with the Governor's Horse Guards of Atlanta, came Thursday night in the dance of that organization held in Taft Hall. The members of the Guards will go soon to the coast for their annual outing, and the dance was given as the final social gathering before their departure.

More than 100 couples were on the floor of Taft Hall, all of them loyal to the Horse Guards, talking of the Horse Guards, singing of the Horse Guards. The dance was an informal hop, at which no uniforms were worn, and where, with the camaraderie which marks the organization, a private was as good as a non-com, and a non-com as an officer.

PLAN BOULEVARD ON IVY, TRACKS ON PIEDMONT

Council Committee and Arkwright Tentatively Agree to Scheme to Ease Congestion.

Ivy Street for a boulevard and Piedmont Avenue for double track car service was the plan tentatively favored by the street railway committee of the General Council and President P. S. Arkwright, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, Thursday afternoon.

Pending grading and repaving, Ivy Street has been stripped of car tracks. It is the desire of the street railway committee to keep the tracks off, making the street an unobstructed boulevard, and to compensate the street railway company for loss of is Ivy Street franchise by permitting the laying of double tracks on Piedmont Avenue.

President Arkwright agreed this scheme would be advantageous to the street railway company as well as to the city.

The double track service on Piedmont would extend from East Pine Street to Decatur. It would take care of traffic from all of North and Northeast Atlanta, affording relief from congestion to Pine Street.

The Ivy Street boulevard proposition came up when President Arkwright asked the Street Railway Committee for two franchises, one on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer, and one on Ivy Street from Edgewood to Auburn. These franchises are for short rights-of-way, designed to facilitate ingress and egress to and from the car barns.

It was when this request was made that George H. Boynton, chairman of the Street Car Committee, made known the desire of the committeemen to convert Ivy Street into a boulevard and divert street car traffic to Piedmont.

This plan would include the short franchise sought by the street car company on Piedmont from Decatur to Edgewood. President Arkwright signified that the plan would be acceptable to his company, but he wanted further time before agreeing.

Owners of property on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer Streets object to the new plan, but the Street Car Committee thinks they must yield for the benefit of the whole city.

Council to Consider Tax Office Reform

An amendment to the city charter consolidating all the departments of the tax office and placing them under the City Assessors has been put through the Tax Committee by Alderman James R. Nutting.

The amendment is said to have been proposed because of friction between the three Assessors and G. B. Beauchamp, Chief Clerk and Tax Receiver. It will be considered by Council Monday afternoon.

DIES WATCHING SENSATIONAL MOVIE FILM

Heart Failure Takes Off C. G. Maner, Drug Company Collector, in Picture Theater.

C. G. Maner of 386 South Moreland Street, a collector for the Elkin Drug Company, died in the Alcazar Theater Friday morning about 10:30 o'clock as he was watching a picture advertised as "hair-raising incidents, cleverly woven into an astounding story of jungle terror." Death is believed to have been due to heart failure, as Maner left his office Friday morning apparently in the best of health and spirits.

Maner took a seat in the theater in the third row, left, near the back. No one noticed anything unusual until 10:30 o'clock when a spectator, passing up the aisle, reported to the office that a man was "snoring" on the third row. The doorkeeper responded and shook the man to wake him up.

Dead When Removed.

The man who later proved to be Maner, was found to be dying. Manager Jackson says he believes he was dead when the doorkeeper reached him, as his eyes were glassy and his mouth open.

The dead man was taken to Patterson's, where he was identified as C. G. Maner, by means of a collector's card in his pocket.

The family, consisting of wife and one daughter, Mrs. Dr. Warnock, were notified immediately.

In Best of Health.

Maner, apparently, had no warning of the end. He left Elkin's drug store Friday morning in buoyant spirits, according to T. E. Jennings, assistant manager, who said he joked with Maner just before he left about 8:30 o'clock.

Maner, according to Mr. Jennings, told him Thursday night how fine he felt. Maner was about 55 years old and had been employed by the Elkin Drug Company about three years.

Autos on Peachtree Disturb Man's Sleep

Edward McDowell, 647 Peachtree Street, complained to Assistant Chief of Police Jett Friday morning that he can not sleep at night because of the unearthly noise made by automobilists who pass his domicile.

They run with their mufflers wide open, McDowell declared, and they violate every known automobile law. He declared that "while Atlanta may be tight in other respects, it is a wide-open town when it comes to automobile mufflers."

He characterized the autoists as "road hogs."

Boy Slayer, 14, Given Sundae at Cell Door

JOLIET, ILL., June 13.—Before Herman Coppes, aged 14, entered the State penitentiary here he was taken to an ice cream parlor, where he ate a chocolate sundae—probably the last he ever will have. Half an hour later he had entered on the first day of a life sentence for the murder of Mrs. Maude Sleep and her two children, of Elgin, Ill.

He was given his first long trousers—part of the convict uniform—and to-day he will be assigned to work.

Hot Race on for Presidency of Georgia Senate

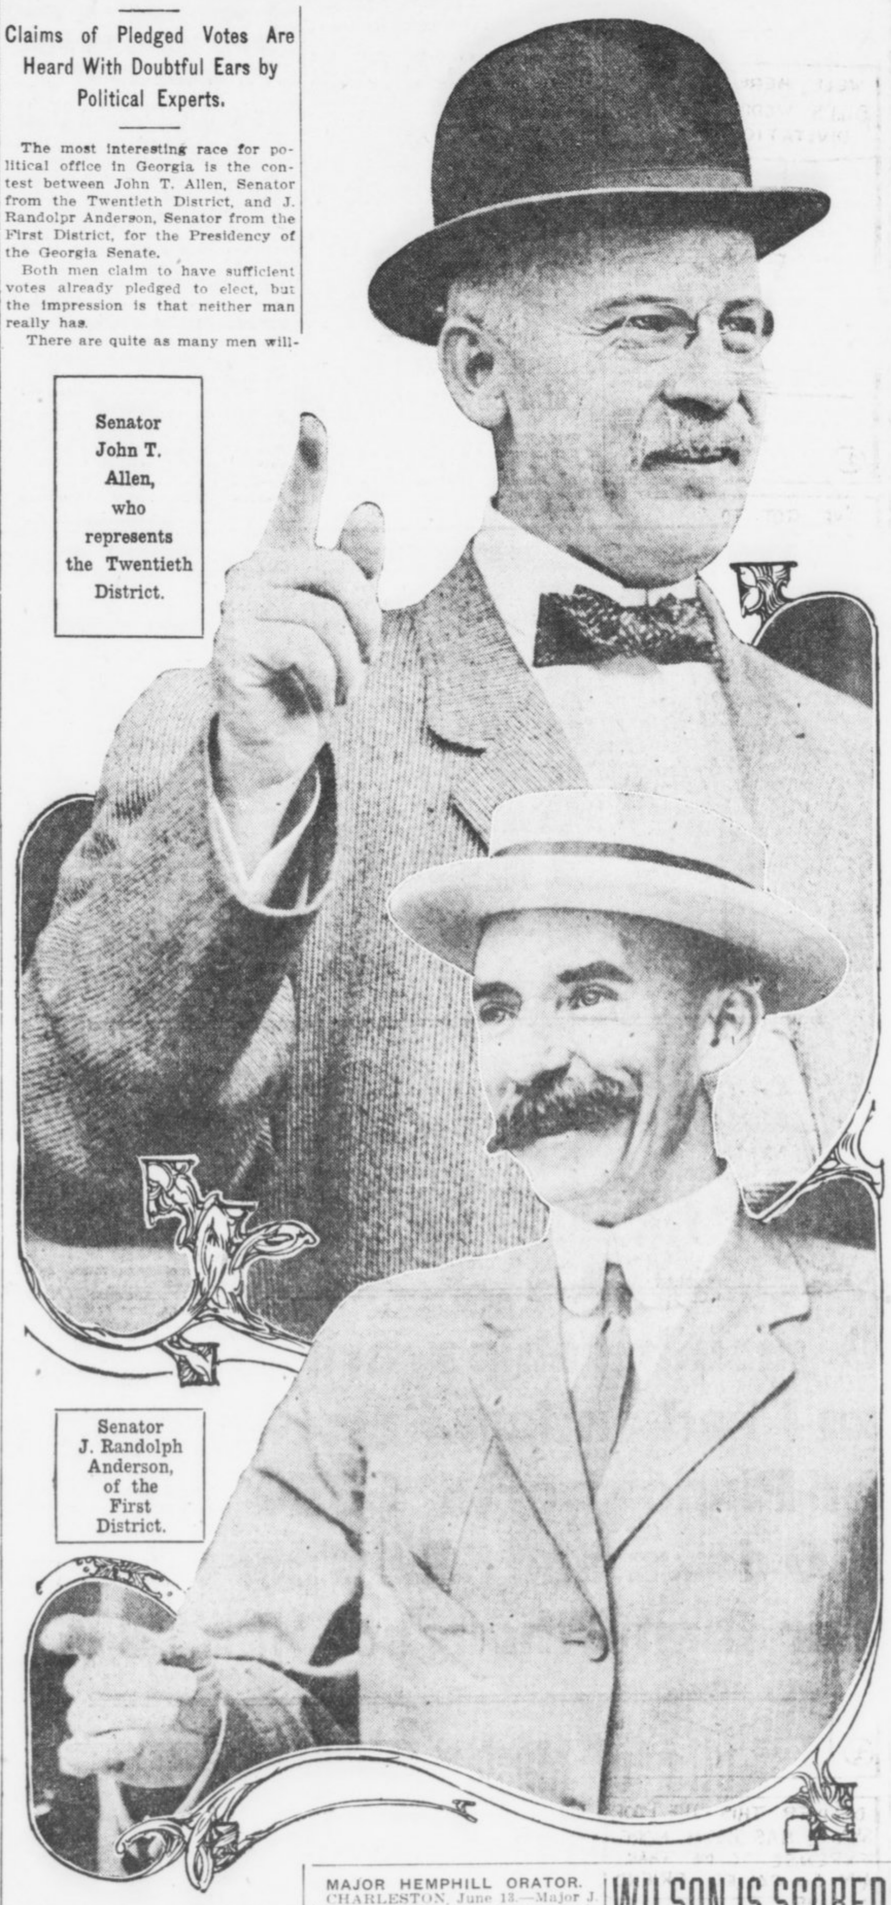
Allen and Anderson Both Claim Victory Is Sure

Claims of Pledged Votes Are Heard With Doubtful Ears by Political Experts.

The most interesting race for political office in Georgia is the contest between John T. Allen, Senator from the Twentieth District, and J. Randolpr Anderson, Senator from the First District, for the Presidency of the Georgia Senate.

Both men claim to have sufficient votes already pledged to elect, but the impression is that neither man really has.

There are quite as many men willing to bet on Allen as on Anderson. Each has his avowed following in the new Senate, but not nearly enough Senators to elect either are talking right out loud in meeting.



Senator John T. Allen, who represents the Twentieth District.

Senator J. Randolph Anderson, of the First District.

Judge Allen is a former member of the Senate. He is one of Middle Georgia's best known and most prominent attorneys. He is a fine parliamentarian, a good mixer, and a man of poise and common sense.

Mr. Anderson is one of South Georgia's best known attorneys. He has been a member of the House several times, is skilled in political diplomacy, and is known as a most resourceful man in the gentle game of politics.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the last House, and took a very prominent part in its proceedings. He long ago announced his candidacy for the Presidency of the Senate, and was named Senator in the elections last fall, without opposition, and with the distinct understanding that he was to be in the race for the Senate Presidency.

Judge Allen likewise was named Senator from his district, without opposition, but did not enter the race for the Presidency until after his election to the Senate.

Both men have secured headquarters in the Kimball House, where things will be kept on the jump until the contest is decided.

As between Allen and Anderson personally, there seems to be very little room for choice.

Politically, moreover, they have not been avowed enemies, although they have differed widely on many subjects.

Besides being a practicing attorney in Savannah, Mr. Anderson has large and extensive commercial and manufacturing interests there, while Senator Allen, besides being a practicing attorney in Milledgeville, is interested in banking enterprises.

WILSON IS SCORED FOR LOBBY STAND

Senator Gallinger Styles President's Speeches "Worst Kind of Influence."

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, turned the lobby investigation into a political debate to-day when he declared that President Wilson's recent warning to business men not to cut wages unfairly or attempt to start a panic because of the tariff situation was "about the worst kind of influence I can imagine," and that the President's charge of an "insidious lobby" was "a species of lobby influence and most unfortunate."

Senator Reed asked him if the supply of inspired articles sent to the country press was not a species of lobbying. The Senator replied that it was sharp practice. He had previously upheld the right of the sugar interests to come to Washington to present their case. He did not regard this as lobbying if publicity or other legitimate means were employed.

"Then you believe that the sugar interests may make their arguments, but that the President should not?" inquired Senator Reed.

"I am sorry to see the Executive encroach upon the legislative powers," replied Senator Gallinger.

Senator Gallinger declared that anyone whose business is about to be injured has a right to protect himself. He also stated he knew of no particular case of coercion, and that he had no interest in the tariff bill.

CANAL TO BE DRY UNTIL WILSON VIEWS IT

President Will Wait Congress Adjournment—Goethals Anxious to be Relieved of Job.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Colonel W. E. Goethals, Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal, called at the White House yesterday to discuss the progress of work there. He told the President that water could be turned into the Canal shortly after October 1, but that he would not order it done if the President found it impossible to visit the Canal during September.

President Wilson assured the Chief Engineer that he would visit Panama the moment Congress adjourned.

Peculiar Position.

Colonel Goethals has been the Chief Engineer and supreme executive of the Canal organization since the project was put in the hands of army engineers.

These functions are not based on any law of Congress, but the direct admonition of President Roosevelt to the members of the commission when he appointed them. He told them there was no authority in law for making Colonel Goethals the head of the force to be employed on the Canal, but that his power of appointment would be used to enforce his decision not to ask Congress for further legislation and to make Colonel Goethals the supreme authority. Every member of the commission understood and accepted his appointment on that condition.

President Taft pursued the same method as his predecessor, and Colonel Goethals' direction of affairs met with no opposition until toward the end of the recent Presidential term.

Opposition Develops.

Reports say that the disposition to resent the authority of Colonel Goethals has reached a critical stage, threatening to weaken the commission in the closing months of its task and possibly postpone the completion of the Canal beyond the time set for that consummation. Consequently much importance is placed on President Wilson's tentative selection of Richard L. Metcalfe of Nebraska for civilian member of the Isthmian Commission in place of Maurice H. Thatcher.

It is understood that Colonel Goethals is to be consulted freely by President Wilson on the whole situation.

Colonel Goethals does not want to have charge of the administration of the Canal. He does not want to remain on the Isthmus even long enough to see the big inauguration ceremonies that have been planned.

TIFTON IS AFTER EXPERIMENTAL BRANCH FARM

Representative Ellis Has Matter in Hand, and Scrap in Legislature Is Expected.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

A serious effort is to be made in the next Legislature to obtain a branch experiment station for South Georgia, to be located at Tifton.

Representative R. C. Ellis, of Tift County, has the matter in charge, and already claims to have made much progress with his measure.

The citizens of Tift and surrounding territory have indorsed his plan heartily, and there is a good chance that it may succeed. This is particularly true, it seems, because of recent suggestions that the agricultural station at Experiment, near Griffin, be removed to Athens.

At a meeting of the board of governors of the Tifton Chamber of Commerce a committee, consisting of Colonel R. E. Dinsmore, Briggs Carson and E. O. Hood, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions indorsing Colonel Ellis' bill, and the Chamber of Commerce will give him its hearty support in putting the measure through the Legislature.

A bill providing for the establishment of a branch experiment station at Tifton, introduced by Representative Ellis in 1911, was favorably reported by the committee, but failed of passage during the closing days of the session.

The conditions in South Georgia at the present time make an experiment station more of a necessity than ever before, in the opinion of Representativ Ellis. The approach of the boll weevil, the paralyzed condition of the Sea Island cotton market, the rapid development of fruit and nut growing and agriculture in South Georgaa, all are matters of first concern in that section.

It is not at all unlikely that Mr. Ellis' proposed bill will open the entire question of removing the present agricultural station from Griffin to Athens, and if it does, one of the very liveliest and most interesting fights of the entire session will thereby be precipitated.

Judge John Allen, of Baldwin, and Senator Randolph Anderson, of Chatham, rival candidates for the presidency of the Senate, met in the Kimball House lobby this morning and shook hands cordially.

They had occupied adjoining but not communicating rooms the night before, and had just discovered that they had been assigned to headquarters after the same fashion.

"I overheard you talking in your sleep last night, Senator," said Senator Allen, "and your soliloquy was quite interesting."

"What did I say?" inquired Anderson.

"You were petitioning the Lord to make those 25 votes you claim stick," laughed Allen.

"Well, I've got 'em—how many have you?" said Anderson.

"Twenty-seven," drawled Allen.

"Humph! That's more than there are in the Senate," mused the Chathamite.

"Well, I don't care how much you talk in your sleep, so long as you don't walk in it," remarked Allen, as he walked away.

"We seem to keep together in the matter of rooms, headquarters and claims," said Anderson, as Allen strolled away.

Muscogee County, for the first time in its history, will have three Representatives in the Legislature when the House is called to order on June 25.

Under the last census, Laurens lost its place as the junior "big six" county, and Muscogee slipped in. That entitles her to three members of the House.

As a matter of fact, however, Muscogee will have four members in the Legislature, for the Senator from that district also is a resident of the county in which Columbus is located.

Judge Henry Revill, of Meriwether, is an advocate of a board of tax equalizers.

Discussing the matter, he said: "Our present tax machinery is antiquated. It does not reach the dodgers. Burdens are unequally distributed, and should be made to bear equally upon all. The present method amounts to nothing more than passing the hat around. Almost every taxpayer gives in as little as possible, and it is well nigh impossible to make the financial buckle and tongue meet. A board of equalizers in each county would reach a lot of hidden property and force all species to pay on its proper valuation. No good reason can be urged against a board of tax equalizers in every county, and I hope to see the General Assembly provide for them. We can only meet our financial obligations by raising more revenue, and we can not—must not—raise the tax rate."

One of the members from Clarke County will introduce in the next Legislature an "anti-pistol toting" bill.

The following is the gist of the measure:

"1. It shall be unlawful for any dealer in firearms to make a sale, loan or gift of any pistol or pistol cartridges unless an application for such sale, loan or gift be presented to the dealer that has the indorsement of at least two responsible citizens vouching for the applicant's good character.

"2. It shall be the duty of the dealer to file daily a sworn statement with the chief of police a copy of each application, giving name, description, etc., applicant as well as the caliber and number of the pistol, and make; also brand and size of pistol cartridges.

"3. It shall be the duty of the dealer to include in the sworn statement that the two indorsers are personally known to him as possessing good character, etc.

"4. Providing penalty for violation."

This bill follows closely the recommendations of two grand juries of Clarke County and has been very carefully thought out.

PORTER CHARLTON, and wife for whose death he has been extradited to Italy to stand trial.

GRADUATING GIFT WEDDING PRESENT

Stepfather Takes Roses Home to High School Girl and Finds Her Daughter-in-Law.

Thursday night of last week Marie Pate, daughter of Mrs. M. D. Mitchell, 19 York Avenue, graduated from the Girls' High School. Just two days later Miss Pate was married to Walter Kelly Mitchell, son of Mr. Mitchell, at their parents' home, Mrs. Mitchell only being in on the secret.

At supper time Mr. Mitchell, two days later, came in with a belated graduation present for his fair stepdaughter.

"Here are some June roses for a graduation remembrance," he said to his stepdaughter.

"Why, they are bride roses—and just in time, too," the girl replied. "They are just the thing after our wedding."

Young Mitchell explained to his dazzled daddy that he and Marie had just been married. Mr. Mitchell was surprised, but not at all angry, for he extended his warmest congratulation to his son and his stepdaughter who turned daughter-in-law.

Young Mitchell is 24 and an auditor. His stepsister-bride is 17. They left for Asheville, where they will spend their honeymoon. Later they will be at home with their parents, step-parents and parents-in-law.

INSANITY FACES PORTER CHARLTON

Italian Prisons Seem Sure to Drive Young Consumptive Raving Crazy.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—If Porter Charlton pays the extreme penalty in an Italian prison for the murder of his beautiful and impetuous wife—and there now appears to be no hope of his escaping trial there—it is generally conceded that the highly-strung young man will be driven mad before he has been long within the gloomy walls.

Italy knows no death sentence. The Italian law does not exact one life for another. But the dread punishment that is inflicted is feared far more by the general run of criminals than the electric chair, the hangman's noose, the garrotte or any other form of execution.

The extreme sentence in Italy is life imprisonment, but this is hedged with such methods of mental torture that few who last more than a short stretch of years retain their minds. Many are driven stark, raving crazy. Charlton, with his sensitive, nervous temperament, can hardly endure the agony of mind that the Italian prisons induce.

For the first ten years of a life sentence, the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness, and in the strictest solitude, and with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most phlegmatic and unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Charlton's sole remaining hope lies in an appeal to President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. If this fails and the Italian tribunal gives him the fearful life sentence, he can only pray that the White Plague, of which he is a victim, may bring him soon to a merciful end.

Charlton, after fleeing to the United States, confessed to the killing of his wife at Lake Como, Italy, in June, 1910. She was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer, who went to the Alaskan wilds to bury the sorrow of his unhappy marriage.

The weather man's reputation for freaky stunts has been fully established at last—with one fell swoop (observe the date) Friday, June 13, he has brought upon Atlantans again that sticky, sizzling brand of weather which gives the street-corner gossipers something to talk about.

The shift from real winter to summer was indicated Thursday afternoon when the mercury went up, although not enough to bring out straw hats and uncovered peek-a-boos. Friday morning, however, saw a real change and many venturesome citizens, with brand new summer clothes, straw hats and things, looking ahead a few hours, prepared themselves for real hot weather.

It wasn't a bad guess, for the temperature rose steadily all during the morning until about noon, when it was almost normal again. The weather man says this will continue without a break—but who can tell, for it's a freaky day, and it may be just freaky weather.

SEGREGATION UP TO COUNCIL ON MONDAY

Ordinance Is Approved by Police Committee After Many Appeals in Its Behalf.

The Ashley segregation ordinance, which was passed by the Police Committee Thursday, will come up for consideration by the General Council next Monday.

The ordinance was unanimously recommended by the Police Committee after heated addresses by citizens pleading for speedy relief as a preventive of racial conflicts.

The only objection against approval of the ordinance was made by Henry A. Rucker, a negro, who formerly was a deputy internal revenue collector in Atlanta, and who is influential among his race. He told the committee negroes purchased homes in white neighborhoods only on invitation of white property owners.

Negroes Will Go to Court.

He gave warning that negroes would feel compelled to go into the courts and test the constitutionality of the Ashley ordinance.

"I don't care if we knew this law was unconstitutional, I would still insist that it pass," said Councilman Ashley, speaking in defense of his measure. "It is the same situation here which has arisen in California, and we must settle this question early or have trouble. I want to say, though, that this ordinance is perfectly legal. The City Attorney and other prominent lawyers have pronounced it free from constitutional defects."

Mr. Ashley had in mind particularly conditions in the Fourth Ward. L. C. Green, real estate man representing property holders in the Fourth, and B. Lee Smith, resident of the Fourth, who twice had been driven away by negro invasion, advocated indorsement of the Ashley measure as the only method of preventing trouble.

White and Negro Children Fight.

"Out on Johnson Avenue and other streets I could name," said Mr. Smith, "hardly a day passes but what white children meet negro children in the road and they have a pitched battle. This is only the beginning of a sentiment which is going to result in the worst race conflict Atlanta ever heard of, unless this negro encroachment upon white residence districts is stopped right where it is."

E. M. Mitchell, formerly president of the Board of Education, said the only way Atlanta could grow without passing through negro settlements, negro colleges or something else undesirable, was north and northeast, and negro invasion of these two outlets should be stopped. He termed the Ashley ordinance a police measure.

Sentiment in favor of the ordinance was so overwhelming the Police Committee announced no other speakers would be heard unless they had something new.

After an hour's discussion, the committee went into executive session and approved the ordinance unanimously.

Who Wants $300? Nobody Claims Sum

CHICAGO, June 13.—Harry Tansey, deputy clerk in Judge Tuthill's court, found three $100 bills on the lawyers' table, as he was clearing away a pile of rubbish. He couldn't get rid of it. Martin said he didn't accept it and would not have it.

Removal of Teacher Stirs Forsyth Folk

FORSYTH, GA., June 13.—The elimination of Miss Raiford Sneed from the staff of teachers in the public schools of Forsyth has provoked a controversy which is just now the most engaging topic of conversation in this city. The fight centers about Professor J. C. Campbell, who, after being vested with authority by the board of education, failed to reappoint Miss Sneed for the year beginning September, 1913.

When the board meets again next week, the friends of Miss Sneed will urge that she be retained.

Fullbright Intends To End Pistol Toting

H. J. Fullbright, representative from Burke County, has prepared a measure for introduction at the coming session of the Legislature further to curtail the promiscuous carrying of firearms.

No one who has not a license to carry weapons can procure cartridges under the bill.

It was said that generally bulling of corn on dry weather in June has not always been successful at a 60c level.

ATLANTA IS MECCA FOR NEWLYWEDS

Three Couples Arrive in the City. Two Occupy Adjoining Rooms in Same Hotel.

With three newly married couples arriving in Atlanta in the past 24 hours to spend their honeymoons, local hotel men are wondering if the Gate City is to become a mecca for the honeymooners of the State.

Two of the couples—Mr. and Mrs T. G. Selman, of Rockmart, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Harding, of Douglasville, Ga.—are stopping at the Kimball. The other couple—Mr. and Mrs. Gordon High, of Rome—spent last night at the Piedmont, but plan to leave Thursday for an Eastern trip, returning to Atlanta within a few weeks to spend the last days of their honeymoon here.

All of the young people come of prominent families in their respective towns, and all were married Wednesday morning. They arrived in Atlanta on the same train, and two of the honeymooners, the Selmans and the Hardings, registered at the Kimball at the same time and are in adjoining rooms.

Pretty Miss Brown Guest at the White House

First Atlanta Society Girl Entertained This Year

Miss Marjorie Brown, society girl and kin of President Wilson, who is first from Atlanta to be entertained at White House this year.

Cousin of Wilson's Daughters Leaves for Week in Capital.

To live a week in the White House, at a season when the new social set of the national capital is still in the first flush of its gayety, is the delectable lot in prospect for an Atlanta girl, Miss Marjorie Brown. She left Atlanta Friday for Washington, at the invitation of President Wilson's family.

Atlanta society congratulated her with a wee bit of envy. Miss Brown is the very first of the city's social set to receive an invitation from the President's family, and the first representative of Atlanta society to be entertained at the capital since the new administration went in.

Miss Brown is a cousin of the Wilson girls, her father, Edward T. Brown, being related to the President. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have often entertained the Wilsons, during their visits to Atlanta. Years ago, when Woodrow Wilson, a brilliant young lawyer, lived in Atlanta, he was intimate with the Browns, and a friendship was formed that to-day lives warmly.

Atlanta society is proud of its first representative at the capital. Miss Brown is described as being very pretty, with a slender, blonde beauty that is exceptionally winsome. She possesses much of the personal charm and attractiveness which made her mother one of the most admired women in Atlanta.

Her part in the gayety of the national capital will be prominent during the next week. She will be one of the guests of honor at a number of social functions, and lavish entertainment will be arranged during her visit.

Miss Brown has known the Misses Wilson for some time, and between them an intimacy has sprung up, an intimacy that was reflected in the warm tone of the invitation which came to her.

Aware of her relation to the daughters of the President, many persons in Atlanta have likened Miss Brown to the Wilson girls in the way of intellectual attainments and artistic gifts.

Washington, Atlanta society forecasts, will capitulate to its first Atlanta guest. The popularity already achieved by the President's daughters insures a delightful visit for Miss Brown. She will return to Atlanta the latter part of the week.

A number of Atlanta men and women have been guests in the White House during the regimes gone by, and it is expected that Georgia society will be freely recognized and welcomed in Washington, with the Wilsons in the presidential mansion.

25 Lots in Ansley Park Annex

Are Going

AT AUCTION

At this time history—real estate history—will repeat itself. Everybody knows what happened after every other auction of Ansley Park lots. Those who know say the same thing will happen again.

Thousands upon thousands of dollars were made for purchasers. Values have steadily climbed and are still climbing. This is the one section of residential Atlanta where doubt as to the future does not exist.

Ansley Park Annex has been developed in the same high-class manner which made Ansley Park famous. Every one of these 25 lots is high and overlooks Ansley Park. Many of them front on North Boulevard.

These lots are in a section within a mile or a mile and a half from three tracts which have been bought for development within the next few years by some of Atlanta's wealthiest men. It is the logical property. It has profits concealed in it.

Put the date down—Thursday, next Thursday, June 19. Remember the date as one which will increase your bank account if you attend the auction. Sidetrack every other engagement and go out. Twenty-five lots are going to make money for as many people. Be one of the twenty-five.

New Scores To Be Added.

Individual scores will be adde to the scores already made and the 30 highest men will be selected to return to Atlanta next month, when the final elimination for the selection of a team to go to Camp Perry, Ohio, will begin.

That the team which will be developed through this shoot will be able to uphold the Georgia record is the belief of the officials who are in charge and who have witnessed the competition for many years.

Governor Brown and General Evans were delighted at the records made. General Evans spoke in high compliment of the Georgia men. We will be the chief executive officer at Camp Perry this year.

"The Georgia National Guard is wonderfully well organized," said General Evans. "The officers are men of judgment and there is a spirit of enthusiasm throughout that shows up mighty well to the regular officers. Throughout the country there has been great progress among the National Guard, and I am glad to know that Georgia is doing so well."

Visitors Given Barbecue.

Governor Brown and General Evans arrived at the range in time to witness the skirmish firing. The ten-men teams moved down the range with precision.

Following the completion of the day's shooting, the party moved to the mess tent, where the visitors enjoyed a barbecue.

Several other officers of the regular army accompanied General Evans. Among them were Colonel C. H. Barth, of the Department of the Gulf, and Colonel VanOrsdale and Major W. A. Martin of the Seventeenth Infantry, stationed at Fort McPherson.

The 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing caused a shake-up in the standing, which was featured by Holleran and Cothran forging to the lead. Holleran is leading Cothran by but two points. Beginning of the shoot this morning, though, found the "veterans" getting down to business in their old-time form, determined to recover their lost laurels.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Hits at Forsyth.

The bill this week at the Forsyth continues to draw the capacity of the busy theater at all performances. Bud Fisher, the cartoonist who makes the "Mutt and Jeff" pictures for The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American, will be the headline feature next week, presenting an act in which he introduces the famous characters. Fisher is one of the highest-salaried cartoonists in the world, and his vaudeville salary runs into four figures—but it is known that there is nothing too good for the Forsyth.

The other acts are all clever, and Pauline Welch, the singing comedienne, is assured of a real welcome.

A., B. & A. MAY QUIT OLD UNION STATION

Rumored That New Connection With Southern's Line Indicates Road Will Use Terminal.

Is the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad to abandon the Union Depot and hereafter use the Terminal Station?

This intimation has come through action of the Georgia Terminal Company in making a definite move for the establishment of a branch line or extension connecting the A., B. and A. between Thurmond and Newton Streets with the Southern at a point near Magnolia Street. The length of the line would be about one-quarter of a mile.

The Georgia Terminal Company passed resolutions recently touching the subject, and it is understood that the company is now waiting for permission from the Federal Court to change its charter so as to permit the extension. The resolutions provided that there should be built "a branch running from a point on its main line or extension of its present railroad between Thurmond and Newton Streets in a general southeasterly direction across Mangum Street, Newton Street, Foundry Street and Elliott Street to a connection with the Southern Railway at a point near Magnolia Street," and that "attorneys are hereby authorized to take all steps necessary for the purpose of amending this company's charter authorizing the building of this branch or extension."

Neighborhood Row Caused by Chickens

The story of a sanguinary neighborhood battle will be told in Judge Broyles' court when Clarence Barnes, his wife, Pearl Barnes, of 12 Murphy Avenue; Mrs. Annie Hicks, Mrs. Hattie Crash and Mrs. Marguerite Long, all of 15 Murphy Avenue, are tried on charges of disorderly conduct. The trial was to begin Friday.

The row started when the Barnes chickens invaded the domain of the Hickses, the Crashes and the Longs.

Officers Ryan and Head made cases against all of them.

MEN OF MILLIONS SAVED FROM SEA

Atlantic City Life Guard and Swimming Master Heroes of Perilous Situation.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13. Fourteen men of wealth, representing railroad and car building interest in the United States running into hundreds of millions of dollars, trusted their lives to the skill of Martin Harris, swimming instructor, and Abe McCullen, chief life guard, when the steam launch Naushon stranded in shoal water last night, three miles off Rhode Island Avenue.

In the party were W. J. Coons, vice president of the Illinois Central Railroad; C. W. McDaniels, a New York corporation lawyer; A. F. Bedell, a Pittsburg steel magnate; A. W. Hubbard, of Kentucky, brother of the owner of the boat; Robert Mason, steel car manufacturer of Pittsburg, and B. F. Markley, a New York railroad man.

They were loud in their praise of Harris and McCullen. The latter left the beach in their risky craft at 8:30 o'clock after the Naushon had begun to blow a whistle and brighten the ocean with flashes from her powerful searchlight. At ten minutes before midnight they had the 14 men safely ashore, having made two separate trips to the yacht and rowed 12 miles through a choppy sea and a highly dangerous surf.

HERITAGE TAX IS PLAN OF SOLONS

At Least Two Members of Legislature Will Offer Scheme for Raising More State Money.

At least two legislators—Representatives W. F. Slater, of Bryan County, and H. H. Swift, of Muscogee—will introduce in the Legislature this summer a bill imposing a tax on inheritances. Advocates of the measure, which is not new in Georgia, will wage a vigorous fight for its passage, it is said.

The Slater bill will provide a tax on collateral inheritances only, leaving direct inheritances exempt, while Mr. Swift's bill imposes a tax on all inheritances in excess of $1,000.

The inheritance tax advocates claim there is reason for such a levy as the constitutional limit of 5 mills, reached in ad valorem taxation, has placed the General Assembly in a quandary as to how to raise sufficient revenue. The proposed income tax, they say, is a dead letter now that the sixteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution has been ratified.

Comptroller General W. A. Wright disagrees with the plan, saying the time is not ripe. If such a bill is passed, he says, the minimum amount taxed should be $50,000.

See What a Charming Waist One Dollar Will Buy Before One o'Clock Saturday

We know they are the prettiest of the season—and so will you the moment you see them.

Yes, by comparison they are worth more than their Saturday price.

Included are little tailored waists, with low round collars—perhaps the collar is embroidered a bit, the front tucked or plaited—these of dimity or a lightweight linene—all white.

Then there are the sheer batiste waists with dainty laces—Valenciennes, cluny and imitation Irish—and with embroidery that looks much like hand work on the front.

Then again we have the tailored shirts that travelers will want by the twos and threes—these of striped percales and brown linens.

Indeed, a remarkable collection of waists for $1.00.

ATLANTANS WILL WITNESS CANAL OPENING

Plan Trip as Members of Commercial Congress, Which Will Send Big Delegation.

Many of Atlanta's most prominent and progressive business men discussed Friday a trip to the Panama Canal Zone. Louis C. Irvine, of Mobile, general director of the Panama Canal celebration of the Southern Commercial Congress, was in this city Thursday outlining the trip and telling of a gigantic celebration in Mobile preliminary to sailing.

One thousand members of the Southern Commercial Congress, with many business men, will meet at Mobile the last week in October. The Latin-American trade tour, limited to 50 selected guests, who will visit the chief Latin-American States for 90 days to give thorough study to commercial conditions, will there be organized.

The route of the party has been changed because of slides in the Culebra cut, which delayed the opening of the canal. The travelers will leave Mobile about October 25, reaching the Isthmus before November 4, the date set for the official opening of the canal.

After the ceremonies at Panama, the travelers will touch Pyta, Colon, Eten, Pacasmayo, Salavery and Callao, Peru, and from Callao by train to Lima. They will leave Lima for inland points and thence back to Callao, Mollendo, Arequto and Guayaquil, thence to La Paz, Bolivia; Antofagasto, Chile; Coquimbo, Valparaiso, Santiago, Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, Montevideo, Uruguay; Santos, Brazil, and Rio de Janeiro. They will sail from Rio de Janeiro; call at Bahia, Trinidad, Barbados, and will arrive at New York about Christmas.

It is expected that after attending the opening of the canal many of the travelers will return direct.

A permanent memorial of the completion of the canal is proposed by the Southern Commercial Congress as an outgrowth of the convention in Mobile. Prizes of fifteen complimentary appointments as honor delegates and guests of the convention to the Panama Canal and the trip with the Latin-American expedition are offered for the best suggestion for this memorial.

These prizes are offered to arouse study on the question and bring in suggestions of a proper form for a permanent memorial. The selection of the form is left to an official jury, comprising Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, chairman, and Hon. John Barrett, Director General of the Pan-American Union.

Asa G. Candler and Harvie Jordan, of Atlanta, are directors of the congress, which includes some of the most prominent men south of the Mason and Dixon line.

Can't Happen Again in 100 Years

Mr. Bosiness Man Wakes Up and Finds Everything Has Gone Wrong on Hoodoo Day.

Mr. Peach, of Peachtree, got up this morning, stepped on a tack, found two holes in his new silk socks, lost his collar button down the hot-air radiator, bumped his head on the chiffonier when he stooped to look for the button and came down to breakfast with a grouch.

"The cook has quit and the gas stove's out of fix and the milkman left a quart of milk too sour for your cereal," announced Mrs. Peach, pleasantly, or nearly so. "And there's a hat sale on at the Emporium and I need $38.49 for that, and the sleeping porch must be rescreened, and I've found my last year's matinee gown positively won't do another season.

"And the chauffeur says you can't drive in this morning, for the car has broken its galliwampus and needs a new set of gears, three tires, a coat of paint and a cylinder made over.

"Well, John, I'm sorry the bacon isn't edible, but you must remember you didn't marry a cook. That's right, run off without kissing me!"

Mr. Peach missed the trolley, had to wait for the next one, and struck a crowd. A fat man stepped on his pet corn, the conductor jabbed him in the ribs and urged him to move inside, and a baby smeared molasses candy over his summer suit.

He stubbed his toe stepping into the elevator; broke his new straw kelly trying to be polite when a woman got in; was carried three floors past his own, and then found he had left his office keys in his other clothes. He dropped to the basement, climbed to the roof and finally found the janitor with a master key Mr. Peach was firmly convinced something had hoodooed him. At last he opened his desk. Three things stared him in the face. A summons for jury duty, a notice of overdraft at his bank, and his calendar pad. And on the latter was inscribed:

FRIDAY,
13th,
Nineteen-Thirteen.

It won't happen anything like that for 100 years, and maybe not then.

After dinner more guests will be received and 13 automobiles will take them on a trip to 13 places of amusement. Just before midnight Mr. and Mrs. Kral will start on a 13-day honeymoon trip in the East.

Health Restored by Eckman's Alterative

If you are a sufferer from Glandular Tuberculosis, or knew of anyone so afflicted, it might be well to investigate this case, where the writer declares after a year of suffering, he found permanent relief and full recovery to health by using Eckman's Alterative, a medicine which has been effective in many cases of Tuberculosis:

257 Lamston St., Phila., Pa.

"Gentlemen: In March, 1909, my doctor pronounced my case 'Tuberculosis in the Glands,' and a number of operations in a hospital failed to benefit me. In the meantime, a friend of mine advised Eckman's Alterative. The wounds in my neck were still open and in a frightful condition when I started to take it. After using two bottles I found I was improving, having gained weight, could eat and was able to sleep. I continued using it until I was well, which was in November, 1910. Before I took the medicine I had three hemorrhages; since I have been taking it I have not had any. On November 11, 1910, I started to work, and since that time I have not lost one day's work through sickness. I highly recommend Eckman's Alterative to anyone who is suffering from Gland trouble."

(Affidavit) JOSEPH B. WHITE.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

"Cotton seed and cotton seed hulls from the Imperial Valley in the State of Lower California, Mexico, will be admitted into the United States only under special permit through the port of Calexico. PLAN CORN PRIZES FOR POOR FIELDS

Boys Forced to Plant Grain in Unfertile Land to Get Recognition in Show.

A new series of prizes, planned for the benefit of boys who are compelled to plant grain in unfertile land, will be offered at the annual corn show under the auspices of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The show again will be held in the corridors of the State Capitol.

While the new awards will not affect the regular prizes, they are designed to lift the "poor land handicap" under which many have been laboring.

The new prizes are offered for the greatest proportionate increase an acre, and are expected to serve the purposes of increasing the interest in the show, and in inducing the boys to cultivate their land and make it better. Many boys last year planted in bad land and showed splendid increases in the volume of grain. They were not given prizes because their best efforts were not equal to the normal yield of the richer lands.

The show committee of the Chamber of Commerce has begun its work and will hold meetings at intervals through the summer. It is planned to make the next show the best in the history of the State.

But Superintendent Woods, of the Capitol, hearing predictions of "the hottest tariff fight yet," put his electricians to work early.

U. S. POLO PLAYERS STILL 2-TO-1 BET

Little English Money Is in Sight Despite American Team's Best Player Is Disabled.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The American and British polo teams to-day went through a light practice in final preparation for their second battle, which will be staged to-morrow on the Meadowbrook, N. Y., grounds.

The Americans, despite the fact that J. Monte Waterbury, star of Tuesday's game, will be unable to play, are 2 to 1 betting favorites. There is little English money in sight.

Louis E. Stoddard, who will replace Monte Waterbury, is a player of exceptional ability, and it is felt by the American polo enthusiasts that he will be a fit substitute. Stoddard will play No. 1; Larry Waterbury, No. 2; Harry Payne Whitney, No. 3, and Devereaux Milburn, back.

The line-up of the Britons will be the same as Tuesday, although there has been some rumors that F. M. Freake would play at No. 2 in place of Captain Edwards.

Practically every reserved ticket for the game to-morrow has been sold. Speculators are said to have secured a big bunch of choice seats and are demanding—and getting—fancy prices for them.

Poet Laureate Gets $1 Day and His Wine

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 13.—The poet laureateship, vacant since the death of Alfred Austin, carries a salary of $350 a year, with an allowance of $155 in lieu of "a butt of sack."

Premier Asquith enlightened the members of the House of Commons with this information, when Arthur Lynch made inquiry as to the perquisites and privileges attached to the office.

Only Two Decatur Children Failed To Attend School

Decatur probably is the only town on the Georgia map that really does not need a compulsory education law, as proposed by Representative Fullbright, of Burke County, for there are only two children between the ages of 6 and 14 that have not attended school during the past 12 months, an investigation just completed shows.

And this is not all—Decatur hasn't a single illiterate white child and she has a hundred more school children than any other Georgia town of equal size. A building permit for a new school building, costing $22,000, has been issued, also.

These and other things, indicative of Decatur's progressiveness, including statement of Decatur's building record increase of 35 per cent over last year, are being scattered broadcast by the Decatur Board of Trade, which is one of the livest organizations of its kind in the State.

Woodward Wants Old Glory to Float From Public Buildings on 136th Anniversary.

Mayor James G. Woodward Friday issued a Flag Day proclamation, ordering custodians of public buildings to fly the colors Saturday and requesting owners of private structures with flagstaffs to issue simflar orders.

In addition to an autograph copy of the proclamation, every manager, superintendent or custodian of public buildings to-day received telephone messages apprising him of the Mayor's wish.

Following is the Mayor's Flag Day proclamation:

"Tomorrow, June 14, 1913, being the one hundred and thirty-sixth anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the flag of this country, it is but meet and proper that every patriotic and liberty-loving citizen of this country should do that flag honor.

"It therefore is ordered that the flag be hoisted on all public buildings of this city, and it also is requested that all citizens owning buildings or controlling same, with flagpoles upon such building, are requested to display the national colors."

ENGLISH CABINET CLEARED OF GRAFT

Lloyd-George and Isaacs Exonerated in Wireless Scandal. Another Report Probable.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 13.—Members of the British ministry, accused of irregular connections with the British Marconi Company during negotiations for a Government contract with that enterprise, were exonerated to-day in the report of the parliamentary committee which for about six months has been investigating the accusations.

The members involved were Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd George and Attorney General Sir Rufus Isaacs. Both admitted having bought shares of the American Marconi Company for investment, but denied dabbling in stocks of the British Marconi Company at a time when they had "inside information."

Indirect accusations were brought against First Lord of the Admiralty Winston-Churchill and by innuendo other members of the Cabinet were impugned. Another report likely will be issued later.

Minister Arrests Shooting Cowboys

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS reading a piece in the paper," said the Head Barber, "about a rich young girl that had a Vassar education, and that married a man who couldn't read nor write. She taught him so much in five years that he became the president of a bank the other day and is the leading citizen of his town."

"He must have been a awful bright man or else she was some teacher," declared the Manicure Lady. "I have heard of cases like that, but I never seen one. It always sounds kind of fishy to me, because even after a man has went to school a few years he finds out that there is plenty he can learn from his wife. Anyhow, I'd hate to marry a man that didn't have no schooling at all. Of course I would be willing to learn him what I was learned at school, like arithmetic and grammar and history, but I should think it would be a kind of a nuisance to be a wife and school teacher at the same time."

"It ain't a man's fault if he never had no opportunities," said the Head Barber. "I know a lot of bright men that never went to no school or college."

Not So Sure.

"I know," said the Manicure Lady, "but I don't like to think that after waiting all these years I might have to marry a illiterate man. Of course, if he was handsome and accomplished and rich I wouldn't expect him to know all about Greek and Latin, because I ain't sure myself just when Oliver Goldsmith made so much trouble for King Charles of England, or when Cromwell crossed the Alps to fight the Romans under Lord Napoleon. I don't think any girl ought to expect her husband to know and remember all about them old classics, especially if he is busy getting the money to keep up a apartment in Atlanta or Chattanooga. All I want my husband to know is to be able to talk intelligent in a cultivated crowd, and not set around murdering no queen's English. And I think a husband ought to have some kind of accomplishment like playing the piano or making a good after dinner speech or knowing pinochle good enough to hold his own with the Germans. I wouldn't like to marry a man that never did nothing but grub out a living."

"The wife has got all the accomplishments in our family," said the Head Barber, "I never had much chance when I was a kid to do anything except get up when the alarm clock rang in the morning, so I didn't get into music or golf or any of them fine arts. All the fun I get is a day off once in a while to go to the ball game, and I guess the wife must think I'm a kind of ordniary guy alongside some of the friends I invite to the house. She is musical and a good pianist, and some of the fellows I know can spiel a lot themselves, so I just sit back and let them shine."

Some Compliments.

"I'll bet you are a dear, good husband, just the same," said the Manicure Lady. "You don't need no accomplishments, George, to stand a lot higher with me than some of the actors and boy comics that comes in here to have their nails did. I never liked the way you keep doping out them race horses, and I smelt something like a highball when you blew in the other morning, but there's a lot more good in you than most men, George, and that's no salve, either. I don't think I'm a very poor picker, George, but if you was single I'd say ya mighty swift when you proposed."

"If I was married to anybody else except the missus," said the Head Barber, "I'd wish I was single. You are going to make some lucky guy a swell wife. Gee, we're getting along great this morning, ain't we?"

See Them, Too.

Club Woman—If you come to our meeting you'll hear some plain things.

Male Thing—Oh! And see them, no doubt.

A Conundrum.

"Look here," said the landlord; "why don't you pay your rent?"

"I give it up," replied Slowpay.

"But you don't," insisted the landlord; "that's what I'm kicking about."

Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly. comes upon Gordon Kelly. In the meeting each learns of the other's love. Kelly is sought everywhere by the press.

"You may not realize it, Miss Deery, but you have just told me a very important piece of news. It will create a big sensation all over the country. My paper was crazy about it. They're getting out an extra on it."

"Don't forget our bargain," said Mildred, with a smile.

"Absolutely no," declared Farnsworth with fervor. He was pretty well pleased with himself. He had unearthed, through his own efforts and without aid, the biggest piece of news of his career. He had visions of a substantial cash present and a raise in salary from his boss. This pleasing thought reminded him that he hadn't smoked a cigarette in 20 minutes. He asked and received permission to smoke.

"This is pretty soft," he said to himself as he threw away the match. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia, having a cracking big piece of information handed to me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it? I guess this isn't my lucky day."

But business is business, and Farnsworth proceeded to it after three or four puffs of his cigarette.

"Now, Miss Deery," he said, "please tell me the rest of the story."

"Gordon Kelly has lived in this neighborhood all his life," began Mildred. "After he left the hospital he came up here. I met him one day while I was fishing in the brook. I hadn't the faintest idea that he was within a hundred miles of here. I didn't even know at the time that his home was near here. My father built this bungalow recently and I think my parents wanted me to come here on account of what the papers said about me, or, rather, to escape the embarrassment I had brought on myself. At any rate I came up and found everything so delightful and so cool and nice that I have stayed here ever since.

Then Disappeared.

"Well, anyway," she continued after a pause, "you want to know about Mr. Kelly. As I said, I was very much surprised when I saw him here. I think it was the last part of May. I saw him quite often for several weeks. My mother came up again—she is here now—and there was a little boy here, the son of my father's superintendent, and we all used to go fishing and tramping around. Mr. Kelly was good company and he knew every inch of the mountain country.

"One afternoon, late in July, Mr. Kelly started off on a walk along the brook that runs near where he lives—I get this from the people at his home—and about half an hour after he started out a cyclone swept along the edge of that brook and from that day to this Mr. Kelly hasn't been seen."

"Was he killed?" asked Farnsworth.

"A good many people around here think so, but I don't. Something tells me he is alive and well and will turn and it is sure that he didn't perish in the storm. That's all I know about the appearance and disappearance of Mr. Kelly, Mr. Farnsworth," said Mildred in conclusion.

The young man arose from his chair and went to the telephone again. He was gone fifteen minutes.

"I want to thank you for all this information, Miss Deery," he said. "But I want to warn you that there will probably be a score of reporters up here to-morrow. I would advise you to keep under cover—return to Atlanta, maybe; otherwise, you will be annoyed a whole lot. While I have kept my promise and will continue to keep it as regards using your name, the other reporters will find out that you live near here and you will have an unpleasant time of it."

"I think that is good advice; I shall speak to my mother about it," replied Mildred.

Useless to Remain.

"I don't believe it would do any good for me to stay up here any longer. I suppose the people around here have searched for Gordon Kelly in every conceivable place?"

"They have, Mr. Farnsworth. It would be useless for you to remain, expecting any news of Mr. Kelly."

"Then I will thank you again and start for the celebrated summer resort, known as Pew Creek."

Mildred laughed as he arose to go. "You can not get a train before 3:18. Why don't you send that Cracker back by himself and take lunch with us? I will drive you to the station in an automobile."

Clever Mildred Deery. She was so nice to the young man that he would be sure to keep his promise to her.

"Miss Deery," returned the young man, "you are not only very kind, but you are a mind reader. I accept with pleasure. If you could only have seen the meal that jehu prepared for me this morning!"

Farnsworth settled with Case from a big roll of office money. His bill was $1.25, made up of the following items: Supper, 25 cents; breakfast, 25 cents; lodging, 25 cents; hire of horse and carriage and services of driver, half a day, 50 cents.

"I should worry," remarked the young man to himself, as Gabe Case drove away.

"This is pretty soft," said Farnsworth to himself. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia having a cracking big piece of information handed me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it?"

CHAPTER XXVII.

IT is necessary to go back and pick up the loose threads of this narrative.

When the crisis in the illness of Forrest Cain's sister had passed and she was on the road to recovery, Cain wrote Mildred that he was coming to the mountains again, and two days later he appeared where Mildred was, claiming his automobile and also claiming the fulfillment of the promise she had made him to go riding with him alone. Her mind was already prepared for this demand, so after she had learned all about his sister's condition, she expressed her sympathy and told him she would go with him that afternoon if he cared to have her.

Mildred had warned Elmer Shephard not to say anything to anyone about their meeting Gordon Kelly and she was glad she did so, as the boy appeared just as Cain was leaving. After Cain had gone the lad joined her on the porch, his face clouded.

"I don't like Mr. Cain," he declared, petulantly. "What does he want to keep coming up here for?"

"Why, Elmer," said Mildred, reprovingly, "you shouldn't talk that way. He has always acted like a gentleman, hasn't he?"

"I don't care; I don't like him just the same. Gordon Kelly is the kind of man I like. He can do something. All Mr. Cain can do is to drive an automobile and dress in fancy clothes and hang around. I heard him say he would come again at 3 o'clock this afternoon. I wish he would stay away."

Thoughts Were Busy.

Mildred made no answer. Her thoughts were busy. Elmer had said just what was in her own mind, if he only had known it. The lad's quick perception had seen through the shallow, selfish visitor. After a while she said:

"Elmer, I have promised to go out riding with Mr. Cain this afternoon in his automobile. After I'm gone, if you care to do so, you may take the run-about and drive up to the bridge and stay around there a while. I will probably see you on my way back home. That isn't very exciting, I know, but I would like to have you do it if you don't mind."

Days ago she had taught the lad how to run the car and he was now quite an expert. The request she had just made of him was the result of a vague something in her mind. It had to do with Forrest Cain and the engagement she had made with him. She almost regretted making it, yet she knew what he had to say would have to be said, so she braved herself to go through the ordeal.

In the meantime Forrest Cain was speeding toward his shack in his car. He passed the point where the road crosses the bridge and about three miles farther came to the place where a road led off to the left through the large granite posts. Every time he had passed this point Cain had observed the granite posts. He knew they must be on what was supposed to be Gordon Kelly's property. Evidently, therefore, the road led to the habitation where Kelly lived before he went to Atlanta and broke his leg. Since his personal encounter with Gordon Kelly, Cain had often thought of him in connection with his mountain home, recalling what Deery had told him about the young man's father killing himself by jumping off a mountain while crazed with liquor. The weirdness of this act had created a profound impression on Cain.

The Granite Posts.

Approaching the granite posts on this particular morning, the incident of the strange death suddenly flashed across the mind of Cain. He brought his car to a stop and gazed curiously at the pillars, which seemed to stand as guardians of a mysterious realm. He then let his gaze wander to the road which passed through the posts and was soon lost to view, winding through a fine forest of hardwood trees. The road itself was hard, firm and well made and had a top dressing of granite, ground fine, the same kind of stone the pillars were made of. Within the open gate, even the woods and the ground underneath seemed to be the recipients of care. The trees were trimmed and there were no dead branches lying on the ground. The idea created in Cain's mind was that it was the entrance to some millionaire's vast mountain estate. On Deery's maps the property was marked "Prescott Trust Company." What had Gordon Kelly to do with it all? he wondered. Where did this ball player fit in?

Overcome with curiosity, Cain started his car and turned in the road that led through the granite posts. He would investigate, he said to himself. What better chance would he have, with Gordon Kelly on his way north to join his ball club?

Cain was not a slow driver. He threw his car into high speed and raced up the winding road. The road was as smooth as a billiard table and the crunch of gravel under his tires was music to Cain's ears. He had covered more than half a mile of the driveway and there was still no sign of a habitation, when he suddenly heard the sound of a horn, followed by a sharp cry. He looked up quickly to see an automobile coming down upon him. It looked like a sure collision, but Cain gave the emergency brake a jerk and turned sharply to the right just in time to avoid a smashup. The occupant of the other car had acted in the same manner and, after missing each other by a hair, the two machines came to a stop not ten feet apart.

As soon as he had convinced himself that there had been no mishap, Cain, without even looking back to see who was in the other automobile, proceeded to put his car in motion, but before he could do so he was halted by the sharp command: "Stop!"

It was Gordon Kelly in the other machine. As soon as his car stopped he glanced back and read the number of the other machine. It was "50,000 Ga." Like a flash he recalled that this same car nearly ran over him in front of the Atlanta ball grounds. He jumped to the ground and reached the side of Cain's automobile just as the latter was about to start it. The two men faced each other, and Gordon could see the look of surprise that flashed over the face of the other.

"You seem bound to kill me with that car, one way or the other," observed Gordon. "You were headed toward my home. Did you wish to see me?"

Cain did not know what to say in reply. He did not want to acknowledge that curiosity had drawn him there and he knew he had no business on the driveway. Yet his arrogant nature refused to allow him to apologize, especially to Gordon Kelly. When he did reply he did so in a half-insolent tone.

"No, I have no wish to see you."

"Anyone here you desire to see?"

"No."

"What are you doing here?"

"Just rubbering around; that's all."

"You know these are private grounds?"

"I assumed they were." Cain had drawn a cigarette from his case. He now lighted it.

Gordon paused a moment before he spoke again. Then he said:

"Your tone is insolent. You are entitled to no consideration from me. Get off the grounds!"

"Suppose I refuse?" sneered Cain.

"I'll answer that question in just one minute, if you force me to, by kicking you through those stone pillars."

Cain Is Cowed.

The recollection of a previous experience with the toe of Gordon Kelly's shoe brought Cain to his senses. Without further words he turned his car and moved off down the winding driveway. Kelly, in his own machine, followed him. Passing through the granite posts, Cain turned north toward his own shack. Kelly, entering the main road, turned south.

Chagrin, mortification and anger had a three-cornered battle for supremacy in Cain's breast as he drove along the road. When he reached his mountain abode he did perhaps the worst thing he could have done, considering his engagement with Mildred Deery. He told his man George to fetch a bottle of whisky and some fresh water, and he sat at a table and drank and brooded and swore at George and swore vengeance on Kelly and swore at himself.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

PROPOSE AT ONCE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

For two years I have been calling on a young lady two years my junior. I love her dearly and I know my love is returned. Sometimes I feel as though my time is wastefully drifting by calling on her because she sometimes refuses to listen to me when I feel like proposing, and the next night she is all in a flutter awaiting me. I earn a good salary and feel that I can support a wife. With this view in mind I am almost on the verge of proposing. Then I lose all courage. Please advise me, as I am a total wreck.

N. B.

Put an end to your misery by proposing on one of those nights when she is all in a flutter. The longer you delay it the less courage you will have.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man and am quite infatuated with a young lady two years my senior. When I last called on her I said I wished the difference in our ages was just the opposite, but she said that two years count for nothing when one is in love. Am I right in keeping up our love?

J. W. F.

Two years count for nothing when one loves. The girl is right.

But your question implies that you have doubts. For this reason I am sure you don't really love her.

CERTAINLY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Will you please give your opinion to settle an argument on—if a tall girl can be called cute?

Do You Know---

Someone fond of statistics has figured out that in Great Britain alone about 1,600,000,000 miles are covered annually by all sorts of vehicles, including motor cars. During the past year 750 persons were killed by vehicular traffic—that is to say, one person for every 2,133,333 miles. Motor vehicles to the number of 50,000 covered approximately 300,000,000 miles and killed 200 people, or one person for every 1,500,000 miles.

The engagement of Duke Karl of Croy to Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the American Ambassador to Berlin, recalls a curious law of that noble house. Should the head of the family or his heir desire to marry outside his own rank, he must previously obtain the unanimous consent of all the males bearing the name of Croy who are of age; otherwise his children can not succeed either to the title or estate.

Cullman, Ala., claims to be the most prosperous township in the world. It is said that every man in the town who is the head of a family has a clear title deed of ownership to his home, and every one of them has a banking account. Co-operative farming is practiced in the county.

The discovery of oil in Papau, British New Guinea, was the result of a native boy being whipped for placing kerosene in a miner's tea. The youth declared his innocence and led the miner to the well from which the water had been taken. It was found that the surface of the water was completely covered with oil, the source of which is being developed into a huge commercial enterprise.

The Parent and the Undutiful Child

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

WE bestow a great deal of pity upon the parent of an undutiful child, but how often do we stop to consider who is to blame for the state of affairs?

"Poor Mrs. Smith!" a woman sighed. "I am very sorry for her! She is one of the sweetest and gentlest of women, and her son is all she has in the world. Yet he speaks to her roughly, and has a royal disregard for all her wishes. He pays her poorly for all her care of him."

Had the partisan of the abused parent been of an analytical turn of mind she might have changed her sympathy to criticism of the mother herself. We hear—and say—much of the responsibility of children, of the duty of the parents to train the child properly, but, when parents neglect to do this, we condemn the grown son or daughter rather than the person who trained him or her. One overindulgent mother of sons—all of whom are up-to-date examples of ingratitude and selfishness—says, with tears in her eyes, "I never considered my own comfort compared with that of my boys, and I always set aside my own wishes to make them happy."

The result has been just what might have been expected.

A young child, when left to his own devices, is little better than a small savage. He has the selfish and brutal impulses of the primitive human. It rests with the parents to curb his natural desires and passions, and to guide and direct these so that they may become the strength of the child instead of his weakness. If they neglect this duty, and the boy develops into a man of ungovernable passions and of evil life, the father and mother are pitied and the son condemned.

I acknowledge that there are cases in which parents have done their best and the children have gone astray. But, unless there has been a very evil strain of blood back of the child, or his associates have, in spite of the parental care, been a very bad lot, one seldom sees a properly trained lad go completely wrong.

I was moved to amusement, yet strongly impressed by a conversation that I heard between a mother and her sixteen-year-old daughter. The mother was reproving the child for disobedience.

"The trouble with you, Mary," said the parent, "is that you were not punished enough when you were a child."

The girl's eyes flashed with temper.

"Well, if not, who was to blame for it?" was the impertinent retort. "Surely you need not lay that omission to my account!"

Impertinent? Yes. Unkind and rude? Undoubtedly. Yet the insolent speech contained a poignant truth. And the mother recognized this fact too late.

"When did you train your boy to obey you so promptly?" asked one mother of another. "My son is just the age of yours, and I can not make him obey. When did you start the implicit obedience plan?"

"As soon as he was born," was the grave reply. "He has never been allowed to feel that he can disobey."

I know there are parents who will declare that such obedience is slavery. It is not—if properly obtained. The mother has lived to little purpose if she does not know better what is good for the tiny child than he does. Gentleness and firmness will win the day sooner and more surely than threats and temper.

Some people take it for granted that, because a mother has endured anguish to bring a human being into the world, that being will intuitively accord her loyalty and love through his entire life. One might as well say that because a seed is planted in the ground it will sprout, flourish and bear fruit without further care.

The mother who suppresses her own individuality, who ignores her own rights for the sake of the temporary happiness of her child, is not the mother who is most loved in childhood, or who is, in later years, most honored and respected. It is just that she is not thus regarded, for she has not been a good mother in the deepest sense of the word. It takes far more resolution and strength of character to deny a harmful thing to one we love than it does to yield to him and comply with all his desires.

"He is the best son a woman ever had!" I heard an elderly mother say in the presence of her first-born—a prosperous lawyer and exemplary citizen.

I respected her and her stalwart offspring the more when he said, with a tender smile:

"I wish I deserved that praise—but if I did you would have yourself to thank for it!"

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

MAY 20.—It is possible, I have learned recently, for a man to have as warm red blood in his veins at fifty as he had when he was twenty-five.

My conclusion from this decision is that no man is old enough to be trusted alone with a woman not his mother, his sister, his grandmother or his aunt.

May 23—I regret that I am not a learned man. If I were I would know, without the embarrassment of making the inquiry, who it was who said that "Kissing is the beginning of sinning."

May 26—If I knew who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" I might spend a few of my surplus millions in erecting a monument to his memory.

It would be a strange monument. It would not be beautiful, but I am sure its effect on the minds of beholders would be forceful. I would have carved on its marble sides pictured stories of what one little kiss has led to: Disgrace, dishonor, abandoned women, reckless men, broken hearts and the breaking up of homes.

Its Danger.

I would have engraved on tablets set in every corner so that one might read, no matter from what direction he came, the real truth about the kiss. So sweet, so innocent, so pure in poem and prose. I would have scholars better versed in expression than I ever hope to be, tell what is in real life when a man's blood runs warm in his veins.

And I would blame all the sin that has such an apparently innocent beginning on the ignorance of woman! Or, perhaps, I would grow so bold as to blame some of it on her cupidity, her duplicity and her UNDERSTANDING OF MEN.

She gives the first kiss in ignorance sometimes, but just as often Diary (and I would have that engraved on the monument, though it would result in women smashing it overnight) she gives it in full realization of its power and effect!

She uses the highest expression of love as a means of appealing to the lowest!

I can't quite decide if I would have a broken-hearted girl as a crowning figure or a man bound and shackled with the chains of matrimony. Either figure could be made appealing by a sculptor who understands human nature.

Perhaps the bowed and bent figure of a man with the chains of matrimony wound around his limbs would be the more modern version of what a kiss has done for mankind. So many girls these days use kisses to cry their wares when they go to market, and suffer no appreciable damage, that the broken-hearted girl, as a crowning figure, would not give expression to the changed sentiment of the times.

May 28—The man who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" interests me. I wonder if he was an old bachelor like myself and had a good friend whom he loved as he would a favorite sister. I wonder if this friend ever came to him with her troubles because of a neglectful husband, and if he tried, in honest, brotherly fashion, to soothe her.

I wonder if one day she suddenly kissed him, and I wonder if that kiss seemed in comparison to all others life had ever offered him, the one supreme kiss.

I wonder what he did next. I wonder how he found that "Kissing Is the Beginning of Sinning."

Did his sin consist only in thinking about another man's wife much too often?

Not Platonic.

Did he accept it as the kiss a sister would give a brother? But no, he couldn't have done that. All the sisters since the world began never put into all the kisses they have given their brothers the one little vital spark Sally Spencer put in that kiss she gave me!

Brother and sister, bah! What's the good of self-deception? We were never brother and sister, and the kiss revealed we were not. Maybe once we were Platonic friends, and that we can never be again!

When a man and woman do wrong, it is the customary thing, the gallant thing, and exceedingly proper, to blame it on the man.

Diary, I have kept nothing from you. I was sitting with Manette in my arms, and thinking only of Sally's trouble that day in the nursery. I had no thought of myself, but when a man says he has no thought of himself no one on earth believes him, so perhaps that statement is discredited even by your parchment ears.

There was nothing in our conversation that should have led up to such a climax; there has never been in all the conversations I have had with her.

A Special Apparatus.

She kissed Me, Diary, I did not kiss HER! How could I with Manette asleep in my arms? I could neither force a woman to kiss me under such conditions, nor could I resist when she forced me. Of course I could have screamed for help. I can see in that particular that I showed weakness and indecision of character, unfitting a man.

But I couldn't scream before she kissed me, not realizing the awful designs she had on me. And I couldn't scream when her lips were pressed against mine!

If you doubt the absolute inability to scream at such a psychological moment, ask any physician. He will tell you no man can scream when his wind is cut off. Then, again, I am sure, though surgeons have never discovered it, that when the Lord made woman He put in her a special screaming apparatus He left out of man.

Had I kissed Sally Spencer against her will as she kissed me, somewhere (either just before the bestowal of the kiss, while it was being adjusted in position, or afterward) she would have found opportunity and breath for a scream.

That is, of course, if she had wanted to scream. My experience with the women is that they don't scream. It is only in the books that they cry for help.

Neither would it have done any good had I screamed after she kissed me, for what's the use of crying over spilled milk? I have been told all my life that there is absolutely no use.

So, as I said, we must follow tradition and blame all that may happen since that kiss on the man. I may have been physically powerless to resist, but that makes no difference. I am the man, and therefore the guilty one.

All the tragedy that may arise from that kiss is to be blamed on me. That I know, and being a man and proud of my strength, I am telling myself every morning that I will not run from temptation. I will just hang around and take a look at it!

All of which I have told you, Diary, to explain why I am looking at Sally Spencer these days with different eyes, and am not so much concerned as I was over the prospect that the widow may run off with her husband.

"What," said the visitor to the village of his childhood, "what's become of the one boy I hated—Willie Hawker, the sneak? In prison, no doubt—he bore that fate on his face."

"Hush!" said the villager. "He is now Mr. Hawker, the famous millionaire."

"What?" cried the visitor, "my dear schoolfellow a millionaire! I must call upon him and revive the old friendship."

Mr. Litchfield, the art dealer, when exhibiting some panels of tapestry, telegraphed for the return of one thus: "Send panel eight by ten, Venus and Adonis. Litchfield."

A puzzled clerk sent on the message to the city of Litchefield, and received the reply: "No such firm as Venus and Adonis known here. Try Manchester."

"You have called regarding the situation of footman?"

"Yes, my lud."

"Was there not some one in the ante-room as you came in?"

"There was, my lud. It was a man with a writ for your ludship, but I threw 'im hout."

"You are engaged."

A young Englishman on a visit to one of the Irish local gentry once remarked on the number of donkeys in use among the peasantry, and, turning to the priest who was present, inquired, with a certain insolence of manner, whether it was true that "the natives" kept them in their own homes.

"Yes," replied the padre, gravely, "they do. The English, I perceive, send them abroad."

"They say that Tennyson frequently worked a whole afternoon on a single line."

"That's nothing. I know a man who has been working the last six years on one sentence."

FASHIONABLE HATS MILADY IS WEARING THIS SUMMER

STRAW AND FLOWERS. A SMART MODEL

A circular-shaped straw with a ruche and a bow of white moire ribbon. Surrounding ribbon is a wreath of daintily colored flowers.

This is most effective for a small hat. The crown is of folded silk encircled with a band of moire ribbon and at the back is a mass of Paradise plumes.

PLUMES AND STRAW. A LEWIS MODEL. FOR COUNTRY WEAR.

The center cut shows a Lewis model of dust-colored straw which is most artistic. A wreath of variegated flowers encircles the small crown and gives it a very natty appearance. On the left is another black hat of the oblong shape. On each side of the brim is a plume of paradise feathers and at the front is a smartly tied ribbon bow. The hat at the right is the latest model for country wear or for morning in town. It is very plain, the sole trimming being a bow of embroidered ribbon.

The Girl With a Married Sweetheart

By DOROTHY DIX

Tears and Sorrow Is the Price She Is Bound to Pay

A YOUNG girl writes me that she is very much in love with a married man, who tells her that he is devoted to her, but that he does not intend to divorce his wife in order to marry her. She says that she has lost all interest in her young companions, and is very unhappy and she doesn't know what to do, and that she will take my advice as to whether to give her married sweetheart up or not.

I am afraid that it is too good to be true that this poor, silly child will be guided by my counsel in this matter, but in case it should be possible that any word of mine could influence her or any other girl in such a dilemma, I urge her with all the earnestness that I can possibly command to break with the man before another hour rolls over her head.

Time and again I have written on this subject, trying to make girls realize not only how wrong, but how foolish they were to waste their youth, their sweetness, their chance in life in love affairs with married men. Again and again have I pointed out to them what a sorry bargain it is when a girl gives all and gets nothing in return.

I ask this girl who writes me to sit down and to calmly figure out her case. On one side of the page let her write down Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children. These are things that she forfeits if she continues her affair with the married man.

A Bad Companion.

She may not think much of Morality, but a gnawing Conscience is a bad companion to have with you night and day, and what about Self Respect, and the Respect of One's Circle of Acquaintance, and the black mortification of knowing that one has brought dishonor on one's name?

Do you believe that the love of any man on earth ever pays a girl for knowing that her family is ashamed of her, or that any dagger could pierce a soul with such an agony as seeing other women draw their skirts away from her? And do you think that any worthy young man, the sort of a young man you would like to marry, would care to marry a girl whose name had been bandied about as the former sweetheart of some married man?

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children—these are pretty good things for a woman to have, little sister. You throw them over the windmill if you continue your love affair with a married man. What are you going to write on the other side of the ledger?

Scandal? Oh, yes, you are. Don't think you can keep it hidden and secret. Such things always come out. Don't think people won't talk about you. Gossip has a thousand tongues, and not one of them will spare you. The first time a girl goes out to dinner in a cafe with a married man, she leaves her good name behind her.

A guilty Conscience? Yes, no matter how you lie to yourself, you will always have that on your soul, that will wake you up in the night with a cold sweat on your forehead. You know that you are doing your best to rob a woman of her husband, and little children of their father. You are breaking up a home and slaying the happiness of another woman, and beside those crimes, burglary is a commendable pastime and murder a trifling misdemeanor.

Not Your Affair.

Perhaps the man is tired of his wife and untrue to her, anyway. That isn't your affair. You don't have to steal and kill because there are degenerates that do. Be sure of this, little girl—no woman ever built any secure happiness on another woman's misery.

Then write down Waiting. Years and years of hopeless, aimless waiting for a man who has no right to love you, a man whom you have no right to love, one who can give you only stolen minutes of his society, who can not be seen with you, or visit you without shame to you both. Anything attractive in that prospect, little sister?

Then write Fear. Fear of desertion. The hideous fear that gnaws at the heart of the woman who has given everything to a man and has no way by which she can bind him to her side. The wife has the bond that the law and society has forged, that holds her husband to her. He can not break this tie with impunity, but between the married man and his unmarried love there is nothing but his fickle fancy.

No other woman knows such torturing jealousy, no other woman knows such deadly fear as this woman who realizes that nothing but her beauty and her youth and her charm holds her married sweetheart, and that some day these must go, and that then he will turn to a fresher and fairer face.

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children, on the one side. On the other, Scandal, A Guilty Conscience, Waiting, Fear, No Home nor Husband nor Children of one's own, no settled place in society, to be looked at askance instead of being welcome among the people one would like to know. How does the account balance, little sister? Don't you think that you will have to pay a pretty high price for your romance with a married man?

And look at the man squarely. Don't you think that any man, who would win the heart of a young girl when he knew that he couldn't carry her, is about the most consummate cad that ever came down the pike? And doesn't he deserve medal as the most selfish man on earth when he asks you to do a thing that will make you the target for all the mud slinging in your circle?

WITHIN THE LAW

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, an orphan, employed in Edward Gilder's department store, is unjustly accused of theft and sent to prison. She is hounded by the police on her release, and finally goes to live with Joe Garson, a forger, and Aggie Lynch, a blackmailer, both of whom treat her with respect. Mary resolves to keep "within the law." She becomes the leader of a band of swindlers. Gilder's son, Dick, falls in love with her, and she marries him to be revenged on his father—and then finds that she is in love with him. Dick refuses to give her up, a demand made by his father, Mary disappears. Police Inspector Burke in an effort to aid the elder Gilder schemes to secure the arrest of Mary through "English Eddie" Griggs, a police informer. Garson plans to rob the Gilder home on a tip from Griggs. Mary hears of it and tries to prevent it, going to the Gilder home. Mary pleads with Garson to drop the robbery, and Dick enters. Garson kills Griggs when Mary corners the latter and he admits he is working for the police. Burke enters the house, a searchlight throwing its rays on the dead man's body. Mary and Dick are arrested, because Mary tells Burke that Dick shot Griggs in defense of his home.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Cringingly, Chicago Red, who so gloried in his strength, yet was now altogether humble in his precarious case, obeyed as far as the getting to his feet was concerned. * * * It never occurred to him even that he should carry his obedience to the point of "squealing on a pal!" Had the circumstances been different, he might have refused to accept the Inspector's blow with such meekness, since above all things he loved a bit of bodily strife, with some one near his own strength, and the Inspector was of a sort to offer him a battle worth while.

So, now, while he got slowly to his feet, he took care to keep at a respectful distance from the official, though his big hands fairly ached to double into fists for blows with this man who had so maltreated him.

"Send 'Em In."

His own self-respect, of its peculiar sort, was saved by the interference of Cassidy, who entered the Inspector's office to announce the arrival of the District Attorney.

"Send 'im in," Burke directed at once. He made a gesture toward the doorman, and added: "Take 'em back!"

A grin of evil humor wreathed the lips of the police official, and he added to the attentive doorman a word of direction that might well be interpreted by the malevolent expression on his face.

"Don't be rough with 'em, Dan," he said. For once his dominating voice was reduced to something approaching softness in his sardonic appreciation of his own humor in the conception of what these two men, who had ventured to resist his importunities, might receive at the hands of his faithful satellites. * * * The doorman grinned appreciatively, and herded his victims from the place. And the two went shamblingly in sure knowledge of the things that were in store. Yet, without thought of treachery. They would not "squeal!" All they would tell of the death of Eddie Griggs would be: "He got what was coming to him!"

The Inspector dropped into his swivel chair at the desk while he awaited the arrival of Demarest, the District Attorney. The greetings between the two were cordial when at last the public prosecutor made his appearance.

"I came as soon as I got your message," the District Attorney said, as he seated himself in a chair by the desk. "And I've sent word to Mr. Gilder. * * * Now, then, Burke, let's have this thing quickly."

The Inspector's explanation was concise:

Burke's Face Crimsoned.

"Joe Garson, Chicago Red and Dacey, along with Griggs, broke into Edward Gilder's house last night! I knew the trick was going to be pulled off, and so I planted Cassidy and a couple of other men just outside the room where the haul was to be made. Then I went away, and after something like half an hour I came back to make the arrests myself." A look of intense disgust spread itself over the Inspector's massive face. "Well," he concluded sheepishly, "when I broke into the room I found Gilder along with that Turner woman he married, and they were just talking together."

"No trace of the others?" Demarest questioned crisply.

At the inquiry, Burke's face crimsoned angrily, then again set in grim lines.

"I found Griggs lying on the floor—dead!" Once again the disgust showed in his expression. "The Turner woman says young Gilder shot Griggs because he broke into the house. Ain't that the limit?"

"What does the boy say?" the District Attorney demanded.

Burke shook his head dispiritedly.

"Nothing," he answered. "She told him not to talk, and so, of course, he won't, he's such a fool over her."

"And what does she say?" Demarest asked. He found himself rather amused by the exceeding chagrin of the Inspector over this affair.

Burke's voice grew savage as he snapped a reply.

He Admitted the Fact.

"Refuses to talk till she sees a lawyer." But a touch of cheerfulness appeared in his tones as he proceeded. "We've got Chicago Red and Dacey, and we'll have Garson before the day's over. And, oh, yes, they've picked up a young girl at the Turner woman's place. And we've got one real clew—for once!" The speaker's expression was suddenly triumphant. He opened a drawer of the desk, and took out Garson's pistol, to which the silencer was still attached.

"You never saw a gun like that before, eh?" he exclaimed.

Demarest admitted the fact after a curious examination.

"I'll bet you you never did!" Burke cried, with satisfaction. "That thing on the end is a Maxim silencer. There are thousands of them in use on rifles, but they've never been able to use them on revolvers before. This is a specially made gun," he went on admiringly, as he took it back and slipped it into a pocket of his coat. "That thing is absolutely noiseless, I've tried it. Well, you see, it'll be an easy thing—easiest thing in the world—to trace that silencer attachment. Cassidy's working on that end of the thing now."

For a few minutes longer the two men discussed the details of the crime, theorizing over the baffling event. Then, presently, Cassidy entered the office, and made report of his investigations concerning the pistol with the silencer attachment.

"I got the factory at Hartford on the wire," he explained, "and they gave me Mr. Maxim himself, the inventor of the silencer. He said this was surely a special gun, which was made for the use of Henry Sylvester, one of the professors at Yale. He wanted it for demonstration purposes. Mr. Maxim said the things have never been put on the market, and that they never will be."

"For humane reasons," Demarest commented, nodding approbation.

"Good thing, too!" Burke conceded. "They'd make murder too devilish easy, and it's easy enough now. * * * Well, Cassidy?"

"I got hold of this man Sylvester," Cassidy went on. "I had him on the phone, too. He says that his house was robbed about eight weeks ago, and among other things the silencer was stolen." Cassidy paused, and chuckled dryly. "He adds the startling information that the New Haven police have not been able to recover any of the stolen property. Them rube cops are immense!"

Demarest smiled slyly, as the detective, at a nod from his superior, went toward the door.

"No," he said, maliciously; "only the New York police recover stolen goods."

"Good night!" quoth Cassidy, turning at the door, in admission of his discomfiture over the thrust, while Burke himself grinned wryly in appreciation of the gibe.

Demarest grew grave again, as he put the question that was troubling him most.

"Is there any chance that young Gilder shot Griggs?"

"You can search me!" the Inspector answered, disconsolately. "My men were just outside the door of the room where Eddie Griggs was shot to death, and none of 'em heard a sound. It's that infernal silencer thing. Of course, I know that all the gang was in the house."

"But tell me just how you know that fact," Demarest objected very crisply. "Did you see them go in?"

"No, I didn't," the Inspector admitted, tartly. "But Griggs——"

Demarest permitted himself a sneer born of legal knowledge.

"Griggs is dead, Burke. You're up against it. You can't prove that Garson, or Chicago Red, or Dacey, ever entered that house."

The Inspector scowled over this positive statement.

"But Griggs said they were going to," he argued.

"I know," Demarest agreed, with an exasperating air of shrewdness, "but Griggs is dead. You see, Burke, you couldn't in a trial even repeat what he told you. It's not permissible evidence."

"Oh, th' law!" the Inspector snorted, with much choler. "Well, then," he went on belligerently, "I'll charge young Gilder with murder, and call the Turner woman as a witness."

The District Attorney laughed aloud over this project.

Wife Cannot Testify.

"You can't question her on the witness stand," he explained patronizingly to the badgered police official. "The law doesn't allow you to make a wife testify against her husband. And, what's more, you can't arrest her, and then force her to go into the witness stand, either. No, Burke," he concluded emphatically, "your only chance of getting the murderer of Griggs is by a confession."

"Then, I'll charge them both with the murder," the Inspector growled vindictively. "And, by God, they'll both go to trial unless somebody comes through." He brought his huge fist down on the desk with violence, and his voice was forbidding. "If it's my last act on earth," he declared, "I'm going to get the man who shot Eddie Griggs."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Experience.

"My dear boy," said Enpeck, who happened to be in a confidential mood, "you will never know what real happiness is until you get married."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Singleton, astonished at such a remark from such an unexpected source.

"It's a fact," rejoined Enpeck, "but then it will be too late for you to appreciate it."

BRADY PITCHES TODAY; HOWELL MAY FACE HIM

By Joe Agler.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 13. "King" Brady will twirl to-day's game, with Dunn receiving his slants. Kid Elberfeld will probably use his new college pitcher, Howell, or maybe Sommers, his star southpaw.

The Crackers opened their series here with a winner. Grimes, the twirler who won eleven straight games in the Central Association, made his debut against us, and, as usual, we got to him in the fifth, after the fans thought the Lookouts had the contest sewed up. We kept on going after we once started and could not be stopped till we had five runs across the plate.

Joe Conzelman twirled the kind of ball that will win many a ball game. The runs scored against him were made on errors. He will save many a game on the right side of the ledger with the Crackers hitting behind him.

Joe Dunn caught a grand game, and his two-ply smash broke up the contest after yours truly singled with the bases full. Wallop Smith got another triple, hitting it far over Elston's head in right field, and scored on Bisland's fly.

Welchonce broke his favorite bat in the contest, but is not a bit superstitious and will be out to-day hitting just as hard as in previous games.

Coyle is out of the game with a bad wrist. He was hit by a ball in the Nashville series, which cripples the Kid's infield somewhat. Williams is not the hitter that Coyle is.

We should take at least two out of three of these contests. With "King" pitching as he can and with the Crackers hitting that ball as we should, we ought to take an easy game.

The Lookouts are drawing fairly well. The crowds are coming out to witness the games, and they certainly are loyal fans and good rooters.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Everything is in readiness for the big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. All the boxers have completed training and are on edge for the fray.

* * *

Sailor White and Jim Savage clash in the main bout; Mike Saul will take on Terry Nelson in the semi-final, while Spider Britt meets Meyer Pries in the opening set-to. All the scraps are scheduled to go ten rounds and the fans should see enough real milling to last them for months.

* * *

Tickets for the big show are going fast and a banner house should be present. Saul and his followers will be at the ringside to cheer the Hebrew on to a good start in his come-back effort.

* * *

Charlie White has grabbed two more matches. He has signed to box Harry Trendall, a St. Louis lightweight, in the latter city on June 18. After this affair Charlie is to take on Jack Britton in a 20-round engagement at New Orleans on July 4.

* * *

Frank Whitney writes from Cedar Rapids that he is anxious to pick up some bouts. His wife died recently and he says he must hustle and get some money. "I am ready to meet any of the lightweights," he writes. Whitney has a standing challenge to any 133-pounder in the world. A bout between Whitney and Charlie White should prove a hummer for any promoter.

* * *

Frankie Burns is working hard in Chicago for his ten-round battle with Johnny Coulon a week from Friday night at Kenosha, Wis. This will be the fourth scrap between the pair. They have agreed to make 116 pounds ringside.

* * *

Jimmy Britt and Jimmy Dunn are perhaps the greatest boosters for Bud Anderson, the coast sensation, who meets Leach Cross on July 4. Both claim that Bud is made of championship material and pick him to hand the dentist a neat lacing.

* * *

On the other hand, Jim Savage and K. O. Brown are strong boosters for Cross. Savage picks Leach to stop Anderson in twelve rounds and says K. O. Brown who recently met Anderson picks Leach to win sure. "Any boxer who will stand up and slug with Cross is sure to be stopped," says Savage, "and Anderson is rated on the coast as a boy who loves to slug.

* * *

Tommy Murphy will likely meet the winner of the Dundee-Jack White bout, which is billed to take place at Los Angeles on June 17. Tom McCarey, who is staging the go has offered Murphy the match.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion, is a firm believer in newspaper publicity. In order to attract attention Freddie announces his willingness to meet Willie Ritchie on a winner take all basis. And no one knows better than Freddie that this is impossible as long as Billy Nolan is Ritchie's manager.

* * *

Ad Wolgast's injury to his thumb may be of a permanent nature. Anyhow the ex-lightweight champion contemplates a trip to Honolulu. That's where some of the other so-called champs should migrate.

* * *

Can you beat this? Danny Morgan has bet $350 that Young Ahearn defeats Mike Gibbons when the two clash at New York to-night. Furthermore, Danny has borrowed the money. This news comes from Jim Savage, who is being managed by Daniel.

* * *

Jack McCarron and Young Jack O'Brien, the stars of Jack O'Brien's stable, are resting up after a somewhat strenuous season.

* * *

The French boxing authorities must be looking for easy game for their heavyweight champion, George Carpentier, when they offer Rodel, the Boer boxer, a bout with Carpentier.

* * *

Al Kubiak is the latest to challenge the winner of the Savage-White match at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Al writes that he is feeling better than ever in his life and is sure he can beat either of the big heavyweights.

PHILA. FAIR GOLFERS WIN.

COAST BATTLE WILL BE GREAT BETTING AFFAIR

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 13.—Not in years have the boxing fans been presented with a fighting card that has so completely torn them out on the Pacific Coast as this little affair between Willie Ritchie, lightweight, and Jose Rivers. The scrap is set for the Glorious Fourth and surely should be one royal battle. But at the same time it is such an open affair and such a hard one to dope out that it doubtless will prove one of the biggest betting affairs ever known on the coast or anywhere else.

* * *

BY way of making it an exceptionally good one the State of California, perhaps the strongest district in the Union for boxing, will be split exactly in twain over the battle. To begin with, Rivers will get almost the unanimous support of the southern part of the State, while San Francisco, unwavering in its support of its own, will go to the Ritchie end as if the whole thing were over right now. This will make one most exciting contest, and it is certain that the remainder of the country will follow suit and plunge on this encounter.

* * *

THE peculiar ending of the Wolgast match, in which both men were accused of fouling and the referee came in for a lot of censure, and the equally strange ending of the Ritchie-Wolgast battle, which was given to Ritchie on a foul, have always created puzzling questions for the fight fans to argue over. Many were led to believe from the Los Angeles reports that Rivers proved to be the master of Wolgast that afternoon and a good many others will always believe that Wolgast was robbed by that foul decision with Ritchie. Thus it goes with the eternal question of supremacy never fully or completely decided. Now we are to have Rivers booked up with the clever Ritchie in a long contest. Surely that should settle a whole lot of arguments.

* * *

TOMMY WALSH, who should know the coast situation as well as anybody, thinks Ritchie will have a rather strong shade over Rivers in the milling on the Fourth. Tommy returned to the city the other day on a scouting tour for Tom McCarey of Los Angeles. He wants to scare up some good fighting material in the lightweight division for a tournament that McCarey is thinking of staging during July and August. Tommy is of the opinion that superior speed and size will have much to do to encompass the downfall of the Los Angeles boy.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—The Giants must regain their batting stride if they are to repeat on the pennant. The club has not been hitting consistently all season. First one man bats well for two or three days and then another. But we do not appear to get going all together. The pitchers are doing better than they were. Both Marquard and Tesreau are in fine shape, and Demaree is fit to take his regular turn once more. I believe that the pitching staff and hard hitting that is bound to come will eventually push the Phillies out of the lead. My confidence still is in the Giants, of course. The hard work in the early spring will finally wear the edge off the Philly twirlers when the real hot weather sets in, and we should close up the gap, if it does not get too wide in the meantime. Marquard started off the season like a whirlwind a year ago, you will recall, and won nineteen straight games. But all the hard work in the early stages of the race wore him out for the midsummer toil, and he slumped badly for a month or so. I expect to see the same thing happen to the Philadelphia pitchers. The Quakers are bound to slump, but I do not know how far that slump will go. At least our chance to return home from this trip in first place is gone now.

* * *

THE Cubs do not look to me like any more of a pennant possibility now than they did when they were in New York on their first trip East. They are weak in the pitcher's box. The rest of the team is fine, but I cannot figure any club with the pitchers possessed by the Cubs as a pennant winner in the National League this year, when there are such staffs as the Philadelphia, Pittsburg and New York corps.

The Pirates have surprised me. Just when it looked as if they were going to slide into their true gait and begin climbing, they dropped the series to the Quakers. I cannot understand why that club does not get going consistently, because the material is certainly there, both in the field and the pitcher's box. I suppose Clarke's team will just about hit its stride against us this week.

* * *

THE rest of the clubs in the National League, with the possible exception of Brooklyn, are clearly out of the going. The Superbas have a very outside chance, but it does not look good with their pitchers moving as badly as they are at present. Brooklyn has not the robustness to withstand the rigors of a hard campaign, to my mind. The team is good for only a short spurt. It was some fancy pitching which put it up with the leaders for a time. I had figured Philadelphia to fade in the same way, but these boys seem to be trying to show me up by sticking. I still adhere to my notion that Pittsburg will begin to climb shortly, and the race will narrow down to a battle between the Pirates and Giants in September. Pittsburg has always been a better road club than when it is playing on the home grounds. Perhaps that may partially explain its present showing.

Alexander, the Phillies' star twirler, went against the Cardinals yesterday and added another game to his win column.

Joe Jackson, of the Naps, made a homer yesterday—the only score acquired by his team.

* * *

The Cubs jumped on Nap Rucker, the star portside flinger for the Dodgers, yesterday, pounded out thirteen hits and scored six runs, which was more than sufficient to defeat the slumping Brooklynites.

* * *

The best Ty Cobb could get off the delivery of Schulze, the Yankee twirler, was a double out of four times up.

* * *

A triple play executed by Shortstop Maranville and First Baseman Meyers, of the Braves, stopped a batting rally on the part of the Reds, and enabled the Bostonians to grab a 7 to 3 victory.

* * *

Midkiff's hit in the ninth that sent Caldwell across the plate won the game for the Yankees from the Tigers.

* * *

Manager Birmingham, of the Neps, in denying that Pitcher Yack Gregg and Outfielder Jack Graney had a fist fight after Wednesday's game, explained the battered countenances of the two by declaring the dog mascot big Gregg and that Graney was injured in batting practice.

* * *

Rumor has it that a deal is under way by which Nap Rucker, the star pitcher of the Dodgers, will go to the Cubs in exchange for Roger Bresnahan, the catcher, who is drawing a huge salary from the Cub coffers for warming the bench. Archer is doing most of the catching for the Cubs.

Ty Cobb, of the Tigers, and Joe Jackson, of the Naps, are engaged in a see-saw battle for the batting leadership of the American League. Both are hitting around .450 and they are taking turns in leading.

* * *

The Athletics outran, outfielded and outbatted the Naps yesterday in the first of their four-game series, and annexed an easy 6 to 1 victory.

* * *

Falkenberg, the "human hatpin," who essayed the twirling duties for the Naps yesterday, was bombarded from the slab in the eighth inning, suffering his second defeat of the season.

The Giants went to bat in the eighth inning of their game with the Pirates two runs to the bad and promptly harvested three tallies as the result of a few hits, which additional runs won the game.

TY COBB OUT TO COP HITTING CROWN AGAIN

ADMIRERS of Tyrus Raymond Cobb have a right to be proud of the record amassed by the Georgia Peach during the first month of the present campaign. Participating in 24 games, of which his team won 11, Cobb hit safely in 20 combats and in one of these it should be remembered that he was an added starter and got a chance to bat only once, which opportunity he improved by poling a sacrifice fly.

The gunners who slipped ciphers into the Southern's basehit column were Ray Keating and Ray Fisher, of the Highlanders, on May 7 and 8, respectively; Harry White and Bill Lange, of the White Sox, on May 4, and Tom Hughes and Tom Drohan, of the Senators, on May 16.

3 Hits 5 Times This Year.

In the score of contests in which Cobb hit safely he obtained 32 singles, three doubles and three triples, his batting average from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, being .475. He has made three hits five times this season, two hits eight times and one hit seven times. His best record in the way of consecutive clouting came in the games of May 19 and 20 with the Athletics, when he got six hits in the same number of trips to the plate.

Tyrus Raymond, who seems bent on carrying off the Chalmers American League trophy for the third time, has put the finishing touches to fourteen of the Tigers' tallies, sending in seven on clean hits, four on aerial sacrifice and three on infield outs. He is not the Tigers' leading batterin of runs as yet, for Bobby Veach, who has played in ten more contests, has driven in four more counters. On the percentage basis, however, Cobb outranks Veach as a timely thumper.

Only Four Fanned Ty.

Cobb faced 30 American League pitchers from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, and only four men succeeded in fanning him. Bob Russell, of the White Sox, whiffed Tyrus on May 3; Ray Keating, of the Highlanders, struck him out twice on May 7 (that day the Dixie Demon complained his eyes bothered him). Buck O'Brien, of the Red Sox, claimed Ty as a strike-out victim on May 13, and twelve days later Walter Leverenz, of the Browns, set him down via the strike out line.

Cobb has drawn 17 passes in 24 games and has been successful in 12 out of 16 steals he has essayed. The men who turned him back when he tried to steal were Henry, of Washington, twice; Carrigan, of Boston, once, and Lapp, of Philadelphia, once.

Sports and Such

THE SPRING KINKS IN THE baseball dope are being straightened out and the big league teams are gradually fitting into their appointed positions, to the great glorification of the aforesaid dope.

Of the two leagues the National promises the better race, a situation that was more or less forecast. In the American League no one would be particularly shocked if the excitement were all over by the middle of July. If the Athletics maintain their present industrious lick and the Boston team continues to improve, this combination of events is likely to result in an overwhelming lead for the Mack outfit within the next few weeks. Boston is earnestly doing its best to wallop Cleveland, and later on it will have a chance to slam the Washington gang, all of which is the best little sort of ally work for Connie Mack.

• • •

THE SOLEMN PROPHETS OF the spring-tide unanimously held that if Connie Mack kept his men on the reservation there would be no stopping them this season, and seemingly it will work out so.

• • •

THERE HAS BEEN ONE UPset—or rather two—of magnitude in the older league. There is not the slightest doubt that on paper the Giants this spring were fully a 20 per cent stronger club than they were last season, when they won the pennant. By an amazingly simple process of arithmetic you could thus figure out that they would win the pennant in a walk this summer; but, though they have played to form, they have failed to win the games that were cheerfully counted for them last April.

• • •

IF THE PIRATES NOW occupied that high position fortuitously held by the Phillies we should worry. As it is, the Phillies are likely to blow. Brooklyn started out to break up the league, and Brooklyn blew. The Phillies are a little stronger than the Dodgers and are holding up a litle longer, but it will be the biggest shock baseball ever got if they keep up this pace for another six weeks. So if the Giants find themselves and develop a real winning streak they have every chance to nail the lead and hold it.

New Date Set for 'Drome Races

Hold Meet Saturday Afternoon

SHARP at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Starter Noon Hudson will fire the first gun for the first race in the new Atlanta Motordrome. A minute later Announcer Erskine Brewster, from his raised platform, will be booming the results through a giant megaphone. And Atlanta's season of thrills and sensations will be in progress.

Always providing it doesn't rain.

Ten thousand Atlanta speed fans are awaiting the verdict of the weather man. If he will provide a couple of hours sunshine Saturday afternoon there will be nothing to it but a big success. Nearly five thousand people plowed their way to the track Friday night, June 6, right through the rain, on the off chance that there would be racing. Another five thousand stayed at home because they saw the case was hopeless. They will all be there ten thousand strong Saturday afternoon, if the weather is fair. And there will be room for all. Twelve thousand people can be seated in the grandstand alone. Twice that many can be looked out for in the infield. So there will be no crowding if the crowd grows to 36,000. Seats all around a quarter mile track, five rows deep, mean a lot of accommodations.

The sport which will be offered Saturday afternoon cannot be otherwise than thrilling and sensational. Ninety miles an hour on a four-lap track offers hair-raising possibilities. The nearest Atlanta speed bugs ever came to seeing such speed was at the Atlanta Speedway. There the cars raced on a two-mile oval. At the motordrome the best record of the speedway will undoubtedly be equaled or surpassed—and it will be done on a four-lap track, banked like a brick fence, lighted by blazing tungstens, and surrounded by a solid bank of shrieking, hat-waving humanity. Three and four riders will be on the track at the same time and each will flash past at ten second intervals.

The racing will be in dead earnest. The riders need the money. There hasn't been any "sugar" stirring around racing headquarters in months. Now, with a chance to race for the coin, they will not overlook any bets.

Special cars will be run to the Motordrome, leaving Five Points at two-minute intervals. The run to the show grounds takes but five or six minutes. After the races the cars will be backed up and ready to carry the speed fans back to the city at top speed.

This may be Atlanta's only chance to see speedway racing in the day time. The track was built for night racing. The electric lights are all in place. It was only because of the repeated postponements made necessary because of the recent rains and because of the coolness of the weather, that an afternoon meet was decided on. This show Saturday afternoon will give the fans a fine chance to get a line on the board track racing game by daylight. It may also give Jack Prince a chance to slip up on the weather man. Anyhow, if the weather is fair, there will be nine thrilling races Saturday afternoon. And all Atlanta's speed fans will be there to see them.

UNCLE SAM TO EXTEND COURTESY TO PLAYERS

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Uncle Sam's consular and diplomatic officials in parts of the world to be visited next fall and winter by President Comiskey's White Sox and the New York Giants will be asked to extend the touring athlets every courtesy.

Secretary of State William J. Bryan, harking to the request of Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Chicago, has provided Manager Callahan, of the Sox, with the necessary credentials.

The document is in the form of a general letter addressed to officials in the United States consular and diplomatic service throughout the nations on the itinerary of the globe-girdling ball clubs and introduces the members of the party.

MAY ORGANIZE LEAGUE TO PLAY ON WEDNESDAY

A movement has been started to organize a baseball league to play on Wednesday afternoons. The moving pictures and theater men will combine with the clothing store men who are closing their places of business on Wednesday afternoons. Some of the teams that will probably enter this league are the Consolidated Film Company, Mutual Film Company, Daniel Bros. Company and McConnell Clothing and Shoe Company.

Other teams that can play on Wednesday afternoon are requested to call up Shelley Ivey, over phone Ivy 4989, at once.

GIBBONS AND AHEARN CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, June 13.—Mike Gibbons, of St. Paul, may strike a snag in the person of Young Ahearn, the Dancing Master, when they meet in a ten-round bout in the Garden tonight. Ahearn is rapidly growing into the middleweight division. It is conceded that he is one of the finest boxers in the ring.

Best of White Hopes Will Meet at Auditorium-Armory

SAVAGE AND WHITE BATTLE HERE TO-NIGHT

By Left Hook.

A FEW hours after Sailor White and Jim Savage conclude their ten-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory to-night a special representative of the local military companies will embark for New York for the express purpose of closing with Gunboat Smith to come to Atlanta July 4 to meet the winner.

To-day Gunboat Smith looks the best heavyweight of them all. His record entitles him to more consideration than any of them. A battle between Smith and the winner tonight would be an affair of international interest.

The dicker for Smith adds vastly to the interest in to-night's bout—which becomes more than ever a championship affray. Sailor White and Jim Savage have both been looked upon as logical opponents for Smith in the title battle. One or the other must be eliminated before the lights are turned off in the Auditorium-Armory to-night.

Both Men Ready.

Both contestants turned up in good order this morning. They look the better for their hard work since they arrived in Atlanta and should enter the ring in top-notch condition. Savage has been training viciously here. White, who arrived in the best possible trim, has been taking it easy.

Both men will enter the ring tonight at their best scrapping weight and when Referee Lou Castro gives the word and the ball clangs there should be action and gobs of it.

This looks like the battle of his career to Sailor White. He has battled a lot of the best of them. But this night he meets one man he believes he can beat. He admits that Savage can smear it all over him at boxing, but he does not intend to encourage any boxing.

White Is a Scrapper.

White knows it is possible to carry a battle to a man so hard that nothing but rough work will be possible. That's his style of doing business. He loves to mingle. Any time his opponent gets off at long range he sorrows. The exchange of blows is where he shines. He has everything but science on Savage — weight, height, reach, strength and a punch. He has admitted that he will lose if he doesn't get his man early. So he is going in for the early stuff.

The Sailor figures that if he can land a few good blows on Savage he can make him forget all he ever knew about boxing. He has trimmed a lot of other clever scrappers that way and he believes it will work with Jim. Anyhow it is the only system of attack he knows and he is going to try it out. If that method loses he loses. But he figures that he stands a swell chance of putting Savage to sleep.

Saul and Nelson Scrap.

The loud noise in the semi-windup doings will be made by the Saul-Nelson preliminary. These lads take their battle as earnestly as though it was the main bout. They are getting a good piece of money for scrapping and they are both anxious to win. It is a waste of type to say much about this bout, for local fans know it will be good. Anything Saul goes into will be lively. Any time Terry Nelson scraps there will be action. Get the two together and it means fireworks. It will go the full ten rounds, easily enough, for both boys are as tough as gads. Of course a lucky punch might end it, but nobody looks for that. What the fans expect is ten slashing rounds of give-and-take stuff, with no let-up except for the minute intervals.

The Meyer Pries-Spider Britt affair looks promising too. These lads haven't any use for each other and have long been pining for a chance to go the route. This is the first time they have ever been put on for the full ten rounds. It may result in a verdict. They love to hammer each other so well and are willing to take so much punishment for the pleasure of an exchange that a knockout is likely to come off at any old time.

The bouts to-night will be run on the same high plane as all those at the Auditorium-Armory. The military companies will be in charge and will serve as ushers and will police the building. The battles will be put on and pushed through at top speed and no long waits need be feared.

Reserved seats are on sale at Shepherd's Segar Shop, corner of Edgewood and Pryor.

Thornton in Finals Of Old Dominion

RICHMOND, VA., June 12.—By defeating Pollard and Coke Thursday afternoon, 6-4, 6-2, Thornton and Shaner qualified for the finals in men's doubles in the Old Dominion tennis tourney, which is scheduled to be played at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon. Their competitors will be Buford and Dunn.

Thornton's work on the courts is declared to be the most brilliant ever seen here. He was in exceptionally fine form Thursday.

At 4 o'clock Friday, Mrs. Willard Sullivan is scheduled to contest with Mrs. Saunders Taylor for the challenge cup, Mrs. Sullivan having forced her way to the front Thursday afternoon when she easily defeated Miss Colston. The winner of this contest will be entitled to parmanent possession of the cup. Mrs. Taylor is now the holder of it.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

MATTY.

"You are sick, Father Matty," the young man said,
"You have lost your old fadeaway curve.
Your arm is a bum and your sinews are dead,
And you haven't a thing but your nerve."

"It is true I am sick," he arose to remark,
"It is true I am feeble and lame."
And having concluded, he hiked to the park
And proceeded to capture a game.

It is said that Christy Mathewson never has played ball on Sunday. Nor would seven National League teams go into mourning if he were to lay off seven days per week.

In addition to peddling life insurance it is rumored that Mr. Mathewson is a passably good heaver.

One horrible example of wasted endeavor is the case of the young man who forged a check in order to see the Yanks in the act of playing baseball.

One is forced to wonder at the feat performed by Marcel G. Brindejonc des Moulinais, who flew from Paris to Berlin in an aeroplane without getting his name tangled in the propeller.

There are some misguided persons who still refer to Lew Richie as the Giant Killer.

FABLE.

Once upon a time there was a baseball fan who did not know how to manage a baseball team.

While we grieve with Mr. Wolgast over his fractured thumb, it would not cause us any poignant grief if Tom Jones were to sprain his speaking apparatus.

ENOUGH IS SUFFICIENT.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
Though the hope of a pennant has flown,
But the fan worth while
Is the fan who can smile
When they show an assortment of bone.

COTTON SOARS; LATER RECEDES

Turner's Crop Report and Bearish Statistics Cause Active Selling in Late Session.

NEW YORK, June 13.—There was a renewal of heavy buying at the opening of the cotton market to-day and prompt response by prices, which were 2 to 10 points higher than last night's close. Interest centered chiefly in the new crop positions, of which Wall Street was a heavy buyer. August, however, showed the best gain, opening 10 points higher. One broker took 10,000 bales of December alone. This was supposed to represent covering.

Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm.

The market continued on the upward scale during the first fifteen minutes and prices increased their gains 1 to 5 points over the opening.

The advance came in the face of a favorable weather map, with indications pointing to fair weather over Sunday.

During the forenoon a wave of general selling dominated the market, which looked to be profit-taking, resulting in prices dropping 5 to 8 points under the initial level. Later the market rallied a few points and during the late forenoon the range was 1 to 6 points over the previous close.

Reports as to the condition of the crop and the spot situation was practically nil. However, sentiment continues bearish.

The principal selling was said to come chiefly from Liverpool and the South. The speculative element also sold. It is estimated that fully 200,000 bales of short cotton was sold yesterday, of which the bulk of it was sold by speculators.

During the afternoon session offerings became freer, based on expectations of a bearish week-end statement and a report by J. B. Turner, of Memphis, giving the conditon of the crop as of June 10, 81.2 per cent, an improvement of 2.1 per cent for the fifteen days, and the crop condition was 79.1 per cent on May 25, according to the Census Bureau, resulting in prices receding some 5 to 10 points in most active positions from the opening quotations.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 1 to 5 points from the closing quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Weather developments overnight were favorable. Fair and warmer weather prevails, except for some cloudiness in south and west Texas and in North Carolina where there was a light rainfall. Indications are for cloudy and probably rainy weather in west Texas, fair and much warmer over remainder of the belt. Montgomery, Ala., says: "Crop progressing favorable. Cool weather of no consequence."

Liverpool was poor at the start, but rallied sharply as soon as New York showed further strength in July. Spots higher, sales 10,000 bales.

Our market opened about 4 points higher on the strong showing in New York, but there was no buying power and prices soon eased. The technical situation has evidently been weakened by extensive short covering and professional advices from New York are to this effect.

Trading here settled around 11.44 for October and very quiet. Feeling is bearish on the general situation, but the fear of the possibility of an advance on technical conditions as recently demonstrated checks selling and makes the market respond readily to the least buying. There is no new mill demand of consequence, but the high July prices, with the expectation of possible squeeze prices to follow, gives confidence to holders and there is no pressure to sell.

CONDITION OF COTTON TO JUNE 10, 81.2 PER CENT

MEMPHIS, June 13.—Turner's crop reporting bureau by Miller & Cotter makes condition of cotton June 10, as compared with the Agricultural Bureau, 81.2, an improvement of 2.1 for the fifteen days.

In compiling these figures the report of the United States Department of Agriculture to date of May 25 are used as a basis and the percentages given herewith are made to compare with those of that authority as of May 25 last, showing thereby the improvement or deterioration of the crop that has occurred within the fifteen days:

STATE—	June 10.	May 25.
North Carolina	80	76
South Carolina	72	68
Georgia	74	69
Alabama	79	75
Mississippi	81	81
Tennessee	86	87
Arkansas	86	85
Louisiana	80	81
Oklahoma	87	87
Texas	85	84
United States	81.2	79.1

The notable improvement shown in eastern States is the direct result of rains, which have given generally good stands and put the soil, where formerly dry and cloddy, into good tilth. It was generally reported that up to the 10th ample rain had fallen and that further extended precipitation might so far retard cultivation as to make grass a threatening factor. As yet, however, this is an anticipated rather than a real menace.

In the Mississippi Valley and the southwest, where the condition was already high, the status was maintained. Plant growth, owing to cool weather, has not been so rapid as desired, but the young plant is quite thrifty.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—J. M. Anderson: The trading was rather active for the first hour. Brokers representing the uptown crowd and Wall Street were good buyers of the old and new crop which was said to be short covering. The selling was scattered, coming mainly from Liverpool and the South. Speculative element also sold.

"Weather favorable, but crop news mixed. Regardless of conditions, there is a steady demand for old crop which is the strength of the market. The question now advanced by a great many operators is "how much cotton is needed" and from the way the old crop is being absorbed, it appears that the world's needs are more than many believe it to be. While there is a bearish feeling existing, those inclined to the bear side are timid about seling the market short until they see further into the situation."

Look who's here! Friday, 13, 1913!

* * *

It is said not a single boll weevil complaint has been heard of in Kingston, Ark., which is one of the worst boll weevil territories in that State.

* * *

According to information received from Georgia, crop conditions over that State as well as the Carolinas are generally favorable.

* * *

If McFadden is still short of July, he is not worrying about it, through the gossip in many conservative circles.

* * *

The United States Department of Agriculture is taking active measures to help farmers fight the boll weevil in Louisiana. These take the form of advising them how best to get rid of the pest. A. A. Morrow, of the Federal demonstration work, calls upon the farmers of East Baton Rouge to take immediate steps to exterminate the pest or reduce the possibility of injury. In a circular addressed to the farmers of that parish he says, under date of June 6:

"The appearance of the boll weevil in East Baton Rouge is no surprise and sohuld cause no alarm. We have been expecting it even earlier. The farmer who wants to make cotton under boll weevil conditions must make up his mind to fight the weevils, first by gathering the weevil in the bud of the cotton and later by gathering forms or punctured squares, and destroy them by burning. Owing to the fact that most cotton is young and the weevil infestation heavy, owing to the hot days, the pest can easily be found on top of the young cotton, and the work of picking it off can be done cheaply by children at a small cost. Every weevil gathered now is a saving of from 50 to 75 squares later. With the present condition of the crop and the good cultivation it has received up to date with intense, late and shallow cultivation, there is no reason in the world why the farmers should not make a better crop of cotton to the acre than before the advent of the weevil with the old methods of cultivation."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable, showing fair and warmer over the entire belt, except cloudy in South Texas. No rain except a little in Northwest Texas, South Texas and a few points in North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy in West and South Texas, probably more there, but fair and much warmer weather in East Texas, Oklahoma, central and eastern States.

* * *

Spot revision: Strict middling and above ½d higher. Rest unchanged."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Crop progress delaying temperatures have revived the bullish claim, repeatedly made throughout the planting season, that the crop got a late start. In any event, yesterday's cotton market climbed without encountering effective opposition, and the bearish assertion that technical conditions alone supply a basis of strength fell on unappreciative ears. As a matter of fact, nobody, in professional circles at least, believes the present cool weather has actually damaged the cotton plant, but there seems to be no reasonable ground for doubt that low temperatures during the past three or four days have caused the crop as a whole to lose the progress it would have made had the weather been warm and favorable. In this connection, comparison between the weather now and at this time in 1911 are particularly interesting because large crop people are predicting a yield this year fully as great as the monster yield of 1911-1912.

"Almost without exception, yesterday morning and the morning before the Government's central stations in the cotton belt reported maximum temperatures lower than the minimum temperatures reported on the same days in 1911. Meanwhile, the New York July position continues to hold the center of the stage. The entire stock of cotton, certificated and uncertificated, at New York is now only 46,701. The talent as a whole is convinced so small a stock is entirely inadequate to protect the outstanding short contracts in the Norhern market. The situation, however, is made more acute by the premium over New York contracts at which actual cotton is selling in the South, and by the scarcity of desirable grades, which foreshadows a keen trade demand for the early receipts, which, as a rule, are of good grade cotton.

"Because of this scarcity, the grades above middling were marked up ⅝c in the New Orleans market yesterday."

RENEWED BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Large Institutions Absorb Big Issues Freely—Easier Feeling Generally.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 13.—New York, New Haven and Hartford was one of the weakest issues on the list at the opening of the stock market to-day, opening at 100, or 1⅞ under Thursday's final. After half an hour it rallied ½. Canadian Pacific was under pressure and declined to 216¾ for the loss of 1⅝, but rose to 217 under supporting orders.

The undertone was wavering and the list was irregular. The copper shares reflected strength, but most of the issues in which there is a strong international interest sustained declines. Some bankers professed the belief that Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo's emergency currency announcement is having its effect discounted by the actual need of credit rather than of money.

Among the gains were Utah Copper ⅝, Amalgamated Copper ⅝, Chino Copper ½, United States Rubber ⅜, American Car and Foundry ½, American Can 1, Anaconda Copper ⅜, Louisville and Nashville 1½, Reading ¾ and Southern Railway ¼. United States Steel common began with a gain of ¼, but later lost it and shaded. Union Pacific commenced unchanged, but later suffered a net decline. Southern Pacific lost ¾, while Norfolk and Western declined ½, American Telephone and Telegraph and St. Paul also declined fractionally. Lehigh Valley began with the loss of 1 point, but later recovered.

European news was bullish, despite the announcement of two failures on the London Exchange.

Trading in the last hour, especially in Reading, was active. Reading fluctuated between 156 7-8, which was 1 1-4 above the noon level, and 156 5-8. The rally was partly due to the bank statement, which showed a gain of nearly $8,000,000, and easier cable money. There was also some covering. The following advances above the midday quotations were recorded: Steel, 1-8; American Can, 5-8; Union Pacific, 1; Lehigh Valley, 3-8; Canadian Pacific, 3-4.

The market closed steady. Government bonds unchanged; other bonds firm.

TRADE IS 'SPOTTY' IN WOOL MARKET

Mill Buyers Have Reduced Their Purchasing Limits—Receipts Show Big Decrease.

BOSTON, June 13.—Conditions have not materially changed in the local wool market. Sales the past week have been well up to three-quarters of a million pounds, including a fair proportion of the new wools, both fleeces and territories. Trade is "spotty" and irregular. Some houses reported a moderate interest on the part of manufacturers, while others complain of the lack of demand. In the West dealers have been operating more freely. Prices in primary markets are still above a parity with this market, according to the estimates of leading wool men, but buyers pay them rather than allow competitors to secure the desirable wools.

Foreign wools are quiet, with only small lots selling. The feature of the week is the change in attitude toward primary wool markets. Mill buyers have reduced their buying limits and, therefore, may be said in a sense to have retired from the field.

Receipts in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	2,986,256	4,491,584
Foreign	490,135	2,873,390
Totals	3,476,391	7,364,974

Total receipts of 3,476,391 pounds, compared with 3,295,647 the preceding week, of which 2,531,777 were domestic.

Receipts in pounds from and including January 1, 1913, as compared with the corresponding period of 1912 were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	36,974,954	60,559,292
Foreign	39,962,025	67,603,981

CHICAGO, June 13.—Those who bought large lines of wheat on the reports of crop damage or prospective crop damage in the spring wheat country were on the selling side as the day wore away. Instead of absorbing the offerings at the declines, the trade seemed to back away, and resting spots of the day showed net losses of 5-8@3-4, and closings were around 3-4 below the best prices of the session.

Texas is threshing out wheat that is turning out 15 to 20 bushels. Minneapolis reported too much July wheat for sale there and prices easier in consequence.

Corn closed 1-4@3-8 lower and oats were off 1-8@3-8.

Provisions were firmer.

MODERN MILLER CROP REPORT.

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—The general rains in the Southwest and cooler weather in the winter wheat belt have been of much benefit to the wheat crop. The rapid deterioration, because of dry and hot weather, not only was checked, but considerable wheat that was backward, was restored and will give fair yields.

The harvest is well under way in the South, most of the wheat in Texas having been cut and shocked under favorable conditions and harvesting has extended northward into southern Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas and next week will be general. There are complaints about weather for the harvest, which has been favorable, and so far as can be judged by the wheat thus far thrashed, the quality of grain will be good.

Term "Crop Bound" Explained by Expert

Also What to Do In Case Fowl Is Affected With It—Read Carefully.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Judge F. J. Marshall.—We have a hen that has an abnormal sized crop. It seems to be inflamed and is all swelled up hard, like it was a great wad of grain and grass. What do you think is the matter with her and the cause? Also, what shall we do to help her?

S. C. R., Pickens, S. C.

Answer.—Your hen is troubled with what is called crop bound. There are various things that cause it. The most common are the swallowing of a piece of jagged bone or other substance too rough and large to pass through to the gizzard, stopping the passage of all other food. Then, again a fowl will eat a lot of oats or similar grain when overhungry, clogging the crop so that fermentation will ensue before it passes out. This will cause distention and the crop will simply remain inactive and do no work. At other times a fowl that has been kept where there is no grass or green stuff will, when it gets where there is some, fill up with such a wad that it literally stops everything.

They will continue to eat about the same for several days and this makes matters worse all the time. The simplest method of emptying the crop, if it succeeds, is to pour all the hot water down the bird's throat that it will hold. Have the water just as hot as you would drink yourself and not hotter. After this is done, hold the fowl with one hand, kneading the contents of the crop gently but thoroughly; then hold the head down and the mouth open, giving a slight jerking motion which will have a tendency to dislodge the packed matter with the water. Repeat this operation several times, if it seems at all successful in its work. If this will not do the work, the only other alternative is to open up the crop with a sharp knife and clean it out. It is best to have a helper to hold the hen firmly while you do the work. In the first place, remove the feathers from over the center of the crop, where you are going to cut. Have a keen knife, clean and bright. Cut through the outer skin a slit about two inches long, allowing it to bleed all it is going to before going on into the crop. Wipe it clean and dry with a little clean cotton or soft linen. After this is clean, make your cut into the crop about an inch long, when you will be ready to begin removing the packed contents. It is most easily done with something about like a shoe button hook with which you can pull it out a little at a time. Do not be in too big a hurry about it or you will cause trouble. Take your time to it and when it is cleaned out, clear down to the outlet, then you can give it a good washing out with a weak solution of pure carbolic acid and water, or dioxogen and water. If you have nothing of the kind at hand use a little salt in the water, which is about as good anything.

Then you are ready to sew it up. First sew the crop with about four stitches, and then the outer skin, taking about five or six, using a needle and white silk thread. After it is all over, give the fowl a few teaspoonfuls of hot milk, just as hot as you would dare to give it and if the bird is quite weak repeat the nourishment in about two hours.

Milk will make a good diet for a week at least; with a little soft bread added in about three days. Nothing solid should be given under a week. A little nux-vomica in the drinking water will act as a gentle tonic—say about six to ten drops in a quart of drinking water.

We often see cases of enlarged crop which is a hanging or sagging crop, just as if it were made of thin rubber and had not the strength to hold it in position. In fact, such is the case. It is caused by fowls gorging themselves by eating too much at a time, and particularly of mashes. It is really not as annoying to the fowl as it may be for the owner to look at. It i sa relaxed or lax condition of the muscles of the crop which should hold the food up in position but does not. This is more common to old hens which have been heavy eaters for a long time. There is but little remedy for it that is advisable. We do not think your hen has that kind of trouble.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Good Local Demand For Residence Lots

Agency Sells $4,000 a Day—Big Barbecue Saturday—Business and Building Show Gains.

At no time in the present year, say well known real estate men, has the demand been better for residence lots. The L. P. Bottenfield agency, for instance, sold fourteen lots for a total of $16,850, in the first four days of the week, or more than $4,000 a day. Eleven of these were in Clairmont Park, Decatur, and they brought $14,000. Three were in Peachtree Highlands, at an aggregate of $2,850.

Dr. Dan H. Griffith bought lot 1 in block 3 of the Clairmont Park subdivision for $2,000, and will erect a $5,000 home on it. Thomas M. Turner, of Florida, bought 19 Seal Place thruogh Hugh J. Lynch, associate sales manager, for $5,000, and has become associated with the Bottenfield agency as salesman. This lot is 47 by 150 feet.

Realty Barbecue Saturday.

All is in readiness for the barbecue of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock at Cold Springs. Judging from a poll of the real estate men, about 200 will be present. A brass band has been engaged and there will be something doing every minute. Lemonade has been ordered for the realty men who don't care for anything stronger. This barbecue is taking the place of the May and June monthly banquets of the board.

Bumper Crops Reported.

J. H. Ewing, of the real estate firm of Smith & Ewing, returned to Atlanta Friday from a trip into North Carolina, and reported the biggest wheat, oats, corn and cotton crops he had ever seen, despite the three inches of snow that fell. "With Secretary McAdoo's tender of $500,000,000 to help the financial situation, and such big crops coming," declared Mr. Ewing, "every kind of business is going to wake up as never before, and naturally the effect will be felt in real estate. There won't be any place for the calamity howler."

Other real estate men who expressed confidence in stable conditions were Edwin P. Ansley, who noted with great satisfaction the better conditions in the New York markets; Charles H. Black, of Turman, Black & Calhoun; Lowry Porter, of Porter & Swift; Ralph O. Cochran and John D. Babbage.

Remodeling Adair Offices.

Extensive alterations intended to give more room are going on in the real estate offices of Forrest & George Adair in the Atlanta National Bank Building. One or two new rooms will be added and a complete rearrangement made.

East Paces Ferry Paving.

The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company, developers of the Hedgerose Heights subdivision east of Buckhead, have begun to pave East Paces Ferry Road with macadam and chert, and the county has promised to pave a strip of it westward to Buckhead. The aggregate paving will be about three-quarters of a mile. This concern will also pave a new street, Maple Avenue, leading southeast from Peachtree Road, in conjunction with the Walton Realty Company. Holmes & Luckie have already laid tile sidewalks along Piedmont Road east of Peachtree, and will extend the same along East Paces Ferry Road half-way back to Buckhead.

Jump in Building.

Real estate men learned with interest Friday that building permits for the twenty-third week of 1913 far outstripped the figures for the same period last year. The number was the same, 60, but 1913's aggregated $302,194, while 1912's totaled only $92,800.

Changes on Real Estate Row.

Auburn Avenue, colloquially known as "Real Estate Row," has recently gained a convert in the Claude E. Sims Company, but is soon to lose two other agencies. The Lochridge-McClain-Moon Company and G. T. R. Fraser have received notice that they must vacate the old Y. M. C. A. building, which is to be remodeled by the Chamber of Commerce. The former will go to 4 North Pryor Street, the Kimball House, while the latter will seek space in an office building.

Other realty agents on "Real Estate Row" are George P. Moore, who named the street; John J. Woodside, Mercer W. Gilmer and the Willingham Real Estate Agency.

For Piedmont Car Line.

On account of its possible bearing on property values, real estate men heard with much interest Friday of the plan for the street railway company to use Piedmont Avenue rather than Ivy Street. The city made the suggestion that Ivy Street be left free of car tracks in order that big vehicles might use it and keep off Peachtree. President Arkwright ies said to be willing to the new arrangement if Piedmont Avenue property owners will consent.

Permit for $6,000 Home.

A permit was issued Friday to J. H. Bennett to erect at 48 Westminster Drive, Ansley Park, a two-story brick veneer residence, to cost $6,000.

What Is a Hero? Usually a Life Saver

You Can Be a Life Saver Very Easily BY KILLING FLIES

(Copyright, 1913)

You should kill flies. THE FLY IS THE MOST DANGEROUS INSECT ON EARTH. IT IS MORE DEADLY THAN THE COBRA, MORE DANGEROUS THAN THE TIGER.

It is your duty to kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM TYPHOID FEVER.

All good citizens must kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM INTESTINAL DISEASES.

Please kill flies. EVERY AUTUMN THERE IS A RISE IN THE DEATH RATE FROM TYPHOID. THIS RISE IS TRACED BY THE SCIENTISTS DIRECTLY TO THE FLY.

We beg of you to kill flies. THE FLY KILLS TENS OF THOUSANDS OF CHILDREN EVERY YEAR.

The fly causes more blindness in children than all other causes combined.

The fly spreads every known disease to children and to adults, for it frequents every disease breeding spot and hunts purposely for filth.

Early in the season KILL FLIES.

In the middle of the Summer KILL FLIES.

And in the Autumn and in the Winter, if you can find them, still KILL FLIES.

Treat the fly as our ancestors in the old days treated the red Indians and the wolves.

First, shut them out of your house, make sure that they won't get in; then kill them off as rapidly as possible and pray for the day when you will no longer have to protect your house against them.

Screen your windows.

Screen your doors.

New fly screens made of wire netting that will not rust are more important than a new coat of paint or a new automobile, for fly screens means protection for children.

Protect your house from the flies as absolutely as possible. Protect your food supplies and protect your babies' faces separately.

As the child lies asleep, keep mosquito netting over it.

Keep your sugar bowl, butter dish and food supplies covered.

Don't forget that if you see flies their breeding place is nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table, or in the cuspidor.

If there is no dirt or filth there will be no flies.

If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood write at once to the Health Department.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises. All refuse should be removed at once or covered with lime or kerosene.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

See that your sewerage system is in good order. Pour kerosene into the drains.

Cover food after a meal. Burn or bury all table refuse. Screen all food offered for sale. Buy no food that has been exposed to flies.

It is only by earnest intelligent co-operation that the fly can finally be abolished.

The citizens should combine, the national, State, city and village governments should combine with them to wipe out the unseen enemies of man, the flies that carry all the diseases, or very nearly all, and the mosquito that alone infects men with malaria and yellow fever.

THE THING CAN BE DONE, for it has been done by governments in Cuba, in Panama and in New Orleans.

The trouble is that the country will not take the matter seriously.

Darwin told us that one single pair of flies in forty-eight hours—the quick-breeding African fly—will lay enough eggs and breed enough maggots to devour a lion, leaving nothing but the white bones.

A few flies surviving through the Winter start the plague afresh the following year.

And one careless citizen leaving a breeding ground for mosquitoes supplies enough to infest the whole country.

Fortunately, for two or three years the people have been alive to the fact that their enemies are the tiny fly and mosquito and the invisible disease germs—enemies more deadly and dangerous than ever were the great monsters of prehistoric times or the wolves and lions of our day.

Discussion has begun, newspapers have taken it up and offered prizes. A few public officials have at last TRIED to do something. But only a beginning has been made.

The country must realize the danger and the duty. Children must be taught that the killing of flies is a good and necessary act, painful as it is to take life.

Do what you can to arouse public feeling for the sake of public safety.

And in the meanwhile DO WHAT YOU CAN INDIVIDUALLY.

Kill the flies.

Letters From The Georgian's Readers

DOGS IN GEORGIA.

Editor The Georgian:

I wish to thank you and indorse every word of your editorial on the dog. All the good deeds of ten million dogs can not counterbalance the death of one human being, and I would rather see every dog on earth slain than to see one little child die of the rabies.

Dogs have cost this State millions of dollars. A good many years back every farmer in the State raised sheep and had wool and mutton to sell. I have bought thousands and thousands of pounds of wool throughout Georgia, but to-day you won't find one pound where there used to be thousands. Ask any old farmer and he will tell you dogs are the sole cause of the disappearance of the sheep industry.

I have never heard one iota of evidence that the dog does anything for the good of humanity.

GOOD ROADS.

Editor The Georgian:

In the campaign for the general good of everybody in this territory, permit me to suggest that something be done toward not only the mere building of better roads, but better maintenance. If you have recently ridden over the Howell's Mill and Colyer's Ferry Roads you know what a mess was made of those nice roads by putting DIRT on fresh oil in such quantities that it was like an original dirt road with dust, instead of using sand or screening.

Here's for good roads! And let's have them oiled, too, but I think anyone with wide experience in the matter will say that common dirt as a "topper" is a mistaken idea. A. H. SAYERS.

"We Must Better the Mothers to Better the Race"

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

A BRIGHT woman named Elva D. Kellog has taken me to task for some verses wherein woman, as the mother, is accused of failing in her duty.

Mrs. Kellog quotes the final line of the poem and her criticisms follow:

"'We must better the mothers to beter the race.'

"Granted. But it will do no good until the fathers have become human beings instead of creatures lower than animals. Why not preach at the man DIRECTLY—why not speak to this generation, instead of merely urging mothers to make the next generation of men what it should be? After all, a mother can't do more than half anyway. A mother may bring up a girl alone quite creditably, but a father must have a hand with the son. And fathers are SHIRKING.

Then What?

"Another side of the question. Why do men shirk fatherhood? Oh, I know most every man WANTS TO HAVE CHILDREN. But after he gets them, then what? First, his is the sexual delirium, then the pleasure of anticipation, later real plans and the joy of possession, MINUS THE RESPONSIBILITY. For the mother, fear, dread, pain, agony, worry, an ever-present sense of responsibility—can this be offset by the pleasure of possession?

"We mothers are working ALONE to bring up our little men and women. Ever since the time of Adam, man has shifted responsibility of everything except the bread and butter side of the question. All too often the mother has her half of this responsibility added to the other area.

"Yet your cry is for MOTHERS to do their duty better. What in the world do you expect of the men? If men had the race responsibility laid at their door, the whole world would undergo a revolution. Men are only BIG CHILDREN—and they OUGHT to be MEN. Then they read your pleas to WOMEN and they begin to see where their own wife, the struggling mother of a band of seven or eight tots, is deficient; and straightway she is belittled in their eyes and they pat themselves on the back for doing THEIR duty. Dear knows, the male man is already an egotist, already a spoiled child, without anything a noted woman can write to make him more so.

"We must better the FATHERS to better the race.

"I would like to see you plead with men for better manhood, true fatherhood, and for the subduing of the much abused, too much indulged sex element, which is in itself a great cause of unwelcome babies and woman's rebellion against motherhood. We want to plan our babies as we would any other grand piece of work, and we can NOT do this until our husbands have become enlightened—have learned control along this line.

"Respectfully yours,

"ELVA D. KELLOG."

Mrs. Kellog has evidently failed to read many articles and verses in this column which have dealt with the subject she desires discussed.

Sex Hygienics.

It has often been urged that our preparatory schools and colleges for young men should include in the curriculum a thorough course in sex hygienics, in what is now known as eugenics; and that married men and fathers should be compelled by law to attend lectures on these subjects at least three times a year.

"Schools of Good Fatherhood" have also been advocated. As soon as a young boy is old enough to attend school he should begin his preparation for marriage and fatherhood by being taught the sacredness of his body, and the necessity to keep it clean and strong and full of healthful vigor. He should be warned of the danger which lies in obscene conversation, vulgar language or habits which could not be known by his mother and sisters. Woman should be made an object of reverence in his eyes, and any woman who is not worthy such reverence he should be taught to pity.

A Mother's Influence.

The scientific facts regarding the transmission of bad blood, made impure by nicotine, alcohol, drugs or sexual vices, should be taught him by teachers properly trained in such knowledge. Vice should be presented to him from its dangerous physical side as well as from the moral standpoint. And the innate pride every man feels in producing worthy descendants should be cultivated in him from early youth, until he as naturally protects his unborn sons and daughters from contamination as he guards himself from mutilation.

But I disagree with the bright woman when she says "The mother can do only half in bringing up a child."

A mother's influence over a child is just as much greater as her part in creating the child is longer in time than that of the father. It is not the mere sowing of the seed which makes a beautiful flower garden.

The caring for the ground in which the seed is sown, and the weeding and fertilizing and training of the plants after the sprout are what determine their vigor and perfection.

For three-quarters of a year before the human plant comes to the light the mother is molding it and influencing it with her thoughts, her habits and her physical condition.

The New Science.

For a year after it is visible its life depends upon her, not upon the father; and its first language, its first ideas, its first habits, are patterned upon the maternal plan.

This is a most important part of a child's life, and too much can not be said to make mothers realize their responsibility.

Mrs. Kellog wants the men of this generation to be talked to. That is well and good; but it is somewhat late to make these men what they might have been had their mothers begun with them in childhood. A wise, good, broad, wholesome-minded mother can make her boy exactly what she wants him to be, if she begins soon enough and is persistent and tactful in her methods—those early years of a child's life are of such vast importance in shaping his mind.

The new science of eugenics (new in its modern practical application to social problems) will make a great change in the ideas of men and women regarding domestic life and marriage relations.

The advent of women into medicine is gradually bringing a change of sentiment, and will eventually do away with some old traditions. Particularly the tradition that man can not exercise control over his passions, and that by nature he is so constituted that his immoralities are justifiable on the plea of health.

Garrett P. Serviss

Writes on

New Light on the Descent of Man

The Ancestors of Spiders and Scorpions Give Birth to the Family of Vertebrates.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE affirmation of science that apes and monkeys are our collateral relatives, sprung from the same ancestral stock, was once very offensive to many good people, some of whom still obstinately refuse to accept it. They think that it robs man of his dignity.

What, then, will they say when told that the ancestors of spiders and scorpions must now be included in the main trunk of the great genealogical tree whose topmost branch terminates, for the present, in man, and that without their intervention neither man nor monkey would have existed?

Nature Invents Backbone.

This assertion is based upon the discovery by Professor William Patten, of Dartmouth College, of the long-missing link between the vertebrate, or backboned animals, and their predecessors, the invertebrates, or animals without backbones.

Until nature invented the backbone there was no possibility of the existence of an upright animal constructed on the plan of the human skeleton. But the first back-boned animals were fishes. After the fishes came the amphibians, living part of the time in the water and part of the time on land. From the amphibians sprang the land reptiles and the birds, and from the reptiles arose the mammalians, or "mother animals," nourishing their young with their milk. The most progressive branch of the mammalians gave origin to a partially upright creature, which became the common ancestor of apes on the one hand and men on the other.

Thus the line of descent is clear from man back to the first vertebrates, the fishes. But ever since the days of Darwin zoologists have been puzzled by the question, "What animal was it that marked the change from the invertebrates to the fishes?"

There was the great "missing link" in the chain of animal life on this globe. Professor Patten believes that he has discovered this link in a curious extinct animal called the ostracoderm, which was developed out of the family of the arachnids (Greek arachne, "spider"), to which the scorpions also belong. The arachnids themselves are not vertebrates.

He Studied Scorpions.

The story of this discovery is intensely interesting. Professor Patten was led to it by observing the peculiar way in which the eyes in the embryo of a scorpion are transferred from the outside of the head to the blind ends of medium tubes projecting from the brain. This was so similar to what takes place in vertebral animals that he began to study the embryonic development of other species of arachnids, and was astonished to find the most striking resemblances with vertebrates. Among other things, he found that the brains of arachnids closely mimic those of vertebrates, both in general shape and subdivision, and in their functions.

Still, he could not conclude that the vertebrates sprang direct from the modern scorpions and spiders, because it is known that the first vertebrates were marine animals. But he remembered that the arachnids of to-day are also of marine descent, their ancestors having been marine arachnids, which flourished before any vertebrate animal had appeared. Evidently he must look for the missing link afar back in geological time.

Accordingly, he went back millions of years and fixed his suspicions upon the mysterious marine animal ostracoderm, which, although it was related to the marine arachnids, zoologists had always been puzzled to classify. He traveled wherever the fossils of this creature could be seen, and studied them minutely. But, unfortunately, all that had been collected were more or less imperfect, and his inquiry might never have been completed if he had not discovered a wonderful deposit of ostracoderms in the Devonian rocks on the shore of the Bay de Chaleur in Canada. The deposit was a small one, disclosed by the falling of a cliff. Professor Patten concluded that, millions of years ago, it had been the muddy bed of a shallow, brackish water pool, in which the animals had been trapped by the sudden running off of tide water, and had perished in a heap.

"One," he says, "in its death agony, had plunged into the mud with sufficient force to remain there, head down, in a vertical position. Others were arranged in a horizontal series, uniformly headed in a northeast direction."

Worked for Three Years.

He believes that their heads were turned against a gentle current of water, because the tops of all the fossil ferns found in the same bed were pointed in nearly the opposite direction. Was there ever so dramatic a picture of life on this earth countless ages ago? And then, to think that if these trapped creatures had been the only representatives of their kind, the great race of the vertebrates might have been extinguished in its cradle!

Many of the specimens were so perfectly preserved that the discoverer was able to ascertain the location of their principal sense organs, of their jaws, gills, stomach, etc., and their mode of locomotion, mode of feeding, and the nature of their food. For nearly three years he has worked upon these specimens in his laboratory, gradually disclosing their internal structure, until now he is able to affirm that the ostracoderm was neither a vertebrate nor an invertebrate, but intermediate between the two. In other words, it is the long-missing link, and it shows that the marine arachnids, the great-grandfather of the spiders and the scorpions, gave rise to a race of creatures in whom nature made her first experiments toward the production of a backbone, which no true arachnid was ever to possess, but which, when set erect in man, was topped with a brain that has made its possessor the master of the world and its secrets.

JUDGE SPEER UNDER FIRE; RECORD IS PROBED

Inspector of Department of Justice in Macon Investigating Official and Private Character.

MACON, GA., June 13.—The entire official record of Judge Emory Speer is being investigated by a special agent of the Department of Justice. J. T. Lewis, an assistant in the United States Attorney General's office, and a personal representative of Attorney General McReynolds, has been in Macon for a week engaged in this work.

Not only the official acts, but also the personal character of Judge Speer is also being scrutinized, with the view of determining if there is any foundation for charges of an impeachment nature.

Judge Speer is fully informed as to the purpose of the visit of Inspector Lewis to Macon.

Started by Huff Charges.

It is said that the investigation was promoted by the charges made last year by Colonel W. A. Huff, who has since been found guilty for sending to Judge Speer the letters which contained the accusations. However, the Huff civil case does not, it is said, figure to any great extent in the investigation, the probe being concerned with the judge's record for the past 28 years. Inspector Lewis has interviewed numerous Macon attorneys, court officials and citizens, and he has begun the taking of affidavits. Newspaper files are also being consulted.

District Attorney Alexander Akerman declines to make any statement as to the investigation, referring inquirers to the Attorney General for information. Mr. Lewis also refuses to discuss the assignment.

Not Opposed by Bartlett.

It is believed here that Congressman Bartlett was approached by the Department of Justice with regard to the investigation of Judge Speer, and that he did not oppose it.

Colonel Huff states that regardless of the activity of the Department of Justice he is proceeding with his plan of petitioning Congress to investigate charges which he will make against Judge Speer. He says that his charges have slight connection with his case, but deal almost altogether with other acts which he imputes to Judge Speer. Colonel Huff is expecting a visit from Inspector Lewis, and he says he will freely give the special agent all information that he has in his possession.

The disclosure that Judge Speer is under fire has caused a genuine sensation here.

Painter Analysis Goes to Coroner

BALTIMORE, MD., June 13.—The analysis of the organs of E. O. Painter, the late fertilizer man of Jacksonville, was completed to-day by Dr. Charles Glaser, a chemist of this city. The report was mailed to Coroner C. D. Abbott, at Jacksonville, this afternoon.

Although refusing to discuss in any way his findings, Dr. Glaser let drop remarks that intimate that a long court fight will ensue before the large Painter insurance claims are settled.

Lucky '13' Follows President Wilson All of Hoodoo Day

WASHINGTON, June 13.—As usual, the fatality of the number 13 followed President Wilson on this Friday, June 13. The President awoke this morning to the realization that this was his "lucky day."

The hands of the simple alarm clock which serves to awaken the Chief Executive pointed to 7:13 o'clock as he arose. Exactly one hour later the President sat down to breakfast, and 9:13 marked his entrance to the executive offices, where he found that Joseph Tumulty (13 letters) had placed 13 roses in his vase.

Thirteen names in connection with the Industrial Commission were presented by Secretary of Commerce Redfield, who arrived at 10:39 (add the figures). The cabinet session was unusually late, it being 11:13 before the President called the meeting to order, noting that five of the men assembled (William J. Bryan, Franklin K. Lane, David C. Houston, William Wilson and William McAdoo) each had 13 letters to his name.

Aviators Fight Fire At 2,000 Feet in Air

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—Tony Jannus and Arthur Isminger had a thrilling fight with fire 2,000 feet in the air at Alton, Ill., this morning. Jannus is flying to Chicago in a hydro-aeroplane. Near Alton one of the tail rods worked loose and Isminger turned in the machine and caught the rod, intending to hold it.

Isminger had to stand over the exhaust pipes and his coat caught fire from the engine sparks. Jannus released the levers quickly, and, seizing the burning coat, tore it from Isminger's back.

Motorcyclist Injures Bicyclist Internally

Edward Stewart, a negro, started across Marietta Street at Thurmond Friday morning to go to his work at the Stein Junk Company's plant.

C. A. Cabe, a Southern Railway switchman, who was riding his motorcycle at a high rate of speed down Marietta Street, failed to see the negro and his machine knocked Stewart down and injured him internally. He was taken to Grady Hospital, where his condition was stated to be serious.

A charge of speeding was lodged against Cabe.

Chicago Fan Dies in Hal Chase's Defense

CHICAGO, June 13.—Fred J. Porter fell dead while in the midst of a heated argument with baseball fans over the trading of Hal Chase by the Yankees to the White Sox.

Herman Schweitzer and J. B. Willet told Porter that Chase was the Yankees' "hoodoo," and the Sox would land in the "cellar" before the season was over.

Porter grew excited in his defense of Chase, staggered into a chair and died.

Man's Back Broken By Falling Timbers

P. A. Pettrello, who works at the Southern Railway Machine Shops, suffered a broken back Friday morning while working under a car that had been jacked up for repairs. Some of the timbers used to hold up the car fell and struck him.

He was taken to the Atlanta Hospital in Patterson's ambulance.

VICE INQUIRY IS RESUMED BY GRAND JURY

Action Creates Surprise, as Probe Was Thought at End—R. R. Jackson on Stand.

The Grand Jury again took up an inquiry into the vice situation Friday afternoon, when a number of witnesses were called to ascertain the exact methods used by the Atlanta police department in their endeavor to stamp out vice.

The announcement that the Grand Jury would probe deeper into the vice situation came as a complete surprise, for it was stated several days ago that the Grand Jury had finished with this question.

R. R. Jackson, a former justice of the peace, now a member of the law firm of Gober & Jackson, was summoned to appear before the Grand Jury, together with John H. Gossatt, a former bailiff, who is now employed in Jackson's office.

Jackson Ignorant of Reason.

Mr. Jackson stated that he knew of no reason why the Grand Jury should call him. He admitted, however, that for many years he represented in an official capacity many women of questionable character, and that his knowledge of the residents of the tenderloin at one time was fairly accurate.

It is now thought that the Grand Jury will uncover the exact condition of vice in this city previous to the closing of the houses, for the purpose of determining whether conditions are worse now than they were at the time the houses were closed.

Many other witnesses are scheduled to come before the Grand Jury, and there is no doubt that the probe is on in earnest.

Jackson Tells Vice Facts.

R. R. Jackson was before the Grand Jury for more than an hour. He testified at length explaining many matters relating to vice in this city and was questioned closely regarding the order of the court in granting a restraining order prohibiting the police from closing up the house of Mrs. M. P. Powell.

Mr. Jackson quoted the law to the Grand Jury, and stated that under the law the judge in the Powell case had no other alternative than to grant the restraining order. Jackson gave a great many important facts concerning vice as a general proposition. He is considered the most important witness that has been examined by the Grand Jury during the whole of the vice probe.

Washington detectives are scouring that city in an effort to locate young George Gentry, the stenographer whose affidavit that the published dictograph report was "padded" was the sensation of the controversy between Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford and Colonel Thomas B. Felder.

Gentry Not Found Yet.

Chief of Police James L. Beavers, who is in Washington, secured the aid of the District detectives to have the youth located. Although the search has been in progress two days, it has carried the detectives no further than to locate Miss Jeannette Henning, a law clerk, who said she witnessed the affidavit without reading it or making any inquiry. Miss Henning said the paper was signed by her in room 802 of the Westery Building, occupied by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

Chief Beavers would not comment at any length on the new affidavit. He was of the same opinion Chief Lanford had expressed—that the paper was not genuine and if Gentry were produced he would testify that the first dictograph publication was correct.

Felder Sees No Difficulty.

Colonel Felder said there was no especial difficulty in locating Gentry and that he would be produced to testify if the Grand Jury wanted him. He said the young man had accepted a position as stenographer for one month, and that as soon as the month was out he would return to Atlanta.

Gentry was located about two weeks ago by a Burns detective of the Washington branch. Descriptions of him had been furnished every agency in America and there was a sharp lookout in every large city.

Foreman L. H. Beck stated that the jury had determined to make an exhaustive investigation.

Friday, the 13th, Ends Atlanta Jinx; Big Pump Working

Friday, the 13th, was a lucky day for Atlanta, viewed from the angle from which "Zode" Smith, manager of the waterworks, looked at the situation. The day brought nothing but good luck to him, and he walked into his office at the City Hall wearing a smile like unto the one worn by the gentleman in the moon.

"Why shouldn't I smile?" he asked, when questioned about the cause of his ultra-pleasant disposition. Then he answered the question: "That 10,000,000-gallon pump at the river is working to-day, the first time since last April. If you had had the same bunch of trouble lifted from you that I've had lifted from me, you'd be smiling, too."

The big 10,000-000-gallon pump not only got out of order in April, but it almost went to pieces.

Legislators Plan to Save Innocent From Abuse of Dictograph

Three members of the Legislature are working on bills to restrict the use of dictographs. The abuses to which the instrument has been put at various times and the possibility that innocent persons may be defamed if the device is in the hands of unscrupulous persons led to the movement to limit their use to persons known to be entirely responsible.

Teachers Are Paid After Month's Delay

The last of the accounts of Georgia school teachers for work done in 1912 was paid Thursday by the State Treasury Department. The amount was $17,790.13.

Youth Drowned in Lake at Demorest

CORNELIA, GA., June 13.—Roy Pitchford, 17-year-old son of Mrs. George Pitchford, was drowned while bathing alone in Lake Demorest. The body was recovered in five minutes, but, on account of muddy condition of the water, all efforts of physicians to revive him were fruitless.

Pitchford went into the water very soon after dinner. Doctors said that congestion caused his death. His body was buried this afternoon at Demorest.

Mexican States in South Are Seceding

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, June 13.—The long predicted secession in Southern Mexico has actually begun. Governor Manuel Castilla, of the State of Campeche, to-day formally proclaimed his State independent of the central government.

The governments of Yucatan, Tabasco, Chipas and the Territory of Quintana Roo are expected to take similar action.

A confederacy of the South probably will be formed unless the Federals are able to crush out the rebellion.

Blease Orders 'Lid' On Isle of Palms

CHARLESTON, S. C., June 13.—Govenor Blease's order to Sheriff Martin, of Charleston County, to prevent any more Sunday motorcycle racing at the Isle of Palms, and also to preserve the observance of Sunday in his territory by preventing all forms of amusements excepting sacred concerts, coupled with the gubernatorial order to Chief Constable Stothart, of this county, to make the Isle of Palms as dry as Sahara, has caused no little commotion here.

Cousin of Wilson's Daughters Leaves for Week in Capital.

To live a week in the White House, at a season when the new social set of the national capital is still in the first flush of its gayety, is the delectable lot in prospect for an Atlanta girl, Miss Marjorie Brown. She left Atlanta Friday for Washington, at the invitation of President Wilson's family.

Atlanta society congratulated her with a wee bit of envy. Miss Brown is the very first of the city's social set to receive an invitation from the President's family, and the first representative of Atlanta society to be entertained at the capital since the new administration went in.

Miss Brown is a cousin of the Wilson girls, her father, Edward T. Brown, being related to the President. Mr. and Mrs. Brown have often entertained the Wilsons, during their visits to Atlanta. Years ago, when Woodrow Wilson, a brilliant young lawyer, lived in Atlanta, he was intimate with the Browns, and a friendship was formed that to-day lives warmly.

Atlanta society is proud of its first representative at the capital. Miss Brown is described as being very pretty, with a slender, blonde beauty that is exceptionally winsome. She possesses much of the personal charm and attractiveness which made her mother one of the most admired women in Atlanta.

Her part in the gayety of the national capital will be prominent during the next week. She will be one of the guests of honor at a number of social functions, and lavish entertainment will be arranged during her visit.

Miss Brown has known the Misses Wilson for some time, and between them an intimacy has sprung up, an intimacy that was reflected in the warm tone of the invitation which came to her.

Aware of her relation to the daughters of the President, many persons in Atlanta have likened Miss Brown to the Wilson girls in the way of intellectual attainments and artistic gifts.

Washington, Atlanta society forecasts, will capitulate to its first Atlanta guest. The popularity already achieved by the President's daughters insures a delightful visit for Miss Brown. She will return to Atlanta the latter part of the week.

A number of Atlanta men and women have been guests in the White House during the regimes gone by, and it is expected that Georgia society will be freely recognized and welcomed in Washington, with the Wilsons in the presidential mansion.

NEGRO FREED BUT JAILED AGAIN ON SUSPICION

Rosser Declares 'Gibbering Statements' Point Out Sweeper as Guilty of Slaying.

James Conley, self-confessed accessory after the fact in the murder of Mary Phagan, Friday was discharged by Judge L. S. Roan entirely from the custody of the State on the petition of Solicitor Dorsey.

Technically free, Conley was at once rearrested and held by the police on suspicion in the murder mystery. The action of Judge Roan constituted a victory for Solicitor Dorsey, who was fighting to prevent the authorities returning Conley to the Tower, from which he had been taken on the representation of his attorney, William M. Smith, that the negro was threatened and intimidated in the Tower.

Luther Z. Rosser, attorney for Leo Frank, made a bitter protest against the liberation of the negro, which, in the opinion of Judge Roan, was the only legal alternative of returning him to the county jail. He made a still stronger protest in a formal written statement placed on file as a record in the case.

Accuses Conley as Slayer.

In this he charged that the negro's series of "gibbering and incoherent statements," together with the attendant circumstances of the crime and Conley's subsequent actions, pointed to him as guilty of the murder beyond any reasonable doubt.

Attorney Rosser pointed out these highly suspicious circumstances in detail and went on to say that there was still more evidence which might be regarded as incriminating if the negro's case could be brought to the attention of the Grand Jury.

Less than ten minutes was occupied in the disposal of the case. Judge Roan did not read either the statement of Attorney Rosser or that of Attorney Smith, who submitted the reasons he wished his client kept at the police station. The dispatch with which the petition was acceded to was a complete surprise. A protracted and hard fought legal battle had been expected.

Judge Roan said he was without authority to hold the negro in the custody of the State so long as he had no formal application from either side. The Solicitor, he said, was asking for the release of the prisoner, and Attorney Rosser had characterized his statement only as a "suggestion."

Smith's Charges.

Attorney Smith's statement to the court charged intimidation, and that influences unfriendly to Conley and friendly to Frank were at the back of the movement to transfer Conley back to the jail. He alleged that neither the interests of justice nor the interests of Conley could be safeguarded by removing Conley from the police station.

Sheriff Mangum branded as an infamous lie the charge that the interests of Conley could not be safeguarded in the county jail, and had not been safeguarded. The only person involved in the charge of intimidating and threatening Conley characterized the accusation as absurd and grossly and wilfully exaggerated. He was present to testify at the hearing, but was not called.

The formality of releasing and rearresting Conley took place in front of the police station. The negro was brought to the sidewalk, where he had his freedom for about a second and was then again taken into custody.

Text of the Petition.

Mr. Rosser's paper was headed: Application of Hugh M. Dorsey, Solicitor General, to release James Conley from Legal Custody.

In answer to the petition and order in the above stated cause, served upon us, as attorneys for Leo Frank, we herewith answer and show cause as follows:

1. If the intention of the Solicitor General is to discharge this negro from custody because (a) he is in fact not a material witness against Frank, or (b) although he is a material witness, his integrity and character are such that he ought to have his liberty and be trusted to obey the subpena of this court, then considered as a witness only, he ought to be discharged and indeed he should not have been imprisoned at all. But in such case to enact the farce in the court's presence of releasing the negro and immediately return him to his wet nurses at the police station would resemble child's play.

2. But if the Solicitor believes that one of a number of contradictory statements made by this negro may, if properly preserved, be made valuable in the prosecution of Frank and that the negro may destroy its value if left free to talk, and in order to stop his mouth it is necessary that the detectives should keep him in charge, then we think we have the right to protest against any order of a court of justice that winks at such a purpose.

Release Not Considered.

3. We are constrained to the conclusion that it is not the purpose for any reason to release this negro, but, by obtaining the order here sought, continue the present illegal confinement.

4. But Frank is himself deeply interested in this proceeding. That the consent of the Solicitor and the will of the negro is all that is required to reverse the will of the law is erroneous. The State has the right in the interest of justice to put a witness in custody, but where in custody and in whose custody is of the highest importance. The law has given such custody to the Sheriff, and wisely so. The Sheriff is not a prosecutor; the jail itself is not usually a place of punishment, but a temporary place of detention. The Sheriff is supposed to stand impartially between the State and his prisoners, and may be trusted to neither coajole, threaten nor suppress testimony by third degree methods. The law never meant to place a witness who for lack of character needs confinement under the control of a partisan prosecutor.

5. That the detectives should wish to keep Conley in custody and entertain him at the city's expense is not at all surprising. They have already extracted from him extravagant, unthinkable confessions, three or four in number. To these statements they have given the widest publicity, and to the credibility of the last one they have staked their reputations and hope of place.

All Staked on Conley.

6. Upon the constancy and stability of this witness they have staked their all. They would be less than human if they did not bend all their power and ingenuity in holding him to his present statement, adding to and taking therefrom only such things as will aid its credibility.

Can any fair-minded man believe that Lanford is a fair man to be the custodian of this ignorant negro? What chance would he have to retract any lies he may have told, or if in a repentant mood he should wish to tell the truth? This negro in the city prison, in the power of Lanford, apart from all questions of truth, would be just as dangerous as Lanford would wish him to be. No one knows that better than Lanford, and no one would feel it as acutely as will this negro.

How well Lanford knows it can be seen from his interview in The Georgian of June 12. In that interview he demonstrated that he thinks he has full, unrestricted ownership of this negro. He graciously expresses his willingness for this negro to go before the Grand Jury upon such terms as he suggests. Neither the negro nor the negro's lawyer nor the Grand Jury is considered. Nor was this court to be consulted—his will and not the order of this court was to determine when and under what circumstances the negro should leave the police station.

Lanford's Power Questioned.

If Lanford vaunts in the face of jury and court his power over this negro, what must be his bearing when he deals privately with the negro himself? What chance has he to abstract a lie or add a truth to the foolish statement which Lanford approves and wishes to maintain? If this man will, when he is holding this negro under your honor's order, declare such ownership over this negro's person and movements, to what length would he go if the court releases its power over him and turns him over to Lanford's unrestricted power?

6. It is just to Frank, as well as in the interest of public justice, that this negro should be detained by unbiased, fair men, whose reputations and positions are not at stake.

The law recognizes this right and has put that duty upon the Sheriff. Will there be less fairness and less decency in the county jail than in the police station? When did Lanford become a wiser, fairer, better man than the Sheriff of this county?

7. Apart from this negro's position as a witness, his detention in the custody of the detectives would be a public calamity. Many unbiased people believe this negro is the murderer of little Mary Phagan. The facts of the case, apart from his own confession, point most strongly to him as the guilty man.

Evidence Against Negro.

(a) On the day of the murder he was drunk and concealed himself in a position where he could readily commit the murder.

(b) On Monday morning he was unduly excited; so much so as to arouse the suspicions of the employees. On Saturday night after the murder he was caught hiding in his own house.

(c) When the police were in the building he was caught hiding in an obscure part of the factory, where he had no business.

(d) When questioned about this conduct, he said he would give a large sum to be a white man. When asked why, he said he could then get safely past the police.

(e) He for a long time persistently denied that he could write, and did not admit that he could until longer denial was useless.

(f) He was caught washing a shirt, a thing he had never done before, and when caught gave a foolish excuse.

Trapped Into Confession.

(g) He denied all participation in or knowledge of the crime until he was driven by the charge that he wrote the notes found near the body.

(h) On May 18 he made a signed statement outlining his actions on April 26, making no mention of the murder.

(i) On May 24 he made an affidavit. He said that on April 25, before the murder on April 26, he wrote the notes at the request of Frank, for which Frank gave him cigarettes and $2.50, and added statements about Frank's people in Brooklyn and an inquiry by Frank as to why he should hang.

(j) On May 28 Conley made a long affidavit, full of contradictions and absurdities, beginning it as follows:

"I make this statement, my second statement in regard to the murder of Mary Phagan at the National Pencil factory. In my first statement I made the statement that I went into the pencil factory on Friday, April 25, and went into Frank's office at five minutes to 1 o'clock, which is a mistake. I made this statement in regard to Friday in order that I might not be accused of knowing anything of this murder, for I thought if I put myself there Saturday they might accuse me of having a hand in it, and I now make my second and last statement regarding the matter freely and voluntarily, after thinking over the situation, and I have made up my mind to tell the whole truth, and I make it freely and voluntarily, without the promise of any reward or from force or fear of punishment in any way."

"First Confession Rambling."

(k) After this beginning he sets out with variations the writing of the notes on Saturday instead of on Friday, and in a long, rambling statement his movements at home and on Peters Street on Saturday and on Monday at the factory, most of which is wholly disconnected with the murder.

(l) On May 29, 1913, although he had already sworn that he had made "his true, full and last statement," he made another statement in which he purported to aid Mr. Frank "in concealing the body of Mary Phagan. This statement is full of contradictions and wholly irreconcilable with itself and with the known facts surrounding the murder.

(m) He closes this remarkable affidavit in the following words: "The reason I have not told this before is that I thought Mr. Frank would get out and help me out, but it seems that he is not going to get out, and I decided to tell the whole truth about the matter."

(n) These are some of the facts well known to the public and to the detectives, showing Conley's guilt. There are other powerful facts which could readily be brought before the Grand Jury.

8. These incoherent, gibbering statements will, it is believed, impress the Grand Jury if the negro Conley's case is submitted to it.

9. The Grand Jury can be trusted to scan these queer statements in the light of all the surrounding facts and circumstances, and, taken in connection with all the other facts implicating Conley, they proclaim his guilt beyond all reasonable doubt.

(10) The detectives, obsessed as they are with the assumption that Conley is a tool and not a murderer, are unfit to keep him in their sole and unlimited power. Under their protecting care Conley, instead of being left to tell the truth, will at length deceive himself into the belief that instead of being a murderer he is an unfortunate victim.

"Detectives Protecting Negro."

(11) That Conley and his counsel wish it is the best reason why it should be done. As long as he sticks to a story pleasing to the detectives, or builds upon that story as additions may be needed, he is assured that the detectives will save him as far as possible from the court and Grand Jury, and will, so far as they can fix upon him no greater crime than a misdemeanor.

(12) Conley and his counsel are wise. There is for them no other hope than for the detectives to keep Conley and save him from a confession that he committed the crime, giving him immunity, provided he continues to put the guilt on Frank.

Sheriff Shows Up Smith.

Denial of practically every assertion made by Conley or his attorney, William M. Smith, regarding lax jail regulations or the treatment of the negro while in the county prison, was made by Sheriff Mangum when informed of the contents of the affidavit and petitions submitted to Judge Roan.

"Smith's statements are infamous lies," said the Sheriff. "There is absolutely no foundation for belief by Conley that he was being poisoned when he was given the sandwiches. The negro lied when he said he did not eat the food. He did eat the four sandwiches. They were given to him by a reporter, who told me all about his interview. The newspaper man said he wanted to get on Conley's good side and get information for his paper. In the story he wrote he told frankly of the tactics he had used to get information.

"The regulations in the Fulton County jail are as good as those in any county prison anywhere. If Smith says that the jail is not competently guarded he is maliciously falsifying, and he knows it. We have no spies for use in matters that do not concern us, nor have we prying attendants at this jail.

"As I said before, Smith's assertions are too preposterous to take heed of."

Intimidation Charged.

Conley's attorney, William M. Smith, in a petition accompanying the negro's affidavit, declares that the county jail is scantily guarded and that prison regulations were extremely lax.

"The county prison has at times but one guard inside its walls," the petition declares; "it is a physical impossibility for this deputy to be at all points and know what is going on; that the actual custody of the prisoners is placed in the hands of trusty prisoners, some of whom are absolutely unreliable; that deponent visited James Conley at the county prison and that it was difficult for anything to be done or said without the espionage of these trusty prisoners, who were overly anxious to know the character of deponent's connection with Conley's case.

Smith Sees Bias.

"That deponent talked with a man who, he is advised, is of Jewish extraction and who deponent believes is doing all he can reasonably to place the blame for this crime on his client (Conley), and who is desirous of seeing the defendant (Frank) cleared; and this man admitted to this deponent that he did visit the cell of said Conley and offered him sandwiches and promised whisky and however he specifically disclaimed his being the party who had threatened said Conley at a later hour, and stated that the sandwiches and whisky were offered in good faith with no intention to harm Conley, that the identity of this party is known to deponent and can be given the court upon request; that knowing the conditions as they exist at the county jail, deponent declares that the ends of justice will not be served by detention of James Conley at the county prison, but that same will be materially harmed and damaged."

Conley Repeats Charges.

Conley, in his affidavit, declared that during his stay in the county jail he was constantly being menaced by persons whom he suspected of the intention to poison him.

"Affiant swears that he was visited by numerous persons, strangers to him, while he was held in the county prison," the affidavit reads; "that deponent was visited by a young man at one time who appeared to be of Jewish descent, who offered this deponent sandwiches to eat; that deponent did not eat the sandwiches, for fear of being poisoned; that late in the night, after the lights had been turned out, a man came to the cell of deponent and struck a match and looked in and asked deponent if he did not know he would be hanged; told deponent that he was telling a d—d lie on Frank, and would be hanged sure as h—l; asked deponent if he did not know he could shoot him in his cell, if he was a mind to do so; that on account of the darkness deponent was unable to find out who this was; that the only desire of deponent is that he be given protection and be in hands of sworn officers of the law and not turned over to any prisoner or to 'trusty turnkeys' where there is any possibility for this deponent to be harmed in any way."

Slap at Sheriff.

Conley, in answer to the rule nisi, further attacks the regulations at the county jail, and the treatment accorded him in that institution:

"Respondent is advised that the keys to practically all of the cell blocks are carried by 'convicted criminals,'" the answer states; "that owing to this condition, men have been known to saw through steel bars and cages and escape.

"That this respondent was imprisoned while in the county jail directly over the cell block in which said defendant (Frank) is detained; that this respondent is advised and believes that the Sheriff of this county publicly proclaimed that the defendant looks him in the eye like an innocent man."

Release and Rearrest.

A dramatic moment attended the release and rearrest of Conley Friday morning in connection with the working of the court's order that the negro be given his liberty.

Chief of Detectives Lanford appeared at the door of Conley's cell at 11 o'clock.

"Well, Jim," said the Chief, "I am going to release you."

The negro received this statement with a look of fright, but was silent as well as bewildered.

Taken from his cell, Conley was led by the Chief through the sergeant's office and to the side door of the police station, which opens into an alley. The negro followed his captors with silent bewilderment.

The party proceeded down the alley to the sidewalk. There a small crowd greeted the negro with curious eyes. Chief Lanford took his hand from Conley's arm. Conley was a free man.

His freedom was but for an instant, though. Before Conley could move or recover from his astonishment, Detective McGill took him by the arm.

"I will have to arrest you and take you back, Jim," Chief Lanford said.

Conley's face brightened perceptibly.

"That's all right," he smiled. "I didn't want to get out, anyhow."

Appearing opposite Conley's name now on the police register is the word "Released," and, following it, "Suspicion," the charge upon which he was rearrested.

RETAIL AVTIVITY PORTENDS BIG BUSINESS

Dealers Report Sale Increases in All Lines, With Unusually Good Collections.

Retail trade in Atlanta is making a remarkable showing. Nearly every Whitehall Street merchant reports an increase of sales over 1912, good collections and a remarkable amount of cash trade.

Were they not so cheering, the statements would be monotonous in their unanimity. Busy streets, busy clerks, and busy office forces bear out the assertions of prosperity and further emphasize the fact that the depression in New York is by no means to be taken as typical of the conditions in this city.

"I don't like a croaker," remarked F. J. Paxon. "The other day it rained. A friend, head of a conservative business, dropped in to see me. He certainly was blue.

"'Business is rotten,' he ejaculated.

"'I don't know anything about the inside of your business,' I told him, 'but I'll bet you a box of cigars that your sales are ahead of last year.'

"'I'll take you,' he remarked. 'I'll get some cigars anyhow.'

Worth the Cigars.

"But he sent me the box of Havanas you see on my desk. He had his accounting department run a total of his sales, and wrote me a note saying it was worth the cigars to get cured of the blues. His sales showed several hundred dollars' gain over last year, which was an excellent season.

"So it goes, all down the line. The business man and the financier get bilious. They need calomel. They need a wider viewpoint. They are too easily influenced by a rainy day or one or two complaints.

"Jones comes to me and says he can't pay his bill and wants an extension. Smith drops in next day with the same tale. Robinson has a wail of identical nature. I get depressed and decide collections are poor. In the meantime, 97 other people have paid their bills at the cashier's window and I haven't seen them. At the end of the month, I find collections up to normal.

"January, February and March brought us sales equal to the first quarter of 1912. April and May brought substantial gains. We look for continued good business."

Cash Sales Larger.

Lloyd B. Parks, dealing in men's goods, declares spring business was excellent.

"We are especially gratified," says Mr. Parks, "at noting the considerable increase in cash business. Each month the same month of 1912, and a large proportion of this is cash over the counter. Atlanta certainly has no cause for complaint at trade. It towers far above all other Southern cities in prosperity.

"The firm outlook is encouraging, and this fall should break records."

"Business conditions in this city are absolutely sound and good," declares J. F. Allen. "Speaking for my own concern, each month of this year shows a substantial increase over the corresponding month of 1912."

"The volume of our sales is ahead of 1912, to date," says Fred S. Stewart. "Cash trade is about the same. People are buying good shoes, too. We are selling more and more high-priced shoes each year, fewer cheap shoes."

Henry S. Johnson, Sr., is well satisfied with the outlook.

"Business is satisfactory," he says. "We are well pleased, and see no cause for complaint."

Says W. H. Brittain, of J. M. High Co., "The season of 1912 was a good year. But 1913, it seems, will be better. The future looks bright. Cash sales are as good as last year. The total volume of business shows a nice increase. Collections are up to the 1912 mark. I am optimistic, and can't see why anyone should be otherwise. Certainly Atlanta is in good shape."

I'll Never Be Killed, Dead Aviator's Boast

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—Andrew Drew, the young aviator killed at Lima, Ohio, was a member of a prominent family in St. Louis. His father, the late Francis A. Drew, was a millionaire banker and glass manufacturer.

Drew became a newspaper reporter, declining to enter society, where his family was recognized. After he "put over" a good story of the balloon races that started in 1909 from St. Louis, he gave up newspaper work and became a pupil of the Wrights.

"I'll never be killed," said Drew recently to a crowd of his friends. "I never take chances."

Cuba's House of Representatives Adopts a Vote of Thanks for Courtesies at the Maine Celebration

William Randolph Hearst, New York: Havana, Cuba, June 11.

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES in session to-day adopted a vote of profound thanks for the consideration and affection demonstrated toward her envoys in connection with the ceremonies attending the unveiling of the monument to the victims of the Maine.

JOSE A. GONZALEZ LANUZA, President of the House.

FRIENDS OF BOY FORGER SEEK HIS RELEASE

Suspended Sentence Movement Active in Behalf of Wayward Youth in Prison Here.

An effort to gain the release from prison of Paul H. VanDeusen, 19 years old, who several months ago forged a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, is being made by influential citizens throughout the United States who are active in the suspended sentence movement.

United States District Attorney Tate, of Atlanta, has received nearly twenty petitions asking that VanDeusen be given another chance.

VanDeusen several months ago lived in Atlanta with Roy Rubenstien. The two boys look much alike. Rubenstien had a postal-savings account at the local postoffice. On two different occasions VanDeusen took the account book of Rubenstien to the postoffice and drew a total of $15 in Rubenstien's name.

Stole Money in Los Angeles.

Soon afterward VanDeusen went to Los Angeles, where he got a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company as a telegrapher. In some manner he appropriated $53 of the company's money and was arrested.

VanDeusen pleaded guilty and was sentenced to three years. The judge taking into consideration the age of the prison, suspended sentence and paroled VanDeusen back to his mother, Mrs. Susan VanDeusen, of Jamestown, N. Y. After he had been paroled in Los Angeles he was rearrested on the charge of forging a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, and arrangements were made to bring VanDeusen to Atlanta for trial.

Those interested in his case are trying to get the boy released to go back to his mother under the order of the Los Angeles court, and the various petitions received by the District Attorney disclose pathetic facts regarding the circumstances of the boys' parents.

Family Is in Want.

His father, Judd VanDeusen, has been in an insane asylum for fourteen years. Mrs. VanDeusen works in a laundry for $6 a week. She has three other boys and two girls. At present the family is in want, and it is claimed that one boy, Paul, in an endeavor to help his family, was led into crime.

Since the arrest of the boy on the Atlanta charge restitution for the amount stolen has been made.

It is thought the United States Attorney General will authorize the release of VanDeusen and give him another chance, allowing the boy to return to his mother. VanDeusen, however, will be indicted here and this indictment will be held over him. In case he fails to do right, the indictment will be pressed.

They are now at home at the Hotel Kimball, where they will live for a few weeks before they go to housekeeping.

Mr. Byrd is well known among members of the Fourth Estate, and has worked on a number of the best papers in the South. The amendment is said to have been proposed because of friction between the three Assessors and G. B. Beauchamp, Chief Clerk and Tax Receiver. It will be considered by Council Monday afternoon.

Millionaire Kills Another in Quarrel

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Mieho Ziblich, millionaire oyster dealer, is in jail to-day charged with killing George Margareti, wealthy president of the United Gold Mines and the Golden States Mine. The men quarreled over the consolidation of the concerns, which are capitalized at $2,500,000.

"I'm glad I shot him," said the slayer. "He was a frenzied financier."

Normal Weather Is Promised Again if Jinx Doesn't Tamper

Friday the Thirteenth promises to be notable for at least one good thing. Unless the Jinx has fooled with the Weather Man's instruments, the day will go down in history as the day on which Old Man Winter gave up the fight and Kid Summer came into his own.

The officials at the local Weather Bureau solemnly declared—with the qualification that anything was likely to happen to-day—that Friday the Thirteenth will be the warmest day Atlanta has known in two weeks. At 7 o'clock in the morning the official thermometer registered 64 degrees, about 12 degrees warmer than the same hour Thursday morning. At 10 o'clock the mercury had climbed to 76, and after a prolonged squint at the skies Director VonHerrmann announced that it was due to reach 81 or 82 this afternoon.

Saturday will be even warmer, and if the weather runs on schedule the thermometer will reach 85 or 86. Sunday, unless all indications fail, will be one of those sticky June days that are prayed for in December and cursed when they arrive.

Observance of Flag Day in State Urged By D. A. R. Regent

A request that the citizens of Georgia observe Flag Day, Saturday, June 14, has been made by Mrs. S. F. Foster, State Regent of the Daughters of the American Revolution. She asks that flags be displayed on all public buildings, school houses and private residences, and that every man show his patriotism and loyalty in this way. Flags will be displayed on every building belonging to Uncle Sam, both in the United States and in his island possessions.

Saturday is the 136th anniversary of the adoption of the Stars and Stripes as the flag of the American Republic. Years ago the D. A. R. started an agitation to have the anniversary celebrated each year with a display of the flag, and their efforts have met with much success. Last year practically every city and town in the country was literally alive with flags, and this year it is hoped that the citizens will again show their patriotism.

Horse Guards Give Last Dance Before Annual July Outing

A reminder of the summer encampment, always a memorable occasion with the Governor's Horse Guards of Atlanta, came Thursday night in the dance of that organization held in Taft Hall. The members of the Guards will go soon to the coast for their annual outing, and the dance was given as the final social gathering before their departure.

More than 100 couples were on the floor of Taft Hall, all of them loyal to the Horse Guards, talking of the Horse Guards, singing of the Horse Guards. The dance was an informal hop, at which no uniforms were worn, and where, with the camaraderie which marks the organization, a private was as good as a non-com, and a non-com as an officer.

The dance was in charge of a reception committee composed of R. Marshall Todd, S. L. Sloan and H. P. Andrews.

The officers of the Governor's Horse Guards, which is a cavalry troop of the Georgia National Guard, are O. L. Rudisail, captain; H. C. Ashford, first lieutenant; J. C. Adolphus, second lieutenant.

PLAN BOULEVARD ON IVY, TRACKS ON PIEDMONT

Council Committee and Arkwright Tentatively Agree to Scheme to Ease Congestion.

Ivy Street for a boulevard and Piedmont Avenue for double track car service was the plan tentatively favored by the street railway committee of the General Council and President P. S. Arkwright, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, Thursday afternoon.

Pending grading and repaving, Ivy Street has been stripped of car tracks. It is the desire of the street railway committee to keep the tracks off, making the street an unobstructed boulevard, and to compensate the street railway company for loss of is Ivy Street franchise by permitting the laying of double tracks on Piedmont Avenue.

President Arkwright agreed this scheme would be advantageous to the street railway company as well as to the city.

Would Ease Congestion.

The double track service on Piedmont would extend from East Pine Street to Decatur. It would take care of traffic from all of North and Northeast Atlanta, affording relief from congestion to Pine Street.

With Ivy Street as an exclusive vehicle thoroughfare, even this kind of traffic would be diverted thereto from Peachtree, so that faster schedules could be maintained. Vehicles, in turn, could make faster time on Ivy.

The Ivy Street boulevard proposition came up when President Arkwright asked the Street Railway Committee for two franchises, one on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer, and one on Ivy Street from Edgewood to Auburn. These franchises are for short rights-of-way, designed to facilitate ingress and egress to and from the car barns.

It was when this request was made that George H. Boynton, chairman of the Street Car Committee, made known the desire of the committeemen to convert Ivy Street into a boulevard and divert street car traffic to Piedmont.

Arkwright Asks More Time.

This plan would include the short franchise sought by the street car company on Piedmont from Decatur to Edgewood. President Arkwright signified that the plan would be acceptable to his company, but he wanted further time before agreeing.

Owners of property on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer Streets object to the new plan, but the Street Car Committee thinks they must yield for the benefit of the whole city.

Chairman George H. Boynton was instructed by the committee to consult with the Piedmont Avenue objectors and report to the General Council as early as possible. Mr. Boynton said he would endeavor to reach an agreement with them in time to report at the General Council next Monday.

Negro Odd Fellows Head Enjoins Board

MACON, June 13.—An echo of the 1912 convention of the negro Odd Fellows of Georgia in Atlanta is heard here in the injunction secured by B. S. Ingram, grand master, against the members of his executive committee, which prevents them for the present from trying him for conduct unbecoming an officer and a member.

At the convention in Atlanta it was charged that Ingram secured his re-election by fraud. He claims that the presetn proceeding is designed to prejudice his chance for re-election at the annual convention in Savannah next month.

DIES WATCHING SENSATIONAL MOVIE FILM

Heart Failure Takes Off C. G. Maner, Drug Company Collector, in Picture Theater.

C. G. Maner of 386 South Moreland Street, a collector for the Elkin Drug Company, died in the Alcazar Theater Friday morning about 10:30 o'clock as he was watching a picture advertised as "hair-raising incidents, cleverly woven into an astounding story of jungle terror." Death is believed to have been due to heart failure, as Maner left his office Friday morning apparently in the best of health and spirits.

Maner took a seat in the theater in the third row, left, near the back. No one noticed anything unusual until 10:30 o'clock when a spectator, passing up the aisle, reported to the office that a man was "snoring" on the third row. The doorkeeper responded and shook the man to wake him up.

Dead When Removed.

The man who later proved to be Maner, was found to be dying. Manager Jackson says he believes he was dead when the doorkeeper reached him, as his eyes were glassy and his mouth open.

The dead man was taken to Patterson's, where he was identified as C. G. Maner, by means of a collector's card in his pocket.

The family, consisting of wife and one daughter, Mrs. Dr. Warnock, were notified immediately.

In Best of Health.

Maner, apparently, had no warning of the end. He left Elkin's drug store Friday morning in buoyant spirits, according to T. E. Jennings, assistant manager, who said he joked with Maner just before he left about 8:30 o'clock.

Maner, according to Mr. Jennings, told him Thursday night how fine he felt. Maner was about 55 years old and had been employed by the Elkin Drug Company about three years.

Autos on Peachtree Disturb Man's Sleep

Edward McDowell, 647 Peachtree Street, complained to Assistant Chief of Police Jett Friday morning that he can not sleep at night because of the unearthly noise made by automobilists who pass his domicile.

They run with their mufflers wide open, McDowell declared, and they violate every known automobile law. He declared that "while Atlanta may be tight in other respects, it is a wide-open town when it comes to automobile mufflers."

He characterized the autoists as "road hogs."

Boy Slayer, 14, Given Sundae at Cell Door

JOLIET, ILL., June 13.—Before Herman Coppes, aged 14, entered the State penitentiary here he was taken to an ice cream parlor, where he ate a chocolate sundae—probably the last he ever will have. Half an hour later he had entered on the first day of a life sentence for the murder of Mrs. Maude Sleep and her two children, of Elgin, Ill.

He was given his first long trousers—part of the convict uniform—and to-day he will be assigned to work.

Hot Race on for Presidency of Georgia Senate

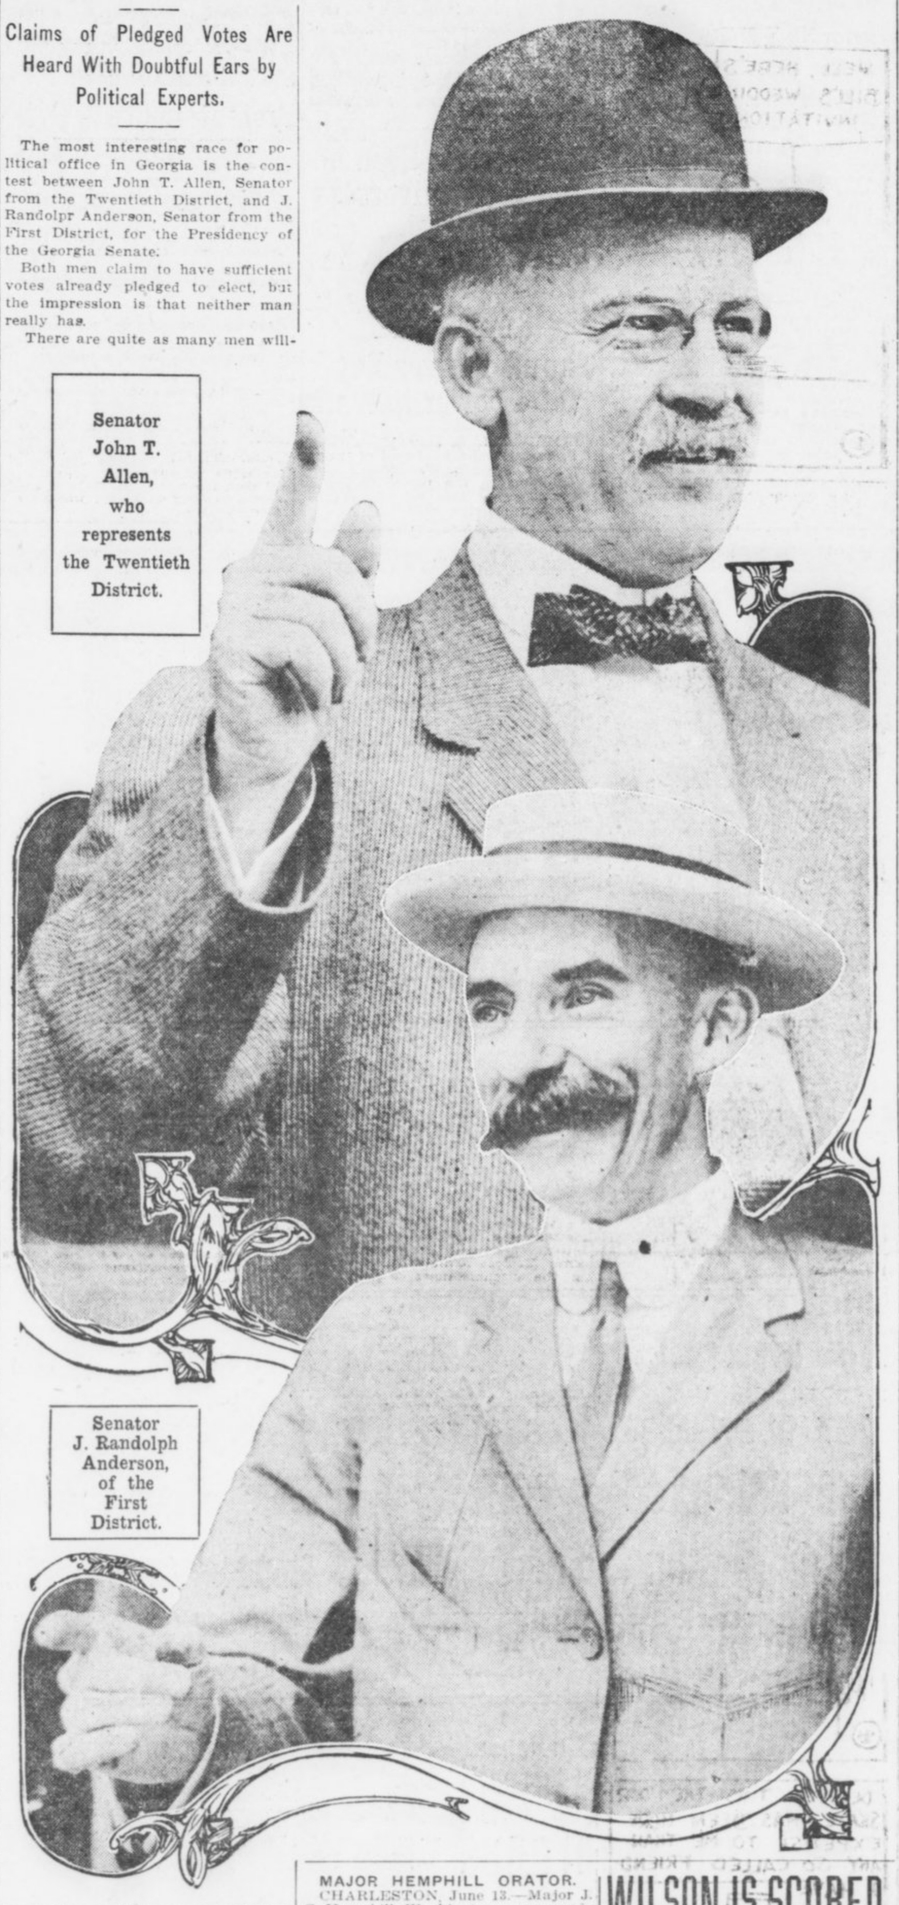
Allen and Anderson Both Claim Victory Is Sure

Claims of Pledged Votes Are Heard With Doubtful Ears by Political Experts.

The most interesting race for political office in Georgia is the contest between John T. Allen, Senator from the Twentieth District, and J. Randolpr Anderson, Senator from the First District, for the Presidency of the Georgia Senate.

Both men claim to have sufficient votes already pledged to elect, but the impression is that neither man really has.

There are quite as many men willing to bet on Allen as on Anderson. Each has his avowed following in the new Senate, but not nearly enough Senators to elect either are talking right out loud in meeting.



Senator John T. Allen, who represents the Twentieth District.

Senator J. Randolph Anderson, of the First District.

Judge Allen is a former member of the Senate. He is one of Middle Georgia's best known and most prominent attorneys. He is a fine parliamentarian, a good mixer, and a man of poise and common sense.

Mr. Anderson is one of South Georgia's best known attorneys. He has been a member of the House several times, is skilled in political diplomacy, and is known as a most resourceful man in the gentle game of politics.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the last House, and took a very prominent part in its proceedings. He long ago announced his candidacy for the Presidency of the Senate, and was named Senator in the elections last fall, without opposition, and with the distinct understanding that he was to be in the race for the Senate Presidency.

Judge Allen likewise was named Senator from his district, without opposition, but did not enter the race for the Presidency until after his election to the Senate.

Both men have secured headquarters in the Kimball House, where things will be kept on the jump until the contest is decided.

As between Allen and Anderson personally, there seems to be very little room for choice.

Politically, moreover, they have not been avowed enemies, although they have differed widely on many subjects.

Besides being a practicing attorney in Savannah, Mr. Anderson has large and extensive commercial and manufacturing interests there, while Senator Allen, besides being a practicing attorney in Milledgeville, is interested in banking enterprises.

WILSON IS SCORED FOR LOBBY STAND

Senator Gallinger Styles President's Speeches "Worst Kind of Influence."

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Senator Gallinger, of New Hampshire, turned the lobby investigation into a political debate to-day when he declared that President Wilson's recent warning to business men not to cut wages unfairly or attempt to start a panic because of the tariff situation was "about the worst kind of influence I can imagine," and that the President's charge of an "insidious lobby" was "a species of lobby influence and most unfortunate."

Senator Reed asked him if the supply of inspired articles sent to the country press was not a species of lobbying. The Senator replied that it was sharp practice. He had previously upheld the right of the sugar interests to come to Washington to present their case. He did not regard this as lobbying if publicity or other legitimate means were employed.

"Then you believe that the sugar interests may make their arguments, but that the President should not?" inquired Senator Reed.

"I am sorry to see the Executive encroach upon the legislative powers," replied Senator Gallinger.

Senator Gallinger declared that anyone whose business is about to be injured has a right to protect himself. He also stated he knew of no particular case of coercion, and that he had no interest in the tariff bill.

CANAL TO BE DRY UNTIL WILSON VIEWS IT

President Will Wait Congress Adjournment—Goethals Anxious to be Relieved of Job.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Colonel W. E. Goethals, Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal, called at the White House yesterday to discuss the progress of work there. He told the President that water could be turned into the Canal shortly after October 1, but that he would not order it done if the President found it impossible to visit the Canal during September.

President Wilson assured the Chief Engineer that he would visit Panama the moment Congress adjourned.

Peculiar Position.

Colonel Goethals has been the Chief Engineer and supreme executive of the Canal organization since the project was put in the hands of army engineers.

These functions are not based on any law of Congress, but the direct admonition of President Roosevelt to the members of the commission when he appointed them. He told them there was no authority in law for making Colonel Goethals the head of the force to be employed on the Canal, but that his power of appointment would be used to enforce his decision not to ask Congress for further legislation and to make Colonel Goethals the supreme authority. Every member of the commission understood and accepted his appointment on that condition.

President Taft pursued the same method as his predecessor, and Colonel Goethals' direction of affairs met with no opposition until toward the end of the recent Presidential term.

Opposition Develops.

Reports say that the disposition to resent the authority of Colonel Goethals has reached a critical stage, threatening to weaken the commission in the closing months of its task and possibly postpone the completion of the Canal beyond the time set for that consummation. Consequently much importance is placed on President Wilson's tentative selection of Richard L. Metcalfe of Nebraska for civilian member of the Isthmian Commission in place of Maurice H. Thatcher.

It is understood that Colonel Goethals is to be consulted freely by President Wilson on the whole situation.

Colonel Goethals does not want to have charge of the administration of the Canal. He does not want to remain on the Isthmus even long enough to see the big inauguration ceremonies that have been planned.

TIFTON IS AFTER EXPERIMENTAL BRANCH FARM

Representative Ellis Has Matter in Hand, and Scrap in Legislature Is Expected.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

A serious effort is to be made in the next Legislature to obtain a branch experiment station for South Georgia, to be located at Tifton.

Representative R. C. Ellis, of Tift County, has the matter in charge, and already claims to have made much progress with his measure.

The citizens of Tift and surrounding territory have indorsed his plan heartily, and there is a good chance that it may succeed. This is particularly true, it seems, because of recent suggestions that the agricultural station at Experiment, near Griffin, be removed to Athens.

At a meeting of the board of governors of the Tifton Chamber of Commerce a committee, consisting of Colonel R. E. Dinsmore, Briggs Carson and E. O. Hood, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions indorsing Colonel Ellis' bill, and the Chamber of Commerce will give him its hearty support in putting the measure through the Legislature.

A bill providing for the establishment of a branch experiment station at Tifton, introduced by Representative Ellis in 1911, was favorably reported by the committee, but failed of passage during the closing days of the session.

The conditions in South Georgia at the present time make an experiment station more of a necessity than ever before, in the opinion of Representativ Ellis. The approach of the boll weevil, the paralyzed condition of the Sea Island cotton market, the rapid development of fruit and nut growing and agriculture in South Georgaa, all are matters of first concern in that section.

It is not at all unlikely that Mr. Ellis' proposed bill will open the entire question of removing the present agricultural station from Griffin to Athens, and if it does, one of the very livellest and most interesting fights of the entire session will thereby be precipitated.

Judge John Allen, of Baldwin, and Senator Randolph Anderson, of Chatham, rival candidates for the presidency of the Senate, met in the Kimball House lobby this morning and shook hands cordially.

They had occupied adjoining but not communicating rooms the night before, and had just discovered that they had been assigned to headquarters after the same fashion.

"I overheard you talking in your sleep last night, Senator," said Senator Allen, "and your soliloquy was quite interesting."

"What did I say?" inquired Anderson.

"You were petitioning the Lord to make those 25 votes you claim stick," laughed Allen.

"Well, I've got 'em—how many have you?" said Anderson.

"Twenty-seven," drawled Allen.

"Humph! That's more than there are in the Senate," mused the Chathamite.

"Well, I don't care how much you talk in your sleep, so long as you don't walk in it," remarked Allen, as he walked away.

"We seem to keep together in the matter of rooms, headquarters and claims," said Anderson, as Allen strolled away.

Muscogee County, for the first time in its history, will have three Representatives in the Legislature when the House is called to order on June 25.

Under the last census, Laurens lost its place as the junior "big six" county, and Muscogee slipped in. That entitles her to three members of the House.

As a matter of fact, however, Muscogee will have four members in the Legislature, for the Senator from that district also is a resident of the county in which Columbus is located.

Judge Henry Revill, of Meriwether, is an advocate of a board of tax equalizers.

Discussing the matter, he said: "Our present tax machinery is antiquated. It does not reach the dodgers. Burdens are unequally distributed, and should be made to bear equally upon all. The present method amounts to nothing more than passing the hat around. Almost every taxpayer gives in as little as possible, and it is well nigh impossible to make the financial buckle and tongue meet. A board of equalizers in each county would reach a lot of hidden property and force all species to pay on its proper valuation. No good reason can be urged against a board of tax equalizers in every county, and I hope to see the General Assembly provide for them. We can only meet our financial obligations by raising more revenue, and we can not—must not—raise the tax rate."

One of the members from Clarke County will introduce in the next Legislature an "anti-pistol toting" bill.

The following is the gist of the measure:

"1. It shall be unlawful for any dealer in firearms to make a sale, loan or gift of any pistol or pistol cartridges unless an application for such sale, loan or gift be presented to the dealer that has the indorsement of at least two responsible citizens vouching for the applicant's good character.

"2. It shall be the duty of the dealer to file daily a sworn statement with the chief of police a copy of each application, giving name, description, etc., applicant as well as the caliber and number of the pistol, and make; also brand and size of pistol cartridges.

"3. It shall be the duty of the dealer to include in the sworn statement that the two indorsers are personally known to him as possessing good character, etc.

"4. Providing penalty for violation."

This bill follows closely the recommendations of two grand juries of Clarke County and has been very carefully thought out.

PORTER CHARLTON, and wife for whose death he has been extradited to Italy to stand trial

GRADUATING GIFT WEDDING PRESENT

Stepfather Takes Roses Home to High School Girl and Finds Her Daughter-in-Law.

Thursday night of last week Marie Pate, daughter of Mrs. M. D. Mitchell, 19 York Avenue, graduated from the Girls' High School. Just two days later Miss Pate was married to Walter Kelly Mitchell, son of Mr. Mitchell, at their parents' home, Mrs. Mitchell only being in on the secret.

At supper time Mr. Mitchell, two days later, came in with a belated graduation present for his fair stepdaughter.

"Here are some June roses for a graduation remembrance," he said to his stepdaughter.

"Why, they are bride roses—and just in time, too," the girl replied. "They are just the thing after our wedding."

Young Mitchell explained to his dazzled daddy that he and Marie had just been married. Mr. Mitchell was surprised, but not at all angry, for he extended his warmest congratulation to his son and his stepdaughter who turned daughter-in-law.

Young Mitchell is 24 and an auditor. His stepsister-bride is 17. They left for Asheville, where they will spend their honeymoon. Later they will be at home with their parents, step-parents and parents-in-law.

INSANITY FACES PORTER CHARLTON

Italian Prisons Seem Sure to Drive Young Consumptive Raving Crazy.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—If Porter Charlton pays the extreme penalty in an Italian prison for the murder of his beautiful and impetuous wife—and there now appears to be no hope of his escaping trial there—it is generally conceded that the highly-strung young man will be driven mad before he has been long within the gloomy walls.

Italy knows no death sentence. The Italian law does not exact one life for another. But the dread punishment that is inflicted is feared far more by the general run of criminals than the electric chair, the hangman's noose, the garrotte or any other form of execution.

The extreme sentence in Italy is life imprisonment, but this is hedged with such methods of mental torture that few who last more than a short stretch of years retain their minds. Many are driven stark, raving crazy. Charlton, with his sensitive, nervous temperament, can hardly endure the agony of mind that the Italian prisons induce.

For the first ten years of a life sentence, the prisoner may be kept in utter darkness, and in the strictest solitude, and with nothing to eat and drink but plain bread and water. A few weeks of this treatment generally is sufficient to reduce the most phlegmatic and unemotional criminal to a state of nervous collapse.

Charlton's sole remaining hope lies in an appeal to President Wilson and Secretary Bryan. If this fails and the Italian tribunal gives him the fearful life sentence, he can only pray that the White Plague, of which he is a victim, may bring him soon to a merciful end.

Charlton, after fleeing to the United States, confessed to the killing of his wife at Lake Como, Italy, in June, 1910. She was the divorced wife of Neville H. Castle, a San Francisco lawyer, who went to the Alaskan wilds to bury the sorrow of his unhappy marriage.

COLD WAVE FLEES FROM STICKY HEAT

Weather Man's Predicted Change Arrives on Schedule Time. Temperature Rising.

The weather man's reputation for freaky stunts has been fully established at last—with one fell swoop (observe the date) Friday, June 13, he has brought upon Atlantans again that sticky, sizzling brand of weather which gives the street-corner gossipers something to talk about.

The shift from real winter to summer was indicated Thursday afternoon when the mercury went up, although not enough to bring out straw hats and uncovered peek-a-boos. Friday morning, however, saw a real change and many venturesome citizens, with brand new summer clothes, straw hats and things, looking ahead a few hours, prepared themselves for real hot weather.

It wasn't a bad guess, for the temperature rose steadily all during the morning until about noon, when it was almost normal again. The weather man says this will continue without a break—but who can tell, for it's a freaky day, and it may be just freaky weather.

SEGREGATION UP TO COUNCIL ON MONDAY

Ordinance Is Approved by Police Committee After Many Appeals in Its Behalf.

The Ashley segregation ordinance, which was passed by the Police Committee Thursday, will come up for consideration by the General Council next Monday.

The ordinance was unanimously recommended by the Police Committee after heated addresses by citizens pleading for speedy relief as a preventive of racial conflicts.

The only objection against approval of the ordinance was made by Henry A. Rucker, a negro, who formerly was a deputy internal revenue collector in Atlanta, and who is influential among his race. He told the committee negroes purchased homes in white neighborhoods only on invitation of white property owners.

Negroes Will Go to Court.

He gave warning that negroes would feel compelled to go into the courts and test the constitutionality of the Ashley ordinance.

"I don't care if we knew this law was unconstitutional, I would still insist that it pass," said Councilman Ashley, speaking in defense of his measure. "It is the same situation here which has arisen in California, and we must settle this question early or have trouble. I want to say, though, that this ordinance is perfectly legal. The City Attorney and other prominent lawyers have pronounced it free from constitutional defects."

Mr. Ashley had in mind particularly conditions in the Fourth Ward. L. C. Green, real estate man representing property holders in the Fourth, and B. Lee Smith, resident of the Fourth, who twice had been driven away by negro invasion, advocated indorsement of the Ashley measure as the only method of preventing trouble.

White and Negro Children Fight.

"Out on Johnson Avenue and other streets I could name," said Mr. Smith, "hardly a day passes but what white children meet negro children in the road and they have a pitched battle. This is only the beginning of a sentiment which is going to result in the worst race conflict Atlanta ever heard of, unless this negro encroachment upon white residence districts is stopped right where it is."

E. M. Mitchell, formerly president of the Board of Education, said the only way Atlanta could grow without passing through negro settlements, negro colleges or something else undesirable, was north and northeast, and negro invasion of these two outlets should be stopped. He termed the Ashley ordinance a police measure.

Sentiment in favor of the ordinance was so overwhelming the Police Committee announced no other speakers would be heard unless they had something new.

After an hour's discussion, the committee went into executive session and approved the ordinance unanimously.

Martin said he didn't accept it and would not have it.

Removal of Teacher Stirs Forsyth Folk

FORSYTH, GA., June 13.—The elimination of Miss Raiford Sneed from the staff of teachers in the public schools of Forsyth has provoked a controversy which is just now the most engaging topic of conversation in this city. The fight centers about Professor J. C. Campbell, who, after being vested with authority by the board of education, failed to reappoint Miss Sneed for the year beginning September, 1913.

When the board meets again next week, the friends of Miss Sneed will urge that she be retained.

Fullbright Intends To End Pistol Toting

H. J. Fullbright, representative from Burke County, has prepared a measure for introduction at the coming session of the Legislature further to curtail the promiscuous carrying of firearms.

Mr. Fullbright was active in the framing and advocacy of the law now on the statute books. He now proposes to discourage "pistol-toting" still more by limiting the sale of revolvers and cartridges.

No one who has not a license to carry weapons can procure cartridges under the bill.

It was said that generally bulling of corn on dry weather in June has not always been successful at a 60c level.

Two of the couples—Mr. and Mrs T. G. Selman, of Rockmart, Ga., and Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Harding, of Douglasville, Ga.—are stopping at the Kimball. The other couple—Mr. and Mrs. Gordon High, of Rome—spent last night at the Piedmont, but plan to leave Thursday for an Eastern trip, returning to Atlanta within a few weeks to spend the last days of their honeymoon here.

All of the young people come of prominent families in their respective towns, and all were married Wednesday morning. They arrived in Atlanta on the same train, and two of the honeymooners, the Selmans and the Hardings, registered at the Kimball at the same time and are in adjoining rooms.

NEW YORK, June 13.—John Armstrong Chaloner, who to-day is seeking to be declared sane by the New York courts, after sixteen years of alleged "insanity," will spend much of his money and all of his time endeavoring to reform the lunacy laws of the United States. He has published a book on lunacy laws of the country.

Chaloner, famous as author of "Who's Looney Now," bases his sanity and the right to handle his New York property on a poem, "The Three Flies," and three books of verse written since he was declared insane.

Should Chaloner's petition be granted by Justice Giegerich, the eccentric millionaire refugee will be permitted to return to his home in New York and take possession of his $3,000,000 estate. He now is living at his farm, Merrie Mills, near Cubham, Va., where he raises fine hogs and prize cattle.

The application to be declared sane was made by Chaloner through his attorney, Frederick A. Ware, in connection with the request for an increase of allowance from $17,000 to $33,000 a year from Chaloner's estate. T. T. Sherman, committeeman, in charge of Chaloner's property, is of the opinion that the estate can not pay the additional $16,000, but Attorney Ware disagrees with him.

Chaloner probably soon will leave his Virginia home for New York, where he will attempt to prove that he is a sane man and fully capable of managing his own affairs. He has not planted his foot in any State but North Carolina and Virginia since his sensational escape from Bloomingdale Asylum. In these States, where he has large property holdings, he has been declared sane.

Chaloner's wife, who was separated from him by divorce, is Princess Amelie Troubetsky.

PASTORS INVITED TO SEE QUO VADIS

Georgian, in Connection With the Film Owners, Welcomes Them to First Performances.

Invitations will reach every minister of the gospel in Atlanta and vicinity to-day, informing them that The Georgian, in connection with the owners and exhibitors of "Quo Vadis," bids them welcome to the opening performances of the sensational pictures either Monday afternoon or night at the Grand.

In New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Richmond and Norfolk, where the pictures are being shown, ministers were asked to attend the performances and a great majority accepted, and immediately became interested in advising all the people who could to witness the exhibitions.

"Quo Vadis" is the work of the Societa Italianna Cines, of Rome, Italy, who took 18 months and thousands of dollars and thousands of people to produce the 10,000 feet of film that make up the eight reels for the three acts and eight scenes of "Quo Vadis."

Not a detail of the famous story of Henry Sienkiewicz has been left out. The lions are turned into the arena to devour the Christians, the gladiator is seen in combat with the bull, and all of the exciting incidents that could never have been put on a stage have been carried on just as the novel describes.

It is little wonder that theaters are being crowded to capacity to witness the greatest accomplishment that has been credited to motion pictures.

"Quo Vadis" is to be at the Grand all of the week that starts on Monday; matinee and night daily; 25 cents at the matinees, 25 and 50 cents at night.

25 Lots in Ansley Park Annex

Are Going

AT AUCTION

At this time history—real estate history—will repeat itself. Everybody knows what happened after every other auction of Ansley Park lots. Those who know say the same thing will happen again.

Thousands upon thousands of dollars were made for purchasers. Values have steadily climbed and are still climbing. This is the one section of residential Atlanta where doubt as to the future does not exist.

Ansley Park Annex has been developed in the same high-class manner which made Ansley Park famous. Every one of these 25 lots is high and overlooks Ansley Park. Many of them front on North Boulevard.

These lots are in a section within a mile or a mile and a half from three tracts which have been bought for development within the next few years by some of Atlanta's wealthiest men. It is the logical property. It has profits concealed in it.

Put the date down—Thursday, next Thursday, June 19. Remember the date as one which will increase your bank account if you attend the auction. Sidetrack every other engagement and go out. Twenty-five lots are going to make money for as many people. Be one of the twenty-five.

General Evans Praises Work of Riflemen

Pays Visit to Range With Gov. Brown

Brigadier General R. K. Evans and Governor Joseph M. Brown watching rifle shooting at Camp Evans range.

Men New in Competition Forge to Top of List in Skirmish Firing.

With Governor Brown and Brigadier General R. K. Evans of the regular army looking on, new blood took the lead in the Georgia National Guard elimination shoot at the Camp Evans rifle range in the second day of the meet. Both the first and second men are from the Fifth Regiment, Atlanta.

Oscar C. Holleran, of the Gate City Guards, forged to the front after a day of 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing, with a percentage of 259. Right behind him was J. R. Cothran, of Company D, who is competing for the first time. The "old-timers" took their drop in the standing with good grace, extending congratulations to the youngsters on their showing.

To-day the squad divided into ten teams of five men each to compete for team trophies.

New Scores To Be Added.

Individual scores will be adde to the scores already made and the 30 highest men will be selected to return to Atlanta next month, when the final elimination for the selection of a team to go to Camp Perry, Ohio, will begin.

That the team which will be developed through this shoot will be able to uphold the Georgia record is the belief of the officials who are in charge and who have witnessed the competition for many years.

Governor Brown and General Evans were delighted at the records made. General Evans spoke in high compliment of the Georgia men. He will be the chief executive officer at Camp Perry this year.

"The Georgia National Guard is wonderfully well organized," said General Evans. "The officers are men of judgment and there is a spirit of enthusiasm throughout that shows up mighty well to the regular officers. Throughout the country there has been great progress among the National Guard, and I am glad to know that Georgia is doing so well."

Visitors Given Barbecue.

Governor Brown and General Evans arrived at the range in time to witness the skirmish firing. The ten-men teams moved down the range with precision.

Following the completion of the day's shooting, the party moved to the mess tent, where the visitors enjoyed a barbecue.

Several other officers of the regular army accompanied General Evans. Among them were Colonel C. H. Barth, of the Department of the Gulf, and Colonel VanOrsdale and Major W. A. Martin of the Seventeenth Infantry, stationed at Fort McPherson.

The 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing caused a shake-up in the standing, which was featured by Holleran and Cothran forging to the lead. Holleran is leading Cothran by but two points. Beginning of the shoot this morning, though, found the "veterans" getting down to business in their old-time form, determined to recover their lost laurels.

Following is the standing of the men through Thursday's shoot:

A., B. & A. MAY QUIT OLD UNION STATION

Rumored That New Connection With Southern's Line Indicates Road Will Use Terminal.

Is the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad to abandon the Union Depot and hereafter use the Terminal Station?

This intimation has come through action of the Georgia Terminal Company in making a definite move for the establishment of a branch line or extension connecting the A., B. and A. between Thurmond and Newton Streets with the Southern at a point near Magnolia Street. The length of the line would be about one-quarter of a mile.

The Georgia Terminal Company passed resolutions recently touching the subject, and it is understood that the company is now waiting for permission from the Federal Court to change its charter so as to permit the extension. The resolutions provided that there should be built "a branch running from a point on its main line or extension of its present railroad between Thurmond and Newton Streets in a general southeasterly direction across Mangum Street, Newton Street, Foundry Street and Elliott Street to a connection with the Southern Railway at a point near Magnolia Street," and that "attorneys are hereby authorized to take all steps necessary for the purpose of amending this company's charter authorizing the building of this branch or extension."

Neighborhood Row Caused by Chickens

The story of a sanguinary neighborhood battle will be told in Judge Broyles' court when Clarence Barnes, his wife, Pearl Barnes, of 12 Murphy Avenue; Mrs. Annie Hicks, Mrs. Hattie Crash and Mrs. Marguerite Long, all of 15 Murphy Avenue, are tried on charges of disorderly conduct. The trial was to begin Friday.

The row started when the Barnes chickens invaded the domain of the Hickses, the Crashes and the Longs.

Officers Ryan and Head made cases against all of them.

MEN OF MILLIONS SAVED FROM SEA

Atlantic City Life Guard and Swimming Master Heroes of Perilous Situation.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., June 13. Fourteen men of wealth, representing railroad and car building interest in the United States running into hundreds of millions of dollars, trusted their lives to the skill of Martin Harris, swimming instructor, and Abe McCullen, chief life guard, when the steam launch Naushon stranded in shoal water last night, three miles off Rhode Island Avenue.

In the party were W. J. Coons, vice president of the Illinois Central Railroad; C. W. McDaniels, a New York corporation lawyer; A. F. Bedell, a Pittsburg steel magnate; A. W. Hubbard, of Kentucky, brother of the owner of the boat; Robert Mason, steel car manufacturer of Pittsburg, and B. F. Markley, a New York railroad man.

They were loud in their praise of Harris and McCullen. The latter left the beach in their risky craft at 8:30 o'clock after the Naushon had begun to blow a whistle and brighten the ocean with flashes from her powerful searchlight. At ten minutes before midnight they had the 14 men safely ashore, having made two separate trips to the yacht and rowed 12 miles through a choppy sea and a highly dangerous surf.

HERITAGE TAX IS PLAN OF SOLONS

At Least Two Members of Legislature Will Offer Scheme for Raising More State Money.

At least two legislators—Representatives W. F. Slater, of Bryan County, and H. H. Swift, of Muscogee—will introduce in the Legislature this summer a bill imposing a tax on inheritances. Advocates of the measure, which is not new in Georgia, will wage a vigorous fight for its passage, it is said.

The Slater bill will provide a tax on collateral inheritances only, leaving direct inheritances exempt, while Mr. Swift's bill imposes a tax on all inheritances in excess of $1,000.

The inheritance tax advocates claim there is reason for such a levy as the constitutional limit of 5 mills, reached in ad valorem taxation, has placed the General Assembly in a quandary as to how to raise sufficient revenue. The proposed income tax, they say, is a dead letter now that the sixteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution has been ratified.

Comptroller General W. A. Wright disagrees with the plan, saying the time is not ripe. If such a bill is passed, he says, the minimum amount taxed should be $50,000.

Included are little tailored waists, with low round collars—perhaps the collar is embroidered a bit, the front tucked or plaited—these of dimity or a lightweight linene—all white.

Then there are the sheer batiste waists with dainty laces—Valenciennes, cluny and imitation Irish—and with embroidery that looks much like hand work on the front.

Then again we have the tailored shirts that travelers will want by the twos and threes—these of striped percales and brown linens.

ATLANTANS WILL WITNESS CANAL OPENING

Plan Trip as Members of Commercial Congress, Which Will Send Big Delegation.

Many of Atlanta's most prominent and progressive business men discussed Friday a trip to the Panama Canal Zone. Louis C. Irvine, of Mobile, general director of the Panama Canal celebration of the Southern Commercial Congress, was in this city Thursday outlining the trip and telling of a gigantic celebration in Mobile preliminary to sailing.

One thousand members of the Southern Commercial Congress, with many business men, will meet at Mobile the last week in October. The Latin-American trade tour, limited to 50 selected guests, who will visit the chief Latin-American States for 90 days to give thorough study to commercial conditions, will there be organized.

The route of the party has been changed because of slides in the Culebra cut, which delayed the opening of the canal. The travelers will leave Mobile about October 25, reaching the Isthmus before November 1, the date set for the official opening of the canal.

After the ceremonies at Panama, the travelers will touch Pyta, Colon, Eten, Pacasmayo, Salavery and Callao, Peru, and from Callao by train to Lima. They will leave Lima for inland points and thence back to Callao, Mollendo, Arequito and Guayaquil, thence to La Paz, Bolivia; Antofagasto, Chile; Coquimbo, Valparaiso, Santiago, Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, Montevideo, Uruguay; Santos, Brazil, and Rio de Janeiro. They will sail from Rio de Janeiro; call at Bahia, Trinidad, Barbados, and will arrive at New York about Christmas.

It is expected that after attending the opening of the canal many of the travelers will return direct.

A permanent memorial of the completion of the canal is proposed by the Southern Commercial Congress as an outgrowth of the convention in Mobile. Prizes of fifteen complimentary appointments as honor delegates and guests of the convention to the Panama Canal and the trip wth the Latin-American expedition are offered for the best suggestion for this memorial.

These prizes are offered to arouse study on the question and bring in suggestions of a proper form for a permanent memorial. The selection of the form is left to an official jury, comprising Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, chairman, and Hon. John Barrett, Director General of the Pan-American Union.

Asa G. Candler and Harvie Jordan, of Atlanta, are directors of the congress, which includes some of the most prominent men south of the Mason and Dixon line.

If a Jinx Seems Following You---Remember It's Friday 13, 1913 Can't Happen Again in 100 Years

Mr. Business Man Wakes Up and Finds Everything Has Gone Wrong on Hoodoo Day.

Mr. Peach, of Peachtree, got up this morning, stepped on a tack, found two holes in his new silk socks, lost his collar button down the hot-air radiator, bumped his head on the chiffonier when he stooped to look for the button and came down to breakfast with a grouch.

"The cook has quit and the gas stove's out of fix and the milkman left a quart of milk too sour for your cereal," announced Mrs. Peach, pleasantly, or nearly so. "And there's a hat sale on at the Emporium and I need $38.49 for that, and the sleeping porch must be rescreened, and I've found my last year's matinee gown positively won't do another season.

"And the chauffeur says you can't drive in this morning, for the car has broken its galliwampus and needs a new set of gears, three tires, a coat of paint and a cylinder made over.

"Well, John, I'm sorry the bacon isn't edible, but you must remember you didn't marry a cook. That's right, run off without kissing me!"

Mr. Peach missed the trolley, had to wait for the next one, and struck a crowd. A fat man stepped on his pet corn, the conductor jabbed him in the ribs and urged him to move inside, and a baby smeared molasses candy over his summer suit.

He stubbed his toe stepping into the elevator; broke his new straw kelly trying to be polite when a woman got in; was carried three floors past his own, and then found he had left his office keys in his other clothes. He dropped to the basement, climbed to the roof and finally found the janitor with a master key Mr. Peach was firmly convinced something had hoodooed him. At last he opened his desk. Three things stared him in the face. A summons for jury duty, a notice of overdraft at his bank, and his calendar pad. And on the latter was inscribed:

Health Restored by Eckman's Alterative

If you are a sufferer from Glandular Tuberculosis, or know of anyone so afflicted, it might be well to investigate this case, where the writer declares after a year of suffering, he found permanent relief and full recovery to health by using Eckman's Alterative, a medicine which has been effective in many cases of Tuberculosis:

257 Larnston St., Phila., Pa.

"Gentlemen: In March, 1909, my doctor pronounced my case 'Tuberculosis in the Glands,' and a number of operations in a hospital failed to benefit me. In the meantime, a friend of mine advised Eckman's Alterative. The wounds in my neck were still open and in a frightful condition when I started to take it. After using two bottles I found I was improving, having gained weight, could eat and was able to sleep. I continued using it until, I was well, which was in November, 1910. Before I took the medicine I had three hemorrhages; since I have been taking it I have not had any. On November 11, 1910, I started to work, and since that time I have not lost one day's work through sickness. I highly recommend Eckman's Alterative to anyone who is suffering from Gland trouble."

(Affidavit) JOSEPH B. WHITE.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Churchill Center of New British Scandal

LONDON, June 13.—Another political scandal of the Marconi type is due if Winston Churchill fails to unload a large number of shares now in his possession. A short time ago, it is asserted, he gave two continental oil firms huge contracts to supply oil fuel for national use.

He followed this, it is declared, by purchasing 2,500 shares in each company and profited heavily.

PLAN CORN PRIZES FOR POOR FIELDS

Boys Forced to Plant Grain in Unfertile Land to Get Recognition in Show.

A new series of prizes, planned for the benefit of boys who are compelled to plant grain in unfertile land, will be offered at the annual corn show under the auspices of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The show again will be held in the corridors of the State Capitol.

While the new awards will not affect the regular prizes, they are designed to lift the "poor land handicap" under which many have been laboring.

The new prizes are offered for the greatest proportionate increase an acre, and are expected to serve the purposes of increasing the interest in the show, and in inducing the boys to cultivate their land and make it better. Many boys last year planted in bad land and showed splendid increases in the volume of grain. They were not given prizes because their best efforts were not equal to the normal yield of the richer lands.

The show committee of the Chamber of Commerce has begun its work and will hold meetings at intervals through the summer. It is planned to make the next show the best in the history of the State.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—The Senate convened to-day under cooling breezes from four huge fans hung from the ceiling. As a rule installation of fans is postponed until heated oratory and the thermometers vie in a sweltering race that drives Senators to use palm leaf fans and handkerchiefs.

But Superintendent Woods, of the Capitol, hearing predictions of "the hottest tariff fight yet," put his electricians to work early.

U. S. POLO PLAYERS STILL 2-TO-1 BET

Little English Money Is in Sight Despite American Team's Best Player Is Disabled.

NEW YORK, June 13.—The American and British polo teams to-day went through a light practice in final preparation for their second battle, which will be staged to-morrow on the Meadowbrook, N. Y., grounds.

The Americans, despite the fact that J. Monte Waterbury, star of Tuesday's game, will be unable to play, are 2 to 1 betting favorites. There is little English money in sight.

Louis E. Stoddard, who will replace Monte Waterbury, is a player of exceptional ability, and it is felt by the American polo enthusiasts that he will be a fit substitute. Stoddard will play No. 1; Larry Waterbury, No. 2; Harry Payne Whitney, No. 3, and Devereaux Milburn, back.

The line-up of the Britons will be the same as Tuesday, although there has been some rumors that F. M. Freake would play at No. 2 in place of Captain Edwards.

Practically every reserved ticket for the game to-morrow has been sold. Speculators are said to have secured a big bunch of choice seats and are demanding—and getting—fancy prices for them.

Only Two Decatur Children Failed To Attend School

Decatur probably is the only town on the Georgia map that really does not need a compulsory education law, as proposed by Representative Fullbright, of Burke County, for there are only two children between the ages of 6 and 14 that have not attended school during the past 12 months, an investigation just completed shows.

And this is not all—Decatur hasn't a single illiterate white child and she has a hundred more school children than any other Georgia town of equal size. A building permit for a new school building, costing $22,000, has been issued, also.

These and other things, indicative of Decatur's progressiveness, including statement of Decatur's building record increase of 35 per cent over last year, are being scattered broadcast by the Decatur Board of Trade, which is one of the livest organizations of its kind in the State.

Woodward Wants Old Glory to Float From Public Buildings on 136th Anniversary.

In addition to an autograph copy of the proclamation, every manager, superintendent or custodian of public buildings to-day received telephone messages apprising him of the Mayor's wish.

Following is the Mayor's Flag Day proclamation:

"Tomorrow, June 14, 1913, being the one hundred and thirty-sixth anniversary of the adoption of the stars and stripes as the flag of this country, it is but meet and proper that every patriotic and liberty-loving citizen of this country should do that flag honor.

"It therefore is ordered that the flag be hoisted on all public buildings of this city, and it also is requested that all citizens owning buildings or controlling same, with flagpoles upon such building, are requested to display the national colors."

Lloyd-George and Isaacs Exonerated in Wireless Scandal. Another Report Probable.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, June 13.—Members of the British ministry, accused of irregular connections with the British Marconi Company during negotiations for a Government contract with that enterprise, were exonerated to-day in the report of the parliamentary committee which for about six months has been investigating the accusations.

The members involved were Chancellor of the Exchequer David Lloyd George and Attorney General Sir Rufus Isaacs. Both admitted having bought shares of the American Marconi Company for investment, but denied dabbling in stocks of the British Marconi Company at a time when they had "inside information."

Indirect accusations were brought against First Lord of the Admiralty Winston-Churchill and by innuendo other members of the Cabinet were impugned. Another report likely will be issued later.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS reading a piece in the paper," said the Head Barber, "about a rich young girl that had a Vassar education, and that married a man who couldn't read nor write. She taught him so much in five years that he became the president of a bank the other day and is the leading citizen of his town."

"He must have been a awful bright man or else she was some teacher," declared the Manicure Lady. "I have heard of cases like that, but I never seen one. It always sounds kind of fishy to me, because even after a man has went to school a few years he finds out that there is plenty he can learn from his wife. Anyhow, I'd hate to marry a man that didn't have no schooling at all. Of course I would be willing to learn him what I was learned at school, like arithmetic and grammar and history, but I should think it would be a kind of a nuisance to be a wife and school teacher at the same time."

"It ain't a man's fault if he never had no opportunities," said the Head Barber. "I know a lot of bright men that never went to no school or college."

Not So Sure.

"I know," said the Manicure Lady, "but I don't like to think that after waiting all these years I might have to marry a illiterate man. Of course, if he was handsome and accomplished and rich I wouldn't expect him to know all about Greek and Latin, because I ain't sure myself just when Oliver Goldsmith made so much trouble for King Charles of England, or when Cromwell crossed the Alps to fight the Romans under Lord Napoleon. I don't think any girl ought to expect her husband to know and remember all about them old classics, especially if he is busy getting the money to keep up a apartment in Atlanta or Chattanooga. All I want my husband to know is to be able to talk intelligent in a cultivated crowd, and not set around murdering no queen's English. And I think a husband ought to have some kind of accomplishment like playing the piano or making a good after dinner speech or knowing pinochle good enough to hold his own with the Germans. I wouldn't like to marry a man that never did nothing but grub out a living."

"The wife has got all the accomplishments in our family," said the Head Barber. "I never had much chance when I was a kid to do anything except get up when the alarm clock rang in the morning, so I didn't get into music or golf or any of them fine arts. All the fun I get is a day off once in a while to go to the ball game, and I guess the wife must think I'm a kind of ordniary guy alongside some of the friends I invite to the house. She is musical and a good pianist, and some of the fellows I know can spiel a lot themselves, so I just sit back and let them shine."

Some Compliments.

"I'll bet you are a dear, good husband, just the same," said the Manicure Lady. "You don't need no accomplishments, George, to stand a lot higher with me than some of the actors and boy comics that comes in here to have their nails did. I never liked the way you keep doping out them race horses, and I smelt something like a highball when you blew in the other morning, but there's a lot more good in you than most men, George, and that's no salve, either. I don't think I'm a very poor picker, George, but if you was single I'd say ya mighty swift when you proposed."

"If I was married to anybody else except the missus," said the Head Barber, "I'd wish I was single. You are going to make some lucky guy a swell wife. Gee, we're getting along great this morning, ain't we?"

See Them, Too.

Club Woman—If you come to our meeting you'll hear some plain things.

Male Thing—Oh! And see them, no doubt.

A Conundrum.

"Look here," said the landlord; "why don't you pay your rent?"

"I give it up," replied Slowpay.

"But you don't," insisted the landlord; "that's what I'm kicking about."

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Cain, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly. In the meeting each learns of the other's love. Kelly is sought everywhere by the press.

Now go on with the story.

"You may not realize it, Miss Deery, but you have just told me a very important piece of news. It will create a big sensation all over the country. My paper was crazy about it. They're getting out an extra on it."

"Don't forget our bargain," said Mildred, with a smile.

"Absolutely no," declared Farnsworth with fervor. He was pretty well pleased with himself. He had unearthed, through his own efforts and without aid, the biggest piece of news of his career. He had visions of a substantial cash present and a raise in salary from his boss. This pleasing thought reminded him that he hadn't smoked a cigarette in 20 minutes. He asked and received permission to smoke.

"This is pretty soft," he said to himself as he threw away the match. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia, having a cracking big piece of information handed to me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it? I guess this isn't my lucky day."

But business is business, and Farnsworth proceeded to it after three or four puffs of his cigarette.

"Now, Miss Deery," he said, "please tell me the rest of the story."

"Gordon Kelly has lived in this neighborhood all his life," began Mildred. "After he left the hospital he came up here. I met him one day while I was fishing in the brook. I hadn't the faintest idea that he was within a hundred miles of here. I didn't even know at the time that his home was near here. My father built this bungalow recently and I think my parents wanted me to come here on account of what the papers said about me, or, rather, to escape the embarrassment I had brought on myself. At any rate I came up and found everything so delightful and so cool and nice that I have stayed here ever since."

Then Disappeared.

"Well, anyway," she continued after a pause, "you want to know about Mr. Kelly. As I said, I was very much surprised when I saw him here. I think it was the last part of May. I saw him quite often for several weeks. My mother came up again—she is here now—and there was a little boy here, the son of my father's superintendent, and we all used to go fishing and tramping around. Mr. Kelly was good company and he knew every inch of the mountain country.

"One afternoon, late in July, Mr. Kelly started off on a walk along the brook that runs near where he lives—I get this from the people at his home—and about half an hour after he started out a cyclone swept along the edge of that brook and from that day to this Mr. Kelly hasn't been seen."

"Was he killed?" asked Farnsworth.

"A good many people around here think so, but I don't. Something tells me he is alive and well and will turn and it is sure that he didn't perish in the storm. That's all I know about the appearance and disappearance of Mr. Kelly, Mr. Farnsworth," said Mildred in conclusion.

The young man arose from his chair and went to the telephone again. He was gone fifteen minutes.

"I want to thank you for all this information, Miss Deery," he said. "But I want to warn you that there will probably be a score of reporters up here to-morrow. I would advise you to keep under cover—return to Atlanta, maybe; otherwise, you will be annoyed a whole lot. While I have kept my promise and will continue to keep it as regards using your name, the other reporters will find out that you live near here and you will have an unpleasant time of it."

"I think that is good advice; I shall speak to my mother about it," replied Mildred.

Useless to Remain.

"I don't believe it would do any good for me to stay up here any longer. I suppose the people around here have searched for Gordon Kelly in every conceivable place?"

"They have, Mr. Farnsworth. It would be useless for you to remain, expecting any news of Mr. Kelly."

"Then I will thank you again and start for the celebrated summer resort, known as Pew Creek."

Mildred laughed as he arose to go.

"You can not get a train before 2:18. Why don't you send that Cracker back by himself and take lunch with us? I will drive you to the station in an automobile."

Clever Mildred Deery. She was so nice to the young man that he would be sure to keep his promise to her.

"Miss Deery," returned the young man, "you are not only very kind, but you are a mind reader. I accept with pleasure. If you could only have seen the meal that Jehu prepared for me this morning!"

Farnsworth settled with Case from a big roll of office money. His bill was $1.25, made up of the following items: Supper, 25 cents; breakfast, 25 cents; lodging, 25 cents; hire of horse and carriage and services of driver, half a day, 50 cents.

"I should worry," remarked the young man to himself, as Gabe Case drove away.

"This is pretty soft," said Farnsworth to himself. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia having a cracking big piece of information handed me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it?"

CHAPTER XXVII.

IT is necessary to go back and pick up the loose threads of this narrative.

When the crisis in the illness of Forrest Cain's sister had passed and she was on the road to recovery, Cain wrote Mildred that he was coming to the mountains again, and two days later he appeared where Mildred was, claiming his automobile and also claiming the fulfillment of the promise she had made him to go riding with him alone. Her mind was already prepared for this demand, so after she had learned all about his sister's condition, she expressed her sympathy and told him she would go with him that afternoon if he cared to have her.

Mildred had warned Elmer Shephard not to say anything to anyone about their meeting Gordon Kelly and she was glad she did so, as the boy appeared just as Cain was leaving. After Cain had gone the lad joined her on the porch, his face clouded.

"I don't like Mr. Cain," he declared, petulantly. "What does he want to keep coming up here for?"

"Why, Elmer," said Mildred, reprovingly, "you shouldn't talk that way. He has always acted like a gentleman, hasn't he?"

"I don't care; I don't like him just the same. Gordon Kelly is the kind of man I like. He can do something. All Mr. Cain can do is to drive an automobile and dress in fancy clothes and hang around. I heard him say he would come again at 3 o'clock this afternoon. I wish he would stay away."

Thoughts Were Busy.

Mildred made no answer. Her thoughts were busy. Elmer had said just what was in her own mind, if he only had known it. The lad's quick perception had seen through the shallow, selfish visitor. After a while she said:

"Elmer, I have promised to go out riding with Mr. Cain this afternoon in his automobile. After I'm gone, if you care to do so, you may take the runabout and drive up to the bridge and stay around there a while. I will probably see you on my way back home. That isn't very exciting, I know, but I would like to have you do it if you don't mind."

Days ago she had taught the lad how to run the car and he was now quite an expert. The request she had just made of him was the result of a vague something in her mind. It had to do with Forrest Cain and the engagement she had made with him. She almost regretted making it, yet she knew what he had to say would have to be said, so she braved herself to go through the ordeal.

In the meantime Forrest Cain was speeding toward his shack in his car. He passed the point where the road crosses the bridge and about three miles farther came to the place where a road led off to the left through the large granite posts. Every time he had passed this point Cain had observed the granite posts. He knew they must be on what was supposed to be Gordon Kelly's property. Evidently, therefore, the road led to the habitation where Kelly lived before he went to Atlanta and broke his leg. Since his personal encounter with Gordon Kelly, Cain had often thought of him in connection with his mountain home, recalling what Deery had told him about the young man's father killing himself by jumping off a mountain while crazed with liquor. The weirdness of this act had created a profound impression on Cain.

The Granite Posts.

Approaching the granite posts on this particular morning, the incident of the strange death suddenly flashed across the mind of Cain. He brought his car to a stop and gazed curiously at the pillars, which seemed to stand as guardians of a mysterious realm. He then let his gaze wander to the road which passed through the posts and was soon lost to view, winding through a fine forest of hardwood trees. The road itself was hard, firm and well made and had a top dressing of granite, ground fine, the same kind of stone the pillars were made of. Within the open gate, even the woods and the ground underneath seemed to be the recipients of care. The trees were trimmed and there were no dead branches lying on the ground. The idea created in Cain's mind was that it was the entrance to some millionaire's vast mountain estate. On Deery's maps the property was marked "Prescott Trust Company." What had Gordon Kelly to do with it all? he wondered. Where did this ball player fit in?

Overcome with curiosity, Cain started his car and turned in the road that led through the granite posts. He would investigate, he said to himself. What better chance would he have, with Gordon Kelly on his way north to join his ball club?

Cain was not a slow driver. He threw his car into high speed and raced up the winding road. The road was as smooth as a billiard table and the crunch of gravel under his tires was music to Cain's ears. He had covered more than half a mile of the driveway and there was still no sign of a habitation, when he suddenly heard the sound of a horn, followed by a sharp cry. He looked up quickly to see an automobile coming down upon him. It looked like a sure collision, but Cain gave the emergency brake a jerk and turned sharply to the right just in time to avoid a smashup. The occupant of the other car had acted in the same manner and, after missing each other by a hair, the two machines came to a stop not ten feet apart.

As soon as he had convinced himself that there had been no mishap, Cain, without even looking back to see who was in the other automobile, proceeded to put his car in motion, but before he could do so he was halted by the sharp command: "Stop!"

It was Gordon Kelly in the other machine. As soon as his car stopped he glanced back and read the number of the other machine. It was "50,000 Ga." Like a flash he recalled that this same car nearly ran over him in front of the Atlanta ball grounds. He jumped to the ground and reached the side of Cain's automobile just as the latter was about to start it. The two men faced each other, and Gordon could see the look of surprise that flashed over the face of the other.

"You seem bound to kill me with that car, one way or the other," observed Gordon. "You were headed toward my home. Did you wish to see me?"

Cain did not know what to say in reply. He did not want to acknowledge that curiosity had drawn him there and he knew he had no business on the driveway. Yet his arrogant nature refused to allow him to apologize, especially to Gordon Kelly. When he did reply he did so in a half-insolent tone.

"No, I have no wish to see you."

"Anyone here you desire to see?"

"No."

"What are you doing here?"

"Just rubbering around; that's all."

"You know these are private grounds?"

"I assumed they were." Cain had drawn a cigarette from his case. He now lighted it.

Gordon paused a moment before he spoke again. Then he said:

"Your tone is insolent. You are entitled to no consideration from me. Get off the grounds!"

"Suppose I refuse?" sneered Cain.

"I'll answer that question in just one minute, if you force me to, by kicking you through those stone pillars."

Cain Is Cowed.

The recollection of a previous experience with the toe of Gordon Kelly's shoe brought Cain to his senses. Without further words he turned his car and moved off down the winding driveway. Kelly, in his own machine, followed him. Passing through the granite posts, Cain turned north toward his own shack. Kelly, entering the main road, turned south.

Chagrin, mortification and anger had a three-cornered battle for supremacy in Cain's breast as he drove along the road. When he reached his mountain abode he did perhaps the worst thing he could have done, considering his engagement with Mildred Deery. He told his man George to fetch a bottle of whisky and some fresh water, and he sat at a table and drank and brooded and swore at George and swore vengeance on Kelly and swore at himself.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

PROPOSE AT ONCE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

For two years I have been calling on a young lady two years my junior. I love her dearly and I know my love is returned. Sometimes I feel as though my time is wastefully drifting by calling on her because she sometimes refuses to listen to me when I feel like proposing, and the next night she is all in a flutter awaiting me. I earn a good salary and feel that I can support a wife. With this view in mind I am almost on the verge of proposing. Then I lose all courage. Please advise me, as I am a total wreck.

N. D.

Put an end to your misery by proposing on one of those nights when she is all in a flutter. The longer you delay it the less courage you will have.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man and am quite infatuated with a young lady two years my senior. When I last called on her I said I wished the difference in our ages was just the opposite, but she said that two years count for nothing when one is in love. Am I right in keeping up our love? J. W. F.

Two years count for nothing when one loves. The girl is right.

But your question implies that you have doubts. For this reason I am sure you don't really love her.

CERTAINLY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Will you please give your opinion to settle an argument on—if a tall girl can be called cute?

Someone fond of statistics has figured out that in Great Britain alone about 1,600,000,000 miles are covered annually by all sorts of vehicles, including motor cars. During the past year 759 persons were killed by vehicular traffic—that is to say, one person for every 2,132,333 miles. Motor vehicles to the number of 50,000 covered approximately 300,000,000 miles and killed 200 people, or one person for every 1,500,000 miles.

The engagement of Duke Karl of Croy to Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the American Ambassador to Berlin, recalls a curious law of that noble house. Should the head of the family or his heir desire to marry outside his own rank, he must previously obtain the unanimous consent of all the males bearing the name of Croy who are of age; otherwise his children can not succeed either to the title or estate.

Cullman, Ala., claims to be the most prosperous township in the world. It is said that every man in the town who is the head of a family has a clear title deed of ownership to his home, and every one of them has a banking account. Co-operative farming is practiced in the county.

The discovery of oil in Papau, British New Guinea, was the result of a native boy being whipped for placing kerosene in a miner's tea. The youth declared his innocence and led the miner to the well from which the water had been taken. It was found that the surface of the water was completely covered with oil, the source of which is being developed into a huge commercial enterprise.

The Parent and the Undutiful Child

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

WE bestow a great deal of pity upon the parent of an undutiful child, but how often do we stop to consider who is to blame for the state of affairs?

"Poor Mrs. Smith!" a woman sighed. "I am very sorry for her! She is one of the sweetest and gentlest of women, and her son is all she has in the world. Yet he speaks to her roughly, and has a royal disregard for all her wishes. He pays her poorly for all her care of him."

Had the partisan of the abused parent been of an analytical turn of mind she might have changed her sympathy to criticism of the mother herself. We hear—and say—much of the responsibility of children, of the duty of the parents to train the child properly, but, when parents neglect to do this, we condemn the grown son or daughter rather than the person who trained him or her. One overindulgent mother of sons—all of whom are up-to-date examples of ingratitude and selfishness—says, with tears in her eyes, "I never considered my own comfort compared with that of my boys, and I always set aside my own wishes to make them happy."

The result has been just what might have been expected.

A young child, when left to his own devices, is little better than a small savage. He has the selfish and brutal impulses of the primitive human. It rests with the parents to curb his natural desires and passions, and to guide and direct these so that they may become the strength of the child instead of his weakness. If they neglect this duty, and the boy develops into a man of ungovernable passions and of evil life, the father and mother are pitied and the son condemned.

I acknowledge that there are cases in which parents have done their best and children have gone astray. But, unless there has been a very evil strain of blood back of the child, or his associates have, in spite of the parental care, been a very bad lot, one seldom sees a properly trained lad go completely wrong.

I was moved to amusement, yet strongly impressed by a conversation that I heard between a mother and her sixteen-year-old daughter. The mother was reproving the child for disobedience.

"The trouble with you, Mary," said the parent, "is that you were not punished enough when you were a child."

The girl's eyes flashed with temper.

"Well, if not, who was to blame for it?" was the impertinent retort. "Surely you need not lay that omission to my account!"

Impertinent? Yes. Unkind and rude? Undoubtedly. Yet the insolent speech contained a poignant truth. And the mother recognized this fact too late.

"When did you train your boy to obey you so promptly?" asked one mother of another. "My son is just the age of yours, and I can not make him obey. When did you start the implicit obedience plan?"

"As soon as he was born," was the grave reply. "He has never been allowed to feel that he can disobey."

I know there are parents who will declare that such obedience is slavery. It is not—if properly obtained. The mother has lived to little purpose if she does not know better what is good for the tiny child than he does. Gentleness and firmness will win the day sooner and more surely than threats and temper.

Some people take it for granted that, because a mother has endured anguish to bring a human being into the world, that being will intuitively accord her loyalty and love through his entire life. One might as well say that because a seed is planted in the ground it will sprout, flourish and bear fruit without further care.

The mother who suppresses her own individuality, who ignores her own rights for the sake of the temporary happiness of her child, is not the mother who is most loved in childhood, or who is, in later years, most honored and respected. It is just that she is not thus regarded, for she has not been a good mother in the deepest sense of the word. It takes far more resolution and strength of character to deny a harmful thing to one we love than it does to yield to him and comply with all his desires.

"He is the best son a woman ever had!" I heard an elderly mother say in the presence of her first-born—a prosperous lawyer and exemplary citizen.

I respected her and her stalwart offspring the more when he said, with a tender smile:

"I wish I deserved that praise—but if I did you would have yourself to thank for it!"

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

MAY 20.—It is possible, I have learned recently, for a man to have as warm red blood in his veins at fifty as he had when he was twenty-five.

My conclusion from this decision is that no man is old enough to be trusted alone with a woman not his mother, his sister, his grandmother or his aunt.

May 23—I regret that I am not a learned man. If I were I would know, without the embarrassment of making the inquiry, who it was who said that "Kissing is the beginning of sinning."

May 26—If I knew who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" I might spend a few of my surplus millions in erecting a monument to his memory.

It would be a strange monument. It would not be beautiful, but I am sure its effect on the minds of beholders would be forceful. I would have carved on its marble sides pictured stories of what one little kiss has led to: Disgrace, dishonor, abandoned women, reckless men, broken hearts and the breaking up of homes.

Its Danger.

I would have engraved on tablets set in every corner so that one might read, no matter from what direction he came, the real truth about the kiss. So sweet, so innocent, so pure in poem and prose. I would have scholars better versed in expression than I ever hope to be, tell what is in real life when a man's blood runs warm in his veins.

And I would blame all the sin that has such an apparently innocent beginning on the ignorance of woman! Or, perhaps, I would grow so bold as to blame some of it on her cupidity, her duplicity and her UNDERSTANDING OF MEN.

She gives the first kiss in ignorance sometimes, but just as often Diary (and I would have that engraved on the monument, though it would result in women smashing it overnight) she gives it in full realization of its power and effect!

She uses the highest expression of love as a means of appealing to the lowest!

I can't quite decide if I would have a broken-hearted girl as a crowning figure or a man bound and shackled with the chains of matrimony. Either figure could be made appealing by a sculptor who understands human nature.

Perhaps the bowed and bent figure of a man with the chains of matrimony wound around his limbs would be the more modern version of what a kiss has done for mankind. So many girls these days use kisses to cry their wares when they go to market, and suffer no appreciable damage, that the broken-hearted girl, as a crowning figure, would not give expression to the changed sentiment of the times.

May 28—The man who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" interests me. I wonder if he was an old bachelor like myself and had a good friend whom he loved as he would a favorite sister. I wonder if this friend ever came to him with her troubles because of a neglectful husband, and if he tried, in honest, brotherly fashion, to soothe her.

I wonder if one day she suddenly kissed him, and I wonder if that kiss seemed in comparison to all others life had ever offered him, the one supreme kiss.

I wonder what he did next. I wonder how he found that "Kissing Is the Beginning of Sinning."

Did his sin consist only in thinking about another man's wife much too often?

Not Platonic.

Did he accept it as the kiss a sister would give a brother? But no, he couldn't have done that. All the sisters since the world began never put into all the kisses they have given their brothers the one little vital spark Sally Spencer put in that kiss she gave me!

Brother and sister, bah! What's the good of self-deception? We were never brother and sister, and the kiss revealed we were not. Maybe once we were Platonic friends, and that we can never be again!

When a man and woman do wrong, it is the customary thing, the gallant thing, and exceedingly proper, to blame it on the man.

Diary, I have kept nothing from you. I was sitting with Manette in my arms, and thinking only of Sally's trouble that day in the nursery. I had no thought of myself, but when a man says he has no thought of himself no one on earth believes him, so perhaps that statement is discredited even by your parchment ears.

There was nothing in our conversation that should have led up to such a climax; there has never been in all the conversations I have had with her.

A Special Apparatus.

She kissed Me, Diary, I did not kiss HER! How could I with Manette asleep in my arms? I could neither force a woman to kiss me under such conditions, nor could I resist when she forced me. Of course I could have screamed for help. I can see in that particular that I showed weakness and indecision of character, unfitting a man.

But I couldn't scream before she kissed me, not realizing the awful designs she had on me. And I couldn't scream when her lips were pressed against mine!

If you doubt the absolute inability to scream at such a psychological moment, ask any physician. He will tell you no man can scream when his wind is cut off. Then, again, I am sure, though surgeons have never discovered it, that when the Lord made woman He put in her a special screaming apparatus He left out of man.

Had I kissed Sally Spencer against her will as she kissed me, somewhere (either just before the bestowal of the kiss, while it was being adjusted in position, or afterward) she would have found opportunity and breath for a scream.

That is, of course, if she had wanted to scream. My experience with the women is that they don't scream. It is only in the books that they cry for help.

Neither would it have done any good had I screamed after she kissed me, for what's the use of crying over spilled milk? I have been told all my life that there is absolutely no use.

So, as I said, we must follow tradition and blame all that may happen since that kiss on the man. I may have been physically powerless to resist, but that makes no difference. I am the man, and therefore the guilty one.

All the tragedy that may arise from that kiss is to be blamed on me. That I know, and being a man and proud of my strength, I am telling myself every morning that I will not run from temptation. I will just hang around and take a look at it!

All of which I have told you, Diary, to explain why I am looking at Sally Spencer these days with different eyes, and am not so much concerned as I was over the prospect that the widow may run off with her husband.

Up-to-Date Jokes

"What," said the visitor to the village of his childhood, "what's become of the one boy I hated—Willie Hawker, the sneak? In prison, no doubt—he bore that fate on his face."

"Hush!" said the villager. "He is now Mr. Hawker, the famous millionaire."

"What?" cried the visitor, "my dear schoolfellow a millionaire! I must call upon him and revive the old friendship."

Mr. Litchfield, the art dealer, when exhibiting some panels of tapestry, telegraphed for the return of one thus: "Send panel eight by ten, Venus and Adonis. Litchfield."

A puzzled clerk sent on the message to the city of Litchefield, and received the reply: "No such firm as Venus and Adonis known here. Try Manchester."

"You have called regarding the situation of footman?"

"Yes, my lud."

"Was there not some one in the ante-room as you came in?"

"There was, my lud. It was a man with a writ for your ludship, but I threw 'im hout."

"You are engaged."

A young Englishman on a visit to one of the Irish local gentry once remarked on the number of donkeys in use among the peasantry, and, turning to the priest who was present, inquired, with a certain insolence of manner, whether it was true that "the natives" kept them in their own homes.

"Yes," replied the padre, gravely, "they do. The English, I perceive, send them abroad."

"They say that Tennyson frequently worked a whole afternoon on a single line."

"That's nothing. I know a man who has been working the last six years on one sentence."

Superfluous Hair Truths

Stop Experimenting

If you use a simple toilet preparation and it proves to be worthless, you only lose money. When you use a questionable depilatory, however, it is a very serious matter because you not only lose money, but you take the grave risk of permanent disfigurement.

If You Value Your Face

use De Miracle, the one safe, perfected hair remover of proven merit. Remember, the injury caused by the use of doubtful hair removers will either result in permanent disfigurement or cost you many dollars because it will take months or possibly years to gain control of hair growths which have been stimulated by the use of such preparations.

De Miracle

Only Real Hair Remover on Earth

De Miracle contains certain ingredients which give it the power to rob hair of its vitality. Therefore, you must eventually use it to retard and gain control of growths which have been caused by the unwise use of questionable depilatories. Is it not safer and wiser to begin using De Miracle now, before the growth gets beyond control?

Leaves No Tell-Tale Smell

If you use De Miracle it will be impossible for any curious person to know that you have used a hair remover because De Miracle evaporates immediately after accomplishing its work, therefore leaves no odor whatever. On the other hand, if you use any depilatory with a distinctive odor, an offensive tell-tale smell will cling to your skin for hours. If your dealer will not supply you with De Miracle, send $1.00 direct.

FASHIONABLE HATS MILADY IS WEARING THIS SUMMER

STRAW AND FLOWERS. A SMART MODEL

A circular-shaped straw with a ruche and a bow of white moire ribbon. Surrounding ribbon is a wreath of daintily colored flowers.

This is most effective for a small hat. The crown is of folded silk encircled with a band of moire ribbon and at the back is a mass of Paradise plumes.

PLUMES AND STRAW. A LEWIS MODEL. FOR COUNTRY WEAR.

The center cut shows a Lewis model of dust-colored straw which is most artistic. A wreath of variegated flowers encircles the small crown and gives it a very natty appearance. On the left is another black hat of the oblong shape. On each side of the brim is a plume of paradise feathers and at the front is a smartly tied ribbon bow. The hat at the right is the latest model for country wear or for morning in town. It is very plain, the sole trimming being a bow of embroidered ribbon.

The Girl With a Married Sweetheart

By DOROTHY DIX

Tears and Sorrow Is the Price She Is Bound to Pay

A YOUNG girl writes me that she is very much in love with a married man, who tells her that he is devoted to her, but that he does not intend to divorce his wife in order to marry her. She says that she has lost all interest in her young companions, and is very unhappy and she doesn't know what to do, and that she will take my advice as to whether to give her married sweetheart up or not.

I am afraid that it is too good to be true that this poor, silly child will be guided by my counsel in this matter, but in case it should be possible that any word of mine could influence her or any other girl in such a dilemma, I urge her with all the earnestness that I can possibly command to break with the man before another hour rolls over her head.

Time and again I have written on this subject, trying to make girls realize not only how wrong, but how foolish they were to waste their youth, their sweetness, their chance in life in love affairs with married men. Again and again have I pointed out to them what a sorry bargain it is when a girl gives all and gets nothing in return.

I ask this girl who writes me to sit down and to calmly figure out her case. On one side of the page let her write down Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children. These are things that she forfeits if she continues her affair with the married man.

A Bad Companion.

She may not think much of Morality, but a gnawing Conscience is a bad companion to have with you night and day, and what about Self Respect, and the Respect of One's Circle of Acquaintance, and the black mortification of knowing that one has brought dishonor on one's name?

Do you believe that the love of any man on earth ever pays a girl for knowing that her family is ashamed of her, or that any dagger could pierce a soul with such an agony as seeing other women draw their skirts away from her? And do you think that any worthy young man, the sort of a young man you would like to marry, would care to marry a girl whose name had been bandied about as the former sweetheart of some married man?

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children—these are pretty good things for a woman to have, little sister. You throw them over the windmill if you continue your love affair with a married man. What are you going to write on the other side of the ledger?

Scandal? Oh, yes, you are. Don't think you can keep it hidden and secret. Such things always come out. Don't think people won't talk about you. Gossip has a thousand tongues, and not one of them will spare you. The first time a girl goes out to dinner in a cafe with a married man, she leaves her good name behind her.

A guilty Conscience? Yes, no matter how you lie to yourself, you will always have that on your soul, that will wake you up in the night with a cold sweat on your forehead. You know that you are doing your best to rob a woman of her husband, and little children of their father. You are breaking up a home and slaying the happiness of another woman, and beside those crimes, burglary is a commendable pastime and murder a trifling misdemeanor.

Not Your Affair.

Perhaps the man is tired of his wife and untrue to her, anyway. That isn't your affair. You don't have to steal and kill because there are degenerates that do. Be sure of this, little girl—no woman ever built any secure happiness on another woman's misery.

Then write down Waiting. Years and years of hopeless, aimless waiting for a man who has no right to love you, a man whom you have no right to love, one who can give you only stolen minutes of his society, who can not be seen with you, or visit you without shame to you both. Anything attractive in that prospect, little sister?

Then write Fear. Fear of desertion. The hideous fear that gnaws at the heart of the woman who has given everything to a man and has no way by which she can bind him to her side. The wife has the bond that the law and society has forged, that holds her husband to her. He can not break this tie with impunity, but between the married man and his unmarried love there is nothing but his fickle fancy.

No other woman knows such torturing jealousy, no other woman knows such deadly fear as this woman who realizes that nothing but her beauty and her youth and her charm holds her married sweetheart, and that some day these must go, and that then he will turn to a fresher and fairer face.

WITHIN THE LAW.

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, an orphan, employed in Edward Gilder's department store, is unjustly accused of theft and sent to prison. She is hounded by the police on her release, and finally goes to live with Joe Garson, a forger, and Aggie Lynch, a blackmailer, both of whom treat her with respect. Mary resolves to keep "within the law." She becomes the leader of a band of swindlers. Gilder's son, Dick, falls in love with her, and she marries him to be revenged on his father—and then finds that she is in love with him. Dick refuses to give her up, a demand made by his father, Mary disappears. Police Inspector Burke in an effort to aid the elder Gilder schemes to secure the arrest of Mary through "English Eddie" Griggs, a police informer. Garson plans to rob the Gilder home on a tip from Griggs. Mary hears of it and tries to prevent it, going to the Gilder home. Mary pleads with Garson to drop the robbery, and Dick enters. Garson kills Griggs when Mary corners the latter and he admits he is working for the police. Burke enters the house, a searchlight throwing its rays on the dead man's body. Mary and Dick are arrested, because Mary tells Burke that Dick shot Griggs in defense of his home.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Cringingly, Chicago Red, who so gloried in his strength, yet was now altogether humble in his precarious case, obeyed as far as the getting to his feet was concerned. * * * It never occurred to him even that he should carry his obedience to the point of "squealing on a pal!" Had the circumstances been different, he might have refused to accept the Inspector's blow with such meekness, since above all things he loved a bit of bodily strife, with some one near his own strength, and the Inspector was of a sort to offer him a battle worth while.

So, now, while he got slowly to his feet, he took care to keep at a respectful distance from the official, though his big hands fairly ached to double into fists for blows with this man who had so maltreated him.

"Send 'Em In."

His own self-respect, of its peculiar sort, was saved by the interference of Cassidy, who entered the Inspector's office to announce the arrival of the District Attorney.

"Send 'im in," Burke directed at once. He made a gesture toward the doorman, and added: "Take 'em back!"

A grin of evil humor wreathed the lips of the police official, and he added to the attentive doorman a word of direction that might well be interpreted by the malevolent expression on his face.

"Don't be rough with 'em, Dan," he said. For once his dominating voice was reduced to something approaching softness in his sardonic appreciation of his own humor in the conception of what these two men, who had ventured to resist his importunities, might receive at the hands of his faithful satellites. * * * The doorman grinned appreciatively, and herded his victims from the place. And the two went shamblingly in sure knowledge of the things that were in store. Yet, without thought of treachery. They would not "squeal!" All they would tell of the death of Eddie Griggs would be: "He got what was coming to him!"

The Inspector dropped into his swivel chair at the desk while he awaited the arrival of Demarest, the District Attorney. The greetings between the two were cordial when at last the public prosecutor made his appearance.

"I came as soon as I got your message," the District Attorney said, as he seated himself in a chair by the desk. "And I've sent word to Mr. Gilder. * * * Now, then, Burke, let's have this thing quickly."

The Inspector's explanation was concise:

Burke's Face Crimsoned.

"Joe Garson, Chicago Red and Dacey, along with Griggs, broke into Edward Gilder's house last night! I knew the trick was going to be pulled off, and so I planted Cassidy and a couple of other men just outside the room where the haul was to be made. Then I went away, and after something like half an hour I came back to make the arrests myself." A look of intense disgust spread itself over the Inspector's massive face. "Well," he concluded sheepishly, "when I broke into the room I found Gilder along with that Turner woman he married, and they were just talking together."

"No trace of the others?" Demarest questioned crisply.

At the inquiry, Burke's face crimsoned angrily, then again set in grim lines.

"I found Griggs lying on the floor—dead!" Once again the disgust showed in his expression. "The Turner woman says young Gilder shot Griggs because he broke into the house. Ain't that the limit?"

"What does the boy say?" the District Attorney demanded.

Burke shook his head dispiritedly.

"Nothing," he answered. "She told him not to talk, and so, of course, he won't, he's such a fool over her."

"And what does she say?" Demarest asked. He found himself rather amused by the exceeding chagrin of the Inspector over this affair.

Burke's voice grew savage as he snapped a reply.

He Admitted the Fact.

"Refuses to talk till she sees a lawyer." But a touch of cheerfulness appeared in his tones as he proceeded. "We've got Chicago Red and Dacey, and we'll have Garson before the day's over. And, oh, yes, they've picked up a young girl at the Turner woman's place. And we've got one real clew—for once!" The speaker's expression was suddenly triumphant. He opened a drawer of the desk, and took out Garson's pistol, to which the silencer was still attached.

"You never saw a gun like that before, eh?" he exclaimed.

Demarest admitted the fact after a curious examination.

"I'll bet you you never did!" Burke cried, with satisfaction. "That thing on the end is a Maxim silencer. There are thousands of them in use on rifles, but they've never been able to use them on revolvers before. This is a specially made gun," he went on admiringly, as he took it back and slipped it into a pocket of his coat. "That thing is absolutely noiseless. I've tried it. Well, you see, it'll be an easy thing—easiest thing in the world—to trace that silencer attachment. Cassidy's working on that end of the thing now."

For a few minutes longer the two men discussed the details of the crime, theorizing over the baffling event. Then, presently, Cassidy entered the office, and made report of his investigations concerning the pistol with the silencer attachment.

"I got the factory at Hartford on the wire," he explained, "and they gave me Mr. Maxim himself, the inventor of the silencer. He said this was surely a special gun, which was made for the use of Henry Sylvester, one of the professors at Yale. He wanted it for demonstration purposes. Mr. Maxim said the things have never been put on the market, and that they never will be."

"For humane reasons," Demarest commented, nodding approbation.

"Good thing, too!" Burke conceded. "They'd make murder too devilish easy, and it's easy enough now. * * * Well, Cassidy?"

"I got hold of this man Sylvester," Cassidy went on. "I had him on the phone, too. He says that his house was robbed about eight weeks ago, and among other things the silencer was stolen." Cassidy paused, and chuckled dryly. "He adds the startling information that the New Haven police have not been able to recover any of the stolen property. Them rube cops are immense!"

Demarest smiled slyly, as the detective, at a nod from his superior, went toward the door.

"No," he said, maliciously; "only the New York police recover stolen goods."

"Good night!" quoth Cassidy, turning at the door, in admission of his discomfiture over the thrust, while Burke himself grinned wryly in appreciation of the gibe.

Demarest grew grave again, as he put the question that was troubling him most.

"Is there any chance that young Gilder shot Griggs?"

"You can search me!" the Inspector answered, disconsolately. "My men were just outside the door of the room where Eddie Griggs was shot to death, and none of 'em heard a sound. It's that infernal silencer thing. Of course, I know that all the gang was in the house."

"But tell me just how you know that fact," Demarest objected very crisply. "Did you see them go in?"

"No, I didn't," the Inspector admitted, tartly. "But Griggs——"

Demarest permitted himself a sneer born of legal knowledge.

"Griggs is dead, Burke. You're up against it. You can't prove that Garson, or Chicago Red, or Dacey, ever entered that house."

The Inspector scowled over this positive statement.

"But Griggs said they were going to," he argued.

"I know," Demarest agreed, with an exasperating air of shrewdness, "but Griggs is dead. You see, Burke, you couldn't in a trial even repeat what he told you. It's not permissible evidence."

"Oh, the law!" the Inspector snorted, with much choler. "Well, then," he went on belligerently, "I'll charge young Gilder with murder, and call the Turner woman as a witness."

The District Attorney laughed aloud over this project.

Wife Cannot Testify.

"You can't question her on the witness stand," he explained patronizingly to the badgered police official. "The law doesn't allow you to make a wife testify against her husband. And, what's more, you can't arrest her, and then force her to go into the witness stand, either. No, Burke," he concluded emphatically, "your only chance of getting the murderer of Griggs is by a confession."

"Then, I'll charge them both with the murder," the Inspector growled vindictively. "And, by God, they'll both go to trial unless somebody comes through." He brought his huge fist down on the desk with violence, and his voice was forbidding. "If it's my last act on earth," he declared, "I'm going to get the man who shot Eddie Griggs."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Experience.

"My dear boy," said Enpeck, who happened to be in a confidential mood, "you will never know what real happiness is until you get married."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Singleton, astonished at such a remark from such an unexpected source.

"It's a fact," rejoined Enpeck, "but then it will be too late for you to appreciate it."

BRADY PITCHES TODAY; HOWELL MAY FACE HIM

By Joe Agler.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 13. "King" Brady will twirl today's game, with Dunn receiving his slants. Kid Elberfeld will probably use his new college pitcher, Howell, or maybe Sommers, his star southpaw.

The Crackers opened their series here with a winner. Grimes, the twirler who won eleven straight games in the Central Association, made his debut against us, and, as usual, we got to him in the fifth, after the fans thought the Lookouts had the contest sewed up. We kept on going after we once started and could not be stopped till we had five runs across the plate.

Joe Conzelman twirled the kind of ball that will win many a ball game. The runs scored against him were made on errors. He will save many a game on the right side of the ledger with the Crackers hitting behind him.

Joe Dunn caught a grand game, and his two-ply smash broke up the contest after yours truly singled with the bases full. Wallop Smith got another triple, hitting it far over Elston's head in right field, and scored on Bisland's fly.

Welchonce broke his favorite bat in the contest, but is not a bit superstitious and will be out to-day hitting just as hard as in previous games.

Coyle is out of the game with a bad wrist. He was hit by a ball in the Nashville series, which cripples the Kid's infield somewhat. Williams is not the hitter that Coyle is.

We should take at least two out of three of these contests. With "King" pitching as he can and with the Crackers hitting that ball as we should, we ought to take an easy game.

The Lookouts are drawing fairly well. The crowds are coming out to witness the games, and they certainly are loyal fans and good rooters.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Everything is in readiness for the big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. All the boxers have completed training and are on edge for the fray.

* * *

Sailor White and Jim Savage clash in the main bout; Mike Saul will take on Terry Nelson in the semi-final, while Spider Britt meets Meyer Pries in the opening set-to. All the scraps are scheduled to go ten rounds and the fans should see enough real milling to last them for months.

* * *

Tickets for the big show are going fast and a banner house should be present. Saul and his followers will be at the ringside to cheer the Hebrew on to a good start in his come-back effort.

* * *

Charlie White has grabbed two more matches. He has signed to box Harry Trendall, a St. Louis lightweight, in the latter city on June 18. After this affair Charlie is to take on Jack Britton in a 20-round engagement at New Orleans on July 4.

* * *

Frank Whitney writes from Cedar Rapids that he is anxious to pick up some bouts. His wife died recently and he says he must hustle and get some money. "I am ready to meet any of the lightweights," he writes. Whitney has a standing challenge to any 133-pounder in the world. A bout between Whitney and Charlie White should prove a hummer for any promoter.

* * *

Frankie Burns is working hard in Chicago for his ten-round battle with Johnny Coulon a week from Friday night at Kenosha, Wis. This will be the fourth scrap between the pair. They have agreed to make 116 pounds ringside.

* * *

Jimmy Britt and Jimmy Dunn are perhaps the greatest boosters for Bud Anderson, the coast sensation, who meets Leach Cross on July 4. Both claim that Bud is made of championship material and pick him to hand the dentist a neat lacing.

* * *

On the other hand, Jim Savage and K. O. Brown are strong boosters for Cross. Savage picks Leach to stop Anderson in twelve rounds and says K. O. Brown who recently met Anderson picks Leach to win sure. "Any boxer who will stand up and slug with Cross is sure to be stopped," says Savage, "and Anderson is rated on the coast as a boy who loves to slug.

* * *

Tommy Murphy will likely meet the winner of the Dundee-Jack White bout, which is billed to take place at Los Angeles on June 17. Tom McCarey, who is staging the go has offered Murphy the match.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion, is a firm believer in newspaper publicity. In order to attract attention Freddie announces his willingness to meet Willie Ritchie on a winner take all basis. And no one knows better than Freddie that this is impossible as long as Billy Nolan is Ritchie's manager.

* * *

Ad Wolgast's injury to his thumb may be of a permanent nature. Anyhow the ex-lightweight champion contemplates a trip to Honolulu. That's where some of the other so-called champs should migrate.

* * *

Can you beat this? Danny Morgan has bet $350 that Young Ahearn defeats Mike Gibbons when the two clash at New York to-night. Furthermore, Danny has borrowed the money. This news comes from Jim Savage, who is being managed by Daniel.

* * *

Jack McCarron and Young Jack O'Brien, the stars of Jack O'Brien's stable, are resting up after a somewhat strenuous season.

* * *

The French boxing authorities must be looking for easy game for their heavyweight champion, Georges Carpentier, when they offer Rodel, the Boer boxer, a bout with Carpentier.

Al Kubiak is the latest to challenge the winner of the Savage-White match at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Al writes that he is feeling better than ever in his life and is sure he can beat either of the big heavyweights.

COAST BATTLE WILL BE GREAT BETTING AFFAIR

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 13.—Not in years have the boxing fans been presented with a fighting card that has so completely torn them out on the Pacific Coast as this little affair between Willie Ritchie, lightweight, and Jose Rivers. The scrap is set for the Glorious Fourth and surely should be one royal battle. But at the same time it is such an open affair and such a hard one to dope out that it doubtless will prove one of the biggest betting affairs ever known on the coast or anywhere else.

* * *

BY way of making it an exceptionally good one the State of California, perhaps the strongest district in the Union for boxing, will be split exactly in twain over the battle. To begin with, Rivers will get almost the unanimous support of the southern part of the State, while San Francisco, unwavering in its support of its own, will go to the Ritchie end as if the whole thing were over right now. This will make one most exciting contest, and it is certain that the remainder of the country will follow suit and plunge on this encounter.

* * *

THE peculiar ending of the Wolgast match, in which both men were accused of fouling and the referee came in for a lot of censure, and the equally strange ending of the Ritchie-Wolgast battle, which was given to Ritchie on a foul, have always created puzzling questions for the fight fans to argue over. Many were led to believe from the Los Angeles reports that Rivers proved to be the master of Wolgast that afternoon and a good many others will always believe that Wolgast was robbed by that foul decision with Ritchie. Thus it goes with the eternal question of supremacy never fully or completely decided. Now we are to have Rivers booked up with the clever Ritchie in a long contest. Surely that should settle a whole lot of arguments.

* * *

TOMMY WALSH, who should know the coast situation as well as anybody, thinks Ritchie will have a rather strong shade over Rivers in the milling on the Fourth. Tommy returned to the city the other day on a scouting tour for Tom McCarey of Los Angeles. He wants to scare up some good fighting material in the lightweight division for a tournament that McCarey is thinking of staging during July and August. Tommy is of the opinion that superior speed and size will have much to do to encompass the downfall of the Los Angeles boy.

KOHLMAINEN SUSPENDED; EXPENSE ACCOUNT ASKED

NEW YORK, June 13.—Hannes Kohlmainen, the Finnish runner, has been suspended indefinitely by the Amateur Athletic Union for his failure to turn in an expense account for a recent set of games.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—The Giants must regain their batting stride if they are to repeat on the pennant. The club has not been hitting consistently all season. First one man bats well for two or three days and then another. But we do not appear to get going all together. The pitchers are doing better than they were. Both Marquard and Tesreau are in fine shape, and Demaree is fit to take his regular turn once more. I believe that the pitching staff and hard hitting that is bound to come will eventually push the Phillies out of the lead. My confidence still is in the Giants, of course. The hard work in the early spring will finally wear the edge off the Philly twirlers when the real hot weather sets in, and we should close up the gap, if it does not get too wide in the meantime. Marquard started off the season like a whirlwind a year ago, you will recall, and won nineteen straight games. But all the hard work in the early stages of the race wore him out for the midsummer toil, and he slumped badly for a month or so. I expect to see the same thing happen to the Philadelphia pitchers. The Quakers are bound to slump, but I do not know how far that slump will go. At least our chance to return home from this trip in first place is gone now.

* * *

THE Cubs do not look to me like any more of a pennant possibility now than they did when they were in New York on their first trip East. They are weak in the pitcher's box. The rest of the team is fine, but I cannot figure any club with the pitchers possessed by the Cubs as a pennant winner in the National League this year, when there are such staffs as the Philadelphia, Pittsburg and New York corps.

The Pirates have surprised me. Just when it looked as if they were going to slide into their true gait and begin climbing, they dropped the series to the Quakers. I cannot understand why that club does not get going consistently, because the material is certainly there, both in the field and the pitcher's box. I suppose Clarke's team will just about hit its stride against us this week.

* * *

THE rest of the clubs in the National League, with the possible exception of Brooklyn, are clearly out of the going. The Superbas have a very outside chance, but it does not look good with their pitchers moving as badly as they are at present. Brooklyn has not the robustness to withstand the rigors of a hard campaign, to my mind. The team is good for only a short spurt. It was some fancy pitching which put it up with the leaders for a time. I had figured Philadelphia to fade in the same way, but these boys seem to be trying to show me up by sticking. I still adhere to my notion that Pittsburg will begin to climb shortly, and the race will narrow down to a battle between the Pirates and Giants in September. Pittsburg has always been a better road club than when it is playing on the home grounds. Perhaps that may partially explain its present showing.

Joe Jackson, of the Naps, made a homer yesterday—the only score acquired by his team.

The Cubs jumped on Nap Rucker, the star portside flinger for the Dodgers, yesterday, pounded out thirteen hits and scored six runs, which was more than sufficient to defeat the slumping Brooklynites.

The best Ty Cobb could get off the delivery of Schulze, the Yankee twirler, was a double out of four times up.

A triple play executed by Shortstop Maranville and First Baseman Meyers, of the Braves, stopped a batting rally on the part of the Reds, and enabled the Bostonians to grab a 7 to 2 victory.

Midkiff's hit in the ninth that sent Caldwell across the plate won the game for the Yankees from the Tigers.

Rumor has it that a deal is under way by which Nap Rucker, the star pitcher of the Dodgers, will go to the Cubs in exchange for Roger Bresnahan, the catcher, who is drawing a huge salary from the Cub coffers for warming the bench. Archer is doing most of the catching for the Cubs.

Ty Cobb, of the Tigers, and Joe Jackson, of the Naps, are engaged in a see-saw battle for the batting leadership of the American League. Both are hitting around .450 and they are taking turns in leading.

TY COBB OUT TO COP HITTING CROWN AGAIN

ADMIRERS of Tyrus Raymond Cobb have a right to be proud of the record amassed by the Georgia Peach during the first month of the present campaign. Participating in 24 games, of which his team won 11, Cobb hit safely in 20 combats and in one of these it should be remembered that he was an added starter and got a chance to bat only once, which opportunity he improved by poling a sacrifice fly.

The gunners who slipped ciphers into the Southern's base-hit column were Ray Keating and Ray Fisher of the Highlanders, on May 7 and 8, respectively; Harry White and Bill Lange of the White Sox, on May 4, and Tom Hughes and Tom Dreham of the Senators, on May 16.

3 Hits 5 Times This Year.

In the score of contests in which Cobb hit safely he obtained 32 singles, three doubles and three triples, his batting average from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, being .475. He has made three hits five times this season, two hits eight times and one hit seven times. His best record in the way of consecutive clouting came in the games of May 19 and 20 with the Athletics, when he got six hits in the same number of trips to the plate.

Tyrus Raymond, who seems bent on carrying off the Chalmers American League trophy for the third time, has put the finishing touches to fourteen of the Tigers' tallies, sending in seven on clean hits, four on aerial sacrifice and three on infield outs. He is not the Tigers' leading batter in of runs as yet, for Bobby Veach, who has played in ten more contests, has driven in four more counters. On the percentage basis, however, Cobb outranks Veach as a timely thumper.

Only Four Fanned Ty.

Cobb faced 30 American League pitchers from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, and only four men succeeded in fanning him. Bob Russell, of the White Sox, whiffed Tyrus on May 3; Ray Keating, of the Highlanders, struck him out twice on May 7 (that day the Dixie Demon complained his eyes bothered him), Buck O'Brien, of the Red Sox, claimed Ty as a strike-out victim on May 12, and twelve days later Walter Leverenz, of the Browns, set him down via the strike out line.

Cobb has drawn 17 passes in 24 games and has been successful in 12 out of 16 steals he has essayed. The men who turned him back when he tried to steal were Henry, of Washington, twice; Carrigan, of Boston, once, and Lapp, of Philadelphia, once.

Sports and Such

THE SPRING KINKS IN THE baseball dope are being straightened out and the big league teams are gradually fitting into their appointed positions, to the great glorification of the aforesaid dope.

Of the two leagues the National promises the better race, a situation that was more or less forecast. In the American League no one would be particularly shocked if the excitement were all over by the middle of July. If the Athletics maintain their present industrious lick and the Boston team continues to improve, this combination of events is likely to result in an overwhelming lead for the Mack outfit within the next few weeks. Boston is earnestly doing its best to wallop Cleveland, and later on it will have a chance to slam the Washington gang, all of which is the best little sort of ally work for Connie Mack.

* * *

THE SOLEMN PROPHETS OF the spring-tide unanimously held that if Connie Mack kept his men on the reservation there would be no stopping them this season, and seemingly it will work out so.

* * *

THERE HAS BEEN ONE UP-set—or rather two—of magnitude in the older league. There is not the slightest doubt that on paper the Giants this spring were fully a 20 per cent stronger club than they were last season, when they won the pennant. By an amazingly simple process of arithmetic you could thus figure out that they would win the pennant in a walk this summer; but, though they have played to form, they have failed to win the games that were cheerfully counted for them last April.

* * *

IF THE PIRATES NOW occupied that high position fortuitously held by the Phillies we should worry. As it is, the Phillies are likely to blow. Brooklyn started out to break up the league, and Brooklyn blew. The Phillies are a little stronger than the Dodgers and are holding up a litle longer, but it will be the biggest shock baseball ever got if they keep up this pace for another six weeks. So if the Giants find themselves and develop a real winning streak they have every chance to nail the lead and hold it.

New Date Set for 'Drome Races

Hold Meet Saturday Afternoon

SHARP at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Starter Noon Hudson will fire the first gun for the first race in the new Atlanta Motordrome. A minute later Announcer Erskine Brewster, from his raised platform, will be booming the results through a giant megaphone. And Atlanta's season of thrills and sensations will be in progress.

Always providing it doesn't rain.

Ten thousand Atlanta speed fans are awaiting the verdict of the weather man. If he will provide a couple of hours sunshine Saturday afternoon there will be nothing to it but a big success. Nearly five thousand people plowed their way to the track Friday night, June 6, right through the rain, on the off chance that there would be racing. Another five thousand stayed at home because they saw the case was hopeless. They will all be there ten thousand strong Saturday afternoon, if the weather is fair. And there will be room for all. Twelve thousand people can be seated in the grandstand alone. Twice that many can be looked out for in the infield. So there will be no crowding if the crowd grows to 36,000. Seats all around a quarter mile track, five rows deep, mean a lot of accommodations.

The sport which will be offered Saturday afternoon cannot be otherwise than thrilling and sensational. Ninety miles an hour on a four-lap track offers hair-raising possibilities. The nearest Atlanta speed bugs ever came to seeing such speed was at the Atlanta Speedway. There the cars raced on a two-mile oval. At the motordrome the best record of the speedway will undoubtedly be equaled or surpassed—and it will be done on a four-lap track, banked like a brick fence, lighted by blazing tungstens, and surrounded by a solid bank of shrieking, hat-waving humanity. Three and four riders will be on the track at the same time and each will flash past at ten second intervals.

The racing will be in dead earnest. The riders need the money. There hasn't been any "sugar" stirring around racing headquarters in months. Now, with a chance to race for the coin, they will not overlook any bets.

Special cars will be run to the Motordrome, leaving Five Points at two-minute intervals. The run to the show grounds takes but five or six minutes. After the races the cars will be backed up and ready to carry the speed fans back to the city at top speed.

This may be Atlanta's only chance to see speedway racing in the day time. The track was built for night racing. The electric lights are all in place. It was only because of the repeated postponements made necessary because of the recent rains and because of the coolness of the weather, that an afternoon meet was decided on. This show Saturday afternoon will give the fans a fine chance to get a line on the board track racing game by daylight. It may also give Jack Prince a chance to slip up on the weather man. Anyhow, if the weather is fair, there will be nine thrilling races Saturday afternoon. And all Atlanta's speed fans will be there to see them.

UNCLE SAM TO EXTEND COURTESY TO PLAYERS

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Uncle Sam's consular and diplomatic officials in parts of the world to be visited next fall and winter by President Comiskey's White Sox and the New York Giants will be asked to extend the touring athlets every courtesy.

Secretary of State William J. Bryan, harking to the request of Senator James Hamilton Lewis, of Chicago, has provided Manager Callahan, of the Sox, with the necessary credentials.

The document is in the form of a general letter addressed to officials in the United States consular and diplomatic service throughout the nations on the itinerary of the globe-girdling ball clubs and introduces the members of the party.

MAY ORGANIZE LEAGUE TO PLAY ON WEDNESDAY

A movement has been started to organize a baseball league to play on Wednesday afternoons. The moving picture and theater men will combine with the clothing store men who are closing their places of business on Wednesday afternoons. Some of the teams that will probably enter this league are the Consolidated Film Company, Mutual Film Company, Daniel Bros. Company and McConnell Clothing and Shoe Company. Other teams that can play on Wednesday afternoon are requested to call up Shelley Ivey, over phone Ivy 4989, at once.

GIBBONS AND AHEARN CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, June 13.—Mike Gibbons, of St. Paul, may strike a snag in the person of Young Ahearn, the Dancing Master, when they meet in a ten-round bout in the Garden tonight. Ahearn is rapidly growing into the middleweight division. It is conceded that he is one of the finest boxers in the ring.

Best of White Hopes Will Meet at Auditorium-Armory

SAVAGE AND WHITE BATTLE HERE TO-NIGHT

By Left Hook.

A FEW hours after Sailor White and Jim Savage conclude their ten-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory to-night a special representative of the local military companies will embark for New York for the express purpose of closing with Gunboat Smith to come to Atlanta July 4 to meet the winner.

To-day Gunboat Smith looks the best heavyweight of them all. His record entitles him to more consideration than any of them. A battle between Smith and the winner tonight would be an affair of international interest.

The dicker for Smith adds vastly to the interest in to-night's bout—which becomes more than ever a championship affray. Sailor White and Jim Savage have both been looked upon as logical opponents for Smith in the title battle. One or the other must be eliminated before the lights are turned off in the Auditorium-Armory to-night.

Both Men Ready.

Both contestants turned up in good order this morning. They look the better for their hard work since they arrived in Atlanta and should enter the ring in top-notch condition. Savage has been training viciously here. White, who arrived in the best possible trim, has been taking it easy.

Both men will enter the ring tonight at their best scrapping weight and when Referee Lou Castro gives the word and the ball clangs there should be action and gobs of it.

This looks like the battle of his career to Sailor White. He has battled a lot of the best of them. But this night he meets one man he believes he can beat. He admits that Savage can smear it all over him at boxing, but he does not intend to encourage any boxing.

White Is a Scrapper.

White knows it is possible to carry a battle to a man so hard that nothing but rough work will be possible. That's his style of doing business. He loves to mingle. Any time his opponent gets off at long range he sorrows. The exchange of blows is where he shines. He has everything but science on Savage — weight, height, reach, strength and a punch. He has admitted that he will lose if he doesn't get his man early. So he is going in for the early stuff.

The Sailor figures that if he can land a few good blows on Savage he can make him forget all he ever knew about boxing. He has trimmed a lot of other clever scrappers that way and he believes it will work with Jim. Anyhow it is the only system of attack he knows and he is going to try it out. If that method loses he loses. But he figures that he stands a swell chance of putting Savage to sleep.

Saul and Nelson Scrap.

The loud noise in the semi-windup doings will be made by the Saul-Nelson preliminary. These lads take their battle as earnestly as though it was the main bout. They are getting a good piece of money for scrapping and they are both anxious to win. It is a waste of type to say much about this bout, for local fans know it will be good. Anything Saul goes into will be lively. Any time Terry Nelson scraps there will be action. Get the two together and it means fireworks. It will go the full ten rounds, easily enough, for both boys are as tough as gads. Of course a lucky punch might end it, but nobody looks for that. What the fans expect is ten slashing rounds of give-and-take stuff, with no let-up except for the minute intervals.

The Meyer Pries-Spider Britt affair looks promising too. These lads haven't any use for each other and have long been pining for a chance to go the route. This is the first time they have ever been put on for the full ten rounds. It may result in a verdict. They love to hammer each other so well and are willing to take so much punishment for the pleasure of an exchange that a knockout is likely to come off at any old time.

The bouts to-night will be run on the same high plane as all those at the Auditorium-Armory. The military companies will be in charge and will serve as ushers and will police the building. The battles will be put on and pushed through at top speed and no long waits need be feared.

Reserved seats are on sale at Shepherd's Segar Shop, corner of Edgewood and Pryor.

Thornton in Finals Of Old Dominion

RICHMOND, VA., June 12.—By defeating Pollard and Coke Thursday afternoon, 6-4, 6-2, Thornton and Shaner qualified for the finals in men's doubles in the Old Dominion tennis tourney, which is scheduled to be played at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon. Their competitors will be Buford and Dunn.

Thornton's work on the courts is declared to be the most brilliant ever seen here. He was in exceptionally fine form Thursday.

At 4 o'clock Friday, Mrs. Willard Sullivan is scheduled to contest with Mrs. Saunders Taylor for the challenge cup. Mrs. Sullivan having forced her way to the final Thursday afternoon when she easily defeated Miss Colston. The winner of this contest will be entitled to permanent possession of the cup. Mrs. Taylor is now the holder of it.

"You are sick, Father Matty," the young man said,
"You have lost your old fadeaway curve.
Your arm is a bum and your sinews are dead,
And you haven't a thing but your nerve."

"It is true I am sick," he arose to remark,
"It is true I am feeble and lame."
And having concluded, he hiked to the park
And proceeded to capture a game.

It is said that Christy Mathewson never has played ball on Sunday. Nor would seven National League teams go into mourning if he were to lay off seven days per week.

In addition to peddling life insurance it is rumored that Mr. Mathewson is a passably good heaver.

One horrible example of wasted endeavor is the case of the young man who forged a check in order to see the Yanks in the act of playing baseball.

One is forced to wonder at the feat performed by Marcel G. Brindejonc des Moulinais, who flew from Paris to Berlin in an aeroplane without getting his name tangled in the propeller.

There are some misguided persons who still refer to Lew Richie as the Giant Killer.

FABLE.

Once upon a time there was a baseball fan who did not know how to manage a baseball team.

While we grieve with Mr. Wolgast over his fractured thumb, it would not cause us any poignant grief if Tom Jones were to sprain his speaking apparatus.

ENOUGH IS SUFFICIENT.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
Though the hope of a pennant has flown,
But the fan worth while
Is the fan who can smile
When they show an assortment of bone.

COTTON SOARS; LATER RECEDES

Turner's Crop Report and Bearish Statistics Cause Active Selling in Late Session.

NEW YORK, June 13.—There was a renewal of heavy buying at the opening of the cotton market to-day and prompt response by prices, which were 2 to 10 points higher than last night's close. Interest centered chiefly in the new crop positions, of which Wall Street was a heavy buyer. August, however, showed the best gain, opening 10 points higher. One broker took 10,000 bales of December alone. This was supposed to represent covering.

Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm.

The market continued on the upward scale during the first fifteen minutes and prices increased their gains 1 to 5 points over the opening.

The advance came in the face of a favorable weather map, with indications pointing to fair weather over Sunday.

During the forenoon a wave of general selling dominated the market, which looked to be profit-taking, resulting in prices dropping 5 to 8 points under the initial level. Later the market rallied a few points and during the late forenoon the range was 1 to 6 points over the previous close.

Reports as to the condition of the crop and the spot situation was practically nil. However, sentiment continues bearish.

The principal selling was said to come chiefly from Liverpool and the South. The speculative element also sold. It is estimated that fully 200,000 bales of sheet cotton was sold yesterday, of which the bulk of it was sold by speculators.

During the afternoon session offerings became freer, based on expectations of a bearish week-end statement and a report by J. P. Turner, of Memphis, giving the condition of the crop as of June 10, 81.2 per cent, an improvement of 2.1 per cent for the fifteen days, when the crop condition was 79.1 per cent on May 25, according to the Census Bureau, resulting in prices receding some 5 to 10 points in most active positions from the opening quotations.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Weather developments overnight were favorable. Fair and warmer weather prevails, except for some cloudiness in south and west Texas and in North Carolina where there was a light rainfall. Indications are for cloudy and probably rainy weather in west Texas, fair and much warmer over remainder of the belt. Montgomery, Ala., says: "Crop progressing favorable. Cool weather of no consequence."

Liverpool was poor at the start, but rallied sharply as soon as New York showed further strength in July. Spots higher, sales 10,000 bales.

Our market opened about 4 points higher on the strong opening in New York, but there was no buying power and prices soon eased. The technical situation has evidently been weakened by extensive short covering and professional advices from New York are to this effect.

Liverpool forwardings to the mills are 29,000 bales less than they were for this week last year, pointing to bearish weekly consumption statistics.

Trading here settled around 11.44 for October and very quiet. Feeling is bearish on the general situation, but the fear of the possibility of an advance on technical conditions as recently demonstrated checks selling and makes the market respond readily to the least buying. There is no new mill demand of consequence, but the high July prices, with the expectation of possible squeeze prices to follow, gives confidence to holders and there is no pressure to sell.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, June 13.—Liverpool's buying caused the opening strength, but at the advance offerings are more liberal. Recent events have done much to reduce the short interest and such new demand as arises must come from longs or from spinners against forward sales of goods. Spinners' takings for week are well under last year and at this price it does not appear that buying will be heavy, unless some actual damage occurs to the crop, which, according to our bureau, shows an improvement of 2 points in two weeks.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Logan & Eryan: "We prefer purchases on any moderate setback."

Miller & Co.: "We still hold to our belief that continued demand from Liverpool spot houses and the European spinners, combined with a more optimistic feeling in financial circles, will rule."

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: "We would not follow the late advance."

Norden & Co.: "The market still looks as it will work higher."

Thompson, Towle & Co.: "We prefer to avoid the short side of the market."

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—J. M. Anderson: The trading was rather active for the first hour. Brokers representing the uptown crowd and Wall Street were good buyers of the old and new crop which was said to be short covering. The selling was scattered, coming mainly from Liverpool and the South. Speculative element also sold.

"Weather favorable, but crop news mixed. Regardless of conditions, there is a steady demand for old crop which is the strength of the market. The question now is answered by a great many operators is "how much cotton is needed" and from the way the old crop is being absorbed, it appears that the world's needs are more than many believe it to be. While there is a bearish feeling existing, those inclined to the bear side are timid about selling the market short until they see further into the situation."

Serrett Tate says: "You may expect general complaints of too much rain, particularly in the eastern part of the belt, shortly. The large short interest was not reduced yesterday in the average and I think prices will work gradually higher with only slight reaction until there is more covering. Any unfavorable crop reports caused by unseasonable weather will encourage bullish ideas."

Look who's here! Friday, 13, 1913!

* * *

It is said not a single boll weevil complaint has been heard of in Kingston, Ark., which is one of the worst boll weevil territories in that State.

* * *

According to information received from Georgia, crop conditions over that State as well as the Carolinas are generally favorable.

* * *

If McFadden is still short of July, he is not worrying about it, through the gossip in many conservative circles.

* * *

The United States Department of Agriculture is taking active measures to help farmers fight the boll weevil in Louisiana. These take the form of advising them how best to get rid of the pest. A. Morrow, of the Federal demonstration work, calls upon the farmers of East Baton Rouge to take immediate steps to exterminate the pest or reduce the possibility of injury. In a circular addressed to the farmers of that parish he says, under date of June 6:

"The appearance of the boll weevil in East Baton Rouge is no surprise and sohuld cause no alarm. We have been expecting it even earlier. The farmer that wants to make cotton under boll weevil conditions must make up his mind to fight the weevils, first by gathering the weevil in the bud of the cotton and later by gathering forms or punctured squares, and destroy them by burning. Owing to the fact that most cotton is young and the weevil infestation heavy, owing to the cool days, the pest can easily be found on top of the young cotton, and the work of picking it off can be done cheaply by children at a small cost. Every weevil gathered now is a saving of from 50 to 75 squares later. With the present condition of the crop and the good cultivation it has received up to date with intense, late and shallow cultivation, there is no reason in the world why the farmers should not make a better crop of cotton to the acre than before the advent of the weevil with the old methods of cultivation."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, June 13.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable, showing fair and warmer over the entire belt, except cloudy in South Texas, except a little in Northwest Texas, South Texas and a few points in North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy in West and South Texas, probably more there, but fair and much warmer weather in East Texas, Oklahoma, central and eastern States.

Liverpool cables: "American middling fair, 7.35d; good middling, 7.01d; middling, 6.77d; low middling, 6.61d; good ordinary, 6.25d; ordinary, 5.91d."

* * *

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Crop progress delaying temperatures have revived the bullish claim, repeatedly made throughout the planting season, that the crop got a late start. In any event, yesterday's cotton market climbed without encountering effective opposition, and the bearish assertion that technical conditions alone supply a basis of strength fell on unappreciative ears. As a matter of fact, nobody, in professional circles at least, believes the present cool weather has actually damaged the cotton plant, but there seems to be no reasonable ground for doubt that low temperatures during the past three or four days have caused the crop as a whole to lose the progress it would have made had the weather been warm and favorable. In this connection, comparison between the weather now and at this time in 1911 are particularly interesting, because large crop people are predicting a yield this year fully as great as the monster yield of 1911-1912.

"Almost without exception, yesterday morning and the morning before the Government's central stations in the cotton belt reported maximum temperatures lower than the minimum temperatures reported on the same days in 1911. Meanwhile, the New York July position continues to hold the center of the stage. The entire stock of cotton, certificated and uncertificated, at New York is now only 46,701. The talent as a whole is convinced so small a stock is entirely inadequate to protect the outstanding short contracts in the Nothern market. The situation, however, is made more acute by the premium over New York contracts at which actual cotton is selling in the South, and by the scarcity of desirable grades, which foreshadows a keen trade demand for the early receipts, which, as a rule, are of good grade cotton.

"Because of this scarcity, the grades above middling were marked up ½c in the New Orleans market yesterday."

TAMPA CHILLED AT 59.

TAMPA, June 13.—With the thermometer at 59 degrees at 5 o'clock this morning a record of 23 years' standing was broken here. It was the coldest temperature ever registered in June in this city.

CONDITION OF COTTON TO JUNE 10, 81.2 PER CENT

MEMPHIS, June 13.—Turner's crop reporting bureau by Miller & Cotter makes condition of cotton June 10, as compared with the Agricultural Bureau, 81.2, an improvement of 2.1 for the fifteen days.

In compiling these figures the report of the United States Department of Agriculture to date of May 25 are used as a basis and the percentages given herewith are made to compare with those of that authority as of May 25 last, showing thereby the improvement or deterioration of the crop that has occurred within the fifteen days:

STATE—	June 10.	May 25.
North Carolina	80	76
South Carolina	72	68
Georgia	74	69
Alabama	79	75
Mississippi	81	81
Tennessee	86	87
Arkansas	86	85
Louisiana	80	81
Oklahoma	87	87
Texas	85	84
United States	81.2	79.1

The notable improvement shown in eastern States is the direct result of rains, which have given generally good stands and put the soil, where formerly dry and cloddy, into good tilth. It was generally reported that up to the 10th ample rain had fallen and that further extended precipitation might so far retard cultivation as to make grass a threatening factor. As yet, however, this is an anticipated rather than a real menace.

In the Mississippi Valley and the southwest, where the condition was already high, the status was maintained. Plant growth, owing to cool weather, has not been so rapid as desired, but the young plant is quite thrifty.

RENEWED BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Large Institutions Absorb Big Issues Freely—Easier Feeling Generally.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, June 13.—New York, New Haven and Hartford was one of the weakest issues on the list at the opening of the stock market to-day, opening at 100, or 1⅞ under Thursday's final. After half an hour it rallied ½. Canadian Pacific was under pressure and declined to 216¾ for the loss of 1⅝, but rose to 217 under supporting orders.

The undertone was wavering and the list was irregular. The copper shares reflected strength, but most of the issues in which there is a strong international interest sustained declines. Some bankers professed the belief that Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo's emergency currency announcement is having its effect discounted by the actual need of credit rather than of money.

Among the gains were Utah Copper ⅞, Amalgamated Copper ⅝, Chino Copper ⅛, United States Rubber ⅜, American Car and Foundry ½, American Can 1, Anaconda Copper ⅜, Louisville and Nashville 1½, Reading ⅜ and Southern Railway ¼. United States Steel common began with a gain of ¼, but later lost it and shaded. Union Pacific commenced unchanged, but later suffered a net decline. Southern Pacific lost ⅝, while Norfolk and Western declined ½. American Telephone and Telegraph and St. Paul also declined fractionally. Lehigh Valley began with the loss of 1 point, but later recovered.

European news was bullish, despite the announcement of two failures on the London Exchange.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were firm.

TRADE IS 'SPOTTY' IN WOOL MARKET

Mill Buyers Have Reduced Their Purchasing Limits—Receipts Show Big Decrease.

BOSTON, June 13.—Conditions have not materially changed in the local wool market. Sales the past week have been well up to three-quarters of a million pounds, including a fair proportion of the new wools, both fleeces and territories. Trade is "spotty" and irregular. Some houses reported a moderate interest on the part of manufacturers, while others complain of the lack of demand. In the West dealers have been operating more freely. Prices in primary markets are still above a parity with this market, according to the estimates of leading wool men, but buyers pay them rather than allow competitors to secure the desirable wools.

Foreign wools are quiet, with only small lots selling. The feature of the week is the change in attitude toward primary wool markets. Mill buyers have reduced their buying limits and, therefore, may be said in a sense to have retired from the field.

Receipts in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	2,986,256	4,491,584
Foreign	490,135	2,873,390
Totals	3,476,391	7,364,974

Total receipts of 3,476,391 pounds, compared with 3,295,647 the preceding week, of which 2,531,777 were domestic.

CHICAGO, June 13.—Reports of scattered rains in the spring wheat country drove some of the holders out of their positions, and it also caused the putting out of short lines. Northwestern receipts were more than double those of a year ago, reflecting no uneasiness whatever in the spring wheat country of immediate crop losses.

Corn was ⅛ to ¼c lower along with wheat.

Oats were ¼c lower with longs selling. Larger country offerings are expected.

Provisions were unchanged to 2½ to 5c better.

LIVERPOOL GRAIN MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, June 13.—Wheat opened ½d higher; at 1:30 p. m. the market was unchanged. Closed unchanged to ½d lower.

Corn opened unchanged; at 1:30 p. m. the market was ¼d lower. Closed ¼d lower.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, June 13.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.:

Wheat—The map shows light rains over portions of Canada and showers over a few points in North Dakota and South Dakota, with fairly heavy rains in Nebraska and Dodge City, Kans. With prospects for rain in the Northwest more favorable, a somewhat lower market is apt to rule.

Corn—Indications point to a continuation of fairly liberal receipts, as on the advance country shippers seem more disposed to sell. We are inclined to look for some setback in prices.

Oats—Lack of moisture and recent cool weather have induced slow and irregular growth and prospects generally have been somewhat lowered during the past week. Receipts continue liberal and demand is not very satisfactory.

Provisions—Market seems to be a hesitating one and some setback may be in order.

MODERN MILLER CROP REPORT.

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—The general rains in the Southwest and cooler weather in the winter wheat belt have been of great benefit to the wheat crop. The rapid deterioration, because of dry and hot weather, not only was checked, but considerable wheat that was backward, was restored and will give fair yield.

The harvest is well under way in the South part of the wheat belt, Texas having been cut and shocked under favorable conditions and harvesting has extended northward into southern Indiana, Illinois, Missouri and Kansas and next week will be general. There are complaints about weather for the harvest, which has been favorable and so far as can be judged by the wheat thus far thrashed, quality of grain will be good.

NEGRO ILLEGALLY HANGED.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., June 13.—Bennie Simmons, a negro, charged with the murder of Susie Church, aged 16, at Cogar, was lynched by a mob of 500 to 600 people from Cogar at Anadarko at 3 o'clock this morning. His body was burned.

Poultry, Pet and Live Stock

Term "Crop Bound" Explained by Expert

Also What to Do in Case Fowl Is Affected With It—Read Carefully.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Judge F. J. Marshall—We have a hen that has an abnormal sized crop. It seems to be inflamed and is all swelled up hard, like it was a great wad of grain and grass. What do you think is the matter with her and the cause? Also, what shall we do to help her?

S. C. R., Pickens, S. C.

Answer.—Your hen is troubled with what is called crop bound. There are various things that cause it. The most common are the swallowing of a piece of jagged bone or other substance too rough and large to pass through to the gizzard, stopping the passage of all other food. Then, again, a fowl will eat a lot of oats or similar grain when overhungry, clogging the crop so that fermentation will ensue before it passes out. This will cause distention and the crop will simply remain inactive and do no work. At other times a fowl that has been kept where there is no grass or green stuff will, when it gets where there is some, fill up with such a wad that it literally stops everything.

They will continue to eat about the same for several days and this makes matters worse all the time. The simplest method of emptying the crop, if it succeeds, is to pour all the hot water down the bird's throat that it will hold. Have the water just as hot as you would drink yourself and not hotter. After this is done, hold the fowl with one hand, kneading the contents of the crop gently but thoroughly; then hold the head down and the mouth open, giving a slight jerking motion which will have a tendency to dislodge the packed matter with the water. Repeat this operation several times, if it seems at all successful in its work. If this will not do the work, the only other alternative is to open up the crop with a sharp knife and clean it out. It is best to have a helper to hold the hen firmly while you do the work. In the first place, remove the feathers from over the center of the crop, where you are going to cut. Have a keen knife, clean and bright. Cut through the outer skin a slit about two inches long, allowing it to bleed all it is going to before going in into the crop. Wipe it clean and dry with a little clean cotton or soft linen. After this is clean, make your cut into the crop about an inch long, when you will be ready to begin removing the packed contents. It is most easily done with something about like a shoe button hook with which you can pull it out a little at a time. Do not be in too big a hurry about it or you will cause trouble. Take your time to it and when it is cleaned out, clear down to the outlet, then you can give it a good washing out with a weak solution of pure carbolic acid and water, or dioxogen and water. If you have nothing of the kind at hand use a little salt in the water, which is about as good anything.

Then you are ready to sew it up. First sew the crop with about four stitches, and then the outer skin, taking about five or six, using a needle and white silk thread. After it is all over, give the fowl a few teaspoonfuls of hot milk, just as hot as you would dare to give it and if the bird is quite weak repeat the nourishment in about two hours.

Milk will make a good diet for a week at least; with a little soft bread added in about three days. Nothing solid should be given under a week. A little nux vomica in the drinking water will act as a gentle tonic—say about six to ten drops in a quart of drinking water.

We often see cases of enlarged crop which is a hanging or sagging crop, just as if it were made of thin rubber and had not the strength to hold it in position. In fact, such is the case. It is caused by fowls gorging themselves by eating too much at a time, and particularly of mashes. It is really not as annoying to the fowl as it may be for the owner to look at. It is a relaxed or lax condition of the muscles of the crop which should hold the food up in position but does not. This is more common to old hens which have been heavy eaters for a long time. There is but little remedy for it that is advisable. We do not think your hen has that kind of trouble.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Good Local Demand For Residence Lots

Agency Sells $4,000 a Day—Big Barbecue Saturday—Business and Building Show Gains.

At no time in the present year, say well known real estate men, has the demand been better for residence lots. The L. P. Bottenfield agency, for instance, sold fourteen lots for a total of $16,850, in the first four days of the week, or more than $4,000 a day. Eleven of these were in Clairmont Park, Decatur, and they brought $14,000. Three were in Peachtree Highlands, at an aggregate of $2,850.

Dr. Dan H. Griffith bought lot 1 in block 3 of the Clairmont Park subdivision for $2,000, and will erect a $5,000 home on it. Thomas M. Turner, of Florida, bought 19 Seal Place thruogh Hugh J. Lynch, associate sales manager, for $5,000, and has become associated with the Bottenfield agency as salesman. This lot is 47 by 150 feet.

Realty Barbecue Saturday.

All is in readiness for the barbecue of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock at Cold Springs. Judging from a poll of the real estate men, about 200 will be present. A brass band has been engaged and there will be something doing every minute. Lemonade has been ordered for the realty men who don't care for anything stronger. This barbecue is taking the place of the May and June monthly banquets of the board.

Bumper Crops Reported.

J. H. Ewing, of the real estate firm of Smith & Ewing, returned to Atlanta Friday from a trip into North Carolina, and reported the biggest wheat, oats, corn and cotton crops he had ever seen, despite the three inches of snow that fell. "With Secretary McAdoo's tender of $500,000,000 to help the financial situation, and such big crops coming," declared Mr. Ewing, "every kind of business is going to wake up as never before, and naturally the effect will be felt in real estate. There won't be any place for the calamity howler."

Other real estate men who expressed confidence in stable conditions were Edwin P. Ansley, who noted with great satisfaction the better conditions in the New York markets; Charles H. Black, of Turman, Black & Calhoun; Lowry Porter, of Porter & Swift; Ralph O. Cochran and John D. Babbage.

Remodeling Adair Offices.

Extensive alterations intended to give more room are going on in the real estate offices of Forrest & George Adair in the Atlanta National Bank Building. One or two new rooms will be added and a complete rearrangement made.

East Paces Ferry Paving.

The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company, developers of the Hedgerose Heights subdivision east of Buckhead, have begun to pave East Paces Ferry Road with macadam and chert, and the county has promised to pave a strip of it westward to Buckhead. The aggregate paving will be about three-quarters of a mile. This concern will also pave a new street, Maple Avenue, leading southeast from Peachtree Road, in conjunction with the Walton Realty Company. Holmes & Luckie have already laid tile sidewalks along Piedmont Road east of Peachtree, and will extend the same along East Paces Ferry Road half-way back to Buckhead.

Jump in Building.

Real estate men learned with interest, Friday that building permits for the twenty-third week of 1913 far outstripped the figures for the same period last year. The number was the same, 60, but 1913's aggregated $302,194, while 1912's totaled only $92,800.

Changes on Real Estate Row.

Auburn Avenue, colloquially known as "Real Estate Row," has recently gained a convert in the Claude E. Sims Company, but is soon to lose two other agencies. The Lochridge-McClain-Moon Company and G. T. R. Fraser have received notice that they must vacate the old Y. M. C. A. building, which is to be remodeled by the Chamber of Commerce. The former will go to 4 North Pryor Street, the Kimball House, while the latter will seek space in an office building.

Other realty agents on "Real Estate Row" are George P. Moore, who named the street; John J. Woodside, Mercer W. Gilmer and the Willingham Real Estate Agency.

For Piedmont Car Line.

On account of its possible bearing on property values, real estate men heard with much interest Friday of the plan for the street railway company to use Piedmont Avenue rather than Ivy Street. The city made the suggestion that Ivy Street be left free of car tracks in order that big vehicles might use it and keep off Peachtree. President Arkwright les said to be willing to the new arrangement if Piedmont Avenue property owners will consent.

Permit for $6,000 Home.

A permit was issued Friday to J. H. Bennett to erect at 48 Westminster Drive, Ansley Park, a two-story brick veneer residence, to cost $6,000.

What Is a Hero? Usually a Life Saver

You Can Be a Life Saver Very Easily BY KILLING FLIES

(Copyright, 1913)

You should kill flies. THE FLY IS THE MOST DANGEROUS INSECT ON EARTH. IT IS MORE DEADLY THAN THE COBRA, MORE DANGEROUS THAN THE TIGER.

It is your duty to kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM TYPHOID FEVER.

All good citizens must kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM INTESTINAL DISEASES.

Please kill flies. EVERY AUTUMN THERE IS A RISE IN THE DEATH RATE FROM TYPHOID. THIS RISE IS TRACED BY THE SCIENTISTS DIRECTLY TO THE FLY.

We beg of you to kill flies. THE FLY KILLS TENS OF THOUSANDS OF CHILDREN EVERY YEAR.

The fly causes more blindness in children than all other causes combined.

The fly spreads every known disease to children and to adults, for it frequents every disease breeding spot and hunts purposely for filth.

Early in the season KILL FLIES.

In the middle of the Summer KILL FLIES.

And in the Autumn and in the Winter, if you can find them, still KILL FLIES.

Treat the fly as our ancestors in the old days treated the red Indians and the wolves.

First, shut them out of your house, make sure that they won't get in; then kill them off as rapidly as possible and pray for the day when you will no longer have to protect your house against them.

Screen your windows.

Screen your doors.

New fly screens made of wire netting that will not rust are more important than a new coat of paint or a new automobile, for fly screens means protection for children.

Protect your house from the flies as absolutely as possible. Protect your food supplies and protect your babies' faces separately.

As the child lies asleep, keep mosquito netting over it.

Keep your sugar bowl, butter dish and food supplies covered.

Don't forget that if you see flies their breeding place is nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table, or in the cuspidor.

If there is no dirt or filth there will be no flies.

If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood write at once to the Health Department.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises. All refuse should be removed at once or covered with lime or kerosene.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

See that your sewerage system is in good order. Pour kerosene into the drains.

Cover food after a meal. Burn or bury all table refuse. Screen all food offered for sale. Buy no food that has been exposed to flies.

It is only by earnest intelligent co-operation that the fly can finally be abolished.

The citizens should combine, the national, State, city and village governments should combine with them to wipe out the unseen enemies of man, the flies that carry all the diseases, or very nearly all, and the mosquito that alone infects men with malaria and yellow fever.

THE THING CAN BE DONE, for it has been done by governments in Cuba, in Panama and in New Orleans.

The trouble is that the country will not take the matter seriously.

Darwin told us that one single pair of flies in forty-eight hours—the quick-breeding African fly—will lay enough eggs and breed enough maggots to devour a lion, leaving nothing but the white bones.

A few flies surviving through the Winter start the plague afresh the following year.

And one careless citizen leaving a breeding ground for mosquitoes supplies enough to infest the whole country.

Fortunately, for two or three years the people have been alive to the fact that their enemies are the tiny fly and mosquito and the invisible disease germs—enemies more deadly and dangerous than ever were the great monsters of prehistoric times or the wolves and lions of our day.

Discussion has begun, newspapers have taken it up and offered prizes. A few public officials have at last TRIED to do something. But only a beginning has been made.

The country must realize the danger and the duty. Children must be taught that the killing of flies is a good and necessary act, painful as it is to take life.

Do what you can to arouse public feeling for the sake of public safety.

And in the meanwhile DO WHAT YOU CAN INDIVIDUALLY.

Kill the flies.

Letters From The Georgian's Readers

DOGS IN GEORGIA.

Editor The Georgian:

I wish to thank you and indorse every word of your editorial on the dog. All the good deeds of ten million dogs can not counterbalance the death of one human being, and I would rather see every dog on earth slain than to see one little child die of the rabies.

Dogs have cost this State millions of dollars. A good many years back every farmer in the State raised sheep and had wool and mutton to sell. I have bought thousands and thousands of pounds of wool throughout Georgia, but to-day you won't find one pound where there used to be thousands. Ask any old farmer and he will tell you dogs are the sole cause of the disappearance of the sheep industry.

I have never heard one iota of evidence that the dog does anything for the good of humanity.

J. W. R.

GOOD ROADS.

Editor The Georgian:

In the campaign for the general good of everybody in this territory, permit me to suggest that something be done toward not only the mere building of better roads, but better maintenance. If you have recently ridden over the Howell's Mill and Colyer's Ferry Roads you know what a mess was made of those nice roads by putting DIRT on fresh oil in such quantities that it was like an original dirt road with dust, instead of using sand or screening.

Here's for good roads! And let's have them oiled, too, but I think anyone with wide experience in the matter will say that common dirt as a "topper" is a mistaken idea. A. H. SAYERS.

"We Must Better the Mothers to Better the Race"

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

A BRIGHT woman named Elva D. Kellog has taken me to task for some verses wherein woman, as the mother, is accused of failing in her duty.

Mrs. Kellog quotes the final line of the poem and her criticisms follow:

"'We must better the mothers to beter the race.'

"Granted. But it will do no good until the fathers have become human beings instead of creatures lower than animals. Why not preach at the man DIRECTLY—why not speak to this generation, instead of merely urging mothers to make the next generation of men what it should be? After all, a mother can't do more than half anyway. A mother may bring up a girl alone quite creditably, but a father must have a hand with the son. And fathers are SHIRKING.

Then What?

"Another side of the question. Why do men shirk fatherhood? Oh, I know most every man WANTS TO HAVE CHILDREN. But after he gets them, then what? First, his is the sexual delirium, then the pleasure of anticipation, later real plans and the joy of possession, MINUS THE RESPONSIBILITY. For the mother, fear, dread, pain, agony, worry, an ever-present sense of responsibility—can this be offset by the pleasure of possession?

"We mothers are working ALONE to bring up our little men and women. Ever since the time of Adam, man has shifted responsibility of everything except the bread and butter side of the question. All too often the mother has her half of this responsibility added to the other half.

"Yet your cry is for MOTHERS to do their duty better. What in the world do you expect of the men? If men had the race responsibility laid at their door, the whole world would undergo a revolution. Men are only BIG CHILDREN—and they OUGHT to be MEN. Then they read your pleas to WOMEN and they begin to see where their own wife, the struggling mother of a band of seven or eight tots, is deficient; and straightway she is belittled in their eyes and they pat themselves on the back for doing THEIR duty. Dear knows, the male man is already an egotist, already a spoiled child, without anything a noted woman can write to make him more so.

"We must better the FATHERS to better the race.

"I would like to see you plead with men for better manhood, true fatherhood, and for the subduing of the much abused, too much indulged sex element, which is in itself a great cause of unwelcome babies and woman's rebellion against motherhood. We want to plan our babies as we would any other grand piece of work, and we can NOT do this until our husbands have become enlightened—have learned control along this line.

"Respectfully yours,

"ELVA D. KELLOG."

Mrs. Kellog has evidently failed to read many articles and verses in this column which have dealt with the subject she desires discussed.

Sex Hygienics.

It has often been urged that our preparatory schools and colleges for young men should include in the curriculum a thorough course in sex hygienics, in what is now known as eugenics; and that married men and fathers should be compelled by law to attend lectures on these subjects at least three times a year.

"Schools of Good Fatherhood" have also been advocated. As soon as a young boy is old enough to attend school he should begin his preparation for marriage and fatherhood by being taught the sacredness of his body, and the necessity to keep it clean and strong and full of healthful vigor. He should be warned of the danger which lies in obscene conversation, vulgar language or habits which could not be known by his mother and sisters. Woman should be made an object of reverence in his eyes, and any woman who is not worthy such reverence he should be taught to pity.

A Mother's Influence.

The scientific facts regarding the transmission of bad blood, made impure by nicotine, alcohol, drugs or sexual vices, should be taught him by teachers properly trained in such knowledge. Vice should be presented to him from its dangerous physical side as well as from the moral standpoint. And the innate pride every man feels in producing worthy descendants should be cultivated in him from early youth, until he as naturally protects his unborn sons and daughters from contamination as he guards himself from mutilation.

But I disagree with the bright woman when she says "The mother can do only half in bringing up a child."

A mother's influence over a child is just as much greater as her part in creating the child is longer in time than that of the father. It is not the mere sowing of the seed which makes a beautiful flower garden.

The caring for the ground in which the seed is sown, and the weeding and fertilizing and training of the plants after the sprout are what determine their vigor and perfection.

For three-quarters of a year before the human plant comes to the light the mother is molding it and influencing it with her thoughts, her habits and her physical condition.

The New Science.

For a year after it is visible its life depends upon her, not upon the father; and its first language, its first ideas, its first habits, are patterned upon the maternal plan.

This is a most important part of a child's life, and too much can not be said to make mothers realize their responsibility.

Mrs. Kellog wants the men of this generation to be talked to. That is well and good; but it is somewhat late to make these men what they might have been had their mothers begun with them in childhood. A wise, good, broad, wholesome-minded mother can make her boy exactly what she wants him to be, if she begins soon enough and is persistent and tactful in her methods—those early years of a child's life are of such vast importance in shaping his mind.

The new science of eugenics (new in its modern practical application to social problems) will make a great change in the ideas of men and women regarding domestic life and marriage relations.

The advent of women into medicine is gradually bringing a change of sentiment, and will eventually do away with some old traditions. Particularly the tradition that man can not exercise control over his passions, and that by nature he is so constituted that his immoralities are justifiable on the plea of health.

Garrett P. Serviss

Writes on

New Light on the Descent of Man

The Ancestors of Spiders and Scorpions Give Birth to the Family of Vertebrates.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE affirmation of science that apes and monkeys are our collateral relatives, sprung from the same ancestral stock, was once very offensive to many good people, some of whom still obstinately refuse to accept it. They think that it robs man of his dignity.

What, then, will they say when told that the ancestors of spiders and scorpions must now be included in the main trunk of the great genealogical tree whose topmost branch terminates, for the present, in man, and that without their intervention neither man nor monkey would have existed?

Nature Invents Backbone.

This assertion is based upon the discovery by Professor William Patten, of Dartmouth College, of the long-missing link between the vertebrate, or backboned animals, and their predecessors, the invertebrates, or animals without backbones.

Until nature invented the backbone there was no possibility of the existence of an upright animal constructed on the plan of the human skeleton. But the first back-boned animals were fishes. After the fishes came the amphibians, living part of the time in the water and part of the time on land. From the amphibians sprang the land reptiles and the birds, and from the reptiles arose the mammalians, or "mother animals," nourishing their young with their milk. The most progressive branch of the mammalians gave origin to a partially upright creature, which became the common ancestor of apes on the one hand and men on the other.

Thus the line of descent is clear from man back to the first vertebrates, the fishes. But ever since the days of Darwin zoologists have been puzzled by the question, "What animal was it that marked the change from the invertebrates to the fishes?"

There was the great "missing link" in the chain of animal life on this globe. Professor Patten believes that he has discovered this link in a curious extinct animal called the ostracoderm, which was developed out of the family of the arachnids (Greek arachne, "spider"), to which the scorpions also belong. The arachnids themselves are not vertebrates.

He Studied Scorpions.

The story of this discovery is intensely interesting. Professor Patten was led to it by observing the peculiar way in which the eyes in the embryo of a scorpion are transferred from the outside of the head to the blind ends of medium tubes projecting from the brain. This was so similar to what takes place in vertebral animals that he began to study the embryonic development of other species of arachnids, and was astonished to find the most striking resemblances with vertebrates. Among other things, he found that the brains of arachnids closely mimic those of verebrates, both in general shape and subdivision, and in their functions.

Still, he could not conclude that the vertebrates sprang direct from the modern scorpions and spiders, because it is known that the first vertebrates were marine animals. But he remembered that the arachnids of to-day are also of marine descent, their ancestors having been marine arachnids, which flourished before any vertebrate animal had appeared. Evidently he must look for the missing link afar back in geological time.

Accordingly, he went back millions of years and fixed his suspicions upon the mysterious marine animal ostracoderm, which, although it was related to the marine arachnids, zoologists had always been puzzled to classify. He traveled wherever the fossils of this creature could be seen, and studied them minutely. But, unfortunately, all that had been collected were more or less imperfect, and his inquiry might never have been completed if he had not discovered a wonderful deposit of ostracoderms in the Devonian rocks on the shore of the Bay de Chaleur in Canada. The deposit was a small one, disclosed by the falling of a cliff. Professor Patten concluded that, millions of years ago, it had been the muddy bed of a shallow, brackish water pool, in which the animals had been trapped by the sudden running off of tide water, and had perished in a heap.

"One," he says, "in its death agony, had plunged into the mud with sufficient force to remain there, head down, in a vertical position. Others were arranged in a horizontal series, uniformly headed in a northeast direction."

Worked for Three Years.

He believes that their heads were turned against a gentle current of water, because the tops of all the fossil ferns found in the same bed were pointed in nearly the opposite direction. Was there ever so dramatic a picture of life on this earth countless ages ago? And then, to think that if these trapped creatures had been the only representatives of their kind, the great race of the vertebrates might have been extinguished in its cradle!

Many of the specimens were so perfectly preserved that the discoverer was able to ascertain the location of their principal sense organs, of their jaws, gills, stomach, etc., and their mode of locomotion, mode of feeding, and the nature of their food. For nearly three years he has worked upon these specimens in his laboratory, gradually disclosing their internal structure, until now he is able to affirm that the ostracoderm was neither a vertebrate nor an invertebrate, but intermediate between the two. In other words, it is the long-missing link, and it shows that the marine arachnids, the great-grandfather of the spiders and the scorpions, gave rise to a race of creatures in whom nature made her first experiments toward the production of a backbone, which no true arachnid was ever to possess, but which, when set erect in man, was topped with a brain that has made its possessor the master of the world and its secrets.

JUDGE SPEER UNDER FIRE; RECORD IS PROBED

Inspector of Department of Justice in Macon Investigating Official and Private Character.

MACON, GA., June 13.—The entire official record of Judge Emory Speer is being investigated by a special agent of the Department of Justice. J. T. Lewis, an assistant in the United States Attorney General's office, and a personal representative of Attorney General McReynolds, has been in Macon for a week engaged in this work.

Not only the official acts, but also the personal character of Judge Speer is also being scrutinized, with the view of determining if there is any foundation for charges of an impeachment nature.

Judge Speer is fully informed as to the purpose of the visit of Inspector Lewis to Macon.

Started by Huff Charges.

It is said that the investigation was promoted by the charges made last year by Colonel W. A. Huff, who has since been found guilty for sending to Judge Speer the letters which contained the accusations. However, the Huff civil case does not, it is said, figure to any great extent in the investigation, the probe being concerned with the judge's record for the past 28 years. Inspector Lewis has interviewed numerous Macon attorneys, court officials and citizens, and he has begun the taking of affidavits. Newspaper files are also being consulted.

District Attorney Alexander Akerman declines to make any statement as to the investigation, referring inquirers to the Attorney General for information. Mr. Lewis also refuses to discuss the assignment.

Not Opposed by Bartlett.

It is believed here that Congressman Bartlett was approached by the Department of Justice with regard to the investigation of Judge Speer, and that he did not oppose it.

Colonel Huff states that regardless of the activity of the Department of Justice he is proceeding with his plan of petitioning Congress to investigate charges which he will make against Judge Speer. He says that his charges have slight connection with his case, but deal almost altogether with other acts which he imputes to Judge Speer.

Colonel Huff is expecting a visit from Inspector Lewis, and he says he will freely give the special agent all information that he has in his possession.

The disclosure that Judge Speer is under fire has caused a genuine sensation here.

Allies Plan Peace, But Press Sees War

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BELGRADE, SERVIA, June 13.—Despite the fact that both Servia and Bulgaria have agreed to Russian arbitration in their territorial quarrel and that Servia has proposed a reduction of three-fourths of the Servian and Bulgarian armies to promote peace, the official press to-day insisted that the situation is unimproved.

These papers printed violent attacks against Bulgaria, charging that country with being a "robber," seeking the lion's share of Balkan war spoils.

Fullbright Intends To End Pistol Toting

H. J. Fullbright, representative from Burke County, has prepared a measure for introduction at the coming session of the Legislature further to curtail the promiscuous carrying of firearms.

Mr. Fullbright was active in the framing and advocacy of the law now on the statute books. He now proposes to discourage "pistol-toting" still more by limiting the sale of revolvers and cartridges.

No one who has not a license to carry weapons can procure cartridges under the bill.

2 Decatur Children Failed to Attend School in 12 Months

Decatur probably is the only town on the Georgia map that really does not need a compulsory education law, as proposed by Representative Fullbright, of Burke County, for there are only two children between the ages of 6 and 14 that have not attended school during the past 12 months, an investigation just completed shows.

And this is not all—Decatur hasn't a single illiterate white child and she has a hundred more school children than any other Georgia town of equal size. A building permit for a new school building, costing $22,000, has been issued, also.

These and other things, indicative of Decatur's progressiveness, including statement of Decatur's building record increase of 35 per cent over last year, are being scattered broadcast by the Decatur Board of Trade, which is one of the livest organizations of its kind in the State.

CASH BUYING INDICATES BUSINESS IS GOOD

Retail Dealers Report Big Sale Increases Over Last Year, With Good Collections.

Retail trade in Atlanta is making a remarkable showing. Nearly every Whitehall Street merchant reports an increase of sales over 1912, good collections and a remarkable amount of cash trade.

Were they not so cheering, the statements would be monotonous in their unanimity. Busy streets, busy clerks, and busy office forces bear out the assertions of prosperity and further emphasize the fact that the depression in New York is by no means to be taken as typical of the conditions in this city.

"I don't like a croaker," remarked F. J. Paxon. "The other day it rained. A friend, head of a conservative business, dropped in to see me. He certainly was blue.

"'Business is rotten,' he ejaculated.

"'I don't know anything about the inside of your business,' I told him, 'but I'll bet you a box of cigars that your sales are ahead of last year.'

"'I'll take you,' he remarked. 'I'll get some cigars anyhow.'

Worth the Cigars.

"But he sent me the box of Havanas you see on my desk. He had his accounting department run a total of his sales, and wrote me a note saying it was worth the cigars to get cured of the blues. His sales showed several hundred dollars' gain over last year, which was an excellent season.

"So it goes, all down the line. The business man and the financier get bilious. They need calomel. They need a wider viewpoint. They are too easily influenced by a rainy day or one or two complaints.

"Jones comes to me and says he can't pay his bill and wants an extension. Smith drops in next day with the same tale. Robinson has a wail of identical nature. I get depressed and decide collections are poor. In the meantime, 97 other people have paid their bills at the cashier's window and I haven't seen them. At the end of the month, I find collections up to normal.

"January, February and March brought us sales equal to the first quarter of 1912. April and May brought substantial gains. We look for continued good business."

Cash Sales Larger.

Lloyd B. Parks, dealing in men's goods, declares spring business was excellent.

"We are especially gratified," says Mr. Parks, "at noting the considerable increase in cash business. Each month the same month of 1912, and a large proportion of this is cash over the counter. Atlanta certainly has no cause for complaint at trade. It towers far above all other Southern cities in prosperity.

"The firm outlook is encouraging, and this fall should break records."

"Business conditions in this city are absolutely sound and good," declares J. P. Allen. "Speaking for my own concern, each month of this year shows a substantial increase over the corresponding month of 1912."

"The volume of our sales is ahead of 1912, to date," says Fred S. Stewart. "Cash trade is about the same. People are buying good shoes, too. We are selling more and more high-priced shoes each year, fewer cheap shoes."

Henry S. Johnson, Sr., is well satisfied with the outlook.

"Business is satisfactory," he says. "We are well pleased, and see no cause for complaint."

"Atlanta In Good Shape."

Says W. H. Brittain, of J. M. High Co., "The season of 1912 was a good year. But 1913, it seems, will be better. The future looks bright. Cash sales are as good as last year. The total volume of business shows a nice increase. Collections are up to the 1912 mark. I am optimistic, and can't see why anyone should be otherwise. Certainly Atlanta is in good shape."

Legislators Plan to Save Innocent From Abuse of Dictograph

Three members of the Legislature are working on bills to restrict the use of dictographs. The abuses to which the instrument has been put at various times and the possibility that innocent persons may be defamed if the device is in the hands of unscrupulous persons led to the movement to limit their use to persons known to be entirely responsible.

Chicago Fan Dies in Hal Chase's Defense

CHICAGO, June 13.—Fred J. Porter fell dead while in the midst of a heated argument with baseball fans over the trading of Hal Chase by the Yankees to the White Sox.

Herman Schweitzer and J. B. Willet told Porter that Chase was the Yankees' "hoodoo," and the Sox would land in the "cellar" before the season was over.

Porter grew excited in his defense of Chase, staggered into a chair and died.

Hot Race on for Presidency of Georgia Senate

Allen and Anderson Both Claim Victory Is Sure

Claims of Pledged Votes Are Heard With Doubtful Ears by Political Experts.

The most interesting race for political office in Georgia is the contest between John T. Allen, Senator from the Twentieth District, and J. Randolpr Anderson, Senator from the First District, for the Presidency of the Georgia Senate.

Both men claim to have sufficient votes already pledged to elect, but the impression is that neither man really has.

There are quite as many men willing to bet on Allen as on Anderson. Each has his avowed following in the new Senate, but not nearly enough Senators to elect either are talking right out loud in meeting.

Senator John T. Allen, who represents the Twentieth District.

Senator J. Randolph Anderson, of the First District.

Judge Allen is a former member of the Senate. He is one of Middle Georgia's best known and most prominent attorneys. He is a fine parliamentarian, a good mixer, and a man of poise and common sense.

Mr. Anderson is one of South Georgia's best known attorneys. He has been a member of the House several times, is skilled in political diplomacy, and is known as a most resourceful man in the gentle game of politics.

Anderson First Announced.

Mr. Anderson was a member of the last House, and took a very prominent part in its proceedings. He long ago announced his candidacy for the Presidency of the Senate, and was named Senator in the elections last fall, without opposition, and with the distinct understanding that he was to be in the race for the Senate Presidency.

Judge Allen likewise was named Senator from his district, without opposition, but did not enter the race for the Presidency until after his election to the Senate.

Both men have secured headquarters in the Kimball House, where things will be kept on the jump until the contest is decided.

Little Chance Between Two.

As between Allen and Anderson personally, there seems to be very little room for choice.

Politically, moreover, they have not been avowed enemies, although they have differed widely on many subjects.

Besides being a practicing attorney in Savannah, Mr. Anderson has large and extensive commercial and manufacturing interests there, while Senator Allen, besides being a practicing attorney in Milledgeville, is interested in banking enterprises.

The profound impression among political observers is that it will require an absolute "show down" between Allen and Anderson to determine which shall be President of the Georgia Senate, and ex officio Lieutenant Governor.

The "show down" cannot come until after the Senate is called to order on June 25, by Secretary Charles S. Northen.

JUDGE ROAN TO DECIDE CONLEY'S JAIL FATE

Chief of Detectives Lanford Receives No Order to Take the Negro Sweeper to Court.

A more explicit accusation of murder against Jim Conley, negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, than has yet been made since his name has been connected with the Phagan mystery, was expected Friday morning when Luther Z. Rosser, attorney for Leo Frank, was to appear before Judge L. S. Roan to combat Solicitor Dorsey's move to keep Conley at the police station and away from the tower.

The probability that Conley, accuser, and Frank, accused, would be brought face to face at the hearing was lessened when it was learned that Chief of Detectives Lanford had received no order to take the negro into court and had made the statement that he would not bring the negro out of the station without an order to that effect.

The hearing Friday morning was understood to be largely the outcome of a persistent demand on the part of Frank's attorneys that Conley, a self-confessed accessory after the fact of Mary Phagan's murder, and possibly the actual principal, should be removed from the police station and held in the tower.

His Rearrest Is Probable.

Judge Roan, following this agitation, decided that he had possessed no authority to remand the negro to the police station, rather than to the Tower. To checkmate the transfer back to the Tower Solicitor Dorsey petitioned that Conley be freed, representing that the need for holding him as a material witness no longer existed. Judge Roan set Friday morning for the hearing to show cause why the Solicitor's petition should not be granted.

The effect of the petition's success merely will be that Conley will be technically liberated, but will be rearrested and held "on suspicion," or as a material witness at the police station by the police officers. In the event of the failure of the petition Conley will be returned to the Tower unless the fight is carried still further.

Detectives Starnes and Campbell had another long talk with Conley before the hearing in Judge Roan's court. When they had concluded it was announced that the negro had made no changes in his story and no additions.

He persisted in his declaration, it was said, that if he only could meet Frank face to face he was confident he could make the factory superintendent "own up" to his alleged part in the crime. The detectives said that Conley expressed an apparently sincere willingness to face Frank at any time, and that he also said he was prepared to go before the Grand Jury and repeat his story.

Denies Force in Affidavit.

Conley's attorney, William M. Smith, was at the hearing before Judge Roan and had in his possession an affidavit signed by Conley, in which the negro said that he was at the station of his own free will and preferred to stay there, rather than at the jail. He esaid that he has been coerced in no way by the detectives.

Attorney Smith obtained the removal of his client from the Tower on the representation that persons had been allowed to visit the negro and make threats and otherwise intimidate him. One of the allegations was that a pistol had been pointed at the negro in his cell and that one of the visitors had acted in behalf of Frank as a "go-between."

All of these charges were to be investigated by Judge Roan in the course of the hearing. Many witnesses were called to prove that Attorney Smith had been greatly misled and that the Tower was the proper and legal place for Conley. Others were summoned to testify to the contrary.

DICTOGRAPH AND VICE INQUIRY OUTLINED

Witnesses Expected To Be Summoned Before Special Session Early Next Week.

The Grand Jury will outline Friday its inquiry into the dictograph and alleged police corruption charges. While no announcement would be made, it was understood a list of witnesses will be prepared and summoned before a special session the first of next week.

Washington detectives are scouring that city in an effort to locate young George Gentry, the stenographer whose affidavit that the published dictograph report was "padded" was the sensation of the controversy between Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford and Colonel Thomas B. Felder.

Gentry Not Found Yet.

Chief of Police James L. Beavers, who is in Washington, secured the aid of the District detectives to have the youth located. Although the search has been in progress two days, it has carried the detectives no further than to locate Miss Jeannette Henning, a law clerk, who said she witnessed the affidavit without reading it or making any inquiry. Miss Henning said the paper was signed by her in room 802 of the Westery Building, occupied by the Louisville and Nashville Railroad.

Chief Beavers would not comment at any length on the new affidavit. He was of the same opinion Chief Lanford had expressed—that the paper was not genuine and if Gentry were produced he would testify that the first dictograph publication was correct.

Felder Sees No Difficulty.

Colonel Felder said there was no especial difficulty in locating Gentry and that he would be produced to testify if the Grand Jury wanted him. He said the young man had accepted a position as stenographer for one month, and that as soon as the month was out he would return to Atlanta.

Gentry was located about two weeks ago by a Burns detective of the Washington branch. Descriptions of him had been furnished every agency in America and there was a sharp lookout in every large city.

Foreman L. H. Beck stated it would be impossible to delve into the affair at any length this week on account of the large number of criminal cases that demanded immediate attention. He said, however, that the jury had determined to make an exhaustive investigation.

Clear Calendar To-day, Maybe.

The calendar of cases prepared by the Solicitor will in all probability be disposed of to-day and leave the jury with a clean slate for the remainder of the term. Mr. Beck intimated that at least three days of each week until the end of the month would be taken up in hearing evidence in the dictograph and vice controversy.

No matters will be discussed by the jury Friday except routine criminal cases, and a special probe at the request of the Solicitor into a report that the negro Jim Conley was intimidated while he was a prisoner in the Tower.

Mr. Business Man Wakes Up and Finds Everything Has Gone Wrong on Hoodoo Day.

Mr. Peach, of Peachtree, got up this morning, stepped on a tack, found two holes in his new silk socks, lost his collar button down the hot-air radiator, bumped his head on the chiffonier when he stooped to look for the button and came down to breakfast with a grouch.

"The cook has quit and the gas stove's out of fix and the milkman left a quart of milk too sour for your cereal," announced Mrs. Peach, pleasantly, or nearly so. "And there's a hat sale on at the Emporium and I need $38.49 for that, and the sleeping porch must be rescreened, and I've found my last year's matinee gown positively won't do another season.

"And the chauffeur says you can't drive in this morning, for the car has broken its gallliwampus and needs a new set of gears, three tires, a coat of paint and a cylinder made over.

"Well, John, I'm sorry the bacon isn't edible, but you must remember you didn't marry a cook. That's right, run off without kissing me!"

Mr. Peach missed the trolley, had to wait for the next one, and struck a crowd. A fat man stepped on his pet corn, the conductor jabbed him in the ribs and urged him to move inside, and a baby smeared molasses candy over his summer suit.

He stubbed his toe stepping into the elevator; broke his new straw kelly trying to be polite when a woman got in; was carried three floors past his own, and then found he had left his office keys in his other clothes. He dropped to the basement, climbed to the roof and finally found the janitor with a master key. Mr. Peach was firmly convinced something had hoodooed him. At last he opened his desk. Three things stared him in the face. A summons for jury duty, a notice of overdraft at his bank, and his calendar pad. And on the latter was inscribed:

FRIDAY,
13th,
Nineteen-Thirteen.

It won't happen anything like that for 100 years, and maybe not then.

NEW MEN FORGE TO THE TOP IN RIFLE SHOOT

Oscar C. Holleran, Atlanta, Leads Field in Skirmish Firing—Evans Praises Men

With Governor Brown and Brigadier General R. K. Evans, of the regular army looking on, new blod took the lead in the Georgia National Guard elimination shoot at the Camp Evans file range in the second day of the meet. Both the first and second men are from the Fifth Regiment, Atlanta.

Oscar C. Holleran, of the Gate City Guards, forged to the front after a day of 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing, with a percentage of 259. Right behind him was J. R. Cothran, of Company D, who is competing for the first time. The "old-timers" took their drop in the standing with good grace, extending congratulations to the youngsters on their showing.

To-day the squad divided into ten teams of five men each to compete for team trophies.

New Scores to Be Added.

Individual scroes will be added to the scores already made and the 30 highest men will be selected to return to Atlanta next month, when the final elimination for the selection of a team to go to Camp Perry, Ohio, will begin.

That the team which will be developed through this shoot will be able to uphold the Georgia record is the belief of the officials who are in charge and who have witnessed the competition for many years.

Governor Brown and General Evans were delighted at the records made. General Evans spoke in high compliment of the Georgia men. He will be the chief executive officer at Camp Perry this year.

"The Georgia National Guard is wonderfully well organized," said General Evans. "The officers are men of judgment and there is a spirit of enthusiasm throughout that shows up mighty well to the regular officers. Throughout the country there has been great progress among the National Guard, and I am glad to know that Georgia is doing so well."

Visitors Given Barbecue.

Governor Brown and General Evans arrived at the range in time to witness the skirmish firing. The ten-men teams moved down the range with precision.

Following the completion of the day's shooting, the party moved to the mess tent, where the visitors enjoyed a barbecue.

Several other officers of the regular army accompanied General Evans. Among them were Colonel C. H. Barth, of the Department of the Gulf, and Colonel VanOrsdale and Major W. A. Martin, of the Seventeenth Infantry, stationed at Fort McPherson.

The 1,000-yard shooting and skirmish firing caused a shake-up in the standing, which was featured by Holleran and Cothran forging to the lead. Holleran is leading Cothran by but two points. Beginning of the shoot this morning, though, found the "veterans" getting down to business in their old-time form, determined to recover their lost laurels.

Following is the standing of the men through Thursday's shoot:

Georgia U. Man Plans Alumni Bureau Here

The alumni of the University of Georgia may establish an "alumni bureau" in Atlanta, to distribute literature, issue a periodical and keep in touch with the graduates, if a plan conceived by Thomas W. Connally, of Atlanta, is adopted.

Mr. Connally will present his plan to the alumni association at Athens Tuesday when the University will celebrate "Alumni Day."

Postoffice Robbers Start Freedom Fight

Asserting that their sentences should not be cumulative and that they have served full time, Attorney Lamar Hill, of Atlanta, has issued a habeas corpus writ asking for the release of Edward F. Judge Newman, of the Federal Court, has set June 20 as the date for hearing the writ.

U. S. POLO PLAYERS STILL 2-TO-1 BET

NEW YORK, June 13.—The American and British polo teams to-day went through a light practice in final preparation for their second battle, which will be staged to-morrow on the Meadowbrook, N. Y., grounds.

The Americans, despite the fact that J. Monte Waterbury, star of Tuesday's game, will be unable to play, are 2 to 1 betting favorites. There is little English money in sight.

Louis E. Stoddard, who will replace Monte Waterbury, is a player of exceptional ability, and it is felt by the American polo enthusiasts that he will be a fit substitute. Stoddard will play No. 1; Larry Waterbury, No. 2; Harry Payne Whitney, No. 3, and Devereaux Milburn, back.

The line-up of the Britons will be the same as Tuesday, although there has been some rumors that F. M. Freake would play at No. 2 in place of Captain Edwards.

Practically every reserved ticket for the game to-morrow has been sold. Speculators are said to have secured a big bunch of choice seats and are demanding—and getting—fancy prices for them.

Minister Arrests Shooting Cowboys

DEBEQUE, COL., June 13.—Twenty-five cowboys who were shooting up this town were placed under arrest by the Rev. A. F. Glover, pastor of the Methodist Church here. The rioting cowboys were too amazed to offer resistance when the pastor, pistol in hand, confronted them.

Fire Whistle First, Sleep Comes Second

NEW YORK, June 13.—The Supreme Court dissolved the injunction of Joseph J. Touhy, of Corona, N. Y., to prevent the blowing of whistles to arouse volunteer firemen here at night. He ruled that the public welfare was more important than Touhy's sleep.

EAST ORANGE, N. J., June 13.—Standing beside the coffin in which lay the body of the bride's mother, Carl J. Bellard, of Arlington and Miss Alice O. Hazzard, of East Orange, N. J., were married in obedience to the dying wishes of Mrs. Hazzard.

PLAN CORN PRIZES FOR POOR FIELDS

A new series of prizes, planned for the benefit of boys who are compelled to plant grain in unfertile land, will be offered at the annual corn show under the auspices of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The show again will be held in the corridors of the State Capitol.

While the new awards will not affect the regular prizes, they are designed to lift the "poor land handicap" under which many have been laboring.

The new prizes are offered for the greatest proportionate increase an acre, and are expected to serve the purposes of increasing the interest in the show, and in inducing the boys to cultivate their land and make it better. Many boys last year planted in bad land and showed splendid increases in the volume of grain. They were not given prizes because their best efforts were not equal to the normal yield of the richer lands.

The show committee of the Chamber of Commerce has begun its work and will hold meetings at intervals through the summer. It is planned to make the next show the best in the history of the State.

ATLANTANS WILL WITNESS CANAL OPENING

Plan Trip as Members of Commercial Congress, Which Will Send Big Delegation.

Many of Atlanta's most prominent and progressive business men discussed Friday a trip to the Panama Canal Zone. Louis C. Irvine, of Mobile, general director of the Panama Canal celebration of the Southern Commercial Congress, was in this city Thursday outlining the trip and telling of a gigantic celebration in Mobile preliminary to sailing.

One thousand members of the Southern Commercial Congress, with many business men, will meet at Mobile the last week in October. The Latin-American trade tour, limited to 50 selected guests, who will visit the chief Latin-American States for 90 days to give thorough study to commercial conditions, will there be organized.

The route of the party has been changed because of slides in the Culebra cut, which delayed the opening of the canal. The travelers will leave Mobile about October 25, reaching the Isthmus before November 1, the date set for the official opening of the canal.

After the ceremonies at Panama, the travelers will touch Pyta, Colon, Eten, Pacasmayo, Salavery and Callao, Peru, and from Callao by train to Lima. They will leave Lima for inland points and thence back to Callao, Mollendo, Arequto and Guayaquil, thence to La Paz, Bolivia; Antofagasto, Chile; Coquimbo, Valparaiso, Santiago, Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, Montevideo, Uruguay; Santos, Brazil, and Rio de Janeiro. They will sail from Rio de Janeiro; call at Bahia, Trinidad, Barbados, and will arrive at New York about Christmas.

It is expected that after attending the opening of the canal many of the travelers will return direct.

A permanent memorial of the completion of the canal is proposed by the Southern Commercial Congress as an outgrowth of the convention in Mobile. Prizes of fifteen complimentary appointments as honor delegates and guests of the convention to the Panama Canal and the trip with the Latin-American expedition are offered for the best suggestion for this memorial.

These prizes are offered to arouse study on the question and bring in suggestions of a proper form for a permanent memorial. The selection of the form is left to an official jury, comprising Hon. William J. Bryan, Secretary of State, chairman, and Hon. John Barrett, Director General of the Pan-American Union.

Asa G. Candler and Harvie Jordan, of Atlanta, are directors of the congress, which includes some of the most prominent men south of the Mason and Dixon line.

TIFTON IS AFTER EXPERIMENTAL BRANCH FARM

Representative Ellis Has Matter in Hand, and Scrap in Legislature Is Expepcted.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

A serious effort is to be made in the next Legislature to obtain a branch experiment station for South Georgia, to be located at Tifton.

Representative R. C. Ellis, of Tift County, has the matter in charge, and already claims to have made much progress with his measure.

The citizens of Tift and surrounding territory have indorsed his plan heartily, and there is a good chance that it may succeed. This is particularly true, it seems, because of recent suggestions that the agricultural station at Experiment, near Griffin, be removed to Athens.

At a meeting of the board of governors of the Tifton Chamber of Commerce a committee, consisting of Colonel R. E. Dinsmore, Briggs Carson and E. O. Hood, was appointed to draft suitable resolutions indorsing Colonel Ellis' bill, and the Chamber of Commerce will give him its hearty support in putting the measure through the Legislature.

A bill providing for the establishment of a branch experiment station at Tifton, introduced by Representative Ellis in 1911, was favorably reported by the committee, but failed of passage during the closing days of the session.

The conditions in South Georgia at the present time make an experiment station more of a necessity than ever before, in the opinion of Representativ Ellis. The approach of the boll weevil, the paralyzed condition of the Sea Island cotton market, the rapid development of fruit and nut growing and agriculture in South Georgaa, all are matters of first concern in that section.

It is not at all unlikely that Mr. Ellis' proposed bill will open the entire question of removing the present agricultural station from Griffin to Athens, and if it does, one of the very liveliest and most interesting fights of the entire session will thereby be precipitated.

Judge John Allen, of Baldwin, and Senator Randolph Anderson, of Chatham, rival candidates for the presidency of the Senate, met in the Kimball House lobby this morning and shook hands cordially.

They had occupied adjoining but not communicating rooms the night before, and had just discovered that they had been assigned to headquarters after the same fashion.

"I overheard you talking in your sleep last night, Senator," said Senator Allen, "and your soliloquy was quite interesting."

"What did I say?" inquired Anderson.

"You were petitioning the Lord to make those 25 votes you claim stick," laughed Allen.

"Well, I've got 'em—how many have you?" said Anderson.

"Twenty-seven," drawled Allen.

"Humph! That's more than there are in the Senate," mused the Chathamite.

"Well, I don't care how much you talk in your sleep, so long as you don't walk in it," remarked Allen, as he walked away.

"We seem to keep together in the matter of rooms, headquarters and claims," said Anderson, as Allen strolled away.

Muscogee County, for the first time in its history, will have three Representatives in the Legislature when the House is called to order on June 25.

Under the last census, Laurens lost its place as the junior "big six" county, and Muscogee slipped in. That entitles her to three members of the House.

As a matter of fact, however, Muscogee will have four members in the Legislature, for the Senator from that district also is a resident of the county in which Columbus is located.

Judge Henry Pevill, of Meriwether, is an advocate of a board of tax equalizers.

Discussing the matter, he said: "Our present tax machinery is antiquated. It does not reach the dodgers. Burdens are unequally distributed, and should be made to bear equally upon all. The present method amounts to nothing more than passing the hat around. Almost every taxpayer gives in as little as possible, and it is well nigh impossible to make the financial buckel and tongue meet. A board of equalizers in each county would reach a lot of hidden property and force all species to pay on its proper valuation. No good reason can be urged against a board of tax equalizers in every county, and I hope to see the General Assembly provide for them. We can only meet our financial obligations by raising more revenue, and we can not —must not—raise the tax rate."

One of the members from Clarke County will introduce in the next Legislature an "anti-pistol toting" bill.

The following is the gist of the measure:

"1. It shall be unlawful for any dealer in firearms to make a sale, loan or gift of any pistol or pistol cartridges unless an application for such sale, loan or gift be presented to the dealer that has the indorsement of at least two responsible citizens vouching for the applicant's good character.

"2. It shall be the duty of the dealer to file daily a sworn statement with the chief of police a copy of each application, giving name, description, etc., applicant as well as the caliber and number of the pistol, and make; also brand and size of pistol cartridges.

"3. It shall be the duty of the dealer to include in the sworn statement that the two indorsers are personally known to him as possessing good character, etc.

"4. Providing penalty for violation."

This bill follows closely the recommendations of two grand juries of Clarke County and has been very carefully thought out.

NEW YORKERS OF TO-DAY EXPECT LONGER LIFE

Table Is Prepared Showing That Chances Are Improved Over Those 30 Years Ago.

NEW YORK, June 13.—For the first time in its history, the Department of Health has prepared a life table. It is based upon the mortality statistics of the city during the triennium, 1909-1911, and permits of comparison with the results of the life table of New York City prepared under the direction of the late Dr. John S. Billings in 1882 for the authorities of the Federal census, and based upon the mortality statistics for the triennium, 1879-1881.

Thirty years ago a child under 5 years of age had an expectancy of 41 years, while a child of that age at the present day may look forward to an additional 52 years, an increase of 11 years.

The life of a child between 5 and 10 years has been prolonged more than 5 years.

A person from 25 to 30 years of age had an expectancy 30 years ago of about 32.6 years, while at the present time his expectancy is 34.3 years, an increase of 1.7 years.

Persons between 40 and 45 years had an expectancy of 23.9 years a generation and a half ago, and at the present time one of 23.4 years, a decreased expectancy of six months.

The table further shows that there is a constant diminution of the duration of life from the fortieth year onward, varying from six months at 40 years of age, to 3 years and 3 months at 85 years of age.

On the whole, says the Board of Health in commenting on its life table, the expectancy of life is greater among females than among males before 40 years of age. After 40 the reverse is true.

FRIENDS OF BOY FORGER SEEK HIS RELEASE

Suspended Sentence Movement Active in Behalf of Wayward Youth in Prison Here.

An effort to gain the release from prison of Paul H. VanDeusen, 19 years old, who several months ago forged a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, is being made by influential citizens throughout the United States who are active in the suspended sentence movement.

United States District Attorney Tate, of Atlanta, has received nearly twenty petitions asking that VanDeusen be given another chance.

VanDeusen several months ago lived in Atlanta with Roy Rubenstien. The two boys look much alike. Rubenstien had a postal savings account at the local postoffice. On two different occasions VanDeusen took the account book of Rubenstien to the postoffice and drew a total of $15 in Rubenstien's name.

Stole Money in Los Angeles.

Soon afterward VanDeusen went to Los Angeles, where he got a position with the Western Union Telegraph Company as a telegrapher. In some manner he appropriated $53 of the company's money and was arrested.

VanDeusen pleaded guilty and was sentenced to three years. The judge taking into consideration the age of the prison, suspended sentence and paroled VanDeusen back to his mother, Mrs. Susan VanDeusen, of Jamestown, N. Y. After he had been paroled in Los Angeles he was rearrested on the charge of forging a postal savings certificate in Atlanta, and arrangements were made to bring VanDeusen to Atlanta for trial.

Those interested in his case are trying to get the boy released to go back to his mother under the order of the Los Angeles court, and the various petitions received by the District Attorney disclose pathetic facts regarding the circumstances of the boys' parents.

Family Is in Want.

His father, Judd VanDeusen, has been in an insane asylum for fourteen years. Mrs. VanDeuson works in a laundry for $6 a week. She has three other boys and two girls. At present the family is in want, and it is claimed that one boy, Paul, in an endeavor to help his family, was led into crime.

Since the arrest of the boy on the Atlanta charge restitution for the amount stolen has been made.

It is thought the United States Attorney General will authorize the release of VanDeusen and give him another chance, allowing the boy to return to his mother. VanDeusen, however, will be indicted here and this indictment will be held over him. In case he fails to do right, the indictment will be pressed.

CANAL TO BE DRY UNTIL WILSON VIEWS IT

President Will Wait Congress Adjournment—Goethals Anxious to be Relieved of Job.

WASHINGTON, June 13.—Colonel W. E. Goethals, Chief Engineer of the Panama Canal, called at the White House yesterday to discuss the progress of work there. He told the President that water could be turned into the Canal shortly after October 1, but that he would not order it done if the President found it impossible to visit the Canal during September.

President Wilson assured the Chief Engineer that he would visit Panama the moment Congress adjourned.

Peculiar Position.

Colonel Goethals has been the Chief Engineer and supreme executive of the Canal organization since the project was put in the hands of army engineers.

These functions are not based on any law of Congress, but the direct admonition of President Roosevelt to the members of the commission when he appointed them. He told them there was no authority in law for making Colonel Goethals the head of the force to be employed on the Canal, but that his power of appointment would be used to enforce his decision not to ask Congress for further legislation and to make Colonel Goethals the supreme authority. Every member of the commission understood and accepted his appointment on that condition.

President Taft pursued the same method as his predecessor, and Colonel Goethals' direction of affairs met with no opposition until toward the end of the recent Presidential term.

Opposition Develops.

Reports say that the disposition to resent the authority of Colonel Goethals has reached a critical stage, threatening to weaken the commission in the closing months of its task and possibly postpone the completion of the Canal beyond the time set for that consummation. Consequently much importance is placed on President Wilson's tentative selection of Richard L. Metcalfe of Nebraska for civilian member of the Isthmian Commission in place of Maurice H. Thatcher.

It is understood that Colonel Geothals is to be consulted freely by President Wilson on the whole situation.

Colonel Goethals does not want to have charge of the administration of the Canal. He does not want to remain on the Isthmus even long enough to see the big inauguration ceremonies that have been planned.

Detroit Bares Big Pool Room Swindle

DETROIT, MICH., June 13.—In the arrest of H. R. Stanley, of Golden, Colo., and J. J. Gorgas, of St. Louis, at Mount Clemens to-day, Detroit police believe they have two of the principals in a projected "fake" pool room that would have been capable of gigantic swindles.

Two others were arrested at New Baltimore later.

In raiding rooms that Stanley and Borgas had rented, nearly $100,000 in "green" money and $3,000 in good currency was found.

Rubber Company's Directors Censured

LONDON, June 13.—"Directors who merely attend board meetings and sign checks can not escape their share of moral responsibility when gross abuses are revealed," declared the committee of the House of Commons investigating Peruvian rubber atrocities.

PLAN BOULEVARD ON IVY, TRACKS ON PIEDMONT

Council Committee and Arkwright Tentatively Agree to Scheme to Ease Congestion.

Ivy Street for a boulevard and Piedmont Avenue for double track car service was the plan tentatively favored by the street railway committee of the General Council and President P. S. Arkwright, of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, Thursday afternoon.

Pending grading and repaving, Ivy Street has been stripped of car tracks. It is the desire of the street railway committee to keep the tracks off, making the street an unobstructed boulevard, and to compensate the street railway company for loss of is Ivy Street franchise by permitting the laying of double tracks on Piedmont Avenue.

President Arkwright agreed this scheme would be advantageous to the street railway company as well as to the city.

Would Ease Congestion.

The double track service on Piedmont would extend from East Pine Street to Decatur. It would take care of traffic from all of North and Northeast Atlanta, affording relief from congestion to Pine Street.

With Ivy Street as an exclusive vehicle thoroughfare, even this kind of traffic would be diverted thereto from Peachtree, so that faster schedules could be maintained. Vehicles, in turn, could make faster time on Ivy.

The Ivy Street boulevard proposition came up when President Arkwright asked the Street Railway Committee for two franchises, one on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer, and one on Ivy Street from Edgewood to Auburn. These franchises are for short rights-of-way, designed to facilitate ingress and egress to and from the car barns.

It was when this request was made that George H. Boynton, chairman of the Street Car Committee, made known the desire of the committeemen to convert Ivy Street into a boulevard and divert street car traffic to Piedmont.

Arkwright Asks More Time.

This plan would include the short franchise sought by the street car company on Piedmont from Decatur to Edgewood. President Arkwright signified that the plan would be acceptable to his company, but he wanted further time before agreeing.

Owners of property on Piedmont Avenue from Decatur to Gilmer Streets object to the new plan, but the Street Car Committee thinks they must yield for the benefit of the whole city.

Chairman George H. Boynton was instructed by the committee to consult with the Piedmont Avenue objectors and report to the General Council as early as possible. Mr. Boynton said he would endeavor to reach an agreement with them in time to report at the General Council next Monday.

Whistled to Hide Agony From Sister

NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y., June 13. While he was being carried to an ambulance with his right leg nearly blown off by a soda water tank explosion at Glen Island, Robert Boulle, 16 years old, of New Rochelle, began to whistle "Here Comes My Daddy Now" when he was told that his sister was approaching.

The ruse worked, for his sister, thinking he was only slightly hurt, spent the rest of the day with her friends.

COLD WAVE FLEES FROM STICKY HEAT

Weather Man's Predicted Change Arrives on Schedule Time. Hot Times Coming.

The weather man's reputation for freaky stunts has been fully established at last—with one fell swoop (observe the date) Friday, June 13, he has brought upon Atlantans again that sticky, sizzling brand of weather which gives the street-corner gossipers something to talk about.

The shift from real winter to summer was indicated Thursday afternoon when the mercury went up, although not enough to bring out straw hats and uncovered peek-a-boos. Friday morning, however, saw a real change and many venturesome citizens, with brand new summer clothes, straw hats and things, looking ahead a few hours, prepared themselves for real hot weather.

It wasn't a bad guess, for the temperature rose steadily all during the morning until about noon when it was almost normal again. The weather man says this will continue without a break—but, who can tell, for it's a freaky day and it may be just freaky weather.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"I WAS reading a piece in the paper," said the Head Barber, "about a rich young girl that had a Vassar education, and that married a man who couldn't read nor write. She taught him so much in five years that he became the president of a bank the other day and is the leading citizen of his town."

"He must have been a awful bright man or else she was some teacher," declared the Manicure Lady. "I have heard of cases like that, but I never seen one. It always sounds kind of fishy to me, because even after a man has went to school a few years he finds out that there is plenty he can learn from his wife. Anyhow, I'd hate to marry a man that didn't have no schooling at all. Of course I would be willing to learn him what I was learned at school, like arithmetic and grammar and history, but I should think it would be a kind of a nuisance to be a wife and school teacher at the same time."

"It ain't a man's fault if he never had no opportunities," said the Head Barber. "I know a lot of bright men that never went to no school or college."

Not So Sure.

"I know," said the Manicure Lady, "but I don't like to think that after waiting all these years I might have to marry a illiterate man. Of course, if he was handsome and accomplished and rich I wouldn't expect him to know all about Greek and Latin, because I ain't sure myself just when Oliver Goldsmith made so much trouble for King Charles of England, or when Cromwell crossed the Alps to fight the Romans under Lord Napoleon. I don't think any girl ought to expect her husband to know and remember all about them old classics, especially if he is busy getting the money to keep up a apartment in Atlanta or Chattanooga. All I want my husband to know is to be able to talk intelligent in a cultivated crowd, and not set around murdering no queen's English. And I think a husband ought to have some kind of accomplishment like playing the piano or making a good after dinner speech or knowing pinochle good enough to hold his own with the Germans. I wouldn't like to marry a man that never did nothing but grub out a living."

"The wife has got all the accomplishments in our family," said the Head Barber. "I never had much chance when I was a kid to do anything except get up when the alarm clock rang in the morning, so I didn't get into music or golf or any of them fine arts. All the fun I get is a day off once in a while to go to the ball game, and I guess the wife must think I'm a kind of ordinary guy alongside some of the friends I invite to the house. She is musical and a good pianist, and some of the fellows I know can spiel a lot themselves, so I just sit back and let them shine."

Some Compliments.

"I'll bet you are a dear, good husband, just the same," said the Manicure Lady. "You don't need no accomplishments, George, to stand a lot higher with me than some of the actors and boy comics that comes in here to have their nails did. I never liked the way you keep doping out them race horses, and I smelt something like a highball when you blew in the other morning, but there's a lot more good in you than most men, George, and that's no salve, either. I don't think I'm a very poor picker, George, but if you was single I'd say ya mighty swift when you proposed."

"If I was married to anybody else except the missus," said the Head Barber, "I'd wish I was single. You are going to make some lucky guy a swell wife. Gee, we're getting along great this morning, ain't we?"

See Them, Too.

Club Woman—If you come to our meeting you'll hear some plain things.

Male Thing—Oh! And see them, no doubt.

A Conundrum.

"Look here," said the landlord; "why don't you pay your rent?"

"I give it up," replied Slowpay.

"But you don't," insisted the landlord; "that's what I'm kicking about."

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS

Gordon Kelly, a mountain boy of Georgia, goes to Atlanta. He becomes the sensation of the baseball world through his marvelous playing, although he said that he had never played a game before arriving in Atlanta. He is bought by the Boston American League Club for $50,000. Kelly incurs the enmity of Forrest Cain, a wealthy ne'er-do-well, at the same time winning the friendship and love of Mildred Deery, daughter of an Atlanta banker. Kelly is hurt in a game and Mildred runs to his assistance. He recovers, leaves the hospital and mysteriously disappears. He is not heard from for months. Mildred admits to herself that she loves Kelly. Her father dislikes the publicity given Mildred's assistance to Kelly on the baseball field. He gets Mildred to agree to go to the mountains. Cain follows Mildred and calls upon her. While Mildred is fishing she suddenly comes upon Gordon Kelly. In the meeting each learns of the other's love. Kelly is sought everywhere by the press.

Now go on with the story.

"You may not realize it, Miss Deery, but you have just told me a very important piece of news. It will create a big sensation all over the country. My paper was crazy about it. They're getting out an extra on it."

"Don't forget our bargain," said Mildred, with a smile.

"Absolutely no," declared Farnsworth with fervor. He was pretty well pleased with himself. He had unearthed, through his own efforts and without aid, the biggest piece of news of his career. He had visions of a substantial cash present and a raise in salary from his boss. This pleasing thought reminded him that he hadn't smoked a cigarette in 20 minutes. He asked and received permission to smoke.

"This is pretty soft," he said to himself as he threw away the match. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia, having a cracking big piece of information handed to me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it? I guess this isn't my lucky day."

But business is business, and Farnsworth proceeded to it after three or four puffs of his cigarette.

"Now, Miss Deery," he said, "please tell me the rest of the story."

"Gordon Kelly has lived in this neighborhood all his life," began Mildred. "After he left the hospital he came up here. I met him one day while I was fishing in the brook. I hadn't the faintest idea that he was within a hundred miles of here. I didn't even know at the time that his home was near here. My father built this bungalow recently and I think my parents wanted me to come here on account of what the papers said about me, or, rather, to escape the embarrassment I had brought of myself. At any rate I came up and found everything so delightful and so cool and nice that I have stayed here ever since."

Then Disappeared.

"Well, anyway," she continued after a pause, "you want to know about Mr. Kelly. As I said, I was very much surprised when I saw him here. I think it was the last part of May. I saw him quite often for several weeks. My mother came up again—she is here now—and there was a little boy here, the son of my father's superintendent, and we all used to go fishing and tramping around. Mr. Kelly was good company and he knew every inch of the mountain country.

"One afternoon, late in July, Mr. Kelly started off on a walk along the brook that runs near where he lives—I get this from the people at his home—and about half an hour after he started out a cyclone swept along the edge of that brook and from that day to this Mr. Kelly hasn't been seen."

"Was he killed?" asked Farnsworth.

"A good many people around here think so, but I don't. Something tells me he is alive and well and will turn and it is sure that he didn't perish in the storm. That's all I know about the appearance and disappearance of Mr. Kelly, Mr. Farnsworth," said Mildred in conclusion.

The young man arose from his chair and went to the telephone again. He was gone fifteen minutes.

"I want to thank you for all this information, Miss Deery," he said. "But I want to warn you that there will probably be a score of reporters up here to-morrow. I would advise you to keep under cover—return to Atlanta, maybe; otherwise, you will be annoyed a whole lot. While I have kept my promise and will continue to, keep it as regards using your name, the other reporters will find out that you live near here and you will have an unpleasant time of it."

"I think that is good advice; I shall speak to my mother about it," replied Mildred.

Useless to Remain.

"I don't believe it would do any good for me to stay up here any longer. I suppose the people around here have searched for Gordon Kelly in every conceivable place?"

"They have, Mr. Farnsworth. It would be useless for you to remain, expecting any news of Mr. Kelly."

"Then I will thank you again and start for the celebrated summer resort, known as Pew Creek."

Mildred laughed as he arose to go.

"You can not get a train before 3:18. Why don't you send that Cracker back by himself and take lunch with us? I will drive you to the station in an automobile."

Clever Mildred Deery. She was so nice to the young man that he would be sure to keep his promise to her.

"Miss Deery," returned the young man, "you are not only very kind, but you are a mind-reader. I accept with pleasure. If you could only have seen the meal that jehu prepared for me this morning!"

Farnsworth settled with Case from a big roll of office money. His bill was $1.25, made up of the following items: Supper, 25 cents; breakfast, 25 cents; lodging, 25 cents; hire of horse and carriage and services of driver, half a day, 50 cents.

"I should worry," remarked the young man to himself, as Gabe Case drove away.

"This is pretty soft," said Farnsworth to himself. "Here I am in the coolest spot in Georgia having a cracking big piece of information handed me by a pretty woman. Can you beat it?"

CHAPTER XXVII.

IT is necessary to go back and pick up the loose threads of this narrative.

When the crisis in the illness of Forrest Cain's sister had passed and she was on the road to recovery, Cain wrote Mildred that he was coming to the mountains again, and two days later he appeared where Mildred was, claiming his automobile and also claiming the fulfillment of the promise she had made him to go riding with him alone. Her mind was already prepared for this demand, so after she had learned all about his sister's condition, she expressed her sympathy and told him she would go with him that afternoon if he cared to have her.

Mildred had warned Elmer Shephard not to say anything to anyone about their meeting Gordon Kelly and she was glad she did so, as the boy appeared just as Cain was leaving. After Cain had gone the lad joined her on the porch, his face clouded.

"I don't like Mr. Cain," he declared, petulantly. "What does he want to keep coming up here for?"

"Why, Elmer," said Mildred, reprovingly, "you shouldn't talk that way. He has always acted like a gentleman, hasn't he?"

"I don't care; I don't like him just the same. Gordon Kelly is the kind of man I like. He can do something. All Mr. Cain can do is to drive an automobile and dress in fancy clothes and hang around. I heard him say he would come again at 3 o'clock this afternoon. I wish he would stay away."

Thoughts Were Busy.

Mildred made no answer. Her thoughts were busy. Elmer had said just what was in her own mind, if he only had known it. The lad's quick perception had seen through the shallow, selfish visitor. After a while she said:

"Elmer, I have promised to go out riding with Mr. Cain this afternoon in his automobile. After I'm gone, if you care to do so, you may take the runabout and drive up to the bridge and stay around there a while. I will probably see you on my way back home. That isn't very exciting, I know, but I would like to have you do it if you don't mind."

Days ago she had taught the lad how to run the car and he was now quite an expert. The request she had just made of him was the result of a vague something in her mind. It had to do with Forrest Cain and the engagement she had made with him. She almost regretted making it, yet she knew what he had to say would have to be said, so she braved herself to go through the ordeal.

In the meantime Forrest Cain was speeding toward his shack in his car. He passed the point where the road crosses the bridge and about three miles farther came to the place where a road led off to the left through the large granite posts. Every time he had passed this point Cain had observed the granite posts. He knew they must be on what was supposed to be Gordon Kelly's property. Evidently, therefore, the road led to the habitation where Kelly lived before he went to Atlanta and broke his leg. Since his personal encounter with Gordon Kelly, Cain had often thought of him in connection with his mountain home, recalling what Deery had told him about the young man's father killing himself by jumping off a mountain while crazed with liquor. The weirdness of this act had created a profound impression on Cain.

The Granite Posts.

Approaching the granite posts on this particular morning, the incident of the strange death suddenly flashed across the mind of Cain. He brought his car to a stop and gazed curiously at the pillars, which seemed to stand as guardians of a mysterious realm. He then let his gaze wander to the road which passed through the posts and was soon lost to view, winding through a fine forest of hardwood trees. The road itself was hard, firm and well made and had a top dressing of granite, ground fine, the same kind of stone the pillars were made of. Within the open gate, even the woods and the ground underneath seemed to be the recipients of care. The trees were trimmed and there were no dead branches lying on the ground. The idea created in Cain's mind was that it was the entrance to some millionaire's vast mountain estate. On Deery's maps the property was marked "Prescott Trust Company." What had Gordon Kelly to do with it all? he wondered. Where did this ball player fit in?

Overcome with curiosity, Cain started his car and turned in the road that led through the granite posts. He would investigate, he said to himself. What better chance would he have, with Gordon Kelly on his way north to join his ball club?

Cain was not a slow driver. He threw his car into high speed and raced up the winding road. The road was as smooth as a billiard table and the crunch of gravel under his tires was music to Cain's ears. He had covered more than half a mile of the driveway and there was still no sign of a habitation, when he suddenly heard the sound of a horn, followed by a sharp cry. He looked up quickly to see an automobile coming down upon him. It looked like a sure collision, but Cain gave the emergency brake a jerk and turned sharply to the right just in time to avoid a smashup. The occupant of the other car had acted in the same manner and, after missing each other by a hair, the two machines came to a stop not ten feet apart.

As soon as he had convinced himself that there had been no mishap, Cain, without even looking back to see who was in the other automobile, proceeded to put his car in motion, but before he could do so he was halted by the sharp command: "Stop!"

It was Gordon Kelly in the other machine. As soon as his car stopped he glanced back and read the number of the other machine. It was "50,000 Ga." Like a flash he recalled that this same car nearly ran over him in front of the Atlanta ball grounds. He jumped to the ground and reached the side of Cain's automobile just as the latter was about to start it. The two men faced each other, and Gordon could see the look of surprise that flashed over the face of the other.

"You seem bound to kill me with that car, one way or the other," observed Gordon. "You were headed toward my home. Did you wish to see me?"

Cain did not know what to say in reply. He did not want to acknowledge that curiosity had drawn him there and he knew he had no business on the driveway. Yet his arrogant nature refused to allow him to apologize, especially to Gordon Kelly. When he did reply he did so in a half-insolent tone.

"No, I have no wish to see you."

"Anyone here you desire to see?"

"No."

"What are you doing here?"

"Just rubbering around; that's all."

"You know these are private grounds?"

"I assumed they were." Cain had drawn a cigarette from his case. He now lighted it.

Gordon paused a moment before he spoke again. Then he said:

"Your tone is insolent. You are entitled to no consideration from me. Get off the grounds!"

"Suppose I refuse?" sneered Cain.

"I'll answer that question in just one minute, if you force me to, by kicking you through those stone pillars."

Cain Is Cowed.

The recollection of a previous experience with the toe of Gordon Kelly's shoe brought Cain to his senses. Without further words he turned his car and moved off down the winding driveway. Kelly, in his own machine, followed him. Passing through the granite posts, Cain turned north toward his own shack. Kelly, entering the main road, turned south.

Chagrin, mortification and anger had a three-cornered battle for supremacy in Cain's breast as he drove along the road. When he reached his mountain abode he did perhaps the worst thing he could have done, considering his engagement with Mildred Deery. He told his man George to fetch a bottle of whisky and some fresh water, and he sat at a table and drank and brooded and swore at George and swore vengeance on Kelly and swore at himself.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

PROPOSE AT ONCE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

For two years I have been calling on a young lady two years my junior. I love her dearly and I know my love is returned. Sometimes I feel as though my time is wastefully drifting by calling on her because she sometimes refuses to listen to me when I feel like proposing, and the next night she is all in a flutter awaiting me. I earn a good salary and feel that I can support a wife. With this view in mind I am almost on the verge of proposing. Then I lose all courage. Please advise me, as I am a total wreck.

N. B.

Put an end to your misery by proposing on one of those nights when she is all in a flutter. The longer you delay it the less courage you will have.

SHE IS RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man and am quite infatuated with a young lady two years my senior. When I last called on her I said I wished the difference in our ages was just the opposite, but she said that two years count for nothing when one is in love. Am I right in keeping up our love?

J. W. F.

Two years count for nothing when one loves. The girl is right.

But your question implies that you have doubts. For this reason I am sure you don't really love her.

CERTAINLY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

Will you please give your opinion to settle an argument on—If a tall girl can be called cute?

S. C. P.

The correct meaning of the word is "clever," "sharp," "smart," and is in no way dependent on physical size.

Do You Know---

Someone fond of statistics has figured out that in Great Britain alone about 1,600,000,000 miles are covered annually by all sorts of vehicles, including motor cars. During the past year 750 persons were killed by vehicular traffic—that is to say, one person for every 2,133,333 miles. Motor vehicles to the number of 50,000 covered approximately 300,000,000 miles and killed 200 people, or one person for every 1,500,000 miles.

The engagement of Duke Karl of Croy to Miss Nancy Leishman, daughter of the American Ambassador to Berlin, recalls a curious law of that noble house. Should the head of the family or his heir desire to marry outside his own rank, he must previously obtain the unanimous consent of all the males bearing the name of Croy who are of age; otherwise his children can not succeed either to the title or estate.

Cullman, Ala., claims to be the most prosperous township in the world. It is said that every man in the town who is the head of a family has a clear title deed of ownership to his home, and every one of them has a banking account. Co-operative farming is practiced in the county.

The discovery of oil in Papau, British New Guinea, was the result of a native boy being whipped for placing kerosene in a miner's tea. The youth declared his innocence and led the miner to the well from which the water had been taken. It was found that the surface of the water was completely covered with oil, the source of which is being developed into a huge commercial enterprise.

The Parent and the Undutiful Child

By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER

WE bestow a great deal of pity upon the parent of an undutiful child, but how often do we stop to consider who is to blame for the state of affairs?

"Poor Mrs. Smith!" a woman sighed, "I am very sorry for her! She is one of the sweetest and gentlest of women, and her son is all she has in the world. Yet he speaks to her roughly, and has a royal disregard for all her wishes. He pays her poorly for all her care of him."

Had the partisan of the abused parent been of an analytical turn of mind she might have changed her sympathy to criticism of the mother herself. We hear—and say—much of the responsibility of children, of the duty of the parents to train the child properly, but, when parents neglect to do this, we condemn the grown son or daughter rather than the person who trained him or her. One overindulgent mother of sons—all of whom are up-to-date examples of ingratitude and selfishness—says, with tears in her eyes, "I never considered my own comfort compared with that of my boys, and I always set aside my own wishes to make them happy."

The result has been just what might have been expected.

A young child, when left to his own devices, is little better than a small savage. He has the selfish and brutal impulses of the primitive human. It rests with the parents to curb his natural desires and passions, and to guide and direct these so that they may become the strength of the child instead of his weakness. If they neglect this duty, and the boy develops into a man of ungovernable passions and of evil life, the father and mother are pitied and the son condemned.

I acknowledge that there are cases in which parents have done their best and the children have gone astray. But, unless there has been a very evil strain of blood back of the child, or his associates have, in spite of the parental care, been a very bad lot, one seldom sees a properly trained lad go completely wrong.

I was moved to amusement, yet strongly impressed by a conversation that I heard between a mother and her sixteen-year-old daughter. The mother was reproving the child for disobedience.

"The trouble with you, Mary," said the parent, "is that you were not punished enough when you were a child."

The girl's eyes flashed with temper.

"Well, if not, who was to blame for it?" was the impertinent retort. "Surely you need not lay that omission to my account!"

Impertinent? Yes. Unkind and rude? Undoubtedly. Yet the insolent speech contained a poignant truth. And the mother recognized this fact too late.

"When did you train your boy to obey you so promptly?" asked one mother of another. "My son is just the age of yours, and I can not make him obey. When did you start the implicit obedience plan?"

"As soon as he was born," was the grave reply. "He has never been allowed to feel that he can disobey."

I know there are parents who will declare that such obedience is slavery. It is not if properly obtained. The soldier has lived to little purpose if he knows not how to obey. It is good for the tiny child that he does. Gentleness and firmness will win the day sooner and more surely than threats and temper.

Some people take it for granted that, because a mother has endured anguish to bring a human being into the world, that being will intuitively accord her loyalty and love through his entire life. One might as well say that because a seed is planted in the ground it will sprout, flourish and bear fruit without further care.

The mother who suppresses her own individuality, who ignores her own rights for the sake of the temporary happiness of her child, is not the mother who is most loved in childhood, or who is, in later years, most honored and respected. It is just that she is not thus regarded, for she has not been a good mother in the deepest sense of the word. It takes far more resolution and strength of character to deny a harmful thing to one we love than it does to yield to him and comply with all his desires.

"He is the best son a woman ever had!" I heard an elderly mother say in the presence of her first-born—a prosperous lawyer and exemplary citizen.

I respected her and her stalwart offspring the more when he said, with a tender smile:

"I wish I deserved that praise—but if I did you would have yourself to thank for it!"

A Bachelor's Diary

By MAX.

MAY 20.—It is possible, I have learned recently, for a man to have as warm red blood in his veins at fifty as he had when he was twenty-five.

My conclusion from this decision is that no man is old enough to be trusted alone with a woman not his mother, his sister, his grandmother or his aunt.

May 23—I regret that I am not a learned man. If I were I would know, without the embarrassment of making the inquiry, who it was who said that "Kissing is the beginning of sinning."

May 26—If I knew who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" I might spend a few of my surplus millions in erecting a monument to his memory.

It would be a strange monument. It would not be beautiful, but I am sure its effect on the minds of beholders would be forceful. I would have carved on its marble sides pictured stories of what one little kiss has led to: Disgrace, dishonor, abandoned women, reckless men, broken hearts and the breaking up of homes.

Its Danger.

I would have engraved on tablets set in every corner so that one might read, no matter from what direction he came, the real truth about the kiss. So sweet, so innocent, so pure in poem and prose. I would have scholars better versed in expression than I ever hope to be, tell what is in real life when a man's blood runs warm in his veins.

And I would blame all the sin that has such an apparently innocent beginning on the ignorance of woman! Or, perhaps, I would grow so bold as to blame some of it on her cupidity, her duplicity and her UNDERSTANDING OF MEN.

She gives the first kiss in ignorance sometimes, but just as often Diary (and I would have that engraved on the monument, though it would result in women smashing it overnight) she gives it in full realization of its power and effect!

She uses the highest expression of love as a means of appealing to the lowest!

I can't quite decide if I would have a broken-hearted girl as a crowning figure or a man bound and shackled with the chains of matrimony. Either figure could be made appealing by a sculptor who understands human nature.

Perhaps the bowed and bent figure of a man with the chains of matrimony wound around his limbs would be the more modern version of what a kiss has done for mankind. So many girls these days use kisses to cry their wares when they go to market, and suffer no appreciable damage, that the broken-hearted girl, as a crowning figure, would not give expression to the changed sentiment of the times.

May 28—The man who said "Kissing is the beginning of sinning" interests me. I wonder if he was an old bachelor like myself and had a good friend whom he loved as he would a favorite sister. I wonder if this friend ever came to him with her troubles because of a neglectful husband, and if he tried, in honest, brotherly fashion, to soothe her.

I wonder if one day she suddenly kissed him, and I wonder if that kiss seemed in comparison to all others life had ever offered him, the one supreme kiss.

I wonder what he did next. I wonder how he found that "Kissing Is the Beginning of Sinning."

Did his sin consist only in thinking about another man's wife much too often?

Not Platonic.

Did he accept it as the kiss a sister would give a brother? But no, he couldn't have done that. All the sisters since the world began never put into all the kisses they have given their brothers the one little vital spark Sally Spencer put in that kiss she gave me!

Brother and sister, bah! What's the good of self-deception? We were never brother and sister, and the kiss revealed we were not. Maybe once we were Platonic friends, and that we can never be again!

When a man and woman do wrong, it is the customary thing, the gallant thing, and exceedingly proper, to blame it on the man.

Diary, I have kept nothing from you. I was sitting with Manette in my arms, and thinking only of Sally's trouble that day in the nursery. I had no thought of myself, but when a man says he has no thought of himself no one on earth believes him, so perhaps that statement is discredited even by your parchment ears.

There was nothing in our conversation that should have led up to such a climax; there has never been in all the conversations I have had with her.

A Special Apparatus.

She kissed Me, Diary, I did not kiss HER! How could I with Manette asleep in my arms? I could neither force a woman to kiss me under such conditions, nor could I resist when she forced me. Of course I could have screamed for help. I can see in that particular that I showed weakness and indecision of character, unfitting a man.

But I couldn't scream before she kissed me, not realizing the awful designs she had on me. And I couldn't scream when her lips were pressed against mine!

If you doubt the absolute inability to scream at such a psychological moment, ask any physician. He will tell you no man can scream when his wind is cut off. Then, again, I am sure, though surgeons have never discovered it, that when the Lord made woman He put in her a special screaming apparatus He left out of man.

Had I kissed Sally Spencer against her will as she kissed me, somewhere (either just before the bestowal of the kiss, while it was being adjusted in position, or afterward) she would have found opportunity and breath for a scream.

That is, of course, if she had wanted to scream. My experience with the women is that they don't scream. It is only in the books that they cry for help.

Neither would it have done any good had I screamed after she kissed me, for what's the use of crying over spilled milk? I have been told all my life that there is absolutely no use.

So, as I said, we must follow tradition and blame all that may happen since that kiss on the man. I may have been physically powerless to resist, but that makes no difference. I am the man, and therefore the guilty one.

All the tragedy that may arise from that kiss is to be blamed on me. That I know, and being a man and proud of my strength, I am telling myself every morning that I will not run from temptation. I will just hang around and take a look at it!

All of which I have told you, Diary, to explain why I am looking at Sally Spencer these days with different eyes, and am not so much concerned as I was over the prospect that the widow may run off with her husband.

Up-to-Date Jokes

"What," said the visitor to the village of his childhood, "what's become of the one boy I hated—Willie Hawker, the sneak? In prison, no doubt—he bore that fate on his face."

"Hush!" said the villager. "He is now Mr. Hawker, the famous millionaire."

"What?" cried the visitor, "my dear schoolfellow a millionaire! I must call upon him and revive the old friendship."

Mr. Litchfield, the art dealer, when exhibiting some panels of tapestry, telegraphed for the return of one thus: "Send panel eight by ten, Venus and Adonis. Litchfield."

A puzzled clerk sent on the message to the city of Litchfield, and received the reply: "No such firm as Venus and Adonis known here. Try Manchester."

"You have called regarding the situation of footman?"

"Yes, my lud."

"Was there not some one in the ante-room as you came in?"

"There was, my lud. It was a man with a writ for your ludship, but I threw 'im hout."

"You are engaged."

A young Englishman on a visit to one of the Irish local gentry once remarked on the number of donkeys in use among the peasantry, and, turning to the priest who was present, inquired, with a certain insolence of manner, whether it was true that "the natives" kept them in their own homes.

"Yes," replied the padre, gravely, "they do. The English, I perceive, send them abroad."

"They say that Tennyson frequently worked a whole afternoon on a single line."

"That's nothing. I know a man who has been working the last six years on one sentence."

Superfluous Hair Truths

Stop Experimenting

If you use a simple toilet preparation and it proves to be worthless, you only lose money. When you use a questionable depilatory, however, it is a very serious matter because you not only lose money, but you take the grave risk of permanent disfigurement.

If You Value Your Face

use De Miracle, the one safe, perfected hair remover of proven merit. Remember, the injury caused by the use of doubtful hair removers will either result in permanent disfigurement or cost you many dollars because it will take months or possibly years to gain control of hair growths which have been stimulated by the use of such preparations.

De Miracle

Only Real Hair Remover on Earth

De Miracle contains certain ingredients which give it the power to rob hair of its vitality. Therefore you must eventually use it to retard and gain control of growths which have been caused by the unwise use of questionable depilatories. Is it not safer and wiser to begin using De Miracle now, before the growth gets beyond control?

Leaves No Tell-Tale Smell

If you use De Miracle it will be impossible for any curious person to know that you have used a hair remover because De Miracle evaporates immediately after accomplishing its work, therefore leaves no odor whatever. On the other hand, if you use any depilatory with a distinctive odor, an offensive tell-tale smell will cling to your skin for hours. If your dealer will not supply you with De Miracle, send $1.00 direct.

FASHIONABLE HATS MILADY IS WEARING THIS SUMMER

The center cut shows a Lewis model of dust-colored straw which is most artistic. A wreath of variegated flowers encircles the small crown and gives it a very natty appearance. On the left is another black hat of the oblong shape. On each side of the brim is a plume of paradise feathers and at the front is a smartly tied ribbon bow. The hat at the right is the latest model for country wear or for morning in town. It is very plain, the sole trimming being a bow of embroidered ribbon.

The Girl With a Married Sweetheart

By DOROTHY DIX

Tears and Sorrow Is the Price She Is Bound to Pay

A YOUNG girl writes me that she is very much in love with a married man, who tells her that he is devoted to her, but that he does not intend to divorce his wife in order to marry her. She says that she has lost all interest in her young companions, and is very unhappy and she doesn't know what to do, and that she will take my advice as to whether to give her married sweetheart up or not.

I am afraid that it is too good to be true that this poor, silly child will be guided by my counsel in this matter, but in case it should be possible that any word of mine could influence her or any other girl in such a dilemma, I urge her with all the earnestness that I can possibly command to break with the man before another hour rolls over her head.

Time and again I have written on this subject, trying to make girls realize not only how wrong, but how foolish they were to waste their youth, their sweetness, their chance in life in love affairs with married men. Again and again have I pointed out to them what a sorry bargain it is when a girl gives all and gets nothing in return.

I ask this girl who writes me to sit down and to calmly figure out her case. On one side of the page let her write down Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children. These are things that she forfeits if she continues her affair with the married man.

A Bad Companion.

She may not think much of Morality, but a gnawing Conscience is a bad companion to have with you night and day, and what about Self Respect, and the Respect of One's Circle of Acquaintance, and the black mortification of knowing that one has brought dishonor on one's name?

Do you believe that the love of any man on earth ever pays a girl for knowing that her family is ashamed of her, or that any dagger could pierce a soul with such an agony as seeing other women draw their skirts away from her? And do you think that any worthy young man, the sort of a young man you would like to marry, would care to marry a girl whose name had been bandied about as the former sweetheart of some married man?

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children—these are pretty good things for a woman to have, little sister. You throw them over the windmill if you continue your love affair with a married man. What are you going to write on the other side of the ledger?

Scandal? Oh, yes, you are. Don't think you can keep it hidden and secret. Such things always come out. Don't think people won't talk about you. Gossip has a thousand tongues, and not one of them will spare you. The first time a girl goes out to dinner in a cafe with a married man, she leaves her good name behind her.

A guilty Conscience? Yes, no matter how you lie to yourself, you will always have that on your soul, that will wake you up in the night with a cold sweat on your forehead. You know that you are doing your best to rob a woman of her husband, and little children of their father. You are breaking up a home and slaying the happiness of another woman, and beside those crimes, burglary is a commendable pastime and murder a trifling misdemeanor.

Not Your Affair.

Perhaps the man is tired of his wife and untrue to her, anyway. That isn't your affair. You don't have to steal and kill because there are degenerates that do. Be sure of this, little girl—no woman ever built any secure happiness on another woman's misery.

Then write down Waiting. Years and years of hopeless, aimless waiting for a man who has no right to love you, a man whom you have no right to love, one who can give you only stolen minutes of his society, who can not be seen with you, or visit you without shame to you both. Anything attractive in that prospect, little sister?

Then write Fear. Fear of desertion. The hideous fear that gnaws at the heart of the woman who has given everything to a man and has no way by which she can bind him to her side. The wife has the bond that the law and society has forged, that holds her husband to her. He can not break this tie with impunity, but between the married man and his unmarried love there is nothing but his fickle fancy.

No other woman knows such torturing jealousy, no other woman knows such deadly fear as this woman who realizes that nothing but her beauty and her youth and her charm holds her married sweetheart, and that some day these must go, and that then he will turn to a fresher and fairer face.

Morality, A Clear Conscience, A Good Name, Self-Respect, The Respect of Friends and Neighbors, Duty to One's Family, Husband, Home, Children, on the one side. On the other, Scandal, A Guilty Conscience, Waiting, Fear. No Home nor Husband nor Children of one's own, no settled place in society, to be looked at askance instead of being welcome among the people one would like to know. How does the account balance, little sister? Don't you think that you will have to pay a pretty high price for your romance with a married man?

And look at the man squarely. Don't you think that any man, who would win the heart of a young girl when he knew that he couldn't carry her, is about the most consummate cad that ever came down the pike? And doesn't he deserve a medal as the most selfish man on earth when he asks you to do a thing that will make you the target for all the mud slinging in your circle?

WITHIN THE LAW

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

SYNOPSIS.

Mary Turner, an orphan, employed in Edward Gilder's department store, is unjustly accused of theft and sent to prison. She, is hounded by the police on her release, and finally goes to live with Joe Garson, a forger, and Aggie Lynch, a blackmailer, both of whom treat her with respect. Mary resolves to keep "within the law." She becomes the leader of a band of swindlers. Gilder's son, Dick, falls in love with her, and she marries him to be revenged on his father—and then finds that she is in love with him. Dick refuses to give her up, a demand made by his father. Mary disappears. Police Inspector Burke in an effort to aid the elder Gilder schemes to secure the arrest of Mary through "English Eddie" Griggs, a police informer. Garson plans to rob the Gilder home on a tip from Griggs. Mary hears of it and tries to prevent it, going to the Gilder home. Mary pleads with Garson to drop the robbery, and Dick enters. Garson kills Griggs when Mary corners the latter and he admits he is working for the police. Burke enters the house, a searchlight throwing its rays on the dead man's body. Mary and Dick are arrested, because Mary tells Burke that Dick shot Griggs in defense of his home.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Cringingly, Chicago Red, who so gloried in his strength, yet was now altogether humble in his precarious case, obeyed as far as the getting to his feet was concerned. * * * It never occurred to him even that he should carry his obedience to the point of "squealing on a pal!" Had the circumstances been different, he might have refused to accept the Inspector's blow with such meekness, since above all things he loved a bit of bodily strife, with some one near his own strength, and the Inspector was of a sort to offer him a battle worth while.

So, now, while he got slowly to his feet, he took care to keep at a respectful distance from the official, though his big hands fairly ached to double into fists for blows with this man who had so maltreated him.

"Send 'Em In."

His own self-respect, of its peculiar sort, was saved by the interference of Cassidy, who entered the Inspector's office to announce the arrival of the District Attorney.

"Send 'im in," Burke directed at once. He made a gesture toward the doorman, and added: "Take 'em back!"

A grin of evil humor wreathed the lips of the police official, and he added to the attentive doorman a word of direction that might well be interpreted by the malevolent expression on his face.

"Don't be rough with 'em, Dan," he said. For once his dominating voice was reduced to something approaching softness in his sardonic appreciation of his own humor in the conception of what these two men, who had ventured to resist his importunities, might receive at the hands of his faithful satellites. * * * The doorman grinned appreciatively, and herded his victims from the place. And the two went shamblingly in sure knowledge of the things that were in store. Yet, without thought of treachery. They would not "squeal!" All they would tell of the death of Eddie Griggs would be: "He got what was coming to him!"

The Inspector dropped into his swivel chair at the desk while he awaited the arrival of Demarest, the District Attorney. The greetings between the two were cordial when at last the public prosecutor made his appearance.

"I came as soon as I got your message," the District Attorney said, as he seated himself in a chair by the desk. "And I've sent word to Mr. Gilder. * * * Now, then, Burke, let's have this thing quickly."

The Inspector's explanation was concise:

Burke's Face Crimsoned.

"Joe Garson, Chicago Red and Dacey, along with Griggs, broke into Edward Gilder's house last night! I knew the trick was going to be pulled off, and so I planted Cassidy and a couple of other men just outside the room where the haul was to be made. Then I went away, and after something like half an hour I came back to make the arrests myself." A look of intense disgust spread itself over the Inspector's massive face. "Well," he concluded, sheepishly, "when I broke into the room I found Gilder alone with that Turner woman he married, and they were just talking together."

"No trace of the others?" Demarest questioned crisply.

At the inquiry, Burke's face crimsoned angrily, then again set in grim lines.

"I found Griggs lying on the floor—dead!" Once again the disgust showed in his expression. "The Turner woman says young Gilder shot Griggs because he broke into the house. Ain't that the limit?"

"What does the boy say?" the District Attorney demanded.

Burke shook his head dispiritedly.

"Nothing," he answered. "She told him not to talk, and so, of course, he won't, he's such a fool over her."

"And what does she say?" Demarest asked. He found himself rather amused by the exceeding chagrin of the Inspector over this affair.

Burke's voice grew savage as he snapped a reply.

He Admitted the Fact.

"Refuses to talk till she sees a lawyer." But a touch of cheerfulness appeared in his tones as he proceeded. "We've got Chicago Red and Dacey, and we'll have Garson before the day's over. And, oh, yes, they've picked up a young girl at the Turner woman's place. And we've got one real clew—for once!" The speaker's expression was suddenly triumphant. He opened a drawer of the desk, and took out Garson's pistol, to which the silencer was still attached.

"You never saw a gun like that before, eh?" he exclaimed.

Demarest admitted the fact after a curious examination.

"I'll bet you you never did!" Burke cried, with satisfaction. "That thing on the end is a Maxim silencer. There are thousands of them in use on rifles, but they've never been able to use them on revolvers before. This is a specially made gun," he went on admiringly, as he took it back and slipped it into a pocket of his coat. "That thing is absolutely noiseless. I've tried it. Well, you see, it'll be an easy thing—easiest thing in the world—to trace that silencer attachment. Cassidy's working on that end of the thing now."

For a few minutes longer the two men discussed the details of the crime, theorizing over the baffling event. Then, presently, Cassidy entered the office, and made report of his investigations concerning the pistol with the silencer attachment.

"I got the factory at Hartford on the wire," he explained, "and they gave me Mr. Maxim himself, the inventor of the silencer. He said this was surely a special gun, which was made for the use of Henry Sylvester, one of the professors at Yale. He wanted it for demonstration purposes. Mr. Maxim said the things have never been put on the market, and that they never will be."

"For humane reasons," Demarest commented, nodding approbation.

"Good thing, too!" Burke conceded. "They'd make murder too devilish easy, and it's easy enough now. * * * Well, Cassidy?"

"I got hold of this man Sylvester," Cassidy went on. "I had him on the phone, too. He says that his house was robbed about eight weeks ago, and among other things the silencer was stolen." Cassidy paused, and chuckled dryly. "He adds the startling information that the New Haven police have not been able to recover any of the stolen property. Them rube cops are immense!"

Demarest smiled slyly, as the detective, at a nod from his superior went toward the door.

"No," he said, maliciously; "only the New York police recover stolen goods."

"Good night!" quoth Cassidy, turning at the door, in admission of his discomfiture over the thrust, while Burke himself grinned wryly in appreciation of the gibe.

Demarest grew grave again, as he put the question that was troubling him most.

"Is there any chance that young Gilder shot Griggs?"

"You can search me!" the Inspector answered, disconsolately. "My men were just outside the door of the room where Eddie Griggs was shot to death, and none of 'em heard a sound. It's that infernal silencer thing. Of course, I know that all the gang was in the house."

"But tell me just how you know that fact," Demarest objected very crisply. "Did you see them go in?"

"No, I didn't," the Inspector admitted, tartly. "But Griggs——"

Demarest permitted himself a sneer born of legal knowledge.

"Griggs is dead, Burke. You're up against it. You can't prove that Garson, or Chicago Red, or Dacey, ever entered that house."

The Inspector scowled over this positive statement.

"But Griggs said they were going to," he argued.

"I know," Demarest agreed, with an exasperating air of shrewdness, "but Griggs is dead. You see, Burke, you couldn't in a trial even repeat what he told you. It's not permissible evidence."

"Oh, the law!" the Inspector snorted, with much choler. "Well, then," he went on belligerently, "I'll charge young Gilder with murder, and call the Turner woman as a witness."

The District Attorney laughed aloud over this project.

Wife Cannot Testify.

"You can't question her on the witness stand," he explained patronizingly to the badgered police official. "The law doesn't allow you to make a wife testify against her husband. And, what's more, you can't arrest her, and then force her to go into the witness stand, either. No, Burke," he concluded emphatically, "your only chance of getting the murderer of Griggs is by a confession."

"Then, I'll charge them both with the murder," the Inspector growled vindictively. "And, by God, they'll both go to trial unless somebody comes through." He brought his huge fist down on the desk with violence, and his voice was forbidding. "If it's my last act on earth," he declared, "I'm going to get the man who shot Eddie Griggs."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Experience.

"My dear boy," said Enpeck, who happened to be in a confidential mood, "you will never know what real happiness is until you get married."

"You don't mean it!" exclaimed Singleton, astonished at such a remark from such an unexpected source.

"It's a fact," rejoined Enpeck, "but then it will be too late for you to appreciate it."

BRADY PITCHES TODAY; HOWELL MAY FACE HIM

By Joe Agler.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., June 13. "King" Brady will twirl today's game with Dunn receiving his slants. Kid Elberfeld will probably use his new college pitcher, Howell, or maybe Sommers, his star southpaw.

The Crackers opened their series here with a winner. Grimes, the twirler who won eleven straight games in the Central Association, made his debut against us, and, as usual, we got to him in the fifth, after the fans thought the Lookouts had the contest sewed up. We kept on going after we once started and could not be stopped till we had five runs across the plate.

Joe Conzeleman twirled the kind of ball that will win many a ball game. The runs scored against him were made on errors. He will save many a game on the right side of the ledger with the Crackers hitting behind him.

Joe Dunn caught a grand game, and his two-ply smash broke up the contest after yours truly singled with the bases full. Wallop Smith got another triple, hitting it far over Elston's head in right field, and scored on Bisland's fly.

Welchonce broke his favorite bat in the contest, but is not a bit superstitious and will be out to-day hitting just as hard as in previous games.

Coyle is out of the game with a bad wrist. He was hit by a ball in the Nashville series, which cripples the Kid's infield somewhat. Williams is not the hitter that Coyle is.

We should take at least two out of three of these contests. With "King" pitching as he can and with the Crackers hitting that ball as we should, we ought to take an easy game.

The Lookouts are drawing fairly well. The crowds are coming out to witness the games, and they certainly are loyal fans and good rooters.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Everything is in readiness for the big boxing show to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. All the boxers have completed training and are on edge for the fray.

* * *

Sailor White and Jim Savage clash in the main bout. Mike Saul will take on Terry Nelson in the semi-final, while Spider Britt meets Meyer Pries in the opening set-to. All the scraps are scheduled to go ten rounds and the fans should see enough real milling to last them for months.

* * *

Tickets for the big show are going fast and a banner house should be present. Saul and his followers will be at the ringside to cheer the Hebrew on to a good start in his come-back effort.

* * *

Charlie White has grabbed two more matches. He has signed to box Harry Trendall, a St. Louis lightweight, in the latter city on June 18. After this affair Charlie is to take on Jack Britton in a 10-round engagement at New Orleans on July 4.

* * *

Frank Whitney writes from Cedar Rapids that he is anxious to pick up some bouts. His wife died recently and he says he must hustle and get some money. "I am ready to meet any of the lightweights," he writes. Whitney has a standing challenge to any 133-pounder in the world. A bout between Whitney and Charlie White should prove a hummer for any promoter.

* * *

Frankie Burns is working hard in Chicago for his ten-round battle with Johnny Coulon a week from Friday night at Kenosha, Wis. This will be the fourth scrap between the pair. They have agreed to make 116 pounds ringside.

* * *

Jimmy Britt and Jimmy Dunn are perhaps the greatest boosters for Bud Anderson, the coast sensation, who meets Leach Cross on July 4. Both claim that Bud is made of championship material and pick him to hand the dentist a neat lacing.

* * *

On the other hand, Jim Savage and K. O. Brown are strong boosters for Cross. Savage picks Leach to stop Anderson in twelve rounds and says K. O. Brown, who recently met Anderson picks Leach to win sure. "Any boxer who will stand up and slug with Cross is sure to be stopped," says Savage, "and Anderson is rated on the coast as a boy who loves to slug.

* * *

Tommy Murphy will likely meet the winner of the Dundee-Jack White bout, which is billed to take place at Los Angeles on June 17. Tom McCarey, who is staging the go has offered Murphy the match.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight champion, is a firm believer in newspaper publicity. In order to attract attention Freddie announces his willingness to meet Willie Ritchie on a winner take all basis. And no one knows better than Freddie that this is impossible as long as Billy Nolan is Ritchie's manager.

* * *

Ad Wolgast's injury to his thumb may be of a permanent nature. Anyhow the ex-lightweight champion contemplates a trip to Honolulu. That's where some of the other so-called champs should migrate.

* * *

Can you beat this? Danny Morgan has bet $350 that Young Ahearn defeats Mike Gibbons when the two clash at New York to-night. Furthermore, Danny has borrowed the money. This comes courtesy from Jim Savage, who is being managed by Daniel.

* * *

Jack McCarron and Young Jack O'Brien, the stars of Jack O'Brien's stable, are resting up after a somewhat strenuous season.

* * *

The French boxing authorities must be looking for easy game for their heavyweight champion, George Carpentier, when they offer Rodel, the Boer boxer, a bout with Carpentier.

* * *

Al Kubiak is the latest to challenge the winner of the Savage-White match at Wolff-Moir's Armory to-night. He writes that he is feeling better than ever in his life and is sure he can beat either of the big heavyweights.

KOHLMAINEN SUSPENDED; EXPENSE ACCOUNT ASKED

NEW YORK, June 13.—Hannes Kohlmainen, the Finnish runner, has been suspended indefinitely by the Amateur Athletic Union for his failure to turn in an expense account for a recent set of games.

The runner is now in Duluth, Minn., and was notified that he must return to New York immediately and explain in order to become eligible for a number of meets in the Western cities this month.

COAST BATTLE WILL BE GREAT BETTING AFFAIR

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 13.—Not in years have the boxing fans been presented with a fighting card that has so completely torn them out on the Pacific Coast as this little affair between Willie Ritchie, lightweight, and Jose Rivers. The scrap is set for the Glorious Fourth and surely should be one royal battle. But at the same time it is such an open affair and such a hard one to dope out that it doubtless will prove one of the biggest betting affairs ever known on the coast or anywhere else.

* * *

BY way of making it an exceptionally good one the State of California, perhaps the strongest district in the Union for boxing, will be split exactly in twain over the battle. To begin with, Rivers will get almost the unanimous support of the southern part of the State, while San Francisco, unwavering in its support of its own, will go to the Ritchie end as if the whole thing were over right now. This will make one most exciting contest, and it is certain that the remainder of the country will follow suit and plunge on this encounter.

* * *

THE peculiar ending of the Wolgast match, in which both men were accused of fouling and the referee came in for a lot of censure, and the equally strange ending of the Ritchie-Wolgast battle, which was given to Ritchie on a foul, have always created puzzling questions for the fight fans to argue over. Many were led to believe from the Los Angeles reports that Rivers proved to be the master of Wolgast that afternoon and a good many others will always believe that Wolgast was robbed by that foul decision with Ritchie. Thus it goes with the eternal question of supremacy never fully or completely decided. Now we are to have Rivers booked up with the clever Ritchie in a long contest. Surely that should settle a whole lot of arguments.

* * *

TOMMY WALSH, who should know the coast situation as well as anybody, thinks Ritchie will have a rather strong shade over Rivers in the milling on the Fourth. Tommy returned to the city the other day on a scouting tour for Tom McCarey of Los Angeles. He wants to scare up some good fighting material in the lightweight division for a tournament that McCarey is thinking of staging during July and August. Tommy is of the opinion that superior speed and size will have much to do to encompass the downfall of the Los Angeles boy.

DUNN PICKS ANDERSON AS COMING CHAMPION

LOS ANGELES, CAL., June 13.—Jimmy Dunn, manager of Johnny Kilbane, and, perhaps the greatest expert on boxing now connected with the ring, prophesies that Bud Anderson will be the lightweight champion of the world.

"I think he'll just about murder Leach Cross," said Jimmy, "and Brother Rivers had better stay away from him as far as possible. Bud can lick any of them. That boy's power to hit is something terrific. Also he can take punishment like Jim Flynn. Mandot brought several blows up from the bucket at him the other night and they didn't even make him hesitate.

"At that Bud doesn't know how to hit. If he learned how to deliver a blow correctly he could knock the head off of any lightweight in the world."

CARPENTIER AND WELLS TO MEET AGAIN IN NOV.

LONDON, June 13.—Georges Carpentier, the French heavyweight pugilist, and Bombardier Wells, the British heavyweight, signed articles to-day for a return match in London on November. On June 1 Carpentier knocked out Wells in the fourth round at Ghent, Belgium, and won the heavyweight championship of Europe.

PIRATES BUY CATCHER.

DAVENPORT, IOWA, June 13.—Bob Coleman, premier catcher of the Three-I League, has been sold to the Pittsburg team in the National League and will report to-day.

MURPHY GETS WINNER.

LOS ANGELES, June 13.—Harlem Tommy Murphy has been offered a match with the winner of the Jack White-Johnny Dundee fight, which takes place here next Tuesday night. In the letter that Murphy will accept July 15 has been announced by a promoter as the date for the bout.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, June 13.—The Giants must regain their batting stride if they are to repeat on the pennant. The club has not been hitting consistently all season. First one man bats well for two or three days and then another. But we do not appear to get going all together. The pitchers are doing better than they were. Both Marquard and Tesreau are in fine shape, and Demaree is fit to take his regular turn once more. I believe that the pitching staff and hard hitting that is bound to come will eventually push the Phillies out of the lead. My confidence still is in the Giants, of course. The hard work in the early spring will finally wear the edge off the Philly twirlers when the real hot weather sets in, and we should close up the gap, if it does not get too wide in the meantime. Marquard started off the season like a whirlwind a year ago, you will recall, and won nineteen straight games. But all the hard work in the early stages of the race wore him out for the midsummer toil, and he slumped badly for a month or so. I expect to see the same thing happen to the Philadelphia pitchers. The Quakers are bound to slump, but I do not know how far that slump will go. At least our chance to return home from this trip in first place is gone now.

* * *

THE Cubs do not look to me like any more of a pennant possibility now than they did when they were in New York on their first trip East. They are weak in the pitcher's box. The rest of the team is fine, but I cannot figure any club with the pitchers possessed by the Cubs as a pennant winner in the National League this year, when there are such staffs as the Philadelphia, Pittsburg and New York corps.

The Pirates have surprised me. Just when it looked as if they were going to slide into their true gait and begin climbing, they dropped the series to the Quakers. I cannot understand why that club does not get going consistently, because the material is certainly there, both in the field and the pitcher's box. I suppose Clarke's team will just about hit its stride against us this week.

* * *

THE rest of the clubs in the National League, with the possible exception of Brooklyn, are clearly out of the going. The Superbas have a very outside chance, but it does not look good with their pitchers moving as badly as they are at present. Brooklyn has not the robustness to withstand the rigors of a hard campaign, to my mind. The team is good for only a short spurt. It was some fancy pitching which put it up with the leaders for a time. I had figured Philadelphia to fade in the same way, but these boys seem to be trying to show me up by sticking. I still adhere to my notion that Pittsburg will begin to climb shortly, and the race will narrow down to a battle between the Pirates and Giants in September. Pittsburg has always been a better road club than when it is playing on the home grounds. Perhaps that may partially explain its present showing.

KNABE AND TINKER ARE SUSPENDED FOR FIGHTING

ST. LOUIS, June 13.—Manager Dooin, of the Philadelphia Nationals, has received word from President Lynch that Otto Knabe had been indefinitely suspended and fined $25 for indulging in a fist fight with Manager Tinker at Cincinnati Wednesday.

CINCINNATI, June 13.—Manager Tinker, of the Reds, has been suspended five days and fined $25 by President Lynch for his part in the altercation with Knabe, of the Phillies, Wednesday.

JOHN L.'S NEPHEW WINS HIS FIRST "PRO" FIGHT

NEW YORK, June 13.—Young Howard stopped Fred Gunther in the second round of the wind-up at the New Polo Athletic Club last night with a body blow.

Willis Ritchie shaded Young Henry in the ten-round semi-final.

Joe Strickler, a nephew of John L. Sullivan, made his first professional appearance and beat Willie Freeman in a four-round tilt. Strickler is a welterweight.

CUTLER WINS TWO FALLS OUT OF THREE FROM ROLLER

DALLAS, TEX., June 13.—After Dr. Roller had thrown him with a combination body lock in eighteen minutes, Charles Cutler came back and threw him two straight falls, the first in 17 minutes 50 seconds and the second in 5 minutes 30 seconds. Cutler used the toe-hold for both falls.

Rumor has it that a deal is under way by which Nap Rucker, the star pitcher of the Dodgers, will go to the Cubs in exchange for Roger Bresnahan, the catcher, who is drawing a huge salary from the Cub coffers for warming the bench. Archer is doing most of the catching for the Cubs.

UNITED CREDIT CLOTHING COMPANY 28 WEST MITCHELL

TY COBB OUT TO COP HITTING CROWN AGAIN

ADMIRERS of Tyrus Raymond Cobb have a right to be proud of the record amassed by the Georgia Peach during the first month of the present campaign. Participating in 24 games, of which his team won 11, Cobb hit safely in 20 combats and in one of these it should be remembered that he was an added starter and got a chance to bat only once, which opportunity he improved by poling a sacrifice fly.

The gunners who slipped ciphers into the Southern's baseball column were Ray Keating and Ray Fisher, of the Highlanders, on May 7 and 8, respectively; Harry White and Bill Lange, of the White Sox, on May 4, and Tom Hughes and Tom Drohan, of the Senators, on May 16.

3 Hits 5 Times This Year.

In the score of contests in which Cobb hit safely he obtained 32 singles, three doubles and three triples, his batting average from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, being .475. He has made three hits five times this season, two hits eight times and one hit seven times. His best record in the way of consecutive clouting came in the games of May 19 and 20 with the Athletics, when he got six hits in the same number of trips to the plate.

Tyrus Raymond, who seems bent on carrying off the Chalmers American League trophy for the third time, has put the finishing touches to fourteen of the Tigers' tallies, sending in seven on clean hits, four on aerial sacrifice and three on infield outs. He is not the Tigers' leading batter-in of runs as yet, for Bobby Veach, who has played in ten more contests, has driven in four more counters. On the percentage basis, however, Cobb outranks Veach as a timely thumper.

Only Four Fanned Ty.

Cobb faced 30 American League pitchers from April 29 to May 28, inclusive, and only four men succeeded in fanning him. Bob Russell, of the White Sox, whiffed Tyrus on May 3; Ray Keating, of the Highlanders, struck him out twice on May 7 (that day the Dixie Demon complained his eyes bothered him), Buck O'Brien, of the Red Sox, claimed Ty as a strike-out victim on May 12, and twelve days later Walter Leverenz, of the Browns, set him down via the strike out line.

Cobb has drawn 17 passes in 24 times and has been successful in 12 out of 15 steals he has essayed. The men who turned him back when he tried to steal were Henry, of Washington, twice; Carrigan, of Boston, once, and Lapp, of Philadelphia, once.

Sports and Such

THE SPRING KINKS IN THE baseball done are being straightened out and the big league teams are gradually fitting into their appointed positions, to the great glorification of the aforesaid dope.

Of the two leagues the National promises the better race, a situation that was more or less forecast. In the American League no one would be particularly shocked if the excitement were all over by the middle of July. If the Athletics maintain their present industrious lick and the Boston team continues to improve, this combination of events is likely to result in an overwhelming lead for the Mack outfit within the next few weeks. Boston is earnestly doing its best to wallop Cleveland, and later on it will have a chance to slam the Washington gang, all of which is the best little sort of ally work for Connie Mack.

* * *

THE SOLEMN PROPHETS OF the spring-tide unanimously held that if Connie Mack kept his men on the reservation there would be no stopping them this season, and seemingly it will work out so.

* * *

THERE HAS BEEN ONE UPset—or rather two—of magnitude in the older league. There is not the slightest doubt that on paper the Giants this spring were fully a 20 per cent stronger club than they were last season, when they won the pennant. By an amazingly simple process of arithmetic you could thus figure out that they would win the pennant in a walk this summer; but, though they have played to form, they have failed to win the games that were cheerfully counted for them last April.

* * *

IF THE PIRATES NOW occupied that high position fortuitously held by the Phillies we should worry. As it is, the Phillies are likely to blow. Brooklyn started out to break up the league, and Brooklyn blew. The Phillies are a little stronger than the Dodgers and are holding up a little longer, but it will be the biggest shock baseball ever got if they keep up this pace for another six weeks. So if the Giants find themselves and develop a real winning streak they have every chance to nail the lead and hold it.

GIBBONS AND AHEARN CLASH IN 10-ROUND GO

NEW YORK, June 13.—Mike Gibbons, of St. Paul, may strike a snag in the person of Young Ahearn, the Dancing Master, when they meet in a ten-round bout in the Garden tonight. Ahearn is rapidly growing into the middleweight division. It is conceded that he is one of the finest boxers in the ring.

TETTER

Tetterine cures tetter. Read what Mrs. V. C. McQuiddy, Kelli Springs, Tenn., says:

I had a severe case of tetter on both hands and I finally got helpless. A leading physician knew of no cure. I decided to give Tetterine a trial. To my utter surprise and satisfaction it worked a speedy cure.

Use Tetterine

It cures eczema, tetter, erysipelas, itching piles, ground itch, and all skin maladies.

Summer Ball Rules Very Strict

'Change Coming Soon'-Heisman

By J. W. Heisman.

COLLEGE athletes the country over are tolerant of all the rules prescribing and hedging in amateur standing except those relating to the playing of summer baseball.

These last have become so numerous and so drastic during the last ten years that protests have come not alone from the college players themselves, but from other sources as well.

Many sporting writers consider the present rules absurd in their severity. Managers of professional and semi-professional clubs rail at their alleged silliness, for they deprive these managers of opportunities to get many fine college players during the summer. Naturally, too, the friends of the college players, and they are legion, sympathize with them as well.

It has been pointed out time and again that there is nothing immoral in a college man or anybody else playing baseball for money during the summer or any other time. However, this is not a question of morality, but of amateur standing. Numbers of things may be against the law yet not be immoral; but if one does something unlawful one generally gets himself into trouble with the law whether one's conscience be free from any intent of wrongdoing or not.

* * *

BY the college rules it is declared that a college athlete forfeits his right to represent his college further in intercollegiate sport if he breaks certain rules regarding summer baseball playing. If the man goes ahead and breaks the rules he does nothing that will earn him a jail sentence, or that will even cause his expulsion from college; but he does disbar himself from further college playing—for infringement of certain rules; while for other breaches of the law he forfeits his entire amateur standing in any and all kinds of athletic contests between amateurs.

Decreeing that a player after once entering college shall not thereafter play with a team that does not hail from his home county, even though he takes no money, not even expenses, for it, is a particularly severe rule in the South. To break this rule does not mean that the violator loses his amateur standing, assuming that he did not professionalize himself by taking a salary for the playing. But it appeared to the S. I. A. A. representatives that to go to other towns, cities and counties to play baseball during the summer when there was already a team, or half a dozen of them, perhaps, in the boy's home town, city or county, was in itself a mighty suspicious circumstance. As suspicions alone cannot be held to be ground on which to disbar a man, however, while facts are very hard to get hold of and to prove, they decided the simplest way out of the mess was to prevent the boy from placing himself in a suspicious position. So they forbade him altogether from playing with teams that did not belong in his home county.

Still, this is very hard on the boys; for their home team may be one that is not up in baseball class to the individual ability of the particular boy, and of course he would in that case prefer to play with a better team. Or his home county may not have a team of any kind in it, as is often enough the case; and then what is he to do? Or suppose he is away from his home county on a vacation, or working in another county for the summer; still he can play no baseball while there, no matter that it be the purest amateur team in the world and that he doesn't get even street car fare to participate.

In other words, the only way a college boy can get a chance to play and enjoy the great national game during the summer, and get the practice that he desires in order to make himself proficient in the game, is to stay at home the whole summer, and that under any and all conceivable circumstances. Virtually he is, by the rule, made and held prisoner of one county of one State the entire summer of every year while taking a college course, under penalty of being deprived of his chance to participate in intercollegiate baseball forever after, which participation is, in the abstract a perfectly innocent, harmless, beneficial and commendable right.

* * *

THORPE'S case was not so severe as that of the average college player, for he not only played outside his home county and State, but accepted money for so doing, as well; thus professionalizing himself for all time. This is a much more serious offense than the one we are discussing. And yet it aroused a veritable storm of protest and argument anent the justice or injustice of the punishment. Then, too, the national pride suffered keenly at the thought of those splendid achievements of an American going for naught. The result has been to start the whole question up again, especially in the colleges; and it would not be surprising to me if we found the college associations soon taking up this question and seeking for a way to sensibly modify the rule.

The trouble is that if you let the boys take any money for playing, no matter what the circumstances, you clearly thereafter must classify them as professionals by the standards of every other nation under the sun.

Yet if you allow them to continue to play college ball you will certainly be permitting professionals in large numbers to compete against amateurs; and that would not only throw endless confusion into the ways and workings of the Amateur Athletic Union, but would mean endless complications for the future when it comes to matching our amateur athletes against those of the countries in Europe in Olympic games.

* * *

NEVERTHELESS it is my conviction that sooner or later a change will come in the college baseball rules; the demand is getting too loud, too strong to be much longer ignored.

And along what line will the remedy lie?

Ten years ago in discussing this question I said that so far as the mere common sense of the matter went, and apart from all other considerations, it was clear to me that boys should be permitted to play ball, and in their first year at college, provided they had never professionalized themselves by taking money for it. But after having entered college with this clean record they should be permitted to play where and with what clubs they pleased, and to accept money for such playing as well. And that thereafter they should not be debarred from further college playing on account of having accepted money for the summer playing.

The ground I took for this position was that if a boy after entering a college with clean hands had acquired sufficient skill while there to make his playing services worth a money salary, that was to his credit and to the credit of the school at which he acquired his proficiency. As he had entered with no smirch on his amateur standing there would be no suspicion that he had been paid to enter that school, as used to be the case years ago when professionals were imported into college a few weeks ahead of the opening of the baseball season.

If a college boy learns how to sing, act, play a musical instrument, handle a typewriter, or do most anything else under the sun by which he can earn money, while pursuing his college course it is considered all right and highly commendable. Why not let him have the same privilege with regard to baseball?

* * *

I FIND that a great many people have come around to this way of thinking during the past decade, and it would not surprise me in the least to see some colleges flatly taking that position in the near future. We can imagine how well it would please the college players and their friends, and it should also please the coaches and the faculties, for a great deal of trouble would be taken off their hands by letting down the bars in this way. All they would then have to do would be to look at the previous career of the boys before they came to college. After that they would not have to worry about where and how they played during the summer, whether they were fibbing in their eligibility blanks each spring, whether some other college was going to jump up with an unexpected protest of some or all of their players when they had counted on having them O. K.'d and they would not even have to bother about whether the faculties of rival colleges were going to do their duty and disbar one of their own ineligible men or not. There wouldn't be any rule at all about it, and no one would care; it would be as fair for one as for the other.

I should like to try it that way for a year or two, and I profoundly hope the day of trial may soon come.

White City Park Now Open

Best of White Hopes Will Meet at Auditorium-Armory

SAVAGE AND WHITE BATTLE HERE TO-NIGHT

By Left Hook.

A FEW hours after Sailor White and Jim Savage conclude their ten-round bout at the Auditorium-Armory to-night a special representative of the local military companies will embark for New York for the express purpose of closing with Gunboat Smith to come to Atlanta July 4 to meet the winner.

To-day Gunboat Smith looks the best heavyweight of them all. His record entitles him to more consideration than any of them. A battle between Smith and the winner tonight would be an affair of international interest.

The dicker for Smith adds vastly to the interest in to-night's bout—which becomes more than ever a championship affray. Sailor White and Jim Savage have both been looked upon as logical opponents for Smith in the title battle. One or the other must be eliminated before the fights are turned off in the Auditorium-Armory to-night.

Both Men Ready.

Both contestants turned up in good order this morning. They look the better for their hard work since they arrived in Atlanta and should enter the ring in top-notch condition. Savage has been training viciously here. White, who arrived in the best possible trim, has been taking it easy.

Both men will enter the ring tonight at their best scrapping weight and when Referee Lou Castro gives the word and the ball clangs there should be action and gobs of it.

This looks like the battle of his career to Sailor White. He has battled a lot of the best of them. But this night he meets one man he believes he can beat. He admits that Savage can smear it all over him at boxing, but he does not intend to encourage any boxing.

White Is a Scrapper.

White knows it is possible to carry a battle to a man so hard that nothing but rough work will be possible. That's his style of doing business. He loves to mingle. Any time his opponent gets off at long range he sorrows. The exchange of blows is where he shines. He has everything but science on Savage — weight, height, reach, strength and a punch. He has admitted that he will lose if he doesn't get his man early. So he is going in for the early stuff.

The Sailor figures that if he can land a few good blows on Savage he can make him forget all he ever knew about boxing. He has trimmed a lot of other clever scrappers that way and he believes it will work with Jim. Anyhow it is the only system of attack he knows and he is going to try it out. If that method loses he loses. But he figures that he stands a swell chance of putting Savage to sleep.

Saul and Nelson Scrap.

The loud noise in the semi-windup doings will be made by the Saul-Nelson preliminary. These lads take their battle as earnestly as though it was the main bout. They are getting a good piece of money for scrapping and they are both anxious to win. It is a waste of type to say much about this bout, for local fans know it will be good. Anything Saul goes into will be lively. Any time Terry Nelson scraps there will be action. Get the two together and it means fireworks. It will go the full ten rounds, easily enough, for both boys are as tough as gads. Of course a lucky punch might end it, but nobody looks for that. What the fans expect is ten slashing rounds of give-and-take stuff, with no let-up except for the minute intervals.

The Meyer Price-Spider Britt affair looks promising too. These lads haven't any use for each other and have long been pining for a chance to go the route. This is the first time they have ever been put on for the full ten rounds. It may result in a verdict. They love to hammer each other so well and are willing to take so much punishment for the pleasure of an exchange that a knockout is likely to come off at any old time.

The bouts to-night will be run on the same high plane as all those at the Auditorium-Armory. The military companies will be in charge and will serve as ushers and will police the building. The battles will be put on and pushed through at top speed and no long waits need be feared.

Reserved seats are on sale at Shepherd's Sugar Shop, corner of Edgewood and Pryor.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

MATTY.

"You are sick, Father Matty," the young man said,
"You have lost your old fadeaway curve.
Your arm is a hum and your sinews are dead,
And you haven't a thing but your nerve."

"It is true I am sick," he arose to remark,
"It is true I am feeble and lame."
And having concluded, he hiked to the park
And proceeded to capture a game.

It is said that Christy Mathewson never has played ball on Sunday. Nor would seven National League teams go into mourning if he were to lay off seven days per week.

In addition to peddling life insurance it is rumored that Mr. Mathewson is a passably good heaver.

One horrible example of wasted endeavor is the case of the young man who forged a check in order to see the Yanks in the act of playing baseball.

One is forced to wonder at the feat performed by Marcel G. Brindejonc des Moulinais, who flew from Paris to Berlin in an aeroplane without getting his name tangled in the propeller.

There are some misguided persons who still refer to Lew Richie as the Giant Killer.

FABLE.

Once upon a time there was a baseball fan who did not know how to manage a baseball team.

While we grieve with Mr. Wolgast over his fractured thumb, it would not cause us any poignant grief if Tom Jones were to sprain his speaking apparatus.

ENOUGH IS SUFFICIENT.

It is easy enough to be pleasant
Though the hope of a peanant has flown,
But the fan worth while
Is the fan who can smile
When they show an assortment of bone.

What puzzles us most is that Mr. Weston is walking athwart the country in spite of the fact that he has carfare in his pocket.

Whether Messrs. Ritchie and Rivers fight on the Fourth of July is a question that has aroused intense interest—among Messrs. Ritchie and Rivers.

Speaking of baseball trusts, it strikes one that Philadelphia has acquired a monopoly on the world's series.

Occasionally there is considerable in a name. For instance, Rough House Wars is a pugilist.

Reports from the front indicate that Hal Chase is as popular at the Polo Grounds as a flock of rain.

LOAFING.

They tell us Cobb is loafing—that his work is on the fritz.
They say he does not care a whoop to gather runs and hits.
They say that he is quitting and has lost his old ambish,
And plays with all the ardor of an antiquated fish.
But if I owned a ball team I would feel a gladsome throb
If all my athletes loafed on me like Tyrus Raymond Cobb.

Experts inform us that the Cub machine is tottering, but there is a rumor afloat that it is flat on its back.

Mr. McFarland has hurled a defi at Mr. Ritchie, but dodging defis is Mr. Ritchie's specialty.

The manner in which Old Chief Bender is slipping reminds one of a man tobogganing uphill.

Thornton in Finals Of Old Dominion

RICHMOND, VA., June 12.—By defeating Pollard and Cole Thursday afternoon, 6-4, 6-2, Thornton and Ebaner qualified for the finals in men's doubles in the Old Dominion tennis tourney, which is scheduled to be played at 5 o'clock Friday afternoon. Their competitors will be Buford and Dunn.

Thornton's work on the courts is declared to be the most brilliant ever seen here. He was in exceptionally fine form Thursday.

At 4 o'clock Friday, Mrs. Willard Sullivan is scheduled to contest with Mrs. Saunders Taylor for the challenge cup. Mrs. Sullivan having forced her way to the front Thursday afternoon when she easily defeated Miss Colston. The winner of this contest will be entitled to permanent possession of the cup. Mrs. Taylor is now the holder of it.

MAY ORGANIZE LEAGUE TO PLAY ON WEDNESDAY

A movement has been started to organize a baseball league to play on Wednesday afternoons. The moving picture and theater men will combine with the clothing store men who are closing their places of business on Wednesday afternoons. Some of the teams that will probably enter this league are the Consolidated Flirp Company, Mutual Films Company, Daniel Bros. Company and McConnell Clothing and Shoe Company.

Other teams that can play on Wednesday afternoon are requested to call up Shelley Ivey, over phone Ivy 4389, at once.

New Date Set for 'Drome Races

Hold Meet Saturday Afternoon

SHARP at 4 o'clock Saturday afternoon, Starter Noon Hudson will fire the first gun for the first race in the new Atlanta Motordrome. A minute later Announcer Erskine Brewster, from his raised platform, will be booming the results through a giant megaphone. And Atlanta's season of thrills and sensations will be in progress.

Always providing it doesn't rain.

Ten thousand Atlanta speed fans are awaiting the verdict of the weather man. If he will provide a couple of hours sunshine Saturday afternoon there will be nothing to it but a big success. Nearly five thousand people plowed their way to the track Friday night, June 6, right through the rain, on the off chance that there would be racing. Another five thousand stayed at home because they saw the case was hopeless. They will all be here ten thousand strong Saturday afternoon, if the weather is fair. And there will be room for all. Twelve thousand people can be seated in the grandstand alone. Twice that many can be looked out for in the infield. So there will not be crowding if the crowd grows to 25,000. Seats all around a quarter mile track, five rows deep, mean a lot of accommodations.

The sport which will be offered Saturday afternoon cannot be otherwise than thrilling and sensational. Ninety miles an hour on a four-lap track offers hair-raising possibilities. The nearest Atlanta speed bugs ever came to seeing such speed was at the Atlanta Speedway. There the cars raced on a two-mile oval. At the motordrome the best record of the speedway will undoubtedly be equaled or surpassed—and it will be done on a four-lap track, banked like a brick fence, lighted by blazing tungsiens, and surrounded by a solid bank of shrieking, hat-waving humanity. Three and four riders will be on the track at the same time and each will finish past at ten second intervals.

The racing will be in dead earnest. The riders need the money. There hasn't been any "sugar" stirring around racing headquarters in months. Now, with a chance to race for the coin, they will not overlook any bets.

Special cars will be run to the Motordrome, leaving Five Points at two-minute intervals. The run to the show grounds takes but five or six minutes. After the races the cars will be backed up and ready to carry the speed fans back to the city at top speed.

This may be Atlanta's only chance to see speedway racing in the day time. The track was built for night racing. The electric lights are all in place. It was only because of the repeated postponements made necessary because of the recent rains and because of the coolness of the weather, that an afternoon meet was decided on. This show Saturday afternoon will give the fans a fine chance to get a line on the board track racing game by daylight. It may also give Jack Prince a chance to slip up on the weather man. Anyhow, if the weather is fair, there will be nine thrilling races Saturday afternoon. And all Atlanta's speed fans will be there to see them.

Missouri Egg-Laying Contest During Month Of May Marvelous

S. C. White and Brown Leghorns, Barred Rocks, Black Minorcas, Wyandottes Hang Up Fine Records.

The English pen of S. C. White Leghorns is still gaining in the grand total; however, S. C. Brown Leghorn and Barred Rock pens tied for first honors for the month of May.

Black Minorcas make a great record for May.

One Buff Wyandotte pullet lays every day for 62 consecutive days. This pullet leads all others now for the total time of six months and a half with 197 eggs. The English pen holds the pen record for the whole time with 1,338 eggs. This pen also laid about 100 soft-shelled eggs, which, if they could have been credited to them, would have placed them far in the lead. May was the hottest and dryest May in years and seriously affected the egg yield. The pens which have thus far laid over 1,000 eggs are as follows:

No. 2, S. C. White Leghorns, England	1,338
No. 19, Silver Wyandotte, Iowa	1,108
No. 23, Silver Wyandotte, Illinois	1,105
No. 57, Black Langshan, Mo.	1,095
No. 20, White Wyandotte, Ark.	1,044
No. 33, Barred Rocks, Illinois	1,041
No. 49, Black Langshan, Mo.	1,043
No. 30, Buff Wyandottes, Vt.	1,038
No. 56, White Orpingtons, Ky.	1,018
No. 9, S. C. Brown Leghorns, Mo.	1,013
No. 26, Buff Wyandottes, Mo.	1,007

The following pens laid over 220 eggs during May, and it will be noted that the Black Minorcas made great records:

No. 9, S. C. Brown Leghorns, Mo.	229
No. 39, Barred Rocks, Iowa	229
No. 11, Barred Minorca, Iowa	235
No. 17, Barred Minorca, N. Y.	235
No. 26, Buff Wyandotte, Mo.	235
No. 8, S. C. White Leghorn, Cal.	225
No. 5, Barred Minorca, Mo.	225
No. 10, Rose Comb White Leghorn, Missouri	222
No. 2, S. C. White Leghorn, England	221
No. 32, White Rock, Mo.	221
No. 40, Rose Comb Reds, Mo.	220

Two pens tied for first place; three second, and two for third place.

The highest individual record for seven months last year was 156 eggs. For 15 days less time this year three hens have already exceeded that record. The highest individual records to date are as follows:

No. 860, Buff Wyandotte, Vt.	167
No. 66, S. C. W. Leghorn, England	166
No. 600, Buff Wyandotte, Mo.	164
No. 735, Buff Langshan, Mo.	154
No. 62, S. C. W. Leghorn, England	154
No. 65, S. C. W. Leghorn, England	153
No. 1, S. C. White Leghorn, England	150
No. 871, White Wyandotte, N. J.	148
No. 55, R. C. White Leghorn, Mo.	145
No. 67, S. C. White Leghorn, England	144
No. 857, Buff Wyandotte, Vt.	144

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Arrangements are now being made for the third annual contest to be started at the Missouri State Poultry Experiment Station, Mountain Grove, Mo., December 1, 1913. Three pens of ten hens each will be accepted in each variety—no more and no less. In other words, if one person enters two pens, but one other pen will be accepted. Not an egg will be sold or given away for hatching purposes; an absolutely fair deal will accorded each one. It is advisable that the pen consist of ten early hatched pullets fully matured. Liberal premiums will be awarded in the various departments—that is, the best pen record for the month, the best hen record for the month, the best record for total for the year in individuals and pens. If you are interested, better write T. E. Quisenberry, Mountain Grove, Mo., for further particulars.

The pen that was being fed according to the Canadian method went to first place this month, while the pen that was being fed grains of all kinds kept constantly before them dropped back to second place. These pens are separate from the regular contest pens and are composed of half Single Comb White Leghorns and Buff Orpingtons.

This month we give you the formula of the "farm method," as used by a large Eastern egg farm. The mash being fed was manufactured by this farm and was purchased direct from them for this contest. This pen is being fed a mustard bran mash, which is also highly recommended by this farm. This pen feed is as follows:

Grain.

Winter Feed—4 parts cracked corn, 2 parts wheat, 2 parts oats.

Summer—2 parts corn, 4 parts wheat, 2 parts oats.

Feed a little less than one quart to ten hens, only at night feed; no grain in the morning. One pound of mash to each ten hens. Use mash and green cut bone. Add five heaping teaspoonfuls of mustard bran to the mash for every ten hens.

The station urges the advisability of keeping the males out of the laying pens during the season when you are not hatching, as eggs will not keep nearly as well when fertilized.

Ducks.

Peachtree Paving Passed Up Thursday

Commissioners Unanimous for Repairs Fifteenth to Buckhead. New Material 1914.

Of great importance to people traveling in the northern part of Fulton County, and for that matter, in DeKalb and other counties bound for Atlanta, was the action Thursday morning of the Board of County Commissioners in passing a resolution providing for repairs to Peachtree from Fifteenth Street to Buckhead, a distance of over four miles.

The resolution provides that 25 men and a steam roller be put on the job at once, and that during the year 1914, or earlier if possible, the street will be repaved with entirely new paving material (bitulithic). It was carried unanimously. Action of the Commissioners was due to a demand of people living along the route and others using the thoroughfare constantly that something be done to relieve bad conditions.

Robert F. Maddox was one of those most interested. He went down to attend the meeting at the court house, but found that the meeting had adjourned, and he was greeted with the declaration, "Well, the work is already passed up and you are too late with your speech."

The work this year will consist of scraping and rolling the present paving so as to make it as smooth as possible.

Ponce DeLeon Lot Bought.

Quitclaims having been secured from three persons, final consummation of a deal conveying a large lot at the southwest corner of Ponce DeLeon Avenue and North Boulevard for $10,175 has been perfected. The buyers are W. E. Treadwell, S. W. Carson and A. H. Davis and the seller the Lowry National Bank.

The property measures 137 by 185 by 137 by 133 feet. Included in the deal are a 51 by 92 foot lot on D'Alvigny Street, west of Grady, and a 55 by 239 foot lot on an alley 165 feet southerly of Greenwood Avenue.

A deed has also gone to record conveying to Wallace W. Daniel from Porter Langston a 25 by 50 foot parcel on Ivy Street, 50 feet north of East Harris Street, for $8,750. Also to H. F. West from Marian Evelyn Atwood, a lot at Tenth and Williams Streets, for $5,000. Also 180 North Jackson Street, 50 by 195, from Mrs. Ada F. Noyes to Mrs. Etta M. Fraser, for $7,775. Also from C. E. Kauffmann to J. W. McDonald, lot 1, block 11, of Ansley Park, for $4,900.

More Small Dwellings.

Activity in home building is evidenced by the continued demand for permits at Building Inspector Hays' office at the City Hall. Small houses of the one-story bungalow type are especially sought.

Latest permits include a $6,000 two-story dwelling for Mrs. B. F. Weaver at 818 Piedmont Avenue; a $2,000 one-story frame dwelling for Colonel I. N. Ragsdale at 47 Arlington Street; a one-story frame dwelling for Belcher & Tatum at 307 Hill Street, and two two-story frame dwellings for G. F. Turner at 45 and 49 Clifton Street, to cost $2,000 each.

Good Bridge Over Peachtree.

A definite movement has been started to give the county better bridges. Following announcement by the County Commissioners that in future concrete bridges will be placed wherever possible where wooden ones now stand, comes announcement that the Seaboard Railroad will replace the wooden structure over its tracks on Peachtree Road, south of Peachtree Creek, with a handsome steel span. Plans for the bridge were completed at the engineering department of the railroad company in Norfolk, and have been submitted to the County Commissioners for approval. The bridge will be 100 feet long instead of 80, to allow the construction of another track. The cost will be about $20,000. County Commissioners are enthusiastic over the bridge plans, and the traveling public will no doubt welcome the acquisition also.

What Is a Hero? Usually a Life Saver

You Can Be a Life Saver Very Easily BY KILLING FLIES

(Copyright, 1913)

You should kill flies. THE FLY IS THE MOST DANGEROUS INSECT ON EARTH. IT IS MORE DEADLY THAN THE COBRA, MORE DANGEROUS THAN THE TIGER.

It is your duty to kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM TYPHOID FEVER.

All good citizens must kill flies. THE FLY CAUSES THOUSANDS OF DEATHS ANNUALLY FROM INTESTINAL DISEASES.

Please kill flies. EVERY AUTUMN THERE IS A RISE IN THE DEATH RATE FROM TYPHOID. THIS RISE IS TRACED BY THE SCIENTISTS DIRECTLY TO THE FLY.

We beg of you to kill flies. THE FLY KILLS TENS OF THOUSANDS OF CHILDREN EVERY YEAR.

The fly causes more blindness in children than all other causes combined.

The fly spreads every known disease to children and to adults, for it frequents every disease breeding spot and hunts purposely for filth.

Early in the season KILL FLIES.

In the middle of the Summer KILL FLIES.

And in the Autumn and in the Winter, if you can find them, still KILL FLIES.

Treat the fly as our ancestors in the old days treated the red Indians and the wolves.

First, shut them out of your house, make sure that they won't get in; then kill them off as rapidly as possible and pray for the day when you will no longer have to protect your house against them.

Screen your windows.

Screen your doors.

New fly screens made of wire netting that will not rust are more important than a new coat of paint or a new automobile, for fly screens means protection for children.

Protect your house from the flies as absolutely as possible. Protect your food supplies and protect your babies' faces separately.

As the child lies asleep, keep mosquito netting over it.

Keep your sugar bowl, butter dish and food supplies covered.

Don't forget that if you see flies their breeding place is nearby filth. It may be behind the door, under the table, or in the cuspidor.

If there is no dirt or filth there will be no flies.

If there is a nuisance in the neighborhood write at once to the Health Department.

Do not allow decaying material of any sort to accumulate on or near your premises. All refuse should be removed at once or covered with lime or kerosene.

Keep all receptacles for garbage carefully covered and the cans cleaned or sprinkled with oil or lime.

See that your sewerage system is in good order. Pour kerosene into the drains.

Cover food after a meal. Burn or bury all table refuse. Screen all food offered for sale. Buy no food that has been exposed to flies.

It is only by earnest intelligent co-operation that the fly can finally be abolished.

The citizens should combine, the national, State, city and village governments should combine with them to wipe out the unseen enemies of man, the flies that carry all the diseases, or very nearly all, and the mosquito that alone infects men with malaria and yellow fever.

THE THING CAN BE DONE, for it has been done by governments in Cuba, in Panama and in New Orleans.

The trouble is that the country will not take the matter seriously.

Darwin told us that one single pair of flies in forty-eight hours—the quick-breeding African fly—will lay enough eggs and breed enough maggots to devour a lion, leaving nothing but the white bones.

A few flies surviving through the Winter start the plague afresh the following year.

And one careless citizen leaving a breeding ground for mosquitoes supplies enough to infest the whole country.

Fortunately, for two or three years the people have been alive to the fact that their enemies are the tiny fly and mosquito and the invisible disease germs—enemies more deadly and dangerous than ever were the great monsters of prehistoric times or the wolves and lions of our day.

Discussion has begun, newspapers have taken it up and offered prizes. A few public officials have at last TRIED to do something. But only a beginning has been made.

The country must realize the danger and the duty. Children must be taught that the killing of flies is a good and necessary act, painful as it is to take life.

Do what you can to arouse public feeling for the sake of public safety.

And in the meanwhile DO WHAT YOU CAN INDIVIDUALLY.

Kill the flies.

Letters From The Georgian's Readers

DOGS IN GEORGIA.

Editor The Georgian:

I wish to thank you and indorse every word of your editorial on the dog. All the good deeds of ten million dogs can not counterbalance the death of one human being, and I would rather see every dog on earth slain than to see one little child die of the rabies.

Dogs have cost this State millions of dollars. A good many years back every farmer in the State raised sheep and had wool and mutton to sell. I have bought thousands and thousands of pounds of wool throughout Georgia, but to-day you won't find one pound where there used to be thousands. Ask any old farmer and he will tell you dogs are the sole cause of the disappearance of the sheep industry.

I have never heard one iota of evidence that the dog does anything for the good of humanity.

J. W. R.

GOOD ROADS.

Editor The Georgian:

In the campaign for the general good of everybody in this territory, permit me to suggest that something be done toward not only the mere building of better roads, but better maintenance. If you have recently ridden over the Howell's Mill and Colyer's Ferry Roads you know what a mess was made of those nice roads by putting DIRT on fresh oil in such quantities that it was like an original dirt road with dust, instead of using sand or screening.

Here's for good roads! And let's have them oiled, too, but I think anyone with wide experience in the matter will say that common dirt as a "topper" is a mistaken idea. A. H. SAYERS.

"We Must Better the Mothers to Better the Race"

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

A BRIGHT woman named Elva D. Kellog has taken me to task for some verses wherein woman, as the mother, is accused of failing in her duty.

Mrs. Kellog quotes the final line of the poem and her criticisms follow:

"'We must better the mothers to beter the race.'

"Granted. But it will do no good until the fathers have become human' beings instead of creatures lower than anima .. Why not preach at the man DIRECTLY—why not speak to this generation, instead of merely urging mothers to make the next generation of men what it should be? After all, a mother can't do more than half anyway. A mother may bring up a girl alone quite creditably, but a father must have a hand with the son. And fathers are SHIRKING.

Then What?

"Another side of the question. Why do men shirk fatherhood? Oh, I know most every man WANTS TO HAVE CHILDREN. But after he gets them, then what? First, his is the sexual delirium, then the pleasure of anticipation, later real plans and the joy of possession, MINUS THE RESPONSIBILITY. For the mother, fear, dread, pain, agony, worry, an ever-present sense of responsibility—can this be offset by the pleasure of possession?

"We mothers are working ALONE to bring up our little men and women. Ever since the time of Adam, man has shifted responsibility of everything except the bread and butter side of the question. All too often the mother has her half of this responsibility added to the other cares.

"Yet your cry is for MOTHERS to do their duty better. What in the world do you expect of the men? If men had the race responsibility laid at their door, the whole world would undergo a revolution. Men are only BIG CHILDREN—and they OUGHT to be MEN. Then they read your pleas to WOMEN and they begin to see where their own wife, the struggling mother of a band of seven or eight tots, is deficient; and straightway she is belittled in their eyes and they pat themselves on the back for doing THEIR duty. Dear knows, the male man is already an egotist, already a spoiled child, without anything a noted woman can write to make him more so.

"We must better the FATHERS to better the race.

"I would like to see you plead with men for better manhood, true fatherhood, and for the subduing of the much abused, too much indulged sex element, which is in itself a great cause of unwelcome babies and woman's rebellion against motherhood. We want to plan our babies as we would any other grand piece of work, and we can NOT do this until our husbands have become enlightened—have learned control along this line.

"Respectfully yours,

"ELVA D. KELLOG."

Mrs. Kellog has evidently failed to read many articles and verses in this column which have dealt with the subject she desires discussed.

Sex Hygienics.

It has often been urged that our preparatory schools and colleges for young men should include in the curriculum a thorough course in sex hygienics, in what is now known as eugenics; and that married men and fathers should be compelled by law to attend lectures on these subjects at least three times a year.

"Schools of Good Fatherhood" have also been advocated. As soon as a young boy is old enough to attend school he should begin his preparation for marriage and fatherhood by being taught the sacredness of his body, and the necessity to keep it clean and strong and full of healthful vigor. He should be warned of the danger which lies in obscene conversation, vulgar language or habits which could not be known by his mother and sisters. Woman should be made an object of reverence in his eyes, and any woman who is not worthy such reverence he should be taught to pity.

A Mother's Influence.

The scientific facts regarding the transmission of bad blood, made impure by nicotine, alcohol, drugs or sexual vices, should be taught him by teachers properly trained in such knowledge. Vice should be presented to him from its dangerous physical side as well as from the moral standpoint. And the innate pride every man feels in producing worthy descendants should be cultivated in him from early youth, until he as naturally protects his unborn sons and daughters from contamination as he guards himself from mutilation.

But I disagree with the bright woman when she says "The mother can do only half in bringing up a child."

A mother's influence over a child is just as much greater as her part in creating the child is longer in time than that of the father. It is not the mere sowing of the seed which makes a beautiful flower garden.

The caring for the ground in which the seed is sown, and the weeding and fertilizing and training of the plants after the sprout are what determine their vigor and perfection.

For three-quarters of a year before the human plant comes to the light the mother is molding it and influencing it with her thoughts, her habits and her physical condition.

The New Science.

For a year after it is visible its life depends upon her, not upon the father; and its first language, its first ideas, its first habits, are patterned upon the maternal plan.

This is a most important part of a child's life, and too much can not be said to make mothers realize their responsibility.

Mrs. Kellog wants the men of this generation to be talked to. That is well and good; but it is somewhat late to make these men what they might have been had their mothers begun with them in childhood. A wise, good, broad, wholesome-minded mother can make her boy exactly what she wants him to be, if she begins soon enough and is persistent and tactful in her methods—those early years of a child's life are of such vast importance in shaping his mind.

The new science of eugenics (new in its modern practical application to social problems) will make a great change in the ideas of men and women regarding domestic life and marriage relations.

The advent of women into medicine is gradually bringing a change of sentiment, and will eventually do away with some old traditions. Particularly the tradition that man can not exercise control over his passions, and that by nature he is so constituted that his immoralities are justifiable on the plea of health.

New Light on the Descent of Man

The Ancestors of Spiders and Scorpions Give Birth to the Family of Vertebrates.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE affirmation of science that apes and monkeys are our * collateral relatives, sprung from the same ancestral stock, was once very offensive to many good people, some of whom still obstinately refuse to accept it. They think that it robs man of his dignity.

What, then, will they say when told that the ancestors of spiders and scorpions must now be included in the main trunk of the great genealogical tree whose topmost branch terminates, for the present, in man, and that without their intervention neither man nor monkey would have existed?

Nature Invents Backbone.

This assertion is based upon the discovery by Professor William Patten, of Dartmouth College, of the long-missing link between the vertebrate, or backboned animals, and their predecessors, the invertebrates, or animals without backbones.

Until nature invented the backbone there was no possibility of the existence of an upright animal constructed on the plan of the human skeleton. But the first back-boned animals were fishes. After the fishes came the amphibians, living part of the time in the water and part of the time on land. From the amphibians sprang the land reptiles and the birds, and from the reptiles arose the mammalians, or "mother animals," nourishing their young with their milk. The most progressive branch of the mammalians gave origin to a partially upright creature, which became the common ancestor of apes on the one hand and men on the other.

Thus the line of descent is clear from man back to the first vertebrates, the fishes. But ever since the days of Darwin zoologists have been puzzled by the question, "What animal was it that marked the change from the invertebrates to the fishes?"

There was the great "missing link" in the chain of animal life on this globe. Professor Patten believes that he has discovered this link in a curious extinct animal called the ostracoderm, which was developed out of the family of the arachnids (Greek arachne, "spider"), to which the scorpions also belong. The arachnids themselves are not vertebrates.

He Studied Scorpions.

The story of this discovery is intensely interesting. Professor Patten was led to it by observing the peculiar way in which the eyes in the embryo of a scorpion are transferred from the outside of the head to the blind ends of medium tubes projecting from the brain. This was so similar to what takes place in vertebral animals that he began to study the embryonic development of other species of arachnids, and was astonished to find the most striking resemblances with vertebrates. Among other things, he found that the brains of arachnids closely mimic those of verebrates, both in general shape and subdivision, and in their functions.

Still, he could not conclude that the vertebrates sprang direct from the modern scorpions and spiders, because it is known that the first vertebrates were marine animals. But he remembered that the arachnids of to-day are also of marine descent, their ancestors having been marine arachnids, which flourished before any vertebrate animal had appeared. Evidently he must look for the missing link afar back in geological time.

Accordingly, he went back millions of years and fixed his suspicions upon the mysterious marine animal ostracoderm, which, although it was related to the marine arachnids, zoologists had always been puzzled to classify. He traveled wherever the fossils of this creature could be seen, and studied them minutely. But, unfortunately, all that had been collected were more or less imperfect, and his inquiry might never have been completed if he had not discovered a wonderful deposit of ostracoderms in the Devonian rocks on the shore of the Bay de Chaleur in Canada. The deposit was a small one, disclosed by the falling of a cliff. Professor Patten concluded that, millions of years ago, it had been the muddy bed of a shallow, brackish water pool, in which the animals had been trapped by the sudden running off of tide water, and had perished in a heap.

"One," he says, "in its death agony, had plunged into the mud with sufficient force to remain there, head down, in a vertical position. Others were arranged in a horizontal series, uniformly headed in a northeast direction."

Worked for Three Years.

He believes that their heads were turned against a gentle current of water, because the tops of all the fossil ferns found in the same bed were pointed in nearly the opposite direction. Was there ever so dramatic a picture of life on this earth countless ages ago? And then, to think that if these trapped creatures had been the only representatives of their kind, the great race of the vertebrates might have been extinguished in its cradle!

Many of the specimens were so perfectly preserved that the discoverer was able to ascertain the location of their principal sense organs, of their jaws, gills, stomach, etc., and their mode of locomotion, mode of feeding, and the nature of their food. For nearly three years he has worked upon these specimens in his laboratory, gradually disclosing their internal structure, until now he is able to affirm that the ostracoderm was neither a vertebrate nor an invertebrate, but intermediate between the two. In other words, it is the long-missing link, and it shows that the marine arachnids, the great-grandfather of the spiders and the scorpions, gave rise to a race of creatures in whom nature made her first experiments toward the production of a backbone, which no true arachnid was ever to possess, but which, when set erect in man, was topped with a brain that has made its possessor the master of the world and its secrets.
