At the recess of the caucus Senator Simmons announced that the proposition to free list wool manufactures was beaten by a close vote.

"We expect to finish the hemp, silk, paper and sundries schedules tonight," said Senator Simmons, "and take up the administrative and income tax features of the Underwood bill Monday."

FLAGLER WILL UNCHANGED AND RELATIVE'S HINTS OF A CONSPIRACY FALL

Codicils Show That Millionaire Railroad King Left Only Son With but Small Share of His Fortune. Bulk of Wealth Held in Trust.

By TARLETON COLLIER.

WEST PALM BEACH, June 28.—While a number of the charges made by Amasa Flagler, of California, regarding strange circumstances surrounding the death of Henry M. Flagler to-day are found to be substantial, the principal accusations that codicils were added to the Flagler will, completely changing its effect, and that the dying man was given insufficient medical attention, appear to fall without support.

Seven codicils to the will are not significant. Investigation into the charges by Amasa Flagler that dark work accompanied the end of his kinsman was conducted by The Sunday American. The stories of the California man that Henry M. Flagler was kept in deep seclusion until the end; that visitors, including himself, were refused admittance; that the most rigid privacy shrouded every detail of the railroad king's illness—all are found to possess a substantial basis of fact.

Palm Beach, deserted, boarded up, uncanny in its summer desolation, today furnishes the setting for a belated story of tragedy—the tragedy in the death of Henry M. Flagler, the Florida railroad king, who died May 20, 84 years old, his brain worn out.

Built Empire; Dies in Seclusion.

The story is how a man who had built an empire came to die in seclusion on a deserted island, attended by unskilled nurses, denied to visitors—and some of them his kinsmen—and with never a word given out as to his condition, from time to time.

Amasa P. Flagler, of California, who says he is the closest male relative of Henry M. Flagler, except for Harry Harkness Flagler, a son, came to Palm Beach while the financier was dying, and was refused a sight of him. To-day he is talking freely to newspaper men, hinting at mystery in the death of Henry M. Flagler, charging that the great railroad man was not given the proper treatment or care, and that Mrs. Flagler, J. B. Parrott and Dr. W. R. Keenan, the three who were practically alone with him toward the end, and who, he points out, were the beneficiaries under the will, kept visitors away purposely.

Amasa P. Flagler, according to the variety of opinions maintained by residents of Palm Beach, is anything from a faker to a justly aggrieved person. The fact remains, however, revealed as a result of investigations by The Sunday American, that Henry M. Flagler died in loneliness and in enforced seclusion.

He died in a small room of a frame cottage on the Atlantic beach, to which he had been moved some time before the end. From one window is to be seen "The Breakers," his own great hotel. It has been locked and deserted since March. Through the other window there is the sight of a stretch of parched grass, the beach and the ocean.

George Conway, a boy who waited on Mr. Flagler during his illness, said to-day that the dying man kept his eyes always on the ocean.

"He loved it," said Conway. "One time, not long before the end, he said to me: 'George, there is the greatest thing in the world,' pointing out at the sea. 'If there ever comes a time when you would be proud of yourself and of what you have done, think about that ocean. There is something greater, more wonderful than anything a man can ever make or become. Railroads and cities are nothing.' But a lot of the times he was not conscious to what went on."

Mr. Flagler was moved to the beach cottage from his mansion, "Whitehall," when summer began to set in at Palm Beach. He was moved at the combined orders of his physician, Dr. W. R. Keenan, and Mrs. Flagler. Dr. Keenan is Mrs. Flagler's brother. Because has was moved Amasa P. Flagler finds the basis for a denunciation of those who took care of him, declaring that his kinsman was taken to the empty beach cottage that he might be more securely isolated.

Joe Jefferson Died In Same Cottage.

Investigation reveals that many of the statements made by Amasa P. Flagler in his interviews regarding the death of his relative are exaggerations. He is said to have declared that the beach cottage in which Henry M. Flagler died was old and dilapidated and isolated from the community. It is, however, "The Nautilus," one of a colony of seven cottages on the beach, and is within 200 feet of "The Breakers." It is leased for $5,000 a season of three months to the winter visitors from the North, and last season was occupied by "Finey" Conners, the Buffalo politician. Joseph Jefferson, the actor, according to the beach traditions, died in the same cottage.

Trained Nurses Succeeded by Boy.

The rapid decline of the railroad king began about March 1, when, already ill, he was injured by a fall in the reception hall of "Whitehall." He took to bed at that time, and never H. E. Bemis, wife of the manager of the "Royal Ponciana."

From the fact that the attending left it until the day of his death, May 20. After several weeks in his room at "Whitehall," he was moved to the beach cottage.

Trained nurses who had been engaged were turned away, to be succeeded by George Conway, a young English boy, who is the nephew of Mrs. Cooper, the housekeeper at "Whitehall," and by Tom Lynch, a young man employed on the estate. Conway watched by day, and the other by night.

Dr. Keenan, the brother of Mrs. Flagler, for years house physician at "The Breakers," and more recently at the "Royal Ponciana" as well, attended Mr. Flagler. To aid him, Dr. Castleberry, a guest in the winter hotel, from Harrisburg, Pa., remained. Dr. Castleberry is a kinsman of Mrs. physicians are related to beneficiaries under Flagler's will, and that one, Dr. Keenan, is himself a beneficiary. Amasa Flagler has drawn evidence of irregular conduct in the care of Henry M. Flagler.

Little Told From Bedside.

During the period of the financier's illness little definite news came from his bedside. Newspaper men of West Palm Beach and of Jacksonville declare that no bulletins were issued, and that inquiries were met always with indefiniteness.

For weeks Flagler lay thus. No one was admitted. The gossip of servants has lingered in West Palm Beach, declaring that the dying man in his delirium called frequently for his son, and frequently also for William Fremd, his gardener. The son Harry Harkness Flagler, who has been estranged from his father for 21 years, was not summoned until by Amasa P. Flagler. Fremd, another for whom Mr. Flagler called, lived on the grounds, within a half a mile of the cottage, but was never taken to the sick room.

Along toward the end came Amasa Flagler. According to his own story, he had sent a telegram to herald his visit. Reaching Palm Beach, he was informed that he could not see the sick man. He declares that he virtually was ordered from the grounds by J. B. Parrott, vice president and general manager of Flagler's railroad, who became president by the express terms of the Flagler will.

Incensed, Amasa Flagler went to the citizens of West Palm Beach with his story. He had telegraphed ahead for a room in "The Breakers," but those were denied him. "The Breakers," he was informed, was closed for the season.

Telegram Sent To Flagler's Son.

Amasa Flagler found quarters in "The Gables," a less pretentious hotel in West Palm Beach, whose proprietor, R. C. McGriff, listened to his story and to this day believes in him. Amasa Flagler was the first to send a telegram to Harry Harkness Flagler.

"Your father is calling for you," is the message he sent.

According to the statement to McGriff, Parrott, over in Palm Beach, heard that Harry Flagler was coming to his father's side, and came across to "The Gables" to engaged a room and bath for the financier's son. There was no room for Harry Flagler, either, it seems, on Palm Beach.

No room and bath was available in McGriff's establishment, and Amasa Flagler offered to give up his suite to Harry Harkness Flagler. But Harry Flagler, when he arrived, stayed with an old friend in the town. He arrived in time to see his father alive.

Amasa Flagler declares that he was not allowed to see the body of Henry M. Flagler after death. The Tropical Sun, the daily paper of West Palm Beach, bears a story of how Amasa Flagler was leaving the town, full of wrath at His treatment. At the station, according to the story, he could obtain no information about his trains.

"You are the only person connected with this road who has exhibited the slightest consideration or courtesy toward me," he told the boy, according to the story.

The body of the dead millionaire was taken in hand by an undertaker imported from Miami. Undertaker McGinley, in West Palm Beach, was not consulted. Citizens of the town believe this to be the case because Henry M. Flagler and the city of West Palm Beach had little in common. The two have been antagonistic of late years, in spite of the work of development which Flagler has done for East Florida, and a number of local ordinances and regulations were passed inimical to the Flagler interests.

Residents of West Palm Beach now declare that the feeling that grew up was not personal to Flagler himself, but was occasioned by actions of other officials of the Florida East Coast Railroad.

Flagler's funeral was held in St. Augustine, and his body placed in an elaborate vault which he had built in connection with the Memorial Presbyterian Church. St. Augustine he made his home, it is said here, because he was repelled by the attitude of West Palm Beach citizens.

Makes Charges Against Beneficiaries.

According to his story, Amasa Flagler was denied a part in the funeral. He went on his way North, where he has made his sensational charges that Mrs. Flagler, Dr. Keenan and J. B. Parrott kept the dying financier secluded, denying all admission that they might maintain an influence over him.

The three are the principal beneficiaries under the will, and it is Amasa's inference that because they were with him continually, to the seclusion of others, their claims were made secure. He hints, in his interviews, that codicils to the original Flagler will were made under their domination, cutting out other legatees, particularly Harry Harkness Flagler, the son of the financier.

However, an examination of the will and codicils proves this accusation to be without foundation. There are seven codicils, but none materially effective.

The documents are in the court house in St. Augustine, where they have reposed since being made. The original will was drafted February 1, 1902, and names W. H. Beardsley, of New York; Dr. William R. Keenan, of Lockport, N. Y., the physician who was with him at his death, and J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, another of the little party with him most of the time during his last illness, as his executors and trustees. His wife, Mrs. Mary Lillie Flagler, he names as the residuary legatee, and his son Harry Harkness Flagler, he cut off with the relatively small legacy of 5,000 shares of Standard Oil stock. This, at the time of Flagler's death, was worth $642 a share.

"I have already given my son securities sufficient to bring him an income of $75,000 a year," the will stated. "My son has not shown for me the filial regard that would make me inclined to do more for him than is done by this item of my will."

No beneficiary will profit by the will, however, for at least five years. By its terms, a trust is created, the testator declaring:

"It is my intention in the future to foster, protect and properly develop such properties; and to provide against my decease while such properties are in process of development, and to relieve my beloved wife from the immediate cares and responsibilities of so varied and extensive interests, I hereby declare a trust for all my properties. From this trust is excepted $60,000 to the Stetson University and $20,000 to the Florida Agricultural College for the construction of a gymnasium.

The trust is to last five years, according to the will, and if the Florida East Coast Railway, or the Florida East Coast Hotel Company, at that time should require financial aid, then it is to continue as long as is necessary. Until the expiration of trust, Mrs. Flagler is to receive $100,000 a year and the Memorial Presbyterian Church of St. Augustine $3,000 a year.

Many Legacies Left by Will.

Other legatees mentioned in the original will are: To receive $5,000, Miss Annie C. McKay, Mrs. Ella Green, Stephen A. Brave, John P. Beckwith, William H. Chambliss, Ed J. Triay, George W. Wilson, Bernard O'Brien, his coachman; George Holland, his butler, and Ida Scheiffer, his housekeeper; to receive $10,000, James A. McGuire, R. T. Goff, John Anderson, Fred Sterry, Joseph D. Price, Henry W. Merrill, J. A. McDonald, William H. Beardsley and Jasper G. Salter; to J. E. Ingraham, $20,000; to J. R. Parrott, $100,000; to C. D. Boice and L. C. Hayes, $2,500; to the Florida Agricultural College, $80,000; to the John B. Stetson University to continue to pay to Horace H. Flagler, of St. Augustine, the dividends on 50 shares of Standard Oil stock. It provides, too, that the legacy to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society apply only if the church remain in the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.

Codicil six makes provision for the maintenance of his mausoleum by the expenditure of a portion of the income from the $75,000 which he bequeathed to the church in St. Augustine.

The last codicil, drafted September 13, 1912, provides that the legacy of 5,000 shares of oil stock to his son be effective in spite of the change in the form of Standard Oil stock. This was drafted soon after the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company, apparently looking to safe-guarding Harry Harkness Flagler against losing his inheritance on technical grounds. The last provision is the revocation of his previous bequest to Horace H. Flagler, substituting therefor an annuity of $2,000.

No resident of West Palm Beach or its vicinity was mentioned in the will, although common gossip had named several as likely legatees.

Flagler's Isolation Necessary, Says Doctor.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Dr. Owen Kenan, brother of Mrs. Henry M. Flagler, to-day issued a vigorous denial of the charges of Amasa Plummer Flagler regarding the circumstances which surrounded the death of his patient at West Palm Beach.

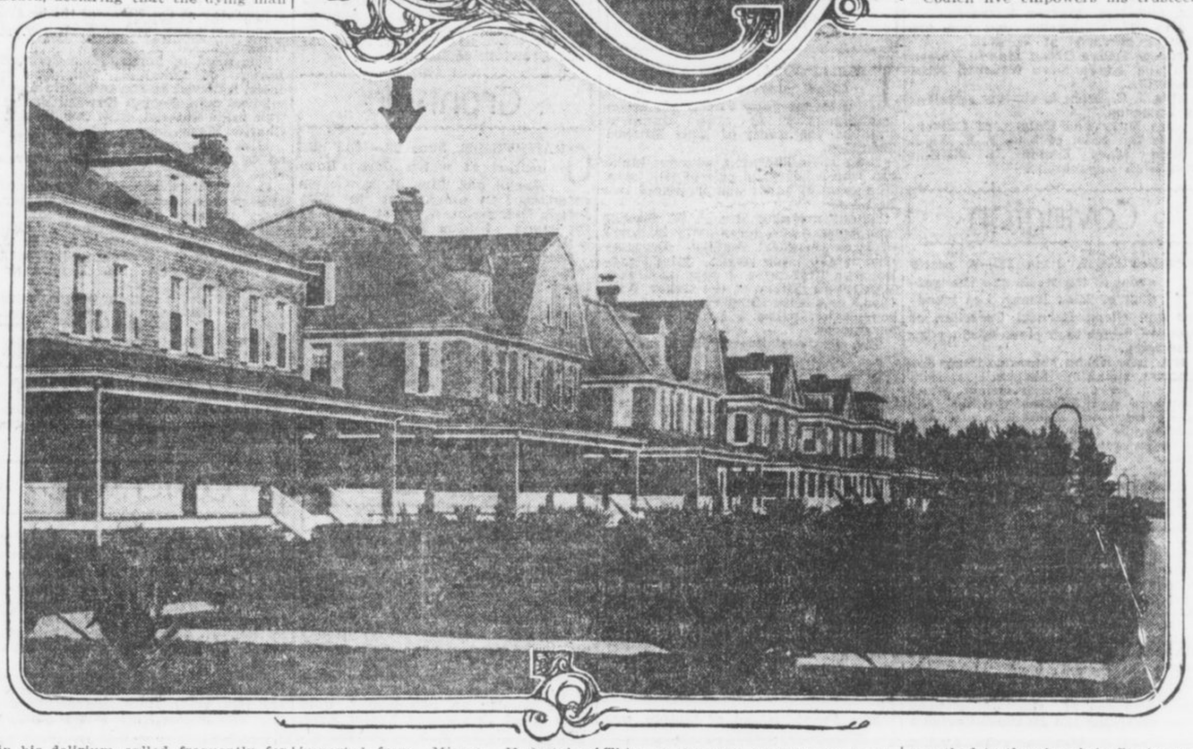
"There isn't a word of truth in the whole thing," he said. "The only explantation is that these so-called 'charges' originated in the brain of some cunning adventurer with an ax to grind. Publication of these unfounded rumors have annoyed us greatly, and Mrs. Flagler is in no condition to be interviewed, so that I can speak for her.

"So far as I can make out, the greatest objection to conditions this Amasa Flagler found at the Beach was the isolation of the sick man. That was natural. Mr. Flagler was old, his illness was serious and he needed quiet. The cottage in which he died is not dilapidated. It rents for an enormous sum every season, and some prominent Boston society people had it last winter.

"If Amasa Flagler's object is to induce Harry H. Flagler to contest the will it will fail. Harry Flagler is a gentleman, although he had not spoken to his father but once in the last seventeen years. He was left $5,000,000 and each of his children gets $4,000,000. That seems to me to be eminently fair.

"As to our conduct of the case, Dr. Castlebury and I did the best we could. Henry M. Flagler had as tender and loving care as any man ever had up to the moment of his death. There was no secrecy other than that was absolutely necessary, and nothing to be concealed."

AMASA FLAGLER, who hinted at plot to influence Henry M. Flagler in making will, is shown in the top picture, while in the lower photograph the arrow indicates the cottage in which the railroad magnate died. This cottage was referred to as a "lonely hut" by Amasa Flagler in his first statements.



PAINTERS HIRE ATTORNEY FOR INSURANCE WAR

A. G. Hamlin, of Deland, to Represent Family and Fertilizer Co. in Million-Dollar Fight.

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—A. G. Hamlin, a well-known lawyer of Deland, has been retained to represent the E. O. Painter Fertilizer Company and the family of the late E. O. Painter in the fight for the more than $1,000,000 insurance he carried. Mr. Hamlin stated to-day that the analysis of Dr. Charles Glaser cleared away any suicide suspicion, and that although the laws of Maryland might be against the case of the relatives such was not the case in Florida, and that the companies would have to pay.

Mr. Hamlin declared that he did not believe the report of Dr. Glaser and the air of Florida agreed with the insurance people, and that it was for that reason that they wanted to keep the vitals of Mr. Painter in Baltimore. The really vital questions involved that most concern the public, he said, are as follows:

"First—Who wants insurance that only brings trouble, publicity, humiliation and litigation to our families when we are gone?

"Second—Does insurance really insure or is it a humbug, a delusion and a snare, the policies being so cunningly drawn that only the insurer is protected?

"Third—Is it not time that Florida, like some other progressive States, regulate all these questions by legislation?

"I do not attempt to answer these questions now. Let the final answer come when the Painter cases are settled. Only one company has shown a disposition to do the fair thing. That is the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company of Philadelphia, which has settled promptly. I am talking on my own responsibility and this interview is in no way authorized by anyone."

Unusual Plea Wins Prisoner's Freedom

Alleged Slayer Acquitted on Claim That Victim Died From Medical Treatment.

MIAMI, June 28.—"Not guilty" was the verdict returned in 20 minutes in the case of J. D. Jeffries for second degree murder, after the most sensational trial here in years. Jeffries shot Sam Turner on April 7 after a quarrel. Turner died on May 18. Attorneys for the defense claimed that Turner did not die from gunshot wounds, but from treatment by physicians, testimony showing that a teaspoonful of iodine and three drops of carbolic acid were administered every three hours.

Experts on the stand declared that iodine should never be taken internally; that a small fraction of the amount given Turner would have killed several men.

Jeffries is a meat dealer, and Turner was a gneral storekeeper in Fort Lauderdale, this county. Both were members of prominent families.

Death Unsolved by Inquest of Coroner

Poison Mystery Appears in Unexpected Passing of William K. McDonald at Jacksonville.

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—The Coroner's jury returned a verdict in the case of the death of William K. McDonald, that "Deceased came to his death from causes unknown."

McDonald was found dead in his office Thursday night. Fifteen minutes before he was found he talked to his wife over the telephone. A glass containing carbolic acid was found on a table in his office. He was insured in several fraternal orders.

Mr. McDonald was proprietor of the McDonald Printing Company at the time of his death.

BIG LUMBER PLANT OF ESCAMBIA COUNTY BURNS

PENSACOLA, June 28.—Fire destroyed the plant of the Escambia Land and Manufacturing Company's planing mill at Pace.

It is supposed to have originated from a hot box in the shafting, located in the work room of the plant. The mill was one of the largest in this section, having a capacity of 50,000 to 60,000 feet of lumber per day.

The Escambia Mill Company operated the plant. It will be rebuilt at once, work of clearing the site to commence as soon as the debris is cool enough. Orders for necessary machinery will be placed immediately.

SETTLES DAMAGE SUIT AFTER JURY IS DRAWN

PENSACOLA, June 28.—M. J. Allen, a switchman on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, was given damages amounting to $1,250 by the Pensacola Electric Company for injuries received when he was knocked from a box car by coming in contact with a trolley wire. The case was docketed for trial, but was compromised. Suit had been brought for $10,000, the compromise being agreed upon after the jury was empaneled.

REPAIRS TO BEACH ROAD AROUSES DUVAL COUNTY

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—Serious complications are expected to result in Duval County over the repairing of the beach boulevard. This highway is now being repaired with tarvia and the County Commissioners are being accused of not acceding to the wishes of the people. The matter was taken up by the Board of Trade last night.

Jacksonville Will Get Hamburg Line

Great Shipping Company Will Enter Florida Port When the Docks Are Reopened.

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—When it was announced that Jacksonville had voted to issue bonds for $1,500,000 to build municipal docks and terminals business here took a boom. Several foreign steamship lines wrote asking about the possibilities of securing business. One was the Hamburg-American Line. Officials of the company announced that as soon as the docks were completed a line would be established between this port and Hamburg.

Last week one of the vessels of the company arrived and remained until to-day, loading for Europe. Officials of the company looked into trade and business conditions here. They were pleased with the outlook and declared the company intended to establish a line to this port as soon as the docks are finished.

When the bonds for these docks were being validated in the Circuit Court an intervention was filed and the action of the court delayed. The court found in favor of the city and validated the bonds, but an appeal will be taken to the Supreme Court that the bonds may sell easier on the market. This will mean an additional delay of several months. Every effort will be made to have the docks completed by the time of the formal opening of the Panama Canal.

Naval Stores Men of Florida Meet Monday

Secret Service Agent Investigating Business—New Company Likely at Brunswick.

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—A general meeting of the naval stores factors of Florida has been called for this city on Monday to consider plans for the reorganization of the turpentine and naval stores business. All factors in the State are expected to be represented.

A Secret Service agent from the Department of Justice in Washington is in the city looking into the naval stores business. He is the same man who secured information for the Government in the suit in Savannah. It is reported that the leading factors are planning to organize a large company and establish headquarters in Brunswick.

Florida Editors to Meet at Fort Myers

Tampa Convention Closes With Election of Officers—Cost Congress in Fall.

TAMPA, June 28.—The Florida Press Association closed the most successful three days' meeting in its history here to-day. Fort Myers was selected as the next meeting place over Deland, Miami, West Palm Beach and Key West.

The editors decided to hold a cost congress at Ocala in September when a branch of the United Typothetae will be formed.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

President, William Russell, Palatka; vice president, R. J. Holly, Sanford; secretary, T. J. Appleyard, Tallahassee; treasurer, J. W. White, Jacksonville.

Mr. Appleyard is now starting on his twenty-fourth year as secretary of the association.

Yesterday the editors went to Passagrille and St. Petersburg and to-day they were entertained by the Florida Brewing Company.

Dress Reform Wave Hits Jacksonville

Church People Propose Mass Meeting to Protest Against "Peek-a-boo" Skirts.

JACKSONVILLE, FLA., June 28.—A dress reform wave has started in this city and an attempt will be made to do away with the "peekaboo" skirt, which is so much in evidence this summer.

Plans for a mass meeting of church people are being made. Prominent business men, preachers and women will urge some reform to stop the practice of wearing thin dresses, which has resulted in the appointment of a moral committee in one Pennsylvania town and the introduction of a woman's dress bill in the Ohio Legislature.

Triple-Pick Primary Plan Proves Failure

St. Petersburg Voters Dissatisfied With Nominations—May Vote Negroes Next Tuesday.

ST. PETERSBURG, June 28.—The white primary here seems to have been a failure, through the plan of allowing first, second and third choices. The result was that none of those selected were the first choices of a plurality, but won their nominations through the adding on of their second and third choices. It has caused much dissatisfaction and a general disposition to bolt the nominees.

The election for Commissioners takes place Tuesday, and it is more than likely none of those who went into the primary will be bound by its choice. This will probably throw the bars open to negroes, many of whom have been registered.

ATLANTIC BEACH BECOMES POSTOFFICE TOWN JULY 1

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—A new postoffice is to be established in July at Atlantic Beach and will be open the year around. During the last six months a large summer colony has sprung up at this point on the beach, and the Department has agreed to serve it with a regular postoffice.

JACKSONVILLE ESCAPES EFFECTS OF HEAT WAVE

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—The heat wave which is to-day sweeping over the country is not affecting this city. The maximum temperature reached here was but 89, according to the United States Weather Bureau thermometer. The temperature was lowered at 11 a. m., when a shower of rain came up.

JACKSONVILLE CITIZENS PLAN CITY BEAUTIFUL

"Foremost Port South of New York" Is Aim of Progressive Residents.

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—This city just now is making a fight to become not only the foremost port along the Atlantic south of New York, but also the most beautiful city in the country. Since the fire of 1901 many handsome buildings have been put up and to-day a systematized campaign is being laid out to construct a "city beautiful."

Some eight or ten months ago the movement was started. A Bay Street Beautiful Commission was created by the City Council and the Board of Trade. This commission obtained the present uniformity of awnings and induced the City Council to order the street paved. The civic leagues of the city have been busy and several of the principal streets, including Main, Forsyth, Adams and State, now are lighted at night by cluster lights instead of the old-time arch at street intersections.

These plans were but preliminary in the forward movement. A new Union Station has been ordered by the State Railway Commission after a fight lasting fifteen months. Plans for the station will be approved July 15 by the commission. A time limit will be set for the building to be completed.

Station to Have Park.

The station will be located on the present site facing Myrtle Avenue. Thursday evening a committee was named by H. B. Race, president of the Board of Trade, to plan a park in front of the station. The statue of General Andrew Jackson, for whom the city was named, will be put in the center of the plaza, which will be called Jackson Park.

The county commissioners have announced that they will build a new court house costing from $250,000 to $350,000 this fall. The City Council has named a committee to figure on repairs to the city hall and collect data for the construction of a building large enough to house all city officials. The Woman's Club and Board of Trade now are making an effort to establish a social center for the city.

These two organizations have agreed to name a joint committee to induce city and county authorities to build one great building for the use of citys and county officials. A colonnade building is desired such as the one in Chicago.

New Postoffice Asked.

Another movement on foot to increase the beauty of the city is that to get a new postoffice for Jacksonville. Figures from seventeen cities throughout the country, all as large or larger than Jacksonville, show clerks have less room in the local postoffice in proportion to the amount of mail handled than in any other office.

The present building can not be enlarged. There is no land to be had and the foundations will not support an additional story. The plan is to ask for $1,500,000 for a new building. This will be used for all Government offices save the postoffice. Representative Frank Clark, of the Second Florida District, is chairman of the Public Buildings Committee.

It is predicted that by 1915 there will not be a city in the South, if in the entire country, able to boast of more beautiful buildings than Jacksonville.

Georgia May Build Road Into Florida

Senator Sweat Would Extend Western & Atlantic Railway to Jacksonville.

The resolution introduced in the Georgia Senate by Senator J. L. Sweat, of the Fifth District, providing for the extension of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, owned by the State of Georgia, from Atlanta to Jacksonville through Fort Valley, Waycross and St. Marys, will mean much for the Florida port, as it will provide a direct line to Chattanooga.

Jacksonville business men, it is understood, have lined up behind the movement, which is centered now in the Georgia Legislature, and intend to push it to completion.

The resolution provides for the appointment by the Governor of a commission consisting of five citizens, two of whom shall be expert railroad builders, one a lawyer and two practical business men, who shall inspect the entire proposed route and report fully to the General Assembly next summer. In the meantime, the resolution has been referred to the Western and Atlantic Committee.

Senator Sweat's idea, which is said to meet entirely with the approval of Jacksonville citizens, is to purchase or construct the necessary lines in order to make a complete system between Chattanooga and Jacksonville, the line to be taken in charge by the State or leased for a long term.

DENTISTS FROM ATLANTA AT FLORIDA CONVENTION

JACKSONVILLE, June 27.—The convention of the Florida State dentists has adjourned. The dentists enjoyed a banquet at the Atlantic Beach Hotel, at which F. O. Foster, of Atlanta, acted as toastmaster. Among the out-of-State visitors were Dr. Thad Morrison and Dr. Claude N. Hughes, of Atlanta.

POLICE MUST APOLOGIZE BEFORE MAKING ARREST

JACKSONVILLE, June 28.—Mayor Van C. Swearingen and the bond trustees are still fighting over the control of the police in this city. This morning the Mayor issued orders to the police instructing them to beg the pardon of all persons whom they attempted to arrest before the arrest was made.

PROPOSITION TO TURN NAVY INTO FLOATING FAIR

Arkansas Congressman Would Have Battleships Carry Pumpkins Instead of Sshells.

DEWEY AS A BUSINESS MAN

All Tars To Be Taught Salesmanship and Spread Commercial Fame of the Nation.

By JONATHAN WINFIELD.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Representative Goodwin of Arkansas has risen to dispute the wisdom of Secretary of State William J. Bryan, though Representatve Goodwin is a Democrat and has cast his free and untrammeled ballot some several times for the Nebraskan for President.

But when he read that the Secretary of State had declared that the United States Navy is useless and the army nearly so, he rose to protest. The navy can be useful, he insists. It can readily be converted into a floating exposition of the products of American farms and factories, and this show can be of untold value in making foreign tours.

Nations to See Show.

Upon this theory Representative Goodwin got to work. If his enthusiasm should sweep Congress off its feet, England, France, Germany, Japan and the Latin-American republics will be edified by the sight of piles of Iowa pumpkins in the magazines of Uncle Sam's battleships, instead of 14-inch shells.

When a battleship is dressed, instead of flags flying from the twisted iron mastheads and lookout towers, there will be suspended from stem to stern strings of shoes from the Massachusetts factories. On the armor belt, just above the water line, will be painted in large white letters, "Made by the United States Steel Corporation."

Instead of smokeless powder and torpedoes, the battleships will be equipped with wheat and flour from Minnesota and Wisconsin, and cornmeal from the "corn belt."

From Admiral Dewey down the line to the youngest midshipman the officers will be sent to special business schools which Uncle Sam will have to open. Enlisted men, in addition to their other duties, will take courses in the practice of the warehousemen. Then, after having sufficient knowledge in the premises, Uncle Sam will become an efficient traveling salesman, visiting every port in the world and exploiting American merchandise, commodities and staples.

Asks Redfield for Figures.

As Mr. Goodwin put it:

"I see no reason why the American Navy should not be put to good use. Opposed to senseless multiplication of useless battleships, I can see no reason why those we have built at so great expense should not be used in advancing trade before they rot and become junk."

Mr. Goodwin proposed to direct Secretary Daniels of the Navy Department to report within 60 days to Secretary Redfield "the extent and character of all space on all ships of the United States Navy which might reasonably be temporarily used for the purpose of exhibiting American manufactured articles and other articles of commerce." He proposes that the Secretary of Commerce shall allot space on American ships to American manufacturers, merchants, exporters, boards of trade or other commercial organizations for use in exhibiting their wares.

Richardson, the famous Harvard surgeon, is being completed in a private laboratory at the Harvard Medical School in an effort to prove Dr. Richardson's theory that thoughts are recorded and should be visible on the outer walls of the cerebrum.

Edna Goodrich Finds a Descendant of the Acadians

Also Norman Woman Who Never Heard of Evangeline

Actress Makes Discovery While Seeking Local Color to Aid Her to Take Chief Part in Dramatization of Longfellow Poem.

Edna Goodrich, famous as an actress and one of Nat Goodwin's wives, is now in Normandy studying local atmosphere the better to fit herself for the chief part in "Evangeline," the dramatization of Longfellow's poem which is to be staged in this city in the fall.

From France she will go, in July, to Nova Scotia to continue her observations.

She writes in an interesting and original way of her search for a descendant of the old Acadians.

FALAISE, NORMANDY, June 28.—After several weeks of surfeiting myself with the theater of Paris and Berlin, I set out for Normandy, from whence the Acadians came and where, doubtless, the ancestors of the glorious wanderers had steeped themselves in the religion and faith immortalized by Longfellow—for I sought for communion with Evangeline.

I admit I had a faint hope that somewhere I might find a descendant of a returned Acadian with tale or relic of Acadian days.

After consulting Baedecker, I decided to go to Caen, only four hours from Paris.

I landed in Caen and called upon the British Consul, there being no American representative in the town. He was located in a little side street. Conspicuous on his side door was a sign reacing, "Office hours from 2 to 3." It was but 1:45, but I had the temerity to ring.

Points Pointedly To Sign.

I was greeted by a sort of faded red edition of Lawrence D'Orsay, carrying a red cotton print napkin and a red gleam in his eye, which informed me that I had disturbed the statesman at his lunch. With the unoccupied index finger he pointed at the office hour sign.

"I saw it," I replied, "and I apologize; but I am rather in a hurry, and"— "Oh, you're an American?" he interrupted with mingled tone of discovery and accusation.

"Yes," I replied.

"Well, I cannot talk to you now," accompanied by an embracing of the long red mustache with the long red napkin.

"I am sure you can tell me what I want to know," I persisted. "Do you know anything of the Acadians?"

"Of what?" he rejoined.

"You have read 'Evangeline?'" I volunteered.

"Cannot say I ever heard of it," he replied.

"It's a rather well-known poem," I ventured, "written by a Henry W. Longfellow."

Gives a O'Orsay Laugh.

"Ha! Ha! Ha!" he guffawed in D'Orsay's most aproved guttural, "I've far too much to do to bother my head with that sort of rot. Really, you know, I don't think I'm the person you're seeking at all."

I looked at him, as he again tried to suspend himself on the mustache, had one good laugh and agreed. "I guess, possibly, you're not."

Twenty miles from Caen is Bayon, a Norman village, where the old Norman spirit and surroundings have been practically untouched by time. At 4 o'clock in a mid-week afternoon the villagers, neatly dressed, were turning out of their homes at every side and all filing to church, fine old cathedral built in the eleventh century. I never witressed so unanimous a reply to the call of a church bell.

There, indeed, was the spirit of Evangeline, as Longfellow breathed it into the life in Acadia. There were the people who looked only to their priest for guidance and stayed their hands at his command when their all was taken from them. I stood near the cathedral as these pious people entered, and I know from the faces, some spiritual, others deeply reposeful, that religion was something more than a form.

Found No Acadians

I sought for a trace of a descendant of a returned Acadian, but my search was in vain, except that I found the clew which later led to an interesting meeting in this place.

Finally I gave up Caen for this place, and on the oldest street (the Rue Val d'Ante) I found an Acadian descendant. She is ninety-four and her name is Arlette La Croix—named, as were so many Norman girls, after the fair Arlette, the tanner's daughter who fascinated Robert the Devil, became his wife, and later the mother of William the Conqueror.

This old, sunny-faced, toothless woman lives all alone in one of the tiny stone ruins that line this most picturesque old street.

Her husband and children died years ago, and, so far as that part of Normandy is concerned, she is the last of the Acadians. Her great-grandfather, Pierre Archambault, she told me, was driven from Grand Pre and landed in Louisiana.

After long suffering he gathered enough money to return with his children to Falaise. His eldest boy, her grandfather, had frequently related to her tales of wild America and the Indians.

Never Heard Longfellow Legend.

She had never heard of the legend of Evangeline and, of course, had never read the poem. I gave her a copy. It was bound in red, and I am sure the cover delighted her. As best I could I told her some of the story. She was entranced and assured me that she would find some one who knew English to translate it.

There was a delightful freshness about this old woman. She was wrinkled, weather-beaten and growing feeble, but her eyes twinkled and she laughed with the spontaneity of a child.

In her tiny room was a very old Bible, a well-thumbed missle, and on the wall a rude crucifix. They seemed her only companions, yet this lovable old soul had found that magic "something" in these mute companions which make the old, unquestioning, unchallenging faith a glorious blessing.

Again I saw what Longfellow had meant in his perfect delineation of Acadian character. Before me sat its embodiment, a worn-out, overworked old woman, who had none of the material blessings, who never had known any of the world's modern luxuries, yet who could set near the end of her journey blessing all who came near her with a smile that arises only from a beautiful soul.

And after all the final test of a man's life is the smile he ends it with. Be it absent or grave or imbecillic, or fawning, or sardonic, it is his record.

Dear old Arlette La Croix's smile was one of the rare sights that I shall treasure long after I have forgotten many imposing spectacles. As one of the last of the Acadians she is a glorious example of a people who believed in God and were blessed by their faith.

My journeys in Normandy had brought their reward. It was said with a better understanding of and a still greater reverence for the Acadian character that I approached my study of Evangeline. In secluded Normandy I buried myself.

As I sat the first evening contemplating the glorious character of Evangeline, I picked up a week-old English paper. The featured story dealt with fresh outrages committed by suffragettes, and immediately I realized what Evangeline was not. She was not a suffragetter. Instead of making demands she made sacrifices; instead of asking what she could get she asked what she could give. All reasonable people must agree that women are entitled to additional rights, yet I wonder if the struggle for the winning of them will compensate us for what we must lose of those fine feminine qualities of which Evangeline was the supreme example.

I learned, too, another theory in Normandy: It had never occurred to me that there could be a spot in the civilized world where the dollar would beckon in vain—certainly not in Europe, since in all my previous European experiences I had never seen anything but a highly organized dollar-trapping system, baited mainly for Americans.

Undoubtedly we Americans are largely to blame for this foreign degradation since we seem to have lost all sense of values when we are removed eight days from our bank balance.

The ocean trip is agreed to be narcotic. The eastward trip on the Atlantic is even more—it is opiate-dream producing. We embark with a fair sense of value. We disembark with the hallucination that there never will be an end to our money, and this hallucination persists until we embark on the westward trip, when the awakening process begins.

Question for Psychologist.

I should like some psychologist to explain the difference in the effect of eastward and westward ocean travel.

But to return to my startling discovery; I did find a place where no laps were spread for dollars, and it was only four hours from Paris, that Queen of the European Mercenaries, which would sell anything she possesses, including her president's beautiful beard.

My discovery came in Caen on my second day in Normandy; stirred by a desire to photograph interesting places I determined to engage a photographer.

To the first photographer I explained what I wanted. He had me tell him many times, then he told it back to me several times. When we understood each other I thought it only remained to settle terms, and I inquired his charge. It was most reasonable. We agreed and I then told him I had a motor boat outside and was ready.

"Oh, that was quite impossible. He could not go to-day—no—no—nor yet to-morrow—and the day after, too, was impossible, and it would be at least four days before he could make up his mind to go away on a long three-hour trip."

Money Didn't Move Him.

I pointed out to him how soon we could have it done with. "No—no—it was impossible."

I suggested that we start out very early the following morning so that he might be back in his studio before the commencement of business.

It was not to be thought of—he had never done such a thing. I then offered more money; he was unmoved.

Being obsessed with a determination to have the photographs I continued offering more till I reached five times the price. I might as well have offered a subway ticket. He was not interested. If I could not wait he was sorry, but he knew of another photographer. He might be willing.

Defeated in my first experience with Norman commercial indifference I sought the second photographer. He listened and talked for a very long time, made quite sure he understood what I wanted, was very glad to accept the work, settled terms with me, and when he said the terrible word "When" I lost courage.

I answered "To-morrow." It was just as impossible, he must have five days. I argued and coaxed, and now in desperation raised the price to a ridiculous point, but he was not interested.

In desperation I went to a camera store presided over by a man and his wife. I tried to persuade either one of them to come with me, bringing a camera and getting snap-shots.

Wealth Is Helpless.

It was just as hopeless. They volunteered to teach me how to use the camera—that was all. I offered them more money than their little store earned in several good days in vain. Money was not the slightest argument. Crestfallen, I left them, gazing at my money and wondering how it had so suddenly lost its power. It was the first time I had ever seen it so helpless.

I drove 20 miles to Bayon, where there was one photographer. It was a thing he might do some fine day—if I could call again.

Disappointed and discouraged, I returned to Caen. It was finally in this town that I secured my photographer. He began just as the other had, but now grim determination had seized me. He wanted the usual time of four or five days. I told him that he was going to do it NOW. He got excited, but I fastened a steely glare upon him and told him he was. I kept telling him he was until out of sheer exhaustion he succumbed.

At the foot of Rue Val D'Ante in Falaise is the famous little stream, the Ante, where Norman women for many centuries past have done the family washing and where the laundry work of Falaise is still disposed of.

Romance of Robert.

Just around the turn at the top of the hill is the old castle of Robert, the Devil. Robert used to watch the Falaise maidens washing at the stream. It was there he beheld Arlette and fell in love with her.

Arlette became his wife and later the mother of William, the Conqueror. Her blood had its effect on the history of Europe. Her lily white feet tripped up many a future aspirant.

At the point where Arlette was courting, the Falaise maidens are still washing clothes, perhaps in the hope that another Robert may appear. This was one of the scenes I wanted photographer. We secured some interesting photographs of the old houses and a picture of Arlette La Croix, the only descendant of the returned Acadians that I had been able to find in Normandy.

The Norman disregard of money led me to inquire into their finances. I concluded people so indifferent must be poor. To my amazement I learned that Normandy is much the richest province in Europe; French bankers sell more investment securities there than in any other part of France.

These seemingly indifferent people are shareholders in practically all of the world's large enterprises. The secret of Norman wealth is thrift. A franc which finds its way into a Norman coffer is doomed to darkness and inertia. The Norman will not spend for anything.

They like money, but money has made them independent. If one has the temerity to find fault with anything a Norman merchant sells him, he is asked to leave the place never to return. Guests in Normaan hotels who criticised the service have had their rooms taken from them. If there ever was a land of independence it is Normandy.

Edna Goodrich in Falaise, Normandy, on the street where the women do their washing as in the time of Robert the Devil and on which she found a description of the wonderful people Longfellow has immortalized.

Garage for Baby Carriages in Church

Plans for Philadelphia House of Worship Include Place for Vehicles of Infants.

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—Many new ideas have been advanced from time to time by the builders of modern Sunday schools, but it remains for the board of trustees of the Henry Disston Methodist Episcopal Church to conceive a new thought that will materially assist in the conveniences of their members.

According to the plans of the builders a garage for baby carriages is to be included in the equipment in the new edifice that is now under construction.

SQUAW SWAPS FORBIDDEN BY UNCLE SAM

Wholesale Marriage of Winnebago Indians Prohibited by Government Order.

WINNEBAGO INDIAN RESERVATION, NEBR., June 28.—The Winnebagoes are mad. They think they have been bunkoed. They were promised a big powwow, in which every Indian buck was to be married to one squaw according to the white man's laws, and now the Government has held up this order, and the great marriage ceremony, which was to join every brave to a squaw, and incidentally rid the brave of any superfluous squaws he may have accumulated, is not to be performed until the arrival of the new Indian agent.

The Winnebagoes had sent invitations to all their friends in Oklahoma, South Dakota and Montana, and they were expecting gifts in such quantities as were never before lavished upon an Indian tribe. But they have been forced to cancel these invitations and to forego the wedding presents for the time being.

No Swapping of Squaws.

And what is equally bad is an order which has gone forth from the Government authorities: There shall be no more swapping of wives by the Indian bucks. Every man must continue with the partner with whom he is now living. And when the time of the big wedding comes around, every Indian must get married to his present squaw.

The Winnebagoes were not ready for this. The big wedding was not scheduled for a month yet and many of the bucks intended swapping or selling their present squaws and taking new ones.

Marriage Laws Lax.

Winnebago tribal laws concerning marriage and divorce were rather lax, to say the least. Marriage consisted in securing the consent of the squaw to come over to the home of the buck and live. And divorce was consummated when the buck kicked his squaw out of the house and went ofi to find a new one, or when the squaw got tired of her husband and left him to take up her abode with some other red man.

According to Indian officials, very few of the Winnebago women had been "married" less than a dozen times, and some boasted of having had as many as twenty "husbands." And many of the bucks said they had been "married" as high as fifty times—and no one denied it.

Commission to Rule Canal Concessions

Appointment of Anglo-American Body Will be Announced In a Few Days.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—The appointment of a joint Anglo-American Commission will be announced at an early date to examine the question of sites and concessions along the Panama Canal for business houses, stores and other buildings.

Apparently it has yet to be determined in fact, as apart from principle, how far the United States Government, as distinct from that of Colombia, may grant concessions for land in perpetuity, and further, how far the title to such concessions made to foreign firms can be secured.

100 College Men in Dishwashers' Union

Greatest Proportion of Graduates in Any Trade Found in Organization in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—Of the 700 members of the San Francisco Dishwashers' Union 100 are college graduates. This, it is said, is a greater proportion of college men than can be found in any other labor organization in the country.

The statistics were compiled by two members of the union, one of whom says he is a former instructor in mathematics in an Eastern college.

POSTMASTER TRIES IN VAIN TO RESIGN PLACE

Aged Official Has But Three Mails a Week But Patrons Muddy Her Parlor Floor.

BACKUS, MINN., June 28.—The postmaster of the smallest postoffice in the United States wants to quit and she can't. The Government ignores her resignation.

Her name is Mrs. Mary Armstrong, of Wicklow. She is 71 and her husband, James, was a veteran of the Civil War. Fourten persons get their mail at her log cabin, among towering pines, 12 miles from the nearest station.

Tries to Resign Post.

For more than two years she has been trying to persuade the Postoffice authorities to give the postoffice to some one else.

Telling her experiences, Mrs. Armstrong said:

"I had to turn my best front room into a place for the accommodation of the office patrons. I had to set up a letter rack where my best rocker was to sit alongside the front window, and the mail bags occupy the place I had picked out for the lounge.

"Men come wading through the snow in winter and mud in summer and track my front room all up, and, between them and Ed—that's my grandson—it kept me busy with the broom and dustpan.

Three Mails a Week.

"The official duties in a big town must be simply awful," continued Mrs. Armstrong. "We have three mails a week and I have to sort the letters and papers for 12 persons and put them in the rural delivery sacks. Two other patrons call at the office for their mail. The red tape causes me to lose sleep. Reports have to be made to the Postoffice Department as if the office were doing $1,000 worth of business daily."

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, June 28.—M. Briand, the French ex-Premier, who was seriously injured in a motor car accident recently, said that he and his companion, M. Willen, were pinned down by the wreckage.

"I told M. Willen to hurry up and get free," said M. Briand, "and what do you think he did first when he had got free? Instead of trying to get me out he took his camera, begged me to keep steady and then took a snapshot of the scene, which he considered historic.

BRILLIANT BATTLE SURE IN FRANK TRIAL IN CLASH OF HOOPER AND ARNOLD

Order Has at Last Been Rested and Indications Are That Struggle of Attorneys Will Be Waged in the Most Ethical Manner.

By AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

As deplorable as the Phagan case is, in all its melancholy details, it already is evident enough that there will come of it eventually much that the community may be thankful for.

In the first place, Atlanta and Georgia, and incidentally the entire South will have learned a good lesson in law and order, justice and fair play, and to that extent may be the better prepared for the next case of the kind that comes to their attention.

In the second place, there will be in the future no such wretched bungling and frenzied appeal in and from police headquarters, as for a time marked the Phagan case unique among its kind.

It looks now as if the decks have been pretty well cleared for action and that Leo Frank's trial may be expected to proceed in dignity and order, and that in its final analysis the truth of Mary Phagan's murder may be established, at least to the extent of Frank's real or suspected participation therein.

If Frank should be convicted, that would mean the subsequent indictment and conviction of the negro Conley, as an accessory after the fact.

Conley Indictment May Follow.

If Frank should be found not guilty, that would mean the indictment of Conley, as principal to the murder, in all human probability.

It evidently is the purpose of the State to hold Conley free of indictment, pending the disposition of the charges against Frank. His status as a material witness depends much upon this, of course.

There always is a chance, however, that a Grand Jury may take up a thing of this sort of its own motion, and to that extent there remains the possibility of prior indictment hanging over Conley.

It seems more likely, however, that the case will go to trial about as it shapes up now.

I do not incline to think the State really has any further sensational or particularly effective thing up its sleeve. Neither do I think the defense has.

There may be, on both sides, bits of corroborated evidence or evidence to offset this, that, or the other to come, but in the main I think the public is in possession of all the essential facts in the Phagan case to date.

The public must remember, however, that not all the things it has read in the newspapers, not yet one-half the things, ever will go before the jury trying Leo Frank as competent evidence.

And it is upon the COMPETENT evidence alone that the court will permit Leo Frank to be judged.

For instance, nothing that Mrs. Frank has said in the public prints will go before the jury. A wife is estopped in law from testifying either for or against her husband.

Fomby Woman Rejected.

The Fomby woman already has been rejected as a possible witness against Frank. Her story admittedly is too preposterous even for the State to bother with it further.

How much of Conley's story the jury will hear is entirely problematical.

He will be warned that he need not testify to anything calculated to incriminate himself, and even if he elects to disregard this warning there is much in his statement that likely will go down and out as incompetent or irrelevant.

The ponderous assurances of Frank's guilt, so frequently thundered from police headquarters by Detective Lanford, will, so far as the jury is concerned, not be there. Detective Lanford will not be on the jury—and his opinion as to the innocence or guilt of Frank will not be immediately valuable, therefore.

Frank's own statement, it must be rembered, will be delivered to the jury, not under oath.

The jury will be instructed by the court that it may accept the defendant's statement as the truth in its entirety, and to the exclusion of ALL the sworn testimony, if it sees fit; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject the statement as a whole.

The jury, and the jury ALONE, will be the judge of the facts.

The law—the impersonal law—that the jury will be required to apply to those facts it will get from the court.

It looks, then, as if the Phagan case, getting down to brass tacks, will revolve finally about these persons:

Leo Frank, the defendant; Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank Hooper, representing the State; Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben Arnold, representing the defendant; the judge, the jury and a dozen or so competent and material witnesses.

Order at Last Comes.

So, at last, has order been brought out of chaos, after weeks and weeks of hysteria, stuff and nonsense, passion and prejudice, facts and near-facts, truth and lies, impatience and intolerance—all jumbled into about the worst mess I ever undertook, in my way, to analyze and unravel, in seeking the truth!

Leo Frank will receive a fair trial, and the written and recorded verdict, whatever it may be, will be accepted generally as the truth.

If the jury agrees that Frank is guilty, that verdict will be taken to be a just one. Nothing short of the most sensational and revolutionary new evidence likely would serve to re-establish his good name once he is convicted in the Superior Court.

On the other hand, if the jury shall agree that Frank is not guilty, I think he will be taken back into the friendly and fair-minded good will of the people of Atlanta, a free and untarnished man, and there likely will come a revulsion of popular feeling in his behalf, that will go far toward offsetting and reconciling him to the horrible ordeal he passed through.

The approaching trial likely will be one of the greatest legal battles ever fought in Georgia.

On the one hand—that of the State—Hugh Dorsey, the Solicitor General, has done the drudgery, and Frank Hooper is to handle the picturesque. Hooper likely will figure much more in the public eye hereafter than Dorsey will, for it will be Hooper's business to paint the rainbow, snatch the stars from the heavens, and open the floodgates of tears—if he can!

On the other hand—that of the defense—Luther Z. Rosser has done the drudgery, and Reuben Arnold will have the delicate task of leading the jury along the primrose path that leads to Frank's acquittal.

All Have Big Reputations.

All of these men are great lawyers, with reputations to sustain, and each one may be depended upon to act a part entirely in keeping with the honorable profession of the law. I do not believe there is sufficient money in Atlanta to secure the services of any one of these men in an unworthy undertaking.

Each one of these men may be depended upon to do his best by his client, and as each one is of the quality I note, a fair trial seems assured.

It is a happy and a consoling circumstance that the trial of Leo Frank is to be presided over by an upright and just judge, argued by upright and honorable attorneys, and a verdict written by twelve "good men and true," as the law—the LAW in all its majesty—directs!

While by no means as spectacular a thing to say as something else might be, it is a matter of deep and abiding significance that Leo Frank, with his life, his good name, and all that he holds most dear at stake, is assured of a fair trial and a just verdict, notwithstanding all the frenzied and sinister detail of irrelevant and incoherent "testimony" and "evidence" set forth here and there, as time has run on since Mary Phagan was slain.

Victory for Society.

In the trial of Leo Frank THE SUPREMACY OF THE LAW will be vindicated beyond carping or cavil—and therein the most tremendous victory to society will be achieved.

Frank Hooper is one of the most experienced prosecuting attorneys in the State. He has served as Solicitor General on one of the most important circuits in Georgia, and his career thereon was entirely to his credit.

He is suave, incisive, deliberate, calm in action and eagle-eyed in seeing a point that may be turned to his client's advantage.

In summing up the case of the State against Leo Frank, Hooper will be at his best. He is a master in presenting his case to the jury for its consideration. I understand he is to be associated soon with Judge Arthur Powell and John D. Little, in Atlanta, in the practice of law. They will make a great team. Hooper is an attorney of the same class and caliber as Powell and Little.

But there to combat the best efforts that Hooper may put forth will stand that remarkable lawyer, Reuben Arnold.

Whatever qualms Frank may feel when he thinks of Hooper, doubtless they are relieved in large measure when he turns his thoughts to Arnold.

Reuben Arnold is a lawyer of constant surprises. Age can not wither him nor custom stale his infinite variety. Frank's case will be presented to the jury as few men could present it, when Arnold undertakes the work.

Convinced of Innocence.

Arnold says he never entered the case until he had convinced himself of Frank's innocence, and I quite believe he speaks the truth. I do not think there is the shadow of doubt either in Arnold's or Rosser's mind that Frank is entirely guiltless of the killing of Mary Phagan.

That Hooper may have some doubts as to the full strength of the State's case against Frank seems likely, for soon after entering the case he said this:

I have not been employed in the case to prosecute Leo M. Frank, but to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan. If the trial proves we are wrong, we will begin work on another angle. We have but one object and idea. It is that justice and the law be vindicated. We are, however, convinced we have a strong case against the accused.

Now, I do not think a manlier thing has been said in all the mass of things that have been said in the Phagan case than the foregoing.

If any person who does not know Frank Hooper has any doubts as to his complete integrity and lofty ideals the statement credited to him herein should remove them. Only a man who wishes to do right could or would say what Hooper said, soon after taking up the State's end of the Phagan case.

The most ardent, if honest, extremes of opinion well may meet on the platform Hooper sets up!

And if everybody in Atlanta will say, as he says, "I want to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan, regardless of whom that murderer may be," everybody will find himself on a platform of decency and fair play—and that's where he ought to wish to find himself.

I have sought, in these articles, neither to prosecute nor to defend Frank. I have sought, in such manner as I might, to help find the murderer of Mary Phagan. I want to see him found and convicted.

I, like Hooper, have desired, above all things, to see JUSTICE AND THE LAW VINDICATED, and I indorse and agree with Hooper's expressed desire that both may be.

Search Will Continue.

If the State fails to convict Frank—the State will turn its eyes elsewhere.

Could any man ask a fairer or squarer promise from Hooper than that?

It merely means that Hooper WILL ACCEPT THE FINDINGS OF THE COURT, after orderly and prescribed procedure, frankly and unquestioningly, as the TRUTH of the matter.

If Frank is guilty, then the law will take its course.

If he is not guilty, he will take his place once more among his fellowmen, as free of stain as any of them.

That's where Hooper stands, and that's where I am satisfied to stand also!

And if somebody, early in the investigation of the Phagan case, had calmed the mad scramble for "clews," "evidence," "testimony" and what not, with the deliberate and convincing words of Frank Hooper, some of the utterly ridiculous theories would never have been evolved and the entire case would have rested upon a basis of sanity, which would have eliminated many of the ugly features.

Happily, however, the chatterboxes and the human phonographs have been given most effective pause in their wild riot of talk, and if the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises has rounded them up for good and all, so be it, and praise forevermore!

Sanity and THE LAW OF THE LAND have taken the Phagan case in hand, and through these agencies will the truth of the murder of Mary Phagan be set up eventually.

Luncheon Lurch Aid to Digestion

Pre-Prandial Prance Society Fad

Variation of Tango Brings Dancers One Step Nearer Dining Each Step They Take.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Luncheon Lurch, the latest variation of the Tango and the Turkey Trot, which has seized the society of the Capital, is declared by experts on gastronomy to be the greatest known appetizer and first aid to digestion.

So effective has it been found along these lines that the Martini is now almost unknown on the boards of Washington hosts, while the pepsin tablet supply of the druggists is practically considered worthless stock.

There is a deep method in the Luncheon Lurch. Contrary to the Tango, which is danced after tea, the Lurch is a prepandian pastime. At a given time before the viands are to be served the orchestra strikes up something syncopated.

Guests immediately begin lurching and continue the dance until they have worked up an appetite considered commensurate with the feast about to be served.

Each step carries the dancers nearer the dining room, and observant ones declare that it is an invariable rule that the best trenchermen always dance with a remarkable celerity, while the dyspeptics lurch so slowly that they are to all appearances posing in tableau.

Among the prominent lurchers are Miss Katherine Elkins, Miss Dorothy Williams, Miss Sally Williams, Miss Katherine Britton, Miss Marguerite Barbour and Mrs. James F. Curtis.

ALL WOMEN TO VOTE IN TIME IS SENATE'S IDEA

Even the Most Conservative Members Believe the Fair Sex Will Cast Ballot the World Over.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—That women in all civilized countries will be permitted to vote is regarded as inevitable by the most conservative Senators and Representatives.

It is their opinion that steady progress is being made and that Great Britain, the United States and other leading nations will eventually recognize that further delay is useless.

Two-Thirds Vote Needed.

The resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal constitution under which women would be given the ballot, now awaiting consideration by the Senate, is expected to be passed on at the next session. A two-thirds vote would be necessary for its adoption.

It would require the appoval of sixty-four Senators to make women suffrage operative for submission to the States, so far as the upper branch of Congress is concerned.

The chief handicap preventing woman suffrage lies in the opposition of Southern Congressmen. The votes for the women's movement have made headway in the South. A bitter struggle is in progress in Alabama, where Representative Hobson is seeking the Senatorship, as against Mr. Johnston, on a platform favoring woman suffrage and temperance. Senator Johnston says he will achieve re-election without difficulty.

Have Twenty-Four Votes.

It is figured that these Senators will certainly support the Chamberlain resolution providing for a constitutional amendment permitting women to vote; Ashurst and Smith, of Arizona; Thomas and Shafroth, of Colorado; Borah and Brady, of Idaho; Myers and Walsh, of Montana; Gallinger and Hollis, of New Hampshire; Chamberlain and Lane, of Oregon; Smoot and Sutherland, of Utah; Jones and Poindexter, of Washington; Clark and Warren, of Wyoming; Gore and Owens, of Oklahoma; Ransdell and Thornton, of Louisiana.

This totals but twenty-four of the sixty-four votes necessary in the Senate. In view of recent action in Iowa, Illinois and Kansas it is possible that Senators Cummins, Kenyon, Sherman, Lewis, Bristow and Thompson may be added to the list, making thirty in all. It is claimed that two or three additional votes may come from New England, but no names are suggested.

BURN ATLANTA CLEAN, PLAN OF SANITAR YCHIEF

Settlement of Crematory Row Leaves Mayor, Council and Everybody Pleased.

John Jentzen, Sanitary Chief, is the happiest man in Atlanta as a result of the settlement Saturday of the crematory row. Operating his department without an incinerator, he said, was like trying to sail a ship on dry land, and that he had had to bear the brunt of complaints against the situation from thousands of exasperated citizens.

"That decision in the Mayor's office marks a new era in Atlanta," he said. "We shall begin a general clean-up the day the crematory is completed. I understand that that will not be longer than ten days. We shall burn Atlanta pure."

"Let the people take note of these instructions:

Gives Sanitary Rules.

"Keep the lids on garbage cans.

"Pile up the trash in yards and notify the sanitary department to come and get it.

"Don't throw things into streets and alleys.

"Help us put an end to the flies and musquitoes. You know trash breeds them."

The Chief said the new crematory would increase greatly the efficiency of his department and that it would shorten hauls and allow sanitary wagons to make more frequent visits.

He declared it would reduce the death rate and make Atlanta a more pleasant place to live in.

Mayor Well Pleased.

Although Mayor Woodward has been almost unanimously opposed in his attitude by the Council and brought most bitter criticism on himself, he smiled and said he was well satisfied over the outcome.

The Mayor's victory in the Supreme Court caused the price of the incinerator to be reduced from $276,000 to $260,000. His recent firm stand caused him to gain a point of honor.

Council endeavored to avoid allowing him to execute the contract. The concession is that he will execute it, following a special meeting of the Council Tuesday. That point has been the whole cause of the last controversy.

Cupid Moves to Vancouver, Wash.

Oregon's New Law Requiring Health Certificates Held Responsible.

VANCOUVER, WASH., June 28.—The record for marriage licenses issued in one day during the 60 years in which records have been kept was broken here when ten couples secured marriage licenses. Nor is this all.

At the present rate, in fifteen days the greatest month's record will be broken in one-half the time—and all because Oregon passed a law requiring certificates of health from men making application for marriage licenses. Already 58 licenses have been issued this month, the record being 65 for any entire month.

$2,000,000 TAX GAIN EXPECTED IN CHATHAM

SAVANNAH, June 28.—That the total tax returns of Chatham County will show an increase for 1913 of close to $2,000,000 is the opinion of Tax Assessor Marcus S. Baker. This will make the total returns for the year over $40,600,000—a new record for Chatham County.

But this increase will have no effect on the tax rate, says Judge Oliver T. Bacon, chairman of the board of county commissioners. The net income from this estimated increase at 77½ cents a thousand is only about $14,000.

Turkish Bath Cures Rheumatism at Home

Costs But 2c a Bath.

Quickly Cures Kidney Trouble, Nervous Prostration and All Skin Diseases.

The Robinson Thermal or Turkish bath, taken at home, is becoming a rage. Those who have used the bath have been completely carried away with enthusiasm because of the astonishing results obtained.

Well known physicians say that the Robinson Thermal Bath at home is about to become an almost universal conqueror of disease. This is not an exaggeration. Any man or woman can prove its results inside of 24 hours, in some cases 30 minutes.

In cases of rheumatism, especially, the uric acid poison is extracted from the system through the pores, almost as liquids are sucked up through a straw. Drugs merely smother the poison or ease the pain. They do not extract the poison from the body.

Just read this letter:

"I loaned my cabinet to an old friend all crippled up with rheumatism, last May. Feet, legs, and hands badly swollen. He had spent some time at different Hot Springs without relief. A week ago he started in to use the cabinet, taking the steam heat in the morning and the dry heat at night, before going to bed. He kept this up a week, and yesterday and to-day he was as well as ever.

"GEORGE A. FREEMAN,
"Mgr. Temptation Mining and Milling Company, Silverton, Colo."

Anyone can now take Robinson Thermal baths at home and at a cost of only about 2c a bath. They make the thick, sluggish blood normal, take out the impurities and cure "spring fever" right off. The only way to take these baths is by the use of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinet, which is a unique and marvelous invention.

That great book, "The Philosophy of Health and Beauty," retail price $2.00, free at our Main Store upon request for a limited time only. Be sure to get a copy. Also see the interesting demonstration of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinets; no obligation to purchase. Jacobs' Pharmacy, Main Store and Laboratory, 8-10 Marietta Street.—Adv.

UNCLE SAM IS NOW GREATEST HORSE BREEDER

Supplies Mounts for the Army From His Virginia Farm and Turns Out Thoroughbreds.

FARMERS ARE HIS PARTNERS

System So Successful That Other Large Studs Will Be Established in the West.

FRONT ROYAL, VA., June 28.—Uncle Sam has recently embarked in the horse business on a gigantic scale. He has started here what is probably the largest horse farm in the world, 5,500 acres, only a few hours' ride from the capital. And this is only the first of his farms. He intends to start several and turn out thoroughbreds by the tens of thousands.

To-day the farm is supplying practically the entire United States Army with its mounts. A short time hence and it will be supplying civilians, and soon, according to Captain Caspar H. Conrad, in charge, and generally acknowledged one of the greatest experts in horse flesh in America, it will be suppyling most of the civilized nations of Europe. And the price—now $144.15—may become even cheaper for Americans.

The farm represents an expenditure of more than $600,000, with some $400,000 to be spent within the next year.

Horses Have Everything.

On the farm are all sorts of buildings, sanitary baths, swimming pools, drinking fountains, resting sheds, pleasure paths and even a gigantic hospital—all for horses. Here and there are huge houses wherein reside men. These men look out for the horses.

They talk of little else. Indeed, it would be strange if the case were otherwise, for there are only 100 of these men, and daily they have to look after from 1,500 to 2,000 horses.

It took a long time to start the horse farm—more than half a century.

One day a few years ago a number of high staff officers of the army, watching a cavalry review, made some rather disparaging remarks concerning the appearance of the horses.

"Some of 'em look like mountain goats, and the rest like buffaloes," said one of the officers, and the remark got to the ears of Captain Conrad, and set him to thinking.

After that Captain Conrad had the approval of the War Department to start the farm. August Belmont made Uncle Sam a present of his six best stallions. Those stallions are known the racing world over, as Henry of Navarre, Octagon, Footprint, Belfry II, Vestibule and Marshall King. The six of them, when but two years old, cost $100,000.

Two More Horses Given.

James Camden, millionaire horseman of Versailles, Ky., heard of Belmont's gift and made Uncle Sam a present of his two famous stallions, Boola Boola and Wheelwright, worth about $25,000. Thus the farm was started.

But even with fifty stallions and mares by the hundred breeding on the farm was too slow. Something had to be done to increase the scope of the work—and the answer was found in a scheme to have Uncle Sam take every farmer in the South into partnership. This was done.

The ultimate plan is to sell the horses at a gigantic auction sale, with an army officer as auctioneer, knocking down the animals to the highest bidder.

Uncle Sam's horse farm is probably the only place in the country where no matter what animal you buy you may rest assured of getting a horse that is perfect. If the animal has the slightest blemish it will not be sold.

"Of course," said Captain Conrad, "we know that in this particular case the scar was due entirely to accident. But the farmer doesn't know it. He might have a mare scarred up purely by accident, but we wouldn't take his word for. We demand perfect mares and colts, so we give perfect stallions."

One Word to Decide Estate Ownership

Will Filed for Probate Causes Legal Discussion of Meaning of "And" and "Or."

WOODBURY, N. J., June 25.—The will of the late Aaron Knisell, of Sewell, was offered for probate in the Surrogate's office. This instrument has raised a contention among the heirs. The will left the entire estate to Mrs. Knisell, who died two weeks before her husband, and it is claimed that its provisions lapsed with her death.

The property was left to Mrs. Knisell "and her heirs." Had it read "or" heirs, it is claimed, the estate would go to her heirs; but, as it says "and" heirs, Knisell's brothers claim the estate. A ruling by the court will be necessary to interpret the instrument.

Evelyn Thaw Tells Her Ambition Will Try Something Worth While Reveals Her Plans to Alan Dale

Evelyn Thaw in the days she took New York by storm.

Evelyn Thaw as she is to-day.

As Miss Nesbit, Now Dancing at the Hippodrome, and Booked for Paris and Vienna.

By ALAN DALE.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—It was "Hullo, Rag-Time," at the Hippodrome that brought Evelyn Thaw within my jurisdiction, as it has brought many others who I never expected to meet.

So, with the open sesame of elusive art as a go-between, "Miss Nesbit," as she is programed here, received me without hesitancy in her rooms at the St. James Hotel, off Piccadilly, and our art robbed me of qualms. It was quite early morning.

Evelyn Thaw wore a loose peignoire of a black, shiny something, slashed at the back with yellow. Her hair was loosely fluffed out; she was devoid of the slightest effort at make-up, her ivory-white face and her unreddened lips looking quite startlingly natural. She was as pretty as any picture of—herself, and though the edge of reluctant youth may have frayed a little, there isn't a shadow of a doubt on the score of Evelyn Nesbit's charm. Never in all the ladies I have professionally met have I found more self-possession, a keener poise and less self-consciousness than in Evelyn Thaw. She made me wonder. She spoke easily, gracefully, reassuringly, without a trace of hesitation or nervousness.

On the Spur of the Moment.

"It was awfully sudden," she said, as we sat opposite each other. "I had no idea of going back to the stage after all these years."

"How many?" I asked. "You need not answer."

"Oh, I'm not like that," she said, with the first wistful smile; "I don't mind recalling anything. The last previous time I appeared on the stage was in 1904 in 'The Wild Rose.'

"Well, on the Olympic, coming over, I met a lot of theatrical people, among them Lee Shubert, Martin Beck and Albert DeCourville. They all advised me to make the break, especially DeCourville, who is manager of the Hippodrome.

"He has just married Shirley Kellogg, by the bye. I thought it over carefully, for I was a bit afraid, you know." She seemed to take it for granted that I knew. I did; I quite understood. "If I had made the break in New York I should have been a 'freak,'" she said. "Oh, there have been other women who have been through trials like mine who first tried New York, and it was hopeless. So when DeCourville telegraphed me at Paris to come at once to London and appear I realized that it was up to me, and I went, afraid, of course, but you know I'm no novice at harrowing experiences."

A Wild Turkey Trot.

"I was determined that nothing should force any attention from me to that sort of thing." She was now an artist before the public, and I was—me.

"I had to do a wild turkey trot with a dancer, and he was hard to find. I had seen Jack Clifford at the Cafe De Paris, and I remembered that he used to dance with Irene Weston, so we engaged him and rehearsed for one week only at the Irish Club, opposite the Hippodrome. Oh! it was terrible work. He throws me around—I am tossed up in the air and I see my heels at an angle I never expected to view them. And I'm an old married woman, with stiff joints."

Evelyn Nesbit laughed. So did I. She was as simple and unaffected as the inevitable school girl. It was impossible not to like her. She amused me a lot.

"They sneaked us on at a Saturday matinee without announcement," she said, "and luck favored me. The turn went well, and we are a hit.

"I'm engaged for six weeks, with an option, and then I go to Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Copenhagen——"

"And New York?" I asked.

"New York, surely," she replied, smiling, "when I feel that I've put it over, but not until then. Oh, I do want to earn my own living, and the stage is good, and I don't mind hard work. In the old days, when I had nothing on my mind but my hair, I used to shirk rehearsals. Now, I'm Johnny-on-the-spot. I don't mind how much we rehearse. In fact, I rehearse every day. I've always loved dancing, and have studied all the successful dancers. If only I don't get fat like Ethel Barrymore and others."

She Won't Get Fat.

"You couldn't," I opined, for she didn't look the part.

"I won't," she retorted; "it would be a great pity, and I have another ambition that I'll tell you, for it may surprise you. Do you remember what Jerome said about me?"

Again I refused to remember anything.

"Well, he said that there were four great actresses—Sarah Bernhardt, Eleanora Duse, Mrs. Fiske and myself. I don't forget that. Some day I may try to act—to do something worth while, something serious, something emotional. So there you are! You will laugh, because I know you are funny.

"Theatrical people take themselves very seriously, and they can't understand why you don't do the same, but you don't—you can be as funny as you like about me. I sha'n't mind a bit, for I really have a sense of humor, and I'm not very serious." She laughed again, and I was quite disarmed. Evelyn Nesbit had impressed me as I didn't believe I was going to be impressed.

"All I do in London," she said, "is to work and eat good food. I love the food in London. Do go to the Cheshire Cheese and taste the chops. I was there yesterday, and I sat in Dr. Johnson's chair and enjoyed myself hugely. I'm going to get on, and I'm going to surprise everybody. One must have a beginning. Look at Elsie Ferguson. She was the stupidest chorus girl I ever met, but she had big moments, and now she is a very charming actress. Don't forget to write something funny about me, for I shall enjoy it."

But, somehow or other, Evelyn Nesbit hadn't appealed to my sense of humor. She was, at least, spontaneous and natural.

BOY, NOT YET 8, TO ENTER HIGH SCHOOL IN FALL

New Mexican Prodigy Received All His Training From Mother. Wonderful Memory.

ROSWELL, N. MEX., June 28.—When the public schools open next fall there will be a new student in the high school department, a boy who has never been to school a single day and who will not at that time have reached his eighth birthday.

This is the boy who, at the age of eighteen months, startled the city of Denver by repeating the names of the Presidents of the United States, and who at the age of five recited several pages from Hiawatha in a school entertainment in Artesia, N. Mex. His name is Raymond Ray. He is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Ray, of Roswell.

The mother of this boy, who has earliest day that he could learn, attributes to him none of the characteristics of a prodigy or perhaps of a genius. He has been taught to think, to concentrate his mind, and this training has enabled him to develop a remarkable memory.

He seldom reads an interesting topic more than once in order to commit it to memory, and he studies physiology, arithmetic, grammar, civil government and literature with little aid from his mother. When he enters high school he will take up the study of Latin, algebra, rhetoric, physical geography and ancient history.

Raymond is now studying Spanish, elocution and vocal music. He has some excellent talent in music, and sings with real melody, spirit and understanding.

WHY 200,000 PEOPLE NOW BATHE INTERNALLY

When you are ill, the first step your Physician takes is to clean out the Large Intestine.

He does this because the chances are ten to one that if you had no accumulated waste in the Large Intestine you would not have been ill at all.

The new process of Internal Bathing by means of the "J. B. L. Cascade" thoroughly cleanses the Lower Intestine, removes all waste and poisonous matter, and keeps it as pure as Nature demands it to be for perfect health.

It is Nature's own way of curing Constipation—simply warm water properly applied.

Enlightened physicians everywhere are using and prescribing it—

And instead of waiting to be ill, over 200,000 delighted Americans are warding off disease and increasing their efficiency and energy by its use.

Until recently the "J. B. L. Cascade" has been obtainable only by sending to its inventor, Charles A. Tyrrell, M. D., New York City.

The demand for it now, however, has become universal, through the recommendations of those who are using it. Call at our main store and we will be glad to show you the "J. B. L. Cascade" and explain it in detail.

We are also distributing a very interesting booklet on internal bathing, called "Why Man of To-day Is Only 50 Per Cent Efficient," which can be obtained on request, without cost. Ask us for it to-day and inform yourself about this safe and sane method of curing constipation without drugs.

Wife Refuses to Stop Husband and Daughter's Eloping

Declares to Humane Society That She Tolerated Act to Preserve Happiness of Her Child.

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Telling a most unusual story, filled with peculiar complications, in which she accuses her husband of eloping with and marrying his own stepdaughter and then stealing her two children in order to secure property belonging to her, Mrs. Ruella Nicholson has appealed to the police, the humane society and the county officers to help her in locating her husband, Edward Nicholson, and thus get back her children.

How she learned of the fact that her daughter had married her own stepfather, and did not interfere with the marriage because she wanted her child to be happy was a part of the strange story alleged by the woman.

Tired, hungry and practically penniless, the elderly woman appealed to the humane society.

Society Women Sound Knell for Mourning

Boston Leaders Declare That Custom of Donning Black for Dead Is Relic of Barbarism.

BOSTON, June 28.—Society women of Boston have answered the question, "How long should society women wear mourning for their dead relatives?" by saying in substance that mourning should not be worn. It was the consensus of opinion that it is a survival of barbarian days.

Mrs. Charles P. Putnam, wife of Dr. Putnam, said, "It seems to me that there is altogether too much mourning worn considering our present enlightened state of civilization. The world is dark enough as it is without women wearing crepe to make it any more gloomy.

Women Taught to Save Million a Year

Kansas Garbage Cans Are Cheated of Immense Amount by Domestic Science Instruction at School.

TOPEKA, KAN., June 28.—Kansas cheated the garbage cans of the State out of $1,000,000 last year, and the amount will be increased at the rate of $500,000 a year until there will be virtually no wasted foods in the entire State.

That is the aim of the Kansas Agricultural College, and the State is spending $40,000 a year to help.

Seven hundred girls completed the domestic science courses at the agricultural college this week, and the college has just closed its movable cooking schools, which were attended by 11,000 women in the ten weeks in which they were operated.

PET CANARY OF PRETTY WOMAN HALTS VESSEL

Captain of Liner Agrees to Delay Voyage Until She Can Send Home for Bird.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Mrs. Green is young and very charming. That is why the officers of the Vestris, of the Lamport and Holt line, gave her their fullest attention when she announced in plaintive but positive tones that she had lost her Rickey.

"I forgot to bring Rickey," she exclaimed.

"Who's Rickey?" demanded the second officer.

"Rickey's our pet canary," she said, "and I am taking him to South America to my husband. I mean I was to have taken him, but I left him at home."

Brought Food, Forgot Bird.

"It's too late now to get him," said the officer, "for we leave in thirty minutes."

"But I wouldn't dare go without him. I've brought the seed and the cuttlefish and everything, but I forgot the bird."

"Where do you live?" asked the officer.

"Mrs. G. F. Green, 59 West Fifty-third Street," was the reply, and the officer solicited the assistance of H. S. Damage, the line's passenger agent. After consultation with the Vestris captain it was agreed to hold the vessel until ten minutes after five o'clock—ten minutes later than her schedule called for—and Mr. Damage and Mrs. Green sought a telephone.

Bird's Owner In Hysterics.

To an agent of a taxicab company the young woman explained that she wanted to go to the Fifty-third Street number and get a canary bird.

But no canary bird bearing taxicab arrived at the pier by ten minutes after five o'clock, and Mrs. Queen was in a state of hysteria as she watched the sailors haul off the gang plank.

Just as the Vestris was swinging at the end of the pier and before the last spring line was cast off the taxicab arrived. With the bewildered canary in its cage one of Mrs. Green's friends ran to the end of the pier and fastened the cage to a piece of rope. Then, very slowly and with due reverence—for Mrs. Green's brimming eyes were upon him—a sailor hauled the line with the cage attached over the side.

Woman Loves Mouse; Eats Meals With Him

Pet Comes Daily to Dine With Hotel Employees, and Girl Feeds Him From Hand.

CINCINNATI, June 28.—It is an old saying that all women are afraid of mice, but one has at last been found who is not afraid, and even says she likes them.

She is Miss Ella Eversfield, an operator at the Grand Hotel, who takes her meals with her favorite mouse every day. The employees of the hotel have a private dining room, and some time ago a mouse was discovered there. At the time Miss Eversfield had not learned to love mice and she probably screamed, but the mouse was game and stuck it out, and, having learned the meal hours, he insisted on putting in his appearance every day, until finally the employees learned to consider him as one of their number, and now he eats his meals from the hand of Miss Eversfield.

NEW ANSLEY HOTEL GIVES MOST MODERN HOSTELRY OF SOUTH TO ATLANTA

No Detail Has Been Spared to Make It Unsurpassed for the Traveling Public and People of City—Formal Opening Monday.

Machinery and Equipment Latest Devices for Aid of Sanitation and Comfort—Mural Decorations Picture Events of Georgia.

Only to those who "put up" after Monday at the Hotel Ansley will it be given in fullest measure to say, with Shenstone, that they have "found life's warmest welcome at an inn."

At least, the builder and the lessee and the press agent have endeavored to make it even so, and the very few favored persons permitted to inspect the building and its appointments in advance of the opening agree they planned wisely and builded well.

When the Ansley, Atlanta's newest hostelry, opens its doors to guests on Monday, it will be unexcelled among the inns of the country for efficiency, service, accommodations, equipment and modernity of its appointments. No detail was overlooked in the planning; no expense was spared in the building.

Banquet Hall Seats 500.

With its banquet room seating 500, its rathskeller accommodating 300 and its hundreds of rooms supplied with fresh filtered air continuously; with its costly historical mural decorations, each a work of art, the sumptuous furnishings of its rooms and suites and its perfect service system, the Ansley will be without a superior for business, conveniences and safety.

As "Marse" Henry Watterson expressed it, at no place "on the Rambla and in the Ring, in Piccadilly and the Corso, beneath the colonnades of the Rue de Rivoli of Paris and 'Unter den Linden' of Berlin—indeed, all the way between Chicago and Cannebiere, including many nooks and corners of little old New York," can the man or woman with a trunk and a handbag live higher, sleep safer and spend less than at the Hotel Ansley.

Two well-known quotations imprinted on the tapestry will greet the eye of all who pass the portals of the Hotel Ansley. The first one is the hotel man's favorite verse, from Shenstone, as follows:

Whoe'er has traveled life's dull round,
Where'er his stages may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
Life's warmest welcome at an inn.

The next is a Scriptural quotation, taken from Hebrews, and the Ansley management promises to apply the precept and the compliment to every guest alike. Here it is:

"Forget not to show love unto strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

Indicate Spirit of Hotel.

These two familiar quotations are printed across the underbeam of the winding marble stairways in the Ansley foyer. They are intended to indicate the spirit in which guests should apply and expect to be received.

Appearance of the lobby is enhanced by three historical paintings on tapestry, each 12 by 10 feet, situated on the upper mezzanine floor and facing the Forsyth Street entrance. The paintings recall important historical happenings in Georgia.

The first panel depicts the meeting of General Oglethorpe and Tomochichi at Savannah, May 21, 1733. The next represents John Wesley teaching the Indians under the oaks of St. Simons, and the third shows the burning of the Yazoo fraud papers at the state house in Louisville, Jefferson County, in the year 1796.

The papers were ignited by means of a magnifying glass and the sun's rays, showing that the fire which destroyed such an infamy should come from Heaven.

On the ground floor are a dozen or more other paintings of historical interest.

Dining Room Is Italian.

The dining room of the Ansley is known as the Italian room, on account of its architecture and mural paintings. The latter consist of the Vatican gardens, showing the cupola of St. Peter's in the distance; the garden of Villa Borghese in Florence, the garden of Villa Lante, the Hercules fountain in the garden of Villa Reale of Florence, and a view of Venice canals, all of which are painted on canvases, each 12 by 10 feet.

The rathskeller, one of the largest and most luxurious in the South, is reminiful of college life. Its walls are decorated with portraits of the seals of the leading Georgia colleges, interlaced with varicolored bands waving over a golden background.

The waiting room is trimmed and wainscoted with Georgia sycamore. A distinctive feature of this room, indeed, of the hotel is a full size true-to-life portrait of Lieutenant General William Tecumseh Sherman, beneath which is the following inscription:

"Under whose orders Atlanta was burned, and who said war is hell."

Old Photographs Reproduced.

Actual 1865 photographs are reproduced, showing Atlanta before and after the famous conflagration. On other panels of the writing room are the Great Seals of Atlanta and the State of Georgia. Those who have seen this room are unstinted in their praise of its historical interest and value.

The Ansley equipment for cleaning silverware and dishes is unexcelled. The silverware will be cleaned by chemically generated electricity, made by water, soda and salt.

Dishes will be cleansed and sterilized by powerful streams of hot water thrown against them while incased in a metal washing machine.

The kitchen of the Ansley is replete with modern machinery and other implements for prompt and efficient service. Its appointments are products of as great attention to detail as was given the office, the rathskeller or any other part of the hostelry.

Five Lang ranges form a battery kept at even temperature by a single furnace. The bake ovens are built on the skyscraper plan—four stories high—thus utilizing space and insuring uniform results. The meat department is equipped with a slicing machine, insuring uniform-sized slices without rough edges.

Has Own Ice Plant.

The Ansley has the best equipped ice and refrigerating plant in Atlanta. It is a duplicate affair with a capacity of fourteen tons a day. The cold storage room could accommodate a carload of meat.

From a service bar in the basement all orders will be filled for the rathskeller, private dining rooms and guests' apartments, thus keeping the waiters out of the main buffet, which opens on Forsyth Street.

Distinctively a unique feature for any hotel is the sanitary bathing subbasement for the hotel's servants. Each compartment is equipped with lockers, and all waiters, cooks, bellboys, porters, etc., will be required to take a shower bath before starting each day's work.

Not the least attraction of the Ansley is its contemplated scale of charges. Rooms with running water and private toilet will cost $1 a day, rooms with connecting bath $1.50, with private bath $2, $2.50 and $3. Club breakfasts will be served for 25 cents and up, lunch for 50 cents from 12 till 2 o'clock, and 6 to 8 o'clock dinner for $1.

Indian Girl Writes Opera on Sioux Life

Zitkala Sa Composed "The Sun Dance"—Gave It on Reservation.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28.—On the Uintah reservation at Vernal, Utah, nearly 100 miles from a railroad, an Indian girl has written an opera, with her people as the theme and motif. It is one thing to write an opera and another to have it produced. Zitkala Sa, a full-blooded Sioux, has accomplished both these things.

When "The Sun Dance" was sung in Vernal, Indians and whites drove in from 40 miles around to hear it; and, having heard it, they pronounced it a triumph. Efforts are being made to have the opera sung in Salt Lake City during the week of the National Education Association, July 5 to 11.

"The Sun Dance," as it was produced at Vernal in March, was not altogether the work of Kitkala Sa and her copper-hued brethren of the Uintah reservation. Professor William F. Hansen, of the faculty, and white as well as Indian students of Uintah Academy played important roles in the preparation and singing of the piece. It was, in fact, part of the academy work.

12,000 Drinks in Five Years Basis of Suit

Wife Declares Husband Protected Himself With Walking Stick in Driving Rain Storm.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Twelve thousand drinks, ranging from simple mixed potations to fancy concoctions, is the record which Mrs. John Barry Sears posts up against her husband in five years of married life.

Mrs. Sears, who is suing for divorce, said Mr. Sears started his career of conviviality during his honeymoon and has kept it up.

In one instance, according to Mrs. Sears, her husband had come home in a driving rain.

"He carried his walking stick elevated above his head," she testified, "and held his umbrella closed in his hand. He was soaking wet, but did not know it."

Youth Likes Books On Heavy Subjects

Oregon Freshman Reads of Social Science, Philosophy and Religion.

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, EUGENE, June 28.—Max H. Sommer, a freshman in the University of Oregon, registered from Portland, has a record for assiduous reading during the past collegiate year. According to the report of Librarian Douglass, Sommer's card shows that he has taken out 89 volumes, the majority of which would be classed as "heavy reading."

Of the 89 volumes perused by this freshman, 47 are devoted to social science, 28 are classed as pure literature, 5 are works of history and biography, 5 are of a philosophical and religious nature and 4 deal with journalism.

Oregon Governor Opposed to Autos

Declares State Appropriation Would Have Made Him Travel Like 'Piker.'

SALEM, OREG., June 28.—Despite rumors to the effect that he would be a candidate for re-election, Governor West positively announces that he will not be a candidate.

The Governor said that the financial drain on him was large, particularly his traveling expenses. The State now provides $1,000 for the traveling expenses of the Governor when on the State's business, but until two years ago only $500 a year was provided. The Governor declared that he could not live like a "piker" when away from home, and the expenses of many of his trips were paid by himself.

Governor West said that he had never bought an automobile because he did not want one, wouldn't have one if somebody would make him a present of it, couldn't operate it if he had it, and, above all, could not afford a machine.

DANCING MASTERS DECLARE TURKEY TROT IS IMMORAL

ASBURY PARK, June 28.—The "turkey trot" is an immoral dance in the opinion of members of the American National Association, masters of dancing, in session here, and at today's meeting the delegates were urged to co-operate with local authorities in banishing the figure that is fast becoming the rage.

The "tango" was not treated so severely. If properly taught, the masters believe, it may be danced.

Woman Makes Eight Trips Around Globe

Champion Female World Girdler Finishes 8 Years' Journey With 381,000 Miles Covered.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Miss Jessie Ackerman, the woman champion globe-trotter, arrived here to-day from an eight years' tour around the world, her eighth globe-girdling trip in twenty years. She has broken the woman's record, with 381,000 miles to her credit.

On this trip she visited fifty-two countries and experienced every kind of ancient and modern travel.

Miss Ackerman said the happiest and most professional women are in Australia.

Health Board Posts Weekly Bath Order

Canton, Ohio, Folks Must Get in Tub at Least Once a Week Authorities Declare.

CANTON, O., June 28.—Canton folks must bathe at least once a week, and "all over," at that. The board of health has said so.

In order that none can misunderstand, the board has arranged to post in every home where soap and water are believed to be at a premium a set of rules printed in five languages and specifying $25 and costs as punishment of any one who neglects the weekly cleanup.

DIVA BELIEVES BABIES BEST, FARM LIFE NEXT

Schumann-Heink, Who Has Just Passed Her Fifty-second Birthday, Purchases Big Tract.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., June 28.—"Yes, now I am a farmer; also I am a mother, and I have just had my fifty-second birthday."

It was Mme. Schumann-Heink who spoke. Wreathed in smiles and radiating health—the great artist, accompanied by her youngest child and most beautiful daughter, descended from an incoming train to begin a six-month vacation here.

She had just completed her longest American tour and returns with the greatest profits made by any artist in concert this season.

Last year Mme. Schumann-Heink bought 3,000 acres here. She plans to make ranches with gardens, barren wastes into orchards and her rancho the garden spot of America.

"Farming," enthused Madame, "next to the rearing of babies, is the most interesting work in the world."

"But the farming, madame, surely you will not hoe?"

"Look at these two hands. I ask you, do they not appear capable? I have raised and worked for my children and they are yet strong—nicht?" Madame held her pink palms upward. One of the most convincing proofs of what she said was their appearance. The fingers are long and slender and young and strong enough to be envied by any woman half the diva's age.

And this can also be said truthfully of her face and form. Mme. Schumann's flamed with health.

"Yes, I shall be getting out and digging like a regular farmer. Oh, that is nothing to dig," she stated. "Once I made a garden at my New York home.

"Ach, yes, it is good to grow fruit, but it is better to be the mother of babies."

Babies Saved From Bolt by Feather Bed

Children Are Found Unhurt in Mattress After Room Is Wrecked by Lightning.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A feather mattress saved two children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson on the Peter Cortelyou farm, at Franklin Park, near New Brunswick, N. J., when a bolt of lightning struck their bed. The parents were awakened by a tremendous crash and a shriek from the children in an adjoining room. A flash of lightning just as they reached the room revealed a big hole in the roof and one in the floor.

The father obtained a lamp and found the bedstead shattered to pieces. Securely rolled up in the feather mattress, however, were the two little ones, almost suffocated with heat but unhurt.

SWEETPEAS IMPORTED BY AUSTRIAN EMPEROR

Special Cable to The American.

VIENNA, June 28.—Sweetpeas, which were practically unknown in Austria only a few years ago, are now prominent in the Imperial Gardens at Schonbrunn.

The aged Emperor Francis Joseph is the first in Austria to "take up" the sweetpea. The director of the Imperial Gardens was sent to London and brought specimen plants back with him. Now the tables at the castle at Schonbrunn are decorated with sweetpeas in one color or at most two. The Emperor prefers pink and white to other combinations.

Chief's Gold Badge Found to be Nickel

New Head of Police Department Finds That Predecessors Had Worn Base Metal Insignia.

PASADENA, June 28.—"Silver Threads Among the Gold," merrily whistled newly appointed Chief of Police W. S. McIntire as he scraped off the gold from the badge that was turned over to him by his predecessor, W. F. Wood, who resigned from the office.

When Wood resigned he presented his successor with the badge containing the words, "Chief of Police, Pasadena." On making a close inspection of the badge, which had long borne a reputation of being solid gold, the new chief observed that it was somewhat tarnished.

A cleanser was then applied, with the result that the badge in a few minutes was a shining nickel-plated star and greatly similar to the other badges worn by the balance of the police department.

Free Market Starts To Cut Cost of Living

San Jose, Cal., Plans To Do Away With Profit Made by Middle Man.

SAN POSE, CAL., June 28.—San Jose hit the high cost of living a solar plexus blow to-day when, under the direction of the city administration, a free market was opened in South Market Street at the City Hall Park.

A score of produce wagons came for the opening, and long before the selling day was over every scrap of salable goods had been disposed of and a crowd clamored for a chance to purchase.

Market Master Joseph Napoli declares that the first day's business demonstrated that producers received 25 per cent more for their sales than they could get from the middle man and that buyers saved a minimum of 25 per cent by doing business directly with the producers.

CONVICTS DINE IN HOTEL THEN SEE MOVING PICTURE

COLUMBUS, O., June 28.—Five penitentiary prisoners, serving sentences ranging from manslaughter to pocket picking, were taken from their cells by an official of the State Board of Administration and treated to a banquet at one of the large hotels. Following the banquet the prisoners were taken to moving picture shows and given an entertainment which they will long remember.

PREACHER DIVORCES HIS WIFE.

OMAHA, NEBR., June 28.—The Rev. F. P. Jolly, formerly of Joliet, Ill., was granted a divorce from his wife, the grounds being extreme cruelty. Mrs. Jolly is now living in Joliet.

JAP EMIGRANTS NOW COLONIZING BRAZILIAN LANDS

1,500 Arrivals But Vanguard of Orientals to Be Sent to South America.

SEATTLE, WASH., June 28.—How Japan is colonizing Brazil was given in detail here with the arrival of the Japanese steamship Sanuki Maru.

Fifteen hundred Japanese emigrants were landed at Santos, Brazil, May 15. They are the vanguard of a great population to be sent to South America to become a part of the first permanent Japanese colony in Brazil under the Sao Paulo colonization agreement recently entered into between Japan and Brazil.

The first award of territory comprises approximately 150,000 acres of agricultural land.

Another Japanese Brazilian colonization enterprise has been completed and passengers of the Sanuki say that the two Governments have arranged for the concession of a considerable area of fertile country which will be settled by Japanese. Settlers for this colony will leave Japan about the end of the present year.

Japanese contract labor is now being sent into South Africa and both Brazil and Peru are being supplied with coolies, who leave Japan under contract with various South American industrial organizations.

CONTESTANTS WORKING HARD FOR MORE VOTES

Manager of Pony Race Advises Girls and Boys to Use Follow-Up System.

SYSTEMATIC WORK WINS

Shetlands Are Growing Fat and Strong at Loomis Avenue Stable Where They Are Kept.

The last week of the "clubs of five" bonus offer in The Georgian and American pony contest begins with all contestants straining hard to take advantage of the benefit to be gained by getting subscriptions before the time limit is up.

Standings published in The American show great gains, but they are small compared with the leaps forward which will be shown when the bonus votes are reckoned up for publication in next Wednesday's Georgian. The contest manager believes it will take the office force all of the night of July 5 to make the proper entries.

There also is a bonus of 50,000 votes for the first $30 turned in for subscriptions by any of the contestants. This offer may be withdrawn at any time.

Use Follow-Up System.

The contest manager wishes to repeat his suggestion that contestants take a leaf from the books of the successful business man and institute a "follow-up" system. A list of those whose subscriptions expire soon should be made, and all such subscribers visited with a request for a renewal. Nine times out of ten, a renewal is easier to get than the first subscription, for at the end of a short trial the subscriber generally gets to like The Georgian and American so well that he wants to continue.

It is systematic work of this sort which counts for more than the spurts of a day or two, which, while they may yield remarkable results, are not frequent enough to build up totals to the point where the contestant can feel sure of a pony.

None Sure of Winning.

No contestant has a right to feel sure of winning as yet. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not be passed by an energetic rival, and some who are leading now have a very poor start, indeed.

Meanwhile, the ponies are "eating their heads off" at 55 Loomis Avenue, where their future owners are invited to call and see them. All are rounding into great shape, and they are prettier every day. It is going to be a hard task for the winners to pick the ponies they like best from the splendid bunch The Georgian and American have bought.

"I subscribed to The Georgian and American a week ago, and the paper has not begun to come to my home yet," is a complaint heard every now and then.

Usually it develops that the subscriber gave his money to one of the contestants, and that the contestant is "holding back."

This is poor policy, particularly if it is a short-term subscription, for when a contestant treats a subscriber in this way the man is not going to be as willing to give the contestant his renewal.

"Don't hold back," is the advice of the contest manager—and he knows best.

BONUS OFFER IN PONY CONTEST GIVES 1 WEEK MORE OF OPPORTUNITY

Wanting to win and working to win differ widely. Working to win is what counts, and working to win now, while the special bonus vote offers are in effect in The Georgian and American pony contest.

July 4 means more than cannon crackers, picnics and general celebrations to the pony contestants. It means, to them, the end of one of the bonus offers, and July 4 is little more than a week away.

Clubs of five subscriptions, yearly, half-yearly, or for three months, bring great rewards until the expiration of the period thus limited. And "when the polls close" for these club bonus votes the office force of the contest manager expects an all-night session reckoning up the strength of the many candidates.

Some have brought in five subscriptions at a time to take advantage of the bonus. Others have brought them in one, two or three at a time. In either case, the clubs will be credited accurately. And overnight the standings will seem to have doubled, though the bonus votes represent weeks of work.

The ponies now are at 55 Loomis Avenue, where contestants are welcome. If they arrive at the right time they will see the ponies being exercised.

Fortune in Gold Awaits Claimants

Insane Kansas Woman Leaves Bag of Nuggets and Dust Worth $10,000.

HUTCHINSON, KANS., June 28.—A bag of gold nuggets and gold dust worth $10,000 awaits any heirs who may be found to the estate of Mrs. Ann M. Bernhart, who died recently in Davenport, Iowa, according to the announcement of G. M. Duckworth, administrator.

Several years ago Mrs. Bernhart was adjudged of unsound mind. Duckworth was named her guardian. The cottage here where she lived alone was closed and she went to an asylum. Upon her death Duckworth thoroughly searched her cottage. The nuggets and dust in small bags were found secreted in the dwelling.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MANUFACTURES DINNER PLANNED FOR EVE OF 4TH

New Ansley Hotel Will Serve Atlanta Factory Owners to the Number of 200.

HOME EXHIBIT PLANS TOPIC

Brooks Morgan Has Definite Proposals for Acceptance or Rejection—Pledges Desired.

Atlanta manufacturers, to the probable number of 200, will gather on the evening of July 3 at the Ansley Hotel for a dinner.

The object of the dinner is to discuss the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods, and at the same time, to discuss the advisability of holding the annual temporary exhibit, such as was held last year at the time of the Southern Merchants' Convention.

The dinner had been set for June 24, but the unavoidable absence from the city of Brooks Morgan necessitated a postponement.

The new date was set at an informal conference of Mr. Morgan, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter G. Cooper held Wednesday.

Invitations to the big "Manufacturers' Dinner" will be sent out at once, and a general response is expected.

At the dinner, Mr. Morgan will lay before the manufacturers definite proposals for lease or purchase of buildings suitable for the installation of a manufacturers' exhibit. It will, in brief, be a "show down." The permanent exhibit project has been gone over thoroughly. The manufacturers have seen Chattanooga's display, and they have learned in detail of New Haven's success. There has been plenty of time for them to make up their minds. At this dinner they are expected to signify what they intend doing.

If, as is expected, the will of the manufacturers is seen unanimously in favor of the exhibit, a start will be made. But the backers of the project do not wish to start unless they have assurance of 200 exhibitors and 40,000 or 50,000 feet of floor space.

Strenuous Work Done Preparing for Convention.

When the four or five thousand merchants from all over the South gather in Atlanta for their convention, during the first two weeks of August, it is doubtful if any of them will be able to realize the care and effort that has been expended to make their meeting a success.

For instance, one energetic committee has been toiling throughout the hot week in an effort to raise funds for the entertainment of the visitors. As a result of their conscientious endeavor, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association sees its way clear, as to finances, to play host to the gathering.

Another committee has been hard at work preparing the program. The program is to be an elaborate affair. Three or four topics a day will be discussed, and most of the discussion will be in the shape of five-minute addresses. The traveling men are doing yeoman's work in finding the good speakers scattered throughout the territory, men who have opinions worth hearing and experience likely to be helpful to other merchants in their lines.

Moving Big Concern Takes Almost Week

Dougherty-Little-Redwine Co. Get to Temporary Quarters by Dint of Hard Work.

Almost a week has been required for moving the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company from its old home in North Pryor Street to temporary quarters at 30-32 South Pryor Street. It is estimated that about forty boxcar loads of goods were moved, the stock being valued at $150,000.

"That amount of silks would not make much of a showing, but when it comes to underwear, it is a different story," remarked J. Little.

Jordan Thinks Europe's Land Banks Ideal for South

Cheap Loans on Farm Lands Spell Financial Independence for Cotton Grower, He Says.

Special Cable to The American.

By COLONEL HARVIE JORDAN.

(Member of the American Farm Credits Commission and President of the Southern Cotton Association)

OLDENBERG, GERMANY, June 28.—The capitalization of Southern cotton growers through the mortgage bank system, giving them mortgage loans at low interest with easy payments, would completely reorganize the cotton-growing industry of the South. I am convinced that the land mortgage business in America can be systematized along the lines of similar mortgage systems in Europe.

If this is done it will bring a new era of prosperity to the South and greatly increase the cash returns from cotton, which now represent practically the entire balance of trade of the United States.

Southern cotton growers to-day are just one year behind financially. They have been behind since the Civil War.

The curse of the cotton farmers is the store lien system, under which they are obliged each spring to purchase their supplies on credit from the supply merchants. Frequently farmers pay 50 per cent or more in excess of the cash price of goods for the privilege of this credit. Moreover, the supply merchants secure absolute control over the farmers.

Marketing Is Hurried.

The cotton crop has to be marketed as soon as harvested. Farmers have practically no control over the marketing. This is because they have no financial independence. The American commission has studied the mortgage systems which place European farmers in far stronger positions as borrowers than our own farmers. In America we still are clinging to the antiquated practice of forcing short-time loans on the agriculturist.

European farmers borrow through an intermediary society and enjoy as strong positions as any railroad or municipality. If our Southern farmers mortgage their land they must pay back the entire principal in lump sum in a few years, else pay a costly commission for renewal. So long as this is true naturally the farmers won't mortgage their land until actually pressed to the wall.

In contrast to this European farmers repay their loans in small annual installments. So long as they meet their interest payments they can never be sold out. Their entire payments for both interest and principal amount to less than our farmers frequently are required to pay for interest alone.

Cash Basis Possible.

If Southern farmers can get a device to act as their agent in borrowing and can capitalize their land holdings on terms that will permit them to repay little by little, we can put the cotton-growing industry of the South on a cash basis. This would enable our farmers to buy on a cash basis and secure financial independence. It would break the power of the supply merchants. It would be the surest way to a New South. A New South would mean prosperity to the nation.

There is no theory in this proposition. I have studied these mortgage systems here. They are straight business enterprises that we Americans can adopt, perhaps improve upon. The Legislature of every State in the Union should take this matter under consideration.

When currency reform is enacted in the United States this should form part of the program. Farmers never up to this time had any consideration whatsoever given their requirements as borrowers. In currency or banking legislation they have been left to get along as well as they could. This has been largely responsible for the financial positions of the Southern farmers to-day.

Men's Hats For Next Fall Pert Affairs, Blue and Green

Fall, 1913, hats for men are being shown by jobbers in Atlanta.

Take them big and large, they deserve the name the women give their headgear—they are "creations."

One "creation," for instance, is green velour, with a little bow at the back, and a button-hole stitched edge.

Brown-Perryman-Greene Company say velours, particularly in blue and green, are "the thing" for fall. Velours retail from $3.50 to $7.50.

The "Trooper" shape is proper. To make a "Trooper" shape, punch out a crown, then strike it with the edge of the hand, lengthwise. That's all.

Another "creation" particularly fetching is blue, with red, white and blue stitching which runs up and down the crown and around and around the brim. A button is in the geometrical center of the crown.

Perhaps the best of the bunch, to many tastes, is a green felt hat, "Trooper" shape, of course, with "zebra" finish. "Zebra" finish means that it is 'self-striped." Alternate stripes are smooth, the others are unfinished—fuzzy, in a word. The stripes are something less than half an inch wide, and run vertically on the crown. The hat really is not "freaky." It is attractive.

Other soft hats are lined with gay silk, have welt edges, or are otherwise adorned.

Brand-new is a chinchilla hat. Corduroy and cloth of all kinds will be much in vogue this autumn.

Caps promise to continue their unprecedented popularity. They come in all patterns—one, for instance, a "cubist" design in maroon and tan.

For the man who will wear a derby, regardless, it may be news to know that the derby crowns will be a bit higher this fall, the brims about the same. Crowns seem to be working back from the flat effect of a year back to the old-fashioned high crown. They change a bit each year.

Boys—the little fellows—wear telescope shape hats, while you can't give them to their elders.

Of course, this takes no account of the "staples"—the conservative styles which never change.

LUMBER SALES SHOW BUILDING KEEPS UP WELL

Dealers in Supplies Tell of Big Things in Prospect for the Coming Autumn.

Dealers in lumber, brick, cement, plaster and building supplies report that Atlanta is going straight ahead in its expansion.

Unanimously they report good trade. One particularly encouraging feature, according to their expressions, is the steady increase in the number of small residences, homes costing between $3,000 and $4,000, seeming to predominate.

Furthermore, building supplies dealers are unanimous in saying that there are great plans in store for fall. If all rumors are to be believed, property owners are contemplating improvements at almost a "boom" rate as soon as summer is past.

Paint dealers also are cheerful. They report contractors figuring on work far ahead, and also general activity in refurnishing buildings which are not new, but which are being remodeled to meet the city's growing needs.

Expressions from dealers in these lines follow:

V. H. Kriegshaber: "Our observation is that there is a good deal of building contemplated—in the wind, so to speak. When conditions settle down this fall, we look for an excellent trade in building supplies."

Randall Bros.: "Our business is better than it ever has been in lumber and building material. The increase has come from the increase in medium priced houses, residences to cost between $3,000 and $4,000.

"It is hard to tell about the fall, but we look for a good trade. Prices are a little lower. This always is the case in June and July. There will be a reaction in August and September, and quotations will be stronger. This is the history of every year."

Willingham-Tift Lumber Co.: "Business has been quite brisk up to the present time, with particular activity in the erection of small houses. This looks to us like the right time to build, for prices, in our opinion, are at the bottom."

Sciple Sons: "Business is fairly good at the present time, and it is picking up rapidly. We look for a very good trade for the rest of the year. The market is steady, still prices are reasonable and it is a good time to build. We notice a revival particularly in the erection of small houses."

Dozier & Gay: "From the number of contractors who are figuring on painting to be done between now and fall, we look for a big business.

"Every indication is that a large number of new homes are to be built, and there are rumors of several large buildings for wholesale houses and small factories.

Trained Men Great Need Of Business World To-day

Germany and other European countries are far ahead of the United States in the matter of commercial education. This point was brought out in a speech before the annual convention of the National Association of Credit Men at Cincinnati.

"The annual losses by reason of failures in the United States amount now to some $200,000,000," said Mr. Gaehr, "or over $2 per capita. To put it concretely, the national annual loss from bad debts equals one-half the estimate cost of the Panama Canal.

"Professor Munsterberg of Harvard University observes that a great difficulty of our educational system has been that it does not teach a man to find himself, and when he learns his strong and his weak points, his real inclinations toward and qualifications for a pursuit in life, it is usually too late.

"We find the highway of commerce and life marked with sad monuments of men crushed under the wheels of progress who would have made a success in life had they had the proper direction and counsel and had they been taught to fashion their thoughts to fruitful issues, men who could and should have been helped to usefulness.

"A further difficulty is that the vocational demands are not sufficiently fixed and brought to the attention of the younger generations. They know comparatively little of the inner labors, the inner values, and inner difficulties of various professions and callings.

"Then, too, in many cases trivial chance influences decide the choice of a vocation. Young men often drop into a place, rather than deliberately choosing business as a life vocation.

"The need of better trained men, especially commercially, made itself felt several years ago, and as a result a number of universities and colleges of high standing organized schools of commerce, Harvard University ranking its School of Business Administration as one of the graduate schools. Several cities have established high schools of commerce, yet the schoolmaster and the business man are still too far apart.

Auto Sales Gaining Over Last Season

Business Gradually Working to Credit Basis—Men Buy Cars as They Buy Homes.

"So far as we are able to judge from the business done by our clients, automobile sales in Atlanta have been exceptionally good for the period which began January 1," says Joseph N. Moody, of the Auto Credit Sales Company.

"The automobile firms whom we represent as a credit clearing house report an increase over last season.

"Sales probably would be larger yet if we did not check them. Amusing as the idea may seem, we are in a sense philanthropists, for we are saving the people from themselves, in this way: Suppose a man with moderate income tries to buy an auto on time. We investigate carefully. If he has a family of girls, let us say, all living at home, and no income but his salary, we turn him down. If he had a family of boys, all working and able to help purchase a car, all well and good.

"The automobile business is working more and more toward a time basis. A man buys his motor car now just as he would buy his home—on payments. I believe the future will see 90 per cent of the business done in that way."

City Salesmen Take Outing; Truce Kept

Jobbers Agree Not to Scout for Business During Absence of Their Representatives.

City salesmen will be conspicuous by their absence this week. The grocer or dry goods merchant who needs to replenish his stock must telephone to his jobber. The jobbers have agreed not to solicit business for the week, but just to take what comes to them in the natural course of events.

The reason for this strange pact is that the jobbers are on their annual outing at the Isle of Palms, near Charleston, S. C.

In order not to take advantage of their absence, fifty or more jobbers signed a formal agreement of neutrality for the week, and O. T. Camp, president of the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association, sent a letter to all members of his organization acquainting them with the state of affairs, and asking that they fill urgent needs only, by using the tele-

SELLING NOTES.

The heavy demand for sport coats this season is helping the dress goods trade over some rough spots. Chinchillas and eponges are used principally in the manufacture of these garments, and makers and wholesalers of these fabrics are doing a good business in them.

The firmness of 39-inch, 80 squares, is one of the features of the print cloth market at the moment. Printers have taken this construction in good quantities, and as a result of curtailed production by the mills the supply has fallen somewhat behind the demand.

A thing that is regarded as a good omen for the future of the men's wear fabrics trade is the promptness with which the manufacturing clothiers are settling up their accounts with the mill agents. In view of losses sustained by the clothiers as a result of the strike earlier in the year this action on their part is said to indicate the thorough soundness of the clothing industry.

RUSSIA SEEKING U. S. FRIENDSHIP IN NEW TREATY

Renewal of Pact Abrogated by Congress Is Proposed by Diplomats of Czar.

JEWISH QUESTION RISES

Washington Is Silent, but Understanding Is That Bryan Is Willing to Renew Negotiations.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Russia has asked the United States Government to take up the question of a renewal of a treaty of amity and commerce. The treaty of 1832 on that subject was abrogated out of hand by the Congress of the United States.

Secretary of State Bryan said today that the question of renewing negotiations had been discussed with the President, but that there was nothing yet to state in the way of detail.

It has been stated to Russia, however, that the United States is willing to resume negotiations which had been commenced during the administration of the office of Secretary of State by Mr. Knox.

Two Diplomats Suggested.

The President is soon to appoint an Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg and the report is that a selection will be made between Charles R. Crane and Frederick Penfield, of Philadelphia and New York.

The administration will have to meet the question of the Jewish passport and the recognition of the Jews as American citizens without regard to race or religion in the new negotiations. It is well known that Russia was anxious to renew negotiations very soon after the affront to the Jewish race under the old treaty or by Russia's construction of the old treaty was wiped out by the joint resolution of Congress which abrogated the treaty of 1832. This action of Congress was unequivocally an act to rebuke Russia for her treatment of the Jews generally and specifically for her continued refusal to recognize passports issued to Jews.

Knox Charges Discrimination.

Secretary of State Knox held that the question of Jews should not enter into the matter at all, and that the real question was that the treaty of 1832 discriminated against American citizens.

It was stated during the last administration that Russia was trying to separate the Jewish passport question from all other questions which would enter into a treaty of amity and commerce, such as is made with all enlightened nations.

The statement was made at the time that the old administration frowned on this none too subtle suggestion of Russia and held that there should be no treaty except one that would do full justice to all Americans—Jews, Irish, English, Germans—no matter what their origin if they were citizens of the United States.

White House Silent.

The State Department at that time knew that if a treaty was sent to the Senate which did not include a solution of the passport question it could not be ratified. It is said that the present administration understands the situation thoroughly and will endeavor to get a treaty which will cover all American interests favorably or none at all.

At the White House no expression of opinion is yet obtainable from any official reflecting the views of the President. There is no question, however, that the Ambassador to be appointed by the President will be fully instructed on the passport question before he goes to St. Petersburg.

SOCIETY WOMAN GOES TO WORK IN BIG STORE

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Miss Florence Lord, a graduate of Smith College, prominent socially in Chicago, New York and many other Eastern cities, and influential in suffrage clubs, has been working for a week or more in a Los Angeles department store, "to study the sociological conditions" at first hand, in order "to get away with her stunt."

Verses Tell How 'Imperator' Ought to be Pronounced

Great Trouble Found With Largest Liner Is That Everyone Gives Her a Different Name.

NEW YORK, June 28.—There is one fault already found with the Imperator, the giant vessel of the Hamburg-American line, which has just made her maiden voyage as the biggest ship afloat. The trouble is no one knows how to pronounce her name.

Many think they do, and as a result, she is called many things as Amerson Hough, the author, who answers to Huff, How, Hoe, Huge and a few other things.

In reply to inquiries as to the pronunciation the publicity agent says that the German pronunciation which is sanctioned by the modern Latinists makes the "a" in Imperator sound like the "a" in father. The accent is on the next syllable to the last. The poet laureate of the line has been so much puzzled by the variety of pronunciations that he has celebrated them in verse. Here are some of the couplets:

Biggest ship upon the water,
Gorgeous, quetnly Imperator.

If you do not like that style of calling the ship, perhaps the poet laureate remarked, you may take this:

In the finest class we state her,
Peerless, German Imperator.

"And please," the poet said, "do not make peerless "beerless." Then, after running his fingers through his hair, the poet emitted and submitted this:

Vastness!—making senses totter!
Sea Collossus, Imperator!

"To the tune of 'Dixie,'" said the poet, we might get still another line on the pronunciation by singing:

Buckwheat cakes and a little batter
Taste quite good on the Imperator!

Greatest Salmon Run in Puget Sound

Quadrennial Migration of Horde of Fish From Fraser River Begins on Pacific Coast.

SEATTLE, June 28.—Steamship men report the approach of the annual Sockeye salmon run, which this year is the quadrennial big run, the greatest fish migration in the world. The fish now entering the Sound were born four years ago.

When the first white men came to the Northwest the Indians told them of this periodical big run, which had been regular as far back as their tribal legends want. It is the Canadian theory that the fish making up the big run are hatched in Fraser River and grow to maturity off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Four years ago so many traps were set for the mature fish that few were able to enter the Fraser, and the Canadians have insisted that the big run of 1913 would be a failure. Hence there is international interest in the size of the approaching swarms of salmon.

Anything Shocking Police, Called Bad

Criticism of Chiefs of Present Styles Declared Cause for Women of Country to Act

JOHNSTOWN, PA., June 28.—Attacking immodesty in women's dress, Mrs. H. W. Black, of Riverdale, today stirred the delegates and visitors gathered at the annual convention of the Cambria County Sabbath School Association, in session here.

"Christian women should not wear clothes that cause people to turn and look at them after they pass," declared Mrs. Black.

"The police chiefs in convention at Washington have gone on record demanding a reform in women's dress. When it gets so bad that the police have to ask such a thing, I think it is time Christian women should act."

My Experience With Tacco ---The New Handy Varnish

By EVELYN WREN

HOUSEWIVES realize that a coat of varnish is often more satisfactory than a new piece of furniture. It is a gratification to see the marred chair which belonged to the first parlor suit look like new. The dining table has held many simple breakfasts, many delightful luncheons and many bountiful dinners, and the steaming dishes have left ugly marks upon its once shining surface. To see it emerge from its varnish treatment is like welcoming back an old friend.

Varnishing seems like tiresome, dirty work, and a task suitable for men attired in overalls. I had always associated it with laborers' muscles and rough clothing until one day when I decided my desk at The American office needed some attention.

You do not become wholly unfeminine even if you are a newspaper woman. I was tired of seeing the black spot where the inkwell had overturned. I did not like the white mark where a glass of ice water had stood. All at once I had a hunch that I could do my work better if a marred place did not constantly remind me of a loss of temper and consequent lowering of self-respect and dignity. The refinishing of my desk became an obsession.

I read advertisements. Fortunately I am influenced by them. When I saw an advertisement of a varnish which a woman could apply with a cloth just as a furniture polish is applied, I resolved to investigate the novel preparation.

I went to the sixth floor of the Forsyth Building and entered the offices of The Amber Chemical Company. There I almost breathlessly inquired for Tacco, the water-proof, dust-proof and heat-proof varnish. (To tell the truth, I did not much mind about the heat-proof feature, for most of the heat in our office is caused by irritable nerves, and not by the weather. I am no exception.)

A bottle of Tacco was put into my hand, and I grasped a piece of cheesecloth and went energetically to work. I used just as much muscle as three years of typewriting will produce in a feminine arm. I worked as hard as any furniture polisher ever dreamed of doing in his worst nightmare. I thought I was doing well.

Imagine my chagrin and the expression on my face when the cloth was quietly taken from my vigorous grasp and I was shown that Tacco requires no rubbing. You do not have to use as much energy as I do in ordinary dusting.

Dust the article first. If it is much stained you might well apply a little soap and water. Then apply your Tacco to the dry surface. A piece of cheesecloth is the best medium, and a firm, gentle movement like that of dusting will put the varnish on in the best form. Then let it dry. At the end of five hours view the result and feel proud of your work which is really but a pastime.

Have a Tacco day. Take the breakfast cloth off when husband has departed for the office. Apply Tacco according to the directions on the box, and the dining table will be ready for use at lunch time. Of course if husband is a capitalist and breakfasts at 10:30 instead of at 7 you will probably not have the pleasure of using Tacco yourself. Let us hope that you are one of those domestic little housewives who just "loves" to make your home pretty with your personal effort, and that husband has not outgrown his appreciation of the little touches which you can give just a bit better than any hired help.

The table in the living room has played an important part in the happiness of the household. You could not think of home without that table, and the ones you see in the store windows never look quite as hospitable or nearly so homelike. Here Jack has read his paper and graciously explained politics to your bewildered self as you stitched on little frocks which were to go to Kindergarten with Little Girl. It has held Big Brother's school books and his drawing instruments. (Said drawing instruments are responsible for the big unsightly gash at the end.) All in all, you feel as you begin to apply Tacco with a gentle hand that this table has many dear memories. You would like to see it as fresh and pretty as it was when you and Jack picked it out. It seemed the finest table in the world on that day. How you blushed, and how manly Jack looked as he quietly drew the money from his pocket and ordered it sent to your new home.

When the table is finished the big chair will seem more worn and bruised than ever. You never realized how shabby the living room was getting. It seems but a day or two ago that you decided to surprise Jack with that comfortable chair on his birthday. You saved from your housekeeping money bit by bit and grew anxious toward the last for fear the fund would not be large enough. You grow tender toward that big chair as you remember Jack's eyes when he first espied it and then quickly gazed at you. The lovelight was there, even if you had been married a half-dozen years, and had but recently lost many hours of sleep with Little Girl's teething episode.

GET THE WORD THEN GET THE MEANING
TRADE MARK
TACCO
BRAND
A HINT TO THE WISE

The tender feelings do not interfere with the application of Tacco. Let retrospection have its sway, and when you have had the pleasure of many happy memories look at the result. The table will shine like new. The gash made by Big Brother's steel ruler will not show. Tacco has acted as a filler and made the surface smooth as glass. Dusting will be a light task now. You may even scrub the table, for it has a water-proof finish now. The chair will bring the lovelight to Jack's eyes anew, for he, too, will remember the day your love made the gift.

If you are a housekeeper, you will welcome Tacco as a means of making your home brighter and more cheerful. You need never wish for an opportunity to send shabby furniture away to be refinished. You can buy a bottle of Tacco for only 50 cents. The economy of it will be demonstrated by its first use, and you will be ready to purchase a quart, half-gallon or gallon can before many days.

When I like anything I never take my liking for granted. I analyze my appreciation. Here is my analysis of my fondness for Tacco:

It requires absolutely no rubbing.
It dries in from two to five hours.
It is water-proof as well as dust and heat proof.
It is economical in time and money.

Well, my desk at The American office has had its Tacco treatment. Come in to see it, if you like. Then investigate Tacco as I did, if you like, or better still, benefit by my written experience and buy a bottle or can at any good drug or hardware store.

Do you live out of town? If you do, you would like to hear about a splendid proposition for out-of-town dealers. Write to-day for information and do not risk the loss of the agency in your town. Write and see what The Amber Chemical Company has to tell you.

BOY CONFESSES KILLING MOTHER AND BROTHER

Berkley Fleming, 19, of Ironton, Mo., Appears Unconcerned When Accused of Crime.

IRONTON, O., June 28.—Berkley Fleming, 19, has confessed to shooting his half-brother, Culbertson Stewart, almost three years ago, and his mother a few days ago.

The police took the boy to his grandfather's farm, where he pointed out the grave of his mother and stood by unconcerned as the body was removed. He was not impressed when the skeleton of Culbertson was exhumed.

Believe Boy Degenerate.

Chief of Police King, Dr. Wells and the Rev. W. H. Hampton, who have suspected for several months that Berkeley killed Culbertson, believe Berkeley a degenerate of the worst type.

Their theory is that he killed Culbertson because of jealousy and that he had worked out his carefull arranged plan of concealing the crime before he shot his brother.

The murder of the mother, they believe, was a part of his plan to keep her from exposing his former murder. A bullet hole in the back of the head of each victim and the mother's bruised face, say these men, destroy any accident theory.

Mother Is Suspicious.

Culbertson Stewart disappeared July 14, 1910, Berkeley's 17th birthday. The other brother afterward wrote letters to his mother purporting to come from Culbertson. She became suspicious, and he decided to kill her also.

After the crime he was found at a hotel waiting for dinner. He had gone there in a buggy to take his sweetheart riding. He made no objection to going to the police station, where he confessed.

Aged Pair Perform Own Marriage Rites

Bridegroom, 75 Years Old, Declares It Was His Sixth Experience With Such Ceremony

BEAVER, PA., June 28.—Dr. Akkelon Mercer, seventy-five years old of Beaver Falls, and Sarah L. Calgrove, sixty-five years old, of Wetzel county, West Virginia, performed their own marriage ceremony here.

When the pair obtained their license they informed Hamilton, the clerk, that all they needed was a license, as they could dispense with all bridal attendants and the minister.

Doctor Mercer and Mrs. Calgrove to Hamilton issued the license for marry themselves in the presence of witnesses. Doctor Mercer stated that he had been married five times, and in each instance he and his bride had performed their own ceremony, always in the presence of two witnesses.

Defaulter Hired to Audit Bank's Books

Man Who Wrecked Financial Institution, Will Go to Work to Untangle Its Affairs.

CARUTHERSVILLE, MO., June 28.—A. B. Tindle, cashier of the Pemiscot County Bank, which closed its doors following the discovery that he was short in his accounts, will be retained by the reorganizers to aid in straightening out its affairs.

"There is no desire on the part of the directors of the bank to prosecute Tindle," one of the directors said to-day. "He has turned over all his property and has been punished enough by his sudden fall from a position of trust and respect in the community."

Tindle's personal fortune is estimated at $200,000.

The action of the directors of the bank in retaining him in the task of straightening out the confusion caused by his shortage meets with the approval of a majority of the citizens it is said.

Prehistoric Flying Reptile Discovered

Skeleton of Pterodactyl Monster Is Found in Wyoming Fossil Bed by Geologists.

CASPER, WYO., June 28.—Dr. F. Salathe and D. VanWagener, geologists, who are prospecting this vicinity for oil, reported the discovery eighteen miles from Casper of a fossil bed, conspicuously visible in which is the almost perfect silicified skeleton of a flying reptile, probably of the pterodactyl, which measures at least sixty feet in length. The creature in life must have had a wing expansion of eighty feet.

Millionaire Gives Free Circus to Pay Pledge of Boyhood

Packer Leaves Home as Child to Make Fortune After Missing Show for Lack of Money.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Edward Tilden, millionaire packer, produced a circus to-day for "all the children within walking or riding distance" of the Tilden estate at Lake Delavan, Wis.

The huge entertainment cost $10,000 and had been planned for 25 years by the host. It grew out of a painfully vivid recollection of a circus that had come to town and gone away again without his getting inside the tent. It was fresh in his mind when he left Delavan a quarter of a century ago to come to Chicago to "make his fortune." At the train Edward Tilden told friends:

"I'm coming back some day and buy the town and give everyone a good time, and let every boy here see a circus."

A special carload of entertainers left Chicago for Delavan this morning. A dog and pony show and a band of 40 pieces left last night. The children also saw an aeroplane flight, had automobile rides and a big dinner.

Child Offered Home For Looking Pleasant

Smiling Face of Orphan in Photographed Group Wins Hearts of Couple Who Lost Baby.

POCAHONTAS, ILL., June 28.—In Pocahontas there may be a home for a little girl because she "looked pleasant" when a photographer took the picture of a group of children waiting for an automobile ride. Children in the orphan asylums on that day were given an outing by the Automobile Club of St. Louis.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miles, of Pocahontas, adopted a little girl several years ago. She died. Something about two of the little girls whose pictures appeared in the newspaper reminded them of the little one who died, and they have written for information about the children.

INDIAN GIRLS WILL TRY SKILL AT HAT-MAKING

CARLISLE, PA., June 28.—Indian art will now show itself in hats. At least that is the natural conclusion drawn from an announcement made by the Carlisle Indian School that a course in millinery has been established for aborigines.

Indian art, the absolutely original gift of America to the world, has expressed itself in pottery, in rugs, in a dozen other ways, but it has never before entered the field of headgear, and it is expected that this new innovation may yet cast the chic French models into the deep shadows.

SCHOOL ROLLS FAIL TO KEEP UP WITH BIRTHS

Wide Discrepancy Is Shown in Number of Pupils and Increase of Children.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Chapters on "Roman Catholic Schools," "Typical Health Teaching Agencies of the United States," and "Parent-Teacher Associations" are special features of the annual report of the United States Commissioner of Education, just issued.

In addition to these the report contains substantial chapters on the following subjects: General survey of the year; educational legislation during 1912; higher education; city school systems; rural education; recent movements in negro education; a review of agricultural education; progress in vocational education; library development; education in Alaska, the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and other dependencies; Indian education; educational activities in Canada, Latin-America, Great Britain, Northern Europe, France and Switzerland, Germany, Southern Europe and Russia; together with a general view of conditions in Asia, Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

In his introduction to the report the commissioner discusses the wide discrepancy between the increase in the number of children of school age and the actual enrollment; an apparent reduction in teachers' salaries during the year, the remarkable increase in high schools and high school enrollment throughout the country; the decrease in professional schools, due to the enforcement of higher standards, lack of preparation of teachers, which Dr. Claxton characterizes as "one of the greatest evils of our school systems;" the shortness of the school term in the United States as compared with other civilized nations; and the abnormally large percentage of illiteracy in the rural districts.

Woman Jury Awards Verdict in Oregon

Plaintiff Is Awarded Damages of $5 in Legal Fight Over Cut of a Skirt.

ST. JOHNS, ORE., June 28.—The first regularly called woman's jury to serve in the State of Oregon tried a case in Justice Williams' court here and, after twenty minutes' conference, returned a verdict of $5 for the plaintiff. The jury was drawn in the regular form from a list of fifty women who have been chosen as liable for jury service during the year.

The case was one involving the price of a skirt. The plaintiff averred that a skirt which she had made by a local seamstress did not fit. She brought suit to recover the price of the skirt.

The fair jurors fixed the damages at $5.

The finder kept $500 as his share and each of his fellow workmen was given $200.

USE OF SCHOOLS AS AID TO LOVE MAKING URGED

Peace Executive Would Make Social Centers of Houses of Instruction in Big Cities.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Arthur Deering Call, executive director of the American Peace Society, has undertaken to win for the young men and women of America the right to make love to each other.

Said he:

"One of the nation's greatest needs is the promotion of acquaintance between young men and women, the fathers and mothers of the next generation, under free, attractive and wholesome conditions. We need more wholesome conditions for 'courting.'

"I can think of nothing so important to this generation as the lifemates of its various individuals, or so vital to the next as its fathers and mothers and home life generally.

Would Use Schools.

"I propose a wider use of school buildings for social and neighborhood purposes. I do not want love-making a part of the school curriculum, but I think that the same lips that recite the multiplication table or decline a noun in the class room in the garish light of day might just as well whisper tender nothings while the moon peeks in at the window later on.

"For a great majority of our young people in the cities the dance halls provide the only regular amusement they can afford, where any man who has the price can step up to any young woman and ask her to dance. No wonder such places become recruiting places for vice.

No Instruction Needed.

"Why not let the school be a cross between the church and the saloon? Every school should be arranged so that in the evening the young folks could gather there for games, folk-dancing classes, music, athletics, sewing classes and moving pictures.

"All the young folks want is opportunity to meet under proper environment. We don't have to teach the men how to make love, or young women how to listen to them, but we owe it to the race not to hinder or pervert their natural tendencies by improper environment."

NEGRO GIVES FOUR PENNIES FOR FIVE DOLLAR BILLS

INDIANAPOLIS, June 28.—While Miss Stella Koch was busy tending a stand on the city market last night, a well dressed negro asked if she could give him some paper money for gold.

"I have four $5 gold pieces," he explained, "and I would like to get some paper money in exchange for them, as I do not like to carry gold in my pocket."

The girl said she could accommodate him, and going to the cash drawer produced four $5 bills. She handed the bills to the negro, and he dropped four bright, shining pennies into her oustretched hand.

TARIFF CUTS IN SENATE TO AID NATION'S DINING ROOM

Many House Figures Lowered and Free List Increased — Despite Cuts, Bill Is Expected to Produce $5,000,000 More Cash.

Atlanta's Need for Help to Reduce the High Cost of Living Is Shown by Figures Indicating Soaring Price of Foodstuffs.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The revised tariff bill laid before the Senate Democratic caucus by Mr. Simmons, chairman of the finance committee, carries important reductions in the Underwood tariff bill rates on iron, steel and other metal products. It added cattle, wheat, pig iron, Angora wool, and many other articles to the free list, and increased rates on many classes of cotton goods and some silk products.

President Wilson's desires as to free sugar in 1916 and free wool at once, prevailed in the redraft of the bill. To the list of "market basket" reductions the Underwood bill contained, the Senate committee added many important items.

In the general level of its rates the "Simmons bill" represents a heavier cut from the present Payne-Aldrich rates than the House bill.

Senator Simmons believes the caucus will discuss the bill not longer than a week.

Simmons' Statement.

The bill probably will come to a vote in the Senate by September 1.

In a statement Chairman Simmons said:

"The revenues of the Government will be increased approximately $5,000,000, laid in hand with a reduction of the taxation following the reductions already made in the House bill. These increases in revenues will be made up by a tariff on bananas and restoration of the full internal duty of $1.10 per gallon on brandies used in fortifying wines.

"With regard to the sugar schedule no change was made from the provision of the Underwood bill except to strike out 'sugars tinctured and colored,' for fear that ultramarine blue used in bleaching sugar might be regarded as colored matter and thereby refined sugar become subject to a duty of 2 cents a pound.

"With regard to cigars and other tobacco products from the Philippines the provision of the Underwood bill permitting cigars with 80 per cent of tobacco the product of the Philippine Islands and 20 per cent the produce of foreign countries to be admitted into the United States free of duty, was stricken out of the bill. Only cigars and tobacco products exclusively of Philippine tobacco to be admitted free of duty into the United States."

The Liquor Schedule.

Of the amendment to the liquor schedule, the statement said:

"An additional section is added repealing so much of the act approved October 1, 1890, and acts amendatory thereto, so far as they relate to the use free of tax of spirits for the fortification of sweet wines, and providing that hereafter all wine spirits, grape brandy and alcohol so used shall be subject to the same tax as in other cases.

"It is intimated that this tax will result in an increase of revenue of approximately $7,000,000 per annum.

"The Senate Finance Committee followed the House and treated the cotton yarns as the House bill treated cotton cloth," the statement continued, "by adding a duty of two and one-half per cent upon cotton cloth when combed, bleached, dyed, mercerized or colored. This is the most important change that the Senate committee made in the House cotton schedule."

Retaliatory Clause.

The amendment permitting the President to proclaim special rates when foreign nations discriminate against the United States provides that he shall exercise this authority on certain articles, as follows:

"Fish, fresh, smoked and dried, pickled or otherwise prepared, 1 cent per pound; on wheat, 10 cents per bushel; on wheat flour, 45 cents per barrel; on coffee, 3 cents per pound; on tea, 10 cents per pound.

"On the following articles a duty

Pigeons to Keep City Sane, Says Expert

Dr. B. Chester King, of Atlanta, Tells Chicago That Its Safety Rests With Doves.

CHICAGO, June 28.—If Chicagoans are to be saved from the mad house at all it will be by the pigeons.

Dr. B. Chester King, an Atlanta alienist, finds hope for the city's sanity in the pigeons that flutter about the Loop all day.

"Several times each day," says the doctor, "the man who works in an office building should go to a window with the expectation of seeing one or more doves. Should he spy them, I suggest that he forget all else. There is something in just the name 'dove' that has a soothing effect upon the nerves."

Pastor Gets Town To Give Day to Ball

All Girard Suspends Business to Attend Games, but There Is No Playing on Sunday.

GIRARD, KANS., June 28.—Girard has found a happy solution to the problem of Sunday baseball by setting out one day in the week when everybody suspends business operations and goes to the ball game.

This arrangement came through the suggestion of the Rev. M. L. Morrison, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, after considerable wrangling early in the summer between people who wanted ball games on Sunday and those who did not. The new arrangement was tried yesterday for the second time. Everyone is pleased and the blue laws are enforced.

Federal Soldiers and Civilians Shot Down in Cold Blood at Durango.

CAPTIVES PUT TO TORTURE

Atrocities Practiced to Force Citizens to Reveal Hiding Places of Wealth.

MEXICO CITY, June 28.—One thousand soldiers and civilians were slaughtered by rebels when the city of Durango, capital of the State of the same name, fell into the insurgents' hands, according to word received here to-day from that city. Many of the victims were members of prominent families.

Men and women were tortured to death when they did not produce wealth at the bidding of the rebels.

Fighting between federals and insurgents is going on at Uruapam in the State of Michocan, Cuquio, in the State of Jalisco, was taken by rebels yesterday and the garrison put to the sword.

EL PASO, TEXAS, June 28.—Pancho Villa, Mexican rebel leader, who has announced his intention of taking Juarez and executing General Salazar, commander of the garrison, in the bull ring, established outposts within three miles of the town.

Ortega, who has 500 men, may cooperate with Villa. If Juarez falls, it will remove the most important Mexican port of entry on the United States border from Huerta and may result in the downfall of the Huerta government.

Prince of Wales Spends $1.25 a Week

Writes Home for More Money, but Mother Considers That This Amount Is Ample.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—The amount allotted to the Prince of Wales for pocket money has just become known. Every Saturday he receives just $1.25, which he terms his "old age pension." He is occasionally a trifle extravagant and mortgages his money in advance.

Toward the end of the last term at Oxford he was asked by a friend to join a party to visit the theater.

The Prince's reply was, "Sorry, old man, but I am clean broke."

"Why don't you write home for some more?" asked the friend.

"I did," replied the Prince, "but mother said I was too extravagant."

Mrs. Marshall Finds $2,000 House at Last

Wife of Vice President Refuses to Pay More, Wishing to Live Within Husband's Salary.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The long house hunt of Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice President, is probably over, as she has found a suitable house on Columbia Road, Northwest. Her hunt was prolonged owing to the fact that she set $2,000 yearly as the price they would pay. The Marshalls have said they must live within their salary, and Washington society is eagerly watching to see how they will manage with the many social and financial demands upon them. Mrs. Marshall wanted to go to the country, but feared it would be too far for the Congressional wives to visit.

Congress to Force White Slave Inquiry

Reasons for Postponement of Diggs-Caminetti Case by Department of Justice To Be Bared.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Investigation of the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave case by the Department of Justice must go on, is the edict of the Congressmen behind the resolutions.

They are determined to bare the entire correspondence between McNab and the Attorney General and uncover the influences behind the white slave and Western Fuel cases.

If the House for any reason fails to take up the investigation Tuesday, the Senate is determined to dig to the bottom of the matter itself. No "pull" or influence can block this inquiry, it is declared.

King George Finds Platonic Romance With Fair Countess

Monarch Pays Marked Attention to Wife of Lord Mar While Queen Mary Is Absent.

Special Cable to The Sunday American.

LONDON, June 28—Every one thought King George so extremely domestic and conventional that it has come as rather a shock to people outside court circles to find him paying marked attention to the beautiful Countess of Mar and Killie.

The lovely countess, who is in her prime and a favorite of King Edward, is to be found wherever the King is.

Lord Mar goes about very little, but it was noticed that he and his wife were included in the royal house party at Windsor Castle for the Ascot races.

When Queen Mary was absent from the races, Lady Mar was always at the King's side, but when Her Majesty was present Lady Mar mixed with the general crowd in the royal inclosure.

Lady Mar is very sympathetic and attractive. The inner circle at the court is intensely amused at this mild platonic flirtation.

Mrs. Astor Bars Too Fervid Trotting

Society Youth Comes to Grief When He Disregards Rules of Conduct Fixed by Hostess.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—Mrs. John Astor is becoming known in social circles as a hostess whose rules of conduct must be obeyed by her guests. One young man who, until recently, doubted this, is now lamenting his mistake. Mrs. Astor permits the "tango" and "turkey trot" at her dances, but insists that they be danced in moderation. When this guest so far forgot himself as to verge on to the vulgar, he was quickly shown the door.

Mrs. Astor's example is not followed by all of London's hostesses. At the entertainments of a certain duchess the ragtime is accompanied by a great deal of roughness, being usually danced with the lights out.

Early Cold Injures Crops of Michigan

Wheat Promises but Half a Crop, Hay One-third, and Fruit Outlook Is Poor.

LANSING, MICH., June 28.—Michigan Agricultural College field men and district supervisors report crop prospects of the State the poorest in years, due to the early cold, wet season and late frosts, followed by the present hot, dry weather.

Wheat promises little better than half a crop, hay one-third, oats one-half. Early potatoes have been badly frosted in sections and will not produce over one-quarter crop without rain.

Fruit is equally poor. Plums and grapes are expected to be about 30 or 40 per cent of a crop.

Baroness Will Wed Man Hurled in Auto

St. Louis Tourist Unexpectedly Finds Self in Noblewoman's Car and Romance Ripens.

NEW YORK, June 28.—James Hurley, a railroad man of St. Louis, while automobiling in Paris a year ago, ran his car into that of the Baroness Barbara Ursula Kalinowski of Weisbaden and was hurled into the tonneau, where the Baroness was sitting. He gave her his card and later offered her his heart.

Arriving here by the Hamburg-American liner Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, she left for St. Louis, where the Baroness will be married to Mr. Hurley.

Gatun Gates Stand Their Supreme Test

Atlantic Waters Reach Sea Level and Locks Must Hold Against Full Pressure of Water.

PANAMA, June 28.—The Atlantic waters which have been allowed to run slowly against the lower gates at Gatun are at sea level to-day. The large gates are being put to the actual test of full pressure for the first time.

The engineers are watching the rise of the water with interest, and they report that the gates are watertight. The water is at the 50-foot stage.

PRICES TO STAY AS THEY ARE NOW, SAYS SULZBERGER

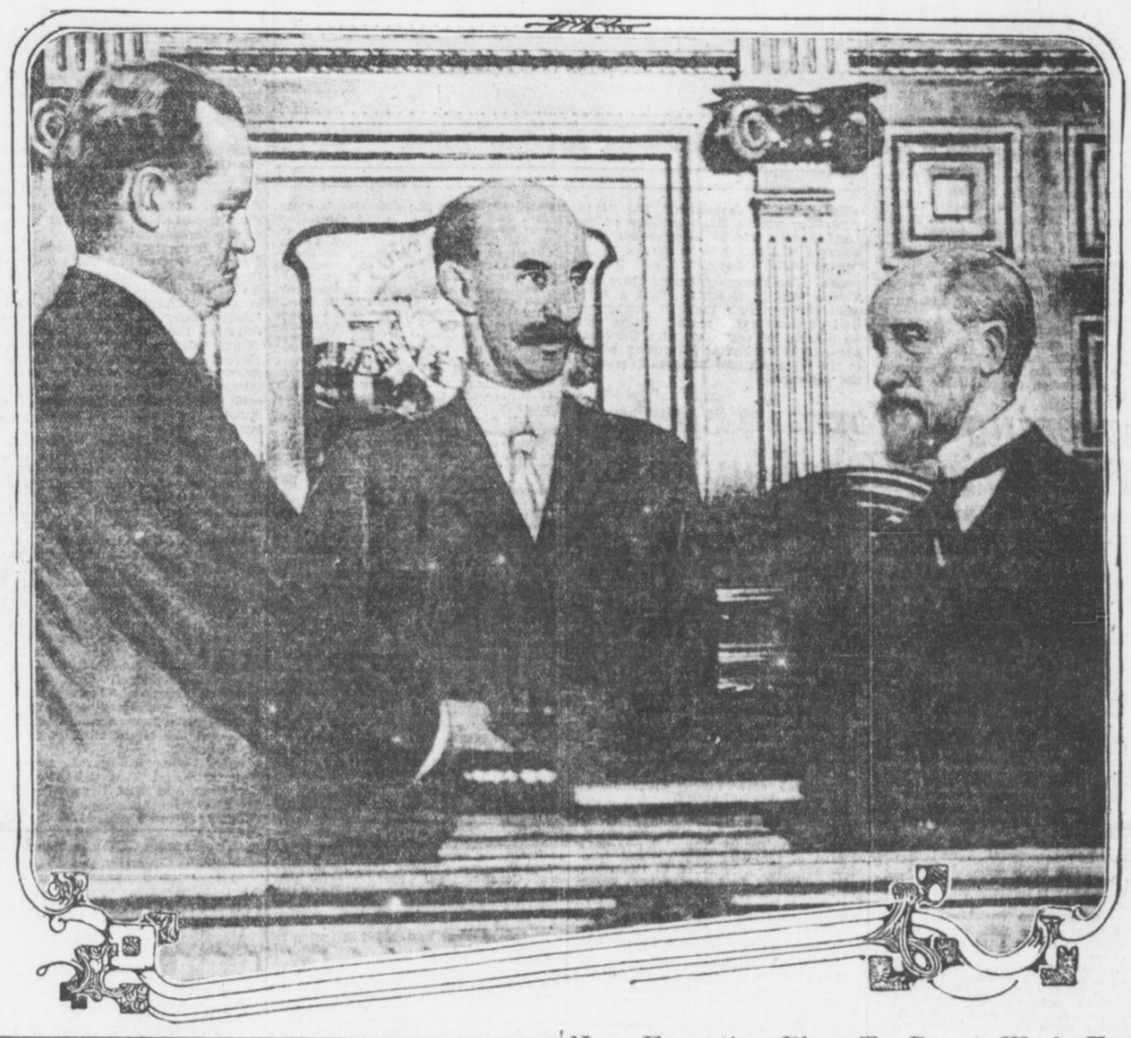
NEW YORK, June 28.—"Meat will never be any cheaper in the United States than it is now," declared G. F. Sulzberger, of Sulzberger & Schwarzchild, on his arrival from Europe on the Mauretania. "The only effect the change in the tariff will cause will be to keep prices where they are. Without this revision in the tariff, there would undoubtedly have been a big jump in prices."

SLATON'S BILLS READY TO PASS

Inaugurated With Utmost Simplicity

Legislature Wants to Aid Governor

Governor John M. Slaton, taking the oath of office at the Capitol yesterday. On the left is the new Executive, while Randolph Anderson, of Savannah, President of the Senate, is shown between him and Governor Brown, who retired to private life as soon as the oath was administered.



Inaugural Address of Slaton Urges New Taxation System

SWEEPING legislative reforms are urged by Governor John M. Slaton in his inaugural address and message delivered to the Legislature Saturday. Following are the ten most important reforms he urges:

1. An occupation tax on corporations, with the maximum $200 per annum on corporations of more than $1,000,000 capital; the tax on smaller corporations to be adjusted accordingly.

2. Changes in the registration laws. He says: "The present registration law should be so amended that when a voter has once proven his qualification by registering and being enrolled, he shall remain a registered voter unless disqualified for some cause due himself."

3. The need for good roads, with a highway commissioner or a commission. The message says: "An intelligent highway commission, or commissioner, clothed with the proper authority, could be the means of untold benefit in suggesting the proper methods of building roads."

4. A declaration that the sale of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, the State's property, should not be considered. The problem of its disposal should be considered by a commission, with directions to report its recommendations and its reasons therefor.

5. The passage of a law abolishing the defendant's statement in criminal trials, and providing in its place that he be sworn as a witness, if he so desires.

6. The Legislature is urged to consider legislation making the carrying of concealed weapons a felony, subject to reduction to a misdemeanor by either judge or jury.

7. Consideration of proper and remedial banking laws. "The banks of a State perform public functions, and as such are properly subjected to governmental supervision," says the message.

8. The creation of a new office, to be known as State Auditor.

9. Sweeping reforms in the tax system of Georgia. The system in vogue in this State is wrong, and the equalization of taxation, either through enforcement of present laws or new correctives, is urged.

10. That the Legislature investigate the decline of the agricultural schools and take steps to apply the proper remedies.

Gainesville Naval Academy to Hold a Regatta on July 4

Riverside Cadets Expect Hundreds of Visitors to See Sports on the Chattahoochee.

GAINESVILLE, June 28.—The first regatta of the Riverside Summer Naval School and Camp, which was opened here Thursday, will be held on July 4. Hundreds of visitors are expected to be on hand to see the sports.

The naval school and camp has a large enrollment this year, students being registered from practically all of the Southern States, including Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina, North Carolina, Kentucky and Virginia.

Captain Patterson, of the Culver Ind., Military Academy, will have charge of the naval and swimming departments this year, while Professor R. E. Brooks, superintendent of the Dublin public schools, will assist in the academic department.

Georgia Bankers to Urge Laws at This Legislative Session

One Provides Larger Salary for State Treasurer—Banking Department Considered.

The Georgia Bankers' Association, of which L. P. Hillyer, of Macon, is president and Haynes McFadden, of Atlanta, secretary, will urge new laws in the present session of the Legislature, according to announcement Saturday.

The association now has under advisement several bills, including one for a constitutional amendment providing larger appropriations for the State Treasurer, who supervises $6,000,000, it is said, on a salary fund of $3,100.

The amendment, though, is being considered only by the association thus far. It has not been acted on. Haynes McFadden Saturday said a bill creating a banking department probably would not come up at this session of the Legislature.

New Executive Plans To Be at Work Early Each Day and to Devote Entire Time to State.

Inducted into office with a simplicity that harked back to the days of Thomas Jefferson, John Marshall Slaton will enter the Capitol Monday morning for the first time as Governor of the State of Georgia. Eager to begin work for the State and the people, Governor Slaton plans to be at his office at an unusually early hour, and will plunge into the affairs of the State of Georgia with the energy and ability that has made him a leading figure among the attorneys and citizens of Atlanta.

Backed by his dominant personality and with the support of practically every member of the Senate and the House of Representatives, Governor Slaton's administration promises to be as harmonious and productive of good as that of any Governor the State has ever had.

Gossip heard among the legislators gathered for the sessions of the General Assembly indicate that every reform urged by the new Governor will meet with the approval of the majority of the members of both Houses.

Bills Are Now Ready.

It is regarded as significant, and indicative of the success of Governor Slaton's administration, that many bills embodying the recommendations and suggestions made in his inaugural address have been prepared and will be introduced and action taken on them during the present session. Several already have been introduced, both in the House and Senate.

It is generally understood, though it has never been officially confirmed, that Governor Slaton will send no more messages to the General Assembly during the present session unless some unforeseen emergency should arise that demands immediate attention. He has given his views on the sort of legislation that is needed, and has often expressed his complete confidence in the ability and the willingness of the Legislature to do what was right and necessary without any prompting from the head of the State Government.

The respect and confidence that Governor Slaton feels in ex-Governor Brown is shown by the fact that almost without exception the men who served the latter during the four years of his incumbency will also hold office during the Slaton administration.

Jesse G. Perry, who has served Governor Brown as private secretary, will fill the same position under Governor Slaton.

Ulm Is Executive Secretary.

Hardy Ulm is also retained as Executive Secretary. The knowledge these men have, gained through their connection with Governor Brown, is expected to be one of inestimable benefit to Governor Slaton during the first few weeks of his incumbency.

That Governor Slaton intends to give all his time to the business of the State and serve them to the utmost of his ability is shown by the fact that though he owns a handsome home on Peachtree Street, and a country home on Peachtree Road, he has moved his family into the ancient executive mansion on Peachtree Street, and will occupy the building as his home during his term as Governor. He took possession of the mansion Saturday afternoon within an hour after his inauguration as Governor of the State.

After a short stay in the reception room of the Governor's office at the capitol, where Governor Slaton and ex-Governor Brown greeted their friends., Governor and Mrs. Slaton and Mrs. W. D. Grant, Mrs. Slaton's mother, were entertained at luncheon by ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown, at the executive mansion. After the luncheon Mr. Brown turned over to Governor Slaton the mansion that had been his home, and with Mrs. Brown boarded a train for Marietta.

Marietta Greets Brown.

They were given a tremendous reception by the citizens of the Cobb County capitol. Practically two-thirds of the population of Marietta, headed by a reception committee of prominent citizens, met them at the depot and welcomed them to the town that had been their home for many years before Mr. Brown became Governor. Mr. and Mrs. Brown plan to spend the coming week in Marietta, and will then retire for the summer to their Cherokee County farm.

Though the inauguration of Governor Slaton was simple, it is not thought that his home life will follow the same plan. Mrs. Slaton is recognized as one of the most brilliant hostesses in Atlanta, and society folk are all agog over the rumored plans of a brilliant social campaign which it is generally understood Mrs. Slaton will inaugurate as soon as she has completed her establishment as the first lady of the State. An inaugural reception will be held July 2.

The precedent set by Governor Brown and continued by Governor Slaton of eliminating all pomp and display from the inaugural ceremonies has aroused considerable favorable comment throughout the State, especially among the members of the Legislature, and it is probable that Georgia will never see a return to the "brass band" inaugurals of former years. The inauguration of Governor Slaton was, if anything, just a little more simple than the last inauguration of Governor Brown. There was no display of any sort, and the very absence of elaborate ceremony added to the strength and impressiveness of the occasion.

Sweeping Reform in System Of Taxation Urged by Slaton

Laws to aid the finances of Georgia and sweeping reforms of the tax system of the State are stressed in the inaugural message of Governor Slaton.

In part, Governor Slaton said:

Our system is wrong. The Legislature can appropriate what it pleases, and the tax rate remains the same. The Legislator has made himself a favorite with his constituency by voting for every popular appropriations and nothing suffers but the State's credit.

Unless some check be made, an increase of revenue will be of no avail in preventing the financial embarrassment of the State. Under the enthusiasm of the moment one appropriation bill may exhaust it.

More than four-fifths of the States of the Union derive revenue from what is known as an inheritance tax. I am informed that this tax is the subject of least complaint.

This form of tax has been approved by the highest authorities and is one of the easiest borne and subject to fewer hardships than any other. The inheritance tax is to some extent a corrective.

Corporation Taxation.

Prior to the year 1905, many efforts were made to collect an occupation tax from corporations. Governor Terrell, in his message of the year 1906, recommended a tentative privilege tax based on capital stock of $100,000 per year on corporations having a capital of $1,000,000, or over. He anticipated from this source more than $100,000 a year, and thought that such sum could reasonably be expected without a hardship. The State, however, has not received one-half this sum, and during the year 1913 the estimated revenue from this source is $48,000.

I recommend that the maximum occupation tax on corporations having $1,000,000 capital and over be $200 per annum, and the tax on corporations of less capital be adjusted accordingly.

Equalization of taxes, either through the enforcement of present laws, or new correctives, so that each may bear his proportionate burden, would not mean the increase of taxes upon any one now performing his duty, but would rather mean the lightening of his unfair portion of the load. I commend this subject to your attention.

Bonded Debt To Be Refunded.

An additional reason for establishing and maintaining the State's finances on a sound basis is the necessity of making provision for more than one-half of the entire bonded debt of the State, maturing in 1915. This is an imperative duty resting on this Legislature.

No sinking fund was provided by law to retire the bonds aggregating $3,679,000 which are due in 1915. The entire State's debt is $6,452,500, which does not include the obligations to the University, amounting to $291,500, and the landscrip fund of $90,000.

All the debt of $6,452,500 is provided for, or will be provided for, by the sinking fund required to be raised annually until the debt is paid off, except the $3,679,000 which falls due in May and July, 1915.

If refunding bonds were issued in 1915, making the first $100,000 fall due in 1935, then the sinking fund could be made to run continuously and retire each year, until paid, $100,000 of this series of 1915 refunding bonds.

This plan would seem advisable in order to relieve the treasury and the people of the increased burden at this time, unless financial conditions at the time of the sale of the bonds should demand that their redemption begin at an earlier period in order to effectuate their more satisfactory disposition.

Registration of Voters.

We believe the present registration law should be so amended that when a voter has once proven his qualification by registering and being enrolled, he shall remain a registered voter unless disqualified for cause due to himself.

The foregoing extract from the last platform upon which I was elected, expresses a principle which deserves universal acceptance. It contemplates no change of the constitution which provides for the qualification of the voter.

I recommend that the present registration law be amended to correct the injustice indicated. It would always be provided that the voter must have paid his taxes and not subjected himself to any of the disqualifications provided by law.

Highways.

It is needless to impress upon you the importance of our highways. Their value is an asset of the entire State. An intelligent Highway Commission, or Commissioner, clothed with proper authority, could be the means of untold benefit in suggesting proper methods of building the road adapted to the locality, or in solving the problems of engineering which might arise in various sections.

I call your attention to the Western and Atlantic Railroad, the lease of which terminates in 1919. No one, I apprehend, would or should consider its sale, but the problem of its disposition should be considered by a commission with directions to report its recommendations and its reasons therefor.

To delay this matter will mean to put the State at the inexcusable disadvantage of unpreparedness when the time arrives for imperative action.

The Criminal Code.

One of the fundamental purposes of government is the protection of life and safety of the citizen. If the rules of evidence are so shaped as to prevent the discovery of the truth, and if the State is deprived of the means of sifting the facts, the judges and juries are not to be blamed if crimes are allowed to go unpunished.

It is an anomaly that a defendant should take the stand, make any statement that he sees fit, or that his shrewd lawyer has prepared, and being immune from cross-examination, demand that the judge shall charge the jury that they may accept his unsworn statement in preference to all the evidence in the case.

I, therefore, recommend that a law be passed abolishing the defendant's statement, and providing in its place that he be sworn as a witness, if he desires, but his failure to be so sworn be not subject to adverse comment by prosecuting counsel. This is in accordance with current Federal and State law.

The legislation in Georgia against carrying concealed weapons has in recent years been conspicuous. It has been suggested by the law of self-preservation. Daily we read of men who have shot others, and have been acquitted on the old statement that the deceased threw his hand on his hip pocket, and the defendant shot in fear of his life. When searched, the dead man was found generally unarmed.

If the carrying of concealed weapons were made a felony, subject to be reduced to a misdemeanor by either judge or jury, the deterrent effect of such a law would be the saving of many a life. I earnestly recommend to you the consideration of this question.

Banking Laws.

The banks of a State perform public functions, and as such are properly subjected to governmental supervision. The bankers of the State, with the desire of maintaining a high standard of responsibility and of affording guarantees against improvident management, that imperil the money of the people, recommend legislation looking to the accomplishment of these objects. I commend this subject as one worthy of your serious consideration.

My predecessors have recommended the creation of the position of State Auditor, and in this recommendation I heartily concur. His services could be utilized in checking the cost of new buildings for which requests may be made by the various institutions. Those who have served on the appropriations committees are aware of the inadequate facilities of the State in arriving at the amount of the necessary expenditures.

The Constitution.

The Constitution is the expression of the supreme law of the land. It can only be changed by the people speaking in their sovereign capacity. In order that they may vote intelligently on any proposition it is essential that they understand it. I recommend that in proposing Constitutional amendments you plainly indicate the proposition to the voter in such language that he may understand the meaning of the question submitted.

My predecessor has called attention to the fact that some of the agricultural schools are well attended, while others receive little patronage, whether due to the matter of location or lack of interest, or from what cause, I am unable to say. Each obtains the same appropriation from the State for maintenance. I recommend that you investigate their condition, and apply the proper remedies.

Slaton is Inaugurated With Simple Ceremonies.

With ceremonies that gained in strength and impressiveness through their very simplicity, John Marshall Slaton to-day became Governor of the State of Georgia, succeeding Joseph M. Brown. The oath of office was administered by Judge William H. Fish, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, at 12:02 o'clock.

Governor Slaton was inducted into office in the presence of a brilliant assemblage of Georgia men and women, including his own and the retiring Governor's family and intimate friends, members of the State Legislature and prominent jurists. For the first time in the history of the State the United States was represented by Judge William T. Newman and Judge Don A. Pardee, of the Federal Court. They occupied seats directly in front of the Speaker's stand.

Galleries and the floor of the House were filled with spectators. By 10 o'clock virtually every seat in the visitors' gallery was taken and room had been provided for a large number on the floor. In the corridors another crowd, unable to gain entrance into the hall, waited patiently for a glimpse of the new executive.

Joint Session Held.

Neither the House nor the Senate transacted any business, convening at 11 o'clock and immediately taking a recess. At 11:45 o'clock both Houses again convened, and the Senate at once adjourned and marched to the House, where members took seats in a semi-circle about the speaker's stand. In the front row of seats about the speakers' stand sat the intimate friends and relatives of Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton. Twenty-eight chairs had been reserved for members of Governor Slaton's family and eight for the family and friends of Governor Brown.

In Governor Slaton's party were Major William F. Slaton, father of the Governor; Mrs. John M. Slaton, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Slaton, Justice and Mrs. S. C. Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Waldo, Mrs. W. H. Blanchard, Mrs. W. D. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Grant, John M. Slaton, Jr., W. F. Slaton, Jr., Slaton Waldo, Albie Waldo, William D. Grant, Miss Margaret Grant, James Jackson Slaton, Mr. and Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Phillips and Miss Robinson. In Governor Brown's party were Mrs. Joseph M. Brown, Miss Cora Brown, Charles Brown, Miss Sally Brown, Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Connolly, Mrs. Frances Connolly and Thomas W. Connolly.

Governor Brown Receives Friends.

Governor Brown arrived at the Capitol shortly before 11 o'clock, and went at once into his private office, where he received a number of friends and visitors.

Governor-elect Slaton drove up in his automobile to the Washington Street entrance of the Capitol, accompanied by Mrs. Slaton and his father, Major William F. Slaton. They proceeded to the reception room of the Governor's office, where the inaugural procession formed.

Promptly at 11:45 o'clock Speaker Burwell called the House to order, and immediately thereafter members of the Senate arrived.

The inaugural procession moved from the Governor's office on the first floor. The procession was led by Governor-elect Slaton and Governor Brown. After them came ex-Governor Henry D. McDaniel, and then followed the Justices of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, the Federal Judges, the State House officers, the members of the joint legislative committee on inauguration, and the immediate families of Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton.

Governor Slaton Presented.

Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton took their places on the Speaker's stand, the first standing to the left of Senator Randolph Anderson and Speaker Burwell and the latter to the right. Rev. James B. Robbins, of the Trinity Methodist Church, opened the ceremonies with prayer, in which he invoked Divine aid for Governor Slaton in the conduct of the agairs of the State.

Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, presented Governor-elect Slaton to the people of Georgia and the Legislature, and immediately thereafter Justice Fish administered the oath of office. In a speech expressing great confidence in the ability of the incoming executive, Governor Brown presented Governor Slaton with the Great Seal of the State of Georgia.

After the inaugural ceremonies Governor and Mrs. Slaton and ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown lunched at the Executive Mansion. Ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown retired to their farm near Marietta, and Governor Slaton took possession of the mansion in the afternoon.

Church Bars Wedding And Girl Files Suit

Breach of Promise Action Started, Though Both Parties Declare They Are Ready for Ceremony.

ATCHISON, KANS., June 28.—Although both parties to a $25,000 breach of marriage contract suit filed here recently say they are willing to wed, the suit will go on.

Miss Mary Falk, of Purcell, alleges that she entered into a verbal contract to marry William Burke, of Troy, a few months ago.

Church officers say they will not marry Burke because he is unable to procure a sworn statement from his mother in Ireland certifying to the time of his baptism in the Catholic Church. Burke says he will marry Miss Mary Falk any time, and, in her petition for the suit Miss Falk says she is still willing to marry Burke.

But as a priest will not marry them, as both are unwilling to forsake their religion, Miss Falk says she can not consistently dismiss the suit, although she still loves Burke. Miss Falk's petition alleges that Burke is wealthy.

Atlanta Medical Schools Unite to Make Big College

National Recognition Will Be Obtained Through Merger—Officers and Faculty of Institution Are Unanimous.

A union of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Atlanta Medical College has been effected, and as a result an institution to be known as the Atlanta Medical College has been formed. Details of the consolidation were announced Saturday by representative committees from both colleges.

Ambitious plans for the new college are outlined. The immediate effect of the consolidation will be the placing of the Atlanta Medical College in Class A by the American Medical Association. It renders the newly formed college eligible to membership in the Association of American Medical Colleges, admitting its graduates to practice anywhere in the world. Its doors open with the new college year in September.

The consolidation will force the abandonment of the property of the Atlanta School of Medicine on Luckie and Bartow Streets and the establishment of a considerable plant in connection with the present equipment of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons on Butler and Armstrong Streets.

Officers Are Announced.

The new college will be officered by W. S. Elkin, dean, and W. F. Westmoreland, president, of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons, and by two officers to be nominated by the Atlanta School of Medicine.

All these plans were announced by a committee from the Atlanta School of Medicine, consisting of George H. Noble, L. C. Fischer and Edward G. Jones, and a committee from the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons, whose members are W. S. Elkin, W. F. Westmoreland and C. W. Strickler.

Consideration of the proposition has been under way for some time, stated the committee members.

"It has been the one object of these deliberations," they announced, "to organize an institution of dignity and of permanent promise, whose graduates will receive general recognition throughout the United States—an institution so constituted as to make it a real public asset, and so conducted as to expect and to deserve the heartiest popular commendation."

So complete have been the preliminary deliberations that before word of the union had been breathed every plan was worked out, even to the appointment of a faculty and of a board of trustees.

The faculty proper will consist of the following physicians:

Department of Medicine—W. S. Kendrick, C. W. Strickler, R. T. Dorsey, J. C. Johnson, J. C. Olmsted, E. C. Thrash, E. B. Block, C. E. Boynton, L. B. Clarke, George M. Niles, L. M. Gaines, S. R. Roberts and B. Wolff.

Department of Surgery—W. F. Westmoreland, F. W. McRae, E. G. Jones, W. S. Goldsmith, F. K. Boland, J. L. Campbell, L. C. Fischer, M. Hoke and A. L. Fowler.

Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology—George H. Noble, W. S. Elkin, E. C. Davis and S. T. Barnett.

Department of Materia Medica and Therapeutics—M. M. Hull, L. B. Clarke (with other salaried associates).

Department of Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat—F. P. Calhoun, Dunbar Roy and J. M. Crawford.

Department of Physiology—George Bachman (with other salaried associates).

Department of Anatomy—J. W. Papez (with other salaried associates).

Department of Pathology—John Funke (with other salaried associates).

Department of Chemistry—Edgar Everhart (with other salaried associates).

Associate Faculty Not Named.

The associate faculty has not yet been completed. It will embrace the names of 50 or 75 additional physicians of prominence in the city.

The probable board of trustees of the Atlanta Medical College will be Reuben R. Arnold, H. M. Dorsey, Judge George Hillyer, G. S. Lowndes, E W. Martin, F. J. Paxon, Judge T. P. Westmoreland, H. H. Cabaniss, John J. Eagan, John H. James, H. J. Lowry, Wilmer L. Moore, J. Carroll Payne, C. E. Currier, T. A. Hammond, Marion M. Jackson, R. F. Maddox, Bishop C. K. Nelson, J. S. Prather and W. S. Witham.

The union of the two colleges is significant as a historical event. The name of the first medical college founded in Atlanta was that of the consolidated school—the Atlanta Medical College. This institution was formed in 1854, was suspended during the war and its building used as a hospital. It was merged in 1898 with the Southern Medical College, which was organized in 1878, to form the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The Atlanta School of Medicine was organized 1905. Both the colleges erected new buildings in 1906, Andrew Carnegie having given $25,000 and Dr. A. W. Calhoun $15,000 to the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons for this purpose, other citizens giving various sums. The Atlanta School of Medicine has also operated a hospital in connection with the college.

Sell Luckie Property.

It is the present plan to put on sale the Luckie Street property of the Atlanta School of Medicine, and to provide for the college work to be carried on entirely at the Butler Street plant, ample room being there for additional buildings and extensions. The proximity of the Grady Hospital is an additional reason for transferring everything to that locality.

The total enrollment in the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons last session was 334, and in the Atlanta School of Medicine 218. The announcement by the joint committee declares:

"It will not be the future intention to increase the enrollment so much as to elevate the standard of professional instruction. After January, 1914, one or more years of work in a literary college will be required for entrance, the minimum requirement this fall being a high school education."

Committee Tells Hopes.

The committee, in a statement to the public, tells of its purposes and hopes, saying:

"The recent awakening of the public mind to a knowledge of the past shortcomings of medical education, the evident cordial interest in plans, wherever launched, to invest medical education with a degree of excellence which will protect the public as it ought to be protected; the late tendency of private philanthropy to recognize properly organized medical colleges as deserving of its bounty; the recognition promised abroad to the proposed institution, which recognition could not have been obtained as long as the colleges remained separate; the strategic advantages of Atlanta as the site for a medical college of superlative merit; the excellence of the professional talent in the city; the immense momentum implied in a united instead of a divided professional energy—all these and other considerations alike of sentiment and of common sense, have seemed to us to constitute a responsibility which it would discredit us to neglect, and an opportunity which it would distinguish us to embrace."

MOVE BEATEN FOR FREE WOOL GOODS

Clothing Duty Under New Tariff Schedule Will Be From 20 to 35 Per Cent.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The question of dutiable wool manufactures in the tariff bill was raised in the Senate Democratic caucus to-day and brought a lengthy debate. Senator Chamberlain, of Oregon, favored the free listing of these commodities, arguing this was only fair to the public and the manufacturers with raw wool on the free list.

The goods affected are stockings, socks and blankets, women's and children's dress goods, ready-made clothing and other articles of wearing apparel. Ad valorem rates, ranging from 20 per cent on stockings to 35 per cent on ready-made clothing are in the bill as reported to the caucus.

At the recess of the caucus Senator Simmons announced that the proposition to free list wool manufactures was beaten by a close vote.

"We expect to finish the hemp, silk, paper and sundries schedules to-night," said Senator Simmons, "and take up the administrative and income tax features of the Underwood bill Monday."

PUPS AND CHICKS SWAPPED.

RAVENNA, OHIO, June 28.—A fair exchange that satisfied both swappers was pulled off here when a Scotch collie transferred her litter of seven puppies to a Barred Rock hen for her brood of ten chicks.

FLAGLER WILL UNCHANGED AND RELATIVE'S HINTS OF A CONSPIRACY FALL

Codicils Show That Millionaire Railroad King Left Only Son With but Small Share of His Fortune. Bulk of Wealth Held in Trust.

By TARLETON COLLIER.

WEST PALM BEACH, June 28.—While a number of the charges made by Amasa Flagler, of California, regarding strange circumstances surrounding the death of Henry M. Flagler to-day are found to be substantial, the principal accusations that codicils were added to the Flagler will, completely changing its effect, and that the dying man was given insufficient medical attention appear to fall without support.

Seven codicils to the will are not significant. Investigation into the charges by Amasa Flagler that dark work accompanied the end of his kinsman was conducted by The Sunday American. The stories of the California man that Henry M. Flagler was kept in deep seclusion until the end; that visitors, including himself, were refused admittance; that the most rigid privacy shrouded every detail of the railroad king's illness—all are found to possess a substantial basis of fact.

Palm Beach, deserted, boarded up, uncanny in its summer desotation, today furnishes the setting for a belated story of tragedy—the tragedy in the death of Henry M. Flagler, the Florida railroad king, who died May 20, 84 years old, his brain worn out.

Built Empire;
Dies in Seclusion.

The story is how a man who had built an empire came to die in seclusion on a deserted island, attended by unskilled nurses, denied to visitors—and some of them his kinsmen—and with never a word given out as to his condition, from time to time.

Amasa P. Flagler, of California, who says he is the closest male relative of Henry M. Flagler, except for Harry Harkness Flagler, a son, came to Palm Beach while the financier was dying, and was refused a sight of him. To-day he is talking freely to newspaper men, hinting at mystery in the death of Henry M. Flagler, charging that the great railroad man was not given the proper treatment or care, and that Mrs. Flagler, J. B. Parrott and Dr. W. R. Keenan, the three who were practically alone with him toward the end, and who, he points out, were the beneficiaries under the will, kept visitors away purposely.

Amasa P. Flagler, according to the variety of opinions maintained by residents of Palm Beach, is anything from a faker to a justly aggrieved person. The fact remains, however, revealed as a result of investigations by The Sunday American, that Henry M. Flagler died in loneliness and in enforced seclusion.

He died in a small room of a frame cottage on the Atlantic beach, to which he had been moved some time before the end. From one window is to be seen "The Breakers," his own great hotel. It has been locked and deserted since March. Through the other window there is the sight of a stretch of parched grass, the beach and the ocean.

George Conway, a boy who waited on Mr. Flagler during his illness, said to-day that the dying man kept his eyes always on the ocean.

"He loved it," said Conway. "One time, not long before the end, he said to me: 'George, there is the greatest thing in the world,' pointing out at the sea. 'If there ever comes a time when you would be proud of yourself and of what you have done, think about that ocean. There is something greater, more wonderful than anything a man can ever make or become. Railroads and cities are nothing.' But a lot of the times he was not conscious to what went on."

Mr. Flagler was moved to the beach cottage from his mansion, "Whitehall," when summer began to set in at Palm Beach. He was moved at the combined orders of his physician, Dr. W. R. Keenan, and Mrs. Flagler. Dr. Keenan is Mrs. Flagler's brother. Because has was moved Amasa P. Flagler finds the basis for a denunciation of those who took care of him, declaring that his kinsman was taken to the empty beach cottage that he might be more securely isolated.

Joe Jefferson Died
In Same Cottage.

Investigation reveals that many of the statements made by Amasa P. Flagler in his interviews regarding the death of his relative are exaggerations. He is said to have declared that the beach cottage in which Henry M. Flagler died was old and dilapidated and isolated from the community. It is, however, "The Nautilus," one of a colony of seven cottages on the beach, and is within 200 feet of "The Breakers." It is leased for $5,000 a season of three months to the winter visitors from the North, and last season was occupied by "Fingy" Conners, the Buffalo politician. Joseph Jefferson, the actor, according to the beach traditions, died in the same cottage.

Local physicians, although none of them was called in to assist Dr. Keenan and Dr. Castleberry, watched the case as well as possible in view of the privacy attached to it. Several to-day said that they would have indorsed the move from Whitehall to the beach cottage, considering more desirable the sea breeze and the relief from the sultriness that is always the lot of Whitehall in the early summer.

West Palm Beach is divided into two hostile camps on the question of the treatment of Henry M. Flagler, many contending that the charges of a deliberate isolation and of inadequate care of the dying man may be substantiated by a chain of circumstances, and others laughing at the scandal that Amasa Flagler has sprung.

Trained Nurses
Succeeded by Boy.

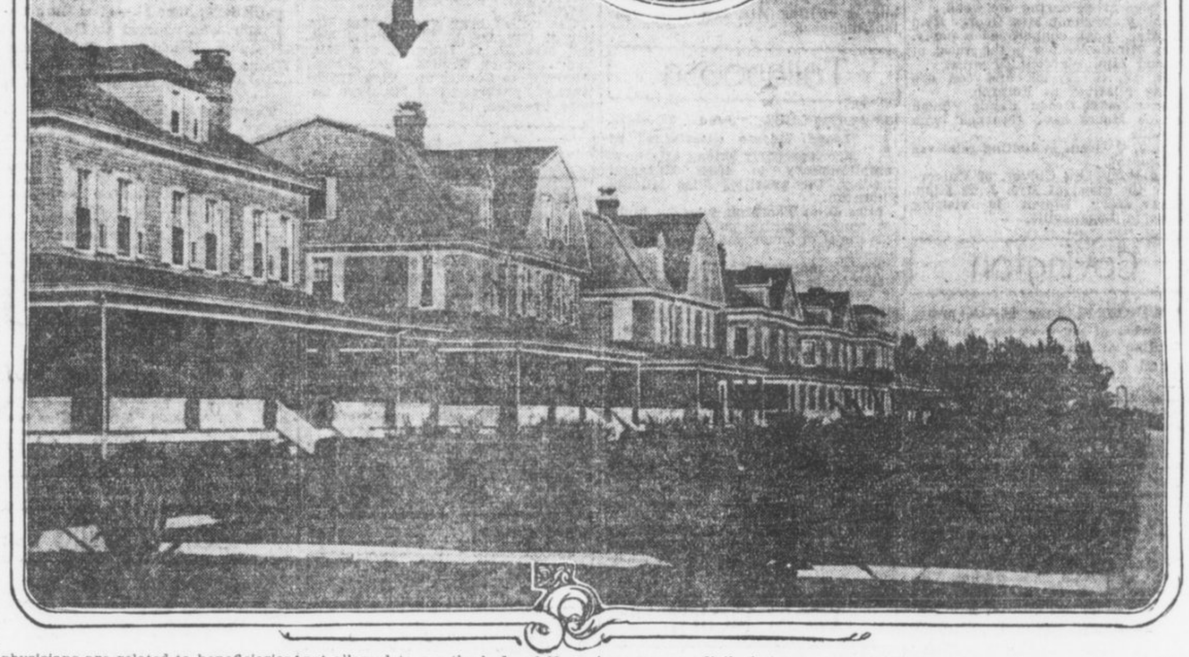
The rapid decline of the railroad king began about March 1, when, already ill, he was injured by a fall in the reception hall of "Whitehall." He took to bed at that time, and never left it until the day of his death, May 20. After several weeks in his room at "Whitehall," he was moved to the beach cottage.

Trained nurses who had been engaged were turned away, to be succeeded by George Conway, a young English boy, who is the nephew of Mrs. Cooper, the housekeeper at "Whitehall," and by Tom Lynch, a young man employed on the estate. Conway watched by day, and the other by night.

Conway is one of the few Flagler employees remaining on deserted Palm Beach. To-day he said the nurses were discharged because they could not manage the sick man so well as could he and the other boy, of whom Mr. Flagler was fond. The nurses, he continued, did not get on well with the Doctor, either.

Dr. Keenan, the brother of Mrs. Flagler, for years house physician at "The Breakers," and more recently at the "Royal Ponciana" as well, attended Mr. Flagler. To aid him, Dr. Castleberry, a guest in the winter hotel, from Harrisburg, Pa., remained. Dr. Castleberry is a kinsman of Mrs.

AMASA FLAGLER, who hinted at plot to influence Henry M. Flagler in making will, is shown in the top picture, while in the lower photograph the arrow indicates the cottage in which the railroad magnate died. This cottage was referred to as a "lonely hut" by Amasa Flagler in his first statements.



physicians are related to beneficiaries under Flagler's will, and that one, Dr. Keenan, is himself a beneficiary. Amasa Flagler has drawn evidence of irregular conduct in the care of Henry M. Flagler.

Little Told
From Bedside.

During the period of the financier's illness little definite news came from his bedside. Newspaper men of West Palm Beach and of Jacksonville declare that no bulletins were issued, and that inquiries were met always with indefiniteness.

For weeks Flagler lay thus. No one was admitted. The gossip of servants has lingered in West Palm Beach, declaring that the dying man in his delirium called frequently for his son, and frequently also for William Fremd, his gardener. The son, Harry Harkness Flagler, who has been estranged from his father for 21 years, was not summoned until by Amasa P. Flagler. Fremd, another for whom Mr. Flagler called, lived on the grounds, within a half a mile of the cottage, but was never taken to the sick room.

The same gossip has recorded that J. A. McDonald, of Miami, an old friend of Mr. Flagler, and Father McLoughlin, a Catholic priest of Miami, were others who could not see the sick man.

Along toward the end came Amasa Flagler. According to his own story, he had sent a telegram to herald his visit. Reaching Palm Beach, he was informed that he could not see the sick man. He declares that he virtually was ordered from the grounds by J. B. Parrott, vice president and general manager of Flagler's railroad, who became president by the express terms of the Flagler will.

Incensed, Amasa Flagler went to the citizens of West Palm Beach with his story. He had telegraphed ahead for a room in "The Breakers," but these were denied him. "The Breakers," he was informed, was closed for the season.

Telegram Sent To Flagler's Son.

Amasa Flagler found quarters in "The Gables," a less pretentious hotel in West Palm Beach, whose proprietor, R. C. McGriff, listened to his story and to this day believes in him. Amasa Flagler was the first to send a telegram to Harry Harkness Flagler.

"Your father is calling for you," is the message he sent.

According to the statement to McGriff, Parrott, over in Palm Beach, heard that Harry Flagler was coming to his father's side, and came across to "The Gables" to engage a room and bath for the financier's son. There was no room for Harry Flagler, either, it seems, on Palm Beach.

No room and bath was available in McGriff's establishment, and Amasa Flagler offered to give up his suite to Harry Harkness Flagler. But Harry Flagler, when he arrived, stayed with an old friend in the town. He arrived in time to see his father alive.

Amasa Flagler declares that he was not allowed to see the body of Henry M. Flagler after death. The Tropical Sun, the daily paper of West Palm Beach, bears a story of how Amasa Flagler was leaving the town, full of wrath at his treatment. At the station, according to the story, he could obtain no information about his trains.

The employees at the railroad station, the Flagler railroad station, would tell him nothing. He asked information regarding a special train, and was met with an indefinite answer. Finally, he called a boy and commissioned him to obtain the information. The boy did. Upon his return with the message, Mr. Flagler is said to have given him $50.

"You are the only person connected with this road who has exhibited the slightest consideration or courtesy toward me," he told the boy, according to the story.

Undertaker Imported
To Conduct Funeral.

The body of the dead millionaire was taken in hand by an undertaker imported from Miami. Undertaker McGinley, in West Palm Beach, was not consulted. Citizens of the town believe this to be the case because Henry M. Flagler and the city of West Palm Beach had little in common. The two have been antagonistic of late years, in spite of the work of development which Flagler has done for East Florida, and a number of local ordinances and regulations were passed inimical to the Flagler interests.

Residents of West Palm Beach now declare that the feeling that grew up was not personal to Flagler himself, but was occasioned by actions of other officials of the Florida East Coast Railroad.

Flagler's funeral was held in St. Augustine, and his body placed in an elaborate vault which he had built in connection with the Memorial Presbyterian Church. St. Augustine he made his home, it is said here, because he was repelled by the attitude of West Palm Beach citizens.

Makes Charges Against Beneficiaries.

According to his story, Amasa Flagler was denied a part in the funeral. He went on his way North, where he has made his sensational charges that Mrs. Flagler, Dr. Keenan and J. B. Parrott kept the dying financier secluded, denying all admission that they might maintain an influence over him.

The three are the principal beneficiaries under the will, and it is Amasa's inference that because they were with him continually, to the seclusion of others, their claims were made secure. He hints, in his interviews, that codicils to the original Flagler will were made under their domination, cutting out other legatees, particularly Harry Harkness Flagler, the son of the financier.

However, an examination of the will and codicils proves this accusation to be without foundation. There are seven codicils, but none materially effective.

The documents are in the court house in St. Augustine, where they have reposed since being made. The original will was drafted February 1, 1902, and names W. H. Beardsley, of New York; Dr. William R. Keenan, of Lockport, N. Y., the physician who was with him at his death, and J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, another of the little party with him most of the time during his last illness, as his executors and trustees. His wife, Mrs. Mary Lillie Flagler, he names as the residuary legatee, and his son Harry Harkness Flagler, he cut off with the relatively small legacy of 5,000 shares of Standard Oil stock. This, at the time of Flagler's death, was worth $642 a share.

Declares Son Didn't Show Filial Regard.

"I have already given my son securities sufficient to bring him an income of $75,000 a year," the will stated. "My son has not shown for me the filial regard that would make me inclined to do more for him than is done by this item of my will."

No beneficiary will profit by the will, however, for at least five years. By its terms, a trust is created, the testator declaring:

"It is my intention in the future to foster, protect and properly develop such properties; and to provide against my decease while such properties are in process of development, and to relieve my beloved wife from the immediate cares and responsibilities of so varied and extensive interests, I hereby declare a trust for all my properties. From this trust is excepted $60,000 to the Stetson University and $20,000 to the Florida Agricultural College for the construction of a gymnasium.

The trust is to last five years, according to the will, and if the Florida East Coast Railway, or the Florida East Coast Hotel Company, at that time should require financial aid, then it is to continue as long as is necessary. Until the expiration of trust, Mrs. Flagler is to receive $100,000 a year and the Memorial Presbyterian Church of St. Augustine $3,000 a year.

Many Legacies

Other legatees mentioned in the original will are: To receive $5,000, Miss Annie C. McKay, Mrs. Ella Green, Stephen A. Brave, John P. Beckwith, William H. Chamblliss, Ed J. Triay, George W. Wilson, Bernard O'Brien, his coachman; George Holland, his butler, and Ida Scheiffer, his housekeeper; to receive $10,000, James A. McGuire, R. T. Goff, John Anderson, Fred Sterry, Joseph D. Price, Henry W. Merrill, J. A. McDonald, William H. Beardsley and Jasper G. Salter; to J. E. Ingraham, $20,000; to J. R. Parrott, $100,000; to C. D. Boice and L. C. Hayes, $2,500; to the Florida Agricultural College, $50,000; to the John B. Stetson University, $40,000; to Hamilton College, New York, $100,000; to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society, $75,000.

By the terms of the will J. R. Parrott is to continue in the same relation to the Flagler interests as he maintained during the lifetime of the testator.

There are seven codicils to the will, made, respectively, February 17, 1903; April 28, 1904; January 8, 1906; April 7, 1908; December 22, 1910; January 10, 1912, and September 13, 1912.

It is these, Amasa Flagler declares, which are damaging to the original document, but none of them seem materially to affect it. The first codicil gives his trustees the power to complete the southern extension of the Florida East Coast Railroad, which he denied them in the will.

The second codicil defines the meaning of the term "expiration of trust," which occurred frequently in the will, and provides that if Harry Harkness Flagler is not living at the end of the "expiration of trust" then the 5,000 shares of oil stock lapse to the estate. In this codicil also he revoked the legacies of $80,000 to the Florida University and $40,000 to the John B. Stetson University, and provided for bequests of $10,000 to J. P. Greaves, Robert Murray and Leland Sterry, and giving W. H. Beardsley $50,000 instead of $10,000. If he survived his wife, Flagler specified in this codicil, the residue of his estate is to be divided among Roy H. York, W. L. Harkness and Mrs. John D. McLennan, of Cleveland; W. R. Keenan, Jr., J. K. Wise and Sarah G. Keenan, of Wilmington; J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, and W. H. Beardsley, of New York.

No Increase for Son's Share of Estate.

The third codicil announces that upon consideration the testator found incorrect the statement in the will that he had given his son securities netting $75,000 a year. However, he said, this mistake did not warrant an increase in the legacy to Harry Harkness Flagler.

The codicil also provides for a legacy of $10,000 to Harry, E. Bemis, and empowers his trustees to borrow money for the extension of his railroad to Key West.

Codicil four specifies that the smaller legatees are not to receive the amounts provided unless at the time of his death they are in the employ of the Flagler railroad or hotel interests.

Codicil five empowers his trustees to continue to pay to Horace H. Flagler, of St. Augustine, the dividends on 50 shares of Standard Oil stock. It provides, too, that the legacy to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society apply only if the church remain in the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.

Codicil six makes provision for the maintenance of his mausoleum by the expenditure of a portion of the income from the $75,000 which he bequeathed to the church in St. Augustine.

The last codicil, drafted September 13, 1912, provides that the legacy of 5,000 shares of oil stock to his son be effective in spite of the change in the form of Standard Oil stock. This was drafted soon after the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company, apparently looking to safe-guarding Harry Harkness Flagler against losing his inheritance on technical grounds. The last provision is the revocation of his previous bequest to Horace H. Flagler, substituting therefor an annuity of $2,000.

No resident of West Palm Beach or its vicinity was mentioned in the will, although common gossip had named several as likely legatees.

Flagler's Isolation
Necessary, Says Doctor.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Dr. Owen Kenan, brother of Mrs. Henry M. Flagler, to-day issued a vigorous denial of the charges of Amasa Plummer Flagler regarding the circumstances which surrounded the death of his patient at West Palm Beach.

"There isn't a word of truth in the whole thing," he said. "The only explantation is that these so-called 'charges' originated in the brain of some cunning adventurer with an ax to grind. Publication of these unfounded rumors have annoyed us greatly, and Mrs. Flagler is in no condition to be interviewed, so that I can speak for her.

"So far as I can make out, the greatest objection to conditions this Amasa Flagler found at the Beach was the isolation of the sick man. That was natural. Mr. Flagler was old, his illness was serious and he needed quiet. The cottage in which he died is not dilapidated. It rents for an enormous sum every season, and some prominent Boston society people had it last winter.

"If Amasa Flagler's object is to induce Harry H. Flagler to contest the will it will fail. Harry Flagler is a gentleman, although he had not spoken to his father but once in the last seventeen years. He was left $5,000,000 and each of his children gets $4,000,000. That seems to me to be eminently fair.

"As to our conduct of the case, Dr. Castlebury and I did the best we could. Henry M. Flagler had as tender and loving care as any man ever had up to the moment of his death. There was no secrecy other than that was absolutely necessary, and nothing to be concealed."

HEIRS TO RICHES LEFT BY TITANIC VICTIM SOUGHT

J. Montague Smart, Prominent Business Man, Left Fortune. No Trace of Beneficiaries.

NEW YORK, June 28.—During his active life J. Montgomery Smart was a man of mystery. Now that his bones lie in the sunken Titanic, his past is a greater puzzle than ever, and so far it is unsolved. Usually when a man dies, even though he may have been of distinction, his hidden history is buried with him. But Smart was a man of wealth, and it became necessary to try to discover vital facts of his intimate personal life.

Thus began a world-wide search that has served only to make the case of J. Montgomery Smart all the stranger. He was an honored and successful man of business, whose transactions were international in scope, even extending from New York to Australia.

Necessary to Find Heirs.

Having left money, it became necessary to find his heirs. It was remembered that this man of silence never described his family. It was known that he had been married and that his wife had died ten years before. Vague words dropped here and there were gathered and it became apparent that Smart had two children, a boy of 20 and a girl of 18.

But no one could be found who had any definite idea of their whereabouts.

Into three countries of Europe the filaments of inquiry extended. The American consuls of many ports were asked to aid in the hunt. That was in May, 1912.

One fact was discovered in the course of the Belgian hunt. It was asserted that the children were in charge of a Mrs. Cook, who was a great friend of Mrs. Smart, and that Smart was paying her liberally to care for them. But who was Mrs. Cook? Her identity was also impossible to discover, and the hunt settled down into a hope that the guardian would write for funds, thus solving the riddle. But she has been swallowed in silence.

Had Many Acquaintances.

As president of the American Cold Storage and Shipping Company, Smart had made many acquaintances among prominent business men of New York, London, Berlin, Paris and many other cities throughout the world. Many believed that they knew him well. But when the test came, they were surprised to find that only the barest information was obtainable about his personal affairs.

Smart was a hermit in a great city, and he was a hermit in his many voyages and travels in foreign countries.

Husband Will Woo Wife if He's Divorced

Tells Judge He Will Renew Methods of Courting Days if Decree Is Granted.

KANSAS CITY, June 28.—"If my wife succeeds in getting a divorce from me I am going to begin all over with my courting days and try to win back her love," Andrew Mathers said in Judge Johnson's court. "Her charges in this case do not in any way affect my devotion and admiration for her."

Mathers is a wealthy building contractor and lives at 4403 Virginia Avenue. He has been contesting the suit of his wife, Louise Mathers. They were married in 1896 and have three children.

Mrs. Mathers charges that her husband became intoxicated frequently.

Rides Box Car in Boy Garb to Meet Fiance

Victim of Ohio Flood Travels to California on Freight Train to Become Wife.

VENICE, CAL., June 28.—Miss Ethel Johnston, a young woman from Dayton, Ohio, arrived here in begrimed and torn boy's costume to join her fiance. Miss Johnston and J. L. Perry had been sweethearts in Dayton. The youth moved West a short time ago to prepare a home for his sweetheart.

When the flood came Miss Johnston, who was living with her aunt, lost her home, as well as her only relatives. She cut her hair short, donned boys' clothing and struck out with but a few dollars for the coast. She traveled almost the entire distance on freight trains.

Dog Rescues Girl With Dress Aflame

Shepherd Leaps Into Brook and Then Shakes His Dripping Body on Blazing Skirt

NEW YORK, June 28.—The remarkable intelligence and devotion of a Shepherd dog saved Miss Florence Sheldon, of 4 Llewellyn road, Montclair, from serious injury yesterday when her dress was accidentally set on fire.

Unconscious of the smouldering fire, the girl sat on the bank of a brook throwing sticks into the stream. Suddenly the dog began to bark furiously. He dashed into the brook, and returning, threw his dripping body on the now blazing skirt and extinguished the fire. A square foot of the garment was burned.

Mashers Told to Think of Sisters

Pastor Says That Presuming on Feminine Acquaintance Is Greatest Aid to White Slavery.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 28.—"A spendthrift sweetheart and an extravagant wife have ruined many lives," said the Rev. T. W. Stout in a sermon at Calvary Methodist Church. "Young women can help to form high moral standards among the boys by not permitting great expenditures upon themselves."

He illustrated how laziness makes a weak character that falls in the crisis of life by knocking the prop from under a three-legged chair. "White slavery begins with presuming on feminine acquaintance and bold advances to clerks," he said. "It ends in blood money and lost souls. Every young man should ask himself in dealing with girls: 'Suppose my sister were in her place—what would I want done?'"

Skylarkers Mobbed By Throng of Women

Man Falls in Baby Carriage While He Plays on Sidewalk and Starts Small lot.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Several hundred persons, most of them women attacked Frederick Mochson and Raymond Dragoni, last night when one of the men, as a result of skylarking, fell in the baby carriage of the 18-months-old son of Joseph Bilon in front of the Bilon home, at 57 East One Hundred and Eleventh Street.

The baby carriage rolled off the sidewalk. Then the crowd got active. Mochson and Dragoni were dragged in the gutter and kicked and pummelled. Stones and garbage were thrown at them. When the reserves learned what had started the affair they locked up the two men on charges of disorderly conduct.

The elder Grams was a sergeant in Major Thornburg's troop, which was ambushed and almost annihilated while marching from Rawlins to the relief of the Indian agency at Meeker, and he was among those killed.

The relic was discovered in a junk heap in St. Neots, near the town of Elstowe, or Helstowe, where Bunyan lived, by Beagarie's father, about 30 years ago, and was presented by him to his son ten years ago.

Concealing the weapon in a piece of paper she stole upon Principal Marcey as he was engaged in conversation on the street. Without warning she dealt him a blow and continued to apply the lash.

TROOPS TO MAKE CAVALRY RAID OF THE SHENANDOAH

Realistic Advance Next Month Into the Historic Valley May Mean New System.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Troopers at Fort Myer have begun preparations for their 70-mile march into the Shenandoah Valley next month to participate in maneuvers expected to result in reorganization of the mounted forces of the army.

The Shenandoah Valley, where "Phil" Sheridan made his famous ride 50 years ago, has been chosen as the bloodless battle ground for the test. For two months this summer a full brigade of cavalry and a battery of horse artillery will maneuver and "fight" over the red roads, the green hills, and fields near Winchester.

The department has leased a tract of ground one mile broad and two miles long in the heart of the Shenandoah, 70 miles away, and orders were issued to the troops some time ago.

Oglethorpe Troopers on March.

Two regiments of the brigade, those from Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., and Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., must ride 700 dusty miles under a summer sun before they can reach the valley, and they must report July 20. The First Squadron from Fort Myer will have only 70 miles to go, and the horse battery from Fort Riley, Kans., will be sent by rail.

Secretary Garrison will be a frequent spectator. Major General Wood, chief of staff, United States Army, probably will spend much time there, and President Wilson may make the trip.

The necessity for a rehabilitation of the cavalry was disclosed when the general staff some time ago made ambitious plans for the reorganization of the army so as to prepare it for the defense of the country against attack by any great military power. This resulted in the sending to Europe last year of a board of six cavalry officers, who studied the German, Russian, Austro-Hungarian, French and English organizations.

Officers Study Abroad.

Four months were spent abroad by these officers, and since their return they have prepared plans for radical changes in the organization and use of cavalry of the American army.

The tests will take place under the direction of Colonel C. H. Murray, of the Twelfth Cavalry, as Brigadier General E. J. McClernand, the head of the cavalry board, is prohibited from exercising actual command by virtue of his retirement. General McClernand, however, with Lieutenant Colonels J. T. Dickmann and Fred S. Foltz, Major Jesse McI. Carter and Captain Frank Parker, all members of the board which studied the European systems, will be present.

Some of the practical questions to be worked out are:

How large a command can a captain handle successfully?

How many such units can a colonel handle to the best advantage under conditions approximating hostilities?

The new formation of the cavalry into double ranks also will be tried out on a large scale, a practical test by Captain Parker, of the Eleventh Cavalry, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., with an experimental squadron having been pronounced a complete success by General H. L. Scott.

SAVANNAH AND SOUTHERN GEORGIA NEWS

OPPOSITION TO COMMISSION FOR WAYCROSS

Charter Changes, However, Will Be Sought for Metropolis of South Georgia.

WAYCROSS, June 28.—Determined opposition has developed here to any change in the present form of city government that leans toward commission government. The revision of the charter is favored partially because it is recognized that some changes must be made, but when there is any talk of getting an all-time Mayor or giving any one man a lot of power right there kicks begin to appear.

The proposition to get a charter that would give Waycross a combination commission-aldermanic form of government will hardly be approved, although an election may be held to find out just what the majority of people here want.

It is thought that the only changes that will be finally approved will be the creation of a Recorder's Court, the changing in the time for the city election from January to December, and a provision calling for the expenditure of a fixed sum annually in permanent improvements, as well as an increased appropriation for city schools.

The bill calling for these changes will be submitted to an open meeting at the Board of Trade next week by a charter committee of thirty. However, if City Council at Tuesday night's meeting calls an election to pass on the commission government plan it is probable that no bill will be perfected until after the election is held.

At War on Minors Playing Billiards

Cordele Police Chief Probing Alleged Violations of New City Ordinance.

CORDELE, June 28.—Chief Sumner, of the Cordele police force, has begun a thorough probe into the alleged violation of an ordinance recently passed by the City Council regulating pool and billiard parlors. The officer has been informed that notwithstanding the ordinance making it unlawful, the persons in charge of such places have been allowing minors not only to enter their parlors, but to engage in games there without the written permission of their parents.

Visiting these parlors, the Police Chief demanded the managers produce all permissions from parents they had received since the ordinance was passed. It developed that several boys, who, it is claimed, have participated in such games, had not secured permission from their parents. The law makes the managers responsible.

Cordele Citizens Fight School Site

Secure Temporary Injunction Against Bond Commission to Prevent Purchase of Property.

CORDELE, June 28.—Citizens of Northern Heights have risen up to war upon the Bond Commission of Cordele in opposition to the site purchased for a ward school for that section of the city.

Injunction proceedings have been filed against the commissioners and also against parties owning the site, preventing them from making over deeds to the commission. Judge W. F. George, of the Superior Court, has granted temporary restraining orders.

The officials claim that they have already given checks for $2,500 for the property, in which case, claim the citizens, they are personally responsible, no deeds having been given. It is alleged that desirable sites have been offered at much less cost and that politics has governed the commission's actions.

Fined $50 Because He Left Blinds Open

Cordele Man Arrested When Women Neighbors Object to Public Disrobing.

CORDELE, June 28.—On the accusation of several prominent women who lived near his boarding place that C. W. Fuller, a well-known traveling man, threw open the blinds to the windows of his room and completely disrobed in view of the public, he has been placed under arrest.

When arraigned before Mayor Harder on the charge of disorderly conduct, Fuller pleaded guilty, a fine of $50 being imposed upon him. However, Fuller asserted that he neglected to close the blinds when he began to undress, and that he had no intention whatever of offending his neighbors.

'Wild Bill' Clark to Run Waycross Team

Former Columbia Sally League Manager Slated to Direct Empire Organization.

WAYCROSS, June 28.—That "Wild Bill" Clark will be made manager of the Waycross team of the Empire League next week is reported here to-day. He was at one time manager for the Columbia South Atlantic team, and is regarded as a very capable man. There has been much dissatisfaction here since the change in managers two weeks ago, fans feeling that they were not getting what they were entitled to.

With the second half of the Empire season opening Monday, Waycross wants to start off in the very best shape possible, and it is believed with "Wild Bill" at the helm the pennant winner in the Empire will have to get around Waycross. Hawkins, formerly of Jacksonville, is now manager.

Watermelons From Georgia Going North

Hundreds of Carloads Being Shipped From Southern Part of State.

THOMASVILLE, June 28.—The Georgia watermelon has the right of way in this section just now. Hundreds of carloads of this luscious product of South Georgia have been rushed to the markets in the North and West this week to satisfy the yearnings of residents of those sections.

The melon crop of South Florida is said to be short this season, which accounts for the fact that such good prices have been received by the shippers from this section.

The watermelon plays a prominent part in the celebration of the "Glorious Fourth," also, and the supply from the South this year will be of the best, as seldom have the melons been finer or sweeter.

BITTEN BY PET DOG; FEARS HYDROPHOBIA

Thomasville After Empire League Flag

Second Half of Season Opens Monday With Brunswick—Fans Support Team.

THOMASVILLE, June 28.—The second half of the Empire State League season opens here Monday afternoon with Brunswick, and there will be a big crowd out to see the game. Thomasville goes into the second half with the determination to win, and with the great improvement made of late in the team everybody here is banking largely upon coming out with the pennant this time. The boys are playing fine ball now and the team is being strengthened.

Nowhere in the league has better support been given than here, and, win or lose, everybody goes to the games. Even when the bad losing streak struck the team for a while the fans stood by it and feel now that they are being repaid for their confidence.

GEORGIA MELON PRICES DROP $100 A CAR IN EAST

VALDOSTA, June 28.—The melon and cantaloupe growers of Lowndes County will get from $75,000 to $100,000 for the 1913 crop despite the slump in the market to-day. Reports from New York to-day indicate that prices are off about $100 a car for watermelons. This will give the local growers from $75 to $150 a car. The prices have ranged from $150 to $250.

Shipments from here have been unprecedented. The cantaloupe men have received from $500 to $1,000 a car for their cantaloupes, but cantaloupe prices have also slumped to-day.

COURTS DEATH TO ESCAPE LYNCHING

Slayer of Albany Policeman Shot by Officer While Trying to Break Away.

ALBANY, June 28.—John Land, who killed Policeman E. P. Harris here Thursday and who was himself slain after being arrested yesterday, virtually committed suicide to escape lynching, according to Dr. W. L. Davis, County Physician, who to-day told an eyewitness story of Land's death.

Land was shot by Assistant Chief Conaghan as he attacked Robert Palmer and Boyd Barber in a desperate effort to escape, after having been captured at Walters' Crossing, near here. Dr. Davis was in the automobile in which Land was being conveyed and attempted to grab him as Conaghan fired.

It is doubtful if Land would have reached Albany alive, had he peaceably submitted, according to the physician, who said:

"By the time we started with Land there were four automobiles at Walters' Crossing, all loaded down with men, and other automobiles kept coming. Things looked squally. We understood that there was little chance of getting the man to town alive, as we knew almost to a certainty that arrangements were all perfected to take the prisoner from us, if possible, and hang him. I understood that the very tree, even the limb, had been selected by the crowd for the hanging. Automobiles loaded with men were constantly being met by us until there were something like twenty of them, all loaded as full as they would hold."

Land killed Policeman Harris when the officer attempted to arrest him at the instance of Conductor Morrow, of the Atlantic Coast Line, on whose train he came to Albany from Ty Ty. He was an escaped murderer.

EMPIRE LEAGUE HEAD REFUTES "INTERVIEW"

WAYCROSS, June 28.—Oscar Groover, president of the Empire League, denies that he gave out in Valdosta an interview that Waycross had thrown to Cordele the three games played there this week. SAVANNAH BARS COSTLY GOWNS FOR GRADUATES

High School Girls Receive Diplomas, Wearing Frocks Averaging Outlay of $6 to $7.

SAVANNAH, June 28.—Opening with class exercises Monday afternoon, the closing ceremonies of the Savannah High School extended through the week, ending Friday night with commencement.

The features of the class-day program were the class history, prophecy, poem and play, the latter being an unique musical comedy presented by the graduates.

The interest of the male pupils centered in the debate Wednesday morning at the high school between the Mercer and Jackson Societies, the rival literary organizations. The subject was, "Resolved, That the term of the President of the United States should be limited to six years and that he shall be ineligible for re-election." Mercer Society, represented by Arthur Allen and Alex Fawcett, who took the affirmative, won the decision. Jackson Society was represented by Ernest Rogers and Arthur Rosenthal. In the declamation contest the result was reversed, Jackson taking the honors. Rev. W. Moore Scott, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church; Rev. W. L. Pickard, pastor of the First Baptist Church, and Rev. J. M. Glenn, pastor of Grace Methodist Church, were the judges for both contests.

Manual Training Exhibit.

A great many relatives and friends of the students on Wednesday attended the exhibit of work done by the pupils in the manual training drawing and domestic science departments. Many useful articles made in the manual training department were shown, among them being a morris chair, a rowboat, an elaborately constructed writing desk and a motorboat, the latter being the work of two members of the senior class. The drawing exhibit was also extensive, among the collection being free-hand drawings by the girl pupils.

On Thursday morning the Junior Arnold Literary Society composed of girls of the third and fourth grades, held its regular monthly meeting in the girls' study hall. The program consisted of recitations, essays and dialogues.

Graduating Exercises.

The graduation exercises took place Friday evening at the Savannah Theater. The Auditorium was open to the public and was filled to overflowing with the friends of the graduates and the general public. Sydney Lee, the honor graduate, delivered the valedictory. Judge Samuel B. Adams, president of the Board of Education, addressed the graduates and delivered the diplomas. The exercises were under the direction of Professor B. F. Pickett, principal of the high school.

Simple and inexpensive, but constituting the very last word in dainty tastefulness, the frocks worn by the girl members of the senior class were in distinct contrast to the expensive display of gowns presented last year.

Ban on Costly Gowns.

Acting upon the suggestion of Professor Pickett, the Board of Education had placed a ban on extravagant gowns, and the consequence was that the highest priced dress which was worn represented a total outlay, including all trimmings and the cost of making, only $12. Last year there was one graduation gown which cost $100. Every girl in the class was required to furnish Professor Pickett with an itemized statement of the cost of her commencement frock, together with a sample of the cloth from which it was made. The average price of the gowns worn was between $6 and $7. The lowest priced dress cost $3.85. This dress was made at the home of the girl who wore it. The dresses were all of muslin, tulle, lawn, mull, linen and other light summer fabrics entirely appropriate to the occasion, but which called for the expenditure of very little money.

SPECIAL ELECTION FOR NEW SHERIFF NECESSARY

SAVANNAH, June 28.—A Sheriff for Chatham County can not be elected at the same time the election for United States Senator is held. Senator Bacon's election is to be held July 15. It had been expected the date would be about a month later. The County Commissioners have ordered an election for Sheriff, but they are required by law to give twenty days' notice, and the time is too short for that to be done between now and July 15.

LYNCHING PROBE IN AMERICUS TO START MONDAY

Sumter Grand Jury to Investigate Affair—Chief Barrow Dies of Wound.

AMERICUS, June 28.—Interest is intense in the special session of Sumter Superior Court, which will convene here Monday morning at 9 o'clock to investigate the recent lynching of Will Redding, the negro who fatally wounded Chief of Police W. C. Barrow last Saturday night. The people of Americus and Sumter County are eager to know what efforts the Grand Jury will make to investigate the affair and to prosecute the members of the mob.

It is generally recognized that the Grand Jury, which is the same one that served at the recent spring term of the court, is a fearless body, as the indictments returned at that session showed.

In anticipation of the action of the Grand Jury talk concerning the lynching has appreciably diminished. Many who talked freely last Sunday when they thought there would be no Grand Jury investigation have since closed up like clams. Indications are that the investigation may disclose sensational revelations relative to the prominent people who took part in it unless the witnesses summoned fail to tell what they know.

Chief Barrow died at his home here last night at 11 o'clock, after having made a brave fight for life since he was shot down with his own revolver by Redding. The funeral took place this afternoon at 4 o'clock at Oak Grove Cemetery, being attended by one of the largest crowds that has ever witnessed a funeral here. The Masonic ritual was read, Chief Barrow having been a prominent member of that order, and also of the Odd Fellows.

Chief Barrow took a turn for the worse yesterday morning and it became apparent that unless a pronounced rally was made death must follow within a day. His wife, Mrs. Rebecca Barrow, and a number of other relatives were at his bedside.

Daniel, chairman of the health committee, has made this promise to twenty-five butchers and meat dealers, who met in response to his invitation.

The meeting was called to discuss the situation whereby the people of Savannah can get more protection along this line. All agreed that a stricter regulation of the meat business is needed and the most of them pledged their hearty co-operation in an effort to bring about the desired reform.

It was asserted that cows killed on railroads are frequently brought to Savannah and sold as fresh meat.

Trustee Is Named By Quitman Mills

Internal Dissension Said to Have Caused Failure of Atlantic and Gulf Concern.

VALDOSTA, June 28.—The first meeting of creditors of the Atlantic and Gulf Mills was held this afternoon before Referee in Bankruptcy J. F. McCrackin. A number of the creditors from Quitman were present. The mill was organized by the late Frank which manufactured products from sea island cotton and did a very profitable business until internal dissensions arose between stockholders and manager. Lack of co-operation among the owners of the property injured its credit and is said to be responsible for it being placed in bankruptcy.

At the meeting to-day Lane Young, of Quitman, was appointed trustee to dispose of the property. Liabilities are put down at $117,000, while assets are approximately $325,000. The mill was roganized by the late Frank Spain and members of his family are among the large stockholders and creditors.

Indian Girl Grieves For Dead Affinity

Annie Oceola Swallows Poison at Annie Osceola Swallows Poison at Her Life.

SAVANNAH, June 28.—Grief-stricken over the death of the man with whom she was infatuated, Annie Osceola, known also as Annie Winona, an Indian girl, is at the point of death in a local hospital from the effects of permanganate of potassium, taken with suicidal intent. The woman was found stretched on the floor of her room in a semi-conscious condition.

While waiting for assistance, officers and the girl's friends tried to give her temporary relief. Repeated attempts were made to give her water, but each time she crushed the glass between her teeth. The drug had horribly burned her mouth and throat and she was unable to swallow.

The woman had grieved constantly since the drowning of John Matthews, a chauffeur, in the Ogeechee River, a month ago, when a party of men and women were sucked into a whirlpool.

BRILLIANT BATTLE SURE IN FRANK TRIAL IN CLASH OF HOOPER AND ARNOLD

Order Has at Last Been Rested and Indications Are That Struggle of Attorneys Will Be Waged in the Most Ethical Manner.

By AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

As deplorable as the Phagan case is, in all its melancholy details, it already is evident enough that there will come of it eventually much that the community may be thankful for.

In the first place, Atlanta and Georgia, and incidentally the entire South, will have learned a good lesson in law and order, justice and fair play, and to that extent may be the better prepared for the next case of the kind that comes to their attention.

In the second place, there will be in the future no such wretched bungling and frenzied appeal in and from police headquarters, as for a time marked the Phagan case unique among its kind.

It looks now as if the decks have been pretty well cleared for action and that Leo Frank's trial may be expected to proceed in dignity and order, and that in its final analysis the truth of Mary Phagan's murder may be established, at least to the extent of Frank's real or suspected participation therein.

If Frank should be convicted, that would mean the subsequent indictment and conviction of the negro Conley, as an accessory after the fact.

Conley Indictment May Follow.

If Frank should be found not guilty, that would mean the indictment of Conley, as principal to the murder, in all human probability.

It evidently is the purpose of the State to hold Conley free of indictment, pending the disposition of the charges against Frank. His status as a material witness depends much upon this, of course.

There always is a chance, however, that a Grand Jury may take up a thing of this sort of its own motion, and to that extent there remains the possibility of prior indictment hanging over Conley.

It seems more likely, however, that the case will go to trial about as it shapes up now.

I do not incline to think the State really has any further sensational or particularly effective thing up its sleeve. Neither do I think the defense has.

There may be, on both sides, bits of corroborated evidence or evidence to offset this, that, or the other to come, but in the main I think the public is in possession of all the essential facts in the Phagan case to date.

The public must remember, however, that not all the things it has read in the newspapers, not yet one-half the things, ever will go before the jury trying Leo Frank as competent evidence.

And it is upon the COMPETENT evidence alone that the court will permit Leo Frank to be judged.

For instance, nothing that Mrs. Frank has said in the public prints will go before the jury. A wife is estopped in law from testifying either for or against her husband.

Fomby Woman Rejected.

The Fomby woman already has been rejected as a possible witness against Frank. Her story admittedly is too preposterous even for the State to bother with it further.

How much of Conley's story the jury will hear is entirely problematical.

He will be warned that he need not testify to anything calculated to incriminate himself, and even if he elects to disregard this warning there is much in his statement that likely will go down and out as incompetent or irrelevant.

The ponderous assurances of Frank's guilt, so frequently thundered from police headquarters by Detective Lanford, will, so far as the jury is concerned, not be there. Detective Lanford will not be on the jury—and his opinion as to the innocence or guilt of Frank will not be immediately valuable, therefore.

Frank's own statement, it must be rembered, will be delivered to the jury, not under oath.

The jury will be instructed by the court that it may accept the defendant's statement as the truth in its entirety, and to the exclusion of ALL the sworn testimony, if it sees fit; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject the statement as a whole.

The jury, and the jury ALONE, will be the judge of the facts.

The law—the impersonal law—that the jury will be required to apply to those facts it will get from the court.

It looks, then, as if the Phagan case, getting down to brass tacks, will revolve finally about three persons:

Leo Frank, the defendant; Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank Hooper, representing the State; Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben Arnold, representing the defendant; the judge, the jury and a dozen or so competent and material witnesses.

Order at Last Comes.

So, at last, has order been brought out of chaos, after weeks and weeks of hysteria, stuff and nonsense, passion and prejudice, facts and near-facts, truth and lies, impatience and intolerance—all jumbled into about the worst mess I ever undertook, in my way, to analyze and unravel, in seeking the truth!

Leo Frank will receive a fair trial, and the written and recorded verdict, whatever it may be, will be accepted generally as the truth.

If the jury agrees that Frank is guilty, that verdict will be taken to be a just one. Nothing short of the most sensational and revolutionary new evidence likely would serve to re-establish his good name, once he is convicted in the Superior Court.

On the other hand, if the jury shall agree that Frank is not guilty, I think he will be taken back into the friendly and fair-minded good will of the people of Atlanta, a free and untarnished man, and there likely will come a revulsion of popular feeling in his behalf, that will go far toward offsetting and reconciling him to the horrible ordeal he passed through.

The approaching trial likely will be one of the greatest legal battles ever fought in Georgia.

On the one hand—that of the State—Hugh Dorsey, the Solicitor General, has done the drudgery, and Frank Hooper is to handle the picturesque. Hooper likely will figure much more in the public eye hereafter than Dorsey will, for it will be Hooper's business to paint the rainbow, snatch the stars from the heavens, and open the floodgates of tears—if he can!

On the other hand—that of the defense—Luther Z. Rosser has done the drudgery, and Reuben Arnold will have the delicate task of leading the jury along the primrose path that leads to Frank's acquittal.

All Have Big Reputations.

All of these men are great lawyers, with reputations to sustain, and each one may be depended upon to act a part entirely in keeping with the honorable profession of the law. I do not believe there is sufficient money in Atlanta to secure the services of any one of these men in an unworthy undertaking.

Each one of these men may be depended upon to do his best by his client, and as each one is of the quality I note, a fair trial seems assured.

It is a happy and a consoling circumstance that the trial of Leo Frank is to be presided over by an upright and just judge, argued by upright and honorable attorneys, and a verdict written by twelve "good men and true," as the law—the LAW, in all its majesty—directs!

While by no means as spectacular a thing to say as something else might be, it is a matter of deep and abiding significance that Leo Frank, with his life, his good name, and all that he holds most dear at stake, is assured of a fair trial and a just verdict, notwithstanding all the frenzied and sinister detail of irrelevant and incoherent "testimony" and "evidence" set forth here and there, as time has run on since Mary Phagan was slain.

Victory for Society.

In the trial of Leo Frank THE SUPREMACY OF THE LAW will be vindicated beyond carping or cavil—and therein the most tremendous victory to society will be achieved.

Frank Hooper is one of the most experienced prosecuting attorneys in the State. He has served as Solicitor General on one of the most important circuits in Georgia, and his career thereon was entirely to his credit.

He is suave, incisive, deliberate, calm in action and eagle-eyed in seeing a point that may be turned to his client's advantage.

In summing up the case of the State against Leo Frank, Hooper will be at his best. He is a master in presenting his case to the jury for its consideration. I understand he is to be associated soon with Judge Arthur Powell and John D. Little, in Atlanta, in the practice of law. They will make a great team. Hooper is an attorney of the same class and caliber as Powell and Little.

But there to combat the best efforts that Hooper may put forth will stand that remarkable lawyer, Reuben Arnold.

Whatever qualms Frank may feel when he thinks of Hooper, doubtless they are relieved in large measure when he turns his thoughts to Arnold.

Reuben Arnold is a lawyer of constant surprises. Age can not wither him nor custom stale his infinite variety. Frank's case will be presented to the jury as few men could present it, when Arnold undertakes the work.

Convinced of Innocence.

Arnold says he never entered the case until he had convinced himself of Frank's innocence, and I quite believe he speaks the truth. I do not think there is the shadow of doubt either in Arnold's or Rosser's mind that Frank is entirely guiltless of the killing of Mary Phagan.

That Hooper may have some doubts as to the full strength of the State's case against Frank seems likely, for soon after entering the case he said this:

I have not been employed in the case to prosecute Leo M. Frank, but to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan. If the trial proves we are wrong, we will begin work on another angle. We have but one object and idea. It is that justice and the law be vindicated. We are, however, convinced we have a strong case against the accused.

Now, I do not think a manlier thing has been said in all the mass of things that have been said in the Phagan case than the foregoing.

If any person who does not know Frank Hooper has any doubts as to his complete integrity and lofty ideals the statement credited to him herein should remove them. Only a man who wishes to do right could or would say what Hooper said, soon after taking up the State's end of the Phagan case.

The most ardent, if honest, extremes of opinion well may meet on the platform Hooper sets up!

And if everybody in Atlanta will say, as he says, "I want to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan, regardless of whom that murderer may be," everybody will find himself on a platform of decency and fair play—and that's where he ought to wish to find himself.

I have sought, in these articles, neither to prosecute nor to defend Frank. I have sought, in such manner as I might, to help find the murderer of Mary Phagan. I want to see him found and convicted.

I, like Hooper, have desired, above all things, to see JUSTICE AND THE LAW VINDICATED, and I indorse and agree with Hooper's expressed desire that both may be.

Search Will Continue.

If the State fails to convict Frank—the State will turn its eyes elsewhere.

Could any man ask a fairer or squarer promise from Hooper than that?

It merely means that Hooper WILL ACCEPT THE FINDINGS OF THE COURT, after orderly and prescribed procedure, frankly and unquestioningly, as the TRUTH of the matter.

If Frank is guilty, then the law will take its course.

If he is not guilty, he will take his place once more among his fellowmen, as free of stain as any of them.

That's where Hooper stands, and that's where I am satisfied to stand also!

And if somebody, early in the investigation of the Phagan case, had calmed the mad scramble for "clews," "evidence," "testimony" and what not, with the deliberate and convincing words of Frank Hooper, some of the utterly ridiculous theories would never have been evolved and the entire case would have rested upon a basis of sanity, which would have eliminated many of the ugly features.

Happily, however, the chatterboxes and the human phonographs have been given most effective pause in their wild riot of talk, and if the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises has rounded them up for good and all, so be it, and praise forevermore!

Sanity and THE LAW OF THE LAND have taken the Phagan case in hand, and through these agencies will the truth of the murder of Mary Phagan be set up eventually.

Luncheon Lurch Aid to Digestion

Pre-Prandial Prance Society Fad

Variation of Tango Brings Dancers One Step Nearer Dining Each Step They Take.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Luncheon Lurch, the latest variation of the Tango and the Turkey Trot, which has seized the society of the Capital, is declared by experts on gastronomy to be the greatest known appetizer and first aid to digestion.

So effective has it been found along these lines that the Martini is now almost unknown on the boards of Washington hosts, while the pepsin tablet supply of the druggists is practically considered worthless stock.

There is a deep method in the Luncheon Lurch. Contrary to the Tango, which is danced after tea, the Lurch is a preprandian pastime. At a given time before the viands are to be served the orchestra strikes up something syncopated.

Guests immediately begin lurching and continue the dance until they have worked up an appetite considered commensurate with the feast about to be served.

Each step carries the dancers nearer the dining room, and observant ones declare that it is an invariable rule that the best trenchermen always dance with a remarkable celerity, while the dyspeptics lurch so slowly that they are to all appearances posing in tableau.

Among the prominent lurchers are Miss Katherine Elkins, Miss Dorothy Williams, Miss Sally Williams, Miss Katherine Britton, Miss Marguerite Barbour and Mrs. James F. Curtis.

ALL WOMEN TO VOTE IN TIME IS SENATE'S IDEA

Even the Most Conservative Members Believe the Fair Sex Will Cast Ballot the World Over.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—That women in all civilized countries will be permitted to vote is regarded as inevitable by the most conservative Senators and Representatives.

It is their opinion that steady progress is being made and that Great Britain, the United States and other leading nations will eventually recognize that further delay is useless.

Two-Thirds Vote Needed.

The resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal constitution under which women would be given the ballot, now awaiting consideration by the Senate, is expected to be passed on at the next session. A two-thirds vote would be necessary for its adoption.

It would require the appoval of sixty-four Senators to make women suffrage operative for submission to the States, so far as the upper branch of Congress is concerned.

The chief handicap preventing woman suffrage lies in the opposition of Southern Congressmen. The votes for the women's movement have made headway in the South. A bitter struggle is in progress in Alabama, where Representative Hobson is seeking the Senatorship, as against Mr. Johnston, on a platform favoring woman suffrage and temperance. Senator Johnston says he will achieve re-election without difficulty.

Have Twenty-Four Votes.

It is figured that these Senators will certainly support the Chamberlain resolution providing for a constitutional amendment permitting women to vote; Ashurst and Smith, of Arizona; Thomas and Shafroth, of Colorado; Borah and Brady, of Idaho; Myers and Walsh, of Montana; Gallinger and Hollis, of New Hampshire; Chamberlain and Lane, of Oregon; Smoot and Sutherland, of Utah; Jones and Poindexter, of Washington; Clark and Warren, of Wyoming; Gore and Owens, of Oklahoma; Ransdell and Thornton, of Louisiana.

This totals but twenty-four of the sixty-four votes necessary in the Senate. In view of recent action in Iowa, Illinois and Kansas it is possible that Senators Cummins, Kenyon, Sherman, Lewis, Bristow and Thompson may be added to the list, making thirty in all. It is claimed that two or three additional votes may come from New England, but no names are suggested.

Cupid Moves to Vancouver, Wash.

Oregon's New Law Requiring Health Certificates Held Responsible.

VANCOUVER, WASH., June 28.—The record for marriage licenses issued in one day during the 60 years in which records have been kept was broken here when ten couples secured marriage licenses. Nor is this all.

At the present rate, in fifteen days the greatest month's record will be broken in one-half the time—and all because Oregon passed a law requiring certificates of health from men making application for marriage licenses. Already 58 licenses have been issued this month, the record being 65 for any entire month.

BURN ATLANTA CLEAN, PLAN OF SANITAR YCHIEF

Settlement of Crematory Row Leaves Mayor, Council and Everybody Pleased.

John Jentzen, Sanitary Chief, is the happiest man in Atlanta as a result of the settlement Saturday of the crematory row. Operating his department without an incinerator, he said, was like trying to sail a ship on dry land, and that he had had to bear the brunt of complaints against the situation from thousands of exasperated citizens.

"That decision in the Mayor's office marks a new era in Atlanta," he said. "We shall begin a general clean-up the day the crematory is completed. I understand that that will not be longer than ten days. We shall burn Atlanta pure.

"Let the people take note of these instructions:

Gives Sanitary Rules.

"Keep the lids on garbage cans.

"Pile up the trash in yards and notify the sanitary department to come and get it.

"Don't throw things into streets and alleys.

"Help us put an end to the flies and musquitoes. You know trash breeds them."

The Chief said the new crematory would increase greatly the efficiency of his department and that it would shorten hauls and allow sanitary wagons to make more frequent visits.

He declared it would reduce the death rate and make Atlanta a more pleasant place to live in.

Mayor Well Pleased.

Although Mayor Woodward has been almost unanimously opposed in his attitude by the Council and brought most bitter criticism on himself, he smiled and said he was well satisfied over the outcome.

The Mayor's victory in the Supreme Court caused the price of the incinerator to be reduced from $276,000 to $260,000. His recent firm stand caused him to gain a point of honor.

Council endeavored to avoid allowing him to execute the contract. The concession is that he will execute it, following a special meeting of the Council Tuesday. That point has been the whole cause of the last controversy.

Turkish Bath Cures Rheumatism at Home

Costs But 2c a Bath.

Quickly Cures Kidney Trouble, Nervous Prostration and All Skin Diseases.

The Robinson Thermal or Turkish bath, taken at home, is becoming a rage. Those who have used the bath have been completely carried away with enthusiasm because of the astonishing results obtained.

Well known physicians say that the Robinson Thermal Bath at home is about to become an almost universal conqueror of disease. This is not an exaggeration. Any man or woman can prove its results inside of 24 hours, in some cases 30 minutes.

In cases of rheumatism, especially, the uric acid poison is extracted from the system through the pores, almost as liquids are sucked up through a straw. Drugs merely smother the poison or ease the pain. They do not extract the poison from the body.

Just read this letter:

"I loaned my cabinet to an old friend all crippled up with rheumatism, last May. Feet, legs, and hands badly swollen. He had spent some time at different Hot Springs without relief. A week ago he started in to use the cabinet, taking the steam heat in the morning and the dry heat at night, before going to bed. He kept this up a week, and yesterday and to-day he was as well as ever.

"GEORGE A. FREEMAN,
"Mgr. Temptation Mining and Milling Company, Silverton, Colo."

Anyone can now take Robinson Thermal baths at home and at a cost of only about 2c a bath. They make the thick, sluggish blood normal, take out the impurities and cure "spring fever" right off. The only way to take these baths is by the use of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinet, which is a unique and marvelous invention.

That great book, "The Philosophy of Health and Beauty," retail price $2.00, free at our Main Store upon request for a limited time only. Be sure to get a copy. Also see the interesting demonstration of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinets; no obligation to purchase. Jacobs' Pharmacy, Main Store and Laboratory, 8-10 Marietta Street.—Adv.

$2,000,000 TAX GAIN EXPECTED IN CHATHAM

SAVANNAH, June 28.—That the total tax returns of Chatham County will show an increase for 1913 of close to $2,000,000 is the opinion of Tax Assessor Marcus S. Baker. This will make the total returns for the year over $40,600,000—a new record for Chatham County.

But this increase will have no effect on the tax rate, says Judge Oliver T. Bacon, chairman of the board of county commissioners. The net income from this estimated increase at 77½ cents a thousand is only about $14,000.

UNCLE SAM IS NOW GREATEST HORSE BREEDER

Supplies Mounts for the Army From His Virginia Farm and Turns Out Thoroughbreds.

FARMERS ARE HIS PARTNERS

System So Successful That Other Large Studs Will Be Established in the West.

FRONT ROYAL, VA., June 28.—Uncle Sam has recently embarked in the horse business on a gigantic scale. He has started here what is probably the largest horse farm in the world, 5,800 acres, only a few hours' ride from the capital. And this is only the first of his farms. He intends to start several and turn out thoroughbreds by the tens of thousands.

To-day the farm is supplying practically the entire United States Army with its mounts. A short time hence and it will be supplying civilians, and soon, according to Captain Caspar H. Conrad, in charge, and generally acknowledged one of the greatest experts in horse flesh in America, it will be supplying most of the civilized nations of Europe. And the price—now $144.15—may become even cheaper for Americans.

The farm represents an expenditure of more than $600,000, with some $400,000 to be spent within the next year.

Horses Have Everything.

On the farm are all sorts of buildings, sanitary baths, swimming pools, drinking fountains, resting sheds, pleasure paths and even a gigantic hospital—all for horses. Here and there are huge houses wherein reside men. These men look out for the horses.

They talk of little else. Indeed, it would be strange if the case were otherwise, for there are only 100 of these men, and daily they have to look after from 1,500 to 2,000 horses.

It took a long time to start the horse farm—more than half a century.

One day a few years ago a number of high staff officers of the army, watching a cavalry review, made some rather disparaging remarks concerning the appearance of the horses.

"Some of 'em look like mountain goats, and the rest like buffaloes," said one of the officers, and the remark got to the ears of Captain Conrad, and set him to thinking.

After that Captain Conrad had the approval of the War Department to start the farm. August Belmont made Uncle Sam a present of his six best stallions. Those stallions are known the racing world over, as Henry of Navarre, Octagon, Footprint, Belfry II, Vestibule and Marshall King. The six of them, when but two years old, cost $100,000.

Two More Horses Given.

James Camden, millionaire horseman of Versailles, Ky., heard of Belmont's gift and made Uncle Sam a present of his two famous stallions, Boola Boola and Wheelwright, worth about $25,000. Thus the farm was started.

But even with fifty stallions and mares by the hundred breeding on the farm was too slow. Something had to be done to increase the scope of the work—and the answer was found in a scheme to have Uncle Sam take every farmer in the South into partnership. This was done.

The ultimate plan is to sell the horses at a gigantic auction sale, with an army officer as auctioneer, knocking down the animals to the highest bidder.

Uncle Sam's horse farm is probably the only place in the country where no matter what animal you buy you may rest assured of getting a horse that is perfect. If the animal has the slightest blemish it will not be sold.

"Of course," said Captain Conrad, "we know that in this particular case the scar was due entirely to accident. But the farmer doesn't know it. He might have a mare scarred up purely by accident, but we wouldn't take his word for. We demand perfect mares and colts, so we give perfect stallions."

One Word to Decide Estate Ownership

Will Filed for Probate Causes Legal Discussion of Meaning of "And" and "Or."

WOODBURY, N. J., June 28.—The will of the late Aaron Knisell, of Sewell, was offered for probate in the Surrogate's office. This instrument has raised a contention among the heirs. The will left the entire estate to Mrs. Knisell, who died two weeks before her husband, and it is claimed that its provisions lapsed with her death.

The property was left to Mrs. Knisell "and her heirs." Had it read "or" heirs, it is claimed, the estate would go to her heirs; but, as it says "and" heirs, Knisell's brothers claim the estate. A ruling by the court will be necessary to interpret the instrument.

Evelyn Thaw Tells Her Ambition Will Try Something Worth While Reveals Her Plans to Alan Dale

Evelyn Thaw in the days she took New York by storm.

Evelyn Thaw as she is to-day.

As Miss Nesbit, Now Dancing at the Hippodrome, and Booked for Paris and Vienna.

By ALAN DALE.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—It was "Hullo, Rag-Time," at the Hippodrome that brought Evelyn Thaw within my jurisdiction, as it has brought many others who I never expected to meet.

So, with the open sesame of elusive art as a go-between, "Miss Nesbit," as she is programed here, received me without hesitancy in her rooms at the St. James Hotel, off Piccadilly, and our art robbed me of qualms. It was quite early morning.

Evelyn Thaw wore a loose peignoire of a black, shiny something, slashed at the back with yellow. Her hair was loosely fluffed out; she was devoid of the slightest effort at make-up, her ivory-white face and her unreddened lips looking quite startlingly natural. She was as pretty as any picture of—herself, and though the edge of reluctant youth may have frayed a little, there isn't a shadow of a doubt on the score of Evelyn Nesbit's charm. Never in all the ladies I have professionally met have I found more self-possession, a keener poise and less self-consciousness than in Evelyn Thaw. She made me wonder. She spoke easily, gracefully, reassuringly, without a trace of hesitation or nervousness.

On the Spur of the Moment.

"It was awfully sudden," she said, as we sat opposite each other. "I had no idea of going back to the stage, after all these years."

"How many?" I asked. "You need not answer."

"Oh, I'm not like that," she said, with the first wistful smile; "I don't mind recalling anything. The last previous time I appeared on the stage was in 1904 in 'The Wild Rose.'

"Well, on the Olympic, coming over, I met a lot of theatrical people, among them Lee Shubert, Martin Beck and Albert DeCourville. They all advised me to make the break, especially DeCourville, who is manager of the Hippodrome.

"He has just married Shirley Kellogg, by the bye. I thought it over carefully, for I was a bit afraid, you know." She seemed to take it for granted that I knew. I did; I quite understood. "If I had made the break in New York I should have been a 'freak,'" she said. "Oh, there have been other women who have been through trials like mine who first tried New York, and it was hopeless. So when DeCourville telegraphed me at Paris to come at once to London and appear I realized that it was up to me, and I went, afraid, of course, but you know I'm no novice at harrowing experiences."

A Wild Turkey Trot.

"I was determined that nothing should force any attention from me to that sort of thing." She was now an artist before the public, and I was —me.

"I had to do a wild turkey trot with a dancer, and he was hard to find. I had seen Jack Clifford at the Cafe De Paris, and I remembered that he used to dance with Irene Weston, so we engaged him and rehearsed for one week only at the Irish Club, opposite the Hippodrome. Oh! it was terrible work. He throws me around —I am tossed up in the air and I see my heels at an angle I never expected to view them. And I'm an old married woman, with stiff joints."

Evelyn Nesbit laughed. So did I. She was as simple and unaffected as the inevitable school girl. It was impossible not to like her. She amused me a lot.

"They sneaked us on at a Saturday matinee without announcement," she said, "and luck favored me. The turn went well, and we are a hit.

"I'm engaged for six weeks, with an option, and then I go to Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Copenhagen——"

"And New York?" I asked.

"New York, surely," she replied, smiling, "when I feel that I've put it over, but not until then. Oh, I do want to earn my own living, and the stage is good, and I don't mind hard work. In the old days, when I had nothing on my mind but my hair, I used to shirk rehearsals. Now, I'm Johnny-on-the-spot. I don't mind how much we rehearse. In fact, I rehearse every day. I've always loved dancing, and have studied all the successful dancers. If only I don't get fat like Ethel Barrymore and others."

She Won't Get Fat.

"You couldn't," I opined, for she didn't look the part.

"I won't," she retorted; "it would be a great pity, and I have another ambition that I'll tell you, for it may surprise you. Do you remember what Jerome said about me?"

Again I refused to remember anything.

"Well, he said that there were four great actresses—Sarah Bernhardt, Eleanora Duse, Mrs. Fiske and myself. I don't forget that. Some day I may try to act—to do something worth while, something serious, something emotional. So there you are! You will laugh, because I know you are funny.

"Theatrical people take themselves very seriously, and they can't understand why you don't do the same, but you don't—you can be as funny as you like about me. I shan't mind a bit, for I really have a sense of humor, and I'm not very serious." She laughed again, and I was quite disarmed. Evelyn Nesbit had impressed me as I didn't believe I was going to be impressed.

"All I do in London," she said, "is to work and eat good food. I love the food in London. Do go to the Cheshire Cheese and taste the chops. I was there yesterday, and I sat in Dr. Johnson's chair and enjoyed myself hugely. I'm going to get on, and I'm going to surprise everybody. One must have a beginning. Look at Elsie Ferguson. She was the stupidest chorus girl I ever met, but she had big moments, and now she is a very charming actress. Don't forget to write something funny about me, for I shall enjoy it."

But, somehow or other, Evelyn Nesbit hadn't appealed to my sense of humor. She was, at least, spontaneous and natural.

BOY, NOT YET 8, TO ENTER HIGH SCHOOL IN FALL

New Mexican Prodigy Received All His Training From Mother. Wonderful Memory.

ROSWELL, N. MEX., June 28.—When the public schools open next fall there will be a new student in the high school department, a boy who has never been to school a single day and who will not at that time have reached his eighth birthday.

This is the boy who, at the age of eighteen months, startled the city of Denver by repeating the names of the Presidents of the United States, and who at the age of five recited several pages from Hiawatha in a school entertainment in Artesia, N. Mex. His name is Raymond Ray. He is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Ray, of Roswell.

The mother of this boy, who has been his only tutor since the very earliest day that he could learn, attributes to him none of the characteristics of a prodigy or perhaps of a genius. He has been taught to think, to concentrate his mind, and this training has enabled him to develop a remarkable memory.

He seldom reads an interesting topic more than once in order to commit it to memory, and he studies physiology, arithmetic, grammar, civil government and literature with little aid from his mother. When he enters high school he will take up the study of Latin, algebra, rhetoric, physical geography and ancient history.

Raymond is now studying Spanish, elocution and vocal music. He has some excellent talent in music, and sings with real melody, spirit and understanding.

WHY 200,000 PEOPLE NOW BATHE INTERNALLY

When you are ill, the first step your Physician takes is to clean out the Large Intestine.

He does this because the chances are ten to one that if you had no accumulated waste in the Large Intestine you would not have been ill at all.

The new process of Internal Bathing by means of the "J. B. L. Cascade" thoroughly cleanses the Lower Intestine, removes all waste and poisonous matter, and keeps it as pure as Nature demands it to be for perfect health.

It is Nature's own way of curing Constipation—simply warm water properly applied.

Enlightened physicians everywhere are using and prescribing it—

And instead of waiting to be ill, over 200,000 delighted Americans are warding off disease and increasing their efficiency and energy by its use.

Until recently the "J. B. L. Cascade" has been obtainable only by sending to its inventor, Charles A. Tyrrell, M. D., New York City.

The demand for it now, however, has become universal, through the recommendations of those who are using it. Call at our main store and we will be glad to show you the "J. B. L. Cascade" and explain it in detail.

We are also distributing a very interesting booklet on internal bathing, called "Why Man of To-day Is Only 50 Per Cent Efficient," which can be obtained on request, without cost. Ask us for it to-day and inform yourself about this safe and sane method of curing constipation without drugs.

Wife Refuses to Stop Husband and Daughter's Eloping

Declares to Humane Society That She Tolerated Act to Preserve Happiness of Her Child.

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Telling a most unusual story, filled with peculiar complications, in which she accuses her husband of eloping with and marrying his own stepdaughter and then stealing her two children in order to secure property belonging to her, Mrs. Ruella Nicholson has appealed to the police, the humane society and the county officers to help her in locating her husband, Edward Nicholson, and thus get back her children.

How she learned of the fact that her daughter had married her own stepfather, and did not interfere with the marriage because she wanted her child to be happy was a part of the strange story alleged by the woman.

Tired, hungry and practically penniless, the elderly woman appealed to the humane society.

Society Women Sound Knell for Mourning

Boston Leaders Declare That Custom of Donning Black for Dead Is Relic of Barbarism.

BOSTON, June 28.—Society women of Boston have answered the question, "How long should society women wear mourning for their dead relatives?" by saying in substance that mourning should not be worn. It was the consensus of opinion that it is a survival of barbarian days.

Mrs. Charles P. Putnam, wife of Dr. Putnam, said, "It seems to me that there is altogether too much mourning worn considering our present enlightened state of civilization. The world is dark enough as it is without women wearing crepe to make it any more gloomy.

Women Taught to Save Million a Year

Kansas Garbage Cans Are Cheated of Immense Amount by Domestic Science Instruction at School.

TOPEKA, KAN., June 28.—Kansas cheated the garbage cans of the State out of $1,000,000 last year, and the amount will be increased at the rate of $500,000 a year until there will be virtually no wasted foods in the entire State.

That is the aim of the Kansas Agricultural College, and the State is spending $40,000 a year to help.

Seven hundred girls completed the domestic science courses at the agricultural college this week, and the college has just closed its movable cooking schools, which were attended by 11,000 women in the ten weeks in which they were operated.

PET CANARY OF PRETTY WOMAN HALTS VESSEL

Captain of Liner Agrees to Delay Voyage Until She Can Send Home for Bird.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Mrs. Green is young and very charming. That is why the officers of the Vestris, of the Lamport and Holt line, gave her their fullest attention when she announced in plaintive but positive tones that she had lost her Rickey.

"I forgot to bring Rickey," she exclaimed.

"Who's Rickey?" demanded the second officer.

"Rickey's our pet canary," she said, "and I am taking him to South America to my husband. I mean I was to have taken him, but I left him at home."

Brought Food, Forgot Bird.

"It's too late now to get him," said the officer, "for we leave in thirty minutes."

"But I wouldn't dare go without him. I've brought the seed and the cuttlefish and everything, but I forgot the bird."

"Where do you live?" asked the officer.

"Mrs. G. F. Green, 59 West Fifty-third Street," was the reply, and the officer solicited the assistance of H. S. Damage, the line's passenger agent. After consultation with the Vestris captain it was agreed to hold the vessel until ten minutes after five o'clock—ten minutes later than her schedule called for—and Mr. Damage and Mrs. Green sought a telephone.

Bird's Owner In Hysterics.

To an agent of a taxicab company the young woman explained that she wanted to go to the Fifty-third Street number and get a canary bird.

But no canary bird bearing taxicab arrived at the pier by ten minutes after five o'clock, and Mrs. Queen was in a state of hysteria as she watched the sailors haul off the gang plank.

Just as the Vestris was swinging at the end of the pier and before the last spring line was cast off the taxicab arrived. With the bewildered canary in its cage one of Mrs. Green's friends ran to the end of the pier and fastened the cage to a piece of rope. Then, very slowly and with due reverence—for Mrs. Green's brimming eyes were upon him—a sailor hauled the line with the cage attached over the side.

Woman Loves Mouse; Eats Meals With Him

Pet Comes Daily to Dine With Hotel Employees, and Girl Feeds Him From Hand.

CINCINNATI, June 28.—It is an old saying that all women are afraid of mice, but one has at last been found who is not afraid, and even says she likes them.

She is Miss Ella Eversfield, an operator at the Grand Hotel, who takes her meals with her favorite mouse every day. The employees of the hotel have a private dining room, and some time ago a mouse was discovered there. At the time Miss Eversfield had not learned to love mice and she probably screamed, but the mouse was game and stuck it out, and, having learned the meal hours, he insisted on putting in his appearance every day, until finally the employees learned to consider him as one of their number, and now he eats his meals from the hand of Miss Eversfield.

Hibbs, of Bristol, to-day started suit against the Trenton and Mercer County Traction Company for $10,000. Mrs. Hibbs was injured in Trenton when she attempted to cross a street in front of a car.

NEW ANSLEY HOTEL GIVES MOST MODERN HOSTELRY OF SOUTH TO ATLANTA

No Detail Has Been Spared to Make It Unsurpassed for the Traveling Public and People of City—Formal Opening Monday.

Machinery and Equipment Latest Devices for Aid of Sanitation and Comfort—Mural Decorations Picture Events of Georgia.

Only to those who "put up" after Monday at the Hotel Ansley will it be given in fullest measure to say, with Shenstone, that they have "found life's warmest welcome at an inn."

At least, the builder and the lessee and the press agent have endeavored to make it even so, and the very few favored persons permitted to inspect the building and its appointments in advance of the opening agree they planned wisely and builded well.

When the Ansley, Atlanta's newest hostelry, opens its doors to guests on Monday, it will be unexcelled among the inns of the country for efficiency, service, accommodations, equipment and modernity of its appointments. No detail was overlooked in the planning; no expense was spared in the building.

Banquet Hall Seats 500.

With its banquet room seating 500, its rathskeller accommodating 300 and its hundreds of rooms supplied with fresh filtered air continuously; with its costly historical mural decorations, each a work of art, the sumptuous furnishings of its rooms and suites and its perfect service system, the Ansley will be without a superior for business, conveniences and safety.

As "Marse" Henry Watterson expressed it, at no place "on the Rambla and in the Ring, in Piccadilly and the Corso, beneath the colonnades of the Rue de Rivoli of Paris and 'Unter den Linden' of Berlin—indeed, all the way between Chicago and Cannebiere, including many nooks and corners of little old New York," can the man or woman with a trunk and a handbag live higher, sleep safer and spend less than at the Hotel Ansley.

Two well-known quotations imprinted on the tapestry will greet the eye of all who pass the portals of the Hotel Ansley. The first one is the hotel man's favorite verse, from Shenstone, as follows:

Whoe'er has traveled life's dull round,
Where'er his stages may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
Life's warmest welcome at an inn.

The next is a Scriptural quotation, taken from Hebrews, and the Ansley management promises to apply the precept and the compliment to every guest alike. Here it is:

"Forget not to show love unto strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

Indicate Spirit of Hotel.

These two familiar quotations are printed across the underbeam of the winding marble stairways in the Ansley foyer. They are intended to indicate the spirit in which guests should apply and expect to be received.

Appearance of the lobby is enhanced by three historical paintings on tapestry, each 12 by 10 feet, situated on the upper mezzanine floor and facing the Forsyth Street entrance. The paintings recall important historical happenings in Georgia.

The first panel depicts the meeting of General Oglethorpe and Tomochichi at Savannah, May 21, 1733. The next represents John Wesley teaching the Indians under the oaks of St. Simons, and the third shows the burning of the Yazoo fraud papers at the state house in Louisville, Jefferson County, in the year 1796.

The papers were ignited by means of a magnifying glass and the sun's rays, showing that the fire which destroyed such an infamy should come from Heaven.

On the ground floor are a dozen or more other paintings of historical interest.

Dining Room Is Italian.

The dining room of the Ansley is known as the Italian room, on account of its architecture and mural paintings. The latter consist of the Vatican gardens, showing the cupola of St. Peter's in the distance; the garden of Villa Borghese in Florence, the garden of Villa Lante, the Hercules fountain in the garden of Villa Reale of Florence, and a view of Venice canals, all of which are painted on canvases, each 12 by 10 feet.

The rathskeller, one of the largest and most luxurious in the South, is remindful of college life. Its walls are decorated with portraits of the seals of the leading Georgia colleges, interlaced with varicolored bands waving over a golden background.

The waiting room is trimmed and wainscoted with Georgia "sycamore." A distinctive feature of this room, indeed, of the hotel is a full size true-to-life portrait of Lieutenant General William Tecumseh Sherman, beneath which is the following inscription:

"Under whose orders Atlanta was burned, and who said war is hell."

Old Photographs Reproduced.

Actual 1865 photographs are reproduced, showing Atlanta before and after the famous conflagration. On other panels of the writing room are the Great Seals of Atlanta and the State of Georgia. Those who have seen this room are unstinted in their praise of its historical interest and value.

The Ansley equipment for cleaning silverware and dishes is unexcelled. The silverware will be cleaned by chemically generated electricity, made by water, soda and salt.

Dishes will be cleansed and sterilized by powerful streams of hot water thrown against them while incased in a metal washing machine.

The kitchen of the Ansley is replete with modern machinery and other implements for prompt and efficient service. Its appointments are products of as great attention to detail as was given the office, the rathskeller or any other part of the hostelry.

Five Lang ranges form a battery kept at even temperature by a single furnace. The bake ovens are built on the skyscraper plan—four stories high—thus utilizing space and insuring uniform results. The meat department is equipped with a slicing machine, insuring uniform-sized slices without rough edges.

Has Own Ice Plant.

The Ansley has the best equipped ice and refrigerating plant in Atlanta. It is a duplicate affair with a capacity of fourteen tons a day. The cold storage room could accommodate a carload of meat.

From a service bar in the basement all orders will be filled for the rathskeller, private dining rooms and guests' apartments, thus keeping the waiters out of the main buffet, which opens on Forsyth Street.

Distinctively a unique feature for any hotel is the sanitary bathing subbasement for the hotel's servants. Each compartment is equipped with lockers, and all waiters, cooks, bellboys, porters, etc., will be required to take a shower bath before starting each day's work.

Not the least attraction of the Ansley is its contemplated scale of charges. Rooms with running water and private toilet will cost $1 a day, rooms with connecting bath $1.50, with private bath $2, $2.50 and $3. Club breakfasts will be served for 25 cents and up, lunch for 50 cents from 12 till 2 o'clock, and 6 to 8 o'clock dinner for $1.

Indian Girl Writes Opera on Sioux Life

Zitkala Sa Composed "The Sun Dance"—Gave It on Reservation.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28.—On the Uintah reservation at Vernal, Utah, nearly 100 miles from a railroad, an Indian girl has written an opera, with her people as the theme and motif. It is one thing to write an opera and another to have it produced. Zitkala Sa, a full-blooded Sioux, has accomplished both these things.

When "The Sun Dance" was sung in Vernal, Indians and whites drove in from 40 miles around to hear it; and, having heard it, they pronounced it a triumph. Efforts are being made to have the opera sung in Salt Lake City during the week of the National Education Association, July 5 to 11.

"The Sun Dance," as it was produced at Vernal in March, was not altogether the work of Kitkala Sa and her copper-hued brethren of the Uintah reservation. Professor William F. Hansen, of the faculty, and white as well as Indian students of Uintah Academy played important roles in the preparation and singing of the piece. It was, in fact, part of the academy work.

12,000 Drinks in Five Years Basis of Suit

Wife Declares Husband Protected Himself With Walking Stick in Driving Rain Storm.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Twelve thousand drinks, ranging from simple mixed potations to fancy concoctions, is the record which Mrs. John Barry Sears posts up against her husband in five years of married life.

Mrs. Sears, who is suing for divorce, said Mr. Sears started his career of conviviality during his honeymoon and has kept it up.

In one instance, according to Mrs. Sears, her husband had come home in a driving rain.

"He carried his walking stick elevated above his head," she testified, "and held his umbrella closed in his hand. He was soaking wet, but did not know it."

According to the report of Librarian Douglass, Sommer's card shows that he has taken out 89 volumes, the majority of which would be classed as "heavy reading."

Of the 89 volumes perused by this freshman, 47 are devoted to social science, 28 are classed as pure literature, 5 are works of history and biography, 5 are of a philosophical and religious nature and 4 deal with journalism.

Oregon Governor Opposed to Autos

Declares State Appropriation Would Have Made Him Travel Like 'Piker.'

SALEM, OREG., June 28.—Despite rumors to the effect that he would be a candidate for re-election, Governor West positively announces that he will not be a candidate.

The Governor said that the financial drain on him was large, particularly his traveling expenses. The State now provides $1,000 for the traveling expenses of the Governor when on the State's business, but until two years ago only $500 a year was provided. The Governor declared that he could not live like a "piker" when away from home, and the expenses of many of his trips were paid by himself.

Governor West said that he had never bought an automobile because he did not want one, wouldn't have one if somebody would make him a present of it, couldn't operate it if he had it, and, above all, could not afford a machine.

DANCING MASTERS DECLARE TURKEY TROT IS IMMORAL

ASBURY PARK, June 28.—The "turkey trot" is an immoral dance in the opinion of members of the American National Association, masters of dancing, in session here, and at today's meeting the delegates were urged to co-operate with local authorities in banishing the figure that is fast becoming the rage.

The "tango" was not treated so severely. If properly taught, the masters believe, it may be danced.

On this trip she visited fifty-two countries and experienced every kind of ancient and modern travel.

Miss Ackerman said the happiest and most professional women are in Australia.

Health Board Posts Weekly Bath Order

Canton, Ohio, Folks Must Get in Tub at Least Once a Week Authorities Declare.

CANTON, O., June 28.—Canton folks must bathe at least once a week, and "all over," at that. The board of health has said so.

In order that none can misunderstand, the board has arranged to post in every home where soap and water are believed to be at a premium a set of rules printed in five languages and specifying $25 and costs as punishment of any one who neglects the weekly cleanup.

DIVA BELIEVES BABIES BEST, FARM LIFE NEXT

Schumann-Heink, Who Has Just Passed Her Fifty-second Birthday, Purchases Big Tract.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., June 28.—"Yes, now I am a farmer; also I am a mother, and I have just had my fifty-second birthday."

It was Mme. Schumann-Heink who spoke. Wreathed in smiles and radiating health—the great artist, accompanied by her youngest child and most beautiful daughter, descended from an incoming train to begin a six-month vacation here.

She had just completed her longest American tour and returns with the greatest profits made by any artist in concert this season.

Last year Mme. Schumann-Heink bought 3,000 acres here. She plans to make ranches with gardens, barren wastes into orchards and her rancho the garden spot of America.

"Farming," enthused Madame, "next to the rearing of babies, is the most interesting work in the world."

"But the farming, madame, surely you will not hoe?"

"Look at these two hands. I ask you, do they not appear capable? I have raised and worked for my children and they are yet strong—nicht?" Madame held her pink palms upward. One of the most convincing proofs of what she said was their appearance. The fingers are long and slender and young and strong enough to be envied by any woman half the diva's age.

And this can also be said truthfully of her face and form. Mme. Schumann's flamed with health.

"Yes, I shall be getting out and digging like a regular farmer. Oh, that is nothing to dig," she stated. "Once I made a garden at my New York home.

"Ach, yes, it is good to grow fruit, but it is better to be the mother of babies."

Babies Saved From Bolt by Feather Bed

Children Are Found Unhurt in Mattress After Room Is Wrecked by Lightning.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A feather mattress saved two children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson on the Peter Cortelyou farm, at Franklin Park, near New Brunswick, N. J., when a bolt of lightning struck their bed. The parents were awakened by a tremendous crash and a shriek from the children in an adjoining room. A flash of lightning just as they reached the room revealed a big hole in the roof and one in the floor.

The father obtained a lamp and found the bedstead shattered to pieces. Securely rolled up in the feather mattress, however, were the two little ones, almost suffocated with heat but unhurt.

SWEETPEAS IMPORTED BY AUSTRIAN EMPEROR

Special Cable to The American.

VIENNA, June 28.—Sweetpeas, which were practically unknown in Austria only a few years ago, are now prominent in the Imperial Gardens at Schonbrunn.

The aged Emperor Francis Joseph is the first in Austria to "take up" the sweetpea. The director of the Imperial Gardens was sent to London and brought specimen plants back with him. Now the tables at the castle at Schonbrunn are decorated with sweetpeas in one color or at most two. The Emperor prefers pink and white to other combinations.

Chief's Gold Badge Found to be Nickel

New Head of Police Department Finds That Predecessors Had Worn Base Metal Insignia.

PASADENA, June 28.—"Silver Threads Among the Gold," merrily whistled newly appointed Chief of Police W. S. McIntire as he scraped off the gold from the badge that was turned over to him by his predecessor, W. F. Wood, who resigned from the office.

When Wood resigned he presented his successor with the badge containing the words, "Chief of Police, Pasadena." On making a close inspection of the badge, which had long borne a reputation of being solid gold, the new chief observed that it was somewhat tarnished.

A cleanser was then applied, with the result that the badge in a few minutes was a shining nickel-plated star and greatly similar to the other badges worn by the balance of the police department.

Free Market Starts To Cut Cost of Living

San Jose, Cal., Plans To Do Away With Profit Made by Middle Man.

SAN POSE, CAL., June 28.—San Jose hit the high cost of living a solar plexus blow to-day when, under the direction of the city administration, a free market was opened in South Market Street at the City Hall Park.

A score of produce wagons came for the opening, and long before the selling day was over every scrap of salable goods had been disposed of and a crowd clamored for a chance to purchase.

Market Master Joseph Napoli declares that the first day's business demonstrated that producers received 25 per cent more for their sales than they could get from the middle man and that buyers saved a minimum of 25 per cent by doing business directly with the producers.

CONVICTS DINE IN HOTEL THEN SEE MOVING PICTURE

COLUMBUS, O., June 28.—Five penitentiary prisoners, serving sentences ranging from manslaughter to pocket picking, were taken from their cells by an official of the State Board of Administration and treated to a banquet at one of the large hotels. Following the banquet the prisoners were taken to moving picture shows and given an entertainment which they will long remember.

PREACHER DIVORCES HIS WIFE.

OMAHA, NEBR., June 28.—The Rev. F. P. Jolly, formerly of Joliet, Ill., was granted a divorce from his wife, the grounds being extreme cruelty. Mrs. Jolly is now living in Joliet.

JAP EMIGRANTS NOW COLONIZING BRAZILIAN LANDS

1,500 Arrivals But Vanguard of Orientals to Be Sent to South America.

SEATTLE, WASH., June 28.—How Japan is colonizing Brazil was given in detail here with the arrival of the Japanese steamship Sanuki Maru.

Fifteen hundred Japanese emigrants were landed at Santos, Brazil, May 15. They are the vanguard of a great population to be sent to South America to become a part of the first permanent Japanese colony in Brazil under the Sao Paulo colonization agreement recently entered into between Japan and Brazil.

The first award of territory comprises approximately 150,000 acres of agricultural land.

Another Japanese-Brazilian colonization enterprise has been completed and passengers of the Sanuki say that the two Governments have arranged for the concession of a considerable area of fertile country which will be settled by Japanese. Settlers for this colony will leave Japan about the end of the present year.

Japanese contract labor is now being sent into South Africa and both Brazil and Peru are being supplied with coolies, who leave Japan under contract with various South American industrial organizations.

CONTESTANTS WORKING HARD FOR MORE VOTES

Manager of Pony Race Advises Girls and Boys to Use Follow-Up System.

SYSTEMATIC WORK WINS

Shetlands Are Growing Fat and Strong at Loomis Avenue Stable Where They Are Kept.

The last week of the "clubs of five" bonus offer in The Georgian and American pony contest begins with all contestants straining hard to take advantage of the benefit to be gained by getting subscriptions before the time limit is up.

Standings published in The American show great gains, but they are small compared with the leaps forward which will be shown when the bonus votes are reckoned up for publication in next Wednesday's Georgian. The contest manager believes it will take the office force all of the night of July 5 to make the proper entries.

There also is a bonus of 50,000 votes for the first $30 turned in for subscriptions by any of the contestants. This offer may be withdrawn at any time.

Use Follow-Up System.

The contest manager wishes to repeat his suggestion that contestants take a leaf from the books of the successful business man and institute a "follow-up" system. A list of those whose subscriptions expire soon should be made, and all such subscribers visited with a request for a renewal. Nine times out of ten, a renewal is easier to get than the first subscription, for at the end of a short trial the subscriber generally gets to like The Georgian and American so well that he wants to continue.

It is systematic work of this sort which counts for more than the spurts of a day or two, which, while they may yield remarkable results, are not frequent enough to build up totals to the point where the contestant can feel sure of a pony.

None Sure of Winning.

No contestant has a right to feel sure of winning as yet. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not be passed by an energetic rival, and some who are leading now have a very poor start, indeed.

Meanwhile, the ponies are "eating their heads off" at 55 Loomis Avenue, where their future owners are invited to call and see them. All are rounding into great shape, and they are prettier every day. It is going to be a hard task for the winners to pick the ponies they like best from the splendid bunch The Georgian and American have bought.

"I subscribed to The Georgian and American a week ago, and the paper has not begun to come to my home yet," is a complaint heard every now and then.

Usually it develops that the subscriber gave his money to one of the contestants, and that the contestant is "holding back."

This is poor policy, particularly if it is a short-term subscription, for when a contestant treats a subscriber in this way the man is not going to be as willing to give the contestant his renewal.

"Don't hold back," is the advice of the contest manager—and he knows best.

BONUS OFFER IN PONY CONTEST GIVES 1 WEEK MORE OF OPPORTUNITY

Wanting to win and working to win differ widely. Working to win is what counts, and working to win now, while the special bonus vote offers are in effect in The Georgian and American pony contest.

July 4 means more than cannon crackers, picnics and general celebrations to the pony contestants. It means, to them, the end of one of the bonus offers, and July 4 is little more than a week away.

Clubs of five subscriptions, yearly, half-yearly, or for three months, bring great rewards until the expiration of the period thus limited. And "when the polls close" for these club bonus votes the office force of the contest manager expects an all-night session reckoning up the strength of the many candidates.

Some have brought in five subscriptions at a time to take advantage of the bonus. Others have brought them in one, two or three at a time. In either case, the clubs will be credited accurately. And overnight the standings will seem to have doubled, though the bonus votes represent weeks of work.

The ponies now are at 55 Loomis Avenue, where contestants are welcome. If they arrive at the right time they will see the ponies being exercised.

Fortune in Gold Awaits Claimants

Insane Kansas Woman Leaves Bag of Nuggets and Dust Worth $10,000.

HUTCHINSON, KANS., June 28.—A bag of gold nuggets and gold dust worth $10,000 awaits any heirs who may be found to the estate of Mrs. Ann M. Bernhart, who died recently in Davenport, Iowa, according to the announcement of G. M. Duckworth, administrator.

Several years ago Mrs. Bernhart was adjudged of unsound mind. Duckworth was named her guardian. The cottage here where she lived alone was closed and she went to an asylum. Upon her death Duckworth thoroughly searched her cottage. The nuggets and dust in small bags were found secreted in the dwelling.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MANUFACTURES DINNER PLANNED FOR EVE OF 4TH

New Ansley Hotel Will Serve Atlanta Factory Owners to the Number of 200.

HOME EXHIBIT PLANS TOPIC

Brooks Morgan Has Definite Proposals for Acceptance or Rejection—Pledges Desired.

Atlanta manufacturers, to the probable number of 200, will gather on the evening of July 3 at the Ansley Hotel for a dinner.

The object of the dinner is to discuss the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods, and at the same time, to discuss the advisability of holding the annual temporary exhibit, such as was held last year at the time of the Southern Merchants' Convention.

The dinner had been set for June 24, but the unavoidable absence from the city of Brooks Morgan necessitated a postponement.

The new date was set at an informal conference of Mr Morgan, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter G. Cooper held Wednesday.

Invitations to the big "Manufacturers' Dinner" will be sent out at once, and a general response is expected.

At the dinner, Mr. Morgan will lay before the manufacturers definite proposals for lease or purchase of buildings suitable for the installation of a manufacturers' exhibit. It will, in brief, be a "show down." The permanent exhibit project has been gone over thoroughly. The manufacturers have seen Chattanooga's display, and they have learned in detail of New Haven's success. There has been plenty of time for them to make up their minds. At this dinner they are expected to signify what they intend doing.

If, as is expected, the will of the manufacturers is seen unanimously in favor of the exhibit, a start will be made. But the backers of the project do not wish to start unless they have assurance of 200 exhibitors and 40,000 or 50,000 feet of floor space.

Strenuous Work Done Preparing for Convention.

When the four or five thousand merchants from all over the South gather in Atlanta for their convention, during the first two weeks of August, it is doubtful if any of them will be able to realize the care and effort that has been expended to make their meeting a success.

For instance, one energetic committee has been toiling throughout the hot week in an effort to raise funds for the entertainment of the visitors. As a result of their conscientious endeavor, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association sees its way clear, as to finances, to play host to the gathering.

Another committee has been hard at work preparing the program. The program is to be an elaborate affair. Three or four topics a day will be discussed, and most of the discussion will be in the shape of five-minute addresses. The traveling men are doing yeoman's work in finding the good speakers scattered throughout the territory, men who have opinions worth hearing and experiences likely to be helpful to other merchants in their lines.

Moving Big Concern Takes Almost Week

Dougherty-Little-Redwine Co. Get to Temporary Quarters by Dint of Hard Work.

Almost a week has been required for moving the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company from its old home in North Pryor Street to temporary quarters at 30-32 South Pryor Street. It is estimated that about forty boxcar loads of goods were moved, the stock being valued at $150,000.

"That amount of silks would not make much of a showing, but when it comes to underwear, it is a different story," remarked J. Little.

Jordan Thinks Europe's Land Banks Ideal for South

Cheap Loans on Farm Lands Spell Financial Independence for Cotton Grower, He Says.

Special Cable to The American.

By COLONEL HARVIE JORDAN.

(Member of the American Farm Credits Commission and President of the Southern Cotton Association)

OLDENBERG, GERMANY, June 28.—The capitalization of Southern cotton growers through the mortgage bank system, giving them mortgage loans at low interest with easy payments, would completely reorganize the cotton-growing industry of the South. I am convinced that the land mortgage business in America can be systematized along the lines of similar mortgage systems in Europe.

If this is done it will bring a new era of prosperity to the South and greatly increase the cash returns from cotton, which now represent practically the entire balance of trade of the United States.

Southern cotton growers to-day are just one year behind financially. They have been behind since the Civil War.

The curse of the cotton farmers is the store lien system, under which they are obliged each spring to purchase their supplies on credit from the supply merchants. Frequently farmers pay 50 per cent or more in excess of the cash price of goods for the privilege of this credit. Moreover, the supply merchants secure absolute control over the farmers.

Marketing Is Hurried.

The cotton crop has to be marketed as soon as harvested. Farmers have practically no control over the marketing. This is because they have no financial independence. The American commission has studied the mortgage systems which place European farmers in far stronger positions as borrowers than our own farmers. In America we still are clinging to the antiquated practice of forcing short-time loans on the agriculturist.

European farmers borrow through an intermediary society and enjoy as strong positions as any railroad or municipality. If our Southern farmers mortgage their land they must pay back the entire principal in lump sum in a few years, else pay a costly commission for renewal. So long as this is true naturally the farmers won't mortgage their land until actually pressed to the wall.

In contrast to this European farmers repay their loans in small annual installments. So long as they meet their interest payments they can never be sold out. Their entire payments for both interest and principal amount to less than our farmers frequently are required to pay for interest alone.

Cash Basis Possible.

If Southern farmers can get a device to act as their agent in borrowing and can capitalize their land holdings on terms that will permit them to repay little by little, we can put the cotton-growing industry of the South on a cash basis. This would enable our farmers to buy on a cash basis and secure financial independence. It would break the power of the supply merchants. It would be the surest way to a New South. A New South would mean prosperity to the nation.

There is no theory in this proposition. I have studied these mortgage systems here. They are straight business enterprises that we Americans can adopt, perhaps improve upon. The Legislature of every State in the Union should take this matter under consideration.

When currency reform is enacted in the United States this should form part of the program. Farmers never up to this time had any consideration whatsoever given their requirements as borrowers. In currency or banking legislation they have been left to get along as well as they could. This has been largely responsible for the financial positions of the Southern farmers to-day.

Men's Hats For Next Fall Pert Affairs, Blue and Green

Fall, 1913, hats for men are being shown by jobbers in Atlanta.

Take them big and large, they deserve the name the women give their headgear—they are "creations."

One "creation," for instance, is green velour, with a little bow at the back, and a button-hole stitched edge.

Brown-Perryman-Greene Company say velours, particularly in blue and green, are "the thing" for fall. Velours retail from $3.50 to $7.50.

The "Trooper" shape is proper. To make a "Trooper" shape, punch out a crown, then strike it with the edge of the hand, lengthwise. That's all.

Another "creation" particularly fetching is blue, with red, white and blue stitching which runs up and down the crown and around and around the brim. A button is in the geometrical center of the crown.

Perhaps the best of the bunch, to many tastes, is a green felt hat, "Trooper" shape, of course, with "zebra" finish. "Zebra" finish means that it is 'self-striped." Alternate stripes are smooth, the others are unfinished—fuzzy, in a word. The stripes are something less than half an inch wide, and run vertically on the crown. The hat really is not "freaky." It is attractive.

Other soft hats are lined with gay silk, have welt edges, or are otherwise adorned.

Brand-new is a chinchilla hat. Corduroy and cloth of all kinds will be much in vogue this autumn.

Caps promise to continue their unprecedented popularity. They come in all patterns—one, for instance, a "cubist" design in maroon and tan.

For the man who will wear a derby, regardless, it may be news to know that the derby crowns will be a bit higher this fall, the brims about the same. Crowns seem to be working back from the flat effect of a year back to the old-fashioned high crown. They change a bit each year.

Boys—the little fellows—wear telescope shape hats, while you can't give them to their elders.

Of course, this takes no account of the "staples"—the conservative styles which never change.

LUMBER SALES SHOW BUILDING KEEPS UP WELL

Dealers in Supplies Tell of Big Things in Prospect for the Coming Autumn.

Dealers in lumber, brick, cement, plaster and building supplies report that Atlanta is going straight ahead in its expansion.

Unanimously they report good trade. One particularly encouraging feature, according to their expressions, is the steady increase in the number of small residences, homes costing between $3,000 and $4,000, seeming to predominate.

Furthermore, building supplies dealers are unanimous in saying that there are great plans in store for fall. If all rumors are to be believed, property owners are contemplating improvements at almost a "boom" rate as soon as summer is past.

Paint dealers also are cheerful. They report contractors figuring on work far ahead, and also general activity in refurnishing buildings which are not new, but which are being remodeled to meet the city's growing needs.

Expressions from dealers in these lines follow:

V. H. Kriegshaber: "Our observation is that there is a good deal of building contemplated—in the wind, so to speak. When conditions settle down this fall, we look for an excellent trade in building supplies."

Randall Bros.: "Our business is better than it ever has been in lumber and building material. The increase has come from the increase in medium priced houses, residences to cost between $3,000 and $4,000.

"It is hard to tell about the fall, but we look for a good trade. Prices are a little lower. This always is the case in June and July. There will be a reaction in August and September, and quotations will be stronger. This is the history of every year."

Willingham-Tift Lumber Co.: "Business has been quite brisk up to the present time, with particular activity in the erection of small houses. This looks to us like the right time to build, for prices, in our opinion, are at the bottom."

Sciple Sons: "Business is fairly good at the present time, and it is picking up rapidly. We look for a very good trade for the rest of the year. The market is steady, still prices are reasonable and it is a good time to build. We notice a revival particularly in the erection of small houses."

Dozier & Gay: "From the number of contractors who are figuring on painting to be done between now and fall, we look for a big business.

"Every indication is that a large number of new homes are to be built, and there are rumors of several large buildings for wholesale houses and small factories.

Trained Men Great Need Of Business World To-day

Germany and other European countries are far ahead of the United States in the matter of commercial education. This point was brought out in a speech before the annual convention of the National Association of Credit Men at Cincinnati.

"The annual losses by reason of failures in the United States amount now to some $200,000,000," said Mr. Gaehr, "or over $2 per capita. To put it concreately, the national annual loss from bad debts equals one-half the estimate cost of the Panama Canal.

"Professor Munsterberg of Harvard University observes that a great difficulty of our educational system has been that it does not teach a man to find himself, and when he learns his strong and his weak points, his real inclinations toward and qualifications for a pursuit in life, it is usually too late.

"We find the highway of commerce and life marked with sad monuments of men crushed under the wheels of progress who would have made a success in life had they had the proper direction and counsel and had they been taught to fashion their thoughts to fruitful issues, men who could and should have been helped to usefulness.

"A further difficulty is that the vocational demands are not sufficiently fixed and brought to the attention of the younger generations. They know comparatively little of the inner labors, the inner values, and inner difficulties of various professions and callings.

"Then, too, in many cases trivial chance influences decide the choice of a vocation. Young men often drop into a place, rather than deliberately choosing business as a life vocation.

"The need of better trained men, especially commercially, made itself felt several years ago, and as a result a number of universities and colleges of high standing organized schools of commerce, Harvard University ranking its School of Business Administration as one of the graduate schools. Several cities have established high schools of commerce, yet the schoolmaster and the business man are still too far apart.

Auto Sales Gaining Over Last Season

Business Gradually Working to Credit Basis—Men Buy Cars as They Buy Homes.

"So far as we are able to judge from the business done by our clients, automobile sales in Atlanta have been exceptionally good for the period which began January 1," says Joseph N. Moody, of the Auto Credit Sales Company.

"The automobile firms whom we represent as a credit clearing house report an increase over last season.

"Sales probably would be larger yet if we did not check them. Amusing as the idea may seem, we are in a sense philanthropists, for we are saving the people from themselves, in this way: Suppose a man with moderate income tries to buy an auto on time. We investigate carefully. If he has a family of girls, let us say, all living at home, and no income but his salary, we turn him down. If he had a family of boys, all working and able to help purchase a car, all well and good.

"The automobile business is working more and more toward a time basis. A man buys his motor car now just as he would buy his home—on payments. I believe the future will see 90 per cent of the business done in that way."

City Salesmen Take Outing; Truce Kept

Jobbers Agree Not to Scout for Business During Absence of Their Representatives.

City salesmen will be conspicuous by their absence this week. The grocer or dry goods merchant who needs to replenish his stock must telephone to his jobber. The jobbers have agreed not to solicit business for the week, but just to take what comes to them in the natural course of events.

The reason for this strange pact is that the jobbers are on their annual outing at the Isle of Palms, near Charleston, S. C.

In order not to take advantage of their absence, fifty or more jobbers signed a formal agreement of neutrality for the week, and O. T. Camp, president of the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association, sent a letter to all members of his organization acquainting them with the state of affairs, and asking that they fill urgent needs only, by using the tele-

SELLING NOTES.

The heavy demand for sport coats this season is helping the dress goods trade over some rough spots. Chinchillas and eponges are used principally in the manufacture of these garments, and makers and wholesalers of these fabrics are doing a good business in them.

The firmness of 39-inch, 80 squares, is one of the features of the print cloth market at the moment. Printers have taken this construction in good quantities, and as a result of curtailed production by the mills the supply has fallen somewhat behind the demand.

A thing that is regarded as a good omen for the future of the men's wear fabrics trade is the promptness with which the manufacturing clothiers are settling up their accounts with the mill agents. In view of losses sustained by the clothiers as a result of the strike earlier in the year this action on their part is said to indicate the thorough soundness of the clothing industry.

RUSSIA SEEKING U. S. FRIENDSHIP IN NEW TREATY

Renewal of Pact Abrogated by Congress Is Proposed by Diplomats of Czar.

JEWISH QUESTION RISES

Washington Is Silent, but Understanding Is That Bryan Is Willing to Renew Negotiations.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Russia has asked the United States Government to take up the question of a renewal of a treaty of amity and commerce. The treaty of 1832 on that subject was abrogated out of hand by the Congress of the United States.

Secretary of State Bryan said today that the question of renewing negotiations had been discussed with the President, but that there was nothing yet to state in the way of detail.

It has been stated to Russia, however, that the United States is willing to resume negotiations which had been commenced during the administration of the office of Secretary of State by Mr. Knox.

Two Diplomats Suggested.

The President is soon to appoint an Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg and the report is that a selection will be made between Charles R. Crane and Frederick Penfield, of Philadelphia and New York.

The administration will have to meet the question of the Jewish passport and the recognition of the Jews as American citizens without regard to race or religion in the new negotiations. It is well known that Russia was anxious to renew negotiations very soon after the affront to the Jewish race under the old treaty or by Russia's construction of the old treaty was wiped out by the joint resolution of Congress which abrogated the treaty of 1832. This action of Congress was unequivocally an act to rebuke Russia for her treatment of the Jews generally and specifically for her continued refusal to recognize passports issued to Jews.

Knox Charges Discrimination.

Secretary of State Knox held that the question of Jews should not enter into the matter at all, and that the real question was that the treaty of 1832 discriminated against American citizens.

It was stated during the last administration that Russia was trying to separate the Jewish passport question from all other questions which would enter into a treaty of amity and commerce, such as is made with all enlightened nations.

The statement was made at the time that the old administration frowned on this none too subtle suggestion of Russia and held that there should be no treaty except one that would do full justice to all Americans—Jews, Irish, English, Germans—no matter what their origin if they were citizens of the United States.

White House Silent.

The State Department at that time knew that if a treaty was sent to the Senate which did not include a solution of the passport question it could not be ratified. It is said that the present administration understands the situation thoroughly and will endeavor to get a treaty which will cover all American interests favorably or none at all.

At the White House no expression of opinion is yet obtainable from any official reflecting the views of the President. There is no question, however, that the Ambassador to be appointed by the President will be fully instructed on the passport question before he goes to St. Petersburg.

SOCIETY WOMAN GOES TO WORK IN BIG STORE

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Miss Florence Lord, a graduate of Smith College, prominent socially in Chicago, New York and many other Eastern cities, and influential in suffrage clubs, has been working for a week or more in a Los Angeles department store, "to study the sociological conditions" at first hand, in order "to get away with her stunt."

Verses Tell How 'Imperator' Ought to be Pronounced

Great Trouble Found With Largest Liner Is That Everyone Gives Her a Different Name.

NEW YORK, June 28.—There is one fault already found with the Imperator, the giant vessel of the Hamburg-American line, which has just made her maiden voyage as the biggest ship afloat. The trouble is no one knows how to pronounce her name.

Many think they do, and as a result, she is called many things as Amerson Hough, the author, who answers to Huff, How, Hoe, Huge and a few other things.

In reply to inquiries as to the pronunciation the publicity agent says that the German pronunciation which is sanctioned by the modern Latinists makes the "a" in Imperator sound like the "a" in father. The accent is on the next syllable to the last. The poet laureate of the line has been so much puzzled by the variety of pronunciations that he has celebrated them in verse. Here are some of the couplets:

Biggest ship upon the water,
Gorgeous, quetnly Imperator.

If you do not like that style of calling the ship, perhaps the poet laureate remarked, you may take this:

In the finest class we slate her,
Peerless, German Imperator.

"And please," the poet said, "do not make peerless "beerless." Then, after running his fingers through his hair, the poet emitted and submitted this:

Vastness!—making senses totter!
Sea Collossus, Imperator!

"To the tune of 'Dixie,'" said the poet, we might get still another line on the pronunciation by singing:

Buckwheat cakes and a little batter
Taste quite good on the Imperator!

Greatest Salmon Run in Puget Sound

Quadrennial Migration of Horde of Fish From Fraser River Begins on Pacific Coast.

SEATTLE, June 28.—Steamship men report the approach of the annual Sockeye salmon run, which this year is the quadrennial big run, the greatest fish migration in the world. The fish now entering the Sound were born four years ago.

When the first white men came to the Northwest the Indians told them of this periodical big run, which had been regular as far back as their tribal legends went. It is the Canadian theory that the fish making up the big run are hatched in Fraser River and grow to maturity off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Four years ago so many traps were set for the mature fish that few were able to enter the Fraser, and the Canadians have insisted that the big run of 1913 would be a failure. Hence there is international interest in the size of the approaching swarms of salmon.

Anything Shocking Police, Called Bad

Criticism of Chiefs of Present Styles Declared Cause for Women of Country to Act

JOHNSTOWN, PA., June 28.—Attacking immodesty in women's dress, Mrs. H. W. Black, of Riverdale, today stirred the delegates and visitors gathered at the annual convention of the Cambria County Sabbath School Association, in session here.

"Christian women should not wear clothes that cause people to turn and look at them after they pass," declared Mrs. Black.

"The police chiefs in convention at Washington have gone on record demanding a reform in women's dress. When it gets so bad that the police have to ask such a thing, I think it is time Christian women should act."

My Experience With Tacco ---The New Handy Varnish

By EVELYN WREN

HOUSEWIVES realize that a coat of varnish is often more satisfactory than a new piece of furniture. It is a gratification to see the marred chair which belonged to the first parlor suit look like new. The dining table has held many simple breakfasts, many delightful luncheons and many bountiful dinners, and the steaming dishes have left ugly marks upon its once shining surface. To see it emerge from its varnish treatment is like welcoming back an old friend.

Varnishing seems like tiresome, dirty work, and a task suitable for men attired in overalls. I had always associated it with laborers' muscles and rough clothing until one day when I decided my desk at The American office needed some attention.

You do not become wholly unfeminine even if you are a newspaper woman. I was tired of seeing the black spot where the inkwell had overturned. I did not like the white mark where a glass of ice water had stood. All at once I had a hunch that I could do my work better if a marred place did not constantly remind me of a loss of temper and consequent lowering of self-respect and dignity. The refinishing of my desk became an obsession.

I read advertisements. Fortunately I am influenced by them. When I saw an advertisement of a varnish which a woman could apply with a cloth just as a furniture polish is applied, I resolved to investigate the novel preparation.

I went to the sixth floor of the Forsyth Building and entered the offices of The Amber Chemical Company. There I almost breathlessly inquired for Tacco, the water-proof, dust-proof and heat-proof varnish. (To tell the truth, I did not much mind about the heat-proof feature, for most of the heat in our office is caused by irritable nerves, and not by the weather. I am no exception.)

A bottle of Tacco was put into my hand, and I grasped a piece of cheesecloth and went energetically to work. I used just as much muscle as three years of typewriting will produce in a feminine arm. I worked as hard as any furniture polisher ever dreamed of doing in his worst nightmare. I thought I was doing well.

Imagine my chagrin and the expression on my face when the cloth was quietly taken from my vigorous grasp and I was shown that Tacco requires no rubbing. You do not have to use as much energy as I do in ordinary dusting.

Dust the article first. If it is much stained you might well apply a little soap and water. Then apply your Tacco to the dry surface. A piece of cheesecloth is the best medium, and a firm, gentle movement like that of dusting will put the varnish on in the best form. Then let it dry. At the end of five hours view the result and feel proud of your work which is really but a pastime.

Have a Tacco day. Take the breakfast cloth off when husband has departed for the office. Apply Tacco according to the directions on the box, and the dining table will be ready for use at lunch time. Of course if husband is a capitalist and breakfasts at 10:30 instead of at 7 you will probably not have the pleasure of using Tacco yourself. Let us hope that you are one of those domestic little housewives who just "loves" to make your home pretty with your personal effort, and that husband has not outgrown his appreciation of the little touches which you can give just a bit better than any hired help.

The table in the living room has played an important part in the happiness of the household. You could not think of home without that table, and the ones you see in the store windows never look quite as hospitable or nearly so homelike. Here Jack has read his paper and graciously explained politics to your bewildered self as you stitched on little frocks which were to go to Kindergarten with Little Girl. It has held Big Brother's school books and his drawing instruments. (Said drawing instruments are responsible for the big unsightly gash at the end.) All in all, you feel as you begin to apply Tacco with a gentle hand that this table has many dear memories. You would like to see it as fresh and pretty as it was when you and Jack picked it out. It seemed the finest table in the world on that day. How you blushed, and how manly Jack looked as he quietly drew the money from his pocket and ordered it sent to your new home.

When the table is finished the big chair will seem more worn and bruised than ever. You never realized how shabby the living room was getting. It seems but a day or two ago that you decided to surprise Jack with that comfortable chair on his birthday. You saved from your housekeeping money bit by bit and grew anxious toward the last for fear the fund would not be large enough. You grow tender toward that big chair as you remember Jack's eyes when he first espied it and then quickly gazed at you. The lovelight was there, even if you had been married a half-dozen years, and had but recently lost many hours of sleep with Little Girl's teething episode.

A HINT TO THE WISE

The tender feelings do not interfere with the application of Tacco. Let retrospection have its sway, and when you have had the pleasure of many happy memories look at the result. The table will shine like new. The gash made by Big Brother's steel ruler will not show. Tacco has acted as a filler and made the surface smooth as glass. Dusting will be a light task now. You may even scrub the table, for it has a water-proof finish now. The chair will bring the lovelight to Jack's eyes anew, for he, too, will remember the day your love made the gift.

If you are a housekeeper, you will welcome Tacco as a means of making your home brighter and more cheerful. You need never wish for an opportunity to send shabby furniture away to be refinished. You can buy a bottle of Tacco for only 50 cents. The economy of it will be demonstrated by its first use, and you will be ready to purchase a quart, half-gallon or gallon can before many days.

When I like anything I never take my liking for granted. I analyze my appreciation. Here is my analysis of my fondness for Tacco:

It requires absolutely no rubbing.
It dries in from two to five hours.
It is water-proof as well as dust and heat proof.
It is economical in time and money.

Well, my desk at The American office has had its Tacco treatment. Come in to see it, if you like. Then investigate Tacco as I did, if you like, or better still, benefit by my written experience and buy a bottle or can at any good drug or hardware store.

Do you live out of town? If you do, you would like to hear about a splendid proposition for out-of-town dealers. Write to-day for information and do not risk the loss of the agency in your town. Write and see what The Amber Chemical Company has to tell you.

BOY CONFESSES KILLING MOTHER AND BROTHER

Berkley Fleming, 19, of Ironton, Mo., Appears Unconcerned When Accused of Crime.

IRONTON, O., June 28.—Berkley Fleming, 19, has confessed to shooting his half-brother, Culbertson Stewart, almost three years ago, and his mother a few days ago.

The police took the boy to his grandfather's farm, where he pointed out the grave of his mother and stood by unconcerned as the body was removed. He was not impressed when the skeleton of Culbertson was exhumed.

Believe Boy Degenerate.

Chief of Police King, Dr. Wells and the Rev. W. H. Hampton, who have suspected for several months that Berkeley killed Culbertson, believe Berkeley a degenerate of the worst type.

Their theory is that he killed Culbertson because of jealousy and that he had worked out his carefull arranged plan of concealing the crime before he shot his brother.

The murder of the mother, they believe, was a part of his plan to keep her from exposing his former murder. A bullet hole in the back of the head of each victim and the mother's bruised face, say these men, destroy any accident theory.

Mother Is Suspicious.

Culbertson Stewart disappeared July 14, 1910, Berkeley's 17th birthday. The other brother afterward wrote letters to his mother purporting to come from Culbertson. She became suspicious, and he decided to kill her also.

After the crime he was found at a hotel waiting for dinner. He had gone there in a buggy to take his sweetheart riding. He made no objection to going to the police station, where he confessed.

Aged Pair Perform Own Marriage Rites

Bridegroom, 75 Years Old, Declares It Was His Sixth Experience With Such Ceremony

BEAVER, PA., June 28.—Dr. Akkelon Mercer, seventy-five years old of Beaver Falls, and Sarah L. Calgrove, sixty-five years old, of Wetzel county, West Virginia, performed their own marriage ceremony here.

When the pair obtained their license they informed Hamilton, the clerk, that all they needed was a license, as they could dispense with all bridal attendants and the minister.

Doctor Mercer and Mrs. Calgrove to Hamilton issued the license for marry themselves in the presence of witnesses. Doctor Mercer stated that he had been married five times, and in each instance he and his bride had performed their own ceremony, always in the presence of two witnesses.

Defaulter Hired to Audit Bank's Books

Man Who Wrecked Financial Institution, Will Go to Work to Untangle Its Affairs.

CARUTHERSVILLE, MO., June 28.—A. B. Tindle, cashier of the Pemiscot County Bank, which closed its doors following the discovery that he was short in his accounts, will be retained by the reorganizers to aid in straightening out its affairs.

"There is no desire on the part of the directors of the bank to prosecute Tindle," one of the directors said to-day. "He has turned over all his property and has been punished enough by his sudden fall from a position of trust and respect in the community."

Tindle's personal fortune is estimated at $200,000.

The action of the directors of the bank in retaining him in the task of straightening out the confusion caused by his shortage meets with the approval of a majority of the citizens it is said.

Prehistoric Flying Reptile Discovered

Skeleton of Pterodactyl Monster Is Found in Wyoming Fossil Bed by Geologists.

CASPER, WYO., June 28.—Dr. F. Salathe and D. VanWagener, geologists, who are prospecting this vicinity for oil, reported the discovery eighteen miles from Casper of a fossil bed, conspicuously visible in which is the almost perfect silicified skeleton of a flying reptile, probably of the pterodactyll, which measures at least sixty feet in length. The creature in life must have had a wing expansion of eighty feet.

Millionaire Gives Free Circus to Pay Pledge of Boyhood

Packer Leaves Home as Child to Make Fortune After Missing Show for Lack of Money.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Edward Tilden, millionaire packer, produced a circus to-day for "all the children within walking or riding distance" of the Tilden estate at Lake Delavan, Wis.

The huge entertainment cost $10,000 and had been planned for 25 years by the host. It grew out of a painfully vivid recollection of a circus that had come to town and gone away again without his getting inside the tent. It was fresh in his mind when he left Delavan a quarter of a century ago to come to Chicago to "make his fortune." At the train Edward Tilden told friends:

"I'm coming back some day and buy the town and give everyone a good time, and let every boy here see a circus."

A special carload of entertainers left Chicago for Delavan this morning. A dog and pony show and a band of 40 pieces left last night. The children also saw an aeroplane flight, had automobile rides and a big dinner.

Child Offered Home For Looking Pleasant

Smiling Face of Orphan in Photographed Group Wins Hearts of Couple Who Lost Baby.

POCAHONTAS, ILL., June 28.—In Pocahontas there may be a home for a little girl because she "looked pleasant" when a photographer took the picture of a group of children waiting for an automobile ride. Children in the orphan asylums on that day were given an outing by the Automobile Club of St. Louis.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miles, of Pocahontas, adopted a little girl several years ago. She died. Something about two of the little girls whose pictures appeared in the newspaper reminded them of the little one who died, and they have written for information about the children.

INDIAN GIRLS WILL TRY SKILL AT HAT-MAKING

CARLISLE, PA., June 28.—Indian art will now show itself in hats. At least that is the natural conclusion drawn from an announcement made by the Carlisle Indian School that a course in millinery has been established for aborigines.

Indian art, the absolutely original gift of America to the world, has expressed itself in pottery, in rugs, in a dozen other ways, but it has never before entered the field of headgear, and it is expected that this new innovation may yet cast the chic French models into the deep shadows.

SCHOOL ROLLS FAIL TO KEEP UP WITH BIRTHS

Wide Discrepancy Is Shown in Number of Pupils and Increase of Children.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Chapters on "Roman Catholic Schools," "Typical Health Teaching Agencies of the United States," and "Parent-Teacher Associations" are special features of the annual report of the United States Commissioner of Education, just issued.

In addition to these the report contains substantial chapters on the following subjects: General survey of the year; educational legislation during 1912; higher education; city school systems; rural education; recent movements in negro education; a review of agricultural education; progress in vocational education; library development; education in Alaska, the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and other dependencies; Indian education; educational activities in Canada, Latin-America, Great Britain, Northern Europe, France and Switzerland, Germany, Southern Europe and Russia; together with a general view of conditions in Asia, Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

In his introduction to the report the commissioner discusses the wide discrepancy between the increase in the number of children of school age and the actual enrollment; an apparent reduction in teachers' salaries during the year; the remarkable increase in high schools and high school enrollment throughout the country; the decrease in professional schools, due to the enforcement of higher standards, lack of preparation of teachers, which Dr. Claxton characterizes as "one of the greatest evils of our school systems;" the shortness of the school term in the United States as compared with other civilized nations; and the abnormally large percentage of illiteracy in the rural districts.

Woman Jury Awards Verdict in Oregon

Plaintiff Is Awarded Damages of $5 in Legal Fight Over Cut of a Skirt.

ST. JOHNS, ORE., June 28.—The first regularly called woman's jury to serve in the State of Oregon tried a case in Justice Williams' court here and, after twenty minutes' conference, returned a verdict of $5 for the plaintiff. The jury was drawn in the regular form from a list of fifty women who have been chosen as liable for jury service during the year.

The case was one involving the price of a skirt. The plaintiff averred that a skirt which she had made by a local seamstress did not fit. She brought suit to recover the price of the skirt.

The fair jurors fixed the damages at $5.

FINDS COIN BEHIND PANEL; DIVIDES WITH FRIENDS

SHARON, PA., June 28.—As six carpenters were tearing down a house near the Leesburg coal mines, one found a false panel in a wall of the dining room from which he took a powder can containing $1,500.

The finder kept $500 as his share and each of his fellow workmen was given $200.

USE OF SCHOOLS AS AID TO LOVE MAKING URGED

Peace Executive Would Make Social Centers of Houses of Instruction in Big Cities.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Arthur Deering Call, executive director of the American Peace Society, has undertaken to win for the young men and women of America the right to make love to each other.

Said he:

"One of the nation's greatest needs is the promotion of acquaintance between young men and women, the fathers and mothers of the next generation, under free, attractive and wholesome conditions. We need more wholesome conditions for 'courting.'

"I can think of nothing so important to this generation as the lifemates of its various individuals, or so vital to the next as its fathers and mothers and home life generally.

Would Use Schools.

"I propose a wider use of school buildings for social and neighborhood purposes. I do not want love-making a part of the school curriculum, but I think that the same lips that recite the multiplication table or decline a noun in the class room in the garish light of day might just as well whisper tender nothings while the moon peeks in at the window later on.

"For a great majority of our young people in the cities the dance halls provide the only regular amusement they can afford, where any man who has the price can step up to any young woman and ask her to dance. No wonder such places become recruiting places for vice.

No Instruction Needed.

"Why not let the school be a cross between the church and the saloon? Every school should be arranged so that in the evening the young folks could gather there for games, folk-dancing classes, music, athletics, sewing classes and moving pictures.

"All the young folks want is opportunity to meet under proper environment. We don't have to teach the men how to make love, or young women how to listen to them, but we owe it to the race not to hinder or pervert their natural tendencies by improper environment."

NEGRO GIVES FOUR PENNIES FOR FIVE DOLLAR BILLS

INDIANAPOLIS, June 28.—While Miss Stella Koch was busy tending a stand on the city market last night, a well dressed negro asked if she could give him some paper money for gold.

"I have four $5 gold pieces," he explained, "and I would like to get some paper money in exchange for them, as I do not like to carry gold in my pocket."

The girl said she could accommodate him, and going to the cash drawer produced four $5 bills. She handed the bills to the negro, and he dropped four bright, shining pennies into her oustretched hand.

TARIFF CUTS IN SENATE TO AID NATION'S DINING ROOM

Many House Figures Lowered and Free List Increased — Despite Cuts, Bill Is Expected to Produce $5,000,000 More Cash.

Atlanta's Need for Help to Reduce the High Cost of Living Is Shown by Figures Indicating Soaring Price of Foodstuffs.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The revised tariff bill laid before the Senate Democratic caucus by Mr. Simmons, chairman of the finance committee, carries important reductions in the Underwood tariff bill rates on iron, steel and other metal products. It added cattle, wheat, pig iron, Angora wool, and many other articles to the free list, and increased rates on many classes of cotton goods and some silk products.

President Wilson's desires as to free sugar in 1916 and free wool at once, prevailed in the redraft of the bill. To the list of "market basket" reductions the Underwood bill contained, the Senate committee added many important items.

In the general level of its rates the "Simmons bill" represents a heavier cut from the present Payne-Aldrich rates than the House bill.

Senator Simmons believes the caucus will discuss the bill not longer than a week.

Simmons' Statement.

The bill probably will come to a vote in the Senate by September 1.

In a statement Chairman Simmons said:.

"The revenues of the Government will be increased approximately $5,000,000, laid in hand with a reduction of the taxation following the reductions already made in the House bill. These increases in revenues will be made up by a tariff on bananas and restoration of the full internal duty of $1.10 per gallon on brandies used in fortifying wines.

"With regard to the sugar schedule no change was made from the provision of the Underwood bill except to strike out 'sugars tinctured and colored,' for fear that ultramarine blue used in bleaching sugar might be regarded as colored matter and thereby refined sugar become subject to a duty of 2 cents a pound.

"With regard to cigars and other tobacco products from the Philippines the provision of the Underwood bill permitting cigars with 80 per cent of tobacco the product of the Philippine Islands and 20 per cent the produce of foreign countries to be admitted into the United States free of duty, was stricken out of the bill. Only cigars and tobacco products exclusively of Philippine tobacco to be admitted free of duty into the United States."

The Liquor Schedule.

Of the amendment to the liquor schedule, the statement said:

"An additional section is added repealing so much of the act approved October 1, 1890, and acts amendatory thereto, so far as they relate to the use free of tax of spirits for the fortification of sweet wines, and providing that hereafter all wine spirits, grape brandy and alcohol so used shall be subject to the same tax as in other cases.

"It is intimated that this tax will result in an increase of revenue of approximately $7,000,000 per annum.

"The Senate Finance Committee followed the House and treated the cotton yarns as the House bill treated cotton cloth," the statement continued, "by adding a duty of two and one-half per cent upon cotton cloth when combed, bleached, dyed, mercerized or colored. This is the most important change that the Senate committee made in the House cotton schedule."

Retaliatory Clause.

The amendment permitting the President to proclaim special rates when foreign nations discriminate against the United States provides that he shall exercise this authority on certain articles, as follows:

"Fish, fresh, smoked and dried, pickled or otherwise prepared, 1 cent per pound; on wheat, 10 cents per bushel; on wheat flour, 45 cents per barrel; on coffee, 3 cents per pound; on tea, 10 cents per pound.

"On the following articles a duty

Pigeons to Keep City Sane, Says Expert

Dr. B. Chester King, of Atlanta, Tells Chicago That Its Safety Rests With Doves.

CHICAGO, June 28.—If Chicagoans are to be saved from the mad house at all it will be by the pigeons.

Dr. B. Chester King, an Atlanta alienist, finds hope for the city's sanity in the pigeons that flutter about the Loop all day.

"Several times each day," says the doctor, "the man who works in an office building should go to a window with the expectation of seeing one or more doves. Should he spy them, I suggest that he forget all else. There is something in just the name 'dove' that has a soothing effect upon the nerves."

Pastor Gets Town To Give Day to Ball

All Girard Suspends Business to Attend Games, but There Is No Playing on Sunday.

GIRARD, KANS., June 28.—Girard has found a happy solution to the problem of Sunday baseball by setting out one day in the week when everybody suspends business operations and goes to the ball game.

This arrangement came through the suggestion of the Rev. M. L. Morrison, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, after considerable wrangling early in the summer between people who wanted ball games on Sunday and those who did not. The new arrangement was tried yesterday for the second time. Everyone is pleased and the blue laws are enforced.

THE STICK-AT-IT CHARACTERISTIC

And the cumulative force of hard work reap richer rewards than genius.

All men can not have brilliant minds, but almost every one can cultivate continuity of purpose and develop a large capacity for work.

All great business successes have been the results of ceaseless and unremitting labor rather than the outgrowth of unusual intelligence.

An ordinary amount of common sense and a little energy in reading and using Hearst's Sunday American and Georgian "Want Ads" will put you ahead of your fellows.

Federal Soldiers and Civilians Shot Down in Cold Blood at Durango.

CAPTIVES PUT TO TORTURE

Atrocities Practiced to Force Citizens to Reveal Hiding Places of Wealth.

MEXICO CITY, June 28.—One thousand soldiers and civilians were slaughtered by rebels when the city of Durango, capital of the State of the same name, fell into the insurgents' hands, according to word received here to-day from that city. Many of the victims were members of prominent families.

Men and women were tortured to death when they did not produce wealth at the bidding of the rebels.

Fighting between federals and insurgents is going on at Uruapam in the State of Michocan. Cuquio, in the State of Jalisco, was taken by rebels yesterday and the garrison put to the sword.

EL PASO, TEXAS, June 28.—Pancho Villa, Mexican rebel leader, who has announced his intention of taking Juarez and executing General Salazar, commander of the garrison, in the bull ring, established outposts within three miles of the town.

Ortega, who has 500 men, may cooperate with Villa. If Juarez falls, it will remove the most important Mexican port of entry on the United States border from Huerta and may result in the downfall of the Huerta government.

Prince of Wales Spends $1.25 a Week

Writes Home for More Money, but Mother Considers That This Amount Is Ample.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—The amount allotted to the Prince of Wales for pocket money has just become known. Every Saturday he receives just $1.25, which he terms his "old age pension." He is occasionally a trifle extravagant and mortgages his money in advance.

Toward the end of the last term at Oxford he was asked by a friend to join a party to visit the theater.

The Prince's reply was, "Sorry, old man, but I am clean broke."

"Why don't you write home for some more?" asked the friend.

"I did," replied the Prince, "but mother said I was too extravagant."

Mrs. Marshall Finds $2,000 House at Last

Wife of Vice President Refuses to Pay More, Wishing to Live Within Husband's Salary.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The long house hunt of Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice President, is probably over, as she has found a suitable house on Columbia Road, Northwest. Her hunt was prolonged owing to the fact that she set $2,000 yearly as the price they would pay. The Marshalls have said they must live within their salary, and Washington society is eagerly watching to see how they will manage with the many social and financial demands upon them. Mrs. Marshall wanted to go to the country, but feared it would be too far for the Congressional wives to visit.

Congress to Force White Slave Inquiry

Reasons for Postponement of Diggs-Caminetta Case by Department of Justice To Be Bared.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Investigation of the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave case by the Department of Justice must go on, is the edict of the Congressmen behind the resolutions.

They are determined to bare the entire correspondence between McNab and the Attorney General and uncover the influences behind the white slave and Western Fuel cases.

If the House for any reason fails to take up the investigation Tuesday, the Senate is determined to dig to the bottom of the matter itself. No "pull" or influence can block this inquiry, it is declared.

King George Finds Platonic Romance With Fair Countess

Monarch Pays Marked Attention to Wife of Lord Mar While Queen Mary Is Absent.

Special Cable to The Sunday American.

LONDON, June 28—Every one thought King George so extremely domestic and conventional that it has come as rather a shock to people outside court circles to find him paying marked attention to the beautiful Countess of Mar and Killie.

The lovely countess, who is in her prime and a favorite of King Edward, is to be found wherever the King is.

Lord Mar goes about very little, but it was noticed that he and his wife were included in the royal house party at Windsor Castle for the Ascot races.

When Queen Mary was absent from the races, Lady Mar was always at the King's side, but when Her Majesty was present Lady Mar mixed with the general crowd in the royal inclosure.

Lady Mar is very sympathetic and attractive. The inner circle at the court is intensely amused at this mild platonic flirtation.

Society Youth Comes to Grief When He Disregards Rules of Conduct Fixed by Hostess.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—Mrs. John Astor is becoming known in social circles as a hostess whose rules of conduct must be obeyed by her guests. One young man who, until recently, doubted this, is now lamenting his mistake. Mrs. Astor permits the "tango" and "turkey trot" at her dances, but insists that they be danced in moderation. When this guest so far forgot himself as to verge on to the vulgar, he was quickly shown the door.

Mrs. Astor's example is not followed by all of London's hostesses. At the entertainments of a certain duchess the ragtime is accompanied by a great deal of roughness, being usually danced with the lights out.

Early Cold Injures Crops of Michigan

Wheat Promises but Half a Crop, Hay One-third, and Fruit Outlook Is Poor.

LANSING, MICH., June 28.—Michigan Agricultural College field men and district supervisors report crop prospects of the State the poorest in years, due to the early cold, wet season and late frosts, followed by the present hot, dry weather.

Wheat promises little better than half a crop, hay one-third, oats one-half. Early potatoes have been badly frosted in sections and will not produce over one-quarter crop without rain.

Fruit is equally poor. Plums and grapes are expected to be about 30 or 40 per cent of a crop.

Arriving here by the Hamburg-American liner Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, she left for St. Louis, where the Baroness will be married to Mr. Hurley.

PANAMA, June 28.—The Atlantic waters which have been allowed to run slowly against the lower gates at Gatun are at sea level to-day. The large gates are being put to the actual test of full pressure for the first time.

The engineers are watching the rise of the water with interest, and they report that the gates are watertight. The water is at the 50-foot stage.

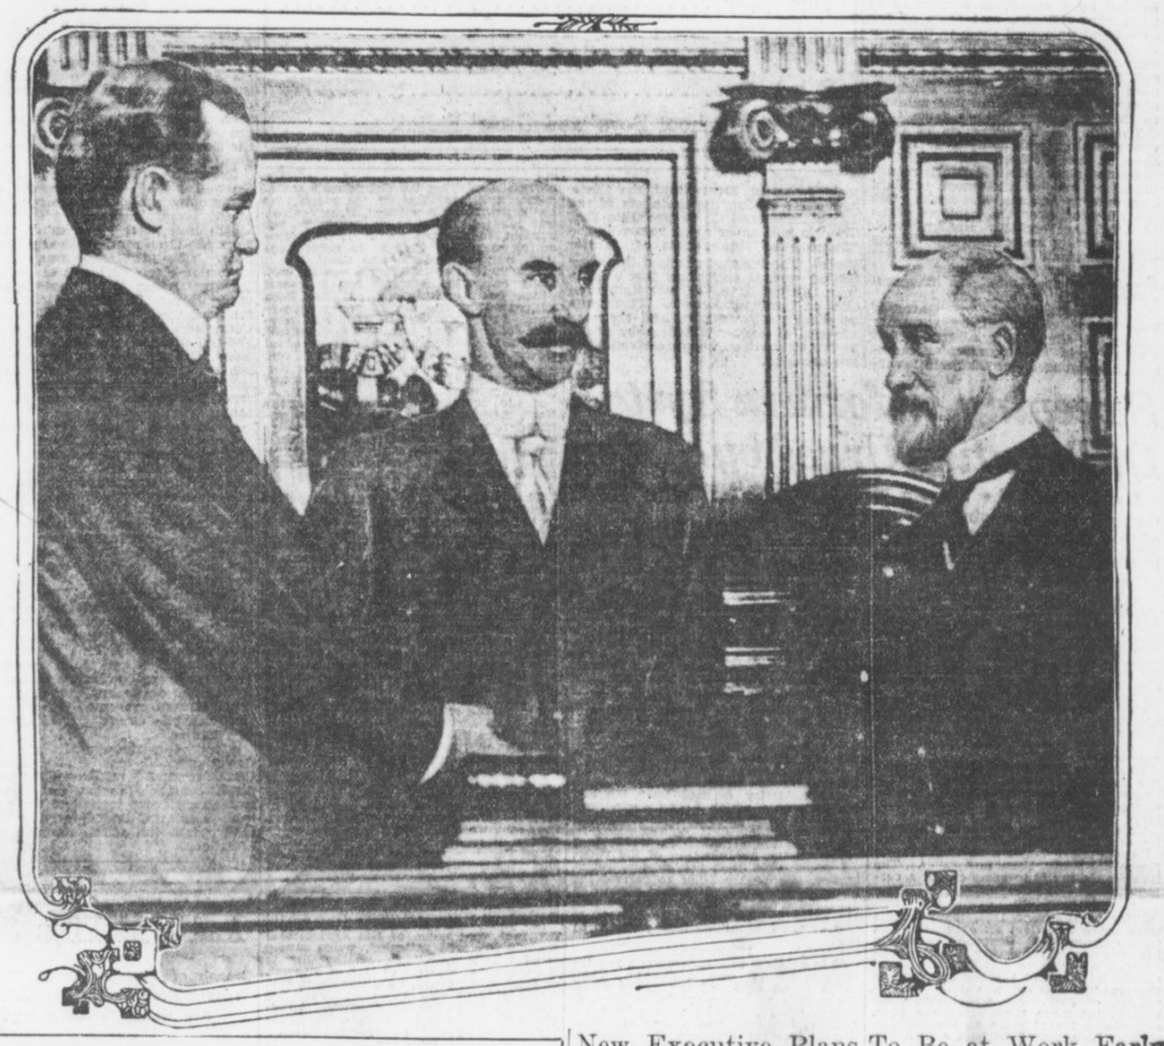
SLATON'S BILLS READY TO PASS

Inaugurated With Utmost Simplicity

Legislature Wants to Aid Governor

Governor John M. Slaton, taking the oath of office at the Capitol yesterday. On the left is the new Executive, while Randolph Anderson, of Savannah, President of the Senate, is shown between him and Governor Brown, who retired to private life as soon as the oath was administered.



Inaugural Address of Slaton Urges New Taxation System

SWEEPING legislative reforms are urged by Governor John M. Slaton in his inaugural address and message delivered to the Legislature Saturday. Following are the ten most important reforms he urges:

1. An occupation tax on corporations, with the maximum $200 per annum on corporations of more than $1,000,000 capital; the tax on smaller corporations to be adjusted accordingly.

2. Changes in the registration laws. He says: "The present registration law should be so amended that when a voter has once proven his qualification by registering and being enrolled, he shall remain a registered voter unless disqualified for some cause due himself."

3. The need for good roads, with a highway commissioner or a commission. The message says: "An intelligent highway commission, or commissioner, clothed with the proper authority, could be the means of untold benefit in suggesting the proper methods of building roads."

4. A declaration that the sale of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, the State's property, should not be considered. The problem of its disposal should be considered by a commission, with directions to report its recommendations and its reasons therefor.

5. The passage of a law abolishing the defendant's statement in criminal trials, and providing in its place that he be sworn as a witness, if he so desires.

6. The Legislature is urged to consider legislation making the carrying of concealed weapons a felony, subject to reduction to a misdemeanor by either judge or jury.

7. Consideration of proper and remedial banking laws. "The banks of a State perform public functions, and as such are properly subjected to governmental supervision," says the message.

8. The creation of a new office, to be known as State Auditor.

9. Sweeping reforms in the tax system of Georgia. The system in vogue in this State is wrong, and the equalization of taxation, either through enforcement of present laws or new correctives, is urged.

10. That the Legislature investigate the decline of the agricultural schools and take steps to apply the proper remedies.

Gainesville Naval Academy to Hold a Regatta on July 4

Riverside Cadets Expect Hundreds of Visitors to See Sports on the Chattahoochee.

GAINESVILLE, June 28.—The first regatta of the Riverside Summer Naval School and Camp, which was opened here Thursday, will be held on July 4. Hundreds of visitors are expected to be on hand to see the sports.

The naval school and camp has a large enrollment this year, students being registered from practically all of the Southern States, including Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina, Kentucky and Virgina.

Captain Patterson, of the Culver Ind., Military Academy, will have charge of the naval and swimming departments this year, while Professor R. E. Brooks, superintendent of the Dublin public schools, will assist in the academic department.

Georgia Bankers to Urge Laws at This Legislative Session

One Provides Larger Salary for State Treasurer—Banking Department Considered.

The Georgia Bankers' Association, of which L. P. Hillyer, of Macon, is president and Haynes McFadden, of Atlanta, secretary, will urge new laws in the present session of the Legislature, according to announcement Saturday.

The association now has under advisement several bills including one for a constitutional amendment providing larger appropriations for the State Treasurer, who supervises $6,000,000, it is said, on a salary fund of $3,100.

The amendment, though, is being considered only by the association thus far. It has not been acted on. Haynes McFadden Saturday said a bill creating a banking department probably would not come up at this session of the Legislature.

New Executive Plans To Be at Work Early Each Day and to Devote Entire Time to State.

Inducted into office with a simplicity that harked back to the days of Thomas Jefferson, John Marshall Slaton will enter the Capitol Monday morning for the first time as Governor of the State of Georgia. Eager to begin work for the State and the people, Governor Slaton plans to be at his office at an unusually early hour, and will plunge into the affairs of the State of Georgia with the energy and ability that has made him a leading figure among the attorneys and citizens of Atlanta.

Backed by his dominant personality and with the support of practically every member of the Senate and the House of Representatives, Governor Slaton's administration promises to be as harmonious and productive of good as that of any Governor the State has ever had.

Gossip heard among the legislators gathered for the sessions of the General Assembly indicate that every reform urged by the new Governor will meet with the approval of the majority of the members of both Houses.

Bills Are Now Ready.

It is regarded as significant, and indicative of the success of Governor Slaton's administration, that many bills embodying the recommendations and suggestions made in his inaugural address have been prepared and will be introduced and action taken on them during the present session. Several already have been introduced, both in the House and Senate.

It is generally understood, though it has never been officially confirmed, that Governor Slaton will send no more messages to the General Assembly during the present session unless some unforeseen emergency should arise that demands immediate attention. He has given his views on the sort of legislation that is needed, and has often expressed his complete confidence in the ability and the willingness of the Legislature to do what was right and necessary without any prompting from the head of the State Government.

The respect and confidence that Governor Slaton feels in ex-Governor Brown is shown by the fact that almost without exception the men who served the latter during the four years of his incumbency will also hold office during the Slaton administration.

Jesse G. Perry, who has served Governor Brown as private secretary, will fill the same position under Governor Slaton.

Ulm Is Executive Secretary.

Hardy Ulm is also retained as Executive Secretary. The knowledge these men have, gained through their connection with Governor Brown, is expected to be one of inestimable benefit to Governor Slaton during the first few weeks of his incumbency.

That Governor Slaton intends to give all his time to the business of the State and serve them to the utmost of his ability is shown by the fact that though he owns a handsome home on Peachtree Street, and a country home on Peachtree Road, he has moved his family into the ancient executive mansion on Peachtree Street, and will occupy the building as his home during his term as Governor. He took possession of the mansion Saturday afternoon within an hour after his inauguration as Governor of the State.

capitol, where Governor Slaton and ex-Governor Brown greeted their friends. Governor and Mrs. Slaton and Mrs. W. D. Grant, Mrs. Slaton's mother, were entertained at luncheon by ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown, at the executive mansion. After the luncheon Mr. Brown turned over to Governor Slaton the mansion that had been his home, and with Mrs. Brown boarded a train for Marietta.

Marietta Greets Brown.

They were given a tremendous reception by the citizens of the Cobb County capitol. Practically two-thirds of the population of Marietta, headed by a reception committee of prominent citizens, met them at the depot and welcomed them to the town that had been their home for many years before Mr. Brown became Governor. Mr. and Mrs. Brown plan to spend the coming week in Marietta, and will then retire for the summer to their Cherokee County farm.

Though the inauguration of Governor Slaton was simple, it is not thought that his home life will follow the same plan. Mrs. Slaton is recognized as one of the most brilliant hostesses in Atlanta, and society folk are all agog over the rumored plans of a brilliant social campaign which it is generally understood Mrs. Slaton will inaugurate as soon as she has completed her establishment as the first lady of the State. An inaugural reception will be held July 2.

The precedent set by Governor Brown and continued by Governor Slaton of eliminating all pomp and display from the inaugural ceremonies has aroused considerable favorable comment throughout the State, especially among the members of the Legislature, and it is probable that Georgia will never see a return to the "brass band" inaugurals of former years. The inauguration of Governor Slaton was, if anything, just a little more simple than the last inauguration of Governor Brown. There was no display of any sort, and the very absence of elaborate ceremony added to the strength and impressiveness of the occasion.

Sweeping Reform in System Of Taxation Urged by Slaton

Laws to aid the finances of Georgia and sweeping reforms of the tax system of the State are stressed in the inaugural message of Governor Slaton.

In part, Governor Slaton said:

Our system is wrong. The Legislature can appropriate what it pleases, and the tax rate remains the same. The Legislator has made himself a favorite with his constituency by voting for every popular appropriations and nothing suffers but the State's credit.

Unless some check be made, an increase of revenue will be of no avail in preventing the financial embarrassment of the State. Under the enthusiasm of the moment one appropriation bill may exhaust it.

More than four-fifths of the States of the Union derive revenue from what is known as an inheritance tax. I am informed that this tax is the subject of least complaint.

This form of tax has been approved by the highest authorities and is one of the easiest borne and subject to fewer hardships than any other. The inheritance tax is to some extent a corrective.

Corporation Taxation.

Prior to the year 1905, many efforts were made to collect an occupation tax from corporations. Governor Terrell, in his message of the year 1905, recommended a tentative privilege tax based on capital stock of $100,000 per year on corporations having a capital of $1,000,000, or over. He anticipated from this source more than $100,000 a year, and thought that such sum could reasonably be expected without a hardship. The State, however, has not received one-half this sum, and during the year 1913 the estimated revenue from this source is $48,000.

I recommend that the maximum occupation tax on corporations having $1,000,000 capital and over be $200 per annum, and the tax on corporations of less capital be adjusted accordingly.

Equalization of taxes, either through the enforcement of present laws, or new correctives, so that each may bear his proportionate burden, would not mean the increase of taxes upon any one now performing his duty, but would rather mean the lightening of his unfair portion of the load. I commend this subject to your attention.

Bonded Debt To Be Refunded.

An additional reason for establishing and maintaining the State's finances on as sound basis is the necessity of making provision for more than one-half of the entire bonded debt of the State, maturing in 1915. This is an imperative duty resting on this Legislature.

No sinking fund was provided by law to retire the bonds aggregating $3,679,900 which are due in 1915. The entire State's debt is $6,452,500, which does not include the obligations to the University, amounting to $291,500, and the landscrip fund of $90,000.

All the debt of $6,452,500 is provided for, or will be provided for, by the sinking fund required to be raised annually until the debt is paid off, except the $3,679,000 which falls due in May and July, 1915.

If refunding bonds were issued in 1915, making the first $100,000 fall due in 1935, then the sinking fund could be made to run continuously and retire each year, until paid, $100,000 of this series of 1915 refunding bonds.

This plan would seem advisable in order to relieve the treasury and the people of the increased burden at this time, unless financial conditions at the time of the sale of the bonds should demand that their redemption begin at an earlier period in order to effectuate their more satisfactory disposition.

Registration of Voters.

We believe the present registration law should be so amended that when a voter has once proven his qualification by registering and being enrolled, he shall remain a registered voter unless disqualified for cause due to himself.

The foregoing extract from the last platform upon which I was elected, expresses a principle which deserves universal acceptance. It contemplates no change of the constitution which provides for the qualification of the voter.

I recommend that the present registration law be amended to correct the injustice indicated. It would always be provided that the voter must have paid his taxes and not subjected himself to any of the disqualifications provided by law.

Highways.

It is needless to impress upon you the importance of our highways. Their value is an asset of the entire State. An intelligent Highway Commission, or Commissioner, clothed with proper authority, could be the means of untold benefit in suggesting proper methods of building the road adapted to the locality, or in solving the problems of engineering which might arise in various sections.

I call your attention to the Western and Atlantic Railroad, the lease of which terminates in 1919. No one, I apprehend, would or should consider its sale, but the problem of its disposition should be considered by a commission with directions to report its recommendations and its reasons therefor.

To delay this matter will mean to put the State at the inexcusable disadvantage of unpreparedness when the time arrives for imperative action.

The Criminal Code.

One of the fundamental purposes of government is the protection of life and safety of the citizen. If the rules of evidence are so shaped as to prevent the discovery of the truth, and if the State is deprived of the means of sifting the facts, the judges and juries are not to be blamed if crimes are allowed to go unpunished.

It is an anomaly that a defendant should take the stand, make any statement that he sees fit, or that his shrewd lawyer has prepared, and being immune from cross-examination, demand that the judge shall charge the jury that they may accept his unsworn statement in preference to all the evidence in the case.

I, therefore, recommend that a law be passed abolishing the defendant's statement, and providing in its place that he be sworn as a witness, if he desires, but his failure to be so sworn be not subject to adverse comment by prosecuting counsel. This is in accordance with current Federal and State law.

The legislation in Georgia against carrying concealed weapons has in recent years been conspicuous. It has been suggested by the law of self-preservation. Daily men of men who have shot others, and have been acquitted on the old statement that the deceased threw his hand on his hip pocket, and the defendant shot in fear of his life. When searched, the dead man was found generally unarmed.

If the carrying of concealed weapons were made a felony, subject to be reduced to a misdemeanor by either judge or jury, the deterrent effect of such a law would be the saving of many a life. I earnestly recommend to you the consideration of this question.

Banking Laws.

The banks of a State perform public functions, and as such are properly subjected to governmental supervision. The bankers of the State, with the desire of maintaining a high standard of responsibility and of affording guarantees against improvident management, that imperil the money of the people, recommend legislation looking to the accomplishment of these objects. I commend this subject as one worthy of your serious consideration.

My predecessors have recommended the creation of the position of State Auditor, and in this recommendation I heartily concur. His services could be utilized in checking the cost of new buildings which requests may be made by the various institutions. Those who have served on the appropriations committees are aware of the inadequate facilities of the State in arriving at the amount of the necessary expenditures.

The Constitution.

The Constitution is the expression of the supreme law of the land. It can only be changed by the people speaking in their sovereign capacity. In order that they may vote intelligently on any proposition it is essential that they understand it. I recommend that in proposing Constitutional amendments, you plainly indicate the proposition to the voter in such language that he may understand the meaning of the question submitted.

My predecessor has called attention to the fact that some of the agricultural schools are well attended, while others receive little patronage, whether due to the matter of location or lack of interest, or from what cause, I am unable to say. Each obtains the same appropriation from the State for maintenance. I recommend that you investigate their condition, and apply the proper remedies.

Slaton is Inaugurated With Simple Ceremonies.

With ceremonies that gained in strength and impressiveness through their very simplicity, John Marshall Slaton to-day became Governor of the State of Georgia, succeeding Joseph M. Brown. The oath of office was administered by Judge William H. Fish, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, at 12:02 o'clock.

Governor Slaton was inducted into office in the presence of a brilliant assemblage of Georgia men and women, including his own and the retiring Governor's family and intimate friends, members of the State Legislature and prominent jurists. For the first time in the history of the State the United States was represented by Judge William T. Newman and Judge Don A. Pardee, of the Federal Court. They occupied seats directly in front of the Speaker's stand.

Galleries and the floor of the House were filled with spectators. By 10 o'clock virtually every seat in the visitors' gallery was taken and room had been provided for a large number on the floor. In the corridors another crowd, unable to gain entrance into the hall, waited patiently for a glimpse of the new executive.

Joint Session Held.

Neither the House nor the Senate transacted any business, convening at 11 o'clock and immediately taking a recess. At 11:45 o'clock both Houses again convened, and the Senate at once adjourned and marched to the House, where members took seats in a semi-circle about the speaker's stand. In the front row of seats about the speakers' stand sat the intimate friends and relatives of Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton. Twenty-eight chairs had been reserved for members of Governor Slaton's family and eight for the family and friends of Governor Brown.

In Governor Slaton's party were Major William F. Slaton, father of the Governor; Mrs. John M. Slaton, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Slaton, Justice and Mrs. S. C. Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Waldo, Mrs. W. H. Blanchard, Mrs. W. D. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Grant, John M. Slaton, Jr., W. F. Slaton, Jr., Slaton Waldo, Aible Waldo, William D. Grant, Miss Margaret Grant, James Jackson Slaton, Mr. and Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Phillips and Miss Robinson. In Governor Brown's party were Mrs. Joseph M. Brown, Miss Cora Brown, Charles Brown, Miss Sally Brown, Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Connolly, Mrs. Frances Connolly and Thomas W. Connolly.

Governor Brown Receives Friends.

Governor Brown arrived at the Capitol shortly before 11 o'clock, and went at once into his private office, where he received a number of friends and visitors.

Governor-elect Slaton drove up in his automobile to the Washington Street entrance of the Capitol, accompanied by Mrs. Slaton and his father, Major William F. Slaton. They proceeded to the reception room of the Governor's office, where the inaugural procession formed.

Promptly at 11:45 o'clock Speaker Burwell called the House to order, and immediately thereafter members of the Senate arrived.

The inaugural procession moved from the Governor's office on the first floor. The procession was led by Governor-elect Slaton and Governor Brown. After them came ex-Governor Henry D. McDaniel, and then followed the Justices of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, the Federal Judges, the State House officers, the members of the joint legislative committee on inauguration, and the immediate families of Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton.

Governor Slaton Presented.

Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton took their places on the Speaker's stand, the first standing to the left of Senator Randolph Anderson and Speaker Burwell and the latter to the right. Rev. James B. Robbins, of the Trinity Methodist Church, opened the ceremonies with prayer, in which he invoked Divine aid for Governor Slaton in the conduct of the agairs of the State.

Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, presented Governor-elect Slaton to the people of Georgia and the Legislature, and immediately thereafter Justice Fish administered the oath of office. In a speech expressing great confidence in the ability of the incoming executive, Governor Brown presented Governor Slaton with the Great Seal of the State of Georgia.

After the inaugural ceremonies Governor and Mrs. Slaton and ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown lunched at the Executive Mansion. Ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown retired to their farm near Marietta, and Governor Slaton took possession of the mansion in the afternoon.

Church Bars Wedding And Girl Files Suit

Breach of Promise Action Started, Though Both Parties Declare They Are Ready for Ceremony.

ATCHISON, KANS., June 28.—Although both parties to a $25,000 breach of marriage contract suit filed here recently say they are willing to wed, the suit will go on.

Miss Mary Falk, of Purcell, alleges that she entered into a verbal contract to marry William Burke, of Troy, a few months ago.

Church officers say they will not marry Burke because he is unable to procure a sworn statement from his mother in Ireland certifying to the time of his baptism in the Catholic Church. Burke says he will marry Miss Mary Falk any time, and, in her petition for the suit Miss Falk says she is still willing to marry Burke.

But as a priest will not marry them, as both are unwilling to forsake their religion, Miss Falk says she can not consistently dismiss the suit, although she still loves Burke. Miss Falk's petition alleges that Burke is wealthy.

National Recognition Will Be Obtained Through Merger—Officers and Faculty of Institution Are Unanimous.

A union of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Atlanta Medical College has been effected, and as a result an institution to be known as the Atlanta Medical College has been formed. Details of the consolidation were announced Saturday by representative committees from both colleges.

Ambitious plans for the new college are outlined. The immediate effect of the consolidation will be the placing of the Atlanta Medical College in Class A by the American Medical Association. It renders the newly formed college eligible to membership in the Association of American Medical Colleges, admitting its graduates to practice anywhere in the world. Its doors open with the new college year in September.

The consolidation will force the abandonment of the property of the Atlanta School of Medicine on Luckie and Bartow Streets and the establishment of a considerable plant in connection with the present equipment of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons on Butler and Armstrong Streets.

Officers Are Announced.

The new college will be officered by W. S. Elkin, dean, and W. F. Westmoreland, president, of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons, and by two officers to be nominated by the Atlanta School of Medicine.

All these plans were announced by a committee from the Atlanta School of Medicine, consisting of George H. Noble, L. C. Fischer and Edward G. Jones, and a committee from the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons, whose members are W. S. Elkin, W. F. Westmoreland and C. W. Strickler.

Consideration of the proposition has been under way for some time, stated the committee members.

"It has been the one object of these deliberations," they announced, "to organize an institution of dignity and of permanent promise, whose graduates will receive general recognition throughout the United States—an institution so constituted as to make it a real public asset, and so conducted as to expect and to deserve the heartiest popular commendation."

So complete have been the preliminary deliberations that before word of the union had been breathed every plan was worked out, even to the appointment of a faculty and of a board of trustees.

The faculty proper will consist of the following physicians:

Department of Medicine—W. S. Kendrick, C. W. Strickler, R. T. Dorsey, J. C. Johnson, J. C. Olmsted, E. C. Thrash, E. B. Block, C. E. Boynton, L. B. Clarke, George M. Niles, L. M. Gaines, S. R. Roberts and B. Wolff.

Department of Surgery—W. F. Westmoreland, F. W. McRae, E. G. Jones, W. S. Goldsmith, F. K. Boland, J. L. Campbell, L. C. Fischer, M. Hoke and A. L. Fowler.

Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology—George H. Noble, W. S. Elkin, E. C. Davis and S. T. Barnett.

Department of Materia Medica and Therapeutics—M. M. Hull, L. B. Clarke (with other salaried associates).

Department of Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat—F. P. Calhoun, Dunbar Roy and J. M. Crawford.

Department of Physiology—George Bachman (with other salaried associates).

Department of Anatomy—J. W. Papez (with other salaried associates).

Department of Pathology—John Funke (with other salaried associates).

Department of Chemistry—Edgar Everhart (with other salaried associates).

Associate Faculty Not Named.

The associate faculty has not yet been completed. It will embrace the names of 50 or 75 additional physicians of prominence in the city.

The probable board of trustees of the Atlanta Medical College will be Reuben R. Arnold, H. M. Dorsey, Judge George Hillyer, G. S. Lowndes, E. W. Martin, F. J. Paxon, Judge T. P. Westmoreland, H. H. Cabaniss, John J. Eagan, John H. James, H. J. Lowry, Wilmer L. Moore, J. Carroll Payne, C. E. Currier, T. A. Hammond, Marion M. Jackson, R. F. Maddox, Bishop C. K. Nelson, J. S. Prather and W. S. Witham.

The union of the two colleges is significant as a historical event. The name of the first medical college founded in Atlanta was that of the consolidated school—the Atlanta Medical College. This institution was formed in 1854, was suspended during the war and its building used as a hospital. It was merged in 1898 with the Southern Medical College, which was organized in 1878, to form the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The Atlanta School of Medicine was organized 1905. Both the colleges erected new buildings in 1906, Andrew Carnegie having given $25,000 and Dr. A. W. Calhoun $15,000 to the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons for this purpose, other citizens giving various sums. The Atlanta School of Medicine has also operated a hospital in connection with the college.

Sell Luckie Property.

It is the present plan to put on sale the Luckie Street property of the Atlanta School of Medicine, and to provide for the college work to be carried on entirely at the Butler Street plant, ample room being there for additional buildings and extensions. The proximity of the Grady Hospital is an additional reason for transferring everything to that locality.

The total enrollment in the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons last session was 334, and in the Atlanta School of Medicine 218. The announcement by the joint committee declares:

"It will not be the future intention to increase the enrollment so much as to elevate the standard of professional instruction. After January, 1914, one or more years of work in a literary college will be required for entrance, the minimum requirement this fall being a high school education."

Committee Tells Hopes.

The committee, in a statement to the public, tells of its purposes and hopes, saying:

"The recent awakening of the public mind to a knowledge of the past shortcomings of medical education, the evident cordial interest in plans, wherever launched, to invest medical education with a degree of excellence which will protect the public as it ought to be protected; the late tendency of private philanthropy to recognize properly organized medical colleges as deserving of its bounty; the recognition promised abroad to the proposed institution, which recognition could not have been obtained as long as the colleges remained separate; the strategic advantages of Atlanta as the site for a medical college of superlative merit; the excellence of the professional talent in the city; the immense momentum implied in a united instead of a divided professional energy—all these and other considerations alike of sentiment and of common sense, have seemed to us to constitute a responsibility which it would discredit us to neglect, and an opportunity which it would distinguish us to embrace."

MOVE BEATEN FOR FREE WOOL GOODS

Clothing Duty Under New Tariff Schedule Will Be From 20 to 35 Per Cent.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The question of dutiable wool manufactures in the tariff bill was raised in the Senate Democratic caucus to-day and brought a lengthy debate. Senator Chamberlain, of Oregon, favored the free listing of these commodities, arguing this was only fair to the public and the manufacturers with raw wool on the free list.

The goods affected are stockings, socks and blankets, women's and children's dress goods, ready-made clothing and other articles of wearing apparel. Ad valorem rates, ranging from 20 per cent on stockings to 35 per cent on ready-made clothing are in the bill as reported to the caucus.

At the recess of the caucus Senator Simmons announced that the proposition to free list wool manufactures was beaten by a close vote.

"We expect to finish the hemp, silk, paper and sundries schedules to-night," said Senator Simmons, "and take up the administrative and income tax features of the Underwood bill Monday."

PUPS AND CHICKS SWAPPED.

RAVENNA, OHIO, June 28.—A fair exchange that satisfied both swappers was pulled off here when a Scotch collie transferred her litter of seven puppies to a Barred Rock hen for her brood of ten chicks.

FLAGLER WILL UNCHANGED AND RELATIVE'S HINTS OF A CONSPIRACY FALL

Codicils Show That Millionaire Railroad King Left Only Son With but Small Share of His Fortune. Bulk of Wealth Held in Trust.

By TARLETON COLLIER.

WEST PALM BEACH, June 28.—While a number of the charges made by Amasa Flagler, of California, regarding strange circumstances surrounding the death of Henry M. Flagler to-day are found to be substantial, the principal accusations that codicils were added to the Flagler will, completely changing its effect, and that the dying man was given insufficient medical attention, appear to fall without support.

Seven codicils to the will are not significant. Investigation into the charges by Amasa Flagler that dark work accompanied the end of his kinsman was conducted by The Sunday American. The stories of the California man that Henry M. Flagler was kept in deep seclusion until the end; that visitors, including himself, were refused admittance; that the most rigid privacy shrouded every detail of the railroad king's illness—all are found to possess a substantial basis of fact.

Palm Beach, deserted, boarded up, uncanny in its summer desolation, today furnishes the setting for a belated story of tragedy—the tragedy in the death of Henry M. Flagler, the Florida railroad king, who died May 20, 84 years old, his brain worn out.

Built Empire; Dies in Seclusion.

The story is how a man who had built an empire came to die in seclusion on a deserted island, attended by unskilled nurses, denied to visitors—and some of them his kinsmen—and with never a word given out as to his condition, from time to time.

Amasa P. Flagler, of California, who says he is the closest male relative of Henry M. Flagler, except for Harry Harkness Flagler, a son, came to Palm Beach while the financier was dying, and was refused a sight of him. To-day he is talking freely to newspaper men, hinting at mystery in the death of Henry M. Flagler, charging that the great railroad man was not given the proper treatment or care, and that Mrs. Flagler, J. B. Parrott and Dr. W. R. Keenan, the three who were practically alone with him toward the end, and who, he points out, were the beneficiaries under the will, kept visitors away purposely.

Amasa P. Flagler, according to the variety of opinions maintained by residents of Palm Beach, is anything from a faker to a justly aggrieved person. The fact remains, however, revealed as a result of investigations by The Sunday American, that Henry M. Flagler died in loneliness and in enforced seclusion.

He died in a small room of a frame cottage on the Atlantic beach, to which he had been moved some time before the end. From one window is to be seen "The Breakers," his own great hotel. It has been locked and deserted since March. Through the other window there is the sight of a stretch of parched grass, the beach and the ocean.

George Conway, a boy who waited on Mr. Flagler during his illness, said to-day that the dying man kept his eyes always on the ocean.

"He loved it," said Conway. "One time, not long before the end, he said to me: 'George, there is the greatest thing in the world,' pointing out at the sea. 'If there ever comes a time when you would be proud of yourself and of what you have done, think about that ocean. There is something greater, more wonderful than anything a man can ever make or become. Railroads and cities are nothing.' But a lot of the times he was not conscious to what went on."

Mr. Flagler was moved to the beach cottage from his mansion, "Whitehall," when summer began to set in at Palm Beach. He was moved at the combined orders of his physician, Dr. W. R. Keenan, and Mrs. Flagler, Dr. Keenan is Mrs. Flagler's brother. Because has was moved Amasa P. Flagler finds the basis for a denunciation of those who took care of him, declaring that his kinsman was taken to the empty beach cottage that he might be more securely isolated.

Joe Jefferson Died In Same Cottage.

Investigation reveals that many of the statements made by Amasa P. Flagler in his interviews regarding the death of his relative are exaggerations. He is said to have declared that the beach cottage in which Henry M. Flagler died was old and dilapidated and isolated from the community. It is, however, "The Nautilus," one of a colony of seven cottages on the beach, and is within 200 feet of "The Breakers." It is leased for $5,000 a season of three months to the winter visitors from the North, and last season was occupied by "Fingy" Conners, the Buffalo politician. Joseph Jefferson, the actor, according to the beach traditions, died in the same cottage.

Local physicians, although none of them was called in to assist Dr. Keenan and Dr. Castleberry, watched the case as well as possible in view of the privacy attached to it. Several to-day said that they would have indorsed the move from Whitehall to the beach cottage, considering more desirable the sea breeze and the relief from the sultriness that is always the lot of Whitehall in the early summer.

West Palm Beach is divided into two hostile camps on the question of the treatment of Henry M. Flagler, many contending that the charges of a deliberate isolation and of inadequate care of the dying man may be substantiated by a chain of circumstances, and others laughing at the scandal that Amasa Flagler has sprung.

Trained Nurses Succeeded by Boy.

The rapid decline of the railroad king began about March 1, when, already ill, he was injured by a fall in the reception hall of "Whitehall." He took to bed at that time, and never H. E. Bemis, wife of the manager of the "Royal Ponciana."

From the fact that the attending physicians are related to beneficiaries under Flagler's will, and that one, Dr. Keenan, is himself a beneficiary, Amasa Flagler has drawn evidence of irregular conduct in the care of Henry M. Flagler.

Little Told From Bedside.

During the period of the financier's illness little definite news came from his bedside. Newspaper men of West Palm Beach and of Jacksonville declare that no bulletins were issued, and that inquiries were met always with indefiniteness.

For weeks Flagler lay thus. No one was admitted. The gossip of servants has lingered in West Palm Beach, declaring that the dying man in his delirium called frequently for his son, and frequently also for William Fremd, his gardener. The son, Harry Harkness Flagler, who has been estranged from his father for 21 years, was not summoned until by Amasa P. Flagler. Fremd, another for whom Mr. Flagler called, lived on the grounds, within a half a mile of the cottage, but was never taken to the sick room.

The same gossip has recorded that J. A. McDonald, of Miami, an old friend of Mr. Flagler, and Father McLoughlin, a Catholic priest of Miami, were others who could not see the sick man.

Along toward the end came Amasa Flagler. According to his own story, he had sent a telegram to herald his visit. Reaching Palm Beach, he was informed that he could not see the sick man. He declares that he virtually was ordered from the grounds by J. B. Parrott, vice president and general manager of Flagler's railroad, who became president by the express terms of the Flagler will.

Incensed, Amasa Flagler went to the citizens of West Palm Beach with his story. He had telegraphed ahead for a room in "The Breakers," but these were denied him. "The Breakers," he was informed, was closed for the season.

Telegram Sent To Flagler's Son.

Amasa Flagler found quarters in "The Gables," a less pretentious hotel in West Palm Beach, whose proprietor, R. C. McGriff, listened to his story and to this day believes in him. Amasa Flagler was the first to send a telegram to Harry Harkness Flagler.

"Your father is calling for you," is the message he sent.

According to the statement to McGriff, Parrott, over in Palm Beach, heard that Harry Flagler was coming to his father's side, and came across to "The Gables" to engage a room and bath for the financier's son. There was no room for Harry Flagler, either, it seems, on Palm Beach.

No room and bath was available in McGriff's establishment, and Amasa Flagler offered to give up his suite to Harry Harkness Flagler. But Harry Flagler, when he arrived, stayed with an old friend in the town. He arrived in time to see his father alive.

Amasa Flagler declares that he was not allowed to see the body of Henry M. Flagler after death. The Tropical Sun, the daily paper of West Palm Beach, bears a story of how Amasa Flagler was leaving the town, full of wrath at his treatment. At the station, according to the story, he could obtain no information about his trains.

The employees at the railroad station, the Flagler railroad station, would tell him nothing. He asked information regarding a special train, and was met with an indefinite answer. Finally, he called a boy and commissioned him to obtain the information. The boy did. Upon his return with the message, Mr. Flagler is said to have given him $50.

"You are the only person connected with this road who has exhibited the slightest consideration or courtesy toward me," he told the boy, according to the story.

Undertaker Imported To Conduct Funeral.

The body of the dead millionaire was taken in hand by an undertaker imported from Miami. Undertaker McGinley, in West Palm Beach, was not consulted. Citizens of the town believe this to be the case because Henry M. Flagler and the city of West Palm Beach had little in common. The two have been antagonistic of late years, in spite of the work of development which Flagler has done for East Florida, and a number of local ordinances and regulations were passed inimical to the Flagler interests.

Residents of West Palm Beach now declare that the feeling that grew up was not personal to Flagler himself, but was occasioned by actions of other officials of the Florida East Coast Railroad.

Flagler's funeral was held in St. Augustine, and his body placed in an elaborate vault which he had built in connection with the Memorial Presbyterian Church. St. Augustine he made his home, it is said here, because he was repelled by the attitude of West Palm Beach citizens.

Makes Charges Against Beneficiaries.

According to his story, Amasa Flagler was denied a part in the funeral. He went on his way North, where he has made his sensational charges that Mrs. Flagler, Dr. Keenan and J. B. Parrott kept the dying financier secluded, denying all admission that they might maintain an influence over him.

The three are the principal beneficiaries under the will, and it is Amasa's inference that because they were with him continually, to the seclusion of others, their claims were made secure. He hints, in his interviews, that codicils to the original Flagler will were made under their domination, cutting out other legatees, particularly Harry Harkness Flagler, the son of the financier.

However, an examination of the will and codicils proves this accusation to be without foundation. There are seven codicils, but none materially effective.

The documents are in the court house in St. Augustine, where they have reposed since being made. The original will was drafted February 1, 1902, and names W. H. Beardsley, of New York; Dr. William R. Keenan, of Lockport, N. Y., the physician who was with him at his death, and J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, another of the little party with him most of the time during his last illness, as his executors and trustees. His wife, Mrs. Mary Lillie Flagler, he names as the residuary legatee, and his son Harry Harkness Flagler, he cut off with the relatively small legacy of 5,000 shares of Standard Oil stock. This, at the time of Flagler's death, was worth $642 a share.

Declares Son Didn't Show Filial Regard.

"I have already given my son securities sufficient to bring him an income of $75,000 a year," the will stated. "My son has not shown for me the filial regard that would make me inclined to do more for him than is done by this item of my will."

No beneficiary will profit by the will, however, for at least five years. By its terms, a trust is created, the testator declaring:

"It is my intention in the future to foster, protect and properly develop such properties; and to provide against my decease while such properties are in process of development, and to relieve my beloved wife from the immediate cares and responsibilities of so varied and extensive interests, I hereby declare a trust for all my properties. From this trust is excepted $60,000 to the Stetson University and $20,000 to the Florida Agricultural College for the construction of a gymnasium.

The trust is to last five years, according to the will, and if the Florida East Coast Railway, or the Florida East Coast Hotel Company, at that time should require financial aid, then it is to continue as long as is necessary. Until the expiration of trust, Mrs. Flagler is to receive $100,000 a year and the Memorial Presbyterian Church of St. Augustine $3,000 a year.

Many Legacies Left by Will.

Other legatees mentioned in the original will are: To receive $5,000, Miss Annie C. McKay, Mrs. Ella Green, Stephen A. Brave, John P. Beckwith, William H. Chambliss, Ed J. Triay, George W. Wilson, Bernard O'Brien, his coachman; George Holland, his butler, and Ida Scheiffer, his housekeeper; to receive $10,000, James A. McGuire, R. T. Goff, John Anderson, Fred Sterry, Joseph D. Price, Henry W. Merrill, J. A. McDonald, William H. Beardsley and Jasper G. Salter; to J. E. Ingraham, $20,000; to J. R. Parrott, $100,000; to C. D. Boice and L. C. Hayes, $2,500; to the Florida Agricultural College, $50,000; to the John B. Stetson University, $40,000; to Hamilton College, New York, $100,000; to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society, $75,000.

By the terms of the will J. R. Parrott is to continue in the same relation to the Flagler interests as he maintained during the lifetime of the testator.

There are seven codicils to the will, made, respectively, February 17, 1903; April 28, 1904; January 8, 1906; April 7, 1908; December 22, 1910; January 10, 1912, and September 13, 1912.

It is these, Amasa Flagler declares, which are damaging to the original document, but none of them seem materially to affect it. The first codicil gives his trustees the power to complete the southern extension of the Florida East Coast Railroad, which he denied them in the will.

The second codicil defines the meaning of the term "expiration of trust," which occurred frequently in the will, and provides that if Harry Harkness Flagler is not living at the end of the "expiration of trust" then the 5,000 shares of oil stock lapse to the estate. In this codicil also he revoked the legacies of $80,000 to the Florida University and $40,000 to the John B. Stetson University, and provided for bequests of $10,000 to J. P. Greaves, Robert Murray and Leland Sterry, and giving W. H. Beardsley $50,000 instead of $10,000. If he survived his wife, Flagler specified in this codicil, the residue of his estate is to be divided among Roy H. York, W. L. Harkness and Mrs. John D. McLennan, of Cleveland; W. R. Keenan, Jr., J. K. Wise and Sarah G. Keenan, of Wilmington; J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, and W. H. Beardsley, of New York.

No Increase for Son's Share of Estate.

The third codicil announces that upon consideration the testator found incorrect the statement in the will that he had given his son securities netting $75,000 a year. However, he said, this mistake did not warrant an increase in the legacy to Harry Harkness Flagler.

The codicil also provides for a legacy of $10,000 to Harry E. Bemis, and empowers his trustees to borrow money for the extension of his railroad to Key West.

Codicil four specifies that the smaller legatees are not to receive the amounts provided unless at the time of his death they are in the employ of the Flagler railroad or hotel interests.

Codicil five empowers his trustees to continue to pay to Horace H. Flagler, of St. Augustine, the dividends on 50 shares of Standard Oil stock. It provides, too, that the legacy to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society apply only if the church remain in the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.

Codicil six makes provision for the maintenance of his mausoleum by the expenditure of a portion of the income from the $75,000 which he bequeathed to the church in St. Augustine.

The last codicil, drafted September 13, 1912, provides that the legacy of 5,000 shares of oil stock to his son be effective in spite of the change in the form of Standard Oil stock. This was drafted soon after the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company, apparently looking to safe-guarding Harry Harkness Flagler against losing his inheritance on technical grounds. The last provision is the revocation of his previous bequest to Horace H. Flagler, substituting therefor an annuity of $2,000.

No resident of West Palm Beach or its vicinity was mentioned in the will, although common gossip had named several as likely legatees.

Flagler's Isolation Necessary, Says Doctor.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Dr. Owen Kenan, brother of Mrs. Henry M. Flagler, to-day issued a vigorous denial of the charges of Amasa Plummer Flagler regarding the circumstances which surrounded the death of his patient at West Palm Beach.

"There isn't a word of truth in the whole thing," he said. "The only explantation is that these so-called 'charges' originated in the brain of some cunning adventurer with an ax to grind. Publication of these unfounded rumors have annoyed us greatly, and Mrs. Flagler is in no condition to be interviewed, so that I can speak for her.

"So far as I can make out, the greatest objection to conditions this Amasa Flagler found at the Beach was the isolation of the sick man. That was natural. Mr. Flagler was old, his illness was serious and he needed quiet. The cottage in which he died is not dilapidated. It rents for an enormous sum every season, and some prominent Boston society people had it last winter.

"If Amasa Flagler's object is to induce Harry H. Flagler to contest the will it will fail. Harry Flagler is a gentleman, although he had not spoken to his father but once in the last seventeen years. He was left $5,000,000 and each of his children gets $4,000,000. That seems to me to be eminently fair.

"As to our conduct of the case, Dr. Castlebury and I did the best we could. Henry M. Flagler had as tender and loving care as any man ever had up to the moment of his death. There was no secrecy other than that was absolutely necessary, and nothing to be concealed."

HEIRS TO RICHES LEFT BY TITANIC VICTIM SOUGHT

J. Montague Smart, Prominent Business Man, Left Fortune. No Trace of Beneficiaries.

NEW YORK, June 28.—During his active life J. Montgomery Smart was a man of mystery. Now that his bones lie in the sunken Titanic, his past is a greater puzzle than ever, and so far it is unsolved. Usually when a man dies, even though he may have been of distinction, his hidden history is buried with him. But Smart was a man of wealth, and it became necessary to try to discover vital facts of his intimate personal life.

Thus began a world-wide search that has served only to make the case of J. Montgomery Smart all the stranger. He was an honored and successful man of business, whose transactions were international in scope, even extending from New York to Australia.

Necessary to Find Heirs.

Having left money, it became necessary to find his heirs. It was remembered that this man of silence never described his family. It was known that he had been married and that his wife had died ten years before. Vague words dropped here and there were gathered and it became apparent that Smart had two children, a boy of 20 and a girl of 18.

But no one could be found who had any definite idea of their whereabouts.

Into three countries of Europe the filaments of inquiry extended. The American consuls of many ports were asked to aid in the hunt. That was in May, 1912.

One fact was discovered in the course of the Belgian hunt. It was asserted that the children were in charge of a Mrs. Cook, who was a great friend of Mrs. Smart, and that Smart was paying her liberally to care for them. But who was Mrs. Cook? Her identity was also impossible to discover, and the hunt settled down into a hope that the guardian would write for funds, thus solving the riddle. But she has been swallowed in silence.

Had Many Acquaintances.

As president of the American Cold Storage and Shipping Company, Smart had made many acquaintances among prominent business men of New York, London, Berlin, Paris and many other cities throughout the world. Many believed that they knew him well. But when the test came, they were surprised to find that only the barest information was obtainable about his personal affairs.

Smart was a hermit in a great city, and he was a hermit in his many voyages and travels in foreign countries.

Husband Will Woo Wife if He's Divorced

Tells Judge He Will Renew Methods of Courting Days if Decree Is Granted.

KANSAS CITY, June 28.—"If my wife succeeds in getting a divorce from me I am going to begin all over with my courting days and try to win back her love," Andrew Mathers said in Judge Johnson's court. "Her charges in this case do not in any way affect my devotion and admiration for her."

Mathers is a wealthy building contractor and lives at 4403 Virginia Avenue. He has been contesting the suit of his wife, Louise Mathers. They were married in 1896 and have three children.

Mrs. Mathers charges that her husband became intoxicated frequently.

Rides Box Car in Boy Garb to Meet Fiance

Victim of Ohio Flood Travels to California on Freight Train to Become Wife.

VENICE, CAL., June 28.—Miss Ethel Johnston, a young woman from Dayton, Ohio, arrived here in begrimed and torn boy's costume to join her fiance. Miss Johnston and J. L. Perry had been sweethearts in Dayton. The youth moved West a short time ago to prepare a home for his sweetheart.

When the flood came Miss Johnston, who was living with her aunt, lost her home, as well as her only relatives. She cut her hair short, donned boys' clothing and struck out with but a few dollars for the coast. She traveled almost the entire distance on freight trains.

Dog Rescues Girl With Dress Aflame

Shepherd Leaps Into Brook and Then Shakes His Dripping Body on Blazing Skirt

NEW YORK, June 28.—The remarkable intelligence and devotion of a Shepherd dog saved Miss Florence Sheldon, of 4 Llewellyn road, Montclair, from serious injury yesterday when her dress was accidentally set on fire.

Unconscious of the smouldering fire, the girl sat on the bank of a brook throwing sticks into the stream. Suddenly the dog began to bark furiously. He dashed into the brook, and returning, threw his dripping body on the now blazing skirt and extinguished the fire. A square foot of the garment was burned.

COMMISSION FINDS $4 FAMILY'S DAILY NEED

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Four dollars a day is the minimum wage on which a family can be supported in this city, according to the report today of the Municipal Industrial Investigating Committee. Of nearly 50,000 cases covered by the inquiry, more than 6,000 men and considerably more than half of all the women employed received less than $2 a day. A permanent wage commission is urged.

Mashers Told to Think of Sisters

Pastor Says That Presuming on Feminine Acquaintance Is Greatest Aid to White Slavery.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 28.—"A spendthrift sweetheart and an extravagant wife have ruined many lives," said the Rev. T. W. Stout in a sermon at Calvary Methodist Church. "Young women can help to form high moral standards among the boys by not permitting great expenditures upon themselves."

He illustrated how laziness makes a weak character that falls in the crisis of life by knocking the prop from under a three-legged chair. "White slavery begins with presuming on feminine acquaintance and bold advances to clerks," he said. "It ends in blood money and lost souls. Every young man should ask himself in dealing with girls: 'Suppose my sister were in her place—what would I want done?'"

TROOPS TO MAKE CAVALRY RAID OF THE SHENANDOAH

Realistic Advance Next Month Into the Historic Valley May Mean New System.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Troopers at Fort Myer have begun preparations for their 70-mile march into the Shenandoah Valley next month to participate in maneuvers expected to result in reorganization of the mounted forces of the army.

The Shenandoah Valley, where "Phil" Sheridan made his famous ride 50 years ago, has been chosen as the bloodless battle ground for the test. For two months this summer a full brigade of cavalry and a battery of horse artillery will maneuver and "fight" over the red roads, the green hills, and fields near Winchester.

The department has leased a tract of ground one mile broad and two miles long in the heart of the Shenandoah, 70 miles away, and orders were issued to the troops some time ago.

Oglethorpe Troopers on March.

Two regiments of the brigade, those from Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., and Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., must ride 700 dusty miles under a summer sun before they can reach the valley, and they must report July 20. The First Squadron from Fort Myer will have only 70 miles to go, and the horse battery from Fort Riley, Kans., will be sent by rail.

Secretary Garrison will be a frequent spectator. Major General Wood, chief of staff, United States Army, probably will spend much time there, and President Wilson may make the trip.

The necessity for a rehabilitation of the cavalry was disclosed when the general staff some time ago made ambitious plans for the reorganization of the army so as to prepare it for the defense of the country against attack by any great military power. This resulted in the sending to Europe last year of a board of six cavalry officers, who studied the German, Russian, Austro-Hungarian, French and English organizations.

Officers Study Abroad.

Four months were spent abroad by these officers, and since their return they have prepared plans for radical changes in the organization and use of cavalry of the American army.

The tests will take place under the direction of Colonel C. H. Murray, of the Twelfth Cavalry, as Brigadier General E. J. McClernand, the head of the cavalry board, is prohibited from exercising actual command by virtue of his retirement. General McClernand, however, with Lieutenant Colonels J. T. Dickmann and Fred S. Foltz, Major Jesse McI. Carter and Captain Frank Parker, all members of the board which studied the European systems, will be present.

Some of the practical questions to be worked out are:

How large a command can a captain handle successfully?

How many such units can a colonel handle to the best advantage under conditions approximating hostilities?

The new formation of the cavalry into double ranks also will be tried out on a large scale, a practical test by Captain Parker, of the Eleventh Cavalry, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., with an experimental squadron having been pronounced a complete success by General H. L. Scott.

SAVANNAH AND SOUTHERN GEORGIA NEWS

OPPOSITION TO COMMISSION FOR WAYCROSS

Charter Changes, However, Will Be Sought for Metropolis of South Georgia.

WAYCROSS, June 28.—Determined opposition has developed here to any change in the present form of city government that leans toward commission government. The revision of the charter is favored partially because it is recognized that some changes must be made, but when there is any talk of getting an all-time Mayor or giving any one man a lot of power right there kicks begin to appear.

The proposition to get a charter that would give Waycross a combination commission-aldermanic form of government will hardly be approved, although an election may be held to find out just what the majority of people here want.

It is thought that the only changes that will be finally approved will be the creation of a Recorder's Court, the changing in the time for the city election from January to December, and a provision calling for the expenditure of a fixed sum annually in permanent improvements, as well as an increased appropriation for city schools.

The bill calling for these changes will be submitted to an open meeting at the Board of Trade next week by a charter committee of thirty. However, if City Council at Tuesday night's meeting calls an election to pass on the commission government plan it is probable that no bill will be perfected until after the election is held.

At War on Minors Playing Billiards

Cordele Police Chief Probing Alleged Violations of New City Ordinance.

CORDELE, June 28.—Chief Sumner, of the Cordele police force, has begun a thorough probe into the alleged violation of an ordinance recently passed by the City Council regulating pool and billiard parlors. The officer has been informed that notwithstanding the ordinance making it unlawful, the persons in charge of such places have been allowing minors not only to enter their parlors, but to engage in games there without the written permission of their parents.

Visiting these parlors, the Police Chief demanded the managers produce all permissions from parents they had received since the ordinance was passed. It developed that several boys, who, it is claimed, have participated in such games, had not secured permission from their parents. The law makes the managers responsible.

Cordele Citizens Fight School Site

Secure Temporary Injunction Against Bond Commission to Prevent Purchase of Property.

CORDELE, June 28.—Citizens of Northern Heights have risen up to war upon the Bond Commission of Cordele in opposition to the site purchased for a ward school for that section of the city.

Injunction proceedings have been filed against the commissioners and also against parties owning the site, preventing them from making over deeds to the commission. Judge W. F. George, of the Superior Court, has granted temporary restraining orders.

The officials claim that they have already given checks for $2,500 for the property, in which case, claim the citizens, they are personally responsible, no deeds having been given. It is alleged that desirable sites have been offered at much less cost and that politics has governed the commission's actions.

Fined $50 Because He Left Blinds Open

Cordele Man Arrested When Women Neighbors Object to Public Disrobing.

CORDELE, June 28.—On the accusation of several prominent women who lived near his boarding place that C. W. Fuller, a well-known traveling man, threw open the blinds to the windows of his room and completely disrobed in view of the public, he has been placed under arrest.

When arraigned before Mayor Harder on the charge of disorderly conduct, Fuller pleaded guilty, a fine of $50 being imposed upon him. However, Fuller asserted that he neglected to close the blinds when he began to undress, and that he had no intention whatever of offending his neighbors.

THOMASVILLE'S MAYOR AFTER AUTO SPEEDERS

THOMASVILLE, June 28.—Mayor Roscoe Luke is after owners of automobiles who fail to observe the speed law regulations, and he is determined that it shall be enforced to the letter or the owners will have to pay fines of $25.

Twelve miles an hour is the limit of speed permitted upon the main streets of the city, with six miles the limit in turning corners.

'Wild Bill' Clark to Run Waycross Team

Former Columbia Sally League Manager Slated to Direct Empire Organization.

WAYCROSS, June 28.—That "Wild Bill" Clark will be made manager of the Waycross team of the Empire League next week is reported here to-day. He was at one time manager for the Columbia South Atlantic team, and is regarded as a very capable man. There has been much dissatisfaction here since the change in managers two weeks ago, fans feeling that they were not getting what they were entitled to.

With the second half of the Empire season opening Monday, Waycross wants to start off in the very best shape possible, and it is believed with "Wild Bill" at the helm the pennant winner in the Empire will have to get around Waycross. Hawkins, formerly of Jacksonville, is now manager.

Watermelons From Georgia Going North

Hundreds of Carloads Being Shipped From Southern Part of State.

THOMASVILLE, June 28.—The Georgia watermelon has the right of way in this section just now. Hundreds of carloads of this luscious product of South Georgia have been rushed to the markets in the North and West this week to satisfy the yearnings of residents of those sections.

The melon crop of South Florida is said to be short this season, which accounts for the fact that such good prices have been received by the shippers from this section.

The watermelon plays a prominent part in the celebration of the "Glorious Fourth," also, and the supply from the South this year will be of the best, as seldom have the melons been finer or sweeter.

BITTEN BY PET DOG; FEARS HYDROPHOBIA

WAYCROSS, June 28.—After having been bitten on the foot by a pet dog, Mrs. J. C. Robertson, formerly of Macon, has gone to Atlanta for Pasteur treatment, because the pet, when killed, showed signs of hydrophobia. The wound inflicted on Mrs. Robertson was slight and no ill effects are anticipated. She is the fourth white person that has been bitten by a mad dog here in recent months. More than a dozen negroes have been bitten, two with fatal results.

$10,000 AMUSEMENT PARK TO BE BUILT IN WAYCROSS

WAYCROSS, June 28.—Contracts were signed to-day for a five-year lease of Winona Park, just on the edge of Waycross, to be used as an amusement resort. It is planned to spend $10,000 in making improvements and adding amusements.

The street railway proposes to inaugurate a better schedule for the park by the time the improvements are made.

COURTS DEATH TO ESCAPE LYNCHING

Slayer of Albany Policeman Shot by Officer While Trying to Break Away.

ALBANY, June 28.—John Land, who killed Policeman E. P. Harris here Thursday and who was himself slain after being arrested yesterday, virtually committed suicide to escape lynching, according to Dr. W. L. Davis, County Physician, who to-day told an eyewitness story of Land's death.

Land was shot by Assistant Chief Conaghan as he attacked Robert Palmer and Boyd Barber in a desperate effort to escape, after having been captured at Walters' Crossing, near here. Dr. Davis was in the automobile in which Land was being conveyed and attempted to grab him as Conaghan fired.

It is doubtful if Land would have reached Albany alive, had he peaceably submitted, according to the physician, who said:

"By the time we started with Land there were four automobiles at Walters' Crossing, all loaded down with men, and other automobiles kept coming. Things looked squally. We understood that there was little chance of getting the man to town alive, as we knew almost to a certainty that arrangements were all perfected to take the prisoner from us, if possible, and hang him. I understood that the very tree, even the limb, had been selected by the crowd for the hanging. Automobiles loaded with men were constantly being met by us until there were something like twenty of them, all loaded as full as they would hold."

Land killed Policeman Harris when the officer attempted to arrest him at the instance of Conductor Morrow, of the Atlantic Coast Line, on whose train he came to Albany from Ty Ty. He was an escaped murderer.

Thomasville After Empire League Flag

Second Half of Season Opens Monday With Brunswick—Fans Support Team.

THOMASVILLE, June 28.—The second half of the Empire State League season opens here Monday afternoon with Brunswick, and there will be a big crowd out to see the game. Thomasville goes into the second half with the determination to win, and with the great improvement made of late in the team everybody here is banking largely upon coming out with the pennant this time. The boys are playing fine ball now and the team is being strengthened.

Nowhere in the league has better support been given than here, and, win or lose, everybody goes to the games. Even when the bad losing streak struck the team for a while the fans stood by it and feel now that they are being repaid for their confidence.

GEORGIA MELON PRICES DROP $100 A CAR IN EAST

VALDOSTA, June 28.—The melon and cantaloupe growers of Lowndes County will get from $75,000 to $100,000 for the 1913 crop despite the slump in the market to-day. Reports from New York to-day indicate that prices are off about $100 a car for watermelons. This will give the local growers from $75 to $150 a car. The prices have ranged from $150 to $250.

Shipments from here have been unprecedented. The cantaloupe men have received from $500 to $1,000 a car for their cantaloupes, but cantaloupe prices have also slumped to-day.

GEORGIA WATERMELONS ON SAVANNAH'S MARKET

SAVANNAH, June 28.—Several carloads of Georgia watermelons have appeared on the Savannah market. These melons, the first of the season, came in over the Brinson Railroad. They were raised by C. E. Kassler, of Blanford and K. J. Helmy, of Coldbrook. The melons were of good quality and the demand was brisk.

SAVANNAH BARS COSTLY GOWNS FOR GRADUATES

High School Girls Receive Diplomas, Wearing Frocks Averaging Outlay of $6 to $7.

SAVANNAH, June 28.—Opening with class exercises Monday afternoon, the closing ceremonies of the Savannah High School extended through the week, ending Friday night with commencement.

The features of the class-day program were the class history, prophecy, poem and play, the latter being an unique musical comedy presented by the graduates.

The interest of the male pupils centered in the debate Wednesday morning at the high school between the Mercer and Jackson Societies, the rival literary organizations. The subject was, "Resolved, That the term of the President of the United States should be limited to six years and that he shall be ineligible for re-election." Mercer Society, represented by Arthur Allen and Alex Fawcett, who took the affirmative, won the decision. Jackson Society was represented by Ernest Rogers and Arthur Rosentnal. In the declamation contest the result was reversed, Jackson taking the honors. Rev. W. Moore Scott, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church; Rev. W. L. Pickard, pastor of the First Baptist Church, and Rev. J. M. Glenn, pastor of Grace Methodist Church, were the judges for both contests.

Manual Training Exhibit.

A great many relatives and friends of the students on Wednesday attended the exhibit of work done by the pupils in the manual training drawing and domestic science departments. Many useful articles made in the manual training department were shown, among them being a morris chair, a rowboat, an elaborately constructed writing desk and a motorboat, the latter being the work of two members of the senior class. The drawing exhibit was also extensive, among the collection being free-hand drawings by the girl pupils.

On Thursday morning the Junior Arnold Literary Society composed of girls of the third and fourth grades, held its regular monthly meeting in the girls' study hall. The program consisted of recitations, essays and dialogues.

Graduating Exercises.

The graduation exercises took place Friday evening at the Savannah Theater. The Auditorium was open to the public and was filled to overflowing with the friends of the graduates and the general public. Sydney Lee, the honor graduate, delivered the valedictory. Judge Samuel B. Adams, president of the Board of Education, addressed the graduates and delivered the diplomas. The exercises were under the direction of Professor R. F. Pickett, principal of the high school.

Simple and inexpensive, but constituting the very last word in dainty tastefulness, the frocks worn by the girl members of the senior class were in distinct contrast to the expensive display of gowns presented last year.

Ban on Costly Gowns.

Acting upon the suggestion of Professor Pickett, the Board of Education had placed a ban on extravagant gowns, and the consequence was that the highest priced dress which was worn represented a total outlay, including all trimmings and the cost of making, only $12. Last year there was one graduation gown which cost $100. Every girl in the class was required to furnish Professor Pickett with an itemized statement of the cost of her commencement frock, together with a sample of the cloth from which it was made. The average price of the gowns worn was between $6 and $7. The lowest priced dress cost $3.85. This dress was made at the home of the girl who wore it. The dresses were all of muslin, tulle, lawn, mull, linen and other light summer fabrics entirely appropriate to the occasion, but which called for the expenditure of very little money.

VALDOSTA BANK NAMED AS FEDERAL DEPOSITORY

VALDOSTA, June 28.—Under recent ruling of the Treasury Department to distribute $10,000,000 Government funds among the national banks, the First National Bank of this city was selected as one of these depositories. This means that all Government funds arising in this territory will be deposited here and the Treasury Department will check against them from time to time.

SPECIAL ELECTION FOR NEW SHERIFF NECESSARY

SAVANNAH, June 28.—A Sheriff for Chatham County can not be elected at the same time the election for United States Senator is held. Senator Bacon's election is to be held July 15. It had been expected the date would be about a month later. The County Commissioners have ordered an election for Sheriff, but they are required by law to give twenty days' notice, and the time is too short for that to be done between now and July 15.

LYNCHING PROBE IN AMERICUS TO START MONDAY

Sumter Grand Jury to Investigate Affair—Chief Barrow Dies of Wound.

AMERICUS, June 28.—Interest is intense in the special session of Sumter Superior Court, which will convene here Monday morning at 9 o'clock to investigate the recent lynching of Will Redding, the negro who fatally wounded Chief of Police W. C. Barrow last Saturday night. The people of Americus and Sumter County are eager to know what efforts the Grand Jury will make to investigate the affair and to prosecute the members of the mob.

It is generally recognized that the Grand Jury, which is the same one that served at the recent spring term of the court, is a fearless body, as the indictments returned at that session showed.

In anticipation of the action of the Grand Jury talk concerning the lynching has appreciably diminished. Many who talked freely last Sunday when they thought there would be no Grand Jury investigation have since closed up like clams. Indications are that the investigation may disclose sensational revelations relative to the prominent people who took part in it unless the witnesses summoned fail to tell what they know.

Chief Barrow died at his home here last night at 11 o'clock, after having made a brave fight for life since he was shot down with his own revolver by Redding. The funeral took place this afternoon at 4 o'clock at Oak Grove Cemetery, being attended by one of the largest crowds that has ever witnessed a funeral here. The Masonic ritual was read, Chief Barrow having been a prominent member of that order, and also of the Odd Fellows.

Chief Barrow took a turn for the worse yesterday morning and it became apparent that unless a pronounced rally was made death must follow within a day. His wife, Mrs. Rebecca Barrow, and a number of other relatives were at his bedside.

Meat Inspections in Savannah To Be Rigid

Butchers Promise to Co-operate With City Health Authorities in Enforcing Ordinance.

SAVANNAH, June 27.—An ordinance is to be prepared by the health committee of City Council, providing for a more rigid inspection of meat in Savannah. J. W. Daniel, chairman of the health committee, has made this promise to twenty-five butchers and meat dealers, who met in response to his invitation.

The meeting was called to discuss the situation whereby the people of Savannah can get more protection along this line. All agreed that a stricter regulation of the meat business is needed and the most of them pledged their hearty co-operation in an effort to bring about the desired reform.

It was asserted that cows killed on railroads are frequently brought to Savannah and sold as fresh meat.

WAYCROSS POSTOFFICE TO BE READY AUGUST 1

All material is here to complete the structure and a force of men will be kept busy rushing unfinished parts to an early completion.

Trustee Is Named By Quitman Mills

Internal Dissension Said to Have Caused Failure of Atlantic and Gulf Concern.

VALDOSTA, June 28.—The first meeting of creditors of the Atlantic and Gulf Mills was held this afternoon before Referee in Bankruptcy J. F. McCrackin. A number of the creditors from Quitman were present. The mill was organized by the late Frank which manufactured products from sea island cotton and did a very profitable business until internal dissensions arose between stockholders and manager. Lack of co-operation among the owners of the property injured its credit and is said to be responsible for it being placed in bankruptcy.

At the meeting to-day Lane Young, of Quitman, was appointed trustee to dispose of the property. Liabilities are put down at $117,000, while assets are approximately $325,000. The mill was roganized by the late Frank Spain and members of his family are among the large stockholders and creditors.

Indian Girl Grieves For Dead Affinity

Annie Oceola Swallows Poison at Annie Osceola Swallows Poison at Her Life.

SAVANNAH, June 28.—Grief-stricken over the death of the man with whom she was infatuated, Annie Osceola, known also as Annie Winona, an Indian girl, is at the point of death in a local hospital from the effects of permanganate of potassium, taken with suicidal intent. The woman was found stretched on the floor of her room in a semi-conscious condition.

While waiting for assistance, officers and the girl's friends tried to give her temporary relief. Repeated attempts were made to give her water, but each time she crushed the glass between her teeth. The drug had horribly burned her mouth and throat and she was unable to swallow.

The woman had grieved constantly since the drowning of John Matthews, a chauffeur, in the Ogeechee River, a month ago, when a party of men and women were sucked into a whirlpool.

BRILLIANT BATTLE SURE IN FRANK TRIAL IN CLASH OF HOOPER AND ARNOLD

Order Has at Last Been Rested and Indications Are That Struggle of Attorneys Will Be Waged in the Most Ethical Manner.

By AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

As deplorable as the Phagan case is, in all its melancholy details, it already is evident enough that there will come of it eventually much that the community may be thankful for.

In the first place, Atlanta and Georgia, and incidentally the entire South will have learned a good lesson in law and order, justice and fair play, and to that extent may be the better prepared for the next case of the kind that comes to their attention.

In the second place, there will be in the future no such wretched bungling and frenzied appeal in and from police headquarters, as for a time marked the Phagan case unique among its kind.

It looks now as if the decks have been pretty well cleared for action and that Leo Frank's trial may be expected to proceed in dignity and order, and that in its final analysis the truth of Mary Phagan's murder may be established, at least to the extent of Frank's real or suspected participation therein.

If Frank should be convicted, that would mean the subsequent indictment and conviction of the negro Conley, as an accessory after the fact.

Conley Indictment May Follow.

If Frank should be found not guilty, that would mean the indictment of Conley, as principal to the murder, in all human probability.

It evidently is the purpose of the State to hold Conley free of indictment, pending the disposition of the charges against Frank. His status as a material witness depends much upon this, of course.

There always is a chance, however, that a Grand Jury may take up a thing of this sort of its own motion, and to that extent there remains the possibility of prior indictment hanging over Conley.

It seems more likely, however, that the case will go to trial about as it shapes up now.

I do not incline to think the State really has any further sensational or particularly effective thing up its sleeve. Neither do I think the defense has.

There may be, on both sides, bits of corroborated evidence or evidence to offset this, that, or the other to come, but in the main I think the public is in possession of all the essential facts in the Phagan case to date.

The public must remember, however, that not all the things it has read in the newspapers, not yet one-half the things, ever will go before the jury trying Leo Frank as competent evidence.

And it is upon the COMPETENT evidence alone that the court will permit Leo Frank to be judged.

For instance, nothing that Mrs. Frank has said in the public prints will go before the jury. A wife is estopped in law from testifying either for or against her husband.

Fomby Woman Rejected.

The Fomby woman already has been rejected as a possible witness against Frank. Her story admittedly is too preposterous even for the State to bother with it further.

How much of Conley's story the jury will hear is entirely problematical.

He will be warned that he need not testify to anything calculated to incriminate himself, and even if he elects to disregard this warning there is much in his statement that likely will go down and out as incompetent or irrelevant.

The ponderous assurances of Frank's guilt, so frequently thundered from police headquarters by Detective Lanford, will, so far as the jury is concerned, not be there. Detective Lanford will not be on the jury—and his opinion as to the innocence or guilt of Frank will not be immediately valuable, therefore.

Frank's own statement, it must be rembered, will be delivered to the jury, not under oath.

The jury will be instructed by the court that it may accept the defendant's statement as the truth in its entirety, and to the exclusion of ALL the sworn testimony, if it sees fit; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject the statement as a whole.

The jury, and the jury ALONE, will be the judge of the facts.

The law—the impersonal law—that the jury will be required to apply to those facts it will get from the court.

It looks, then, as if the Phagan case, getting down to brass tacks, will revolve finally about those persons:

Leo Frank, the defendant; Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank Hooper, representing the State; Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben Arnold, representing the defendant; the judge, the jury and a dozen or so competent and material witnesses.

Order at Last Comes.

So, at last, has order been brought out of chaos, after weeks and weeks of hysteria, stuff and nonsense, passion and prejudice, facts and near-facts, truth and lies, impatience and intolerance—all jumbled into about the worst mess I ever undertook, in my way, to analyze and unravel, in seeking the truth!

Leo Frank will receive a fair trial, and the written and recorded verdict, whatever it may be, will be accepted generally as the truth.

If the jury agrees that Frank is guilty, that verdict will be taken to be a just one. Nothing short of the most sensational and revolutionary new evidence likely would serve to re-establish his good name, once he is convicted in the Superior Court.

On the other hand, if the jury shall agree that Frank is not guilty, I think he will be taken back into the friendly and fair-minded good will of the people of Atlanta, a free and untarnished man, and there likely will come a revulsion of popular feeling in his behalf, that will go far toward offsetting and reconciling him to the horrible ordeal he passed through.

The approaching trial likely will be one of the greatest legal battles ever fought in Georgia.

On the one hand—that of the State—Hugh Dorsey, the Solicitor General, has done the drudgery, and Frank Hooper is to handle the picturesque. Hooper likely will figure much more in the public eye hereafter than Dorsey will, for it will be Hooper's business to paint the rainbow, snatch the stars from the heavens, and open the floodgates of tears—if he can!

On the other hand—that of the defense—Luther Z. Rosser has done the drudgery, and Reuben Arnold will have the delicate task of leading the jury along the primrose path that leads to Frank's acquittal.

All Have Big Reputations.

All of these men are great lawyers, with reputations to sustain, and each one may be depended upon to act a part entirely in keeping with the honorable profession of the law. I do not believe there is sufficient money in Atlanta to secure the services of any one of these men in an unworthy undertaking.

Each one of these men may be depended upon to do his best by his client, and as each one is of the quality I note, a fair trial seems assured.

It is a happy and a consoling circumstance that the trial of Leo Frank is to be presided over by an upright and just judge, argued by upright and honorable attorneys, and a verdict written by twelve "good men and true," as the law—the LAW in all its majesty—directs!

While by no means as spectacular a thing to say as something else might be, it is a matter of deep and abiding significance that Leo Frank, with his life, his good name, and all that his holds most dear at stake, is assured of a fair trial and a just verdict, notwithstanding all the frenzied and sinister detail of irrelevant and incoherent "testimony" and "evidence" set forth here and there, as time has run on since Mary Phagan was slain.

Victory for Society.

In the trial of Leo Frank THE SUPREMACY OF THE LAW will be vindicated beyond carping or cavil—and therein the most tremendous victory to society will be achieved.

Frank Hooper is one of the most experienced prosecuting attorneys in the State. He has served as Solicitor General on one of the most important circuits in Georgia, and his career thereon was entirely to his credit.

He is suave, incisive, deliberate, calm in action and eagle-eyed in seeing a point that may be turned to his client's advantage.

In summing up the case of the State against Leo Frank, Hooper will be at his best. He is a master in presenting his case to the jury for its consideration. I understand he is to be associated soon with Judge Arthur Powell and John D. Little, in Atlanta, in the practice of law. They will make a great team. Hooper is an attorney of the same class and caliber as Powell and Little.

But there to combat the best efforts that Hooper may put forth will stand that remarkable lawyer, Reuben Arnold.

Whatever qualms Frank may feel when he thinks of Hooper, doubtless they are relieved in large measure when he turns his thoughts to Arnold.

Reuben Arnold is a lawyer of constant surprises. Age can not wither him nor custom stale his infinite variety. Frank's case will be presented to the jury as few men could present it, when Arnold undertakes the work.

Convinced of Innocence.

Arnold says he never entered the case until he had convinced himself of Frank's innocence, and I quite believe he speaks the truth. I do not think there is the shadow of doubt either in Arnold's or Rosser's mind that Frank is entirely guiltless of the killing of Mary Phagan.

That Hooper may have some doubts as to the full strength of the State's case against Frank seems likely, for soon after entering the case he said this:

I have not been employed in the case to prosecute Leo M. Frank, but to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan. If the trial proves we are wrong, we will begin work on another angle. We have but one object and idea. It is that justice and the law be vindicated. We are, however, convinced we have a strong case against the accused.

Now, I do not think a manlier thing has been said in all the mass of things that have been said in the Phagan case than the foregoing.

If any person who does not know Frank Hooper has any doubts as to his complete integrity and lofty ideals the statement credited to him herein should remove them. Only a man who wishes to do right could or would say what Hooper said, soon after taking up the State's end of the Phagan case.

The most ardent, if honest, extremes of opinion well may meet on the platform Hooper sets up!

And if everybody in Atlanta will say, as he says, "I want to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan, regardless of whom that murderer may be," everybody will find himself on a platform of decency and fair play—and that's where he ought to wish to find himself.

I have sought, in these articles, neither to prosecute nor to defend Frank. I have sought, in such manner as I might, to help find the murderer of Mary Phagan. I want to see him found and convicted.

I, like Hooper, have desired, above all things, to see JUSTICE AND THE LAW VINDICATED, and I indorse and agree with Hooper's expressed desire that both may be.

Search Will Continue.

If the State fails to convict Frank—the State will turn its eyes elsewhere.

Could any man ask a fairer or squarer promise from Hooper than that?

It merely means that Hooper WILL ACCEPT THE FINDINGS OF THE COURT, after orderly and prescribed procedure, frankly and unquestioningly, as the TRUTH of the matter.

If Frank is guilty, then the law will take its course.

If he is not guilty, he will take his place once more among his fellowmen, as free of stain as any of them.

That's where Hooper stands, and that's where I am satisfied to stand also!

And if somebody, early in the investigation of the Phagan case, had calmed the mad scramble for "clews," "evidence," "testimony" and what not, with the deliberate and convincing words of Frank Hooper, some of the utterly ridiculous theories would never have been evolved and the entire case would have rested upon a basis of sanity, which would have eliminated many of the ugly features.

Happily, however, the chatterboxes and the human phonographs have been given most effective pause in their wild riot of talk, and if the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises has rounded them up for good and all, so be it, and praise forevermore!

Sanity and THE LAW OF THE LAND have taken the Phagan case in hand, and through these agencies will the truth of the murder of Mary Phagan be set up eventually.

Luncheon Lurch Aid to Digestion

Pre-Prandial Prance Society Fad

Variation of Tango Brings Dancers One Step Nearer Dining Each Step They Take.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Luncheon Lurch, the latest variation of the Tango and the Turkey Trot, which has seized the society of the Capital, is declared by experts on gastronomy to be the greatest known appetizer and first aid to digestion.

So effective has it been found along these lines that the Martini is now almost unknown on the boards of Washington hosts, while the pepsin tablet supply of the druggists is practically considered worthless stock.

There is a deep method in the Luncheon Lurch. Contrary to the Tango, which is danced after tea, the Lurch is a prepandian pastime. At a given time before the viands are to be served the orchestra strikes up something syncopated.

Guests immediately begin lurching and continue the dance until they have worked up an appetite considered commensurate with the feast about to be served.

Each step carries the dancers nearer the dining room, and observant ones declare that it is an invariable rule that the best trenchermen always dance with a remarkable celerity, while the dyspeptics lurch so slowly that they are to all appearances posing in tableau.

Among the prominent lurchers are Miss Katherine Elkins, Miss Dorothy Williams, Miss Sally Williams, Miss Katherine Britton, Miss Marguerite Barbour and Mrs. James F. Curtis.

ALL WOMEN TO VOTE IN TIME IS SENATE'S IDEA

Even the Most Conservative Members Believe the Fair Sex Will Cast Ballot the World Over.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—That women in all civilized countries will be permitted to vote is regarded as inevitable by the most conservative Senators and Representatives.

It is their opinion that steady progress is being made and that Great Britain, the United States and other leading nations will eventually recognize that further delay is useless.

Two-Thirds Vote Needed.

The resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal constitution under which women would be given the ballot, now awaiting consideration by the Senate, is expected to be passed on at the next session. A two-thirds vote would be necessary for its adoption.

It would require the appoval of sixty-four Senators to make women suffrage operative for submission to the States, so far as the upper branch of Congress is concerned.

The chief handicap preventing woman suffrage lies in the opposition of Southern Congressmen. The votes for the women's movement have made headway in the South. A bitter struggle is in progress in Alabama, where Representative Hobson is seeking the Senatorship, as against Mr. Johnston, on a platform favoring woman suffrage and temperance. Senator Johnston says he will achieve re-election without difficulty.

Have Twenty-Four Votes.

It is figured that these Senators will certainly support the Chamberlain resolution providing for a constitutional amendment permitting women to vote; Ashurst and Smith, of Arizona; Thomas and Shafroth, of Colorado; Borah and Brady, of Idaho; Myers and Walsh, of Montana; Gallinger and Hollis, of New Hampshire; Chamberlain and Lane, of Oregon; Smoot and Sutherland, of Utah; Jones and Poindexter, of Washington; Clark and Warren, of Wyoming; Gore and Owens, of Oklahoma; Ransdell and Thornton, of Louisiana.

This totals but twenty-four of the sixty-four votes necessary in the Senate. In view of recent action in Iowa, Illinois and Kansas it is possible that Senators Cummins, Kenyon, Sherman, Lewis, Bristow and Thompson may be added to the list, making thirty in all. It is claimed that two or three additional votes may come from New England, but no names are suggested.

Cupid Moves to Vancouver, Wash.

Oregon's New Law Requiring Health Certificates Held Responsible.

VANCOUVER, WASH., June 28.—The record for marriage licenses issued in one day during the 60 years in which records have been kept was broken here when ten couples secured marriage licenses. Nor is this all.

At the present rate, in fifteen days the greatest month's record will be broken in one-half the time—and all because Oregon passed a law requiring certificates of health from men making application for marriage licenses. Already 58 licenses have been issued this month, the record being 65 for any entire month.

BURN ATLANTA CLEAN, PLAN OF SANITAR YCHIEF

Settlement of Crematory Row Leaves Mayor, Council and Everybody Pleased.

John Jentzen, Sanitary Chief, is the happiest man in Atlanta as a result of the settlement Saturday of the crematory row. Operating his department without an incinerator, he said, was like trying to sail a ship on dry land, and that he had had to bear the brunt of complaints against the situation from thousands of exasperated citizens.

"That decision in the Mayor's office marks a new era in Atlanta," he said "We shall begin a general clean-up the day the crematory is completed. I understand that that will not be longer than ten days. We shall burn Atlanta pure.

"Let the people take note of these instructions:

Gives Sanitary Rules.

"Keep the lids on garbage cans.

"Pile up the trash in yards and notify the sanitary department to come and get it.

"Don't throw things into streets and alleys.

"Help us put an end to the flies and musquitoes. You know trash breeds them."

The Chief said the new crematory would increase greatly the efficiency of his department and that it would shorten hauls and allow sanitary wagons to make more frequent visits.

He declared it would reduce the death rate and make Atlanta a more pleasant place to live in.

Mayor Well Pleased.

Although Mayor Woodward has been almost unanimously opposed in his attitude by the Council and brought most bitter criticism on himself, he smiled and said he was well satisfied over the outcome.

The Mayor's victory in the Supreme Court caused the price of the incinerator to be reduced from $276,000 to $260,000. His recent firm stand caused him to gain a point of honor.

Council endeavored to avoid allowing him to execute the contract. The concession is that he will execute it, following a special meeting of the Council Tuesday. That point has been the whole cause of the last controversy.

Turkish Bath Cures Rheumatism at Home

Costs But 2c a Bath.

Quickly Cures Kidney Trouble, Nervous Prostration and All Skin Diseases.

The Robinson Thermal or Turkish bath, taken at home, is becoming a rage. Those who have used the bath have been completely carried away with enthusiasm because of the astonishing results obtained.

Well known physicians say that the Robinson Thermal Bath at home is about to become an almost universal conqueror of disease. This is not an exaggeration. Any man or woman can prove its results inside of 24 hours, in some cases 30 minutes.

In cases of rheumatism, especially, the uric acid poison is extracted from the system through the pores, almost as liquids are sucked up through a straw. Drugs merely smother the poison or ease the pain. They do not extract the poison from the body.

Just read this letter:

"I loaned my cabinet to an old friend all crippled up with rheumatism, last May. Feet, legs, and hands badly swollen. He had spent some time at different Hot Springs without relief. A week ago he started in to use the cabinet, taking the steam heat in the morning and the dry heat at night, before going to bed. He kept this up a week, and yesterday and to-day he was as well as ever. "GEORGE A. FREEMAN,

"Mgr. Temptation Mining and Milling Company, Silverton, Colo."

Anyone can now take Robinson Thermal baths at home and at a cost of only about 2c a bath. They make the thick, sluggish blood normal, take out the impurities and cure "spring fever" right off. The only way to take these baths is by the use of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinet, which is a unique and marvelous invention.

That great book, "The Philosophy of Health and Beauty," retail price $2.00, free at our Main Store upon request for a limited time only. Be sure to get a copy. Also see the interesting demonstration of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinets; no obligation to purchase. Jacobs' Pharmacy, Main Store and Laboratory, 8-10 Marietta Street.—Adv.

$2,000,000 TAX GAIN EXPECTED IN CHATHAM

SAVANNAH, June 28.—That the total tax returns of Chatham County will show an increase for 1913 of close to $2,000,000 is the opinion of Tax Assessor Marcus S. Baker. This will make the total returns for the year over $40,600,000—a new record for Chatham County.

But this increase will have no effect on the tax rate, says Judge Oliver T. Bacon, chairman of the board of county commissioners. The net income from this estimated increase at 7½ cents a thousand is only about $14,000.

UNCLE SAM IS NOW GREATEST HORSE BREEDER

Supplies Mounts for the Army From His Virginia Farm and Turns Out Thoroughbreds.

FARMERS ARE HIS PARTNERS

System So Successful That Other Large Studs Will Be Established in the West.

FRONT ROYAL, VA., June 28.—Uncle Sam has recently embarked in the horse business on a gigantic scale. He has started here what is probably the largest horse farm in the world, 5,500 acres, only a few hours' ride from the capital. And this is only the first of his farms. He intends to start several and turn out thoroughbreds by the tens of thousands.

To-day the farm is supplying practically the entire United States Army with its mounts. A short time hence and it will be supplying civilians, and soon, according to Captain Caspar H. Conrad, in charge, and generally acknowledged one of the greatest experts in horse flesh in America, it will be suppyling most of the civilized nations of Europe. And the price—now $144.15—may become even cheaper for Americans.

The farm represents an expenditure of more than $600,000, with some $400,000 to be spent within the next year.

Horses Have Everything.

On the farm are all sorts of buildings, sanitary baths, swimming pools, drinking fountains, resting sheds, pleasure paths and even a gigantic hospital—all for horses. Here and there are huge houses wherein reside men. These men look out for the horses.

They talk of little else. Indeed, it would be strange if the case were otherwise, for there are only 100 of these men, and daily they have to look after from 1,500 to 2,000 horses.

It took a long time to start the horse farm—more than half a century.

One day a few years ago a number of high staff officers of the army, watching a cavalry review, made some rather disparaging remarks concerning the appearance of the horses.

"Some of 'em look like mountain goats, and the rest like buffaloes," said one of the officers, and the remark got to the ears of Captain Conrad, and set him to thinking.

After that Captain Conrad had the approval of the War Department to start the farm. August Belmont made Uncle Sam a present of his six best stallions. Those stallions are known the racing world over, as Henry of Navarre, Octagon, Footprint, Belfry II, Vestibule and Marshall King. The six of them, when but two years old, cost $100,000.

Two More Horses Given.

James Camden, millionaire horseman of Versailles, Ky., heard of Belmont's gift and made Uncle Sam a present of his two famous stallions, Boola Boola and Wheelwright, worth about $25,000. Thus the farm was started.

But even with fifty stallions and mares by the hundred breeding on the farm was too slow. Something had to be done to increase the scope of the work—and the answer was found in a scheme to have Uncle Sam take every farmer in the South into partnership. This was done.

The ultimate plan is to sell the horses at a gigantic auction sale, with an army officer as auctioneer, knocking down the animals to the highest bidder.

Uncle Sam's horse farm is probably the only place in the country where no matter what animal you buy you may rest assured of getting a horse that is perfect. If the animal has the slightest blemish it will not be sold.

"Of course," said Captain Conrad, "we know that in this particular case the scar was due entirely to accident. But the farmer doesn't know it. He might have a mare scarred up purely by accident, but we wouldn't take his word for. We demand perfect mares and colts, so we give perfect stallions."

One Word to Decide Estate Ownership

Will Filed for Probate Causes Legal Discussion of Meaning of "And" and "Or."

WOODBURY, N. J., June 25.—The will of the late Aaron Knisell, of Sewell, was offered for probate in the Surrogate's office. This instrument has raised a contention among the heirs. The will left the entire estate to Mrs. Knisell, who died two weeks before her husband, and it is claimed that its provisions lapsed with her death.

The property was left to Mrs. Knisell "and her heirs." Had it read "or" heirs, it is claimed, the estate would go to her heirs; but, as it says "and" heirs, Knisell's brothers claim the estate. A ruling by the court will be necessary to interpret the instrument.

Evelyn Thaw Tells Her Ambition Will Try Something Worth While Reveals Her Plans to Alan Dale

Evelyn Thaw in the days she took New York by storm.

Evelyn Thaw as she is to-day.

As Miss Nesbit, Now Dancing at the Hippodrome, and Booked for Paris and Vienna.

By ALAN DALE.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—It was "Hullo, Rag-Time," at the Hippodrome that brought Evelyn Thaw within my jurisdiction, as it has brought many others who I never expected to meet.

So, with the open sesame of elusive art as a go-between, "Miss Nesbit," as she is programed here, received me without hesitancy in her rooms at the St. James Hotel, off Piccadilly, and our art robbed me of qualms. It was quite early morning.

Evelyn Thaw wore a loose peignoire of a black, shiny something, slashed at the back with yellow. Her hair was loosely fluffed out; she was devoid of the slightest effort at make-up, her ivory-white face and her unreddened lips looking quite startlingly natural. She was as pretty as any picture of—herself, and though the edge of reluctant youth may have frayed a little, there isn't a shadow of a doubt on the score of Evelyn Nesbit's charm. Never in all the ladies I have professionally met have I found more self-possession, a keener poise and less self-consciousness than in Evelyn Thaw. She made me wonder. She spoke easily, gracefully, reassuringly, without a trace of hesitation or nervousness.

On the Spur of the Moment.

"It was awfully sudden," she said, as we sat opposite each other. "I had no idea of going back to the stage after all these years."

"How many?" I asked. "You need not answer."

"Oh, I'm not like that," she said, with the first wistful smile; "I don't mind recalling anything. The last previous time I appeared on the stage was in 1904 in 'The Wild Rose.'

"Well, on the Olympic, coming over, I met a lot of theatrical people, among them Lee Shubert, Martin Beck and Albert DeCourville. They all advised me to make the break, especially DeCourville, who is manager of the Hippodrome.

"He has just married Shirley Kellogg, by the bye. I thought it over carefully, for I was a bit afraid, you know." She seemed to take it for granted that I knew. I did; I quite understood. "If I had made the break in New York I should have been a 'freak,'" she said. "Oh, there have been other women who have been through trials like mine who first tried New York, and it was hopeless. So when DeCourville telegraphed me at Paris to come at once to London and appear I realized that it was up to me, and I went, afraid, of course, but you know I'm no novice at harrowing experiences."

A Wild Turkey Trot.

"I was determined that nothing should force any attention from me to that sort of thing." She was now an artist before the public, and I was—me.

"I had to do a wild turkey trot with a dancer, and he was hard to find. I had seen Jack Clifford at the Cafe De Paris, and I remembered that he used to dance with Irene Weston, so we engaged him and rehearsed for one week only at the Irish Club, opposite the Hippodrome. Oh! it was terrible work. He throws me around—I am tossed up in the air and I see my heels at an angle I never expected to view them. And I'm an old married woman, with stiff joints."

Evelyn Nesbit laughed. So did I. She was as simple and unaffected as the inevitable school girl. It was impossible not to like her. She amused me a lot.

"They sneaked us on at a Saturday matinee without announcement," she said, "and luck favored me. The turn went well, and we are a hit.

"I'm engaged for six weeks, with an option, and then I go to Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Copenhagen——"

"And New York?" I asked.

"New York, surely," she replied, smiling, "when I feel that I've put it over, but not until then. Oh, I do want to earn my own living, and the stage is good, and I don't mind hard work. In the old days, when I had nothing on my mind but my hair, I used to shirk rehearsals. Now, I'm Johnny-on-the-spot. I don't mind how much we rehearse. In fact, I rehearse every day. I've always loved dancing, and have studied all the successful dancers. If only I don't get fat like Ethel Barrymore and others."

She Won't Get Fat.

"You couldn't," I opined, for she didn't look the part.

"I won't," she retorted; "it would be a great pity, and I have another ambition that I'll tell you, for it may surprise you. Do you remember what Jerome said about me?"

Again I refused to remember anything.

"Well, he said that there were four great actresses—Sarah Bernhardt, Eleanora Duse, Mrs. Fiske and myself. I don't forget that. Some day I may try to act—to do something worth while, something serious, something emotional. So there you are! You will laugh, because I know you are funny.

"Theatrical people take themselves very seriously, and they can't understand why you don't do the same, but you don't—you can be as funny as you like about me. I sha'n't mind a bit, for I really have a sense of humor, and I'm not very serious." She laughed again, and I was quite disarmed. Evelyn Nesbit had impressed me as I didn't believe I was going to be impressed.

"All I do in London," she said, "is to work and eat good food. I love the food in London. Do go to the Cheshire Cheese and taste the chops. I was there yesterday, and I sat in Dr. Johnson's chair and enjoyed myself hugely. I'm going to get on, and I'm going to surprise everybody. One must have a beginning. Look at Elsie Ferguson. She was the stupidest chorus girl I ever met, but she had big moments, and now she is a very charming actress. Don't forget to write something funny about me, for I shall enjoy it."

But, somehow or other, Evelyn Nesbit hadn't appealed to my sense of humor. She was, at least, spontaneous and natural.

BOY, NOT YET 8, TO ENTER HIGH SCHOOL IN FALL

New Mexican Prodigy Received All His Training From Mother. Wonderful Memory.

ROSWELL, N. MEX., June 28.—When the public schools open next fall there will be a new student in the high school department, a boy who has never been to school a single day and who will not at that time have reached his eighth birthday.

This is the boy who, at the age of eighteen months, startled the city of Denver by repeating the names of the Presidents of the United States, and who at the age of five recited several pages from Hiawatha in a school entertainment in Artesia, N. Mex. His name is Raymond Ray. He is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Ray, of Roswell.

The mother of this boy, who has been his only tutor since the very earliest day that he could learn, attributes to him none of the characteristics of a prodigy or perhaps of a genius. He has been taught to think, to concentrate his mind, and this training has enabled him to develop a remarkable memory.

He seldom reads an interesting topic more than once in order to commit it to memory, and he studies physiology, arithmetic, grammar, civil government and literature with little aid from his mother. When he enters high school he will take up the study of Latin, algebra, rhetoric, physical geography and ancient history.

Raymond is now studying Spanish, elocution and vocal music. He has some excellent talent in music, and sings with real melody, spirit and understanding.

WHY 200,000 PEOPLE NOW BATHE INTERNALLY

When you are ill, the first step your Physician takes is to clean out the Large Intestine.

He does this because the chances are ten to one that if you had no accumulated waste in the Large Intestine you would not have been ill at all.

The new process of Internal Bathing by means of the "J. B. L. Cascade" thoroughly cleanses the Lower Intestine, removes all waste and poisonous matter, and keeps it as pure as Nature demands it to be for perfect health.

It is Nature's own way of curing Constipation—simply warm water properly applied.

Enlightened physicians everywhere are using and prescribing it—

And instead of waiting to be ill, over 200,000 delighted Americans are warding off disease and increasing their efficiency and energy by its use.

Until recently the "J. B. L. Cascade" has been obtainable only by sending to its inventor, Charles A. Tyrrell, M. D., New York City.

The demand for it now, however, has become universal, through the recommendations of those who are using it. Call at our main store and we will be glad to show you the "J. B. L. Cascade" and explain it in detail.

We are also distributing a very interesting booklet on internal bathing, called "Why Man of To-day Is Only 50 Per Cent Efficient," which can be obtained on request, without cost. Ask us for it to-day and inform yourself about this safe and sane method of curing constipation without drugs.

Wife Refuses to Stop Husband and Daughter's Eloping

Declares to Humane Society That She Tolerated Act to Preserve Happiness of Her Child.

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Telling a most unusual story, filled with peculiar complications, in which she accuses her husband of eloping with and marrying his own stepdaughter and then stealing her two children in order to secure property belonging to her, Mrs. Ruella Nicholson has appealed to the police, the humane society and the county officers to help her in locating her husband, Edward Nicholson, and thus get back her children.

How she learned of the fact that her daughter had married her own stepfather, and did not interfere with the marriage because she wanted her child to be happy was a part of the strange story alleged by the woman.

Tired, hungry and practically penniless, the elderly woman appealed to the humane society.

Society Women Sound Knell for Mourning

Boston Leaders Declare That Custom of Donning Black for Dead Is Relic of Barbarism.

BOSTON, June 28.—Society women of Boston have answered the question, "How long should society women wear mourning for their dead relatives?" by saying in substance that mourning should not be worn. It was the consensus of opinion that it is a survival of barbarian days.

Mrs. Charles P. Putnam, wife of Dr. Putnam, said, "It seems to me that there is altogether too much mourning worn considering our present enlightened state of civilization. The world is dark enough as it is without women wearing crepe to make it any more gloomy.

Women Taught to Save Million a Year

Kansas Garbage Cans Are Cheated of Immense Amount by Domestic Science Instruction at School.

TOPEKA, KAN., June 28.—Kansas cheated the garbage cans of the State out of $1,000,000 last year, and the amount will be increased at the rate of $500,000 a year until there will be virtually no wasted foods in the entire State.

That is the aim of the Kansas Agricultural College, and the State is spending $40,000 a year to help.

Seven hundred girls completed the domestic science courses at the agricultural college this week, and the college has just closed its movable cooking schools, which were attended by 11,000 women in the ten weeks in which they were operated.

PET CANARY OF PRETTY WOMAN HALTS VESSEL

Captain of Liner Agrees to Delay Voyage Until She Can Send Home for Bird.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Mrs. Green is young and very charming. That is why the officers of the Vestris, of the Lamport and Holt line, gave her their fullest attention when she announced in plaintive but positive tones that she had lost her Rickey.

"I forgot to bring Rickey," she exclaimed.

"Who's Rickey?" demanded the second officer.

"Rickey's our pet canary," she said, "and I am taking him to South America to my husband. I mean I was to have taken him, but I left him at home."

Brought Food, Forgot Bird.

"It's too late now to get him," said the officer, "for we leave in thirty minutes."

"But I wouldn't dare go without him. I've brought the seed and the cuttlefish and everything, but I forgot the bird."

"Where do you live?" asked the officer.

"Mrs. G. F. Green, 59 West Fifty-third Street," was the reply, and the officer solicited the assistance of H. S. Damage, the line's passenger agent. After consultation with the Vestris captain it was agreed to hold the vessel until ten minutes after five o'clock—ten minutes later than her schedule called for—and Mr. Damage and Mrs. Green sought a telephone.

Bird's Owner In Hysterics.

To an agent of a taxicab company the young woman explained that she wanted to go to the Fifty-third Street number and get a canary bird.

But no canary bird bearing taxicab arrived at the pier by ten minutes after five o'clock, and Mrs. Queen was in a state of hysteria as she watched the sailors haul off the gang plank.

Just as the Vestris was swinging at the end of the pier and before the last spring line was cast off the taxicab arrived. With the bewildered canary in its cage one of Mrs. Green's friends ran to the end of the pier and fastened the cage to a piece of rope. Then, very slowly and with due reverence—for Mrs. Green's brimming eyes were upon him—a sailor hauled the line with the cage attached over the side.

Woman Loves Mouse; Eats Meals With Him

Pet Comes Daily to Dine With Hotel Employees, and Girl Feeds Him From Hand.

CINCINNATI, June 28.—It is an old saying that all women are afraid of mice, but one has at last been found who is not afraid, and even says she likes them.

She is Miss Ella Eversfield, an operator at the Grand Hotel, who takes her meals with her favorite mouse every day. The employees of the hotel have a private dining room, and some time ago a mouse was discovered there. At the time Miss Eversfield had not learned to love mice and she probably screamed, but the mouse was game and stuck it out, and, having learned the meal hours, he insisted on putting in his appearance every day, until finally the employees learned to consider him as one of their number, and now he eats his meals from the hand of Miss Eversfield.

$10,000 DAMAGES ASKED FOR HAIR'S TURNING GRAY

TRENTON, June 28.—Because her hair turned gray as the result of injuries sustained when she was struck by a trolley car, Mrs. Mary G. Hibbs, of Bristol, to-day started suit against the Trenton and Mercer County Traction Company for $10,000. Mrs. Hibbs was injured in Trenton when she attempted to cross a street in front of a car.

NEW ANSLEY HOTEL GIVES MOST MODERN HOSTELRY OF SOUTH TO ATLANTA

No Detail Has Been Spared to Make It Unsurpassed for the Traveling Public and People of City—Formal Opening Monday.

Machinery and Equipment Latest Devices for Aid of Sanitation and Comfort—Mural Decorations Picture Events of Georgia.

Only to those who "put up" after Monday at the Hotel Ansley will it be given in fullest measure to say, with Shenstone, that they have "found life's warmest welcome at an inn."

At least, the builder and the lessee and the press agent have endeavored to make it even so, and the very few favored persons permitted to inspect the building and its appointments in advance of the opening agree they planned wisely and builded well.

When the Ansley, Atlanta's newest hostelry, opens its doors to guests on Monday, it will be unexcelled among the inns of the country for efficiency, service, accommodations, equipment and modernity of its appointments. No detail was overlooked in the planning; no expense was spared in the building.

Banquet Hall Seats 500.

With its banquet room seating 500, its rathskeller accommodating 300 and its hundreds of rooms supplied with fresh filtered air continuously; with its costly historical mural decorations, each a work of art, the sumptuous furnishings of its rooms and suites and its perfect service system, the Ansley will be without a superior for business, conveniences and safety.

As "Marse" Henry Watterson expressed it, at no place "on the Rambla and in the Ring, in Piccadilly and the Corso, beneath the colonnades of the Rue de Rivoli of Paris and 'Unter den Linden' of Berlin—indeed, all the way between Chicago and Cannebiere, including many nooks and corners of little old New York," can the man or woman with a trunk and a handbag live higher, sleep safer and spend less than at the Hotel Ansley.

Two well-known quotations imprinted on the tapestry will greet the eye of all who pass the portals of the Hotel Ansley. The first one is the hotel man's favorite verse, from Shenstone, as follows:

Whoe'er has traveled life's dull round,
Where'er his stages may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
Life's warmest welcome at an inn.

The next is a Scriptural quotation, taken from Hebrews, and the Ansley management promises to apply the precept and the compliment to every guest alike. Here it is:

"Forget not to show love unto strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

Indicate Spirit of Hotel.

These two familiar quotations are printed across the underbeam of the winding marble stairways in the Ansley foyer. They are intended to indicate the spirit in which guests should apply and expect to be received.

Appearance of the lobby is enhanced by three historical paintings on tapestry, each 12 by 10 feet, situated on the upper mezzanine floor and facing the Forsyth Street entrance. The paintings recall important historical happenings in Georgia.

The first panel depicts the meeting of General Oglethorpe and Tomochichi at Savannah, May 21, 1733. The next represents John Wesley teaching the Indians under the oaks of St. Simons, and the third shows the burning of the Yazoo fraud papers at the state house in Louisville, Jefferson County, in the year 1796.

The papers were ignited by means of a magnifying glass and the sun's rays, showing that the fire which destroyed such an infamy should come from Heaven.

On the ground floor are a dozen or more other paintings of historical interest.

Dining Room Is Italian.

The dining room of the Ansley is known as the Italian room, on account of its architecture and mural paintings. The latter consist of the Vatican gardens, showing the cupola of St. Peter's in the distance; the garden of Villa Borghese in Florence, the garden of Villa Lante, the Hercules fountain in the garden of Villa Reale of Florence, and a view of Venice canals, all of which are painted on canvases each 12 by 10 feet.

The rathskeller, one of the largest and most luxurious in the South, is reminiful of college life. Its walls are decorated with portraits of the seals of the leading Georgia colleges, interlaced with varicolored bands waving over a golden background.

The waiting room is trimmed and wainscoted with Georgia sycamore. A distinctive feature of this room, indeed, of the hotel is a full size true-to-life portrait of Lieutenant General William Tecumseh Sherman, beneath which is the following inscription:

"Under whose orders Atlanta was burned, and who said war is hell."

Old Photographs Reproduced.

Actual 1865 photographs are reproduced, showing Atlanta before and after the famous conflagration. On other panels of the writing room are the Great Seals of Atlanta and the State of Georgia. Those who have seen this room are unstinted in their praise of its historical interest and value.

The Ansley equipment for cleaning silverware and dishes is unexcelled. The silverware will be cleaned by chemically generated electricity, made by water, soda and salt.

Dishes will be cleansed and sterilized by powerful streams of hot water thrown against them while inclosed in a metal washing machine.

The kitchen of the Ansley is replete with modern machinery and other implements for prompt and efficient service. Its appointments are products of as great attention to detail as was given the office, the rathskeller or any other part of the hostelry.

Five Lang ranges form a battery kept at even temperature by a single furnace. The bake ovens are built on the skyscraper plan—four stories high—thus utilizing space and insuring uniform results. The meat department is equipped with a slicing machine, insuring uniform-sized slices without rough edges.

Has Own Ice Plant.

The Ansley has the best equipped ice and refrigerating plant in Atlanta. It is a duplicate affair with a capacity of fourteen tons a day. The cold storage room could accommodate a carload of meat.

From a service bar in the basement all orders will be filled for the rathskeller, private dining rooms and guests' apartments, thus keeping the waiters out of the main buffet, which opens on Forsyth Street.

Distinctively a unique feature for any hotel is the sanitary bathing subbasement for the hotel's servants. Each compartment is equipped with lockers, and all waiters, cooks, bellboys, porters, etc., will be required to take a shower bath before starting each day's work.

Not the least attraction of the Ansley is its contemplated scale of charges. Rooms with running water and private toilet will cost $1 a day, rooms with connecting bath $1.50, with private bath $2, $2.50 and $3. Club breakfasts will be served for 25 cents and up, lunch for 50 cents from 12 till 2 o'clock, and 6 to 8 o'clock dinner for $1.

Indian Girl Writes Opera on Sioux Life

Zitkala Sa Composed "The Sun Dance"—Gave It on Reservation.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28.—On the Uintah reservation at Vernal, Utah, nearly 100 miles from a railroad, an Indian girl has written an opera, with her people as the theme and motif. It is one thing to write an opera and another to have it produced. Zitkala Sa, a full-blooded Sioux, has accomplished both these things.

When "The Sun Dance" was sung in Vernal, Indians and whites drove in from 40 miles around to hear it; and, having heard it, they pronounced it a triumph. Efforts are being made to have the opera sung in Salt Lake City during the week of the National Education Association, July 5 to 11.

"The Sun Dance," as it was produced at Vernal in March, was not altogether the work of Kitkala Sa and her copper-hued brethren of the Uintah reservation. Professor William F. Hansen, of the faculty, and white as well as Indian students of Uintah Academy played important roles in the preparation and singing of the piece. It was, in fact, part of the academy work.

12,000 Drinks in Five Years Basis of Suit

Wife Declares Husband Protected Himself With Walking Stick in Driving Rain Storm.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Twelve thousand drinks, ranging from simple mixed potations to fancy concoctions, is the record which Mrs. John Barry Sears posts up against her husband in five years of married life.

Mrs. Sears, who is suing for divorce, said Mr. Sears started his career of conviviality during his honeymoon and has kept it up.

In one instance, according to Mrs. Sears, her husband had come home in a driving rain.

"He carried his walking stick elevated above his head," she testified, "and held his umbrella closed in his hand. He was soaking wet, but did not know it."

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, EUGENE, June 28.—Max H. Sommer, a freshman in the University of Oregon, registered from Portland, has a record for assiduous reading during the past collegiate year. According to the report of Librarian Douglass, Sommer's card shows that he has taken out 89 volumes, the majority of which would be classed as "heavy reading."

Of the 89 volumes perused by this freshman, 47 are devoted to social science, 28 are classed as pure literature, 5 are works of history and biography, 3 are of a philosophical and religious nature and 4 deal with journalism.

Oregon Governor Opposed to Autos

Declares State Appropriation Would Have Made Him Travel Like 'Piker.'

SALEM, OREG., June 28.—Despite rumors to the effect that he would be a candidate for re-election, Governor West positively announces that he will not be a candidate.

The Governor said that the financial drain on him was large, particularly his traveling expenses. The State now provides $1,000 for the traveling expenses of the Governor when on the State's business, but until two years ago only $500 a year was provided. The Governor declared that he could not live like a "piker" when away from home, and the expenses of many of his trips were paid by himself.

Governor West said that he had never bought an automobile because he did not want one, wouldn't have one if somebody would make him a present of it, couldn't operate it if he had it, and, above all, could not afford a machine.

DANCING MASTERS DECLARE TURKEY TROT IS IMMORAL

ASBURY PARK, June 28.—The "turkey trot" is an immoral dance in the opinion of members of the American National Association, masters of dancing, in session here, and at today's meeting the delegates were urged to co-operate with local authorities in banishing the figure that is fast becoming the rage.

The "tango" was not treated so severely. If properly taught, the masters believe, it may be danced.

Miss Ackerman said the happiest and most professional women are in Australia.

DIVA BELIEVES BABIES BEST, FARM LIFE NEXT

Schumann-Heink, Who Has Just Passed Her Fifty-second Birthday, Purchases Big Tract.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., June 28.—"Yes, now I am a farmer; also I am a mother, and I have just had my fifty-second birthday."

It was Mme. Schumann-Heink who spoke. Wreathed in smiles and radiating health—the great artist, accompanied by her youngest child and most beautiful daughter, descended from an incoming train to begin a six-month vacation here.

She had just completed her longest American tour and returns with the greatest profits made by any artist in concert this season.

Last year Mme. Schumann-Heink bought 3,000 acres here. She plans to make ranches with gardens, barren wastes into orchards and her rancho the garden spot of America.

"Farming," enthused Madame, "next to the rearing of babies, is the most interesting work in the world."

"But the farming, madame, surely you will not hoe?"

"Look at these two hands. I ask you, do they not appear capable? I have raised and worked for my children and they are yet strong—nicht?" Madame held her pink palms upward. One of the most convincing proofs of what she said was their appearance. The fingers are long and slender and young and strong enough to be envied by any woman half the diva's age.

And this can also be said truthfully of her face and form. Mme. Schumann's flamed with health.

"Yes, I shall be getting out and digging like a regular farmer. Oh, that is nothing to dig," she stated. "Once I made a garden at my New York home.

"Ach, yes, it is good to grow fruit, but it is better to be the mother of babies."

Babies Saved From Bolt by Feather Bed

Children Are Found Unhurt in Mattress After Room Is Wrecked by Lightning.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A feather mattress saved two children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson on the Peter Cortelyou farm, at Franklin Park, near New Brunswick, N. J., when a bolt of lightning struck their bed. The parents were awakened by a tremendous crash and a shriek from the children in an adjoining room. A flash of lightning just as they reached the room revealed a big hole in the roof and one in the floor.

The father obtained a lamp and found the bedstead shattered to pieces. Securely rolled up in the feather mattress, however, were the two little ones, almost suffocated with heat but unhurt.

SWEETPEAS IMPORTED BY AUSTRIAN EMPEROR

Special Cable to The American.

VIENNA, June 28.—Sweetpeas, which were practically unknown in Austria only a few years ago, are now prominent in the Imperial Gardens at Schonbrunn.

The aged Emperor Francis Joseph is the first in Austria to "take up" the sweetpea. The director of the Imperial Gardens was sent to London and brought specimen plants back with him. Now the tables at the castle at Schonbrunn are decorated with sweetpeas in one color or at most two. The Emperor prefers pink and white to other combinations.

Chief's Gold Badge Found to be Nickel

New Head of Police Department Finds That Predecessors Had Worn Base Metal Insignia.

PASADENA, June 28.—"Silver Threads Among the Gold," merrily whistled newly appointed Chief of Police W. S. McIntire as he scraped off the gold from the badge that was turned over to him by his predecessor, W. F. Wood, who resigned from the office.

When Wood resigned he presented his successor with the badge containing the words, "Chief of Police, Pasadena." On making a close inspection of the badge, which had long borne a reputation of being solid gold, the new chief observed that it was somewhat tarnished.

A cleanser was then applied, with the result that the badge in a few minutes was a shining nickel-plated star and greatly similar to the other badges worn by the balance of the police department.

Free Market Starts To Cut Cost of Living

San Jose, Cal., Plans To Do Away With Profit Made by Middle Man.

SAN POSE, CAL., June 28.—San Jose hit the high cost of living a solar plexus blow to-day when, under the direction of the city administration, a free market was opened in South Market Street at the City Hall Park.

A score of produce wagons came for the opening, and long before the selling day was over every scrap of salable goods had been disposed of and a crowd clamored for a chance to purchase.

Market Master Joseph Napoli declares that the first day's business demonstrated that producers received 25 per cent more for their sales than they could get from the middle man and that buyers saved a minimum of 25 per cent by doing business directly with the producers.

CONVICTS DINE IN HOTEL THEN SEE MOVING PICTURE

COLUMBUS, O., June 28.—Five penitentiary prisoners, serving sentences ranging from manslaughter to pocket picking, were taken from their cells by an official of the State Board of Administration and treated to a banquet at one of the large hotels. Following the banquet the prisoners were taken to moving picture shows and given an entertainment which they will long remember.

PREACHER DIVORCES HIS WIFE.

OMAHA, NEBR., June 28.—The Rev. F. P. Jolly, formerly of Joliet, Ill., was granted a divorce from his wife, the grounds being extreme cruelty. Mrs. Jolly is now living in Joliet.

JAP EMIGRANTS NOW COLONIZING BRAZILIAN LANDS

1,500 Arrivals But Vanguard of Orientals to Be Sent to South America.

SEATTLE, WASH., June 28.—How Japan is colonizing Brazil was given in detail here with the arrival of the Japanese steamship Sanuki Maru.

Fifteen hundred Japanese emigrants were landed at Santos, Brazil, May 15. They are the vanguard of a great population to be sent to South America to become a part of the first permanent Japanese colony in Brazil under the Sao Paulo colonization agreement recently entered into between Japan and Brazil.

The first award of territory comprises approximately 150,000 acres of agricultural land.

Another Japanese Brazilian colonization enterprise has been completed and passengers of the Sanuki say that the two Governments have arranged for the concession of a considerable area of fertile country which will be settled by Japanese. Settlers for this colony will leave Japan about the end of the present year.

Japanese contract labor is now being sent into South Africa and both Brazil and Peru are being supplied with coolies, who leave Japan under contract with various South American industrial organizations.

CONTESTANTS WORKING HARD FOR MORE VOTES

Manager of Pony Race Advises Girls and Boys to Use Follow-Up System.

SYSTEMATIC WORK WINS

Shetlands Are Growing Fat and Strong at Loomis Avenue Stable Where They Are Kept.

The last week of the "clubs of five" bonus offer in The Georgian and American pony contest begins with all contestants straining hard to take advantage of the benefit to be gained by getting subscriptions before the time limit is up.

Standings published in The American show great gains, but they are small compared with the leaps forward which will be shown when the bonus votes are reckoned up for publication in next Wednesday's Georgian. The contest manager believes it will take the office force all of the night of July 5 to make the proper entries.

There also is a bonus of 50,000 votes for the first $30 turned in for subscriptions by any of the contestants. This offer may be withdrawn at any time.

Use Follow-Up System.

The contest manager wishes to repeat his suggestion that contestants take a leaf from the books of the successful business man and institute a "follow-up" system. A list of those whose subscriptions expire soon should be made, and all such subscribers visited with a request for a renewal. Nine times out of ten, a renewal is easier to get than the first subscription, for at the end of a short trial the subscriber generally gets to like The Georgian and American so well that he wants to continue.

It is systematic work of this sort which counts for more than the spurts of a day or two, which, while they may yield remarkable results, are not frequent enough to build up totals to the point where the contestant can feel sure of a pony.

None Sure of Winning.

No contestant has a right to feel sure of winning as yet. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not be passed by an energetic rival, and some who are leading now have a very poor start, indeed.

Meanwhile, the ponies are "eating their heads off" at 55 Loomis Avenue, where their future owners are invited to call and see them. All are rounding into great shape, and they are prettier every day. It is going to be a hard task for the winners to pick the ponies they like best from the splendid bunch The Georgian and American have bought.

"I subscribed to The Georgian and American a week ago, and the paper has not begun to come to my home yet," is a complaint heard every now and then.

Usually it develops that the subscriber gave his money to one of the contestants, and that the contestant is "holding back."

This is poor policy, particularly if it is a short-term subscription, for when a contestant treats a subscriber in this way the man is not going to be as willing to give the contestant his renewal.

"Don't hold back," is the advice of the contest manager—and he knows best.

BONUS OFFER IN PONY CONTEST GIVES 1 WEEK MORE OF OPPORTUNITY

Wanting to win and working to win differ widely. Working to win is what counts, and working to win now, while the special bonus vote offers are in effect in The Georgian and American pony contest.

July 4 means more than cannon crackers, picnics and general celebrations to the pony contestants. It means, to them, the end of one of the bonus offers, and July 4 is little more than a week away.

Clubs of five subscriptions, yearly, half-yearly, or for three months, bring great rewards until the expiration of the period thus limited. And "when the polls close" for these club bonus votes the office force of the contest manager expects an all-night session reckoning up the strength of the many candidates.

Some have brought in five subscriptions at a time to take advantage of the bonus. Others have brought them in one, two or three at a time. In either case, the clubs will be credited accurately. And overnight the standings will seem to have doubled, though the bonus votes represent weeks of work.

The ponies now are at 55 Loomis Avenue, where contestants are welcome. If they arrive at the right time they will see the ponies being exercised.

District Number One.

To the candidate in this district having the highest number of votes will be awarded a Shetland pony, cart and harness complete, valued at $300.

To the candidate in this district having second highest number of votes will be awarded a Shetland pony, saddle and bridle complete, valued at $200.

Fortune in Gold Awaits Claimants

Insane Kansas Woman Leaves Bag of Nuggets and Dust Worth $10,000.

HUTCHINSON, KANS., June 28.—A bag of gold nuggets and gold dust worth $10,000 awaits any heirs who may be found to the estate of Mrs. Ann M. Bernhart, who died recently in Davenport, Iowa, according to the announcement of G. M. Duckworth, administrator.

Several years ago Mrs. Bernhart was adjudged of unsound mind. Duckworth was named her guardian. The cottage here where she lived alone was closed and she went to an asylum. Upon her death Duckworth thoroughly searched her cottage. The nuggets and dust in small bags were found secreted in the dwelling.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MANUFACTURES DINNER PLANNED FOR EVE OF 4TH

New Ansley Hotel Will Serve Atlanta Factory Owners to the Number of 200.

HOME EXHIBIT PLANS TOPIC

Brooks Morgan Has Definite Proposals for Acceptance or Rejection—Pledges Desired.

Atlanta manufacturers, to the probable number of 200, will gather on the evening of July 3 at the Ansley Hotel for a dinner.

The object of the dinner is to discuss the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods, and at the same time, to discuss the advisability of holding the annual temporary exhibit, such as was held last year at the time of the Southern Merchants' Convention.

The dinner had been set for June 24, but the unavoidable absence from the city of Brooks Morgan necessitated a postponement.

The new date was set at an informal conference of Mr. Morgan, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter G. Cooper held Wednesday.

Invitations to the big "Manufacturers' Dinner" will be sent out at once, and a general response is expected.

At the dinner, Mr. Morgan will lay before the manufacturers definite proposals for lease or purchase of buildings suitable for the installation of a manufacturers' exhibit. It will, in brief, be a "show down." The permanent exhibit project has been gone over thoroughly. The manufacturers have seen Chattanooga's display, and they have learned in detail of New Haven's success. There has been plenty of time for them to make up their minds. At this dinner they are expected to signify what they intend doing.

If, as is expected, the will of the manufacturers is seen unanimously in favor of the exhibit, a start will be made. But the backers of the project do not wish to start unless they have assurance of 200 exhibitors and 40,000 or 50,000 feet of floor space.

Strenuous Work Done Preparing for Convention.

When the four or five thousand merchants from all over the South gather in Atlanta for their convention, during the first two weeks of August, it is doubtful if any of them will be able to realize the care and effort that has been expended to make their meeting a success.

For instance, one energetic committee has been toiling throughout the hot week in an effort to raise funds for the entertainment of the visitors. As a result of their conscientious endeavor, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association sees its way clear, as to finances, to play host to the gathering.

Another committee has been hard at work preparing the program. The program is to be an elaborate affair. Three or four topics a day will be discussed, and most of the discussion will be in the shape of five-minute addresses. The traveling men are doing yeoman's work in finding the good speakers scattered throughout the territory, men who have opinions worth hearing and experience likely to be helpful to other merchants in their lines.

Moving Big Concern Takes Almost Week

Dougherty-Little-Redwine Co. Get to Temporary Quarters by Dint of Hard Work.

Almost a week has been required for moving the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company from its old home in North Pryor Street to temporary quarters at 30-32 South Pryor Street.

It is estimated that about forty boxcar loads of goods were moved, the stock being valued at $150,000.

"That amount of silks would not make much of a showing, but when it comes to underwear, it is a different story," remarked J. Little.

By COLONEL HARVIE JORDAN.

(Member of the American Farm Credits Commission and President of the Southern Cotton Association)

OLDENBERG, GERMANY, June 28.—The capitalization of Southern cotton growers through the mortgage bank system, giving them mortgage loans at low interest with easy payments, would completely reorganize the cotton-growing industry of the South. I am convinced that the land mortgage business in America can be systematized along the lines of similar mortgage systems in Europe.

If this is done it will bring a new era of prosperity to the South and greatly increase the cash returns from cotton, which now represent practically the entire balance of trade of the United States.

Southern cotton growers to-day are just one year behind financially. They have been behind since the Civil War.

The curse of the cotton farmers is the store lien system, under which they are obliged each spring to purchase their supplies on credit from the supply merchants. Frequently farmers pay 50 per cent or more in excess of the cash price of goods for the privilege of this credit. Moreover, the supply merchants secure absolute control over the farmers.

Marketing Is Hurried.

The cotton crop has to be marketed as soon as harvested. Farmers have practically no control over the marketing. This is because they have no financial independence. The American commission has studied the mortgage systems which place European farmers in far stronger positions as borrowers than our own farmers. In America we still are clinging to the antiquated practice of forcing short-time loans on the agriculturist.

European farmers borrow through an intermediary society and enjoy as strong positions as any railroad or municipality. If our Southern farmers mortgage their land they must pay back the entire principal in lump sum in a few years, else pay a costly commission for renewal. So long as this is true naturally the farmers won't mortgage their land until actually pressed to the wall.

In contrast to this European farmers repay their loans in small annual installments. So long as they meet their interest payments they can never be sold out. Their entire payments for both interest and principal amount to less than our farmers frequently are required to pay for interest alone.

Cash Basis Possible.

If Southern farmers can get a device to act as their agent in borrowing and can capitalize their land holdings on terms that will permit them to repay little by little, we can put the cotton-growing industry of the South on a cash basis. This would enable our farmers to buy on a cash basis and secure financial independence. It would break the power of the supply merchants. It would be the surest way to a New South. A New South would mean prosperity to the nation.

There is no theory in this proposition. I have studied these mortgage systems here. They are straight business enterprises that we Americans can adopt, perhaps improve upon. The Legislature of every State in the Union should take this matter under consideration.

When currency reform is enacted in the United States this should form part of the program. Farmers never up to this time had any consideration whatsoever given their requirements as borrowers. In currency or banking legislation they have been left to get along as well as they could. This has been largely responsible for the financial positions of the Southern farmers to-day.

Men's Hats For Next Fall Pert Affairs, Blue and Green

Fall, 1913, hats for men are being shown by jobbers in Atlanta.

Take them big and large, they deserve the name the women give their headgear—they are "creations."

One "creation," for instance, is green velour, with a little bow at the back, and a button-hole stitched edge.

Brown-Perryman-Greene Company say velours, particularly in blue and green, are "the thing" for fall. Velours retail from $3.50 to $7.50.

The "Trooper" shape is proper. To make a "Trooper" shape, punch out a crown, then strike it with the edge of the hand, lengthwise. That's all.

Another "creation" particularly fetching is blue, with red, white and blue stitching which runs up and down the crown and around and around the brim. A button is in the geometrical center of the crown.

Perhaps the best of the bunch, to many tastes, is a green felt hat, "Trooper" shape, of course, with "zebra" finish. "Zebra" finish means that it is 'self-striped." Alternate stripes are smooth, the others are unfinished—fuzzy, in a word. The stripes are something less than half an inch wide, and run vertically on the crown. The hat really is not "freaky." It is attractive.

Other soft hats are lined with gay silk, have welt edges, or are otherwise adorned.

Brand-new is a chinchilla hat. Corduroy and cloth of all kinds will be much in vogue this autumn.

Caps promise to continue their unprecedented popularity. They come in all patterns—one, for instance, a "cubist" design in maroon and tan.

For the man who will wear a derby, regardless, it may be news to know that the derby crowns will be a bit higher this fall, the brims about the same. Crowns seem to be working back from the flat effect of a year back to the old-fashioned high crown. They change a bit each year.

Boys—the little fellows—wear telescope shape hats, while you can't give them to their elders.

Of course, this takes no account of the "staples"—the conservative styles which never change.

LUMBER SALES SHOW BUILDING KEEPS UP WELL

Dealers in Supplies Tell of Big Things in Prospect for the Coming Autumn.

Dealers in lumber, brick, cement, plaster and building supplies report that Atlanta is going straight ahead in its expansion.

Unanimously they report good trade. One particularly encouraging feature, according to their expressions, is the steady increase in the number of small residences, homes costing between $3,000 and $4,000, seeming to predominate.

Furthermore, building supplies dealers are unanimous in saying that there are great plans in store for fall. If all rumors are to be believed, property owners are contemplating improvements at almost a "boom" rate as soon as summer is past.

Paint dealers also are cheerful. They report contractors figuring on work far ahead, and also general activity in refurnishing buildings which are not new, but which are being remodeled to meet the city's growing needs.

Expressions from dealers in these lines follow:

V. H. Kriegshaber: "Our observation is that there is a good deal of building contemplated—in the wind, so to speak. When conditions settle down this fall, we look for an excellent trade in building supplies."

Randall Bros.: "Our business is better than it ever has been in lumber and building material. The increase has come from the increase in medium priced houses, residences to cost between $3,000 and $4,000.

"It is hard to tell about the fall, but we look for a good trade. Prices are a little lower. This always is the case in June and July. There will be a reaction in August and September, and quotations will be stronger. This is the history of every year."

Willingham-Tift Lumber Co.: "Business has been quite brisk up to the present time, with particular activity in the erection of small houses. This looks to us like the right time to build, for prices, in our opinion, are at the bottom."

Seiple Sons: "Business is fairly good at the present time, and it is picking up rapidly. We look for a very good trade for the rest of the year. The market is steady, still prices are reasonable and it is a good time to build. We notice a revival particularly in the erection of small houses."

Dozier & Gay: "From the number of contractors who are figuring on painting to be done between now and fall, we look for a big business.

"Every indication is that a large number of new homes are to be built, and there are rumors of several large buildings for wholesale houses and small factories.

Trained Men Great Need Of Business World To-day

Germany and other European countries are far ahead of the United States in the matter of commercial education. This point was brought out in a speech before the annual convention of the National Association of Credit Men at Cincinnati.

"The annual losses by reason of failures in the United States amount now to some $200,000,000," said Mr. Gaehr, "or over $2 per capita. To put it concreately, the national annual loss from bad debts equals one-half the estimate cost of the Panama Canal.

"Professor Munsterberg of Harvard University observes that a great difficulty of our educational system has been that it does not teach a man to find himself, and when he learns his strong and his weak points, his real inclinations toward and qualifications for a pursuit in life, it is usually too late.

"We find the highway of commerce and life marked with sad monuments of men crushed under the wheels of progress who would have made a success in life had they had the proper direction and counsel and had they been taught to fashion their thoughts to fruitful issues, men who could and should have been helped to usefulness.

"A further difficulty is that the vocational demands are not sufficiently fixed and brought to the attention of the younger generations. They know comparatively little of the inner labors, the inner values, and inner difficulties of various professions and callings.

"Then, too, in many cases trivial chance influences decide the choice of a vocation. Young men often drop into a place, rather than deliberately choosing business as a life vocation.

"The need of better trained men, especially commercially, made itself felt several years ago, and as a result a number of universities and colleges of high standing organized schools of commerce. Harvard University ranking its School of Business Administration as one of the graduate schools. Several cities have established high schools of commerce, yet the schoolmaster and the business man are still too far apart.

Auto Sales Gaining Over Last Season

Business Gradually Working to Credit Basis—Men Buy Cars as They Buy Homes.

"So far as we are able to judge from the business done by our clients, automobile sales in Atlanta have been exceptionally good for the period which began January 1," says Joseph N. Moody, of the Auto Credit Sales Company.

"The automobile firms whom we represent as a credit clearing house report an increase over last season.

"Sales probably would be larger yet if we did not check them. Amusing as the idea may seem, we are in a sense philanthropists, for we are saving the people from themselves, in this way: Suppose a man with moderate income tries to buy an auto on time. We investigate carefully. If he has a family of girls, let us say, all living at home, and no income but his salary, we turn him down. If he had a family of boys, all working and able to help purchase a car, all well and good.

"The automobile business is working more and more toward a time basis. A man buys his motor car now just as he would buy his home—on payments. I believe the future will see 90 per cent of the business done in that way."

City Salesmen Take Outing; Truce Kept

Jobbers Agree Not to Scout for Business During Absence of Their Representatives.

City salesmen will be conspicuous by their absence this week. The grocer or dry goods merchant who needs to replenish his stock must telephone to his jobber. The jobbers have agreed not to solicit business for the week, but just to take what comes to them in the natural course of events.

The reason for this strange pact is that the jobbers are on their annual outing at the Isle of Palms, near Charleston, S. C.

In order not to take advantage of their absence, fifty or more jobbers signed a formal agreement of neutrality for the week, and O. T. Camp, president of the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association, sent a letter to all members of his organization acquainting them with the state of affairs, and asking that they fill urgent needs only, by using the tele-

SELLING NOTES.

The heavy demand for sport coats this season is helping the dress goods trade over some rough spots. Chinchillas and eponges are used principally in the manufacture of these garments, and makers and wholesalers of these fabrics are doing a good business in them.

The firmness of 39-inch, 80 squares, is one of the features of the print cloth market at the moment. Printers have taken this construction in good quantities, and as a result of curtailed production by the mills the supply has fallen somewhat behind the demand.

A thing that is regarded as a good omen for the future of the men's wear fabrics trade is the promptness with which the manufacturing clothiers are settling up their accounts with the mill agents. In view of losses sustained by the clothiers as a result of the strike earlier in the year this action on their part is said to indicate the thorough soundness of the clothing industry.

MERCHANTS AND MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

RUSSIA SEEKING U. S. FRIENDSHIP IN NEW TREATY

Renewal of Pact Abrogated by Congress Is Proposed by Diplomats of Czar.

JEWISH QUESTION RISES

Washington Is Silent, but Understanding Is That Bryan Is Willing to Renew Negotiations.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Russia has asked the United States Government to take up the question of a renewal of a treaty of amity and commerce. The treaty of 1832 on that subject was abrogated out of hand by the Congress of the United States.

Secretary of State Bryan said today that the question of renewing negotiations had been discussed with the President, but that there was nothing yet to state in the way of detail.

It has been stated to Russia, however, that the United States is willing to resume negotiations which had been commenced during the administration of the office of Secretary of State by Mr. Knox.

Two Diplomats Suggested.

The President is soon to appoint an Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg and the report is that a selection will be made between Charles R. Crane and Frederick Penfield, of Philadelphia and New York.

The administration will have to meet the question of the Jewish passport and the recognition of the Jews as American citizens without regard to race or religion in the new negotiations. It is well known that Russia was anxious to renew negotiations very soon after the affront to the Jewish race under the old treaty or by Russia's construction of the old treaty was wiped out by the joint resolution of Congress which abrogated the treaty of 1832. This action of Congress was unequivocally an act to rebuke Russia for her treatment of the Jews generally and specifically for her continued refusal to recognize passports issued to Jews.

Knox Charges Discrimination.

Secretary of State Knox held that the question of Jews should not enter into the matter at all, and that the real question was that the treaty of 1832 discriminated against American citizens.

It was stated during the last administration that Russia was trying to separate the Jewish passport question from all other questions which would enter into a treaty of amity and commerce, such as is made with all enlightened nations.

The statement was made at the time that the old administration frowned on this none too subtle suggestion of Russia and held that there should be no treaty except one that would do full justice to all Americans—Jews, Irish, English, Germans—no matter what their origin if they were citizens of the United States.

White House Silent.

The State Department at that time knew that if a treaty was sent to the Senate which did not include a solution of the passport question it could not be ratified. It is said that the present administration understands the situation thoroughly and will endeavor to get a treaty which will cover all American interests favorably or none at all.

At the White House no expression of opinion is yet obtainable from any official reflecting the views of the President. There is no question, however, that the Ambassador to be appointed by the President will be fully instructed on the passport question before he goes to St. Petersburg.

SOCIETY WOMAN GOES TO WORK IN BIG STORE

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Miss Florence Lord, a graduate of Smith College, prominent socially in Chicago, New York and many other Eastern cities, and influential in suffrage clubs, has been working for a week or more in a Los Angeles department store, "to study the sociological conditions" at first hand, in order "to get away with her stunt."

Verses Tell How 'Imperator' Ought to be Pronounced

Great Trouble Found With Largest Liner Is That Everyone Gives Her a Different Name.

NEW YORK, June 28.—There is one fault already found with the Imperator, the giant vessel of the Hamburg-American line, which has just made her maiden voyage as the biggest ship afloat. The trouble is no one knows how to pronounce her name.

Many think they do, and as a result, she is called many things as Amerson Hough, the author, who answers to Huff, How, Hoe, Huge and a few other things.

In reply to inquiries as to the pronunciation the publicity agent says that the German pronunciation which is sanctioned by the modern Latinists makes the "a" in Imperator sound like the "a" in father. The accent is on the next syllable to the last. The poet laureate of the line has been so much puzzled by the variety of pronunciations that he has celebrated them in verse. Here are some of the couplets:

Biggest ship upon the water,
Gorgeous, quetnly Imperator.

If you do not like that style of calling the ship, perhaps the poet laureate remarked, you may take this:

In the finest class we state her,
Peerless, German Imperator.

"And please," the poet said, "do not make peerless "beerless." Then, after running his fingers through his hair, the poet emitted and submitted this:

Vastness!—making senses totter!
Sea Collossus, Imperator!

"To the tune of 'Dixie,'" said the poet, we might get still another line on the pronunciation by singing:

Buckwheat cakes and a little batter
Taste quite good on the Imperator!

Greatest Salmon Run in Puget Sound

Quadrennial Migration of Horde of Fish From Fraser River Begins on Pacific Coast.

SEATTLE, June 28.—Steamship men report the approach of the annual Sockeye salmon run, which this year is the quadrennial big run, the greatest fish migration in the world. The fish now entering the Sound were born four years ago.

When the first white men came to the Northwest the Indians told them of this periodical big run, which had been regular as far back as their tribal legends went. It is the Canadian theory that the fish making up the big run are hatched in Fraser River and grow to maturity off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Four years ago so many traps were set for the mature fish that few were able to enter the Fraser, and the Canadians have insisted that the big run of 1913 would be a failure. Hence there is international interest in the size of the approaching swarms of salmon.

Anything Shocking Police, Called Bad

Criticism of Chiefs of Present Styles Declared Cause for Women of Country to Act

JOHNSTOWN, PA., June 28.—Attacking immodesty in women's dress, Mrs. H. W. Black, of Riverdale, today stirred the delegates and visitors gathered at the annual convention of the Cambria County Sabbath School Association, in session here.

"Christian women should not wear clothes that cause people to turn and look at them after they pass," declared Mrs. Black.

"The police chiefs in convention at Washington have gone on record demanding a reform in women's dress. When it gets so bad that the police have to ask such a thing, I think it is time Christian women should act."

My Experience With Tacco ---The New Handy Varnish

By EVELYN WREN

HOUSEWIVES realize that a coat of varnish is often more satisfactory than a new piece of furniture. It is a gratification to see the marred chair which belonged to the first parlor suit look like new. The dining table has held many simple breakfasts, many delightful luncheons and many bountiful dinners, and the steaming dishes have left ugly marks upon its once shining surface. To see it emerge from its varnish treatment is like welcoming back an old friend.

Varnishing seems like tiresome, dirty work, and a task suitable for men attired in overalls. I had always associated it with laborers' muscles and rough clothing until one day when I decided my desk at The American office needed some attention.

You do not become wholly unfeminine even if you are a newspaper woman. I was tired of seeing the black spot where the inkwell had overturned. I did not like the white mark where a glass of ice water had stood. All at once I had a hunch that I could do my work better if a marred place did not constantly remind me of a loss of temper and consequent lowering of self-respect and dignity. The refinishing of my desk became an obsession.

I read advertisements. Fortunately I am influenced by them. When I saw an advertisement of a varnish which a woman could apply with a cloth just as a furniture polish is applied, I resolved to investigate the novel preparation.

I went to the sixth floor of the Forsyth Building and entered the offices of The Amber Chemical Company. There I almost breathlessly inquired for Tacco, the water-proof, dust-proof and heat-proof varnish. (To tell the truth, I did not much mind about the heat-proof feature, for most of the heat in our office is caused by irritable nerves, and not by the weather. I am no exception.)

A bottle of Tacco was put into my hand, and I grasped a piece of cheesecloth and went energetically to work. I used just as much muscle as three years of typewriting will produce in a feminine arm. I worked as hard as any furniture polisher ever dreamed of doing in his worst nightmare. I thought I was doing well.

Imagine my chagrin and the expression on my face when the cloth was quietly taken from my vigorous grasp and I was shown that Tacco requires no rubbing. You do not have to use as much energy as I do in ordinary dusting.

Dust the article first. If it is much stained you might well apply a little soap and water. Then apply your Tacco to the dry surface. A piece of cheesecloth is the best medium, and a firm, gentle movement like that of dusting will put the varnish on in the best form. Then let it dry. At the end of five hours view the result and feel proud of your work which is really but a pastime.

Have a Tacco day. Take the breakfast cloth off when husband has departed for the office. Apply Tacco according to the directions on the box, and the dining table will be ready for use at lunch time. Of course if husband is a capitalist and breakfasts at 10:30 instead of at 7 you will probably not have the pleasure of using Tacco yourself. Let us hope that you are one of those domestic little housewives who just "loves" to make your home pretty with your personal effort, and that husband has not outgrown his appreciation of the little touches which you can give just a bit better than any hired help.

The table in the living room has played an important part in the happiness of the household. You could not think of home without that table, and the ones you see in the store windows never look quite as hospitable or nearly so homelike. Here Jack has read his paper and graciously explained politics to your bewildered self as you stitched on little frocks which were to go to Kindergarten with Little Girl. It has held Big Brother's school books and his drawing instruments. (Said drawing instruments are responsible for the big unsightly gash at the end.) All in all, you feel as you begin to apply Tacco with a gentle hand that this table has many dear memories. You would like to see it as fresh and pretty as it was when you and Jack picked it out. It seemed the finest table in the world on that day. How you blushed, and how manly Jack looked as he quietly drew the money from his pocket and ordered it sent to your new home.

When the table is finished the big chair will seem more worn and bruised than ever. You never realized how shabby the living room was getting. It seems but a day or two ago that you decided to surprise Jack with that comfortable chair on his birthday. You saved from your housekeeping money bit by bit and grew anxious toward the last for fear the fund would not be large enough. You grow tender toward that big chair as you remember Jack's eyes when he first espied it and then quickly gazed at you. The lovelight was there, even if you had been married a half-dozen years, and had but recently lost many hours of sleep with Little Girl's teething episode.

GET THE WORD THEN GET THE MEANING
TRADE MARK
TACCO
BRAND
A HINT TO THE WISE

The tender feelings do not interfere with the application of Tacco. Let retrospection have its sway, and when you have had the pleasure of many happy memories look at the result. The table will shine like new. The gash made by Big Brother's steel ruler will not show. Tacco has acted as a filler and made the surface smooth as glass. Dusting will be a light task now. You may even scrub the table, for it has a waterproof finish now. The chair will bring the lovelight to Jack's eyes anew, for he, too, will remember the day your love made the gift.

If you are a housekeeper, you will welcome Tacco as a means of making your home brighter and more cheerful. You need never wish for an opportunity to send shabby furniture away to be refinished. You can buy a bottle of Tacco for only 50 cents. The economy of it will be demonstrated by its first use, and you will be ready to purchase a quart, half-gallon or gallon can before many days.

When I like anything I never take my liking for granted. I analyze my appreciation. Here is my analysis of my fondness for Tacco:

It requires absolutely no rubbing.
It dries in from two to five hours.
It is water-proof as well as dust and heat proof.
It is economical in time and money.

Well, my desk at The American office has had its Tacco treatment. Come in to see it, if you like. Then investigate Tacco as I did, if you like, or better still, benefit by my written experience and buy a bottle or can at any good drug or hardware store.

Do you live out of town? If you do, you would like to hear about a splendid proposition for out-of-town dealers. Write to-day for information and do not risk the loss of the agency in your town. Write and see what The Amber Chemical Company has to tell you.

BOY CONFESSES KILLING MOTHER AND BROTHER

Berkley Fleming, 19, of Ironton, Mo., Appears Unconcerned When Accused of Crime.

IRONTON, O., June 28.—Berkley Fleming, 19, has confessed to shooting his half-brother, Culbertson Stewart, almost three years ago, and his mother a few days ago.

The police took the boy to his grandfather's farm, where he pointed out the grave of his mother and stood by unconcerned as the body was removed. He was not impressed when the skeleton of Culbertson was exhumed.

Believe Boy Degenerate.

Chief of Police King, Dr. Wells and the Rev. W. H. Hampton, who have suspected for several months that Berkeley killed Culbertson, believe Berkeley a degenerate of the worst type.

Their theory is that he killed Culbertson because of jealousy and that he had worked out his carefull arranged plan of concealing the crime before he shot his brother.

The murder of the mother, they believe, was a part of his plan to keep her from exposing his former murder. A bullet hole in the back of the head of each victim and the mother's bruised face, say these men, destroy any accident theory.

Mother Is Suspicious.

Culbertson Stewart disappeared July 14, 1910, Berkeley's 17th birthday. The other brother afterward wrote letters to his mother purporting to come from Culbertson. She became suspicious, and he decided to kill her also.

After the crime he was found at a hotel waiting for dinner. He had gone there in a buggy to take his sweetheart riding. He made no objection to going to the police station, where he confessed.

Aged Pair Perform Own Marriage Rites

Bridegroom, 75 Years Old, Declares It Was His Sixth Experience With Such Ceremony

BEAVER, PA., June 28.—Dr. Akkelon Mercer, seventy-five years old of Beaver Falls, and Sarah L. Calgrove, sixty-five years old, of Wetzel county, West Virginia, performed their own marriage ceremony here.

When the pair obtained their license they informed Hamilton, the clerk, that all they needed was a license, as they could dispense with all bridal attendants and the minister.

Doctor Mercer and Mrs. Calgrove to Hamilton issued the license for marry themselves in the presence of witnesses. Doctor Mercer stated that he had been married five times, and in each instance he and his bride had performed their own ceremony, always in the presence of two witnesses.

Defaulter Hired to Audit Bank's Books

Man Who Wrecked Financial Institution, Will Go to Work to Untangle Its Affairs.

CARUTHERSVILLE, MO., June 28.—A. B. Tindle, cashier of the Pemiscot County Bank, which closed its doors following the discovery that he was short in his accounts, will be retained by the reorganizers to aid in straightening out its affairs.

"There is no desire on the part of the directors of the bank to prosecute Tindle," one of the directors said to-day. "He has turned over all his property and has been punished enough by his sudden fall from a position of trust and respect in the community."

Tindle's personal fortune is estimated at $200,000.

The action of the directors of the bank in retaining him in the task of straightening out the confusion caused by his shortage meets with the approval of a majority of the citizens it is said.

Prehistoric Flying Reptile Discovered

Skeleton of Pterodactyl Monster Is Found in Wyoming Fossil Bed by Geologists.

CASPER, WYO., June 28.—Dr. F. Salathe and D. VanWagener, geologists, who are prospecting this vicinity for oil, reported the discovery eighteen miles from Casper of a fossil bed, conspicuously visible in which is the almost perfect silicified skeleton of a flying reptile, probably of the pterodactyli, which measures at least sixty feet in length. The creature in life must have had a wing expansion of eighty feet.

Millionaire Gives Free Circus to Pay Pledge of Boyhood

Packer Leaves Home as Child to Make Fortune After Missing Show for Lack of Money.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Edward Tilden, millionaire packer, produced a circus to-day for "all the children within walking or riding distance" of the Tilden estate at Lake Delavan, Wis.

The huge entertainment cost $10,000 and had been planned for 25 years by the host. It grew out of a painfully vivid recollection of a circus that had come to town and gone away again without his getting inside the tent. It was fresh in his mind when he left Delavan a quarter of a century ago to come to Chicago to "make his fortune." At the train Edward Tilden told friends:

"I'm coming back some day and buy the town and give everyone a good time, and let every boy here see a circus."

A special carload of entertainers left Chicago for Delavan this morning. A dog and pony show and a band of 40 pieces left last night. The children also saw an aeroplane flight, had automobile rides and a big dinner.

Child Offered Home For Looking Pleasant

Smiling Face of Orphan in Photographed Group Wins Hearts of Couple Who Lost Baby.

POCAHONTAS, ILL., June 28.—In Pocahontas there may be a home for a little girl because she "looked pleasant" when a photographer took the picture of a group of children waiting for an automobile ride. Children in the orphan asylums on that day were given an outing by the Automobile Club of St. Louis.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miles, of Pocahontas, adopted a little girl several years ago. She died. Something about two of the little girls whose pictures appeared in the newspaper reminded them of the little one who died, and they have written for information about the children.

INDIAN GIRLS WILL TRY SKILL AT HAT-MAKING

CARLISLE, PA., June 28.—Indian art will now show itself in hats. At least that is the natural conclusion drawn from an announcement made by the Carlisle Indian School that a course in millinery has been established for aborigines.

Indian art, the absolutely original gift of America to the world, has expressed itself in pottery, in rugs, in a dozen other ways, but it has never before entered the field of headgear, and it is expected that this new innovation may yet cast the chic French models into the deep shadows.

SCHOOL ROLLS FAIL TO KEEP UP WITH BIRTHS

Wide Discrepancy Is Shown in Number of Pupils and Increase of Children.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Chapters on "Roman Catholic Schools," "Typical Health Teaching Agencies of the United States," and "Parent-Teacher Associations" are special features of the annual report of the United States Commissioner of Education, just issued.

In addition to these the report contains substantial chapters on the following subjects: General survey of the year; educational legislation during 1912; higher education; city school systems; rural education; recent movements in negro education; a review of agricultural education; progress in vocational education; library development; education in Alaska, the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and other dependencies; Indian education; educational activities in Canada, Latin-America, Great Britain, Northern Europe, France and Switzerland, Germany, Southern Europe and Russia; together with a general view of conditions in Asia, Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

In his introduction to the report the commissioner discusses the wide discrepancy between the increase in the number of children of school age and the actual enrollment; an apparent reduction in teachers' salaries during the year; the remarkable increase in high schools and high school enrollment throughout the country; the decrease in professional schools, due to the enforcement of higher standards, lack of preparation of teachers, which Dr. Claxton characterizes as "one of the greatest evils of our school systems;" the shortness of the school term in the United States as compared with other civilized nations; and the abnormally large percentage of illiteracy in the rural districts.

Woman Jury Awards Verdict in Oregon

Plaintiff Is Awarded Damages of $5 in Legal Fight Over Cut of a Skirt.

ST. JOHNS, ORE., June 28.—The first regularly called woman's jury to serve in the State of Oregon tried a case in Justice Williams' court here and, after twenty minutes' conference, returned a verdict of $5 for the plaintiff. The jury was drawn in the regular form from a list of fifty women who have been chosen as liable for jury service during the year.

The case was one involving the price of a skirt. The plaintiff averred that a skirt which she had made by a local seamstress did not fit. She brought suit to recover the price of the skirt.

The fair jurors fixed the damages at $5.

FINDS COIN BEHIND PANEL; DIVIDES WITH FRIENDS

SHARON, PA., June 28.—As six carpenters were tearing down a house near the Leesburg coal mines, one found a false panel in a wall of the dining room from which he took a powder can containing $1,500.

The finder kept $500 as his share and each of his fellow workmen was given $200.

USE OF SCHOOLS AS AID TO LOVE MAKING URGED

Peace Executive Would Make Social Centers of Houses of Instruction in Big Cities.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Arthur Deering Call, executive director of the American Peace Society, has undertaken to win for the young men and women of America the right to make love to each other.

Said he:

"One of the nation's greatest needs is the promotion of acquaintance between young men and women, the fathers and mothers of the next generation, under free, attractive and wholesome conditions. We need more wholesome conditions for 'courting.'

"I can think of nothing so important to this generation as the lifemates of its various individuals, or so vital to the next as its fathers and mothers and home life generally.

Would Use Schools.

"I propose a wider use of school buildings for social and neighborhood purposes. I do not want love-making a part of the school curriculum, but I think that the same lips that recite the multiplication table or decline a noun in the class room in the garish light of day might just as well whisper tender nothings while the moon peeks in at the window later on.

"For a great majority of our young people in the cities the dance halls provide the only regular amusement they can afford, where any man who has the price can step up to any young woman and ask her to dance. No wonder such places become recruiting places for vice.

No Instruction Needed.

"Why not let the school be a cross between the church and the saloon? Every school should be arranged so that in the evening the young folks could gather there for games, folk-dancing classes, music, athletics, sewing classes and moving pictures.

"All the young folks want is opportunity to meet under proper environment. We don't have to teach the men how to make love, or young women how to listen to them, but we owe it to the race not to hinder or pervert their natural tendencies by improper environment."

NEGRO GIVES FOUR PENNIES FOR FIVE DOLLAR BILLS

INDIANAPOLIS, June 28.—While Miss Stella Koch was busy tending a stand on the city market last night, a well dressed negro asked if she could give him some paper money for gold.

"I have four $5 gold pieces," he explained, "and I would like to get some paper money in exchange for them, as I do not like to carry gold in my pocket."

The girl said she could accommodate him, and going to the cash drawer produced four $5 bills. She handed the bills to the negro, and he dropped four bright, shining pennies into her outstretched hand.

TARIFF CUTS IN SENATE TO AID NATION'S DINING ROOM

Many House Figures Lowered and Free List Increased — Despite Cuts, Bill Is Expected to Produce $5,000,000 More Cash.

Atlanta's Need for Help to Reduce the High Cost of Living Is Shown by Figures Indicating Soaring Price of Foodstuffs.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The revised tariff bill laid before the Senate Democratic caucus by Mr. Simmons, chairman of the finance committee, carries important reductions in the Underwood tariff bill rates on iron, steel and other metal products. It added cattle, wheat, pig iron, Angora wool, and many other articles to the free list, and increased rates on many classes of cotton goods and some silk products.

President Wilson's desires as to free sugar in 1916 and free wool at once, prevailed in the redraft of the bill. To the list of "market basket" reductions the Underwood bill contained, the Senate committee added many important items.

In the general level of its rates the "Simmons bill" represents a heavier cut from the present Payne-Aldrich rates than the House bill.

Senator Simmons believes the caucus will discuss the bill not longer than a week.

Simmons' Statement.

The bill probably will come to a vote in the Senate by September 1.

In a statement Chairman Simmons said:

"The revenues of the Government will be increased approximately $5,000,000, haid in hand with a reduction of the taxation following the reductions already made in the House bill. These increases in revenues will be made up by a tariff on bananas and restoration of the full internal duty of $1.10 per gallon on brandies used in fortifying wines.

"With regard to the sugar schedule no change was made from the provision of the Underwood bill except to strike out 'sugars tinctured and colored,' for fear that ultramarine blue used in bleaching sugar might be regarded as colored matter and thereby refined sugar become subject to a duty of 2 cents a pound.

"With regard to cigars and other tobacco products from the Philippines the provision of the Underwood bill permitting cigars with 80 per cent of tobacco the product of the Philippine Islands and 20 per cent the produce of foreign countries to be admitted into the United States free of duty, was stricken out of the bill. Only cigars and tobacco products exclusively of Philippine tobacco to be admitted free of duty into the United States."

The Liquor Schedule.

Of the amendment to the liquor schedule, the statement said:

"An additional section is added repealing so much of the act approved October 1, 1890, and acts amendatory thereto, so far as they relate to the use free of tax of spirits for the fortification of sweet wines, and providing that hereafter all wine spirits, grape brandy and alcohol so used shall be subject to the same tax as in other cases.

"It is intimated that this tax will result in an increase of revenue of approximately $7,000,000 per annum.

"The Senate Finance Committee followed the House and treated the cotton yarns as the House bill treated cotton cloth," the statement continued, "by adding a duty of two and one-half per cent upon cotton cloth when combed, bleached, dyed, mercerized or colored. This is the most important change that the Senate committee made in the House cotton schedule."

Retaliatory Clause.

The amendment permitting the President to proclaim special rates when foreign nations discriminate against the United States provides that he shall exercise this authority on certain articles, as follows:

"Fish, fresh, smoked and dried, pickled or otherwise prepared, 1 cent per pound; on wheat, 10 cents per bushel; on wheat flour, 45 cents per barrel; on coffee, 3 cents per pound; on tea, 10 cents per pound.

"On the following articles a duty

Pigeons to Keep City Sane, Says Expert

Dr. B. Chester King, of Atlanta, Tells Chicago That Its Safety Rests With Doves.

CHICAGO, June 28.—If Chicagoans are to be saved from the mad house at all it will be by the pigeons.

Dr. B. Chester King, an Atlanta alienist, finds hope for the city's sanity in the pigeons that flutter about the Loop all day.

"Several times each day," says the doctor, "the man who works in an office building should go to a window with the expectation of seeing one or more doves. Should he spy them, I suggest that he forget all else. There is something in just the name 'dove' that has a soothing effect upon the nerves."

Pastor Gets Town To Give Day to Ball

All Girard Suspends Business to Attend Games, but There Is No Playing on Sunday.

GIRARD, KANS., June 28.—Girard has found a happy solution to the problem of Sunday baseball by setting out one day in the week when everybody suspends business operations and goes to the ball game.

This arrangement came through the suggestion of the Rev. M. L. Morrison, pastor of the Presbyterian Church, after considerable wrangling early in the summer between people who wanted ball games on Sunday and those who did not. The new arrangement was tried yesterday for the second time. Everyone is pleased and the blue laws are enforced.

THE STICK-AT-IT CHARACTERISTIC

And the cumulative force of hard work reap richer rewards than genius.

All men can not have brilliant minds, but almost every one can cultivate continuity of purpose and develop a large capacity for work.

All great business successes have been the results of ceaseless and unremitting labor rather than the outgrowth of unusual intelligence.

An ordinary amount of common sense and a little energy in reading and using Hearst's Sunday American and Georgian "Want Ads" will put you ahead of your fellows.

These busy little "ads" exploit business and residence property, acreage, stocks, bonds, leases, automobiles, poultry, live stock, household furnishings and varieties of other things that can be bought at low prices and resold on a money-making basis.

REBELS STORM MEXICAN TOWN; MASSACRE 1,000

Federal Soldiers and Civilians Shot Down in Cold Blood at Durango.

CAPTIVES PUT TO TORTURE

Atrocities Practiced to Force Citizens to Reveal Hiding Places of Wealth.

MEXICO CITY, June 28.—One thousand soldiers and civilians were slaughtered by rebels when the city of Durango, capital of the State of the same name, fell into the insurgents' hands, according to word received here to-day from that city. Many of the victims were members of prominent families.

Men and women were tortured to death when they did not produce wealth at the bidding of the rebels.

Fighting between federals and insurgents is going on at Uruapam in the State of Michocan. Cuquio, in the State of Jalisco, was taken by rebels yesterday and the garrison put to the sword.

Rebels Advance on Juarez; Fight Nearer.

EL PASO, TEXAS, June 28.—Pancho Villa, Mexican rebel leader, who has announced his intention of taking Juarez and executing General Salazar, commander of the garrison, in the bull ring, established outposts within three miles of the town.

Ortega, who has 500 men, may cooperate with Villa. If Juarez falls, it will remove the most important Mexican port of entry on the United States border from Huerta and may result in the downfall of the Huerta government.

Prince of Wales Spends $1.25 a Week

Writes Home for More Money, but Mother Considers That This Amount Is Ample.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—The amount allotted to the Prince of Wales for pocket money has just become known. Every Saturday he receives just $1.25, which he terms his "old age pension." He is occasionally a trifle extravagant and mortgages his money in advance.

Toward the end of the last term at Oxford he was asked by a friend to join a party to visit the theater.

The Prince's reply was, "Sorry, old man, but I am clean broke."

"Why don't you write home for some more?" asked the friend.

"I did," replied the Prince, "but mother said I was too extravagant."

Mrs. Marshall Finds $2,000 House at Last

Wife of Vice President Refuses to Pay More, Wishing to Live Within Husband's Salary.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The long house hunt of Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice President, is probably over, as she has found a suitable house on Columbia Road, Northwest. Her hunt was prolonged owing to the fact that she set $2,000 yearly as the price they would pay. The Marshalls have said they must live within their salary, and Washington society is eagerly watching to see how they will manage with the many social and financial demands upon them. Mrs. Marshall wanted to go to the country, but feared it would be too far for the Congressional wives to visit.

Congress to Force White Slave Inquiry

Reasons for Postponement of Diggs-Caminetta Case by Department of Justice To Be Bared.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Investigation of the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave case by the Department of Justice must go on, is the edict of the Congressmen behind the resolutions.

They are determined to bare the entire correspondence between McNab and the Attorney General and uncover the influences behind the white slave and Western Fuel cases.

If the House for any reason fails to take up the investigation Tuesday, the Senate is determined to dig to the bottom of the matter itself. No "pull" or influence can block this inquiry, it is declared.

King George Finds Platonic Romance With Fair Countess

Monarch Pays Marked Attention to Wife of Lord Mar While Queen Mary Is Absent.

Special Cable to The Sunday American.

LONDON, June 28—Every one thought King George so extremely domestic and conventional that it has come as rather a shock to people outside court circles to find him paying marked attention to the beautiful Countess of Mar and Killie.

The lovely countess, who is in her prime and a favorite of King Edward, is to be found wherever the King is.

Lord Mar goes about very little, but it was noticed that he and his wife were included in the royal house party at Windsor Castle for the Ascot races.

When Queen Mary was absent from the races, Lady Mar was always at the King's side, but when Her Majesty was present Lady Mar mixed with the general crowd in the royal inclosure.

Lady Mar is very sympathetic and attractive. The inner circle at the court is intensely amused at this mild platonic flirtation.

Mrs. Astor Bars Too Fervid Trotting

Society Youth Comes to Grief When He Disregards Rules of Conduct Fixed by Hostess.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—Mrs. John Astor is becoming known in social circles as a hostess whose rules of conduct must be obeyed by her guests. One young man who, until recently, doubted this, is now lamenting his mistake. Mrs. Astor permits the "tango" and "turkey trot" at her dances, but insists that they be danced in moderation. When this guest so far forgot himself as to verge on to the vulgar, he was quickly shown the door.

Mrs. Astor's example is not followed by all of London's hostesses. At the entertainments of a certain duchess the ragtime is accompanied by a great deal of roughness, being usually danced with the lights out.

Early Cold Injures Crops of Michigan

Wheat Promises but Half a Crop, Hay One-third, and Fruit Outlook Is Poor.

LANSING, MICH., June 28.—Michigan Agricultural College field men and district supervisors report crop prospects of the State the poorest in years, due to the early cold, wet season and late frosts, followed by the present hot, dry weather.

Wheat promises little better than half a crop, hay one-third, oats one-half. Early potatoes have been badly frosted in sections and will not produce over one-quarter crop without rain.

Fruit is equally poor. Plums and grapes are expected to be about 30 or 40 per cent of a crop.

Baroness Will Wed Man Hurled in Auto

St. Louis Tourist Unexpectedly Finds Self in Noblewoman's Car and Romance Ripens.

NEW YORK, June 28.—James Hurley, a railroad man of St. Louis, while automobiling in Paris a year ago, ran his car into that of the Baroness Barbara Ursula Kalinowski of Welsbaden and was hurled into the tonneau, where the Baroness was sitting. He gave her his card and later offered her his heart.

Arriving here by the Hamburg-American liner Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, she left for St. Louis, where the Baroness will be married to Mr. Hurley.

Gatun Gates Stand Their Supreme Test

Atlantic Waters Reach Sea Level and Locks Must Hold Against Full Pressure of Water.

PANAMA, June 28.—The Atlantic waters which have been allowed to run slowly against the lower gates at Gatun are at sea level to-day. The large gates are being put to the actual test of full pressure for the first time.

The engineers are watching the rise of the water with interest, and they report that the gates are watertight. The water is at the 50-foot stage.

PRICES TO STAY AS THEY ARE NOW, SAYS SULZBERGER

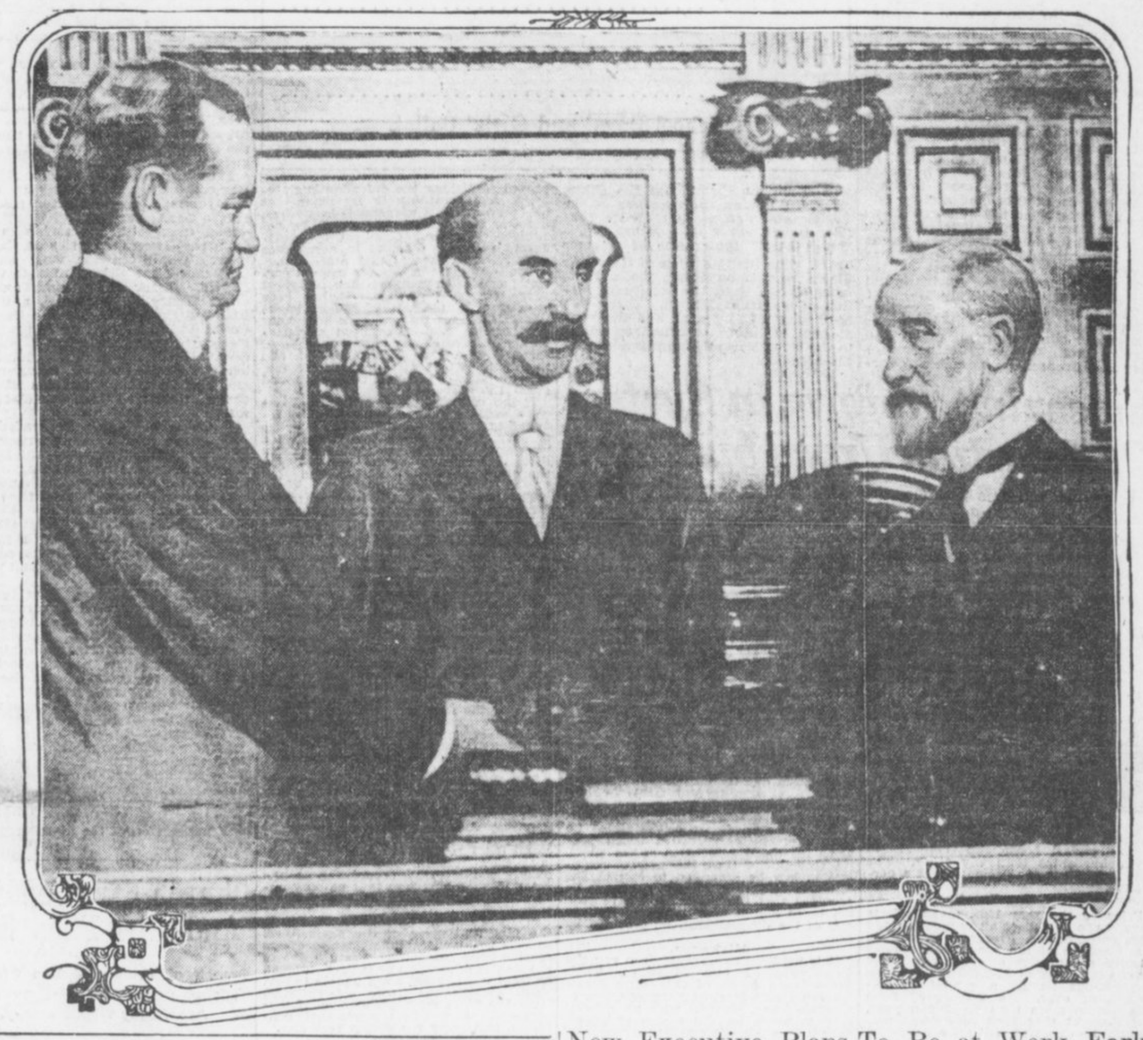
NEW YORK, June 28.—"Meat will never be any cheaper in the United States than it is now," declared G. F. Sulzberger, of Sulzberger & Schwarzchild, on his arrival from Europe on the Mauretania. "The only effect the change in the tariff will cause will be to keep prices where they are. Without this revision in the tariff, there would undoubtedly have been a big jump in prices."

SLATON'S BILLS READY TO PASS

Inaugurated With Utmost Simplicity

Legislature Wants to Aid Governor

Governor John M. Slaton, taking the oath of office at the Capitol yesterday. On the left is the new Executive, while Randolph Anderson, of Savannah, President of the Senate, is shown between him and Governor Brown, who retired to private life as soon as the oath was administered.



Inaugural Address of Slaton Urges New Taxation System

SWEEPING legislative reforms are urged by Governor John M. Slaton in his inaugural address and message delivered to the Legislature Saturday. Following are the ten most important reforms he urges:

1. An occupation tax on corporations, with the maximum $200 per annum on corporations of more than $1,000,000 capital; the tax on smaller corporations to be adjusted accordingly.

2. Changes in the registration laws. He says: "The present registration law should be so amended that when a voter has once proven his qualification by registering and being enrolled, he shall remain a registered voter unless disqualified for some cause due himself."

3. The need for good roads, with a highway commissioner or a commission. The message says: "An intelligent, highway commission, or commissioner, clothed with the proper authority, could be the means of untold benefit in suggesting the proper methods of building roads."

4. A declaration that the sale of the Western and Atlantic Railroad, the State's property, should not be considered. The problem of its disposal should be considered by a commission, with directions to report its recommendations and its reasons therefor.

5. The passage of a law abolishing the defendant's statement in criminal trials, and providing in its place that he be sworn as a witness, if he so desires.

6. The Legislature is urged to consider legislation making the carrying of concealed weapons a felony, subject to reduction to a misdemeanor by either judge or jury.

7. Consideration of proper and remedial banking laws. "The banks of a State perform public functions, and as such are properly subjected to governmental supervision," says the message.

8. The creation of a new office, to be known as State Auditor.

9. Sweeping reforms in the tax system of Georgia. The system in vogue in this State is wrong, and the equalization of taxation, either through enforcement of present laws or new correctives, is urged.

10. That the Legislature investigate the decline of the agricultural schools and take steps to apply the proper remedies.

Gainesville Naval Academy to Hold a Regatta on July 4

Riverside Cadets Expect Hundreds of Visitors to See Sports on the Chattahoochee.

GAINESVILLE, June 28.—The first regatta of the Riverside Summer Naval School and Camp, which was opened here Thursday, will be held on July 4. Hundreds of visitors are expected to be on hand to see the sports.

The naval school and camp has a large enrollment this year, students being registered from practically all of the Southern States, including Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, Tennessee, South Carolina, North Carolina, North Carolina, Kentucky and Virgina.

Captain Patterson, of the Culver, Ind., Military Academy, will have charge of the naval and swimming departments this year, while Professor R. E. Brooks, superintendent of the Dublin public schools, will assist in the academic department.

Georgia Bankers to Urge Laws at This Legislative Session

One Provides Larger Salary for State Treasurer—Banking Department Considered.

The Georgia Bankers' Association, of which L. P. Hillyer, of Macon, is president and Haynes McFadden, of Atlanta, secretary, will urge new laws in the present session of the Legislature, according to announcement Saturday.

The association now has under advisement several bills, including one for a constitutional amendment providing larger appropriations for the State Treasurer, who supervises $6,000,000, it is said, on a salary fund of $3,100.

The amendment, though, is being considered only by the association thus far. It has not been acted on. Haynes McFadden Saturday said a bill creating a banking department probably would not come up at this session of the Legislature.

New Executive Plans To Be at Work Early Each Day and to Devote Entire Time to State.

Inducted into office with a simplicity that harked back to the days of Thomas Jefferson, John Marshall Slaton will enter the Capitol Monday morning for the first time as Governor of the State of Georgia. Eager to begin work for the State and the people, Governor Slaton plans to be at his office at an unusually early hour, and will plunge into the affairs of the State of Georgia with the energy and ability that has made him a leading figure among the attorneys and citizens of Atlanta.

Backed by his dominant personality and with the support of practically every member of the Senate and the House of Representatives, Governor Slaton's administration promises to be as harmonious and productive of good as that of any Governor the State has ever had.

Gossip heard among the legislators gathered for the sessions of the General Assembly indicate that every reform urged by the new Governor will meet with the approval of the majority of the members of both Houses.

Bills Are Now Ready.

It is regarded as significant, and indicative of the success of Governor Slaton's administration, that many bills embodying the recommendations and suggestions made in his inaugural address have been prepared and will be introduced and action taken on them during the present session. Several already have been introduced, both in the House and Senate.

It is generally understood, though it has never been officially confirmed, that Governor Slaton will send no more messages to the General Assembly during the present session unless some unforeseen emergency should arise that demands immediate attention. He has given his views on the sort of legislation that is needed, and has often expressed his complete confidence in the ability and the willingness of the Legislature to do what was right and necessary without any prompting from the head of the State Government.

The respect and confidence that Governor Slaton feels in ex-Governor Brown is shown by the fact that almost without exception the men who served the latter during the four years of his incumbency will also hold office during the Slaton administration.

Jesse G. Perry, who has served Governor Brown as private secretary, will fill the same position under Governor Slaton.

Ulm Is Executive Secretary.

Hardy Ulm is also retained as Executive Secretary. The knowledge these men have, gained through their connection with Governor Brown, is expected to be one of inestimable benefit to Governor Slaton during the first few weeks of his incumbency.

That Governor Slaton intends to give all his time to the business of the State and serve them to the utmost of his ability is shown by the fact that though he owns a handsome home on Peachtree Street, and a country home on Peachtree Road, he has moved his family into the ancient executive mansion on Peachtree Street, and will occupy the building as his home during his term as Governor. He took possession of the mansion Saturday afternoon within an hour after his inauguration as Governor of the State.

After a short stay in the reception room of the Governor's office at the capitol, where Governor Slaton and ex-Governor Brown greeted their friends. Governor and Mrs. Slaton and Mrs. W. D. Grant, Mrs. Slaton's mother, were entertained at luncheon by ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown, at the executive mansion. After the luncheon Mr. Brown turned over to Governor Slaton the mansion that had been his home, and with Mrs. Brown boarded a train for Marietta.

Marietta Greets Brown.

They were given a tremendous reception by the citizens of the Cobb County capitol. Practically two-thirds of the population of Marietta, headed by a reception committee of prominent citizens, met them at the depot and welcomed them to the town that had been their home for many years before Mr. Brown became Governor. Mr. and Mrs. Brown plan to spend the coming week in Marietta, and will then retire for the summer to their Cherokee County farm.

Though the inauguration of Governor Slaton was simple, it is not thought that his home life will follow the same plan. Mrs. Slaton is recognized as one of the most brilliant hostesses in Atlanta, and society folk are all agog over the rumored plans of a brilliant social campaign which it is generally understood Mrs. Slaton will inaugurate as soon as she has completed her establishment as the first lady of the State. An inaugural reception will be held July 2.

The precedent set by Governor Brown and continued by Governor Slaton of eliminating all pomp and display from the inaugural ceremonies has aroused considerable favorable comment throughout the State, especially among the members of the Legislature, and it is probable that Georgia will never see a return to the "brass band" inaugurals of former years. The inauguration of Governor Slaton was, if anything, just a little more simple than the last inauguration of Governor Brown. There was no display of any sort, and the very absence of elaborate ceremony added to the strength and impressiveness of the occasion.

Sweeping Reform in System Of Taxation Urged by Slaton

Laws to aid the finances of Georgia and sweeping reforms of the tax system of the State are stressed in the inaugural message of Governor Slaton.

In part, Governor Slaton said:

Our system is wrong. The Legislature can appropriate what it pleases, and the tax rate remains the same. The Legislator has made himself a favorite with his constituency by voting for every popular appropriations and nothing suffers but the State's credit.

Unless some check be made, an increase of revenue will be of no avail in preventing the financial embarrassment of the State. Under the enthusiasm of the moment one appropriation bill may exhaust it.

More than four-fifths of the States of the Union derive revenue from what is known as an inheritance tax. I am informed that this tax is the subject of least complaint.

This form of tax has been approved by the highest authorities and is one of the easiest borne and subject to fewer hardships than any other. The inheritance tax is to some extent a corrective.

Corporation Taxation.

Prior to the year 1905, many efforts were made to collect an occupation tax from corporations. Governor Terrell, in his message of the year 1905, recommended a tentative privilege tax based on capital stock of $100,000 per year on corporations having a capital of $1,000,000, or over. He anticipated from this source more than $100,000 a year, and thought that such sum could reasonably be expected without a hardship. The State, however, has not received one-half this sum, and during the year 1913 the estimated revenue from this source is $48,000.

I recommend that the maximum occupation tax on corporations having $1,000,000 capital and over be $200 per annum, and the tax on corporations of less capital be adjusted accordingly.

Equalization of taxes, either through the enforcement of present laws, or new correctives, so that each may bear his proportionate burden, would not mean the increase of taxes upon any one now performing his duty, but would rather mean the lightening of his unfair portion of the load. I commend this subject to your attention.

Bonded Debt To Be Refunded.

An additional reason for establishing and maintaining the State's finances on a sound basis is the necessity of making provision for more than one-half of the entire bonded debt of the State, maturing in 1915. This is an imperative duty resting on this Legislature.

No sinking fund was provided by law to retire the bonds aggregating $3,679,900 which are due in 1915. The entire State's debt is $6,452,500, which does not include the obligations to the University, amounting to $291,500, and the landscrip fund of $90,000.

All the debt of $6,452,500 is provided for, or will be provided for, by the sinking fund required to be raised annually until the debt is paid off, except the $3,679,000 which falls due in May and July, 1915.

If refunding bonds were issued in 1915, making the first $100,000 fall due in 1935, then the sinking fund could be made to run continuously and retire each year, until paid, $100,000 of this series of 1915 refunding bonds.

This plan would seem advisable in order to relieve the treasury and the people of the increased burden at this time, unless financial conditions at the time of the sale of the bonds should demand that their redemption begin at an earlier period in order to effectuate their more satisfactory disposition.

Registration of Voters.

We believe the present registration law should be so amended that when a voter has once proven his qualification by registering and being enrolled, he shall remain a registered voter unless disqualified for cause due to himself.

The foregoing extract from the last platform upon which I was elected, expresses a principle which deserves universal acceptance. It contemplates no change of the constitution which provides for the qualification of the voter.

I recommend that the present registration law be amended to correct the injustice indicated. It would always be provided that the voter must have paid his taxes and not subjected himself to any of the disqualifications provided by law.

Highways.

It is needless to impress upon you the importance of our highways. Their value is an asset of the entire State. An intelligent Highway Commission, or Commissioner, clothed with proper authority, could be the means of untold benefit in suggesting proper methods of building the road adapted to the locality, or in solving the problems of engineering which might arise in various sections.

I call your attention to the Western and Atlantic Railroad, the lease of which terminates in 1919. No one, I apprehend, would or should consider its sale, but the problem of its disposition should be considered by a commission with directions to report its recommendations and its reasons therefor.

To delay this matter will mean to put the State at the inexcusable disadvantage of unpreparedness when the time arrives for imperative action.

The Criminal Code.

One of the fundamental purposes of government is the protection of life and safety of the citizen. If the rules of evidence are so shaped as to prevent the discovery of the truth, and if the State is deprived of the means of sifting the facts, the judges and juries are not to be blamed if crimes are allowed to go unpunished.

It is an anomaly that a defendant should take the stand, make any statement that he sees fit, or that his shrewd lawyer has prepared, and being immune from cross-examination, demand that the judge shall charge the jury that they may accept his unsworn statement in preference to all the evidence in the case.

I, therefore, recommend that a law be passed abolishing the defendant's statement, and providing in its place that he be sworn as a witness, if he desires, but his failure to be so sworn be not subject to adverse comment by prosecuting counsel. This is in accordance with current Federal and State law.

The legislation in Georgia against carrying concealed weapons has in recent years been conspicuous. It has been suggested by the law of self-preservation. Daily we read of men who have shot others, and have been acquitted on the old statement that the deceased threw his hand on his hip pocket, and the defendant shot in fear of his life. When searched, the dead man was found generally unarmed.

If the carrying of concealed weapons were made a felony, subject to be reduced to a misdemeanor by either judge or jury, the deterrent effect of such a law would be the saving of many a life. I earnestly recommend to you the consideration of this question.

Banking Laws.

The banks of a State perform public functions, and as such are properly subjected to governmental supervision. The bankers of the State, with the desire of maintaining a high standard of responsibility and of affording guarantees against improvident management, that imperil the money of the people, recommend legislation looking to the accomplishment of these objects. I commend this subject as one worthy of your serious consideration.

My predecessors have recommended the creation of the position of State Auditor, and in this recommendation I heartily concur. His services could be utilized in checking the cost of new buildings for which requests may be made by the various institutions. Those who have served on the appropriations committees are aware of the inadequate facilities of the State in arriving at the amount of the necessary expenditures.

The Constitution.

The Constitution is the expression of the supreme law of the land. It can only be changed by the people speaking in their sovereign capacity. In order that they may vote intelligently on any proposition, it is essential that they understand it. I recommend that, in proposing Constitutional amendments, you plainly indicate the proposition to the voter in such language that he may understand the meaning of the question submitted.

My predecessor has called attention to the fact that some of the agricultural schools are well attended, while others receive little patronage, whether due to the matter of location or lack of interest, or from what cause, I am unable to say. Each obtains the same appropriation from the State for maintenance. I recommend that you investigate their condition, and apply the proper remedies.

Slaton is Inaugurated With Simple Ceremonies.

With ceremonies that gained in strength and impressiveness through their very simplicity, John Marshall Slaton to-day became Governor of the State of Georgia, succeeding Joseph M. Brown. The oath of office was administered by Judge William H. Fish, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, at 12:02 o'clock.

Governor Slaton was inducted into office in the presence of a brilliant assemblage of Georgia men and women, including his own and the retiring Governor's family and intimate friends, members of the State Legislature and prominent jurists. For the first time in the history of the State the United States was represented by Judge William T. Newman and Judge Don A. Pardee, of the Federal Court. They occupied seats directly in front of the Speaker's stand.

Galleries and the floor of the House were filled with spectators. By 10 o'clock virtually every seat in the visitors' gallery was taken and room had been provided for a large number on the floor. In the corridors another crowd, unable to gain entrance into the hall, waited patiently for a glimpse of the new executive.

Joint Session Held.

Neither the House nor the Senate transacted any business, convening at 11 o'clock and immediately taking a recess. At 11:45 o'clock both Houses again convened, and the Senate at once adjourned and marched to the House, where members took seats in a semi-circle about the speaker's stand. In the front row of seats about the speakers' stand sat the intimate friends and relatives of Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton. Twenty-eight chairs had been reserved for members of Governor Slaton's family and eight for the family and friends of Governor Brown.

In Governor Slaton's party were Major William F. Slaton, father of the Governor; Mrs. John M. Slaton, Mr. and Mrs. William M. Slaton, Justice and Mrs. S. C. Atkinson, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Waldo, Mrs. W. H. Blanchard, Mrs. W. D. Grant, Mr. and Mrs. John W. Grant, John M. Slaton, Jr., W. F. Slaton, Jr., Slaton Waldo, Albie Waldo, William D. Grant, Miss Margaret Grant, James Jackson Slaton, Mr. and Mrs. A. McD. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Jones, Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Phillips and Miss Robinson. In Governor Brown's party were Mrs. Joseph M. Brown, Miss Cora Brown, Charles Brown, Miss Sally Brown, Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Connolly, Mrs. Frances Connolly and Thomas W. Connolly.

Governor Brown Receives Friends.

Governor Brown arrived at the Capitol shortly before 11 o'clock, and went at once into his private office, where he received a number of friends and visitors.

Governor-elect Slaton drove up in his automobile to the Washington Street entrance of the Capitol, accompanied by Mrs. Slaton and his father, Major William F. Slaton. They proceeded to the reception room of the Governor's office, where the inaugural procession formed.

Promptly at 11:45 o'clock Speaker Burwell called the House to order, and immediately thereafter members of the Senate arrived.

The inaugural procession moved from the Governor's office on the first floor. The procession was led by Governor-elect Slaton and Governor Brown. After them came ex-Governor Henry D. McDaniel, and then followed the Justices of the Supreme Court and the Court of Appeals, the Federal Judges, the State House officers, the members of the joint legislative committee on inauguration, and the immediate families of Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton.

Governor Slaton Presented.

Governor Brown and Governor-elect Slaton took their places on the Speaker's stand, the first standing to the left of Senator Randolph Anderson and Speaker Burwell and the latter to the right. Rev. James B. Robbins, of the Trinity Methodist Church, opened the ceremonies with prayer, in which he invoked Divine aid for Governor Slaton in the conduct of the aqairs of the State.

Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, presented Governor-elect Slaton to the people of Georgia and the Legislature, and immediately thereafter Justice Fish administered the oath of office. In a speech expressing great confidence in the ability of the incoming executive, Governor Brown presented Governor Slaton with the Great Seal of the State of Georgia.

After the inaugural ceremonies Governor and Mrs. Slaton and ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown lunched at the Executive Mansion. Ex-Governor and Mrs. Brown retired to their farm near Marietta, and Governor Slaton took possession of the mansion in the afternoon.

Church Bars Wedding And Girl Files Suit

Breach of Promise Action Started, Though Both Parties Declare They Are Ready for Ceremony.

ATCHISON, KANS., June 28.—Although both parties to a $25,000 breach of marriage contract suit filed here recently say they are willing to wed, the suit will go on.

Miss Mary Falk, of Purcell, alleges that she entered into a verbal contract to marry William Burke, of Troy, a few months ago.

Church officers say they will not marry Burke because he is unable to procure a sworn statement from his mother in Ireland certifying to the time of his baptism in the Catholic Church. Burke says he will marry Miss Mary Falk any time, and, in her petition for the suit Miss Falk says she is still willing to marry Burke.

But as a priest will not marry them, as both are unwilling to forsake their religion, Miss Falk says she can not consistently dismiss the suit, although she still loves Burke. Miss Falk's petition alleges that Burke is wealthy.

A retaliatory duty of 10 per cent upon potatoes imported from countries imposing duties against the United States also was inserted. Potatoes were unreservedly on the free list in the Underwood bill.

Atlanta Medical Schools Unite to Make Big College

National Recognition Will Be Obtained Through Merger—Officers and Faculty of Institution Are Unanimous.

A union of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons and the Atlanta Medical College has been effected, and as a result an institution to be known as the Atlanta Medical College has been formed. Details of the consolidation were announced Saturday by representative committees from both colleges.

Ambitious plans for the new college are outlined. The immediate effect of the consolidation will be the placing of the Atlanta Medical College in Class A by the American Medical Association. It renders the newly formed college eligible to membership in the Association of American Medical Colleges, admitting its graduates to practice anywhere in the world. Its doors open with the new college year in September.

The consolidation will force the abandonment of the property of the Atlanta School of Medicine on Luckie and Bartow Streets and the establishment of a considerable plant in connection with the present equipment of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons on Butler and Armstrong Streets.

Officers Are Announced.

The new college will be officered by W. S. Elkin, dean, and W. F. Westmoreland, president, of the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons, and by two officers to be nominated by the Atlanta School of Medicine.

All these plans were announced by a committee from the Atlanta School of Medicine, consisting of George H. Noble, L. C. Fischer and Edward G. Jones, and a committee from the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons, whose members are W. S. Elkin, W. F. Westmoreland and C. W. Strickler.

Consideration of the proposition has been under way for some time, stated the committee members.

"It has been the one object of these deliberations," they announced, "to organize an institution of dignity and of permanent promise, whose graduates will receive general recognition throughout the United States—an institution so constituted as to make it a real public asset, and so conducted as to expect and to deserve the heartiest popular commendation."

So complete have been the preliminary deliberations that before word of the union had been breathed every plan was worked out, even to the appointment of a faculty and of a board of trustees.

The faculty proper will consist of the following physicians:

Department of Medicine—W. S. Kendrick, C. W. Strickler, R. T. Dorsey, J. C. Johnson, J. C. Olmsted, E. C. Thrash, E. B. Block, C. E. Boynton, L. B. Clarke, George M. Niles, L. M. Gaines, S. R. Roberts and B. Wolff.

Department of Surgery—W. F. Westmoreland, F. W. McRae, E. G. Jones, W. S. Goldsmith, F. K. Boland, J. L. Campbell, L. C. Fischer, M. Hoke and A. L. Fowler.

Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology—George H. Noble, W. S. Elkin, E. C. Davis and S. T. Barnett.

Department of Materia Medica and Therapeutics—M. M. Hull, L. B. Clarke (with other salaried associates).

Department of Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat—F. P. Calhoun, Dunbar Roy and J. M. Crawford.

Department of Physiology—George Bachman (with other salaried associates).

Department of Anatomy—J. W. Papez (with other salaried associates).

Department of Pathology—John Funke (with other salaried associates).

Department of Chemistry—Edgar Everhart (with other salaried associates).

Associate Faculty Not Named.

The associate faculty has not yet been completed. It will embrace the names of 50 or 75 additional physicians of prominence in the city.

The probable board of trustees of the Atlanta Medical College will be Reuben R. Arnold, H. M. Dorsey, Judge George Hillyer, G. S. Lowndes, E. W. Martin, F. J. Paxon, Judge T. P. Westmoreland, H. H. Cabaniss, John J. Eagan, John H. James, H. J. Lowry, Wilmer L. Moore, J. Carroll Payne, C. E. Currier, T. A. Hammond, Marion M. Jackson, R. F. Maddox, Bishop C. K. Nelson, J. S. Prather and W. S. Witham.

The union of the two colleges is significant as a historical event. The name of the first medical college founded in Atlanta was that of the consolidated school—the Atlanta Medical College. This institution was formed in 1854, was suspended during the war and its building used as a hospital. It was merged in 1898 with the Southern Medical College, which was organized in 1878, to form the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons.

The Atlanta School of Medicine was organized 1905. Both the colleges erected new buildings in 1906, Andrew Carnegie having given $25,000 and Dr. A. W. Calhoun $15,000 to the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons for this purpose, other citizens giving various sums. The Atlanta School of Medicine has also operated a hospital in connection with the college.

Sell Luckie Property.

It is the present plan to put on sale the Luckie Street property of the Atlanta School of Medicine, and to provide for the college work to be carried on entirely at the Butler Stree' plant, ample room being there for additional buildings and extensions. The proximity of the Grady Hospital is an additional reason for transferring everything to that locality.

The total enrollment in the Atlanta College of Physicians and Surgeons last session was 334, and in the Atlanta School of Medicine 218. The announcement by the joint committee declares:

"It will not be the future intention to increase the enrollment so much as to elevate the standard of professional instruction. After January, 1914, one or more years of work in a literary college will be required for entrance, the minimum requirement this fall being a high school education."

Committee Tells Hopes.

The committee, in a statement to the public, tells of its purposes and hopes, saying:

"The recent awakening of the public mind to a knowledge of the past shortcomings of medical education, the evident cordial interest in plans, wherever launched, to invest medical education with a degree of excellence which will protect the public as it ought to be protected; the late tendency of private philanthropy to recognize properly organized medical colleges as deserving of its bounty; the recognition promised abroad to the proposed institution, which recognition could not have been obtained as long as the colleges remained separate; the strategic advantages of Atlanta as the site for a medical college of superlative merit; the excellence of the professional talent in the city; the immense momentum implied in a united instead of a divided professional energy—all these and other considerations alike of sentiment and of common sense, have seemed to us to constitute a responsibility which it would discredit us to neglect, and an opportunity which it would distinguish us to embrace."

MOVE BEATEN FOR FREE WOOL GOODS

Clothing Duty Under New Tariff Schedule Will Be From 20 to 35 Per Cent.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The question of dutiable wool manufactures in the tariff bill was raised in the Senate Democratic caucus to-day and brought a lengthy debate. Senator Chamberlain, of Oregon, favored the free listing of these commodities, arguing this was only fair to the public and the manufacturers with raw wool on the free list.

The goods affected are stockings, socks and blankets, women's and children's dress goods, ready-made clothing and other articles of wearing apparel. Ad valorem rates, ranging from 20 per cent on stockings to 35 per cent on ready-made clothing are in the bill as reported to the caucus.

At the recess of the caucus Senator Simmons announced that the proposition to free list wool manufactures was beaten by a close vote.

"We expect to finish the hemp, silk, paper and sundries schedules to-night," said Senator Simmons, "and take up the administrative and income tax features of the Underwood bill Monday."

FLAGLER WILL UNCHANGED AND RELATIVE'S HINTS OF A CONSPIRACY FALL

Codicils Show That Millionaire Railroad King Left Only Son With but Small Share of His Fortune. Bulk of Wealth Held in Trust.

By TARLETON COLLIER.

WEST PALM BEACH, June 28.—While a number of the charges made by Amasa Flagler, of California, regarding strange circumstances surrounding the death of Henry M. Flagler to-day are found to be substantial, the principal accusations that codicils were added to the Flagler will, completely changing its effect, and that the dying man was given insufficient medical attention, appear to fall without support.

Seven codicils to the will are not significant. Investigation into the charges by Amasa Flagler that dark work accompanied the end of his kinsman was conducted by The Sunday American. The stories of the California man that Henry M. Flagler was kept in deep seclusion until the end; that visitors, including himself, were refused admittance; that the most rigid privacy shrouded every detail of the railroad king's illness—all are found to possess a substantial basis of fact.

Palm Beach, deserted, boarded up, uncanny in its summer desolation, today furnishes the setting for a belated story of tragedy—the tragedy in the death of Henry M. Flagler, the Florida railroad king, who died May 20, 84 years old, his brain worn out.

Built Empire; Dies in Seclusion.

The story is how a man who had built an empire came to die in seclusion on a deserted island, attended by unskilled nurses, denied to visitors —and some of them his kinsmen—and with never a word given out as to his condition, from time to time.

Amasa P. Flagler, of California, who says he is the closest male relative of Henry M. Flagler, except for Harry Harkness Flagler, a son, came to Palm Beach while the financier was dying, and was refused a sight of him. To-day he is talking freely to newspaper men, hinting at mystery in the death of Henry M. Flagler, charging that the great railroad man was not given the proper treatment or care, and that Mrs. Flagler, J. B. Parrott and Dr. W. R. Keenan, the three who were practically alone with him toward the end, and who, he points out, were the beneficiaries under the will, kept visitors away purposely.

Amasa P. Flagler, according to the variety of opinions maintained by residents of Palm Beach, is anything from a faker to a justly aggrieved person. The fact remains, however, revealed as a result of investigations by The Sunday American, that Henry M. Flagler died in loneliness and in enforced seclusion.

He died in a small room of a frame cottage on the Atlantic beach, to which he had been moved some time before the end. From one window is to be seen "The Breakers," his own great hotel. It has been locked and deserted since March. Through the other window there is the sight of a stretch of parched grass, the beach and the ocean.

George Conway, a boy who waited on Mr. Flagler during his illness, said to-day that the dying man kept his eyes always on the ocean.

"He loved it," said Conway. "One time, not long before the end, he said to me: 'George, there is the greatest thing in the world,' pointing out at the sea. 'If there ever comes a time when you would be proud of yourself and of what you have done, think about that ocean. There is something greater, more wonderful than anything a man can ever make or become. Railroads and cities are nothing.' But a lot of the times he was not conscious to what went on."

Mr. Flagler was moved to the beach cottage from his mansion, "Whitehall," when summer began to set in at Palm Beach. He was moved at the combined orders of his physician, Dr. W. R. Keenan, and Mrs. Flagler. Dr. Keenan is Mrs. Flagler's brother. Because has was moved Amasa P. Flagler finds the basis for a denunciation of those who took care of him, declaring that his kinsman was taken to the empty beach cottage that he might be more securely isolated.

Joe Jefferson Died In Same Cottage.

Investigation reveals that many of the statements made by Amasa P. Flagler in his interviews regarding the death of his relative are exaggerations. He is said to have declared that the beach cottage in which Henry M. Flagler died was old and dilapidated and isolated from the community. It is, however, "The Nautilus," one of a colony of seven cottages on the beach, and is within 200 feet of "The Breakers." It is leased for $5,000 a season of three months to the winter visitors from the North, and last season was occupied by "Finey" Conners, the Buffalo politician. Joseph Jefferson, the actor, according to the beach traditions, died in the same cottage.

Local physicians, although none of them was called in to assist Dr. Keenan and Dr. Castleberry, watched the case as well as possible in view of the privacy attached to it. Several te-day said that they would have indorsed the move from Whitehall to the beach cottage, considering more desirable the sea breeze and the relief from the sultriness that is always the lot of Whitehall in the early summer.

West Palm Beach is divided into two hostile camps on the question of the treatment of Henry M. Flagler, many contending that the charges of a deliberate isolation and of inadequate care of the dying man may be substantiated by a chain of circumstances, and others laughing at the scandal that Amasa Flagler has sprung.

Trained Nurses Succeeded by Boy.

The rapid decline of the railroad king began about March 1, when, already ill, he was injured by a fall in the reception hall of "Whitehall." He took to bed at that time, and never H. E. Bemis, wife of the manager of the "Royal Ponciana."

From the fact that the attending physicians are related to beneficiaries under Flagler's will, and that one, Dr. Keenan, is himself a beneficiary, Amasa Flagler has drawn evidence of irregular conduct in the care of Henry M. Flagler.

Little Told From Bedside.

During the period of the financier's illness little definite news came from his bedside. Newspaper men of West Palm Beach and of Jacksonville declare that no bulletins were issued, and that inquiries were met always with indefiniteness.

For weeks Flagler lay thus. No one was admitted. The gossip of servants has lingered in West Palm Beach, declaring that the dying man in his delirium called frequently for his son, and frequently also for William Fremd, his gardener. The son, Harry Harkness Flagler, who has been estranged from his father for 21 years, was not summoned until by Amasa P. Flagler. Fremd, another for whom Mr. Flagler called, lived on the grounds, within a half a mile of the cottage, but was never taken to the sick room.

The same gossip has recorded that J. A. McDonald, of Miami, an old friend of Mr. Flagler, and Father McLoughlin, a Catholic priest of Miami, were others who could not see the sick man.

Along toward the end came Amasa Flagler. According to his own story, he had sent a telegram to herald his visit. Reaching Palm Beach, he was informed that he could not see the sick man. He declares that he virtually was ordered from the grounds by J. B. Parrott, vice president and general manager of Flagler's railroad, who became president by the express terms of the Flagler will.

Incensed, Amasa Flagler went to the citizens of West Palm Beach with his story. He had telegraphed ahead for a room in "The Breakers," but these were denied him. "The Breakers," he was informed, was closed for the season.

Telegram Sent To Flagler's Son.

Amasa Flagler found quarters in "The Gables," a less pretentious hotel in West Palm Beach, whose proprietor, R. C. McGriff, listened to his story and to this day believes in him. Amasa Flagler was the first to send a telegram to Harry Harkness Flagler.

"Your father is calling for you," is the message he sent.

According to the statement to McGriff, Parrott, over in Palm Beach, heard that Harry Flagler was coming to his father's side, and came across to "The Gables" to engaged a room and bath for the financier's son. There was no room for Harry Flagler, either, it seems, on Palm Beach.

No room and bath was available in McGriff's establishment, and Amasa Flagler offered to give up his suite to Harry Harkness Flagler. But Harry Flagler, when he arrived, stayed with an old friend in the town. He arrived in time to see his father alive.

Amasa Flagler declares that he was not allowed to see the body of Henry M. Flagler after death. The Tropical Sun, the daily paper of West Palm Beach, bears a story of how Amasa Flagler was leaving the town, full of wrath at his treatment. At the station, according to the story, he could obtain no information about his trains.

The employees at the railroad station, the Flagler railroad station, would tell him nothing. He asked information regarding a special train, and was met with an indefinite answer. Finally, he called a boy and commissioned him to obtain the information. The boy did. Upon his return with the message, Mr. Flagler is said to have given him $50.

"You are the only person connected with this road who has exhibited the slightest consideration or courtesy toward me," he told the boy, according to the story.

Undertaker Imported To Conduct Funeral.

The body of the dead millionaire was taken in hand by an undertaker imported from Miami. Undertaker McGinley, in West Palm Beach, was not consulted. Citizens of the town believe this to be the case because Henry M. Flagler and the city of West Palm Beach had little in common. The two have been antagonistic of late years, in spite of the work of development which Flagler has done for East Florida, and a number of local ordinances and regulations were passed inimical to the Flagler interests.

Residents of West Palm Beach now declare that the feeling that grew up was not personal to Flagler himself, but was occasioned by actions of other officials of the Florida East Coast Railroad.

Flagler's funeral was held in St. Augustine, and his body placed in an elaborate vault which he had built in connection with the Memorial Presbyterian Church. St. Augustine he made his home, it is said here, because he was repelled by the attitude of West Palm Beach citizens.

Makes Charges Against Beneficiaries.

According to his story, Amasa Flagler was denied a part in the funeral. He went on his way North, where he has made his sensational charges that Mrs. Flagler, Dr. Keenan and J. B. Parrott kept the dying financier secluded, denying all admission that they might maintain an influence over him.

The three are the principal beneficiaries under the will, and it is Amasa's inference that because they were with him continually, to the seclusion of others, their claims were made secure. He hints, in his interviews, that codicils to the original Flagler will were made under their domination, cutting out other legatees, particularly Harry Harkness Flagler, the son of the financier.

However, an examination of the will and codicils proves this accusation to be without foundation. There are seven codicils, but none materially effective.

The documents are in the court house in St. Augustine, where they have reposed since being made. The original will was drafted February 1, 1902, and names W. H. Beardsley, of New York; Dr. William R. Keenan, of Lockport, N. Y., the physician who was with him at his death, and J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, another of the little party with him most of the time during his last illness, as his executors and trustees. His wife, Mrs. Mary Lillie Flagler, he names as the residuary legatee, and his son Harry Harkness Flagler, he cut off with the relatively small legacy of 5,000 shares of Standard Oil stock. This, at the time of Flagler's death, was worth $642 a share.

Declares Son Didn't Show Filial Regard.

"I have already given my son securities sufficient to bring him an income of $75,000 a year," the will stated. "My son has not shown for me the filial regard that would make me inclined to do more for him than is done by this item of my will."

No beneficiary will profit by the will, however, for at least five years. By its terms, a trust is created, the testator declaring:

"It is my intention in the future to foster, protect and properly develop such properties; and to provide against my decease while such properties are in process of development, and to relieve my beloved wife from the immediate cares and responsibilities of so varied and extensive interests, I hereby declare a trust for all my properties. From this trust is excepted $60,000 to the Stetson University and $20,000 to the Florida Agricultural College for the construction of a gymnasium.

The trust is to last five years, according to the will, and if the Florida East Coast Railway, or the Florida East Coast Hotel Company, at that time should require financial aid, then it is to continue as long as is necessary. Until the expiration of trust, Mrs. Flagler is to receive $100,000 a year and the Memorial Presbyterian Church of St. Augustine $3,000 a year.

Many Legacies Left by Will.

Other legatees mentioned in the original will are: To receive $5,000, Miss Annie C. McKay, Mrs. Ella Green, Stephen A. Brave, John P. Beckwith, William H. Chambliss, Ed J. Triay, George W. Wilson, Bernard O'Brien, his coachman; George Holland, his butler, and Ida Scheiffer, his housekeeper; to receive $10,000, James A. McGuire, R. T. Goff, John Anderson, Fred Sterry, Joseph D. Price, Henry W. Merrill, J. A. McDonald, William H. Beardsley and Jasper G. Salter; to J. E. Ingraham, $20,000; to J. R. Parrott, $100,000; to C. D. Boice and L. C. Hayes, $2,500; to the Florida Agricultural College, $80,000; to the John B. Stetson University, $40,000; to Hamilton College, New York, $100,000; to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society, $75,000.

By the terms of the will J. R. Parrott is to continue in the same relation to the Flagler interests as he maintained during the lifetime of the testator.

There are seven codicils to the will, made, respectively, February 17, 1903; April 28, 1904; January 8, 1906; April 7, 1908; December 22, 1910; January 10, 1912, and September 13, 1912.

It is these, Amasa Flagler declares, which are damaging to the original document, but none of them seem materially to affect it. The first codicil gives his trustees the power to complete the southern extension of the Florida East Coast Railroad, which he denied them in the will.

The second codicil defines the meaning of the term "expiration of trust," which occurred frequently in the will, and provides that if Harry Harkness Flagler is not living at the end of the "expiration of trust" then the 5,000 shares of oil stock lapse to the estate. In this codicil also he revoked the legacies of $80,000 to the Florida University and $40,000 to the John B. Stetson University, and provided for bequests of $10,000 to J. P. Greaves, Robert Murray and Leland Sterry, and giving W. H. Beardsley $50,000 instead of $10,000. If he survived his wife, Flagler specified in this codicil, the residue of his estate is to be divided among Roy H. York, W. L. Harkness and Mrs. John D. McLennan, of Cleveland; W. R. Keenan, Jr., J. K. Wise and Sarah G. Keenan, of Wilmington; J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, and W. H. Beardsley, of New York.

No Increase for Son's Share of Estate.

The third codicil announces that upon consideration the testator found incorrect the statement in the will that he had given his son securities netting $75,000 a year. However, he said, this mistake did not warrant an increase in the legacy to Harry Harkness Flagler.

The codicil also provides for a legacy of $10,000 to Harry E. Bemis, and empowers his trustees to borrow money for the extension of his railroad to Key West.

Codicil four specifies that the smaller legatees are not to receive the amounts provided unless at the time of his death they are in the employ of the Flagler railroad or hotel interests.

Codicil five empowers his trustees to continue to pay to Horace H. Flagler, of St. Augustine, the dividends on 50 shares of Standard Oil stock. It provides, too, that the legacy to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society apply only if the church remain in the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.

Codicil six makes provision for the maintenance of his mausoleum by the expenditure of a portion of the income from the $75,000 which he bequeathed to the church in St. Augustine.

The last codicil, drafted September 13, 1912, provides that the legacy of 5,000 shares of oil stock to his son be effective in spite of the change in the form of Standard Oil stock. This was drafted soon after the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company, apparently looking to safe-guarding Harry Harkness Flagler against losing his inheritance on technical grounds. The last provision is the revocation of his previous bequest to Horace H. Flagler, substituting therefor an annuity of $2,000.

No resident of West Palm Beach or its vicinity was mentioned in the will, although common gossip had named several as likely legatees.

Flagler's Isolation Necessary, Says Doctor.

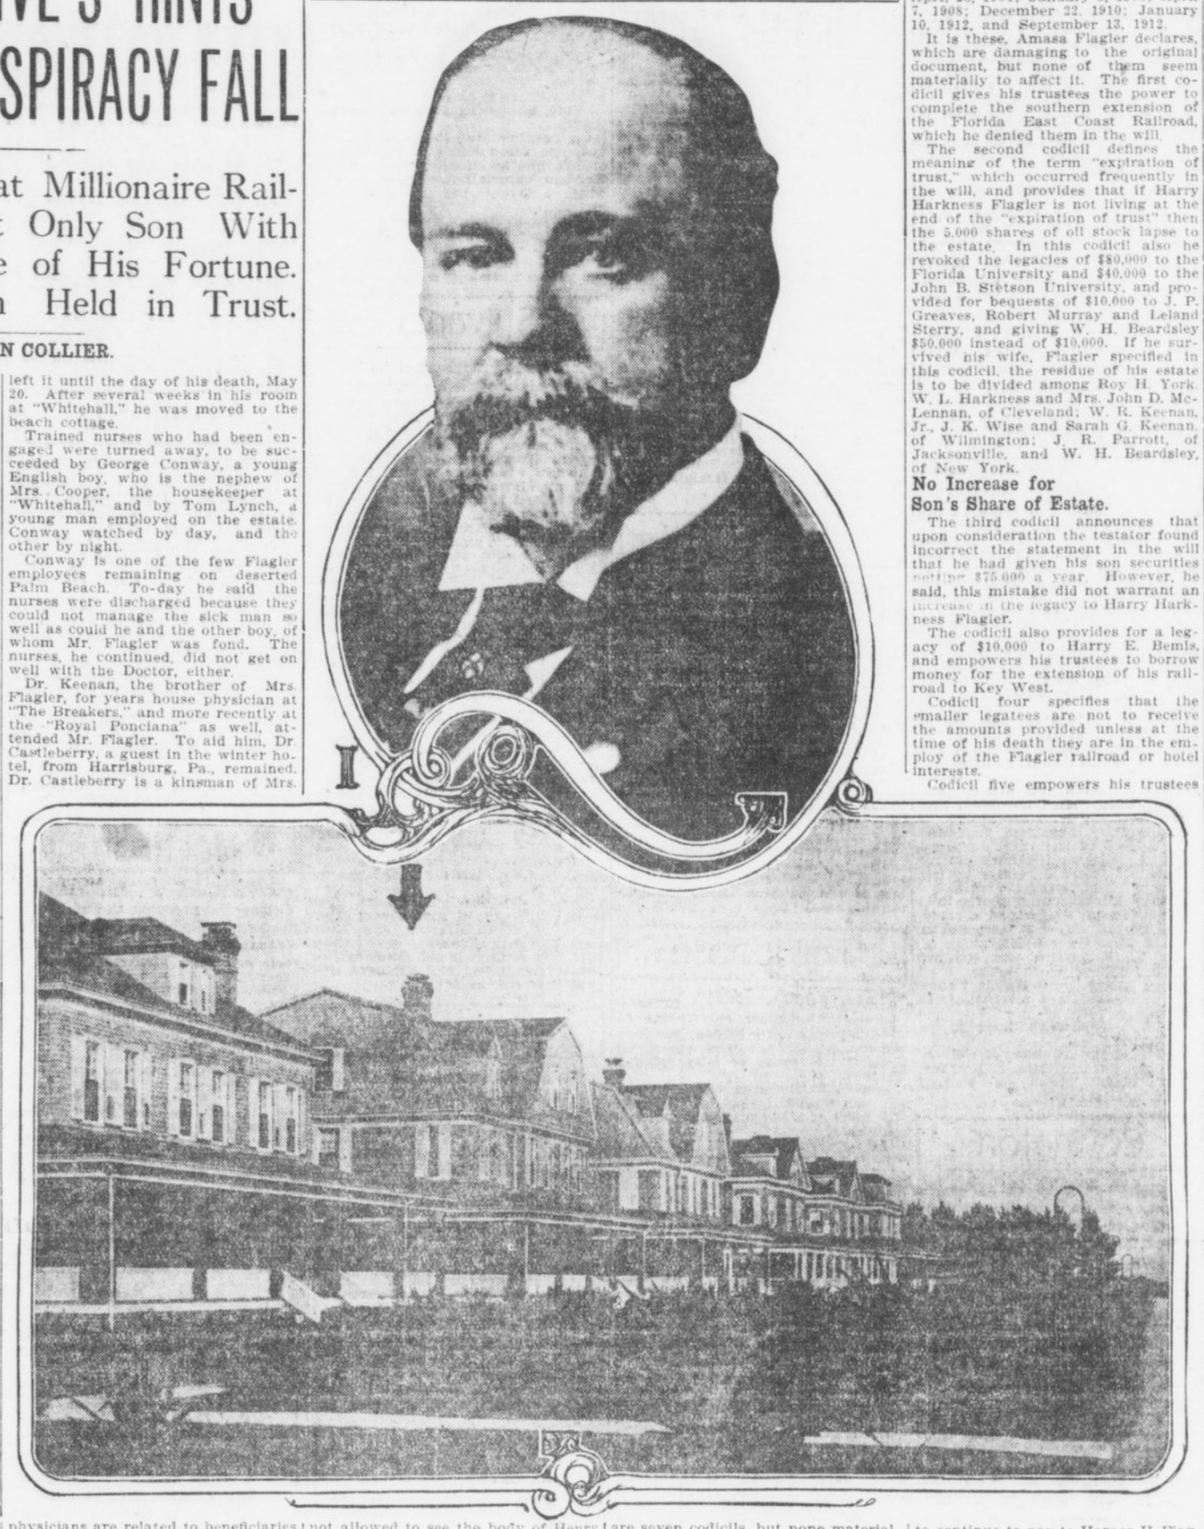
NEW YORK, June 28.—Dr. Owen Kenan, brother of Mrs. Henry M. Flagler, to-day issued a vigorous denial of the charges of Amasa Plummer Flagler regarding the circumstances which surrounded the death of his patient at West Palm Beach.

"There isn't a word of truth in the whole thing," he said. "The only explantation is that these so-called 'charges' originated in the brain of some cunning adventurer with an ax to grind. Publication of these unfounded rumors have annoyed us greatly, and Mrs. Flagler is in no condition to be interviewed, so that I can speak for her.

"So far as I can make out, the greatest objection to conditions this Amasa Flagler found at the Beach was the isolation of the sick man. That was natural. Mr. Flagler was old, his illness was serious and he needed quiet. The cottage in which he died is not dilapidated. It rents for an enormous sum every season, and some prominent Boston society people had it last winter.

"If Amasa Flagler's object is to induce Harry H. Flagler to contest the will it will fail. Harry Flagler is a gentleman, although he had not spoken to his father but once in the last seventeen years. He was left $5,000,000 and each of his children gets $4,000,000. That seems to me to be eminently fair.

"As to our conduct of the case, Dr. Castlebury and I did the best we could. Henry M. Flagler had as tender and loving care as any man ever had up to the moment of his death. There was no secrecy other than that was absolutely necessary, and nothing to be concealed."



AMASA FLAGLER, who hinted at plot to influence Henry M. Flagler in making will, is shown in the top picture, while in the lower photograph the arrow indicates the cottage in which the railroad magnate died. This cottage was referred to as a "lonely hut" by Amasa Flagler in his first statements.

J. Montague Smart, Prominent Business Man, Left Fortune. No Trace of Beneficiaries.

NEW YORK, June 28.—During his active life J. Montgomery Smart was a man of mystery. Now that his bones lie in the sunken Titanic, his past is a greater puzzle than ever, and so far it is unsolved. Usually when a man dies, even though he may have been of distinction, his hidden history is buried with him. But Smart was a man of wealth, and it became necessary to try to discover vital facts of his intimate personal life.

Thus began a world-wide search that has served only to make the case of J. Montgomery Smart all the stranger. He was an honored and successful man of business, whose transactions were international in scope, even extending from New York to Australia.

Necessary to Find Heirs.

Having left money, it became necessary to find his heirs. It was remembered that this man of silence never described his family. It was known that he had been married and that his wife had died ten years before. Vague words dropped here and there were gathered and it became apparent that Smart had two children, a boy of 20 and a girl of 18.

But no one could be found who had any definite idea of their whereabouts.

Into three countries of Europe the filaments of inquiry extended. The American consuls of many ports were asked to aid in the hunt. That was in May, 1912.

One fact was discovered in the course of the Belgian hunt. It was asserted that the children were in charge of a Mrs. Cook, who was a great friend of Mrs. Smart, and that Smart was paying her liberally to care for them. But who was Mrs. Cook? Her identity was also impossible to discover, and the hunt settled down into a hope that the guardian would write for funds, thus solving the riddle. But she has been swallowed in silence.

Had Many Acquaintances.

As president of the American Cold Storage and Shipping Company, Smart had made many acquaintances among prominent business men of New York, London, Berlin, Paris and many other cities throughout the world. Many believed that they knew him well. But when the test came, they were surprised to find that only the barest information was obtainable about his personal affairs.

Smart was a hermit in a great city, and he was a hermit in his many voyages and travels in foreign countries.

KANSAS CITY, June 28.—"If my wife succeeds in getting a divorce from me I am going to begin all over with my courting days and try to win back her love," Andrew Mathers said in Judge Johnson's court. "Her charges in this case do not in any way affect my devotion and admiration for her."

Mathers is a wealthy building contractor and lives at 4402 Virginia Avenue. He has been contesting the suit of his wife, Louise Mathers. They were married in 1896 and have three children.

Mrs. Mathers charges that her husband became intoxicated frequently.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The remarkable intelligence and devotion of a Shepherd dog saved Miss Florence Sheldon, of 4 Llewellyn road, Montclair, from serious injury yesterday when her dress was accidentally set on fire.

Unconscious of the smouldering fire, the girl sat on the bank of a brook throwing sticks into the stream. Suddenly the dog began to bark furiously. He dashed into the brook, and returning, threw his dripping body on the now blazing skirt and extinguished the fire. A square foot of the garment was burned.

Mashers Told to Think of Sisters

Pastor Says That Presuming on Feminine Acquaintance Is Greatest Aid to White Slavery.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 28.—"A spendthrift sweetheart and an extravagant wife have ruined many lives," said the Rev. T. W. Stout in a sermon at Calvary Methodist Church. "Young women can help to form high moral standards among the boys by not permitting great expenditures upon themselves."

He illustrated how laziness makes a weak character that falls in the crisis of life by knocking the prop from under a three-legged chair. "White slavery begins with presuming on feminine acquaintance and bold advances to clerks," he said. "It ends in blood money and lost souls. Every young man should ask himself in dealing with girls: 'Suppose my sister were in her place—what would I want done?'"

Skylarkers Mobbed By Throng of Women

Man Falls in Baby Carriage While He Plays on Sidewalk and Starts Small iot.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Several hundred persons, most of them women attacked Frederick Mochson and Raymond Dragoni, last night when one of the men, as a result of skylarking, fell in the baby carriage of the 18-months-old son of Joseph Billon in front of the Billon home, at 57 East One Hundred and Eleventh Street.

The baby carriage rolled off the sidewalk. Then the crowd got active. Mochson and Dragoni were dragged in the gutter and kicked and pummelled. Stones and garbage were thrown at them. When the reserves learned what had started the affair they locked up the two men on charges of disorderly conduct.

The elder Grams was a sergeant in Major Thornburg's troop, which was ambushed and almost annihilated while marching from Rawlins to the relief of the Indian agency at Meeker, and he was among those killed.

John Bunyan's Anvil Found in Junk Pile

The relic was discovered in a junk heap in St. Neots, near the town of Elstowe, or Helstowe, where Bunyan lived, by Beagarie's father, about 30 years ago, and was presented by him to his son ten years ago.

The boy exhibited the marks of punishment to his mother.

Mrs. Taylor went to a harness shop and purchased a blacksnake whip.

Concealing the weapon in a piece of paper she stole upon Principal Marcey as he was engaged in conversation on the street. Without warning she dealt him a blow and continued to apply the lash.

TROOPS TO MAKE CAVALRY RAID OF THE SHENANDOAH

Realistic Advance Next Month Into the Historic Valley May Mean New System.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Troopers at Fort Myer have begun preparations for their 70-mile march into the Shenandoah Valley next month to participate in maneuvers expected to result in reorganization of the mounted forces of the army.

The Shenandoah Valley, where "Phil" Sheridan made his famous ride 50 years ago, has been chosen as the bloodless battle ground for the test. For two months this summer a full brigade of cavalry and a battery of horse artillery will maneuver and "fight" over the red roads, the green hills, and fields near Winchester.

The department has leased a tract of ground one mile broad and two miles long in the heart of the Shenandoah, 70 miles away, and orders were issued to the troops some time ago.

Oglethorpe Troopers on March.

Two regiments of the brigade, those from Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., and Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., must ride 700 dusty miles under a summer sun before they can reach the valley, and they must report July 20. The First Squadron from Fort Myer will have only 70 miles to go, and the horse battery from Fort Riley, Kans., will be sent by rail.

Secretary Garrison will be a frequent spectator. Major General Wood, chief of staff, United States Army, probably will spend much time there, and President Wilson may make the trip.

The necessity for a rehabilitation of the cavalry was disclosed when the general staff some time ago made ambitious plans for the reorganization of the army so as to prepare it for the defense of the country against attack by any great military power. This resulted in the sending to Europe last year of a board of six cavalry officers, who studied the German, Russian, Austro-Hungarian, French and English organizations.

Officers Study Abroad.

Four months were spent abroad by these officers, and since their return they have prepared plans for radical changes in the organization and use of cavalry of the American army.

The tests will take place under the direction of Colonel C. H. Murray, of the Twelfth Cavalry, as Brigadier General E. J. McClernand, the head of the cavalry board, is prohibited from exercising actual command by virtue of his retirement. General McClernand, however, with Lieutenant Colonels J. T. Dickmann and Fred S. Foltz, Major Jesse McI. Carter and Captain Frank Parker, all members of the board which studied the European systems, will be present.

Some of the practical questions to be worked out are:

How large a command can a captain handle successfully?

How many such units can a colonel handle to the best advantage under conditions approximating hostilities?

The new formation of the cavalry into double ranks also will be tried out on a large scale, a practical test by Captain Parker, of the Eleventh Cavalry, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., with an experimental squadron having been pronounced a complete success by General H. L. Scott.

NORTH GEORGIA AND AUGUSTA NEWS

AUGUSTA WINS FIGHT AGAINST FEVER GERMS

Malaria and Typhoid Deaths Reduced in Eleven Years From 122 to 41.

INCREASING WAR ON INSECTS

Dr. Eugene E. Murphey, Head of Health Board, Genius Who Wrought Change.

AUGUSTA, June 28.—In 1901 there were 95 deaths in Augusta from malarial fever, and in 1912 there were 27. In 1901 there were 27 deaths from typhoid fever. In 1912 there were 14. There is a reason for these marked decreases and that "reason" is Dr. Eugene E. Murphey, president of the Board of Health. Of course, Dr. Murphey has had able assistants, but he is the genius who revolutionized Augusta's Health Department and converted this ordinarily malaria-ridden community into one of the most healthful in the South.

This city is in a pocket, so to speak, with the Savannah River on one side and sandhills on another, while immediately to the east and southeast are swamps caused by backwater from the river.

Augusta's fight against malaria began in earnest soon after it was discovered by medical men that the mosquito conveyed fever germs. War on the mosquito was started, and it never has let up.

Draining the swamps near the city, filling up ditches, draining surface water in the outskirts of the city through terra cotta pipes, placing fish in the lakes and fountains, and the liberal use of petroleum are the factors primarily responsible in emancipating Augusta from the mosquito and, consequently, from malaria.

Also campaigns of education have been conducted by the Board of Health, which have taught the people not to permit stagnant water on their premises.

The average life of a mosquito is probably two weeks, says Dr. Murphey, and one rarely travels more than 300 yards from its birthplace. Sanitary inspectors make regular rounds of inspection and report to the authorities any conditions likely to breed mosquitoes or produce any kind of disease.

The placing of petroleum in the sand traps where the sewage water collects, in the stagnant water which for some reason must remain stagnant, and the improved sewage system have caused the mosquito problem—and therefore the malaria problem—to vanish.

In 1903 the Sanitary Department used 200 gallons of oil, while in 1912 there were 13,425 gallons consumed.

The decrease in the number of deaths from typhoid is attributed by Dr. Murphey to the "swat the fly" campaigns and better milk. Augusta's milk inspector is rigid in his requirements and frequent examinations of the milch cows and dairies are made.

DALTON, June 28.—Lewis Preston, a 22-year-old negro janitor at the court house here, has never experienced the sensation of pain.

Preston has never seen a day's sickness. He doesn't know what headache is, except from hearsay. The annoyance of indigestion has never been his lot. He has never experienced an accident. Contagious and infectious diseases have steered clear of him.

The negro states that the nearest approach to discomfort ever experienced by him was when he smoked his first cigar, and then, aside from a slight "swimming of his head," he pulled through the experience.

NEGRO FARMER PLOWS UP GOLD COINS IN FIELD

Alfred Gaines Finds More Than Seven Thousand Dollars Hidden Treasure Near Rome.

ROME, June 28.—Fifteen miles from Rome on a Gordon County farm lives a negro who, it is said, has unearthed a box containing more than $7,000 in gold. While the amount found is undetermined, it has been confirmed that the negro, Alfred Gaines, a preacher, plowed up the money.

Gaines has only one arm and has a hook on his left arm to assist him in his farm work. One day recently he was cultivating when his plow struck a decayed wooden box and a handful of shining coins fell, ringing, on his plow. Gaines stooped down to examine the pieces and was overpowered to find they were gold, United States money of the coinage of 1822 to 1848.

A few days later when Gaines went to Plainville and rang down $850 to pay off a mortgage, the mortgager almost fainted. He could not understand where the negro got so much money, and in gold, too. Gaines refused to answer any questions. He paid off every cent he owed in Plainville.

Who buried the treasure is the question that has been asked often since that time. Dugan Miller, a prominent Calhoun man, says he is inclined to believe the gold was buried by his grandfather before the war, being the price received for six slaves he sold. Miller's ancestors owned the land, but sold it.

Army Officers Buy Georgia Farm Lands

Military Men Pay $25,000 for 2,200 Acres of Columbia County Realty.

AUGUSTA, June 28.—Confidence in Georgia dirt has recently been shown by a group of army officers who have invested $25,000 in Columbia County farm lands. Captain R. E. Woods, U. S. A., now in the quartermaster's department in the Canal Zone, with a number of associates, has just purchased 2,200 acres of land in Columbia County about fifteen miles from Augusta. They have formed the Columbia County Cotton Company.

Before purchasing land the officers investigated carefully the different soils and the topography in various portions of the country, and finally decided to purchase in Columbia County.

GAINESVILLE CITY COUNCIL WANTS REVISED CHARTER

GAINESVILLE, June 28.—The City Council of Gainesville has authorized Mayor P. E. B. Robertson to appoint a committee to revise the city charter. This committee, consisting of J. C. McConnell, C. C. Staton, J. E. Redwine, Jr., John A. Pierce, J. H. Bosch, W. A. Charters, W. A. Crow, J. D. Hardie, P. N. Parker and W. M. Johnson, has been given authority to prepare a new charter if deemed necessary and make such amendments as it sees proper. The committee is composed of representative business men.

SLAYER DOES NOT NOW FEAR GHOST OF VICTIM

GAINESVILLE, June 28.—Believing that if he washed his hands and feet in the blood of the negro he had slain the ghost of his victim would not haunt him, Otis Mitchell went to the house where he had shot and killed "Lucky Boy" Walker, found a small quantity of dried blood on the floor, gathered it up and rubbed it on his hands and feet. Mitchell was exonerated by the Coroner's jury for slaying Walker.

Athens Bank Head Now Facing Trial

J. W. Griffin Accusd of 'Wrecking' Trust and Banking Company. Cashier Sentenced.

ATHENS, June 28.—The trial of J. W. Griffin in the Clarke Superior Court for "wrecking" the Athens Trust and Banking Company some months ago is creating much interest throughout this part of the State. Griffin was president of the bank, which failed eighteen months ago, and in the investigation which followed he and R. H. McCrary, the cashier, were indicted for "irregularities" in the bank's business.

In Superior Court some months ago both pleaded guilty to the charges with expectation of getting a fine, but Judge Brand sentenced them to five years each in the penitentiary. They appeared to the Court of Appeals and secured new trials.

A special term of court was called. When arraigned, Cashier McCrary pleaded guilty, and under a promise to give State's evidence in the trial of President Griffin, was sentenced to three years by Judge Brand. The cases against Griffin are being tried now and will require probably several days to finish.

"My Dear Miss Hobbs: The miniature has come, and we all think it a very successful copy of the photograph. We congratulate you on the delicacy and excellence of your work."

Some months ago Miss Hobbs received a commission from Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, wife of the President, to paint her miniature. The letter acknowledges its receipt.

Miss Hobbs will next fall return to Simmons College, Abilene, Texas, where for seven years she has been art director.

BRILLIANT BATTLE SURE IN FRANK TRIAL IN CLASH OF HOOPER AND ARNOLD

Order Has at Last Been Rested and Indications Are That Struggle of Attorneys Will Be Waged in the Most Ethical Manner.

By AN OLD POLICE REPORTER.

As deplorable as the Phagan case is, in all its melancholy details, it already is evident enough that there will come of it eventually much that the community may be thankful for.

In the first place, Atlanta and Georgia, and incidentally the entire South will have learned a good lesson in law and order, justice and fair play, and to that extent may be the better prepared for the next case of the kind that comes to their attention.

In the second place, there will be in the future no such wretched bungling and frenzied appeal in and from police headquarters, as for a time marked the Phagan case unique among its kind.

It looks now as if the decks have been pretty well cleared for action and that Leo Frank's trial may be expected to proceed in dignity and order, and that in its final analysis the truth of Mary Phagan's murder may be established, at least to the extent of Frank's real or suspected participation therein.

If Frank should be convicted, that would mean the subsequent indictment and conviction of the negro Conley, as an accessory after the fact.

Conley Indictment May Follow.

If Frank should be found not guilty, that would mean the indictment of Conley, as principal to the murder, in all human probability.

It evidently is the purpose of the State to hold Conley free of indictment, pending the disposition of the charges against Frank. His status as a material witness depends much upon this, of course.

There always is a chance, however, that a Grand Jury may take up a thing of this sort of its own motion, and to that extent remains the possibility of prior indictment hanging over Conley.

It seems more likely, however, that the case will go to trial about as it shapes up now.

I do not incline to think the State really has any further sensational or particularly effective thing up its sleeve. Neither do I think the defense has.

There may be, on both sides, bits of corroborated evidence or evidence to offset this, that, or the other to come, but in the main I think the public is in possession of all the essential facts in the Phagan case to date.

The public must remember, however, that not all the things it has read in the newspapers, not yet one-half the things, ever will go before the jury trying Leo Frank as competent evidence.

And it is upon the COMPETENT evidence alone that the court will permit Leo Frank to be judged.

For instance, nothing that Mrs. Frank has said in the public prints will go before the jury. A wife is estopped in law from testifying either for or against her husband.

Fomby Woman Rejected.

The Fomby woman already has been rejected as a possible witness against Frank. Her story admittedly is too preposterous even for the State to bother with it further.

How much of Conley's story the jury will hear is entirely problematical.

He will be warned that he need not testify to anything calculated to incriminate himself, and even if he elects to disregard this warning there is much in his statement that likely will go down and out as incompetent or irrelevant.

The ponderous assurances of Frank's guilt, so frequently thundered from police headquarters by Detective Lanford, will, so far as the jury is concerned, not be there. Detective Lanford will not be on the jury—and his opinion as to the innocence or guilt of Frank will not be immediately valuable, therefore.

Frank's own statement, it must be rembered, will be delivered to the jury, not under oath.

The jury will be instructed by the court that it may accept the defendant's statement as the truth in its entirety, and to the exclusion of ALL the sworn testimony, if it sees fit; or it may accept it in part and reject it in part; or it may reject the statement as a whole.

The jury, and the jury ALONE, will be the judge of the facts.

The law—the impersonal law—that the jury will be required to apply to those facts it will get from the court.

It looks, then, as if the Phagan case, getting down to brass tacks, will revolve finally about those persons:

Leo Frank, the defendant; Solicitor Dorsey and Attorney Frank Hooper, representing the State; Luther Z. Rosser and Reuben Arnold, representing the defendant; the judge, the jury and a dozen or so competent and material witnesses.

Order at Last Comes.

So, at last, has order been brought out of chaos, after weeks and weeks of hysteria, stuff and nonsense, passion and prejudice, facts and near-facts, truth and lies, impatience and intolerance—all jumbled into about the worst mess I ever undertook, in my way, to analyze and unravel, in seeking the truth!

Leo Frank will receive a fair trial, and the written and recorded verdict, whatever it may be, will be accepted generally as the truth.

If the jury agrees that Frank is guilty, that verdict will be taken to be a just one. Nothing short of the most sensational and revolutionary new evidence likely would serve to re-establish his good name, once he is convicted in the Superior Court.

On the other hand, if the jury shall agree that Frank is not guilty, I think he will be taken back into the friendly and fair-minded good will of the people of Atlanta, a free and untarnished man, and there likely will come a revulsion of popular feeling in his behalf, that will go far toward offsetting and reconciling him to the horrible ordeal he passed through.

The approaching trial likely will be one of the greatest legal battles ever fought in Georgia.

On the one hand—that of the State—Hugh Dorsey, the Solicitor General, has done the drudgery, and Frank Hooper is to handle the picturesque. Hooper likely will figure much more in the public eye hereafter than Dorsey will, for it will be Hooper's business to paint the rainbow, snatch the stars from the heavens, and open the floodgates of tears—if he can!

On the other hand—that of the defense—Luther Z. Rosser has done the drudgery, and Reuben Arnold will have the delicate task of leading the jury along the primrose path that leads to Frank's acquittal.

All Have Big Reputations.

All of these men are great lawyers, with reputations to sustain, and each one may be depended upon to act a part entirely in keeping with the honorable profession of the law. I do not believe there is sufficient money in Atlanta to secure the services of any one of these men in an unworthy undertaking.

Each one of these men may be depended upon to do his best by his client, and as each one is of the quality I note, a fair trial seems assured.

It is a happy and a consoling circumstance that the trial of Leo Frank is to be presided over by an upright and just judge, argued by upright and honorable attorneys, and a verdict written by twelve "good men and true," as the law—the LAW in all its majesty—directs!

While by no means as spectacular a thing to say as something else might be, it is a matter of deep and abiding significance that Leo Frank, with his life, his good name, and all that he holds most dear at stake, is assured of a fair trial and a just verdict, notwithstanding all the frenzied and sinister detail of irrelevant and incoherent "testimony" and "evidence" set forth here and there, as time has run on since Mary Phagan was slain.

Victory for Society.

In the trial of Leo Frank THE SUPREMACY OF THE LAW will be vindicated beyond carping or cavil—and therein the most tremendous victory to society will be achieved.

Frank Hooper is one of the most experienced prosecuting attorneys in the State. He has served as Solicitor General on one of the most important circuits in Georgia, and his career thereon was entirely to his credit.

He is suave, incisive, deliberate, calm in action and eagle-eyed in seeing a point that may be turned to his client's advantage.

In summing up the case of the State against Leo Frank, Hooper will be at his best. He is a master in presenting his case to the jury for its consideration. I understand he is to be associated soon with Judge Arthur Powell and John D. Little, in Atlanta, in the practice of law. They will make a great team. Hooper is an attorney of the same class and caliber as Powell and Little.

But, there to combat the best efforts that Hooper may put forth will stand that remarkable lawyer, Reuben Arnold.

Whatever qualms Frank may feel when he thinks of Hooper, doubtless they are relieved in large measure when he turns his thoughts to Arnold.

Reuben Arnold is a lawyer of constant surprises. Age can not wither him nor custom stale his infinite variety. Frank's case will be presented to the jury as few men could present it, when Arnold undertakes the work.

Convinced of Innocence.

Arnold says he never entered the case until he had convinced himself of Frank's innocence, and I quite believe he speaks the truth. I do not think there is the shadow of doubt either in Arnold's or Rosser's mind that Frank is entirely guiltless of the killing of Mary Phagan.

That Hooper may have some doubts as to the full strength of the State's case against Frank seems likely, for soon after entering the case he said this:

I have not been employed in the case to prosecute Leo M. Frank, but to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan. If the trial proves we are wrong, we will begin work on another angle. We have but one object and idea. It is that justice and the law be vindicated. We are, however, convinced we have a strong case against the accused.

Now, I do not think a manlier thing has been said in all the mass of things that have been said in the Phagan case than the foregoing.

If any person who does not know Frank Hooper has any doubts as to his complete integrity and lofty ideals the statement credited to him herein should remove them. Only a man who wishes to do right could or would say what Hooper said, soon after taking up the State's end of the Phagan case.

The most ardent, if honest, extremes of opinion well may meet on the platform Hooper sets up!

And if everybody in Atlanta will say, as he says, "I want to help find and convict the murderer of Mary Phagan, regardless of whom that murderer may be," everybody will find himself on a platform of decency and fair play—and that's where he ought to wish to find himself.

I have sought, in these articles, neither to prosecute nor to defend Frank. I have sought, in such manner as I might, to help find the murderer of Mary Phagan. I want to see him found and convicted.

I, like Hooper, have desired, above all things, to see JUSTICE AND THE LAW VINDICATED, and I indorse and agree with Hooper's expressed desire that both may be.

Search Will Continue.

If the State fails to convict Frank—the State will turn its eyes elsewhere.

Could any man ask a fairer or squarer promise from Hooper than that?

It merely means that Hooper WILL ACCEPT THE FINDINGS OF THE COURT, after orderly and prescribed procedure, frankly and unquestioningly, as the TRUTH of the matter.

If Frank is guilty, then the law will take its course.

If he is not guilty, he will take his place once more among his fellowmen, as free of stain as any of them.

That's where Hooper stands, and that's where I am satisfied to stand also!

And if somebody, early in the investigation of the Phagan case, had calmed the mad scramble for "clews," "evidence," "testimony" and what not, with the deliberate and convincing words of Frank Hooper, some of the utterly ridiculous theories would never have been evolved and the entire case would have rested upon a basis of sanity, which would have eliminated many of the ugly features.

Happily, however, the chatterboxes and the human phonographs have been given most effective pause in their wild riot of talk, and if the Society for the Suppression of Unnecessary Noises has rounded them up for good and all, so be it, and praise forevermore!

Sanity and THE LAW OF THE LAND have taken the Phagan case in hand, and through these agencies will the truth of the murder of Mary Phagan be set up eventually.

Luncheon Lurch Aid to Digestion

Pre-Prandial Prance Society Fad

Variation of Tango Brings Dancers One Step Nearer Dining Each Step They Take.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Luncheon Lurch, the latest variation of the Tango and the Turkey Trot, which has seized the society of the Capital, is declared by experts on gastronomy to be the greatest known appetizer and first aid to digestion.

So effective has it been found along these lines that the Martini is now almost unknown on the boards of Washington hosts, while the pepsin tablet supply of the druggists is practically considered worthless stock.

There is a deep method in the Luncheon Lurch. Contrary to the Tango, which is danced after tea, the Lurch is a preprandian pastime. At a given time before the viands are to be served the orchestra strikes up something syncopated.

Guests immediately begin lurching and continue the dance until they have worked up an appetite considered commensurate with the feast about to be served.

Each step carries the dancers nearer the dining room, and observant ones declare that it is an invariable rule that the best trenchermen always dance with a remarkable celerity, while the dyspeptics lurch so slowly that they are to all appearances posing in tableau.

Among the prominent lurchers are Miss Katherine Elkins, Miss Dorothy Williams, Miss Sally Williams, Miss Katherine Britton, Miss Marguerite Barbour and Mrs. James F. Curtis.

$2,000,000 TAX GAIN EXPECTED IN CHATHAM

SAVANNAH, June 28.—That the total tax returns of Chatham County will show an increase for 1913 of close to $2,000,000 is the opinion of Tax Assessor Marcus S. Baker. This will make the total returns for the year over $40,600,000—a new record for Chatham County.

But this increase will have no effect on the tax rate, says Judge Oliver T. Bacon, chairman of the board of county commissioners. The net income from this estimated increase at 7½ cents a thousand is only about $14,000.

ALL WOMEN TO VOTE IN TIME IS SENATE'S IDEA

Even the Most Conservative Members Believe the Fair Sex Will Cast Ballot the World Over.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—That women in all civilized countries will be permitted to vote is regarded as inevitable by the most conservative Senators and Representatives.

It is their opinion that steady progress is being made and that Great Britain, the United States and other leading nations will eventually recognize that further delay is useless.

Two-Thirds Vote Needed.

The resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal constitution under which women would be given the ballot, now awaiting consideration by the Senate, is expected to be passed on at the next session. A two-thirds vote would be necessary for its adoption.

It would require the appoval of sixty-four Senators to make women suffrage operative for submission to the States, so far as the upper branch of Congress is concerned.

The chief handicap preventing woman suffragé lies in the opposition of Southern Congressmen. The votes for the women's movement have made headway in the South. A bitter struggle is in progress in Alabama, where Representative Hobson is seeking the Senatorship, as against Mr. Johnston, on a platform favoring woman suffrage and temperance. Senator Johnston says he will achieve re-election without difficulty.

Have Twenty-Four Votes.

It is figured that these Senators will certainly support the Chamberlain resolution providing for a constitutional amendment permitting women to vote; Ashurst and Smith, of Arizona; Thomas and Shafroth, of Colorado; Borah and Brady, of Idaho; Myers and Walsh, of Montana; Gallinger and Hollis, of New Hampshire; Chamberlain and Lane, of Oregon; Smoot and Sutherland, of Utah; Jones and Poindexter, of Washington; Clark and Warren, of Wyoming; Gore and Owens, of Oklahoma; Ransdell and Thornton, of Louisiana.

This totals but twenty-four of the sixty-four votes necessary in the Senate. In view of recent action in Iowa, Illinois and Kansas it is possible that Senators Cummins, Kenyon, Sherman, Lewis, Bristow and Thompson may be added to the list, making thirty in all. It is claimed that two or three additional votes may come from New England, but no names are suggested.

Cupid Moves to Vancouver, Wash.

Oregon's New Law Requiring Health Certificates Held Responsible.

VANCOUVER, WASH., June 28.—The record for marriage licenses issued in one day during the 60 years in which records have been kept was broken here when ten couples secured marriage licenses. Nor is this all.

At the present rate, in fifteen days the greatest month's record will be broken in one-half the time—and all because Oregon passed a law requiring certificates of health from men making application for marriage licenses. Already 58 licenses have been issued this month, the record being 65 for any entire month.

BURN ATLANTA CLEAN, PLAN OF SANITAR YCHIEF

Settlement of Crematory Row Leaves Mayor, Council and Everybody Pleased.

John Jentzen, Sanitary Chief, is the happiest man in Atlanta as a result of the settlement Saturday of the crematory row. Operating his department without an incinerator, he said, was like trying to sail a ship on dry land, and that he had had to bear the brunt of complaints against the situation from thousands of exasperated citizens.

"That decision in the Mayor's office marks a new era in Atlanta," he said. "We shall begin a general clean-up the day the crematory is completed. I understand that that will not be longer than ten days. We shall burn Atlanta pure.

"Let the people take note of these instructions:

Gives Sanitary Rules.

"Keep the lids on garbage cans.

"Pile up the trash in yards and notify the sanitary department to come and get it.

"Don't throw things into streets and alleys.

"Help us put an end to the flies and musquitoes. You know trash breeds them."

The Chief said the new crematory would increase greatly the efficiency of his department and that it would shorten hauls and allow sanitary wagons to make more frequent visits.

He declared it would reduce the death rate and make Atlanta a more pleasant place to live in.

Mayor Well Pleased.

Although Mayor Woodward has been almost unanimously opposed in his attitude by the Council and brought most bitter criticism on himself, he smiled and said he was well satisfied over the outcome.

The Mayor's victory in the Supreme Court caused the price of the incinerator to be reduced from $276,000 to $260,000. His recent firm stand caused him to gain a point of honor.

Council endeavored to avoid allowing him to execute the contract. The concession is that he will execute it, following a special meeting of the Council Tuesday. That point has been the whole cause of the last controversy.

Turkish Bath Cures Rheumatism at Home

Costs But 2c a Bath.

Quickly Cures Kidney Trouble, Nervous Prostration and All Skin Diseases.

The Robinson Thermal or Turkish bath, taken at home, is becoming a rage. Those who have used the bath have been completely carried away with enthusiasm because of the astonishing results obtained.

Well known physicians say that the Robinson Thermal Bath at home is about to become an almost universal conqueror of disease. This is not an exaggeration. Any man or woman can prove its results inside of 24 hours, in some cases 30 minutes.

In cases of rheumatism, especially, the uric acid poison is extracted from the system through the pores, almost as liquids are sucked up through a straw. Drugs merely smother the poison or ease the pain. They do not extract the poison from the body.

Just read this letter:

"I loaned my cabinet to an old friend all crippled up with rheumatism, last May. Feet, legs, and hands badly swollen. He had spent some time at different Hot Springs without relief. A week ago he started in to use the cabinet, taking the steam heat in the morning and the dry heat at night, before going to bed. He kept this up a week, and yesterday and to-day he was as well as ever.

"GEORGE A. FREEMAN,
"Mgr. Temptation Mining and Milling Company, Silverton, Colo."

Anyone can now take Robinson Thermal baths at home and at a cost of only about 2c a bath. They make the thick, sluggish blood normal, take out the impurities and cure "spring fever" right off. The only way to take these baths is by the use of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinet, which is a unique and marvelous invention.

That great book, "The Philosophy of Health and Beauty," retail price $2.00, free at our Main Store upon request for a limited time only. Be sure to get a copy. Also see the interesting demonstration of the Robinson Thermal Bath Cabinets; no obligation to purchase. Jacobs' Pharmacy, Main Store and Laboratory, 8-10 Marietta Street.—Adv.

UNCLE SAM IS NOW GREATEST HORSE BREEDER

Supplies Mounts for the Army From His Virginia Farm and Turns Out Thoroughbreds.

FARMERS ARE HIS PARTNERS

System So Successful That Other Large Studs Will Be Established in the West.

FRONT ROYAL, VA., June 28.—Uncle Sam has recently embarked in the horse business on a gigantic scale. He has started here what is probably the largest horse farm in the world, 5,500 acres, only a few hours' ride from the capital. And this is only the first of his farms. He intends to start several and turn out thoroughbreds by the tens of thousands.

To-day the farm is supplying practically the entire United States Army with its mounts. A short time hence and it will be supplying civilians, and soon, according to Captain Caspar H. Conrad, in charge, and generally acknowledged one of the greatest experts in horse flesh in America, it will be suppyling most of the civilized nations of Europe. And the price—now $144.15—may become even cheaper for Americans.

The farm represents an expenditure of more than $600,000, with some $400,000 to be spent within the next year.

Horses Have Everything.

On the farm are all sorts of buildings, sanitary baths, swimming pools, drinking fountains, resting sheds, pleasure paths and even a gigantic hospital—all for horses. Here and there are huge houses wherein reside men. These men look out for the horses.

They talk of little else. Indeed, it would be strange if the case were otherwise, for there are only 100 of these men, and daily they have to look after from 1,500 to 2,000 horses.

It took a long time to start the horse farm—more than half a century.

One day a few years ago a number of high staff officers of the army, watching a cavalry review, made some rather disparaging remarks concerning the appearance of the horses.

"Some of 'em look like mountain goats, and the rest like buffaloes," said one of the officers, and the remark got to the ears of Captain Conrad, and set him to thinking.

After that Captain Conrad had the approval of the War Department to start the farm. August Belmont made Uncle Sam a present of his six best stallions. Those stallions are known the racing world over, as Henry of Navarre, Octagon, Footprint, Belfry II, Vestibule and Marshall King. The six of them, when but two years old, cost $100,000.

Two More Horses Given.

James Camden, millionaire horseman of Versailles, Ky., heard of Belmont's gift and made Uncle Sam a present of his two famous stallions, Boola Boola and Wheelwright, worth about $25,000. Thus the farm was started.

But even with fifty stallions and mares by the hundred breeding on the farm was too slow. Something had to be done to increase the scope of the work—and the answer was found in a scheme to have Uncle Sam take every farmer in the South into partnership. This was done.

The ultimate plan is to sell the horses at a gigantic auction sale, with an army officer as auctioneer, knocking down the animals to the highest bidder.

Uncle Sam's horse farm is probably the only place in the country where no matter what animal you buy you may rest assured of getting a horse that is perfect. If the animal has the slightest blemish it will not be sold.

"Of course," said Captain Conrad, "we know that in this particular case the scar was due entirely to accident. But the farmer doesn't know it. He might have a mare scarred up purely by accident, but we wouldn't take his word for. We demand perfect mares and colts, so we give perfect stallions."

One Word to Decide Estate Ownership

Will Filed for Probate Causes Legal Discussion of Meaning of "And" and "Or."

WOODBURY, N. J., June 25.—The will of the late Aaron Knisell, of Sewell, was offered for probate in the Surrogate's office. This instrument has raised a contention among the heirs. The will left the entire estate to Mrs. Knisell, who died two weeks before her husband, and it is claimed that its provisions lapsed with her death.

The property was left to Mrs. Knisell "and her heirs." Had it read "or" heirs, it is claimed, the estate would go to her heirs; but, as it says "and" heirs, Knisell's brothers claim the estate. A ruling by the court will be necessary to interpret the instrument.

Evelyn Thaw Tells Her Ambition Will Try Something Worth While Reveals Her Plans to Alan Dale

Evelyn Thaw in the days she took New York by storm.

Evelyn Thaw as she is to-day.

As Miss Nesbit, Now Dancing at the Hippodrome, and Booked for Paris and Vienna.

By ALAN DALE.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—It was "Hullo, Rag-Time," at the Hippodrome that brought Evelyn Thaw within my jurisdiction, as it has brought many others who I never expected to meet.

So, with the open sesame of elusive art as a go-between, "Miss Nesbit," as she is programed here, received me without hesitancy in her rooms at the St. James Hotel, off Piccadilly, and our art robbed me of qualms. It was quite early morning.

Evelyn Thaw wore a loose peignoire of a black, shiny something, slashed at the back with yellow. Her hair was loosely fluffed out; she was devoid of the slightest effort at make-up, her ivory-white face and her unreddened lips looking quite startlingly natural. She was as pretty as any picture of—herself, and though the edge of reluctant youth may have frayed a little, there isn't a shadow of a doubt on the score of Evelyn Nesbit's charm. Never in all the ladies I have professionally met have I found more self-possession, a keener poise and less self-consciousness than in Evelyn Thaw. She made me wonder. She spoke easily, gracefully, reassuringly, without a trace of hesitation or nervousness.

On the Spur of the Moment.

"It was awfully sudden," she said, as we sat opposite each other. "I had no idea of going back to the stage after all these years."

"How many?" I asked. "You need not answer."

"Oh, I'm not like that," she said, with the first wistful smile; "I don't mind recalling anything. The last previous time I appeared on the stage was in 1904 in 'The Wild Rose.'

"Well, on the Olympic, coming over, I met a lot of theatrical people, among them Lee Shubert, Martin Beck and Albert DeCourville. They all advised me to make the break, especially DeCourville, who is manager of the Hippodrome.

"He has just married Shirley Kellogg, by the bye. I thought it over carefully, for I was a bit afraid, you know." She seemed to take it for granted that I knew. I did; I quite understood. "If I had made the break in New York I should have been a 'freak,'" she said. "Oh, there have been other women who have been through trials like mine who first tried New York, and it was hopeless. So when DeCourville telegraphed me at Paris to come at once to London and appear I realized that it was up to me, and I went, afraid, of course, but you know I'm no novice at harrowing experiences."

A Wild Turkey Trot.

"I was determined that nothing should force any attention from me to that sort of thing." She was now an artist before the public, and I was—me.

"I had to do a wild turkey trot with a dancer, and he was hard to find. I had seen Jack Clifford at the Cafe De Paris, and I remembered that he used to dance with Irene Weston, so we engaged him and rehearsed for one week only at the Irish Club, opposite the Hippodrome. Oh! it was terrible work. He throws me around—I am tossed up in the air and I see my heels at an angle I never expected to view them. And I'm an old married woman, with stiff joints."

Evelyn Nesbit laughed. So did I. She was as simple and unaffected as the inevitable school girl. It was impossible not to like her. She amused me a lot.

"They sneaked us on at a Saturday matinee without announcement," she said, "and luck favored me. The turn went well, and we are a hit.

"I'm engaged for six weeks, with an option, and then I go to Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Copenhagen——"

"And New York?" I asked.

"New York, surely," she replied, smiling, "when I feel that I've put it over, but not until then. Oh, I do want to earn my own living, and the stage is good, and I don't mind hard work. In the old days, when I had nothing on my mind but my hair, I used to shirk rehearsals. Now, I'm Johnny-on-the-spot. I don't mind how much we rehearse. In fact, I rehearse every day. I've always loved dancing, and have studied all the successful dancers. If only I don't get fat like Ethel Barrymore and others."

She Won't Get Fat.

"You couldn't," I opined, for she didn't look the part.

"I won't," she retorted; "it would be a great pity, and I have another ambition that I'll tell you, for it may surprise you. Do you remember what Jerome said about me?"

Again I refused to remember anything.

"Well, he said that there were four great actresses—Sarah Bernhardt, Eleanora Duse, Mrs. Fiske and myself. I don't forget that. Some day I may try to act—to do something worth while, something serious, something emotional. So there you are! You will laugh, because I know you are funny.

"Theatrical people take themselves very seriously, and they can't understand why you don't do the same, but you don't—you can be as funny as you like about me. I sha'n't mind a bit, for I really have a sense of humor, and I'm not very serious." She laughed again, and I was quite disarmed. Evelyn Nesbit had impressed me as I didn't believe I was going to be impressed.

"All I do in London," she said, "is to work and eat good food. I love the food in London. Do go to the Cheshire Cheese and taste the chops. I was there yesterday, and I sat in Dr. Johnson's chair and enjoyed myself hugely. I'm going to get on, and I'm going to surprise everybody. One must have a beginning. Look at Elsie Ferguson. She was the stupidest chorus girl I ever met, but she had big moments, and now she is a very charming actress. Don't forget to write something funny about me, for I shall enjoy it."

But, somehow or other, Evelyn Nesbit hadn't appealed to my sense of humor. She was, at least, spontaneous and natural.

BOY, NOT YET 8, TO ENTER HIGH SCHOOL IN FALL

New Mexican Prodigy Received All His Training From Mother. Wonderful Memory.

ROSWELL, N. MEX., June 28.—When the public schools open next fall there will be a new student in the high school department, a boy who has never been to school a single day and who will not at that time have reached his eighth birthday.

This is the boy who, at the age of eighteen months, startled the city of Denver by repeating the names of the Presidents of the United States, and who at the age of five recited several pages from Hiawatha in a school entertainment in Artesia, N. Mex. His name is Raymond Ray. He is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Ray, of Roswell.

The mother of this boy, who has been his only tutor since the very earliest day that he could learn, attributes to him none of the characteristics of a prodigy or perhaps of a genius. He has been taught to think, to concentrate his mind, and this training has enabled him to develop a remarkable memory.

He seldom reads an interesting topic more than once in order to commit it to memory, and he studies physiology, arithmetic, grammar, civil government and literature with little aid from his mother. When he enters high school he will take up the study of Latin, algebra, rhetoric, physical geography and ancient history.

Raymond is now studying Spanish, elocution and vocal music. He has some excellent talent in music, and sings with real melody, spirit and understanding.

WHY 200,000 PEOPLE NOW BATHE INTERNALLY

When you are ill, the first step your Physician takes is to clean out the Large Intestine.

He does this because the chances are ten to one that if you had no accumulated waste in the Large Intestine you would not have been ill at all.

The new process of Internal Bathing by means of the "J. B. L. Cascade" thoroughly cleanses the Lower Intestine, removes all waste and poisonous matter, and keeps it as pure as Nature demands it to be for perfect health.

It is Nature's own way of curing Constipation—simply warm water properly applied.

Enlightened physicians everywhere are using and prescribing it—

And instead of waiting to be ill, over 200,000 delighted Americans are warding off disease and increasing their efficiency and energy by its use.

Until recently the "J. B. L. Cascade" has been obtainable only by sending to its inventor, Charles A. Tyrrell, M. D., of New York City.

The demand for it now, however, has become universal, through the recommendations of those who are using it. Call at our main store and we will be glad to show you the "J. B. L. Cascade" and explain it in detail.

We are also distributing a very interesting booklet on internal bathing, called "Why Man of To-day Is Only 50 Per Cent Efficient," which can be obtained on request, without cost. Ask us for it to-day and inform yourself about this safe and sane method of curing constipation without drugs.

Wife Refuses to Stop Husband and Daughter's Eloping

Declares to Humane Society That She Tolerated Act to Preserve Happiness of Her Child.

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Telling a most unusual story, filled with peculiar complications, in which she accuses her husband of eloping with and marrying his own stepdaughter and then stealing her two children in order to secure property belonging to her, Mrs. Ruella Nicholson has appealed to the police, the humane society and the county officers to help her in locating her husband, Edward Nicholson, and thus get back her children.

How she learned of the fact that her daughter had married her own stepfather, and did not interfere with the marriage because she wanted her child to be happy was a part of the strange story alleged by the woman.

Tired, hungry and practically penniless, the elderly woman appealed to the humane society.

Society Women Sound Knell for Mourning

Boston Leaders Declare That Custom of Donning Black for Dead Is Relic of Barbarism.

BOSTON, June 28.—Society women of Boston have answered the question, "How long should society women wear mourning for their dead relatives?" by saying in substance that mourning should not be worn. It was the consensus of opinion that it is a survival of barbarian days.

Mrs. Charles P. Putnam, wife of Dr. Putnam, said, "It seems to me that there is altogether too much mourning worn considering our present enlightened state of civilization. The world is dark enough as it is without women wearing crepe to make it any more gloomy.

Women Taught to Save Million a Year

Kansas Garbage Cans Are Cheated of Immense Amount by Domestic Science Instruction at School.

TOPEKA, KAN., June 28.—Kansas cheated the garbage cans of the State out of $1,000,000 last year, and the amount will be increased at the rate of $500,000 a year until there will be virtually no wasted foods in the entire State.

That is the aim of the Kansas Agricultural College, and the State is spending $40,000 a year to help.

Seven hundred girls completed the domestic science courses at the agricultural college this week, and the college has just closed its movable cooking schools, which were attended by 11,000 women in the ten weeks in which they were operated.

PET CANARY OF PRETTY WOMAN HALTS VESSEL

Captain of Liner Agrees to Delay Voyage Until She Can Send Home for Bird.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Mrs. Green is young and very charming. That is why the officers of the Vestris, of the Lamport and Holt line, gave her their fullest attention when she announced in plaintive but positive tones that she had lost her Rickey.

"I forgot to bring Rickey," she exclaimed.

"Who's Rickey?" demanded the second officer.

"Rickey's our pet canary," she said, "and I am taking him to South America to my husband. I mean I was to have taken him, but I left him at home."

Brought Food, Forgot Bird.

"It's too late now to get him," said the officer, "for we leave in thirty minutes."

"But I wouldn't dare go without him. I've brought the seed and the cuttlefish and everything, but I forgot the bird."

"Where do you live?" asked the officer.

"Mrs. G. F. Green, 59 West Fifty-third Street," was the reply, and the officer solicited the assistance of H. S. Damage, the line's passenger agent. After consultation with the Vestris captain it was agreed to hold the vessel until ten minutes after five o'clock—ten minutes later than her schedule called for—and Mr. Damage and Mrs. Green sought a telephone.

Bird's Owner In Hysterics.

To an agent of a taxicab company the young woman explained that she wanted to go to the Fifty-third Street number and get a canary bird.

But no canary bird bearing taxicab arrived at the pier by ten minutes after five o'clock, and Mrs. Queen was in a state of hysteria as she watched the sailors haul off the gang plank.

Just as the Vestris was swinging at the end of the pier and before the last spring line was cast off the taxicab arrived. With the bewildered canary in its cage one of Mrs. Green's friends ran to the end of the pier and fastened the cage to a piece of rope. Then, very slowly and with due reverence—for Mrs. Green's brimming eyes were upon him—a sailor hauled the line with the cage attached over the side.

Woman Loves Mouse; Eats Meals With Him

Pet Comes Daily to Dine With Hotel Employees, and Girl Feeds Him From Hand.

CINCINNATI, June 28.—It is an old saying that all women are afraid of mice, but one has at last been found who is not afraid, and even says she likes them.

She is Miss Ella Eversfield, an operator at the Grand Hotel, who takes her meals with her favorite mouse every day. The employees of the hotel have a private dining room, and some time ago a mouse was discovered there. At the time Miss Eversfield had not learned to love mice and she probably screamed, but the mouse was game and stuck it out, and, having learned the meal hours, he insisted on putting in his appearance every day, until finally the employees learned to consider him as one of their number, and now he eats his meals from the hand of Miss Eversfield.

Hibbs, of Bristol, to-day started suit against the Trenton and Mercer County Traction Company for $10,000. Mrs. Hibbs was injured in Trenton when she attempted to cross a street in front of a car.

NEW ANSLEY HOTEL GIVES MOST MODERN HOSTELRY OF SOUTH TO ATLANTA

No Detail Has Been Spared to Make It Unsurpassed for the Traveling Public and People of City—Formal Opening Monday.

Machinery and Equipment Latest Devices for Aid of Sanitation and Comfort—Mural Decorations Picture Events of Georgia.

Only to those who "put up" after Monday at the Hotel Ansley will it be given in fullest measure to say, with Shenstone, that they have "found life's warmest welcome at an inn."

At least, the builder and the lessee and the press agent have endeavored to make it even so, and the very few favored persons permitted to inspect the building and its appointments in advance of the opening agree they planned wisely and builded well.

When the Ansley, Atlanta's newest hostelry, opens its doors to guests on Monday, it will be unexcelled among the inns of the country for efficiency, service, accommodations, equipment and modernity of its appointments. No detail was overlooked in the planning; no expense was spared in the building.

Banquet Hall Seats 500.

With its banquet room seating 500, its rathskeller accommodating 300 and its hundreds of rooms supplied with fresh filtered air continuously; with its costly historical mural decorations, each a work of art, the sumptuous furnishings of its rooms and suites and its perfect service system, the Ansley will be without a superior for business, conveniences and safety.

As "Marse" Henry Watterson expressed it, at no place "on the Rambla and in the Ring, in Piccadilly and the Corso, beneath the colonnades of the Rue de Rivoli of Paris and 'Unter den Linden' of Berlin—indeed, all the way between Chicago and Cannebiere, including many nooks and corners of little old New York," can the man or woman with a trunk and a handbag live higher, sleep safer and spend less than at the Hotel Ansley.

Two well-known quotations imprinted on the tapestry will greet the eye of all who pass the portals of the Hotel Ansley. The first one is the hotel man's favorite verse, from Shenstone, as follows:

Whoe'er has traveled life's dull round,
Where'er his stages may have been,
May sigh to think he still has found
Life's warmest welcome at an inn.

The next is a Scriptural quotation, taken from Hebrews, and the Ansley management promises to apply the precept and the compliment to every guest alike. Here it is:

"Forget not to show love unto strangers, for thereby some have entertained angels unawares."

Indicate Spirit of Hotel.

These two familiar quotations are printed across the underbeam of the winding marble stairways in the Ansley foyer. They are intended to indicate the spirit in which guests should apply and expect to be received.

Appearance of the lobby is enhanced by three historical paintings on tapestry, each 12 by 10 feet, situated on the upper mezzanine floor and facing the Forsyth Street entrance. The paintings recall important historical happenings in Georgia.

The first panel depicts the meeting of General Oglethorpe and Tomochichi at Savannah, May 21, 1733. The next represents John Wesley teaching the Indians under the oaks of St. Simons, and the third shows the burning of the Yazoo fraud papers at the state house in Louisville, Jefferson County, in the year 1796.

The papers were ignited by means of a magnifying glass and the sun's rays, showing that the fire which destroyed such an infamy should come from Heaven.

On the ground floor are a dozen or more other paintings of historical interest.

Dining Room Is Italian.

The dining room of the Ansley is known as the Italian room, on account of its architecture and mural paintings. The latter consist of the Vatican gardens, showing the cupola of St. Peter's in the distance; the garden of Villa Borghese in Florence, the garden of Villa Lante, the Hercules fountain in the garden of Villa Reale of Florence, and a view of Venice canals, all of which are painted on canvases, each 12 by 10 feet.

The rathskeller, one of the largest and most luxurious in the South, is reminiful of college life. Its walls are decorated with portraits of the seals of the leading Georgia colleges, interlaced with varicolored bands waving over a golden background.

The waiting room is trimmed and wainscoted with Georgia sycamore. A distinctive feature of this room, indeed, of the hotel is a full size true-to-life portrait of Lieutenant General William Tecumseh Sherman, beneath which is the following inscription:

"Under whose orders Atlanta was burned, and who said war is hell."

Old Photographs Reproduced.

Actual 1865 photographs are reproduced, showing Atlanta before and after the famous conflagration. On other panels of the writing room are the Great Seals of Atlanta and the State of Georgia. Those who have seen this room are unstinted in their praise of its historical interest and value.

The Ansley equipment for cleaning silverware and dishes is unexcelled. The silverware will be cleaned by chemically generated electricity, made by water, soda and salt.

Dishes will be cleansed and sterilized by powerful streams of hot water thrown against them while incased in a metal washing machine.

The kitchen of the Ansley is replete with modern machinery and other implements for prompt and efficient service. Its appointments are products of as great attention to detail as was given the office, the rathskeller or any other part of the hostelry.

Five Lang ranges form a battery, kept at even temperature by a single furnace. The bake ovens are built on the skyscraper plan—four stories high—thus utilizing space and insuring uniform results. The meat department is equipped with a slicing machine, insuring uniform-sized slices without rough edges.

Has Own Ice Plant.

The Ansley has the best equipped ice and refrigerating plant in Atlanta. It is a duplicate affair with a capacity of fourteen tons a day. The cold storage room could accommodate a carload of meat.

From a service bar in the basement all orders will be filled for the rathskeller, private dining rooms and guests' apartments, thus keeping the waiters out of the main buffet, which opens on Forsyth Street.

Distinctively a unique feature for any hotel is the sanitary bathing subbasement for the hotel's servants. Each compartment is equipped with lockers, and all waiters, cooks, bellboys, porters, etc., will be required to take a shower bath before starting each day's work.

Not the least attraction of the Ansley is its contemplated scale of charges. Rooms with running water and private toilet will cost $1 a day, rooms with connecting bath $1.50, with private bath $2, $2.50 and $3. Club breakfasts will be served for 25 cents and up, lunch for 50 cents from 12 till 2 o'clock, and 6 to 8 o'clock dinner for $1.

Indian Girl Writes Opera on Sioux Life

Zitkala Sa Composed "The Sun Dance"—Gave It on Reservation.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28.—On the Uintah reservation at Vernal, Utah, nearly 100 miles from a railroad, an Indian girl has written an opera, with her people as the theme and motif. It is one thing to write an opera and another to have it produced. Zitkala Sa, a full-blooded Sioux, has accomplished both these things.

When "The Sun Dance" was sung in Vernal, Indians and whites drove in from 40 miles around to hear it; and, having heard it, they pronounced it a triumph. Efforts are being made to have the opera sung in Salt Lake City during the week of the National Education Association, July 5 to 11.

"The Sun Dance," as it was produced at Vernal in March, was not altogether the work of Kitkala Sa and her copper-hued brethren of the Uintah reservation. Professor William F. Hansen, of the faculty, and white as well as Indian students of Uintah Academy played important roles in the preparation and singing of the piece. It was, in fact, part of the academy work.

12,000 Drinks in Five Years Basis of Suit

Wife Declares Husband Protected Himself With Walking Stick in Driving Rain Storm.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Twelve thousand drinks, ranging from simple mixed potations to fancy concoctions, is the record which Mrs. John Barry Sears posts up against her husband in five years of married life.

Mrs. Sears, who is suing for divorce, said Mr. Sears started his career of conviviality during his honeymoon and has kept it up.

In one instance, according to Mrs. Sears, her husband had come home in a driving rain.

"He carried his walking stick elevated above his head," she testified, "and held his umbrella closed in his hand. He was soaking wet, but did not know it."

Youth Likes Books On Heavy Subjects

Oregon Freshman Reads of Social Science, Philosophy and Religion.

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, EUGENE, June 28.—Max H. Sommer, a freshman in the University of Oregon, registered from Portland, has a record for assiduous reading during the past collegiate year. According to the report of Librarian Douglass, Sommer's card shows that he has taken out 89 volumes, the majority of which would be classed as "heavy reading."

Of the 89 volumes perused by this freshman, 47 are devoted to social science, 28 are classed as pure literature, 5 are works of history and biography, 5 are of a philosophical and religious nature and 4 deal with journalism.

Oregon Governor Opposed to Autos

Declares State Appropriation Would Have Made Him Travel Like 'Piker.'

SALEM, OREG., June 28.—Despite rumors to the effect that he would be a candidate for re-election, Governor West positively announces that he will not be a candidate.

The Governor said that the financial drain on him was large, particularly his traveling expenses. The State now provides $1,000 for the traveling expenses of the Governor when on the State's business, but until two years ago only $500 a year was provided. The Governor declared that he could not live like a "piker" when away from home, and the expenses of many of his trips were paid by himself.

Governor West said that he had never bought an automobile because he did not want one, wouldn't have one if somebody would make him a present of it, couldn't operate it if he had it, and, above all, could not afford a machine.

DANCING MASTERS DECLARE TURKEY TROT IS IMMORAL

ASBURY PARK, June 28.—The "turkey trot" is an immoral dance in the opinion of members of the American National Association, masters of dancing, in session here, and at today's meeting the delegates were urged to co-operate with local authorities in banishing the figure that is fast becoming the rage.

The "tango" was not treated so severely. If properly taught, the masters believe, it may be danced.

Woman Makes Eight Trips Around Globe

Champion Female World Girdler Finishes 8 Years' Journey With 381,000 Miles Covered.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Miss Jessie Ackerman, the woman champion globe-trotter, arrived here to-day from an eight years' tour around the world, her eighth globe-girdling trip in twenty years. She has broken the woman's record, with 381,000 miles to her credit.

On this trip she visited fifty-two countries and experienced every kind of ancient and modern travel.

Miss Ackerman said the happiest and most professional women are in Australia.

Health Board Posts Weekly Bath Order

Canton, Ohio, Folks Must Get in Tub at Least Once a Week Authorities Declare.

CANTON, O., June 28.—Canton folks must bathe at least once a week, and "all over," at that. The board of health has said so.

In order that none can misunderstand, the board has arranged to post in every home where soap and water are believed to be at a premium a set of rules printed in five languages and specifying $25 and costs as punishment of any one who neglects the weekly cleanup.

DIVA BELIEVES BABIES BEST, FARM LIFE NEXT

Schumann-Heink, Who Has Just Passed Her Fifty-second Birthday, Purchases Big Tract.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., June 28.—"Yes, now I am a farmer; also I am a mother, and I have just had my fifty-second birthday."

It was Mme. Schumann-Heink who spoke. Wreathed in smiles and radiating health—the great artist, accompanied by her youngest child and most beautiful daughter, descended from an incoming train to begin a six-month vacation here.

She had just completed her longest American tour and returns with the greatest profits made by any artist in concert this season.

Last year Mme. Schumann-Heink bought 3,000 acres here. She plans to make ranches with gardens, barren wastes into orchards and her rancho the garden spot of America.

"Farming," enthused Madame, "next to the rearing of babies, is the most interesting work in the world."

"But the farming, madame, surely you will not hoe?"

"Look at these two hands. I ask you, do they not appear capable? I have raised and worked for my children and they are yet strong—nicht?" Madame held her pink palms upward. One of the most convincing proofs of what she said was their appearance. The fingers are long and slender and young and strong enough to be envied by any woman half the diva's age.

And this can also be said truthfully of her face and form. Mme. Schumann's flamed with health.

"Yes, I shall be getting out and digging like a regular farmer. Oh, that is nothing to dig," she stated. "Once I made a garden at my New York home.

"Ach, yes, it is good to grow fruit, but it is better to be the mother of babies."

Babies Saved From Bolt by Feather Bed

Children Are Found Unhurt in Mattress After Room Is Wrecked by Lightning.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A feather mattress saved two children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson on the Peter Cortelyou farm, at Franklin Park, near New Brunswick, N. J., when a bolt of lightning struck their bed. The parents were awakened by a tremendous crash and a shriek from the children in an adjoining room. A flash of lightning just as they reached the room revealed a big hole in the roof and one in the floor.

The father obtained a lamp and found the bedstead shattered to pieces. Securely rolled up in the feather mattress, however, were the two little ones, almost suffocated with heat but unhurt.

SWEETPEAS IMPORTED BY AUSTRIAN EMPEROR

Special Cable to The American.

VIENNA, June 28.—Sweetpeas, which were practically unknown in Austria only a few years ago, are now prominent in the Imperial Gardens at Schonbrunn.

The aged Emperor Francis Joseph is the first in Austria to "take up" the sweetpea. The director of the Imperial Gardens was sent to London and brought specimen plants back with him. Now the tables at the castle at Schonbrunn are decorated with sweetpeas in one color or at most two. The Emperor prefers pink and white to other combinations.

Chief's Gold Badge Found to be Nickel

New Head of Police Department Finds That Predecessors Had Worn Base Metal Insignia.

PASADENA, June 28.—"Silver Threads Among the Gold," merrily whistled newly appointed Chief of Police W. S. McIntire as he scraped off the gold from the badge that was turned over to him by his predecessor, W. F. Wood, who resigned from the office.

When Wood resigned he presented his successor with the badge containing the words, "Chief of Police, Pasadena." On making a close inspection of the badge, which had long borne a reputation of being solid gold, the new chief observed that it was somewhat tarnished.

A cleanser was then applied, with the result that the badge in a few minutes was a shining nickel-plated star and greatly similar to the other badges worn by the balance of the police department.

Free Market Starts To Cut Cost of Living

San Jose, Cal., Plans To Do Away With Profit Made by Middle Man.

SAN POSE, CAL., June 28.—San Jose hit the high cost of living a solar plexus blow to-day when, under the direction of the city administration, a free market was opened in South Market Street at the City Hall Park.

A score of produce wagons came for the opening, and long before the selling day was over every scrap of salable goods had been disposed of and a crowd clamored for a chance to purchase.

Market Master Joseph Napoli declares that the first day's business demonstrated that producers received 25 per cent more for their sales than they could get from the middle man and that buyers saved a minimum of 25 per cent by doing business directly with the producers.

CONVICTS DINE IN HOTEL THEN SEE MOVING PICTURE

COLUMBUS, O., June 28.—Five penitentiary prisoners, serving sentences ranging from manslaughter to pocket picking, were taken from their cells by an official of the State Board of Administration and treated to a banquet at one of the large hotels. Following the banquet the prisoners were taken to moving picture shows and given an entertainment which they will long remember.

PREACHER DIVORCES HIS WIFE.

OMAHA, NEBR., June 28.—The Rev. F. P. Jolly, formerly of Joliet, Ill., was granted a divorce from his wife, the grounds being extreme cruelty. Mrs. Jolly is now living in Joliet.

JAP EMIGRANTS NOW COLONIZING BRAZILIAN LANDS

1,500 Arrivals But Vanguard of Orientals to Be Sent to South America.

SEATTLE, WASH., June 28.—How Japan is colonizing Brazil was given in detail here with the arrival of the Japanese steamship Sanuki Maru.

Fifteen hundred Japanese emigrants were landed at Santos, Brazil, May 15. They are the vanguard of a great population to be sent to South America to become a part of the first permanent Japanese colony in Brazil under the Sao Paulo colonization agreement recently entered into between Japan and Brazil.

The first award of territory comprises approximately 150,000 acres of agricultural land.

Another Japanese Brazilian colonization enterprise has been completed and passengers of the Sanuki say that the two Governments have arranged for the concession of a considerable area of fertile country which will be settled by Japanese. Settlers for this colony will leave Japan about the end of the present year.

Japanese contract labor is now being sent into South Africa and both Brazil and Peru are being supplied with coolies, who leave Japan under contract with various South American industrial organizations.

CONTESTANTS WORKING HARD FOR MORE VOTES

Manager of Pony Race Advises Girls and Boys to Use Follow-Up System.

SYSTEMATIC WORK WINS

Shetlands Are Growing Fat and Strong at Loomis Avenue Stable Where They Are Kept.

The last week of the "clubs of five" bonus offer in The Georgian and American pony contest begins with all contestants straining hard to take advantage of the benefit to be gained by getting subscriptions before the time limit is up.

Standings published in The American show great gains, but they are small compared with the leaps forward which will be shown when the bonus votes are reckoned up for publication in next Wednesday's Georgian. The contest manager believes it will take the office force all of the night of July 5 to make the proper entries.

There also is a bonus of 50,000 votes for the first $30 turned in for subscriptions by any of the contestants. This offer may be withdrawn at any time.

Use Follow-Up System.

The contest manager wishes to repeat his suggestion that contestants take a leaf from the books of the successful business man and institute a "follow-up" system. A list of those whose subscriptions expire soon should be made, and all such subscribers visited with a request for a renewal. Nine times out of ten, a renewal is easier to get than the first subscription, for at the end of a short trial the subscriber generally gets to like The Georgian and American so well that he wants to continue.

It is systematic work of this sort which counts for more than the spurts of a day or two, which, while they may yield remarkable results, are not frequent enough to build up totals to the point where the contestant can feel sure of a pony.

None Sure of Winning.

No contestant has a right to feel sure of winning as yet. There is not a boy or girl in the race who can not be passed by an energetic rival, and some who are leading now have a very poor start, indeed.

Meanwhile, the ponies are "eating their heads off" at 55 Loomis Avenue, where their future owners are invited to call and see them. All are rounding into great shape, and they are prettier every day. It is going to be a hard task for the winners to pick the ponies they like best from the splendid bunch The Georgian and American have bought.

"I subscribed to The Georgian and American a week ago, and the paper has not begun to come to my home yet," is a complaint heard every now and then.

Usually it develops that the subscriber gave his money to one of the contestants, and that the contestant is "holding back."

This is poor policy, particularly if it is a short-term subscription, for when a contestant treats a subscriber in this way the man is not going to be as willing to give the contestant his renewal.

"Don't hold back," is the advice of the contest manager—and he knows best.

BONUS OFFER IN PONY CONTEST GIVES 1 WEEK MORE OF OPPORTUNITY

Wanting to win and working to win differ widely. Working to win is what counts, and working to win now, while the special bonus vote offers are in effect in The Georgian and American pony contest.

July 4 means more than cannon crackers, picnics and general celebrations to the pony contestants. It means, to them, the end of one of the bonus offers, and July 4 is little more than a week away.

Clubs of five subscriptions, yearly, half-yearly, or for three months, bring great rewards until the expiration of the period thus limited. And "when the polls close" for these club bonus votes the office force of the contest manager expects an all-night session reckoning up the strength of the many candidates.

Some have brought in five subscriptions at a time to take advantage of the bonus. Others have brought them in one, two or three at a time. In either case, the clubs will be credited accurately. And overnight the standings will seem to have doubled, though the bonus votes represent weeks of work.

The ponies now are at 55 Loomis Avenue, where contestants are welcome. If they arrive at the right time they will see the ponies being exercised.

Fortune in Gold Awaits Claimants

Insane Kansas Woman Leaves Bag of Nuggets and Dust Worth $10,000.

HUTCHINSON, KANS., June 28.—A bag of gold nuggets and gold dust worth $10,000 awaits any heirs who may be found to the estate of Mrs. Ann M. Bernhart, who died recently in Davenport, Iowa, according to the announcement of G. M. Duckworth, administrator.

Several years ago Mrs. Bernhart was adjudged of unsound mind. Duckworth was named her guardian. The cottage here where she lived alone was closed and she went to an asylum. Upon her death Duckworth thoroughly searched her cottage. The nuggets and dust in small bags were found secreted in the dwelling.

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MANUFACTURES DINNER PLANNED FOR EVE OF 4TH

New Ansley Hotel Will Serve Atlanta Factory Owners to the Number of 200.

HOME EXHIBIT PLANS TOPIC

Brooks Morgan Has Definite Proposals for Acceptance or Rejection—Pledges Desired.

Atlanta manufacturers, to the probable number of 200, will gather on the evening of July 3 at the Ansley Hotel for a dinner.

The object of the dinner is to discuss the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods, and at the same time, to discuss the advisability of holding the annual temporary exhibit, such as was held last year at the time of the Southern Merchants' Convention.

The dinner had been set for June 24, but the unavoidable absence from the city of Brooks Morgan necessitated a postponement.

The new date was set at an informal conference of Mr. Morgan, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter G. Cooper held Wednesday.

Invitations to the big "Manufacturers' Dinner" will be sent out at once, and a general response is expected.

At the dinner, Mr. Morgan will lay before the manufacturers definite proposals for lease or purchase of buildings suitable for the installation of a manufacturers' exhibit. It will, in brief, be a "show down." The permanent exhibit project has been gone over thoroughly. The manufacturers have seen Chattanooga's display, and they have learned in detail of New Haven's success. There has been plenty of time for them to make up their minds. At this dinner they are expected to signify what they intend doing.

If, as is expected, the will of the manufacturers is seen unanimously in favor of the exhibit, a start will be made. But the backers of the project do not wish to start unless they have assurance of 200 exhibitors and 40,000 or 50,000 feet of floor space.

Strenuous Work Done Preparing for Convention.

When the four or five thousand merchants from all over the South gather in Atlanta for their convention, during the first two weeks of August, it is doubtful if any of them will be able to realize the care and effort that has been expended to make their meeting a success.

For instance, one energetic committee has been toiling throughout the hot week in an effort to raise funds for the entertainment of the visitors. As a result of their conscientious endeavor, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association sees its way clear, as to finances, to play host to the gathering.

Another committee has been hard at work preparing the program. The program is to be an elaborate affair. Three or four topics a day will be discussed, and most of the discussion will be in the shape of five-minute addresses. The traveling men are doing yeoman's work in finding the good speakers scattered throughout the territory, men who have opinions worth hearing and experience likely to be helpful to other merchants in their lines.

Moving Big Concern Takes Almost Week

Dougherty-Little-Redwine Co. Get to Temporary Quarters by Dint of Hard Work.

Almost a week has been required for moving the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company from its old home in North Pryor Street to temporary quarters at 30-32 South Pryor Street.

It is estimated that about forty boxcar loads of goods were moved, the stock being valued at $150,000.

"That amount of silks would not make much of a showing, but when it comes to underwear, it is a different story," remarked J. Little.

Jordan Thinks Europe's Land Banks Ideal for South

Cheap Loans on Farm Lands Spell Financial Independence for Cotton Grower, He Says.

Special Cable to The American.

By COLONEL HARVIE JORDAN.

(Member of the American Farm Credits Commission and President of the Southern Cotton Association)

OLDENBERG, GERMANY, June 28.—The capitalization of Southern cotton growers through the mortgage bank system, giving them mortgage loans at low interest with easy payments, would completely reorganize the cotton-growing industry of the South. I am convinced that the land mortgage business in America can be systematized along the lines of similar mortgage systems in Europe.

If this is done it will bring a new era of prosperity to the South and greatly increase the cash returns from cotton, which now represent practically the entire balance of trade of the United States.

Southern cotton growers to-day are just one year behind financially. They have been behind since the Civil War.

The curse of the cotton farmers is the store lien system, under which they are obliged each spring to purchase their supplies on credit from the supply merchants. Frequently farmers pay 50 per cent or more in excess of the cash price of goods for the privilege of this credit. Moreover, the supply merchants secure absolute control over the farmers.

Marketing Is Hurried.

The cotton crop has to be marketed as soon as harvested. Farmers have practically no control over the marketing. This is because they have no financial independence. The American commission has studied the mortgage systems which place European farmers in far stronger positions as borrowers than our own farmers. In America we still are clinging to the antiquated practice of forcing short-time loans on the agriculturist.

European farmers borrow through an intermediary society and enjoy as strong positions as any railroad or municipality. If our Southern farmers mortgage their land they must pay back the entire principal in lump sum in a few years, else pay a costly commission for renewal. So long as this is true naturally the farmers won't mortgage their land until actually pressed to the wall.

In contrast to this European farmers repay their loans in small annual installments. So long as they meet their interest payments they can never be sold out. Their entire payments for both interest and principal amount to less than our farmers frequently are required to pay for interest alone.

Cash Basis Possible.

If Southern farmers can get a device to act as their agent in borrowing and can capitalize their land holdings on terms that will permit them to repay little by little, we can put the cotton-growing industry of the South on a cash basis. This would enable our farmers to buy on a cash basis and secure financial independence. It would break the power of the supply merchants. It would be the surest way to a New South. A New South would mean prosperity to the nation.

There is no theory in this proposition. I have studied these mortgage systems here. They are straight business enterprises that we Americans can adopt, perhaps improve upon. The Legislature of every State in the Union should take this matter under consideration.

When currency reform is enacted in the United States this should form part of the program. Farmers never up to this time had any consideration whatsoever given their requirements as borrowers. In currency or banking legislation they have been left to get along as well as they could. This has been largely responsible for the financial positions of the Southern farmers to-day.

Men's Hats For Next Fall Pert Affairs, Blue and Green

Fall, 1913, hats for men are being shown by jobbers in Atlanta.

Take them big and large, they deserve the name the women give their headgear—they are "creations."

One "creation," for instance, is green velour, with a little bow at the back, and a button-hole stitched edge.

Brown-Perryman-Greene Company say velours, particularly in blue and green, are "the thing" for fall. Velours retail from $3.50 to $7.50.

The "Trooper" shape is proper. To make a "Trooper" shape, punch out a crown, then strike it with the edge of the hand, lengthwise. That's all.

Another "creation" particularly fetching is blue, with red, white and blue stitching which runs up and down the crown and around and around the brim. A button is in the geometrical center of the crown.

Perhaps the best of the bunch, to many tastes, is a green felt hat, "Trooper" shape, of course, with "zebra" finish. "Zebra" finish means that it is 'self-striped." Alternate stripes are smooth, the others are unfinished—fuzzy, in a word. The stripes are something less than half an inch wide, and run vertically on the crown. The hat really is not "freaky." It is attractive.

Other soft hats are lined with gay silk, have welt edges, or are otherwise adorned.

Brand-new is a chinchilla hat. Corduroy and cloth of all kinds will be much in vogue this autumn.

Caps promise to continue their unprecedented popularity. They come in all patterns—one, for instance, a "cubist" design in maroon and tan.

For the man who will wear a derby, regardless, it may be news to know that the derby crowns will be a bit higher this fall, the brims about the same. Crowns seem to be working back from the flat effect of a year back to the old-fashioned high crown. They change a bit each year.

Boys—the little fellows—wear telescope shape hats, while you can't give them to their elders.

Of course, this takes no account of the "staples"—the conservative styles which never change.

LUMBER SALES SHOW BUILDING KEEPS UP WELL

Dealers in Supplies Tell of Big Things in Prospect for the Coming Autumn.

Dealers in lumber, brick, cement, plaster and building supplies report that Atlanta is going straight ahead in its expansion.

Unanimously they report good trade. One particularly encouraging feature, according to their expressions, is the steady increase in the number of small residences, homes costing between $3,000 and $4,000, seeming to predominate.

Furthermore, building supplies dealers are unanimous in saying that there are great plans in store for fall. If all rumors are to be believed, property owners are contemplating improvements at almost a "boom" rate as soon as summer is past.

Paint dealers also are cheerful. They report contractors figuring on work far ahead, and also general activity in refurnishing buildings which are not new, but which are being remodeled to meet the city's growing needs.

Expressions from dealers in these lines follow:

V. H. Kriegshaber: "Our observation is that there is a good deal of building contemplated—in the wind, so to speak. When conditions settle down this fall, we look for an excellent trade in building supplies."

Randall Bros.: "Our business is better than it ever has been in lumber and building material. The increase has come from the increase in medium priced houses, residences to cost between $3,000 and $4,000.

"It is hard to tell about the fall, but we look for a good trade. Prices are a little lower. This always is the case in June and July. There will be a reaction in August and September, and quotations will be stronger. This is the history of every year."

Willingham-Tift Lumber Co.: "Business has been quite brisk up to the present time, with particular activity in the erection of small houses. This looks to us like the right time to build, for prices, in our opinion, are at the bottom."

Selple Sons: "Business is fairly good at the present time, and it is picking up rapidly. We look for a very good trade for the rest of the year. The market is steady, still prices are reasonable and it is a good time to build. We notice a revival particularly in the erection of small houses."

Dozier & Gay: "From the number of contractors who are figuring on painting to be done between now and fall, we look for a big business.

"Every indication is that a large number of new homes are to be built, and there are rumors of several large buildings for wholesale houses and small factories.

Trained Men Great Need Of Business World To-day

Germany and other European countries are far ahead of the United States in the matter of commercial education. This point was brought out in a speech before the annual convention of the National Association of Credit Men at Cincinnati.

"The annual losses by reason of failures in the United States amount now to some $200,000,000," said Mr. Gaehr, "or over $2 per capita. To put it concretely, the national annual loss from bad debts equals one-half the estimate cost of the Panama Canal.

"Professor Munsterberg of Harvard University observes that a great difficulty of our educational system has been that it does not teach a man to find himself, and when he learns his strong and his weak points, his real inclinations toward and qualifications for a pursuit in life, it is usually too late.

"We find the highway of commerce and life marked with sad monuments of men crushed under the wheels of progress who would have made a success in life had they had the proper direction and counsel and had they been taught to fashion their thoughts to fruitful issues, men who could and should have been helped to usefulness.

"A further difficulty is that the vocational demands are not sufficiently fixed and brought to the attention of the younger generations. They know comparatively little of the inner labors, the inner values, and inner difficulties of various professions and callings.

"Then, too, in many cases trivial chance influences decide the choice of a vocation. Young men often drop into a place, rather than deliberately choosing business as a life vocation.

"The need of better trained men, especially commercially, made itself felt several years ago, and as a result a number of universities and colleges of high standing organized schools of commerce, Harvard University ranking its School of Business Administration as one of the graduate schools. Several cities have established high schools of commerce, yet the schoolmaster and the business man are still too far apart.

Auto Sales Gaining Over Last Season

Business Gradually Working to Credit Basis—Men Buy Cars as They Buy Homes.

"So far as we are able to judge from the business done by our clients, automobile sales in Atlanta have been exceptionally good for the period which began January 1," says Joseph N. Moody, of the Auto Credit Sales Company.

"The automobile firms whom we represent as a credit clearing house report an increase over last season.

"Sales probably would be larger yet if we did not check them. Amusing as the idea may seem, we are in a sense philanthropists, for we are saving the people from themselves, in this way: Suppose a man with moderate income tries to buy an auto on time. We investigate carefully. If he has a family of girls, let us say, all living at home, and no income but his salary, we turn him down. If he had a family of boys, all working and able to help purchase a car, all well and good.

"The automobile business is working more and more toward a time basis. A man buys his motor car now just as he would buy his home—on payments. I believe the future will see 90 per cent of the business done in that way."

City Salesmen Take Outing; Truce Kept

Jobbers Agree Not to Scout for Business During Absence of Their Representatives.

City salesmen will be conspicuous by their absence this week. The grocer or dry goods merchant who needs to replenish his stock must telephone to his jobber. The jobbers have agreed not to solicit business for the week, but just to take what comes to them in the natural course of events.

The reason for this strange pact is that the jobbers are on their annual outing at the Isle of Palms, near Charleston, S. C.

In order not to take advantage of their absence, fifty or more jobbers signed a formal agreement of neutrality for the week, and O. T. Camp, president of the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association, sent a letter to all members of his organization acquainting them with the state of affairs, and asking that they fill urgent needs only, by using the tele-

SELLING NOTES.

The heavy demand for sport coats this season is helping the dress goods trade over some rough spots. Chinchillas and sponges are used principally in the manufacture of these garments, and makers and wholesalers of these fabrics are doing a good business in them.

The firmness of 39-inch, 80 squares, is one of the features of the print cloth market at the moment. Printers have taken this construction in good quantities, and as a result of curtailed production by the mills the supply has fallen somewhat behind the demand.

A thing that is regarded as a good omen for the future of the men's wear fabrics trade is the promptness with which the manufacturing clothiers are settling up their accounts with the mill agents. In view of losses sustained by the clothiers as a result of the strike earlier in the year this action on their part is said to indicate the thorough soundness of the clothing industry.

RUSSIA SEEKING U. S. FRIENDSHIP IN NEW TREATY

Renewal of Pact Abrogated by Congress Is Proposed by Diplomats of Czar.

JEWISH QUESTION RISES

Washington Is Silent, but Understanding Is That Bryan Is Willing to Renew Negotiations.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Russia has asked the United States Government to take up the question of a renewal of a treaty of amity and commerce. The treaty of 1832 on that subject was abrogated out of hand by the Congress of the United States.

Secretary of State Bryan said today that the question of renewing negotiations had been discussed with the President, but that there was nothing yet to state in the way of detail.

It has been stated to Russia, however, that the United States is willing to resume negotiations which had been commenced during the administration of the office of Secretary of State by Mr. Knox.

Two Diplomats Suggested.

The President is soon to appoint an Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg and the report is that a selection will be made between Charles R. Crane and Frederick Penfield, of Philadelphia and New York.

The administration will have to meet the question of the Jewish passport and the recognition of the Jews as American citizens without regard to race or religion in the new negotiations. It is well known that Russia was anxious to renew negotiations very soon after the affront to the Jewish race under the old treaty or by Russia's construction of the old treaty was wiped out by the joint resolution of Congress which abrogated the treaty of 1832. This action of Congress was unequivocally an act to rebuke Russia for her treatment of the Jews generally and specifically for her continued refusal to recognize passports issued to Jews.

Knox Charges Discrimination.

Secretary of State Knox held that the question of Jews should not enter into the matter at all, and that the real question was that the treaty of 1832 discriminated against American citizens.

It was stated during the last administration that Russia was trying to separate the Jewish passport question from all other questions which would enter into a treaty of amity and commerce, such as is made with all enlightened nations.

The statement was made at the time that the old administration frowned on this none too subtle suggestion of Russia and held that there should be no treaty except one that would do full justice to all Americans—Jews, Irish, English, Germans—no matter what their origin if they were citizens of the United States.

White House Silent.

The State Department at that time knew that if a treaty was sent to the Senate which did not include a solution of the passport question it could not be ratified. It is said that the present administration understands the situation thoroughly and will endeavor to get a treaty which will cover all American interests favorably or none at all.

At the White House no expression of opinion is yet obtainable from any official reflecting the views of the President. There is no question, however, that the Ambassador to be appointed by the President will be fully instructed on the passport question before he goes to St. Petersburg.

SOCIETY WOMAN GOES TO WORK IN BIG STORE

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Miss Florence Lord, a graduate of Smith College, prominent socially in Chicago, New York and many other Eastern cities, and influential in suffrage clubs, has been working for a week or more in a Los Angeles department store, "to study the sociological conditions" at first hand, in order "to get away with her stunt."

Verses Tell How 'Imperator' Ought to be Pronounced

Great Trouble Found With Largest Liner Is That Everyone Gives Her a Different Name.

NEW YORK, June 28.—There is one fault already found with the Imperator, the giant vessel of the Hamburg-American line, which has just made her maiden voyage as the biggest ship afloat. The trouble is no one knows how to pronounce her name.

Many think they do, and as a result, she is called many things as Amerson Hough, the author, who answers to Huff, How, Hoe, Huge and a few other things.

In reply to inquiries as to the pronunciation the publicity agent says that the German pronunciation which is sanctioned by the modern Latinists makes the "a" in Imperator sound like the "a" in father. The accent is on the next syllable to the last. The poet laureate of the line has been so much puzzled by the variety of pronunciations that he has celebrated them in verse. Here are some of the couplets:

Biggest ship upon the water,
Gorgeous, quetnly Imperator.

If you do not like that style of calling the ship, perhaps the poet laureate remarked, you may take this:

In the finest class we shate her,
Pcerless, German Impcrator.

"And please," the poet said, "do not make peerless "beerless." Then, after running his fingers through his hair, the poet emitted and submitted this:

Vastness!—making senses totter!
Sea Collossus, Imperator!

"To the tune of 'Dixie,'" said the poet, we might get still another line on the pronunciation by singing:

Buckwheat cakes and a little batter
Taste quite good on the Imperator!

Greatest Salmon Run in Puget Sound

Quadrennial Migration of Horde of Fish From Fraser River Begins on Pacific Coast.

SEATTLE, June 28.—Steamship men report the approach of the annual Sockeye salmon run, which this year is the quadrennial big run, the greatest fish migration in the world. The fish now entering the Sound were born four years ago.

When the first white men came to the Northwest the Indians told them of this periodical big run, which had been regular as far back as their tribal legends went. It is the Canadian theory that the fish making up the big run are hatched in Fraser River and grow to maturity off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Four years ago so many traps were set for the mature fish that few were able to enter the Fraser, and the Canadians have insisted that the big run of 1913 would be a failure. Hence there is international interest in the size of the approaching swarms of salmon.

Anything Shocking Police, Called Bad

Criticism of Chiefs of Present Styles Declared Cause for Women of Country to Act

JOHNSTOWN, PA., June 28.—Attacking immodesty in women's dress, Mrs. H. W. Black, of Riverdale, today stirred the delegates and visitors gathered at the annual convention of the Cambria County Sabbath School Association, in session here.

"Christian women should not wear clothes that cause people to turn and look at them after they pass," declared Mrs. Black.

"The police chiefs in convention at Washington have gone on record demanding a reform in women's dress. When it gets so bad that the police have to ask such a thing, I think it is time Christian women should act."

My Experience With Tacco --The New Handy Varnish

By EVELYN WREN

HOUSEWIVES realize that a coat of varnish is often more satisfactory than a new piece of furniture. It is a gratification to see the marred chair which belonged to the first parlor suit look like new. The dining table has held many simple breakfasts, many delightful luncheons and many bountiful dinners, and the steaming dishes have left ugly marks upon its once shining surface. To see it emerge from its varnish treatment is like welcoming back an old friend.

Varnishing seems like tiresome, dirty work, and a task suitable for men attired in overalls. I had always associated it with laborers' muscles and rough clothing until one day when I decided my desk at The American office needed some attention.

You do not become wholly unfeminine even if you are a newspaper woman. I was tired of seeing the black spot where the inkwell had overturned. I did not like the white mark where a glass of ice water had stood. All at once I had a hunch that I could do my work better if a marred place did not constantly remind me of a loss of temper and consequent lowering of self-respect and dignity. The refinishing of my desk became an obsession.

I read advertisements. Fortunately I am influenced by them. When I saw an advertisement of a varnish which a woman could apply with a cloth just as a furniture polish is applied, I resolved to investigate the novel preparation.

I went to the sixth floor of the Forsyth Building and entered the offices of The Amber Chemical Company. There I almost breathlessly inquired for Tacco, the water-proof, dust-proof and heat-proof varnish. (To tell the truth, I did not much mind about the heat-proof feature, for most of the heat in our office is caused by irritable nerves, and not by the weather. I am no exception.)

A bottle of Tacco was put into my hand, and I grasped a piece of cheesecloth and went energetically to work. I used just as much muscle as three years of typewriting will produce in a feminine arm. I worked as hard as any furniture polisher ever dreamed of doing in his worst nightmare. I thought I was doing well.

Imagine my chagrin and the expression on my face when the cloth was quietly taken from my vigorous grasp and I was shown that Tacco requires no rubbing. You do not have to use as much energy as I do in ordinary dusting.

Dust the article first. If it is much stained you might well apply a little soap and water. Then apply your Tacco to the dry surface. A piece of cheesecloth is the best medium, and a firm, gentle movement like that of dusting will put the varnish on in the best form. Then let it dry. At the end of five hours view the result and feel proud of your work which is really but a pastime.

Have a Tacco day. Take the breakfast cloth off when husband has departed for the office. Apply Tacco according to the directions on the box, and the dining table will be ready for use at lunch time. Of course if husband is a capitalist and breakfasts at 10:30 instead of at 7 you will probably not have the pleasure of using Tacco yourself. Let us hope that you are one of those domestic little housewives who just "loves" to make your home pretty with your personal effort, and that husband has not outgrown his appreciation of the little touches which you can give just a bit better than any hired help.

The table in the living room has played an important part in the happiness of the household. You could not think of home without that table, and the ones you see in the store windows never look quite as hospitable or nearly so homelike. Here Jack has read his paper and graciously explained politics to your bewildered self as you stitched on little frocks which were to go to Kindergarten with Little Girl. It has held Big Brother's school books and his drawing instruments. (Said drawing instruments are responsible for the big unsightly gash at the end.) All in all, you feel as you begin to apply Tacco with a gentle hand that this table has many dear memories. You would like to see it as fresh and pretty as it was when you and Jack picked it out. It seemed the finest table in the world on that day. How you blushed, and how manly Jack looked as he quietly drew the money from his pocket and ordered it sent to your new home.

When the table is finished the big chair will seem more worn and bruised than ever. You never realized how shabby the living room was getting. It seems but a day or two ago that you decided to surprise Jack with that comfortable chair on his birthday. You saved from your housekeeping money bit by bit and grew anxious toward the last for fear the fund would not be large enough. You grow tender toward that big chair as you remember Jack's eyes when he first espied it and then quickly gazed at you. The lovelight was there, even if you had been married a half-dozen years, and had but recently lost many hours of sleep with Little Girl's teething episode.

GET THE WORD THEN GET THE MEANING
TRADE MARK
TACCO
BRAND
A HINT TO THE WISE

The tender feelings do not interfere with the application of Tacco. Let retrospection have its sway, and when you have had the pleasure of many happy memories look at the result. The table will shine like new. The gash made by Big Brother's steel ruler will not show. Tacco has acted as a filler and made the surface smooth as glass. Dusting will be a light task now. You may even scrub the table, for it has a water-proof finish now. The chair will bring the lovelight to Jack's eyes anew, for he, too, will remember the day your love made the gift.

If you are a housekeeper, you will welcome Tacco as a means of making your home brighter and more cheerful. You need never wish for an opportunity to send shabby furniture away to be refinished. You can buy a bottle of Tacco for only 50 cents. The economy of it will be demonstrated by its first use, and you will be ready to purchase a quart, half-gallon or gallon can before many days.

When I like anything I never take my liking for granted. I analyze my appreciation. Here is my analysis of my fondness for Tacco:

It requires absolutely no rubbing.
It dries in from two to five hours.
It is water-proof as well as dust and heat proof.
It is economical in time and money.

Well, my desk at The American office has had its Tacco treatment. Come in to see it, if you like. Then investigate Tacco as I did, if you like, or better still, benefit by my written experience and buy a bottle or can at any good drug or hardware store.

Do you live out of town? If you do, you would like to hear about a splendid proposition for out-of-town dealers. Write to-day for information and do not risk the loss of the agency in your town. Write and see what The Amber Chemical Company has to tell you.

BOY CONFESSES KILLING MOTHER AND BROTHER

Berkley Fleming, 19, of Ironton, Mo., Appears Unconcerned When Accused of Crime.

IRONTON, O., June 28.—Berkley Fleming, 19, has confessed to shooting his half-brother, Culbertson Stewart, almost three years ago, and his mother a few days ago.

The police took the boy to his grandfather's farm, where he pointed out the grave of his mother and stood by unconcerned as the body was removed. He was not impressed when the skeleton of Culbertson was exhumed.

Believe Boy Degenerate.

Chief of Police King, Dr. Wells and the Rev. W. H. Hampton, who have suspected for several months that Berkeley killed Culbertson, believe Berkeley a degenerate of the worst type.

Their theory is that he killed Culbertson because of jealousy and that he had worked out his carefull arranged plan of concealing the crime before he shot his brother.

The murder of the mother, they believe, was a part of his plan to keep her from exposing his former murder. A bullet hole in the back of the head of each victim and the mother's bruised face, say these men, destroy any accident theory.

Mother Is Suspicious.

Culbertson Stewart disappeared July 14, 1910, Berkeley's 17th birthday. The other brother afterward wrote letters to his mother purporting to come from Culbertson. She became suspicious, and he decided to kill her also.

After the crime he was found at a hotel waiting for dinner. He had gone there in a buggy to take his sweetheart riding. He made no objection to going to the police station, where he confessed.

Aged Pair Perform Own Marriage Rites

Bridegroom, 75 Years Old, Declares It Was His Sixth Experience With Such Ceremony

BEAVER, PA., June 28.—Dr. Akkelon Mercer, seventy-five years old of Beaver Falls, and Sarah L. Calgrove, sixty-five years old, of Wetzel county, West Virginia, performed their own marriage ceremony here.

When the pair obtained their license they informed Hamilton, the clerk, that all they needed was a license, as they could dispense with all bridal attendants and the minister.

Doctor Mercer and Mrs. Calgrove to Hamilton issued the license for marry themselves in the presence of witnesses. Doctor Mercer stated that he had been married five times, and in each instance he and his bride had performed their own ceremony, always in the presence of two witnesses.

Defaulter Hired to Audit Bank's Books

Man Who Wrecked Financial Institution, Will Go to Work to Untangle Its Affairs.

CARUTHERSVILLE, MO., June 28.—A. B. Tindle, cashier of the Pemiscot County Bank, which closed its doors following the discovery that he was short in his accounts, will be retained by the reorganizers to aid in straightening out its affairs.

"There is no desire on the part of the directors of the bank to prosecute Tindle," one of the directors said to-day. "He has turned over all his property and has been punished enough by his sudden fall from a position of trust and respect in the community."

Tindle's personal fortune is estimated at $200,000.

The action of the directors of the bank in retaining him in the task of straightening out the confusion caused by his shortage meets with the approval of a majority of the citizens it is said.

Prehistoric Flying Reptile Discovered

Skeleton of Pterodactyl Monster Is Found in Wyoming Fossil Bed by Geologists.

CASPER, WYO., June 28.—Dr. F. Salathe and D. VanWagener, geologists, who are prospecting this vicinity for oil, reported the discovery eighteen miles from Casper of a fossil bed, conspicuously visible in which is the almost perfect silicified skeleton of a flying reptile, probably of the pterodactyll, which measures at least sixty feet in length. The creature in life must have had a wing expansion of eighty feet.

Millionaire Gives Free Circus to Pay Pledge of Boyhood

Packer Leaves Home as Child to Make Fortune After Missing Show for Lack of Money.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Edward Tilden, millionaire packer, produced a circus to-day for "all the children within walking or riding distance" of the Tilden estate at Lake Delavan, Wis.

The huge entertainment cost $10,000 and had been planned for 25 years by the host. It grew out of a painfully vivid recollection of a circus that had come to town and gone away again without his getting inside the tent. It was fresh in his mind when he left Delavan a quarter of a century ago to come to Chicago to "make his fortune." At the train Edward Tilden told friends:

"I'm coming back some day and buy the town and give everyone a good time, and let every boy here see a circus."

A special carload of entertainers left Chicago for Delavan this morning. A dog and pony show and a band of 40 pieces left last night. The children also saw an aeroplane flight, had automobile rides and a big dinner.

Child Offered Home For Looking Pleasant

Smiling Face of Orphan in Photographed Group Wins Hearts of Couple Who Lost Baby.

POCAHONTAS, ILL., June 28.—In Pocahontas there may be a home for a little girl because she "looked pleasant" when a photographer took the picture of a group of children waiting for an automobile ride. Children in the orphan asylums on that day were given an outing by the Automobile Club of St. Louis.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miles, of Pocahontas, adopted a little girl several years ago. She died. Something about two of the little girls whose pictures appeared in the newspaper reminded them of the little one who died, and they have written for information about the children.

INDIAN GIRLS WILL TRY SKILL AT HAT-MAKING

CARLISLE, PA., June 28.—Indian art will now show itself in hats. At least that is the natural conclusion drawn from an announcement made by the Carlisle Indian School that a course in millinery has been established for aborigines.

Indian art, the absolutely original gift of America to the world, has expressed itself in pottery, in rugs, in a dozen other ways, but it has never before entered the field of headgear, and it is expected that this new innovation may yet cast the chic French models into the deep shadows.

SCHOOL ROLLS FAIL TO KEEP UP WITH BIRTHS

Wide Discrepancy Is Shown in Number of Pupils and Increase of Children.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Chapters on "Roman Catholic Schools," "Typical Health Teaching Agencies of the United States," and "Parent-Teacher Associations" are special features of the annual report of the United States Commissioner of Education, just issued.

In addition to these the report contains substantial chapters on the following subjects: General survey of the year; educational legislation during 1912; higher education; city school systems; rural education; recent movements in negro education; a review of agricultural education; progress in vocational education; library development; education in Alaska, the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and other dependencies; Indian education; educational activities in Canada, Latin-America, Great Britain, Northern Europe, France and Switzerland, Germany, Southern Europe and Russia; together with a general view of conditions in Asia, Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

In his introduction to the report the commissioner discusses the wide discrepancy between the increase in the number of children of school age and the actual enrollment; an apparent reduction in teachers' salaries during the year; the remarkable increase in high schools and high school enrollment throughout the country; the decrease in professional schools, due to the enforcement of higher standards, lack of preparation of teachers, which Dr. Claxton characterizes as "one of the greatest evils of our school systems;" the shortness of the school term in the United States as compared with other civilized nations; and the abnormally large percentage of illiteracy in the rural districts.

Woman Jury Awards Verdict in Oregon

Plaintiff Is Awarded Damages of $5 in Legal Fight Over Cut of a Skirt.

ST. JOHNS, ORE., June 28.—The first regularly called woman's jury to serve in the State of Oregon tried a case in Justice Williams' court here and, after twenty minutes' conference, returned a verdict of $5 for the plaintiff. The jury was drawn in the regular form from a list of fifty women who have been chosen as liable for jury service during the year.

The case was one involving the price of a skirt. The plaintiff averred that a skirt which she had made by a local seamstress did not fit. She brought suit to recover the price of the skirt.

The fair jurors fixed the damages at $5.

FINDS COIN BEHIND PANEL; DIVIDES WITH FRIENDS

SHARON, PA., June 28.—As six carpenters were tearing down a house near the Leesburg coal mines, one found a false panel in a wall of the dining room from which he took a powder can containing $1,500.

The finder kept $500 as his share and each of his fellow workmen was given $200.

USE OF SCHOOLS AS AID TO LOVE MAKING URGED

Peace Executive Would Make Social Centers of Houses of Instruction in Big Cities.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Arthur Deering Call, executive director of the American Peace Society, has undertaken to win for the young men and women of America the right to make love to each other.

Said he:

"One of the nation's greatest needs is the promotion of acquaintance between young men and women, the fathers and mothers of the next generation, under free, attractive and wholesome conditions. We need more wholesome conditions for 'courting.'

"I can think of nothing so important to this generation as the lifemates of its various individuals, or so vital to the next as its fathers and mothers and home life generally.

Would Use Schools.

"I propose a wider use of school buildings for social and neighborhood purposes. I do not want love-making a part of the school curriculum, but I think that the same lips that recite the multiplication table or decline a noun in the class room in the garish light of day might just as well whisper tender nothings while the moon peeks in at the window later on.

"For a great majority of our young people in the cities the dance halls provide the only regular amusement they can afford, where any man who has the price can step up to any young woman and ask her to dance. No wonder such places become recruiting places for vice.

No Instruction Needed.

"Why not let the school be a cross between the church and the saloon? Every school should be arranged so that in the evening the young folks could gather there for games, folk-dancing classes, music, athletics, sewing classes and moving pictures.

"All the young folks want is opportunity to meet under proper environment. We don't have to teach the men how to make love, or young women how to listen to them, but we owe it to the race not to hinder or pervert their natural tendencies by improper environment."

NEGRO GIVES FOUR PENNIES FOR FIVE DOLLAR BILLS

INDIANAPOLIS, June 28.—While Miss Stella Koch was busy tending a stand on the city market last night, a well dressed negro asked if she could give him some paper money for gold.

"I have four $5 gold pieces," he explained, "and I would like to get some paper money in exchange for them, as I do not like to carry gold in my pocket."

The girl said she could accommodate him, and going to the cash drawer produced four $5 bills. She handed the bills to the negro, and he dropped four bright, shining pennies into her outstretched hand.

TARIFF CUTS IN SENATE TO AID NATION'S DINING ROOM

Many House Figures Lowered and Free List Increased — Despite Cuts, Bill Is Expected to Produce $5,000,000 More Cash.

Atlanta's Need for Help to Reduce the High Cost of Living Is Shown by Figures Indicating Soaring Price of Foodstuffs.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The revised tariff bill laid before the Senate Democratic caucus by Mr. Simmons, chairman of the finance committee, carries important reductions in the Underwood tariff bill rates on iron, steel and other metal products. It added cattle, wheat, pig iron, Angora wool, and many other articles to the free list, and increased rates on many classes of cotton goods and some silk products.

President Wilson's desires as to free sugar in 1916 and free wool at once, prevailed in the redraft of the bill. To the list of "market basket" reductions the Underwood bill contained, the Senate committee added many important items.

In the general level of its rates the "Simmons bill" represents a heavier cut from the present Payne-Aldrich rates than the House bill.

Senator Simmons believes the caucus will discuss the bill not longer than a week.

Simmons' Statement.

The bill probably will come to a vote in the Senate by September 1.

In a statement Chairman Simmons said:

"The revenues of the Government will be increased approximately $5,000,000, laid in hand with a reduction of the taxation following the reductions already made in the House bill. These increases in revenues will be made up by a tariff on bananas and restoration of the full internal duty of $1.10 per gallon on brandies used in fortifying wines.

"With regard to the sugar schedule no change was made from the provision of the Underwood bill except to strike out 'sugars tinctured and colored,' for fear that ultramarine blue used in bleaching sugar might be regarded as colored matter and thereby refined sugar become subject to a duty of 2 cents a pound.

"With regard to cigars and other tobacco products from the Philippines the provision of the Underwood bill permitting cigars with 80 per cent of tobacco the product of the Philippine Islands and 20 per cent the produce of foreign countries to be admitted into the United States free of duty, was stricken out of the bill. Only cigars and tobacco products exclusively of Philippine tobacco to be admitted free of duty into the United States."

The Liquor Schedule.

Of the amendment to the liquor schedule, the statement said:

"An additional section is added repealing so much of the act approved October 1, 1890, and acts amendatory thereto, so far as they relate to the use free of tax of spirits for the fortification of sweet wines, and providing that hereafter all wine spirits, grape brandy and alcohol so used shall be subject to the same tax as in other cases.

"It is intimated that this tax will result in an increase of revenue of approximately $7,000,000 per annum.

"The Senate Finance Committee followed the House and treated the cotton yarns as the House bill treated cotton cloth," the statement continued, "by adding a duty of two and one-half per cent upon cotton cloth when combed, bleached, dyed, mercerized or colored. This is the most important change that the Senate committee made in the House cotton schedule."

Retaliatory Clause.

The amendment permitting the President to proclaim special rates when foreign nations discriminate against the United States provides that he shall exercise this authority on certain articles, as follows:

"Fish, fresh, smoked and dried, pickled or otherwise prepared, 1 cent per pound; on wheat, 10 cents per bushel; on wheat flour, 45 cents per barrel; on coffee, 3 cents per pound; on tea, 10 cents per pound.

"On the following articles a duty

Saved From Bad Dog by Morgan's Niece

Judge at Bench Show Is Attacked by Ferocious Police Hound. Miss Tracy Rescues Him.

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—Miss Anne Tracy, of New York, a niece of the late J. P. Morgan, and granddaughter of John Bigelow, is proclaimed a heroine by the crowd of visitors to the Devon Dog Show today, who saw her rescue Freeman Lloyd, one of the judges, from being mangled by a ferocious police dog.

Miss Tracy, who is exhibiting several dogs here, saw the animal leap for Lloyd. Dashing forward, she grasped the dog's collar, and while it struggled fiercely, held on.

L. I. Winter, owner of the dog, slipped a leash on it and dragged it away.

The waterpower is estimated to be worth several million dollars.

RUSSIA SEEKING U. S. FRIENDSHIP IN NEW TREATY

Renewal of Pact Abrogated by Congress Is Proposed by Diplomats of Czar.

JEWISH QUESTION RISES

Washington Is Silent, but Understanding Is That Bryan Is Willing to Renew Negotiations.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Russia has asked the United States Government to take up the question of a renewal of a treaty of amity and commerce. The treaty of 1832 on that subject was abrogated out of hand by the Congress of the United States.

Secretary of State Bryan said today that the question of renewing negotiations had been discussed with the President, but that there was nothing yet to state in the way of detail.

It has been stated to Russia, however, that the United States is willing to resume negotiations which had been commenced during the administration of the office of Secretary of State by Mr. Knox.

Two Diplomats Suggested.

The President is soon to appoint an Ambassador to the Court of St. Petersburg and the report is that a selection will be made between Charles R. Crane and Frederick Penfield, of Philadelphia and New York.

The administration will have to meet the question of the Jewish passport and the recognition of the Jews as American citizens without regard to race or religion in the new negotiations. It is well known that Russia was anxious to renew negotiations very soon after the affront to the Jewish race under the old treaty or by Russia's construction of the old treaty was wiped out by the joint resolution of Congress which abrogated the treaty of 1832. This action of Congress was unequivocally an act to rebuke Russia for her treatment of the Jews generally and specifically for her continued refusal to recognize passports issued to Jews.

Knox Charges Discrimination.

Secretary of State Knox held that the question of Jews should not enter into the matter at all, and that the real question was that the treaty of 1832 discriminated against American citizens.

It was stated during the last administration that Russia was trying to separate the Jewish passport question from all other questions which would enter into a treaty of amity and commerce, such as is made with all enlightened nations.

The statement was made at the time that the old administration frowned on this none too subtle suggestion of Russia and held that there should be no treaty except one that would do full justice to all Americans—Jews, Irish, English, Germans—no matter what their origin if they were citizens of the United States.

White House Silent.

The State Department at that time knew that if a treaty was sent to the Senate which did not include a solution of the passport question it could not be ratified. It is said that the present administration understands the situation thoroughly and will endeavor to get a treaty which will cover all American interests favorably or none at all.

At the White House no expression of opinion is yet obtainable from any official reflecting the views of the President. There is no question, however, that the Ambassador to be appointed by the President will be fully instructed on the passport question before he goes to St. Petersburg.

Pullman Berths to be Made Wider

Patent Rights Are Obtained on Device, Giving Full Sized Beds in Compartment Coaches.

CHICAGO, June 28.—The Pullman Company has just become possessed of the patent right of a new device for the purpose of making berths wider.

In compartment cars where there is a separate passageway through the car outside the compartments there is no objection to using the aisle for extending the berths and some of the compartment sleeping cars are equipped with a device for this purpose.

The seat ends are hinged so that they can be swung down and supported by an angle brace and form a horizontal extension of the seat. When two seats are pulled out, as is ordinarily done on making up the lower berth, a filler is placed between the two ends after they have been lowered, thus forming a full size bed.

Honeymoon Spoiled When Bridegroom Is Kidnaped in Taxi

Wedding Guests Form Football Rush Line and Hurry Him Away From Newly Made Wife.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 28.—Charles R. Mason and Miss Louise Nance were married and were expecting a taxicab to take them to a train for their wedding journey when several young men, friends of the bridegroom, kidnaped him and carried him about the city in an automobile until the train had left.

The guests gathered at the home of the bride's mother had enjoyed an elaborate wedding supper when one of the young men shouted, "Here's your machine, Charlie!"

Mason rushed out to make sure his ordered car was there, and as he peered into the face of the driver a football rush caught him from behind and carried him into the tonneau. Six husky youths held him down and the auto dashed away.

They took Mason, now laughing and now raging, a wild ride about the city, and to downtown places of liquid refreshments, where he paid the bills, and only returned with him after two hours of automobiling which he did not in the least appreciate.

More Bibles Printed Than All Other Books

Publisher Says They Outnumber Best Sellers Carloads to Volumes.

CHICAGO, June 28.—For every volume of the six best sellers issued each year a carload of Bibles is manufactured. This information was gleaned at the annual book fair which opened at the Palmer House.

"The public taste changes from time to time," said Arthur J. Saalfield, president of the Saalfield Publishing Company, of New York, "but the Bible continues to be the most popular book printed. Where other books are turned out by the volume it is turned out by the carload. One of the puzzles of the Bible publishers is what becomes of his product. Bibles seem to disappear."

According to Saalfield, "Robinson Crusoe" and "The Swiss Family Robinson" will live as long as the Bible itself. They constitute the two most popular volumes, he says.

Eloping Mrs. Hichborn to Return

Deserted Husband a Suicide

Mother to Bring Daughter Home

Mrs. Philip Hichborn, Jr.

Mrs. Horace Wylie and her baby.

Reported to be Living With Horace Wylie in Europe and Said to be Happy.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Mrs. Philip Hichborn, Jr., the former society woman, who eloped to Europe September 10, 1911, for the second time with Horace Wylie, prominent clubman, driving her young, heartbroken husband, to suicide, will return to this city any day now, according to those who know.

The fact that Mrs. Henry M. Hoyt, widow of Henry M. Hoyt, former solicitor of the State Department, and mother of Mrs. Hichborn, left for Europe May 2, supposedly to visit her daughter, gives ground for the belief. Mrs. Hoyt is expected to return with her daughter.

Mrs. Hichborn's exact location in Europe has been long a mystery, although reports have been published from time to time, telling of her appearance in certain localities for brief periods.

Heard From in Paris.

The latest dispatch was on February 25, to the effect that she and Mr. Wylie were living in a villa in one of the suburbs of Paris under the name of "Wilborn." The story further stated that both were supremely happy, and that Mr. Wylie was engaged in the real estate business.

Mrs. Wylie, wife of the clubman, who was left with four children when her husband deserted her to flee with the pretty woman of whom he had become enamoured, is now at York Village, Me., where she will spend the entire summer. The children—two sons and two daughters—will spend the summer with their mother, who has refused to permit Wylie to secure a divorce.

Mrs. Philip Hichborn, Sr., the aged mother of the young clubman and author, whose life was ended so tragically, is spending the summer at Black Rock, near Bridgeport. Mrs. Paul S. Pearsall, sister of the unfortunate young man, at whose residence he committed suicide, is also spending the summer at Black Rock. With her is the little son of Hichborn, legally adopted and bearing the name of Pearsall.

Son of a Rear Admiral.

It was September 12, 1906, that pretty Eleanor Hoyt was married to young Hichborn, son of the late Rear Admiral. The Wylies and Hichborns were old families and the best of friends.

Through this intimacy sprang the unquenchable love between Wylie and Mrs. Hichborn. Society circles were shocked, but not surprised, when, on December 16, 1910, the two eloped to Canada, from whence they sailed to Europe. At the time of the elopement Wylie had been married about 20 years.

Mrs. Hichborn and Wylie returned to Washington April 5, 1911, and a reconciliation was brought about between Wylie and his wife. Mrs. Hichborn returned to the home of her mother. But on September 10, 1911, they disappeared again, and it was soon learned that the couple were in Europe.

Wylie had deeded to his wife real estate valued at $300,000.

The second elopement drove young Hichborn to despair, and on Wednesday, March 28, three months after filing suit for divorce, he killed himself with a revolver. A note was left requesting that his little four-and-a-half-year-old son, Philip S. Hichborn, Jr., be cared for by his sister and mother.

FLAGLER WILL UNCHANGED AND RELATIVE'S HINTS OF A CONSPIRACY FALL

Codicils Show That Millionaire Railroad King Left Only Son With but Small Share of His Fortune. Bulk of Wealth Held in Trust.

MILLIONAIRE'S DEATH IN LONELY COTTAGE PICTURED

By TARLETON COLLIER.

WEST PALM BEACH, June 28.—While a number of the charges made by Amasa Flagler, of California, regarding strange circumstances surrounding the death of Henry M. Flagler to-day are found to be substantial, the principal accusations that codicils were added to the Flagler will, completely changing its effect, and that the dying man was given insufficient medical attention, appear to fall without support.

Seven codicils to the will are not significant. Investigation into the charges by Amasa Flagler that dark work accompanied the end of his kinsman, was conducted by The Sunday American. The stories of the California man that Henry M. Flagler was kept in deep seclusion until the end; that visitors, including himself, were refused admittance; that the most rigid privacy shrouded every detail of the railroad king's illness, all are found to possess a substantial basis of fact.

Palm Beach, deserted, boarded up, uncanny in its summer desolation, to-day furnishes the setting for a belated story of tragedy—the tragedy in the death of Henry M. Flagler, the Florida railroad king, who died May 20, 84 years old, his brain worn out.

The story is how a man who had built an empire came to die in seclusion on a deserted island, attended by unskilled nurses, denied to visitors—and some of them his kinsmen—and with never a word given out as to his condition, from time to time.

AMASA P. FLAGLER TELLS ALL.

Amasa P. Flagler, of California, who says he is the closest male relative of Henry M. Flagler, except for Harry Harkness Flagler, a son, came to Palm Beach while the financier was dying, and was refused a sight of him. To-day he is talking freely to newspaper men, hinting at mystery in the death of Henry M. Flagler, charging that the great railroad man was not given the proper treatment or care, and that Mrs. Flagler, J. B. Parrott and Dr. W. R. Keenan, the three who were practically alone with him toward the end and who, he points out, were the beneficiaries under the will, kept visitors away purposely.

Amasa P. Flagler, according to the variety of opinions maintained by residents of Palm Beach, is anything from a faker to a justly aggrieved person. The fact remains, however, revealed as a result of investigations by The Sunday American, that Henry M. Flagler died in loneliness and in enforced seclusion.

He died in a small room of a frame cottage on the Atlantic beach, to which he had been moved some time before the end. From one window is to be seen "The Breakers," his own great hotel. It has been locked and deserted since March. Through the other window there is the sight of a stretch of parched grass, the beach and the ocean.

George Conway, a boy who waited on Mr. Flagler during his illness, said to-day that the dying man kept his eyes always on the ocean.

"He loved it," said Conway. "One time, not long before the end, he said to me: 'George, there is the greatest thing in the world,' pointing out at the sea. 'If there ever comes a time when you would be proud of yourself and of what you have done, think about that ocean. There is something greater, more wonderful than anything a man can ever make or become. Railroads and cities are nothing.' But a lot of the times he was not conscious to what went on."

Mr. Flagler was moved to the beach cottage from his mansion, "Whitehall," when summer began to set in at Palm Beach. He was moved at the combined orders of his physician, Dr. W. R. Keenan, and Mrs. Flagler. Dr. Keenan is Mrs. Flagler's brother. Because has was moved Amasa P. Flagler finds the basis for a denunciation of those who took care of him, declaring that his kinsman was taken to the empty beach cottage that he might be more securely isolated.

Joe Jefferson Died In Same Cottage.

Investigation reveals that many of the statements made by Amasa P. Flagler in his interviews regarding the death of his relative are exaggerations. He is said to have declared that the beach cottage in which Henry M. Flagler died was old and dilapidated and isolated from the community. It is, however, "The Nautilus," one of a colony of seven cottages on the beach, and is within 200 feet of "The Breakers." It is leased for $5,000 a season of three months to the winter visitors from the North, and last season was occupied by "Finzy" Conners, the Buffalo politician. Joseph Jefferson, the actor, according to the beach traditions, died in the same cottage.

Local physicians, although none of them was called in to assist Dr. Keenan and Dr. Castleberry, watched the case as well as possible in view of the privacy attached to it. Several to-day said that they would have in-

Would Move Father From Hall of Fame

Son of Late Senator Ingalls Declares Statues in Washington Have Become National Joke.

TOPEKA, June 28.—Sheffield Ingalls, Lieutenant Governor of Kansas, and a son of the late Senator John J. Ingalls, announced to-day that he would ask the next State Legislature to request Congress to return to Kansas the statue of his father now in the Hall of Fame.

The alleged humorous remarks of public men about the statues, the reference of artists to the statuary hall as the "chamber of horrors," and the remarks of Capitol guides to visitors referring to the statues as "them guys" are the reasons for the proposed action.

Kentuckians Form A Candidate Trust

Twenty-five Men Seeking Offices Pledge to No-Treat Campaign in Primary.

GEORGETOWN, KY., June 28.—All of the 25 Democratic candidates for offices in this (Scott) county have pledged themselves in resolutions neither to "treat" nor to use money in efforts to influence the voters in their favor at the primary to be held in August.

They agreed to meet again on the eve of the election, providing that anyone who could not then make oath that he had kept the pledge should withdraw from the race.

TUBERCULOSIS RAVAGES FRENCH POSTAL SERVICE

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, June 28.—According to statistics just published the French postal employees pay a terribly heavy death tribute to tuberculosis.

Professor Landouzy has shown that of 100 deaths of postal employees in 1902, 15 were due to tuberculosis, in 1903 the percentage rose to 17, in 1904 to 21, and it is to-day estimated at over 30.

It is stated that the scourge is spreading rapidly, owing to the lack of air in the postoffices, and to the fact that the offices are scarcely ever cleaned out properly on account of the non-provision of funds to pay cleaners.

FLAGLER'S SON IS PRACTICALLY CUT OFF IN WILL

Lack of Filial Regard Given as Reason for Small Amount of Legacy Left Him.

dorsed the move from Whitehall to the beach cottage, considering more desirable the sea breeze and the relief from the sultriness that is always the lot of Whitehall in the early summer.

West Palm Beach is divided into two hostile camps on the question of the treatment of Henry M. Flagler, many contending that the charges of a deliberate isolation and of inadequate care of the dying man may be substantiated by a chain of circumstances, and others laughing at the scandal that Amasa Flagler has sprung.

Trained Nurses Succeeded by Boy.

The rapid decline of the railroad king began about March 1, when, already ill, he was injured by a fall in the reception hall of "Whitehall." He took to bed at that time, and never left it until the day of his death, May 20. After several weeks in his room at "Whitehall," he was moved to the beach cottage.

Trained nurses who had been engaged were turned away, to be succeeded by George Conway, a young English boy, who is the nephew of Mrs. Cooper, the housekeeper at "Whitehall," and by Tom Lynch, a young man employed on the estate. Conway watched by day, and the other by night.

Conway is one of the few Flagler employees remaining on deserted Palm Beach. To-day he said the nurses were discharged because they could not manage the sick man as well as could he and the other boy of whom Mr. Flagler was fond. The nurses, he continued, did not get on well with the Doctor, either.

Dr. Keenan, the brother of Mrs. Flagler, for years house physician at "The Breakers," and more recently at the "Royal Ponciana" as well, attended Mr. Flagler. To aid him, Dr. Castleberry a guest in the winter hotel, from Harrisburg, Pa., remained. Dr. Castleberry is a kinsman of Mrs. H. E. Bemis, wife of the manager of the "Royal Ponciana."

From the fact that the attending physicians are related to beneficiaries under Flagler's will, and that one, Dr. Keenan, is himself a beneficiary, Amasa Flagler has drawn evidence of irregular conduct in the care of Henry Flagler.

Little Told From Bedside.

During the period of the financier's illness little definite news came from his bedside. Newspaper men of West Palm Beach and of Jacksonville declare that no bulletins were issued, and that inquiries were met always with indefiniteness.

For weeks Flagler lay thus. No one was admitted. The gossip of servants has lingered in West Palm Beach, declaring that the dying man in his delirium called frequently for his son, and frequently also for William Fremd, his gardener. The son, Harry Harkness Flagler, who has been estranged from his father for 21 years, was not summoned until by Amasa P. Flagler. Fremd, another for whom Mr. Flagler called, lived on the grounds, within a half a mile of the cottage, but was never taken to the sick room.

The same gossip has recorded that J. A. McDonald, of Miami, an old friend of Mr. Flagler, and Father McLoughlin, a Catholic priest of Miami, were others who could not see the sick man.

Along toward the end came Amasa Flagler. According to his own story, he had sent a telegram to herald his visit. Reaching Palm Beach, he was informed that he could not see the sick man. He declares that he virtually was ordered from the grounds by J. B. Parrott, vice president and general manager of Flagler's railroad, who became president by the express terms of the Flagler will.

Incensed, Amasa Flagler went to the citizens of West Palm Beach with his story. He had telegraphed ahead for a room in "The Breakers," but these were denied him. "The Breakers," he was informed, was closed for the season.

Telegram Sent To Flagler's Son.

Amasa Flagler found quarters in "The Gables," a less pretentious hotel in West Palm Beach, whose proprietor, R. C. McGriff, listened to his story and to this day believes in him. Amasa Flagler was the first to send a telegram to Harry Harkness Flagler.

"Your father is calling for you," is the message he sent.

According to the statement to McGriff, Parrott, over in Palm Beach, heard that Harry Flagler was coming to his father's side, and came across to "The Gables" to engaged a room and bath for the financier's son. There was no room for Harry Flagler, either, it seems, on Palm Beach.

No room and bath was available in McGriff's establishment, and Amasa Flagler offered to give up his suite to Harry Harkness Flagler. But Harry Flagler, when he arrived, stayed with an old friend in the town. He arrived in time to see his father alive.

Amasa Flagler declares that he was not allowed to see the body of Henry M. Flagler after death. The Tropical Sun, the daily paper of West Palm Beach, bears a story of how Amasa Flagler was leaving the town, full of wrath at his treatment. At the station, according to the story, he could get no information about his trains.

The employees at the railroad station, the Flagler railroad station, would tell him nothing. He asked information regarding a special train, and was met with an indefinite answer. Finally, he called a boy and commissioned him to obtain the information. The boy did. Upon his return with the message, Mr. Flagler is said to have given him $50.

"You are the only person connected with this road who has exhibited the slightest consideration or courtesy toward me," he told the boy, according to the story.

Undertaker Imported To Conduct Funeral.

The body of the dead millionaire was taken in hand by an undertaker imported from Miami. Undertaker McGinley, in West Palm Beach, was not consulted. Citizens of the town believe this to be the case because Henry M. Flagler and the city of West Palm Beach had little in common. The two have been antagonistic of late years, in spite of the work of development which Flagler has done for East Florida, and a number of local ordinances and regulations were passed inimical to the Flagler interests.

Residents of West Palm Beach now declare that the feeling that grew up was not personal to Flagler himself, but was occasioned by actions of other officials of the Florida East Coast Railroad.

Flagler's funeral was held in St. Augustine, and his body placed in an elaborate vault which he had built in connection with the Memorial Presbyterian Church. St. Augustine he made his home, it is said here, because he was repelled by the attitude of West Palm Beach citizens.

Makes Charges Against Beneficiaries.

According to his story, Amasa Flagler was denied a part in the funeral. He went on his way North, where he has made his sensational charges that Mrs. Flagler, Dr. Keenan and J. B. Parrott kept the dying financier secluded, denying all admission that they might maintain an influence over him.

The three are the principal beneficiaries under the will, and it is Amasa's inference that because they were with him continually, to the seclusion of others, their claims were made secure. He hints, in his interviews, that codicils to the original Flagler will were made under their domination, cutting out other legatees, particularly Harry Harkness Flagler, the son of the financier.

However, an examination of the will and codicils proves this accusation to be without foundation. There are seven codicils, but none materially effective.

The documents are in the court house in St. Augustine, where they have reposed since being made. The original will was drafted February 1, 1902, and names W. H. Beardsley, of New York; Dr. William R. Keenan, of Lockport, N. Y., the physician who was with him at his death, and J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, another of the little party with him most of the time during his last illness, as his executors and trustees. His wife, Mrs. Mary Lillie Flagler, he names as the residuary legatee, and his son Harry Harkness Flagler, he cut off with the relatively small legacy of 5,000 shares of Standard Oil stock. This, at the time of Flagler's death, was worth $642 a share.

Declares Son Didn't Show Filial Regard.

"I have already given my son securities sufficient to bring him an income of $75,000 a year," the will stated. "My son has not shown for me the filial regard that would make me inclined to do more for him than is done by this item of my will."

No beneficiary will profit by the will, however, for at least five years. By its terms, a trust is created, the testator declaring:

"It is my intention in the future to foster, protect and properly develop such properties; and to provide against my decease while such properties are in process of development, and to relieve my beloved wife from the immediate cares and responsibilities of so varied and extensive interests, I hereby declare a trust for all my properties. From this trust is excepted $60,000 to the Stetson University and $20,000 to the Florida Agricultural College for the construction of a gymnasium.

The trust is to last five years, according to the will, and if the Florida East Coast Railway, or the Florida East Coast Hotel Company, at that time should require financial aid, then it is to continue as long as is necessary. Until the expiration of trust, Mrs. Flagler is to receive $100,000 a year and the Memorial Presbyterian Church of St. Augustine $3,000 a year.

Many Legacies Left by Will.

Other legatees mentioned in the original will are: To receive $5,000, Miss Annie C. McKay, Mrs. Ella Green, Stephen A. Brave, John P. Beckwith, William H. Chambliss, Ed J. Trlay, George W. Wilson, Bernard O'Brien, his coachman; George Holland, his butler, and Ida Scheiffer, his housekeeper; to receive $10,000, James A. McGuire, R. T. Goff, John Anderson, Fred Stelle, Joseph D. Price, Henry W. Merrill, J. A. McDonald, William H. Beardsley and Jasper G. Salter; to J. E. Ingraham, $20,000; to J. R. Parrott, $100,000; to C. D. Bolee and L. C. Hayes, $2,500 to the Florida Agricultural College, $80,000; to the John B. Stetson University, $40,000; to Hamilton College, New York, $100,000; to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society, $75,000.

By the terms of the will J. R. Parrott is to continue in the same relation to the Flagler interests as he maintained during the lifetime of the testator.

There are seven codicils to the will, made, respectively, February 17, 1903; April 28, 1904; January 5, 1906; April 7, 1908; December 22, 1910; January 10, 1912, and September 12, 1912.

It is these, Amasa Flagler declares, which are damaging to the original document, but none of them seem materially to affect it. The first codicil gives his trustees the power to complete the southern extension of the Florida East Coast Railroad, which he denied them in the will.

The second codicil defines the meaning of the term "expiration of trust," which occurred frequently in the will, and provides that if Harry Harkness Flagler is not living at the end of the "expiration of trust" then the 5,000 shares of oil stock lapse to the estate. In this codicil also he revoked the legacies of $80,000 to the Florida University and $40,000 to the John B. Stetson University, and provided for bequests of $10,000 to J. P. Greaves, Robert Murray and Leland Sterry, and giving W. H. Beardsley $50,000 instead of $10,000. If he survived his wife, Flagler specified in this codicil, the residue of his estate is to be divided among Roy H. York, W. L. Harkness and Mrs. John D. McLennan, of Cleveland; W. R. Keenan, Jr., J. K. Wise and Sarah G. Keenan, of Wilmington; J. R. Parrott, of Jacksonville, and W. H. Beardsley, of New York.

No Increase for Son's Share of Estate.

The third codicil announces that upon consideration the testator found incorrect the statement in the will that he had given his son securities netting $75,000 a year. However, he said, this mistake did not warrant an increase in the legacy to Harry Harkness Flagler.

The codicil also provides for a legacy of $10,000 to Harry E. Bemis, and empowers his trustees to borrow money for the extension of his railroad to Key West.

Codicil four specifies that the smaller legatees are not to receive the amounts provided unless at the time of his death they are in the employ of the Flagler railroad or hotel interests.

Codicil five empowers his trustees to continue to pay to Horace H. Flagler, of St. Augustine, the dividends on 50 shares of Standard Oil stock. It provides, too, that the legacy to the Memorial Presbyterian Church Society apply only if the church remain in the Presbyterian Church of the United States of America.

No Palm Beach Persons Remembered.

Codicil six makes provision for the maintenance of his mausoleum by the expenditure of a portion of the income from the $75,000 which he bequeathed to the church in St. Augustine.

The last codicil, drafted September 13, 1912, provides that the legacy of 5,000 shares of oil stock to his son be effective in spite of the change in the form of Standard Oil stock. This was drafted soon after the dissolution of the Standard Oil Company, apparently looking to safe-guarding Harry Harkness Flagler against losing his inheritance on technical grounds. The last provision is the revocation of his previous bequest to Horace H. Flagler, substituting therefor an annuity of $2,000.

No resident of West Palm Beach or its vicinity was mentioned in the will, although common gossip had named several as likely legatees.

SWEETPEAS IMPORTED BY AUSTRIAN EMPEROR

Special Cable to The American.

VIENNA, June 28.—Sweetpeas, which were practically unknown in Austria only a few years ago, are now prominent in the Imperial Gardens at Schonbrunn.

The aged Emperor Francis Joseph is the first in Austria to "take up" the sweetpea. The director of the Imperial Gardens was sent to London and brought specimen plants back with him. Now the tables at the castle at Schonbrunn are decorated with sweetpeas in one color or at most two. The Emperor prefers pink and white to other combinations.

FINDS COIN BEHIND PANEL; DIVIDES WITH FRIENDS

SHARON, PA., June 28.—As six carpenters were tearing down a house near the Leesburg coal mines, one found a false panel in a wall of the dining room from which he took a powder can containing $1,500.

The finder kept $500 as his share and each of his fellow workmen was given $200.

A retaliatory duty of 10 per cent upon potatoes imported from countries imposing duties against the United States also was inserted. Potatoes were unreservedly on the free list in the Underwood bill.

Babies Saved From Bolt by Feather Bed

Children Are Found Unhurt in Mattress After Room Is Wrecked by Lightning.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A feather mattress saved two children of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Johnson on the Peter Cortelyou farm, at Franklin Park, near New Brunswick, N. J., when a bolt of lightning struck their bed. The parents were awakened by a tremendous crash and a shriek from the children in an adjoining room. A flash of lightning just as they reached the room revealed a big hole in the roof and one in the floor.

The father obtained a lamp and found the bedstead shattered to pieces. Securely rolled up in the feather mattress, however, were the two little ones, almost suffocated with heat but unhurt.

Oregon Governor Opposed to Autos

Declares State Appropriation Would Have Made Him Travel Like 'Piker.'

SALEM, OREG., June 28.—Despite rumors to the effect that he would be a candidate for re-election, Governor West positively announces that he will not be a candidate.

The Governor said that the financial drain on him was large, particularly his traveling expenses. The State now provides $1,000 for the traveling expenses of the Governor when on the State's business, but until two years ago only $500 a year was provided. The Governor declared that he could not live like a "piker" when away from home, and the expenses of many of his trips were paid by himself.

Governor West said that he had never bought an automobile because he did not want one, wouldn't have one if somebody would make him a present of it, couldn't operate it if he had it, and, above all, could not afford a machine.

DIVA BELIEVES BABIES BEST, FARM LIFE NEXT

Schumann-Heink, Who Has Just Passed Her Fifty-second Birthday, Purchases Big Tract.

SAN DIEGO, CAL., June 28.—"Yes, now I am a farmer; also I am a mother, and I have just had my fifty-second birthday."

It was Mme. Schumann-Heink who spoke. Wreathed in smiles and radiating health—the great artist, accompanied by her youngest child and most beautiful daughter, descended from an incoming train to begin a six-month vacation here.

She had just completed her longest American tour and returns with the greatest profits made by any artist in concert this season.

Last year Mme. Schumann-Heink bought 3,000 acres here. She plans to make ranches with gardens, barren wastes into orchards and her rancho the garden spot of America.

"Farming," enthused Madame, "next to the rearing of babies, is the most interesting work in the world."

"But the farming, madame, surely you will not hoe?"

"Look at these two hands. I ask you, do they not appear capable? I have raised and worked for my children and they are yet strong—nicht?" Madame held her pink palms upward. One of the most convincing proofs of what she said was their appearance. The fingers are long and slender and young and strong enough to be envied by any woman half the diva's age.

And this can also be said truthfully of her face and form. Mme. Schumann's flamed with health.

"Yes, I shall be getting out and digging like a regular farmer. Oh, that is nothing to dig," she stated. "Once I made a garden at my New York home.

"Ach, yes, it is good to grow fruit, but it is better to be the mother of babies."

LIQUOR NOW BARRED ON TRANSCONTINENTAL LINES

SPOKANE, WASH., June 28.—All transcontinental railroad lines operating in this State have discontinued the sale of intoxicating liquor on their trains. This ends the "buffet service" on the Oriental Limited of the Great Northern, the Columbia and Olympian of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, and the North Coast Limited of the Northern Pacific.

Luncheon Lurch Aid to Digestion

Pre-Prandial Prance Society Fad

Variation of Tango Brings Dancers One Step Nearer Dining Each Step They Take.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—The Luncheon Lurch, the latest variation of the Tango and the Turkey Trot, which has seized the society of the Capital, is declared by experts on gastronomy to be the greatest known appetizer and first aid to digestion.

So effective has it been found along these lines that the Martini is now almost unknown on the boards of Washington hosts, while the pepsin tablet supply of the druggists is practically considered worthless stock.

There is a deep method in the Luncheon Lurch. Contrary to the Tango, which is danced after tea, the Lurch is a preprandian pastime. At a given time before the viands are to be served the orchestra strikes up something syncopated.

Guests immediately begin lurching and continue the dance until they have worked up an appetite considered commensurate with the feast about to be served.

Each step carries the dancers nearer the dining room, and observant ones declare that it is an invariable rule that the best trenchermen always dance with a remarkable celerity, while the dyspeptics lurch so slowly that they are to all appearances posing in tableau.

Among the prominent lurchers are Miss Katherine Elkins, Miss Dorothy Williams, Miss Sally Williams, Miss Katherine Britton, Miss Marguerite Barbour and Mrs. James F. Curtis.

Chief's Gold Badge Found to be Nickel

New Head of Police Department Finds That Predecessors Had Worn Base Metal Insignia.

PASADENA, June 28.—"Silver Threads Among the Gold," merrily whistled newly appointed Chief of Police W. S. McIntire as he scraped off the gold from the badge that was turned over to him by his predecessor, W. F. Wood, who resigned from the office.

When Wood resigned he presented his successor with the badge containing the words, "Chief of Police, Pasadena." On making a close inspection of the badge, which had long borne a reputation of being solid gold, the new chief observed that it was somewhat tarnished.

A cleanser was then applied, with the result that the badge in a few minutes was a shining nickel-plated star and greatly similar to the other badges worn by the balance of the police department.

Seeks Kidd's Gold On Seer's Advice

Patron of Fortune Teller Leaves for West to Dig for Pirate's Buried Treasure.

OREGON CITY, OREG., June 28.—Declaring that he has received an inspiration from a gypsy fortuneteller which will lead him to discover the famous treasure of Captain Kidd, which has been sought for centuries, I. W. Rivers, a prominent Willamette rancher, will start from this city in about two weeks for the Oregon coast.

Rivers states that several years ago while he and his wife were visiting at the Oaks they consulted a fortune-teller, who told them that they would discover the treasure. She stated that it would be found in a cave in a rock which is a prominent feature of the coast scenery near Nestucca Beach.

PREACHER DIVORCES HIS WIFE.

OMAHA, NEBR., June 28.—The Rev. F. P. Jolly, formerly of Joliet, Ill., was granted a divorce from his wife, the grounds being extreme cruelty. Mrs. Jolly is now living in Joliet.

USE OF SCHOOLS AS AID TO LOVE MAKING URGED

Peace Executive Would Make Social Centers of Houses of Instruction in Big Cities.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Arthur Deering Call, executive director of the American Peace Society, has undertaken to win for the young men and women of America the right to make love to each other.

Said he:

"One of the nation's greatest needs is the promotion of acquaintance between young men and women, the fathers and mothers of the next generation, under free, attractive and wholesome conditions. We need more wholesome conditions for 'courting.'

"I can think of nothing so important to this generation as the lifemates of its various individuals, or so vital to the next as its fathers and mothers and home life generally.

Would Use Schools.

"I propose a wider use of school buildings for social and neighborhood purposes. I do not want love-making a part of the school curriculum, but I think that the same lips that recite the multiplication table or decline a noun in the class room in the garish light of day might just as well whisper tender nothings while the moon peeks in at the window later on.

"For a great majority of our young people in the cities the dance halls provide the only regular amusement they can afford, where any man who has the price can step up to any young woman and ask her to dance. No wonder such places become recruiting places for vice.

No Instruction Needed.

"Why not let the school be a cross between the church and the saloon? Every school should be arranged so that in the evening the young folks could gather there for games, folk-dancing classes, music, athletics, sewing classes and moving pictures.

"All the young folks want is opportunity to meet under proper environment. We don't have to teach the men how to make love, or young women how to listen to them, but we owe it to the race not to hinder or pervert their natural tendencies by improper environment."

CONVICTS DINE IN HOTEL THEN SEE MOVING PICTURE

COLUMBUS, O., June 28.—Five penitentiary prisoners, serving sentences ranging from manslaughter to pocket picking, were taken from their cells by an official of the State Board of Administration and treated to a banquet at one of the large hotels. Following the banquet the prisoners were taken to moving picture shows and given an entertainment which they will long remember.

TROOPS TO MAKE CAVALRY RAID OF THE SHENANDOAH

Realistic Advance Next Month Into the Historic Valley May Mean New System.

70 MILES FROM CAPITAL

Reorganization Plans Will Be Put to Severe Test During the Strenuous Campaign.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Troopers at Fort Myer have begun preparations for their 70-mile march into the Shenandoah Valley next month to participate in maneuvers expected to result in reorganization of the mounted forces of the army.

The Shenandoah Valley, where "Phil" Sheridan made his famous ride 50 years ago, has been chosen as the bloodless battle ground for the test. For two months this summer a full brigade of cavalry and a battery of horse artillery will maneuver and "fight" over the red roads, the green hills, and fields near Winchester.

The department has leased a tract of ground one mile broad and two miles long in the heart of the Shenandoah, 70 miles away, and orders were issued to the troops some time ago.

Oglethorpe Troopers on March.

Two regiments of the brigade, those from Fort Ethan Allen, Vt., and Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., must ride 700 dusty miles under a summer sun before they can reach the valley, and they must report July 20. The First Squadron from Fort Myer will have only 70 miles to go, and the horse battery from Fort Riley, Kans., will be sent by rail.

Secretary Garrison will be a frequent spectator. Major General Wood, chief of staff, United States Army, probably will spend much time there, and President Wilson may make the trip.

The necessity for a rehabilitation of the cavalry was disclosed when the general staff some time ago made ambitious plans for the reorganization of the army so as to prepare it for the defense of the country against attack by any great military power. This resulted in the sending to Europe last year of a board of six cavalry officers, who studied the German, Russian, Austro-Hungarian, French and English organizations.

Officers Study Abroad.

Four months were spent abroad by these officers, and since their return they have prepared plans for radical changes in the organization and use of cavalry of the American army.

The tests will take place under the direction of Colonel C. H. Murray, of the Twelfth Cavalry, as Brigadier General E. J. McClernand, the head of the cavalry board, is prohibited from exercising actual command by virtue of his retirement. General McClernand, however, with Lieutenant Colonels J. T. Dickmann and Fred S. Foltz, Major Jesse McI. Carter and Captain Frank Parker, all members of the board which studied the European systems, will be present.

Some of the practical questions to be worked out are:

How large a command can a captain handle successfully?

How many such units can a colonel handle to the best advantage under conditions approximating hostilities?

The new formation of the cavalry into double ranks also will be tried out on a large scale, a practical test by Captain Parker, of the Eleventh Cavalry, at Fort Huachuca, Ariz., with an experimental squadron having been pronounced a complete success by General H. L. Scott.

As an individual the American trooper may be the best cavalry soldier in the world, but for 40 years he has been so handicapped by defective organization as to make a poor showing in comparison with the splendid mounted soldiers of the great continental armies.

Saharet Ends Her Dancing Days

Grace Only For Banker Husband

Picture of Saharet, which won heart of Fritz von Frantzius, wealthy banker and broker of Chicago. The work is in his famous collection.

Former Terpsichorean, With Whose Picture Wealthy Broker Fell in Love Declares She Has Forsaken Stage.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Toes of Saharet that have twinkled for thousands of admirers on three continents will twinkle no more, though Saharet still loves her art. For her dancing days are done. Her husband has said so and she promised to obey no later than Monday.

When the dancer became the wife of Fritz von Frantzius he had but one order. It was an edict against the dancing that so many have paid out real dollars to see and which did much toward winning the heart of the Chicago banker, who is now her husband.

May Dance in Privte.

She may trip a few steps as she steps from budoir to dining room. She may assume a classic pose every now and then when she asks the janitor why the heat isn't turned on. But these performances will be for the home circle. To the general public Saharet has ceased to exist.

To-day Mrs. von Frantzius was very much at home in her suite at the Plaza Hotel, but she had not forgotten her stage life so completely as to refuse to pose for photographers. But she wouldn't pose in dancing posture.

"I am going to give up dancing, at least in public," she declared. "I am giving it up because my husband has asked it. If I dance it will be for my husband. I am going to be a devoted wife and will be gloriously happy. Right this minute I am the happiest woman in the world."

Fell in Love With Picture.

Saharet, whose name was Saharet Rose, and the banker met several years ago, after he had fallen in love with a painting of her by Franz von Stuck.

Shortly after he was divorced by his first wife and since then has woed the dancer ardently.

She came to the United States Monday from Europe to wed him, but declared that she had not fully made up her mind in reference to the step until the liner touched the pier.

EQUINE TRAMP FALLS THROUGH TIES OF TRESTLE

Horse Fares Forth to See World But Comes to Grief on Bridge. Firemen Rescue Him.

ST. PAUL, June 28.—Bent on seeing the world, a horse belonging to Roland Foix, 813 Jackson Street, forsook his stall and "hit the ties" on the Soo line tracks leading eastward out of St. Paul. He had reached the middle of the long trestle near Cortland and Maryland Streets when his feet missed the ties and he found himself struggling for freedom without avail.

Before he was freed he had succeeded in tying up traffic in both directions for nearly an hour, and the Soo passenger train from Chicago, with more than 300 passengers on board, was compelled to wait.

His predicament was first discovered by a section crew passing over the bridge. The men worked over the horse for nearly half an hour before they called upon John A. Moak, animal agent of the humane society. He used all devices at his command to no avail. Meanwhile the 300 passengers on the train, as well as the engineer and conductor, were getting somewhat impatient.

Then some one suggested that the fire department might be called to help the horse down. Hook and Ladder Company No. 9 responded to the call. Raising their ladders to the trestle with the aid of a few ropes and a large squad of volunteers, the firemen soon had him bound and let him down safely to the ground below. The train then proceeded.

Church Bars Wedding And Girl Files Suit

Breach of Promise Action Started, Though Both Parties Declare They Are Ready for Ceremony.

ATCHISON, KANS., June 28.—Although both parties to a $25,000 breach of marriage contract suit filed here recently say they are willing to wed, the suit will go on.

Miss Mary Falk, of Purcell, alleges that she entered into a verbal contract to marry William Burke, of Troy, a few months ago.

Church officers say they will not marry Burke because he is unable to procure a sworn statement from his mother in Ireland certifying to the time of his baptism in the Catholic Church. Burke says he will marry Miss Mary Falk any time, and, in her petition for the suit Miss Falk says she is still willing to marry Burke.

But as a priest will not marry them, as both are unwilling to forsake their religion, Miss Falk says she can not consistently dismiss the suit, although she still loves Burke. Miss Falk's petition alleges that Burke is wealthy.

New Mexico After Jap Immigration

State Commercial Organization Wants Nipponese to Till Soil of the Pecos Valley.

ARTESIA, N. MEX., June 28.—The Chamber of Commerce of Arizona evidently has no fear of a war between the United States and Japan. Acting on advices from F. J. Lukins, who has been investigating the character of the Japanese in California, this organization issued a general invitation to citizens of Japan who desire to come to New Mexico to till the soil.

They are wanted especially in the Pecos Valley. There are a few Japs at Lakewood, N. Mex., who are making record-breaking crops of melons and onions.

Busch Loses $10,000 Wager on Wedding

Famous Brewer Didn't Think Grandson Was in Love With Mrs. Lambert

ST. LOUIS, June 28.—Adolphus Busch will lose a wager of $10,000 on the day his grandson, Adolphus Busch III, becomes the husband of Mrs. Florence Parker Lambert, according to a close relative.

Several months ago, when young Busch and the divorcee first betrayed particular fondness for each other's company, Mrs. Edward A. Faust remarked in the presence of her father, Adolphus Busch, that they would be married some day.

The wealthy brewer thought the prediction so preposterous that he made a wager with his daughter of $10,000 to $1,000 her prophecy would not prove correct. With the announcement of the engagement, the grandfather is conceded to have lost.

Mrs. Faust, with her husband, is accompanying her father on a trip to Europe.

NEGRO GIVES FOUR PENNIES FOR FIVE DOLLAR BILLS

INDIANAPOLIS, June 28.—While Miss Stella Koch was busy tending a stand on the city market last night, a well dressed negro asked if she could give him some paper money for gold.

"I have four $5 gold pieces," he explained, "and I would like to get some paper money in exchange for them, as I do not like to carry gold in my pocket."

The girl said she could accommodate him, and going to the cash drawer produced four $5 bills. She handed the bills to the negro, and he dropped four bright, shining pennies into her outstretched hand.

Grandparents Get College Diplomas

Grandson Member of Audience When Couple Receive Degrees From Baylor University.

WACO, TEXAS, June 28.—It leaked out to-day that among the graduates of Baylor University this commencement were a husband and wife.

They possibly possess the honor of being the only grandfather and grandmother to complete a college course in the presence of their grandchild.

Mr. and Mrs. William Porter received their sheepskins while in the audience were Leeland Rook, of Bosqueville, their grandson, and Mrs. Matilda Porter, of Waco, Mrs. Porter's mother.

WOMAN SMOKER, 108, DIES.

BRYAN, OHIO, June 28.—Mrs. Elizabeth Maugherman, pioneer settler of Northwest township, Williams County, is dead at the home of her daughter, twelve days after her hundred and eighth birthday. Mrs. Maugherman was an inveterate smoker, acquiring the tobacco habit when as a child, she filled her mother's pipe.

Mashers Told to Think of Sisters

Pastor Says That Presuming on Feminine Acquaintance Is Greatest Aid to White Slavery.

MINNEAPOLIS, June 28.—"A spendthrift sweetheart and an extravagant wife have ruined many lives," said the Rev. T. W. Stout in a sermon at Calvary Methodist Church. "Young women can help to form high moral standards among the boys by not permitting great expenditures upon themselves."

He illustrated how laziness makes a weak character that falls in the crisis of life by knocking the prop from under a three-legged chair. "White slavery begins with presuming on feminine acquaintance and bold advances to clerks," he said. "It ends in blood money and lost souls. Every young man should ask himself in dealing with girls: 'Suppose my sister were in her place—what would I want done?'"

CHURCHES TO STUDY HYGIENE.

GRAND JUNCTION, COL., June 28. Sex hygiene in the schools and in the churches is being urged by the Grand Junction Church Federation.

HEIRS TO RICHES LEFT BY TITANIC VICTIM SOUGHT

J. Montague Smart, Prominent Business Man, Left Fortune. No Trace of Beneficiaries.

NEW YORK, June 28.—During his active life J. Montgomery Smart was a man of mystery. Now that his bones lie in the sunken Titanic, his past is a greater puzzle than ever, and so far it is unsolved. Usually when a man dies, even though he may have been of distinction, his hidden history is buried with him. But Smart was a man of wealth, and it became necessary to try to discover vital facts of his intimate personal life.

Thus began a world-wide search that has served only to make the case of J. Montgomery Smart all the stranger. He was an honored and successful man of business, whose transactions were international in scope, even extending from New York to Australia.

Necessary to Find Heirs.

Having left money, it became necessary to find his heirs. It was remembered that this man of silence never described his family. It was known that he had been married and that his wife had died ten years before. Vague words dropped here and there were gathered and it became apparent that Smart had two children, a boy of 20 and a girl of 18.

But no one could be found who had any definite idea of their whereabouts.

Into three countries of Europe the filaments of inquiry extended. The American consuls of many ports were asked to aid in the hunt. That was in May, 1912.

One fact was discovered in the course of the Belgian hunt. It was asserted that the children were in charge of a Mrs. Cook, who was a great friend of Mrs. Smart, and that Smart was paying her liberally to care for them. But who was Mrs. Cook? Her identity was also impossible to discover, and the hunt settled down into a hope that the guardian would write for funds, thus solving the riddle. But she has been swallowed in silence.

Had Many Acquaintances.

As president of the American Cold Storage and Shipping Company, Smart had made many acquaintances among prominent business men of New York, London, Berlin, Paris and many other cities throughout the world. Many believed that they knew him well. But when the test came, they were surprised to find that only the barest information was obtainable about his personal affairs.

Smart was a hermit in a great city, and he was a hermit in his many voyages and travels in foreign countries.

Husband Will Woo Wife if He's Divorced

Tells Judge He Will Renew Methods of Courting Days if Decree Is Granted.

KANSAS CITY, June 28.—"If my wife succeeds in getting a divorce from me I am going to begin all over with my courting days and try to win back her love," Andrew Mathers said in Judge Johnson's court. "Her charges in this case do not in any way affect my devotion and admiration for her."

Mathers is a wealthy building contractor and lives at 4403 Virginia Avenue. He has been contesting the suit of his wife, Louise Mathers. They were married in 1896 and have three children.

Mrs. Mathers charges that her husband became intoxicated frequently.

Victim of Ohio Flood Travels to California on Freight Train to Become Wife.

VENICE, CAL., June 28.—Miss Ethel Johnston, a young woman from Dayton, Ohio, arrived here in begrimed and torn boy's costume to join her fiance. Miss Johnston and J. L. Perry had been sweethearts in Dayton. The youth moved West a short time ago to prepare a home for his sweetheart.

When the flood came Miss Johnston, who was living with her aunt, lost her home, as well as her only relatives. She cut her hair short, donned boys' clothing and struck out with but a few dollars for the coast. She traveled almost the entire distance on freight trains.

Dog Rescues Girl With Dress Aflame

Shepherd Leaps Into Brook and Then Shakes His Dripping Body on Blazing Skirt

NEW YORK, June 28.—The remarkable intelligence and devotion of a Shepherd dog saved Miss Florence Sheldon, of 4 Llewellyn road, Montclair, from serious injury yesterday when her dress was accidentally set on fire.

Unconscious of the smouldering fire, the girl sat on the bank of a brook throwing sticks into the stream. Suddenly the dog began to bark furiously. He dashed into the brook, and returning, threw his dripping body on the now blazing skirt and extinguished the fire. A square foot of the garment was burned.

COMMISSION FINDS $4 FAMILY'S DAILY NEED

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Four dollars a day is the minimum wage on which a family can be supported in this city, according to the report today of the Municipal Industrial Investigating Committee. Of nearly 50,000 cases covered by the inquiry, more than 6,000 men and considerably more than half of all the women employed received less than $2 a day. A permanent wage commission is urged.

Asks Divorce When Husband Denied Her Right to Comb Hair

Wife Tells Court That Inasmuch as Suffrage Is Given Woman She Should Care for Tresses.

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—"Suffrage has been accorded to women; why then can I not comb my hair when and where I want to?"

This question, addressed to Judge Monroe by Mrs. Lucile Evarts, raised one of the most vexing points he had been confronted with in the divorce court. Mrs. Evarts demands a divorce from Eugene B. Evarts for the above cause. To think it over, Judge Monroe continued the case.

"Wouldn't he let you comb your hair?" the Judge had asked.

"Not only that, but the way he made me stop was anything but that of a gentleman," asserted the plaintiff.

"I will say," continued Judge Monroe, "that every woman has a right to comb her hair, in fact it is a highly commendable trait when a woman will insist on being undisturbed while doing so."

Mrs. Evarts tripped out of court evidently highly pleased with the case she had made out.

"He cannot deny he inteferred," was her parting comment.

Three of One Family Wed in Six Months

College Graduate Takes Wife Shortly After Nuptials of His Brother and Sister.

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, June 28.—When Ralph Raymond, the son of Mr. and Mrs. William H. Beal, of Palo Alto, and who graduated from the electrical engineering department of Stanford University last year, wedded Miss Merle Bertsche, of Palo Alto, the third Beal romance of the last six months was in full swing.

Last fall his sister, Leona Beal, traveled all the way to Cleveland, Ohio, to become the bride of John Howard Payne. Carl Beal, who rowed in two varsity regattas, left college during the spring to pull an oar in the matrimonial sea, and the present romance gives Cupid a record of three in six months in one family.

State Won't Pay for Mark Twain Statue

Missouri Refuses to Honor Warrant of Sculptor and Monument Will Have to Stay Covered.

HANNIBAL, MO., June 28.—There will be no dedication of the Mark Twain Monument in Hannibal this year, although arrangements had been about completed to have the dedication in October in connection with a fall celebration. Judge F. L. Schofield, a member of the monument commission, made public this report:

"The Legislature appropriated $10,000 for a monument to Samuel L. Clemens. A commission was appointed to contract for the erection of the monument.

"We forwarded a warrant for $2,000 to Mr. Hibbert, who has the contract for making the statue. To my astonishment he informed the commission that the State Auditor refused to honor the warrant."

Finds Watch Indian Took From Father

Surveyor Recovers Timepiece of Parent Slain in Massacre of Thornburg's Troop.

CRAIG, COLO., June 28.—D. W. Grams, Government surveyor, returned from a few days spent in the White Rock reservation in Utah. While there he recovered a gold watch from one of the Indians which had evidently been removed by one of the braves from the body of his father following a battle with the red men during the early days.

The elder Grams was a sergeant in Major Thornburg's troop, which was ambushed and almost annihilated while marching from Rawlins to the relief of the Indian agency at Meeker, and he was among those killed.

John Bunyan's Anvil Found in Junk Pile

Relic Bears Name of Author of "Pilgrim's Progress," and Is Dated 1647.

PASADENA, CAL., June 28.—Bearing the name of J. Bunyan, the date 1647, and the word Helstowe, an ancient anvil, the original property of the author of "Pilgrim's Progress," is now in the possession of Maurice Beagarie, of 57 Green Street.

The relic was discovered in a junk heap in St. Neots, near the town of Elstowe, or Helstowe, where Bunyan lived, by Beagarie's father, about 30 years ago, and was presented by him to his son ten years ago.

SCHOOL ROLLS FAIL TO KEEP UP WITH BIRTHS

Wide Discrepancy Is Shown in Number of Pupils and Increase of Children.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Chapters on "Roman Catholic Schools," "Typical Health Teaching Agencies of the United States," and "Parent-Teacher Associations" are special features of the annual report of the United States Commissioner of Education, just issued.

In addition to these the report contains substantial chapters on the following subjects: General survey of the year; educational legislation during 1912; higher education; city school systems; rural education; recent movements in negro education; a review of agricultural education; progress in vocational education; library development; education in Alaska, the Philippines, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and other dependencies; Indian education; educational activities in Canada, Latin-America, Great Britain, Northern Europe, France and Switzerland, Germany, Southern Europe and Russia; together with a general view of conditions in Asia, Africa, Australia and New Zealand.

In his introduction to the report the commissioner discusses the wide discrepancy between the increase in the number of children of school age and the actual enrollment; an apparent reduction in teachers' salaries during the year; the remarkable increase in high schools and high school enrollment throughout the country; the decrease in professional schools, due to the enforcement of higher standards, lack of preparation of teachers, which Dr. Claxton characterizes as "one of the greatest evils of our school systems;" the shortness of the school term in the United States as compared with other civilized nations; and the abnormally large percentage of illiteracy in the rural districts.

In noting signs of real advancement during the year, Dr. Claxton lays special emphasis upon the growing realization of the unity of all educational effort. "That education, however differentiated and complex, is one thing, not many, seems to be better understood than it has been for many years," he declares. "This is probably the most important symptom of all."

COLLEGE GIRLS DECLARED BEST HOME MAKERS

Speakers Say University Training Equips Women for the Various Duties of Family Life.

IOWA CITY, IOWA, June 28.—University girls are not spoiled as homemakers by their college education, according to Mrs. James Swan, of 2216 Kenwood Parkway, Minneapolis, who responded to the toast, "The Lady and the Ginger Jar," at the University of Iowa banquet, the social feature of the fifty-third annual commencement exercises at Iowa City. Mrs. Swan was Miss Ethel A. Elliott, of the class of 1906, Iowa University.

Mrs. Swan declared:

"It is all folly to say that university girls do not make good homes. The woman who has a complete four-year course in the university is fully equipped for her place in the home.

"When a girl is given all the advantages that a great State university can well afford to give her through its university course; when her mind is trained to quick and sensible action so she can with womanly grace adjust herself to the different and varied demands upon the present-day matron; when she is on an intellectual equality with her 'better half;' when she has a trained imagination to grasp and understand a view different from her own, then will the home be a success."

Skylarkers Mobbed By Throng of Women

Man Falls in Baby Carriage While He Plays on Sidewalk and Starts Small iot.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Several hundred persons, most of them women attacked Frederick Mochson and Raymond Dragoni, last night when one of the men, as a result of skylarking, fell in the baby carriage of the 18-months-old son of Joseph Billon in front of the Billon home, at 57 East One Hundred and Eleventh Street.

The baby carriage rolled off the sidewalk. Then the crowd got active. Mochson and Dragoni were dragged in the gutter and kicked and pummelled. Stones and garbage were thrown at them. When the reserves learned what had started the affair they locked up the two men on charges of disorderly conduct.

PIGEONS FIGHT, DOG EATS CORN, ALL IN ONE DAY

Another Canine Hooks Two Great Sea Bass and Lands Them in the Ocean.

BIG FROG SILENCES TRAIN

Engine Crew Declares His Croak Is Louder Than Mogul Whistle, Eyes Bigger Than Saucers.

There still exist persons bold enough to brave Rooseveltian anger despite recent results in the Michigan suit that made brandy and milk America's national beverage.

For, despite the Colonel's ceaseless warfare, the nature fakers still exist, and they don't stop at existing. They are growing like the green bay tree and summer fish stories.

In one day the public prints carried the following items of news, and papers protest their accuracy:

Went for Buttermilk.

From little old New York comes the yarn that John Elliott left the dock at Mariner harbor, Staten Island, to get a glass of buttermilk. He had also left his fish line in the water and his faithful dog to guard it. When he returned, dog and line had disappeared. A search disclosed the dog swimming with the line in his mouth. When he was rescued, it was found that he had hooked two big sea bass and was being towed out to the ocean. The story is easily believable if the buttermilk is forgotten.

Wheeling, W. Va., is not to be outdone. The Wheeling chronicler relates that Howard Wilkinson, an express messenger, dropped a purse containing $115 in bills and silver. It was seized by a hungry dog, and before it could be recovered, the canine had chewed the bills into an irredeemable mess, while he had swallowed $40 in coins.

Pigeons Aid Sparrows.

Chester, Pa., advices tell that workmen repairing the steeple of St. Paul's Episcopal Church were attacked and placed in peril of death by a horde of sparrows, who had made the belfry their home. The writer doesn't stop with the notoriously combative sparrow, though, but insists that they had formed an offensive and defensive alliance with a flock of meek and lowly pigeons, who joined the fray with considerable effectiveness.

But at last comes Hyndman, Pa., on the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, with the story that trainmen have been perturbed by a gigantic frog, whose voice is an exact duplicate of the whistle of a mogul engine. Wrecks have been narrowly averted when flagmen returned to their trains on mistaking his croak for a signal from the engineer. Trainmen assert they have seen the frog, which is two feet high and has eyes as large as ordinary tea saucers.

Trowbridge Is Telling Stories Once More

The Famous Author Amuses His Grandson

John T. Trowbridge, author beloved by millions of boys, and Francis von Baur, his grandson.

Francis Von Baur Is the Lucky Little Boy to Hear Tales for Himself Alone.

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., June 28.—All the boys grew up with "Jack Hazard," in the '70's and '80's, and all the boys who have grown up with "Biddicut Boys" and "Tinkham Brothers" since then are agreed that Francis von Baur is a little American boy to be envied.

For Francis von Baur is the grandson of John T. Trowbridge, the creator of "Jack Hazard," author of many other stories for old and young, and poet, whose "Roger and I" ("The Vagabonds"), "Darius Green and His Flying Machine," and "The Boy I Love" have been memorized, and are known and loved wherever boys and girls and even men and women speak the English language.

Francis von Baur is almost five years old. His mother is the poet's daughter.

Trowbridge Now 86.

According to the reference books and the newspaper clippings—according, even to the author himself, in the charming autobiography he calls "My Own Story"—Mr. Trowbridge was born in 1827, and is, therefore, eighty-six.

The little Master von Baur is ending the summer with his grandpa in Arlington. The author lives in Pleasant Street, a delightful thoroughfare. The Trowbridge house sets well back from the street, across a spacious lawn. Mr. Trowbridge spends much of his time on the south porch, the waters of Spy Pond almost at his feet. From the windows of his chamber he can see the gilded dome on the State House.

Frequently Mr. Trowbridge walks abroad in Arlington, hand in hand with his grandson. Sometimes they call at the beautiful Arlington library. Mr. Trowbridge is always glad to hear that the young people of his home town still delight in "Cudjo's Cave," "Neighbor Jackwood" and the "Hazard" stories. His poems, of course, find favor with young and old alike.

Author Still Hale.

Imagine hearing the story of "The Vagabonds" as the author must tell it:

We are two travelers, Roger and I,
Roger's my dog—Come here, you scamp!
Or, perhaps the story of "Darius Green and His Flying Machine:
If ever there lived a Yankee lad,
Wise or otherwise, good or bad,
Who, seeing the birds fly, didn't jump
With flapping arms from stake or stump,
Or, spreading the tail of his coat for a sail,
Take a soaring leap from post or rail,
And wonder why
He couldn't fly
And flap and flutter and wish and try—
If ever you knew a country dance
Who didn't try that as often as once.
All I can say is, that's a sign
He never would do for a hero of mine.

Certainly, Francis von Baur is a boy to be envied, to hear these marvelous tales from Trowbridge himself.

If it were not for the reference works and "My Own Story," not even a Yankee boy would guess the celebrated author to be more than seventy. His skin has the ruddy glow that comes from being much in the open. Nor is his conversation the conversation of a very old or even an elderly man.

He keeps abreast of the times. While he has not written much for publication since the completion of his autobiography, ten years ago, he knows what the younger men of letters are doing, and he is closely in touch with current affairs and literature.

To meet Mr. Trowbridge, and to find him still so young, is an inspiration.

To know that one is listening to a famous author who lived and worked with Longfellow and Emerson and Lowell and Dr. Holmes!

"I knew them all," Mr. Trowbridge says," except Hawthorne."

He explains: "Hawthorne was shy." And then he adds quietly: "So was I."

JAILED BANDIT SENDS ESSAY ON MORALS TO BOY

"Obey Parents, Save Money, and Avoid Fast Life," Robber Writes His Little Friend.

BELOIT, WIS., June 28.—From his cell in jail at Chicago Robert Webb, the auto bandit, writes little Ambrose Regan of this city a letter telling him to be a good boy, that the fast life does not pay.

"Obey your parents and save your money," he writes. "Work faithfully and live right, and when you grow up you will never regret it."

A while ago young Regan visited the jail and met Webb, who took a fancy to him and told him he would write him a letter. Webb kept his word.

Writes Boy Letter.

The letter is as follows:

"My Dear Little Friend: I received your welcome letter this noon and was glad to hear from you, as I said I would write you a letter to-day. I hope anything that you and I were talking about last Saturday is some good to you, and I believe that it is. I will always write you a letter and I hope you will always be a good little boy.

"Always do what your father tells you to do. As you live in a nice quiet town like Beloit you should not try to say that you wish your father would move to Chicago, where you think of nothing but living and going fast.

Fast Life Doesn't Pay.

"As I told you, the fast life does not pay. When you start to go to work the first week start right in saving your money by putting $1 or whatever you are able to put in the bank. Do this every week and when you are 21 you will find out that it is a big sum. Don't try to live beyond your income. I don't believe you will, as you are the brightest little friend I have, and I will write you a letter every week and tell you all I am able to help you, and I believe if you follow my advice you will never regret it, as I always want you to be a good boy. When you grow up to be a young gentleman you will never be sorry for doing it. So I will close my little note and write you another in a few days.

"I remain, as ever, your friend.

"ROBERT F. WEBB."

Fortune in Gold Awaits Claimants

Insane Kansas Woman Leaves Bag of Nuggets and Dust Worth $10,000.

HUTCHINSON, KANS., June 28.—A bag of gold nuggets and gold dust worth $10,000 awaits any heirs who may be found to the estate of Mrs. Ann M. Bernhart, who died recently in Davenport, Iowa, according to the announcement of G. M. Duckworth, administrator.

Several years ago Mrs. Bernhart was adjudged of unsound mind. Duckworth was named her guardian. The cottage here where she lived alone was closed and she went to an asylum. Upon her death Duckworth thoroughly searched her cottage. The nuggets and dust in small bags were found secreted in the dwelling.

COAL OIL JOHN, SPENDTHRIFT, OLD AND BROKE

Threw Away Millions Like Sawdust, but Tells Home People He Doesn't Regret Past.

YARREN, PA., June 28.—A personage of the long ago, one whom many believed to be dead, "Coal Oil Johnny" Steele, greatest spendthrift of his day, has returned to the town that knew him as a coal oil wagon driver when he earned $2 a day and was glad to get it. Afterward he was known to throw thousands and hundreds of thousands of dollars around Broadway and Philadelphia, and by his reckless extravagance became a national figure.

Once a cabman told him his wife wanted a diamond ring. "Coal Oil Johnny" said: "I'll give you $300 for your cab."

"You're on," said the cabman.

"Ride me around the block," said John, and when the trip had been completed and he was dumped again at the entrance of the Girard House, in Philadelphia, he said: "Now, Conway, me boy, you can have your cab back and keep the $300 and get your wife that diamond ring."

As the adopted son of the "Widow" McClintock, on whose farm an oil well gushed every time a drill was sunk, he came into a huge fortune in 1875, and "Coal Oil Johnny's" spendthrift race was run in three years.

The farm still yielded oil, but men sharper in business than he acquired the "gold mine" and Johnny went to Nebraska, after confessing himself a bankrupt for $32,789. He owed nearly $20,000 to the Girard House in Philadelphia, $10,000 to a lawyer, $5,800 to a firm of jewelers where he had formerly spent at least $200,000, more than $2,000 for liquors, the same for an oil painting, and $300 for bats, to say nothing of $1,500 for billiard tables.

"Coal Oil Johnny" is now 70. He likes to recall some of his past delights, especially that when he bought a whole minstrel company and had it assemble at a hall and give an entertainment to his friends.

Referendum Vote On Dogs and Dog Tax

Citizens of Iola Indignant Over Law Regulating Freedom of Pets.

IOLA, KANS., June 28.—The right of a dog to run at large will be the subject of a referendum election to be held in Iola within twenty days.

Some time ago the City Commissioners passed an ordinance providing that no dog harbored within the city limits should be permitted to run at large or use the streets of the town except for a few weeks in winter. The commissioners also imposed a heavy dog tax.

Owners of dogs appealed to the commissioners without effect. At a recent mass meeting a petition for a referendum on the ordinance was drawn up. Yesterday it was returned with 800 signers, more than 25 per cent of the voters. Under the law, the commissioners are compelled to call an election within 30 days.

DROPS MISSIVE FROM AIR CRAFT TO LOVE ON SHIP

Millionaire, Oft Rejected by Widow, Hires Aeroplane to Propose As She Sails on Voyage.

HAYNE'S LOVE MESSAGE.

If all the broad Pacific waves
Should rise to give you greeting;
If guardians of the pearly graves
Can so forbear a meeting,
That they will send you back again
Then leave no lone life barren,
But heed this quest from aeroplane
And be mine—Your Own Warren.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—And now the aerial navies are dropping love notes and proposals from the central blue.

For the uppest-to-datest method of wooing was employed recently by J. Warren Hayne, who is now palpitating at the St. Francis awaiting a reply to his daring and original offer of his heart, his fortune and his hand.

This J. Warren Hayne is a mining millionaire, who is at home in Omaha, Neb., but whose interests, like England's drum beat, follow the sun around the world.

Pleas on Knees Unavailing.

In the city of Omaha was Mrs. Katheryn M. Shary, who divorced a successful business man of that city.

Millionaire Hayne met her, and to meet her was to love her. She became the idol of his dreams. Down he went upon his knee and asked the witching divorcee to share his millions, his successes and his home.

But—such is lovely woman's way—she shook her pretty head. She could only be a sister to him, his mines and his bank account.

She went on her way, traveling industriously, but she packed his heart in her suitcase, when she went, and he proposed by mail and telegraph and said him nay.

Mrs. Shary was one of the most attractive of the women who made the trip from New York to San Francisco in the big steamer Cleveland—"the widow ship"—and when she landed Hayne had ready for her another "wilt thou be mine?" But again the answer was a negative.

The wanderlust mastered her and she came again to San Francisco, where she boarded the steamer Tahiti on another globe-girdling journey.

How He Did It.

And, of course, J. Warren Hayne neglected his business and turned his back on his home folks to follow her here, hoping that devotion would at last win from her an answering smile and a blushful "yes."

She took the steamer, however, with the "No" still upon the beautiful lips, and then Hayne was put to it to devise some extraordinary means to win her on the blue.

He composed a poetic declaration of love, a lyrical offer of his hand, and rushed to Christoffersen, the aviator.

"I must be taken out over the Tahiti as she sails!" he declared, and Christoffersen gave him a seat and started.

They met the Tahiti, circled over her desk, and dropped his love message in a tube addressed to the blithesome Mrs. Shary.

And now J. Warren Hayne's heart is aflutter in the hope that his originality, his bravery and his dash will at last win the woman beyond all compare.

Indian Girl Writes Opera on Sioux Life

Zitkala Sa Composed "The Sun Dance"—Gave It on Reservation.

SALT LAKE CITY, June 28.—On the Uintah reservation at Vernal, Utah, nearly 100 miles from a railroad, an Indian girl has written an opera, with her people as the theme and motif. It is one thing to write an opera and another to have it produced. Zitkala Sa, a full-blooded Sioux, has accomplished both these things.

When "The Sun Dance" was sung in Vernal, Indians and whites drove in from 40 miles around to hear it; and, having heard it, they pronounced it a triumph. Efforts are being made to have the opera sung in Salt Lake City during the week of the National Education Association, July 5 to 11.

"The Sun Dance," as it was produced at Vernal in March, was not altogether the work of Kitkala Sa and her copper-hued brethren of the Uintah reservation. Professor William F. Hansen, of the faculty, and white as well as Indian students of Uintah Academy played important roles in the preparation and singing of the piece. It was, in fact, part of the academy work.

15 Kisses a Day Prevent All Rows

Chicago Evangelist Lays Down Rules That Insure Happy Married Life.

GRAND JUNCTION, COLO., June 28.—The ideal husband and the ideal wife, as they should be, have been discovered by the Rev. Mr. Marshall Pennesfield Parter, an evangelist of Chicago.

Rev. Mr. Parter says he has spent the last three months visiting with more than 100 families in different parts of the country in an endeavor to find the perfect husband and wife.

The ideal husband, according to Rev. Mr. Parter, thinks of his wife twice an hour when at work.

He spends five out of seven nights each week in his wife's company.

He carries her picture in his watch case.

He kisses his wife when he leaves for his office in the morning and at noon and again when he returns from work.

He gives her each month money enough to run the house, clothe herself and the children and care for incidentals and emergency expenses.

He calls his wife "Love," "Dear" or "Sweetheart" at least fifteen times per day and twice a week buys her flowers or some other gift.

Kindness Rewarded By Large Fortune

Wealth Comes to Women Who Aided Tuberculosis Victim Several Years Ago.

DENVER, June 28.—Kindness extended to a hungry victim of tuberculosis has brought its reward to Mrs. J. H. Alcortson, of 1104 Corona Street, and her daughter, Mrs. Fred A. Buser, in the shape of a fortune expected to exceed $200,000.

The fortune is to come through royalties on a patent automatic water control for steam boilers and hot water plants, for the rights to which the two women recently refused an offer of $200,000 from an Eastern boiler manufacturer, holding out for a cash payment and a royalty arrangement which they anticipate will net them considerably more money than the cash offer.

Carl Lindgren, the inventor, was befriended by the women and never forgot it.

Puts on Wrong Coat; Held as 'Gun Toter'

Mistake in Wearing Apparel Causes Man to Land in Police Station Under Arrest.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Two men ran afoul of the police yesterday through violation of the ordinances relating to concealed weapons. William Dunn, an employee of the Sam Schnalhausen wholesale liquor house, met trouble when he put his revolver, through mistake, in the coat belonging to Joe Walsh, his bartender. Dunn put on Walsh's coat, by mistake, and as a result landed in the police station. The other case was that of Aureal La Forrest, picked up by the Hyde Park police with an automatic pistol in his pocket, and the meager explanation that he was carrying it "to show to a friend."

SOUTH AMERICA WELL TO FRONT FOR 1915 FAIR

Two Republics Are Scheduled to Dedicate Their Sites Within the Next Week.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—Within the next week two South American republics will dedicate their sites for participation in the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

Romulo S. Naon, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of the Argentine Republic to the United States, will arrive in this city tomorrow, June 15, to dedicate a site for the exposition, and on Monday the New Jersey Exposition Commissioners will reach this city for the purpose of dedicating New Jersey's site.

On June 19 Joaquin Mendez, Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Guatemala to this country, will dedicate Guatemala's site.

Minister Knowles, in a recent statement, declared that competition had been started in Bolivia to select musicians for a crack military band that will visit the exposition.

He proposes also to have at the exposition a small colony of Indians from Lake Titicaca in their native costumes and plying their balsas or native boats. He also strongly advocates a replica of Potosi Hill, where the Spaniards took out hundreds of millions of dollars in gold and silver.

Youth Likes Books On Heavy Subjects

Oregon Freshman Reads of Social Science, Philosophy and Religion.

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, EUGENE, June 28.—Max H. Sommer, a freshman in the University of Oregon, registered from Portland, has a record for assiduous reading during the past collegiate year. According to the report of Librarian Douglass, Sommer's card shows that he has taken out 89 volumes, the majority of which would be classed as "heavy reading."

Of the 89 volumes perused by this freshman, 47 are devoted to social science, 28 are classed as pure literature, 5 are works of history and biography, 5 are of a philosophical and religious nature and 4 deal with journalism.

'MOTHER SHIP' IS BUILT TO GUARD U.S. SUBMARINES

New Craft Is Designed to Protect Fleet of Smaller Boats—Cost Is $1,000,000.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Plans for the submarine tender Bushnell, made public at the Navy Department to-day, disclose the fact that the vessel not only is to be an entirely new type in the navy, but will be altogether unique as a war craft. The contract was awarded to a shipbuilding concern in Seattle. Her cost will be close to $1,000,000, and she is to be completed within twenty-one months.

The Bushnell is designed as a "mother ship" for the squadron of submarines, and many roomy staterooms will be provided for the officers and crews of the submarines when they are not actually cruising. Powerful hoisting apparatus will be installed, wherewith a submarine damaged can speedily be lifted to the surface of the sea, and a towing machine will enable the "mother boat" to tow five of her brood at one time.

The little fleet will be independent of a home station, for a well-equipped machine shop aboard the Bushnell will permit of speedy repairs.

STOOPS STOPPED WHILE YOU WAIT

And—the advice is "well put"—DON'T WAIT—too long. Maybe you have waited now until your stooping shoulders are the cause of uncomplimentary remarks on the part of your friends—something like this, perhaps: "Isn't it perfectly dreadful the way Mrs. So-and-So 'stoops?' Too bad—such a pretty figure otherwise; and, indeed, such a pretty woman." Yes—her beauty is marred by the stooped shoulders and hollow chest." Are YOUR friends talking this way about YOU, behind your back? You can step into this store any moment in the day and get a

"KOMFORT BRACE"

And—"LEAVE YOUR STOOP BEHIND YOU"—come out with chest extended, shoulders thrown back and breathing deeply the full flush of health; stepping briskly, feeling vigorous.

The "KOMFORT BRACE" is not a "heating harness," cumbersome and conscious. Just two straight narrow bands of light webbing, and a belt, with automatically adjustable slip bands to be instantly changed for any waist measure. The brace complete, weighs less than three ounces. UNCLE SAM IS NOW GREATEST HORSE BREEDER

Supplies Mounts for the Army From His Virginia Farm and Turns Out Thoroughbreds.

FARMERS ARE HIS PARTNERS

System So Successful That Other Large Studs Will Be Established in the West.

FRONT ROYAL, VA., June 28.—Uncle Sam has recently embarked in the horse business on a gigantic scale. He has started here what is probably the largest horse farm in the world, 5,500 acres, only a few hours' ride from the capital. And this is only the first of his farms. He intends to start several and turn out thoroughbreds by the tens of thousands.

To-day the farm is supplying practically the entire United States Army with its mounts. A short time hence and it will be supplying civilians, and soon, according to Captain Caspar H. Conrad, in charge, and generally acknowledged one of the greatest experts in horse flesh in America, it will be supplying most of the civilized nations of Europe. And the price—now $144.15—may become even cheaper for Americans.

The farm represents an expenditure of more than $600,000, with some $400,000 to be spent within the next year.

Horses Have Everything.

On the farm are all sorts of buildings, sanitary baths, swimming pools, drinking fountains, resting sheds, pleasure paths and even a gigantic hospital—all for horses. Here and there are huge houses wherein reside men. These men look out for the horses.

They talk of little else. Indeed, it would be strange if the case were otherwise, for there are only 100 of these men, and daily they have to look after from 1,500 to 2,000 horses.

It took a long time to start the horse farm—more than half a century.

One day a few years ago a number of high staff officers of the army, watching a cavalry review, made some rather disparaging remarks concerning the appearance of the horses.

"Some of 'em look like mountain goats, and the rest like buffaloes," said one of the officers, and the remark got to the ears of Captain Conrad, and set him to thinking.

After that Captain Conrad had the approval of the War Department to start the farm. August Belmont made Uncle Sam a present of his six best stallions. Those stallions are known the racing world over, as Henry of Navarre, Octagon, Footprint, Belfry II, Vestibule and Marshall King. The six of them, when but two years old, cost $100,000.

Two More Horses Given.

James Camden, millionaire horseman of Versailles, Ky., heard of Belmont's gift and made Uncle Sam a present of his two famous stallions, Boola Boola and Wheelwright, worth about $25,000. Thus the farm was started.

But even with fifty stallions and mares by the hundred breeding on the farm was too slow. Something had to be done to increase the scope of the work—and the answer was found in a scheme to have Uncle Sam take every farmer in the South into partnership. This was done.

The ultimate plan is to sell the horses at a gigantic auction sale, with an army officer as auctioneer, knocking down the animals to the highest bidder.

Uncle Sam's horse farm is probably the only place in the country where no matter what animal you buy you may rest assured of getting a horse that is perfect. If the animal has the slightest blemish it will not be sold.

"Of course," said Captain Conrad, "we know that in this particular case the scar was due entirely to accident. But the farmer doesn't know it. He might have a mare scarred up purely by accident, but we wouldn't take his word for. We demand perfect mares and colts, so we give perfect stallions."

One Word to Decide Estate Ownership

Will Filed for Probate Causes Legal Discussion of Meaning of "And" and "Or."

WOODBURY, N. J., June 25.—The will of the late Aaron Knisell, of Sewell, was offered for probate in the Surrogate's office. This instrument has raised a contention among the heirs. The will left the entire estate to Mrs. Knisell, who died two weeks before her husband, and it is claimed that its provisions lapsed with her death.

The property was left to Mrs. Knisell "and her heirs." Had it read "or" heirs, it is claimed, the estate would go to her heirs; but, as it says "and" heirs, Knisell's brothers claim the estate. A ruling by the court will be necessary to interpret the instrument.

Evelyn Thaw Tells Her Ambition Will Try Something Worth While Reveals Her Plans to Alan Dale

Evelyn Thaw in the days she took New York by storm.

Evelyn Thaw as she is to-day.

As Miss Nesbit, Now Dancing at the Hippodrome, and Booked for Paris and Vienna.

By ALAN DALE.
Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—It was "Hullo, Rag-Time," at the Hippodrome that brought Evelyn Thaw within my jurisdiction, as it has brought many others who I never expected to meet.

So, with the open sesame of elusive art as a go-between, "Miss Nesbit," as she is programed here, received me without hesitancy in her rooms at the St. James Hotel, off Piccadilly, and our art robbed me of qualms. It was quite early morning.

Evelyn Thaw wore a loose peignoire of a black, shiny something, slashed at the back with yellow. Her hair was loosely fluffed out; she was devoid of the slightest effort at make-up, her ivory-white face and her unreddened lips looking quite startlingly natural. She was as pretty as any picture of—herself, and though the edge of reluctant youth may have frayed a little, there isn't a shadow of a doubt on the score of Evelyn Nesbit's charm. Never in all the ladies I have professionally met have I found more self-possession, a keener poise and less self-consciousness than in Evelyn Thaw. She made me wonder. She spoke easily, gracefully, reassuringly, without a trace of hesitation or nervousness.

On the Spur of the Moment.

"It was awfully sudden," she said, as we sat opposite each other. "I had no idea of going back to the stage after all these years."

"How many?" I asked. "You need not answer."

"Oh, I'm not like that," she said, with the first wistful smile; "I don't mind recalling anything. The last previous time I appeared on the stage was in 1904 in 'The Wild Rose.'

"Well, on the Olympic, coming over, I met a lot of theatrical people, among them Lee Shubert, Martin Beck and Albert DeCourville. They all advised me to make the break, especially DeCourville, who is manager of the Hippodrome.

"He has just married Shirley Kellogg, by the bye. I thought it over carefully, for I was a bit afraid, you know." She seemed to take it for granted that I knew. I did; I quite understood. "If I had made the break in New York I should have been a 'freak,'" she said. "Oh, there have been other women who have been through trials like mine who first tried New York, and it was hopeless. So when DeCourville telegraphed me at Paris to come at once to London and appear I realized that it was up to me, and I went, afraid, of course, but you know I'm no novice at harrowing experiences."

A Wild Turkey Trot.

"I was determined that nothing should force any attention from me to that sort of thing." She was now an artist before the public, and I was—me.

"I had to do a wild turkey trot with a dancer, and he was hard to find. I had seen Jack Clifford at the Cafe De Paris, and I remembered that he used to dance with Irene Weston, so we engaged him and rehearsed for one week only at the Irish Club, opposite the Hippodrome. Oh! it was terrible work. He throws me around—I am tossed up in the air and I see heels at an angle I never expected to view them. And I'm an old married woman, with stiff joints."

Evelyn Nesbit laughed. So did I. She was as simple and unaffected as the inevitable school girl. It was impossible not to like her. She amused me a lot.

"They sneaked us on at a Saturday matinee without announcement," she said, "and luck favored me. The turn went well, and we are a hit.

"I'm engaged for six weeks, with an option, and then I go to Paris, Berlin, Vienna, St. Petersburg, Moscow, Copenhagen——"

"And New York?" I asked.

"New York, surely," she replied, smiling, "when I feel that I've put it over, but not until then. Oh, I do want to earn my own living, and the stage is good, and I don't mind hard work. In the old days, when I had nothing on my mind but my hair, I used to shirk rehearsals. Now, I'm Johnny-on-the-spot. I don't mind how much we rehearse. In fact, I rehearse every day. I've always loved dancing, and have studied all the successful dancers. If only I don't get fat like Ethel Barrymore and others."

She Won't Get Fat.

"You couldn't," I opined, for she didn't look the part.

"I won't," she retorted; "it would be a great pity, and I have another ambition that I'll tell you, for it may surprise you. Do you remember what Jerome said about me?"

Again I refused to remember anything.

"Well, he said that there were four great actresses—Sarah Bernhardt, Eleanora Duse, Mrs. Fiske and myself. I don't forget that. Some day I may try to act—to do something worth while, something serious, something emotional. So there you are! You will laugh, because I know you are funny.

"Theatrical people take themselves very seriously, and they can't understand why you don't do the same, but you don't—you can be as funny as you like about me. I shan't mind a bit, for I really have a sense of humor, and I'm not very serious." She laughed again, and I was quite disarmed. Evelyn Nesbit had impressed me as I didn't believe I was going to be impressed.

"All I do in London," she said, "is to work and eat good food. I love the food in London. Do go to the Cheshire Cheese and taste the chops. I was there yesterday, and I sat in Dr. Johnson's chair and enjoyed myself hugely. I'm going to get on, and I'm going to surprise everybody. One must have a beginning. Look at Elsie Ferguson. She was the stupidest chorus girl I ever met, but she had big moments, and now she is a very charming actress. Don't forget to write something funny about me, for I shall enjoy it."

But, somehow or other, Evelyn Nesbit hadn't appealed to my sense of humor. She was, at least, spontaneous and natural.

BOY, NOT YET 8, TO ENTER HIGH SCHOOL IN FALL

New Mexican Prodigy Received All His Training From Mother. Wonderful Memory.

ROSWELL, N. MEX., June 28.—When the public schools open next fall there will be a new student in the high school department, a boy who has never been to school a single day and who will not at that time have reached his eighth birthday.

This is the boy who, at the age of eighteen months, startled the city of Denver by repeating the names of the Presidents of the United States, and who at the age of five recited several pages from Hiawatha in a school entertainment in Artesia, N. Mex. His name is Raymond Ray. He is the son of the Rev. and Mrs. G. F. Ray, of Roswell.

The mother of this boy, who has been his only tutor since the very earliest day that he could learn, attributes to him none of the characteristics of a prodigy or perhaps of a genius. He has been taught to think, to concentrate his mind, and this training has enabled him to develop a remarkable memory.

He seldom reads an interesting topic more than once in order to commit it to memory, and he studies physiology, arithmetic, grammar, civil government and literature with little aid from his mother. When he enters high school he will take up the study of Latin, algebra, rhetoric, physical geography and ancient history.

Raymond is now studying Spanish, elocution and vocal music. He has some excellent talent in music, and sings with real melody, spirit and understanding.

Health Board Posts Weekly Bath Order

Canton, Ohio, Folks Must Get in Tub at Least Once a Week Authorities Declare.

CANTON, O., June 28.—Canton folks must bathe at least once a week, and "all over," at that. The board of health has said so.

In order that none can misunderstand, the board has arranged to post in every home where soap and water are believed to be at a premium a set of rules printed in five languages and specifying $25 and costs as punishment of any one who neglects the weekly cleanup.

INDIAN GIRLS WILL TRY SKILL AT HAT-MAKING

CARLISLE, PA., June 28.—Indian art will now show itself in hats. At least that is the natural conclusion drawn from an announcement made by the Carlisle Indian School that a course in millinery has been established for aborigines.

Indian art, the absolutely original gift of America to the world, has expressed itself in pottery, in rugs, in a dozen other ways, but it has never before entered the field of headgear, and it is expected that this new innovation may yet cast the chic French models into the deep shadows.

PET CANARY OF PRETTY WOMAN HALTS VESSEL

Captain of Liner Agrees to Delay Voyage Until She Can Send Home for Bird.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Mrs. Green is young and very charming. That is why the officers of the Vestris, of the Lamport and Holt line, gave her their fullest attention when she announced in plaintive but positive tones that she had lost her Rickey.

"I forgot to bring Rickey," she exclaimed.

"Who's Rickey?" demanded the second officer.

"Rickey's our pet canary," she said, "and I am taking him to South America to my husband. I mean I was to have taken him, but I left him at home."

Brought Food, Forgot Bird.

"It's too late now to get him," said the officer, "for we leave in thirty minutes."

"But I wouldn't dare go without him. I've brought the seed and the cuttlefish and everything, but I forgot the bird."

"Where do you live?" asked the officer.

"Mrs. G. F. Green, 59 West Fifty-third Street," was the reply, and the officer solicited the assistance of H. S. Damage, the line's passenger agent. After consultation with the Vestris captain it was agreed to hold the vessel until ten minutes after five o'clock—ten minutes later than her schedule called for—and Mr. Damage and Mrs. Green sought a telephone.

Bird's Owner In Hysterics.

To an agent of a taxicab company the young woman explained that she wanted to go to the Fifty-third Street number and get a canary bird.

But no canary bird bearing taxicab arrived at the pier by ten minutes after five o'clock, and Mrs. Queen was in a state of hysteria as she watched the sailors haul off the gang plank.

Just as the Vestris was swinging at the end of the pier and before the last spring line was cast off the taxicab arrived. With the bewildered canary in its cage one of Mrs. Green's friends ran to the end of the pier and fastened the cage to a piece of rope. Then, very slowly and with due reverence—for Mrs. Green's brimming eyes were upon him—a sailor hauled the line with the cage attached over the side.

Anything Shocking Police, Called Bad

Criticism of Chiefs of Present Styles Declared Cause for Women of Country to Act

JOHNSTOWN, PA., June 28.—Attacking immodesty in women's dress, Mrs. H. W. Black, of Riverdale, today stirred the delegates and visitors gathered at the annual convention of the Cambria County Sabbath School Association, in session here.

"Christian women should not wear clothes that cause people to turn and look at them after they pass," declared Mrs. Black.

"The police chiefs in convention at Washington have gone on record demanding a reform in women's dress. When it gets so bad that the police have to ask such a thing, I think it is time Christian women should act."

Child Offered Home For Looking Pleasant

Smiling Face of Orphan in Photographed Group Wins Hearts of Couple Who Lost Baby.

POCAHONTAS, ILL., June 28.—In Pocahontas there may be a home for a little girl because she "looked pleasant" when a photographer took the picture of a group of children waiting for an automobile ride. Children in the orphan asylums on that day were given an outing by the Automobile Club of St. Louis.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Miles, of Pocahontas, adopted a little girl several years ago. She died. Something about two of the little girls whose pictures appeared in the newspaper reminded them of the little one who died, and they have written for information about the children.

Millionaire Gives Free Circus to Pay Pledge of Boyhood

Packer Leaves Home as Child to Make Fortune After Missing Show for Lack of Money.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Edward Tilden, millionaire packer, produced a circus to-day for "all the children within walking or riding distance" of the Tilden estate at Lake Delavan, Wis.

The huge entertainment cost $10,000 and had been planned for 25 years by the host. It grew out of a painfully vivid recollection of a circus that had come to town and gone away again without his getting inside the tent. It was fresh in his mind when he left Delavan a quarter of a century ago to come to Chicago to "make his fortune." At the train Edward Tilden told friends:

"I'm coming back some day and buy the town and give everyone a good time, and let every boy here see a circus."

A special carload of entertainers left Chicago for Delavan this morning. A dog and pony show and a band of 40 pieces left last night. The children also saw an aeroplane flight, had automobile rides and a big dinner.

Woman Jury Awards Verdict in Oregon

Plaintiff Is Awarded Damages of $5 in Legal Fight Over Cut of a Skirt.

ST. JOHNS, ORE., June 28.—The first regularly called woman's jury to serve in the State of Oregon tried a case in Justice Williams' court here and, after twenty minutes' conference, returned a verdict of $5 for the plaintiff. The jury was drawn in the regular form from a list of fifty women who have been chosen as liable for jury service during the year.

The case was one involving the price of a skirt. The plaintiff averred that a skirt which she had made by a local seamstress did not fit. She brought suit to recover the price of the skirt.

The fair jurors fixed the damages at $5.

12,000 Drinks in Five Years Basis of Suit

Wife Declares Husband Protected Himself With Walking Stick in Driving Rain Storm.

CHICAGO, June 28.—Twelve thousand drinks, ranging from simple mixed potations to fancy concoctions, is the record which Mrs. John Barry Sears posts up against her husband in five years of married life.

Mrs. Sears, who is suing for divorce, said Mr. Sears started his career of conviviality during his honeymoon and has kept it up.

In one instance, according to Mrs. Sears, her husband had come home in a driving rain.

"He carried his walking stick elevated above his head," she testified, "and held his umbrella closed in his hand. He was soaking wet, but did not know it."

Prehistoric Flying Reptile Discovered

Skeleton of Pterodactyl Monster Is Found in Wyoming Fossil Bed by Geologists.

CASPER, WYO., June 28.—Dr. F. Salathe and D. VanWagener, geologists, who are prospecting this vicinity for oil, reported the discovery eighteen miles from Casper of a fossil bed, conspicuously visible in which is the almost perfect silicified skeleton of a flying reptile, probably of the pterodactyll, which measures at least sixty feet in length. The creature in life must have had a wing expansion of eighty feet.

BOY CONFESSES KILLING MOTHER AND BROTHER

Berkley Fleming, 19, of Ironton, Mo., Appears Unconcerned When Accused of Crime.

IRONTON, O., June 28.—Berkley Fleming, 19, has confessed to shooting his half-brother, Culbertson Stewart, almost three years ago, and his mother a few days ago.

The police took the boy to his grandfather's farm, where he pointed out the grave of his mother and stood by unconcerned as the body was removed. He was not impressed when the skeleton of Culbertson was exhumed.

Believe Boy Degenerate.

Chief of Police King, Dr. Wells and the Rev. W. H. Hampton, who have suspected for several months that Berkeley killed Culbertson, believe Berkeley a degenerate of the worst type.

Their theory is that he killed Culbertson because of jealousy and that he had worked out his carefull arranged plan of concealing the crime before he shot his brother.

The murder of the mother, they believe, was a part of his plan to keep her from exposing his former murder. A bullet hole in the back of the head of each victim and the mother's bruised face, say these men, destroy any accident theory.

Mother Is Suspicious.

Culbertson Stewart disappeared July 14, 1910, Berkeley's 17th birthday. The other brother afterward wrote letters to his mother purporting to come from Culbertson. She became suspicious, and he decided to kill her also.

After the crime he was found at a hotel waiting for dinner. He had gone there in a buggy to take his sweetheart riding. He made no objection to going to the police station, where he confessed.

JAP EMIGRANTS NOW COLONIZING BRAZILIAN LANDS

1,500 Arrivals But Vanguard of Orientals to Be Sent to South America.

SEATTLE, WASH., June 28.—How Japan is colonizing Brazil was given in detail here with the arrival of the Japanese steamship Sanuki Maru.

Fifteen hundred Japanese emigrants were landed at Santos, Brazil, May 15. They are the vanguard of a great population to be sent to South America to become a part of the first permanent Japanese colony in Brazil under the Sao Paulo colonization agreement recently entered into between Japan and Brazil.

The first award of territory comprises approximately 150,000 acres of agricultural land.

Another Japanese Brazilian colonization enterprise has been completed and passengers of the Sanuki say that the two Governments have arranged for the concession of a considerable area of fertile country which will be settled by Japanese. Settlers for this colony will leave Japan about the end of the present year.

Japanese contract labor is now being sent into South Africa and both Brazil and Peru are being supplied with coolies, who leave Japan under contract with various South American industrial organizations.

The first of these contract laborers left Yokohama for one of the Peruvian ports last month and another shipment of 150 will go from Yokohama on June 21. These laborers will be employed on sugar plantations and contracts have been made for 500 at a rate of 60 cents a day with free board.

PUPS AND CHICKS SWAPPED.

RAVENNA, OHIO, June 28.—A fair exchange that satisfied both swappers was pulled off here when a Scotch collie transferred her litter of seven puppies to a Barred Rock hen for her brood of ten chicks.

OREGON'S NEW EUGENIC LAW NOW IN EFFECT

First State in the Union Which Has Put Into Practice a Law of This Kind.

CERTIFICATE IS REQUIRED.

Doctors Allowed to Charge $2.50 for Examination, and Poor May Be Examined Free.

PORTLAND, OREG., June 28.—On June 3, Oregon, the first State in the field commenced enforcement of an Eugenics law, requiring male applicants for marriage licenses to present medical certificates. The Oregon law prescribes:

1st. That before any county clerk in the State shall issue a marriage license. The applicant must file with him a certificate from a physician duly authorized to practice medicine within the State, made under oath within ten days previous to application, showing that the male person is free from contagious or infectious venereal diseases.

2d. Any physician who shall knowingly and willfully make a false statement in any certificate issued, shall be punished by the revocation of license to practice within the State.

3d. Physicians may not receive more than $2.50 for making the examination and issuing certificate.

5th. If applicant is indigent he may, upon application, be examined by county physicians and receive a certificate free of charge.

In the East to Study.

Oregon has set an example which the clergy of the East should carefully consider before making a law of eugenics for themselves, and thereby laying themselves open to prosecution and revocation of their authority to marry couples presenting themselves with licenses duely issued by officials as the laws at present exist.

It is even a fair legal question if any person authorized by law to perform marriage ceremonies, can refuse to marry people who have licenses, on any pretext whatever—that is if such right were challenged in court, it is believed that the power to marry couples, authorized by the State to ministers and others, could be revoked by the State.

Law Can Be Recalled.

Oregon took all these matters into consideration and submitted the Eugenics law to the electorate to be voted upon. It took into consideration the fact that none of the people clamoring for an eugenics law had themselves submitted to medical inspection before marriage.

It considered that the whole people, men and women, were entitled to say whether such examination should be imposed on males of the present and future generations. If the law fails to please the people at any time hereafter, it can be recalled under another Oregon law.

Defaulter Hired to Audit Bank's Books

Man Who Wrecked Financial Institution, Will Go to Work to Untangle Its Affairs.

CARUTHERSVILLE, MO., June 28.—A. B. Tindle, cashier of the Pemiscot County Bank, which closed its doors following the discovery that he was short in his accounts, will be retained by the reorganizers to aid in straightening out its affairs.

"There is no desire on the part of the directors of the bank to prosecute Tindle," one of the directors said to-day. "He has turned over all his property and has been punished enough by his sudden fall from a position of trust and respect in the community."

Tindle's personal fortune is estimated at $200,000.

The action of the directors of the bank in retaining him in the task of straightening out the confusion caused by his shortage meets with the approval of a majority of the citizens it is said.

Grandmother-in-law Sued for Alienation

Educator Declares Aged Woman Made His Married Life Unhappy and Finally Took Wife.

WARRENSBURG, MO., June 28.—George J. Peck, principal of one of the schools of Warrensburg, to-day filed a suit against Mrs. Narcissa Owings, the grandmother of Peck's wife, for $25,000 damages, alleging alienation of his wife's affections.

Peck alleges in his petition that during all his married life the grandmother has interfered in his domestic affairs, and that several months ago she induced his wife to leave him, taking their infant daughter, and that she has not since allowed him either to see or communicate with either wife or child.

Hospital Nurses to Have Courting Nooks

Cincinnati Surgeons Declare They Will Have Sweethearts and Should Have a Place to Entertain Them.

CINCINNATI, June 28.—Cincinnati's new hospital, the finest and largest in the country, which will be opened in about eight months, will have courting nooks for the nurses.

Dr. C. R. Holmes, father of the institution, conceived the idea. He also knows that nurses will have sweethearts and that is why the little nooks in the nurses' home, with sweet little settees, are to be installed.

Verses Tell How 'Imperator' Ought to be Pronounced

Great Trouble Found With Largest Liner Is That Everyone Gives Her a Different Name.

NEW YORK, June 28.—There is one fault already found with the Imperator, the giant vessel of the Hamburg-American line, which has just made her maiden voyage as the biggest ship afloat. The trouble is no one knows how to pronounce her name.

Many think they do, and as a result, she is called many things as Amerson Hough, the author, who answers to Huff, How, Hoe, Huge and a few other things.

In reply to inquiries as to the pronunciation the publicity agent says that the German pronunciation which is sanctioned by the modern Latinists makes the "a" in Imperator sound like the "a" in father. The accent is on the next syllable to the last. The poet laureate of the line has been so much puzzled by the variety of pronunciations that he has celebrated them in verse. Here are some of the couplets:

Biggest ship upon the water,
Gorgeous, quetnly Imperator.

If you do not like that style of calling the ship, perhaps the poet laureate remarked, you may take this:

In the finest class we slate her,
Peerless, German Imperator.

"And please," the poet said, "do not make peerless "beerless." Then, after running his fingers through his hair, the poet emitted and submitted this:

Vastness!—making senses totter!
Sea Collossus, Imperator!

"To the tune of 'Dixie,'" said the poet, we might get still another line on the pronunciation by singing:

Buckwheat cakes and a little batter
Taste quite good on the Imperator!

Greatest Salmon Run in Puget Sound

Quadrennial Migration of Horde of Fish From Fraser River Begins on Pacific Coast.

SEATTLE, June 28.—Steamship men report the approach of the annual Sockeye salmon run, which this year is the quadrennial big run, the greatest fish migration in the world. The fish now entering the Sound were born four years ago.

When the first white men came to the Northwest the Indians told them of this periodical big run, which had been regular as far back as their tribal legends went. It is the Canadian theory that the fish making up the big run are hatched in Fraser River and grow to maturity off the west coast of Vancouver Island.

Four years ago so many traps were set for the mature fish that few were able to enter the Fraser, and the Canadians have insisted that the big run of 1913 would be a failure. Hence there is international interest in the size of the approaching swarms of salmon.

Aged Pair Perform Own Marriage Rites

Bridegroom, 75 Years Old, Declares It Was His Sixth Experience With Such Ceremony

BEAVER, PA., June 28.—Dr. Akkelon Mercer, seventy-five years old of Beaver Falls, and Sarah L. Calgrove, sixty-five years old, of Wetzel county, West Virginia, performed their own marriage ceremony here.

When the pair obtained their license they informed Hamilton, the clerk, that all they needed was a license, as they could dispense with all bridal attendants and the minister.

Doctor Mercer and Mrs. Calgrove to Hamilton issued the license for marry themselves in the presence of witnesses. Doctor Mercer stated that he had been married five times, and in each instance he and his bride had performed their own ceremony, always in the presence of two witnesses.

Horsewhips Teacher Who Lashed Her Son

Angry Mother Purchases Rawhide From Harness Shop When Boy Exhibits Marks of Punishment.

OXNARD, CAL., June 28.—Angered because Principal C. A. Marcey, of the Filmore Grammar School, inflicted corporal punishment on her small son, Mrs. E. M. Taylor horsewhipped him on the street of the town.

The boy exhibited the marks of punishment to his mother.

Mrs. Taylor went to a harness shop and purchased a blacksnake whip. Concealing the weapon in a piece of paper she stole upon Principal Marcey as he was engaged in conversation on the street. Without warning she dealt him a blow and continued to apply the lash.

My Experience With Tacco ---The New Handy Varnish

By EVELYN WREN

HOUSEWIVES realize that a coat of varnish is often more satisfactory than a new piece of furniture. It is a gratification to see the marred chair which belonged to the first parlor suit look like new. The dining table has held many simple breakfasts, many delightful luncheons and many bountiful dinners, and the steaming dishes have left ugly marks upon its once shining surface. To see it emerge from its varnish treatment is like welcoming back an old friend.

Varnishing seems like tiresome, dirty work, and a task suitable for men attired in overalls. I had always associated it with laborers' muscles and rough clothing until one day when I decided my desk at The American office needed some attention.

You do not become wholly unfeminine even if you are a newspaper woman. I was tired of seeing the black spot where the inkwell had overturned. I did not like the white mark where a glass of ice water had stood. All at once I had a hunch that I could do my work better if a marred place did not constantly remind me of a loss of temper and consequent lowering of self-respect and dignity. The refinishing of my desk became an obsession.

I read advertisements. Fortunately I am influenced by them. When I saw an advertisement of a varnish which a woman could apply with a cloth just as a furniture polish is applied, I resolved to investigate the novel preparation.

I went to the sixth floor of the Forsyth Building and entered the offices of The Amber Chemical Company. There I almost breathlessly inquired for Tacco, the water-proof, dust-proof and heat-proof varnish. (To tell the truth, I did not much mind about the heat-proof feature, for most of the heat in our office is caused by irritable nerves, and not by the weather. I am no exception.)

A bottle of Tacco was put into my hand, and I grasped a piece of cheesecloth and went energetically to work. I used just as much muscle as three years of typewriting will produce in a feminine arm. I worked as hard as any furniture polisher ever dreamed of doing in his worst nightmare. I thought I was doing well.

Imagine my chagrin and the expression on my face when the cloth was quietly taken from my vigorous grasp and I was shown that Tacco requires no rubbing. You do not have to use as much energy as I do in ordinary dusting.

Dust the article first. If it is much stained you might well apply a little soap and water. Then apply your Tacco to the dry surface. A piece of cheesecloth is the best medium, and a firm, gentle movement like that of dusting will put the varnish on in the best form. Then let it dry. At the end of five hours view the result and feel proud of your work which is really but a pastime.

Have a Tacco day. Take the breakfast cloth off when husband has departed for the office. Apply Tacco according to the directions on the box, and the dining table will be ready for use at lunch time. Of course if husband is a capitalist and breakfasts at 10:30 instead of at 7 you will probably not have the pleasure of using Tacco yourself. Let us hope that you are one of those domestic little housewives who just "loves" to make your home pretty with your personal effort, and that husband has not outgrown his appreciation of the little touches which you can give just a bit better than any hired help.

The table in the living room has played an important part in the happiness of the household. You could not think of home without that table, and the ones you see in the store windows never look quite as hospitable or nearly so homelike. Here Jack has read his paper and graciously explained politics to your bewildered self as you stitched on little frocks which were to go to Kindergarten with Little Girl. It has held Big Brother's school books and his drawing instruments. (Said drawing instruments are responsible for the big unsightly gash at the end.) All in all, you feel as you begin to apply Tacco with a gentle hand that this table has many dear memories. You would like to see it as fresh and pretty as it was when you and Jack picked it out. It seemed the finest table in the world on that day. How you blushed, and how manly Jack looked as he quietly drew the money from his pocket and ordered it sent to your new home.

When the table is finished the big chair will seem more worn and bruised than ever. You never realized how shabby the living room was getting. It seems but a day or two ago that you decided to surprise Jack with that comfortable chair on his birthday. You saved from your housekeeping money bit by bit and grew anxious toward the last for fear the fund would not be large enough. You grow tender toward that big chair as you remember Jack's eyes when he first espied it and then quickly gazed at you. The lovelight was there, even if you had been married a half-dozen years, and had but recently lost many hours of sleep with Little Girl's teething episode.

GET THE WORD THEN GET THE MEANING
TRADE MARK
TACCO
BRAND
A HINT TO THE WISE

The tender feelings do not interfere with the application of Tacco. Let retrospection have its sway, and when you have had the pleasure of many happy memories look at the result. The table will shine like new. The gash made by Big Brother's steel ruler will not show. Tacco has acted as a filler and made the surface smooth as glass. Dusting will be a light task now. You may even scrub the table, for it has a water-proof finish now. The chair will bring the lovelight to Jack's eyes anew, for he, too, will remember the day your love made the gift.

If you are a housekeeper, you will welcome Tacco as a means of making your home brighter and more cheerful. You need never wish for an opportunity to send shabby furniture away to be refinished. You can buy a bottle of Tacco for only 50 cents. The economy of it will be demonstrated by its first use, and you will be ready to purchase a quart, half-gallon or gallon can before many days.

When I like anything I never take my liking for granted. I analyze my appreciation. Here is my analysis of my fondness for Tacco:

It requires absolutely no rubbing.
It dries in from two to five hours.
It is water-proof as well as dust and heat proof.
It is economical in time and money.

Well, my desk at The American office has had its Tacco treatment. Come in to see it, if you like. Then investigate Tacco as I did, if you like, or better still, benefit by my written experience and buy a bottle or can at any good drug or hardware store.

Do you live out of town? If you do, you would like to hear about a splendid proposition for out-of-town dealers. Write to-day for information and do not risk the loss of the agency in your town. Write and see what The Amber Chemical Company has to tell you.

PROPOSITION TO TURN NAVY INTO FLOATING FAIR

Arkansas Congressman Would Have Battleships Carry Pumpkins Instead of Sshells.

DEWEY AS A BUSINESS MAN

All Tars To Be Taught Salesmanship and Spread Commercial Fame of the Nation.

By JONATHAN WINFIELD.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Representative Goodwin of Arkansas has risen to dispute the wisdom of Secretary of State William J. Bryan, though Representatve Goodwin is a Democrat and has cast his free and untrammeled ballot some several times for the Nebraskan for President.

But when he read that the Secretary of State had declared that the United States Navy is useless and the army nearly so, he rose to protest. The navy can be useful, he insists. It can readily be converted into a floating exposition of the products of American farms and factories, and this show can be of untold value in making foreign tours.

Nations to See Show.

Upon this theory Representative Goodwin got to work. If his enthusiasm should sweep Congress off its feet, England, France, Germany, Japan and the Latin-American republics will be edified by the sight of piles of Iowa pumpkins in the magazines of Uncle Sam's battleships, instead of 14-inch shells.

When a battleship is dressed, instead of flags flying from the twisted iron mastheads and lookout towers, there will be suspended from stem to stern strings of shoes from the Massachusetts factories. On the armor belt, just above the water line, will be painted in large white letters, "Made by the United States Steel Corporation."

Instead of smokeless powder and torpedoes, the battleships will be equipped with wheat and flour from Minnesota and Wisconsin, and cornmeal from the "corn belt."

From Admiral Dewey down the line to the youngest midshipman the officers will be sent to special business schools which Uncle Sam will have to open. Enlisted men, in addition to their other duties, will take courses in the practice of the warehousemen. Then, after having sufficient knowledge in the premises, Uncle Sam will become an efficient traveling salesman, visiting every port in the world and exploiting American merchandise, commodities and staples.

Asks Redfield for Figures.

As Mr. Goodwin put it:

"I see no reason why the American Navy should not be put to good use. Opposed to senseless multiplication of useless battleships, I can see no reason why those we have built at so great expense should not be used in advancing trade before they rot and become junk."

Mr. Goodwin proposed to direct Secretary Daniels of the Navy Department to report within 60 days to Secretary Redfield "the extent and character of all space on all ships of the United States Navy which might reasonably be temporarily used for the purpose of exhibiting American manufactured articles and other articles of commerce." He proposes that the Secrefary of Commerce shall allot space on American ships to American manufacturers, merchants, exporters, boards of trade or other commercial organizations for use in exhibiting their wares.

Doctors Trying to Photograph Thought

Experiments Are Made to Prove Theory of Dead Surgeon That Mental Action Is Recorded.

BOSTON, June 28.—The dissection and examination by photograph of the brain of the late Prof. Maurice H. Richardson, the famous Harvard surgeon, is being completed in a private laboratory at the Harvard Medical School in an effort to prove Dr. Richardson's theory that thoughts are recorded and should be visible on the outer walls of the cerebrum.

The "scientific surprise of the age" is what surgeans say is coming when Dr. E. E. Southard, of Harvard, reports the result.

FARMER IRRIGATES LAND WITH RIVER'S OVERFLOW

BURDETT, KANS., June 28.—E. L. Floreth, a farmer living near here, is the first man to tap the underflow of the Pawnee River. He has successfully put into operation a pumping irrigation plant, which will throw 2,200 gallons a minute. The hole was bored 85 feet and water has risen 54 feet, or to within 31 feet of the surface, while all attempts to lower the level have been futile. Numerous farmers in the Pawnee Valley have inspected the well and are planning to install wells.

Edna Goodrich Finds a Descendant of the Acadians

Also Norman Woman Who Never Heard of Evangeline

Actress Makes Discovery While Seeking Local Color to Aid Her to Take Chief Part in Dramatization of Longfellow Poem.

Edna Goodrich, famous as an actress and one of Nat Goodwin's wives, is now in Normandy studying local atmosphere the better to fit herself for the chief part in "Evangeline," the dramatization of Longfellow's poem which is to be staged in this city in the fall.

From France she will go, in July, to Nova Scotia to continue her observations.

She writes in an interesting and original way of her search for a descendant of the old Acadians.

Edna Goodrich in Falaise, Normandy, on the street where the women do their washing as in the time of Robert the Devil and on which she found a description of the wonderful people Longfellow has immortalized.

FALAISE, NORMANDY, June 28.—After several weeks of surfeiting myself with the theater of Paris and Berlin, I set out for Normandy, from whence the Acadians came and where, doubtless, the ancestors of the glorious wanderers had steeped themselves in the religion and faith immortalized by Longfellow—for I sought for communion with Evangeline.

I admit I had a faint hope that somewhere I might find a descendant of a returned Acadian with tale or relic of Acadian days.

After consulting Baedecker, I decided to go to Caen, only four hours from Paris.

I landed in Caen and called upon the British Consul, there being no American representative in the town. He was located in a little side street. Conspicuous on his side door was a sign reading, "Office hours from 2 to 3." It was but 1:45, but I had the temerity to ring.

Points Pointedly To Sign.

I was greeted by a sort of faded red editior of Lawrence D'Orsay, carrying a red cotton print napkin and a red gleam in his eye, which informed me that I had disturbed the statesman at his lunch. With the unoccupied index finger he pointed at the office hour sign.

"I saw it," I replied, "and I apologize; but I am rather in a hurry, and"— "Oh, you're an American?" he interrupted with mingled tone of discovery and accusation.

"Yes," I replied.

"Well, I cannot talk to you now," accompanied by an embracing of the long red mustache with the long red napkin.

"I am sure you can tell me what I want to know," I persisted. "Do you know anything of the Acadians?"

"Of what?" he rejoined.

"You have read 'Evangeline?'" I volunteered.

"Cannot say I ever heard of it," he replied.

"It's a rather well-known poem," I ventured, "written by a Henry W. Longfellow."

Gives a O'Orsay Laugh.

"Ha! Ha! Ha!" he guffawed in D'Orsay's most aproved guttural, "I've far too much to do to bother my head with that sort of rot. Really, you know, I don't think I'm the person you're seeking at all."

I looked at him, as he again tried to suspend himself on the mustache, had one good laugh and agreed. "I guess, possibly, you're not."

Twenty miles from Caen is Bayon, a Norman village, where the old Norman spirit and surroundings have been practically untouched by time. At 4 o'clock in a mid-week afternoon the villagers, neatly dressed, were turning out of their homes at every side and all filing to church, fine old cathedral built in the eleventh century. I never witnessed so unanimous a reply to the call of a church bell.

There, indeed, was the spirit of Evangeline, as Longfellow breathed it into the life in Acadia. There were the people who looked only to their priest for guidance and stayed their hands at his command when their all was taken from them. I stood near the cathedral as these pious people entered, and I know from the faces some spiritual, others deeply reposeful, that religion was something more than a form.

Found No Acadians.

I sought for a trace of a descendant of a returned Acadian, but my search was in vain, except that I found the clew which later led to an interesting meeting in this place.

Finally I gave up Caen for this place, and on the oldest street (the Rue Val d'Ane) I found an Acadian descendant. She is ninety-four and her name is Arlette La Croix—named, as were so many Norman girls, after the fair Arlette, the tanner's daughter who fascinated Robert the Devil, became his wife, and later the mother of William the Conqueror.

This old, sunny-faced, toothless woman lives all alone in one of the tiny stone ruins that line this most picturesque old street.

Her husband and children died years ago, and, so far as that part of Normandy is concerned, she is the last of the Acadians. Her great-grandfather, Pierre Archambault, she told me, was driven from Grand Pre and landed in Louisiana.

After long suffering he gathered enough money to return with his children to Falaise. His eldest boy, her grandfather, had frequently related to her tales of wild America and the Indians.

Never Heard Longfellow Legend.

She had never heard of the legend of Evangeline and, of course, had never read the poem. I gave her a copy. It was bound in red, and I am sure the cover delighted her. As best I could I told her some of the story. She was entranced and assured me that she would find some one who knew English to translate it.

There was a delightful freshness about this old woman. She was wrinkled, weather-beaten and growing feeble, but her eyes twinkled and she laughed with the spontaneity of a child.

In her tiny room was a very old Bible, a well-thumbed missle, and on the wall a rude crucifix. They seemed her only companions, yet this lovable old soul had found that magic "something" in these mute companions which make the old, unquestioning, unchallenging faith a glorious blessing.

Again I saw what Longfellow had meant in his perfect delineation of Acadian character. Before me sat its embodiment, a worn-out, overworked old woman, who had none of the material blessings, who never had known any of the world's modern luxuries, yet who could set near the end of her journey blessing all who came near her with a smile that arises only from a beautiful soul.

And after all the final test of a man's life is the smile he ends it with. Be it absent or grave or imbecillic, or fawning, or sardonic, it is his record.

Dear old Arlette La Croix's smile was one of the rare sights that I shall treasure long after I have forgotten many imposing spectacles. As one of the last of the Acadians she is a glorious example of a people who believed in God and were blessed by their faith.

My journeys in Normandy had brought their reward. It was said with a better understanding of and a still greater reverence for the Acadian character that I approached my study of Evangeline. In secluded Normandy I buried myself.

As I sat the first evening contemplating the glorious character of Evangeline, I picked up a week-old English paper. The featured story dealt with fresh outrages committed by suffragettes, and immediately I realized what Evangeline was not. She was not a suffragetter. Instead of making demands she made sacrifices; instead of asking what she could get she asked what she could give. All reasonable people must agree that women are entitled to additional rights, yet I wonder if the struggle for the winning of them will compensate us for what we must lose of those fine feminine qualities of which Evangeline was the supreme example.

I learned, too, another theory in Normandy: It had never occurred to me that there could be a spot in the civilized world where the dollar would beckon in vain—certainly not in Europe, since in all my previous European experiences I had never seen anything but a highly organized dollar-trapping system, baited mainly for Americans.

Undoubtedly we Americans are largely to blame for this foreign degredation since we seem to have lost all sense of values when we are removed eight days from our bank balance.

The ocean trip is agreed to be narcotic. The eastward trip on the Atlantic is even more—it is opiate-dream producing. We embark with a fair sense of value. We disembark with the hallucination that there never will be an end to our money, and this hallucination persists until we embark on the westward trip, when the awakening process begins.

Question for Psychologist.

I should like some psychologist to explain the difference in the effect of eastward and westward ocean travel.

But to return to my startling discovery; I did find a place where no laps were spread for dollars, and it was only four hours from Paris, that Queen of the European Mercenaries, which would sell anything she possesses, including her president's beautiful beard.

My discovery came in Caen on my second day in Normandy; stirred by a desire to photograph interesting places I determined to engage a photographer.

To the first photographer I explained what I wanted. He had me tell him many times, then he told it back to me several times. When we understood each other I thought it only remained to settle terms, and I inquired his charge. It was most reasonable. We agreed and I then told him I had a motor boat outside and was ready.

"Oh, that was quite impossible. He could not go to-day—no—no—nor yet to-morrow—and the day after, too, was impossible, and it would be at least four days before he could make up his mind to go away on a long three-hour trip."

Money Didn't Move Him.

I pointed out to him how soon we could have it done with. "No—no—it was impossible."

I suggested that we start out very early the following morning so that he might be back in his studio before the commencement of business.

It was not to be thought of—he had never done such a thing. I then offered more money; he was unmoved.

Being obsessed with a determination to have the photographs I continued offering more till I reached five times the price. I might as well have offered a subway ticket. He was not interested. If I could not wait he was sorry, but he knew of another photographer. He might be willing.

Defeated in my first experience with Norman commercial indifference I sought the second photographer. He listened and talked for a very long time, made quite sure he understood what I wanted, was very glad to accept the work, settled terms with me, and when he said the terrible word, "When" I lost courage.

I answered "To-morrow." It was just as impossible, he must have five days. I argued and coaxed, and now in desperation raised the price to a ridiculous point, but he was not interested.

In desperation I went to a camera store presided over by a man and his wife. I tried to persuade either one of them to come with me, bringing a camera and getting snap-shots.

Wealth Is Helpless.

It was just as hopeless. They volunteered to teach me how to use the camera—that was all. I offered them more money than their little store earned in several good days in vain. Money was not the slightest argument. Crestfallen, I left them, gazing at my money and wondering how it had so suddenly lost its power. It was the first time I had ever seen it so helpless.

I drove 20 miles to Bayon, where there was one photographer. It was a thing he might do some fine day—if I could call again.

Disappointed and discouraged, I returned to Caen. It was finally in this town that I secured my photographer. He began just as the other had, but now grim determination had seized me. He wanted the usual time of four or five days. I told him that he was going to do it NOW. He got excited, but I fastened a steely glare upon him and told him he was. I kept telling him he was until out of sheer exhaustion he succumbed.

At the foot of Rue Val D'Ante in Falaise is the famous little stream, the Ante, where Norman women for many centuries past have done the family washing and where the laundry work of Falaise is still disposed of.

Romance of Robert.

Just around the turn at the top of the hill is the old castle of Robert, the Devil. Robert used to watch the Falaise maidens washing at the stream. It was there he beheld Arlette and fell in love with her.

Arlette became his wife and later the mother of William, the Conqueror. Her blood had its effect on the history of Europe. Her lily white feet tripped up many a future aspirant.

At the point where Arlette was courting, the Falaise maidens are still washing clothes, perhaps in the hope that another Robert may appear. This was one of the scenes I wanted photographer. We secured some interesting photographs of the old houses and a picture of Arlette La Croix, the only descendant of the returned Acadians that I had been able to find in Normandy.

The Norman disregard of money led me to inquire into their finances. I concluded people so indifferent must be poor. To my amazement I learned that Normandy is much the richest province in Europe; French bankers sell more investment securities there than in any other part of France.

These seemingly indifferent people are shareholders in practically all of the world's large enterprises. The secret of Norman wealth is thrift. A franc which finds its way into a Norman coffer is doomed to darkness and inertia. The Norman will not spend for anything.

They like money, but money has made them independent. If one has the temerity to find fault with anything a Norman merchant sells him, he is asked to leave the place never to return. Guests in Norman hotels who criticised the service have had their rooms taken from them. If there ever was a land of independence it is Normandy.

Wife's Flirting With Car Men Suit's Basis

Husband Declares She Was so Fond of Uniforms She Stayed on Cars for Hours.

ST. CLAIRSVILLE, O., June 28.—Charles F. Marmie, a coal operator, declared in a suit for divorce that his wife "was possessed of a weakness for flirting with Harry Albaugh and other street car conductors to his discomfort and the lowering of her good name." Marmie declared his business suffered through the weakness of his wife for "street railway uniforms."

On numerous occasions, according to Marmie, he was compelled to remain at home with his wife to prevent her from spending the day riding back and forth on street cars.

100 College Men in Dishwashers' Union

Greatest Proportion of Graduates in Any Trade Found in Organization in San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—Of the 700 members of the San Francisco Dishwashers' Union 100 are college graduates. This, it is said, is a greater proportion of college men than can be found in any other labor organization in the country.

The statistics were compiled by two members of the union, one of whom says he is a former instructor in mathematics in an Eastern college.

SQUAW SWAPS FORBIDDEN BY UNCLE SAM

Wholesale Marriage of Winnebago Indians Prohibited by Government Order.

WINNEBAGO INDIAN RESERVATION, NEBR., June 28.—The Winnebagoes are mad. They think they have been bunkoed. They were promised a big powwow, in which every Indian buck was to be married to one squaw according to the white man's laws, and now the Government has held up this order, and the great marriage ceremony, which was to join every brave to a squaw, and incidentally rid the brave of any superfluous squaws he may have accumulated, is not to be performed until the arrival of the new Indian agent.

The Winnebagoes had sent invitations to all their friends in Oklahoma, South Dakota and Montana, and they were expecting gifts in such quantities as were never before lavished upon an Indian tribe. But they have been forced to cancel these invitations and to forego the wedding presents for the time being.

No Swapping of Squaws.

And what is equally bad is an order which has gone forth from the Government authorities: There shall be no more swapping of wives by the Indian bucks. Every man must continue with the partner with whom he is now living. And when the time of the big wedding comes around, every Indian must get married to his present squaw.

The Winnebagoes were not ready for this. The big wedding was not scheduled for a month yet and many of the bucks intended swapping or selling their present squaws and taking new ones.

Marriage Laws Lax.

Winnebago tribal laws concerning marriage and divorce were rather lax, to say the least. Marriage consisted in securing the consent of the squaw to come over to the home of the buck and live. And divorce was consummated when the buck kicked his squaw out of the house and went out to find a new one, or when the squaw got tired of her husband and left him to take up her abode with some other red man.

According to Indian officials, very few of the Winnebago women had been "married" less than a dozen times, and some boasted of having had as many as twenty "husbands." And many of the bucks said they had been "married" as high as fifty times—and no one denied it.

Buys 'Tiger' Whisky to Give Dairy Cow

Milkman Is Principal Witness When Operator of Unlicensed Bar Is Fined in Court.

KANSAS CITY, June 28.—Henry Hunt, erstwhile blacksmith, was fined $50 yesterday on a charge of selling liquor without a license. The testimony of Patroiman Peterson, who made the arrest, was that he saw Hunt take a bottle of whisky and sell it to a man. Hunt denied the charge and appealed to the Criminal Court.

Martin Triebe, a dairyman, testified that he bought a half-pint of whisky from Hunt.

"I told Hunt I wanted a little whisky for my cow," said Triebe. "He said all right and gave it to me."

Commission to Rule Canal Concessions

Appointment of Anglo-American Body Will be Announced In a Few Days.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—The appointment of a joint Anglo-American Commission will be announced at an early date to examine the question of sites and concessions along the Panama Canal for business houses, stores and other buildings.

Apparently it has yet to be determined in fact, as apart from principle, how far the United States Government, as distinct from that of Colombia, may grant concessions for land in perpetuity, and further, how far the title to such concessions made to foreign firms can be secured.

$10,000 DAMAGES ASKED FOR HAIR'S TURNING GRAY

TRENTON, June 28.—Because her hair turned gray as the result of injuries sustained when she was struck by a trolley car, Mrs. Mary G. Hibbs, of Bristol, to-day started suit against the Trenton and Mercer County Traction Company for $10,000. Mrs. Hibbs was injured in Trenton when she attempted to cross a street in front of a car.

Wife Refuses to Stop Husband and Daughter's Eloping

Declares to Humane Society That She Tolerated Act to Preserve Happiness of Her Child.

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Telling a most unusual story, filled with peculiar complications, in which she accuses her husband of eloping with and marrying his own stepdaughter and then stealing her two children in order to secure property belonging to her, Mrs. Ruella Nicholson has appealed to the police, the humane society and the county officers to help her in locating her husband, Edward Nicholson, and thus get back her children.

How she learned of the fact that her daughter had married her own stepfather, and did not interfere with the marriage because she wanted her child to be happy was a part of the strange story alleged by the woman.

Tired, hungry and practically penniless, the elderly woman appealed to the humane society.

Woman Loves Mouse; Eats Meals With Him

Pet Comes Daily to Dine With Hotel Employees, and Girl Feeds Him From Hand.

CINCINNATI, June 28.—It is an old saying that all women are afraid of mice, but one has at last been found who is not afraid, and even says she likes them.

She is Miss Ella Eversfield, an operator at the Grand Hotel, who takes her meals with her favorite mouse every day. The employees of the hotel have a private dining room, and some time ago a mouse was discovered there. At the time Miss Eversfield had not learned to love mice and she probably screamed, but the mouse was game and stuck it out, and, having learned the meal hours, he insisted on putting in his appearance every day, until finally the employees learned to consider him as one of their number, and now he eats his meals from the hand of Miss Eversfield.

Gas Loosens Tongue Of 'Silent' Convict

Seven Times Doomed and Saved by Dumbness, He Talks While Under Anesthetic.

STOCKTON, June 28.—"Silent" Carson, seven times in the shadow of the gallows for murder, reprieved as many times because of a fear that he may be insane, has broken his long silence.

A few days ago Carson was put under the influence of nitrous oxide while Dr. Clark, the superintendent, examined the prisoner's leg.

Asked how old he was, he replied that he was old enough to be born.

"Where were you born?" was asked.

"I was born of woman," was the reply.

"Where is your father?"

"Mother would know."

Garage for Baby Carriages in Church

Plans for Philadelphia House of Worship Include Place for Vehicles of Infants.

PHILADELPHIA, June 28.—Many new ideas have been advanced from time to time by the builders of modern Sunday schools, but it remains for the board of trustees of the Henry Disston Methodist Episcopal Church to conceive a new thought that will materially assist in the conveniences of their members.

According to the plans of the builders a garage for baby carriages is to be included in the equipment in the new edifice that is now under construction.

POSTMASTER TRIES IN VAIN TO RESIGN PLACE

Aged Official Has But Three Mails a Week But Patrons Muddy Her Parlor Floor.

BACKUS, MINN., June 28.—The postmaster of the smallest postoffice in the United States wants to quit and she can't. The Government ignores her resignation.

Her name is Mrs. Mary Armstrong, of Wicklow. She is 71 and her husband, James, was a veteran of the Civil War. Fourten persons get their mail at her log cabin, among towering pines, 12 miles from the nearest station.

Tries to Resign Post.

For more than two years she has been trying to persuade the Postoffice authorities to give the postoffice to some one else.

Telling her experiences, Mrs. Armstrong said:

"I had to turn my best front room into a place for the accommodation of the office patrons. I had to set up a letter rack where my best rocker was to sit alongside the front window, and the mail bags occupy the place I had picked out for the lounge.

"Men come wading through the snow in winter and mud in summer and track my front room all up, and, between them and Ed—that's my grandson—it kept me busy with the broom and dustpan.

Three Mails a Week.

"The official duties in a big town must be simply awful," continued Mrs. Armstrong. "We have three mails a week and I have to sort the letters and papers for 12 persons and put them in the rural delivery sacks. Two other patrons call at the office for their mail. The red tape causes me to lose sleep. Reports have to be made to the Postoffice Department as if the office were doing $1,000 worth of business daily."

You Can't Be Well When Constipated

"Keep Your Bowels Open"—Doctors Estimate 75 Per Cent of Sickness Due to Torpid Liver.

Some undigested food is left in the stomach daily, which the liver should clear away. A heavy or unusual diet, or a change in water, may cause the liver to leave a few particles to press and clog, and the next day more are left over. So this waste accumulates, clogging stomach and intestines, and causing constipation.

That is not all. If the waste is not eliminated it ferments and generates uric acid, a poison which gets into the blood and through the system.

JACOBS' LIVER-SALT immediately flushes the stomach and intestinal tract and washes away every particle of waste and fermentation; it purifies the blood by dissolving what uric acid has accumulated and passing it off in the urine.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is much better than calomel; no danger of salivation, no need of an after-cleansing dose of oil. It acts quickly and mildly; never forces, gripes or nauseates. It effervesces agreeably. Take it before breakfast and in an hour you'll feel splendid.

Don't take an inferior substitute; some closely imitate the name, but none produces the same result. All druggists should have the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. 25c. If yours cannot supply you, full size jar mailed upon receipt of price, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Co., Atlanta.—(Advt.)

FOR MILADY'S WARDROBE

By MME. HAUTE MONDE.

THE vogue of the double skirt seems to be increasing. The under one generally of supple satin, is often draped and drawn in around the ankles. Over this a contrasting material is draped or pleated. In the latter case it might pass for an elongated tunic, especially as it is often of taffeta. The fancy for these double skirts finds a better medium of expression in the sheer summer materials. Through the upper one, which is transparent, one sees the colored garniture of the under one and the effect is very soft and pretty.

* * *

Hawthorn, sweet peas and hedge roses are reported as being in favor in Paris for summer millinery. A novelty which has been introduced there is the cretonne flower for trimming straw "sport hats." This isn't a bad idea, as the regular muslin and silk flowers are generally inappropriate and always are unsatisfactory garniture for outing hats.

* * *

The black velvet neckbands show great originality and variety. One has a tab about three inches long hanging directly in front, the end of the tab being weighted with a "motif" of brilliants set in platinum. Some are tied in a spreading bow at one side; others in a tight little bow at the back. One that I saw was tied in a butterfly cravat bow directly in front.

* * *

For the summer hats, which are now the most important millinery concern, flowers, tulle, lace, and ribbon monopolize the attention. An attractive garden party hat seen the other day was a typical broad leghorn with a standing ruche of black tulle encircling the crown, and another lying flat on the brim. Between the two, at one side toward the front, was a great pink rose with its green foliage, while a little sheaf of pale blue wheat, with very long "spears" thrust out toward the front and another to the back.

* * *

Salmon is a tone that has but recently arrived. It has become popular because of its vivid tone, pink itself being too dull to suit the exigencies of the moment. Shrimp is a dye, too, that is popular. But, like all the rest, it must be in supple rich silk or satin, or in mousseline de sole. The big sashes that are known as the "Directoire," (though they are not really so,) from a kind of draping at the side or back.

* * *

The best dressy tailor-mades are now in moire, either in black or in one of the new shades. It is like supple silk, and is rich and effective, being manufactured with special care. The weave which has been fashionable, or rather has been a candidate for popularity during the last year, was handsome enough, but stiff and hard. Now the makers have brought out a superfine material which is bound to be fashionable for a long time to come. Moire is inclined to be oldish; but this new variety is quite flirtatious, though serious enough to gown a grande dame. Moire is well used in combination with satin, taffetas, or even cloth.

* * *

A novelty in parasols has a ferrule end which is an exact reproduction of the top of the Directoire walking sticks carried by the beauties of that period. The handle end of this parasol is slim and plain. When closed it is reserved in position, the ferrule end—which is quite long—being held as if the parasol were ready a Directoire staff.

A beautiful example of color blending was exemplified in a pretty dress in Japanese blue silk, printed with small violet roses. One side of the skirt formed a pannier, whereas the front and back widths crossed one another at the knee beneath a pink and mauve velvet rose with dark violet foliage. A similar flower fastened the violet velvet belt in front. Handsome "New-Art" guipure, dyed a warm ivory, in a design of plums and leaves, trimmed the bodice and the Venetian undersleeves in white mousseline de soie.

* * *

Elaborate lingerie dresses this season are almost exclusively of embroidered batiste combined with real laces of the heavier varieties, such as coarse filet, Cluny, Venise and Alencon. Or they are of net, with shadow lace or other fine weaves combined with the embroidered batiste. English eyelet embroidery, which early in the season appeared to have suffered a setback, has been coming into favor again in Paris and here it is now shown more frequently in batiste than in linen and is elaborately embroidered as well as "eyeleted."

The sashes for summer gowns grow in numbers and popularity. A useful sash for wearing with light summer gowns is that composed of printed gauze, with the ends traced over with metallic threads. Some of the new printed gauzes are rarely beautiful in color and design. In dull blue with a pattern of blurred roses one of these sashes would look well if traced over with dull silver threads; or again, in invisible green with a design of Japanese flowers in faded tints and a traced pattern on the borders done in copper threads.

The sashes are always heavily fringed and they add considerable grace to the figure, for when correctly arranged they mould the hips and vaguely outline the waist. The fringed ends may be arranged in a loose knot at one side, or they may be passed round to the back and tied in a large bow.

* * *

Fashions in motor apparel receive more attention every season. In buying motor apparel the custom usually followed is that of matching up the costume. Not that all the things should be the same colors, but they must look as though they had been bought to be worn together. This certainly is a fashion which commends itself from one point of view. It shows that the garments belong to the wearer, and are not borrowed from a friend in need or from one's hostess.

* * *

Picot ribbon lends itself so charmingly to the making of girdles and neck bows and hat trimmings that its popularity increases every day—and so every day the colors and designs in which it is shown likewise increase. An attractive girdle with ends at the back and a big, flat bow at the side, is made of wide Chinese blue picot ribbon trimmed with tiny pink and blue chiffon roses, applied as bands across the bottom of the sash ends, and as a buckle in the center of the bow.

* * *

One of the loveliest materials for the somewhat formal frock of daytime wear in the summer is Bulgarian printed Canton crepe. A charming design is light brown crepe printed with blue and lavender in a small formal pattern with a groundwork tracery of black all over the brown crepe.

* * *

A sensible bathing suit for a little girl consists of mohair bloomers and a knitted woolen sweater matching in color. The sweaters worn for bathing are made with sailor collars and worn with a tie. For the smaller child, both boy and girl, the one which is taking its first dip in the water, knitted woolen bathing suits, all in one piece and buttoned on the shoulders, are the most comfortable and durable. They are made in white, with blue bands around neck and sleeves, in red with white bands and in blue with red bands.

So entirely satisfactory have gold and silver cloth slippers become that they are adopted as the one neutral kind of footwear by all those who for reasons economical and otherwise do not indulge in slippers to match every evening gown. The hosiery people have made a decided success of matching silk stockings to these slippers and heretofore no other kind of stocking was tolerated, but this spring it became the fashion to match the stocking to the skirt and then add metal cloth slippers. The effect is much better.

Simplicity Rules In New Paris Hats and Gowns

These pictures show examples of the latest Parisian millinery creations for summer wear, and a fetching gown, also intended for the summer girl. The dominant note in both hats and dress is simplicity, and it is surprising what beautiful effects are obtained without the use of complex materials or a variety of colors.

No wonder Parisian women are famed the world over for the beauty of their hats and gowns. Just glance at these examples of the latest creations of the famous designers of confections for the adornment of milady's head and draperies for her form which have just come from the French capital.

Simplicity is the dominant note of up-to-the-minute fashions in Paris. Milliners and gownmakers now and then return to their sober senses after a protracted debauch in violent color effects and discover that beauty often lies in simplicity.

There is nothing complicated about the hat of old saxe blue with the lace frill edging its brim and a paradise plume in front, but the whole effect is unmistakably beautiful. The plume curls entirely around the base of the hat's crown, and then takes a graceful upward sweep, with a slight droop at the end.

Another striking but simple bit of millinery is the hat of brown straw with paradise plumes in the shade of red brown massed along one side of the crown.

Another charming hat is the black sailor shape, of straw and ribbon, bearing a single high aigrette at the front of the crown. The effect is amazingly chic.

The gown shown in the accompanying cut is a sartorial idyll of almost pastorial simplicity, yet possessing beauty that might evoke praise from the most jaded connoisseur. The base of the costume is white taffetas. The upper part is executed in Russian blouse fashion, with a bouquet of flowers laid on the belt. Sounds very simple, doesn't it? Yet the effect is remarkably charming.

Tight Skirts Held Bar to Matrimony

Ben Greet, Veteran Shakespearean Actor, Declares That Men Will Not Wed Wearers of Hobbles.

BLOOMSBURG, PA., June 28.—"Marriages will be fewer unless the women quit wearing the hideous hats and frightful dresses we see, and which are having a vogue like the unpleasant plays," remarked Ben Greet, the veteran Shakespearean actor, in an interview here.

"The women have only to look in the mirrors to see how they look, and men won't walk out with such dresses."

Then he told of an actress in his party with a skirt so hobbled that she could not kneel, and what happened to the skirt so that the girl could go on acting.

Cupid Moves to Vancouver, Wash.

Oregon's New Law Requiring Health Certificates Held Responsible.

VANCOUVER, WASH., June 28.—The record for marriage licenses issued in one day during the 60 years in which records have been kept was broken here when ten couples secured marriage licenses. Nor is this all.

At the present rate, in fifteen days the greatest month's record will be broken in one-half the time—and all because Oregon passed a law requiring certificates of health from men making application for marriage licenses. Already 58 licenses have been issued this month, the record being 65 for any entire month.

Burglar in Prison Wins Society Girl

Young Woman Visits Jail and Is Wooed on Sight by Notorious Criminal.

GRANTSVILLE, W. VA., June 28.—Application of Henry Allen, a notorious burglar, awaiting trial in the county jail here, for permission to marry Ada Jamison, a leading society girl of Parkersburg, Pa., has created a sensation throughout the western part of the State. Allen wooed and won his fiancee from behind prison bars.

Miss Jamison while being shown through the jail with a party of friends, met Allen, and it was a case of love at first sight. Allen has a long criminal record.

Women Taught to Save Million a Year

Kansas Garbage Cans Are Cheated of Immense Amount by Domestic Science Instruction at School.

TOPEKA, KAN., June 28.—Kansas cheated the garbage cans of the State out of $1,000,000 last year, and the amount will be increased at the rate of $500,000 a year until there will be virtually no wasted foods in the entire State.

That is the aim of the Kansas Agricultural College, and the State is spending $40,000 a year to help.

Seven hundred girls completed the domestic science courses at the agricultural college this week, and the college has just closed its movable cooking schools, which were attended by 11,000 women in the ten weeks in which they were operated.

SUFFRAGIST TO PAY TAX WHEN VOTE BILL IS SIGNED

CHICAGO, June 28.—"Mrs." Belle Squire, the defiant suffragist who, as head of the No-Vote-No-Tax League, has refused to pay taxes for five years, will square her account with the County as soon as Governor Dunne signs the limited woman suffrage bill.

"When the bill is signed and I am no longer a citizen in name only I will be found to be a prompt taxpayer," she asserted.

Modistes Run Out of Ideas, Now Use Century Old Styles

By LaPACONTEUSE

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, June 28.—Having invented new fashions for women year after year without a single stop, it now seems as if the brains of the kings and creators of modes in Rue de la Paix are at last played out and unable to conceive new ideas. As a matter of fact, none of the fashions they have launched during the last two years have made a hit.

It is not long since the harem skirt was talked of by everyone; before that it was the hobble skirt and the directoire period. At the present moment there is a definite tendency to clothe women in the gowns and accessories of a hundred years ago. As yet the tendency is not very far developed; but it is none the less noticeable.

Old Styles Come Back.

To take the gown itself, the draperies can often be seen on dresses of a hundred years ago, and even the plain gowns, particularly evening evening gowns, have their prototypes at a similar period.

At the Opera Comique, in "La Tosca" the other night, the scene of which is laid in 1800, Floria was wearing a gown which would have attracted not the slightest attention in a drawing room to-day, unless for its beauty.

It was of deep blue silk, with a high waist line. The skirt was absolutely plain and straight, and without any appearance of fulness, although there was ample freedom. The gown had a short train. The decolletage was V shaped, and unadorned.

Tosca, then, could have walked into any Paris drawing room in 1913 and not have attracted a single questioning look. In the day gown she wore in the first act she could have attended a fashionable tea with equal success. The only thing which made the gown different from a modern one was the large flowered pattern, which is not seen nowadays.

Century Old Touches.

There are several other century-old touches in woman's toilette today. Several women have been seen carrying the long gold-knobbed walking sticks, held near the top, and tied with a bow of ribbon, which you may see in hundreds of old portraits in almost any gallery. High Louis heels, of course, have been worn for some time, but they fit admirably into the present picture.

Nowadays the old custom of studding them with jewels has been revived. You buy your shoes at one shop and cross the road to a jeweler's to buy heels separately for them. I have seen such heels in the Rue de la Paix at $100 each, and that is not a top price.

Free Market Starts To Cut Cost of Living

San Jose, Cal., Plans To Do Away With Profit Made by Middle Man.

SAN POSE, CAL., June 28.—San Jose hit the high cost of living a solar plexus blow to-day when, under the direction of the city administration, a free market was opened in South Market Street at the City Hall Park.

A score of produce wagons came for the opening, and long before the selling day was over every scrap of salable goods had been disposed of and a crowd clamored for a chance to purchase.

Market Master Joseph Napoli declares that the first day's business demonstrated that producers received 25 per cent more for their sales than they could get from the middle man and that buyers saved a minimum of 25 per cent by doing business directly with the producers.

SOCIETY WOMAN GOES TO WORK IN BIG STORE

LOS ANGELES, June 28.—Miss Florence Lord, a graduate of Smith College, prominent socially in Chicago, New York and many other Eastern cities, and influential in suffrage clubs, has been working for a week or more in a Los Angeles department store, "to study the sociological conditions" at first hand, in order "to get away with her stunt."

Policewomen Carry Parasols on Duty

Newport Guardians of Peace Appear on Beach Armed With Mesh Bags and Sunshades.

NEWPORT, R. I., June 28.—For the first time in the history of the famous Newport beach, two women policemen were placed on duty there yesterday. They wore as uniforms blue blouses with brass buttons, blue skirts and sailor straw hats. They were appointed at the request of the Newport Civic League, and will be on duty all summer.

Their duties were nominal and they made no arrests. One promenaded the beach with a parasol, partly concealing her brass buttons, while the other swung a mesh bag as she walked along.

DANCING MASTERS DECLARE TURKEY TROT IS IMMORAL

ASBURY PARK, June 28.—The "turkey trot" is an immoral dance in the opinion of members of the American National Association, masters of dancing, in session here, and at today's meeting the delegates were urged to co-operate with local authorities in banishing the figure that is fast becoming the rage.

The "tango" was not treated so severely. If properly taught, the masters believe, it may be danced.

ALL WOMEN TO VOTE IN TIME IS SENATE'S IDEA

Even the Most Conservative Members Believe the Fair Sex Will Cast Ballot the World Over.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—That women in all civilized countries will be permitted to vote is regarded as inevitable by the most conservative Senators and Representatives.

It is their opinion that steady progress is being made and that Great Britain, the United States and other leading nations will eventually recognize that further delay is useless.

Two-Thirds Vote Needed.

The resolution proposing an amendment to the Federal constitution under which women would be given the ballot, now awaiting consideration by the Senate, is expected to be passed on at the next session. A two-thirds vote would be necessary for its adoption.

It would require the appoval of sixty-four Senators to make women suffrage operative for submission to the States, so far as the upper branch of Congress is concerned.

The chief handicap preventing woman suffrage lies in the opposition of Southern Congressmen. The votes for the women's movement have made headway in the South. A bitter struggle is in progress in Alabama, where Representative Hobson is seeking the Senatorship, as against Mr. Johnston, on a platform favoring woman suffrage and temperance. Senator Johnston says he will achieve re-election without difficulty.

Have Twenty-Four Votes.

It is figured that these Senators will certainly support the Chamberlain resolution providing for a constitutional amendment permitting women to vote; Ashurst and Smith, of Arizona; Thomas and Shafroth, of Colorado; Borah and Brady, of Idaho; Myers and Walsh, of Montana; Gallinger and Hollis, of New Hampshire; Chamberlain and Lane, of Oregon; Smoot and Sutherland, of Utah; Jones and Poindexter, of Washington; Clark and Warren, of Wyoming; Gore and Owens, of Oklahoma; Ransdell and Thornton, of Louisiana.

This totals but twenty-four of the sixty-four votes necessary in the Senate. In view of recent action in Iowa, Illinois and Kansas it is possible that Senators Cummins, Kenyon, Sherman, Lewis, Bristow and Thompson may be added to the list, making thirty in all. It is claimed that two or three additional votes may come from New England, but no names are suggested.

Woman Makes Eight Trips Around Globe

Champion Female World Girdler Finishes 8 Years' Journey With 381,000 Miles Covered.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Miss Jessie Ackerman, the woman champion globe-trotter, arrived here to-day from an eight years' tour around the world, her eighth globe-girdling trip in twenty years. She has broken the woman's record, with 381,000 miles to her credit.

On this trip she visited fifty-two countries and experienced every kind of ancient and modern travel.

Miss Ackerman said the happiest and most professional women are in Australia.

Gets Her Goat Back; City Repays $1.50

Mrs. Mahoney Receives Formal Document Telling Her That Pet Was Illegally Impounded by Officers.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—After voluminous correspondence between Dr. Frederick van Orden and Mayor Rolph and Chairman Jennings of the Finance Committee the committee yesterday solemnly agreed to return to Mrs. Mahoney, who lives near the county line, $1.50 paid by her to redeem "one certain goat illegally impounded, since the said goat was staked fast to the ground at the time the pound deputies illegally and unlawfully carried it off."

Wife of a Day Says It Was Worth Her $500

30-Year-Old Schoolma'am Philosophical Over Loss of 24-Hour Husband.

MILWAUKEE, WIS., June 28.—"Oh, no, I don't regret it much. It was worth $500 to be a wife, even if it did not last long. I am no spring chicken any more, and I did want to become some man's wife."

That is the philosophic manner in which Mrs. Violet Adamson, aged 30, formerly a school teacher at Stonefort, Ill., talked of the disappearance of her husband of a day with $500, which, she says, he persuaded her to let him "take to put in a bank" here. Then she asked the police for aid and transportation back to her home.

Feet of All Women in Town Deformed

Seventy-five Pairs Are Examined by Y. W. C. A. Physical Instructor, Who Invariably Finds Fault.

LA CROSSE, WIS., June 28.—Women's feet are all wrong, and they've got to be corrected in the opinion of the Young Women's Christian Association of La Crosse, and Miss Amanda Clement, physical director of that institution, has started out to do the job.

Miss Clement has just started a class of seventy-five young women in the feet question, and has taken diagrams of the feet of the girls both with shoes on and off and there, the diagrams—not the feet—she expects to place on view at a public exhibition soon to illustrate the ills to which the feet of the women of today are subject.

In the seventy-five pairs thus examined, Miss Clement has found none to be perfect, all having been deformed, to some extent, by being improperly shod.

Society Women Sound Knell for Mourning

Boston Leaders Declare That Custom of Donning Black for Dead Is Relic of Barbarism.

BOSTON, June 28.—Society women of Boston have answered the question, "How long should society women wear mourning for their dead relatives?" by saying in substance that mourning should not be worn. It was the consensus of opinion that it is a survival of barbarian days.

Mrs. Charles P. Putnam, wife of Dr. Putnam, said, "It seems to me that there is altogether too much mourning worn considering our present enlightened state of civilization. The world is dark enough as it is without women wearing crepe to make it any more gloomy.

Minister Refused Big Marrying Fee

Twenty-five Dollars Did Not Shake Dr. Pennewell's Determination.

CHICAGO, June 28.—The Rev. Almer Pennewell, of the Euclid Avenue M. E. Church, in Oak Park, announced recently that marriage fees were graft. He would marry persons, he said, for nothing. Recently he was put to the test.

Miss Dorothy Naize, of Oak Park, and Clifton Hunt, of Cincinnati, were married at his church. The affair was a big one socially, and the bride's father, not liking the "charity" plan of the pastor, decided that he should receive some remuneration for his services.

So Mr. Naize put $25 in new, clean bills in an envelope and handed the envelope to Mr. Pennewell offhand. The pastor was wide awake and rejected it. Mr. Naize then sought the pastor's wife. She, too, refused it.

QUEEN WILL GIVE BALL TO EXHIBIT HOME-MADE HAT

So Delighted With Fancy Dress Affair She Recently Attended, She'll Give One Herself.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—Queen Mary was so delighted with the Versailles fete at Albert Hall, which she attended the other day, that she has decided to give a big fancy dress ball herself next year, probably at Buckingham Palace.

She wishes all dresses to be of one period, and this is rather difficult, for nearly every period except the prehistoric has been used. But some one has a bright idea of a VanDyke ball, and this for the moment is favored.

Queen Mary, as a young woman, was always very fond of dressing up and liked nothing better than to take part in amateur theatricals. King George was rather an obstacle. But on hearing his wife's eloquent description of the Versailles ball he yielded to her desire.

Queen Regains Merriment.

The Queen is regaining some of the merriment which first endeared her to the English nation as Princess Mary. A royal fancy dress ball will give a great fillip to fancy dress.

There have been so many of these big affairs lately that people are becoming rather tired of them, but there is keen competition already among London costumers to get the deal going and carrying out of the costumes.

Queen Mary has directly inspired the fashion of home-made millinery, which now is much to the fore in the less go-ahead sections of society, and will wear one of her own creations at the ball. All her majesty's hats are of her own designs, and many of them are partially carried out by her own fingers. She makes no bones about her disapproval of extravagant sums spent on millinery by many women of fashion.

Princess Patricia a Milliner.

Princess Patricia is another member of the royal family who really is quite a talented milliner. She made the dainty creations worn by the bridesmaids of her sister, the Crown Princess of Sweden, and she also made the going-away hat recently worn by the lady-in-waiting, Miss Pelly, when she married the other day.

Lady Cheylesmore, nee French, the American wife of the well-known general, is a clever milliner and often had cause to be thankful for her talent when stationed in out-fo-the-way places. The Viscountess Maitland is also under the impression that she can trim hats, and she once had a sale of her handiwork for charity.

The Countess of Warwick is very successful with the floppy, picturesque kind of hats, and Lady Maxwellyte, an earnest parish worker after the Queen's own heart, always trims her own bonnets.

Valeska Suratt's Beauty Secrets. Removing Superfluous Hair

Secrets Few People Know. Valeska Suratt the Famous Self-Made Beauty Actress, Reveals Some of Her Treasured Experiences.

By Miss Valeska Suratt

REMOVING superfluous hair is a problem to many women. On the stage the continued use of a hair remover is necessary. Therefore it should be quickly efficacious and absolutely harmless to the skin. The formula I have perfected I believe solves the problem as nothing else has ever done. That is why it has become so tremendously popular. This formula never irritates, reddens or spots the skin. It dissolves the hair as by magic. Try it and you will be convinced. Hundreds of women could beautify themselves to a remarkable degree if they would remove not only the heavy hairs that appear on the face, but the soft down that is so frequently seen on the arms and face. This down is seen more often on those whose complexion is very light or very dark.

Get one ounce of simple sulfo solution. This you can get at the drug store for $1. Apply it with the finger tips to the superfluous hair, keeping the hair moist with it for two or three minutes until it has been dissolved. Then wipe it off with a damp cloth and wash the skin.

* * *

TAUNTED—You can stop your hair falling in a few days' time. My modesty will not prevent me from saying that I am known as the only woman on the American stage who wears no switches, puffs or other hair makeshifts. All the hair I have is my own. I grew it all through my own efforts. Here is the formula which is doing the same for hundreds of my readers and friends as for me:

Mix a half pint of alcohol with a half pint of water. To this add one ounce of beta-quinol. Shake thoroughly and then it will be ready for use. If you prefer, you can use imported bay rum instead of the water and alcohol. The beta-quinol you can get at almost any drug store for not more than 50 cents. This formula should be applied very freely to the scalp after brushing it generously for a few minutes all over. Rub the tonic thoroughly into the scalp with the finger tips.

Any head of hair needs a shampoo to keep the scalp free from scurf, and let the roots breathe. Do not use soap. Use eggol, which you can get at any good drug store for 25c. It has no equal as a shampoo.

* * *

STELLA S.—It is no uncommon thing for a woman to develop her bust several inches in a few weeks' time, naturally and safely, by using the following formula:

In a half pint of cold water, dissolve two ounces of ruetone and a half cup of sugar, all well mixed together. Of this, take two teaspoonfuls three or four times a day in a wine glass of water, after your meals. The ruetone will cost you $1 at the drug store.

* * *

ERUPTIONS—I do not wonder that ordinary tonics have not driven away your pimples. Here is a very effective, safe blood cleanser:

Dissolve 12 ounces granulated sugar in one-half pint of water, add 1 ounce of sarsene, and mix the whole together thoroughly, then add more water to make a pint. Sarsene is a liquid which you can get at the drug store by the ounce. Get it in the original package. Take one or two teaspoonfuls of this mixture three or four times a day, with a little water if desired.

* * *

MISS S. R. B.—Blackheads should not be pinched out. It injures and spots the skin. To get rid of them permanently first wash the face with hot water and soap. Then sprinkle some neroxin generously upon a sponge made wet with hot water. Then rub well for a few minutes on the parts of the skin which are affected with blackheads. You should be able to secure the neroxin at any druggist's for 50c.

* * *

UGLY—Every spot, every freckle, every blemish on the skin of the face, hands and arms will vanish by using this mixture:

Let half a pint of water come almost to a boil. Add two tablespoonfuls of glycerine. Keep stirring while adding 1 ounce of zintone, until it is all dissolved. Then let it cool. If the cream is too thick to pour easily from a bottle, thin it down a little with more hot water. The cream will be white and satiny. Hold a wet towel to the face several times for several minutes. Rub this cream on the entire face. Then wipe off with a soft, dry cloth. Then apply again and let it dry on the face. Repeat this again at night. Any good druggist will let you have zintone for about 50c.

* * *

OLD LOOKING—I never have known anything to rejuvenate the skin as splendidly as this. I have seen deep wrinkles leave entirely in a very short time by its use, as well as crows' feet and sagging of cheeks. It will make you look years younger. Pour a half pint of hot water in a bowl and place the bowl in a pan of water over a slow fire. To this add 2 ounces of eptol. Stir until it is dissolved and starts to cream. Then remove from the fire, slowly add two tablespoonfuls of glycerine, and continue to stir until it is cold. Eptol may be obtained for no more than 50 cents at any good drug store. This cream should be applied very liberally and thoroughly rubbed into the skin until it has disappeared. The cream will not grow hair on the face. Keep the cream in an air-tight jar or bottle.

CARPENTER'S 'JULIEN' CALLED SOUL TRAGEDY

Part Is Dream and Part Reality, Revealing the Secret Genius of the Composer.

By CHARLES HENRY MELTZER.
Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, June 28.—I came away from the dress rehearsal of Charpentier's "Julien" shaking with emotion. The last episode in the new work of the composer who evolved "Louise" had been tremendous in effect.

The tones in which Charpentier had expressed the destruction of a poet's faith and dreams had been too eloquent. His harmonies, his discords and his rhythms racked one's nerves. And what they meant was a soul-tragedy.

The ultra-modern men here—of the Debussy, Florent Schmidt and Ravel groups—smiled as they listened to some parts of the new "opera." To some it seemed as old as Richard Wagner. Nor were they wholly wrong. For, though it is of striking power and full of beauty, it was by no means "up to date."

Stooped to Copy No One.

Charpentier had, of course, not stooped to copy either Wagner or the Italian Veritists. To all he does he gives his own distinctive character. He gave it to "Louise," his first success.

He has put it into "Julien." Wagner, Mascagni and, perhaps, also Berlioz had been remembered in "La Vie du Poete" and were suggested here and there, of course, in "Julien." And yet the work which thrilled the audience at the Opera Comique a few days ago was painfully "personal." It seemed the expression of its creator's very life, the appeal of his unhappy, complex soul, the confession of his faith and doubt and dread.

There are literary parallels to the case of "Julien," in the "Manfred" of Byron, the "Faust" of Goethe and the Heinrich of Hauptmann. Those poems all described the eternal tragedy of man, with his aspirations, his ideals and his impotence.

"He who has flown so high, as thou has flown, Must perish if he once fall back to earth," says the Wise Woman to Hauptmann's Heinrich in "The Sunken Bell."

And at the outset Julien soars, as Heinrich soared, on the highway to the sun.

In the opening act of Charpentier's "opera," or dramatic poem, the music voices—rather conventionally now and then—the hero's idealism. By slow degrees we find him sinking into doubt. For he soon loses the Louise who inspires his dreams. Not the mere workgirl of his early opera, but a symbol, with the externals of a woman—his Muse, his Higher Self, his Power, his Dream.

When in the closing episode of "Julien" the poet again finds—or thinks he finds—Louise, she has changed to a street walker, a trull, a pitiful wreck, known to Montmartre as "Casque d'Oignon." So in the final movement of the "Fantastic" the nobility of the leading theme, which suggests Berlioz's love, is changed to an ignoble melody.

Part of the Opera Dream.

Part of Charpentier's "Julien" is dream, part is reality. There is, as I said in my first review of the "opera," a lack of unity in the composer's style. But the construction of the work is clear. It shows the tragedy of poets—and of humanity.

To come to earth—the score of "Julien" has much in common with that of "Louise." Echoes of that opera, as suggestions of its heroine, occur in the second and last acts. The tumult of the orgy at the Montmartre fair in the last episode has the spirit of the third act of "Louise" transformed—as a prayer may be transformed into a blasphemy. It was the fourth and last act that most moved me—not because it was the most beautiful.

Solo of Julien Exquisite.

The solo of Julien in the second act, the act of "Doubt," is by long odds the most exquisite incident, musically, of the work; and the cavatina of the purely symbolical Louise in the first act is almost as charming. But because it told the tragedy of poets (and, if you will, of man) so painfully.

No one who is intelligent need be shocked by the apparent crudity of the prologue, which shows us a figure—called Louise—in bed, at the Villa Medici, while her poet dreams. For, I repeat, in the composer's mind his mistress is not flesh, but inspiration. If Mr. Gatti-Casazza has not the courage to copy the Paris production he can draw the curtains of the alcove in which Louise lies. Or he can let her rest upon a couch. It does not matter.

I fear that Mr. Gatti-Casazza and the plain New York public would faint at the stark, realistic frankness of the dances in the orgy at Montmartre. Well—they are not essential, though they emphasize the composer's thought.

WINDSOR, June 28.—Not even the royalty, the winning jockeys or the best thoroughbreds attracted the attention during Ascot Week that was accorded two Southern belles, Lady Newborough, former Louisville, Ky., girl, and Mrs. Cecil Bingham, whose superb gowns were the cynosure of all eyes through the gay period.

Lady Newborough, who was Miss Grace Carr, a sister of Mrs. Bingham, would be worth a fortune to any Parisian modiste, the English society people are saying, because of her ability in showing off her clothes and hats to fascinating advantage.

During the meet she was frequently invited to the royal box, while Mrs. Bingham was personally complimented by the Queen.

Lady Newborough was the greatest "costume success" of the meeting. Her gown was of oyster satin, draped with rare old black lace in points reaching below the knees, with a large emerald clasp holding the gold belt and yellow, white and red roses on one shoulder.

Her hat was of the bonnet variety and weighted with a dozen or more large roses of the same shades. Her shoes and stockings were rose color. She was in the inclosure with Prince Alexander of Teck, Count Albert Mensdorff, the Austrian Ambassador, and Mr. Marshall Field. She lunched with Countess Pappenheim (May Wheeler, of Philadelphia), whose party also included Lady Diana Manners and Mrs. William Northrup McMillan, of St. Louis.

LONDON, June 28.—King George has no wish to fill the post of Poet Laureate left vacant by the death of Alfred Austin, whose muse was less charming than himself.

The other day in the House of Commons Captain Arthur Lynch, the Member from West Claire, who fought with the Boers, asked politely what were the perquisites, privileges and salary of the Poet Laureate. Premier Asquith replied $350 a year and $150 in lieu of the ancient "butt of sack."

Two members suggested that the office of King's jester be revived.

Captain Lynch wound up the discussion by remarking dryly, as one who speaks of sack, that it seemed to be wasteful to give a butt of sack for a ha'porth of poetry.

AMERICAN GIRL SUES HUSBAND, ITALIAN COUNT

Marchioness San Germano Tells Tragedy of Her Life—Plans To Go on Operatic Stage.

Special Cable to The American.

ROME, June 28.—Marchioness San Germano, American born and bred, is awaiting the final decree of divorce for which her husband, Italian aristocrat, millionaire and distinguished, sued in Hungary after she had obtained legal separation under the Italian law, which does not recognize absolute divorce. When her legal affairs are settled she will sing in opera.

Father a Minister.

Virginia Hoge, Marchioness San Germano, comes of the oldest and best stock to be found in the Southern States. Charters to her ancestors from the Stuart kings are still preserved in the family records. Her father, the Rev. Dr. Peyton H. Hoge, was pastor of the Warren Memorial Church at Louisville. His father was co-pastor with the Rev. Dr. Springer, of the Brick Church, New York.

"We were desperately in love," the Marchioness began. "I needn't go into our courtship beyond saying that I first met my husband when I came to study voice production in Rome, nearly eight years ago. We met casually at the house of a friend, and it was a case of love at first sight. After a brief honeymoon we returned to Italy to settle in the castle which my husband owns at Arpino in Caserta.

"After a while my husband began to be much away from home on business and I got very lonely. But it was only after three years of married life that the crash came which so often happened much earlier in international marriages.

"We went to the seaside for my little daughter's health. It was the old story on his part—'the woman tempted me, and I did eat.'

Saw Woman in Case.

"No sooner had we got to the seaside than I saw the cause of all the mischief. The 'other woman' had followed him there. I chose to shut my eyes and accept her false advances under the cloak of friendship. But if ever a woman played the serpent it was she. How much kinder to stab a wife openly than to murder what she holds dearest—her husband's love.

"At that time I received word that my father was ill, and I wanted to be near him. The result can easily be guessed. When I returned there was no attempt to conceal the truth. This woman was determined to get him—to marry him; partly from a blind passion, but chiefly for his money and his position. And I felt that with my best jewel gone and my pride outraged I had nothing to do but to accept the situation. So I decided on suing for a separation."

TITANIC WRECK MADE BASIS OF A PLAY IN PARIS

Alan Dale Graphically Describes Thrilling, Though Morbid, Production.

BY ALAN DALE.
Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, June 28.—New York's little Princess Theater could take every one of the six playettes now running at its step-sister theater, the Grand Guignol, in this metropolis, and make every kind of a hit with them. Honestly, I feel rather ashamed of my morbidity when I get to the Grand Guignol, for I'm so hungry for horrors. A dreadful appetite for the unusual takes possession of me. I lose my aesthetic sense, my perspective, by idea of proportion. I want something horrible, gripping and overwhelming!

Well, they've got a little play there in two scenes by Charles Muller and Maurice Level, called "S. O. S.," which is nothing more nor less than dramatized Titanic disaster, which you'd think would be rather difficult to get over the footlights grippingly. Trust the Parisian producer to see to all that. Rely on him. He knows his morbid human nature, and—you needn't worry.

Titanic Is Not Named.

It is the night of a dance on board (the Titanic is, of course, not named in the play), and the scene is laid in the smoking room. They are playing cards and indulging in the usual desultory pastimes of shipboard life. Dolly Barnay drifts in. Her husband is on board, but during the crossing she has found—an affinity! He loves her (and shipboard love is very swift), while she has qualms and scruples, and all the rest of it. Still, after he has coaxed and cajoled she decides to meet him in a little room adjoining the smoke-room, and you see them go in.

The ship hits an iceberg. You see the shock—slight, but unmistakable. The scenery zig-zags—it lifts—it falls. The players in the smoke-room pause for a moment, then continue to play. The interruption was imperceptible. The captain enters and tells them that something has happened. They must continue to play their game, so that the passengers will not suspect an event of sinister import. On they come, chattering and wondering, to be reassured and filled with false confidence.

Lights Out In a Riot.

The worst is about to happen. The lights go out, and lanterns are brought on. Dolly's husband rushes on in search of his wife. Where can she be? He has hunted for her high and low, impossible to discover her. Tumult begins to reign. There are six feet of water in the stateroom. Passengers are forbidden to go below. They start a rampage. Riot is in the air. Already the semblance of polite humanity has departed. Men and women alike lose their equanimity. The husband still hunts his wife. Where is she? The smoke-room darkens and darkens. You quiver a bit at the scene. It grows horribly realistic.

Dolly and her lover drift in from the adjoining room, unaware that a catastrophe has happened. She is in her ball dress. The impending horror dawns upon her and upon him. He pushes her back into the room, just in time to prevent a meeting with her husband. There, in the deepening gloom, with the ship on the verge, the two men have the inevitable understanding. The husband guesses the truth. The man has been alone in that room with his wife, and he cannot deny it. It is vivid, gripping, awful.

Rush For Life Boats.

"Save the women!" A sailor rushes in, distraught. An official refuses to obey orders. He is shot dead and falls prostrate. The crowd yells, jostles, expostulates. Then there is a grand rush for the lifeboats, and the smoke-room is deserted except for Dolly, who crawls from her hiding place, and her wretched husband. Her lover has deserted her to save his own life. The husband turns on her with accusations and invective. There is a tense and dramatic scene between them. The ship is sinking. In a few minutes it will have skirled into the depth. With a blood-curdling cry he pushes the guilty woman from him and rushes away. She shrieks, "Save me! Save me! Save me!" and as the final curtain falls she is writhing on the floor of the smoke-room alone, deserted by lover and husband, abject.

The little play brought home the horror of the Titanic business more poignantly than any "survivor's story" or "eye-witness' narrative." It gave me the blues. If I had seen it on the eve of sailing, I'd have cancelled my passage. Of course, I was at the Grand Guignol for a sensation, and certainly I got one.

One Other Horror.

There was one other horror. It was by Jean Lailler and was called "Le Croissant Noir." It was an episode of the Balkan war and dealt with cholera! A patriotic Turk, resenting the indignities to which his people were subjected, cheerfully spread cholera germs among the soldiers, and the entire army is impregnated. He is shot dead by the irate cholera-ized ones, and the play ends without further parley. This is a bit obvious—a trifle too much like horror for horror's sake. One detects the labor of the thing.

The four other plays were delightful—froth, bubble, wit—really joys. One called "Les Ficelles" (The Strings) dealt with marionettes. The marionettes thought and spoke and gave their views on human beings, and philosophized and babbled. Very clever, and a bit unusual. "Le Joli Garcon" (The Good-Looking Chap), "Le Bonheur" (Happiness), and "La Delaisse" (The Abandoned One) all held grip and punch and quality.

Truly a delightful bill.

Stonemason Forced To Wall Up Girl in Old House, He Says

Spaniard Informs Police of Hair-raising Experience Near Madrid Recently.

Special Cable to The American.

MADRID, June 28.—The police of Barcelona are investigating the story of Esteban Gutierrez, a stonemason, who declare that he was forced to wall up a young girl in a building near the city.

Gutierrez says that two well-dressed men called at his home with a motor car and asked him to accompany them a short distance into the country to carry out some urgent repairs.

When they were outside the city the men seized Gutierrez, bound and blindfolded him. A few minutes later the car stopped in front of a lonely house.

The mason says he was led inside and ordered to wall up a narrow aperture. He heard someone sobbing, and, tearing the bandage from his eyes, he saw a young girl, bound with ropes and wedged in the aperture.

His captors ordered him to build a wall so as to inclose the unfortunate girl, and when Gutierrez refused they threatened him with revolvers. He says that he was forced to comply with their commands, after which the car conveyed him to a wood several miles away.

Before leaving him in the woods the men gave Gutierrez $20 in silver, and warned him not to speak of the incident. He was found by a woodman and he went at once to the police.

Frenchman Tells Authorities of What He Believes Efforts to Damage Aeroplane

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, June 28.—Lieutenant Uberthier, of the French Flying Corps, has informed the authorities of what he believes to be a plot to murder him by damaging his aeroplane.

A few weeks ago, he says, he was flying 3,000 feet above the Loire when his monoplane caught fire, the petrol tank apparently having been tampered with. A few days later he was testing his control before going up when a wire broke in the middle, showing signs of having been deliberately weakened. Again, when he was at a height of 2,000 feet his engine suddenly failed and he narrowly escaped death. Finally, after his machine had been repaired and left in a field overnight the sentries in charge of it were attacked by several men, whose object was apparently to get at the monoplane.

The airman's mother and wife both received telegrams signed "A Friend" immediately after his accidents, but before it was known that he had escaped injury, informing them that he had been killed.

Every one feels great sympathy with the aged Emperor in his sorrow.

A number of persons whose relatives are buried in the Central Cemetery, where Colonel Redl lies, have made a protest against the traitor being permited to lie in consecrated ground near their kin. On the authorities refusing to listen to their complaint they made a demonstration recently, destroying the mound raised above the grave.

PRINCES ANGRY AS REICHSTAG INSISTS ON TAX

Imperial Government Argues in Vain to Prevent Their Paying Part of Great Appropriation.

By FREDERICK WERNER.
Special Cable to The American.

BERLIN, June 28.—The Finance Committee of the Reichstag has severely shocked the feelings of the Imperial Government by maintaining that the Federal Princes of the empire will have to submit to taxation in order to raise the enormous amount at once to cover the increased military and naval expenses.

In vain did the Imperial Government argue that the Federal Princes are sovereigns, who dare not be taxed like ordinary human beings. It was said that while they were willing to come forward with voluntary contributions, as their patriotism prompted them, it would be a mortal insult if the Reichstag tried to tell them how much they must pay.

Princes Ordered to Pay.

The majority within the committee, however, consisting of representatives of the Left, the Socialists and the Center, stuck to their guns manfully and maintained that there was nothing in the constitution granting the reigning Princes freedom from taxation and a paragraph was accordingly added to the bill ordering all Princes of the empire to pay taxes in accordance with the rules applying to the common herd.

The only consideration shown these hitherto privileged personages was that it was left to the "Bundesrat" (Council of the Empire) to select the officials that are to collect the taxes from the members of the sovereign houses.

There is every reason to believe that the Reichstag as a whole will adopt the measure recommended by the committee, and when this happens, the Bundesrat has no choice but to accept the principle of sovereign Princes' liability to taxation or to refuse to accept the law.

Appealed in Empire's Name.

The latter alternative however seems entirely out of the question, since it was in the name of the Bundesrat and the sovereign Princes that the Imperial Government appealed to the patriotism of the people and emphasized the absolute necessity of the law.

It would be impossible to refuse to accept the law merely because it compels the Princes to pay their share of the extraordinary military expenses. At any rate, the Imperial Government has rendered the sovereign Princes a very poor service by maintaining the theory of their freedom from taxation.

Aristocratic Clubs Heave Sigh of Relief When Separated Courtier Is Buckingham Guest.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—A certain peer, who was formerly a Lord-in-Waiting to His Majesty and who figured in the divorce court recently, was commanded to a dinner at Buckingham Palace this week. This the Court Circular reveals.

A great sigh of relief is wafted out of the windows of the aristocratic clubs. The King's command—his invitation to dinner—is taken to mean that his majesty is inclined to tolerate marital peccadillos, although he frowns on such sins. In this he follows the example of his father.

This liberality of view was scarcely expected of King George, who has the sincerest respect for the opinion of his spouse in such unhappy affairs.

Queen Mary is called "prim." So if anything were needed to establish a woman who has not found her husband her ideal it is the stamp of Queen Mary's womanly approval. Her majesty has set that stamp on several Americans, the Duchess of Marlborough, who was Consuelo Vanderbilt; Mrs. Cornwallis-West, born Jerome, and Mrs. John Astor.

Thought Wife Went Down With Titanic

Frenchman Shoots Companion and Tries to Slay Himself When Mistake Is Discovered.

Special Cable to The American.

PARIS, June 28.—A tragic sequel to the Titanic disaster is reported here. Among the passengers was a Frenchwoman named Mme. Breyns, who lived at Bethune. Her husband, a Belgian, aged 30, read her name among the list of dead. After a time he sought consolation with another young woman, with whom he lived at a place 20 miles from Bethune.

A few days ago he learned that his wife was among the rescued and that she was in France searching for him. This so upset him that he shot and killed his companion and then fired two shots at his own head. These did not prove fatal, and he was on the point of hanging himself when the police appeared and took him to the hospital.

To Regain a Healthy, Girlish Complexion

(From the Feminine World.)

If you would have a clear, fresh, girlish complexion, one ounce of ordinary mercolized wax will aid you in this direction more than shelves full of cosmetics. It produces a natural beauty. This wax, procurable at any drug store, completely absorbs a bad complexion, revealing the healthy young skin underneath. Its work is done so gradually, day by day, that no inconvenience is caused. The wax is applied at night, like cold cream, and removed in the morning with soap and water.

Another valuable rejuvenating treatment—this for wrinkles—is to bathe your face in a solution of powdered saxolite, 1 oz., dissolved in ½-pt. witch hazel. This has a remarkable action in smoothing out the lines and "firming up" the loose tissue.

BOXERS DEVELOP THEIR PUNCH BY GRUELING WORK

Owen Moran Trained Years Building Up His Famous Left Hand Wallop.

NEW YORK, June 28.—A sporting writer got Mike Donovan up in a corner last week and learned a lot about the fighting game from the veteran pugilist and teacher of boxing. Donovan is responsible for a lot of the finer points of boxing as they are practiced by modern glove men. He is credited with being the first man to use the shift, the blow that Bob Fitzsimmons practiced till he made it almost as deadly as a rifle bullet when he sent it to a man's jaw or stomach, and Fitz could hit a man so hard with it that many times he sent it to the stomach instead of the jaw fearing if it landed on the jaw he might kill his opponent and it is reported that it was Donovan who encouraged Bob to use it on the body instead of the jaw.

Fighters Are Born.

In his talk the other day, Mike stated that a good tacher could make a boxer, but that a fighter had to be born, that no one could make a fighter. The necessary aggressiveness and courage had to be born in a man.

"But," said the old-time bareknuckle fighter, one of the best boxers himself in the country in his palmy days, "a teacher can improve a fighter's methods, for there is a right and a wrong of fighting.

Hard Practice Needed.

Following up Donovan's thought, there is a lot that the young boxer of to-day rarely knows about the manly art. All the blows used in boxing have been catalogued or named by old-time boxing teachers. All the guards of counter blows that can be used to ward off such blows have also been tagged, so that when a blow or guard is mentioned the man who is familiar with boxing knows exactly what is meant. In teaching boxing a man was shown how to hit a certain blow and then how to defend himself from the same blow when used by an opponent.

Some pugilists always seem to have a fondness for certain punches which they can use better than they can any others in the list. It is also a fact that some boxers seem to be able to defend themselves better from some blows than from others. Blows that a fighter can land on one man he can't get over on some other fellow. Now, when the boxer learns the most effective blows, and how to use them properly, it is up to him to practice such punches till they become like second nature to him.

Moran Develops Punch.

Owen Moran was asked once how he developed such a terrific straight left hand punch, and he replied that often he had punched a bag with his left hand, hitting straight for over an hour and a half at a time. Sometimes he had punched the bag so hard with his left hand that his arm would drop to his side exhausted. Now, any other boxer can develop just as good a punch as Moran if he would first learn to use his left hand straight and then work every day for an hour or two on the bag. There is where the youngster nowadays falls down, for none of them can be gotten to do that sort of thing, and that is why there are no Owen Morans or Jim Driscolls among the young American boxers.

"KNOCKOUT" BROWN TRAINS HARD FOR HOWARD BOUT

CHICAGO, ILL., June 28.—George "Knockout" Brown, the Greek middleweight, is down to hard training for his twenty-round engagement with Jimmy Howard at Butte, Mont., on July 4. Brown is boxing from six to ten rounds daily and is getting into grand shape.

Brown has always claimed that he is best over the derby route and fans here are anxiously awaiting the result of the scrap. Brown rules a 10 to 7 favorite in the betting that has been done. Both boys hail from Chicago.

ROLLER SIGNS FOR RETURN MAT BOUT WITH CUTLER

CHICAGO, ILL., June 28.—Dr. B. F. Roller, one of the fastest, cleverest and most scientific wrestlers in the business, has signed to meet Charlie Cutler in a finish match, the battle to be waged in a ring at Benton Harbor, Mich., July 4. Floyd Fitzsimmons, of Benton Harbor, is promoting the show. It will be an open air affair in the ball park adjoining the house of David Field. Roller recently lost two falls to Cutler, after being thrown from the ring, and wants to retrieve himself. He asks Cutler for a side bet.

HAL CHASE PUTS GINGER AND PEP INTO WHITE SOX

Former Yankee Is Playing Star Ball for Callahan's Nine; Works Great With Lord.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 28.—Hal Chase, former Yankee, now a member of the Sox team, has certainly done much to aid the Chicago American League team. Hal has gingered up the bunch in great style and taught the boys some new tricks.

Chase is surely out to make good. There isn't a man on the South Side squad who is displaying more pepper, more ginger, more determination. There isn't one of the Sox players who is more enthusiastic.

Some one said that Chase had remained in New York three years too long. It may have been only one or two. But that fellow had the right angle.

* * *

IT was of Chase that we intended to speak. You know he has made a tremendous hit, not only with Manager Callahan but with every fellow on the team. The stories which preceded the first sacker were none too reassuring. The New York papers were panning him. But when Hal got in action the fellows began to suspect that maybe there might be some defense.

One thing was certain. That was that he wanted to make good. And then another quality asserted itself. That was that he had the ability to make good his ambition. And when desire and ability spur on he's likely to land.

* * *

CHASE and Lord are of a kind. There isn't anything conservative about either. Let them play the game as they will and they'll play hit and run ninety-nine times out of a hundred and kick because the conditions demand a bunt on the last.

Any time that Rath gets on, it's hit and run. And if Lord comes through then the Sox are in a position to score some runs. Because it's pretty much of a cinch that Chase and Lord also will play that game.

It's the dashing game when Lord and Chase work together and they succeed because Hal is credited with being as sure to hit when he once gives the sign as any man in the American League.

Ball Made of Soap Gets Golfer's Goat

BOSTON, MASS., June 28.—Golfers delight in practical jokes and at the head of the list is one that was original with L. A. Hamilton of New York.

Before remade ball's were looked upon with scorn by players, small molds were owned by many professionals, so that it was possible with a little heat to remodel or remake a ball after it had been cut or knocked out of shape. Hamilton conceived the idea that he could make a golf ball out of soft soap and get a rise out of one of the bunch.

The ball was formed, allowed to harden, painted, enameled and shellacked to the queen's taste.

It was agreed to allow Lou to tee each ball for the foursome as it started out. Two players whacked out nice long balls with an admiring throng looking on. Then came No. 3 in all his glory. A terrific swing and a thud. Small pieces of soap flew in all directions, evoking plaudits from the gallery.

JOHNSON WILL OUTLAST WOOD, DECLARE EXPERTS

BOSTON, MASS., June 28.—Ever since Joe Wood attracted attention to himself by his splendid work, judges of ball players have predicted a short career for him, for the reason that his style of delivery is decidedly wearing on the pitching arm. That snappy elbow movement which Wood employs, it was predicted, would put him out of the game much sooner than would ordinarily be the case, and this prediction seems to have come true, or Wood is finding it no easy matter to get the stuff on the ball that he formerly had.

On the other hand, it is predicted that Johnson will outlast all the present crop of pitching stars, for there is not the slightest strain on his arm when he works. He has a free, easy motion and gets the full benefit of his entire body behind every delivery he makes. This saves his arm, and good judges believe that because of this Johnson will be a star pitcher for many years.

Dillon Claims 158 Pound Title

Would Give Klaus Return Match

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., June 28.—Jack Dillon, who by virtue of his victory over Frank Klaus last month contends he has clinched not only the American middleweight championship, but the championship of the world, does not intend to rest on his laurels even during the heated summer months. While Dillon asserts that his title to the middleweight crown is clear, he says he will not exercise the champion's prerogative and fight only once in six months.

"I fought my way to the top," said Dillon to-day, "and now that I have gained the championship I'm not going to sit back like a dictator and sidestep matches. Whenever the public demands it I will fight any man of my weight at any time, any place and over any route. That ought to be fair enough. That's where I stand. I never was very strong on this talk stuff. My way of forcing recognition as a championship contender was by fighting every one that was trotted out for me. Now since I have climbed to the top I'm not going to change my policy."

* * *

AND Dillon has backed up this statement by going right ahead with a busy fighting program. He will meet Bill McKinnon, the Eastern middleweight, in a ten-round bout at Indianapolis on July 3, and will take on Jimmy Clabby at a later date.

"These clever boys are just right for Jack," asserts Sam Marburger, manager of Dillon. "I see Clabby is claiming the championship since he beat Eddie McGoorty, out in Montana. Well, that makes it all the better. But before Clabby can grab any such title he will have to defeat the real champion. When Jack beat Frank Klaus he became the world's champion and that's all there is to it. Klaus and his manager have made a big holler, but they can't lay Klaus' defeat to local favoritism. I intend to ignore Klaus' complaint of undue favoritism, because I felt it was too foolish to reply to. More than twelve thousand people saw that contest and at least half of them came from distant points. Not one of the twelve thousand can say Dillon didn't win and by a good margin, and if any one has I haven't heard about it.

* * *

"KLAUS has tried to make capital of the fact that Tom Dillon was the referee, leaving the inference that Tom Dillon is Tommy Dillon, Jack's brother. Now Klaus knows that Jack Dillon's real name is Ernest Cutler Price. Tom Dillon is a business man and a politician who has a mighty good reputation in Indianapolis. It is true that Tom was big enough to break the boxers apart when Klaus held on until the big crowd began to hiss in the third round. Klaus was beaten and he ought to take his medicine. Jack gave him two pounds in weight and even then turned the trick. Now Klaus needn't worry about a return match. Jack will meet him whenever the public demands it and a suitable purse is offered."

WILLARD AND WILLIAMS TO CLASH IN RENO BOUT

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—Manager Tom Jones announced last night that he had matched Jess Willard for a 10-round fight with Al Williams of Cleveland, Ohio, at Reno, Nev., July 4.

UMPIRE BUSH EXONERATED.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—Members of the San Francisco Coast League team who charged Umpire Garnett Bush recently with being under the influence of liquor during the game, failed to appear before President A. T. Baum to substantiate their charges.

President Baum gave out a statement to the effect that a thorough investigation had convinced him that the charges were groundless.

BIG MEET AT LOS ANGELES; THOMSON WILL COMPETE

LOS ANGELES, CAL., June 28.—The Amateur Athletic Union all-round championship to be staged at the University of Southern California field on Saturday, July 12, will give Fred Thomson another opportunity to set world figures for this competition. Fred Kelly and Jim Donohue are expected to be among the contestants. Thomson has twice won the all-round championship.

MARANVILLE IS CONFIDENT.

BOSTON, MASS., June 28.—Little Maranville, the Boston shortstop, is a fighter from the head waters. He believes the Braves can beat any team in the league. Manager Stallings is not doing anything to discourage this belief of his great shortstop.

St. Louis Browns Real Iconoclasts

WHEN the St. Louis Browns trimmed the Philadelphia Athletics, 5 to 2, and ended the winning streak of the Mackites, which totalled fifteen successive triumphs, another chapter was added to the sensational feats in breaking records which has featured the American League for the past several years.

Not a first division team since 1908, still the Browns have compiled a peculiar record of being able to wreck records of the enemy, and stopping the athletics brings to memory a few of the incidents which have happened. Look at this list:

In 1908 beat the Naps in the game that prevented Cleveland from winning the pennant and allowed the Tigers to win by half a game.

In 1910 took five out of eight games in a series from the Tigers and put Detroit out of the pennant race.

In 1910 beat Southpaw Krause, who had started with ten successive victories.

In 1912 beat Walter Johnson when the star had won sixteen in a row and was after Marquard's record of nineteen.

In 1913 stopped the Naps after they had won ten straight.

In 1913 scored on Walter Johnson after he pitched fifty-six successive scoreless innings.

In 1913 beat the Athletics after they won fifteen stright.

Not a team of record-breakers themselves, but a breaker of almost all records, the Browns have caused havoc and fear among the teams who are in the way of becoming famous in the dope book of baseball.

FOOD FOR SPORT FANS

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

WRESTLING STILL.

Fake, fake, fake,
While the common folk pay to see,
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me.

Oh, well for the Turkish lad
As he gobbles his curds and whey;
He knows in the nation across the sea
He will gather the kale some day.

And the stately ship rolls on
Till it pauses at Quarantine,
And they slip the noose and the Turk gets loose
In the chase of the long, long green.

Fake, fake, fake,
And they do it with ghoulish glee,
And away they sail with a bunch of kale
From the land of the brave and free.

For approximately one buck per throw, the citizens of Benton Harbor, Mich., will celebrate the Fourth by watching Doc Roller and Charlie Cutler, two of the world's keenest business men, in the act of making money.

Hamid Kalla Pasha, the Teutonic Turk, is making a hit in the East, demonstrating that P. T. Barnum was not a rummy.

One reads in the newspapers that Connie Mack will hand a regular outfielder to Frank Chance. The said transaction will take place when the said Frank Chance is handed some regular money by the gent who once owned him.

One might be interested in the report that Chicago beat St. Louis in a motorcycle race if one were connected with the Coroner's office.

We note that another person has attempted to swim the English Channel and failed. The reason we noted it is that it reminded us of our attempts to stick the barkeep in a dice game.

Once upon a time baseball was our national pastime. But that was before our citizens began taking bichloride of mercury by mistake.

THE NATIONAL PASTIME.

My pastime, 'tis of thee,
Sweet game of sluggery,
Of thee I sing.
Game where the pitchers clout
The shortstops on the snout
And knock each other out
With hook and swing.

I love the gladsome sight
Of ath-a-letes who smite
The horsehide ball,
But though the hitting fills
My soul with happy thrills,
I love the boxing mills
Above them all.

ST. PAUL, June 28.—St. Paul probably will withdraw from the Northern League, according to an announcement by H. T. Conrad, owner of the local team.

Bonehead Playing Spoils Good Athletes

DENVER, June 28.—The "solid ivory" seems to keep more players from reaching great distinction on the ball field than anything else. We want no better example of this than "Ping" Bodie of the White Sox. He is one of the greatest natural hitters in the game, but he spoils it all by constantly pulling "bonehead" plays.

It is because of this that Manager Callahan has him warming the bench two-thirds of the season. In a recent game in New York Bodie was caught twice "flat-footed." With the slightest use of his think tank he would have scored two runs instead of being put out twice.

What thoughts can be flitting through the domes of these players when they are on the base lines? Bodie must be getting a glimpse of an aviation meet somewhere off in the distant regions. Surely his mind is miles away from the game in which he is engaged.

Is it any wonder that players like Ty Cobb, Wagner, Eddie Collins, Johnny Evers, Larry Doyle, Tris Speaker and others we could mention are at the top of their profession? Not a bit of it. They use brains.

THOMPSON IS BACK AGAIN; TO MEET O'NEIL ON JULY 4

HAMMOND, IND., June 28.—"Cyclone" Johnny Thompson, the veteran ringman, will enter the ring for the first time in over a year when he takes on Tom O'Neil in a ten-round set-to here on July 4. O'Neil is one of the toughest middleweights around these parts and is expected to give Thompson a tough argument.

Both boys are already down to hard work for the mill. The winner has been promised a match with Jimmy Clabby. They have agreed to fight at catchweights.

The Biggest Motor Truck Order Ever Placed

80 Alcos for the U. S. Mail—A $225,000 Sale

THE Postal Transfer Service, Inc. has just placed the largest order for motor trucks on record—an order for 80 Alco trucks to haul U. S. mail—a sale approximating $225,000.

This marks the greatest tribute ever paid to any motor truck. For the contract was awarded to the Alco over leading makes of motor trucks, gasoline and electric, after exacting tests by Government inspectors.

Consider for a moment these facts:

These 80 Alco trucks in a year will be required to cover 1,000,000 miles; to haul 1,550,000 tons—157,680,000 cubic feet—of United States postal matter. End against end, this fleet of 80 Alco trucks extends 1310 feet—a quarter of a mile.

Great are the proportions of these figures. But more important is the nature of the service. It is day in and day out, running on railroad schedule, making trains, operating nights as well as days—24 hours a day at times—over all sorts of roads, in the sizzling heat of summer, in the winter blizzards—and always the necessity of clockhike regularity.

None but a superior truck could qualify for tasks such as these.

The Alco truck is no experiment in this type of service—it has been proven in the service of express companies. The American Express Company has 36, the Long Island Express 20 and so on.

And no type of duty is more severe than express service. Further, it is only natural that the verdict should fall to a product of the American Locomotive Company. 51,000 of its locomotives have hauled you, your families, the things you eat and things you wear—safely and on time; in high altitudes; in low altitudes; and in many latitudes.

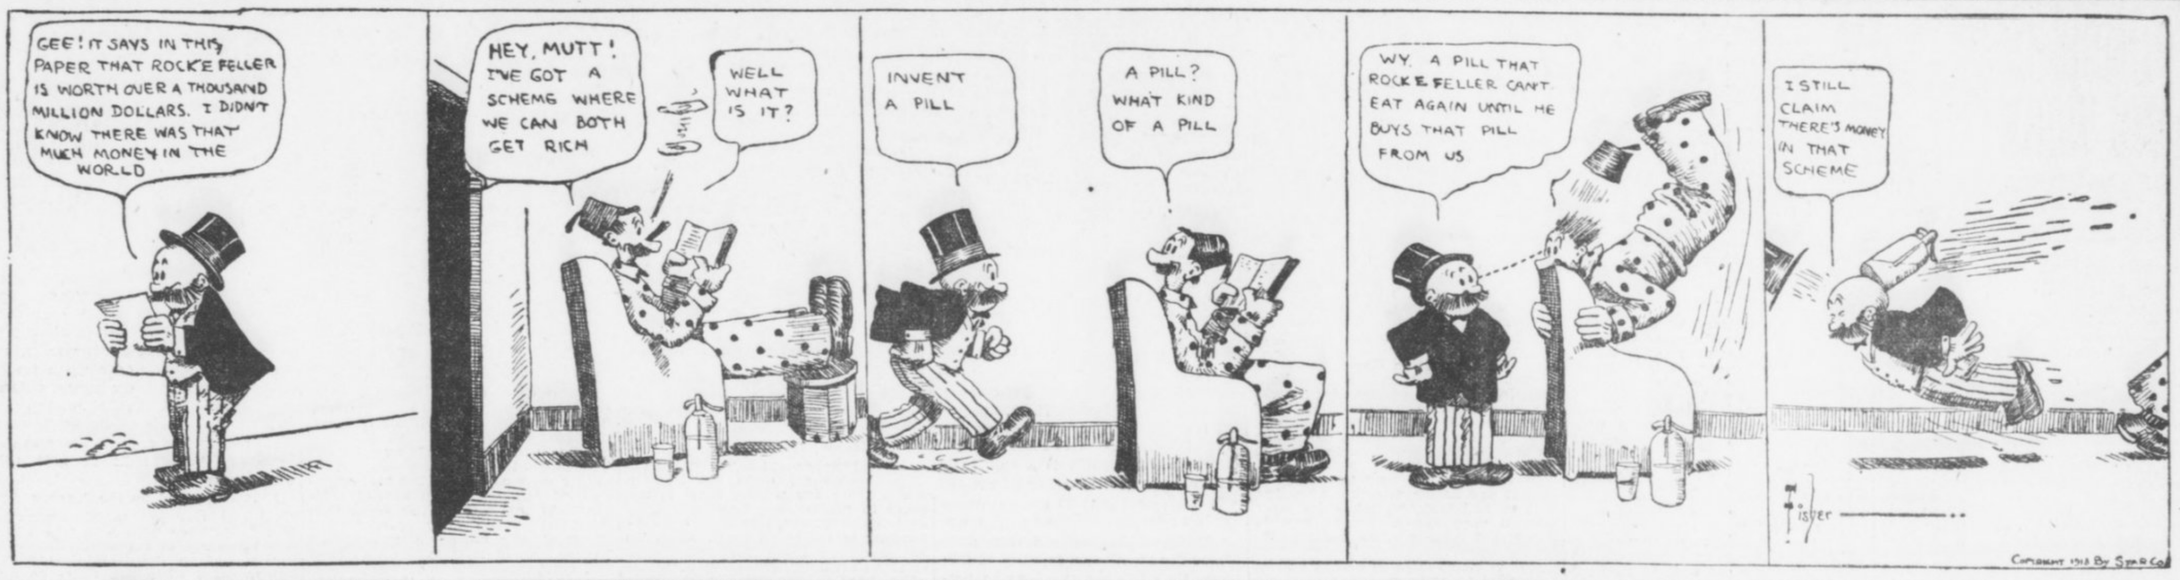
Yes, but Where Can They Find Such a Pill? :: :: :: :: :: By 'Bud' Fisher



MUTT and JEFF COLUMN

MANAGER BILLY SMITH received a letter from a young ball player who wanted a job. The young applicant wrote such a nice letter that Smith was impressed and answered it.

"You forgot to tell me in what position you play," wrote Manager Smith. "Let me know."

The applicant replied immediately, and in his letter enclosed a photograph of himself posed at second base ready to receive a grounder.

"You can see from the enclosed photo," he explained, "that I play in a stooping position."

FASHIONABLE England, especially that part which goes in for outdoor sports, is reeling and staggering to-day under the weight of another American innovation. One of the American competitors in the open golf championship at Hoy lake appeared on the links before a fashionable gallery in his shirt sleeves and the shock was so staggering that a couple of venerable colonels nearly dropped the teacups from which they were drinking.

Letters are being written to the press, sartorial experts are being interviewed, and the suffragette outrages are nearly forgotten for the time being.

WE are in receipt of the following, interesting article from the well-known Caucasian expectancy, Mr. Daniel Dixon, of Ty Ty, Ga.:

Mr. Farnsworth, Sportin Editor Sunday American:

I have, cut out rowing a boat after findin out about draggin that anker all day along the bottom of the Chattahoochee River, no wonder my hands was calliced, my trainer said that it was all a mistake but I said no more rowin for mine. I also cut out the Pluto water, the city water may not agree with me but if I stick to that pluto stuff there would be no Bitin Dan at the next fite, so my trainer has changed to hun yada water and I have been takin it for three days now but I can't see much change for the better, it looks like water all right but it dont act like it, and i aint crazy over the vegetable diet either I got to have somethin more solid as i am near starved to death, I already lost fifteen pounds and I told my trainer that I must have more to eat if i am to do such hard trainin.

with my other work I run fifteen miles every morning now and i am no chickin hearted guy but honestly mr Farnsworth I cant stand it on the stuff i am eatin and drinkin, I'll stick it out this week and if my new trainer dont give something to eat that is more solid it's a new manager for me. I got to new sparrin partners named Ernie Goat and Billy Lamm. I don't know how long they will last caws they aint very husky. I heard that CyClops Sam is helpin train Gyp the Gouger for his fite with me, he is trainin him how to avoid my feet.

Sam says that my big feet was the caws of his loosing his fite with me, he wants another chance with me.

My injunctions suits aint come of yet but it looks as though I was goin to beat all these bum lawyers caws my lawyer tells me that no jury in the world will believe that i ever ate any $40. worth of beans in so short a time, or drank any $10 worth of slippery elm tea, he said it would kill any man to do it, it perty near killed me at that but never again.

By the way Bud is back on the police force, (Bud is the force) in Joshua, they got bud to sign the pledge and Judge Scriby put him back, dont pay any atention to any letters you may get from my folks caws they are dead set on my fitin and are doin all they can to stop my fitin, they are afraid that i will get my eyes put out, there will be some putin out but it will be Gyp that goes out.

BASEBALL very nearly lost Frank Chance. The peerless leader's first leanings were toward the ring, and in his early day he was a noted amateur.

There came to Fresno a giant from the Middle West. He weighed about 220. He had a record as a scrapper and on the strength of it was made a constable. He had hardly gotten into town before Frank's friends got busy with a challenge. A purse was made up and the bout arranged.

The big constable made Chance look like a baby. But they mixed it hard from the gong and for four rounds the milling was fierce and even.

In the fifth the constable swung for the jaw and missed. Frank shot in one that took his opponent on the point of the jaw. Nobody counted. The referee yelled for a doctor and the physician, the referee and the second worked two hours bringing Mr. Constable to. When the constable showed signs of life and was dragged from the ring, Chance quit the boxing game.

WOULD-be betters who lose the peanuts on plays and plays might have better luck by taking a tip from the bookies in Pittsburg and Boston and giving the following odds:

Even money that the winning team makes as many runs in one inning as the loser does in all nine.

Even money that a runner does not score after reaching third with only one out.

Two to one that a runner does not score from second when he reaches there with one out.

Three to one that an ordinary batter does not get to first.

Two to one that Cobb, Wagner, Jackson, Baker, Meyers and batters of that class do not get to first in one time at bat.

Two to one that a team does not score in any given inning. This price sometimes goes as high as four to one, according to the pitcher.

GERMANY Schaefer rises to remark that opposing clubs which believe Ty Cobb has lost his throwing arm completely will some day wake up and find that the Georgia Peach has been slipping somebody a surprise package.

"It is true that Cobb's arm is not as strong now as it was four or five years ago, but Ty can still use it to take off his hat or handle a soup spoon," said Schaefer.

"I have watched him this season. Cobb just loops the ball in from the outfield, giving everybody the impression that he cannot throw farther than second base," he added.

"I think Ty is just figuring on upsetting a lot of dope. He wants to give opposing teams the idea that he cannot throw a lick, and is carefully nursing that old arm of his along, so that by the time we run into hot weather he will be able to cut loose."

"Well, I've no place to put it," said the workman.

"You can't leave it there!" persisted Mr. Brittain.

"What'll I do with it then?" asked the workman, sullenly.

"Do with it!" echoed Karl. "Dig a hole in the road, to be sure, man, and bury it!"

Now, who in your opinion bought the drink—the man who lost and paid or the man who won?"

WITH two men on the bases and the star batter at the plate, an unknown minister attempted to interrupt a Sunday baseball game in Denver last week.

The minister stepped to the plate and, raising his hands in the air, started to sing a hymn. The umpire called for the continuance of the game. The ball sped from the pitcher's hand, a hit was made and the runner from third slid over the home plate between the minister's legs.

MACKMEN STEAL SIGNALS, SAYS BIRMINGHAM

Naps' Leader Is Latest to Accuse Connie Mack of Getting Other Teams' Signs.

CHICAGO, ILL., June 28.—Manager Joe Birmingham, of Naps, is the latest person to tell why the Athletics are leading the American League. "Connie Mack and his men have stolen the opposing team's signs," says Birmy. All of which puts him in bad with all lovers of clean sports. The chances are that the Athletics haven't stolen any club's signs; neither have they played unfair in any way. They are winning games solely on their merits and deserve all the honor that goes with victory. The Mackmen have proved themselves to be the class in the junfor organization, and it's about 10 to 1 bet now that they will play in the world's series next fall.

Many fans believe that not only will the Athletics come back after a year's reversal of form, but that their opponents next October will be none other than the Giants. If such is the case it will be the third time that McGraw and Mack have locked horns in a world's series. The count to date stands even. McGraw beating Connie worse than six-love back in 1905 and Mack gaining the upper hand in 1911 nearly as easily.

* * *

ONE player on the Athletics who is seldom mentioned in connection with the team's success is nevertheless one of the strongest factors of that aggregation. He is Amos Strunk, the speedy outfielder of the Mackmen. Strunk has developed remarkably since last season, and he is today one of the most valuable men Mack has on his team. Not only is he one of the greatest fielders in the league, but he is a fast base runner and is hitting at a .340 clip this season. Strunk gets little credit for the important part he has played in the success of his team. He is seldom mentioned as having distinguished himself, and yet he has done as much as any other member of the team to make possible its remarkable winning streak. On any other team Strunk would be a sensation, but he is lost among the numerous stars which Mack has.

* * *

IT is doubtful if there is another instance in baseball where a player has developed as fast as he. Two years ago Strunk was an ordinary player, who was in the game but seldom. Mack farmed him out a whole season to Milwaukee, and it was while there that Strunk developed into a real star.

Cheney Tells How to Fool Wagner

Says Hans is Weak on Fast Ball

CHICAGO, ILL., June 28.—It is time for the pitchers of the National League to sit up, take notice and listen. Larry Cheney, the star twirler of the Chicago Cub team, reveals a most astonishing and important fact, one that not even the wonderful Christy Mathewson has disclosed since he started hurling in the parent major league organization.

It is information concerning the batting of Hans Wagner, of Pittsburg, who has the remarkable average of .324 for seventeen consecutive years. Cheney says the "flying Dutchman," as he is sometimes called, has a weakness at the plate, which is something no other pitcher has dared to venture since Wagner began his career in the National League.

Mathewson and Mordecai Brown, two of the great flingers of the game, have declared that the Pittsburg slugger is one of the most puzzling batters to pitch to, and particularly in a pinch, because of his ability to hit a curve as well as a fast ball. These two stars have worked hook balls to death trying to fool Wagner.

Brown acknowledged only last winter that most of his success in deceiving the Pirate shortstop was due to his sharp-breaking curve ball, which he invariably broke over the outside corner of the plate. He used this bender in this way because Wagner stands on the outer edge of the batter's box and steps into a curve that is pitched to break toward him or over the plate. Mathewson, like Brown, has depended on his fade-away ball when facing the shortstop.

Fast Ball Against Wagner.

Cheney according to his own "dope," practically abandons his twister while Wagner is at the plate. Of course he resorts to his moist ball considerably, but his strongest point of deception against the famous walloper of extra base hits is his fast ball. Cheney mingles it discreetly with the rest of his assortment. In addition to giving the information that Wagner has a weakness, Cheney also declares that he is easily fooled and crossed after he has two strikes called on him.

"I have fooled Wagner time and again on that fast ball," said Cheney. "As long as I have been pitching against him he has been easy for me. I do not think he secured more than one hit off me all last season, and I appeared in eight games against the Pirates. I do not mean to say that he is a mark at the plate, for he is far from being one, but what I mean is this: I have prevented Wagner from fattening his average off me just through my ability to cross him with a fast ball.

"When a pitcher gets two strikes on him he always looks for that curve and generally is set to wallop it. I discovered that in the first game I pitched against him. I believe he expects a curve most of the time because he is under the impression the twirlers believe that is his weakness. I struck him out several times with that fast ball inside and on several occasions had him take it.

Must Change Pace.

"It would not do to shoot your speed at him all the time, for he would be knocking rome runs over the left field fences. And it would not do to pitch curves to him either, for he hits into every field.

"In pitching to Wagner a fellow has to think all the time and try to outguess him. Still, I think him weak on a fast ball inside on account of the way he steps toward the plate when he swings. You remember 'King' Cole achieved a lot of fame in 1911 when he fanned Wagner three times in one game in Chicago. After the contest Joe Tinker asked him what he handed to Hans, and he said he did not know, but I learned from Archer that Cole had set him down on that fast one inside."

International Race Meeting Suggested

Plan Outlined for Bringing Best Horses of Europe and America Together.

NEW YORK, June 28.—The success which attended the recent international polo matches suggested to horsemen that racing and trotting might be the mediums for bringing together the chosen representatives of the Old World and the New in somewhat similar contests.

Who can estimate the benefit to horse racing and horse breeding which might follow a series of international matches of like importance, if they could be arranged, for the best runners and the best trotters of Europe and America, perhaps ridden or driven by amateurs?

The great sectional matches between the North and the South which marked the beginning and the end of a golden era on the running turf in America afford an indication of what might be expected.

The whole country was ablaze with interest and excitement when Eclipse and Henry met in 1823 on Long Island. The race continued to be an absorbing subject of discussion for years after it was run, and led to the building of new tracks, the establishment of new studs and the advent of new supporters and patrons of the turf throughout all sections of the country.

Plant Breeding Wonders Teach Farmers of South Importance Of Care in the Selection of Seed

Scientists of Georgia Are Among Modern Wizards Who Are Redirecting Plant Life Into Interesting and More Profitable Processes—Many Yields Are Doubled.

By CHARLES A. WHITTLE.

GEORGIA STATE COLLEGE OF AGRICULTURE.

Since Burbank has made blackberries white, plums without stones, cactus without spines, briers without prickles, apples without seeds, conferred fragrance where none belonged, changed flavor and increased sizes and yields; since Nilsson has enlarged the heads, strengthened the straw and rendered oats, wheat and barley resistant to disease; since numerous plant breeders have greatly increased the yielding quality of corn, cotton, etc., no intelligent farmer should longer be unmindful of the pedigree of his plants.

Plants can be bred up just as animals. Some of the very same laws of heredity apply in both. To the observing, it has always been a wonder how so many varieties of corn, wheat, oats, cotton and other plants came to exist. Probably it will always be a wonder, for after all the origin of species is inexplicable except on the hypothesis that a supreme intelligence just made it that way.

No Distinct Species Produced.

Scientists have tried to explain the origin of species and the existence of varieties by saying that they were brought about by mutation or sports—that is, by sudden, sportive changes whereby a plant got out of the groove of its native ways. But why the plant had the sportive inclination and why it should attain distinct characteristics by reason of the same remains a mystery.

No one has ever produced a distinct species and no one has ever witnessed the production of one. All that has apparently been observed is the results of crossing different species and varieties.

At any rate it is certain that there are many distinct species in the world which have fixed habits and produce faithfully after their kind with only limited variations. Cross-breeding alone has been found the only effective method for changing a variety. After the crossing has been done if care is not taken to maintain it, the variety splits up and reverts to its original components.

Probers into the deep things of science formerly believed with Darwin that the origin of species was far back and that it took vast centuries of natural selection and a survival of the fittest to produce species and create a change in a variety. But now Prof. Burbank accomplishes in a summer what Darwin thought would take a millennium.

Only Accidental Crossings.

What was formerly considered the mysterious mutations are after all only accidental crossings or cross-breedings. The head of wheat that grew up amongst its brethren and became larger and different was formerly thought to be a sudden mysterious mutation, but now it is certain that most of these so-called mutations have resulted from a sportive wind or a sportive insect which brought to the flower the fertilizing pollen from a neighboring field, perhaps from another variety of the same kind of grain, perhaps from a different species.

It is the introduction of a strange breed that excited the plant to extra production. Thereby has been unfolded a wonderful secret looking to increasing the harvests.

After many years of painstaking experiments in selection and trying to average up a whole field of grain to a little higher each year, and after pursuing other wrong quests, plant breeders everywhere are now giving more attention to cross-breeding of varieties than to any other one thing.

In this Burbank has led the world, and, more than any one else, has advanced the new movement of cross-breeding. In fact, very little can be said to have been accomplished in improving plant life by man save by this method.

Advises Planting Hybrid.

Enough has been discovered about the benefits of cross-breeding to have induced the United States Bureau of Agriculture to advise planting the hybrid for the field crop; that is, to produce a single crop. A hybrid, of course, is a cross between two varieties. It has been long recognized as a principle that the mixture of varieties adds at least temporary strength and development to the offspring. Burbank has developed from two species of the English walnut a tree of extraordinary size and productivity.

But while the hybrid crop is good, the hybrid seeds are not. As previously indicated there is a strong tendency for the hybrid to split up and revert to original types. Good producing seed must be obtained in another way. The seed stock must be kept pure and strong. It can be kept pure by keeping it removed from similar crops. It can be kept strong by selecting only the best seed.

The farmer must, therefore, return to the original strain each year to obtain a foundation for a good yield. It is for this reason that the plant breeder maintains his well cared for seed plats where only the pure strain is developed. It is to these plats he must go each year to get a potentially strong seed to mix with another potentially strong seed from another such plat to obtain a heavy yielding hybrid.

Doubtless many farmers have wondered why they have not obtained big yields by planting seed obtained from a field of heavy yielding grain. The explanation is that the seed taken from the field were hybrids. What he actually gets from hybrid seed, in the way of a variety of corn, is doubtless surprising to him.

Farmer Can Grow Pure Seed.

It is any easy matter for a farmer to grow his own seed, and thus be sure that he is not getting a weak hybrid. Having obtained what can be reasonably expected to be a pure strain, he should pursue the plant-to-row method—that is, plant each row to his seed plat from grain obtained from a single ear or head.

Before planting he should be sure that he is putting into the ground seeds that are vigorous. He can determine this by conducting germinating tests. Taking grains from a selected ear, he can plant these in a sand box, apply moisture and observe how many of the seed planted germinate. If nearly 100 per cent of the grains germinate, the ear is not discarded. Only those showing the best germination should be reserved to plant in the seed plat. Some breeders go further and investigate the rootlets that first develop and discard even good germinating ears that do not also show good root development.

Having ascertained which are the good ears the next step of the seed breeder is to plant each ear to a row so as to keep check on the history and accomplishment of each ear. All this can be done with little trouble by the farmer. Breeders favor detasseling every other stalk of corn in a breeding plat before it has pollenized itself.

Other Plant as Fertilizer.

This leaves the stalk to be fertilized by another plant, which is considered to make for a stronger breed than when self-fertilized. When the gathering time comes only those ears which have grown on the detasseled stalks are taekn for seed to be used in planting the seed plat the next year. The ears from such stalks which are not reserved for future seed plats, together with those from the stalks not detasseled, can be planted in the field. This, of course, applies to corn, and no such close manipulation can be worked with other grains, but the same general principles apply. The main point is to take care that the selected strains of corn, wheat, oats or whatever else are kept put and free from the invasion of rovers and that the strain is kept as strong as possible by seed selection, which includes the germination test.

An interesting development in corn breeding which has been pursued by Professor P. O. Vanattar, of the Georgia State College of Agriculture, is that which has to do with "suckers" or "stools" on corn. Instead of discarding corn with "suckers" he has developed and watched it. His conclusions are that corn that suckers is the corn that germinates strongest, produces the biggest yield, has the best stover, stands strongest against winds; in fact, is the best corn. Breeders generally have overlooked this fact.

Farmer Benefits From Science.

These and other important contributions are being constantly made to the aggregate of knowledge of how to enlarge the yields of not only corn, but other crops. It is a part which the scientists and experimenter can do for the benefit of the farmer, giving the farmer the fruits of his study in the shape of increased harvests.

No field of agricultural work is fraught with more fascination and wonder than this of plant breeding, and, without doubt, some marvelous discoveries will be made in the next few years which will not only set botanists agog, but will rejoice a whole world that other discoveries have been made whereby two stalks can be grown where one has heretofore been grown.

The history of plant development reads like a romance, but back of it, of course, was long years of careful toil that was unromantic enough. As many as 100 years ago plants that were extra well developed were taken from the field and propagated carefully and were gradually developed into varieties which became broadly adopted instead of old varieties, because of their greater yielding power.

Reverted to Old Types.

While occasionally something was accomplished by such methods in after years, in the main there was disappointment, for the reason that the exceptional plants were hybrids and soon reverted to original types.

In Germany and Sweden the investigators began on the Darwinian basis and tried to improve by selecting a number of best plants, sowing them together and attempting to advance the whole. It was known as mass selection. Finally Dr. Hjalmar Nilsson, of Sweden, fell upon the single plant or ear-to-row as the basis for establishing pure breeds and maintaining the purity. Since then the ear or the single head has been the basis of all successful breeding.

One of the points emphasized in the boys' corn club work is seed selection. What has been learned from these various seed-breeding experiments the world over the Government and the educational authorities of the State carry to the boys in practical, simple form. The boys are told how to determine the best seed.

Without planting strong seed, of course, the corn-club boy is not in the race.

Seed Selection Necessary.

Such as have been careless about selecting good seed can never win though he have the richest land and put on it all the fertilizer that can possibly be used. Nothing can make up for the shortage inhering in the nature of the seed itself.

In view of this, how important it is that one knows that he is dealing with a reliable firm when he buys from a seed house. If the firm is honest but ignorant, how unfortunate for the buyer!

One of these days no person will be permitted to grow and market seeds who has not first passed a rigid examination to determine whether or not he knows how to produce good seed, and, second, no seed will be permitted to be sold the quality of which is not known to be backed by right cultivation and care. Of course, there is no way of knowing how much the loss to the farmer annually occurs by reason of having been sold poor seed when he had a right to expect good seed.

When the difference in the yield of good seed and bad is equal to 50 per cent, as it often is, what a public calamity! Poor seed needs not only to be guarded against for the sake of the planter, but for the public at large, which looks to the planter for a food supply.

Plants Bred From Disease.

Not only are seed to be provided which are high in yielding quality, but one of the very interesting features of plant improvement is that the better the plant the more it resists plant disease and insect dangers. Professor S. M. Bain, of the University of Tennessee, found that red clover had come to be almost a complete failure in that State, by reason of a disease known as anthracnose of clover.

Starting with a few plants in a patch that had resisted the disease, he bred from these. Each season he subjected the patch to the disease, even to spraying the plants with the spores of the disease, saving out of each patch those that resisted the disease. Thus each year he increased his disease resistant seed until now it is being grown quite widely over the State.

A similar work has been done with reference to anthracnose in cotton by Professor R. J. H. DeLoach, director of the State Experiment Station of Georgia. A similar work is being done with reference to black root and wilt by Professor E. L. Worsham, State Entomologist of Georgia. In other lines, but by the same process, plants are being bred away from disease by right selection.

What with plant breeding and plant selection, no magician will have ever worked greater wonders than the men who are taking care of the plant life of the country.

These modern wizards are men whom farmers sometimes are inclined to look upon as bookworms, theorists, potterers, impractical adventurers; but it is these who are doing more farming than the farmer, who create bigger crops than anybody else, who save the plants from greatest loss.

Needs Legislative Support.

When the Legislatures are called upon for an appropriation for these workers in the colleges and laboratories, these lawmaking bodies will not be asked for money that will go further toward conferring real public welfare. In the South where the diversification of farming is the paramount issue and where there is a constant thirst for information as to how to do this and that other thing to get out of the single crop bondage and the afflictions of the boll weevil, it would be no less than a shame not to provide all the men and means necessary to render the required assistance; also to provide for carrying on the experiments and investigations for soil and plant improvement, and for training young men for agricultural leadership at the institutions of learning devoted to the cause.

FARMERS MADE OF HOMELESS WAIFS OF CITIES

Lincoln Agricultural School Is Caring for Boys of Crowded Districts of Metropolis.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Transplanting homeless boys of 12 to 16 years of age from the crowded districts of the metropolis to the farms of rural New York is the task attempted by the Lincoln Agricultural School, of Lincolndale, N. Y., according to information received at the United States Bureau of Education.

This school, which is a charitable institution, takes boys fresh from the city streets, gives them practial training in agriculture, teaches them proper living conditions, and then finds places for them with families of farmers, thus helping the boys to better citizenship and giving the State more and better farmers.

Cottages In Groups.

Lincoln school is made as different as possible from the traditional "Institution." Groups of attractive cottages replace the old-time single, huge structure of the cities; instead of the big common dining hall usual in charitable institutions, a number of small dining rooms are provided; and each group of boys has a separate sleeping apartment. Every effort is made to produce a real home environment, where the child may develop under conditions as nearly as possible like those of a normal home. The school has a farm of 600 acres, with model dairy buildings and a herd of about 150 cattle. The boys are taught to produce absolutely clean milk and to grow fruit and vegetables by the most modern methods.

Home Training Emphasized.

Home and social training is emphasized in the Lincoln School. Not only are the boys trained to be good farmers, but they are fitted for entrance to the better class of rural homes. "We feel that our training makes a boy a very acceptable member of society," declares Brother Barnas, superintendent of the school. "Our aim is to teach the boy to know and respect himself; to give him the means whereby he may be enabled to earn an honest livelihood; to teach him habits of thrift and economy, so that some day from the savings of his industry he may become a home owner and live a simple life under conditions which give him correct ideas of his civic and social obligations."

POULTRY

Too ambitious start is greatest danger to the poultry raiser. Success with chicken farming can only be attained by hard, systematic work and every care for minute detail. Thoroughbred stock is necessary.

By Judge F. J. MARSHALL.

Hundreds of people in all parts of the country are beginning to take up the breeding of poultry in earnest. They are easy to locate because they are after information of all kinds from all sources. Naturally they are anxious to get started right.

We get any number of these letters asking us for information as to how to start a poultry plant. The majority of them are not explicit enough as to their intentions. They usually ask us how many and what kind of chickens should a person keep in order to be able to make a comfortable living from them.

As a rule they do not tell us which branch of the business they have in mind. They do not tell us what their qualifications are.

Many Too Ambitious.

Many people want to start into the poultry business upon too large a scale. In other words, they do not seem to realize how important it is to have some experience before embarking in too big a craft. They do not seem to think that experience counts as it does in all other branches of business. What other lines of trade are there where a man or woman would undertake to do as much business at the start as their competitors are doing after a decade of experience? And yet with poultry they will ask the question as to how many fowls or laying hens a person should start with to be able to make a good living.

Now if they would turn it about and ask a question something like this, "How many hens should a person keep the first year of his experience to insure making a failure of it?" it would be a little more reasonable to the poultryman who has been through the rounds.

From what we have been able to gather from our rounds of nearly all the poultry plants of this country, the successful ones started at the bottom of the ladder. In fact, those that started at the top, thinking that they were taking a short cut, always had to drop back for a fresh start after a year or two of failures.

Experience Is Necessary.

Some one must have the experience. It is a matter of history that there have been a number of large poultry plants established in this country that have been failures from the start for the reason that their promoters started in at the wrong end of the line.

It has been the plodding fellows who have built to stand. It has looked like a slow business. So it is with the growth of the oak. It does not grow like the gourd vine, neither does it wither and die at the end of one season.

When it is fully matured it commands admiration and respect from all comers. As to the amount of capital required, much depends upon the size and character of the buildings to be erected, the number and quality of fowls to be purchased the first season.

The main thing in building is comfort and convenience. The plainer building is really the better, as it is more easy to keep clean, and cleanliness is absolutely essential to success.

Of course, the man with unlimited means can do as he pleases about expensive houses. In fact, that kind ask but few questions; as a rule, they push ahead and build, doing the considering afterward.

Cheap Houses the Best.

A very good cheap house can be built from the cheaper grades of lumber, creosoted with a gas-house product that is very cheap and will last for years. This is a very healthy product to have about to dilute with kerosene and use as a spray on the inside for the destroying of mites and lice. Perhaps the most economical all around house is one that will accommodate about 100 hens. This number can be housed, fed and cared for with the same work that one-fourth that number could. As you increase the number you multiply the risk of disease and the difficulty of handling it.

Of course, in our most extensive commercial poultry plants larger houses are used with comparative success.

A house for 100 fowls would have to be about 16 by 30. In a mild climate where there is but little severe winter weather such a house can be utilized as a roosting house and a scratching shed combined during the really bad weather.

The roosts should be placed in the rear of the house, and when it is desired to use the front for scratching a 12-inch board should be placed on edge to divide the roosting section from the scratch. In that way the scratching part will be kept free from the dropping. These houses should be about 8 feet in front to the south, slanting back to 6 feet at the eaves.

Boarding Is Necessary.

The front yard should be boarded down three feet from the roof to prevent beating rains from wetting too far in. The rest of the way down should be covered with poultry netting to allow a free circulation of air and let the sun in, as the sun means health to any place.

True, such houses will get hot in the summer, but the fowls will only be in there at night. Any carpenter under proper direction can easily build such a house. The roost poles should be not high from the ground or floor, as flying from high perches causes much trouble in the way of bruised heels. The nest boxes should be separate and not nailed to anything, in order that they may be taken out for cleaning and disinfecting at any time. A good place for them is on a board along the rear wall just above the roosts, with a small piece of netting stretched above them to prevent them from roosting upon them, still making them easily accessible from the roosts for laying purposes. The roost poles should all be loose and should not touch the walls of the house in any way. They will then be easily cleaned and kept free from lice and mites.

Pure Bred Stock Best.

We would advise beginners to start with pure bred stock, no matter what the character of the business is to be. True, it costs a little more to make the start, but the results are so much better that there should be no comparisons made.

All poultry plants of any consequence use this kind of stock. Whether for eggs or stock, for market, or both, it will pay. In marketing a lot of fowls that are of the same size, color and shape they will always bring a little more per pound than will the hit-or-miss type of all sizes and colors.

Then the eggs from thoroughbred stock of any one variety will be uniform in color, and as a general rule in shape, all of which goes a long way toward obtaining better prices.

The thoroughbred hen can be depended upon for uniformity in egg production. For example, if ten hens in a flock of 100 lay every other day the chances are that very soon approximately 90 per cent will soon be doing the same thing, while in a flock of odds and ends of the scrub kind you can make no estimate.

Thoroughbreds Like Machines.

The thoroughbreds have been bred to type and for laying purposes for so many generations that they are really like machines. No one should go into the poultry business with the notion in his head that he is going to make big money right from the start, or even a good living. It takes time to get things in running order. If you have a little knowledge of the work and have been raising and keeping 100 hens you may easily double your capacity the first year and again double it the second year if you have had success.

Keep a record of everything, that you may really know what you are getting out of the business. So many get the big head at the start and are like the man who was successful in running the little dry goods store on the corner, thinking that he was really fitted to manage a department store until he tried it and failed. There is no question that there are great possibilities in the poultry business in its various branches, but we desire to impress upon the minds of the overzealous that it is like all other kinds of business, success is only reached through well-directed hard work.

It must be remembered that the hen to give us her best efforts must be well cared for every day in the year. The hen in her natural or native condition laid but about two dozen eggs a year. It takes about five or six dozen to pay for her year's keep. It must be born in mind that each individual poultry raiser must, to a great extent, solve his own problems. He can pick up pointers here and there that will help him greatly to avoid the ruts and pitfalls, but, after all, he must for himself "prove all things and hold fast to that which is good."

FARMERS USING FLOOD WATERS TO MAKE MONEY

Tax Exemption Granted On Each Dam Built For Irrigation—Many Acres Corn Land Added.

TOPEKA, June 28.—Western Kansas has discovered that 80 per cent of the water that falls in that section runs away and does no good. As Kansas usually does when something needs fixing, the western Kansas farmers have decided to stop this waste. Thousands of artificial lakes, from one to five and ten acres in extent, are being built to hold this waste water.

It is estimated by the Kansas Agricultural College that 20,000 acres will be covered with water in western Kansas this summer, the water to be used in irrigation during the hot months, when the rains do not come.

Kansas is a rolling prairie, and it is cut up with thousands of m gullies. As soon as the wa carried away and into the the gullies became dry.

Thousands of these gulli been dammed by the farme year, and hundreds have small fields of corn just belo dams on ground that never stalk of corn before.

July and August often pass a single drop of rain falling western part of the State, and are the months when the cor tures.

Many farmers have built fro to five dams. They can irriga little or no expense, as the gr rolling enough for the water carried to the fields without pu and without elaborate engi problems.

Prizes Are Offered.

Otis L. Benton, a banker at and J. C. Hooper, a banker City, offered prizes to the who built the dams and wh the best crops by irrigation are big landowners, and th constructed several hundred on their own lands and on th owned by Eastern people, but to them for farming.

New American Bale Pleases Londoner

Head of English Spinners Says it Equals Egyptian—Hopes for General Adoption.

Special Cable to The American.

LONDON, June 28.—Charles Wright Macara, president of the English Federation of Master Cotton Spinners, has returned from Scheveningen, in the Netherlands, where he attended the Congress of the International Cotton Association, is enthusiastic over the new American "perfectly packed" cotton bale. He said:

"It is equal in all respects to the Egyptian bale, and now that the Americans have made a start in producing bales I am hopeful that their progress will be rapid. They have much leeway to recover."

One of the most important discussions at the Scheveningen congress was on the subject of "damp" in cotton and other matters in the dispute between importers and customers.

George W. Neville, president of the New York Cotton Exchange, startled the congress by stating that American shippers paid many claims for moisture in cotton, but they had always understood that the moisture was on the surface of the bales. Allegations that it was internal "damp" were new to them.

Harvie Jordan, of Atlanta, described his efforts to obtain better packed bales of American cotton. A system would be rapidly developed, he believed, by which European spinners would soon be able to obtain delivery of American cotton, satisfactorily packed, with a fixed rate of a twelve-pound tare on each bale, whether the bale was of 400, 500 or 600 pounds.

Hail Does Damage To Georgia Tobacco

Fancy Grades Reported Hurt—Holes in Leaves Cut Values—Crop 2,000,000 Pounds Yearly.

Hail has done considerable damage to the tobacco crop in South Georgia, according to advices received by the Swint-Davis Leaf Tobacco Company.

Hail is the bane of the tobacco planter who produces fancy grades. Tiny holes in the leaves now are made larger as the plant grows, and at marketing time it may be found that the leaves around the bud, from which come the finest wrappers, have been ruined except for fillers.

In a forty-mile belt on both sides of the Georgia-Florida line, perhaps 2,000,000 pounds of cigar wrappers are grown yearly. Fine wrappers bring 85 cents per pound to the farmer, while filler tobacco is worth perhaps 12 cents.

NATURAL MOTHER PLANS TO ADOPT HER OWN SON

PORTLAND, June 28.—Tester Graham, 19, adopted by Mr. and Mrs. Otis G. Graham years ago, may have the novel experience of being readopted by his natural mother, who is Mrs. Lee Jackson, of Hanford, Cal. Graham had not seen his mother for thirteen years until a few months ago, when she sent for him to come and visit her.

Efforts are now being made to have the adoption by Mr. and Mrs. Graham set aside so that the boy will be free to join his mother. An attorney on behalf of the young man gives as his opinion that after the Graham adoption is disposed of Mrs. Jackson will have to adopt her own son before the status of parent and child can be reestablished.

INDIANA HUCKSTER DIES, LEAVING $30,000 ESTATE

TERRE HAUTE, IND., June 28.—William E. Stevenson, a huckster, who died last week, left an estate of $30,000, which his widow says was accumulated by selling vegetables to residents of the city. She says he arose at 2 o'clock in the morning to be early in market row to buy from farmers. He was known by his customers for his punctuality.

EVERY MALE CITIZEN OF COUNTY TO FIGHT LOCUSTS

KANSAS CITY, June 28.—Every able-bodied man and boy in Wyandotte County between the ages of 18 and 65 may be ordered out to fight locusts if the ravages of these insects on the crops and orchards continue. This action has been proposed by farmers familiar with the grasshopper plague of 1877 after the famous "grasshopper year."

Persons failing to answer the call for service are liable to fines of $3 for each day.

BIG COLONIES OF SWEDES SWARM CANADIAN LANDS

KELLIHER, SASK., June 28.—It is well known that in the fertile plains of western Canada, there are numerous Swedish settlements in which men who located there a few days ago with practically no means, have met with considerable success and created valuable and prosperous farms.

These settlements, however, have been up to the present time small and scattered and no organized attempt has been made to coalesce the interest and social opportunity of the Scandinavian people in western Canada.

To-day this is being changed, and a new national Swedish spirit in the vast new Canadian Northwest is being promoted, largely through the interest of wealthy Swedish men combined with the efforts of the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Pacific Railway systems.

The most prominent figure in this work is that of the well-known financier, John F. Hansen. Mr. Hansen has been instrumental in bringing about the attempts at organizing Swedish colonization in Canada, and last week made a gift to the foremost Swedish colony, that of Kelliher, Sask., which insures the erection and permanent maintenance of a Swedish Lutheran church at this point.

While at Kelliher recently Mr. Hansen gathered the 100 Swedish families in that district and announced that he would contribute a sum of money necessary to build the first Swedish church in this district, and in addition would pay $200 annually toward the support of a resident minister.

STOCKMEN TO IMPORT CAMEL HERD TO SOUTH

PUEBLO, COL., June 28.—J. H. Trimble, one of the leading stockmen of Texas, heads an association which purposes to transport camels from the Oriental deserts to those of New Mexico, Arizona and California and the semi-arid wastes of Texas. He will import 200 camels and place them on a ranch on the Rio Grande, 150 miles South of Cape Verde.

The areas mentioned, although they offer great possibilities to the seeker after valuable metals, are little traversed either by railroad or wagon road. The camel, with his thick padded feet, would be as available for these American desert regions as for those of the Orient.

Jefferson Davis, when Secretary of War in President Pierce's Cabinet, was the originator of a project for the raising of camels by the Government. That experiment also was made in the neighborhood of Cape Verde, and the old buildings, modeled after a caravanary in Asia Minor, are still in existence.

The Government imported forty camels, with twelve Armenian drivers and their families in 1856.

But just when the camels were about to demonstrate their ability to be of service in the new land, the breaking out of the Civil War and the election of Davis to the Presidency of the Confederacy interfered with the project and drew all thoughts away from the acclimation of the "coonts" to more serious matters.

After the close of the war the camels, which by this time numbered 125 head, were sold to Bether Coopwood, a stockman of Laredo. Only $12 or $14 was paid for each of the camels. The herd was then divided, some of them going to Mexico to be used by a transportation company, while the others were sent to California. A few of the camels found their way into circuses, and as the Mexican transportation scheme was a failure, the Mexico camels returned to the United States and joined the herd in California.

From time to time the camels escaped or were set at liberty upon the plains because they had proved valueless.

It is therefore believed that so far as climate is concerned there need be no difficulty in the adjustment of the camel to American conditions.

1912 COTTON CROP SECOND IN SIZE AND VALUE, SAYS CENSUS BUREAU REPORT

South Gets $920,630,000 for Producing Total of 14,313,015 Standard Bales—Only One Acre Out of Every Eleven in Belt Is Planted—Oil Mills Take 75 Per Cent of All Seed.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—Statistics for the cotton crop in the United States for the year 1912 are given in detail in a bulletin soon to be issued by Director Durand of the Bureau of the Census. It was prepared under the supervision of William M. Steuart, chief statistician.

The quantity of cotton reported for the crop of 1912, with linters included and round bales counted as half bales, is 14,050,863 running bales. With the exception of that of 1911, this is the largest crop the United States ever produced. Expressed in gross 500-pound bales, the crop amounted to 14,313,015 bales, being 1,937,261 bales, or 11.9 per cent, less than that of 1911, but exceeding that of 1910 by 2,307,327 bales, or 19.2 per cent; that of 1909 by 3,997,633 bales, or 38.8 per cent, and that of 1904, the third largest crop, by 633,061 bales, or 4.6 per cent.

The average annual production of cotton for the years 1899-1903 was 10,055,003 bales, and for the years 1908-1912, 13,294,333 bales; the increase in the average annual production being 3,239,330 bales, or 32.2 per cent. When it is considered that of the total area of the counties from which returns of cotton ginned were made only about one-eleventh was devoted to the production of cotton in 1911 and 1912, the figures afford some idea of the possibilities of cotton production in the United States.

Practically the entire production of cotton in the United States is upland, which includes a number of long-staple varieties. Only about one-half of 1 per cent of the total cotton production in 1912 was of the sea island variety, and only 4.3 per cent was linters.

The Sea Island Crop.

The sea island crop of 1912 amounted to 73,777 bales, or 28,180,000 pounds gross weight, and was less than that of 1911 by 45,516 bales, or 38.2 per cent. With the exception of the crop of 1906, the crop of 1912 was the smallest produced since the inauguration of the ginning reports of the Census Bureau in 1899. A very severe storm prayed disastrous to the crop in South Carolina in 1911, and the production of that State decreased from 13,016 bales in 1910 to 5,119 in 1911, but increased to 7,707 bales in 1912.

While production of sea island cotton shows variations from 57,550 running bales in 1906 to 119,293 in 1911, there has been no general tendency toward an increase or a decrease in the production of this variety, the amount in 1912 being 73,777 running bales.

The production of linters shows a marked increase from 114,544 running bales in 1899 to 602,324 bales in 1912. This gain is due in part to the increase in the production of cotton and hence of cotton seed available for delinting, and in part to the marked development since 1899 of the cotton-seed products industry, resulting in an increase in the proportion of the total seed supply reginned, and particularly in the closer delinting of the seed for the better separation of the meat from the hulls.

The estimated quantity of cotton seed produced from the crop of 1912 was 6,104,000 tons, which compares with 6,997,000 tons from the crop of 1911. Of the total for 1912, 4,579,508 tons, or 75 per cent, were taken by the oil mills, thus leaving 1,524,482 tons, or 25 per cent, for planting, export, feeding and other purposes. The proportion of the seed taken by the oil mills from the crop of 1911 was 76 per cent, a somewhat smaller proportion than in 1912.

Crop Worth $920,630,000.

The estimated value of the crop of 1912 is $920,630,000, as compared with $859,840,000 for 1911, $963,180,000 for 1910, $812,090,000 for 1909, $681,630,000 for 1908 and $700,960,000 for 1907.

Thus the value of the crop of 1912, as estimated, was $60,790,000, or 7 per cent more than the estimate for 1911, notwithstanding the fact that the quantity of lint cotton was 12.7 per cent less. While the crop of 1911 was the largest ever produced, and that of 1912 the second in size, the crop of 1910 was the most valuable.

The estimated value of the cotton crops of the five-year period ending with 1912 is $4,236,790,000, while the corresponding value for the five-year period ending with 1899 was $1,529,500,000. During the last five years the price of upland lint cotton has averaged about 11.7 cents per pound, or nearly $59 per bale.

The crop of 1912 graded "middling to strict middling." The average price of upland cotton, which has been computed from the New Orleans market reports, has ranged from 8.20 cents in 1912 to 14.69 in 1910. For the crop of 1912 it was 12.05 cents, which is 2.32 cents more than the average for 1911 and 2.64 cents less than for 1910.

The average bale weight for the crop of 1912, counting round as half bales and including linters, is 507.3 pounds gross, as compared with 504.4 pounds for 1911, 501.7 pounds for 1910 and 496.6 pounds for 1909. The variation in the average weight of bale for upland cotton put up in square packages is pronounced throughout the cotton belt, the averages ranging from less than 430 pounds for a number of counties in Georgia and North Carolina to 569 pounds for counties in Mississippi, Oklahoma and Texas.

Texas Crop Phenomenal.

The cotton crop of 1912, as compared with that of 1911, shows a loss in each of the States, with the exception of Texas and Oklahoma, in which States it was the largest ever produced. Alabama, North Carolina and South Carolina, however, all show an increase over every other year except 1911.

The crop of 1912 in Texas was phenomenal, being almost twice as large as that of 1909. Texas alone produced almost one-fourth of the total commercial crop of the world in 1912.

A large part of the increased production of cotton in recent years has been due to the large crops in Georgia and in the Carolinas, the net increase since 1906 for the three States combined being 844,449 bales, or 27.1 per cent.

The production of cotton in Louisiana decreased steadily from 1906 to 1910, though the crops of 1911 and 1912 show an increase over that of 1910. In 1906 the production of the State amounted to 1,012,573 bales, while in 1910 the amount was only 255,738 bales. This rapid decline was due largely to the ravages of the boll weevil and to the consequent diversion of cotton lands to the cultivation of sugarcane, rice and other crops.

The boll weevil was also largely responsible for the decrease in the production in Mississippi, in which State the crop of 1912 was the smallest for five years.

The Acreage Large.

According to the revised estimate of the Department of Agriculture, the area planted in cotton in 1912 was 34,766,000 acres, of which 483,000 acres, or 1.4 per cent, were abandoned, leaving 34,283,000 acres as the area from which the crop was harvested. This is a reduction of 1,762,000 acres, as compared with 1911. With this exception, the acreage both that planted and that harvested, was the largest for any year. Mississippi, Arkansas and Oklahoma all show material reductions, as compared with 1911, while Texas shows an increase of 395,000 acres. The average production of lint per acre in 1912, as estimated by the Department of Agriculture, was 191 pounds, as compared with 208 pounds in 1911, and 171 pounds in 1910.

There were 8,215 bales reported as ginned in California in 1912, as compared with 9,790 bales in 1911, and 5,986 bales in 1910. These amounts include some foreign cotton grown in Mexico (Lower California) and ginned in California.

Cotton Insect Pests.

The cotton crop of 1912 was seriously affected by insect pests. The growers in a large section of the cotton belt had to contend with the boll weevil, while in some sections the crop suffered damage from cotton caterpillars, grass worms and other pests to a greater extent than in former years. Drouths in 1909 and 1910, particularly in Texas, Oklahoma and Louisiana, checked the development of the boll weevils in their early stages, and killing frost followed by warm weather in the latter year greatly reduced their numbers. These conditions resulted in a great reduction in the number of weevils in 1911. The season of 1912, however, again was favorable to the weevil, and there was a considerable extension of the area subject to this pest. Owing to the general dissemination of the information obtained by the Federal and State Departments of Agriculture, the destructiveness of the boll weevil is being greatly reduced.

The quantity of cotton ginned from the crop of 1912 prior to September 1 was 730,935 bales, the largest amount for any year since the inauguration of these reports by the Census Bureau, with the single exception of 1911, when the number of bales was 771,297. By October 18, 1912, 51 per cent of the crop had been ginned, as compared with 48.9 per cent in 1911, 46.9 per cent in 1910, 54.9 per cent in 1909, 48.1 per cent in 1908, and 40 per cent in 1907.

By November 14 slightly more than three-fourths of the crop had been ginned. There was considerable difference, however, among the several States in the proportion of the total amount ginned to specific dates. More than two-thirds of the total crop of Texas had been ginned by October 18, while Tennessee showed less than one-third.

Crop's Economic Status.

Some idea of the importance of cotton production in the United States from an economic standpoint may be had when it is considered that, next to corn, cotton is the most valuable crop grown in the country, and that raw cotton is the largest single item of export. The value of the cotton crop of 1909 represented 15 per cent of the total value of all the crops of the country. The value of cotton exported during the fiscal year 1912 amounted to $565,849,271, or 26.1 per cent of the total value of all articles of domestic merchandise exported during the year. It exceeded the amounts for iron and steel manufactures, meat and dairy products and breadstuffs combined, these three groups ranking next in importance among articles exported. These large exports, combined with the more than 5,000,000 bales consumed in domestic manufacture, strikingly indicate the importance of cotton in the economic affairs of the nation.

Altogether, the greatest cotton-growing section in the world, both in extent and in production, is located in the south-central and southeastern parts of the United States. It includes small portions of Virginia, Kentucky, Missouri, Kansas and New Mexico, and the States lying to the south. This cotton-producing area is about 1,500 miles long, from east to west, and about 500 miles wide. Within the past few years the cultivation of cotton has been undertaken in Arizona and California on irrigated land with considerable success, especially in the latter State. The growing of more valuable crops, however, will likely prevent any appreciable increase in the production in these States.

Production Can Be Increased.

Numerous efforts have been made in recent years to introduce the cultivation of cotton in new countries and to increase the production in others. In some instances failure has attended these efforts, and in only a few cases does there seem a probability of making a material addition to the world supply of commercial cotton.

Orders Falling Off With Big Concerns

Business Good Just Now; Curtailment Likely to be Seen Later. Immigration Continues.

NEW YORK, June 28.—From the viewpoint of production, important industrial companies report sound conditions. But orders continue to show a heavy falling off, which means a curtailment in output later.

The Steel Corporation is operating ingot mills almost to capacity, while its iron output is 92 per cent of capacity.

Labor in steel mills is fully employed, United States Steel having between 240,000 and 250,000 men, which is a record. That there will be no scarcity of labor this year is evident from the tide of immigration.

June is expected to show 100,000 arrivals. In May the number was 100,000 and April 105,000. In year ending June 30, 1912, the number was 838,172. This means plenty of labor in contrast with last year when there was a derth of labor.

Representatives of leading industrial companies attribute the slackening of business to heavy demands for capital from railroads, industrial companies, municipalities, States and nations; to antagonistic attitude of the administration toward corporate interests, and to money tension in general.

They expect slackening of activity during the summer, which will contribute toward easier money, but also smaller earnings and lesser demand for labor. Many captains of industry argue that costs of production are entirely too high, and that the next period of prosperity must be build up on a lower wage basis.

A prominent financier argues that inability of corporations and municipalities to secure funds will force a policy of economy which should materially strengthen finances of the whole world, although borrowers will be inconvenienced pending readjustment.

'Penny' Purchasing Land in Baltimore

Extensive Improvement of System's Facilities Foreseen—New Investment Totals $500,000.

BALTIMORE, June 28.—The recent investment of $500,000 in land in Canton by the Pennsylvania Railroad, through its subsidiary, the Northern Central Railway, has led to the expectation that the company will soon begin some of the improvements it has in contemplation in that section. All the Pennsylvania water front terminals in Baltimore are at Canton. It is logical, therefore, that any enlargement of these or any additional terminal facilities it may want here will be there.

The tract bought is said to cover nearly 46 acres, giving ample room for whatever expansion the Pennsylvania may have in view for its export traffic or for its distribution of freight. It is said the company has not yet secured all the land it needs at Canton, though so far there have been no negotiations for more.

That plans for large coal piers, to take the place of the obsolete ones now in use at Canton, have been prepared and approved is not denied by the company's local agents. These frankly admit that existing piers are almost unfit for the service required of them. This, however, is not likely to come until the general outline of all the work contemplated in Canton has been aporoved.

President Rea said that it might be necessary for his company to tunnel under the Patapsco River for relief from the present congested tunnels under the city. If any part of the traffic should be diverted in this way, it would be necessary to provide additional yard room and trackage, with perhaps more freight houses.

Many are firmly convinced that it is in preparation for these facilities that so great an outlay at that point has been made.

Frisco Case Similar To Many Preceding

If Winchell Is Ousted as Receiver it Will Not Be First Instance of Kind.

NEW YORK, June 28.—If B. F. Winchell should resign as one of the Frisco receivers it will not be the first time that the president of a railroad has met with such an experience.

In January of 1893, the Philadelphia & Reading Railroad, supposedly in a sound financial condition, sold a block of $5,000,000 bonds without any difficulty, and on February 1 the company distributed its regular $3,000,000 dividend. On February 20, or three weeks later, A. A. McLeod, president of the company, was appointed receiver, after having confessed to the court that an unwieldy floating debt had been incurred.

In reply to that announcement the surprised bondholders appointed an investigating committee which resulted in the discovery that the company was a hopeless bankrupt, because of the reckless policy which had been pursued by its president. McLeod, it was found, had not only secured control of the Jersey Central, the Lehigh Valley, and several coal companies, and vast coal land holdings in the anthracite district, but he had bought up the Poughkeepsie bridge and acquired control of the New England, the Boston & Maine, and several smaller New England railroads on a margin. As a result of these disclosures McLeod resigned as president and receiver. He was succeeded by Joseph J. Harris, representing the bondholders.

NEW EVIDENCE OF SLOW BOND MARKET FOUND

Thoughtful Bankers in All Money Centers Advising Caution in Floating New Issues.

Fresh evidence of the unwillingness of the investigating public to take any security issues which do not carry especially attractive interest rates has been furnished by the decision of the State of New York to sell $27,000,000 of eight-month notes on a 4.86 per cent basis, and by the inability of the State of Tennessee to get an offer satisfactory to the authorities for $10,500,000 of refunding bonds.

Not only are the leading railroads and industrial corporations discovering that the money market is not open to them on the terms to which they have been accustomed, but municipalities and State governments are finding it expedient to scale down their expenditures in view of the high cost of present day financing.

This condition does not reflect particularly on the United States, for the conditions are world-wide. Thoughtful bankers in all of the leading centers are men advocating more caution in the flotation of new security issues.

The past month witnessed an enforced slowing down in the output of new issues in the United States. Including New York City's big offering of $45,000,000 of 4 1-2 bonds, the total of long-term municipal issues sold in May was 082,210,000, which compares with 098,852,000 for the corresponding month of last year, when $65,000,000 4 1-2s were put out by New York City.

There were more than ninety offerings of municipal issues in May which proved complete or partial failures, the total amount involved being nineteen millions. In April there were 52 offerings which failed, aggregating eighteen millions. Besides these, a number of issues were disposed of only after one or more unsuccessful attempts.

While the total offering of municipal issues last month was about $16,000,000 less than for the corresponding month of 1912, it was far in excess of the amount brought out in that month of any year other than 1912. In 1911 the aggregate was $33,765,000; in 1910, $18,767000, and in 1909, $27,579,000. The big increase shown in the last two years over other years was mainly due to the large sales by the City of New York.

Corporation financing in May was much below that for last year, owing to the inability of many borrowers to obtain satisfactory terms. The railroads, according to The Journal of Commerce figures, sold in May an aggregate of $28,595,000 of bonds, $24,924,000 of notes, and $17,092,000 of stocks, a grand total of about $80,611,000. This is nearly $30,000,000 less than the total financing arranged in May, 1912. The industrial companies sold a much smaller amount of bonds this year, but greatly increased their short-term notes outstanding.

This contraction in the investment demand has been much slower in making itself felt in Great Britain, where it is believed that the current year will exceed all others in the amount of new capital raised. The quantity of new securities floated already in London has been so great that underwriters and others have begun to call a halt.

European Investors Sell Old Holdings

Stocks Returning to Wall Street Bought Years Ago as Shown by Transfer Dates.

NEW YORK, June 28.—Stocks thrown over by Europe are beginning to turn up on this side. Brokers to whom delivery is made express surprise at the antiquity of the transfer dates on many of these securities. These dates show that we are getting stock back sold to European investors five, ten and even a dozen years back.

It is inferred from this fact that the European investor is going deep down in his strong boxes and that the quantity of American stocks carried abroad must be the smallest in a very long time. Whenever foreign investments in our securities are considered there is always a difference of opinion as to whether the foreigner makes money on them or not.

Some people imagine that the European always takes advantage of our misfortunes and buys stock from us cheap, only to sell them back higher up, but there are just as many who express surprise that Europe should grow rich buying stocks from us at top prices and selling at an obvious loss, just as it is customary on frequent occasions to deplore the shocking losses of the London option dealers in Americans.

LATINS BUY OUR MACHINES.

WASHINGTON, June 28.—South America has been increasing its machinery purchases from the United States more rapidly in the last few years than any other part of the world, as shown by figures prepared by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce.

That increase has amounted in the last decade to 440 per cent, whereas the entire world growth of machinery export has been only 173 per cent.

The machinery shipped to South America in 1902 amounted to $5,000,000. Last year it had jumped to $27,000,000. The agricultural implement trade to that continent in 1902 was $2,000,000; last year it was $8,750,000. In the same time the automobile trade grew from $15,000 to more than $2,000,000; the electrical machinery from $123,000 to $1,500,000; the sewing machine from $350,000 to $2,332,000; the typewriter from $75,000 to $1,000, and engines from $1,000,000 to $3,500,000.

LIKELY TO PASS ITS DIVIDEND ON COMMON STOCK

Virginia-Carolina Chemical Not Enjoying Prosperous Year. Bad Debt Rumors Denied.

It is accepted as pretty well determined that Virginia-Carolina Chemical will pass the 3 per cent dividend on its $27,984,000 common stock.

During the 1911 and 1912 years the company maintained the 3 per cent dividend although in neither year was the balance above the preferred sufficient to make a common dividend entirely conservative. In 1911 the company earned 3.11 per cent for its common, and in 1912 3.18 per cent, so that in paying 3 per cent it was practically distributing its entire balance of profits to stockholders.

Had earnings come back strong this year with a showing of 8 per cent to 10 per cent for the common, continuance of the 3 per cent rate would probably have been assured.

But the fiscal year is panning out indifferently. The company will in fact hardly earn even 3 per cent on its common. There has been some recovery in fertilizer net this year but a considerable recession in profits from the cotton oil department. Taking the business as whole profits will fall somewhat below the 1912 total of $3,557,452.

Tonnage of fertilizers has done very well this year. The gain in tonnage moved will vary between 7 per cent and 10 per cent over 1912 showing, putting the aggregate back close to the 1911 record. But there has not been nearly the net money in fertilizer sales that existed three or four years ago and for reasons for which the Virginia-Carolina Chemical is not at all to blame.

There have been rumors in New York that Virginia-Carolina had a big bulk of bad debts which it must charge off its books and that it was the existence of some such secret account that was causing the antics of the stocks in the market. This is denied.

As a matter of fact the company regularly sets up a certain percentage of gross as reserve for bad debts and it has rarely ever been obliged to use this entire year's set up for that purpose. For the last 10 years bad debts have averaged less than 1 per cent per annum, which is creditable, considering the long credits which are given in the fertilizer industry.

James J. Hill Plans Californian Invasion

Gets Terminal Facilities in San Francisco Bay—Rail and Water Lines Contemplated.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 28.—Latest developments establish the fact that a recent acquisition by the Hill Railroad interests of terminal facilities in San Francisco Bay was for the accommodation not of a new transcontinental rail service, but of a steamship line between this city and Portland. Plans for this line have been completed and the establishment of the service awaits only the putting of these terminals in shape for business and the completion of the building of three steamships, each with a capacity of 1,000 passengers, which are now on the stocks in Eastern shipyards. Service is expected from both Portland and San Francisco through the canal to Atlantic seaports as soon as the waterway is opened.

It is natural to assume that invasion into California by means of a steamship line may be considered but a temporary expedient on the part of the Hill lines; and that very shortly plans for a railroad invasion from the North will probably be announced. Operations carried on by the Hill people freely indicate an intention to extend their network of railroads into California.

FINANCIAL NOTES

Maryland public service commission has granted permission to Baltimore & Ohio to issue $10,000,000 equipment trust certificates.

Porto Rico exported to the United States 346,000,000 pounds of sugar during first nine months of fiscal year, as compared with 366,000,000 pounds a year ago.

Berlin cable states that German banks have received urgent instructions from imperial banking authorities not to pay out gold, but to disburse paper currency exclusively.

Receiver of West Side Belt Railroad and Wabash-Pittsburg Terminal has applied to United States District Court for authority to issue $2,350,000 worth of receivers' certificates.

Some of smaller steel companies have been making concessions in prices, and are offering lower prices to secure new orders. Larger independents and Steel Corporation are holding most of their quotations at close to best for season.

Public Utility Debenture Corporation has been incorporated under Virginia laws, with $5,0000,00 bonds $1,000,000 6 per cent preferred and $4,000,000 common stock, for purpose of buying and selling securities of public service corporations.

CAN NOT CHECK WASTE.

According to a Government report the American slate industry is hampered by the continually increasing quantity of waste in the large quarries. This waste now ranges from 60 to 90 per cent of the material quarried. No practical use for this waste slate has yet been found. Marketable slate quarried in this country in 1912 was valued at $6,943,318

WHAT ATLANTA MANUFACTURERS AND JOBBERS ARE DOING

MANUFACTURES DINNER PLANNED FOR EVE OF 4TH

New Ansley Hotel Will Serve Atlanta Factory Owners to the Number of 200.

HOME EXHIBIT PLANS TOPIC

Brooks Morgan Has Definite Proposals for Acceptance or Rejection—Pledges Desired.

Atlanta manufacturers, to the probable number of 200, will gather on the evening of July 3 at the Ansley Hotel for a dinner.

The object of the dinner is to discuss the proposed permanent exhibit of Atlanta-made goods, and at the same time, to discuss the advisability of holding the annual temporary exhibit, such as was held last year at the time of the Southern Merchants' Convention.

The dinner had been set for June 24, but the unavoidable absence from the city of Brooks Morgan necessitated a postponement.

The new date was set at an informal conference of Mr. Morgan, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter G. Cooper held Wednesday.

Invitations to the big "Manufacturers' Dinner" will be sent out at once, and a general response is expected.

At the dinner, Mr. Morgan will lay before the manufacturers definite proposals for lease or purchase of buildings suitable for the installation of a manufacturers' exhibit. It will, in brief, be a "show down." The permanent exhibit project has been gone over thoroughly. The manufacturers have seen Chattanooga's display, and they have learned in detail of New Haven's success. There has been plenty of time for them to make up their minds. At this dinner they are expected to signify what they intend doing.

If, as is expected, the will of the manufacturers is seen unanimously in favor of the exhibit, a start will be made. But the backers of the project do not wish to start unless they have assurance of 200 exhibitors and 40,000 or 50,000 feet of floor space.

Strenuous Work Done Preparing for Convention.

When the four or five thousand merchants from all over the South gather in Atlanta for their convention, during the first two weeks of August, it is doubtful if any of them will be able to realize the care and effort that has been expended to make their meeting a success.

For instance, one energetic committee has been toiling throughout the hot week in an effort to raise funds for the entertainment of the visitors. As a result of their conscientious endeavor, the Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association sees its way clear, as to finances, to play host to the gathering.

Another committee has been hard at work preparing the program. The program is to be an elaborate affair. Three or four topics a day will be discussed, and most of the discussion will be in the shape of five-minute addresses. The traveling men are doing yeoman's work in finding the good speakers scattered throughout the territory, men who have opinions worth hearing and experiences likely to be helpful to other merchants in their lines.

Still more hard workers are preparing the invitation list. This in itself is a stupendous task. And the invitations are to go out early in July.

Altogether, prospects are bright for the most interesting and largest convention of the kind ever held in the South.

Men's Hats For Next Fall Pert Affairs, Blue and Green

Styles Show Predominance of Velours With Bows in Back—New Effects Noted.

Fall, 1913, hats for men are being shown by jobbers in Atlanta.

Take them big and large, they deserve the name the women give their headgear—they are "creations."

One "creation," for instance, is green velour, with a little bow at the back, and a button-hole stitched edge.

Brown-Perryman-Greene Company say velours, particularly in blue and green, are "the thing" for fall. Velours retail from $3.50 to $7.50.

The "Trooper" shape is proper. To make a "Trooper" shape, punch out a crown, then strike it with the edge of the hand, lengthwise. That's all.

Another "creation" particularly fetching is blue, with red, white and blue stitching which runs up and down the crown and around and around the brim. A button is in the geometrical center of the crown.

Perhaps the best of the bunch, to many tastes, is a green felt hat, "Trooper" shape, of course, with "zebra" finish. "Zebra" finish means that it is "self-striped." Alternate stripes are smooth, the others are unfinished—fuzzy, in a word. The stripes are something less than half an inch wide, and run vertically on the crown. The hat really is not "freaky." It is attractive.

Other soft hats are lined with gay silk, have welt edges, or are otherwise adorned.

Brand-new is a chinchilla hat. Corduroy and cloth of all kinds will be much in vogue this autumn.

Caps promise to continue their unprecedented popularity. They come in all patterns—one, for instance, a "cubist" design in maroon and tan.

For the man who will wear a derby, regardless, it may be news to know that the derby crowns will be a bit higher this fall, the brims about the same. Crowns seem to be working back from the flat effect of a year back to the old-fashioned high crown. They change a bit each year.

Boys—the little fellows—wear telescope shape hats, while you can't give them to their elders.

Of course, this takes no account of the "staples"—the conservative styles which never change.

Auto Sales Gaining Over Last Season

Business Gradually Working to Credit Basis—Men Buy Cars as They Buy Homes.

"So far as we are able to judge from the business done by our clients, automobile sales in Atlanta have been exceptionally good for the period which began January 1," says Joseph N. Moody, of the Auto Credit Sales Company.

"The automobile firms whom we represent as a credit clearing house report an increase over last season.

"Sales probably would be larger yet if we did not check them. Amusing as the idea may seem, we are in a sense philanthropists, for we are saving the people from themselves, in this way: Suppose a man with moderate income tries to buy an auto on time. We investigate carefully. If he has a family of girls, let us say, all living at home, and no income but his salary, we turn him down. If he had a family of boys, all working and able to help purchase a car, all well and good.

"The automobile business is working more and more toward a time basis. A man buys his motor car now just as he would buy his home—on payments. I believe the future will see 90 per cent of the business done in that way."

Moving Big Concern Takes Almost Week

Dougherty-Little-Redwine Co. Get to Temporary Quarters by Dint of Hard Work.

Almost a week has been required for moving the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company from its old home in North Pryor Street to temporary quarters at 30-32 South Pryor Street.

It is estimated that about forty boxcar loads of goods were moved, the stock being valued at $150,000.

"That amount of silks would not make much of a showing, but when it comes to underwear, it is a different story," remarked J. Little.

By a peculiar freak of circumstance, buyers thronged into the establishment the very day the moving began, and members of the firm had one of their best day's sales while trying to manage loading the four trucks which kept plying between the old store and the new quarters.

The firm will have its own building at 90-92 South Pryor by November 1.

Aluminum Pleases Atlanta Housewives

High-Grade Kitchenware, Which Is Indestructible Being Sold Rapidly in the South.

Aluminum kitchenware is taking hold with Atlanta housewives and with women all over the South generally. The Standard Aluminum Company, which entered the field not long ago, finds this the case.

Hotels and restaurants do not take so well to the aluminum ware, because of the difficulty of getting negro help to keep it in proper shape.

About 100 different articles for use in the kitchen now are made of aluminum, each with a ten-year guarantee. The stuff cannot peel, crack or blister, and, all in all, is regarded as the ideal material for use in cooking. During a recent test, a pan of aluminum was set on a gas stove and left for five hours with the flame burning beneath it, and no water in the pan. At the end of that time nothing had happened.

J. M. Jenkins is manager for the South of the concern. An extensive sales organization is maintained.

City Salesmen Take Outing; Truce Kept

Jobbers Agree Not to Scout for Business During Absence of Their Representatives.

City salesmen will be conspicuous by their absence this week. The grocer or dry goods merchant who needs to replenish his stock must telephone to his jobber. The jobbers have agreed not to solicit business for the week, but just to take what comes to them in the natural course of events.

The reason for this strange pact is that the jobbers are on their annual outing at the Isle of Palms, near Charleston, S. C.

In order not to take advantage of their absence, fifty or more jobbers signed a formal agreement of neutrality for the week, and O. T. Camp, president of the Retail Grocers' and Butchers' Association, sent a letter to all members of his organization acquainting them with the state of affairs, and asking that they fill urgent needs only, by using the telephone.

LUMBER SALES SHOW BUILDING KEEPS UP WELL

Dealers in Supplies Tell of Big Things in Prospect for the Coming Autumn.

Dealers in lumber, brick, cement, plaster and building supplies report that Atlanta is going straight ahead in its expansion.

Unanimously they report good trade. One particularly encouraging feature, according to their expressions, is the steady increase in the number of small residences, homes costing between $3,000 and $4,000, seeming to predominate.

Furthermore, building supplies dealers are unanimous in saying that there are great plans in store for fall. If all rumors are to be believed, property owners are contemplating improvements at almost a "boom" rate as soon as summer is past.

Paint dealers also are cheerful. They report contractors figuring on work far ahead, and also general activity in refurnishing buildings which are not new, but which are being remodeled to meet the city's growing needs.

Expressions from dealers in these lines follow:

V. H. Kriegshaber: "Our observation is that there is a good deal of building contemplated—in the wind, so to speak. When conditions settle down this fall, we look for an excellent trade in building supplies."

Randall Bros.: "Our business is better than it ever has been in lumber and building material. The increase has come from the increase in medium priced houses, residences to cost between $3,000 and $4,000.

"It is hard to tell about the fall, but we look for a good trade. Prices are a little lower. This always is the case in June and July. There will be a reaction in August and September, and quotations will be stronger. This is the history of every year."

Willingham-Tift Lumber Co.: "Business has been quite brisk up to the present time, with particular activity in the erection of small houses. This looks to us like the right time to build, for prices, in our opinion, are at the bottom."

Sciple Sons: "Business is fairly good at the present time, and it is picking up rapidly. We look for a very good trade for the rest of the year. The market is steady, still prices are reasonable and it is a good time to build. We notice a revival particularly in the erection of small houses."

Dozier & Gay: "From the number of contractors who are figuring on painting to be done between now and fall, we look for a big business.

"Every indication is that a large number of new homes are to be built, and there are rumors of several large buildings for wholesale houses and small factories.

"Of course, we are but fifteen months old in Atlanta, so we have only the figures for that period by which to judge. But from these, we are able to show an increase of almost 100 per cent in our trade.

"One remarkable feature has been the great amount of painting done on buildings which are not new. Contractors tell us this class of work exceeds the record of several years."

A. B. & A. CERTIFICATES DUE JULY 1 TO BE REFUNDED

The Atlanta, Birmingham & Atlantic, a property largely owned in New England and into which nearly $10,000,000 of Boston and New England money has been poured, has maturing on July 1 an issue of $4,700,000 one-year 5 per cent receivers' certificates. It is understood that plans are already under way to refund these certificates with a new issue, bearing probably a higher rate of interest. The new issue will probably be placed in New York.

The time for making the reorganization plan also expires on July 1, but this will be extended for another two or three years. The property has been in receivers' hands since January, 1909, over four years, and a practical solution of its financial troubles has not yet developed.

Trained Men Great Need Of Business World To-day

Germany and other European countries are far ahead of the United States in the matter of commercial education. This point was brought out in a speech before the annual convention of the National Association of Credit Men at Cincinnati.

"The annual losses by reason of failures in the United States amount now to some $200,000,000," said Mr. Gaehr, "or over $2 per capita. To put it concreately, the national annual loss from bad debts equals one-half the estimate cost of the Panama Canal.

"Professor Munsterberg of Harvard University observes that a great difficulty of our educational system has been that it does not teach a man to find himself, and when he learns his strong and his weak points, his real inclinations toward and qualifications for a pursuit in life, it is usually too late.

Some Sad Examples.

"We find the highway of commerce and life marked with sad monuments of men crushed under the wheels of progress who would have made a success in life had they had the proper direction and counsel and had they been taught to fashion their thoughts to fruitful issues; men who could and should have been helped to usefulness.

"A further difficulty is that the vocational demands are not sufficiently fixed and brought to the attention of the younger generations. They know comparatively little of the inner labors, the inner values, and inner difficulties of various professions and callings.

"Then, too, in many cases trivial chance influences decide the choice of a vocation. Young men often drop into a place, rather than deliberately choosing business as a life vocation.

"The need of better trained men, especially commercially, made itself felt several years ago, and as a result a number of universities and colleges of high standing organized schools of commerce, Harvard University ranking its School of Business Administration as one of the graduate schools. Several cities have established high schools of commerce, yet the schoolmaster and the business man are still too far apart.

Subjects for Study.

"In addition to the principles and fundamentals of credit, I would name the following subjects to be studied thoroughly and mastered: Accounting, theory of accounts, laws of banking and finance, organization and business policies, economics, economic history and resources, and commercial geography. I would expect the student to study commercial law sufficiently avoid pitfalls, and to be able to appreciate the value of legal counsel.

"In addition to these the student should have a knowledge of history and literature, that he may understand other times and the peoples of other countries.

"We do not want to train clerks or mere order-checkers, but credit men, so that business shall be conducted by business experts.

"We want a course stiff enough to weed out the unworthy, one that will enable the student to acquire such knowledge as will qualify him to rise in his business and the world of affairs, to become a real force, to develop him into creative leadership, and ultimately to make him the motive power and head of his concern."

HEALTH OF COUNTRY SHOWN BY TRAFFIC

Thanks to decided increases in the volume of business carried, the railroads will complete the 1913 fiscal year this month with share earnings somewhat larger as a whole than in the 1912 year.

The record yield of agricultural products last fall was responsible for a sharp industrial revival and railroad gross earnings assumed record proportions. As a result many roads were able to increase their net revenues notwithstanding the increased operating expenses.

Reading jumps into the lead among American roads as the largest share earner. Indications are that this "hard-coaler" will show 17 per cent on its $70,000,000 common this year. Lehigh Valley paying 10 per cent will earn between 14 per cent and 15 per cent. This is from the railroad alone.

Canadian Pacific leads all with earnings of slightly under 20 per cent.

Union Pacific and Burlington will each earn about 15 per cent, a sharp recovery from last year's results, though below the 1911 level. Southern Pacific will show about 9 1-2 per cent, against just under 8 per cent in 1912.

Great Northern and Norfolk & Western continue their march toward greater share earnings, the former with 11 1-2 per cent and the latter with 10 1-2 per cent.

Boston & Maine will barely earn fixed charges and has been forced to suspend dividends entirely. New Haven will show probably 6 per cent or under and last month reduced its long-established 8 per cent rate to — per cent.

St. Paul leads all roads in the recovery from 1912 results. Its performance this year has been the marvel of the railroad world. This road will earn close to 10 per cent on its common stock, compared with 1 1-2 per cent last year.

Northern Pacific, after allowing liberally for upkeep, will close its year with a balance equal to approximately 8 per cent on its $248,000,000 stock. Atchison will earn 9 1-2 per cent, against 8.2 per cent in 1912, and 9.3 per cent in 1911.

Illinois Central will probably show its 7 per cent rate covered, and Northwestern will earn an average of 10 per cent on its two classes of stocks, compared with only 7 1-2 per cent last year.

Chesapeake & Ohio and Baltimore & Ohio were among those roads suffering from the floods in the Middle West. The Hawley road, it is estimated officially, will show its 5 per cent covered by income. Baltimore & Ohio will earn its 6 per cent rate with about 1 per cent to spare.

Louisville & Nashville will earn 11 1-2 per cent on $72,000,000 stock, a $12,000,000 block having been issued to stockholders last fall.

COLORED LINEN IN BIG DEMAND, MAY BE SHORT

Available Supply Likely to be Exhausted Soon, Importers Believe—Market Dull.

The shortage of several popular lines of wash fabrics for the current summer season has brought out a much stronger demand for colored dress linens and ramies. Colored ratines, which did not sell well earlier in the season, are also good property at the present time. Several prominent importers in the linen trade predict that before the month is over there will be a shortage of colored dress linens, and that within the next 30 days buyers will find stocks completely exhausted.

Summer weather of the real sort has brought out an unexpectedly large share of the business. The setback suffered earlier in the season through the remarkable popularity of ratines is being rapidly overcome.

Importers are not doing very much at the present time in the way of new business except in a few cases where goods are available for spot or early delivery.

Stock lots of colored linens and linen ramies have been sought for, and have found a ready market. Goods on fall order are being charged up as delivery dates fall due, and in a good many cases shipments sent out would be considerably heavier if the goods were available. Shipments from abroad are not prompt, and importing houses are forced to wait until goods arrive even where they are past due on old contracts.

Women who buy dress linens know that these goods have now become an all-the-year-around article, and the linen gown made up for summer wear gives excellent satisfaction as a house dress during the cool months. Advices from abroad state that buyers are hesitating over paying prices current for forward contracts, and are not placing many contracts at present. Yarns hold strong and the chances of seeing lower prices on the finished goods in the near future is very remote.

Mail advices from Belfast state that the market has been quiet but steady, and there has been little in the way of quotable change compared with previous weeks. Buyers hesitate to pay the prices current for forward contracts, and consequently are only operating in a hand-to-mouth fashion, as necessity compels them. There is, however, a hopeful feeling.

Notes on Selling

The heavy demand for sport coats this season is helping the dress goods trade over some rough spots. Chinchillas and eponges are used principally in the manufacture of these garments, and makers and wholesalers of these fabrics are doing a good business in them.

A thing that is regarded as a good omen for the future of the men's wear fabrics trade is the promptness with which the manufacturing clothiers are settling up their accounts with the mill agents. In view of losses sustained by the clothiers as a result of the strike earlier in the year this action on their part is said to indicate the thorough soundness of the clothing industry.

The firmness of 39-inch, 80 squares, is one of the features of the print cloth market at the moment. Printers have taken this construction in good quantities, and as a result of curtailed production by the mills the supply has fallen somewhat behind the demand.

RUTS AND THE FOLKS IN 'EM

The longer a fellow squats down and satisfies himself with his little rut, the more hopeless he is. The rut gets bigger and deeper all the time. Soon he'll get buried in it.

Best way in the world to keep on top and ahead is to forswear the rut. Get clean away from it. Don't get stale. Don't squat. Don't think you know it all. It's deadly.

You can't rest on your laurels and keep 'em fresh. You've got something to learn all the time.

That's why the most progressive and wide-awake merchants in the country believe in getting together and starting NEW IDEAS every little while.

Such a Getting Together will be the SOUTHERN MERCHANTS' CONVENTION, ATLANTA, AUGUST 4-15.

CAN YOU AFFORD TO MISS IT?
