Detectives Working to Discredit Mincey

POLICE HALT GRILLING OF CONLEY

Detective Bent on Questioning Negro Is Barred From Cell by Chief Lanford.

With Pinkerton detectives taking the trail in search of W. H. Mincey, whose startling accusations against Jim Conley stirred the police department and won the negro another "sweating" from Solicitor Dorsey, the Mincey affidavit Friday became the storm center about which the prosecution and defense in the Frank case waged their battle.

Despite the degree of indifference with which the detectives and prosecuting officials affected to look upon the remarkable statements of Mincey, it became known Friday that every effort was being bent toward locating him and turning the light on his past history.

Pinkertons Have Clew.

It is understood that the Pinkertons have obtained information of Mincey's whereabouts, as it has been known since The Georgian published its exclusive story of the affidavit and later Mincey's detailed account of the significant happenings on the day of the murder that he was teaching school in North Georgia.

Although Solicitor Dorsey professes to be not greatly concerned over the effect that the Mincey affidavit may have in his case against Leo M. Frank, it is reported that his office is gathering character witnesses for an attack on Mincey's credibility.

Developments since the publication of the affidavit indicate that the prosecution feels it must absolutely discredit Mincey and his story if there is to be any hope of obtaining a conviction aaginst Frank.

Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, was denied permission to talk with Jim Conley Friday morning when he went to the police station to see if he could wring any additional admissions from the negro. From the fact that Scott has been working in entire harmony with the city detective department up to this time, this incident led to the rumor that Scott had charged his theory of the crime and was inclined to place the responsibility upon Conley.

Defense Ready for Trial.

Scott refused to say to what extent his theories had been altered, if at all. Chief of Detectives Lanford explained that he had full confidence in Scott, but that the Pinkerton was in the position where he had to report all of his findings to the defense and he did not wish Scott to see Conley in these circumstances.

Attorneys for the defense said in regard to the report that the case might again be postponed, that they knew of no reason why it could not go to trial July 28, the date set by Judge L. S. Roan. They said that their side of the case was complete and that they were prepared to present it to a jury at any time.

As bitter a fight as that brought on by the Mincey affidavit is being waged by the members of the Grand Jury and the Solicitor over the question of investigating Jim Conley's connection with the Phagan murder, with a view of bringing an indictment. A number of the members are said to have declared themselves in favor of reopening the case because of the mass of evidence that has piled up against the negro since he confessed to being in the factory on the day of the crime.

The Solicitor, however, is unalterably opposed to any movement looking toward the indictment of the negro.

THE WEATHER

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia—Local thunderstorms Friday and probably Saturday, except generally fair in northwest portion.

LATEST NEWS

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—King Brady, the veteran Cracker twirler, was to-day handed his unconditional release by Manager Billy Smith.

Brady has failed to round into his best form this season and has been of little use to the Atlanta team. The signing of Pitcher Clark, from the Senators, has forced Smith to dispose of one of his slabmen. King hurled fairly good ball for the Crackers last season.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Ex-Governor Folk, of Missouri, expressed his view of the action of Secretary of State Bryan in going on the Chautauqua platfrom in a lecture here to-day, by the statement that, if Mr. Bryan spends his vacation on the lection on the lecture platform the country will be the better for it for he can keep the administration in touch with the plain people.

The country is far safer, he asserted, with a Secretary of State who can make his money that way than with one whose fortune has been acquired through connection with special interests.

CHARLOTTE, July 18.—The Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association adjourned this afternoon after re-electing President J. H. McLaurin, of Jacksonville, and naming Charleston and the Isle of Palms as the next place of meeting.

The convention to-day had a letter from its chief counsel, Walker Percy, relative to the injunction hearing now under way against the Association in the Federal Court at Birmingham. The Association goes to Reidsville Saturday for a barbecue to be given by the Penn Tobacco Company.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American club. Walsh will report immediately.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 19. Retreating Bulgarians are said to have burned 950 houses in Hairelolu, with all their occupants. Nearly 3,000 are believed to have perished.

MACON, July 18.—At 3 o'clock Macon's official temperature was 103½ degrees, the hottest ever recorded here.

SAULT STE MARIE, MICH., July 18.—The freight steamer Victory, 7,000 tons, is aground and in great danger off Iroquois Point Light, Lake Superior, and her starboard compartment is filling with water. She carries 21 men.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Seth Lowe, president of the National Civic Federation, went before the managers of the Eastern railways to-day and backed up the attitude of the employes in their contention that the managers acted in bad faith in asking that their demands as well as the demands of the men be arbitrated. The belief, however, is prevalent that the difficulties will be met as soon as the board of arbitration appointed by President Wilson meets.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Larry Chappelle, the $18,000 White Sox recruit from Milwaukee, went in to-day for the first time with his new team mates. He was the center of attraction in the period before the game, and was greeted with cheers. He was assigned to the center garden.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Lee Magee and Ted Cathers, who engaged in a fight in the St. Louis dugout at the Polo Grounds yesterday, were each fined $25 today by President Lynch, of the National League. They were not suspended.

DALTON, July 18.—Mrs. R. P. Bowie, of Atlanta, died here suddenly yesterday while on a visit to her brother, Councilman E. F. Hamilton. Mrs. Bowie was at one time a resident of this city. She was an aged woman, and is survived by her husband and four daughters.

Search Begun for Estranged Husband In Drugging Case

Detectives working on the mysterious chloroforming of six members of the family of Mrs. Archibald Duncan, of 318 South Boulevard, and the clubbing of one of her daughters, have begun a search for M. A. Deal, husband of Mrs. Ruby Deal, one of the women drugged.

They are working on the theory that Deal drugged the entire family in an attempt to kidnap his daughter, Marguerite Deal, aged 3 years.

Chief Lanford Friday morning virtually admitted his activity in the case had narrowed to a search for Deal.

The members of Mrs. Duncan's family have recovered from the drugging. Miss Pearl Hildebrand, the daughter who was slugged, has returned to her work.

CRAWFORD'S SANITY NOW ATTACKED

Expert Declares Capitalist Was Not in His Right Mind When He Married.

That Joshua B. Crawford was insane at the time he married Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and had been entirely irresponsible for several months prior to that time, was the testimony of Dr. R. R. Kimes, expert on insanity and abdominal surgery, introduced by Attorney Joe S. James Friday morning in his effort to have the marriage annulled and the $250,000 estate revert to the heirs-at-law.

Dr. Kimes rendered his opinion in reply to a long hypothetical question and was excused without cross-examination.

During the taking of testimony another clash in the courtroom was narrowly averted. George W. Bolden, a character witness for Mrs. Crawford, threatened to thrash Attorney James unless he apologized for what the witness considered an insulting question. Colonel James declined to apologize and order was only restored when Colonel Anderson ordered the witness from the stand, and he was escorted from the courtroom by the lawyers.

"How do you know that Mrs. Crawford is a lady?" interrogated Attorney James.

Lawyers in War of Words.

"I demand that you apologize immediately for asking such a question," exclaimed Bolden.

"I will not apologize. I do not intend to take back anything that I say."

"You will take it back or I will make you, if I have to beat you to do it."

"You are at liberty to try that at any time you see fit."

Colonel Anderson, who had rapped several times for order, stepped between the attorney and the witness just as the latter got from his seat and started toward the attorney.

The Crawford heirs-at-law got to their feet and rushed to aid their attorney. Reuben Arnold stepped between them and with Colonel Anderson helped escort the witness from the room.

Anxious to Tell All.

Mrs. Crawford was anxious to go on the stand Friday and see the evidence from her side of the case go into the minutes of the hearing.

"I want to tell everything I know about the affair when I go on the stand," she said. "The other side has had everything its way so far, because all of the witnesses were for the heirs-at-law. It will be altogether a different story when Mr. Arnold and Mr. Smith introduce the witnesses we have. It will then be conclusively proved that there was nothing irregular anywhere except the groundless accusations that have been made against me."

Attorney James said Friday morning that he had been entirely too busy to take any official action toward having Fred Lump, the New York barber who is charged with being an accessory in the alleged poisoning, brought back to Atlanta.

"I will then get him back here in plenty of time if he remains in America," said Attorney James. "He would be of no particular use in this civil hearing, and that was why I didn't take steps earlier to get him back.

"At the first opportunity I will ask the Governor to give me requisition papers, and I will send a deputy to New York for him."

London Laughs at Secretary Bryan's Plea of Poverty

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—The Standard prints an editorial on "Politicians and Their Pay" this morning, in which it refers to the statement of William Jennings Bryan, the American Secretary of State, that he can not live on his salary of $12,000 a year. The Standard says:

"The poor man's champion has discovered that he can not subsist satisfactorily on $12,000 a year. A good many people in a good many countries manage to be comfortable on less than that amount, but since Mr. Bryan first took up socialism as a profession he has done well on the lecture platform.

"He has been making $15,000 every year by denouncing the idle rich. If the Union can not pay the same scale he proposes to increase his emoluments by private exertions, so he will go on tour again."

Ashley Has Plan to Block 'Pigeonholing'

Councilman Claude L. Ashley announced Friday he would introduce a resolution in Council Monday to prevent the "pigeonholing" of legislation in committees by requiring that all matters referred to committees be reported to Council at the next meeting.

"We have no rules in Council," said Councilman Ashley. "Some Mayor Pro Tem abandoned all the rules several years ago. Some of the committees have taken it on themselves to kill all legislation they are unfavorable to by refusing to report on it. This is what I want to stop.

Senate Motion to Probe Finances of Bryan Is Defeated

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The Bristow resolution asking the President to furnish the Senate with information as to the salary on which the Secretary of State could live comfortably was tabled to-day by a vote of 41 to 29.

Bristow charged the Secretary with neglect of duty, and asserted that Bryan should endeavor to reduce his expenses rather than increase his income.

"Is there any business which can not be attended to in Bryan's absence?" asked Senator Vardaman.

Bristow replied:

It has been said that the Department of State is better off when Bryan is away than when he is at home.

Maniac Causes Panic In Chicago Grain Pit

CHICAGO, July 18.—Members of the Board of Trade to-day were thrown into a panic when a negro employee went insane.

Shouting and threatening to kill anyone who tried to step him, the wild negro rushed through the corridors waving a revolver. A squad of policemen arrived after three brokers had overpowered the maniac.

'Br-r-r, It's Too Cold' Workers Growl as Mercury Passes 95

With the mercury at 95 at 2 o'clock Friday, Councilman Claude L. Ashley, chief engineer of the Atlanta Brewing and Ice Company, had a magic change to the Arctic regions and such a laugh as but few people ever indulge in during weather like the present.

"The boys down in the lower cellars of the brewery are kicking," he said. "We are trying to wash out the cellars with hose, but it is so cold the water is freezing and the boys, with their heavy boots, are slipping so they can't work."

According to the weather man, there is more of the hot wave yet to come. He forecasts fair weather Friday night and Saturday.

A cool breeze Friday alone prevented the mercury from reaching a record-breaking height.

REVERSAL OF VERDICTS IS DENIED BY JUDGE

Apologizes Also to Porcine Family for Likening Woodward's Legal Knowledge to Theirs.

Recorder Nash Broyles penned a polite note of apology to the whole hog family Friday.

With the same hand he picked up the cudgels with which again to belabor his honor, Mayor Woodward.

The Mayor, quoth the recorder, was the author of a ridiculous and absurd falsehood and it was a regrettable libel upon Mr. Hog to have to submit to a comparison with Atlanta's Mayor.

As for the Mayor, he declared he was tired of wasting verbiage on the Recorder and that he would have nothing more to say in their quarrel. He intimated, however, that he had it in his mind to override the Recorder again by pardoning another prisoner.

Here are Recorder Broyles' comments on the Mayor:

Apologizes to Porcine Family.

"I care nothing for the Mayor's abuse. Condemnation from such a character should be considered praise. But when he says that he Court of Appeals on May 23, 1913, reversed me in ten cases and sustained me in seven, he tells such a ridiculous and absurd falsehood that I now apologize to the hog to which I referred yesterday when I said the Mayor knew less about law than a hog does about political economy.

"The idea of the Court of Appeals passing one day upon seventeen cases appealed from the Recorder's Court of Atlanta!

"The records of that court will show that on an average there are not seventeen cases a year carried to the Court of Appeals, and they will also show that that court has sustained me in ten cases where it has reversed me in one.

Sees Attempt to Evade Issue.

"But the Mayor is, as usual, trying to sidetrack the issue between us. That issue is not my ability as a lawyer or a judge. I am content to let my record speak for me, but the issue is that the Mayor is protecting and pardoning the habitual and confirmed criminals of our city; is obstructing and defeating justice in our courts and impeding the officers of the law in their attempt to check crime in our city.

"And this is the issue on which the people at the next election will call him to account."

Mayor Woodward retorted that he had concluded his comments on Recorder Broyles, but that he practically had decided again to overrule the Recorder and issue another pardon.

Plans to Give New Pardon.

The situation is possible only because Judge Broyles made a mistake and imposed a sentence of 30 instead of 29 days, which puts the case in the jurisdiction of the Mayor.

G. Poulus, who runs a restaurant on Alabama street, was fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the stockade. The story that has reached Mayor Woodward is that Poulus discharged a negro boy and that the negro boy, being angry, reported Poulus to the police as selling beer. Poulos says he only orders beer from adjoining saloons and keeps it in his ice box for his customers.

DIES FROM OVERWORK.

LEXINGTON, July 18.—James Garrard White, aged 67, vice president of Kentucky State University and the last member of the original faculty, having completed his forty-fifth year in June, died to-day of stomach trouble caused by overwork at the university.

'LOBBY' CHARGED WITH SWINGING SALOON VOTE

Manufacturers Lined Up Brewers for Watson in Indiana, According to Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—How the National Association of Manufacturers lined up the brewers and saloon men of Indiana for the Republicans and Representative James E. Watson in his campaign for Governor was told in a letter written by Colonel Mulhall to F. C. Schweidtman, secretary to President Van Cleave, and read before the Overman lobby investigating committee to-day.

Watson, according to Mulhall's letter, was not so much afraid of the 30,000 votes the brewers could swing against him as he was of the $250,000 they would put into the last part of the campaign.

Accordinf to another letter Mulhall, the field agent of the "invisible government," assured "Uncle Joe Cannon that reports that the association was fighting him were false, and that the association was firmly supporting him.

Hines' Name Brought In.

Mulhall declared he helped Representatives Henry C. Coudrey and Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, who were re-elected by narrow margins, and also asserted he thought the association deserved the credit for their victories.

Edward Hines, of Chicago, said to have boasted that he "put Lorimer over," came in for notice in connection with a telegram to Mulhall in which he appealed for $1,000 to aid Representative Jenkins, of Wisconsin, and offered to supervise the spending of this sum.

"I don't consider Teddy, nor Taft, nor Sherman, nor Foraker equal to VanCleave, Parry, Kirby and the others who have given freely of their energy and their money to the great cause expressed in the principles of the National Association of Manufacturers," wrote Schwedtman to Mulhall August 28.

"Like John the Baptist."

"There will come a time when the world will know that the Parrys and the VanCleaves of to-day are like John the Baptist of old, speaking thoughtfully of events to come and condemning fearlessly the present wrongs, clearing the way for righteousness and honesty."

In an effort to prevent an enormous waste of time, the committee assigned clerks to examine the 123,000 letters in the file the association turned over to the committee, to cull out those letters which have the greatest bearing on the inquiry. It is proposed to keep Mulhall on the stand until all of the material correspondence has become a part of the record.

NEW TYPE OF BEAUTY ENTERED IN SLOGAN BUTTON PICTURE CONTEST

Miss Helen McCullough, the newest entrant in the booster emblem beauty contest.

Latest Nominee for Booster Emblem Honors Is Miss Helen McCullough of Peachtree Road.

Miss Helen McCullough, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. McCullough, 1110 Peachtree road, is the latest nominee in the "beauty button" contest. She is regarded by many as easily the prettiest girl in Atlanta and in the voting to name the girl whose face shall adorn the "500,000 club" buttons she promises to always be near the top if not at the top itself.

She is the third to be entered in the race, the nominations of Miss Mert Hancock, Ponce DeLeon avenue, and Miss Mary Carl Hurst, 62 West Twelfth street, having already been announced. The three make a bevy of beauty that is a marvel, each quite different from the other, but each striking examples of their opposite types.

Miss Hancock's beauty is dominated by the glow of her wonderful auburn hair. Miss Hurst is a vivacious brunette. Miss McCullough is a petite blonde.

Every day brings more life into the contest. The end of this contest will bring to a climax the movement to organize the "500,000 booster club." When the "prettiest" girl is selected the buttons for the club members will be ordered and the organization formally completed.

Who is this prettiest girl?

That is for the readers of The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American to decide. The voting coupons are run each day. If your favorite has not been mentioned nominate her and send in her photograph.

DESERTS FIANCE TO ELOPE WITH HIS RIVAL

Girl Marries Soda Clerk as Youth to Whom She Was Betrothed Gets License.

Leaving in her wake the bruised heart of a young man, an employee of a downtown shoe store, to whom she was engaged to be married Sunday night, pretty Miss Dollie Lumpkin, No. 456 Houston street, went to Augusta Thursday night and became the bride of B. D. Gunter, employed in a Whitehall street shop. It is said by friends of the bridegroom that the young woman's original fiance was en route to the Ordinary's office to obtain a marriage license late yesterday afternoon when he heard of the elopement of his bride-to-be.

Miss Lumpkin had been engaged to the shoe clerk for several months, her friends declare, and the date of the wedding had been set for next Sunday night. About two months ago Miss Lumpkin met Gunter and he fell in love with her.

From then on it was a race between Mr. Gunter and the other young man for the heart and hand of Miss Lumpkin. Gunter, being a strenuous young man, decided it was up to him to hurry matters along, so on July 16 he secured a marriage license from the Ordinary, and that night, it is said, he showed it to Miss Lumpkin and pleaded with her to elope with him. She consented. Thursday morning, therefore, Miss Lumpkin left her home, telling her mother, Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin, that she was going downtown to do some shopping.

Shortly before noon Gunter asked his employer for a day off. He said he was sick, but his smiles as he left the store nearly gave him away. He met Miss Lumpkin at Alabama and Whitehall streets, it is said, and they went to Augusta and were married there.

Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin refused to discuss her daughter's marriage Friday morning.

"I know she is married" the girl's mother said, "but to tell the truth I don't know whether she married Mr. Gunter or the other young man."

Fire Truck Joy Ride Lands Love in Cell

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Following an alleged joy ride in an automobile hook and ladder truck belonging to the Indianapolis fire department, Lieutenant Harold Love and Chauffeur Ralph Aldrich, of the fire department, were arrested to-day and taken to Shelbyville for trial.

Officers of Shelbyville lodged a charge of excessive speed while the joy riders were passing through that city.

Dougherty Should Worry; He Was Cool

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Not even a smile covered John Dougherty early to-day as he sat in the rear of 233 East Washington street, a square from police headquarters.

He didn't seem to realize that he was shocking the neighborhood. He sat on a box swinging his heels. It might have been the Garden of Eden and he might have been Adam, without even a fig leaf.

In a covering of wrapper paper he was taken to police headquarters charged with "loitering."

It was a hot night.

Tax Sales Ordered; First in Many Years

Through an investigation directed by Chairman Charles W. Smith, of the Council tax committee, it has been discovered that the city holds overdue tax liens on $41,000 worth of real estate in Atlanta. Chairman Smith has directed that this property be sold.

It has been many years since a sale of property for taxes was held in Atlanta. Much of the $41,000 covers small vacant lots, but some of the property involved is bringing rent.

BUILDING TRADES PLAN FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP

Healey Strike May Result in General Walkout—Low Wage Scale Claimed.

A fight against the open shop in the building trades section of the Federation of Labor that promises to be the hardest in the history of organized labor in Atlanta will be the outcome of the strike on the Healey Building unless a settlement is reached shortly.

International officers representing the fourteen organizations composing the Building Trades Council are either in Atlanta or on their way here. A meeting of the Building Trades Council will be held Friday night, when steps looking to a settlement of the differences or to arrange for a finish fight will be taken.

Officers of the building trades concerned in the controversy state that wages in Atlanta are 30 per cent lower than in other Southern cities, and they attribute this to the fact that in Atlanta alone is the open shop permitted.

The open shop as operated in Atlanta, according to the officers of the building trades, is that only that class of work requiring the greatest skill and which can alone be done by members of the organization is done by union men, while all other work is put in the hands of non-union men. In this way, the results to the contractor can be attained and the unions get the worst of it.

The strike precipitated by the contractors putting non-union men working on the cutting of the pipe for the electrical contract will mean a finish fight between the Building Trades Council and the contractors against the open shop, and may tie up work in Atlanta for some time.

The work on the Healey Building is at a standstill, not a sound being heard from the new skyscraper, and this silence may continue for many days unless the closed shop is accepted by the contractors.

House Fumes Over Woes of Ducktown

The House made but little headway Friday morning, the discussion of the Ducktown copper district troubles consuming more than an hour of the two-hour session.

The Ducktown issue was brought before the House by Barry Wright, of Floyd. Much complaint has been made during the past few years by farmers along the Tennessee border that their crops were being ruined by the fumes from the copper plants in Ducktown, Tenn. The Wright bill provides for the appointment of a committee to meet with attorneys of the copper companies and attempt to settle the differences.

Severe Cough Led To Lung Trouble

Sufferers with Lung Trouble are rarely willing to acknowledge the fact. If you have a so-called "cold" that has long persisted; or a cough that keeps you anxious; or any of the symptoms of Lung Trouble, such as fever or night sweats, weakness, loss of appetite, or perhaps some raising of mucus, take Eckman's Alterative—as Mr. Bettersworth did:

Bowling Green, Ky., R. No. 4.

"Gentlemen: The spring of 1906 I had a severe cough for six months. I tried all the medicine that my doctors recommended to me, but no results came for the better. I had night sweats, and would cough and spit until I got so weak I could hardly do anything. But, at last, James Deering, of Glasgow Junction, insisted that I try your medicine. In one week's time there was quite an improvement in my condition, and after I had taken several bottles I felt as well as ever in my life. I desire the world to know that I firmly believe that your Eckman's Alterative will cure any case of lung trouble if taken before the last stage."

(Affidavit) A. C. BETTERSWORTH.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

HOKE SMITH, IN SPEECH TO GEORGIA ASSEMBLY, DEFENDS CUTS IN TARIFF

United States Senator Hoke Smith addressed the two bodies of the Georgia Legislature in joint session at noon Friday in the house.

Conspicuous throughout his address was the strong defense of the national administration, the keynote of which was prophetic of a period of unequaled prosperity throughout the Wilson regime.

Senator Smith declared that the Democrats to-day have enough votes in the Senate to pass the tariff bill. He said that notwithstanding the cuts made by the national House, the Senate had cut still deeper, and made additions to the free list.

"For the first time in fifty years," declared the Senator, "legislation intended to take the burden off the masses of the people has found no resistance in the Democratic Senate. It must be conceded by all that the Senate Democrats have made the tariff bill more Democratic than it was when it reached the Senate."

Mr. Smith attacked the present vogue of vast distribution of charity by the wealthy men of the nation.

Prefers Taxation to Charity.

"I would rather see the National Government raise the money by income taxes and spend it for such causes than to leave the people indebted to men for great charities," he declared.

The Senator advocated States' rights in handling State problems. While his reference was to the California-Japanese situation, he made its application general by saying: "From the Californians' troubles the whole country is realizing the difficulties with which we have had to contend, and they are helping us make converts to the doctrine that we must be left to handle our troubles ourselves."

Senator Smith brought up for strong arraignment the Sherwood bill for an increase of United States pensions.

"The startling truth is demonstrated that the eleven Southern States have paid to Union pensioners of the War Between the States the entire value, in 1870, of their agricultural lands and all improvements thereon, together with their agricultural implements and live stock," he said. "I believe it to be the duty of your Senators to resist in every proper way an increase in the now already enormous payments for pensions of the Civil War."

The speaker also attacked the workmen's compensation act, now pending, declaring it to be a bill to save the railroad corporations from their just liabilities to injured employees.

Urges U. S. Road Building.

In advocating the excise tax bill, Senator Smith declared strongly for constitutional authority to pass an income tax which would proportion equally among the entire citizenship the expense of Government.

The Senator advocated national aid to road building throughout the country. He said the road-building question was at present before the Post-office and Postroads Committee of the Senate, and that his every effort, personally, would be to bring it through successfully.

Senator Smith went into the plan of tariff reduction fully. He said, in part:

"The Democratic party has undertaken to reform the tariff downward for the purpose of stopping, as far as possible, this system of legalized robbery. The plan of the Democratic tariff bill involves several different propositions.

Taxes on Luxuries.

"First. The raising of revenues.

"Second. The production of legitimate competition, to the end that fair prices shall be charged consumers.

"Third. No taxes, or the lowest possible taxes, upon the necessaries of life and those things used by the great body of the people.

"Fourth. High taxes upon luxuries.

"With the fullest praise for what the Democrats of the House did, I wish to say that the Democrats of the Senate sustained the reductions made by the House, and after investigations, made additional reductions of great importance.

"The House Democrats put flour upon the free list, but taxed wheat. The Senate Democrats put both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats put meat upon the free list, but taxed cattle. The Senate Democrats put meat and cattle both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats left a tax of 25 per cent upon cheap woolen blankets. The Democrats of the Senate put them upon the free list. The House taxed wool of the angora goat and alpaca. The Senate Democrats put it on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed flax and hemp; the Senate Democrats put them upon the free list.

Schoolbooks Duty Free.

"The House Democrats taxed pig iron, and steel billets, and ferro manganese. The Senate Democrats put them on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed textbooks. The Senate Democrats placed them on the free list.

"It is impossible to say just when we will vote upon the tariff bill in the Senate. I believe we will certainly vote before the end of six weeks, possibly in much less time. I do not think any considerable delay will take place in conference. I believe the differences between the two houses will readily be adjusted by the Democrats in the two bodies and the measure be soon passed with the approval of the Democrats of both houses."

On currency legislation Senator Smith said:

"The currency bill which has been introduced both in the Senate and in the House will free the country from dependence upon Wall Street. It will facilitate an increase of currency to meet especial demands for same. It will make a currency panic impossible. There are many features in the bill which I thoroughly approve. There are others which I believe should be changed. I think the Democrats of the House and Senate should make it as nearly perfect as possible, and then support it.

"There are features in the tariff bill against which I voted in the committee, but there comes a time when individual opinion must yield to the majority.

"Both the House and Senate Democrats placed jute bagging and cotton ties on the free list. Both placed wire fencing on the free list. Both placed agricultural implements on the free list, and what has been known as the farmers' free list, so much discussed two years ago, when passed by the House and rejected by the Senate, is now contained in the tariff bill which passed the House and which has been approved by the Democratic caucus of the Senate without a dissenting vote. And what I wish to say to you to-day is we have the votes in the Senate to pass the bill.

"Our farmers have been overcharged for the things which they are compelled to buy because of excessive prices maintained by the exclusion of foreign competition. It has been conceded that, while the government collected three hundred millions of dollars each year from the tariff, the industries in the United States, which the high tariff was intended to help, collected over a billion of dollars more from the people than they could have charged but for the exclusion of foreign competition. These burdens fell upon all the people of our State, but were especially heavy upon the farming classes, who in no respect receive any benefit.

Sees Era of Prosperity.

"I believe that the adoption of our new tariff bill will mark an era of prosperity throughout the country. The industries heretofore protected will not lose in the long run by competition, but, spurred through it to greater efforts they will seek their profits by broader trade; dependent not alone upon taking the dollars of their neighbors, they will reach into the markets of the world for the sale of their commodities.

Lauds the President.

"No currency system would be complete that did not take into consideration the importance of farm credits. Thorough study is now being given to this subject, and I believe in the near future action will be had by which rates of interest charged to farmers may be reduced and increased facilities given for farm loans.

"In conclusion, let me remind you that the last time I spoke in Georgia was at the Auditorium when I presented Governor Wilson to the people of the State. I assured the audience of his purpose and ability to serve, and of his strength as a candidate. We made no mistake when we nominated him. We won the fight for the Democratic party.

"The people of the country made no mistake when they elected him."

ACCUSED WIFE IS RIDDEN ON RAIL BY WOMEN

Victim Then Is Ducked in Mud Puddle and Forced to Flee Illinois Village.

POLO, ILL., July 18.—Suspicious that Mrs. Minnie Richardson, wife of the crippled keeper of a general store here, was more than friendly with her brother-in-law, Will Dunnill, the village stonemason, a band of women of the village kidnaped Mrs. Richardson from her home, rode her on a rail through the town and dumped her in a mud puddle.

After the mud bath they gave her 24 hours to leave the village. Richardson mortgaged his store for $1,500 and gave her money to pay her railroad fare.

When the men of the town went to Dunnill's home, he was not there and his wife said he had left the town. She had mortgaged her home to get money for him.

Mrs. Peter Stansfield, wife of the blacksmith, who was captain of the women "vigilantes," said that the conduct of Mrs. Richardson and Dunnill had been the subject of comment for nearly a year.

The women planned to capture Mrs. Richardson and the men were to take Dunnill, and the rail-riding party was to be a "double-header." The men failed to find their victim and Mrs. Richardson rode alone. The men stood on the sidewalks and cheered.

For ten years Richardson, who is a paralytic, has gone about in a wheel chair. He said to-day:

"They were pretty rough on my wife, but I guess she had not done right. I don't believe she will ever come back."

LEAVE TO WED IS DENIED COUPLE IN VICE NET

Joe North Held to Grand Jury as Slaver—Girl Is Sent to Martha Home.

Despite the pleadings of his aged mother and of Effie Drummond, the girl in the case, who asked that she be allowed to marry him, Joe North, caught by Chief Beavers' vice squad in a raid on the boarding house of Mrs. Lulu Bell at Fair and Peters streets, was held to the Grand Jury by Judge Broyles Thursday, in the sum of $200. The charge, which from the first story told by the Drummond woman, promised to develop into white slavery, was changed to disorderly conduct.

The girl, who when first arrested told her story freely to Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles, testified against North Thursday afternoon with reluctance. She at first denied that she knew North, and the next moment admitted having lived with him as his wife, both at his mother's home and at Mrs. Bell's, to which latter place she says he induced her to go.

"You say you don't know him, and yet you admit that you lived with him?" demanded Recorder Broyles.

"Well," the girl stammered, "I guess I 'kinda' know him!"

Both North and the girl asked that they be allowed to marry. The girl told Judge Broyles she had been married once before, in South Carolina, but had got a divorce in that State.

"You didn't get a divorce in South Carolina," said the Recorder. "The laws of that State do not permit divorces."

"Well," the girl hesitated, "I think my husband's dead, anyway."

"You only hope he is dead," retorted Recorder Broyles. "You can't marry this man until you get a divorce."

North's mother pleaded that her son be placed on probation, but Judge Broyles refused. The girl was sent to the Martha Home.

Church Folks at War On Clubs in Macon

MACON, July 18.—The Law Enforcement League has begun a campaign looking to the extinction of the saloon and the social club in Macon. Three test cases have been made against two saloons and a club, charging them with being nuisances in that they are "blind tigers."

If Judge Mathews grants petitions for injunctions, which will be heard on August 1, similar proceedings will be instituted against every saloon and club in the city. Petitions for injunctions were signed by 45 citizens, including the Revs. W. N. Ainsworth, J. L. White and C. B. Currie, representing the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches.

Papal Guards' Wine Supply Cut; Mutiny

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ROME, July 18.—A mutiny among the Vatican Swiss guards—the second within four days—occurred to-day. Upon orders from Pope Pius X the soldiers were seized, disarmed and placed under arrest. They were replaced by gendarmes who may remain as the permanent military police at the Vatican.

Attempts to curtail the wine supply of the Swiss guards led to the disaffection. Hitherto the guardsmen were allowed an unlimited supply of wine.

Dies at Auto Wheel; Wife Averts Crash

KENOSHA, WIS., July 18.—Mrs. Frank J. Eaton, while riding with her husband, felt the automobile turn from the roadway as they were going 25 miles an hour. She saw her husband was not holding the wheel. Catching it as the car was on the edge of an embankment, she brought the machine back into the roadway and stopped it.

Her husband had died of heart disease.

TO BUILD BIG RESERVOIR.

COLUMBUS.—The Columbus Water Supply Company announces that it has purchased land on Factory Hill, north of Columbus, where it will construct a 5,000,000-gallon storage reservoir, a filtering plant, settling basin and pumping station.

2 BUSINESS MEN POLICE NABBED PLAN FIGHT

M. F. Smith and B. F. Glenn Likely to Make Charges Against Officer Milam to Board.

M. F. Smith, vice president and secretary of the Eagle Stamp Works, and B. T. Glenn, manager of the Old Mill Theater, Whitehall street, who were taken to headquarters by the police Wednesday night after they had carried Miss Mabel Parker, a chorus girl, to Grady Hospital, in a semi-conscious condition, probably will appear before Chief Beavers Friday and ask that the Chief and the Police Commission investigate their arrest.

Smith and Glenn deny that they were responsible for the girl's condition. They declare the woman went into convulsions when she received a telegram that her brother was dying. They say they called a physician, who administered chloroform to quiet her, and left. The woman's hysteria continued, and Smith and Glenn then took her to Grady in a cab.

Officer Milam was at the hospital when the girl was brought in and he took Smith and Glenn to headquarters, where they were released after being questioned by Assistant Chief Jett and Captain Terry. In his report Officer Milam states that the girl was clad only in a thin gauze nightdress.

Chief Beavers stated that he will investigate the case, and it probably will be brought before the Police Commission at the next meeting. Police officials declare that Milam only did his duty.

FACTS IN MEXICO DEMANDED BY PRESIDENT

Ambassador Scored for Incomplete Reports to U. S.—Mystery in Diaz's Trip to Japan.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—In preparation for the arrival of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, now on his way from Mexico, President Wilson today requested the State Department to furnish him with all the information relative to the troubles in Mexico from the beginning of the Madero revolt.

This mass of material the President intends to read thoroughly, so he will be informed as to all the developments of the Mexican situation before the arrival of Ambassador Wilson.

Secretary Bryan, who returned from the first lap of his Chautauqua lecture tour this morning, called on the President, bringing a large bundle of telegrams and correspondence.

Hale Sends Information.

They included dispatches from William Bayard Hale, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico City, who does not consider the Huerta regime stable, and has advised against recognition.

Suspicions of the sincerity of the representations made by several European nations have been raised in Washington by the trail of high finance running through them all. Allegations are made that the crisis is nothing more nor less than a "bondholders' conspiracy" engineered from Paris.

Diaz May Visit Japan.

The President does not hesitate to criticise Ambassador Wilson for failing to sustain any fixed or definite conclusions in his dispatches to the State Department. Other consular and special agents of the United States in Mexico have been equally indefinite in the information they have sent to the State Department.

A proposed trip of Felix Diaz to Japan is causing speculation at the State Department. At this time his presence in Japan would serve to renew the efforts of the jingoes to create a strong anti-American feeling there. The proposed trip has renewed reports that Japan is negotiating for a naval base on the western coast of Mexico.

Secretary of State Bryan announced that he had canceled his lecture engagements for the greater part of next week and would be in Washington all the time that Ambassador Wilson is here.

Following the Cabinet session several members of the President's official family stated that the Cabinet is a unit in supporting the chief executive's policy concerning Mexico, particularly as regards the non-recognition of President Huerta's Government.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

Mr. J. E. Greene says the secret of his success is in good health, and the secret of his good health is in Nuxcara. He like every big-hearted, successful man, delights in telling the world about Nuxcara, the only cure known for indigestion, dyspepsia and catarrh.

J. E. GREENE.

Atlanta, Ga., June 6, 1913.

Dr. Kelly, Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sir:

Some months ago I had what I thought was heart trouble. My heart would skip for an hour or more, and often every third beat. This was especially noticeable after eating. I consulted several physicians, but got no permanent relief. I chanced to pick up one of Dr. Kelly's books on "Nuxcara," and soon found I had been treating the wrong complaint. I bought a bottle of Nuxcara, and got some better, and, after taking about half a dozen bottles, I was entirely relieved of all heart troubles, as well as indigestion. I have not had a return of this since, and I consider Nuxcara one of the greatest achievements in medicine for the troubles it is recommended to cure.

Yours very truly,

J. E. GREENE,

CHIEF, WITH HAMMER, SMASHES SEIZED GUNS

Beavers Pounds Away in Broiling Sun Until He Has Destroyed Seventy-five Pistols.

Chief Beavers, faithfully following the ordinance passed recently by Council, smashed away in the hot sun Friday with a sledge hammer until he had destroyed more than 75 unclaimed revolvers and pistols which have collected at police headquarters during the last few months.

The Chief chose for the ceremony a time when the mercury was flirting with the 95 mark. Perspiration poured down his cheeks before he had swung the heavy hammer a half dozen times, but he kept on until every weapon had been converted into scrap.

The revolver smashing is one of the methods by which the authorities are waging war against the "pistol toters," and is designed to break the endless chain by which criminals are supplied with weapons. Formerly the weapons taken from prisoners were saved for a few months and then sold at low prices to the pawnshop proprietorsw, who in turn sold them back to the criminals.

The first smashing Friday resulted in the destruction of nearly $1,000 worth of weapons. Chief Beavers carefully examined all of the revolvers for cartridges before undertaking his task. When done, he mopped his face and became the auctioneer in the "ole hoss" sale of knives, bicycles, umbrellas and an accumulation of other unclaimed articles.

Boy Badly Bitten as He Falls Over Dog

The child was playing in a vacant lot near his home, when he stumbled over the dog, which was gnawing upon a bone. The dog sprang at the child and bit him several times before his playmates could drive him away.

RECTOR OPPOSES BIBLE IN SCHOOLS

Dr. Wilmer Tells Committee Some of Its Chapters Are Unfit for Public Reading.

Declaring "there are lots of chapters in the Bible unfit for public reading," Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, opened the fight against the proposed bill requiring the reading of the Bible in the schools of Georgia in the Senate Education Committee hearing Friday morning.

Following the debate which was listened to by scores of persons other than Senators, a motion for a further hearing next Tuesdayafternoon at 3 o'clock was adopted.

Dr. Wilmer, who spoke for twenty minutes, followed other speakers representing both sides, including Dr. Dunbar Ogden and Dr. Little of the Presbyterian Church, favoring the measure with an amendment, and Carlyle Haynes, a representative of the Georgia Religious Liberty Association, opposing it.

Other ministers present who will speak next Tuesday, it is understood, were Dr. John E. White of the Eecond Baptist, Dr. H. M. DuBose of the First Methodist, Dr. C. W. Daniels of the First Baptist, Father Rappier of the Roman Catholic Church, Rabbi David Marx, Dr. Lovejoy of the Methodist Church, and others. The Rev. Mr. Daniel declared he would preach on the subject next Sunday morning.

HOUSE RATES SLASHED IN TARIFF ACT REPORTED TO SENATE; TRUSTS HARD HIT

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The report to Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee on the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate, was placed before the Upper House at noon to-day, and debate on the measure immediately was begun.

The report is largely devoted to defense of the Senate Democrats' action in reducing rates under the original House measure and to extensive tables showing the percentage and effect of these rates.

In a brief introduction, Senator Simmons declares that the Senate bill, if enacted into law, "will result in an equitable distribution of burdens and incidental benefits of the Payne-Aldrich system of customs taxation that will tend to disintegrate monopolies built up under a protective tariff; that will reduce the cost of living; that will increase the opportunities of the individual citizen and relieve the people from the burdens of a former scheme of taxation."

Rich Trusts Only Hit.

The Senator points out that the interests hit by the reduction of duties under the House bill are in almost every instance trusts which have grown rich under a high protective tariff. Among these are the steel, aluminum, cement, callera, asphalt, Standard Oil, sugar, wool and paper trusts.

To counteract the millions in import revenue lost to the Government through the admission of foreign markets under a free list or reduced rate of tariff, taxes have been placed upon bananas solely controlled by a trust, upon gambling in cotton futures, upon the incomes of the rich, upon brandies used in fortifying wines and upon luxuries in general.

The total outcome of the Senate tariff labors is a decrease of 27.64 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates and of 4.22 per cent under the House tariff rates. Nevertheless, the report predicts that the business of the Government will be run at a profit.

Total Revenue $996,810,000.

The official figures, based upon compilations of Treasury experts for the fiscal year 1913, place the total revenue, exclusive of the possible revenue from the Panama Canal, the sinking fund and the national bank note redemption fund, at $996,810,000, against an estimated disbursement of $994,790,000 for the same period. This would leave a surplus of $2,020,000.

Concerning the steel schedule the report says:

"Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material; it has the use of abundant capital; it is able to export in competition with foreign countries; and the industry has the advantage of low costs. For all these reasons it may be regarded as well fitted as an industry, capable of standing tariff rates figured on a strict revenue-producing basis."

Keynote of Its Defense.

This summarizes the keynote of the Senate tariff reductions in almost every case where they affect trust-controlled products.

A slight reduction has been made in the cotton schedule where the commodities so treated are in common use. The reclassification of this schedule does not affect the House rates materially. The report says that "inasmuch as silk is a luxury, it is liable to the highest possible duties." This policy was maintained in treating luxuries.

The income tax amendment is explained at length, the report giving specific quotations from the text of the bill relating to the change from a flat income assessment based on $4,000, to a sliding scale, which would make the unencumbered single man liable to assessment on an income in excess of $3,000, while the married man or woman with a dependent wife or husband shall have his income exempted up to $4,000 if he have minor dependent children.

House Tax Called Unfair.

The report characterized the House income tax as "unfair to a large class of moderately wealthy people."

The many changes made in the administration feature of the bill were explained on the ground that the clauses of the Underwood measure were "somewhat confusing" and that it was thought best to leave the administrative features substantially as they were in the Payne-Aldrich measure until a joint committee of the two Houses "could revise, codify and simplify" this section of the bill. This is to be done by January 1, 1914.

The changes in the administration section include the omission of the 5 per cent reduction of goods imported in American bottoms; the inspection clause and the unit dumping clause.

Scores Gambling in Futures.

With regard to the revenue raising tax on gambling in cotton futures the report characterized this practice as an "evil," and said the tax was imposed to deter in some measure, the activities of those who resort to cotton exchanges for the sole purpose of speculation.

Inasmuch as the tax is refundable, where an actual delivery of cotton is made, it is not thought that it will seriously affect legitimate trade.

The report predicts that the retaliatory clause in the Senate bill "will effectually put in the hands of the President a weapon with which to bring about equable arrangements with countries which do not afford the United States fair treatment."

Senate's Changes In Tariff Measure

The salient features of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate Democrats are:

Reduction under the Payne-Aldrich duties, 27.64 per cent.

Reduction under House tariff bill, 4.22 per cent.

Estimated revenue from Senate measure during fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to be $2,020,000 over estimated disbursements for same period.

The customs duties from the Senate bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, less sugar, are estimated at $173,250,000.

Duties on imports under the Payne bill for two months, exclusive of sugar and wool, $40,650,000.

Duties on sugar eight months under Payne bill and four months under Senate bill, $47,000,000.

Duties on wool under Payne bill for five months, $5,830,000.

Revenue from tax on cotton future gambling, $5,000,000.

Revenue from wines, brandies, six months, $750,000.

Revenue from income tax, ten months, $58,330,000.

Total revenue from Senate bill, $330,810,000.

Free listed products in Senate bill amount to $147,367,000 in imports, as against $103,000,000 in House measure.

Following market basket products added to House free list: Wheat, eggs, lard compounds and lard products and domestic animals used for food.

Among the trusts hit are those controlling steel, aluminum, cement, cameras, Standard Oil, asphalt, sugar, wool, bananas and paper.

The provisions of the income tax are figured as dating from March 1, 1913, instead of January 1, 1913. The operation of the brandy tax was also deferred.

Macon Man Chosen Head of Veterans

BRUNSWICK, July 18.—At the final session of the Georgia Confederate Veterans' reunion here, Colonel J. W. Preston, of Macon, was elected commander of the Georgia Division.

Brigade commanders elected are: Northern Brigade, M. C. Martin, Atlanta; Eastern Brigade, J. A. Thomas, Dublin; Western Brigade, L. W. Mobley, Vienna; Southern Brigade, W. J. Horster, Dublin; cavalry commander, E. Gilmore.

No Georgia city having extended an invitation for 1914, the meeting place for next year was left to a committee. The time of meeting will be named by the new commander.

POULTRY AND CORN SHOW.

COLUMBUS.—Through the co-operation of the Columbus Board of Trade, with the other interests, it has practically been decided to hold a poultry show and corn club exhibition in Columbus next fall.

Baby Cabs Watched In Chicago Vice War

CHICAGO, July 18.—Mayor Harrison to-day ordered city detectives and policemen to take a look into all baby carriages being pushed about by women and see if there is a real baby in each of them.

The order was the result of a new plan adopted by women of the streets. The baby carriages they push contain rag dolls, but they have succeeded in giving the police the impression that they were respectable mothers, taking their infants for an airing.

Boy Says He Was Lured to Aid Thief

Frank Houseman, 17 years old, who has been living at a Decatur street hotel, is held at police headquarters charged with the robbery of Sweeney's saloon, No. 46 Wall street, which was entered Thursday night.

The police say Houseman has confesesd to aiding another man, whose name he says he does not know. The stranger, he said, persuaded him to serve as "lookout."

Detectives are also investigating the robbery of the Williams & Johnson market, Nos. 238-240 Edgewood avenue. The glass in the front door was broken and a small sum taken from the money drawers.

Los Angeles Will Quit Being 'Pure'

LOS ANGELES, July 18.—"I do not want a 'chemically pure' Los Angeles; what I want is a straightcut, really clean and upright city.

"Do not depend on the other officer, or the man higher than you in doing the work on your beat. Do it yourself and do it right, and see that your beat is taken care of."

This was the statement of Mayor H. H. Rose to 400 policement regarding what he expected of them during his administration.

Seeks $10,000 for State Fair Prizes

A plea for a $10,000 appropriation for prizes at the Georgia State Fair at Macon was made before the Appropriations Committee of the House Thursday afternoon by John T. Williams, president of the State Agricultural Society.

"Agriculture is our vital and pivotal industry," he declared. "Every dollar of this appropriation will be spent within the State and will repay the State a thousandfold."

Committee Favors Income Tax Measure

By a vote of 9 to 5 the income tax bill of Representative Stovall, of Elbert, was recommended for passage Thursday.

The author said his bill would add $160,000 to the revenues of the State from public service corporations alone. It provides for a tax of 1 per cent on incomes of individuals and corporations in excess of $4,000. Living expenses of individuals are exempted.

Leaps in Ball Gown Into Ocean on a Bet

ATLANTIC CITY, July 18.—A pretty girl visitor late last night jumped from the steel pier into the ocean. She was attired in ballroom costume. She was hauled out of the water and whisked away in a waiting automobile.

After an all-day investigation, the police have learned that the girl made a bet on the beach with members of her crowd that she would make the leap. The forfeit was a theater party and champagne supper if she didn't do it before midnight. She won.

S. A. Eliot, Jr., Seeks Career on the Stage

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., July 18.—Harvard circles received a surprise to-day when it became known that President Emeritus Eliot's favorite grandson, Samuel A. Eliot, Jr., had decided upon the stage as a career. He is now installed in an English dramatic company, appearing in Manchester, England.

Young Eliot, whose father is president of the Unitarian Ministers' Association, writes that he is much pleased with his stage work. He graduated from Harvard in June and immediately went abroad.

Science Seeks New Light on Numbers

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—"What is number?" the mathematicians of the University of Pennsylvania want to know.

"Where does number begin and end?"

In an effort to answer this all-important question the university will send an expedition to the headwaters of the Amazon to learn what the aborigines know of No. 1. This for a starter.

FRAUD USED NAME OF GEORGIA MAN

Government Accuses New York Promoter of "Wallingford" Operation in the South.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Edmund Willcox, accused by the Government as a "get-rich-quick Wallingford" in real life, but who claims he has reformed and has been leading a new life with his wife and three children in a modest East Side apartment, was arrested to-day by postoffice inspectors.

Until two years ago Willcox had an office in the Metropolitan Tower, where he posed as a promoter of railroads, banks and mills. When he learned that any new company was being formed, he wrote to the promoters offering to float the stock. After obtaining a retaining fee, it is alleged, nothing more was heard from him.

The specific charge against him is that he obtained $1,000 from Comer L. Peck, of Starke, Fla., who operated a 38-mile railroad line between his home town and Jacksonville.

Willcox claimed, according to the Government charges, that one of his clients, Colonel James M. Smith, of Smithonia, Ga., who owns 100,000 acres of land in Florida, had been persuaded by him to buy 20,000 shares of stock of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Georgia, at $102 a share. Colonel Smith denied that he knew Willcox, and the Government began an investigation.

DR. MERRITT NOT ASKED TO RESIGN

Expressed Desire, However, to Leave Battle Hill—Change in Management Expected.

Dr. S. W. Merritt, superintendent of the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, has not been asked to resign, according to statements made Friday by the city officials who are over him. But Dr. Merritt has expressed a desire to leave the institution, and a change in management is anticipated about September 1.

The matter reached a climax when Jesse Shelton, a patient, complained that he had received rough treatment. Mayor Woodward asked Dr. J. P. Kennedy and Dr. Claude A. Smith to investigate the case. It was then that Dr. Merritt declared he did not like the situation, and it was tentatively agreed that a change be made in superintendents.

The committee, however, did not override Dr. Merritt in his discipline of Shelton.

MADISON DOCKET CLEARED.

MADISON.—The City Court of Madison to-day concluded a session of two weeks. Several months' business had occumulated, the court having adjourned at its last t terms because farmers could not leave their crops to attend court.

She Slaps Children; Women Convict Her

PETALUMA, CAL., July 18.—A jury of twelve women convicted a woman, Mrs. W. S. Waldorf, upon a charge of battery here. This is the first jury of women that ever tried a case in Sonoma County.

Mrs. Waldorf was accused of having slapped a neighbor's children. The jury was out less than an hour.

Village Quits Meats To Check Price Raise

NEWINGTON, CONN., July 18.—Residents of this town have decided to quit eating meat until there is a fall in the price. Vegetables will be the standby.

As a result of the boycott several butchers have been forced to close up shop.

Fine Time Awaits Solons in Augusta

Georgia legislators will travel with light hearts to Augusta Saturday, where they will be entertained by the City Council in a manner befitting.

While in Augusta the question of making an appropriation for the State Hospital will be taken up.

PHONE HEARING DEFERRED.

COLUMBUS.—The telephone rate hearing between the city of Columbus and the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company in regard to the raise in rates in Columbus has been postponed until October 14.

PRISON CONDITIONS SCORED BY CHURCH

Episcopal Social Service Commission Calls Georgia Penal System Degrading.

The social service commission appointed by the Episcopal Diocese of Georgia at its annual convention to consider social and economic questions in this State has framed and submitted the following formal report on prison conditions:

Resolved, That the prison system of the State of Georgia and the methods of punishment now in use, and as commonly administered, are degrading and not worthy of an enlightened and progressive State.

Resolved, That we hereby indorse the splendid efforts of the Prison Reform Association of this State, and offer to them our hearty co-operation in securing needed reforms.

Resolved, That we also urge upon our Representatives their support of the child labor bill advocated and indorsed by the National Child Labor Association.

The Rev. G. S. Whitney, of Augusta, Ga., is chairman of the commission.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus provide ever [illegible] destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 128 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

WAR CHIEF SAYS M'PHERSON IS VITAL POST

Atlanta Army Men Elated Over the Favorable Impression Fort Made on Garrison.

Local army officers are jubilant over the praise bestowed upon Fort McPherson by Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison Thursday, when, with Major General Leonard Wood and Major General J. B. Aleshire, he made an inspection of the post. It is regarded as practically certain that Secretary Garrison will repeat the recommendation of a year ago that the local post be made a brigade headquarters, which would mean several additional regiments of soldiers would be quartered at Fort McPherson.

"Everything at Fort McPherson is admirably conducted," declared the Secretary. "Such a post is a credit to our country. The strategic position of the Atlanta post is valuable."

Both Secretary Garrison and General Wood said they could not state definitely whether the local post would be made a brigade post, but intimated such a step is likely.

"Nothing definite will be given out until after Secretary Garrison has completed his tour of the 49 posts of the country," said General Wood. "However, we have always regarded the Atlanta territory as important because of its strategic position."

Secretary Garrison's party, including General R. K. Evans, Colonel Barth, Lieutenant Tucker, Colonel VanOrsdale and others, were entertained at the home of Clark Howell and the Piedmont Driving Club Thursday afternoon. Secretary Garrison left Atlanta at 5:10 o'clock, and to-day is inspecting Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga.

Garrison Inspects Fort Oglethorpe.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—Secretary of War Garrison, accompanied by Major General Aleshire, quartermaster general, inspected the quarters of the Eleventh Cavalry at Fort Oglethorpe this morning and visited the site of the proposede brigade post at Chickamauga Park.

Secretary Garrison and his party arrived from Atlanta last night and will leave to-night for Little Rock. An open-air dinner will be tendered the distinguished guests to-night at Signal Mountain Inn, on Waldens Ridge, by the Chamber of Commerce. A breakfast was tendered early this morning at the Commercial Club.

Lunatic's Bequest To Alfonso Upheld

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 18.—The civil court at St. Gaudens upheld to-day the validity of the will of Albert Sapene, formerly Mayor of a small town near Toulon, who bequeathed $500,000 to King Alfonso of Spain.

Sapene, who was an ardent royalist and a great admirer of the Spanish King, died in an asylum. His sister sought to have the will set aside on the ground that Sapene was insane when he made it.

Senators' Swimming Match in Demand

WASHINGTON, July 18.—When Senator Pomerene challenged Senator Owen to a swimming match and the latter accepted they did not realize that so many persons were interested in Congressional aquatic sports. Enterprising persons have sought to induce the Senatorial swimmers to make it a national event.

One offer came from the manager of a resort near New York, who assured Senator Owen "he would have a crowd of spectators larger than could be gathered anywhere else in the world."

GEORGIA'S PEACH CROP SHORT, BUT 'PEACHERINOS' STILL ARE PLENTIFUL

Crop Now Moving (Via Railroads and Up and Down Peachtree) Sets Quality Record.

The movement of what is reported as the best crop of peaches ever grown in Georgia is now in full swing up and down Peachtree street and via railroad to the East.

H. B. Marks, secretary-manager of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, who claims to know all about peaches—that is, the edible kind—declared Thursday that the crop, while a light one, was bringing the highest prices ever known.

Miss Danese Milhous and another peach.

"Peaches are selling at from $2.30 to $2.50 f. o. b.," said Mr. Marks. "More than 1,000 cars have already been shipped, most of them going to New York, being divided between New York, Philadelphia and Boston. 'Georgia Belles' and 'Elbertas' form the bulk of the shipments.

"A sharp frost caused a short yield, but the high prices which the peaches are bringing more than make up for this."

The "peachy" girls are here in abundance, however, and even the hot weather is not driving all the Atlanta beauties to the cooler summer resorts. Miss Danese Milhous, one of the prettiest of the younger Atlanta girls, was snapped just as she was beginning to eat one of the first of the North Georgia grown peaches to arrive in the city.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Cool.

There are two wonderfully popular things about the Forsyth these days—a mighty inviting and cool place of recreation and the bill for the week is of exceptional value.

Valerie Bergere proves every right to the claim that she is the star of all dramatic artists that have adopted vaudeville. She is presenting a new playlet that deals with the crook idea. She appeals to a judge to save her husband, who has been convicted on circumstantial evidence, and convinces the judge, by a keen trick, that circumstantial evidence is a mighty bad thing to count too much on.

Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, is scoring the hit of his young life, and the Metropolitan Minstrels prove to be one of the best drawing cards the Forsyth has had. There are pretty girls and clever boys in this act.

John F. Conroy, the world-famous life-saver, and his diving models will be the star attraction for next week, presenting what is claimed to be the greatest swimming and diving act in vaudeville. Deiro, the piano-accordionist, and the Great Lester, ventriloquist, are on the bill.

Grand Offers Treat.

A wonderful motion picture will be shown at the Grand all of next week. It is the supreme masterpiece of modern photo-plays, and is nothing less than Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." There are more than 12,000 feet of film in the nine reels that represent the nine books in the wonderful story written more than a half century ago by the famous French author.

The greatest actors in France volunteered their services in making the picture and every place that is described in the book has been visited and used by the actors for their stage in producing the great work.

This week the Grand is attracting large attendance with a daily change of program of high-class first-run motion pictures.

Bijou Show Catchy.

Brimful of catchy features, pretty musical numbers, entertaining specialties and laughable comedy, this week's bijou attraction, "Hotel a la Carte," is drawing splendid audiences to the popular theater. Every principal in the cast is clever in his or her line of work and some excellent specialties are introduced, not to mention a dozen musical numbers in which the big chorus takes part.

For next week the management announces another corking musical comedy, entitled "Good Morning, Judge," a musical cocktail with Pearl Brothers and Burns and twenty others.

Broken Neck Mended; Ice Cream Kills Him

MARINETTE, WIS., July 18.—After surprising the medical world by recovering, after his neck was broken in a runaway accident several weeks ago, Hiram Reeves, head of a rural telephone company at Oconto, is dying of ptomaine poisoning from eating ice cream.

Mailing Letter, He Pulled Fire Alarm

CHICAGO, July 18.—Leon Wells, of Berlin, Mich., attempted to mail a letter to his mother in his home town. The result was the hasty arrival of two battalions of fire-fighting apparatus and a large crowd at the busiest corner in Chicago, that of the Masonic Temple. Traffic was tied up for several minutes before four fire department officials, 100 firemen, ten pieces of apparatus, a patrol wagon containing ten policemen and an ambulance with three doctors, returned to their stations.

"I thought it was a mail box," explained Leon. "I never saw a fire alarm like that. In our town we have a bell in the steeple."

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

You never can tell!

The grand young county of Candler on Thursday morning looked to be as good a bet as one might stake his coin upon—and to-day, like Caesar dead, there are none so poor as to do it reverence!

Perhaps that isn't quite fair to Candler, for there is a good chance that it may be reconsidered, and go over to next year, when, in forgetfulness of the bitterness of Thursday's fight on the floor of the House, Candler yet may come into its own.

Unquestionably, a serious tactical error was made when the friends of Candler, even without intending anything arbitrary, perhaps, moved the previous question, and thereby closed debate save from their own point of view.

It requires a two-thirds vote of the House to pass a Constitutional amendment, whereas it only requires a majority to order the previous question. The previous question, having been ordered by that majority, however, it immediately gave the minority opposition the right to raise the cry of "Gag rule," which cry said minority promptly proceeded to raise—vociferously and with deadly effect upon Candler!

The majority, seeing its blunder, undertook to right things—but too late.

Burwell, as fair and impartial a presiding officer as ever held the gavel, plainly was anxious to relieve the House of its embarrassment if he could, but under the rules, he could not. The House had tied his hands. Several virtuous gentlemen, who had not even called for a division on the vote for the previous question, were very much outraged that the previous question had been ordered, nevertheless—and their expressions upon the floor with respect to that feeling of outrage evidently impressed the House profoundly, as the House proceeded to sustain said outraged point of view.

Altogether, the fight on Candler was as pretty a piece of claptrap as ever was slipped over—but it was slipped, all right, and that is what hurt Candler's feelings!

Moral: Never be too sure your enemy can not throw straight, even if he is left-handed!

Undoubtedly there is genuine merit in the Candler County proposal, and there hardly is a doubt that eventually a new county will be created there.

And the Candlerites may get some consolation from that, after all!

The many friends—as they would say in the Springplace Jimplecute, no doubt—of the well-known Georgian mentioned, will read the following paragraphic gem from The Thomasville Times-Enterprise with mingled feelings of melancholy and joy:

Jim Nevin is more truthful and lots more interesting writing about Governor Brown's gold pen than he was penning that conglomerate mess about the Thomasville cow.

Now, what do you know about that?

The Legislature is looking forward to its forthcoming visit to Augusta with genuine delight.

A great time is being framed up for the Solons, and there will be "doings" from the time the train arrives in Augusta Saturday about noon, until it leaves that night.

Many members are anticipating particularly a visit to Carmichael's famous fishing club with rare pleasure.

This place has been made famous by dozens of distinguished visitors, among them being President Taft, Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and others.

The House roll call rarely develops anybody absent, although it frequently is insisted upon.

Thursday an attempt was made to dispense with the roll call, but it was objected to. Nobody was absent, however—which shows what a fine system of looking after the membership is in vogue about the clerk's desk.

It remained for Mr. Moss, of Cobb, rather to hit the nail squarely on the head in explaining his Candler County vote Thursday, when he said:

"I do not indorse this call for the previous question and the shutting off of debate, but I shall not, merely because of that, refuse to do that which under my oath I agreed to do—that is, vote for that which I think best for the State.

"Because a tactical blunder may have been made by the floor leaders in charge of this measure, I shall not, therefore, visit my wrath upon the good people of the South Georgia territory asking to be made into this new county, who come here sincerely and honestly knocking at the doors of the union of counties.

"I can not understand how members can get up here and say they had intended voting for this measure, and would do so, but for the fact that a parliamentary blunder has been made in this House. It impresses me as rather mean and below the belt thus to hit the unoffending Candler County citizens, many of them good farmers, who are here asking a perfectly legitimate thing.

"If a man be sincerely against this measure, all right—he should so vote. But to make a mere mistake in parliamentary procedure an excuse for striking down an admitted meritorious proposition—that is all wrong. I believe this proposition is good, therefore, I shall vote aye!"

Mr. Moss is not inclined to the creation of new counties particularly, but the proposed county of Candler he had picked as one of the two deserving to win—and he voted accordingly.

His little speech in explaining his vote made a distinctly favorable impression on the House.

Easy to Get Rid of Corns

When you know HOW. But you can't do it by peeling, paring, gouging or picking at them. These barbarous methods are cruelly painful and seriously dangerous, for frequently the corn bleeds and then there is always the possibility of blood poisoning. Furthermore, these methods do not remove the corn completely, for the root usually goes deep into the toe to the bone.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory, which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful with any corn, whether hard or soft, and no matter how stubborn or how deep the growth. It removes the corn completely and positively without pain or danger. The first application instantly stops the corn from hurting you. Use it to-night and end your agony. 20c, by mail 22c. —(Advt.)

The SOCIAL WORLD

Mrs. Samuel K. Dick, who was Miss Ruth Tribble, of Athens, before her recent marriage, was the honor guest at an informal tea given Friday afternoon by Miss Jennie D. Harris.

A group of 30 young matrons were invited to meet Mrs. Dick, who is a charming acquisition to the married set. The guests were received in the drawing room, where vases of zinnias, Shasta daisies and summer roses formed the decorations. In the dining room a prettily appoined tea table had for a centerpiece a silver vase of crimson gladioli.

Miss Harris was charming in white lingerie, draped over pink silk, with a deep border of pink crepe de chine finishing the skirt. Knots of tiny French roses were caught amid the laces of the corsage and a pink sash and girdle completed the costume.

Mrs. Dick wore a beautiful gown of white crepe, combined with French cobweb lace, draped on the skirt and confined at one side with a large pink rose. A hat of pink tulle and a corsage bouquet of pink roses completed the modish toilet.

Mrs. Clem Harris, who assisted in entertaining, wore black crepe de chine.

CALIFORNIA TRIP FOR WINNER IN 'AD' CONTEST

"Salesmanship Experience Alone Worth $1,000 to My Son," Says Business Man.

When the business office of The Georgian opened its doors early Friday morning a prominent business man was there with his 16-year-old son.

"I want Charley to enter the want ad contest," he said. "Put him down and start him to work."

The young man's nomination blank was accepted and he was given instructions for securing want ads. His father turned to the want ad man.

"I believe Charley will go out and win," he said. "He has it in him. But even if he doesn't win, I want him to try. I know a few weeks of actual experience in this contest will give him a thousand dollars' worth of education in the most highly-paid work on earth—practical salesmanship. That's why I put him in."

Girls Enter Contest.

And Charley wasn't the only entrant of the morning. A dozen others, several of them young women, brought in their nomination blanks, saw themselves credited with 1,000 votes each for a starter, and had a chat with the want ad man.

They were told how to go to their friends and neighbors and secure want ads for The Georgian, and shown how to roll up a list of votes in the contest for an automobile, a trip to California, a piano, or any one of the dozens of prizes.

"There isn't a family in Atlanta which hasn't a want," said the want ad man. "We have proved that by going to see them and getting results. You next-door neighbor wants a new cook or a man to trim the hedge or is ready to swap a stove for a bedstead or desires to sell his or her house. If you'll go to see him or her and make a suggestion you're sure to get the want ad.

Expert Aids Workers.

"You will be given careful instructions and practical help by an experienced district manager. He will show you how to get the ads. He will give you every bit of assistance you desire. You will have a real course in practical salesmanship, and instead of paying for the training you will be handsomely paid for your efforts."

Persons who wish to enter should clip out the coupon in the big advertisement, fill it out and bring it to the want ad man at No. 7 Edgewood avenue. They will be given full details of the contest and shown how to go out and win.

BIRTHDAY PARTY GIFTS WILL BE PONY VOTES

Girl's Guests Will Bring Her Subscriptions—New Way Found To Aid Contestant.

Newest among the developments in The Georgian and American pony contest is a birthday party. Miss Robert Harbour, of No. 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue, will give the party Saturday afternoon.

This is to be Miss Harbour's fifth birthday anniversary. In honor of the event there will be a "regular party," with the difference from the ordinary celebration that many of the guests have told her in advance what their presents will be.

They will give her subscriptions to The Georgian and Sunday American, which count liberally in votes in the contest. This is an instance where the givers get as much as the recipient, little Miss Harbour gets the votes and the donors get the papers.

John Trimble, of Lithonia, and his father came to Atlanta Thursday to see the ponies. John Trimble is making a good race for the pony to be awarded to the Georgia boy or girl getting the most votes.

One more day remains of the special bonus offer, which gives extra ballots for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. From all indications, Saturday will be one of the

ATLANTA EXHIBIT FOR KNOXVILLE FAIR URGED

Tennessee Business Men in Person Will Attempt to Interest Manufacturers and Jobbers.

Within the next few days a determined effort will be made by business men of Knoxville, Tenn., to interest Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in that city from September 1 to November 1 of the present year.

A delegation of Knoxville men will come to Atlanta to take up the matter of an exhibit of Atlanta-made goods at the exposition with members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers' Association.

This was the word brought to Atlanta to-day by James B. Young, director of publicity for the exposition, who was in the city on business connected with the exposition

Incomplete Without Atlanta.

"The feeling in Knoxville is," said Mr. Young, "that the National Conservation Exposition would not be complete without Atlanta represented, and the directors of the exposition company hope to be able to show Atlanta men wherein it will be to their advantage to come to Knoxville in force.

"The position in so far as we have been able to figure it out is like this: Knoxville during September and October will be something of a battleground between the commercial interests of the North and those of the New South.

"Cincinnati in particular is engaged in a trade expansion movement; Louisville is another city in the same class. Baltimore and several other places north of us already have reserved space for big commercial exhibits at the Knoxville show.

One Means to Invade South.

"The idea of these business men—and I believe they have the right idea—is that the National Conservation Exposition is going to be the one big place this year in which to advance their interests along the lines of an increased Southern trade.

"Every indication is that we will have enormous crowds in Knoxville for the exposition, and one of the most gratifying features is the advices we get showing that travel from the North will be heavy.

"It is for these reasons and others that the men of Knoxville hope to be able to show to Atlanta why it is to the interest of this great city of the South to be represented at our exposition. The matter will be gone into at length and in detail when the Knoxville men come to Atlanta. This probably will be next week."

DR. DELAMATER CRIES HE 'HAS ENOUGH'

Druggist Rearrested on Complaint of Estranged Wife Declares He Has "Learned a Lesson."

Dr. Ira Delamater, following his release from the clutches of the police under a fine of $10.75, late Thursday afternoon was arrested by Constable W. W. Rogers, from the court of Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau, on a peace warrant sworn out by his wife.

The druggist was released under a heavy bond to appear at noon Friday, when an attempt will be made to have him placed under a prohibitive bond that will be forfeited if he even speaks to his wife again.

"I've got enough," cried Delamater when Constable Rogers took him in tow. "I won't ever do it again, and there is not any use of all this. I learned a lesson Wednesday night (he rubbed an enlarged optic), and I will never bother her again. I will help her get the divorce and pay her alimony regularly."

The druggist was arrested at a Turkish bathhouse in Decatur street. When Constable Rogers found him he was having a badly swollen and darkened eye and severe bruises on his body massaged. They were inflicted by W. T. Cammack, a railroad man, who interfered when Delamater visited Mrs. Delamater, who is seeking a divorce from him, Wednesday night.

:-: Their Married Life :-:

Helen and the Trunks Are Gone When Warren Returns to the Hotel in Paris.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE room was charming. Helen could hardly restrain an exclamation of delight when the French manager unlocked the door and crossed over to draw the heavy curtains from the long, low windows.

The paneled walls, the furniture, the draperies, were all in old rose silk tapestry. The bedroom adjoining was exquisitely dainty in white and pale blue. The low French dressing table, the cheval mirror, the two cane beds with the pale blue silk hangings and coverlets, made it look like a stage setting—"Act I. Mlle. ———'s Boudoir"—in a modern French play.

It was all so surprisingly dainty and luxurious for a hotel that Helen feared it would be most expensive—more than they could pay.

"What do you ask for these rooms?" she ventured.

"Twenty-five francs a day, Madame," he answered in surprisingly good English.

"And what for breakfast served up here?"

"Two francs for coffee and rolls."

Only nine more francs for the rooms, and the same for breakfast as they were paying now! And the dirt and dinginess of the other place compared to the charm and cleanliness of this! Helen pictured herself, in her dainty white morning gown and boudoir cap, having breakfast in this rose silk room. This picture decided her.

"Very well. I'll take the rooms. We're at a place on the Boulevard Capucines now, but we'll come to-morrow morning or late this evening."

The manager took her down on the mirrored elevator to the palm-lined hall and office below, where Helen made a deposit of twenty-five francs to secure the rooms.

On the way back in the bus her courage began to waver. She had arranged to move without Warren's consent or knowledge. But when she again saw the dinginess and shabbiness of the rooms they were in and thought of the wretched breakfast they had had that morning, her courage was renewed.

A Bold Scheme.

As she packed the few things they had unpacked for the night her strongest desire was to move now. It was only half-past one, and Warren would not be back until almost seven. Why not get a cab and take their baggage over now—and have everything unpacked and in place by the time he got there? She could not reach him during the afternoon, but she could leave a note here giving him the address of the new place.

For Helen this was a most audacious scheme, and she was athrill with excitement at the very daringness of it all. For once she would show Warren that she could take the initiative, that she would not stay in a place that was both uncomfortable and unclean, merely because he did not want the bother of moving.

There was a rusty pen and a dusty ink bottle on the mantel. Helen took some paper from her handbag and wrote hurriedly:

Dear: Have just found the most wonderful place! When I went to the American Express Company this morning to get our mail I heard some American women talking about a delightful hotel. I took down the address and looked it up at once. The rooms are so beautiful and so moderate, that I couldn't resist engaging them.

I do hope you won't be annoyed, but this place is so dirty that I felt I couldn't stay. I am going to get a cab and move the things over now, so everything will be in place when you get there. The address is Hotel Ronceray, 10 Rue Montaigne. You can get a bus on the corner that will take you to the door. I will pay the bill here. Hastily. HELEN.

Still fearing that her courage might be short-lived, she determined to act quickly. Resolutely she went down to the office and asked for their bill. The man seemed surprised and displeased, for he had plainly expected them to stay several weeks.

Helen was amazed at the bill. She thought there would be only the room for one night and breakfast—but there was a charge for light, service and bath. However, she was too glad to escape from the place to make any protest, and a little later she was in a cab with their baggage on top, driving to the new hotel with a feeling of mingled glee and awe at her own temerity.

It was just 3 by the French gilt clock on the mirrored mantel of the rose-tapestried sitting room, when Helen closed the door after the porters who had brought up the bagage.

Even before she took off her hat she made an eager, interested inspection of every detail of the rooms. They were luxuriously and perfectly appointed. Everything was in exquisite taste.

It would be over three hours yet before she could expect Warren. But she had no desire to go out in the blazing, midafternoon sun, for the heat was stifling. She would spend the time in unpacking, in getting up their laundry, and in going over her clothes, which after the week on board ship needed attention.

It was a real joy to shake out her gowns and hang them in the spacious closets, and to arrange her clothes in the white-papered drawers of the chiffonelr and dresser. The rooms were so beautiful that there was a sense of luxury in just moving about and getting settled in them.

At 6 o'clock she decided suddenly to dress—to put on her white chiffon evening gown. She would lay out Warren's evening clothes, and when he saw her all dressed he would hardly refuse to dress, too. They would "live up" to the luxury of the place!

To sit down and arrange her hair before the low dressing table was a real pleasure. Helen thought of all the hours she had to stand before her high bureau at home, and resolved to have a dressing table like this as soon as she got back.

About half-past six she was trailing about the apartment in her white chiffon gown, looking at herself in the mirrors with which the rooms abounded, and feeling as though she was living in a play. The very foreign atmosphere of it all added to the charm. Although it was hardly dusk, she turned on the electric lights, which glowed softly through their silken shades.

She Gets Anxious.

For once Helen was too excitedly happy to worry over what Warren's attitude might be. Surely, when he saw how beautiful the rooms were, he could not be angry at her having moved.

But at seven she grew anxious. He should be here by now. What if they should not give him the note at that other place? They had not liked it because she had left—would they take such a revenge? She had left the note in the box with the key—how could he fail to get it?

Quarter after seven—half-past! By this time Helen had forgotten the charm of the rooms and was walking restlessly about in tense anxiety. What could have happened? He had said he would be back around half-past six, and it would take him only fifteen minutes at the most to get here from the other place.

For the first time there came a doubt in her mind as to the wisdom of her moving in this way. Perhaps she should have stayed. After all, it was a rash thing for her to do. They were in a strange city, if he should not get the note—how could he ever find her?

She could, of course, write to the American Express Company, where he would go for his mail in the morning; but what would he do to-night? Oh, why had she done this? Frantically she wished herself back in those other rooms, however shabby and dirty they might be. Surely it would have been better to put up with anything than to risk any chance of mishap in Paris.

A sharp knock at the door. She rushed to open it, and a French messenger boy handed her a note. As he held it out to her she saw Warren's writing on the envelope. Her hands weakly trembling, with her teeth she tore it open.

"Since you are so infernally smart and want to take things in your own hands, you can keep it up. You can have a nice little dinner alone any place in Paris you choose—and I can have the same. I'll probably be there some time to-night, but don't let that worry you—stay out just as late as you want."

The cruel sarcasm of it! How could he—oh, how COULD he! With a convulsive sob Helen threw herself upon the bed and her tears fell unheeding on its blue satin coverlet.

More Trouble in a Garden.

An elderly gentleman walking through his garden one day stopped before a fig tree on which were two figs just ripening. His favorites were figs, and summer often came and went without the fruit coming to maturity.

Shortly after he met his gardener who, assuring him the figs were quite ripe, was requested to send them to the summer house, where his master was about to rest.

Picking the figs, the gardener sent his little boy of 7 with the basket. On the way the little fellow stopped, and, removing the leaves, gazed upon the tempting fruit.

The attraction was too great; he ate one. Covering the other with the leaves, he proceeded upon his errand.

On being asked if the gardener had not sent two figs, the boy, after a moment's silence, answered: "I ate one."

"You ate one? How?" exclaimed the old gentleman, angrily. "How did you come to do that?"

Dropping his eyes to the basket, 'I took it like this," said the child, taking the remaining fig, "and I ate it like this."

And, suiting the action to the word, he consumed the second fig before the astonished eyes of the old gentleman.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Every one of these breaks in your life-line means a moment when you stood elbow-to-elbow with death," declared the girl, solemnly. "And yet—see those little squares of protection around each break? Senor American," she looked up at him soberly, "there is one break that you have not yet reached and the protecting square is not perfect like the others."

Warren burst into his silent laugh.

"I reckon that square will do when the time comes."

"But the time is now, senor!" exclaimed the girl, her lips less than a foot from his ear.

He drew back a little and eyed her through narrowed lids.

Danger Near.

She bore the keen scrutiny without a flutter, but her great round eyes and quick breathing told of some sure emotion.

"Are your eyes so sharp that you can tell the day and hour?" he asked slowly.

"Not my eyes, Senor American." She looked full at him with unmistakable meaning. "But my ears!" She caught the sound of footsteps in the passage and bent over the hand again as the Duke entered.

"In all my experience I have seen but one hand like yours, and that hand belongs to Don Robledo."

"Well, Mr. Warren, looking into the future?" inquired the Duke.

"Pardon, senor." Dolores swiftly withdrew and Warren called after her cheerfully:

"Good-bye, senorita, and many thanks for your occult wisdom. I'll take good care of that square. Yes, Duke," he added with a bantering smile, "and the immediate future promises to be very interesting. A dark man is to cross my path."

"Do you believe in such foolery?"

"I like to—on this occasion. For I hope it means some one I very much want to meet."

If the Duke guessed who this some one might be he gave no sign. He twirled his mustache and studied the floor, evidently in much perplexity, a situation that seemed to amuse the young man immeasurably.

"By the way," he went on. "Is that specter a blond or a brunette?"

The exalted kinsman made an impatient gesture, as if in no mood for raillery, and with every appearance of grave concern said:

"Mr. Warren, since the Prince is no more, I feel a certain responsibility for Her Highness' actions; and the prospect of your destruction to-night on her account is most uncomfortable."

The young man looked equally grave.

"You think I won't come back?"

The Duke looked at him with the air of a man who is frankly doing his duty.

"I think if you go into that castle to-night you take your life in your hands," he declared.

The old whimsical smile returned to Warren's lips.

"I've got a good grip."

The Duke looked for a moment as if he would retire—that having done his duty there was nothing for him to say. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him:

"Look here! You Americans are shrewd traders. You get a dollar for a dollar when you bargain. You are not giving away your life for nothing. Now, what is the price?"

"Not very much," Warren assured him easily. "The deal was made on a bargain day. My life happened to be a little below par, you see, and I couldn't kick much over the terms."

The exalted cousin seemed relieved.

"Very well! Whatever those terms were, I will assume the responsibility of settling with you and at the same time release you from your unfair and outrageous bargain."

Jarvis bowed.

"Your Excellency, I am overwhelmed by your anxiety. It touches not only the heart but the pocketbook. But," he added regretfully, "the price is paid and I am on the job."

"I suppose that means you are going through with it?"

"Yes."

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, I never saw a man so anxious to be killed. But, as your English poet says, 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

"You flatter me," Jarvis protested, with soft-tongued irony. "Yet, an energetic fool may be of more use than an angel with cold feet."

"Well, I am sorry for you," concluded the Duke.

Jarvis walked up to him, for the first time in their acquaintance dead serious.

"Your Excellency," he said crisply, "I decline your offer and your advice and your sympathy—and I'll tell you why. I saw a gambler lay down four aces once because, as he said, 'The play ain't natural.' You tried to have me arrested on the steamer—you have tried to block me in every move I have made. Now—suddenly—you are deeply concerned lest something should happen to precious little me in that castle. You advise me to stay out. You even offer to buy me off. Shall I take your advice? NO! 'The play ain't natural.'"

On Guard.

His Excellency of Alva trembled with a cold fury, but held himself in.

"You have intruded into a matter which you neither understand nor appreciate," he said rapidly. "If, as you say, the play seems unnatural, pray do as your gambling friend—put down your cards and stay out of the game."

"No," retorted the young man, grimly. "I stay in the game—but I'm going to watch the deal!"

The return of the Princess abruptly terminated the conversation and when the two men turned to greet her they had recovered their natural tones and bearing.

"Well, all Segura is buzzing with your ghost-hunt to-night," observed the Duke, lightly. "The whole town will sit up to hear the outcome."

"And where are you going to get the returns, Duke?" asked Jarvis, with concealed interest.

"Unfortunately, I must leave at once," was the unexpected reply.

Even Jarvis was momentarily startled, but he quickly readjusted his inferences. "I am keenly disappointed, but I have an urgent summons to Madrid."

The Princess stared at her cousin, seemed about to speak and suddenly turned to the innkeeper who had followed her down stairs and ordered him to look after "the gentleman's wants."

"Thank you," said Jarvis, rightly interpreting this as a dismissal. "I'd like a couple of good horses and two lanterns."

"Lanterns?" smiled the Duke, as the young man went out. "Looking for an honest man, Mr. Warren?"

"Not in this neck of the woods, Your Excellency," retorted Jarvis, over his shoulder.

"Carlos," exclaimed the Princess, anxiously, when they were alone, "what have you found out? Tell me—what do they say?"

The Duke looked very solemn. "I regret to tell you that nothing is known of your brother since he entered the castle."

The girl closed her eyes and pressed her hands to her face.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned.

A Last Appeal.

Dolores called that Don Robledo was waiting with His Excellency's car.

"Cousin, do you really intend to go now?" cried the girl in tragic tones. "I need you! My brother needs you! Think what it means to us!"

"I am broken-hearted, dearest cousin—do not make my duty any harder by your words. The message is from His Majesty. It is mandatory. And, alas! in Spain, as in the Far East, to hear is to obey."

"But why must you start so soon?"

"You know my ride is a long one and I must travel fast while the moon is up."

The girl was silent for a moment and when she spoke again voice and features were composed into a chilly hardness.

"Not to open this discussion again, I want to say now that I will never forgive you for leaving my brother and me at this critical moment."

"Would you have me lose my favor with the King?" protested the Duke.

"Does his favor mean more to you than mine?" retorted the girl proudly.

The Duke spread out his palms and half bowed.

"Noblesse oblige, cousin," he said gently. "Nobles and kings must obey what lesser men might ignore. My heart is here, but my honor is with the King."

"Honor!" The Princess flung the word back at him as if it were a stinging missile. "The cloak for a man's vanity! Sacred honor!—to be kept bright at any cost, lest men should test his metal and find it base. Give me a man who cares less for honor than for me! You ask me to-day why I do not marry you. I will tell you why. I want a man, not a weakling masquerader. Yes, honor lives, but loyalty is dead! Courage is dead, and the brave blood of your ancestors, the blood that made Spain, has turned to water in your veins. There is not a nobleman in Spain who would dare go now this night to my brother in the castle. God! How I could love such a man!"

"Perhaps," sneered her cousin, stung by the bitter tirade, "perhaps such a man as your Yankee adventurer?"

"Perhaps I could," cried the girl, instantly taking up the challenge. "Who knows?"

The Duke bit his lips and before he could frame an adequate reply the man himself appeared, slowly descending the stairs. So he merely bowed, took the girl's hand and kissed it.

"Farewell," he said in a low voice, "some time you will forgive me. Success to you, Mr. Ghost-Breaker, when you bead the specter in his den."

"Thank you, your Excellency," drawled Jarvis, leaning against the stairpost. "I will do my uttermost to put salt on the specter's tail."

"Good-bye!"

"Good night, Duke!"

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with some concern and a question on his lips.

"Mr. Warren," she said abruptly, "we must start at once!"

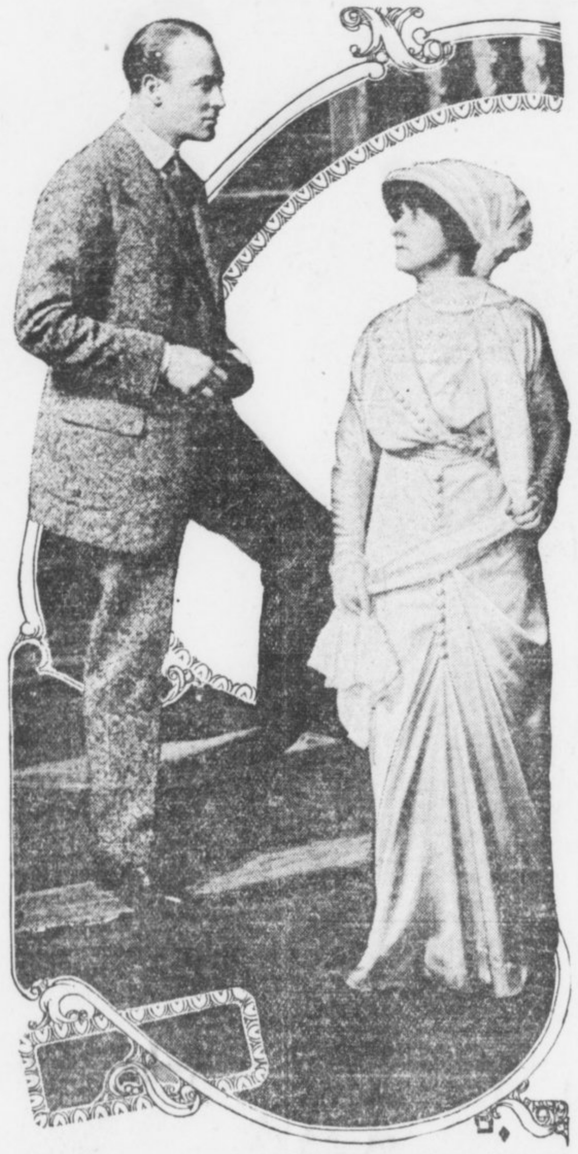
The strained quality of her voice told him that she was laboring under the most intense excitement and it was with studied ease of manner and voice that he replied:

"It's out of the question for you to go to the castle until I have smashed this infernal mystery; there is nothing you could do. If your brother is there I'll find him. You must be patient and remain here, where you are safe, and try to rest."

"I can not rest until I know what has happened to him," she cried desperately. "I shall go mad if I am left here alone!"

"But it's not safe for you to go," he insisted.

To Be Continued To-morrow.



OFF TO THE CASTLE.

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with som econcern and a question on his lips.

"MEGGIE, the postman is coming up the garden path. Would you mind going to the door?"

Mrs. Martin paused in the kneading of the large batch of dough and glanced toward the tiny sitting room. A pretty girl of about eighteen emerged in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crabbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips.

"Who is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

The girl burst into a flood of hot furious tears, and flung the letter scornfully upon the table.

"If Jack is too good for me, I don't thank her to tell me so," she declared. "She herself wasn't much until she married Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. Mrs. Martin picked up the letter and read it slowly. A look of contempt flashed in her honest gray eyes.

The letter, which was couched in terms of lofty condescension, mingled with biting satire, conveyed the unmistakable message that the silly attachment existing 'twixt Meggie and Jack was viewed with disapproval, and advised the girl to look elsewhere, unless she wished to bring Jack to financial beggary.

In a few minutes Meggie, her eyes red with crying, descended the staircase, and her mother gathered her in her arms.

"Take no heed of the foolish letter, my dear," she said soothingly.

Ten minutes later found Meggie on the way to Flamstead.

She Sees Jack.

A man emerged from behind a spur of cliffs and a sudden rush of color suffused her cheeks. The man saw her at the same time and came toward her at an increased pace. He was a tall, strongly built man of about twenty-one, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and darkly curled hair showed beneath his sou'wester.

"Great guns! What are you doing abroad a morning like this, Meggie?"

"I'm just on my way to Flamstead to make a few purchases, Jack," she said. "Are you putting out to sea to-day?" There was an anxious note in the inquiry, as she glanced uneasily toward the horizon, which was enshrouded in a threatening murkiness.

Her glance seemed to bring something to his recollection, for his bright eyes suddenly darkened, and he laid a hand upon the rough surface of his jersey. The next moment he had taken the girl's arm in a close grip.

"Did you receive a letter this morning, Meggie?" he asked abruptly.

A tell-tale flush of confusion dyed Meggie's cheeks, and her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Then it is true. She has been interfering between you and me. By heaven, I'll make her retract every word she has written.

* * * * * *

It was a night long to be remembered by "those who go down to the sea in ships," and by the poor fisherfolk of Sharpel's Head in particular.

"I'm main afraid they won't do it, if they do, 'twill be by the grace of God!"

The distress signal flickered for a second, and then was obliterated by the flying spume. The old fisherman who had first spoken made his hands into a megaphone, and gave vent to a loud but futile shout.

"'Tis awful to have to stand by and watch them go to their death without being able to lend a hand," he said.

"She cannot last long in a sea like this," declared old Timothy, with a shake of his head. "A boat wouldn't live a minute in such a boil. 'Tis years since I've seen the like."

Scarcely had he spoken when there was a commotion at the rear of the watchers, and a slight cheer was raised. The men from the Flamstead Coastguard Station had arrived, and at their head raced Meggie Martin, her dark hair streaming in the wind. A minute later a rocket with a mighty rush soared seaward, taking with it the line. It hummed like a string of a gigantic harp. At length there emerged from the darkness the dim outline of the breeches-buoy, and from it hung the limp figure of a man.

"Why, 'tis Jim Carlin, of the Waterwitch."

A wild, terrified wail greeted the announcement, and Mrs. Ryalls rushed into the arc of light cast by the lantern.

"The Waterwitch! Good heavens! What of my husband?"

She reeled, and would have fallen had she not been caught by Meggie. The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girlish figure sprang toward him and seized him by the arm.

Jack Is Left.

"All are not saved!" she cried in a voice that was almost a scream. "There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured and Jack has sent him first. Oh, be quick, or 'twill be too late!"

The officer spun round with a sharp command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey.

"I'm afraid it's all over, miss. There is no response. He shook the line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn ashore, and almost at the same moment and hawser perceptibly slackened.

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!" shouted the officer. "Tighten up the hawser, lads, and let's have another try for the poor fellow."

The officer and his men hurried away with the lanterns toward the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy.

A reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, had swung herself into the buoy and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline toward the deafening inferno below.

Meggie felt a numbness creeping over her senses, but she bravely fought it back. She had set herself the task of saving Jack if he still lived and that task must be accomplished.

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips as she recognized it as the figure of Jack Ryalls. Meggie suddenly leaned from the buoy and, seizing the limp figure of her lover, drew him toward her. * * *

"Why, bless me, if there ain't two!" The cry escaped old Timothy.

"And if it ain't Meggie Martin that's bin out to the wreck to fetch Jack in, I'll stand hanging!" declared another voice. "Hold that lantern up, Bill. Let's have a look at the heroine of Sharpel's Head."

The feeble rays of light fell upon the locked figures of Jack Ryalls and his gallant rescuer, and the next moment a tremendous hurrah rose above the soughing wind. Five minutes later the unconscious couple were being conveyed home with the utmost haste, followed by a crowd of silent but enthusiastic witnesses of the daring deed.

* * * * * *

Twelve months later a pretty wedding was solemnized at the quaint church of Sharpel's, and the whole of the townsfolk turned out to do honor to the handsome pair; but never did a heart beat more proudly than did that of Jack Ryalls as he led his bride between the lines of fishermen who formed the guard of honor—the girl who had snatched him from the very jaws of death.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I DO NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and in love with a man two years my senior. He is nice and has a good position. I kept steady company with him for a year and a half. Then my mother stopped him from calling on me, but never gave a reason; but, as it is, we go out, when we get a chance, together. He has given me two diamond rings. Do you think it is right for me to see him as long as mother does not consent? CUTTIE.

You owe her obedience, and must not see this man clandestinely.

On the other hand, you are now 18, and your mother owes you a reason for her objections. Can you not persuade her to tell you what they are that he may have a chance to overcome them? If he is the man who is to tell you the "sweetest story of all," I don't want you to lose him.

NOT A DAY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19, and am keeping company with a man 25 years old. Do you think he is too old for me? We never quarrel. He loves me, I know, but my father thinks him too old for me. He makes fine pay and gives me good times. We think a lot about each other and get along fine. H. E.

He is not a day too old. Are you sure your father's objections are not based on some other ground?

BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I received an invitation from a young lady to attend her birthday party. Is it proper for me to accept the invitation, as I have never been introduced or even seen the young miss? PERPLEXED.

A girl who would do anything so foolish deserves the rebuke you are in position to give her by declining the invitation.

Household Suggestions

Weak eyes that ache when exposed to the glare of the sun, especially on the sea, should be treated with cold water compresses. These are folded on the closed lids, and ease the aching at once.

If troubled with ants indoors spread a piece of brown paper with marmalade rather thickly, then place it where they are most troublesome. It will soon be covered with them.

When boiling potatoes put a teaspoonful of sugar as well as salt in the water. This does not give a sweet taste, but makes them dry and floury.

Effect.

"Did you see the lovelight in her eyes?"

"No. The gaslight was in her eyes, and she squinted."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

HUSBAND deer, sed Ma to Pa last evening, at last I have found a perfek jewel of a servant. She caim to work this afternoon, & I want you to notis her wen she is serving dinner. She is as brite a gurl as I have ever met. She is a cullurd girl, her naim is Minyunette, & she went to a gurl's college that Booker Washington had sumthing to do with. Her flow of English is perfeck, Ma sed, & I was thinking that littel Boobie cud improve his English by jest lissening to her talk.

Didn't Warm Up.

I doant warm up vary much as you are talking, sed Pa. Sumhow I aint very keen for a servant that knows moar than we do. You know how long that one lasted with us that was all the time talking about Henry James & Shopenhaur.

Oh, but this gurl is different, sed Ma. She is vary quiet & I doant think she will air her nollege any.

I knew Pa wasn't going to like the new gurl, tho. I had herd her talking to Ma beefoar Pa caim hoam, & this is what she sed wen she was talking off her wraps: I presume that the duties connected with the situation will not be arduous. That dident sound like our other gurl that we had beefoar her, she sed when shall I pitch in?

She Comes In.

Well, wen dinner beegan Minyunette caim in to wait on the tabel. She had a high forehead & woar glasses.

Wife, sed Pa to Ma, you & little Bobbie are going to a Shakespeer reading to-nite.

Oh, sed Minyunette, I adoar Shakespeer. He is so many minded, his scope is so all em-bracing. I was just looking at yure fat husband, she sed, & thinking of Shakespeer's lines

I want fat men about me, sleek hedded men
& such as sleep o' nights.
Yon Cashus hath a leen & hungry look.
He thinks too much. Such men are dangerus!

Pa dropped his fork & looked at Minyunette the way he looks at me wen my report card says Deportment, 65. But Minyunette dident notis Pa, she kept on talking. I think the character of Shakespeer's Portia is a butiful one, she sed. So wise & yet so sweet and womanly. I can see her now in my mind's eye, saying

The quality of mercy is not strained,
It falleth as the gentle rain from heaven.
It is twice blessed, it blesseth him—

See here, sed Pa, I doant want to be any Simon Legree, but it wuddent be a bad ide, Minyunette, if you showed a littel moar sped out in the kitchen & a littel less in here. I am as hungry as a jailed suffragist, sed Pa, & it doesent help my hunger any to heer you spouting Shakespeer. The next thing I know you will be raving about Lord Byron and trying to reesite all of Childe Harolds Pilgrimage. Come on, now, sed Pa, moar spuds & less Shakespeer.

Didn't Like It.

Minyunette dident like it at all the way Pa talked. She took off her apron & sed to Ma, Madame, I regret that I shall be compelled to seek elsewhere for a posishun whare the environments is moar en-vironing, sed Minyunette. I was sure I was going to like it here, beekaus you are a sweet nature, but yure husband is rude & of the soil. Our souls are not at-tuned, she sed. & so, obaying the word of fate, our ways part.

Good-NITE, sed Pa.

:-: The Melody :-:

WHEN evening came with the shadows she let her little frail hands fall into her lap as if every muscle and tendon had suddenly burst. Her finely-shaped dark-haired head rested on the table. She was sitting in front of her sewing machine, at which she had been working all day. All around her were scraps of silk and woolen goods, fashion papers and patterns lay in piles on the table, and when she moved her arms some of them dropped on the floor. Her head was dizzy with complete exhaustion. She was unable to think, but felt the increasing darkness as a blessing which put an end to the toil of the day.

It was ten years of work that had aged her. These years had been to her like one long walk through an endless desert without a single oasis to relieve the monotony; her feet had left no tracks on the sands; not a single cry from her lips had been responded to; nobody had met her on the way to shake her hand.

But on the other side all these years of weary thraldom there were a few years when she had been young and had lived. In those years the two had sat together, watching the coming of dark, and were glad and laughed at everything.

She was young then, and worked for small wages in a dressmaking shop. He had long hair, dreaming eyes, an inexhaustible fund of hope, and a violin—that was all, but he was an artist. He was young, gave lessons on the violin and managed to make both ends meet. He was always bright and happy. Nobody could laugh as he could, or cheer her up as he could. He knew how to make everything appear in a golden and rosy light.

One night he came to her unexpectedly and took her into his arms.

"I cannot live without you," he said. "Why should we wait until we can afford to marry. Then we shall be old and gray. You cannot put happiness aside and say, 'Wait a few years; I cannot give you any of my time now; later on I will call for you.' Will you not come to me now and live with me as my wife?"

But she did not understand him. She struggled out of his arms, wounded and unhappy, an intense pain shooting through her every nerve and fiber. For solitude had made her shy and suspecting; his suggestion hurt her, and she asked him to leave her. She no longer remembered the passionate words that passed between them; but he left her, pale and angry, his black hair in disorder and his eyes shooting fire at her.

Two days passed. Then one even she saw it in one of the papers—a short notice which most people would have overlooked. He had shot himself. He had gone straight from her and had sent a bullet through his brain. She thought of all the hard words she had said to him and felt how unjust she had been to him.

As she was putting her room in order she felt a sudden desire to go out, to see people around her and hear them talk, to feel the cool evening air in her face.

From the park she heard music which irresistibly drew her in among the trees, where it was so much more pleasant than in the dreadful rushing and crowding of the streets. She stopped in front of a large restaurant with many chairs and tables outside and music in the veranda, where a few persons sat drinking and talking.

She sat down on a bench under a dripping tree, where she could hear the musicians. Here she sat for a long time quietly and sad, with her hands folded and her head thrown back.

Suddenly a musician got up to play a violin solo. He was a tall, dark young man; he stooped a little. His eyes were sad and melancholy under the heavy brows.

As he started to play she stood up trembling. She felt like rushing up to him and asking him to stop, but she fell back on the bench and hid her face in her hands.

"That melody contains all life," he used to say; "love, suffering and happiness."

When the violinist lowered his bow she stood up and went home. Like a small shadow she disappeared among the crowd. Nobody had a look or a thought for her.

But her pale, tired-looking mouth was smiling, and in her eyes was the light of happiness. No longer did she dread the visions of the day or the dreams of the night.

She had a hand to clasp now in the darkness, a hand which was to guide her through eternity.

Condensed Measure.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked a sharp servant of the milkman, whom she suspected of giving short measure.

"Yes," replied the man.

"Well, it won't do," said the girl. "When we want condensed milk we'll buy it at the grocer's."

How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing.

These pictures were especially posed for this page.

In the figure on top, Lady Constance shows how to stand gracefully. A simple exercise in swaying from foot to foot. This will teach you how to balance the weight properly. The next figure below will bring grace to arms and shoulders. Beside this it is a splendid exercise for reducing hips and thigs.

In the last figure Lady Constance gives a little tip-toe exercise.

EVERYONE agrees that for the art of sculpture we can not exceed the ancients. To me it seems that the Greeks had beautiful sculptured figures because they had wonderful models, and had wonderful models because they had a deep veneration for the almost divine beauty of the human form. And so out of this circle of perfection they chiseled glorious figures that we of to-day may use as models for the beautification of our own bodies.

To-day I am showing you three figures, and I shall dwell at length on them and what we may hope to acquire from a practice of the poses they portray. Let us make a slight study of the expression of countenance and body. For unless the face and body are attuned in the expression of a mood, there will be ungraceful uncertainty as a result.

The First Figure.

The first figure on top might stand for a number of ideas—injured innocence is the most dramatic idea that it suggests. To me it simply is a harmoniously simple pose, in which body and face express quiet dignity. Try it yourself—for it looks very easy to take a pose like this. But to stand poised firmly and gracefully on one foot, with the whole body balanced, ready to spring into motion and life and still at rest, is quite a feat. The ability to stand gracefully is rare—for people generally balance on heels or toes, or sag awkwardly on one hip.

Let me suggest an exercise for the acquisition of ability to stand gracefully. Balance the weight on the ball of the right foot, let the right arm hang easily at the side. Sway the body slightly to the left and raise the left arm to the chest, at the same time rising on the toes of the left foot until the weight is all balanced on the right foot. Then sway the weight gradually to the left foot, rising on the right toe and lifting the right arm to the chest. Simply sway from foot to foot in exactly the posture that figure one shows you.

Is Very Simple.

Figure two is gayety shown in one step of an old dance of triumph. It gives the most marvellous control of thigh, knee, ankle and instep, and will serve to bring down an accumulation of weight about the hips and thighs. Furthermore, it insures a graceful control of arms and shoulders.

The practice of this seemingly complicated exercise is simple when once you carefully analyze the picture I have posed for you. Beginning with the left foot, rise slowly to the toes, at the same time raising the other leg with the knee bent and the instep so flexed that the toes point almost perpendicularly to the floor.

The rising on the toes of one foot and the lifting of the other limb until the knee is far above the waist line must be simultaneous.

Practice this first, alternating from one foot to the other, with the arms hanging at the sides.

Then combine the arm and leg motion, and see what a gain in balance results.

Lift the arms with drooping wrists, and as the hands reach the shoulders, and the elbows are at waist height, turn the fingers up, at the same time turning out the hand above the raised knee, and elevating the up-pointing fingers of the other hand above the head.

Poise, balance, and reduction of superfluous hip-flesh—is this not a vast deal to gain from one dancing exercise?

The last figure illustrates a little faun-like movement that is splendid for back, throat and instep, as well as for flexibility of wrist. Walk forward on tip-toes, with the uplifted hands crossing first to the right and then to the left as the body's weight is thrown first on the right and then on the left foot. When the weight is coming on the right foot and the right wrist is foremost, throw the head to the right and give the body (which must be bent slightly back throughout the exercise) a slight turn to the right. Alternate this from foot to foot.

Always practice these exercises in regular alternation from right to left or left to right and back again to insure even bodily development. Real beauty of form demands as first requisite absolutely even and uniform development, for only when it is absolutely normal is the body truly lovely as Our Maker meant it to be.

Up-to-Date Jokes

The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something.

"I'll have to get rid of Fido," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?"

Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous and burning indignation, as she replied:

"Every single thing except the dog biscuits."

"Waiter," grumbled a customer, "I should like to know the meaning of this. Yesterday I was served with a portion of pudding twice the size of this."

"Indeed, sir," rejoined the waiter. "Where did you sit?"

"By the window," answered the customer.

"Oh, that accounts for it," said the waiter. "We always give people by the window large portions. It's an advertisement."

:-: The Sins of Our Fathers :-:

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

MILDRED writes: "I am deeply in love with a young man three years my senior. I have been keeping company with him for the past three months. I would like to bring him up to the house, but my father objects to me bringing any boys up to the house. What shall I do?"

In the category of sins which fathers visit upon their children, no mention is made of the heavy penalty that often results when a girl is compelled to do all her "sweethearting" outside the protecting walls of her home. If the streets, the parks, the public walks or the dark corners of steps are made a girl's parlor, then I contend her father is visiting upon her innocent head as great a burden as if he violated all the moral and physical laws. In the most trying period of her life, when through her love she is weakest to resist, she is cast out on the streets without even the environment of familiar scenes at home to remind and to restrain her.

One can not be as easily tempted when in the familiar scenes of one's youth and innocent dreams, as if in strange surroundings. It is as if every chair, the table, even the pictures on the wall, looked with accusing eyes, surrounding the girl with whose life they have always been a part with a moral influence that is never lightly brushed aside.

The girl who receives her lover in her parlor impresses him, though perhaps unconsciously, with the sanctity, the respectability, the dignity of a home. The girl whose parlor is the streets may be good and pure and sweet, and usually is, but girls whose object is not moral also meet men on the streets, and the similarity upsets his moral balance.

An Impression.

The girl in the parlor usually has a father or a mother in the next room, and the young man who calls is impressed with the fact that there is some one loving her, shielding her, to whom he will have to account if he offends. The girl on the street corners is without a mother or father, so far as any impression of personal security goes. She is thrown out like a waif; if she becomes a derelict the father or mother who refused her the privilege of receiving her lover in her parlor is to blame.

The memory of parents is criminally short. There are few of them who can call back to the days when they loved and were loved, and when the clasp of a hand, or a kiss, was worth more than all the wealth in the world, and defied the wisdom of the ages. They have forgotten the call of youth.

There is no room in their memory for the cry of the heart for its mate, and, lacking this memory, they are as unfit to be parents of young girls and boys as an Egyptian mummy. They are without sympathy and understanding, at the period when the young in their charge need sympathy and understanding the most.

Without these they are also without charity. I have a notion that the father of Mildred, who compels her to do her "sweethearting" on the streets, would be like flint in his judgment if she yielded to the unwholesome influences of the dark corners of life and erred. Yet he would be more to blame than she.

Wisdo mto Refuse.

It is wisdom to refuse to let a girl bring a man to her home of whom her parents know nothing, but it is better to grant her even this privilege than to let her meet him on the streets. If they know nothing of him a closer inspection in their own home gives them every opportunity to know him better.

They can never know the manner of man their daughter is learning to love if they compel her to see him on street corners, and, being ignorant of him, they are without argument or weapons if he is undesirable.

Open the parlor for the girls. It is their right!

The Misfortunes of Joe Brick

A SHORT time ago I met my friend, Joe Brick. He looked worried. When I greeted him with a smile he groaned.

"Oh, if you only knew! If you knew, but you don't."

Then feeling, like most unhappy men, a desire to confide the story of his misery to somebody, he told it to me, and a pitiful story it was indeed.

"My affairs were going splendidly and I was already hoping to become a member of the Billionaires' Club," began Joe. "A rich marriage, I thought, would help me along. In society. I had often met Miss Ruby Smith, a daughter of the king of agriculture, a young lady of unusual beauty, but who unfortunately had neither arms nor legs. She was called the trunk woman. She was known to be amiable and sweet tempered, and was extraordinarily bright, so bright indeed that most of the schemes which had made her father the richest man in the United States had been hatched in her brain.

"I Decided to Marry."

"I decided to marry Ruby Smith, and one afternoon, dressed in my very best clothes, I asked her father for her hand.

"He looked at me sharply and said:

"'My daughter is very rich; how much are you worth?'

"I told the dreaded magnate all about my hopes. I proved to him that I had an idea which would revolutionize the manufacture of beet sugar, that I had a scheme to cut the cost of oleomargarine in two, and depicted to him all the details of my plan to increase the crop of Brussels sprouts, to triple its present size by sprinkling the plants twice a day with water from the celebrated Manneken fountain in Brussels, and how there were untold millions in my idea of exporting black radishes to the negroes in Africa.

"He was greatly impressed, took me into his arms and exclaimed:

"'You are to be my son-in-law, if Ruby will have you for her husband.'

"Miss Ruby received me most cordially. Poor little one, how beautiful she was! A regular Venus from Milo, only more perfect still, since her legs, too, were missing.

"I shall not go into details. It is enough to tell that she accepted me and a date was set for our wedding. It was celebrated with great splendor. It was the happiest day in my life. After the ceremony my wife received all her old friends with open arms, in spirit at least, in our new home. I felt my future was assured and knew that I would surely be elected for membership in the Millionaires' Club, which was the height of my ambition. Alas, it was not to be!"

"My dear little wife, my darling Ruby!' I said to my bride when we were alone: 'What do you say to giving up all our old habits for a few months and leave this feverish town for an idyllic wedding trip?'

"'You really think of everything, Joe!' she exclaimed, and as she could not clasp my hand she looked right into my soul with her angelic eyes. 'I am ready to follow you to the end of the world!'

"I have always been a most chivalrous fellow, so I felt like kissing her hand, but had to kiss her forehead instead.

"'I do love you so, Joe,' she whispered.

"'And I adore you, Ruby. There is no other woman in the world half so beautiful to me as you are!'

"We left for Canada in our private car, starting on our famous trip, which filled columns in the newspapers. We were to cross the Rocky Mountains and stay for some time in Monterey and Los Angeles, but the pitiless hand of destiny interfered. We were as happy as two turtle doves during the first part of our journey, and I felt that Ruby loved me more every day.

The Fatal Day.

"Then the fatal day came. The train, our own special train, of course, was speeding along at 70 miles an hour, when suddenly there was a shrill whistle and the airbrakes were jammed down hard. Train robbers had held us up and now invaded our drawing room.

"'Hands up!' cried a gigantic fellow standing in the doorway.

"Ruby behaved like a heroine and smiled indulgently at the bandit, while my hands shot upward.

"'Hands up!' roared the robber once more, and as Ruby, of course, was unable to comply with his request, he fired at her, killing her on the spot.

"That is how I became a widower,' sobbed Joe. "The king of agriculture accused me of leading his daughter, his right hand as he called her, into a trap. He blackballed me in the Billionaires' Club and did not keep a single promise to me in connection with my schemes. That is why I am a ruined man to-day. By the way, can you lend me a hundred?"

* * *

Only to-day I learned that Joe is spending his time in a nice, quiet retreat for the feeble-minded. He had told the story of his misfortunes to a dignified old judge while awaiting his turn at a barber shop.

By Virtue of Age.

"Yes," said the old man to his visitor. "I'm proud of my daughters, and it is the ambition of my heart to see them all comfortably married.

"What's more," he added knowingly, "I've made a bit of money in my time, so my girls wont go to their husbands penniless. There's Mary for example, 25 years old, and a real good lass—I'll give her $1,500 on her wedding day. And to Bet—you see, she has past her thirty-fifth summer—I'll give her, at any rate, a couple of thousand; whilst the man who takes Eliza can rely on taking with her at least $5,000 of the very best."

"By the way," inquired the young man, "how old is Eliza?"

"Forty," replied the elder.

"Hum! I suppose you don't happen to have a daughter somewhere between sixty and seventy?"

Do You Know---

There has been such a decline of recent years in the marriage rate of Trieste that one of the civic dignitaries suggests the institution of a system of compulsory matrimony. It is proposed that on a given date in each year all spinsters who have attained their twenty-fifth year and bachelors who have attained their thirtieth should be required to present themselves before the syndic in whose jurisdiction they reside. The names of those who on medical examination prove to be thoroughly sound would be sorted according to sex, placed in separate urns, and then drawn two at a time. The couples whose names are drawn together would, at the conclusion of the draw, be united forthwith by the syndic.

A traveling theatrical company, which is at present visiting Lille, France, gives performances in a couple of barges, which are towed along the canal from town to town. One barge does duty for the theater, while the other serves to house the players. The floating theater is comfortably fitted, and there is a large stage, with scenery painted by a member of the company.

One of the competitions in connection with the Welsh Territorial Artillery, which recently concluded its training on the sand dunes at Pembrey, was a bun-eating contest. Two sappers set out to eat fourteen buns, the prize to go to the man who got through the lot in the quickest time. The winner ate his fourteen in 25 minutes, his opponent finishing five minutes later.

GAMBLING MAY WRECK GAME AT PELICANVILLE

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Southern League owes itself the duty of cleaning out the baseball gamblers at New Orleans.

That city, by far the largest in the league, should be the vertebra of the circuit. Instead, it is only an appendix—and a decidedly diseased appendix at that.

I've talked with a lot of managers and players in this league, firing at all of them the question, "What's the matter with New Orleans?"

Some of them didn't know.

The rest agreed.

"Too much gambling."

It is understood that gambling runs practically wide open in the New Orleans stands—that you can get a bet on anything from the outcome of the pennant race to the question of whether the next effort of the pitcher will be a ball or a strike.

* * *

GAMBLING ruins baseball wherever it gets a foothold. It makes knockers. It creates a suspicion of faking. It drives respectable people away from the games.

What New Orleans needs is a house cleaning.

The gamblers should be run out of the stands and kept out. Every effort should be made to keep down gambling on games to the minimum.

It is really up to President Kavanaugh to take a look into this question. The interests of the league can be protected in no other way. The New Orleans Baseball Association can't handle the question, and has proved it.

The league is sickening because of this festering sore.

Somebody phone Old Doctor Kavanaugh!

* * *

IT is sort of a pathetic coincidence that Jud Daley is to succeed Spencer at New Orleans. They are chips off the same block—or should we say tusk?

Judson doesn't seem to be hitting them as of old. It can't be that he is aging. So probably he's in sort of a slump.

He's a great card for any club, on account of his cutting-up and his kidding of the bleachers, and is worth his pay as a comedian.

* * *

SEVERAL men, well known in Dixie, are figuring prominently in the International League these days. Derrick is batting .346 with Baltimore, and is leading the league. Ed Lafitte leads the Providence batters with .329. Swacina and Bill Zimmerman, both former Southern Leaguers, are hitting moderately hard with the Newark club "Swats" has a mark of .302 to his credit, while "Heinie" is going at a .281 clip.

* * *

THIS Clark that the Crackers have just picked up appears to be one of the champion wild men of organized baseball. Until a few days ago he belonged to the Highlanders. In a game in St. Louis, Chance stuck him in. He started by giving Brier four successive high ones. Pratt waited for four that didn't come near the plate. It was the same for Johnston.

Having pitched twelve successive balls, Wallace was next. Bob got a ball, and then, to the surprise of everybody, Clark pitched a strike. The next three were balls, though, and Chance yanked his recruit southpaw with the record of one strike in seventeen tries.

About sunset, Chance sold him to Clark Griffith.

Clark's big league career dates back to the days when Chase was managing the New York team. Arthur Irwin tipped Chase off to the fact that Clark had worlds of stuff. Chase sent "King" Brockett out to Sioux City to look Clark over, and, on the "King's" favorable report, Chase signed the southpaw.

Clark, upon being brought to civilization, proved wild as a bat. He had more stuff than Marquard and less control than Lefty Russell. He was shifted around a bit. Last season, he started with Rochester and was then sent to the Northwestern League. He was a successful twirler there, despite the fact that he issued AN AVERAGE OF NEARLY A BASE ON BALLS TO AN INNING.

It is doubtful if the world has ever seen a man wilder than Clark in his wildest moments. But when he has control, they couldn't hit him with a fishnet.

Clark will be another case for the attention of Old Reliable Joe Dunn. The man will be put under Joe's coaching. Maybe, Joseph can make a pitcher out of him. Any time Clark starts and is right, it's all over. Any time he's wild—good evening.

DENT OR BRADY TO-DAY; LOCALS EXPECT TO WIN

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18.—Bill Smith is going to shoot King Brady or "Slight" Dent against the Pelicans to-day. And we win it sure!

Those chaps were lucky to "get by" yesterday. They found us worn out after an awful trip, they got to an injured pitcher and it was all off. And at that we stalled them along for ten innings. We'll get them to-day.

Conzelman didn't have the stuff yesterday he had before he was hurt. He had no control over his curve and his fast ball did not break as it used to.

We got away in front as usual, scoring three runs in the first inning. They came back at us for a tie in the second and went out ahead in the fourth. In the seventh they added another on a wild pitch. We tied it up in our half of the eighth on doubles by Alperman and Bisland and my single.

In the fatal tenth, with two gone, Angemeier's single scored Williams, who had walked, and the game was over.

We aren't in the least bothered by the loss of the game, even to the Pelicans. We have thirteen more on our trip. If we can break even we ask no more. Our long stay at home will give us the chance we want to win the pennant.

CUMMINGS BEATS THOMAS.

ANACONDA, MONT., July 18.—Dan Cummings, of Chicago, was given the decision over Young Joe Thomas, featherweight, at the end of twelve fast rounds of fighting last night.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY AT PONCE

At Ponce DeLeon park Saturday afternoon the two leading clubs of the Sunday School League will meet in a double-header. In the absence of Billy Smith's Crackers, fans in large numbers are expected to provide the best crowd of the Sunday school season for the Saturday afternoon games.

The First Baptist team, leading the league with twelve straight victories and no defeats, has been playing such ball as to attract sidewise glances from the pennant races of the larger leagues, and is determined to add two more wins Saturday. The S. V. D. club, in second place, with seven victories and three defeats, is equally determined to break up the winning streak of the Baptists. Both teams will be in classiest condition for the double-header Saturday, which is scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

SOUTH MICHIGAN TEAMS PLAY 20-INNING GAME

ADRIAN, MICH., July 18.—Battle Creek and Adrian, the leading teams in the Southern Michigan League, yesterday played twenty innings to a tie, each scoring one run before darkness ended the struggle. Manager Jenkins, of Adrian, in the fourth inning, singled, and advancing on a sacrifice hit and a passed ball, was scored on a sacrifice fly. Pitcher McDonald, of Battle Creek, tripled in the sixth and scored on an error. Loomis, Adrian's pitcher, struck out nineteen batters and issued one pass, purposely, in the twentieth inning. McDonald fanned sixteen and passed none.

BUSINESS.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Nor ever a soul to mutter,
Nor ever a voice to bawl.

Oh, well for the guys who lose!
They are only a bunch of dubs.
They get the hook and a vicious look
Like the manager of the Cubs.

And the gate receipts go on,
Though the manager may be nil,
And the magnates cry for a winning guy,
As they hark to the sound of the till.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Or the friends you have, though they hand you salve,
Will hammer you to the wall.

Frank Chance was once a catcher. All he catches now is a flock of Gehenna.

Despite the fact that the Tigers whopped a few wallops into the Athletics, there is a deep suspicion that whopping the Athletics is not going to become a popular pastime.

Looking over the sport pages, we note that Larry Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues. This is a great truth. Mr. Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues.

The fact that Messrs. McAleer and Stahl have split reminds us that both denied it. The only conclusion to be drawn is that they were prevaricating, or didn't know it was loaded.

Reading over the papers, one notes that there are bulky fields at Porter. But as for bulky purses that's something else again.

TEN-ROUND GO SCHEDULED.

HOW TO ATTAIN GOLF BENEFITS TOLD BY EVANS

By "Chick" Evans.

IT is no doubt true that the majority of the golfers play simply for the exercise the game affords. Certainly golf furnishes an excellent opportunity for exercise, but it also supplies one of the finest studies in the world, and he who plays only for exercise misses half the pleasure. One can get a good deal of fun and exercise by just batting the ball around, yet surely much additional enjoyment can be found in attempting to discover the reasons that lie back of good or poor shots.

D. R. Forgan has said that "golf is the study of a lifetime," and this is undeniably true if one wishes to attain excellence. Every day the careful player can learn something about it and at the same time discover new obstacles to be overcome. It may be argued that the business man has no time to study a new game, but a little more care in playing would require but little more time.

There is a great pleasure in knowing how a thing is done, and no great progress can be made unless the underlying reasons for success are understood. Accidents happen, of course, and fortune is proverbially fickle, but she, like providence, is a little more inclined to help those who help themselves.

There is a great deal of good golf literature to be obtained at present, and I have no doubt a great deal of information can be obtained in that way. Personally, I have never read a book on golf except in the most casual manner, but I grew up on a golf links, and, at the observing age, learned my golf from observation. I believe strongly in books, however, and I think, if they are closely followed, they can be of much assistance to the beginner. This fall I intend to read as many golf books as I can lay my hands on, and I hope thereby to improve my game.

BRITTON REAL OPPONENT FOR TITLE HOLDER

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Not since the days when Frank Garrard and Martin Duffy, of this city, looked to be pretty fair championship material in the lightweight class have the local fight fans been so anxious to see a Chicagoan get a crack at the title. Neither Garrard nor Duffy ever made good in their day, but they were just as highly regarded along in the late 90s as are Jack Britton and Packey McFarland, present-day Chicago champions. Both Jack and Packey have a world of friends right here, and to say that they have their ears to the ground listening for some sort of a favorable report from the champion on the different propositions that have been hurled at him is putting it mildly.

* * *

PACKEY, while not issuing any direct challenges, has let it be made known to Ritchie that nothing would delight him more than to take him on in a 20-round contest, providing the weight bars be lowered just a little more, say another pound, letting the stock yards favorite in at 135 pounds, with the scaling done several hours in advance of the battle's start. With a foe of the McFarland caliber it is not likely that the champion will consent at all to any such an arrangement. He insisted upon 134 pounds for Rivers, and then trimmed the Los Angeles lad to the queen's taste, if queens have any particular taste in such matters. But from 134 pounds three hours or so before to 135 pounds five or six hours before is a vast gap that even the keen Ritchie eye is not likely to measure lightly.

* * *

BUT the Britton case is hugely different. Here is a boy who boldly flaunts this offer in the champion's face: "Make the weight, any figure that you choose," and then awaits the answer. Now, that leaves absolutely no loopholes for excuse or room for a single argument. Britton simply does not care what the poundage is, says so, and there rests his case. What will the answer be, to say nothing of the harvest?

* * *

NO sane man could ever accuse Willie Ritchie of cowardice. The man who jumped into the breach with Freddie Welch when Ad Wolgast was taken to the hospital and fought the English star almost to a standstill with but a few hours' notice, then whaled Ad Wolgast out of his title and went in and slugged with Joe Rivers at the latter's own game, is possessed, as Bill Naughton says, of a lion's heart. But Willie is a financier along with his other accomplishments and is not likely to enter into any contracts that do not promise the brightest of monetary returns. There isn't a doubt that if some promoter can see his way clear to offering the right sort of a prize for the champion he will lend himself to the match. Then we will see a real old-time battle between two of the greatest men that ever drew on a pair of gloves.

Pelky-Smith Battle For Sept. 1—Maybe

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Arthur Pelky and his manager, Tommy Burns, are in town. Pelky came here in quest of ring battles, and picked as his choice for first battle "Gunboat" Smith. Burns and his fighter held a long conference with Jimmy Coffroth, and if arrangements can be made Pelky and Smith will furnish the Labor Day card in this city. Pelky had little to say, Burns doing all the talking.

"There will be a general disposition to look upon Pelky as a ring accident, just as the people tagged Willie Ritchie as a false alarm," said Burns.

"This is a mistake. My man has had 33 fights without having had a decision given against him. He made Jess Willard quit cold, and he stopped Jim Barry in five rounds. All that he needs is the opportunity to prove that he is the best heavyweight boxer in the game to-day."

WISCONSIN BOXING BILL IS SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—Governor Francis McGovern has signed the Hedding boxing bill and the sport becomes legalized in Wisconsin the same as in New York State.

Governor McGovern had protests from many sources, but stated that he considered that in view of thousands of petitions in favor of the sport it was only just to the majority that they should be given a chance to show that boxing under proper conditions is much better than under no law at all.

It will now be up to the Governor to appoint a commission to handle the boxing game in the State.

Dixie Handicap To Be Thriller

Six Men on Track at Once

IF they get through the Dixie Handicap at the Motordrome to-night without smearing a half-dozen riders all over the track they have pulled the race miracle of the year. For they are going to start six riders in this event, three of them with a lap lead over the other three. And the scratch men are going to try to catch the handicap men within four miles.

This affair will be a loud noise. Nothing can stop it. Every time they get four riders on the track at once it looks as though all of them were going to break their neck. With six on it in a handicap race, which will mean that three of the men must ride their bally heads off to catch the other three, there should be more excitement than the local Drome ever dreamed of before.

This will not be a team race, as might be judged from the description. Of course, the handicap men will team together at the start, as a means of keeping ahead. And the scratch men will hang together to lend each other a pace in their effort to catch up. But once the scratch men get within striking distance, it will be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. When the three pursuing riders reach the three handicap men and all six of them tie up in an effort to gain the leadership anything may happen. Of course, the handicap men will never give an inch. If they can spread all over the track they will do it. That means that the men coming from behind at 85 miles an hour must worm their way through.

This will unquestionably be a big race. It will be fast because the scratch men must overcome a quarter of a mile lead in four miles. It will be dangerous and sensational of necessity because six men will be on the track at one time. And the winner is surely hard to pick.

COACH J. W. HEISMAN, OF YELLOW JACKETS, WRITES ABOUT:

Ball Players That Tech Has Turned Out

By J. W. Heisman.

SO many college players are breaking into professional ball these days, and so many of them with great success, that the thing no longer occasions the surprise and comment that used to ensue. Something like 25 years ago, when I was attending a New England college, I can remember with what dumbfoundment we learned one day that one of our varsity players had received an offer from Boston. It tickled us nearly to death!

* * *

Among Southern colleges, Tech early took the lead in this respect by sending the great Henley straight to the big show. Unless my memory fails me badly, it was to the Athletics that Henley went, and it was about thirteen years ago. Even at that early date, when hardly any other professional managers would look at a college player, Connie Mack had his eyes wide open as to their possible usefulness.

When Henley first went to Tech he played first base, and he played it well. He was about 6 feet 1 inch tall, but very slender. His arms were very strong, and he had a fine free shoulder swing. Rather a handsome chap, this Henley, and a good, jovial fellow. Came from the little hamlet of Jasper, I believe, in North Georgia, the section that also sent Craig Day and DeWitt Poole to Tech—two other awfully good players and pitchers, who, however, never went into professional ball.

After several years of usefulness in the big league Henley was sent to the Rochester club, where he put in a couple more years of good work. But for some reason, his health was steadily falling him and finally he had to give it up. Just where he is to-to-day, I can not say. I know he went to Florida for a while in search of improved health, and perhaps he found it; at least we all hope so.

At the time Weldon was at the zenith of his glory as a college pitcher, Mercer was turning out some exceedingly strong teams. Their mainstay on the mound was the unforgotten Will Gunn, now a successful architect in Macon. It will have to be given up that Gunn was some gun himself when it came to making a noise like a pitcher, and endless were the arguments of that day in rah rah circles as to which was the better. I am not going into a history of the friendly feud, but it is worth observing that when the two teams finally did face each other at old Brisbine Park, with their respective stars down on the score card to do the hurling, there was some crowd present to witness the ceremonies, and some little excitement was had. The game was won by Tech; score, 30 to 0.

* * *

ANOTHER great picher that Tech turned out about the same time that Henley was absorbing all the limelight, was little Jimmy Lavendar, now with the Chicago Cubs. It would perhaps be more correct to say that Tech turned Jimmy out, or that it turned out an engineer, not that it turned out another pitcher, for, at that time, Jimmy didn't play ball at all, at least he never went out for the varsity; and so it is merely an accident that his youthful career was in any way associated with Tech's.

Lavendar was born and reared in South Georgia. He had seen a picture or two of a baseball before coming to Tech, but didn't care enough for the game to even come out and try for the team. It was after leaving Tech that his acquaintance with the pellet grew into a thing of beauty; and, after slamming the sphere around corner lots for a short time, it was found that Jimmy had the makings of a really, truly pitcher.

It was while doing stellar work with the Providence team of the Eastern League that Lavendar attracted Chicago's attention. Now, Jimmy is one of the "its" of the Cubs, and promises to remain one for some years yet.

* * *

TWO Atlanta boys attending Tech were the next to break into the professional class, and they both made good from the jump. One of these was Sam Woodward, the other, Jim Ison. The former was captain and catcher of my 1904 Tech team, while Jim was official first-sacker of the same aggregation.

Woodward was rather small for a catcher, but he had plenty of nerve, heaps of judgment, always kept cool, had a fine arm, was quick as a cat, and made a fine lead-off man, as he batted from the port side. Sam's favorite word of encouragement to his pitchers—Poole, Day and Butler—was "Beauty" after every pitched ball, but each time in a different intonation and with varying inflection and accents—and this quite regardless, in my opinion, of whether the ball was really a beauty or a pumpkin.

Sam went to the Cotton States with Bernie McCay, where he played fine ball; but a blow on the head by a pitched ball came near to putting out his light. It took him quite a long time to recover. Later, Sam went to the Carolina League, and for several seasons managed the Anderson, S. C. club with signal success. He is now engaged in business in Atlanta and is making a success of life as president of the Woodward Electric Company.

By the way, during the college season of 1904, Sam caught every inning of every game without making a single error, and I gave him All-Southern catcher for it.

Jim Isom was one of the hardest-hitting first basemen I ever saw in college ranks. He was a godd, willing, cheery, all-around player and my clean-up man, which was some distinction with a team that had five men on its roster all batting over .400.

I forget what professional team Jim first joined, but he never had any trouble holding his berth right from the jump. He played several very successful seasons with Macon, where he again stung the pill hard, and he also starred in the Virginia League at second base for the Richmond club. Here he was an even better fielder than at first base.

Jimmy found an opportunity to go into a lucrative business here in Atlanta several years ago and decided to give up the game for good, though it cost him a pang or two to do so. Now, he is fat, happy and making money in the Gate City.

Later, I will tell of some other players Tech has turned out.

HAUSER GOES TO HOSPITAL.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 18.—Shortstop Hauser, of the St. Louis National baseball team, is on his way to Baltimore, where he will be operated on by Dr. William S. Baer, of Johns Hopkins Hospital. It is said that the player has a misplaced cartilage in his right knee.

MEEHAN BESTS MANTELL.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 18.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here. By constant clinching in the last round Mantell saved himself from being knocked out.

COBB BACK TO-DAY.

DETROIT, MICH., July 18.—President Ban Johnson announced that Ty Cobb, suspended recently for an argument with Umpire Hildebrand, will be back in the game to-day.

Best Bet Is to Play Champions

Title Holders Have Big Shade

By Left Hook.

HERE'S a little tip for the men who bet good con on the results of encounters in the boxing arena. Never stop betting on a champion of any class until he has been beaten. The suggestion of such a theme for a little fighting story is brought up by the manner in which the Joe Rivers supporters lost so heavily on the Los Angeles boy in his battle with Willie Ritchie, in San Francisco, July 4. Incidentally, the idea of it was brought out forcibly by some remarks that Battling Nelson made the day after the holiday while the famous iron man of the lightweight class was discussing results and congratulating himself on having picked six out of seven winners after having bet personally on three of them and failing to get down on the one loser that he picked.

* * *

IT is a foolish thing to bet against a champion, even if you don't like him personally and haven't such a high opinion of his fistic merits, because, according to Bat Nelson, champions always win a lot of battles in a row after they attain the title and have a big natural shade in all of their contests. The argument is a sound one, because champions, after annexing titles, do not make the kind of matches that they can not win—and they know they can win them when they make them. Mind you, this is not an intimation that there is anything wrong or any skulduggery practiced by any of them. But the average champion is a pretty wise sort of a gink. He knows that to keep a title is to make plenty of money. Hence, he figures with the greatest of care, and when finally he signs to battle, it's about 3 to 1 that he is going to win.

* * *

AND another thing worth figuring is that referees have natural leanings toward champions and don't take titles away from them without the very best of cause. Which is a mighty strong point in favor of the champion when he starts into action. But, of course, the strongest point of all is the fact, borne out by many a precedent, that champions almost always win a bunch of fights before being compelled to resign the top rung of the ladder.

NEW 'JIM CROW' LAW OFFERED IN SENATE

Provides Separate Cars in Cities of Over 20,000—Smith Verdict Bill Passed.

By a vote of 28 to 12 the Georgia Senate Friday morning passed Senator Smith's bill providing for verdicts and judgments at the appearance term of city and superior courts upon suits on unconditional contracts and verified accounts.

When President Anderson called for an yea-and-nay vote Senator Watts of the Eleventh, proposed an amendment providing that "should the boll weevil strike Georgia no debt of any kind shall be collected within ten years thereafter." The amendment was thrown out amid laughter.

The most important bill introduced in the Senate Friday morning was one by Senator Kea of the Sixteenth requiring all street railway companies in cities of more than 20,000 inhabitants to furnish separate cars for white and negro passengers and, in cities of less than 20,000 inhabitants to furnish separate compartments.

Nominations Confirmed.

Senator Sweat of the Fifth introduced a bill providing for the authorization of the execution of a lost or destroyed deed to be proved as to land in any county in which recorded.

The Senate in executive session concurred unanimously in the following nominations by the Governor:

Miller S. Bell to be a member of the board of directors of the Georgia Normal and Industrial College for six years, from January 6, 1914, for Baldwin County.

Ben M. Turnipseed to be judge of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 29, 1913.

P. S. King to be Solicitor of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 27, 1913.

S. H. Sibley to be judge of the City Court of Greensboro for four years, from September 17, 1913.

S. L. Drawdy to be judge of the County Court of Clinch County for four years, from October 28, 1913.

W. T. Dickerson to be Solicitor of the County Court of Clinch County for two years, from October 28, 1913.

Local Bills Are Passed.

Local bills were passed by the Senate as follows:

By Elkins of the Fifteenth, amending an act creating the charter of the City Court of Fitzgerald.

By Bush of the Eighth, amending an act incorporating the town of Colquitt.

By Sweat of the Fifth, amending an act creating a Board of Road Commissioners for Ware County.

By Parrish of the Seventh, amending an act creating the City Code of Statesboro.

The Educational Committee reported favorably on the free kindergarten bill, which probably will come up for passage in the House Monday.

PLAN POSTAL ORGANIZATION.

MACON.—The assistant postmasters of Georgia will meet in Albany on July 26 and perfect the organization of the Georgia Assistant Postmasters' Association.

Mediation Board Head a Georgian; Well Known Here

WASHINGTON, July 18.—President Wilson has selected William L. Chambers, of the District of Columbia, to be commissioner of mediation and counciliation, under the Newlands act, and G. W. Hanger as his assistant. Their names will be sent to the Senate to-day.

The other two members of the new board will be Judge Martin Knapp, of the United States Commerce Court, and Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

William Lea Chambers is a native Georgian and well remembered in Atlanta as presiding judge last fall in the arbitration under the Erdman act of the Georgia Railroad strike.

Judge Chambers was born at Columbus March 4, 1852, and received his education at Emory College, Oxford, from which institution he received an honorary LL.D. degree in 1909 in recognition of diplomatic and scholarly attainments. He taught school two years and was admitted to the bar in 1873. He married Laura Ligon Clopton, daughter of Justice David Clopton, of the Supreme Court of Alabama.

In 1888 Judge Chambers was president of the First National Bank of Montgomery, Ala., when he removed to Northern Alabama to head the association which founded Sheffield.

Judge Chambers was the American member of the commission under the Berlin treaty of 1890 between Germany, England and the United States; Chief Justice of the International Court of Samoa; was on the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, and is a member of the Alabama Historical Society, the Archaeological Institute of America and the National Geographic Society, etc.

Battle for Painter Organs Continues

BALTIMORE, July 18.—Today's session of the fight in the Circuit Court for the possession of the viscera of the late E. O. Painter, of Jacksonville, was taken up by efforts by employees of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, to show that representatives of that company had not been permitted to be present when the analysis of the organs of Painter was made.

It is likely that the case will continue for some time before Judge Duffy can hand down a decision on the petition of the guaranty company, in which the deceased was insured for $20,000, that a receiver be appointed for his vital organs.

SMALL INVESTOR CAN BUY FIRM BONDS NOW

B. C. Forbes Points Out Advantage Paper in Denomination of $10 Gives to All.

By B. C. FORBES.

The small investor of to-day, if wisely guided, will be a larger investor to-morrow, since Money makes money.

* * *

In America poor people have lost shamefully through being allured into gilded traps by unscrupulous promoters and "brokers." Swindling has cost the unwary upward of $200,000,000 in one year. It has been checked to some extent. The dissemination of correct information by newspapers and magazines has helped. The postal authorities have queered a good many clever games. In some States laws have been passed to severely punish stock swindlers and their kind.

* * *

The issuance of high-grade securities in small denominations has contributed invaluably to driving out fake stuff. There is to-day no need for even the smallest investor turning to worthless stocks and bonds, for he or she can buy the best in as low as $10 quantities. This development is of far-reaching importance.

* * *

Discussing the investment opportunities now within reach in the current issue of Hearst's Magazine, I point out:

"You can now buy $10 bonds.

"New York City has taken the lead in bringing the highest grade of security within reach of the most modest purse. The results that will flow from this innovation can not be fully grasped. It should, and probably will, mean that Americans, like the French, will become a nation of thrifty investors. In France the peasants can buy safe bonds of very small denomination, but in lordly, opulent, big-scale America nothing less than $1,000 bonds used to be issued, so indifferent to small investors were our railroads, our industrial corporations and our other large borrowers.

* * *

"So keen, however, has become the struggle for capital all over the world that even the proudest applicants for funds—governments, States, municipalities, railroad systems and trusts—are anxious to cater to those who have saved, not thousands, but hundreds or even tens of dollars. Of late $100 bonds have come into vogue.

* * *

"And now New York City is making a specialty of $10 bonds. Their yield is about 4 1-2 per cent.

* * *

"Now, 4 1-2 per cent is more than savings banks pay, and the risk is absolutely negligible. While those whose nestegg is very tiny can not do better than place it in a strong, carefully managed savings bank, the advisability of buying a good bond should be seriously considered by those who have accumulated several hundred dollars or more. On $1,000 the difference between 3 1-2 per cent and 4 1-2 per cent is $10 every year Not much, do you say?

* * *

"The difference in twenty years, at compound interest, would lay the foundation for a nice savings account for your son or daughter. One thousand dollars at 4 1-2 per cent compound interest become $2,000 in less than sixteen years, whereas money at 3 1-2 per cent takes more than twenty years to double itself. And remember that thrift begets thrift. Just as 'nothing succeeds like success,' nothing stimulates saving like saving. You can not begin a day too soon. The Government one day may imitate European nations by adopting old age pensions, but what self-respecting, healthy person would compare the satisfaction to be derived from his own savings with the feeling that would accompany a dole from the national purse?

* * *

"The buyer of one bond wants to obtain another as soon as he possibly can. Two $100 bonds paying 3 1-2 per cent bring $9 a year. Five paying 5 per cent—as many sound bonds do—net $25 each year, and, of course, this $25 interest helps to get another bond.

* * *

"The investor buys for income.

"The speculator buys for fluctuations in quotations.

"The investor seeks to avoid risk.

"The speculator 'takes a chance.'

"The investor in a safe bond is not hurt by temporary declines in the market price; his income is sure as long as the bond runs, and he can get full face value for it when it matures.

"The speculator's profits are not limited. He buys for possibilities and changes.

"Investment should be practiced by all persons of ordinary means.

* * *

"Speculation should be left to those who can afford to incur risks and to lose money, to those who have special opportunities for gathering and analyzing basic information, to those whose regular duties do not call for much time or thought—for speculation is insidious; it excites, it enervates, it distracts attention from other matters, it often unbalances judgment, it sometimes develops into a mania and ends in disaster. 'There are two classes of people who should not speculate,' said a wise man—'those who can afford it and those who can't.'"

Slays Rich Husband By Light of Match

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—The mystery in the death of Manuel E. DeValle, wealthy ranch owner, who was found dead in bed Wednesday, was cleared to-day. Mrs. Mary E. DeValle confessed that she killed her husband. She said:

"My husband lay on the bed jabbering in a drunken stupor. I could see him faintly by the half light of the moon. I lighted a match and walked until I was within a foot of him. Then I lighted another match, aimed my revolver and fired."

House Kills Inquiry Into Caminetti Case

WASHINGTON, July 18.—By a vote of 133 to 84, the House to-day tabled the Kahn resolution for an inquiry into the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave cases without allowing debate.

On a vote by tellers, the House favored tabling the Kahn resolution, 99 to 75, but Minority Leader Mann, starting a filibuster, secured a roll call.

Thursday's 97 Mark For Heat Threatened

With a record temperature of 83 degrees at 8 o'clock, as registered by he official thermometer, Friday promises to go Thursday one better along heat lines. According to all signs, Thursday's high mark of 97 degrees probably will be broken by at least one degree.

The weather man says there is little prospect of rain for several days.

War Veteran Sued For Balm by Girl, 16

PATERSON, N. J., July 18.—Miss Emma Mahanney, 16, has sued John Wolf, 70, a war veteran, for breach of promise.

Miss Mahanney's counsel said the couple became engaged and were making arrangements for the wedding when Wolf changed his mind. Miss Mahanney asks for $25,000.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Wheat traders regarded the market last night as a sale on all bulges. Speculation has dropped off some, however, and many traders think the market is in no condition to stand any heavy selling. Many of the local speculators are bullish on oats and bearish on corn. It was noticeable, however, that comparatively little new outside buying is coming into oats because of their recent slump when the trade was long, forcing out a large number of holders.

"Specialists believe that oats at present prices have merit."

* * *

Chicago drizzling rain, 68 degrees; Minneapolis clear, 68; Peoria clear, 76; no rain; Terre Haute clear, 80; Springfield clear, 78; no rain; Omaha drizzling, 70; half-hour good rain this morning; Kansas City, St. Louis, 85.

* * *

St. Paul wires: "The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, this morning says prospects in Minnesota for abundant harvest of all grains are excellent, according to D. A. Woods, of the Minnesota State University. He says the crops were not injured by the recent rains. He thinks the crop yield as a whole will average up about same as last year. Corn crop will be much larger."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co., says:

"Wheat—Map shows further rains in spring wheat country, with temperatures about the same as yesterday. It looks as though we might have a little lower market to-day.

"Corn—Temperatures east of the River are generally lower, but no rains reported in Illinois, except immediate vicinity of Chicago. Kansas City and St. Louis again show high temperatures, but it is cooler in Nebraska, with light rain at Omaha this morning. Look for lower market to-day, but would not press sales on decline.

"Oats—Market is showing steadier undertone, with moderate increase in outside buying.

"Provisions—Commission houses seem to have more buying orders, the selling being chiefly in way of profit-taking. Market continues very firm."

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "Corn prospects along Illinois Central, Chicago to St. Louis, very much mixed, but general average is poor. Kankakee to Farmer City good; thence to Springfield spotted, and south of Springfield poor; plenty of moisture to Farmer City, but from there south alternate streaks of rain and drouth.

"Tassel just beginning to show in few earliest fields, but growth will not average more than hip high, and south of Springfield there are thousands of acres not knee high. Oats harvest begun; best fields below average and crop is poorest in years."

* * *

The market was oversold and local crowd is covering short wheat. Slaughtee cable reports political complications in Austria and Russia and bad crops from England.

* * *

Carmi, Ill., to St. Louis, country very dry. Average corn promise in the poor counties and very good near St. Louis.

* * *

The thrashing reports on oats coming pretty bad and we believe it would be good judgment to at least cover and stay off the short side for a while.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.

PAY $9.60 FOR HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Another rung of the ladder was mounted by the hog market when $9.60 was paid for shipping grades. The stereotyped 5 to 10c advance was recorded and only trash had to sell under the 9c line. Eastern demand is setting the pace. Eleven markets had 68,000, against 66,000 last week. Cattle trade was nominally steady on a light run, but trade in the sheep house was demoralized, owing to heavy receipts direct to packers from the Ohio River.

STRONG SOURCES ADVANCE COTTON

Report of Deterioration in Texas and Bullish Mill Takings Frighten Shorts.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Influenced by weak cables and a bearish report by Cordill concerning conditions in Southwest Texas, the cotton market opened easy to-day, and first prices were unchanged to 3 points lower than Thursday's final. There was some covering on the decline by board room traders who went short on continued dry weather in Texas. This class of buying caused prices to advance 1 to 7 points from the initial level, with the exception of July and August, which increased their decline 2 to 4 points.

After the call, however, the entire list steadied with prices firmly maintained at the early high point. The strength of the market was chiefly attributed to some private reports from Texas indicating some deterioration in the crop; also Habersham King's review for the week, saying the crop was favorable over 80 per cent of the area and unfavorable over 10 per cent and injurious as to the remaining 10 per cent. The circular was more bearish than bullish, but the local shorts covered.

During the late forenoon the market was quiet and featureless.

The talk around the floor to-day reflected a decidedly more cheerful feeling with reference to legislative prospects. The weather map was considered favorable.

At the close the market was very steady with new crop positions at a net gain of 11 to 12 points; August 5 and July unchanged from the final quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Liverpool is droopy in futures and spots, the latter being quoted 3 points lower; sales only 6,000 bales.

Some scattered showers occurred over night in the lower central States, and the Atlantic Coast districts had some good rains; generally fair weather prevailed elsewhere, with little change in the range of temperatures. Indications are more favorable for some precipitation in West Texas, while increasing cloudiness and scattered showers are indicated for the territory east of the Mississippi River.

Several private reports from Texas say that old holdings are showing up on platforms, but that holders are not yet selling, owing to New York promises of high July-August squeeze prices. In respect to the present anxiety in regard to dry weather in Texas; it will be found interesting to know that Government records show that last year Texas had practically no rain from June 29 to August 29, whereas this year, Texas had a fine general rainfall up to July 5.

First trades here were at a decline of 3 points, but advices from New York of large buying by McFadden brokers soon rallied the market to 11.53 for October. There was a rumor that Fall River had cotton ready for delivery in New York and that a block of cotton was being shipped from Memphis for delivery here, but neither rumor has been confirmed so far.

The market is very steady with an eye on the weather in the West.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—Dry map seems responsible for the advance to-day. Central Texas reports no damage from drouth, but that rain is beginning to be needed, which seems sufficient in present limited market to cause small advance. Liverpool for the past two days was less active in spot sales and lower on futures, but American trade seems fearful that after so much good weather something is likely to happen.

Wool Beginning to Move More Freely

BOSTON, July 18.—New territory wools are beginning to move a little more freely both in and out of this market. Total sales the past week have been well over a million pounds, involving Territory and Texas wools, with a little California and foreign grades.

Fleeces remain very quiet, both here and in the country. Most of the Western buying is being done in Montana, where the bulk of the unsold Territory wool is now to be found. The London auction sales closed firm on fine wools and easy on crossbreeds. Indications are that England and the Continent are to have less active markets in the near future.

Until something more definite is known as to the terms of the new tariff bill when finally passed, no material improvement in sentiment or volume of sales is likely.

Receipts of wool in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

COTTON GOSSIP

Market dormant.

* * *

The volume of business transacted yesterday was perhaps the smallest of any day this year. Both elements are afraid to push their commitments in such a quiet market.

* * *

Boll weevil and the small stock of cotton is still discussed by the bulls.

* * *

Spot brokers are quoted with saying that the fear of a cotton tax is already diverting hedging business from this market to Liverpool.

* * *

Valdosta, Ga.: "Lowndes County has had good weather all along and crops are in the best condition they have ever been at this season of the year. Reports from some of the counties indicate that the drouth has done much damage to corn, but the cotton crop is in very good condition."

* * *

Texas City, Tex.: "Preparations are under way for the handling through Texas City next season of the largest movement of cotton the new port has ever enjoyed. It is conservatively estimated that in view of the large crop in prospect Texas City will handle in excess of 1,000,000 bales. This season to date 666,851 bales have been received and receipts to August 31, the end of the present cotton year, will probably bring the total near to 750,000 bales."

* * *

Taylor, Tex.: "With only a hundred or more bales of the 1912-1913 season's crop of cotton still remaining in the hands of producers of this section of Williamson County, the total local receipts of cotton at Taylor to date are 35,209 bales since the first day of last August. Ginners are overhauling their plants for the opening of the new season, beginning August 1. The first bales of the new crop are expected here about that time."

* * *

Reports to The Montgomery Advertiser last week indicated that as a whole the crop in Alabama looks well. Some sections report lack of rain. Where there has been rainfall, and there has been rain over the greater part of the State, cotton is reported in excellent condition, although the plant is reported late and much behind the growth expected for this time of the year.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows generally fair, except cloudy in lower central belt, parts of Alabama, Atlantic Coast. Scattered showers in Alabama and Mississippi and some good rains in Atlantic Coast districts. No rain in west. Temperatures about normal. Indications are far more favorable to a break in the dry spell in the west over Sunday. Increasing cloudiness, with some showers over the central and eastern belt.

Fort Worth, Tex., wires: "Our San Antonio agency says, 'Boll weevil danger minimized by heat spell. Little actual damage done. Crop looks splendid. Movement starts August 1, unless rain interferes.'"

GENERAL BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Possibilities of Big Advance in Near Future on Crop Prospects Causes Buying.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Canadian Pacific and New York, New Haven and Hartford were leaders of an upturn which involved a number of issues at the opening of the stock market to-day. Each scored a gain of 1⅞, although Canadian Pacific shaded at the end of half an hour.

Announcement of the resignation of President Mellen, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, apparently imparted strength to the stock instead of detracting from it.

The Mexican situation and continued hostilities in the Balkans furnished the bears with ammunition and a considerable section of the list was lower.

Among the advances were Amalgamated Copper, ¾; American Can, ½; Union Pacific, ¾; Southern Pacific, ⅝; Reading, ⅞; Pennsylvania ⅜, and American Smelting ⅝. The losses include New York Central, ⅛; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Chino Copper ⅛, and Great Northern preferred ⅛. United States Steel common was strong, opening at 54⅝ for a gain of ¾. Half an hour after the opening the list was strong, and an unusually large number of buying orders being executed. Later there was some profit-taking.

California and Mexican Petroleum were weak. California Petroleum sustained a loss of 3½ on reports that the dividends would be interrupted. Mexican Petroleum lost 2½ on account of the uncertainty surrounding conditions in Mexico.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were steady.

After the first fifteen minutes trading became similar to Thursday's dealings, most of the business being on the buying side.

Steel moved up more than 1 point and Southern Pacific rose 1 point to 93. Union Pacific, although the heaviest seller, lost its early gain of 1 point. Copper was up 1 point to 66⅞, and the same advances were recorded in Utah, Canadian Pacific and Lehigh Valley. California Petroleum experienced another decline, yielding 1¾ to 21¾. Call money loaned at 2¼.

The tone was steady in the last hour. A number of issues advanced over their noon level. California Petroleum held around 21¼ after being hammered by professionals. The bearish activity in this stock is regarded as a campaign on the part of the interested persons.

Union Pacific went to 148 for a net gain of 1⅞ on the day. Steel crossed 56. Amalgamated Copper was in active demand, selling around 67½ for a net gain of 1⅝.

The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

MODERN MILLER CROP REVIEW.

ST. LOUIS, July 18.—The winter wheat harvest is rapidly nearing completion under most favorable weather conditions. Reports of delayed harvesting are fewer than usual, and with the exception of occasional complaints of smut the quality of the wheat is practically perfect. The grain generally is of high order, not only as far as condition is concerned, but also in regard to flour-making qualities, the soft wheat especially yielding well.

CHICAGO, July 18.—A big export demand in wheat resulted in a reaction and an advance of nearly 1c from the bottom prices reached. Final gains for the day were ¼c to ½c. Only fifteen boat loads were reported by the Atlantic seaboard.

St. Louis reported a re-sale there of 110,000 bushels by an exporter, but the particulars were not given. Shorts were the principal buyers as the day wore away and there was a noticeable sprinkling of investment buying as well. Clearances from the seaboard were 307,000 bushels. World's shipments will be 10,000,000 bushels for the week, which is 700,000 bushels smaller than a year ago. Clearances for the week, 3,600,000 bushels of wheat, against less than half that amount a year ago.

Corn closed with advances of ¼c to ⅝c and oats were up ¼c to ⅜c.

Provisions were 5c to 10c higher.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Plan Now for Next Winter's Food Supply

Get Good, Wholesome Variety Needed in Cold Months, While Not Scarce.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

If you are not already planning, I would advise you to begin now to get some of next winter's food supply for the chickens on the way. While few fowls are ever starved, there are a good many that do not get the good and wholesome variety that they are needing, especially in the cold months, when green stuff is rather scarce. Wheat, oats and corn make the bulk of the food supply for the average farm stock, and it is a good ration, if properly handled and heated up at times, such as parching the corn and browning the oats, etc., but it is the rough-and-ready foodstuff that we want to speak of. As I shall want to speak largely of the root crops, and they need to be kept in a cool place, I shall advise the use of a cellar. Throughout the Northern States, cellars are the rule, rather than the exceptions, under all houses built on the farms. These are usually divided into two compartments, one for the keeping of milk and the other for the storing of vegetables and root crops of various kinds. Upon large farms, where there is a lot of stock kept, the barn is often built upon a side hill with a cellar under a part of it for the storing of stock beets, cabbage and all kinds of vegetables that can be used for the stock in winter. These cellars keep them from freezing in winter and keep them cool in summer so they will not spoil. Of course, they are not put into the cellar until the latter part of the summer. Throughout the South these cellars are a novelty, as a rule. I wish they could become more common. Of course, it is not always practical to build them under the dwelling house after it is built, but one can fix up a very good one by using refuse stone, where it can be had, and digging into the side of a hill, walling with the stone, letting it set into the ground as much as possible to make it cooler; the door, or opening, to be on the low side of the cellar. All of it should be roofed with a good, double or lined roof, something that will keep out the great heat of the sun.

With a root cellar of this kind upon your place, you are in a position to take care of all kinds of good tubers and vegetables of various kinds that might otherwise go to waste and be of no benefit in any way. It is not too late to plant the large sugar or stock beets if the ground is well prepared; thoroughly fine and very deep, so that they can take right hold and grow without difficulty. Then there is the rutabaga turnip that will make a good crop late in the season, which is a good keeper as well as the heavy beet. Small heads of cabbage that are not marketable, when put into small hampers that will admit of a circulation of air, can be kept a long while in the cellar.

The short parts of clover or alfalfa, leaves, etc., should all be saved and stored in a dry place in the barn for the poultry in winter. A lot of large gunny sacks come in very handy for this work, as this stuff can be crowded into these sacks where they are easily handled and taken care of until wanted. With a good, rich piece of ground a nice crop of buckwheat can be raised, if planted right now; it matures quickly and makes a grain that the hens are very fond of late in the fall and winter when fed with corn. Plant a good variety of all the vegetable crops, for there are very few of them that the hens do not relish and are ready to take care of the surplus or refuse parts of them. Onions are another good crop, and one that will keep well in this root cellar, and they are a regular tonic for the hens in winter and are very much relished by them. Take care of every one of them. Let us wake up to the possibilities of these crops and the proper handling of them, as indicated. The taking care of these apparently insignificant things and turning them to account will be largely responsible for the per cent of profit that we will make from our poultry during the coming year. Others take advantage of these things to good account; why not you?

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Permit Is Sought For Whitehall Plant

C. H. Johnson Will Build Manufactory—Small Sales Recorded—Crowd Due at Realty Election.

Signs point to early activity on Whitehall street as a wholesale and manufacturing thoroughfare south of Trinity avenue. Application was made Friday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays by C. H. Johnson to construct a two-story reinforced concrete building at No. 757 Whitehall, to cost $10,000. May & Wimbish are the contractors. The ground floor dimensions are 75 by 100 feet.

Builders who expected to put wholesale houses on lower Whitehall are holding up somewhat because of the Whitehall regrading project, but the manufacturers seeking railroad frontage farther south are going ahead.

Interesting Deed Given.

John W. White, administrator of the estate of Charles M. White, has given an administrator's deed to W. D. White on an undivided five-sixths interest in valuable property in Atlanta. The figure is $16,600, and for the same amount W. D. White has made a warranty deed to Mrs. J. C. Clay, T. A. and J. M. White, of DeKalb County, and John W. White, Harvey and Katie Baker, the first four of whom get a one-sixth interest each and the latter two one-twelfth each.

The properties consist of the following:

The southwest corner of Linden way and a 10-foot alley 160 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 93 feet; on Linden way 202 1-2 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 100; on Spruce street 100 south of Dixie avenue, 100 by 195; the northeast corner of Bell and Greene streets, 37 1-2 by 97 1-2; George street 75 feet north of East Fair street, 67 1-2 by 80; Old Wheat street 63 1-2 east of North Boulevard, 33 by 99, and Nos. 20 and 22 Raspberry street, 50 by 70, between Bell and Fort streets.

Pine Street Purchase.

Pierre M. Bealer has sold to Ralph J. McGruder the northeast corner of East Pine and North Jackson streets, 70 by 125, for $6,000. Four thousand was cash. For value received the parcel has been transferred to W. E. Treadwell and S. W. Carson.

West North Avenue Sale.

H. B. Watkins and D. J. Gunter have bought from Charles H. Sanford No. 164 West North avenue, 45 by 163, 42 feet west of McAfee street, for $5,000.

Fourteenth Street Transfer.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale May 15 of No. 278 East Fourteenth street to Dowse B. Donaldson from Marvin Conway for $5,000. The lot is 50 by 128 feet and 558 feet west of North Jackson street.

Building Delay Overcome.

Some months ago J. B. Thompson started excavating for three stores on Poplar street due north of the postoffice. Work was delayed, but now Mr. Thompson has been granted a permit to go ahead. The stores will cost $10,000.

Plans for Winnipeg Convention.

At the annual meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the Cafe Durand some definite plans for attending the Winnipeg convention will be discussed. The convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will be held July 28, 29 and 30, and twelve members of the local board are expected to go.

Atlanta is to compete for a cup presented by the Chicago Board in a report which Charles P. Glover and others will present. The attending cities will prepare these reports and the winner will be the city making the best showing. The judges have been named to decide the contest.

Return postal cards indicate to the officers of the local board that there will be a large attendance at Friday's dinner, inasmuch as the selection of officers for the ensuing year will be made. Charles P. Glover, retiring president, is expected to come in for encomiums at the hands of his fellow board members. Mr. Glover has served the board faithfully, and the real estate men have not forgotten the happy speech he made at the recent annual banquet.

College Park's Activity.

Spurred on by the struggles and successes of the Decatur Board of Trade and similar organizations, the citizens of College Park have decided to organize a citizens' committee-of-the-whole and to adopt a name suitable to such an organization. In this connection $25 has been offered to the public for a slogan. Anybody in the world, says the secretary of the board, can win $25 by revealing the secret that lies in a name. Suggestions must be in by July 31, because the board wants to get busy in its booster operations.

College Park is a town of 2,700 population, having jumped from 450 in 1900. It is the home of Cox College for women and the Georgia Military Academy. There are three public schools, five churches and plenty of nice places for people to live.

What IS an Opportunity for the Young Man?

There Are More Real Opportunities To-day Than Ever

(Copyright, 1913.)

We have received many letters from young men recently complaining of lack of opportunities. One in particular asked this question:

"Are the opportunities for the young man in the present day and generation equal to what they were twenty-five or fifty years ago—the days of his father and grandfather?"

It is a question that is probably asked in this country thousands of times every day. It is an important question to the individual. It is especially important to the nation. For the nation declines in which opportunities for the young diminish.

We feel that we can conscientiously and positively say that REAL opportunities are better to-day, both for young men and young women, than they ever have been.

Opportunities are greater BECAUSE POSSIBILITIES ARE GREATER.

Science, machinery, organization of all kinds, especially widespread publicity, have put into men's hands in less than fifty years a power undreamed of in the boyhood of our grandfathers.

Humanity and the individual are powerful, and their opportunities are great, in proportion to the machinery at their command.

Our opportunities were never so great as now, but this statement is made assuming that our correspondent means real and worthy opportunities.

Unfortunately, in this country, where sudden prosperity, great extravagance and uneasiness as to the future make money all-important, the word "opportunity" is apt to be a synonym for money. Money and opportunity are taken to mean the same thing.

But we purpose to answer this question quite apart from money.

Undoubtedly, the very able money-getter, no matter how humble his start, can build up to-day such a fortune an was unknown fifty years ago—or twenty-five years ago. There are young men without a penny that will earn (or, rather, more or less honestly ACCUMULATE) their hundreds of millions in the next few years, before the common sense of the country shall have realized the importance of regulating accumulation through increased distribution.

There will be, perhaps, fewer small, middle-class fortunes piled up, for there will be fewer men in business on their own account, thanks to the trusts.

Many men will earn very large salaries, ranging from $150,000 a year downward, and there will probably be very many more large INCOMES in the land within the next twenty-five years than there were in the last twenty-five years.

But when men earn SALARIES, they do not keep their money, and of the middle-class fortunes we shall have fewer.

But we trust that our correspondent will agree with us that money is a pretty mean measurement for opportunity.

What do the merely rich men really amount to? When they have been dead two or three years they are as unknown and forgotten as the pigs and chickens that they ate, the horses that they drove, or the flunkies whose time they wasted.

Opportunity means A CHANCE TO DO SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

And we assure our correspondent that the young man of to-day has a greater chance to do something worth while than a young man has ever had in the history of this country.

Our form of government is changing; the power has practically passed from the hands of the majority of the people into the hands of a majority of trust stockholders.

The young man who has genius and force, the ability to lead, and the character to refuse his share of the spoils, has a great opportunity to-day. It is the opportunity to return the government to the hands of those who are governed.

Working scientists are needed and sadly lacking in all the great departments of human thought. Every one of these new fields of intellectual activity, research and discovery offers unlimited opportunities to young men.

The newspapers, read by millions of human beings every day, enable the man who can think intelligently, the man who will be sincere and interesting at the same time to address (and, if he is able, to convince) a million or two millions of his fellow-citizens every day in the year. Was there ever a greater opportunity than this for influencing the thoughts of other men?

Every page of a scientific newspaper will show to the young man a glorious opportunity.

Every phase of our great industrial organization, every new development in the struggle of manhood against money, offers to the young man a great opportunity for public service.

The horrible poverty and wretchedness in the great cities, contrasting with ignorant and ostentatious wealth, offer opportunities unlimited to him who would help the poor to help themselves, to him able to cajole or frighten the rich into doing their duty.

This is the age of opportunity, but the young man must think for himself, strike out on his own line, make up his mind what to do, and stick at it, INSTEAD OF FOLLOWING ALONG THE USUAL LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE, doing the same as everybody else does, keeping at nothing in particular, and then wondering what has become of the world's opportunities.

Writes on The Metal Workers

From the Savage Who Raked From the Ashes a Crude Ball of Molten Mineral and Slag, With Which He Formed a Weapon of Defense, to the Safety Razor and Automobile, Metal is Supreme.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

II.

SOON after the British Parliament passed a law forbidbidding the cutting down of trees for fuel, Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition—in 1585—discovered iron in this country, and in 1608 a cargo of ore was shipped from Virginia to England and successfully smelted. In 1644, the first ironworks was erected near Lynn, Mass.

In 1740, Huntsman introduced the crucible process, and various mechanical devices were patented about that time, which materially stimulated the steel industry.

Bessemer's Process.

In 1838, the invention of J. B. Nielson—the introduction of a heated blast—caused a tremendous increase in output. This improvement was accompanied by Nasmyth's steam hammer, and in 1856 Bessemer gave to the world a process that was astonishing and remarkable. The discovery of the Bessemer process made it possible to produce steel at such low cost as to extend its use widely, and did much to supersede wrought iron in structural work.

Bessemer steel is now almost universally used for steel rails. The open-hearth system of Martin and Thomas, with the regenerative gas furnace of Siemens, supplies steel that is used in enormous quantities for all purposes.

Lately, science has again prevailed, and in the products of White and Taylor and Robert Hadfield we have steel that combines great malleableness with great hardness—a hardness that retains its cutting power even when at red heat.

And so we go marching on. From the savage who in wonder raked from the ashes of his fire a crude ball of molten mineral and slag, with which he formed a weapon of defense, to the safety-razor and the automobile of the twentieth century citizen, metal is supreme.

Carbon and Iron.

Steel is made by combining a certain proportion of carbon with iron.

The process determines its value and variety.

The most important of these processes are cementation, Bessemer and open hearth.

The first system consists of placing wrought iron between layers of charcoal in firebrick retorts. Yellow heat is applied for a certain period until the required grade of steel is obtained by the addition of the necessary carbon.

This is the steel from which edged tools are made.

The Bessemer process is directly opposite in principle to the cementation process. The Bessemer burns the carbon out of the cast iron.

This is done in an egg-shaped furnace known as a converter, lined with firebrick, and capable of being tilted. At the bottom, a number of tuyeres or nozzles conduct the air from a powerful blowing machine through the molten metal. This burns out the silicon and carbon, and after the alloy has been added and thoroughly mixed the metal is poured into ladles, and thence to casting molds.

The ingots are reheated and rolled into the forms desired for use.

In the open-hearth system, steel is made from a mixture of pig-iron and scrap-iron or steel, which is melted by direct contact with the flame in a regenerative gas furnace.

Steel Everywhere.

To follow these different processes—to see the ore—cold, dead stones—transformed into things of utility and beauty is a revelation and an education. We realize that the Missable Range and your wire fence are associated by applied gas. Steel is everywhere.

Circus horses, farm horses wear it for shoes. Wire rope in elevators, and in ships and mines—the telegraph and telephone wires, and all kinds of electrical wires—from the ignition wire in the automobile to the submarine cable. Aeroplane plates, boiler plates and castings. We sleep on steel springs and shave with a "safety."

We use nails and tacks, and the shafting for machinery is nothing more or less than big round wire!

We see all these things in the manufactured goods.

We talk of the tone of our piano, we boast of the wonderful speed, endurance and economy of up-keep of our autos.

We speak of cheap and rapid transportation; of our spring beds, our easy shave.

But do we ever associate these things with the men in the mills? I hope so.

:: Light and Candle-Power :-:

By THOMAS TAPPER

THERE are about 1,500,000,000 people on the earth.

Most of them are intent on getting.

A few are intent on giving.

The dynamo sends power along its lines of conductivity, and all the electric bulbs pour out light, each according to its candle-power.

If each of these bulbs was independent, if it could think and move for itself, the efficiency of the plant might fall considerably, for the individual bulb would then begin to act like a man.

Instead of remaining an agent for the distribution of power, it would be inspired by the ideas of the majority to let up on giving and to specialize on getting.

We can imagine a bulb throwing out its chest and wanting things. It might take a fancy to get a corner on dust and ashes. These are possessions through which the power can not shine; and while the bulb might easily work up a corner, it would soon find itself short on its main business of shedding light freely, plentifully and without obscuration.

Both Science and Religion are fairly agreed that a man is the end point of a line of conductivity which is attached to the great dynamo of the life of the universe.

He must be, then, by nature a distributor of the power that the dynamo sends into him.

HE HAS NO BUSINESS TO OBSCURE his light and weaken his force with the dust and ashes of life, for then the radiance will not shine through him.

HIS BUSINESS IS TO POUR OUT upon the world around him the great supply of power that flows into him.

This power, like electricity, plays many parts.

He can send it out as work-power, love, sympathy, generosity, health and so on through the whole list of things worth while.

And by so doing he is fulfilling his one natural function. He is strengthening himself for all time (now and forever) simply by using his power in the right direction.

In short, he has an advantage over the electric light bulbs, for he can use his candle-power to the limit, and by so doing increase it, instead of burning out the filament.

:-: MISTAKES :-:

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

GOD sent us here to make mistakes,
To strive, to fail, to rebegin,
To taste the tempting fruit of sin,
And find what bitter food it makes.
To miss the path, to go astray,
To wander blindly in the night;
But, searching, praying for the light,
Until at last we find the way.
And looking back along the past,
We know we needed all the strain
Of fear and doubt and strife and pain
To make us value peace at last.
Who fails, finds later triumph sweet;
Who stumbles once, walks then with care,
And knows the place to cry "beware"
To other unaccustomed feet.
Through strife the slumbering soul awakes,
We yearn on error's troubled route
The truths we could not prize without
The sorrow of our sad mistakes.

BROYLES CHARGES FALSEHOOD TO MAYOR

REVERSAL OF VERDICTS DENIED

Apologizes Also to Porcine Family for Likening Woodward's Legal Knowledge to Theirs.

Recorder Nash Broyles penned a polite note of apology to the whole hog family Friday.

With the same hand he picked up the cudgles with which again to belabor his honor, Mayor Woodward.

The Mayor, quoth the Recorder, was the author of a ridiculous and absurd falsehood and it was a regretable libel upon Mr. Hog to have to submit to a comparison with Atlanta's Mayor.

As for the Mayor, he declared he was tired of wasting verbiage on the Recorder and that he would have nothing more to say in their quarrel. He intimated, however, that he had it in his mind to override the Recorder again by pardoning another prisoner.

Here are Recorder Broyles' comments on the Mayor:

Apologizes to Porcine Family.

"I care nothing for the Mayor's abuse. Condemnation from such a character should be considered praise. But when he says that he Court of Appeals on May 23, 1913, reversed me in ten cases and sustained me in seven, he tells such a ridiculous and absurd falsehood that I now apologize to the hog to which I referred yesterday when I said the Mayor knew less about law than a hog does about political economy.

"The idea of the Court of Appeals passing one day upon seventeen cases appealed from the Recorder's Court of Atlanta!

"The records of that court will show that on an average there are not seventeen cases a year carried to the Court of Appeals, and they will also show that that court has sustained me in ten cases where it has reversed me in one.

Sees Attempt to Evade Issue.

"But the Mayor is, as usual, trying to sidetrack the issue between us. That issue is not my ability as a lawyer or a judge. I am content to let my record speak for me, but the issue is that the Mayor is protecting and pardoning the habitual and confirmed criminals of our city; is obstructing and defeating justice in our courts and impeding the officers of the law in their attempt to check crime in our city.

"And this is the issue on which the people at the next election will call him to account."

Mayor Woodward retorted that he had concluded his comments on Recorder Broyles, but that he practically had decided again to overrule the Recorder and issue another pardon.

Plans to Give New Pardon.

The situation is possible only because Judge Broyles made a mistake and imposed a sentence of 30 instead of 29 days, which puts the case in the jurisdiction of the Mayor.

G. Poulus, who runs a restaurant on Alabama street, was fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the stockade. The story that has reached Mayor Woodward is that Poulus discharged a negro boy and that the negro boy, being angry, reported Poulus to the police as selling beer. Poulos says he only orders beer from adjoining saloons and keeps it in his ice box for his customers.

W. O. Stamps, assistant secretary of the Grand Jury, said late Friday afternoon that the members of that tribunal had been summoned to meet on Monday by Foreman Battie. Mr. Stamps declared, however, that so far as he knew, the meeting was called solely to consider routine business, and stated further that he had heard nothing of the reported intention of the Grand Jury to consider the indictment of Jim Conley in connection with the murder of Mary Phagan.

FRANKFORT, GERMANY, July 18.—Aviator Westphal, of the German Army, was killed here today. His is the 299th death resulting from aviation tragedies.

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—King Brady, the veteran Cracker twirler, was to-day handed his unconditional release by Manager Billy Smith.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Ex-Governor Folk, of Missouri, expressed his view of the action of Secretary of State Bryan in going on the Chautauqua platfrom in a lecture here to-day, by the statement that, if Mr. Bryan spends his vacation on the lecture platform the country will be the better for it for he can keep the administration in touch with the plain people.

The country is far safer, he asserted, with a Secretary of State who can make his money that way than with one whose fortune has been acquired through connection with special interests.

CHARLOTTE, July 18.—The Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association adjourned this afternoon after re-electing President J. H. McLaurin, of Jacksonville, and naming Charleston and the Isle of Palms as the next place of meeting.

The convention to-day had a letter from its chief counsel, Walker Percy, relative to the injunction hearing now under way against the Association in the Federal Court at Birmingham. The Association goes to Reidsville Saturday for a barbecue to be given by the Penn Tobacco Company.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American club. Walsh will report immediately.

CRAWFORD'S SANITY NOW ATTACKED

Expert Declares Capitalist Was Not in His Right Mind When He Married.

That Joshua B. Crawford was insane at the time he married Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and had been entirely irresponsible for several months prior to that time, was the testimony of Dr. R. R. Kimes, expert on insanity and abdominal surgery, introduced by Attorney Joe S. James Friday morning in his effort to have the marriage annulled and the $250,000 estate revert to the heirs-at-law.

Dr. Kimes rendered his opinion in reply to a long hypothetical question and was excused without cross-examination.

During the taking of testimony another clash in the courtroom was narrowly averted. George W. Bolden, a character witness for Mrs. Crawford, threatened to thrash Attorney James unless he apologized for what the witness considered an insulting question. Colonel James declined to apologize and order was only restored when Colonel Anderson ordered the witness from the stand, and he was escorted from the courtroom by the lawyers.

"How do you know that Mrs. Crawford is a lady?" interrogated Attorney James.

Lawyers in War of Words.

"I demand that you apologize immediately for asking such a question," exclaimed Bolden.

"I will not apologize. I do not intend to take back anything that I say."

"You will take it back or I will make you, if I have to beat you to do it."

"You are at liberty to try that at any time you see fit."

Colonel Anderson, who had rapped several times for order, stepped between the attorney and the witness just as the latter got from his seat and started toward the attorney.

The Crawford heirs-at-law got to their feet and rushed to aid their attorney. Reuben Arnold stepped between them and with Colonel Anderson helped escort the witness from the room.

Anxious to Tell All.

Mrs. Crawford was anxious to go on the stand Friday and see the evidence from her side of the case go into the minutes of the hearing.

"I want to tell everything I know about the affair when I go on the stand," she said. "The other side has had everything its way so far, because all of the witnesses were for the heirs-at-law. It will be altogether a different story when Mr. Arnold and Mr. Smith introduce the witnesses we have. It will then be conclusively proved that there was nothing irregular anywhere except the groundless accusations that have been made against me."

Attorney James said Friday morning that he had been entirely too busy to take any official action toward having Fred Lump, the New York barber who is charged with being an accessory in the alleged poisoning, brought back to Atlanta.

"I will then get him back here in plenty of time if he remains in America," said Attorney James. "He would be of no particular use in this civil hearing, and that was why I didn't take steps earlier to get him back.

"At the first opportunity I will ask the Governor to give me requisition papers, and I will send a deputy to New York for him."

POLICE HALT GRILLING OF CONLEY

Detective Bent on Questioning Negro Is Barred From Cell by Chief Lanford.

With Pinkerton detectives taking the trail in search of W. H. Mincey, whose startling accusations against Jim Conley stirred the police department and won the negro another "sweating" from Solicitor Dorsey, the Mincey affidavit Friday became the storm center about which the prosecution and defense in the Frank case waged their battle.

Despite the degree of indifference with which the detectives and prosecuting officials affected to look upon the remarkable statements of Mincey, it became known Friday that every effort was being bent toward locating him and turning the light on his past history.

Pinkertons Have Clew.

It is understood that the Pinkertons have obtained information of Mincey's whereabouts, as it has been known since The Georgian published its exclusive story of the affidavit and later Mincey's detailed account of the significant happenings on the day of the murder that he was teaching school in North Georgia.

Although Solicitor Dorsey professes to be not greatly concerned over the effect that the Mincey affidavit may have in his case against Leo M. Frank, it is reported that his office is gathering character witnesses for an attack on Mincey's credibility.

Developments since the publication of the affidavit indicate that the prosecution feels it must absolutely discredit Mincey and his story if there is to be any hope of obtaining a conviction against Frank.

Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, was denied permission to talk with Jim Conley Friday morning when he went to the police station to see if he could wring any additional admissions from the negro. From the fact that Scott has been working in entire harmony with the city detective department up to this time, this incident led to the rumor that Scott had changed his theory of the crime and was inclined to place the responsibility upon Conley.

Defense Ready for Trial.

Scott refused to say to what extent his theories had been altered, if at all. Chief of Detectives Lanford explained that he had full confidence in Scott, but that the Pinkerton was in the position where he had to report all of his findings to the defense and he did not wish Scott to see Conley in these circumstances.

Attorneys for the defense said in regard to the report that the case might again be postponed, that they knew of no reason why it could not go to trial July 28, the date set by Judge L. S. Roan. They said that their side of the case was complete and that they were prepared to present it to a jury at any time.

As bitter a fight as that brought on by the Mincey affidavit is being waged by the members of the Grand Jury and the Solicitor over the question of investigating Jim Conley's connection with the Phagan murder, with a view of bringing an indictment. A number of the members are said to have declared themselves in favor of reopening the case because of the mass of evidence that has piled up against the negro since he confessed to being in the factory on the day of the crime.

The Solicitor, however, is unalterably opposed to any movement looking toward the indictment of the negro.

'LOBBY' CHARGED WITH SWINGING SALOON VOTE

Manufacturers Lined Up Brewers for Watson in Indiana, According to Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—How the National Association of Manufacturers lined up the brewers and saloon men of Indiana for the Republicans and Representative James E. Watson in his campaign for Governor was told in a letter written by Colonel Mulhall to F. C. Schwedtman, secretary to President Van Cleave, and read before the Overman lobby investigating committee to-day.

Watson, according to Mulhall's letter, was not so much afraid of the 30,000 votes the brewers could swing against him as he was of the $250,000 they would put into the last part of the campaign.

Accordinf to another letter Mulhall, the field agent of the "invisible government," assured "Uncle Joe Cannon that reports that the association was fighting him were false, and that the association was firmly supporting him.

Hines' Name Brought In.

Mulhall declared he helped Representatives Henry C. Coudrey and Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, who were re-elected by narrow margins, and also asserted he thought the association deserved the credit for their victories.

Edward Hines, of Chicago, said to have boasted that he "put Lorimer over," came in for notice in connection with a telegram to Mulhall in which he appealed for $1,000 to aid Representative Jenkins, of Wisconsin, and offered to supervise the spending of this sum.

"I don't consider Teddy, nor Taft, nor Sherman, nor Foraker equal to VanCleave, Parry, Kirby and the others who have given freely of their energy and their money to the great cause expressed in the principles of the National Association of Manufacturers," wrote Schwedtman to Mulhall August 28.

"Like John the Baptist."

"There will come a time when the world will know that the Parrys and the VanCleaves of to-day are like John the Baptist of old, speaking thoughtfully of events to come and condemning fearlessly the present wrongs, clearing the way for righteousness and honesty."

In an effort to prevent an enormous waste of time, the committee assigned clerks to examine the 123,000 letters in the file the association turned over to the committee, to cull out those letters which have the greatest bearing on the inquiry. It is proposed to keep Mulhall on the stand until all of the material correspondence has become a part of the record.

"A Glorious Dream," Says Evelyn Thaw

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—"Yes, it is quite true. I am engaged for the Victoria," Evelyn Thaw told The Georgian's correspondent.

"What about the rumored $4,000 a week salary?" was asked.

She shut her eyes, clasped her hands and said:

"What a glorious dream! If it were only true!

"What would my husband's creditors say? Poor, dear things! Don't raise their hopes that way."

Senate Motion to Probe Finances of Bryan Is Defeated

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The Bristow resolution asking the President to furnish the Senate with information as to the salary on which the Secretary of State could live comfortably was tabled to-day by a vote of 41 to 29.

Bristow charged the Secretary with neglect of duty, and asserted that Bryan should endeavor to reduce his expenses rather than increase his income.

"Is there any business which can not be attended to in Bryan's absence?" asked Senator Vardaman.

Bristow replied:

It has been said that the Department of State is better off when Bryan is away than when he is at home.

Severe Cough Led To Lung Trouble

Sufferers with Lung Trouble are rarely willing to acknowledge the fact. If you have a so-called "cold" that has long persisted; or a cough that keeps you anxious; or any of the symptoms of Lung Trouble, such as fever or night sweats, weakness, loss of appetite, or perhaps some raising of mucus, take Eckman's Alterative—as Mr. Bettersworth did:

Bowling Green, Ky., R. No. 4.

"Gentlemen: The spring of 1908 I had a severe cough for six months. I tried all the medicine that my doctors recommended to me, but no results came for the better. I had night sweats, and would cough and spit until I got so weak I could hardly do anything. But, at last, James Deering, of Glasgow Junction, insisted that I try your medicine. In one week's time there was quite an improvement in my condition, and after I had taken several bottles I felt as well as ever in my life. I desire the world to know that I firmly believe that your Eckman's Alterative will cure any case of lung trouble if taken before the last stage."

(Affidavit) A. C. BETTERSWORTH.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

Latest Nominee for Booster Emblem Honors Is Miss Helen McCullough of Peachtree Road.

Miss Helen McCullough, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. McCullough, 1110 Peachtree road, is the latest nominee in the "beauty button" contest. She is regarded by many as easily the prettiest girl in Atlanta and in the voting to name the girl whose face shall adorn the "500,000 club" buttons she promises to always be near the top if not at the top itself.

She is the third to be entered in the race, the nominations of Miss Mert Hancock, Ponce DeLeon avenue, and Miss Mary Carl Hurst, 62 West Twelfth street, having already been announced. The three make a bevy of beauty that is a marvel, each quite different from the other, but each striking examples of their opposite types.

Miss Hancock's beauty is dominated by the glow of her wonderful auburn hair. Miss Hurst is a vivacious brunette. Miss McCullough is a petite blonde.

Every day brings more life into the contest. The end of this contest will bring to a climax the movement to organize the "500,000 booster club." When the "prettiest" girl is selected the buttons for the club members will be ordered and the organization formally completed.

Who is this prettiest girl?

That is for the readers of The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American to decide. The voting coupons are run each day. If your favorite has not been mentioned nominate her and send in her photograph.

'Br-r-r, It's Too Cold' Workers Growl as Mercury Passes 95

With the mercury at 95 at 2 o'clock Friday, Councilman Claude L. Ashley, chief engineer of the Atlanta Brewing and Ice Company, had a magic change to the Arctic regions and such a laugh as but few people ever indulge in during weather like the present.

"The boys down in the lower cellars of the brewery are kicking," he said. "We are trying to wash out the cellars with hose, but it is so cold the water is freezing and the boys, with their heavy boots, are slipping so they can't work."

According to the weather man, there is more of the hot wave yet to come. He forecasts fair weather Friday night and Saturday.

A cool breeze Friday alone prevented the mercury from reaching a record-breaking height.

DESERTS FIANCE TO ELOPE WITH HIS RIVAL

Girl Marries Soda Clerk as Youth to Whom She Was Betrothed Gets License.

Leaving in her wake the bruised heart of a young man, an employee of a downtown shoe store, to whom she was engaged to be married Sunday night, pretty Miss Dollie Lumpkin, No. 456 Houston street, went to Augusta Thursday night and became the bride of B. D. Gunter, employed in a Whitehall street shop. It is said by friends of the bridegroom that the young woman's original fiance was en route to the Ordinary's office to obtain a marriage license late yesterday afternoon when he heard of the elopement of his bride-to-be.

Miss Lumpkin had been engaged to the shoe clerk for several months, her friends declare, and the date of the wedding had been set for next Sunday night. About two months ago Miss Lumpkin met Gunter and he fell in love with her.

From then on it was a race between Mr. Gunter and the other young man for the heart and hand of Miss Lumpkin. Gunter, being a strenuous young man, decided it was up to him to hurry matters along, so on July 16 he secured a marriage license from the Ordinary, and that night, it is said, he showed it to Miss Lumpkin and pleaded with her to elope with him. She consented. Thursday morning, therefore, Miss Lumpkin left her home, telling her mother, Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin, that she was going downtown to do some shopping.

Shortly before noon Gunter asked his employer for a day off. He said he was sick, but his smiles as he left the store nearly gave him away. He met Miss Lumpkin at Alabama and Whitehall streets, it is said, and they went to Augusta and were married there.

Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin refused to discuss her daughter's marriage Friday morning.

"I know she is married" the girl's mother said, "but to tell the truth I don't know whether she married Mr. Gunter or the other young man."

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Following an alleged joy ride in an automobile hook and ladder truck belonging to the Indianapolis fire department, Lieutenant Harold Love and Chauffeur Ralph Aldrich, of the fire department, were arrested to-day and taken to Shelbyville for trial.

Officers of Shelbyville lodged a charge of excessive speed while the joy riders were passing through that city.

Dougherty Should Worry; He Was Cool

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Not even a smile covered John Dougherty early to-day as he sat in the rear of 233 East Washington street, a square from police headquarters.

He didn't seem to realize that he was shocking the neighborhood. He sat on a box swinging his heels. It might have been the Garden of Eden and he might have been Adam, without even a fig leaf.

In a covering of wrapper paper he was taken to police headquarters charged with "loitering."

It was a hot night.

Tax Sales Ordered; First in Many Years

Through an investigation directed by Chairman Charles W. Smith, of the Council tax committee, it has been discovered that the city holds overdue tax liens on $41,000 worth of real estate in Atlanta. Chairman Smith has directed that this property be sold.

It has been many years since a sale of property for taxes was held in Atlanta. Much of the $41,000 covers small vacant lots, but some of the property involved is bringing rent.

BUILDING TRADES PLAN FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP

Healey Strike May Result in General Walkout—Low Wage Scale Claimed.

A fight against the open shop in the building trades section of the Federation of Labor that promises to be the hardest in the history of organized labor in Atlanta will be the outcome of the strike on the Healey Building unless a settlement is reached shortly.

International officers representing the fourteen organizations composing the Building Trades Council are either in Atlanta or on their way here. A meeting of the Building Trades Council will be held Friday night, when steps looking to a settlement of the differences or to arrange for a finish fight will be taken.

Officers of the building trades concerned in the controversy state that wages in Atlanta are 30 per cent lower than in other Southern cities, and they attribute this to the fact that in Atlanta alone is the open shop permitted.

The open shop as operated in Atlanta, according to the officers of the building trades, is that only that class of work requiring the greatest skill and which can alone be done by members of the organization is done by union men, while all other work is put in the hands of non-union men. In this way, the results to the contractor can be attained and the unions get the worst of it.

The strike precipitated by the contractors putting non-union men working on the cutting of the pipe for the electrical contract will mean a finish fight between the Building Trades Council and the contractors against the open shop, and may tie up work in Atlanta for some time.

The work on the Healey Building is at a standstill, not a sound being heard from the new skyscraper, and this silence may continue for many days unless the closed shop is accepted by the contractors.

HOKE SMITH, IN SPEECH TO GEORGIA ASSEMBLY, DEFENDS CUTS IN TARIFF

United States Senator Hoke Smith addressed the two bodies of the Georgia Legislature in joint session at noon Friday in the house.

Conspicuous throughout his address was the strong defense of the national administration, the keynote of which was prophetic of a period of unequaled prosperity throughout the Wilson regime.

Senator Smith declared that the Democrats to-day have enough votes in the Senate to pass the tariff bill. He said that nothwithstanding the cuts made by the national House, the Senate had cut still deeper, and made additions to the free list.

"For the first time in fifty years," declared the Senator, "legislation intended to take the burden off the masses of the people has found no resistance in the Democratic Senate. It must be conceded by all that the Senate Democrats have made the tariff bill more Democratic than it was when it reached the Senate."

Mr. Smith attacked the present vogue of vast distribution of charity by the wealthy men of the nation.

Prefers Taxation to Charity.

"I would rather see the National Government raise the money by income taxes and spend it for such causes than to leave the people indebted to men for great charities," he declared.

The Senator advocated States' rights in handling State problems. While his reference was to the California-Japanese situation, he made its application general by saying: "From the Californians' troubles the whole country is realizing the difficulties with which we have had to contend, and they are helping us make converts to the doctrine that we must be left to handle our troubles ourselves."

Senator Smith brought up for strong arraignment the Sherwood bill for an increase of United States pensions.

"The startling truth is demonstrated that the eleven Southern States have paid to Union pensioners of the War Between the States the entire value, in 1870, of their agricultural lands and all improvements thereon, together with their agricultural implements and live stock," he said. "I believe it to be the duty of your Senators to resist in every proper way an increase in the now already enormous payments for pensions of the Civil War."

The speaker also attacked the workmen's compensation act, now pending, declaring it to be a bill to save the railroad corporations from their just liabilities to injured employees.

Urges U. S. Road Building.

In advocating the excise tax bill, Senator Smith declared strongly for constitutional authority to pass an income tax which would proportion equally among the entire citizenship the expense of Government.

The Senator advocated national aid to road building throughout the country. He said the road-building question was at present before the Post-office and Postroads Committee of the Senate, and that his every effort, personally, would be to bring it through successfully.

Senator Smith went into the plan of tariff reduction fully. He said, in part:

"The Democratic party has undertaken to reform the tariff downward for the purpose of stopping, as far as possible, this system of legalized robbery. The plan of the Democratic tariff bill involves several different propositions.

Taxes on Luxuries.

"First. The raising of revenues.

"Second. The production of legitimate competition, to the end that fair prices shall be charged consumers.

"Third. No taxes, or the lowest possible taxes, upon the necessaries of life and those things used by the great body of the people.

"Fourth. High taxes upon luxuries.

"With the fullest praise for what the Democrats of the House did, I wish to say that the Democrats of the Senate sustained the reductions made by the House, and after investigations, made additional reductions of great importance.

"The House Democrats put flour upon the free list, but taxed wheat. The Senate Democrats put both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats put meat upon the free list, but taxed cattle. The Senate Democrats put meat and cattle both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats left a tax of 25 per cent upon cheap woolen blankets. The Democrats of the Senate put them upon the free list. The House taxed wool of the angora goat and alpaca. The Senate Democrats put it on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed flax and hemp; the Senate Democrats put them upon the free list.

Schoolbooks Duty Free.

"The House Democrats taxed pig iron, and steel billets, and ferro manganese. The Senate Democrats put them on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed textbooks. The Senate Democrats placed them on the free list.

"It is impossible to say just when we will vote upon the tariff bill in the Senate. I believe we will certainly vote before the end of six weeks, possibly in much less time. I do not think any considerable delay will take place in conference. I believe the differences between the two houses will readily be adjusted by the Democrats in the two bodies and the measure be soon passed with the approval of the Democrats of both houses."

On currency legislation Senator Smith said:

"The currency bill which has been introduced both in the Senate and in the House will free the country from dependence upon Wall Street. It will facilitate an increase of currency to meet especial demands for same. It will make a currency panic impossible. There are many features in the bill which I thoroughly approve. There are others which I believe should be changed. I think the Democrats of the House and Senate should make it as nearly perfect as possible, and then support it.

"There are features in the tariff bill against which I voted in the committee, but there comes a time when individual opinion must yield to the majority.

"Both the House and Senate Democrats placed jute bagging and cotton ties on the free list. Both placed wire fencing on the free list. Both placed agricultural implements on the free list, and what has been known as the farmers' free list, so much discussed two years ago, when passed by the House and rejected by the Senate, is now contained in the tariff bill which passed the House and which has been approved by the Democratic caucus of the Senate without a dissenting vote. And what I wish to say to you to-day is we have the votes in the Senate to pass the bill.

"Our farmers have been overcharged for the things which they are compelled to buy because of excessive prices maintained by the exclusion of foreign competition. It has been conceded that, while the government collected three hundred millions of dollars each year from the tariff, the industries in the United States, which the high tariff was intended to help, collected over a billion of dollars more from the people than they could have charged but for the exclusion of foreign competition. These burdens fell upon all the people of our State, but were especially heavy upon the farming classes, who in no respect receive any benefit.

Sees Era of Prosperity.

"I believe that the adoption of our new tariff bill will mark an era of prosperity throughout the country. The industries heretofore protected will not lose in the long run by competition, but, spurred through it to greater efforts they will seek their profits by broader trade; dependent not alone upon taking the dollars of their neighbors, they will reach into the markets of the world for the sale of their commodities.

Lauds the President.

"No currency system would be complete that did not take into consideration the importance of farm credits. Thorough study is now being given to this subject, and I believe in the near future action will be had by which rates of interest charged to farmers may be reduced and increased facilities given for farm loans.

"In conclusion, let me remind you that the last time I spoke in Georgia was at the Auditorium when I presented Governor Wilson to the people of the State. I assured the audience of his purpose and ability to serve, and of his strength as a candidate. We made no mistake when we nominated him. We won the fight for the Democratic party. The people of the country made no mistake when they elected him."

ACCUSED WIFE IS RIDDEN ON RAIL BY WOMEN

Victim Then Is Ducked in Mud Puddle and Forced to Flee Illinois Village.

POLO, ILL., July 18.—Suspicious that Mrs. Minnie Richardson, wife of the crippled keeper of a general store here, was more than friendly with her brother-in-law, Will Dunnill, the village stonemason, a band of women of the village kidnaped Mrs. Richardson from her home, rode her on a rail through the town and dumped her in a mud puddle.

After the mud bath they gave her 24 hours to leave the village. Richardson mortgaged his store for $1,500 and gave her money to pay her railroad fare.

When the men of the town went to Dunnill's home, he was not there and his wife said he had left the town. She had mortgaged her home to get money for him.

Mrs. Peter Stansfield, wife of the blacksmith, who was captain of the women "vigilantes," said that the conduct of Mrs. Richardson and Dunnill had been the subject of comment for nearly a year.

The women planned to capture Mrs. Richardson and the men were to take Dunnill, and the rail-riding party was to be a "double-header." The men failed to find their victim and Mrs. Richardson rode alone. The men stood on the sidewalks and cheered.

For ten years Richardson, who is a paralytic, has gone about in a wheel chair. He said to-day:

"They were pretty rough on my wife, but I guess she had not done right. I don't believe she will ever come back."

LEAVE TO WED IS DENIED COUPLE IN VICE NET

Joe North Held to Grand Jury as Slaver—Girl Is Sent to Martha Home.

Despite the pleadings of his aged mother and of Effie Drummond, the girl in the case, who asked that she be allowed to marry him, Joe North, caught by Chief Beavers' vice squad in a raid on the boarding house of Mrs. Lulu Bell at Fair and Peters streets, was held to the Grand Jury by Judge Broyles Thursday, in the sum of $200. The charge, which from the first story told by the Drummond woman, promised to develop into white slavery, was changed to disorderly conduct.

The girl, who when first arrested told her story freely to Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles, testified against North Thursday afternoon with reluctance. She at first denied that she knew North, and the next moment admitted having lived with him as his wife, both at his mother's home and at Mrs. Bell's, to which latter place she says he induced her to go.

"You say you don't know him, and yet you admit that you lived with him?" demanded Recorder Broyles.

"Well," the girl stammered, "I guess I 'kinda' know him!"

Both North and the girl asked that they be allowed to marry. The girl told Judge Broyles she had been married once before, in South Carolina, but had got a divorce in that State.

"You didn't get a divorce in South [illegible]lina," said the Recorder. "The laws of that State do not permit divorces."

"Well," the girl hesitated, "I think my husband's dead, anyway."

"You only hope he is dead," retorted Recorder Broyles. "You can't marry this man until you get a divorce."

North's mother pleaded that her son be placed on probation, but Judge Broyles refused. The girl was sent to the Martha Home.

Church Folks at War On Clubs in Macon

MACON, July 18.—The Law Enforcement League has begun a campaign looking to the extinction of the saloon and the social club in Macon. Three test cases have been made against two saloons and a club, charging them with being nuisances in that they are "blind tigers."

If Judge Mathews grants petitions for injunctions, which will be heard on August 1, similar proceedings will be instituted against every saloon and club in the city. Petitions for injunctions were signed by 45 citizens, including the Revs. W. N. Ainsworth, J. L. White and C. B. Currie, representing the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches.

Papal Guards' Wine Supply Cut; Mutiny

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ROME, July 18.—A mutiny among the Vatican Swiss guards—the second within four days—occurred to-day. Upon orders from Pope Pius X the soldiers were seized, disarmed and placed under arrest. They were replaced by gendarmes who may remain as the permanent military police at the Vatican.

Attempts to curtail the wine supply of the Swiss guards led to the disaffection. Hitherto the guardsmen were allowed an unlimited supply of wine.

Dies at Auto Wheel; Wife Averts Crash

KENOSHA, WIS., July 18.—Mrs. Frank J. Eaton, while riding with her husband, felt the automobile turn from the roadway as they were going 25 miles an hour. She saw her husband was not holding the wheel. Catching it as the car was on the edge of an embankment, she brought the machine back into the roadway and stopped it.

Her husband had died of heart disease.

TO BUILD BIG RESERVOIR.

COLUMBUS.—The Columbus Water Supply Company announces that it has purchased land on Factory Hill, north of Columbus, where it will construct a 5,000,000-gallon storage reservoir, a filtering plant, settling basin and pumping station.

2 BUSINESS MEN POLICE NABBED PLAN FIGHT

M. F. Smith and B. F. Glenn Likely to Make Charges Against Officer Milam to Board.

M. F. Smith, vice president and secretary of the Eagle Stamp Works, and B. T. Glenn, manager of the Old Mill Theater, Whitehall street, who were taken to headquarters by the police Wednesday night after they had carried Miss Mabel Parker, a chorus girl, to Grady Hospital, in a semi-conscious condition, probably will appear before Chief Beavers Friday and ask that the Chief and the Police Commission investigate their arrest.

Smith and Glenn deny that they were responsible for the girl's condition. They declare the woman went into convulsions when she received a telegram that her brother was dying. They say they called a physician, who administered chloroform to quiet her, and left. The woman's hysteria continued, and Smith and Glenn then took her to Grady in a cab.

Officer Milam was at the hospital when the girl was brought in and he took Smith and Glenn to headquarters, where they were released after being questioned by Assistant Chief Jett and Captain Terry. In his report Officer Milam states that the girl was clad only in a thin gauze nightdress.

Chief Beavers stated that he will investigate the case, and it probably will be brought before the Police Commission at the next meeting. Police officials declare that Milam only did his duty.

FACTS IN MEXICO DEMANDED BY PRESIDENT

Ambassador Scored for Incomplete Reports to U. S.—Mystery in Diaz's Trip to Japan.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—In preparation for the arrival of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, now on his way from Mexico, President Wilson today requested the State Department to furnish him with all the information relative to the troubles in Mexico from the beginning of the Madero revolt.

This mass of material the President intends to read thoroughly, so he will be informed as to all the developments of the Mexican situation before the arrival of Ambassador Wilson.

Secretary Bryan, who returned from the first lap of his Chautauqua lecture tour this morning, called on the President, bringing a large bundle of telegrams and correspondence.

Hale Sends Information.

They included dispatches from William Bayard Hale, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico City, who does not consider the Huerta regime stable, and has advised against recognition.

Suspicions of the sincerity of the representations made by several European nations have been raised in Washington by the trail of high finance running through them all. Allegations are made that the crisis is nothing more nor less than a "bondholders' conspiracy" engineered from Paris.

Diaz May Visit Japan.

The President does not hesitate to criticise Ambassador Wilson for failing to sustain any fixed or definite conclusions in his dispatches to the State Department. Other consular and special agents of the United States in Mexico have been equally indefinite in the information they have sent to the State Department.

A proposed trip of Felix Diaz to Japan is causing speculation at the State Department. At this time his presence in Japan would serve to renew the efforts of the jingoes to create a strong anti-American feeling there. The proposed trip has renewed reports that Japan is negotiating for a naval base on the western coast of Mexico.

Secretary of State Bryan announced that he had canceled his lecture engagements for the greater part of next week and would be in Washington all the time that Ambassador Wilson is here.

Following the Cabinet session several members of the President's official family stated that the Cabinet is a unit in supporting the chief executive's policy concerning Mexico, particularly as regards the non-recognition of President Huerta's Government.

Arsenal Stores at U. S. Forts on Gulf Increased.

MOBILE, July 18.—Large shipments of projectiles and ammunition are being unloaded at Fort Morgan, at the entrance of Mobile Bay, and at Fort Barrancas, Fla., ccordaing to reports brought to Mobile by artillerymen.

Drilling with the big guns has been going on steadily at both of these important naval bases.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

Mr. J. E. Greene says the secret of his success is in good health, and the secret of his good health is in Nuxcara. He like every big-hearted, successful man, delights in telling the world about Nuxcara, the only cure known for indigestion, dyspepsia and catarrh.

J. E. GREENE.

Atlanta, Ga., June 6, 1913.

Dr. Kelly, Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sir:

Some months ago I had what I thought was heart trouble. My heart would skip for an hour or more, and often every third beat. This was especially noticeable after eating. I consulted several physicians, but got no permanent relief. I chanced to pick up one of Dr. Kelly's books on "Nuxcara," and soon found I had been treating the wrong complaint. I bought a bottle of Nuxcara, and got some better, and, after taking about half a dozen bottles, I was entirely relieved of all heart troubles, as well as indigestion. I have not had a return of this since, and I consider Nuxcara one of the greatest achievements in medicine for the troubles it is recommended to cure.

Yours very truly,

J. E. GREENE,

CHIEF, WITH HAMMER, SMASHES SEIZED GUNS

Beavers Pounds Away in Broiling Sun Until He Has Destroyed Seventy-five Pistols.

Chief Beavers, faithfully following the ordinance passed recently by Council, smashed away in the hot sun Friday with a sledge hammer until he had destroyed more than 75 unclaimed revolvers and pistols which have collected at police headquarters during the last few months.

The Chief chose for the ceremony a time when the mercury was flirting with the 95 mark. Perspiration poured down his cheeks before he had swung the heavy hammer a half dozen times, but he kept on until every weapon had been converted into scrap.

The revolver smashing is one of the methods by which the authorities are waging war against the "pistol toters," and is designed to break the endless chain by which criminals are supplied with weapons. Formerly the weapons taken from prisoners were saved for a few months and then sold at low prices to the pawnshop proprietorsw, who in turn sold them back to the criminals.

The first smashing Friday resulted in the destruction of nearly $1,000 worth of weapons. Chief Beavers carefully examined all of the revolvers for cartridges before undertaking his task. When done, he mopped his face and became the auctioneer in the "ole hoss" sale of knives, bicycles, umbrellas and an accumulation of other unclaimed articles.

Dr. Wilmer Tells Committee Some of Its Chapters Are Unfit for Public Reading.

Declaring "there are lots of chapters in the Bible unfit for public reading," Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, opened the fight against the proposed bill requiring the reading of the Bible in the schools of Georgia in the Senate Education Committee hearing Friday morning.

Following the debate which was listened to by scores of persons other than Senators, a motion for a further hearing next Tuesdayafternoon at 3 o'clock was adopted.

Dr. Wilmer, who spoke for twenty minutes, followed other speakers representing both sides, including Dr. Dunbar Ogden and Dr. Little of the Presbyterian Church, favoring the measure with an amendment, and Carlyle Haynes, a representative of the Georgia Religious Liberty Association, opposing it.

HOUSE RATES SLASHED IN TARIFF ACT REPORTED TO SENATE; TRUSTS HARD HIT

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The report to Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee on the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate, was placed before the Upper House at noon to-day, and debate on the measure immediately was begun.

The report is largely devoted to defense of the Senate Democrats' action in reducing rates under the original House measure and to extensive tables showing the percentage and effect of these rates.

In a brief introduction, Senator Simmons declares that the Senate bill, if enacted into law, "will result in an equitable distribution of burdens and incidental benefits of the Payne-Aldrich system of customs taxation that will tend to disintegrate monopolies built up under a protective tariff; that will reduce the cost of living; that will increase the opportunities of the individual citizen and relieve the people from the burdens of a former scheme of taxation."

Rich Trusts Only Hit.

The Senator points out that the interests hit by the reduction of duties under the House bill are in almost every instance trusts which have grown rich under a high protective tariff. Among these are the steel, aluminum, cement, callera, asphalt, Standard Oil, sugar, wool and paper trusts.

To counteract the millions in import revenue lost to the Government through the admission of foreign markets under a free list or reduced rate of tariff, taxes have been placed upon bananas solely controlled by a trust, upon gambling in cotton futures, upon the incomes of the rich, upon brandies used in fortifying wines and upon luxuries in general.

The total outcome of the Senate tariff labors is a decrease of 27.64 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates and of 4.22 per cent under the House tariff rates. Nevertheless, the report predicts that the business of the Government will be run at a profit.

Total Revenue $996,810,000.

The official figures, based upon compilations of Treasury experts for the fiscal year 1913, place the total revenue, exclusive of the possible revenue from the Panama Canal, the sinking fund and the national bank note redemption fund, at $996,810,000, against an estimated disbursement of $994,790,000 for the same period. This would leave a surplus of $2,020,000.

Concerning the steel schedule the report says:

"Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material; it has the use of abundant capital; it is able to export in competition with foreign countries; and the industry has the advantage of low costs. For all these reasons it may be regarded as well fitted as an industry, capable of standing tariff rates figured on a strict revenue-producing basis."

Keynote of Its Defense.

This summarizes the keynote of the Senate tariff reductions in almost every case where they affect trust-controlled products.

A slight reduction has been made in the cotton schedule where the commodities so treated are in common use. The reclassification of this schedule does not affect the House rates materially. The report says that "inasmuch as silk is a luxury, it is liable to the highest possible duties." This policy was maintained in treating luxuries.

The income tax amendment is explained at length, the report giving specific quotations from the text of the bill relating to the change from a flat income assessment based on $4,000, to a sliding scale, which would make the unencumbered single man liable to assessment on an income in excess of $3,000, while the married man or woman with a dependent wife or husband shall have his income exempted up to $4,000 if he have minor dependent children.

House Tax Called Unfair.

The report characterized the House income tax as "unfair to a large class of moderately wealthy people."

The many changes made in the administration feature of the bill were explained on the ground that the clauses of the Underwood measure were "somewhat confusing" and that it was thought best to leave the administrative features substantially as they were in the Payne-Aldrich measure until a joint committee of the two Houses "could revise, codify and simplify" this section of the bill. This is to be done by January 1, 1914.

The changes in the administration section include the omission of the 5 per cent reduction of goods imported in American bottoms; the inspection clause and the unit dumping clause.

Scores Gambling in Futures.

With regard to the revenue raising tax on gambling in cotton futures the report characterized this practice as an "evil," and said the tax was imposed to deter, in some measure, the activities of those who resort to cotton exchanges for the sole purpose of speculation.

Inasmuch as the tax is refundable, where an actual delivery of cotton is made, it is not thought that it will seriously affect legitimate trade.

The report predicts that the retaliatory clause in the Senate bill "will effectually put in the hands of the President a weapon with which to bring about equable arrangements with countries which do not afford the United States fair treatment."

Senate's Changes In Tariff Measure

The salient features of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate Democrats are:

Reduction under the Payne-Aldrich duties, 27.64 per cent.

Reduction under House tariff bill, 4.22 per cent.

Estimated revenue from Senate measure during fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to be $2,020,000 over estimated disbursements for same period.

The customs duties from the Senate bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, less sugar, are estimated at $173,250,000.

Duties on imports under the Payne bill for two months, exclusive of sugar and wool, $40,650,000.

Duties on sugar eight months under Payne bill and four months under Senate bill, $47,000,000.

Duties on wool under Payne bill for five months, $5,830,000.

Revenue from tax on cotton future gambling, $5,000,000.

Revenue from wines, brandies, six months, $750,000.

Revenue from income tax, ten months, $58,330,000.

Total revenue from Senate bill, $330,810,000.

Free listed products in Senate bill amount to $147,367,000 in imports, as against $103,000,000 in House measure.

Following market basket products added to House free list: Wheat, eggs, lard compounds and lard products and domestic animals used for food.

Among the trusts hit are those controlling steel, aluminum, cement, cameras, Standard Oil, asphalt, sugar, wool, bananas and paper.

The provisions of the income tax are figured as dating from March 1, 1913, instead of January 1, 1913. The operation of the brandy tax was also deferred.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Mayor Harrison to-day ordered city detectives and policemen to take a look into all baby carriages being pushed about by women and see if there is a real baby in each of them.

The order was the result of a new plan adopted by women of the streets. The baby carriages they push contain rag dolls, but they have succeeded in giving the police the impression that they were respectable mothers, taking their infants for an airing.

Boy Says He Was Lured to Aid Thief

This was the statement of Mayor H. H. Rose to 400 policement regarding what he expected of them during his administration.

Leaps in Ball Gown Into Ocean on a Bet

ATLANTIC CITY, July 18.—A pretty girl visitor late last night jumped from the steel pier into the ocean. She was attired in ballroom costume. She was hauled out of the water and whisked away in a waiting automobile.

After an all-day investigation, the police have learned that the girl made a bet on the beach with members of her "crowd" that she would make the leap. The forfeit was a theater party and champagne supper if she didn't do it before midnight. She won.

FRAUD USED NAME OF GEORGIA MAN

Government Accuses New York Promoter of "Wallingford" Operation in the South.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Edmund Willcox, accused by the Government as a "get-rich-quick Wallingford" in real life, but who claims he has reformed and has been leading a new life with his wife and three children in a modest East Side apartment, was arrested to-day by postoffice inspectors.

Until two years ago Willcox had an office in the Metropolitan Tower, where he posed as a promoter of railroads, banks and mills. When he learned that any new company was being formed, he wrote to the promoters offering to float the stock. After obtaining a retaining fee, it is alleged, nothing more was heard from him.

The specific charge against him is that he obtained $1,000 from Comer L. Peck, of Starke, Fla., who operated a 38-mile railroad line between his home town and Jacksonville.

Willcox claimed, according to the Government charges, that one of his clients, Colonel James M. Smith, of Smithonia, Ga., who owns 100,000 acres of land in Florida, had been persuaded by him to buy 20,000 shares of stock of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Georgia, at $102 a share. Colonel Smith denied that he knew Willcox, and the Government began an investigation.

DR. MERRITT NOT ASKED TO RESIGN

Expressed Desire, However, to Leave Battle Hill—Change in Management Expected.

Dr. S. W. Merritt, superintendent of the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, has not been asked to resign, according to statements made Friday by the city officials who are over him. But Dr. Merritt has expressed a desire to leave the institution, and a change in management is anticipated about September 1.

The matter reached a climax when Jesse Shelton, a patient, complained that he had received rough treatment. Mayor Woodward asked Dr. J. P. Kennedy and Dr. Claude A. Smith to investigate the case. It was then that Dr. Merritt declared he did not like the situation, and it was tentatively agreed that a change be made in superintendents.

The committee, however, did not override Dr. Merritt in his discipline of Shelton.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

WAR CHIEF SAYS M'PHERSON IS VITAL POST

Atlanta Army Men Elated Over the Favorable Impression Fort Made on Garrison.

Local army officers are jubilant over the praise bestowed upon Fort McPherson by Secretary of War Jindley M. Garrison Thursday, when, with Major General Leonard Wood and Major General J. B. Aleshire, he made an inspection of the post. It is regarded as practically certain that Secretary Garrison will repeat the recommendation of a year ago that the local post be made a brigade headquarters, which would mean several additional regiments of soldiers would be quartered at Fort McPherson.

"Everything at Fort McPherson is admirably conducted," declared the Secretary. "Such a post is a credit to our country. The strategic position of the Atlanta post is valuable."

Both Secretary Garrison and General Wood said they could not state definitely whether the local post would be made a brigade post, but intimated such a step is likely.

"Nothing definite will be given out until after Secretary Garrison has completed his tour of the 49 posts of the country," said General Wood. "However, we have always regarded the Atlanta territory as important because of its strategic position."

Secretary Garrison's party, including General R. K. Evans, Colonel Barth, Lieutenant Tucker, Colonel VanOrsdale and others, were entertained at the home of Clark Howell and the Piedmont Driving Club Thursday afternoon. Secretary Garrison left Atlanta at 5:10 o'clock, and to-day is inspecting Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga.

Garrison Inspects Fort Oglethorpe.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—Secretary of War Garrison, accompanied by Major General Aleshire, quartermaster general, inspected the quarters of the Eleventh Cavalry at Fort Oglethorpe this morning and visited the site of the proposede brigade post at Chickamauga Park.

Secretary Garrison and his party arrived from Atlanta last night and will leave to-night for Little Rock. An open-air dinner will be tendered the distinguished guests to-night at Signal Mountain Inn, on Waldens Ridge, by the Chamber of Commerce. A breakfast was tendered early this morning at the Commercial Club.

Lunatic's Bequest To Alfonso Upheld

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 18.—The civil court at St. Gaudens upheld to-day the validity of the will of Albert Sapene, formerly Mayor of a small town near Toulon, who bequeathed $500,000 to King Alfonso of Spain.

Sapene, who was an ardent royalist and a great admirer of the Spanish King, died in an asylum. His sister sought to have the will set aside on the ground that Sapene was insane when he made it.

Senators' Swimming Match in Demand

WASHINGTON, July 18.—When Senator Pomerene challenged Senator Owen to a swimming match and the latter accepted they did not realize that so many persons were interested in Congressional aquatic sports. Enterprising persons have sought to induce the Senatorial swimmers to make it a national event.

One offer came from the manager of a resort near New York, who assured Senator Owen "he would have a crowd of spectators larger than could be gathered anywhere else in the world."

GEORGIA'S PEACH CROP SHORT, BUT 'PEACHERINOS' STILL ARE PLENTIFUL

Crop Now Moving (Via Railroads and Up and Down Peachtree) Sets Quality Record.

The movement of what is reported as the best crop of peaches ever grown in Georgia is now in full swing up and down Peachtree street and via railroad to the East.

H. B. Marks, secretary-manager of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, who claims to know all about peaches—that is, the edible kind—declared Thursday that the crop, while a light one, was bringing the highest prices ever known.

Miss Danese Milhous and another peach.

"Peaches are selling at from $2.30 to $2.50 f. o. b.," said Mr. Marks. "More than 1,000 cars have already been shipped, most of them going to New York, being divided between New York, Philadelphia and Boston. 'Georgia Belles' and 'Elbertas' form the bulk of the shipments.

"A sharp frost caused a short yield, but the high prices which the peaches are bringing more than make up for this."

The "peachy" girls are here in abundance, however, and even the hot weather is not driving all the Atlanta beauties to the cooler summer resorts. Miss Danese Milhous, one of the prettiest of the younger Atlanta girls, was snapped just as she was beginning to eat one of the first of the North Georgia grown peaches to arrive in the city.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Cool.

There are two wonderfully popular things about the Forsyth these days—a mighty inviting and cool place of recreation and the bill for the week is of exceptional value.

Valerie Bergere proves every right to the claim that she is the star of all dramatic artists that have adopted vaudeville. She is presenting a new playlet that deals with the crook idea. She appeals to a judge to save her husband, who has been convicted on circumstantial evidence, and convinces the judge, by a keen trick, that circumstantial evidence is a mighty bad thing to count too much on.

Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, is scoring the hit of his young life, and the Metropolitan Minstrels prove to be one of the best drawing cards the Forsyth has had. There are pretty girls and clever boys in this act.

John F. Conroy, the world-famous lifesaver, and his diving models will be the star attraction for next week, presenting what is claimed to be the greatest swimming and diving act in vaudeville. Deiro, the piano-accordionist, and the Great Lester, ventriloquist, are on the bill.

Grand Offers Treat.

A wonderful motion picture will be shown at the Grand all of next week. It is the supreme masterpiece of modern photo-plays, and is nothing less than Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." There are more than 12,000 feet of film in the nine reels that represent the nine books in the wonderful story written more than a half century ago by the famous French author.

The greatest actors in France volunteered their services in making the picture and every place that is described in the book has been visited and used by the actors for their stage in producing the great work.

This week the Grand is attracting large attendance with a daily change of program of high-class first-run motion pictures.

Bijou Show Catchy.

Brimful of catchy features, pretty musical numbers, entertaining specialties and laughable comedy, this week's show at Bijou, "Hotel a la Carte," is drawing splendid audiences to the popular theater. Every principal in the cast is clever in his or her line of work and some excellent specialties are introduced, not to mention a dozen musical numbers in which the big chorus takes part.

For next week the management announces another corking musical comedy, entitled "Good Morning, Judge," a musical cocktail with Pearl Brothers and Burns and twenty others.

Broken Neck Mended; Ice Cream Kills Him

MARINETTE, WIS., July 18.—After surprising the medical world by recovering, after his neck was broken in a runaway accident several weeks ago, Hiram Reeves, head of a rural telephone company at Oconto, is dying of ptomaine poisoning from eating ice cream.

Mailing Letter, He Pulled Fire Alarm

CHICAGO, July 18.—Leon Wells, of Berlin, Mich., attempted to mail a letter to his mother in his home town. The result was the hasty arrival of two battalions of fire-fighting apparatus and a large crowd at the busiest corner in Chicago, that of the Masonic Temple. Traffic was tied up for several minutes before four fire department officials, 100 firemen, ten pieces of apparatus, a patrol wagon containing ten policemen and an ambulance with three doctors, returned to their stations.

"I thought it was a mail box," explained Leon. "I never saw a fire alarm like that. In our town we have a bell in the steeple."

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

You never can tell!

The grand young county of Candler on Thursday morning looked to be as good a bet as one might stake his coin upon—and to-day, like Caesar dead, there are none so poor as to do it reverence!

Perhaps that isn't quite fair to Candler, for there is a good chance that it may be reconsidered, and go over to next year, when, in forgetfulness of the bitterness of Thursday's fight on the floor of the House, Candler yet may come into its own.

Unquestionably, a serious tactical error was made when the friends of Candler, even without intending anything arbitrary, perhaps, moved the previous question, and thereby closed debate save from their own point of view.

It requires a two-thirds vote of the House to pass a Constitutional amendment, whereas it only requires a majority to order the previous question. The previous question, having been ordered by that majority, however, it immediately gave the minority opposition the right to raise the cry of "Gag rule," which cry said minority promptly proceeded to raise—vociferously and with deadly effect upon Candler!

The majority, seeing its blunder, undertook to right things—but too late.

Burwell, as fair and impartial a presiding officer as ever held the gavel, plainly was anxious to relieve the House of its embarrassment if he could, but under the rules, he could not. The House had tied his hands. Several virtuous gentlemen, who had not even called for a division on the vote for the previous question, were very much outraged that the previous question had been ordered, nevertheless—and their expressions upon the floor with respect to that feeling of outrage evidently impressed the House profoundly, as the House proceeded to sustain said outraged point of view.

Altogether, the fight on Candler was as pretty a piece of claptrap as ever was slipped over—but it was slipped, all right, and that is what hurt Candler's feelings!

Moral: Never be too sure your enemy can not throw straight, even if he is left-handed!

Undoubtedly there is genuine merit in the Candler County proposal, and there hardly is a doubt that eventually a new county will be created there.

And the Candlerites may get some consolation from that, after all!

The many friends—as they would say in the Springplace Jimplecute, no doubt—of the well-known Georgian mentioned, will read the following paragraphic gem from The Thomasville Times-Enterprise with mingled feelings of melancholy and joy:

Jim Nevin is more truthful and lots more interesting writing about Governor Brown's gold pen than he was penning that conglomerate mess about the Thomasville cow.

Now, what do you know about that?

The Legislature is looking forward to its forthcoming visit to Augusta with genuine delight.

A great time is being framed up for the Solons, and there will be "doings" from the time the train arrives in Augusta Saturday about noon, until it leaves that night.

Many members are anticipating particularly a visit to Carmichael's famous fishing club with rare pleasure.

This place has been made famous by dozens of distinguished visitors, among them being President Taft, Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and others.

The House roll call rarely develops anybody absent, although it frequently is insisted upon.

Thursday an attempt was made to dispense with the roll call, but it was objected to. Nobody was absent, however—which shows what a fine system of looking after the membership is in vogue about the clerk's desk.

It remained for Mr. Moss, of Cobb, rather to hit the nail squarely on the head in explaining his Candler County vote Thursday, when he said:

"I do not indorse this call for the previous question and the shutting off of debate, but I shall not, merely because of that, refuse to do that which under my oath I agreed to do—that is, vote for that which I think best for the State.

"Because a tactical blunder may have been made by the floor leaders in charge of this measure, I shall not, therefore, visit my wrath upon the good people of the South Georgia territory asking to be made into this new county, who come here sincerely and honestly knocking at the doors of the union of counties.

"I can not understand how members can get up here and say they had intended voting for this measure, and would do so, but for the fact that a parliamentary blunder has been made in this House. It impresses me as rather mean and below the belt thus to hit the unoffending Candler County citizens, many of them good farmers, who are here asking a perfectly legitimate thing.

"If a man be sincerely against this measure, all right—he should so vote. But to make a mere mistake in parliamentary procedure an excuse for striking down an admitted meritorious proposition—that is all wrong. I believe this proposition is good, therefore, I shall vote aye!"

Mr. Moss is not inclined to the creation of new counties particularly, but the proposed county of Candler he had picked as one of the two deserving to win—and he voted accordingly.

His little speech in explaining his vote made a distinctly favorable impression on the House.

Easy to Get Rid of Corns

When you know HOW. But you can't do it by peeling, paring, gouging or picking at them. These barbarous methods are cruelly painful and seriously dangerous, for frequently the corn bleeds and then there is always the possibility of blood poisoning. Furthermore, these methods do not remove the corn completely, for the root usually goes deep into the toe to the bone.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory, which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful with any corn, whether hard or soft, and no matter how stubborn or how deep the growth. It removes the corn completely and positively without pain or danger. The first application instantly stops the corn from hurting you. Use it to-night and end your agony. 20c, by mail 22c. —(Advt.)

A group of 30 young matrons were invited to meet Mrs. Dick, who is a charming acquisition to the married set. The guests were received in the drawing room, where vases of zinnias, Shasta daisies and summer roses formed the decorations. In the dining room a prettily appoined tea table had for a centerpiece a silver vase of crimson gladioli.

Miss Harris was charming in white lingerie, draped over pink silk, with a deep border of pink crepe de chine finishing the skirt. Knots of tiny French roses were caught amid the laces of the corsage and a pink sash and girdle completed the costume.

Mrs. Dick wore a beautiful gown of white crepe, combined with French cobweb lace, draped on the skirt and confined at one side with a large pink rose. A hat of pink tulle and a corsage bouquet of pink roses completed the modish toilet.

Mrs. Clem Harris, who assisted in entertaining, wore black crepe de chine.

CALIFORNIA TRIP FOR WINNER IN 'AD' CONTEST

"Salesmanship Experience Alone Worth $1,000 to My Son," Says Business Man.

When the business office of The Georgian opened its doors early Friday morning a prominent business man was there with his 16-year-old son.

"I want Charley to enter the want ad contest," he said. "Put him down and start him to work."

The young man's nomination blank was accepted and he was given instructions for securing want ads. His father turned to the want ad man.

"I believe Charley will go out and win," he said. "He has it in him. But even if he doesn't win, I want him to try. I know a few weeks of actual experience in this contest will give him a thousand dollars' worth of education in the most highly-paid work on earth—practical salesmanship. That's why I put him in."

Girls Enter Contest.

And Charley wasn't the only entrant of the morning. A dozen others, several of them young women, brought in their nomination blanks, saw themselves credited with 1,000 votes each for a starter, and had a chat with the want ad man.

They were told how to go to their friends and neighbors and secure want ads for The Georgian, and shown how to roll up a list of votes in the contest for an automobile, a trip to California, a piano, or any one of the dozens of prizes.

"There isn't a family in Atlanta which hasn't a want," said the want ad man. "We have proved that by going to see them and getting results. You next-door neighbor wants a new cook or a man to trim the hedge or is ready to swap a stove for a bedstead or desires to sell his or her house. If you'll go to see him or her and make a suggestion you're sure to get the want ad.

Expert Aids Workers.

"You will be given careful instructions and practical help by an experienced district manager. He will show you how to get the ads. He will give you every bit of assistance you desire. You will have a real course in practical salesmanship, and instead of paying for the training you will be handsomely paid for your efforts."

Persons who wish to enter should clip out the coupon in the big advertisement, fill it out and bring it to the want ad man at No. 7 Edgewood avenue. They will be given full details of the contest and shown how to go out and win.

BIRTHDAY PARTY GIFTS WILL BE PONY VOTES

Girl's Guests Will Bring Her Subscriptions—New Way Found To Aid Contestant.

Newest among the developments in The Georgian and American pony contest is a birthday party. Miss Robert Harbour, of No. 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue, will give the party Saturday afternoon.

This is to be Miss Harbour's fifth birthday anniversary. In honor of the event there will be a "regular party," with the difference from the ordinary celebration that many of the guests have told her in advance what their presents will be.

They will give her subscriptions to The Georgian and Sunday American, which count liberally in votes in the contest. This is an instance where the givers get as much as the recipient, little Miss Harbour gets the votes and the donors get the papers.

John Trimble, of Lithonia, and his father came to Atlanta Thursday to see the ponies. John Trimble is making a good race for the pony to be awarded to the Georgia boy or girl getting the most votes.

One more day remains of the special bonus offer, which gives extra ballots for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. From all indications, Saturday will be one of the Miss Willie Nowell, of Augusta, will arrive Friday evening for a visit to Misses Mary and Lucile Goodrich at their home in Inman Park. Miss Helen Nowell, sister to Msis Willie Nowell, is here and several informal parties have been given in her honor.

ATLANTA EXHIBIT FOR KNOXVILLE FAIR URGED

Tennessee Business Men in Person Will Attempt to Interest Manufacturers and Jobbers.

Within the next few days a determined effort will be made by business men of Knoxville, Tenn., to interest Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in that city from September 1 to November 1 of the present year.

A delegation of Knoxville men will come to Atlanta to take up the matter of an exhibit of Atlanta-made goods at the exposition with members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers' Association.

This was the word brought to Atlanta to-day by James B. Young, director of publicity for the exposition, who was in the city on business connected with the exposition

Incomplete Without Atlanta.

"The feeling in Knoxville is," said Mr. Young, "that the National Conservation Exposition would not be complete without Atlanta represented, and the directors of the exposition company hope to be able to show Atlanta men wherein it will be to their advantage to come to Knoxville in force.

"The position in so far as we have been able to figure it out is like this: Knoxville during September and October will be something of a battleground between the commercial interests of the North and those of the New South.

"Cincinnati in particular is engaged in a trade expansion movement; Louisville is another city in the same class. Baltimore and several other places north of us already have reserved space for big commercial exhibits at the Knoxville show.

One Means to Invade South.

"The idea of these business men—and I believe they have the right idea—is that the National Conservation Exposition is going to be the one big place this year in which to advance their interests along the lines of an increased Southern trade.

"Every indication is that we will have enormous crowds in Knoxville for the exposition, and one of the most gratifying features is the advices we get showing that travel from the North will be heavy.

"It is for these reasons and others that the men of Knoxville hope to be able to show to Atlanta why it is to the interest of this great city of the South to be represented at our exposition. The matter will be gone into at length and in detail when the Knoxville men come to Atlanta. This probably will be next week."

DR. DELAMATER CRIES HE 'HAS ENOUGH'

Druggist Rearrested on Complaint of Estranged Wife Declares He Has "Learned a Lesson."

Dr. Ira Delamater, following his release from the clutches of the police under a fine of $10.75, late Thursday afternoon was arrested by Constable W. W. Rogers, from the court of Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau, on a peace warrant sworn out by his wife.

The druggist was released under a heavy bond to appear at noon Friday, when an attempt will be made to have him placed under a prohibitive bond that will be forfeited if he even speaks to his wife again.

"I've got enough," cried Delamater, when Constable Rogers took him in tow. "I won't ever do it again, and there is not any use of all this. I learned a lesson Wednesday night (he rubbed an enlarged optic), and I will never bother her again. I will help her get the divorce and pay her alimony regularly."

The druggist was arrested at a Turkish bathhouse in Decatur street. When Constable Rogers found him he was having a badly swollen and darkened eye and severe bruises on his body massaged. They were inflicted by W. T. Cammack, a railroad man, who interfered when Delamater visited Mrs. Delamater, who is seeking a divorce from him, Wednesday night.

Helen and the Trunks Are Gone When Warren Returns to the Hotel in Paris.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE room was charming. Helen could hardly restrain an exclamation of delight when the French manager unlocked the door and crossed over to draw the heavy curtains from the long, low windows.

The paneled walls, the furniture, the draperies, were all in old rose silk tapestry. The bedroom adjoining was exquisitely dainty in white and pale blue. The low French dressing table, the cheval mirror, the two cane beds with the pale blue silk hangings and coverlets, made it look like a stage setting—"Act I. Mlle. ———'s Boudoir"—in a modern French play.

It was all so surprisingly dainty and luxurious for a hotel that Helen feared it would be most expensive—more than they could pay.

"What do you ask for these rooms?" she ventured.

"Twenty-five francs a day, Madame," he answered in surprisingly good English.

"And what for breakfast served up here?"

"Two francs for coffee and rolls."

Only nine more francs for the rooms, and the same for breakfast as they were paying now! And the dirt and dinginess of the other place compared to the charm and cleanliness of this! Helen pictured herself, in her dainty white morning gown and boudoir cap, having breakfast in this rose silk room. This picture decided her.

"Very well. I'll take the rooms. We're at a place on the Boulevard Capucines now, but we'll come to-morrow morning or late this evening."

The manager took her down on the mirrored elevator to the palm-lined hall and office below, where Helen made a deposit of twenty-five francs to secure the rooms.

On the way back in the bus her courage began to waver. She had arranged to move without Warren's consent or knowledge. But when she again saw the dinginess and shabbiness of the rooms they were in and thought of the wretched breakfast they had had that morning, her courage was renewed.

A Bold Scheme.

As she packed the few things they had unpacked for the night her strongest desire was to move now. It was only half-past one, and Warren would not be back until almost seven. Why not get a cab and take their baggage over now—and have everything unpacked and in place by the time he got there? She could not reach him during the afternoon, but she could leave a note here giving him the address of the new place.

For Helen this was a most audacious scheme, and she was athrill with excitement at the very daringness of it all. For once she would show Warren that she could take the initiative, that she would not stay in a place that was both uncomfortable and unclean, merely because he did not want the bother of moving.

There was a rusty pen and a dusty ink bottle on the mantel. Helen took some paper from her handbag and wrote hurriedly:

Dear: Have just found the most wonderful place! When I went to the American Express Company this morning to get our mail I heard some American women talking about a delightful hotel. I took down the address and looked it up at once. The rooms are so beautiful and so moderate, that I couldn't resist engaging them.

I do hope you won't be annoyed, but this place is so dirty that I felt I couldn't stay. I am going to get a cab and move the things over now, so everything will be in place when you get there. The address is Hotel Ronceray, 10 Rue Montaigne. You can get a bus on the corner that will take you to the door. I will pay the bill here. Hastily. HELEN.

Still fearing that her courage might be short-lived, she determined to act quickly. Resolutely she went down to the office and asked for their bill. The man seemed surprised and displeased, for he had plainly expected them to stay several weeks.

Helen was amazed at the bill. She thought there would be only the room for one night and breakfast—but there was a charge for light, service and bath. However, she was too glad to escape from the place to make any protest, and a little later she was in a cab with their baggage on top, driving to the new hotel with a feeling of mingled glee and awe at her own temerity.

It was just 3 by the French gilt clock on the mirrored mantel of the rose-tapestried sitting room, when Helen closed the door after the porters who had brought up the bagage.

Even before she took off her hat she made an eager, interested inspection of every detail of the rooms. They were luxuriously and perfectly appointed. Everything was in exquisite taste.

It would be over three hours yet before she could expect Warren. But she had no desire to go out in the blazing, midafternoon sun, for the heat was stifling. She would spend the time in unpacking, in getting up their laundry, and in going over her clothes, which after the week on board ship needed attention.

It was a real joy to shake out her gowns and hang them in the spacious closets, and to arrange her clothes in the white-papered drawers of the chiffonier and dresser. The rooms were so beautiful that there was a sense of luxury in just moving about and getting settled in them.

At 6 o'clock she decided suddenly to dress—to put on her white chiffon evening gown. She would lay out Warren's evening clothes, and when he saw her all dressed he would hardly refuse to dress, too. They would "live up" to the luxury of the place!

To sit down and arrange her hair before the low dressing table was a real pleasure. Helen thought of all the hours she had to stand before her high bureau at home, and resolved to have a dressing table like this as soon as she got back.

About half-past six she was trailing about the apartment in her white chiffon gown, looking at herself in the mirrors with which the rooms abounded, and feeling as though she was living in a play. The very foreign atmosphere of it all added to the charm. Although it was hardly dusk, she turned on the electric lights, which glowed softly through their silken shades.

She Gets Anxious.

For once Helen was too excitedly happy to worry over what Warren's attitude might be. Surely, when he saw how beautiful the rooms were, he could not be angry at her having moved.

But at seven she grew anxious. He should be here by now. What if they should not give him the note at that other place? They had not liked it because she had left—would they take such a revenge? She had left the note in the box with the key—how could he fail to get it?

Quarter after seven—half-past! By this time Helen had forgotten the charm of the rooms and was walking restlessly about in tense anxiety. What could have happened? He had said he would be back around half-past six, and it would take him only fifteen minutes at the most to get here from the other place.

For the first time there came a doubt in her mind as to the wisdom of her moving in this way. Perhaps she should have stayed. After all, it was a rash thing for her to do. They were in a strange city, if he should not get the note—how could he ever find her?

She could, of course, write to the American Express Company, where he would go for his mail in the morning; but what would he do to-night? Oh, why had she done this? Frantically she wished herself back in those other rooms, however shabby and dirty they might be. Surely it would have been better to put up with anything than to risk any chance of mishap in Paris.

A sharp knock at the door. She rushed to open it, and a French messenger boy handed her a note. As he held it out to her she saw Warren's writing on the envelope. Her hands weakly trembling, with her teeth she tore it open.

"Since you are so infernally smart and want to take things in your own hands, you can keep it up. You can have a nice little dinner alone any place in Paris you choose—and I can have the same. I'll probably be there some time to-night, but don't let that worry you—stay out just as late as you want."

The cruel sarcasm of it! How could he—oh, how COULD he! With a convulsive sob Helen threw herself upon the bed and her tears fell unheeding on its blue satin coverlet.

More Trouble in a Garden.

An elderly gentleman walking through his garden one day stopped before a fig tree on which were two figs just ripening. His favorites were figs, and summer often came and went without the fruit coming to maturity.

Shortly after he met his gardener who, assuring him the figs were quite ripe, was requested to send them to the summer house, where his master was about to rest.

Picking the figs, the gardener sent his little boy of 7 with the basket. On the way the little fellow stopped, and, removing the leaves, gazed upon the tempting fruit.

The attraction was too great; he ate one. Covering the other with the leaves, he proceeded upon his errand.

On being asked if the gardener had not sent two figs, the boy, after a moment's silence, answered: "I ate one."

"You ate one? How?" exclaimed the old gentleman, angrily. "How did you come to do that?"

Dropping his eyes to the basket, "I took it like this," said the child, taking the remaining fig, "and I ate it like this."

And, suiting the action to the word, he consumed the second fig before the astonished eyes of the old gentleman.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Every one of these breaks in your life-line means a moment when you stood elbow-to-elbow with death," declared the girl, solemnly. "And yet—see those little squares of protection around each break? Senor American," she looked up at him soberly, "there is one break that you have not yet reached and the protecting square is not perfect like the others."

Warren burst into his silent laugh.

"I reckon that square will do when the time comes."

"But the time is now, senor!" exclaimed the girl, her lips less than a foot from his ear.

He drew back a little and eyed her through narrowed lids.

Danger Near.

She bore the keen scrutiny without a flutter, but her great round eyes and quick breathing told of some sure emotion.

"Are your eyes so sharp that you can tell the day and hour?" he asked slowly.

"Not my eyes, Senor American." She looked full at him with unmistakable meaning. "But my ears!" She caught the sound of footsteps in the passage and bent over the hand again as the Duke entered.

"In all my experience I have seen but one hand like yours, and that hand belongs to Don Robledo."

"Well, Mr. Warren, looking into the future?" inquired the Duke.

"Pardon, senor." Dolores swiftly withdrew and Warren called after her cheerfully:

"Good-bye, senorita, and many thanks for your occult wisdom. I'll take good care of that square. Yes, Duke," he added with a bantering smile, "and the immediate future promises to be very interesting. A dark man is to cross my path."

"Do you believe in such foolery?"

"I like to—on this occasion. For I hope it means some one I very much want to meet."

If the Duke guessed who this some one might be he gave no sign. He twirled his mustache and studied the floor, evidently in much perplexity, a situation that seemed to amuse the young man immeasurably.

"By the way," he went on. "Is that specter a blond or a brunette?"

The exalted kinsman made an impatient gesture, as if in no mood for raillery, and with every appearance of grave concern said:

"Mr. Warren, since the Prince is no more, I feel a certain responsibility for Her Highness' actions; and the prospect of your destruction to-night on her account is most uncomfortable."

The young man looked equally grave. "You think I won't come back?"

The Duke looked at him with the air of a man who is frankly doing his duty.

"I think if you go into that castle to-night you take your life in your hands," he declared.

The old whimsical smile returned to Warren's lips.

"I've got a good grip."

The Duke looked for a moment as if he would retire—that having done his duty there was nothing for him to say. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him:

"Look here! You Americans are shrewd traders. You get a dollar for a dollar when you bargain. You are not giving away your life for nothing. Now, what is the price?"

"Not very much," Warren assured him easily. "The deal was made on a bargain day. My life happened to be a little below par, you see, and I couldn't kick much over the terms."

The exalted cousin seemed relieved.

"Very well! Whatever those terms were, I will assume the responsibility of settling with you and at the same time release you from your unfair and outrageous bargain."

Jarvis bowed.

"Your Excellency, I am overwhelmed by your anxiety. It touches not only the heart but the pocketbook. But," he added regretfully, "the price is paid and I am on the job."

"I suppose that means you are going through with it?"

"Yes."

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, I never saw a man so anxious to be killed. But, as your English poet says, 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

"You flatter me," Jarvis protested, with soft-tongued irony. "Yet, an energetic fool may be of more use than an angel with cold feet."

"Well, I am sorry for you," concluded the Duke.

Jarvis walked up to him, for the first time in their acquaintance dead serious.

"Your Excellency," he said crisply, "I decline your offer and your advice and your sympathy—and I'll tell you why. I saw a gambler lay down four aces once because, as he said, 'The play ain't natural.' You tried to have me arrested on the steamer—you have tried to block me in every move I have made. Now—suddenly—you are deeply concerned lest something should happen to precious little me in that castle. You advise me to stay out. You even offer to buy me off. Shall I take your advice? NO! 'The play ain't natural.'"

On Guard.

His Excellency of Alva trembled with a cold fury, but held himself in.

"You have intruded into a matter which you neither understand nor appreciate," he said rapidly. "If, as you say, the play seems unnatural, pray do as your gambling friend—put down your cards and stay out of the game."

"No," retorted the young man, grimly. "I stay in the game—but I'm going to watch the deal!"

The return of the Princess abruptly terminated the conversation and when the two men turned to greet her they had recovered their natural tones and bearing.

"Well, all Segura is buzzing with your ghost-hunt to-night," observed the Duke, lightly. "The whole town will sit up to hear the outcome."

"And where are you going to get the returns, Duke?" asked Jarvis, with concealed interest.

"Unfortunately, I must leave at once," was the unexpected reply.

Even Jarvis was momentarily startled, but he quickly readjusted his inferences. "I am keenly disappointed, but I have an urgent summons to Madrid."

The Princess stared at her cousin, seemed about to speak and suddenly turned to the innkeeper who had followed her down stairs and ordered him to look after "the gentleman's wants."

"Thank you," said Jarvis, rightly interpreting this as a dismissal. "I'd like a couple of good horses and two lanterns."

"Lanterns?" smiled the Duke, as the young man went out. "Looking for an honest man, Mr. Warren?"

"Not in this neck of the woods, Your Excellency," retorted Jarvis, over his shoulder.

"Carlos," exclaimed the Princess, anxiously, when they were alone, "what have you found out? Tell me—what do they say?"

The Duke looked very solemn. "I regret to tell you that nothing is known of your brother since he entered the castle."

The girl closed her eyes and pressed her hands to her face.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned.

A Last Appeal.

Dolores called that Don Robledo was waiting with His Excellency's car.

"Cousin, do you really intend to go now?" cried the girl in tragic tones. "I need you! My brother needs you! Think what it means to us!"

"I am broken-hearted, dearest cousin—do not make my duty any harder by your words. The message is from His Majesty. It is mandatory. And, alas! In Spain, as in the Far East, to hear is to obey."

"But why must you start so soon?"

"You know my ride is a long one and I must travel fast while the moon is up."

The girl was silent for a moment and when she spoke again voice and features were composed into a chilly hardness.

"Not to open this discussion again, I want to say now that I will never forgive you for leaving my brother and me at this critical moment."

"Would you have me lose my favor with the King?" protested the Duke.

"Does his favor mean more to you than mine?" retorted the girl proudly.

The Duke spread out his palms and half bowed.

"Noblesse oblige, cousin," he said gently. "Nobles and kings must obey what lesser men might ignore. My heart is here, but my honor is with the King."

"Honor!" The Princess flung the word back at him as if it were a stinging missile. "The cloak for a man's vanity! Sacred honor!—to be kept bright at any cost, lest men should test his metal and find it base. Give me a man who cares less for honor than for me! You ask me to-day why I do not marry you. I will tell you why. I want a man, not a weakling masquerader. Yes, honor lives, but loyalty is dead! Courage is dead, and the brave blood of your ancestors, the blood that made Spain, has turned to water in your veins. There is not a nobleman in Spain who would dare go now this night to my brother in the castle. God! How I could love such a man!"

"Perhaps," sneered her cousin, stung by the bitter tirade, "perhaps such a man as your Yankee adventurer?

"Perhaps I could," cried the girl, instantly taking up the challenge. "Who knows?"

The Duke bit his lips and before he could frame an adequate reply the man himself appeared, slowly descending the stairs. So he merely bowed, took the girl's hand and kissed it.

"Farewell," he said in a low voice, "some time you will forgive me. Success to you, Mr. Ghost-Breaker, when you bead the specter in his den."

"Thank you, your Excellency," drawled Jarvis, leaning against the stairpost. "I will do my uttermost to put salt on the specter's tail."

"Good-bye!"

"Good night, Duke!"

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with some concern and a question on his lips.

"Mr. Warren," she said abruptly, "we must start at once!"

The strained quality of her voice told him that she was laboring under the most intense excitement and it was with studied ease of manner and voice that he replied:

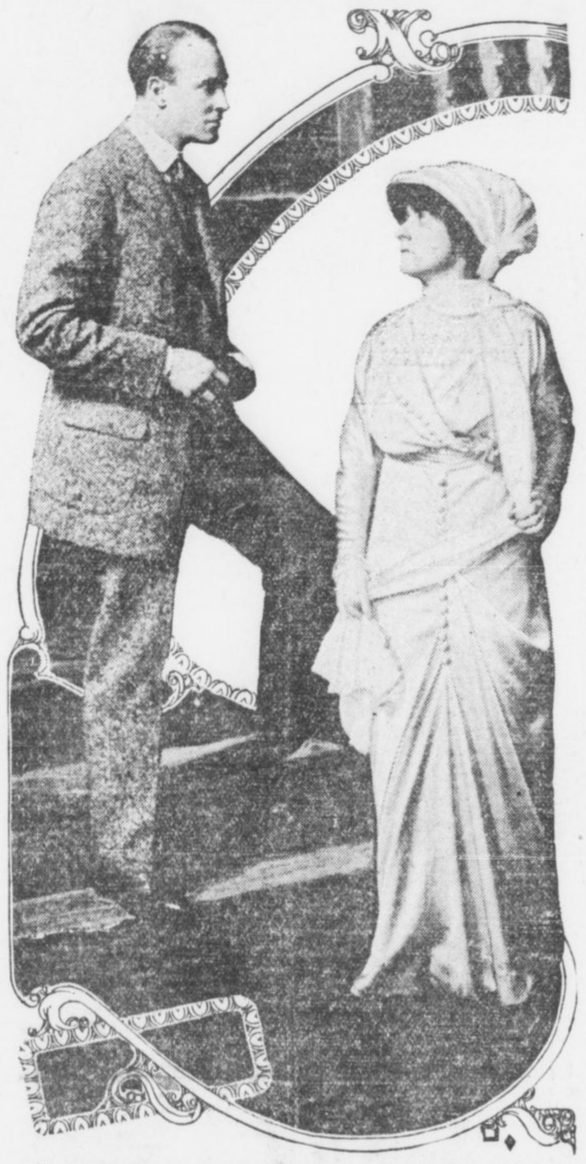
"It's out of the question for you to go to the castle until I have smashed this infernal mystery; there is nothing you could do. If your brother is there I'll find him. You must be patient and remain here, where you are safe, and try to rest."

"I can not rest until I know what has happened to him," she cried desperately. "I shall go mad if I am left here alone!"

"But it's not safe for you to go," he insisted.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

OFF TO THE CASTLE.



The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with som econcern and a question on his lips.

"MEGGIE, the postman is coming up the garden path. Would you mind going to the door?"

Mrs. Martin paused in the kneading of the large batch of dough and glanced toward the tiny sitting room. A pretty girl of about eighteen emerged in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crabbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips.

"Who is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

The girl burst into a flood of hot furious tears, and flung the letter scornfully upon the table.

"If Jack is too good for me, I don't thank her to tell me so," she declared. "She herself wasn't much until she married Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. Mrs. Martin picked up the letter and read it slowly. A look of contempt flashed in her honest gray eyes.

The letter, which was couched in terms of lofty condescension, mingled with biting satire, conveyed the unmistakable message that the silly attachment existing 'twixt Meggie and Jack was viewed with disapproval, and advised the girl to look elsewhere, unless she wished to bring Jack to financial beggary.

In a few minutes Meggie, her eyes red with crying, descended the staircase, and her mother gathered her in her arms.

"Take no heed of the foolish letter, my dear," she said soothingly.

Ten minutes later found Meggie on the way to Flamstead.

She Sees Jack.

A man emerged from behind a spur of cliffs and a sudden rush of color suffused her cheeks. The man saw her at the same time and came toward her at an increased pace. He was a tall, strongly built man of about twenty-one, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and darkly curled hair showed beneath his sou'wester.

"Great guns! What are you doing abroad a morning like this, Meggie?"

"I'm just on my way to Flamstead to make a few purchases, Jack," she said. "Are you putting out to sea to-day?" There was an anxious note in the inquiry, as she glanced uneasily toward the horizon, which was enshrouded in a threatening murkiness.

Her glance seemed to bring something to his recollection, for his bright eyes suddenly darkened, and he laid a hand upon the rough surface of his jersey. The next moment he had taken the girl's arm in a close grip.

"Did you receive a letter this morning, Meggie?" he asked abruptly.

A tell-tale flush of confusion dyed Meggie's cheeks, and her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Then it is true. She has been interfering between you and me. By heaven, I'll make her retract every word she has written.

* * * * *

It was a night long to be remembered by "those who go down to the sea in ships," and by the poor fisherfolk of Snarpel's Head in particular.

"I'm main afraid they won't do it. If they do, 'twill be by the grace of God!"

The distress signal flickered for a second, and then was obliterated by the flying spume. The old fisherman who had first spoken made his hands into a megaphone, and gave vent to a loud but futile shout.

"'Tis awful to have to stand by and watch them go to their death without being able to lend a hand," he said.

"She cannot last long in a sea like this," declared old Timothy, with a shake of his head. "A boat wouldn't live a minute in such a boil. 'Tis years since I've seen the like."

Scarcely had he spoken when there was a commotion at the rear of the watchers, and a slight cheer was raised. The men from the Flamstead Coastguard Station had arrived, and at their head raced Meggie Martin, her dark hair streaming in the wind. A minute later a rocket with a mighty rush soared seaward, taking with it the line. It hummed like a string of a gigantic harp. At length there emerged from the darkness the dim outline of the breeches-buoy, and from it hung the limp figure of a man.

"Why, 'tis Jim Carlin, of the Waterwitch."

A wild, terrified wail greeted the announcement, and Mrs. Ryalls rushed into the arc of light cast by the lantern.

"The Waterwitch! Good heavens! What of my husband?"

She reeled, and would have fallen had she not been caught by Meggie. The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girlish figure sprang toward him and seized him by the arm.

Jack Is Left.

"All are not saved!" she cried in a voice that was almost a scream. "There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured and Jack has sent him first. Oh, he quick, or 'twill be too late!"

The officer spun round with a sharp command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey.

"I'm afraid it's all over, miss. There is no response. He shook the line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn ashore, and almost at the same moment and hawser perceptibly slackened.

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!" shouted the officer. "Tighten up the hawser, lads, and let's have another try for the poor fellow."

The officer and his men hurried away with the lanterns toward the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy.

A reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, had swung herself into the buoy and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline toward the deafening inferno below.

Meggie felt a numbness creeping over her senses, but she bravely fought it back. She had set herself the task of saving Jack if he still lived and that task must be accomplished.

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips as she recognized it as the figure of Jack Ryalls. Meggie suddenly leaned from the buoy and, seizing the limp figure of her lover, drew him toward her. * * *

"Why, bless me, if there ain't two!" The cry escaped old Timothy.

"And if it ain't Meggie Martin that's bin out to the wreck to fetch Jack in, I'll stand hanging!" declared another voice. "Hold that lantern up, Bill. Let's have a look at the heroine of Sharpel's Head."

The feeble rays of light fell upon the locked figures of Jack Ryalls and his gallant rescuer, and the next moment a tremendous hurrah rose above the soughing wind. Five minutes later the unconscious couple were being conveyed home with the utmost haste, followed by a crowd of silent but enthusiastic witnesses of the daring deed.

* * * * * *

Twelve months later a pretty wedding was solemnized at the quaint church of Sharpel's, and the whole of the townsfolk turned out to do honor to the handsome pair; but never did a heart beat more proudly than did that of Jack Ryalls as he led his bride between the lines of fishermen who formed the guard of honor—the girl who had snatched him from the very jaws of death.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I DO NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and in love with a man two years my senior. He is nice and has a good position. I kept steady company with him for a year and a half. Then my mother stopped him from calling on me, but never gave a reason; but, as it is, we go out, when we get a chance, together. He has given me two diamond rings. Do you think it is right for me to see him as long as mother does not consent? CUTTIE.

You owe her obedience, and must not see this man clandestinely.

On the other hand, you are now 18, and your mother owes you a reason for her objections. Can you not persuade her to tell you what they are that he may have a chance to overcome them? If he is the man who is to tell you the "sweetest story of all," I don't want you to lose him.

NOT A DAY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19, and am keeping company with a man 25 years old. Do you think he is too old for me? We never quarrel. He loves me, I know, but my father thinks him too old for me. He makes fine pay and gives me good times. We think a lot about each other and get along fine. H. E.

He is not a day too old. Are you sure your father's objections are not based on some other ground?

BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I received an invitation from a young lady to attend her birthday party. Is it proper for me to accept the invitation, as I have never been introduced or even seen the young miss? PERPLEXED.

A girl who would do anything so foolish deserves the rebuke you are in position to give her by declining the invitation.

Household Suggestions

Weak eyes that ache when exposed to the glare of the sun, especially on the sea, should be treated with cold water compresses. These are folded on the closed lids, and ease the aching at once.

If troubled with ants indoors spread a piece of brown paper with marmalade rather thickly, then place it where they are most troublesome. It will soon be covered with them.

When boiling potatoes put a teaspoonful of sugar as well as salt in the water. This does not give a sweet taste, but makes them dry and floury.

Effect.

"Did you see the lovelight in her eyes?"

"No. The gaslight was in her eyes, and she squinted."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

HUSBAND deer, sed Ma to Pa last evening, at last I have found a perfek jewel of a servant. She caim to work this afternoon, & I want you to notis her wen she is serving dinner. She is as brite a gurl as I have ever met. She is a cullurd girl, her naim is Minyunette, & she went to a gurl's college that Booker Washington had sumthing to do with. Her flow of English is perfeck, Ma sed, & I was thinking that littel Boobie cud improve his English by jest lissening to her talk.

Didn't Warm Up.

I doant warm up vary much as you are talking, sed Pa. Sumhow I aint very keen for a servant that knows moar than we do. You know how long that one lasted with us that was all the time talking about Henry James & Shopenhaur.

Oh, but this gurl is different, sed Ma. She is vary quiet & I doant think she will air her nollege any.

I knew Pa wasn't going to like the new gurl, tho. I had herd her talking to Ma beefoar Pa caim hoam, & this is what she sed wen she was talking off her wraps: I presume that the dutles connected with the situation will not be arduous. That dident sound like our other gurl that we had beefoar her, she sed when shall I pitch in?

She Comes In.

Well, wen dinner beegan Minyunette caim in to wait on the tabel. She had a high forehead & woar glasses.

Wife, sed Pa to Ma, you & little Bobbie are going to a Shakespeer reading to-nite.

Oh, sed Minyunette, I adoar Shakespeer. He is so many minded, his scope is so all em-bracing. I was just looking at yure fat husband, she sed, & thinking of Shakespeer's lines

I want fat men about me, sleek hedded men
& such as sleep o' nights.
Yon Cashus hath a leen & hungry look.
He thinks too much. Such men are dangerus!

Pa dropped his fork & looked at Minyunette the way he looks at me wen my report card says Deportment, 65. But Minyunette dident notis Pa, she kept on talking. I think the character of Shakespeer's Portia is a butiful one, she sed. So wise & yet so sweet and womanly. I can see her now in my mind's eye, saying

The quality of mercy is not strained,
It falleth as the gentle rain from heaven.
It is twice blessed, it blesseth him—

See here, sed Pa, I doant want to be any Simon Legree, but it wuddent be a bad ide, Minyunette, if you showed a littel moar sped out in the kitchen & a littel less in here. I am as hungry as a jailed suffragist, sed Pa, & it doesent help my hunger any to heer you spouting Shakespeer. The next thing I know you will be raving about Lord Byron and trying to reesite all of Childe Harolds Pilgrimage. Come on, now, sed Pa, moar spuds & less Shakespeer.

Didn't Like It.

Minyunette dident like it at all the way Pa talked. She took off her apron & sed to Ma, Madame, I regret that I shall be compelled to seek elsewhere for a posishun whare the environ-ments is moar en-vironing, sed Minyunette. I was sure I was going to like it here, beekaus you are a sweet nature, but yure husband is rude & of the soil. Our souls are not at-tuned, she sed, & so, obaying the word of fate, our ways part.

Good-NITE, sed Pa.

:-: The Melody :-:

WHEN evening came with the shadows she let her little frail hands fall into her lap as if every muscle and tendon had suddenly burst. Her finely-shaped dark-haired head rested on the table. She was sitting in front of her sewing machine, at which she had been working all day. All around her were scraps of silk and woolen goods, fashion papers and patterns lay in piles on the table, and when she moved her arms some of them dropped on the floor. Her head was dizzy with complete exhaustion. She was unable to think, but felt the increasing darkness as a blessing which put an end to the toil of the day.

It was ten years of work that had aged her. These years had been to her like one long walk through an endless desert without a single oasis to relieve the monotony; her feet had left no tracks on the sands; not a single cry from her lips had been responded to; nobody had met her on the way to shake her hand.

But on the other side all these years of weary thraldom there were a few years when she had been young and had lived. In those years the two had sat together, watching the coming of dark, and were glad and laughed at everything.

She was young then, and worked for small wages in a dressmaking shop. He had long hair, dreaming eyes, an inexhaustible fund of hope, and a violin—that was all, but he was an artist. He was young, gave lessons on the violin and managed to make both ends meet. He was always bright and happy. Nobody could laugh as he could, or cheer her up as he could. He knew how to make everything appear in a golden and rosy light.

One night he came to her unexpectedly and took her into his arms.

"I cannot live without you," he said. "Why should we wait until we can afford to marry. Then we shall be old and gray. You cannot put happiness aside and say, 'Wait a few years; I cannot give you any of my time now; later on I will call for you.' Will you not come to me now and live with me as my wife?"

But she did not understand him. She struggled out of his arms, wounded and unhappy, an intense pain shooting through her every nerve and fiber. For solitude had made her shy and suspecting; his suggestion hurt her, and she asked him to leave her. She no longer remembered the passionate words that passed between them; but he left her, pale and angry, his black hair in disorder and his eyes shooting fire at her.

Two days passed. Then one even she saw it in one of the papers—a short notice which most people would have overlooked. He had shot himself. He had gone straight from her and had sent a bullet through his brain. She thought of all the hard words she had said to him and felt how unjust she had been to him.

As she was putting her room in order she felt a sudden desire to go out, to see people around her and hear them talk, to feel the cool evening air in her face.

From the park she heard music which irresistibly drew her in among the trees, where it was so much more pleasant than in the dreadful rushing and crowding of the streets. She stopped in front of a large restaurant with many chairs and tables outside and music in the veranda, where a few persons sat drinking and talking.

She sat down on a bench under a dripping tree, where she could hear the musicians. Here she sat for a long time quietly and sad, with her hands folded and her head thrown back.

Suddenly a musician got up to play a violin solo. He was a tall, dark young man; he stooped a little. His eyes were sad and melancholy under the heavy brows.

As he started to play she stood up trembling. She felt like rushing up to him and asking him to stop, but she fell back on the bench and hid her face in her hands.

"That melody contains all life," he used to say; "love, suffering and happiness."

When the violinist lowered his bow she stood up and went home. Like a small shadow she disappeared among the crowd. Nobody had a look or a thought for her.

But her pale, tired-looking mouth was smiling, and in her eyes was the light of happiness. No longer did she dread the visions of the day or the dreams of the night.

She had a hand to clasp now in the darkness, a hand which was to guide her through eternity.

Condensed Measure.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked a sharp servant of the milkman, whom she suspected of giving short measure.

"Yes," replied the man.

"Well, it won't do," said the girl. "When we want condensed milk we'll buy it at the grocer's."

Where He Was Hit.

Benign Old Gentleman—Poor little chap! Where did that cruel boy hit you?

Tommy—Boo-oo-oo! We were 'avin' a naval battle, and 's torpedoed me in the engine room!

How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing.

These pictures were especially posed for this page.

In the figure on top, Lady Constance shows how to stand gracefully. A simple exercise in swaying from foot to foot. This will teach you how to balance the weight properly. The next figure below will bring grace to arms and shoulders. Beside this it is a splendid exercise for reducing hips and thigs.

In the last figure Lady Constance gives a little tip-toe exercise.

EVERYONE agrees that for the art of sculpture we can not exceed the ancients. To me it seems that the Greeks had beautiful sculptured figures because they had wonderful models, and had wonderful models because they had a deep veneration for the almost divine beauty of the human form. And so out of this circle of perfection they chiseled glorious figures that we of to-day may use as models for the beautification of our own bodies.

To-day I am showing you three figures, and I shall dwell at length on them and what we may hope to acquire from it practice of the poses they portray. Let us make a slight study of the expression of countenance and body. For unless the face and body are attuned in the expression of a mood, there will be ungraceful uncertainty as a result.

The First Figure.

The first figure on top might stand for a number of ideas—injured innocence is the most dramatic idea that it suggests. To me it simply is a harmoniously simple pose, in which body and face express quiet dignity. Try it yourself—for it looks very easy to take a pose like this. But to stand poised firmly and gracefully on one foot, with the whole body balanced, ready to spring into motion and life and still at rest, is quite a feat. The ability to stand gracefully is rare—for people generally balance on heels or toes, or sag awkwardly on one hip.

Let me suggest an exercise for the acquisition of ability to stand gracefully. Balance the weight on the ball of the right foot, let the right arm hang easily at the side. Sway the body slightly to the left and raise the left arm to the chest, at the same time rising on the toes of the left foot until the weight is all balanced on the right foot. Then sway the weight gradually to the left foot, rising on the right toe and lifting the right arm to the chest. Simply sway from foot to foot in exactly the posture that figure one shows you.

Is Very Simple.

Figure two is gayety shown in one step of an old dance of triumph. It gives the most marvellous control of thigh, knee, ankle and instep, and will serve to bring down an accumulation of weight about the hips and thighs. Furthermore, it insures a graceful control of arms and shoulders.

The practice of this seemingly complicated exercise is simple when once you carefully analyze the picture I have posed for you. Beginning with the left foot, rise slowly to the toes, at the same time raising the other leg with the knee bent and the instep so flexed that the toes point almost perpendicularly to the floor.

The rising on the toes of one foot and the lifting of the other limb until the knee is far above the waist line must be simultaneous.

Practice this first, alternating from one foot to the other, with the arms hanging at the sides.

Then combine the arm and leg motion, and see what a gain in balance results.

Lift the arms with drooping wrists, and as the hands reach the shoulders, and the elbows are at waist height, turn the fingers up, at the same time turning out the hand above the raised knee, and elevating the up-pointing fingers of the other hand above the head.

Poise, balance, and reduction of superfluous hip-flesh—is this not a vast deal to gain from one dancing exercise?

The last figure illustrates a little faun-like movement that is splendid for back, throat and instep, as well as for flexibility of wrist. Walk forward on tip-toes, with the uplifted hands crossing first to the right and then to the left as the body's weight is thrown first on the right and then on the left foot. When the weight is coming on the right foot and the right wrist is foremost, throw the head to the right and give the body (which must be bent slightly back throughout the exercise) a slight turn to the right. Alternate this from foot to foot.

Always practice these exercises in regular alternation from right to left or left to right and back again to insure even bodily development. Real beauty of form demands as first requisite absolutely even and uniform development, for only when it is absolutely normal is the body truly lovely as Our Maker meant it to be.

Up-to-Date Jokes

The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something.

"I'll have to get rid of Fido," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?"

Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous and burning indignation, as she replied:

"Every single thing except the dog biscuits."

"Waiter," grumbled a customer, "I should like to know the meaning of this. Yesterday I was served with a portion of pudding twice the size of this."

"Indeed, sir," rejoined the waiter. "Where did you sit?"

"By the window," answered the customer.

"Oh, that accounts for it," said the waiter. "We always give people by the window large portions. It's an advertisement."

:-: The Sins of Our Fathers :-:

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

MILDRED writes: "I am deeply in love with a young man three years my senior. I have been keeping company with him for the past three months. I would like to bring him up to the house, but my father objects to me bringing any boys up to the house. What shall I do?"

In the category of sins which fathers visit upon their children, no mention is made of the heavy penalty that often results when a girl is compelled to do all her "sweethearting" outside the protecting walls of her home. If the streets, the parks, the public walks or the dark corners of steps are made a girl's parlor, then I contend her father is visiting upon her innocent head as great a burden as if he violated all the moral and physical laws. In the most trying period of her life, when through her love she is weakest to resist, she is cast out on the streets without even the environment of familiar scenes at home to remind and to restrain her.

One can not be as easily tempted when in the familiar scenes of one's youth and innocent dreams, as if in strange surroundings. It is as if every chair, the table, even the pictures on the wall, looked with accusing eyes, surrounding the girl with whose life they have always been a part with a moral influence that is never lightly brushed aside.

The girl who receives her lover in her parlor impresses him, though perhaps unconsciously, with the sanctity, the respectability, the dignity of a home. The girl whose parlor is the streets may be good and pure and sweet, and usually is, but girls whose object is not moral also meet men on the streets, and the similarity upsets his moral balance.

An Impression.

The girl in the parlor usually has a father or a mother in the next room, and the young man who calls is impressed with the fact that there is some one loving her, shielding her, to whom he will have to account if he offends. The girl on the street corners is without a mother or father, so far as any impression of personal security goes. She is thrown out like a waif; if she becomes a derelict the father or mother who refused her the privilege of receiving her lover in her parlor is to blame.

The memory of parents is criminally short. There are few of them who can call back to the days when they loved and were loved, and when the clasp of a hand, or a kiss, was worth more than all the wealth in the world, and defied the wisdom of the ages. They have forgotten the call of youth.

There is no room in their memory for the cry of the heart for its mate, and, lacking this memory, they are as unfit to be parents of young girls and boys as an Egyptian mummy. They are without sympathy and understanding, at the period when the young in their charge need sympathy and understanding the most.

Without these they are also without charity. I have a notion that the father of Mildred, who compels her to do her "sweethearting" on the streets, would be like flint in his judgment if she yielded to the unwholesome influences of the dark corners of life and erred. Yet he would be more to blame than she.

Wisdo mto Refuse.

It is wisdom to refuse to let a girl bring a man to her home of whom her parents know nothing, but it is better to grant her even this privilege than to let her meet him on the streets. If they know nothing of him a closer inspection in their own home gives them every opportunity to know him better.

They can never know the manner of man their daughter is learning to love if they compel her to see him on street corners, and, being ignorant of him, they are without argument or weapons if he is undesirable.

Open the parlor for the girls. It is their right!

The Misfortunes of Joe Brick

A SHORT time ago I met my friend, Joe Brick. He looked worried. When I greeted him with a smile he groaned.

"Oh, if you only knew! If you knew, but you don't."

Then feeling, like most unhappy men, a desire to confide the story of his misery to somebody, he told it to me, and a pitiful story it was indeed.

"My affairs were going splendidly and I was already hoping to become a member of the Billionaires' Club," began Joe. "A rich marriage, I thought, would help me along. In society. I had often met Miss Ruby Smith, a daughter of the king of agriculture, a young lady of unusual beauty, but who unfortunately had neither arms nor legs. She was called the trunk woman. She was known to be amiable and sweet tempered, and was extraordinarily bright, so bright indeed that most of the schemes which had made her father the richest man in the United States had been hatched in her brain.

"I Decided to Marry."

"I decided to marry Ruby Smith, and one afternoon, dressed in my very best clothes, I asked her father for her hand.

"He looked at me sharply and said:

"'My daughter is very rich; how much are you worth?'

"I told the dreaded magnate all about my hopes. I proved to him that I had an idea which would revolutionize the manufacture of beet sugar, that I had a scheme to cut the cost of oleomargarine in two, and depicted to him all the details of my plan to increase the crop of Brussels sprouts, to triple its present size by sprinkling the plants twice a day with water from the celebrated Manneken fountain in Brussels, and how there were untold millions in my idea of exporting black radishes to the negroes in Africa.

"He was greatly impressed, took me into his arms and exclaimed:

"'You are to be my son-in-law, if Ruby will have you for her husband.'

"Miss Ruby received me most cordially. Poor little one, how beautiful she was! A regular Venus from Milo, only more perfect still, since her legs, too, were missing.

"I shall not go into details. It is enough to tell that she accepted me and a date was set for our wedding. It was celebrated with great splendor. It was the happiest day in my life. After the ceremony my wife received all her old friends with open arms, in spirit at least, in our new home. I felt my future was assured and knew that I would surely be elected for membership in the Millionaires' Club, which was the height of my ambition. Alas, it was not to be!"

"My dear little wife, my darling Ruby!' I said to my bride when we were alone: 'What do you say to giving up all our old habits for a few months and leave this feverish town for an idyllic wedding trip?'

"'You really think of everything, Joe!' she exclaimed, and as she could not clasp my hand she looked right into my soul with her angelic eyes. 'I am ready to follow you to the end of the world!'

"I have always been a most chivalrous fellow, so I felt like kissing her hand, but had to kiss her forehead instead.

"'I do love you so, Joe,' she whispered.

"'And I adore you, Ruby. There is no other woman in the world half so beautiful to me as you are!'

"We left for Canada in our private car, starting on our famous trip, which filled columns in the newspapers. We were to cross the Rocky Mountains and stay for some time in Monterey and Los Angeles, but the pitiless hand of destiny interfered. We were as happy as two turtle doves during the first part of our journey, and I felt that Ruby loved me more every day.

The Fatal Day.

"Then the fatal day came. The train, our own special train, of course, was speeding along at 70 miles an hour, when suddenly there was a shrill whistle and the airbrakes were jammed down hard. Train robbers had held us up and now invaded our drawing room.

"'Hands up!' cried a gigantic fellow standing in the doorway.

"Ruby behaved like a heroine and smiled indulgently at the bandit, while my hands shot upward.

"'Hands up!' roared the robber once more, and as Ruby, of course, was unable to comply with his request, he fired at her, killing her on the spot.

"'That is how I became a widower,' sobbed Joe. "The king of agriculture accused me of leading his daughter, his right hand as he called her, into a trap. He blackballed me in the Billionaires' Club and did not keen a single promise to me in connection with my schemes. That is why I am a ruined man to-day. By the way, can you lend me a hundred?"

* * * * *

Only to-day I learned that Joe is spending his time in a nice, quiet retreat for the feeble-minded. He had told the story of his misfortunes to a dignified old judge while awaiting his turn at a barber shop.

By Virtue of Age.

"Yes," said the old man to his visitor. "I'm proud of my daughters, and it is the ambition of my heart to see them all comfortably married.

"What's more," he added knowingly, "I've made a bit of money in my time, so my girls wont go to their husbands penniless. There's Mary for example, 25 years old, and a real good lass—I'll give her $1,500 on her wedding day. And to Bet—you see, she has past her thirty-fifth summer—I'll give her, at any rate, a couple of thousand; whilst the man who takes Eliza can rely on taking with her at least $5,000 of the very best."

"By the way," inquired the young man, "how old is Eliza?"

"Forty," replied the elder.

"Hum! I suppose you don't happen to have a daughter somewhere between sixty and seventy?"

Do You Know---

There has been such a decline of recent years in the marriage rate of Trieste that one of the civic dignitaries suggests the institution of a system of compulsory matrimony. It is proposed that on a given date in each year all spinsters who have attained their twenty-fifth year and bachelors who have attained their thirtieth should be required to present themselves before the syndic in whose jurisdiction they reside. The names of those who on medical examination prove to be thoroughly sound would be sorted according to sex, placed in separate urns, and then drawn two at a time. The couples whose names are drawn together would, at the conclusion of the draw, be united forthwith by the syndic.

A traveling theatrical company, which is at present visiting Lille, France, gives performances in a couple of barges, which are towed along the canal from town to town. One barge does duty for the theater, while the other serves to house the players. The floating theater is comfortably fitted, and there is a large stage, with scenery painted by a member of the company.

One of the competitions in connection with the Welsh Territorial Artillery, which recently concluded its training on the sand dunes at Pembrey, was a bun-eating contest. Two sappers set out to eat fourteen buns, the prize to go to the man who got through the lot in the quickest time. The winner ate his fourteen in 25 minutes, his opponent finishing five minutes later.

GAMBLING MAY WRECK GAME AT PELICANVILLE

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Southern League owes itself the duty of cleaning out the baseball gamblers at New Orleans.

That city, by far the largest in the league, should be the vertebra of the circuit. Instead, it is only an appendix—and a decidedly diseased appendix at that.

I've talked with a lot of managers and players in this league, firing at all of them the question, "What's the matter with New Orleans?"

Some of them didn't know.

The rest agreed.

"Too much gambling."

It is understood that gambling runs practically wide open in the New Orleans stands—that you can get a bet on anything from the outcome of the pennant race to the question of whether the next effort of the pitcher will be a ball or a strike.

* * *

GAMBLING ruins baseball wherever it gets a foothold. It makes knockers. It creates a suspicion of faking. It drives respectable people away from the games.

What New Orleans needs is a house cleaning.

The gamblers should be run out of the stands and kept out. Every effort should be made to keep down gambling on games to the minimum.

It is really up to President Kavanaugh to take a look into this question. The interests of the league can be protected in no other way. The New Orleans Baseball Association can't handle the question, and has proved it.

The league is sickening because of this festering sore.

Somebody phone Old Doctor Kavanaugh!

* * *

IT is sort of a pathetic coincidence that Jud Daley is to succeed Spencer at New Orleans. They are chips off the same block—or should we say tusk?

Judson doesn't seem to be hitting them as of old. It can't be that he is aging. So probably he's in sort of a slump.

He's a great card for any club, on account of his cutting-up and his kidding of the bleachers, and is worth his pay as a comedian.

* * *

SEVERAL men, well known in Dixie, are figuring prominently in the International League these days. Derrick is batting .346 with Baltimore, and is leading the league. Ed Lafitte leads the Providence batters with .329. Swacina and Bill Zimmerman, both former Southern Leaguers, are hitting moderately hard with the Newark club "Swats" has a mark of .302 to his credit, while "Heinie" is going at a .281 clip.

* * *

THIS Clark that the Crackers have just picked up appears to be one of the champion wild men of organized baseball. Until a few days ago he belonged to the Highlanders. In a game in St. Louis, Chance stuck him in. He started by giving Brier four successive high ones. Pratt waited for four that didn't come near the plate. It was the same for Johnston.

Having pitched twelve successive balls, Wallace was next. Bob got a ball, and then, to the surprise of everybody, Clark pitched a strike. The next three were balls, though, and Chance yanked his recruit southpaw with the record of one strike in seventeen tries.

About sunset, Chance sold him to Clark Griffith.

Clark's big league career dates back to the days when Chase was managing the New York team. Arthur Irwin tipped Chase off to the fact that Clark had worlds of stuff. Chase sent "King" Brockett out to Sioux City to look Clark over, and, on the "King's" favorable report, Chase signed the southpaw.

Clark, upon being brought to civilization, proved wild as a bat. He had more stuff than Marquard and less control than Lefty Russell. He was shifted around a bit. Last season, he started with Rochester and was then sent to the Northwestern League. He was a successful twirler there, despite the fact that he issued AN AVERAGE OF NEARLY A BASE ON BALLS TO AN INNING.

It is doubtful if the world has ever seen a man wilder than Clark in his wildest moments. But when he has control, they couldn't hit him with a fishnet.

Clark will be another case for the attention of Old Reliable Joe Dunn. The man will be put under Joe's coaching. Maybe, Joseph can make a pitcher out of him. Any time Clark starts and is right, it's all over. Any time he's wild—good evening.

GOODMAN GETS DECISION.

DENT OR BRADY TO-DAY; LOCALS EXPECT TO WIN

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18.—Bill Smith is going to shoot King Brady or "Slight" Dent against the Pelicans to-day. And we win it sure!

Those chaps were lucky to "get by" yesterday. They found us worn out after an awful trip, they got to an injured pitcher and it was all off. And at that we stalled them along for ten innings. We'll get them to-day.

Conzelman didn't have the stuff yesterday he had before he was hurt. He had no control over his curve and his fast ball did not break as it used to.

We got away in front as usual, scoring three runs in the first inning. They came back at us for a tie in the second and went out ahead in the fourth. In the seventh they added another on a wild pitch. We tied it up in our half of the eighth on doubles by Alperman and Bisland and my single.

In the fatal tenth, with two gone, Angemeier's single scored Williams, who had walked, and the game was over.

We aren't in the least bothered by the loss of the game, even to the Pelicans. We have thirteen more on our trip. If we can break even, we ask no more. Our long stay at home will give us the chance we want to win the pennant.

CUMMINGS BEATS THOMAS.

ANACONDA, MONT., July 18.—Dan Cummings, of Chicago, was given the decision over Young Joe Thomas, featherweight, at the end of twelve fast rounds of fighting last night.

FODDER FOR FANS

Although the National and American League races are far from ended, Ban Johnson and other members of the National Commission have already begun to plan for the 1913 world's series. Johnson says that in the event the Giants and Athletics win in their respective leagues the games will be played in New York and Philadelphia on alternate days.

* * *

Second Baseman Ted Cathers and Left Fielder Lee Magee, of the Cardinals, are wearing bruises and scratches to-day as the result of an old-fashioned fist fight in which they indulged during the Giants-Cardinals double-header. Cathers intimated that Magee couldn't catch a cold and to disprove this assertion Magee sailed into his fellow-player. Both were put out of the game.

* * *

Larry Chappelle, the hard-hitting outfielder of the American Association for whom Charles Comiskey, owner of the White Sox, paid $15,000, is scheduled to apear in a White Sox uniform this afternoon for the first time. Chappelle disappeared en route from Milwaukee to Chicago, but turned up in McCloskey, Ill. He went to visit his mother.

* * *

Minus two vets, Hans Wagner and Catcher Gibson, the Pirates managed to take the first game of their four-game series with the Dodgers.

* * *

The Athletics are now leading the American League with 110 points separating them from the Naps.

* * *

Clarke Griffith, of the Senators, predicts that the Athletics will not win the American League pennant, despite their present big lead. He also predicts that Plank and Bender will soon cave in.

* * *

Carl Cashion, the young star pitcher of the Senators, who has been out of the game for some time with a sore arm, will not be able to play again this season.

* * *

Roy Wilkinson, a semi-professional pitcher of Rochester, N. Y., has been signed up by the Naps.

* * *

Pitcher Boak, of the Akron, Ohio, club, of the Interstate League, has been bought by the Cardinals.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY AT PONCE

At Ponce DeLeon park Saturday afternoon the two leading clubs of the Sunday School League will meet in a double-header. In the absence of Billy Smith's Crackers, fans in large numbers are expected to provide the best crowd of the Sunday school season for the Saturday afternoon games.

The First Baptist team, leading the league with twelve straight victories and no defeats, has been playing such ball as to attract sidewise glances from the pennant races of the larger leagues, and is determined to add two more wins Saturday. The S. V. D. club, in second place, with seven victories and three defeats, is equally determined to break up the winning streak of the Baptists. Both teams will be in classiest condition for the double-header Saturday, which is scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

"I DIDN'T RESIGN, I WAS FIRED," SAYS JAKE STAHL

BOSTON, July 18.—"I didn't resign from the Red Sox; I was fired," declared Jake Stahl, when he arrived in Boston. "I gave the Red Sox the best of the baseball that was in me. I was with them heart and soul. That club was the only one which I was ever really interested in. And I wish them all the best of success," continued Stahl.

SOUTH MICHIGAN TEAMS PLAY 20-INNING GAME

ADRIAN, MICH., July 18.—Battle Creek and Adrian, the leading teams in the Southern Michigan League, yesterday played twenty innings to a tie, each scoring one run before darkness ended the struggle. Manager Jenkins, of Adrian, in the fourth inning, singled, and advancing on a sacrifice hit and a passed ball, was scored on a sacrifice fly. Pitcher McDonald, of Battle Creek, tripled in the sixth and scored on an error. Loomis, Adrian's pitcher, struck out nineteen batters and issued one pass, purposely, in the twentieth inning. McDonald fanned sixteen and passed none.

BUSINESS.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Nor ever a soul to mutter,
Nor ever a voice to bawl.

Oh, well for the guys who lose!
They are only a bunch of dubs.
They get the hook and a vicious look
Like the manager of the Cubs.

And the gate receipts go on,
Though the manager may be nil,
And the magnates cry for a winning guy,
As they bark to the sound of the till.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Or the friends you have, though they hand you salve,
Will hammer you to the wall.

Frank Chance was once a catcher. All he catches now is a flock of Gehenna.

Despite the fact that the Tigers whopped a few wallops into the Athletics, there is a deep suspicion that whopping the Athletics is not going to become a popular pastime.

Looking over the sport pages, we note that Larry Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues. This is a great truth. Mr. Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues.

The fact that Messrs. McAleer and Stahl have split reminds us that both denied it. The only conclusion to be drawn is that they were prevaricating, or didn't know it was loaded.

Reading over the papers, one notes that there are bulky fields at Porter. But as for bulky purses that's something else again.

ODE TO A FIRST BASEMAN.

In the days of old
Jack Knight was sold,
As though he were a dub.
You cannot buy
That selfsame guy
While I am on this club.

The St. Louis Browns have protested a game won from them by the Yanks. If you are looking for nothing to worry about, this is it.

$13,500 IN CASH WAS PAID FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—A check for $13,500, in addition to Outfielder Beall and a catcher, covers the terms of transfer of Outfielder Chappelle, of Milwaukee, to the Chicago American League team, according to authoritative information today.

TEN-ROUND GO SCHEDULED.

Charley White, of Chicago, is scheduled to meet Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, in a ten-round fight at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Abel is in the city. White, it is said, will arrive to-day. The fighters have agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 p. m. White says he will not fight if Abel is one ounce over weight.

HOW TO ATTAIN GOLF BENEFITS TOLD BY EVANS

By "Chick" Evans.

IT is no doubt true that the majority of the golfers play simply for the exercise the game affords. Certainly golf furnishes an excellent opportunity for exercise, but it also supplies one of the finest studies in the world, and he who plays only for exercise misses half the pleasure. One can get a good deal of fun and exercise by just batting the ball around, yet surely much additional enjoyment can be found in attempting to discover the reasons that lie back of good or poor shots.

D. R. Forgan has said that "golf is the study of a lifetime," and this is undeniably true if one wishes to attain excellence. Every day the careful player can learn something about it and at the same time discover new obstacles to be overcome. It may be argued that the business man has no time to study a new game, but a little more care in playing would require but little more time.

There is a great pleasure in knowing how a thing is done, and no great progress can be made unless the underlying reasons for success are understood. Accidents happen, of course, and fortune is proverbially fickle, but she, like providence, is a little more inclined to help those who help themselves.

There is a great deal of good golf literature to be obtained at present, and I have no doubt a great deal of information can be obtained in that way. Personally, I have never read a book on golf except in the most casual manner, but I grew up on a golf links, and, at the observing age, learned my golf from observation. I believe strongly in books, however, and I think, if they are closely followed, they can be of much assistance to the beginner. This fall I intend to read as many golf books as I can lay my hands on, and I hope thereby to improve my game.

BRITTON REAL OPPONENT FOR TITLE HOLDER

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Not since the days when Frank Garrard and Martin Duffy, of this city, looked to be pretty fair championship material in the lightweight class have the local fight fans been so anxious to see a Chicagoan get a crack at the title. Neither Garrard nor Duffy ever made good in their day, but they were just as highly regarded along in the late 90s as are Jack Britton and Packey McFarland, present-day Chicago champions. Both Jack and Packey have a world of friends right here, and to say that they have their ears to the ground listening for some sort of a favorable report from the champion on the different propositions that have been hurled at him is putting it mildly.

* * *

PACKEY, while not issuing any direct challenges, has let it be made known to Ritchie that nothing would delight him more than to take him on in a 20-round contest, providing the weight bars be lowered just a little more, say another pound, letting the stock yards favorite in at 135 pounds, with the scaling done several hours in advance of the battle's start. With a foe of the McFarland caliber it is not likely that the champion will consent at all to any such an arrangement. He insisted upon 134 pounds for Rivers, and then trimmed the Los Angeles lad to the queen's taste, if queens have any particular taste in such matters. But from 134 pounds three hours or so before to 135 pounds five or six hours before is a vast gap that even the keen Ritchie eye is not likely to measure lightly.

* * *

BUT the Britton case is hugely different. Here is a boy who boldly flaunts this offer in the champion's face: "Make the weight, any figure that you choose," and then awaits the answer. Now, that leaves absolutely no loopholes for excuse or room for a single argument. Britton simply does not care what the poundage is, says so, and there rests his case. What will the answer be, to say nothing of the harvest?

* * *

NO sane man could ever accuse Willie Ritchie of cowardice. The man who jumped into the breach with Freddie Welch when Ad Wolgast was taken to the hospital and fought the English star almost to a standstill with but a few hours notice, then whaled Ad Wolgast out of his title and went in and slugged with Joe Rivers at the latter's own game, is possessed, as Bill Naughton says, of a lion's heart. But Willie is a financier along with his other accomplishments and is not likely to enter into any contracts that do not promise the brightest of monetary returns. There isn't a doubt that if some promoter can see his way clear to offering the right sort of a prize for the champion he will lend himself to the match. Then we will see a real old-time battle between two of the greatest men that ever drew on a pair of gloves.

Pelky-Smith Battle For Sept. 1—Maybe

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Arthur Pelky and his manager, Tommy Burns, are in town. Pelky came here in quest of ring battles, and picked as his choice for first battle "Gunboat" Smith. Burns and his fighter held a long conference with Jimmy Coffroth, and if arrangements can be made Pelky and Smith will furnish the Labor Day card in this city. Pelky had little to say, Burns doing all the talking.

"There will be a general disposition to look upon Pelky as a ring accident, just as the people tagged Willie Ritchie as a false alarm," said Burns.

"This is a mistake. My man has had 33 fights without having had a decision given against him. He made Jess Willard quit cold, and he stopped Jim Barry in five rounds. All that he needs is the opportunity to prove that he is the best heavyweight boxer in the game to-day."

WISCONSIN BOXING BILL IS SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—Governor Francis McGovern has signed the Hedding boxing bill and the sport becomes legalized in Wisconsin the same as in New York State.

Governor McGovern had protests from many sources, but stated that he considered that in view of thousands of petitions in favor of the sport it was only just to the majority that they should be given a chance to show that boxing under proper conditions is much better than under no law at all.

It will now be up to the Governor to appoint a commission to handle the boxing game in the State.

Dixie Handicap To Be Thriller

Six Men on Track at Once

IF they get through the Dixie Handicap at the Motordrome to-night without smearing a half-dozen riders all over the track they have pulled the race miracle of the year. For they are going to start six riders in this event, three of them with a lap lead over the other three. And the scratch men are going to try to catch the handicap men within four miles.

This affair will be a loud noise. Nothing can stop it. Every time they get four riders on the track at once it looks as though all of them were going to break their neck. With six on it in a handicap race, which will mean that three of the men must ride their bally heads off to catch the other three, there should be more excitement than the local Drome ever dreamed of before.

This will not be a team race, as might be judged from the description. Of course, the handicap men will team together at the start, as a means of keeping ahead. And the scratch men will hang together to lend each other a pace in their effort to catch up. But once the scratch men get within striking distance, it will be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. When the three pursuing riders reach the three handicap men and all six of them tie up in an effort to gain the leadership anything may happen. Of course, the handicap men will never give an inch. If they can spread all over the track they will do it. That means that the men coming from behind at 85 miles an hour must worm their way through.

This will unquestionably be a big race. It will be fast because the scratch men must overcome a quarter of a mile lead in four miles. It will be dangerous and sensational of necessity because six men will be on the track at one time. And the winner is surely hard to pick.

The full program follows:

COACH J. W. HEISMAN, OF YELLOW JACKETS, WRITES ABOUT:

Ball Players That Tech Has Turned Out

By J. W. Heisman.

SO many college players are breaking into professional ball these days, and so many of them with great success, that the thing no longer occasions the surprise and comment that used to ensue. Something like 25 years ago, when I was attending a New England college, I can remember with what dumbfoundment we learned one day that one of our varsity players had received an offer from Boston. It tickled us nearly to death!

* * *

Among Southern colleges, Tech early took the lead in this respect by sending the great Henley straight to the big show. Unless my memory fails me badly, it was to the Athletics that Henley went, and it was about thirteen years ago. Even at that early date, when hardly any other professional managers would look at a college player, Connie Mack had his eyes wide open as to their possible usefulness.

When Henley first went to Tech he played first base, and he played it well. He was about 6 feet 1 inch tall, but very slender. His arms were very strong, and he had a fine free shoulder swing. Rather a handsome chap, this Henley, and a good, jovial fellow. Came from the little hamlet of Jasper, I believe, in North Georgia, the section that also sent Craig Day and DeWitt Poole to Tech—two other awfully good players and pitchers, who, however, never went into professional ball.

After seevral years of usefulness in the big league Henley was sent to the Rochester club, where he put in a couple more years of good work. But for some reason, his health was steadily failing him and finally he had to give it up. Just where he is to-to-day, I can not say. I know he went to Florida for a while in search of improved health, and perhaps he found it; at least we all hope so.

At the time Weldon was at the zenith of his glory as a college pitcher, Mercer was turning out some exceedingly strong teams. Their mainstay on the mound was the unforgotten Will Gunn, now a successful architect in Macon. It will have to be given up that Gunn was some gun himself when it came to making a noise like a pitcher, and endless were the arguments of that day in rah rah circles as to which was the better. I am not going into a history of the friendly feud, but it is worth observing that when the two teams finally did face each other at old Brisbine Park, with their respective stars down on the score card to do the hurling, there was some crowd present to witness the ceremonies, and some little excitement was had. The game was won by Tech; score, 30 to 0.

* * *

ANOTHER great picher that Tech turned out about the same time that Henley was absorbing all the limelight, was little Jimmy Lavendar, now with the Chicago Cubs. It would perhaps be more correct to say that Tech turned Jimmy out, or that it turned out an engineer, not that it turned out another pitcher, for, at that time, Jimmy didn't play ball at all, at least he never went out for the varsity; and so it is merely an accident that his youthful career was in any way associated with Tech's.

Lavendar was born and reared in South Georgia. He had seen a picture or two of a baseball before coming to Tech, but didn't care enough for the game to even come out and try for the team. It was after leaving Tech that his acquaintance with the pellet grew into a thing of beauty; and, after slamming the sphere around corner lots for a short time, it was found that Jimmy had the makings of a really, truly pitcher.

It was while doing stellar work with the Providence team of the Eastern League that Lavendar attracted Chicago's attention. Now, Jimmy is one of the "its" of the Cubs, and promises to remain one for some years yet.

* * *

TWO Atlanta boys attending Tech were the next to break into the professional class, and they both made good from the jump. One of these was Sam Woodward, the other, Jim Ison. The former was captain and catcher of my 1904 Tech team, while Jim was official first-sacker of the same aggregation.

Woodward was rather small for a catcher, but he had plenty of nerve, heaps of judgment, always kept cool, had a fine arm, was quick as a cat, and made a fine lead-off man, as he batted from the port side. Sam's favorite word of encouragement to his pitchers—Poole, Day and Butler—was "Beauty" after every pitched ball, but each time in a different intonation and with varying inflection and accents—and this quite regardless, in my opinion, of whether the ball was really a beauty or a pumpkin.

Sam went to the Cotton States with Bernie McCay, where he played fine ball; but a blow on the head by a pitched ball came near to putting out his light. It took him quite a long time to recover. Later, Sam went to the Carolina League, and for several seasons managed the Anderson, S. C. club with signal success. He is now engaged in business in Atlanta and is making a success of life as president of the Woodward Electric Company.

By the way, during the college season of 1904, Sam caught every inning of every game without making a single error, and I gave him All-Southern catcher for it.

Jim Isom was one of the hardest-hitting first basemen I ever saw in college ranks. He was a godd, willing, cheery, all-around player and my clean-up man, which was some distinction with a team that had five men on its roster all batting over .400.

I forget what professional team Jim first joined, but he never had any trouble holding his berth right from the jump. He played several very successful seasons with Macon, where he again stung the pill hard, and he also starred in the Virginia League at second base for the Richmond club. Here he was an even better fielder than at first base.

Jimmy found an opportunity to go into a lucrative business here in Atlanta several years ago and decided to give up the game for good, though it cost him a pang or two to do so. Now, he is fat, happy and making money in the Gate City.

Later, I will tell of some other players Tech has turned out.

DETROIT, MICH., July 18.—President Ban Johnson announced that Ty Cobb, suspended recently for an argument with Umpire Hildebrand, will be back in the game to-day.

Best Bet Is to Play Champions

Title Holders Have Big Shade

By Left Hook.

HERE'S a little tip for the men who bet good con on the results of encounters in the boxing arena. Never stop betting on a champion of any class until he has been beaten. The suggestion of such a theme for a little fighting story is brought up by the manner in which the Joe Rivers supporters lost so heavily on the Los Angeles boy in his battle with Willie Ritchie, in San Francisco, July 4. Incidentally, the idea of it was brought out forcibly by some remarks that Battling Nelson made the day after the holiday while the famous iron man of the lightweight class was discussing results and congratulating himself on having picked six out of seven winners after having bet personally on three of them and failing to get down on the one loser that he picked.

* * *

IT is a foolish thing to bet against a champion, even if you don't like him personally and haven't such a high opinion of his fistic merits, because, according to Bat Nelson, champions always win a lot of battles in a row after they attain the title and have a big natural shade in all of their contests. The argument is a sound one, because champions, after annexing titles, do not make the kind of matches that they can not win—and they know they can win them when they make them. Mind you, this is not an intimation that there is anything wrong or any skulduggery practiced by any of them. But the average champion is a pretty wise sort of a gink. He knows that to keep a title is to make plenty of money. Hence, he figures with the greatest of care, and when finally he signs to battle, it's about 3 to 1 that he is going to win.

* * *

AND another thing worth figuring is that referees have natural leanings toward champions and don't take titles away from them without the very best of cause. Which is a mighty strong point in favor of the champion when he starts into action. But, of course, the strongest point of all is the fact, borne out by many a precedent, that champions almost always win a bunch of fights before being compelled to resign the top rung of the ladder.

NEW 'JIM CROW' LAW OFFERED IN SENATE

Provides Separate Cars in Cities of Over 20,000—Smith Verdict Bill Passed.

By a vote of 28 to 12 the Georgia Senate Friday morning passed Senator Smith's bill providing for verdicts and judgments at the appearance term of city and superior courts upon suits on unconditional contracts and verified accounts.

When President Anderson called for an yea-and-nay vote Senator Watts of the Eleventh, proposed an amendment providing that "should the boll weevil strike Georgia no debt of any kind shall be collected within ten years thereafter." The amendment was thrown out amid laughter.

The most important bill introduced in the Senate Friday morning was one by Senator Kea of the Sixteenth requiring all street railway companies in cities of more than 20.000 inhabitants to furnish separate cars for white and negro passengers and in cities of less than 20,000 inhabitants to furnish separate compartments.

Nominations Confirmed.

Senator Sweat of the Fifth introduced a bill providing for the authorization of the execution of a lost or destroyed deed to be proved as to land in any county in which recorded.

The Senate in executive session concurred unanimously in the following nominations by the Governor:

Miller S. Bell to be a member of the board of directors of the Georgia Normal and Industrial College for six years, from January 6, 1914, for Baldwin County.

Ben M. Turnipseed to be judge of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 29, 1913.

P. S. King to be Solicitor of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 27, 1913.

S. H. Sibley to be judge of the City Court of Greensboro for four years, from September 17, 1913.

S. L. Drawdy to be judge of the County Court of Clinch County for four years, from October 28, 1913.

W. T. Dickerson to be Solicitor of the County Court of Clinch County for two years, from October 28, 1913.

Local Bills Are Passed.

Local bills were passed by the Senate as follows:

By Elkins of the Fifteenth, amending an act creating the charter of the City Court of Fitzgerald.

By Bush of the Eighth, amending an act incorporating the town of Colquitt.

By Sweat of the Fifth, amending an act creating a Board of Road Commissioners for Ware County.

By Parrish of the Seventh, amending an act creating the City Code of Statesboro.

The Educational Committee reported favorably on the free kindergarten bill, which probably will come up for passage in the House Monday.

12 HURT IN TRAIN CRASH.

CLEVELAND, July 18.—Twelve persons were injured, eight seriously, when a fast express train telescoped a standing passenger train on the Lake Shore Railway near Perry, Ohio, to-day.

PLAN POSTAL ORGANIZATION.

MACON.—The assistant postmasters of Georgia will meet in Albany on July 26 and perfect the organization of the Georgia Assistant Postmasters' Association.

Mediation Board Head a Georgian; Well Known Here

WASHINGTON, July 18.—President Wilson has selected William L. Chambers, of the District of Columbia, to be commissioner of mediation and counciliation, under the Newlands act, and G. W. Hanger as his assistant. Their names will be sent to the Senate to-day.

The other two members of the new board will be Judge Martin Knapp, of the United States Commerce Court, and Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

William Lea Chambers is a native Georgian and well remembered in Atlanta as presiding judge last fall in the arbitration under the Erdman act of the Georgia Railroad strike.

Judge Chambers was born at Columbus March 4, 1852, and received his education at Emory College, Oxford, from which institution he received an honorary LL.D. degree in 1909 in recognition of diplomatic and scholarly attainments. He taught school two years and was admitted to the bar in 1873. He married Laura Ligon Clopton, daughter of Justice David Clopton, of the Supreme Court of Alabama.

In 1888 Judge Chambers was president of the First National Bank of Montgomery, Ala., when he removed to Northern Alabama to head the association which founded Sheffield.

Judge Chambers was the American member of the commission under the Berlin treaty of 1890 between Germany, England and the United States; Chief Justice of the International Court of Samoa; was on the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, and is a member of the Alabama Historical Society, the Archaeological Institute of America and the National Geographic Society, etc.

Battle for Painter Organs Continues

BALTIMORE, July 18.—Today's session of the fight in the Circuit Court for the possession of the viscera of the late E. O. Painter, of Jacksonville, was taken up by efforts by employees of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, to show that representatives of that company had not been permitted to be present when the analysis of the organs of Painter was made.

It is likely that the case will continue for some time before Judge Duffy can hand down a decision on the petition of the guaranty company, in which the deceased was insured for $20,000, that a receiver be appointed for his vital organs.

SMALL INVESTOR CAN BUY FIRM BONDS NOW

B. C. Forbes Points Out Advantage Paper in Denomination of $10 Gives to All.

By B. C. FORBES.

The small investor of to-day, if wisely guided, will be a larger investor to-morrow, since Money makes money.

* * *

In America poor people have lost shamefully through being allured into gilded traps by unscrupulous promoters and "brokers." Swindling has cost the unwary upward of $200,000,000 in one year. It has been checked to some extent. The dissemination of correct information by newspapers and magazines has helped. The postal authorities have queered a good many clever games. In some States laws have been passed to severely punish stock swindlers and their kind.

* * *

The issuance of high-grade securities in small denominations has contributed invaluably to driving out fake stuff. There is to-day no need for even the smallest investor turning to worthless stocks and bonds, for he or she can buy the best in as low as $10 quantities. This development is of far-reaching importance.

* * *

Discussing the investment opportunities now within reach in the current issue of Hearst's Magazine, I point out:

"You can now buy $10 bonds.

"New York City has taken the lead in bringing the highest grade of security within reach of the most modest purse. The results that will flow from this innovation can not be fully grasped. It should, and probably will, mean that Americans, like the French, will become a nation of thrifty investors. In France the peasants can buy safe bonds of very small denomination, but in lordly, opulent, big-scale America nothing less than $1,000 bonds used to be issued, so indifferent to small investors were our railroads, our industrial corporations and our other large borrowers.

* * *

"So keen, however, has become the struggle for capital all over the world that even the proudest applicants for funds—governments, States, municipalities, railroad systems and trusts—are anxious to cater to those who have saved, not thousands, but hundreds or even tens of dollars. Of late $100 bonds have come into vogue.

* * *

"And now New York City is making a specialty of $10 bonds. Their yield is about 4 1-2 per cent.

* * *

"Now, 4 1-2 per cent is more than savings banks pay, and the risk is absolutely negligible. While those whose nestegg is very tiny can not do better than place it in a strong, carefully managed savings bank, the advisability of buying a good bond should be seriously considered by those who have accumulated several hundred dollars or more. On $1,000 the difference between 3 1-2 per cent and 4 1-2 per cent is $10 every year Not much, do you say?

* * *

"The difference in twenty years, at compound interest, would lay the foundation for a nice savings account for your son or daughter. One thousand dollars at 4 1-2 per cent compound interest become $2,000 in less than sixteen years, whereas money at 3 1-2 per cent takes more than twenty years to double itself. And remember that thrift begets thrift. Just as 'nothing succeeds like success,' nothing stimulates saving like saving. You can not begin a day too soon. The Government one day may imitate European nations by adopting old age pensions, but what self-respecting, healthy person would compare the satisfaction to be derived from his own savings with the feeling that would accompany a dole from the national purse?

* * *

"The buyer of one bond wants to obtain another as soon as he possibly can. Two $100 bonds paying 3 1-2 per cent bring $9 a year. Five paying 5 per cent—as many sound bonds do—net $25 each year, and, of course, this $25 interest helps to get another bond.

* * *

"The investor buys for income.

"The speculator buys for fluctuations in quotations.

"The investor seeks to avoid risk.

"The speculator 'takes a chance.'

"The investor in a safe bond is not hurt by temporary declines in the market price; his income is sure as long as the bond runs, and he can get full face value for it when it matures.

"The speculator's profits are not limited. He buys for possibilities and changes.

"Investment should be practiced by all persons of ordinary means.

* * *

"Speculation should be left to those who can afford to incur risks and to lose money, to those who have special opportunities for gathering and analyzing basic information, to those whose regular duties do not call for much time or thought—for speculation is insidious; it excites, it enervates, it distracts attention from other matters, it often unbalances judgment, it sometimes develops into a mania and ends in disaster. 'There are two classes of people who should not speculate,' said a wise man—'those who can afford it and those who can't.'"

Slays Rich Husband By Light of Match

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—The mystery in the death of Manuel E. DeValle, wealthy ranch owner, who was found dead in bed Wednesday, was cleared to-day. Mrs. Mary E. DeValle confessed that she killed her husband. She said:

"My husband lay on the bed jabbering in a drunken stupor. I could see him faintly by the half light of the moon. I lighted a match and walked until I was within a foot of him. Then I lighted another match, aimed my revolver and fired."

House Kills Inquiry Into Caminetti Case

WASHINGTON, July 18.—By a vote of 133 to 84, the House to-day tabled the Kahn resolution for an inquiry into the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave cases without allowing debate.

On a vote by tellers, the House favored tabling the Kahn resolution, 99 to 75, but Minority Leader Mann, starting a filibuster, secured a roll call.

Thursday's 97 Mark For Heat Threatened

With a record temperature of 83 degrees at 8 o'clock, as registered by he official thermometer, Friday promises to go Thursday one better along heat lines. According to all signs, Thursday's high mark of 97 degrees probably will be broken by at least one degree.

The weather man says there is little prospect of rain for several days.

War Veteran Sued For Balm by Girl, 16

PATERSON, N. J., July 18.—Miss Emma Mahanney, 16, has sued John Wolf, 70, a war veteran, for breach of promise.

Miss Mahanney's counsel said the couple became engaged and were making arrangements for the wedding when Wolf changed his mind. Miss Mahanney asks for $25,000.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Wheat traders regarded the market last night as a sale on all bulges. Speculation has dropped off some, however, and many traders think the market is in no condition to stand any heavy selling. Many of the local speculators are bullish on oats and bearish on corn. It was noticeable, however, that comparatively little new outside buying is coming into oats because of their recent slump when the trade was long, forcing out a large number of holders.

"Specialists believe that oats at present prices have merit."

* * *

Chicago drizzling rain, 68 degrees; Minneapolis clear, 68; Peoria clear, 76; no rain; Terre Haute clear, 80; Springfield clear, 78; no rain; Omaha drizzling, 70; half-hour good rain this morning; Kansas City, St. Louis, 85.

* * *

St. Paul wires: "The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, this morning says prospects in Minnesota for abundant harvest of all grains are excellent, according to D. A. Woods, of the Minnesota State University. He says the crops were not injured by the recent rains. He thinks the crop yield as a whole will average up about same as last year. Corn crop will be much larger."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co., says:

"Wheat—Map shows further rains in spring wheat country, with temperatures about the same as yesterday. It looks as though we might have a little lower market to-day.

"Corn—Temperatures east of the River are generally lower, but no rains reported in Illinois, except immediate vicinity of Chicago. Kansas City and St. Louis again show high temperatures, but it is cooler in Nebraska, with light rain at Omaha this morning. Look for lower market to-day, but would not press sales on decline.

"Oats—Market is showing steadier undertone, with moderate increase in outside buying.

"Provisions—Commission houses seem to have more buying orders, the selling being chiefly in way of profit-taking. Market continues very firm."

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "Corn prospects along Illinois Central, Chicago to St. Louis, very much mixed, but general average is poor. Kankakee to Farmer City good; thence to Springfield spotted, and south of Springfield poor; plenty of moisture to Farmer City, but from there south alternate streaks of rain and drouth.

"Tassel just beginning to show in few earliest fields, but growth will not average more than hip high, and south of Springfield there are thousands of acres not knee high. Oats harvest begun; best fields below average and crop is poorest in years."

* * *

The market was oversold and local crowd is covering short wheat. Slaughtee cable reports political complications in Austria and Russia and bad crops from England.

* * *

Carmi, Ill., to St. Louis, country very dry. Average corn promise in the poor counties and very good near St. Louis.

* * *

The thrashing reports on oats coming pretty bad and we believe it would be good judgment to at least cover and stay off the short side for a while.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.

PAY $9.60 FOR HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Another rung of the ladder was mounted by the hog market when $9.60 was paid for shipping grades. The stereotyped 5 to 10c advance was recorded and only trash had to sell under the 9c line. Eastern demand is setting the pace. Eleven markets had 68,000, against 66,000 last week. Cattle trade was nominally steady on a light run, but trade in the sheep house was demoralized, owing to heavy receipts direct to packers from the Ohio River.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Chisholm & Chapman: We would prefer purchases for moderate profits.

Josephthal, Louchheim & Co.: We continue to advise sales on all strong spots.

Miller & Co.: Prices are controlled by weather conditions.

STRONG SOURCES ADVANCE COTTON

Report of Deterioration in Texas and Bullish Mill Takings Frighten Shorts.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Influenced by weak cables and a bearish report by Cordill concerning conditions in Southwest Texas, the cotton market opened easy to-day, and first prices were unchanged to 3 points lower than Thursday's final. There was some covering on the decline by board room traders who went short on continued dry weather in Texas. This class of buying caused prices to advance 1 to 7 points from the initial level, with the exception of July and August, which increased their decline 2 to 4 points.

After the call, however, the entire list steadied with prices firmly maintained at the early high point. The strength of the market was chiefly attributed to some private reports from Texas indicating some deterioration in the crop; also Habersham King's review for the week, saying the crop was favorable over 80 per cent of the area and unfavorable over 10 per cent and injurious as to the remaining 10 per cent. The circular was more bearish than bullish, but the local shorts covered.

During the late forenoon the market was quiet and featureless.

The talk around the floor to-day reflected a decidedly more cheerful feeling with reference to legislative prospects. The weather map was considered favorable.

At the close the market was very steady with new crop positions at a net gain of 11 to 12 points; August 5 and July unchanged from the final quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Liverpool is droopy in futures and spots, the latter being quoted 3 points lower; sales only 6,000 bales.

Some scattered showers occurred over night in the lower central States, and the Atlantic Coast districts had some good rains; generally fair weather prevailed elsewhere, with little change in the range of temperatures. Indications are more favorable for some precipitation in West Texas, while increasing cloudiness and scattered showers are indicated for the territory east of the Mississippi River.

Several private reports from Texas say that old holdings are showing up on platforms, but that holders are not yet selling, owing to New York promises of high July-August squeeze prices. In respect to the present anxiety in regard to dry weather in Texas; it will be found interesting to know that Government records show that last year Texas had practically no rain from June 29 to August 29, whereas this year, Texas had a fine general rainfall up to July 5.

First trades here were at a decline of 3 points, but advices from New York of large buying by McFadden brokers soon rallied the market to 11.53 for October. There was a rumor that Fall River had cotton ready for delivery in New York and that a block of cotton was being shipped from Memphis for delivery here, but neither rumor has been confirmed so far.

The market is very steady with an eye on the weather in the West.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—Dry map seems responsible for the advance to-day. Central Texas reports no damage from drouth, but that rain is beginning to be needed, which seems sufficient in present limited market to cause small advance. Liverpool for the past two days was less active in spot sales and lower on futures, but American trade seems fearful that after so much good weather something is likely to happen.

Wool Beginning to Move More Freely

BOSTON, July 18.—New territory wools are beginning to move a little more freely both in and out of this market. Total sales the past week have been well over a million pounds, involving Territory and Texas wools, with a little California and foreign grades.

Fleeces remain very quiet, both here and in the country. Most of the Western buying is being done in Montana, where the bulk of the unsold Territory wool is now to be found. The London auction sales closed firm on fine wools and easy on crossbreeds. Indications are that England and the Continent are to have less active markets in the near future.

Until something more definite is known as to the terms of the new tariff bill when finally passed, no material improvement in sentiment or volume of sales is likely.

Receipts of wool in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

COTTON GOSSIP

Market dormant.

* * *

The volume of business transacted yesterday was perhaps the smallest of any day this year. Both elements are afraid to push their commitments in such a quiet market.

* * *

Boll weevil and the small stock of cotton is still discussed by the bulls.

* * *

Spot brokers are quoted with saying that the fear of a cotton tax is already diverting hedging business from this market to Liverpool.

* * *

Valdosta, Ga.: "Lowndes County has had good weather all along and crops are in the best condition they have ever been at this season of the year. Reports from some of the counties indicate that the drouth has done much damage to corn, but the cotton crop is in very good condition."

* * *

Texas City, Tex.: "Preparations are under way for the handling through Texas City next season of the largest movement of cotton the new port has ever enjoyed. It is conservatively estimated that in view of the large crop in prospect Texas City will handle in excess of 1,000,000 bales. This season to date 666,851 bales have been received and receipts to August 31, the end of the present cotton year, will probably bring the total near to 750,000 bales."

* * *

Taylor, Tex.: "With only a hundred or more bales of the 1912-1913 season's crop of cotton still remaining in the hands of producers of this section of Williamson County, the total local receipts of cotton at Taylor to date are 35,209 bales since the first day of last August. Ginners are overhauling their plants for the opening of the new season, beginning August 1. The first bales of the new crop are expected here about that time."

* * *

Reports to The Montgomery Advertiser last week indicated that as a whole the crop in Alabama looks well. Some sections report lack of rain. Where there has been rainfall, and there has been rain over the greater part of the State, cotton is reported in excellent condition, although the plant is reported late and much behind the growth expected for this time of the year.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows generally fair, except cloudy in lower central belt, parts of Alabama, Atlantic Coast. Scattered showers in Alabama and Mississippi and some good rains in Atlantic Coast districts. No rain in west. Temperatures about normal. Indications are far more favorable to a break in the dry spell in the west over Sunday. Increasing cloudiness, with some showers over the central and eastern belt.

Fort Worth, Tex., wires: "Our San Antonio agency says, 'Boll weevil danger minimized by heat spell. Little actual damage done. Crop looks splendid. Movement starts August 1, unless rain interferes.'"

GENERAL BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Possibilities of Big Advance in Near Future on Crop Prospects Causes Buying.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Canadian Pacific and New York, New Haven and Hartford were leaders of an upturn which involved a number of issues at the opening of the stock market to-day. Each scored a gain of 1⅞, although Canadian Pacific shaded at the end of half an hour.

Announcement of the resignation of President Mellen, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, apparently imparted strength to the stock instead of detracting from it.

The Mexican situation and continued hostilities in the Balkans furnished the bears with ammunition and a considerable section of the list was lower.

Among the advances were Amalgamated Copper, ¾; American Can, ½; Union Pacific, ¾; Southern Pacific, ⅝; Reading, ⅞; Pennsylvania ⅜, and American Smelting ⅝. The losses include New York Central, ⅛; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Chino Copper ⅛, and Great Northern preferred ⅛. United States Steel common was strong, opening at 54⅝ for a gain of ¾. Half an hour after the opening the list was strong, and an unusually large number of buying orders being executed. Later there was some profit-taking.

California and Mexican Petroleum were weak. California Petroleum sustained a loss of 3½ on reports that the dividends would be interrupted. Mexican Petroleum lost 2½ on account of the uncertainty surrounding conditions in Mexico.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were steady.

After the first fifteen minutes trading became similar to Thursday's dealings, most of the business being on the buying side.

Steel moved up more than 1 point and Southern Pacific rose 1 point to 93. Union Pacific, although the heaviest seller, lost its early gain of 1 point. Copper was up 1 point to 66⅞, and the same advances were recorded in Utah, Canadian Pacific and Lehigh Valley. California Petroleum experienced another decline, yielding 1¾ to 21¾. Call money loaned at 2¼.

The tone was steady in the last hour. A number of issues advanced over their noon level. California Petroleum held around 21¼ after being hammered by professionals. The bearish activity in this stock is regarded as a campaign on the part of the interested persons.

Union Pacific went to 148 for a net gain of 1⅞ on the day. Steel crossed 56. Amalgamated Copper was in active demand, selling around 67½ for a net gain of 1⅝.

The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

MODERN MILLER CROP REVIEW.

ST. LOUIS, July 18.—The winter wheat harvest is rapidly nearing completion under most favorable weather conditions. Reports of delayed harvesting are fewer than usual, and with the exception of occasional complaints of smut the quality of the wheat is practically perfect. The grain generally is of high order, not only as far as condition is concerned, but also in regard to flour-making qualities, the soft wheat especially yielding well.

CHICAGO, July 18.—A big export demand in wheat resulted in a reaction and an advance of nearly 1c from the bottom prices reached. Final gains for the day were ¼c to ½c. Only fifteen boat loads were reported by the Atlantic seaboard.

St. Louis reported a re-sale there of 110,000 bushels by an exporter, but the particulars were not given. Shorts were the principal buyers as the day wore away and there was a noticeable sprinkling of investment buying as well. Clearances from the seaboard were 307,000 bushels. World's shipments will be 10,000,000 bushels for the week, which is 700,000 bushels smaller than a year ago. Clearances for the week, 3,600,000 bushels of wheat, against less than half that amount a year ago.

Corn closed with advances of ½c to ⅝c and oats were up ¼c to ⅜c.

Provisions were 5c to 10c higher.

Plan Now for Next Winter's Food Supply

Get Good, Wholesome Variety Needed in Cold Months, While Not Scarce.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

If you are not already planning, I would advise you to begin now to get some of next winter's food supply for the chickens on the way. While few fowls are ever starved, there are a good many that do not get the good and wholesome variety that they are needing, especially in the cold months, when green stuff is rather scarce. Wheat, oats and corn make the bulk of the food supply for the average farm stock, and it is a good ration, if properly handled and heated up at times, such as parching the corn and browning the oats, etc., but it is the rough-and-ready foodstuff that we want to speak of. As I shall want to speak largely of the root crops, and they need to be kept in a cool place, I shall advise the use of a cellar. Throughout the Northern States, cellars are the rule, rather than the exceptions, under all houses built on the farms. These are usually divided into two compartments, one for the keeping of milk and the other for the storing of vegetables and root crops of various kinds. Upon large farms, where there is a lot of stock kept, the barn is often built upon a side hill with a cellar under a part of it for the storing of stock beets, cabbage and all kinds of vegetables that can be used for the stock in winter. These cellars keep them from freezing in winter and keep them cool in summer so they will not spoil. Of course, they are not put into the cellar until the latter part of the summer. Throughout the South these cellars are a novelty, as a rule. I wish they could become more common. Of course, it is not always practical to build them under the dwelling house after it is built, but one can fix up a very good one by using refuse stone, where it can be had, and digging into the side of a hill, walling with the stone, letting it set into the ground as much as possible to make it cooler; the door, or opening, to be on the low side of the cellar. All of it should be roofed with a good, double or lined roof, something that will keep out the great heat of the sun.

With a root cellar of this kind upon your place, you are in a position to take care of all kinds of good tubers and vegetables of various kinds that might otherwise go to waste and be of no benefit in any way. It is not too late to plant the large sugar or stock beets if the ground is well prepared; thoroughly fine and very deep, so that they can take right hold and grow without difficulty. Then there is the rutabaga turnip that will make a good crop late in the season, which is a good keeper as well as the heavy beet. Small heads of cabbage that are not marketable, when put into small hampers that will admit of a circulation of air, can be kept a long while in the cellar.

The short parts of clover or alfalfa, leaves, etc., should all be saved and stored in a dry place in the barn for the poultry in winter. A lot of large gunny sacks come in very handy for this work, as this stuff can be crowded into these sacks where they are easily handled and taken care of until wanted. With a good, rich piece of ground a nice crop of buckwheat can be raised, if planted right now; it matures quickly and makes a grain that the hens are very fond of late in the fall and winter when fed with corn. Plant a good variety of all the vegetable crops, for there are very few of them that the hens do not relish and are ready to take care of the surplus or refuse parts of them. Onions are another good crop, and one that will keep well in this root cellar, and they are a regular tonic for the hens in winter and are very much relished by them. Take care of every one of them. Let us wake up to the possibilities of these crops and the proper handling of them, as indicated. The taking care of these apparently insignificant things and turning them to account will be largely responsible for the per cent of profit that we will make from our poultry during the coming year. Others take advantage of these things to good account; why not you?

ON account of my health will sell for the bargain price of $4,250 my flour and lumber mills located at Dallas, Ga. This plant cost over $12,000 to build and is one of the best located and most complete and self-supporting plants in the South; equipped with four-stand Richmond City flouring system, two sets corn burrs, all in first-class condition, with plenty of warehouse room and as a custom mill it is almost without opposition. The planing mill is operated from same boilers, with separate engine. The planer house is 39x80 feet, two stories high, good room for cabinet workshop. On account of rapid decline in health I will sell this plant for $4,500, on easy terms; it is nicely located on Southern Railway sidetrack. Trestle for dumping coal at boiler. REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

C. H. Johnson Will Build Manufactory—Small Sales Recorded—Crowd Due at Realty Election.

Signs point to early activity on Whitehall street as a wholesale and manufacturing thoroughfare south of Trinity avenue. Application was made Friday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays by C. H. Johnson to construct a two-story reinforced concrete building at No. 757 Whitehall, to cost $10,000. May & Wimbish are the contractors. The ground floor dimensions are 75 by 100 feet.

Builders who expected to put wholesale houses on lower Whitehall are holding up somewhat because of the Whitehall regrading project, but the manufacturers seeking railroad frontage farther south are going ahead.

Interesting Deed Given.

John W. White, administrator of the estate of Charles M. White, has given an administrator's deed to W. D. White on an undivided five-sixths interest in valuable property in Atlanta. The figure is $16,600, and for the same amount W. D. White has made a warranty deed to Mrs. J. C. Clay, T. A. and J. M. White, of DeKalb County, and John W. White, Harvey and Katie Baker, the first four of whom get a one-sixth interest each and the latter two one-twelfth each.

The properties consist of the following:

The southwest corner of Linden way and a 10-foot alley 160 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 93 feet; on Linden way 202 1-2 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 100; on Spruce street 100 south of Dixie avenue, 100 by 195; the northeast corner of Bell and Greene streets, 37 1-2 by 97 1-2; George street 75 feet north of East Fair street, 67 1-2 by 80; Old Wheat street 63 1-2 east of North Boulevard, 33 by 99, and Nos. 20 and 22 Raspberry street, 50 by 70, between Bell and Fort streets.

Pine Street Purchase.

Pierre M. Bealer has sold to Ralph J. McGruder the northeast corner of East Pine and North Jackson streets, 70 by 125, for $6,000. Four thousand was cash. For value received the parcel has been transferred to W. E. Treadwell and S W. Carson.

West North Avenue Sale.

H. B. Watkins and D. J. Gunter have bought from Charles H. Sanford No. 164 West North avenue, 45 by 163, 42 feet west of McAfee street, for $5,000.

Fourteenth Street Transfer.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale May 15 of No. 278 East Fourteenth street to Dowse B. Donaldson from Marvin Conway for $5,000. The lot is 50 by 128 feet and 558 feet west of North Jackson street.

Building Delay Overcome.

Some months ago J. B. Thompson started excavating for three stores on Poplar street due north of the postoffice. Work was delayed, but now Mr. Thompson has been granted a permit to go ahead. The stores will cost $10,000.

Plans for Winnipeg Convention.

At the annual meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the Cafe Durand some definite plans for attending the Winnipeg convention will be discussed. The convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will be held July 28, 29 and 30, and twelve members of the local board are expected to go.

Atlanta is to compete for a cup presented by the Chicago Board in a report which Charles P. Glover and others will present. The attending cities will prepare these reports and the winner will be the city making the best showing. The judges have been named to decide the contest.

Return postal cards indicate to the officers of the local board that there will be a large attendance at Friday's dinner, inasmuch as the selection of officers for the ensuing year will be made. Charles P. Glover, retiring president, is expected to come in for encomiums at the hands of his fellow board members. Mr. Glover has served the board faithfully, and the real estate men have not forgotten the happy speech he made at the recent annual banquet.

College Park's Activity.

Spurred on by the struggles and successes of the Decatur Board of Trade and similar organizations, the citizens of College Park have decided to organize a citizens' committee-of-the-whole and to adopt a name suitable to such an organization. In this connection $25 has been offered to the public for a slogan. Anybody in the world, says the secretary of the board, can win $25 by revealing the secret that lies in a name. Suggestions must be in by July 31, because the board wants to get busy in its booster operations.

College Park is a town of 2,700 population, having jumped from 450 in 1900. It is the home of Cox College for women and the Georgia Military Academy. There are three public schools, five churches and plenty of nice places for people to live.

What IS an Opportunity for the Young Man?

There Are More Real Opportunities To-day Than Ever

(Copyright, 1913.)

We have received many letters from young men recently complaining of lack of opportunities. One in particular asked this question:

"Are the opportunities for the young man in the present day and generation equal to what they were twenty-five or fifty years ago—the days of his father and grandfather?"

It is a question that is probably asked in this country thousands of times every day. It is an important question to the individual. It is especially important to the nation. For the nation declines in which opportunities for the young diminish.

We feel that we can conscientiously and positively say that REAL opportunities are better to-day, both for young men and young women, than they ever have been.

Opportunities are greater BECAUSE POSSIBILITIES ARE GREATER.

Science, machinery, organization of all kinds, especially widespread publicity, have put into men's hands in less than fifty years a power undreamed of in the boyhood of our grandfathers.

Humanity and the individual are powerful, and their opportunities are great, in proportion to the machinery at their command.

Our opportunities were never so great as now, but this statement is made assuming that our correspondent means real and worthy opportunities.

Unfortunately, in this country, where sudden prosperity, great extravagance and uneasiness as to the future make money all-important, the word "opportunity" is apt to be a synonym for money. Money and opportunity are taken to mean the same thing.

But we purpose to answer this question quite apart from money.

Undoubtedly, the very able money-getter, no matter how humble his start, can build up to-day such a fortune an was unknown fifty years ago—or twenty-five years ago. There are young men without a penny that will earn (or, rather, more or less honestly ACCUMULATE) their hundreds of millions in the next few years, before the common sense of the country shall have realized the importance of regulating accumulation through increased distribution.

There will be, perhaps, fewer small, middle-class fortunes piled up, for there will be fewer men in business on their own account, thanks to the trusts.

Many men will earn very large salaries, ranging from $150,000 a year downward, and there will probably be very many more large INCOMES in the land within the next twenty-five years than there were in the last twenty-five years.

But when men earn SALARIES, they do not keep their money, and of the middle-class fortunes we shall have fewer.

But we trust that our correspondent will agree with us that money is a pretty mean measurement for opportunity.

What do the merely rich men really amount to? When they have been dead two or three years they are as unknown and forgotten as the pigs and chickens that they ate, the horses that they drove, or the flunkies whose time they wasted.

Opportunity means A CHANCE TO DO SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

And we assure our correspondent that the young man of to-day has a greater chance to do something worth while than a young man has ever had in the history of this country.

Our form of government is changing; the power has practically passed from the hands of the majority of the people into the hands of a majority of trust stockholders.

The young man who has genius and force, the ability to lead, and the character to refuse his share of the spoils, has a great opportunity to-day. It is the opportunity to return the government to the hands of those who are governed.

Working scientists are needed and sadly lacking in all the great departments of human thought. Every one of these new fields of intellectual activity, research and discovery offers unlimited opportunities to young men.

The newspapers, read by millions of human beings every day, enable the man who can think intelligently, the man who will be sincere and interesting at the same time to address (and, if he is able, to convince) a million or two millions of his fellow-citizens every day in the year. Was there ever a greater opportunity than this for influencing the thoughts of other men?

Every page of a scientific newspaper will show to the young man a glorious opportunity.

Every phase of our great industrial organization, every new development in the struggle of manhood against money, offers to the young man a great opportunity for public service.

The horrible poverty and wretchedness in the great cities, contrasting with ignorant and ostentatious wealth, offer opportunities unlimited to him who would help the poor to help themselves, to him able to cajole or frighten the rich into doing their duty.

This is the age of opportunity, but the young man must think for himself, strike out on his own line, make up his mind what to do, and stick at it, INSTEAD OF FOLLOWING ALONG THE USUAL LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE, doing the same as everybody else does, keeping at nothing in particular, and then wondering what has become of the world's opportunities.

The Metal Workers

From the Savage Who Raked From the Ashes a Crude Ball of Molten Mineral and Slag, With Which He Formed a Weapon of Defense, to the Safety Razor and Automobile, Metal is Supreme.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

II.

SOON after the British Parliament passed a law forbidbidding the cutting down of trees for fuel, Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition—in 1585—discovered iron in this country, and in 1608 a cargo of ore was shipped from Virginia to England and successfully smelted. In 1644, the first ironworks was erected near Lynn, Mass.

In 1740, Huntsman introduced the crucible process, and various mechanical devices were patented about that time, which materially stimulated the steel industry.

Bessemer's Process.

In 1838, the invention of J. B. Nielson—the introduction of a heated blast—caused a tremendous increase in output. This improvement was accompanied by Nasmyth's steam hammer, and in 1856 Bessemer gave to the world a process that was astonishing and remarkable. The discovery of the Bessemer process made it possible to produce steel at such low cost as to extend its use widely, and did much to supersede wrought iron in structural work.

Bessemer steel is now almost universally used for steel rails. The open-hearth system of Martin and Thomas, with the regenerative gas furnace of Siemens, supplies steel that is used in enormous quantities for all purposes.

Lately, science has again prevailed, and in the products of White and Taylor and Robert Hadfield we have steel that combines great malleableness with great hardness—a hardness that retains its cutting power even when at red heat.

And so we go marching on. From the savage who in wonder raked from the ashes of his fire a crude ball of molten mineral and slag, with which he formed a weapon of defense, to the safety-razor and the automobile of the twentieth century citizen, metal is supreme.

Carbon and Iron.

Steel is made by combining a certain proportion of carbon with iron.

The process determines its value and variety.

The most important of these processes are cementation, Bessemer and open hearth.

The first system consists of placing wrought iron between layers of charcoal in firebrick retorts. Yellow heat is applied for a certain period until the required grade of steel is obtained by the addition of the necessary carbon.

This is the steel from which edged tools are made.

The Bessemer process is directly opposite in principle to the cementation process. The Bessemer burns the carbon out of the cast iron.

This is done in an egg-shaped furnace known as a converter, lined with firebrick, and capable of being tilted. At the bottom, a number of tuyeres or nozzles conduct the air from a powerful blowing machine through the molten metal. This burns out the silicon and carbon, and after the alloy has been added and thoroughly mixed the metal is poured into ladles, and thence to casting molds.

The ingots are reheated and rolled into the forms desired for use.

In the open-hearth system, steel is made from a mixture of pig-iron and scrap-iron or steel, which is melted by direct contact with the flame in a regenerative gas furnace.

Steel Everywhere.

To follow these different processes—to see the ore—cold, dead stones—transformed into things of utility and beauty is a revelation and an education. We realize that the Missable Range and your wire fence are associated by applied gas. Steel is everywhere.

Circus horses, farm horses wear it for shoes. Wire rope in elevators, and in ships and mines—the telegraph and telephone wires, and all kinds of electrical wires—from the ignition wire in the automobile to the submarine cable. Aeroplane plates, boiler plates and castings. We sleep on steel springs and shave with a "safety."

We use nails and tacks, and the shafting for machinery is nothing more or less than big round wire!

We see all these things in the manufactured goods.

We talk of the tone of our piano, we boast of the wonderful speed, endurance and economy of up-keep of our autos.

We speak of cheap and rapid transportation; of our spring beds, our easy shave.

But do we ever associate these things with the men in the mills? I hope so.

:: Light and Candle-Power :-:

By THOMAS TAPPER

THERE are about 1,500,000,000 people on the earth.

Most of them are intent on getting.

A few are intent on giving.

The dynamo sends power along its lines of conductivity, and all the electric bulbs pour out light, each according to its candle-power.

If each of these bulbs was independent, if it could think and move for itself, the efficiency of the plant might fall considerably, for the individual bulb would then begin to act like a man.

Instead of remaining an agent for the distribution of power, it would be inspired by the ideas of the majority to let up on giving and to specialize on getting.

We can imagine a bulb throwing out its chest and wanting things. It might take a fancy to get a corner on dust and ashes. These are possessions through which the power can not shine; and while the bulb might easily work up a corner, it would soon find itself short on its main business of shedding light freely, plentifully and without obscuration.

Both Science and Religion are fairly agreed that a man is the end point of a line of conductivity which is attached to the great dynamo of the life of the universe.

He must be, then, by nature a distributor of the power that the dynamo sends into him.

HE HAS NO BUSINESS TO OBSCURE his light and weaken his force with the dust and ashes of life, for then the radiance will not shine through him.

HIS BUSINESS IS TO POUR OUT upon the world around him the great supply of power that flows into him.

This power, like electricity, plays many parts.

He can send it out as work-power, love, sympathy, generosity, health and so on through the whole list of things worth while.

And by so doing he is fulfilling his one natural function. He is strengthening himself for all time (now and forever) simply by using his power in the right direction.

In short, he has an advantage over the electric light bulbs, for he can use his candle-power to the limit, and by so doing increase it, instead of burning out the filament.

:-: MISTAKES :-:

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

GOD sent us here to make mistakes,
To strive, to fail, to re-begin,
To taste the tempting fruit of sin,
And find what bitter food it makes.
To miss the path, to go astray,
To wander blindly in the night;
But, searching, praying for the light,
Until at last we find the way.
And looking back along the past,
We know we needed all the strain
Of fear and doubt and strife and pain
To make us value peace at last.
Who fails, finds later triumph sweet;
Who stumbles once, walks then with care,
And knows the place to cry "beware"
To other unaccustomed feet.
Through strife the slumbering soul awakes,
We yearn on error's troubled route
The truths we could not prize without
The sorrow of our sad mistakes.

CRACKERS AVENGED; SCORE 11-1

REVERSAL OF VERDICTS DENIED

Apologizes Also to Porcine Family for Likening Woodward's Legal Knowledge to Theirs.

Recorder Nash Broyles penned a polite note of apology to the whole hog family Friday.

With the same hand he picked up the cudgles with which again to belabor his honor, Mayor Woodward.

The Mayor, quoth the Recorder, was the author of a ridiculous and absurd falsehood and it was a regretable libel upon Mr. Hog to have to submit to a comparison with Atlanta's Mayor.

As for the Mayor, he declared he was tired of wasting verbiage on the Recorder and that he would have nothing more to say in their quarrel. He intimated, however, that he had it in his mind to override the Recorder again by pardoning another prisoner.

Here are Recorder Broyles' comments on the Mayor:

Apologizes to Porcine Family.

"I care nothing for the Mayor's abuse. Condemnation from such a character should be considered praise. But when he says that he Court of Appeals on May 23, 1913, reversed me in ten cases and sustained me in seven, he tells such a ridiculous and absurd falsehood that I now apologize to the hog to which I referred yesterday when I said the Mayor knew less about law than a hog does about political economy.

"The idea of the Court of Appeals passing one day upon seventeen cases appealed from the Recorder's Court of Atlanta!

"The records of that court will show that on an average there are not seventeen cases a year carried to the Court of Appeals, and they will also show that that court has sustained me in ten cases where it has reversed me in one.

Sees Attempt to Evade Issue.

"But the Mayor is, as usual, trying to sidetrack the issue between us That issue is not my ability as a lawyer or a judge. I am content to let my record speak for me, but the issue is that the Mayor is protecting and pardoning the habitual and confirmed criminals of our city; is obstructing and defeating justice in our courts and impeding the officers of the law in their attempt to check crime in our city.

"And this is the issue on which the people at the next election will call him to account."

Mayor Woodward retorted that he had concluded his comments on Recorder Broyles, but that he practically had decided again to overrule the Recorder and issue another pardon.

Plans to Give New Pardon.

The situation is possible only because Judge Broyles made a mistake and imposed a sentence of 30 instead of 29 days, which puts the case in the jurisdiction of the Mayor.

G. Poulus, who runs a restaurant on Alabama street, was fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the stockade. The story that has reached Mayor Woodward is that Poulus discharged a negro boy and that the negro boy, being angry, reported Poulus to the police as selling beer. Poulos says he only orders beer from adjoining saloons and keeps it in his ice box for his customers.

THE WEATHER

Forecast for Atlanta and Georgia—Local thunderstorms Friday and probably Saturday, except generally fair in northwest portion.

LATEST NEWS

FRANKFORT, GERMANY, July 18.—Aviator Westphal, of the German Army, was killed here to-day. His is the 299th death resulting from aviation tragedies.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—Democratic members of the House Banking and Currency Committee late to-day voted down almost unanimously an amendment by Representative Bulkley, of Ohio, to the currency bill that national banws should not be permitted to lend money on any business enterprise or property in which their officers are financially interested.

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—King Brady, the veteran Cracker twirler, was to-day handed his unconditional release by Manager Billy Smith.

Brady has failed to round into his best form this season and has been of little use to the Atlanta team. The signing of Pitcher Clark, from the Senators, has forced Smith to dispose of one of his slabmen. King hurled fairly good ball for the Crackers last season.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Ex-Governor Folk, of Missouri, expressed his view of the action of Secretary of State Bryan in going on the Chautauqua platfrom in a lecture here to-day, by the statement that, if Mr. Bryan spends his vacation on the lecture platform the country will be the better for it for he can keep the administration in touch with the plain people.

The country is far safer, he asserted, with a Secretary of State who can make his money that way than with one whose fortune has been acquired through connection with special interests.

CHARLOTTE. July 18.—The Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association adjourned this afternoon after re-electing President J. H. McLaurin, of Jacksonville, and naming Charleston and the Isle of Palms as the next place of meeting.

The convention to-day had a letter from its chief counsel, Walker Percy, relative to the injunction hearing now under way against the Association in the Federal Court at Birmingham. The Association goes to Reidsville Saturday for a barbecue to be given by the Penn Tobacco Company.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—President O. B. Andrews, of the local club, announced to-day that he had secured Shortstop Dee Walsh from the St. Louis American club. Walsh will report immediately.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 19. Retreating Bulgarians are said to have burned 950 houses in Hairelolu, with all their occupants. Nearly 3,000 are believed to have perished.

MACON, July 18.—At 3 o'clock Macon's official temperature was 103½ degrees, the hottest ever recorded here.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Larry Chappelle, the $18,000 White Sox recruit from Milwaukee, went in to-day for the first time with his new team mates. He was the center of attraction in the period before the game, and was greeted with cheers. He was assigned to the center garden.

CRAWFORD'S SANITY NOW ATTACKED

Expert Declares Capitalist Was Not in His Right Mind When He Married.

That Joshua B. Crawford was insane at the time he married Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and had been entirely irresponsible for several months prior to that time, was the testimony of Dr. R. R. Kimes, expert on insanity and abdominal surgery, introduced by Attorney Joe S. James Friday morning in his effort to have the marriage annulled and the $250,000 estate revert to the heirs-at-law.

Dr. Kimes rendered his opinion in reply to a long hypothetical question and was excused without cross-examination.

During the taking of testimony another clash in the courtroom was narrowly averted. George W. Bolden, a character witness for Mrs. Crawford, threatened to thrash Attorney James unless he apologized for what the witness considered an insulting question. Colonel James declined to apologize and order was only restored when Colonel Anderson ordered the witness from the stand, and he was escorted from the courtroom by the lawyers.

"How do you know that Mrs. Crawford is a lady?" interrogated Attorney James.

Lawyers in War of Words.

"I demand that you apologize immediately for asking such a question," exclaimed Bolden.

"I will not apologize. I do not intend to take back anything that I say."

"You will take it back or I will make you, if I have to beat you to do it."

"You are at liberty to try that at any time you see fit."

Colonel Anderson, who had rapped several times for order, stepped between the attorney and the witness just as the latter got from his seat and started toward the attorney.

The Crawford heirs-at-law got to their feet and rushed to aid their attorney. Reuben Arnold stepped between them and with Colonel Anderson helped escort the witness from the room.

Anxious to Tell All.

Mrs. Crawford was anxious to go on the stand Friday and see the evidence from her side of the case go into the minutes of the hearing.

"I want to tell everything I know about the affair when I go on the stand," she said. "The other side has had everything its way so far, because all of the witnesses were for the heirs-at-law. It will be altogether a different story when Mr. Arnold and Mr. Smith introduce the witnesses we have. It will then be conclusively proved that there was nothing irregular anywhere except the groundless accusations that have been made against me."

Attorney James said Friday morning that he had been entirely too busy to take any official action toward having Fred Lump, the New York barber who is charged with being an accessory in the alleged poisoning, brought back to Atlanta.

"I will then get him back here in plenty of time if he remains in America," said Attorney James. "He would be of no particular use in this civil hearing, and that was why I didn't take steps earlier to get him back.

"At the first opportunity I will ask the Governor to give me requisition papers, and I will send a deputy to New York for him."

POLICE HALT GRILLING OF CONLEY

Detective Bent on Questioning Negro Is Barred From Cell by Chief Lanford.

A meeting of the Fulton County Grand Jury has been called for Monday to consider petitions presented by Atlanta citizens asking that the indictment of Jim Conley for the murder of Mary Phagan be acted upon. The call was issued by Foreman Beattie despite the protests of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey.

With Pinkerton detectives taking the trail in search of W. H. Mincey, whose startling accusations against Jim Conley stirred the police department and won the negro another "sweating" from Solicitor Dorsey, the Mincey affidavit Friday became the storm center about which the prosecution and defense in the Frank case waged their battle.

Despite the degree of indifference with which the detectives and prosecuting officials affected to look upon the remarkable statements of Mincey, it became known Friday that every effort was being bent toward locating him and turning the light on his past history.

Pinkertons Have Clew.

It is understood that the Pinkertons have obtained information of Mincey's whereabouts, as it has been known since The Georgian published its exclusive story of the affidavit and later Mincey's detailed account of the significant happenings on the day of the murder that he was teaching school in North Georgia.

Although Solicitor Dorsey professes to be not greatly concerned over the effect that the Mincey affidavit may have in his case against Leo M. Frank, it is reported that his office is gathering character witnesses for an attack on Mincey's credibility.

Developments since the publication of the affidavit indicate that the prosecution feels it must absolutely discredit Mincey and his story if there is to be any hope of obtaining a conviction aaginst Frank.

Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, was denied permission to talk with Jim Conley Friday morning when he went to the police station to see if he could wring any additional admissions from the negro. From the fact that Scott has been working in entire harmony with the city detective department up to this time, this incident led to the rumor that Scott had changed his theory of the crime and was inclined to place the responsibility upon Conley.

Defense Ready for Trial.

Scott refused to say to what extent his theories had been altered, if at all. Chief of Detectives Lanford explained that he had full confidence in Scott, but that the Pinkerton was in the position where he had to report all of his findings to the defense and he did not wish Scott to see Conley in these circumstances.

Attorneys for the defense said in regard to the report that the case might again be postponed, that they knew of no reason why it could not go to trial July 28, the date set by Judge L. S. Roan. They said that their side of the case was complete and that they were prepared to present it to a jury at any time.

As bitter a fight as that brought on by the Mincey affidavit is being waged by the members of the Grand Jury and the Solicitor over the question of investigating Jim Conley's connection with the Phagan murder, with a view of bringing an indictment. A number of the members are said to have declared themselves in favor of reopening the case because of the mass of evidence that has piled up against the negro since he confessed to being in the factory on the day of the crime.

The Solicitor, however, is unalterably opposed to any movement looking toward the indictment of the negro.

TO VISIT SECOND REGIMENT.

MACON.—Brigadier General W. A. Harris, of Macon, commanding the Georgia National Guard, will visit the encampment of the Second Georgia Regiment at St. Simons Island on July 25, accompanied by his full staff.

'LOBBY' CHARGED WITH SWINGING SALOON VOTE

Manufacturers Lined Up Brewers for Watson in Indiana, According to Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—How the National Association of Manufacturers lined up the brewers and saloon men of Indiana for the Republicans and Representative James E. Watson in his campaign for Governor was told in a letter written by Colonel Mulhall to F. C. Schwedtman, secretary to President Van Cleave, and read before the Overman lobby investigating committee to-day.

Watson, according to Mulhall's letter, was not so much afraid of the 30,000 votes the brewers could swing against him as he was of the $250,000 they would put into the last part of the campaign.

Accordinf to another letter Mulhall, the field agent of the "invisible government," assured "Uncle Joe Cannon that reports that the association was fighting him were false, and that the association was firmly supporting him.

Hines' Name Brought In.

Mulhall declared he helped Representatives Henry C. Coudrey and Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, who were re-elected by narrow margins, and also asserted he thought the association deserved the credit for their victories.

Edward Hines, of Chicago, said to have boasted that he "put Lorimer over," came in for notice in connection with a telegram to Mulhall in which he appealed for $1,000 to aid Representative Jenkins, of Wisconsin, and offered to supervise the spending of this sum.

"I don't consider Teddy, nor Taft, nor Sherman, nor Foraker equal to VanCleave, Parry, Kirby and the others who have given freely of their energy and their money to the great cause expressed in the principles of the National Association of Manufacturers," wrote Schwedtman to Mulhall August 28.

"Like John the Baptist."

"There will come a time when the world will know that the Parrys and the VanCleaves of to-day are like John the Baptist of old, speaking thoughtfully of events to come and condemning fearlessly the present wrongs, clearing the way for righteousness and honesty."

In an effort to prevent an enormous waste of time, the committee assigned clerks to examine the 123,000 letters in the file the association turned over to the committee, to cull out those letters which have the greatest bearing on the inquiry. It is proposed to keep Mulhall on the stand until all of the material correspondence has become a part of the record.

Miss Helen McCullough, the newest entrant in the booster emblem beauty contest.

Latest Nominee for Booster Emblem Honors Is Miss Helen McCullough of Peachtree Road.

Miss Helen McCullough, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. McCullough, 1110 Peachtree road, is the latest nominee in the "beauty button" contest. She is regarded by many as easily the prettiest girl in Atlanta and in the voting to name the girl whose face shall adorn the "500,000 club" buttons she promises to always be near the top if not at the top itself.

She is the third to be entered in the race, the nominations of Miss Mert Hancock, Ponce DeLeon avenue, and Miss Mary Carl Hurst, 62 West Twelfth street, having already been announced. The three make a bevy of beauty that is a marvel, each quite different from the other, but each striking examples of their opposite types.

Miss Hancock's beauty is dominated by the glow of her wonderful auburn hair. Miss Hurst is a vivacious brunette. Miss McCullough is a petite blonde.

Every day brings more life into the contest. The end of this contest will bring to a climax the movement to organize the "500,000 booster club." When the "prettiest" girl is selected the buttons for the club members will be ordered and the organization formally completed.

Who is this prettiest girl?

That is for the readers of The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American to decide. The voting coupons are run each day. If your favorite has not been mentioned nominate her and send in her photograph.

DESERTS FIANCE TO ELOPE WITH HIS RIVAL

Girl Marries Soda Clerk as Youth to Whom She Was Betrothed Gets License.

Leaving in her wake the bruised heart of a young man, an employee of a downtown shoe store, to whom she was engaged to be married Sunday night, pretty Miss Dollie Lumpkin, No. 456 Houston street, went to Augusta Thursday night and became the bride of B. D. Gunter, employed in a Whitehall street shop. It is said by friends of the bridegroom that the young woman's original fiance was en route to the Ordinary's office to obtain a marriage license late yesterday afternoon when he heard of the elopement of his bride-to-be.

Miss Lumpkin had been engaged to the shoe clerk for several months, her friends declare, and the date of the wedding had been set for next Sunday night. About two months ago Miss Lumpkin met Gunter and he fell in love with her.

From then on it was a race between Mr. Gunter and the other young man for the heart and hand of Miss Lumpkin. Gunter, being a strenuous young man, decided it was up to him to hurry matters along, so on July 16 he secured a marriage license from the Ordinary, and that night, it is said, he showed it to Miss Lumpkin and pleaded with her to elope with him. She consented. Thursday morning, therefore, Miss Lumpkin left her home, telling her mother, Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin, that she was going downtown to do some shopping.

Shortly before noon Gunter asked his employer for a day off. He said he was sick, but his smiles as he left the store nearly gave him away. He met Miss Lumpkin at Alabama and Whitehall streets, it is said, and they went to Augusta and were married there.

Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin refused to discuss her daughter's marriage Friday morning.

"I know she is married," the girl's mother said, "but to tell the truth I don't know whether she married Mr. Gunter or the other young man."

BUILDING TRADES PLAN FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP.

Healey Strike May Result in General Walkout—Low Wage Scale Claimed.

A fight against the open shop in the building trades section of the Federation of Labor that promises to be the hardest in the history of organized labor in Atlanta will be the outcome of the strike on the Healey Building unless a settlement is reached shortly.

International officers representing the fourteen organizations composing the Building Trades Council are either in Atlanta or on their way here. A meeting of the Building Trades Council will be held Friday night, when steps looking to a settlement of the differences or to arrange for a finish fight will be taken.

Officers of the building trades concerned in the controversy state that wages in Atlanta are 30 per cent lower than in other Southern cities, and they attribute this to the fact that in Atlanta alone is the open shop permitted.

The open shop as operated in Atlanta, according to the officers of the building trades, is that only that class of work requiring the greatest skill and which can alone be done by members of the organization is done by union men, while all other work is put in the hands of non-union men. In this way, the results to the contractor can be attained and the unions get the worst of it.

The strike precipitated by the contractors putting non-union men working on the cutting of the pipe for the electrical contract will mean a finish fight between the Building Trades Council and the contractors against the open shop, and may tie up work in Atlanta for some time.

The work on the Healey Building is at a standstill, not a sound being heard from the new skyscraper, and this silence may continue for many days unless the closed shop is accepted by the contractors.

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Following an alleged joy ride in an automobile hook and ladder truck belonging to the Indianapolis fire department, Lieutenant Harold Love and Chauffeur Ralph Aldrich, of the fire department, were arrested to-day and taken to Shelbyville for trial.

Dougherty Should Worry; He Was Cool

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Not even a smile covered John Dougherty early to-day as he sat in the rear of 233 East Washington street, a square from police headquarters.

He didn't seem to realize that he was shocking the neighborhood. He sat on a box swinging his heels. It might have been the Garden of Eden and he might have been Adam, without even a fig leaf.

In a covering of wrapper paper he was taken to police headquarters charged with "loitering."

It was a hot night.

Tax Sales Ordered; First in Many Years

Through an investigation directed by Chairman Charles W. Smith, of the Council tax committee, it has been discovered that the city holds overdue tax liens on $41,000 worth of real estate in Atlanta. Chairman Smith has directed that this property be sold.

It has been many years since a sale of property for taxes was held in Atlanta. Much of the $41,000 covers small vacant lots, but some of the property involved is bringing rent.

Senate Motion to Probe Finances of Bryan Is Defeated

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The Bristow resolution asking the President to furnish the Senate with information as to the salary on which the Secretary of State could live comfortably was tabled to-day by a vote of 41 to 29.

Bristow charged the Secretary with neglect of duty, and asserted that Bryan should endeavor to reduce his expenses rather than increase his income.

"Is there any business which can not be attended to in Bryan's absence?" asked Senator Vardaman.

Bristow replied:

It has been said that the Department of State is better off when Bryan is away than when he is at home.

'Br-r-r, It's Too Cold' Workers Growl as Mercury Passes 95

With the mercury at 95 at 2 o'clock Friday, Councilman Claude L. Ashley, chief engineer of the Atlanta Brewing and Ice Company, had a magic change to the Arctic regions and such a laugh as but few people ever indulge in during weather like the present.

"The boys down in the lower cellars of the brewery are kicking," he said. "We are trying to wash out the cellars with hose, but it is so cold the water is freezing and the boys, with their heavy boots, are slipping so they can't work."

According to the weather man, there is more of the hot wave yet to come. He forecasts fair weather Friday night and Saturday.

A cool breeze Friday alone prevented the mercury from reaching a record-breaking height.

Severe Cough Led To Lung Trouble

Sufferers with Lung Trouble are rarely willing to acknowledge the fact. If you have a so-called "cold" that has long persisted; or a cough that keeps you anxious; or any of the symptoms of Lung Trouble, such, as fever or night sweats, weakness, loss of appetite, or perhaps some raising of mucus, take Eckman's Alterative—as Mr. Bettersworth did:

Bowling Green, Ky., R. No. 4.

"Gentlemen: The spring of 1908 I had a severe cough for six months. I tried all the medicine that my doctors recommended to me, but no results came for the better. I had night sweats, and would cough and spit until I got so weak I could hardly do anything. But, at last, James Deering, of Glasgow Junction, insisted that I try your medicine. In one week's time there was quite an improvement in my condition, and after I had taken several bottles I felt as well as ever in my life. I desire the world to know that I firmly believe that your Eckman's Alterative will cure any case of lung trouble if taken before the last stage."

(Affidavit) A. C. BETTERSWORTH.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

HOKE SMITH, IN SPEECH TO GEORGIA ASSEMBLY, DEFENDS CUTS IN TARIFF

United States Senator Hoke Smith addressed the two bodies of the Georgia Legislature in joint session at noon Friday in the house.

Conspicuous throughout his address was the strong defense of the national administration, the keynote of which was prophetic of a period of unequaled prosperity throughout the Wilson regime.

Senator Smith declared that the Democrats to-day have enough votes in the Senate to pass the tariff bill. He said that nothwithstanding the cuts made by the national House, the Senate had cut still deeper, and made additions to the free list.

"For the first time in fifty years," declared the Senator, "legislation intended to take the burden off the masses of the people has found no resistance in the Democratic Senate. It must be conceded by all that the Senate Democrats have made the tariff bill more Democratic than it was when it reached the Senate."

Mr. Smith attacked the present vogue of vast distribution of charity by the wealthy men of the nation.

Prefers Taxation to Charity.

"I would rather see the National Government raise the money by income taxes and spend it for such causes than to leave the people indebted to men for great charities," he declared.

The Senator advocated States' rights in handling State problems. While his reference was to the California-Japanese situation, he made its application general by saying: "From the Californians' troubles the whole country is realizing the difficulties with which we have had to contend, and they are helping us make converts to the doctrine that we must be left to handle our troubles ourselves."

Senator Smith brought up for strong arraignment the Sherwood bill for an increase of United States pensions.

"The startling truth is demonstrated that the eleven Southern States have paid to Union pensioners of the War Between the States the entire value, in 1870, of their agricultural lands and all improvements thereon, together with their agricultural implements and live stock," he said. "I believe it to be the duty of your Senators to resist in every proper way an increase in the now already enormous payments for pensions of the Civil War."

The speaker also attacked the workmen's compensation act, now pending, declaring it to be a bill to save the railroad corporations from their just liabilities to injured employees.

Urges U. S. Road Building.

In advocating the excise tax bill, Senator Smith declared strongly for constitutional authority to pass an income tax which would proportion equally among the entire citizenship the expense of Government.

The Senator advocated national aid to road building throughout the country. He said the road-building question was at present before the Post-office and Postroads Committee of the Senate, and that his every effort, personally, would be to bring it through successfully.

Senator Smith went into the plan of tariff reduction fully. He said, in part:

"The Democratic party has undertaken to reform the tariff downward for the purpose of stopping, as far as possible, this system of legalized robbery. The plan of the Democratic tariff bill involves several different propositions.

Taxes on Luxuries.

"First. The raising of revenues.

"Second. The production of legitimate competition, to the end that fair prices shall be charged consumers.

"Third. No taxes, or the lowest possible taxes, upon the necessaries of life and those things used by the great body of the people.

"Fourth. High taxes upon luxuries.

"With the fullest praise for what the Democrats of the House did, I wish to say that the Democrats of the Senate sustained the reductions made by the House, and after investigations, made additional reductions of great importance.

"The House Democrats put flour upon the free list, but taxed wheat. The Senate Democrats put both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats put meat upon the free list, but taxed cattle. The Senate Democrats put meat and cattle both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats left a tax of 25 per cent upon cheap woolen blankets. The Democrats of the Senate put them upon the free list. The House taxed wool of the angora goat and alpaca. The Senate Democrats put it on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed flax and hemp; the Senate Democrats put them upon the free list.

Schoolbooks Duty Free.

"The House Democrats taxed pig iron, and steel billets, and ferro manganese. The Senate Democrats put them on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed textbooks. The Senate Democrats placed them on the free list.

"It is impossible to say just when we will vote upon the tariff bill in the Senate. I believe we will certainly vote before the end of six weeks, possibly in much less time. I do not think any considerable delay will take place in conference. I believe the differences between the two houses will readily be adjusted by the Democrats in the two bodies and the measure be soon passed with the approval of the Democrats of both houses."

On currency legislation Senator Smith said:

"The currency bill which has been introduced both in the Senate and in the House will free the country from dependence upon Wall Street. It will facilitate an increase of currency to meet especial demands for same. It will make a currency panic impossible. There are many features in the bill which I thoroughly approve. There are others which I believe should be changed. I think the Democrats of the House and Senate should make it as nearly perfect as possible, and then support it.

"There are features in the tariff bill against which I voted in the committee, but there comes a time when individual opinion must yield to the majority.

"Both the House and Senate Democrats placed jute bagging and cotton ties on the free list. Both placed wire fencing on the free list. Both placed agricultural implements on the free list, and what has been known as the farmers' free list, so much discussed two years ago, when passed by the House and rejected by the Senate, is now contained in the tariff bill which passed the House and which has been approved by the Democratic caucus of the Senate without a dissenting vote. And what I wish to say to you to-day is we have the votes in the Senate to pass the bill.

"Our farmers have been overcharged for the things which they are compelled to buy because of excessive prices maintained by the exclusion of foreign competition. It has been conceded that, while the government collected three hundred millions of dollars each year from the tariff, the industries in the United States, which the high tariff was intended to help, collected over a billion of dollars more from the people than they could have charged but for the exclusion of foreign competition. These burdens fell upon all the people of our State, but were especially heavy upon the farming classes, who in no respect receive any benefit.

Sees Era of Prosperity.

"I believe that the adoption of our new tariff bill will mark an era of prosperity throughout the country. The industries heretofore protected will not lose in the long run by competition, but, spurred through it to greater efforts they will seek their profits by broader trade; dependent not alone upon taking the dollars of their neighbors, they will reach into the markets of the world for the sale of their commodities.

Lauds the President.

"No currency system would be complete that did not take into consideration the importance of farm credits. Thorough study is now being given to this subject, and I believe in the near future action will be had by which rates of interest charged to farmers may be reduced and increased facilities given for farm loans.

"In conclusion, let me remind you that the last time I spoke in Georgia was at the Auditorium when I presented Governor Wilson to the people of the State. I assured the audience of his purpose and ability to serve, and of his strength as a candidate. We made no mistake when we nominated him. We won the fight for the Democratic party.

"The people of the country made no mistake when they elected him."

ACCUSED WIFE IS RIDDEN ON RAIL BY WOMEN

Victim Then Is Ducked in Mud Puddle and Forced to Flee Illinois Village.

POLO, ILL., July 18.—Suspicious that Mrs. Minnie Richardson, wife of the crippled keeper of a general store here, was more than friendly with her brother-in-law, Will Dunnill, the village stonemason, a band of women of the village kidnaped Mrs. Richardson from her home, rode her on a rail through the town and dumped her in a mud puddle.

After the mud bath they gave her 24 hours to leave the village. Richardson mortgaged his store for $1,500 and gave her money to pay her railroad fare.

When the men of the town went to Dunnill's home, he was not there and his wife said he had left the town. She had mortgaged her home to get money for him.

Mrs. Peter Stansfield, wife of the blacksmith, who was captain of the women "vigilantes," said that the conduct of Mrs. Richardson and Dunnill had been the subject of comment for nearly a year.

The women planned to capture Mrs. Richardson and the men were to take Dunnill, and the rail-riding party was to be a "double-header." The men failed to find their victim and Mrs. Richardson rode alone. The men stood on the sidewalks and cheered.

For ten years Richardson, who is a paralytic, has gone about in a wheel chair. He said to-day:

"They were pretty rough on my wife, but I guess she had not done right. I don't believe she will ever come back."

LEAVE TO WED IS DENIED COUPLE IN VICE NET

Joe North Held to Grand Jury as Slaver—Girl Is Sent to Martha Home.

Despite the pleadings of his aged mother and of Effie Drummond, the girl in the case, who asked that she be allowed to marry him, Joe North, caught by Chief Beavers' vice squad in a raid on the boarding house of Mrs. Lulu Bell at Fair and Peters streets, was held to the Grand Jury by Judge Broyles Thursday, in the sum of $200. The charge, which from the first story told by the Drummond woman, promised to develop into white slavery, was changed to disorderly conduct.

The girl, who when first arrested told her story freely to Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles, testified against North Thursday afternoon with reluctance. She at first denied that she knew North, and the next moment admitted having lived with him as his wife, both at his mother's home and at Mrs. Bell's, to which latter place she says he induced her to go.

"You say you don't know him, and yet you admit that you lived with him?" demanded Recorder Broyles.

"Well," the girl stammered, "I guess I 'kinda' know him!"

Both North and the girl asked that they be allowed to marry. The girl told Judge Broyles she had been married once before, in South Carolina, but had got a divorce in that State.

"You didn't get a divorce in South Carolina," said the Recorder. "The laws of that State do not permit divorces."

"Well," the girl hesitated, "I think my husband's dead, anyway."

"You only hope he is dead," retorted Recorder Broyles. "You can't marry this man until you get a divorce."

North's mother pleaded that her son be placed on probation, but Judge Broyles refused. The girl was sent to the Martha Home.

Church Folks at War On Clubs in Macon

MACON, July 18.—The Law Enforcement League has begun a campaign looking to the extinction of the saloon and the social club in Macon. Three test cases have been made against two saloons and a club, charging them with being nuisances in that they are "blind tigers."

If Judge Mathews grants petitions for injunctions, which will be heard on August 1, similar proceedings will be instituted against every saloon and club in the city. Petitions for injunctions were signed by 45 citizens, including the Revs. W. N. Ainsworth, J. L. White and C. B. Currie, representing the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches.

Papal Guards' Wine Supply Cut; Mutiny

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ROME, July 18.—A mutiny among the Vatican Swiss guards—the second within four days—occurred to-day. Upon orders from Pope Pius X the soldiers were seized, disarmed and placed under arrest. They were replaced by gendarmes who may remain as the permanent military police at the Vatican.

Attempts to curtail the wine supply of the Swiss guards led to the disaffection. Hitherto the guardsmen were allowed an unlimited supply of wine.

Dies at Auto Wheel; Wife Averts Crash

KENOSHA, WIS., July 18.—Mrs. Frank J. Eaton, while riding with her husband, felt the automobile turn from the roadway as they were going 25 miles an hour. She saw her husband was not holding the wheel. Catching it as the car was on the edge of an embankment, she brought the machine back into the roadway and stopped it.

Her husband had died of heart disease.

2 BUSINESS MEN POLICE NABBED PLAN FIGHT

M. F. Smith and B. F. Glenn Likely to Make Charges Against Officer Milam to Board.

M. F. Smith, vice president and secretary of the Eagle Stamp Works, and B. T. Glenn, manager of the Old Mill Theater, Whitehall street, who were taken to headquarters by the police Wednesday night after they had carried Miss Mabel Parker, a chorus girl, to Grady Hospital, in a semi-conscious condition, probably will appear before Chief Beavers Friday and ask that the Chief and the Police Commission investigate their arrest.

Smith and Glenn deny that they were responsible for the girl's condition. They declare the woman went into convulsions when she received a telegram that her brother was dying. They say they called a physician, who administered chloroform to quiet her, and left. The woman's hysteria continued, and Smith and Glenn then took her to Grady in a cab.

Officer Milam was at the hospital when the girl was brought in and he took Smith and Glenn to headquarters, where they were released after being questioned by Assistant Chief Jett and Captain Terry. In his report Officer Milam states that the girl was clad only in a thin gauze nightdress.

Chief Beavers stated that he will investigate the case, and it probably will be brought before the Police Commission at the next meeting. Police officials declare that Milam only did his duty.

FACTS IN MEXICO DEMANDED BY PRESIDENT

Ambassador Scored for Incomplete Reports to U. S.—Mystery in Diaz's Trip to Japan.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—In preparation for the arrival of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, now on his way from Mexico, President Wilson today requested the State Department to furnish him with all the information relative to the troubles in Mexico from the beginning of the Madero revolt.

This mass of material the President intends to read thoroughly, so he will be informed as to all the developments of the Mexican situation before the arrival of Ambassador Wilson.

Secretary Bryan, who returned from the first lap of his Chautauqua lecture tour this morning, called on the President, bringing a large bundle of telegrams and correspondence.

Hale Sends Information.

They included dispatches from William Bayard Hale, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico City, who does not consider the Huerta regime stable, and has advised against recognition.

Suspicions of the sincerity of the representations made by several European nations have been raised in Washington by the trail of high finance running through them all. Allegations are made that the crisis is nothing more nor less than a "bondholders' conspiracy" engineered from Paris.

Diaz May Visit Japan.

The President does not hesitate to criticise Ambassador Wilson for failing to sustain any fixed or definite conclusions in his dispatches to the State Department. Other consular and special agents of the United States in Mexico have been equally indefinite in the information they have sent to the State Department.

A proposed trip of Felix Diaz to Japan is causing speculation at the State Department. At this time his presence in Japan would serve to renew the efforts of the jingoes to create a strong anti-American feeling there. The proposed trip has renewed reports that Japan is negotiating for a naval base on the western coast of Mexico.

Secretary of State Bryan announced that he had canceled his lecture engagements for the greater part of next week and would be in Washington all the time that Ambassador Wilson is here.

Following the Cabinet session several members of the President's official family stated that the Cabinet is a unit in supporting the chief executive's policy concerning Mexico, particularly as regards the non-recognition of President Huerta's Government.

Arsenal Stores at U. S. Forts on Gulf Increased.

MOBILE, July 18.—Large shipments of projectiles and ammunition are being unloaded at Fort Morgan, at the entrance of Mobile Bay, and at Fort Barrancas, Fla., ccordaing to reports brought to Mobile by artillerymen.

Drilling with the big guns has been going on steadily at both of these important naval bases.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

Mr. J. E. Greene says the secret of his success is in good health, and the secret of his good health is in Nuxcara. He like every big-hearted, successful man, delights in telling the world about Nuxcara, the only cure known for indigestion, dyspepsia and catarrh.

J. E. GREENE.

Atlanta, Ga., June 6, 1913.

Dr. Kelly, Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sir:

Some months ago I had what I thought was heart trouble. My heart would skip for an hour or more, and often every third beat. This was especially noticeable after eating. I consulted several physicians, but got no permanent relief. I chanced to pick up one of Dr. Kelly's books on "Nuxcara," and soon found I had been treating the wrong complaint. I bought a bottle of Nuxcara, and got some better, and, after taking about half a dozen bottles, I was entirely relieved of all heart troubles, as well as indigestion. I have not had a return of this since, and I consider Nuxcara one of the greatest achievements in medicine for the troubles it is recommended to cure.

Yours very truly,

J. E. GREENE,

CHIEF, WITH HAMMER, SMASHES SEIZED GUNS

Beavers Pounds Away in Broiling Sun Until He Has Destroyed Seventy-five Pistols.

Chief Beavers, faithfully following the ordinance passed recently by Council, smashed away in the hot sun Friday with a sledge hammer until he had destroyed more than 75 unclaimed revolvers and pistols which have collected at police headquarters during the last few months.

The Chief chose for the ceremony a time when the mercury was flirting with the 95 mark. Perspiration poured down his cheeks before he had swung the heavy hammer a half dozen times, but he kept on until every weapon had been converted into scrap.

The revolver smashing is one of the methods by which the authorities are waging war against the "pistol toters," and is designed to break the endless chain by which criminals are supplied with weapons. Formerly the weapons taken from prisoners were saved for a few months and then sold at low prices to the pawnshop proprietorsw, who in turn sold them back to the criminals.

The first smashing Friday resulted in the destruction of nearly $1,000 worth of weapons. Chief Beavers carefully examined all of the revolvers for cartridges before undertaking his task. When done, he mopped his face and became the auctioneer in the "ole hoss" sale of knives, bicycles, umbrellas and an accumulation of other unclaimed articles.

Boy Badly Bitten as He Falls Over Dog

Crawford Mitchell, 7-year-old son of R. M. Mitchell, No. 974 Highland avenue, was bitten badly by a pet dog Thursday afternoon and is in a serious condition. A large strip of flesh was torn from the child's arm and he was otherwise lacerated.

The child was playing in a vacant lot near his home, when he stumbled over the dog, which was gnawing upon a bone. The dog sprang at the child and bit him several times before his playmates could drive him away.

RECTOR OPPOSES BIBLE IN SCHOOLS

Dr. Wilmer Tells Committee Some of Its Chapters Are Unfit for Public Reading.

Declaring "there are lots of chapters in the Bible unfit for public reading," Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, opened the fight against the proposed bill requiring the reading of the Bible in the schools of Georgia in the Senate Education Committee hearing Friday morning.

Following the debate which was listened to by scores of persons other than Senators, a motion for a further hearing next Tuesdayafternoon at 3 o'clock was adopted.

Dr. Wilmer, who spoke for twenty minutes, followed other speakers representing both sides, including Dr. Dunbar Ogden and Dr. Little of the Presbyterian Church, favoring the measure with an amendment, and Carlyle Haynes, a representative of the Georgia Religious Liberty Association, opposing it.

Other ministers present who will speak next Tuesday, it is understood, were Dr. John E. White of the Second Baptist, Dr. H. M. DuBose of the First Methodist, Dr. C. W. Daniels of the First Baptist, Father Rappier of the Roman Catholic Church, Rabbi David Marx, Dr. Lovejoy of the Methodist Church, and others. The Rev. Mr. Daniel declared he would preach on the subject next Sunday morning.

HOUSE RATES SLASHED IN TARIFF ACT REPORTED TO SENATE; TRUSTS HARD HIT

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The report to Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee on the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate, was placed before the Upper House at noon to-day, and debate on the measure immediately was begun.

The report is largely devoted to defense of the Senate Democrats' action in reducing rates under the original House measure and to extensive tables showing the percentage and effect of these rates.

In a brief introduction, Senator Simmons declares that the Senate bill, if enacted into law, "will result in an equitable distribution of burdens and incidental benefits of the Payne-Aldrich system of customs taxation that will tend to disintegrate monopolies built up under a protective tariff; that will reduce the cost of living; that will increase the opportunities of the individual citizen and relieve the people from the burdens of a former scheme of taxation."

Rich Trusts Only Hit.

The Senator points out that the interests hit by the reduction of duties under the House bill are in almost every instance trusts which have grown rich under a high protective tariff. Among these are the steel, aluminum, cement, callera, asphalt, Standard Oil, sugar, wool and paper trusts.

To counteract the millions in import revenue lost to the Government through the admission of foreign markets under a free list or reduced rate of tariff, taxes have been placed upon bananas solely controlled by a trust, upon gambling in cotton futures, upon the incomes of the rich, upon brandies used in fortifying wines and upon luxuries in general.

The total outcome of the Senate tariff labors is a decrease of 27.64 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates and of 4.22 per cent under the House tariff rates. Nevertheless, the report predicts that the business of the Government will be run at a profit.

Total Revenue $996,810,000.

The official figures, based upon compilations of Treasury experts for the fiscal year 1913, place the total revenue, exclusive of the possible revenue from the Panama Canal, the sinking fund and the national bank note redemption fund, at $996,810,000, against an estimated disbursement of $994,790,000 for the same period. This would leave a surplus of $2,020,000.

Concerning the steel schedule the report says:

"Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material; it has the use of abundant capital; it is able to export in competition with foreign countries; and the industry has the advantage of low costs. For all these reasons it may be regarded as well fitted as an industry, capable of standing tariff rates figured on a strict revenue-producing basis."

Keynote of Its Defense.

This summarizes the keynote of the Senate tariff reductions in almost every case where they affect trust-controlled products.

A slight reduction has been made in the cotton schedule where the commodities so treated are in common use. The reclassification of this schedule does not affect the House rates materially. The report says that "inasmuch as silk is a luxury, it is liable to the highest possible duties." This policy was maintained in treating luxuries.

The income tax amendment is explained at length, the report giving specific quotations from the text of the bill relating to the change from a flat income assessment based on $4,000, to a sliding scale, which would make the unencumbered single man liable to assessment on an income in excess of $3,000, while the married man or woman with a dependent wife or husband shall have his income exempted up to $4,000 if he have minor dependent children.

House Tax Called Unfair.

The report characterized the House income tax as "unfair to a large class of moderately wealthy people."

The many changes made in the administration feature of the bill were explained on the ground that the clauses of the Underwood measure were "somewhat confusing" and that it was thought best to leave the administrative features substantially as they were in the Payne-Aldrich measure until a joint committee of the two Houses "could revise, codify and simplify" this section of the bill. This is to be done by January 1, 1914.

The changes in the administration section include the omission of the 5 per cent reduction of goods imported in American bottoms; the inspection clause and the unit dumping clause.

Scores Gambling in Futures.

With regard to the revenue raising tax on gambling in cotton futures the report characterized this practice as an "evil," and said the tax was imposed to deter, in some measure, the activities of those who resort to cotton exchanges for the sole purpose of speculation.

Inasmuch as the tax is refundable, where an actual delivery of cotton is made, it is not thought that it will seriously affect legitimate trade.

The report predicts that the retaliatory clause in the Senate bill "will effectually put in the hands of the President a weapon with which to bring about equable arrangements with countries which do not afford the United States fair treatment."

Senate's Changes In Tariff Measure

The salient features of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate Democrats are:

Reduction under the Payne-Aldrich duties, 27.64 per cent.

Reduction under House tariff bill, 4.22 per cent.

Estimated revenue from Senate measure during fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to be $2,020,000 over estimated disbursements for same period.

The customs duties from the Senate bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, less sugar, are estimated at $173,250,000.

Duties on imports under the Payne bill for two months, exclusive of sugar and wool, $40,650,000.

Duties on sugar eight months under Payne bill and four months under Senate bill, $47,000,000.

Duties on wool under Payne bill for five months, $5,830,000.

Revenue from tax on cotton future gambling, $5,000,000.

Revenue from wines, brandies, six months, $750,000.

Revenue from income tax, ten months, $58,330,000.

Total revenue from Senate bill, $330,810,000.

Free listed products in Senate bill amount to $147,367,000 in imports, as against $103,000,000 in House measure.

Following market basket products added to House free list: Wheat, eggs, lard compounds and lard products and domestic animals used for food.

Among the trusts hit are those controlling steel, aluminum, cement, cameras, Standard Oil, asphalt, sugar, wool, bananas and paper.

The provisions of the income tax are figured as dating from March 1, 1913, instead of January 1, 1913. The operation of the brandy tax was also deferred.

COLUMBUS.—Through the co-operation of the Columbus Board of Trade, with the other interests, it has practically been decided to hold a poultry show and corn club exhibition in Columbus next fall.

Baby Cabs Watched In Chicago Vice War

CHICAGO, July 18.—Mayor Harrison to-day ordered city detectives and policemen to take a look into all baby carriages being pushed about by women and see if there is a real baby in each of them.

The order was the result of a new plan adopted by women of the streets. The baby carriages they push contain rag dolls, but they have succeeded in giving the police the impression that they were respectable mothers, taking their infants for an airing.

Boy Says He Was Lured to Aid Thief

Frank Houseman, 17 years old, who has been living at a Decatur street hotel, is held at police headquarters charged with the robbery of Sweeney's saloon, No. 46 Wall street, which was entered Thursday night.

The police say Houseman has confessed to aiding another man, whose name he says he does not know. The stranger, he said, persuaded him to serve as "lookout."

Detectives are also investigating the robbery of the Williams & Johnson market, Nos. 238-240 Edgewood avenue. The glass in the front door was broken and a small sum taken from the money drawers.

Los Angeles Will Quit Being 'Pure'

LOS ANGELES, July 18.—"I do not want a 'chemically pure' Los Angeles; what I want is a straightcut, really clean and upright city.

"Do not depend on the other officer, or the man higher than you in doing the work on your beat. Do it yourself and do it right, and see that your beat is taken care of."

This was the statement of Mayor H. H. Rose to 400 policement regarding what he expected of them during his administration.

Seeks $10,000 for State Fair Prizes

A plea for a $10,000 appropriation for prizes at the Georgia State Fair at Macon was made before the Appropriations Committee of the House Thursday afternoon by John T. Williams, president of the State Agricultural Society.

"Agriculture is our vital and pivotal industry," he declared. "Every dollar of this appropriation will be spent within the State and will repay the State a thousandfold."

Committee Favors Income Tax Measure

By a vote of 9 to 5 the income tax bill of Representative Stovall, of Elbert, was recommended for passage Thursday.

The author said his bill would add $160,000 to the revenues of the State from public service corporations alone. It provides for a tax of 1 per cent on incomes of individuals and corporations in excess of $4,000. Living expenses of individuals are exempted.

Leaps in Ball Gown Into Ocean on a Bet

ATLANTIC CITY, July 18.—A pretty girl visitor late last night jumped from the steel pier into the ocean. She was attired in ballroom costume. She was hauled out of the water and whisked away in a waiting automobile.

After an all-day investigation, the police have learned that the girl made a bet on the beach with members of her "crowd" that she would make the leap. The forfeit was a theater party and champagne supper if she didn't do it before midnight. She won.

S. A. Eliot, Jr., Seeks Career on the Stage

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., July 18.—Harvard circles received a surprise to-day when it became known that President Emeritus Eliot's favorite grandson, Samuel A. Eliot, Jr., had decided upon the stage as a career. He is now installed in an English dramatic company, appearing in Manchester, England.

Young Eliot, whose father is president of the Unitarian Ministers' Association, writes that he is much pleased with his stage work. He graduated from Harvard in June and immediately went abroad.

Science Seeks New Light on Numbers

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—"What is number?" the mathematicians of the University of Pennsylvania want to know.

"Where does number begin and end?"

In an effort to answer this all-important question the university will send an expedition to the headwaters of the Amazon to learn what the aborigines know of No. 1. This for a starter.

FRAUD USED NAME OF GEORGIA MAN

Government Accuses New York Promoter of "Wallingford" Operation in the South.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Edmunds Willcox, accused by the Government as a "get-rich-quick Wallingford" in real life, but who claims he has reformed and has been leading a new life with his wife and three children in a modest East Side apartment, was arrested to-day by postoffice inspectors.

Until two years ago Willcox had an office in the Metropolitan Tower, where he posed as a promoter of railroads, banks and mills. When he learned that any new company was being formed, he wrote to the promoters offering to float the stock. After obtaining a retaining fee, it is alleged, nothing more was heard from him.

The specific charge against him is that he obtained $1,000 from Comer L. Peck, of Starke, Fla., who operated a 38-mile railroad line between his home town and Jacksonville.

Willcox claimed, according to the Government charges, that one of his clients, Colonel James M. Smith, of Smithonia, Ga., who owns 100,000 acres of land in Florida, had been persuaded by him to buy 20,000 shares of stock of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Georgia, at $102 a share. Colonel Smith denied that he knew Willcox, and the Government began an investigation.

DR. MERRITT NOT ASKED TO RESIGN

Expressed Desire, However, to Leave Battle Hill—Change in Management Expected.

Dr. S. W. Merritt, superintendent of the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, has not been asked to resign, according to statements made Friday by the city officials who are over him. But Dr. Merritt has expressed a desire to leave the institution, and a change in management is anticipated about September 1.

The matter reached a climax when Jesse Shelton, a patient, complained that he had received rough treatment. Mayor Woodward asked Dr. J. P. Kennedy and Dr. Claude A. Smith to investigate the case. It was then that Dr. Merritt declared he did not like the situation, and it was tentatively agreed that a change be made in superintendents.

The committee, however, did not override Dr. Merritt in his discipline of Shelton.

PRISON CONDITIONS SCORED BY CHURCH

Episcopal Social Service Commission Calls Georgia Penal System Degrading.

The social service commission appointed by the Episcopal Diocese of Georgia at its annual convention to consider social and economic questions in this State has framed and submitted the following formal report on prison conditions:

Resolved, That the prison system of the State of Georgia and the methods of punishment now in use, and as commonly administered, are degrading and not worthy of an enlightened and progressive State.

Resolved, That we hereby indorse the splendid efforts of the Prison Reform Association of this State, and offer to them our hearty co-operation in securing needed reforms.

Resolved, That we also urge upon our Representatives their support of the child labor bill advocated and indorsed by the National Child Labor Association.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

WAR CHIEF SAYS M'PHERSON IS VITAL POST

Atlanta Army Men Elated Over the Favorable Impression Fort Made on Garrison.

Local army officers are jubilant over the praise bestowed upon Fort McPherson by Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison Thursday, when, with Major General Leonard Wood and Major General J. B. Aleshire, he made an inspection of the post. It is regarded as practically certain that Secretary Garrison will repeat the recommendation of a year ago that the local post be made a brigade headquarters, which would mean several additional regiments of soldiers would be quartered at Fort McPherson.

"Everything at Fort McPherson is admirably conducted," declared the Secretary. "Such a post is a credit to our country. The strategic position of the Atlanta post is valuable."

Both Secretary Garrison and General Wood said they could not state definitely whether the local post would be made a brigade post, but intimated such a step is likely.

"Nothing definite will be given out until after Secretary Garrison has completed his tour of the 49 posts of the country," said General Wood. "However, we have always regarded the Atlanta territory as important because of its strategic position."

Secretary Garrison's party, including General R. K. Evans, Colonel Barth, Lieutenant Tucker, Colonel VanOrsdale and others, were entertained at the home of Clark Howell and the Piedmont Driving Club Thursday afternoon. Secretary Garrison left Atlanta at 5:10 o'clock, and to-day is inspecting Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga.

Garrison Inspects Fort Oglethorpe.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—Secretary of War Garrison, accompanied by Major General Aleshire, quartermaster general, inspected the quarters of the Eleventh Cavalry at Fort Oglethorpe this morning and visited the site of the proposede brigade post at Chickamauga Park.

Secretary Garrison and his party arrived from Atlanta last night and will leave to-night for Little Rock. An open-air dinner will be tendered the distinguished guests to-night at Signal Mountain Inn, on Waldens Ridge, by the Chamber of Commerce. A breakfast was tendered early this morning at the Commercial Club.

PARIS, July 18.—The civil court at St. Gaudens upheld to-day the validity of the will of Albert Sapene, formerly Mayor of a small town near Toulon, who bequeathed $500,000 to King Alfonso of Spain.

Sapene, who was an ardent royalist and a great admirer of the Spanish King, died in an asylum. His sister sought to have the will set aside on the ground that Sapene was insane when he made it.

Senators' Swimming Match in Demand

WASHINGTON, July 18.—When Senator Pomerene challenged Senator Owen to a swimming match and the latter accepted they did not realize that so many persons were interested in Congressional aquatic sports. Enterprising persons have sought to induce the Senatorial swimmers to make it a national event.

One offer came from the manager of a resort near New York, who assured Senator Owen "he would have a crowd of spectators larger than could be gathered anywhere else in the world."

GEORGIA'S PEACH CROP SHORT, BUT 'PEACHERINOS' STILL ARE PLENTIFUL

Crop Now Moving (Via Railroads and Up and Down Peachtree) Sets Quality Record.

The movement of what is reported as the best crop of peaches ever grown in Georgia is now in full swing up and down Peachtree street and via railroad to the East.

H. B. Marks, secretary-manager of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, who claims to know all about peaches—that is, the edible kind—declared Thursday that the crop, while a light one, was bringing the highest prices ever known.

Miss Danese Milhous and another peach.

"Peaches are selling at from $2.30 to $2.50 f. o. b.," said Mr. Marks. "More than 1,000 cars have already been shipped, most of them going to New York, being divided between New York, Philadelphia and Boston. 'Georgia Belles' and 'Elbertas' form the bulk of the shipments.

"A sharp frost caused a short yield, but the high prices which the peaches are bringing more than make up for this."

The "peachy" girls are here in abundance, however, and even the hot weather is not driving all the Atlanta beauties to the cooler summer resorts. Miss Danese Milhous, one of the prettiest of the younger Atlanta girls, was snapped just as she was beginning to eat one of the first of the North Georgia grown peaches to arrive in the city.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Cool.

There are two wonderfully popular things about the Forsyth these days—a mighty inviting and cool place of recreation and the bill for the week is of exceptional value.

Valerie Bergere proves every right to the claim that she is the star of all dramatic artists that have adopted vaudeville. She is presenting a new playlet that deals with the crook idea. She appeals to a judge to save her husband, who has been convicted on circumstantial evidence, and convinces the judge, by a keen trick, that circumstantial evidence is a mighty bad thing to count too much on.

Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, is scoring the hit of his young life, and the Metropolitan Minstrels prove to be one of the best drawing cards the Forsyth has had. There are pretty girls and clever boys in this act.

John F. Conroy, the world-famous lifesaver, and his diving models will be the star attraction for next week, presenting what is claimed to be the greatest swimming and diving act in vaudeville. Deiro, the piano-accordionist, and the Great Lester, ventriloquist, are on the bill.

Grand Offers Treat.

A wonderful motion picture will be shown at the Grand all of next week. It is the supreme masterpiece of modern photo-plays, and is nothing less than Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." There are more than 12,000 feet of film in the nine reels that represent the nine books in the wonderful story written more than a half century ago by the famous French author.

The greatest actors in France volunteered their services in making the picture and every place that is described in the book has been visited and used by the actors for their stage in producing the great work.

This week the Grand is attracting large attendance with a daily change of program of high-class first-run motion pictures.

Bijou Show Catchy.

Brimful of catchy features, pretty musical numbers, entertaining specialties and laughable comedy, this week's bijou attraction, "Hotel a la Carte," is drawing splendid audiences to the popular theater. Every principal in the cast is clever in his or her line of work and some excellent specialties are introduced, not to mention a dozen musical numbers in which the big chorus takes part.

For next week the management announces another corking musical comedy, entitled "Good Morning, Judge," a musical cocktail with Pearl Brothers and Burns and twenty others.

Mailing Letter, He Pulled Fire Alarm

CHICAGO, July 18.—Leon Wells, of Berlin, Mich., attempted to mail a letter to his mother in his home town. The result was the hasty arrival of two battalions of fire-fighting apparatus and a large crowd at the busiest corner in Chicago, that of the Masonic Temple. Traffic was tied up for several minutes before four fire department officials, 100 firemen, ten pieces of apparatus, a patrol wagon containing ten policemen and an ambulance with three doctors, returned to their stations.

"I thought it was a mail box," explained Leon. "I never saw a fire alarm like that. In our town we have a bell in the steeple."

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

You never can tell!

The grand young county of Candler on Thursday morning looked to be as good a bet as one might stake his coin upon—and to-day, like Caesar dead, there are none so poor as to do it reverence!

Perhaps that isn't quite fair to Candler, for there is a good chance that it may be reconsidered, and go over to next year, when, in forgetfulness of the bitterness of Thursday's fight on the floor of the House, Candler yet may come into its own.

Unquestionably, a serious tactical error was made when the friends of Candler, even without intending anything arbitrary, perhaps, moved the previous question, and thereby closed debate save from their own point of view.

It requires a two-thirds vote of the House to pass a Constitutional amendment, whereas it only requires a majority to order the previous question. The previous question, having been ordered by that majority, however, it immediately gave the minority opposition the right to raise the cry of "Gag rule," which cry said minority promptly proceeded to raise—vociferously and with deadly effect upon Candler!

The majority, seeing its blunder, undertook to right things—but too late.

Burwell, as fair and impartial a presiding officer as ever held the gavel, plainly was anxious to relieve the House of its embarrassment if he could, but under the rules, he could not. The House had tied his hands. Several virtuous gentlemen, who had not even called for a division on the vote for the previous question, were very much outraged that the previous question had been ordered, nevertheless—and their expressions upon the floor with respect to that feeling of outrage evidently impressed the House profoundly, as the House proceeded to sustain said outraged point of view.

Altogether, the fight on Candler was as pretty a piece of claptrap as ever was slipped over—but it was slipped, all right, and that is what hurt Candler's feelings!

Moral: Never be too sure your enemy can not throw straight, even if he is left-handed!

Undoubtedly there is genuine merit in the Candler County proposal, and there hardly is a doubt that eventually a new county will be created there.

And the Candlerites may get some consolation from that, after all!

The many friends—as they would say in the Springplace Jimplecute, no doubt—of the well-known Georgian mentioned, will read the following paragraphic gem from The Thomasville Times-Enterprise with mingled feelings of melancholy and joy:

Jim Nevin is more truthful and lots more interesting writing about Governor Brown's gold pen than he was penning that conglomerate mess about the Thomasville cow.

Now, what do you know about that?

The Legislature is looking forward to its forthcoming visit to Augusta with genuine delight.

A great time is being framed up for the Solons, and there will be "doings" from the time the train arrives in Augusta Saturday about noon, until it leaves that night.

Many members are anticipating particularly a visit to Carmichael's famous fishing club with rare pleasure.

This place has been made famous by dozens of distinguished visitors, among them being President Taft, Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and others.

The House roll call rarely develops anybody absent, although it frequently is insisted upon.

Thursday an attempt was made to dispense with the roll call, but it was objected to. Nobody was absent, however—which shows what a fine system of looking after the membership is in vogue about the clerk's desk.

It remained for Mr. Moss, of Cobb, rather to hit the nail squarely on the head in explaining his Candler County vote Thursday, when he said:

"I do not indorse this call for the previous question and the shutting off of debate, but I shall not, merely because of that, refuse to do that which under my oath I agreed to do—that is, vote for that which I think best for the State.

"Because a tactical blunder may have been made by the floor leaders in charge of this measure, I shall not, therefore, visit my wrath upon the good people of the South Georgia territory asking to be made into this new county, who come here sincerely and honestly knocking at the doors of the union of counties.

"I can not understand how members can get up here and say they had intended voting for this measure, and would do so, but for the fact that a parliamentary blunder has been made in this House. It impresses me as rather mean and below the belt thus to hit the unoffending Candler County citizens, many of them good farmers, who are here asking a perfectly legitimate thing.

"If a man be sincerely against this measure, all right—he should so vote. But to make a mere mistake in parliamentary procedure an excuse for striking down an admitted meritorious proposition—that is all wrong. I believe this proposition is good, therefore, I shall vote aye!"

Mr. Moss is not inclined to the creation of new counties particularly, but the proposed county of Candler he had picked as one of the two deserving to win—and he voted accordingly.

His little speech in explaining his vote made a distinctly favorable impression on the House.

Easy to Get Rid of Corns

When you know HOW. But you can't do it by peeling, paring, gouging or picking at them. These barbarous methods are cruelly painful and seriously dangerous, for frequently the corn bleeds and then there is always the possibility of blood poisoning. Furthermore, these methods do not remove the corn completely, for the root usually goes deep into the toe to the bone.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory, which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful with any corn, whether hard or soft, and no matter how stubborn or how deep the growth. It removes the corn completely and positively without pain or danger. The first application instantly stops the corn from hurting you. Use it to-night and end your agony. 20c, by mail 22c.—(Advt.)

A group of 30 young matrons were invited to meet Mrs. Dick, who is a charming acquisition to the married set. In the dining room a prettily appoined tea table had for a centerpiece a silver vase of crimson gladioli.

Miss Harris was charming in white lingerie, draped over pink silk, with a deep border of pink crepe de chine finishing the skirt. Knots of tiny French roses were caught amid the laces of the corsage and a pink sash and girdle completed the costume.

Mrs. Dick wore a beautiful gown of white crepe, combined with French cobweb lace, draped on the skirt and confined at one side with a large pink rose. A hat of pink tulle and a corsage bouquet of pink roses completed the modish tollet.

Mrs. Clem Harris, who assisted in entertaining, wore black crepe de chine.

CALIFORNIA TRIP FOR WINNER IN 'AD' CONTEST

"Salesmanship Experience Alone Worth $1,000 to My Son," Says Business Man.

When the business office of The Georgian opened its doors early Friday morning a prominent business man was there with his 16-year-old son.

"I want Charley to enter the want ad contest," he said. "Put him down and start him to work."

The young man's nomination blank was accepted and he was given instructions for securing want ads. His father turned to the want ad man.

"I believe Charley will go out and win," he said. "He has it in him. But even if he doesn't win, I want him to try. I know a few weeks of actual experience in this contest will give him a thousand dollars' worth of education in the most highly-paid work on earth—practical salesmanship. That's why I put him in."

Girls Enter Contest.

And Charley wasn't the only entrant of the morning. A dozen others, several of them young women, brought in their nomination blanks, saw themselves credited with 1,000 votes each for a starter, and had a chat with the want ad man.

They were told how to go to their friends and neighbors and secure want ads for The Georgian, and shown how to roll up a list of votes in the contest for an automobile, a trip to California, a piano, or any one of the dozens of prizes.

"There isn't a family in Atlanta which hasn't a want," said the want ad man. "We have proved that by going to see them and getting results. You next-door neighbor wants a new cook or a man to trim the hedge or is ready to swap a stove for a bedstead or desires to sell his or her house. If you'll go to see him or her and make a suggestion you're sure to get the want ad.

Expert Aids Workers.

"You will be given careful instructions and practical help by an experienced district manager. He will show you how to get the ads. He will give you every bit of assistance you desire. You will have a real course in practical salesmanship, and instead of paying for the training you will be handsomely paid for your efforts."

Persons who wish to enter should clip out the coupon in the big advertisement, fill it out and bring it to the want ad man at No. 7 Edgewood avenue. They will be given full details of the contest and shown how to go out and win.

BIRTHDAY PARTY GIFTS WILL BE PONY VOTES

Girl's Guests Will Bring Her Subscriptions—New Way Found To Aid Contestant.

Newest among the developments in The Georgian and American pony contest is a birthday party. Miss Robert Harbour, of No. 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue, will give the party Saturday afternoon.

This is to be Miss Harbour's fifth birthday anniversary. In honor of the event there will be a "regular party," with the difference from the ordinary celebration that many of the guests have told her in advance what their presents will be.

They will give her subscriptions to The Georgian and Sunday American, which count liberally in votes in the contest. This is an instance where the givers get as much as the recipient, little Miss Harbour gets the votes and the donors get the papers.

John Trimble, of Lithonia, and his father came to Atlanta Thursday to see the ponies. John Trimble is making a good race for the pony to be awarded to the Georgia boy or girl getting the most votes.

One more day remains of the special bonus offer, which gives extra ballots for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. From all indications, Saturday will be one of the

ATLANTA EXHIBIT FOR KNOXVILLE FAIR URGED

Tennessee Business Men in Person Will Attempt to Interest Manufacturers and Jobbers.

Within the next few days a determined effort will be made by business men of Knoxville, Tenn., to interest Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in that city from September 1 to November 1 of the present year.

A delegation of Knoxville men will come to Atlanta to take up the matter of an exhibit of Atlanta-made goods at the exposition with members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers' Association.

This was the word brought to Atlanta to-day by James R. Young, director of publicity for the exposition, who was in the city on business connected with the exposition.

Incomplete Without Atlanta.

"The feeling in Knoxville is," said Mr. Young, "that the National Conservation Exposition would not be complete without Atlanta represented, and the directors of the exposition company hope to be able to show Atlanta men wherein it will be to their advantage to come to Knoxville in force.

"The position in so far as we have been able to figure it out is like this: Knoxville during September and October will be something of a battleground between the commercial interests of the North and those of the New South.

"Cincinnati in particular is engaged in a trade expansion movement; Louisville is another city in the same class. Baltimore and several other places north of us already have reserved space for big commercial exhibits at the Knoxville show.

One Means to Invade South.

"The idea of these business men—and I believe they have the right idea—is that the National Conservation Exposition is going to be the one big place this year in which to advance their interests along the lines of an increased Southern trade.

"Every indication is that we will have enormous crowds in Knoxville for the exposition, and one of the most gratifying features is the advices we get showing that travel from the North will be heavy.

"It is for these reasons and others that the men of Knoxville hope to be able to show to Atlanta why it is to the interest of this great city of the South to be represented at our exposition. The matter will be gone into at length and in detail when the Knoxville men come to Atlanta. This probably will be next week."

DR. DELAMATER CRIES HE 'HAS ENOUGH'

Druggist Rearrested on Complaint of Estranged Wife Declares He Has "Learned a Lesson."

Dr. Ira Delamater, following his release from the clutches of the police under a fine of $10.75, late Thursday afternoon was arrested by Constable W. W. Rogers, from the court of Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau, on a peace warrant sworn out by his wife.

The druggist was released under a heavy bond to appear at noon Friday, when an attempt will be made to have him placed under a prohibitive bond that will be forfeited if he even speaks to his wife again.

"I've got enough," cried Delamater when Constable Rogers took him in tow. "I won't ever do it again, and there is not any use of all this. I learned a lesson Wednesday night (he rubbed an enlarged optic), and I will never bother her again. I will help her get the divorce and pay her alimony regularly."

The druggist was arrested at a Turkish bathhouse in Decatur street. When Constable Rogers found him he was having a badly swollen and darkened eye and severe bruises on his body massaged. They were inflicted by W. T. Cammack, a railroad man, who interfered when Delamater visited Mrs. Delamater, who is seeking a divorce from him, Wednesday night.

:-: Their Married Life :-:

Helen and the Trunks Are Gone When Warren Returns to the Hotel in Paris.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE room was charming. Helen could hardly restrain an exclamation of delight when the French manager unlocked the door and crossed over to draw the heavy curtains from the long, low windows.

The paneled walls, the furniture, the draperies, were all in old rose silk tapestry. The bedroom adjoining was exquisitely dainty in white and pale blue. The low French dressing table, the cheval mirror, the two cane beds with the pale blue silk hangings and coverlets, made it look like a stage setting—"Act I. Mlle. ———'s Boudoir"—in a modern French play.

It was all so surprisingly dainty and luxurious for a hotel that Helen feared it would be most expensive—more than they could pay.

"What do you ask for these rooms?" she ventured.

"Twenty-five francs a day, Madame," he answered in surprisingly good English.

"And what for breakfast served up here?"

"Two francs for coffee and rolls."

Only nine more francs for the rooms, and the same for breakfast as they were paying now! And the dirt and dinginess of the other place compared to the charm and cleanliness of this! Helen pictured herself, in her dainty white morning gown and boudoir cap, having breakfast in this rose silk room. This picture decided her.

"Very well. I'll take the rooms. We're at a place on the Boulevard Capucines now, but we'll come to-morrow morning or late this evening."

The manager took her down on the mirrored elevator to the palm-lined hall and office below, where Helen made a deposit of twenty-five francs to secure the rooms.

On the way back in the bus her courage began to waver. She had arranged to move without Warren's consent or knowledge. But when she again saw the dinginess and shabbiness of the rooms they were in and thought of the wretched breakfast they had had that morning, her courage was renewed.

A Bold Scheme.

As she packed the few things they had unpacked for the night her strongest desire was to move now. It was only half-past one, and Warren would not be back until almost seven. Why not get a cab and take their baggage over now—and have everything unpacked and in place by the time he got there? She could not reach him during the afternoon, but she could leave a note here giving him the address of the new place.

For Helen this was a most audacious scheme, and she was athrill with excitement at the very daringness of it all. For once she would show Warren that she could take the initiative, that she would not stay in a place that was both uncomfortable and unclean, merely because he did not want the bother of moving.

There was a rusty pen and a dusty ink bottle on the mantel. Helen took some paper from her handbag and wrote hurriedly:

Dear: Have just found the most wonderful place! When I went to the American Express Company this morning to get our mail I heard some American women talking about a delightful hotel. I took down the address and looked it up at once. The rooms are so beautiful and so moderate, that I couldn't resist engaging them.

I do hope you won't be annoyed, but this place is so dirty that I felt I couldn't stay. I am going to get a cab and move the things over now, so everything will be in place when you get there. The address is Hotel Ronceray, 10 Rue Montaigne. You can get a bus on the corner that will take you to the door. I will pay the bill here. Hastily. HELEN.

Still fearing that her courage might be short-lived, she determined to act quickly. Resolutely she went down to the office and asked for their bill. The man seemed surprised and displeased, for he had plainly expected them to stay several weeks.

Helen was amazed at the bill. She thought there would be only the room for one night and breakfast—but there was a charge for light, service and bath. However, she was too glad to escape from the place to make any protest, and a little later she was in a cab with their baggage on top, driving to the new hotel with a feeling of mingled glee and awe at her own temerity.

It was just 3 by the French gilt clock on the mirrored mantel of the rose-tapestried sitting room, when Helen closed the door after the porters who had brought up the bagage.

Even before she took off her hat she made an eager, interested inspection of every detail of the rooms. They were luxuriously and perfectly appointed. Everything was in exquisite taste.

It would be over three hours yet before she could expect Warren. But she had no desire to go out in the blazing, midafternoon sun, for the heat was stifling. She would spend the time in unpacking, in getting up their laundry, and in going over her clothes, which after the week on board ship needed attention.

It was a real joy to shake out her gowns and hang them in the spacious closets, and to arrange her clothes in the white-papered drawers of the chiffonier and dresser. The rooms were so beautiful that there was a sense of luxury in just moving about and getting settled in them.

At 6 o'clock she decided suddenly to dress—to put on her white chiffon evening gown. She would lay out Warren's evening clothes, and when he saw her all dressed he would hardly refuse to dress, too. They would "live up" to the luxury of the place!

To sit down and arrange her hair before the low dressing table was a real pleasure. Helen thought of all the hours she had to stand before her high bureau at home, and resolved to have a dressing table like this as soon as she got back.

About half-past six she was trailing about the apartment in her white chiffon gown, looking at herself in the mirrors with which the rooms abounded, and feeling as though she was living in a play. The very foreign atmosphere of it all added to the charm. Although it was hardly dusk, she turned on the electric lights, which glowed softly through their silken shades.

She Gets Anxious.

For once Helen was too excitedly happy to worry over what Warren's attitude might be. Surely, when he saw how beautiful the rooms were, he could not be angry at her having moved.

But at seven she grew anxious. He should be here by now. What if they should not give him the note at that other place? They had not liked it because she had left—would they take such a revenge? She had left the note in the box with the key—how could he fail to get it?

Quarter after seven—half-past! By this time Helen had forgotten the charm of the rooms and was walking restlessly about in tense anxiety. What could have happened? He had said he would be back around half-past six, and it would take him only fifteen minutes at the most to get here from the other place.

For the first time there came a doubt in her mind as to the wisdom of her moving in this way. Perhaps she should have stayed. After all, it was a rash thing for her to do. They were in a strange city, if he should not get the note—how could he ever find her?

She could, of course, write to the American Express Company, where he would go for his mail in the morning; but what would he do to-night? Oh, why had she done this? Frantically she wished herself back in those other rooms, however shabby and dirty they might be. Surely it would have been better to put up with anything than to risk any chance of mishap in Paris.

A sharp knock at the door. She rushed to open it, and a French messenger boy handed her a note. As he held it out to her she saw Warren's writing on the envelope. Her hands weakly trembling, with her teeth she tore it open.

"Since you are so infernally smart and want to take things in your own hands, you can keep it up. You can have a nice little dinner alone any place in Paris you choose—and I can have the same. I'll probably be there some time to-night, but don't let that worry you—stay out just as late as you want."

The cruel sarcasm of it! How could he—oh, how COULD he! With a convulsive sob Helen threw herself upon the bed and her tears fell unheeding on its blue satin coverlet.

More Trouble in a Garden.

An elderly gentleman walking through his garden one day stopped before a fig tree on which were two figs just ripening. His favorites were figs, and summer often came and went without the fruit coming to maturity.

Shortly after he met his gardener who, assuring him the figs were quite ripe, was requested to send them to the summer house, where his master was about to rest.

Picking the figs, the gardener sent his little boy of 7 with the basket. On the way the little fellow stopped, and, removing the leaves, gazed upon the tempting fruit.

The attraction was too great; he ate one. Covering the other with the leaves, he proceeded upon his errand.

On being asked if the gardener had not sent two figs, the boy, after a moment's silence, answered: "I ate one."

"You ate one? How?" exclaimed the old gentleman, angrily. "How did you come to do that?"

Dropping his eyes to the basket, "I took it like this," said the child, taking the remaining fig, "and I ate it like this."

And, suiting the action to the word, he consumed the second fig before the astonished eyes of the old gentleman.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Every one of these breaks in your life-line means a moment when you stood elbow-to-elbow with death," declared the girl, solemnly. "And yet—see those little squares of protection around each break? Senor American," she looked up at him soberly, "there is one break that you have not yet reached and the protecting square is not perfect like the others."

Warren burst into his silent laugh.

"I reckon that square will do when the time comes."

"But the time is now, senor!" exclaimed the girl, her lips less than a foot from his ear.

He drew back a little and eyed her through narrowed lids.

Danger Near.

She bore the keen scrutiny without a flutter, but her great round eyes and quick breathing told of some sure emotion.

"Are your eyes so sharp that you can tell the day and hour?" he asked slowly.

"Not my eyes, Senor American." She looked full at him with unmistakable meaning. "But my ears!" She caught the sound of footsteps in the passage and bent over the hand again as the Duke entered.

"In all my experience I have seen but one hand like yours, and that hand belongs to Don Robledo."

"Well, Mr. Warren, looking into the future?" inquired the Duke.

"Pardon, senor." Dolores swiftly withdrew and Warren called after her cheerfully:

"Good-bye, senorita, and many thanks for your occult wisdom. I'll take good care of that square. Yes, Duke," he added with a bantering smile, "and the immediate future promises to be very interesting. A dark man is to cross my path."

"Do you believe in such foolery?"

"I like to—on this occasion. For I hope it means some one I very much want to meet."

If the Duke guessed who this some one might be he gave no sign. He twirled his mustache and studied the floor, evidently in much perplexity, a situation that seemed to amuse the young man immeasurably.

"By the way," he went on. "Is that specter a blond or a brunette?"

The exalted kinsman made an impatient gesture, as if in no mood for raillery, and with every appearance of grave concern said:

"Mr. Warren, since the Prince is no more, I feel a certain responsibility for Her Highness' actions; and the prospect of your destruction to-night on her account is most uncomfortable."

The young man looked equally grave.

"You think I won't come back?"

The Duke looked at him with the air of a man who is frankly doing his duty.

"I think if you go into that castle to-night you take your life in your hands," he declared.

The old whimsical smile returned to Warren's lips.

"I've got a good grip."

The Duke looked for a moment as if he would retire—that having done his duty there was nothing for him to say. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him:

"Look here! You Americans are shrewd traders. You get a dollar for a dollar when you bargain. You are not giving away your life for nothing. Now, what is the price?"

"Not very much," Warren assured him easily. "The deal was made on a bargain day. My life happened to be a little below par, you see, and I couldn't kick much over the terms."

The exalted cousin seemed relieved.

"Very well! Whatever those terms were, I will assume the responsibility of settling with you and at the same time release you from your unfair and outrageous bargain."

Jarvis bowed.

"Your Excellency, I am overwhelmed by your anxiety. It touches not only the heart but the pocketbook. But," he added regretfully, "the price is paid and I am on the job."

"I suppose that means you are going through with it?"

"Yes."

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, I never saw a man so anxious to be killed. But, as your English poet says, 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

"You flatter me," Jarvis protested, with soft-tongued irony. "Yet, an energetic fool may be of more use than an angel with cold feet."

"Well, I am sorry for you," concluded the Duke.

Jarvis walked up to him, for the first time in their acquaintance dead serious.

"Your Excellency," he said crisply, "I decline your offer and your advice and your sympathy—and I'll tell you why. I saw a gambler lay down four aces once because, as he said, 'The play ain't natural.' You tried to have me arrested on the steamer—you have tried to block me in every move I have made. Now—suddenly—you are deeply concerned lest something should happen to precious little me in that castle. You advise me to stay out. You even offer to buy me off. Shall I take your advice? NO! 'The play ain't natural.'"

On Guard.

His Excellency of Alva trembled with a cold fury, but held himself in.

"You have intruded into a matter which you neither understand nor appreciate," he said rapidly. "If, as you say, the play seems unnatural, pray do as your gambling friend—put down your cards and stay out of the game."

"No," retorted the young man, grimly. "I stay in the game—but I'm going to watch the deal!"

The return of the Princess abruptly terminated the conversation and when the two men turned to greet her they had recovered their natural tones and bearing.

"Well, all Segura is buzzing with your ghost-hunt to-night," observed the Duke, lightly. "The whole town will sit up to hear the outcome."

"And where are you going to get the returns, Duke?" asked Jarvis, with concealed interest.

"Unfortunately, I must leave at once," was the unexpected reply.

Even Jarvis was momentarily startled, but he quickly readjusted his inferences. "I am keenly disappointed, but I have an urgent summons to Madrid."

The Princess stared at her cousin, seemed about to speak and suddenly turned to the innkeeper who had followed her down stairs and ordered him to look after "the gentleman's wants."

"Thank you," said Jarvis, rightly interpreting this as a dismissal. "I'd like a couple of good horses and two lanterns."

"Lanterns?" smiled the Duke, as the young man went out. "Looking for an honest man, Mr. Warren?"

"Not in this neck of the woods, Your Excellency," retorted Jarvis, over his shoulder.

"Carlos," exclaimed the Princess, anxiously, when they were alone, "what have you found out? Tell me—what do they say?"

The Duke looked very solemn. "I regret to tell you that nothing is known of your brother since he entered the castle."

The girl closed her eyes and pressed her hands to her face.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned.

A Last Appeal.

Dolores called that Don Robledo was waiting with His Excellency's car.

"Cousin, do you really intend to go now?" cried the girl in tragic tones. "I need you! My brother needs you! Think what it means to us!"

"I am broken-hearted, dearest cousin—do not make my duty any harder by your words. The message is from His Majesty. It is mandatory. And, alas! in Spain, as in the Far East, to hear is to obey."

"But why must you start so soon?"

"You know my ride is a long one and I must travel fast while the moon is up."

The girl was silent for a moment and when she spoke again voice and features were composed into a chilly hardness.

"Not to open this discussion again, I want to say now that I will never forgive you for leaving my brother and me at this critical moment."

"Would you have me lose my favor with the King?" protested the Duke.

"Does his favor mean more to you than mine?" retorted the girl proudly.

The Duke spread out his palms and half bowed.

"Noblesse oblige, cousin," he said gently. "Nobles and kings must obey what lesser men might ignore. My heart is here, but my honor is with the King."

"Honor!" The Princess flung the word back at him as if it were a stinging missile. "The cloak for a man's vanity! Sacred honor!—to be kept bright at any cost, lest men should test his metal and find it base. Give me a man who cares less for honor than for me! You ask me to-day why I do not marry you. I will tell you why. I want a man, not a weakling masquerader. Yes, honor lives, but loyalty is dead! Courage is dead, and the brave blood of your ancestors, the blood that made Spain, has turned to water in your veins. There is not a nobleman in Spain who would dare go now this night to my brother in the castle. God! How I could love such a man!"

"Perhaps," sneered her cousin, stung by the bitter tirade, "perhaps such a man as your Yankee adventurer?"

"Perhaps I could," cried the girl, instantly taking up the challenge. "Who knows?"

The Duke bit his lips and before he could frame an adequate reply the man himself appeared, slowly descending the stairs. So he merely bowed, took the girl's hand and kissed it.

"Farewell," he said in a low voice, "some time you will forgive me. Success to you, Mr. Ghost-Breaker, when you bead the specter in his den."

"Thank you, your Excellency," drawled Jarvis, leaning against the stairpost. "I will do my uttermost to put salt on the specter's tail."

"Good-bye!"

"Good night, Duke!"

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with some concern and a question on his lips.

"Mr. Warren," she said abruptly, "we must start at once!"

The strained quality of her voice told him that she was laboring under the most intense excitement and it was with studied ease of manner and voice that he replied:

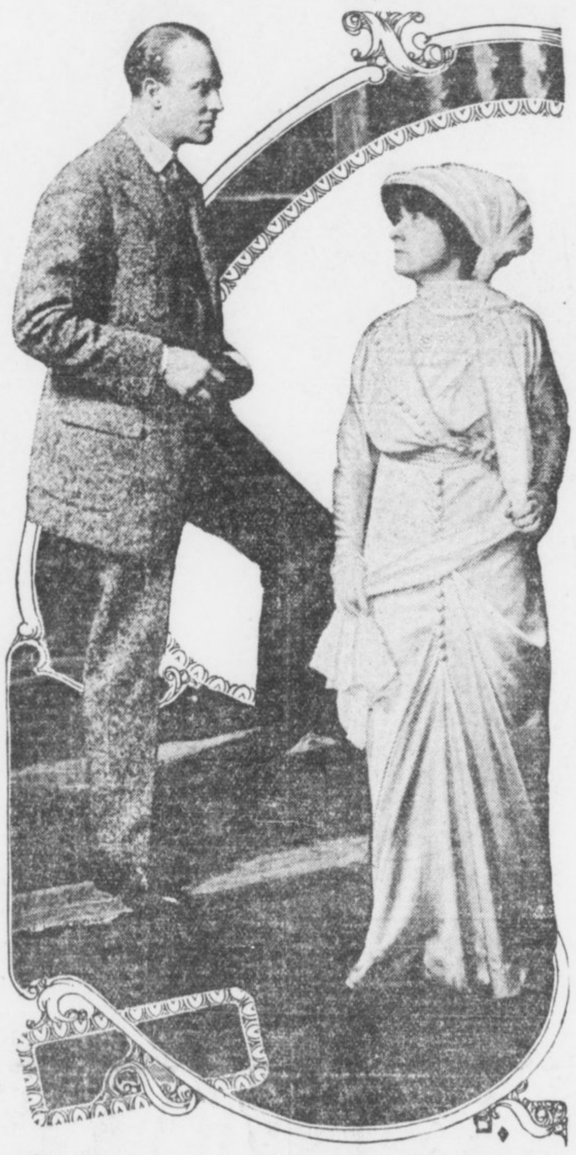
"It's out of the question for you to go to the castle until I have smashed this infernal mystery; there is nothing you could do. If your brother is there I'll find him. You must be patient and remain here, where you are safe, and try to rest."

"I can not rest until I know what has happened to him," she cried desperately. "I shall go mad if I am left here alone!"

"But it's not safe for you to go," he insisted.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

OFF TO THE CASTLE.



The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with som econcern and a question on his lips.

"MEGGIE, the postman is coming up the garden path. Would you mind going to the door?"

Mrs. Martin paused in the kneading of the large batch of dough and glanced toward the tiny sitting room. A pretty girl of about eighteen emerged in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crabbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips.

"Who is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

The girl burst into a flood of hot furious tears, and flung the letter scornfully upon the table.

"If Jack is too good for me, I don't thank her to tell me so," she declared. "She herself wasn't much until she married Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. Mrs. Martin picked up the letter and read it slowly. A look of contempt flashed in her honest gray eyes.

The letter, which was couched in terms of lofty condescension, mingled with biting satire, conveyed the unmistakable message that the silly attachment existing 'twixt Meggie and Jack was viewed with disapproval, and advised the girl to look elsewhere, unless she wished to bring Jack to financial beggary.

In a few minutes Meggie, her eyes red with crying, descended the staircase, and her mother gathered her in her arms.

"Take no heed of the foolish letter, my dear," she said soothingly.

Ten minutes later found Meggie on the way to Flamstead.

She Sees Jack.

A man emerged from behind a spur of cliffs and a sudden rush of color suffused her cheeks. The man saw her at the same time and came toward her at an increased pace. He was a tall, strongly built man of about twenty-one, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and darkly curled hair showed beneath his sou'wester.

"Great guns! What are you doing abroad a morning like this, Meggie?"

"I'm just on my way to Flamstead to make a few purchases, Jack," she said. "Are you putting out to sea to-day?" There was an anxious note in the inquiry, as she glanced uneasily toward the horizon, which was enshrouded in a threatening murkiness.

Her glance seemed to bring something to his recollection, for his bright eyes suddenly darkened, and he laid a hand upon the rough surface of his jersey. The next moment he had taken the girl's arm in a close grip.

"Did you receive a letter this morning, Meggie?" he asked abruptly.

A tell-tale flush of confusion dyed Meggie's cheeks, and her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Then it is true. She has been interfering between you and me. By heaven, I'll make her retract every word she has written.

* * * * * *

It was a night long to be remembered by "those who go down to the sea in ships," and by the poor fisherfolk of Sharpel's Head in particular.

"I'm main afraid they won't do it. If they do, 'twill be by the grace of God!"

The distress signal flickered for a second, and then was obliterated by the flying spume. The old fisherman who had first spoken made his hands into a megaphone, and gave vent to a loud but futile shout.

"'Tis awful to have to stand by and watch them go to their death without being able to lend a hand," he said.

"She cannot last long in a sea like this," declared old Timothy, with a shake of his head. "A boat wouldn't live a minute in such a boil. 'Tis years since I've seen the like."

Scarcely had he spoken when there was a commotion at the rear of the watchers, and a slight cheer was raised. The men from the Flamstead Coastguard Station had arrived, and at their head raced Meggie Martin, her dark hair streaming in the wind. A minute later a rocket with a mighty rush soared seaward, taking with it the line. It hummed like a string of a gigantic harp. At length there emerged from the darkness the dim outline of the breeches-buoy, and from it hung the limp figure of a man.

"Why, 'tis Jim Carlin, of the Waterwitch."

A wild, terrified wail greeted the announcement, and Mrs. Ryalls rushed into the arc of light cast by the lantern.

"The Waterwitch! Good heavens! What of my husband?"

She reeled, and would have fallen had she not been caught by Meggie. The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girlish figure sprang toward him and seized him by the arm.

Jack Is Left.

"All are not saved!" she cried in a voice that was almost a scream. "There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured and Jack has sent him first. Oh, he quick, or 'twill be too late!"

The officer spun round with a sharp command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey.

"I'm afraid it's all over, miss. There is no response. He shook the line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn ashore, and almost at the same moment and hawser perceptibly slackened.

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!" shouted the officer. "Tighten up the hawser, lads, and let's have another try for the poor fellow."

The officer and his men hurried away with the lanterns toward the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy.

A reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, had swung herself into the buoy and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline toward the deafening inferno below.

Meggie felt a numbness creeping over her senses, but she bravely fought it back. She had set herself the task of saving Jack if he still lived and that task must be accomplished.

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips as she recognized it as the figure of Jack Ryalls. Meggie suddenly leaned from the buoy and, seizing the limp figure of her lover, drew him toward her. * * *

"Why, bless me, if there ain't two!" The cry escaped old Timothy.

"And if it ain't Meggie Martin that's bin out to the wreck to fetch Jack in, I'll stand hanging!" declared another voice. "Hold that lantern up, Bill. Let's have a look at the heroine of Sharpel's Head."

The feeble rays of light fell upon the locked figures of Jack Ryalls and his gallant rescuer, and the next moment a tremendous hurrah rose above the soughing wind. Five minutes later the unconscious couple were being conveyed home with the utmost haste, followed by a crowd of silent but enthusiastic witnesses of the daring deed.

* * * * * *

Twelve months later a pretty wedding was solemnized at the quaint church of Sharpel's, and the whole of the townsfolk turned out to do honor to the handsome pair; but never did a heart beat more proudly than did that of Jack Ryalls as he led his bride between the lines of fishermen who formed the guard of honor—the girl who had snatched him from the very jaws of death.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I DO NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and in love with a man two years my senior. He is nice and has a good position. I kept steady company with him for a year and a half. Then my mother stopped him from calling on me, but never gave a reason; but, as it is, we go out, when we get a chance, together. He has given me two diamond rings. Do you think it is right for me to see him as long as mother does not consent? CUTTIE.

You owe her obedience, and must not see this man clandestinely.

On the other hand, you are now 18, and your mother owes you a reason for her objections. Can you not persuade her to tell you what they are that he may have a chance to overcome them? If he is the man who is to tell you the "sweetest story of all," I don't want you to lose him.

NOT A DAY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19, and am keeping company with a man 25 years old. Do you think he is too old for me? We never quarrel. He loves me, I know, but my father thinks him too old for me. He makes fine pay and gives me good times. We think a lot about each other and get along fine. H. E.

He is not a day too old. Are you sure your father's objections are not based on some other ground?

BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I received an invitation from a young lady to attend her birthday party. Is it proper for me to accept the invitation, as I have never been introduced or even seen the young miss? PERPLEXED.

A girl who would do anything so foolish deserves the rebuke you are in position to give her by declining the invitation.

Household Suggestions

Weak eyes that ache when exposed to the glare of the sun, especially on the sea, should be treated with cold water compresses. These are folded on the closed lids, and ease the aching at once.

If troubled with ants indoors spread a piece of brown paper with marmalade rather thickly, then place it where they are most troublesome. It will soon be covered with them.

When boiling potatoes put a teaspoonful of sugar as well as salt in the water. This does not give a sweet taste, but makes them dry and floury.

Effect.

"Did you see the lovelight in her eyes?"

"No. The gaslight was in her eyes, and she squinted."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

HUSBAND deer, sed Ma to Pa last evening, at last I have found a perfek jewel of a servant. She caim to work this afternoon, & I want you to notis her wen she is serving dinner. She is as brite a gurl as I have ever met. She is a cullurd girl, her naim is Minyunette, & she went to a gurl's college that Booker Washington had sumthing to do with. Her flow of English is perfeck, Ma sed, & I was thinking that littel Boobie cud improve his English by jest lissening to her talk.

Didn't Warm Up.

I doant warm up vary much as you are talking, sed Pa. Sumhow I aint very keen for a servant that knows moar than we do. You know how long that one lasted with us that was all the time talking about Henry James & Shopenhaur.

Oh, but this gurl is different, sed Ma. She is vary quiet & I doant think she will air her nollege any.

I knew Pa wasn't going to like the new gurl, tho. I had herd her talking to Ma beefoar Pa caim hoam, & this is what she sed wen she was talking off her wraps: I presume that the duties connected with the situation will not be arduous. That dident sound like our other gurl that we had beefoar her, she sed when shall i pitch in?

She Comes In.

Well, wen dinner beegan Minyunette caim in to wait on the tabel. She had a high forehead & woar glasses.

Wife, sed Pa to Ma, you & little Bobbie are going to a Shakespeer reading to-nite.

Oh, sed Minyunette, I adoar Shakespeer. He is so many minded, his scope is so all em-bracing. I was just looking at yure fat husband, she sed, & thinking of Shakespeer's lines

I want fat men about me, sleek hedded men
& such as sleep o' nights.
Yon Cashus hath a leen & hungry look.
He thinks too much. Such men are dangerus!

Pa dropped his fork & looked at Minyunette the way he looks at me wen my report card says Deportment, 65. But Minyunette dident notis Pa, she kept on talking. I think the character of Shakespeer's Portia is a butiful one, she sed. So wise & yet so sweet and womanly. I can see her now in my mind's eye, saying

The quality of mercy is not strained,
It falleth as the gentle rain from heaven.
It is twice blessed, it blesseth him—

See here, sed Pa, I doant want to be any Simon Legree, but it wuddent be a bad ide, Minyunette, if you showed a littel moar sped out in the kitchen & a littel less in here. I am as hungry as a jailed suffragist, sed Pa, & it doesent help my hunger any to heer you spouting Shakespeer. The next thing I know you will be raving about Lord Byron and trying to reesite all of Childe Harolds Pilgrimage. Come on, now, sed Pa, moar spuds & less Shakespeer.

Didn't Like It.

Minyunette dident like it at all the way Pa talked. She took off her apron & sed to Ma, Madame, I regret that I shall be compelled to seek elsewhere for a posishun whare the environments is moar en-vironing, sed Minyunette. I was sure I was going to like it here, beekaus you are a sweet nature, but yure husband is rude & of the soil. Our souls are not at-tuned, she sed. & so, obaying the word of fate, our ways part.

Good-NITE, sed Pa.

:-: The Melody :-:

WHEN evening came with the shadows she let her little frail hands fall into her lap as if every muscle and tendon had suddenly burst. Her finely-shaped dark-haired head rested on the table. She was sitting in front of her sewing machine, at which she had been working all day. All around her were scraps of silk and woolen goods, fashion papers and patterns lay in piles on the table, and when she moved her arms some of them dropped on the floor. Her head was dizzy with complete exhaustion. She was unable to think, but felt the increasing darkness as a blessing which put an end to the toil of the day.

It was ten years of work that had aged her. These years had been to her like one long walk through an endless desert without a single oasis to relieve the monotony; her feet had left no tracks on the sands; not a single cry from her lips had been responded to; nobody had met her on the way to shake her hand.

But on the other side all these years of weary thraldom there were a few years when she had been young and had lived. In those years the two had sat together, watching the coming of dark, and were glad and laughed at everything.

She was young then, and worked for small wages in a dressmaking shop. He had long hair, dreaming eyes, an inexhaustible fund of hope, and a violin—that was all, but he was an artist. He was young, gave lessons on the violin and managed to make both ends meet. He was always bright and happy. Nobody could laugh as he could, or cheer her up as he could. He knew how to make everything appear in a golden and rosy light.

One night he came to her unexpectedly and took her into his arms.

"I cannot live without you," he said. "Why should we wait until we can afford to marry. Then we shall be old and gray. You cannot put happiness aside and say, 'Wait a few years; I cannot give you any of my time now; later on I will call for you.' Will you not come to me now and live with me as my wife?"

But she did not understand him. She struggled out of his arms, wounded and unhappy, an intense pain shooting through her every nerve and fiber. For solitude had made her shy and suspecting; his suggestion hurt her, and she asked him to leave her. She no longer remembered the passionate words that passed between them; but he left her, pale and angry, his black hair in disorder and his eyes shooting fire at her.

Two days passed. Then one even she saw it in one of the papers—a short notice which most people would have overlooked. He had shot himself. He had gone straight from her and had sent a bullet through his brain. She thought of all the hard words she had said to him and felt how unjust she had been to him.

As she was putting her room in order she felt a sudden desire to go out, to see people around her and hear them talk, to feel the cool evening air in her face.

From the park she heard music which irresistibly drew her in among the trees, where it was so much more pleasant than in the dreadful rushing and crowding of the streets. She stopped in front of a large restaurant with many chairs and tables outside and music in the veranda, where a few persons sat drinking and talking.

She sat down on a bench under a dripping tree, where she could hear the musicians. Here she sat for a long time quietly and sad, with her hands folded and her head thrown back.

Suddenly a musician got up to play a violin solo. He was a tall, dark young man; he stooped a little. His eyes were sad and melancholy under the heavy brows.

As he started to play she stood up trembling. She felt like rushing up to him and asking him to stop, but she fell back on the bench and hid her face in her hands.

"That melody contains all life," he used to say; "love, suffering and happiness."

When the violinist lowered his bow she stood up and went home. Like a small shadow she disappeared among the crowd. Nobody had a look or a thought for her.

But her pale, tired-looking mouth was smiling, and in her eyes was the light of happiness. No longer did she dread the visions of the day or the dreams of the night.

She had a hand to clasp now in the darkness, a hand which was to guide her through eternity.

Condensed Measure.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked a sharp servant of the milkman, whom she suspected of giving short measure.

"Yes," replied the man.

"Well, it won't do," said the girl. "When we want condensed milk we'll buy it at the grocer's."

How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing.

These pictures were especially posed for this page.

In the figure on top, Lady Constance shows how to stand gracefully. A simple exercise in swaying from foot to foot. This will teach you how to balance the weight properly. The next figure below will bring grace to arms and shoulders. Beside this it is a splendid exercise for reducing hips and thigs.

In the last figure Lady Constance gives a little tip-toe exercise.

EVERYONE agrees that for the art of sculpture we can not exceed the ancients. To me it seems that the Greeks had beautiful sculptured figures because they had wonderful models, and had wonderful models because they had a deep veneration for the almost divine beauty of the human form. And so out of this circle of perfection they chiseled glorious figures that we of to-day may use as models for the beautification of our own bodies.

To-day I am showing you three figures, and I shall dwell at length on them and what we may hope to acquire from a practice of the poses they portray. Let us make a slight study of the expression of countenance and body. For unless the face and body are attuned in the expression of a mood, there will be ungraceful uncertainty as a result.

The First Figure.

The first figure on top might stand for a number of ideas—injured innocence is the most dramatic idea that it suggests. To me it simply is a harmoniously simple pose, in which body and face express quiet dignity. Try it yourself—for it looks very easy to take a pose like this. But to stand poised firmly and gracefully on one foot, with the whole body balanced, ready to spring into motion and life and still at rest, is quite a feat. The ability to stand gracefully is rare—for people generally balance on heels or toes, or sag awkwardly on one hip.

Let me suggest an exercise for the acquisition of ability to stand gracefully. Balance the weight on the ball of the right foot, let the right arm hang easily at the side. Sway the body slightly to the left and raise the left arm to the chest, at the same time rising on the toes of the left foot until the weight is all balanced on the right foot. Then sway the weight gradually to the left foot, rising on the right toe and lifting the right arm to the chest. Simply sway from foot to foot in exactly the posture that figure one shows you.

Is Very Simple.

Figure two is gayety shown in one step of an old dance of triumph. It gives the most marvellous control of thigh, knee, ankle and instep, and will serve to bring down an accumulation of weight about the hips and thighs. Furthermore, it insures a graceful control of arms and shoulders.

The practice of this seemingly complicated exercise is simple when once you carefully analyze the picture I have posed for you. Beginning with the left foot, rise slowly to the toes, at the same time raising the other leg with the knee bent and the instep so flexed that the toes point almost perpendicularly to the floor.

The rising on the toes of one foot and the lifting of the other limb until the knee is far above the waist line must be simultaneous.

Practice this first, alternating from one foot to the other, with the arms hanging at the sides.

Then combine the arm and leg motion, and see what a gain in balance results.

Lift the arms with drooping wrists, and as the hands reach the shoulders, and the elbows are at waist height, turn the fingers up, at the same time turning out the hand above the raised knee, and elevating the up-pointing fingers of the other hand above the head.

Poise, balance, and reduction of superfluous hip-flesh—is this not a vast deal to gain from one dancing exercise?

The last figure illustrates a little faun-like movement that is splendid for back, throat and instep, as well as for flexibility of wrist. Walk forward on tip-toes, with the uplifted hands crossing first to the right and then to the left as the body's weight is thrown first on the right and then on the left foot. When the weight is coming on the right foot and the right wrist is foremost, throw the head to the right and give the body (which must be bent slightly back throughout the exercise) a slight turn to the right. Alternate this from foot to foot.

Always practice these exercises in regular alternation from right to left or left to right and back again to insure even bodily development. Real beauty of form demands as first requisite absolutely even and uniform development, for only when it is absolutely normal is the body truly lovely as Our Maker meant it to be.

Up-to-Date Jokes

The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something.

"I'll have to get rid of Fido," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?"

Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous and burning indignation, as she replied:

"Every single thing except the dog biscuits."

"Waiter," grumbled a customer, "I should like to know the meaning of this. Yesterday I was served with a portion of pudding twice the size of this."

"Indeed, sir," rejoined the waiter. "Where did you sit?"

"By the window," answered the customer.

"Oh, that accounts for it," said the waiter. "We always give people by the window large portions. It's an advertisement."

:-: The Sins of Our Fathers :-:

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

MILDRED writes: "I am deeply in love with a young man three years my senior. I have been keeping company with him for the past three months. I would like to bring him up to the house, but my father objects to me bringing any boys up to the house. What shall I do?"

In the category of sins which fathers visit upon their children, no mention is made of the heavy penalty that often results when a girl is compelled to do all her "sweethearting" outside the protecting walls of her home. If the streets, the parks, the public walks or the dark corners of steps are made a girl's parlor, then I contend her father is visiting upon her innocent head as great a burden as if he violated all the moral and physical laws. In the most trying period of her life, when through her love she is weakest to resist, she is cast out on the streets without even the environment of familiar scenes at home to remind and to restrain her.

One can not be as easily tempted when in the familiar scenes of one's youth and innocent dreams, as if in strange surroundings. It is as if every chair, the table, even the pictures on the wall, looked with accusing eyes, surrounding the girl with whose life they have always been a part with a moral influence that is never lightly brushed aside.

The girl who receives her lover in her parlor impresses him, though perhaps unconsciously, with the sanctity, the respectability, the dignity of a home. The girl whose parlor is the streets may be good and pure and sweet, and usually is, but girls whose object is not moral also meet men on the streets, and the similarity upsets his moral balance.

An Impression.

The girl in the parlor usually has a father or a mother in the next room, and the young man who calls is impressed with the fact that there is some one loving her, shielding her, to whom he will have to account if he offends. The girl on the street corners is without a mother or father, so far as any impression of personal security goes. She is thrown out like a waif; if she becomes a derelict the father or mother who refused her the privilege of receiving her lover in her parlor is to blame.

The memory of parents is criminally short. There are few of them who can call back to the days when they loved and were loved, and when the clasp of a hand, or a kiss, was worth more than all the wealth in the world, and defied the wisdom of the ages. They have forgotten the call of youth.

There is no room in their memory for the cry of the heart for its mate, and, lacking this memory, they are as unfit to be parents of young girls and boys as an Egyptian mummy. They are without sympathy and understanding, at the period when the young in their charge need sympathy and understanding the most.

Without these they are also without charity. I have a notion that the father of Mildred, who compels her to do her "sweethearting" on the streets, would be like flint in his judgment if she yielded to the unwholesome influences of the dark corners of life and erred. Yet he would be more to blame than she.

Wisdo mto Refuse.

It is wisdom to refuse to let a girl bring a man to her home of whom her parents know nothing, but it is better to grant her even this privilege than to let her meet him on the streets. If they know nothing of him a closer inspection in their own home gives them every opportunity to know him better.

They can never know the manner of man their daughter is learning to love if they compel her to see him on street corners, and, being ignorant of him, they are without argument or weapons if he is undesirable.

Open the parlor for the girls. It is their right!

The Misfortunes of Joe Brick

A SHORT time ago I met my friend, Joe Brick. He looked worried. When I greeted him with a smile he groaned.

"Oh, if you only knew! If you knew, but you don't."

Then feeling, like most unhappy men, a desire to confide the story of his misery to somebody, he told it to me, and a pitiful story it was indeed.

"My affairs were going splendidly and I was already hoping to become a member of the Billionaires' Club," began Joe. "A rich marriage, I thought, would help me along. In society. I had often met Miss Ruby Smith, a daughter of the king of agriculture, a young lady of unusual beauty, but who unfortunately had neither arms nor legs. She was called the trunk woman. She was known to be amiable and sweet tempered, and was extraordinarily bright, so bright indeed that most of the schemes which had made her father the richest man in the United States had been hatched in her brain.

"I Decided to Marry."

"I decided to marry Ruby Smith, and one afternoon, dressed in my very best clothes, I asked her father for her hand.

"He looked at me sharply and said:

"'My daughter is very rich; how much are you worth?'

"I told the dreaded magnate all about my hopes. I proved to him that I had an idea which would revolutionize the manufacture of beet sugar, that I had a scheme to cut the cost of oleomargarine in two, and depicted to him all the details of my plan to increase the crop of Brussels sprouts, to triple its present size by sprinkling the plants twice a day with water from the celebrated Manneken fountain in Brussels, and how there were untold millions in my idea of exporting black radishes to the negroes in Africa.

"He was greatly impressed, took me into his arms and exclaimed:

"'You are to be my son-in-law, if Ruby will have you for her husband.'

"Miss Ruby received me most cordially. Poor little one, how beautiful she was! A regular Venus from Milo, only more perfect still, since her legs, too, were missing.

"I shall not go into details. It is enough to tell that she accepted me and a date was set for our wedding. It was celebrated with great splendor. It was the happiest day in my life. After the ceremony my wife received all her old friends with open arms, in spirit at least, in our new home. I felt my future was assured and knew that I would surely be elected for membership in the Millionaires' Club, which was the height of my ambition. Alas, it was not to be!"

"My dear little wife, my darling Ruby!' I said to my bride when we were alone: 'What do you say to giving up all our old habits for a few months and leave this feverish town for an idyllic wedding trip?'

"'You really think of everything, Joe!' she exclaimed, and as she could not clasp my hand she looked right into my soul with her angelic eyes. 'I am ready to follow you to the end of the world!'

"I have always been a most chivalrous fellow, so I felt like kissing her hand, but had to kiss her forehead instead.

"'I do love you so, Joe,' she whispered.

"'And I adore you, Ruby. There is no other woman in the world half so beautiful to me as you are!'

"We left for Canada in our private car, starting on our famous trip, which filled columns in the newspapers. We were to cross the Rocky Mountains and stay for some time in Monterey and Los Angeles, but the pitiless hand of destiny interfered. We were as happy as two turtle doves during the first part of our journey, and I felt that Ruby loved me more every day.

The Fatal Day.

"Then the fatal day came. The train, our own special train, of course, was speeding along at 70 miles an hour, when suddenly there was a shrill whistle and the airbrakes were jammed down hard. Train robbers had held us up and now invaded our drawing room.

"'Hands up!' cried a gigantic fellow standing in the doorway.

"Ruby behaved like a heroine and smiled indulgently at the bandit, while my hands shot upward.

"'Hands up!' roared the robber once more, and as Ruby, of course, was unable to comply with his request, he fired at her, killing her on the spot.

"That is how I became a widower,' sobbed Joe. "The king of agriculture accused me of leading his daughter, his right hand as he called her, into a trap. He blackballed me in the Billionaires' Club and did not keep a single promise to me in connection with my schemes. That is why I am a ruined man to-day. By the way, can you lend me a hundred?"

* * * *

Only to-day I learned that Joe is spending his time in a nice, quiet retreat for the feeble-minded. He had told the story of his misfortunes to a dignified old judge while awaiting his turn at a barber shop.

By Virtue of Age.

"Yes," said the old man to his visitor. "I'm proud of my daughters, and it is the ambition of my heart to see them all comfortably married.

"What's more," he added knowingly, "I've made a bit of money in my time, so my girls wont go to their husbands penniless. There's Mary for example, 25 years old, and a real good lass—I'll give her $1,500 on her wedding day. And to Bet—you see, she has past her thirty-fifth summer—I'll give her, at any rate, a couple of thousand; whilst the man who takes Eliza can rely on taking with her at least $5,000 of the very best."

"By the way," inquired the young man, "how old is Eliza?"

"Forty," replied the elder.

"Hum! I suppose you don't happen to have a daughter somewhere between sixty and seventy?"

Do You Know---

There has been such a decline of recent years in the marriage rate of Trieste that one of the civic dignitaries suggests the institution of a system of compulsory matrimony. It is proposed that on a given date in each year all spinsters who have attained their twenty-fifth year and bachelors who have attained their thirtieth should be required to present themselves before the syndic in whose jurisdiction they reside. The names of those who on medical examination prove to be thoroughly sound would be sorted according to sex, placed in separate urns, and then drawn two at a time. The couples whose names are drawn together would, at the conclusion of the draw, be united forthwith by the syndic.

A traveling theatrical company, which is at present visiting Lille, France, gives performances in a couple of barges, which are towed along the canal from town to town. One barge does duty for the theater, while the other serves to house the players. The floating theater is comfortably fitted, and there is a large stage, with scenery painted by a member of the company.

One of the competitions in connection with the Welsh Territorial Artillery, which recently concluded its training on the sand dunes at Pembrey, was a bun-eating contest. Two sappers set out to eat fourteen buns, the prize to go to the man who got through the lot in the quickest time. The winner ate his fourteen in 25 minutes, his opponent finishing five minutes later.

GAMBLING MAY WRECK GAME AT PELICANVILLE

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Southern League owes itself the duty of cleaning out the baseball gamblers at New Orleans.

That city, by far the largest in the league, should be the vertebra of the circuit. Instead, it is only an appendix—and a decidedly diseased appendix at that.

I've talked with a lot of managers and players in this league, firing at all of them the question, "What's the matter with New Orleans?"

Some of them didn't know.

The rest agreed.

"Too much gambling."

It is understood that gambling runs practically wide open in the New Orleans stands—that you can get a bet on anything from the outcome of the pennant race to the question of whether the next effort of the pitcher will be a ball or a strike.

* * *

GAMBLING ruins baseball wherever it gets a foothold. It makes knockers. It creates a suspicion of faking. It drives respectable people away from the games.

What New Orleans needs is a house cleaning.

The gamblers should be run out of the stands and kept out. Every effort should be made to keep down gambling on games to the minimum.

It is really up to President Kavanaugh to take a look into this question. The interests of the league can be protected in no other way. The New Orleans Baseball Association can't handle the question, and has proved it.

The league is sickening because of this festering sore.

Somebody phone Old Doctor Kavanaugh!

* * *

IT is sort of a pathetic coincidence that Jud Daley is to succeed Spencer at New Orleans. They are chips off the same block—or should we say tusk?

Judson doesn't seem to be hitting them as of old. It can't be that he is aging. So probably he's in sort of a slump.

He's a great card for any club, on account of his cutting-up and his kidding of the bleachers, and is worth his pay as a comedian.

SEVERAL men, well known in Dixie, are figuring prominently in the International League these days. Derrick is batting .346 with Baltimore, and is leading the league. Ed Lafitte leads the Providence batters with .329. Swacina and Bill Zimmerman, both former Southern Leaguers, are hitting moderately hard with the Newark club "Swats" has a mark of .302 to his credit, while "Heinie" is going at a .281 clip.

* * *

THIS Clark that the Crackers have just picked up appears to be one of the champion wild men of organized baseball. Until a few days ago he belonged to the Highlanders. In a game in St. Louis, Chance stuck him in. He started by giving Brier four successive high ones. Pratt waited for four that didn't come near the plate. It was the same for Johnston.

Having pitched twelve successive balls, Wallace was next. Bob got a ball, and then, to the surprise of everybody, Clark pitched a strike. The next three were balls, though, and Chance yanked his recruit southpaw with the record of one strike in seventeen tries.

About sunset, Chance sold him to Clark Griffith.

Clark's big league career dates back to the days when Chase was managing the New York team. Arthur Irwin tipped Chase off to the fact that Clark had worlds of stuff. Chase sent "King" Brockett out to Sioux City to look Clark over, and, on the "King's" favorable report, Chase signed the southpaw.

Clark, upon being brought to civilization, proved wild as a bat. He had more stuff than Marquard and less control than Lefty Russell. He was shifted around a bit. Last season, he started with Rochester and was then sent to the Northwestern League. He was a successful twirler there, despite the fact that he issued AN AVERAGE OF NEARLY A BASE ON BALLS TO AN INNING.

It is doubtful if the world has ever seen a man wilder than Clark in his wildest moments. But when he has control, they couldn't hit him with a fishnet.

Clark will be another case for the attention of Old Reliable Joe Dunn. The man will be put under Joe's coaching. Maybe, Joseph can make a pitcher out of him. Any time Clark starts and is right, it's all over. Any time he's wild—good evening.

DENT OR BRADY TO-DAY; LOCALS EXPECT TO WIN

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18.—Bill Smith is going to shoot King Brady or "Slight" Dent against the Pelicans to-day. And we win it sure!

Those chaps were lucky to "get by" yesterday. They found us worn out after an awful trip, they got to an injured pitcher and it was all off. And at that we stalled them along for ten innings. We'll get them to-day.

Conzelman didn't have the stuff yesterday he had before he was hurt. He had no control over his curve and his fast ball did not break as it used to.

We got away in front as usual, scoring three runs in the first inning. They came back at us for a tie in the second and went out ahead in the fourth. In the seventh they added another on a wild pitch. We tied it up in our half of the eighth on doubles by Alperman and Bisland and my single.

In the fatal tenth, with two gone, Angemeler's single scored Williams, who had walked, and the game was over.

We aren't in the least bothered by the loss of the game, even to the Pelicans. We have thirteen more on our trip. If we can break even, we ask no more. Our long stay at home will give us the chance we want to win the pennant.

CUMMINGS BEATS THOMAS.

ANACONDA, MONT., July 18.—Dan Cummings, of Chicago, was given the decision over Young Joe Thomas, featherweight, at the end of twelve fast rounds of fighting last night.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY AT PONCE

At Ponce DeLeon park Saturday afternoon the two leading clubs of the Sunday School League will meet in a double-header. In the absence of Billy Smith's Crackers, fans in large numbers are expected to provide the best crowd of the Sunday school season for the Saturday afternoon games.

The First Baptist team, leading the league with twelve straight victories and no defeats, has been playing such ball as to attract sidewise glances from the pennant races of the larger leagues, and is determined to add two more wins Saturday. The S. V. D. club, in second place, with seven victories and three defeats, is equally determined to break up the winning streak of the Baptists. Both teams will be in classiest condition for the double-header Saturday, which is scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

"I DIDN'T RESIGN, I WAS FIRED," SAYS JAKE STAHL

BOSTON, July 18.—"I didn't resign from the Red Sox; I was fired," declared Jake Stahl, when he arrived in Boston. "I gave the Red Sox the best of the baseball that was in me. I was with them heart and soul. That club was the only one which I was ever really interested in. And I wish them all the best of success," continued Stahl.

SOUTH MICHIGAN TEAMS PLAY 20-INNING GAME

ADRIAN, MICH., July 18.—Battle Creek and Adrian, the leading teams in the Southern Michigan League, yesterday played twenty innings to a tie, each scoring one run before darkness ended the struggle. Manager Jenkins, of Adrian, in the fourth inning, singled, and advancing on a sacrifice hit and a passed ball, was scored on a sacrifice fly. Pitcher McDonald, of Battle Creek, tripled in the sixth and scored on an error. Loomis, Adrian's pitcher, struck out nineteen batters and issued one pass, purposely, in the twentieth inning. McDonald fanned sixteen and passed none.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Nor ever a soul to mutter,
Nor ever a voice to bawl.

Oh, well for the guys who lose!
They are only a bunch of dubs.
They get the hook and a vicious look
Like the manager of the Cubs.

And the gate receipts go on,
Though the manager may be nil,
And the magnates cry for a winning guy,
As they hark to the sound of the till.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Or the friends you have, though they hand you salve,
Will hammer you to the wall.

Frank Chance was once a catcher. All he catches now is a flock of Gehenna.

Despite the fact that the Tigers whopped a few wallops into the Athletics, there is a deep suspicion that whopping the Athletics is not going to become a popular pastime.

Looking over the sport pages, we note that Larry Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues. This is a great truth. Mr. Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues.

The fact that Messrs. McAleer and Stahl have split reminds us that both denied it. The only conclusion to be drawn is that they were prevaricating, or didn't know it was loaded.

Reading over the papers, one notes that there are bulky fields at Porter. But as for bulky purses that's something else again.

$13,500 IN CASH WAS PAID FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—A check for $13,500, in addition to Outfielder Beall and a catcher, covers the terms of transfer of Outfielder Chappelle, of Milwaukee, to the Chicago American League team, according to authoritative information today.

TEN-ROUND GO SCHEDULED.

Charley White, of Chicago, is scheduled to meet Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, in a ten-round fight at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Abel is in the city. White, it is said, will arrive to-day. The fighters have agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 p. m. White says he will not fight if Abel is one ounce over weight.

HOW TO ATTAIN GOLF BENEFITS TOLD BY EVANS

By "Chick" Evans.

IT is no doubt true that the majority of the golfers play simply for the exercise the game affords. Certainly golf furnishes an excellent opportunity for exercise, but it also supplies one of the finest studies in the world, and he who plays only for exercise misses half the pleasure. One can get a good deal of fun and exercise by just batting the ball around, yet surely much additional enjoyment can be found in attempting to discover the reasons that lie back of good or poor shots.

D. R. Forgan has said that "golf is the study of a lifetime," and this is undeniably true if one wishes to attain excellence. Every day the careful player can learn something about it and at the same time discover new obstacles to be overcome. It may be argued that the business man has no time to study a new game, but a little more care in playing would require but little more time.

There is a great pleasure in knowing how a thing is done, and no great progress can be made unless the underlying reasons for success are understood. Accidents happen, of course, and fortune is proverbially fickle, but she, like providence, is a little more inclined to help those who help themselves.

There is a great deal of good golf literature to be obtained at present, and I have no doubt a great deal of information can be obtained in that way. Personally, I have never read a book on golf except in the most casual manner, but I grew up on a golf links, and, at the observing age, learned my golf from observation. I believe strongly in books, however, and I think, if they are closely followed, they can be of much assistance to the beginner. This fall I intend to read as many golf books as I can lay my hands on, and I hope thereby to improve my game.

BRITTON REAL OPPONENT FOR TITLE HOLDER

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Not since the days when Frank Garrard and Martin Duffy, of this city, looked to be pretty fair championship material in the lightweight class have the local fight fans been so anxious to see a Chicagoan get a crack at the title. Neither Garrard nor Duffy ever made good in their day, but they were just as highly regarded along in the late 90s as are Jack Britton and Packey McFarland, present-day Chicago champions. Both Jack and Packey have a world of friends right here, and to say that they have their ears to the ground listening for some sort of a favorable report from the champion on the different propositions that have been hurled at him is putting it mildly.

* * *

PACKEY, while not issuing any direct challenges, has let it be made known to Ritchie that nothing would delight him more than to take him on in a 20-round contest, providing the weight bars be lowered just a little more, say another pound, letting the stock yards favorite in at 135 pounds, with the scaling done several hours in advance of the battle's start. With a foe of the McFarland caliber it is not likely that the champion will consent at all to any such an arrangement. He insisted upon 134 pounds for Rivers, and then trimmed the Los Angeles lad to the queen's taste, if queens have any particular taste in such matters. But from 134 pounds three hours or so before to 135 pounds five or six hours before is a vast gap that even the keen Ritchie eye is not likely to measure lightly.

* * *

BUT the Britton case is hugely different. Here is a boy who boldly flaunts this offer in the champion's face: "Make the weight, any figure that you choose," and then awaits the answer. Now, that leaves absolutely no loopholes for excuse or room for a single argument. Britton simply does not care what the poundage is, says so, and there rests his case. What will the answer be, to say nothing of the harvest?

* * *

NO sane man could ever accuse Willie Ritchie of cowardice. The man who jumped into the breach with Freddie Welch when Ad Wolgast was taken to the hospital and fought the English star almost to a standstill with but a few hours' notice, then whaled Ad Wolgast out of his title and went in and slugged with Joe Rivers at the latter's own game, is possessed, as Bill Naughton says, of a lion's heart. But Willie is a financier along with his other accomplishments and is not likely to enter into any contracts that do not promise the brightest of monetary returns. There isn't a doubt that if some promoter can see his way clear to offering the right sort of a prize for the champion he will lend himself to the match. Then we will see a real old-time battle between two of the greatest men that ever drew on a pair of gloves.

Pelky-Smith Battle For Sept. 1—Maybe

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Arthur Pelky and his manager, Tommy Burns, are in town. Pelky came here in quest of ring battles, and picked as his choice for first battle "Gunboat" Smith. Burns and his fighter held a long conference with Jimmy Coffroth, and if arrangements can be made Pelky and Smith will furnish the Labor Day card in this city. Pelky had little to say, Burns doing all the talking.

"There will be a general disposition to look upon Pelky as a ring accident, just as the people tagged Willie Ritchie as a false alarm," said Burns.

"This is a mistake. My man has had 33 fights without having had a decision given against him. He made Jess Willard quit cold, and he stopped Jim Barry in five rounds. All that he needs is the opportunity to prove that he is the best heavyweight boxer in the game to-day."

WISCONSIN BOXING BILL IS SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—Governor Francis McGovern has signed the Hedding boxing bill and the sport becomes legalized in Wisconsin the same as in New York State.

Governor McGovern had protests from many sources, but stated that he considered that in view of thousands of petitions in favor of the sport it was only just to the majority that they should be given a chance to show that boxing under proper conditions is much better than under no law at all.

It will now be up to the Governor to appoint a commission to handle the boxing game in the State.

Dixie Handicap To Be Thriller

Six Men on Track at Once

IF they get through the Dixie Handicap at the Motordrome to-night without smearing a half-dozen riders all over the track they have pulled the race miracle of the year. For they are going to start six riders in this event, three of them with a lap lead over the other three. And the scratch men are going to try to catch the handicap men within four miles.

This affair will be a loud noise. Nothing can stop it. Every time they get four riders on the track at once it looks as though all of them were going to break their neck. With six on it in a handicap race, which will mean that three of the men must ride their bally heads off to catch the other three, there should be more excitement than the local Drome ever dreamed of before.

This will not be a team race, as might be judged from the description. Of course, the handicap men will team together at the start, as a means of keeping ahead. And the scratch men will hang together to lend each other a pace in their effort to catch up. But once the scratch men get within striking distance, it will be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. When the three pursuing riders reach the three handicap men and all six of them tie up in an effort to gain the leadership anything may happen. Of course, the handicap men will never give an inch. If they can spread all over the track they will do it. That means that the men coming from behind at 85 miles an hour must worm their way through.

This will unquestionably be a big race. It will be fast because the scratch men must overcome a quarter of a mile lead in four miles. It will be dangerous and sensational of necessity because six men will be on the track at one time. And the winner is surely hard to pick.

COACH J. W. HEISMAN, OF YELLOW JACKETS, WRITES ABOUT:

Ball Players That Tech Has Turned Out

By J. W. Heisman.

SO many college players are breaking into professional ball these days, and so many of them with great success, that the thing no longer occasions the surprise and comment that used to ensue. Something like 25 years ago, when I was attending a New England college, I can remember with what dumbfoundment we learned one day that one of our varsity players had received an offer from Boston. It tickled us nearly to death!

* * *

Among Southern colleges, Tech early took the lead in this respect by sending the great Henley straight to the big show. Unless my memory fails me badly, it was to the Athletics that Henley went, and it was about thirteen years ago. Even at that early date, when hardly any other professional managers would look at a college player, Connie Mack had his eyes wide open as to their possible usefulness.

When Henley first went to Tech he played first base, and he played it well. He was about 6 feet 1 inch tall, but very slender. His arms were very strong, and he had a fine free shoulder swing. Rather a handsome chap, this Henley, and a good, jovial fellow. Came from the little hamlet of Jasper, I believe, in North Georgia, the section that also sent Craig Day and DeWitt Poole to Tech—two other awfully good players and pitchers, who, however, never went into professional ball.

After seevral years of usefulness in the big league Henley was sent to the Rochester club, where he put in a couple more years of good work. But for some reason, his health was steadily failing him and finally he had to give it up. Just where he is to-to-day, I can not say. I know he went to Florida for a while in search of improved health, and perhaps he found it; at least we all hope so.

At the time Weldon was at the zenith of his glory as a college pitcher, Mercer was turning out some exceedingly strong teams. Their mainstay on the mound was the unforgotten Will Gunn, now a successful architect in Macon. It will have to be given up that Gunn was some gun himself when it came to making a noise like a pitcher, and endless were the arguments of that day in rah rah circles as to which was the better. I am not going into a history of the friendly feud, but it is worth observing that when the two teams finally did face each other at old Brisbine Park, with their respective stars down on the score card to do the hurling, there was some crowd present to witness the ceremonies, and some little excitement was had. The game was won by Tech; score, 30 to 0.

* * *

ANOTHER great picher that Tech turned out about the same time that Henley was absorbing all the limelight, was little Jimmy Lavendar, now with the Chicago Cubs. It would perhaps be more correct to say that Tech turned Jimmy out, or that it turned out an engineer, not that it turned out another pitcher, for, at that time, Jimmy didn't play ball at all, at least he never went out for the varsity; and so it is merely an accident that his youthful career was in any way associated with Tech's.

Lavendar was born and reared in South Georgia. He had seen a picture or two of a baseball before coming to Tech, but didn't care enough for the game to even come out and try for the team. It was after leaving Tech that his acquaintance with the pellet grew into a thing of beauty; and, after slamming the sphere around corner lots for a short time, it was found that Jimmy had the makings of a really, truly pitcher.

It was while doing stellar work with the Providence team of the Eastern League that Lavendar attracted Chicago's attention. Now, Jimmy is one of the "its" of the Cubs, and promises to remain one for some years yet.

* * *

TWO Atlanta boys attending Tech were the next to break into the professional class, and they both made good from the jump. One of these was Sam Woodward, the other, Jim Ison. The former was captain and catcher of my 1904 Tech team, while Jim was official first-sacker of the same aggregation.

Woodward was rather small for a catcher, but he had plenty of nerve, heaps of judgment, always kept cool, had a fine arm, was quick as a cat, and made a fine lead-off man, as he batted from the port side. Sam's favorite word of encouragement to his pitchers—Poole, Day and Butler—was "Beauty" after every pitched ball, but each time in a different intonation and with varying inflection and accents—and this quite regardless, in my opinion, of whether the ball was really a beauty or a pumpkin.

Sam went to the Cotton States with Bernie McCay, where he played fine ball; but a blow on the head by a pitched ball came near to putting out his light. It took him quite a long time to recover. Later, Sam went to the Carolina League, and for several seasons managed the Anderson, S. C. club with signal success. He is now engaged in business in Atlanta and is making a success of life as president of the Woodward Electric Company.

By the way, during the college season of 1904, Sam caught every inning of every game without making a single error, and I gave him All-Southern catcher for it.

Jim Isom was one of the hardest-hitting first basemen I ever saw in college ranks. He was a godd, willing, cheery, all-around player and my clean-up man, which was some distinction with a team that had five men on its roster all batting over .400.

I forget what professional team Jim first joined, but he never had any trouble holding his berth right from the jump. He played several very successful seasons with Macon, where he again stung the pill hard, and he also starred in the Virginia League at second base for the Richmond club. Here he was an even better fielder than at first base.

Jimmy found an opportunity to go into a lucrative business here in Atlanta several years ago and decided to give up the game for good, though it cost him a pang or two to do so. Now, he is fat, happy and making money in the Gate City.

Later, I will tell of some other players Tech has turned out.

HAUSER GOES TO HOSPITAL.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 18.—Shortstop Hauser, of the St. Louis National baseball team, is on his way to Baltimore, where he will be operated on by Dr. William S. Baer, of Johns Hopkins Hospital. It is said that the player has a misplaced cartilage in his right knee.

MEEHAN BESTS MANTELL.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 18.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here. By constant clinching in the last round Mantell saved himself from being knocked out.

COBB BACK TO-DAY.

DETROIT, MICH., July 18.—President Ban Johnson announced that Ty Cobb, suspended recently for an argument with Umpire Hildebrand, will be back in the game to-day.

Best Bet Is to Play Champions

Title Holders Have Big Shade

By Left Hook.

HERE'S a little tip for the men who bet good con on the results of encounters in the boxing arena. Never stop betting on a champion of any class until he has been beaten. The suggestion of such a theme for a little fighting story is brought up by the manner in which the Joe Rivers supporters lost so heavily on the Los Angeles boy in his battle with Willie Ritchie, in San Francisco, July 4. Incidentally, the idea of it was brought out forcibly by some remarks that Battling Nelson made the day after the holiday while the famous iron man of the lightweight class was discussing results and congratulating himself on having picked six out of seven winners after having bet personally on three of them and failing to get down on the one loser that he picked.

* * *

IT is a foolish thing to bet against a champion, even if you don't like him personally and haven't such a high opinion of his fistic merits, because, according to Bat Nelson, champions always win a lot of battles in a row after they attain the title and have a big natural shade in all of their contests. The argument is a sound one, because champions, after annexing titles, do not make the kind of matches that they can not win—and they know they can win them when they make them. Mind you, this is not an intimation that there is anything wrong or any skulduggery practiced by any of them. But the average champion is a pretty wise sort of a gink. He knows that to keep a title is to make plenty of money. Hence, he figures with the greatest of care, and when finally he signs to battle, it's about 3 to 1 that he is going to win.

* * *

AND another thing worth figuring is that referees have natural leanings toward champions and don't take titles away from them without the very best of cause. Which is a mighty strong point in favor of the champion when he starts into action. But, of course, the strongest point of all is the fact, borne out by many a precedent, that champions almost always win a bunch of fights before being compelled to resign the top rung of the ladder.

The other two members of the new board will be Judge Martin Knapp, of the United States Commerce Court, and Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

Battle for Painter Organs Continues

BALTIMORE, July 18.—Today's session of the fight in the Circuit Court for the possession of the viscera of the late E. O. Painter, of Jacksonville, was taken up by efforts by employees of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, to show that representatives of that company had not been permitted to be present when the analysis of the organs of Painter was made.

It is likely that the case will continue for some time before Judge Duffy can hand down a decision on the petition of the guaranty company, in which the deceased was insured for $20,000, that a receiver be appointed for his vital organs.

SMALL INVESTOR CAN BUY FIRM BONDS NOW

B. C. Forbes Points Out Advantage Paper in Denomination of $10 Gives to All.

By B. C. FORBES.

The small investor of to-day, if wisely guided, will be a larger investor to-morrow, since Money makes money.

* * *

In America poor people have lost shamefully through being allured into gilded traps by unscrupulous promoters and "brokers." Swindling has cost the unwary upward of $200,000,000 in one year. It has been checked to some extent. The dissemination of correct information by newspapers and magazines has helped. The postal authorities have queered a good many clever games. In some States laws have been passed to severely punish stock swindlers and their kind.

* * *

The issuance of high-grade securities in small denominations has contributed invaluably to driving out fake stuff. There is to-day no need for even the smallest investor turning to worthless stocks and bonds, for he or she can buy the best in as low as $10 quantities. This development is of far-reaching importance.

* * *

Discussing the investment opportunities now within reach in the current issue of Hearst's Magazine, I point out:

"You can now buy $10 bonds.

"New York City has taken the lead in bringing the highest grade of security within reach of the most modest purse. The results that will flow from this innovation can not be fully grasped. It should, and probably will, mean that Americans, like the French, will become a nation of thrifty investors. In France the peasants can buy safe bonds of very small denomination, but in lordly, opulent, big-scale America nothing less than $1,000 bonds used to be issued, so indifferent to small investors were our railroads, our industrial corporations and our other large borrowers.

* * *

"So keen, however, has become the struggle for capital all over the world that even the proudest applicants for funds—governments, States, municipalities, railroad systems and trusts—are anxious to cater to those who have saved; not thousands, but hundreds or even tens of dollars. Of late $100 bonds have come into vogue.

* * *

"And now New York City is making a specialty of $10 bonds. Their yield is about 4 1-2 per cent.

* * *

"Now, 4 1-2 per cent is more than savings banks pay, and the risk is absolutely negligible. While those whose nestegg is very tiny can not do better than place it in a strong, carefully managed savings bank, the advisability of buying a good bond should be seriously considered by those who have accumulated several hundred dollars or more. On $1,000 the difference between 3 1-2 per cent and 4 1-2 per cent is $10 every year Not much, do you say?

* * *

"The difference in twenty years, at compound interest, would lay the foundation for a nice savings account for your son or daughter. One thousand dollars at 4 1-2 per cent compound interest become $2,000 in less than sixteen years, whereas money at 3 1-2 per cent takes more than twenty years to double itself. And remember that thrift begets thrift. Just as 'nothing succeeds like success,' nothing stimulates saving like saving. You can not begin a day too soon. The Government one day may imitate European nations by adopting old age pensions, but what self-respecting, healthy person would compare the satisfaction to be derived from his own savings with the feeling that would accompany a dole from the national purse?

* * *

"The buyer of one bond wants to obtain another as soon as he possibly can. Two $100 bonds paying 3 1-2 per cent bring $9 a year. Five paying 5 per cent—as many sound bonds do—net $25 each year, and, of course, this $25 interest helps to get another bond.

* * *

"The investor buys for income.

"The speculator buys for fluctuations in quotations.

"The investor seeks to avoid risk.

"The speculator 'takes a chance.'

"The investor in a safe bond is not hurt by temporary declines in the market price; his income is sure as long as the bond runs, and he can get full face value for it when it matures.

"The speculator's profits are not limited. He buys for possibilities and changes.

"Investment should be practiced by all persons of ordinary means.

* * *

"Speculation should be left to those who can afford to incur risks and to lose money, to those who have special opportunities for gathering and analyzing basic information, to those whose regular duties do not call for much time or thought—for speculation is insidious; it excites, it enervates, it distracts attention from other matters, it often unbalances judgment, it sometimes develops into a mania and ends in disaster. 'There are two classes of people who should not speculate,' said a wise man—'those who can afford it and those who can't.'"

Slays Rich Husband By Light of Match

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—The mystery in the death of Manuel E. DeValle, wealthy ranch owner, who was found dead in bed Wednesday, was cleared to-day. Mrs. Mary E. DeValle confessed that she killed her husband. She said:

"My husband lay on the bed jabbering in a drunken stupor. I could see him faintly by the half light of the moon. I lighted a match and walked until I was within a foot of him. Then I lighted another match, aimed my revolver and fired."

House Kills Inquiry Into Caminetti Case

WASHINGTON, July 18.—By a vote of 133 to 84, the House to-day tabled the Kahn resolution for an inquiry into the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave cases without allowing debate.

On a vote by tellers, the House favored tabling the Kahn resolution, 99 to 75, but Minority Leader Mann, starting a filibuster, secured a roll call.

Thursday's 97 Mark For Heat Threatened

With a record temperature of 83 degrees at 8 o'clock, as registered by he official thermometer, Friday promises to go Thursday one better along heat lines. According to all signs, Thursday's high mark of 97 degrees probably will be broken by at least one degree.

The weather man says there is little prospect of rain for several days.

War Veteran Sued For Balm by Girl, 16

PATERSON, N. J., July 18.—Miss Emma Mahanney, 16, has sued John Wolf, 70, a war veteran, for breach of promise.

Miss Mahanney's counsel said the couple became engaged and were making arrangements for the wedding when Wolf changed his mind. Miss Mahanney asks for $25,000.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Wheat traders regarded the market last night as a sale on all bulges. Speculation has dropped off some, however, and many traders think the market is in no condition to stand any heavy selling. Many of the local speculators are bullish on oats and bearish on corn. It was noticeable, however, that comparatively little new outside buying is coming into oats because of their recent slump when the trade was long, forcing out a large number of holders.

"Specialists believe that oats at present prices have merit."

* * *

Chicago drizzling rain, 68 degrees; Minneapolis clear, 68; Peoria clear, 76; no rain; Terre Haute clear, 80; Springfield clear, 78; no rain; Omaha drizzling, 70; half-hour good rain this morning; Kansas City, St. Louis, 85.

* * *

St. Paul wires: "The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, this morning says prospects in Minnesota for abundant harvest of all grains are excellent, according to D. A. Woods, of the Minnesota State University. He says the crops were not injured by the recent rains. He thinks the crop yield as a whole will average up about same as last year. Corn crop will be much larger."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co., says:

"Wheat—Map shows further rains in spring wheat country, with temperatures about the same as yesterday. It looks as though we might have a little lower market to-day.

"Corn—Temperatures east of the River are generally lower, but no rains reported in Illinois, except immediate vicinity of Chicago. Kansas City and St. Louis again show high temperatures, but it is cooler in Nebraska, with light rain at Omaha this morning. Look for lower market to-day, but would not press sales on decline.

"Oats—Market is showing steadier undertone, with moderate increase in outside buying.

"Provisions—Commission houses seem to have more buying orders, the selling being chiefly in way of profit-taking. Market continues very firm."

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "Corn prospects along Illinois Central, Chicago to St. Louis, very much mixed, but general average is poor. Kankakee to Farmer City good; thence to Springfield spotted, and south of Springfield poor; plenty of moisture to Farmer City, but from there south alternate streaks of rain and drouth.

"Tassel just beginning to show in few earliest fields, but growth will not average more than hip high, and south of Springfield there are thousands of acres not knee high. Oats harvest begun; best fields below average and crop is poorest in years."

* * *

The market was oversold and local crowd is covering short wheat. Slaughtee cable reports political complications in Austria and Russia and bad crops from England.

* * *

Carmi, Ill., to St. Louis, country very dry. Average corn promise in the poor counties and very good near St. Louis.

* * *

The thrashing reports on oats coming pretty bad and we believe it would be good judgment to at least cover and stay off the short side for a while.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.

PAY $9.60 FOR HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Another rung of the ladder was mounted by the hog market when $9.60 was paid for shipping grades. The stereotyped 5 to 10c advance was recorded and only trash had to sell under the 9c line. Eastern demand is setting the pace. Eleven markets had 68,000, against 66,000 last week. Cattle trade was nominally steady on a light run, but trade in the sheep house was demoralized, owing to heavy receipts direct to packers from the Ohio River.

STRONG SOURCES ADVANCE COTTON

Report of Deterioration in Texas and Bullish Mill Takings Frighten Shorts.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Influenced by weak cables and a bearish report by Cordill concerning conditions in Southwest Texas, the cotton market opened easy to-day, and first prices were unchanged to 3 points lower than Thursday's final. There was some covering on the decline by board room traders who went short on continued dry weather in Texas. This class of buying caused prices to advance 1 to 7 points from the initial level, with the exception of July and August, which increased their decline 2 to 4 points.

After the call, however, the entire list steadied with prices firmly maintained at the early high point. The strength of the market was chiefly attributed to some private reports from Texas indicating some deterioration in the crop; also Habersham King's review for the week, saying the crop was favorable over 80 per cent of the area and unfavorable over 10 per cent and injurious to the remaining 10 per cent. The circular was more bearish than bullish, but the local shorts covered.

During the late forenoon the market was quiet and featureless.

The talk around the floor to-day reflected a decidedly more cheerful feeling with reference to legislative prospects. The weather map was considered favorable.

At the close the market was very steady with new crop positions at a net gain of 11 to 12 points; August 5 and July unchanged from the final quotations of Thursday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Liverpool is droopy in futures and spots, the latter being quoted 3 points lower; sales only 6,000 bales.

Some scattered showers occurred over night in the lower central States, and the Atlantic Coast districts had some good rains; generally fair weather prevailed elsewhere, with little change in the range of temperatures. Indications are more favorable for some precipitation in West Texas, while increasing cloudiness and scattered showers are indicated for the territory east of the Mississippi River.

Several private reports from Texas say that old holdings are showing up on platforms, but that holders are not yet selling, owing to New York promises of high July-August squeeze prices. In respect to the present anxiety in regard to dry weather in Texas; it will be found interesting to know that Government records show that last year Texas had practically no rain from June 29 to August 29, whereas this year, Texas had a fine general rainfall up to July 5.

First trades here were at a decline of 3 points, but advices from New York of large buying by McFadden brokers soon rallied the market to 11.53 for October. There was a rumor that Fall River had cotton ready for delivery in New York and that a block of cotton was being shipped from Memphis for delivery here, but neither rumor has been confirmed so far.

The market is very steady with an eye on the weather in the West.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—Dry map seems responsible for the advance to-day. Central Texas reports no damage from drouth, but that rain is beginning to be needed, which seems sufficient in present limited market to cause small advance. Liverpool for the past two days was less active in spot sales and lower on futures, but American trade seems fearful that after so much good weather something is likely to happen.

Wool Beginning to Move More Freely

BOSTON, July 18.—New territory wools are beginning to move a little more freely both in and out of this market. Total sales the past week have been well over a million pounds, involving Territory and Texas wools, with a little California and foreign grades.

Fleeces remain very quiet, both here and in the country. Most of the Western buying is being done in Montana, where the bulk of the unsold Territory wool is now to be found. The London auction sales closed firm on fine wools and easy on crossbreeds. Indications are that England and the Continent are to have less active markets in the near future.

Until something more definite is known as to the terms of the new tariff bill when finally passed, no material improvement in sentiment or volume of sales is likely.

Receipts of wool in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	9,751,818	11,515,366
Foreign	395,150	1,151,350

Total receipts of 10,146,968 pounds, compared with 5,473,847 the preceding week, of which 5,042,642 were domestic wools.

COTTON GOSSIP

Market dormant.

* * *

The volume of business transacted yesterday was perhaps the smallest of any day this year. Both elements are afraid to push their commitments in such a quiet market.

* * *

Boll weevil and the small stock of cotton is still discussed by the bulls.

* * *

Spot brokers are quoted with saying that the fear of a cotton tax is already diverting hedging business from this market to Liverpool.

* * *

Valdosta, Ga.: "Lowndes County has had good weather all along and crops are in the best condition they have ever been at this season of the year. Reports from some of the counties indicate that the drouth has done much damage to corn, but the cotton crop is in very good condition."

* * *

Texas City, Tex.: "Preparations are under way for the handling through Texas City next season of the largest movement of cotton the new port has ever enjoyed. It is conservatively estimated that in view of the large crop in prospect Texas City will handle in excess of 1,000,000 bales. This season to date 666,851 bales have been received and receipts to August 31, the end of the present cotton year, will probably bring the total near to 750,000 bales."

* * *

Taylor, Tex.: "With only a hundred or more bales of the 1912-1913 season's crop of cotton still remaining in the hands of producers of this section of Williamson County, the total local receipts of cotton at Taylor to date are 35,209 bales since the first day of last August. Ginners are overhauling their plants for the opening of the new season, beginning August 1. The first bales of the new crop are expected here about that time."

* * *

Reports to The Montgomery Advertiser last week indicated that as a whole the crop in Alabama looks well. Some sections report lack of rain. Where there has been rainfall, and there has been rain over the greater part of the State, cotton is reported in excellent condition, although the plant is reported late and much behind the growth expected for this time of the year.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows generally fair, except cloudy in lower central belt, parts of Alabama, Atlantic Coast. Scattered showers in Alabama and Mississippi and some good rains in Atlantic Coast districts. No rain in west. Temperatures about normal. Indications are far more favorable to a break in the dry spell in the west over Sunday. Increasing cloudiness, with some showers over the central and eastern belt.

Fort Worth, Tex., wires: "Our San Antonio agency says, 'Boll weevil danger minimized by heat spell. Little actual damage done. Crop looks splendid. Movement starts August 1, unless rain interferes.'"

GENERAL BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Possibilities of Big Advance in Near Future on Crop Prospects Causes Buying.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Canadian Pacific and New York, New Haven and Hartford were leaders of an upturn which involved a number of issues at the opening of the stock market to-day. Each scored a gain of 1⅞, although Canadian Pacific shaded at the end of half an hour.

Announcement of the resignation of President Mellen, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, apparently imparted strength to the stock instead of detracting from it.

The Mexican situation and continued hostilities in the Balkans furnished the bears with ammunition and a considerable section of the list was lower.

Among the advances were Amalgamated Copper, ¾; American Can, ½; Union Pacific, ¾; Southern Pacific, ⅜; Reading, ⅞; Pennsylvania ⅜, and American Smelting ⅝. The losses include New York Central, ⅛; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Chino Copper ⅛, and Great Northern preferred ⅛. United States Steel common was strong, opening at 54⅝ for a gain of ¾. Half an hour after the opening the list was strong, and an unusually large number of buying orders being executed. Later there was some profit-taking.

California and Mexican Petroleum were weak. California Petroleum sustained a loss of 3½ on reports that the dividends would be interrupted. Mexican Petroleum lost 2½ on account of the uncertainty surrounding conditions in Mexico.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were steady.

After the first fifteen minutes trading became similar to Thursday's dealings, most of the business being on the buying side.

Steel moved up more than 1 point and Southern Pacific rose 1 point to 93. Union Pacific, although the heaviest seller, lost its early gain of 1 point. Copper was up 1 point to 66⅞, and the same advances were recorded in Utah, Canadian Pacific and Lehigh Valley. California Petroleum experienced another decline, yielding 1¾ to 21¾. Call money loaned at 2¼.

The tone was steady in the last hour. A number of issues advanced over their noon level. California Petroleum held around 21⅛ after being hammered by professionals. The bearish activity in this stock is regarded as a campaign on the part of the interested persons.

Union Pacific went to 148 for a net gain of 1⅞ on the day. Steel crossed 56. Amalgamated Copper was in active demand, selling around 67½ for a net gain of 1⅝.

The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

MODERN MILLER CROP REVIEW.

ST. LOUIS, July 18.—The winter wheat harvest is rapidly nearing completion under most favorable weather conditions. Reports of delayed harvesting are fewer than usual, and with the exception of occasional complaints of smut the quality of the wheat is practically perfect. The grain generally is of high order, not only as far as condition is concerned, but also in regard to flour-making qualities, the soft wheat especially yielding well.

CHICAGO, July 18.—A big export demand in wheat resulted in a reaction and an advance of nearly 1c from the bottom prices reached. Final gains for the day were ¼c to ½c. Only fifteen boat loads were reported by the Atlantic seaboard.

St. Louis reported a re-sale there of 110,000 bushels by an exporter, but the particulars were not given. Shorts were the principal buyers as the day wore away and there was a noticeable sprinkling of investment buying as well. Clearances from the seaboard were 307,000 bushels. World's shipments will be 10,000,000 bushels for the week, which is 700,000 bushels smaller than a year ago. Clearances for the week, 3,600,000 bushels of wheat, against less than half that amount a year ago.

Corn closed with advances of ½c to ⅝c and oats were up ½c to ¾c.

Provisions were 5c to 10c higher.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Plan Now for Next Winter's Food Supply

Get Good, Wholesome Variety Needed in Cold Months, While Not Scarce.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

If you are not already planning, I would advise you to begin now to get some of next winter's food supply for the chickens on the way. While few fowls are ever starved, there are a good many that do not get the good and wholesome variety that they are needing, especially in the cold months, when green stuff is rather scarce. Wheat, oats and corn make the bulk of the food supply for the average farm stock, and it is a good ration, if properly handled and heated up at times, such as parching the corn and browning the oats, etc., but it is the rough-and-ready foodstuff that we want to speak of. As I shall want to speak largely of the root crops, and they need to be kept in a cool place, I shall advise the use of a cellar. Throughout the Northern States, cellars are the rule, rather than the exceptions, under all houses built on the farms. These are usually divided into two compartments, one for the keeping of milk and the other for the storing of vegetables and root crops of various kinds. Upon large farms, where there is a lot of stock kept, the barn is often built upon a side hill with a cellar under a part of it for the storing of stock beets, cabbage and all kinds of vegetables that can be used for the stock in winter. These cellars keep them from freezing in winter and keep them cool in summer so they will not spoil. Of course, they are not put into the cellar until the latter part of the summer. Throughout the South these cellars are a novelty, as a rule. I wish they could become more common. Of course, it is not always practical to build them under the dwelling house after it is built, but one can fix up a very good one by using refuse stone, where it can be had, and digging into the side of a hill, walling with the stone, letting it set into the ground as much as possible to make it cooler; the door, or opening, to be on the low side of the cellar. All of it should be roofed with a good, double or lined roof, something that will keep out the great heat of the sun.

With a root cellar of this kind upon your place, you are in a position to take care of all kinds of good tubers and vegetables of various kinds that might otherwise go to waste and be of no benefit in any way. It is not too late to plant the large sugar or stock beets if the ground is well prepared; thoroughly fine and very deep, so that they can take right hold and grow without difficulty. Then there is the rutabaga turnip that will make a good crop late in the season, which is a good keeper as well as the heavy beet. Small heads of cabbage that are not marketable, when put into small hampers that will admit of a circulation of air, can be kept a long while in the cellar.

The short parts of clover or alfalfa, leaves, etc., should all be saved and stored in a dry place in the barn for the poultry in winter. A lot of large gunny sacks come in very handy for this work, as this stuff can be crowded into these sacks where they are easily handled and taken care of until wanted. With a good, rich piece of ground a nice crop of buckwheat can be raised, if planted right now; it matures quickly and makes a grain that the hens are very fond of late in the fall and winter when fed with corn. Plant a good variety of all the vegetable crops, for there are very few of them that the hens do not relish and are ready to take care of the surplus or refuse parts of them. Onions are another good crop, and one that will keep well in this root cellar, and they are a regular tonic for the hens in winter and are very much relished by them. Take care of every one of them. Let us wake up to the possibilities of these crops and the proper handling of them, as indicated. The taking care of these apparently insignificant things and turning them to account will be largely responsible for the per cent of profit that we will make from our poultry during the coming year. Others take advantage of these things to good account; why not you?

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Permit Is Sought For Whitehall Plant

C. H. Johnson Will Build Manufactory—Small Sales Recorded—Crowd Due at Realty Election.

Signs point to early activity on Whitehall street as a wholesale and manufacturing thoroughfare south of Trinity avenue. Application was made Friday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays by C. H. Johnson to construct a two-story reinforced concrete building at No. 757 Whitehall, to cost $10,000. May & Wimbish are the contractors. The ground floor dimensions are 75 by 100 feet.

Builders who expected to put wholesale houses on lower Whitehall are holding up somewhat because of the Whitehall regrading project, but the manufacturers seeking railroad frontage farther south are going ahead.

Interesting Deed Given.

John W. White, administrator of the estate of Charles M. White, has given an administrator's deed to W. D. White on an undivided five-sixths interest in valuable property in Atlanta. The figure is $16,600, and for the same amount W. D. White has made a warranty deed to Mrs. J. C. Clay, T. A. and J. M. White, of DeKalb County, and John W. White, Harvey and Katie Baker, the first four of whom get a one-sixth interest each and the latter two one-twelfth each.

The properties consist of the following:

The southwest corner of Linden way and a 10-foot alley 160 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 93 feet; on Linden way 202 1-2 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 100; on Spruce street 100 south of Dixie avenue 100 by 195; the northeast corner of Bell and Greene streets, 37 1-2 by 97 1-2; George street 75 feet north of East Fair street, 67 1-2 by 80; Old Wheat street 63 1-2 east of North Boulevard, 33 by 99, and Nos. 20 and 22 Raspberry street, 50 by 70, between Bell and Fort streets.

Pine Street Purchase.

Pierre M. Bealer has sold to Ralph J. McGruder the northeast corner of East Pine and North Jackson streets, 70 by 125, for $6,000. Four thousand was cash. For value received the parcel has been transferred to W. E. Treadwell and S. W. Carson.

West North Avenue Sale.

H. B. Watkins and D. J. Gunter have bought from Charles H. Sanford No. 164 West North avenue, 45 by 163, 42 feet west of McAfee street, for $5,000.

Fourteenth Street Transfer.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale May 15 of No. 278 East Fourteenth street to Dowse B. Donaldson from Marvin Conway for $5,000. The lot is 50 by 128 feet and 558 feet west of North Jackson street.

Building Delay Overcome.

Some months ago J. B. Thompson started excavating for three stores on Poplar street due north of the postoffice. Work was delayed, but now Mr. Thompson has been granted a permit to go ahead. The stores will cost $10,000.

Plans for Winnipeg Convention.

At the annual meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the Cafe Durand some definite plans for attending the Winnipeg convention will be discussed. The convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will be held July 28, 29 and 30, and twelve members of the local board are expected to go.

Atlanta is to compete for a cup presented by the Chicago Board in a report which Charles P. Glover and others will present. The attending cities will prepare these reports and the winner will be the city making the best showing. The judges have been named to decide the contest.

Return postal cards indicate to the officers of the local board that there will be a large attendance at Friday's dinner, inasmuch as the selection of officers for the ensuing year will be made. Charles P. Glover, retiring president, is expected to come in for encomiums at the hands of his fellow board members. Mr. Glover has served the board faithfully, and the real estate men have not forgotten the happy speech he made at the recent annual banquet.

College Park's Activity.

Spurred on by the struggles and successes of the Decatur Board of Trade and similar organizations, the citizens of College Park have decided to organize a citizens' committee-of-the-whole and to adopt a name suitable to such an organization. In this connection $25 has been offered to the public for a slogan. Anybody in the world, says the secretary of the board, can win $25 by revealing the secret that lies in a name. Suggestions must be in by July 31, because the board wants to get busy in its booster operations.

College Park is a town of 2,700 population, having jumped from 450 in 1900. It is the home of Cox College for women and the Georgia Military Academy. There are three public schools, five churches and plenty of nice places for people to live.

What IS an Opportunity for the Young Man?

There Are More Real Opportunities To-day Than Ever

(Copyright, 1913.)

We have received many letters from young men recently complaining of lack of opportunities. One in particular asked this question:

"Are the opportunities for the young man in the present day and generation equal to what they were twenty-five or fifty years ago—the days of his father and grandfather?"

It is a question that is probably asked in this country thousands of times every day. It is an important question to the individual. It is especially important to the nation. For the nation declines in which opportunities for the young diminish.

We feel that we can conscientiously and positively say that REAL opportunities are better to-day, both for young men and young women, than they ever have been.

Opportunities are greater BECAUSE POSSIBILITIES ARE GREATER.

Science, machinery, organization of all kinds, especially widespread publicity, have put into men's hands in less than fifty years a power undreamed of in the boyhood of our grandfathers.

Humanity and the individual are powerful, and their opportunities are great, in proportion to the machinery at their command.

Our opportunities were never so great as now, but this statement is made assuming that our correspondent means real and worthy opportunities.

Unfortunately, in this country, where sudden prosperity, great extravagance and uneasiness as to the future make money all-important, the word "opportunity" is apt to be a synonym for money. Money and opportunity are taken to mean the same thing.

But we purpose to answer this question quite apart from money.

Undoubtedly, the very able money-getter, no matter how humble his start, can build up to-day such a fortune an was unknown fifty years ago—or twenty-five years ago. There are young men without a penny that will earn (or, rather, more or less honestly ACCUMULATE) their hundreds of millions in the next few years, before the common sense of the country shall have realized the importance of regulating accumulation through increased distribution.

There will be, perhaps, fewer small, middle-class fortunes piled up, for there will be fewer men in business on their own account, thanks to the trusts.

Many men will earn very large salaries, ranging from $150,000 a year downward, and there will probably be very many more large INCOMES in the land within the next twenty-five years than there were in the last twenty-five years.

But when men earn SALARIES, they do not keep their money, and of the middle-class fortunes we shall have fewer.

But we trust that our correspondent will agree with us that money is a pretty mean measurement for opportunity.

What do the merely rich men really amount to? When they have been dead two or three years they are as unknown and forgotten as the pigs and chickens that they ate, the horses that they drove, or the flunkies whose time they wasted.

Opportunity means A CHANCE TO DO SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

And we assure our correspondent that the young man of to-day has a greater chance to do something worth while than a young man has ever had in the history of this country.

Our form of government is changing; the power has practically passed from the hands of the majority of the people into the hands of a majority of trust stockholders.

The young man who has genius and force, the ability to lead, and the character to refuse his share of the spoils, has a great opportunity to-day. It is the opportunity to return the government to the hands of those who are governed.

Working scientists are needed and sadly lacking in all the great departments of human thought. Every one of these new fields of intellectual activity, research and discovery offers unlimited opportunities to young men.

The newspapers, read by millions of human beings every day, enable the man who can think intelligently, the man who will be sincere and interesting at the same time to address (and, if he is able, to convince) a million or two millions of his fellow-citizens every day in the year. Was there ever a greater opportunity than this for influencing the thoughts of other men?

Every page of a scientific newspaper will show to the young man a glorious opportunity.

Every phase of our great industrial organization, every new development in the struggle of manhood against money, offers to the young man a great opportunity for public service.

The horrible poverty and wretchedness in the great cities, contrasting with ignorant and ostentatious wealth, offer opportunities unlimited to him who would help the poor to help themselves, to him able to cajole or frighten the rich into doing their duty.

This is the age of opportunity, but the young man must think for himself, strike out on his own line, make up his mind what to do, and stick at it, INSTEAD OF FOLLOWING ALONG THE USUAL LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE, doing the same as everybody else does, keeping at nothing in particular, and then wondering what has become of the world's opportunities.

The Metal Workers

From the Savage Who Raked From the Ashes a Crude Ball of Molten Mineral and Slag, With Which He Formed a Weapon of Defense, to the Safety Razor and Automobile, Metal is Supreme.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

II.

SOON after the British Parliament passed a law forbidbidding the cutting down of trees for fuel, Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition—in 1585—discovered iron in this country, and in 1608 a cargo of ore was shipped from Virginia to England and successfully smelted. In 1644, the first ironworks was erected near Lynn, Mass.

In 1740, Huntsman introduced the crucible process, and various mechanical devices were patented about that time, which materially stimulated the steel industry.

Bessemer's Process.

In 1838, the invention of J. B. Nielson—the introduction of a heated blast—caused a tremendous increase in output. This improvement was accompanied by Nasmyth's steam hammer, and in 1856 Bessemer gave to the world a process that was astonishing and remarkable. The discovery of the Bessemer process made it possible to produce steel at such low cost as to extend its use widely, and did much to supersede wrought iron in structural work.

Bessemer steel is now almost universally used for steel rails. The open-hearth system of Martin and Thomas, with the regenerative gas furnace of Siemens, supplies steel that is used in enormous quantities for all purposes.

Lately, science has again prevailed, and in the products of White and Taylor and Robert Hadfield we have steel that combines great malleableness with great hardness—a hardness that retains its cutting power even when at red heat.

And so we go marching on. From the savage who in wonder raked from the ashes of his fire a crude ball of molten mineral and slag, with which he formed a weapon of defense, to the safety-razor and the automobile of the twentieth century citizen, metal is supreme.

Carbon and Iron.

Steel is made by combining a certain proportion of carbon with iron.

The process determines its value and variety.

The most important of these processes are cementation, Bessemer and open hearth.

The first system consists of placing wrought iron between layers of charcoal in firebrick retorts. Yellow heat is applied for a certain period until the required grade of steel is obtained by the addition of the necessary carbon.

This is the steel from which edged tools are made.

The Bessemer process is directly opposite in principle to the cementation process. The Bessemer burns the carbon out of the cast iron.

This is done in an egg-shaped furnace known as a converter, lined with firebrick, and capable of being tilted. At the bottom, a number of tuyeres or nozzles conduct the air from a powerful blowing machine through the molten metal. This burns out the silicon and carbon, and after the alloy has been added and thoroughly mixed the metal is poured into ladles, and thence to casting molds.

The ingots are reheated and rolled into the forms desired for use.

In the open-hearth system, steel is made from a mixture of pig-iron and scrap-iron or steel, which is melted by direct contact with the flame in a regenerative gas furnace.

Steel Everywhere.

To follow these different processes—to see the ore—cold, dead stones—transformed into things of utility and beauty is a revelation and an education. We realize that the Missable Range and your wire fence are associated by applied gas. Steel is everywhere.

Circus horses, farm horses wear it for shoes. Wire rope in elevators, and in ships and mines—the telegraph and telephone wires, and all kinds of electrical wires—from the ignition wire in the automobile to the submarine cable. Aeroplane plates, boiler plates and castings. We sleep on steel springs and shave with a "safety."

We use nails and tacks, and the shafting for machinery is nothing more or less than big round wire!

We see all these things in the manufactured goods.

We talk of the tone of our piano, we boast of the wonderful speed, endurance and economy of up-keep of our autos.

We speak of cheap and rapid transportation; of our spring beds, our easy shave.

But do we ever associate these things with the men in the mills? I hope so.

:: Light and Candle-Power :-:

By THOMAS TAPPER

THERE are about 1,500,000,000 people on the earth.

Most of them are intent on getting.

A few are intent on giving.

The dynamo sends power along its lines of conductivity, and all the electric bulbs pour out light, each according to its candle-power.

If each of these bulbs was independent, if it could think and move for itself, the efficiency of the plant might fall considerably, for the individual bulb would then begin to act like a man.

Instead of remaining an agent for the distribution of power, it would be inspired by the ideas of the majority to let up on giving and to specialize on getting.

We can imagine a bulb throwing out its chest and wanting things. It might take a fancy to get a corner on dust and ashes. These are possessions through which the power can not shine; and while the bulb might easily work up a corner, it would soon find itself short on its main business of shedding light freely, plentifully and without obscuration.

Both Science and Religion are fairly agreed that a man is the end point of a line of conductivity which is attached to the great dynamo of the life of the universe.

He must be, then, by nature a distributor of the power that the dynamo sends into him.

HE HAS NO BUSINESS TO OBSCURE his light and weaken his force with the dust and ashes of life, for then the radiance will not shine through him.

HIS BUSINESS IS TO POUR OUT upon the world around him the great supply of power that flows into him.

This power, like electricity, plays many parts.

He can send it out as work-power, love, sympathy, generosity, health and so on through the whole list of things worth while.

And by so doing he is fulfilling his one natural function. He is strengthening himself for all time (now and forever) simply by using his power in the right direction.

In short, he has an advantage over the electric light bulbs, for he can use his candle-power to the limit, and by so doing increase it, instead of burning out the filament.

:-: MISTAKES :-:

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

GOD sent us here to make mistakes,
To strive, to fail, to re-begin,
To taste the tempting fruit of sin,
And find what bitter food it makes.
To miss the path, to go astray,
To wander blindly in the night;
But, searching, praying for the light,
Until at last we find the way.
And looking back along the past,
We know we needed all the strain
Of fear and doubt and strife and pain
To make us value peace at last.
Who fails, finds later triumph sweet;
Who stumbles once, walks then with care,
And knows the place to cry "beware"
To other unaccustomed feet.
Through strife the slumbering soul awakes,
We yearn on error's troubled route
The truths we could not prize without
The sorrow of our sad mistakes.

BROYLES CHARGES FALSEHOOD TO MAYOR

NEW TYPE OF BEAUTY ENTERED IN SLOGAN BUTTON PICTURE CONTEST

Miss Helen McCullough, the newest entrant in the booster emblem beauty contest.

BUILDING TRADES PLAN FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP

A fight against the open shop in the building trades section of the Federation of Labor that promises to be the hardest in the history of organized labor in Atlanta will be the outcome of the strike on the Healey Building unless a settlement is reached shortly.

International officers representing the fourteen organizations composing the Building Trades Council are either in Atlanta or on their way here. A meeting of the Building Trades Council will be held Friday night, when steps looking to a settlement of the differences or to arrange for a finish fight will be taken.

Officers of the building trades concerned in the controversy state that wages in Atlanta are 30 per cent lower than in other Southern cities, and they attribute this to the fact that in Atlanta alone is the open shop permitted.

The open shop as operated in Atlanta, according to the officers of the building trades, is that only that class of work requiring the greatest skill and which can alone be done by members of the organization is done by union men, while all other work is put in the hands of non-union men. In this way, the results to the contractor can be attained and the unions get the worst of it.

The strike precipitated by the contractors putting non-union men working on the cutting of the pipe for the electrical contract will mean a finish fight between the Building Trades Council and the contractors against the open shop, and may tie up work in Atlanta for some time.

Latest Nominee for Booster Emblem Honors Is Miss Helen McCullough of Peachtree Road.

Miss Helen McCullough, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. McCullough, 1110 Peachtree road, is the latest nominee in the "beauty button" contest. She is regarded by many as easily the prettiest girl in Atlanta and in the voting to name the girl whose face shall adorn the "500,000 club" buttons she promises to always be near the top if not at the top itself.

She is the third to be entered in the race, the nominations of Miss Mert Hancock, Ponce DeLeon avenue, and Miss Mary Carl Hurst, 62 West Twelfth street, having already been announced. The three make a bevy of beauty that is a marvel, each quite different from the other, but each striking examples of their opposite types.

Miss Hancock's beauty is dominated by the glow of her wonderful auburn hair. Miss Hurst is a vivacious brunette. Miss McCullough is a petite blonde.

Every day brings more life into the contest. The end of this contest will bring to a climax the movement to organize the "500,000 booster club." When the "prettiest" girl is selected the buttons for the club members will be ordered and the organization formally completed.

Who is this prettiest girl?

That is for the readers of The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American to decide. The voting coupons are run each day. If your favorite has not been mentioned nominate her and send in her photograph.

DESERTS FIANCE TO ELOPE WITH HIS RIVAL

Leaving in her wake the bruised heart of a young man, an employee of a downtown shoe store, to whom she was engaged to be married Sunday night, pretty Miss Dollie Lumpkin, No. 456 Houston street, went to Augusta Thursday night and became the bride of B. D. Gunter, employed in a Whitehall street shop. It is said by friends of the bridegroom that the young woman's original fiance was en route to the Ordinary's office to obtain a marriage license late yesterday afternoon when he heard of the elopement of his bride-to-be.

Miss Lumpkin had been engaged to the shoe clerk for several months, her friends declare, and the date of the wedding had been set for next Sunday night. About two months ago Miss Lumpkin met Gunter and he fell in love with her.

From then on it was a race between Mr. Gunter and the other young man for the heart and hand of Miss Lumpkin. Gunter, being a strenuous young man, decided it was up to him to hurry matters along, so on July 16 he secured a marriage license from the Ordinary, and that night, it is said, he showed it to Miss Lumpkin and pleaded with her to elope with him. She consented. Thursday morning, therefore, Miss Lumpkin left her home, telling her mother, Mrs. P. C. Lumpkin, that she was going downtown to do some shopping.

Shortly before noon Gunter asked his employer for a day off. He said he was sick, but his smiles as he left the store nearly gave him away. He met Miss Lumpkin at Alabama and Whitehall streets, it is said, and they went to Augusta and were married there.

PINKERTONS TRACK MINCEY

Another Clash Interrupts Poison Case

POLICE HALT GRILLING OF CONLEY

Detective Bent on Questioning Negro Is Barred From Cell by Chief Lanford.

With Pinkerton detectives taking the trail in search of W. H. Mincey, whose startling accusations against Jim Conley stirred the police department and won the negro another "sweating" from Solicitor Dorsey, the Mincey affidavit Friday became the storm center about which the prosecution and defense in the Frank case waged their battle.

Despite the degree of indifference with which the detectives and prosecuting officials affected to look upon the remarkable statements of Mincey, it became known Friday that every effort was being bent toward locating him and turning the light on his past history.

Pinkertons Have Clew.

It is understood that the Pinkertons have obtained information of Mincey's whereabouts, as it has been known since The Georgian published its exclusive story of the affidavit and later Mincey's detailed account of the significant happenings on the day of the murder that he was teaching school in North Georgia.

Although Solicitor Dorsey professes to be not greatly concerned over the effect that the Mincey affidavit may have in his case against Leo M. Frank, it is reported that his office is gathering character witnesses for an attack on Mincey's credibility.

Developments since the publication of the affidavit indicate that the prosecution feels it must absolutely discredit Mincey and his story if there is to be any hope of obtaining a conviction aaginst Frank.

Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, was denied permission to talk with Jim Conley Friday morning when he went to the police station to see if he could wring any additional admissions from the negro. From the fact that Scott has been working in entire harmony with the city detective department up to this time, this incident led to the rumor that Scott had changed his theory of the crime and was inclined to place the responsibility upon Conley.

Defense Ready for Trial.

Scott refused to say to what extent his theories had been altered, if at all. Chief of Detectives Lanford explained that he had full confidence in Scott, but that the Pinkerton was in the position where he had to report all of his findings to the defense

London Laughs at Secretary Bryan's Plea of Poverty

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—The Standard prints an editorial on "Politicians and Their Pay" this morning, in which it refers to the statement of William Jennings Bryan, the American Secretary of State, that he can not live on his salary of $12,000 a year. The Standard says:

"The poor man's champion has discovered that he can not subsist satisfactorily on $12,000 a year. A good many people in a good many countries manage to be comfortable on less than that amount, but since Mr. Bryan first took up socialism as a profession he has done well on the lecture platform.

"He has been making $15,000 every year by denouncing the idle rich. If the Union can not pay the same scale he proposes to increase his emoluments by private exertions, so he will go on tour again."

Ashley Has Plan to Block 'Pigeonholing'

Councilman Claude L. Ashley announced Friday he would introduce a resolution in Council Monday to prevent the "pigeonholing" of legislation in committees by requiring that all matters referred to committees be reported to Council at the next meeting.

"We have no rules in Council," said Councilman Ashley. "Some Mayor Pro Tem abandoned all the rules several years ago. Some of the committees have taken it on themselves to kill all legislation they are unfavorable to by refusing to report on it. This is what I want to stop.

CRAWFORD'S SANITY NOW ATTACKED

Expert Declares Capitalist Was Not in His Right Mind When He Married.

That Joshua B. Crawford was insane at the time he married Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and had been entirely irresponsible for several months prior to that time, was the testimony of Dr. R. R. Kimes, expert on insanity and abdominal surgery, introduced by Attorney Joe S. James Friday morning in his effort to have the marriage annulled and the $250,000 estate revert to the heirs-at-law.

Dr. Kimes rendered his opinion in reply to a long hypothetical question and was excused without cross-examination.

During the taking of testimony another clash in the courtroom was narrowly averted. George W. Bolden, a character witness for Mrs. Crawford, threatened to thrash Attorney James unless he apologized for what the witness considered an insulting question. Colonel James declined to apologize and order was only restored when Colonel Anderson ordered the witness from the stand, and he was escorted from the courtroom by the lawyers.

"How do you know that Mrs. Crawford is a lady?" interrogated Attorney James.

Lawyers in War of Words.

"I demand that you apologize immediately for asking such a question," exclaimed Bolden.

"I will not apologize. I do not intend to take back anything that I say."

"You will take it back or I will make you, if I have to beat you to do it."

"You are at liberty to try that at any time you see fit."

Colonel Anderson, who had rapped several times for order, stepped between the attorney and the witness just as the latter got from his seat and started toward the attorney.

The Crawford heirs-at-law got to their feet and rushed to aid their attorney. Reuben Arnold stepped between them and with Colonel Anderson helped escort the witness from the room.

Anxious to Tell All.

Mrs. Crawford was anxious to go on the stand Friday and see the evidence from her side of the case go into the minutes of the hearing.

"I want to tell everything I know about the affair when I go on the stand," she said. "The other side has had everything its way so far, because all of the witnesses were for the heirs-at-law. It will be altogether a different story when Mr. Arnold and Mr. Smith introduce the witnesses we have. It will then be conclusively proved that there was nothing irregular anywhere except the groundless accusations that have been made against me."

Attorney James said Friday morning that he had been entirely too busy to take any official action toward having Fred Lump, the New York barber who is charged with being an accessory in the alleged poisoning, brought back to Atlanta.

"I will then get him back here in plenty of time if he remains in America," said Attorney James. "He would be of no particular use in this civil hearing, and that was why I didn't take steps earlier to get him back.

"At the first opportunity I will ask the Governor to give me requisition papers, and I will send a deputy to New York for him."

DIES FROM OVERWORK.

LEXINGTON, July 18.—James Garrard White, aged 67, vice president of Kentucky State University and the last member of the original faculty, having completed his forty-fifth year in June, died to-day of stomach trouble caused by overwork at the university.

Search Begun for Estranged Husband In Drugging Case

Detectives working on the mysterious chloroforming of six members of the family of Mrs. Archibald Duncan, of 318 South Boulevard, and the clubbing of one of her daughters, have begun a search for M. A. Deal, husband of Mrs. Ruby Deal, one of the women drugged.

They are working on the theory that Deal drugged the entire family in an attempt to kidnap his daughter, Marguerite Deal, aged 3 years.

Chief Lanford Friday morning virtually admitted his activity in the case had narrowed to a search for Deal.

The members of Mrs. Duncan's family have recovered from the drugging. Miss Pearl Hildebrand, the daughter who was slugged, has returned to her work.

Stanley's Son Dying, Tells His Life Secret

SAULT STE MARIE, July 18.—Jack Stanley, 39, son of the famous explorer, Sir Henry M. Stanley, died here to-day in a lodging house from tuberculosis.

As death hovered near the dying man, he whispered a secret which he had shared only with his wife, formerly Mrs. Violet Lancaster, of Detroit, whom he married on the stage of the Odean Theater, Clarksburg, W. Va., four years ago.

"I am the son of Sir Henry M. Stanley, the famous explorer. Tell mother." With these words he sank into subconsciousness.

"A Glorious Dream," Says Evelyn Thaw

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—"Yes, it is quite true. I am engaged for the Victoria," Evelyn Thaw told The Georgian's correspondent.

"What about the rumored $4,000 a week salary?" was asked.

She shut her eyes, clasped her hands and said:

"What a glorious dream! If it were only true!

"What would my husband's creditors say? Poor, dear things! Don't raise their hopes that way."

Fire Truck Joy Ride Lands Love in Cell

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Following an alleged joy ride in an automobile hook and ladder truck belonging to the Indianapolis fire department, Lieutenant Harold Love and Chauffeur Ralph Aldrich, of the fire department, were arrested to-day and taken to Shelbyville for trial.

Officers of Shelbyville lodged a charge of excessive speed while the joy riders were passing through that city.

REVERSAL OF VERDICTS IS DENIED BY JUDGE

Apologizes Also to Porcine Family for Likening Woodward's Legal Knowledge to Theirs.

Recorder Nash Broyles penned a polite note of apology to the whole hog family Friday.

With the same hand he picked up the cudgels with which again to belabor his honor, Mayor Woodward.

The Mayor, quoth the recorder, was the author of a ridiculous and absurd falsehood and it was a regrettable libel upon Mr. Hog to have to submit to a comparison with Atlanta's Mayor.

As for the Mayor, he declared he was tired of wasting verbiage on the Recorder and that he would have nothing more to say in their quarrel. He intimated, however, that he had it in his mind to override the Recorder again by pardoning another prisoner.

Here are Recorder Broyles' comments on the Mayor:

Apologizes to Porcine Family.

"I care nothing for the Mayor's abuse. Condemnation from such a character should be considered praise. But when he says that he Court of Appeals on May 23, 1913, reversed me in ten cases and sustained me in seven, he tells such a ridiculous and absurd falsehood that I now apologize to the hog to which I referred yesterday when I said the Mayor knew less about law than a hog does about political economy.

"The idea of the Court of Appeals passing one day upon seventeen cases appealed from the Recorder's Court of Atlanta!

"The records of that court will show that on an average there are not seventeen cases a year carried to the Court of Appeals, and they will also show that that court has sustained me in ten cases where it has reversed me in one.

Sees Attempt to Evade Issue.

"But the Mayor is, as usual, trying to sidetrack the issue between us. That issue is not my ability as a lawyer or a judge. I am content to let my record speak for me, but the issue is that the Mayor is protecting and pardoning the habitual and confirmed criminals of our city; is obstructing and defeating justice in our courts and impeding the officers of the law in their attempt to check crime in our city.

"And this is the issue on which the people at the next election will call him to account."

Mayor Woodward retorted that he had concluded his comments on Recorder Broyles, but that he practically had decided again to overrule the Recorder and issue another pardon.

Plans to Give New Pardon.

The situation is possible only because Judge Broyles made a mistake and imposed a sentence of 30 instead of 29 days, which puts the case in the jurisdiction of the Mayor.

G. Poulus, who runs a restaurant on Alabama street, was fined $100 and sentenced to 30 days in the stockade. The story that has reached Mayor Woodward is that Poulus discharged a negro boy and that the negro boy, being angry, reported Poulus to the police as selling beer. Poulos says he only orders beer from adjoining saloons and keeps it in his ice box for his customers.

'LOBBY' CHARGED WITH SWINGING SALOON VOTE

Manufacturers Lined Up Brewers for Watson in Indiana, According to Mulhall.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—How the National Association of Manufacturers lined up the brewers and saloon men of Indiana for the Republicans and Representative James E. Watson in his campaign for Governor was told in a letter written by Colonel Mulhall to F. C. Schwedtman, secretary to President Van Cleave, and read before the Overman lobby investigating committee to-day.

Watson, according to Mulhall's letter, was not so much afraid of the 30,000 votes the brewers could swing against him as he was of the $250,000 they would put into the last part of the campaign.

Accordinf to another letter Mulhall, the field agent of the "invisible government," assured "Uncle Joe Cannon that reports that the association was fighting him were false, and that the association was firmly supporting him.

Hines' Name Brought In.

Mulhall declared he helped Representatives Henry C. Coudrey and Richard Bartholdt, of Missouri, who were re-elected by narrow margins, and also asserted he thought the association deserved the credit for their victories.

Edward Hines, of Chicago, said to have boasted that he "put Lorimer over," came in for notice in connection with a telegram to Mulhall in which he appealed for $1,000 to aid Representative Jenkins, of Wisconsin, and offered to supervise the spending of this sum.

"I don't consider Teddy, nor Taft, nor Sherman, nor Foraker equal to VanCleave, Parry, Kirby and the others who have given freely of their energy and their money to the great cause expressed in the principles of the National Association of Manufacturers," wrote Schwedtman to Mulhall August 28.

"Like John the Baptist."

"There will come a time when the world will know that the Parrys and the VanCleaves of to-day are like John the Baptist of old, speaking thoughtfully of events to come and condemning fearlessly the present wrongs, clearing the way for righteousness and honesty."

In an effort to prevent an enormous waste of time, the committee assigned clerks to examine the 123,000 letters in the file the association turned over to the committee, to cull out those letters which have the greatest bearing on the inquiry. It is proposed to keep Mulhall on the stand until all of the material correspondence has become a part of the record.

ATLANTANS PREFER A CAMP NEAR THE CITY TO MORE FASHIONABLE SUMMER RESORTS

Douglas Family Enjoys Outing in Pine Woods, With All Joys of Outdoor Life.

The summertime resorts at mountain and seaside are claiming fewer Atlanta people this year than ever before. And the reason is Atlanta people have learned that the best and most pleasant summer resort in the whole land is right here in the country surrounding the city.

In every direction are to be found summer camps where the business or professional man is enjoying all the pleasures and comforts of a summer resort, and at the same time is able to get into town every day to attend to business affairs.

One of the most attractive camps is that of Hamilton Douglas, president of the Atlanta School of Law and of the Atlanta Bar Association. It is located on the grounds of the Capital City Country Club, about one-fifth of a mile from the clubhouse, in a charming bit of pine woods. The camp is called "The Camp by the Side of the Road," and the Douglas family, and many visiting friends, are spending the summer months just as cool and as comfortable as if they were in the most perfectly appointed mountain resort hotel.

There are four tents; one for Mr. and Mrs. Douglas, one for Misses Jean, Helen and Dorothy Douglas and their girl friends, one for Hamilton Douglas, Jr., and for the various members of the Boy Scouts, which he organized in Atlanta, who come out to the camp from time to time. Then there is the cook tent, which is presided over by "the best cook in the State," to quote Mr. Douglas.

"We get up at 5:30 every morning," he declared, "run down to the lake for a cool plunge, and after a hearty breakfast, Hamilton, Jr., and I catch the 8:15 car for town. We come back to our camp early in the afternoon, and I tell you it is a relief to get the fresh air, cooled by the constant breezes, and redolent of the pine woods, after a hot day in town. Every night it is so cool that we sleep under a double blanket. Give me this camp life every summer hereafter."

The young women at the camp find many ways to make the days attractive and void of dull moments. All of them are expert swimmers and divers, and Miss Helen is a golf enthusiast besides. Boating on the lake is one of Miss Jean's hobbies. The tennis courts of the country club are only a short distance away, and every morning and late afternoon tennis sets are played. There are many charming walks to be found in the country also.

A big camp fire is a nightly feature of the camp, and the family and guests sit around it and tell stories, sing or listen to Misses Helen and Jean play on the mandolin and guitar. A Victrola provides cheerful music also, and the birds and squirrels must wonder greatly when they hear Caruso open up with his "Sob Song," or Collins and Harlan render one of their characteristic rags.

"I'm not going back to the mountains another summer," says pretty Miss Jean. "This camp just suits me exactly, and we don't have to be separated from father and brother, either. They can be right here to enjoy it with us, and that makes it all the more enjoyable. I think everybody in Atlanta should camp out in the summer, and I know they would if they knew how grand it is."

MINCEY TRAILED BY PINKERTONS

and he did not wish Scott to see Conley in these circumstances.

Attorneys for the defense said in regard to the report that the case might again be postponed, that they knew of no reason why it could not go to trial July 28, the date set by Judge L. S. Roan. They said that their side of the case was complete and that they were prepared to present it to a jury at any time.

As bitter a fight as that brought on by the Mincey affidavit is being waged by the members of the Grand Jury and the Solicitor over the question of investigating Jim Conley's connection with the Phagan murder, with a view of bringing an indictment. A number of the members are said to have declared themselves in favor of reopening the case because of the mass of evidence that has piled up against the negro since he confessed to being in the factory on the day of the crime.

The Solicitor, however, is unalterably opposed to any movement looking toward the indictment of the negro.

Dougherty Should Worry; He Was Cool

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Not even a smile covered John Dougherty early to-day as he sat in the rear of 233 East Washington street, a square from police headquarters.

In a covering of wrapper paper he was taken to police headquarters charged with "loitering."

It was a hot night.

Severe Cough Led To Lung Trouble

Sufferers with Lung Trouble are rarely willing to acknowledge the fact. If you have a so-called "cold" that has long persisted; or a cough that keeps you anxious; or any of the symptoms of Lung Trouble, such as fever or night sweats, weakness, loss of appetite, or perhaps some raising of mucus, take Eckman's Alterative—as Mr. Bettersworth did:

Bowling Green, Ky., R. No. 4.

"Gentlemen: The spring of 1908 I had a severe cough for six months. I tried all the medicine that my doctors recommended to me, but no results came for the better. I had night sweats, and would cough and spit until I got so weak I could hardly do anything. But, at last, James Deering, of Glasgow Junction, insisted that I try your medicine. In one week's time there was quite an improvement in my condition, and after I had taken several bottles I felt as well as ever in my life. I desire the world to know that I firmly believe that your Eckman's Alterative will cure any case of lung trouble if taken before the last stage."

(Affidavit) A. C. BETTERSWORTH.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. HOKE SMITH, IN SPEECH TO GEORGIA ASSEMBLY, DEFENDS CUTS IN TARIFF

United States Senator Hoke Smith addressed the two bodies of the Georgia Legislature in joint session at noon Friday in the house.

Conspicuous throughout his address was the strong defense of the national administration, the keynote of which was prophetic of a period of unequaled prosperity throughout the Wilson regime.

Senator Smith declared that the Democrats to-day have enough votes in the Senate to pass the tariff bill. He said that nothwithstanding the cuts made by the national House, the Senate had cut still deeper, and made additions to the free list.

"For the first time in fifty years," declared the Senator, "legislation intended to take the burden off the masses of the people has found no resistance in the Democratic Senate. It must be conceded by all that the Senate Democrats have made the tariff bill more Democratic than it was when it reached the Senate."

Mr. Smith attacked the present vogue of vast distribution of charity by the wealthy men of the nation.

Prefers Taxation to Charity.

"I would rather see the National Government raise the money by income taxes and spend it for such causes than to leave the people indebted to men for great charities," he declared.

The Senator advocated States' rights in handling State problems. While his reference was to the California-Japanese situation, he made its application general by saying: "From the Californians' troubles the whole country is realizing the difficulties with which we have had to contend, and they are helping us make converts to the doctrine that we must be left to handle our troubles ourselves."

Senator Smith brought up for strong arraignment the Sherwood bill for an increase of United States pensions.

"The startling truth is demonstrated that the eleven Southern States have paid to Union pensioners of the War Between the States the entire value, in 1870, of their agricultural lands and all improvements thereon, together with their agricultural implements and live stock," he said. "I believe it to be the duty of your Senators to resist in every proper way an increase in the now already enormous payments for pensions of the Civil War."

The speaker also attacked the workmen's compensation act, now pending, declaring it to be a bill to save the railroad corporations from their just liabilities to injured employees.

Urges U. S. Road Building.

In advocating the excise tax bill, Senator Smith declared strongly for constitutional authority to pass an income tax which would proportion equally among the entire citizenship the expense of Government.

The Senator advocated national aid to road building throughout the country. He said the road-building question was at present before the Post-office and Postroads Committee of the Senate, and that his every effort, personally, would be to bring it through successfully.

Senator Smith went into the plan of tariff reduction fully. He said, in part:

"The Democratic party has undertaken to reform the tariff downward for the purpose of stopping, as far as possible, this system of legalized roobery. The plan of the Democratic tariff bill involves several different propositions.

Taxes on Luxuries.

"First. The raising of revenues.

"Second. The production of legitimate competition, to the end that fair prices shall be charged consumers.

"Third. No taxes, or the lowest possible taxes, upon the necessaries of life and those things used by the great body of the people.

"Fourth. High taxes upon luxuries.

"With the fullest praise for what the Democrats of the House did, I wish to say that the Democrats of the Senate sustained the reductions made by the House, and after investigations, made additional reductions of great importance.

"The House Democrats put flour upon the free list, but taxed wheat. The Senate Democrats put both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats put meat upon the free list, but taxed cattle. The Senate Democrats put meat and cattle both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats left a tax of 25 per cent upon cheap woolen blankets. The Democrats of the Senate put them upon the free list. The House taxed wool of the angora goat and alpaca. The Senate Democrats put it on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed flax and hemp; the Senate Democrats put them upon the free list.

Schoolbooks Duty Free.

"The House Democrats taxed pig iron, and steel billets, and ferro manganese. The Senate Democrats put them on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed textbooks. The Senate Democrats placed them on the free list.

"It is impossible to say just when we will vote upon the tariff bill in the Senate. I believe we will certainly vote before the end of six weeks, possibly in much less time. I do not think any considerable delay will take place in conference. I believe the differences between the two houses will readily be adjusted by the Democrats in the two bodies and the measure be soon passed with the approval of the Democrats of both houses."

On currency legislation Senator Smith said:

"The currency bill which has been introduced both in the Senate and in the House will free the country from dependence upon Wall Street. It will facilitate an increase of currency to meet especial demands for same. It will make a currency panic impossible. There are many features in the bill which I thoroughly approve. There are others which I believe should be changed. I think the Democrats of the House and Senate should make it as nearly perfect as possible, and then support it.

"There are features in the tariff bill against which I voted in the committee, but there comes a time when individual opinion must yield to the majority.

"Both the House and Senate Democrats placed jute bagging and cotton ties on the free list. Both placed wire fencing on the free list. Both placed agricultural implements on the free list, and what has been known as the farmers' free list, so much discussed two years ago, when passed by the House and rejected by the Senate, is now contained in the tariff bill which passed the House and which has been approved by the Democratic caucus of the Senate without a dissenting vote. And what I wish to say to you to-day is we have the votes in the Senate to pass the bill.

"Our farmers have been overcharged for the things which they are compelled to buy because of excessive prices maintained by the exclusion of foreign competition. It has been conceded that, while the government collected three hundred millions of dollars each year from the tariff, the industries in the United States, which the high tariff was intended to help, collected over a billion of dollars more from the people than they could have charged but for the exclusion of foreign competition. These burdens fell upon all the people of our State, but were especially heavy upon the farming classes, who in no respect receive any benefit.

Sees Era of Prosperity.

"I believe that the adoption of our new tariff bill will mark an era of prosperity throughout the country. The industries heretofore protected will not lose in the long run by competition, but, spurred through it to greater efforts they will seek their profits by broader trade; dependent not alone upon taking the dollars of their neighbors, they will reach into the markets of the world for the sale of their commodities.

Lauds the President.

"No currency system would be complete that did not take into consideration the importance of farm credits. Thorough study is now being given to this subject, and I believe in the near future action will be had by which rates of interest charged to farmers may be reduced and increased facilities given for farm loans.

"In conclusion, let me remind you that the last time I spoke in Georgia was at the Auditorium when I presented Governor Wilson to the people of the State. I assured the audience of his purpose and ability to serve, and of his strength as a candidate. We made no mistake when we nominated him. We won the fight for the Democratic party. "The people of the country made no mistake when they elected him."

ACCUSED WIFE IS RIDDEN ON RAIL BY WOMEN

Victim Then Is Ducked in Mud Puddle and Forced to Flee Illinois Village.

POLO, ILL., July 18.—Suspicious that Mrs. Minnie Richardson, wife of the crippled keeper of a general store here, was more than friendly with her brother-in-law, Will Dunnill, the village stonemason, a band of women of the village kidnaped Mrs. Richardson from her home, rode her on a rail through the town and dumped her in a mud puddle.

After the mud bath they gave her 24 hours to leave the village. Richardson mortgaged his store for $1,500 and gave her money to pay her railroad fare.

When the men of the town went to Dunnill's home, he was not there and his wife said he had left the town. She had mortgaged her home to get money for him.

Mrs. Peter Stansfield, wife of the blacksmith, who was captain of the women "vigilantes," said that the conduct of Mrs. Richardson and Dunnill had been the subject of comment for nearly a year.

The women planned to capture Mrs. Richardson and the men were to take Dunnill, and the rail-riding party was to be a "double-header." The men failed to find their victim and Mrs. Richardson rode alone. The men stood on the sidewalks and cheered.

For ten years Richardson, who is a paralytic, has gone about in a wheel chair. He said to-day:

"They were pretty rough on my wife, but I guess she had not done right. I don't believe she will ever come back."

LEAVE TO WED IS DENIED COUPLE IN VICE NET

Joe North Held to Grand Jury as Slaver—Girl Is Sent to Martha Home.

Despite the pleadings of his aged mother and of Effie Drummond, the girl in the case, who asked that she be allowed to marry him, Joe North, caught by Chief Beavers' vice squad in a raid on the boarding house of Mrs. Lulu Bell at Fair and Peters streets, was held to the Grand Jury by Judge Broyles Thursday, in the sum of $200. The charge, which from the first story told by the Drummond woman, promised to develop into white slavery, was changed to disorderly conduct.

The girl, who when first arrested told her story freely to Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles, testified against North Thursday afternoon with reluctance. She at first denied that she knew North, and the next moment admitted having lived with him as his wife, both at his mother's home and at Mrs. Bell's, to which latter place she says he induced her to go.

"You say you don't know him, and yet you admit that you lived with him?" demanded Recorder Broyles.

"Well," the girl stammered, "I guess I 'kinda' know him!"

Both North and the girl asked that they be allowed to marry. The girl told Judge Broyles she had been married once before, in South Carolina, but had got a divorce in that State.

"You didn't get a divorce in South Carolina," said the Recorder. "The laws of that State do not permit divorces."

"Well," the girl hesitated, "I think my husband's dead, anyway."

"You only hope he is dead," retorted Recorder Broyles. "You can't marry this man until you get a divorce."

North's mother pleaded that her son be placed on probation, but Judge Broyles refused. The girl was sent to the Martha Home.

Church Folks at War On Clubs in Macon

MACON, July 18.—The Law Enforcement League has begun a campaign looking to the extinction of the saloon and the social club in Macon. Three test cases have been made against two saloons and a club, charging them with being nuisances in that they are "blind tigers."

If Judge Mathews grants petitions for injunctions, which will be heard on August 1, similar proceedings will be instituted against every saloon and club in the city. Petitions for injunctions were signed by 45 citizens, including the Revs. W. N. Ainsworth, J. L. White and C. B. Currie, representing the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches.

Papal Guards' Wine Supply Cut; Mutiny

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ROME, July 18.—A mutiny among the Vatican Swiss guards—the second within four days—occurred to-day. Upon orders from Pope Pius X the soldiers were seized, disarmed and placed under arrest. They were replaced by gendarmes who may remain as the permanent military police at the Vatican.

Attempts to curtail the wine supply of the Swiss guards led to the disaffection. Hitherto the guardsmen were allowed an unlimited supply of wine.

Dies at Auto Wheel; Wife Averts Crash

KENOSHA, WIS., July 18.—Mrs. Frank J. Eaton, while riding with her husband, felt the automobile turn from the roadway as they were going 25 miles an hour. She saw her husband was not holding the wheel. Catching it as the car was on the edge of an embankment, she brought the machine back into the roadway and stopped it.

Her husband had died of heart disease.

COLUMBUS.—The Columbus Water Supply Company announces that it has purchased land on Factory Hill, north of Columbus, where it will construct a 5,000,000-gallon storage reservoir, a filtering plant, settling basin and pumping station.

2 BUSINESS MEN POLICE NABBED PLAN FIGHT

M. F. Smith and B. F. Glenn Likely to Make Charges Against Officer Milam to Board.

M. F. Smith, vice president and secretary of the Eagle Stamp Works, and B. T. Glenn, manager of the Old Mill Theater, Whitehall street, who were taken to headquarters by the police Wednesday night after they had carried Miss Mabel Parker, a chorus girl, to Grady Hospital, in a semi-conscious condition, probably will appear before Chief Beavers Friday and ask that the Chief and the Police Commission investigate their arrest.

Smith and Glenn deny that they were responsible for the girl's condition. They declare the woman went into convulsions when she received a telegram that her brother was dying. They say they called a physician, who administered chloroform to quiet her, and left. The woman's hysteria continued, and Smith and Glenn then took her to Grady in a cab.

Officer Milam was at the hospital when the girl was brought in and he took Smith and Glenn to headquarters, where they were released after being questioned by Assistant Chief Jett and Captain Terry. In his report Officer Milam states that the girl was clad only in a thin gauze nightdress.

Chief Beavers stated that he will investigate the case, and it probably will be brought before the Police Commission at the next meeting. Police officials declare that Milam only did his duty.

FACTS IN MEXICO DEMANDED BY PRESIDENT

Ambassador Scored for Incomplete Reports to U. S.—Mystery in Diaz's Trip to Japan.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—In preparation for the arrival of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, now on his way from Mexico, President Wilson today requested the State Department to furnish him with all the information relative to the troubles in Mexico from the beginning of the Madero revolt.

This mass of material the President intends to read thoroughly, so he will be informed as to all the developments of the Mexican situation before the arrival of Ambassador Wilson.

Secretary Bryan, who returned from the first lap of his Chautauqua lecture tour this morning, called on the President, bringing a large bundle of telegrams and correspondence.

Hale Sends Information.

They included dispatches from William Bayard Hale, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico City, who does not consider the Huerta regime stable, and has advised against recognition.

Suspicions of the sincerity of the representations made by several European nations have been raised in Washington by the trail of high finance running through them all. Allegations are made that the crisis is nothing more nor less than a "bondholders' conspiracy" engineered from Paris.

Diaz May Visit Japan.

The President does not hesitate to criticise Ambassador Wilson for failing to sustain any fixed or definite conclusions in his dispatches to the State Department. Other consular and special agents of the United States in Mexico have been equally indefinite in the information they have sent to the State Department.

A proposed trip of Felix Diaz to Japan is causing speculation at the State Department. At this time his presence in Japan would serve to renew the efforts of the jingoes to create a strong anti-American feeling there. The proposed trip has renewed reports that Japan is negotiating for a naval base on the western coast of Mexico.

Secretary of State Bryan announced that he had canceled his lecture engagements for the greater part of next week and would be in Washington all the time that Ambassador Wilson is here.

Following the Cabinet session several members of the President's official family stated that the Cabinet is a unit in supporting the chief executive's policy concerning Mexico, particularly as regards the non-recognition of President Huerta's Government.

MOBILE, July 18.—Large shipments of projectiles and ammunition are being unloaded at Fort Morgan, at the entrance of Mobile Bay, and at Fort Barrancas, Fla., ccordaing to reports brought to Mobile by artillerymen.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

Mr. J. E. Greene says the secret of his success is in good health, and the secret of his good health is in Nuxcara. He like every big-hearted, successful man, delights in telling the world about Nuxcara, the only cure known for indigestion, dyspepsia and catarrh.

J. E. GREENE.

Atlanta, Ga., June 6, 1913.

Dr. Kelly, Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sir:

Some months ago I had what I thought was heart trouble. My heart would skip for an hour or more, and often every third beat. This was especially noticeable after eating. I consulted several physicians, but got no permanent relief. I chanced to pick up one of Dr. Kelly's books on "Nuxcara," and soon found I had been treating the wrong complaint. I bought a bottle of Nuxcara, and got some better, and, after taking about half a dozen bottles, I was entirely relieved of all heart troubles, as well as indigestion. I have not had a return of this since, and I consider Nuxcara one of the greatest achievements in medicine for the troubles it is recommended to cure.

Yours very truly,

J. E. GREENE,

CHIEF, WITH HAMMER, SMASHES SEIZED GUNS

Beavers Pounds Away in Broiling Sun Until He Has Destroyed Seventy-five Pistols.

Chief Beavers, faithfully following the ordinance passed recently by Council, smashed away in the hot sun Friday with a sledge hammer until he had destroyed more than 75 unclaimed revolvers and pistols which have collected at police headquarters during the last few months.

The Chief chose for the ceremony a time when the mercury was flirting with the 95 mark. Perspiration poured down his cheeks before he had swung the heavy hammer a half dozen times, but he kept on until every weapon had been converted into scrap.

The revolver smashing is one of the methods by which the authorities are waging war against the "pistol toters," and is designed to break the endless chain by which criminals are supplied with weapons. Formerly the weapons taken from prisoners were saved for a few months and then sold at low prices to the pawnshop proprietorsw, who in turn sold them back to the criminals.

The first smashing Friday resulted in the destruction of nearly $1,000 worth of weapons. Chief Beavers carefully examined all of the revolvers for cartridges before undertaking his task. When done, he mopped his face and became the auctioneer in the "ole boss" sale of knives, bicycles, umbrellas and an accumulation of other unclaimed articles.

Boy Badly Bitten as He Falls Over Dog

Crawford Mitchell, 7-year-old son of R. M. Mitchell, No. 974 Highland avenue, was bitten badly by a pet dog Thursday afternoon and is in a serious condition. A large strip of flesh was torn from the child's arm and he was otherwise lacerated.

The child was playing in a vacant lot near his home, when he stumbled over the dog, which was gnawing upon a bone. The dog sprang at the child and bit him several times before his playmates could drive him away.

RECTOR OPPOSES BIBLE IN SCHOOLS

Dr. Wilmer Tells Committee Some of Its Chapters Are Unfit for Public Reading.

Declaring "there are lots of chapters in the Bible unfit for public reading," Dr. C. B. Wilmer, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal Church, opened the fight against the proposed bill requiring the reading of the Bible in the schools of Georgia in the Senate Education Committee hearing Friday morning.

Following the debate which was listened to by scores of persons other than Senators, a motion for a further hearing next Tuesdayafternoon at 3 o'clock was adopted.

Dr. Wilmer, who spoke for twenty minutes, followed other speakers representing both sides, including Dr. Dunbar Ogden and Dr. Little of the Presbyterian Church, favoring the measure with an amendment, and Carlyle Haynes, a representative of the Georgia Religious Liberty Association, opposing it.

Other ministers present who will speak next Tuesday, it is understood, were Dr. John E. White of the Eecond Baptist, Dr. H. M. DuBose of the First Methodist, Dr. C. W. Daniels of the First Baptist, Father Rappier of the Roman Catholic Church, Rabbi David Marx, Dr. Lovejoy of the Methodist Church, and others. The Rev. Mr. Daniel declared he would preach on the subject next Sunday morning.

HOUSE RATES SLASHED IN TARIFF ACT REPORTED TO SENATE; TRUSTS HARD HIT

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The report to Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee on the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate, was placed before the Upper House at noon to-day, and debate on the measure immediately was begun.

The report is largely devoted to defense of the Senate Democrats' action in reducing rates under the original House measure and to extensive tables showing the percentage and effect of these rates.

In a brief introduction, Senator Simmons declares that the Senate bill, if enacted into law, "will result in an equitable distribution of burdens and incidental benefits of the Payne-Aldrich system of customs taxation that will tend to disintegrate monopolies built up under a protective tariff; that will reduce the cost of living; that will increase the opportunities of the individual citizen and relieve the people from the burdens of a former scheme of taxation."

Rich Trusts Only Hit.

The Senator points out that the interests hit by the reduction of duties under the House bill are in almost every instance trusts which have grown rich under a high protective tariff. Among these are the steel, aluminum, cement, callera, asphalt, Standard Oil, sugar, wool and paper trusts.

To counteract the millions in import revenue lost to the Government through the admission of foreign markets under a free list or reduced rate of tariff, taxes have been placed upon bananas solely controlled by a trust, upon gambling in cotton futures, upon the incomes of the rich, upon brandies used in fortifying wines and upon luxuries in general.

The total outcome of the Senate tariff labors is a decrease of 27.64 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates and of 4.22 per cent under the House tariff rates. Nevertheless, the report predicts that the business of the Government will be run at a profit.

Total Revenue $996,810,000.

The official figures, based upon compilations of Treasury experts for the fiscal year 1913, place the total revenue, exclusive of the possible revenue from the Panama Canal, the sinking fund and the national bank note redemption fund, at $996,810,000, against an estimated disbursement of $994,790,000 for the same period. This would leave a surplus of $2,020,000.

Concerning the steel schedule the report says:

"Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material; it has the use of abundant capital; it is able to export in competition with foreign countries; and the industry has the advantage of low costs. For all these reasons it may be regarded as well fitted as an industry, capable of standing tariff rates figured on a strict revenue-producing basis."

Keynote of Its Defense.

This summarizes the keynote of the Senate tariff reductions in almost every case where they affect trust-controlled products.

A slight reduction has been made in the cotton schedule where the commodities so treated are in common use. The reclassification of this schedule does not affect the House rates materially. The report says that "inasmuch as silk is a luxury, it is liable to the highest possible duties." This policy was maintained in treating luxuries.

The income tax amendment is explained at length, the report giving specific quotations from the text of the bill relating to the change from a flat income assessment based on $4,000, to a sliding scale, which would make the unencumbered single man liable to assessment on an income in excess of $3,000, while the married man or woman with a dependent wife or husband shall have his income exempted up to $4,000 if he have minor dependent children.

House Tax Called Unfair.

The report characterized the House income tax as "unfair to a large class of moderately wealthy people."

The many changes made in the administration feature of the bill were explained on the ground that the clauses of the Underwood measure were "somewhat confusing" and that it was thought best to leave the administrative features substantially as they were in the Payne-Aldrich measure until a joint committee of the two Houses "could revise, codify and simplify" this section of the bill. This is to be done by January 1, 1914.

The changes in the administration section include the omission of the 5 per cent reduction of goods imported in American bottoms; the inspection clause and the unit dumping clause.

Scores Gambling in Futures.

With regard to the revenue raising tax on gambling in cotton futures the report characterized this practice as an "evil," and said the tax was imposed to deter, in some measure, the activities of those who resort to cotton exchanges for the sole purpose of speculation.

Inasmuch as the tax is refundable, where an actual delivery of cotton is made, it is not thought that it will seriously affect legitimate trade.

The report predicts that the retaliatory clause in the Senate bill "will effectually put in the hands of the President a weapon with which to bring about equable arrangements with countries which do not afford the United States fair treatment."

Senate's Changes In Tariff Measure

The salient features of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate Democrats are:

Reduction under the Payne-Aldrich duties, 27.64 per cent.

Reduction under House tariff bill, 4.22 per cent.

Estimated revenue from Senate measure during fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to be $2,020,000 over estimated disbursements for same period.

The customs duties from the Senate bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, less sugar, are estimated at $173,250,000.

Duties on imports under the Payne bill for two months, exclusive of sugar and wool, $40,650,000.

Duties on sugar eight months under Payne bill and four months under Senate bill, $47,000,000.

Duties on wool under Payne bill for five months, $5,830,000.

Revenue from tax on cotton future gambling, $5,000,000.

Revenue from wines, brandies, six months, $750,000.

Revenue from income tax, ten months, $58,330,000.

Total revenue from Senate bill, $630,810,000.

Free listed products in Senate bill amount to $147,367,000 in imports, as against $103,000,000 in House measure.

Following market basket products added to House free list: Wheat, eggs, lard compounds and lard products and domestic animals used for food.

Among the trusts hit are those controlling steel, aluminum, cement, cameras, Standard Oil, asphalt, sugar, wool, bananas and paper.

The provisions of the income tax are figured as dating from March 1, 1913, instead of January 1, 1913. The operation of the brandy tax was also deferred.

Baby Cabs Watched In Chicago Vice War

CHICAGO, July 18.—Mayor Harrison to-day ordered city detectives and policemen to take a look into all baby carriages being pushed about by women and see if there is a real baby in each of them.

The order was the result of a new plan adopted by women of the streets. The baby carriages they push contain rag dolls, but they have succeeded in giving the police the impression that they were respectable mothers, taking their infants for an airing.

Boy Says He Was Lured to Aid Thief

Frank Houseman, 17 years old, who has been living at a Decatur street hotel, is held at police headquarters charged with the robbery of Sweeney's saloon, No. 46 Wall street, which was entered Thursday night.

The police say Houseman has confesed to aiding another man, whose name he says he does not know. The stranger, he said, persuaded him to serve as "lookout."

Detectives are also investigating the robbery of the Williams & Johnson market, Nos. 238-240 Edgewood avenue. The glass in the front door was broken and a small sum taken from the money drawers.

Los Angeles Will Quit Being 'Pure'

LOS ANGELES, July 18.—"I do not want a 'chemically pure' Los Angeles; what I want is a straightcut, really clean and upright city.

"Do not depend on the other officer, or the man higher than you in doing the work on your beat. Do it yourself and do it right, and see that your beat is taken care of."

This was the statement of Mayor H. H. Rose to 400 policement regarding what he expected of them during his administration.

Seeks $10,000 for State Fair Prizes

A plea for a $10,000 appropriation for prizes at the Georgia State Fair at Macon was made before the Appropriations Committee of the House Thursday afternoon by John T. Williams, president of the State Agricultural Society.

"Agriculture is our vital and pivotal industry," he declared. "Every dollar of this appropriation will be spent within the State and will repay the State a thousandfold."

Committee Favors Income Tax Measure

By a vote of 9 to 5 the income tax bill of Representative Stovall, of Elbert, was recommended for passage Thursday.

The author said his bill would add $160,000 to the revenues of the State from public service corporations alone. It provides for a tax of 1 per cent on incomes of individuals and corporations in excess of $4,000. Living expenses of individuals are exempted.

Leaps in Ball Gown Into Ocean on a Bet

ATLANTIC CITY, July 18.—A pretty girl visitor late last night jumped from the steel pier into the ocean. She was attired in ballroom costume. She was hauled out of the water and whisked away in a waiting automobile.

After an all-day investigation, the police have learned that the girl made a bet on the beach with members of her "crowd" that she would make the leap. The forfeit was a theater party and champagne supper if she didn't do it before midnight. She won.

S. A. Eliot, Jr., Seeks Career on the Stage

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., July 18.—Harvard circles received a surprise to-day when it became known that President Emeritus Eliot's favorite grandson, Samuel A. Eliot, Jr., had decided upon the stage as a career. He is now installed in an English dramatic company, appearing in Manchester, England.

Young Eliot, whose father is president of the Unitarian Ministers' Association, writes that he is much pleased with his stage work. He graduated from Harvard in June and immediately went abroad.

Science Seeks New Light on Numbers

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—"What is number?" the mathematicians of the University of Pennsylvania want to know.

"Where does number begin and end?"

In an effort to answer this all-important question the university will send an expedition to the headwaters of the Amazon to learn what the aborigines know of No. 1. This for a starter.

FRAUD USED NAME OF GEORGIA MAN

Government Accuses New York Promoter of "Wallingford" Operation in the South.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Edmund Willcox, accused by the Government as a "get-rich-quick Wallingford" in real life, but who claims he has reformed and has been leading a new life with his wife and three children in a modest East Side apartment, was arrested to-day by postoffice inspectors.

Until two years ago Willcox had an office in the Metropolitan Tower, where he posed as a promoter of railroads, banks and mills. When he learned that any new company was being formed, he wrote to the promoters offering to float the stock. After obtaining a retaining fee, it is alleged, nothing more was heard from him.

The specific charge against him is that he obtained $1,000 from Comer L. Peck, of Starke, Fla., who operated a 38-mile railroad line between his home town and Jacksonville.

Willcox claimed, according to the Government charges, that one of his clients, Colonel James M. Smith, of Smithonia, Ga., who owns 100,000 acres of land in Florida, had been persuaded by him to buy 20,000 shares of stock of the Central Bank and Trust Company of Georgia, at $102 a share. Colonel Smith denied that he knew Willcox, and the Government began an investigation.

DR. MERRITT NOT ASKED TO RESIGN

Expressed Desire, However, to Leave Battle Hill—Change in Management Expected.

Dr. S. W. Merritt, superintendent of the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, has not been asked to resign, according to statements made Friday by the city officials who are over him. But Dr. Merritt has expressed a desire to leave the institution, and a change in management is anticipated about September 1.

The matter reached a climax when Jesse Shelton, a patient, complained that he had received rough treatment. Mayor Woodward asked Dr. J. P. Kennedy and Dr. Claude A. Smith to investigate the case. It was then that Dr. Merritt declared he did not like the situation, and it was tentatively agreed that a change be made in superintendents.

The committee, however, did not override Dr. Merritt in his discipline of Shelton.

Mrs. Waldorf was accused of having slapped a neighbor's children. The jury was out less than an hour.

PRISON CONDITIONS SCORED BY CHURCH

Episcopal Social Service Commission Calls Georgia Penal System Degrading.

The social service commission appointed by the Episcopal Diocese of Georgia at its annual convention to consider social and economic questions in this State has framed and submitted the following formal report on prison conditions:

Resolved, That the prison system of the State of Georgia and the methods of punishment now in use, and as commonly administered, are degrading and not worthy of an enlightened and progressive State.

Resolved, That we hereby indorse the splendid efforts of the Prison Reform Association of this State, and offer to them our hearty co-operation in securing needed reforms.

Resolved, That we also urge upon our Representatives their support of the child labor bill advocated and indorsed by the National Child Labor Association.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

WAR CHIEF SAYS M'PHERSON IS VITAL POST

Atlanta Army Men Elated Over the Favorable Impression Fort Made on Garrison.

Local army officers are jubilant over the praise bestowed upon Fort McPherson by Secretary of War Lindley M. Garrison Thursday, when, with Major General Leonard Wood and Major General J. B. Aleshire, he made an inspection of the post. It is regarded as practically certain that Secretary Garrison will repeat the recommendation of a year ago that the local post be made a brigade headquarters, which would mean several additional regiments of soldiers would be quartered at Fort McPherson.

"Everything at Fort McPherson is admirably conducted," declared the Secretary. "Such a post is a credit to our country. The strategic position of the Atlanta post is valuable."

Both Secretary Garrison and General Wood said they could not state definitely whether the local post would be made a brigade post, but intimated such a step is likely.

"Nothing definite will be given out until after Secretary Garrison has completed his tour of the 49 posts of the country," said General Wood. "However, we have always regarded the Atlanta territory as important because of its strategic position."

Secretary Garrison's party, including General R. K. Evans, Colonel Barth, Lieutenant Tucker, Colonel VanOrsdale and others, were entertained at the home of Clark Howell and the Piedmont Driving Club Thursday afternoon. Secretary Garrison left Atlanta at 5:10 o'clock, and to-day is inspecting Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga.

Garrison Inspects Fort Oglethorpe.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—Secretary of War Garrison, accompanied by Major General Aleshire, quartermaster general, inspected the quarters of the Eleventh Cavalry at Fort Oglethorpe this morning and visited the site of the proposede brigade post at Chickamauga Park.

Secretary Garrison and his party arrived from Atlanta last night and will leave to-night for Little Rock. An open-air dinner will be tendered the distinguished guests to-night at Signal Mountain Inn, on Waldens Ridge, by the Chamber of Commerce. A breakfast was tendered early this morning at the Commercial Club.

PARIS, July 18.—The civil court at St. Gaudens upheld to-day the validity of the will of Albert Sapene, formerly Mayor of a small town near Toulon, who bequeathed $500,000 to King Alfonso of Spain.

Sapene, who was an ardent royalist and a great admirer of the Spanish King, died in an asylum. His sister sought to have the will set aside on the ground that Sapene was insane when he made it.

Senators' Swimming Match in Demand

WASHINGTON, July 18.—When Senator Pomerene challenged Senator Owen to a swimming match and the latter accepted they did not realize that so many persons were interested in Congressional aquatic sports. Enterprising persons have sought to induce the Senatorial swimmers to make it a national event.

One offer came from the manager of a resort near New York, who assured Senator Owen "he would have a crowd of spectators larger than could be gathered anywhere else in the world."

GEORGIA'S PEACH CROP SHORT, BUT 'PEACHERINOS' STILL ARE PLENTIFUL

Crop Now Moving (Via Railroads and Up and Down Peachtree) Sets Quality Record.

The movement of what is reported as the best crop of peaches ever grown in Georgia is now in full swing up and down Peachtree street and via railroad to the East.

H. B. Marks, secretary-manager of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, who claims to know all about peaches—that is, the edible kind—declared Thursday that the crop, while a light one, was bringing the highest prices ever known.

Miss Danese Milhous and another peach.

"Peaches are selling at from $2.30 to $2.50 f. o. b.," said Mr. Marks. "More than 1,000 cars have already been shipped, most of them going to New York, being divided between New York, Philadelphia and Boston. 'Georgia Belles' and 'Elbertas' form the bulk of the shipments.

"A sharp frost caused a short yield, but the high prices which the peaches are bringing more than make up for this."

The "peachy" girls are here in abundance, however, and even the hot weather is not driving all the Atlanta beauties to the cooler summer resorts. Miss Danese Milhous, one of the prettiest of the younger Atlanta girls, was snapped just as she was beginning to eat one of the first of the North Georgia grown peaches to arrive in the city.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Cool.

There are two wonderfully popular things about the Forsyth these days—a mighty inviting and cool place of recreation and the bill for the week is of exceptional value.

Valerie Bergere proves every right to the claim that she is the star of all dramatic artists that have adopted vaudeville. She is presenting a new playlet that deals with the crook idea. She appeals to a judge to save her husband, who has been convicted on circumstantial evidence, and convinces the judge, by a keen trick, that circumstantial evidence is a mighty bad thing to count too much on.

Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, is scoring the hit of his young life, and the Metropolitan Minstrels prove to be one of the best drawing cards the Forsyth has had. There are pretty girls and clever boys in this act.

John F. Conroy, the world-famous lifesaver, and his diving models will be the star attraction for next week, presenting what is claimed to be the greatest swimming and diving act in vaudeville. Delro, the piano-accordionist, and the Great Lester, ventriloquist, are on the bill.

Grand Offers Treat.

A wonderful motion picture will be shown at the Grand all of next week. It is the supreme masterpiece of modern photo-plays, and is nothing less than Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." There are more than 12,000 feet of film in the nine reels that represent the nine books in the wonderful story written more than a half century ago by the famous French author.

The greatest actors in France volunteered their services in making the picture and every place that is described in the book has been visited and used by the actors for their stage in producing the great work.

This week the Grand is attracting large attendance with a daily change of program of high-class first-run motion pictures.

Bijou Show Catchy.

Brimful of catchy features, pretty musical numbers, entertaining specialties and laughable comedy, this week's bill attractions, Hello a la Carte, is drawing splendid audiences to the popular theater. Every principal in the cast is clever in his or her line of work and some excellent specialties are introduced, not to mention a dozen musical numbers in which the big chorus takes part.

For next week the management announces another corking musical comedy, entitled "Good Morning, Judge," a musical cocktail with Pearl Brothers and Burns and twenty others.

Mailing Letter, He Pulled Fire Alarm

CHICAGO, July 18.—Leon Wells, of Berlin, Mich., attempted to mail a letter to his mother in his home town. The result was the hasty arrival of two battalions of fire-fighting apparatus and a large crowd at the busiest corner in Chicago, that of the Masonic Temple. Traffic was tied up for several minutes before four fire department officials, 100 firemen, ten pieces of apparatus, a patrol wagon containing ten policemen and an ambulance with three doctors, returned to their stations.

"I thought it was a mail box," explained Leon. "I never saw a fire alarm like that. In our town we have a bell in the steeple."

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

You never can tell!

The grand young county of Candler on Thursday morning looked to be as good a bet as one might stake his coin upon—and to-day, like Caesar dead, there are none so poor as to do it reverence!

Perhaps that isn't quite fair to Candler, for there is a good chance that it may be reconsidered, and go over to next year, when, in forgetfulness of the bitterness of Thursday's fight on the floor of the House, Candler yet may come into its own.

Unquestionably, a serious tactical error was made when the friends of Candler, even without intending anything arbitrary, perhaps, moved the previous question, and thereby closed debate save from their own point of view.

It requires a two-thirds vote of the House to pass a Constitutional amendment, whereas it only requires a majority to order the previous question. The previous question, having been ordered by that majority, however, it immediately gave the minority opposition the right to raise the cry of "Gag rule," which cry said minority promptly proceeded to raise—vociferously and with deadly effect upon Candler!

The majority, seeing its blunder, undertook to right things—but too late.

Burwell, as fair and impartial a presiding officer as ever held the gavel, plainly was anxious to relieve the House of its embarrassment if he could, but under the rules, he could not. The House had tied his hands. Several virtuous gentlemen, who had not even called for a division on the vote for the previous question, were very much outraged that the previous question had been ordered, nevertheless—and their expressions upon the floor with respect to that feeling of outrage evidently impressed the House profoundly, as the House proceeded to sustain said outraged point of view.

Altogether, the fight on Candler was as pretty a piece of claptrap as ever was slipped over—but it was slipped, all right, and that is what hurt Candler's feelings!

Moral: Never be too sure your enemy can not throw straight, even if he is left-handed!

Undoubtedly there is genuine merit in the Candler County proposal, and there hardly is a doubt that eventually a new county will be created there.

And the Candlerites may get some consolation from that, after all!

The many friends—as they would say in the Springplace Jimplecute, no doubt—of the well-known Georgian mentioned, will read the following paragraphic gem from The Thomasville Times-Enterprise with mingled feelings of melancholy and joy:

Jim Nevin is more truthful and lots more interesting writing about Governor Brown's gold pen than he was penning that conglomerate mess about the Thomasville cow.

Now, what do you know about that?

The Legislature is looking forward to its forthcoming visit to Augusta with genuine delight.

A great time is being framed up for the Solons, and there will be "doings" from the time the train arrives in Augusta Saturday about noon, until it leaves that night.

Many members are anticipating particularly a visit to Carmichael's famous fishing club with rare pleasure.

This place has been made famous by dozens of distinguished visitors, among them being President Taft Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and others.

The House roll call rarely develops anybody absent, although it frequently is insisted upon.

Thursday an attempt was made to dispense with the roll call, but it was objected to. Nobody was absent, however—which shows what a fine system of looking after the membership is in vogue about the clerk's desk.

It remained for Mr. Moss, of Cobb, rather to hit the nail squarely on the head in explaining his Candler County vote Thursday, when he said:

"I do not indorse this call for the previous question and the shutting off of debate, but I shall not, merely because of that, refuse to do that which under my oath I agreed to do—that is, vote for that which I think best for the State.

"Because a tactical blunder may have been made by the floor leaders in charge of this measure, I shall not, therefore, visit my wrath upon the good people of the South Georgia territory asking to be made into this new county, who come here sincerely and honestly knocking at the doors of the union of counties.

"I can not understand how members can get up here and say they had intended voting for this measure, and would do so, but for the fact that a parliamentary blunder has been made in this House. It impresses me as rather mean and below the belt thus to hit the unoffending Candler County citizens, many of them good farmers, who are here asking a perfectly legitimate thing.

"If a man be sincerely against this measure, all right—he should so vote. But to make a mere mistake in parliamentary procedure an excuse for striking down an admitted meritorious proposition—that is all wrong. I believe this proposition is good, therefore, I shall vote aye!"

Mr. Moss is not inclined to the creation of new counties particularly, but the proposed county of Candler he had picked as one of the two deserving to win—and he voted accordingly.

His little speech in explaining his vote made a distinctly favorable impression on the House.

Easy to Get Rid of Corns

When you know HOW. But you can't do it by peeling, paring, gouging or picking at them. These barbarous methods are cruelly painful and seriously dangerous, for frequently the corn bleeds and then there is always the possibility of blood poisoning. Furthermore, these methods do not remove the corn completely, for the root usually goes deep into the toe to the bone.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory, which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful with any corn, whether hard or soft, and no matter how stubborn or how deep the growth. It removes the corn completely and positively without pain or danger. The first application instantly stops the corn from hurting you. Use it to-night and end your agony. 20c, by mail 22c. —(Advt.)

Mrs. Samuel K. Dick, who was Miss Ruth Tribble, of Athens, before her recent marriage, was the honor guest at an informal tea given Friday afternoon by Miss Jennie D. Harris.

A group of 30 young matrons were invited to meet Mrs. Dick, who is a charming acquisition to the married set. The guests were received in the drawing room, where vases of zinnias, Shasta daisies and summer roses formed the decorations. In the dining room a prettily appoined tea table had for a centerpiece a silver vase of crimson gladioli.

Miss Harris was charming in white lingerie, draped over pink silk, with a deep border of pink crepe de chine finishing the skirt. Knots of tiny French roses were caught amid the laces of the corsage and a pink sash and girdle completed the costume.

Mrs. Dick wore a beautiful gown of white crepe, combined with French cobweb lace, draped on the skirt and confined at one side with a large pink rose. A hat of pink tulle and a corsage bouquet of pink roses completed the modish toilet.

Mrs. Clem Harris, who assisted in entertaining, wore black crepe de chine.

CALIFORNIA TRIP FOR WINNER IN 'AD' CONTEST

"Salesmanship Experience Alone Worth $1,000 to My Son," Says Business Man.

When the business office of The Georgian opened its doors early Friday morning a prominent business man was there with his 16-year-old son.

"I want Charley to enter the want ad contest," he said. "Put him down and start him to work."

The young man's nomination blank was accepted and he was given instructions for securing want ads. His father turned to the want ad man.

"I believe Charley will go out and win," he said. "He has it in him. But even if he doesn't win, I want him to try. I know a few weeks of actual experience in this contest will give him a thousand dollars' worth of education in the most highly-paid work on earth—practical salesmanship. That's why I put him in."

Girls Enter Contest.

And Charley wasn't the only entrant of the morning. A dozen others, several of them young women, brought in their nomination blanks, saw themselves credited with 1,000 votes each for a starter, and had a chat with the want ad man.

They were told how to go to their friends and neighbors and secure want ads for The Georgian, and shown how to roll up a list of votes in the contest for an automobile, a trip to California, a piano, or any one of the dozens of prizes.

"There isn't a family in Atlanta which hasn't a want," said the want ad man. "We have proved that by going to see them and getting results. You next-door neighbor wants a new cook or a man to trim the hedge or is ready to swap a stove for a bedstead or desires to sell his or her house. If you'll go to see him or her and make a suggestion you're sure to get the want ad.

Expert Aids Workers.

"You will be given careful instructions and practical help by an experienced district manager. He will show you how to get the ads. He will give you every bit of assistance you desire. You will have a real course in practical salesmanship, and instead of paying for the training you will be handsomely paid for your efforts."

Persons who wish to enter should clip out the coupon in the big advertisement, fill it out and bring it to the want ad man at No. 7 Edgewood avenue. They will be given full details of the contest and shown how to go out and win.

BIRTHDAY PARTY GIFTS WILL BE PONY VOTES

Girl's Guests Will Bring Her Subscriptions—New Way Found To Aid Contestant.

Newest among the developments in The Georgian and American pony contest is a birthday party. Miss Robert Harbour, of No. 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue, will give the party Saturday afternoon.

This is to be Miss Harbour's fifth birthday anniversary. In honor of the event there will be a "regular party," with the difference from the ordinary celebration that many of the guests have told her in advance what their presents will be.

They will give her subscriptions to The Georgian and Sunday American, which count liberally in votes in the contest. This is an instance where the givers get as much as the recipient, little Miss Harbour gets the votes and the donors get the papers.

John Trimble, of Lithonia, and his father came to Atlanta Thursday to see the ponies. John Trimble is making a good race for the pony to be awarded to the Georgia boy or girl getting the most votes.

One more day remains of the special bonus offer, which gives extra ballots for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. From all indications, Saturday will be one of the

ATLANTA EXHIBIT FOR KNOXVILLE FAIR URGED

Tennessee Business Men in Person Will Attempt to Interest Manufacturers and Jobbers.

Within the next few days a determined effort will be made by business men of Knoxville, Tenn., to interest Atlanta manufacturers and jobbers in the National Conservation Exposition to be held in that city from September 1 to November 1 of the present year.

A delegation of Knoxville men will come to Atlanta to take up the matter of an exhibit of Atlanta-made goods at the exposition with members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Manufacturers' Association.

This was the word brought to Atlanta to-day by James B. Young, director of publicity for the exposition, who was in the city on business connected with the exposition.

Incomplete Without Atlanta.

"The feeling in Knoxville is," said Mr. Young, "that the National Conservation Exposition would not be complete without Atlanta represented, and the directors of the exposition company hope to be able to show Atlanta men wherein it will be to their advantage to come to Knoxville in force.

"The position in so far as we have been able to figure it out is like this: Knoxville during September and October will be something of a battleground between the commercial interests of the North and those of the New South.

"Cincinnati in particular is engaged in a trade expansion movement; Louisville is another city in the same class. Baltimore and several other places north of us already have reserved space for big commercial exhibits at the Knoxville show.

One Means to Invade South.

"The idea of these business men—and I believe they have the right idea—is that the National Conservation Exposition is going to be the one big place this year in which to advance their interests along the lines of an increased Southern trade.

"Every indication is that we will have enormous crowds in Knoxville for the exposition, and one of the most gratifying features is the advices we get showing that travel from the North will be heavy.

"It is for these reasons and others that the men of Knoxville hope to be able to show to Atlanta why it is to the interest of this great city of the South to be represented at our exposition. The matter will be gone into at length and in detail when the Knoxville men come to Atlanta. This probably will be next week."

DR. DELAMATER CRIES HE 'HAS ENOUGH'

Druggist Rearrested on Complaint of Estranged Wife Declares He Has "Learned a Lesson."

Dr. Ira Delamater, following his release from the clutches of the police under a fine of $10.75, late Thursday afternoon was arrested by Constable W. W. Rogers, from the court of Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau, on a peace warrant sworn out by his wife.

The druggist was released under a heavy bond to appear at noon Friday, when an attempt will be made to have him placed under a prohibitive bond that will be forfeited if he even speaks to his wife again.

"I've got enough," cried Delamater, when Constable Rogers took him in tow. "I won't ever do it again, and there is not any use of all this. I learned a lesson Wednesday night (he rubbed an enlarged optic), and I will never bother her again. I will help her get the divorce and pay her alimony regularly."

The druggist was arrested at a Turkish bathhouse in Decatur street. When Constable Rogers found him he was having a badly swollen and darkened eye and severe bruises on his body massaged. They were inflicted by W. T. Cammack, a railroad man, who interfered when Delamater visited Mrs. Delamater, who is seeking a divorce from him, Wednesday night.

:-: Their Married Life :-:

Helen and the Trunks Are Gone When Warren Returns to the Hotel in Paris.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE room was charming. Helen could hardly restrain an exclamation of delight when the French manager unlocked the door and crossed over to draw the heavy curtains from the long, low windows.

The paneled walls, the furniture, the draperies, were all in old rose silk tapestry. The bedroom adjoining was exquisitely dainty in white and pale blue. The low French dressing table, the cheval mirror, the two cane beds with the pale blue silk hangings and coverlets, made it look like a stage setting—"Act I. Mlle. ————'s Boudoir"—in a modern French play.

It was all so surprisingly dainty and luxurious for a hotel that Helen feared it would be most expensive—more than they could pay.

"What do you ask for these rooms?" she ventured.

"Twenty-five francs a day, Madame," he answered in surprisingly good English.

"And what for breakfast served up here?"

"Two francs for coffee and rolls."

Only nine more francs for the rooms, and the same for breakfast as they were paying now! And the dirt and dinginess of the other place compared to the charm and cleanliness of this! Helen pictured herself, in her dainty white morning gown and boudoir cap, having breakfast in this rose silk room. This picture decided her.

"Very well. I'll take the rooms. We're at a place on the Boulevard Capucines now, but we'll come to-morrow morning or late this evening."

The manager took her down on the mirrored elevator to the palm-lined hall and office below, where Helen made a deposit of twenty-five francs to secure the rooms.

On the way back in the bus her courage began to waver. She had arranged to move without Warren's consent or knowledge. But when she again saw the dinginess and shabbiness of the rooms they were in and thought of the wretched breakfast they had had that morning, her courage was renewed.

A Bold Scheme.

As she packed the few things they had unpacked for the night her strongest desire was to move now. It was only half-past one, and Warren would not be back until almost seven. Why not get a cab and take their baggage over now—and have everything unpacked and in place by the time he got there? She could not reach him during the afternoon, but she could leave a note here giving him the address of the new place.

For Helen this was a most audacious scheme, and she was athrill with excitement at the very daringness of it all. For once she would show Warren that she could take the initiative, that she would not stay in a place that was both uncomfortable and unclean, merely because he did not want the bother of moving.

There was a rusty pen and a dusty ink bottle on the mantel. Helen took some paper from her handbag and wrote hurriedly:

Dear: Have just found the most wonderful place! When I went to the American Express Company this morning to get our mail I heard some American women talking about a delightful hotel. I took down the address and looked it up at once. The rooms are so beautiful and so moderate, that I couldn't resist engaging them.

I do hope you won't be annoyed, but this place is so dirty that I felt I couldn't stay. I am going to get a cab and move the things over now, so everything will be in place when you get there. The address is Hotel Ronceray, 10 Rue Montaigne. You can get a bus on the corner that will take you to the door. I will pay the bill here. Hastily. HELEN.

Still fearing that her courage might be short-lived, she determined to act quickly. Resolutely she went down to the office and asked for their bill. The man seemed surprised and displeased, for he had plainly expected them to stay several weeks.

Helen was amazed at the bill. She thought there would be only the room for one night and breakfast—but there was a charge for light, service and bath. However, she was too glad to escape from the place to make any protest, and a little later she was in a cab with their baggage on top, driving to the new hotel with a feeling of mingled glee and awe at her own temerity.

It was just 3 by the French gilt clock on the mirrored mantel of the rose-tapestried sitting room, when Helen closed the door after the porters who had brought up the bagage.

Even before she took off her hat she made an eager, interested inspection of every detail of the rooms. They were luxuriously and perfectly appointed. Everything was in exquisite taste.

It would be over three hours yet before she could expect Warren. But she had no desire to go out in the blazing, midafternoon sun, for the heat was stifling. She would spend the time in unpacking, in getting up their laundry, and in going over her clothes, which after the week on board ship needed attention.

It was a real joy to shake out her gowns and hang them in the spacious closets, and to arrange her clothes in the white-papered drawers of the chiffonier and dresser. The rooms were so beautiful that there was a sense of luxury in just moving about and getting settled in them.

At 6 o'clock she decided suddenly to dress—to put on her white chiffon evening gown. She would lay out Warren's evening clothes, and when he saw her all dressed he would hardly refuse to dress, too. They would "live up" to the luxury of the place!

To sit down and arrange her hair before the low dressing table was a real pleasure. Helen thought of all the hours she had to stand before her high bureau at home, and resolved to have a dressing table like this as soon as she got back.

About half-past six she was trailing about the apartment in her white chiffon gown, looking at herself in the mirrors with which the rooms abounded, and feeling as though she was living in a play. The very foreign atmosphere of it all added to the charm. Although it was hardly dusk, she turned on the electric lights, which glowed softly through their silken shades.

She Gets Anxious.

For once Helen was too excitedly happy to worry over what Warren's attitude might be. Surely, when he saw how beautiful the rooms were, he could not be angry at her having moved.

But at seven she grew anxious. He should be here by now. What if they should not give him the note at that other place? They had not liked it because she had left—would they take such a revenge? She had left the note in the box with the key—how could he fail to get it?

Quarter after seven—half-past! By this time Helen had forgotten the charm of the rooms and was walking restlessly about in tense anxiety. What could have happened? He had said he would be back around half-past six, and it would take him only fifteen minutes at the most to get here from the other place.

For the first time there came a doubt in her mind as to the wisdom of her moving in this way. Perhaps she should have stayed. After all, it was a rash thing for her to do. They were in a strange city, if he should not get the note—how could he ever find her?

She could, of course, write to the American Express Company, where he would go for his mail in the morning; but what would he do to-night? Oh, why had she done this? Frantically she wished herself back in those other rooms, however shabby and dirty they might be. Surely it would have been better to put up with anything than to risk any chance of mishap in Paris.

A sharp knock at the door. She rushed to open it, and a French messenger boy handed her a note. As he held it out to her she saw Warren's writing on the envelope. Her hands weakly trembling, with her teeth she tore it open.

"Since you are so infernally smart and want to take things in your own hands, you can keep it up. You can have a nice little dinner alone any place in Paris you choose—and I can have the same. I'll probably be there some time to-night, but don't let that worry you—stay out just as late as you want."

The cruel sarcasm of it! How could he—oh, how COULD he! With a convulsive sob Helen threw herself upon the bed and her tears fell unheeding on its blue satin coverlet.

More Trouble in a Garden.

An elderly gentleman walking through his garden one day stopped before a fig tree on which were two figs just ripening. His favorites were figs, and summer often came and went without the fruit coming to maturity.

Shortly after he met his gardener who, assuring him the figs were quite ripe, was requested to send them to the summer house, where his master was about to rest.

Picking the figs, the gardener sent his little boy of 7 with the basket. On the way the little fellow stopped, and, removing the leaves, gazed upon the tempting fruit.

The attraction was too great; he ate one. Covering the other with the leaves, he proceeded upon his errand.

On being asked if the gardener had not sent two figs, the boy, after a moment's silence, answered: "I ate one."

"You ate one? How?" exclaimed the old gentleman, angrily. "How did you come to do that?"

Dropping his eyes to the basket, "I took it like this," said the child, taking the remaining fig, "and I ate it like this."

And, suiting the action to the word, he consumed the second fig before the astonished eyes of the old gentleman.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Every one of these breaks in your life-line means a moment when you stood elbow-to-elbow with death," declared the girl, solemnly. "And yet—see those little squares of protection around each break? Senor American," she looked up at him soberly, "there is one break that you have not yet reached and the protecting square is not perfect like the others."

Warren burst into his silent laugh.

"I reckon that square will do when the time comes."

"But the time is now, senor!" exclaimed the girl, her lips less than a foot from his ear.

He drew back a little and eyed her through narrowed lids.

Danger Near.

She bore the keen scrutiny without a flutter, but her great round eyes and quick breathing told of some sure emotion.

"Are your eyes so sharp that you can tell the day and hour?" he asked slowly.

"Not my eyes, Senor American." She looked full at him with unmistakable meaning. "But my ears!" She caught the sound of footsteps in the passage and bent over the hand again as the Duke entered.

"In all my experience I have seen but one hand like yours, and that hand belongs to Don Robledo."

"Well, Mr. Warren, looking into the future?" inquired the Duke.

"Pardon, senor." Dolores swiftly withdrew and Warren called after her cheerfully:

"Good-bye, senorita, and many thanks for your occult wisdom. I'll take good care of that square. Yes, Duke," he added with a bantering smile, "and the immediate future promises to be very interesting. A dark man is to cross my path."

"Do you believe in such foolery?"

"I like to—on this occasion. For I hope it means some one I very much want to meet."

If the Duke guessed who this some one might be he gave no sign. He twirled his mustache and studied the floor, evidently in much perplexity, a situation that seemed to amuse the young man immeasurably.

"By the way," he went on. "Is that specter a blond or a brunette?"

The exalted kinsman made an impatient gesture, as if in no mood for raillery, and with every appearance of grave concern said:

"Mr. Warren, since the Prince is no more, I feel a certain responsibility for Her Highness' actions; and the prospect of your destruction to-night on her account is most uncomfortable."

The young man looked equally grave.

"You think I won't come back?"

The Duke looked at him with the air of a man who is frankly doing his duty.

"I think if you go into that castle to-night you take your life in your hands," he declared.

The old whimsical smile returned to Warren's lips.

"I've got a good grip."

The Duke looked for a moment as if he would retire—that having done his duty there was nothing for him to say. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him:

"Look here! You Americans are shrewd traders. You get a dollar for a dollar when you bargain. You are not giving away your life for nothing. Now, what is the price?"

"Not very much," Warren assured him easily. "The deal was made on a bargain day. My life happened to be a little below par, you see, and I couldn't kick much over the terms."

The exalted cousin seemed relieved.

"Very well! Whatever those terms were, I will assume the responsibility of settling with you and at the same time release you from your unfair and outrageous bargain."

Jarvis bowed.

"Your Excellency, I am overwhelmed by your anxiety. It touches not only the heart but the pocketbook. But," he added regretfully, "the price is paid and I am on the job."

"I suppose that means you are going through with it?"

"Yes."

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, I never saw a man so anxious to be killed. But, as your English poet says, 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

"You flatter me," Jarvis protested, with soft-tongued irony. "Yet, an energetic fool may be of more use than an angel with cold feet."

"Well, I am sorry for you," concluded the Duke.

Jarvis walked up to him, for the first time in their acquaintance dead serious.

"Your Excellency," he said crisply, "I decline your offer and your advice and your sympathy—and I'll tell you why. I saw a gambler lay down four aces once because, as he said, 'The play ain't natural.' You tried to have me arrested on the steamer—you have tried to block me in every move I have made. Now—suddenly—you are deeply concerned lest something should happen to precious little me in that castle. You advise me to stay out. You even offer to buy me off. Shall I take your advice? NO! 'The play ain't natural.'"

On Guard.

His Excellency of Alva trembled with a cold fury, but held himself in.

"You have intruded into a matter which you neither understand nor appreciate," he said rapidly. "If, as you say, the play seems unnatural, pray do as your gambling friend—put down your cards and stay out of the game."

"No," retorted the young man, grimly. "I stay in the game—but I'm going to watch the deal!"

The return of the Princess abruptly terminated the conversation and when the two men turned to greet her they had recovered their natural tones and bearing.

"Well, all Segura is buzzing with your ghost-hunt to-night," observed the Duke, lightly. "The whole town will sit up to hear the outcome."

"And where are you going to get the returns, Duke?" asked Jarvis, with concealed interest.

"Unfortunately, I must leave at once," was the unexpected reply.

Even Jarvis was momentarily startled, but he quickly readjusted his inferences. "I am keenly disappointed, but I have an urgent summons to Madrid."

The Princess stared at her cousin, seemed about to speak and suddenly turned to the innkeeper who had followed her down stairs and ordered him to look after "the gentleman's wants."

"Thank you," said Jarvis, rightly interpreting this as a dismissal. "I'd like a couple of good horses and two lanterns."

"Lanterns?" smiled the Duke, as the young man went out. "Looking for an honest man, Mr. Warren?"

"Not in this neck of the woods, Your Excellency," retorted Jarvis, over his shoulder.

"Carlos," exclaimed the Princess, anxiously, when they were alone, "what have you found out? Tell me—what do they say?"

The Duke looked very solemn. "I regret to tell you that nothing is known of your brother since he entered the castle."

The girl closed her eyes and pressed her hands to her face.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned.

A Last Appeal.

Dolores called that Don Robledo was waiting with His Excellency's car.

"Cousin, do you really intend to go now?" cried the girl in tragic tones. "I need you! My brother needs you! Think what it means to us!"

"I am broken-hearted, dearest cousin—do not make my duty any harder by your words. The message is from His Majesty. It is mandatory. And, alas! In Spain, as in the Far East, to hear is to obey."

"But why must you start so soon?"

"You know my ride is a long one and I must travel fast while the moon is up."

The girl was silent for a moment and when she spoke again voice and features were composed into a chilly hardness.

"Not to open this discussion again, I want to say now that I will never forgive you for leaving my brother and me at this critical moment."

"Would you have me lose my favor with the King?" protested the Duke.

"Does his favor mean more to you than mine?" retorted the girl proudly.

The Duke spread out his palms and half bowed.

"Noblesse oblige, cousin," he said gently. "Nobles and kings must obey what lesser men might ignore. My heart is here, but my honor is with the King."

"Honor!" The Princess flung the word back at him as if it were a stinging missile. "The cloak for a man's vanity! Sacred honor!—to be kept bright at any cost, lest men should test his metal and find it base. Give me a man who cares liss for honor than for me! You ask me to-day why I do not marry you. I will tell you why. I want a man, not a weakling masquerader. Yes, honor lives, but loyalty is dead! Courage is dead, and the brave blood of your ancestors, the blood that made Spain, has turned to water in your veins. There is not a nobleman in Spain who would dare go now this night to my brother in the castle. God! How I could love such a man!"

"Perhaps," sneered her cousin, stung by the bitter tirade, "perhaps such a man as your Yankee adventurer?

"Perhaps I could," cried the girl, instantly taking up the challenge. "Who knows?"

The Duke bit his lips and before he could frame an adequate reply the man himself appeared, slowly descending the stairs. So he merely bowed, took the girl's hand and kissed it.

"Farewell," he said in a low voice, "some time you will forgive me. Success to you, Mr. Ghost-Breaker, when you head the specter in his den."

"Thank you, your Excellency," drawled Jarvis, leaning against the stairpost. "I will do my uttermost to put salt on the specter's tail."

"Good-bye!"

"Good night, Duke!"

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with some concern and a question on his lips.

"Mr. Warren," she said abruptly, "we must start at once!"

The strained quality of her voice told him that she was laboring under the most intense excitement and it was with studied ease of manner and voice that he replied:

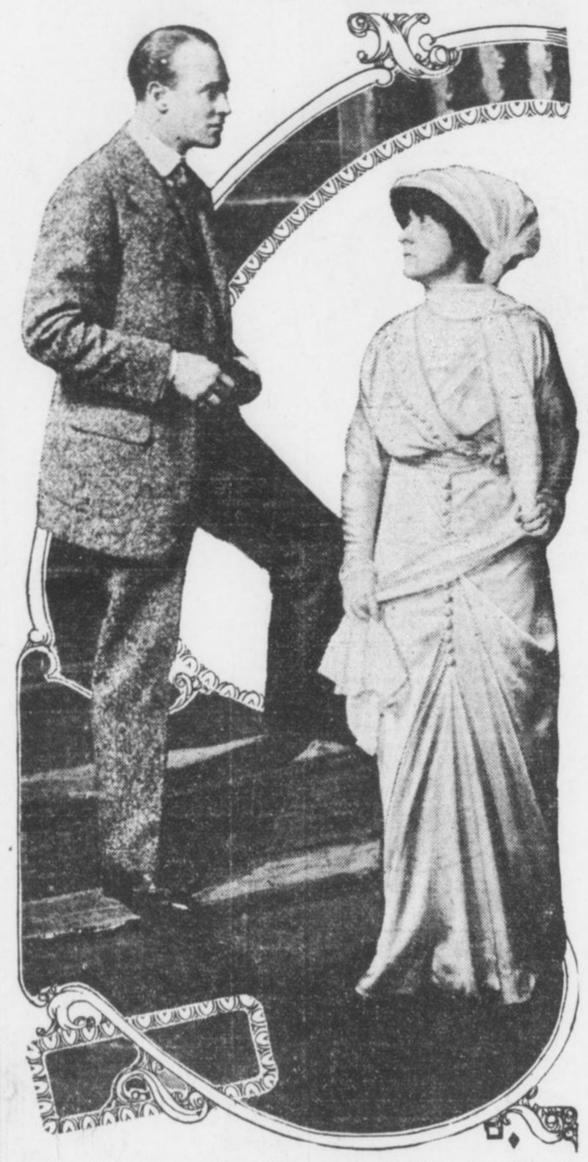
"It's out of the question for you to go to the castle until I have smashed this infernal mystery; there is nothing you could do. If your brother is there I'll find him. You must be patient and remain here, where you are safe, and try to rest."

"I can not rest until I know what has happened to him," she cried desperately. "I shall go mad if I am left here alone!"

"But it's not safe for you to go," he insisted.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

OFF TO THE CASTLE.



The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with som econcern and a question on his lips.

"MEGGIE, the postman is coming up the garden path. Would you mind going to the door?"

Mrs. Martin paused in the kneading of the large batch of dough and glanced toward the tiny sitting room. A pretty girl of about eighteen emerged in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crabbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips.

"Who is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

The girl burst into a flood of hot furious tears, and flung the letter scornfully upon the table.

"If Jack is too good for me, I don't thank her to tell me so," she declared. "She herself wasn't much until she married Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. Mrs. Martin picked up the letter and read it slowly. A look of contempt flashed in her honest gray eyes.

The letter, which was couched in terms of lofty condescenston, mingled with biting satire, conveyed the unmistakable message that the silly attachment existing 'twixt Meggie and Jack was viewed with disapproval, and advised the girl to look elsewhere, unless she wished to bring Jack to financial beggary.

In a few minutes Meggie, her eyes red with crying, descended the staircase, and her mother gathered her in her arms.

"Take no heed of the foolish letter, my dear," she said soothingly.

Ten minutes later found Meggie on the way to Flamstead.

She Sees Jack.

A man emerged from behind a spur of cliffs and a sudden rush of color suffused her cheeks. The man saw her at the same time and came toward her at an increased pace. He was a tall, strongly built man of about twenty-one, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and darkly curled hair showed beneath his sou'wester.

"Great guns! What are you doing abroad a morning like this, Meggie?"

"I'm just on my way to Flamstead to make a few purchases, Jack," she said. "Are you putting out to sea to-day?" There was an anxious note in the inquiry, as she glanced uneasily toward the horizon, which was enshrouded in a threatening murkiness.

Her glance seemed to bring something to his recollection, for his bright eyes suddenly darkened, and he laid a hand upon the rough surface of his jersey. The next moment he had taken the girl's arm in a close grip.

"Did you receive a letter this morning, Meggie?" he asked abruptly.

A tell-tale flush of confusion dyed Meggie's cheeks, and her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Then it is true. She has been interfering between you and me. By heaven, I'll make her retract every word she has written.

* * * * *

It was a night long to be remembered by "those who go down to the sea in ships," and by the poor fisherfolk of Sharpel's Head in particular.

"I'm main afraid they won't do it. If they do, 'twill be by the grace of God!"

The distress signal flickered for a second, and then was obliterated by the flying spume. The old fisherman who had first spoken made his hands into a megaphone, and gave vent to a loud but futile shout.

"'Tis awful to have to stand by and watch them go to their death without being able to lend a hand," he said.

"She cannot last long in a sea like this," declared old Timothy, with a shake of his head. "A boat wouldn't live a minute in such a boil. 'Tis years since I've seen the like."

Scarcely had he spoken when there was a commotion at the rear of the watchers, and a slight cheer was raised. The men from the Flamstead Coastguard Station had arrived, and at their head raced Meggie Martin, her dark hair streaming in the wind. A minute later a rocket with a mighty rush soared seaward, taking with it the line. It hummed like a string of a gigantic harp. At length there emerged from the darkness the dim outline of the breeches-buoy, and from it hung the limp figure of a man.

"Why, 'tis Jim Carlin, of the Waterwitch."

A wild, terrified wail greeted the announcement, and Mrs. Ryalls rushed into the arc of light cast by the lantern.

"The Waterwitch! Good heavens! What of my husband?"

She reeled, and would have fallen had she not been caught by Meggie. The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girlish figure sprang toward him and seized him by the arm.

Jack Is Left.

"All are not saved!" she cried in a voice that was almost a scream. "There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured and Jack has sent him first. Oh, he quick, or 'twill be too late!"

The officer spun round with a sharp command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey.

"I'm afraid it's all over, miss. There is no response. He shook the line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn ashore, and almost at the same moment and hawser perceptibly slackened.

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!" shouted the officer. "Tighten up the hawser, lads, and let's have another try for the poor fellow."

The officer and his men hurried away with the lanterns toward the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy.

A reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, had swung herself into the buoy and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline toward the deafening inferno below.

Meggie felt a numbness creeping over her senses, but she bravely fought it back. She had set herself the task of saving Jack if he still lived and that task must be accomplished.

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips as she recognized it as the figure of Jack Ryalls. Meggie suddenly leaned from the buoy and, seizing the limp figure of her lover, drew him toward her. * * *

"Why, bless me, if there ain't two!" The cry escaped old Timothy.

"And if it ain't Meggie Martin that's bin out to the wreck to fetch Jack in, I'll stand hanging!" declared another voice. "Hold that lantern up, Bill. Let's have a look at the heroine of Sharpel's Head."

The feeble rays of light fell upon the locked figures of Jack Ryalls and his gallant rescuer, and the next moment a tremendous hurrah rose above the soughing wind. Five minutes later the unconscious couple were being conveyed home with the utmost haste, followed by a crowd of silent but enthusiastic witnesses of the daring deed.

* * * * * *

Twelve months later a pretty wedding was solemnized at the quaint church of Sharpel's, and the whole of the townsfolk turned out to do honor to the handsome pair; but never did a heart beat more proudly than did that of Jack Ryalls as he led his bride between the lines of fishermen who formed the guard of honor—the girl who had snatched him from the very jaws of death.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I DO NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and in love with a man two years my senior. He is nice and has a good position. I kept steady company with him for a year and a half. Then my mother stopped him from calling on me, but never gave a reason; but, as it is, we go out, when we get a chance, together. He has given me two diamond rings. Do you think it is right for me to see him as long as mother does not consent? CUTTIE.

You owe her obedience, and must not see this man clandestinely.

On the other hand, you are now 18, and your mother owes you a reason for her objections. Can you not persuade her to tell you what they are that he may have a chance to overcome them? If he is the man who is to tell you the "sweetest story of all," I don't want you to lose him.

NOT A DAY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19, and am keeping company with a man 25 years old. Do you think he is too old for me? We never quarrel. He loves me, I know, but my father thinks him too old for me. He makes fine pay and gives me good times. We think a lot about each other and get along fine. H. E.

He is not a day too old. Are you sure your father's objections are not based on some other ground?

BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I received an invitation from a young lady to attend her birthday party. Is it proper for me to accept the invitation, as I have never been introduced or even seen the young miss? PERPLEXED.

A girl who would do anything so foolish deserves the rebuke you are in position to give her by declining the invitation.

Household Suggestions

Weak eyes that ache when exposed to the glare of the sun, especially on the sea, should be treated with cold water compresses. These are folded on the closed lids, and ease the aching at once.

If troubled with ants indoors spread a piece of brown paper with marmalade rather thickly, then place it where they are most troublesome. It will soon be covered with them.

When boiling potatoes put a teaspoonful of sugar as well as salt in the water. This does not give a sweet taste, but makes them dry and floury.

Effect.

"Did you see the lovelight in her eyes?"

"No. The gaslight was in her eyes, and she squinted."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

HUSBAND deer, sed Ma to Pa last evening, at last I have found a perfek jewel of a servant. She caim to work this afternoon, & I want you to notis her wen she is serving dinner. She is as brite a gurl as I have ever met. She is a cullurd girl, her naim is Minyunette, & she went to a gurl's college that Booker Washington had sumthing to do with. Her flow of English is perfeck, Ma sed, & I was thinking that littel Boobie cud improve his English by jest lissening to her talk.

Didn't Warm Up.

I doant warm up vary much as you are talking, sed Pa. Sumhow I aint very keen for a servant that knows moar than we do. You know how long that one lasted with us that was all the time talking about Henry James & Shopenhaur.

Oh, but this gurl is different, sed Ma. She is vary quiet & I doant think she will air her nollege any.

I knew Pa wasn't going to like the new gurl, tho. I had herd her talking to Ma beefoar Pa caim hoam, & this is what she sed wen she was talking off her wraps: I presume that the duties connected with the situation will not be arduous. That dident sound like our other gurl that we had beefoar her, she sed when shall i pitch in?

She Comes In.

Well, wen dinner beegan Minyunette caim in to wait on the tabel. She had a high forehead & woar glasses.

Wife, sed Pa to Ma, you & little Bobbie are going to a Shakespeer reading to-nite.

Oh, sed Minyunette, I adoar Shakespeer. He is so many minded, his scope is so all em-bracing. I was just looking at yure fat husband, she sed, & thinking of Shakespeer's lines

I want fat men about me, sleek hedded men
& such as sleep o' nights.
Yon Cashus hath a leen & hungry look.
He thinks too much. Such men are dangerus!

Pa dropped his fork & looked at Minyunette the way he looks at me wen my report card says Deportment, 65. But Minyunette dident notis Pa, she kept on talking. I think the character of Shakespeer's Portia is a butiful one, she sed. So wise & yet so sweet and womanly. I can see her now in my mind's eye, saying

The quality of mercy is not strained.
It falleth as the gentle rain from heaven.
It is twice blessed, it blesseth him—

See here, sed Pa, I doant want to be any Simon Legree, but it wuddent be a bad ide, Minyunette, if you showed a littel moar sped out in the kitchen & a littel less in here. I am as hungry as a jailed suffragist, sed Pa, & it doesent help my hunger any to heer you spouting Shakespeer. The next thing I know you will be raving about Lord Byron and trying to reesite all of Childe Harolds Pilgrimage. Come on, now, sed Pa, moar spuds & less Shakespeer.

Didn't Like It.

Minyunette dident like it at all the way Pa talked. She took off her apron & sed to Ma, Madame, I regret that I shall be compelled to seek elsewhere for a posishun whare the environments is moar en-vironing, sed Minyunette. I was sure I was going to like it here, beekaus you are a sweet nature, but yure husband is rude & of the soil. Our souls are not at-tuned, she sed. & so, obaying the word of rate, our ways part.

Good-NITE, sed Pa.

:-: The Melody :-:

WHEN evening came with the shadows she let her little frail hands fall into her lap as if every muscle and tendon had suddenly burst. Her finely-shaped dark-haired head rested on the table. She was sitting in front of her sewing machine, at which she had been working all day. All around her were scraps of silk and woolen goods, fashion papers and patterns lay in piles on the table, and when she moved her arms some of them dropped on the floor. Her head was dizzy with complete exhaustion. She was unable to think, but felt the increasing darkness as a blessing which put an end to the toil of the day.

It was ten years of work that had aged her. These years had been to her like one long walk through an endless desert without a single oasis to relieve the monotony; her feet had left no tracks on the sands; not a single cry from her lips had been responded to; nobody had met her on the way to shake her hand.

But on the other side all these years of weary thraldom there were a few years when she had been young and had lived. In those years the two had sat together, watching the coming of dark, and were glad and laughed at everything.

She was young then, and worked for small wages in a dressmaking shop. He had long hair, dreaming eyes, an inexhaustible fund of hope, and a violin—that was all, but he was an artist. He was young, gave lessons on the violin and managed to make both ends meet. He was always bright and happy. Nobody could laugh as he could, or cheer her up as he could. He knew how to make everything appear in a golden and rosy light.

One night he came to her unexpectedly and took her into his arms.

"I cannot live without you," he said. "Why should we wait until we can afford to marry. Then we shall be old and gray. You cannot put happiness aside and say, 'Wait a few years; I cannot give you any of my time now; later on I will call for you.' Will you not come to me now and live with me as my wife?"

But she did not understand him. She struggled out of his arms, wounded and unhappy, an intense pain shooting through her every nerve and fiber. For solitude had made her shy and suspecting; his suggestion hurt her, and she asked him to leave her. She no longer remembered the passionate words that passed between them; but he left her, pale and angry, his black hair in disorder and his eyes shooting fire at her.

Two days passed. Then one even she saw it in one of the papers—a short notice which most people would have overlooked. He had shot himself. He had gone straight from her and had sent a bullet through his brain. She thought of all the hard words she had said to him and felt how unjust she had been to him.

As she was putting her room in order she felt a sudden desire to go out, to see people around her and hear them talk, to feel the cool evening air in her face.

From the park she heard music which irresistibly drew her in among the trees, where it was so much more pleasant than in the dreadful rushing and crowding of the streets. She stopped in front of a large restaurant with many chairs and tables outside and music in the veranda, where a few persons sat drinking and talking.

She sat down on a bench under a dripping tree, where she could hear the musicians. Here she sat for a long time quietly and sad, with her hands folded and her head thrown back.

Suddenly a musician got up to play a violin solo. He was a tall, dark young man; he stooped a little. His eyes were sad and melancholy under the heavy brows.

As he started to play she stood up, trembling. She felt like rushing up to him and asking him to stop, but she fell back on the bench and hid her face in her hands.

"That melody contains all life," he used to say; "love, suffering and happiness."

When the violinist lowered his bow she stood up and went home. Like a small shadow she disappeared among the crowd. Nobody had a look or a thought for her.

But her pale, tired-looking mouth was smiling, and in her eyes was the light of happiness. No longer did she dread the visions of the day or the dreams of the night.

She had a hand to clasp now in the darkness, a hand which was to guide her through eternity.

Condensed Measure.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked a sharp servant of the milkman, whom she suspected of giving short measure.

"Yes," replied the man.

"Well, it won't do," said the girl. "When we want condensed milk we'll buy it at the grocer's."

In the last figure Lady Constance gives a little tip-toe exercise.

EVERYONE agrees that for the art of sculpture we can not exceed the ancients. To me it seems that the Greeks had beautiful sculptured figures because they had wonderful models, and had wonderful models because they had a deep veneration for the almost divine beauty of the human form. And so out of this circle of perfection they chiseled glorious figures that we of to-day may use as models for the beautification of our own bodies.

To-day I am showing you three figures, and I shall dwell at length on them and what we may hope to acquire from a practice of the poses they portray. Let us make a slight study of the expression of countenance and body. For unless the face and body are attuned in the expression of a mood, there will be ungraceful uncertainty as a result.

The First Figure.

The first figure on top might stand for a number of ideas—injured innocence is the most dramatic idea that it suggests. To me it simply is a harmoniously simple pose, in which body and face express quiet dignity. Try it yourself—for it looks very easy to take a pose like this. But to stand poised firmly and gracefully on one foot, with the whole body balanced, ready to spring into motion and life and still at rest, is quite a feat. The ability to stand gracefully is rare—for people generally balance on heels or toes, or sag awkwardly on one hip.

Let me suggest an exercise for the acquisition of ability to stand gracefully. Balance the weight on the ball of the right foot, let the right arm hang easily at the side. Sway the body slightly to the left and raise the left arm to the chest, at the same time rising on the toes of the left foot until the weight is all balanced on the right foot. Then sway the weight gradually to the left foot, rising on the right toe and lifting the right arm to the chest. Simply sway from foot to foot in exactly the posture that figure one shows you.

Is Very Simple.

Figure two is gayety shown in one step of an old dance of triumph. It gives the most marvellous control of thigh, knee, ankle and instep, and will serve to bring down an accumulation of weight about the hips and thighs. Furthermore, it insures a graceful control of arms and shoulders.

The practice of this seemingly complicated exercise is simple when once you carefully analyze the picture I have posed for you. Beginning with the left foot, rise slowly to the toes, at the same time raising the other leg with the knee bent and the instep so flexed that the toes point almost perpendicularly to the floor.

The rising on the toes of one foot and the lifting of the other limb until the knee is far above the waist line must be simultaneous.

Practice this first, alternating from one foot to the other, with the arms hanging at the sides.

Then combine the arm and leg motion, and see what a gain in balance results.

Lift the arms with drooping wrists, and as the hands reach the shoulders, and the elbows are at waist height, turn the fingers up, at the same time turning out the hand above the raised knee, and elevating the up-pointing fingers of the other hand above the head.

Poise, balance, and reduction of superfluous hip-flesh—is this not a vast deal to gain from one dancing exercise?

The last figure illustrates a little faun-like movement that is splendid for back, throat and instep, as well as for flexibility of wrist. Walk forward on tip-toes, with the uplifted hands crossing first to the right and then to the left as the body's weight is thrown first on the right and then on the left foot. When the weight is coming on the right foot and the right wrist is foremost, throw the head to the right and give the body (which must be bent slightly back throughout the exercise) a slight turn to the right. Alternate this from foot to foot.

Always practice these exercises in regular alternation from right to left or left to right and back again to insure even bodily development. Real beauty of form demands as first requisite absolutely even and uniform development, for only when it is absolutely normal is the body truly lovely as Our Maker meant it to be.

Up-to-Date Jokes

The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something.

"I'll have to get rid of Fido," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?"

Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous and burning indignation, as she replied:

"Every single thing except the dog biscuits."

"Walter," grumbled a customer, "I should like to know the meaning of this. Yesterday I was served with a portion of pudding twice the size of this."

"Indeed, sir," rejoined the waiter. "Where did you sit?"

"By the window," answered the customer.

"Oh, that accounts for it," said the waiter. "We always give people by the window large portions. It's an advertisement."

:-: The Sins of Our Fathers :-:

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

MILDRED writes: "I am deeply in love with a young man three years my senior. I have been keeping company with him for the past three months. I would like to bring him up to the house, but my father objects to me bringing any boys up to the house. What shall I do?"

In the category of sins which fathers visit upon their children, no mention is made of the heavy penalty that often results when a girl is compelled to do all her "sweethearting" outside the protecting walls of her home. If the streets, the parks, the public walks or the dark corners of steps are made a girl's parlor, then I contend her father is visiting upon her innocent head as great a burden as if he violated all the moral and physical laws. In the most trying period of her life, when through her love she is weakest to resist, she is cast out on the streets without even the environment of familiar scenes at home to remind and to restrain her.

One can not be as easily tempted when in the familiar scenes of one's youth and innocent dreams, as if in strange surroundings. It is as if every chair, the table, even the pictures on the wall, looked with accusing eyes, surrounding the girl with whose life they have always been a part with a moral influence that is never lightly brushed aside.

The girl who receives her lover in her parlor impresses him, though perhaps unconsciously, with the sanctity, the respectability, the dignity of a home. The girl whose parlor is the streets may be good and pure and sweet, and usually is, but girls whose object is not moral also meet men on the streets, and the similarity upsets his moral balance.

An Impression.

The girl in the parlor usually has a father or a mother in the next room, and the young man who calls is impressed with the fact that there is some one loving her, shielding her, to whom he will have to account if he offends. The girl on the street corners is without a mother or father, so far as any impression of personal security goes. She is thrown out like a waif; if she becomes a derelict the father or mother who refused her the privilege of receiving her lover in her parlor is to blame.

The memory of parents is criminally short. There are few of them who can call back to the days when they loved and were loved, and when the clasp of a hand, or a kiss, was worth more than all the wealth in the world, and defied the wisdom of the ages. They have forgotten the call of youth.

There is no room in their memory for the cry of the heart for its mate, and, lacking this memory, they are as unfit to be parents of young girls and boys as an Egyptian mummy. They are without sympathy and understanding, at the period when the young in their charge need sympathy and understanding the most.

Without these they are also without charity. I have a notion that the father of Mildred, who compels her to do her "sweethearting" on the streets, would be like flint in his judgment if she yielded to the unwholesome influences of the dark corners of life and erred. Yet he would be more to blame than she.

Wisdo mto Refuse.

It is wisdom to refuse to let a girl bring a man to her home of whom her parents know nothing, but it is better to grant her even this privilege than to let her meet him on the streets. If they know nothing of him a closer inspection in their own home gives them every opportunity to know him better.

They can never know the manner of man their daughter is learning to love if they compel her to see him on street corners, and, being ignorant of him, they are without argument or weapons if he is undesirable.

Open the parlor for the girls. It is their right!

The Misfortunes of Joe Brick

A SHORT TIME ago I met my friend, Joe Brick. He looked worried. When I greeted him with a smile he groaned.

"Oh, if you only knew! If you knew, but you don't."

Then feeling, like most unhappy men, a desire to confide the story of his misery to somebody, he told it to me, and a pitiful story it was indeed.

"My affairs were going splendidly and I was already hoping to become a member of the Billionaires' Club," began Joe. "A rich marriage, I thought, would help me along. In society. I had often met Miss Ruby Smith, a daughter of the king of agriculture, a young lady of unusual beauty, but who unfortunately had neither arms nor legs. She was called the trunk woman. She was known to be amiable and sweet tempered, and was extraordinarily bright, so bright indeed that most of the schemes which had made her father the richest man in the United States had been hatched in her brain.

"I Decided to Marry."

"I decided to marry Ruby Smith, and one afternoon, dressed in my very best clothes, I asked her father for her hand.

"He looked at me sharply and said:

"'My daughter is very rich; how much are you worth?'

"I told the dreaded magnate all about my hopes. I proved to him that I had an idea which would revolutionize the manufacture of beet sugar, that I had a scheme to cut the cost of oleomargarine in two, and depicted to him all the details of my plan to increase the crop of Brussels sprouts, to triple its present size by sprinkling the plants twice a day with water from the celebrated Manneken fountain in Brussels, and how there were untold millions in my idea of exporting black radishes to the negroes in Africa.

"He was greatly impressed, took me into his arms and exclaimed:

"'You are to be my son-in-law, if Ruby will have you for her husband.'

"Miss Ruby received me most cordially. Poor little one, how beautiful she was! A regular Venus from Milo, only more perfect still, since her legs, too, were missing.

"I shall not go into details. It is enough to tell that she accepted me and a date was set for our wedding. It was celebrated with great splendor. It was the happiest day in my life. After the ceremony my wife received all her old friends with open arms, in spirit at least, in our new home. I felt my future was assured and knew that I would surely be elected for membership in the Millionaires' Club, which was the height of my ambition. Alas, it was not to be!"

"My dear little wife, my darling Ruby!' I said to my bride when we were alone: 'What do you say to giving up all our old habits for a few months and leave this feverish town for an idyllic wedding trip?'

"'You really think of everything, Joe!' she exclaimed, and as she could not clasp my hand she looked right into my soul with her angelic eyes. 'I am ready to follow you to the end of the world!'

"I have always been a most chivalrous fellow, so I felt like kissing her hand, but had to kiss her forehead instead.

"'I do love you so, Joe,' she whispered.

"'And I adore you, Ruby. There is no other woman in the world half so beautiful to me as you are!'

"We left for Canada in our private car, starting on our famous trip, which filled columns in the newspapers. We were to cross the Rocky Mountains and stay for some time in Monterey and Los Angeles, but the pitiless hand of destiny interfered. We were as happy as two turtle doves during the first part of our journey, and I felt that Ruby loved me more every day.

The Fatal Day.

"Then the fatal day came. The train, our own special train, of course, was speeding along at 70 miles an hour, when suddenly there was a shrill whistle and the airbrakes were jammed down hard. Train robbers had held us up and now invaded our drawing room.

"'Hands up!' cried a gigantic fellow standing in the doorway.

"Ruby behaved like a heroine and smiled indulgently at the bandit, while my hands shot upward.

"'Hands up!' roared the robber once more, and as Ruby, of course, was unable to comply with his request, he fired at her, killing her on the spot.

"That is how I became a widower," sobbed Joe. "The king of agriculture accused me of leading his daughter, his right hand as he called her, into a trap. He blackballed me in the Billionaires' Club and did not keep a single promise to me in connection with my schemes. That is why I am a ruined man to-day. By the way, can you lend me a hundred?"

* * * *

Only to-day I learned that Joe is spending his time in a nice, quiet retreat for the feeble-minded. He had told the story of his misfortunes to a dignified old judge while awaiting his turn at a barber shop.

By Virtue of Age.

"Yes," said the old man to his visitor. "I'm proud of my daughters, and it is the ambition of my heart to see them all comfortably married.

"What's more," he added knowingly, "I've made a bit of money in my time, so my girls wont go to their husbands penniless. There's Mary for example, 25 years old, and a real good lass—I'll give her $1,500 on her wedding day. And to Bet—you see, she has past her thirty-fifth summer—I'll give her, at any rate, a couple of thousand; whilst the man who takes Eliza can rely on taking with her at least $5,000 of the very best."

"By the way," inquired the young man, "how old is Eliza?"

"Forty," replied the elder.

"Hum! I suppose you don't happen to have a daughter somewhere between sixty and seventy?"

Do You Know---

There has been such a decline of recent years in the marriage rate of Trieste that one of the civic dignitaries suggests the institution of a system of compulsory matrimony. It is proposed that on a given date in each year all spinsters who have attained their twenty-fifth year and bachelors who have attained their thirtieth should be required to present themselves before the syndic in whose jurisdiction they reside. The names of those who on medical examination prove to be thoroughly sound would be sorted according to sex, placed in separate urns, and then drawn two at a time. The couples whose names are drawn together would, at the conclusion of the draw, be united forthwith by the syndic.

A traveling theatrical company, which is at present visiting Lille, France, gives performances in a couple of barges, which are towed along the canal from town to town. One barge does duty for the theater, while the other serves to house the players. The floating theater is comfortably fitted, and there is a large stage, with scenery painted by a member of the company.

One of the competitions in connection with the Welsh Territorial Artillery, which recently concluded its training on the sand dunes at Pembrey, was a bun-eating contest. Two sappers set out to eat fourteen buns, the prize to go to the man who got through the lot in the quickest time. The winner ate his fourteen in 25 minutes, his opponent finishing five minutes later.

GAMBLING MAY WRECK GAME AT PELICANVILLE

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Southern League owes itself the duty of cleaning out the baseball gamblers at New Orleans.

That city, by far the largest in the league, should be the vertebra of the circuit. Instead, it is only an appendix—and a decidedly diseased appendix at that.

I've talked with a lot of managers and players in this league, firing at all of them the question, "What's the matter with New Orleans?"

Some of them didn't know.

The rest agreed.

"Too much gambling."

It is understood that gambling runs practically wide open in the New Orleans stands—that you can get a bet on anything from the outcome of the pennant race to the question of whether the next effort of the pitcher will be a ball or a strike.

* * *

GAMBLING ruins baseball wherever it gets a foothold. It makes knockers. It creates a suspicion of faking. It drives respectable people away from the games.

What New Orleans needs is a house cleaning.

The gamblers should be run out of the stands and kept out. Every effort should be made to keep down gambling on games to the minimum.

It is really up to President Kavanaugh to take a look into this question. The interests of the league can be protected in no other way. The New Orleans Baseball Association can't handle the question, and has proved it.

The league is sickening because of this festering sore.

Somebody phone Old Doctor Kavanaugh!

* * *

IT is sort of a pathetic coincidence that Jud Daley is to succeed Spencer at New Orleans. They are chips off the same block—or should we say tusk?

Judson doesn't seem to be hitting them as of old. It can't be that he is aging. So probably he's in sort of a slump.

He's a great card for any club, on account of his cutting-up and his kidding of the bleachers, and is worth his pay as a comedian.

SEVERAL men, well known in Dixie, are figuring prominently in the International League these days. Derrick is batting .346 with Baltimore, and is leading the league. Ed Lafitte leads the Providence batters with .339. Swacina and Bill Zimmerman, both former Southern Leaguers, are hitting moderately hard with the Newark club "Swats" has a mark of .302 to his credit, while "Heinie" is going at a .281 clip.

* * *

THIS Clark that the Crackers have just picked up appears to be one of the champion wild men of organized baseball. Until a few days ago he belonged to the Highlanders. In a game in St. Louis, Chance stuck him in. He started by giving Brier four successive high ones. Pratt waited for four that didn't come near the plate. It was the same for Johnston.

Having pitched twelve successive balls, Wallace was next. Bob got a ball, and then, to the surprise of everybody, Clark pitched a strike. The next three were balls, though, and Chance yanked his recruit southpaw with the record of one strike in seventeen tries.

About sunset, Chance sold him to Clark Griffith.

Clark's big league career dates back to the days when Chase was managing the New York team. Arthur Irwin tipped Chase off to the fact that Clark had worlds of stuff. Chase sent "King" Brockett out to Sioux City to look Clark over, and, on the "King's" favorable report, Chase signed the southpaw.

Clark, upon being brought to civilization, proved wild as a bat. He had more stuff than Marquard and less control than Lefty Russell. He was shifted around a bit. Last season, he started with Rochester and was then sent to the Northwestern League. He was a successful twirler there, despite the fact that he issued AN AVERAGE OF NEARLY A BASE ON BALLS TO AN INNING.

It is doubtful if the world has ever seen a man wilder than Clark in his wildest moments. But when he has control, they couldn't hit him with a fishnet.

Clark will be another case for the attention of Old Reliable Joe Dunn. The man will be put under Joe's coaching. Maybe, Joseph can make a pitcher out of him. Any time Clark starts and is right, it's all over. Any time he's wild—good evening.

DENT OR BRADY TO-DAY; LOCALS EXPECT TO WIN

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18.—Bill Smith is going to shoot King Brady or "Slight" Dent against the Pelicans to-day. And we win it sure!

Those chaps were lucky to "get by" yesterday. They found us worn out after an awful trip, they got to an injured pitcher and it was all off. And at that we stalled them along for ten innings. We'll get them to-day.

Conzelman didn't have the stuff yesterday he had before he was hurt. He had no control over his curve and his fast ball did not break as it used to.

We got away in front as usual, scoring three runs in the first inning. They came back at us for a tie in the second and went out ahead in the fourth. In the seventh they added another on a wild pitch. We tied it up in our half of the eighth on doubles by Alperman and Bisland and my single.

In the fatal tenth, with two gone, Angemeier's single scored Williams, who had walked, and the game was over.

We aren't in the least bothered by the loss of the game, even to the Pelicans. We have thirteen more on our trip. If we can break even we ask no more. Our long stay at home will give us the chance we want to win the pennant.

CUMMINGS BEATS THOMAS.

ANACONDA, MONT., July 18.—Dan Cummings, of Chicago, was given the decision over Young Joe Thomas, featherweight, at the end of twelve fast rounds of fighting last night.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY AT PONCE

At Ponce DeLeon park Saturday afternoon the two leading clubs of the Sunday School League will meet in a double-header. In the absence of Billy Smith's Crackers, fans in large numbers are expected to provide the best crowd of the Sunday school season for the Saturday afternoon games.

The First Baptist team, leading the league with twelve straight victories and no defeats, has been playing such ball as to attract sidewise glances from the pennant races of the larger leagues, and is determined to add two more wins Saturday. The S. V. D. club, in second place, with seven victories and three defeats, is equally determined to break up the winning streak of the Baptists. Both teams will be in classiest condition for the double-header Saturday, which is scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

SOUTH MICHIGAN TEAMS PLAY 20-INNING GAME

ADRIAN, MICH., July 18.—Battle Creek and Adrian, the leading teams in the Southern Michigan League, yesterday played twenty innings to a tie, each scoring one run before darkness ended the struggle. Manager Jenkins, of Adrian, in the fourth inning, singled, and advancing on a sacrifice hit and a passed ball, was scored on a sacrifice fly. Pitcher McDonald, of Battle Creek, tripled in the sixth and scored on an error. Loomis, Adrian's pitcher, struck out nineteen batters and issued one pass, purposely, in the twentieth inning. McDonald fanned sixteen and passed none.

Despite the fact that the Tigers whopped a few wallops into the Athletics, there is a deep suspicion that whopping the Athletics is not going to become a popular pastime.

Looking over the sport pages, we note that Larry Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues. This is a great truth. Mr. Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues.

The fact that Messrs. McAleer and Stahl have split reminds us that both denied it. The only conclusion to be drawn is that they were prevaricating, or didn't know it was loaded.

Reading over the papers, one notes that there are bulky fields at Porter. But as for bulky purses that's something else again.

TEN-ROUND GO SCHEDULED.

HOW TO ATTAIN GOLF BENEFITS TOLD BY EVANS

By "Chick" Evans.

IT is no doubt true that the majority of the golfers play simply for the exercise the game affords. Certainly golf furnishes an excellent opportunity for exercise, but it also supplies one of the finest studies in the world, and he who plays only for exercise misses half the pleasure. One can get a good deal of fun and exercise by just batting the ball around, yet surely much additional enjoyment can be found in attempting to discover the reasons that lie back of good or poor shots.

D. R. Forgan has said that "golf is the study of a lifetime," and this is undeniably true if one wishes to attain excellence. Every day the careful player can learn something about it and at the same time discover new obstacles to be overcome. It may be argued that the business man has no time to study a new game, but a little more care in playing would require but little more time.

There is a great pleasure in knowing how a thing is done, and no great progress can be made unless the underlying reasons for success are understood. Accidents happen, of course, and fortune is proverbially fickle, but she, like providence, is a little more inclined to help those who help themselves.

There is a great deal of good golf literature to be obtained at present, and I have no doubt a great deal of information can be obtained in that way. Personally, I have never read a book on golf except in the most casual manner, but I grew up on a golf links, and, at the observing age, learned my golf from observation. I believe strongly in books, however, and I think, if they are closely followed, they can be of much assistance to the beginner. This fall I intend to read as many golf books as I can lay my hands on, and I hope thereby to improve my game.

BRITTON REAL OPPONENT FOR TITLE HOLDER

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Not since the days when Frank Garrard and Martin Duffy, of this city, looked to be pretty fair championship material in the lightweight class have the local fight fans been so anxious to see a Chicagoan get a crack at the title. Neither Garrard nor Duffy ever made good in their day, but they were just as highly regarded along in the late 90s as are Jack Britton and Packey McFarland, present-day Chicago champions. Both Jack and Packey have a world of friends right here, and to say that they have their ears to the ground listening for some sort of a favorable report from the champion on the different propositions that have been hurled at him is putting it mildly.

* * *

PACKEY, while not issuing any direct challenges, has let it be made known to Ritchie that nothing would delight him more than to take him on in a 20-round contest, providing the weight bars be lowered just a little more, say another pound, letting the stock yards favorite in at 135 pounds, with the scaling done several hours in advance of the battle's start. With a foe of the McFarland caliber it is not likely that the champion will consent at all to any such an arrangement. He insisted upon 134 pounds for Rivers, and then trimmed the Los Angeles lad to the queen's taste, if queens have any particular taste in such matters. But from 134 pounds three hours or so before to 135 pounds five or six hours before is a vast gap that even the keen Ritchie eye is not likely to measure lightly.

* * *

BUT the Britton case is hugely different. Here is a boy who boldly flaunts this offer in the champion's face: "Make the weight, any figure that you choose," and then awaits the answer. Now, that leaves absolutely no loopholes for excuse or room for a single argument. Britton simply does not care what the poundage is, says so, and there rests his case. What will the answer be, to say nothing of the harvest?

* * *

NO sane man could ever accuse Willie Ritchie of cowardice. The man who jumped into the breach with Freddie Welch when Ad Wolgast was taken to the hospital and fought the English star almost to a standstill with but a few hours' notice, then whaled Ad Wolgast out of his title and went in and slugged with Joe Rivers at the latter's own game, is possessed, as Bill Naughton says, of a lion's heart. But Willie is a financier along with his other accomplishments and is not likely to enter into any contracts that do not promise the brightest of monetary returns. There isn't a doubt that if some promoter can see his way clear to offering the right sort of a prize for the champion he will lend himself to the match. Then we will see a real old-time battle between two of the greatest men that ever drew on a pair of gloves.

Pelky-Smith Battle For Sept. 1—Maybe

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Arthur Pelky and his manager, Tommy Burns, are in town. Pelky came here in quest of ring battles, and picked as his choice for first battle "Gunboat" Smith. Burns and his fighter held a long conference with Jimmy Coffroth, and if arrangements can be made Pelky and Smith will furnish the Labor Day card in this city. Pelky had little to say, Burns doing all the talking.

"There will be a general disposition to look upon Pelky as a ring accident, just as the people tagged Willie Ritchie as a false alarm," said Burns.

"This is a mistake. My man has had 33 fights without having had a decision given against him. He made Jess Willard quit cold, and he stopped Jim Barry in five rounds. All that he needs is the opportunity to prove that he is the best heavyweight boxer in the game to-day."

WISCONSIN BOXING BILL IS SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—Governor Francis McGovern has signed the Hedding boxing bill and the sport becomes legalized in Wisconsin the same as in New York State.

Governor McGovern had protests from many sources, but stated that he considered that in view of thousands of petitions in favor of the sport it was only just to the majority that they should be given a chance to show that boxing under proper conditions is much better than under no law at all.

It will now be up to the Governor to appoint a commission to handle the boxing game in the State.

SCHAEFER-GRAHAM DRAW.

DUBUQUE, IOWA, July 18.—Willie Schaefer, of Chicago, and Mike Graham, of Milwaukee, welterweights, last night fought ten fast rounds to a draw at the Riverside arena.

CLOVIS, N. MEX., July 18.—In a scheduled ten-round boxing bout staged in an open-air arena here last night, Carl Morris, of Oklahoma, knocked out Marty Cutler, a Chicago heavyweight, in the second round.

Dixie Handicap To Be Thriller

Six Men on Track at Once

IF they get through the Dixie Handicap at the Motordrome to-night without smearing a half-dozen riders all over the track they have pulled the race miracle of the year. For they are going to start six riders in this event, three of them with a lap lead over the other three. And the scratch men are going to try to catch the handicap men within four miles.

This affair will be a loud noise. Nothing can stop it. Every time they get four riders on the track at once it looks as though all of them were going to break their neck. With six on it in a handicap race, which will mean that three of the men must ride their bally heads off to catch the other three, there should be more excitement than the local Drome ever dreamed of before.

This will not be a team race, as might be judged from the description. Of course, the handicap men will team together at the start, as a means of keeping ahead. And the scratch men will hang together to lend each other a pace in their effort to catch up. But once the scratch men get within striking distance, it will be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. When the three pursuing riders reach the three handicap men and all six of them tie up in an effort to gain the leadership anything may happen. Of course, the handicap men will never give an inch. If they can spread all over the track they will do it. That means that the men coming from behind at 85 miles an hour must worm their way through.

This will unquestionably be a big race. It will be fast because the scratch men must overcome a quarter of a mile lead in four miles. It will be dangerous and sensational of necessity because six men will be on the track at one time. And the winner is surely hard to pick.

The full program follows:

Motordrome Purse.

(2-mile heats, 2-mile final.)

First Heat—Graves, Renel, Shields.
Second Heat—McNeil, Lockner, Lewis.
Third Heat—Richards, Swartz, Luther, Glenn.
Final—Two miles.

(2-mile heats, 3-mile final.)

First Heat—McNeil, Swartz, Luther, Lewis.
Second Heat—Richards, Graves, Renel.
Third Heat—Lockner, Shields, Glenn.
Final—Three miles.

Invitation Race.

Luther, Lewis, Swartz and Glenn.

Dixie Handicap.

Handicap Men—Renel, Lockner, Shields (one lap handicap.)
Handicap Men—Richards, Graves, McNeil.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Chicago boxing critics are working hard these days trying to force Willie Ritchie into a match with either Packey McFarland or Jack Britton. Both boys hail from the Windy City and have met practically every boy of note during the past two years.

* * *

Frank Whitney is certainly reaping in the dough these days. The Cedar Rapids "fighting carpenter" will take on Rudy Unholz in a scheduled 10-round battle at Denver on Friday night, and it is a pretty safe bet that Frankie will get at least as good as a draw. During the past six months Whitney has had nearly a dozen battles.

* * *

Many fans are picking Matty Baldwin to prove a stumbling block for Leach Cross when the air exchange blows at Los Angeles on July 29. Although Matty has fought nearly 300 fights he has still to suffer his first knockout. He also holds a 20-round verdict over Willie Ritchie.

* * *

Kid Julian, the Syracuse featherweight, has accepted terms to meet Cal Delaney, of Cleveland, in a 12-round bout at Cleveland on July 26. Both boys are lightweights.

* * *

Charles Ledoux, the French bantamweight champion, is in bad shape from the beating handed him by Kid Williams at Los Angeles the early part of this week. It may be months before the game boy from across the pond will be able to don the gloves again.

* * *

Jim Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is to make his next fight against Freddie Hicks at Butte, Mont., on August 2. The pair are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Steve Ketchel, the tough little lightweight from Chicago, added another victory to his list Wednesday night by defeating Phil Knight. The former was awarded the battle in the seventh round on a foul. Incidentally, Knight has been barred from boxing at Butte, Mont., for six months.

* * *

John Alex, the local fight manager, has matched his lightweight, Tom Brown, to meet some boy at Marietta, Ga., the latter part of this month. The bout is to be staged as the semi-wind-up to the Terry Nelson-Seymore set-to. John is a busy boy these days getting his protege into shape.

* * *

Young Denny, the New Orleans welterweight, has already started training for his 20-round engagement with "Wildcat" Ferns at the Pelican City on Labor Day. He is boxing daily with Joe Thomas.

* * *

Kid Brooks, local bantamweight, is still waiting to hear from some boy of his poundage in regard to a match. He is particularly anxious to hear from either Meyer Pries or Kid Duke.

* * *

The next big bout to be staged in New York will be a 10-round engagement between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn on August 8. Flynn is at present in Denver, but reports from the Colorado city state that he will leave for the battle ground some time next week.

The first leaders are M. L. Wise, of Marysville, Pa.; George M. Howell, Northumberland, Pa.; R. A. Hall, Macon, Ga., each with a score of 95 out of a possible 100. The tournament will be concluded to-day.

COACH J. W. HEISMAN, OF YELLOW JACKETS, WRITES ABOUT:

Ball Players That Tech Has Turned Out

By J. W. Heisman.

SO many college players are breaking into professional ball these days, and so many of them with great success, that the thing no longer occasions the surprise and comment that used to ensue. Something like 25 years ago, when I was attending a New England college, I can remember with what dumbfoundment we learned one day that one of our varsity players had received an offer from Boston. It tickled us nearly to death!

* * *

Among Southern colleges, Tech early took the lead in this respect by sending the great Henley straight to the big show. Unless my memory fails me badly, it was to the Athletics that Henley went, and it was about thirteen years ago. Even at that early date, when hardly any other professional managers would look at a college player, Connie Mack had his eyes wide open as to their possible usefulness.

When Henley first went to Tech he played first base, and he played it well. He was about 6 feet 1 inch tall, but very slender. His arms were very strong, and he had a fine free shoulder swing. Rather a handsome chap, this Henley, and a good, jovial fellow. Came from the little hamlet of Jasper, I believe, in North Georgia, the section that also sent Craig Day and DeWitt Poole to Tech—two other awfully good players and pitchers, who, however, never went into professional ball.

After seevral years of usefulness in the big league Henley was sent to the Rochester club, where he put in a couple more years of good work. But for some reason, his health was steadily failing him and finally he had to give it up. Just where he is to-day, I can not say. I know he went to Florida for a while in search of improved health, and perhaps he found it; at least we all hope so.

At the time Weldon was at the zenith of his glory as a college pitcher, Mercer was turning out some exceedingly strong teams. Their mainstay on the mound was the unforgotten Will Gunn, now a successful architect in Macon. It will have to be given up that Gunn was some gun himself when it came to making a noise like a pitcher, and endless were the arguments of that day in rah rah circles as to which was the better. I am not going into a history of the friendly feud, but it is worth observing that when the two teams finally did face each other at old Brisbine Park, with their respective stars down on the score card to do the hurling, there was some crowd present to witness the ceremonies, and some little excitement was had. The game was won by Tech; score, 30 to 0.

* * *

ANOTHER great picher that Tech turned out about the same time that Henley was absorbing all the limelight, was little Jimmy Lavendar, now with the Chicago Cubs. It would perhaps be more correct to say that Tech turned Jimmy out, or that it turned out an engineer, not that it turned out another pitcher, for at that time, Jimmy didn't play ball at all, at least he never went out for the varsity; and so it is merely an accident that his youthful career was in any way associated with Tech's.

Lavendar was born and reared in South Georgia. He had seen a picture or two of a baseball before coming to Tech, but didn't care enough for the game to even come out and try for the team. It was after leaving Tech that his acquaintance with the pellet grew into a thing of beauty; and, after slamming the sphere around corner lots for a short time, it was found that Jimmy had the makings of a really, truly pitcher.

It was while doing stellar work with the Providence team of the Eastern League that Lavendar attracted Chicago's attention. Now, Jimmy is one of the "its" of the Cubs, and promises to remain one for some years yet.

* * *

TWO Atlanta boys attending Tech were the next to break into the professional class, and they both made good from the jump. One of these was Sam Woodward, the other, Jim Ison. The former was captain and catcher of my 1904 Tech team, while Jim was official first-sacker of the same aggregation.

Woodward was rather small for a catcher, but he had plenty of nerve, heaps of judgment, always kept cool, had a fine arm, was quick as a cat, and made a fine lead-off man, as he batted from the port side. Sam's favorite word of encouragement to his pitchers—Poole, Day and Butler—was "Beauty" after every pitched ball, but each time in a different intonation and with varying inflection and accents—and this quite regardless, in my opinion, of whether the ball was really a beauty or a pumpkin.

Sam went to the Cotton States with Bernie McCay, where he played fine ball; but a blow on the head by a pitched ball came near to putting out his light. It took him quite a long time to recover. Later, Sam went to the Carolina League, and for several seasons managed the Anderson, S. C. club with signal success. He is now engaged in business in Atlanta and is making a success of life as president of the Woodward Electric Company.

By the way, during the college season of 1904, Sam caught every inning of every game without making a single error, and I gave him All-Southern catcher for it.

Jim Isom was one of the hardest-hitting first basemen I ever saw in college ranks. He was a godd, willing, cheery, all-around player and my clean-up man, which was some distinction with a team that had five men on its roster all batting over .400.

I forget what professional team Jim first joined, but he never had any trouble holding his berth right from the jump. He played several very successful seasons with Macon, where he again stung the pill hard, and he also starred in the Virginia League at second base for the Richmond club. Here he was an even better fielder than at first base.

Jimmy found an opportunity to go into a lucrative business here in Atlanta several years ago and decided to give up the game for good, though it cost him a pang or two to do so. Now, he is fat, happy and making money in the Gate City.

Later, I will tell of some other players Tech has turned out.

HAUSER GOES TO HOSPITAL.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 18.—Shortstop Hauser, of the St. Louis National baseball team, is on his way to Baltimore, where he will be operated on by Dr. William S. Baer, of Johns Hopkins Hospital. It is said that the player has a misplaced cartilage in his right knee.

MEEHAN BESTS MANTELL.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 18.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here. By constant clinching in the last round Mantell saved himself from being knocked out.

COBB BACK TO-DAY.

DETROIT, MICH., July 18.—President Ban Johnson announced that Ty Cobb, suspended recently for an argument with Umpire Hildebrand, will be back in the game to-day.

Best Bet Is to Play Champions

Title Holders Have Big Shade

By Left Hook.

HERE'S a little tip for the men who bet good con on the results of encounters in the boxing arena. Never stop betting on a champion of any class until he has been beaten. The suggestion of such a theme for a little fighting story is brought up by the manner in which the Joe Rivers supporters lost so heavily on the Los Angeles boy in his battle with Willie Ritchie, in San Francisco, July 4. Incidentally, the idea of it was brought out forcibly by some remarks that Battling Nelson made the day after the holiday while the famous iron man of the lightweight class was discussing results and congratulating himself on having picked six out of seven winners after having bet personally on three of them and failing to get down on the one loser that he picked.

* * *

IT is a foolish thing to bet against a champion, even if you don't like him personally and haven't such a high opinion of his fistic merits, because, according to Bat Nelson, champions always win a lot of battles in a row after they attain the title and have a big natural shade in all of their contests. The argument is a sound one, because champions, after annexing titles, do not make the kind of matches that they can not win—and they know they can win them when they make them. Mind you, this is not an intimation that there is anything wrong or any skulduggery practiced by any of them. But the average champion is a pretty wise sort of a gink. He knows that to keep a title is to make plenty of money. Hence, he figures with the greatest of care, and when finally he signs to battle, it's about 3 to 1 that he is going to win.

* * *

AND another thing worth figuring is that referees have natural leanings toward champions and don't take titles away from them without the very best of cause. Which is a mighty strong point in favor of the champion when he starts into action. But, of course, the strongest point of all is the fact, borne out by many a precedent, that champions almost always win a bunch of fights before being compelled to resign the top rung of the ladder.

Provides Separate Cars in Cities of Over 20,000—Smith Verdict Bill Passed.

By a vote of 28 to 12 the Georgia Senate Friday morning passed Senator Smith's bill providing for verdicts and judgments at the appearance term of city and superior courts upon suits on unconditional contracts and verified accounts.

When President Anderson called for an yea-and-nay vote Senator Watts of the Eleventh, proposed an amendment providing that "should the boll weevil strike Georgia no debt of any kind shall be collected within ten years thereafter." The amendment was thrown out amid laughter.

The most important bill introduced in the Senate Friday morning was one by Senator Kea of the Sixteenth requiring all street railway companiese in cities of more than 20,000 inhabitants to furnish separate cars for white and negro passengers and in cities of less than 20,000 inhabitants to furnish separate compartments.

Nominations Confirmed.

Senator Sweat of the Fifth introduced a bill providing for the authorization of the execution of a lost or destroyed deed to be proved as to land in any county in which recorded.

The Senate in executive session concurred unanimously in the following nominations by the Governor:

Miller S. Bell to be a member of the board of directors of the Georgia Normal and Industrial College for six years, from January 6, 1914, for Baldwin County.

Ben M. Turnipseed to be judge of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 29, 1913.

P. S. King to be Solicitor of the City Court of Fort Gaines for two years, from August 27, 1913.

S. L. Drawdy to be judge of the County Court of Clinch County for four years, from October 28, 1913.

Local bills were passed by the Senate as follows:

By Elkins of the Fifteenth, amending an act creating the charter of the City Court of Fitzgerald.

By Bush of the Eighth, amending an act incorporating the town of Colquitt.

By Sweat of the Fifth, amending an act creating a Board of Road Commissioners for Ware County.

By Parrish of the Seventh, amending an act creating the City Code of Statesboro.

The Educational Committee reported favorably on the free kindergarten bill, which probably will come up for passage in the House Monday.

Mediation Board Head a Georgian; Well Known Here

WASHINGTON, July 18.—President Wilson has selected William L. Chambers, of the District of Columbia, to be commissioner of mediation and counciliation, under the Newlands act, and G. W. Hanger as his assistant. Their names will be sent to the Senate to-day.

The other two members of the new board will be Judge Martin Knapp, of the United States Commerce Court, and Louis F. Post, Assistant Secretary of Labor.

William Lea Chambers is a native Georgian and well remembered in Atlanta as presiding judge last fall in the arbitration under the Erdman act of the Georgia Railroad strike.

Judge Chambers was born at Columbus March 4, 1852, and received his education at Emory College, Oxford, from which institution he received an honorary LL.D. degree in 1909 in recognition of diplomatic and scholarly attainments. He taught school two years and was admitted to the bar in 1873. He married Laura Ligon Clopton, daughter of Justice David Clopton, of the Supreme Court of Alabama.

In 1888 Judge Chambers was president of the First National Bank of Montgomery, Ala., when he removed to Northern Alabama to head the association which founded Sheffield.

Judge Chambers was the American member of the commission under the Berlin treaty of 1890 between Germany, England and the United States; Chief Justice of the International Court of Samoa; was on the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission, and is a member of the Alabama Historical Society, the Archaeological Institute of America and the National Geographic Society, etc.

Battle for Painter Organs Continues

BALTIMORE, July 18.—Today's session of the fight in the Circuit Court for the possession of the viscera of the late E. O. Painter, of Jacksonville, was taken up by efforts by employees of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, to show that representatives of that company had not been permitted to be present when the analysis of the organs of Painter was made.

It is likely that the case will continue for some time before Judge Duffy can hand down a decision on the petition of the guaranty company, in which the deceased was insured for $20,000, that a receiver be appointed for his vital organs.

SMALL INVESTOR CAN BUY FIRM BONDS NOW

B. C. Forbes Points Out Advantage Paper in Denomination of $10 Gives to All.

By B. C. FORBES.

The small investor of to-day, if wisely guided, will be a larger investor to-morrow, since Money makes money.

* * *

In America poor people have lost shamefully through being allured into gilded traps by unscrupulous promoters and "brokers." Swindling has cost the unwary upward of $200,000,000 in one year. It has been checked to some extent. The dissemination of correct information by newspapers and magazines has helped. The postal authorities have queered a good many clever games. In some States laws have been passed to severely punish stock swindlers and their kind.

* * *

The issuance of high-grade securities in small denominations has contributed invaluably to driving out fake stuff. There is to-day no need for even the smallest investor turning to worthless stocks and bonds, for he or she can buy the best in as low as $10 quantities. This development is of far-reaching importance.

* * *

Discussing the investment opportunities now within reach in the current issue of Hearst's Magazine, I point out:

"You can now buy $10 bonds.

"New York City has taken the lead in bringing the highest grade of security within reach of the most modest purse. The results that will flow from this innovation can not be fully grasped. It should, and probably will, mean that Americans, like the French, will become a nation of thrifty investors. In France the peasants can buy safe bonds of very small denomination, but in lordly, opulent, big-scale America nothing less than $1,000 bonds used to be issued, so indifferent to small investors were our railroads, our industrial corporations and our other large borrowers.

* * *

"So keen, however, has become the strugile for capital all over the world that even the proudest applicants for funds—governments, States, municipalities, railroad systems and trusts—are anxious to cater to those who have saved, not thousands, but hundreds or even tens of dollars. Of late $100 bonds have come into vogue.

* * *

"And now New York City is making a specialty of $10 bonds. Their yield is about 4 1-2 per cent.

* * *

"Now, 4 1-2 per cent is more than savings banks pay, and the risk is absolutely negligible. While those whose nestegg is very tiny can not do better than place it in a strong, carefully managed savings bank, the advisability of buying a good bond should be seriously considered by those who have accumulated several hundred dollars or more. On $1,000 the difference between 3 1-2 per cent and 4 1-2 per cent is $10 every year Not much, do you say?

* * *

"The difference in twenty years, at compound interest, would lay the foundation for a nice savings account for your son or daughter. One thousand dollars at 4 1-2 per cent compound interest become $2,000 in less than sixteen years, whereas money at 3 1-2 per cent takes more than twenty years to double itself. And remember that thrift begets thrift. Just as 'nothing succeeds like success,' nothing stimulates saving like saving. You can not begin a day too soon. The Government one day may imitate European nations by adopting old age pensions, but what self-respecting, healthy person would compare the satisfaction to be derived from his own savings with the feeling that would accompany a dole from the national purse?

* * *

"The buyer of one bond wants to obtain another as soon as he possibly can. Two $100 bonds paying 3 1-2 per cent bring $9 a year. Five paying 5 per cent—as many sound bonds do—net $25 each year, and, of course, this $25 interest helps to get another bond.

* * *

"The investor buys for income.

"The speculator buys for fluctuations in quotations.

"The investor seeks to avoid risk.

"The speculator 'takes a chance.'

"The investor in a safe bond is not hurt by temporary declines in the market price; his income is sure as long as the bond runs, and he can get full face value for it when it matures.

"The speculator's profits are not limited. He buys for possibilities and changes.

"Investment should be practiced by all persons of ordinary means.

* * *

"Speculation should be left to those who can afford to incur risks and to lose money, to those who have special opportunities for gathering and analyzing basic information, to those whose regular duties do not call for much time or thought—for speculation is insidious; it excites, it enervates, it distracts attention from other matters, it often unbalances judgment, it sometimes develops into a mania and ends in disaster. 'There are two classes of people who should not speculate,' said a wise man—'those who can afford it and those who can't.'"

Slays Rich Husband By Light of Match

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—The mystery in the death of Manuel E. DeValle, wealthy ranch owner, who was found dead in bed Wednesday, was cleared to-day. Mrs. Mary E. DeValle confessed that she killed her husband. She said:

"My husband lay on the bed jabbering in a drunken stupor. I could see him faintly by the half light of the moon. I lighted a match and walked until I was within a foot of him. Then I lighted another match, aimed my revolver and fired."

House Kills Inquiry Into Caminetti Case

WASHINGTON, July 18.—By a vote of 123 to 84, the House to-day tabled the Kahn resolution for an inquiry into the postponement of the Diggs-Caminetti white slave cases without allowing debate.

On a vote by tellers, the House favored tabling the Kahn resolution, 99 to 75, but Minority Leader Mann, starting a filibuster, secured a roll call.

Thursday's 97 Mark For Heat Threatened

With a record temperature of 83 degrees at 8 o'clock, as registered by he official thermometer, Friday promises to go Thursday one better along heat lines. According to all signs, Thursday's high mark of 97 degrees probably will be broken by at least one degree.

The weather man says there is little prospect of rain for several days.

War Veteran Sued For Balm by Girl, 16

PATERSON, N. J., July 18.—Miss Emma Mahanney, 16, has sued John Wolf, 70, a war veteran, for breach of promise.

Miss Mahanney's counsel said the couple became engaged and were making arrangements for the wedding when Wolf changed his mind. Miss Mahanney asks for $25,000.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Wheat traders regarded the market last night as a sale on all bulges. Speculation has dropped off some, however, and many traders think the market is in no condition to stand any heavy selling. Many of the local speculators are bullish on oats and bearish on corn. It was noticeable, however, that comparatively little new outside buying is coming into oats because of their recent slump when the trade was long, forcing out a large number of holders.

"Specialists believe that oats at present prices have merit."

* * *

Chicago drizzling rain, 68 degrees; Minneapolis clear, 68; Peoria clear, 76; no rain; Terre Haute clear, 80; Springfield clear, 78; no rain; Omaha drizzling, 70; half-hour good rain this morning; Kansas City, St. Louis, 85.

* * *

St. Paul wires: "The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, this morning says prospects in Minnesota for abundant harvest of all grains are excellent, according to D. A. Woods, of the Minnesota State University. He says the crops were not injured by the recent rains. He thinks the crop yield as a whole will average up about same as last year. Corn crop will be much larger."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co., says:

"Wheat—Map shows further rains in spring wheat country, with temperatures about the same as yesterday. It looks as though we might have a little lower market to-day.

"Corn—Temperatures east of the River are generally lower, but no rains reported in Illinois, except immediate vicinity of Chicago. Kansas City and St. Louis again show high temperatures, but it is cooler in Nebraska, with light rain at Omaha this morning. Look for lower market to-day, but would not press sales on decline.

"Oats—Market is showing steadier undertone, with moderate increase in outside buying.

"Provisions—Commission houses seem to have more buying orders, the selling being chiefly in way of profit-taking. Market continues very firm."

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "Corn prospects along Illinois Central, Chicago to St. Louis, very much mixed, but general average is poor. Kankakee to Farmer City good; thence to Springfield spotted, and south of Springfield poor; plenty of moisture to Farmer City, but from there south alternate streaks of rain and drouth.

"Tassel just beginning to show in few earliest fields, but growth will not average more than hip high, and south of Springfield there are thousands of acres not knee high. Oats harvest begun; best fields below average and crop is poorest in years."

* * *

The market was oversold and local crowd is covering short wheat. Slaughtee cable reports political complications in Austria and Russia and bad crops from England.

* * *

Carmi, Ill., to St. Louis, country very dry. Average corn promise in the poor counties and very good near St. Louis.

* * *

The thrashing reports on oats coming pretty bad and we believe it would be good judgment to at least cover and stay off the short side for a while.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.

MODERN MILLER CROP REVIEW.

ST. LOUIS, July 18.—The winter wheat harvest is rapidly nearing completion under most favorable weather conditions. Reports of delayed harvesting are fewer than usual, and with the exception of occasional complaints of smut the quality of the wheat is practically perfect. The grain generally is of high order, not only as far as condition is concerned, but also in regard to flour-making qualities, the soft wheat especially yielding well.

Fields in the hard wheat territory continue better than has been expected and the crop, as a result, will be larger than has been estimated. There continues to be free marketing of wheat as it is thrashed and the grain is well taken care of, millers buying liberally.

The export demand for both wheat and flour has developed.

STRONG SOURCES ADVANCE COTTON

Report of Deterioration in Texas and Bullish Mill Takings Frighten Shorts.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Influenced by weak cables and a bearish report by Cordill concerning conditions in Southwest Texas, the cotton market opened easy to-day, and first prices were unchanged to 3 points lower than Thursday's final. There was some covering on the decline by board room traders who went short on continued dry weather in Texas. This class of buying caused prices to advance 1 to 7 points from the initial level, with the exception of July and August, which increased their decline 2 to 4 points.

After the call, however, the entire list steadied with prices firmly maintained at the early high point. The strength of the market was chiefly attributed to some private reports from Texas indicating some deterioration in the crop; also Habersham King's review for the week, saying the crop was favorable over 80 per cent of the area and unfavorable over 10 per cent and injurious as to the remaining 10 per cent. The circular was more bearish than bullish, but the local shorts covered.

During the late forenoon the market was quiet and featureless.

The talk around the floor to-day reflected a decidedly more cheerful feeling with reference to legislative prospects. The weather map was considered favorable.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Liverpool is droopy in futures and spots, the latter being quoted 3 points lower; sales only 6,000 bales.

Some scattered showers occurred over night in the lower central States, and the Atlantic Coast districts had some good rains; generally fair weather prevailed elsewhere, with little change in the range of temperatures. Indications are more favorable for some precipitation in West Texas, while increasing cloudiness and scattered showers are indicated for the territory east of the Mississippi River.

Several private reports from Texas say that old holdings are showing up on platforms, but that holders are not yet selling, owing to New York promises of high July-August squeeze prices. In respect to the present anxiety in regard to dry weather in Texas; it will be fours' interesting to know that Government records show that last year Texas had practically no rain from June 29 to August 29, whereas this year, Texas had a fine general rainfall up to July 5.

First trades here were at a decline of 3 points, but advices from New York of large buying by McFadden brokers soon rallied the market to 11.53 for October. There was a rumor that Fall River had cotton ready for delivery in New York and that a block of cotton was being shipped from Memphis for delivery here, but neither rumor has been confirmed so far.

The market is very steady with an eye on the weather in the West.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 18.—Dry map seems responsible for the advance to-day. Central Texas reports no damage from drouth, but that rain is beginning to be needed, which seems sufficient in present limited market to cause small advance. Liverpool for the past two days was less active in spot sales and lower on futures, but American trade seems fearful that after so much good weather something is likely to happen.

PAY $9.60 FOR HOGS.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Another rung of the ladder was mounted by the hog market when $9.60 was paid for shipping grades. The stereotyped 5 to 10c advance was recorded and only trash had to sell under the 9c line. Eastern demand is setting the pace. Eleven markets had 68,000, against 66,000 last week. Cattle trade was nominally steady on a light run, but trade in the sheep house was demoralized, owing to heavy receipts direct to packers from the Ohio River.

Wool Beginning to Move More Freely

BOSTON, July 18.—New territory wools are beginning to move a little more freely both in and out of this market. Total sales the past week have been well over a million pounds, involving Territory and Texas wools, with a little California and foreign grades.

Fleeces remain very quiet, both here and in the country. Most of the Western buying is being done in Montana, where the bulk of the unsold Territory wool is now to be found. The London auction sales closed firm on fine wools and easy on crossbreeds. Indications are that England and the Continent are to have less active markets in the near future.

Until something more definite is known as to the terms of the new tariff bill when finally passed, no material improvement in sentiment or volume of sales is likely.

Receipts of wool in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	9,751,818	11,515,366
Foreign	395,150	1,151,350
Totals	10,146,968	12,666,716

Total receipts of 10,146,968 pounds, compared with 5,473,847 the preceding week, of which 5,042,642 were domestic wools.

Receipts in pounds from and including January 1, 1913, as compared with the corresponding period in 1912, were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	63,359,193	103,693,671

COTTON GOSSIP

Market dormant.

* * *

The volume of business transacted yesterday was perhaps the smallest of any day this year. Both elements are afraid to push their commitments in such a quiet market.

* * *

Boll weevil and the small stock of cotton is still discussed by the bulls.

* * *

Spot brokers are quoted with saying that the fear of a cotton tax is already diverting hedging business from this market to Liverpool.

* * *

Valdosta, Ga.: "Lowndes County has had good weather all along and crops are in the best condition they have ever been at this season of the year. Reports from some of the counties indicate that the drouth has done much damage to corn, but the cotton crop is in very good condition."

* * *

Texas City, Tex.: "Preparations are under way for the handling through Texas City next season of the largest movement of cotton the new port has ever enjoyed. It is conservatively estimated that in view of the large crop in prospect Texas City will handle in excess of 1,000,000 bales. This season to date 666,851 bales have been received and receipts to August 31, the end of the present cotton year, will probably bring the total near to 750,000 bales."

* * *

Taylor, Tex.: "With only a hundred or more bales of the 1912-1913 season's crop of cotton still remaining in the hands of producers of this section of Williamson County, the total local receipts of cotton at Taylor to date are 35,209 bales since the first day of last August. Ginners are overhauling their plants for the opening of the new season, beginning August 1. The first bales of the new crop are expected here about that time."

* * *

Reports to The Montgomery Advertiser last week indicated that as a whole the crop in Alabama looks well. Some sections report lack of rain. Where there has been rainfall, and there has been rain over the greater part of the State, cotton is reported in excellent condition, although the plant is reported late and much behind the growth expected for this time of the year.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows generally fair, except cloudy in lower central belt, parts of Alabama, Atlantic Coast. Scattered showers in Alabama and Mississippi and some good rains in Atlantic Coast districts. No rain in west. Temperatures about normal. Indications are far more favorable to a break in the dry spell in the west over Sunday. Increasing cloudiness, with some showers over the central and eastern belt.

Fort Worth, Tex., wires: "Our San Antonio agency says, 'Boll weevil danger minimized by heat spell. Little actual damage done. Crop looks splendid. Movement starts August 1, unless rain interferes.'"

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Temperatures were not excessively high, but no rain was promised for the west, and talent and trade continued to show some concern over the Texas and Oklahoma weather. On the other hand, the Mexican situation loomed larger in the public eye as a possible source of international complications and Europe's confidence in lower prices for the raw material, to follow the announcement of prohibitive legislation, is directed against future trading in America, seemed on the increase.

"As a matter of fact, the scope and the volume of the protest being made by the South against the Clarke amendment had some effect on the Washington lawmakers, in spite of the refusal of many Senators to listen to anybody who desired to oppose any part of the caucus program. Meanwhile, very few actual damage reports are coming from the west, although advices relating to prospective damage to result from the hot, dry weather are numerous.

"Big crop people say that such weather is against the weevil, and is otherwise beneficial in that it promotes better maturity. On the whole, however, most crop accounts are favorable. The market is now merely awaiting the new crop movement, when many traders believe new conditions will bring a readjustment. July is still well taken care of and no cotton is going begging anywhere in America."

Habersham King in his latest report says consider developments of the week highly favorable to Arkansas, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama quite favorable; as to Texas, North Carolina, most of Georgia, and portion of South Carolina unfavorable, though not injuriously so, as to Oklahoma and injuriously dry and hot in portions of eastern and middle Georgia, and all of South Carolina, except the Piedmont section. Briefly, should say favorable to 80 per cent unfavorable to 10 per cent, and injurious to 10 per cent of the belt.

GENERAL BUYING PUTS STOCKS UP

Possibilities of Big Advance in Near Future on Crop Prospects Causes Buying.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Canadian Pacific and New York, New Haven and Hartford were leaders of an upturn which involved a number of issues at the opening of the stock market to-day. Each scored a gain of 1⅞, although Canadian Pacific shaded at the end of half an hour.

Announcement of the resignation of President Mellen, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, apparently imparted strength to the stock instead of detracting from it.

The Mexican situation and continued hostilities in the Balkans furnished the bears with ammunition and a considerable section of the list was lower.

Among the advances were Amalgamated Copper, ¾; American Can, ½; Union Pacific, ¾; Southern Pacific, ⅜; Reading, ⅞; Pennsylvania ⅜, and American Smelting ⅝. The losses include New York Central, ⅛; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Chino Copper ⅛, and Great Northern preferred ⅛. United States Steel common was strong, opening at 5¾ for a gain of ¾. Half an hour after the opening the list was strong, and an unusually large number of buying orders being executed. Later there was some profit-taking.

California and Mexican Petroleum were weak. California Petroleum sustained a loss of 3½ on reports that the dividends would be interrupted. Mexican Petroleum lost 2½ on account of the uncertainty surrounding conditions in Mexico.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were steady.

After the first fifteen minutes trading became similar to Thursday's dealings, most of the business being on the buying side.

Steel moved up more than 1 point and Southern Pacific rose 1 point to 93. Union Pacific, although the heaviest seller, lost its early gain of 1 point. Copper was up 1 point to 66¾, and the same advances were recorded in Utah, Canadian Pacific and Lehigh Valley. California Petroleum experienced another decline, yielding 1¾ to 21¾. Call money loaned at 2¼.

STOCK GOSSIP

The stock market should show some improvement to-day and Saturday, as the news seems favorable. The investment demand for stocks is gradually increasing and it looks to me pretty safe to buy the dividend-paying railroad issues on recessions.

The demand for copper metal has shown a marked improvement this week and all of the copper stocks should do better. Also keep long of Union Pacific and Reading.—G. D. Potter.

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Trading movements in the leading issues, with tendencies toward specialty improvement, may be seen to-day. There is a more cheerful and friendly feeling toward the market. We would buy the good stocks conservatively where favorable opportunities are presented. Moderate profits should appeal to the daily trader.

"Information channels favor a trading position."

* * *

Strength in Amalgamated Copper during the past few days was probably for two good reasons. It is expected that the regular quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent will be declared. In addition to this, there was the statement of copper supplies in Europe. The foreign visible stock of the metal has shrunk 2,000,000 pounds in the last two weeks, which means that foreign consumers have renewed their purchases of the metal. Producers are optimistic, however, because they think that domestic consumers will be coupled to follow the example of the foreign trade and purchase copper.

* * *

Wall Street operators are more cheerful than they have been for some time past. This is explainer by the upward movement of prices. For months after months they have met with nothing but disappointments, which disgusted every trader and the market fell dormant. However, good promises for a big corn yield and cotton, together with fancy earnings by railroads and corporations, has put new life in them, with the result of an active trading market.

Charles S. Mellen resigned as president of the New Haven and all subsidiaries at a full meeting of the board late Thursday. No action is taken, however, on the resignation, but another meeting will be held to-day.

Wheat—No. 2 red	84 @85
Corn—No. 2	64 @64½
Oats—No. 2	40½

CHICAGO, July 18.—A big export demand in wheat resulted in a reaction and an advance of nearly 1c from the bottom prices reached. Final gains for the day were ¼c to ½c. Only fifteen boat loads were reported by the Atlantic seaboard.

St. Louis reported a re-sale there of 110,000 bushels by an exporter, but the particulars were not given. Shorts were the principal buyers as the day wore away and there was a noticeable sprinkling of investment buying as well. Clearances from the seaboard were 307,000 bushels. World's shipments will be 10,000,000 bushels for the week, which is 700,000 bushels smaller than a year ago. Clearances for the week, 3,660,000 bushels of wheat, against less than half that amount a year ago.

Corn closed with advances of ½c to ⅝c and oats were up ½c to ⅝c.

Provisions were 5c to 10c higher.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Plan Now for Next Winter's Food Supply

Get Good, Wholesome Variety Needed in Cold Months, While Not Scarce.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

If you are not already planning, I would advise you to begin now to get some of next winter's food supply for the chickens on the way. While few fowls are ever starved, there are a good many that do not get the good and wholesome variety that they are needing, especially in the cold months, when green stuff is rather scarce. Wheat, oats and corn make the bulk of the food supply for the average farm stock, and it is a good ration, if properly handled and heated up at times, such as parching the corn and browning the oats, etc., but it is the rough-and-ready foodstuff that we want to speak of. As I shall want to speak largely of the root crops, and they need to be kept in a cool place, I shall advise the use of a cellar. Throughout the Northern States, cellars are the rule, rather than the exceptions, under all houses built on the farms. These are usually divided into two compartments, one for the keeping of milk and the other for the storing of vegetables and root crops of various kinds. Upon large farms, where there is a lot of stock kept, the barn is often built upon a side hill with a cellar under a part of it for the storing of stock beets, cabbage and all kinds of vegetables that can be used for the stock in winter. These cellars keep them from freezing in winter and keep them cool in summer so they will not spoil. Of course, they are not put into the cellar until the latter part of the summer. Throughout the South these cellars are a novelty, as a rule. I wish they could become more common. Of course, it is not always practical to build them under the dwelling house after it is built, but one can fix up a very good one by using refuse stone, where it can be had, and digging into the side of a hill, walling with the stone, letting it set into the ground as much as possible to make it cooler; the door, or opening, to be on the low side of the cellar. All of it should be roofed with a good, double or lined roof, something that will keep out the great heat of the sun.

With a root cellar of this kind upon your place, you are in a position to take care of all kinds of good tubers and vegetables of various kinds that might otherwise go to waste and be of no benefit in any way. It is not too late to plant the large sugar or stock beets if the ground is well prepared; thoroughly fine and very deep, so that they can take right hold and grow without difficulty. Then there is the rutabaga turnip that will make a good crop late in the season, which is a good keeper as well as the heavy beet. Small heads of cabbage that are not marketable, when put into small hampers that will admit of a circulation of air, can be kept a long while in the cellar.

The short parts of clover or alfalfa, leaves, etc., should all be saved and stored in a dry place in the barn for the poultry in winter. A lot of large gunny sacks come in very handy for this work, as this stuff can be crowded into these sacks where they are easily handled and taken care of until wanted. With a good, rich piece of ground a nice crop of buckwheat can be raised, if planted right now; it matures quickly and makes a grain that the hens are very fond of late in the fall and winter when fed with corn. Plant a good variety of all the vegetable crops, for there are very few of them that the hens do not relish and are ready to take care of the surplus or refuse parts of them. Onions are another good crop, and one that will keep well in this root cellar, and they are a regular tonic for the hens in winter and are very much relished by them. Take care of every one of them. Let us wake up to the possibilities of these crops and the proper handling of them, as indicated. The taking care of these apparently insignificant things and turning them to account will be largely responsible for the per cent of profit that we will make from our poultry during the coming year. Others take advantage of these things to good account; why not you?

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Permit Is Sought For Whitehall Plant

C. H. Johnson Will Build Manufactory—Small Sales Recorded—Crowd Due at Realty Election.

Signs point to early activity on Whitehall street as a wholesale and manufacturing thoroughfare south of Trinity avenue. Application was made Friday to Building Inspector Ed R. Hays by C. H. Johnson to construct a two-story reinforced concrete building at No. 757 Whitehall, to cost $10,000. May & Wimbish are the contractors. The ground floor dimensions are 75 by 100 feet.

Builders who expected to put wholesale houses on lower Whitehall are holding up somewhat because of the Whitehall regrading project, but the manufacturers seeking railroad frontage farther south are going ahead.

Interesting Deed Given.

John W. White, administrator of the estate of Charles M. White, has given an administrator's deed to W. D. White on an undivided five-sixths interest in valuable property in Atlanta. The figure is $16,600, and for the same amount W. D. White has made a warranty deed to Mrs. J. C. Clay, T. A. and J. M. White, of DeKalb County, and John W. White, Harvey and Katie Baker, the first four of whom get a one-sixth interest each and the latter two one-twelfth each.

The properties consist of the following:

The southwest corner of Linden way and a 10-foot alley 160 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 93 feet; on Linden way 202 1-2 feet west of Spring street, 42 1-2 by 100; on Spruce street 100 south of Dixie avenue 190 by 195; the northeast corner of Bell and Greene streets, 37 1-2 by 97 1-2; George street 75 feet north of East Fair street, 67 1-2 by 80; Old Wheat street 63 1-2 east of North Boulevard, 33 by 99, and Nos. 20 and 22 Raspberry street, 50 by 70, between Bell and Fort streets.

Pine Street Purchase.

Pierre M. Bealer has sold to Ralph J. McGruder the northeast corner of East Pine and North Jackson streets, 70 by 125, for $6,000. Four thousand was cash. For value received the parcel has been transferred to W. E. Treadwell and S. W. Carson.

West North Avenue Sale.

H. B. Watkins and D. J. Gunter have bought from Charles H. Sanford No. 164 West North avenue, 45 by 163, 42 feet west of McAfee street, for $5,000.

Fourteenth Street Transfer.

Deeds have gone to record in the sale May 15 of No. 278 East Fourteenth street to Dowse B. Donaldson from Marvin Conway for $5,000. The lot is 50 by 128 feet and 558 feet west of North Jackson street.

Building Delay Overcome.

Some months ago J. B. Thompson started excavating for three stores on Poplar street due north of the postoffice. Work was delayed, but now Mr. Thompson has been granted a permit to go ahead. The stores will cost $10,000.

Plans for Winnipeg Convention.

At the annual meeting of the Atlanta Real Estate Board Friday evening at 6:30 o'clock at the Cafe Durand some definite plans for attending the Winnipeg convention will be discussed. The convention of the National Association of Real Estate Exchanges will be held July 28, 29 and 30, and twelve members of the local board are expected to go.

Atlanta is to compete for a cup presented by the Chicago Board in a report which Charles P. Glover and others will present. The attending cities will prepare these reports and the winner will be the city making the best showing. The judges have been named to decide the contest.

Return postal cards indicate to the officers of the local board that there will be a large attendance at Friday's dinner, inasmuch as the selection of officers for the ensuing year will be made. Charles P. Glover, retiring president, is expected to come in for encomiums at the hands of his fellow board members. Mr. Glover has served the board faithfully, and the real estate men have not forgotten the happy speech he made at the recent annual banquet.

College Park's Activity.

Spurred on by the struggles and successes of the Decatur Board of Trade and similar organizations, the citizens of College Park have decided to organize a citizens' committee-of-the-whole and to adopt a name suitable to such an organization. In this connection $25 has been offered to the public for a slogan. Anybody in the world, says the secretary of the board, can win $25 by revealing the secret that lies in a name. Suggestions must be in by July 31, because the board wants to get busy in its booster operations.

College Park is a town of 2,700 population, having jumped from 450 in 1900. It is the home of Cox College for women and the Georgia Military Academy. There are three public schools, five churches and plenty of nice places for people to live.

What IS an Opportunity for the Young Man?

There Are More Real Opportunities To-day Than Ever

(Copyright, 1913.)

We have received many letters from young men recently complaining of lack of opportunities. One in particular asked this question:

"Are the opportunities for the young man in the present day and generation equal to what they were twenty-five or fifty years ago—the days of his father and grandfather?"

It is a question that is probably asked in this country thousands of times every day. It is an important question to the individual. It is especially important to the nation. For the nation declines in which opportunities for the young diminish.

We feel that we can conscientiously and positively say that REAL opportunities are better to-day, both for young men and young women, than they ever have been.

Opportunities are greater BECAUSE POSSIBILITIES ARE GREATER.

Science, machinery, organization of all kinds, especially widespread publicity, have put into men's hands in less than fifty years a power undreamed of in the boyhood of our grandfathers.

Humanity and the individual are powerful, and their opportunities are great, in proportion to the machinery at their command.

Our opportunities were never so great as now, but this statement is made assuming that our correspondent means real and worthy opportunities.

Unfortunately, in this country, where sudden prosperity, great extravagance and uneasiness as to the future make money all-important, the word "opportunity" is apt to be a synonym for money. Money and opportunity are taken to mean the same thing.

But we purpose to answer this question quite apart from money.

Undoubtedly, the very able money-getter, no matter how humble his start, can build up to-day such a fortune an was unknown fifty years ago—or twenty-five years ago. There are young men without a penny that will earn (or, rather, more or less honestly ACCUMULATE) their hundreds of millions in the next few years, before the common sense of the country shall have realized the importance of regulating accumulation through increased distribution.

There will be, perhaps, fewer small, middle-class fortunes piled up, for there will be fewer men in business on their own account, thanks to the trusts.

Many men will earn very large salaries, ranging from $150,000 a year downward, and there will probably be very many more large INCOMES in the land within the next twenty-five years than there were in the last twenty-five years.

But when men earn SALARIES, they do not keep their money, and of the middle-class fortunes we shall have fewer.

But we trust that our correspondent will agree with us that money is a pretty mean measurement for opportunity.

What do the merely rich men really amount to? When they have been dead two or three years they are as unknown and forgotten as the pigs and chickens that they ate, the horses that they drove, or the flunkies whose time they wasted.

Opportunity means A CHANCE TO DO SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

And we assure our correspondent that the young man of today has a greater chance to do something worth while than a young man has ever had in the history of this country.

Our form of government is changing; the power has practically passed from the hands of the majority of the people into the hands of a majority of trust stockholders.

The young man who has genius and force, the ability to lead, and the character to refuse his share of the spoils, has a great opportunity to-day. It is the opportunity to return the government to the hands of those who are governed.

Working scientists are needed and sadly lacking in all the great departments of human thought. Every one of these new fields of intellectual activity, research and discovery offers unlimited opportunities to young men.

The newspapers, read by millions of human beings every day, enable the man who can think intelligently, the man who will be sincere and interesting at the same time to address (and, if he is able, to convince) a million or two millions of his fellow-citizens every day in the year. Was there ever a greater opportunity than this for influencing the thoughts of other men?

Every page of a scientific newspaper will show to the young man a glorious opportunity.

Every phase of our great industrial organization, every new development in the struggle of manhood against money, offers to the young man a great opportunity for public service.

The horrible poverty and wretchedness in the great cities, contrasting with ignorant and ostentatious wealth, offer opportunities unlimited to him who would help the poor to help themselves, to him able to cajole or frighten the rich into doing their duty.

This is the age of opportunity, but the young man must think for himself, strike out on his own line, make up his mind what to do, and stick at it, INSTEAD OF FOLLOWING ALONG THE USUAL LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE, doing the same as everybody else does, keeping at nothing in particular, and then wondering what has become of the world's opportunities.

II.

SOON after the British Parliament passed a law forbidbidding the cutting down of trees for fuel, Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition—in 1585—discovered iron in this country, and in 1608 a cargo of ore was shipped from Virginia to England and successfully smelted. In 1644, the first ironworks was erected near Lynn, Mass.

In 1740, Huntsman introduced the crucible process, and various mechanical devices were patented about that time, which materially stimulated the steel industry.

Bessemer's Process.

In 1838, the invention of J. B. Nielson—the introduction of a heated blast—caused a tremendous increase in output. This improvement was accompanied by Nasmyth's steam hammer, and in 1856 Bessemer gave to the world a process that was astonishing and remarkable. The discovery of the Bessemer process made it possible to produce steel at such low cost as to extend its use widely, and did much to supersede wrought iron in structural work.

Bessemer steel is now almost universally used for steel rails. The open-hearth system of Martin and Thomas, with the regenerative gas furnace of Siemens, supplies steel that is used in enormous quantities for all purposes.

Lately, science has again prevailed, and in the products of White and Taylor and Robert Hadfield we have steel that combines great malleableness with great hardness—a hardness that retains its cutting power even when at red heat.

And so we go marching on. From the savage who in wonder raked from the ashes of his fire a crude ball of molten mineral and slag, with which he formed a weapon of defense, to the safety-razor and the automobile of the twentieth century citizen, metal is supreme.

Carbon and Iron.

Steel is made by combining a certain proportion of carbon with iron.

The process determines its value and variety.

The most important of these processes are cementation, Bessemer and open hearth.

The first system consists of placing wrought iron between layers of charcoal in firebrick retorts. Yellow heat is applied for a certain period until the required grade of steel is obtained by the addition of the necessary carbon.

This is the steel from which edged tools are made.

The Bessemer process is directly opposite in principle to the cementation process. The Bessemer burns the carbon out of the cast iron.

This is done in an egg-shaped furnace known as a converter, lined with firebrick, and capable of being tilted. At the bottom, a number of tuyeres or nozzles conduct the air from a powerful blowing machine through the molten metal. This burns out the silicon and carbon, and after the alloy has been added and thoroughly mixed the metal is poured into ladles, and thence to casting molds.

The ingots are reheated and rolled into the forms desired for use.

In the open-hearth system, steel is made from a mixture of pig-iron and scrap-iron or steel, which is melted by direct contact with the flame in a regenerative gas furnace.

Steel Everywhere.

To follow these different processes—to see the ore—cold, dead stones—transformed into things of utility and beauty is a revelation and an education. We realize that the Missable Range and your wire fence are associated by applied gas. Steel is everywhere.

Circus horses, farm horses wear it for shoes. Wire rope in elevators, and in ships and mines—the telegraph and telephone wires, and all kinds of electrical wires—from the ignition wire in the automobile to the submarine cable. Aeroplane plates, boiler plates and castings. We sleep on steel springs and shave with a "safety."

We use nails and tacks, and the shafting for machinery is nothing more or less than big round wire!

We see all these things in the manufactured goods.

We talk of the tone of our piano, we boast of the wonderful speed, endurance and economy of up-keep of our autos.

We speak of cheap and rapid transportation; of our spring beds, our easy shave.

But do we ever associate these things with the men in the mills? I hope so.

:: Light and Candle-Power :-:

By THOMAS TAPPER

THERE are about 1,500,000,000 people on the earth.

Most of them are intent on getting.

A few are intent on giving.

The dynamo sends power along its lines of conductivity, and all the electric bulbs pour out light, each according to its candle-power.

If each of these bulbs was independent, if it could think and move for itself, the efficiency of the plant might fall considerably, for the individual bulb would then begin to act like a man.

Instead of remaining an agent for the distribution of power, it would be inspired by the ideas of the majority to let up on giving and to specialize on getting.

We can imagine a bulb throwing out its chest and wanting things. It might take a fancy to get a corner on dust and ashes. These are possessions through which the power can not shine; and while the bulb might easily work up a corner, it would soon find itself short on its main business of shedding light freely, plentifully and without obscuration.

Both Science and Religion are fairly agreed that a man is the end point of a line of conductivity which is attached to the great dynamo of the life of the universe.

He must be, then, by nature a distributor of the power that the dynamo sends into him.

HE HAS NO BUSINESS TO OBSCURE his light and weaken his force with the dust and ashes of life, for then the radiance will not shine through him.

HIS BUSINESS IS TO POUR OUT upon the world around him the great supply of power that flows into him.

This power, like electricity, plays many parts.

He can send it out as work-power, love, sympathy, generosity, health and so on through the whole list of things worth while.

And by so doing he is fulfilling his one natural function. He is strengthening himself for all time (now and forever) simply by using his power in the right direction.

In short, he has an advantage over the electric light bulbs, for he can use his candle-power to the limit, and by so doing increase it, instead of burning out the filament.

:-: MISTAKES :-:

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

GOD sent us here to make mistakes,
To strive, to fail, to re-begin,
To taste the tempting fruit of sin,
And find what bitter food it makes.

To miss the path, to go astray,
To wander blindly in the night;
But, searching, praying for the light,
Until at last we find the way.

And looking back along the past,
We know we needed all the strain
Of fear and doubt and strife and pain
To make us value peace at last.

Who fails, finds later triumph sweet;
Who stumbles once, walks then with care,
And knows the place to cry "beware"
To other unaccustomed feet.

Through strife the slumbering soul awakes,
We yearn on error's troubled route
The truths we could not prize without
The sorrow of our sad mistakes.

CLASH INTERRUPTS POISON CASE

Prosecution Seeking to Discredit Mincey

CRAWFORD'S SANITY NOW ATTACKED

Expert Declares Capitalist Was Not in His Right Mind When He Married.

That Joshua B. Crawford was insane at the time he married Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford and had been entirely irresponsible for several months prior to that time, was the testimony of Dr. R. R. Kimes, expert on insanity and abdominal surgery, introduced by Attorney Joe S. James Friday morning in his effort to have the marriage annulled and the $250,000 estate revert to the heirs-at-law.

Dr. Kimes rendered his opinion in reply to a long hypothetical question and was excused without cross-examination.

During the taking of testimony another clash in the courtroom was narrowly averted. George W. Bolden, a character witness for Mrs. Crawford, threatened to thrash Attorney James unless he apologized for what the witness considered an insulting question. Colonel James declined to apologize and order was only restored when Colonel Anderson ordered the witness from the stand, and he was escorted from the courtroom by the lawyers.

"How do you know that Mrs. Crawford is a lady?" interrogated Attorney James.

Lawyers in War of Words.

"I demand that you apologize immediately for asking such a question," exclaimed Bolden.

"I will not apologize. I do not intend to take back anything that I say."

"You will take it back or I will make you, if I have to beat you to do it."

"You are at liberty to try that at any time you see fit."

Colonel Anderson, who had rapped several times for order, stepped between the attorney and the witness just as the latter got from his seat and started toward the attorney.

The Crawford heirs-at-law got to their feet and rushed to aid their attorney. Reuben Arnold stepped between them and with Colonel Anderson helped escort the witness from the room.

Anxious to Tell All.

Mrs. Crawford was anxious to go on the stand Friday and see the evidence from her side of the case go into the minutes of the hearing.

"I want to tell everything I know about the affair when I go on the stand," she said. "The other side has had everything its way so far, because all of the witnesses were for the heirs-at-law. It will be altogether a different story when Mr. Arnold and Mr. Smith introduce the witnesses we have. It will then be conclusively proved that there was nothing irregular anywhere except the groundless accusations that have been made against me."

Attorney James said Friday morning that he had been entirely too busy to take any official action toward having Fred Lump, the New York barber who is charged with being an accessory in the alleged poisoning, brought back to Atlanta.

"I will then get him back here in plenty of time if he remains in America," said Attorney James. "He would be of no particular use in this civil hearing, and that was why I didn't take steps earlier to get him back.

"At the first opportunity I will ask the Governor to give me requisition papers, and I will send a deputy to New York for him."

Maniac Causes Panic In Chicago Grain Pit

CHICAGO, July 18.—Members of the Board of Trade to-day were thrown into a panic when a negro employee went insane.

Shouting and threatening to kill anyone who tried to stop him, the wild negro rushed through the corridors waving a revolver. A squad of policemen arrived after three brokers had overpowered the maniac.

LEGISLATURE HEARS HOKE SMITH

Senator Tells Georgia Assembly of the Work of Congress—Defends Tariff Cuts.

United States Senator Hoke Smith addressed the two bodies of the Georgia Legislature in joint session at noon Friday in the house.

Conspicuous throughout his address was the strong defense of the national administration, the keynote of which was prophetic of a period of unequaled prosperity throughout the Wilson regime.

Senator Smith declared that the Democrats to-day have enough votes in the Senate to pass the tariff bill. He said that nothwithstanding the cuts made by the national house, the Senate had cut still deeper, and made additions to the free list.

"For the first time in fifty years," declared the Senator, "legislation intended to take the burden off the masses of the people has found no resistance in the Democratic Senate. It must be conceded by all that the Senate Democrats have made the tariff bill more Democratic than it was when it reached the Senate."

Mr. Smith attacked the present vogue of vast distribution of charity by the wealthy men of the nation.

Prefers Taxation to Charity.

"I would rather see the National Government raise the money by income taxes and spend it for such causes than to leave the people indebted to men for great charities," he declared.

The Senator avocated State's rights in handling State problems. While his reference was to the California-Japanese situation, he made its application general by saying: "From the Californians' troubles the whole country is realizing the difficulties with which we have had to cotend, and they are helping us make converts to the doctrine that we must be lef to handle our troubles ourselves."

Senator Smith brought up for strong arraignment the Sherwood bill for an increase of United States pensions.

"The startling truth is demonstrated that the eleven Southern States have paid to Union pensioners of the War Between the States ehe entire value, in 1870, of their agricultural lands and all improvements thereon, together with their agricultural implements and live stock," he said. "I believe it to be the duty of your Senators to resist in every proper way an increase in the now already enormous payments for pensions of the Civil War."

The speaker also attacked the workmen's compensation act, now pending, declaring it to be a bill to save the railroad corporations from their just liabilities to injured employees.

Urges U. S. Road Building.

In advocating the xcise tax bill, Senator Smith declared strongly for constitutional authority to pass an income tax which would proportion equally among the entire citizenship the expense of Government.

The Senator advocated national aid to road building throughout the country. He said the road-building question was at present before the Post-office and Postroads Committee of the Senate, and that his every effort, personally, would be to bring it through successfully.

Senator Smith went into the plan of tariff reduction fully. He said, in part:

"The Democratic party has undertaken to reform the tariff downward for the purpose of stopping, as far as possible, this system of legalized robbery. The plan of the Democratic tariff bill involves several different propositions.

Taxes on Luxuries.

"First. The raising of revenues.

"Second. The production of legitimate competition, to the end that fair prices shall be charged consumers.

"Third. No taxes, or the lowest possible taxes, upon the necessaries of

ATLANTANS PREFER A CAMP NEAR THE CITY TO MORE FASHIONABLE SUMMER RESORTS

Happy campers about to enjoy luscious Georgia melon.

Miss Jean Douglas at the oars.

Douglas Family Enjoys Outing in Pine Woods, With All Joys of Outdoor Life.

The summertime resorts at mountain and seaside are claiming fewer Atlanta people this year than ever before. And the reason is Atlanta people have learned that the best and most pleasant summer resort in the whole land is right here in the country surrounding the city.

In every direction are to be found summer camps where the business or professional man is enjoying all the pleasures and comforts of a summer resort, and at the same time is able to get into town every day to attend to business affairs.

One of the most attractive camps is that of Hamilton Douglas, president of the Atlanta School of Law and of the Atlanta Bar Association. It is located on the grounds of the Capital City Country Club, about one-fifth of a mile from the clubhouse, in a charming bit of pine woods. The camp is called "The Camp by the Side of the Road," and the Douglas family, and many visiting friends, are spending the summer months just as cool and as comfortable as if they were in the most perfectly appointed mountain resort hotel.

There are four tents; one for Mr. and Mrs. Douglas, one for Misses Jean, Helen and Dorothy Douglas and their girl friends, one for Hamilton Douglas, Jr., and for the various members of the Boy Scouts, which he organized in Atlanta, who come out to the camp from time to time. Then there is the cook tent, which is presided over by "the best cook in the State," to quote Mr. Douglas.

"We get up at 5:30 every morning," he declared, "run down to the lake for a cool plunge, and after a hearty breakfast, Hamilton, Jr., and I catch the 8:15 car for town. We come back to our camp early in the afternoon, and I tell you it is a relief to get the fresh air, cooled by the constant breezes, and redolent of the pine woods, after a hot day in town. Every night it is so cool that we sleep under a double blanket. Give me this camp life every summer hereafter."

The young women at the camp find many ways to make the days attractive and void of dull moments. All of them are expert swimmers and divers, and Miss Helen is a golf enthusiast besides. Boating on the lake is one of Miss Jean's hobbies. The tennis courts of the country club are only a short distance away, and every morning and late afternoon tennis sets are played. There are many charming walks to be found in the country also.

A big camp fire is a nightly feature of the camp, and the family and guests sit around it and tell stories, sing or listen to Misses Helen and Jean play on the mandolin and guitar. A Victrola provides cheerful music also, and the birds and squirrels must wonder greatly when they hear Caruso open up with his "Sob Song," or Collins and Harlan render one of their characteristic rags.

"I'm not going back to the mountains another summer," says pretty Miss Jean. "This camp just suits me exactly, and we don't have to be separated from father and brother, either. They can be right here to enjoy it with us, and that makes it all the more enjoyable. I think everybody in Atlanta should camp out in the summer, and I know they would if they knew how grand it is."

BUILDING TRADES PLAN FIGHT ON OPEN SHOP

A fight against the open shop in the building trades section of the Federation of Labor that promises to be the hardest in the history of organized labor in Atlanta will be the outcome of the strike on the Healey Building unless a settlement is reached shortly.

International officers representing the fourteen organizations composing the Building Trades Council are either in Atlanta or on their way here. A meeting of the Building Trades Council will be held Friday night, when steps looking to a settlement of the differences or to arrange for a finish fight will be taken.

Claim Low Wage Standard.

Officers of the building trades concerned in the controversy state that wages in Atlanta are 30 per cent lower than in other Southern cities, and they attribute this to the fact that in Atlanta alone is the open shop permitted.

The open shop as operated in Atlanta, according to the officers of the building trades, is that only that class of work requiring the greatest skill and which can alone be done by members of the organization is done by union men, while all other work is put in the hands of non-union men. In this way, the results to the contractor can be attained and the unions get the worst of it.

The strike precipitated by the contractors putting non-union men working on the cutting of the pipe for the electrical contract will mean a finish fight between the Building Trades Council and the contractors against the open shop, and may tie up work in Atlanta for some time.

Chief, With Sledge Hammer, Destroys 100 Conscated Guns

Chief Beavers, in his new strong arm act, "Wielding the Sledgehammer," was the big attraction at police headquarters Friday morning.

In compliance with the new law which requires that all pistols taken from prisoners and remaining uncalled for be destroyed, Chief Beavers took a sledge and smashed the locks and barrels of more than 100 revolvers. The wreckage was carted away to a junk shop in the patrol wagon.

"A Glorious Dream," Says Evelyn Thaw

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—"Yes, it is quite true. I am engaged for the Victoria," Evelyn Thaw told The Georgian's correspondent.

"What about the rumored $4,000 a week salary?" was asked.

She shut her eyes, clasped her hands and said:

"What a glorious dream! If it were only true!

"What would my husband's creditors say? Poor, dear things! Don't raise their hopes that way."

Thursday's 97 Mark For Heat Threatened

The weather man says there is little prospect of rain for several days.

London Laughs at Secretary Bryan's Plea of Poverty

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—The Standard prints an editorial on "Politicians and Their Pay" this morning, in which it refers to the statement of William Jennings Bryan, the American Secretary of State, that he can not live on his salary of $12,000 a year. The Standard says:

"The poor man's champion has discovered that he can not subsist satisfactorily on $12,000 a year. A good many people in a good many countries manage to be comfortable on less than that amount, but since Mr. Bryan first took up socialism as a profession he has done well on the lecture platform.

"He has been making $15,000 every year by denouncing the idle rich. If the Union can not pay the same scale he proposes to increase his emoluments by private exertions, so he will go on tour again."

DETECTIVES TRAIL MAN ACCUSING CONLEY

Prosecution Obtains Character Witnesses for Attack on Story of Negro's Confession.

With Pinkerton detectives taking the trail in search of W. H. Mincey, whose startling accusations against Jim Conley stirred the police department and won the negro another "sweating" from Solicitor Dorsey, the Mincey affidavit Friday became the storm center about which the prosecution and defense in the Frank case waged their battle.

Despite the degree of indifference with which the detectives and prosecuting officials affected to look upon the remarkable statements of Mincey, it became known Friday that every effort was being bent toward locating him and turning the light on his past history.

Pinkertons Have Clew.

It is understood that the Pinkertons have obtained information of Mincey's whereabouts, as it has been known since The Georgian published its exclusive story of the affidavit and later Mincey's detailed account of the significant happenings on the day of the murder that he was teaching school in North Georgia.

Although Solicitor Dorsey professes to be not greatly concerned over the effect that the Mincey affidavit may have in his case against Leo M. Frank, it is reported that his office is gathering character witnesses for an attack on Mincey's credibility.

Developments since the publication of the affidavit indicate that the prosecution feels it must absolutely discredit Mincey and his story if there is to be any hope of obtaining a conviction against Frank.

Harry Scott, Pinkerton detective, was denied permission to talk with Jim Conley Friday morning when he went to the police station to see if he could wring any additional admissions from the negro. From the fact that Scott has been working in entire harmony with the city detective department up to this time, this incident led to the rumor that Scott had changed his theory of the crime and was inclined to place the responsibility upon Conley.

Defense Ready for Trial.

Scott refused to say to what extent his theories had been altered, if at all. Chief of Detectives Lanford explained that he had full confidence in Scott, but that the Pinkerton was in the position where he had to report all of his findings to the defense and he did not wish Scott to see Conley in these circumstances.

Attorneys for the defense said in regard to the report that the case might again be postponed that they knew of no reason why it could not go to trial July 28, the date set by Judge L. S. Roan. They said that their side of the case was complete and that they were prepared to present it toa jury at anytime.

As bitter a fight as that brought on by the Mincey affidavit is being waged by the members of the Grand Jury and the Solicitor over the question of investigating Jim Conley's connection with the Phagan murder, with a view of bringing an indictment. A number of the members are said to have declared themselves in favor of reopening the case because of the mass of evidence that has piled up against the negro since he confessed to being in the factory on the day of the crime.

The Solicitor, however, is unalterably opposed to any movement looking toward the indictment of the negro.

FACTS IN MEXICO DEMANDED BY PRESIDENT

Ambassador Scored for Incomplete Reports to U. S.—Mystery in Diaz's Trip to Japan.

WASHINGTON, July 18.—In preparation for the arrival of Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, now on his way from Mexico, President Wilson today requested the State Department to furnish him with all the information relative to the troubles in Mexico from the beginning of the Madero revolt.

This mass of material the President intends to read thoroughly, so he will be informed as to all the developments of the Mexican situation before the arrival of Ambassador Wilson.

Secretary Bryan, who returned from the first lap of his Chautauqua lecture tour this morning, called on the President, bringing a large bundle of telegrams and correspondence.

Hale Sends Information.

They included dispatches from William Bayard Hale, President Wilson's personal representative in Mexico City, who does not consider the Huerta regime stable, and has advised against recognition.

Suspicions of the sincerity of the representations made by several European nations have been raised in Washington by the trail of high finance running through them all. Allegations are made that the crisis is nothing more nor less than a "bondholders' conspiracy" engineered from Paris.

Diaz May Visit Japan.

The President does not hesitate to criticise Ambassador Wilson for failing to sustain any fixed or definite conclusions in his dispatches to the State Department. Other consular and special agents of the United States in Mexico have been equally indefinite in the information they have sent to the State Department.

A proposed trip of Felix Diaz to Japan is causing speculation at the State Department. At this time his presence in Japan would serve to renew the efforts of the gingoes to create a strong anti-American thrill. The proposed trip has renewed reports that Japan is negotiating for a naval base on the western coast of Mexico.

Arsenal Stores at U. S. Forts on Gulf Increased.

MOBILE, July 18.—Large shipments of projectiles and ammunition are being unloaded at Fort Morgan, at the entrance of Mobile Bay, and at Fort Barrancas, Fla., ccordaing to reports brought to Mobile by artillerymen.

Drilling with the big guns has been going on steadily at both of these important naval bases.

Slays Rich Husband By Light of Match

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—The mystery in the death of Manuel E. DeValle, wealthy ranch owner, who was found dead in bed Wednesday, was cleared to-day. Mrs. Mary E. DeValle confessed that she killed her husband. She said:

"My husband lay on the bed jabbering in a drunken stupor. I could see him faintly by the half light of the moon. I lighted a match and walked until I was within a foot of him. Then I lighted another match, aimed my revolver and fired."

Dougherty Should Worry; He Was Cool

INDIANAPOLIS, July 18.—Not even a smile covered John Dougherty early to-day as he sat in the rear of 223 East Washington street, a square from police headquarters.

He didn't seem to realize that he was shocking the neighborhood. He sat on a box swinging his heels. It might have been the Garden of Eden and he might have been Adam, without even a fig leaf.

In a covering of wrapper paper he was taken to police headquarters charged with "loitering."

It was a hot night.

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

life and those things used by the great body of the people.

"Fourth. High taxes upon luxuries.

"With the fullest praise for what the Democrats of the House did, I wish to say that the Democrats of the Senate sustained the reductions made by the House, and after investigations, made additional reductions of great importance.

"The House Democrats put flour upon the free list, but taxed wheat. The Senate Democrats put both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats put meat upon the free list, but taxed cattle. The Senate Democrats put meat and cattle both upon the free list.

"The House Democrats left a tax of 25 per cent upon cheap woolen blankets. The Democrats of the Senate put them upon the free list. The House taxed wool of the angora goat and alpaca. The Senate Democrats put it on the free list.

"The House Democrats taxed flax and hemp; the Senate Democrats put them upon the free list.

School Books Duty Free.

"The House Democrats taxed pig iron, and steel billets, and ferro manganese. The Senate Democrats put them on the free list.

"Teh House Democrats taxed textbooks. The Senate Democrats placed them on the free list.

"It is impossible to say just when we will vote upon the tariff bill in the Senate. I believe we will certainly vote before the end of six weeks, possibly in much less time. I do not think any considerable delay will take place in conference. I believe the differences between the two houses will readily be adjusted by the Democrats in the two bodies and the measure be soon passed with the approval of the Democrats of both houses."

On currency legislation Senator Smith said:

"The currency bill which has been introduced both in the Senate and in the House will free the country from dependence upon Wall Street. It will facilitate an increase of currency to meet especial demands for same. It will make a currency panic impossible. There are many features in the bill which I thoroughly approve. There are others which I believe should be changed. I think the Democrats of the House and Senate should make it as nearly perfect as possible, and then support it.

"There are features in the tariff bill against which I voted in the committee, but there comes a time when individual opinion must yield to the majority.

"Both the House and Senate Democrats placed jute bagging and cotton ties on the free list. Both placed wire fencing on the free list. Both placed agricultural implements on the free list, and what has been known as the farmers' free list, so much discussed two years ago, when passed by the House and rejected by the Senate, is now contained in the tariff bill which passed the House and which has been approved by the Democratic caucus of the Senate without a dissenting vote. And what I wish to say to you to-day is we have the votes in the Senate to pass the bill.

"Our farmers have been overcharged for the things which they are cessive prices maintained by the exclusion of foreign competition. It has been conceded that, while the government collected three hundred millions of dollars each year from the tariff, the industries in the United States, which the high tariff was intended to help, collected over a billion of dollars more from the people than they could have charged but for the exclusion of foreign competition. These burdens fell upon all the people of our State, but were especilly heavy upon the farming classes, who in no respect receive any benefit.

Sees Era of Prosperity.

"I believe that the adoption of our new tariff bill will mark an era of prosperity throughout the country. The industries heretofore protected will not lose in the long run by competition, but, spurred through it to greater efforts they will seek their profits by broader trade; dependent not alone upon taking the dollars of their neighbors, they will reach into the markets of the world for the sale of their commodities.

Lauds the President.

"No currency system would be complete that did not take into consideration the importance of farm credits. Thorough study is now being given to this subject, and I believe in the near future action will be had by which rates of interest charged to farmers may be reduced and increased facilities given for farm loans.

"In conclusion, let me remind you that the last time I spoke in Georgia was at the Auditorium when I presented Governor Wilson to the people of the State. I assured the audience of his purpose and ability to serve, and of his strength as a candidate. We made no mistake when we nominated him. We won the fight for the Democratic party. "The people of the country made no mistake when they elected him."

Search Begun for Estranged Husband In Drugging Case

Detectives working on the mysterious chloroforming of six members of the family of Mrs. Archibald Duncan, of 318 South Boulevard, and the clubbing of one of her daughters, have begun a search for M. A. Deal, husband of Mrs. Ruby Deal, one of the women drugged.

They are working on the theory that Deal drugged the entire family in an attempt to kidnap his daughter, Marguerite Deal, aged 3 years.

Chief Lanford Friday morning virtually admitted his activity in the case had narrowed to a search for Deal.

The members of Mrs. Duncan's family have recovered from the drugging. Miss Pearl Hildebrand, the daughter who was slugged, has returned to her work.

Attempts to curtail the wine supply of the Swiss guards led to the disaffection. Hitherto the guardsmen were allowed an unlimited supply of wine.

ALLIES' ARMIES CONCENTRATE ON SOFIA

Greek Premier Says Peace Terms Must Be Dictated in Czar Ferdinand's Drawing Room.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ATHENS, GREECE, July 18.—"According to our present plans, the armies of Greece, Servia and Roumania will march into Sofia and we will dictate terms of Bulgarian peace in Czar Ferdinand's own drawing room."

This statement was made here today by Premier Venizelos, who had just returned from Salonika. Mr. Venizelos declared that one of the principal reasons why the allies were determined to humble Bulgaria in the dust is that the Bulgarians have been guilty of unspeakable atrocities in Macedonia, where thousands have been slain by the retreating Bulgar soldiers.

"No armistice will be accepted, if our present agreement is carried out," said Mr. Venizelos. "Greece, Servia and Roumania are in accord on this campaign. Our armies will march upon Sofia, where they will concentrate. We will dictate our terms of peace with Bulgaria in Czar Ferdinand's own drawing room.

"The Bulgars must be taught a severe lesson in humanity. One of the reasons which impels the continuance of the war is the terrible depredations wrought by the Bulgar troops upon defenseless inhabitants of Macedonia.

"King Constantine is at Salonika, having gone there from Kavala. He is determined that blood must pay for the savagery of the Bulgarians. Our Greek army is pushing northeastward; the Servians are moving southeastward and the Roumanians are marching westward. The remnants of the Bulgarian army are being shoved toward Sofia, and when we surround the city the entire fighting force of Bulgars will be penned up there."

Plot on Ferdinand's Life Bared in Sofia.

SOFIA, July 18.—A revolutionary plot against the life of Czar Ferdinand was discovered to-day by the Bulgarian police. The conspiracy was hatched by political malcontents, who planned to assassinate Czar Ferdinand in the palace, where he has been keeping in seclution since last Saturday, when mobs stoned the Government buildings.

Only a few months ago Czar Ferdinand was hailed by his people as a national hero and he was the object of endless demonstrations of loyalty and friendship.

Mayor Cries Quits; Truce Declared in War With Recorder

The dove of peace fluttered midway between the City Hall and the Police Court Friday morning, according to Mayor James G. Woodward, who says emphatically he is done with the thing—meaning the Broyles-Woodward scrap.

"When I have anything to say to Judge Broyles in the future, I'll tell it to him," declared the Mayor. The first official meeting is awaited with interest.

The lively tilt between the Mayor and the Recorder, which reached alarming proportions Thursday, terminated as suddenly as it began. For a single day only it held the boards, but in that brief space of time there was enough said to last for several days.

In the meantime, Griff Freeman, the "most notorious blind tiger out of captivity," according to the Recorder, languishes in the Stockade, apparently unconcerned about the publicity that has raged about him.

Nothing Succeeds Like Success

Mr. J. E. Greene says the secret of his success is in good health, and the secret of his good health is in Nuxcara. He like every big-hearted, successful man, delights in telling the world about Nuxcara, the only cure known for indigestion, dyspepsia and catarrh.

J. E. GREENE.

Atlanta, Ga., June 6, 1913.

Dr. Kelly, Atlanta, Ga.:

Dear Sir:

Some months ago I had what I thought was heart trouble. My heart would skip for an hour or more, and often every third beat. This was especially noticeable after eating. I consulted several physicians, but got no permanent relief. I chanced to pick up one of Dr. Kelly's books on "Nuxcara," and soon found I had been treating the wrong complaint. I bought a bottle of Nuxcara, and got some better, and, after taking about half a dozen bottles, I was entirely relieved of all heart troubles, as well as indigestion. I have not had a return of this since, and I consider Nuxcara one of the greatest achievements in medicine for the troubles it is recommended to cure.

Yours very truly,

HOUSE RATES SLASHED IN TARIFF ACT REPORTED TO SENATE; TRUSTS HARD HIT

WASHINGTON, July 18.—The report to Senator Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee on the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate, was placed before the Upper House at noon to-day, and debate on the measure immediately was begun.

The report is largely devoted to defense of the Senate Democrats' action in reducing rates under the original House measure and to extensive tables showing the percentage and effect of these rates.

In a brief introduction, Senator Simmons declares that the Senate bill, if enacted into law, "will result in an equitable distribution of burdens and incidental benefits of the Payne-Aldrich system of customs taxation that will tend to disintegrate monopolies built up under a protective tariff; that will reduce the cost of living; that will increase the opportunities of the individual citizen and relieve the people from the burdens of a former scheme of taxation."

Rich Trusts Only Hit.

The Senator points out that the interests hit by the reduction of duties under the House bill are in almost every instance trusts which have grown rich under a high protective tariff. Among these are the steel, aluminum, cement, callera, asphalt, Standard Oil, sugar, wool and paper trusts.

To counteract the millions in import revenue lost to the Government through the admission of foreign markets under a free list or reduced rate of tariff, taxes have been placed upon bananas solely controlled by a trust, upon gambling in cotton futures, upon the incomes of the rich, upon brandies used in fortifying wines and upon luxuries in general.

The total outcome of the Senate tariff labors is a decrease of 27.64 per cent under the Payne-Aldrich tariff rates and of 4.22 per cent under the House tariff rates. Nevertheless, the report predicts that the business of the Government will be run at a profit.

Total Revenue $996,810,000.

The official figures, based upon compilations of Treasury experts for the fiscal year 1913, place the total revenue, exclusive of the possible revenue from the Panama Canal, the sinking fund and the national bank note redemption fund, at $996,810,000, against an estimated disbursement of $994,790,000 for the same period. This would leave a surplus of $2,020,000.

Concerning the steel schedule the report says:

"Judged by all available tests, the American iron and steel industry is fully able to sustain itself without Government aid. It has unrivaled supplies of raw material; it has the use of abundant capital; it is able to export in competition with foreign countries; and the industry has the advantage of low costs. For all these reasons it may be regarded as well fitted as an industry, capable of standing tariff rates figured on a strict revenue-producing basis."

Keynote of Its Defense.

This summarizes the keynote of the Senate tariff reductions in almost every case where they affect trust-controlled products.

A slight reduction has been made in the cotton schedule where the commodities so treated are in common use. The reclassification of this schedule does not affect the House rates materially. The report says that "inasmuch as silk is a luxury, it is liable to the highest possible duties." This policy was maintained in treating luxuries.

The income tax amendment is explained at length, the report giving specific quotations from the text of the bill relating to the change from a flat income assessment based on $4,000, to a sliding scale, which would make the unencumbered single man liable to assessment on an income in excess of $3,000, while the married man or woman with a dependent wife or husband shall have his income exempted up to $4,000 if he have minor dependent children.

House Tax Called Unfair.

The report characterized the House income tax as "unfair to a large class of moderately wealthy people."

The many changes made in the administration feature of the bill were explained on the ground that the clauses of the Underwood measure were "somewhat confusing" and that it was thought best to leave the administrative features substantially as they were in the Payne-Aldrich measure until a joint committee of the two Houses "could revise, codify and simplify" this section of the bill. This is to be done by January 1, 1914.

The changes in the administration section include the omission of the 5 per cent reduction of goods imported in American bottoms; the inspection clause and the unit dumping clause.

Scores Gambling in Futures.

With regard to the revenue raising tax on gambling in cotton futures the report characterized this practice as an "evil," and said the tax was imposed to deter, in some measure, the activities of those who resort to cotton exchanges for the sole purpose of speculation.

Inasmuch as the tax is refundable, where an actual delivery of cotton is made, it is not thought that it will seriously affect legitimate trade.

The report predicts that the retaliatory clause in the Senate bill "will effectually put in the hands of the President a weapon with which to bring about equable arrangements with countries which do not afford the United States fair treatment."

Senate's Changes In Tariff Measure

The salient features of the Underwood-Simmons tariff bill as amended by the Senate Democrats are:

Reduction under the Payne-Aldrich duties, 27.64 per cent.

Reduction under Houst tariff bill, 4.22 per cent.

Estimated revenue from Senate measure during fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, to be $2,020,000 over estimated disbursements for same period.

The customs duties from the Senate bill for fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, less sugar, are estimated at $173,250,000.

Duties on imports under the Payne bill for two months, exclusive of sugar and wool, $40,650,000.

Duties on sugar eight months under Payne bill and four months under Senate bill, $47,000,000.

Duties on wool under Payne bill for five months, $5,830,000.

Revenue from tax on cotton future gambling, $5,000,000.

Revenue from wines, brandies, six months, $750.000.

Revenue from income tax, ten months, $58,330,000.

Total revenue from Senate bill, $330,810,000.

Free listed products in Senate bill amount to $147,367,000 in imports, as against $103,000,000 in House measure.

Following market basket products added to House free list: Wheat, eggs, lard compounds and lard products and domestic animals used for food.

Among the trusts hit are those controlling steel, aluminum, cement, cameras, Standard Oil, asphalt, sugar, wool, bananas and paper.

The provisions of the income tax are figured as dating from March 1, 1913, instead of January 1, 1913. The operation of the brandy tax was also deferred.

Boy Says He Was Lured to Aid Thief

Frank Houseman, 17 years old, who has been living at a Decatur street hotel, is held at police headquarters charged with the robbery of Sweeney's saloon, No. 46 Wall street, which was entered Thursday night.

The police say Houseman has confesesd to aiding another man, whose name he says he does not know. The stranger, he said, persuaded him to serve as "lookout."

Detectives are also investigating the robbery of the Williams & Johnson market, Nos. 238-240 Edgewood avenue. The glass in the front door was broken and a small sum taken from the money drawers.

This was the statement of Mayor H. H. Rose to 400 policement regarding what he expected of them during his administration.

"Agriculture is our vital and pivotal industry," he declared. "Every dollar of this appropriation will be spent within the State and will repay the State a thousandfold."

Committee Favors Income Tax Measure

By a vote of 9 to 5 the income tax bill of Representative Stovall, of Elbert, was recommended for passage Thursday.

Baby Cabs Watched In Chicago Vice War

CHICAGO, July 18.—Mayor Harrison to-day ordered city detectives and policemen to take a look into all baby carriages being pushed about by women and see if there is a real baby in each of them.

The order was the result of a new plan adopted by women of the streets. The baby carriages they push contain rag dolls, but they have succeeded in giving the police the impression that they were respectable mothers, taking their infants for an airing.

BIRTHDAY PARTY GIFTS WILL BE PONY VOTES

Girl's Guests Will Bring Her Subscriptions—New Way Found To Aid Contestant.

Newest among the developments in The Georgian and American pony contest is a birthday party. Miss Robert Harbour, of No. 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue, will give the party Saturday afternoon.

This is to be Miss Harbour's fifth birthday anniversary. In honor of the event there will be a "regular party," with the difference from the ordinary celebration that many of the guests have told her in advance what their presents will be.

They will give her subscriptions to The Georgian and Sunday American, which count liberally in votes in the contest. This is an instance where the givers get as much as the recipient, little Miss Harbour gets the votes and the donors get the papers.

John Trimble, of Lithonia, and his father came to Atlanta Thursday to see the ponies. John Trimble is making a good race for the pony to be awarded to the Georgia boy or girl getting the most votes.

One more day remains of the special bonus offer, which gives extra ballots for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. From all indications, Saturday will be one of the busiest days in the contest department. Votes will be received up to Saturday night at 10 o'clock, with the exception that out-of-town contestants may mail their votes Saturday, and all received up to Monday will count.

Nat Kay, of 264 South Pryor street.

DR. MERRITT NOT ASKED TO RESIGN

Expressed Desire, However, to Leave Battle Hill—Change in Management Expected.

Dr. S. W. Merritt, superintendent of the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, has not been asked to resign, according to statements made Friday by the city officials who are over him. But Dr. Merritt has expressed a desire to leave the institution, and a change in management is anticipated about September 1.

The matter reached a climax when Jesse Shelton, a patient, complained that he had received rough treatment. Mayor Woodward asked Dr. J. P. Kennedy and Dr. Claude A. Smith to investigate the case. It was then that Dr. Merritt declared he did not like the situation, and it was tentatively agreed that a change be made in superintendents.

The committee, however, did not override Dr. Merritt in his discipline of Shelton.

Severe Cough Led To Lung Trouble

Sufferers with Lung Trouble are rarely willing to acknowledge the fact. If you have a so-called "cold" that has long persisted; or a cough that keeps you anxious; any of the symptoms of Lung Trouble, such as fever or night sweats, weakness, loss of appetite, or perhaps some raising of mucus, take Eckman's Alterative—as Mr. Bettersworth did:

Bowling Green, Ky., R. No. 4.

"Gentlemen: The spring of 1908 I had a severe cough for six months. I tried all the medicine that my doctors recommended to me, but no results came for the better. I had night sweats, and would cough and spit until I got so weak I could hardly do anything. But, at last, James Deering, of Glasgow Junction, insisted that I try your medicine. In one week's time there was quite an improvement in my condition, and after I had taken several bottles I felt as well as ever in my life. I desire the world to know that I firmly believe that your Eckman's Alterative will cure any case of lung trouble if taken before the last stage."

(Affidavit) A. C. BETTERSWORTH.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Helen and the Trunks Are Gone When Warren Returns to the Hotel in Paris.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE room was charming. Helen could hardly restrain an exclamation of delight when the French manager unlocked the door and crossed over to draw the heavy curtains from the long, low windows.

The paneled walls, the furniture, the draperies, were all in old rose silk tapestry. The bedroom adjoining was exquisitely dainty in white and pale blue. The low French dressing table, the cheval mirror, the two cane beds with the pale blue silk hangings and coverlets, made it look like a stage setting—"Act 1. Mlle. ————'s Boudoir"—in a modern French play.

It was all so surprisingly dainty and luxurious for a hotel that Helen feared it would be most expensive—more than they could pay.

"What do you ask for these rooms?" she ventured.

"Twenty-five francs a day, Madame," he answered in surprisingly good English.

"And what for breakfast served up here?"

"Two francs for coffee and rolls."

Only nine more francs for the rooms, and the same for breakfast as they were paying now! And the dirt and dinginess of the other place compared to the charm and cleanliness of this! Helen pictured herself, in her dainty white morning gown and boudoir cap, having breakfast in this rose silk room. This picture decided her.

"Very well. I'll take the rooms. We're at a place on the Boulevard Capucines now, but we'll come to-morrow morning or late this evening."

The manager took her down on the mirrored elevator to the palm-lined hall and office below, where Helen made a deposit of twenty-five francs to secure the rooms.

On the way back in the bus her courage began to waver. She had arranged to move without Warren's consent or knowledge. But when she again saw the dinginess and shabbiness of the rooms they were in and thought of the wretched breakfast they had had that morning, her courage was renewed.

A Bold Scheme.

As she packed the few things they had unpacked for the night her strongest desire was to move now. It was only half-past one, and Warren would not be back until almost seven. Why not get a cab and take their baggage over now—and have everything unpacked and in place by the time he got there? She could not reach him during the afternoon, but she could leave a note here giving him the address of the new place.

For Helen this was a most audacious scheme, and she was athrill with excitement at the very daringness of it all. For once she would show Warren that she could take the initiative, that she would not stay in a place that was both uncomfortable and unclean, merely because he did not want the bother of moving.

There was a rusty pen and a dusty ink bottle on the mantel. Helen took some paper from her handbag and wrote hurriedly:

Dear: Have just found the most wonderful place! When I went to the American Express Company this morning to get our mail I heard some American women talking about a delightful hotel. I took down the address and looked it up at once. The rooms are so beautiful and so moderate, that I couldn't resist engaging them.

I do hope you won't be annoyed, but this place is so dirty that I felt I couldn't stay. I am going to get a cab and move the things over now, so everything will be in place when you get there. The address is Hotel Ronceray, 10 Rue Montaigne. You can get a bus on the corner that will take you to the door. I will pay the bill here. Hastily. HELEN.

Still fearing that her courage might be short-lived, she determined to act quickly. Resolutely she went down to the office and asked for their bill. The man seemed surprised and displeased, for he had plainly expected them to stay several weeks.

Helen was amazed at the bill. She thought there would be only the room for one night and breakfast—but there was a charge for light, service and bath. However, she was too glad to escape from the place to make any protest, and a little later she was in a cab with their baggage on top, driving to the new hotel with a feeling of mingled glee and awe at her own temerity.

It was just 3 by the French gilt clock on the mirrored mantel of the rose-tapestried sitting room, when Helen closed the door after the porters who had brought up the bagage.

Even before she took off her hat she made an eager, interested inspection of every detail of the rooms. They were luxuriously and perfectly appointed. Everything was in exquisite taste.

It would be over three hours yet before she could expect Warren. But she had no desire to go out in the blazing, midafternoon sun, for the heat was stifling. She would spend the time in unpacking, in getting up their laundry, and in going over her clothes, which after the week on board ship needed attention.

It was a real joy to shake out her gowns and hang them in the spacious closets, and to arrange her clothes in the white-papered drawers of the chiffonier and dresser. The rooms were so beautiful that there was a sense of luxury in just moving about and getting settled in them.

At 6 o'clock she decided suddenly to dress—to put on her white chiffon evening gown. She would lay out Warren's evening clothes, and when he saw her all dressed he would hardly refuse to dress, too. They would "live up" to the luxury of the place!

To sit down and arrange her hair before the low dressing table was a real pleasure. Helen thought of all the hours she had to stand before her high bureau at home, and resolved to have a dressing table like this as soon as she got back.

About half-past six she was trailing about the aparfment in her white chiffon gown, looking at herself in the mirrors with which the rooms abounded, and feeling as though she wa. living in a play. The very foreign atmosphere of it all added to the charm. Although it was hardly dusk, she turfied on the electric lights, which glowed softly through their silken shades.

She Gets Anxious.

For once Helen was too excitedly happy to worry over what Warren's attitude might be. Surely, when he saw how beautiful the rooms were, he could not be angry at her having moved.

But at seven she grew anxious. He should be here by now. What if they should not give him the note at that other place? They had not liked it because she had left—would they take such a revenge? She had left the note in the box with the key—how could he fail to get it?

Quarter after seven—half-past! By this time Helen had forgotten the charm of the rooms and was walking restlessly about in tense anxiety. What could have happened? He had said he would be back around half-past six, and it would take him only fifteen minutes at the most to get here from the other place.

For the first time there came a doubt in her mind as to the wisdom of her moving in this way. Perhaps she should have stayed. After all, it was a rash thing for her to do. They were in a strange city, if he should not get the note—how could he ever find her?

She could, of course, write to the American Express Company, where he would go for his mail in the morning; but what would he do to-night? Oh, why had she done this? Frantically she wished herself back in those other rooms, however shabby and dirty they might be. Surely it would have been better to put up with anything than to risk any chance of mishap in Paris.

A sharp knock at the door. She rushed to open it, and a French messenger boy handed her a note. As he held it out to her she saw Warren's writing on the envelope. Her hands weakly trembling, with her teeth she tore it open.

"Since you are so infernally smart and want to take things in your own hands, you can keep it up. You can have a nice little dinner alone any place in Paris you choose—and I can have the same. I'll probably be there some time to-night, but don't let that worry you—stay out just as late as you want."

The cruel sarcasm of it! How could he—oh, how COULD he! With a convulsive sob Helen threw herself upon the bed and her tears fell unheeding on its blue satin coverlet.

More Trouble in a Garden.

An elderly gentleman walking through his garden one day stopped before a fig tree on which were two figs just ripening. His favorites were figs, and summer often came and went without the fruit coming to maturity.

Shortly after he met his gardener, who, assuring him the figs were quite ripe, was requested to send them to the summer house, where his master was about to rest.

Picking the figs, the gardener sent his little boy of 7 with the basket. On the way the little fellow stopped, and, removing the leaves, gazed upon the tempting fruit.

The attraction was too great; he ate one. Covering the other with the leaves, he proceeded upon his errand.

On being asked if the gardener had not sent two figs, the boy, after a moment's silence, answered: "I ate one."

"You ate one? How?" exclaimed the old gentleman, angrily. "How did you come to do that?"

Dropping his eyes to the basket, "I took it like this," said the child, taking the remaining fig, "and I ate it like this."

And, suiting the action to the word, he consumed the second fig before the astonished eyes of the old gentleman.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Every one of these breaks in your life-line means a moment when you stood elbow-to-elbow with death," declared the girl, solemnly. "And yet—see those little squares of protection around each break? Senor American," she looked up at him soberly, "there is one break that you have not yet reached and the protecting square is not perfect like the others."

Warren burst into his silent laugh.

"I reckon that square will do when the time comes."

"But the time is now, senor!" exclaimed the girl, her lips less than a foot from his ear.

He drew back a little and eyed her through narrowed lids.

Danger Near.

She bore the keen scrutiny without a flutter, but her great round eyes and quick breathing told of some sure emotion.

"Are your eyes so sharp that you can tell the day and hour?" he asked slowly.

"Not my eyes, Senor American." She looked full at him with unmistakable meaning. "But my ears!" She caught the sound of footsteps in the passage and bent over the hand again as the Duke entered.

"In all my experience I have seen but one hand like yours, and that hand belongs to Don Robledo."

"Well, Mr. Warren, looking into the future?" inquired the Duke.

"Pardon, senor." Dolores swiftly withdrew hand Warren called after her cheerfully:

"Good-bye, senorita, and many thanks for your occult wisdom. I'll take good care of that square. Yes, Duke," he added with a bantering smile, "and the immediate future promises to be very interesting. A dark man is to cross my path."

"Do you believe in such foolery?"

"I like to—on this occasion. For I hope it means some one I very much want to meet."

If the Duke guessed who this some one might be he gave n.* sign. He twirled his mustache and studied the floor, evidently in much perplexity, a situation that seemed to amuse the young man immeasurably.

"By the way," he went on. "Is that specter a blond or a brunette?"

The exalted kinsman made an impatient gesture, as if in no mood for raillery, and with every appearance of grave concern said:

"Mr. Warren, since the Prince is no more, I feel a certain responsibility for Her Highness' actions; and the prospect of your destruction to-night on her account is most uncomfortable."

The young man looked equally grave.

"You think I won't come back?"

The Duke looked at him with the air of a man who is frankly doing his duty.

"I think if you go into that castle to-night you take your life in your hands," he declared.

The old whimsical smile returned to Warren's lips.

"I've got a good grip."

The Duke looked for a moment as if he would retire—that having done his duty there was nothing for him to say. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him:

"Look here! You Americans are shrewd traders. You get a dollar for a dollar when you bargain. You are not giving away your life for nothing. Now, what is the price?"

"Not very much," Warren assured him easily. "The deal was made on a bargain day. My life happened to be a little below par, you see, and I couldn't kick much over the terms."

The exalted cousin seemed relieved.

"Very well! Whatever those terms were, I will assume the responsibility of settling with you and at the same time release you from your unfair and outrageous bargain."

Jarvis bowed.

"Your Excellency, I am overwhelmed by your anxiety. It touches not only the heart but the pocketbook. But," he added regretfully, "the price is paid and I am on the job."

"I suppose that means you are going through with it?"

"Yes."

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, I never saw a man so anxious to be killed. But, as your English poet says, 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

"You flatter me," Jarvis protested, with soft-tongued irony. "Yet, an energetic fool may be of more use than an angel with cold feet."

"Well, I am sorry for you," concluded the Duke.

Jarvis walked up to him, for the first time in their acquaintance dead serious.

"Your Excellency," he said crisply, "I decline your offer and your advice and your sympathy—and I'll tell you why. I saw a gambler lay down four aces once because, as he said, 'The play ain't natural.' You tried to have me arrested on the steamer—you have tried to block me in every move I have made. Now—suddenly—you are deeply conterned lest something should happen to precious little me in that castle. You advise me to stay out. You even offer to buy me off. Shall I take your advice? NO! 'The play ain't natural.'"

On Guard.

His Excellency of Alva trembled with a cold fury, but held himself in.

"You have intruded into a matter which you neither understand nor appreciate," he said rapidly. "If, as you say, the play seems unnatural, pray do as your gambling friend—put down your cards and stay out of the game."

"No," retorted the young man, grimly. "I stay in the game—but I'm going to watch the deal!"

The return of the Princess abruptly terminated the conversation and when the two men turned to greet her they had recovered their natural tones and bearing.

"Well, all Segura is buzzing with your ghost-hunt to-night," observed the Duke, lightly. "The whole town will sit up to hear the outcome."

"And where are you going to get the returns, Duke?" asked Jarvis, with concealed interest.

"Unfortunately, I must leave at once," was the unexpected reply.

Even Jarvis was momentarily startled, but he quickly readjusted his inferences. "I am keenly disappointed, but I have an urgent summons to Madrid."

The Princess stared at her cousin, seemed about to speak and suddenly turned to the innkeeper who had followed her down stairs and ordered him to look after "the gentleman's wants."

"Thank you," said Jarvis, rightly interpreting this as a dismissal. "I'd like a couple of good horses and two lanterns."

"Lanterns?" smiled the Duke, as the young man went out. "Looking for an honest man, Mr. Warren?"

"Not in this neck of the woods, Your Excellency," retorted Jarvis, over his shoulder.

"Carlos," exclaimed the Princess, anxiously, when they were alone, "what have you found out? Tell me—what do they say?"

The Duke looked very solemn. "I regret to tell you that nothing is known of your brother since he entered the castle."

The girl closed her eyes and pressed her hands to her face.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned.

A Last Appeal.

Dolores called that Don Robledo was waiting with His Excellency's car.

"Cousin, do you really intend to go now?" cried the girl in tragic tones. "I need you! My brother needs you! Think what it means to us!"

"I am broken-hearted, dearest cousin—do not make my duty any harder by your words. The message is from His Majesty. It is mandatory. And, alas! In Spain, as in the Far East, to hear is to obey."

"But why must you start so soon?"

"You know my ride is a long one and I must travel fast while the moon is up."

The girl was silent for a moment and when she spoke again voice and features were composed into a chilly hardness.

"Not to open this discussion again, I want to say now that I will never forgive you for leaving my brother and me at this critical moment."

"Would you have me lose my favor with the King?" protested the Duke.

"Does his favor mean more to you than mine?" retorted the girl proudly.

The Duke spread out his palms and half bowed.

"Noblesse oblige, cousin," he said gently. "Nobles and kings must obey what lesser men might ignore. My heart is here, but my honor is with the King."

"Honor!" The Princess flung the word back at him as if it were a stinging missile. "The cloak for a man's vanity! Sacred honor!—to be kept bright at any cost, lest men should test his metal and find it base. Give me a man who cares liss for honor than for me! You ask me to-day why I do not marry you. I will tell you why. I want a man, not a weakling masquerader. Yes, honor lives, but loyalty is dead! Courage is dead, and the brave blood of your ancestors, the blood that made Spain, has turned to water in your veins. There is not a nobleman in Spain who would dare go now this night to my brother in the castle. God! How I could love such a man!"

"Perhaps," sneered her cousin, stung by the bitter tirade, "perhaps such a man as your Yankee adventurer?"

"Perhaps I could," cried the girl, instantly taking up the challenge. "Who knows?"

The Duke bit his lips and before he could frame an adequate reply the man himself appeared, slowly descending the stairs. So he merely bowed, took the girl's hand and kissed it.

"Farewell," he said in a low voice, "some time you will forgive me. Success to you, Mr. Ghost-Breaker, when you bead the specter in his den."

"Thank you, your Excellency," drawled Jarvis, leaning against the stairpost. "I will do my uttermost to put salt on the specter's tail."

"Good-bye!"

"Good night, Duke!"

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with some concern and a question on his lips.

"Mr. Warren," she said abruptly, "we must start at once!"

The strained quality of her voice told him that she was laboring under the most intense excitement and it was with studied ease of manner and voice that he replied:

"It's out of the question for you to go to the castle until I have smashed this infernal mystery; there is nothing you could do. If your brother is there I'll find him. You must be patient and remain here, where you are safe, and try to rest."

"I can not rest until I know what has happened to him," she cried desperately. "I shall go mad if I am left here alone!"

"But it's not safe for you to go," he insisted.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

OFF TO THE CASTLE.

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with som econcern and a question on his lips.

"MEGGIE, the postman is coming up the garden path. Would you mind going to the door?"

Mrs. Martin paused in the kneading of the large batch of dough and glanced toward the tiny sitting room. A pretty girl of about eighteen emerged in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crabbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips.

"Who is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

The girl burst into a flood of hot furious tears, and flung the letter scornfully upon the table.

"If Jack is too good for me, I don't thank her to tell me so," she declared. "She herself wasn't much until she married Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. Mrs. Martin picked up the letter and read it slowly. A look of contempt flashed in her honest gray eyes.

The letter, which was couched in terms of lofty condescension, mingled with biting satire, conveyed the unmistakable message that the silly attachment existing 'twixt Meggie and Jack was viewed with disapproval, and advised the girl to look elsewhere, unless she wished to bring Jack to financial beggary.

In a few minutes Meggie, her eyes red with crying, descended the staircase, and her mother gathered her in her arms.

"Take no heed of the foolish letter, my dear," she said soothingly.

Ten minutes later found Meggie on the way to Flamstead.

She Sees Jack.

A man emerged from behind a spur of cliffs and a sudden rush of color suffused her cheeks. The man saw her at the same time and came toward her at an increased pace. He was a tall, strongly built man of about twenty-one, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and darkly curled hair showed beneath his sou'wester.

"Great guns! What are you doing abroad a morning like this, Meggie?"

"I'm just on my way to Flamstead to make a few purchases, Jack," she said. "Are you putting out to sea to-day?" There was an anxious note in the inquiry, as she glanced uneasily toward the horizon, which was enshrouded in a threatening murkiness.

Her glance seemed to bring something to his recollection, for his bright eyes suddenly darkened, and he laid a hand upon the rough surface of his jersey. The next moment he had taken the girl's arm in a close grip.

"Did you receive a letter this morning, Meggie?" he asked abruptly.

A tell-tale flush of confusion dyed Meggie's cheeks, and her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Then it is true. She has been interfering between you and me. By heaven, I'll make her retract every word she has written.

* * * * *

It was a night long to be remembered by "those who go down to the sea in ships," and by the poor fisherfolk of Sharpel's Head in particular.

"I'm main afraid they won't do it. If they do, 'twill be by the grace o' God!"

The distress signal flickered for a second, and then was obliterated by the flying spume. The old fisherman who had first spoken made his hands into a megaphone, and gave vent to a loud but futile shout.

"'Tis awful to have to stand by and watch them go to their death without being able to lend a hand," he said.

"She cannot last long in a sea like this," declared old Timothy, with a shake of his head. "A boat wouldn't live a minute in such a boil. 'Tis years since I'v seen the like."

Scarcely had he spoken when there was a commotion at the rear of the watchers, and a slight cheer was raised. The men from the Flamstead Coastguard Station had arrived, and at their head raced Meggie Martin, her dark hair streaming in the wind. A minute later a rocket with a mighty rush soared seaward, taking with it the line. It hummed like a string of a gigantic harp. At length there emerged from the darkness the dim outline of the breeches-buoy, and from it hung the limp figure of a man.

"Why, 'tis Jim Carlin, of the Waterwitch."

A wild, terrified wail greeted the announcement, and Mrs. Ryalls rushed into the arc of light cast by the lantern.

"The Waterwitch! Good heavens! What of my husband?"

She reeled, and would have fallen had she not been caught by Meggie. The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girlish figure sprang toward him and seized him by the arm.

Jack Is Left.

"All are not saved!" she cried in a voice that was almost a scream. "There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured and Jack has sent him first. Oh, he quick, or 'twill be too late!"

The officer spun round with a sharp command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey.

"I'm afraid it's all over, miss. There is no response. He shook the line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn ashore, and almost at the same moment and hawser perceptibly slackened.

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!" shouted the officer. "Tighten up the hawser, lads, and let's have another try for the poor fellow."

The officer and his men hurried away with the lanterns toward the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy.

A reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, had swung herself into the buoy and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline toward the deafening inferno below.

Meggie felt a numbness creeping over her senses, but she bravely fought it back. She had set herself the task of saving Jack if he still lived and that task must be accomplished.

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips as she recognized it as the figure of Jack Ryalls. Meggie suddenly leaned from the buoy and, seizing the limp figure of her lover, drew him toward her. * * *

"Why, bless me, if there ain't two!" The cry escaped old Timothy.

"And if it ain't Meggie Martin that's bin out to the wreck to fetch Jack in, I'll stand hanging!" declared another voice. "Hold that lantern up, Bill. Let's have a look at the heroine of Sharpel's Head."

The feeble rays of light fell upon the locked figures of Jack Ryalls and his gallant rescuer, and the next moment a tremendous hurrah rose above the soughing wind. Five minutes later the unconscious couple were being conveyed home with the utmost haste, followed by a crowd of silent but enthusiastic witnesses of the daring deed.

* * * * * *

Twelve months later a pretty wedding was solemnized at the quaint church of Sharpel's, and the whole of the townsfolk turned out to do honor to the handsome pair; but never did a heart beat more proudly than did that of Jack Ryalls as he led his bride between the lines of fishermen who formed the guard of honor—the girl who had snatched him from the very jaws of death.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I DO NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and in love with a man two years my senior. He is nice and has a good position. I kept steady company with him for a year and a half. Then my mother stopped him from calling on me, but never gave a reason; but, as it is, we go out, when we get a chance, together. He has given me two diamond rings. Do you think it is right for me to see him as long as mother does not consent? CUTTIE.

You owe her obedience, and must not see this man clandestinely.

On the other hand, you are now 18, and your mother owes you a reason for her objections. Can you not persuade her to tell you what they are that he may have a chance to overcome them? If he is the man who is to tell you the "sweetest story of all," I don't want you to lose him.

NOT A DAY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19, and am keeping company with a man 25 years old. Do you think he is too old for me? We never quarrel. He loves me, I know, but my father thinks him too old for me. He makes fine pay and gives me good times. We think a lot about each other and get along fine. H. E.

He is not a day too old. Are you sure your father's objections are not based on some other ground?

BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I received an invitation from a young lady to attend her birthday party. Is it proper for me to accept the invitation, as I have never been introduced or even seen the young miss? PERPLEXED.

A girl who would do anything so foolish deserves the rebuke you are in position to give her by declining the invitation.

Household Suggestions

Weak eyes that ache when exposed to the glare of the sun, especially on the sea, should be treated with cold water compresses. These are folded on the closed lids, and ease the aching at once.

If troubled with ants indoors spread a piece of brown paper with marmalade rather thickly, then place it where they are most troublesome. It will soon be covered with them.

When boiling potatoes put a teaspoonful of sugar as well as salt in the water. This does not give a sweet taste, but makes them dry and floury.

Effect.

"Did you see the lovelight in her eyes?"

"No. The gaslight was in her eyes, and she squinted."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

HUSBAND deer, sed Ma to Pa last evening, at last I have found a perfek jewel of a servant. She caim to work this afternoon, & I want you to notis her wen she is serving dinner. She is as brite a gurl as I have ever met. She is a cullurd girl, her naim is Minyunette, & she went to a gurl's college that Booker Washington had sumthing to do with. Her flow of English is perfeck, Ma sed, & I was thinking that littel Boobie cud improve his English by jest lissening to her talk.

Didn't Warm Up.

I doant warm up vary much as you are talking, sed Pa. Sumhow I aint very keen for a servant that knows moar than we do. You know how long that one lasted with us that was all the time talking about Henry James & Shopenhaur.

Oh, but this gurl is different, sed Ma. She is vary quiet & I doant think she will air her nollege any.

I knew Pa wasn't going to like the new gurl, tho. I had herd her talking to Ma beefoar Pa caim hoam, & this is what she sed wen she was talking off her wraps: I presume that the duties connected with the situation will not be arduous. That dident sound like our other gurl that we had beefoar her, she sed when shall i pitch in?

She Comes In.

Well, wen dinner beegan Minyunette caim in to wait on the tabel. She had a high forehead & woar glasses.

Wife, sed Pa to Ma, you & little Bobbie are going to a Shakespeer reading to-nite.

Oh, sed Minyunette, I adoar Shakespeer. He is so many minded, his scope is so all em-bracing. I was just looking at yure fat husband, she sed, & thinking of Shakespeer's lines

I want fat men about me, sleek hedded men
& such as sleep o' nights.
Yon Cashus hath a leen & hungry look.
He thinks too much. Such men are dangerus!

Pa dropped his fork & looked at Minyunette the way he looks at me wen my report card says Deportment, 65. But Minyunette dident notis Pa, she kept on talking. I think the character of Shakespeer's Portia is a butiful one, she sed. So wise & yet so sweet and womanly. I can see her now in my mind's eye, saying

The quality of mercy is not strained,
It falleth as the gentle rain from heaven.
It is twice blessed, it blesseth him—

See here, sed Pa, I doant want to be any Simon Legree, but it wuddent be a bad ide, Minyunette, if you showed a littel moar sped out in the kitchen & a littel less in here. I am as hungry as a jailed suffragist, sed Pa, & it doesent help my hunger any to heer you spouting Shakespeer. The next thing I know you will be raving about Lord Byron and trying to reesite all of Childe Harolds Pilgrimage. Come on, now, sed Pa, moar spuds & less Shakespeer.

Didn't Like It.

Minyunette dident like it at all the way Pa talked. She took off her apron & sed to Ma, Madame, I regret that I shall be compelled to seek elsewhere for a posishun whare the environ-ments is moar en-vironing, sed Minyunette. I was sure I was going to like it here, beekaus you are a sweet nature, but yure husband is rude & of the soil. Our souls are not at-tuned, she sed. & so, obaying the word of fate, our ways part.

Good-NITE, sed Pa.

:-: The Melody :-:

WHEN evening came with the shadows she let her little frail hands fall into her lap as if every muscle and tendon had suddenly burst. Her finely-shaped dark-haired head rested on the table. She was sitting in front of her sewing machine, at which she had been working all day. All around her were scraps of silk and woolen goods, fashion papers and patterns lay in piles on the table, and when she moved her arms some of them dropped on the floor. Her head was dizzy with complete exhaustion. She was unable to think, but felt the increasing darkness as a blessing which put an end to the toil of the day.

It was ten years of work that had aged her. These years had been to her like one long walk through an endless desert without a single oasis to relieve the monotony; her feet had left no tracks on the sands; not a single cry from her lips had been responded to; nobody had met her on the way to shake her hand.

But on the other side all these years of weary thraldom there were a few years when she had been young and had lived. In those years the two had sat together, watching the coming of dark, and were glad and laughed at everything.

She was young then, and worked for small wages in a dressmaking shop. He had long hair, dreaming eyes, an inexhaustible fund of hope, and a violin—that was all but he was an artist. He was young, gave lessons on the violin and managed to make both ends meet. He was always bright and happy. Nobody could laugh as he could, or cheer her up as he could. He knew how to make everything appear in a golden and rosy light.

One night he came to her unexpectedly and took her into his arms.

"I cannot live without you," he said. "Why should we wait until we can afford to marry. Then we shall be old and gray. You cannot put happiness aside and say, 'Wait a few years; I cannot give you any of my time now; later on I will call for you.' Will you not come to me now and live with me as my wife?"

But she did not understand him. She struggled out of his arms, wounded and unhappy, an intense pain shooting through her every nerve and fiber. For solitude had made her shy and suspecting; his suggestion hurt her, and she asked him to leave her. She no longer remembered the passionate words that passed between them; but he left her, pale and angry, his black hair in disorder and his eyes shooting fire at her.

Two days passed. Then one even she saw it in one of the papers—a short notice which most people would have overlooked. He had shot himself. He had gone straight from her and had sent a bullet through his brain. She thought of all the hard words she had said to him and felt how unjust she had been to him.

As she was putting her room in order she felt a sudden desire to go out, to see people around her and hear them talk, to feel the cool evening air in her face.

From the park she heard music which irresistibly drew her in among the trees, where it was so much more pleasant than in the dreadful rushing and crowding of the streets. She stopped in front of a large restaurant with many chairs and tables outside and music in the veranda, where a few persons sat drinking and talking.

She sat down on a bench under a dripping tree, where she could hear the musicians. Here she sat for a long time quietly and sad, with her hands folded and her head thrown back.

Suddenly a musician got up to play a violin solo. He was a tall, dark young man; he stooped a little. His eyes were sad and melancholy under the heavy brows.

As he started to play she stood up trembling. She felt like rushing up to him and asking him to stop, but she fell back on the bench and hid her face in her hands.

"That melody contains all life," he used to say; "love, suffering and happiness."

When the violinist lowered his bow she stood up and went home. Like a small shadow she disappeared among the crowd. Nobody had a look or a thought for her.

But her pale, tired-looking mouth was smiling, and in her eyes was the light of happiness. No longer did she dread the visions of the day or the dreams of the night.

She had a hand to clasp now in the darkness, a hand which was to guide her through eternity.

Condensed Measure.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked a sharp servant of the milkman, whom she suspected of giving short measure.

"Yes," replied the man.

"Well, it won't do," said the girl. "When we want condensed milk we'll buy it at the grocer's."

Tommy—Boo-oo-oo! We were 'avin' a naval battle, and 's torpedoed me in the engine room!

How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing.

These pictures were especially posed for this page.

In the figure on top, Lady Constance shows how to stand gracefully. A simple exercise in swaying from foot to foot. This will teach you how to balance the weight properly. The next figure below will bring grace to arms and shoulders. Beside this it is a splendid exercise for reducing hips and thigs.

In the last figure Lady Constance gives a little tip-toe exercise.

EVERYONE agrees that for the art of sculpture we can not exceed the ancients. To me it seems that the Greeks had beautiful sculptured figures because they had wonderful models, and had wonderful models because they had a deep veneration for the almost divine beauty of the human form. And so out of this circle of perfection they chiseled glorious figures that we of to-day may use as models for the beautification of our own bodies.

To-day I am showing you three figures, and I shall dwell at length on them and what we may hope to acquire from a practice of the poses they portray. Let us make a slight study of the expression of countenance and body. For unless the face and body are attuned in the expression of a mood, there will be ungraceful uncertainty as a result.

The First Figure.

The first figure on top might stand for a number of ideas—injured innocence is the most dramatic idea that it suggests. To me it simply is a harmoniously simple pose, in which body and face express quiet dignity. Try it yourself—for it looks very easy to take a pose like this. But to stand poised firmly and gracefully on one foot, with the whole body balanced, ready to spring into motion and life and still at rest, is quite a feat. The ability to stand gracefully is rare—for people generally balance on heels or toes, or sag awkwardly on one hip.

Let me suggest an exercise for the acquisition of ability to stand gracefully. Balance the weight on the ball of the right foot, let the right arm hang easily at the side. Sway the body slightly to the left and raise the left arm to the chest, at the same time rising on the toes of the left foot until the weight is all balanced on the right foot. Then sway the weight gradually to the left foot, rising on the right toe and lifting the right arm to the chest. Simply sway from foot to foot in exactly the posture that figure one shows you.

Is Very Simple.

Figure two is gayety shown in one step of an old dance of triumph. It gives the most marvellous control of thigh, knee, ankle and instep, and will serve to bring down an accumulation of weight about the hips and thighs. Furthermore, it insures a graceful control of arms and shoulders.

The practice of this seemingly complicated exercise is simple when once you carefully analyze the picture I have posed for you. Beginning with the left foot, rise slowly to the toes, at the same time raising the other leg with the knee bent and the instep so flexed that the toes point almost perpendicularly to the floor.

The rising on the toes of one foot and the lifting of the other limb until the knee is far above the waist line must be simultaneous.

Practice this first, alternating from one foot to the other, with the arms hanging at the sides.

Then combine the arm and leg motion, and see what a gain in balance results.

Lift the arms with drooping wrists, and as the hands reach the shoulders, and the elbows are at waist height, turn the fingers up, at the same time turning out the hand above the raised knee, and elevating the up-pointing fingers of the other hand above the head.

Poise, balance, and reduction of superfluous hip-flesh—is this not a vast deal to gain from one dancing exercise?

The last figure illustrates a little faun-like movement that is splendid for back, throat and instep, as well as for flexibility of wrist. Walk forward on tip-toes, with the uplifted hands crossing first to the right and then to the left as the body's weight is thrown first on the right and then on the left foot. When the weight is coming on the right foot and the right wrist is foremost, throw the head to the right and give the body (which must be bent slightly back throughout the exercise) a slight turn to the right. Alternate this from foot to foot.

Always practice these exercises in regular alternation from right to left or left to right and back again to insure even bodily development. Real beauty of form demands as first requisite absolutely even and uniform development, for only when it is absolutely normal is the body truly lovely as Our Maker meant it to be.

Up-to-Date Jokes

The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something.

"I'll have to get rid of Fido," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?"

Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous and burning indignation, as she replied:

"Every single thing except the dog biscuits."

"Waiter," grumbled a customer, "I should like to know the meaning of this. Yesterday I was served with a portion of pudding twice the size of this."

"Indeed, sir," rejoined the waiter. "Where did you sit?"

"By the window," answered the customer.

"Oh, that accounts for it," said the waiter. "We always give people by the window large portions. It's an advertisement."

:-: The Sins of Our Fathers :-:

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

MILDRED writes: "I am deeply in love with a young man three years my senior. I have been keeping company with him for the past three months. I would like to bring him up to the house, but my father objects to me bringing any boys up to the house. What shall I do?"

In the category of sins which fathers visit upon their children, no mention is made of the heavy penalty that often results when a girl is compelled to do all her "sweethearting" outside the protecting walls of her home. If the streets, the parks, the public walks or the dark corners of steps are made a girl's parlor, then I contend her father is visiting upon her innocent head as great a burden as if he violated all the moral and physical laws. In the most trying period of her life, when through her love she is weakest to resist, she is cast out on the streets without even the environment of familiar scenes at home to remind and to restrain her.

One can not be as easily tempted when in the familiar scenes of one's youth and innocent dreams, as if in strange surroundings. It is as if every chair, the table, even the pictures on the wall, looked with accusing eyes, surrounding the girl with whose life they have always been a part with a moral influence that is never lightly brushed aside.

The girl who receives her lover in her parlor impresses him, though perhaps unconsciously, with the sanctity, the respectability, the dignity of a home. The girl whose parlor is the streets may be good and pure and sweet, and usually is, but girls whose object is not moral also meet men on the streets, and the similarity upsets his moral balance.

An Impression.

The girl in the parlor usually has a father or a mother in the next room, and the young man who calls is impressed with the fact that there is some one loving her, shielding her, to whom he will have to account if he offends. The girl on the street corners is without a mother or father, so far as any impression of personal security goes. She is thrown out like a waif; if she becomes a derelict the father or mother who refused her the privilege of receiving her lover in her parlor is to blame.

The memory of parents is criminally short. There are few of them who can call back to the days when they loved and were loved, and when the clasp of a hand, or a kiss, was worth more than all the wealth in the world, defied the wisdom of the ages. They have forgotten the call of youth.

There is no room in their memory for the cry of the heart for its mate, and, lacking this memory, they are as unfit to be parents of young girls and boys as an Egyptian mummy. They are without sympathy and understanding, at the period when the young in their charge need sympathy and understanding the most.

Without these they are also without charity. I have a notion that the father of Mildred, who compels her to do her "sweethearting" on the streets, would be like flint in his judgment if she yielded to the unwholesome influences of the dark corners of life and erred. Yet he would be more to blame than she.

Wisdo mto Refuse.

It is wisdom to refuse to let a girl bring a man to her home of whom her parents know nothing, but it is better to grant her even this privilege than to let her meet him on the streets. If they know nothing of him a closer inspection in their own home gives them every opportunity to know him better.

They can never know the manner of man their daughter is learning to love if they compel her to see him on street corners, and, being ignorant of him, they are without argument or weapons if he is undesirable.

Open the parlor for the girls. It is their right!

The Misfortunes of Joe Brick

A SHORT time ago I met my friend, Joe Brick. He looked worried. When I greeted him with a smile he groaned.

"Oh, if you only knew! If you knew, but you don't."

Then feeling, like most unhappy men, a desire to confide the story of his misery to somebody, he told it to me, and a pitiful story it was indeed.

"My affairs were going splendidly and I was already hoping to become a member of the Billionaires' Club," began Joe. "A rich marriage, I thought, would help me along. In society. I had often met Miss Ruby Smith, a daughter of the king of agriculture, a young lady of unusual beauty, but who unfortunately had neither arms nor legs. She was called the trunk woman. She was known to be amiable and sweet tempered, and was extraordinarily bright, so bright indeed that most of the schemes which had made her father the richest man in the United States had been hatched in her brain.

"I Decided to Marry."

"I decided to marry Ruby Smith, and one afternoon, dressed in my very best clothes, I asked her father for her hand.

"He looked at me sharply and said:

"'My daughter is very rich; how much are you worth?'

"I told the dreaded magnate all about my hopes. I proved to him that I had an idea which would revolutionize the manufacture of beet sugar, that I had a scheme to cut the cost of oleomargarine in two, and depicted to him all the details of my plan to increase the crop of Brussels sprouts, to triple its present size by sprinkling the plants twice a day with water from the celebrated Manneken fountain in Brussels, and how there were untold millions in my idea of exporting black radishes to the negroes in Africa.

"He was greatly impressed, took me into his arms and exclaimed:

"'You are to be my son-in-law, if Ruby will have you for her husband.'

"Miss Ruby received me most cordially. Poor little one, how beautiful she was! A regular Venus from Milo, only more perfect still, since her legs, too, were missing.

"I shall not go into details. It is enough to tell that she accepted me and a date was set for our wedding. It was celebrated with great splendor. It was the happiest day in my life. After the ceremony my wife received all her old friends with open arms, in spirit at least, in our new home. I felt my future was assured and knew that I would surely be elected for membership in the Millionaires' Club, which was the height of my ambition. Alas, it was not to be!"

"My dear little wife, my darling Ruby!' I said to my bride when we were alone: 'What do you say to giving up all our old habits for a few months and leave this feverish town for an idyllic wedding trip?'

"'You really think of everything, Joe!' she exclaimed, and as she could not clasp my hand she looked right into my soul with her angelic eyes. 'I am ready to follow you to the end of the world!'

"I have always been a most chivalrous fellow, so I felt like kissing her hand, but had to kiss her forehead instead.

"'I do love you so, Joe,' she whispered.

"'And I adore you, Ruby. There is no other woman in the world half so beautiful to me as you are!'

"We left for Canada in our private car, starting on our famous trip, which filled columns in the newspapers. We were to cross the Rocky Mountains and stay for some time in Monterey and Los Angeles, but the pitiless hand of destiny interfered. We were as happy as two turtle doves during the first part of our journey, and I felt that Ruby loved me more every day.

The Fatal Day.

"Then the fatal day came. The train, our own special train, of course, was speeding along at 70 miles an hour, when suddenly there was a shrill whistle and the airbrakes were jammed down hard. Train robbers had held us up and now invaded our drawing room.

"'Hands up!' cried a gigantic fellow standing in the doorway.

"Ruby behaved like a heroine and smiled indulgently at the bandit, while my hands shot upward.

"'Hands up!' roared the robber once more, and as Ruby, of course, was unable to comply with his request, he fired at her, killing her on the spot.

"That is how I became a widower,' sobbed Joe. "The king of agriculture accused me of leading his daughter, his right hand as he called her, into a trap. He blackballed me in the Billionaires' Club and did not keep a single promise to me in connection with my schemes. That is why I am a ruined man to-day. By the way, can you lend me a hundred?"

* * * * *

Only to-day I learned that Joe is spending his time in a nice, quiet retreat for the feeble-minded. He had told the story of his misfortunes to a dignified old judge while awaiting his turn at a barber shop.

By Virtue of Age.

"Yes," said the old man to his visitor. "I'm proud of my daughters, and it is the ambition of my heart to see them all comfortably married.

"What's more," he added knowingly, "I've made a bit of money in my time, so my girls wont go to their husbands penniless. There's Mary for example, 25 years old, and a real good lass—I'll give her $1,500 on her wedding day. And to Bet—you see, she has past her thirty-fifth summer—I'll give her, at any rate, a couple of thousand; whilst the man who takes Eliza can rely on taking with her at least $5,000 of the very best."

"By the way," inquired the young man, "how old is Eliza?"

"Forty," replied the elder.

"Hum! I suppose you don't happen to have a daughter somewhere between sixty and seventy?"

Do You Know---

There has been such a decline of recent years in the marriage rate of Trieste that one of the civic dignitaries suggests the institution of a system of compulsory matrimony. It is proposed that on a given date in each year all spinsters who have attained their twenty-fifth year and bachelors who have attained their thirtieth should be required to present themselves before the syndic in whose jurisdiction they reside. The names of those who on medical examination prove to be thoroughly sound would be sorted according to sex, placed in separate urns, and then drawn two at a time. The couples whose names are drawn together would, at the conclusion of the draw, be united forthwith by the syndic.

A traveling theatrical company, which is at present visiting Lille, France, gives performances in a couple of barges, which are towed along the canal from town to town. One barge does duty for the theater, while the other serves to house the players. The floating theater is comfortably fitted, and there is a large stage, with scenery painted by a member of the company.

One of the competitions in connection with the Welsh Territorial Artillery, which recently concluded its training on the sand dunes at Pembrey, was a bun-eating contest. Two soldiers set out to eat fourteen buns, the prize to go to the man who got through the lot in the quickest time. The winner ate his fourteen in 25 minutes, his opponent finishing five minutes later.

GAMBLING MAY WRECK GAME AT PELICANVILLE

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Southern League owes itself the duty of cleaning out the baseball gamblers at New Orleans.

That city, by far the largest in the league, should be the vertebra of the circuit. Instead, it is only an appendix—and a decidedly diseased appendix at that.

I've talked with a lot of managers and players in this league, firing at all of them the question, "What's the matter with New Orleans?"

Some of them didn't know.

The rest agreed.

"Too much gambling."

It is understood that gambling runs practically wide open in the New Orleans stands—that you can get a bet on anything from the outcome of the pennant race to the question of whether the next effort of the pitcher will be a ball or a strike.

* * *

GAMBLING ruins baseball wherever it gets a foothold. It makes knockers. It creates a suspicion of faking. It drives respectable people away from the games.

What New Orleans needs is a house cleaning.

The gamblers should be run out of the stands and kept out. Every effort should be made to keep down gambling on games to the minimum.

It is really up to President Kavanaugh to take a look into this question. The interests of the league can be protected in no other way. The New Orleans Baseball Association can't handle the question, and has proved it.

The league is sickening because of this festering sore.

Somebody phone Old Doctor Kavanaugh!

* * *

IT is sort of a pathetic coincidence that Jud Daley is to succeed Spencer at New Orleans. They are chips off the same block—or should we say tusk?

Judson doesn't seem to be hitting them as of old. It can't be that he is aging. So probably he's in sort of a slump.

He's a great card for any club, on account of his cutting-up and his kidding of the bleachers, and is worth his pay as a comedian.

* * *

SEVERAL men, well known in Dixie, are figuring prominently in the International League these days. Derrick is batting .346 with Baltimore, and is leading the league. Ed Lafitte leads the Providence batters with .329. Swacina and Bill Zimmerman, both former Southern Leaguers, are hitting moderately hard with the Newark club "Swats" has a mark of .302 to his credit, while "Heinie" is going at a .281 clip.

* * *

THIS Clark that the Crackers have just picked up appears to be one of the champion wild men of organized baseball. Until a few days ago he belonged to the Highlanders. In a game in St. Louis, Chance stuck him in. He started by giving Derrill Pratt four successive high ones. Pratt waited for four that didn't come near the plate. It was the same for Johnston.

Having pitched twelve successive balls, Wallace was next. Bob got a ball, and then, to the surprise of everybody, Clark pitched a strike. The next three were balls, though, and Chance yanked his recruit southpaw with the record of one strike in seventeen tries.

About sunset, Chance sold him to Clark Griffith.

Clark's big league career dates back to the days when Chase was managing the New York team. Arthur Irwin tipped Chase off to the fact that Clark had worlds of stuff. Chase sent "King" Brockett out to Sioux City to look Clark over, and, on the "King's" favorable report, Chase signed the southpaw.

Clark, upon being brought to civilization, proved wild as a bat. He had more stuff than Marquard and less control than Lefty Russell. He was shifted around a bit. Last season, he started with Rochester and was then sent to the Northwestern League. He was a successful twirler there, despite the fact that he issued AN AVERAGE OF NEARLY A BASE ON BALLS TO AN INNING.

It is doubtful if the world has ever seen a man wilder than Clark in his wildest moments. But when he has control, they couldn't hit him with a fishnet.

Clark will be another case for the attention of Old Reliable Joe Dunn. The man will be put under Joe's coaching. Maybe, Joseph can make a pitcher out of him. Any time Clark starts and is right, it's all over. Any time he's wild—good evening.

DENT OR BRADY TO-DAY; LOCALS EXPECT TO WIN

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18.—Bill Smith is going to shoot King Brady or "Slight" Dent against the Pelicans to-day. And we win it sure!

Those chaps were lucky to "get by" yesterday. They found us worn out after an awful trip, they got to an injured pitcher and it was all off. And at that we stalled them along for ten innings. We'll get them to-day.

Conzelman didn't have the stuff yesterday he had before he was hurt. He had no control over his curve and his fast ball did not break as it used to.

We got away in front as usual, scoring three runs in the first inning. They came back at us for a tie in the second and went out ahead in the fourth. In the seventh they added another on a wild pitch. We tied it up in our half of the eighth on doubles by Alperman and Bisland and my single.

In the fatal tenth, with two gone, Angemeier's single scored Williams, who had walked, and the game was over.

We aren't in the least bothered by the loss of the game, even to the Pelicans. We have thirteen more on our trip. If we can break even, we ask no more. Our long stay at home will give us the chance we want to win the pennant.

CUMMINGS BEATS THOMAS.

ANACONDA, MONT., July 18.—Dan Cummings, of Chicago, was given the decision over Young Joe Thomas, featherweight, at the end of twelve fast rounds of fighting last night.

FODDER FOR FANS

Although the National and American League races are far from ended, Ban Johnson and other members of the National Commission have already begun to plan for the 1913 world's series. Johnson says that in the event the Giants and Athletics win in their respective leagues the games will be played in New York and Philadelphia on alternate days.

* * *

Second Baseman Ted Cathers and Left Fielder Lee Magee, of the Cardinals, are wearing bruises and scratches to-day as the result of an old-fashioned fist fight in which they indulged during the Giants-Cardinals double-header. Cathers intimated that Magee couldn't catch a cold and to disprove this assertion Magee sailed into his fellow-player. Both were put out of the game.

* * *

Larry Chappelle, the hard-hitting outfielder of the American Association for whom Charles Comiskey, owner of the White Sox, paid $15,000, is scheduled to apear in a White Sox uniform this afternoon for the first time. Chappelle disappeared en route from Milwaukee to Chicago, but turned up in McCloskey, Ill. He went to visit his mother.

* * *

Minus two vets, Hans Wagner and Catcher Gibson, the Pirates managed to take the first game of their four-game series with the Dodgers.

* * *

The Athletics are now leading the American League with 110 points separating them from the Naps.

* * *

Clarke Griffith, of the Senators, predicts that the Athletics will not win the American League pennant, despite their present big lead. He also predicts that Plank and Bender will soon cave in.

* * *

Carl Cashion, the young star pitcher of the Senators, who has been out of the game for some time with a sore arm, will not be able to play again this season.

* * *

Roy Wilkinson, a semi-professional pitcher of Rochester, N. Y., has been signed up by the Naps.

* * *

Pitcher Boak, of the Akron, Ohio, club, of the Interstate League, has been bought by the Cardinals.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY AT PONCE

At Ponce DeLeon park Saturday afternoon the two leading clubs of the Sunday School League will meet in a double-header. In the absence of Billy Smith's Crackers, fans in large numbers are expected to provide the best crowd of the Sunday school season for the Saturday afternoon games.

The First Baptist team, leading the league with twelve straight victories and no defeats, has been playing such ball as to attract sidewise glances from the pennant races of the larger leagues, and is determined to add two more wins Saturday. The S. V. D. club, in second place, with seven victories and three defeats, is equally determined to break up the winning streak of the Baptists. Both teams will be in classiest condition for the double-header Saturday, which is scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

"I DIDN'T RESIGN, I WAS FIRED," SAYS JAKE STAHL

BOSTON, July 18.—"I didn't resign from the Red Sox; I was fired," declared Jake Stahl, when he arrived in Boston. "I gave the Red Sox the best of the baseball that was in me. I was with them heart and soul. That club was the only one which I was ever really interested in. And I wish them all the best of success," continued Stahl.

SOUTH MICHIGAN TEAMS PLAY 20-INNING GAME

ADRIAN, MICH., July 18.—Battle Creek and Adrian, the leading teams in the Southern Michigan League, yesterday played twenty innings to a tie, each scoring one run before darkness ended the struggle. Manager Jenkins, of Adrian, in the fourth inning, singled, and advancing on a sacrifice hit and a passed ball, was scored on a sacrifice fly. Pitcher McDonald, of Battle Creek, tripled in the sixth and scored on an error. Loomis, Adrian's pitcher, struck out nineteen batters and issued one pass, purposely, in the twentieth inning. McDonald fanned sixteen and passed none.

BUSINESS.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Nor ever a soul to mutter,
Nor ever a voice to bawl.

Oh, well for the guys who lose!
They are only a bunch of dubs.
They get the hook and a vicious look
Like the manager of the Cubs.

And the gate receipts go on,
Though the manager may be nil,
And the magnates cry for a winning guy,
As they hark to the sound of the till.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Or the friends you have, though they hand you salve,
Will hammer you to the wall.

Frank Chance was once a catcher. All he catches now is a flock of Gehenna.

Despite the fact that the Tigers whopped a few wallops into the Athletics, there is a deep suspicion that whopping the Athletics is not going to become a popular pastime.

Looking over the sport pages, we note that Larry Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues. This is a great truth. Mr. Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues.

The fact that Messrs. McAleer and Stahl have split reminds us that both denied it. The only conclusion to be drawn is that they were prevaricating, or didn't know it was loaded.

Reading over the papers, one notes that there are bulky fields at Porter. But as for bulky purses that's something else again.

ODE TO A FIRST BASEMAN.

In the days of old
Jack Knight was sold,
As though he were a dub.
You cannot buy
That selfsame guy
While I am on this club.

The St. Louis Browns have protested a game won from them by the Yanks. If you are looking for nothing to worry about, this is it.

$13,500 IN CASH WAS PAID FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—A check for $13,500, in addition to Outfielder Beall and a catcher, covers the terms of transfer of Outfielder Chappelle, of Milwaukee, to the Chicago American League team, according to authoritative information today.

TEN-ROUND GO SCHEDULED.

Charley White, of Chicago, is scheduled to meet Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, in a ten-round fight at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Abel is in the city. White, it is said, will arrive to-day. The fighters have agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 p. m. White says he will not fight if Abel is one ounce over weight.

HOW TO ATTAIN GOF BENEFITS TOLD BY EVANS

By "Chick" Evans.

IT is no doubt true that the majority of the golfers play simply for the exercise the game affords. Certainly golf furnishes an excellent opportunity for exercise, but it also supplies one of the finest studies in the world, and he who plays only for exercise misses half the pleasure. One can get a good deal of fun and exercise by just batting the ball around, yet surely much additional enjoyment can be found in attempting to discover the reasons that lie back of good or poor shots.

D. R. Forgan has said that "golf is the study of a lifetime," and this is undeniably true if one wishes to attain excellence. Every day the careful player can learn something about it and at the same time discover new obstacles to be overcome. It may be argued that the business man has no time to study a new game, but a little more care in playing would require but little more time.

There is a great pleasure in knowing how a thing is done, and no great progress can be made unless the underlying reasons for success are understood. Accidents happen, of course, and fortune is proverbially fickle, but she, like providence, is a little more inclined to help those who help themselves.

There is a great deal of good golf literature to be obtained at present, and I have no doubt a great deal of information can be obtained in that way. Personally, I have never read a book on golf except in the most casual manner, but I grew up on a golf links, and, at the observing age, learned my golf from observation. I believe strongly in books, however, and I think, if they are closely followed, they can be of much assistance to the beginner. This fall I intend to read as many golf books as I can lay my hands on, and I hope thereby to improve my game.

BRITTON REAL OPPONENT FOR TITLE HOLDER

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Not since the days when Frank Garrard and Martin Duffy, of this city, looked to be pretty fair championship material in the lightweight class have the local fight fans been so anxious to see a Chicagoan get a crack at the title. Neither Garrard nor Duffy ever made good in their day, but they were just as highly regarded along in the late 90s as are Jack Britton and Packey McFarland, present-day Chicago champions. Both Jack and Packey have a world of friends right here, and to say that they have their ears to the ground listening for some sort of a favorable report from the champion on the different propositions that have been hurled at him is putting it mildly.

* * *

PACKEY, while not issuing any direct challenges, has let it be made known to Ritchie that nothing would delight him more than to take him on in a 20-round contest, providing the weight bars be lowered just a little more, say another pound, letting the stock yards favorite in at 135 pounds, with the scaling done several hours in advance of the battle's start. With a foe of the McFarland caliber it is not likely that the champion will consent at all to any such an arrangement. He insisted upon 134 pounds for Rivers, and then trimmed the Los Angeles lad to the queen's taste, if queens have any particular taste in such matters. But from 134 pounds three hours or so before to 135 pounds five or six hours before is a vast gap that even the keen Ritchie eye is not likely to measure lightly.

* * *

BUT the Britton case is hugely different. Here is a boy who boldly flaunts this offer in the champion's face: "Make the weight, any figure that you choose," and then awaits the answer. Now, that leaves absolutely no loopholes for excuse or room for a single argument. Britton simply does not care what the poundage is, says so, and there rests his case. What will the answer be, to say nothing of the harvest?

* * *

NO sane man could ever accuse Willie Ritchie of cowardice. The man who jumped into the breach with Freddie Welch when Ad Wolgast was taken to the hospital and fought the English star almost to a standstill with but a few hours notice, then whaled Ad Wolgast out of his title and went in and slugged with Joe Rivers at the latter's own game, is possessed, as Bill Naughton says, of a lion's heart. But Willie is a financier along with his other accomplishments and is not likely to enter into any contracts that do not promise the brightest of monetary returns. There isn't a doubt that if some promoter can see his way clear to offering the right sort of a prize for the champion he will lend himself to the match. Then we will see a real old-time battle between two of the greatest men that ever drew on a pair of gloves.

Pelky-Smith Battle For Sept. 1—Maybe

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Arthur Pelky and his manager, Tommy Burns, are in town. Pelky came here in quest of ring battles, and picked as his choice for first battle "Gunboat" Smith. Burns and his fighter held a long conference with Jimmy Coffroth, and if arrangements can be made Pelky and Smith will furnish the Labor Day card in this city. Pelky had little to say, Burns doing all the talking.

"There will be a general disposition to look upon Pelky as a ring accident, just as the people tagged Willie Ritchie as a false alarm," said Burns.

"This is a mistake. My man has had 33 fights without having had a decision given against him. He made Jess Willard quit cold, and he stopped Jim Barry in five rounds. All that he needs is the opportunity to prove that he is the best heavyweight boxer in the game to-day."

WISCONSIN BOXING BILL IS SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—Governor Francis McGovern has signed the Hedding boxing bill and the sport becomes legalized in Wisconsin the same as in New York State.

Governor McGovern had protests from many sources, but stated that he considered that in view of thousands of petitions in favor of the sport it was only just to the majority that they should be given a chance to show that boxing under proper conditions is much better than under no law at all.

It will now be up to the Governor to appoint a commission to handle the boxing game in the State.

SCHAEFER-GRAHAM DRAW.

DUBUQUE, IOWA, July 18.—Willie Schaefer, of Chicago, and Mike Graham, of Milwaukee, welterweights, last night fought ten fast rounds to a draw at the Riverside arena.

MORRIS SCORES A K. O.!

CLOVIS, N. MEX., July 18.—In a scheduled ten-round boxing bout staged in an open-air arena here last night, Carl Morris, of Oklahoma, knocked out Marty Cutler, a Chicago heavyweight, in the second round.

Dixie Handicap To Be Thriller

Six Men on Track at Once

IF they get through the Dixie Handicap at the Motordrome to-night without smearing a half-dozen riders all over the track they have pulled the race miracle of the year. For they are going to start six riders in this event, three of them with a lap lead over the other three. And the scratch men are going to try to catch the handicap men within four miles.

This affair will be a loud noise. Nothing can stop it. Every time they get four riders on the track at once it looks as though all of them were going to break their neck. With six on it in a handicap race, which will mean that three of the men must ride their bally heads off to catch the other three, there should be more excitement than the local Drome ever dreamed of before.

This will not be a team race, as might be judged from the description. Of course, the handicap men will team together at the start, as a means of keeping ahead. And the scratch men will hang together to lend each other a pace in their effort to catch up. But once the scratch men get within striking distance, it will be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. When the three pursuing riders reach the three handicap men and all six of them tie up in an effort to gain the leadership anything may happen. Of course, the handicap men will never give an inch. If they can spread all over the track they will do it. That means that the men coming from behind at 85 miles an hour must worm their way through.

This will unquestionably be a big race. It will be fast because the scratch men must overcome a quarter of a mile lead in four miles. It will be dangerous and sensational of necessity because six men will be on the track at one time. And the winner is surely hard to pick.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Chicago boxing critics are working hard these days trying to force Willie Ritchie into a match with either Packey McFarland or Jack Britton. Both boys hail from the Windy City and have met practically every boy of note during the past two years.

* * *

Frankie Whitney is certainly reaping in the dough these days. The Cedar Rapids "fighting carpenter" will take on Rudy Unholz in a scheduled 10-round battle at Denver on Friday night, and it is a pretty safe bet that Frankie will get at least as good as a draw. During the past six months Whitney has had nearly a dozen battles.

* * *

Many fans are picking Matty Baldwin to prove a stumbling block for Leach Cross when the pair exchange blows at Los Angeles on July 29. Although Matty has fought nearly 300 fights he has still to suffer his first knockout. He also holds a 20-round verdict over Willie Ritchie.

* * *

Kid Julian, the Syracuse featherweight, has accepted terms to meet Cal Delaney, of Cleveland, in a 12-round bout at Cleveland on July 26. Both boys are lightweights.

* * *

Charles Ledoux, the French bantamweight champion, is in bad shape from the beating handed him by Kid Williams at Los Angeles the early part of this week. It may be months before the game boy from across the pond will be able to don the gloves again.

* * *

Jim Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is to make his next fight against Freddie Hicks at Butte, Mont., on August 2. The pair are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Steve Ketchel, the tough little lightweight from Chicago, added another victory to his list Wednesday night by defeating Phil Knight. The former was awarded the battle in the seventh round on a foul. Incidentally, Knight has been barred from boxing at Butte, Mont., for six months.

* * *

John Alex, the local fight manager, has matched his lightweight, Tom Brown, to meet some boy at Marietta, Ga., the latter part of this month. The bout is to be staged as the semi-windup to the Terry Nelson-Seymore set-to. John is a busy boy these days getting is protege into shape.

* * *

Young Denny, the New Orleans welterweight, has already started training for his 20-round engagement with "Wildcat" Ferns at the Pelican City on Labor Day. He is boxing daily with Joe Thomas.

* * *

Kid Brooks, local bantamweight, is still waiting to hear from some boy of a poundage in regard to a match. He is particularly anxious to hear from either Meyer Pries or Kid Duke.

* * *

The next big bout to be staged in New York will be a 10-round engagement between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn on August 8. Flynn is at present in Denver, but reports from the Colorado city state that he will leave for the battle ground some time next week.

WILMINGTON, DEL., July 18.—Five amateur marksmen were tied yesterday for first place in the Eastern handicap, the feature event of the eighth annual Eastern handicap trap shooting tournament when darkness prevented further competition. The first leaders are M. L. Wise, of Marysville, Pa.; George M. Howell, Northumberland, Pa.; R. A. Hall, Macon, Ga., each with a score of 95 out of a possible 100. The tournament will be concluded to-day.

H. H. Sloan, of Philadelphia, was high amateur in the three days' shooting, breaking 562 in a possible 600. Charles G. Spencer, of St. Louis, was high professional, with 578 breaks.

M. D. Gibbs, of Union City, Tenn., and Lester S. German, of Aberdeen, Md., professionals, yesterday led their field with 100 straight each.

COACH J. W. HEISMAN, OF YELLOW JACKETS, WRITES ABOUT:

Ball Players That Tech Has Turned Out

By J. W. Heisman.

SO many college players are breaking into professional ball these days, and so many of them with great success, that the thing no longer occasions the surprise and comment that used to ensue. Something like 25 years ago, when I was attending a New England college, I can remember with what dumbfoundment we learned one day that one of our varsity players had received an offer from Boston. It tickled us nearly to death!

* * *

Among Southern colleges, Tech early took the lead in this respect by sending the great Henley straight to the big show. Unless my memory fails me badly, it was to the Athletics that Henley went, and it was about thirteen years ago. Even at that early date, when hardly any other professional managers would look at a college player, Connie Mack had his eyes wide open as to their possible usefulness.

When Henley first went to Tech he played first base, and he played it well. He was about 6 feet 1 inch tall, but very slender. His arms were very strong, and he had a fine free shoulder swing. Rather a handsome chap, this Henley, and a good, jovial fellow. Came from the little hamlet of Jasper, I believe, in North Georgia, the section that also sent Craig Day and DeWitt Poole to Tech—two other awfully good players and pitchers, who, however, never went into professional ball.

After seevral years of usefulness in the big league Henley was sent to the Rochester club, where he put in a couple more years of good work. But for some reason, his health was steadily failing him and finally he had to give it up. Just where he is to-to-day, I can not say. I know he went to Florida for a while in search of improved health, and perhaps he found it; at least we all hope so.

At the time Weldon was at the zenith of his glory as a college pitcher, Mercer was turning out some exceedingly strong teams. Their mainstay on the mound was the unforgotten Will Gunn, now a successful architect in Macon. It will have to be given up that Gunn was some gun himself when it came to making a noise like a pitcher, and endless were the arguments of that day in rah rah circles as to which was the better. I am not going into a history of the friendly feud, but it is worth observing that when the two teams finally did face each other at old Brisbine Park, with their respective stars down on the score card to do the hurling, there was some crowd present to witness the ceremonies, and some little excitement was had. The game was won by Tech; score, 30 to 0.

* * *

ANOTHER great picher that Tech turned out about the same time that Henley was absorbing all the limelight, was little Jimmy Lavendar, now with the Chicago Cubs. It would perhaps be more correct to say that Tech turned Jimmy out, or that it turned out an engineer, not that it turned out another pitcher, for at that time, Jimmy didn't play ball at all, at least he never went out for the varsity; and so it is merely an accident that his youthful career was in any way associated with Tech's.

Lavendar was born and reared in South Georgia. He had seen a picture or two of a baseball before coming to Tech, but didn't care enough for the game to even come out and try for the team. It was after leaving Tech that his acquaintance with the pellet grew into a thing of beauty; and after slamming the sphere around corner lots for a short time, it was found that Jimmy had the makings of a really, truly pitcher.

It was while doing stellar work with the Providence team of the Eastern League that Lavendar attracted Chicago's attention. Now, Jimmy is one of the "its" of the Cubs, and promises to remain one for some years yet.

* * *

TWO Atlanta boys attending Tech were the next to break into the professional class, and they both made good from the jump. One of these was Sam Woodward, the other, Jim Ison. The former was captain and catcher of my 1904 Tech team, while Jim was official first-sacker of the same aggregation.

Woodward was rather small for a catcher, but he had plenty of nerve, heaps of judgment, always kept cool, had a fine arm, was quick as a cat, and made a fine lead-off man, as he batted from the port side. Sam's favorite word of encouragement to his pitchers—Poole, Day and Butler—was "Beauty" after every pitched ball, but each time in a different intonation and with varying inflection and accents—and this quite regardless, in my opinion, of whether the ball was really a beauty or a pumpkin.

Sam went to the Cotton States with Bernie McCay, where he played fine ball; but a blow on the head by a pitched ball came near to putting out his light. It took him quite a long time to recover. Later, Sam went to the Carolina League, and for several seasons managed the Anderson, S. C. club with signal success. He is now engaged in business in Atlanta and is making a success of life as president of the Woodward Electric Company.

By the way, during the college season of 1904, Sam caught every inning of every game without making a single error, and I gave him All-Southern catcher for it.

Jim Ison was one of the hardest-hitting first basemen I ever saw in college ranks. He was a godd, willing, cheery, all-around player and my clean-up man, which was some distinction with a team that had five men on its roster all batting over 400.

I forget what professional team Jim first joined, but he never had any trouble holding his berth right from the jump. He played several very successful seasons with Macon, where he again stung the pill hard, and he also starred in the Virginia League at second base for the Richmond club. Here he was an even better fielder than at first base.

Jimmy found an opportunity to go into a lucrative business here in Atlanta several years ago and decided to give up the game for good, though it cost him a pang or two to do so. Now, he is fat, happy and making money in the Gate City.

Later, I will tell of some other players Tech has turned out.

HAUSER GOES TO HOSPITAL.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 18.—Shortstop Hauser, of the St. Louis National baseball team, is on his way to Baltimore, where he will be operated on by Dr. William S. Baer, of Johns Hopkins Hospital. It is said that the player has a misplaced cartilage in his right knee.

MEEHAN BESTS MANTELL.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 18.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here. By constant clinching in the last round Mantell saved himself from being knocked out.

COBB BACK TO-DAY.

DETROIT, MICH., July 18.—President Ban Johnson announced that Ty Cobb, suspended recently for an argument with Umpire Hildebrand, will be back in the game to-day.

Best Bet Is to Play Champions

Title Holders Have Big Shade

By Left Hook.

HERE'S a little tip for the men who bet good con on the results of encounters in the boxing arena. Never stop betting on a champion of any class until he has been beaten. The suggestion of such a theme for a little fighting story is brought up by the manner in which the Joe Rivers supporters lost so heavily on the Los Angeles boy in his battle with Willie Ritchie, in San Francisco, July 4. Incidentally, the idea of it was brought out forcibly by some remarks that Battling Nelson made the day after the holiday while the famous iron man of the lightweight class was discussing results and congratulating himself on having picked six out of seven winners after having bet personally on three of them and failing to get down on the one loser that he picked.

* * *

IT is a foolish thing to bet against a champion, even if you don't like him personally and haven't such a high opinion of his fistic merits, because, according to Bat Nelson, champions always win a lot of battles in a row after they attain the title and have a big natural shade in all of their contests. The argument is a sound one, because champions, after annexing titles, do not make the kind of matches that they can not win—and they know they can win them when they make them. Mind you, this is not an intimation that there is anything wrong or any skulduggery practiced by any of them. But the average champion is a pretty wise sort of a gink. He knows that to keep a title is to make plenty of money. Hence, he figures with the greatest of care, and when finally he signs to battle, it's about 3 to 1 that he is going to win.

* * *

AND another thing worth figuring is that referees have natural leanings toward champions and don't take titles away from them without the very best of cause. Which is a mighty strong point in favor of the champion when he starts into action. But, of course, the strongest point of all is the fact, borne out by many a precedent, that champions almost always win a bunch of fights before being compelled to resign the top rung of the ladder.

AN automobile that proves itself all its makers claim for it is certainly worth your consideration.

The Mitchell is just such a car. Its makers know when they pronounce it the greatest value offered to automobile buyers to-day that the car will bear them out in every detail.

This value is caused by many reasons, some of which are:

The proved excellence of material and workmanship throughout the entire car;
A design which makes for simple elegance in appearance; for comfort and safety in riding.

Long stroke T-head motor—the best known development for power, speed and silence;

Electric self-starter and electric lighting system;

Left drive with center control—a great advance in the convenience of automobile operation;

French Belaire springs; Bosch ignition; Rayfield carburetor; Firestone demountable rims; 36-inch wheels; rain-vision windshield; Jones speedometer; silk mohair top with dust cover; Turkish upholstered cushions; Timken front axle bearings; portable electric lamp; gasoline tank gauge.

WAR CHIEF SAYS M'PHERSON IS VITAL POST

Atlanta Army Men Elated Over the Favorable Impression Fort Made on Garrison.

Local army officers are jubilant over the praise bestowed upon Fort McPherson by Secretary of War Jindley M. Garrison Thursday, when, with Major General Leonard Wood and Major General J. B. Aleshire, he made an inspection of the post. It is regarded as practically certain that Secretary Garrison will repeat the recommendation of a year ago that the local post be made a brigade headquarters, which would mean several additional regiments of soldiers would be quartered at Fort McPherson.

"Everything at Fort McPherson is admirably conducted," declared the Secretary. "Such a post is a credit to our country. The strategic position of the Atlanta post is valuable."

Both Secretary Garrison and General Wood said they could not state definitely whether the local post would be made a brigade post, but intimated such a step is likely.

"Nothing definite will be given out until after Secretary Garrison has completed his tour of the 49 posts of the country," said General Wood. "However, we have always regarded the Atlanta territory as important because of its strategic position."

Secretary Garrison's party, including General R. K. Evans, Colonel Barth, Lieutenant Tucker, Colonel VanOrsdale and others, were entertained at the home of Clark Howell and the Piedmont Driving Club Thursday afternoon. Secretary Garrison left Atlanta at 5:10 o'clock, and to-day is inspecting Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga.

Garrison Inspects Fort Oglethorpe.

CHATTANOOGA, July 18.—Secretary of War Garrison, accompanied by Major General Aleshire, quartermaster general, inspected the quarters of the Eleventh Cavalry at Fort Oglethorpe this morning and visited the site of the proposede brigade post at Chickamauga Park.

Secretary Garrison and his party arrived from Atlanta last night and will leave to-night for Little Rock. An open-air dinner will be tendered the distinguished guests to-night at Signal Mountain Inn, on Waldens Ridge, by the Chamber of Commerce. A breakfast was tendered early this morning at the Commercial Club.

Lunatic's Bequest To Alfonso Upheld

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 18.—The civil court at St. Gaudens upheld to-day the validity of the will of Albert Sapene, formerly Mayor of a small town near Toulon, who bequeathed $500,000 to King Alfonso of Spain.

Sapene, who was an ardent royalist and a great admirer of the Spanish King, died in an asylum. His sister sought to have the will set aside on the ground that Sapene was insane when he made it.

Senators' Swimming Match in Demand

WASHINGTON, July 18.—When Senator Pomerene challenged Senator Owen to a swimming match and the latter accepted they did not realize that so many persons were interested in Congressional aquatic sports. Enterprising persons have sought to induce the Senatorial swimmers to make it a national event.

One offer came from the manager of a resort near New York, who assured Senator Owen "he would have a crowd of spectators larger than could be gathered anywhere else in the world."

GEORGIA'S PEACH CROP SHORT, BUT 'PEACHERINOS' STILL ARE PLENTIFUL

Crop Now Moving (Via Railroads and Up and Down Peachtree) Sets Quality Record.

The movement of what is reported as the best crop of peaches ever grown in Georgia is now in full swing up and down Peachtree street and via railroad to the East.

H. B. Marks, secretary-manager of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, who claims to know all about peaches—that is, the edible kind—declared Thursday that the crop, while a light one, was bringing the highest prices ever known.

Miss Danese Milhous and another peach.

"Peaches are selling at from $2.30 to $2.50 f. o. b.," said Mr. Marks. "More than 1,000 cars have already been shipped, most of them going to New York, being divided between New York, Philadelphia and Boston. 'Georgia Belles' and 'Elbertas' form the bulk of the shipments.

"A sharp frost caused a short yield, but the high prices which the peaches are bringing more than make up for this."

The "peachy" girls are here in abundance, however, and even the hot weather is not driving all the Atlanta beauties to the cooler summer resorts. Miss Danese Milhous, one of the prettiest of the younger Atlanta girls, was snapped just as she was beginning to eat one of the first of the North Georgia grown peaches to arrive in the city.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Cool.

There are two wonderfully popular things about the Forsyth these days—a mighty inviting and cool place of recreation and the bill for the week is of exceptional value.

Valerie Beggere proves every right to the claim that she is the star of all dramatic artists that have adopted vaudeville. She is presenting a new playlet that deals with the crook idea. She appeals to a judge to save her husband, who has been convicted on circumstantial evidence, and convinces the judge, by a keen trick, that circumstantial evidence is a mighty bad thing to count too much on.

Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, is scoring the hit of his young life, and the Metropolitan Minstrels prove to be one of the best drawing cards the Forsyth has had. There are pretty girls and clever boys in this act.

John F. Conroy, the world-famous life-saver, and his diving models will be the star attraction for next week, presenting what is claimed to be the greatest swimming and diving act in vaudeville. Deiro, the piano-accordionist, and the Great Lester, ventriloquist, are on the bill.

Grand Offers Treat.

A wonderful motion picture will be shown at the Grand all of next week. It is the supreme masterpiece of modern photo-plays, and is nothing less than Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." There are more than 12,000 feet of film in the nine reels that represent the nine books in the wonderful story written more than a half century ago by the famous French author.

The greatest actors in France volunteered their services in making the picture and every place that is described in the book has been visited and used by the actors for their stage in producing the great work.

This week the Grand is attracting large attendance with a daily change of program of high-class first-run motion pictures.

Bijou Show Catchy.

Brimful of catchy features, pretty musical numbers, entertaining specialties and laughable comedy, this week's bill at the Bijou, known as Carle, a drawing splendid audiences to the popular theater. Every principal in the cast is clever in his or her line of work and some excellent specialties are introduced, not to mention a dozen musical numbers in which the big chorus takes part.

For next week the management announces another corking musical comedy, entitled "Good Morning, Judge," a musical cocktail with Pearl Brothers and Burns and twenty others.

Broken Neck Mended; Ice Cream Kills Him

Mailing Letter, He Pulled Fire Alarm

CHICAGO, July 18.—Leon Wells, of Berlin, Mich., attempted to mail a letter to his mother in his home town. The result was the hasty arrival of two battalions of fire-fighting apparatus and a large crowd at the busiest corner in Chicago, that of the Masonic Temple. Traffic was tied up for several minutes before four fire department officials, 100 firemen, ten pieces of apparatus, a patrol wagon containing ten policemen and an ambulance with three doctors, returned to their stations.

"I thought it was a mail box," explained Leon. "I never saw a fire alarm like that. In our town we have a bell in the steeple."

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

You never can tell!

The grand young county of Candler on Thursday morning looked to be as good a bet as one might stake his coin upon—and to-day, like Caesar dead, there are none so poor as to do it reverence!

Perhaps that isn't quite fair to Candler, for there is a good chance that it may be reconsidered, and go over to next year, when, in forgetfulness of the bitterness of Thursday's fight on the floor of the House, Candler yet may come into its own.

Unquestionably, a serious tactical error was made when the friends of Candler, even without intending anything arbitrary, perhaps, moved the previous question, and thereby closed debate save from their own point of view.

It requires a two-thirds vote of the House to pass a Constitutional amendment, whereas it only requires a majority to order the previous question. The previous question, having been ordered by that majority, however, it immediately gave the minority opposition the right to raise the cry of "Gag rule," which cry said minority promptly proceeded to raise—vociferously and with deadly effect upon Candler!

The majority, seeing its blunder, undertook to right things—but too late.

Burwell, as fair and impartial a presiding officer as ever held the gavel, plainly was anxious to relieve the House of its embarrassment if he could, but under the rules, he could not. The House had tied his hands. Several virtuous gentlemen, who had not even called for a division on the vote for the previous question, were very much outraged that the previous question had been ordered, nevertheless—and their expressions upon the floor with respect to that feeling of outrage evidently impressed the House profoundly, as the House proceeded to sustain said outraged point of view.

Altogether, the fight on Candler was as pretty a piece of claptrap as ever was slipped over—but it was slipped, all right, and that is what hurt Candler's feelings!

Moral: Never be too sure your enemy can not throw straight, even if he is left-handed!

Undoubtedly there is genuine merit in the Candler County proposal, and there hardly is a doubt that eventually a new county will be created there.

And the Candlerites may get some consolation from that, after all!

The many friends—as they would say in the Springplace Jimplecute, no doubt—of the well-known Georgian mentioned, will read the following paragraphic gem from The Thomasville Times-Enterprise with mingled feelings of melancholy and joy:

Jim Nevin is more truthful and lots more interesting writing about Governor Brown's gold pen than he was penning that conglomerate mess about the Thomasville cow.

Now, what do you know about that?

The Legislature is looking forward to its forthcoming visit to Augusta with genuine delight.

A great time is being framed up for the Solons, and there will be "doings" from the time the train arrives in Augusta Saturday about noon, until it leaves that night.

Many members are anticipating particularly a visit to Carmichael's famous fishing club with rare pleasure.

This place has been made famous by dozens of distinguished visitors, among them being President Taft Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and others.

The House roll call rarely develops anybody absent, although it frequently is insisted upon.

Thursday an attempt was made to dispense with the roll call, but it was objected to. Nobody was absent, however—which shows what a fine system of looking after the membership is in vogue about the clerk's desk.

It remained for Mr. Moss, of Cobb, rather to hit the nail squarely on the head in explaining his Candler County vote Thursday, when he said:

"I do not indorse this call for the previous question and the shutting off of debate, but I shall not, merely because of that, refuse to do that which under my oath I agreed to do—that is, vote for that which I think best for the State.

"Because a tactical blunder may have been made by the floor leaders in charge of this measure, I shall not, therefore, visit my wrath upon the good people of the South Georgia territory asking to be made into this new county, who come here sincerely and honestly knocking at the doors of the union of counties.

"I can not understand how members can get up here and say they had intended voting for this measure, and would do so, but for the fact that a parliamentary blunder has been made in this House. It impresses me as rather mean and below the belt thus to hit the unoffending Candler County citizens, many of them good farmers, who are here asking a perfectly legitimate thing.

"If a man be sincerely against this measure, all right—he should so vote. But to make a mere mistake in parliamentary procedure an excuse for striking down an admitted meritorious proposition—that is all wrong. I believe this proposition is good, therefore, I shall vote aye!"

Mr. Moss is not inclined to the creation of new counties particularly, but the proposed county of Candler he had picked as one of the two deserving to win—and he voted accordingly.

His little speech in explaining his vote made a distinctly favorable impression on the House.

Easy to Get Rid of Corns

When you know HOW. But you can't do it by peeling, paring, gouging or picking at them. These barbarous methods are cruelly painful and seriously dangerous, for frequently the corn bleeds and then there is always the possibility of blood poisoning. Furthermore, these methods do not remove the corn completely, for the root usually goes deep into the toe to the bone.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory, which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful with any corn, whether hard or soft, and no matter how stubborn or how deep the growth. It removes the corn completely and positively without pain or danger. The first application instantly stops the corn from hurting you. Use it to-night and end your agony. 20c, by mail 22c. —(Advt.)

SMALL INVESTOR CAN BUY FIRM BONDS NOW

B. C. Forbes Points Out Advantage Paper in Denomination of $10 Gives to All.

By B. C. FORBES.

The small investor of to-day, if wisely guided, will be a larger investor to-morrow, since Money makes money.

In America poor people have lost shamefully through being allured into gilded traps by unscrupulous promoters and "brokers." Swindling has cost the unwary upward of $200,000,000 in one year. It has been checked to some extent. The dissemination of correct information by newspapers and magazines has helped. The postal authorities have queered a good many clever games. In some States laws have been passed to severely punish stock swindlers and their kind.

* * *

The issuance of high-grade securities in small denominations has contributed invaluably to driving out fake stuff. There is to-day no need for even the smallest investor turning to worthless stocks and bonds, for he or she can buy the best in as low as $10 quantities. This development is of far-reaching importance.

* * *

Discussing the investment opportunities now within reach in the current issue of Hearst's Magazine, I point out:

"You can now buy $10 bonds.

"New York City has taken the lead in bringing the highest grade of security within reach of the most modest purse. The results that will flow from this innovation can not be fully grasped. It should, and probably will, mean that Americans, like the French, will become a nation of thrifty investors. In France the peasants can buy safe bonds of very small denomination, but in lordly, opulent, big-scale America nothing less than $1,000 bonds used to be issued, so indifferent to small investors were our railroads, our industrial corporations and our other large borrowers.

* * *

"So keen, however, has become the struggle for capital all over the world that even the proudest applicants for funds—governments, States, municipalities, railroad systems and trusts—are anxious to cater to those who have saved, not thousands, but hundreds or even tens of dollars. Of late, $100 bonds have come into vogue.

* * *

"And now New York City is making a specialty of $10 bonds. Their yield is about 4 1-2 per cent.

* * *

"Now, 4 1-2 per cent is more than savings banks pay, and the risk is absolutely negligible. While those whose nestegg is very tiny can not do better than place it in a strong, carefully managed savings bank, the advisability of buying a good bond should be seriously considered by those who have accumulated several hundred dollars or more. On $1,000 the difference between 3 1-2 per cent and 4 1-2 per cent is $10 every year Not much, do you say?

* * *

"The difference in twenty years, at compound interest, would lay the foundation for a nice savings account for your son or daughter. One thousand dollars at 4 1-2 per cent compound interest become $2,000 in less than sixteen years, whereas money at 3 1-2 per cent takes more than twenty years to double itself. And remember that thrift begets thrift. Just as 'nothing succeeds like success,' nothing stimulates saving like saving. You can not begin a day too soon. The Government one day may imitate European nations by adopting old age pensions, but what self-respecting, healthy person would compare the satisfaction to be derived from his own savings with the feeling that would accompany a dole from the national purse?

* * *

"The buyer of one bond wants to obtain another as soon as he possibly can. Two $100 bonds paying 3 1-2 per cent bring $9 a year. Five paying 5 per cent—as many sound bonds do—net $25 each year, and, of course, this $25 interest helps to get another bond.

* * *

"The investor buys for income.

"The speculator buys for fluctuations in quotations.

"The investor seeks to avoid risk.

"The speculator 'takes a chance.'

"The investor in a safe bond is not hurt by temporary declines in the market price; his income is sure as long as the bond runs, and he can get full face value for it when it matures.

"The speculator's profits are not limited. He buys for possibilities and changes.

"Investment should be practiced by all persons of ordinary means.

* * *

"Speculation should be left to those who can afford to incur risks and to lose money, to those who have special opportunities for gathering and analyzing basic information, to those whose regular duties do not call for much time or thought—for speculation is insidious; it excites, it enervates, it distracts attention from other matters, it often unbalances judgment, it sometimes develops into a mania and ends in disaster. 'There are two classes of people who should not speculate,' said a wise man—'those who can afford it and those who can't.'"

COTTON MARKET

NEW YORK, July 18.—Influenced by weak cables and a bearish report by Cordill concerning conditions in Southwest Texas, the cotton market opened easy to-day, and first prices were unchanged to 3 points lower than Thursday's final. There was some covering on the decline by board room traders who went short on continued dry weather in Texas. This class of buying caused prices to advance 1 to 7 points from the initial level, with the exception of July and August, which increased their decline 2 to 4 points.

After the call, however, the entire list steadied with prices firmly maintained at the early high point. The strength of the market was chiefly attributed to some private reports from Texas indicating some deterioration in the crop; also Habersham King's review for the week, saying the crop was favorable over 80 per cent of the area and unfavorable over 10 per cent and injurious as to the remaining 10 per cent. The circular was more bearish than bullish, but the local shorts covered.

During the late forenoon the market was quiet and featureless.

The talk around the floor to-day reflected a decidedly more cheerful feeling with reference to legislative prospects. The weather map was considered favorable.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says: Wheat traders regarded the market last night as a sale on all bulges. Speculation has dropped off some, however, and many traders think the market is in no condition to stand any heavy selling. Many of the local speculators are bullish on oats and bearish on corn. It was noticeable, however, that comparatively little new outside buying is coming into oats because of their recent slump when the trade was long, forcing out a large number of holders.

"Specialists believe that oats at present prices have merit."

* * *

Chicago drizzling rain, 68 degrees; Minneapolis clear, 68; Peoria clear, 76; no rain; Terre Haute clear, 80; Springfield clear, 78; no rain; Omaha drizzling, 70; half-hour good rain this morning; Kansas City, St. Louis, 85.

* * *

St. Paul wires: "The Pioneer Press, of St. Paul, this morning says prospects in Minnesota for abundant harvest of all grains are excellent, according to B. A. Woods, of the Minnesota State University. He says the crops were not injured by the recent rains. He thinks the crop yield as a whole will average up about same as last year. Corn crop will be much larger."

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier & Co., says:

"Wheat—Map shows further rains in spring wheat country, with temperatures about the same as yesterday. It looks as though we might have a little lower market to-day.

"Corn—Temperatures east of the River are generally lower, but no rains reported in Illinois, except immediate vicinity of Chicago. Kansas City and St. Louis again show high temperatures, but it is cooler in Nebraska, with light rain at Omaha this morning. Look for lower market to-day, but would not press sales on decline.

"Oats—Market is showing steadier undertone, with moderate increase in outside buying.

"Provisions—Commission houses seem to have more buying orders, the selling being chiefly in way of profit-taking. Market continues very firm."

* * *

B. W. Snow says: "Corn prospects along Illinois Central, Chicago to St. Louis, very much mixed, but general average is poor. Kankakee to Farmer City good; thence to Springfield spotted, and south of Springfield poor; plenty of moisture to Farmer City, but from there south alternate streaks of rain and drouth.

"Tassel just beginning to show in few earliest fields, but growth will not average more than hip high, and south of Springfield there are thousands of acres not knee high. Oats harvest begun; best fields below average and crop is poorest in years."

* * *

The market was oversold and local crowd is covering short wheat. Slaughtee cable reports political complications in Austria and Russia and bad crops from England.

* * *

Carmi, Ill., to St. Louis, country very dry. Average corn promise in the poor counties and very good near St. Louis.

The thrashing reports on oats coming pretty bad and we believe it would be good judgment to at least cover and stay off the short side for a while.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.

12 HURT IN TRAIN CRASH.

CLEVELAND, July 18.—Twelve persons were injured, eight seriously, when a fast express train telescoped a standing passenger train on the Lake Shore Railway near Perry, Ohio, to-day.

Wool Beginning to Move More Freely

BOSTON, July 18.—New territory wools are beginning to move a little more freely both in and out of this market. Total sales the past week have been well over a million pounds, involving Territory and Texas wools, with a little California and foreign grades.

Fleeces remain very quiet, both here and in the country. Most of the Western buying is being done in Montana, where the bulk of the unsold Territory wool is now to be found. The London auction sales closed firm on fine wools and easy on crossbreeds. Indications are that England and the Continent are to have less active markets in the near future.

Until something more definite is known as to the terms of the new tariff bill when finally passed, no material improvement in sentiment or volume of sales is likely.

Receipts of wool in pounds for the week ended and including Wednesday were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	9,751,818	11,515,366
Foreign	395,150	1,151,350
Totals	10,146,968	12,666,716

Total receipts of 10,146,968 pounds, compared with 5,473,847 the preceding week, of which 5,042,642 were domestic wools.

Receipts in pounds from and including January 1, 1913, as compared with the corresponding period in 1912, were as follows:

	1913.	1912.
Domestic	63,359,193	103,693,671
Foreign	41,945,350	76,255,356

COTTON GOSSIP

Market dormant.

* * *

The volume of business transacted yesterday was perhaps the smallest of any day this year. Both elements are afraid to push their commitments in such a quiet market.

* * *

Boll weevil and the small stock of cotton is still discussed by the bulls.

* * *

Spot brokers are quoted with saying that the fear of a cotton tax is already diverting hedging business from this market to Liverpool.

* * *

Valdosta, Ga.: "Lowndes County has had good weather all along and crops are in the best condition they have ever been at this season of the year. Reports from some of the counties indicate that the drouth has done much damage to corn, but the cotton crop is in very good condition."

* * *

Texas City, Tex.: "Preparations are under way for the handling through Texas City next season of the largest movement of cotton the new port has ever enjoyed. It is conservatively estimated that in view of the large crop in prospect Texas City will handle in excess of 1,000,000 bales. This season to date 666,851 bales have been received and receipts to August 31, the end of the present cotton year, will probably bring the total near to 750,000 bales."

* * *

Taylor, Tex.: "With only a hundred or more bales of the 1912-1913 season's crop of cotton still remaining in the hands of producers of this section of Williamson County, the total local receipts of cotton at Taylor to date are 35,209 bales since the first day of last August. Ginners are overhauling their plants for the opening of the new season, beginning August 1. The first bales of the new crop are expected here about that time."

* * *

Reports to The Montgomery Advertiser last week indicated that as a whole the crop in Alabama looks well. Some sections report lack of rain. Where there has been rainfall, and there has been rain over the greater part of the State, cotton is reported in excellent condition, although the plant is reported late and much behind the growth expected for this time of the year.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 18.—Hayward & Clark: "The weather map shows generally fair, except cloudy in lower central belt, parts of Alabama, Atlantic Coast. Scattered showers in Alabama and Mississippi and some good rains in Atlantic Coast districts. No rain in west. Temperatures about normal. Indications are far more favorable to a break in the dry spell in the west over Sunday. Increasing cloudiness, with some showers over the central and eastern belt.

Fort Worth, Tex., wires: "Our San Antonio agency says, 'Boll weevil danger minimized by heat spell. Little actual damage done. Crop looks splendid. Movement starts August 1, unless rain interferes.'"

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Temperatures were not excessively high, but no rain was promised for the west, and talent and trade continued to show some concern over the Texas and Oklahoma weather. On the other hand, the Mexican situation loomed larger in the public eye as a possible source of international complications and Europe's confidence in lower prices for the raw material, to follow the announcement of prohibitive legislation, is directed against future trading in America, seemed on the increase.

"As a matter of fact, the scope and the volume of the protest being made by the South against the Clarke amendment had some effect on the Washington lawmakers, in spite of the refusal of many Senators to listen to anybody who desired to oppose any part of the caucus program. Meanwhile, very few actual damage reports are coming from the west, although advices relating to prospective damage to result from the hot, dry weather are numerous.

"Big crop people say that such weather is against the weevil, and is otherwise beneficial in that it promotes better maturity. On the whole, however, most crop accounts are favorable. The market is now merely awaiting the new crop movement, when many traders believe new conditions will bring a readjustment. July is still well taken care of and no cotton is going begging anywhere in America."

Habersham King in his latest report says consider developments of the week highly favorable to Arkansas, Tennessee, Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama quite favorable; as to Texas, North Carolina, most of Georgia, and portion of South Carolina unfavorable, though not injuriously so, as to Oklahoma and injuriously dry and hot in portions of eastern and middle Georgia, and all of South Carolina, except the Piedmont section. Briefly, should say favorable to 80 per cent unfavorable to 10 per cent, and injurious to 10 per cent of the belt.

* * *

Postal Telegraph Company says Grand Island had hard rain last night and still raining. Fremont cloudy and cool; Hastings clear, rained last night; Culbertson, 50; Broken Bow, 75; St. Francis, Kans., 1.50; Herndon, Kans., 2 inches; Farnum, Nebr., 1.75; McCook, Nebr., 1 inch; Palmer, Nebr., 2 inches.

* * *

Sinton, Texas, wires: First bale ginned on Taft Ranch Monday. Seven days earlier than last year. Splendid crop. Many think bale to the acre assured. Picking will be in full swing in next ten days.

* * *

Shearson, Balt and Lehman were the leading buyers early on private wires from Texas, stating some deterioration in crop. Schill was probably the best seller. Rosenberg also sold. The buying was scattered.

* * *

There was no special feature to trading, but the crowd were inclined to sell the market on the favorable report from Cordill on Texas.

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—Captain D. H. Duncan, of the park guards, has put his stamp of approval on "spooning" in local parks.

STOCK MARKET

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 18.—Canadian Pacific and New York, New Haven and Hartford were leaders of an upturn which involved a number of issues at the opening of the stock market to-day. Each scored a gain of 1⅞, although Canadian Pacific shaded at the end of half an hour.

Announcement of the resignation of President Mellen, of the New York, New Haven and Hartford, apparently imparted strength to the stock instead of detracting from it.

The Mexican situation and continued hostilities in the Balkans furnished the bears with ammunition and a considerable section of the list was lower.

Among the advances were Amalgamated Copper ⅜; American Can, ½; Union Pacific, ⅝; Southern Pacific, ⅝; Reading, ⅞; Pennsylvania ⅜, and American Smelting ⅝. The losses include New York Central, ⅛; Lehigh Valley, ⅛; Chino Copper ⅛, and Great Northern preferred ⅛. United States Steel common was strong, opening at 58⅝ for a gain of ¾. Half an hour after the opening the list was strong, and an unusually large number of buying orders being executed. Later there was some profit-taking.

California and Mexican Petroleum were weak. California Petroleum sustained a loss of 3½ on reports that the dividends would be interrupted. Mexican Petroleum lost 2½ on account of the uncertainty surrounding conditions in Mexico.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were steady.

After the first fifteen minutes trading became similar to Thursday's dealings, most of the business being on the buying side.

STOCK GOSSIP

The stock market should show some improvement to-day and Saturday, as the news seems favorable. The investment demand for stocks is gradually increasing and it looks to me pretty safe to buy the dividend-paying railroad issues on recessions.

The demand for copper metal has shown a marked improvement this week and all of the copper stocks should do better. Also keep long of Union Pacific and Reading.—G. D. Potter.

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Trading movements in the leading issues, with vehicles toward specialty improvement, may be seen to-day. There is a more cheerful and friendly feeling toward the market. We would buy the good stocks conservatively where favorable opportunities are presented. Moderate profits should appeal to the daily trader.

"Information channels favor a trading position."

* * *

Strength in Amalgamated Copper during the past few days was probably for two good reasons. It is expected that the regular quarterly dividend of 1½ per cent will be declared. In addition to this, there was the statement of copper supplies in Europe. The foreign visible stock of the metal has shrunk 2,000,000 pounds in the last two weeks, which means that foreign consumers have renewed their purchases of the metal. Producers are optimistic, however, because they think that domestic consumers will be coupled to follow the example of the foreign trade and purchase copper.

* * *

Wall Street operators are more cheerful than they have been for some time past. This is explained by the upward movement of prices. For months after months they have met with nothing but disappointments, which disgusted every trader and the market fell dormant. However, good promises for a big corn yield and cotton, together with fancy earnings by railroads and corporations, has put new life in them, with the result of an active trading market.

* * *

Charles S. Mellen resigned as president of the New Haven and all subsidiaries at a full meeting of the board late Thursday. No action is taken, however, on the resignation, but another meeting will be held to-day.

GRAIN MARKET

CHICAGO, July 18.—Wheat was ¼ to ⅝c lower at the opening of this morning on decidedly weaker conditions abroad, although the actual decline at Liverpool was quite small. Northwestern cars are smaller at 161, yet they exceeded the receipts of a year ago by 50 cars. Argentine shipments were a little larger than looked for at 868,000 bushels. There were increased offerings in the pit and the demand was rather slow.

Corn was ⅜ to ½c lower on more seasonable temperatures in the West and Southwest. Only rain reported was at North Platte and Omaha.

Oats were unchanged to a shade lower.

Provisions trade was small and the feeling stronger.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Some Good Advice For Beginners and Back Yard Breeders

Don't Overcrowd Conditions for It Certainly Will Mean Disease.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

There is but little trouble in getting started with a back-yard flock. That is all easy enough; but when fully started, the question is getting stopped at the right time or point in the game. Very many persons become interested in poultry in a small way and decide to handle it in their back yard, which is all right. They become more interested as the game goes on, and the tendency is to raise all the stock that they can, not taking into consideration the possibility of overdoing the matter by getting too many on he place for the room there is to handle them. The first season usually runs pretty well, but at the end of the second season is usually about where the rub comes in. The crowded condition shows itself on every hand. You know, there is a limit to almost everything, and particularly to the room of a back yard. When one gets his place full of growing chicks, there is expansion upon every hand. A lot of growing chicks can fill up all the available coops on a place about as fast as anything one can think of, and if something is not done to relieve the congestion, there is bound to be trouble. Crowding means disease. The question comes, then, as to what to do with them. It must be a system of culling. One of the first thing a back-lotter should learn is the system of successful culling. We know how hard it is for an enthusiastic breeder or fancier to begin to dispose of a part of his flock. Of course, there are a few that are veritable culls that anyone can cull out with ease, but after such are disposed of then the real rub comes. As one back-yard breeder has well said, it is a matter of culling from the beginning of the year to the close thereof. Other things being equal, the breeder who is the most successful at culling is the most successful in his ultimate results. Many have said, "We never thought about culling." The successful merchant understands the culling process; he is at it all the time. If it is not one department, it is another. He must have the room and the clean line of stock. If he does not do this, his business will suffer from disease. His may be whatis termed "dry rot," but it is disastrous just the same. Yours will work ruin quicker, no doubt. It is simply a survival of the fittest. If you do not show your hand in the plan of the fittest, nature will do it in a much less satisfactory way—that of killing them off.

This question of culling is quite a difficult one for the novice, yet it is one that must be mastered, and one that will be a better schooling for the one who desires to learn than anything he can do. The very day his young chicks get old enough to show any feathers of distinction or type worth considering he should begin to study them and cull them in his mind, so that by the time they are old enough to kill or sell for broilers he will be ready to make the selection of what he should get rid of. At such a time he may sell all those that show decided irregularities and reduce the flock a good deal, at the same time keeping an eye out for those that will make the best breeders for his work the coming season. He can also get rid of hens that have not measured up to what they should in their breeding or laying qualities. This should be done as soon as the laying season is over for the spring rush. The breeder must keep well to the front all the while the very great importance of vigorous stock, and look well to the healthy body as well as the fine feathers in selecting for breeders, for fine feathers will do but little good on a debilitated frame. If you are raising stock to sell for breeding purposes, it should be your aim to keep such stock moving at almost all seasons of the year. As soon as it is old enough to select in the early fall, put some little squibs in the papers telling the people about your rapidly developing stock and of how much more they will get for their money if it is invested now than later after you have cared for it so long. It is a mighty good proposition for both parties, too, to make these early trades.

It is not a question of how many you can raise, but how many can you keep. Never become tempted to take up but one variety at a time if you would be successful. More poultry enthusiasts have become stranded on the rock of too many breeds than perhaps any other one thing. It is absolutely dangerous, and you should by all means curb your ambitions along that line. There is not so much difference in the quality of the different breeds. You can make a success of any of them if you set your head that way. Do not try to breed something good from a whole lot of hens and a male or two turned together. Take the trouble to yard them off, even if in small or movable yards, and but a few fowls in each, and mark the chicks from them so you will know what you are doing. In that way you can soon tell the good breeders from the poor ones, and cull accordingly.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

H. G. White to Lead Atlanta Realty Men

Committee's Choice, Says Report. California Home Sold—Bungalow at Brookwood—Church Buys.

The name of Harris G. White, vice president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board, it was learned authoritatively Thursday, will be presented Friday night by the nominating committee in connection with the presidency of the board to succeed Charles P. Glover, the retiring president. The meeting will be at the Cafe Durand at 6:30 o'clock. Selection by the nominating committee is equivalent to an election, and Mr. White's name is said to have been decided on at a recent conference. Several other names were considered, but Mr. White's position as vice president and his interest in the affairs of the board caused him to be given the preference.

Mr. White was formerly with the Ralph O. Cochran agency, first on South Broad street, and then in the Empire Life Building, when he went into business for himself in the Grant Building. He is a popular real estate operator and known as one of the most successful salesmen in the city.

Sells California Residence.

Dr. J. L. McDaniel, formerly of Atlanta and now of Los Angeles, Cal., has bought from a client of M. L. Petty a seven-room residence at No. 6973 Converse avenue, Los Angeles, for $5,500.

Captain Petty also reports the sale of 550 acres of land in the gold belt of Haralson County, near Tallapoosa, to J. T. Brown for a client for $8,000, and of No. 87 Sidney street to E. A. Wilbanks for a client for $4,000. The latter property consists of a two-story eight-room house on a 43-by-150-foot lot at the southeast corner of Oakland street.

To Build on Brookwood Lot.

Edward L. Traynham has bought through E. V. Moore, of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, a 50 by 200 foot lot on the south side of Brookwood Drive, near Peachtree, for $2,500, and will erect a handsome bungalow which he will occupy.

Church Adds to Lot.

Colonel W. L. Peel and others, trustees of St. Mark's Church, southeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, have bought from John A. Boykin a 40 by 90 foot lot adjoining the east line of the church property on East Fifth street, for $7,000. The trade was made July 14 and papers have gone to record.

Whitehall Street Conveyance.

William H. Roane has bought from the Georgia Realty Company 467 Whitehall street, 79 1-3 by 215 feet, for $19,225. This property is on the west side of the street between McDaniel and Humphries streets, and was purchased recently from Methvin T. Salter for $19,000.

Peachtree Hills Place Sales.

Eugene Southwick has bought from the American Securities Company of Georgia lots 37 and 38, block 2, and lot 7, block 9, of the Peachtree Hills Place subdivision, and has transferred them to Vera Southwick. The total consideration was $2,400.

A new bungalow is going up in this subdivision.

Road Work Completed.

County convicts are just completing the paving of Confederate avenue with macadam from the Soldiers' Home to Moreland avenue, as well as work on Lynes avenue and the short street leading to the Burns Club.

Confederate avenue at this point is 60 feet wide, and, taken with South and North Moreland avenues, makes one of the best drives in the county. Moreland avenue leads into Druid Hills, and the drive southward to the Soldiers' Home is about three miles. South Moreland is paved with macadam and North Moreland with bitulithic material.

South Side Meeting.

The South Side Improvement Club committee will meet Thursday night at 8 o'clock at McCord Brothers' grocery store, corner of South Pryor street and Georgia avenue, to discuss some important matters concerning the widening, regrading and repaving of South Pryor from Georgia avenue to Ridge avenue. All those interested in the movement are expected to be present.

Complication in Lease.

Complications in a valuable central lease have arisen, and announcement of new arrangements for certain concerns which were figuring on the property will not be forthcoming for some time. In the meantime, agents are working on other interesting leases, and it is probable that several new locations for firms will be made known within the week.

Gain in Realty Sales.

Comparisons of realty figures for the twenty-eighth week of 1913 with the same period in 1912 shows a substantial gain in realty transfers, both in number and in amount. The total in 1913 was 209, and $667,760, as against 201, and $563,040. Such figures are proving the contention of real estate men that small sales are as active as ever, and perhaps more so, since they have taken the place, more or less, of the large ones.

People borrowed only $116,263 in the period of 1913, whereas they had to borrow $129,832 in 1912.

Cancellations were almost as heavy in 1913 as in 1912.

Building permits fell off somewhat, but builders are expected to surpass 1912 next week.

Completion of Crematory.

The city crematory on Hulsey street, which represents an investment of $260,000, is practically finished. The three burners will require several days to dry out, but Sanitary Chief Jentzen hopes to have one of them in operation by Monday.

What IS an Opportunity for the Young Man?

There Are More Real Opportunities To-day Than Ever

(Copyright, 1913.)

We have received many letters from young men recently complaining of lack of opportunities. One in particular asked this question:

"Are the opportunities for the young man in the present day and generation equal to what they were twenty-five or fifty years ago—the days of his father and grandfather?"

It is a question that is probably asked in this country thousands of times every day. It is an important question to the individual. It is especially important to the nation. For the nation declines in which opportunities for the young diminish.

We feel that we can conscientiously and positively say that REAL opportunities are better to-day, both for young men and young women, than they ever have been.

Opportunities are greater BECAUSE POSSIBILITIES ARE GREATER.

Science, machinery, organization of all kinds, especially widespread publicity, have put into men's hands in less than fifty years a power undreamed of in the boyhood of our grandfathers.

Humanity and the individual are powerful, and their opportunities are great, in proportion to the machinery at their command.

Our opportunities were never so great as now, but this statement is made assuming that our correspondent means real and worthy opportunities.

Unfortunately, in this country, where sudden prosperity, great extravagance and uneasiness as to the future make money all-important, the word "opportunity" is apt to be a synonym for money. Money and opportunity are taken to mean the same thing.

But we purpose to answer this question quite apart from money.

Undoubtedly, the very able money-getter, no matter how humble his start, can build up to-day such a fortune an was unknown fifty years ago—or twenty-five years ago. There are young men without a penny that will earn (or, rather, more or less honestly ACCUMULATE) their hundreds of millions in the next few years, before the common sense of the country shall have realized the importance of regulating accumulation through increased distribution.

There will be, perhaps, fewer small, middle-class fortunes piled up, for there will be fewer men in business on their own account, thanks to the trusts.

Many men will earn very large salaries, ranging from $150,000 a year downward, and there will probably be very many more large INCOMES in the land within the next twenty-five years than there were in the last twenty-five years.

But when men earn SALARIES, they do not keep their money, and of the middle-class fortunes we shall have fewer.

But we trust that our correspondent will agree with us that money is a pretty mean measurement for opportunity.

What do the merely rich men really amount to? When they have been dead two or three years they are as unknown and forgotten as the pigs and chickens that they ate, the horses that they drove, or the flunkies whose time they wasted.

Opportunity means A CHANCE TO DO SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

And we assure our correspondent that the young man of to-day has a greater chance to do something worth while than a young man has ever had in the history of this country.

Our form of government is changing; the power has practically passed from the hands of the majority of the people into the hands of a majority of trust stockholders.

The young man who has genius and force, the ability to lead, and the character to refuse his share of the spoils, has a great opportunity to-day. It is the opportunity to return the government to the hands of those who are governed.

Working scientists are needed and sadly lacking in all the great departments of human thought. Every one of these new fields of intellectual activity, research and discovery offers unlimited opportunities to young men.

The newspapers, read by millions of human beings every day, enable the man who can think intelligently, the man who will be sincere and interesting at the same time to address (and, if he is able, to convince) a million or two millions of his fellow-citizens every day in the year. Was there ever a greater opportunity than this for influencing the thoughts of other men?

Every page of a scientific newspaper will show to the young man a glorious opportunity.

Every phase of our great industrial organization, every new development in the struggle of manhood against money, offers to the young man a great opportunity for public service.

The horrible poverty and wretchedness in the great cities, contrasting with ignorant and ostentatious wealth, offer opportunities unlimited to him who would help the poor to help themselves, to him able to cajole or frighten the rich into doing their duty.

This is the age of opportunity, but the young man must think for himself, strike out on his own line, make up his mind what to do, and stick at it, INSTEAD OF FOLLOWING ALONG THE USUAL LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE, doing the same as everybody else does, keeping at nothing in particular, and then wondering what has become of the world's opportunities.

II.

SOON after the British Parliament passed a law forbidbidding the cutting down of trees for fuel, Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition—in 1585—discovered iron in this country, and in 1608 a cargo of ore was shipped from Virginia to England and successfully smelted. In 1644, the first ironworks was erected near Lynn, Mass.

In 1740, Huntsman introduced the crucible process, and various mechanical devices were patented about that time, which materially stimulated the steel industry.

Bessemer's Process.

In 1838, the invention of J. B. Nielson—the introduction of a heated blast—caused a tremendous increase in output. This improvement was accompanied by Nasmyth's steam hammer, and in 1856 Bessemer gave to the world a process that was astonishing and remarkable. The discovery of the Bessemer process made it possible to produce steel at such low cost as to extend its use widely, and did much to supersede wrought iron in structural work.

Bessemer steel is now almost universally used for steel rails. The open-hearth system of Martin and Thomas, with the regenerative gas furnace of Siemens, supplies steel that is used in enormous quantities for all purposes.

Lately, science has again prevailed, and in the products of White and Taylor and Robert Hadfield we have steel that combines great malleableness with great hardness—a hardness that retains its cutting power even when at red heat.

And so we go marching on. From the savage who in wonder raked from the ashes of his fire a crude ball of molten mineral and slag, with which he formed a weapon of defense, to the safety-razor and the automobile of the twentieth century citizen, metal is supreme.

Carbon and Iron.

Steel is made by combining a certain proportion of carbon with iron.

The process determines its value and variety.

The most important of these processes are cementation, Bessemer and open hearth.

The first system consists of placing wrought iron between layers of charcoal in firebrick retorts. Yellow heat is applied for a certain period until the required grade of steel is obtained by the addition of the necessary carbon.

This is the steel from which edged tools are made.

The Bessemer process is directly opposite in principle to the cementation process. The Bessemer burns the carbon out of the cast iron.

This is done in an egg-shaped furnace known as a converter, lined with firebrick, and capable of being tilted. At the bottom, a number of tuyeres or nozzles conduct the air from a powerful blowing machine through the molten metal. This burns out the silicon and carbon, and after the alloy has been added and thoroughly mixed the metal is poured into ladles, and thence to casting molds.

The ingots are reheated and rolled into the forms desired for use.

In the open-hearth system, steel is made from a mixture of pig-iron and scrap-iron or steel, which is melted by direct contact with the flame in a regenerative gas furnace.

Steel Everywhere.

To follow these different processes—to see the ore—cold, dead stones—transformed into things of utility and beauty is a revelation and an education. We realize that the Missable Range and your wire fence are associated by applied gas. Steel is everywhere.

Circus horses, farm horses wear it for shoes. Wire rope in elevators, and in ships and mines—the telegraph and telephone wires, and all kinds of electrical wires—from the ignition wire in the automobile to the submarine cable. Aeroplane plates, boiler plates and castings. We sleep on steel springs and shave with a "safety."

We use nails and tacks, and the shafting for machinery is nothing more or less than big round wire!

We see all these things in the manufactured goods.

We talk of the tone of our piano, we boast of the wonderful speed, endurance and economy of up-keep of our autos.

We speak of cheap and rapid transportation; of our spring beds, our easy shave.

But do we ever associate these things with the men in the mills? I hope so.

:: Light and Candle-Power :-:

By THOMAS TAPPER

THERE are about 1,500,000,000 people on the earth.

Most of them are intent on getting.

A few are intent on giving.

The dynamo sends power along its lines of conductivity, and all the electric bulbs pour out light, each according to its candle-power.

If each of these bulbs was independent, if it could think and move for itself, the efficiency of the plant might fall considerably, for the individual bulb would then begin to act like a man.

Instead of remaining an agent for the distribution of power, it would be inspired by the ideas of the majority to let up on giving and to specialize on getting.

We can imagine a bulb throwing out its chest and wanting things. It might take a fancy to get a corner on dust and ashes. These are possessions through which the power can not shine; and while the bulb might easily work up a corner, it would soon find itself short on its main business of shedding light freely, plentifully and without obscuration.

Both Science and Religion are fairly agreed that a man is the end point of a line of conductivity which is attached to the great dynamo of the life of the universe.

He must be, then, by nature a distributor of the power that the dynamo sends into him.

HE HAS NO BUSINESS TO OBSCURE his light and weaken his force with the dust and ashes of life, for then the radiance will not shine through him.

HIS BUSINESS IS TO POUR OUT upon the world around him the great supply of power that flows into him.

This power, like electricity, plays many parts.

He can send it out as work-power, love, sympathy, generosity, health and so on through the whole list of things worth while.

And by so doing he is fulfilling his one natural function. He is strengthening himself for all time (now and forever) simply by using his power in the right direction.

In short, he has an advantage over the electric light bulbs, for he can use his candle-power to the limit, and by so doing increase it, instead of burning out the filament.

:-: MISTAKES :-:

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

GOD sent us here to make mistakes,
To strive, to fail, to re-begin,
To taste the tempting fruit of sin,
And find what bitter food it makes.

To miss the path, to go astray,
To wander blindly in the night;
But, searching, praying for the light,
Until at last we find the way.

And looking back along the past,
We know we needed all the strain
Of fear and doubt and strife and pain
To make us value peace at last.

Who fails, finds later triumph sweet;
Who stumbles once, walks then with care,
And knows the place to cry "beware"
To other ur accustomed feet.

Through strife the slumbering soul awakes,
We yearn on error's troubled route
The truths we could not prize without
The sorrow of our sad mistakes.

MINCEY STORY STORM CENTER IN PHAGAN CASE

NEW WITNESS WILL CHARGE POISONING

FROST CUT GEORGIA PEACH YIELD, BUT QUALITY AND PRICE ARE HIGH

Shipment of Crop in Full Swing. Fruit Expert Says It Is the Best Ever.

The movement of what is reported as the best crop of peaches ever grown in Georgia is now in full swing up and down Peachtree street and via railroad to the East.

H. B. Marks, secretary-manager of the Georgia Fruit Exchange, who claims to know all about peaches—that is, the edible kind—declared Thursday that the crop, while a light one, was bringing the highest prices ever known.

"Peaches are selling at from $2.30 to $2.50 f. o. b.," said Mr. Marks. "More than 1,000 cars have already been shipped, most of them going to New York, being divided between New York, Philadelphia and Boston. 'Georgia Belles' and 'Elbertas' form the bulk of the shipments.

"A sharp frost caused a short yield, but the high prices which the peaches are bringing more than make up for this."

The "peachy" girls are here in abundance, however, and even the hot weather is not driving all the Atlanta beauties to the cooler summer resorts. Miss Danese Milhous, one of the prettiest of the younger Atlanta girls, was snapped just as she was beginning to eat one of the first of the North Georgia grown peaches to arrive in the city.

DULUTH, MINN., July 18.—The largest cargo of wheat ever loaded at the American head of the lakes was taken out on the steamer William P. Snyder—464,000 bushels.

LEAVE TO WED DENIED COUPLE IN VICE NET

Despite the pleadings of his aged mother and of Effie Drummond, the girl in the case, who asked that she be allowed to marry him, Joe North, caught by Chief Beavers' vice squad in a raid on the boarding house of Mrs. Lulu Bell at Fair and Peters streets, was held to the Grand Jury by Judge Broyles Thursday, in the sum of $200. The charge, which from the first story told by the Drummond woman, promised to develop into white slavery, was changed to disorderly conduct.

The girl, who when first arrested told her story freely to Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles, testified against North Thursday afternoon with reluctance. She at first denied that she knew North, and the next moment admitted having lived with him as his wife, both at his mother's home and at Mrs. Bell's, to which latter place she says he induced her to go.

"You say you don't know him, and yet you admit that you lived with him?" demanded Recorder Broyles.

"Well," the girl stammered, "I guess I 'kinda' know him!"

Both North and the girl asked that they be allowed to marry. The girl told Judge Broyles she had been married once before, in South Carolina, but had got a divorce in that State.

"You didn't get a divorce in South Carolina," said the Recorder. "The laws of that State do not permit divorces."

"Well," the girl hesitated, "I think my husband's dead, anyway."

"You only hope he is dead," retorted Recorder Broyles. "You can't marry this man until you get a divorce."

North's mother pleaded that her son be placed on probation, but Judge Broyles refused. The girl was sent to the Martha Home.

PHYSICIAN IS MAINSTAY OF HEIRS

Further Evidence of Crawford Poisoning Promised at Civil Hearing on Will.

Sensational new poison evidence was promised at the civil hearing of the Crawford will case Friday by Attorney J. S. James, who said he would introduce his star witness, a physician who was with Dr. H. F. Harris, of the State Board of Health, when the body of Joshua B. Crawford was exhumed and the contents of the stomach examined.

Other than to say that the testimony of the medical expert would be the last from his side in the hearing before an auditor in the fight for the $250,000 estate, and that he expected the evidence to show conclusively that large quantities of morphine were found in the viscera of Crawford's body, Attorney James would make no announcement.

Widow's Story Delayed.

The placing of the doctor on the witness stand Friday will further delay Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, the accused widow, from making her statement. It was planned by her attorneys to have her testify when the hearing opened Friday morning, but the physician will more than likely be on the stand for cross-examination by Attorney Reuben Arnold for several hours, and his evidence may not be concluded before 1 o'clock, the agreed time for adjournment. The hearing will adjourn Friday afternoon until Monday morning.

Mrs. Crawford was anxious to go on the stand Friday and see the evidence from her side of the case go into the minutes of the hearing.

Anxious to Tell All.

"I want to tell everything I know about the affair when I go on the stand," she said. "The other side has had everything its way so far, because all of the witnesses were for the heirs-at-law. It will be altogether a different story when Mr. Arnold and Mr. Smith introduce the witnesses we have. It will then be conclusively proved that there was nothing irregular anywhere except the groundless accusations that have been made against me."

Attorney James said Friday morning that he had been entirely too busy to take any official action toward having Fred Lump, the New York barber who is charged with being an accessory in the alleged poisoning, brought back to Atlanta.

Certain of Getting Lump.

"I will then get him back here in plenty of time if he remains in America," said Attorney James. "He would be of no particular use in this civil hearing, and that was why I didn't take steps earlier to get him back.

"At the first opportunity I will ask the Governor to give me requisition papers, and I will send a deputy to New York for him."

60 Insurance Men Ill After Banquet

London Laughs at Secretary Bryan's Plea of Poverty

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 18.—The Standard prints an editorial on "Politicians and Their Pay" this morning, in which it refers to the statement of William Jennings Bryan, the American Secretary of State, that he can not live on his salary of $12,000 a year. The Standard says:

"The poor man's champion has discovered that he can not subsist satisfactorily on $12,000 a year. A good many people in a good many countries manage to be comfortable on less than that amount, but since Mr. Bryan first took up socialism as a profession he has done well on the lecture platform.

"He has been making $15,000 every year by denouncing the idle rich. If the Union can not pay the same scale he proposes to increase his emoluments by private exertions, so he will go on tour again."

Stanley's Son Dying, Tells His Life Secret

SAULT STE MARIE, July 18.—Jack Stanley, 39, son of the famous explorer, Sir Henry M. Stanley, died here to-day in a lodging house from tuberculosis.

As death hovered near the dying man, he whispered a secret which he had shared only with his wife, formerly Mrs. Violet Lancaster, of Detroit, whom he married on the stage of the Odean Theater, Clarksburg, W. Va., four years ago.

"I am the son of Sir Henry M. Stanley, the famous explorer. Tell mother." With these words he sank into subconsciousness.

LONDON, July 18.—"Yes, it is quite true. I am engaged for the Victoria," Evelyn Thaw told The Georgian's correspondent.

"What about the rumored $4,000 a week salary?" was asked.

She shut her eyes, clasped her hands and said:

"What a glorious dream! If it were only true!

"What would my husband's creditors say? Poor, dear things! Don't raise their hopes that way."

Science Seeks New Light on Numbers

PHILADELPHIA, July 18.—"What is number?" the mathematicians of the University of Pennsylvania want to know.

WOMEN RIDE FICKLE WIFE ON A RAIL

Victim Then Is Ducked in Mud Puddle and Forced to Flee Illinois Village.

POLO, ILL., July 18.—Suspicious that Mrs. Minnie Richardson, wife of the crippled keeper of a general store here, was more than friendly with her brother-in-law, Will Dunnill, the village stonemason, a band of women of the village kidnaped Mrs. Richardson from her home, rode her on a rail through the town and dumped her in a mud puddle.

After the mud bath they gave her 24 hours to leave the village. Richardson mortgaged his store for $1,500 and gave her money to pay her railroad fare.

When the men of the town went to Dunnill's home, he was not there and his wife said he had left the town. She had mortgaged her home to get money for him.

Mrs. Peter Stansfield, wife of the blacksmith, who was captain of the women "vigilantes," said that the conduct of Mrs. Richardson and Dunnill had been the subject of comment for nearly a year.

The women planned to capture Mrs. Richardson and the men were to take Dunnill, and the rail-riding party was to be a "double-header." The men failed to find their victim and Mrs. Richardson rode alone. The men stood on the sidewalks and cheered.

For ten years Richardson, who is a paralytic, has gone about in a wheel chair. He said to-day:

"They were pretty rough on my wife, but I guess she had not done right. I don't believe she will ever come back."

Thursday's 97 Mark For Heat Threatened

With a record temperature of 83 degrees at 8 o'clock, as registered by the official thermometer, Friday promises to go Thursday one better along heat lines. According to all signs, Thursday's high mark of 97 degrees probably will be broken by at least one degree.

The weather man says there is little prospect of rain for several days.

Mailing Letter, He Pulled Fire Alarm

CHICAGO, July 18.—Leon Wells, of Berlin, Mich., attempted to mail a letter to his mother in his home town. The result was the hasty arrival of two battalions of fire-fighting apparatus and a large crowd at the busiest corner in Chicago, that of the Masonic Temple. Traffic was tied up for several minutes before four fire department officials, 100 firemen, ten pieces of apparatus, a patrol wagon containing ten policemen and an ambulance with three doctors, returned to their stations.

"I thought it was a mail box," explained Leon. "I never saw a fire alarm like that. In our town we have a bell in the steeple."

LOS ANGELES, July 18.—"I do not want a 'chemically pure' Los Angeles; what I want is a straightcut, really clean and upright city.

"Do not depend on the other officer, or the man higher than you in doing the work on your beat. Do it yourself and do it right, and see that your beat is taken care of."

DETECTIVES TRAIL MAN ACCUSING CONLEY

Prosecution Obtains Character Witnesses for Attack on Story of Negro's Confession.

With Pinkerton detectives taking the trail in search of W. H. Mincey, whose startling accusations against Jim Conley stirred the police department and won the negro another "sweating" from Solicitor Dorsey, the Mincey affidavit Friday became the storm center about the prosecution and defense in the Frank case waged their battle.

Despite the degree of indifference with which the detectives and prosecutinff officials affected to look upon the remarkable statements of Mincey, it became known Friday that every effort was being bent toward locating him and turning the light on his past history.

Pinkertons were detailed to make inquiries as to his destination when he left Atlanta three weeks ago after swearing to the affidavit in which he said that Jim Conley had boasted to him of killing a girl on the same afternoon that Mary Phagan met her tragic death in the National Pencil Factory. Mincey will be severely cross-examined if he can be located.

Pinkertons Have Clew.

It is understood that the Pinkertons have obtained information of Mincey's whereabouts, as it has been known since The Georgian published its exclusive story of the affidavit and later Mincey's detailed account of the significant happenings on the day of the murder that he was teaching school in North Georgia.

Although Solicitor Dorsey professes to be not greatly concerned over the effect that the Mincey affidavit may have in his case against Leo M. Frank, it is reported that his office is gathering character witnesses for an attack on Mincey's credibility.

Developments since the publication of the affidavit indicate that the prosecution feels it must absolutely discredit Mincey and his story if there is to be any hope of obtaining a conviction aaginst Frank.

As bitter a fight as that brought on by the Mincey affidavit is being waged by the members of the Grand Jury and the Solicitor over the question of investigating Jim Conley's connection with the Phagan murder, with a view of bringing an indictment. A number of the members are said to have declared themselves in favor of reopening the case because of the mass of evidence that has piled up against the negro since he confessed to being in the factory on the day of the crime.

Regarded as Unfair.

They regard it as unfair, in view of the incriminating evidence against him, that the prosecution be a party to the arrangement by which Conley goes on the stand merely as a material witness instead of as a possible principal in the crime, in which event the jury would be compelled to take into consideration the motives which might lead him to testify against Frank.

The Solicitor, however, is unalterably opposed to any movement looking toward the indictment of the negro.

"I am conducting this case and I prefer to be allowed to conduct it in the manner my judgment tells me is best," is, in effect, the reply he is reported to have made to several of the jurors who have approached him on the question of bringing the case again before the Grand Jury.

A petition is rumored to have been in circulation among the jurors asking that they be convened for consideration of the murder. This has led to the report that the jury will get together Monday and attempt to indict Conley. The action is certain to be fought bitterly by the Solicitor.

RUSSIAN SAVANT SUSPENDS LIFE FOR MONTHS

"Anabiose," He Declares, Will Make Cattle Hibernate in Winter and Save Fodder.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 18.—Professor Bakhmetieff, of Moscow, announces that he has been experimenting to determine the source of life and has obtained some remarkable results along a collateral line, the suspension of life, by the use of a substance which he calls "anabiose."

He has been a specialist for seventeen years in the study of hibernation and the results of cold upon animals, particularly bears, and his discoveries are in this field.

Saves Fodder for Cattle.

He has progressed to a point, he says, where he can place an entire herd of cattle in a state of suspended animation during the severe Russian winter, thereby saving the cost of fodder, shelter and attendance, and revive them in the spring in good condition.

The treatment, which he has applied successfully to several different kinds of animals, reduces them to total unconsciousness; respiration and digestion cease completely. They are kept regulated by a thermostat, and when they are brought into light, humidity and warmth, they recover consciousness, apparently not weakened by their experience.

Would Try It On Convicts.

Professor Kakhmetieff has not yet been able to apply "anabiose" to human beings to determine if healthy persons could be transferred to complete suspended animation, and then restored at will to their previous health; but he is in negotiation with the Prison Department to obtain volunteers among condemned men who will submit themselves to the treatment.

The other day, he brough back to full life a large sturgeon which he had kept under "anabiose" since winter without any kind of nourishment and in complete stillness. It proved to be perfectly healthy, with the roe in fine condition, which would not be the case with a fish kept frozen.

Church Folks at War On Clubs in Macon

MACON, July 18.—The Law Enforcement League has begun a campaign looking to the extinction of the saloon and the social club in Macon. Three test cases have been made against two saloons and a club, charging them with being nuisances in that they are "blind tigers."

If Judge Mathews grants petitions for injunctions, which will be heard on August 1, similar proceedings will be instituted against every saloon and club in the city. Petitions for injunctions were signed by 45 citizens, including the Revs. W. N. Ainsworth, J. L. White and C. B. Currie, representing the Methodist, Baptist and Presbyterian Churches.

NEW TYPE OF BEAUTY ENTERED IN SLOGAN BUTTON PICTURE CONTEST

Miss Helen McCullough, the newest entrant in the booster emblem beauty contest.

Latest Nominee for Booster Emblem Honors Is Miss Helen McCullough of Peachtree Road.

Miss Helen McCullough, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. N. McCullough, 1110 Peachtree road, is the latest nominee in the "beauty button" contest. She is regarded by many as easily the prettiest girl in Atlanta and in the voting to name the girl whose face shall adorn the "500,000 club" buttons she promises to always be near the top if not at the top itself.

She is the third to be entered in the race, the nominations of Miss Mert Hancock, Ponce DeLeon avenue, and Miss Mary Carl Hurst, 62 West Twelfth street, having already been announced. The three make a bevy of beauty that is a marvel, each quite different from the other, but each striking examples of their opposite types.

Miss Hancock's beauty is dominated by the glow of her wonderful auburn hair. Miss Hurst is a vivacious brunette. Miss McCullough is a petite blonde.

Every day brings more life into the contest. The end of this contest will bring to a climax the movement to organize the "500,000 booster club." When the "prettiest" girl is selected the buttons for the club members will be ordered and the organization formally completed.

Who is this prettiest girl?

That is for the readers of The Georgian and Hearst's Sunday American to decide. The voting coupons are run each day. If your favorite has not been mentioned nominate her and send in her photograph.

DR. MERRITT NOT ASKED TO RESIGN

Expressed Desire, However, to Leave Battle Hill—Change in Management Expected.

Dr. S. W. Merritt, superintendent of the Battle Hill Tuberculosis Sanitarium, has not been asked to resign, according to statements made Friday by the city officials who are over him. But Dr. Merritt has expressed a desire to leave the institution, and a change in management is anticipated about September 1.

The matter reached a climax when Jesse Sehlton, a patient, complained that he had received rough treatment. Mayor Woodward asked Dr. J. P. Kennedy and Dr. Claude A. Smith to investigate the case. It was then that Dr. Merritt declared he did not like the situation, and it was tentatively agreed that a change be made in superintendents.

The committee, however, did not override Dr. Merritt in his discipline of Shelton.

DR. DELAMATER CRIES HE 'HAS ENOUGH'

Druggist Rearrested on Complaint of Estranged Wife Declares He Has "Learned a Lesson."

Dr. Ira Delamater, following his release from the clutches of the police under a fine of $10.75, late Thursday afternoon was arrested by Constable W. W. Rogers, from the court of Justice of the Peace C. H. Girardeau, on a peace warrant sworn out by his wife.

The druggist was released under a heavy bond to appear at noon Friday, when an attempt will be made to have him placed under a prohibitive bond that will be forfeited if he even speaks to his wife again.

"I've got enough," cried Delamater when Constable Rogers took him in tow. "I won't ever do it again, and there is not any use of all this. I learned a lesson Wednesday night (he rubbed an enlarged optic), and I will never bother her again. I will help her get the divorce and pay her alimony regularly."

The druggist was arrested at a Turkish bathhouse in Decatur street. When Constable Rogers found him he was having a badly swollen and darkened eye and severe bruises on his body massaged. They were inflicted by W. T. Cammack, a railroad man, who interfered when Delamater visited Mrs. Delamater, who is seeking a divorce from him, Wednesday night.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Cool.

There are two wonderfully popular things about the Forsyth these days—a mighty inviting and cool place of recreation and the bill for the week is of exceptional value.

Valerie Bergere proves every right to the claim that she is the star of all dramatic artists that have adopted vaudeville. She is presenting a new playlet that deals with the crook idea. She appeals to a judge to save her husband, who has been convicted on circumstantial evidence, and convinces the judge, by a keen trick, that circumstantial evidence is a mighty bad thing to count much on.

Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, is scoring the hit of his young life, and the Metropolitan Minstrels prove to be one of the best drawing cards the Forsyth has had. There are pretty girls and clever boys in this act.

John F. Conroy, the world-famous lifesaver, and his diving models, will be the star attraction for next week, presenting what is claimed to be the greatest swimming and diving act in vaudeville. Deiro, the piano accordeonist, and the Great Lester, ventriloquist, are on the bill.

Grand Offers Treat.

A wonderful motion picture will be shown at the Grand all of next week. It is the supreme masterpiece of modern photo-plays, and is nothing less than Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables." There are more than 12,000 feet of film in the nine reels that represent the nine books in the wonderful story written more than a half century ago by the famous French author.

The greatest actors in France volunteered their services in making the picture and every place that is described in the book has been visited and used by the actors for their stage in producing the great work.

This week the Grand is attracting large attendance with a daily change of program of high-class first-run motion pictures.

Bijou Show Catchy.

Brimful of catchy features, pretty musical numbers, entertaining specialties and laughable comedy, this week's Bijou attraction, "Hotel a la Carte," is drawing splendid audiences to the popular theater. Every principal in the cast is clever in his or her line of work and some excellent specialties are introduced, not to mention a dozen musical numbers in which the big chorus takes part.

For next week the management announces another corking musical comedy, entitled "Good Morning, Judge," a musical cocktail with Pearl Brothers and Burns and twenty others.

Phone Hearing Deferred.

COLUMBUS.—The telephone rate hearing between the city of Columbus and the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company in regard to the raise in rates in Columbus has been postponed until October 14.

BILL AIDS GRAND JURIES.

A bill giving grand juries the right to employ stenographers to transcribe evidence has been introduced by Representative Suggs. The bill also provides this evidence may be used as competent testimony in Superior Courts.

Poultry and Corn Show.

CALUMBUS.—Through the co-operation of the Columbus Board of Trade, with the other interests, it has practically been decided to hold a poultry show and corn club exhibition in Columbus next fall.

Papal Guards' Wine Supply Cut; Mutiny

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ROME, July 18.—A mutiny among the Vatican Swiss guards—the second within four days—occurred to-day. Upon orders from Pope Pius X the soldiers were seized, disarmed and placed under arrest. They were replaced by gendarmes who may remain as the permanent military police at the Vatican.

Attempts to curtail the wine supply of the Swiss guards led to the disaffection. Hitherto the guardsmen were allowed an unlimited supply of wine.

Alleged "Moonshiner" Caught.

COLUMBUS.—Marshal W. J. Owens has returned from South Georgia with J. H. Williams, wanted by the Federal authorities on a charge of illicit distilling. Williams forfeited a $200 bond for his appearance at the last term of the Federal Court.

Nat Kay, of 264 South Pryor street.

"Adam's Clay" has been pronounced the literary sensation of the year. It begins in Sunday's American, and Cosmo Hamilton tells a big, true-to-life story for the readers of The American.

Easy to Get Rid of Corns

When you know HOW. But you can't do it by peeling, paring, gouging or picking at them. These barbarous methods are cruelly painful and seriously dangerous, for frequently the corn bleeds and then there is always the possibility of blood poisoning. Furthermore, these methods do not remove the corn completely, for the root usually goes deep into the toe to the bone.

Jacobs' Magic Corn Liquid is a scientific formula from our own laboratory, which we have thoroughly tested and guarantee to be successful with any corn, whether hard or soft, and no matter how stubborn or how deep the growth. It removes the corn completely and positively without pain or danger. The first application instantly stops the corn from hurting you. Use it to-night and end your agony. 20c, by mail 22c. —(Advt.)

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

BIRTHDAY PARTY GIFTS WILL BE PONY VOTES

Girl's Guests Will Bring Her Subscriptions—New Way Found To Aid Contestant.

Newest among the developments in The Georgian and American pony contest is a birthday party. Miss Robert Harbour, of No. 340 Ponce DeLeon avenue, will give the party Saturday afternoon.

This is to be Miss Harbour's fifth birthday anniversary. In honor of the event there will be a "regular party," with the difference from the ordinary celebration that many of the guests have told her in advance what their presents will be.

They will give her subscriptions to The Georgian and Sunday American, which count liberally in votes in the contest. This is an instance where the givers get as much as the recipient, little Miss Harbour gets the votes and the donors get the papers.

John Trimble, of Lithonia, and his father came to Atlanta Thursday to see the ponies. John Trimble is making a good race for the pony to be awarded to the Georgia boy or girl getting the most votes.

One more day remains of the special bonus offer, which gives extra ballots for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions. From all indications, Saturday will be one of the busiest days in the contest department. Votes will be received up to Saturday night at 10 o'clock, with the exception that out-of-town contestants may mail their votes Saturday, and all received up to Monday will count.

ATLANTANS PREFER A CAMP NEAR THE CITY TO MORE FASHIONABLE SUMMER RESORTS

Happy campers about to enjoy lucious Georgia melon.

Miss Jean Douglas at the oar.

Douglas Family Enjoys Outing in Pine Woods, With All Joys of Outdoor Life.

The summertime resorts at mountain and seaside are claiming fewer Atlanta people this year than ever before. And the reason is Atlanta people have learned that the best and most pleasant summer resort in the whole land is right here in the country surrounding the city.

In every direction are to be found summer camps where the business or professional man is enjoying all the pleasures and comforts of a summer resort, and at the same time is able to get into town every day to attend to business affairs.

One of the most attractive camps is that of Hamilton Douglas, president of the Atlanta School of Law and of the Atlanta Bar Association. It is located on the grounds of the Capital City Country Club, about one-fifth of a mile from the clubhouse, in a charming bit of pine woods. The camp is called "The Camp by the Side of the Road," and the Hamilton family, and many visiting friends, are spending the summer months just as cool and as comfortable as if they were in the most perfectly appointed mountain resort hotel.

There are four tents; one for Mr. and Mrs. Douglas, one for Misses Jean, Helen and Dorothy Douglas and their girl friends, one for Hamilton Douglas, Jr., and for the various members of the Boy Scouts, which he organized in Atlanta, who come out to the camp from time to time. Then there is the cook tent, which is presided over by "the best cook in the State," to quote Mr. Douglas.

"We get up at 5:30 every morning," he declared, "run down to the lake for a cool plunge, and after a hearty breakfast, Hamilton, Jr., and I catch the 8:15 car for town. We come back to our camp early in the afternoon, and I tell you it is a relief to get the fresh air, cooled by the constant breezes, and redolent of the pine woods, after a hot day in town. Every night it is so cool that we sleep under a double blanket. Give me this camp life every summer hereafter."

The young women at the camp find many ways to make the days attractive and void of dull moments. All of them are expert swimmers and divers, and Miss Helen is a golf enthusiast besides. Boating on the lake is one of Miss Jean's hobbies. The tennis courts of the country club are only a short distance away, and every morning and late afternoon tennis sets are played. There are many charming walks to be found in the country also.

A big camp fire is a nightly feature of the camp, and the family and guests sit around it and tell stories, sing or listen to Misses Helen and Jean play on the mandolin and guitar. A Victrola provides cheerful music also, and the birds and squirrels must wonder greatly when they hear Caruso open up with his "Sob Song," or Collins and Harlan render one of their characteristic rags.

"I'm not going back to the mountains another summer," says pretty Miss Jean. "This camp just suits me exactly, and we don't have to be separated from father and brother, either. They can be right here to enjoy it with us, and that makes it all the more enjoyable. I think everybody in Atlanta should camp out in the summer, and I know they would if they knew how grand it is."

ALLIES PLAN TO MERGE AT SOFIA

Greek Premier Says Peace Terms Must Be Dictated in Czar Ferdinand's Drawing Room.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ATHENS, GREECE, July 18.—"According to our present plans, the armies of Greece, Servia and Roumania will march into Sofia and we will dictate terms of Bulgarian peace in Czar Ferdinand's own drawing room."

This statement was made here today by Premier Venizelos who had just returned from Salonika. Mr. Venizelos declared that one of the principal reasons why the allies were determined to humble Bulgaria in the dust is that the Bulgarians have been guilty of unspeakable atrocities in Macedonia, where thousands have been slain by the retreating Bulgar soldiers.

"No armistice will be accepted, if our present agreement is carried out," said Mr. Venizelos. "Greece, Servia and Roumania are in accord on this campaign. Our armies will march upon Sofia, where they will concentrate. We will dictate our terms of peace with Bulgaria in Czar Ferdinand's own drawing room.

"The Bulgars must be taught a severe lesson in humanity. One of the reasons which impels the continuance of the war is the terrible depredations wrought by the Bulgar troops upon defenseless inhabitants of Macedonia.

"King Constantine is at Salonika, having gone there from Kavala. He is determined that blood must pay for the savagery of the Bulgarians. Our Greek army is pushing northeastward; the Servians are moving southeastward and the Roumanians are marching westward. The remnants of the Bulgarian army are being shoved toward Sofia, and when we surround the city the entire fighting force of Bulgars will be penned up there."

Stocks' Funeral To Be Held from Home

Interment will be at Oakland Cemetery.

WAR CHIEF CALLS POST HERE VITAL

Atlanta Army Men Elated Over the Favorable Impression Fort Made on Garrison.

Local army officers are jubilant over the praise bestowed upon Fort McPherson by Secretary of War Lundley M. Garrison Thursday, when, with Major General Leonard Wood and Major General J. B. Aleshire, he made an inspection of the post. It is regarded as practically certain that Secretary Garrison will repeat his recommendation of a year ago that the local port be made a brigade headquarters, which would mean several additional regiments of soldiers would be quartered at Fort McPherson.

"Everything at Fort McPherson is admirably conducted," declared the Secretary. "Such a post is a credit to our country. The startegic position of the Atlanta post is valuable."

Both Secretary Garrison and General Wood said they could not state definitely whether the local post would be made a brigade post, but intimated such a step is likely.

"Nothing definite will be given out until after Secretary Garrison has completed his tour of the 49 posts of the country," said General Wood. "However, we have always regarded the Atlanta territory as important because of its strategic position."

Secretary Garrison's party, including General R. K. Evans, Colonel Barth, Lieutenant Tucker, Colonel VanOrsdale and others, were entertained at the home of Clark Howell and the Piedmont Driving Club Thursday afternoon. Secretary Garrison left Atlanta at 5:10 o'clock, and to-day is inspecting Fort Oglethorpe, near Chattanooga.

S. A. Eliot, Jr., Seeks Career on the Stage

CAMBRIDGE, MASS., July 18.—Harvard circles received a surprise to-day when it became known that President Emeritus Eliot's favorite grandson, Samuel A. Eliot, Jr., had decided upon the stage as a career. He is now installed in an English dramatic company, appearing in Manchester, England.

Young Eliot, whose father is president of the Unitarian Ministers' Association, writes that he is much pleased with his stage work. He graduated from Harvard in June and immediately went abroad.

Senators' Swimming Match in Demand

WASHINGTON, July 18.—When Senator Pomerene challenged Senator Owen to a swimming match and the latter accepted they did not realize that so many persons were interested in Congressional aquatic sports. Enterprising persons have sought to induce the Senatorial swimmers to make it a national event.

One offer came from the manager of a resort near New York, who assured Senator Owen "he would have a crowd of speciators larger than could be gathered anywhere else in the world."

Lunatic's Bequest To Alfonso Upheld

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 18.—The civil court at St. Gaudens upheld to-day the validity of the will of Albert Sapene, formerly Mayor of a small town near Toulon, who bequeathed $500,000 to King Alfonso of Spain.

Sapene, who was an ardent royalist and a great admirer of the Spanish King, died in an asylum. His sister sought to have the will set aside on the ground that Sapene was insane when he made it.

SMALL INVESTOR CAN BUY FIRM BONDS NOW

B. C. Forbes Points Out Advantage Paper in Denomination of $10 Gives to All.

By B. C. FORBES.

The small investor of to-day, if wisely guided, will be a larger investor to-morrow, since Money makes money.

* * *

In America poor people have lost shamefully through being allured into gilded traps by unscrupulous promoters and "brokers." Swindling has cost the unwary upward of $200,000,000 in one year. It has been checked to some extent. The dissemination of correct information by newspapers and magazines has helped. The postal authorities have queered a good many clever games. In some States laws have been passed to severely punish stock swindlers and their kind.

* * *

The issuance of high-grade securities in small denominations has contributed invaluably to driving out fake stuff. There is to-day no need for even the smallest investor turning to worthless stocks and bonds, for he or she can buy the best in as low as $10 quantities. This development is of far-reaching importance.

* * *

Discussing the investment opportunities now within reach in the current issue of Hearst's Magazine, I point out:

"You can now buy $10 bonds.

"New York City has taken the lead in bringing the highest grade of security within reach of the most modest purse. The results that will flow from this innovation can not be fully grasped. It should, and probably will, mean that Americans, like the French, will become a nation of thrifty investors. In France the peasants can buy safe bonds of very small denomination. but in lordly, opulent, big-scale America nothing less than $1,000 bonds used to be issued, so indifferent to small investors were our railroads, our industrial corporations and our other large borrowers.

* * *

"So keen, howeve, has become the struglle for capital all over the world that even the proudest applicants for funds—governments, States, municipalities, railroad systems and trusts—are anxious to cater to those who have saved, not thousands, but hundreds or even tens of dollars. Of late, $100 bonds have come into vogue.

* * *

N"And now New York City is making a specialty of $10 bonds. Their yield is about 4 1-2 per cent.

* * *

"Now, 4 1-2 per cent is more than savings banks pay, and the risk is absolutely negligible. While those whose nestegg is very tiny can not do better than place it in a strong, carefully managed savings bank, the advisability of buying a good bond should be seriously considered by those who have accumulated several hundred dollars or more. On $1,000 the difference between 3 1-2 per cent and 4 1-2 per cent is $10 every year Not much, do you say?

* * *

"The difference in twenty years, at compound interest, would lay the foundation for a nice savings account for your son or daughter. One thousand dollars at 4 1-2 per cent compound interest become $2,000 in less than sixteen years, whereas money at 3 1-2 per cent takes more than twenty years to double itself. And remember that thrift begets thrift. Just as 'nothing succeeds like success,' nothing stimulates saving like saving. You can not begin a day too soon. The Government one day may imitate European nations by adopting old age pensions, but what self-respecting, healthy person would compare the satisfaction to be derived from his own savings with the feeling that would accompany a dole from the national purse?

* * *

"The buyer of one bond wants to obtain another as soon as he possibly can. Two $100 bonds paying 3 1-2 per cent bring $9 a year. Five paying 5 per cent—as many sound bonds do—net $25 each year, and, of course, this $25 interest helps to get another bond.

* * *

"The investor buys for income.

"The speculator buys for fluctuations in quotations.

"The investor seeks to avoid risk.

"The speculator 'takes a chance.'

"The investor in a safe bond is not hurt by temporary declines in the market price; his income is sure as long as the bond runs, and he can get full face value for it when it matures.

"The speculator's profits are not limited. He buys for possibilities and changes.

"Investment should be practiced by all persons of ordinary means.

* * *

"Speculation should be left to those woo can afford to incur risks and to lose money, to those who have special opportunities for gathering and analyzing basic information, to those whose regular duties do not call for much time or thought—for speculation is insidious; it excites, it enervates, it distracts attention from other matters. It often unbalances judgment, it sometimes develops into a mania and ends in disaster. 'There are two classes of people who should not speculate,' said a wise man—'those who can afford it and those who can't.'"

You never can tell!

The grand young county of Candler on Thursday morning looked to be as good a bet as one might stake his coin upon—and to-day, like Caesar dead, there are none so poor as to do it reverence!

Perhaps that isn't quite fair to Candler, for there is a good chance that it may be reconsidered, and go over to next year, when, in forgetfulness of the bitterness of Thursday's fight on the floor of the House, Candler yet may come into its own.

Unquestionably, a serious tactical error was made when the friends of Candler, even without intending anything arbitrary, perhaps, moved the previous question, and thereby closed debate save from their own point of view.

It requires a two-thirds vote of the House to pass a Constitutional amendment, whereas it only requires a majority to order the previous question. The previous question, having been ordered by that majority, however, it immediately gave the minority opposition the right to raise the cry of "Gag rule," which cry said minority promptly proceed to raise—vociferously and with deadly effect upon Candler!

The majority, seeing its blunder, undertook to right things—but too late.

Burwell, as fair and impartial a presiding officer as ever held the gavel, plainly was anxious to relieve the House of its embarrassment if he could, but under the rules, he could not. The House had tied his hand. Several virtuous gentlemen, who had not even called for a division on the vote for the previous question, were very much outraged that the previous question had been ordered, nevertheless—and their expressions upon the floor with respect to that feeling of outrage evidently impressed the House profoundly, as the House proceeded to sustain said outraged point of view.

Altogether, the fight on Candler was as pretty a piece of claptrap as ever was slipped over—but it was slipped, all right, and that is what hurt Candler's feelings!

Moral: Never be too sure your enemy can not throw straight, even if he i sleft-handed!

Undoubtedly there is genuine merit in the Candler County proposal, and there hardly is adoubt that eventually a new county will be created there.

And the Candlerites may get some consolation from that, after all!

The many friends—as they would say in the Springplace Jimplecute, no doubt—of the well-known Georgian mentioned, will read the following paragraph gem from The Thomasville Times-Enterprise with mingled feelings of melancholy and joy:

Jim Nevin is more truthful and lots more interesting writing about Governor Brown's gold pen that he was penning that conglomerate mess about the Thomasville cow.

Now, what do you know about that?

The Legislature is looking forward to its forthcoming visit to Augusta with genuine delight.

A great time is being framed up for the Solons, and there will be "doings" from the time the train arrives in Augusta Saturday about noon, until it leaves that night.

Many members are anticipating particularly a visit to Carmicheal's famous fishing club with rare pleasure.

This place has been made famous by dozens of distinguished visitors, among them being President Taft, Andrew Carnegie, John D. Rockefeller and others.

The House rollcall rarely develops anybody absent, although it frequently is insisted upon.

Thursday an attempt was made to dispense with the rollcall, but it was however—which shows what a fine system of looking after the membership is in vogue about the clerk's desk.

It remained for Mr. Moss, of Cobb, rather to hit the nail squarely on the head in explaining his Candler County vote Thursday, when he said:

"I do not indorse this call for the previous question and the shutting off of debate(but I shall not, merely because of that, refuse to do that which under my oath I agreed to do—that is, vote for that which I think best for the State.

"Because a tactical blunder may have been made by the floor leaders in charge of this measure, I shall not, therefore, visit my wrath upon the good people of the South Georgia territory asking to be made into this new county, who come here sincerely and honestly knocking at the doors of the union of counties.

"I can not understand how members can get up here and say they had intended voting for this measure, and would do so, but for the fact that a parliamentary blunder has been made in this House. It impresses me as rather mean and below the belt thus to hit the unoffending Candler County citizens, many of them good farmers, who are here asking a perfectly legitimate thing.

"If a man be sincerely against this measure, all right—he should so vote. But to make a mere mistake in parliamentary procedure an excuse for striking down an admitted meritorious proposition—that is all wrong. I believe this proposition is good, therefore, I shall vote aye!"

Mr. Moss is not inclined to the creation of new counties particularly, but the proposed county of Candler he had picked as one of the two deserving to win—and he voted accordingly.

His little speech in explaining his vote made a distinctly favorable impression on the House.

Assistant Commissioner of Agriculture Dan G. Hughes already is up to his ears in the work of the department, and is proving to be—as was predicted—a most valuable man on that job.

Mr. Hughes is a student, and with that he combines a practical turn of mind.

He spends the greater part of every day in his office and takes much of the burden of detail from off the shoulders of his chief, Commissioner James D. Price.

The general impression is that Price and Hughes are to make a great working team in the State Department of Agriculture.

Right at the grocer's hand is a moisture-proof package of Uneeda Biscuit. He hands you the package—you hand him the coin. A trifling transaction?

No! A remarkable one—for you have spent the smallest sum that will buy a package of good food; and the grocer has sold you the most nutritious food made from flour—as clean and crisp and delicious as it was when it came from the oven.

THE SUNDAY AMERICAN'S GREAT BASEBALL TEAM

All the important leagues of baseball are now in action. So are tens of thousands of fans. So are also the men who write of the doings of the diamond stars for those same fans to read.

It is the newspaper with the STAR TEAM of writers that makes the strongest appeal to baseball enthusiasts.

BUT—to be stars, baseball players and writers about the diamond warriors must be fair and square. That is an essential part of KNOWING THE GAME.

Here Is The Hearst Sunday American Team for 1913

CHRISTY MATHEWSON—For years the famous pitcher for the New York Giants. Known everywhere as one of the brainiest players in the business and one of the squarest in whatever he writes about the game of which he is master.

JOE AGLER—The Crackers' sensational first-sacker. He is giving local fans all the "inside" news of Billy Smith's aggregation. His comments on plays are immense.

W. S. FARNSWORTH—His stories of the big league teams are right up to the minute. Having traveled with the New York Yankees, New York Giants and Boston Red Sox during the past seven years, he is able to tell of the "workings" of the major league clubs.

PERCY H. WHITING—For over seven years he has been writing Southern League baseball. He is the dean of Southern diamond experts and has the largest following this side of the Mason and Dixon line. He is fearless in his writings and always tells the truth.

SAM CRANE—A big league ball player for years and personally acquainted with all the major leaguers. For the past twenty years he has been writing baseball and is considered the greatest student of the game in the world. He travels with the National League Champion Giants.

DAMON RUNYON—The wittiest baseball writer in the East. He tells of the big league games in a manner that has a laugh in every line. But he never gets away from baseball like most of the humorous followers of the diamond warriors.

W. J. McBETH—His "inside" stories of big league games cannot be beaten. He sticks to facts and figures and his predictions are followed by thousands of fans. He has traveled as "war correspondent" with nearly every big league team during the past ten years.

CHARLEY DRYDEN—The Mark Twain of baseball. For years he has traveled with New York, Philadelphia and Chicago teams and his writings are baseball classics. He is personally acquainted with every big league player and probably has the largest following of any baseball expert in the country.

A. H. C. MITCHELL—Considered the greatest expert in the New England States. His stories of last fall's world's series were marvels. He roasts when a roast is coming and praises when praise is due. He has been writing baseball for twenty years.

ALLEN SANGREE—He is well known in the South, having been here with big league teams on training trips for the past fifteen years. He will travel with the New York Yankees this season, and his stories of Russell Ford and Ed Sweeney, former Crackers, will be of especial interest to local fandom.

J. W. McCONAUGHY—Popular with Eastern baseball fans because of his fearless writings. He never gets away from the truth, but tells a straight, readable story. He has been writing baseball in St. Louis and New York for twelve years.

J. W. HEISMAN—Considered the greatest college coach in the South. His college stories are copied by every paper in this part of the United States. His predictions are seldom wrong, and his weekly review of Southern college teams cannot be beaten.

JOE BEAN—As coach of Marist he has led all the other prep school coaches a merry chase. A few years ago he was the star shortstop of the New York Giants. His stories are bright and interesting.

INNIS BROWN—For four years he was considered one of the greatest athletes that ever attended Vanderbilt. His baseball stories of college teams are read by every undergraduate and graduate in the South.

In the General Sporting Field

As well as in baseball, The Sunday American scores an exceptionally large number of base hits in all other branches of sports.

Ben Adams, hero of the Olympic games, writes interesting stories about track and field athletics. The boxing world is well covered by Ed W. Smith, W. W. Naughton, H. M. Walker, Ed Curley and "Left Hook." Tick Tichenor takes care of the golf. He knows every golfer in the South and his stories are real live "bearcats." Tennis and automobiles are two other branches of sport that are covered thoroughly in The Sunday American.

Helen and the Trunks Are Gone When Warren Returns to the Hotel in Paris.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE room was charming. Helen could hardly restrain an exclamation of delight when the French manager unlocked the door and crossed over to draw the heavy curtains from the long, low windows.

The paneled walls, the furniture, the draperies, were all in old rose silk tapestry. The bedroom adjoining was exquisitely dainty in white and pale blue. The low French dressing table, the cheval mirror, the two cane beds with the pale blue silk hangings and coverlets, made it look like a stage setting—"Act I. Mlle. ————'s Boudoir"—in a modern French play.

It was all so surprisingly dainty and luxurious for a hotel that Helen feared it would be most expensive—more than they could pay.

"What do you ask for these rooms?" she ventured.

"Twenty-five francs a day, Madame," he answered in surprisingly good English.

"And what for breakfast served up here?"

"Two francs for coffee and rolls."

Only nine more francs for the rooms, and the same for breakfast as they were paying now! And the dirt and dinginess of the other place compared to the charm and cleanliness of this! Helen pictured herself, in her dainty white morning gown and boudoir cap, having breakfast in this rose silk room. This picture decided her.

"Very well. I'll take the rooms. We're at a place on the Boulevard Capucines now, but we'll come to-morrow morning or late this evening."

The manager took her down on the mirrored elevator to the palm-lined hall and office below, where Helen made a deposit of twenty-five francs to secure the rooms.

On the way back in the bus her courage began to waver. She had arranged to move without Warren's consent or knowledge. But when she again saw the dinginess and shabbiness of the rooms they were in and thought of the wretched breakfast they had had that morning, her courage was renewed.

A Bold Scheme.

As she packed the few things they had unpacked for the night her strongest desire was to move now. It was only half-past one, and Warren would not be back until almost seven. Why not get a cab and take their baggage over now—and have everything unpacked and in place by the time he got there? She could not reach him during the afternoon, but she could leave a note here giving him the address of the new place.

For Helen this was a most audacious scheme, and she was athrill with excitement at the very daringness of it all. For once she would show Warren that she could take the initiative, that she would not stay in a place that was both uncomfortable and unclean, merely because he did not want the bother of moving.

There was a rusty pen and a dusty ink bottle on the mantel. Helen took some paper from her handbag and wrote hurriedly:

Dear: Have just found the most wonderful place! When I went to the American Express Company this morning to get our mail I heard some American women talking about a delightful hotel. I took down the address and looked it up at once. The rooms are so beautiful and so moderate, that I couldn't resist engaging them.

I do hope you won't be annoyed, but this place is so dirty that I felt I couldn't stay. I am going to get a cab and move the things over now, so everything will be in place when you get there. The address is Hotel Ronceray, 10 Rue Montaigne. You can get a bus on the corner that will take you to the door. I will pay the bill here. Hastily. HELEN.

Still fearing that her courage might be short-lived, she determined to act quickly. Resolutely she went down to the office and asked for their bill. The man seemed surprised and displeased, for he had plainly expected them to stay several weeks.

Helen was amazed at the bill. She thought there would be only the room for one night and breakfast—but there was a charge for light, service and bath. However, she was too glad to escape from the place to make any protest, and a little later she was in a cab with their baggage on top, driving to the new hotel with a feeling of mingled glee and awe at her own temerity.

It was just 3 by the French gilt clock on the mirrored mantel of the rose-tapestried sitting room, when Helen closed the door after the porters who had brought up the bagage.

Even before she took off her hat she made an eager, interested inspection of every detail of the rooms. They were luxuriously and perfectly appointed. Everything was in exquisite taste.

It would be over three hours yet before she could expect Warren. But she had no desire to go out in the blazing, midafternoon sun, for the heat was stifling. She would spend the time in unpacking, in getting up their laundry, and in going over her clothes, which after the week on board ship needed attention.

It was a real joy to shake out her gowns and hang them in the spacious closets, and to arrange her clothes in the white-papered drawers of the chiffonoir and dresser. The rooms were so beautiful that there was a sense of luxury in just moving about and getting settled in them.

At 6 o'clock she decided suddenly to dress—to put on her white chiffon evening gown. She would lay out Warren's evening clothes, and when he saw her all dressed he would hardly refuse to dress, too. They would "live up" to the luxury of the place!

To sit down and arrange her hair before the low dressing table was a real pleasure. Helen thought of all the hours she had to stand before her high bureau at home, and resolved to have a dressing table like this as soon as she got back.

About half-past six she was trailing about the apartment in her white chiffon gown, looking at herself in the mirrors with which the rooms abounded, and feeling as though she was living in a play. The very foreign atmosphere of it all added to the charm. Although it was hardly dusk, she turned on the electric lights, which glowed softly through their silken shades.

She Gets Anxious.

For once Helen was too excitedly happy to worry over what Warren's attitude might be. Surely, when he saw how beautiful the rooms were, he could not be angry at her having moved.

But at seven she grew anxious. He should be here by now. What if they should not give him the note at that other place? They had not liked it because she had left—would they take such a revenge? She had left the note in the box with the key—how could he fail to get it?

Quarter after seven—half-past! By this time Helen had forgotten the charm of the rooms and was walking restlessly about in tense anxiety. What could have happened? He had said he would be back around half-past six, and it would take him only fifteen minutes at the most to get here from the other place.

For the first time there came a doubt in her mind as to the wisdom of her moving in this way. Perhaps she should have stayed. After all, it was a rash thing for her to do. They were in a strange city, if he should not get the note—how could he ever find her?

She could, of course, write to the American Express Company, where he would go for his mail in the morning, but what would he do to-night? Oh, why had she done this? Frantically she wished herself back in those other rooms, however shabby and dirty they might be. Surely it would have been better to put up with anything than to risk any chance of mishap in Paris.

A sharp knock at the door. She rushed to open it, and a French messenger boy handed her a note. As he held it out to her she saw Warren's writing on the envelope. Her hands weakly trembling, with her teeth she tore it open.

"Since you are so infernally smart and want to take things in your own hands, you can keep it up. You can have a nice little dinner alone any place in Paris you choose—and I can have the same. I'll probably be there some time to-night, but don't let that worry you—stay out just as late as you want."

The cruel sarcasm of it! How could he—oh, how COULD he! With a convulsive sob Helen threw herself upon the bed and her tears fell unheeding on its blue satin coverlet.

More Trouble in a Garden.

An elderly gentleman walking through his garden one day stopped before a fig tree on which were two figs just ripening. His favorites were figs, and summer often came and went without the fruit coming to maturity.

Shortly after he met his gardener who, assuring him the figs were quite ripe, was requested to send them to the summer house, where his master was about to rest.

Picking the figs, the gardener sent his little boy of 7 with the basket. On the way the little fellow stopped, and, removing the leaves, gazed upon the tempting fruit.

The attraction was too great; he ate one. Covering the other with the leaves, he proceeded upon his errand.

On being asked if the gardener had not sent two figs, the boy, after a moment's silence, answered: "I ate one."

"You ate one? How?" exclaimed the old gentleman, angrily. "How did you come to do that?"

Dropping his eyes to the basket, 'I took it like this," said the child, taking the remaining fig, "and I ate it like this."

And, suiting the action to the word, he consumed the second fig before the astonished eyes of the old gentleman.

The GHOST BREAKER

By Charles W. Goddard and Paul Dickey

The Most Exciting Serial of the Year.

SERIALIZED

By J. W. McCONAUGHY

(Copyright, 1913, by Star Co.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Every one of these breaks in your life-line means a moment when you stood elbow-to-elbow with death," declared the girl, solemnly. "And yet—see those little squares of protection around each break? Senor American," she looked up at him soberly, "there is one break that you have not yet reached and the protecting square is not perfect like the others."

Warren burst into his silent laugh.

"I reckon that square will do when the time comes."

"But the time is now, senor!" exclaimed the girl, her lips less than a foot from his ear.

He drew back a little and eyed her through narrowed lids.

Danger Near.

She bore the keen scrutiny without a flutter, but her great round eyes and quick breathing told of some sure emotion.

"Are your eyes so sharp that you can tell the day and hour?" he asked slowly.

"Not my eyes, Senor American." She looked full at him with unmistakable meaning. "But my ears!" She caught the sound of footsteps in the passage and bent over the hand again as the Duke entered.

"In all my experience I have seen but one hand like yours, and that hand belongs to Don Robledo."

"Well, Mr. Warren, looking into the future?" inquired the Duke.

"Pardon, senor." Dolores swiftly withdrew and Warren called after her cheerfully:

"Good-bye, senorita, and many thanks for your occult wisdom. I'll take good care of that square. Yes, Duke," he added with a bantering smile, "and the immediate future promises to be very interesting. A dark man is to cross my path."

"Do you believe in such foolery?"

"I like to—on this occasion. For I hope it means some one I very much want to meet."

If the Duke guessed who this some one might be he gave no sign. He twirled his mustache and studied the floor, evidently in much perplexity, a situation that seemed to amuse the young man immeasurably.

"By the way," he went on. "Is that specter a blond or a brunette?"

The exalted kinsman made an impatient gesture, as if in no mood for raillery, and with every appearance of grave concern said:

"Mr. Warren, since the Prince is no more, I feel a certain responsibility for Her Highness' actions; and the prospect of your destruction to-night on her account is most uncomfortable."

The young man looked equally grave. "You think I won't come back?"

The Duke looked at him with the air of a man who is frankly doing his duty.

"I think if you go into that castle to-night you take your life in your hands," he declared.

The old whimsical smile returned to Warren's lips.

"I've got a good grip."

The Duke looked for a moment as if he would retire—that having done his duty there was nothing for him to say. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him:

"Look here! You Americans are shrewd traders. You get a dollar for a dollar when you bargain. You are not giving away your life for nothing. Now, what is the price?"

"Not very much," Warren assured him easily. "The deal was made on a bargain day. My life happened to be a little below par, you see, and I couldn't kick much over the terms."

The exalted cousin seemed relieved.

"Very well! Whatever those terms were, I will assume the responsibility of settling with you and at the same time release you from your unfair and outrageous bargain."

Jarvis bowed.

"Your Excellency, I am overwhelmed by your anxiety. It touches not only the heart but the pocketbook. But," he added regretfully, "the price is paid and I am on the job."

"I suppose that means you are going through with it?"

"Yes."

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, I never saw a man so anxious to be killed. But, as your English poet says, 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

"You flatter me," Jarvis protested, with soft-tongued irony. "Yet, an energetic fool may be of more use than an angel with cold feet."

"Well, I am sorry for you," concluded the Duke.

Jarvis walked up to him, for the first time in their acquaintance dead serious.

"Your Excellency," he said crisply, "I decline your offer and your advice and your sympathy—and I'll tell you why. I saw a gambler lay down four aces once because, as he said, 'The play ain't natural.' You tried to have me arrested on the steamer—you have tried to block me in every move I have made. Now—suddenly—you are deeply concerned lest something should happen to precious little me in that castle. You advise me to stay out. You even offer to buy me off. Shall I take your advice? NO! 'The play ain't natural.'"

On Guard.

His Excellency of Alva trembled with a cold fury, but held himself in.

"You have intruded into a matter which you neither understand nor appreciate," he said rapidly. "If, as you say, the play seems unnatural, pray do as your gambling friend—put down your cards and stay out of the game."

"No," retorted the young man, grimly. "I stay in the game—but I'm going to watch the deal."

The return of the Princess abruptly terminated the conversation and when the two men turned to greet her they had recovered their natural tones and bearing.

"Well, all Segura is buzzing with your ghost-hunt to-night," observed the Duke, lightly. "The whole town will sit up to hear the outcome."

"And where are you going to get the returns, Duke?" asked Jarvis, with concealed interest.

"Unfortunately, I must leave at once," was the unexpected reply.

Even Jarvis was momentarily startled, but he quickly readjusted his inferences. "I am keenly disappointed, but I have an urgent summons to Madrid."

The Princess stared at her cousin, seemed about to speak and suddenly turned to the innkeeper who had followed her down stairs and ordered him to look after "the gentleman's wants."

"Thank you," said Jarvis, rightly interpreting this as a dismissal. "I'd like a couple of good horses and two lanterns."

"Lanterns?" smiled the Duke, as the young man went out. "Looking for an honest man, Mr. Warren?"

"Not in this neck of the woods, Your Excellency," retorted Jarvis, over his shoulder.

"Carlos," exclaimed the Princess, anxiously, when they were alone, "what have you found out? Tell me—what do they say?"

The Duke looked very solemn. "I regret to tell you that nothing is known of your brother since he entered the castle."

The girl closed her eyes and pressed her hands to her face.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned.

A Last Appeal.

Dolores called that Don Robledo was waiting with His Excellency's car.

"Cousin, do you really intend to go now?" cried the girl in tragic tones. "I need you! My brother needs you! Think what it means to us!"

"I am broken-hearted, dearest cousin—do not make my duty any harder by your words. The message is from His Majesty. It is mandatory. And, alas! in Spain, as in the Far East, to hear is to obey."

"But why must you start so soon?"

"You know my ride is a long one and I must travel fast while the moon is up."

The girl was silent for a moment and when she spoke again voice and features were composed into a chilly hardness.

"Not to open this discussion again, I want to say now that I will never forgive you for leaving my brother and me at this critical moment."

"Would you have me lose my favor with the King?" protested the Duke.

"Does his favor mean more to you than mine?" retorted the girl proudly.

The Duke spread out his palms and half bowed.

"Noblesse oblige, cousin," he said gently. "Nobles and kings must obey what lesser men might ignore. My heart is here, but my honor is with the King."

"Honor!" The Princess flung the word back at him as if it were a stinging missile. "The cloak for a man's vanity! Sacred honor!—to be kept bright at any cost, lest men should test his metal and find it base. Give me a man who cares less for honor than for me! You ask me to-day why I do not marry you. I will tell you why. I want a man, not a weakling, masquerader. Yes, honor lives, but loyalty is dead! Courage is dead, and the brave blood of your ancestors, the blood that made Spain, has turned to water in your veins. There is not a nobleman in Spain who would dare go now this night to my brother in the castle. God! How I could love such a man!"

"Perhaps," sneered her cousin, stung by the bitter tirade, "perhaps such a man as your Yankee adventurer?

"Perhaps I could," cried the girl, instantly taking up the challenge. "Who knows?"

The Duke bit his lips and before he could frame an adequate reply the man himself appeared, slowly descending the stairs. So he merely bowed, took the girl's hand and kissed it.

"Farewell," he said in a low voice, "some time you will forgive me. Success to you, Mr. Ghost-Breaker, when you bead the specter in his den."

"Thank you, your Excellency," drawled Jarvis, leaning against the stairpost. "I will do my uttermost to put salt on the specter's tail."

"Good-bye!"

"Good night, Duke!"

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with some concern and a question on his lips.

"Mr. Warren," she said abruptly, "we must start at once!"

The strained quality of her voice told him that she was laboring under the most intense excitement and it was with studied ease of manner and voice that he replied:

"It's out of the question for you to go to the castle until I have smashed this infernal mystery; there is nothing you could do. If your brother is there I'll find him. You must be patient and remain here, where you are safe, and try to rest."

"I can not rest until I know what has happened to him," she cried desperately. "I shall go mad if I am left here alone!"

"But it's not safe for you to go," he insisted.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

OFF TO THE CASTLE.

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with som econcern and a question on his lips.

"MEGGIE, the postman is coming up the garden path. Would you mind going to the door?"

Mrs. Martin paused in the kneading of the large batch of dough and glanced toward the tiny sitting room. A pretty girl of about eighteen emerged in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crabbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips.

"Who is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

The girl burst into a flood of hot furious tears, and flung the letter scornfully upon the table.

"If Jack is too good for me, I don't thank her to tell me so," she declared. "She herself wasn't much until she married Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. Mrs. Martin picked up the letter and read it slowly. A look of contempt flashed in her honest gray eyes.

The letter, which was couched in terms of lofty condescension, mingled with biting satire, conveyed the unmistakable message that the silly attachment existing 'twixt Meggie and Jack was viewed with disapproval, and advised the girl to look elsewhere, unless she wished to bring Jack to financial beggary.

In a few minutes Meggie, her eyes red with crying, descended the staircase, and her mother gathered her in her arms.

"Take no heed of the foolish letter, my dear," she said soothingly.

Ten minutes later found Meggie on the way to Flamstead.

She Sees Jack.

A man emerged from behind a spur of cliffs and a sudden rush of color suffused her cheeks. The man saw her at the same time and came toward her at an increased pace. He was a tall, strongly built man of about twenty-one, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and darkly curled hair showed beneath his sou'wester.

"Great guns! What are you doing abroad a morning like this, Meggie?"

"I'm just on my way to Flamstead to make a few purchases, Jack," she said. "Are you putting out to sea to-day?" There was an anxious note in the inquiry, as she glanced uneasily toward the horizon, which was enshrouded in a threatening murkiness.

Her glance seemed to bring something to his recollection, for his bright eyes suddenly darkened, and he laid a hand upon the rough surface of his jersey. The next moment he had taken the girl's arm in a close grip.

"Did you receive a letter this morning, Meggie?" he asked abruptly.

A tell-tale flush of confusion dyed Meggie's cheeks, and her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Then it is true. She has been interfering between you and me. By heaven, I'll make her retract every word she has written.

* * * * *

It was a night long to be remembered by "those who go down to the sea in ships," and by the poor fisherfolk of Sharpel's Head in particular.

"I'm main afraid they won't do it. If they do, 'twill be by the grace of God!"

The distress signal flickered for a second, and then was obliterated by the flying spume. The old fisherman who had first spoken made his hands into a megaphone, and gave vent to a loud but futile shout.

"'Tis awful to have to stand by and watch them go to their death without being able to lend a hand," he said.

"She cannot last long in a sea like this," declared old Timothy, with a shake of his head. "A boat wouldn't live a minute in such a boil. 'Tis years since I'v seen the like."

Scarcely had he spoken when there was a commotion at the rear of the watchers, and a slight cheer was raised. The men from the Flamstead Coastguard Station had arrived, and at their head raced Meggie Martin, her dark hair streaming in the wind. A minute later a rocket with a mighty rush soared seaward, taking with it the line. It hummed like a string of a gigantic harp. At length there emerged from the darkness the dim outline of the breeches-buoy, and from it hung the limp figure of a man.

"Why, 'tis Jim Carlin, of the Waterwitch."

A wild, terrified wail greeted the announcement, and Mrs. Ryalls rushed into the arc of light cast by the lantern.

"The Waterwitch! Good heavens! What of my husband?"

She reeled, and would have fallen had she not been caught by Meggie. The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girlish figure sprang toward him and seized him by the arm.

Jack Is Left.

"All are not saved!" she cried in a voice that was almost a scream. "There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured and Jack has sent him first. Oh, he quick, or 'twill be too late!"

The officer spun round with a sharp command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey.

"I'm afraid it's all over, miss. There is no response. He shook the line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn ashore, and almost at the same moment and hawser perceptibly slackened.

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!" shouted the officer. "Tighten up the hawser, lads, and let's have another try for the poor fellow."

The officer and his men hurried away with the lanterns toward the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy.

A reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, had swung herself into the buoy and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline toward the deafening inferno below.

Meggie felt a numbness creeping over her senses, but she bravely fought it back. She had set herself the task of saving Jack if he still lived and that task must be accomplished.

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips as she recognized it as the figure of Jack Ryalls. Meggie suddenly leaned from the buoy and, seizing the limp figure of her lover, drew him toward her. * * *

"Why, bless me, if there ain't two!" The cry escaped old Timothy.

"And if it ain't Meggie Martin that's bin out to the wreck to fetch Jack in, I'll stand hanging!" declared another voice. "Hold that lantern up, Bill. Let's have a look at the heroine of Sharpel's Head."

The feeble rays of light fell upon the locked figures of Jack Ryalls and his gallant rescuer, and the next moment a tremendous hurrah rose above the soughing wind. Five minutes later the unconscious couple were being conveyed home with the utmost haste, followed by a crowd of silent but enthusiastic witnesses of the daring deed.

* * * * *

Twelve months later a pretty wedding was solemnized at the quaint church of Sharpel's, and the whole of the townsfolk turned out to do honor to the handsome pair; but never did a heart beat more proudly than did that of Jack Ryalls as he led his bride between the lines of fishermen who formed the guard of honor—the girl who had snatched him from the very jaws of death.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I DO NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and in love with a man two years my senior. He is nice and has a good position. I kept steady company with him for a year and a half. Then my mother stopped him from calling on me, but never gave a reason; but, as it is, we go out, when we get a chance, together. He has given me two diamond rings. Do you think it is right for me to see him as long as mother does not consent? CUTTIE.

You owe her obedience, and must not see this man clandestinely.

On the other hand, you are now 18, and your mother owes you a reason for her objections. Can you not persuade her to tell you what they are that he may have a chance to overcome them? If he is the man who is to tell you the "sweetest story of all," I don't want you to lose him.

NOT A DAY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19, and am keeping company with a man 25 years old. Do you think he is too old for me? We never quarrel. He loves me, I know, but my father thinks him too old for me. He makes fine pay and gives me good times. We think a lot about each other and get along fine. H. E.

He is not a day too old. Are you sure your father's objections are not based on some other ground?

BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I received an invitation from a young lady to attend her birthday party. Is it proper for me to accept the invitation, as I have never been introduced or even seen the young miss? PERPLEXED.

A girl who would do anything so foolish deserves the rebuke you are in position to give her by declining the invitation.

Household Suggestions

Weak eyes that ache when exposed to the glare of the sun, especially on the sea, should be treated with cold water compresses. These are folded on the closed lids, and ease the aching at once.

If troubled with ants indoors spread a piece of brown paper with marmalade rather thickly, then place it where they are most troublesome. It will soon be covered with them.

When boiling potatoes put a teaspoonful of sugar as well as salt in the water. This does not give a sweet taste, but makes them dry and floury.

Effect.

"Did you see the lovelight in her eyes?"

"No. The gaslight was in her eyes, and she squinted."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

HUSBAND deer, sed Ma to Pa last evening, at last I have found a perfek jewel of a servant. She caim to work this afternoon, & I want you to notis her wen she is serving dinner. She is as brite a gurl as I have ever met. She is a cullurd girl, her naim is Minyunette, & she went to a gurl's college that Booker Washington had sumthing to do with. Her flow of English is perfeck, Ma sed, & I was thinking that littel Booble cud improve his English by jest lissening to her talk.

Didn't Warm Up.

I doant warm up vary much as you are talking, sed Pa. Sumhow I aint very keen for a servant that knows moar than we do. You know how long that one lasted with us that was all the time talking about Henry James & Shopenhaur.

Oh, but this gurl is different, sed Ma. She is vary quiet & I doant think she will air her nollege any.

I knew Pa wasn't going to like the new gurl, tho. I had herd her talking to Ma beefoar Pa caim hoam, & this is what she sed wen she was talking off her wraps: I presume that the duties connected with the situatidn will not be arduous. That dident sound like our other gurl that we had beefoar her, she sed when shall i pitch in?

She Comes In.

Well, wen dinner beegan Minyunette caim in to wait on the tabel. She had a high forehead & woar glasses.

Wife, sed Pa to Ma, you & little Bobbie are going to a Shakespeer reading to-nite.

Oh, sed Minyunette, I adoar Shakespeer. He is so many minded, his scope is so all em-bracing. I was just looking at yure fat husband, she sed, & thinking of Shakespeer's lines

I want fat men about me, sleek hedded men
& such as sleep o' nights.
Yon Cashus hath a leen & hungry look.
He thinks too much. Such men are dangerus!

Pa dropped his fork & looked at Minyunette the way he looks at me wen my report card says Deportment, 65. But Minyunette dident notis Pa, she kept on talking. I think the character of Shakespeer's Portia is a butiful one, she sed. So wise & yet so sweet and womanly. I can see her now in my mind's eye, saying

The quality of mercy is not strained.
It falleth as the gentle rain from heaven.
It is twice blessed, it blesseth him—

See here, sed Pa, I doant want to be any Simon Legree, but it wuddent be a bad ide, Minyunette, if you showed a littel moar sped out in the kitchen & a littel less in here. I am as hungry as a jailed suffragist, sed Pa, & it doesent help my hunger any to heer you spouting Shakespeer. The next thing I know you will be raving about Lord Byron and trying to reesite all of Childe Harolds Pilgrimage. Come on, now, sed Pa, moar spuds & less Shakespeer.

Didn't Like It.

Minyunette dident like it at all the way Pa talked. She took off her apron & sed to Ma, Madame, I regret that I shall be compelled to seek elsewhere for a posishun whare the environ-ments is moar en-vironing, sed Minyunette. I was sure I was going to like it here, beekaus you are a sweet nature, but yure husband is rude & of the soil. Our souls are not at-tuned, she sed. & so, obaying the word of fate, our ways part.

Good-NITE, sed Pa.

:-: The Melody :-:

WHEN evening came with the shadows she let her little frail hands fall into her lap as if every muscle and tendon had suddenly burst. Her finely-shaped dark-haired head rested on the table. She was sitting in front of her sewing machine, at which she had been working all day. All around her were scraps of silk and woolen goods, fashion papers and patterns lay in piles on the table, and when she moved her arms some of them dropped on the floor. Her head was dizzy with complete exhaustion. She was unable to think, but felt the increasing darkness as a blessing which put an end to the toil of the day.

It was ten years of work that had aged her. These years had been to her like one long walk through an endless desert without a single oasis to relieve the monotony; her feet had left no tracks on the sands; not a single cry from her lips had been responded to; nobody had met her on the way to shake her hand.

But on the other side all these years of weary thraldom there were a few years when she had been young and had lived. In those years the two had sat together, watching the coming of dark, and were glad and laughed at everything.

She was young then, and worked for small wages in a dressmaking shop. He had long hair, dreaming eyes, an inexhaustible fund of hope, and a violin—that was all but he was an artist. He was young, gave lessons on the violin and managed to make both ends meet. He was always bright and happy. Nobody could laugh as he could, or cheer her up as he could. He knew how to make everything appear in a golden and rosy light.

One night he came to her unexpectedly and took her into his arms. "I cannot live without you," he said. "Why should we wait until we can afford to marry. Then we shall be old and gray. You cannot put happiness aside and say, 'Wait a few years; I cannot give you any of my time now; later on I will call for you.' Will you not come to me now and live with me as my wife?"

But she did not understand him. She struggled out of his arms, wounded and unhappy, an intense pain shooting through her every nerve and fiber. For solitude had made her shy and suspecting; his suggestion hurt her, and she asked him to leave her. She no longer remembered the passionate words that passed between them; but he left her, pale and angry, his black hair in disorder and his eyes shooting fire at her.

Two days passed. Then one evening she saw it in one of the papers—a short notice which most people would have overlooked. He had shot himself. He had gone straight from her and had sent a bullet through his brain. She thought of all the hard words she had said to him and felt how unjust she had been to him.

As she was putting her room in order she felt a sudden desire to go out, to see people around her and hear them talk, to feel the cool evening air in her face.

From the park she heard music which irresistibly drew her in among the trees, where it was so much more pleasant than in the dreadful rushing and crowding of the streets. She stopped in front of a large restaurant with many chairs and tables outside and music in the veranda, where a few persons sat drinking and talking.

She sat down on a bench under a dripping tree, where she could hear the musicians. Here she sat for a long time quietly and sad, with her hands folded and her head thrown back.

Suddenly a musician got up to play a violin solo. He was a tall, dark young man; he stooped a little. His eyes were sad and melancholy under the heavy brows.

As he started to play she stood up, trembling. She felt like rushing up to him and asking him to stop, but she fell back on the bench and hid her face in her hands.

"That melody contains all life," he used to say; "love, suffering and happiness."

When the violinist lowered his bow she stood up and went home. Like a small shadow she disappeared among the crowd. Nobody had a look or a thought for her.

But her pale, tired-looking mouth was smiling, and in her eyes was the light of happiness. No longer did she dread the visions of the day or the dreams of the night.

She had a hand to clasp now in the darkness, a hand which was to guide her through eternity.

Condensed Measure.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked a sharp servant of the milkman, whom she suspected of giving short measure.

"Yes," replied the man.

"Well, it won't do," said the girl. "When we want condensed milk we'll buy it at the grocer's."

Where He Was Hit.

Tommy—Boo-oo-oo! We were 'avin' a naval battle, and 's torpedoed me in the engine room!

How to Acquire a Beautiful Figure Through Dancing.

These pictures were especially posed for this page.

In the figure on top, Lady Constance shows how to stand gracefully. A simple exercise in swaying from foot to foot. This will teach you how to balance the weight properly. The next figure below will bring grace to arms and shoulders. Beside this it is a splendid exercise for reducing hips and thigs.

In the last figure Lady Constance gives a little tip-toe exercise.

By Lady Constance Stewart Richardson.

EVERYONE agrees that for the art of sculpture we can not exceed the ancients. To me it seems that the Greeks had beautiful sculptured figures because they had wonderful models, and had wonderful models because they had a deep veneration for the almost divine beauty of the human form. And so out of this circle of perfection they chiseled glorious figures that we of to-day may use as models for the beautification of our own bodies.

To-day I am showing you three figures, and I shall dwell at length on them and what we may hope to acquire from a practice of the poses they portray. Let us make a slight study of the expression of countenance and body. For unless the face and body are attuned in the expression of a mood, there will be ungraceful uncertainty as a result.

The First Figure.

The first figure on top might stand for a number of ideas—injured innocence is the most dramatic idea that it suggests. To me it simply is a harmoniously simple pose, in which body and face express quiet dignity. Try it yourself—for it looks very easy to take a pose like this. But to stand poised firmly and gracefully on one foot, with the whole body balanced, ready to spring into motion and life and still at rest, is quite a feat. The ability to stand gracefully is rare—for people generally balance on heels or toes, or sag awkwardly on one hip.

Let me suggest an exercise for the acquisition of ability to stand gracefully. Balance the weight on the ball of the right foot, let the right arm hang easily at the side. Sway the body slightly to the left and raise the left arm to the chest, at the same time rising on the toes of the left foot until the weight is all balanced on the right foot. Then sway the weight gradually to the left foot, rising on the right toe and lifting the right arm to the chest. Simply sway from foot to foot in exactly the posture that figure one shows you.

Is Very Simple.

Figure two is gayety shown in one step of an old dance of triumph. It gives the most marvellous control of thigh, knee, ankle and instep, and will serve to bring down an accumulation of weight about the hips and thighs. Furthermore, it insures a graceful control of arms and shoulders.

The practice of this seemingly complicated exercise is simple when once you carefully analyze the picture I have posed for you. Beginning with the left foot, rise slowly to the toes, at the same time raising the other leg with the knee bent and the instep so flexed that the toes point almost perpendicularly to the floor.

The rising on the toes of one foot and the lifting of the other limb until the knee is far above the waist line must be simultaneous.

Practice this first, alternating from one foot to the other, with the arms hanging at the sides.

Then combine the arm and leg motion, and see what a gain in balance results.

Lift the arms with drooping wrists, and as the hands reach the shoulders, and the elbows are at waist height, turn the fingers up, at the same time turning out the hand above the raised knee, and elevating the up-pointing fingers of the other hand above the head.

Poise, balance, and reduction of superfluous hip-flesh—is this not a vast deal to gain from one dancing exercise?

The last figure illustrates a little faun-like movement that is splendid for back, throat and instep, as well as for flexibility of wrist. Walk forward on tip-toes, with the uplifted hands crossing first to the right and then to the left as the body's weight is thrown first on the right and then on the left foot. When the weight is coming on the right foot and the right wrist is foremost, throw the head to the right and give the body (which must be bent slightly back throughout the exercise) a slight turn to the right. Alternate this from foot to foot.

Always practice these exercises in regular alternation from right to left or left to right and back again to insure even bodily development. Real beauty of form demands as first requisite absolutely even and uniform development, for only when it is absolutely normal is the body truly lovely as Our Maker meant it to be.

Up-to-Date Jokes

The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something.

"I'll have to get rid of Fido," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?"

Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous and burning indignation, as she replied:

"Every single thing except the dog biscuits."

"Waiter," grumbled a customer, "I should like to know the meaning of this. Yesterday I was served with a portion of pudding twice the size of this."

"Indeed, sir," rejoined the waiter. "Where did you sit?"

"By the window," answered the customer.

"Oh, that accounts for it," said the waiter. "We always give people by the window large portions. It's an advertisement."

:-: The Sins of Our Fathers :-:

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

MILDRED writes: "I am deeply in love with a young man three years my senior. I have been keeping company with him for the past three months. I would like to bring him up to the house, but my father objects to me bringing any boys up to the house. What shall I do?"

In the category of sins which fathers visit upon their children, no mention is made of the heavy penalty that often results when a girl is compelled to do all her "sweethearting" outside the protecting walls of her home. If the streets, the parks, the public walks or the dark corners of steps are made a girl's parlor, then I contend her father is visiting upon her innocent head as great a burden as if he violated all the moral and physical laws. In the most trying period of her life, when through her love she is weakest to resist, she is cast out on the streets without even the environment of familiar scenes at home to remind and to restrain her.

One can not be as easily tempted when in the familiar scenes of one's youth and innocent dreams, as if in strange surroundings. It is as if every chair, the table, even the pictures on the wall, looked with accusing eyes, surrounding the girl with whose life they have always been a part with a moral influence that is never lightly brushed aside.

The girl who receives her lover in her parlor impresses him, though perhaps unconsciously, with the sanctity, the respectability, the dignity of a home. The girl whose parlor is the streets may be good and pure and sweet, and usually is, but girls whose object is not moral also meet men on the streets, and the similarity upsets his moral balance.

An Impression.

The girl in the parlor usually has a father or a mother in the next room, and the young man who calls is impressed with the fact that there is some one loving her, shielding her, to whom he will have to account if he offends. The girl on the street corners is without a mother or father, so far as any impression of personal security goes. She is thrown out like a waif; if she becomes a derelict the father or mother who refused her the privilege of receiving her lover in her parlor is to blame.

The memory of parents is criminally short. There are few of them who can call back to the days when they loved and were loved, and when the clasp of a hand, or a kiss, was worth more than all the wealth in the world, defied the wisdom of the ages. They have forgotten the call of youth.

There is no room in their memory for the cry of the heart for its mate, and, lacking this memory, they are as unfit to be parents of young girls and boys as an Egyptian mummy. They are without sympathy and understanding, at the period when the young in their charge need sympathy and understanding the most.

Without these they are also without charity. I have a notion that the father of Mildred, who compels her to do her "sweethearting" on the streets, would be like flint in his judgment if she yielded to the unwholesome influences of the dark corners of life and erred. Yet he would be more to blame than she.

Wisdo mto Refuse.

It is wisdom to refuse to let a girl bring a man to her home of whom her parents know nothing, but it is better to grant her even this privilege than to let her meet him on the streets. If they know nothing of him a closer inspection in their own home gives them every opportunity to know him better.

They can never know the manner of man their daughter is learning to love if they compel her to see him on street corners, and, being ignorant of him, they are without argument or weapons if he is undesirable.

Open the parlor for the girls. It is their right!

The Misfortunes of Joe Brick

A SHORT time ago I met my friend, Joe Brick. He looked worried. When I greeted him with a smile he groaned.

"Oh, if you only knew! If you knew, but you don't."

Then feeling, like most unhappy men, a desire to confide the story of his misery to somebody, he told it to me, and a pitiful story it was indeed.

"My affairs were going splendidly and I was already hoping to become a member of the Billionaires' Club," began Joe. "A rich marriage, I thought, would help me along. In society. I had often met Miss Ruby Smith, a daughter of the king of agriculture, a young lady of unusual beauty, but who unfortunately had neither arms nor legs. She was called the trunk woman. She was known to be amiable and sweet tempered, and was extraordinarily bright, so bright indeed that most of the schemes which had made her father the richest man in the United States had been hatched in her brain.

"I Decided to Marry."

"I decided to marry Ruby Smith, and one afternoon, dressed in my very best clothes, I asked her father for her hand.

"He looked at me sharply and said:

"'My daughter is very rich; how much are you worth?'

"I told the dreaded magnate all about my hopes. I proved to him that I had an idea which would revolutionize the manufacture of beet sugar, that I had a scheme to cut the cost of oleomargarine in two, and depicted to him all the details of my plan to increase the crop of Brussels sprouts, to triple its present size by sprinkling the plants twice a day with water from the celebrated Manneken fountain in Brussels, and how there were untold millions in my idea of exporting black radishes to the negroes in Africa.

"He was greatly impressed, took me into his arms and exclaimed:

"'You are to be my son-in-law, if Ruby will have you for her husband.'

"Miss Ruby received me most cordially. Poor little one, how beautiful she was! A regular Venus from Milo, only more perfect still, since her legs, too, were missing.

"I shall not go into details. It is enough to tell that she accepted me and a date was set for our wedding. It was celebrated with great splendor. It was the happiest day in my life. After the ceremony my wife received all her old friends with open arms, in spirit at least, in our new home. I felt my future was assured and knew that I would surely be elected for membership in the Millionaires' Club, which was the height of my ambition. Alas, it was not to be!"

"My dear little wife, my darling Ruby!' I said to my bride when we were alone: 'What do you say to giving up all our old habits for a few months and leave this feverish town for an idyllic wedding trip?'

"'You really think of everything, Joe!' she exclaimed, and as she could not clasp my hand she looked right into my soul with her angelic eyes. 'I am ready to follow you to the end of the world!'

"I have always been a most chivalrous fellow, so I felt like kissing her hand, but had to kiss her forehead instead.

"'I do love you so, Joe,' she whispered.

"'And I adore you, Ruby. There is no other woman in the world half so beautiful to me as you are!'

"We left for Canada in our private car, starting on our famous trip, which filled columns in the newspapers. We were to cross the Rocky Mountains and stay for some time in Monterey and Los Angeles, but the pitiless hand of destiny interfered. We were as happy as two turtle doves during the first part of our journey, and I felt that Ruby loved me more every day.

The Fatal Day.

"Then the fatal day came. The train, our own special train, of course, was speeding along at 70 miles an hour, when suddenly there was a shrill whistle and the airbrakes were jammed down hard. Train robbers had held us up and now invaded our drawing room.

"'Hands up!' cried a gigantic fellow standing in the doorway.

"Ruby behaved like a heroine and smiled indulgently at the bandit, while my hands shot upward.

"'Hands up!' roared the robber once more, and as Ruby, of course, was unable to comply with his request, he fired at her, killing her on the spot.

"That is how I became a widower," sobbed Joe. "The king of agriculture accused me of leading his daughter, his right hand as he called her, into a trap. He blackballed me in the Billionaires' Club and did not keep a single promise to me in connection with my schemes. That is why I am a ruined man to-day. By the way, can you lend me a hundred?"

* * *

Only to-day I learned that Joe is spending his time in a nice, quiet retreat for the feeble-minded. He had told the story of his misfortunes to a dignified old judge while awaiting his turn at a barber shop.

By Virtue of Age.

"Yes," said the old man to his visitor. "I'm proud of my daughters, and it is the ambition of my heart to see them all comfortably married.

"What's more," he added knowingly, "I've made a bit of money in my time, so my girls wont go to their husbands penniless. There's Mary for example, 25 years old, and a real good lass—I'll give her $1,500 on her wedding day. And to Bet—you see, she has past her thirty-fifth summer—I'll give her, at any rate, a couple of thousand; whilst the man who takes Eliza can rely on taking with her at least $5,000 of the very best."

"By the way," inquired the young man, "how old is Eliza?"

"Forty," replied the elder.

"Hum! I suppose you don't happen to have a daughter somewhere between sixty and seventy?"

Do You Know---

There has been such a decline of recent years in the marriage rate of Trieste that one of the civic dignitaries suggests the institution of a system of compulsory matrimony. It is proposed that on a given date in each year all spinsters who have attained their twenty-fifth year and bachelors who have attained their thirtieth should be required to present themselves before the syndic in whose jurisdiction they reside. The names of those who on medical examination prove to be thoroughly sound would be sorted according to sex, placed in separate urns, and then drawn two at a time. The couples whose names are drawn together would, at the conclusion of the draw, be united forthwith by the syndic.

A traveling theatrical company, which is at present visiting Lille, France, gives performances in a couple of barges, which are towed along the canal from town to town. One barge does duty for the theater, while the other serves to house the players. The floating theater is comfortably fitted, and there is a large stage, with scenery painted by a member of the company.

One of the competitions in connection with the Welsh Territorial Artillery, which recently concluded its training on the sand dunes at Pembrey, was a bun-eating contest. Two sappers set out to eat fourteen buns, the prize to go to the man who got through the lot in the quickest time. The winner ate his fourteen in 25 minutes, his opponent finishing five minutes later.

GAMBLING MAY WRECK GAME AT PELICANVILLE

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Southern League owes itself the duty of cleaning out the baseball gamblers at New Orleans.

That city, by far the largest in the league, should be the vertebra of the circuit. Instead, it is only an appendix—and a decidedly diseased appendix at that.

I've talked with a lot of managers and players in this league, firing at all of them the question, "What's the matter with New Orleans?"

Some of them didn't know.

The rest agreed.

"Too much gambling."

It is understood that gambling runs practically wide open in the New Orleans stands—that you can get a bet on anything from the outcome of the pennant race to the question of whether the next effort of the pitcher will be a ball or a strike.

* * *

GAMBLING ruins baseball wherever it gets a foothold. It makes knockers. It creates a suspicion of faking. It drives respectable people away from the games.

What New Orleans needs is a house cleaning.

The gamblers should be run out of the stands and kept out. Every effort should be made to keep down gambling on games to the minimum.

It is really up to President Kavanaugh to take a look into this question. The interests of the league can be protected in no other way. The New Orleans Baseball Association can't handle the question, and has proved it.

The league is sickening because of this festering sore.

Somebody phone Old Doctor Kavanaugh!

* * *

IT is sort of a pathetic coincidence that Jud Daley is to succeed Spencer at New Orleans. They are chips off the same block—or should we say tusk?

Judson doesn't seem to be hitting them as of old. It can't be that he is aging. So probably he's in sort of a slump.

He's a great card for any club, on account of his cutting-up and his kidding of the bleachers, and is worth his pay as a comedian.

* * *

SEVERAL men, well known in Dixie, are figuring prominently in the International League these days. Derrick is batting .346 with Baltimore, and is leading the league. Ed Lafitte leads the Providence batters with .329. Swacina and Bill Zimmerman, both former Southern Leaguers, are hitting moderately hard with the Newark club "Swats" has a mark of .302 to his credit, while "Heinie" is going at a .281 clip.

* * *

THIS Clark that the Crackers have just picked up appears to be one of the champion wild men of organized baseball. Until a few days ago he belonged to the Highlanders. In a game in St. Louis, Chance stuck him in. He started by giving Derrill Pratt four successive high ones. Pratt waited for four that didn't come near the plate. It was the same for Johnston.

Having pitched twelve successive balls, Wallace was next. Bob got a ball, and then, to the surprise of everybody, Clark pitched a strike. The next three were balls, though, and Chance yanked his recruit southpaw with the record of one strike in seventeen tries.

About sunset, Chance sold him to Clark Griffith.

Clark's big league career dates back to the days when Chase was managing the New York team. Arthur Irwin tipped Chase off to the fact that Clark had worlds of stuff. Chase sent "King" Brockett out to Sioux City to look Clark over, and, on the "King's" favorable report, Chase signed the southpaw.

Clark, upon being brought to civilization, proved wild as a bat. He had more stuff than Marquard and less control than Lefty Russell. He was shifted around a bit. Last season, he started with Rochester and was then sent to the Northwestern League. He was a successful twirler there, despite the fact that he issued AN AVERAGE OF NEARLY A BASE ON BALLS TO AN INNING.

It is doubtful if the world has ever seen a man wilder than Clark in his wildest moments. But when he has control, they couldn't hit him with a fishnet.

Clark will be another case for the attention of Old Reliable Joe Dunn. The man will be put under Joe's coaching. Maybe, Joseph can make a pitcher out of him. Any time Clark starts and is right, it's all over. Any time he's wild—good evening.

DENT OR BRADY TO-DAY; LOCALS EXPECT TO WIN

By Joe Agler.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., July 18.—Bill Smith is going to shoot King Brady or "Slight" Dent against the Pelicans to-day. And we win it sure!

Those chaps were lucky to "get by" yesterday. They found us worn out after an awful trip, they got to an injured pitcher and it was all off. And at that we stalled them along for ten innings. We'll get them to-day.

Conzelman didn't have the stuff yesterday he had before he was hurt. He had no control over his curve and his fast ball did not break as it used to.

We got away in front as usual, scoring three runs in the first inning. They came back at us for a tie in the second and went out ahead in the fourth. In the seventh they added another on a wild pitch. We tied it up in our half of the eighth on doubles by Alperman and Bisland and my single.

In the fatal tenth, with two gone, Angemeier's single scored Williams, who had walked, and the game was over.

We aren't in the least bothered by the loss of the game, even to the Pelicans. We have thirteen more on our trip. If we can break even we ask no more. Our long stay at home will give us the chance we want to win the pennant.

CUMMINGS BEATS THOMAS.

ANACONDA, MONT., July 18.—Dan Cummings, of Chicago, was given the decision over Young Joe Thomas, featherweight, at the end of twelve fast rounds of fighting last night.

FODDER FOR FANS

Although the National and American League races are far from ended, Ban Johnson and other members of the National Commission have already begun to plan for the 1913 world's series. Johnson says that in the event the Giants and Athletics win in their respective leagues the games will be played in New York and Philadelphia on alternate days.

Second Baseman Ted Cathers and Left Fielder Lee Magee, of the Cardinals, are wearing bruises and scratches to-day as the result of an old-fashioned fist fight in which they indulged during the Giants-Cardinals double-header. Cathers intimated that Magee couldn't catch a cold and to disprove this assertion Magee sailed into his fellow-player. Both were put out of the game.

SUNDAY SCHOOL TEAMS PLAY SATURDAY AT PONCE

At Ponce DeLeon park Saturday afternoon the two leading clubs of the Sunday School League will meet in a double-header. In the absence of Billy Smith's Crackers, fans in large numbers are expected to provide the best crowd of the Sunday school season for the Saturday afternoon games.

The First Baptist team, leading the league with twelve straight victories and no defeats, has been playing such ball as to attract sidewise glances from the pennant races of the larger leagues, and is determined to add two more wins Saturday. The S. Y. D. club, in second place, with seven victories and three defeats, is equally determined to break up the winning streak of the Baptists. Both teams will be in classiest condition for the double-header Saturday, which is scheduled to begin at 3 o'clock.

"I DIDN'T RESIGN, I WAS FIRED," SAYS JAKE STAHL

BOSTON, July 18.—"I didn't resign from the Red Sox; I was fired," declared Jake Stahl, when he arrived in Boston. "I gave the Red Sox the best of the baseball that was in me. I was with them heart and soul. That club was the only one which I was ever really interested in. And I wish them all the best of success," continued Stahl.

SOUTH MICHIGAN TEAMS PLAY 20-INNING GAME

ADRIAN, MICH., July 18.—Battle Creek and Adrian, the leading teams in the Southern Michigan League, yesterday played twenty innings to a tie, each scoring one run before darkness ended the struggle. Manager Jenkins, of Adrian, in the fourth inning, singled, and advancing on a sacrifice hit and a passed ball, was scored on a sacrifice fly. Pitcher McDonald, of Battle Creek, tripled in the sixth and scored on an error. Loomis, Adrian's pitcher, struck out nineteen batters and issued one pass, purposely, in the twentieth inning. McDonald fanned sixteen and passed none.

BUSINESS.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Nor ever a soul to mutter,
Nor ever a voice to bawl.

Oh, well for the guys who lose!
They are only a bunch of dubs.
They get the hook and a vicious look
Like the manager of the Cubs.

And the gate receipts go on,
Though the manager may be nil,
And the magnates cry for a winning guy,
As they bark to the sound of the till.

Win, win, win,
At the job you have, Jake Stahl,
Or the friends you have, though they hand you salve,
Will hammer you to the wall.

Frank Chance was once a catcher. All he catches now is a flock of Gehenna.

Despite the fact that the Tigers whopped a few wallops into the Athletics, there is a deep suspicion that whopping the Athletics is not going to become a popular pastime.

Looking over the sport pages, we note that Larry Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues. This is a great truth. Mr. Chappelle may or may not be a sensation in the big leagues.

The fact that Messrs. McAleer and Stahl have split reminds us that both denied it. The only conclusion to be drawn is that they were prevaricating, or didn't know it was loaded.

Reading over the papers, one notes that there are bulky fields at Porter. But as for bulky purses that's something else again.

ODE TO A FIRST BASEMAN.

In the days of old
Jack Knight was sold,
As though he were a dub.
You cannot buy
That selfsame guy
While I am on this club.

The St. Louis Browns have protested a game won from them by the Yanks. If you are looking for nothing to worry about, this is it.

$13,500 IN CASH WAS PAID FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—A check for $13,500, in addition to Outfielder Beall and a catcher, covers the terms of transfer of Outfielder Chappelle, of Milwaukee, to the Chicago American League team, according to authoritative information today.

TEN-ROUND GO SCHEDULED.

Charley White, of Chicago, is scheduled to meet Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, in a ten-round fight at the Auditorium-Armory to-night. Abel is in the city. White, it is said, will arrive to-day. The fighters have agreed to make 133 pounds at 6 p. m. White says he will not fight if Abel is one ounce over weight.

HOW TO ATTAIN GOF BENEFITS TOLD BY EVANS

By "Chick" Evans.

IT is no doubt true that the majority of the golfers play simply for the exercise the game affords. Certainly golf furnishes an excellent opportunity for exercise, but it also supplies one of the finest studies in the world, and he who plays only for exercise misses half the pleasure. One can get a good deal of fun and exercise by just batting the ball around, yet surely much additional enjoyment can be found in attempting to discover the reasons that lie back of good or poor shots.

D. R. Forgan has said that "golf is the study of a lifetime," and this is undeniably true if one wishes to attain excellence. Every day the careful player can learn something about it and at the same time discover new obstacles to be overcome. It may be argued that the business man has no time to study a new game, but a little more care in playing would require but little more time.

There is a great pleasure in knowing how a thing is done, and no great progress can be made unless the underlying reasons for success are understood. Accidents happen, of course, and fortune is proverbially fickle, but she, like providence, is a little more inclined to help those who help themselves.

There is a great deal of good golf literature to be obtained at present, and I have no doubt a great deal of information can be obtained in that way. Personally, I have never read a book on golf except in the most casual manner, but I grew up on a golf links, and, at the observing age, learned my golf from observation. I believe strongly in books, however, and I think, if they are closely followed, they can be of much assistance to the beginner. This fall I intend to read as many golf books as I can lay my hands on, and I hope thereby to improve my game.

BRITTON REAL OPPONENT FOR TITLE HOLDER

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, July 18.—Not since the days when Frank Garrard and Martin Duffy, of this city, looked to be pretty fair championship material in the lightweight class have the local fight fans been so anxious to see a Chicagoan get a crack at the title. Neither Garrard nor Duffy ever made good in their day, but they were just as highly regarded along in the late 90s as are Jack Britton and Packey McFarland, present-day Chicago champions. Both Jack and Packey have a world of friends right here, and to say that they have their ears to the ground listening for some sort of a favorable report from the champion on the different propositions that have been hurled at him is putting it mildly.

* * *

PACKEY, while not issuing any direct challenges, has let it be made known to Ritchie that nothing would delight him more than to take him on in a 20-round contest, providing the weight bars be lowered just a little more, say another pound, letting the stock yards favorite in at 135 pounds, with the scaling done several hours in advance of the battle's start. With a foe of the McFarland caliber it is not likely that the champion will consent at all to any such an arrangement. He insisted upon 134 pounds for Rivers, and then trimmed the Los Angeles lad to the queen's taste, if queens have any particular taste in such matters. But from 134 pounds three hours or so before to 135 pounds five or six hours before is a vast gap that even the keen Ritchie eye is not likely to measure lightly.

* * *

BUT the Britton case is hugely different. Here is a boy who boldly flaunts this offer in the champion's face: "Make the weight, any figure that you choose," and then awaits the answer. Now, that leaves absolutely no loopholes for excuse or room for a single argument. Britton simply does not care what the poundage is, says so, and there rests his case. What will the answer be, to say nothing of the harvest?

* * *

NO sane man could ever accuse Willie Ritchie of cowardice. The man who jumped into the breach with Freddie Welch when Ad Wolgast was taken to the hospital and fought the English star almost to a standstill with but a few hours' notice, then whaled Ad Wolgast out of his title and went in and slugged with Joe Rivers at the latter's own game, is possessed, as Bill Naughton says, of a lion's heart. But Willie is a financier along with his other accomplishments and is not likely to enter into any contracts that do not promise the brightest of monetary returns. There isn't a doubt that if some promoter can see his way clear to offering the right sort of a prize for the champion he will lend himself to the match. Then we will see a real old-time battle between two of the greatest men that ever drew on a pair of gloves.

Pelky-Smith Battle For Sept. 1—Maybe

SAN FRANCISCO, July 18.—Arthur Pelky and his manager, Tommy Burns, are in town. Pelky came here in quest of ring battles, and picked as his choice for first battle "Gunboat" Smith. Burns and his fighter held a long conference with Jimmy Coffroth, and if arrangements can be made Pelky and Smith will furnish the Labor Day card in this city. Pelky had little to say, Burns doing all the talking.

"There will be a general disposition to look upon Pelky as a ring accident, just as the people tagged Willie Ritchie as a false alarm," said Burns.

"This is a mistake. My man has had 33 fights without having had a decision given against him. He made Jess Willard quit cold, and he stopped Jim Barry in five rounds. All that he needs is the opportunity to prove that he is the best heavyweight boxer in the game to-day."

WISCONSIN BOXING BILL IS SIGNED BY GOVERNOR

MILWAUKEE, WIS., July 18.—Governor Francis McGovern has signed the Hedding boxing bill and the sport becomes legalized in Wisconsin the same as in New York State.

Governor McGovern had protests from many sources, but stated that he considered that in view of thousands of petitions in favor of the sport it was only just to the majority that they should be given a chance to show that boxing under proper conditions is much better than under no law at all.

It will now be up to the Governor to appoint a commission to handle the boxing game in the State.

SCHAEFER-GRAHAM DRAW.

DUBUQUE, IOWA, July 18.—Willie Schaefer, of Chicago, and Mike Graham, of Milwaukee, welterweights, last night fought ten fast rounds to a draw at the Riverside arena.

MORRIS SCORES A K. O.!

CLOVIS, N. MEX., July 18.—In a scheduled ten-round boxing bout staged in an open-air arena here last night, Carl Morris, of Oklahoma, knocked out Marty Cutler, a Chicago heavyweight, in the second round.

Dixie Handicap To Be Thriller

Six Men on Track at Once

IF they get through the Dixie Handicap at the Motordrome to-night without smearing a half-dozen riders all over the track they have pulled the race miracle of the year. For they are going to start six riders in this event, three of them with a lap lead over the other three. And the scratch men are going to try to catch the handicap men within four miles.

This affair will be a loud noise. Nothing can stop it. Every time they get four riders on the track at once it looks as though all of them were going to break their neck. With six on it in a handicap race, which will mean that three of the men must ride their bally heads off to catch the other three, there should be more excitement than the local Drome ever dreamed of before.

This will not be a team race, as might be judged from the description. Of course, the handicap men will team together at the start, as a means of keeping ahead. And the scratch men will hang together to lend each other a pace in their effort to catch up. But once the scratch men get within striking distance, it will be a case of every man for himself and the devil take the hindermost. When the three pursuing riders reach the three handicap men and all six of them tie up in an effort to gain the leadership anything may happen. Of course, the handicap men will never give an inch. If they can spread all over the track they will do it. That means that the men coming from behind at 85 miles an hour must worm their way through.

This will unquestionably be a big race. It will be fast because the scratch men must overcome a quarter of a mile lead in four miles. It will be dangerous and sensational of necessity because six men will be on the track at one time. And the winner is surely hard to pick.

The full program follows:

Motordrome Purse.
(2-mile heats, 2-mile final.)
First Heat—Graves, Renel, Shields.
Second Heat—McNeil, Lockner, Lewis.
Third Heat—Richards, Swartz, Luther, Glenn.
Final—Two miles.

Atlanta Sweepstakes.
(2-mile heats, 3-mile final.)
First Heat—McNeil, Swartz, Luther, Lewis.
Second Heat—Richards, Graves, Renel.
Third Heat—Lockner, Shields, Glenn.
Final—Three miles.

Invitation Race.
Luther, Lewis, Swartz and Glenn.

Dixie Handicap.
Handicap Men—Renel, Lockner, Shields (one lap handicap.)
Handicap Men—Richards, Graves, McNeil.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Chicago boxing critics are working hard these days trying to force Willie Ritchie into a match with either Packey McFarland or Jack Britton. Both boys hail from the Windy City and have met practically every boy of note during the past two years.

* * *

Frankie Whitney is certainly reaping in the dough these days. The Cedar Rapids "fighting carpenter" will take on Rudy Unholz in a scheduled 10-round battle at Denver on Friday night, and it is a pretty safe bet that Frankie will get at least as good as a draw. During the past six months Whitney has had nearly a dozen battles.

* * *

Many fans are picking Matty Baldwin to prove a stumbling block for Leach Cross when the pair exchange blows at Los Angeles on July 29. Although Matty has fought nearly 300 fights he has still to suffer his first knockout. He also holds a 20-round verdict over Willie Ritchie.

* * *

Kid Julian, the Syracuse featherweight, has accepted terms to meet Cal Delaney, of Cleveland, in a 12-round bout at Cleveland on July 26. Both boys are lightweights.

* * *

Charles Ledoux, the French bantamweight champion, is in bad shape from the beating handed him by Kid Williams at Los Angeles the early part of this week. It may be months before the game boy from across the pond will be able to don the gloves again.

* * *

Jim Clabby, the veteran middleweight, is to make his next fight against Freddie Hicks at Butte, Mont., on August 2. The pair are scheduled to go twelve rounds.

* * *

Steve Ketchel, the tough little lightweight from Chicago, added another victory to his list Wednesday night by defeating Phil Knight. The former was awarded the battle in the seventh round on a foul. Incidentally, Knight has been barred from boxing at Butte, Mont., for six months.

* * *

John Alex, the local fight manager, has matched his lightweight, Tom Brown, to meet some boy at Marietta, Ga., the latter part of this month. The bout is to be staged as the semi-wind-up to the Terry Nelson-Seymore set-to. John is a busy boy these days getting us protege into shape.

* * *

Young Denny, the New Orleans welterweight, has already started training for his 20-round engagement with "Wildcat" Ferns at the Pelican City on Labor Day. He is boxing daily with Joe Thomas.

* * *

Kid Brooks, local bantamweight, is still waiting to hear from some boy of his poundage in regard to a match. He is particularly anxious to hear from either Meyer Pries or Kid Duke.

* * *

The next big bout to be staged in New York will be a 10-round engagement between Gunboat Smith and Jim Flynn on August 8. Flynn is at present in Denver, but reports from the Colorado city state that he will leave for the battle ground some time next week.

R. A. HALL, OF MACON, IN TIE FOR TRAP HONORS

WILMINGTON, DEL., July 18.—Five amateur marksmen were tied yesterday for first place in the Eastern handicap, the feature event of the eighth annual Eastern handicap trap shooting tournament when darkness prevented further competition. The first leaders are M. L. Wise, of Marysville, Pa.; George M. Howell, Northumberland, Pa.; R. A. Hall, Macon, Ga., each with a score of 95 out of a possible 100. The tournament will be concluded to-day.

H. H. Sloan, of Philadelphia, was high amateur in the three days' shooting, breaking 562 in a possible 600. Charles G. Spencer, of St. Louis, was high professional, with 578 breaks.

M. D. Gibbs, of Union City, Tenn., and Lester S. German, of Aberdeen, Md., professionals, yesterday led their field with 100 straight each.

COACH J. W. HEISMAN, OF YELLOW JACKETS, WRITES ABOUT:

Ball Players That Tech Has Turned Out

By J. W. Heisman.

SO many college players are breaking into professional ball these days, and so many of them with great success, that the thing no longer occasions the surprise and comment that used to ensue. Something like 25 years ago, when I was attending a New England college, I can remember with what dumbfoundment we learned one day that one of our varsity players had received an offer from Boston. It tickled us nearly to death!

* * *

Among Southern colleges, Tech early took the lead in this respect by sending the great Henley straight to the big show. Unless my memory fails me badly, it was to the Athletics that Henley went, and it was about thirteen years ago. Even at that early date, when hardly any other professional managers would look at a college player, Connie Mack had his eyes wide open as to their possible usefulness.

When Henley first went to Tech he played first base, and he played it well. He was about 6 feet 1 inch tall, but very slender. His arms were very strong, and he had a fine free shoulder swing. Rather a handsome chap, this Henley, and a good, jovial fellow. Came from the little hamlet of Jasper, I believe, in North Georgia, the section that also sent Craig Day and DeWitt Poole to Tech—two other awfully good players and pitchers, who, however, never went into professional ball.

After several years of usefulness in the big league Henley was sent to the Rochester club, where he put in a couple more years of good work. But for some reason, his health was steadily failing him and finally he had to give it up. Just where he is to-to-day, I can not say. I know he went to Florida for a while in search of improved health, and perhaps he found it; at least we all hope so.

At the time Weldon was at the zenith of his glory as a college pitcher, Mercer was turning out some exceedingly strong teams. Their mainstay on the mound was the unforgotten Will Gunn, now a successful architect in Macon. It will have to be given up that Gunn was some gun himself when it came to making a noise like a pitcher, and endless were the arguments of that day in rah rah circles as to which was the better. I am not going into a history of the friendly feud, but it is worth observing that when the two teams finally did face each other at old Brisbine Park, with their respective stars down on the score card to do the hurling, there was some crowd present to witness the ceremonies, and some little excitement was had. The game was won by Tech; score, 30 to 0.

* * *

ANOTHER great picher that Tech turned out about the same time that Henley was absorbing all the limelight, was little Jimmy Lavendar, now with the Chicago Cubs. It would perhaps be more correct to say that Tech turned Jimmy out, or that it turned out an engineer, not that it turned out another pitcher, for, at that time, Jimmy didn't play ball at all, at least he never went out for the varsity; and so it is merely an accident that his youthful career was in any way associated with Tech's.

Lavendar was born and reared in South Georgia. He had seen a picture or two of a baseball before coming to Tech, but didn't care enough for the game to even come out and try for the team. It was after leaving Tech that his acquaintance with the pellet grew into a thing of beauty; and, after slamming the sphere around corner lots for a short time, it was found that Jimmy had the makings of a really, truly pitcher.

It was while doing stellar work with the Providence team of the Eastern League that Lavendar attracted Chicago's attention. Now, Jimmy is one of the "its" of the Cubs, and promises to remain one for some years yet.

* * *

TWO Atlanta boys attending Tech were the next to break into the professional class, and they both made good from the jump. One of these was Sam Woodward, the other, Jim Ison. The former was captain and catcher of my 1904 Tech team, while Jim was official first-sacker of the same aggregation.

Woodward was rather small for a catcher, but he had plenty of nerve, heaps of judgment, always kept cool, had a fine arm, was quick as a cat, and made a fine lead-off man, as he batted from the port side. Sam's favorite word of encouragement to his pitchers—Poole, Day and Butler—was "Beauty" after every pitched ball, but each time in a different intonation and with varying inflection and accents—and this quite regardless, in my, opinion, of whether the ball was really a beauty or a pumpkin.

Sam went to the Cotton States with Bernie McCay, where he played fine ball; but a blow on the head by a pitched ball came near to putting out his light. It took him quite a long time to recover. Later, Sam went to the Carolina League, and for several seasons managed the Anderson, S. C. club with signal success. He is now engaged in business in Atlanta and is making a success of life as president of the Woodward Electric Company.

By the way, during the college season of 1904, Sam caught every inning of every game without making a single error, and I gave him All-Southern catcher for it.

Jim Isom was one of the hardest-hitting first basemen I ever saw in college ranks. He was a godd, willing, cheery, all-around player and my clean-up man, which was some distinction with a team that had five men on its roster all batting over .400.

I forget what professional team Jim first joined, but he never had any trouble holding his berth right from the jump. He played several very successful seasons with Macon, where he again stung the pill hard, and he also starred in the Virginia League at second base for the Richmond club. Here he was an even better fielder than at first base.

Jimmy found an opportunity to go into a lucrative business here in Atlanta several years ago and decided to give up the game for good, though it cost him a pang or two to do so. Now, he is fat, happy and making money in the Gate City.

Later, I will tell of some other players Tech has turned out.

HAUSER GOES TO HOSPITAL.

BALTIMORE, MD., July 18.—Shortstop Hauser, of the St. Louis National baseball team, is on his way to Baltimore, where he will be operated on by Dr. William S. Baer, of Johns Hopkins Hospital. It is said that the player has a misplaced cartilage in his right knee.

MEEHAN BESTS MANTELL.

OAKLAND, CAL., July 18.—Willie Meehan, of San Francisco, won the decision over Frank Mantell, of Pawtucket, R. I., in a 10-round bout here. By constant clinching in the last round Mantell saved himself from being knocked out.

COBB BACK TO-DAY.

DETROIT, MICH., July 18.—President Ban Johnson announced that Ty Cobb, suspended recently for an argument with Umpire Hildebrand, will be back in the game to-day.

Best Bet Is to Play Champions

Title Holders Have Big Shade

By Left Hook.

HERE'S a little tip for the men who bet good con on the results of encounters in the boxing arena. Never stop betting on a champion of any class until he has been beaten. The suggestion of such a theme for a little fighting story is brought up by the manner in which the Joe Rivers supporters lost so heavily on the Los Angeles boy in his battle with Willie Ritchie, in San Francisco, July 4. Incidentally, the idea of it was brought out forcibly by some remarks that Battling Nelson made the day after the holiday while the famous iron man of the lightweight class was discussing results and congratulating himself on having picked six out of seven winners after having bet personally on three of them and failing to get down on the one loser that he picked.

* * *

IT is a foolish thing to bet against a champion, even if you don't like him personally and haven't such a high opinion of his fistic merits, because, according to Bat Nelson, champions always win a lot of battles in a row after they attain the title and have a big natural shade in all of their contests. The argument is a sound one, because champions, after annexing titles, do not make the kind of matches that they can not win—and they know they can win them when they make them. Mind you, this is not an intimation that there is anything wrong or any skulduggery practiced by any of them. But the average champion is a pretty wise sort of a gink. He knows that to keep a title is to make plenty of money. Hence, he figures with the greatest of care, and when finally he signs to battle, it's about 3 to 1 that he is going to win.

* * *

AND another thing worth figuring is that referees have natural leanings toward champions and don't take titles away from them without the very best of cause. Which is a mighty strong point in favor of the champion when he starts into action. But, of course, the strongest point of all is the fact, borne out by many a precedent, that champions almost always win a bunch of fights before being compelled to resign the top rung of the ladder.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Some Good Advice For Beginners and Back Yard Breeders

Don't Overcrowd Conditions for It Certainly Will Mean Disease.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

There is but little trouble in getting started with a back-yard flock. That is all easy enough; but when fully started, the question is getting stopped at the right time or point in the game. Very many persons become interested in poultry in a small way and decide to handle it in their back yard, which is all right. They become more interested as the game goes on, and the tendency is to raise all the stock that they can, not taking into consideration the possibility of overdoing the matter by getting too many on he place for the room there is to handle them. The first season usually runs pretty well, but at the end of the second season is usually about where the rub comes in. The crowded condition shows itself on every hand. You know, there is a limit to almost everything, and particularly to the room of a back yard. When one gets his place full of growing chicks, there is expansion upon every hand. A lot of growing chicks can fill up all the available coops on a place about as fast as anything one can think of, and if something is not done to relieve the congestion, there is bound to be trouble. Crowding means disease. The question comes, then, as to what to do with them. It must be a system of culling. One of the first thing a back-lotter should learn is the system of successful culling. We know how hard it is for an enthusiastic breeder or fancier to begin to dispose of a part of his flock. Of course, there are a few that are veritable culls that anyone can cull out with ease, but after such are disposed of then the real rub comes. As one back-yard breeder has well said, it is a matter of culling from the beginning of the year to the close thereof. Other things being equal, the breeder who is the most successful at culling is the most successful in his ultimate results. Many have said, "We never thought about culling." The successful merchant understands the culling process; he is at it all the time. If it is not one department, it is another. He must have the room and the clean line of stock. If he does not do this, his business will suffer from disease. His may be whatis termed "dry rot," but it is disastrous just the same. Yours will work ruin quicker, no doubt. It is simply a survival of the fittest. If you do not show your hand in the plan of the fittest, nature will do it in a much less satisfactory way—that of killing them off.

This question of culling is quite a difficult one for the novice, yet it is one that must be mastered, and one that will be a better schooling for the one who desires to learn than anything he can do. The very day his young chicks get old enough to show any feathers of distinction or type worth considering he should begin to study them and cull them in his mind, so that by the time they are old enough to kill or sell for broilers he will be ready to make the selection of what he should get rid of. At such a time he may sell all those that show decided irregularities and reduce the flock a good deal, at the same time keeping an eye out for those that will make the best breeders for his work the coming season. He can also get rid of hens that have not measured up to what they should in their breeding or laying qualities. This should be done as soon as the laying season is over for the spring rush. The breeder must keep well to the front all the while the very great importance of vigorous stock, and look well to the healthy body as well as the fine feathers in selecting for breeders, for fine feathers will do but little good on a debilitated frame. If you are raising stock to sell for breeding purposes, it should be your aim to keep such stock moving at almost all seasons of the year. As soon as it is old enough to select in the early fall, put some little squibs in the papers telling the people about your rapidly developing stock and of how much more they will get for their money if it is invested now than later after you have cared for it so long. It is a mighty good proposition for both parties, too, to make these early trades.

It is not a question of how many you can raise, but how many can you keep. Never become tempted to take up but one variety at a time if you would be successful. More poultry enthusiasts have become stranded on the rock of too many breeds than perhaps any other one thing. It is absolutely dangerous, and you should by all means curb your ambitions along that line. There is not so much difference in the quality of the different breeds. You can make a success of any of them if you set your head that way. Do not try to breed something good from a whole lot of hens and a male or two turned together. Take the trouble to yard them off, even if in small or movable yards, and but a few fowls in each, and mark the chicks from them so you will know what you are doing. In that way you can soon tell the good breeders from the poor ones, and cull accordingly.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

H. G. White to Lead Atlanta Realty Men

Committee's Choice, Says Report. California Home Sold—Bungalow at Brookwood—Church Buys.

The name of Harris G. White, vice president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board, it was learned authoritatively Thursday, will be presented Friday night by the nominating committee in connection with the presidency of the board to succeed Charles P. Glover, the retiring president. The meeting will be at the Cafe Durand at 6:30 o'clock. Selection by the nominating committee is equivalent to an election, and Mr. White's name is said to have been decided on at a recent conference. Several other names were considered, but Mr. White's position as vice president and his interest in the affairs of the board caused him to be given the preference.

Mr. White was formerly with the Ralph O. Cochran agency, first on South Broad street, and then in the Empire Life Building, when he went into business for himself in the Grant Building. He is a popular real estate operator and known as one of the most successful salesmen in the city.

Sells California Residence.

Dr. J. L. McDaniel, formerly of Atlanta and now of Los Angeles, Cal., has bought from a client of M. J. Petty a seven-room residence at No. 6373 Converse avenue, Los Angeles, for $5,500.

Captain Petty also reports the sale of 550 acres of land in the gold belt of Haralson County, near Tallapoosa, to J. T. Brown for a client for $8,000, and of No. 87 Sidney street to E. A. Wilbanks for a client for $4,000. The latter property consists of a two-story eight-room house on a 43-by-150-foot lot at the southeast corner of Oakland street.

To Build on Brookwood Lot.

Edward L. Traynham has bought through E. V. Moore, of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, a 50 by 206 foot lot on the south side of Brookwood Drive, near Peachtree, for $2,500, and will erect a handsome bungalow which he will occupy.

Church Adds to Lot.

Colonel W. L. Peel and others, trustees of St. Mark's Church, southeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, have bought from John A. Boykin a 40 by 90 foot lot adjoining the east line of the church property on East Fifth street, for $7,000. The trade was made July 14 and papers have gone to record.

Whitehall Street Conveyance.

William H. Roane has bought from the Georgia Realty Company 467 Whitehall street, 79 1-3 by 215 feet, for $19,225. This property is on the west side of the street between McDaniel and Humphries streets, and was purchased recently from Methvin T. Salter for $19,000.

Peachtree Hills Place Sales.

Eugene Southwick has bought from the American Securities Company of Georgia lots 37 and 38, block 2, and lot 7, block 9, of the Peachtree Hills Place subdivision, and has transferred them to Vera Southwick. The total consideration was $2,400.

A new bungalow is going up in this subdivision.

Road Work Completed.

County convicts are just completing the paving of Confederate avenue with macadam from the Soldiers' Home to Moreland avenue, as well as work on Lynes avenue and the short street leading to the Burns Club.

Confederate avenue at this point is 60 feet wide, and, taken with South and North Moreland avenues, makes one of the best drives in the county. Moreland avenue leads into Druid Hills, and the drive southward to the Soldiers' Home is about three miles. South Moreland is paved with macadam and North Moreland with bituilithic material.

South Side Meeting.

The South Side Improvement Club committee will meet Thursday night at 8 o'clock at McCord Brothers' grocery store, corner of South Pryor street and Georgia avenue, to discuss some important matters concerning the widening, regrading and repaving of South Pryor from Georgia avenue to Ridge avenue. All those interested in the movement are expected to be present.

Complication in Lease.

Complications in a valuable central lease have arisen, and announcement of new arrangements for certain concerns which were figuring on the property will not be forthcoming for some time. In the meantime, agents are working on other interesting leases, and it is probable that several new locations for firms will be made known within the week.

Gain in Realty Sales.

Comparisons of realty figures for the twenty-eighth week of 1913 with the same period in 1912 shows a substantial gain in realty transfers, both in number and in amount. The total in 1913 was 209, and $667,760, as against 201, and $563,040. Such figures are proving the contention of real estate men that small sales are as active as ever, and perhaps more so, since they have taken the place, more or less, of the large ones.

People borrowed only $116,263 in the period of 1913, whereas they had to borrow $129,832 in 1912.

Cancellations were almost as heavy in 1913 as in 1912.

Building permits fell off somewhat, but builders are expected to surpass 1912 next week.

Completion of Crematory.

The city crematory on Hulsey street, which represents an investment of $260,000, is practically finished. The three burners will require several days to dry out, but Sanitary Chief Jentzen hopes to have one of them in operation by Monday.

What IS an Opportunity for the Young Man?

There Are More Real Opportunities To-day Than Ever

(Copyright, 1913.)

We have received many letters from young men recently complaining of lack of opportunities. One in particular asked this question:

"Are the opportunities for the young man in the present day and generation equal to what they were twenty-five or fifty years ago—the days of his father and grandfather?"

It is a question that is probably asked in this country thousands of times every day. It is an important question to the individual. It is especially important to the nation. For the nation declines in which opportunities for the young diminish.

We feel that we can conscientiously and positively say that REAL opportunities are better to-day, both for young men and young women, than they ever have been.

Opportunities are greater BECAUSE POSSIBILITIES ARE GREATER.

Science, machinery, organization of all kinds, especially widespread publicity, have put into men's hands in less than fifty years a power undreamed of in the boyhood of our grandfathers.

Humanity and the individual are powerful, and their opportunities are great, in proportion to the machinery at their command.

Our opportunities were never so great as now, but this statement is made assuming that our correspondent means real and worthy opportunities.

Unfortunately, in this country, where sudden prosperity, great extravagance and uneasiness as to the future make money all-important, the word "opportunity" is apt to be a synonym for money. Money and opportunity are taken to mean the same thing.

But we purpose to answer this question quite apart from money.

Undoubtedly, the very able money-getter, no matter how humble his start, can build up to-day such a fortune an was unknown fifty years ago—or twenty-five years ago. There are young men without a penny that will earn (or, rather, more or less honestly ACCUMULATE) their hundreds of millions in the next few years, before the common sense of the country shall have realized the importance of regulating accumulation through increased distribution.

There will be, perhaps, fewer small, middle-class fortunes piled up, for there will be fewer men in business on their own account, thanks to the trusts.

Many men will earn very large salaries, ranging from $150,000 a year downward, and there will probably be very many more large INCOMES in the land within the next twenty-five years than there were in the last twenty-five years.

But when men earn SALARIES, they do not keep their money, and of the middle-class fortunes we shall have fewer.

But we trust that our correspondent will agree with us that money is a pretty mean measurement for opportunity.

What do the merely rich men really amount to? When they have been dead two or three years they are as unknown and forgotten as the pigs and chickens that they ate, the horses that they drove, or the flunkies whose time they wasted.

Opportunity means A CHANCE TO DO SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

And we assure our correspondent that the young man of to-day has a greater chance to do something worth while than a young man has ever had in the history of this country.

Our form of government is changing; the power has practically passed from the hands of the majority of the people into the hands of a majority of trust stockholders.

The young man who has genius and force, the ability to lead, and the character to refuse his share of the spoils, has a great opportunity to-day. It is the opportunity to return the government to the hands of those who are governed.

Working scientists are needed and sadly lacking in all the great departments of human thought. Every one of these new fields of intellectual activity, research and discovery offers unlimited opportunities to young men.

The newspapers, read by millions of human beings every day, enable the man who can think intelligently, the man who will be sincere and interesting at the same time to address (and, if he is able, to convince) a million or two millions of his fellow-citizens every day in the year. Was there ever a greater opportunity than this for influencing the thoughts of other men?

Every page of a scientific newspaper will show to the young man a glorious opportunity.

Every phase of our great industrial organization, every new development in the struggle of manhood against money, offers to the young man a great opportunity for public service.

The horrible poverty and wretchedness in the great cities, contrasting with ignorant and ostentatious wealth, offer opportunities unlimited to him who would help the poor to help themselves, to him able to cajole or frighten the rich into doing their duty.

This is the age of opportunity, but the young man must think for himself, strike out on his own line, make up his mind what to do, and stick at it, INSTEAD OF FOLLOWING ALONG THE USUAL LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE, doing the same as everybody else does, keeping at nothing in particular, and then wondering what has become of the world's opportunities.

The Metal Workers

From the Savage Who Raked From the Ashes a Crude Ball of Molten Mineral and Slag, With Which He Formed a Weapon of Defense, to the Safety Razor and Automobile, Metal is Supreme.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

II.

SOON after the British Parliament passed a law forbidbidding the cutting down of trees for fuel, Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition—in 1585—discovered iron in this country, and in 1608 a cargo of ore was shipped from Virginia to England and successfully smelted. In 1644, the first ironworks was erected near Lynn, Mass.

In 1740, Huntsman introduced the crucible process, and various mechanical devices were patented about that time, which materially stimulated the steel industry.

Bessemer's Process.

In 1838, the invention of J. B. Nielson—the introduction of a heated blast—caused a tremendous increase in output. This improvement was accompanied by Nasmyth's steam hammer, and in 1856 Bessemer gave to the world a process that was astonishing and remarkable. The discovery of the Bessemer process made it possible to produce steel at such low cost as to extend its use widely, and did much to supersede wrought iron in structural work.

Bessemer steel is now almost universally used for steel rails. The open-hearth system of Martin and Thomas, with the regenerative gas furnace of Siemens, supplies steel that is used in enormous quantities for all purposes.

Lately, science has again prevailed, and in the products of White and Taylor and Robert Hadfield we have steel that combines great malleableness with great hardness—a hardness that retains its cutting power even when at red heat.

And so we go marching on. From the savage who in wonder raked from the ashes of his fire a crude ball of molten mineral and slag, with which he formed a weapon of defense, to the safety-razor and the automobile of the twentieth century citizen, metal is supreme.

Carbon and Iron.

Steel is made by combining a certain proportion of carbon with iron.

The process determines its value and variety.

The most important of these processes are cementation, Bessemer and open hearth.

The first system consists of placing wrought iron between layers of charcoal in firebrick retorts. Yellow heat is applied for a certain period until the required grade of steel is obtained by the addition of the necessary carbon.

This is the steel from which edged tools are made.

The Bessemer process is directly opposite in principle to the cementation process. The Bessemer burns the carbon out of the cast iron.

This is done in an egg-shaped furnace known as a converter, lined with firebrick, and capable of being tilted. At the bottom, a number of tuyeres or nozzles conduct the air from a powerful blowing machine through the molten metal. This burns out the silicon and carbon, and after the alloy has been added and thoroughly mixed the metal is poured into ladles, and thence to casting molds.

The ingots are reheated and rolled into the forms desired for use.

In the open-hearth system, steel is made from a mixture of pig-iron and scrap-iron or steel, which is melted by direct contact with the flame in a regenerative gas furnace.

Steel Everywhere.

To follow these different processes—to see the ore—cold, dead stones—transformed into things of utility and beauty is a revelation and an education. We realize that the Missable Range and your wire fence are associated by applied gas. Steel is everywhere.

Circus horses, farm horses wear it for shoes. Wire rope in elevators, and in ships and mines—the telegraph and telephone wires, and all kinds of electrical wires—from the ignition wire in the automobile to the submarine cable. Aeroplane plates, boiler plates and castings. We sleep on steel springs and shave with a "safety."

We use nails and tacks, and the shafting for machinery is nothing more or less than big round wire!

We see all these things in the manufactured goods.

We talk of the tone of our piano, we boast of the wonderful speed, endurance and economy of up-keep of our autos.

We speak of cheap and rapid transportation; of our spring beds, our easy shave.

But do we ever associate these things with the men in the mills? I hope so.

:: Light and Candle-Power :-:

By THOMAS TAPPER

THERE are about 1,500,000,000 people on the earth.

Most of them are intent on getting.

A few are intent on giving.

The dynamo sends power along its lines of conductivity, and all the electric bulbs pour out light, each according to its candle-power.

If each of these bulbs was independent, if it could think and move for itself, the efficiency of the plant might fall considerably, for the individual bulb would then begin to act like a man.

Instead of remaining an agent for the distribution of power, it would be inspired by the ideas of the majority to let up on giving and to specialize on getting.

We can imagine a bulb throwing out its chest and wanting things. It might take a fancy to get a corner on dust and ashes. These are possessions through which the power can not shine; and while the bulb might easily work up a corner, it would soon find itself short on its main business of shedding light freely, plentifully and without obscuration.

Both Science and Religion are fairly agreed that a man is the end point of a line of conductivity which is attached to the great dynamo of the life of the universe.

He must be, then, by nature a distributor of the power that the dynamo sends into him.

HE HAS NO BUSINESS TO OBSCURE his light and weaken his force with the dust and ashes of life, for then the radiance will not shine through him.

HIS BUSINESS IS TO POUR OUT upon the world around him the great supply of power that flows into him.

This power, like electricity, plays many parts.

He can send it out as work-power, love, sympathy, generosity, health and so on through the whole list of things worth while.

And by so doing he is fulfilling his one natural function. He is strengthening himself for all time (now and forever) simply by using his power in the right direction.

In short, he has an advantage over the electric light bulbs, for he can use his candle-power to the limit, and by so doing increase it, instead of burning out the filament.

:-: MISTAKES :-:

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

GOD sent us here to make mistakes,
To strive, to fail, to re-begin,
To taste the tempting fruit of sin,
And find what bitter food it makes.

To miss the path, to go astray,
To wander blindly in the night;
But, searching, praying for the light,
Until at last we find the way.

And looking back along the past,
We know we needed all the strain
Of fear and doubt and strife and pain
To make us value peace at last.

Who fails, finds later triumph sweet;
Who stumbles once, walks then with care,
And knows the place to cry "beware"
To other unaccustomed feet.

Through strife the slumbering soul awakes,
We yearn on error's troubled route
The truths we could not prize without
The sorrow of our sad mistakes.

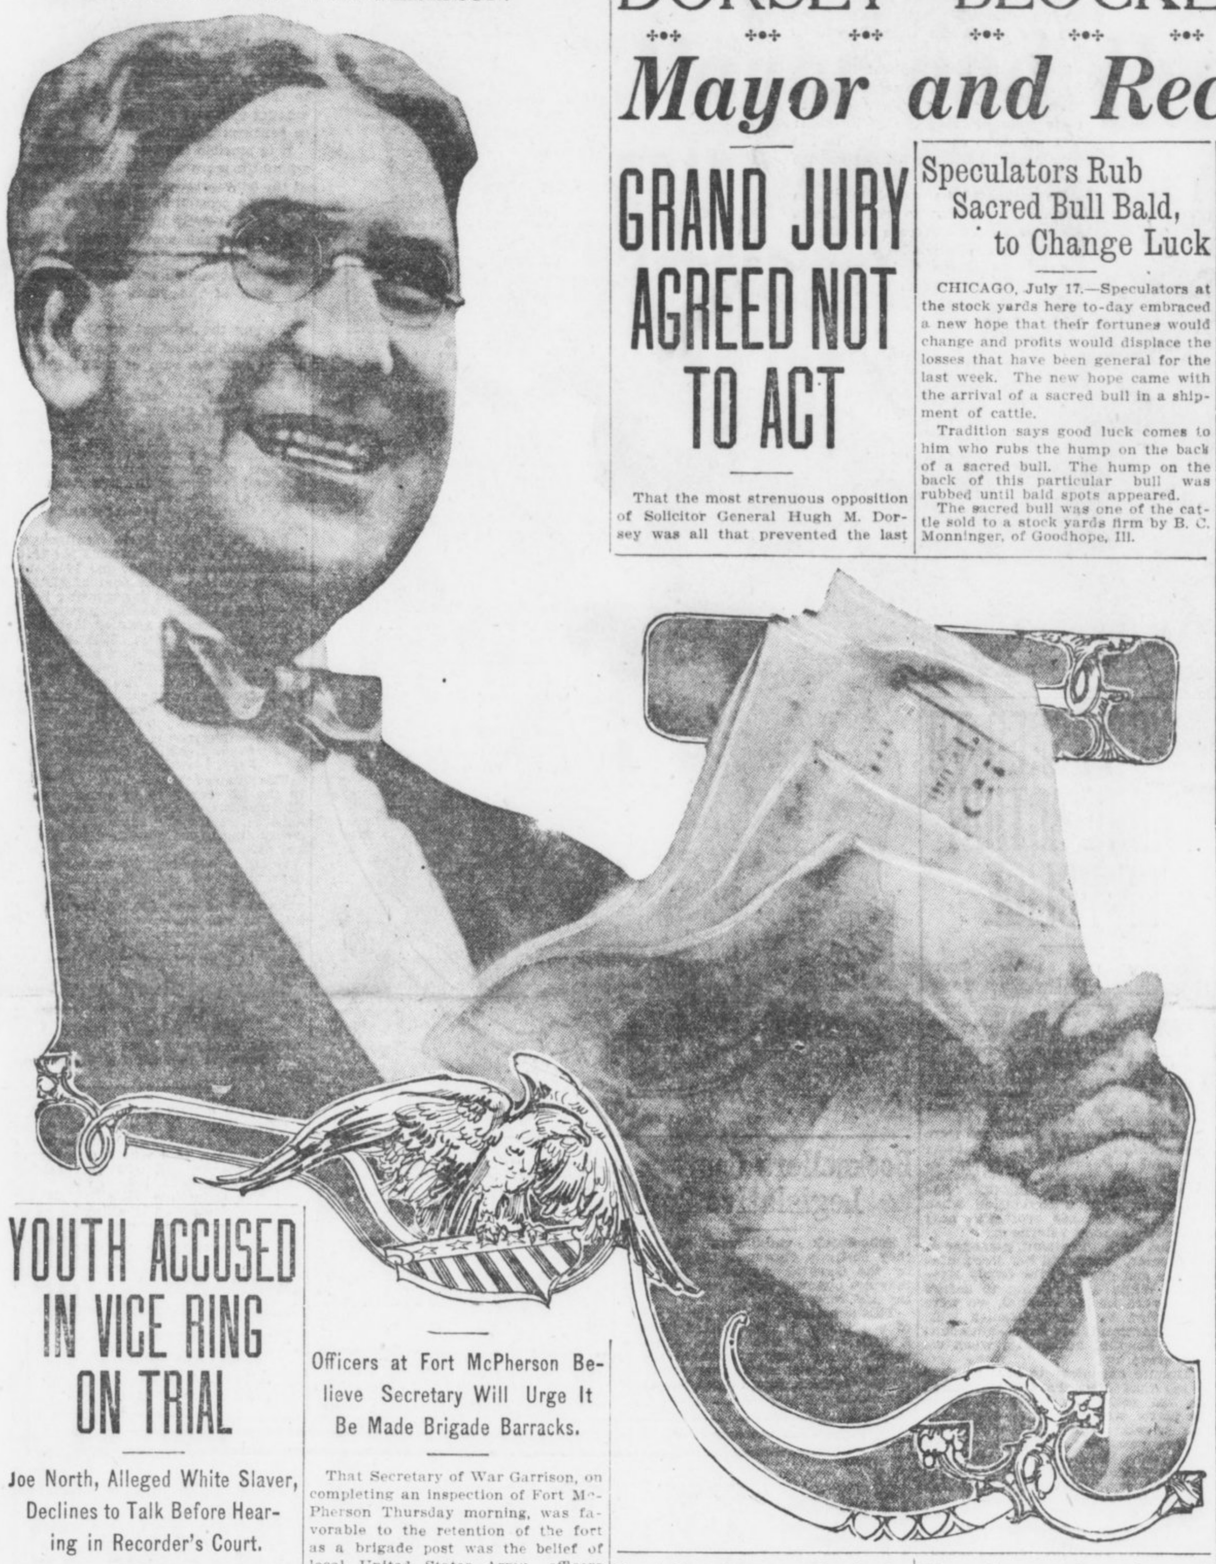
JACKSONVILLE MAYOR BECOMES CHIEF

DORSEY BLOCKED THE INDICTMENT OF CONLEY

Mayor and Recorder in Sizzling War of Words

GARRISON, WAR CHIEF, GREATLY IMPRESSED BY ARMY POST HERE

SECRETARY OF WAR GARRISON.



Officers at Fort McPherson Believe Secretary Will Urge It Be Made Brigade Barracks.

That Secretary of War Garrison, on completing an inspection of Fort McPherson Thursday morning, was favorable to the retention of the fort as a brigade post was the belief of local United States Army officers who conversed with him.

Secretary Garrison and his party, consisting of Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff; Major General James B. Aleshire, chief of quartermasters corps; Captain S. J. Bayard Schindel, and his secretary, Walter R. Pedigo, arrived at the fort at 8:30 o'clock in company with General R. K. Evans, of the Second Brigade, First Division; Colonel Barth and Aide-de-Camp Tucker.

They were met by Colonel J. T. VanOrsdale, in command of Fort McPherson, and the officers at the post. As the Secretary of War entered the fort in his automobile, a resounding salute was fired from one of the biggest guns.

Immediately Colonel VanOrsdale took Secreary Garrison and Major General Leonard Wood in charge and for three hours the three men, followed by the officers and newspaper men, explored every inch of ground within the confines of the fort. The big guns in the woods, together with the intrenchments and other facilities for which the fort is noted, were inspected. Several times Secretary Garrison was heard to express approval and nod assent.

Meets All the Officers.

Returning from the survey, Colonel VanOrsdale took the Secretary and his party to his quarters, where each officer stationed at the fort was introduced. Here the entire official body lingered for more than an hour.

At all times did the Secretary give every indication that he considered Fort McPherson an ideal location, and it is practically assured that he will recommend that it be retained and made a brigade post.

In the event this action is met favorably by Congress, the capacity of

YOUTH ACCUSED IN VICE RING ON TRIAL

Joe North, Alleged White Slaver, Declines to Talk Before Hearing in Recorder's Court.

Joe North, alleged white slaver, arrested on the statement of Effie Drummond, a young woman who told the police he lured her into a rooming house, will be tried before Recorder Nash Broyles at 2:30 o'clock Thursday afternoon and every effort made to get from him the names of other persons in the "vice ring," to which Chief of Police James L. Beavers says North owes allegiance.

North was arrested Wednesday night after a search of very nearly a week. He was put through a severe grilling Thursday morning by Chief Beavers, but declined absolutely to make any statement until he was forced to do so by the court.

Effie Drummond, the girl who was arrested in the raid on the house at Fair and Peters streets operated by Lula Bell, will be brought in from Martha's Home to repeat her sensational story of how she came to Atlanta from the country and was caught in the net of a white slaver. Chief Beavers said he confidently expected the trial Thursday afternoon to establish the fact there was a vice ring in Atlanta and that cases similar to the Drummond affair were not uncommon.

New York Burglars Get $25,000 Loot

NEW YORK, July 17.—Four safes in the jewelry manufacturing establishments of Rosenberg & Daniel on the lower East Side were blown open early to-day by robbers who secured $25,000.

One of the other safes contained $50,000 worth of jewelry, but the robbers were scared away.

GRAND JURY AGREED NOT TO ACT

That the most strenuous opposition of Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey was all that prevented the last Grand Jury from reopening its investigation of the Phagan mystery with a view of indicting the negro Jim Conley became known Thursday.

It was admitted by persons acquainted with the events in the Grand Jury room that the Solicitor's determined stand only blocked a consideration of the negro's connection with the crime. Well-substantiated report also has it that Solicitor Dorsey before he would venture on his vacation took the precaution of insisting on some sort of a guarantee from

Speculators Rub Sacred Bull Bald, to Change Luck

CHICAGO, July 17.—Speculators at the stock yards here to-day embraced a new hope that their fortunes would change and profits would displace the losses that have been general for the last week. The new hope came with the arrival of a sacred bull in a shipment of cattle.

Tradition says good luck comes to him who rubs the hump on the back of a sacred bull. The hump on the back of this particular bull was rubbed until bald spots appeared.

The sacred bull was one of the cattle sold to a stock yards firm by B. C. Monninger, of Goodhope, Ill.

WOODWARD SCORED BY BROYLES

"Can't Convince Ignorant Man He's Mistaken," Says Judge, Quoting Epictetus.

WHAT BROYLES THINKS OF THE MAYOR.

He's ignorant.
He's a menace to civilization.
He knows as much law as a boy does political economy.

WHAT WOODWARD THINKS OF RECORDER.

He5s a petty czar.
My office is bigger than his.
If he wants to run my office, let him come up and give me orders.

"Do not argue with an ignorant man, for you can never convince him he is wrong."

Recorder Nash R. Broyles, quoting Mr. Epictetus, the late well-known Greek philosopher, spoke thusly Thursday.

Following this declaration Mr. Broyles then declined to argue with Mayor James G. Woodward over the action in the case of Griff Freeman, an alleged notorious blind tiger operator, whom Broyles had sentenced to a $500 fine and a 29-day term in the stockade, when the Mayor declared he did not propose to see the city prison turned into a modern Siberia by a "too severe and czar-like Recorder."

Impugns His Legal Lore.

"Mayor Woodward knows as much about law as a hog does about political economy," was the Recorder's avowal.

However, to "set himself right," Judge Broyles issued the following statement.

"Yesterday a man named Freeman, the most notorious 'blind tiger' out of captivity, was convicted of selling whisky. The evidence was overwelming. Five white men testified as to Freeman's guilt and one said he had been buying whisky from Freeman for the last seven years.

Claims Breach of Promise.

"This is the same Freeman whom Mayor Woodward freed from the stockade and whose fine he reduced from $500 to $250. He did this, too, after asking me about the case over the telephone and assuring me that he would not interfere with my decision.

"In regard to the Court of Appeals reversing me in many cases, I have this to say: Since I have been Recorder the Court of Appeals has sustained me in ten cases where they have reversed me in one.

"The most ludicrous act of Mayor Woodward was in connection with the Dr. Roper case, in which I was sustained both by the Fulton County Superior Court and the Court of Appeals. But Mayor Woodward calmly announced, with a straight face, that he had decided the evidence was insufficient to convict.

"An Enemy to Society."

"He therefore reversed the decision of the Recorder, the Superior Court and the Court of Appeals—and this by a man who knows about as much about law as a hog knows about political economy.

'I must say that a man who blocks the courts in an effort to stop law violations of this and other similar criminals is an enemy to civilization and to society."

Mayor Woodward Thursday amplified his criticism of Recorder Broyles. He declared he was restraining his feelings in an effort to keep down a row, but there weer just a few things he had to say about the Recorder.

Scores Broyles' Stand.

"Why doesn't he attack the higher courts?" began the Mayor. "They have overridden him many more times this year than I have. I have interceded in only four cases during the seven months I have been in office.

"The trouble with Broyles is he wants to be supreme. He wants to be

CLASH NEAR IN POLICE JANGLE

Jacksonville Mayor Takes Charge of Force After Ousting Chief. Threatens Impeachment.

JACKSONVILLE, July 17.—Mayor Van C. Swearengin to-day took personal charge of the Jacksonville police department, refusing to recognize Fred Roach, whom he yesterday suspended as chief of police and who an hour later was reinstated by the Board of Bond Trustees. Orders were issued by the Mayor to the department through Captain Harry Hall.

Last night Mayor Swearengin visited police headquarters and made a speech to the members of the force, in which he informed them that he was the Mayor and would handle the force without the aid either of Chief Roach or the Bond Trustees.

A clash of authority in the department is now hourly expected. Both Chief Roach and Captain Hall said to-day they were expecting such and would be prepared for it when it came. Hall is friendly to Roach and is only acting under the Mayor because of orders.

The Mayor said to-day he would call a special meeting of City Council and file impeachment charges against all members of the Board of Bond Trustees. The call, however, has not as yet been issued. Some of the Councilmen have openly declared they will not vote to impeach should the Mayor file his charges.

The breach between the Mayor and the Bond Trustees over the control of the police department is widening daily and is expected to reach more serious proportions and result in litigation before peace is restored.

Warrants Issued for Officials at Daytona

JACKSONVILLE, July 17.—Due to a factional fight among politicians at Daytona Beach, warrants have been sworn out against the town clerk and members of the City Council, charging them with having tampered with the registration books, striking off names unlawfully and refusing to replace them. A hearing of the charges is set for to-morrow.

The fight is over a proposition to issue another series of bonds for $20,000, when, it is charged, the sinking fund to redeem former issues has been spent unlawfully.

Trade Board Outing At Atlantic Beach

JACKSONVILLE, July 17.—This afternoon 350 members of the Jacksonville Board of Trade in 75 automobiles made a trip to Atlantic Beach, where the regular monthly meeting of the organization was held to-night at the conclusion of a 7 o'clock sea supper. The Boards of Trade of South Jacksonville and Pablo sent many representatives.

At the conclusion of the business meeting a dance was given in the new tearoom which has just been completed in the Atlantic Beach Hotel.

LONDON, July 17.—The value of a pearl necklace stolen from a jewel merchant between Paris and London, theft of which was reported to Scotland Yard yesterday, was to-day placed at $750,00 0instead of $625,000 as originally given.

It was reported that the merchant had been commissioned to purchase the necklace for an American multimillionaire.

Insurance People Reject Portions of Viscera of Painter

BALTIMORE, July 17.—That the Baltimore representative of the family of E. O. Painter, the late Jacksonville fertilizer man, had refused to permit representatives of the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company to be present when Painter's viscera were analyzed was the gist of the testimony offered in the Circuit Court to-day, when the fight for Painter's vital organs was resumed.

Superintendent Walker, of the casualty claim department of the company, said that although Arthur L. Jackson, the local legal representative of the Painter family had refused to allow him to attend the analysis, he had offered him several small bits of the intestines for an independent examination.

"I refused this," said Walker, "because I did not believe that a complete examination could be made without the whole of the viscera."

Hundreds See Red Star, Mystery to Sky Students, Fall

Astronomers and hundreds of Atlantans who delight in gazing at the moon were treated to a peculiar and awe-inspiring spectable about 9 o'clock Wednesday night.

For several nights there had been seen two beautiful stars close to the moon. One was brilliant and perfectly white. Its position in the early part of the night was above the moon, just a little to the left. The other was of ruby color, very brilliant. It was above the moon, just a little to the right.

Wednesday night at the hour mentioned, the red star began to move, slowly but distinctly, in a southwesterly direction, gradually falling until it vanished just above the horizon.

It was about ten minutes from the time this star began its descent until it vanished.

England Rent by Controversy Over Eve-like Fashions

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 17.—England now has a dress controversy similar to that in the United States. The extravagant Eve-like styles are being condemned by the clergy on every side, and numerous letters of protest published in the newspapers to-day attest the disapproval of the public at large.

A writer in The Evening Standard said that "a woman ten years ago wearing styles seen on the streets today would have been disgraced for life and stamped with the scarlet badge. The fashionable gowns being worn in public are so flimsy and transparent that the wearers' muscles can be seen underneath. Nothing is worn underneath."

Talk of Pardon for McNaughton Starts

SWAINSBORO, July 17.—The case against Mrs. Mattie Flanders, jointly indicted with Dr. W. J. McNaughton for the murder of her husband, Fred Flanders, by poisoning more three years ago, was finally disposed of Wednesday afternoon by being nol prossed by the State for want of sufficient evidence to convict.

This disposition of her case is expected here to turn public sentiment to Dr. McNaughton, and it is believed that a majority of the people in Emanuel County would sign a petition for his full pardon.

WIDOW SAYS LUMP WILL COME TO AID HER

Accused Woman to Go on Stand Friday—Barber Is Only An Acquaintance, She Asserts.

A clash between the attorneys in the Crawford will case occurred Thursday morning when Burton Smith, Luther Z. Rosser, Colonel P. H. Brewster and Reuben Arnold forced J. S. James, attorney for the heirs-at-law, to retract his charge that they were "perpetrating a nefarious scheme to rob the rightful heirs of Joshua B. Crawford."

The clash came while Colonel Brewster was on the witness stand telling of the litigation in the fight for the $250,000 estate.

Reference was made to a previous statement by Attorney James that the attorneys on the other side of the case were attempting to perperate a "nefarious scheme to defraud."

"I demand that apology be made to this court for that statement," said Colonel Brewster, looking menacingly toward Attorney James.

Threats Fly Promiscuously.

"It stands on the minutes of the hearing," replied James hotly.

Auditor James L. Anderson tried to restore order and Luther Rosser was called to the stand.

His first statement was a threat to the attorneys on the opposite side.

Looking toward Attorney James, he said:

"I am going to tell everything I know about this case. If any further reference is made to a 'nefarious scheme' (he leaned across the table to Attorney James) I will consider it a personal matter."

Burton Smith, who figured prominently in the case about a month ago by beating two of the heirs-at-law, and Reuben Arnold, who was Smith's second in the famous fight, took a hand and demanded that full apology be made for the charge and that it be stricken from the minutes.

Stricken From Record.

Attorney James raised no objection. Auditor Anderson ordered that the statement be stricken from the minutes and the case proceeded quietly.

Attorney James obtained permission to introduce another "poison witness" during the hearing Thursday. He would not reveal the identity of his new witness, except to say that it was a physician who had made an examination of the contents of Crawford's stomach.

Expectation that Mrs. Crawford would go on the stand at Thursday's hearing in her own behalf was blasted by the lengthy cross-examination of Colonel Brewster. The widow probably will go on the stand Friday.

Mrs. Crawford said Thursday morning that she would be able to prove her innocence of the sensational charges, and would produce Fred Lump at the proper time to go on the stand as a witness in her behalf.

"I expected to have Mr. Lump here as a witness, and would have done so had the other side acted properly in the matter," said Mrs. Crawford. "I don't think they would have any trouble locating him if they really wanted to find him, for I think he would be anxious to prove the falsity of the charges that connect him with an affair about which he knows absolutely nothing.

Tells of Meeting Lump.

"I met Lump when he came to board at my house at St. Augustine. My only connection with him was in that way, I had never seen him until he appeared at my house and wanted board. At about the time of my marriage Lump became ill and was taken to a hospital. I returned to St. Augustine to look after some business affairs and met him on the street. I spoke to him as I would to any acquaintance.

"Later he came to Atlanta—this was after Mr. Crawford's death—and he came out to my house to see me, but there is no reason in the world why there should be anything made of that visit. I think he secured work here for a while, but I am not sure about that.

"Before this thing is over, the people who have persecuted and done everything they could to humiliate me will be made to retract everything they have said, for I, best of all, know that I am entirely innocent of any wrong-doing and will be able to prove it.

Calls Charge Foolish.

"The idea that I plotted with this barber to murder Mr. Crawford, get his money, and then elope with him, is foolish. The man was only an acquaintance, and I never even numbered him among my friends."

Dr. J. W. Hurt, the physician who attended Crawford in his last illness, will go on the stand before Mrs. Crawford and there is a probability of the case before James L. Anderson, auditor, being completed during the day.

Mrs. Crawford will be the last witness called.

By Dr. Hurt the attorneys for Mrs. Crawford expect to tear down the story of Crawford having died from morphine poisoning instead of pneumonia, and prove that the quantity of morphine found in the stomach by Dr. H. F. Harris, of the State Board of Health, was a normal dose administered by the family physician.

Mr. Inez Milholland Is Pledged to 'Cause'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 17.—Eugene J. Boisseavain, husband of Inez Mulholland, the beautiful American suffragette, confided to his friends to-day that he had pledged himself to work for the "cause."

"My wife has convinced me that things will not be right until women are on equal footing with men in every respect," said he. "She is very enthusiastic about votes for women, and I am getting that way myself. I believe that the English women are justified in using violence. Mrs. Pankhurst is the finest 'man' in England."

Mrs. Vanderbilt Is Nose Veil Sponsor

NEWPORT, July 17.—The nose veil has appeared here, and there is evidence that this strange vagary of fashion has come to stay. The originator of the fad is Mrs. French Vanderbilt, who first stood sponsor for it.

The veil—much like those Oriental women are pictured wearing—is excessively annoying to men, who see smiling eyes about them, but can't tell whose they are.

WAR SECRETARY IMPRESSED BY POST HERE

Army Men Believe Garrison Will Favor Brigade at Fort McPherson.

Fort McPherson will be increased about three times, and it will become one of the largest military posts in the United States.

Thursday afternoon Secretary Garrison and his party were shown the sights of Atlanta by prominent business men who placed their automobiles at their disposal.

Following this, the party will be entertained at a 4 o'clock dinner at the home of General R. K. Evans, corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets.

To Go to Chattanooga.

The Secretary of War and his party will leave Atlanta at 5 o'clock and will arrive in Chattanooga about 10 p. m. Here they will be met by the Chattanooga Chamber of Commerce, which will entertain the members of the party while they remain in that city.

Atlanta is the first stop of the Secretary of War on a tour of the army posts of the country undertaken with the radical move in view of doing away with more than one hundred "absolutely useless" posts in the interior.

Secretary Garrison would not discuss the Mexican situation at length. He did not think its present gravity was sufficient to make it probable that his tour of the country would be interrupted, although he would not venture to predict future developments.

"Ambassador Wilson was called to Washington, I suppose, so that the President could get first hand and official information of the condition of affairs there," he said. "Many reports have come to the President's ears and some of them have been conflicting.

"The reported uneasiness of the foreign nations over the safety of their subjects in Mexico, I take it, led President Wilson to send the call to Mexico. Of the actual situation in the Mexican Republic, however, I know little more than I have read in the newspapers."

Six Weeks' Tour Planned.

"I expect the trip will consume about six weeks and me," he remarked, whimsically. "I will be on board train practically the entire time, except for the one or two inspections that I will make every day."

Referring to the purpose of his swing around the country, he said:

"I will be able to announce my plans definitely after I am through. As yet they are not crystallized. I am convinced that the present arrangement involves a great economical and efficiency waste. This tour was undertaken with the recommendation of Secretary of War Stinson in mind. He urged that the large number of useless army posts be abolished and the army concentrated at central and strategic points. It was his idea that regimental posts be done away with and that the troops be concentrated into brigade posts. I shall visit all of the 49 posts where the mobile army troops are stationed, and with the advice of General Wood and General Aleshire I expect to be able to recommend where these troops are to be concentrated."

Secretary Garrison already has made a preliminary investigation of the United States army posts through his agents, and declares that the present system is demoralizing to the army and the most extravagant way of wasting the Government's money ever devised.

If Congress obstructs his policy of unifying the posts, it is said that he intends to use his executive powers by withdrawing troops from the posts which he thinks is unnecessary. He asserts that he has absolute power in this direction and, with the President's consent, could concentrate the entire army in Washington, if he desires.

a czar, barricaded against criticism and interference.

"My office is a few years older than his. The Mayor once acted as Recorder. I did not come into my office through his sufferage just as he did not come into his through mine. But I have been given the right to interfere in certain cases by the Constitution of the State and the city charter."

"Mind Your Own Business."

"Let him attend to his duties and I'll attend to mine. I have not interfered with him and it is none of his business what I do. We'll both have the privilege of answering to the people for our acts.

"That policy of his giving 29-day stockade sentences so as to evade my pardoning power is little.

"I'll tell him as I told Chief Beavers on one occasion, that if he wants to run my office I would be glad to have him call and I will discuss with him what I intend to do.

"That might satisfy him."

Wholesale Grocers Meet in Charlotte

CHARLOTTE, July 17.—The Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association began its twenty-second annual convention here to-day, when two hours were consumed in addresses of welcome and responses, after which President J. H. McLaurin, of Jacksonville, called the formal business sessions to order.

The manufacturers had charge of the afternoon program. To-night a banquet at the Southern Manufacturers' Club, followed by a dance, will conclude the first day's events.

Bathers Duck When Bees Start Buzzing

RICHFIELD, N. J., July 17.—A poodle with a nose for sweets poked his head into a bee's nest to-day on the bank of the Morris Canal here, where men and boys were in swimming.

The bees made for the dog and sent him yelping with discomfort into the canal, and then they tackled the bathers.

For the latter it was a case of swimming under water out of range and for those who couldn't swim mud baths were necessary.

SENATOR HOKE SMITH HERE FOR ADDRESS TO ASSEMBLY; MUM ON MEXICAN QUESTION

Glad to Get Back, He Tells His Friends—Silent on Mexican Situation.

Hon. Hoke Smith arrived from Washington to-day looking to be none the worse for his arduous labors in the Senate. Not even a question as to the Gainesville postoffice row could ruffle his good humor at being in Atlanta once again.

Senator Hoke Smith arrived in Atlanta from Washington Thursday morning. A number of his personal friends were at Terminal Station to meet him but he stepped off at the back of the train and was well up the stairway when they discovered him.

The Senator looked robust. Smiling, he said he was mighty glad to get back to Georgia. In answer to questions from newspaper men he said:

"I will have nothing to say for the papers until I address the Legislature to-morrow."

He intimated he would touch on business prosperity in that speech. He said he did not care to discuss the Mexican situation.

Carlos H. Mason and John Brice escorted Senator Smith to the automobile which awaited him in front of Terminal Station.

STATE TO FIGHT MOVE TO INDICT JIM CONLEY

Mincey Replies to Attack on Affidavit

In reference to the attacks which have been made on him by the police department and the prosecution, because of his affidavit in the Phagan case, W. H. Mincey has given The Georgian this statement:

I had a few words of evidence that might furnish a clew to bring to justice the fiend who killed Mary Phagan.

As soon as this was published the first step taken by the officers of the State was to see if I could be impeached.

Because I, as a citizen of the State, refuse to harbor a self-confessed, drunken murderer, must I be impeached by men whom we are paying to guard our homes, our children and our lives?

the jurors that they would take no action in his absence.

Acceding to his request, the Grand Jury of that time passed resolutions pledging itself to waive all consideration of the Phagan mystery until the Solicitor's return.

Hot Fight Certain.

The agitation, however, has been revived, as was forecast in The Georgian when the new Grand Jury was called. The Solicitor has declared that he will not retreat one step and preliminary skirmishes to a hot fight already are taking place.

The fight has resolved itself into a contest to determine whether Conley shall go on the stand in the trial of Leo Frank as a reputable, trustworthy and free citizen, the status in which the Solicitor wishes to maintain him, or as a prisoner with the shadow of an indictment hanging over him.

In the latter aspect, several of the members of the Grand Jury are said to contend that he should appear, inasmuch as he is a confessed accessory and a possible principal.

Defense for Action.

The defense is said not to be opposed to the review of the case by the Grand Jury at this time nor to the indictment of Conley. Luther Z. Rosser, chief counsel for Frank, has charged from the first that Conley was the man guilty of the slaying of Mary Phagan, and it is presumed that he would be willing to enjoy the tactical advantage that the indictment of Conley probably would give the defense.

W. D. Beattie, foreman of the Grand Jury, intimated Thursday morning that the matter of calling the body together to consider a Conley indictment was under consideration by some of the members, but he said that no formal request had as yet been made for him to convene them. He said that he would issue the call when he had received a sufficient number of requests.

It is understood that the requests will be submitted to the foreman Thursday, on the ground that the evidence connecting Jim Conley directly with the crime is infinitely stronger than the evidence on which Leo Frank was indicted about two months ago, and that for this reason Conley should not be permitted to go before a jury as a free and unsuspected man and testify against Frank.

MAYOR ASKED TO PROBE ACTION OF POLICE

Declaring that police officers placed him under arrest while he was attempting to convey a woman in the throes of an epileptic fit to a hospital and forced him to be the companion to a negro in riding in the patrol wagon to the police station, Mongin F. Smith, vice president and secretary of the Eagle Stamp Works, Thursday afternoon carried a trenchant complaint of police stupidity to Mayor Woodward for investigation.

"The young woman whom we were endeavoring to place in a hospital was Miss Mabel Parker, a performer at the Old Mill Theater on Whitehall street," declared Mr. Smith. "She was taken with a convulsion when she learned of her brother's near death Wednesday afternoon.

"Aided by B. T. Glenn, manager of the theater, weplaced her in an ambulance and drove to the Grady Hospital. While endeavoring to secure her a ward in the hospital, we were approached by two policemen who, as I understand, had been summoned by the hospital authorities when we first drove up.

"Despite our pleas to give us time to see that Miss Parker was cared for, the policemen made us go to the patrol wagon. Inside there was hire a cab. The police would not a negro man. We complained against riding with the negro and offered to hear to this and shoved us in the patrol. We rode to the police station in this manner.

"After being held for nearly an hour, while an investigation was being made, we were released."

Mr. Smith has asked Mayor Woodward for a complete investigation of the affair, and that the guilty policemen be summarily dealt with.

1913 BUDGET $250,000 LESS THAN 1912

Lack of Increase in School Fund and Pension Shrinkage Cause of Big Decrease.

The general appropriations bill for 1913, filed in the House Thursday morning, calls for $250,000 less than that of last year, according to Chairman Crawford Wheatley, of the Appropriations Committee. This decrease is the result of appropriating to the common school fund only the amount paid last year, and a decrease in pensions to Confederate veterans.

It is possible the total decrease will amount to more than $250,000, as most of the appropriations are general, and there is a possibility of many of them oot being entirely used.

Following are some of the appropriations contained in the bill:

For the common schools, $2,500,000 for each of the years of 1914 and 1915.

To pay the interest on the recognized valid debt of the State maturing in 1914 the sum of $278,945, and in 1915, $277,445.

Fund for Cattle Tick.

The sum of $15,000 for each of the years of 1914 and 1915 is appropriated out of any funds in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of exterminating the cattle tick and developing the live stock industry of the State.

For Confederate veterans and widows' pensions, $385,000.

For the Georgia State Sanitarium, $540,000 for 1914 and $550,000 for 1915—an increase of $10,000 for 1914 and $20,000 for 1915. The sum of $20,000 also is appropriated for treating consumptive patients at the institution. This is th same as granted last year.

For the university, $525,000, the same as appropriated last year. Officials of the university asked for an increase of $10,000. The sum of $6,314.14 for the payment of what is known as the land script fund and of $8,000 as annual interest on the debt of the university is also granted.

Farm Institute Dropped.

Farm Institutes Dropped.

The sum of $2,500 formerly given to the university to be expended by the trustees of the State College of Agriculture for the organization and conducting of farmers' institutes was cut off.

Georgia School of Technology was granted $80,000, the same as last year. A request for $10,000 more for the general fund and $35,000 for a new building was made.

Georgia Normal and Industrial School gets $52,500, the same as last year. An additional $7,500 was requested.

The North Georgia Agricultural School, at Dahlonega, receives $21,500, the same as last year.

The State Normal School, at Athens, is given $47,500, the same as last year. A request for $7,500 was made.

KIDNAPING PLOT THEORY HELD BY DETECTIVES IN CHLOROFORM MYSTERY

Baffled by the mystery of the chloroforming of six members of the family of Mrs. Archibald Duncan, No. 318 South Boulevard, and the clubbing of Miss Pearl Hildebrand, a daughter, detectives working on the case probably will institute a search for M. A. Deal, the husband of Mrs. Ruby Deal, a daughter of Mrs. Duncan and one of the women drugged, as the only person against whom there is the slightest suspicion.

The involving of Deal in the affair changes it from an attempt at burglary to the asserted attempted kidnaping of his 3-year-old child, Marguerite Deal, who was chloroformed together with the other members of the family.

Deal, it developed during an investigation by Detectives Chewning and Davis Wednesday afternoon, has been separated from his wife for more than two years. He has never lived in the house on South Boulevard, but has several times called on his wife there, though not within the past six months. Mrs. Deal says she has not seen her husband for more than a month, and that she does not know whether he is in the city.

Wife Denies Suspicion.

The detectives base their suspicion on the fact that he is apparently suspected by his wife, though Mrs. Deal denies this. Their only ground for this suspicion, they say, is a remark dropped by Mrs. Duncan, Mrs. Deal's mother, during the investigation of Wednesday afternoon.

It came while the detectives were questioning Mrs. Deal about her husband, seeking to unearth something that would indicate the involving of Deal in an attempt to kidnap his young daughter.

"That's what worries us," Mrs. Duncan declared. "Ruby suspects her husband——"

"No, I don't, mother," interrupted Mrs. Deal. "I do not think he knows anything about it."

It is declared this indicates that the family, at least, had discussed among themselves the possibility that the marauder who entered the home Tuesday night and chloroformed the members of the family was the father of the little girl.

Got Writ to Restrain Him.

Mrs. Deal, however, stoutly insisted that she does not suspect her husband, and declared that even during the time they were living together Deal had never shown any love for the child, and that after they were separated he had never made any effort to see the child and never inquired after her.

Mrs. Deal admitted to the officers that she had heard once, several months ago, that Deal had said he was going to try to get the child away from her.

Mrs. H. F. Godfrey, 326 South Boulevard, declared that she and her husband had suspicions that something was wrong in the neighborhood on the night the Duncan home was entered, because of the actions of their bulldog. The dog, they said, woke them up with its barking some time in the night, and refused to be quieted. Mr. Godfrey went out into his yard and looked around his own house, but could see nothing out of the ordinary.

Nomination of Miss Mary Carl Hurst Reopens Old .Type of of Beauty' Issue.

With the nomination Thursday of Miss Mary Carl Hurst, of 62 West Twelfth street, as Atlanta's prettiest girl in the "beauty button" contest, this time honored question is aroused:

The issue is now concrete, for Miss Mert Hancock, of Ponce DeLeon avenue, already nominated, is a wonderful blonde type, while Miss Hurst has all the charm of the brunette.

Both of these young society girls are already famous for their beauty, and before the close of the contest the issue between blondes and brunettes is likely to become acute.

The contest editor requests that all nominations for the contest be accompanied with photographs and a statement of whether or not the candidates are blondes or brunettes. The blank coupon published each day in The Georgian shows how simple it is to enter your favorite beauty. Coupons will continue to appear until the voting is ended.

SENATE FORBIDS TALKING AND SMOKING

Hurry-up Methods Assured by New Rules—Steering Committee Makes Up Calendar.

Two hours were consumed by the State Senate Thursday morning in hearing the report of President Anderson, chairman of the Rules Committee, which recommended certain changes in the rules designed to facilitate the handling of business. The full report of the committee was adopted at the close of the session.

Among the new rules adopted was that prohibiting Senators from smoking or engaging in conversation of any kind during the Senate sessions. Another rule prevents filibustering, while still another gives to the Steering Committee power to prepare the calendar for the last seven days of the present session. The last rule on the program places the hour of meeting from 10 to 1 o'clock, with automatic adjournment at 1 o'clock.

The most important committee report made to the Senate Thursday was that of the Temperance Committee recommending Senator Searcy's prohibition bill with an amendment providing for the placing of the burden of proof on the State instead of the transporting company in case of shipments of liquor in quantities less than three gallons.

Secretary Young, of the Anti-Saloon League, who was present, declared the temperance people would fight this amendment on the floor of the Senate.

The Constitutional Amendments Committee recommended the creation of Barrow County, which has already passed the House.

The Education Committee will consider the proposed free kindergarten bill and the compulsory education bill Thursday afternoon. This committee probably will recommend a special tax and also a bond issue to meet the deficit in the teachers' salary fund.

MEASURE GIVES FULTON COURT 4TH JUDGE

Bill Increasing Superior Court Membership Rushed Through House With Others.

A bill providing for the appointment of a fourth Superior Court judge for Fulton County was passed in the House unanimously Thursday morning. Representative John Y. Smith and the other members of the Fulton County delegation filed the bill and have been pushing it. It will be sent to the Senate immediately. Its passage there is assured, its supporters say.

The House adopted a bill transferring Wilkerson County from the Ocmulgee Judicial Circuit to the Dublin Judicial Circuit.

Local bills traveled through the House Thursday morning at the rate of one every 30 seconds. Time-honored custom has placed the fate of local bills in the hearing before committees, and unless remonstrance is made by someone on the floor of the House, the bills are adopted.

Griggs County Favored.

Griggs County came in for a favorable report from the Constitutional Amendments Committee. It probably will be slated for a vote about Tuesday.

A bill regulating the operation of fraternal insurance societies in Georgia was filed by Representative Wohlwender.

The bill proposes to relieve the State of the wildcat insurance evil, which the author of the bill declares has hurt Georgia more than anything else in recent years.

Appropriation Bill Up.

All records for the filing of a general appropriations bill were broken by the House when Chairman Wheatley filed the report of the Appropriations Committee Thursday morning. The bill shows a general cutting down in appropriations to meet the revenues. While there was protest in some quarters, the spirit among the members of the committee was harmonious, and while a little trading was necessary it was handled without any ruffling of feelings.

The bill will be taken up Monday.

Women O. K. Ban on Drinking in Public

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The new excise law, which prohibits drinking by women in public places, has greatly interested Washington society. Such prominent leaders as Mrs. Thomas P. Gore, wife of the Oklahoma Senator; Mrs. William Haywood and Mrs. A. S. Burleson, wife of the Postmaster General, express their approval of the new rule. Mrs. Gore said that public indulgence by women in liquor has become a national menace.

HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS

GOVERNOR SPEAKS TO OLD SOLDIERS

BRUNSWICK, July 17.—Governor John M. Slaton was the central figure of the closing day of the Georgia Confederate Veterans' reunion, which began here Wednesday. He reviewed the veterans' parade and addressed the old soldiers.

Governor Slaton arrived from Atlanta this morning over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad. He was met at the depot by a committee of prominent veterans and business men, who escorted him to the reviewing stand, where an informal reception was held before the parade passed. Long before the hour of the parade the streets along the line of march were crowded with spectators eager to secure points of vantage.

The veterans were led by Major General Davenport, of Americus, commander of the Georgia Division, and Miss Regina Rambo, of Marietta, State sponsor. There were 600 old soldiers in line. At the conclusion of the parade the Governor, with tears in his eyes, said it was one of the most impressive sights he had ever witnessed.

In his address to the veterans Governor Slaton said:

"As long as recollections of the sacrifices of these men, as they laid bare their breasts to the fire and cannon of the enemy remain fresh in the hearts of this generation and are handed down to further generations, then just so long will Georgia and the South be safe."

In discussing affairs of state the Governor said he did not ask for a new kind of Legislature to solve the financial and taxation problems now before the State, but that he wanted the "old kind of men with the spirit that filled our citizens with courage and bravery during the days of the war and the reconstruction theret aft-r."

The reunion comes to a close tonight, with exercises at the courthouse.

The Iowa was stove in from her rail to 5 feet below the water line. The Sheboygan also wrecked her bow.

After the passengers and crew of the Iowa had been landed and a part of her cargo had been carried off, the vessel went to the bottom of the Chicago river with $60,000 worth of cargo still on board.

Arbitration Likely For New Depot Site

MACON, July 17.—Arbitration probably will be necessary to settle the claims for damages made by property owners on lower Cherry street in consequence of the closing of that thoroughfare for the building of the Union station.

WHY NOT GET A GUARANTEE?

Every Article of Merit That Is Sold These Days Is Guaranteed —No Guarantee Often Means Poor Quality.

There is very little excuse for any person to claim that he has been "stung" on a purchase. Fifty years ago the buyer had to look out, but to-day it is unusual to find a merchant who will not return the money for any article that has proved unsatisfactory.

An excellent example of this kind of fair dealing is shown by the clean-cut guarantee that all druggists give on Dodson's Liver Tone.

These people tell us that any person who pays 50c for a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone and does not find it a gentle and most pleasant liver tonic, harmless, but a sure reliever of constipation and a perfect substitute for calomel, can get his money back just as quick as they can get it out of the money drawer.

Dodson's Liver Tone has practically taken the place of calomel. It is absolutely harmless, sure in its action and causes no restriction of habit or diet. No wonder the drug people are glad to guarantee it, while other remedies that imitate the claims of Dodson's Liver Tone are not guaranteed at all.

Premier Wants Power to Oust Them From Hague—King Describes Atrocities.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 17.—A Sofia telegram was received this afternoon from Dr. Daneff, former Bulgarian premier, saying a Turkish army is advancing upon the defenses of Adrianople.

ATHENS, July 17.—Premier Venizelos of Greece is preparing a communication to the world powers demanding, in the name of humanity, that the name of Bulgaria be struck off the list of civilized nations which signed The Hague Convention.

The Greek Premier declared to-day that the document will be forwarded to the various capitals without delay. The demand has resulted from a remarkable expose of Bulgarian atrocities in Southern Macedonia, sent here by King Constantine.

In conclusion, the Greek King declared that the war will go forward. Among the facts recounted by King Constantine relative to the barbarity of the Bulgarians were the following:

At Demir Hissar the Greek Catholic Metropolitan and two priests were tortured to death. Refugees were burned alive at Doiran.

During the retreat of the Bulgarians women and children were bound and left helpless in their homes to die of starvation. In other instances houses were fired and the defenseless ones were burned to death.

"Peace Cabinet" Demand Made by Czar Ferdinand.

SOFIA, July 17.—Czar Ferdinand of Bulgaria has demanded that the next ministry be a "peace cabinet" and M. Malinoff to-day was intrusted with the task of forming a cabinet to succeed the one which resigned yesterday. Dr. Daneff, former Premier, declined it.

"I could not count upon the friendship of Russia," declared Dr. Daneff. "Russia has professed eagerness to see peace in the Balkans, but is doing little or nothing, and we are at the mercy of the powers."

Communication between this city and Varna was cut off by the Roumanians, who tore up railroad tracks and cut telegraph and telephone lines. The only communication with the outside world now is by way of Bucharest and Belgrade.

SHELBY MYRICK PUTS 'LATE' IN 'LEGISLATE'

Representative Shelby Myrick, of Chatham County.

He's the Real Early-and-Late Worker of the 1913 Assembly.

The thing that worries Representative Shelby Myrick of Chatham more than anything else in his legislative line of duty, is the thought that some of these days he may run out of work as chairman of the House Committee on Constitutional Amendments.

At Present, Mr. Myrick's committee meets only morning, noon and night, and the thought continually obsesses the gentleman from Chatham that it might, if it tried right hard, meet a little oftener.

All the new county propositions are threshed out before Myrick's committee, and as there are twenty-odd new counties applying for admission, Myrick and his colleagues frequently are held far into the wee sma' hours of the morning listening to patriotic and liberty-loving sons of Georgia discussing, pro and con, the merits of the proposed Grand Young County of Somethingorother!

Even after Myrick retires at night, some grand young county generally come out after he drops to sleep and camps on his manly chest until daylight!

If Myrick ever gets through with the present line-up of new counties, he says he is going to retire permanently from the Constitutional Amendment business. In the meantime, however, one must be game, and stand by one's guns.

As a matter of fact, Myrick of Chatham is one of the effective and influential members of the House. His mother, Mrs. Louise Myrick, of Savannah, formerly of Americus, is one of the most brilliant women in Georgia, and her son inherits her ability and intelligence.

The gentleman from Chatham is one of the prominent lawyers practicing at the Georgia bar.

BLUNDER BEATS BILL CREATING CANDLER

House Advocates of New County Apply Gag Rule and Get Retaliation—Vote 83 to 80.

Candler County, after the first genuinely spectacular fight of the session, was defeated on the floor of the House to-day by a vote of 83 to 80.

Undoubtedly the advocates of the measure were largely responsible for this unexpected turn of affairs. They called for the previous question under the rules. Being sustained by the House, the call shut off all debate, save in favor of the new county.

Then the enemies of the bill raised the cry of "gag rule," and this advantage was pressed to Candler's undoing.

As member after member explained he had intended voting for the new county, but would not now in view of the fact that debate had been shut off, it soon became apparent that Candler was marked for slaughter.

Defeat Is Thorough.

Being a constitutional amendment, it required a two-thirds vote. It failed to receive even a constitutional majority.

Realizing that a tactical blunder had been made, the advocates of the measure endeavored to reconsider the call of the previous question and permit both sides to debate the question, but under the rules of the House the Speaker was powerless to give either side any aid or comfort in that direction.

There was nothing to it but the roll call. And that settled Candler.

During the debate much bitterness was evidenced now and then upon the part of members both for and against the measure.

"Gag rule" was vehemently charged by one side, only to be as vehemently denied by the other.

Reconsideration To Be Moved.

After the vote had been declared, Mr. Wohlwender, of Muscogee, gave notice of a move to reconsider the measure, and it doubtless will be reconsidered by the House. In that event it is not likely that Candler will come up again this session.

Mr. Wohlwender, who moved the previous question, took exception to a remark made by Mr. Wheatley, of Sumter, who, in explaining his vote, referred to Mr. Wohlwender, so the gentleman from Muscogee thought, as a "chicken thief."

Arising to a question of personal privilege after the vote had been declared, Mr. Wheatley said that he had not meant to say that Wohlwender was "a chicken thief," as he did not think he was at all!

He arrived here Wednesday night to attend a meeting of the Southern Stove Manufacturers' Association, after having spent the day in Rome, Ga.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

It seems to be regretted generally in the Legislature that bill was introduced providing for reading from the Bible daily in every public school within the State.

Unless the bill is killed in the Senate, where it was born, the chances are it will be killed in the House when it gets there.

The effect of a bill of this kind, which has been introduced in General Assemblies before now, is to stir up a lot of feeling, and make a lot of people sore. After this has happened, it invariably gets itself knocked galley west by one House or the other.

Nobody has any objection to the Bible being read in any school where the patrons of that school desire it, or even do not object to it; but very many people seem to object to the State's saying the Bible must be read in any school.

Of course, there are extremists on one side who vehemently protest that the Bible should be read in the schools, and everywhere else, just as there are other extremists who insist that it should be read very little anywhere, if at all.

Neither one of these fanatical folks, however, represent a type of sufficient members to count heavily in Georgia, and so the question of reading the Bible in the public schools is not particularly a thing to get excited about in the average mind.

Indeed, the average Georgian wants his religion and his politics kept separate, and he generally has scant appreciation of those people who insist upon mixing them for him, whether or no.

Already, a lot of folks have their dander up about the bill now pending, and there yet is a lot of hard feeling apt to be engendered.

The excited one may well keep cool, however—or as cool as they can, anyway—for the impression is that the bill surely is to be peacefully laid to rest eventually, in one House or the other.

Representative Blackburn's public highways bill has one definite object in view that will command it heartily to many people.

He wishes to prepare Georgia for participation in the Federal aid to good roads fund, in order that the State may get its share of the big sum soon to be distributed by Congress all over the nation.

Unless Georgia can contribute in money, rather than in convict labor, to the construction of roads, it will not be able to avail itself of the Federal fund. This point has been definitely settled by correspondence between former Governor Brown and the National Government in Washington.

Mr. Blackburn's bill seeks to remedy the trouble in the Georgia law as it now stands, and to that end he will receive the co-operation of very many members of the House in his effort to pass his highways measure.

Floor leadership in the present House seems to go begging.

There are members of effectiveness and ability—any number of them—but floor leaders, men who get things over by the sheer force of ability on their feet, are not noticeable in the present House.

Burwell, the present Speaker, was one of that sort, when he was an ordinary member—but who is there to take his place on the floor, now that he is in the chair?

Nobody has done anything big in the House yet—and unless somebody gets busy, it looks as if nobody will. The debates on the floor are listless and not particularly interesting, and there are not many debates indulged in, at that.

In the Senate, the situation is pretty the same way. Over there, much time is fritted away, doing nothing much.

The present Legislature seems to average up well in point of intelligence—but in the matter of floor leaders, it seems to be very shy, indeed!

Alderman Frank M. Arneau and Dr. M. D. Jameson, of Sandersville, are visiting Atlanta for a day or so.

Although Mr. Arneau is one of the most prominent men in his section of the State, and has served his home city continuously as Alderman for ten or twelve years, this is his first visit to Atlanta.

"I know a lot of Atlanta folks will look upon me as a positive curiosity," said Mr. Arneau to-day, "but really I never have been here before. I have heard of Atlanta all my life as a great city, and it is. I can see that I have missed much by not visiting here before this, but, somehow, I have been a sort of home body, I guess, and Sandersville and vicinity always has seemed good enough for me. Now, however, that I have scraped up a pleasant acquaintance with Atlanta, I shall come again pretty soon, and often."

Mr. Arneau is one of the real, genuine political influences in his section, and his chief characteristic is loyalty to his friends. He will go the limit—and frequently does—for those he thinks well of. Of course, therefore, his friendship not only is most pleasant to those so fortunate as to possess it, but most valuable as well.

There is no happier man in the Georgia Legislature to-day than H. L. Rainey, of Jackson. The report of the Senate Committee on Constitutional Amendments recommending Barrow County favorably has filled Rainey's soul with genuine joy.

"It only remains now for the Senate to ratify the committee's finding," said Rainey to-day, "and that I feel sure it will do. The proposition has passed the House by an overwhelming majority, and the same proposition passed last year's Senate unanimously.

"The statement that the people of the territory affected are not favorable to Barrow County is not true. I came to the Legislature from Jackson upon the distinct understanding that I was to work for Barrow County. A very heavy majority of the people in the counties affected are for Barrow—they look upon it as a just proposition. Barrow has had its difficulties and has been fought unfairly and wrongfully heretofore, but truth crushed to earth will rise again. The present Legislature seems determined that Barrow shall have a 'square deal'—and that means we shall win on the floor of the Senate, which will complete the job of making a new county of Barrow, so far as the Legislature is concerned."

GOVERNOR LEADS FIGHT FOR TAX EQUALIZERS

Confers With Legislators to Avert Clash That Will Doom His Reforms.

There is no doubt Governor John M. Slaton fears for his recommended tax reform measures, now that the Ways and Means Committee has split wide at the beginning of the fight for a State Tax Equalization Board.

All day Wednesday Governor Slaton held quiet but earnest conferences with various members of the House, urging upon them the necessity of harmony and concert of action, if any tax reform measures worth while are effected this session.

The proposal of the Ways and Means Committee to eliminate the State Board of Equalizers from the measures proposed in the House by way of substitute for the Lipscomb bill does not meet the approval of the Executive.

He wants a genuine tax equalization measure, and he considers a State board essential.

State Board Deemed Hopeless.

Whether he would consider a compromise now, with an eye to perfecting the measure later, is problematical, but already there are those who are saying that no bill carrying a State board can hope to pass this Legislature.

A strenuous effort will be made to get the Ways and Means Committee to reconsider its action on the original measure, and if that can be effected, a fight on the floor may be averted.

The nine members of the Ways and Means Committee who dissented from the majority report of the committee turning down the original Lipscomb bill have filed a vigorous minority report in favor of the original bill and a State Board of Equalizers.

Tax Reform Massacre Seen.

The situation thus set up on the floor of the House, therefore, is acute and possible of widespread and far-reaching developments and complications.

If the fight divided the House anything like evenly, and that seems likely, it may mean the probable slaughter of every tax reform measure to be proposed.

If that happens, or anything approximating the same, it is a virtual certainty that Governor Slaton will accept the implied challenge of the Legislature, call it at once in extraordinary session, place squarely upon it the responsibility for the failure of tax reform, and, if necessary, go to the people finally for an adjustment of the problem.

The Governor has set his heart upon tax reform. He has studied the State's financial methods and status. He has matured and carefully thought out ideas as to what is necessary to get the State out of the financial woods and into the middle of the big road again

Can Fight if Necessary.

The Governor, moreover, while usually the most diplomatic and persuasive of persons, impressing some now and then as inclined to proceed along the line of least resistence, can fight hard, if he has to.

The keynote of his ante-inaugural speeches was tax reform. About it he has shaped his plans and hopes. To see those plans and hopes wrecked now, because of a bitter fight in the Legislature, is not going to please the Governor considerably.

And he has let that fact be known in his own way. He unquestionably means what he says, too. If the Governor's tax measures are slaughtered in the General Assembly, the General Assembly will have to answer to the Governor for it.

Strong Powers at Work.

It is evident enough that there are powerful influences at work against the creation of a State Board of Tax Equalizers, or any other effective board of equalizers.

A State board unquestionably would bring to light in short order hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of property now concealed from the tax receivers' eyes. A State board would, in other words, dig up the tax "dodgers" by the wholesale.

There are some mighty big tax "dodgers" in Georgia, so the advocates of the Lipscomb bill believe, and it is the purpose of the bill to ferret them out. Wherefore, say the champions of the Lipscomb bill, the present fight against the proposed State board.

A desperate effort is being made to adjust the situation and bring some sort of order out of the present chaos of proposed tax reform, but unless the differing factions in the House are brought together soon, the entire tax reform program undoubtedly will be in grave danger of defeat at this session.

Says Georgia's Hope Is More Production

"To improve our condition, to accumulate wealth and keep up with the other States of the Union in the matter of credit, we will necessarily have to depend upon our agricultural and industrial interests," said Representative Ralph O. Cochran, of Atlanta, addressing the Credit Men's Association at the regular monthly luncheon at the Kimball House Wednesday.

"Most important of all the great issues confronting Georgia is the fundamental proposition of production. When you have enhanced your producing agencies you have prepared the way for increased taxes."

THE VERY IDEA! SHE SAYS THERE ARE NO REAL BEAUTIES IN ATLANTA!

Miss Jeanne Thackston, who says Atlanta girls aren't as pretty as those of North Carolina.

She likes the attractive way the belles of this city dress, however.

Raleigh Society Girl Boldly Declares North Carolina Has the Prettiest Women.

Miss Atlanta! here's a slap on the wrist!

Miss Jeanne Thackston, a charming young society girl of Raleigh, N. C., says that the girls of Atlanta and Georgia, though famed for their beauty, are not nearly so pretty as the girls of North Carolina.

Miss Thackston is visiting her brother, Henry Thackston, at 328 Ponce DeLeon avenue.

"I see lots and lots of nice looking girls in Atlanta," she said, "but I do not see any really pretty ones like we have in North Carolina. The girls of the Tar Heel State [illegible] a beauty that I do not think is equaled anywhere on earth."

But be of good cheer, Miss Atlanta; there is balm in Gilead! Miss Thackston says we have all sorts of style and that we know how to wear the clothes!

"I must admit," Miss Thackston declared, "that the Atlanta girls have it on our North Carolina girls when it comes to clothes. It is like looking at the fashion plates in the magazines to walk down Peachtree street in the afternoon. And the girls here wear their clothes 'to the manner born,' too. I think they are just grand! But I believe the girls of my own State had rather retain their beauty than have so much style."

It seems that North Carolina society has forged ahead of Miss Atlanta in the matter of dances, too!

"Raleigh girls are crazy about the turkey trot and bear dances," she said, "but we have gone them one better. We have a new dance that we call the 'Raleigh Romp.' It's a combination of the turkey trot, the tango and the Texas Tommy, and it's just heavenly!"

Gunboat Sunk in '62 Found in Cumberland

CLARKSVILLE, TENN., July 17.—Workmen for the Foster, Creighton & Gould Company, while excavating preparatory to sinking a cofferdam at the site of the lock and dam near Dover, found a portion of an old gunboat which was sunk by batteries from Fort Donelson in 1862.

The wreck had been located by divers, and while the 50 years in the waters of the Cumberland had decomposed and rotted the woodwork greatly, many small articles, such as kitchen utensils, crockery, etc., were found.

William Rockefeller Regains His Voice

NEW YORK, July 17.—William Rockefeller is again able to talk. Less than six months ago his voice was the subject of national debate.

Process servers then got to him after a hunt of months, but he was excused from testifying before the Pujo Congressional Committee on the ground that he could neither talk nor write, and that any excitement might cause his death.

But Rockefeller was able to debate energetically for nearly three hours the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the New Haven road.

FREE MOTOR CAR WAITS WINNER IN CONTEST

Young Men and Women Enthusiastic Over Georgian Prize Want Ad Competition.

By The Want Ad Man.

Say, young man, you'd like to be driving your own speedy automobile these afternoons, or burning up the road on a fast motorcycle? Of course you would.

And, young lady, a shiny new piano would look mighty nice in your parlor, wouldn't it? Or a trip to far California with all the bills paid would be worth while? Of course!

Well, why not go after it? The American and Georgian's Want Ad Contest gives you the opportunity. You won't have to spend a penny. Just use your brains and energy! There are thousands of dollars worth of prizes waiting for you.

Here's the way to win:

Everbody Wants Something.

Everybody you know wants something. They want a new cook or a housegirl, or a man to build a chicken house, or to swap a refrigerator for a gas stove, or trade a vacant lot for an automobile—oh, there isn't a home in Atlanta where something isn't needed. And the "Want Ad Way" is the best way. A want ad in The American or Georgian brings results.

And all your friends need is a suggestion—just a call from you, a few questions, a memorandum with a pencil, and there's your want ad, ready to turn into the office.

Every cent turned in for a want ad will give you ten votes in the prize contest. When the brief period is over the contestant who has turned in the most money will win the first prize, and there are prizes galore for those who don't win the first. Automobile, trip to Pacific Coast, motorcycles, pianos, watches, bicycles, jewelry—there's a chance for everybody.

Learn Salesmanship.

And besides the tangible prizes there is something even better—a chance to learn the best paid science in the world—the science of practical salesmanship. A few weeks' work under our skilled instructors will be worth thousands to you if you plan a business career. Practical work is worth a whole library full of theory.

Get your friend to fill out the nomination blank you'll find in the full-page advertisement in this issue of The Georgian. Send or bring it to The Georgian office, No. 7 Edgewood avenue, as soon as you can. It will give you 1,000 votes to start with, and the Want Ad Man will show you how to begin, place you under an experienced director and start you out to win that automobile.

Quite a bunch of young live wires turned in their nomination blanks today and are ready to start. Don't delay, but make up your mind to enter and win. You won't be sorry.

Read the big advertisement to-day, clip out the coupon and bring it in to-morrow.

U. S. TO REMOVE WILSON FROM MEXICO POST

His Displacement Expected To Be Taken as Virtual Recognition of Huerta.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—That Ambassador Henry Lane Wilson, now on his way from Mexico City to Washington, never will return to Mexico as the representative of the United States, was stated authoritatively at the White House to-day.

While the administration is opposed to any act which might be taken as a recognition of the Huerta regime, it is believed that the sudden crisis in Mexican affairs will force Washington to accept Ambassador Wilson's resignation and to appoint his successor within a short time.

Formal recognition of the Huerta Government would be required if the United States were to send an ambassador to Mexico as a successor of Henry Lane Wilson. This was asserted by State Department officials to-day, who added that there is no way in which the United States can change its attitude toward Mexico at the present time without involving a formal and valid recognition of General Huerta.

No Middle Ground for U. S.

There is no middle ground on which the United States could stand, so as to "save its face" in its present embarrassment and at the same time yield to the pressure now being placed upon it by certain European powers.

President Wilson understands the gravity of the present situation. He conferred with Senator Bacon, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs, early to-day, concerning the Mexican question.

The Georgia Senator pointed out that the opposition of the Wilson administration to the Huerta Government, if continued, would be fraught with an immense amount of danger to the Monroe doctrine, the principles of which are considered more in peril now than at any time since the Venezuelan boundary dispute during Cleveland's administration.

President Likely to Yield.

Being informed on all sides that a recognition of President Huerta by the United States would end the present trouble south of the Rio Grande and prevent the necessity for active intervention—the only other alternative now apparent—it is considered likely that the President will consider it wiser to retreat from his announced Latin-American policy and recognize the present Mexican Government.

Before taking any decisive steps, however, the President will await the arrival of Ambassador Wilson, and his future course of action will be based largely on the advice of the Ambassador.

Should the United States desire to intervene it has the troops and ships ready for instant action, but it is believed here that the President will choose to back down from his policy of "no recognition of any but properly elected Constitutional Governments," rather than plunge the United States into a war.

UNTOLD MISERY WITH ECZEMA

On Face in Red Pimples. Itched and Burned. Scratched Until Bled. Ashamed of Face. Cuticura Soap and Ointment Cured.

Franklinton, La. — "About four years ago my face broke out in little red pimples. At first the eczema did not bother, but finally the pimples began itching and burning and then there came little raised places. I suffered untold misery. I scratched them until they bled and I could not sleep at night. I was ashamed of my face and I could not bear to touch it.

"I tried different remedies without result until I tried Cuticura Soap and Ointment and in six weeks they completely cured my face. That was nine months ago and no sign has appeared since." (Signed) Mrs. Leola Stennett, Dec. 14, 1912.

FOR PIMPLES AND BLACKHEADS

The following is a most effective and economical treatment: Gently smear the affected parts with Cuticura Ointment, on the end of the finger, but do not rub. Wash off the Cuticura Ointment in five minutes with Cuticura Soap and hot water and continue bathing for some minutes. This treatment is best on rising and retiring. At other times use Cuticura Soap freely for the toilet and bath, to assist in preventing inflammation, irritation and clogging of the pores. Sold by druggists and dealers throughout the world. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address postcard "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

HOW TO SLEEP WHILE OTHERS SIZZLE

Method of "Refrigerating" Your Bed for Solid Comfort.

"Persons who have the electric current in their homes," said a physician, "need not suffer for want of a refreshing sleep, day or night. Such a sleep is the best safeguard against being prostrated or killed by the heat.

"Let me tell you the method first," the doctor continued, "and then I will give the reason for it. On a bed or cot spread a single sheet. Take a basin of water and a whisk broom, and with the broom sprinkle the sheet until it is thoroughly dampened. If you have a rubber blanket in the house you can spread the blanket over the mattress, make the sheet more wet by dipping it in the bathtub, and spread it over the blanket. Set the electric fan so that it will blow a fairly stiff blast across the bed or cot. Lie down on the sheet and you will soon be sound asleep.

Evaporation the Secret.

"Now, for the reason," the doctor went on. "It is not the hot blast from the fan that cools you. The fan sets the air in motion and gives appreciable relief. But what thoroughly cools you is the evaporation from the sprinkled sheet with the warm blast blowing over it. And the warmer the air from the fan the swifter will be the evaporation and the greater the coolness.

"Here is an illustration that all persons having to do with explosive vapor motors in automobiles or motor boats will understand. The one part of these motors that always is cold is the pipe from the carbureter or mixing valve to the cylinders. In some of these machines the cylinder exhaust is close to the vapor intake. In some machines the exhaust is so hot that a drop of water on it will hiss, yet the intake is cold while the machine is running. It is made cold by the rapid vaporizing of the gasoline.

Refrigerating Scheme.

"Water vaporizes not so rapidly, but a warm blast from an electric fan on a damp sheet, whatever the temperature of the room, will produce a degree of coolness through evaporation that will be, perhaps, more than that desired.

"It is simply," the doctor concluded, "making a mild form of refrigerating plant of your bed or cot. It cools not only the person, but lowers the temperature of the entire room. The cost of operating it is about the same as that of keeping an ordinary electric bulb lighted."

BOTH MANAGERS AND TRAINMEN STAND PAT

Representatives of 42 Railroads Insist on Arbitration of Differences With 100,000 Men.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Representatives of the 42 Eastern railroads which are threatened with a tie-up by a strike of their 100,000 employees announced to-day that they would stand pat on their demand for the arbitration of all the grievances of the men under the terms of the Newlands amendment to the Erdman act. This stand of the railroads, it was said, would complicate the situation.

Elisha Lee, chairman of the conference committee of the managers of the Eastern lines, was out of town to-day, but in his absence another member of the committee issued the following statement:

"We are amazed at the stand taken by the leaders of the Brotherhood of Trainmen and Order of Railway Conductors, as expressed in the newspapers, regarding the grievances which we want arbitrated. They take the attitude that theirs is the sole side which has the right to seek arbitration.

"We think differently and believe the public will support us. The railways will stand pat. We will have no further statement to make until President Wilson has appointed a commissioner of mediation."

COMFORT YOUR TORTURED SKIN WITH RESINOL

No matter how long you have been tortured and disfigured by itching, burning, raw or scaly skin humors, just put a little of that soothing, antiseptic Resinol Ointment on the sores and the suffering stops right there! Hotel Head Ousted; Doesn't Know South

MACON, July 17.—On the ground that he does not understand people of the South, the directors of the Hotel Dempsey, Macon's million-dollar hostelry, have discharged R. S. Hubbell, the manager, formerly of the Hotel Waldorf, New York.

Inasmuch as Hubbell had a five-year contract for $5,000 a year, with board for himself and family, the hotel officials probably will have a lawsuit on their hands.

MULHALL HEARD T. R. KNUCKLED TO WALL ST.

Chief Lobbyist Says Rep. Watson Told Him Everything Was Being Sacrificed for Taft.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—With half a carload of account books and files of the National Association of Manufacturers, and 20,000 letters and telegrams made public by M. M. Mulhall, the Overman Lobby Inquiry Committee to-day found itself for the first time in a position to ascertain the whole truth concerning the methods of manufacturers in controlling elections and legislation.

The new mass of testimony is expected to furnish proof or refutation of Mulhall's personal accusations and insinuations.

A letter from Judge William R. Speer, of the Hudson County, N. J., District Court, to former Governor J. Franklin Fort of New Jersey, introducing Colonel Mulhall, was exhibited by the committee. Speer is a nephew of John Kirby, former president of the Manufacturers' Association.

Sherman Was Provoked.

On April 28, 1908, the late Vice President Sherman wrote to Mulhall that it was impossible to get the Littlefield compulsory pilotage bill through the House. Sherman was provoked at the tariff agitation of the National Association, and said it might lead to the election of a Democratic President. Sherman also was angry at the newspaper fight against Speaker Cannon's candidacy for the presidential nomination.

At that time Representative James Watson, of Indiana, according to a letter written by Mulhall, "had a great notion to take the floor before Congress adjourned and expose the whole dirty piece of trickery from start to finish," referring to a statement that the White House, meaning President Roosevelt, was responsible for the newspaper campaign against Cannon.

"Watson states that the President is moving heaven and earth to nominate Taft," wrote Mulhall; "that he is willing to sacrifice the Sherman law and every other law to please the trusts and to please Wall Street, so that he can get their support for his candidate at Chicago."

Bribed Clark's Messenger.

Colonel Mulhall testified that he had paid money to Henry Neal, Speaker Clark's negro messenger, for "small favors, such as getting people in and out of the Speaker's office."

"I learned," wrote Mulhall, "while at Senator Foraker's home, that the opposition to the President (Roosevelt) intends to let no legislation through which he wishes at this session of Congress, and intends to fight the Taft forces to a finish.

"I met Mr. Beveridge and called his attention to promises he made to Mr. Parry and others in India in regard to the class legislation. Mr. Beveridge told me that he stood strongly in favor of the injunction bill the President wanted."

A letter from James S. Sherman enrolling Mulhall as a worker for the Republican congressional committee in 1908 was presented. This letter was to serve as credentials for Mulhall among Republican leaders.

In May, 1908, one of Mulhall's expense accounts showed $5 paid to a House employee for information.

"Who was that man?" asked Reed.

"J. H. McMichael," said Mulhall.

Hemenway Scores Beveridge.

"I told Senator Hemenway what Mr. Beveridge said. Hemenway told me to tell Beveridge for him if I saw him again, that he was talking through his hat, and that it was a damn poor hat at that. Hemenway said Beveridge was bluffing."

On May 7, 1908, Mulhall wrote:

"Watson has made a confession to me, and it is this: All this scare about injunction bills and an amendment to the Sherman law and such legislation was all gotten up by him and the Speaker for the purpose of flooding the President with letters and to stop this dickering on the tariff question at this session of Congress."

In March, 1908, a boycott was attempted by organized labor against Bishop & Babcock and the Cleveland Faucet Company of Cleveland, Ohio. Mulhall said he stopped this boycott through Harry Volmer, a labor leader.

From Columbus, Ohio, May 28, 1908, Mulhall wrote that "Henry A. Williams, chairman of the State committee, told me he had taken a draft of the national platform to Washington to submit it to President Roosevelt, Mr. Taft and others for their approval.

"I told Chairman Williams and Wade H. Ellis what our people would want, showing them that there were more than 46,000 manufacturers organized throughout the United States at the present time, and that it was utterly impossible for them to elect Mr. Taft or anyone else without our active support."

On June 1 Mulhall wrote to the late Vice President Sherman assuring him of his support as a candidate for the nomination as Vice President.

Schwedtman wrote to Mulhall that "no matter how the National Association might feel about some of Taft's statements, it is up to us now to support him."

"Mr. Taft seems to be entirely in Roosevelt's hands," wrote Schwedtman.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Pictures at the Grand.

The Grand continues to entertain and interest a multitude of amusement seekers, and from 2:30 in the afternoon until 10:30 at night, a series of the highest class of motion pictures are seen daily. This week the selections are made up of the very highest grade of motion releases.

Another of the wonderful features that have been promised in photoplays by the Grand management will be the attraction next week, daily matinees at 2:30, evening performances at 8:30; matinees 25c and night 25c and 50c. This feature will be Victor Hugo's "Les Miserables" in nine perfect reels recently taken in France.

Forsyth Draws Crowds.

It is generally agreed by all audiences who have crowded into the Forsyth this week that it has the best bill of the season.

While there are no big feature acts, with the exception of Valerie Bergere, every one of the numbers is qualified for the bit that it is registering, and a better variety bill has never been offered.

Miss Bergere is eclipsing the tremendous success scored by her at the Grand early this season. Britt Wood, the eccentric character comedian, is wonderfully clever with a harmonica and his eccentric dance.

For next week, the headliner will be John P. Conroy and his diving models. Conroy is the champion life-saver of the world, and his two models are perfect specimens of beautiful physical culture women.

At the Bijou.

"Hotel a la Carte" is scoring a decided hit this week at the Bijou. The musical comedy is quite different from the other musical shows that have preceded it in that the action is livelier, the comedy is more amusing, and the musical numbers more tuneful. Individual hits are being made by Joe Scott as the bellboy, Miss Mamie Elmore as Flossie Spearmint, and Walter Welheiser as Heinie Schultz, the barber. The usual daily matinees will be given at 2 o'clock, and night performances at 7:30 and 9.

COUPONS ENDED IN GEORGIAN'S PONY RACE

Voting Limited to Subscription Ballots So Winners Can Be Announced at Contest Close.

Contestants for The Georgian and American ponies no longer will find coupons in the papers entitling them to votes. The vote coupons have been discontinued entirely, and henceforth only votes secured by getting subscriptions will count.

This is done in order that it may become possible to announce the winners of the contest almost as soon as it closes on the night of July 31, instead of ten or fifteen days later.

The contest manager has found that coupons come in from a week to ten days late, in some cases two weeks late. It takes time to collect coupons, of course, and if they were printed right up to the last day of the contest, it would be two weeks before all the votes were in and the result could be announced.

And, of course, the new regulation is as fair for one contestant as for another. All contestants have had an even chance at perfecting a system of getting coupons from as many friends as possible. From now on comes the real test of ability. Every one will admit that the contestant who does the newspapers permanent good by getting subscribers is more worthy of being awarded a pony than those who simply clip the coupons from day to day.

Friday and Saturday only remain in the club bonus offer, giving 20,000; 12,500 and 6,000 votes for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 respectively. And but twelve days remain in the contest.

UNCONSCIOUS FROM FALL.

DALTON.—John McNally, 14 years of age, was seriously injured when he fell from a bicycle on Hamilton street. His head struck the pavement, and he was unconscious for several hours.

Now for the Once-in-a-Year Event

The Half-Price Sale

Of Our Richest and Finest Embroideries

Flouncings, Bands and Points of Rare Beauty

---All Included

The Selling Starts at Nine o'Clock

Draw a ring around to-morrow!

It is a once-in-a-year day for buying embroideries---the day of the Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co.'s disposal of their chociest imported embroideries.

The ranking embroidery event that Atlanta knows!

It is not surprising that we should hold such a sale, a clearaway at this season. It is quite logical that we should dispose of all these embroideries while they are still fresh, that when the next season starts, we shall start with entirely new stocks. You expect that of us. But it is surprising and out of the ordinary that we should have the temerity to go at the disposal in such a determined fashion ---by halving prices.

Therein lies one difference between this and many embroidery sales; another is the embroideries themselves. They are those exquisite affairs that the women of Atlanta naturally turn to Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. for at regular prices, ranking among the most beautiful that come from Switzerland.

Fabrics as soft and sheer as looms can spin them, embroidered in amazing patterns at one time as lacy as gossamer; again heavy, rich, gorgeous.

Some of them are even hand-embroidered.

There are flouncings, 45 inches wide, that were $3.50 to $17.50 a yard.

There are bands, 4 to 10 inches wide, that were $3.50 to $12.00 a yard.

There are embroidery points---to match the flouncings and the bands---that were $3.50 to $12.00 a yard.

Mulls, Crepes, Voiles, Batistes mostly---and you will get a new idea of how sheer a fabric can be woven once you see these---and linens.

A few tans and blues, mostly white.

Half-price.

Why, it will pay women to buy for next spring!

And doubtless many will, once they see the rare beauty of the embroideries.

Art Goods Are Priced for Friday

Women who do art needlework will do well to take advantage of these prices made for Friday. Every one means a saving. And the thrifty woman will see that Friday will be a happy time to supply herself for all the embroidering that she can do for some months to come. Simply told, here are the savings:

Helen and the Trunks Are Gone When Warren Returns to the Hotel in Paris.

By MABEL HERBERT URNER.

THE room was charming. Helen could hardly restrain an exclamation of delight when the French manager unlocked the door and crossed over to draw the heavy curtains from the long, low windows.

The paneled walls, the furniture, the draperies, were all in old rose silk tapestry. The bedroom adjoining was exquisitely dainty in white and pale blue. The low French dressing table, the cheval mirror, the two cane beds with the pale blue silk hangings and coverlets, made it look like a stage setting—"Act I. Mlle. ———'s Boudoir"—in a modern French play.

It was all so surprisingly dainty and luxurious for a hotel that Helen feared it would be most expensive—more than they could pay.

"What do you ask for these rooms?" she ventured.

"Twenty-five francs a day, Madame," he answered in surprisingly good English.

"And what for breakfast served up here?"

"Two francs for coffee and rolls."

Only nine more francs for the rooms, and the same for breakfast as they were paying now! And the dirt and dinginess of the other place compared to the charm and cleanliness of this! Helen pictured herself, in her dainty white morning gown and boudoir cap, having breakfast in this rose silk room. This picture decided her.

"Very well. I'll take the rooms. We're at a place on the Boulevard Capucines now, but we'll come to-morrow morning or late this evening."

The manager took her down on the mirrored elevator to the palm-lined hall and office below, where Helen made a deposit of twenty-five francs to secure the rooms.

On the way back in the bus her courage began to waver. She had arranged to move without Warren's consent or knowledge. But when she again saw the dinginess and shabbiness of the rooms they were in and thought of the wretched breakfast they had had that morning, her courage was renewed.

A Bold Scheme.

As she packed the few things they had unpacked for the night her strongest desire was to move now. It was only half-past one, and Warren would not be back until almost seven. Why not get a cab and take their baggage over now—and have everything unpacked and in place by the time he got there? She could not reach him during the afternoon, but she could leave a note here giving him the address of the new place.

For Helen this was a most audacious scheme, and she was athrill with excitement at the very daringness of it all. For once she would show Warren that she could take the initiative, that she would not stay in a place that was both uncomfortable and unclean, merely because he did not want the bother of moving.

There was a rusty pen and a dusty ink bottle on the mantel. Helen took some paper from her handbag and wrote hurriedly:

Dear: Have just found the most wonderful place! When I went to the American Express Company this morning to get our mail I heard some American women talking about a delightful hotel. I took down the address and looked it up at once. The rooms are so beautiful and so moderate, that I couldn't resist engaging them.

I do hope you won't be annoyed, but this place is so dirty that I felt I couldn't stay. I am going to get a cab and move the things over now, so everything will be in place when you get there. The address is Hotel Ronceray, 10 Rue Montaigne. You can get a bus on the corner that will take you to the door. I will pay the bill here. Hastily. HELEN.

Still fearing that her courage might be short-lived, she determined to act quickly. Resolutely she went down to the office and asked for their bill. The man seemed surprised and displeased, for he had plainly expected them to stay several weeks.

Helen was amazed at the bill. She thought there would be only the room for one night and breakfast—but there was a charge for light, service and bath. However, she was too glad to escape from the place to make any protest, and a little later she was in a cab with their baggage on top, driving to the new hotel with a feeling of mingled glee and awe at her own temerity.

It was just 3 by the French gilt clock on the mirrored mantel of the rose-tapestried sitting room, when Helen closed the door after the porters who had brought up the bagage.

Even before she took off her hat she made an eager, interested inspection of every detail of the rooms. They were luxuriously and perfectly appointed. Everything was in exquisite taste.

It would be over three hours yet before she could expect Warren. But she had no desire to go out in the blazing, midafternoon sun, for the heat was stifling. She would spend the time in unpacking, in getting up their laundry, and in going over her clothes, which after the week on board ship needed attention.

It was a real joy to shake out her gowns and hang them in the spacious closets, and to arrange her clothes in the white-papered drawers of the chiffonoir and dresser. The rooms were so beautiful that there was a sense of luxury in just moving about and getting settled in them.

At 6 o'clock she decided suddenly to dress—to put on her white chiffon evening gown. She would lay out Warren's evening clothes, and when he saw her all dressed he would hardly refuse to dress, too. They would "live up" to the luxury of the place!

To sit down and arrange her hair before the low dressing table was a real pleasure. Helen thought of all the hours she had to stand before her high bureau at home, and resolved to have a dressing table like this as soon as she got back.

About half-past six she was trailing about the apartment in her white chiffon gown, looking at herself in the mirrors with which the rooms abounded, and feeling as though she was living in a play. The very foreign atmosphere of it all added to the charm. Although it was hardly dusk, she turned on the electric lights, which glowed softly through their silken shades.

She Gets Anxious.

For once Helen was too excitedly happy to worry over what Warren's attitude might be. Surely, when he saw how beautiful the rooms were, he could not be angry at her having moved.

But at seven she grew anxious. He should be here by now. What if they should not give him the note at that other place? They had not liked it because she had left—would they take such a revenge? She had left the note in the box with the key—how could he fail to get it?

Quarter after seven—half-past! By this time Helen had forgotten the charm of the rooms and was walking restlessly about in tense anxiety. What could have happened? He had said he would be back around half-past six, and it would take him only fifteen minutes at the most to get here from the other place.

For the first time there came a doubt in her mind as to the wisdom of her moving in this way. Perhaps she should have stayed. After all, it was a rash thing for her to do. They were in a strange city, if he should not get the note—how could he ever find her?

She could, of course, write to the American Express Company, where he would go for his mail in the morning; but what would he do to-night? Oh, why had she done this? Frantically she wished herself back in those other rooms, however shabby and dirty they might be. Surely it would have been better to put up with anything than to risk any chance of mishap in Paris.

A sharp knock at the door. She rushed to open it, and a French messenger boy handed her a note. As he held it out to her she saw Warren's writing on the envelope. Her hands weakly trembling, with her teeth she tore it open.

"Since you are so infernally smart and want to take things in your own hands, you can keep it up. You can have a nice little dinner alone any place in Paris you choose—and I can have the same. I'll probably be there some time to-night, but don't let that worry you—stay out just as late as you want."

The cruel sarcasm of it! How could he—oh, how COULD he! With a convulsive sob Helen threw herself upon the bed and her tears fell unheeding on its blue satin coverlet.

More Trouble in a Garden.

An elderly gentleman walking through his garden one day stopped before a fig tree on which were two figs just ripening. His favorites were figs, and summer often came and went without the fruit coming to maturity.

Shortly after he met his gardener who, assuring him the figs were quite ripe, was requested to send them to the summer house, where his master was about to rest.

Picking the figs, the gardener sent his little boy of 7 with the basket. On the way the little fellow stopped, and, removing the leaves, gazed upon the tempting fruit.

The attraction was too great; he ate one. Covering the other with the leaves, he proceeded upon his errand.

On being asked if the gardener had not sent two figs, the boy, after a moment's silence, answered: "I ate one."

"You ate one? How?" exclaimed the old gentleman, angrily. "How did you come to do that?"

Dropping his eyes to the basket, "I took it like this," said the child, taking the remaining fig, "and I ate it like this."

And, suiting the action to the word, he consumed the second fig before the astonished eyes of the old gentleman.

The GHOST BREAKER

By Charles W. Goddard and Paul Dickey

The Most Exciting Serial of the Year.

(Copyright, 1913, by Star Co.)

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Every one of these breaks in your life-line means a moment when you stood elbow-to-elbow with death," declared the girl, solemnly. "And yet—see those little squares of protection around each break? Senor American," she looked up at him soberly, "there is one break that you have not yet reached and the protecting square is not perfect like the others."

Warren burst into his silent laugh.

"I reckon that square will do when the time comes."

"But the time is now, senor!" exclaimed the girl, her lips less than a foot from his ear.

He drew back a little and eyed her through narrowed lids.

Danger Near.

She bore the keen scrutiny without a flutter, but her great round eyes and quick breathing told of some sure emotion.

"Are your eyes so sharp that you can tell the day and hour?" he asked slowly.

"Not my eyes, Senor American." She looked full at him with unmistakable meaning. "But my ears!" She caught the sound of footsteps in the passage and bent over the hand again as the Duke entered.

"In all my experience I have seen but one hand like yours, and that hand belongs to Don Robledo."

"Well, Mr. Warren, looking into the future?" inquired the Duke.

"Pardon, senor." Dolores swiftly withdrew and Warren called after her cheerfully:

"Good-bye, senorita, and many thanks for your occult wisdom. I'll take good care of that square. Yes, Duke," he added with a bantering smile, "and the immediate future promises to be very interesting. A dark man is to cross my path."

"Do you believe in such foolery?"

"I like to—on this occasion. For I hope it means some one I very much want to meet."

If the Duke guessed who this some one might be he gave no sign. He twirled his mustache and studied the floor, evidently in much perplexity, a situation that seemed to amuse the young man immeasurably.

"By the way," he went on. "Is that specter a blond or a brunette?"

The exalted kinsman made an impatient gesture, as if in no mood for raillery, and with every appearance of grave concern said:

"Mr. Warren, since the Prince is no more, I feel a certain responsibility for Her Highness' actions; and the prospect of your destruction to-night on her account is most uncomfortable."

The young man looked equally grave.

"You think I won't come back?"

The Duke looked at him with the air of a man who is frankly doing his duty.

"I think if you go into that castle to-night you take your life in your hands," he declared.

The old whimsical smile returned to Warren's lips.

"I've got a good grip."

The Duke looked for a moment as if he would retire—that having done his duty there was nothing for him to say. Then, as if a sudden thought had struck him:

"Look here! You Americans are shrewd traders. You get a dollar for a dollar when you bargain. You are not giving away your life for nothing. Now, what is the price?"

"Not very much," Warren assured him easily. "The deal was made on a bargain day. My life happened to be a little below par, you see, and I couldn't kick much over the terms."

The exalted cousin seemed relieved.

"Very well! Whatever those terms were, I will assume the responsibility of settling with you and at the same time release you from your unfair and outrageous bargain."

Jarvis bowed.

"Your Excellency, I am overwhelmed by your anxiety. It touches not only the heart but the pocketbook. But," he added regretfully, "the price is paid and I am on the job."

"I suppose that means you are going through with it?"

"Yes."

The Duke shrugged his shoulders.

"Well, I never saw a man so anxious to be killed. But, as your English poet says, 'Fools rush in where angels fear to tread.'"

"You flatter me," Jarvis protested, with soft-tongued irony. "Yet, an energetic fool may be of more use than an angel with cold feet."

"Well, I am sorry for you," concluded the Duke.

Jarvis walked up to him, for the first time in their acquaintance dead serious.

"Your Excellency," he said crisply, "I decline your offer and your advice and your sympathy—and I'll tell you why. I saw a gambler lay down four aces once because, as he said, 'The play ain't natural.' You tried to have me arrested on the steamer—you have tried to block me in every move I have made. Now—suddenly—you are deeply concerned lest something should happen to precious little me in that castle. You advise me to stay out. You even offer to buy me off. Shall I take your advice? NO! 'The play ain't natural.'"

On Guard.

His Excellency of Alva trembled with a cold fury, but held himself in.

"You have intruded into a matter which you neither understand nor appreciate," he said rapidly. "If, as you say, the play seems unnatural, pray do as your gambling friend—put down your cards and stay out of the game."

"No," retorted the young man, grimly. "I stay in the game—but I'm going to watch the deal!"

The return of the Princess abruptly terminated the conversation and when the two men turned to greet her they had recovered their natural tones and bearing.

"Well, all Segura is buzzing with your ghost-hunt to-night," observed the Duke, lightly. "The whole town will sit up to hear the outcome."

"And where are you going to get the returns, Duke?" asked Jarvis, with concealed interest.

"Unfortunately, I must leave at once," was the unexpected reply.

Even Jarvis was momentarily startled, but he quickly readjusted his inferences. "I am keenly disappointed, but I have an urgent summons to Madrid."

The Princess stared at her cousin, seemed about to speak and suddenly turned to the innkeeper who had followed her down stairs and ordered him to look after "the gentleman's wants."

"Thank you," said Jarvis, rightly interpreting this as a dismissal. "I'd like a couple of good horses and two lanterns."

"Lanterns?" smiled the Duke, as the young man went out. "Looking for an honest man, Mr. Warren?"

"Not in this neck of the woods, Your Excellency," retorted Jarvis, over his shoulder.

"Carlos," exclaimed the Princess, anxiously, when they were alone, "what have you found out? Tell me—what do they say?"

The Duke looked very solemn. "I regret to tell you that nothing is known of your brother since he entered the castle."

The girl closed her eyes and pressed her hands to her face.

"I can't stand this!" she moaned.

A Last Appeal.

Dolores called that Don Robledo was waiting with His Excellency's car.

"Cousin, do you really intend to go now?" cried the girl in tragic tones. "I need you! My brother needs you! Think what it means to us!"

"I am broken-hearted, dearest cousin—do not make my duty any harder by your words. The message is from His Majesty. It is mandatory. And, alas! In Spain, as in the Far East, to hear is to obey."

"But why must you start so soon?"

"You know my ride is a long one and I must travel fast while the moon is up."

The girl was silent for a moment and when she spoke again voice and features were composed into a chilly hardness.

"Not to open this discussion again, I want to say now that I will never forgive you for leaving my brother and me at this critical moment."

"Would you have me lose my favor with the King?" protested the Duke.

"Does his favor mean more to you than mine?" retorted the girl proudly.

The Duke spread out his palms and half bowed.

"Noblesse oblige, cousin," he said gently. "Nobles and kings must obey what lesser men might ignore. My heart is here, but my honor is with the King."

"Honor!" The Princess flung the word back at him as if it were a stinging missile. "The cloak for a man's vanity! Sacred honor!—to be kept bright at any cost, lest men should test his metal and find it base. Give me a man who cares less for honor than for me! You ask me to-day why I do not marry you. I will tell you why. I want a man, not a weakling masquerader. Yes, honor lives, but loyalty is dead! Courage is dead, and the brave blood of your ancestors, the blood that made Spain, has turned to water in your veins. There is not a nobleman in Spain who would dare go now this night to my brother in the castle. God! How I could love such a man!"

"Perhaps," sneered her cousin, stung by the bitter tirade, "perhaps such a man as your Yankee adventurer?

"Perhaps I could," cried the girl, instantly taking up the challenge. "Who knows?"

The Duke bit his lips and before he could frame an adequate reply the man himself appeared, slowly descending the stairs. So he merely bowed, took the girl's hand and kissed it.

"Farewell," he said in a low voice, "some time you will forgive me. Success to you, Mr. Ghost-Breaker, when you bead the specter in his den."

"Thank you, your Excellency," drawled Jarvis, leaning against the stairpost. "I will do my uttermost to put salt on the specter's tail."

"Good-bye!"

"Good night, Duke!"

The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with some concern and a question on his lips.

"Mr. Warren," she said abruptly, "we must start at once!"

The strained quality of her voice told him that she was laboring under the most intense excitement and it was with studied ease of manner and voice that he replied:

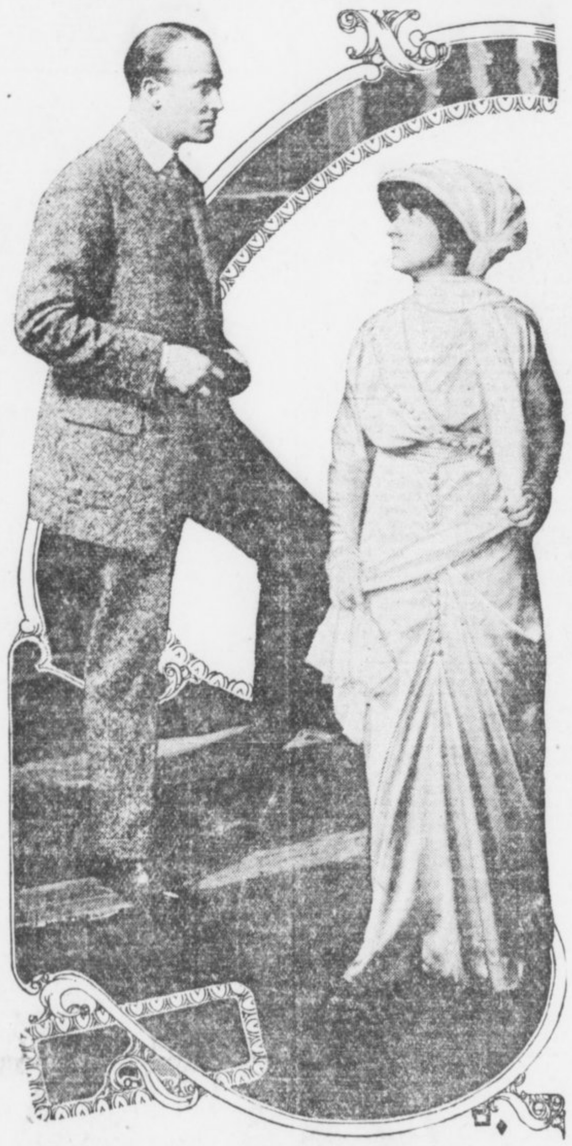
"It's out of the question for you to go to the castle until I have smashed this infernal mystery; there is nothing you could do. If your brother is there I'll find him. You must be patient and remain here, where you are safe, and try to rest."

"I can not rest until I know what has happened to him," she cried desperately. "I shall go mad if I am left here alone!"

"But it's not safe for you to go," he insisted.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

OFF TO THE CASTLE.



The girl was very pale and her eyes were glistening like winter stars. Jarvis approached her with som econcern and a question on his lips.

"MEGGIE, the postman is coming up the garden path. Would you mind going to the door?"

Mrs. Martin paused in the kneading of the large batch of dough and glanced toward the tiny sitting room. A pretty girl of about eighteen emerged in response to the call.

Meggie glanced at the crabbed handwriting on the letter, and a gasp of surprise escaped her lips.

"Who is it from, Meggie? Is anything wrong?"

The girl burst into a flood of hot furious tears, and flung the letter scornfully upon the table.

"If Jack is too good for me, I don't thank her to tell me so," she declared. "She herself wasn't much until she married Jack's father."

Meggie fled upstairs to her own little room. Mrs. Martin picked up the letter and read it slowly. A look of contempt flashed in her honest gray eyes.

The letter, which was couched in terms of lofty condescension, mingled with biting satire, conveyed the unmistakable message that the silly attachment existing 'twixt Meggie and Jack was viewed with disapproval, and advised the girl to look elsewhere, unless she wished to bring Jack to financial beggary.

In a few minutes Meggie, her eyes red with crying, descended the staircase, and her mother gathered her in her arms.

"Take no heed of the foolish letter, my dear," she said soothingly.

Ten minutes later found Meggie on the way to Flamstead.

She Sees Jack.

A man emerged from behind a spur of cliffs and a sudden rush of color suffused her cheeks. The man saw her at the same time and came toward her at an increased pace. He was a tall, strongly built man of about twenty-one, clad in rough fisherman's attire, and darkly curled hair showed beneath his sou'wester.

"Great guns! What are you doing abroad a morning like this, Meggie?"

"I'm just on my way to Flamstead to make a few purchases, Jack," she said. "Are you putting out to sea to-day?" There was an anxious note in the inquiry, as she glanced uneasily toward the horizon, which was enshrouded in a threatening murkiness.

Her glance seemed to bring something to his recollection, for his bright eyes suddenly darkened, and he laid a hand upon the rough surface of his jersey. The next moment he had taken the girl's arm in a close grip.

"Did you receive a letter this morning, Meggie?" he asked abruptly.

A tell-tale flush of confusion dyed Meggie's cheeks, and her eyes fell beneath his questioning gaze.

"Then it is true. She has been interfering between you and me. By heaven, I'll make her retract every word she has written.

* * * * *

It was a night long to be remembered by "those who go down to the sea in ships," and by the poor fisherfolk of Sharpel's Head in particular.

"I'm main afraid they won't do it. If they do, 'twill be by the grace of God!"

The distress signal flickered for a second, and then was obliterated by the flying spume. The old fisherman who had first spoken made his hands into a megaphone, and gave vent to a loud but futile shout.

"'Tis awful to have to stand by and watch them go to their death without being able to lend a hand," he said.

"She cannot last long in a sea like this," declared old Timothy, with a shake of his head. "A boat wouldn't live a minute in such a bolt. 'Tis years since I'v seen the like."

Scarcely had he spoken when there was a commotion at the rear of the watchers, and a slight cheer was raised. The men from the Flamstead Coastguard Station had arrived, and at their head raced Meggie Martin, her dark hair streaming in the wind. A minute later a rocket with a mighty rush soared seaward, taking with it the line. It hummed like a string of a gigantic harp. At length there emerged from the darkness the dim outline of the breeches-buoy, and from it hung the limp figure of a man.

"Why, 'tis Jim Carlin, of the Waterwitch."

A wild, terrified wail greeted the announcement, and Mrs. Ryalls rushed into the arc of light cast by the lantern.

"The Waterwitch! Good heavens! What of my husband?"

She reeled, and would have fallen had she not been caught by Meggie. The officer waved them aside.

One by one the crew of the Waterwitch were drawn to the shore.

"Thank the Lord, that's the lot saved!" said the officer.

Scarcely had he uttered the words when a slim girlish figure sprang toward him and seized him by the arm.

Jack Is Left.

"All are not saved!" she cried in a voice that was almost a scream. "There is Jack aboard, the captain's son. Quick, send the buoy back or he will be lost!"

The officer started in surprise.

"The captain should be the last to leave."

"Yes, but don't you see he was injured and Jack has sent him first. Oh, be quick, or 'twill be too late!"

The officer spun round with a sharp command, and the buoy once more went on the outward journey.

"I'm afraid it's all over, miss. There is no response. He shook the line vigorously and again waited, but without result. The buoy was drawn ashore, and almost at the same moment and hawser perceptibly slackened.

"Good heavens, the boat is breaking up!" shouted the officer. "Tighten up the hawser, lads, and let's have another try for the poor fellow."

The officer and his men hurried away with the lanterns toward the tree to tauten the rope, leaving Meggie standing alone by the swaying buoy.

A reckless resolve flashed into her mind, and she glanced around sharply. The next moment she seized the rope, had swung herself into the buoy and was swiftly gliding down the steep incline toward the deafening inferno below.

Meggie felt a numbness creeping over her senses, but she bravely fought it back. She had set herself the task of saving Jack if he still lived and that task must be accomplished.

Suddenly her attention was arrested by an indistinct object swaying to and fro in a tangle of rigging close beside her, and a gasp of horror escaped her lips as she recognized it as the figure of Jack Ryalls. Meggie suddenly leaned from the buoy and, seizing the limp figure of her lover, drew him toward her.

* * * * *

"Why, bless me, if there ain't two!" The cry escaped old Timothy.

"And if it ain't Meggie Martin that's bin out to the wreck to fetch Jack in, I'll stand hanging!" declared another voice. "Hold that lantern up, Bill. Let's have a look at the heroine of Sharpel's Head."

The feeble rays of light fell upon the locked figures of Jack Ryalls and his gallant rescuer, and the next moment a tremendous hurrah rose above the soughing wind. Five minutes later the unconscious couple were being conveyed home with the utmost haste, followed by a crowd of silent but enthusiastic witnesses of the daring deed.

* * * * * *

Twelve months later a pretty wedding was solemnized at the quaint church of Sharpel's, and the whole of the townsfolk turned out to do honor to the handsome pair; but never did a heart beat more proudly than did that of Jack Ryalls as he led his bride between the lines of fishermen who formed the guard of honor—the girl who had snatched him from the very jaws of death.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

I DO NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 18 and in love with a man two years my senior. He is nice and has a good position. I kept steady company with him for a year and a half. Then my mother stopped him from calling on me, but never gave a reason; but, as it is, we go out, when we get a chance, together. He has given me two diamond rings. Do you think it is right for me to see him as long as mother does not consent? CUTTIE.

You owe her obedience, and must not see this man clandestinely.

On the other hand, you are now 18, and your mother owes you a reason for her objections. Can you not persuade her to tell you what they are that he may have a chance to overcome them? If he is the man who is to tell you the "sweetest story of all," I don't want you to lose him.

NOT A DAY.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I am 19, and am keeping company with a man 25 years old. Do you think he is too old for me? We never quarrel. He loves me, I know, but my father thinks him too old for me. He makes fine pay and gives me good times. We think a lot about each other and get along fine. H. E.

He is not a day too old. Are you sure your father's objections are not based on some other ground?

BETTER NOT.

Dear Miss Fairfax:

I received an invitation from a young lady to attend her birthday party. Is it proper for me to accept the invitation, as I have never been introduced or even seen the young miss? PERPLEXED.

A girl who would do anything so foolish deserves the rebuke you are in position to give her by declining the invitation.

Household Suggestions

Weak eyes that ache when exposed to the glare of the sun, especially on the sea, should be treated with cold water compresses. These are folded on the closed lids, and ease the aching at once

If troubled with ants indoors spread a piece of brown paper with marmalade rather thickly, then place it where they are most troublesome. It will soon be covered with them.

When boiling potatoes put a teaspoonful of sugar as well as salt in the water. This does not give a sweet taste, but makes them dry and floury.

Effect.

"Did you see the lovelight in her eyes?"

"No. The gaslight was in her eyes, and she squinted."

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

HUSBAND deer, sed Ma to Pa last evening, at last I have found a perfek jewel of a servant. She caim to work this afternoon, & I want you to notis her wen she is serving dinner. She is as brite a gurl as I have ever met. She is a cullurd girl, her naim is Minyunette, & she went to a gurl's college that Booker Washington had sumthing to do with. Her flow of English is perfeck, Ma sed, & I was thinking that littel Booble cud improve his English by jest lissening to her talk.

Didn't Warm Up.

I doant warm up vary much as you are talking, sed Pa. Sumhow I aint very keen for a servant that knows moar than we do. You know how long that one lasted with us that was all the time talking about Henry James & Shopenhaur.

Oh, but this gurl is different, sed Ma. She is vary quiet & I doant think she will air her nollege any.

I knew Pa wasn't going to like the new gurl, tho. I had herd her talking to Ma beefoar Pa caim hoam, & this is what she sed wen she was talking off her wraps: I presume that the duties connected with the situation will not be arduous. That dident sound like our other gurl that we had beefoar her, she sed when shall i pitch in?

She Comes In.

Well, wen dinner beegan Minyunette caim in to wait on the tabel. She had a high forehead & woar glasses.

Wife, sed Pa to Ma, you & littel Bobbie are going to a Shakespeer reading to-nite.

Oh, sed Minyunette, I adoar Shakespeer. He is so many minded, his scope is so all em-bracing. I was just looking at yure fat husband, she sed, & thinking of Shakespeer's lines

I want fat men about me, sleek hedded men
& such as sleep o' nights.
Yon Cashus hath a leen & hungry look.
He thinks too much. Such men are dangerus!

Pa dropped his fork & looked at Minyunette the way he looks at me wen my report card says Deportment, 65. But Minyunette dident notis Pa, she kept on talking. I think the character of Shakespeer's Portia is a butiful one, she sed. So wise & yet so sweet and womanly. I can see her now in my mind's eye, saying

The quality of mercy is not strained,
It falleth as the gentle rain from heaven.
It is twice blessed, it blesseth him—

See here, sed Pa, I doant want to be any Simon Legree, but it wuddent be a bad ide, Minyunette, if you showed a littel moar sped out in the kitchen & a littel less in here. I am as hungry as a jailed suffragist, sed Pa, & it doesent help my hunger any to heer you spouting Shakespeer. The next thing I know you will be raving about Lord Byron and trying to reesite all of Childe Harolds Pilgrimage. Come on, now, sed Pa, moar spuds & less Shakespeer.

Didn't Like It.

Minyunette dident like it at all the way Pa talked. She took off her apron & sed to Ma, Madame, I regret that I shall be compelled to seek elsewhere for a poslshun whare the environ-ments is moar en-vironing, sed Minyunette. I was sure I was going to like it here, beekaus you are a sweet nature, but yure husband is rude & of the soil. Our souls are not attuned, she sed. & so, obaying the word of fate, our ways part.

Good-NITE, sed Pa.

:-: The Melody :-:

WHEN evening came with the shadows she let her little frail hands fall into her lap as if every muscle and tendon had suddenly burst. Her finely-shaped dark-haired head rested on the table. She was sitting in front of her sewing machine, at which she had been working all day. All around her were scraps of silk and woolen goods, fashion papers and patterns lay in piles on the table, and when she moved her arms some of them dropped on the floor. Her head was dizzy with complete exhaustion. She was unable to think, but felt the increasing darkness as a blessing which put an end to the toil of the day.

It was ten years of work that had aged her. These years had been to her like one long walk through an endless desert without a single oasis to relieve the monotony; her feet had left no tracks on the sands; not a single cry from her lips had been responded to; nobody had met her on the way to shake her hand.

But on the other side all these years of weary thraldom there were a few years when she had been young and had lived. In those years the two had sat together, watching the coming of dark, and were glad and laughed at everything.

She was young then, and worked for small wages in a dressmaking shop. He had long hair, dreaming eyes, an inexhaustible fund of hope, and a violin—that was all but he was an artist. He was young, gave lessons on the violin and managed to make both ends meet. He was always bright and happy. Nobody could laugh as he could, or cheer her up as he could. He knew how to make everything appear in a golden and rosy light.

One night he came to her unexpectedly and took her into his arms.

"I cannot live without you," he said. "Why should we wait until we can afford to marry. Then we shall be old and gray. You cannot put happiness aside and say, 'Wait a few years; I cannot give you any of my time now; later on I will call for you.' Will you not come to me now and live with me as my wife?"

But she did not understand him. She struggled out of his arms, wounded and unhappy, an intense pain shooting through her every nerve and fiber. For solitude had made her shy and suspecting; his suggestion hurt her, and she asked him to leave her. She no longer remembered the passionate words that passed between them; but he left her, pale and angry, his black hair in disorder and his eyes shooting fire at her.

Two days passed. Then one even-she saw it in one of the papers—a short notice which most people would have overlooked. He had shot himself. He had gone straight from her and had sent a bullet through his brain. She thought of all the hard words she had said to him and felt how unjust she had been to him.

As she was putting her room in order she felt a sudden desire to go out, to see people around her and hear them talk, to feel the cool evening air in her face.

From the park she heard music which irresistibly drew her in among the trees, where it was so much more pleasant than in the dreadful rushing and crowding of the streets. She stopped in front of a large restaurant with many chairs and tables outside and music in the veranda, where a few persons sat drinking and talking.

She sat down on a bench under a dripping tree, where she could hear the musicians. Here she sat for a long time quietly and sad, with her hands folded and her head thrown back.

Suddenly a musician got up to play a violin solo. He was a tall, dark young man; he stooped a little. His eyes were sad and melancholy under the heavy brows.

As he started to play she stood up, trembling. She felt like rushing up to him and asking him to stop, but she fell back on the bench and hid her face in her hands.

"That melody contains all life," he used to say; "love, suffering and happiness."

When the violinist lowered his bow she stood up and went home. Like a small shadow she disappeared among the crowd. Nobody had a look or a thought for her.

But her pale, tired-looking mouth was smiling, and in her eyes was the light of happiness. No longer did she dread the visions of the day or the dreams of the night.

She had a hand to clasp now in the darkness, a hand which was to guide her through eternity.

Condensed Measure.

"Do you call this a pint?" asked a sharp servant of the milkman, whom she suspected of giving short measure.

"Yes," replied the man.

"Well, it won't do," said the girl. "When we want condensed milk we'll buy it at the grocer's."

EVERYONE agrees that for the art of sculpture we can not exceed the ancients. To me it seems that the Greeks had beautiful sculptured figures because they had wonderful models, and had wonderful models because they had a deep veneration for the almost divine beauty of the human form. And so out of this circle of perfection they chiseled glorious figures that we of to-day may use as models for the beautification of our own bodies.

To-day I am showing you three figures, and I shall dwell at length on them and what we may hope to acquire from a practice of the poses they portray. Let us make a slight study of the expression of countenance and body. For unless the face and body are attuned in the expression of a mood, there will be ungraceful uncertainty as a result.

The First Figure.

The first figure on top might stand for a number of ideas—injured innocence is the most dramatic idea that it suggests. To me it simply is a harmoniously simple pose, in which body and face express quiet dignity. Try it yourself—for it looks very easy to take a pose like this. But to stand poised firmly and gracefully on one foot, with the whole body balanced, ready to spring into motion and life and still at rest, is quite a feat. The ability to stand gracefully is rare—for people generally balance on heels or toes, or sag awkwardly on one hip.

Let me suggest an exercise for the acquisition of ability to stand gracefully. Balance the weight on the ball of the right foot, let the right arm hang easily at the side. Sway the body slightly to the left and raise the left arm to the chest, at the same time rising on the toes of the left foot until the weight is all balanced on the right foot. Then sway the weight gradually to the left foot, rising on the right toe and lifting the right arm to the chest. Simply sway from foot to foot in exactly the posture that figure one shows you.

Is Very Simple.

Figure two is gayety shown in one step of an old dance of triumph. It gives the most marvellous control of thigh, knee, ankle and instep, and will serve to bring down an accumulation of weight about the hips and thighs. Furthermore, it insures a graceful control of arms and shoulders.

The practice of this seemingly complicated exercise is simple when once you carefully analyze the picture I have posed for you. Beginning with the left foot, rise slowly to the toes, at the same time raising the other leg with the knee bent and the instep so flexed that the toes point almost perpendicularly to the floor.

The rising on the toes of one foot and the lifting of the other limb until the knee is far above the waist line must be simultaneous.

Practice this first, alternating from one foot to the other, with the arms hanging at the sides.

Then combine the arm and leg motion, and see what a gain in balance results.

Lift the arms with drooping wrists, and as the hands reach the shoulders, and the elbows are at waist height, turn the fingers up, at the same time turning out the hand above the raised knee, and elevating the up-pointing fingers of the other hand above the head.

Poise, balance, and reduction of superfluous hip-flesh—is this not a vast deal to gain from one dancing exercise?

The last figure illustrates a little faun-like movement that is splendid for back, throat and instep, as well as for flexibility of wrist. Walk forward on tip-toes, with the uplifted hands crossing first to the right and then to the left as the body's weight is thrown first on the right and then on the left foot. When the weight is coming on the right foot and the right wrist is foremost, throw the head to the right and give the body (which must be bent slightly back throughout the exercise) a slight turn to the right. Alternate this from foot to foot.

Always practice these exercises in regular alternation from right to left or left to right and back again to insure even bodily development. Real beauty of form demands as first requisite absolutely even and uniform development, for only when it is absolutely normal is the body truly lovely as Our Maker meant it to be.

Up-to-Date Jokes

The other morning Mrs. Blower went to see her neighbor, Mrs. Smith. It was obvious that she was greatly upset about something.

"I'll have to get rid of Fido," she burst out. "He broke into the larder yesterday."

"Dear me!" said Mrs. Smith, sympathetically. "Did he eat much?"

Mrs. Blower tried hard to speak calmly, while her eyes blazed with righteous and burning indignation, as she replied:

"Every single thing except the dog biscuits."

"Waiter," grumbled a customer, "I should like to know the meaning of this. Yesterday I was served with a portion of pudding twice the size of this."

"Indeed, sir," rejoined the waiter. "Where did you sit?"

"By the window," answered the customer.

"Oh, that accounts for it," said the waiter. "We always give people by the window large portions. It's an advertisement."

:-: The Sins of Our Fathers :-:

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

MILDRED writes: "I am deeply in love with a young man three years my senior. I have been keeping company with him for the past three months. I would like to bring him up to the house, but my father objects to me bringing any boys up to the house. What shall I do?"

In the category of sins which fathers visit upon their children, no mention is made of the heavy penalty that often results when a girl is compelled to do all her "sweethearting" outside the protecting walls of her home. If the streets, the parks, the public walks or the dark corners of steps are made a girl's parlor, then I contend her father is visiting upon her innocent head as great a burden as if he violated all the moral and physical laws. In the most trying period of her life, when through her love she is weakest to resist, she is cast out on the streets without even the environment of familiar scenes at home to remind and to restrain her.

One can not be as easily tempted when in the familiar scenes of one's youth and innocent dreams, as if in strange surroundings. It is as if every chair, the table, even the pictures on the wall, looked with accusing eyes, surrounding the girl with whose life they have always been a part with a moral influence that is never lightly brushed aside.

The girl who receives her lover in her parlor impresses him, though perhaps unconsciously, with the sanctity, the respectability, the dignity of a home. The girl whose parlor is the streets may be good and pure and sweet, and usually is, but girls whose object is not moral also meet men on the streets, and the similarity upsets his moral balance.

An Impression.

The girl in the parlor usually has a father or a mother in the next room, and the young man who calls is impressed with the fact that there is some one loving her, shielding her, to whom he will have to account if he offends. The girl on the street corners is without a mother or father, so far as any impression of personal security goes. She is thrown out like a waif; if she becomes a derelict the father or mother who refused her the privilege of receiving her lover in her parlor is to blame.

The memory of parents is criminally short. There are few of them who can call back to the days when they loved and were loved, and when the clasp of a hand, or a kiss, was worth more than all the wealth in the world, defied the wisdom of the ages. They have forgotten the call of youth.

There is no room in their memory for the cry of the heart for its mate, and, lacking this memory, they are as unfit to be parents of young girls and boys as an Egyptian mummy. They are without sympathy and understanding, at the period when the young in their charge need sympathy and understanding the most.

Without these they are also without charity. I have a notion that the father of Mildred, who compels her to do her "sweethearting" on the streets, would be like flint in his judgment if she yielded to the unwholesome influences of the dark corners of life and erred. Yet he would be more to blame than she.

Wisdo mtc Refuse.

It is wisdom to refuse to let a girl bring a man to her home of whom her parents know nothing, but it is better to grant her even this privilege than to let her meet him on the streets. If they know nothing of him a closer inspection in their own home gives them every opportunity to know him better.

They can never know the manner of man their daughter is learning to love if they compel her to see him on street corners, and, being ignorant of him, they are without argument or weapons if he is undesirable.

Open the parlor for the girls. It is their right!

The Misfortunes of Joe Brick

A SHORT time ago I met my friend, Joe Brick. He looked worried. When I greeted him with a smile he groaned.

"Oh, if you only knew! If you knew, but you don't."

Then feeling, like most unhappy men, a desire to confide the story of his misery to somebody, he told it to me, and a pitiful story it was indeed.

"My affairs were going splendidly and I was already hoping to become a member of the Billionaires' Club," began Joe. "A rich marriage, I thought, would help me along. In society. I had often met Miss Ruby Smith, a daughter of the king of agriculture, a young lady of unusual beauty, but who unfortunately had neither arms nor legs. She was called the trunk woman. She was known to be amiable and sweet tempered, and was extraordinarily bright, so bright indeed that most of the schemes which had made her father the richest man in the United States had been hatched in her brain.

"I Decided to Marry."

"I decided to marry Ruby Smith, and one afternoon, dressed in my very best clothes, I asked her father for her hand.

"He looked at me sharply and said:

"'My daughter is very rich; how much are you worth?'

"I told the dreaded magnate all about my hopes. I proved to him that I had an idea which would revolutionize the manufacture of beet sugar, that I had a scheme to cut the cost of oleomargarine in two, and depicted to him all the details of my plan to increase the crop of Brussels sprouts, to triple its present size by sprinkling the plants twice a day with water from the celebrated Manneken fountain in Brussels, and how there were untold millions in my idea of exporting black radishes to the negroes in Africa.

"He was greatly impressed, took me into his arms and exclaimed:

"'You are to be my son-in-law, if Ruby will have you for her husband.'

"Miss Ruby received me most cordially. Poor little one, how beautiful she was! A regular Venus from Milo, only more perfect still, since her legs, too, were missing.

"I shall not go into details. It is enough to tell that she accepted me and a date was set for our wedding. It was celebrated with great splendor. It was the happiest day in my life. After the ceremony my wife received all her old friends with open arms, in spirit at least, in our new home. I felt my future was assured and knew that I would surely be elected for membership in the Millionaires' Club, which was the height of my ambition. Alas, it was not to be!"

"My dear little wife, my darling Ruby!' I said to my bride when we were alone: 'What do you say to giving up all our old habits for a few months and leave this feverish town for an idyllic wedding trip?'

"'You really think of everything, Joe!' she exclaimed, and as she could not clasp my hand she looked right into my soul with her angelic eyes. 'I am ready to follow you to the end of the world!'

"I have always been a most chivalrous fellow, so I felt like kissing her hand, but had to kiss her forehead instead.

"'I do love you so, Joe,' she whispered.

"'And I adore you, Ruby. There is no other woman in the world half so beautiful to me as you are!'

"We left for Canada in our private car, starting on our famous trip, which filled columns in the newspapers. We were to cross the Rocky Mountains and stay for some time in Monterey and Los Angeles, but the pitiless hand of destiny interfered. We were as happy as two turtle doves during the first part of our journey, and I felt that Ruby loved me more every day.

The Fatal Day.

"Then the fatal day came. The train, our own special train, of course, was speeding along at 70 miles an hour, when suddenly there was a shrill whistle and the airbrakes were jammed down hard. Train robbers had held us up and now invaded our drawing room.

"'Hands up!' cried a gigantic fellow standing in the doorway.

"Ruby behaved like a heroine and smiled indulgently at the bandit, while my hands shot upward.

"'Hands up!' roared the robber once more, and as Ruby, of course, was unable to comply with his request, he fired at her, killing her on the spot.

"That is how I became a widower,' sobbed Joe. "The king of agriculture accused me of leading his daughter, his right hand as he called her, into a trap. He blackballed me in the Billionaires' Club and did not keep a single promise to me in connection with my schemes. That is why I am a ruined man to-day. By the way, can you lend me a hundred?"

* * * * * *

Only to-day I learned that Joe is spending his time in a nice, quiet retreat for the feeble-minded. He had told the story of his misfortunes to a dignified old judge while awaiting his turn at a barber shop.

By Virtue of Age.

"Yes," said the old man to his visitor. "I'm proud of my daughters, and it is the ambition of my heart to see them all comfortably married.

"What's more," he added knowingly, "I've made a bit of money in my time, so my girls wont go to their husbands penniless. There's Mary for example, 25 years old, and a real good lass—I'll give her $1,500 on her wedding day. And to Bet—you see, she has past her thirty-fifth summer—I'll give her, at any rate, a couple of thousand; whilst the man who takes Eliza can rely on taking with her at least $5,000 of the very best."

"By the way," inquired the young man, "how old is Eliza?"

"Forty," replied the elder.

"Hum! I suppose you don't happen to have a daughter somewhere between sixty and seventy?"

Do You Know---

There has been such a decline of recent years in the marriage rate of Trieste that one of the civic dignitaries suggests the institution of a system of compulsory matrimony. It is proposed that on a given date in each year all spinsters who have attained their twenty-fifth year and bachelors who have attained their thirtieth should be required to present themselves before the syndic in whose jurisdiction they reside. The names of those who on medical examination prove to be thoroughly sound would be sorted according to sex, placed in separate urns, and then drawn two at a time. The couples whose names are drawn together would, at the conclusion of the draw, be united forthwith by the syndic.

A traveling theatrical company, which is at present visiting Lille, France, gives performances in a couple of barges, which are towed along the canal from town to town. One barge does duty for the theater, while the other serves to house the players. The floating theater is comfortably fitted, and there is a large stage, with scenery painted by a member of the company.

One of the competitions in connection with the Welsh Territorial Artillery, which recently concluded its training on the sand dunes at Pembrey, was a bun-eating contest. Two sappers set out to eat fourteen buns, the prize to go to the man who got through the lot in the quickest time. The winner ate his fourteen in 25 minutes, his opponent finishing five minutes later.

MURPHY LEADS VOTING RACE; JORDAN DROPS

Thomasville Shortstop Tops Popularity Contest for First Time; Coupons Are Piling in Fast.

HERBERT "PAT" MURPHY, the Thomasville shortstop, is now leading the Hearst Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian's contest to decide the most popular player in the Empire State League.

Otto Jordan, the Valdosta manager, and former laeder, is now in second place, just 41 votes behind Murphy. The latter has received up to date just 1,988 votes, while Jordan has received 1,947 coupons. From this count fans can imagine the closeness of the race.

"Goat" Holliday, the third man in the contest, is but 200 votes behind the Valdosta manager. Dick Manchester, of Americus, is fourth, and Baby Wilder, the popular Cordele player, fifth.

Thomasville fans will now have to vote for "Pat" Murphy. Valdosta and Waycross fans are now ready to admit that the Thomasville shortstop is entitled to votes in the contest to determine the most popular player in the Empire State League.

Votes Pile in for Murphy.

His wonderful playing has gained him a host of admirers and it will be no easy task to oust him from his position. Votes piled in yesterday in large batches for Murphy. Men, women, boys and girls all got busy and rushed in votes to the baseball Popularity Editor.

The drop of Jordan to second place was a hard blow for the Valdosta fans. Otto had been leading the race for so long that they had thought it impossible for anyone to catch him. However, as we stated earlier in the week, Murphy's friends were just waiting for the Valdosta fans to ease up in their work. They did and as a result Murphy is now leading the race.

Margin a Small One.

But the margin is a very slight one. Justa imagine. Forty-one votes separate Jordan and the Thomasville player. Holliday and Manchester are right on their heels and they might pull off the "Murphy stunt" any day now.

Yesterday's lesson should be a reminder for all the fans who have players entered in this contest. Steady work is bound to bring results in the long run. Keep plugging, because some one ahead of your favorite star is bound to ease up and then comes your chance.

Clip Coupons.

Just clip the popularity coupon that appears daily and Sunday in this paper. Fill it in and mail it to the Popularity Editor, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta, Ga. The winner of this contest is to receive a beautiful loving cup to be donated by this paper. Get busy and vote to-day.

Johnson Stands by Stahl; 'Pans' McAleer

NEW YORK, July 17.—Ban Johnson, president of the American League, has unkind words to hand James McAleer, president of the Boston Red Sox, when they meet to-day in Detroit. The chief of the junior league made a hurried getaway to censure the Boston magnate for his hasty action in releasing Jake Stahl. Johnson declares the action an insult to the American League, and declares he will demand an answer for the action.

"McAleer," declared Johnson, "had no business to dismiss Jake Stahl in such cruel fashion. He humiliated him in the eyes of the sporting world right in his home town. Stahl was not to blame for the poor showing of the Red Sox this season. Injuries put the world's champions out of the race. Stahl deserved far better treatment for what he achieved last year. It was he, and not McAleer, who won a pennant and a world's championship in 1912.

"His treatment by McAleer is an insult to the American League. It is likely to draw upon our heads the ridicule of organized baseball. You may say for me that the unconditional release of Stahl does not go in the accepted sense of the word. He may have been fired with ten days' notice. But he will be paid by Boston every cent that his contract calls for, and his two-year contract does not expire until the end of the present season."

Jack Johnson's Flight Dramatic

Negro Champ Banished for Life

By W. W. Naughton.

JACK JOHNSON is saf in Paris and has announced that he will not return to the United States. If it were not for many of its objectionable features the story of Johnson's life since he became world's champion would be something to commend itself to dramatists who are always trying to think up some new twist in human affairs.

The truth about Johnson is as striking as any fiction that brain of story writer or play builder ever devised. And now that he has left all his troubles behind him and has reached the French capital after as realistic an escape into Canada as Eliza had when the bloodhounds were at her heels, a great many believe that Johnson's flight smacked of "assisted emigration." Who knows?

And who can say but that the Johnson episode has not ended for the best after all? As things are, he sentenced himself to banishment for life, and, seeing that he is regarded as a menace to public morals, what more effective punishment could he have been visited with?

If he had served his year and a day in whatever Federal prison he was to be incarcerated in the time would not have been long in passing. Out again, he would have been as bumptious and objectionable as ever possibly. As it is, we are shut out of him for good, and if some of the reports that have reached the writer are reliable, many better class negroes are more than satisfied because Johnson has chosen self-expatriation in preference to the short term in jail.

* * *

JOHNSON says he has arranged several fights to take place on the continent. He would have been more fruitful, perhaps, if he had said he expected to arrange several.

He will "arrange" them all right, and it is anything but difficult to conjure up what they will be like.

Johnson is a physical wreck. The press and public had ocular proof of the fact at Las Vegas, and since then, his closest cronies have admitted that the once powerful negro was a mere shell in his fiasco with Jim Flynn.

Since then he has had experiences which must have meant keen mental suffering to him, no matter how case-hardened and defiant he might try to appear. He has gone through enough to break any man down, and as he was already broken down before his troubles began, his present condition can be guessed at.

* * *

WHATEVER "boxing contests" Johnson may figure in will scarcely be regarded as sporting events. They will be hippodromes of the worst order, and they will bring discredit on the heavyweights who assist him.

He says Sam Langford will be one of his opponents. Well, Sam has just finished a series of six or eight "fights" with Sam McVea in Australia, and as the French are newer to the boxing game than the Antipodes, it can be imagined how much pugilistic comedy Johnson and Langford are likely to unload on the Parisians.

Possibly Georges Carpentier, Bombardier Wells and Al Palzer will also accept engagements on the Jack Johnson European circuit.

Larry Chappelle, Auctioned as Outfielder, Says He's Strong for Slavery

Sox Recruit Tells How Busher Feels in Majors

LARRY CHAPPELLE, for whom a larger price was paid by the White Sox than any minor league outfielder ever brought before, tells the readers of The Georgian to-day how he achieved the distinction. We have had inside baseball revelations without number from the big stars, but this is the first time the true, full details have been disclosed of that famous process hoped for by every beginner in baseball—"BREAKING INTO THE BIG LEAGUE."

Tad, the cartoonist, illustrates the confessions of the new $15,800 White Sock.

By Larry Chappelle.

I AM not exceedingly strong for that expression, "breaking into the big league."

To say that one breaks into the league savors of burglary.

When one breaks into anything it is implied that he uses either a crowbar or a jimmy, or dynamite, and I would rather say that I am pleased to have graduated from the minors.

Do you know, it's a strange sensation when a ball player sees his name on the sport page coupled with the statement a number of big leagues are bidding for his services.

If that is slavery, I'm strong for it. Baseball slavery is not so bad after all.

Pleased With Change.

But, let me say, I have graduated. And when a fellow graduates he is just entering upon life.

The boy who gets it into his noodle that his graduation on the evening of "commencement" is the end, has another guess coming.

It is the commencement for sure and I feel the same way about leaving the minors and going up.

I realize that I will be up against a speedier proposition than I have known, and it will not be such soft picking.

I have known for the past week or so that something was coming to me, but just what it was I could not figure out.

There I was, utterly and absolutely helpless so far as choosing my own course was concerned. It was up to me, I knew to go wherever I happened to be sent.

My mother, who lives at Jerseyville, Ill., saw in the papers a few days ago that I was to "go under the hammer at auction."

She wrote me a letter and said, "I suppose they are leading you around by the bridle, just like they do a horse at an auction sale," and she wasn't so much off the dope at that.

However, I am glad I have graduated and I am ready and anxious to enter upon my duties with the White Sox right away while the going is good.

Hopes to Stick to Majors.

I only hope my good work will continue so I may stick up in the big ring, for, like all ball players, that is the goal toward which I have been working.

I am the only child, hence the sport scribes can not say I have a brother in some bush league who bids fair to outrival me. Nothing like that in our family.

From the time I was strong enough to wield a bat I have been a baseball enthusiast.

Jerseyville may be only a burg, but it has some ball club, and it was on the back lot at Jerseyville that yours truly learned to play the game.

My parents were not overcome with delight when they saw my baseball propensities develop, but they did not handicap or hamper me in any way, and, like Topsy, I "just growed up" in the game.

Three years ago I landed a berth on the Quincy, Ill., club and played there a few months when I was hustled to Eau Claire. I was there but a short time when the secretary of the Milwaukee club came up to see me work and signed me for the Brewers.

Since then my life has been an open book. If you doubt it, look up the records.

I attribute much of my success this season to the fine feeling existing on the Milwaukee club.

Harry Clark is some manager, a good fellow, and right now his club is at the top in the American Association race, where I hope it will remain.

I am also glad to come to the White Sox because I have heard much concerning the owner of that club, and Mr. Callahan. I can assure them I will give them my best efforts, and I trust I shall prove satisfactory.

Realizes His Duties.

Don't think for a minute than I'm not wise to the fact that there will be a difference in the speed from now on. I have seen the big leaguers play ball and I know it is a faster game than they play in the minors, but my theory is, when speeding with the speeders, speed up, cut in the juice and throw 'er into the high gear. If the machine won't stand the speed, then it's back to the slower crowd.

I intend to play ball as I have been playing in the minors, hitting the ball when it comes within my reach, grabbing the high ones when they come out my way, and sometimes going after them when they don't, and running the bases with the intention of getting somewhere. That's my theory of baseball. I believe a ball player should take good care of himself and give his employer his best efforts as is demanded in every other line of work, and I have noticed that those who fail to do this usually land on the junk heap.

BOXING
News of the Ring Game

Frankie Whitney, well known around boxing circles in this city, is to get into action on Friday night. His opponent will be none other than Rudy Unholz, the veteran lightweight. The two will don the gloves in a scheduled 10-round go at Denver.

* * *

Billy Nolan, former manager of Willie Ritchie, is not lying idle, for he is said to be grooming a lightweight for a battle with the champion. It always has been hard to keep this fellow down.

* * *

Frank Klaus, the Pittsburg middleweight, will go to Butte, Mont., to-morrow for his bout with George "Knockout" Brown the latter part of this month. Klaus is at present in Pittsburg. Brown and Klaus met in a six-round go last year with honors even. The Butte affair is scheduled to go twelve rounds.

Ad Wolgast, ex-lightweight champion, is anxious to fight again and will probably meet Red Watson on Labor Day. Jimmy Coffroth, the coast promoter, is trying to arrange the match for his Frisco arena.

Freddie Welch, the clever Englishman, has signed up for a battle with Johnny Dundee, the New York boxer, who recently entered the lightweight ranks. The boys will box twenty rounds at 133 pounds, ringside, at Vernon, Cal., either August 16 or September 9.

MUSIC.

Let phonographs discourse their scratchy music in the stand!
Let Edisonian orchestras play on to beat the band!
The only strain that gives the fan a wild, celestial thrill
Is when, with densely crowded sacks, Joe Agler clouts the pill.

Let melody machines discourse their loud cold-storage strain,
As if an old asthmatic cat were crying forth its pain.
The only brand of melody that soothes a rooter's ear
Is when, with populated bags, Wal Smith assaults the sphere.

Let Billy have his voice machines dispensing music canned!
Let ragtime stuff and classic airs go wheezing through the stand!
The only brand of melody for which the rooters fall
Is when the hassocks all are thronged and Long attacks the ball.

Experts tell us that an infielder's speed is reckoned by his ability to start the double play, whereas, a magnate's speed is reckoned by his ability to start the double cross.

Not that there is much in a name, but any yachtman will agree that Disturber is a good name for a motorboat—that is, if a yachtsman could be forced to admit that there is anything good about a motorboat.

Likewise, those who have chanced to meander in the wake of a motorboat will admit that Pugh is a good name for the commodore of said boat.

That alleged airboat race from Chicago to Detroit is an unqualified success, much after the fashion of the Stock Yards Derby.

Jack Curley, who manages Jim Flynn, is not a believer in the theory that there is one born every minute. Mr. Curley knows, from experience, that the birth rate is 120 per hour, and proceeds accordingly.

If Hugh Jennings will turn his attention to the New York chess tournament he will noe that Messrs. Capablanca, Tenanwurzel, Chapes and Kupchik are batting in midseason form.

Another theory is that Mr. Dooin's athletes have taken up the study of the art of volplaning.

There is an unconfirmed rumor afloat that Charlie Ebbets conducts a baseball club when ont dedicating something.

It came to earth, I know not where,
And, furthermore, I did not care.

MURPHY NOW ADMITS THAT HE IS THE $100 FAN

CHICAGO, ILL., July 17.—Now comes Chubby Cholly Murphy with the coy admission that he is the unknown fan who gave Heinie Zimmerman the half of a $100 bill and promised him the other half if the Teutonic slugger could get through two weeks of baseball without being put out of the game. Murphy says he had about abandoned all hope of keeping his line-up intact when he hit upon the idea of the torn bill.

Maybe Murphy's idea was to return to Zimmerman the $100 he had been fined by Evers without injuring the feelings of the Trojan.

Boils Are a Bad Indication

With S. S. S. You Can Tell Poisoned Blood to Be Gone.

The appearance of boils leads many people to consider them a sign of robust constitution. They are more apt to signify a condition of sick blood.

It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect when you use that remarkable remedy, S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In a few minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capilliary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every emunctory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities.

And best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach.

You can get S. S. S. at any drug store. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood antidote ever discovered. Beware of any effort to sell you something claimed to be "just as good." If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice, write to The Swift Specific Co., 185 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

A skidding runner's spikes had laid him up in bed a week,
His dear old college champ had put
a large dent in his beak,
A cleated boot had torn away an ear and part of a cheek,
And he was so proud he could not be induced to speak.

And then his needy parent issued certain strong commands
In connection with the mowing of the lawn upon his lands,
But the hero, sadly, firmly, set his face 'gainst said demands:
"I cannot do it, father, it would blister my hands!"

LEACH CROSS HAS BEEN matched to fight Matty Baldwin in Los Angeles, and for this let us be thankful as seems fitting. Apparently the promoters out on the coast have wisely and early reached the conclusion that there is no chance of getting Champion Ritchie into a real fight again very soon. Baldwin is a broken-down, battle-scarred veteran who can, at least, be depended upon to do his best, such as it is. Cross has proved that he is one of the best, if not the best man, in the lightweight division such as that is. If memory serves aright, he lost to Baldwin in a 10-round bout recently, but the Gotham scientist should win in a long engagement. The result will leave the lightweight situation just where it is to-day.

CHAMPION RITCHIE IS showing more championship form every day, particularly in the selection of his opponents. He now expresses a desire to meet Freddie Welch, who is a perfectly decorous and considerate boxer who never so far forgets himself as to be rough.

Georgian Sends 125 Newsboys to Drome

Of the thousands who witnessed the Motordrome meet Wednesday night nobody enjoyed it more vociferously than the 125 newsboys who were there as guests of Hearst's Atlanta Georgian.

They marched to the field in a body, swarmed into the infield, gave their "college yell" repeatedly, cakewalked, danced, sang and disported themselves vigorously, to the great amusement of the other spectators.

The newsies have developed into amazing speed bugs and under ordinary circumstances have to borrow or beg enough to treat themselves to a ticket. This time the Motordrome folks and The Georgian combined in a big entertainment.

FRANK CHANCE IS AFTER SHORTSTOP BOB WALLACE

ST. LOUIS, July 1.—A local paper published a story yesterday that Manager Chance is ready to purchase Roderick Wallace, the Browns' veteran shortstop.

Maanger Stovall, however, is insisting that Chance raise his present offer before he will consent to talk business. Wallace outclasses all the Browns' young shortstops, but Stovall is said to want to build up a team of youngsters.

GOVERNMENT AID IN WAGE FIXING IS URGED

B. C. Forbes Predicts Amendment of Erdman Act Will Bring Industrial Peace.

By B. C. FORBES.

Arbitrators should arbitrate.

* * *

Too often they seek only to reach a compromise, to "split the difference," regardless of the merits of the case. This is a convenient peace-at-any-price makeshift. But it is not always justice. It is a policy provocative of strike threats. It is an invitation to workers, "Ask and ye shall receive." It does not make for permanent peace, but intermittent disturbance.

* * *

The Eastern railroad dispute is to be arbitrated—as was forecast in this column last week. Without betraying confidences, I can now say without danger that not a few railroad managers were inclined to accept the conductors' and trainmen's challenge this time on the theory that employes would go on and on demanding increases in pay so long as their threats succeeded in wringing concessions. Under the Erdman Act there was nothing but compromise, not genuine arbitration, they complained.

* * *

The Newlands bill, which has been rushed through Congress and immediately signed by President Wilson, ought to work equitably. It provides for a quasi-Government board, and its rulings will be executed by the Federal courts.

* * *

Briefly, there is to be a "United States Board of Mediation and Conciliation," composed of a salaried commissioner, to be appointed by the President, and two other Government officials, this board to arrange for the selection of either six or three arbitrators to settle a dispute and to pass upon any disagreements among the arbitrators.

* * *

The Government enters so intimately into the regulation of business to-day that it should have a voice—and responsibility—in settling controversies between employers and employees. Railroad income is virtually fixed by the Government, through the Interstate Commerce Commission. Hence it is fitting that the Government should be a party to any dispute over the rate of wages to be paid railway workers. The Government fixes freight and passenger rates. Very well, let it assist in fixing rates of wages.

* * *

Then there may be harmony between what the railroads are permitted to earn and what they are forced to spend.

* * *

Railroad wage disputes do not concern merely those taking part, the managers and the men. There are others intimately interested. There are:

Stockholders,
Bondholders,
Noteholders,
THE PUBLIC.

* * *

To-day the number of railway security holders is as large as the number of railway employees—approximately 2,000,000. Heretofore, the security holders have remained quiescent. They have no organization. They can not speak through a megaphone, as the men do by means of their unions.

* * *

WHY NOT AN ASSOCIATION OF AMERICAN SECURITY HOLDERS?

* * *

Thousands of persons of modest means are now buying good bonds and stocks instead of hiding their savings, placing them in banks at small rates of interest or chasing get-rich-quick rainbows. This is well—excellently well. The more small investors we have the greater the stability of the Republic. The man with nothing to lose is apt to clamor for an upheaval in the hope that, as he can not be worse off, he may be better off by the change. The citizen who has exercised thrift, who has saved a few hundred or a few thousand dollars and furnished his quota of capital for the development of his country's resources and the advancement of prosperity—such as one is less given to revolutionary action. He will think twice before voting for destructive politicians or advocating ruinous legislation.

* * *

But without co-operation, without united action, without organization, the small investor is helpless. He is impotent. He cannot cause his voice to be heard. And as long as he remains defenseless he is in danger of being imposed upon by both High Finance and Labor—and also by politicians. Anything calculated to destroy the growing habit of small-scale investment were a grave national misfortune. Therefore, let security holders come together after the manner of labor, of bankers, of lawyers, of doctors, of manufacturers, of merchants, and protect themselves against injustice. They are entitled to demand fair consideration. At present they are too often overlooked by financiers and by employees.

* * *

The new system of arbitration should, if impartially executed, make for industrial peace. The arbitrators should not be allowed to forget that CONSUMERS, THE PUBLIC, in the end foot all bills, and that capitalists and workers are not the only ones to be considered.

* * *

Politics should play no part in the fixing of awards.

Efforts to Settle Healey Strike Fail

The Healey building strike apparently is no nearer a conclusion than when the workmen walked out last Friday. Several conferences between the contractors and union officials have been futile.

A number of striking steel workers have left the city, and as this was practically the only trade employed on the building, union men declare it looks like an indefinite strike.

The steel workers were called out because the contractors failed to sign up with the electricians.

CANADA SECURES $500,000,000 U. S. PLANTS

Governor Foss Blames Failure of Reciprocity for Loss of 175 Factories.

BOSTON, July 17.—Governor Foss of Massachusetts, who recently announced that a corporation in which he was interested would be moved to Canada because of the Government's policy on reciprocity, has made public a second statement, giving a list of corporations that moved across the border because of tariff conditions. In part he says:

"The movement is going on quietly. Among the big corporations which have built plants in Canada are the General Electric Company, the Westinghouse Company, the Oliver Chilled Plow Company, the International Harvester Company, the American Locomotive Company, the American Blower Company, the Buffalo Forge Company and the Plymouth Cordage Company.

"To complete the list would be impossible, for in many instances the establishments of these factories is not announced and not made a matter of official record. I find that up to January 1, 1913, approximately 175 American companies had established themselves.

"The American Blower Company, the principal competitor of the B. F. Sturtevant Company, built a great plant at Windsor, Ont., two years ago. Secretary of Commerce Redfield, until his appointment to the Cabinet, was vice president of the American Blower Company.

Investment of $279,000,000.

"The recorded amounts of capital invested in the American factories across the border is $279,000,000.

"In many instances the plants which our manufacturers are establishing in Canada are directly owned and financed by the parent concern in this country, and in some instances even the pay roll is met by weekly shipments of funds from the American parent concern to its branches in Canada.

"I believe it conservative to say that $500,000,000 has been poured into Canada for the upbuilding of plants owned in the United States. The development of Canada in the next 25 years will be greater than that of the United States.

Politicians Must Awake.

"The trouble with Republicans is that they are too selfish. The Democrats are going to the other extreme. The Democrats are giving away our markets and getting nothing in return.

"I have received many letters from business men commending me for my frankness, and I believe that my example in going to Canada will be followed by many others unless the politicians get busy before it is too late."

Anti-Barrow Men Take 'Kick' to McAdoo

WASHINGTON, July 17.—A delegation from Savannah arrived in Washington to-day to oppose the appointment of David C. Barrow as Collector of Customs at that port. Barrow is Senator Bacon's nominee. Senator Smith has not indicated whether he will agree to Barrow's confirmation if his name is sent to the Senate.

The opposition to Barrow is based on the ground that he is a lawyer, not a business man. Colonel M. J. O'Leary is the principal opposing candidate.

Police Hunt Leper Hiding Near Chicago

CHICAGO, July 17.—Somewhere in Chicago or a nearby city a leper is at large. Two weeks ago the case was reported to the Health Department by a physician on whom the man called. When health inspectors attempted to find him, they learned that he had gone to Gary Ind.

Authorities of Indiana and local police departments are making a search. Persons who have met the leprosy victim in Chicago and Gary are being watched for symptoms.

Neighbors Blamed For Cordele's Drunks

CORDELE, July 17.—In reply to a query from the Manufacturers and Merchants Association, for information on the moral condition of the city, Chief of Police Sumner reports that during 1912 there were 878 arrests, of which 186 were for drunkenness.

Though Cordele is a very "dry" town, the officer attributes most of the drunkenness to the fact that the railroad schedules are very convenient to surrounding towns, where beer and other intoxicants are sold almost "wide open."

Doctor Attacks Wife And Is Sent to Jail

Following an exciting affray Wednesday night when he tried to run his wife out of their home at 64 Currier street, Dr. Ira Delemater languishes Thursday in the city jail nursing several facial bruises, which some neighbor is credited with inflicting.

The doctor will be arraigned before Recorder Broyles Thursday afternoon.

He received other serious injuries. Physicians say he will recover, but will be disfigured for life.

House Favors Study A., B. & A. Purchase

A joint resolution calling for the appointment of a committee of two Senators and three Representatives to investigate the advisability of the State purchasing the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad was adopted by the House after an hour's debate Thursday. The vote was 91 to 41.

The resolution was introduced by Representative Paulk, of Ben Hill County. The committee will report to the present Legislature.

Society of Newport Shuns 'Rag' Dances

NEWPORT, July 17.—From a variety of causes the so-called "rag" dances are quietly falling into disrepute among the smart set and are being gradually abandoned in favor of the old-time "straight" dancing.

At the dinner dances given here this season there has been a marked tendency among the young married set, as well as those unmarried, to dance in a more decorous fashion than during the past season.

Russia Threatens Chinese Land Grab

PEKIN, July 17.—A scarcely veiled threat by Russia to annex 10,000 square miles of Chinese territory in Mongolia is contained in a note from St. Petersburg to the Russian Ambassador here to-day in reply to a communication informing the Russian Government that the Chinese Senate had voted down the proposed agreement with Russia regarding the autonomy of outer Mongolia.

COTTON STAGNANT THROUGHOUT DAY

Cooler Weather in West Offsets Giles' Bullish Report—Business Practically Nil.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Bullish figures in the Giles condition report helped the cotton market at the opening to-day and first prices were unchanged to 3 points higher than Wednesday's closing quotations, while the tone was steady. Cables were poor, but this was offset by the weather map. After the call the market eased off 1 to 3 points through absence of business, trading was light, as well as offerings, while the buying was scattered, but coming from large spot houses, resulted in prices working back to the initial level.

With the high temperatures in the western belt eliminated, the bull clique has now only the small stock of cotton here in their favor. Sentiment is extremely bearish, but the low price men are not inclined to push their commitments in such a quiet and narrow market.

At the close the market was steady with prices showing a net decline of 1 to 8 points, with the exception of July, which closed 1 point higher than the final quotations of Wednesday.

Warehouse stocks in New York to-day are 33,559 bales; certificated 28,142 bales.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 12.20; August, 12.08; October, 11.54; January, 11.39.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 17.—The map continued to present favorable conditions. Generally fair in the belt, except some cloudiness in the South central belt and along the Atlantic coast. Cooler in North Texas, Oklahoma and Western Arkansas. A few isolated showers in Mississippi and Georgia.

The best opinion from the Western States is that the present dry weather without any great excess in temperature is most favorable, giving the plant solidity, helping fruitage, promoting maturity and checking insect damage. Indications are for part cloudy to fair weather in the belt, the barometric lines are shaping for increasing cloudiness in the Northwestern portion with increased prospects for some precipitation over Sunday.

Liverpool came in rather disappointing with futures about 2 oints lower than due. Spot 2 points down; sales 10,000 bales. Letters from the best people there report a let-up in trade activity and express concern over the financial and labor situation.

Our market opened unchanged and remained in a waiting attitude around 11.57 for October. A New York observer says that a skillfully engineered crop scare is among the possibilities and borrowed trouble in the way of continued dry weather in Texas is the bull argument selected for the purpose. This explains the action of the New York market and shows the intentions existing in that quarter.

The into-sight for the week points to around 25,000, against 25,460 bales last year. We compare with 163,000 bales mill takings last year.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, July 17.—J. M. Anderson: "The market was firm early on the Giles report, showing a deterioration of 1.4 during the past two weeks, and on scattered short covering in July. Offerings, however, become freer on the slight advance and the market reacted, becoming extremely inactive after the first hour.

"Traders were disinclined to believe the Giles figures on the popular impression in that the crop has improved since the last Bureau report. We hear of another shipment of 4,000 bales out of the local stock, which will reduce it to 25,000 and this has a tendency to restrict sales and makes the market narrow."

* * *

Low temperatures.

* * *

The market was narrow, with scarcely any improvement in general business.

* * *

Continued drouth and high temperatures in Texas and Oklahoma was about the only argument the bulls had to offer on the production question yesterday. Now that high temperatures are eliminated, what are the bulls going to argue next?

* * *

Majority sentiment remains bearish, but the market is too small and trade too light for prices to get out of the rut.

* * *

Baruch was perhaps the best buyer yesterday early, but sold some in the afternoon. Mitchell, who is talking bullish, supports the market. Pell brokers bought a little and the Waldorf crowd, or what is left of it, apparently took on a little. Gifford, Wilson, McGhee, Black, McFadden, Rich and Flynn sold.

* * *

Bulls continued to predict higher prices, based on the small stocks in New York and the fear of boll weevil damage through the western belt.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma, clear and warm."

* * *

Estimates that the yield west of the Mississippi would exceed that of 1911 by 1,000,000 bales were current yesterday.

* * *

Montgomery, Ala., wires: "All our crop reports are one way—excellent. Weather could not be more favorable and cotton fruiting fine."

* * *

Beaumont, Tex.: "The cotton crop in this county will probably be the largest ever raised. So far there has been no appearance of insect pests, or other troubles, and the plants are blossoming, and in some instances setting bolls."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 17.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows very favorable, fair, distinctly cooler in North Texas, Oklahoma and Western Arkansas; fair over rest of the belt, except some cloudiness over the Atlantic Coast and Central Gulf districts; some showers in Mississippi and Florida. Indications are for increasing cloudiness in North Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Partly cloudy to fair over the rest of the belt.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Steadiness of the old crop deliveries (New Orleans July was traded in at between 12.48 and 12.51 all day yesterday, as against 12 7-16 for middling spots) and fear entertained by the talent as to the possible extent of the season's boll weevil damage inspired cotton market support, while war rumors from the Far East were used as an offset. The market being in the shadow of Washington's legislative threat, developed no enterprise. The talent awaited developments.

"Well within the range of possibility, the crop seems to be progressing toward a large yield. Whether it is to be 14,000,000, 15,000,000 or 16,0000,000 bales no man can now know. Bulls are convinced the latter figure is not attainable, because of the lateness of the start, the spotted character of some stands, and the unfavorable weather in the late spring over a large portion of the belt. Equally certain are the bears that the pointer is for a much larger crop than in 1912-1913.

"Meanwhile, there is far less evidence of forward buying by spinners than is usual at this time of the year. Foreign spinners are being told that hostile legislation in America will transfer cotton market control to Europe, consequently the foreign trade seems to be waiting in the expectation that lower raw cotton prices will rule."

Giles Report Shows Decrease of 1 Point

Miss Giles, the South's leading crop expert, makes the condition of the cotton crop as of June, 83.4 per cent, as compared with 84.8 per cent two weeks ago, against 83.9 a month ago and 80.4 per cent last year during the same period.

North Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas and Oklahoma show declines, while South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Louisiana and Tennessee show improvement.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 17.—The advance of yesterday appears to have eliminated much of the floating short interest and to-day's buying is less urgent. The market requires support on advances. A report showing loss in condition of 1.4 in two weeks passed unnoticed for the world is convinced that the crop is doing well. Decreasing stocks in New York prevent sales of summer months, wherein strength finds reflection in October. It is an indeterminate market.

STOCKS HESITATE AND HELD STEADY

Mexican Incident Causes Temporary Setback—Big Corn Crops Check Decline.

By CHAS. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 17.—Stocks were again off at the opening to-day, Canadian Pacific having the biggest decline with a loss of 1¼. Among the other losses were United States Steel common ¼, Union Pacific ⅜, Southern Pacific ⅛, Reading ½, Amalgamated Copper ¼, New York Central ¼, Erie ⅝, Chino Coper ⅛, Chesapeake and Ohio ¼, St. Paul ¼, Baltimore and Ohio ¼, American Smelting ½, American Can ¼.

New York banks shipped $1,500,000 of gold to Paris to-day, this making $8,000,000 gold shipped to the French market on the present movement.

The curb was quiet.

Americans in London were weak. Berlin sold Canadian Pacific.

Vigorous advances were made all through the list after the first half hour. The heaviest trading was in United States Steel, that stock making a gain of ⅞. There was not the same interest shown in Union Pacific, Reading and Amalgamated Copper. Reading and Copper made a ½ point advance, Union Pacific remaining unchanged. Petroleum recovered half of its 4-point loss.

Call money loaned at 2¼.

California Petroleum was again under pressure in the afternoon and in the last hour sold down to 24½ for a net loss of 4 points on the day. Reading sold around 158¾ for the loss of ½ from mid-day. Most of the other issues, however, held steady with fractional fluctuations either way.

The tone of the market at the close was steady and the market was dull. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

Government Probes Turpentine Market

SAVANNAH, GA., July 17.—Methods of marketing turpentine and rosins in Savannah, Fernandino, Jacksonville and Pensacola have recently been investigated by a representative of the United States Department of Justice, who was sent out in response to complaints made to the Department. It is understood some of the exporting interests complained that S. P. Shotter and the committee liquidating the American Naval Stores Company were selling the market short and in other ways endeavoring to manipulate prices.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Josephthal, Loucheim & Co.: We continue to advise sales on all strong spots.

Morris H. Rothschild & Co.: The market is in good position to respond easily to unfavorable conditions.

Logan & Bryan: A higher range of values is not at all unlikely.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: This is the normal season for crop scares and the market is likely to be feverish while uncertainty over the crop lasts.

Miller & Co.: A skillfully engineered crop scare is therefore among the possibilities and a further advance likely.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Washington announces that the official exports of wheat and flour from the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30 equaled 147,000,000 bushels, against 78,000,000 bushels the previous season. Exports of wheat alone were 91,461,000, against 28,668,000 bushels last year. Exports of corn were 48,307,000, compared with 39,402,000 bushels the previous season.

"While sentiment is generally bearish on wheat, conservative people advise against short sales, except on sharp bulges, and more operators are disposed to work on the long side on breaks than of late. Some of the shrewdest traders in corn are looking for a bulge unless rain comes in the Southwest today or to-morrow. Some of the closest observers of weather conditions say they would not be surprised to see a big storm develop in the Southwest in the next few days."

* * *

Minneapolis wheat stock decreased 580,000 bushels in three days.

Cotton seed oil prices are now over the 9-cent level, the highest in years.

STOCK GOSSIP

It looks as if prices would be a little lower this morning on account of the Mexican situation. I would buy stocks on any weakness, especially Union Pacific and Reading. Favor the conservative side for the long pull.—G. D. Potter.

American stocks in London weak, generally ⅛d to ⅝d lower.

* * *

Specialists in Government bonds point out that under the provision of the currency bill it would be impossible for banks to acquire additional bonds carrying the circulation security for circulating notes. The obvious effect of cash deposits to protect circulating notes would be to accentuate the existing stringency of the money market.—New York Commercial.

* * *

Union Pacific, Southern Pacific and Reading were strong issues to-day and much higher prices are predicted at the end of the week. Steel and Copper was also in good demand. Content; bought about 1,500 Steel.

* * *

Although the market shows some hesitation, prices held well, and it is apparent there has been good support by large interests to-day. Every day of good weather brings us nearer to the harvesting of a big corn crop, which means prosperity for our farmers and large earnings for our railroads. The Mexican incident may cause a temporary recession, but in our opinion stocks accumulated on weak spots will show satisfactory profits.—G. D. Potter.

CHICAGO, July 17.—There was little change shown in the wheat market at the opening this morning, but the undercurrent was one of strength. Liverpool was easier on the better weather in Argentina and the bearish report as issued by The Daily Trade Bulletin of Chicago.

Argentine shipments for this week are estimated at 800,000 bushels.

Northwestern and Winnipeg cars were considerably in excess of a year ago.

Corn was again higher on continued hot weather throughout the belt and no prospects of immediate relief.

Oats were ¼c better.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, July 17.—The cotton seed oil market moved into new high ground to-day, with trading broad and active. Rumors that Europe was in the market, together with good buying by refiners, served to run shorts to cover and speculative demand for new crop months is on the increase, encouraged by the big discount under near months. The strength in lard and continued good demad for compound also were contributing factors in the advance.

Dissolution U. P.-S. P. Won't Effect U. P.-O. C

CHICAGO, July 17.—Dissolution of the Union and Southern Pacific Railroads will not affect the relations between the Union Pacific and the Illinois Central, according to a statement to-day by C. H. Markham, President of the Illinois Central.

"The Union Pacific owns a large block of stock in the Illinois Central," said President Markham, "and our relations with the two roads are not changed in any way. The Illinois Central will operate as it has in the past."

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Some Good Advice For Beginners and Back Yard Breeders

Don't Overcrowd Conditions for it Certainly Will Mean Disease.

By JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL.

There is but little trouble in getting started with a back-yard flock. That is all easy enough; but when fully started, the question is getting stopped at the right time or point in the game. Very many persons become interested in poultry in a small way and decide to handle it in their back yard, which is all right. They become more interested as the game goes on, and the tendency is to raise all the stock that they can, not taking into consideration the possibility of overdoing the matter by getting too many on he place for the room there is to handle them. The first season usually runs pretty well, but at the end of the second season is usually about where the rub comes in. The crowded condition shows itself on every hand. You know, there is a limit to almost everything, and particularly to the room of a back yard. When one gets his place full of growing chicks, there is expansion upon every hand. A lot of growing chicks can fill up all the available coops on a place about as fast as anything one can think of, and if something is not done to relieve the congestion, there is bound to be trouble. Crowding means disease. The question comes, then, as to what to do with them. It must be a system of culling. One of the first thing a back-lotter should learn is the system of successful culling. We know how hard it is for an enthusiastic breeder or fancier to begin to dispose of a part of his flock. Of course, there are a few that are veritable culls that anyone can cull out with ease, but after such are disposed of then the real rub comes. As one back-yard breeder has well said, it is a matter of culling from the beginning of the year to the close thereof. Other things being equal, the breeder who is the most successful at culling is the most successful in his ultimate results. Many have said, "We never thought about culling." The successful merchant understands the culling process; he is at it all the time. If it is not one department, it is another. He must have the room and the clean line of stock. If he does not do this, his business will suffer from disease. His may be whatis termed "dry rot," but it is disastrous just the same. Yours will work ruin quicker, no doubt. It is simply a survival of the fittest. If you do not show your hand in the plan of the fittest, nature will do it in a much less satisfactory way—that of killing them off.

This question of culling is quite a difficult one for the novice, yet it is one that must be mastered, and one that will be a better schooling for the one who desires to learn than anything he can do. The very day his young chicks get old enough to show any feathers of distinction or type worth considering he should begin to study them and cull them in his mind, so that by the time they are old enough to kill or sell for broilers he will be ready to make the selection of what he should get rid of. At such a time he may sell all those that show decided irregularities and reduce the flock a good deal, at the same time keeping an eye out for those that will make the best breeders for his work the coming season. He can also get rid of hens that have not measured up to what they should in their breeding or laying qualities. This should be done as soon as the laying season is over for the spring rush. The breeder must keep well to the front all the while the very great importance of vigorous stock, and look well to the healthy body as well as the fine feathers in selecting for breeders, for fine feathers will do but little good on a debilitated frame. If you are raising stock to sell for breeding purposes, it should be your aim to keep such stock moving at almost all seasons of the year. As soon as it is old enough to select in the early fall, put some little squibs in the papers telling the people about your rapidly developing stock and of how much more they will get for their money if it is invested now than later after you have cared for it so long. It is a mighty good proposition for both parties, too, to make these early trades.

It is not a question of how many you can raise, but how many can you keep. Never become tempted to take up but one variety at a time if you would be successful. More poultry enthusiasts have become stranded on the rock of too many breeds than perhaps any other one thing. It is absolutely dangerous, and you should by all means curb your ambitions along that line. There is not so much difference in the quality of the different breeds. You can make a success of any of them if you set your head that way. Do not try to breed something good from a whole lot of hens and a male or two turned together. Take the trouble to yard them off, even if in small or movable yards, and but a few fowls in each, and mark the chicks from them so you will know what you are doing. In that way you can soon tell the good breeders from the poor ones, and cull accordingly.

H. G. White to Lead Atlanta Realty Men

Committee's Choice, Says Report. California Home Sold—Bungalow at Brookwood—Church Buys.

The name of Harris G. White, vice president of the Atlanta Real Estate Board, it was learned authoritatively Thursday, will be presented Friday night by the nominating committee in connection with the presidency of the board to succeed Charles P. Glover, the retiring president. The meeting will be at the Cafe Durand at 6:30 o'clock. Selection by the nominating committee is equivalent to an election, and Mr. White's name is said to have been decided on at a recent conference. Several other names were considered, but Mr. White's position as vice president and his interest in the affairs of the board caused him to be given the preference.

Mr. White was formerly with the Ralph O. Cochran agency, first on South Broad street, and then in the Empire Life Building, when he went into business for himself in the Grant Building. He is a popular real estate operator and known as one of the most successful salesmen in the city.

Sells California Residence.

Dr. J. L. McDaniel, formerly of Atlanta and now of Los Angeles, Cal., has bought from a client of M. L. Petty a seven-room residence at No. 6973 Converse avenue, Los Angeles, for $5,500.

Wilbanks for a client for $4,000. The latter property consists of a two-story eight-room house on a 43-by-150-foot lot at the southeast corner of Oakland street.

To Build on Brookwood Lot.

Edward L. Traynham has bought through E. V. Moore, of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, a 50 by 200 foot lot on the south side of Brookwood Drive, near Peachtree, for $2,500, and will erect a handsome bungalow which he will occupy.

Church Adds to Lot.

Colonel W. L. Peel and others, trustees of St. Mark's Church, southeast corner of Peachtree and Fifth streets, have bought from John A. Boykin a 40 by 90 foot lot adjoining the east line of the church property on East Fifth street, for $7,000. The trade was made July 14 and papers have gone to record.

Whitehall Street Conveyance.

William H. Roane has bought from the Georgia Realty Company 467 Whitehall street, 79 1-3 by 215 feet, for $19,225. This property is on the west side of the street between McDaniel and Humphries streets, and was purchased recently from Methvin T. Salter for $19,000.

Peachtree Hills Place Sales.

Eugene Southwick has bought from the American Securities Company of Georgia lots 37 and 38, block 2, and lot 7, block 9, of the Peachtree Hills Place subdivision, and has transferred them to Vera Southwick. The total consideration was $2,400.

A new bungalow is going up in this subdivision.

Road Work Completed.

County convicts are just completing the paving of Confederate avenue with macadam from the Soldiers' Home to Moreland avenue, as well as work on Lynes avenue and the short street leading to the Burns Club.

Confederate avenue at this point is 60 feet wide, and, taken with South and North Moreland avenues, makes one of the best drives in the county. Moreland avenue leads into Druid Hills, and the drive southward to the Soldiers' Home is about three miles. South Moreland is paved with macadam and North Moreland with bitulithic material.

South Side Meeting.

The South Side Improvement Club committee will meet Thursday night at 8 o'clock at McCord Brothers' grocery store, corner of South Pryor street and Georgia avenue, to discuss some important matters concerning the widening, recurbing and repaving of South Pryor from Georgia avenue to Ridge avenue. All those interested in the movement are expected to be present.

Complication in Lease.

Complications in a valuable central lease have arisen, and announcement of new arrangements for certain concerns which were figuring on the property will not be forthcoming for some time. In the meantime, agents are working on other interesting leases, and it is probable that several new locations for firms will be made known within the week.

Gain in Realty Sales.

Comparisons of realty figures for the twenty-eighth week of 1913 with the same period in 1912 shows a substantial gain in realty transfers, both in number and in amount. The total in 1913 was 209, and $867,760, as against 201, and $563,040. Such figures are proving the contention of real estate men that small sales are as active as ever, and perhaps more so, since they have taken the place, more or less, of the large ones.

People borrowed only $116,263 in the period of 1913, whereas they had to borrow $129,832 in 1912.

Cancellations were almost as heavy in 1913 as in 1912.

Building permits fell off somewhat, but builders are expected to surpass 1912 next week.

Completion of Crematory.

The city crematory on Hulsey street, which represents an investment of $260,000, is practically finished. The three burners will require several days to dry out, but Sanitary Chief Jentzen hopes to have one of them in operation by Monday.

What IS an Opportunity for the Young Man?

There Are More Real Opportunities To-day Than Ever

(Copyright, 1913.)

We have received many letters from young men recently complaining of lack of opportunities. One in particular asked this question:

"Are the opportunities for the young man in the present day and generation equal to what they were twenty-five or fifty years ago—the days of his father and grandfather?"

It is a question that is probably asked in this country thousands of times every day. It is an important question to the individual. It is especially important to the nation. For the nation declines in which opportunities for the young diminish.

We feel that we can conscientiously and positively say that REAL opportunities are better to-day, both for young men and young women, than they ever have been.

Opportunities are greater BECAUSE POSSIBILITIES ARE GREATER.

Science, machinery, organization of all kinds, especially widespread publicity, have put into men's hands in less than fifty years a power undreamed of in the boyhood of our grandfathers.

Humanity and the individual are powerful, and their opportunities are great, in proportion to the machinery at their command.

Our opportunities were never so great as now, but this statement is made assuming that our correspondent means real and worthy opportunities.

Unfortunately, in this country, where sudden prosperity, great extravagance and uneasiness as to the future make money all-important, the word "opportunity" is apt to be a synonym for money. Money and opportunity are taken to mean the same thing.

But we purpose to answer this question quite apart from money.

Undoubtedly, the very able money-getter, no matter how humble his start, can build up to-day such a fortune an was unknown fifty years ago—or twenty-five years ago. There are young men without a penny that will earn (or, rather, more or less honestly ACCUMULATE) their hundreds of millions in the next few years, before the common sense of the country shall have realized the importance of regulating accumulation through increased distribution.

There will be, perhaps, fewer small, middle-class fortunes piled up, for there will be fewer men in business on their own account, thanks to the trusts.

Many men will earn very large salaries, ranging from $150,000 a year downward, and there will probably be very many more large INCOMES in the land within the next twenty-five years than there were in the last twenty-five years.

But when men earn SALARIES, they do not keep their money, and of the middle-class fortunes we shall have fewer.

But we trust that our correspondent will agree with us that money is a pretty mean measurement for opportunity.

What do the merely rich men really amount to? When they have been dead two or three years they are as unknown and forgotten as the pigs and chickens that they ate, the horses that they drove, or the flunkies whose time they wasted.

Opportunity means A CHANCE TO DO SOMETHING WORTH WHILE.

And we assure our correspondent that the young man of to-day has a greater chance to do something worth while than a young man has ever had in the history of this country.

Our form of government is changing; the power has practically passed from the hands of the majority of the people into the hands of a majority of trust stockholders.

The young man who has genius and force, the ability to lead, and the character to refuse his share of the spoils, has a great opportunity to-day. It is the opportunity to return the government to the hands of those who are governed.

Working scientists are needed and sadly lacking in all the great departments of human thought. Every one of these new fields of intellectual activity, research and discovery offers unlimited opportunities to young men.

The newspapers, read by millions of human beings every day, enable the man who can think intelligently, the man who will be sincere and interesting at the same time to address (and, if he is able, to convince) a million or two millions of his fellow-citizens every day in the year. Was there ever a greater opportunity than this for influencing the thoughts of other men?

Every page of a scientific newspaper will show to the young man a glorious opportunity.

Every phase of our great industrial organization, every new development in the struggle of manhood against money, offers to the young man a great opportunity for public service.

The horrible poverty and wretchedness in the great cities, contrasting with ignorant and ostentatious wealth, offer opportunities unlimited to him who would help the poor to help themselves, to him able to cajole or frighten the rich into doing their duty.

This is the age of opportunity, but the young man must think for himself, strike out on his own line, make up his mind what to do, and stick at it, INSTEAD OF FOLLOWING ALONG THE USUAL LINES OF LEAST RESISTANCE, doing the same as everybody else does, keeping at nothing in particular, and then wondering what has become of the world's opportunities.

The Metal Workers

From the Savage Who Raked From the Ashes a Crude Ball of Molten Mineral and Slag, With Which He Formed a Weapon of Defense, to the Safety Razor and Automobile, Metal is Supreme.

By ELBERT HUBBARD

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

II.

SOON after the British Parliament passed a law forbidbidding the cutting down of trees for fuel, Sir Walter Raleigh's expedition—in 1585—discovered iron in this country, and in 1608 a cargo of ore was shipped from Virginia to England and successfully smelted. In 1644, the first ironworks was erected near Lynn, Mass.

In, 1740, Huntsman introduced the crucible process, and various mechanical devices were patented about that time, which materially stimulated the steel industry.

Bessemer's Process.

In 1838, the invention of J. B. Nielson—the introduction of a heated blast—caused a tremendous increase in output. This improvement was accompanied by Nasmyth's steam hammer, and in 1856 Bessemer gave to the world a process that was astonishing and remarkable. The discovery of the Bessemer process made it possible to produce steel at such low cost as to extend its use widely, and did much to supersede wrought iron in structural work.

Bessemer steel is now almost universally used for steel rails. The open-hearth system of Martin and Thomas, with the regenerative gas furnace of Siemens, supplies steel that is used in enormous quantities for all purposes.

Lately, science has again prevailed, and in the products of White and Taylor and Robert Hadfield we have steel that combines great malleableness with great hardness—a hardness that retains its cutting power even when at red heat.

And so we go marching on. From the savage who in wonder raked from the ashes of his fire a crude ball of molten mineral and slag, with which he formed a weapon of defense, to the safety-razor and the automobile of the twentieth century citizen, metal is supreme.

Carbon and Iron.

Steel is made by combining a certain proportion of carbon with iron.

The process determines its value and variety.

The most important of these processes are cementation, Bessemer and open hearth.

The first system consists of placing wrought iron between layers of charcoal in firebrick retorts. Yellow heat is applied for a certain period until the required grade of steel is obtained by the addition of the necessary carbon.

This is the steel from which edged tools are made.

The Bessemer process is directly opposite in principle to the cementation process. The Bessemer burns the carbon out of the cast iron.

This is done in an egg-shaped furnace known as a converter, lined with firebrick, and capable of being tilted. At the bottom, a number of tuyeres or nozzles conduct the air from a powerful blowing machine through the molten metal. This burns out the silicon and carbon, and after the alloy has been added and thoroughly mixed the metal is poured into ladles, and thence to casting molds.

The ingots are reheated and rolled into the forms desired for use.

In the open-hearth system, steel is made from a mixture of pig-iron and scrap-iron or steel, which is melted by direct contact with the flame in a regenerative gas furnace.

Steel Everywhere.

To follow these different processes—to see the ore—cold, dead stones—transformed into things of utility and beauty is a revelation and an education. We realize that the Missable Range and your wire fence are associated by applied gas. Steel is everywhere.

Circus horses, farm horses wear it for shoes. Wire rope in elevators, and in ships and mines—the telegraph and telephone wires, and all kinds of electrical wires—from the ignition wire in the automobile to the submarine cable. Aeroplane plates, boiler plates and castings. We sleep on steel springs and shave with a "safety."

We use nails and tacks, and the shafting for machinery is nothing more or less than big round wire!

We see all these things in the manufactured goods.

We talk of the tone of our piano, we boast of the wonderful speed, endurance and economy of up-keep of our autos.

We speak of cheap and rapid transportation; of our spring beds, our easy shave.

But do we ever asvociate these things with the men in the mills? I hope so.

:: Light and Candle-Power :-:

By THOMAS TAPPER

THERE are about 1,500,000,000 people on the earth.

Most of them are intent on getting.

A few are intent on giving.

The dynamo sends power along its lines of conductivity, and all the electric bulbs pour out light, each according to its candle-power.

If each of these bulbs was independent, if it could think and move for itself, the efficiency of the plant might fall considerably, for the individual bulb would then begin to act like a man.

Instead of remaining an agent for the distribution of power, it would be inspired by the ideas of the majority to let up on giving and to specialize on getting.

We can imagine a bulb throwing out its chest and wanting things. It might take a fancy to get a corner on dust and ashes. These are possessions through which the power can not shine; and while the bulb might easily work up a corner, it would soon find itself short on its main business of shedding light freely, plentifully and without obscuration.

Both Science and Religion are fairly agreed that a man is the end point of a line of conductivity which is attached to the great dynamo of the life of the universe.

He must be, then, by nature a distributor of the power that the dynamo sends into him.

HE HAS NO BUSINESS TO OBSCURE his light and weaken his force with the dust and ashes of life, for then the radiance will not shine through him.

HIS BUSINESS IS TO POUR OUT upon the world around him the great supply of power that flows into him.

This power, like electricity, plays many parts.

He can send it out as work-power, love, sympathy, generosity, health and so on through the whole list of things worth while.

And by so doing he is fulfilling his one natural function. He is strengthening himself for all time (now and forever) simply by using his power in the right direction.

In short, he has an advantage over the electric light bulbs, for he can use his candle-power to the limit, and by so doing increase it, instead of burning out the filament.

:-: MISTAKES :-:

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

GOD sent us here to make mistakes,
To strive, to fail, to re-begin,
To taste the tempting fruit of sin,
And find what bitter food it makes.

To miss the path, to go astray,
To wander blindly in the night;
But, searching, praying for the light,
Until at last we find the way.

And looking back along the past,
We know we needed all the strain
Of fear and doubt and strife and pain
To make its value peace at last.

Who fails, finds later triumph sweet;
Who stumbles once, walks then with care,
And knows the place to cry "beware"
To other unaccustomed feet.

Through strife the slumbering soul awakes,
We yearn on error's troubled route
The truths we could not prize without
The sorrow of our sad mistakes.
