SUSPICION TURNED TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk. Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full-flare upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected assertion last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are rife in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, timekeeper of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty intoxicated on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 2 in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember anyone whom he saw during that time to bear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 6 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 6 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; this also has not been established. Conley states he stayed there the remainder of the night.

According to the new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday instead of Friday, as he claims, and not on anybody's dictation. It is further argued that, in order to ingratiate himself with the law, he made his confession when he thought that the case against Frank was clinched—that his story was the product of his own imagination.

Conley's delay in making this confession until Frank's indictment seemed likely is another link against him.

His detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, shows premeditation on the negro's part, it is argued, and further that the story was conceived by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's childish brain was not capable of making it strong enough to withstand rigid investigation.

E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman of the National Pencil factory, seen to-day by a Georgian reporter, said he was confident the negro, Conley, under arrest as a the Mary Phagan murder mitted the crime.

Holloway told the re- when he came to work here about one year ago, was a pretty good negro. We had no trouble with him for about two months. Then Jim got drunk. He had been running the elevator and we were afraid to trust him afterward. We then put him to work sweeping in the trimming department. Here Conley was closely associated with the girls. He used to move their chairs when he was sweeping. Conley was the only negro allowed in this department.

"Jim got so bad he used to carry whisky with him in his pocket. Several times he was caught by employees taking a drink. This was not known by the management until after the murder of Mary Phagan.

Drunk in Factory.

"About one week before the crime was committed the forelady of the trimming and finishing department, Miss Eulah May Flowers, went to the top floor of the building to look over the stock of boxes. When Conley was not sweeping he was supposed to fill the box bins with boxes. When Miss Flowers moved toward the bin to look in she stumbled over a form. She screamed and fell back. It was Conley. He was dead drunk. Miss Flowers tried to wake him up, but was unable.

"On the morning of the Coroner's investigation, Thursday after the murder, when the plant was shut down because we all were called to the investigation, I testified and went back to the factory. As I entered the metal department I heard a splashing in the cooling tank. There was Conley washing his shirt. When I entered he was very much startled and tried to hide the shirt by trying to drop it through a crack in the floor. It was a blue shirt and I saw no bloodstains, for he had evidently been washing it for some time as it was pretty clean.

"This is the first time in the year that Jim Conley worked here that he ever washed his clothes here.

"Now, I don't say Conley was degenerate enough to commit a crime so terrible when he was sober, but I am thoroughly convinced that he

T. R. HOTLY DENIES HE EVER WAS DRUNK

Shouts Denial That Bull Moose Party Is Paying Cost of His $10,000 Libel Suit.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 27.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt to-day took the stand in his suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore. Colonel Roosevelt denied emphatically that he ever drank intoxicating liquors to excess as charged in the editorial that resulted in his $10,000 libel suit.

He said he did not drink beer or whisky, except under the direction of a doctor, but admitted that he some times drank light wines.

He related briefly his career up to the time the editorial from The Iron Ore was brought to him as he lay in a hospital in Chicago, after having been wounded by a would-be assassin in Milwaukee.

Says Editorial Angered Him.

"I was very indignant," said the colonel, "when the editorial was shown me."

The former President mounted the stand after a stormy few minutes during which Attorney Pound, representing the plaintiff, was interrupted frequently by Attorney Belden while making his opening statement. Attorney Belden, Newett's counsel, declined to make his statement until after the testimony was taken.

Colonel Roosevelt took the stand at 9:30 o'clock this morning.

Replying to questions regarding his life and career, he said he was born in New York City, completed his studies at Harvard in 1880, was elected to the New York Legislature in 1881, appointed New York civil service commissioner in 1887, police commissioner of New York City in 1890, elected Lieutenant Governor in 1894, resigning in 1897 to become lieutenant colonel of the Rough Riders in the Spanish-American war, being promoted to colonel after the battle of Santiago.

Tells of War Service.

Strenuous objection was made by the defense to Roosevelt's replies regarding the number of times he was under fire in the Spanish-American war, but the court overruled them and the former President continued his story, declaring he was under fire many times, more particularly at San Juan Hill.

He told of his election as Governor of New York in 1898; as Vice President of the United States in 1900; his succession to the White House in 1901 when President McKinley was assassinated, and his election to the Presidency in 1904.

Colonel Roosevelt then testified as follows:

Q. What did you do on the expiration of your term in 1909?—A. I went to Africa as special curator for the Smithsonian Institution and spent several months there in research work. Returning home, I became connected with the "Outlook."

Q. Where were you in October, 1912?—A. What part of that month? Cite an incident to remind me.

Q. Have you ever seen this paper?—(The colonel was shown a copy of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.) A. Yes, in October, 1912.

Copy of Paper Admitted.

Q. Where were you?—A. In Mercy Hospital.

Q. What city? (Attorney Belden objected. The court overruled the objection and allowed an exception.) A. In Chicago.

Q. Why were you there?—A. I had been shot.

Q. In what city?—A. In Milwaukee.

(Attorney Pound here introduced a copy of the paper in evidence and it was admitted without objection.)

Q. How did you feel when you read the editorial, "The Roosevelt Way?"—A. I was very indignant.

At this point Attorney Pound read the editorial, stating that action was based on the following:

What Caused the Suit.

Florida Mob Tries To Lynch Head of Negro Pythians

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 27.—When a Jacksonville-New Orleans train pulled into Milton, 20 miles east of here, last night a mob of 75 men met the train and demanded S. W. Green, of New Orleans, chancellor of the negro Knights of Pythias, who was occupying a Pullman drawing room. He was only saved by the interference of Sheriff Harvell and deputies, of Santa Rosa County.

Green bought a Pullman ticket from Jacksonville to New Orleans. Several mobs met the train along the route before it reached Milton, but did not find him. At Milton, Green, seeing the mob, attempted to escape.

Green is now in jail at Milton for safe keeping and charged with violating the "jim crow" law.

He barely escaped a mob at DeFuniak on May 18 while going from New Orleans to Jacksonville.

Flagler's Son Gets $5,000,000; Bulk of Big Estate to Widow

JOCKSONVILLE, FLA., May 27.—Henry M. Flagler's will was filed for probate at St. Augustine to-day. It disposes of an estate valued at $60,000,000. His son Harry, is given 5,000 shares of Standard Oil of New Jersey stock, valued at $5,000,000.

Colleges, churches and other organizations and a number of personal friends get bequests.

J. R. Parrott is to remain at the head of the Florida East Coast as long as he desires.

Noted Woodmen to Visit Atlanta Camps

Two Woodmen of national reputation from Omaha, Nebr., will arrive here at noon Tuesday. They are Joseph Cullen Root, sovereign commander, and John T. Yates, sovereign secretary of the Omaha order.

The local camps and Georgia head officials of the order will escort the visitors to the Piedmont Hotel. A reception at Cable H[illegible] Tuesday night will be given by J. C. Root Camp No. 80, assisted by other camps in the city, and State officials of the order.

Sunday, June 1, is the annual Memorial Day of the Woodmen of the World.

LOCAL TEAM EASY FOR FRANK'S BOYS

Chappelle Hit Hard by Visiting Batters When Wallops Mean Tallies.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, May 27.—The Pelicans hit Chappelle hard this afternoon and defeated the Crackers, 8 to 2 in a listless contest.

Bill Smith's men secured an early lead when Wallie Smith clouted a home run in the second, but Spencer later duplicated Smith's performance by putting one over the right field fence.

Swindell twirled for the Pels and was hit hard. He, however, managed to tighten in the pinches. Long and Welchonce both secured three hits.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Hendryx grounded out to Agler. Atz singled to left. Clancy flied to Long. Breen hoisted to Welchonce. NO RUNS.

Long singled to right. Welchonce beat out a bunt to Snedecor. The Pelican first baseman fielded the ball and threw wild to Atz, who covered first, and Long went to third. Alperman grounded to Atz, who touched second, forcing Welchonce and doubled Alperman at first. Long should have scored on the play, but went to sleep at third instead. Bailey out, Atz to Snedecor. NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Spencer walked. Williams tried to bunt, but instead lined out to Chappelle and Spencer was doubled at first to Agler. Snedecor fanned. NO RUNS.

Wallie Smith opened for Atlanta with a clean home run to deep center field. Bisland grounded to Swindell and was out to Snedecor. Agler popped to Spencer. Dunn fanned. ONE RUN.

THIRD INNING.

Adams out, Smith to Agler. Swindell went out, Smith to Agler. Hendryx fanned. NO RUNS.

Chappelle out, Atz to Snedecor. Long slipped a single over Swindell's head. Welchonce singled to center and Long took second. Alperman popped to Clancy. Bailey grounded to Clancy and Welchonce was forced at second to Atz. NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Atz singled to left. Clancy fanned. Breen popped to Smith. Spencer drove the ball over the sign in right field for a home run, scoring Atz ahead of him. Williams fouled out to Smith. TWO Smith singled through Swindell. Bisland sacrificed, Swindell to Snedecor. On a wild pitch Smith took third. Agler walked. Dunn grounded to Atz and Agler was forced to Clancy. Smith scored on the out. Chappelle out, Clancy to Snedecor. ONE RUN.

FIFTH INNING.

Snedecor out, Bisland to Agler. Adams went out, Chappelle to Agler. Swindell out, Alperman to Agler. NO RUNS.

Long singled over Swindell's head. Welchonce singled to right and Long went to third. Alperman flied to Hendryx and Long was doubled at the plate to Adams. Welchonce stole second. Bailey walked. Smith flied to Hendryx. NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

Hendryx fanned. Atz popped to Agler, but Joe missed the ball and Atz was safe at first. Clancy fouled to Agler. Breen slammed a double to right and Atz tallied. Spencer hit one to Alperman too hot to handle, the ball hit Whitey in the head and Breen registered. Williams popped to Dunn. TWO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

Snedecor hit a high fly, the ball falling safely between Chappelle and Agler. Adams sacrificed, Chappelle to Agler. Swindell singled to right and Snedecor took third. Hendryx singled to left and Snedecor scored. Atz walked. Clancy singled to center and Swindell and Hendryx tallied. On a passed ball Atz took third and Clancy scored. Breen fouled out to Dunn. Spencer fouled to Agler. THREE RUNS.

Long popped to Hendryx. Welchonce popped to Spencer. Rohe, batting for Alperman, flied to Hendryx. NO RUNS.

EIGHTH INNING.

Williams out, Smith to Agler. Snedecor out, Smith to Agler. Adams fanned. NO RUNS.

Bailey walked. Smith grounded to Swindell and Bailey was forced at second to Atz. Bisland flied to Hendryx. Agler flied to Breen. NO RUNS.

NINTH INNING.

Swindell singled past third Hendryx grounded to Chappelle and Swindell was forced at second to Bisland. Atz fouled to Agler. Hendryx stole second. On a passed ball Hendryx took third. Clancy singled to right and Hendryx scored. Clancy stole second and went out trying to steal third, Chappelle to Smith. ONE RUN.

Dunn went out, Clancy to Snedecor. Price, batting for Chappelle, went out, Williams to Snedecor. Long walked. Long stole second. Welchonce flied to Breen. NO RUNS.

OFFERS BEAVERS LIST OF "OPEN HOUSES"

Attorney Carl Hutcheson, Felder's Aide, Also Accuses Police of Protecting Vice.

Ignoring the fresh volley of charges made by Carl Hutcheson, an attorney, who offers to cite reports which are allowed to operate by the city police, Chief Beavers Tuesday morning reiterated his declaration that the entire matter would be laid bare before the Grand Jury for decision.

Detective Chief Lanford revealed another angle of the warfare when he declared that the fight being made against him was backed by the gambling ring of Atlanta. C. C. Jones was named as the leader of the opposition in this fight.

Beavers in commenting upon Hutcheson's charges, declared that they were inspired by Thomas B. Felder, with whose office Hutcheson is connected, and that the attack was not therefore that of Hutcheson, but of Felder and his "gang."

Hutcheson, a young lawyer connected with the firm Felder, Anderson, Whitman & Dillon, wrote an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers, charging him with permitting unlawful houses to operate on certain city streets and promising to give addresses if the Chief asks personally for them within three days.

Beavers to Ignore Attack.

Characterizing Carl Hutcheson as of too little importance to warrant an answer to his charges made against the police force, Chief Beavers declared that he would ignore him altogether.

"I don't care to answer Hutcheson's attack," said the police official. "Hutcheson is too small a fry to even take notice of. An answer to him would give him too much dignity. This young man is in Felder's office and is merely being used as a tool of Felder and his gang. Felder prompted him to make the statement that he did, and so I will pay no attention to Hutcheson.

Regarded as Reply.

On Monday morning Chief Beavers declared Attorney Thomas B. Felder had no evidence of police cognizance of immoral resorts; that he never had had any, and that he was only bluffing when he said he had. Requested to reply, Colonel Felder announced he would make no more statements except in writing, and that he had nothing to say then.

A few hours later Mr. Hutcheson, a member of Colonel Felder's firm, issued the letter, which is regarded as a semi-official reply from Colonel Felder.

Mr. Hutcheson formerly was a newspaper man. Shortly after taking up the practice of law he achieved State-wide renown by conducting the campaign of William Schley Howard, who defeated Representative Leonidas Livingston and is now serving his second term in Congress.

Following is Mr. Hutcheson's open letter to Chief J. L. Beavers:

Scores Vice Crusade.

J. L. Beavers, Chief of Police, Atlanta:

Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives, Atlanta:

In your great crusade against Sodom and Gomorrah with your immaculate robes of Puritanism,

I accuse you in all your glory with allowing certain houses on Ivy Street, the business of which is to barter in immoral and indecent practices, to continue in flagrant operation. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, every sensible citizen of this city, who knows anything of the world, does. If you do not know these things, it is your duty to know, and you should be discharged from your high pedestals for dereliction.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on certain parts of Spring Street, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate in a certain section of Pryor Street, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on a certain section of Central Avenue, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of failing to take cognizance of a certain house in Ivy Street, to which I called your attention several weeks ago, where young men were inveigled to gamble away their money, the mistress thereof being the banker and the recipient of these ill-gotten gains. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you and numbers of your forces with being cognizant of these facts, and yet you, the great crusade leaders, stand idly by and fold your lordly hands.

I accuse you with allowing, even yet, low class hotels in this city to exist and practice their nefarious games of lowly gain, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

If you can not "turn up" these places, there are hundreds of people who can. I can use infantile detective work and turn up dozens of them within a few days. AND YOU KNOW THIS CAN BE DONE. And, if you fail to get busy and continue to parade your great genius (?) you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Charges Police Protection.

I accuse you with protecting these places because of your lax methods in keeping "the houses within our midst" closed, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of closing Manhattan Avenue and converting our entire municipality into a "red light" district. AND YOU KNOW IT, and unless you change conditions at once you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of retaining on your forces men unfit to protect the "decent" citizens of Atlanta, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of knowing where numbers of houses which exist by immoral practices are located, AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Do you think that the public will be hoodwinked forever? Do you think that the public is so gullible as to believe all of this "bush-wah" about the great work that you are continuing? Yes, you closed Manhattan Avenue, but what did you do for the remainder of the city?

You and your bunch are very sore because you were unable to ferret out the Phagan murder, AND YOU KNOW IT. When the Solicitor General called in outside aid, numbers of your hirelings were very much perturbed and became insanely jealous. That is why all of this patched-up and hatched-up bunch of lies and slanders have been issued against Thomas B. Felder, whose shoes you are unworthy to untie, AND YOU KNOW IT.

I accuse you of retaining a large number of leather-heads for detectives. Detectives? That is a joke, isn't it? AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for allowing such an army of incompetents to work with your departments. You know, and I know, that these fellows secure their offices through political pull and not through efficiency. They are Sherlock Holmeses when it comes to arresting blind tigers and negro crap-players, but beyond that they would not know a clew if they saw it tagged.

In the Phagan case, the newspaper men are the ones who turned up the first clews of any merit, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be ashamed of that crowd down there to allow the members of the Fourth Estate to put one over on you; but you know newspaper men have brains, and brains are required to make detectives.

Now, roller forth again your promulgation of purity and tell the people of this great city what large men you are and how you protect the citizenry of this great Commonwealth.

If you haven't the addresses of the houses to which I refer, call at my office within three days and I will give you a bunch of them.

Friends of mine have advised me against printing this card. Some have feared for my life—but afraid of you and your crowd? Never. I am not afraid of anything that lays down its firearms and comes at me like a man in fair play. Now, "lay on, MacDuff, and damn'd be him who first cries, 'Hold! Enough!'"

CARL HUTCHESON.

Atlanta, Ga., May 27, 1913.

Gamblers' Plot, Declares Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford gave out a sensational statement Tuesday morning in which he charged that the efforts to fix accusations of bribery and malfeasance upon him were inspired by a "gambling ring," of which C. C. Jones was the head.

The cause of the fight against Lanford had been something of a mystery. Beavers readily explained the efforts to dispossess him from the office of Chief of Police by his war on vice in the city of Atlanta. Lanford's explanation reveals another angle of the crusade against a wide-open town.

"The gambling ring has been after me ever since I was made head of the detective department ten years ago," said Chief Lanford. "No more had I declared relentless warfare upon all forms of gambling in the city than I was notified that the gambling interests were out to 'get' me. Several times it was reported to me that I had been marked for an attack, and once the gamblers succeeded in carrying out their threats.

"That was five years ago. I was reduced from sergeant, which was the designation of the head of the department then, to service in the ranks. The gamblers were responsible for it. They gloated for nine months. Then I was raised to my former position again, with the title of chief. Since then I have continued my campaign against them.

"They have been very bitter. They have threatened me time and again. Now they have brought these charges against me."

The Duty of the Grand Jury--Investigate All the Charges of Graft and Bribery!

The Georgian repeats its suggestion that the Grand Jury MUST TAKE UP AND INVESTIGATE THOROUGHLY the charges of graft and bribery that have been made in the newspapers during the past few days.

And the matter should not end with the Grand Jury. It should be taken into a court of law,

Colonel Thomas B. Felder has made some accusations that merit immediate attention.

If there is graft in the police department or bribery anywhere, the public has a right to know about it; and if Colonel Felder or anyone else can establish that, he will receive the thanks of the entire community, and there will be a speedy turning out of the guilty men.

The matter is too serious to begin and end in a newspaper war.

The good name of the city is involved. The good name of public servants is involved.

Trials in newspapers are never effective. They lead nowhere. The public is still unconvinced.

Trials by judges and juries are final and conclusive.

THE PUBLIC WANTS FACTS.

There is no reason to believe that the charges against Beavers are true. Even the bitterest enemies of Beavers admit his honesty. He has made a good record. He is entitled to have the charges against him examined by a judge and jury, so that all the facts may be known.

Whether Beavers' attitude is right in putting an end to the segregated district is not an issue. The law does not permit any choice in the matter. The law does not sanction a segregated district for the barter and sale of human beings and for the enrichment of a few ringsters.

It is not improbable that a little more liberality in some of the laws would be a good thing for the city and all concerned. But the way to get that liberality is to change the present statutes.

Beavers has no alternative but to enforce the law as he sees it, and he has no alternative but to compel those who accuse his department to go into court and try the case there instead of in the columns of the newspapers.

STAND BY BEAVERS AND THE LAW!

LUTHER Z. ROSSER, who is leading attorney of counsel for the defense of Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phangan at the National Pencil factory.

Mr. Rosser, as usual, is playing a game of silence. He has not indicated his line of defense.

Col. Felder Still Probing In the Phagan Case.

In the news columns of The Georgian yesterday it was said that Colonel Felder had been eliminated from the Phagan case. Colonel Felder says this is not true, that he is as deeply interested in solving the mystery as ever, and that he is lending every energy in that direction. The further statement in The Georgian that Colonel Felder was believed at one time to be interested in the defense of Frank was not intended to reflect in any way upon the lawyer. It was simply the gossip of the street, given for what it was worth. Colonel Felder's own statement that he is working solely for the public good makes his position perfectly clear, and everybody in the city will hope that he will continue actively in the case until the great mystery is disposed of.

Water Fashionable Beverage in London

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—Champagne now takes a back seat in London, and claret, moselle and whisky and soda are the drinks of the moment. But temperance is a current craze. Barley water in special "brews" may be found at the Carlton and Bachelors' Clubs.

A few smart men drink plain cold water, among others Sir Arthur Walsh and Lord Charles Beresford. The King has cider laid down in his cellar, and among cider drinkers are the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Leeds, Lord Knollys and Lord Mount Stephen. Beer is seldom seen at dinner or luncheon, but iced lager beer is popular at balls and late parties.

BURNS MAN QUITS CASE; DECLARES HE IS OPPOSED

C. W. Tobie, chief criminal investigator for the Burns Detective Agency, formally withdrew from the Phagan investigation Tuesday morning. The calling off of the Burns forces was announced by Dan P. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch, after Tobie had stated explicitly that he would not withdraw from the case.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who brought the Burns detectives into the Phagan case, would make no statement relative to their withdrawal, but announced that it did not mean the end of his investigation or connection with the case.

Tobie made up his mind last Friday to drop the Mary Phagan investigation—so he said Tuesday—but deferred action until Monday night, when he announced his intention to withdraw to Solicitor General Dorsey.

Disgusted With "Fuss."

Acute disgust at the "four or five cornered fuss" raised by the Phagan investigation was assigned by Tobie as the cause. This disgust was superinduced by the direct charge and general impression that the Burns Agency was pretending to ferret out the Phagan case, when in reality its purpose in Atlanta was to investigate the police department.

Tobie said to-day that while he had quit and was going to leave Atlanta, still the withdrawal of the Burns Agency need not be permanent.

"If certain features of this case are not developed, then there will be one, and maybe two, Burns men back here. I will send them here, but they will work in secret. There will be no more public investigation."

Tobie explained he believed Leo M. Frank was guilty of the Phagan murder and that the "certain features" meant additional clinching evidence not yet published that will make Frank's conviction certain.

"How can any house have harmony," said Tobie, "when the old man is fighting the old woman, and the old woman is fighting the children, and they are all fighting the hired girl? That's the shape this affair has gotten into, only worse.

"We came here to investigate this Phagan case, and for no other purpose. But the charge was made that in reality we were investigating the police department. The way things were shaped up the police could not help believing that charge to be true. Colonel Felder's attitude bore that out, so I decided last Friday to quit."

"Do you mean, then, that you were dissatisfied at Colonel Felder's attitude?" was asked.

"We were dissatisfied with that part of it, yes," was Tobie's reply.

Tobie Himself Through.

Tobie reiterated he ended the investigation himself. "I called myself off," he said. "Dan S. Lehon, our Southern superintendent, was close to Atlanta. It was as near for him to pass through here on his way back to New Orleans as it was for him to go any other way. I was in charge here, but, as you know, I do not belong to this territory. As a pure formality and a matter of courtesy, and because I knew he was coming here to visit his wife's relatives, I sent him a message inviting him to confer with me. When he got here I told him as a courtesy that I had decided to quit the case. He approved it. Had I told him I would continue, he would have approved that, too.

"This is the worst mix-up I ever saw anywhere, at any time. It's awful. Everybody is fighting everybody else, and I am through with this four or five cornered fracas, except that if more Burns men are sent here I shall send them here and they will report to me."

Bribery Charges Denied.

Rumored attempts to bribe witnesses were given strong denial in many circles, particularly by those whose names were connected by rumor with the alleged bribery attempts.

C. C. Sears, superintendent of the Atlanta branch of the Burns detective agency communicated to Chief of Detectives Lanford the announcement of the withdrawal of the Burns forces from the Phagan case.

Chief Lanford authorized the following statement on the departure of Tobie:

"Tobie, I believe, is straight and honest. He was victimized by Felder. I am convinced Mr. Tobie was working toward the interest of those seeking to clear the mystery."

Praises Superintendent.

A girl employee of the pencil factory has written the following statement, which upholds the working conditions of the factory and champions the character of the imprisoned superintendent:

"Nothing has ever been said of the girls of the pencil factory until after the terrible murder, but since then there has been one continuous talk, just as if we were to blame. We are just as anxious to see the guilty punished as the rest of the public, and we all loved Mary Phagan just as much as we possibly could.

"If the public only would interest itself to look into other factories and stores they would find the girls in the pencil factory are just as good as any other working girls.

"It looks mighty hard that we have to work in the place where our little friend was so horribly murdered. But we are only poor working girls, trying to make an honest living, and we try not to think of the tragedy any more than possible; and we have the interest of the factory too much at heart to desert in times of trouble.

"We all hope and pray the guilty will be punished and the innocent given freedom, for we all think our superintendent has a soul himself and that he would not think of such a thing, much less commit such a horrible crime."

Swallows Poison as Walker Did; Saved

ORLANDO, FLA., May 27.—That bichloride of mercury is not always fatal was demonstrated here when S. Walters Howe, cashier of the State National Bank, swallowed a tablet, mistaking it for a headache dose.

As the tablet passed down his throat it contracted the muscles so violently that he discovered his mistake and hurried to the city physician, who at once used the stomach pump and gave antidotes. Howe has experienced no harm.

Financier Warns of Credit Strain Resulting From Lavish Expenditure of Money.

DETROIT, May 27.—Joseph T. Talbert, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, in an address delivered before the Bankers' Club here, declared everything has been dear except credit, and, as a result, "our expanded loans and deposits constitute the weak spots in our domestic and business situation."

Mr. Talbert gave statistics showing the gross loans and investments of all the banks in the United States since 1907 has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, while the total increase in the gold stock of the United States since 1907 aggregated $506,000,000.

"This condition," said Mr. Talbert, "although perhaps not so strong as it should be to justify and properly sustain our increased loans, still is assuring and shows that there is no substantial ground for alarm."

Delight to Squander.

Mr. Talbert caused quite a stir when he said that "evidence tends to show that individually and collectively we are a nation of spendthrifts.

"It is our habit and delight to squander, and no amount of preaching will have any effect upon our prodigality as a national trait."

Mr. Talbert, in leading up to an explanation of the drain on New York's gold supply by Europe, said the lending power of German banks had been strained to the limit; that Germany borrowed money here and sought to draw gold from us.

In calling attention to the persistent hoarding of gold by the French, he said the French, not content with the mere hoarding of their own gold, at heavy losses of exchange, forced from us, either for their own account or for that of South America, upward of $56,000,000 of gold.

"The movement is going on and may continue indefinitely.

"For lack of protection for our gold stock we have been obliged to sit helplessly and to submit to this forced exportation of gold, to our disadvantage and discomfort.

"This gold movement taking place at such a time and under such conditions demonstrated the fact that often has been stated before—that New York is the only free market in the world for gold."

Need Outside Money.

Mr. Talbert said an enormous amount of railroad financing must be done during the next year or two, and nearly all of it will be done at home with difficulty and in all probability at a higher level of interest rates than we have been accustomed to in such undertakings in recent years.

Mr. Talbert uttered "a word of caution against the practice which has been all too common among merchants and manufacturers, of financing themselves too largely through note brokers."

In concluding, the banker said it should be remembered that we are neither in nor approaching a period of speculation, and that credit is in no danger whatever from that source now, nor will it be in the near future. He added that courage should be taken from the fact that thus far the promises of another year of bountiful crops are exceedingly bright.

Girl of 10 Is Best Speller in Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., May 27.—Opal Mitchell, ten years old, of Licking, Texas County, won a $100 prize and was declared the best speller in the State. In a contest in which 60 pupils from as many counties contested, she misspelled but 3 of 200 words.

The three words misspelled by Opal Mitchell were: Chalice, besieged and weasel.

Baraca Leader to Speak in Atlanta

Frank Anderson, field secretary of the World-Wide Baraca Union, will deliver an address on Baraca work at the Edgewood Baptist Church on next Monday evening.

Mr. Anderson is one of the best speakers along this line of Christian endeavor in the United States.

CURED TERRIBLE HUMOR ON FACE

Could Not Go On Street Without Veil—Tells What Resinol Did For Her.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1912.—"In December, 1908, my face became sore. I tried everything that was recommended, and my face got worse instead of better. I spent over $100 and got no benefit. The face and nose were very red and the eruption had the appearance of small boils, which itched me terribly. I can not tell you how terrible my face looked—all I can say is, it was dreadful, and I suffered beyond description.

"I have not gone on the street any time since 1908 without a veil, until now. Just four months ago a friend persuaded me to give Resinol a trial. I have used three cakes of Resinol Soap and less than a jar of Resinol Ointment, and my face is perfectly free from any eruption, and my skin is as clear and clean as any child's. It is about four weeks since the last pimple disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. M. J. Bateman, 4256 Viola St.

Practically every druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00) and Resinol Soap (25c), but if you are suffering from itching, burning skin troubles, pimples, blackheads, dandruff, ulcers, boils, stubborn sores, or piles, it will cost you nothing to try these soothing, healing preparations. Just send to Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for free sample of each.

Wylie Smith Says He Will Be Cleared

Released from prison cell Monday afternoon on $3,000 bond, J. Wylie Smith, former president of the Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who recently was brought back from Mexico after eluding officers of the law for two years and seeing service on the battlefield with Diaz and Madero, expects to devote his entire time to recovering his health.

No date has been set for the trial of Smith on the charge of forgery. Smith declares that papers found since his return to Atlanta will prove his innocence.

Liners Crippled in Crash Reach Port

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CORUNNA, SPAIN, May 27.—With her bow plates broken, a big hole in the port side and her hold full of water the steamer Taitus, which collided with the British ship Inca yesterday, arrived in port here to-day.

VIGO, SPAIN, May 27.—The British passenger liner Inca, which was in collision off the Spanish Coast with the Taitus yesterday, arrived in port here to-day with her bows stove in and her forepeak full of water.

$6,000,000 Mission Fund Baptist Plan

DETROIT, MICH., May 27.—The fifth annual report of the general apportionment committee, which included a recommendation that the convention make the raising of $6,000,000 for missions annually the ultimate objective, was presented to the Northern Baptist Convention in session here.

The recommendation was approved.

BULGARIA READY TO BEGIN WAR ON SERVIA

Latter Country Warned Not to Annex the Turkish Territory It Now Occupies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—Bulgaria will declare war against Servia if the latter country annexes all the Turkish territory it has occupied since the outbreak of the Balkan war.

This was the message received here to-day from Sofia, and it contained the additional information that Bulgaria is ready to begin hostilities at once.

Servia holds most of the strategic points in Central Albania and Macedonia. Czar Nicholas has informed the Bulgarian Government through M. Sazonoff, the Foreign Minister, that he will not act as arbitrator between Bulgaria and Servia.

Turks Plan to Resume War On Quarreling Allies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 27.—The possibility that Turkey, taking advantage of the dissension among the Balkan allies, may resume the war against the states in the Balkan league is looming up.

It was learned here to-day that the Porte has ordered $4,000,000 worth of fresh arms and ammunition, and that Enver Bey, chief of staff of the Turkish army, is attempting to re-form the various divisions of the Ottoman army.

Although peace negotiations have not been commenced by the plenipotentiaries in London, it is deemed unlikely that Europe would allow a resumption of the war.

'Naked Truth' Too Naked for St. Louis

NEW YORK, May 27.—When Professor William Wendschneider, the famous German sculptor, arrived today from England and learned that his statue, "The Naked Truth," designed for the Praetorius-Schurz-Daenzer Memorial Committee of St. Louis, Mo., had been rejected because it was too daring, he emitted a wail of protest.

The professor caught the first train going West, determined to change the opinions about "The Naked Truth."

SECOND QUADRUPLET DIES.

BOSTON, May 27.—Eleanor Seeley, one of the quadruplets born to Mrs. Thomas H. Seeley, of Dorchester, is dead of inanition. This is the second of the four babies to die. The two others, now nine months old, are in fine health.

Ban on Riding Astride Causes Stir

J. E. Maddox, of 37 Richardson Street, one of the Atlanta veterans off for the reunion at Chattanooga.

General Young a Speaker.

Veterans, sponsors, maids and visitors are exercised to-day over whether women shall ride astride in the reunion parades. General J. P. Hickman's order that only side saddles for women shall be permitted has caused the stir, and this promises to become an issue overshadowing the real business of the convention of veterans.

General Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division, is grand marshal of the veterans' parade. Although he issued his order last week that women should not ride astride, it was not until the visitors had begun to gather yesterday and to-day that real opposition to it became pronounced.

This opposition comes largely from sponsors and maids who had planned to don divided skirts or riding trousers and sit on their steeds like men, and Sons of Veterans chosen as their escorts.

Order Will Stand.

But for every opposing voice there is one commending General Hickman's decree, the approval coming from veterans and their wives and some of the younger generation who do not approve of the present-day style. To-day the indications are that General Hickman's order will stand and that in the veterans' parade at least side saddles alone will be permitted on women's mounts.

The first of the reunion parades took place this morning at 9 o'clock, when the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, on the edge of the Chickamauga battlefield national park, marched through the downtown streets of Chattanooga in full dress uniform and equipment.

Cheer U. S. Troops.

The old veterans of the gray cheered the Government troops despite the fact that they wore the blue uniform that 50 years ago the men of the South so bitterly hated. It was a notable illustration that this is again a united country and sectional lines are fast being obliterated.

A half-hour later a short business session was held by the Sons of Confederate Veterans, after which came the formal opening of the reunion by the veterans.

This afternoon business sessions will be held by the Veterans, Sons of Veterans and Confederate Memorial Association.

To-night the big social functions that will mark the reunion will begin.

Business sessions were held this afternoon by the veterans, Sons of Veterans and the memorial associations.

Social Affairs Begin.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the army of official sponsors and maids of honor will parade the downtown streets in automobiles provided by the entertainment committee and their escorts.

At 7 o'clock a garden party will be tendered the sponsors and maids at Warner Park.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy will entertain the veterans with a reception at the Bennett Young Pavilion to-night.

A business session of the Sons will take place at 8 o'clock at the Auditorium.

Preparations for the unveiling of the Alabama monument to-morrow morning are being made to-day. A large delegation has arrived from Alabama on a special train. The unveiling will take place at 10:30 o'clock. The Florida monument will be unveiled an hour earlier.

Young for Re-election.

General Bennett H. Young, commander-in-chief, will probably be re-elected by the veterans, though there is some talk of opposing candidates. He is serving his first year, having been elected at the Macon reunion last year.

Active campaigns have been launched by Jacksonville, Fla., and Tulsa, Okla., for next year's gathering. Other cities mentioned for this honor are Nashville, Richmond, Baltimore, San Antonio and Denver. Nashville and Richmond have entertained the veterans in the past. None of the other cities mentioned has had a reunion.

Camp A. P. Stewart, in Jackson Park, where tents and commissaries have been established for those veterans unable to pay for hotel accommodations, is to-day sheltering its quota of old soldiers and presents a warlike appearance. Last night, after the day's arrivals had been assigned to quarters, unpacked their luggage and had supper, they gathered around their camp fires and retold stories of the war and particularly of the campaigns around Chattanooga and Chickamauga.

Old Soldiers Cheer U. S. Regulars in First of Parades at Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 27.—For the first time in the more than twenty years of the organization, the United Confederate Veterans were welcomed at their annual reunion by a Republican Governor to-day when Ben W. Hooper officially extended the hospitality of Tennessee to the old soldiers and the thousands of other visitors assembled here.

The reunion formally opened at 10 o'clock with exercises at the reunion auditorium. Meetings of affiliated bodies yesterday were only preliminary to the assembling of the veterans.

W. E. Brock, general chairman of the Chattanooga reunion committees, called the assemblage to order and delivered the gavel to General John P. Hickman, of Nashville, commander of the Tennessee division. Dr. J. W. Bachman, of Chattanooga, chaplain general of the U. C. V., pronounced the opening invocation and then Governor Hooper delivered his address. It was rumored that a hostile demonstration against the Republican Governor would be attempted, but it failed to materialize.

Georgia Hardware Men Here Wednesday

More than a hundred hardware men are looked for in Atlanta Tuesday and Wednesday for the annual convention of the Georgia Retail Hardware Men's Association.

Sessions will be held at the Auditorium, beginning Wednesday morning, and will continue through Thursday and Friday. Several of the largest hardware manufacturers of the State will have exhibits.

Policeman Knocked Out by Thunderbolt

Policeman J. J. Clack was shocked into unconsciousness by a bolt of lightning that struck somewhere in the vicinity of Peachtree and Houston Streets, punctuating the downpour of rain early Tuesday morning.

The policeman at the time of the thunder clap was reporting to headquarters from the police box on that corner.

Clack was revived in a nearby drug store and taken to his home.

Ask Wilson to Force Clerks to Pay Debts

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Protesting against the number of government employees who fail to pay their debts, the Retail Merchants' Association will send a letter to President Wilson asking that the matter be laid before the several members of the Cabinet, with the request that some action be taken in each of the ten departments.

GIRLS BURN BOOKS AT AGNES SCOTT

Seniors End College Year With Torchlight Parade and Big Bonfire on Campus.

With stars twinkling and torchlights glimmering, the seniors of Agnes Scott made a bonfire of their books on the campus. Aided in the torch-bearing by sophomores and surrounded by several hundred alumnae and friends, they went through the ceremony with all of the gayety that only a crowd of college maids could display.

Burning of the books followed a torchlight parade on the campus. As the torch-bearers tripped over the beautiful lawn, their class songs and cheers drew a hearty response from the crowd.

A glee club concert opened with the cantata, "Death of Joan of Arc," led by Miss Almedia Sadler and Miss Isabel Norwood.

"The Last Rose of Summer" and "A Serenade," by Miss Rosa Hill; "Mammy's Little Honey" and "My Lady Clo," by Miss Sadler; "Love's Dilemma," by Miss Norwood, and a rendition of "Annie Laurie," by Misses Jean Ashcraft, Isabel Norwood, Pauline Bruner and Rosa Hill, were features.

Tuesday night the two literary societies will cross swords in a debate on the question: "Resolved, That the Panama Canal should be free."

Kahn Urges Plan to Strengthen Army

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An army reserve created by one-year enlistments is advocated by Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, who declared to-day he believed Japan's pugnacious attitude was due to the knowledge that few American men have even the rudiments of military training.

Kahn advocates an enlistment of one year of active service and three years in the reserve.

Negro Leaders in Annual Conference

Dr. W. E. B. DuBose, of New York, former head of the sociological department of Atlanta University and founder of an annual conference for the study of negro problems, was the central figure at the eighteenth session at the University Monday.

Drills and songs were given by 170 negro children from the free negro kindergartens of Atlanta. The principal address was by Dr. DuBose on the need of education and play to conserve the moral forces of the negroes.

Girl of 4 Is Second Cousin to Herself

MINNEAPOLIS, May 27.—Mrs. Jennie Golden, who when thirteen years old was married to her half nephew, then twenty years old, has filed suit to have the marriage annulled, so the relationship of their four-year-old daughter, Margaret, may be straightened out and the girl not be compelled to go through life as second cousin to herself.

Christian Golden, the husband, wants the marriage annulled, too.

GIVES UP HUSBAND FOR UPLIFT WORK

Mrs. Sarah MacD. Sheridan, Former Georgian, Tells Why She Didn't Fight Divorce.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Mrs. Sarah MacDonald Sheridan, former Georgian and daughter of one of the leading men of the Southern States at the time of the Civil War, told to-day why she permitted her husband to obtain a divorce in Reno without contest.

Her husband, Charles Oscar Sheridan, went to Nevada four years ago for his health. She refused to join him there. He obtained a decree for absolute divorce last Saturday.

She said to-day she regarded it as her great duty to continue her sociological work, in which she had been engaged for 30 years. Mrs. Sheridan is the founder of the "New National Fireside" movement for the opening of public schools after hours as neighborhood social centers, and declared she believed her work along these lines of greater importance than the maintenance of her domestic relations.

"I have lived to see my son, Mark Sheridan, in the old family home in Atlanta, become one of the most promising young mural painters of the day," she said, "and my daughter happily married to the younger son of one of England's noblest families. This accomplished, I feel that my family life has been full."

Mrs. Sheridan is an intimate friend of President Wilson and his family and is a musician of ability as well as a sociologist. From her youth Mrs. Sheridan devoted her talents to the improvement of social conditions in her own State. The Martha Berry Industrial School was established mainly through her efforts.

BRYAN GETS INTO TRAP IN ROW WITH JAPAN

Abandons Course Used Successfully With England—Orientals to Grasp Opportunity.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Students of statecraft declare that the Wilson administration has needlessly, not to saw stupidly, walked into a trap in the controversy with Japan over the California alien land law.

In its reply to Great Britain's Panama Canal tolls protest, this Government laid down the principle that until an overt act had been committed against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, Great Britain would have no standing in court; in other words, that Great Britain's grievance would become a matter for diplomatic adjustment only after an American ship had actually passed through the canal free. This statement cleared the atmosphere and left Great Britain no reasonable grounds for continuing the debate.

The same principle applies in the controversy with Japan.

The obvious reply of Secretary of State Bryan to the first Japanese protest, in view of the attitude assumed toward Great Britain, was to state that the treaty with Japan had not been violated, and, therefore, there was no matter for contention between the two governments until after some Japanese subject in California had been aggrieved by the operation of some California law.

But instead of adopting this logical course, it was pointed out here to-day the Wilson administration floundered about in the diplomatic puddle, and, denying that the treaty of 1911 had been violated, invited further negotiations, thus giving the Japanese Ambassador an excellent opportunity to quote the State Department against itself, where the very same principle is involved.

As the matter is now, instead of making a firm stand on precedent and silencing the Japanese protest as the British protest was silenced, the Wilson administration has promoted bickering between the two nations, Japan and the United States, and is in the ridiculous position of holding two diametrically opposite policies in relation to identically the same problem. If the American position is right in regard to the Panama Canal protest, it is wrong in regard to the Japanese protest, and vice versa.

It is the expectation here that Japan will take instant advantage of the inconsistency and incongruity of the position of the United States.

SCITUATE, MASS., May 27.—Thomas W. Lawson has taken a hand in the hunt for a panther which has invaded Scituate, and has been seen by a score of persons.

It is possible Mr. Lawson and a party of his friends will stalk the beast themselves. They want to add the beast to the menagerie at "Dreamwold."

ODDITIES —in the— DAY'S NEWS

BORE GRUDGE TO GRAVE—Most of the will of Terance J. Larkin, just filed in New York, is devoted to disinheriting his daughter, Mrs. Agnes G. Bedford, of Middletown, N. Y., to whom he left only $5.

GIRL'S STROLL WORTH $5,000.—Miss Ethel Terry, of Smyville, N. Y., found a large piece of ambergris, valued at $5,000, while walking along the beach here.

SETS VISITING SPEED RECORD.—Forty-five calls in ninety minutes is the visiting record established in Washington by Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice President.

HORSES FIGHT DUEL.—Two horses fought a duel in a vacant lot at Harrison, N. J., while several hundred persons watched the fight. One of the animals finally dropped with a broken leg. A bullet ended its suffering and the other horse is under the care of a veterinary.

HOPPER INVASION REPORTED.—a column of grasshoppers, five miles wide and eighteen miles long, is coming from northern Mexico, according to reports to Amarillo, Tex. Government, State and railroad experts have combined to fight the insects with poison.

BIRDS BATTLE WORKMEN.—An army of sparrows fought riggers who destroyed their nests while dismantling the spire of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, at Chester, Pa. The steeple began to topple and was condemned.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! And Again, Wuxtry!

"Talk about nature faking," exclaimed the hotel clerk, "just listen to this from a paper published out West. The items were sent in by the correspondent at Asusa, wherever that is."

And then he read the following:

"James Snyder, of this town, brought home four baby squirrels the other day and the family cat has adopted them and nurses them with her kittens.

"Then John Davis and Sherman Ward caught eight young foxes and their family cats have adopted them.

"Fred Bierer owns a calf that has but one foreleg, but runs just as well as any calf with its complete quota of legs.

"Ardell Smith, 16 years old, was knocked down and run over by a hog. The doctors called in say his left knee will be stiff for the rest of his life as a result of the accident.

"J. L. Brown's old hen has every day for the past three weeks laid an egg three inches long.

"Since the 'clean up' here there hasn't been much refuse in the streets and the birds got to eating tobacco crumbs and acquired the tobacco habit. Now they refuse grain and live on cigar and cigarette stubs."

Sure, Let 'Em Pay For the Luxuries.

Atlanta barbers have been discussing the edict that came from Trenton, N. J., the other day raising the price of trimming a Van Dyke beard from two bits to 35 cents.

"They're right," said the head barber, as he deftly deposited a comb behind his left ear and began running his fingers through his customer's hair. "Never saw a guy who insisted on wearing a bunch of spinach like that who wasn't harder to please than your wife with her new summer hat. And a guy who will insist on having his mustache curled—well, some men is queer. Soak 'em, says I, soak 'em, and soak 'em good and plenty."

And the customer went out warbling:

What! The kibosh on the Van Dyke,
And an extra charge to boot
When the barber does your mustache
With a curl so cute and sweet, sweet and cute?

But we've something to be thankful for,
Downtrodden men, by heck!
The barbers haven't raised the price
For a shave
Upon
the

Preacher Sentenced To Gallows Appeals

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 27.—Rev. Marion Capps, a former Methodist preacher, has filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court from a sentence of death imposed upon him by a Sebastian County jury. He was convicted of burning to death three of his children. Evidence at the trial was that the children were tied in bed, which was saturated with oil, and the house fired.

Capps was convicted on the testimony of two older children, who escaped, but who, it is alleged, have since declared they swore falsely against their father.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY ACCUSES NEGRO CONLEY

strangled Mary Phagan when about half drunk.

"I'll go further and say that the last three months that Conley was here I was suspicious of him and tried to watch him as closely as possible, for I placed no dependence in him. He became indifferent about his work and shiftless."

Mrs. White Denies Identification.

Mrs. J. Arthur White, of 59 Bonnie Brae Avenue, made positive denial to the Solicitor General's office Tuesday that she ever had made any identification of James Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, as published in an afternoon paper.

"I can not understand why such a story should have been manufactured and published," she said to a reporter. "I was just called by the Solicitor General to confirm it, and told him, as I had told him before, that I never had identified the negro.

"I saw a negro sitting on a box on the first floor of the factory as I left there about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the murder. I did not get a good look at his face. I got just a general impression of his clothes and of his size.

"At the police station ten negroes were brought before me. I picked out one with a green derby and said that he looked considerably like the man I had seen. They told me to look again, and I picked out another man that I thought looked a little more like the negro I had seen, but I never made any positive identification; and I told the detectives, in the first place, that I would not be able to. They never told me the names of the men I had picked out, so I don't know whether one of them was Conley or not."

The detectives never have placed much weight on the identification of Mrs. White, as she said that she could not be positive. Added to this is the fact that she saw a negro loitering around the factory at 1 o'clock, which, it is thought, he would have been very unlikely to do had he had anything to do with the disappearance of Mary Phagan, who was in the factory a few minutes after 12 o'clock.

small amount might prove an incentive to some persons, the defense very likely will argue. And it is not at all certain that the robber, if robbery was the motive, had any idea that the amount he would obtain would be so small.

"Is it probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when it could not have incriminated in any way any particular persons had it been lying near her body?" is a question that can be put to the jurors in this connection.

The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the Coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack the identification of Frank made by Officer House, of Druid Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer.

They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probabilities of a man of Frank's standing permitting himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the officer and saying, "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his identity secret. Probabilities are bound to play a large part in the trial, declare those interested in the mystery, for it is very much on a sequence of probabilities that the police are basing their expectations of convicting Frank.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the park guard discovered in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will still be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons.

The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negro, James Conley, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with his statement that he wrote notes at the dictation of Frank the day before the murder.

Sentell May Yet Be Witness.

Laying aside the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one had even suggested up to the time of the negro's alleged confession, the friends of Frank, and those who are without personal interest as well, scouted the idea that Frank, who is an intelligent and shrewd man, would take an ignorant negro into his confidence and do everything but tell him that he was going to commit a murder on the next day.

It is rumored that E. L. Sentell may yet figure in the case again. Sentell is the man who declared positively before the Coroner's jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sentell knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he met her on the street in company with some man and that he said, "Hello, Mary," and that she replied, "Hello, Ed."

This testimony would appear quite conclusive were it not for the statements of the physicians that the girl must have been dead at least six hours when found. It is known, however, that some confidence is still being placed in his statements.

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as conclusive as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual eyewitnesses of the crime, this question naturally is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the mystery, and that means practically every person in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the close-lipped and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even at this early date, when only the vaguest of hints have been given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion, it is patent that there are many openings offered the defense for attacks upon the theories of the State.

Burden of Proof on State.

Those who are close to the daily developments in Atlanta's baffling murder mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered are bearing in mind that, in the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution and not upon the defense.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law has hedged everyone under suspicion of crime, that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime or establish his connection beyond a reasonable doubt.

Until the State is able to do this, Luther Z. Rosser may rest on his oars if he so desires. Leo Frank is innocent this moment in the eyes of the law. His innocence does not need to be proved. It is presumed.

It immediately becomes a question, therefore, as to whether the State really has made out a case against Frank, so far as can be judged from the evidence in the hands of the public. Have the detectives by any of their discoveries connected Frank directly with the crime? Have they assembled such a chain of circumstantial incidents as to make his guilt appear certain beyond a reasonable doubt?

Frank's Friends Deny Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank answer both questions emphatically in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence seriously.

The law will not permit Frank's conviction for the crime merely because the detectives have discovered that he had the opportunity. It will not permit his conviction, if no convincing evidence is found against him, merely because he is unable to put his hands on another man and say, "This is the man you want. He is the guilty person."

It is not the intention of the law to hang one man simply because no one else can be found who is the more likely culprit.

After the State has presented its reasons for believing in the guilt of Frank, it is regarded as likely that the defense will claim first of all that the State has failed to establish Frank's connection with the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The defense will represent that the most the State has done is to establish that he had the opportunity to commit the murder.

Frank never was seen with the girl, either on the day of the strangling or before. It is not known that he ever spoke to her except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed. None of Frank's clothing has been found with blood stains upon it. No finger prints upon the girl's body or her clothes were identified as his. None of his personal belonging were found near the girl's body. Absolutely nothing was discovered in the search of the detectives that fastened the crime on him.

Own Admission Caused Arrest.

The police possibly would never even have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission. He told the officers the moment he identified the body that that was the girl he paid at noon the day before. No one else knew that Mary Phagan was in the building at that time, so far as the evidence reveals. Frank did not have to tell if he had desired to conceal the fact.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission, given freely and voluntarily, be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time? Is a guilty man likely to tell the officers as soon as he is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission?"

If the State attempts to show that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as one of the theories contends, the defense will be able to argue that there were several other people in the factory at the time, this fact opening the way to the argument that if the crime was committed at this time it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely to attack the girl when he knew there were other persons in the factory at the time who might discover him.

May Prove an Alibi.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed in the evening, as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Fomby indicate may be done, the defense will be able to establish a very strong alibi for the suspected man from the testimony of seven persons who are said to have been at Frank's house Saturday evening playing a game of cards.

Several of them already have testified before the Coroner's jury, and all of them are said to be willing to give their testimony in court to the effect that they saw Frank come home that evening about the time he said in his statement to the Coroner's jury, and that he remained home the remainder of the evening, to the best of their knowledge.

This will bring it to an issue of veracity between Mrs. Mima Fomby and these seven persons, who are persons of reputation and standing in the community, if, indeed, the testimony of Mrs. Fomby is allowed admission, which appears very doubtful.

Mrs. Fomby swore in her affidavit that Frank called her on the telephone several times between 6:30 and 10:30 o'clock the Saturday night of the murder, asking her for permission to bring a girl to her place. She testified that she denied his request. It is between these hours that Frank has a very well established alibi from all appearances.

Another Motive Possible.

The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body either immediately after the crime or at the times the body was exhumed.

Added to this fact is the unexplained circumstance that the girl's purse never has been found. It contained only the wages she had drawn that day, to be sure, but even this

STYLES DEMAND RAPID CHANGE BY DANDIES

Paris Men of Fashion Are Forced to Jump From One Pair of Trousers to Another.

PARIS, May 27.—The dandies of Paris have daily been rehearsing of late on quick-change dress in order to be able to slip from one suit into another with lightning speed so as to waste the minimum of time in this way during the height of the season.

The decrees of masculine fashion, which in recent years have become as inexorable as the requirements of feminine modes, are unusually Draconian this year. Even in the hottest weather it will not be permissible to appear in the streets wearing white flannels after 11 o'clock in the morning.

After lounging at his ease for an hour or so the well-dressed man must rush home and jump into a pair of neatly checked trousers. This garment which, as in the case of all the other trousers, the valet must iron out with sharply defined creases every morning, hangs broadest and loosest from the waist. With this may go a tobacco-colored business coat with narrow lapels, and a silk hat.

For the Afternoon Call.

This suit does for a stroll in the Bois, but after luncheon the dandy with calls to pay makes a second quick change. This time he dons a pair of well-creased chimney-pot trousers with faint stripes, and a cutaway coat, skin-tight. The latter must have a long tail, closely following the shape of the figure and bulging nowhere.

In the hottest weather the waistcoat may be dispensed with on the sole condition that the coat be unbuttoned and a white slip be worn sewed into the inner side of the lapel to give the similitude of a waistcoat.

If one is going to the races white flannel trousers may be worn with this coat, but not if attending receptions.

Both morning and afternoon coats are built up so as to give the man the appearance of being deep-chested and broad-shouldered, so tailors are now laying in a liberal supply of padding material.

Snuff-Colored Evening Dress.

The evening style runs in the direction of broad trousers. Again the striking feature, however, is the coat, which is a transparent imitation of the women's "jupe fourreau." The back and the tail, which fall below the knees, cling tightly to the body, and must fall in graceful curves not only behind but also in front. Black cloth is the evening wear, although colors are permitted this year, the choice mostly going to snuff-colored evening dress.

Terra-cotta colored handkerchiefs are also a feature of men's spring fashions.

Paris tailors have entered a campaign against London's supremacy in the matter of men's wear, and this year's fashions are designed with the object of persuading Americans to fit themselves out in Paris instead of in the British capital.

Morgan Firm Denies Attack on President

WASHINGTON, May 27.—A prompt repudiation of the anti-administration interview attributed to Henry P. Davison, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in Paris, has been received at the State Department.

This interview, attacking both President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, was cabled to a New York newspaper some days ago and was alleged to represent the ultimatum of Wall Street to the United States Government.

Cripple Run Down By Cyclist Is Dying

MACON, GA., May 27.—Edward Green, a cripple of Monticello, Ga., who was struck by a motorcycle yesterday afternoon as he was being wheeled across Mulberry street, is expected to die.

W. J. Radcliff, of Atlanta, was trying out a new motorcycle, preparatory to starting on a ride to Norfolk, Va., when the collision took place. He is under arrest.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

GOOD BILL AT FORSYTH.

Old favorites and new join in the bill at the Forsyth this week—and an unusually good bill it is, too. Every act is a topnotcher of its kind and there's variety enough for every one.

Maggie Cline, by struggling along some way, it seems, has been able to miss Atlanta for nineteen years. But she's here this week, and although the younger generation is not on right close speaking terms with her at first she soon warms the house and gets one of her "regular" old-time receptions. She sings the good old Irish stuff in the way that made her famous many years ago, and for good measure gives her greatest hit of the olden days, "Throw 'im Down, McCloskey," which brings down the upper part of the house as of yore.

Among the other splendid numbers on the bill are Ethel Kirk and Billy Fogarty, who have a high-class song and patter act; Carl Rosine, a magician who doesn't bore you as you think he is going to; the great Howard, a ventriloquist, who has an entirely new line of stuff and puts it over in a novel way; Cesare Nesi, a splendid singer who warbles under the title of "Young Caruso," and does not libel the great and only tenor to any extent; Madden and Fitzpatrick, in a clever sketch in which Madden does some original piano playing, and the Equilli brothers, equilibrists who really are different. Of course, there are the motion pictures.

"ST. ELMO" SATISFACTORY.

Miss Billy Long and her company began a week's engagement Monday at the Atlanta in "St. Elmo," presenting the old Southern book play as acceptably as it can be played.

The play is a selection from six offered the patrons of the Atlanta, and the strength of the company lent itself admirably to the play.

Mr. Vail as St. Elmo Murray, the cynic, played the part forcibly and sympathetically. Miss Long's part, Edna Earl, was almost negligible, but was well handled.

"St. Elmo" will be seen nightly and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"THE RESURRECTION" AT GRAND

Blanche Walsh, one of the few American actresses who deserves the name of tragedienne, will be seen in Atlanta this week in her most famous role, that of Katusha in Tolstoy's wonderful drama, "The Resurrection."

It is a picture play which brings Blanche Walsh and the Russian play to the Grand this week, and the photo-drama will begin Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and continue until 10:30 o'clock that evening, with repetitions on Friday and Saturday. The prices will range from 10 to 25 cents.

Carolina Desperado Slain Near Sylvania

AUGUSTA, GA., May 27.—Richard Henry Austin, murderer of three white men at Allendale, S. C., several weeks ago, was killed Monday night near Sylvania. The negro was trying to cross an open space to get to a swamp when he was fired upon by a score of men.

Austin had only two shells left and they were loaded with buckshot. They were identified as shells taken from Magistrate Edenfield, when Austin killed him in Hampton County.

Minister Nabs 'Tiger' Then Rides With Him

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—After he had arrested Bert Snyder, driver for a wholesale liquor company, on a charge of violating the prohibition law, the Rev. J. M. Dunlavy, welfare officer of Kansas City, Kan., climbed into Snyder's wagon and accompanied him as he delivered beer to his various customers.

The minister remained with the driver until he made his legal deliveries and then took him to the police station, where the man was released on bond.

CRAWLS THROUGH LONG PIPE.

COLUMBUS, IND., May 27.—Thomas Hardin crawled through 630 feet of 20-inch water pipe, leading from the water works to the new filter building seeking obstructions in the main. When he emerged the skin was worn from each of his elbows.

Veterans Present Hat to Capt. Cook

As spokesman for the W. H. T. Walker Camp 925, United Confederate Veterans, Comrade J. H. Shellnut, a one-legged veteran, presented Captain J. H. Cook with a military-shaped black alpine hat.

The presentation took place just before the camp formed in line to march to the railway station to board the Chattanooga train. Accepting the gift in a few words, Captain Cook ordered the camp to fall in, and the veterans marched to the station to entrain for the scenes of their combat of 50 years ago.

Inquiry of Wilson's Lobby Charge Asked

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An investigation by a special committee of five members of the House into the so-called tariff lobby which President Wilson charges is doing its best to defeat the Underwood bill was proposed in a resolution introduced in the House to-day.

Representative Tavenner, of Illinois, started the move.

Marshall Tells Girls: 'Be Just to Servants'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Vice President Marshall was the star speaker before the graduating class of a local girls' seminary.

"Deal justly with your servant," he advised. "You do not need to try to make her your equal and introduce her to your fiance, nor is it necessary to make her a common menial."

New Name Is Given Equitable Building

When workmen tear away the burlap which hides their work just now, the Equitable Building will be a thing of history. Henceforth the skyscraper, Atlanta's first, will be known as "The Trust Company of Georgia Building."

The new name is being chiseled in the stone over the Edgewood Avenue entrance.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society loaned the funds for erecting the building twenty-one years ago.

Virginians Claim 'Light Horse' Lee

ROANOKE, VA., May 27.—A committee of the Virginia Legislature is on its way to Georgia to-day for the purpose of bringing to his native State the remains of Henry Lee, better known as "Light Horse Harry Lee," the father of General Robert E. Lee.

General Lee died at Savannah on his return journey from Cuba, where he had been on account of his health. He was buried on Cumberland Island, near that city, and his grave has since been cared for by the Georgia Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

FLAGLER AND SON ESTRANGED TEN YEARS

NEW YORK, May 27.—Much interest is expressed by men of financial affairs as to the part Harry Harkness Flagler will play in the disposition of the great fortune of his father, Henry M. Flagler, estimated to be more than $60,000,000. Harry Harkness Flagler is 42 years old. He has been connected but little with the work of his father either in the Standard Oil Company or in the great development plans carried on in Florida.

It was said by men who have had close acquaintance with the Flagler affairs that the son and the father had been estranged for a long period, and that for ten years they had not spoken until the day before Flagler died, when the younger man arrived at Palm Beach from Europe in time to see his father alive.

Harry Harkness Flagler, though a man of acknowledged business capacity, never has engaged in business. He has kept singularly aloof from the affairs of the Standard Oil Company. He never showed interest in the Florida railroad and hotel projects of his father, so far as is known. At the age of 22, with a large career in business before him if he chose, it was regarded as doubtful that he ever would go into business.

His temperament is artistic and his nature is one of excessive delicacy. It is said that as a child he preferred to play with girls rather than with boys.

It was held yesterday that a possible reason for the trusteeing of the Flagler estate lay in the divergence of interests of the son and the father. It was conjectured that the elder Flagler decided that his plans for further development of Florida, which it is believed he caused to be drawn up when he was ill, could be carried out better under the direction of trustees in close association with his life activities than in any other way.

The younger Flagler is a Columbia University man of the class of 1894. He is a son of Flagler's first wife, who was a member of the Standard Oil family of Harkness. He married Miss Anna Lamont in 1898.

CHICKENS GET SOUSED.

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—A dozen chickens in a coop at the city market were deluged by a broken jug of whisky. The chickens stuck their heads through the slats of the coop and snipped the liquor. Soon afterward the roosters began to crow noisily and the pullets flapped their wings.

ULM URGES PENAL REFORM FOR POOR

Governor's Executive Secretary Declares Present System Penalizes Poverty.

Major A. H. Ulm, executive secretary and ex-officio pardon attorney to Governor Brown, has given out an interview strongly commending the proposed efforts of the Georgia Prison Association to bring about healthy changes in the Georgia criminal laws and prison system.

"A person changed with misdemeanor is given the option of paying a fine or going to the chaingang," said Major Ulm. "Under our procedure, if he goes to the gang, he can not later change, his mind and pay the fine. Many prisoners at time of sentence are unable to communicate with friends or relatives in time to pay the fine.

Must Appeal to Governor.

"The only way he can avail himself of the privilege of a money payment is by appealing to the Governor for clemency. If he pay an agent to attend to that routine, which we are compelled to enforce, nine times out of ten he will be forced to serve out the sentence.

"This amounts to penalizing poverty and misfortune. The State law on the subject should be the same as municipal laws, by which prisoners may pay, without bother and expense, the pro rata portion of the fine not worked out any time while serving the sentence.

Urges Suspended Sentences.

"Judges should be permitted to suspend sentences, with some form of probation, in all misdemeanor and, under wise restriction, in some felony cases, as that of a youth arraigned for the first time on a technical case of burglary.

"The State is in need of some form of indeterminate sentence. The parole law partly suffices, as it is intended to do, but it does not fill the need.

"Better provision also should be made for carrying out our present parole law. Virtually no funds are provided for investigating meritorious cases or for inspecting and supervising the conduct of those paroled."

Eisenfeldt Case Is Postponed 30 Days

The case against Mrs. Julia Eisenfeldt, proprietor of the Walton Inn, arrested following the complaint of a man that he had been robbed of a small sum of money in her house, was continued for 30 days, the man making the complaint being too ill to appear in court Monday.

Mrs. Eisenfeldt is the woman accused by E. O. Miles of paying money for police protection. Mrs. Eisenfeldt denies the accusation.

WIDE INTEREST IN PIANO CAMPAIGN

Hundreds Interested in Club Offer Made by the Weatherholt Company.

Seldom has an advertising campaign in Atlanta caused such widespread interest as that inaugurated Sunday in The American by the Weatherholt Piano Company, 72 North Broad Street.

The double-page advertisement, followed by a page in The Georgian yesterday afternoon announcing the sale of 400 player-pianos through a co-operative club of 400 members, has caused crowds of interested persons to visit the Weatherholt store.

Although the membership books do not open until to-morrow, many insisted upon selecting player-pianos in advance of enrolling. In anticipation of just such a rush, T. E. Weatherholt, president of the Weatherholt Company, made arrangements with the factory several weeks ago. These arrangements, together with thorough co-operation on the part of the railroads, have resulted in carloads of player-pianos arriving at the Weatherholt building.

This is the first time that player-pianos have ever been offered in this section to the public through co-operative club buying, and the reasonable price and the attractive terms of $10 down and $2.50 per week have awakened interest to an unusual degree.

Mr. Weatherholt selected a player-piano worth $650 for his club offer, and because of the tremendous purchasing power of the 400 club members, he was enabled to get them at a price which made the offer of $488.50 and at the attractive terms possible.

A corps of expert demonstrators at the Weatherholt store shows visitors how easily these player-pianos may be operated.

Among many other attractive features, the Weatherholt club offer includes twelve rolls of player music, with the privilege of exchanging them daily, if desired, for any other music in the Weatherholt library of 5,000 rolls.

LONDON, May 27.—Walter H. Page, the United States Ambassador to Great Britain, had no sooner reached London than he was asked by some English reporters concerning a report that he would refuse to wear knee breeches at Court. His answer was terse and pointed:

"Why do you ask me such a question? You surely don't want me to think that the imagination of a fool across the ocean begets more fools in London?"

Man, 72, Jilts Bride On Eve of Wedding

FORT COLLINS, COLO., May 27.—Cupid struck a snag here when he dallied with the affairs of T. C. Parker, 72, and Mrs. Nancy C. Pennington, 65, whose wedding was set for May 21.

The romance was shattered when the groom-to-be left here for Moline, Kans., where his relatives live. It is rumored here that an old sweetheart there is the attraction.

WIRE TROUBLE DID NOT FEAZE CUPID

Romance, Shattered After Eight-Dollar Phone Conversation, Ends in Marriage.

A romance that began in an Atlanta moving picture show, gained in strength at a New York motorcycle track, stood firm amid the vicissitudes of a theatrical career, and was broken off last week in an eight-dollar telephone conversation between Atlanta and Jacksonville, culminated in marriage Monday night, is being recounted to-day by friends of Miss Lena Quinn, a former Atlanta girl, who lives in Fitzgerald.

Miss Quinn is now the wife of Jack Morley, of Kansas City, who claims to be a motorcycle rider here for the races at Jack Prince's motordome. The wedding took place at the bride's home in Fitzgerald. They probably will return to Atlanta.

Mr. Morley came to Atlanta with his motorcycle last week, and several days ago Miss Quinn called him over long distance telephone from Jacksonville, where she has been spending the winter. Just what was said over the phone during the thirteen mintues conversation is unknown, but after it was over Mr. Morley flatly refused to pay the $8 telephone tolls and declared furthermore that his romance was shattered for good.

Miss Quinn, however, refused to have her romance shattered. She boarded the first train and arrived in Atlanta Monday morning. A reconciliation was soon effected.

EARNINGS OF BIG STORES FABULOUS

Marshall Field Clears $4,643,197 in Year; Sears, Roebuck & Co., $6,099,794.

CHICAGO, May 27.—The Illinois Senate white slave committee to-day was in possession of information which the members of the committee regarded as valuable in presenting their plea for a minimum law for women and girls to the Legislature. The committee had figures on the profits of several large corporations.

Maxwell Edgar, an attorney, who obtained the data while preparing "tax-dodging" suits, reported that Marshall Field & Co.'s net profits in 1909 were $4,643,197.98, and in 1910, $4,419,427.81. Sears, Roebuck & Co., he testified, earned net profits of $6,099,794.61 in 1909 and $6,606,291.47 in 1910. The net profits of Armour & Co. in 1909 were $4,858,488.93, and in 1910, $3,865,266.95. The Illinois Steel Company's net profits in 1909 were $11,165,839.22.

The capital stock of Marshall Field & Co. is $6,000,000.

Dr. Vaughan Defends Prison Treatment

Charges that prisoners in the Fulton County camps have been inhumanly treated are vigorously denied by the Rev. E. L. Vaughan, convict chaplain. Dr. Vaughan's prison work covers a period of 33 years, a score in direct touch with Fulton County prisoners.

"Especially," said Dr. Vaughan, "are these charges unjust in connection with Captain Tom Donaldson. I never have known him to be other than considerate.

"I do not believe there ever has been a prisoner punished in Fulton County unless he deserved it."

The "Classic" of All Millinery Sales

For Hats Originally $8.50 to $25.00

There is just one hat that was $8.50 in the sale---and there are one hundred and fourteen of them all told. If an average were struck, it would border around the eighteen-dollar mark.

Indeed this is the "Classic" of all millinery sales!

They are hats for street wear, hats that summer travelers will want. There are black hats, black and white hats, green hats, blue hats---hats of all colors and of good style---depend upon that---the very greater part of them are from Estelle Mershon of 20 E. 46th St., New York---which is but another way of telling that the ribbons and the flowers and other trimmings are not only the choicest in themselves, but also that they are artistically, becomingly arranged.

Five dollars!

Could one think of missing such an opportunity?

ROOSEVELT DENIES EVER BEING DRUNK IN HIS LIFE

and thieves. If any one calls him names he roars terribly, yet he is a pretty good liar himself. Roosevelt lies and curses in a most disgusting manner. He gets drunk, too, and that not infrequently, and all his intimates know about it.

Q. Have you ever been drunk?—A. I have never in my life been drunk or in the slightest degree under the influence of liquor.

Q. What use do you make of liquor?—A. I do not drink either whisky or brandy, save as I shall hereafter say, or under the direction of a doctor. I don't drink beer—I do not like it. I do sometimes drink light wines. I have never drunk a high ball or cocktail in my life, but sometimes I have drunk a mint julep. There was a bed of mint in the White House yard. Perhaps I drank half a dozen of them a year.

Q. All at one time?

Judge Commands Order.

There was laughter and Judge Flannigan interrupted sternly.

"If there is any further demonstration the Sheriff will clear the court room. I will not have any disorder. Understand that."

A. Never but one mint julep at a time. I doubt very much if I drank over half a dozen in the seven years I was in the White House. In the four years since that time I have had two mint juleps—one at the Cincinnati Country Club and one in Arkansas from a loving cup. At dinner or at banquets I occasionally drink one or two glasses of light wine or champagne. I drink it publicly and openly.

Q. In the White House were there given so-called diplomatic dinners?—A. Yes, and there was served and I drank openly wine or champagne, one or two glasses of champagne. At state dinners, diplomatic dinners, at my dinners to my Cabinet, light wines and champagne were served. They were kept in the White House. I would not usually drink while alone, and it was not usually served unless there were guests. If there were guests, light wine was served and I would frequently drink one or two glasses. If there were diplomatic guests there would be champagne. I would drink about the same amount.

Drinks Brandy for Fever.

Q. Now as to the instruction of the doctor to which you referred, will you explain it?—A. Yes. During the Cuban campaign I had the Cuban fever and since that time I have had recurring attacks of it. These attacks usually come as the result of over-exertion, and at the direction of Surgeon Rixey I have occasionally used brandy in teaspoonful doses to check it. I had a severe attack of this illness while in Africa and had prepared for it by having a supply of brandy along.

I also had such attacks while in the Rocky Mountains and several touches of it during the political campaigns in which I made speeches. Usually brandy was taken along in case of need and there was champagne in my private car for the use of members of the party that used it.

I made it a rule never to drink anything at all during the day while on these trips and rarely anything at any time. What I did take on such trips was invariably on the advice of my physician, who always accompanied me.

Attorney Andrews for the defense conducted the cross-examination. He asked Colonel Roosevelt if he was paying the expenses of the prosecution of the libel suit against Editor Newett, or if the Progressive party were bearing it.

Colonel Roosevelt shouted his denial that any one except himself was paying. Sight of the colonel displaying his feelings caused a commotion among those in the court room, and Judge Flannigan ordered a bailiff to rap for order. The direct examination then continued.

Q. Are you a teetotaler or a prohibitionist?

An objection was overruled.

A. I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky, and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Q. Describe yourself as to your use of intoxicating liquors.—A. I am not a total abstainer, but an very abstemious, perhaps it would aid you to understand that if I were to describe the routine of my life at the White House.

Q. Yes; please do so.—A. I usually rose rather early and had breakfast with the members of my family. For twenty minutes I would walk in the White House grounds, often with one of the children or some member of my Cabinet. From my walk I would go directly to my office, where Secretary Loeb and I would go through the mail and receive Senators, Representatives and diplomatic officers. Unless I had shaved myself, I would be shaved by the barber in the room between my office and Mr. Loeb's. I was very busy, and it was necessary to save every minute of time, so I would dictate letters or talk to some callers while being shaved.

No Drinks Before Luncheon.

I would then be busy with conferences and correspondence until lunch time. Then I would wash my face and hands and walk down the terrace to the White House, where I would have lunch with my family. Never under any circumstances did I touch a drop of liquor of any kind before luncheon. If we lunched alone there was rarely any liquor, but if there were guests there would be served either light wine or champagne, and in either case I would usually drink one or two glasses of that.

After luncheon I would return to my office and be busy with my mail and callers until 4 o'clock. At that hour I went for a walk or ride, frequently with some member of my Cabinet. I would walk or ride until 6, when I returned to the White House. I would spend a half hour with the children, and then would bathe and dress for dinner.

At dinner there were usually guests, and wine was usually served. Occasionally I drank a glass or two. After dinner I either returned to my office or had Mr. Loeb in my library, where we went over mail and worked on messages and the like. About midnight I would read for twenty minutes, some book to take my mind off public business. Then I would go to sleep. Dr. Rixey usually was in to see me at bedtime.

Q. When you was mustered out of the army, what was your rank?

Attorney Belden. We object. That is irrelevant.

Court. It is relevant to show the plaintiff's position.

A. I was acting brigade commander, and was recommended to be brevetted a brigadier general.

Didn't Drink on Trips.

Q. Now, what were your drinking habits while on speaking trips?—A. I never drank anything during the day, and never anything at any time except on the advice of Dr. Rixey or my throat specialist, Dr. Curtis. After a hard day I often took one or two glasses of milk with a teaspoonful of brandy in each. Then I would read twenty minutes, see Dr. Rixey and go to sleep. I would sleep soundly to feel clear in the morning.

Q. When you speak of a hard day, just what do you mean?—A. I mean a long journey and many speeches, or either. Many of those trips were very exhausting, and that was the reason Dr. Rixey accompanied me. When you are President you can not be ill, and a President's work must go on, regardless.

Here the direct examination ended, and Horace Andrews, of Cleveland, Ohio, began the cross-examination.

Q. You are not a resident of Michigan?—A. No, sir; I have always been a resident of the State and city of New York, although ever since I was a boy I have usually spent a few summer months in the country. As a boy my time in the country was usually on a farm or country place of my father's.

Q. Then your visits to Michigan have been flying trips?—A. They have usually been brief trips.

Enumerates His Friends.

Q. Do you know anybody in Marquette County?—A. I know several people; Mr. Shiras best of all.

Q. You know that Mr. Shiras is not really a resident of Marquette; that he lives in the East and only spends his summers here?—A. I know that he is frequently away during the winter on natural history work. As to his legal residence I can not speak.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette?—A. I know Mr. Hill there.

Q. Mr. Hill of your counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just met him since you hired him as your lawyer, did you not?—A. I think I met him last summer.

Q. Think? Don't you know?—A. I don't remember certainly.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette County?—A. I have met a number of people at various times.

Q. And have promptly forgotten them, eh?—A. No, sir, but when one meets so many people one can't always recall names unless one is reminded by seeing the person.

Q. Ah, I see. Do you see any reminiscent faces in the court room?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your entire life has been given mostly to politics, has it not?—A. I should not say that. I would say that, previous to the Spanish war, I was as much of a naturalist and historian and writer as anything else.

Q. As President you met Senators and entertained them and were invited to their homes—is that not true?—A. I knew every Senator and enterfained all of them at the White House. I was rarely invited to their houses.

Q. And you met members of Congress and received them at your house, did you not?—A. I knew every Representative in Congress and received all who called.

Q. And in traveling you attended many banquets given in your honor, did you not?—A. I attended some banquets.

Q. Where liquor was served?—A. Yes, certainly, where liquor was served.

Q. Yet, in all the fifteen years you have been in politics you have never drank anything except a little brandy and milk?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Just so, now as to the wines that you speak of as light wines, just what kind of wines were those?—A. Light white wines, California wines or Sauternes; once in a while I took a little Madeira.

Q. Is that all?—A. Once in a while a bit of sherry; I never drink red wines.

Q. Oh you will swear that you have never tasted red wine?—A. No, certainly not. You know I did not mean that. What I mean is that I do not like red wines and that I never drink them. I do not mean that I have never tasted them. Probably I have and probably when they have been passed I have touched the glass to my lips.

Q. Do you keep wine, brandy and whisky in your house?—A. Yes, sir, all three.

Q. Did you keep liquor in the White House?—A. Yes. I kept the stock left me by Mr. McKinley.

Mr. Andrews: "I move the last part of that answer be stricken out as not responsive to my question."

Mr. Pound: "I think it is competent to show that he merely continued a custom already established."

Shows Signs of Anger.

The Court: "It is proper to show that if he will answer it in the way you indicate."

Mr. Roosevelt: "Then may I revise my answer?"

Mr. Andrews: "Certainly you may amend it, Mr. Roosevelt, if you can not wish to answer it directly or would be embarrassed to do so."

Mr. Roosevelt: "I can and will answer it directly."

The former president showed signs of anger.

A. I did keep wine, whisky and brandy of several kinds in the White House, as my predecessor had done before me, and as President Cleveland and President Garfield and others had done.

Q. And is it true that you kept two butlers to take care of this stock of liquors?—A. It is true that I kept two butlers, but they took care of the wines merely as an incident to their employment.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wallace, National Committeeman of the Progressive Party in Michigan?—A. I do.

Q. Did he institute this prosecution, this suit?—A. I don't know.

Q. What? You don't know who started this important piece of litigation for you?—A. I was in Mercy Hospital when it started and I can not say.

Again Denies Knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Wallace have anything to do with filing it?—A. I could not say.

Q. It was reported in newspaper interviews that he had started this suit on your behalf. Did you see those interviews or articles?—A. Not that I am able to recall.

Q. Have you borne all the expense of this suit personally, the cost of finding and summoning witnesses and bringing them here and taking depositions and the like?—A. I have borne all the expense.

Q. Was not a portion of that expense borne by the Progressive party of Michigan or by the Progressive national committee?—A. It was not. I paid everything.

Colonel's Voice Squeaked.

Colonel Roosevelt was thoroughly angry now, his face flushed, his voice squeaked and he clenched his fists and half rose from the chair.

Q. Would you know it if any expense in this suit were borne by any person other than yourself?—A. I certainly would, and it has all been borne by myself.

Mr. Andrews announced that this completed the cross-examination.

Mr. Pound, on redirect examination, asked two questions, both designed to bring out the fact that Colonel Roosevelt was paying the expenses of the prosecution.

Q. This suit was brought by your direction, was it not, at your expense?—A. It was.

Q. Did the Progressive party or any branch of its organization or any of its officers or workers or any other persons at any time contribute anything to the expense of this suit?—A. No, I bore the entire expense myself.

Pledged Speaker's Health.

Q. Tell us about Speaker Cannon's birthday party.—A. I drank a glass of champagne on that occasion in pledging the Speaker's birthday health.

Defense Scores "Eulogy."

"Hunting exploits and public acts are improper in an opening statement," was the objection raised by Attorney Belden, representing Newett, to the opening address of Attorney Pounds for Colonel Roosevelt. Two minutes after Judge Flannagan overruled his objection he was again on his feet, protesting against the statement which, he declared, was "an oration—a eulogy."

Judge Flannagan again refused to check Attorney Pounds' address, but ruled that the defense might save their objection. When Pounds, however, referred to the time when "this plaintiff was in power," the court upheld the objection of the defense and ordered Pounds to confine his remarks to a statement of what he intended to prove. The defense announced it would defer making a statement until after taking of testimony.

Before court session began, Judge Flannagan ordered all the witnesses on both sides out of the room. No person connected with the case was admitted to the court room during the trial, except the principals, their attorneys and the witness who was on the stand.

T. R. Inclines To Champagne

Defending himself against a charge of drunkenness, Colonel Roosevelt gives the following as an epitome of his drinking customs:

I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

New Libel Charge In Marconi Scandal

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—The third criminal trial growing out of the Marconi scandal began in Old Bailey Court to-day. It is the libel case of Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the British Marconi Company, against Cecil Chesterton, journalist and brother of G. K. Chesterton, the famous essayist.

Chesterton is charged with libeling Isaacs in an article he wrote on the connection between certain officers of the British Government and the Marconi interests.

Hill's Market Basket Bond Sale a Success

ST. PAUL, May 27.—James J. Hill's plan of selling city bonds in certificates of $10 each through the Northwestern Trust Company was a big success to-day. Men and women were waiting at an early hour for the company's office to open, and a steady stream filed in and out all morning.

The officers were prepared and began to issue receipts for the money promptly. One hundred and seven small investors bought a total of $10,000 worth of certificates up to noon.

The Sunday American goes everywhere all over the South. If you have anything to sell The Sunday American is "The Market Place of the South." The Sunday American is the best advertising medium.

MEN AND RELIGION BULLETIN NO. 57

Atlanta Upholds Chief Beavers

The "Itching Palm" And The Character Assassin Have No Place Here.

The itching palm.

Judas Iscariot had it.

Thirty pieces of silver upon his hand, and Judas betrayed his Lord.

Poor Judas, learning too late the curse of the itching palm, threw away the money and killed himself in shame and sorrow.

Notwithstanding itching palms are here to-day.

And again and again would they betray Christ, our saviour, and rear for him a cross.

Their pay coming from the betrayal of girls matters not to them.

If they get their hire, they care not that their success would mean the dishonoring of motherhood, the blinding of babies, and the spreading of disease, insanity and death among innocent children and women.

These they ignore with a sneering curse.

But you do not; you care and understand; you recall.

Annually seven hundred thousand dollars and more poured through the white slave market of Atlanta into the itching palm.

The lie of segregation so prospered seven houses that their reputed owners received forty-three thousand and seventy-four dollars in the form of rent every year, more than twice as much as the rental of thirty-three other houses scattered throughout the city.

Chief Beavers closed them all and ended the ghastly farce of segregation.

Eight months have passed and the owners of the itching palm have become frantic.

For eight months the "unbreakable bank of the corrupt politicians" has been hampered by the honesty of a man whose palms will not itch.

How much have the owners of the houses and the liquor dealers lost?

Eight months is two-thirds of a year; two-thirds of seven hundred thousand dollars is four hundred and sixty-six thousand, six hundred and sixty dollars and sixty-six cents.

How their palms do itch!

And they have despaired of corrupting the Chief.

They have to get rid of him, if they ever open again their market with its unspeakable pimps and procurers plying their trade of debauching girls.

IS THIS CONNECTED WITH THE RECENT STUDIED EFFORT TO DISCREDIT THE CHIEF AND ATLANTA'S POLICE DEPARTMENT IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD?

Consider this before you answer.

Incorruptibility is not inefficiency.

And an unwillingness to violate one's oath—a refusal to let criminals live upon the shame of women is no evidence that a man is incompetent to be Chief of Atlanta's Police Force.

Hence the plight of protected vice and its servants.

THEY CANNOT CORRUPT; HENCE, THEY SEEK TO RUIN WITH LIES.

Their itching palms know not how to labor honestly, though they are skilled in squeezing money from helpless fallen women, their "meal tickets."

Being hungry, they snarl and snap.

God pity them and open their eyes to their unutterable degradation!

The outside world is pointing to the fearless honesty of our Chief of Police and the efficient way in which he is handling the most difficult of all city problems.

And in this age of graft he will not be sacrificed to put into office a dishonest man satisfactory to the owners of brothels and bars and their henchmen.

Never!

AND ATLANTA WILL REMEMBER FOR FUTURE RECKONING THOSE MEN, IN OR OUT OF OFFICE, WHO TRY TO HAMPER THE CHIEF AS HE DOES HIS DUTY.

Recall the itching palms of the servants of protected vice and be on your guard.

"A lie turned loose put Christ on the Cross." Nail their lies!

Note those who are trying by the most foul of all means, character assassination, to bring back upon Atlanta the disgrace of a traffic which demands for its existence the sacrifice of innocent girls.

For the day of accounting is coming.

Vice is fighting to regain the privilege of making dirty dollars by defiling women.

Chief Beavers is battling for decency and health, the welfare of our families and your loved ones.

He does not fight alone. You are with him.

Thank God! You are awake and watching.

Chief Beavers and his men will be upheld by Atlanta.

The World of Society

MRS. WILTON DARGAN entertained twelve guests informally at luncheon Tuesday for Mrs. C. A. Wood, who will leave soon to spend the summer at Toxaway.

The luncheon was given at the Piedmont Driving Club. The table, placed in the green room of the club, was decorated with vivid red poppies, arranged in a tall silver vase. The place cards bore modish hand-painted figures of up-to-date ladies.

Mrs. Dargan wore wistaria canton crepe, with a hat of black maline.

Banquet to Bridegroom.

A banquet was tendered Mr. P. W. Wilcox in honor of his approaching marriage to Miss Katherine Rawlings, of Druid Hills, by the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, in a private dining room at the Kimball House Monday evening. The dining room was decorated in palms and ferns. The table, with a floral centerpiece down its length, was attractive. The menu of seven or eight courses was interspersed with toasts and speeches.

Mr. J. B. Cleveland, president of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, presented a handsome gold watch to Mr. Wilcox, who is secretary and treasurer of the company. The presentation was in behalf of the company. The watch bore as an inside inscription:

"To Mr. P. W. Wilcox, from his friends and associates of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, May 28, 1913."

In presenting the watch, Mr. Cleveland made a witty talk on "Time," the gist of his remarks being the wish that "Every time you look at the watch to learn the time, may you think of the fine time you've had tonight and may you always have a good time and a good timepiece."

The company included Messrs. J. B. Cleveland, Harold S. Holmes, P. W. Wilcox, George Lamkin, W. M. Adams, W. M. Taylor, R. T. Skinner, Jr., C. R. Stone, J. H. Lamb, A. G. Cooper, T. W. Newbern, Fred Ball and T. C. Callaway.

May Pole Dance.

Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock a May pole dance will be given at the Wren's Nest in West End. More than 100 children will take part. The most important feature of the entertainment will be the coronation of the May queen, Miss Katherine Vickers, attended by much pomp and ceremony.

The maid of honor will be Miss Frances Stokes, queen of the last May Festival. Other maids will be Kathleen Hackett, Kirby Willingham, Lucile Price, Margie Curfee, Mary Crucell and Lora Colcord. The knights will be Newton McEachern, Brevard Montgomery, Thomas Stokes, Warren Pollard, Howard Connoily and Thomas Longino.

An interesting feature will be the appearance of the little grandchildren of Joel Chandler Harris, who will take part in the coronation ceremonies. They are LeRose Wagener and Chandler Harris, who will act as flower girl and canopy bearer.

There will be amusements on the grounds in the way of a fishing pond, lemonade well, candy and cake both and the honey tree, thimble finger well, home of Miss Meaders and the girls, and other specialties.

"Br'er Rabbit" and "Br'er B'ar" will be at the festival, and maybe, if the visitors look around among the lovely flowers and trees at the Wren's Nest and Snap Bean Farm, they can catch a glimpse of Uncle Remus and the little Boy who made Mr. Harris' writing so dear to chfldren all over the world.

Cars will leave the city at all hours, so that everybody can get to the festival and have a good time.

Mrs. Brevard Montgomery, who originated the first May Festival at the Wren's Nest, has charge of the entertainment this year.

Miss Gay Hostess.

Miss Eloise Gay entertained at a bowling party at the East Lake Country Club Tuesday afternoon. After bowling and boating on the lake, refreshments were served on the veranda.

For Visitors.

Miss Mary Andrews will entertain a number of Brenau girls and an equal number of young men informally Tuesday evening at her home in Ansley Park to meet her guests, Misses Mary Trippe Ellison, of Mississippi, and Grace Pruett, of Clayton, Ala., students at Brenau.

Wednesday Mrs. L. W. Grey will give a luncheon at the Georgian Terrace in their honor. Wednesday afternoon Miss Annie Maude Schuessler will entertain at the Atlanta Theater for Miss Andrews' guests.

Thursday afternoon Miss Irene Bennett will give a matinee party at the Forsyth for the visitors.

For Miss Courtney Harrison.

Miss Lucy Harrison will entertain at bridge Thursday afternoon for Miss Courtney Harrison, whose marriage to Mr. Loring Raoul will take place Monday.

Art Association Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Atlanta Art Association will be held at 11 o'clock Wednesday, May 28, in the Carnegie Library. The annual election of officers will take place.

Woman's Club Closes.

The final meeting of the Woman's Club this season was held in the club rooms Monday afternoon. The year's reports were presented and the club adjourned for the summer months.

Mrs. A. P. Coles presided. She read a paper on the work of the club the past year. Her paper was followed by talks by other officers.

Mrs. Jarnagin sang "One Fine Day," from Madame Butterly.

Many members made short talks on the club's work. They were Mrs. H. Tucker, Mrs. William Hurd Hillyer, Mrs. Lott Warren, Mrs. H. B. Scott, Mrs. P. H. McGovern, Mrs. Stockbridge, Mrs. Bolling Jones, Mrs. Lindsay Johnson, Rome; Mrs. H. H. Merry, Pelham; Mrs. James Jackson and Miss Alice Baxter.

Officers for the coming year are Mrs. A. P. Coles, president; Miss Alice Baxter, first vice president; Mrs. Linton Hopkins, second vice president; Mrs. Lott Warren, recording secretary; Mrs. Alber: Akers, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. M. M. Davies, treasurer; Mrs. Arthur Powell, auditor and Mrs. Victor Kriegshaber, corresponding secretary.

The club will hold its next meeting in October.

Musical Tea.

There will be a musical tea at the home of Mrs. George A. Wight, 509 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, Thursday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, for the benefit of Circle No. 10 of the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Methodist Church. A musical program will be rendered.

The Jolly Twenty Club.

Miss Hulda Mae Suttles entertained the Jolly Twenty Club at her home in Ira Street recently. Those present were Misses Bertie Johnson, Virginia Weaks, Willie Johnson, Hula Mae Suttles; Messrs. Otis Smith, Warlick Bolinger, Paul Cobler and Arthur Cooke. Hearts-dice was played. The prize, a pretty fan, was won by Miss Bertie Johnson. Refreshments were served. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Alma DeLucia, 45 Eugenia Street, Thursday evening. Officers will be elected.

Kitchens-Head.

Mrs. E. L. Kitchens announces the marriage of her daughter, Mary Estell, to Mr. Lewellyn Deering Head, May 24. The Rev. W. W. West performed the ceremony. A few relatives and intimate friends were present.

Parties for Miss Bobb.

Miss Mildred Bobb, of New Orleans, will be tendered several informal parties as Miss Ruth Reid's guest. One will be an informal tea Wednesday afternoon given by Mrs. Reid for members of a small club of Washington Seminary students. Another will be an informal luncheon at the East Lake Club, followed by a matinee party, to be given Saturday by Misses Freida and Winifred Ashe.

Civic Club.

The Civic Club will meet with Mrs. Thomas Gay at her home in Washington Street Friday afternoon.

Morning Bridgt.

Mrs. E. H. Bussey will entertain at bridge Wednesday morning at her home, 258 Lake Avenue, Inman Park. Her guests will be Misses Josephine Stoney, Frances Connally, Eloise Stewart, Nellie Kiser Stewart, Mary Robinson, Mrs. R. N. R. Bardwell, Mrs. L. S. Crane, Mrs. C. C. McGehee, Jr., Mrs. E. H. Ginn, Mrs. T. K. Starr, Mrs. D. S. Moore, Mrs. H. E. W. Palmer and Mrs. W. C. Coles.

Mrs. S. C. Dobbs' Luncheon.

Mrs. S. C. Dobbs gave a luncheon Tuesday morning to Miss Lina Andrews and Miss Ollie Ferrell, two brides of June. The house was decorated in ferns and pink roses, the buds being used in a large basket on the table where all details were in pink. Favors were small pink wicker baskets filled with French bonbons. To the honor guests were given corsage bouquets of roses.

For Miss Barnes.

Miss Alice Vandiver entertained at bridge Tuesday afternoon for her guest, Miss Gwendolyn Barnes, of Uniontown, Pa. Among those playing were Misses Annie Lee McKenzie, Sara Rawson, Helen Dargan, Helen Hobbs, Marie Pappenheimer, Harriet Cole, Helen Hawkins, Marion Goldsmith, Ruth Stallings, Mary Helen Moody, Isabel Kuhrt, Emma Kate Amorous, Gladys LeVin, Laura Ansley, Nina Gentry, Charles Owens, Frances Connally, Mrs. Forrest Adair, Jr., Mrs. F. Woman's Beauty Is Based on Health

To Have Health, Bowel Movement Is Absolutely Necessary---How Best to Obtain it.

If woman's beauty depended upon cosmetics every woman would be a picture of loveliness. But beauty lies deeper than that. It lies in health. In the majority of cases the oasis of health, and the cause of sickness, can be traced to the action of the bowels.

The headaches, the lassitude, the sallow skin and the lusterless eyes are usually due to constipation. So many things that women do habitually conduce to this trouble. They do not eat carefully, they eat indigestible foods because the foods are served daintily and they do not exercise enough. But whatever the particular cause may be, it is important that the condition should be corrected.

An ideal remedy for women, and one especially suited to their delicate requirements, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of women endorse highly. Mrs. Jennie Snedeker, 1041 West Monroe Street, Chicago, testifies that she is "cured of grave stomach and bowel troubles by using Syrup Pepsin and without the aid of a doctor or any other medicine." All the family can use Syrup Pepsin, for thousands of mothers give it to babies and children. It is also admirably suited to the requirements of elderly people, in fact, to all who, by reason of age or infirmity, can not stand harsh salts, cathartics, pills or purgatives. These should always be avoided, for, at best, their effect is only for that day, while a genuine remedy like Syrup Pepsin acts mildly but permanently.

MRS. JENNIE SNEDEKER.

It can be conveniently obtained at any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded. You will find it gentle in action, pleasant in taste, and free from griping, and its tonic properties have a distinct value to women. It is the most widely used laxative-tonic in America to-day and thousands of families are now never without it.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington Street, Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

IT IS MIRACLE PELICANS EVER WIN ANY GAMES

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE wonder of it is that the Pelicans have won those thirteen games that now grace their records! How did they get them? What happened? The "Felder Mystery" is as nothing compared with it.

On what the Pelicans showed here yesterday, when they lost to the Crackers 8 to 3, they wouldn't be entitled to win thirteen games in ten years.

According to Charley Frank his club isn't altogether to blame. As is the case with most tail-end clubs injuries have done their devastating work. Both of the Pelicans' catchers have been shot away—and Yantz is out of the game for a year with a broken leg. Manush's bum knee has gone wrong again and he is out of it—for an indefinite stay. It is possible that he will never be his old self again. They think so in Toledo, where the accident happened.

The Pelicans are complaining of another affliction of the tail-enders—their nerve is gone. They couldn't take a game if it was handed to them. They are the worst fielders in the league—and they did not improve their averages any in Monday's game.

ELLIOTT DENT more or less vindicated himself Monday. Bill Smith slipped him in and he beat the Pelicans. He weakened a fraction in the eighth and ninth but he showed a lot better than his last out. With plenty of work this man may prove a star. He does not seem at his best yet, but maybe the next time he is worked he will be able to go all the way through.

THIS Cast-Off's Revenge stuff is getting to be a howling farce. "Rebel" Williams, a Cracker-for-a-day a while back, turned up Monday with the fiercest sort of batting and laced out four hits in four times up. He had but one fielding chance, which he looked out for in good style.

William's regular batting stride is so far below that which he showed yesterday as to make the whole thing a blooming burlesque. But it always happens. Generally the cast-offs win the game. Maybe the fact that Williams was an involuntary cast-off saved the Crackers from that misfortune.

WILLIAMS was not the only man who did some surprising batting. Another was Pitcher Dent, who scratched a couple through the infield and beat them to first.

Snedecor put a scratch and a double to his credit. He and Williams made three-fifths of the Pels' hits.

Welchonce put a single and a very timely three-bagger on the records. Welchonce had Dunn and Dent on bases and, of course, something ferocious was needed to score them. Welchonce hit it all right and both of the speed merchants tallied.

Harry Welchonce made six nice out-outs yesterday and added to the half-dozen he made the day before, gave him twelve put-outs in two days. His batting was timely but he made one of those old-time "Atlanta bunts"—a walloping drive to Evans which resulted in a put-out at second.

THE Crackers have two more games with the Pelicans and ought to win them both, unless the Pels show a tremendous improvement. Charley Frank has no pitcher calculated to stop the local batters and his fielders are pretty much to the bad.

Thursday Montgomery turns up for four games. On Friday, because of Federal Decoration Day, there will be two games.

JUNE 6 TO SEE FIRST RACE AT MOTORDROME

WITH a band concert announced for Sunday and with the date for the opening set for Friday night, June 6, and with the board motordrome at the old circus grounds pretty well finished, Atlanta's season of motorcycle racing in the "giant washtub" is closing in.

And you get the idea of what is going to happen from the expression "racing in a giant washtub." That's exactly what it is like. Jack Prince's new track is little more—and no less—than a board track, set on edge. Instead of riding on the floor of the tub the racers hurtle around on the inside of the sides, like cockroaches on the kitchen wall, setting laws of gravity at naught and affording to the spectators the most spectacular form of racing the world has ever known.

Jack Prince really has a big offering for the Atlanta public. His track is the latest and best board track in the world. It represents the last word in the building of board tracks. Jack has gathered in Atlanta already the best motorcycle racers in the world. He has more on the way. He is erecting comfortable seats, every one of which commands a view of the big inclosure. He has engaged a band. He has arranged for a corking car service—a service that will take the patrons of the motordrome from Five Points to the track in barely more than five minutes. He has an attractive program for opening night. As a result he will be greeted by one of the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a motorcycle race in America.

PEACOCK FLEET GIVES BOYS' HIGH BIG SCARE

Boys' High School nine received the closest call ofthe season yesterday afternoon when they were held to a 6 to 5 score by the Peacock-Fleet school aggregation.

Boys' High began the scoring in the first inning when they registered a single tally and each team took its turns throughout the nine chapters at leading the score. The winning tally was registered in the ninth inning when Johnson scored on an error.

Blood Bath Knocks Rheumatism

Remarkable Effects of a Remedy That Actually Irrigates the Entire Blood Supply.

It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect of a most remarkable remedy known as S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In five minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capillary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every emunctory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities. The stimulating properties of S. S. S. compel the skin, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder to all work to the one end of casting out every irritating, every pain-inflicting atom of poison; it dislodges by irrigation all accumulations in the joints, dissolves acid accretions, renders them neutral and scatters those peculiar formations in the nerve centers that cause such mystifying and often baffling rheumatic pains.

And, best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach. If you have drugged yourself until your stomach is nearly paralyzed, you will be astonished to find that S. S. S. gives no sensation but goes right to work. This is because it is a pure vegetable infusion, is taken naturally into your blood just as pure air is inhaled naturally into your lungs.

The great Swift Laboratory has spent millions of dollars in perfecting, producing and placing in the hands of the public this wonderful remedy. So give your blood a good bath with S. S. S., for it knocks the worst forms of rheumatism every time.

You can get it at any drug store at $1 per bottle. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood specific ever discovered. If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice, write to The Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift building, Atlanta, Ga.

ODE.

This is an ode to men of great renown;
An ode to men who laugh and say:
"Pooh! Pooh!"
An ode to men who hold a great game down
And snap their fingers, saying:
"That for you!"
This is an ode to those who laugh and say
"Old P. T. Barnum had the proper dope.
Those rummies will be with us every day
And pay their kale and sit there full of hope."
I love to hear the wallop of the bat
And see the pill go bounding down the dell,
But when a lot of guys grow rich and fat
And then they rub it in—O whatthehel!

Jake Daubert has been suspended for three days. Jake Daubert is a member of the Brooklyn team, which has been winning too many games for the good of the National League.

Tom Jones says he will bet $10,000 on Jess Willard if said Jess Willard fights Gunboat Smith again. Mr. Jones shows his business acumen by speaking thus. It would cost him at least $7.50 to hire a hall.

Not that we care to queer an honest man's business, but our idea of obtaining money under false pretenses is to manage Jess Willard.

Ed Walsh threatens to teach the spitball by mail. Various batters in the American League would give half their year's salaries if Ed would only deliver his spitball by mail.

I could not, even in a pinch.

I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.

BRANNIGAN HANDS M'CUE — FIRST DEFEAT OF CAREER

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27.—Matty McCue, variously known as the Racine terror, the Wisconsin whirlwind and the Racine wonder, is to-day simply plain McCue, for all the terror and whirlwind and wonder were punched out of him by Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg. It was McCue's first defeat, but it was decisive all along the ten-round route.

JAKE ABEL BEATS WHITE IN EIGHT-ROUND FIGHT

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jack McGuigan says he has secured Jack Britton's signature to meet Young Erne at the baseball park in Philadelphia on Decoration Day. Both boys will weigh in at 138 pounds ringside.

* * *

* * *

Jack O'Brien, the Philadelphia heavyweight and one of the real veterans of the game, donned the mitts the other day. He boxed a three-round exhibition with Harry Ramsey in Pottstown, Pa.

* * *

Harry Trendall and Leo Kelly will clash in a scheduled eight-round bout at St. Louis Wednesday night. Trendall and Kelly met several months ago, and the former was credited with the shade.

* * *

Jimmy Perry will have a chance to make himself one of the biggest cards in the boxing game Thursday night. Jimmy is to take on Mike Gibbons in a six-round set-to, and the fur should fly. Reports from the Pennsylvania city state that both boys have trained hard for the go, and are ready for the gong.

* * *

Perry's friends here are anxiously awaiting the result. They point to the fact that Jimmy has been going great lately, and for the first time in months has trained faithfully for a scrap.

Meyer Pries, who will meet Spider Britt in one of the three ten-round bouts to be staged at the Auditorium June 13, paid us a visit yesterday. Meyer says that he is going to bet his end of the purse that he beats Britt. The little Hebrew also says that he is going to be right this time, and will start work for the bout in a couple of days.

* * *

Abe Attell is still gathering in the soft dough. The former featherweight champion has agreed to take on Phil Bloom in the ten-round windup of a special show at the Irving A. C., Brooklyn. Attell is to receive $700, win, lose or draw.

* * *

Tom Jones continues to challenge Gunboat Smith in behalf of his heavyweight, Jess Willard. As yet he has not received any satisfaction from Jim Buckley, manager of Smith.

* * *

Buckley is not worrying much these days. Besides having Smith, he also has a neat meal ticket in Harlem Tommy Murphy, one of the leading contenders for Willie Ritchie's crown.

* * *

Arthur Pelky threatens to quit the ring for good. The big heavyweight has taken McCarty's death to heart, and says he will never be able to enter the ring again and fight at his best.

* * *

* * *

Frank Klaus received the newspaper verdict over Eddie McGoorty in their six-round bout at Pittsburg Saturday night. Both boys were strong at the finish, and could have gone a number of rounds more.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight, had an easy time defeating Kid Scaler the other night. The bout went the full fifteen rounds, but Freddie had a big shade at the finish.

M'CARTY'S DEATH PURE ACCIDENT, FINDING OF JURY

By Ed W. Smith.

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight, Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 27.—Luther McCarty's death in the glove contest here Saturday afternoon with Arthur Pelky was entirely an accident. This was the verdict of the Coroner's jury, determined after two sittings, the decision being reached at 10 o'clock after a deliberation of half an hour. Pelky was exonerated completely from all blame in the case.

Almost immediately after, however, the Northwest mounted police put Pelky under arrest, charging him with manslaughter. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000, Fred C. Lowes, a wealthy real estate man, and Tommy Burns furnishing the surety. The threatened cases against Referee Smith, manager Billy McCarney and Promoter Tommy Burns did not develop, but Smith and McCarney, in lieu of being given their liberty, promised to remain in the city for a couple of days at least and give further testimony. No bonds were asked in their cases.

Following is the full verdict as announced:

"We, the Coroner's jury, find that Luther McCarty came by his death accidentally, the immediate cause being a subluxation of the cervical vertebrae at the Burns arena May 24, but there is no evidence to show how this injury occurred, we, the jury, therefore exonerate Arthur Pelky from all blame whatsoever."

This was signed by P. J. McManus as foreman. The other jurors were H. C. Hersey, R. Jackson, E. W. Schofield, C. P. McCallum, M. Dawson and E. A. Jones.

Trying for Criminal Case.

It was evident from the start that the crown, stung by the severe criticisms of local ministers, intended to make a desperate fight to get a verdict upon which to base a criminal case against Pelky and perhaps the others directly concerned in the unfortunate contest. The prosecuting attorney asked at once that all witnesses be excluded from the room before going on the stand, and carried his point.

Among the witnesses examined in great detail were McCarney, Burns, Smith, two of the local newspaper men and Dr. Moshier, who performed the autopsy. Pelky was not called at all, but remained during the entire case like a caged lion in a nearby room. He has been deeply affected all the way through, and during this hearing appeared almost heartbroken.

Dr. Moshier gave the most damaging testimony against the boxers. He declared that McCarty's neck had been dislocated under the base of the brain and that this injury caused the hemorrhage of the brain that brought about the death. He all but declared that the injury could have come about in no other way but from a blow or from the fall, the latter not being possible, because the boxer's neck did not strike any object as he fell.

Other Fights the Cause.

A highly dramatic incident came right at the close of the hearing when Pelky's attorney called upon Dr. C. J. Stewart, one of the oldest physicians in Alberta, to partially refute the testimony of Dr. Moshier. The physician was asked if he thought McCarty's injury could not have been caused by some other than a blow received. He said it was highly possible and then, rising to his feet, he shook his finger at the prosecutor, who was then questioning him, and during intense silence, shouted:

"It is my opinion that the injury to Luther McCarty was received from Flynn or somebody else in a previous encounter. In this contest, never."

He was excused in a hurry by the prosecutor.

Referee Smith testified that in all there were only about six blows landed during the contest, and that none of them was at all hard or effective and could hardly have caused even an abrasion of the skin. He said the boxing was about even up to the time of McCarty's collapse, and that Luther had turned, smiled and winked at his own corner after the final clinch, collapsing about eight or ten seconds later.

The State attempted to tangle up all the witnesses in an effort to prove that the contest was for the world's white championship; that all championship conditions had been carried out, and that it was in every way a prize fight.

Georgia Ends Successful Season

Prospects for 1914 Appear Good

ATHENS, GA., May 27.—Despite the fact that Georgia lost the series she would have rather won than any other—the one against Tech—the Red and Black has had a remarkably successful season, both financially and in games won and lost.

During the season the team scored a total of 174 runs against 68 for its opponents. Twenty-seven games were played against the best teams in Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and but eight games were lost. Two to Michigan, one to Ohio Wesleyan, one to Clemson, one to Auburn and three to Tech. Nineteen victories were celebrated and most of them were by one-sided scores, while seven were shutouts for Georgia. Five of the games that Georgia lost were by one run.

Outlook for 1914 Good.

Since the season has closed and the tension assumed the normal post-schedule laxity Coach Cunningham has busied himself taking an introspective stock of his material for 1914 and of his present splendid array of talent he expects to have all but three present at the beginning of next season, with a possibility of only two being absent.

Big John Morris, who has earned himself a place on the All-Southern team his first year in college ball, graduates in law in June, and will immediately "hang out his shingle" over in Hart County, from where he hails. Covington, who has played third base for two years and who served four years at center on the football team, is a victim of the four-year rule and after June will also join the ranks of the colonels in the legal profession.

May Lose Hutchens.

Hutchens, the Red and Black's great receiver of this season, is likewise a member of the law department and will receive his "dip" this year. There is but a slight chance for him to return, not unless he leads the team.

Bowden has a contract from the Boston Nationals whenever he sees fit to annex his signature to it and he is liable to become a member of Stalling's Braves at any time after college closes this summer. He has one more year in Southern athletics, and on account of his ability in both baseball and football a strenuous effort will be made to persuade him to return. With his wing in the shape it is now he would find it rough sailing in any league and would certainly have hard going to make good.

Many to Return.

These are about all the sure losses and doubtfuls, which leave a good working nucleus for the team next year. Henderson is slated to return for a place on the football eleven and will draw the first base assignment again. Harrison is taking pharmacy and will have another year, while Clements at shortstop is a four-year man and should make a strong bid for All-Southern next year. Ginn, McWhorter and Erwin all are sure to return and so will Corley and Hitchcock. The latter pitched but few games this year, but with a little more training will be a mainstay next year. Corley has already made an enviable record, although playing his first year in college ball.

Cobb Praised Brown.

This completes the list of regulars, to which may be added Brown, the freshman, who played in several games and who wields the willow in such good style that Ty Cobb pronounced him the most finished batter on the Red and Black squad. He is an outfielder and will be heard from next year. Another sub who filled in to a good advantage while Covington was ruled off the team is Holden, captain of the scrubs. He has another year in college and will be a valuable asset at a future date.

KELLY IN DRAW SCRAP.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Eddie Kelley and "Fighting" Fitzpatrick, local prides, fought ten fast rounds to a draw here last night.

FLYNN'S FIGHT WITH COFFEY WAS A WONDER

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, America's greatest sporting fiction writer, covered the Jim Flynn-Jim Coffey heavyweight bout in New York last Friday night for the New York American. His story is of especial interest to local boxing fans, as Flynn does battle with Jim Savage at the Auditorium-Armory here on June 13. Here is Van Loan's story:

Andrew Charigilone, whose business name is Jim Flynn, stunted the Dublin Giant somewhat in a ten-round argument before the Garden Athletic Club. Jim Coffey had age, weight, reach and 70 per cent of the house with him before he started, but the battle-scarred warrior of Pueblo ripped and tore and slashed his way to victory, whaling away at his taller opponent until he reduced him to six feet of staggering, knock-kneed humanity.

Not since the memorable fight between Ketchel and O'Brien has so much real fighting been crammed into ten rounds, and it was Flynn's experience, aggressiveness and cast iron jaw that won for him.

For some reason best known to himself, Flynn elected to stand still for the better part of the first round and allow Coffey to pop him on the jaw with rights and lefts and the Dublin import made the most of his opportunities. He slammed the veteran 732 times by actual count and brought the gore I streams from one of Flynn's eyes.

Flynn Dives Into Coffey.

The Pueblo product finally grew angry under this constant bombardment and at the end of the round he was driving into Coffey head first, endeavoring to remove his head from his shoulders with wild rights and lefts.

Coffey continued to score in the second and third rounds and Flynn's countenance gradually assumed the appearance of an overripe tomato.

In the fourth round, however, the Pueblo hodcarrier took matters into his own hands and began to lead with his haymaker swings and when the bell rang Coffey was reeling from a succession of swings to the body and jaw.

Flynn Had Coffey Reeling.

In the fifth and the sixth matters were fairly even, but from the seventh until the end the tough old veteran forged into the lead, and though Coffey kept up his left jabs and right crosses there was no power behind them. Flynn herded his taller opponent from one side of the ring to the other endeavoring to land the finishing punch.

Jim Flynn may be on the toboggan, but he is still good enough to put an enduring crimp in the aspirations of many members of the younger set.

NEW CLUB WILL ENTER FEDERAL NEXT SEASON

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 27.—A franchise to play in the new Federal League was granted Toledo by Organizer A. Bobrick. The Ohio Club will not join the third leaguers the current season, however, but Toledo will rake together a strong team for the 1914 crusade.

Bobrick believes that many other cities will be represented in the Federal next year. Buffalo and Detroit are two cities practically sure of entering the third league zone. The Toledo officers will be elected in the near future, and plans will be made for the organizing of the Toledo Club.

THE TRIPLE TIE

$250 in Prizes for Best Solution of "The Triple Tie"

YOU read the first seven installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this eighth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith ant tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain.

Now go on with the story.

"Wait till I tell you, Mr. Callaway," interrupted the manager. "Excuse us a minute, Gordon," he added, "I want to say something to Mr. Callaway," and he drew the president to an inner office, where he told him the little he had been able to learn about Kelly. When he had concluded, Callaway said:

"And you signed him up on the strength of that drive that broke the bull's ribs?"

"Yes, sir; that was enough for me."

"Well, Billy, you know I consider you are best manager in the world. And I reckon you know what you're doing. I will put through this contract, but remember, Billy, you must shoulder all the responsibility. If this Gordon Kelly 'blows up' the laugh will be on you, not me."

"I'll take my chances on that," said the manager, confidently.

"Anyway, it will make good reading in the newspapers. Send for the reporters, Billy, and we'll tell 'em all about your world beater."

The reporters came, they saw, but they were not conquered. They took copious notes of all the manager told them, but they refused to "fall" for Kelly as a ballplayer. They admired his shape and looks but demanded that they be "shown" before committing themselves to extravagant praise of the new man.

"All right, boys; I'll show you," declared Bill Smith, "and, mark my words"—every reporter made a mark in his notebook—"mark my words this fellow will turn out to be a wonder."

"Hope so, Billy," replied the reporters, as they filed out of the room.

They all handled the news in a facetious manner, in one of the newspapers there was ths headline:

"Joshed" in the Papers.

ADONIS JOINS THE CRACKERS

Bill Smith Signs a Player Who Has Never Seen a Game of Ball.

Another newspaper had this headline:

LEARNED BASEBALL IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

Atlanta Club Secured a "World Beater" Who Never Played a Game of Baseball.

And the third newspaper had this to say in its headlines:

COTILLION LEADER TO PLAY BASEBALL

Bill Smith Lands a Handsome Young Man That Knows Everything Except the National Game.

Within twenty-four hours Bill Smith was the recipient of all sorts of pleasant jibes. Every friend or acquaintance he met had something to say about the "world beater." The manager took everything in good part, but mentally acknowledged that he had overplayed himself in making public the signing of Gordon Kelly. "I ought to have said nothing about it," he thought. "Now he will just have to make good or they'll give me the laugh all over the country. But," he added, grimly," that kid will make good, all right, all right."

CHAPTER X.

WHAT Gorden Kelly himself thought of the "funny" stories printed about him in the newspapers no one ever knew. Bill Smith eyed his "world beater" keenly when he reported in the clubhouse at Ponce DeLeon Park early Monday morning. But Kelly was the same, quiet, good natured young man Smith had always found him to be.

"He's a game dog, sure enough," said the manager to himself, and satisfied with this disposal of the case, he began putting on his uniform.

It was the day on which the players of the Atlanta club were to report for spring practice, and it was a fine day overhead. There was to be a month of hard grind for the men in order that they might get into condition for the gruelling pennant race of the Southern League. Players of the rival clubs in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Chattanooga, Mobile, Nashville and Montgomery were supposed to report to their managers about the same time. In other parts of the South, in Athens, Ga., in Augusta, in Hot Springs, Ark., in Marlin Springs, Tex., in Tampa, Fla., and elsewhere the big league clubs of the North, and the Red Sox champions of the world and of the American League; the New York Giants, champions of the National League; the Chicago Cubs, the Detroit Tigers, the Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Browns, of St. Louis, the Cleveland club, the Washington club, the Pittsburg Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds, the Phillies, the Brooklyns and the Boston Braves were already training under the watchful eyes of the big league managers.

In far off California the Chicago White Sox and in Bermuda the New York Americans in charge of Frank Chance, had pitched their training camps. At about this time, too, many of the International League clubs—Buffalo, Toronto, Providence, Montreal, Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Rochester—were scheduled to open their training season below the Mason and Dixon line. Likewise the American Association clubs—St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Toledo, Columbus, Milwaukee and Louisville—were due in the South about this time for their annual visit. All these clubs leave the "Sunny Land" richer every year by about $200,000, of which the railroads and the hotels get the lion's share and the moving picture shows, the laundries and the cigar stands what is left.

Players Arrive.

Smith and Kelly were hardly dressed in their uniforms before the players began to arrive and within half an hour there were fully a dozen of them on hand. There were "Whitey" Alperman, the old National League player, now second-baseman of the Atlanta club, as good as ever fielded a grounder when it was hot or muffed a liner when it was behiskered; Bailey, the heavy-hitting outfielder; McAllister, who wants to become an umpire; Long, Nixon, Smith, the new third-baseman; Musser and Brady, the clever pitchers; Dobard and Kernan, infielders, and Dunn, the catcher.

There were shaking of hands and merry greetings. Gordon Kelly met all the arrivals as fast as they came to the clubhouse. The homes of these players were scattered all over the country. The men had not seen each other since the last of September.

Alperman was the first of the new arrivals to don his uniform. He laced his shoes and then arose and stretched himself.

"Gee, I wish the Southern League season was over," he said, with a yawn.

This remark caused a great laugh in the clubhouse.

"Starting to 'crab' before you've touched a baseball, eh?" observed Bill Smith.

"No," returned the second baseman. "I wanted to get it off my system, that's all. Come on, boys, let's get a move on," and the players, laughing and shouting like schoolboys, ran on the field and began their season's work with that time-honored exercise of tossing the ball in pairs.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

"Study Your Expression," Says Pretty Gertrude Barnes

Miss Barnes in a summery pose.

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"SMILE and curl up your mouth corners," said merry Gertrude Barnes. She had just finished doing five character songs in characteristic costumes. She had run the gamut of emotion from the naughty little "enfant terrible" through the stranded show girl longing for the "old Kentucky home" to the mirth-mad exponent of "Row, row, row." And all this earnest and successful effort to please her audience left her cool, buoyant and ready to give the whole world of girls the kindly benefit of her study of how to have "a sane mind in a healthy body."

"Expression is important for character as well as to aid the search after beauty," said pretty Miss Gertrude, with laughing earnestness. "I used to be afraid to smile all I wanted to for fear I would get those heavy lines from nostril to lip; and then suddenly I became aware of all the hard-looking faces one sees—and the chief reason for the hardness was down drooping, disagreeable looking lips. I decided at once to take a chance on the lesser evil, and began curling my mouth up at the corners, even when I was not particularly anxious to 'look pleasant, please,' now as a result there may be lines around my mouth, but they are lines of pleasantness—aren't they?" she added anxiously. "And sometimes when I am ready to feel cross my mouth keeps on smiling—and I recover."

Merry good nature and kindly interest in life happen to be among the greatest charms of Miss Barnes' animated, expensive face, and very pleasing is the twinkle that reflects from big brown eyes to the merry dimpled corners of her this-is-a-fine-old-world mouth.

"You may safely go on smiling," I said with a smile of my own; "but how about all the other expressions you bring in rapid succession to your face—don't they make lines?"

A Brand-New One.

"Not lines that stay," answered Miss Barnes. "You see, I have a few methods of keeping my skin in good condition. They are cold water, sunburn and tan."

"Sunburn and tan!" I exclaimed. "I thought they were fatal to the fine texture of the skin."

"Perhaps they are fatal to the old, worn-out outer layer they destroy. But they give the fresh new layer waiting underneath a chance, and they help give strong, firm flesh, good, healthy flesh, without which fine-textured skin is just impossible. And sunburn and tan come from plenty of sunlight and fresh air, which are the best things in the whole world for the health and beauty seeker. So there you are in a perfect circle, when you have added plenty of cold water—and served up a fine, healthy skin on a background of strong, firm flesh that can throw off the little lines you make temporarily by twisting your face around into any extreme of expressions you choose.

"Cold water—cold water—cold water! Won't you sing its praises very earnestly, please? And tell all the girls not to be afraid of the charm of expression—they may indulge in it all they like if they have been sunburned and tanned and cold-watered, with good massage-like splashes that make the skin strong enough to throw off the little temporary blemishes of lines and wrinkles.

"Oh, my circle is not complete yet," laughed the cheery star, "I have a little more to say about fresh air. Go out into it all you can, and hunt and ride if you can. Riding is wonderful for the muscles of the limbs; hunting develops the muscles of the waist—but if you can do neither, swim. Anyone can swim if she just chooses to learn how—and it is a most wonderful, inspiring, lung-filling, flesh hardening form of exercise.

A "Water Baby."

"I manufactured a lot of my own healthfulness by going after it very earnestly. Being a water-baby and being an outdoor girl are almost equally important; they both make you healthy, and if you are wise enough to be both your chances of being a beauty increase.

"You see, fresh air and exercise have trained my figure for me, so I don't have to rely on corsets to do it. They have trained my skin for me, so I don't have to hold my face in a mask-like expression in order to avoid lines and wrinkles—so there is my basis, and then I go ahead and try to make the most of my looks, although I know perfectly well that the result is not beauty."

But on this latter bit of information Miss Gertrude Barnes has a monopoly, for good features added to the winsome charm of a bright face and the pose of a healthy body surely deserve the title of beauty.

"Now about arranging your face to the best advantage," said Miss Barnes with the earnest attention to every detail that makes her work so pleasing and conversation with her a true delight. "Of course, it is inadvisable for a girl who wishes to be accepted at face value as a lady to use any makeup on the street, for she is sure to look conspicuous and artificial—for the one all-embracing reason that without the earnest study an actress gives the subject the gentle art of makeup becomes a farce, instead of an art.

"However, any girl can teach her eyebrows to grow in a smooth, pretty curve by brushing them at night and morning with a tiny brush; and good cream will keep the face clean as to its pores as well as on the surface; and a well-poised head adds a final touch of charm. Girls should cultivate the habit of holding their heads with the natural poise of a flower instead of jutting forward like a swag, or bending back with the curve of a lightning-struck tree.

"And learn to design your own clothes. Make them express YOU so your personality will be a rounded whole without one jarring note."

And since there is no jarring note in Miss Barnes' unaffected, wholesome personality, this final bit of advice fits in with the beauty study of an expert in whatever she undertakes—and is well worth following.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it to-day.

Household Suggestions

A little soap shredded into the boiler on washing day makes the clothes a good color, and if you put a small piece into the starch it will make the ironing easier, and it imparts a lovely gloss to the clothes. All the little bits of soap that are left over should be put into a jar with a little water. Place the jar in a moderate oven and leave until the soap has dissolved. This is excellent for washing flannels and woollen things.

In choosing chickens, observe chiefly the length of leg. The best chickens have short legs in proportion to the size of the body; the bones are small and the flesh is white. The best test of age is found at the end of the breast-bone. When the bird is young, the end of the bone is soft and gelatinous, and it becomes gradually harder as the age of the bird increases.

A good way in which to keep plants fresh without watering them when the house must be closed is to take all the plants to the cellar or some other cold place and set them in tubs, with an ordinary brick under each flower pot. Pour into the tubs just enough water to cover the bricks. It is best to place the tubs by an east window if possible.

To boil milk without fear of burning, put two or three tablespoonfuls of water in the saucepan; let it boil rapidly for two or three minutes; add the milk, and it will not burn, however fierce the fire may be.

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Little cousin," he said with the deep tenderness of the man who finds happiness in the joy of the woman he loves, though he be shut from her very life, "there is nothing the matter with me. Life gives me almost all I want. No one can have everything. A banker's life has not much color and passion; I would rather make music than money. But don't think he stupidly discontented—or ungrateful for all I have. I cannot say all I mean! There is one thing in the world—in ALL THE WORLD there is one thing I want. For this I would give the world itself, if it were mine—and all the money in the world. And all life would be music, and color and passion then. And I can't tell you—I must never speak of it to you—and you will never understand!"

Outside sunshine and roses—here renunciation of al lthe joy life must never hold. Jacob felt that he must stifle in this litle room where hope had died. He strode to the doorway—to the gleaming terrace.

The Old Story.

And then slowly, swayed by a feeling she felt must be pity, Charlotte followed him. "Jacob, perhaps I do understand."

"Charlotte! If you do—I shall have spoken no word. In a sense it was not honorable of me—though at first I only meant to warn you, and I never thought; I should guard you against myself. Dear little Charlotte—forget what I said!"

"I cannot forget—so easily!" Charlotte's eyes were very soft, her little quivering lips were dangerously near, but Dame Fate had chosen capriciously to make this a day of unfinished climaxes, and only Frau Gudala's ready wit and loving heart intervened between the girl and a rather tragic scene, for at the particular moment when the sunny doorway framed the pretty picture she made as she stood looking pleadingly at a sorely-tempted Jacob, the hall door opened, admitting the Duke and Frau Gudula and her sons.

Gustavus of Taunus was asking: "I may have the honor of addressing your daughter?" and Grannie saved the situation. "There is wine in the garden—if you will honor me. Charlotte, dear, will you and Jacob show Count Fehrenberg the way? Duke Gustavus, could you make up your mind to a little chat with an old woman? Would you stop here with me—alone—for a few minutes? I ask it as a favor." And so Grannie prepared to make her fight for the happiness of her children.

"May I forget for a few moments that I am an old Jewess—and you a reigning Prince? I want to speak to you about Charlotte. She lost her mother many years ago—and now, at this important time of her life, I must try to be a mother to the child. My son Solomon, you know, sometimes sees only one side to a question, the one he wants to see. But I have looked at this marriage between you and Charlotte from many points of view—have you? Do you see the difficulties and danger?"

Gustavus thought for a moment of the girl who wished him to make this marriage in order that she might be the cousin of a wealthy man instead of a pauper Prince. The tricksy jade with her lying eyes—and for one supreme moment he had thought perhaps he and Evelyn might abdicate and face poverty together—well, she wanted money—on with the dance called life! Prince of Taunus, must dance to his piping—then dance merrily and proudly for all the world to see.

He answered the earnest old Jewess lightly indeed. "Oh, I admit the dangers in this marriage, Baroness. But they make the prospect more fascinating—to me. After all, I do not want my future comfortably laid out for me with mathematical certainty! I prefer to run a little risk! I have lived in a world that grows tired of old games—and is always ready to learn new rules!"

"But marriage is not a game," said the old woman. To her marriage was a Sacrament.

"It may be an adventure if the consequences are not too early seen. Why, my life has ben one series of adventures. When I was a child Napoleon was shaking the ground he marched over. One day my father's little throne fell down, and was picked up and dropped into the Corsican sack! I have known exile, and my crown has been restored to me. I have had money—and it has gone—well, perhaps, I should have had to go after it—pouf!—if your sons had not now once again lifted me upon my little throne. Oh, you see, Baroness, I have had my ups and downs."

"You treat me as a plaything. What blessing can there be for a girl of my people in sharing such a life?"

"When I am married, Baroness"—

"Don't call me that! It is a pretense that does not please me," said the old Jewess impatiently to the reigning Duke of Taunus.

Gustavus exclaimed in amazement: "A pretense! The Emperor has—"

"Your Highness," interposed the old woman, "no Emperor can ennoble me—at my age of seventy-one. Rank is not worn so easily by old woman."

Gustavus of Taunus rose to the supreme height of his manhood as, with a sudden illuminating respect for a fineness he might have failed to glimpse in his little cousin's soul, but saw now in full splendod in the gentle mien of the old Jewess, he answered Frau Gudula: "I think, madame, you belong to a more ancient nobility than my own."

Then, in a little access of mischief, he added: "I shall be proud to be connected with you by marriage."

Frau Gudula had played her highest stake for Charlotte's happiness—and had failed! "Give your compliments to my grandchild, Duke Gustavus, and convince her with them if you can. I wash my hands of this marriage. The matter is beyond me. I pray Providence to guide and guard my little girl." With brimming eyes that scarce could see the sunshine, Frau Gudula walked to the door by the great arbor of pink roses and looked at the merry group sipping her beloved Meyer Amschel's burgundy out in the garden. Well, it is not given to every woman to be the wife of a man she can worship. Poor little Charlotte.

The Pity of It!

Yes, the pity of it—that children, little children, four, five, seven years of age, must be stunted and twisted by long hours of toil. Imagine a little baby girl—your little baby girl—standing all day at a table painfully sorting the petals of artificial roses. Imagine the dirt and squalor of the disease-ridden tenements. The sunlight never penetrates where these babies have to labor—human flowers withered in the making of artificial ones. And the average wage for each child is 2 cents an hour. Imagine it—in this country of ours that we call enlightened.

They Need Your Help

You, the thinking men and women of America, must come to the rescue of the forlorn little six-year-old who toils so long for so meagre a pittance. Hers is a tearful plea that should reach the heart of every parent among us.

Do Your Part

Good Housekeeping Magazine, with the vigor that has always characterized its work, is attacking the evils of child labor and its attendant home work. It is employing such fearless investigators as Judge Lindsey, George Creel, Mary Alden Hopkins, Mary Louisa Chamberlain. But it cannot carry on the campaign alone. You must do your share toward rooting out this cancerous evil. Buy the June issue now and see how the fight is being waged.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

WAIT A WHILE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am 22, and have been keeping company with a certain girl for six weeks. At first it seemed love at first sight, but lately she has grown cold. I buy her candy and flowers and try to please her, and her parents have taken a liking to me. But she now assumes an indifferent air. Do you think my proposal would be accepted? I am madly in love with her.
S. S.

Has it occurred to you that she may have grown tired of seeing so much of you? Try an application of that old adage, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

In any event, a proposal after an acquaintance of only six weeks is apt to be premature.

DON'T LET HIM KNOW.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of 18 years and in love with a man of 30 years. This man is a friend of my folks. He has never taken me out and he is very nice to me, and always talks of getting married. He doesn't know I love him. Please tell me how I could win his love.
A SPANISH GIRL.

Suppose I were to tell you to let him know of your love. You are only 18, and girls of that age transfer their hearts easily. If you let him know of your love to-day, the chances are you will love another man to-morrow. Spare yourself humiliation by keeping your love a secret until he asks for it.

NOT IMPROPER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Do you think it proper for a girl who is keeping steady company to ask the man when she will see him next? A. L. W.

Their intimacy warrants such a question from her, but I would not want her to be urgent or persistent, and it is in better taste if she lets him take the initiative in making future engagements.

MOTHERS SHOULD CALL FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady and wish to know if it is proper for the young lady's mother to call on my mother, or my mother to call on her, my mother being the elder. We will soon be engaged. S. S. L.

Such overtures should come from the family of the man, never from the family of the girl.

THE LADY FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Which is proper: For a lady to greet a gentleman first, or a gentleman to greet a lady, while walking on the street? ARCO.

The lady is the first always to give some sign of recognition.

Do You Know---

Some curious experiences seem to have befallen Mr. William Campbell, late of the Black Watch, who has just finished a 50,000-mile walk, in a kilt, through India, Ceylon, Australia and New Zealand. In Italy his dancing of a Highland fling in the street led to arrest, a New Zealand chief offered him a wife in exchange for his costume, and in Australia he lavished money on eau-de-cologne in order to keep the mosquitoes away from his knees. He was nearly murdered at a religious festival in Ceylon, being taken for a devil.

The Quebec agency of the Canadian Marine Department has received word that a gas buoy which drifted from its position in the lower St. Lawrence River during the winter of 1912 has been picked up by the lightship at Hellewick, New South Wales. It is supposed that the buoy drifted round Cape Horn, a distance of 16,000 miles. The date of the buoy's disappearance is not given, but even if it took place early in the winter of 1911-12 the buoy would have to drift 30 miles a day or more to reach New South Wales in the time.

Snared!

With the Golden Apple of Love for Bait

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

NELL BRINKLEY SAYS

IN this fashion is it done! In the depths of a lovely forest, velveted underfoot in emerald-moss and sewn thick with flowers—forget-me-nots, heartease and such like soft names—hide certain wary wights with very fat cheeks and tummies! Over the runways they set their snares—a cunning loop of golden cord—thrown over a high tree-bough and down, as high from the ground as—a maid's waist. On the green moss under the shining loop (which is so like a slanting sunbeam that a strolling lady would never catch it in her bright eye in the world) they drop a golden apple. And on the golden apple the sun smites hard enough to enchant and blind a maid with its flame. One malicious wight, the coldest-blooded of all, shins up the tree into the leafy green shadow and lies there with his bow drawn and a keen-tipped arrow necked. The rest fall upon the other end of the cord. They hold their breath, their eyes harden and brighten. The feathery curl on the tip top of one's head waves idly in the wind! One itches his pink heel with the toes of his other foot. One breathes too loud and gets a fat knee in his back for his stupidity. They WAIT—the cord a bit slack. Down the runway comes a maid, with soft black hair, primroses over her ears, a narrow slashed skirt (the better to dance the Tango in), silver buckles on her shoes and an unsuspecting sweet blue eye! And the sun on the golden apple smites into her eyes! The wights behind the tree-bole stiffen and dig their toes into the moss. With a little cry the maid pinches up her silken skirt between a forefinger and thumb and runs swiftly—in a soft rush—she dives down with a greedy hand for the apple in the moss. Her head hovers within the big golden loop. She straightens—ah-h-h down slithers the noose over her shoulders—"Heya"—the wights lean and pull like mad, and my lady's body is twirling in midair, her little heels kicking nothing! "Heya!"—the wight in the tree lets his arrow go singing straight to the captive's heart—and another maid is snared!

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The father was impressed of a sudden with the fact that, while this affair was of supreme import to himself, it was, after all, of still greater significance to his son. To himself, the chief concerns were of the worldly kind. To this boy, the vital thing was something deeper, something of the heart; for, however absurd his feeling, the truth remained that he loved the woman. Yes, it was the son's name that Mary Turner had taken, as well as that of his father. In the case of the son, she had taken not only his name, but his very life. Yes, it was, indeed, Dick's tragedy. Whatever he, the father, might feel, the son was, after all, more affected. He must suffer more, must lose more, must pay more with happiness for his folly.

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect, but he could not let the situation go without protest, protest most vehement.

"Dick," he cried, and his big voice was shaken a little by the force of his emotion, "boy, you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow." He stood very erect, staring steadfastly out of his clear gray eyes into those of his son. His heavy face was rigid with feeling; the coarse mouth bent slightly in a smile of troubled fondness, as he added more softly: "You owe me that much."

The son's eyes met his father's freely. There was respect in them, and affection, but there was something else, too, something the older man recognized as beyond his control. He spoke gravely, with a deliberate conviction.

Gilder's Voice Rang Out.

"I owe something to her, too, Dad."

But Gilder would not let the statement go unchallenged. His heavy voice rang out rebukingly, overtoned with protest.

"What can you owe her?" he demanded, indignantly. "She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally, it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. The courts hold that is only a part of the marriage actually. The fact that she doesn't receive you makes it simpler, too. It can be arranged. We must get you out of the scrape."

He turned and went to the desk, as if to sit, but he was halted by his son's answer, given very gently, yet with a note of finality that to the father's ear rang like the crack of doom.

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

That was all, but those plain words summed the situation, made the issue a matter not of advice, but of the heart.

Gilder persisted, however, in trying to evade the integral fact of his son's feeling. Still he tried to fix the issue on the known unsavory reputation of the woman.

"You want to stay married to this jail bird!" he stormed.

"She Is Justified."

A gust of fury swept over the boy. He loved the woman, in spite of all; he respected her, even reverenced her. To hear her thus named moved him to a rage almost beyond his control. But he mastered himself. He remembered that the man who spoke loved him; he remembered, too, that the word of opprobrium was no more than the truth, however offensive it might be to his sensitiveness. He waited a moment until he could hold his voice even. Then his words were the sternest protest that could have been uttered, though they came from no exercise of thought, only out of the depths of his heart.

"I'm very fond of her."

That was all. But the simple sincerity of the saying gripped the father's mood as no argument could have done. There was a little silence. After all, what could meet such loving loyalty?

When at last he spoke Gilder's voice was subdued, a little husky.

"Now that you know?" he questioned.

There was no faltering in the answer. "Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. Then abruptly the young man spoke with the energy of perfect faith in the woman. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way, in her own mind, anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison. She feels that the world owes her—"

But the older man would not permit the assertion to go uncontradicted. That reference to the woman's innocence was an arraignment of himself, for it had been he who sent her to the term of imprisonment.

"Don't talk to me about her innocence!" he said, and his voice was ominous. "I suppose next you will argue that, because she's been clever enough to keep within the law since she's got out of State's prison, she's not a criminal. But let me tell you—crime is crime, whether the law touches it in the particular case or whether it does not."

Gilder faced his son sternly for a moment, and then presently spoke again with deeper earnestness.

"There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up."

The son met his father's gaze with a level look in which there was no weakness.

"I've told you, Dad—" he began.

"You must, I tell you," the father insisted. Then he went on quickly, with a tone of utmost positiveness. "If you don't, what are you going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters—for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. He was furious at this supposition that she would continue in her irregular practices.

But the father went on remorselessly. "They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the Rogues' Gallery, but they will take another. Yes, and the imprints of her fingers, and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. It was blasphemy to think of her in such case, subjected to the degradation of these processes. Yet, every word had in it the piercing horrible sting of truth. His face whitened. He raised a supplicating hand.

"Father!"

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine." There was a little pause, and the father stood rigid, menacing. The final question came rasping. "What are you going to do about it?"

Dick went forward until he was close to his father. Then he spoke with profound conviction.

"It will never happen. She will go straight, Dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder once again put his hand tenderly on his son's shoulder. His voice was modulated to an unaccustomed mildness as he spoke.

"Be sensible, boy," he pleaded, softly. "Be sensible!"

Dick dropped down on the couch, and made his answer very gently, his eyes unseeing as he dwelt on the things he know of the woman he loved.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"ME and brother Wilfred spent a week-end up in the country, and I have just came back," said the Manicure Lady. "I would rather than not spend all my week-ends in the country, George, because the air is so restful up there, but I guess Wilfred don't want to go back no more to the town where we was.

"You see, George, my poor, deluded brother had an idea that he could sail into the little town where we was going and just tell them that he was from New York. He thought that would make him an idol in said town. I didn't think so for a minute, George, because I know how people is in small towns. They mind their own business and everybody else's, but they don't care a rap where they find out you came from. You might as well try to make a gorilla kiss your hand as to make a small towner respect you because you are a New Yorker. They simply don't care where you are from, and the way they treated my poor brother I guess the bigger the town you came from the less they care."

They Go to Europe.

"I don't blame them," said the Head Barber. "I don't see why a man should figure himself a favorite just because he lives in a little New York flat and rides up and down town in the subway. How is that going to make a man wise? Most of the fellows that was born in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge—the kind that comes in here sometimes to get shaved—ain't got much idea of the great country they are living in. If they save up a little dough, they don't go out to the wonderful Pacific Coast. No; they go to Europe and get bunked. They pay a guide a lot of dough to show them some place where an English king had his nephews choked to death in a tower, and then they come back and tell about their travels."

"I hope you ain't doing a monologue, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I was trying to tell you something about this week-end party, if you are enough of a gent to listen. Well, Wilfred and me reached the town all right, and the minute we got to the hotel and were seated with our country friends around the table, poor brother pulls the very phrase that I asked him not to. 'This is fair,' he says to the company, 'but little old New York for mine.' I knew right off that he had made a bonehead play, because I seen the folks look at each other kind of funny, but he doesn't gete wise, not Wilfred. 'The reason I like Manhattan,' he babbles right on, 'is because Manhattan is the market for brains. I write, as perhaps some of you people know,' says poor brother, 'and the brains of the country, in literature, all flock to New York. If I were a farmer, I would like it up here, but being a writer, I have to be in the heart of the literary world, little old New York.'

A Quiet Fellow.

"There was a nice, quiet-looking fellow in the party, George, that I seen looking over my fool brother kind of sly and unobstructive like. He was dressed rough, because he was on a fishing trip, but I seen right away from his calm, well-bred misdemeanor that he was a gent. He listened a long time while Wilfred was telling them what a terrible strain it is on a writer to keep writing, and he even stood for my brother's reciting some of his own poems right at the table with his mouth full of chow-chow and new bread. Then he got up and went out with a smile at me. I seen then and there that him and me would be good friends, because we both knew Wilfred through and through.

"Honest to goodness, George, do you know who he was? I asked one of the ladies, and she told me. The gent that had been listening to Wilfred's hot air about writing and writers was George Ade, who wrote 'Fables in Slang' and 'Horatius at the Bridge' and 'David Copperfield' and a lot of other books and plays."

"Did Wilfred find out who he was?" asked the Head Barber.

"Sure he did, but it didn't feaze him. He said that the time would go swift for the party with two clever writers at the same table!"

The Care-Free Spin

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE is this difference: She is an Old Maid if she is old fashioned and resigned, and a Bachelor Girl if she fights hard.

It must be dreary to be a Spin and have no husband come home and growl all evening about the high cost of living.

When a Spin knows how to smooth a man's plumage an ideal wife is lost to the world.

No one can save money quite as fast as a Spin after she has put aside the curling iron with the conviction that no man is worth having.

When all her friends unite in saying "What a good time she has," you can bet "She's is either a Spin or a widow.

It is easy to compliment the mother of children, but when a woman has become a real old Spin the only way to reach her is to appeal through what she learned at school.

"The top of her voice" is a common expression, but the top note depends entirely on whether a woman is married or a Spin. Mothers reach a high key through experience in screaming at the children, their husbands and the dog, but the top of a Spin's voice is a low pitch, and when she tries to raise it it becomes a squeal. The top of a mother's voice would stop a fire engine, the top of a Spin's voice isn't loud enough to call the cat home from the next yard.

Once Upon a Time there lived an Old Maid. She did not call herself a Spin. She was frank about it, and admitted she was an Old Maid, despising such subterfuges as Spin and Bachelor Girl. The Old Maid was lonesome, and lonesomeness for an Old Maid is DANGEROUS. She was more lonesome than her friends realized, and one day left Lonesome Land by walking from the altar with a Man. One morning a few years later her husband left the house after a stormy scene, banging the door with such violence that pictures and plates tumbled from the walls. The noise awoke the Twins, and they set up a Howl. "At least," said the ex-Old Maid, as she tried to soothe the crying babies and pick up pictures and broken glass and china at the same time, "I Am No Longer Lonesome." And having said that she said All!

ONLY FOUR DAYS LEFT TO ENTER GEORGIAN'S GREAT PONY CONTEST

Four days remain in which contestants can be nominated for The Georgian and The American pony outfit contest. Several boys and girls are believed to be preparing to enter at the last hour possible, and with a considerable number of votes pledged, believing there will be some advantage in taking the leaders by surprise.

This, though, is not likely to avail them much. Probably they believe the leaders are napping, but nothing could be further from the truth. Besides, late entrants are losing the value of vote coupons more than fifteen days old.

Those already in the race remain closely bunched.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook so far has been the greatest vote producer. She had 59,960 votes Tuesday, while Florence Greenoe in her district has polled 40,620.

Several other contestants have passed the 40,000 mark. George Rossen, in District 1, has 41,620; Miss Robert Harbour, in District 2, 48,055. Ross Greer and Mose Brodkin, in the City Carriers' and Newsboys' race, are running neck and neck with 42,145 and 41,700, respectively.

Another close contest, though the vote totals are not so large, is the contest for school boys and girls outside Georgia, where Lena Mae Smith, Knoxville, Tenn., has 16,715 votes, and Fain E. Webb, Jr., 16,650.

Names and standing of contestants follow:

Plot Charged by Defense of Gibson

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May 27.—The defense of Burton W. Gibson, the New York lawyer, accused of drowning Countess Rosa Menschik Szabo in order to get her estate, was revealed to-day.

Dr. Otto H. Schultz, Coroner's physician of New York, who testified that the countess had been strangled to death, will be charged with forcing the tongue down the Countess' throat while performing the autopsy, thus giving the appearance of strangulation.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—There will be showers to-night in New England, the Middle Atlantic and northern portion of the South Atlantic States, continuing Wednesday in New England, New York and New Jersey. Elsewhere east of the Mississippi River the weather will be fair to-night and Wednesday, with higher temperatures Wednesday throughout the upper Lake and Western lower Lake regions and the Ohio Valley.

General Forecast.

Following is the general forecast until 7 p. m. Wednesday:

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night in north and central portions.

Virginia—Showers to-night; Wednesday cloudy.

North Carolina—Showers to-night and Wednesday.

South Carolina—Showers to-night or Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night.

Florida—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

Alabama—Fair to-night; cooler in north and central portions; Wednesday fair, warmer in north portion.

Mississippi—Fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly warmer Wednesday in the interior.

Tennessee—Fair to-night; Wednesday fair, warmer.

Louisiana—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Opinion on Government reports seem to have crystallized around 83 per cent, which, if June reports are indicative of final production, should be interpreted bearishly.

Norden & Co.: It is possible there may be further selling in an attempt to discount a good bureau report.

Sternberger, Sinn & Co.: It is still a weather market.

Newburger, Worms & Nawman: All strong spots should be taken advantage of to sell, especially the new crops.

Logan & Bryan: We favor sales on any upturn from this level.

Thompson, Towle & Co.: Market may go lower, but we do not advise selling at present.

SHORT COVERING PUTS COTTON UP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Poor cables, coupled with bearish weather map, led to active selling at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 3 points lower than Monday's final. Offerings were well absorbed and soon after the call the loss was made up.

During the forenoon the market was firm and under persistent buying from the large spot interests shorts covered considerable short lines. McFadden, Riordan and Parrott led the buying movement. Riordan was credited with purchasing about 12,000 to 15,000 bales of October and December, which was said to be for Wall Street. The character of the buying chased shorts to cover. Offerings were very light and scattered. It is believed by many that there is still an existing short interest in the market.

October and December displayed extraordinary firmness. October advanced 8 points and December 9 over the initial level. Other positions followed the advance moderately, advancing 3 to 7 points.

The advance came in the face of extremely bearish advices from all parts of the belt, as well as from abroad. A cable said:

"The market feels the influence of Continental buying, spinners well stocked, and notwithstanding a fair Manchester business we expect a small spot market in Liverpool for the present. Think market will be lower if crop accounts continue favorable."

Weather developments overnight were of the most favorable character. No rains fell of consequence. The map promises very favorable weather overnight; fair and warmer in the western and central States; cloudy and probably showers in the Carolinas and East Tennessee warmer.

During the afternoon session the market found good support from many conservative sources. Offerings were extremely light. One large Western operator was credited with covering about 99 bales on a narrow market, which caused October and December to advance to 11.20, while other positions held relatively steady, prices aggregated a net gain of about 8 to 13 points from the opening.

The National Ginners' Association of Memphis in its condition and acreage report placed the condition of the crop at 80.7 and gave acreage an increase of 3.2 per cent increase. The report was construed as bearish, but had practically no effect upon the market.

The market is an evening-up affair over the triple holiday period and the pending government report to follow the holidays.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 2 to 8 points from the closing figures of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Liverpool developed further weakness, showing futures this morning about 2 points lower than due. Spots, 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. London news says that Bulgarians fired on the Greek fleet. War between the allies nearer and this new menace distracts attention from peace negotiations.

Weather conditions continue very favorable. The map shows fair and warm weather west of Alabama, cloudy in the Atlantic and Tennessee; some nice rains in Tennessee and Western North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy weather and showers in the Carolinas, where rain is needed, and fair and warmer weather over the rest of the belt.

The market was idle during the first two hours around last night's closing prices, waiting for the weekly Government weather report at 11 o'clock, which is expected to be partly unfavorable, as it will cover the three-day cool spell of last week. Some little scalpers' buying caused a few points advance.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Reports to the Journal of Commerce state that the cotton crop is backward in the Carolinas and about normal in Tennessee. The acreage is slightly increased and the stands in general are poor. Rain was badly needed, but showers have been general recently. Some replanting in Tennessee with an increase in the acreage. In North Carolina the season is about two weeks late; prospects are much brighter since the rains. South Carolina condition may fall below last year, when it was 79. Tennessee condition shows an increase of nearly ten points over last year, when it was 73.5.

* * *

It is believed that a good deal of short cotton has been covered during the past few days and a lower market is predicted, based on favorable weather conditions and reports which are coming in. Around the close yesterday Riordan bought about 10,000 bales of October and December. McFadden brokers also bought. However, they sold old crop positions.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable. Shows fair and warmer in western portion of the Atlantics. Cloudy and warm in the Atlantics and Tennessee. No rain except in Tennessee and parts of North Carolina, where it will be beneficial.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Favorable crop reports came from many quarters, and the cotton market declined. Of course, a wave of bearish sentiment passed over the rings and low-price people discussed the outlook for declines in more or less confident tones. Ten cents for new crops was talked of as a sure thing, nine cents as a probability, eight cents as likely, and, according to one lone bear, seven cents as a possibility. All the while the bull faction kept quiet and permitted the spell of depression to run its course. At the close underlying strength seemed to develop, and students of the market expressed the belief that near future fluctuations would range within 20 points.

"The weather over Sunday was very favorable, temperatures were higher and, on the face of things, the crop seemed to be in a fair way to make seasonable progress. The rain on the fence, while admitting the presence of much more favorable climatic conditions, was inclined to believe that the flood of favorable crop advices, coming right at the close of the period on which the Government's condition bulletin on June 2 will be based, traces some of this inspiration to a possible need of an offset to any relatively low condition that might have been reported on May 25 from the less favorable sections."

Weil makes the condition of the crop 84.

McFadden, Parrott and Riordan were the leading buyers to-day. Mohr and Hentz probably the best sellers.

Wall Street covered through Riordan.

Riordan was also a big buyer of the new crop positions for the Pell interests.

* * *

Memphis wires: "Generally fair weather will prevail in the cotton States except in the extreme northeastern sections, where showers are likely. Good weather in the central belt will be quickly followed by warmer. No rain of consequence has fallen. Favorable map."

WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Mean temperatures were normal or slightly above over the extreme eastern portion of the cotton region and in northwestern Texas. Elsewhere there was a deficiency of from one to six degrees. The weekly mean temperatures ranged from 70 to 80 degrees over the south, from 66 to 74 over the central and from 64 to 76 over the western portion of the cotton growing States. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and Bentonville, Ark., and the highest, 76, at Jacksonville and Tampa, and at San Antonio and Del Rio, Texas.

Precipitation occurred throughout the cotton region, except that there was no rain at a few stations in southern and western Texas.

The precipitation was generally heaviest over the central and northeastern portion of the cotton region, the amounts over those portions being generally more than two inches.

TALLULAH CASE IS TRIED ON MERITS

Demurrers of Both State and the Power Company Overruled. Testimony Is Heard.

CLAYTON, GA., May 27.—Demurrers of both the State of Georgia, plaintiff, and the Georgia Railway and Power Company, defendant, were overruled to-day in the suit to determine the ownership of the gorge at Tallulah Falls and the case was ordered tried on its merits by Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northeastern Circuit. The introduction of testimony began when court reconvened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

When court assembled at 10 o'clock this morning both sides announced ready for trial and in a short time the jury was drawn and sworn. The jurors are among the most prominent citizens of Rabun County.

The contention of the State is that the land in the Tallulah Falls gorge was never granted by the State and that land grants along the falls extended only to the brink of the gorge, thereby leaving the title to the gorge with the State.

The power company contends that the land grants on either side of the gorge extend to the river and include the gorge, and that the Legislature of 1905 passed a resolution estopping the State from laying claim to the gorge land.

No Action Yet on Street Car Service

Definite action on the part of the State Railroad Commission requiring the Georgia Railway and Electric Company to give better street-car service in Atlanta did not develop Tuesday morning as expected. A decision is expected Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning.

The commission also has under consideration a request of the Southern Express Company for an increase from 15 to 25 cents as the minimum on a shipment of milk. Dairymen of Fairburn, Ga., protested.

Budget for June to Be Made Up Friday

Council's Finance Committee Tuesday closed its public hearing, and Chairman W. G. Humphrey announced that a meeting would be held Friday morning to make up the June budget.

"We have about $71,000 for special appropriations," said Chairman Humphrey, "but I have no idea as yet how the committee will decide to divide it. Requests for new money amount to about $500,000."

Imaginative Drunk Thinks He Is Slayer

W. W. Baughn, whose home is on Broyles Street, outlined another basement murder mystery to the police Monday night. He rushed up to a patrolman in Forsyth Street and said he had just killed a man and had thrown him through a basement window of the Austell Building. The policeman hurried to the Austell Building and found a shattered plate glass window, but no dead man.

Before the Recorder Tuesday Baughn said he was drunk and did not remember what he said. He was put on probation.

Works Years With Heart Almost Bare

ST. JOHN, N. B., May 27.—Jose Carey, whose case was regarded as unique by the medical profession, is dead. Carey underwent an operation in Boston six years ago for lung trouble and part of the left lung and several of the ribs were removed, leaving the heart practically exposed. Carey recovered his usual health and worked daily for the last four years.

Cat With Harelip Whistles Like Boy

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May 27.—Stanislaus Czynszky, of Prospect Avenue, West Springfield, is the owner of a cat with a harelip, which whistles with the facility of a schoolboy, but can not mew or, at least, never has mewed.

Neighbors have suggested that the cat would prove a treasure to a maker of catgut violin strings.

Baptist Ministers Hear Dr. Donaldson

The Rev. C. N. Donaldson, D. D., of Charleston, S. C., who was pastor of the Inman Park Baptist Church for six years, delivered an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Atlanta Monday afternoon.

Dr. Donaldson will return to Charleston Sunday. His many friends were glad to see him and to learn he is pleased with Charleston.

FIFE, SECRETARY TO SAMUEL INMAN, DIES

Manse Fife, 21 years old, died Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at the residence, 18 Argard Avenue, after a short illness.

Mr. Fife was private secretary to Samuel Inman. He is survived by his father, J. A. Fife; five brothers, Walter, J. C., H. A., W. B., and Edward S. Fife, and a sister, Mrs. J. T. Gibson.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

3 Bandits Caught After Battle With Posse; 2 Wanted

MARIETTA, GA., May 27.—Frank Nation is in jail here to-day and John Goddard and a man named Haney are held prisoners at Cartersville, following a battle near Hugh, a small station between Cartersville and Marietta, with a pursuing posse in which Nation and Deputy Sheriff J. P. Gaines were wounded. A fourth member of Nation's gang escaped by swimming a river, after being chased six miles by dogs and officers.

Nation and his associates are said to have attempted to hold up and rob Thomas Sorrells, telegraph operator at Hugo.

Bartow County officers telephoned to Marietta for assistance and Deputy Sheriff George Hicks went to Hugo with dogs. They followed a trail to Nation's house across a mountain, where the battle took place.

February Cleared By Chief Lanford

Chief of Detectives Lanford exonerated G. C. February, his secretary, of any genuine intention of "selling out" to Colonel Thomas B. Felder, in a statement Tuesday afternoon.

"The deal with Felder was taken up with my consent and under my instructions," said Chief Lanford. "It was done on the suggestion of A. S. Colyar, and if there is any blame to be attached to the laying of the dictograph trap for Felder I am the one responsible. I thought that if they were planning to steal that Coleman affidavit and other papers they would be caught with the goods."

Atlantans to See 'Knoxville-Made' Fair

Chattanooga's exhibit of goods made in that city is regarded by Atlantans as a model for the exposition planned here, and for that reason about 50 members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association will go to Chattanooga Thursday to see the display.

A special car will be attached to the W. & A. train leaving Atlanta at 8 a. m.

Man of Mystery Is Likened to Hoch

CHICAGO, May 27.—The coroner will be asked to-day to investigate the death of Homer Edward Morrison, who was involved in a mystery which may rival that of Johann Hoch.

Two women already have appeared who say they were defrauded by a man named Morrison, and the police have a record of a third woman, who claims also to have been victimized.

Charges Attempt To Blind Him; Sues

Asserting that W. M. Henry tried to put his eyes out with an umbrella, O. M. Sutton has filed suit in the Superior Court against Henry for $2,500 damages.

Sutton alleges that Henry showered blows on him with the umbrella; jabbed the end of the umbrella into the back of his neck, into his stomach and against his back; threw him into a corner; beat him and then dragged him out and tried to poke the umbrella point into his eyes.

Governor Attends Lucy Cobb Finals

Governor Joseph M. Brown left for Athens Monday, where he will attend the commencement exercises of Lucy Cobb Institute. The Governor's daughter, Miss Cora Brown, is a member of the graduating class.

While in Athens the Governor also will pay a visit to the University. He is not scheduled to make any addresses on the trip.

U. S. Drops Inquiry Into Phthisis 'Cure'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—By order of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo the Public Health Service to-day refused to make any further investigation into the so-called Duket "cure" for tuberculosis.

Duket is a Chicago surgeon who is backed by former Senator Lorimer and other influential men.

SISTERS SEE BROTHER SLAIN.

MERIDIAN, MISS., May 27.—Following an altercation, the cause of which is not known, Gifford Beattie shot and killed Floyd Hardin. Hardin's two sisters witnessed the killing. Beattie is in jail.

U. S. Court Dissolves Coaster Brake Trust

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 27.—A final decree dissolving the Coaster Brake Trust was entered in the United States District Court here to-day.

The decree in the case was agreed to by all parties at interest without court proceedings. There is, though, a criminal case brought under the Sherman law pending.

Prisoners Shown Favors, Says Judge

SAVANNAH, GA., May 27.—Recorder John E. Schwarz, in police court, to-day announced that he had notified Judge Walter G. Charlton, of Superior Court, and the Chatham County Commissioners that officers at the county jail were showing favoritism to prisoners sentenced from Police Court.

Rules Motherhood At 70 Is Impossible

WASHINGTON, May 27.—"In the light of human experience a court is justified in treating the prospect of a woman of seventy becoming a mother as an utter impossibility," declared Justice Van Orsdel, in the Court of Appeals of the District of Columbia in a ruling in a land suit here to-day.

Brass Band Funeral Provided in His Will

DANVILLE, ILL., May 27.—In addition to necessary expenses of his funeral, William Cramer, a Danville saloon keeper who died to-day, set aside $1,100 to be spent by two lodges to which he belonged for an elaborate funeral parade.

He wrote instructions several days ago about the line of march and the musical numbers to be played by the two bands.

Silent Columbus Slayer Gets Life

COLUMBUS, GA., May 27.—Through an agreement between Solicitor General Palmer and attorneys for Bill Creen, charged with murder, a verdict of guilty with recommendation that he be given a life sentence in the penitentiary, was approved by Judge Price Gilbert to-day. Creen was immediately sentenced.

Creen has not spoken since March 16, one week after he killed O. D. Kitchens, an insurance man. He was placed on trial this morning.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

No Better Chickens Than the White Plymouth Rocks

They Are as Beautiful as They Are Useful and Profitable—Are Good as They Look.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

In our estimation there are no better chickens than the White Plymouth Rocks. When carefully bred and rightly handled they are as beautiful as they are useful and profitable.

With their glossy white plumage, red comb, wattles and earlobes, and yellow legs, they look fine enough to eat, and they are just as good as they look.

I am not raising them and I have none to sell, but I know what I am talking about, for I have handled them in years past and speak from experience.

If you want to produce good ones, however, you must be mighty careful to breed from first class stock. If you are just starting in the business you can not use too much care to produce a start of the very choicest breeders. Then let your selections each year be the very best. Cull out the poor ones, both as to shape and color. Keep nothing that does not show a robust constitution, the ones with the broad breasts and backs, heavy thighs, nice and tapering, arched necks, with a low carried tail. Such a specimen is not only good looking in shape, but contains stamina worth considering. Weed out those with the slim, straight necks, long and narrow or roached backs; legs too long, standing too close together at the knees; tail slim and carried too high, forming an angle with the back. These points of defect are very often seen, and upon what some call good specimens. Of course, they are rarely all seen upon the same fowl, but frequently two or more are.

High Type Utility Fowl.

When you have the very best possible shape in a White Rock for the show room you have a utility fowl of the very highest type. There is no doubt about that. As to color, the Standard says pure white throughout, web quill and all. You see there are no qualifications. Simply white. Any departure from this is defective, such as creaminess, brass and the like, brass simply being the creaminess intensified into a positive yellow, as seen upon poor specimens of males two years old or older. This is one of the things we have to fight against in our endeavors for the best. Gray or black specks are quite common and are often distributed through the plumage in pin head sizes, and are defective according to size and number and the intensity of color. Positive black spots of any kind will disqualify. A good, pure, white plumage throughout, free from any creamy tinge, even though it contains a few minute specks, is much more desirable in every way than one that has a tendency to be creamy. Do not throw that kind away, for it is a hard matter to get a pure white one. The ear lobes should be bright red, as in all the different varieties of rocks, any permanent, or what might be called enameled white, disqualifies. Look out for this, as it only takes a mighty few of the right kind of black specks to throw them out. What the Standard terms positive white, in treating with white in specimens demanding red lobes, is a white that seems coated right on to the surface, and not a changeable white that shows white one minute and reddens the next.

Single Comb.

The comb upon both the male and female should be single and straight upon the head, not soft enough to turn to one side or the other or to wrinkle in its course from where it starts at the base of the head to the blade at the rear. A comb of five points is the one desired, although a four-point one would not be so very objectionable in the eyes of the best breeders. Look out for feathers, stubs or down on the shanks, which should be clean and free from any appearance of feathers. One can soon learn to detect the greater defects and the little ones will come to light later on in the game.

If you get a strictly first class White Rock for the fancy man or the show room, you will have a good one to breed broilers or roasters from and a good one for laying, too, for that matter.

You know it used to be a great idea to those that knew nothing about the business that a thoroughbred or standard bred chicken, one good enough to put into the show room, was some kind of a freak not suited to any other purpose, and entirely unfit for the practical man. Nothing could have been farther from the facts, and many are just now getting wise along this line, for it has been one great aim and earnest endeavor of the standard makers for years to have for their ideal chicken one that was all chicken from head to tail.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Tract of 400 Acres To Be Subdivided

Woodland Hills as a Home Neighborhood—Peachtree Widening Postponed.

Announcement was made Tuesday of perfected plans for improving one of the largest acreage tracts in the Atlanta section. W. E. Worley, J. A. Mahoney and Eugene C. Callaway, incorporators of the Woodland Hills Company, will begin in a few days to improve 400 acres between Ansley Park and Druid Hills, and probably $40,000 will be spent at once putting in 80-foot chert drives, water and sewers and tile sidewalks.

This subdivision is to be known as Woodland Hills. The developers have consulted with engineers as to topography, and plats of the property will be out shortly. The lots will be large, and the owners expect to sell them all and to have a thriving home community in three years.

The last addition to this tract was made ten days ago, when 110 acres was bought for $40,000. There will be a combined frontage of about 20 miles. The tract is on the Cheshire Bridge, East Paces Ferry and Williams Mill Roads and Highland and Moreland Avenues.

Widening Considered.

The Finance Committee of Council will meet Friday to fix up the budget covering improvements for street work and other city improvements, and will at this time take up the matter of setting aside $5,000 for widening Peachtree from Harris Street to Forsyth Street. The citizens' committee went before the Finance Committee Monday afternoon and outlined its request.

Extensive improvements hang on this project. E. W. Alfriend and Mrs. J. B. Whitehead expect to erect a twelve-story office building between Cain and Harris Streets, and another property owner has plans for a five-story structure.

Building on Wesley Avenue.

Wesley Avenue, to the west of Peachtree Road and a few rods north of Peachtree Creek, is beginning to rival Pace's Ferry Road as a situation for country homes. Among the home owners on the thoroughfare are General Clifford L. Anderson, Clark Howell and David Woodward, and now comes J. C. Chipley, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, with announcement that he has started a residence. Mr. Chipley's house will be two stories high and will cost approximately $15,000.

Several other property owners, it is said, will build on Wesley Avenue during the summer.

Warehouse Is Completed.

Colonel John J. Woodside's storage warehouse No. 3, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been replaced with a more complete structure. In a few days the warehouse will be completed and ready to be used again. The building is located on Butler Street and has a great amount of floor space.

Pryor Street Building Finished.

The building at 96 South Pryor Street, built for Harry G. Poole, the undertaker, has been completed and is now occupied by the concern. This structure cost approximately $25,000 and is one of the handsomest of the smaller buildings on Pryor Street.

St. Charles Cottage Bought.

Mrs. Willie Mae Levi has bought from W. H. Craig, through the Ralph O. Cochran Company, a six-room cottage at 174 St. Charles Avenue, 60 by 190, for a price not named. This property is between Ponce DeLeon Place and Bonaventure Avenue.

Building on Ponce DeLeon.

People traveling out Ponce DeLeon Avenue of late have been impressed with the great amount of building that is being done on that thoroughfare and on tributary streets. In the neighborhood of Ponce DeLeon and Barnett Street and Bonaventure Avenue, for instance, twelve or fifteen new houses are either building or recently completed. It matters not which way you turn, say the realty men, there are more houses in process of erection than ever before in the city's history, with prospects for more in the future than at the present.

Fresh Bit of Acreage.

A 28-acre tract on Pace's Ferry Road that has been in the hands of the present owners for 50 years has been placed on the market at $13,500. This is between "Woodlawn," Robert F. Maddox's estate, and the Howell Mill Road. It has been listed with a well-known real estate agency, and has been suggested for subdivision.

A Merchant Marine Becomes a Vital Necessity

Congress is Alone to Blame for the Neglect to Build Up a Great, Powerful, Progressive and Prosperous American Merchant Marine in Foreign Trade.

The lack of American merchant ships for the ordinary needs of our Government has been strikingly impressed upon the attention of the new Administration.

Recent developments made it necessary for the Government to secure possession of a considerable number of American merchantmen. They were needed as a precautionary measure, to insure preparedness against any sudden eventuality in which foreign ships could not be used.

THE PITIFULLY SMALL SUPPLY OF SUCH AMERICAN VESSELS BOTH ASTOUNDED AND ALARMED THE GOVERNMENT. Most of the few American vessels that are available are old, in many respects inadequate, and scarcely any of these measure up to urgent needs.

Not only are American merchantmen few and inefficient, but it is found that, even if American ships were now available in large numbers, THERE IS NO CORRESPONDING NUMBER OF TRAINED AND EXPERIENCED AMERICAN MASTERS, OFFICERS AND SEAMEN IMMEDIATELY OBTAINABLE.

The possibly grave consequence of our utter dependence upon foreign merchant ships, their officers and men, who would be unavailable for national needs in time of war, is causing the greatest uneasiness and concern.

American merchant ships, their officers and men, are required in times of emergency for scout purposes, for auxiliary cruisers, to carry troops, coal and ammunition supplies, and for a thousand and one needs for which warships would be neither desirable nor available.

These are serious problems for a new Administration so suddenly to face, and their satisfactory solution is difficult, if not impossible, at the moment.

CONGRESS IS ALONE TO BLAME FOR THE NEGLECT TO BUILD UP A GREAT, POWERFUL, PROGRESSIVE AND PROSPEROUS AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

THE PUNY PROVISION IN THE PENDING TARIFF BILL to merely make a beginning in the upbuilding of American shipping should be and is likely to be so strengthened and buttressed in the Senate as to lay a broad and solid foundation for the establishment of an effective and enduring American maritime policy.

The little so far provided has provoked the impudent protests of foreign nations that are determined to prevent, if they can, the maritime independence of the United States. The present conditions are far too useful and too profitable for these foreign monopolists to willingly relinquish.

EVERY NATIONAL INSTINCT OF PRESERVATION AND PROSPERITY SHOULD IMPEL CONGRESS TO IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Should steps be taken at once to remedy our intolerable dependence upon foreign merchant shipping, it will take years for the United States to reach a state of efficient preparedness in American merchant ships, officers and men, for either the ordinary or the emergency requirements of our Government and the peaceful transportation of our imports and exports. It is high time to make a beginning.

We have discovered shortcomings in several important particulars in naval equipment. BUT NOTHING HAS SO PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSED THE GOVERNMENT AT THIS TIME AS THE PRESSING NEED OF A GREAT AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, WISELY REGARDED AND OFFICIALLY STATED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON AS "ESSENTIAL TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE."

It would indeed be thoughtless and cowardly if, in this crisis in American affairs, the sinister protests of foreign governments against immediate and adequate legislative provision for the upbuilding of American deep sea shipping should receive the slightest consideration.

Are Women as Foolish as Men?

"We were introduced at a restaurant and four days later we were married and the next day he deserted me and ran away with $4,000 worth of my jewelry and money." This is the unvarnished narrative told by a woman who had a man arrested out west the other day.

This same woman would watch the iceman like a hawk, for fear he would give her only eight cents worth of ice instead of the ten cents worth she paid for. She would inspect her grocery and butcher bill, and the laundress does not wash who could get a penny ahead of her at the Monday suds festival. She submits her agent's reports as to rents or investments to the family lawyer, and she even keeps a shrewd and questioning eye on the lawyer himself.

But she meets a man in a restaurant, hearkens to his story that he is the temporarily embarrassed heir to a million or two, and hands herself and her fortune over to him without as much care as she bestows on the inspection of the chicken she buys for the family dinner.

Ordinarily the victim of the sort of sharper who despoiled the woman quoted above is not an ignorant, unsophisticated girl; on the contrary, she is commonly a mature woman, and not infrequently one who has had one or two whirls at the matrimonial lottery.

When we shake our heads at the credulity of such women we should not ascribe their misfortune to the feminine type of mind.

Remember, when you feel how superior men are to that sort of deception, that the gold-brick swindle and the green goods game, the Spanish prisoner trap and wire-tapping delusion continue year after year to earn fortunes for the rogues who have the hardihood to perpetrate them.

There are lots of foolish women in the world—almost as many as foolish men.

A Little Flattery Will Make a Man Do Anything

What Do You Like to Read About?

By WINIFRED BLACK.

"WHAT do you like to read about?" said the Man to me.

I stared. "I mean," said the Man, "what sort of folks—people in castles, with retainers and 'heirs' birthdays,' or people on yachts, with butlers and valets, or people out West, with Sheriffs and bad men dropping in to supper, and the wind blowing in from the desert and the coyotes yelping on the great red mountains in the dusky distance?"

"Oh," said I, "I don't like any of those people. I like folks—just plain folks. No, not 'folksy folks' with dialects—the women, with shawls on their heads that run in and gossip all about 'What made Maria stay an old maid so long?' and 'Who's goin' to git Mirandy, now Si's gone?' bore me to tears; and I can't bear the fair young schoolma'am who goes out West and makes the biggest boy fall in love with her, and then they go back home to visit, and he shocks the whole village by saying 'Darn it!' and wearing a red cowboy handkerchief instead of a collar.

Maids Don't Worry Me.

"I like to read about the sort of people I know myself, every day in the week—the woman with the fussy husband; the woman with the boy she hopes will be a genius, and he turns out to be just a lazy dreamer; the woman with the little girl who won't take music lessons, no matter how she tries to make her; the man with the business down-town, and the rival over the way trying to take it away from him; the girl on the stage who plays real parts and gets real criticisms; the newspaper man who doesn't beat the town the very first time he goes out on a story; the people who have comfy homes and a decent picture or two, and a lot of good books and some dogs, and either children or the hope of children.

"No, I don't care for butlers in mine, though if the butler belongs in the story I don't mind him at all; I only hate to have him dragged in by the heels to prove that the man who employs him really is no end of a swell.

"Valets? Yes, a valet is all right, if he isn't insisted on. Lots of fairly every-day men have valets—actors and musicians and other helpless creatures.

"Maids don't worry me—nor chauffeurs—as long as they stay discreetly in the background, but I must say secretaries and nursery governesses and under-gardeners and special trains and too many yachts do disconcert me a little. I always have to stop and add up what it would cost to have an establishment like that, and that interferes with the plot.

"No, I hate the Dickey and the Algy story, with the 'little gell in white' and her managing mama. I never can quite believe there are such helpless geese in the world as that little gell, and if I knew anyone like the 'managing mama' I'd have her locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

"Yes, it's folks I like—everyday folks—plain Americans, with plain American troubles and plain American joys, like buying a machine after you've saved for it for a year; and Daughter's graduating essay; and Son's first love affair.

The Chocolate-Cream Age.

"That's why I always choose a woman's stories, all other things being equal, I guess."

"The man looked at me more in sorrow than in anger. "Are all women like you?" he said. "I don't believe it. I believe they like to read about ropes of pearls and strings of emeralds and cables of real coral—and gowns of filmy lace—or a——"

"That's the chocolate-cream age," I said. "They do, of course. That's because they are always hoping they'll be one of those heroines themselves some day, and they want to have the fun of planning their filmy gowns and thinking how sweet they'll look in the ropes and chains and things. When the woman is past wanting to read about people like herself, it heals her to realize that she isn't the only human being who has trouble keeping the expense accounts within scolding limits. What do you like to read about, Mr. Man?"

The man took a long pull on his pipe. "I like to read about damsels fair, and shady bowers, and nodding violets, and dashing cavaliers," he said, "and noble heroes, and soldiers of fortune—and quests, and all that. If anyone dares to hand me a book about 'How I Made My Money' or 'What I Did to Down the Lemon Trust' I'll make him wish he'd committed suicide that time he almost wanted to."

And then we both began to reconsider and talk it over, and we both decided that we really don't care so much about who the hero of the story was. The main thing is, who wrote it?

There's Bret Harte. He could take a bank clerk and cast such a sparkling veil of romance about him that his every pen flourish would mean sentiment. And as for the common little red-haired person he fell in love with—why, she'd be a wood nymph, a fairy, a siren from the cool green sea, even if she lived in a hall bedroom and ate 'weenies' and chocolate for supper.

Cable! Do you ever hunt up Cable's houses down in New Orleans? Dirty old tumble-down places, seen with everyday eyes. Look through the magic glasses of Cable, and you're in Elysia, the land of fair women and brave men. There's even something romantic about a piece of candied lemon peel when the right sort of man tells about it.

It Isn't the Subject.

No, it isn't the subject; it's the way it is handled, after all, we agreed, the man and I. There's so and so, the special writer on the Daily Enterprise. He'd write about a fire in a boiler factory, and make you hold your breath to find out whether the Maltese cat got out alive or not. And there's his brother on the Daily Scream, would tell the story of a plot to assassinate every beautiful woman in America, and keep you yawning all the way through. It isn't the story: it isn't the people in the story—it's the writer that matters.

"But still," said I to the Man, "all things being equal, I want folks in my stories—folks that I know."

"Gossip," said the man. And we both went and got our own particular kind of book and settled down to our own particular kind of evening, and were perfectly satisfied. What fun it is to talk these things over once in a while! Isn't it?

Awake at Last to Navy's Needs

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

COL. GRAVES.

THERE are substantial evidences of a reviving patriotism and common sense in the American Congress toward the American navy.

When Secretary Daniels was banqueted week before last in Savannah one of the speakers was Congressman Edwards, of the Savannah district. Mr. Edwards has been heretofore apathetic, if not openly antagonistic, to the ample navy program. On this latest occasion he said that, however indifferent and economic his views had been toward the navy, the recent international interchanges with Japan had opened his eyes and fixed him definitely and firmly as an advocate and champion of a greater navy.

Others Changed.

"Henceforth," said Mr. Edwards, "if the naval experts of the Government advise Congress that we need three battleships, or four battleships, or even five, I am for the navy and whatever it needs to defend our country. The anxieties aroused by our unpreparedness against Japan must never be repeated in America."

Savannah is one of the ultra-conservative cities of the South, and Congressman Edwards is notably conservative, cautious and economical. His complete conversion is in the highest degree significant of the awakening of Congress.

It is even so with Congressman Poor, of the Raleigh District of North Carolina, Secretary Daniels' district.

Mr. Poor has also been among the conservatives on the naval program of the House. The Japanese contention and the developments of our naval unpreparedness, as exposed by the Hearst newspapers, have aroused the North Carolinan to the perils of an undefended country and the necessity for a navy ample for our Western and Eastern Coasts. He is openly and heartily for the ample navy.

On the lips of scores of anti-navy Congressmen there are expressions similar to these. It is actually true that the naval information and comparisons developed by the recent international controversy have changed the spirit of the national Congress on this vital question of the national defense.

The American Congress and the American people have slept for years upon the idea that our "splendid isolation" protected our country, and that in case of war our navy and army were equal to every demand of defense and offense. Congress and some of the people have had the same feeling toward foreign nations that the South had toward the North preceding the Civil War. "One Southerner can whip a dozen Yankees," said some.

One Southern statesman declared in a public speech, "Why, we can whip the Yankees with popguns!" Challenged upon this assertion after the war was over, the orator responded: "Well, so we could, but the d—d fellows wouldn't fight that way!"

Awake at Last.

Our country has waked up at last to the fact that it is not immune from war, that it is not invincible in war, that it is not prepared for war.

The awakening will do us good. It is worth this flurry with Japan to have educated the American people and their representatives to an understanding of our real condition and of our national dangers.

I feel that the Hearst newspapers have performed a signal and patriotic service in helping to this national understanding. These newspapers can be indifferent to any criticism of sensationalism in the consciousness that more than any other American newspapers they have taught the people something about their navy.

Public opinion is coming to stand for the idea that preparedness in war is the best promoter of peace. The long centuries of exemption from attack that England's great navy has bought for England is teaching our people that they have a right to expect from their representatives just such an insurance policy against war.

Gatling Philosophy.

The treason of Congress against the Navy is not likely to be repeated in this generation.

The policy of national preparedness also pervades our national officials—always excepting Mr. Bryan, whose "doves" and "swans" and "flowers of rhetoric" delight the Chautauquas.

Secretary Daniels said to Mr. Gatling, of the Gatling gun: "Are you not conscience smitten over your invention? Do not your guns keep you from sleeping because of the people they have destroyed and may destroy?"

To which Mr. Gatling answered:

"My guns have saved more lives than they have ever destroyed. The existence of them and the knowledge of their destructiveness keep nations from war and mobs from bloody riots. The Gatling gun is a peace-maker."

And Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, is tremendously impressed just now with the Gatling philosophy.

Perhaps we shall have national cause to thank Japan and the Hearst newspapers!

How Opening of the Panama Canal Will Aid Historical Research

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AFTER the Panama Canal is opened we may begin to learn the true history of Ancient America.

Many readers may be unaware that this new world, as we call it, contains one of the oldest of all historical mysteries, and, in fact the very oldest if as some maintain, it forms a direct connection with the story of the lost continent of Atlantis.

Buried in the tropical jungles of Central America there are the ruins of once splendid cities, whose remains of a gigantic architecture are covered with hieroglyphics more puzzling than those of ancient Egypt, for no man has yet succeeded in discovering a complete key to their meaning. They guard their secret more jealously than the Sphinx.

Ruins of Temples.

Their origin is ascribed to a practically vanished race called the Mayas, related to the Aztec of Montezuma's Empire, but far excelling the ancient Mexicans in everything except warlike power. The ruins of their temples at Palenque, Copan, Peten and elsewhere, excite the wonder of the traveler, and contain some of the most beautiful and elaborate carving that can anywhere be found.

They had not only an exquisite picture language, but also a written language, of which undecipherable manuscripts yet exist.

They built about forty towns, connected by stone-paved roads. They had a postal system, conducted by means of swift-footed carriers who ran from town to town over the paved roadways. Sometimes they were at war with one another, and then armies marched to battle on the same roads.

They were skillful agriculturists, and cultivated broad fields, which are now overgrown with mossy trees and tangled vines and shrubs. They raised cotton and wove it into garments.

They made beautiful ornaments of gold and semi-precious stones, and were more skillful even than the Aztecs in feather work.

The designs carved on their buildings and ornamental, or symbolic, structures are of great beauty and astonishing perfection in detail. They covered the walls of rooms with brilliant paintings on stucco.

They Have Vanished.

Strange to say, the people believed to be descended from these Mayas are unable to throw any light upon the history of their supposed ancestors.

All their civilization has vanished, and with it, apparently, all memory of the ancient splendors of the race.

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

World that the suggestion has been made that a connection formerly existed across the Atlantic Ocean, and this is the origin of the theory that the ancestors of the Mayas dwelt on the fabled continent of Atlantis, which Plato heard had been sunk in the western ocean ages before his time.

One of the strangest facts about the ancient land of the Mayas has recently been called to attention by Dr. Ellsworth Huntington. It is this: At present the whole district possesses a climate so warm, moist and debilitating that it is almost the worst place on the globe for human habitation.

The ruins of the ancient cities, instead of lying amid deserts, and under a burning sun, as happens with most of the abandoned capitals of the East, are so overgrown with tangled vegetation and enveloped in feverstricken swamps that some of them are nearly unapproachable.

The conclusion is that within the past two thousand years, a vast change of climate has occurred in that part of America, and that in the days of Mayan civilization the earth's climatic zones were shifted in such a manner that the land occupied by this remarkable people enjoyed very different atmospheric conditions from those that prevail there now.

Peten, one of their most important cities, which has not yet been well explored on account of the difficulties of approach, lies in the midst of a region which is, at present, very sparsely peopled, and where it would be impossible to cultivate the land as it was cultivated in the days of the Mayas.

May Be Read in Full.

Only by such a supposition, it is thought, can a rational explanation be found for the fact that the highest native civilization that this continent had developed before the white man came, was centered about a location which is now a deadened and almost uninhabitable wilderness.

When the Panama Canal has become a great highway, and the attention of the world has been turned upon its surroundings, fresh light is likely to be thrown upon this fascinating mystery.

Then the Mayan hieroglyphics may be read in full, and a hidden chapter of American history thrown open.

MR. BRYAN'S TOAST

Editor The Georgian:

You devote much of your space to Mr. Bryan. Will you please reproduce a portion of his toast at the Army and Navy Club, given at the farewell banquet to the Commissioners from Great Britain and Canada? Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: I have delivered three addresses of welcome to our visitors, but will have but one word of farewell, and that is in keeping with the environment which surrounds us this morning. We are met in the building of the Army and Navy Club, and the fact that we are the guests of those who represent those two arms of the Government suggests the thought which I present in bidding you adieu. While we are the advocates of peace, we are really engaged in the construction of a battleship which is to be the very culmination—the climax—of the seaman's art. Man has been engaged in the construction of water craft since the flapping sail first whispered its secret of strength to the voyager. He has designed vessels for pleasure, for commerce and for war. We have had the galley, the viking's ship, the frigate, the ironclad and the dreadnought. But no limit can be placed to the ambitions of man as a builder, and I ask you to join me in proposing a toast to a ship more potent than any which man has thus far employed in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart. Its shells are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.

SUSPICION TURNED TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk. Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full-flare upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected assertion last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are rife in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, timekeeper of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty intoxicated on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 2 in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember anyone whom he saw during that time to bear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 6 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 6 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; this also has not been established. Conley states he stayed there the remainder of the night.

According to the new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday instead of Friday, as he claims, and not on anybody's dictation. It is further argued that, in order to ingratiate himself with the law, he made his confession when he thought that the case against Frank was clinched—that his story was the product of his own imagination.

Conley's delay in making this confession until Frank's indictment seemed likely is another link against him.

His detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, shows premeditation on the negro's part, it is argued, and further that the story was conceived by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's childish brain was not capable of making it strong enough to withstand rigid investigation.

E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman of the National Pencil factory, seen to-day by a Georgian reporter, said he was confident the negro Jim Conley, under arrest as a suspect in the Mary Phagan murder mystery, committed the crime.

Here is what Holloway told the reporter:

"Jim Conley, when he came to work here about one year ago, was a pretty good negro. We had no trouble with him for about two months. Then Jim got drunk. He had been running the elevator and we were afraid to trust him afterward. We then put him to work sweeping in the trimming department. Here Conley was closely associated with the girls. He used to move their chairs when he was sweeping. Conley was the only negro allowed in this department.

"Jim got so bad he used to carry whisky with him in his pocket. Several times he was caught by employees taking a drink. This was not known by the management until after the murder of Mary Phagan.

Drunk in Factory.

"About one week before the crime was committed the forelady of the trimming and finishing department, Miss Eulah May Flowers, went to the top floor of the building to look over the stock of boxes. When Conley was not sweeping he was supposed to fill the box bins with boxes. When Miss Flowers moved toward the bin to look in she stumbled over a form. She screamed and fell back. It was Conley. He was dead drunk. Miss Flowers tried to wake him up, but was unable.

Caught Washing Shirt.

"On the morning of the Coroner's investigation, Thursday after the murder, when the plant was shut down because we all were called to the investigation, I testified and went back to the factory. As I entered the metal department I heard a splashing in the cooling tank. There was Conley washing his shirt. When I entered he was very much startled and tried to hide the shirt by trying to drop it through a crack in the floor. It was a blue shirt and I saw no bloodstains, for he had evidently been washing it for some time as it was pretty clean.

"This is the first time in the year that Jim Conley worked here that he ever washed his clothes here.

"Now, I don't say Conley was degenerate enough to commit a crime so terrible when he was sober, but I am thoroughly convinced that he

T. R. HOTLY DENIES HE EVER WAS DRUNK

Shuots Denial That Bull Moose Party Is Paying Cost of His $10,000 Libel Suit.

ADMITS HE OCCASIONALLY INDULGES IN CHAMPAGNE

Declares During White House Residence He Took Only Light Wines—Dislikes Beer.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 27.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt to-day took the stand in his suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore. Colonel Roosevelt denied emphatically that he ever drank intoxicating liquors to excess as charged in the editorial that resulted in his $10,000 libel suit.

He said he did not drink beer or whisky, except under the direction of a doctor, but admitted that he some times drank light wines.

He related briefly his career up to the time the editorial from The Iron Ore was brought to him as he lay in a hospital in Chicago, after having been wounded by a would-be assassin in Milwaukee.

Says Editorial Angered Him.

"I was very indignant," said the colonel, "when the editorial was shown me."

The former President mounted the stand after a stormy few minutes during which Attorney Pound, representing the plaintiff, was interrupted frequently by Attorney Belden while making his opening statement. Attorney Belden, Newett's counsel, declined to make his statement until after the testimony was taken.

Colonel Roosevelt took the stand at 9:30 o'clock this morning.

Replying to questions regarding his life and career, he said he was born in New York City, completed his studies at Harvard in 1880, was elected to the New York Legislature in 1881, appointed New York civil service commissioner in 1887, police commissioner of New York City in 1890, elected Lieutenant Governor in 1894, resigning in 1897 to become lieutenant colonel of the Rough Riders in the Spanish-American war, being promoted to colonel after the battle of Santiago.

Tells of War Service.

Strenuous objection was made by the defense to Roosevelt's replies regarding the number of times he was under fire in the Spanish-American war, but the court overruled them and the former President continued his story, declaring he was under fire many times, more particularly at San Juan Hill.

He told of his election as Governor of New York in 1898; as Vice Presi-

FELDER AIDE OFFERS VICE LIST TO CHIEF

Attorney Carl Hutcheson Accuses Beavers of Permitting Unlawful Houses to Operate.

GAMBLERS' PLOT, SAYS LANFORD IN HOT REPLY

Detective Head Declares "Ring" Is Trying to Fix Charge of Bribery Against Him.

Ignoring the fresh volley of charges made by Carl Hutcheson, an attorney, who offers to cite resorts which are allowed to operate by the city police, Chief Beavers Tuesday morning reiterated his declaration that the entire matter would be laid bare before the Grand Jury for decision.

Detective Chief Lanford revealed another angle of the warfare when he declared that the fight being made against him was backed by the gambling ring of Atlanta. C. C. Jones was named as the leader of the opposition in this fight.

Beavers in commenting upon Hutcheson's charges, declared that they were inspired by Thomas B. Felder, with whose office Hutcheson is connected, and that the attack was not therefore that of Hutcheson, but of Felder and his "gang."

Hutcheson, a young lawyer connected with the firm Felder, Anderson, Whitman & Dillon, wrote an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers, charging him with permitting unlawful houses to operate on certain city streets and promising to give addresses if the Chief asks personally for them within three days.

Beavers to Ignore Attack.

Characterizing Carl Hutcheson as of too little importance to warrant an answer to his charges made against the police force, Chief Beavers declared that he would ignore him altogether.

"I don't care to answer Hutcheson's attack," said the police official. "Hutcheson is too small a fry to even take notice of. An answer to him would give him too much dignity. This young man is in Felder's office and is merely being used as a tool of Felder and his gang. Felder prompted him to make the statement that he did, and so I will pay no attention to Hutcheson.

Regarded as Reply.

On Monday morning Chief Beavers declared Attorney Thomas B. Felder had no evidence of police cognizance of immoral resorts; that he never had had any, and that he was only bluffing when he said he had. Requested to reply, Colonel Felder announced he would make no more statements except in writing, and that he had nothing to say then.

A few hours later Mr. Hutcheson, a member of Colonel Felder's firm, issued the letter, which is regarded as a semi-official reply from Colonel Felder.

Mr. Hutcheson formerly was a newspaper man. Shortly after taking up the practice of law he achieved State-wide renown by conducting the campaign of William Schley Howard, who defeated Representative Leonidas Livingston and is now serving his second term in Congress.

Following is Mr. Hutcheson's open letter to Chief J. L. Beavers:

Scores Vice Crusade.

J. L. Beavers, Chief of Police, Atlanta:

Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives, Atlanta:

In your great crusade against Sodom and Gomorrah with your immaculate robes of Puritanism,

I accuse you in all your glory with allowing certain houses on Ivy Street, the business of which is to barter in immoral and indecent practices, to continue in flagrant operation. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, every sensible citizen of this city, who knows anything of the world, does. If you do not know these

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 27.—When a Jacksonville-New Orleans train pulled into Milton, 20 miles east of here, last night a mob of 75 men met the train and demanded S. W. Green, of New Orleans, chancellor of the negro Knights of Pythias, who was occupying a Pullman drawing room. He was only saved by the interference of Sheriff Harvell and deputies, of Santa Rosa County.

Green bought a Pullman ticket from Jacksonville to New Orleans. Several mobs met the train along the route before it reached Milton, but did not find him. At Milton, Green, seeing the mob, attempted to escape.

Green is now in jail at Milton for safe keeping and charged with violating the "jim crow" law.

He barely escaped a mob at DeFuniak on May 18 while going from New Orleans to Jacksonville.

SMITH HITS HOME RUN IN SECOND INNING

CHAPPELLE IN BOX FOR BILLY SMITH'S WARRIORS

Locals Had Chance to Score in First, But Tommy Long Fell Asleep on Job.

Score by innings:

Atlanta	0	1	0

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, May 27.—Frank's Birds went in the game here this afternoon to seek revenge from the walloping they received at the hands of Billy Smith's Crackers yesterday.

In the second inning Wallie Smith, Atlanta's third sacker, opened up with a home run to deep center field and the Birds registered two in the fourth on Spencer's homer.

"That Dutchman" selected Swindell and Adams to do the battery work for New Orleans, while Bill Smith designated Chappelle and Dunn for Atlanta.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Hendryx grounded out to Agler. Atz singled to left. Clancy flied to Long. Breen hoisted to Welchonce. NO RUNS.

Long singled to right. Welchonce beat out a bunt to Snedecor. The Pelican first baseman fielded the ball and threw wild to Atz, who covered first, and Long went to third. Alperman grounded to Atz, who touched second, forcing Welchonce and doubled Alperman at first. Long should have scored on the play, but went to sleep at third instead. Bailey out, Atz to Snedecor. NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Spencer walked. Williams tried to bunt, but instead lined out to Chappelle and Spencer was doubled at first to Agler. Snedecor fanned. NO RUNS.

Wallie Smith opened for Atlanta with a clean home run to deep center field. Bisland grounded to Swindell and was out to Snedecor. Agler popped to Spencer. Dunn fanned. ONE RUN.

THIRD INNING.

Adams out, Smith to Agler. Swindell went out, Smith to Agler. Hendryx fanned. NO RUNS.

Chappelle out, Atz to Snedecor. Long slipped a single over Swindell's head. Welchonce singled to center and Long took second. Alperman popped to Clancy. Bailey grounded to Clancy and Welchonce was forced at second to Atz. NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

'Ship My Body to Atlanta,' Farewell Of Suicide in Jail

NEW YORK, May 27.—Using his belt and necktie as a noose, Eber Carmichael, a clerk, who was arrested yesterday for fatally stabbing Conrad Braun, subscription manager of Current Opinion, hanged himself in his cell in a police station to-day.

Carmichael was said to have been drinking heavily for some time and stabbed Braun, a friend of two years' standing, after Braun had refused to lend him money.

Carmichael was in bad shape, physically, when locked up and kept shouting, "Ship my body to Atlanta."

Time for Protests To Tariff Bill Ends

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Holding sessions day and night the ten Democratic members of the Senate Committee on Finance will begin at 5 o'clock this evening the actual framing of their amendments to the Wilson-Underwood tariff and income tax measure, which they hope to present to the Senate within three weeks.

At 5 o'clock the period for hearing protests against the bill will expire.

OFFERS BEAVERS LIST OF "OPEN HOUSES"

things, it is your duty to know, and you should be discharged from your high pedestals for dereliction.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on certain parts of Spring Street, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate in a certain section of Pryor Street, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on a certain section of Central Avenue, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of failing to take cognizance of a certain house in Ivy Street, to which I called your attention several weeks ago, where young men were inveigled to gamble away their money, the mistress thereof being the banker and the recipient of these ill-gotten gains, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you and numbers of your forces with being cognizant of these facts, and yet you, the great crusade leaders, stand idly by and fold your lordly hands.

I accuse you with allowing, even yet, low class hotels in this city to exist and practice their nefarious games of lowly gain, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

If you can not "turn up" these places, there are hundreds of people who can. I can use infantile detective work and turn up dozens of them within a few days, AND YOU KNOW THIS CAN BE DONE. And, if you fail to get busy and continue to parade your great genius (?) you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Charges Police Protection.

I accuse you with protecting these places because of your lax methods in keeping "the houses within our midst" closed, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of closing Manhattan Avenue and converting our entire municipality into a "red light" district, AND YOU KNOW IT, and unless you change conditions at once you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of retaining on your forces men unfit to protect the "decent" citizens of Atlanta, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of knowing where numbers of houses which exist by immoral practices are located, AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Do you think that the public will be hoodwinked forever? Do you think that the public is so gullible as to believe all of this "bush-wah" about the great work that you are continuing? Yes, you closed Manhattan Avenue, but what did you do for the remainder of the city?

You and your bunch are very sore because you were unable to ferret out the Phagan murder, AND YOU KNOW IT. When the Solicitor General called in outside aid, numbers of your hirelings were very much perturbed and became insanely jealous. That is why all of this patched-up and hatched-up bunch of lies and slanders have been issued against Thomas B. Felder, whose shoes you are unworthy to untie, AND YOU KNOW IT.

I accuse you of retaining a large number of leather-heads for detectives. Detectives? That is a joke, isn't it? AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for allowing such an army of incompetents to work with your departments. You know, and I know, that these fellows secure their offices through political pull and not through efficiency. They are Sherlock Holmeses when it comes to arresting blind tigers and negro crap-players, but beyond that they would not know a clew if they saw it tagged.

In the Phagan case, the newspaper men are the ones who turned up the first clews of any merit, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be ashamed of that crowd down there to allow the members of the Fourth Estate to put one over on you; but you know newspaper men have brains, and brains are required to make detectives.

Now, volley forth again your promulgation of purity and tell the people of this great city what large men you are and how you protect the citizenry of this great Commonwealth.

If you haven't the addresses of the houses to which I refer, call at my office within three days and I will give you a bunch of them.

Friends of mine have advised me against printing this card. Some have feared for my life—but afraid of you and your crowd? Never. I am not afraid of anything that lays down its firearms and comes at me like a man in fair play. Now, "lay on, MacDuff, and damn'd be him who first cries, 'Hold! Enough!'"

The Duty of the Grand Jury== Investigate All the Charges of Graft and Bribery!

The Georgian repeats its suggestion that the Grand Jury MUST TAKE UP AND INVESTIGATE THOROUGHLY the charges of graft and bribery that have been made in the newspapers during the past few days.

And the matter should not end with the Grand Jury. It should be taken into a court of law,

Colonel Thomas B. Felder has made some accusations that merit immediate attention.

If there is graft in the police department or bribery anywhere, the public has a right to know about it; and if Colonel Felder or anyone else can establish that, he will receive the thanks of the entire community, and there will be a speedy turning out of the guilty men.

The matter is too serious to begin and end in a newspaper war.

The good name of the city is involved. The good name of public servants is involved.

Trials in newspapers are never effective. They lead nowhere. The public is still unconvinced.

Trials by judges and juries are final and conclusive.

THE PUBLIC WANTS FACTS.

There is no reason to believe that the charges against Beavers are true. Even the bitterest enemies of Beavers admit his honesty. He has made a good record. He is entitled to have the charges against him examined by a judge and jury, so that all the facts may be known.

Whether Beavers' attitude is right in putting an end to the segregated district is not an issue. The law does not permit any choice in the matter. The law does not sanction a segregated district for the barter and sale of human beings and for the enrichment of a few ringsters.

It is not improbable that a little more liberality in some of the laws would be a good thing for the city and all concerned. But the way to get that liberality is to change the present statutes.

Beavers has no alternative but to enforce the law as he sees it, and he has no alternative but to compel those who accuse his department to go into court and try the case there instead of in the columns of the newspapers.

STAND BY BEAVERS AND THE LAW!

Gamblers' Plot, Declares Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford gave out a sensational statement Tuesday morning in which he charged that the efforts to fix accusations of bribery and malfeasance upon him were inspired by a "gambling ring," of which C. C. Jones was the head.

The cause of the fight against Lanford had been something of a mystery. Beavers readily explained the efforts to dispossess him from the office of Chief of Police by his war on vice in the city of Atlanta. Lanford's explanation reveals another angle of the crusade against a wide-open town.

"The gambling ring has been after me ever since I was made head of the detective department ten years ago," said Chief Lanford. "No more had I declared relentless warfare upon all forms of gambling in the city than I was notified that the gambling interests were out to 'get' me. Several times it was reported to me that I had been marked for an attack, and once the gamblers succeeded in carrying out their threats.

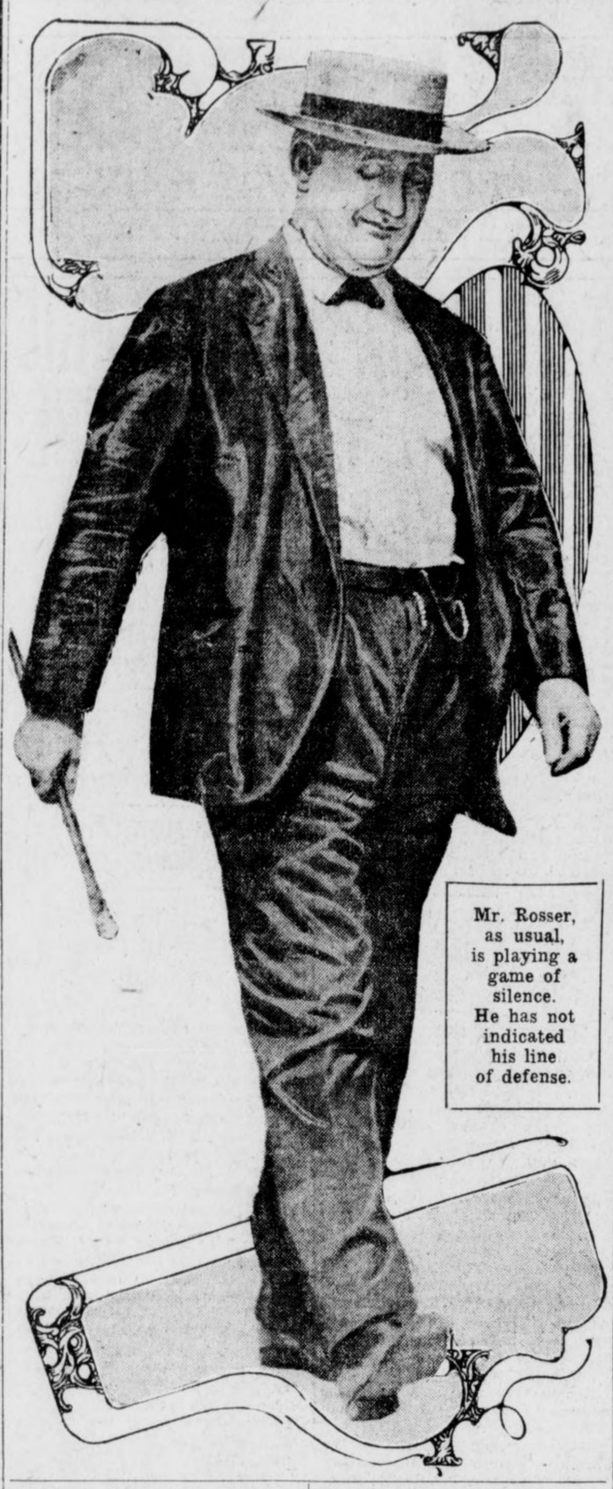
"That was five years ago. I was reduced from sergeant, which was the designation of the head of the department then, to service in the ranks. The gamblers were responsible for it. They gloated for nine months. Then I was raised to my former position again, with the title of chief. Since then I have continued my campaign against them.

"They have been very bitter. They have threatened me time and again. Now they have brought these charges against me."

Col. Felder Still Probing In the Phagan Case.

In the news columns of The Georgian yesterday it was said that Colonel Felder had been eliminated from the Phagan case. Colonel Felder says this is not true, that he is as deeply interested in solving the mystery as ever, and that he is lending every energy in that direction. The further statement in The Georgian that Colonel Felder was believed at one time to be interested in the defense of Frank was not intended to reflect in any way upon the lawyer. It was simply the gossip of the street, given for what it was worth. Colonel Felder's own statement that he is working solely for the public good makes his position perfectly clear, and everybody in the city will hope that he will continue actively in the case until the great mystery is disposed of.

LUTHER Z. ROSSER, who is leading attorney of counsel for the defense of Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phangan at the National Pencil factory.



Mr. Rosser, as usual, is playing a game of silence. He has not indicated his line of defense.

Union Musicians Have Celebration

One hundred and fifty members of Atlanta Local No. 148, American Federation of Musicians, celebrated the twelfth anniversary of the organization of their local at Turn Verein Hall last night. Many women are active members of the organization.

A supper was served and a large orchestra, composed of the members present, entertained.

A cornet solo by E. M. Coleman and vocal selections by Miss Sadie Percival, who was accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Mongen F. Smith, were enjoyed.

Remarks by Carl Karston, of Local No. 148; S. H. Brady, president of the Atlanta Federation of Trades; W. C. Puckett, third vice president of the Georgia State Federation; William Strauss, State organizer, and H. G. Wood, vice president of the Atlanta local, were heard.

Noted Woodmen to Visit Atlanta Camps

Two Woodmen of national reputation from Omaha, Nebr., will arrive here at noon Tuesday. They are Joseph Cullen Root, sovereign commander, and John T. Yates, sovereign secretary of the Omaha order.

The local camps and Georgia head officials of the order will escort the visitors to the Piedmont Hotel. A reception at Cable Hall Tuesday night will be given by J. C. Root Camp No. 80, assisted by other camps in the city, and State officials of the order.

Sunday, June 1, is the annual Memorial Day of the Woodmen of the World.

Water Fashionable Beverage in London

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—Champagne now takes a back seat in London, and claret, moselle and whisky and soda are the drinks of the moment. But temperance is a current craze. Barley water in special "brews" may be found at the Carlton and Bachelors' Clubs.

A few smart men drink plain cold water, among others Sir Arthur Walsh and Lord Charles Beresford. The King has cider laid down in his cellar, and among cider drinkers are the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Leeds, Lord Knollys and Lord Mount Stephen. Beer is seldom seen at dinner or luncheon, but iced lager beer is popular at balls and late parties.

Cochran Decries Reform Upheavals

Ralph O. Cochran, Representative-elect from Fulton County and candidate for the United States Senate to succeed Senator Hoke Smith, received hearty congratulations Tuesday on a speech delivered Monday night at the commencement exercises of the Lithonia Public Schools.

Mr. Cochran took "Conservatism" as his subject. He declared really great things were accomplished by cautious individuals. He commended conservatism rather than a course of reform.

A large crowd of DeKalb County citizens turned out to hear the candidate.

Heflin to Lead House Attack on Suffrage

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Congress soon will ring with the echoes of anti-woman suffrage oratory. Representatives Heflin of Alabama and Stanley W. Bowdle of Ohio are both preparing extensive arguments against woman suffrage.

Bowdle is a firm believer in "no votes for women," and has a lot of homespun reasoning to present.

4 Dead in Crash of Theatrical Specials

SEDALIA, MO., May 27.—Four persons were killed in a head-on collision between two Missouri Pacific fast passenger trains at Brandt, 20 miles west of Jefferson City, this morning.

Both trains Nos. 11 and 12 are known as theatrical specials.

It is unofficially stated that lap orders caused the wreck.

BURNS MAN QUITS CASE; DECLARES HE IS OPPOSED

C. W. Tobie, chief criminal investigator for the Burns Detective Agency, formally withdrew from the Phagan investigation Tuesday morning. The calling off of the Burns forces was announced by Dan P. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch, after Tobie had stated explicitly that he would not withdraw from the case.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who brought the Burns detectives into the Phagan case, would make no statement relative to their withdrawal, but announced that it did not mean the end of his investigation or connection with the case.

Tobie made up his mind last Friday to drop the Mary Phagan investigation—so he said Tuesday—but deferred action until Monday night, when he announced his intention to withdraw to Solicitor General Dorsey.

Disgusted With "Fuss."

Acute disgust at the "four or five cornered fuss" raised by the Phagan investigation was assigned by Tobie as the cause. This disgust was superinduced by the direct charge and general impression that the Burns Agency was pretending to ferret out the Phagan case, when in reality its purpose in Atlanta was to investigate the police department.

Tobie said to-day that while he had quit and was going to leave Atlanta, still the withdrawal of the Burns Agency need not be permanent.

"If certain features of this case are not developed, then there will be one, and maybe two, Burns men back here. I will send them here, but they will work in secret. There will be no more public investigation."

Tobie explained he believed Leo M. Frank was guilty of the Phagan murder and that the "certain features" meant additional clinching evidence not yet published that will make Frank's conviction certain.

"How can any house have harmony," said Tobie, "when the old man is fighting the old woman, and the old woman is fighting the children, and they are all fighting the hired girl? That's the shape this affair has gotten into, only worse.

"We came here to investigate this Phagan case, and for no other purpose. But the charge was made that in reality we were investigating the police department. The way things were shaped up the police could not help believing that charge to be true. Colonel Felder's attitude bore that out, so I decided last Friday to quit."

"Do you mean, then, that you were dissatisfied at Colonel Felder's attitude?" was asked.

"We were dissatisfied with that part of it, yes," was Tobie's reply.

Tobie Himself Through.

Tobie reiterated he ended the investigation himself. "I called myself off," he said. "Dan S. Lehon, our Southern superintendent, was close to Atlanta. It was as near for him to pass through here on his way back to New Orleans as it was for him to go any other way. I was in charge here, but, as you know, I do not belong to this territory. As a pure formality and a matter of courtesy, and because I knew he was coming here to visit his wife's relatives, I sent him a message inviting him to confer with me. When he got here I told him as a courtesy that I had decided to quit the case. He approved it. Had I told him I would continue, he would have approved that, too.

"This is the worst mix-up I ever saw anywhere, at any time. It's awful. Everybody is fighting everybody else, and I am through with this four or five cornered fracas, except that if more Burns men are sent here I shall send them here and they will report to me."

Bribery Charges Denied.

Rumored attempts to bribe witnesses were given strong denial in many circles, particularly by those whose names were connected by rumor with the alleged bribery attempts.

C. C. Sears, superintendent of the Atlanta branch of the Burns detective agency communicated to Chief of Detectives Lanford the announcement of the withdrawal of the Burns forces from the Phagan case.

Chief Lanford authorized the following statement on the departure of Tobie:

"Tobie, I believe, is straight and honest. He was victimized by Felder. I am convinced Mr. Tobie was working toward the interest of those seeking to clear the mystery."

Praises Superintendent.

A girl employee of the pencil factory has written the following statement, which upholds the working conditions of the factory and champions the character of the imprisoned superintendent:

"Nothing has ever been said of the girls of the pencil factory until after the terrible murder, but since then there has been one continuous talk, just as if we were to blame. We are just as anxious to see the guilty punished as the rest of the public, and we all loved Mary Phagan just as much as we possibly could.

"If the public only would interest itself to look into other factories and stores they would find the girls in the pencil factory are just as good as any other working girls.

"It looks mighty hard that we have to work in the place where our little friend was so horribly murdered. But we are only poor working girls, trying to make an honest living, and we try not to think of the tragedy any more than possible; and we have the interest of the factory too much at heart to desert in times of trouble.

"We all hope and pray the guilty will be punished and the innocent given freedom, for we all think our superintendent has a soul himself and that he would not think of such a thing, much less commit such a horrible crime."

Swallows Poison as Walker Did; Saved

ORLANDO, FLA., May 27.—That bichloride of mercury is not always fatal was demonstrated here when S. Walters Howe, cashier of the State National Bank, swallowed a tablet, mistaking it for a headache dose.

As the tablet passed down his throat it contracted the muscles so violently that he discovered his mistake and hurried to the city physician, who at once used the stomach pump and gave antidotes. Howe has experienced no harm.

U. S. IS HOME OF SQUANDERERS, SAYS BANKER

DETROIT, May 27.—Joseph T. Talbert, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, in an address delivered before the Bankers' Club here, declared everything has been dear except credit, and, as a result, "our expanded loans and deposits constitute the weak spots in our domestic and business situation."

Mr. Talbert gave statistics showing the gross loans and investments of all the banks in the United States since 1907 has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, while the total increase in the gold stock of the United States since 1907 aggregated $506,000,000.

"This condition," said Mr. Talbert, "although perhaps not so strong as it should be to justify and properly sustain our increased loans, still is assuring and shows that there is no substantial ground for alarm."

Delight to Squander.

Mr. Talbert caused quite a stir when he said that "evidence tends to show that individually and collectively we are a nation of spendthrifts.

"It is our habit and delight to squander, and no amount of preaching will have any effect upon our prodigality as a national trait."

Mr. Talbert, in leading up to an explanation of the drain on New York's gold supply by Europe, said the lending power of German banks had been strained to the limit; that Germany borrowed money here and sought to draw gold from us.

In calling attention to the persistent hoarding of gold by the French, he said the French, not content with the mere hoarding of their own gold, at heavy losses of exchange, forced from us, either for their own account or for that of South America, upward of $56,000,000 of gold.

"The movement is going on and may continue indefinitely.

"For lack of protection for our gold stock we have been obliged to sit helplessly and to submit to this forced exportation of gold, to our disadvantage and discomfort.

"This gold movement taking place at such a time and under such conditions demonstrated the fact that often has been stated before—that New York is the only free market in the world for gold."

Need Outside Money.

Mr. Talbert said an enormous amount of railroad financing must be done during the next year or two, and nearly all of it will be done at home with difficulty and in all probability at a higher level of interest rates than we have been accustomed to in such undertakings in recent years.

Mr. Talbert uttered "a word of caution against the practice which has been all too common among merchants and manufacturers, of financing themselves too largely through note brokers."

In concluding, the banker said it should be remembered that we are neither in nor approaching a period of speculation, and that credit is in no danger whatever from that source now, nor will it be in the near future. He added that courage should be taken from the fact that thus far the promises of another year of bountiful crops are exceedingly bright.

Girl of 10 Is Best Speller in Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., May 27.—Opal Mitchell, ten years old, of Licking, Texas County, won a $100 prize and was declared the best speller in the State. In a contest in which 60 pupils from as many counties contested, she misspelled but 3 of 200 words.

The three words misspelled by Opal Mitchell were: Chalice, besieged and weasel.

Baraca Leader to Speak in Atlanta

CURED TERRIBLE HUMOR ON FACE

Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1912.—"In December, 1908, my face became sore. I tried everything that was recommended, and my face got worse instead of better. I spent over $100 and got no benefit. The face and nose were very red and the eruption had the appearance of small boils, which itched me terribly. I can not tell you how terrible my face looked—all I can say is, it was dreadful, and I suffered beyond description.

"I have not gone on the street any time since 1908 without a veil, until now. Just four months ago a friend persuaded me to give Resinol a trial. I have used three cakes of Resinol Soap and less than a jar of Resinol Ointment, and my face is perfectly free from any eruption, and my skin is as clear and clean as any child's. It is about four weeks since the last pimple disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. M. J. Bateman, 4256 Viola St.

Practically every druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00) and Resinol Soap (25c), but if you are suffering from itching, burning skin troubles, pimples, blackheads, dandruff, ulcers, boils, stubborn sores, or piles, it will cost you nothing to try these soothing, healing preparations. Just send to Dept. 26-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for a free sample of each.

Wylie Smith Says He Will Be Cleared

Released from a prison cell Monday afternoon on $5,000 bond, J. Wylie Smith, former president of the Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who recently was brought back from Mexico after eluding officers of the law for two years and doing service on the battlefield with Diaz and Madero, expects to devote his entire time to recovering his health.

No date has been set for the trial of Smith on the charge of forgery. Smith declares that papers found since his return to Atlanta will prove his innocence.

DETROIT, MICH., May 27.—The fifth annual report of the general apportionment committee, which included a recommendation that the convention make the raising of $6,000,000 for missions annually the ultimate objective, was presented to the Northern Baptist Convention in session here.

The recommendation was approved.

BULGARIA READY TO BEGIN WAR ON SERVIA

Latter Country Warned Not to Annex the Turkish Territory It Now Occupies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—Bulgaria will declare war against Servia if the latter country annexes all the Turkish territory it has occupied since the outbreak of the Balkan war.

This was the message received here to-day from Sofia, and it contained the additional information that Bulgaria is ready to begin hostilities at once.

Servia holds most of the strategic points in Central Albania and Macedonia. Czar Nicholas has informed the Bulgarian Government through M. Sazonoff, the Foreign Minister, that he will not act as arbitrator between Bulgaria and Servia.

Turks Plan to Resume War On Quarreling Allies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 27.—The possibility that Turkey, taking advantage of the dissension among the Balkan allies, may resume the war against the states in the Balkan league is looming up.

It was learned here to-day that the Porte has ordered $4,000,000 worth of fresh arms and ammunition, and that Enver Bey, chief of staff of the Turkish army, is attempting to re-form the various divisions of the Ottoman army.

Although peace negotiations have not been commenced by the plenipotentiaries in London, it is deemed unlikely that Europe would allow a resumption of the war.

'Naked Truth' Too Naked for St. Louis

NEW YORK, May 27.—When Professor William Wendschneider, the famous German sculptor, arrived today from England and learned that his statue, "The Naked Truth," designed for the Praetorius-Schurz-Daenzer Memorial Committee of St. Louis, Mo., had been rejected because it was too daring, he emitted a wail of protest.

The professor caught the first train going West, determined to change the opinions about "The Naked Truth."

of the South so bitterly hated. It was a notable illustration that this is again a united country and sectional lines are fast being obliterated.

A half-hour later a short business session was held by the Sons of Confederate Veterans, after which came the formal opening of the reunion by the veterans.

This afternoon business sessions will be held by the Veterans, Sons of Veterans and Confederate Memorial Association.

To-night the big social functions that will mark the reunion will begin.

Business sessions were held this afternoon by the veterans, Sons of Veterans and the memorial associations.

Social Affairs Begin.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the army of official sponsors and maids of honor will parade the downtown streets in automobiles provided by the entertainment committee and their escorts.

At 7 o'clock a garden party will be tendered the sponsors and maids at Warner Park.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy will entertain the veterans with a reception at the Bennett Young Pavilion to-night.

A business session of the Sons will take place at 8 o'clock at the Auditorium.

Preparations for the unveiling of the Alabama monument to-morrow morning are being made to-day. A large delegation has arrived from Alabama on a special train. The unveiling will take place at 10:30 o'clock. The Florida monument will be unveiled an hour earlier.

Young for Re-election.

General Bennett H. Young, commander-in-chief, will probably be re-elected by the veterans, though there is some talk of opposing candidates. He is serving his first year, having been elected at the Macon reunion last year.

Active campaigns have been launched by Jacksonville, Fla., and Tulsa, Okla., for next year's gathering. Other cities mentioned for this honor are Nashville, Richmond, Baltimore, San Antonio and Denver. Nashville and Richmond have entertained the veterans in the past. None of the other cities mentioned has had a reunion.

Camp A. P. Stewart, in Jackson Park, where tents and commissaries have been established for those veterans unable to pay for hotel accommodations, is to-day sheltering its quota of old soldiers and presents a warlike appearance. Last night, after the day's arrivals had been assigned to quarters, unpacked their luggage and had supper, they gathered around their camp fires and retold stories of the war and particularly of the campaigns around Chattanooga and Chickamauga.

General Young a Speaker.

General Bennett H. Young, commander in chief, followed Governor Hooper with his annual address, the chief feature of which was his tribute to Southern womanhood.

Veterans, sponsors, maids and visitors are exercised to-day over whether women shall ride astride in the reunion parades. General J. P. Hickman's order that only side saddles for women shall be permitted has caused the stir, and this promises to become an issue overshadowing the real business of the convention of veterans.

General Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division, is grand marshal of the veterans' parade. Although he issued his order last week that women should not ride astride, it was not until the visitors had begun to gather yesterday and to-day that real opposition to it became pronounced.

This opposition comes largely from sponsors and maids who had planned to don divided skirts or riding trousers and sit on their steeds like men, and Sons of Veterans chosen as their escorts.

Order Will Stand.

But for every opposing voice there is one commending General Hickman's decree, the approval coming from veterans and their wives and some of the younger generation who do not approve of the present-day style. To-day the indications are that General Hickman's order will stand and that in the veterans' parade at least side saddles alone will be permitted on women's mounts.

The first of the reunion parades took place this morning at 9 o'clock when the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, on the edge of the Chickamauga battlefield national park, marched through the downtown streets of Chattanooga in full dress uniform and equipment.

Old Soldiers Cheer U. S. Regulars in First of Parades at Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 27.—For the first time in the more than twenty years of the organization, the United Confederate Veterans were welcomed at their annual reunion by a Republican Governor to-day when Ben W. Hooper officially extended the hospitality of Tennessee to the old soldiers and the thousands of other visitors assembled here.

The reunion formally opened at 10 o'clock with exercises at the reunion auditorium. Meetings of affiliated bodies yesterday were only preliminary to the assembling of the veterans.

W. E. Brock, general chairman of the Chattanooga reunion committees, called the assemblage to order and delivered the gavel to General John P. Hickman, of Nashville, commander of the Tennessee division. Dr. J. W. Bachman, of Chattanooga, chaplain general of the U. C. V., pronounced the opening invocation and then Governor Hooper delivered his address. It was rumored that a hostile demonstration against the Republican Governor would be attempted, but it failed to materialize.

Georgia Hardware Men Here Wednesday

More than a hundred hardware men are looked for in Atlanta Tuesday and Wednesday for the annual convention of the Georgia Retail Hardware Men's Association.

Sessions will be held at the Auditorium, beginning Wednesday morning and will continue through Thursday and Friday. Several of the largest hardware manufacturers of the State will have exhibits.

Policeman Knocked Out by Thunderbolt

Policeman J. J. Clack was shocked into unconsciousness by a bolt of lightning that struck somewhere in the vicinity of Peachtree and Houston Streets, punctuating the downpour of rain early Tuesday morning.

The policeman at the time of the thunder clap was reporting to headquarters from the police box on that corner.

Clack was revived in a nearby drug store and taken to his home.

GIRLS BURN BOOKS AT AGNES SCOTT

Seniors End College Year With Torchlight Parade and Big Bonfire on Campus.

With stars twinkling and torchlights glimmering, the seniors of Agnes Scott made a bonfire of their books on the campus. Aided in the torch-bearing by sophomores and surrounded by several hundred alumnae and friends, they went through the ceremony with all of the gayety that only a crowd of college maids could display.

Burning of the books followed a torchlight parade on the campus. As the torch-bearers tripped over the beautiful lawn, their class songs and cheers drew a hearty response from the crowd.

A glee club concert opened with the cantata, "Death of Joan of Arc," led by Miss Almedia Sadler and Miss Isabel Norwood.

"The Last Rose of Summer" and "A Serenade," by Miss Rosa Hill; "Mammy's Little Honey" and "My Lady Clo," by Miss Sadler; "Love's Dilemma," by Miss Norwood, and a rendition of "Annie Laurie," by Misses Jean Ashcraft, Isabel Norwood, Pauline Bruner and Rosa Hill, were features.

Tuesday night the two literary societies will cross swords in a debate on the question: "Resolved, That the Panama Canal should be free."

Girl of 4 Is Second Cousin to Herself

MINNEAPOLIS, May 27.—Mrs. Jennie Golden, who when thirteen years old was married to her half nephew, then twenty years old, has filed suit to have the marriage annulled, so the relationship of their four-year-old daughter, Margaret, may be straightened out and the girl not be compelled to go through life as second cousin to herself.

Christian Golden, the husband, wants the marriage annulled, too.

Kahn Urges Plan to Strengthen Army

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An army reserve created by one-year enlistments is advocated by Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, who declared to-day he believed Japan's pugnacious attitude was due to the knowledge that few American men have even the rudiments of military training.

Kahn advocates an enlistment of one year of active service and three years in the reserve.

Negro Leaders in Annual Conference

Dr. W. E. B. DuBose, of New York, former head of the sociological department of Atlanta University and founder of an annual conference for the study of negro problems, was the central figure at the eighteenth session at the University Monday.

Drills and songs were given by 170 negro children from the free negro kindergartens of Atlanta. The principal address was by Dr. DuBose on the need of education and play to conserve the moral forces of the negroes.

GIVES UP HUSBAND FOR UPLIFT WORK

Mrs. Sarah MacD. Sheridan, Former Georgian, Tells Why She Didn't Fight Divorce.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Mrs. Sarah MacDonald Sheridan, former Georgian and daughter of one of the leading men of the Southern States at the time of the Civil War, told to-day why she permitted her husband to obtain a divorce in Reno without contest.

Her husband, Charles Oscar Sheridan, went to Nevada four years ago for his health. She refused to join him there. He obtained a decree for absolute divorce last Saturday.

She said to-day she regarded it as her great duty to continue her sociological work, in which she had been engaged for 30 years. Mrs. Sheridan is the founder of the "New National Fireside" movement for the opening of public schools after hours as neighborhood social centers, and declared she believed her work along these lines of greater importance than the maintenance of her domestic relations.

"I have lived to see my son, Mark Sheridan, in the old family home in Atlanta, become one of the most promising young mural painters of the day," she said, "and my daughter happily married to the younger son of one of England's noblest families. This accomplished, I feel that my family life has been full."

Mrs. Sheridan is an intimate friend of President Wilson and his family and is a musician of ability as well as a sociologist. From her youth Mrs. Sheridan devoted her talents to the improvement of social conditions in her own State. The Martha Berry Industrial School was established mainly through her efforts.

BRYAN GETS INTO TRAP IN ROW WITH JAPAN

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Students of statecraft declare that the Wilson administration has needlessly, not to saw stupidly, walked into a trap in the controversy with Japan over the California alien land law.

In its reply to Great Britain's Panama Canal tolls protest, this Government laid down the principle that until an overt act had been committed against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, Great Britain would have no standing in court; in other words, that Great Britain's grievance would become a matter for diplomatic adjustment only after an American ship had actually passed through the canal free. This statement cleared the atmosphere and left Great Britain no reasonable grounds for continuing the debate.

The same principle applies in the controversy with Japan.

The obvious reply of Secretary of State Bryan to the first Japanese protest, in view of the attitude assumed toward Great Britain, was to state that the treaty with Japan had not been violated, and, therefore, there was no matter for contention between the two governments until after some Japanese subject in California had been aggrieved by the operation of some California law.

But instead of adopting this logical course, it was pointed out here to-day the Wilson administration floundered about in the diplomatic puddle, and, denying that the treaty of 1911 had been violated, invited further negotiations, thus giving the Japanese Ambassador an excellent opportunity to quote the State Department against itself, where the very same principle is involved.

As the matter is now, instead of making a firm stand on precedent and silencing the Japanese protest as the British protest was silenced, the Wilson administration has promoted bickering between the two nations, Japan and the United States, and is in the ridiculous position of holding two diametrically opposite policies in relation to identically the same problem. If the American position is right in regard to the Panama Canal protest, it is wrong in regard to the Japanese protest, and vice versa.

It is the expectation here that Japan will take instant advantage of the inconsistency and incongruity of the position of the United States.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! And Again, Wuxtry!

"Talk about nature faking," exclaimed the hotel clerk, "just listen to this from a paper published out West. The items were sent in by the correspondent at Azusa, wherever that is."

And then he read the following:

"James Snyder, of this town, brought home four baby squirrels the other day and the family cat has adopted them and nurses them with her kittens.

"Then John Davis and Sherman Ward caught eight young foxes and their family cats have adopted them.

"Fred Bierer owns a calf that has but one foreleg, but runs just as well as any calf with its complete quota of legs.

"Ardell Smith, 16 years old, was knocked down and run over by a hog. The doctors called in say his left knee will be stiff for the rest of his life as a result of the accident.

"J. L. Brown's old hen has every day for the past three weeks laid an egg three inches long.

"Since the 'clean up' here there hasn't been much refuse in the streets and the birds got to eating tobacco crumbs and acquired the tobacco habit. Now they refuse grain and live on cigar and cigarette stubs."

Sure, Let 'Em Pay For the Luxuries.

Atlanta barbers have been discussing the edict that came from Trenton, N. J., the other day raising the price of trimming a Van Dyke beard from two bits to 35 cents.

"They're right," said the head barber, as he deftly deposited a comb behind his left ear and began running his fingers through his customer's hair.

"Never saw a guy who insisted on wearing a bunch of spinach like that who wasn't harder to please than your wife with her new summer hat. And a guy who will insist on having his mustache curled—well, some men is queer. Soak 'em, says I, soak 'em, and soak 'em good and plenty."

And the customer went out warbling:

What! The kibosh on the Van Dyke,
And an extra charge to boot
When the barber does your mustache
With a curl so cute and sweet,
sweet and cute?

But we've something to be thankful for,
Downtrodden men, by heck!
The barbers haven't raised the price
For a shave
Upon
the
neck!

Preacher Sentenced To Gallows Appeals

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 27.—Rev. Marion Capps, a former Methodist preacher, has filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court from a sentence of death imposed upon him by a Sebastian County jury. He was convicted of burning to death three of his children. Evidence at the trial was that the children were tied in bed, which was saturated with oil, and the house fired.

Capps was convicted on the testimony of two elder children, who escaped, but who, it is alleged, have since declared they swore falsely against their father.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY ACCUSES NEGRO CONLEY

strangled Mary Phagan when about half drunk.

"I'll go further and say that the last three months that Conley was here I was suspicious of him and tried to watch him as closely as possible, for I placed no dependence in him. He became indifferent about his work and shiftless."

Mrs. White Denies Identification.

Mrs. J. Arthur White, of 59 Bonnie Brae Avenue, made positive denial to the Solicitor General's office Tuesday that she ever had made any identification of James Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, as published in an afternoon paper.

"I can not understand why such a story should have been manufactured and published," she said to a reporter. "I was just called by the Solicitor General to confirm it, and told him, as I had told him before, that I never had identified the negro.

"I saw a negro sitting on a box on the first floor of the factory as I left there about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the murder. I did not get a good look at his face. I got just a general impression of his clothes and of his size.

"At the police station ten negroes were brought before me. I picked out one with a green derby and said that he looked considerably like the man I had seen. They told me to look again, and I picked out another man that I thought looked a little more like the negro I had seen, but I never made any positive identification; and I told the detectives, in the first place, that I would not be able to. They never told me the names of the men I had picked out, so I don't know whether one of them was Conley or not."

The detectives never have placed much weight on the identification of Mrs. White, as she said that she could not be positive. Added to this is the fact that she saw a negro loitering around the factory at 1 o'clock, which, it is thought, he would have been very unlikely to do had he had anything to do with the disappearance of Mary Phagan, who was in the factory a few minutes after 12 o'clock.

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as conclusive as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual eyewitnesses of the crime, this question naturally is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the mystery, and that means practically every person in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the close-lipped and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even at this early date, when only the vaguest of hints have been given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion, it is patent that there are many openings offered the defense for attacks upon the theories of the State.

Burden of Proof on State.

Those who are close to the daily developments in Atlanta's baffling murder mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered are bearing in mind that, in the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution and not upon the defense.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law has hedged everyone under suspicion of crime, that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime or establish his connection beyond a reasonable doubt.

Until the State is able to do this, Luther Z. Rosser may rest on his oars if he so desires. Leo Frank is innocent this moment in the eyes of the law. His innocence does not need to be proved. It is presumed.

It immediately becomes a question, therefore, as to whether the State really has made out a case against Frank, so far as can be judged from the evidence in the hands of the public. Have the detectives by any of their discoveries connected Frank directly with the crime? Have they assembled such a chain of circumstantial incidents as to make his guilt appear certain beyond a reasonable doubt?

Frank's Friends Deny Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank answer both questions emphatically in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence seriously.

The law will not permit Frank's conviction for the crime merely because the detectives have discovered that he had the opportunity. It will not permit his conviction, if no convincing evidence is found against him, merely because he is unable to put his hands on another man and say, "This is the man you want. He is the guilty person."

It is not the intention of the law to hang one man simply because no one else can be found who is the more likely culprit.

After the State has presented its reasons for believing in the guilt of Frank, it is regarded as likely that the defense will claim first of all that the State has failed to establish Frank's connection with the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The defense will represent that the most the State has done is to establish that he had the opportunity to commit the murder.

Frank never was seen with the girl, either on the day of the strangling or before. It is not known that he ever spoke to her except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed. None of Frank's clothing has been found with blood stains upon it. No finger prints upon the girl's body or her clothes were identified as his. None of his personal belonging were found near the girl's body. Absolutely nothing was discovered in the search of the detectives that fastened the crime on him.

Own Admission Caused Arrest.

The police possibly would never even have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission. He told the officers the moment he identified the body that that was the girl he paid at noon the day before. No one else knew that Mary Phagan was in the building at that time, so far as the evidence reveals. Frank did not have to tell if he had desired to conceal the fact.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission, given freely and voluntarily, be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time? Is a guilty man likely to tell the officers as soon as he is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission?"

If the State attempts to show that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as one of the theories contends, the defense will be able to argue that there were several other people in the factory at the time, this fact opening the way to the argument that if the crime was committed at this time it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely to attack the girl when he knew there were other persons in the factory at the time who might discover him.

May Prove an Alibi.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed in the evening, as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Fomby indicate may be done, the defense will be able to establish a very strong alibi for the suspected man from the testimony of seven persons who are said to have been at Frank's house Saturday evening playing a game of cards.

Several of them already have testified before the Coroner's jury, and all of them are said to be willing to give their testimony in court to the effect that they saw Frank come home that evening about the time he said in his statement to the Coroner's jury, and that he remained home the remainder of the evening, to the best of their knowledge.

This will bring it to an issue of veracity between Mrs. Mima Fomby and these seven persons, who are persons of reputation and standing in the community, if, indeed, the testimony of Mrs. Fomby is allowed admission, which appears very doubtful.

Mrs. Fomby swore in her affidavit that Frank called her on the telephone several times between 6:30 and 10:30 o'clock the Saturday night of the murder, asking her for permission to bring a girl to her place. She testified that she denied his request. It is between these hours that Frank has a very well established alibi from all appearances.

Another Motive Possible.

The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body either immediately after the crime or at the times the body was exhumed.

Added to this fact is the unexplained circumstance that the girl's purse never has been found. It contained only the wages she had drawn that day, to be sure, but even this small amount might prove an incentive to some persons, the defense very likely will argue. And it is not at all certain that the robber, if robbery was the motive, had any idea that the amount he would obtain would be so small.

"Is it probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when it could not have incriminated in any way any particular persons had it been lying near her body?" is a question that can be put to the jurors in this connection.

The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the Coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack the identification of Frank made by Officer House, of Druid Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer.

They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probabilities of a man of Frank's standing permitting himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the officer and saying, "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his identity secret. Probabilities are bound to play a large part in the trial, declare those interested in the mystery, for it is very much on a sequence of probabilities that the police are basing their expectations of convicting Frank.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the park guard discovered in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will still be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons.

The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negro, James Conley, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with his statement that he wrote notes at the dictation of Frank the day before the murder.

Sentell May Yet Be Witness.

Laying aside the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one had even suggested up to the time of the negro's alleged confession, the friends of Frank, and those who are without personal interest as well, scouted the idea that Frank, who is an intelligent and shrewd man, would take an ignorant negro into his confidence and do everything but tell him that he was going to commit a murder on the next day.

It is rumored that E. L. Sentell may yet figure in the case again. Sentell is the man who declared positively before the Coroner's jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sentell knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he met her on the street in company with some man and that he said, "Hello, Mary," and that she replied, "Hello, Ed."

This testimony would appear quite conclusive were it not for the statements of the physicians that the girl must have been dead at least six hours when found. It is known, however, that some confidence is still being placed in his statements.

STYLES DEMAND RAPID CHANGE BY DANDIES

PARIS, May 27.—The dandies of Paris have daily been rehearsing of late on quick-change dress in order to be able to slip from one suit into another with lightning speed so as to waste the minimum of time in this way during the height of the season.

The decrees of masculine fashion, which in recent years have become as inexorable as the requirements of feminine modes, are unusually Draconian this year. Even in the hottest weather it will not be permissible to appear in the streets wearing white flannels after 11 o'clock in the morning.

After lounging at his ease for an hour or so the well-dressed man must rush home and jump into a pair of neatly checked trousers. This garment which, as in the case of all the other trousers, the valet must iron out with sharply defined creases every morning, hangs broadest and loosest from the waist. With this may go a tobacco-colored business coat with narrow lapels, and a silk hat.

For the Afternoon Call.

This suit does for a stroll in the Bois, but after luncheon the dandy with calls to pay makes a second quick change. This time he dons a pair of well-creased chimney-pot trousers with faint stripes, and a cutaway coat, skin-tight. The latter must have a long tail, closely following the shape of the figure and bulging nowhere.

In the hottest weather the waistcoat may be dispensed with on the sole condition that the coat be unbuttoned and a white slip be worn sewed into the inner side of the lapel to give the similitude of a waistcoat.

If one is going to the races white flannel trousers may be worn with this coat, but not if attending receptions.

Both morning and afternoon coats are built up so as to give the man the appearance of being deep-chested and broad-shouldered, so tailors are now laying in a liberal supply of padding material.

Snuff-Colored Evening Dress.

The evening style runs in the direction of broad trousers. Again the striking feature, however, is the coat, which is a transparent imitation of the women's "jupe fourreau." The back and the tail, which fall below the knees, cling tightly to the body, and must fall in graceful curves not only behind but also in front. Black cloth is the evening wear, although colors are permitted this year, the choice mostly going to snuff-colored evening dress.

Terra-cotta colored handkerchiefs are also a feature of men's spring fashions.

Paris tailors have entered a campaign against London's supremacy in the matter of men's wear, and this year's fashions are designed with the object of persuading Americans to fit themselves out in Paris instead of in the British capital.

Morgan Firm Denies Attack on President

WASHINGTON, May 27.—A prompt repudiation of the anti-administration interview attributed to Henry P. Davison, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in Paris, has been received at the State Department.

This interview, attacking both President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, was cabled to a New York newspaper some days ago and was alleged to represent the ultimatum of Wall Street to the United States Government.

Cripple Run Down By Cyclist Is Dying

MACON, GA., May 27.—Edward Green, a cripple of Monticello, Ga., who was struck by a motorcycle yesterday afternoon as he was being wheeled across Mulberry street, is expected to die.

W. J. Radcliff, of Atlanta, was trying out a new motorcycle, preparatory to starting on a ride to Norfolk, Va., when the collision took place. He is under arrest.

You can now brew your own beer—best you ever tasted—easily, cheaply, right in your own home. With Johann Hofmeister Beer Extract anyone can make the same high quality lager beer that has been made in Germany for ages—in the same honest, old-fashioned way. Beer that's so tasty, wholesome, satisfying, every member of the family will surely be delighted with it. Better beer than you can buy in saloons or in bottles anywhere. And it will cost less than 3 cents a quart—a little over a half cent a glass!

Real Malt and Hop Beer at 11 Cents a Gallon Remember, it's not near-beer—not imitation beer—but real German style lager beer, made of select Barley Malt and the best Hops. Beer of fine, natural color—topped with a rich, creamy foam. Beer with snap and sparkle—clear and pure as can be—with life and health in every drop. And the taste—oh, delicious!

Johann Hofmeister Lager Beer Extract is guaranteed under the U. S. Food and Drugs Act, Serial No. 30,317. No license needed anywhere to make your own beer with this pure extract. Get a can of it to-day, follow the simple instructions—then you'll know why brewery beer can never be sold where this beer has been introduced.

50c can makes 3 gallons of beer.
75c can makes 7 gallons of beer.

Sold by all Druggists, or sent direct, prepaid, upon receipt of price (either size), by Johann Hofmeister, 168 Hofmeister Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

GOOD BILL AT FORSYTH.

Old favorites and new join in the bill at the Forsyth this week—and an unusually good bill it is, too. Every act is a topnotcher of its kind and there's variety enough for every one.

Maggie Cline, by struggling along some way, it seems, has been able to miss Atlanta for nineteen years. But she's here this week, and although the younger generation is not on right close speaking terms with her at first she soon warms the house and gets one of her "regular" old-time receptions. She sings the good old Irish stuff in the way that made her famous many years ago, and for good measure gives her greatest hit of the olden days, "Throw 'im Down, McCloskey," which brings down the upper part of the house as of yore.

Among the other splendid numbers on the bill are Ethel Kirk and Billy Fogarty, who have a high-class song and patter act; Cari Rosine, a magician who doesn't bore you as you think he is going to; the great Howard, a ventriloquist, who has an entirely new line of stuff and puts it over in a novel way; Cesare Nesi, a splendid singer who warbles under the title of "Young Caruso," and does not libel the great and only tenor to any extent; Madden and Fitzpatrick, in a clever sketch in which Madden does some original piano playing, and the Equilli brothers, equilibrists who really are different. Of course, there are the motion pictures.

"ST. ELMO" SATISFACTORY.

Miss Billy Long and her company began a week's engagement Monday at the Atlanta in "St. Elmo," presenting the old Southern book play as acceptably as it can be played.

The play is a selection from six offered the patrons of the Atlanta, and the strength of the company lent itself admirably to the play.

Mr. Vail as St. Elmo Murray, the cynic, played the part forcibly and sympathetically. Miss Long's part, Edna Earl, was almost negligible, but was well handled.

"St. Elmo" will be seen nightly and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"THE RESURRECTION" AT GRAND

Blanche Walsh, one of the few American actresses who deserves the name of tragedienne, will be seen in Atlanta this week in her most famous role, that of Katusha in Tolstoy's wonderful drama, "The Resurrection."

It is a picture play which brings Blanche Walsh and the Russian play to the Grand this week, and the photo-drama will begin Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and continue until 10:30 o'clock that evening, with repetitions on Friday and Saturday. The prices will range from 10 to 25 cents.

White City Park Now Open

Carolina Desperado Slain Near Sylvania

AUGUSTA, GA., May 27.—Richard Henry Austin, murderer of three white men at Allendale, S. C., several weeks ago, was killed Monday night near Sylvania. The negro was trying to cross an open space to get to a swamp when he was fired upon by a score of men.

Austin had only two shells left and they were loaded with buckshot. They were identified as shells taken from Magistrate Edenfield, when Austin killed him in Hampton County.

Minister Nabs 'Tiger' Then Rides With Him

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—After he had arrested Bert Snyder, driver for a wholesale liquor company, on a charge of violating the prohibition law, the Rev. J. M. Dunlavy, welfare officer of Kansas City, Kan., climbed into Snyder's wagon and accompanied him as he delivered beer to his various customers.

The minister remained with the driver until he made his legal deliveries and then took him to the police station, where the man was released on bond.

CRAWLS THROUGH LONG PIPE.

COLUMBUS, IND., May 27.—Thomas Hardin crawled through 620 feet of 20-inch water pipe, leading from the water works to the new filter building seeking obstructions in the main. When he emerged the skin was worn from each of his elbows.

Veterans Present Hat to Capt. Cook

As spokesman for the W. H. T. Walker Camp 925, United Confederate Veterans, Comrade J. H. Shellnut, a one-legged veteran, presented Captain J. H. Cook with a military-shaped black alpine hat.

The presentation took place just before the camp formed in line to march to the railway station to board the Chattanooga train. Accepting the gift in a few words, Captain Cook ordered the camp to fall in, and the veterans marched to the station to entrain for the scenes of their combat of 50 years ago.

Inquiry of Wilson's Lobby Charge Asked

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An investigation by a special committee of five members of the House into the so-called tariff lobby which President Wilson charges is doing its best to defeat the Underwood bill was proposed in a resolution introduced in the House to-day.

Representative Tavenner, of Illinois, started the move.

Marshall Tells Girls: 'Be Just to Servants'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Vice President Marshall was the star speaker before the graduating class of a local girls' seminary.

"Deal justly with your servant," he advised. "You do not need to try to make her your equal and introduce her to your fiance, nor is it necessary to make her a common menial."

New Name Is Given Equitable Building

When workmen tear away the burlap which hides their work just now, the Equitable Building will be a thing of history. Henceforth the skyscraper, Atlanta's first, will be known as "The Trust Company of Georgia Building."

The new name is being chiseled in the stone over the Edgewood Avenue entrance.

Virginians Claim 'Light Horse' Lee

ROANOKE, VA., May 27.—A committee of the Virginia Legislature is on its way to Georgia to-day for the purpose of bringing to his native State the remains of Henry Lee, better known as "Light Horse Harry Lee," the father of General Robert E. Lee.

General Lee died at Savannah on his return journey from Cuba, where he had been on account of his health. He was buried on Cumberland Island, near that city, and his grave has since been cared for by the Georgia Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

ACTOR SLAYS POLICEMAN.

HACKENSACK, N. J., May 27.—Policeman Patrick Considine, shot by James Devlin, a vaudeville actor, because Devlin objected to alleged attentions paid to Mrs. Devlin, is dead. Devlin and Mrs. Devlin are in jail.

Some Folks

Still "put a sign in the window" when they have Rooms to Rent or Want Boarders, but the number of such people is constantly diminishing. In these modern times, when there are Rooms to rent or Boarders wanted, in hundreds of Atlanta Homes, the Want Ad columns of THE ATLANTA GEORGIAN are used. The "Furnished Rooms For Rent," "Rooms For Rent" and "Boarders Wanted" columns of The Georgian offer the best way to bring together those in search of the above.

FLAGLER AND SON ESTRANGED TEN YEARS

NEW YORK, May 27.—Much interest is expressed by men of financial affairs as to the part Harry Harkness Flagler will play in the disposition of the great fortune of his father, Henry M. Flagler, estimated to be more than $60,000,000. Harry Harkness Flagler is 42 years old. He has been connected but little with the work of his father either in the Standard Oil Company or in the great development plans carried on in Florida.

It was said by men who have had close acquaintance with the Flagler affairs that the son and the father had been estranged for a long period, and that for ten years they had not spoken until the day before Flagler died, when the younger man arrived at Palm Beach from Europe in time to see his father alive.

Harry Harkness Flagler, though a man of acknowledged business capacity, never has engaged in business. He has kept singularly aloof from the affairs of the Standard Oil Company. He never showed interest in the Florida railroad and hotel projects of his father, so far as is known. At the age of 22, with a large career in business before him if he chose, it was regarded as doubtful that he ever would go into business.

His temperament is artistic and his nature is one of excessive delicacy. It is said that as a child he preferred to play with girls rather than with boys.

It was held yesterday that a possible reason for the trusteeing of the Flagler estate lay in the divergence of interests of the son and the father. It was conjectured that the elder Flagler decided that his plans for further development of Florida, which it is believed he caused to be drawn up when he was ill, could be carried out better under the direction of trustees in close association with his life activities than in any other way.

The younger Flagler is a Columbia University man of the class of 1894. He is a son of Flagler's first wife, who was a member of the Standard Oil family of Harkness. He married Miss Anna Lamont in 1898.

CHICKENS GET SOUSED.

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—A dozen chickens in a coop at the city market were deluged by a broken jug of whisky. The chickens stuck their heads through the slats of the coop and snipped the liquor. Soon afterward the roosters began to crow noisily and the pullets flapped their wings.

Important Events From All Over the Old World Told in a Few Short Lines.

LONDON, May 24.—A comprehensive valuation of Buckingham Palace and its contents just completed by a West End firm is given at $17,500,000. The value of one room is estimated at $2,500,000.

Scott's Body to Remain Near Pole.

LONDON, May 27.—No effort is to be made to disturb the body of Captain Robert F. Scott, nor those of the heroes who died with him while returning from the expedition to the South Pole. Lord Curzon made this announcement at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society.

Fails in Exams; Kills Himself.

LILLE, FRANCE, May 27.—Disappointment at his failure to pass his examinations caused a medical student named Cuvilier to commit suicide at the university here. At the moment when the dean of the faculty was reading the list of results and had reached the student's name with the announcement that he had not qualified, he drew a revolver and shot himself in the breast.

New Florida County Named for Wilson

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., May 27.—The Florida House of Representatives is tht first legislative body to honor the name of Woodrow Wilson by naming a county for him.

The new county will be cut from Walton and Santa Rosa Counties in West Florida, bordered on the east by Walton, the west by Santa Rosa, the north by the State of Alabama and the south by the Gulf of Mexico. The county will extend the entire width of the State at that point.

Would Tax Movies For French Defense

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 27.—M. Dumont, Minister of Finance, has proposed to the budget committee of the Chamber of Deputies that the moving picture shows be taxed to help pay for the increased national defenses.

He said he expected that $1,000,000 could be raised in this way.

MUNCIE, IND., May 27.—After reading newspaper accounts of the death of B. Sanders Walker, the Macon, Ga., banker, who accidentally swallowed a bichloride of mercury tablet, Mrs. Elizabeth Hulderman, aged 20, wife of a wealthy real estate dealer here, swallowed several tablets and died.

ULM URGES PENAL REFORM FOR POOR

Governor's Executive Secretary Declares Present System Penalizes Poverty.

Major A. H. Ulm, executive secretary and ex-officio pardon attorney to Governor Brown, has given out an interview strongly commending the proposed efforts of the Georgia Prison Association to bring about healthy changes in the Georgia criminal laws and prison system.

"A person changed with misdemeanor is given the option of paying a fine or going to the chaingang," said Major Ulm. "Under our procedure, if he goes to the gang, he can not later change his mind and pay the fine. Many prisoners at time of sentence are unable to communicate with friends or relatives in time to pay the fine.

Must Appeal to Governor.

"The only way he can avail himself of the privilege of a money payment is by appealing to the Governor for clemency. If he pay an agent to attend to that routine, which we are compelled to enforce, nine times out of ten he will be forced to serve out the sentence.

"This amounts to penalizing poverty and misfortune. The State law on the subject should be the same as municipal laws, by which prisoners may pay, without bother and expense, the pro rata portion of the fine not worked out any time while serving the sentence.

Urges Suspended Sentences.

"Judges should be permitted to suspend sentences, with some form of probation, in all misdemeanor and, under wise restriction, in some felony cases, as that of a youth arraigned for the first time on a technical case of burglary.

"The State is in need of some form of indeterminate sentence. The parole law partly suffices, as it is intended to do, but it does not fill the need.

"Better provision also should be made for carrying out our present parole law. Virtually no funds are provided for investigating meritorious cases or for inspecting and supervising the conduct of those paroled."

Eisenfeldt Case Is Postponed 30 Days

The case against Mrs. Julia Eisenfeldt, proprietor of the Walton Inn, arrested following the complaint of a man that he had been robbed of a small sum of money in her house, was continued for 30 days, the man making the complaint being too ill to appear in court Monday.

Mrs. Eisenfeldt is the woman accused by E. O. Miles of paying money for police protection. Mrs. Eisenfeldt denies the accusation.

WIDE INTEREST IN PIANO CAMPAIGN

Hundreds Interested in Club Offer Made by the Weatherholt Company.

Seldom has an advertising campaign in Atlanta caused such widespread interest as that inaugurated Sunday in The American by the Weatherholt Piano Company, 72 North Broad Street.

The double-page advertisement, followed by a page in The Georgian yesterday afternoon announcing the sale of 400 player-pianos through a cooperative club of 400 members, has caused crowds of interested persons to visit the Weatherholt store.

Although the membership books do not open until to-morrow, many insisted upon selecting player-pianos in advance of enrolling. In anticipation of just such a rush, T. E. Weatherholt, president of the Weatherholt Company, made arrangements with the factory several weeks ago. These arrangements, together with thorough co-operation on the part of the railroads, have resulted in carloads of player-pianos arriving at the Weatherholt building.

This is the first time that player-pianos have ever been offered in this section to the public through cooperative club buying, and the reasonable price and the attractive terms of $10 down and $2.50 per week have awakened interest to an unusual degree.

Mr. Weatherholt selected a player-piano worth $650 for his club offer, and because of the tremendous purchasing power of the 400 club members, he was enabled to get them at a price which made the offer of $488.50 and at the attractive terms possible.

Among many other attractive features, the Weatherholt club offer includes twelve rolls of player music, with the privilege of exchanging them daily, if desired, for any other music in the Weatherholt library of 5,000 rolls.

LONDON, May 27.—Walter H. Page, the United States Ambassador to Great Britain, had no sooner reached London than he was asked by some English reporters concerning a report that he would refuse to wear knee breeches at Court. His answer was terse and pointed:

"Why do you ask me such a question? You surely don't want me to think that the imagination of a fool across the ocean begets more fools in London?"

Man, 72, Jilts Bride On Eve of Wedding

FORT COLLINS, COLO., May 27.—Cupid struck a snag here when he dallied with the affairs of T. C. Parker, 72, and Mrs. Nancy C. Pennington, 65, whose wedding was set for May 21.

The romance was shattered when the groom-to-be left here for Moline, Kans., where his relatives live. It is rumored here that an old sweetheart there is the attraction.

WIRE TROUBLE DID NOT FEAZE CUPID

Romance, Shattered After Eight-Dollar Phone Conversation, Ends in Marriage.

A romance that began in an Atlanta moving picture show, gained in strength at a New York motorcycle track, stood firm amid the vicissitudes of a theatrical career, and was broken off last week in an eight-dollar telephone conversation between Atlanta and Jacksonville, culminated in marriage Monday night, is being recounted to-day by friends of Miss Lena Quinn, a former Atlanta girl, who lives in Fitzgerald.

Miss Quinn is now the wife of Jack Morley, of Kansas City, who claims to be a motorcycle rider here for the races at Jack Prince's motordome. The wedding took place at the bride's home in Fitzgerald. They probably will return to Atlanta.

Mr. Morley came to Atlanta with his motorcycle last week, and several days ago Miss Quinn called him over long distance telephone from Jacksonville, where she has been spending the winter. Just what was said over the phone during the thirteen mintues conversation is unknown, but after it was over Mr. Morley flatly refused to pay the $8 telephone tolls and declared furthermore that his romance was shattered for good.

Miss Quinn, however, refused to have her romance shattered. She boarded the first train and arrived in Atlanta Monday morning. A reconciliation was soon effected.

EARNINGS OF BIG STORES FABULOUS

CHICAGO, May 27.—The Illinois Senate white slave committee to-day was in possession of information which the members of the committee regarded as valuable in presenting their plea for a minimum law for women and girls to the Legislature. The committee had figures on the profits of several large corporations.

Maxwell Edgar, an attorney, who obtained the data while preparing "tax-dodging" suits, reported that Marshall Field & Co.'s net profits in 1909 were $4,643,197.98, and in 1910, $4,419,427.81. Sears, Roebuck & Co., he testified, earned net profits of $6,099,794.61 in 1909 and $6,606,291.47 in 1910. The net profits of Armour & Co. in 1909 were $4,858,488.93, and in 1910, $3,865,266.95. The Illinois Steel Company's net profits in 1909 were $11,165,839.22.

The capital stock of Marshall Field & Co. is $6,000,000.

BRYAN TO SPEAK IN MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, MISS., May 27.—Secretary of State William J. Bryan will deliver the baccalaureate address at the Mississippi A. and M. College June 4 at Starkville. Governor Brewer and several State officials will be present.

Dr. Vaughan Defends Prison Treatment

Charges that prisoners in the Fulton County camps have been inhumanly treated are vigorously denied by the Rev. E. L. Vaughan, convict chaplain. Dr. Vaughan's prison work covers a period of 33 years, a score in direct touch with Fulton County prisoners.

"Especially," said Dr. Vaughan, "are these charges unjust in connection with Captain Tom Donaldson. I never have known him to be other than considerate.

"I do not believe there ever has been a prisoner punished in Fulton County unless he deserved it."

The "Classic" of All Millinery Sales

$5.00

For Hats Originally $8.50 to $25.00

There is just one hat that was $8.50 in the sale---and there are one hundred and fourteen of them all told. If an average were struck, it would border around the eighteen-dollar mark.

Indeed this is the "Classic" of all millinery sales!

They are hats for street wear, hats that summer travelers will want. There are black hats, black and white hats, green hats, blue hats---hats of all colors and of good style---depend upon that---the very greater part of them are from Estelle Mershon of 20 E. 46th St., New York---which is but another way of telling that the ribbons and the flowers and other trimmings are not only the choicest in themselves, but also that they are artistically, becomingly arranged.

Five dollars!

Could one think of missing such an opportunity?

A Silk Event

To-morrow at Nine o'Clock

An event in much the same fashion that a thorough house cleaning is to the housekeeper. We have gone deeply into the silk stocks and with a purpose---a very positive purpose to bring out all odd lots, surpluses and the like for one day's spirited selling.

Here are the results. The silks are all fine, worthy kinds that won their way into our favor and stocks because of their beauty---of fabric, pattern and coloring---which, taken together with the new prices, to-morrow shall develop into another of those splendid Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. Silk Sales.

59c For 85c and $1.00 Silks

Included are Shower-proof Foulards, 23 and 24 inches wide. The color range, the variety of patterns are all too great to be listed here—suffice it there are small, dainty patterns, new right now, in about any shade and combination of shades you might want. Also at this price are yard-wide taffetas in colors.

69c For 85c Shirtings

Those fine silk shirtings—33 inches wide, that are enjoying greater favor than in many seasons. Yes, they are washable. White grounds with colored and black line stripes.

83c For $1.50 to $2.25 Silks

Here is fine choice! Delicate chiffons in soft evening shades, plain and two-toned marquisettes, in seemingly the whole list of shades and in Dresden patterns, plain and two-toned taffetas, corded silks and poplins. Widths from 36 to 44 inches. There are going to be many pretty evening dresses and street dresses chosen from among these at rich savings!

$1.79 For $2.25 to $4 Chiffons

They are embroidered chiffons, 44 inches wide. In colors and designs for evening dresses. Pink and light blue, embroidered over with silver and deep mais and white. With these are crepe chiffons and bordered marquisettes.

$2.98 For $6 to $8 Chiffons

Exquisite imported materials rich in colors and embroidery—primarily "de luxe" fabrics. The embroidery shows in borders, sometimes very bold and heavy, and again delicate and dainty. Choose about any color—pink and white combinations, light blue and white, heliotrope and silver, silver and white, gold and black, and others.

dent of the United States in 1900; his succession to the White House in 1901 when President McKinley was assassinated, and his election to the Presidency in 1904.

Colonel Roosevelt then testified as follows:

Q. What did you do on the expiration of your term in 1909?—A. I went to Africa as special curator for the Smithsonian Institution and spent several months there in research work. Returning home, I became connected with the "Outlook."

Q. Where were you in October, 1912?—A. What part of that month? Cite an incident to remind me.

Q. Have you ever seen this paper?—(The colonel was shown a copy of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.) A. Yes, in October, 1912.

Copy of Paper Admitted.

Q. Where were you?—A. In Mercy Hospital.

Q. What city? (Attorney Belden objected. The court overruled the objection and allowed an exception.) A. In Chicago.

Q. Why were you there?—A. I had been shot.

Q. In what city?—A. In Milwaukee.

(Attorney Pound here introduced a copy of the paper in evidence and it was admitted without objection.)

Q. How did you feel when you read the editorial, "The Roosevelt Way?"—A. I was very indignant.

At this point Attorney Pound read the editorial, stating that action was based on the following:

What Caused the Suit.

Theodore Roosevelt is the only one that can call people liars, rascals and thieves. If any one calls him names he roars terribly, yet he is a pretty good liar himself. Roosevelt lies and curses in a most disgusting manner. He gets drunk, too, and that not infrequently, and all his intimates know about it.

Q. Have you ever been drunk?—A. I have never in my life been drunk or in the slightest degree under the influence of liquor.

Q. What use do you make of liquor?—A. I do not drink either whisky or brandy, save as I shall hereafter say, or under the direction of a doctor. I don't drink beer—I do not like it. I do sometimes drink light wines. I have never times drunk a high ball or cocktail in my life, but sometimes I have drunk a mint julep. There was a bed of mint in the White House yard. Perhaps I drank half a dozen of them a year.

Q. All at one time?

Judge Commands Order.

There was laughter and Judge Flannigan interrupted sternly.

"If there is any further demonstration the Sheriff will clear the court room. I will not have any disorder. Understand that."

A. Never but one mint julep at a time. I doubt very much if I drank over half a dozen in the seven years I was in the White House. In the four years since that time I have had two mint juleps—one at the Cincinnati Country Club and one in Arkansas from a loving cup. At dinner or at banquets I occasionally drink one or two glasses of light wine or champagne. I drink it publicly and openly.

Q. In the White House were there given so-called diplomatic dinners?—A. Yes, and there was served and I drank openly wine or champagne, one or two glasses of champagne. At state dinners, diplomatic dinners, at my dinners to my Cabinet, light wines and champagne were served. They were kept in the White House. I would not usually drink while alone, and it was not usually served unless there were guests. If there were guests, light wine was served and I would frequently drink one or two glasses. If there were diplomatic guests there would be champagne. I would drink about the same amount.

Drinks Brandy for Fever.

Q. Now as to the instruction of the doctor to which you referred, will you explain it?—A. Yes. During the Cuban campaign I had the Cuban fever and since that time I have had recurring attacks of it. These attacks usually come as the result of over-exertion, and at the direction of Surgeon Rixey I have occasionally used brandy in teaspoonful doses to check it. I had a severe attack of this illness while in Africa and had prepared for it by having a supply of brandy along.

I also had such attacks while in the Rocky Mountains and several touches of it during the political campaigns in which I made speeches. Usually brandy was taken along in case of need and there was champagne in my private car for the use of members of the party that used it.

I made it a rule never to drink anything at all during the day while on these trips and rarely anything at any time. What I did take on such trips was invariably on the advice of my physician, who always accompanied me.

Attorney Andrews for the defense conducted the cross-examination. He asked Colonel Roosevelt if he was paying the expenses of the prosecution of the libel suit against Editor Newett, or if the Progressive party were bearing it.

Colonel Roosevelt shouted his denial that any one except himself was paying. Sight of the colonel displaying his feelings caused a commotion among those in the court room, and Judge Flannigan ordered a bailiff to rap for order. The direct examination then continued.

Q. Are you a teetotaler or a prohibitionist?

An objection was overruled.

A. I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky, and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Q. Describe yourself as to your use of intoxicating liquors.—A. I am not a total abstainer, but am very abstemious, perhaps it would aid you to understand that if I were to describe the routine of my life at the White House.

Q. Yes; please do so.—A. I usually rose rather early and had breakfast with the members of my family. For twenty minutes I would walk in the White House grounds, often with one of the children or some member of my Cabinet. From my walk I would go directly to my office, where Secretary Loeb and I would go through the mail and receive Senators, Representatives and diplomatic officers. Unless I had shaved myself, I would be shaved by the barber in the room between my office and Mr. Loeb's. I was very busy, and it was necessary to save every minute of time, so I would dictate letters or talk to some callers while being shaved.

No Drinks Before Luncheon.

I would then be busy with conferences and correspondence until lunch time. Then I would wash my face and hands and walk down the terrace to the White House, where I would have lunch with my family. Never under any circumstances did I touch a drop of liquor of any kind before luncheon. If we lunched alone there was rarely any liquor, but if there were guests there would be served either light wine or champagne, and in either case I would usually drink one or two glasses of that.

After luncheon I would return to my office and be busy with my mail and callers until 4 o'clock. At that hour I went for a walk or ride, frequently with some member of my Cabinet. I would walk or ride until 6, when I returned to the White House. I would spend a half hour with the children, and then would bathe and dress for dinner.

At dinner there were usually guests, and wine was usually served. Occasionally I drank a glass or two. After dinner I either returned to my office or had Mr. Loeb in my library, where we went over mail and worked on messages and the like. About midnight I would read for twenty minutes, some book to take my mind off public business. Then I would go to sleep. Dr. Rixey usually was in to see me at bedtime.

Q. When you was mustered out of the army, what was your rank?

Attorney Belden. We object. That is irrelevant.

Court. It is relevant to show the plaintiff's position.

A. I was acting brigade commander, and was recommended to be brevetted a brigadier general.

Didn't Drink on Trips.

Q. Now, what were your drinking habits while on speaking trips?—A. I never drank anything during the day, and never anything at any time except on the advice of Dr. Rixey or my throat specialist, Dr. Curtis. After a hard day I often took one or two glasses of milk with a teaspoonful of brandy in each. Then I would read twenty minutes, see Dr. Rixey and go to sleep. I would sleep soundly to feel clear in the morning.

Q. When you speak of a hard day, just what do you mean?—A. I mean a long journey and many speeches, or either. Many of those trips were very exhausting, and that was the reason Dr. Rixey accompanied me. When you are President you can not be ill, and a President's work must go on, regardless.

Here the direct examination ended, and Horace Andrews, of Cleveland, Ohio, began the cross-examination.

Q. You are not a resident of Michigan?—A. No, sir; I have always been a resident of the State and city of New York, although ever since I was a boy I have usually spent a few summer months in the country. As a boy my time in the country was usually on a farm or country place of my father's.

Q. Then your visits to Michigan have been flying trips?—A. They have usually been brief trips.

Enumerates His Friends.

Q. Do you know anybody in Marquette County?—A. I know several people; Mr. Shiras best of all.

Q. You know that Mr. Shiras is not really a resident of Marquette; that he lives in the East and only spends his summers here?—A. I know that he is frequently away during the winter on natural history work. As to his legal residence I can not speak.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette?—A. I know Mr. Hill there.

Q. Mr. Hill of your counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just met him since you hired him as your lawyer, did you not?—A. I think I met him last summer.

Q. Think? Don't you know?—A. I don't remember certainly.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette County?—A. I have met a number of people at various times.

Q. And have promptly forgotten them, eh?—A. No, sir, but when one meets so many people one can't always recall names unless one is reminded by seeing the person.

Q. Ah, I see. Do you see any reminiscent faces in the court room?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your entire life has been given mostly to politics, has it not?—A. I should not say that. I would say that, previous to the Spanish war, I was as much of a naturalist and historian and writer as anything else.

Q. As President you met Senators and entertained them and were invited to their homes—is that not true?—A. I knew every Senator and entertained all of them at the White House. I was rarely invited to their houses.

Q. And you met members of Congress and received them at your house, did you not?—A. I knew every Representative in Congress and received all who called.

Q. And in traveling you attended many banquets given in your honor, did you not?—A. I attended some banquets.

Q. Where liquor was served?—A. Yes, certainly, where liquor was served.

Q. Yet, in all the fifteen years you have been in politics you have never drank anything except a little brandy and milk?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Just so, now as to the wines that you speak of as light wines, just what kind of wines were those?—A. Light white wines, California wines or Sauternes; once in a while I took a little Madeira.

Q. Is that all?—A. Once in a while a bit of sherry; I never drink red wines.

Q. Oh, you will swear that you have never tasted red wine?—A. No, certainly not. You know I did not mean that. What I mean is that I do not like red wines and that I never drink them. I do not mean that I have never tasted them. Probably I have and probably when they have been passed I have touched the glass to my lips.

Q. Do you keep wine, brandy and whisky in your house?—A. Yes, sir, all three.

Q. Did you keep liquor in the White House?—A. Yes, I kept the stock left me by Mr. McKinley.

Mr. Andrews: "I move the last part of that answer be stricken out as not responsive to my question."

Mr. Pound: "I think it is competent to show that he merely continued a custom already established."

Shows Signs of Anger.

The Court: "It is proper to show that if he will answer it in the way you indicate."

Mr. Roosevelt: "Then may I revise my answer?"

Mr. Andrews: "Certainly you may amend it, Mr. Roosevelt, if you can not wish to answer it directly or would be embarrassed to do so."

Mr. Roosevelt: "I can and will answer it directly."

The former president showed signs of anger.

A. I did keep wine, whisky and brandy of several kinds in the White House, as my predecessor had done before me, and as President Cleveland and President Garfield and others had done.

Q. And is it true that you kept two butlers to take care of this stock of liquors?—A. It is true that I kept two butlers, but they took care of the wines merely as an incident to their employment.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wallace, National Committeeman of the Progressive Party in Michigan?—A. I do.

Q. Did he institute this prosecution, this suit?—A. I don't know.

Q. What? You don't know who started this important piece of litigation for you?—A. I was in Mercy Hospital when it started and I can not say.

Again Denies Knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Wallace have anything to do with filing it?—A. I could not say.

Q. It was reported in newspaper interviews that he had started this suit on your behalf. Did you see those interviews or articles?—A. Not that I am able to recall.

Q. Have you borne all the expense of this suit personally, the cost of finding and summoning witnesses and bringing them here and taking depositions and the like?—A. I have borne all the expense.

Q. Was not a portion of that expense borne by the Progressive party of Michigan or by the Progressive national committee?—A. It was not. I paid everything.

Colonel's Voice Squeaked.

Colonel Roosevelt was thoroughly angry now, his face flushed, his voice squeaked and he clenched his fists and half rose from the chair.

Q. Would you know it if any expense in this suit were borne by any person other than yourself?—A. I certainly would, and it has all been borne by myself.

Mr. Andrews announced that this completed the cross-examination.

Mr. Pound, on redirect examination, asked two questions, both designed to bring out the fact that Colonel Roosevelt was paying the expenses of the prosecution.

Q. This suit was brought by your direction, was it not, at your expense?—A. It was.

Q. Did the Progressive party or any branch of its organization or any of its officers or workers or any other persons at any time contribute anything to the expense of this suit?—A. No, I bore the entire expense myself.

Pledged Speaker's Health.

Q. Tell us about Speaker Cannon's birthday party.—A. I drank a glass of champagne on that occasion in pledging the Speaker's birthday health.

Defense Scores "Eulogy."

"Hunting exploits and public acts are improper in an opening statement," was the objection raised by Attorney Belden, representing Newett, to the opening address of Attorney Pounds for Colonel Roosevelt. Two minutes after Judge Flannagan overruled his objection he was again on his feet, protesting against the statement which, he declared, was "an oration—a eulogy."

Judge Flannagan again refused to check Attorney Pounds' address, but ruled that the defense might save their objection. When Pounds, however, referred to the time when "this plaintiff was in power," the court upheld the objection of the defense and ordered Pounds to confine his remarks to a statement of what he intended to prove. The defense announced it would defer making a statement until after taking of testimony.

Before court session began, Judge Flannagan ordered all the witnesses on both sides out of the room. No person connected with the case was admitted to the court room during the trial, except the principals, their attorneys and the witness who was on the stand.

T. R. Inclines To Champagne

Defending himself against a charge of drunkenness, Colonel Roosevelt gives the following as an epitome of his drinking customs:

I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Hill's Market Basket Bond Sale a Success

ST. PAUL, May 27.—James J. Hill's plan of selling city bonds in certificates of $10 each through the Northwestern Trust Company was a big success to-day. Men and women were waiting at an early hour for the company's office to open, and a steady stream filed in and out all morning.

The officers were prepared and began to issue receipts for the money promptly. One hundred and seven small investors bought a total of $10,000 worth of certificates up to noon.

MEN AND RELIGION BULLETIN NO. 57

Atlanta Upholds Chief Beavers

The "Itching Palm" And The Character Assassin Have No Place Here.

The itching palm.

Judas Iscariot had it.

Thirty pieces of silver upon his hand, and Judas betrayed his Lord.

Poor Judas, learning too late the curse of the itching palm, threw away the money and killed himself in shame and sorrow.

Notwithstanding itching palms are here to-day.

And again and again would they betray Christ, our saviour, and rear for him a cross.

Their pay coming from the betrayal of girls matters not to them.

If they get their hire, they care not that their success would mean the dishonoring of motherhood, the blinding of babies, and the spreading of disease, insanity and death among innocent children and women.

These they ignore with a sneering curse.

But you do not; you care and understand; you recall.

Annually seven hundred thousand dollars and more poured through the white slave market of Atlanta into the itching palm.

The lie of segregation so prospered seven houses that their reputed owners received forty-three thousand and seventy-four dollars in the form of rent every year, more than twice as much as the rental of thirty-three other houses scattered throughout the city.

Chief Beavers closed them all and ended the ghastly farce of segregation.

Eight months have passed and the owners of the itching palm have become frantic.

For eight months the "unbreakable bank of the corrupt politicians" has been hampered by the honesty of a man whose palms will not itch.

How much have the owners of the houses and the liquor dealers lost?

Eight months is two-thirds of a year; two-thirds of seven hundred thousand dollars is four hundred and sixty-six thousand, six hundred and sixty dollars and sixty-six cents.

How their palms do itch!

And they have despaired of corrupting the Chief.

They have to get rid of him, if they ever open again their market with its unspeakable pimps and procurers plying their trade of debauching girls.

IS THIS CONNECTED WITH THE RECENT STUDIED EFFORT TO DISCREDIT THE CHIEF AND ATLANTA'S POLICE DEPARTMENT IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD?

Consider this before you answer.

Incorruptibility is not inefficiency.

And an unwillingness to violate one's oath—a refusal to let criminals live upon the shame of women is no evidence that a man is incompetent to be Chief of Atlanta's Police Force.

Hence the plight of protected vice and its servants.

THEY CANNOT CORRUPT; HENCE, THEY SEEK TO RUIN WITH LIES.

Their itching palms know not how to labor honestly, though they are skilled in squeezing money from helpless fallen women, their "meal tickets."

Being hungry, they snarl and snap.

God pity them and open their eyes to their unutterable degradation!

The outside world is pointing to the fearless honesty of our Chief of Police and the efficient way in which he is handling the most difficult of all city problems.

And in this age of graft he will not be sacrificed to put into office a dishonest man satisfactory to the owners of brothels and bars and their henchmen.

Never!

AND ATLANTA WILL REMEMBER FOR FUTURE RECKONING THOSE MEN, IN OR OUT OF OFFICE, WHO TRY TO HAMPER THE CHIEF AS HE DOES HIS DUTY.

Recall the itching palms of the servants of protected vice and be on your guard.

"A lie turned loose put Christ on the Cross." Nail their lies!

Note those who are trying by the most foul of all means, character assassination, to bring back upon Atlanta the disgrace of a traffic which demands for its existence the sacrifice of innocent girls.

For the day of accounting is coming.

Vice is fighting to regain the privilege of making dirty dollars by defiling women.

Chief Beavers is battling for decency and health, the welfare of our families and your loved ones.

He does not fight alone. You are with him.

Thank God! You are awake and watching.

Chief Beavers and his men will be upheld by Atlanta.

The World of Society

MRS. WILTON DARGAN entertained twelve guests informally at luncheon Tuesday for Mrs. C. A. Wood, who will leave soon to spend the summer at Toxaway.

The luncheon was given at the Piedmont Driving Club. The table, placed in the green room of the club, was decorated with vivid red poppies, arranged in a tall silver vase. The place cards bore modish hand-painted figures of up-to-date ladies.

Mrs. Dargan wore wistaria canton crepe, with a hat of black maline.

Banquet to Bridegroom.

A banquet was tendered Mr. P. W. Wilcox in honor of his approaching marriage to Miss Katherine Rawlings, of Druid Hills, by the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, in a private dining room at the Kimball House Monday evening. The dining room was decorated in palms and ferns. The table, with a floral centerpiece down its length, was attractive. The menu of seven or eight courses was interspersed with toasts and speeches.

Mr. J. B. Cleveland, president of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, presented a handsome gold watch to Mr. Wilcox, who is secretary and treasurer of the company. The presentation was in behalf of the company. The watch bore as an inside inscription:

"To Mr. P. W. Wilcox, from his friends and associates of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, May 28, 1913."

In presenting the watch, Mr. Cleveland made a witty talk on "Time," the gist of his remarks being the wish that "Every time you look at the watch to learn the time, may you think of the fine time you've had tonight and may you always have a good time and a good timepiece."

The company included Messrs. J. B. Cleveland, Harold S. Holmes, P. W. Wilcox, George Lamkin, W. M. Adams, W. M. Taylor, R. T. Skinner, Jr., C. R. Stone, J. H. Lamb, A. G. Cooper, T. W. Newbern, Fred Ball and T. C. Callaway.

May Pole Dance.

Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock a May pole dance will be given at the Wren's Nest in West End. More than 100 children will take part. The most important feature of the entertainment will be the coronation of the May queen, Miss Katherine Vickers, attended by much pomp and ceremony.

The maid of honor will be Miss Frances Stokes, queen of the last May Festival. Other maids will be Kathleen Hackett, Kirby Willingham, Lucile Price, Margie Curfee, Mary Crucell and Lora Colcord. The knights will be Newton McEachern, Brevard Montgomery, Thomas Stokes, Warren Pollard, Howard Connolly and Thomas Longino.

An interesting feature will be the appearance of the little grandchildren of Joel Chandler Harris, who will take part in the coronation ceremonies. They are LeRose Wagener and Chandler Harris, who will act as flower girl and canopy bearer.

There will be amusements on the grounds in the way of a fishing pond, lemonade well, candy and cake both and the honey tree, thimble finger well, home of Miss Meaders and the girls, and other specialties.

"Br'er Rabbit" and "Br'er B'ar" will be at the festival, and maybe, if the visitors look around among the lovely flowers and trees at the Wren's Nest and Snap Bean Farm, they can catch a glimpse of Uncle Remus and the little Boy who made Mr. Harris' writing so dear to children all over the world.

Cars will leave the city at all hours, so that everybody can get to the festival and have a good time.

Mrs. Brevard Montgomery, who originated the first May Festival at the Wren's Nest, has charge of the entertainment this year.

Miss Gay Hostess.

Miss Eloise Gay entertained at a bowling party at the East Lake Country Club Tuesday afternoon. After bowling and boating on the lake, refreshments were served on the veranda.

For Visitors.

Miss Mary Andrews will entertain a number of Brenau girls and an equal number of young men informally Tuesday evening at her home in Ansley Park to meet her guests, Misses Mary Trippe Ellison, of Mississippi, and Grace Pruett, of Clayton, Ala., students at Brenau.

Wednesday Mrs. L. W. Grey will give a luncheon at the Georgian Terrace in their honor. Wednesday afternoon Miss Annie Maude Schuessler will entertain at the Atlanta Theater for Miss Andrews' guests.

Thursday afternoon Miss Irene Bennett will give a matinee party at the Forsyth for the visitors.

For Miss Courtney Harrisen.

Miss Lucy Harrison will entertain at bridge Thursday afternoon for Miss Courtney Harrison, whose marriage to Mr. Loring Raoul will take place Monday.

Art Association Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Atlanta Art Association will be held at 11 o'clock Wednesday, May 28, in the Carnegie Library. The annual election of officers will take place.

Woman's Club Closes.

The final meeting of the Woman's Club this season was held in the club rooms Monday afternoon. The year's reports were presented and the club adjourned for the summer months.

Mrs. A. P. Coles presided. She read a paper on the work of the club the past year. Her paper was followed by talks by other officers.

Mrs. Jarnagin sang "One Fine Day," from Madame Butterly.

Many members made short talks on the club's work. They were Mrs. H. H. Tucker, Mrs. William Hurd Hillyer, Mrs. Lott Warren, Mrs. H. B. Scott, Mrs. P. H. McGovern, Mrs. Stockbridge, Mrs. Bolling Jones, Mrs. Lindsay Johnson, Rome; Mrs. H. H. Merry, Pelham; Mrs. James Jackson and Miss Alice Baxter.

Officers for the coming year are Mrs. A. P. Coles, president; Miss Alice Baxter, first vice president; Mrs. Linton Hopkins, second vice president; Mrs. Lott Warren, recording secretary; Mrs. Albert Akers, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. M. M. Davies, treasurer; Mrs. Arthur Powell, auditor and Mrs. Victor Kriegshaber, corresponding secretary.

The club will hold its next meeting in October.

Musical Tea.

There will be a musical tea at the home of Mrs. George A. Wight, 509 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, Thursday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, for the benefit of Circle No. 10 of the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Methodist Church. A musical program will be rendered.

The Jolly Twenty Club.

Miss Hulda Mae Suttles entertained the Jolly Twenty Club at her home in Ira Street recently. Those present were Misses Bertie Johnson, Virginia Weaks, Willie Johnson, Hula Mae Suttles; Messrs. Otis Smith, Warlick Bolinger, Paul Cobler and Arthur Cooke. Hearts-dice was played. The prize, a pretty fan, was won by Miss Bertie Johnson. Refreshments were served. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Alma DeLucia, 45 Eugenia Street, Thursday evening. Officers will be elected.

Kitchens-Head.

Mrs. E. L. Kitchens announces the marriage of her daughter, Mary Estell, to Mr. Lewellyn Deering Head, May 24. The Rev. W. W. West performed the ceremony. A few relatives and intimate friends were present.

Parties for Miss Bobb.

Miss Mildred Bobb, of New Orleans, will be tendered several informal parties as Miss Ruth Reid's guest. One will be an informal tea Wednesday afternoon given by Mrs. Reid for members of a small club of Washington Seminary students. Another will be an informal luncheon at the East Lake Club, followed by a matinee party, to be given Saturday by Misses Freida and Winifred Ashe.

Civic Club.

The Civic Club will meet with Mrs. Thomas Gay at her home in Washington Street Friday afternoon.

Morning Bridgt.

Mrs. E. H. Bussey will entertain at bridge Wednesday morning at her home, 258 Lake Avenue, Inman Park. Her guests will be Misses Josephine Stoney, Frances Connally, Eloise Stewart, Nellie Kiser Stewart, Mary Robinson, Mrs. R. N. R. Bardwell, Mrs. L. S. Crane, Mrs. C. C. McGehee, Jr., Mrs. E. H. Ginn, Mrs. T. K. Starr, Mrs. D. S. Moore, Mrs. H. E. W. Palmer and Mrs. W. C. Coles.

Mrs. S. C. Dobbs' Luncheon.

Mrs. S. C. Dobbs gave a luncheon Tuesday morning to Miss Lina Andrews and Miss Ollie Ferrell, two brides of June. The house was decorated in ferns and pink roses, the buds being used in a large basket on the table where all details were in pink. Favors were small pink wicker baskets filled with French bonbons. To the honor guests were given corsage bouquets of roses.

Guests were Misses Lina Andrews, Ollie Ferrell, Mildred Harris, Lois Pattillo, Pauline Coulter, Lucile Goodrich, Eula Hancock, Martha Smith, Lucile Dennis, Mary Goodrich, Annie and Maisie Rauschemberg, Mildred Dobbs, Mrs. George W. Andrews, Mrs. E. R. Austin, Mrs. Blancow, of Pennsylvania, who was Miss Rena White, and Mrs. William Candler.

For Miss Barnes.

Miss Alice Vandiver entertained at bridge Tuesday afternoon for her guest, Miss Gwendolyn Barnes, of Uniontown, Pa. Among those playing were Misses Annie Lee McKenzie, Sara Rawson, Helen Dargan, Helen Hobbs, Marie Pappenheimer, Harriet Cole, Helen Hawkins, Marion Goldsmith, Ruth Stallings, Mary Helen Moody, Isabel Kuhrt, Emma Kate Amorous, Gladys LeVin, Laura Ansley, Nina Gentry, Charles Owens, Frances Connally, Mrs. Forrest Adair, Jr., Mrs. F. Woman's Beauty Is Based on Health

To Have Health, Bowel Movement Is Absolutely Necessary---How Best to Obtain it.

MRS. JENNIE SNEDEKER.

If woman's beauty depended upon cosmetics every woman would be a picture of loveliness. But beauty lies deeper than that. It lies in health. In the majority of cases the basis of health, and the cause of sickness, can be traced to the action of the bowels.

The headaches, the lassitude, the sallow skin and the lusterless eyes are usually due to constipation. So many things that women do habitually conduce to this trouble. They do not eat carefully, they eat indigestible foods because the foods are served daintily and they do not exercise enough. But whatever the particular cause may be, it is important that the condition should be corrected.

An ideal remedy for women, and one especially suited to their delicate requirements, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of women endorse highly. Mrs. Jennie Snedeker, 1041 West Monroe Street, Chicago, testifies that she is "cured of grave stomach and bowel troubles by using Syrup Pepsin and without the aid of a doctor or any other medicine." All the family can use Syrup Pepsin, for thousands of mothers give it to babies and children. It is also admirably suited to the requirements of elderly people, in fact, to all who, by reason of age or infirmity, can not stand harsh salts, cathartics, pills or purgatives. These should always be avoided, for, at best, their effect is only for that day, while a genuine remedy like Syrup Pepsin acts mildly but permanently.

It can be conveniently obtained at any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded. You will find it gentle in action, pleasant in taste, and free from griping, and its tonic properties have a distinct value to women. It is the most widely used laxative-tonic in America to-day and thousands of families are now never without it.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington Street, Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

IT IS MIRACLE PELICANS EVER WIN ANY GAMES

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE wonder of it is that the Pelicans have won those thirteen games that now grace their records! How did they get them? What happened? The "Felder Mystery" is as nothing compared with it.

On what the Pelicans showed here yesterday, when they lost to the Crackers 8 to 3, they wouldn't be entitled to win thirteen games in ten years.

According to Charley Frank his club isn't altogether to blame. As is the case with most tail-end clubs injuries have done their devastating work. Both of the Pelicans' catchers have been shot away—and Yantz is out of the game for a year with a broken leg. Manush's bum knee has gone wrong again and he is out of it—for an indefinite stay. It is possible that he will never be his old self again. They think so in Toledo, where the accident happened.

The Pelicans are complaining of another affliction of the tail-enders—their nerve is gone. They couldn't take a game if it was handed to them. They are the worst fielders in the league—and they did not improve their averages any in Monday's game.

ELLIOTT DENT more or less vindicated himself Monday. Bill Smith slipped him in and he beat the Pelicans. He weakened a fraction in the eighth and ninth but he showed a lot better than his last out. With plenty of work this man may prove a star. He does not seem at his best yet, but maybe the next time he is worked he will be able to go all the way through.

* * *

THIS Cast-Off's Revenge stuff is getting to be a howling farce. "Rebel" Williams, a Cracker-for-a-day a while back, turned up Monday with the fiercest sort of batting and laced out four hits in four times up. He had but one fielding chance, which he looked out for in good style.

William's regular batting stride is so far below that which he showed yesterday as to make the whole thing a blooming burlesque. But it always happens. Generally the cast-offs win the game. Maybe the fact that Williams was an involuntary cast-off saved the Crackers from that misfortune.

WILLIAMS was not the only man who did some surprising batting. Another was Pitcher Dent, who scratched a couple through the infield and beat them to first.

Snedecor put a scratch and a double to his credit. He and Williams made three-fifths of the Pels' hits.

Welchonce put a single and a very timely three-bagger on the records. Welchonce had Dunn and Dent on bases and, of course, something ferocious was needed to score them. Welchonce hit it all right and both of the speed merchants tallied.

Harry Welchonce made six nice put-outs yesterday and added to the half-dozen he made the day before, gave him twelve put-outs in two days. His batting was timely but he made one of those old-time "Atlanta bunts"—a wallop ing drive to Evans which resulted in a put-out at second.

THE Crackers have two more games with the Pelicans and ought to win them both, unless the Pels show a tremendous improvement. Charley Frank has no pitcher calculated to stop the local batters and his fielders are pretty much to the bad.

Thursday Montgomery turns up for four games. On Friday, because of Federal Decoration Day, there will be two games.

JUNE 6 TO SEE FIRST RACE AT MOTORDROME

WITH a band concert announced for Sunday and with the date for the opening set for Friday night, June 6, and with the board motordrome at the old circus grounds pretty well finished, Atlanta's season of motorcycle racing in the "giant washtub" is closing in.

And you get the idea of what is going to happen from the expression "racing in a giant washtub." That's exactly what it is like. Jack Prince's new track is little more—and no less—than a board track, set on edge. Instead of riding on the floor of the tub the racers hurtle around on the inside of the sides, like cockroaches on the kitchen wall, setting laws of gravity at naught and affording to the spectators the most spectacular form of racing the world has ever known.

Jack Prince really has a big offering for the Atlanta public. His track is the latest and best board track in the world. It represents the last word in the building of board tracks. Jack has gathered in Atlanta already the best motorcycle racers in the world. He has more on the way. He is erecting comfortable seats, every one of which commands a view of the big inclosure. He has engaged a band. He has arranged for a corking car service—a service that will take the patrons of the motordrome from Five Points to the track in barely more than five minutes. He has an attractive program for opening night. As a result he will be greeted by one of the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a motorcycle race in America.

Blood Bath Knocks Rheumatism

It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect of a most remarkable remedy known as S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In five minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capillary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every enunciatory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities. The stimulating properties of S. S. S. compel the skin, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder to all work to the one end of casting out every irritating, every pain-inflicting atom of poison; it dislodges by irrigation all accumulations in the joints, dissolves acid accretions, renders them neutral and scatters those peculiar formations in the nerve centers that cause such mystifying and often baffling rheumatic pains.

And, best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach. If you have drugged yourself until your stomach is nearly paralyzed, you will be astonished to find that S. S. S. gives no sensation but goes right to work. This is because it is a pure vegetable infusion, is taken naturally into your blood just as pure air is inhaled naturally into your lungs.

The great Swift Laboratory has spent millions of dollars in perfecting, producing and placing in the hands of the public this wonderful remedy. So give your blood a good bath with S. S. S., for it knocks the worst forms of rheumatism every time.

You can get it at any drug store at $1 per bottle. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood specific ever discovered. If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice, write to The Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift building, Atlanta, Ga.

PEACOCK FLEET GIVES BOYS' HIGH BIG SCARE

Boys' High School nine received the closest call ofthe season yesterday afternoon when they were held to a 6 to 5 score by the Peacock-Fleet school aggregation.

Boys' High began the scoring in the first inning when they registered a single tally and each team took its turns throughout the nine chapters at leading the score. The winning tally was registered in the ninth inning when Johnson scored on an error.

ODE.

This is an ode to men of great renown;
An ode to men who laugh and say:
"Pooh! Pooh!"
An ode to men who hold a great game down
And snap their fingers, saying:
"That for you!"
This is an ode to those who laugh and say
"Old P. T. Barnum had the proper dope.
Those rummies will be with us every day
And pay their kale and sit there full of hope."
I love to hear the wallop of the bat
And see the pill go bounding down the dell,
But when a lot of guys grow rich and fat
And then they rub it in—O whatthehell!

Jake Daubert has been suspended for three days. Jake Daubert is a member of the Brooklyn team, which has been winning too many games for the good of the National League.

Tom Jones says he will bet $10,000 on Jess Willard if said Jess Willard fights Gunboat Smith again. Mr. Jones shows his business acumen by speaking thus. It would cost him at least $7.50 to hire a hall.

Not that we care to queer an honest man's business, but our idea of obtaining money under false pretenses is to manage Jess Willard.

Ed Walsh threatens to teach the spitball by mail. Various batters in the American League would give half their year's salaries if Ed would only deliver his spitball by mail.

AS J. EVERS MIGHT SAY.

I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.
I could not, even in a pinch.
In fact, it is a lead pipe cinch
I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.

BRANNIGAN HANDS M'CUE FIRST DEFEAT OF CAREER

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27.—Matty McCue, variously known as the Racine terror, the Wisconsin whirlwind and the Racine wonder, is to-day simply plain McCue, for all the terror and whirlwind and wonder were punched out of him by Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg. It was McCue's first defeat, but it was decisive all along the ten-round route.

JAKE ABEL BEATS WHITE IN EIGHT-ROUND FIGHT

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jack McGuigan says he has secured Jack Britton's signature to meet Young Erne at the baseball park in Philadelphia on Decoration Day. Both boys will weigh in at 138 pounds ringside.

* * *

* * *

Jack O'Brien, the Philadelphia heavyweight and one of the real veterans of the game, donned the mitts the other day. He boxed a three-round exhibition with Harry Ramsey in Pottstown, Pa.

* * *

Harry Trendall and Leo Kelly will clash in a scheduled eight-round bout at St. Louis Wednesday night. Trendall and Kelly met several months ago, and the former was credited with the shade.

* * *

Jimmy Perry will have a chance to make himself one of the biggest cards in the boxing game Thursday night. Jimmy is to take on Mike Gibbons in a six-round set-to, and the fur should fly. Reports from the Pennsylvania city state that both boys have trained hard for the go, and are ready for the gong.

Perry's friends here are anxiously awaiting the result. They point to the fact that Jimmy has been going great lately, and for the first time in months has trained faithfully for a scrap.

Meyer Pries, who will meet Spider Britt in one of the three ten-round bouts to be staged at the Auditorium June 13, paid us a visit yesterday. Meyer says that he is going to bet his end of the purse that he beats Britt. The little Hebrew also says that he is going to be right this time, and will start work for the bout in a couple of days.

* * *

Abe Attell is still gathering in the soft dough. The former featherweight champion has agreed to take on Phil Bloom in the ten-round windup of a special show at the Irving A. C., Brooklyn. Attell is to receive $700, win, lose or draw.

* * *

Tom Jones continues to challenge Gunboat Smith in behalf of his heavyweight, Jess Willard. As yet he has not received any satisfaction from Jim Buckley, manager of Smith.

* * *

Buckley is not worrying much these days. Besides having Smith, he also has a neat meal ticket in Harlem Tommy Murphy, one of the leading contenders for Willie Ritchie's crown.

* * *

Arthur Pelky threatens to quit the ring for good. The big heavyweight has taken McCarty's death to heart, and says he will never be able to enter the ring again and fight at his best.

* * *

* * *

Frank Klaus received the newspaper verdict over Eddie McGoorty in their six-round bout at Pittsburg Saturday night. Both boys were strong at the finish, and could have gone a number of rounds more.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight, had an easy time defeating Kid Scaler the other night. The bout went the full fifteen rounds, but Freddie had a big shade at the finish.

McCARTY'S DEATH PURE ACCIDENT, FINDING OF JURY

By Ed W. Smith.
(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight, Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 27.—Luther McCarty's death in the glove contest here Saturday afternoon with Arthur Pelky was entirely an accident. This was the verdict of the Coroner's jury, determined after two sittings, the decision being reached at 10 o'clock after a deliberation of half an hour. Pelky was exonerated completely from all blame in the case.

Almost immediately after, however, the Northwest mounted police put Pelky under arrest, charging him with manslaughter. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000, Fred C. Lowes, a wealthy real estate man, and Tommy Burns furnishing the surety. The threatened cases against Referee Smith, manager Billy McCarney and Promoter Tommy Burns did not develop, but Smith and McCarney, in lieu of being given their liberty, promised to remain in the city for a couple of days at least and give further testimony. No bonds were asked in their cases.

Following is the full verdict as announced:

"We, the Coroner's jury, find that Luther McCarty came by his death accidentally, the immediate cause being a subluxation of the cervical vertebrae at the Burns arena May 24, but there is no evidence to show how this injury occurred, we, the jury, therefore exonerate Arthur Pelky from all blame whatsoever."

This was signed by P. J. McManus as foreman. The other jurors were H. C. Hersey, R. Jackson, E. W. Schofield, C. P. McCallum, M. Dawson and E. A. Jones.

Trying for Criminal Case.

It was evident from the start that the crown, stung by the severe criticisms of local ministers, intended to make a desperate fight to get a verdict upon which to base a criminal case against Pelky and perhaps the others directly concerned in the unfortunate contest. The prosecuting attorney asked at once that all witnesses be excluded from the room before going on the stand, and carried his point.

Among the witnesses examined in great detail were McCarney, Burns, Smith, two of the local newspaper men and Dr. Moshier, who performed the autopsy. Pelky was not called at all, but remained during the entire case like a caged lion in a nearby room. He has been deeply affected all the way through, and during this hearing appeared almost heartbroken.

Dr. Moshier gave the most damaging testimony against the boxers. He declared that McCarty's neck had been dislocated under the base of the brain and that this injury caused the hemorrhage of the brain that brought about the death. He all but declared that the injury could have come about in no other way but from a blow or from the fall, the latter not being possible, because the boxer's neck did not strike any object as he fell.

Other Fights the Cause.

A highly dramatic incident came right at the close of the hearing when Pelky's attorney called upon Dr. C. J. Stewart, one of the oldest physicians in Alberta, to partially refute the testimony of Dr. Moshier. The physician was asked if he thought McCarty's injury could not have been caused by some other than a blow received. He said it was highly possible and then, rising to his feet, he shook his finger at the prosecutor, who was then questioning him, and during intense silence, shouted:

"It is my opinion that the injury to Luther McCarty was received from Flynn or somebody else in a previous encounter. In this contest, never."

He was excused in a hurry by the prosecutor.

Referee Smith testified that in all there were only about six blows landed during the contest, and that none of them was at all hard or effective and could hardly have caused even an abrasion of the skin. He said the boxing was about even up to the time of McCarty's collapse, and that Luther had turned, smiled and winked at his own corner after the final clinch, collapsing about eight or ten seconds later.

The State attempted to tangle up all the witnesses in an effort to prove that the contest was for the world's white championship that all championship conditions had been carried out, and that it was in every way a prize fight.

Georgia Ends Successful Season

Prospects for 1914 Appear Good

ATHENS, GA., May 27.—Despite the fact that Georgia lost the series she would have rather won than any other—the one against Tech—the Red and Black has had a remarkably successful season, both financially and in games won and lost.

During the season the team scored a total of 174 runs against 68 for its opponents. Twenty-seven games were played against the best teams in Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and but eight games were lost. Two to Michigan, one to Ohio Wesleyan, one to Clemson, one to Auburn and three to Tech. Nineteen victories were celebrated and most of them were by one-sided scores, while seven were shutouts for Georgia. Five of the games that Georgia lost were by one run.

Outlook for 1914 Good.

Since the season has closed and the tension assumed the normal post-schedule laxity Coach Cunningham has busied himself taking an introspective stock of his material for 1914 and of his present splendid array of talent he expects to have all but three present at the beginning of next season, with a possibility of only two being absent.

Big John Morris, who has earned himself a place on the All-Southern team his first year in college ball, graduates in law in June, and will immediately "hang out his shingle" over in Hart County, from where he hails.

Covington, who has played third base for two years and who served four years at center on the football team, is a victim of the four-year rule and after June will also join the ranks of the colonels in the legal profession.

May Lose Hutchens.

Hutchens, the Red and Black's great receiver of this season, is likewise a member of the law department and will receive his "dip" this year. There is but a slight chance for him to return, not unless he leads the team.

Bowden has a contract from the Boston Nationals whenever he sees fit to annex his signature to it and he is liable to become a member of Stalling's Braves at any time after college closes this summer. He has one more year in Southern athletics, and on account of his ability in both baseball and football a strenuous effort will be made to persuade him to return. With his wing in the shape it is now he would find it rough sailing in any league and would certainly have hard going to make good.

Many to Return.

These are about all the sure losses and doubtfuls, which leave a good working nucleus for the team next year. Henderson is slated to return for a place on the football eleven and will draw the first base assignment again. Harrison is taking pharmacy and will have another year, while Clements at shortstop is a four-year man and should make a strong bid for All-Southern next year. Ginn, McWhorter and Erwin all are sure to return and so will Corley and Hitchcock. The latter pitched but few games this year, but with a little more training will be a mainstay next year. Corley has already made an enviable record, although playing his first year in college ball.

Cobb Praised Brown.

This completes the list of regulars, to which may be added Brown, the freshman, who played in several games and who wields the willow in such good style that Ty Cobb pronounced him the most finished batter on the Red and Black squad. He is an outfielder and will be heard from next year. Another sub who filled in to a good advantage while Covington was ruled off the team is Holden, captain of the scrubs. He has another year in college and will be a valuable asset at a future date.

KELLY IN DRAW SCRAP.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Eddie Kelley and "Fighting" Fitzpatrick, local prides, fought ten fast rounds to a draw here last night.

FLYNN'S FIGHT WITH COFFEY WAS A WONDER

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, America's greatest sporting fiction writer, covered the Jim Flynn-Jim Coffey heavyweight bout in New York last Friday night for the New York American. His story is of especial interest to local boxing fans, as Flynn does battle with Jim Savage at the Auditorium-Armory here on June 13. Here is Van Loan's story:

Andrew Charigilone, whose business name is Jim Flynn, stunted the Dublin Giant somewhat in a ten-round argument before the Garden Athletic Club. Jim Coffey had age, weight, reach and 70 per cent of the house with him before he started, but the battle-scarred warrior of Pueblo ripped and tore and slashed his way to victory, whaling away at his taller opponent until he reduced him to six feet of staggering, knock-kneed humanity.

Not since the memorable fight between Ketchel and O'Brien has so much real fighting been crammed into ten rounds, and it was Flynn's experience, aggressiveness and cast iron jaw that won for him.

For some reason, best known to himself, Flynn elected to stand still for the better part of the first round and allow Coffey to pop him on the jaw with rights and lefts and the Dublin import made the most of his opportunities. He slammed the veteran 732 times by actual count and brought the gore in streams from one of Flynn's eyes.

Flynn Dives Into Coffey.

The Pueblo product finally grew angry under this constant bombardment and at the end of the round he was driving into Coffey head first, endeavoring to remove his head from his shoulders with wild rights and lefts.

Coffey continued to score in the second and third rounds and Flynn's countenance gradually assumed the appearance of an overripe tomato.

In the fourth round, however, the Pueblo hodcarrier took matters into his own hands and began to lead with his haymaker swings and when the bell rang Coffey was reeling from a succession of swings to the body and jaw.

Flynn Had Coffey Reeling.

In the fifth and the sixth matters were fairly even, but from the seventh until the end the tough old veteran forged into the lead, and though Coffey kept up his left jabs and right crosses there was no power behind them. Flynn herded his taller opponent from one side of the ring to the other endeavoring to land the finishing punch.

Jim Flynn may be on the toboggan, but he is still good enough to put an enduring crimp in the aspirations of many members of the younger set.

NEW CLUB WILL ENTER FEDERAL NEXT SEASON

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 27.—A franchise to play in the new Federal League was granted Toledo by Organizer A. Bobrick. The Ohio Club will not join the third leaguers the current season, however, but Toledo will rake together a strong team for the 1914 crusade.

Bobrick believes that many other cities will be represented in the Federal next year. Buffalo and Detroit are two cities practically sure of entering the third league zone. The Toledo officers will be elected in the near future, and plans will be made for the organizing of the Toledo Club.

THE TRIPLE TIE

YOU read the first seven installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this eighth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain.

Now go on with the story.

"Wait till I tell you, Mr. Callaway," interrupted the manager. "Excuse us a minute, Gordon," he added, "I want to say something to Mr. Callaway," and he drew the president to an inner office, where he told him the little he had been able to learn about Kelly. When he had concluded, Callaway said:

"And you signed him up on the strength of that drive that broke the bull's ribs?"

"Yes, sir; that was enough for me."

"Well, Billy, you know I consider you are best manager in the world. And I reckon you know what you're doing. I will put through this contract, but remember, Billy, you must shoulder all the responsibility. If this Gordon Kelly 'blows up' the laugh will be on you, not me."

"I'll take my chances on that," said the manager, confidently.

"Anyway, it will make good reading in the newspapers. Send for the reporters, Billy, and we'll tell 'em all about your world beater."

The reporters came, they saw, but they were not conquered. They took copious notes of all the manager told them, but they refused to "fall" for Kelly as a ballplayer. They admired his shape and looks but demanded that they be "shown" before committing themselves to extravagant praise of the new man.

"All right, boys; I'll show you," declared Bill Smith, "and, mark my words"—every reporter made a mark in his notebook—"mark my words this fellow will turn out to be a wonder."

"Hope so, Billy," replied the reporters, as they filed out of the room.

They all handled the news in a facetious manner. In one of the newspapers there was the headline:

"Joshed" in the Papers.

ADONIS JOINS
THE CRACKERS
Bill Smith Signs a Player Who Has Never Seen a Game of Ball.

Another newspaper had this headline:

LEARNED BASEBALL IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL
Atlanta Club Secured a "World Beater" Who Never Played a Game of Baseball.

And the third newspaper had this to say in its headlines:

COTILLION LEADER
TO PLAY BASEBALL
Bill Smith Lands a Handsome Young Man That Knows Everything Except the National Game.

Within twenty-four hours Bill Smith was the recipient of all sorts of pleasant jibes. Every friend or acquaintance he met had something to say about the "world beater." The manager took everything in good part, but mentally acknowledged that he had overplayed himself in making public the signing of Gordon Kelly. "I ought to have said nothing about it," he thought. "Now he will just have to make good or they'll give me the laugh all over the country. But," he added, grimly, "that kid will make good, all right, all right."

CHAPTER X.

WHAT Gorden Kelly himself thought of the "funny" stories printed about him in the newspapers no one ever knew. Bill Smith eyed his "world beater" keenly when he reported in the clubhouse at Ponce DeLeon Park early Monday morning. But Kelly was the same, quiet, good natured young man Smith had always found him to be.

"He's a game dog, sure enough," said the manager to himself, and satisfied with this disposal of the case, he began putting on his uniform.

It was the day on which the players of the Atlanta club were to report for spring practice, and it was a fine day overhead. There was to be a month of hard grind for the men in order that they might get into condition for the gruelling pennant race of the Southern League. Players of the rival clubs in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Chattanooga, Mobile, Nashville and Montgomery were supposed to report to their managers about the same time. In other parts of the South, in Athens, Ga., in Augusta, in Hot Springs, Ark., in Marlin Springs, Tex., in Tampa, Fla., and elsewhere the big league clubs of the North, and the Red Sox champions of the world and of the American League; the New York Giants, champions of the National League; the Chicago Cubs, the Detroit Tigers, the Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Browns, of St. Louis, the Cleveland club, the Washington club, the Pittsburg Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds, the Phillies, the Brooklyns and the Boston Braves were already training under the watchful eyes of the big league managers.

In far off California the Chicago White Sox and in Bermuda the New York Americans in charge of Frank Chance, had pitched their training camps. At about this time, too, many of the International League clubs—Buffalo, Toronto, Providence, Montreal, Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Rochester—were scheduled to open their training season below the Mason and Dixon line. Likewise the American Association clubs—St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Toledo, Columbus, Milwaukee and Louisville—were due in the South about this time for their annual visit. All these clubs leave the "Sunny Land" richer every year by about $200,000, of which the railroads and the hotels get the lion's share and the moving picture shows, the laundries and the cigar stands what is left.

Players Arrive.

Smith and Kelly were hardly dressed in their uniforms before the players began to arrive and within half an hour there were fully a dozen of them on hand. There were "Whitey" Alperman, the old National League player, now second-baseman of the Atlanta club, as good as ever fielded a grounder when it was hot or muffed a liner when it was behiskered; Bailey, the heavy-hitting outfielder; McAllister, who wants to become an umpire; Long, Nixon, Smith, the new third-baseman; Musser and Brady, the clever pitchers; Dobard and Kernan, infielders, and Dunn, the catcher.

There were shaking of hands and merry greetings. Gordon Kelly met all the arrivals as fast as they came to the clubhouse. The homes of these players were scattered all over the country. The men had not seen each other since the last of September.

Alperman was the first of the new arrivals to don his uniform. He laced his shoes and then arose and stretched himself.

"Gee, I wish the Southern League season was over," he said, with a yawn.

This remark caused a great laugh in the clubhouse.

"Starting to 'crab' before you've touched a baseball, eh?" observed Bill Smith.

"No," returned the second baseman. "I wanted to get it off my system, that's all. Come on, boys, let's get a move on," and the players, laughing and shouting like schoolboys, ran on the field and began their season's work with that time-honored exercise of tossing the ball in pairs.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

"Study Your Expression," Says Pretty Gertrude Barnes

Miss Barnes in a summery pose.

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"SMILE and curl up your mouth corners," said merry Gertrude Barnes. She had just finished doing five character songs in characteristic costumes. She had run the gamut of emotion from the haughty little "enfant terrible" through the stranded show girl longing for the "old Kentucky home" to the mirth-mad exponent of "Row, row, row." And all this earnest and successful effort to please her audience left her cool, buoyant and ready to give the whole world of girls the kindly benefit of her study of how to have "a sane mind in a healthy body."

"Expression is important for character as well as to aid the search after beauty," said pretty Miss Gertrude, with laughing earnestness. "I used to be afraid to smile all I wanted to for fear I would get those heavy lines from nostril to lip; and then suddenly I became aware of all the hard-looking faces one sees—and the chief reason for the hardness was down drooping, disagreeable looking lips. I decided at once to take a chance on the lesser evil, and began curling my mouth up at the corners, even when I was not particularly anxious to 'look pleasant, please;' now as a result there may be lines around my mouth, but they are lines of pleasantness—aren't they?" she added anxiously. "And sometimes when I am ready to feel cross my mouth keeps on smiling—and I recover."

Merry good nature and kindly interest in life happen to be among the greatest charms of Miss Barnes' animated, expensive face, and very pleasing is the twinkle that reflects from big brown eyes to the merry dimpled corners of her this-is-a-fine-old-world mouth.

"You may safely go on smiling," I said with a smile of my own; "but how about all the other expressions you bring in rapid succession to your face—don't they make lines?"

A Brand-New One.

"Not lines that stay," answered Miss Barnes. "You see, I have a few methods of keeping my skin in good condition. They are cold water, sunburn and tan."

"Sunburn and tan!" I exclaimed. "I thought they were fatal to the fine texture of the skin."

"Perhaps they are fatal to the old, worn-out outer layer they destroy. But they give the fresh new layer waiting underneath a chance, and they help give strong, firm flesh, good, healthy flesh, without which fine-textured skin is just impossible. And sunburn and tan come from plenty of sunlight and fresh air, which are the best things in the whole world for the health and beauty seeker. So there you are in a perfect circle, when you have added plenty of cold water—and served up a fine, healthy skin on a background of strong, firm flesh that can throw off the little lines you make temporarily by twisting your face around into any extreme of expressions you choose.

"Cold water—cold water—cold water! Won't you sing its praises very earnestly, please? And tell all the girls not to be afraid of the charm of expression—they may indulge in it all they like if they have been sunburned and tanned and cold-watered, with good massage-like splashes that make the skin strong enough to throw off the little temporary blemishes of lines and wrinkles.

"Oh, my circle is not complete yet," laughed the cheery star, "I have a little more to say about fresh air. Go out into it all you can, and hunt and ride if you can. Riding is wonderful for the muscles of the limbs; hunting develops the muscles of the waist—but if you can do neither, swim. Anyone can swim if she just chooses to learn how—and it is a most wonderful, inspiring, lung-filling, flesh hardening form of exercise.

A "Water Baby."

"I manufactured a lot of my own healthfulness by going after it very earnestly. Being a water-baby and being an outdoor girl are almost equally important; they both make you healthy, and if you are wise enough to be both your chances of being a beauty increase.

"You see, fresh air and exercise have trained my figure for me, so I don't have to rely on corsets to do it. They have trained my skin for me, so I don't have to hold my face in a mask-like expression in order to avoid lines and wrinkles—so there is my basis, and then I go ahead and try to make the most of my looks, although I know perfectly well that the result is not beauty."

But on this latter bit of information Miss Gertrude Barnes has a monopoly, for good features added to the winsome charm of a bright face and the pose of a healthy body surely deserve the title of beauty.

"Now about arranging your face to the best advantage," said Miss Barnes with the earnest attention to every detail that makes her work so pleasing and conversation with her a true delight. "Of course, it is inadvisable for a girl who wishes to be accepted at face value as a lady to use any makeup on the street, for she is sure to look conspicuous and artificial—for the one all-embracing reason that without the earnest study an actress gives the subject the gentle art of makeup becomes a farce, instead of an art.

"However, any girl can teach her eyebrows to grow in a smooth, pretty curve by brushing them at night and morning with a tiny brush; and good cream will keep the face clean as to its pores as well as on the surface; and a well-poised head adds a final touch of charm. Girls should cultivate the habit of holding their heads with the natural poise of a flower instead of jutting forward like a swag, or bending back with the curve of a lightning-struck tree.

"And learn to design your own clothes. Make them express YOU so your personality will be a rounded whole without one jarring note."

And since there is no jarring note in Miss Barnes' unaffected, wholesome personality, this final bit of advice fits in with the beauty study of an expert in whatever she undertakes—and is well worth following.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it to-day.

Household Suggestions

A little soap shredded into the boiler on washing day makes the clothes a good color, and if you put a small piece into the starch it will make the ironing easier, and it imparts a lovely gloss to the clothes. All the little bits of soap that are left over should be put into a jar with a little water. Place the jar in a moderate oven and leave until the soap has dissolved. This is excellent for washing flannels and woollen things.

In choosing chickens, observe chiefly the length of leg. The best chickens have short legs in proportion to the size of the body; the bones are small and the flesh is white. The best test of age is found at the end of the breast-bone. When the bird is young, the end of the bone is soft and gelatinous, and it becomes gradually harder as the age of the bird increases.

A good way in which to keep plants fresh without watering them when the house must be closed is to take all the plants to the cellar or some other cold place and set them in tubs, with an ordinary brick under each flower pot. Pour into the tubs just enough water to cover the bricks. It is best to place the tubs by an east window if possible.

To boil milk without fear of burning, put two or three tablespoonfuls of water in the saucepan; let it boil rapidly for two or three minutes; add the milk, and it will not burn, however fierce the fire may be.

"Little cousin," he said with the deep tenderness of the man who finds happiness in the joy of the woman he loves, though he be shut from her very life, "there is nothing the matter with me. Life gives me almost all I want. No one can have everything. A banker's life has not much color and passion; I would rather make music than money. But don't think he stupidly discontented—or ungrateful for all I have. I cannot say all I mean! There is one thing in the world—in ALL THE WORLD there is one thing I want. For this I would give the world itself, if it were mine—and all the money in the world. And all life would be music, and color and passion then. And I can't tell you—I must never speak of it to you—and you will never understand!"

Outside sunshine and roses—here renunciation of al lthe joy life must never hold. Jacob felt that he must stifle in this litle room where hope had died. He strode to the doorway—to the gleaming terrace.

The Old Story.

And then slowly, swayed by a feeling she felt must be pity, Charlotte followed him, "Jacob, perhaps I do understand."

"Charlotte! If you do—I shall have spoken no word. In a sense it was not honorable of me—though at first I only meant to warn you, and I never thought; I should guard you against myself. Dear little Charlotte—forget what I said!"

"I cannot forget—so easily!" Charlotte's eyes were very soft, her little quivering lips were dangerously near, but Dame Fate had chosen capriciously to make this a day of unfinished climaxes, and only Frau Gudala's ready wit and loving heart intervened between the girl and a rather tragic scene, for at the particular moment when the sunny doorway framed the pretty picture she made as she stood looking pleadingly at a sorely-tempted Jacob, the hall door opened, admitting the Duke and Frau Gudula and her sons.

Gustavus of Taunus was asking: "I may have the honor of addressing your daughter?" and Grannie saved the situation. "There is wine in the garden—if you will honor me. Charlotte, dear, will you and Jacob show Count Fehrenberg the way? Duke Gustavus, could you make up your mind to a little chat with an old woman? Would you stop here with me—alone—for a few minutes? I ask it as a favor." And so Grannie prepared to make her fight for the happiness of her children.

"May I forget for a few moments that I am an old Jewess—and you a reigning Prince? I want to speak to you about Charlotte. She lost her mother many years ago—and now, at this important time of her life, I must try to be a mother to the child. My son Solomon, you know, sometimes sees only one side to a question, the one he wants to see. But I have looked at this marriage between you and Charlotte from many points of view—have you? Do you see the difficulties and danger?"

Gustavus thought for a moment of the girl who wished him to make this marriage in order that she might be the cousin of a wealthy man instead of a pauper Prince. The tricksy jade with her lying eyes—and for one supreme moment he had thought perhaps he and Evelyn might abdicate and face poverty together—well, she wanted money—on with the dance called life! Prince of Taunus, must dance to his piping—then dance merrily and proudly for all the world to see.

He answered the earnest old Jewess lightly indeed. "Oh, I admit the dangers in this marriage, Baroness. But they make the prospect more fascinating—to me. After all, I do not want my future comfortably laid out for me with mathematical certainty! I prefer to run a little risk! I have lived in a world that grows tired of old games—and is always ready to learn new rules!"

"But marriage is not a game," said the old woman. To her marriage was a Sacrament.

"It may be an adventure if the consequences are not too early seen. Why, my life has ben one series of adventures. When I was a child Napoleon was shaking the ground he marched over. One day my father's little throne fell down, and was picked up and dropped into the Corsican sack! I have known exile, and my crown has been restored to me. I have had money—and it has gone—well, perhaps, I should have had to go after it—pouf!—if your sons had not now once again lifted me upon my little throne. Oh, you see, Baroness, I have had my ups and downs."

"You treat me as a plaything. What blessing can there be for a girl of my people in sharing such a life?"

"When I am married, Baroness"—

"Don't call me that! It is a pretense that does not please me," said the old Jewess impatiently to the reigning Duke of Taunus.

Gustavus exclaimed in amazement: "A pretense! The Emperor has—"

"Your Highness," interposed the old woman, "no Emperor can ennoble me—at my age of seventy-one. Rank is not worn so easily by old woman."

Gustavus of Taunus rose to the supreme height of his manhood as, with a sudden illuminating respect for a fineness he might have failed to glimpse in his little cousin's soul, but saw now in full splendod in the gentle mien of the old Jewess, he answered Frau Gudula: "I think, madame, you belong to a more ancient nobility than my own."

Then, in a little access of mischief, he added: "I shall be proud to be connected with you by marriage."

Frau Gudula had played her highest stake for Charlotte's happiness—and had failed! "Give your compliments to my grandchild, Duke Gustavus, and convince her with them if you can. I wash my hands of this marriage. The matter is beyond me. I pray Providence to guide and guard my little girl." With brimming eyes that scarce could see the sunshine, Frau Gudula walked to the door by the great arbor of pink roses and looked at the merry group sipping her beloved Meyer Amschel's burgundy out in the garden. Well, it is not given to every woman to be the wife of a man she can worship. Poor little Charlotte.

The Pity of It!

Yes, the pity of it—that children, little children, four, five, seven years of age, must be stunted and twisted by long hours of toil. Imagine a little baby girl—your little baby girl—standing all day at a table painfully sorting the petals of artificial roses. Imagine the dirt and squalor of the disease-ridden tenements. The sunlight never penetrates where these babies have to labor—human flowers withered in the making of artificial ones. And the average wage for each child is 2 cents an hour. Imagine it—in this country of ours that we call enlightened.

They Need Your Help

You, the thinking men and women of America, must come to the rescue of the forlorn little six-year-old who toils so long for so meagre a pittance. Hers is a tearful plea that should reach the heart of every parent among us.

Do Your Part

Good Housekeeping Magazine, with the vigor that has always characterized its work, is attacking the evils of child labor and its attendant home work. It is employing such fearless investigators as Judge Lindsey, George Creel, Mary Alden Hopkins, Mary Louisa Chamberlain. But it cannot carry on the campaign alone. Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

WAIT A WHILE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am 22, and have been keeping company with a certain girl for six weeks. At first it seemed love at first sight, but lately she has grown cold. I buy her candy and flowers and try to please her, and her parents have taken a liking to me. But she now assumes an indifferent air. Do you think my proposal would be accepted? I am madly in love with her.
S. S.

Has it occurred to you that she may have grown tired of seeing so much of you? Try an application of that old adage, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

In any event, a proposal after an acquaintance of only six weeks is apt to be premature.

DON'T LET HIM KNOW.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of 18 years and in love with a man of 30 years. This man is a friend of my folks. He has never taken me out and he is very nice to me, and always talks of getting married. He doesn't know I love him. Please tell me how I could win his love.
A SPANISH GIRL.

Suppose I were to tell you to let him know of your love. You are only 18, and girls of that age transfer their hearts easily. If you let him know of your love to-day, the chances are you will love another man to-morrow. Spare yourself humiliation by keeping your love a secret until he asks for it.

NOT IMPROPER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Do you think it proper for a girl who is keeping steady company to ask the man when she will see him next? A. L. W.

Their intimacy warrants such a question from her, but I would not want her to be urgent or persistent, and it is in better taste if she lets him take the initiative in making future engagements.

MOTHERS SHOULD CALL FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady and wish to know if it is proper for the young lady's mother to call on my mother, or my mother to call on her, my mother being the elder. We will soon be engaged. S. S. L.

Such overtures should come from the family of the man, never from the family of the girl.

THE LADY FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Which is proper: For a lady to greet a gentleman first, or a gentleman to greet a lady, while walking on the street? ARCO.

The lady is the first always to give some sign of recognition.

Do You Know---

Some curious experiences seem to have befallen Mr. William Campbell, late of the Black Watch, who has just finished a 50,000-mile walk, in a kilt, through India, Ceylon, Australia and New Zealand. In Italy his dancing of a Highland fling in the street led to arrest, a New Zealand chief offered him a wife in exchange for his costume, and in Australia he lavished money on eau-de-cologne in order to keep the mosquitoes away from his knees. He was nearly murdered at a religious festival in Ceylon, being taken for a devil.

The Quebec agency of the Canadian Marine Department has received word that a gas buoy which drifted from its position in the lower St. Lawrence River during the winter of 1912 has been picked up by the lightship at Hellewick, New South Wales. It is supposed that the buoy drifted round Cape Horn, a distance of 16,000 miles. The date of the buoy's disappearance is not given, but even if it took place early in the winter of 1911-12 the buoy would have to drift 30 miles a day or more to reach New South Wales in the time.

Snared!

With the Golden Apple of Love for Bait

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

By NELL BRINKLEY

NELL BRINKLEY SAYS

IN this fashion is it done! In the depths of a lovely forest, velveted underfoot in emerald-moss and sewn thick with flowers—forget-me-nots, heartease and such like soft names—hide certain wary wights with very fat cheeks and tummies! Over the runways they set their snares—a cunning loop of golden cord—thrown over a high tree-bough and down, as high from the ground as—a maid's waist. On the green moss under the shining loop (which is so like a slanting sunbeam that a strolling lady would never catch it in her bright eye in the world) they drop a golden apple. And on the golden apple the sun smites hard enough to enchant and blind a maid with its flame. One malicious wight, the coldest-blooded of all, shins up the tree into the leafy green shadow and lies there with his bow drawn and a keen-tipped arrow necked. The rest fall upon the other end of the cord. They hold their breath, their eyes harden and brighten. The feathery curl on the tip top of one's head waves idly in the wind! One itches his pink heel with the toes of his other foot. One breathes too loud and gets a fat knee in his back for his stupidity. They WAIT—the cord a bit slack. Down the runway comes a maid, with soft black hair, primroses over her ears, a narrow slashed skirt (the better to dance the Tango in), silver buckles on her shoes and an unsuspecting sweet blue eye! And the sun on the golden apple smites into her eyes! The wights behind the tree-bole stiffen and dig their toes into the moss. With a little cry the maid pinches up her silken skirt between a forefinger and thumb and runs swiftly—in a soft rush—she dives down with a greedy hand for the apple in the moss. Her head hovers within the big golden loop. She straightens—ah-h-h down slithers the noose over her shoulders—"Heya"—the wights lean and pull like mad, and my lady's body is twirling in midair, her little heels kicking nothing! "Heya!"—the wight in the tree lets his arrow go singing straight to the captive's heart—and another maid is snared!

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The father was impressed of a sudden with the fact that, while this affair was of supreme import to himself, it was, after all, of still greater significance to his son. To himself, the chief concerns were of the worldly kind. To this boy, the vital thing was something deeper, something of the heart; for, however absurd his feeling, the truth remained that he loved the woman. Yes, it was the son's name that Mary Turner had taken, as well as that of his father. In the case of the son, she had taken not only his name, but his very life. Yes, it was, indeed, Dick's tragedy. Whatever he, the father, might feel, the son was, after all, more affected. He must suffer more, must lose more, must pay more with happiness for his folly.

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect, but he could not let the situation go without protest, protest most vehement.

"Dick," he cried, and his big voice was shaken a little by the force of his emotion, "boy, you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow." He stood very erect, staring steadfastly out of his clear gray eyes into those of his son. His heavy face was rigid with feeling; the coarse mouth bent slightly in a smile of troubled fondness, as he added more softly: "You owe me that much."

The son's eyes met his father's freely. There was respect in them, and affection, but there was something else, too, something the older man recognized as beyond his control. He spoke gravely, with a deliberate conviction.

Gilder's Voice Rang Out.

"I owe something to her, too, Dad."

But Gilder would not let the statement go unchallenged. His heavy voice rang out rebukingly, overtoned with protest.

"What can you owe her?" he demanded, indignantly. "She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally, it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. The courts hold that is only a part of the marriage actually. The fact that she doesn't receive you makes it simpler, too. It can be arranged. We must get you out of the scrape."

He turned and went to the desk, as if to sit, but he was halted by his son's answer, given very gently, yet with a note of finality that to the father's ear rang like the crack of doom.

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

That was all, but those plain words summed the situation, made the issue a matter not of advice, but of the heart.

Gilder persisted, however, in trying to evade the integral fact of his son's feeling. Still he tried to fix the issue on the known unsavory reputation of the woman.

"You want to stay married to this jail bird!" he stormed.

"She Is Justified."

A gust of fury swept over the boy. He loved the woman, in spite of all; he respected her, even reverenced her. To hear her thus named moved him to a rage almost beyond his control. But he mastered himself. He remembered that the man who spoke loved him; he remembered, too, that the word of opprobrium was no more than the truth, however offensive it might be to his sensitiveness. He waited a moment until he could hold his voice even. Then his words were the sternest protest that could have been uttered, though they came from no exercise of thought, only out of the depths of his heart.

"I'm very fond of her."

That was all. But the simple sincerity of the saying gripped the father's mood as no argument could have done. There was a little silence. After all, what could meet such loving loyalty?

When at last he spoke Gilder's voice was subdued, a little husky.

"Now that you know?" he questioned.

There was no faltering in the answer.

"Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. Then abruptly the young man spoke with the energy of perfect faith in the woman. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way, in her own mind, anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison. She feels that the world owes her—"

But the older man would not permit the assertion to go uncontradicted. That reference to the woman's innocence was an arraignment of himself, for it had been he who sent her to the term of imprisonment.

"Don't talk to me about her innocence!" he said, and his voice was ominous. "I'll suppose next you will argue that, because she's been clever enough to keep within the law since she's got out of State's prison, she's not a criminal. But let me tell you—crime is crime, whether the law touches it in the particular case or whether it does not."

Gilder faced his son sternly for a moment, and then presently spoke again with deeper earnestness.

"There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up."

The son met his father's gaze with a level look in which there was no weakness.

"I've told you, Dad—" he began.

"You must, I tell you," the father insisted. Then he went on quickly, with a tone of utmost positiveness. "If you don't, what are you going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters—for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. He was furious at this supposition that she would continue in her irregular practices.

But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the Rogues' Gallery, but they will take another. Yes, and the imprints of her fingers, and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. It was blasphemy to think of her in such case, subjected to the degradation of these processes. Yet, every word had in it the piercing horrible sting of truth. His face whitened. He raised a supplicating hand.

"Father!"

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine." There was a little pause, and the father stood rigid, menacing. The final question came rasping. "What are you going to do about it?"

Dick went forward until he was close to his father. Then he spoke with profound conviction.

"It will never happen. She will go straight, Dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder once again put his hand tenderly on his son's shoulder. His voice was modulated to an unaccustomed mildness as he spoke.

"Be sensible, boy," he pleaded softly. "Be sensible!"

Dick dropped down on the couch, and made his answer very gently, his eyes unseeing as he dwelt on the things he know of the woman he loved.

.:. The Manicure Lady .:.

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"ME and brother Wilfred spent a week-end up in the country, and I have just came back," said the Manicure Lady. "I would rather than not spend all my week-ends in the country, George, because the air is so restful up there, but I guess Wilfred don't want to go back no more to the town where we was.

"You see, George, my poor, deluded brother had an idea that he could sail into the little town where we was going and just tell them that he was from New York. He thought that would make him an idol in said town. I didn't think so for a minute, George, because I know how people is in small towns. They mind their own business and everybody else's, but they don't care a rap where they find out you came from. You might as well try to make a gorilla kiss your hand as to make a small towner respect you because you are a New Yorker. They simply don't care where you are from, and the way they treated my poor brother I guess the bigger the town you came from the less they care."

They Go to Europe.

"I don't blame them," said the Head Barber. "I don't see why a man should figure himself a favorite just because he lives in a little New York flat and rides up and down town in the subway. How is that going to make a man wise? Most of the fellows that was born in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge—the kind that comes in here sometimes to get shaved—ain't got much idea of the great country they are living in. If they save up a little dough, they don't go out to the wonderful Pacific Coast. No; they go to Europe and get bunked. They pay a guide a lot of dough to show them some place where an English king had his nephews choked to death in a tower, and then they come back and tell about their travels."

"I hope you ain't doing a monologue, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I was trying to tell you something about this week-end party, if you are enough of a gent to listen. Well, Wilfred and me reached the town all right, and the minute we got to the hotel and were seated with our country friends around the table, poor brother pulls the very phrase that I asked him not to. 'This is fair,' he says to the company, 'but little old New York for mine.' I knew right off that he had made a bonehead play, because I seen the folks look at each other kind of funny, but he doesn't gete wise, not Wilfred. 'The reason I like Manhattan,' he babbles right on, 'is because Manhattan is the market for brains. I write, as perhaps some of you people know,' says poor brother, 'and the brains of the country, in literature, all flock to New York. If I were a farmer, I would like it up here, but being a writer, I have to be in the heart of the literary world, little old New York.'

A Quiet Fellow.

"There was a nice, quiet-looking fellow in the party, George, that I seen looking over my fool brother kind of sly and unobstructive like. He was dressed rough, because he was on a fishing trip, but I seen right away from his calm, well-bred misdemeanor that he was a gent. He listened a long time while Wilfred was telling them what a terrible strain it is on a writer to keep writing, and he even stood for my brother's reciting some of his own poems right at the table with his mouth full of chow-chow and new bread. Then he got up and went out with a smile at me. I seen then and there that him and me would be good friends, because we both knew Wilfred through and through.

"Honest to goodness, George, do you know who he was? I asked one of the ladies, and she told me. The gent that had been listening to Wilfred's hot air about writing and writers was George Ade, who wrote 'Fables in Slang' and 'Horatius at the Bridge' and 'David Copperfield' and a lot of other books and plays."

"Did Wilfred find out who he was?" asked the Head Barber.

"Sure he did, but it didn't feaze him. He said that the time would go swift for the party with two clever writers at the same table!"

.:. The Care-Free Spin .:.

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE is this difference: She is an Old Maid if she is old fashioned and resigned, and a Bachelor Girl if she fights hard.

It must be dreary to be a Spin and have no husband come home and growl all evening about the high cost of living.

When a Spin knows how to smooth a man's plumage an ideal wife is lost to the world.

No one can save money quite as fast as a Spin after she has put aside the curling iron with the conviction that no man is worth having.

When all her friends unite in saying "What a good time she has," you can bet "She's is either a Spin or a widow.

It is easy to compliment the mother of children, but when a woman has become a real old Spin the only way to reach her is to appeal through what she learned at school.

"The top of her voice" is a common expression, but the top note depends entirely on whether a woman is married or a Spin. Mothers reach a high key through experience in screaming at the children, their husbands and the dog, but the top of a Spin's voice is a low pitch, and when she tries to raise it it becomes a squeal. The top of a mother's voice would stop a fire engine, the top of a Spin's voice isn't loud enough to call the cat home from the next yard.

Once Upon a Time there lived an Old Maid. She did not call herself a Spin. She was frank about it, and admitted she was an Old Maid, despising such subterfuges as Spin and Bachelor Girl. The Old Maid was lonesome, and lonesomeness for an Old Maid is DANGEROUS. She was more lonesome than her friends realized, and one day left Lonesome Land by walking from the altar with a Man. One morning a few years later her husband left the house after a stormy scene, banging the door with such violence that pictures and plates tumbled from the walls. The noise awoke the Twins, and they set up a Howl. "At least," said the ex-Old Maid, as she tried to soothe the crying babies and pick up pictures and broken glass and china at the same time, "I Am No Longer Lonesome." And having said that she said All!

ONLY FOUR DAYS LEFT TO ENTER GEORGIAN'S GREAT PONY CONTEST

Four days remain in which contestants can be nominated for The Georgian and The American pony outfit contest. Several boys and girls are believed to be preparing to enter at the last hour possible, and with a considerable number of votes pledged, believing there will be some advantage in taking the leaders by surprise.

This, though, is not likely to avail them much. Probably they believe the leaders are napping, but nothing could be further from the truth. Besides, late entrants are losing the value of vote coupons more than fifteen days old.

Those already in the race remain closely bunched.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook so far has been the greatest vote producer. She had 59,960 votes Tuesday, while Florence Greenoe in her district has polled 40,620.

Several other contestants have passed the 40,000 mark. George Rosser, in District 1, has 41,620; Miss Robert Harbour, in District 2, 48,055. Ross Greer and Mose Brodkin, in the City Carriers' and Newsboys' race, are running neck and neck with 42,145 and 41,700, respectively.

Another close contest, though the vote totals are not so large, is the contest for school boys and girls outside Georgia, where Lena Mae Smith, Knoxville, Tenn., has 16,715 votes, and Fain E. Webb, Jr., 16,650.

Plot Charged by Defense of Gibson

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May 27.—The defense of Burton W. Gibson, the New York lawyer, accused of drowning Countess Rosa Menschik Szabo in order to get her estate, was revealed to-day.

Dr. Otto H. Schultz, Coroner's physician of New York, who testified that the countess had been strangled to death, will be charged with forcing the tongue down the Countess' throat while performing the autopsy, thus giving the appearance of strangulation.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—There will be showers to-night in New England, the Middle Atlantic and northern portion of the South Atlantic States, continuing Wednesday in New England, New York and New Jersey. Elsewhere east of the Mississippi River the weather will be fair to-night and Wednesday, with higher temperatures Wednesday throughout the upper Lake and Western lower Lake regions and the Ohio Valley.

General Forecast.

Following is the general forecast until 7 p. m. Wednesday:

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night in north and central portions.

Virginia—Showers to-night; Wednesday cloudy.

North Carolina—Showers to-night and Wednesday.

South Carolina—Showers to-night or Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night.

Florida—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

Alabama—Fair to-night; cooler in north and central portions; Wednesday fair, warmer in north portion.

Mississippi—Fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly warmer Wednesday in the interior.

Tennessee—Fair to-night; Wednesday fair, warmer.

Louisiana—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Opinion on Government reports seem to have crystallized around 83 per cent, which, if June reports are indicative of final production, should be interpreted bearishly.

Norden & Co.: It is possible there may be further selling in an attempt to discount a good bureau report.

Sternberger, Sinn & Co.: It is still a weather market.

Newburger, Worms & Nawman: All strong spots should be taken advantage of to sell, especially the new crops.

Logan & Bryan: We favor sales on any upturn from this level.

Thompson, Towle & Co.: Market may go lower, but we do not advise selling at present.

SHORT COVERING PUTS COTTON UP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Poor cables, coupled with bearish weather map, led to active selling at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 3 points lower than Monday's final. Offerings were well absorbed and soon after the call the loss was made up.

During the forenoon the market was firm and under persistent buying from the large spot interests shorts covered considerable short lines. McFadden, Riordan and Parrott led the buying movement. Riordan was credited with purchasing about 12,000 to 15,000 bales of October and December, which was said to be for Wall Street. The character of the buying chased shorts to cover. Offerings were very light and scattered. It is believed by many that there is still an existing short interest in the market.

October and December displayed extraordinary firmness. October advanced 8 points and December 9 over the initial level. Other positions followed the advance moderately, advancing 3 to 7 points.

The advance came in the face of extremely bearish advices from all parts of the belt, as well as from abroad. A cable said:

"The market feels the influence of Continental buying, spinners well stocked, and notwithstanding a fair Manchester business we expect a small spot market in Liverpool for the present. Think market will be lower if crop accounts continue favorable."

Weather developments overnight were of the most favorable character. No rains fell of consequence. The map promises very favorable weather overnight; fair and warmer in the western and central States; cloudy and probably showers in the Carolinas and East Tennessee warmer.

During the afternoon session the market found good support from many conservative sources. Offerings were extremely light. One large Western operator was credited with covering about 20,000 bales on a narrow market, which caused October and December to advance to 11.20, while other positions held relatively steady, prices aggregated a net gain of about 8 to 13 points from the opening.

The National Ginners' Association of Memphis in its condition and acreage report placed the condition of the crop at 80.7 and gave acreage increase of about 3.2 per cent increase. The report was construed as bearish, but had practically no effect upon the market.

The market is an evening-up affair over the triple holiday period and the pending government report to follow the holidays.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Liverpool developed further weakness, showing futures this morning about 2 points lower than due. Spots, 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. London news says that Bulgarians fired on the Greek fleet. War between the allies nearer and this new menace distracts attention from peace negotiations.

Weather conditions continue very favorable. The map shows fair and warm weather west of Alabama, cloudy in the Atlantic and Tennessee; some nice rains in Tennessee and Western North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy weather and showers in the Carolinas, where rain is needed, and fair and warmer weather over the rest of the belt.

The market was like during the first two hours around last night's closing prices, waiting for the weekly Government weather report at 11 o'clock, which is expected to be partly unfavorable, as it will cover the three-day cool spell of last week. Some little scalpers' buying caused a few points advance.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Reports to the Journal of Commerce state that the cotton crop is backward in the Carolinas and about normal in Tennessee. The acreage is slightly increased and the stands in general are poor. Rain was badly needed, but showers have been general recently. Some replanting in Tennessee with an increase in the acreage. In North Carolina the season is about two weeks late; prospects are much brighter since the rains. South Carolina condition may fall below last year, when it was 79. Tennessee condition shows an increase of nearly ten points over last year, when it was 73.5.

It is believed that a good deal of short cotton has been covered during the past few days and a lower market is predicted, based on favorable weather conditions and reports which are coming in. Around the close yesterday Riordan bought about 10,000 bales of October and December. McFadden brokers also bought. However, they sold old crop positions.

Liverpool cables: "American middling fair 7.24d; good middling 6.96d; middling 6.76d; low middling 6.56d; good ordinary 6.82d; ordinary 5.86d."

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable. Shows fair and warmer in western portion of the Atlantics. Cloudy and warm in the Atlantics and Tennessee. No rain except in Tennessee and parts of North Carolina, where it will be beneficial.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Favorable crop reports came from many quarters, and the cotton market declined. Of course, a wave of bearish sentiment passed over the rings and low-price people discussed the outlook for declines in more or less confident tones. Ten cents for new crops was talked of as a sure thing, nine cents as a probability, eight cents as likely, and, according to one lone bear, seven cents as a possibility. All the while the bull faction kept quiet and permitted the spell of depression to run its course. At the close underlying strength seemed to develop, and students of the market expressed the belief that near future fluctuations would range within 20 points.

"The weather over Sunday was very favorable, temperatures were higher and, on the face of things, the crop seemed to be in a fair way to make seasonable progress. The man on the fence, while admitting the presence of much more favorable climatic conditions, was inclined to believe that the flood of favorable crop advices, coming right at the close of the period on which the Government's condition bulletin on June 2 is to be based, traces some of its inspiration to a possible need of an offset to any relatively low condition that might have been reported on May 25 from the less favorable sections."

McFadden, Parrott and Riordan were the leading buyers to-day. Mohr and Hentz probably the best sellers.

Wall Street covered through Riordan.

Riordan was also a big buyer of the new crop positions for the Pell interests.

Memphis wires: "Generally fair weather will prevail in the cotton States except in the extreme northeastern sections, where showers are likely. Good weather in the central belt will be quite followed by warmer. No rain of consequence has fallen. Favorable map."

WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Mean temperatures were normal or slightly above over the extreme eastern portion of the cotton region and in northwestern Texas. Elsewhere there was a deficiency of from one to six degrees. The weekly mean temperatures ranged from 64 to 76 degrees over the eastern, from 66 to 74 over the central and from 64 to 76 over the western portion of the cotton growing States. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and Bentonville, Ark., and the highest, 76, at Jacksonville and Tampa, and at San Antonio and Del Rio, Texas.

Precipitation occurred throughout the cotton region, except that there was no rain at a few stations in southern and western Texas.

The precipitation was generally heaviest over the central and northeastern portion of the cotton region, the amounts over those portions being generally more than two inches.

The greatest weekly amount, 4.65 inches, occurred at Donaldsonville, La.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 27.—The cotton seed oil market was barely steady at the start to-day in absence of outside support, but prices soon firmed up on local professional buying, inspired by higher lard and cotton. There was some selling of August for outside long account.

TALLULAH CASE IS TRIED ON MERITS

Demurrers of Both State and the Power Company Overruled. Testimony Is Heard.

CLAYTON, GA., May 27.—Demurrers of both the State of Georgia, plaintiff, and the Georgia Railway and Power Company, defendant, were overruled to-day in the suit to determine the ownership of the gorge at Tallulah Falls and the case was ordered tried on its merits by Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northeastern Circuit. The introduction of testimony began when court reconvened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

When court assembled at 10 o'clock this morning both sides announced ready for trial and in a short itme the jury was drawn and sworn. The jurors are among the most prominent citizens of Rabun County.

The contention of the State is that the land in the Tallulah Falls gorge was never granted by the State and that land grants along the falls extended only to the brink of the gorge, thereby leaving the title to the gorge with the State.

The power company contends that the land grants on either side of the gorge extend to the river and include the gorge, and that the Legislature of 1905 passed a resolution estopping the State from laying claim to the gorge land.

No Action Yet on Street Car Service

Definite action on the part of the State Railroad Commission requiring the Georgia Railway and Electric Company to give better street-car service in Atlanta did not develop Tuesday morning as expected. A decision is expected Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning.

The commission also has under consideration a request of the Southern Express Company for an increase from 15 to 25 cents as the minimum on a shipment of milk. Dairymen of Fairburn, Ga., protested.

Budget for June to Be Made Up Friday

Council's Finance Committee Tuesday closed its public hearing, and Chairman W. G. Humphrey announced that a meeting would be held Friday morning to make up the June budget.

"We have about $71,000 for special appropriations," said Chairman Humphrey, "but I have no idea as yet how the committee will decide to divide it. Requests for new money amount to about $500,000."

Imaginative Drunk Thinks He Is Slayer

W. W. Baughn, whose home is on Broyles Street, outlined another basement murder mystery to the police Monday night. He rushed up to a patrolman in Forsyth Street and said he had just killed a man and had thrown him through a basement window of the Austell Building. The policeman hurried to the Austell Building and found a shattered plate glass window, but no dead man.

Before the Recorder Tuesday Baughn said he was drunk and did not remember what he said. He was put on probation.

Works Years With Heart Almost Bare

ST. JOHN, N. B., May 27.—Jose Carey, whose case was regarded as unique by the medical profession, is dead. Carey underwent an operation in Boston six years ago for lung trouble and part of the left lung and several of the ribs were removed, leaving the heart practically exposed.

Carey recovered his usual health and worked daily for the last four years.

Cat With Harelip Whistles Like Boy

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May 27.—Stanislaus Czynszky, of Prospect Avenue, West Springfield, is the owner of a cat with a harelip, which whistles with the facility of a schoolboy, but can not mew or, at least, never has mewed.

Neighbors have suggested that the cat would prove a treasure to a maker of catgut violin strings.

Baptist Ministers Hear Dr. Donaldson

The Rev. C. N. Donaldson, D. D., of Charleston, S. C., who was pastor of the Inman Park Baptist Church for six years, delivered an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Atlanta Monday afternoon.

Dr. Donaldson will return to Charleston Sunday. His many friends were glad to see him and to learn he is pleased with Charleston.

FIFE, SECRETARY TO SAMUEL INMAN, DIES

Manse Fife, 21 years old, died Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at the residence, 18 Argard Avenue, after a short illness.

Mr. Fife was private secretary to Samuel Inman. He is survived by his father, J. A. Fife; five brothers, Walter, J. C., H. A., W. B., and Edward S. Fife, and a sister, Mrs. J. T. Gibson.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

3 Bandits Caught After Battle With Posse; 2 Wanted

MARIETTA, GA., May 27.—Frank Nation is in jail here to-day and John Goddard and a man named Haney are held prisoners at Cartersville, following a battle near Hugh, a small station between Cartersville and Marietta, with a pursuing posse in which Nation and Deputy Sheriff J. P. Gaines were wounded. A fourth member of Nation's gang escaped by swimming a river, after being chased six miles by dogs and officers.

Nation and his associates are said to have attempted to hold up and rob Thomas Sorrells, telegraph operator at Hugo.

Bartow County officers telephoned to Marietta for assistance and Deputy Sheriff George Hicks went to Hugo with dogs. They followed a trail to Nation's house across a mountain, where the battle took place.

February Cleared By Chief Lanford

Chief of Detectives Lanford exonerated G. C. February, his secretary, of any genuine intention of "selling out" to Colonel Thomas B. Felder, in a statement Tuesday afternoon.

"The deal with Felder was taken up with my consent and under my instructions," said Chief Lanford. "It was done on the suggestion of A. S. Colyar, and if there is any blame to be attached to the laying of the dictograph trap for Felder I am the one responsible. I thought that if they were planning to steal that Coleman affidavit and other papers they would be caught with the goods."

Atlantans to See 'Knoxville-Made' Fair

Chattanooga's exhibit of goods made in that city is regarded by Atlantans as a model for the exposition planned here, and for that reason about 50 members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association will go to Chattanooga Thursday to see the display.

A special car will be attached to the W. & A. train leaving Atlanta at 8 a. m.

Man of Mystery Is Likened to Hoch

CHICAGO, May 27.—The coroner will be asked to-day to investigate the death of Homer Edward Morrison, who was involved in a mystery which may rival that of Johann Hoch.

Two women already have appeared who say they were defrauded by a man named Morrison, and the police have a record of a third woman, who claims also to have been victimized.

Charges Attempt To Blind Him; Sues

Asserting that W. M. Henry tried to put his eyes out with an umbrella, O. M. Sutton has filed suit in the Superior Court against Henry for $2,500 damages.

Sutton alleges that Henry showered blows on him with the umbrella; jabbed the end of the umbrella into the back of his neck, into his stomach and against his back; threw him into a corner; beat him and then dragged him out and tried to poke the umbrella point into his eyes.

Governor Attends Lucy Cobb Finals

Governor Joseph M. Brown left for Athens Monday, where he will attend the commencement exercises of Lucy Cobb Institute. The Governor's daughter, Miss Cora Brown, is a member of the graduating class.

While in Athens the Governor also will pay a visit to the University. He is not scheduled to make any addresses on the trip.

U. S. Drops Inquiry Into Phthisis 'Cure'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—By order of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo the Public Health Service to-day refused to make any further investigation into the so-called Duket "cure" for tuberculosis.

Duket is a Chicago surgeon who is backed by former Senator Lorimer and other influential men.

SISTERS SEE BROTHER SLAIN.

MERIDIAN, MISS., May 27.—Following an altercation, the cause of which is not known, Gifford Beattie shot and killed Floyd Hardin. Hardin's two sisters witnessed the killing. Beattie is in jail.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

No Better Chickens Than the White Plymouth Rocks

They Are as Beautiful as They Are Useful and Profitable—Are Good as They Look.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

In our estimation there are no better chickens than the White Plymouth Rocks. When carefully bred and rightly handled they are as beautiful as they are useful and profitable.

With their glossy white plumage, red comb, wattles and earlobes, and yellow legs, they look fine enough to eat, and they are just as good as they look.

I am not raising them and I have none to sell, but I know what I am talking about, for I have handled them in years past and speak from experience.

If you want to produce good ones, however, you must be mighty careful to breed from first class stock. If you are just starting in the business you can not use too much care to produce a start of the very choicest breeders. Then let your selections each year be the very best. Cull out the poor ones, both as to shape and color. Keep nothing that does not show a robust constitution, the ones with the broad breasts and backs, heavy thighs, nice and tapering, arched necks, with a low carried tail. Such a specimen is not only good looking in shape, but contains stamina worth considering. Weed out those with the slim, straight necks, long and narrow or roached backs; legs too long, standing too close together at the knees; tail slim and carried too high, forming an angle with the back. These points of defect are very often seen, and upon what some call good specimens. Of course, they are rarely all seen upon the same fowl, but frequently two or more are.

High Type Utility Fowl.

When you have the very best possible shape in a White Rock for the show room you have a utility fowl of the very highest type. There is no doubt about that. As to color, the Standard says pure white throughout, web quill and all. You see there are no qualifications. Simply white. Any departure from this is defective, such as creaminess, brass and the like; brass simply being the creaminess intensified into a positive yellow, as seen upon poor specimens of males two years old or older. This is one of the things we have to fight against in our endeavors for the best. Gray or black specks are quite common and are often distributed through the plumage in pin head sizes, and are defective according to size and number and the intensity of color. Positive black spots of any kind will disqualify. A good, pure, white plumage throughout, free from any creamy tinge, even though it contains a few minute specks, is much more desirable in every way than one that has a tendency to be creamy. Do not throw that kind away, for it is a hard matter to get a pure white one. The ear lobes should be bright red, as in all the different varieties of rocks, any permanent, or what might be called enameled white, disqualifies. Look out for this, as it only takes a mighty few of the right kind of black specks to throw them out. What the Standard terms positive white, in treating with white in specimens demanding red lobes, is a white that seems coated right on to the surface, and not a changeable white that shows white one minute and reddens the next.

Single Comb.

The comb upon both the male and female should be single and straight upon the head, not soft enough to turn to one side or the other or to wrinkle in its course from where it starts at the base of the head to the blade at the rear. A comb of five points is the one desired, although a four-point one would not be so very objectionable in the eyes of the best breeders. Look out for feathers, stubs or down on the shanks, which should be clean and free from any appearance of feathers. One can soon learn to detect the greater defects and the little ones will come to light later on in the game.

If you get a strictly first class White Rock for the fancy man or the show room, you will have a good one to breed broilers or roasters from and a good one for laying, too, for that matter.

You know it used to be a great idea to those that knew nothing about the business that a thoroughbred or standard bred chicken, one good enough to put into the show room, was some kind of a freak not suited to any other purpose, and entirely unfit for the practical man. Nothing could have been farther from the facts, and many are just now getting wise along this line, for it has been one great aim and earnest endeavor of the standard makers for years to have for their ideal chicken one that was all chicken from head to tail.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Tract of 400 Acres To Be Subdivided

Woodland Hills as a Home Neighborhood—Peachtree Widening Postponed.

Announcement was made Tuesday of perfected plans for improving one of the largest acreage tracts in the Atlanta section. W. E. Worley, J. A. Mahoney and Eugene C. Callaway, incorporators of the Woodland Hills Company, will begin in a few days to improve 400 acres between Ansley Park and Druid Hills, and probably $40,000 will be spent at once putting in 80-foot chert drives, water and sewers and tile sidewalks.

This subdivision is to be known as Woodland Hills. The developers have consulted with engineers as to topography, and plats of the property will be out shortly. The lots will be large, and the owners expect to sell them all and to have a thriving home community in three years.

The last addition to this tract was made ten days ago, when 110 acres was bought for $40,000. There will be a combined frontage of about 20 miles. The tract is on the Cheshire Bridge, East Paces Ferry and Williams Mill Roads and Highland and Moreland Avenues.

Widening Considered.

The Finance Committee of Council will meet Friday to fix up the budget covering improvements for street work and other city improvements, and will at this time take up the matter of setting aside $5,000 for widening Peachtree from Harris Street to Forsyth Street. The citizens' committee went before the Finance Committee Monday afternoon and outlined its request.

Extensive improvements hang on this project. E. W. Alfriend and Mrs. J. B. Whitehead expect to erect a twelve-story office building between Cain and Harris Streets, and another property owner has plans for a five-story structure.

Building on Wesley Avenue.

Wesley Avenue, to the west of Peachtree Road and a few rods north of Peachtree Creek, is beginning to rival Pace's Ferry Road as a situation for country homes. Among the home owners on the thoroughfare are General Clifford L. Anderson, Clark Howell and David Woodward, and now comes J. C. Chipley, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, with announcement that he has started a residence. Mr. Chipley's house will be two stories high and will cost approximately $15,000.

Several other property owners, it is said, will build on Wesley Avenue during the summer.

Warehouse Is Completed.

Colonel John J. Woodside's storage warehouse No. 3, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been replaced with a more complete structure. In a few days the warehouse will be completed and ready to be used again. The building is located on Butler Street and has a great amount of floor space.

Pryor Street Building Finished.

The building at 96 South Pryor Street, built for Harry G. Poole, the undertaker, has been completed and is now occupied by the concern. This structure cost approximately $25,000 and is one of the handsomest of the smaller buildings on Pryor Street.

St. Charles Cottage Bought.

Mrs. Willie Mae Levi has bought from W. H. Craig, through the Ralph O. Cochran Company, a six-room cottage at 174 St. Charles Avenue, 60 by 190, for a price not named. This property is between Ponce DeLeon Place and Bonaventure Avenue.

Building on Ponce DeLeon.

People traveling out Ponce DeLeon Avenue of late have been impressed with the great amount of building that is being done on that thoroughfare and on tributary streets. In the neighborhood of Ponce DeLeon and Barnett Street and Bonaventure Avenue, for instance, twelve or fifteen new houses are either building or recently completed. It matters not which way you turn, say the realty men, there are more houses in process of erection than ever before in the city's history, with prospects for more in the future than at the present.

Fresh Bit of Acreage.

A 28-acre tract on Pace's Ferry Road that has been in the hands of the present owners for 50 years has been placed on the market at $13,500. This is between "Woodlawn," Robert F. Maddox's estate, and the Howell Mill Road. It has been listed with a well-known real estate agency, and has been suggested for subdivision.

SUBURBAN HOMES.
IN INMAN PARK, Edgewood, Kirkwood and Decatur, we have a number of pretty cottages, and a few very attractive larger homes. Most of these places carry all of the conveniences. Kirkwood and Decatur as yet have not the gas, but electric lights and plumbing. This is the time when the country is most attractive, the car service fine, and to remain during the winter is no hardship. Large lots, good schools and churches, and reasonable rents. Let us tell you about these.

CLAIRMONT AVENUE, DECATUR, GA.

ON THE CORNER of Ponce DeLeon, in this pretty little town, within twenty-five minutes' ride of the city, we have this splendid modern eleven-room house, on large corner lot. A Merchant Marine Becomes a Vital Necessity

Congress is Alone to Blame for the Neglect to Build Up a Great, Powerful, Progressive and Prosperous American Merchant Marine in Foreign Trade.

The lack of American merchant ships for the ordinary needs of our Government has been strikingly impressed upon the attention of the new Administration.

Recent developments made it necessary for the Government to secure possession of a considerable number of American merchantmen. They were needed as a precautionary measure, to insure preparedness against any sudden eventuality in which foreign ships could not be used.

THE PITIFULLY SMALL SUPPLY OF SUCH AMERICAN VESSELS BOTH ASTOUNDED AND ALARMED THE GOVERNMENT. Most of the few American vessels that are available are old, in many respects inadequate, and scarcely any of these measure up to urgent needs.

Not only are American merchantmen few and inefficient, but it is found that, even if American ships were now available in large numbers, THERE IS NO CORRESPONDING NUMBER OF TRAINED AND EXPERIENCED AMERICAN MASTERS, OFFICERS AND SEAMEN IMMEDIATELY OBTAINABLE.

The possibly grave consequence of our utter dependence upon foreign merchant ships, their officers and men, who would be unavailable for national needs in time of war, is causing the greatest uneasiness and concern.

American merchant ships, their officers and men, are required in times of emergency for scout purposes, for auxiliary cruisers, to carry troops, coal and ammunition supplies, and for a thousand and one needs for which warships would be neither desirable nor available.

These are serious problems for a new Administration so suddenly to face, and their satisfactory solution is difficult, if not impossible, at the moment.

CONGRESS IS ALONE TO BLAME FOR THE NEGLECT TO BUILD UP A GREAT, POWERFUL, PROGRESSIVE AND PROSPEROUS AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

THE PUNY PROVISION IN THE PENDING TARIFF BILL to merely make a beginning in the upbuilding of American shipping should be and is likely to be so strengthened and buttressed in the Senate as to lay a broad and solid foundation for the establishment of an effective and enduring American maritime policy.

The little so far provided has provoked the impudent protests of foreign nations that are determined to prevent, if they can, the maritime independence of the United States. The present conditions are far too useful and too profitable for these foreign monopolists to willingly relinquish.

EVERY NATIONAL INSTINCT OF PRESERVATION AND PROSPERITY SHOULD IMPEL CONGRESS TO IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Should steps be taken at once to remedy our intolerable dependence upon foreign merchant shipping, it will take years for the United States to reach a state of efficient preparedness in American merchant ships, officers and men, for either the ordinary or the emergency requirements of our Government and the peaceful transportation of our imports and exports. It is high time to make a beginning.

We have discovered shortcomings in several important particulars in naval equipment. BUT NOTHING HAS SO PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSED THE GOVERNMENT AT THIS TIME AS THE PRESSING NEED OF A GREAT AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, WISELY REGARDED AND OFFICIALLY STATED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON AS "ESSENTIAL TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE."

It would indeed be thoughtless and cowardly if, in this crisis in American affairs, the sinister protests of foreign governments against immediate and adequate legislative provision for the upbuilding of American deep sea shipping should receive the slightest consideration.

Are Women as Foolish as Men?

"We were introduced at a restaurant and four days later we were married and the next day he deserted me and ran away with $4,000 worth of my jewelry and money." This is the unvarnished narrative told by a woman who had a man arrested out west the other day.

This same woman would watch the iceman like a hawk, for fear he would give her only eight cents worth of ice instead of the ten cents worth she paid for. She would inspect her grocery and butcher bill, and the laundress does not wash who could get a penny ahead of her at the Monday suds festival. She submits her agent's reports as to rents or investments to the family lawyer, and she even keeps a shrewd and questioning eye on the lawyer himself.

But she meets a man in a restaurant, hearkens to his story that he is the temporarily embarrassed heir to a million or two, and hands herself and her fortune over to him without as much care as she bestows on the inspection of the chicken she buys for the family dinner.

Ordinarily the victim of the sort of sharper who despoiled the woman quoted above is not an ignorant, unsophisticated girl; on the contrary, she is commonly a mature woman, and not infrequently one who has had one or two whirls at the matrimonial lottery.

When we shake our heads at the credulity of such women we should not ascribe their misfortune to the feminine type of mind.

Remember, when you feel how superior men are to that sort of deception, that the gold-brick swindle and the green goods game, the Spanish prisoner trap and wire-tapping delusion continue year after year to earn fortunes for the rogues who have the hardihood to perpetrate them.

There are lots of foolish women in the world—almost as many as foolish men.

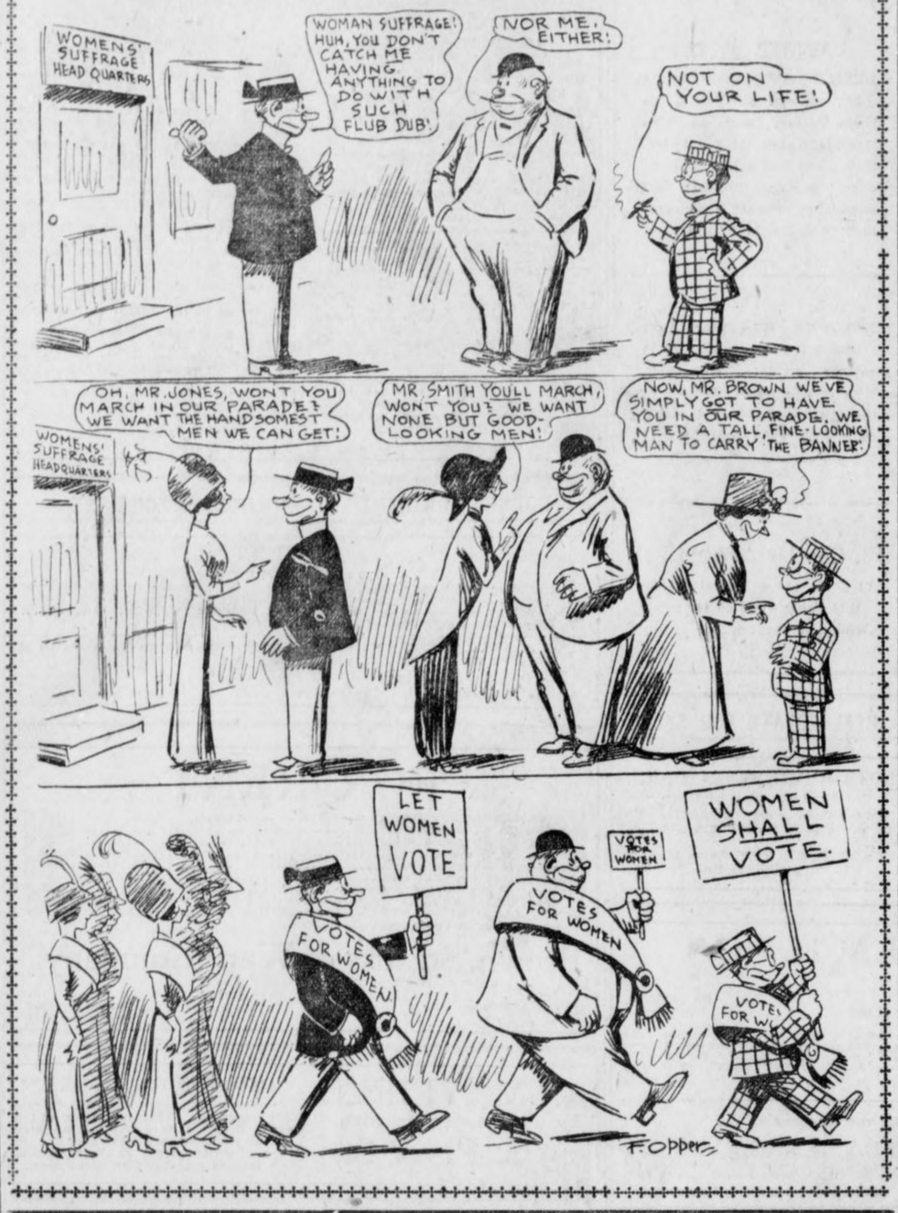
A Little Flattery Will Make a Man Do Anything



What Do You Like to Read About?

By WINIFRED BLACK.

"WHAT do you like to read about?" said the Man to me.

I stared. "I mean," said the Man, "what sort of folks—people in castles, with retainers and 'heirs' birthdays,' or people on yachts, with butlers and valets, or people out West, with Sheriffs and bad men dropping in to supper, and the wind blowing in from the desert and the coyotes yelping on the great red mountains in the dusky distance?"

"Oh," said I, "I don't like any of those people. I like folks—just plain folks. No, not 'folksy folks' with dialects—the women, with shawls on their heads that run in and gossip all about 'What made Maria stay an old maid so long?' and 'Who's goin' to git Mirandy, now Si's gone?' bore me to tears; and I can't bear the fair young schoolma'am who goes out West and makes the biggest boy fall in love with her, and then they go back home to visit, and he shocks the whole village by saying 'Darn it!' and wearing a red cowboy handkerchief instead of a collar.

Maids Don't Worry Me.

"I like to read about the sort of people I know myself, every day in the week—the woman with the fussy husband; the woman with the boy she hopes will be a genius, and he turns out to be just a lazy dreamer; the woman with the little girl who won't take music lessons, no matter how she tries to make her; the man with the business down-town, and the rival over the way trying to take it away from him; the girl on the stage who plays real parts and gets real criticisms; the newspaper man who doesn't beat the town the very first time he goes out on a story; the people who have comfy homes and a decent picture or two, and a lot of good books and some dogs, and either children or the hope of children.

"No, I don't care for butlers in mine, though if the butler belongs in the story I don't mind him at all; I only hate to have him dragged in by the heels to prove that the man who employs him really is no end of a swell.

"Valets? Yes, a valet is all right, if he isn't insisted on. Lots of fairly every-day men have valets—actors and musicians and other helpless creatures.

"Maids don't worry me—nor chauffeurs—as long as they stay discreetly in the background, but I must say secretaries and nursery governesses and under-gardeners and special trains and too many yachts do disconcert me a little. I always have to stop and add up what it would cost to have an establishment like that, and that interferes with the plot.

"No, I hate the Dickey and the Algy story, with the 'little gell in white' and her managing mama. I never can quite believe there are such helpless geese in the world as that little gell, and if I knew anyone like the 'managing mama' I'd have her locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

"Yes, it's folks I like—everyday folks—plain Americans, with plain American troubles and plain American joys, like buying a machine after you've saved for it for a year; and Daughter's graduating essay; and Son's first love affair.

The Chocolate-Cream Age.

"That's why I always choose a woman's stories, all other things being equal, I guess."

"The man looked at me more in sorrow than in anger. "Are all women like you?" he said. "I don't believe it. I believe they like to read about ropes of pearls and strings of emeralds and cables of real coral—and gowns of filmy lace—or a——"

"That's the chocolate-cream age," I said. "They do, of course. That's because they are always hoping they'll be one of those heroines themselves some day, and they want to have the fun of planning their filmy gowns and thinking how sweet they'll look in the ropes and chains and things. When the woman is past wanting to read about people like herself, it heals her to realize that she isn't the only human being who has trouble keeping the expense accounts within scolding limits. What do you like to read about, Mr. Man?"

The man took a long pull on his pipe. "I like to read about damsels fair, and shady bowers, and nodding violets, and dashing cavaliers," he said, "and noble heroes, and soldiers of fortune—and quests, and all that. If anyone dares to hand me a book about 'How I Made My Money' or 'What I Did to Down the Lemon Trust' I'll make him wish he'd committed suicide that time he almost wanted to."

And then we both began to reconsider and talk it over, and we both decided that we really don't care so much about who the hero of the story was. The main thing is, who wrote it?

There's Bret Harte. He could take a bank clerk and cast such a sparkling veil of romance about him that his every pen flourish would mean sentiment. And as for the common little red-haired person he fell in love with—why, she'd be a wood nymph, a fairy, a siren from the cool green sea, even if she lived in a hall bedroom and ate 'weenies' and chocolate for supper.

Cable! Do you ever hunt up Cable's houses down in New Orleans? Dirty old tumble-down places, seen with everyday eyes. Look through the magic glasses of Cable, and you're in Elysia, the land of fair women and brave men. There's even something romantic about a piece of candied lemon peel when the right sort of man tells about it.

It Isn't the Subject.

No, it isn't the subject; it's the way it is handled, after all, we agreed, the man and I. There's so and so, the special writer on the Daily Enterprise. He'd write about a fire in a boiler factory, and make you hold your breath to find out whether the Maltese cat got out alive or not. And there's his brother on the Daily Scream, would tell the story of a plot to assassinate every beautiful woman in America, and keep you yawning all the way through. It isn't the story: it isn't the people in the story—it's the writer that matters.

"But still," said I to the Man, "all things being equal, I want folks in my stories—folks that I know."

"Gossip," said the man. And we both went and got our own particular kind of book and settled down to our own particular kind of evening, and were perfectly satisfied. What fun it is to talk these things over once in a while! Isn't it?

Awake at Last to Navy's Needs

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

COL. GRAVES.

THERE are substantial evidences of a reviving patriotism and common sense in the American Congress toward the American navy.

When Secretary Daniels was banqueted week before last in Savannah one of the speakers was Congressman Edwards, of the Savannah district. Mr. Edwards has been heretofore apathetic, if not openly antagonistic, to the ample navy program. On this latest occasion he said that, however indifferent and economic his views had been toward the navy, the recent international interchanges with Japan had opened his eyes and fixed him definitely and firmly as an advocate and champion of a greater navy.

Others Changed.

"Henceforth," said Mr. Edwards, "if the naval experts of the Government advise Congress that we need three battleships, or four battleships, or even five, I am for the navy and whatever it needs to defend our country. The anxieties aroused by our unpreparedness against Japan must never be repeated in America."

Savannah is one of the ultra-conservative cities of the South, and Congressman Edwards is notably conservative, cautious and economical. His complete conversion is in the highest degree significant of the awakening of Congress.

It is even so with Congressman Poor, of the Raleigh District of North Carolina, Secretary Daniels' district.

Mr. Poor has also been among the conservatives on the naval program of the House. The Japanese contention and the developments of our naval unpreparedness, as exposed by the Hearst newspapers, have aroused the North Carolinan to the perils of an undefended country and the necessity for a navy ample for our Western and Eastern Coasts. He is openly and heartily for the ample navy.

On the lips of scores of anti-navy Congressmen there are expressions similar to these. It is actually true that the naval information and comparisons developed by the recent international controversy have changed the spirit of the national Congress on this vital question of the national defense.

The American Congress and the American people have slept for years upon the idea that our "splendid isolation" protected our country, and that in case of war our navy and army were equal to every demand of defense and offense. Congress and some of the people have had the same feeling toward foreign nations that the South had toward the North preceding the Civil War. "One Southerner can whip a dozen Yankees," said some.

One Southern statesman declared in a public speech, "Why, we can whip the Yankees with popguns!" Challenged upon this assertion after the war was over, the orator responded: "Well, so we could, but the d—d fellows wouldn't fight that way!"

Awake at Last.

Our country has waked up at last to the fact that it is not immune from war, that it is not invincible in war, that it is not prepared for war.

The awakening will do us good. It is worth this flurry with Japan to have educated the American people and their representatives to an understanding of our real condition and of our national dangers.

I feel that the Hearst newspapers have performed a signal and patriotic service in helping to this national understanding. These newspapers can be indifferent to any criticism of sensationalism in the consciousness that more than any other American newspapers they have taught the people something about their navy.

Public opinion is coming to stand for the idea that preparedness in war is the best promoter of peace. The long centuries of exemption from attack that England's great navy has bought for England is teaching our people that they have a right to expect from their representatives just such an insurance policy against war.

Gatling Philosophy.

The treason of Congress against the Navy is not likely to be repeated in this generation.

The policy of national preparedness also pervades our national officials—always excepting Mr. Bryan, whose "doves" and "swans" and "flowers of rhetoric" delight the Chautauquas.

Secretary Daniels said to Mr. Gatling, of the Gatling gun: "Are you not conscience smitten over your invention? Do not your guns keep you from sleeping because of the people they have destroyed and may destroy?"

To which Mr. Gatling answered:

"My guns have saved more lives than they have ever destroyed. The existence of them and the knowledge of their destructiveness keep nations from war and mobs from bloody riots. The Gatling gun is a peace-maker."

And Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, is tremendously impressed just now with the Gatling philosophy.

Perhaps we shall have national cause to thank Japan and the Hearst newspapers!

How Opening of the Panama Canal Will Aid Historical Research

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AFTER the Panama Canal is opened we may begin to learn the true history of Ancient America.

Many readers may be unaware that this new world, as we call it, contains one of the oldest of all historical mysteries, and, in fact the very oldest if as some maintain, it forms a direct connection with the story of the lost continent of Atlantis.

Buried in the tropical jungles of Central America there are the ruins of once splendid cities, whose remains of a gigantic architecture are covered with hieroglyphics more puzzling than those of ancient Egypt, for no man has yet succeeded in discovering a complete key to their meaning. They guard their secret more jealously than the Sphinx.

Ruins of Temples.

Their origin is ascribed to a practically vanished race called the Mayas, related to the Aztec of Montezuma's Empire, but far excelling the ancient Mexicans in everything except warlike power. The ruins of their temples at Palenque, Copan, Peten and elsewhere, excite the wonder of the traveler, and contain some of the most beautiful and elaborate carving that can anywhere be found.

They had not only an exquisite picture language, but also a written language, of which undecipherable manuscripts yet exist.

They built about forty towns, connected by stone-paved roads. They had a postal system, conducted by means of swift-footed carriers who ran from town to town over the paved roadways. Sometimes they were at war with one another, and then armies marched to battle on the same roads.

They were skillful agriculturists, and cultivated broad fields, which are now overgrown with mossy trees and tangled vines and shrubs. They raised cotton and wove it into garments.

They made beautiful ornaments of gold and semi-precious stones, and were more skillful even than the Aztecs in feather work.

The designs carved on their buildings and ornamental, or symbolic, structures are of great beauty and astonishing perfection in detail. They covered the walls of rooms with brilliant paintings on stucco.

They Have Vanished.

Strange to say, the people believed to be descended from these Mayas are unable to throw any light upon the history of their supposed ancestors.

All their civilization has vanished, and with it, apparently, all memory of the ancient splendors of the race.

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

World that the suggestion has been made that a connection formerly existed across the Atlantic Ocean, and this is the origin of the theory that the ancestors of the Mayas dwelt on the fabled continent of Atlantis, which Plato heard had been sunk in the western ocean ages before his time.

One of the strangest facts about the ancient land of the Mayas has recently been called to attention by Dr. Ellsworth Huntington. It is this: At present the whole district possesses a climate so warm, moist and debilitating that it is almost the worst place on the globe for human habitation.

The ruins of the ancient cities, instead of lying amid deserts, and under a burning sun, as happens with most of the abandoned capitals of the East, are so overgrown with tangled vegetation and enveloped in feverstricken swamps that some of them are nearly unapproachable.

The conclusion is that within the past two thousand years, a vast change of climate has occurred in that part of America, and that in the days of Mayan civilization the earth's climatic zones were shifted in such a manner that the land occupied by this remarkable people enjoyed very different atmospheric conditions from those that prevail there now.

Peten, one of their most important cities, which has not yet been well explored on account of the difficulties of approach, lies in the midst of a region which is, at present, very sparsely peopled, and where it would be impossible to cultivate the land as it was cultivated in the days of the Mayas.

May Be Read in Full.

Only by such a supposition, it is thought, can a rational explanation be found for the fact that the highest native civilization that this continent had developed before the white man came, was centered about a location which is now a deadened and almost uninhabitable wilderness.

When the Panama Canal has become a great highway, and the attention of the world has been turned upon its surroundings, fresh light is likely to be thrown upon this fascinating mystery.

Then the Mayan hieroglyphics may be read in full, and a hidden chapter of American history thrown open.

MR. BRYAN'S TOAST

Editor The Georgian:

You devote much of your space to Mr. Bryan. Will you please reproduce a portion of his toast at the Army and Navy Club, given at the farewell banquet to the Commissioners from Great Britain and Canada? Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: I have delivered three addresses of welcome to our visitors, but will have but one word of farewell, and that is in keeping with the environment which surrounds us this morning. We have met in the building of the Army and Navy Club, and the fact that we are the guests of those who represent those two arms of the Government suggests the thought which I present in bidding you adieu. While we are the advocates of peace, we are really engaged in the construction of a battleship which is to be the very culmination—the climax—of the seaman's art. Man has been engaged in the construction of water craft since the flapping sail first whispered its secret of strength to the voyager. He has designed vessels for pleasure, for commerce and for war. We have had the galley, the viking's ship, the frigate, the ironclad and the dreadnought. But no limit can be placed to the ambitions of man as a builder, and I ask you to join me in proposing a toast to a ship more potent than any which man has thus far employed in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart, its shells are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.

SUSPICION TURNED TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk. Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full-flare upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected assertion last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are rife in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, timekeeper of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty intoxicated on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 2 in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember anyone whom he saw during that time to bear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 6 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 6 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; this also has not been established. Conley states he stayed there the remainder of the night.

According to the new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday instead of Friday, as he claims, and not on anybody's dictation. It is further argued that, in order to ingratiate himself with the law, he made his confession when he thought that the case against Frank was clinched—that his story was the product of his own imagination.

Conley's delay in making this confession until Frank's indictment seemed likely is another link against him.

His detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, shows premeditation on the negro's part, it is argued, and further that the story was conceived by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's childish brain was not capable of making it strong enough to withstand rigid investigation.

E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman of the National Pencil factory, seen to-day by a Georgian reporter, said he was confident the negro Jim Conley, under arrest as a suspect in the Mary Phagan murder mystery, committed the crime.

Here is what Holloway told the reporter:

"Jim Conley, when he came to work here about one year ago, was a pretty good negro. We had no trouble with him for about two months. Then Jim got drunk. He had been running the elevator and we were afraid to trust him afterward. We then put him to work sweeping in the trimming department. Here Conley was closely associated with the girls. He used to move their chairs when he was sweeping. Conley was the only negro allowed in this department.

"Jim got so bad he used to carry whisky with him in his pocket. Several times he was caught by employees taking a drink. This was not known by the management until after the murder of Mary Phagan.

Drunk in Factory.

"About one week before the crime was committed the forelady of the trimming and finishing department, Miss Eulah May Flowers, went to the top floor of the building to look over the stock of boxes. When Conley was not sweeping he was supposed to fill the box bins with boxes. When Miss Flowers moved toward the bin to look in she stumbled over a form. She screamed and fell back. It was Conley. He was dead drunk. Miss Flowers tried to wake him up, but was unable.

"On the morning of the Coroner's investigation, Thursday after the murder, when the plant was shut down because we all were called to the investigation, I testified and went back to the factory. As I entered the metal department I heard a splashing in the cooling tank. There was Conley washing his shirt. When I entered he was very much startled and tried to hide the shirt by trying to drop it through a crack in the floor. It was a blue shirt and I saw no bloodstains, for he had evidently been washing it for some time as it was pretty clean.

"This is the first time in the year that Jim Conley worked here that he ever washed his clothes here.

"Now, I don't say Conley was degenerate enough to commit a crime so terrible when he was sober, but I am thoroughly convinced that he

T. R. HOTLY DENIES HE EVER WAS DRUNK

Shouts Denial That Bull Moose Party Is Paying Cost of His $10,000 Libel Suit.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 27.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt to-day took the stand in his suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore. Colonel Roosevelt denied emphatically that he ever drank intoxicating liquors to excess as charged in the editorial that resulted in his $10,000 libel suit.

He said he did not drink beer or whisky, except under the direction of a doctor, but admitted that he some times drank light wines.

He related briefly his career up to the time the editorial from The Iron Ore was brought to him as he lay in a hospital in Chicago, after having been wounded by a would-be assassin in Milwaukee.

Says Editorial Angered Him.

"I was very indignant," said the colonel, "when the editorial was shown me."

The former President mounted the stand after a stormy few minutes during which Attorney Pound, representing the plaintiff, was interrupted frequently by Attorney Belden while making his opening statement. Attorney Belden, Newett's counsel, declined to make his statement until after the testimony was taken.

Colonel Roosevelt took the stand at 9:30 o'clock this morning.

Replying to questions regarding his life and career, he said he was born in New York City, completed his studies at Harvard in 1880, was elected to the New York Legislature in 1881, appointed New York civil service commissioner in 1887, police commissioner of New York City in 1890, elected Lieutenant Governor in 1894, resigning in 1897 to become lieutenant colonel of the Rough Riders in the Spanish-American war, being promoted to colonel after the battle of Santiago.

Tells of War Service.

Strenuous objection was made by the defense to Roosevelt's replies regarding the number of times he was under fire in the Spanish-American war, but the court overruled them and the former President continued his story, declaring he was under fire many times, more particularly at San Juan Hill.

He told of his election as Governor of New York in 1898; as Vice President of the United States in 1900; his succession to the White House in 1901 when President McKinley was assassinated, and his election to the Presidency in 1904.

Colonel Roosevelt then testified as follows:

Q. What did you do on the expiration of your term in 1909?—A. I went to Africa as special curator for the Smithsonian Institution and spent several months there in research work. Returning home, I became connected with the "Outlook."

Q. Where were you in October, 1912?—A. What part of that month? Cite an incident to remind me.

Q. Have you ever seen this paper?—(The colonel was shown a copy of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.) A. Yes, in October, 1912.

Copy of Paper Admitted.

Q. Where were you?—A. In Mercy Hospital.

Q. What city? (Attorney Belden objected. The court overruled the objection and allowed an exception.) A. In Chicago.

Q. Why were you there?—A. I had been shot.

Q. In what city?—A. In Milwaukee.

(Attorney Pound here introduced a copy of the paper in evidence and it was admitted without objection.)

Q. How did you feel when you read the editorial, "The Roosevelt Way?"—A. I was very indignant.

At this point Attorney Pound read the editorial, stating that action was based on the following:

What Caused the Suit.

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 27.—When a Jacksonville-New Orleans train pulled into Milton, 20 miles east of here, last night a mob of 75 men met the train and demanded S. W. Green, of New Orleans, chancellor of the negro Knights of Pythias, who was occupying a Pullman drawing room. He was only saved by the interference of Sheriff Harvell and deputies, of Santa Rosa County.

Green bought a Pullman ticket from Jacksonville to New Orleans. Several mobs met the train along the route before it reached Milton, but did not find him. At Milton, Green, seeing the mob, attempted to escape.

Green is now in jail at Milton for safe keeping and charged with violating the "jim crow" law.

He barely escaped a mob at DeFuniak on May 18 while going from New Orleans to Jacksonville.

Flagler's Son Gets $5,000,000; Bulk of Big Estate to Widow

JOCKSONVILLE, FLA., May 27.—Henry M. Flagler's will was filed for probate at St. Augustine to-day. It disposes of an estate valued at $60,000,000. His son Harry, is given 5,000 shares of Standard Oil of New Jersey stock, valued at $5,000,000.

Colleges, churches and other organizations and a number of personal friends get bequests.

J. R. Parrott is to remain at the head of the Florida East Coast as long as he desires.

The greater part of the estate is left to the widow.

Noted Woodmen to Visit Atlanta Camps

Two Woodmen of national reputation from Omaha, Nebr., will arrive here at noon Tuesday. They are Joseph Cullen Root, sovereign commander, and John T. Yates, sovereign secretary of the Omaha order.

The local camps and Georgia head officials of the order will escort the visitors to the Piedmont Hotel. A reception at Cable Hall Tuesday night will be given by J. C. Root Camp No. 80, assisted by other camps in the city, and State officials of the order.

Sunday, June 1, is the annual Memorial Day of the Woodmen of the World.

SMITH HITS HOME RUN IN SECOND INNING

Crackers and Pelicans Clash in Second Game of Series at Ponce DeLeon Park.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, May 27.—Frank's Birds went in the game here this afternoon to seek revenge from the walloping they received at the hands of Billy Smith's Crackers yesterday.

In the second inning Wallie Smith, Atlanta's third sacker, opened up with a home run to deep center field and the Birds registered two in the fourth on Spencer's homer.

"That Dutchman" selected Swindell and Adams to do the battery work for New Orleans, while Bill Smith designated Chappelle and Dunn for Atlanta.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Hendryx grounded out to Agler. Atz singled to left. Clancy flied to Long. Breen hoisted to Welchonce. NO RUNS.

Long singled to right. Welchonce beat out a bunt to Snedecor. The Pelican first baseman fielded the ball and threw wild to Atz, who covered first, and Long went to third. Alperman grounded to Atz, who touched second, forcing Welchonce and doubled Alperman at first. Long should have scored on the play, but went to sleep at third instead. Bailey out, Atz to Snedecor. NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Spencer walked. Williams tried to bunt, but instead lined out to Chappelle and Spencer was doubled at first to Agler. Snedecor fanned. NO RUNS.

Wallie Smith opened for Atlanta with a clean home run to deep center field. Bisland grounded to Swindell and was out to Snedecor. Agler popped to Spencer. Dunn fanned. ONE RUN.

THIRD INNING.

Adams out, Smith to Agler. Swindell went out, Smith to Agler. Hendryx fanned. NO RUNS.

Chappelle out, Atz to Snedecor. Long slipped a single over Swindell's head. Welchonce singled to center and Long took second. Alperman popped to Clancy. Bailey grounded to Clancy and Welchonce was forced at second to Atz. NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Smith singled through Swindell. Bisland sacrificed, Swindell to Snedecor. On a wild pitch Smith took third. Agler walked. Dunn grounded to Atz and Agler was forced to Clancy. Smith scored on the out. Chappelle out, Clancy to Snedecor. ONE RUN.

FIFTH INNING.

Snedecor out, Bisland to Agler. Adams went out, Chappelle to Agler. Swindell out, Alperman to Agler. NO RUNS.

Long singled over Swindell's head. Welchonce singled to right and Long went to third. Alperman flied to Hendryx and Long was doubled at the plate to Adams. Welchonce stole second. Bailey walked. Smith flied to Hendryx. NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

Hendryx fanned. Atz popped to Agler, but Joe missed the ball and Atz was safe at first. Clancy fouled to Agler. Breen slammed a double to right and Atz tallied. Spencer hit one to Alperman too hot to handle, the ball hit Whitey in the head and Breen registered. Williams popped to Dunn. TWO RUNS.

Bisland flied to Hendryx. Agler walked. Dunn fanned. Agler stole second. Chappelle struck out. NO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

Snedecor hit a high fly, the ball falling safely between Chappelle and Agler. Adams sacrificed, Chappelle to Agler. Swindell singled to right and Snedecor took third. Hendryx singled to left and Snedecor scored. Atz walked. Clancy singled to center and Swindell and Hendryx tallied. On a passed ball Atz took third and Clancy scored. Breen fouled out to Dunn. Spencer fouled to Agler. THREE RUNS.

Long popped to Hendryx. Welchonce popped to Spencer. Rohe, batting for Alperman, flied to Hendryx. NO RUNS.

EIGHTH INNING.

Williams out, Smith to Agler. Snedecor out, Smith to Agler. Adams fanned. NO RUNS.

Bailey walked. Smith grounded to Swindell and Bailey was forced at second to Atz. Bisland flied to Hendryx. NO RUNS.

OFFERS BEAVERS LIST OF "OPEN HOUSES"

Attorney Carl Hutcheson, Felder's Aide, Also Accuses Police of Protecting Vice.

Ignoring the fresh volley of charges made by Carl Hutcheson, an attorney, who offers to cite resorts which are allowed to operate by the city police, Chief Beavers Tuesday morning reiterated his declaration that the entire matter would be laid bare before the Grand Jury for decision.

Detective Chief Lanford revealed another angle of the warfare when he declared that the fight being made against him was backed by the gambling ring of Atlanta. C. C. Jones was named as the leader of the opposition in this fight.

Beavers in commenting upon Hutcheson's charges, declared that they were inspired by Thomas B. Felder, with whose office Hutcheson is connected, and that the attack was not therefore that of Hutcheson, but of Felder and his "gang."

Hutcheson, a young lawyer connected with the firm Felder, Anderson, Whitman & Dillon, wrote an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers, charging him with permitting unlawful houses to operate on certain city streets and promising to give addresses if the Chief asks personally for them within three days.

Beavers to Ignore Attack.

Characterizing Carl Hutcheson as of too little importance to warrant an answer to his charges made against the police force, Chief Beavers declared that he would ignore him altogether.

"I don't care to answer Hutcheson's attack," said the police official. "Hutcheson is too small a fry to even take notice of. An answer to him would give him too much dignity. This young man is in Felder's office and is merely being used as a tool of Felder and his gang. Felder prompted him to make the statement that he did, and so I will pay no attention to Hutcheson.

Regarded as Reply.

On Monday morning Chief Beavers declared Attorney Thomas B. Felder had no evidence of police cognizance of immoral resorts; that he never had had any, and that he was only bluffing when he said he had. Requested to reply, Colonel Felder announced he would make no more statements except in writing, and that he had nothing to say then.

A few hours later Mr. Hutcheson, a member of Colonel Felder's firm, issued the letter, which is regarded as a semi-official reply from Colonel Felder.

Mr. Hutcheson formerly was a newspaper man. Shortly after taking up the practice of law he achieved State-wide renown by conducting the campaign of William Schley Howard, who defeated Representative Leonidas Livingston and is now serving his second term in Congress.

Following is Mr. Hutcheson's open letter to Chief J. L. Beavers:

Scores Vice Crusade.

J. L. Beavers, Chief of Police, Atlanta:

Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives, Atlanta:

In your great crusade against Sodom and Gomorrah with your immaculate robes of Puritanism,

I accuse you in all your glory with allowing certain houses on Ivy Street, the business of which is to barter in immoral and indecent practices, to continue in flagrant operation. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, every sensible citizen of this city, who knows anything of the world, does. If you do not know these things, it is your duty to know, and you should be discharged from your high pedestals for dereliction.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on certain parts of Spring Street, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate in a certain section of Pryor Street, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on a certain section of Central Avenue, AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of failing to take cognizance of a certain house in Ivy Street, to which I called your attention several weeks ago, where young men were inveigled to gamble away their money, the mistress thereof being the banker and the recipient of these ill-gotten gains. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you and numbers of your forces with being cognizant of these facts, and yet you, the great crusade leaders, stand idly by and fold your lordly hands.

I accuse you with allowing, even yet, low class hotels in this city to exist and practice their nefarious games of lowly gain, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

If you can not "turn up" these places, there are hundreds of people who can. I can use infantile detective work and turn up dozens of them within a few days, AND YOU KNOW THIS CAN BE DONE. And, if you fail to get busy and continue to parade your great genius (?) you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Charges Police Protection.

I accuse you with protecting these places because of your lax methods in keeping "the houses within our midst" closed, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of closing Manhattan Avenue and converting our entire municipality into a "red light" district, AND YOU KNOW IT, and unless you change conditions at once you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of retaining on your forces men unfit to protect the "decent" citizens of Atlanta, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of knowing where numbers of houses which exist by immoral practices are located, AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Do you think that the public will be hoodwinked forever? Do you think that the public is so gullible as to believe all of this "bush-wah" about the great work that you are continuing? Yes, you closed Manhattan Avenue, but what did you do for the remainder of the city?

You and your bunch are very sore because you were unable to ferret out the Phagan murder, AND YOU KNOW IT. When the Solicitor General called in outside aid, numbers of your hirelings were very much perturbed and became insanely jealous. That is why all of this patched-up and hatched-up bunch of lies and slanders have been issued against Thomas B. Felder, whose shoes you are unworthy to untie, AND YOU KNOW IT.

I accuse you of retaining a large number of leather-heads for detectives. Detectives? That is a joke, isn't it? AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for allowing such an army of incompetents to work with your departments. You know, and I know, that these fellows secure their offices through political pull and not through efficiency. They are Sherlock Holmeses when it comes to arresting blind tigers and negro crap-players, but beyond that they would not know a clew if they saw it tagged.

In the Phagan case, the newspaper men are the ones who turned up the first clews of any merit, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be ashamed of that crowd down there to allow the members of the Fourth Estate to put one over on you; but you know newspaper men have brains, and brains are required to make detectives.

Now, volle" orth again your promulgation of purity and tell the people of this great city what large men you are and how you protect the citizenry of this great Commonwealth.

If you haven't the addresses of the houses to which I refer, call at my office within three days and I will give you a bunch of them.

Friends of mine have advised me against printing this card. Some have feared for my life—but afraid of you and your crowd? Never. I am not afraid of anything that lays down its firearms and comes at me like a man in fair play. Now, "lay on, MacDuff, and damn'd be him who first cries, 'Hold! Enough!'"

CARL HUTCHESON.

Atlanta, Ga., May 27, 1913.

Gamblers' Plot, Declares Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford gave out a sensational statement Tuesday morning in which he charged that the efforts to fix accusations of bribery and malfeasance upon him were inspired by a "gambling ring," of which C. C. Jones was the head.

The cause of the fight against Lanford had been something of a mystery. Beavers readily explained the efforts to dispossess him from the office of Chief of Police by his war on vice in the city of Atlanta. Lanford's explanation reveals another angle of the crusade against a wide-open town.

"The gambling ring has been after me ever since I was made head of the detective department ten years ago," said Chief Lanford. "No more had I declared relentless warfare upon all forms of gambling in the city than I was notified that the gambling interests were out to 'get' me. Several times it was reported to me that I had been marked for an attack, and once the gamblers succeeded in carrying out their threats.

"That was five years ago. I was reduced from sergeant, which was the designation of the head of the department then, to service in the ranks. The gamblers were responsible for it. They gloated for nine months. Then I was raised to my former position again, with the title of chief. Since then I have continued my campaign against them.

"They have been very bitter. They have threatened me time and again. Now they have brought these charges against me."

Col. Felder Still Probing In the Phagan Case.

In the news columns of The Georgian yesterday it was said that Colonel Felder had been eliminated from the Phagan case. Colonel Felder says this is not true, that he is as deeply interested in solving the mystery as ever, and that he is lending every energy in that direction. The further statement in The Georgian that Colonel Felder was believed at one time to be interested in the defense of Frank was not intended to reflect in any way upon the lawyer. It was simply the gossip of the street, given for what it was worth. Colonel Felder's own statement that he is working solely for the public good makes his position perfectly clear, and everybody in the city will hope that he will continue actively in the case until the great mystery is disposed of.

Water Fashionable Beverage in London

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—Champagne now takes a back seat in London, and claret, moselle and whisky and soda are the drinks of the moment. But temperance is a current craze. Barley water in special "brews" may be found at the Carlton and Bachelors' Clubs.

A few smart men drink plain cold water, among others Sir Arthur Walsh and Lord Charles Beresford. The King has cider laid down in his cellar, and among cider drinkers are the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Leeds, Lord Knollys and Lord Mount Stephen. Beer is seldom seen at dinner or luncheon, but iced lager beer is popular at balls and late parties.

The Duty of the Grand Jury—Investigate All the Charges of Graft and Bribery!

The Georgian repeats its suggestion that the Grand Jury MUST TAKE UP AND INVESTIGATE THOROUGHLY the charges of graft and bribery that have been made in the newspapers during the past few days.

And the matter should not end with the Grand Jury. It should be taken into a court of law,

Colonel Thomas B. Felder has made some accusations that merit immediate attention.

If there is graft in the police department or bribery anywhere, the public has a right to know about it; and if Colonel Felder or anyone else can establish that, he will receive the thanks of the entire community, and there will be a speedy turning out of the guilty men.

The matter is too serious to begin and end in a newspaper war.

The good name of the city is involved. The good name of public servants is involved.

Trials in newspapers are never effective. They lead nowhere. The public is still unconvinced.

Trials by judges and juries are final and conclusive.

THE PUBLIC WANTS FACTS.

There is no reason to believe that the charges against Beavers are true. Even the bitterest enemies of Beavers admit his honesty. He has made a good record. He is entitled to have the charges against him examined by a judge and jury, so that all the facts may be known.

Whether Beavers' attitude is right in putting an end to the segregated district is not an issue. The law does not permit any choice in the matter. The law does not sanction a segregated district for the barter and sale of human beings and for the enrichment of a few ringsters.

It is not improbable that a little more liberality in some of the laws would be a good thing for the city and all concerned. But the way to get that liberality is to change the present statutes.

Beavers has no alternative but to enforce the law as he sees it, and he has no alternative but to compel those who accuse his department to go into court and try the case there instead of in the columns of the newspapers.

BURNS MAN QUITS CASE; DECLARES HE IS OPPOSED

C. W. Tobie, chief criminal investigator for the Burns Detective Agency, formally withdrew from the Phagan investigation Tuesday morning. The calling off of the Burns forces was announced by Dan P. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch, after Tobie had stated explicitly that he would not withdraw from the case.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who brought the Burns detectives into the Phagan case, would make no statement relative to their withdrawal, but announced that it did not mean the end of his investigation or connection with the case.

Tobie made up his mind last Friday to drop the Mary Phagan investigation—so he said Tuesday—but deferred action until Monday night, when he announced his intention to withdraw to Solicitor General Dorsey.

Disgusted With "Fuss."

Acute disgust at the "four or five cornered fuss" raised by the Phagan investigation was assigned by Tobie as the cause. This disgust was superinduced by the direct charge and general impression that the Burns Agency was pretending to ferret out the Phagan case, when in reality its purpose in Atlanta was to investigate the police department.

Tobie said to-day that while he had quit and was going to leave Atlanta, still the withdrawal of the Burns Agency need not be permanent.

"If certain features of this case are not developed, then there will be one, and maybe two, Burns men back here. I will send them here, but they will work in secret. There will be no more public investigation."

Tobie explained he believed Leo M. Frank was guilty of the Phagan murder and that the "certain features" meant additional clinching evidence not yet published that will make Frank's conviction certain.

"How can any house have harmony," said Tobie, "when the old man is fighting the old woman, and the old woman is fighting the children, and they are all fighting the hired girl? That's the shape this affair has gotten into, only worse.

"We came here to investigate this Phagan case, and for no other purpose. But the charge was made that in reality we were investigating the police department. The way things were shaped up the police could not help believing that charge to be true. Colonel Felder's attitude bore that out, so I decided last Friday to quit."

"Do you mean, then, that you were dissatisfied at Colonel Felder's attitude?" was asked.

"We were dissatisfied with that part of it, yes," was Tobie's reply.

Tobie Himself Through.

Tobie reiterated he ended the investigation himself. "I called myself off," he said. "Dan S. Lehon, our Southern superintendent, was close to Atlanta. It was as near for him to pass through here on his way back to New Orleans as it was for him to go any other way. I was in charge here, but, as you know, I do not belong to this territory. As a pure formality and a matter of courtesy, and because I knew he was coming here to visit his wife's relatives, I sent him a message inviting him to confer with me. When he got here I told him as a courtesy that I had decided to quit the case. He approved it. Had I told him I would continue, he would have approved that, too.

"This is the worst mix-up I ever saw anywhere, at any time. It's awful. Everybody is fighting everybody else, and I am through with this four or five cornered fracas, except that if more Burns men are sent here I shall send them here and they will report to me."

Bribery Charges Denied.

Rumored attempts to bribe witnesses were given strong denial in many circles, particularly by those whose names were connected by rumor with the alleged bribery attempts.

C. C. Sears, superintendent of the Atlanta branch of the Burns detective agency communicated to Chief of Detectives Lanford the announcement of the withdrawal of the Burns forces from the Phagan case.

Chief Lanford authorized the following statement on the departure of Tobie:

"Tobie, I believe, is straight and honest. He was victimized by Felder. I am convinced Mr. Tobie was working toward the interest of those seeking to clear the mystery."

Praises Superintendent.

A girl employee of the pencil factory has written the following statement, which upholds the working conditions of the factory and champions the character of the imprisoned superintendent:

"Nothing has ever been said of the girls of the pencil factory until after the terrible murder, but since then there has been one continuous talk, just as if we were to blame. We are just as anxious to see the guilty punished as the rest of the public, and we all loved Mary Phagan just as much as we possibly could.

"If the public only would interest itself to look into other factories and stores they would find the girls in the pencil factory are just as good as any other working girls.

"It looks mighty hard that we have to work in the place where our little friend was so horribly murdered. But we are only poor working girls, trying to make an honest living, and we try not to think of the tragedy any more than possible; and we have the interest of the factory too much at heart to desert in times of trouble.

"We all hope and pray the guilty will be punished and the innocent given freedom, for we all think our superintendent has a soul himself and that he would not think of such a thing, much less commit such a horrible crime."

ORLANDO, FLA., May 27.—That bichloride of mercury is not always fatal was demonstrated here when S. Walters Howe, cashier of the State National Bank, swallowed a tablet, mistaking it for a headache dose.

As the tablet passed down his throat it contracted the muscles so violently that he discovered his mistake and hurried to the city physician, who at once used the stomach pump and gave antidotes. Howe has experienced no harm.

U. S. IS HOME OF SQUANDERERS, SAYS BANKER

DETROIT, May 27.—Joseph T. Talbert, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, in an address delivered before the Bankers' Club here, declared everything has been dear except credit, and, as a result, "our expanded loans and deposits constitute the weak spots in our domestic and business situation."

Mr. Talbert gave statistics showing the gross loans and investments of all the banks in the United States since 1907 has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, while the total increase in the gold stock of the United States since 1907 aggregated $506,000,000.

"This condition," said Mr. Talbert, "although perhaps not so strong as it should be to justify and properly sustain our increased loans, still is assuring and shows that there is no substantial ground for alarm."

Delight to Squander.

Mr. Talbert caused quite a stir when he said that "evidence tends to show that individually and collectively we are a nation of spendthrifts.

"It is our habit and delight to squander, and no amount of preaching will have any effect upon our prodigality as a national trait."

Mr. Talbert, in leading up to an explanation of the drain on New York's gold supply by Europe, said the lending power of German banks had been strained to the limit; that Germany borrowed money here and sought to draw gold from us.

In calling attention to the persistent hoarding of gold by the French, he said the French, not content with the mere hoarding of their own gold, at heavy losses of exchange, forced from us, either for their own account or for that of South America, upward of $56,000,000 of gold.

"The movement is going on and may continue indefinitely.

"For lack of protection for our gold stock we have been obliged to sit helplessly and to submit to the forced exportation of gold, to our disadvantage and discomfort.

"This gold movement taking place at such a time and under such conditions demonstrated the fact that often has been stated before—that New York is the only free market in the world for gold."

Need Outside Money.

Mr. Talbert said an enormous amount of railroad financing must be done during the next year or two, and nearly all of it will be done at home with difficulty and in all probability at a higher level of interest rates than we have been accustomed to in such undertakings in recent years.

Mr. Talbert uttered "a word of caution against the practice which has been all too common among merchants and manufacturers, of financing themselves too largely through note brokers."

In concluding, the banker said it should be remembered that we are neither in nor approaching a period of speculation, and that credit is in no danger whatever from that source now, nor will it be in the near future. He added that courage should be taken from the fact that thus far the promises of another year of bountiful crops are exceedingly bright.

CURED TERRIBLE HUMOR ON FACE

Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1912.—"In December, 1908, my face became sore. I tried everything that was recommended, and my face got worse instead of better. I spent over $100 and got no benefit. The face and nose were very red and the eruption had the appearance of small boils, which itched me terribly. I can not tell you how terrible my face looked—all I can say is, it was dreadful, and I suffered beyond description.

"I have not gone on the street any time since 1908 without a veil, until now. Just four months ago a friend persuaded me to give Resinol a trial. I have used three cakes of Resinol Soap and less than a jar of Resinol Ointment, and my face is perfectly free from any eruption, and my skin is as clear and clean as any child's. It is about four weeks since the last pimple disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. M. J. Bateman, 4256 Viola St.

Practically every druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00) and Resinol Soap (25c), but if you are suffering from itching, burning skin troubles, pimples, blackheads, dandruff, ulcers, boils, stubborn sores, or piles, it will cost you nothing to try these soothing, healing preparations. Wylie Smith Says He Will Be Cleared

Released from a prison cell Monday afternoon on $3,000 bond, J. Wylie Smith, former president of the Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who recently was brought back from Mexico after eluding officers of the law for two years and seeing service on the battlefield with Diaz and Madero, expects to devote his entire time to recovering his health.

No date has been set for the trial of Smith on the charge of forgery. Smith declares that papers found since his return to Atlanta will prove his innocence.

BULGARIA READY TO BEGIN WAR ON SERVIA

Latter Country Warned Not to Annex the Turkish Territory It Now Occupies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—Bulgaria will declare war against Servia if the latter country annexes all the Turkish territory it has occupied since the outbreak of the Balkan war.

This was the message received here to-day from Sofia, and it contained the additional information that Bulgaria is ready to begin hostilities at once.

Servia holds most of the strategic points in Central Albania and Macedonia. Czar Nicholas has informed the Bulgarian Government through M. Sazonoff, the Foreign Minister, that he will not act as arbitrator between Bulgaria and Servia.

Turks Plan to Resume War On Quarreling Allies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 27.—The possibility that Turkey, taking advantage of the dissension among the Balkan allies, may resume the war against the states in the Balkan league is looming up.

It was learned here to-day that the Porte has ordered $4,000,000 worth of fresh arms and ammunition, and that Enver Bey, chief of staff of the Turkish army, is attempting to re-form the various divisions of the Ottoman army.

Although peace negotiations have not been commenced by the plenipotentiaries in London, it is deemed unlikely that Europe would allow a resumption of the war.

of the South so bitterly hated. It was a notable illustration that this is again a united country and sectional lines are fast being obliterated.

A half-hour later a short business session was held by the Sons of Confederate Veterans, after which came the formal opening of the reunion by the veterans.

This afternoon business sessions will be held by the Veterans, Sons of Veterans and Confederate Memorial Association.

To-night the big social functions that will mark the reunion will begin.

Business sessions were held this afternoon by the veterans, Sons of Veterans and the memorial associations.

Social Affairs Begin.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the army of official sponsors and maids of honor will parade the downtown streets in automobiles provided by the entertainment committee and their escorts.

At 7 o'clock a garden party will be tendered the sponsors and maids at Warner Park.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy will entertain the veterans with a reception at the Bennett Young Pavilion to-night.

A business session of the Sons will take place at 8 o'clock at the Auditorium.

Preparations for the unveiling of the Alabama monument to-morrow morning are being made to-day. A large delegation has arrived from Alabama on a special train. The unveiling will take place at 10:30 o'clock. The Florida monument will be unveiled an hour earlier.

Young for Re-election.

General Bennett H. Young, commander-in-chief, will probably be re-elected by the veterans, though there is some talk of opposing candidates. He is serving his first year, having been elected at the Macon reunion last year.

Active campaigns have been launched by Jacksonville, Fla., and Tulsa, Okla., for next year's gathering. Other cities mentioned for this honor are Nashville, Richmond, Baltimore, San Antonio and Denver. Nashville and Richmond have entertained the veterans in the past. None of the other cities mentioned has had a reunion.

Camp A. P. Stewart, in Jackson Park, where tents and commissaries have been established for those veterans unable to pay for hotel accommodations, is to-day sheltering its quota of old soldiers and presents a warlike appearance. Last night, after the day's arrivals had been assigned to quarters, unpacked their luggage and had supper, they gathered around their camp fires and retold stories of the war and particularly of the campaigns around Chattanooga and Chickamauga.

publican Governor would be attempted, but it failed to materialize.

General Young a Speaker.

General Bennett H. Young, commander in chief, followed Governor Hooper with his annual address, the chief feature of which was his tribute to Southern womanhood.

Veterans, sponsors, maids and visitors are exercised to-day over whether women shall ride astride in the reunion parades. General J. P. Hickman's order that only side saddles for women shall be permitted has caused the stir, and this promises to become an issue overshadowing the real business of the convention of veterans.

General Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division, is grand marshal of the veterans' parade. Although he issued his order last week that women should not ride astride, it was not until the visitors had begun to gather yesterday and to-day that real opposition to it became pronounced.

This opposition comes largely from sponsors and maids who had planned to don divided skirts or riding trousers and sit on their steeds like men, and Sons of Veterans chosen as their escorts.

Order Will Stand.

But for every opposing voice there is one commending General Hickman's decree, the approval coming from veterans and their wives and some of the younger generation who do not approve of the present-day style. To-day the indications are that General Hickman's order will stand and that in the veterans' parade at least side saddles alone will be permitted on women's mounts.

The first of the reunion parades took place this morning at 9 o'clock when the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, on the edge of the Chickamauga battlefield national park, marched through the downtown streets of Chattanooga in full dress uniform and equipment.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 27. For the first time in the more than twenty years of the organization, the United Confederate Veterans were welcomed at their annual reunion by a Republican Governor to-day when Ben W. Hooper officially extended the hospitality of Tennessee to the old soldiers and the thousands of other visitors assembled here.

The reunion formally opened at 10 o'clock with exercises at the reunion auditorium. Meetings of affiliated bodies yesterday were only preliminary to the assembling of the veterans.

W. E. Brock, general chairman of the Chattanooga reunion committees, called the assemblage to order and delivered the gavel to General John P. Hickman, of Nashville, commander of the Tennessee division. Dr. J. W. Bachman, of Chattanooga, chaplain general of the U. C. V., pronounced the opening invocation and then Governor Hooper delivered his address. It was rumored that a hostile demonstration against the Republican Governor would be attempted, but it failed to materialize.

Policeman Knocked Out by Thunderbolt

Policeman J. J. Clack was shocked into unconsciousness by a bolt of lightning that struck somewhere in the vicinity of Peachtree and Houston Streets, punctuating the downpour of rain early Tuesday morning.

The policeman at the time of the thunder clap was reporting to headquarters from the police box on that corner.

Clack was revived in a nearby drug store and taken to his home.

Ask Wilson to Force Clerks to Pay Debts

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Protesting against the number of government employees who fail to pay their debts, the Retail Merchants' Association will send a letter to President Wilson asking that the matter be laid before the several members of the Cabinet, with the request that some action be taken in each of the ten departments.

'Naked Truth' Too Naked for St. Louis

NEW YORK, May 27.—When Professor William Wendschneider, the famous German sculptor, arrived today from England and learned that his statue, "The Naked Truth," designed for the Praetorius-Schurz-Daenzer Memorial Committee of St. Louis, Mo., had been rejected, because it was too daring, he emitted a wail of protest.

"The professor caught the first train going West, determined to change the opinions about "The Naked Truth."

GIRLS BURN BOOKS AT AGNES SCOTT

Seniors End College Year With Torchlight Parade and Big Bonfire on Campus.

With stars twinkling and torchlights glimmering, the seniors of Agnes Scott made a bonfire of their books on the campus. Aided in the torch-bearing by sophomores and surrounded by several hundred alumnae and friends, they went through the ceremony with all of the gayety that only a crowd of college maids could display.

Burning of the books followed a torchlight parade on the campus. As the torch-bearers tripped over the beautiful lawn, their class songs and cheers drew a hearty response from the crowd.

A glee club concert opened with the cantata, "Death of Joan of Arc," led by Miss Almedia Sadler and Miss Isabel Norwood.

"The Last Rose of Summer" and "A Serenade," by Miss Rosa Hill; "Mammy's Little Honey" and "My Lady Clo," by Miss Sadler; "Love's Dilemma," by Miss Norwood, and a rendition of "Annie Laurie," by Misses Jean Ashcraft, Isabel Norwood, Pauline Bruner and Rosa Hill, were features.

Tuesday night the two literary societies will cross swords in a debate on the question: "Resolved, That the Panama Canal should be free."

Girl of 4 Is Second Cousin to Herself

MINNEAPOLIS, May 27.—Mrs. Jennie Golden, who when thirteen years old was married to her half nephew, then twenty years old, has filed suit to have the marriage annulled, so the relationship of their four-year-old daughter, Margaret, may be straightened out and the girl not be compelled to go through life as second cousin to herself.

Christian Golden, the husband, wants the marriage annulled, too.

Kahn Urges Plan to Strengthen Army

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An army reserve created by one-year enlistments is advocated by Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, who declared to-day he believed Japan's pugnacious attitude was due to the knowledge that few American men have even the rudiments of military training.

Kahn advocates an enlistment of one year of active service and three years in the reserve.

Negro Leaders in Annual Conference

Dr. W. E. B. DuBose, of New York, former head of the sociological department of Atlanta University and founder of an annual conference for the study of negro problems, was the central figure at the eighteenth session at the University Monday.

Drills and songs were given by 150 negro children from the free negro kindergartens of Atlanta. The principal address was by Dr. DuBose on the need of education and play to conserve the moral forces of the negroes.

GIVES UP HUSBAND FOR UPLIFT WORK

Mrs. Sarah MacD. Sheridan, Former Georgian, Tells Why She Didn't Fight Divorce.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Mrs. Sarah MacDonald Sheridan, former Georgian and daughter of one of the leading men of the Southern States at the time of the Civil War, told to-day why she permitted her husband to obtain a divorce in Reno without contest.

Her husband, Charles Oscar Sheridan, went to Nevada four years ago for his health. She refused to join him there. He obtained a decree for absolute divorce last Saturday.

She said to-day she regarded it as her great duty to continue her sociological work, in which she had been engaged for 30 years. Mrs. Sheridan is the founder of the "New National Fireside" movement for the opening of public schools after hours as neighborhood social centers, and declared she believed her work along these lines of greater importance than the maintenance of her domestic relations.

"I have lived to see my son, Mark Sheridan, in the old family home in Atlanta, become one of the most promising young mural painters of the day," she said, "and my daughter happily married to the younger son of one of England's noblest families. This accomplished, I feel that my family life has been full."

Mrs. Sheridan is an intimate friend of President Wilson and his family and is a musician of ability as well as a sociologist. From her youth Mrs. Sheridan devoted her talents to the improvement of social conditions in her own State. The Martha Berry Industrial School was established mainly through her efforts.

BRYAN GETS INTO TRAP IN ROW WITH JAPAN

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Students of statecraft declare that the Wilson administration has needlessly, not to saw stupidly, walked into a trap in the controversy with Japan over the California alien land law.

In its reply to Great Britain's Panama Canal tolls protest, this Government laid down the principle that until an overt act had been committed against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, Great Britain would have no standing in court; in other words, that Great Britain's grievance would become a matter for diplomatic adjustment only after an American ship had actually passed through the canal free. This statement cleared the atmosphere and left Great Britain no reasonable grounds for continuing the debate.

The same principle applies in the controversy with Japan.

The obvious reply of Secretary of State Bryan to the first Japanese protest, in view of the attitude assumed toward Great Britain, was to state that the treaty with Japan had not been violated, and, therefore, there was no matter for contention between the two governments until after some Japanese subject in California had been aggrieved by the operation of some California law.

But instead of adopting this logical course, it was pointed out here to-day the Wilson administration floundered about in the diplomatic puddle, and, denying that the treaty of 1911 had been violated, invited further negotiations, thus giving the Japanese Ambassador an excellent opportunity to quote the State Department against itself, where the very same principle is involved.

As the matter is now, instead of making a firm stand on precedent and silencing the Japanese protest as the British protest was silenced, the Wilson administration has promoted bickering between the two nations, Japan and the United States, and is in the ridiculous position of holding two diametrically opposite policies in relation to identically the same problem. If the American position is right in regard to the Panama Canal protest, it is wrong in regard to the Japanese protest, and vice versa.

It is the expectation here that Japan will take instant advantage of the inconsistency and incongruity of the position of the United States.

Lawson and Friends in Real Panther Hunt

SCITUATE, MASS., May 27.—Thomas W. Lawson has taken a hand in the hunt for a panther which has invaded Scituate, and has been seen by a score of persons.

It is possible Mr. Lawson and a party of his friends will stalk the beast themselves. They want to add the beast to the menagerie at "Dreamwold."

ODDITIES —in the— DAY'S NEWS

BORE GRUDGE TO GRAVE—Most of the will of Terance J. Larkin, just filed in New York, is devoted to disinheriting his daughter, Mrs. Agnes G. Bedford, of Middletown, N. Y., to whom he left only $5.

GIRE'S STROLL WORTH $5,000.—Miss Ethel Terry, of Smyville, N. Y., found a huge piece of ambergris, valued at $5,000, while walking along the beach here.

SETS VISITING SPEED RECORD.—Forty-five calls in ninety minutes is the visiting record established in Washington by Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice President.

HORSES FIGHT DUEL.—Two horses fought a duel in a vacant lot at Harrison, N. J., while several hundred persons watched the fight. One of the animals finally dropped with a broken leg. A bullet ended its suffering and the other horse is under the care of a veterinary.

'HOPPER' INVASION REPORTED.—A column of grasshoppers, five miles wide and eighteen miles long, is coming from northern Mexico, according to reports to Amarillo, Tex. Government, State and railroad experts have combined to fight the insects with poison.

BIRDS BATTLE WORKMEN.—An army of sparrows fought riggers who destroyed their nests while dismantling the spire of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, at Chester, Pa. The steeple began to topple and was condemned.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! And Again, Wuxtry!

"Talk about nature faking," exclaimed the hotel clerk, "just listen to this from a paper published out West. The items were sent in by the correspondent at Azusa, wherever that is."

And then he read the following:

"James Snyder, of this town, brought home four baby squirrels the other day and the family cat has adopted them and nurses them with her kittens.

"Then John Davis and Sherman Ward caught eight young foxes and their family cats have adopted them.

"Fred Bierer owns a calf that has but one foreleg, but runs just as well as any calf with its complete quota of legs.

"Ardell Smith, 16 years old, was knocked down and run over by a hog. The doctors called in say his left knee will be stiff for the rest of his life as a result of the accident.

"J. L. Brown's old hen has every day for the past three weeks laid an egg three inches long.

"Since the 'clean up' here there hasn't been much refuse in the streets and the birds got to eating tobacco crumbs and acquired the tobacco habit. Now they refuse grain and live on cigar and cigarette stubs."

Sure, Let 'Em Pay For the Luxuries.

Atlanta barbers have been discussing the edict that came from Trenton, N. J., the other day raising the price of trimming a Van Dyke beard from two bits to 35 cents.

"They're right," said the head barber, as he deftly deposited a comb behind his left ear and began running his fingers through his customer's hair.

"Never saw a guy who insisted on wearing a bunch of spinach like that who wasn't harder to please than your wife with her new summer hat. And a guy who will insist on having his mustache curled—well, some men is queer. Soak 'em, says I, soak 'em, and soak 'em good and plenty."

And the customer went out warbling:

What! The kibosh on the Van Dyke,
And an extra charge to boot
When the barber does your mustache
With a curl so cute and sweet,
sweet and cute?

But we've something to be thankful for,
Downtrodden men, by heck!
The barbers haven't raised the price
For a shave
Upon
the
neck!

Preacher Sentenced To Gallows Appeals

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 27.—Rev. Marion Capps, a former Methodist preacher, has filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court from a sentence of death imposed upon him by a Sebastian County jury. He was convicted of burning to death three of his children. Evidence at the trial was that the children were tied in bed, which was saturated with oil, and the house fired.

Capps was convicted on the testimony of two elder children, who escaped, but who, it is alleged, have since declared they swore falsely against their father.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY ACCUSES NEGRO CONLEY

strangled Mary Phagan when about half drunk.

"I'll go further and say that the last three months that Conley was here I was suspicious of him and tried to watch him as closely as possible, for I placed no dependence in him. He became indifferent about his work and shiftless."

Mrs. White Denies Identification.

Mrs. J. Arthur White, of 59 Bonnie Brae Avenue, made positive denial to the Solicitor General's office Tuesday that she ever had made any identification of James Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, as published in an afternoon paper.

"I can not understand why such a story should have been manufactured and published," she said to a reporter. "I was just called by the Solicitor General to confirm it, and told him, as I had told him before, that I never had identified the negro.

"I saw a negro sitting on a box on the first floor of the factory as I left there about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the murder. I did not get a good look at his face. I got just a general impression of his clothes and of his size.

"At the police station ten negroes were brought before me. I picked out one with a green derby and said that he looked considerably like the man I had seen. They told me to look again, and I picked out another man that I thought looked a little more like the negro I had seen, but I never made any positive identification; and I told the detectives, in the first place, that I would not be able to. They never told me the names of the men I had picked out, so I don't know whether one of them was Conley or not."

The detectives never have placed much weight on the identification of Mrs. White, as she said that she could not be positive. Added to this is the fact that she saw a negro loitering around the factory at 1 o'clock, which, it is thought, he would have been very unlikely to do had he had anything to do with the disappearance of Mary Phagan, who was in the factory a few minutes after 12 o'clock.

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as conclusive as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual eyewitnesses of the crime, this question naturally is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the mystery, and that means practically every person in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the close-lipped and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even at this early date, when only the vaguest of hints have been given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion, it is patent that there are many openings offered the defense for attacks upon the theories of the State.

Burden of Proof on State.

Those who are close to the daily developments in Atlanta's baffling murder mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered are bearing in mind that, in the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution and not upon the defense.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law has hedged everyone under suspicion of crime, that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime or establish his connection beyond a reasonable doubt.

Until the State is able to do this, Luther Z. Rosser may rest on his oars if he so desires. Leo Frank is innocent this moment in the eyes of the law. His innocence does not need to be proved. It is presumed.

It immediately becomes a question, therefore, as to whether the State really has made out a case against Frank, so far as can be judged from the evidence in the hands of the public. Have the detectives by any of their discoveries connected Frank directly with the crime? Have they assembled such a chain of circumstantial incidents as to make his guilt appear certain beyond a reasonable doubt?

Frank's Friends Deny Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank answer both questions emphatically in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence seriously.

The law will not permit Frank's conviction for the crime merely because the detectives have discovered that he had the opportunity. It will not permit his conviction, if no convincing evidence is found against him, merely because he is unable to put his hands on another man and say, "This is the man you want. He is the guilty person."

It is not the intention of the law to hang one man simply because no one else can be found who is the more likely culprit.

After the State has presented its reasons for believing in the guilt of Frank, it is regarded as likely that the defense will claim first of all that the State has failed to establish Frank's connection with the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The defense will represent that the most the State has done is to establish that he had the opportunity to commit the murder.

Frank never was seen with the girl, either on the day of the strangling or before. It is not known that he ever spoke to her except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed. None of Frank's clothing has been found with blood stains upon it. No finger prints upon the girl's body or her clothes were identified as his. None of his personal belonging were found near the girl's body. Absolutely nothing was discovered in the search of the detectives that fastened the crime on him.

Own Admission Caused Arrest.

The police possibly would never even have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission. He told the officers the moment he identified the body that that was the girl he paid at noon the day before. No one else knew that Mary Phagan was in the building at that time, so far as the evidence reveals. Frank did not have to tell if he had desired to conceal the fact.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission, given freely and voluntarily, be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time? Is a guilty man likely to tell the officers as soon as he is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission?"

If the State attempts to show that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as one of the theories contends, the defense will be able to argue that there were several other people in the factory at the time, this fact opening the way to the argument that if the crime was committed at this time it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely to attack the girl when he knew there were other persons in the factory at the time who might discover him.

May Prove an Alibi.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed in the evening, as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Fomby indicate may be done, the defense will be able to establish a very strong alibi for the suspected man from the testimony of seven persons who are said to have been at Frank's house Saturday evening playing a game of cards.

Several of them already have testified before the Coroner's jury, and all of them are said to be willing to give their testimony in court to the effect that they saw Frank come home that evening about the time he said in his statement to the Coroner's jury, and that he remained home the remainder of the evening, to the best of their knowledge.

This will bring it to an issue of veracity between Mrs. Mima Fomby and these seven persons, who are persons of reputation and standing in the community, if, indeed, the testimony of Mrs. Fomby is allowed admission, which appears very doubtful.

Mrs. Fomby swore in her affidavit that Frank called her on the telephone several times between 6:30 and 10:30 o'clock the Saturday night of the murder, asking her for permission to bring a girl to her place. She testified that she denied his request. It is between these hours that Frank has a very well established alibi from all appearances.

Another Motive Possible.

The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body either immediately after the crime or at the times the body was exhumed.

Added to this fact is the unexplained circumstance that the girl's purse never has been found. It contained only the wages she had drawn that day, to be sure, but even this small amount might prove an incentive to some persons, the defense very likely will argue. And it is not at all certain that the robber, if robbery was the motive, had any idea that the amount he would obtain would be so small.

"Is it probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when it could not have incriminated in any way any particular persons had it been lying near her body?" is a question that can be put to the jurors in this connection.

The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the Coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack the identification of Frank made by Officer House, of Druid Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer.

They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probabilities of a man of Frank's standing permitting himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the officer and saying, "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his identity secret. Probabilities are bound to play a large part in the trial, declare those interested in the mystery, for it is very much on a sequence of probabilities that the police are basing their expectations of convicting Frank.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the park guard discovered in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will still be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons.

The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negro, James Conley, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with his statement that he wrote notes at the dictation of Frank the day before the murder.

Sentell May Yet Be Witness.

Laying aside the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one had even suggested up to the time of the negro's alleged confession, the friends of Frank, and those who are without personal interest as well, scouted the idea that Frank, who is an intelligent and shrewd man, would take an ignorant negro into his confidence and do everything but tell him that he was going to commit a murder on the next day.

It is rumored that E. L. Sentell may yet figure in the case again. Sentell is the man who declared positively before the Coroner's jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sentell knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he met her on the street in company with some man and that he said, "Hello, Mary," and that she replied, "Hello, Ed."

This testimony would appear quite conclusive were it not for the statements of the physicians that the girl must have been dead at least six hours when found. It is known, however, that some confidence is still being placed in his statements.

STYLES DEMAND RAPID CHANGE BY DANDIES

Paris Men of Fashion Are Forced to Jump From One Pair of Trousers to Another.

PARIS, May 27.—The dandies of Paris have daily been rehearsing of late on quick-change dress in order to be able to slip from one suit into another with lightning speed so as to waste the minimum of time in this way during the height of the season.

The decrees of masculine fashion, which in recent years have become as inexorable as the requirements of feminine modes, are unusually Draconian this year. Even in the hottest weather it will not be permissible to appear in the streets wearing white flannels after 11 o'clock in the morning.

After lounging at his ease for an hour or so the well-dressed man must rush home and jump into a pair of neatly checked trousers. This garment which, as in the case of all the other trousers, the valet must iron out with sharply defined creases every morning, hangs broadest and loosest from the waist. With this may go a tobacco-colored business coat with narrow lapels, and a silk hat.

For the Afternoon Call.

This suit does for a stroll in the Bois, but after luncheon the dandy with calls to pay makes a second quick change. This time he dons a pair of well-creased chimney-pot trousers with faint stripes, and a cutaway coat, skin-tight. The latter must have a long tail, closely following the shape of the figure and bulging nowhere.

In the hottest weather the waistcoat may be dispensed with on the sole condition that the coat be unbuttoned and a white slip be worn sewed into the inner side of the lapel to give the similitude of a waistcoat.

If one is going to the races white flannel trousers may be worn with this coat, but not if attending receptions.

Both morning and afternoon coats are built up so as to give the man the appearance of being deep-chested and broad-shouldered, so tailors are now laying in a liberal supply of padding material.

Snuff-Colored Evening Dress.

The evening style runs in the direction of broad trousers. Again the striking feature, however, is the coat, which is a transparent imitation of the women's "jupe fourreau." The back and the tail, which fall below the knees, cling tightly to the body, and must fall in graceful curves not only behind but also in front. Black cloth is the evening wear, although colors are permitted this year, the choice mostly going to snuff-colored evening dress.

Terra-cotta colored handkerchiefs are also a feature of men's spring fashions.

Paris tailors have entered a campaign against London's supremacy in the matter of men's wear, and this year's fashions are designed with the object of persuading Americans to fit themselves out in Paris instead of in the British capital.

Morgan Firm Denies Attack on President

WASHINGTON, May 27.—A prompt repudiation of the anti-administration interview attributed to Henry P. Davison, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in Paris, has been received at the State Department.

This interview, attacking both President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, was cabled to a New York newspaper some days ago and was alleged to represent the ultimatum of Wall Street to the United States Government.

Cripple Run Down By Cyclist Is Dying

MACON, GA., May 27.—Edward Green, a cripple of Monticello, Ga., who was struck by a motorcycle yesterday afternoon as he was being wheeled across Mulberry street, is expected to die.

W. J. Radcliff, of Atlanta, was trying out a new motorcycle, preparatory to starting on a ride to Norfolk, Va., when the collision took place. He is under arrest.

You Can Make Pure Lager

BEER

In Your Own Home—with

Johann Hofmeister Genuine Lager Beer Extract

You can now brew your own beer—best you ever tasted—easily, cheaply, right in your own home. With Johann Hofmeister Beer Extract anyone can make the same high quality lager beer that has been made in Germany for ages—in the same honest, old-fashioned way. Beer that's so tasty, wholesome, satisfying, every member of the family will surely be delighted with it. Better beer than you can buy in saloons or in bottles anywhere. And it will cost less than 3 cents a quart—a little over a half cent a glass!

Real Malt and Hop Beer at 11 Cents a Gallon Remember, it's not near-beer—not imitation beer—but real German style lager beer, made of select Barley Malt and the best Hops. Beer of fine, natural color—topped with a rich, creamy foam. Beer with snap and sparkle—clear and pure as can be—with life and health in every drop. And the taste—oh, delicious!

Johann Hofmeister Lager Beer Extract is guaranteed under the U. S. Food and Drugs Act, Serial No. 36,217. No license needed anywhere to make your own beer with this pure extract. Get a can of it to-day, follow the simple instructions—then you'll know why brewery beer can never be sold where this beer has been introduced.

50c can makes 3 gallons of beer.
75c can makes 7 gallons of beer.

Sold by all Druggists, or sent direct, prepaid, upon receipt of price. (Give state.) Johann Hofmeister, 168 Hofmeister Bldg., Chicago, Ill.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

GOOD BILL AT FORSYTH.

Old favorites and new join in the bill at the Forsyth this week—and an unusually good bill it is, too. Every act is a topnotcher of its kind and there's variety enough for every one.

Maggie Cline, by struggling along some way, it seems, has been able to miss Atlanta for nineteen years. But she's here this week, and although the younger generation is not on right close speaking terms with her at first she soon warms the house and gets one of her "regular" old-time receptions. She sings the good old Irish stuff in the way that made her famous many years ago, and for good measure gives her greatest hit of the olden days, "Throw 'Im Down, McCloskey," which brings down the upper part of the house as of yore.

Among the other splendid numbers on the bill are Ethel Kirk and Billy Fogarty, who have a high-class song and patter act; Carl Rosine, a magician who doesn't bore you as you think he is going to; the great Howard, a ventriloquist, who has an entirely new line of stuff and puts it over in a novel way; Cesare Nesi, a splendid singer who warbles under the title of "Young Caruso," and does not libel the great and only tenor to any extent; Madden and Fitzpatrick, in a clever sketch in which Madden does some original piano playing, and the Equilli brothers, equilibrists who really are different. Of course, there are the motion pictures.

"ST. ELMO" SATISFACTORY.

Miss Billy Long and her company began a week's engagement Monday at the Atlanta in "St. Elmo," presenting the old Southern book play as acceptably as it can be played.

The play is a selection from six offered the patrons of the Atlanta, and the strength of the company lent itself admirably to the play.

Mr. Vail as St. Elmo Murray, the cynic, played the part forcibly and sympathetically. Miss Long's part, Edna Earl, was almost negligible, but was well handled.

"St. Elmo" will be seen nightly and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"THE RESURRECTION" AT GRAND

Blanche Walsh, one of the few American actresses who deserves the name of tragedienne, will be seen in Atlanta this week in her most famous role, that of Katusha in Tolstoy's wonderful drama, "The Resurrection."

It is a picture play which brings Blanche Walsh and the Russian play to the Grand this week, and the photo-drama will begin Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and continue until 10:30 o'clock that evening, with repetitions on Friday and Saturday. The prices will range from 10 to 25 cents.

White City Park Now Open

Carolina Desperado Slain Near Sylvania

AUGUSTA, GA., May 27.—Richard Henry Austin, murderer of three white men at Allendale, S. C., several weeks ago, was killed Monday night near Sylvania. The negro was trying to cross an open space to get to a swamp when he was fired upon by a score of men.

Austin had only two shells left and they were loaded with buckshot. They were identified as shells taken from Magistrate Edenfield, when Austin killed him in Hampton County.

Minister Nabs 'Tiger' Then Rides With Him

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—After he had arrested Bert Snyder, driver for a wholesale liquor company, on a charge of violating the prohibition law, the Rev. J. M. Dunlavy, welfare officer of Kansas City, Kan., climbed into Snyder's wagon and accompanied him as he delivered beer to his various customers.

The minister remained with the driver until he made his legal deliveries and then took him to the police station, where the man was released on bond.

CRAWLS THROUGH LONG PIPE.

COLUMBUS, IND., May 27.—Thomas Hardin crawled through 630 feet of 20-inch water pipe, leading from the water works to the new filter building seeking obstructions in the main. When he emerged the skin was worn from each of his elbows.

Veterans Present Hat to Capt. Cook

As spokesman for the W. H. T. Walker Camp 925, United Confederate Veterans, Comrade J. H. Shellnut, a one-legged veteran, presented Captain J. H. Cook with a military-shaped black alpine hat.

The presentation took place just before the camp formed in line to march to the railway station to board the Chattanooga train. Accepting the gift in a few words, Captain Cook ordered the camp to fall in, and the veterans marched to the station to entrain for the scenes of their combat of 50 years ago.

Inquiry of Wilson's Lobby Charge Asked

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An investigation by a special committee of five members of the House into the so-called tariff lobby which President Wilson charges is doing its best to defeat the Underwood bill was proposed in a resolution introduced in the House to-day.

Representative Tavenner, of Illinois, started the move.

Marshall Tells Girls: 'Be Just to Servants'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Vice President Marshall was the star speaker before the graduating class of a local girls' seminary.

"Deal justly with your servant," he advised. "You do not need to try to make her your equal and introduce her to your fiance, nor is it necessary to make her a common menial."

New Name Is Given Equitable Building

When workmen tear away the burlap which hides their work just now, the Equitable Building will be a thing of history. Henceforth the skyscraper, Atlanta's first, will be known as "The Trust Company of Georgia Building."

The new name is being chiseled in the stone over the Edgewood Avenue entrance.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society loaned the funds for erecting the building twenty-one years ago.

Virginians Claim 'Light Horse' Lee

ROANOKE, VA., May 27.—A committee of the Virginia Legislature is on its way to Georgia to-day for the purpose of bringing to his native State the remains of Henry Lee, better known as "Light Horse Harry Lee," the father of General Robert E. Lee.

General Lee died at Savannah on his return journey from Cuba, where he had been on account of his health. He was buried on Cumberland Island, near that city, and his grave has since been cared for by the Georgia Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

ACTOR SLAYS POLICEMAN.

HACKENSACK, N. J., May 27.—Policeman Patrick Considine, shot by James Devlin, a vaudeville actor, because Devlin objected to alleged attentions paid to Mrs. Devlin, is dead. Devlin and Mrs. Devlin are in jail.

MORTUARY.

J. D. Taylor, Jr., one-month-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Taylor, died at a private hospital Monday night. The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon from Bloomfield's chapel. Interment at Westview.

Miss Ruth Elizabeth Warlick, 16 years old, died at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. B. A. Warlick, 128 East Avenue, Tuesday morning. She is survived by her parents, two sisters, Mrs. E. H. Hale and Miss Corinne Warlick, and three brothers, Judson, Augrue and Bartow Warlick. The funeral will be held Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock from the Grace Methodist Church, Rev. C. O. Jones will conduct the funeral services. Interment will be at Oakland Cemetery.

FLAGLER AND SON ESTRANGED TEN YEARS

NEW YORK, May 27.—Much interest is expressed by men of financial affairs as to the part Harry Harkness Flagler will play in the disposition of the great fortune of his father, Henry M. Flagler, estimated to be more than $60,000,000. Harry Harkness Flagler is 42 years old. He has been connected but little with the work of his father either in the Standard Oil Company or in the great development plans carried on in Florida.

It was said by men who have had close acquaintance with the Flagler affairs that the son and the father had been estranged for a long period, and that for ten years they had not spoken until the day before Flagler died, when the younger man arrived at Palm Beach from Europe in time to see his father alive.

Harry Harkness Flagler, though a man of acknowledged business capacity, never has engaged in business. He has kept singularly aloof from the affairs of the Standard Oil Company. He never showed interest in the Florida railroad and hotel projects of his father, so far as is known. At the age of 22, with a large career in business before him if he chose, it was regarded as doubtful that he ever would go into business.

His temperament is artistic and his nature is one of excessive delicacy. It is said that as a child he preferred to play with girls rather than with boys.

It was held yesterday that a possible reason for the trusteeing of the Flagler estate lay in the divergence of interests of the son and the father. It was conjectured that the elder Flagler decided that his plans for further development of Florida, which it is believed he caused to be drawn up when he was ill, could be carried out better under the direction of trustees in close association with his life activities than in any other way.

The younger Flagler is a Columbia University man of the class of 1894. He is a son of Flagler's first wife, who was a member of the Standard Oil family of Harkness. He married Miss Anna Lamont in 1898.

CHICKENS GET SOUSED.

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—A dozen chickens in a coop at the city market were deluged by a broken jug of whisky. The chickens stuck their heads through the slats of the coop and snipped the liquor. Soon afterward the roosters began to crow noisily and the pullets flapped their wings.

CABLE NEWS

Important Events From All Over the Old World Told in a Few Short Lines.

LONDON, May 24.—A comprehensive valuation of Buckingham Palace and its contents just completed by a West End firm is given at $17,500,000. The value of one room is estimated at $2,500,000.

Scott's Body to Remain Near Pole.

LONDON, May 27.—No effort is to be made to disturb the body of Captain Robert F. Scott, nor those of the heroes who died with him while returning from the expedition to the South Pole. Lord Curzon made this announcement at a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society.

Fails in Exams; Kills Himself.

LILLE, FRANCE, May 27.—Disappointment at his failure to pass his examinations caused a medical student named Cuvilier to commit suicide at the university here. At the moment when the dean of the faculty was reading the list of results and had reached the student's name with the announcement that he had not qualified, he drew a revolver and shot himself in the breast.

New Florida County Named for Wilson

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., May 27.—The Florida House of Representatives is tht first legislative body to honor the name of Woodrow Wilson by naming a county for him.

The new county will be cut from Walton and Santa Rosa Counties in West Florida, bordered on the east by Walton, the west by Santa Rosa, the north by the State of Alabama and the south by the Gulf of Mexico. The county will extend the entire width of the State at that point.

Would Tax Movies For French Defense

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 27.—M. Dumont, Minister of Finance, has proposed to the budget committee of the Chamber of Deputies that the moving picture shows be taxed to help pay for the increased national defenses.

He said he expected that $1,000,000 could be raised in this way.

Walker's Death Her Model for Suicide

MUNCIE, IND., May 27.—After reading newspaper accounts of the death of B. Sanders Walker, the Macon, Ga., banker, who accidentally swallowed a bichloride of mercury tablet, Mrs. Elizabeth Hulderman, aged 20, wife of a wealthy real estate dealer here, swallowed several tablets and died.

ULM URGES PENAL REFORM FOR POOR

Governor's Executive Secretary Declares Present System Penalizes Poverty.

Major A. H. Ulm, executive secretary and ex-officio pardon attorney to Governor Brown, has given out an interview strongly commending the proposed efforts of the Georgia Prison Association to bring about healthy changes in the Georgia criminal laws and prison system.

"A person changed with misdemeanor is given the option of paying a fine or going to the chaingang," said Major Ulm. "Under our procedure, if he goes to the gang, he can not later change his mind and pay the fine. Many prisoners at time of sentence are unable to communicate with friends or relatives in time to pay the fine.

Must Appeal to Governor.

"The only way he can avail himself of the privilege of a money payment is by appealing to the Governor for clemency. If he pay an agent to attend to that routine, which we are compelled to enforce, nine times out of ten he will be forced to serve out the sentence.

"This amounts to penalizing poverty and misfortune. The State law on the subject should be the same as municipal laws, by which prisoners may pay, without bother and expense, the pro rata portion of the fine not worked out any time while serving the sentence.

Urges Suspended Sentences.

"Judges should be permitted to suspend sentences, with some form of probation, in all misdemeanor and, under wise restriction, in some felony cases, as that of a youth arraigned for the first time on a technical case of burglary.

"The State is in need of some form of indeterminate sentence. The parole law partly suffices, as it is intended to do, but it does not fill the need.

"Better provision also should be made for carrying out our present parole law. Virtually no funds are provided for investigating meritorious cases or for inspecting and supervising the conduct of those paroled."

Eisenfeldt Case Is Postponed 30 Days

The case against Mrs. Julia Eisenfeldt, proprietor of the Walton Inn, arrested following the complaint of a man that he had been robbed of a small sum of money in her house, was continued for 30 days, the man making the complaint being too ill to appear in court Monday.

Mrs. Eisenfeldt is the woman accused by E. O. Miles of paying money for police protection. Mrs. Eisenfeldt denies the accusation.

WIDE INTEREST IN PIANO CAMPAIGN

Hundreds Interested in Club Offer Made by the Weatherholt Company.

Seldom has an advertising campaign in Atlanta caused such widespread interest as that inaugurated Sunday in The American by the Weatherholt Piano Company, 72 North Broad Street.

The double-page advertisement, followed by a page in The Georgian yesterday afternoon announcing the sale of 400 player-pianos through a co-operative club of 400 members, has caused crowds of interested persons to visit the Weatherholt store.

Although the membership books do not open until to-morrow, many insisted upon selecting player-pianos in advance of enrolling. In anticipation of just such a rush, T. E. Weatherholt, president of the Weatherholt Company, made arrangements with the factory several weeks ago. These arrangements, together with thorough co-operation on the part of the railroads, have resulted in carloads of player-pianos arriving at the Weatherholt building.

This is the first time that player-pianos have ever been offered in this section to the public through co-operative club buying, and the reasonable price and the attractive terms of $10 down and $2.50 per week have awakened interest to an unusual degree.

Mr. Weatherholt selected a player-piano worth $650 for his club offer, and because of the tremendous purchasing power of the 400 club members, he was enabled to get them at a price which made the offer of $488.50 and at the attractive terms possible.

A corps of expert demonstrators at the Weatherholt store shows visitors how easily these player-pianos may be operated.

Among many other attractive features, the Weatherholt club offer includes twelve rolls of player music, with the privilege of exchanging them daily, if desired, for any other music in the Weatherholt library of 5,000 rolls.

LONDON, May 27.—Walter H. Page, the United States Ambassador to Great Britain, had no sooner reached London than he was asked by some English reporters concerning a report that he would refuse to wear knee breeches at Court. His answer was terse and pointed:

"Why do you ask me such a question? You surely don't want me to think that the imagination of a fool across the ocean begets more fools in London?"

Fears for Safety Of Missing Husband

Out at Blackwells a wistful little woman and her two babies are longing for the return of husband and father, who disappeared April 17. C. B. Allen is the man, and the fact that he loved his family so well causes the saddened wife to believe he has met with foul play.

Mrs. Allen is heart-broken over her husband's disappearance. She has requested the newspapers to aid in the search.

Gov. McMillin U. S. Minister to Peru

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Ex-Governor Benton McMillin of Tennessee will be appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the republic of Peru.

The announcement is made on high authority, and it may be stated definitely that Mr. McMillin will accept the post.

The post pays $10,000 a year.

Man, 72, Jilts Bride On Eve of Wedding

FORT COLLINS, COLO., May 27.—Cupid struck a snag here when he dallied with the affairs of T. C. Parker, 72, and Mrs. Nancy C. Pennington, 65, whose wedding was set for May 21.

The romance was shattered when the groom-to-be left here for Moline, Kans., where his relatives live. It is rumored here that an old sweetheart there is the attraction.

WIRE TROUBLE DID NOT FEAZE CUPID

Romance, Shattered After Eight-Dollar Phone Conversation, Ends in Marriage.

A romance that began in an Atlanta moving picture show, gained in strength at a New York motorcycle track, stood firm amid the vicissitudes of a theatrical career, and was broken off last week in an eight-dollar telephone conversation between Atlanta and Jacksonville, culminated in marriage Monday night, is being recounted to-day by friends of Miss Lena Quinn, a former Atlanta girl, who lives in Fitzgerald.

Miss Quinn is now the wife of Jack Morley, of Kansas City, who claims to be a motorcycle rider here for the races at Jack Prince's motordome. The wedding took place at the bride's home in Fitzgerald. They probably will return to Atlanta.

Mr. Morley came to Atlanta with his motorcycle last week, and several days ago Miss Quinn called him over long distance telephone from Jacksonville, where she has been spending the winter. Just what was said over the phone during the thirteen mintues conversation is unknown, but after it was over Mr. Morley flatly refused to pay the $8 telephone tolls and declared furthermore that his romance was shattered for good.

Miss Quinn, however, refused to have her romance shattered. She boarded the first train and arrived in Atlanta Monday morning. A reconciliation was soon effected.

EARNINGS OF BIG STORES FABULOUS

Marshall Field Clears $4,643,197 in Year; Sears, Roebuck & Co., $6,099,794.

CHICAGO, May 27.—The Illinois Senate white slave committee to-day was in possession of information which the members of the committee regarded as valuable in presenting their plea for a minimum law for women and girls to the Legislature. The committee had figures on the profits of several large corporations.

Maxwell Edgar, an attorney, who obtained the data while preparing "tax-dodging" suits, reported that Marshall Field & Co.'s net profits in 1909 were $4,643,197.98, and in 1910, $4,419,427.81. Sears, Roebuck & Co., he testified, earned net profits of $6,099,794.61 in 1909 and $6,606,291.47 in 1910. The net profits of Armour & Co. in 1909 were $4,358,488.93, and in 1910, $3,865,266.95. The Illinois Steel Company's net profits in 1909 were $11,165,839.22.

The capital stock of Marshall Field & Co. is $6,000,000.

BRYAN TO SPEAK IN MISSISSIPPI

JACKSON, MISS., May 27.—Secretary of State William J. Bryan will deliver the baccalaureate address at the Mississippi A. and M. College June 4 at Starkville. Governor Brewer and several State officials will be present.

Dr. Vaughan Defends Prison Treatment

Charges that prisoners in the Fulton County camps have been inhumanly treated are vigorously denied by the Rev. E. L. Vaughan, convict chaplain. Dr. Vaughan's prison work covers a period of 33 years, a score in direct touch with Fulton County prisoners.

"Especially," said Dr. Vaughan, "are these charges unjust in connection with Captain Tom Donaldson. I never have known him to be other than considerate.

"I do not believe there ever has been a prisoner punished in Fulton County unless he deserved it."

The "Classic" of All Millinery Sales

$5.00

For Hats Originally $8.50 to $25.00

There is just one hat that was $8.50 in the sale---and there are one hundred and fourteen of them all told. If an average were struck, it would border around the eighteen-dollar mark.

Indeed this is the "Classic" of all millinery sales!

They are hats for street wear, hats that summer travelers will want. There are black hats, black and white hats, green hats, blue hats---hats of all colors and of good style---depend upon that---the very greater part of them are from Estelle Mershon of 20 E. 46th St., New York---which is but another way of telling that the ribbons and the flowers and other trimmings are not only the choicest in themselves, but also that they are artistically, becomingly arranged.

Five dollars!

Could one think of missing such an opportunity?

A Silk Event

To-morrow at Nine o'Clock

An event in much the same fashion that a thorough house cleaning is to the housekeeper. We have gone deeply into the silk stocks and with a purpose---a very positive purpose to bring out all odd lots, surpluses and the like for one day's spirited selling.

Here are the results. The silks are all fine, worthy kinds that won their way into our favor and stocks because of their beauty---of fabric, pattern and coloring---which, taken together with the new prices, to-morrow shall develop into another of those splendid Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. Silk Sales.

59c For 85c and $1.00 Silks

Included are Shower-proof Foulards, 23 and 24 inches wide. The color range, the variety of patterns are all too great to be listed here—suffice it there are small, dainty patterns, new right now, in about any shade and combination of shades you might want. Also at this price are yard-wide taffetas in colors.

69c For 85c Shirtings

Those fine silk shirtings—33 inches wide, that are enjoying greater favor than in many seasons. Yes, they are washable. White grounds with colored and black line stripes.

83c For $1.50 to $2.25 Silks

Here is fine choice! Delicate chiffons in soft evening shades, plain and two-toned marquisettes, in seemingly the whole list of shades and in Dresden patterns, plain and two-toned taffetas, corded silks and poplins. Widths from 36 to 44 inches. There are going to be many pretty evening dresses and street dresses chosen from among these at rich savings!

$1.79 For $2.25 to $4 Chiffons

They are embroidered chiffons, 44 inches wide. In colors and designs for evening dresses. Pink and light blue, embroidered over with silver and deep mais and white. With these are crepe chiffons and bordered marquisettes.

$2.98 For $6 to $8 Chiffons

Exquisite imported materials rich in colors and embroidery—primarily "de luxe" fabrics. The embroidery shows in borders, sometimes very bold and heavy, and again delicate and dainty. Choose about any color—pink and white combinations, light blue and white, heliotrope and silver, silver and white, gold and black, and others.

$3.50 to $5.50 Wool Ratines and Suitings

$1.98 a Yd.

Fine suits and skirts and coats for summer travelers are going to cost little.

Wool ratines and imported suitings, soft, all-wool materials, in grays and tans, invisibly striped and flecked and checked, 54 and 56 inches wide, that were until now $3.50 to $5.50 a yard, are $1.98.

59c to $2.25 Dress Goods Are

39c a Yd.

A lot for quick selling.

There are wool voiles in Copenhagen, champagne, gray and red; striped bordered and plain serges; whipcords and what are usually termed "fancy suitings" in many shades, and mohairs; some of them worth up to $2.25 a yard, at 59c.

ROOSEVELT DENIES EVER BEING DRUNK IN HIS LIFE

and thieves. If any one calls him names he roars terribly, yet he is a pretty good liar himself. Roosevelt lies and curses in a most disgusting manner. He gets drunk, too, and that not infrequently and all his intimates know about it.

Q. Have you ever been drunk?—A. I have never in my life been drunk or in the slightest degree under the influence of liquor.

Q. What use do you make of liquor?—A. I do not drink either whisky or brandy, save as I shall hereafter say, or under the direction of a doctor. I don't drink beer—I do not like it. I do sometimes drink light wines. I have never drunk a high ball or cocktail in my life, but sometimes I have drunk a mint julep. There was a bed of mint in the White House yard. Perhaps I drank half a dozen of them a year.

Q. All at one time?

Judge Commands Order.

There was laughter and Judge Flannigan interrupted sternly.

"If there is any further demonstration the Sheriff will clear the court room. I will not have any disorder. Understand that."

A. Never but one mint julep at a time. I doubt very much if I drank over half a dozen in the seven years I was in the White House. In the four years since that time I have had two mint juleps—one at the Cincinnati Country Club and one in Arkansas from a loving cup. At dinner or at banquets I occasionally drink one or two glasses of light wine or champagne. I drink it publicly and openly.

Q. In the White House were there given so-called diplomatic dinners?—A. Yes, and there was served and I drank openly wine or champagne, one or two glasses of champagne. At state dinners, diplomatic dinners, at my dinners to my Cabinet, light wines and champagne were served. They were kept in the White House. I would not usually drink while alone, and it was not usually served unless there were guests. If there were guests, light wine was served and I would frequently drink one or two glasses. If there were diplomatic guests there would be champagne. I would drink about the same amount.

Drinks Brandy for Fever.

Q. Now as to the instruction of the doctor to which you referred, will you explain it?—A. Yes. During the Cuban campaign I had the Cuban fever and since that time I have had recurring attacks of it. These attacks usually come as the result of over-exertion, and at the direction of Surgeon Rixey I have occasionally used brandy in teaspoonful doses to check it. I had a severe attack of this illness while in Africa and had prepared for it by having a supply of brandy along.

I also had such attacks while in the Rocky Mountains and several touches of it during the political campaigns in which I made speeches. Usually brandy was taken along in case of need and there was champagne in my private car for the use of members of the party that used it.

I made it a rule never to drink anything at all during the day while on these trips and rarely anything at any time. What I did take on such trips was invariably on the advice of my physician, who always accompanied me.

Attorney Andrews for the defense conducted the cross-examination. He asked Colonel Roosevelt if he was paying the expenses of the prosecution of the libel suit against Editor Newett, or if the Progressive party were bearing it.

Colonel Roosevelt shouted his denial that any one except himself was paying. Sight of the colonel displaying his feelings caused a commotion among those in the court room, and Judge Flannigan ordered a bailiff to rap for order. The direct examination then continued.

Q. Are you a teetotaler or a prohibitionist?

An objection was overruled.

A. I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky, and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Q. Describe yourself as to your use of intoxicating liquors.—A. I am not a total abstainer, but am very abstemious, perhaps it would add you to understand that if I were to describe the routine of my life at the White House.

Q. Yes; please do so.—A. I usually rose rather early and had breakfast with the members of my family. For twenty minutes I would walk in the White House grounds, often with one of the children or some member of my Cabinet. From my walk I would go directly to my office, where Secretary Loeb and I would go through the mail and receive Senators, Representatives and diplomatic officers. Unless I had shaved myself, I would be shaved by the barber in the room between my office and Mr. Loeb's. I was very busy, and it was necessary to save every minute of time, so I would dictate letters or talk to some callers while being shaved.

No Drinks Before Luncheon.

I would then be busy with conferences and correspondence until lunch time. Then I would wash my face and hands and walk down the terrace to the White House, where I would have lunch with my family. Never under any circumstances did I touch a drop of liquor of any kind before luncheon. If we lunched alone there was rarely any liquor, but if there were guests there would be served either light wine or champagne, and in either case I would usually drink one or two glasses of that.

After luncheon I would return to my office and be busy with my mail and callers until 4 o'clock. At that hour I went for a walk or ride, frequently with some member of my Cabinet. I would walk or ride until 6, when I returned to the White House. I would spend a half hour with the children, and then would bathe and dress for dinner.

At dinner there were usually guests, and wine was usually served. Occasionally I drank a glass or two. After dinner I either returned to my office or had Mr. Loeb in my library, where we went over mail and worked on messages and the like. About midnight I would read for twenty minutes some book to take my mind off public business. Then I would go to sleep. Dr. Rixey usually was in to see me at bedtime.

Q. When you was mustered out of the army, what was your rank?

Attorney Belden. We object. That is irrelevant.

Court. It is relevant to show the plaintiff's position.

A. I was acting brigade commander, and was recommended to be brevetted a brigadier general.

Didn't Drink on Trips.

Q. Now, what were your drinking habits while on speaking trips?—A. I never drank anything during the day, and never anything at any time except on the advice of Dr. Rixey or my throat specialist, Dr. Curtis. After a hard day I often took one or two glasses of milk with a teaspoonful of brandy in each. Then I would read twenty minutes, see Dr. Rixey and go to sleep. I would sleep soundly to feel clear in the morning.

Q. When you speak of a hard day, just what do you mean?—A. I mean a long journey and many speeches, or either. Many of those trips were very exhausting, and that was the reason Dr. Rixey accompanied me. When you are President you can not be ill, and a President's work must go on, regardless.

Here the direct examination ended, and Horace Andrews, of Cleveland, Ohio, began the cross-examination.

Q. You are not a resident of Michigan?—A. No, sir; I have always been a resident of the State and city of New York, although ever since I was a boy I have usually spent a few summer months in the country. As a boy my time in the country was usually on a farm or country place of my father's.

Q. Then your visits to Michigan have been flying trips?—A. They have usually been brief trips.

Enumerates His Friends.

Q. Do you know anybody in Marquette County?—A. I know several people; Mr. Shiras best of all.

Q. You know that Mr. Shiras is not really a resident of Marquette; that he lives in the East and only spends his summers here?—A. I know that he is frequently away during the winter on natural history work. As to his legal residence I can not speak.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette?—A. I know Mr. Hill there.

Q. Mr. Hill of your counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just met him since you hired him as your lawyer, did you not?—A. I think I met him last summer.

Q. Think? Don't you know?—A. I don't remember certainly.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette County?—A. I have met a number of people at various times.

Q. And have promptly forgotten them, eh?—A. No, sir, but when one meets so many people one can't always recall names unless one is reminded by seeing the person.

Q. Ah, I see. Do you see any reminiscent faces in the court room?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your entire life has been given mostly to politics, has it not?—A. I should not say that. I would say that, previous to the Spanish war, I was as much of a naturalist and historian and writer as anything else.

Q. As President you met Senators and entertained them and were invited to their homes—is that not true?—A. I knew every Senator and entertained all of them at the White House. I was rarely invited to their houses.

Q. And you met members of Congress and received them at your house, did you not?—A. I knew every Representative in Congress and received all who called.

Q. And in traveling you attended many banquets given in your honor, did you not?—A. I attended some banquets.

Q. Where liquor was served?—A. Yes, certainly, where liquor was served.

Q. Yet, in all the fifteen years you have been in politics you have never drank anything except a little brandy and milk?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Just so, now as to the wines that you speak of as light wines, just what kind of wines were those?—A. Light white wines, California wines or Sauternes; once in a while I took a little Madeira.

Q. Is that all?—A. Once in a while a bit of sherry; I never drink red wines.

Q. Oh you will swear that you have never tasted red wine?—A. No, certainly not. You know I did not mean that. What I mean is that I do not like red wines and that I never drink them. I do not mean that I have never tasted them. Probably I have and probably when they have been passed I have touched the glass to my lips.

Q. Do you keep wine, brandy and whisky in your house?—A. Yes, sir, all three.

Q. Did you keep liquor in the White House?—A. Yes, I kept the stock left me by Mr. McKinley.

Mr. Andrews: "I move the last part of that answer be stricken out as not responsive to my question."

Mr. Pound: "I think it is competent to show that he merely continued a custom already established."

Shows Signs of Anger.

The Court: "It is proper to show that if he will answer it in the way you indicate."

Mr. Roosevelt: "Then may I revise my answer?"

Mr. Andrews: "Certainly you may amend it, Mr. Roosevelt, if you can not wish to answer it directly or would be embarrassed to do so."

Mr. Roosevelt: "I can and will answer it directly."

The former president showed signs of anger.

A. I did keep wine, whisky and brandy of several kinds in the White House, as my predecessor had done before me, and as President Cleveland and President Garfield and others had done.

Q. And is it true that you kept two butlers to take care of this stock of liquors?—A. It is true that I kept two butlers, but they took care of the wines merely as an incident to their employment.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wallace, National Committeeman of the Progressive Party in Michigan?—A. I do.

Q. Did he institute this prosecution, this suit?—A. I don't know.

Q. What? You don't know who started this important piece of litigation for you?—A. I was in Mercy Hospital when it started and I can not say.

Again Denies Knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Wallace have anything to do with filing it?—A. I could not say.

Q. It was reported in newspaper interviews that he had started this suit on your behalf. Did you see those interviews or articles?—A. Not that I am able to recall.

Q. Have you borne all the expense of this suit personally, the cost of finding and summoning witnesses and bringing them here and taking depositions and the like?—A. I have borne all the expense.

Q. Was not a portion of that expense borne by the Progressive party of Michigan or by the Progressive national committee?—A. It was not. I paid everything.

Colonel's Voice Squeaked.

Colonel Roosevelt was thoroughly angry now; his face flushed, his voice squeaked and he clenched his fists and half rose from the chair.

Q. Would you know it if any expense in this suit were borne by any person other than yourself?—A. I certainly would, and it has all been borne by myself.

Mr. Andrews announced that this completed the cross-examination.

Mr. Pound, on redirect examination, asked two questions, both designed to bring out the fact that Colonel Roosevelt was paying the expenses of the prosecution.

Q. This suit was brought by your direction, was it not, at your expense?

A. It was.

Q. Did the Progressive party or any branch of its organization or any of its officers or workers or any other persons at any time contribute anything to the expense of this suit?—A. No, I bore the entire expense myself.

Pledged Speaker's Health.

Q. Tell us about Speaker Cannon's birthday party.—A. I drank a glass of champagne on that occasion in pledging the Speaker's birthday health.

Defense Scores "Eulogy."

"Hunting exploits and public acts are improper in an opening statement," was the objection raised by Attorney Belden, representing Newett, to the opening address of Attorney Pounds for Colonel Roosevelt. Two minutes after Judge Flannagan overruled his objection he was again on his feet, protesting against the statement which, he declared, was "an oration—a eulogy."

Judge Flannagan again refused to check Attorney Pounds' address, but ruled that the defense might save their objection. When Pounds, however, referred to the time when "this plaintiff was in power," the court upheld the objection of the defense and ordered Pounds to confine his remarks to a statement of what he intended to prove. The defense announced it would defer making a statement until after taking of testimony.

Before court session began, Judge Flannagan ordered all the witnesses on both sides out of the room. No person connected with the case was admitted to the court room during the trial, except the principals, their attorneys and the witness who was on the stand.

T. R. Inclines To Champagne

Defending himself against a charge of drunkenness, Colonel Roosevelt gives the following as an epitome of his drinking customs:

I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

New Libel Charge In Marconi Scandal

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—The third criminal trial growing out of the Marconi scandal began in Old Bailey Court to-day. It is the libel case of Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the British Marconi Company, against Cecil Chesterton, journalist and brother of G. K. Chesterton, the famous essayist.

Chesterton is charged with libeling Isaacs in an article he wrote on the connection between certain officers of the British Government and the Marconi interests.

Hill's Market Basket Bond Sale a Success

ST. PAUL, May 27.—James J. Hill's plan of selling city bonds in certificates of $10 each through the Northwestern Trust Company was a big success to-day. Men and women were waiting at an early hour for the company's office to open, and a steady stream filed in and out all morning.

The officers were prepared and began to issue receipts for the money promptly. One hundred and seven small investors bought a total of $10,000 worth of certificates up to noon.

The Sunday American goes everywhere all over the South. If you have anything to sell The Sunday American is "The Market Place of the South." The Sunday American is the best advertising medium.

MEN AND RELIGION BULLETIN NO. 57

Atlanta Upholds Chief Beavers

The "Itching Palm" And The Character Assassin Have No Place Here.

The itching palm.

Judas Iscariot had it.

Thirty pieces of silver upon his hand, and Judas betrayed his Lord.

Poor Judas, learning too late the curse of the itching palm, threw away the money and killed himself in shame and sorrow.

Notwithstanding itching palms are here to-day.

And again and again would they betray Christ, our saviour, and rear for him a cross.

Their pay coming from the betrayal of girls matters not to them.

If they get their hire, they care not that their success would mean the dishonoring of motherhood, the blinding of babies, and the spreading of disease, insanity and death among innocent children and women.

These they ignore with a sneering curse.

But you do not; you care and understand; you recall.

Annually seven hundred thousand dollars and more poured through the white slave market of Atlanta into the itching palm.

The lie of segregation so prospered seven houses that their reputed owners received forty-three thousand and seventy-four dollars in the form of rent every year, more than twice as much as the rental of thirty-three other houses scattered throughout the city.

Chief Beavers closed them all and ended the ghastly farce of segregation.

Eight months have passed and the owners of the itching palm have become frantic.

For eight months the "unbreakable bank of the corrupt politicians" has been hampered by the honesty of a man whose palms will not itch.

How much have the owners of the houses and the liquor dealers lost?

Eight months is two-thirds of a year; two-thirds of seven hundred thousand dollars is four hundred and sixty-six thousand, six hundred and sixty dollars and sixty-six cents.

How their palms do itch!

And they have despaired of corrupting the Chief.

They have to get rid of him, if they ever open again their market with its unspeakable pimps and procurers plying their trade of debauching girls.

IS THIS CONNECTED WITH THE RECENT STUDIED EFFORT TO DISCREDIT THE CHIEF AND ATLANTA'S POLICE DEPARTMENT IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD?

Consider this before you answer.

The Chief can be removed from office only for inefficiency proven by trial before the Police Board.

Incorruptibility is not inefficiency.

And an unwillingness to violate one's oath—a refusal to let criminals live upon the shame of women is no evidence that a man is incompetent to be Chief of Atlanta's Police Force.

Hence the plight of protected vice and its servants.

THEY CANNOT CORRUPT; HENCE, THEY SEEK TO RUIN WITH LIES.

Their itching palms know not how to labor honestly, though they are skilled in squeezing money from helpless fallen women, their "meal tickets."

Being hungry, they snarl and snap.

God pity them and open their eyes to their unutterable degradation!

The outside world is pointing to the fearless honesty of our Chief of Police and the efficient way in which he is handling the most difficult of all city problems.

And in this age of graft he will not be sacrificed to put into office a dishonest man satisfactory to the owners of brothels and bars and their henchmen.

Never!

AND ATLANTA WILL REMEMBER FOR FUTURE RECKONING THOSE MEN, IN OR OUT OF OFFICE, WHO TRY TO HAMPER THE CHIEF AS HE DOES HIS DUTY.

Recall the itching palms of the servants of protected vice and be on your guard.

"A lie turned loose put Christ on the Cross." Nail their lies!

Note those who are trying by the most foul of all means, character assassination, to bring back upon Atlanta the disgrace of a traffic which demands for its existence the sacrifice of innocent girls.

For the day of accounting is coming.

Vice is fighting to regain the privilege of making dirty dollars by defiling women.

Chief Beavers is battling for decency and health, the welfare of our families and your loved ones.

He does not fight alone. You are with him.

Thank God! You are awake and watching.

Chief Beavers and his men will be upheld by Atlanta.

The Executive Committee of the Men and Religion Forward Movement

The World of Society

MRS. WILTON DARGAN entertained twelve guests informally at luncheon Tuesday for Mrs. C. A. Wood, who will leave soon to spend the summer at Toxaway.

The luncheon was given at the Piedmont Driving Club. The table, placed in the green room of the club, was decorated with vivid red poppies, arranged in a tall silver vase. The place cards bore modish hand-painted figures of up-to-date ladies.

Mrs. Dargan wore wistaria canton crepe, with a hat of black maline.

Banquet to Bridegroom.

A banquet was tendered Mr. P. W. Wilcox in honor of his approaching marriage to Miss Katherine Rawlings, of Druid Hills, by the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, in a private dining room at the Kimball House Monday evening. The dining room was decorated in palms and ferns. The table, with a floral centerpiece down its length, was attractive. The menu of seven or eight courses was interspersed with toasts and speeches.

Mr. J. B. Cleveland, president of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, presented a handsome gold watch to Mr. Wilcox, who is secretary and treasurer of the company. The presentation was in behalf of the company. The watch bore as an inside inscription:

"To Mr. P. W. Wilcox, from his friends and associates of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, May 28, 1913."

In presenting the watch, Mr. Cleveland made a witty talk on "Time," the gist of his remarks being the wish that "Every time you look at the watch to learn the time, may you think of the fine time you've had tonight and may you always have a good time and a good timepiece."

The company included Messrs. J. B. Cleveland, Harold S. Holmes, P. W. Wilcox, George Lamkin, W. M. Adams, W. M. Taylor, R. T. Skinner, Jr., C. R. Stone, J. H. Lamb, A. G. Cooper, T. W. Newbern, Fred Ball and T. C. Callaway.

May Pole Dance.

Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock a May pole dance will be given at the Wren's Nest in West End. More than 100 children will take part. The most important feature of the entertainment will be the coronation of the May queen, Miss Katherine Vickers, attended by much pomp and ceremony.

The maid of honor will be Miss Frances Stokes, queen of the last May Festival. Other maids will be Kathleen Hackett, Kirby Willingham, Lucile Price, Margie Curfee, Mary Crucell and Lora Colcord. The knights will be Newton McEachern, Brevard Montgomery, Thomas Stokes, Warren Pollard, Howard Connolly and Thomas Longino.

An interesting feature will be the appearance of the little grandchildren of Joel Chandler Harris, who will take part in the coronation ceremonies. They are LeRose Wagener and Chandler Harris, who will act as flower girl and canopy bearer.

There will be amusements on the grounds in the way of a fishing pond, lemonade well, candy and cake both and the honey tree, thimble finger well, home of Miss Meaders and the girls, and other specialties.

"Br'er Rabbit" and "Br'er B'ar" will be at the festival, and maybe, if the visitors look around among the lovely flowers and trees at the Wren's Nest and Snap Bean Farm, they can catch a glimpse of Uncle Remus and the little Boy who made Mr. Harris' writing so dear to children all over the world.

Cars will leave the city at all hours, so that everybody can get to the festival and have a good time.

Mrs. Brevard Montgomery, who originated the first May Festival at the Wren's Nest, has charge of the entertainment this year.

Woman's Beauty Is Based on Health

To Have Health, Bowel Movement Is Absolutely Necessary---How Best to Obtain it.

If woman's beauty depended upon cosmetics every woman would be a picture of loveliness. But beauty lies deeper than that. It lies in health. In the majority of cases the basis of health, and the cause of sickness, can be traced to the action of the bowels.

The headaches, the lassitude, the sallow skin and the lusterless eyes are usually due to constipation. So many things that women do habitually conduce to this trouble. They do not eat carefully, they eat indigestible foods because the foods are served daintily and they do not exercise enough. But whatever the particular cause may be, it is important that the condition should be corrected.

An ideal remedy for women, and one especially suited to their delicate requirements, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of women endorse highly. Mrs. Jennie Snedeker, 1041 West Monroe Street, Chicago, testifies that she is "cured of grave stomach and bowel troubles by using Syrup Pepsin and without the aid of a doctor or any other medicine." All the family can use Syrup Pepsin, for thousands of mothers give it to babies and children. It is also admirably suited to the requirements of elderly people, in fact, to all who, by reason of age or infirmity, can not stand harsh salts, cathartics, pills or purgatives. These should always be avoided, for, at best, their effect is only for that day, while a genuine remedy like Syrup Pepsin acts mildly but permanently.

MRS. JENNIE SNEDEKER.

It can be conveniently obtained at any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded. You will find it gentle in action, pleasant in taste, and free from griping, and its tonic properties have a distinct value to women. It is the most widely used laxative-tonic in America to-day and thousands of families are now never without it.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington Street, Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

IT IS MIRACLE PELICANS EVER WIN ANY GAMES

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE wonder of it is that the Pelicans have won those thirteen games that now grace their records! How did they get them? What happened? The "Felder Mystery" is as nothing compared with it.

On what the Pelicans showed here yesterday, when they lost to the Crackers 8 to 3, they wouldn't be entitled to win thirteen games in ten years.

According to Charley Frank his club isn't altogether to blame. As is the case with most tail-end clubs injuries have done their devastating work. Both of the Pelicans' catchers have been shot away—and Yantz is out of the game for a year with a broken leg. Manush's bum knee has gone wrong again and he is out of it—for an indefinite stay. It is possible that he will never be his old self again. They think so in Toledo, where the accident happened.

The Pelicans are complaining of another affliction of the tail-enders—their nerve is gone. They couldn't take a game if it was handed to them. They are the worst fielders in the league—and they did not improve their averages any in Monday's game.

* * *

ELLIOTT DENT more or less vindicated himself Monday. Bill Smith slipped him in and he beat the Pelicans. He weakened a fraction in the eighth and ninth but he showed a lot better than his last out. With plenty of work this man may prove a star. He does not seem at his best yet, but maybe the next time he is worked he will be able to go all the way through.

* * *

THIS Cast-Off's Revenge stuff is getting to be a howling farce. "Rebel" Williams, a Cracker-for-a-day a while back, turned up Monday with the fiercest sort of batting and laced out four hits in four times up. He had but one fielding chance, which he looked out for in good style.

William's regular batting stride is so far below that which he showed yesterday as to make the whole thing a blooming burlesque. But it always happens. Generally the cast-offs win the game. Maybe the fact that Williams was an involuntary cast-off saved the Crackers from that misfortune.

* * *

WILLIAMS was not the only man who did some surprising batting. Another was Pitcher Dent, who scratched a couple through the infield and beat them to first.

Snedecor put a scratch and a double to his credit. He and Williams made three-fifths of the Pels' hits.

Welchonce put a single and a very timely three-bagger on the records. Welchonce had Dunn and Dent on bases and, of course, something ferocious was needed to score them. Welchonce hit it all right and both of the speed merchants tallied.

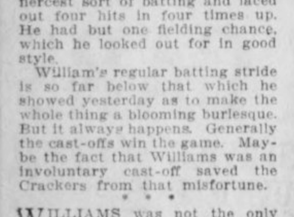
Harry Welchonce made six nice put-outs yesterday and added to the half-dozen he made the day before, gave him twelve put-outs in two days. His batting was timely but he made one of those old-time "Atlanta bunts"—a walloping drive to Evans which resulted in a put-out at second.

THE Crackers have two more games with the Pelicans and ought to win them both, unless the Pels show a tremendous improvement. Charley Frank has no pitcher calculated to stop the local batters and his fielders are pretty much to the bad.

Thursday Montgomery turns up for four games. On Friday, because of Federal Decoration Day, there will be two games.

Blood Bath Knocks Rheumatism

Remarkable Effects of a Remedy That Actually Irrigates the Entire Blood Supply.



It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect of a most remarkable remedy known as S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In five minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capillary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every enunctory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities. The stimulating properties of S. S. S. compel the skin, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder to all work to the one end of casting out every irritating, every pain-inflicting atom of poison; it dislodges by irrigation all accumulations in the joints, dissolves acid secretions, renders them neutral and scatters those peculiar formations in the nerve centers that cause such mystifying and often baffling rheumatic pains.

And, best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach. If you have drugged yourself until your stomach is nearly paralyzed, you will be astonished to find that S. S. S. gives no sensation but goes right to work. This is because it is a pure vegetable infusion, is taken naturally into your blood just as pure air is inhaled naturally into your lungs.

The great Swift Laboratory has spent millions of dollars in perfecting, producing and placing in the hands of the public this wonderful remedy. So give your blood a good bath with S. S. S., for it checks the worst forms of rheumatism every time.

You can get it at any drug store at $1 per bottle. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood specific ever discovered. If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice, write to The Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift building, Atlanta, Ga.

JUNE 6 TO SEE FIRST RACE AT MOTORDROME

WITH a band concert announced for Sunday and with the date for the opening set for Friday night, June 6, and with the board motordrome at the old circus grounds pretty well finished, Atlanta's season of motorcycle racing in the "giant washtub" is closing in.

And you get the idea of what is going to happen from the expression "racing in a giant washtub." That's exactly what it is like. Jack Prince's new track is little more—and no less—than a board track, set on edge. Instead of riding on the floor of the tub the racers hurtle around on the inside of the sides, like cockroaches on the kitchen wall, setting laws of gravity at naught and affording to the spectators the most spectacular form of racing the world has ever known.

Jack Prince really has a big offering for the Atlanta public. His track is the latest and best board track in the world. It represents the last word in the building of board tracks. Jack has gathered in Atlanta already the best motorcycle racers in the world. He has more on the way. He is erecting comfortable seats, every one of which commands a view of the big inclosure. He has engaged a band. He has arranged for a corking car service—a service that will take the patrons of the motordrome from Five Points to the track in barely more than five minutes. He has an attractive program for opening night. As a result he will be greeted by one of the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a motorcycle race in America.

PEACOCK FLEET GIVES BOYS' HIGH BIG SCARE

Boys' High School nine received the closest call ofthe season yesterday afternoon when they were held to a 6 to 5 score by the Peacock-Fleet school aggregation.

Boys' High began the scoring in the first inning when they registered a single tally and each team took its turns throughout the nine chapters at leading the score. The winning tally was registered in the ninth inning when Johnson scored on an error.

ODE.

This is an ode to men of great renown;
An ode to men who laugh and say:
"Pooh! Pooh!"
An ode to men who hold a great game down
And snap their fingers, saying:
"That for you!"
This is an ode to those who laugh and say
"Old P. T. Barnum had the proper dope.
Those rummies will be with us every day
And pay their kalc and sit there full of hope."
I love to hear the wallop of the bat
And see the pill go bounding down the dell,
But when a lot of guys grow rich and fat
And then they rub it in—O whatthehel!

Jake Daubert has been suspended for three days. Jake Daubert is a member of the Brooklyn team, which has been winning too many games for the good of the National League.

Tom Jones says he will bet $10,000 on Jess Willard if said Jess Willard fights Gunboat Smith again. Mr. Jones shows his business acumen by speaking thus. It would cost him at least $7.50 to hire a hall.

Not that we care to queer an honest man's business, but our idea of obtaining money under false pretenses is to manage Jess Willard.

Ed Walsh threatens to teach the spitball by mail. Various batters in the American League would give half their year's salaries if Ed would only deliver his spitball by mail.

AS J. EVERS MIGHT SAY.

I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.
I could not, even in a pinch.
In fact, it is a lead pipe cinch
I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.

BRANNIGAN HANDS M'CUE FIRST DEFEAT OF CAREER

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27.—Matty McCue, variously known as the Racine terror, the Wisconsin whirlwind and the Racine wonder, is to-day simply plain McCue, for all the terror and whirlwind and wonder were punched out of him by Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg. It was McCue's first defeat, but it was decisive all along the ten-round route.

JAKE ABEL BEATS WHITE IN EIGHT-ROUND FIGHT

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 27.—Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, easily defeated Frankie White, of Chicago, here last night. Abel floored White in the eighth round with a right to the ribs. White did not land one clean blow.

BILLITER WINS MAT BOUT.

ST. LOUIS, May 27.—Johnnie Billiter won two out of three falls last night from Eddie Hammer.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jack McGuigan says he has secured Jack Britton's signature to meet Young Erne at the baseball park in Philadelphia on Decoration Day. Both boys will weigh in at 138 pounds ringside.

* * *

"Bud" Anderson is taking up considerable of the pugilistic limelight. His knockout of Joe Mandot stamps him as one of the most dangerous boxers in his class.

* * *

Jack O'Brien, the Philadelphia heavyweight and one of the real veterans of the game, donned the mitts the other day. He boxed a three-round exhibition with Harry Ramsey in Pottstown, Pa.

* * *

Harry Trendall and Leo Kelly will clash in a scheduled eight-round bout at St. Louis Wednesday night. Trendall and Kelly met several months ago, and the former was credited with the shade.

* * *

Jimmy Perry will have a chance to make himself one of the biggest cards in the boxing game Thursday night. Jimmy is to take on Mike Gibbons in a six-round set-to, and the fur should fly. Reports from the Pennsylvania city state that both boys have trained hard for the go, and are ready for the gong.

* * *

Perry's friends here are anxiously awaiting the result. They point to the fact that Jimmy has been going great lately, and for the first time in months has trained faithfully for a scrap.

* * *

Meyer Pries, who will meet Spider Britt in one of the three ten-round bouts to be staged at the Auditorium June 13, paid us a visit yesterday. Meyer says that he is going to bet his end of the purse that he beats Britt. The little Hebrew also says that he is going to be right this time, and will start work for the bout in a couple of days.

* * *

Abe Attell is still gathering in the soft dough. The former featherweight champion has agreed to take on Phil Bloom in the ten-round windup of a special show at the Irving A. C., Brooklyn. Attell is to receive $700, win, lose or draw.

* * *

Tom Jones continues to challenge Gunboat Smith in behalf of his heavyweight, Jess Willard. As yet he has not received any satisfaction from Jim Buckley, manager of Smith.

* * *

Buckley is not worrying much these days. Besides having Smith, he also has a neat meal ticket in Harlem Tommy Murphy, one of the leading contenders for Willie Ritchie's crown.

* * *

Arthur Pelky threatens to quit the ring for good. The big heavyweight has taken McCarty's death to heart, and says he will never be able to enter the ring again and fight at his best.

* * *

* * *

Frank Klaus received the newspaper verdict over Eddie McGoorty in their six-round bout at Pittsburg Saturday night. Both boys were strong at the finish, and could have gone a number of rounds more.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight, had an easy time defeating Kid Scaler the other night. The bout went the full fifteen rounds, but Freddie had a big shade at the finish.

McCARTY'S DEATH PURE ACCIDENT, FINDING OF JURY

By Ed W. Smith.

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight, Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 27.—Luther McCarty's death in the glove contest here Saturday afternoon with Arthur Pelky was entirely an accident. This was the verdict of the Coroner's jury, determined after two sittings, the decision being reached at 10 o'clock after a deliberation of half an hour. Pelky was exonerated completely from all blame in the case.

Almost immediately after, however, the Northwest mounted police put Pelky under arrest, charging him with manslaughter. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000, Fred C. Lowes, a wealthy real estate man, and Tommy Burns furnishing the surety. The threatened cases against Referee Smith, manager Billy McCarney and Promoter Tommy Burns did not develop, but Smith and McCarney, in lieu of being given their liberty, promised to remain in the city for a couple of days at least and give further testimony. No bonds were asked in their cases.

Following is the full verdict as announced:

"We, the Coroner's jury, find that Luther McCarty came by his death accidentally, the immediate cause being a subluxation of the cervical vertebrae at the Burns arena May 24, but there is no evidence to show how this injury occurred, we, the jury, therefore exonerate Arthur Pelky from all blame whatsoever."

This was signed by P. J. McManus as foreman. The other jurors were H. C. Hersey, R. Jackson, E. W. Schofield, C. P. McCallum, M. Dawson and E. A. Jones.

Trying for Criminal Case.

It was evident from the start that the crown, stung by the severe criticisms of local ministers, intended to make a desperate fight to get a verdict upon which to base a criminal case against Pelky and perhaps the others directly concerned in the unfortunate contest. The prosecuting attorney asked at once that all witnesses be excluded from the room before going on the stand, and carried his point.

Among the witnesses examined in great detail were McCarney, Burns, Smith, two of the local newspaper men and Dr. Moshier, who performed the autopsy. Pelky was not called at all, but remained during the entire case like a caged lion in a nearby room. He has been deeply affected all the way through, and during this hearing appeared almost heartbroken.

Dr. Moshier gave the most damaging testimony against the boxers. He declared that McCarty's neck had been dislocated under the base of the brain and that this injury caused the hemorrhage of the brain that brought about the death. He all but declared that the injury could have come about in no other way but from a blow or from the fall, the latter not being possible, because the boxer's neck did not strike any object as he fell.

Other Fights the Cause.

A highly dramatic incident came right at the close of the hearing when Pelky's attorney called upon Dr. C. J. Stewart, one of the oldest physicians in Alberta, to partially refute the testimony of Dr. Moshier. The physician was asked if he thought McCarty's injury could not have been caused by some other than a blow received. He said it was highly possible and then, rising to his feet, he shook his finger at the prosecutor, who was then questioning him, and during intense silence, shouted:

"It is my opinion that the injury to Luther McCarty was received from Flynn or somebody else in a previous encounter. In this contest, never."

He was excused in a hurry by the prosecutor.

Referee Smith testified that in all there were only about six blows landed during the contest, and that none of them was at all hard or effective and could hardly have caused even an abrasion of the skin. He said the boxing was about even up to the time of McCarty's collapse, and that Luther had turned, smiled and winked at his own corner after the final clinch, collapsing about eight or ten seconds later.

The State attempted to tangle up all the witnesses in an effort to prove that the contest was for the world's white championship: that all championship conditions had been carried out, and that it was in every way a prize fight.

Georgia Ends Successful Season

Prospects for 1914 Appear Good

ATHENS, GA., May 27.—Despite the fact that Georgia lost the series she would have rather won than any other—the one against Tech—the Red and Black has had a remarkably successful season, both financially and in games won and lost.

During the season the team scored a total of 174 runs against 68 for its opponents. Twenty-seven games were played against the best teams in Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and but eight games were lost. Two to Michigan, one to Ohio Wesleyan, one to Clemson, one to Auburn and three to Tech. Nineteen victories were celebrated and most of them were by one-sided scores, while seven were shutouts for Georgia. Five of the games that Georgia lost were by one run.

Outlook for 1914 Good.

Since the season has closed and the tension assumed the normal post-schedule laxity Coach Cunningham has busied himself taking an introspective stock of his material for 1914 and of his present splendid array of talent he expects to have all but three present at the beginning of next season, with a possibility of only two being absent.

Big John Morris, who has earned himself a place on the All-Southern team his first year in college ball, graduates in law in June, and will immediately "hang out his shingle" over in Hart County, from where he hails.

Covington, who has played third base for two years and who served four years at center on the football team, is a victim of the four-year rule and after June will also join the ranks of the colonels in the legal profession.

May Lose Hutchens.

Hutchens, the Red and Black's great receiver of this season, is likewise a member of the law department and will receive his "dip" this year. There is but a slight chance for him to return, not unless he leads the team.

Bowden has a contract from the Boston Nationals whenever he sees fit to annex his signature to it and he is liable to become a member of Stalling's Braves at any time after college closes this summer. He has one more year in Southern athletics, and on account of his ability in both baseball and football a strenuous effort will be made to persuade him to return. With his wing in the shape it is now he would find it rough sailing in any league and would certainly have hard going to make good.

Many to Return.

These are about all the sure losses and doubtfuls, which leave a good working nucleus for the team next year. Henderson is slated to return for a place on the football eleven and will draw the first base assignment again. Harrison is taking pharmacy and will have another year, while Clements at shortstop is a four-year man and should make a strong bid for All-Southern next year. Ginn, McWhorter and Erwin all are sure to return and so will Corley and Hitchcock. The latter pitched but few games this year, but with a little more training will be a mainstay next year. Corley has already made an enviable record, although playing his first year in college ball.

Cobb Praised Brown.

This completes the list of regulars, to which may be added Brown, the freshman, who played in several games and who wields the willow in such good style that Ty Cobb pronounced him the most finished batter on the Red and Black squad. He is an outfielder and will be heard from next year. Another sub who filled in to a good advantage while Covington was ruled off the team is Holden, captain of the scrubs. He has another year in college and will be a valuable asset at a future date.

KELLY IN DRAW SCRAP.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Eddie Kelley and "Fighting" Fitzpatrick, local prides, fought ten fast rounds to a draw here last night.

FLYNN'S FIGHT WITH COFFEY WAS A WONDER

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, America's greatest sporting fiction writer, covered the Jim Flynn-Jim Coffey heavyweight bout in New York last Friday night for the New York American. His story is of especial interest to local boxing fans, as Flynn does battle with Jim Savage at the Auditorium-Armory here on June 13. Here is Van Loan's story:

Andrew Chariglione, whose business name is Jim Flynn, stunted the Dublin Giant somewhat in a ten-round argument before the Garden Athletic Club. Jim Coffey had age, weight, reach and 70 per cent of the house with him before he started, but the battle-scarred warrior of Pueblo ripped and tore and slashed his way to victory, whaling away at his taller opponent until he reduced him to six feet of staggering, knock-kneed humanity.

Not since the memorable fight between Ketchel and O'Brien has so much real fighting been crammed into ten rounds, and it was Flynn's experience, aggressiveness and cast iron jaw that won for him.

For some reason best known to himself, Flynn elected to stand still for the better part of the first round and allow Coffey to pop him on the jaw with rights and lefts and the Dublin import made the most of his opportunities. He slammed the veteran 732 times by actual count and brought the gore in streams from one of Flynn's eyes.

Flynn Dives Into Coffey.

The Pueblo product finally grew angry under this constant bombardment and at the end of the round he was driving into Coffey head first, endeavoring to remove his head from his shoulders with wild rights and lefts.

Coffey continued to score in the second and third rounds and Flynn's countenance gradually assumed the appearance of an overripe tomato.

In the fourth round, however, the Pueblo hodcarrier took matters into his own hands and began to lead with his haymaker swings and when the bell rang Coffey was reeling from a succession of swings to the body and jaw.

Flynn Had Coffey Reeling.

In the fifth and the sixth matters were fairly even, but from the seventh until the end the tough old veteran forged into the lead, and though Coffey kept up his left jabs and right crosses there was no power behind them. Flynn herded his taller opponent from one side of the ring to the other endeavoring to land the finishing punch.

Jim Flynn may be on the toboggan, but he is still good enough to put an enduring crimp in the aspirations of many members of the younger set.

Bobrick believes that many other cities will be represented in the Federal next year. Buffalo and Detroit are two cities practically sure of entering the third league zone. The Toledo officers will be elected in the near future, and plans will be made for the organizing of the Toledo Club.

THE TRIPLE TIE

$250 in Prizes for Best Solution of "The Triple Tie"

YOU read the first seven installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this eighth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Wait till I tell you, Mr. Callaway," interrupted the manager. "Excuse us a minute, Gordon," he added, "I want to say something to Mr. Callaway," and he drew the president to an inner office, where he told him the little he had been able to learn about Kelly. When he had concluded, Callaway said:

"And you signed him up on the strength of that drive that broke the bull's ribs?"

"Yes, sir; that was enough for me."

"Well, Billy, you know I consider you are best manager in the world. And I reckon you know what you're doing. I will put through this contract, but remember, Billy, you must shoulder all the responsibility. If this Gordon Kelly 'blows up' the laugh will be on you, not me."

"I'll take my chances on that," said the manager, confidently.

"Anyway, it will make good reading in the newspapers. Send for the reporters, Billy, and we'll tell 'em all about your world beater."

The reporters came, they saw, but they were not conquered. They took copious notes of all the manager told them, but they refused to "fall" for Kelly as a ballplayer. They admired his shape and looks but demanded that they be "shown" before committing themselves to extravagant praise of the new man.

"All right, boys; I'll show you," declared Bill Smith, "and, mark my words"—every reporter made a mark in his notebook—"mark my words this fellow will turn out to be a wonder."

"Hope so, Billy," replied the reporters, as they filed out of the room.

They all handled the news in a facetious manner, in one of the newspapers there was this headline:

"Joshed" in the Papers.

ADONIS JOINS
THE CRACKERS

Bill Smith Signs a Player Who Has Never Seen a Game of Ball.

Another newspaper had this headline:

LEARNED BASEBALL IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

Atlanta Club Secured a "World Beater" Who Never Played a Game of Baseball.

And the third newspaper had this to say in its headlines:

COTILLION LEADER
TO PLAY BASEBALL

Bill Smith Lands a Handsome Young Man That Knows Everything Except the National Game.

Within twenty-four hours Bill Smith was the recipient of all sorts of pleasant jibes. Every friend or acquaintance he met had something to say about the "world beater." The manager took everything in good part, but mentally acknowledged that he had overplayed himself in making public the signing of Gordon Kelly. "I ought to have said nothing about it," he thought. "Now he will just have to make good or they'll give me the laugh all over the country. But," he added, grimly," that kid will make good, all right, all right."

CHAPTER X.

WHAT Gordon Kelly himself thought of the "funny" stories printed about him in the newspapers no one ever knew. Bill Smith eyed his "world beater" keenly when he reported in the clubhouse at Ponce DeLeon Park early Monday morning. But Kelly was the same, quiet, good natured young man Smith had always found him to be.

"He's a game dog, sure enough," said the manager to himself, and satisfied with this disposal of the case, he began putting on his uniform.

It was the day on which the players of the Atlanta club were to report for spring practice, and it was a fine day overhead. There was to be a month of hard grind for the men in order that they might get into condition for the gruelling pennant race of the Southern League. Players of the rival clubs in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Chattanooga, Mobile, Nashville and Montgomery were supposed to report to their managers about the same time. In other parts of the South, in Athens, Ga., in Augusta, in Hot Springs, Ark., in Martin Springs, Tex., in Tampa, Fla., and elsewhere the big league clubs of the North, and the Red Sox champions of the world and of the American League; the New York Giants, champions of the National League; the Chicago Cubs, the Detroit Tigers, the Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Browns, of St. Louis, the Cleveland club, the Washington club, the Pittsburg Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds, the Phillies, the Brooklyns and the Boston Braves were already training under the watchful eyes of the big league managers.

In far off California the Chicago White Sox and in Bermuda the New York Americans in charge of Frank Chance, had pitched their training camps. At about this time, too, many of the International League clubs—Buffalo, Toronto, Providence, Montreal, Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Rochester—were scheduled to open their training season below the Mason and Dixon line. Likewise the American Association clubs—St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Toledo, Columbus, Milwaukee and Louisville—were due in the South about this time for their annual visit. All these clubs leave the "Sunny Land" richer every year by about $200,000, of which the railroads and the hotels get the lion's share and the moving picture shows, the laundries and the cigar stands what is left.

Players Arrive.

Smith and Kelly were hardly dressed in their uniforms before the players began to arrive and within half an hour there were fully a dozen of them on hand. There were "Whitey" Alperman, the old National League player, now second-baseman of the Atlanta club, as good as ever fielded a grounder when it was hot or muffed a liner when it was bewhiskered; Balley, the heavy-hitting outfielder; McAllister, who wants to become an umpire; Long, Nixon, Smith, the new third-baseman; Musser and Brady, the clever pitchers; Dobard and Kernan, infielders, and Dunn, the catcher.

There were shaking of hands and merry greetings. Gordon Kelly met all the arrivals as fast as they came to the clubhouse. The homes of these players were scattered all over the country. The men had not seen each other since the last of September.

Alperman was the first of the new arrivals to don his uniform. He laced his shoes and then arose and stretched himself.

"Gee, I wish the Southern League season was over," he said, with a yawn.

This remark caused a great laugh in the clubhouse.

"Starting to 'crab' before you've touched a baseball, eh?" observed Bill Smith.

"No," returned the second baseman. "I wanted to get it off my system, that's all. Come on, boys, let's get a move on," and the players, laughing and shouting like schoolboys, ran on the field and began their season's work with that time-honored exercise of tossing the ball in pairs.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

"Study Your Expression," Says Pretty Gertrude Barnes

Miss Barnes in a summery pose.

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"SMILE and curl up your mouth corners," said merry Gertrude Barnes. She had just finished doing five character songs in characteristic costumes. She had run the gamut of emotion from the naughty little "enfant terrible" through the stranded show girl longing for the "old Kentucky home" to the mirth-mad exponent of "Row, row, row." And all this earnest and successful effort to please her audience left her cool, buoyant and ready to give the whole world of girls the kindly benefit of her study of how to have "a sane mind in a healthy body."

"Expression is important for character as well as to aid the search after beauty," said pretty Miss Gertrude, with laughing earnestness. "I used to be afraid to smile all I wanted to for fear I would get those heavy lines from nostril to lip; and then suddenly I became aware of all the hard-looking faces one sees—and the chief reason for the hardness was down drooping, disagreeable looking lips. I decided at once to take a chance on the lesser evil, and began curling my mouth up at the corners, even when I was not particularly anxious to 'look pleasant, please;' now as a result there may be lines around my mouth, but they are lines of pleasantness—aren't they?" she added anxiously. "And sometimes when I am ready to feel cross my mouth keeps on smiling—and I recover."

Merry good nature and kindly interest in life happen to be among the greatest charms of Miss Barnes' animated, expensive face, and very pleasing is the twinkle that reflects from big brown eyes to the merry dimpled corners of her this-is-a-fine-old-world mouth.

"You may safely go on smiling," I said with a smile of my own, "but how about all the other expressions you bring in rapid succession to your face—don't they make lines?"

A Brand-New One.

"Not lines that stay," answered Miss Barnes. "You see, I have a few methods of keeping my skin in good condition. They are cold water, sunburn and tan."

"Sunburn and tan!" I exclaimed. "I thought they were fatal to the fine texture of the skin."

"Perhaps they are fatal to the old, worn-out outer layer they destroy. But they give the fresh new layer waiting underneath a chance, and they help give strong, firm flesh, good, healthy flesh, without which fine-textured skin is just impossible. And sunburn and tan come from plenty of sunlight and fresh air, which are the best things in the whole world for the health and beauty seeker. So there you are in a perfect circle, when you have added plenty of cold water—and served up a fine, healthy skin on a background of strong, firm flesh that can throw off the little lines you make temporarily by twisting your face around into any extreme of expressions you choose.

"Cold water—cold water—cold water! Won't you sing its praises very earnestly, please? And tell all the girls not to be afraid of the charm of expression—they may indulge in it all they like if they have been sunburned and tanned and cold-watered, with good massage-like splashes that make the skin strong enough to throw off the little temporary blemishes of lines and wrinkles.

"Oh, my circle is not complete yet," laughed the cheery star, "I have a little more to say about fresh air. Go out into it all you can, and hunt and ride if you can. Riding is wonderful for the muscles of the limbs; hunting develops the muscles of the waist—but if you can do neither, swim. Anyone can swim if she just chooses to learn how—and it is a most wonderful, inspiring, lung-filling, flesh hardening form of exercise.

A "Water Baby."

"I manufactured a lot of my own healthfulness by going after it very earnestly. Being a water-baby and being an outdoor girl are almost equally important; they both make you healthy, and if you are wise enough to be both your chances of being a beauty increase.

"You see, fresh air and exercise have trained my figure for me, so I don't have to rely on corsets to do it. They have trained my skin for me, so I don't have to hold my face in a mask-like expression in order to avoid lines and wrinkles—so there is my basis, and then I go ahead and try to make the most of my looks, although I know perfectly well that the result is not beauty."

But on this latter bit of information Miss Gertrude Barnes has a monopoly, for good features added to the winsome charm of a bright face and the poise of a healthy body surely deserve the title of beauty.

"Now about arranging your face to the best advantage," said Miss Barnes with the earnest attention to every detail that makes her work so pleasing and conversation with her a true delight. "Of course, it is inadvisable for a girl who wishes to be accepted at face value as a lady to use any makeup on the street, for she is sure to look conspicuous and artificial—for the one all-embracing reason that without the earnest study an actress gives the subject the gentle art of makeup becomes a farce, instead of an art.

"However, any girl can teach her eyebrows to grow in a smooth, pretty curve by brushing them at night and morning with a tiny brush; and good cream will keep the face clean as to its pores as well as on the surface; and a well-poised head adds a final touch of charm. Girls should cultivate the habit of holding their heads with the natural poise of a flower instead of jutting forward like a swag, or bending back with the curve of a lightning-struck tree.

"And learn to design your own clothes. Make them express YOU so your personality will be a rounded whole without one jarring note."

And since there is no jarring note in Miss Barnes' unaffected, wholesome personality, this final bit of advice fits in with the beauty study of an expert in whatever she undertakes—and is well worth following.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it to-day.

Household Suggestions

A little soap shredded into the boiler on washing day makes the clothes a good color, and if you put a small piece into the starch it will make the ironing easier, and it imparts a lovely gloss to the clothes. All the little bits of soap that are left over should be put into a jar with a little water. Place the jar in a moderate oven and leave until the soap has dissolved. This is excellent for washing flannels and woollen things.

In choosing chickens, observe chiefly the length of leg. The best chickens have short legs in proportion to the size of the body; the bones are small and the flesh is white. The best test of age is found at the end of the breast-bone. When the bird is young, the end of the bone is soft and gelatinous, and it becomes gradually harder as the age of the bird increases.

A good way in which to keep plants fresh without watering them when the house must be closed is to take all the plants to the cellar or some other cold place and set them in tubs, with an ordinary brick under each flower pot. Pour into the tubs just enough water to cover the bricks. It is best to place the tubs by an east window if possible.

To boil milk without fear of burning, put two or three tablespoonfuls of water in the saucepan; let it boil rapidly for two or three minutes; add the milk, and it will not burn, however fierce the fire may be.

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Little cousin," he said with the deep tenderness of the man who finds happiness in the joy of the woman he loves, though he be shut from her very life, "there is nothing the matter with me. Life gives me almost all I want. No one can have everything. A banker's life has not much color and passion; I would rather make music than money. But don't think he stupidly discontented—or ungrateful for all I have. I cannot say all I mean! There is one thing in the world—in ALL THE WORLD there is one thing I want. For this I would give the world itself, if it were mine—and all the money in the world. And all life would be music, and color and passion then. And I can't tell you—I must never speak of it to you—and you will never understand!"

Outside sunshine and roses—here renunciation of al lthe joy life must never hold. Jacob felt that he must stifle in this litle room where hope had died. He strode to the doorway—to the gleaming terrace.

The Old Story.

And then slowly, swayed by a feeling she felt must be pity, Charlotte followed him, "Jacob, perhaps I do understand."

"Charlotte! If you do—I shall have spoken no word. In a sense it was not honorable of me—though at first I only meant to warn you, and I never thought; I should guard you against myself. Dear little Charlotte—forget what I said!"

"I cannot forget—so easily!" Charlotte's eyes were very soft, her little quivering lips were dangerously near, but Dame Fate had chosen capriciously to make this a day of unfinished climaxes, and only Frau Gudala's ready wit and loving heart intervened between the girl and a rather tragic scene, for at the particular moment when the sunny doorway framed the pretty picture she made as she stood looking pleadingly at a sorely-tempted Jacob, the hall door opened, admitting the Duke and Frau Gudula and her sons.

Gustavus of Taunus was asking: "I may have the honor of addressing your daughter?" and Grannie saved the situation. "There is wine in the garden—if you will honor me. Charlotte, dear, will you and Jacob show Count Fehrenberg the way? Duke Gustavus, could you make up your mind to a little chat with an old woman? Would you stop here with me—alone—for a few minutes? I ask it as a favor." And so Grannie prepared to make her fight for the happiness of her children.

"May I forget for a few moments that I am an old Jewess—and you a reigning Prince? I want to speak to you about Charlotte. She lost her mother many years ago—and now, at this important time of her life, I must try to be a mother to the child. My son Solomon, you know, sometimes sees only one side to a question, the one he wants to see. But I have looked at this marriage between you and Charlotte from many points of view—have you? Do you see the difficulties and danger?"

Gustavus thought for a moment of the girl who wished him to make this marriage in order that she might be the cousin of a wealthy man instead of a pauper Prince. The tricksy jade with her lying eyes—and for one supreme moment he had thought perhaps he and Evelyn might abdicate and face poverty together—well, she wanted money—on with the dance called life! Prince of Taunus, must dance to his piping—then dance merrily and proudly for all the world to see.

He answered the earnest old Jewess lightly indeed. "Oh, I admit the dangers in this marriage, Baroness. But they make the prospect more fascinating—to me. After all, I do not want my future comfortably laid out for me with mathematical certainty! I prefer to run a litle risk! I have lived in a world that grows tired of old games—and is always ready to learn new rules!"

"But marriage is not a game," said the old woman. To her marriage was a Sacrament.

"It may be an adventure if the consequences are not too early seen. Why, my life has ben one series of adventures. When I was a child Napoleon was shaking the ground he marched over. One day my father's little throne fell down, and was picked up and dropped into the Corsican sack! I have known exile, and my crown has been restored to me. I have had money—and it has gone—well, perhaps, I should have had to go after it—pouf!—if your sons had not now once again lifted me upon my little throne. Oh, you see, Baroness, I have had my ups and downs."

"You treat me as a plaything. What blessing can there be for a girl of my people in sharing such a life?"

"When I am married, Baroness"—

"Don't call me that! It is a pretense that does not please me," said the old Jewess impatiently to the reigning Duke of Taunus.

Gustavus exclaimed in amazement: "A pretense! The Emperor has—"

"Your Highness," interposed the old woman, "no Emperor can ennoble me—at my age of seventy-one. Rank is not worn so easily by old woman."

Gustavus of Taunus rose to the supreme height of his manhood as, with a sudden illuminating respect for a fineness he might have failed to glimpse in his little cousin's soul, but saw now in full splendod in the gentle mien of the old Jewess, he answered Frau Gudula: "I think, madame, you belong to a more ancient nobility than my own."

Then, in a little access of mischief, he added: "I shall be proud to be connected with you by marriage."

Frau Gudula had played her highest stake for Charlotte's happiness—and had failed! "Give your compliments to my grandchild, Duke Gustavus, and convince her with them if you can. I wash my hands of this marriage. The matter is beyond me. I pray Providence to guide and guard my little girl." With brimming eyes that scarce could see the sunshine, Frau Gudula walked to the door by the great arbor of pink roses and looked at the merry group sipping her beloved Meyer Amschel's burgundy out in the garden. Well, it is not given to every woman to be the wife of a man she can worship. Poor little Charlotte.

The Pity of It!

Yes, the pity of it---that children, little children, four, five, seven years of age, must be stunted and twisted by long hours of toil. Imagine a little baby girl---your little baby girl---standing all day at a table painfully sorting the petals of artificial roses. Imagine the dirt and squalor of the disease-ridden tenements. The sunlight never penetrates where these babies have to labor---human flowers withered in the making of artificial ones. And the average wage for each child is 2 cents an hour. Imagine it---in this country of ours that we call enlightened.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

WAIT A WHILE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am 22, and have been keeping company with a certain girl for six weeks. At first it seemed love at first sight, but lately she has grown cold. I buy her candy and flowers and try to please her, and her parents have taken a liking to me. But she now assumes an indifferent air. Do you think my proposal would be accepted? I am madly in love with her.
S. S.

Has it occurred to you that she may have grown tired of seeing so much of you? Try an application of that old adage, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

In any event, a proposal after an acquaintance of only six weeks is apt to be premature.

DON'T LET HIM KNOW.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of 18 years and in love with a man of 30 years. This man is a friend of my folks. He has never taken me out and he is very nice to me, and always talks of getting married. He doesn't know I love him. Please tell me how I could win his love.
A SPANISH GIRL.

Suppose I were to tell you to let him know of your love. You are only 18, and girls of that age transfer their hearts easily. If you let him know of your love to-day, the chances are you will love another man to-morrow. Spare yourself humiliation by keeping your love a secret until he asks for it.

NOT IMPROPER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Do you think it proper for a girl who is keeping steady company to ask the man when she will see him next? A. L. W.

Their intimacy warrants such a question from her, but I would not want her to be urgent or persistent, and it is in better taste if she lets him take the initiative in making future engagements.

MOTHERS SHOULD CALL FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady and wish to know if it is proper for the young lady's mother to call on my mother, or my mother to call on her, my mother being the elder. We will soon be engaged. S. S. L.

Such overtures should come from the family of the man, never from the family of the girl.

THE LADY FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Which is proper: For a lady to greet a gentleman first, or a gentleman to greet a lady, while walking on the street? ARCO.

The lady is the first always to give some sign of recognition.

Do You Know---

Some curious experiences seem to have befallen Mr. William Campbell, late of the Black Watch, who has just finished a 50,000-mile walk, in a kilt, through India, Ceylon, Australia and New Zealand. In Italy his dancing of a Highland fling in the street led to arrest, a New Zealand chief offered him a wife in exchange for his costume, and in Australia he lavished money on eau-de-cologne in order to keep the mosquitoes away from his knees. He was nearly murdered at a religious festival in Ceylon, being taken for a devil.

The Quebec agency of the Canadian Marine Department has received word that a gas buoy which drifted from its position in the lower St. Lawrence River during the winter of 1912 has been picked up by the lightship at Hellewick, New South Wales. It is supposed that the buoy drifted round Cape Horn, a distance of 16,000 miles. The date of the buoy's disappearance is not given, but even if it took place early in the winter of 1911-12 the buoy would have to drift 30 miles a day or more to reach New South Wales in the time.

Snared!

With the Golden Apple of Love for Bait

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

NELL BRINKLEY SAYS

IN this fashion is it done! In the depths of a lovely forest, velveted underfoot in emerald-moss and sewn thick with flowers—forget-me-nots, heartease and such like soft names—hide certain wary wights with very fat cheeks and tummies! Over the runways they set their snares—a cunning loop of golden cord—thrown over a high tree-bough and down, as high from the ground as—a maid's waist. On the green moss under the shining loop (which is so like a slanting sunbeam that a strolling lady would never catch it in her bright eye in the world) they drop a golden apple. And on the golden apple the sun smites hard enough to enchant and blind a maid with its flame. One malicious wight, the coldest-blooded of all, shins up the tree into the leafy green shadow and lies there with his bow drawn and a keen-tipped arrow necked. The rest fall upon the other end of the cord. They hold their breath, their eyes harden and brighten. The feathery curl on the tip top of one's head waves idly in the wind! One itches his pink heel with the toes of his other foot. One breathes too loud and gets a fat knee in his back for his stupidity. They WAIT—the cord a bit slack. Down the runway comes a maid, with soft black hair, primroses over her ears, a narrow slashed skirt (the better to dance the Tango in), silver buckles on her shoes and an unsuspecting sweet blue eye! And the sun on the golden apple smites into her eyes! The wights behind the tree-bole stiffen and dig their toes into the moss. With a little cry the maid pinches up her silken skirt between a forefinger and thumb and runs swiftly—in a soft rush—she dives down with a greedy hand for the apple in the moss. Her head hovers within the big golden loop. She straightens—ah-h-h down slithers the noose over her shoulders—"Heya"—the wights lean and pull like mad, and my lady's body is twirling in midair, her little heels kicking nothing! "Heya!"—the wight in the tree lets his arrow go singing straight to the captive's heart—and another maid is snared!

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The father was impressed of a sudden with the fact that, while this affair was of supreme import to himself, it was, after all, of still greater significance to his son. To himself, the chief concerns were of the worldly kind. To this boy, the vital thing was something deeper, something of the heart; for, however absurd his feeling, the truth remained that he loved the woman. Yes, it was the son's name that Mary Turner had taken, as well as that of his father. In the case of the son, she had taken not only his name, but his very life. Yes, it was, indeed, Dick's tragedy. Whatever he, the father, might feel, the son was, after all, more affected. He must suffer more, must lose more, must pay more with happiness for his folly.

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect, but he could not let the situation go without protest, protest most vehement.

"Dick," he cried, and his big voice was shaken a little by the force of his emotion, "boy, you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow." He stood very erect, staring steadfastly out of his clear gray eyes into those of his son. His heavy face was rigid with feeling; the coarse mouth bent slightly in a smile of troubled fondness, as he added more softly: "You owe me that much."

The son's eyes met his father's freely. There was respect in them, and affection, but there was something else, too, something the older man recognized as beyond his control. He spoke gravely, with a deliberate conviction.

Gilder's Voice Rang Out.

"I owe something to her, too, Dad."

But Gilder would not let the statement go unchallenged. His heavy voice rang out rebukingly, overtoned with protest.

"What can you owe her?" he demanded, indignantly. "She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally, it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. The courts hold that is only a part of the marriage actually. The fact that she doesn't receive you makes it simpler, too. It can be arranged. We must get you out of the scrape."

He turned and went to the desk, as if to sit, but he was halted by his son's answer, given very gently, yet with a note of finality that to the father's ear rang like the crack of doom.

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

That was all, but those plain words summed the situation, made the issue a matter not of advice, but of the heart.

Gilder persisted, however, in trying to evade the integral fact of his son's feeling. Still he tried to fix the issue on the known unsavory reputation of the woman.

"You want to stay married to this jail bird!" he stormed.

"She Is Justified."

A gust of fury swept over the boy. He loved the woman, in spite of all; he respected her, even reverenced her. To hear her thus named moved him to a rage almost beyond his control. But he mastered himself. He remembered that the man who spoke loved him; he remembered, too, that the word of opprobrium was no more than the truth, however offensive it might be to his sensitiveness. He waited a moment until he could hold his voice even. Then his words were the sternest protest that could have been uttered, though they came from no exercise of thought, only out of the depths of his heart.

"I'm very fond of her."

That was all. But the simple sincerity of the saying gripped the father's mood as no argument could have done. There was a little silence. After all, what could meet such loving loyalty?

When at last he spoke Gilder's voice was subdued, a little husky.

"Now that you know?" he questioned. There was no faltering in the answer.

"Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. Then abruptly the young man spoke with the energy of perfect faith in the woman. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way, in her own mind, anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison. She feels that the world owes her—"

But the older man would not permit the assertion to go uncontradicted. That reference to the woman's innocence was an arraignment of himself, for it had been he who sent her to the term of imprisonment.

"Don't talk to me about her innocence!" he said, and his voice was ominous. "I suppose next you will argue that, because she's been clever enough to keep within the law since she's got out of State's prison, she's not a criminal. But let me tell you—crime is crime, whether the law touches it in the particular case or whether it does not."

Gilder faced his son sternly for a moment, and then presently spoke again with deeper earnestness.

"There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up."

The son met his father's gaze with a level look in which there was no weakness.

"I've told you, Dad—" he began.

"You must, I tell you," the father insisted. Then he went on quickly, with a tone of utmost positiveness. "If you don't, what are you going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters—for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. He was furious at this supposition that she would continue in her irregular practices.

But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the Rogues' Gallery, but they will take another. Yes, and the imprints of her fingers, and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. It was blasphemy to think of her in such case, subjected to the degradation of these processes. Yet, every word had in it the piercing horrible sting of truth. His face whitened. He raised a supplicating hand.

"Father!"

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine." There was a little pause, and the father stood rigid, menacing. The final question came rasping. "What are you going to do about it?"

Dick went forward until he was close to his father. Then he spoke with profound conviction.

"It will never happen. She will go straight, Dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder once again put his hand tenderly on his son's shoulder. His voice was modulated to an unaccustomed mildness as he spoke.

"Be sensible, boy," he pleaded softly. "Be sensible!"

Dick dropped down on the couch, and made his answer very gently, his eyes unseeing as he dwelt on the things he know of the woman he loved.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"ME and brother Wilfred spent a week-end up in the country, and I have just came back," said the Manicure Lady. "I would rather than not spend all my week-ends in the country, George, because the air is so restful up there, but I guess Wilfred don't want to go back no more to the town where we was.

"You see, George, my poor, deluded brother had an idea that he could sail into the little town where we was going and just tell them that he was from New York. He thought that would make him an idol in said town. I didn't think so for a minute, George, because I know how people is in small towns. They mind their own business and everybody else's, but they don't care a rap where they find out you came from. You might as well try to make a gorilla kiss your hand as to make a small towner respect you because you are a New Yorker. They simply don't care where you are from, and the way they treated my poor brother I guess the bigger the town you came from the less they care."

They Go to Europe.

"I don't blame them," said the Head Barber. "I don't see why a man should figure himself a favorite just because he lives in a little New York flat and rides up and down town in the subway. How is that going to make a man wise? Most of the fellows that was born in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge—the kind that comes in here sometimes to get shaved—ain't got much idea of the great country they are living in. If they save up a little dough, they don't go out to the wonderful Pacific Coast. No; they go to Europe and get bunked. They pay a guide a lot of dough to show them some place where an English king had his nephews choked to death in a tower, and then they come back and tell about their travels."

"I hope you ain't doing a monologue, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I was trying to tell you something about this week-end party, if you are enough of a gent to listen. Well, Wilfred and me reached the town all right, and the minute we got to the hotel and were seated with our country friends around the table, poor brother pulls the very phrase that I asked him not to. 'This is fair,' he says to the company, 'but little old New York for mine.' I knew right off that he had made a bonehead play, because I seen the folks look at each other kind of funny, but he doesn't gete wise, not Wilfred. 'The reason I like Manhattan,' he babbles right on, 'is because Manhattan is the market for brains. I write, as perhaps some of you people know,' says poor brother, 'and the brains of the country, in literature, all flock to New York. If I were a farmer, I would like it up here, but being a writer, I have to be in the heart of the literary world, little old New York.'

A Quiet Fellow.

"There was a nice, quiet-looking fellow in the party, George, that I seen looking over my fool brother kind of sly and unobstructive like. He was dressed rough, because he was on a fishing trip, but I seen right away from his calm, well-bred misdemeanor that he was a gent. He listened a long time while Wilfred was telling them what a terrible strain it is on a writer to keep writing, and he even stood for my brother's reciting some of his own poems right at the table with his mouth full of chow-chow and new bread. Then he got up and went out with a smile at me. I seen then and there that him and me would be good friends, because we both knew Wilfred through and through.

"Honest to goodness, George, do you know who he was? I asked one of the ladies, and she told me. The gent that had been listening to Wilfred's hot air about writing and writers was George Ade, who wrote 'Fables in Slang' and 'Horatius at the Bridge' and 'David Copperfield' and a lot of other books and plays."

"Did Wilfred find out who he was?" asked the Head Barber.

"Sure he did, but it didn't feaze him. He said that the time would go swift for the party with two clever writers at the same table!"

The Care-Free Spin

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE is this difference: She is an Old Maid if she is old fashioned and resigned, and a Bachelor Girl if she fights hard.

It must be dreary to be a Spin and have no husband come home and growl all evening about the high cost of living.

When a Spin knows how to smooth a man's plumage an ideal wife is lost to the world.

No one can save money quite as fast as a Spin after she has put aside the curling iron with the conviction that no man is worth having.

When all her friends unite in saying "What a good time she has," you can bet "She's is either a Spin or a widow.

It is easy to compliment the mother of children, but when a woman has become a real old Spin the only way to reach her is to appeal through what she learned at school.

"The top of her voice" is a common expression, but the top note depends entirely on whether a woman is married or a Spin. Mothers reach a high key through experience in screaming at the children, their husbands and the dog, but the top of a Spin's voice is a low pitch, and when she tries to raise it it becomes a squeal. The top of a mother's voice would stop a fire engine, the top of a Spin's voice isn't loud enough to call the cat home from the next yard.

Once Upon a Time there lived an Old Maid. She did not call herself a Spin. She was frank about it, and admitted she was an Old Maid, despising such subterfuges as Spin and Bachelor Girl. The Old Maid was lonesome, and lonesomeness for an Old Maid is DANGEROUS. She was more lonesome than her friends realized, and one day left Lonesome Land by walking from the altar with a Man. One morning a few years later her husband left the house after a stormy scene, banging the door with such violence that pictures and plates tumbled from the walls. The noise awoke the Twins, and they set up a Howl. "At least," said the ex-Old Maid, as she tried to soothe the crying babies and pick up pictures and broken glass and china at the same time, "I Am No Longer Lonesome." And having said that she said All!

ONLY FOUR DAYS LEFT TO ENTER GEORGIAN'S GREAT PONY CONTEST

Four days remain in which contestants can be nominated for The Georgian and The American pony outfit contest. Several boys and girls are believed to be preparing to enter at the last hour possible, and with a considerable number of votes pledged, believing there will be some advantage in taking the leaders by surprise.

This, though, is not likely to avail them much. Probably they believe the leaders are napping, but nothing could be further from the truth. Besides, late entrants are losing the value of vote coupons more than fifteen days old.

Those already in the race remain closely bunched.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook so far has been the greatest vote producer. She had 59,960 votes Tuesday, while Florence Greenoe in her district has polled 40,620.

Several other contestants have passed the 40,000 mark. George Rosser, in District 1, has 41,620; Miss Robert Harbour, in District 2, 48,055. Ross Greer and Mose Brodkin, in the City Carriers' and Newsboys' race, are running neck and neck with 42,145 and 41,700, respectively.

Another close contest, though the vote totals are not so large, is the contest for school boys and girls outside Georgia, where Lena Mae Smith, Knoxville, Tenn., has 16,715 votes, and Fain E. Webb, Jr., 16,650.

Names and standing of contestants follow:

Plot Charged by Defense of Gibson

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May 27.—The defense of Burton W. Gibson, the New York lawyer, accused of drowning Countess Rosa Menschik Szabo in order to get her estate, was revealed to-day.

Dr. Otto H. Schultz, Coroner's physician of New York, who testified that the countess had been strangled to death, will be charged with forcing the tongue down the Countess' throat while performing the autopsy, thus giving the appearance of strangulation.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—There will be showers to-night in New England, the Middle Atlantic and northern portion of the South Atlantic States, continuing Wednesday in New England, New York and New Jersey. Elsewhere east of the Mississippi River the weather will be fair to-night and Wednesday, with higher temperatures Wednesday throughout the upper Lake and Western lower Lake regions and the Ohio Valley.

General Forecast.

Following is the general forecast until 7 p. m. Wednesday:

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night in north and central portions.

Virginia—Showers to-night; Wednesday cloudy.

North Carolina—Showers to-night and Wednesday.

South Carolina—Showers to-night or Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night.

Florida—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

Alabama—Fair to-night; cooler in north and central portions; Wednesday fair, warmer in north portion.

Mississippi—Fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly warmer Wednesday in the interior.

Tennessee—Fair to-night; Wednesday fair, warmer.

Louisiana—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Wednesday

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Opinion on Government reports seem to have crystallized around 83 per cent, which, if June reports are indicative of final production, should be interpreted bearishly.

Norden & Co.: It is possible there may be further selling in an attempt to discount a good bureau report.

Sternberger, Slinn & Co.: It is still a weather market.

Newburger, Worms & Nawman: All strong spots should be taken advantage of to sell, especially the new crops.

Logan & Bryan: In favor sales on any uprisings from this level.

Thompson, Towle & Co.: Market may go lower, but we do not advise selling at present.

SHORT COVERING PUTS COTTON UP

One Western Operator Covers 35,000 Bales on Narrow Market, Causing the Advance.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Poor cables, coupled with bearish weather map, led to active selling at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 3 points lower than Monday's final. Offerings were well absorbed and soon after the call the loss was made up.

During the forenoon the market was firm and under persistent buying from the large spot interests shorts covered considerable short lines. McFadden, Riordan and Parrott led the buying movement. Riordan was credited with purchasing about 12,000 to 15,000 bales of October and December, which was said to be for Wall Street. The character of the buying chased shorts to cover. Offerings were very light and scattered. It is believed by many that there is still an existing short interest in the market.

October and December displayed extraordinary firmness. October advanced 8 points and December 9 over the initial level. Other positions followed the advance moderately, advancing 3 to 7 points.

The advance came in the face of extremely bearish advices from all parts of the belt, as well as from abroad. A cable said:

"The market feels the influence of Continental buying, spinners well stocked, and notwithstanding a fair Manchester business we expect a small spot market in Liverpool for the present. Think market will be lower if crop accounts continue favorable."

Weather developments overnight were of the most favorable character. No rains fell of consequence. The map promises very favorable weather overnight; fair and warmer in the western and central States; cloudy and probably showers in the Carolinas and East Tennessee warmer.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: May, 11.54; July, 11.62; August, 11.41; October, 11.09; January, 11.05.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: May, 12.34; July, 12.02; August, 11.64; October, 11.21; January, 11.22.

Estimated cotton receipts Tuesday:

	1913.	1912.
New Orleans	2,200 to 2,600	2,145

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Liverpool developed further weakness, showing futures this morning about 2 points lower than due. Spots, 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. London news says that Bulgarians fired on the Greek fleet. War between the allies nearer and this new menace distracts attention from peace negotiations.

Weather conditions continue very favorable. The map shows fair and warm weather west of Alabama, cloudy in the Atlantics and Tennessee; some nice rains in Tennessee and Western North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy weather and showers in the Carolinas, where rain is needed, and fair and warmer weather over the rest of the belt.

The market was idle during the first two hours around last night's closing prices, waiting for the weekly Government weather report at 11 o'clock, which is expected to be partly unfavorable, as it will cover the three-day cool spell of last week. Some little scalpers' buying caused a few points advance.

DROUTH IN ILLINOIS ENDED.

CHICAGO, May 27.—B. W. Snow wires from Vincennes, Ind.: "Generally good rains from St. Louis; clear across Illinois and East. Light in spots, but enough to end drouth talk for the present. Wheat in big producing sections of Illinois promises unusually heavy rate of yield and this rain practically makes it. Crop is lighter in eastern counties, but fully up to the average on the Indiana side of the Wabash River. South of Terre Haute the crop is spotted with the average hardly up to the usual promise.

"Oats consistently poor all across Illinois; rather better on Indiana side, but distinctly a poor outlook. The rains will help, but crop in Missouri, Illinois and southwest Indiana will be a very short one regardless of future weather. The damage suffered when oats were germinating can not be repaid. Corn planting practically done and conditions favorable to a good start. Farmers are not making any contracts for delivery of new grain.

"Plenty of old corn everywhere, but oats stock reported light."

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Reports to the Journal of Commerce state that the cotton crop is backward in the Carolinas and about normal in Tennessee. The acreage is slightly increased and the stands in general are poor. Rain was badly needed, but showers have been general recently. Some replanting in Tennessee with an increase in the acreage. In North Carolina the season is about two weeks late; prospects are much brighter since the rains. South Carolina condition may fall below last year, when it was 79. Tennessee condition shows an increase of nearly ten points over last year, when it was 73.5.

* * *

It is believed that a good deal of short cotton has been covered during the past few days and a lower market is predicted, based on favorable weather conditions and reports which are coming in. Around the close yesterday Riordan bought about 10,000 bales of October and December. McFadden brokers also bought. However, they sold old crop positions.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable. Shows fair and warmer in western portion of the Atlantics. Cloudy and warm in the Atlantics and Tennessee. No rain except in Tennessee and parts of North Carolina, where it will be beneficial.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Favorable crop reports came from many quarters, and the cotton market declined. Of course, a wave of bearish sentiment passed over the rings and low-price people discussed the outlook for declines in more or less confident tones. Ten cents for new crops was talked of as a sure thing, nine cents as a probability, eight cents as likely, and, according to one lone bear, seven cents as a possibility. All the while the bull faction kept quiet and permitted the spell of depression to run its course. At the close underlying strength seemed to develop, and students of the market expressed the belief that near future fluctuations would range within 20 points.

"The weather over Sunday was very favorable, temperatures were higher and, on the face of things, the crop seemed to be in a fair way to make seasonable progress. The man on the fence, while admitting the presence of much more favorable climatic conditions, was inclined to believe that the flood of favorable crop advices, coming right at the close of the period on which the Government's condition bulletin on June 2 is to be based, traces some of its inspiration to a possible need of an offset to any relatively low condition that might have been reported on May 25 from the less favorable sections."

Weld makes the condition of the crop 84.

* * *

McFadden, Parrott and Riordan were the leading buyers to-day. Mohr and Hentz probably the best sellers.

* * *

Wall Street covered through Riordan.

Riordan was also a big buyer of the new crop positions for the Pell interests.

* * *

Memphis wires: "Generally fair weather will prevail in the cotton States except in the extreme northeastern sections, where showers are likely. Good weather in the central belt will be quickly followed by warmer. No rain of consequence has fallen. Favorable map."

47 Tried for Gaming; 3 Held by Recorder

What Recorder Pro Tem Preston termed the "record trial since this court was organized" was held Monday afternoon when the 47 men arrested in a raid on the Continental Club faced him. They were charged with gambling.

Evidence was found against three—Ira Soubliss, George Jaffas and Charlie Truffa—who were held under $200 bond. The proprietor, Jim Poulos, was held under $5,000 bond on charges of running a disorderly house, gambling house, tippling house and keeping open on Sunday. The place was ordered closed.

Dog 'Rears' Rag Doll When Puppy Dies

CHICAGO, May 27.—In Oak Park, a suburb, a stray mother dog came to the home of Mrs. F. S. Gurnes. A single puppy was born and in a few days it died. Then the mother dog found an old rag doll and kept it beside her constantly.

Mrs. Gurnes, seeing the mother love lavished on the outcast doll, purchased an unweaned puppy of aristocratic dog parentage, and to-day the stray cur was happy with her adopted son.

Governor on Guard On Wall of Prison

PHOENIX, ARIZ., May 27.—Armed with rifle and revolver as regulations require, Governor George W. P. Hunt mounted guard on the penitentiary wall at Florence for two hours yesterday.

The convicts and their regular guards were enjoying a concert by vaudeville performers in the prison mess hall.

WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Mean temperatures were normal or slightly above over the extreme eastern portion of the cotton region and in northwestern Texas. Elsewhere there was a deficiency of from one to six degrees. The weekly mean temperatures ranged from 64 to 76 degrees over the eastern, from 66 to 74 over the central and from 64 to 76 over the western portion of the cotton growing States. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and Bentonville, Ark., and the highest, 76, at Jacksonville and Tampa, and at San Antonio and Del Rio, Texas.

Precipitation occurred throughout the cotton region, except that there was no rain at a few stations in southern and western Texas.

The precipitation was generally heaviest over the central and northeastern portion of the cotton region, the amounts over those portions being generally more than two inches.

The greatest weekly amount, 4.65 inches, occurred at Donaldsonville, La.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 27.—The cotton seed oil market was barely steady at no start to-day in absence of outside support, but prices soon firmed up on local professional buying, inspired by higher lard and cotton. There was some selling of August for outside long account.

METALS.

NEW YORK, May 27.—The metal market was active to-day. Copper, spot and May offered 15.37½; June offered 15.35; July offered 15.30; lead, 4.35@4.40; spelter and zinc, 5.30@5.40; tin, 43.83@42.00.

CANADIAN PACIFIC IS SOLD ABROAD

Other Issues Off on Rumor That U. S. Will Sue Anthracite Coal Trust.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Most issues shaded at the opening of the stock market to-day, although others gave a fair appearance of strength, which caused a show of irregularity in the list.

Canadian Pacific opened at 233½, for a loss of ⅝, but made a partial recovery. United States Steel common opened with a loss of ⅜, apparently on published reports of a price decline in Europe. Later the loss was made up and the issue scored a gain.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit shaded fractionally in spite of the dividend increase. Amalgamated Copper, after opening unchanged, declined fractionally.

Other issues which sold off were Louisville and Nashville ⅝, Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ⅛, Pennsylvania Railroad ¼, California Petroleum ⅛, Great Northern preferred ½ and Erie ⅛. Reading shaded ⅛, but later recovered and scored a net gain of ¼.

There was renewed pressure against St. Louis and San Francisco.

The curb market was dull.

Americans in London were irregular.

A downward movement started after the first half hour and weakness continued to develop during the entire forenoon. Copper was down ⅛ at 74½. Canadian Pacific fell to 233, a decline of 1⅜. At 152¾ Union Pacific was off ⅝. Great Northern was off ⅛ and Steel fell ⅜. Southern Pacific declined more than a point. Proportional losses were sustained in a number of other issues. Call money loaned at 2¾.

TALLULAH CASE IS TRIED ON MERITS

Demurrers of Both State and the Power Company Overruled, Testimony Is Heard.

CLAYTON, GA., May 27.—Demurrers of both the State of Georgia, plaintiff, and the Georgia Railway and Power Company, defendant, were overruled to-day in the suit to determine the ownership of the gorge at Tallulah Falls and the case was ordered tried on its merits by Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northeastern Circuit. The introduction of testimony began when court reconvened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

When court assembled at 10 o'clock this morning both sides announced ready for trial and in a short itme the jury was drawn and sworn. The jurors are among the most prominent citizens of Rabun County.

The contention of the State is that the land in the Tallulah Falls gorge was never granted by the State and that land grants along the falls extended only to the brink of the gorge, thereby leaving the title to the gorge with the State.

The power company contends that the land grants on either side of the gorge extend to the river and include the gorge, and that the Legislature of 1905 passed a resolution estopping the State from laying claim to the gorge land.

No Action Yet on Street Car Service

Definite action on the part of the State Railroad Commission requiring the Georgia Railway and Electric Company to give better street-car service in Atlanta did not develop Tuesday morning as expected. A decision is expected Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning.

The commission also has under consideration a request of the Southern Express Company for an increase from 15 to 25 cents as the minimum on a shipment of milk. Dairymen of Fairburn, Ga., protested.

Budget for June to Be Made Up Friday

Council's Finance Committee Tuesday closed its public hearing, and Chairman W. G. Humphrey announced that a meeting would be held Friday morning to make up the June budget.

"We have about $71,000 for special appropriations," said Chairman Humphrey, "but I have no idea as yet how the committee will decide to divide it. Requests for new money amount to about $500,000."

Imaginative Drunk Thinks He Is Slayer

W. W. Baughn, whose home is on Broyles Street, outlined another basement murder mystery to the police Monday night. He rushed up to a patrolman in Forsyth Street and said he had just killed a man and had thrown him through a basement window of the Austell Building. The policeman hurried to the Austell Building and found a shattered plate glass window, but no dead man.

Before the Recorder Tuesday Baughn said he was drunk and did not remember what he said. He was put on probation.

Works Years With Heart Almost Bare

ST. JOHN, N. B., May 27.—Jose Carey, whose case was regarded as unique by the medical profession, is dead. Carey underwent an operation in Boston six years ago for lung trouble and part of the left lung and several of the ribs were removed, leaving the heart practically exposed.

Carey recovered his usual health and worked daily for the last four years.

Cat With Harelip Whistles Like Boy

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May 27.—Stanislaus Czynszky, of Prospect Avenue, West Springfield, is the owner of a cat with a harelip, which whistles with the facility of a schoolboy, but can not mew or, at least, never has mewed.

Neighbors have suggested that the cat would prove a treasure to a maker of catgut violin strings.

Baptist Ministers Hear Dr. Donaldson

The Rev. C. N. Donaldson, D. D., of Charleston, S. C., who was pastor of the Inman Park Baptist Church for six years, delivered an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Atlanta Monday afternoon.

Dr. Donaldson will return to Charleston Sunday. His many friends were glad to see him and to learn he is pleased with Charleston.

FIFE, SECRETARY TO SAMUEL INMAN, DIES

Manse Fife, 21 years old, died Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at the residence, 18 Argard Avenue, after a short illness.

Mr. Fife was private secretary to Samuel Inman. He is survived by his father, J. A. Fife; five brothers, Walter, J. C., H. A., W. B., and Edward S. Fife, and a sister, Mrs. J. T. Gibson.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

3 Bandits Caught After Battle With Posse; 2 Wanted

MARIETTA, GA., May 27.—Frank Nation is in jail here to-day and John Goddard and a man named Haney are held prisoners at Cartersville, following a battle near Hugh, a small station between Cartersville and Marietta, with a pursuing posse in which Nation and Deputy Sheriff J. P. Gaines were wounded. A fourth member of Nation's gang escaped by swimming a river, after being chased six miles by dogs and officers.

Nation and his associates are said to have attempted to hold up and rob Thomas Sorrells, telegraph operator at Hugo.

Bartow County officers telephoned to Marietta for assistance and Deputy Sheriff George Hicks went to Hugo with dogs. They followed a trail to Nation's house across a mountain, where the battle took place.

February Cleared By Chief Lanford

Chief of Detectives Lanford exonerated G. C. February, his secretary, of any genuine intention of "selling out" to Colonel Thomas B. Felder, in a statement Tuesday afternoon.

"The deal with Felder was taken up with my consent and under my instructions," said Chief Lanford. "It was done on the suggestion of A. S. Colyar, and if there is any blame to be attached to the laying of the dictograph trap for Felder I am the one responsible. I thought that if they were planning to steal that Coleman affidavit and other papers they would be caught with the goods."

Atlantans to See 'Knoxville-Made' Fair

Chattanooga's exhibit of goods made in that city is regarded by Atlantans as a model for the exposition planned here, and for that reason about 50 members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association will go to Chattanooga Thursday to see the display.

A special car will be attached to the W. & A. train leaving Atlanta at 8 a. m.

Man of Mystery Is Likened to Hoch

CHICAGO, May 27.—The coroner will be asked to-day to investigate the death of Homer Edward Morrison, who was involved in a mystery which may rival that of Johann Hoch.

Two women already have appeared who say they were defrauded by a man named Morrison, and the police have a record of a third woman who claims also to have been victimized.

Charges Attempt To Blind Him; Sues

Asserting that W. M. Henry tried to put his eyes out with an umbrella, O. M. Sutton has filed suit in the Superior Court against Henry for $2,500 damages.

Sutton alleges that Henry showered blows on him with the umbrella; jabbed the end of the umbrella into the back of his neck, into his stomach and against his back; threw him into a corner; beat him and then dragged him out and tried to poke the umbrella point into his eyes.

Governor Attends Lucy Cobb Finals

Governor Joseph M. Brown left for Athens Monday, where he will attend the commencement exercises of Lucy Cobb Institute. The Governor's daughter, Miss Cora Brown, is a member of the graduating class.

While in Athens the Governor also will pay a visit to the University. He is not scheduled to make any addresses on the trip.

U. S. Drops Inquiry Into Phthisis 'Cure'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—By order of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo the Public Health Service to-day refused to make any further investigation into the so-called Duket "cure" for tuberculosis.

Duket is a Chicago surgeon who is backed by former Senator Lorimer and other influential men.

SISTERS SEE BROTHER SLAIN.

MERIDIAN, MISS., May 27.—Following an altercation, the cause of which is not known, Gifford Beattie shot and killed Floyd Hardin. Hardin's two sisters witnessed the killing. Beattie is in jail.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

No Better Chickens Than the White Plymouth Rocks

They Are as Beautiful as They Are Useful and Profitable—Are Good as They Look.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

In our estimation there are no better chickens than the White Plymouth Rocks. When carefully bred and rightly handled they are as beautiful as they are useful and profitable.

With their glossy white plumage, red comb, wattles and earlobes, and yellow legs, they look fine enough to eat, and they are just as good as they look.

I am not raising them and I have none to sell, but I know what I am talking about, for I have handled them in years past and speak from experience.

If you want to produce good ones, however, you must be mighty careful to breed from first class stock. If you are just starting in the business you can not use too much care to produce a start of the very choicest breeders. Then let your selections each year be the very best. Cull out the poor ones, both as to shape and color. Keep nothing that does not show a robust constitution, the ones with the broad breasts and backs, heavy thighs, nice and tapering, arched necks, with a low carried tail. Such a specimen is not only good looking in shape, but contains stamina worth considering. Weed out those with the slim, straight necks, long and narrow or roached backs; legs too long, standing too close together at the knees; tail slim and carried too high, forming an angle with the back. These points of defect are very often seen, and upon what some call good specimens. Of course, they are rarely all seen upon the same fowl, but frequently two or more are.

High Type Utility Fowl.

When you have the very best possible shape in a White Rock for the show room you have a utility fowl of the very highest type. There is no doubt about that. As to color, the Standard says pure white throughout, web quill and all. You see there are no qualifications. Simply white. Any departure from this is defective, such as creaminess, brass and the like; brass simply being the creaminess intensified into a positive yellow, as seen upon poor specimens of males two years old or older. This is one of the things we have to fight against in our endeavors for the best. Gray or black specks are quite common and are often distributed through the plumage in pin heads sizes, and are defective according to size and number and the intensity of color. Positive black spots of any kind will disqualify. A good, pure, white plumage throughout, free from any creamy tinge, even though it contains a few minute specks, is much more desirable in every way than one that has a tendency to be creamy. Do not throw that kind away, for it is a hard matter to get a pure white one. The ear lobes should be bright red, as in all the different varieties of rocks, any permanent, or what might be called enameled white, disqualifies. Look out for this, as it only takes a mighty few of the right kind of black specks to throw them out. What the Standard terms positive white, in treating with white in specimens demanding red lobes, is a white that seems coated right on to the surface, and not a changeable white that shows white one minute and reddens the next.

Single Comb.

The comb upon both the male and female should be single and straight upon the head, not soft enough to turn to one side or the other or to wrinkle in its course from where it starts at the base of the head to the blade at the rear. A comb of five points is the one desired, although a four-point one would not be so very objectionable in the eyes of the best breeders. Look out for feathers, stubs or down on the shanks, which should be clean and free from any appearance of feathers. One can soon learn to detect the greater defects and the little ones will come to light later on in the game.

If you get a strictly first class White Rock for the fancy man or the show room, you will have a good one to breed broilers or roasters from and a good one for laying, too, for that matter.

You know it used to be a great idea to those that knew nothing about the business that a thoroughbred or standard bred chicken, one good enough to put into the show room, was some kind of a freak not suited to any other purpose, and entirely unfit for the practical man. Nothing could have been farther from the facts, and many are just now getting wise along this line, for it has been one great aim and earnest endeavor of the standard makers for years to have for their ideal chicken one that was all chicken from head to tail.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Tract of 400 Acres To Be Subdivided

Woodland Hills as a Home Neighborhood—Peachtree Widening Postponed.

Announcement was made Tuesday of perfected plans for improving one of the largest acreage tracts in the Atlanta section. W. E. Worley, J. A. Mahoney and Eugene C. Callaway, incorporators of the Woodland Hills Company, will begin in a few days to improve 400 acres between Ansley Park and Druid Hills, and probably $40,000 will be spent at once putting in 80-foot chert drives, water and sewers and tile sidewalks.

This subdivision is to be known as Woodland Hills. The developers have consulted with engineers as to topography, and plats of the property will be out shortly. The lots will be large, and the owners expect to sell them all and to have a thriving home community in three years.

The last addition to this tract was made ten days ago, when 110 acres was bought for $40,000. There will be a combined frontage of about 20 miles. The tract is on the Cheshire Bridge, East Paces Ferry and Williams Mill Roads and Highland and Moreland Avenues.

Widening Considered.

The Finance Committee of Council will meet Friday to fix up the budget covering improvements for street work and other city improvements, and will at this time take up the matter of setting aside $5,000 for widening Peachtree from Harris Street to Forsyth Street. The citizens' committee went before the Finance Committee Monday afternoon and outlined its request.

Extensive improvements hang on this project. E. W. Alfriend and Mrs. J. R. Whitehead expect to erect a twelve-story office building between Cain and Harris Streets, and another property owner has plans for a five-story structure.

Building on Wesley Avenue.

Wesley Avenue, to the west of Peachtree Road and a few rods north of Peachtree Creek, is beginning to rival Pace's Ferry Road as a situation for country homes. Among the home owners on the thoroughfare are General Clifford L. Anderson, Clark Howell and David Woodward, and now comes J. C. Chipley, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, with announcement that he has started a residence. Mr. Chipley's house will be two stories high and will cost approximately $15,000.

Several other property owners, it is said, will build on Wesley Avenue during the summer.

Warehouse Is Completed.

Colonel John J. Woodside's storage warehouse No. 3, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been replaced with a more complete structure. In a few days the warehouse will be completed and ready to be used again. The building is located on Butler Street and has a great amount of floor space.

Pryor Street Building Finished.

The building at 96 South Pryor Street built for Harry G. Poole, the undertaker, has been completed and is now occupied by the concern. This structure cost approximately $25,000 and is one of the handsomest of the smaller buildings on Pryor Street.

St. Charles Cottage Bought.

Mrs. Willie Mae Levi has bought from W. H. Craig, through the Ralph C. Cochran Company, a six-room cottage at 174 St. Charles Avenue, 60 by 120, for a price not named. This property is between Ponce DeLeon Place and Bonaventure Avenue.

Building on Ponce DeLeon.

People traveling out Ponce DeLeon Avenue of late have been impressed with the great amount of building that is being done on that thoroughfare and on tributary streets. In the neighborhood of Ponce DeLeon and Barnett Street and Bonaventure Avenue, for instance, twelve or fifteen new houses are either building or recently completed. It matters not which way you turn, say the realty men, there are more houses in process of erection than ever before in the city's history, with prospects for more in the future than at the present.

Fresh Bit of Acreage.

A 28-acre tract on Pace's Ferry Road that has been in the hands of the present owners for 50 years has been placed on the market at $13,500. This is between "Woodlawn," Robert F. Maddox's estate, and the Howell Mill Road. It has been listed with a well-known real estate agency, and has been suggested for subdivision.

A Merchant Marine Becomes a Vital Necessity

Congress is Alone to Blame for the Neglect to Build Up a Great, Powerful, Progressive and Prosperous American Merchant Marine in Foreign Trade.

The lack of American merchant ships for the ordinary needs of our Government has been strikingly impressed upon the attention of the new Administration.

Recent developments made it necessary for the Government to secure possession of a considerable number of American merchantmen. They were needed as a precautionary measure, to insure preparedness against any sudden eventuality in which foreign ships could not be used.

THE PITIFULLY SMALL SUPPLY OF SUCH AMERICAN VESSELS BOTH ASTOUNDED AND ALARMED THE GOVERNMENT. Most of the few American vessels that are available are old, in many respects inadequate, and scarcely any of these measure up to urgent needs.

Not only are American merchantmen few and inefficient, but it is found that, even if American ships were now available in large numbers, THERE IS NO CORRESPONDING NUMBER OF TRAINED AND EXPERIENCED AMERICAN MASTERS, OFFICERS AND SEAMEN IMMEDIATELY OBTAINABLE.

The possibly grave consequence of our utter dependence upon foreign merchant ships, their officers and men, who would be unavailable for national needs in time of war, is causing the greatest uneasiness and concern.

American merchant ships, their officers and men, are required in times of emergency for scout purposes, for auxiliary cruisers, to carry troops, coal and ammunition supplies, and for a thousand and one needs for which warships would be neither desirable nor available.

These are serious problems for a new Administration so suddenly to face, and their satisfactory solution is difficult, if not impossible, at the moment.

CONGRESS IS ALONE TO BLAME FOR THE NEGLECT TO BUILD UP A GREAT, POWERFUL, PROGRESSIVE AND PROSPEROUS AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

THE PUNY PROVISION IN THE PENDING TARIFF BILL to merely make a beginning in the upbuilding of American shipping should be and is likely to be so strengthened and buttressed in the Senate as to lay a broad and solid foundation for the establishment of an effective and enduring American maritime policy.

The little so far provided has provoked the impudent protests of foreign nations that are determined to prevent, if they can, the maritime independence of the United States. The present conditions are far too useful and too profitable for these foreign monopolists to willingly relinquish.

EVERY NATIONAL INSTINCT OF PRESERVATION AND PROSPERITY SHOULD IMPEL CONGRESS TO IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Should steps be taken at once to remedy our intolerable dependence upon foreign merchant shipping, it will take years for the United States to reach a state of efficient preparedness in American merchant ships, officers and men, for either the ordinary or the emergency requirements of our Government and the peaceful transportation of our imports and exports. It is high time to make a beginning.

We have discovered shortcomings in several important particulars in naval equipment. BUT NOTHING HAS SO PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSED THE GOVERNMENT AT THIS TIME AS THE PRESSING NEED OF A GREAT AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, WISELY REGARDED AND OFFICIALLY STATED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON AS "ESSENTIAL TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE."

It would indeed be thoughtless and cowardly if, in this crisis in American affairs, the sinister protests of foreign governments against immediate and adequate legislative provision for the upbuilding of American deep sea shipping should receive the slightest consideration.

Are Women as Foolish as Men?

"We were introduced at a restaurant and four days later we were married and the next day he deserted me and ran away with $4,000 worth of my jewelry and money." This is the unvarnished narrative told by a woman who had a man arrested out west the other day.

This same woman would watch the iceman like a hawk, for fear he would give her only eight cents worth of ice instead of the ten cents worth she paid for. She would inspect her grocery and butcher bill, and the laundress does not wash who could get a penny ahead of her at the Monday suds festival. She submits her agent's reports as to rents or investments to the family lawyer, and she even keeps a shrewd and questioning eye on the lawyer himself.

But she meets a man in a restaurant, hearkens to his story that he is the temporarily embarrassed heir to a million or two, and hands herself and her fortune over to him without as much care as she bestows on the inspection of the chicken she buys for the family dinner.

Ordinarily the victim of the sort of sharper who despoiled the woman quoted above is not an ignorant, unsophisticated girl; on the contrary, she is commonly a mature woman, and not infrequently one who has had one or two whirls at the matrimonial lottery.

When we shake our heads at the credulity of such women we should not ascribe their misfortune to the feminine type of mind.

Remember, when you feel how superior men are to that sort of deception, that the gold-brick swindle and the green goods game, the Spanish prisoner trap and wire-tapping delusion continue year after year to earn fortunes for the rogues who have the hardihood to perpetrate them.

There are lots of foolish women in the world—almost as many as foolish men.

A Little Flattery Will Make a Man Do Anything

What Do You Like to Read About?

By WINIFRED BLACK.

"WHAT do you like to read about?" said the Man to me.

I stared. "I mean," said the Man, "what sort of folks—people in castles, with retainers and 'heirs' birthdays,' or people on yachts, with butlers and valets, or people out West, with Sheriffs and bad men dropping in to supper, and the wind blowing in from the desert and the coyotes yelping on the great red mountains in the dusky distance?"

"Oh," said I, "I don't like any of those people. I like folks—just plain folks. No, not 'folksy folks' with dialects—the women, with shawls on their heads that run in and gossip all about 'What made Maria stay an old maid so long?' and 'Who's goin' to git Mirandy, now Si's gone?' bore me to tears; and I can't bear the fair young schoolma'am who goes out West and makes the biggest boy fall in love with her, and then they go back home to visit, and he shocks the whole village by saying 'Darn it!' and wearing a red cowboy handkerchief instead of a collar.

Maids Don't Worry Me.

"I like to read about the sort of people I know myself, every day in the week—the woman with the fussy husband; the woman with the boy she hopes will be a genius, and he turns out to be just a lazy dreamer; the woman with the little girl who won't take music lessons, no matter how she tries to make her; the man with the business down-town, and the rival over the way trying to take it away from him; the girl on the stage who plays real parts and gets real criticisms; the newspaper man who doesn't beat the town the very first time he goes out on a story; the people who have comfy homes and a decent picture or two, and a lot of good books and some dogs, and either children or the hope of children.

"No, I don't care for butlers in mine, though if the butler belongs in the story I don't mind him at all; I only hate to have him dragged in by the heels to prove that the man who employs him really is no end of a swell.

"Valets? Yes, a valet is all right, if he isn't insisted on. Lots of fairly every-day men have valets—actors and musicians and other helpless creatures.

"Maids don't worry me—nor chauffeurs—as long as they stay discreetly in the background, but I must say secretaries and nursery governesses and under-gardeners and special trains and too many yachts do disconcert me a little. I always have to stop and add up what it would cost to have an establishment like that, and that interferes with the plot.

"No, I hate the Dickey and the Algy story, with the 'little gell in white' and her managing mama. I never can quite believe there are such helpless geese in the world as that little gell, and if I knew anyone like the 'managing mama' I'd have her locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

"Yes, it's folks I like—everyday folks—plain Americans, with plain American troubles and plain American joys, like buying a machine after you've saved for it for a year; and Daughter's graduating essay; and Son's first love affair.

The Chocolate-Cream Age.

"That's why I always choose a woman's stories, all other things being equal, I guess."

"The man looked at me more in sorrow than in anger. "Are all women like you?" he said. "I don't believe it. I believe they like to read about ropes of pearls and strings of emeralds and cables of real coral—and gowns of filmy lace—or a——"

"That's the chocolate-cream age," I said. "They do, of course. That's because they are always hoping they'll be one of those heroines themselves some day, and they want to have the fun of planning their filmy gowns and thinking how sweet they'll look in the ropes and chains and things. When the woman is past wanting to read about people like herself, it heals her to realize that she isn't the only human being who has trouble keeping the expense accounts within scolding limits. What do you like to read about, Mr. Man?"

The man took a long pull on his pipe. "I like to read about damsels fair, and shady bowers, and nodding violets, and dashing cavaliers," he said, "and noble heroes, and soldiers of fortune—and quests, and all that. If anyone dares to hand me a book about 'How I Made My Money' or 'What I Did to Down the Lemon Trust' I'll make him wish he'd committed suicide that time he almost wanted to."

And then we both began to reconsider and talk it over, and we both decided that we really don't care so much about who the hero of the story was. The main thing is, who wrote it?

There's Bret Harte. He could take a bank clerk and cast such a sparkling veil of romance about him that his every pen flourish would mean sentiment. And as for the common little red-haired person he fell in love with—why, she'd be a wood nymph, a fairy, a siren from the cool green sea, even if she lived in a hall bedroom and ate 'weenies' and chocolate for supper.

Cable! Do you ever hunt up Cable's houses down in New Orleans? Dirty old tumble-down places, seen with everyday eyes. Look through the magic glasses of Cable, and you're in Elysia, the land of fair women and brave men. There's even something romantic about a piece of candied lemon peel when the right sort of man tells about it.

It Isn't the Subject.

No, it isn't the subject; it's the way it is handled, after all, we agreed, the man and I. There's so and so, the special writer on the Daily Enterprise. He'd write about a fire in a boiler factory and make you hold your breath to find out whether the Maltese cat got out alive or not. And there's his brother on the Daily Scream, would tell the story of a plot to assassinate every beautiful woman in America, and keep you yawning all the way through. It isn't the story; it isn't the people in the story—it's the writer that matters.

"But still," said I to the Man, "all things being equal, I want folks in my stories—folks that I know."

"Gossip," said the man. And we both went and got our own particular kind of book and settled down to our own particular kind of evening, and were perfectly satisfied. What fun it is to talk these things over once in a while! Isn't it?

Awake at Last to Navy's Needs

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

COL. GRAVES.

THERE are substantial evidences of a reviving patriotism and common sense in the American Congress toward the American navy.

When Secretary Daniels was banqueted week before last in Savannah one of the speakers was Congressman Edwards, of the Savannah district. Mr. Edwards has been heretofore apathetic, if not openly antagonistic, to the ample navy program. On this latest occasion he said that, however indifferent and economic his views had been toward the navy, the recent international interchanges with Japan had opened his eyes and fixed him definitely and firmly as an advocate and champion of a greater navy.

Others Changed.

"Henceforth," said Mr. Edwards, "if the naval experts of the Government advise Congress that we need three battleships, or four battleships, or even five, I am for the navy and whatever it needs to defend our country. The anxieties aroused by our unpreparedness against Japan must never be repeated in America."

Savannah is one of the ultra-conservative cities of the South, and Congressman Edwards is notably conservative, cautious and economical. His complete conversion is in the highest degree significant of the awakening of Congress.

It is even so with Congressman Poor, of the Raleigh District of North Carolina, Secretary Daniels' district.

Mr. Poor has also been among the conservatives on the naval program of the House. The Japanese contention and the developments of our naval unpreparedness, as exposed by the Hearst newspapers, have aroused the North Carolinan to the perils of an undefended country and the necessity for a navy ample for our Western and Eastern Coasts. He is openly and heartily for the ample navy.

On the lips of scores of anti-navy Congressmen there are expressions similar to these. It is actually true that the naval information and comparisons developed by the recent international controversy have changed the spirit of the national Congress on this vital question of the national defense.

The American Congress and the American people have slept for years upon the idea that our "splendid isolation" protected our country, and that in case of war our navy and army were equal to every demand of defense and offense. Congress and some of the people have had the same feeling toward foreign nations that the South had toward the North preceding the Civil War. "One Southerner can whip a dozen Yankees," said some.

One Southern statesman declared in a public speech, "Why, we can whip the Yankees with popguns!" Challenged upon this assertion after the war was over, the orator responded: "Well, so we could, but the d—d fellows wouldn't fight that way!"

Awake at Last.

Our country has waked up at last to the fact that it is not immune from war, that it is not invincible in war, that it is not prepared for war.

The awakening will do us good. It is worth this flurry with Japan to have educated the American people and their representatives to an understanding of our real condition and of our national dangers.

I feel that the Hearst newspapers have performed a signal and patriotic service in helping to this national understanding. These newspapers can be indifferent to any criticism of sensationalism in the consciousness that more than any other American newspapers they have taught the people something about their navy.

Public opinion is coming to stand for the idea that preparedness in war is the best promoter of peace. The long centuries of exemption from attack that England's great navy has bought for England is teaching our people that they have a right to expect from their representatives just such an insurance policy against war.

Gatling Philosophy.

The treason of Congress against the Navy is not likely to be repeated in this generation.

The policy of national preparedness also pervades our national officials—always excepting Mr. Bryan, whose "doves" and "swans" and "flowers of rhetoric" delight the Chautauquas.

Secretary Daniels said to Mr. Gatling, of the Gatling gun: "Are you not conscience smitten over your invention? Do not your guns keep you from sleeping because of the people they have destroyed and may destroy?"

To which Mr. Gatling answered:

"My guns have saved more lives than they have ever destroyed. The existence of them and the knowledge of their destructiveness keep nations from war and mobs from bloody riots. The Gatling gun is a peace-maker."

And Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, is tremendously impressed just now with the Gatling philosophy.

Perhaps we shall have national cause to thank Japan and the Hearst newspapers!

How Opening of the Panama Canal Will Aid Historical Research

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AFTER the Panama Canal is opened we may begin to learn the true history of Ancient America.

Many readers may be unaware that this new world, as we call it, contains one of the oldest of all historical mysteries, and, in fact the very oldest if as some maintain, it forms a direct connection with the story of the lost continent of Atlantis.

Buried in the tropical jungles of Central America there are the ruins of once splendid cities, whose remains of a gigantic architecture are covered with hieroglyphics more puzzling than those of ancient Egypt, for no man has yet succeeded in discovering a complete key to their meaning. They guard their secret more jealously than the Sphinx.

Ruins of Temples.

Their origin is ascribed to a practically vanished race called the Mayas, related to the Aztec of Montezuma's Empire, but far excelling the ancient Mexicans in everything except warlike power. The ruins of their temples at Palenque, Copan, Peten and elsewhere, excite the wonder of the traveler, and contain some of the most beautiful and elaborate carving that can anywhere be found.

They had not only an exquisite picture language, but also a written language, of which undecipherable manuscripts yet exist.

They built about forty towns, connected by stone-paved roads. They had a postal system, conducted by means of swift-footed carriers who ran from town to town over the paved roadways. Sometimes they were at war with one another, and then armies marched to battle on the same roads.

They were skilful agriculturists, and cultivated broad fields, which are now overgrown with mossy trees and tangled vines and shrubs. They raised cotton and wove it into garments.

They made beautiful ornaments of gold and semi-precious stones, and were more skilful even than the Aztecs in feather work.

The designs carved on their buildings and ornamental, or symbolic, structures are of great beauty and astonishing perfection in detail. They covered the walls of rooms with brilliant paintings on stucco.

They Have Vanished.

Strange to say, the people believed to be descended from these Mayas are unable to throw any light upon the history of their supposed ancestors.

All their civilization has vanished, and with it, apparently, all memory of the ancient splendors of the race.

Some of the figures carved by the Mayas bear such striking resemblance to similar things found in the ancient ruins of the Old

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

World that the suggestion has been made that a connection formerly existed across the Atlantic Ocean, and this is the origin of the theory that the ancestors of the Mayas dwelt on the fabled continent of Atlantis, which Plato heard had been sunk in the western ocean ages before his time.

One of the strangest facts about the ancient land of the Mayas has recently been called to attention by Dr. Ellsworth Hunington. It is this: At present the whole district possesses a climate so warm, moist and debilitating that it is almost the worst place on the globe for human habitation.

The ruins of the ancient cities, instead of lying amid deserts, and under a burning sun, as happens with most of the abandoned capitals of the East, are so overgrown with tangled vegetation and enveloped in feverstricken swamps that some of them are nearly unapproachable.

The conclusion is that within the past two thousand years, a vast change of climate has occurred in that part of America, and that in the days of Mayan civilization the earth's climatic zones were shifted in such a manner that the land occupied by this remarkable people enjoyed very different atmospheric conditions from those that prevail there now.

Peten, one of their most important cities, which has not yet been well explored on account of the difficulties of approach, lies in the midst of a region which is, at present, very sparsely peopled, and where it would be impossible to cultivate the land as it was cultivated in the days of the Mayas.

May Be Read in Full.

Only by such a supposition, it is thought, can a rational explanation be found for the fact that the highest native civilization that this continent had developed before the white man came, was centered about a location which is now a deadened and almost uninhabitable wilderness.

When the Panama Canal has become a great highway, and the attention of the world has been turned upon its surroundings, fresh light is likely to be thrown upon this fascinating mystery.

Then the Mayan hieroglyphics may be read in full, and a hidden chapter of American history thrown open.

MR. BRYAN'S TOAST

Editor The Georgian:

You devote much of your space to Mr. Bryan. Will you please reproduce a portion of his toast at the Army and Navy Club, given at the farewell banquet to the Commissioners from Great Britain and Canada? Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: I have delivered three addresses of welcome to our visitors, but will have but one word of farewell, and that is in keeping with the environment which surrounds us this morning. We are met in the building of the Army and Navy Club, and the fact that we are the guests of those who represent those two arms of the Government suggests the thought which I present in bidding you adieu. While we are the advocates of peace, we are really engaged in the construction of a battleship which is to be the very culmination—the climax—of the seaman's art. Man has been engaged in the construction of water craft since the flapping sail first whispered its secret of strength to the voyager. He has designed vessels for pleasure, for commerce and for war. We have had the galley, the viking's ship, the frigate, the ironclad and the dreadnought. But no limit can be placed to the ambitions of man as a builder, and I ask you to join me in proposing a toast to a ship more potent than any which man has thus far employed in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart. Its shells are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.

CONLEY NEW PHAGAN SUSPECT

Colonel Roosevelt Denies He Ever Was Drunk

T. R. HOTLY DENIES HE EVER WAS DRUNK

Shuots Denial That Bull Moose Party Is Paying Cost of His $10,000 Libel Suit.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 27.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt to-day took the stand in his suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore. Colonel Roosevelt denied emphatically that he ever drank intoxicating liquors to excess as charged in the editorial that resulted in his $10,000 libel suit.

He said he did not drink beer or whisky, except under the direction of a doctor, but admitted that he some times drank light wines.

He related briefly his career up to the time the editorial from The Iron Ore was brought to him as he lay in a hospital in Chicago, after having been wounded by a would-be assassin in Milwaukee.

Says Editorial Angered Him.

"I was very indignant," said the colonel, "when the editorial was shown me."

The former President mounted the stand after a stormy few minutes during which Attorney Pound, representing the plaintiff, was interrupted frequently by Attorney Belden while making his opening statement. Attorney Belden, Newett's counsel, declined to make his statement until after the testimony was taken.

Colonel Roosevelt took the stand at 9:30 o'clock this morning.

Replying to questions regarding his life and career, he said he was born in New York City, completed his studies at Harvard in 1880, was elected to the New York Legislature in 1881, appointed New York civil service commissioner in 1887, police commissioner of New York City in 1890, elected Lieutenant Governor in 1894, resigning in 1897 to become lieutenant colonel of the Rough Riders in the Spanish-American war, being promoted to colonel after the battle of Santiago.

Tells of War Service.

Strenuous objection was made by the defense to Roosevelt's replies regarding the number of times he was under fire in the Spanish-American war, but the court overruled them and the former President continued his story, declaring he was under fire many times, more particularly at San Juan Hill.

He told of his election as Governor of New York in 1898; as Vice Presi-

Florida Mob Tries To Lynch Head of Negro Pythians

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 27.—When a Jacksonville-New Orleans train pulled into Milton, 20 miles east of here, last night a mob of 75 men met the train and demanded S. W. Green, of New Orleans, chancellor of the negro Knights of Pythias, who was occupying a Pullman drawing room. He was only saved by the interference of Sheriff Harvell and deputies, of Santa Rosa County.

Green bought a Pullman ticket from Jacksonville to New Orleans. Several mobs met the train along the route before it reached Milton, but did not find him. At Milton, Green, seeing the mob, attempted to escape.

Green is now in jail at Milton for safe keeping and charged with violating the "jim crow" law.

He barely escaped a mob at DeFuniak on May 18 while going from New Orleans to Jacksonville.

Plans to Entertain Justice Lamar Off

Because of lack of time, plans of Atlanta attorneys to entertain Justice Joseph R. Lamar, of the United States Supreme Court, who will pass through Atlanta Wednesday afternoon en route to Warm Springs to deliver the chief address at the meeting of the Georgia Bar Association, have been abandoned.

After the sessions at Warm Springs Judge Lamar will hurry back to Washington, where a decision in the Minnesota rate case is expected soon from the Supreme Court.

War on Fraternities Launched at Mercer

MACON, GA., May 27.—A petition signed by more than 200 non-fraternity students of Mercer University, asking for the abolition of the Greek letter chapters at Mercer will be presented this week to the faculty.

As President S. Y. Jameson is now of the belief that frats are a detriment to college work, it is expected the faculty will recommend to the trustees that the fraternities be abolished.

Time for Protests To Tariff Bill Ends

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Holding sessions day and night the ten Democratic members of the Senate Committee on Finance will begin at 5 o'clock this evening the actual framing of their amendments to the Wilson-Underwood tariff and income tax measure, which they hope to present to the Senate within three weeks.

At 5 o'clock the period for hearing protests against the bill will expire.

FELDER AIDE OFFERS VICE LIST TO CHIEF

Attorney Carl Hutcheson Accuses Beavers of Permitting Unlawful Houses to Operate.

Ignoring the fresh volley of charges made by Carl Hutcheson, an attorney, who offers to cite resorts which are allowed to operate by the city police, Chief Beavers Tuesday morning reiterated his declaration that the entire matter would be laid bare before the Grand Jury for decision.

Detective Chief Lanford revealed another angle of the warfare when he declared that the fight being made against him was backed by the gambling ring of Atlanta. C. C. Jones was named as the leader of the opposition in this fight.

Beavers in commenting upon Hutcheson's charges, declared that they were inspired by Thomas B. Felder, with whose office Hutcheson is connected, and that the attack was not therefore that of Hutcheson, but of Felder and his "gang."

Hutcheson, a young lawyer connected with the firm Felder, Anderson, Whitman & Dillon, wrote an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers, charging him with permitting unlawful houses to operate on certain city streets and promising to give addresses if the Chief asks personally for them within three days.

Beavers to Ignore Attack.

Characterizing Carl Hutcheson as of too little importance to warrant an answer to his charges made against the police force, Chief Beavers declared that he would ignore him altogether.

"I don't care to answer Hutcheson's attack," said the police official. "Hutcheson is too small a fry to even take notice of. An answer to him would give him too much dignity. This young man is in Felder's office and is merely being used as a tool of Felder and his gang. Felder prompted him to make the statement that he did, and so I will pay no attention to Hutcheson.

Regarded as Reply.

On Monday morning Chief Beavers declared Attorney Thomas B. Felder had no evidence of police cognizance of immoral resorts; that he never had had any, and that he was only bluffing when he said he had. Requested to reply, Colonel Felder announced he would make no more statements except in writing, and that he had nothing to say then.

A few hours later Mr. Hutcheson, a member of Colonel Felder's firm, issued the letter, which is regarded as a semi-official reply from Colonel Felder.

Mr. Hutcheson formerly was a newspaper man. Shortly after taking up the practice of law he achieved State-wide renown by conducting the campaign of William Schley Howard, who defeated Representative Leonidas Livingston and is now serving his second term in Congress.

Following is Mr. Hutcheson's open letter to Chief J. L. Beavers:

Scores Vice Crusade.

J. L. Beavers, Chief of Police, Atlanta:

Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives, Atlanta:

In your great crusade against Sodom and Gomorrah with your immaculate robes of Puritanism,

I accuse you in all your glory with allowing certain houses on Ivy Street, the business of which is to barter in immoral and indecent practices, to continue in flagrant operation. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, every sensible citizen of this city, who knows anything of the world, does. If you do not know these

'Ship My Body to Atlanta,' Farewell Of Suicide in Jail

NEW YORK, May 27.—Using his belt and necktie as a noose, Eber Carmichael, a clerk, who was arrested yesterday for fatally stabbing Conrad Braun, subscription manager of Current Opinion, hanged himself in his cell in a police station to-day.

Carmichael was said to have been drinking heavily for some time and stabbed Braun, a friend of two years' standing, after Braun had refused to lend him money.

Carmichael was in bad shape, physically, when locked up and kept shouting, "Ship my body to Atlanta."

New Libel Charge In Marconi Scandal

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—The third criminal trial growing out of the Marconi scandal began in Old Bailey Court to-day. It is the libel case of Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the British Marconi Company, against Cecil Chesterton, journalist and brother of G. K. Chesterton, the famous essayist.

Chesterton is charged with libeling Isaacs in an article he wrote on the connection between certain officers of the British Government and the Marconi interests.

$25,000,000 Annual Road Fund Feared

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Claiming that a Committee on Good Roads will open the way to an annual Government expense of $25,000,000, economy advocates will fight the creating of the committee in the Democratic caucus next week. They declare the committee constantly will be agitating for tremendous appropriations which can not now be afforded.

It is conceded that, if the committee is created, its supporters will have enough strength to force big appropriations.

Gompers' Condition Serious, Friends Say

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 27. Conflicting reports are current here to-day over the condition of Samuel Gompers, labor leader, in a sanitarium here, according to reports, suffering from nervous breakdown and a serious operation.

Gompers' nurse says he is able to walk around and that he was on the boardwalk Sunday, but friends insist his condition is critical and that he has had a replase.

$500,000 Telephone Rate Cut in Chicago

CHICAGO, May 27.—Telephone company patrons in Chicago will benefit to the extent of $500,000 a year under the provisions of a new telephone rate regulation ordinance passed by the City Council.

The ordinance, in addition to saving money for subscribers, provides for an increase in wages of employees and pensions amounting to $420,000 a year.

4 Dead in Crash of Theatrical Specials

SEDALIA, MO., May 27.—Four persons were killed in a head-on collision between two Missouri Pacific fast passenger trains at Brandt, 20 miles west of Jefferson City, this morning.

Both trains Nos. 11 and 12 are known as theatrical specials.

It is unofficially stated that lap orders caused the wreck.

Heflin to Lead House Attack on Suffrage

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Congress soon will ring with the echoes of anti-woman suffrage oratory. Representatives Heflin of Alabama and Stanley W. Bowdle of Ohio are both preparing extensive arguments against woman suffrage.

Bowdle is a firm believer in "no votes for women," and has a lot of homespun reasoning to present.

BRYAN COMES TO ATLANTA MONDAY

The first member of the Wilson Cabinet to visit the South will be Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan.

Mr. Bryan will make a trip to Atlanta to deliver the quarter-centennial anniversary address to the students and friends of the Georgia School of Technolog , at the Grand Opera House, Monday evening at 8:15 o'clock. It will be the first public address of such a character that Mr. Bryan has made since becoming Secretary of State.

It will be the first college address ever delivered in the South by a United States Secretary of State.

Mr. Bryan will reach Atlanta Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock over the Southern Railway. A suite of roooms has been reserved for him at the Gergian Terrace Hotel.

ROUTE LAID FOR HOLIDAY PARADE

Momentum will be added to the movement for the Wednesday half-holiday parade June 4 at a meeting of retail grocers and commission men in Taft Hall Tuesday night.

Business will be combined with pleasure at the meeting. A "Dutch" lunch will be served and five orators will be given free rein. R. A. Broyles, E. L. Adams, W. O. Stamps, John M. McCullough and Harry L. Schlesinger will be the speakers. Little remains to be done except to formally approve plans already made.

Two miles, at least, of emancipated working people will parade the principal streets of Atlanta, starting at 1:30 o'clock from the Mitchell Street side of the State Capitol. The line of march will include Mitchell Street to Whitehall, Whitehall and Peachtree to North Avenue, North Avenue to West Peachtree and West Peachtree and Peachtree again to Five Points.

Following the parade, special entertainment will be given the merchants, commission men and other employers giving the midweek half-holiday.

SUSPICION TURNED TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk. Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full-flare upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected assertion last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are rife in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, timekeeper of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty intoxicated on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 2, in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember anyone whom he saw during that time to bear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 6 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 6 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; this also has not been established. Conley states he stayed there the remainder of the night.

According to the new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday instead of Friday, as he claims, and not on anybody's dictation. It is further argued that, in order to ingratiate himself with the law, he made his confession when he thought that the case against Frank was clinched—that his story was the product of his own imagination.

Conley's delay in making this confession until Frank's indictment seemed likely is another link against him.

His detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, shows premeditation on the negro's part, it is argued, and further that the story was conceived by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's childish brain was not capable of making it strong enough to withstand rigid investigation.

E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman of the National Pencil factory, seen to-day by a Georgian reporter, said he was confident the negro Jim Conley, under arrest as a suspect in the Mary Phagan murder mystery, committed the crime.

Here is what Holloway told the reporter:

"Jim Conley, when he came to work here about one year ago, was a pretty good negro. We had no trouble with him for about two months. Then Jim got drunk. He had been running the elevator and we were afraid to trust him afterward. We then put him to work sweeping in the trimming department. Here Conley was closely associated with the girls. He used to move their chairs when he was sweeping. Conley was the only negro allowed in this department.

"Jim got so bad he used to carry whisky with him in his pocket. Several times he was caught by employees taking a drink. This was not known by the management until after the murder of Mary Phagan.

Drunk in Factory.

"About one week before the crime was committed the forelady of the trimming and finishing department, Miss Eulah May Flowers, went to the top floor of the building to look over the stock of boxes. When Conley was not sweeping he was supposed to fill the box bins with boxes. When Miss Flowers moved toward the bin to look in she stumbled over a form. She screamed and fell back. It was Conley. He was dead drunk. Miss Flowers tried to wake him up, but was unable.

Caught Washing Shirt.

"On the morning of the Coroner's investigation, Thursday after the murder, when the plant was shut down because we all were called to the investigation, I testified and went back to the factory. As I entered the metal department I heard a splashing in the cooling tank. There was Conley washing his shirt. When I entered he was very much startled and tried to hide the shirt by trying to drop it through a crack in the floor. It was a blue shirt and I saw no bloodstains, for he had evidently been washing it for some time as it was pretty clean.

"This is the first time in the year that Jim Conley worked here that he ever washed his clothes here.

"Now, I don't say Conley was degenerate enough to commit a crime so terrible when he was sober, but I am thoroughly convinced that he things. It is your duty to know, and you should be discharged from your high pedestals for dereliction.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on certain parts of Spring Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate in a certain section of Pryor Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on a certain section of Central Avenue. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of failing to take cognizance of a certain house in Ivy Street, to which I called your attention several weeks ago, where young men were inveigled to gamble away their money, the mistress thereof being the banker and the recipient of these ill-gotten gains. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you and numbers of your forces with being cognizant of these facts, and yet you, the great crusade leaders, stand idly by and fold your lordly hands.

I accuse you with allowing, even yet, low class hotels in this city to exist and practice their nefarious games of lowly gain. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

If you can not "turn up" these places, there are hundreds of people who can. I can use infantile detective work and turn up dozens of them within a few days. AND YOU KNOW THIS CAN BE DONE. And, if you fail to get busy and continue to parade your great genius (?) you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Charges Police Protection.

I accuse you with protecting these places because of your lax methods in keeping "the houses within our midst" closed. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of closing Manhattan Avenue and converting our entire municipality into a "red light" district. AND YOU KNOW IT, and unless you change conditions at once you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of retaining on your forces men unfit to protect the "decent" citizens of Atlanta. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of knowing where numbers of houses which exist by immoral practices are located. AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Do you think that the public will be hoodwinked forever? Do you think that the public is so gullible as to believe all of this "hush-wah" about the great work that you are continuing? Yes, you closed Manhattan Avenue, but what did you do for the remainder of the city?

You and your bunch are very sore because you were unable to ferret out the Phagan murder. AND YOU KNOW IT. When the Solicitor General called in outside aid, numbers of your hirelings were very much perturbed and became insanely jealous. That is why all of this patched-up and hatched-up bunch of lies and slanders have been issued against Thomas B. Felder, whose shoes you are unworthy to untie. AND YOU KNOW IT.

I accuse you of retaining a large number of leather-heads for detectives. Detectives? That is a joke, isn't it? AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for allowing such an army of incompetents to work with your departments. You know, and I know, that these fellows secure their offices through political pull and not through efficiency. They are Sherlock Holmeses when it comes to arresting blind tigers and negro crap-players, but beyond that they would not know a clew if they saw it tagged.

In the Phagan case, the newspaper men are the ones who turned up the first clews of any merit, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be ashamed of that crowd down there to allow the members of the Fourth Estate to put one over on you; but you know newspaper men have brains, and brains are required to make detectives.

Now, volley forth again your promulgation of purity and tell the people of this great city what large men you are and how you protect the citizenry of this great Commonwealth.

If you haven't the addresses of the houses to which I refer, call at my office within three days and I will give you a bunch of them.

Friends of mine have advised me against printing this card. Some have feared for my life—but afraid of you and your crowd? Never. I am not afraid of anything that lays down its firearms and comes at me like a man in fair play. Now, "lay on, MacDuff, and damn'd be him who first cries, 'Hold! Enough!'"

The Duty of the Grand Jury--Investigate All the Charges of Graft and Bribery!

The Georgian repeats its suggestion that the Grand Jury MUST TAKE UP AND INVESTIGATE THOROUGHLY the charges of graft and bribery that have been made in the newspapers during the past few days.

And the matter should not end with the Grand Jury. It should be taken into a court of law,

Colonel Thomas B. Felder has made some accusations that merit immediate attention.

If there is graft in the police department or bribery anywhere, the public has a right to know about it; and if Colonel Felder or anyone else can establish that, he will receive the thanks of the entire community, and there will be a speedy turning out of the guilty men.

The matter is too serious to begin and end in a newspaper war.

The good name of the city is involved. The good name of public servants is involved.

Trials in newspapers are never effective. They lead nowhere. The public is still unconvinced.

Trials by judges and juries are final and conclusive.

THE PUBLIC WANTS FACTS.

There is no reason to believe that the charges against Beavers are true. Even the bitterest enemies of Beavers admit his honesty. He has made a good record. He is entitled to have the charges against him examined by a judge and jury, so that all the facts may be known.

Whether Beavers' attitude is right in putting an end to the segregated district is not an issue. The law does not permit any choice in the matter. The law does not sanction a segregated district for the barter and sale of human beings and for the enrichment of a few ringsters.

It is not improbable that a little more liberality in some of the laws would be a good thing for the city and all concerned. But the way to get that liberality is to change the present statutes.

Beavers has no alternative but to enforce the law as he sees it, and he has no alternative but to compel those who accuse his department to go into court and try the case there instead of in the columns of the newspapers.

STAND BY BEAVERS AND THE LAW!

Gamblers' Plot, Declares Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford gave out a sensational statement Tuesday morning in which he charged that the efforts to fix accusations of bribery and malfeasance upon him were inspired by a "gambling ring," of which C. C. Jones was the head.

The cause of the fight against Lanford had been something of a mystery. Beavers readily explained the efforts to dispossess him from the office of Chief of Police by his war on vice in the city of Atlanta. Lanford's explanation reveals another angle of the crusade against a wide-open town.

"The gambling ring has been after me ever since I was made head of the detective department ten years ago," said Chief Lanford. "No more had I declared relentless warfare upon all forms of gambling in the city than I was notified that the gambling interests were out to 'get' me. Several times it was reported to me that I had been marked for an attack, and once the gamblers succeeded in carrying out their threats.

"That was five years ago. I was reduced from sergeant, which was the designation of the head of the department then, to service in the ranks. The gamblers were responsible for it. They gloated for nine months. Then I was raised to my former position again, with the title of chief. Since then I have continued my campaign against them.

"They have been very bitter. They have threatened me time and again. Now they have brought these charges against me."

Col. Felder Still Probing In the Phagan Case.

In the news columns of The Georgian yesterday it was said that Colonel Felder had been eliminated from the Phagan case. Colonel Felder says this is not true, that he is as deeply interested in solving the mystery as ever, and that he is lending every energy in that direction. The further statement in The Georgian that Colonel Felder was believed at one time to be interested in the defense of Frank was not intended to reflect in any way upon the lawyer. It was simply the gossip of the street, given for what it was worth. Colonel Felder's own statement that he is working solely for the public good makes his position perfectly clear, and everybody in the city will hope that he will continue actively in the case until the great mystery is disposed of.

Cochran Decries Reform Upheavals

Ralph O. Cochran, Representative-elect from Fulton County and candidate for the United States Senate to succeed Senator Hoke Smith, received hearty congratulations Tuesday on a speech delivered Monday night at the commencement exercises of the Lithonia Public Schools.

Mr. Cochran took "Conservatism" as his subject. He declared really great things were accomplished by cautious individuals. He commended conservatism rather than a course of reform.

A large crowd of DeKalb County citizens turned out to hear the candidate.

Noted Woodmen to Visit Atlanta Camps

Two Woodmen of national reputation from Omaha, Nebr., will arrive here at noon Tuesday. They are Joseph Cullen Root, sovereign commander, and John T. Yates, sovereign secretary of the Omaha order.

The local camps and Georgia head officials of the order will escort the visitors to the Piedmont Hotel. A reception at Cable Hall Tuesday night will be given by J. C. Root Camp No. 80, assisted by other camps in the city, and State officials of the order.

Sunday, June 1, is the annual Memorial Day of the Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Melon Greets Old Friends

Florida His Present Address

Forerunner of Georgia Cousin

Smiling 'Rastus, one of Atlanta's welcoming committee, joyously greeting the first visitor from Florida.

Six Thousand Cars of Luscious Product to Pass Through Atlanta on Way North.

Men and women of Atlanta, we have with us to-night our old friend, Mr. Watermelon.

Just from Florida, dressed in the old-time mottled and variegated garb, flesh pinker than perfection, blood redder and juicier than ever, hankering to be split. He has arrived from Florida to tell us there are plenty more where he came from—enough to last four weeks.

And by that time the more numerous branch of the family, the Georgia watermelon, the most luscious of them all, will arrive in full flush of glory.

The Central of Georgia Railway has set apart 6,000 freight cars to transport watermelons from the South northward. Every car must pass through Atlanta, and prospects are that at least 1,500 of them will be halted on the way. There's a regular army of thirsty Georgians here, and it's hard to run the gantlet.

Commission merchants and transportation officials have a joyful announcement to make. The watermelon crop this year will be a bumper, one of the best ever in the State.

Let the small boy rejoice and be gay of heart, for he shall be satisfied. And let the old boy come down off of his high pedestal of dignity and rejoice also, for the older he gets the bigger fool he is about the fragrant fruit of the vine.

Six thousand freight cars will hold exactly 3,761,942 big watermelons and two small ones. That'll be enough to feed the country at large when the Georgia crop comes in. This year quality will be good and prices just right—high enough to suit the farmer and cheap enough to please the consumer. The season has already started.

Union Musicians Have Celebration

One hundred and fifty members of Atlanta Local No. 148, American Federation of Musicians, celebrated the twelfth anniversary of the organization of their local at Turn Verein Hall last night. Many women are active members of the organization.

A supper was served and a large orchestra, composed of the members present, entertained.

A cornet solo by E. M. Coleman and vocal selections by Miss Sadie Percival, who was accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Mongen F. Smith, were enjoyed.

Remarks by Carl Karston, of Local No. 148; S. H. Brady, president of the Atlanta Federation of Trades; W. C. Puckett, third vice president of the Georgia State Federation; William Strauss, State organizer, and H. G. Wood, vice president of the Atlanta local, were heard.

Water Fashionable Beverage in London

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—Champagne now takes a back seat in London, and claret, moselle and whisky and soda are the drinks of the moment. But temperance is a current craze. Barley water in special "brews" may be found at the Carlton and Bachelors' Clubs.

A few smart men drink plain cold water, among others Sir Arthur Walsh and Lord Charles Beresford. The King has cider laid down in his cellar, and among cider drinkers are the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Leeds, Lord Knollys and Lord Mount Stephen. Beer is seldom seen at dinner or luncheon, but ice lager beer is popular at balls and late parties.

BURNS MAN QUITS CASE; DECLARES HE IS OPPOSED

C. W. Tobie, chief criminal investigator for the Burns Detective Agency, formally withdrew from the Phagan investigation Tuesday morning. The calling off of the Burns forces was announced by Dan P. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch, after Tobie had stated explicitly that he would not withdraw from the case.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who brought the Burns detectives into the Phagan case, would make no statement relative to their withdrawal, but announced that it did not mean the end of his investigation or connection with the case.

Tobie made up his mind last Friday to drop the Mary Phagan investigation—so he said Tuesday—but deferred action until Monday night, when he announced his intention to withdraw to Solicitor General Dorsey.

Disgusted With "Fuss."

Acute disgust at the "four or five cornered fuss" raised by the Phagan investigation was assigned by Tobie as the cause. This disgust was superinduced by the direct charge and general impression that the Burns Agency was pretending to ferret out the Phagan case, when in reality its purpose in Atlanta was to investigate the police department.

Tobie said to-day that while he had quit and was going to leave Atlanta, still the withdrawal of the Burns Agency need not be permanent.

"If certain features of this case are not developed, then there will be one, and maybe two, Burns men back here. I will send them here, but they will work in secret. There will be no more public investigation."

Tobie explained he believed Leo M. Frank was guilty of the Phagan murder and that the "certain features" meant additional clinching evidence not yet published that will make Frank's conviction certain.

"How can any house have harmony," said Tobie, "when the old man is fighting the old woman, and the old woman is fighting the children, and they are all fighting the hired girl? That's the shape this affair has gotten into, only worse.

"We came here to investigate this Phagan case, and for no other purpose. But the charge was made that in reality we were investigating the police department. The way things were shaped up the police could not help believing that charge to be true. Colonel Felder's attitude bore that out, so I decided last Friday to quit."

"Do you mean, then, that you were dissatisfied at Colonel Felder's attitude?" was asked.

"We were dissatisfied with that part of it, yes," was Tobie's reply.

Tobie Himself Through.

Tobie reiterated he ended the investigation himself. "I called myself off," he said. "Dan S. Lehon, our Southern superintendent, was close to Atlanta. It was as near for him to pass through here on his way back to New Orleans as it was for him to go any other way. I was in charge here, but, as you know, I do not belong to this territory. As a pure formality and a matter of courtesy, and because I knew he was coming here to visit his wife's relatives, I sent him a message inviting him to confer with me. When he got here I told him as a courtesy that I had decided to quit the case. He approved it. Had I told him I would continue, he would have approved that, too.

"This is the worst mix-up I ever saw anywhere, at any time. It's awful. Everybody is fighting everybody else, and I am through with this four or five cornered fracas, except that if more Burns men are sent here I shall send them here and they will report to me."

Bribery Charges Denied.

Rumored attempts to bribe witnesses were given strong denial in many circles, particularly by those whose names were connected by rumor with the alleged bribery attempts.

C. C. Sears, superintendent of the Atlanta branch of the Burns detective agency communicated to Chief of Detectives Lanford the announcement of the withdrawal of the Burns forces from the Phagan case.

Chief Lanford authorized the following statement on the departure of Tobie:

"Tobie, I believe, is straight and honest. He was victimized by Felder. I am convinced Mr. Tobie was working toward the interest of those seeking to clear the mystery."

Praises Superintendent.

A girl employee of the pencil factory has written the following statement, which upholds the working conditions of the factory and champions the character of the imprisoned superintendent:

"Nothing has ever been said of the girls of the pencil factory until after the terrible murder, but since then there has been one continuous talk, just as if we were to blame. We are just as anxious to see the guilty punished as the rest of the public, and we all loved Mary Phagan just as much as we possibly could.

"If the public only would interest itself to look into other factories and stores they would find the girls in the pencil factory are just as good as any other working girls.

"It looks mighty hard that we have to work in the place where our little friend was so horribly murdered. But we are only poor working girls, trying to make an honest living, and we try not to think of the tragedy any more than possible; and we have the interest of the factory too much at heart to desert in times of trouble.

"We all hope and pray the guilty will be punished and the innocent given freedom, for we all think our superintendent has a soul himself and that he would not think of such a thing, much less commit such a horrible crime."

Swallows Poison as Walker Did; Saved

ORLANDO, FLA., May 27.—That bichloride of mercury is not always fatal was demonstrated here when S. Walters Howe, cashier of the State National Bank, swallowed a tablet, mistaking it for a headache dose.

As the tablet passed down his throat it contracted the muscles so violently that he discovered his mistake and hurried to the city physician, who at once used the stomach pump and gave antidotes. Howe has experienced no harm.

U. S. IS HOME OF SQUANDERERS, SAYS BANKER

Financier Warns of Credit Strain Resulting From Lavish Expenditure of Money.

DETROIT, May 27.—Joseph T. Talbert, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, in an address delivered before the Bankers' Club here, declared everything has been dear except credit, and, as a result, "our expanded loans and deposits constitute the weak spots in our domestic and business situation."

Mr. Talbert gave statistics showing the gross loans and investments of all the banks in the United States since 1907 has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, while the total increase in the gold stock of the United States since 1907 aggregated $506,000,000.

"This condition," said Mr. Talbert, "although perhaps not so strong as it should be to justify and properly sustain our increased loans, still is assuring and shows that there is no substantial ground for alarm."

Delight to Squander.

Mr. Talbert caused quite a stir when he said that "evidence tends to show that individually and collectively we are a nation of spendthrifts.

"It is our habit and delight to squander, and no amount of preaching will have any effect upon our prodigality as a national trait."

Mr. Talbert, in leading up to an explanation of the drain on New York's gold supply by Europe, said the lending power of German banks had been strained to the limit; that Germany borrowed money here and sought to draw gold from us.

In calling attention to the persistent hoarding of gold by the French, he said the French, got content with the mere hoarding of their own gold, at heavy losses of exchange, forced from us, either for their own account or for that of South America, upward of $56,000,000 of gold.

"The movement is going on and may continue indefinitely.

"For lack of protection for our gold stock we have been obliged to sit helplessly and to submit to this forced exportation of gold, to our disadvantage and discomfort.

"This gold movement taking place at such a time and under such conditions demonstrated the fact that often has been stated before—that New York is the only free market in the world for gold."

Need Outside Money.

Mr. Talbert said an enormous amount of railroad financing must be done during the next year or two, and nearly all of it will be done at home with difficulty and in all probabilits at a higher level of interest rates than we have been accustomed to in such undertakings in recent years.

Mr. Talbert uttered "a word of caution against the practice which has been all too common among merchants and manufacturers, of financing themselves too largely through note brokers."

In concluding, the banker said it should be remembered that we are neither in nor approaching a period of speculation, and that credit is in no danger whatever from that source now, nor will it be in the near future. He added that courage should be taken from the fact that thus far the promises of another year of bountiful crops are exceedingly bright.

Girl of 10 Is Best Speller in Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo., May 27.—Opal Mitchell, ten years old, of Licking, Texas County, won a $100 prize and was declared the best speller in the State. In a contest in which 50 pupils from as many counties contested, she misspelled but 3 of 200 words.

The three words misspelled by Opal Mitchell were: Chalice, besieged and weasel.

CURED TERRIBLE HUMOR ON FACE

Could Not Go On Street Without Veil—Tells What Resinol Did For Her.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1913.—"In December, 1908, my face became sore. I tried everything that was recommended, and my face got worse instead of better. I spent over $150 and got no benefit. The face and nose were very red and the eruption had the appearance of small boils, which itched me terribly. I can not tell you how terrible my face looked—all I can say is, it was dreadful, and I suffered beyond description.

"I have not gone on the street any time since 1908 without a veil, until now. Just four months ago a friend persuaded me to give Resinol a trial. I have used three cakes of Resinol Soap and less than a jar of Resinol Ointment, and my face is perfectly free from any eruption, and my skin is as clear and clean as any child's. It is about four weeks since the last pimple disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. M. J. Batchan, 4256 Viola St.

Practically every druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00) and Resinol Soap (25c), but if you are suffering from itching, burning skin troubles, pimples, blackheads, dandruff, ulcers, boils, stubborn sores, or piles, it will cost you nothing to try these soothing, healing preparations. Just send to Dept. 26-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for a free sample of each.

Wylie Smith Says He Will Be Cleared

Released from a prison cell Monday afternoon on $3,000 bond, J. Wylie Smith, former president of the Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who recently was brought back from Mexico after eluding officers of the law for two years and seeing service on the battlefield with Diaz and Madero, expects to devote his entire time to recovering his health.

No date has been set for the trial of Smith on the charge of forgery. Smith declares that papers found since his return to Atlanta will prove his innocence.

$6,000,000 Mission Fund Baptist Plan

DETROIT, MICH., May 27.—The fifth annual report of the general apportionment committee, which included a recommendation that the convention make the raising of $6,000,000 for missions annually the ultimate objective, was presented to the Northern Baptist Convention in session here.

The recommendation was approved.

BULGARIA READY TO BEGIN WAR ON SERVIA

Latter Country Warned Not to Annex the Turkish Territory It Now Occupies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—Bulgaria will declare war against Servia if the latter country annexes all the Turkish territory it has occupied since the outbreak of the Balkan war.

This was the message received here to-day from Sofia, and it contained the additional information that Bulgaria is ready to begin hostilities at once.

publican Governor would be attempted, but it failed to materialize.

General Young a Speaker.

General Bennett H. Young, commander in chief, followed Governor Hooper with his annual address, the chief feature of which was his tribute to Southern womanhood.

Veterans, sponsors, maids and visitors are exercised to-day over whether women shall ride astride in the reunion parades. General J. P. Hickman's order that only side saddles for women shall be permitted has caused the stir, and this promises to become an issue overshadowing the real business of the convention of veterans.

General Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division, is grand marshal of the veterans' parade. Although he issued his order last week that women should not ride astride, it was not until the visitors had begun to gather yesterday and to-day that real opposition to it became pronounced.

This opposition comes largely from sponsors and maids who had planned to don divided skirts or riding trousers and sit on their steeds like men, and Sons of Veterans chosen as their escorts.

Order Will Stand.

But for every opposing voice there is one commending General Hickman's decree, the approval coming from veterans and their wives and some of the younger generation who do not approve of the present-day style. To-day the indications are that General Hickman's order will stand and that in the veterans' parade at least side saddles alone will be permitted on women's mounts.

The first of the reunion parades took place this morning at 9 o'clock when the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, on the edge of the Chickamauga battlefield national park, marched through the downtown streets of Chattanooga in full dress uniform and equipment.

Cheer U. S. Troops.

The old veterans of the gray cheered the Government troops despite the fact that they wore the blue uniform that 50 years ago the men of the South so bitterly hated. It was a notable illustration that this is again a united country and sectional lines are fast being obliterated.

A half-hour later a short business session was held by the Sons of Confederate Veterans, after which came the formal opening of the reunion by the veterans.

This afternoon business sessions will be held by the Veterans, Sons of Veterans and Confederate Memorial Association.

To-night the big social functions that will mark the reunion will begin.

Business sessions were held this afternoon by the veterans, Sons of Veterans and the memorial associations.

Social Affairs Begin.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the army of official sponsors and maids of honor will parade the downtown streets in automobiles provided by the entertainment committee and their escorts.

At 7 o'clock a garden party will be tendered the sponsors and maids at Warner Park.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy will entertain the veterans with a reception at the Bennett Young Pavilion to-night.

A business session of the Sons will take place at 8 o'clock at the Auditorium.

Preparations for the unveiling of the Alabama monument to-morrow morning are being made to-day. A large delegation has arrived from Alabama on a special train. The unveiling will take place at 10:30 o'clock. The Florida monument will be unveiled an hour earlier.

Young for Re-election.

General Bennett H. Young, commander-in-chief, will probably be re-elected by the veterans, though there is some talk of opposing candidates. He is serving his first year, having been elected at the Macon reunion last year.

Active campaigns have been launched by Jacksonville, Fla., and Tulsa, Okla., for next year's gathering. Other cities mentioned for this honor are Nashville, Richmond, Baltimore, San Antonio and Denver. Nashville and Richmond have entertained the veterans in the past. None of the other cities mentioned has had a reunion.

Camp A. P. Stewart, in Jackson Park, where tents and commissaries have been established for those veterans unable to pay for hotel accommodations, is to-day sheltering its quota of old soldiers and presents a warlike appearance. Last night, after the day's arrivals had been assigned to quarters, unpacked their luggage and had supper, they gathered around their camp fires and retold stories of the war and particularly of the campaigns around Chattanooga and Chickamauga.

Old Soldiers Cheer U. S. Regulars in First of Parades at Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 27. For the first time in the more than twenty years of the organization, the United Confederate Veterans were welcomed at their annual reunion by a Republican Governor to-day when Ben W. Hooper officially extended the hospitality of Tennessee to the old soldiers and the thousands of other visitors assembled here.

The reunion formally opened at 10 o'clock with exercises at the reunion auditorium. Meetings of affiliated bodies yesterday were only preliminary to the assembling of the veterans.

W. E. Brock, general chairman of the Chattanooga reunion committees, called the assemblage to order and delivered the gavel to General John P. Hickman, of Nashville, commander of the Tennessee division. Dr. J. W. Bachman, of Chattanooga, chaplain general of the U. C. V., pronounced the opening invocation and then Governor Hooper delivered his address. It was rumored that a hostile demonstration against the Republican Governor would be attempted, but it failed to materialize.

Georgia Hardware Men Here Wednesday

More than a hundred hardware men are looked for in Atlanta Tuesday and Wednesday for the annual convention of the Georgia Retail Hardware Men's Association.

Sessions will be held at the Auditorium, beginning Wednesday morning and will continue through Thursday and Friday. Several of the largest hardware manufacturers of the State will have exhibits.

Policeman Knocked Out by Thunderbolt

Policeman J. J. Clack was shocked into unconsciousness by a bolt of lightning that struck somewhere in the vicinity of Peachtree and Houston Streets, punctuating the downpour of rain early Tuesday morning.

The policeman at the time of the thunder clap was reporting to headquarters from the police box on that corner.

Clack was revived in a nearby drug store and taken to his home.

Ask Wilson to Force Clerks to Pay Debts

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Protesting against the number of government employees who fail to pay their debts, the Retail Merchants' Association will send a letter to President Wilson asking that the matter be laid before the several members of the Cabinet, with the request that some action be taken in each of the ten departments.

Turks Plan to Resume War On Quarreling Allies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 27.—The possibility that Turkey, taking advantage of the dissension among the Balkan allies, may resume the war against the states in the Balkan league is looming up.

It was learned here to-day that the Porte has ordered $4,000,000 worth of fresh arms and ammunition, and that Enver Bey, chief of staff of the Turkish army, is attempting to re-form the various divisions of the Ottoman army.

Although peace negotiations have not been commenced by the plenipotentiaries in London, it is deemed unlikely that Europe would allow a resumption of the war.

'Naked Truth' Too Naked for St. Louis

NEW YORK, May 27.—When Professor William Wendschneider, the famous German sculptor, arrived today from England and learned that his statue, "The Naked Truth," designed for the Praetorius-Schurz-Daenzer Memorial Committee of St. Louis, Mo., had been rejected because it was too daring, he emitted a wail of protest.

The professor caught the first train going West, determined to change the opinions about "The Naked Truth."

GIRLS BURN BOOKS AT AGNES SCOTT

Seniors End College Year With Torchlight Parade and Big Bonfire on Campus.

With stars twinkling and torchlights glimmering, the seniors of Agnes Scott made a bonfire of their books on the campus. Aided in the torch-bearing by sophomores and surrounded by several hundred alumnae and friends, they went through the ceremony with all of the gayety that only a crowd of college maids could display.

Burning of the books followed a torchlight parade on the campus. As the torch-bearers tripped over the beautiful lawn, their class songs and cheers drew a hearty response from the crowd.

A glee club concert opened with the cantata, "Death of Joan of Arc," led by Miss Almedia Sadler and Miss Isabel Norwood.

"The Last Rose of Summer" and "A Serenade," by Miss Rosa Hill; "Mammy's Little Honey" and "My Lady Clo," by Miss Sadler; "Love's Dilemma," by Miss Norwood, and a rendition of "Annie Laurie," by Misses Jean Ashcraft, Isabel Norwood, Pauline Bruner and Rosa Hill, were features.

Tuesday night the two literary societies will cross swords in a debate on the question: "Resolved, That the Panama Canal should be free."

Girl of 4 Is Second Cousin to Herself

MINNEAPOLIS, May 27.—Mrs. Jennie Golden, who when thirteen years old was married to her half nephew, then twenty years old, has filed suit to have the marriage annulled, so the relationship of their four-year-old daughter, Margaret, may be straightened out and the girl not be compelled to go through life as second cousin to herself.

Christian Golden, the husband, wants the marriage annulled, too.

Kahn Urges Plan to Strengthen Army

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An army reserve created by one-year enlistments is advocated by Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, who declared to-day he believed Japan's pugnacious attitude was due to the knowledge that few American men have even the rudiments of military training.

Kahn advocates an enlistment of one year of active service and three years in the reserve.

Negro Leaders in Annual Conference

Dr. W. E. B. DuBose, of New York, former head of the sociological department of Atlanta University and founder of an annual conference for the study of negro problems, was the central figure at the eighteenth session at the University Monday.

Drills and songs were given by 170 negro children from the free negro kindergartens of Atlanta. The principal address was by Dr. DuBose on the need of education and play to conserve the moral forces of the negroes.

Members of the committee of the Chamber of Commerce who are dealing with the proposed "blue sky" law met Tuesday in the Empire Building.

GIVES UP HUSBAND FOR UPLIFT WORK

Mrs. Sarah MacD. Sheridan, Former Georgian, Tells Why She Didn't Fight Divorce.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Mrs. Sarah MacDonald Sheridan, former Georgian and daughter of one of the leading men of the Southern States at the time of the Civil War, told to-day why she permitted her husband to obtain a divorce in Reno without contest.

Her husband, Charles Oscar Sheridan, went to Nevada four years ago for his health. She refused to join him there. He obtained a decree for absolute divorce last Saturday.

She said to-day she regarded it as her great duty to continue her sociological work, in which she had been ergaged for 30 years. Mrs. Sheridan is the founder of the "New National Fireside" movement for the opening of public schools after hours as neighborhood social centers, and declared she believed her work along these lines of greater importance than the maintenance of her domestic relations.

"I have lived to see my son, Mark Sheridan, in the old family home in Atlanta, become one of the most promising young mural painters of the day," she said, "and my daughter happily married to the younger son of one of England's noblest families. This accomplished, I feel that my family life has been full."

Mrs. Sheridan is an intimate friend of President Wilson and his family and is a musician of ability as well as a sociologist. From her youth Mrs. Sheridan devoted her talents to the improvement of social conditions in her own State. The Martha Berry Industrial School was established mainly through her efforts.

BRYAN GETS INTO TRAP IN ROW WITH JAPAN

Abandons Course Used Successfully With England—Orientals to Grasp Opportunity.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Students of statecraft declare that the Wilson administration has needlessly, not to saw stupidly, walked into a trap in the controversy with Japan over the California alien land law.

In its reply to Great Britain's Panama Canal tolls protest, this Government laid down the principle that until an overt act had been committed against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, Great Britain would have no standing in court; in other words, that Great Britain's grievance would become a matter for diplomatic adjustment only after an American ship had actually passed through the canal free. This statement cleared the atmosphere and left Great Britain no reasonable grounds for continuing the debate.

The same principle applies in the controversy with Japan.

The obvious reply of Secretary of State Bryan to the first Japanese protest, in view of the attitude assumed toward Great Britain, was to state that the treaty with Japan had not been violated, and, therefore, there was no matter for contention between the two governments until after some Japanese subject in California had been aggrieved by the operation of some California law.

But instead of adopting this logical course, it was pointed out here to-day the Wilson administration floundered about in the diplomatic puddle, and, denying that the treaty of 1911 had been violated, invited further negotiations, thus giving the Japanese Ambassador an excellent opportunity to quote the State Department against itself, where the very same principle is involved.

As the matter is now, instead of making a firm stand on precedent and silencing the Japanese protest as the British protest was silenced, the Wilson administration has promoted bickering between the two nations, Japan and the United States, and is in the ridiculous position of holding two diametrically opposite policies in relation to identically the same problem. If the American position is right in regard to the Panama Canal protest, it is wrong in regard to the Japanese protest, and vice versa.

It is the expectation here that Japan will take instant advantage of the inconsistency and incongruity of the position of the United States.

Lawson and Friends in Real Panther Hunt

SCITUATE, MASS., May 27.—Thomas W. Lawson has taken a hand in the hunt for a panther which has invaded Scituate, and has been seen by a score of persons.

It is possible Mr. Lawson and a party of his friends will stalk the beast themselves. They want to add the beast to the menagerie at "Dreamwold."

ODDITIES —in the— DAY'S NEWS

BORE GRUDGE TO GRAVE.—Most of the will of Terance J. Larkin, just filed in New York, is devoted to disinheriting his daughter, Mrs. Agnes G. Bedford, of Middletown, N. Y., to whom he left only $5.

GIRL'S STROLL WORTH $5,000.—Miss Ethel Terry, of Sayville, N. Y., found a large piece of ambergris, valued at $5,000, while walking along the beach here.

SETS VISITING SPEED RECORD.—Forty-five calls in ninety minutes is the visiting record established in Washington by Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice President.

HORSES FIGHT DUEL.—Two horses fought a duel in a vacant lot at Harrison, N. J., while several hundred persons watched the fight. One of the animals finally dropped with a broken leg. A bullet ended its suffering and the other horse is under the care of a veterinary.

'HOPPER' INVASION REPORTED.—a column of grasshoppers, five miles wide and eighteen miles long, is coming from northern Mexico, according to reports to Amarillo, Tex. Government, State and railroad experts have combined to fight the insects with poison.

BIRDS BATTLE WORKMEN.—An army of sparrows fought riggers who destroyed their nests while dismantling the spire of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, at Chester, Pa. The steeple began to topple and was condemned.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! And Again, Wuxtry!

"Talk about nature faking," exclaimed the hotel clerk, "just listen to this from a paper published out West. The items were sent in by the correspondent at Azusa, wherever that is."

And then he read the following:

"James Snyder, of this town, brought home four baby squirrels the other day and the family cat has adopted them and nurses them with her kittens.

"Then John Davis and Sherman Ward caught eight young foxes and their family cats have adopted them.

"Fred Bierer owns a calf that has but one foreleg, but runs just as well as any calf with its complete quota of legs.

"Ardell Smith, 16 years old, was knocked down and run over by a hog. The doctors called in say his left knee will be stiff for the rest of his life as a result of the accident.

"J. L. Brown's old hen has every day for the past three weeks laid an egg three inches long.

"Since the 'clean up' here there hasn't been much refuse in the streets and the birds got to eating tobacco crumbs and acquired the tobacco habit. Now they refuse grain and live on cigar and cigarette stubs."

Sure, Let 'Em Pay For the Luxuries.

Atlanta barbers have been discussing the edict that came from Trenton, N. J., the other day raising the price of trimming a Van Dyke beard from two bits to 35 cents.

"They're right," said the head barber, as he deftly deposited a comb behind his left ear and began running his fingers through his customer's hair.

"Never saw a guy who insisted on wearing a bunch of spinach like that who wasn't harder to please than your wife with her new summer hat. And a guy who will insist on having his mustache curled—well, some men is queer. Soak 'em, says I, soak 'em, and soak 'em good and plenty."

And the customer went out warbling:

What! The kibosh on the Van Dyke,
And an extra charge to boot
When the barber does your mustache
With a curl so cute and sweet,
sweet and cute?

But we've something to be thankful for,
Downtrodden men, by heck!
The barbers haven't raised the price
For a shave
Upon
the
neck!

Preacher Sentenced To Gallows Appeals

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 27.—Rev. Marion Capps, a former Methodist preacher, has filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court from a sentence of death imposed upon him by a Sebastian County jury. He was convicted of burning to death three of his children. Evidence at the trial was that the children were tied in bed, which was saturated with oil, and the house fired.

Capps was convicted on the testimony of two elder children, who escaped, but who, it is alleged, have since declared they swore falsely against their father.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY ACCUSES NEGRO CONLEY

strangled Mary Phagan when about half drunk.

"I'll go further and say that the last three months that Conley was here I was suspicious of him and tried to watch him as closely as possible, for I placed no dependence in him. He became indifferent about his work and shiftless."

Mrs. White Denies Identification.

Mrs. J. Arthur White, of 59 Bonnie Brae Avenue, made positive denial to the Solicitor General's office Tuesday that she ever had made any identification of James Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, as published in an afternoon paper.

"I can not understand why such a story should have been manufactured and published," she said to a reporter. "I was just called by the Solicitor General to confirm it, and told him, as I had told him before, that I never had identified the negro.

"I saw a negro sitting on a box on the first floor of the factory as I left there about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the murder. I did not get a good look at his face. I got just a general impression of his clothes and of his size.

"At the police station ten negroes were brought before me. I picked out one with a green derby and said that he looked considerably like the man I had seen. They told me to look again, and I picked out another man that I thought looked a little more like the negro I had seen, but I never made any positive identification; and I told the detectives, in the first place, that I would not be able to. They never told me the names of the men I had picked out, so I don't know whether one of them was Conley or not."

The detectives never have placed much weight on the identification of Mrs. White, as she said that she could not be positive. Added to this is the fact that she saw a negro loitering around the factory at 1 o'clock, which, it is thought, he would have been very unlikely to do had he had anything to do with the disappearance of Mary Phagan, who was in the factory a few minutes after 12 o'clock.

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as conclusive as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual eyewitnesses of the crime, this question naturally is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the mystery, and that means practically every person in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the close-lipped and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even at this early date, when only the vaguest of hints have been given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion, it is patent that there are many openings offered the defense for attacks upon the theories of the State.

Burden of Proof on State.

Those who are close to the daily developments in Atlanta's baffling murder mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered are bearing in mind that, in the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution and not upon the defense.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law has hedged everyone under suspicion of crime, that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime or establish his connection beyond a reasonable doubt.

Until the State is able to do this, Luther Z. Rosser may rest on his oars if he so desires. Leo Frank is innocent this moment in the eyes of the law. His innocence does not need to be proved. It is presumed.

It immediately becomes a question, therefore, as to whether the State really has made out a case against Frank, so far as can be judged from the evidence in the hands of the public. Have the detectives by any of their discoveries connected Frank directly with the crime? Have they assembled such a chain of circumstantial incidents as to make his guilt appear certain beyond a reasonable doubt?

Frank's Friends Deny Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank answer both questions emphatically in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence seriously.

The law will not permit Frank's conviction for the crime merely because the detectives have discovered that he had the opportunity. It will not permit his conviction, if no convincing evidence is found against him, merely because he is unable to put his hands on another man and say, "This is the man you want. He is the guilty person."

It is not the intention of the law to hang one man simply because no one else can be found who is the more likely culprit.

After the State has presented its reasons for believing in the guilt of Frank, it is regarded as likely that the defense will claim first of all that the State has failed to establish Frank's connection with the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The defense will represent that the most the State has done is to establish that he had the opportunity to commit the murder.

Frank never was seen with the girl, either on the day of the strangling or before. It is not known that he ever spoke to her except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed. None of Frank's clothing has been found with blood stains upon it. No finger prints upon the girl's body or her clothes were identified as his. None of his personal belonging were found near the girl's body. Absolutely nothing was discovered in the search of the detectives that fastened the crime on him.

Own Admission Caused Arrest.

The police possibly would never even have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission. He told the officers the moment he identified the body that that was the girl he paid at noon the day before. No one else knew that Mary Phagan was in the building at that time, so far as the evidence reveals. Frank did not have to tell if he had desired to conceal the fact.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission, given freely and voluntarily, be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time? Is a guilty man likely to tell the officers as soon as he is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission?"

If the State attempts to show that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as one of the theories contends, the defense will be able to argue that there were several other people in the factory at the time, this fact opening the way to the argument that if the crime was committed at this time it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely to attack the girl when he knew there were other persons in the factory at the time who might discover him.

May Prove an Alibi.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed in the evening, as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Fomby indicate may be done, the defense will be able to establish a very strong alibi for the suspected man from the testimony of seven persons who are said to have been at Frank's house Saturday evening playing a game of cards.

Several of them already have testified before the Coroner's jury, and all of them are said to be willing to give their testimony in court to the effect that they saw Frank come home that evening about the time he said in his statement to the Coroner's jury, and that he remained home the remainder of the evening, to the best of their knowledge.

This will bring it to an issue of veracity between Mrs. Mima Fomby and these seven persons, who are persons of reputation and standing in the community, if, indeed, the testimony of Mrs. Fomby is allowed admission, which appears very doubtful.

Mrs. Fomby swore in her affidavit that Frank called her on the telephone several times between 6:30 and 10:30 o'clock the Saturday night of the murder, asking her for permission to bring a girl to her place. She testified that she denied his request. It is between these hours that Frank has a very well established alibi from all appearances.

Another Motive Possible.

The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body either immediately after the crime or at the times the body was exhumed.

Added to this fact is the unexplained circumstance that the girl's purse never has been found. It contained only the wages she had drawn that day, to be sure, but even this small amount might prove an incentive to some persons, the defense very likely will argue. And it is not at all certain that the robber, if robbery was the motive, had any idea that the amount he would obtain would be so small.

"Is it probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when it could not have incriminated in any way any particular persons had it been lying near her body?" is a question that can be put to the jurors in this connection.

The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the Coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack the identification of Frank made by Officer House, of Druid Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer.

They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probabilities of a man of Frank's standing permitting himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the officer and saying, "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his identity secret. Probabilities are bound to play a large part in the trial, declare those interested in the mystery, for it is very much on a sequence of probabilities that the police are basing their expectations of convicting Frank.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the park guard discovered in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will still be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons.

The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negro, James Conley, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with his statement that he wrote notes at the dictation of Frank the day before the murder.

Sentell May Yet Be Witness.

Laying aside the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one had even suggested up to the time of the negro's alleged confession, the friends of Frank, and those who are without personal interest as well, scouted the idea that Frank, who is an intelligent and shrewd man, would take an ignorant negro into his confidence and do everything but tell him that he was going to commit a murder on the next day.

It is rumored that E. L. Sentell may yet figure in the case again. Sentell is the man who declared positively before the Coroner's jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sentell knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he met her on the street in company with some man and that he said, "Hello, Mary," and that she replied, "Hello, Ed."

This testimony would appear quite conclusive were it not for the statements of the physicians that the girl must have been dead at least six hours when found. It is known, however, that some confidence is still being placed in his statements.

STYLES DEMAND RAPID CHANGE BY DANDIES

Paris Men of Fashion Are Forced to Jump From One Pair of Trousers to Another.

PARIS, May 27.—The dandies of Paris have daily been rehearsing of late on quick-change dress in order to be able to slip from one suit into another with lightning speed so as to waste the minimum of time in this way during the height of the season.

The decrees of masculine fashion, which in recent years have become as inexorable as the requirements of feminine modes, are unusually Draconian this year. Even in the hottest weather it will not be permissible to appear in the streets wearing white flannels after 11 o'clock in the morning.

After lounging at his ease for an hour or so the well-dressed man must rush home and jump into a pair of neatly checked trousers. This garment which, as in the case of all the other trousers, the valet must iron out with sharply defined creases every morning, hangs broadest and loosest from the waist. With this may go a tobacco-colored business coat with narrow lapels, and a silk hat.

For the Afternoon Call.

This suit does for a stroll in the Bois, but after luncheon the dandy with calls to pay makes a second quick change. This time he dons a pair of well-creased chimney-pot trousers with faint stripes, and a cutaway coat, skin-tight. The latter must have a long tail, closely following the shape of the figure and bulging nowhere.

In the hottest weather the waistcoat may be dispensed with on the sole condition that the coat be unbuttoned and a white slip be worn sewed into the inner side of the lapel to give the similitude of a waistcoat.

If one is going to the races white flannel trousers may be worn with this coat, but not if attending receptions.

Both morning and afternoon coats are built up so as to give the man the appearance of being deep-chested and broad-shouldered, so tailors are now laying in a liberal supply of padding material.

Snuff-Colored Evening Dress.

The evening style runs in the direction of broad trousers. Again the striking feature, however, is the coat, which is a transparent imitation of the women's "jupe fourreau." The back and the tail, which fall below the knees, cling tightly to the body, and must fall in graceful curves not only behind but also in front. Black cloth is the evening wear, although colors are permitted this year, the choice mostly going to snuff-colored evening dress.

Terra-cotta colored handkerchiefs are also a feature of men's spring fashions.

Paris tailors have entered a campaign against London's supremacy in the matter of men's wear, and this year's fashions are designed with the object of persuading Americans to fit themselves out in Paris instead of in the British capital.

Morgan Firm Denies Attack on President

WASHINGTON, May 27.—A prompt repudiation of the anti-administration interview attributed to Henry P. Davison, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in Paris, has been received at the State Department.

This interview, attacking both President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, was cabled to a New York newspaper some days ago and was alleged to represent the ultimatum of Wall Street to the United States Government.

Cripple Run Down By Cyclist Is Dying

MACON, GA., May 27.—Edward Green, a cripple of Monticello, Ga., who was struck by a motorcycle yesterday afternoon as he was being wheeled across Mulberry street, is expected to die.

W. J. Radcliff, of Atlanta, was trying out a new motorcycle, preparatory to starting on a ride to Norfolk, Va., when the collision took place. He is under arrest.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

GOOD BILL AT FORSYTH.

Old favorites and new join in the bill at the Forsyth this week—and an unusually good bill it is, too. Every act is a topnotcher of its kind and there's variety enough for every one.

Maggie Cline, by struggling along some way, it seems, has been able to miss Atlanta for nineteen years. But she's here this week, and although the younger generation is not on right close speaking terms with her at first she soon warms the house and gets one of her "regular" old-time receptions. She sings the good old Irish stuff in the way that made her famous many years ago, and for good measure gives her greatest hit of the olden days, "Throw 'Im Down, McCloskey," which brings down the upper part of the house as of yore.

Among the other splendid numbers on the bill are Ethel Kirk and Billy Fogarty, who have a high-class song and patter act; Carl Rosine, a magician who doesn't bore you as you think he is going to; the great Howard, a ventriloquist, who has an entirely new line of stuff and puts it over in a novel way; Cesare Nesi, a splendid singer who warbles under the title of "Young Caruso," and does not libel the great and only tenor to any extent; Madden and Fitzpatrick, in a clever sketch in which Madden does some original piano playing, and the Equilli brothers, equilibrists who really are different. Of course, there are the motion pictures.

"ST. ELMO" SATISFACTORY.

Miss Billy Long and her company began a week's engagement Monday at the Atlanta in "St. Elmo," presenting the old Southern book play as acceptably as it can be played.

The play is a selection from six offered the patrons of the Atlanta, and the strength of the company lent itself admirably to the play.

Mr. Vail as St. Elmo Murray, the cynic, played the part forcibly and sympathetically. Miss Long's part, Edna Earl, was almost negligible, but was well handled.

"St. Elmo" will be seen nightly and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"THE RESURRECTION" AT GRAND

Blanche Walsh, one of the few American actresses who deserves the name of tragedienne, will be seen in Atlanta this week in her most famous role, that of Katusha in Tolstoy's wonderful drama, "The Resurrection."

It is a picture play which brings Blanche Walsh and the Russian play to the Grand this week, and the photo-drama will begin Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and continue until 10:30 o'clock that evening, with repetitions on Friday and Saturday. The prices will range from 10 to 25 cents.

White City Park Now Open

Carolina Desperado Slain Near Sylvania

AUGUSTA, GA., May 27.—Richard Henry Austin, murderer of three white men at Allendale, S. C., several weeks ago, was killed Monday night near Sylvania. The negro was trying to cross an open space to get to a swamp when he was fired upon by a score of men.

Austin had only two shells left and they were loaded with buckshot. They were identified as shells taken from Magistrate Edenfield, when Austin killed him in Hampton County.

Minister Nabs 'Tiger' Then Rides With Him

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—After he had arrested Bert Snyder, driver for a wholesale liquor company, on a charge of violating the prohibition law, the Rev. J. M. Dunlavy, welfare officer of Kansas City, Kan., climbed into Snyder's wagon and accompanied him as he delivered beer to his various customers.

The minister remained with the driver until he made his legal deliveries and then took him to the police station, where the man was released on bond.

CRAWLS THROUGH LONG PIPE.

COLUMBUS, IND., May 27.—Thomas Hardin crawled through 630 feet of 20-inch water pipe, leading from the water works to the new filter building seeking obstructions in the main. When he emerged the skin was worn from each of his elbows.

Veterans Present Hat to Capt. Cook

As spokesman for the W. H. T. Walker Camp 926, United Confederate Veterans, Comrade J. H. Shellnut, a one-legged veteran, presented Captain J. H. Cook with a military-shaped black alpine hat.

The presentation took place just before the camp formed in line to march to the railway station to board the Chattanooga train. Accepting the gift in a few words, Captain Cook ordered the camp to fall in, and the veterans marched to the station to entrain for the scenes of their combat of 50 years ago.

Inquiry of Wilson's Lobby Charge Asked

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An investigation by a special committee of five members of the House into the so-called tariff lobby which President Wilson charges is doing its best to defeat the Underwood bill was proposed in a resolution introduced in the House to-day.

Representative Tavenner, of Illinois, started the move.

Marshall Tells Girls: 'Be Just to Servants'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Vice President Marshall was the star speaker before the graduating class of a local girls' seminary.

"Deal justly with your servant," he advised. "You do not need to try to make her your equal and introduce her to your fiance, nor is it necessary to make her a common menial."

New Name Is Given Equitable Building

When workmen tear away the burlap which hides their work just now, the Equitable Building will be a thing of history. Henceforth the skyscraper, Atlanta's first, will be known as "The Trust Company of Georgia Building."

The new name is being chiseled in the stone over the Edgewood Avenue entrance.

The Equitable Life Assurance Society loaned the funds for erecting the building twenty-one years ago.

Virginians Claim 'Light Horse' Lee

ROANOKE, VA., May 27.—A committee of the Virginia Legislature is on its way to Georgia to-day for the purpose of bringing to his native State the remains of Henry Lee, better known as "Light Horse Harry Lee," the father of General Robert E. Lee.

General Lee died at Savannah on his return journey from Cuba, where he had been on account of his health. He was buried on Cumberland Island, near that city, and his grave has since been cared for by the Georgia Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

FLAGLER AND SON ESTRANGED TEN YEARS

Share of Youth in $60,000,000 Estate of Oil Magnate Is Conjectural.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Much interest is expressed by men of financial affairs as to the part Harry Harkness Flagler will play in the disposition of the great fortune of his father, Henry M. Flagler, estimated to be more than $60,000,000. Harry Harkness Flagler is 42 years old. He has been connected but little with the work of his father either in the Standard Oil Company or in the great development plans carried on in Florida.

It was said by men who have had close acquaintance with the Flagler affairs that the son and the father had been estranged for a long period, and that for ten years they had not spoken until the day before Flagler died, when the younger man arrived at Palm Beach from Europe in time to see his father alive.

Harry Harkness Flagler, though a man of acknowledged business capacity, never has engaged in business. He has kept singularly aloof from the affairs of the Standard Oil Company He never showed interest in the Florida railroad and hotel projects of his father, so far as is known. At the age of 32, with a large career in business before him if he chose, it was regarded as doubtful that he ever would go into business.

His temperament is artistic and his nature is one of excessive delicacy. It is said that as a child he preferred to play with girls rather than with boys.

It was held yesterday that a possible reason for the trusteeing of the Flagler estate lay in the divergence of interests of the son and the father. It was conjectured that the elder Flagler decided that his plans for further development of Florida, which it is believed he caused to be drawn up when he was ill, could be carried out better under the direction of trustees in close association with his life activities than in any other way.

The younger Flagler is a Columbia University man of the class of 1894. He is a son of Flagler's first wife, who was a member of the Standard Oil family of Harkness. He married Miss Anna Lamont in 1898.

CHICKENS GET SOUSED.

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—A dozen chickens in a coop at the city market were deluged by a broken jug of whisky. The chickens stuck their heads through the slats of the coop and snipped the liquor. Soon afterward the roosters began to crow noisily and the pullets flapped their wings.

ULM URGES PENAL REFORM FOR POOR

Governor's Executive Secretary Declares Present System Penalizes Poverty.

Major A. H. Ulm, executive secretary and ex-officio pardon attorney to Governor Brown, has given out an interview strongly commending the proposed efforts of the Georgia Prison Association to bring about healthy changes in the Georgia criminal laws and prison system.

"A person changed with misdemeanor is given the option of paying a fine or going to the chaingang," said Major Ulm. "Under our procedure, if he goes to the gang, he can not later change his mind and pay the fine. Many prisoners at time of sentence are unable to communicate with friends or relatives in time to pay the fine.

Must Appeal to Governor.

"The only way he can avail himself of the privilege of a money payment is by appealing to the Governor for clemency. If he pay an agent to attend to that routine, which we are compelled to enforce, nine times out of ten he will be forced to serve out the sentence.

"This amounts to penalizing poverty and misfortune. The State law on the subject should be the same as municipal laws, by which prisoners may pay, without bother and expense, the pro rata portion of the fine not worked out any time while serving the sentence.

Urges Suspended Sentences.

"Judges should be permitted to suspend sentences, with some form of probation, in all misdemeanor and, under wise restriction, in some felony cases, as that of a youth arraigned for the first time on a technical case of burglary.

"The State is in need of some form of indeterminate sentence. The parole law partly suffices, as it is intended to do, but it does not fill the need.

"Better provision also should be made for carrying out our present parole law. Virtually no funds are provided for investigating meritorious cases or for inspecting and supervising the conduct of those paroled."

Eisenfeldt Case Is Postponed 30 Days

The case against Mrs. Julia Eisenfeldt, proprietor of the Walton Inn, arrested following the complaint of a man that he had been robbed of a small sum of money in her house, was continued for 30 days, the man making the complaint being too ill to appear in court Monday.

Mrs. Eisenfeldt is the woman accused by E. O. Miles of paying money for police protection. Mrs. Eisenfeldt denies the accusation.

WIDE INTEREST IN PIANO CAMPAIGN

Hundreds Interested in Club Offer Made by the Weatherholt Company.

Seldom has an advertising campaign in Atlanta caused such widespread interest as that inaugurated Sunday in The American by the Weatherholt Piano Company, 72 North Broad Street.

The double-page advertisement, followed by a page in The Georgian yesterday afternoon announcing the sale of 400 player-pianos through a co-operative club of 400 members, has caused crowds of interested persons to visit the Weatherholt store.

Although the membership books do not open until to-morrow, many insisted upon selecting player-pianos in advance of enrolling. In anticipation of just such a rush, T. E. Weatherholt, president of the Weatherholt Company, made arrangements with the factory several weeks ago. These arrangements, together with thorough co-operation on the part of the railroads, have resulted in carloads of player-pianos arriving at the Weatherholt building.

This is the first time that player-pianos have ever been offered in this section to the public through co-operative club buying, and the reasonable price and the attractive terms of $10 down and $2.50 per week have awakened interest to an unusual degree.

Mr. Weatherholt selected a player-piano worth $650 for his club offer, and because of the tremendous purchasing power of the 400 club members, he was enabled to get them at a price which made the offer of $488.50 and at the attractive terms possible.

A corps of expert demonstrators at the Weatherholt store shows visitors how easily these player-pianos may be operated.

Among many other attractive features, the Weatherholt club offer includes twelve rolls of player music, with the privilege of exchanging them daily, if desired, for any other music in the Weatherholt library of 5,000 rolls.

LONDON, May 27.—Walter H. Page, the United States Ambassador to Great Britain, had no sooner reached London than he was asked by some English reporters concerning a report that he would refuse to wear knee breeches at Court. His answer was terse and pointed:

"Why do you ask me such a question? You surely don't want me to think that the imagination of a fool across the ocean begets more fools in London?"

Man, 72, Jilts Bride On Eve of Wedding

FORT COLLINS, COLO., May 27.—Cupid struck a snag here when he dallied with the affairs of T. C. Parker, 72, and Mrs. Nancy C. Pennington, 65, whose wedding was set for May 21.

The romance was shattered when the groom-to-be left here for Moline, Kans., where his relatives live. It is rumored here that an old sweetheart there is the attraction.

WIRE TROUBLE DID NOT FEAZE CUPID

Romance, Shattered After Eight-Dollar Phone Conversation, Ends in Marriage.

A romance that began in an Atlanta moving picture show, gained in strength at a New York motorcycle track, stood firm amid the vicissitudes of a theatrical career, and was broken off last week in an eight-dollar telephone conversation between Atlanta and Jacksonville, culminated in marriage Monday night, is being recounted to-day by friends of Miss Lena Quinn, a former Atlanta girl, who lives in Fitzgerald.

Miss Quinn is now the wife of Jack Morley, of Kansas City, who claims to be a motorcycle rider here for the races at Jack Prince's motordome. The wedding took place at the bride's home in Fitzgerald. They probably will return to Atlanta.

Mr. Morley came to Atlanta with his motorcycle last week, and several days ago Miss Quinn called him over long distance telephone from Jacksonville, where she has been spending the winter. Just what was said over the phone during the thirteen mintues conversation is unknown, but after it was over Mr. Morley flatly refused to pay the $8 telephone tolls and declared furthermore that his romance was shattered for good.

Miss Quinn, however, refused to have her romance shattered. She boarded the first train and arrived in Atlanta Monday morning. A reconciliation was soon effected.

EARNINGS OF BIG STORES FABULOUS

Marshall Field Clears $4,643,197 in Year; Sears, Roebuck & Co., $6,099,794.

CHICAGO, May 27.—The Illinois Senate white slave committee to-day was in possession of information which the members of the committee regarded as valuable in presenting their plea for a minimum law for women and girls to the Legislature. The committee had figures on the profits of several large corporations.

Maxwell Edgar, an attorney, who obtained the data while preparing "tax-dodging" suits, reported that Marshall Field & Co.'s net profits in 1909 were $4,643,197.98, and in 1910, $4,419,427.81. Sears, Roebuck & Co., he testified, earned net profits of $6,099,794.61 in 1909 and $6,606,291.47 in 1910. The net profits of Armour & Co. in 1909 were $4,358,488.93, and in 1910, $3,865,266.95. The Illinois Steel Company's net profits in 1909 were $11,165,839.22.

The capital stock of Marshall Field & Co. is $6,000,000.

Dr. Vaughan Defends Prison Treatment

Charges that prisoners in the Fulton County camps have been inhumanly treated are vigorously denied by the Rev. E. L. Vaughan, convict chaplain. Dr. Vaughan's prison work covers a period of 33 years, a score in direct touch with Fulton County prisoners.

"Especially," said Dr. Vaughan, "are these charges unjust in connection with Captain Tom Donaldson. I never have known him to be other than considerate.

"I do not believe there ever has been a prisoner punished in Fulton County unless he deserved it."

The "Classic" of All Millinery Sales

$5.00

For Hats Originally $8.50 to $25.00

There is just one hat that was $8.50 in the sale---and there are one hundred and fourteen of them all told. If an average were struck, it would border around the eighteen-dollar mark.

Indeed this is the "Classic" of all millinery sales!

They are hats for street wear, hats that summer travelers will want. There are black hats, black and white hats, green hats, blue hats---hats of all colors and of good style---depend upon that---the very greater part of them are from Estelle Mershon of 20 E. 46th St., New York---which is but another way of telling that the ribbons and the flowers and other trimmings are not only the choicest in themselves, but also that they are artistically, becomingly arranged.

Five dollars!

Could one think of missing such an opportunity?

A Silk Event

To-morrow at Nine o'Clock

An event in much the same fashion that a thorough house cleaning is to the housekeeper. We have gone deeply into the silk stocks and with a purpose---a very positive purpose to bring out all odd lots, surpluses and the like for one day's spirited selling.

Here are the results. The silks are all fine, worthy kinds that won their way into our favor and stocks because of their beauty---of fabric, pattern and coloring---which, taken together with the new prices, to-morrow shall develop into another of those splendid Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. Silk Sales.

59c For 85c and $1.00 Silks

Included are Shower-proof Foulards, 23 and 24 inches wide. The color range, the variety of patterns are all too great to be listed here—suffice it there are small, dainty patterns, new right now, in about any shade and combination of shades you might want. Also at this price are yard-wide taffetas in colors.

69c For 85c Shirtings

Those fine silk shirtings—33 inches wide, that are enjoying greater favor than in many seasons. Yes, they are washable. White grounds with colored and black line stripes.

83c For $1.50 to $2.25 Silks

Here is fine choice! Delicate chiffons in soft evening shades, plain and two-toned marquisettes, in seemingly the whole list of shades and in Dresden patterns, plain and two-toned taffetas, corded silks and poplins. Widths from 36 to 44 inches. There are going to be many pretty evening dresses and street dresses chosen from among these at rich savings!

$1.79 For $2.25 to $4 Chiffons

They are embroidered chiffons, 44 inches wide. In colors and designs for evening dresses. Pink and light blue, embroidered over with silver and deep mais and white. With these are crepe chiffons and bordered marquisettes.

$2.98 For $6 to $8 Chiffons

Exquisite imported materials rich in colors and embroidery—primarily "de luxe" fabrics. The embroidery shows in borders, sometimes very bold and heavy, and again delicate and dainty. Choose about any color—pink and white combinations, light blue and white, heliotrope and silver, silver and white, gold and black, and others.

ROOSEVELT DENIES EVER BEING DRUNK IN HIS LIFE

dent of the United States in 1900; his succession to the White House in 1901 when President McKinley was assassinated, and his election to the Presidency in 1904.

Colonel Roosevelt then testified as follows:

Q. What did you do on the expiration of your term in 1909?—A. I went to Africa as special curator for the Smithsonian Institution and spent several months there in research work. Returning home, I became connected with the "Outlook."

Q. Where were you in October, 1912?—A. What part of that month? Cite an incident to remind me.

Q. Have you ever seen this paper?—(The colonel was shown a copy of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.) A. Yes, in October, 1912.

Copy of Paper Admitted.

Q. Where were you?—A. In Mercy Hospital.

Q. What city? (Attorney Belden objected. The court overruled the objection and allowed an exception.) A. In Chicago.

Q. Why were you there?—A. I had been shot.

Q. In what city?—A. In Milwaukee.

(Attorney Pound here introduced a copy of the paper in evidence and it was admitted without objection.)

Q. How did you feel when you read the editorial, "The Roosevelt Way?"—A. I was very indignant.

At this point Attorney Pound read the editorial, stating that action was based on the following:

What Caused the Suit.

Theodore Roosevelt is the only one that can call people liars, rascals and thieves. If any one calls him names he roars terribly, yet he is a pretty good liar himself. Roosevelt lies and curses in a most disgusting manner. He gets drunk, too, and that not infrequently, and all his intimates know about it.

Q. Have you ever been drunk?—A. I have never in my life been drunk or in the slightest degree under the influence of liquor.

Q. What use do you make of liquor?—A. I do not drink either whisky or brandy, save as I shall hereafter say, or under the direction of a doctor. I don't drink beer—I do not like it. I do sometimes drink light wines. I have never drunk a high ball or cocktail in my life, but sometimes I have drunk a mint julep. There was a bed of mint in the White House yard. Perhaps I drank half a dozen of them a year.

Q. All at one time?

Judge Commands Order.

There was laughter and Judge Flannigan interrupted sternly.

"If there is any further demonstration the Sheriff will clear the court room. I will not have any disorder. Understand that."

A. Never but one mint julep at a time. I doubt very much if I drank over half a dozen in the seven years I was in the White House. In the four years since that time I have had two mint juleps—one at the Cincinnati Country Club and one in Arkansas from a loving cup. At dinner or at banquets I occasionally drink one or two glasses of light wine or champagne. I drink it publicly and openly.

Q. In the White House were there given so-called diplomatic dinners?—A. Yes, and there was served and I drank openly wine or champagne, one or two glasses of champagne. At state dinners, diplomatic dinners, at my dinners to my Cabinet, light wines and champagne were served. They were kept in the White House. I would not usually drink while alone, and it was not usually served unless there were guests. If there were guests, light wine was served and I would frequently drink one or two glasses. If there were diplomatic guests there would be champagne. I would drink about the same amount.

Drinks Brandy for Fever.

Q. Now as to the instruction of the doctor to which you referred, will you explain it?—A. Yes. During the Cuban campaign I had the Cuban fever and since that time I have had recurring attacks of it. These attacks usually come as the result of over-exertion, and at the direction of Surgeon Rixey I have occasionally used brandy in teaspoonful doses to check it. I had a severe attack of this illness while in Africa and had prepared for it by having a supply of brandy along.

I also had such attacks while in the Rocky Mountains and several touches of it during the political campaigns in which I made speeches. Usually brandy was taken along in case of need and there was champagne in my private car for the use of members of the party that used it.

I made it a rule never to drink anything at all during the day while on these trips and rarely anything at any time. What I did take on such trips was invariably on the advice of my physician, who always accompanied me.

Attorney Andrews for the defense conducted the cross-examination. He asked Colonel Roosevelt if he was paying the expenses of the prosecution of the libel suit against Editor Newett, or if the Progressive party were bearing it.

Colonel Roosevelt shouted his denial that any one except himself was paying. Sight of the colonel displaying his feelings caused a commotion among those in the court room, and Judge Flannigan ordered a bailiff to rap for order. The direct examination then continued.

Q. Are you a teetotaler or a prohibitionist?

An objection was overruled.

A. I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky, and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Q. Describe yourself as to your use of intoxicating liquors.—A. I am not a total abstainer, but am very abstemious, perhaps it would aid you to understand that if I were to describe the routine of my life at the White House.

Q. Yes; please do so.—A. I usually rose rather early and had breakfast with the members of my family. For twenty minutes I would walk in the White House grounds, often with one of the children or some member of my Cabinet. From my walk I would go directly to my office, where Secretary Loeb and I would go through the mail and receive Senators, Representatives and diplomatic officers. Unless I had shaved myself, I would be shaved by the barber in a room between my office and Mr. Loeb's. I was very busy, and it was necessary to save every minute of time, so I would dictate letters or talk to some callers while being shaved.

No Drinks Before Luncheon.

I would then be busy with conferences and correspondence until lunch time. Then I would wash my face and hands and walk down the terrace to the White House, where I would have lunch with my family. Never under any circumstances did I touch a drop of liquor of any kind before luncheon. If we lunched alone there was rarely any liquor, but if there were guests there would be served either light wine or champagne, and in either case I would usually drink one or two glasses of that.

After luncheon I would return to my office and be busy with my mail and callers until 4 o'clock. At that hour I went for a walk or ride, frequently with some member of my Cabinet. I would walk or ride until 6, when I returned to the White House. I would spend a half hour with the children, and then would bathe and dress for dinner.

At dinner there were usually guests, and wine was usually served. Occasionally I drank a glass or two. After dinner I either returned to my office or had Mr. Loeb in my library, where we went over mail and worked on messages and the like. About midnight I would read for twenty minutes some book to take my mind off public business. Then I would go to sleep. Dr. Rixey usually was in to see me at bedtime.

Q. When you was mustered out of the army, what was your rank?

Attorney Belden. We object. That is irrelevant.

Court. It is relevant to show the plaintiff's position.

A. I was acting brigade commander, and was recommended to be brevetted a brigadier general.

Didn't Drink on Trips.

Q. Now, what were your drinking habits while on speaking trips?—A. I never drank anything during the day, and never anything at any time except on the advice of Dr. Rixey or my throat specialist, Dr. Curtis. After a hard day I often took one or two glasses of milk with a teaspoonful of brandy in each. Then I would read twenty minutes, see Dr. Rixey and go to sleep. I would sleep soundly to feel clear in the morning.

Q. When you speak of a hard day, just what do you mean?—A. I mean a long journey and many speeches, or either. Many of those trips were very exhausting, and that was the reason Dr. Rixey accompanied me. When you are President you can not be ill, and a President's work must go on, regardless.

Here the direct examination ended, and Horace Andrews, of Cleveland, Ohio, began the cross-examination.

Q. You are not a resident of Michigan?—A. No, sir; I have always been a resident of the State and city of New York, although ever since I was a boy I have usually spent a few summer months in the country. As a boy my time in the country was usually on a farm or country place of my father's.

Q. Then your visits to Michigan have been flying trips?—A. They have usually been brief trips.

Enumerates His Friends.

Q. Do you know anybody in Marquette County?—A. I know several people; Mr. Shiras best of all.

Q. You know that Mr. Shiras is not really a resident of Marquette; that he lives in the East and only spends his summers here?—A. I know that he is frequently away during the winter on natural history work. As to his legal residence I can not speak.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette?—A. I know Mr. Hill there.

Q. Mr. Hill of your counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just met him since you hired him as your lawyer, did you not?—A. I think I met him last summer.

Q. Think? Don't you know?—A. I don't remember certainly.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette County?—A. I have met a number of people at various times.

Q. And have promptly forgotten them, eh?—A. No, sir, but when one meets so many people one can't always recall names unless one is reminded by seeing the person.

Q. Ah, I see. Do you see any reminiscent faces in the court room?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your entire life has been given mostly to politics, has it not?—A. I should not say that. I would say that, previous to the Spanish war, I was as much of a naturalist and historian and writer as anything else.

Q. As President you met Senators and entertained them and were invited to their homes—is that not true?—A. I knew every Senator and entertained all of them at the White House. I was rarely invited to their houses.

Q. And you met members of Congress and received them at your house, did you not?—A. I knew every Representative in Congress and received all who called.

Q. And in traveling you attended many banquets given in your honor, did you not?—A. I attended some banquets.

Q. Where liquor was served?—A. Yes, certainly, where liquor was served.

Q. Yet, in all the fifteen years you have been in politics you have never drank anything except a little brandy and milk?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Just so, now as to the wines that you speak of as light wines, just what kind of wines were those?—A. Light white wines, California wines or Sauternes; once in a while I took a little Madeira.

Q. Is that all?—A. Once in a while a bit of sherry; I never drink red wines.

Q. Oh, you will swear that you have never tasted red wine?—A. No, certainly not. You know I did not mean that. What I mean is that I do not like red wines and that I never drink them. I do not mean that I have never tasted them. Probably I have and probably when they have been passed I have touched the glass to my lips.

Q. Do you keep wine, brandy and whisky in your house?—A. Yes, sir, all three.

Q. Did you keep liquor in the White House?—A. Yes, I kept the stock left me by Mr. McKinley.

Mr. Andrews: "I move the last part of that answer be stricken out as not responsive to my question."

Mr. Pound: "I think it is competent to show that he merely continued a custom already established."

Shows Signs of Anger.

The Court: "It is proper to show that if he will answer it in the way you indicate."

Mr. Roosevelt: "Then may I revise my answer?"

Mr. Andrews: "Certainly you may amend it, Mr. Roosevelt, if you can not wish to answer it directly or would be embarrassed to do so."

Mr. Roosevelt: "I can and will answer it directly."

The former president showed signs of anger.

A. I did keep wine, whisky and brandy of several kinds in the White House, as my predecessor had done before me, and as President Cleveland and President Garfield and others had done.

Q. And is it true that you kept two butlers to take care of this stock of liquors?—A. It is true that I kept two butlers, but they took care of the wines merely as an incident to their employment.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wallace, National Committeeman of the Progressive Party in Michigan?—A. I do.

Q. Did he institute this prosecution, this suit?—A. I don't know.

Q. What? You don't know who started this important piece of litigation for you?—A. I was in Mercy Hospital when it started and I can not say.

Again Denies Knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Wallace have anything to do with filing it?—A. I could not say.

Q. It was reported in newspaper interviews that he had started this suit on your behalf. Did you see those interviews or articles?—A. Not that I am able to recall.

Q. Have you borne all the expense of this suit personally, the cost of finding and summoning witnesses and bringing them here and taking depositions and the like?—A. I have borne all the expense.

Q. Was not a portion of that expense borne by the Progressive party of Michigan or by the Progressive national committee?—A. It was not. I paid everything.

Colonel's Voice Squeaked.

Colonel Roosevelt was thoroughly angry now, his face flushed, his voice squeaked and he clenched his fists and half rose from the chair.

Q. Would you know it if any expense in this suit were borne by any person other than yourself?—A. I certainly would, and it has all been borne by myself.

Mr. Andrews announced that this completed the cross-examination.

Mr. Pound, on redirect examination, asked two questions, both designed to bring out the fact that Colonel Roosevelt was paying the expenses of the prosecution.

Q. This suit was brought by your direction, was it not, at your expense?—A. It was.

Q. Did the Progressive party or any branch of its organization or any of its officers or workers or any other persons at any time contribute anything to the expense of this suit?—A. No, I bore the entire expense myself.

Pledged Speaker's Health.

Q. Tell us about Speaker Cannon's birthday party.—A. I drank a glass of champagne on that occasion in pledging the Speaker's birthday health.

Defense Scores "Eulogy."

"Hunting exploits and public acts are improper in an opening statement," was the objection raised by Attorney Belden, representing Newett, to the opening address of Attorney Pounds for Colonel Roosevelt. Two minutes after Judge Flannagan overruled his objection he was again on his feet, protesting against the statement which, he declared, was "an oration—a eulogy."

Judge Flannagan again refused to check Attorney Pounds' address, but ruled that the defense might save their objection. When Pounds, however, referred to the time when "this plaintiff was in power," the court upheld the objection of the defense and ordered Pounds to confine his remarks to a statement of what he intended to prove. The defense announced it would defer making a statement until after taking of testimony.

Before court session began, Judge Flannagan ordered all the witnesses on both sides out of the room. No person connected with the case was admitted to the court room during the trial, except the principals, their attorneys and the witness who was on the stand.

T. R. Inclines To Champagne

Defending himself against a charge of drunkenness, Colonel Roosevelt gives the following as an epitome of his drinking customs:

I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Hill's Market Basket Bond Sale a Success

ST. PAUL, May 27.—James J. Hill's plan of selling city bonds in certificates of $10 each through the Northwestern Trust Company was a big success to-day. Men and women were waiting at an early hour for the company's office to open, and a steady stream filed in and out all morning.

The officers were prepared and began to issue receipts for the money promptly. One hundred and seven small investors bought a total of $10,000 worth of certificates up to noon.

MEN AND RELIGION BULLETIN NO. 57

Atlanta Upholds Chief Beavers

The "Itching Palm" And The Character Assassin Have No Place Here.

The itching palm.

Judas Iscariot had it.

Thirty pieces of silver upon his hand, and Judas betrayed his Lord.

Poor Judas, learning too late the curse of the itching palm, threw away the money and killed himself in shame and sorrow.

Notwithstanding itching palms are here to-day.

And again and again would they betray Christ, our saviour, and rear for him a cross.

Their pay coming from the betrayal of girls matters not to them.

If they get their hire, they care not that their success would mean the dishonoring of motherhood, the blinding of babies, and the spreading of disease, insanity and death among innocent children and women.

These they ignore with a sneering curse.

But you do not; you care and understand; you recall.

Annually seven hundred thousand dollars and more poured through the white slave market of Atlanta into the itching palm.

The lie of segregation so prospered seven houses that their reputed owners received forty-three thousand and seventy-four dollars in the form of rent every year, more than twice as much as the rental of thirty-three other houses scattered throughout the city.

Chief Beavers closed them all and ended the ghastly farce of segregation.

Eight months have passed and the owners of the itching palm have become frantic.

For eight months the "unbreakable bank of the corrupt politicians" has been hampered by the honesty of a man whose palms will not itch.

How much have the owners of the houses and the liquor dealers lost?

Eight months is two-thirds of a year; two-thirds of seven hundred thousand dollars is four hundred and sixty-six thousand, six hundred and sixty dollars and sixty-six cents.

How their palms do itch!

And they have despaired of corrupting the Chief.

They have to get rid of him, if they ever open again their market with its unspeakable pimps and procurers plying their trade of debauching girls.

IS THIS CONNECTED WITH THE RECENT STUDIED EFFORT TO DISCREDIT THE CHIEF AND ATLANTA'S POLICE DEPARTMENT IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD?

Consider this before you answer.

The Chief can be removed from office only for inefficiency proven by trial before the Police Board.

Incorruptibility is not inefficiency.

And an unwillingness to violate one's oath—a refusal to let criminals live upon the shame of women is no evidence that a man is incompetent to be Chief of Atlanta's Police Force.

Hence the plight of protected vice and its servants.

THEY CANNOT CORRUPT; HENCE, THEY SEEK TO RUIN WITH LIES.

Their itching palms know not how to labor honestly, though they are skilled in squeezing money from helpless fallen women, their "meal tickets."

Being hungry, they snarl and snap.

God pity them and open their eyes to their unutterable degradation!

The outside world is pointing to the fearless honesty of our Chief of Police and the efficient way in which he is handling the most difficult of all city problems.

And in this age of graft he will not be sacrificed to put into office a dishonest man satisfactory to the owners of brothels and bars and their henchmen.

Never!

AND ATLANTA WILL REMEMBER FOR FUTURE RECKONING THOSE MEN, IN OR OUT OF OFFICE, WHO TRY TO HAMPER THE CHIEF AS HE DOES HIS DUTY.

Recall the itching palms of the servants of protected vice and be on your guard.

"A lie turned loose put Christ on the Cross." Nail their lies!

Note those who are trying by the most foul of all means, character assassination, to bring back upon Atlanta the disgrace of a traffic which demands for its existence the sacrifice of innocent girls.

For the day of accounting is coming.

Vice is fighting to regain the privilege of making dirty dollars by defiling women.

Chief Beavers is battling for decency and health, the welfare of our families and your loved ones.

He does not fight alone. You are with him.

Thank God! You are awake and watching.

Chief Beavers and his men will be upheld by Atlanta.

The Executive Committee of the Men and Religion Forward Movement

The World of Society

MRS. WILTON DARGAN entertained twelve guests informally at luncheon Tuesday for Mrs. C. A. Wood, who will leave soon to spend the summer at Toxaway.

The luncheon was given at the Piedmont Driving Club. The table, placed in the green room of the club, was decorated with vivid red poppies, arranged in a tall silver vase. The place cards bore modish hand-painted figures of up-to-date ladies.

Mrs. Dargan wore wistaria canton crepe, with a hat of black maline.

Banquet to Bridegroom.

A banquet was tendered Mr. P. W. Wilcox in honor of his approaching marriage to Miss Katherine Rawlings, of Druid Hills, by the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, in a private dining room at the Kimball House Monday evening. The dining room was decorated in palms and ferns. The table, with a floral centerpiece down its length, was attractive. The menu of seven or eight courses was interspersed with toasts and speeches.

Mr. J. B. Cleveland, president of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, presented a handsome gold watch to Mr. Wilcox, who is secretary and treasurer of the company. The presentation was in behalf of the company. The watch bore as an inside inscription:

"To Mr. P. W. Wilcox, from his friends and associates of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, May 28, 1913."

In presenting the watch, Mr. Cleveland made a witty talk on "Time," the gist of his remarks being the wish that "Every time you look at the watch to learn the time, may you think of the fine time you've had tonight and may you always have a good time and a good timepiece."

The company included Messrs. J. B. Cleveland, Harold S. Holmes, P. W. Wilcox, George Lamkin, W. M. Adams, W. M. Taylor, R. T. Skinner, Jr., C. R. Stone, J. H. Lamb, A. G. Cooper, T. W. Newbern, Fred Ball and T. C. Callaway.

May Pole Dance.

Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock a May pole dance will be given at the Wren's Nest in West End. More than 100 children will take part. The most important feature of the entertainment will be the coronation of the May queen, Miss Katherine Vickers, attended by much pomp and ceremony.

The maid of honor will be Miss Frances Stokes, queen of the last May Festival. Other maids will be Kathleen Hackett, Kirby Willingham, Lucile Price, Margie Curfee, Mary Crucell and Lora Colcord. The knights will be Newton McEachern, Brevard Montgomery, Thomas Stokes, Warren Pollard, Howard Connolly and Thomas Longino.

An interesting feature will be the appearance of the little grandchildren of Joel Chandler Harris, who will take part in the coronation ceremonies. They are LeRose Wagener and Chandler Harris, who will act as flower girl and canopy bearer.

There will be amusements on the grounds in the way of a fishing pond, lemonade well, candy and cake both and the honey tree, thimble finger well, home of Miss Meaders and the girls, and other specialties.

"Br'er Rabbit" and "Br'er B'ar" will be at the festival, and maybe, if the visitors look around among the lovely flowers and trees at the Wren's Nest and Snap Bean Farm, they can catch a glimpse of Uncle Remus and the little Boy who made Mr. Harris' writing so dear to children all over the world.

Cars will leave the city at all hours, so that everybody can get to the festival and have a good time.

Mrs. Brevard Montgomery, who originated the first May Festival at the Wren's Nest, has charge of the entertainment this year.

Miss Gay Hostess.

Miss Eloise Gay entertained at a bowling party at the East Lake Country Club Tuesday afternoon. After bowling and boating on the lake, refreshments were served on the veranda.

Guests included Misses Louise Wilson and Evelyn Booth, Lynchburg, Va.; Sarah Hansell, Thomasville; Agnes Roberson, Texas; Willie Belle Jackson, Texas; Nunuzza Seymore, Alabama; Essie Roberts, Fairburn; Ethel McKay, Elizabeth Burke, Julia MacIntyre, Louise McMulty, Dollie McArthur, Kate Richardson, Eva Powers, Sarah Powers, Edna Taylor, Louise Oberly and Beverly Anderson, all members of the "Bulldog" Club of Agnes Scott College.

For Visitors.

Miss Mary Andrews will entertain a number of Brenau girls and an equal number of young men informally Tuesday evening at her home in Ansley Park to meet her guests, Misses Mary Trippe Ellison, of Mississippi, and Grace Pruett, of Clayton, Ala., students at Brenau.

Wednesday Mrs. L. W. Grey will give a luncheon at the Georgian Terrace in their honor. Wednesday afternoon Miss Annie Maude Schuessler will entertain at the Atlanta Theater for Miss Andrews' guests.

Thursday afternoon Miss Irene Bennett will give a matinee party at the Forsyth for the visitors.

For Miss Courtney Harrison.

Miss Lucy Harrison will entertain at bridge Thursday afternoon for Miss Courtney Harrison, whose marriage to Mr. Loring Raoul will take place Monday.

Art Association Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Atlanta Art Association will be held at 11 o'clock Wednesday, May 28, in the Carnegie Library. The annual election of officers will take place.

Woman's Club Closes.

The final meeting of the Woman's Club this season was held in the club rooms Monday afternoon. The year's reports were presented and the club adjourned for the summer months.

Mrs. A. P. Coles presided. She read a paper on the work of the club the past year. Her paper was followed by talks by other officers.

Mrs. Jarnagin sang "One Fine Day," from Madame Butterly.

Many members made short talks on the club's work. They were Mrs. H. H. Tucker, Mrs. William Hurd Hillyer, Mrs. Lott Warren, Mrs. H. B. Scott, Mrs. P. H. McGovern, Mrs. Stockbridge, Mrs. Bolling Jones, Mrs. Lindsay Johnson, Rome; Mrs. H. H. Merry, Pelham; Mrs. James Jackson and Miss Alice Baxter.

Officers for the coming year are Mrs. A. P. Coles, president; Miss Alice Baxter, first vice president; Mrs. Linton Hopkins, second vice president; Mrs. Lott Warren, recording secretary; Mrs. Albert Akers, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. M. M. Davies, treasurer; Mrs. Arthur Powell, auditor and Mrs. Victor Kriegshaber, corresponding secretary.

The club will hold its next meeting in October.

Musical Tea.

There will be a musical tea at the home of Mrs. George A. Wight, 509 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, Thursday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, for the benefit of Circle No. 10 of the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Methodist Church. A musical program will be rendered.

The Jolly Twenty Club.

Miss Hulda Mae Suttles entertained the Jolly Twenty Club at her home in Ira Street recently. Those present were Misses Bertie Johnson, Virginia Weaks, Willie Johnson, Hula Mae Suttles; Messrs. Otis Smith, Warlick Bolinger, Paul Cobler and Arthur Cooke. Hearts-dice was played. The prize, a pretty fan, was won by Miss Bertie Johnson. Refreshments were served. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Alma DeLucia, 45 Eugenia Street, Thursday evening. Officers will be elected.

Kitchens-Head.

Mrs. E. L. Kitchens announces the marriage of her daughter, Mary Estell, to Mr. Lewellyn Deering Head, May 24. The Rev. W. W. West performed the ceremony. A few relatives and intimate friends were present.

Parties for Miss Bobb.

Miss Mildred Bobb, of New Orleans, will be tendered several informal parties as Miss Ruth Reid's guest. One will be an informal tea Wednesday afternoon given by Mrs. Reid for members of a small club of Washington Seminary students. Another will be an informal luncheon at the East Lake Club, followed by a matinee party, to be given Saturday by Misses Freida and Winifred Ashe.

Civic Club.

The Civic Club will meet with Mrs. Thomas Gay at her home in Washington Street Friday afternoon.

Morning Bridge.

Mrs. E. H. Bussey will entertain at bridge Wednesday morning at her home, 258 Lake Avenue, Inman Park. Her guests will be Misses Josephine Stoney, Frances Connally, Eloise Stewart, Nellie Kiser Stewart, Mary Robinson, Mrs. R. N. R. Bardwell, Mrs. L. S. Crane, Mrs. C. C. McGehee, Jr., Mrs. E. H. Ginn, Mrs. T. K. Starr, Mrs. D. S. Moore, Mrs. H. E. W. Palmer and Mrs. W. C. Coles.

Mrs. S. C. Dobbs' Luncheon.

Mrs. S. C. Dobbs gave a luncheon Tuesday morning to Miss Lina Andrews and Miss Ollie Ferrell, two brides of June. The house was decorated in ferns and pink roses, the buds being used in a large basket on the table where all details were in pink. Favors were small pink wicker baskets filled with French bonbons. To the honor guests were given corsage bouquets of roses.

Guests were Misses Lina Andrews, Ollie Ferrell, Mildred Harris, Lois Pattillo, Pauline Coulter, Lucile Goodrich, Eula Hancock, Martha Smith, Lucile Dennis, Mary Goodrich, Annie and Maisie Rauschemberg, Mildred Dobbs, Mrs. George W. Andrews, Mrs. E. R. Austin, Mrs. Blancow, of Pennsylvania, who was Miss Rena White, and Mrs. William Candler.

For Miss Barnes.

Miss Alice Vandiver entertained at bridge Tuesday afternoon for her guest, Miss Gwendolyn Barnes, of Uniontown, Pa. Among those playing were Misses Annie Lee McKenzie, Sara Rawson, Helen Dargan, Helen Hobbs, Marie Pappenheimer, Harriet Cole, Helen Hawkins, Marion Goldsmith, Ruth Stallings, Mary Helen Moody, Isabel Kuhrt, Emma Kate Amorous, Gladys LeVin, Laura Ansley, Nina Gentry, Charles Owens, Frances Connally, Mrs. Forrest Adair, Jr., Mrs. F. E. Kneip, Mrs. Wickliffe Goldsmith, Mrs. Clarence Haverty, Mrs. Charles Remsen, Mrs. Roy Collier, Mrs. William Schroder, Mrs. Hughes Spalding and Mrs. Charles T. Hopkins, Jr.

Luncheon for Miss Harrison.

Woman's Beauty Is Based on Health

To Have Health, Bowel Movement Is Absolutely Necessary---How Best to Obtain it.

MRS. JENNIE SNEDEKER.

If woman's beauty depended upon cosmetics every woman would be a picture of loveliness. But beauty lies deeper than that. It lies in health. In the majority of cases the basis of health, and the cause of sickness, can be traced to the action of the bowels.

The headaches, the lassitude, the sallow skin and the lusterless eyes are usually due to constipation. So many things that women do habitually conduce to this trouble. They do not eat carefully, they eat indigestible foods because the foods are served daintily and they do not exercise enough. But whatever the particular cause may be, it is important that the condition should be corrected.

An ideal remedy for women, and one especially suited to their delicate requirements, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of women endorse highly. Mrs. Jennie Snedeker, 1041 West Monroe Street, Chicago, testifies that she is "cured of grave stomach and bowel troubles by using Syrup Pepsin and without the aid of a doctor or any other medicine." All the family can use Syrup Pepsin, for thousands of mothers give it to babies and children. It is also admirably suited to the requirements of elderly people, in fact, to all who, by reason of age or infirmity, can not stand harsh salts, cathartics, pills or purgatives. These should always be avoided, for, at best, their effect is only for that day, while a genuine remedy like Syrup Pepsin acts mildly but permanently.

It can be conveniently obtained at any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded. You will find it gentle in action, pleasant in taste, and free from griping, and its tonic properties have a distinct value to women. It is the most widely used laxative-tonic in America to-day and thousands of families are now never without it.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington Street, Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

IT IS MIRACLE PELICANS EVER WIN ANY GAMES

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE wonder of it is that the Pelicans have won those thirteen games that now grace their records! How did they get them? What happened? The "Felder Mystery" is as nothing compared with it.

On what the Pelicans showed here yesterday, when they lost to the Crackers 8 to 3, they wouldn't be entitled to win thirteen games in ten years.

According to Charley Frank his club isn't altogether to blame. As is the case with most tail-end clubs injuries have done their devastating work. Both of the Pelicans' catchers have been shot away—and Yantz is out of the game for a year with a broken leg. Manush's bum knee has gone wrong again and he is out of it—for an indefinite stay. It is possible that he will never be his old self again. They think so in Toledo, where the accident happened.

The Pelicans are complaining of another affliction of the tail-enders—their nerve is gone. They couldn't take a game if it was handed to them. They are the worst fielders in the league—and they did not improve their averages any in Monday's game.

* * *

ELLIOTT DENT more or less vindicated himself Monday. Bill Smith slipped him in and he beat the Pelicans. He weakened a fraction in the eighth and ninth but he showed a lot better than his last out. With plenty of work this man may prove a star. He does not seem at his best yet, but maybe the next time he is worked he will be able to go all the way through.

* * *

THIS Cast-Off's Revenge stuff is getting to be a howling farce. "Rebel" Williams, a Cracker-for-a-day a while back, turned up Monday with the fiercest sort of batting and laced out four hits in four times up. He had but one fielding chance, which he looked out for in good style.

William's regular batting stride is so far below that which he showed yesterday as to make the whole thing a blooming burlesque. But it always happens. Generally the cast-offs win the game. Maybe the fact that Williams was an involuntary cast-off saved the Crackers from that misfortune.

* * *

WILLIAMS was not the only man who did some surprising batting. Another was Pitcher Dent, who scratched a couple through the infield and beat them to first.

Snedecor put a scratch and a double to his credit. He and Williams made three-fifths of the Pels' hits.

Welchonce put a single and a very timely three-bagger on the records. Welchonce had Dunn and Dent on bases and, of course, something ferocious was needed to score them. Welchonce hit it all right and both of the speed merchants tallied.

Harry Welchonce made six nice put-outs yesterday and added to the half-dozen he made the day before, gave him twelve put-outs in two days. His batting was timely but he made one of those old-time "Atlanta bunts"—a wabbling drive to Evans which resulted in a put-out at second.

THE Crackers have two more games with the Pelicans and ought to win them both, unless the Pels show a tremendous improvement. Charley Frank has no pitcher calculated to stop the local batters and his fielders are pretty much to the bad.

Thursday Montgomery turns up for four games. On Friday, because of Federal Decoration Day, there will be two games.

Blood Bath Knocks Rheumatism

Remarkable Effects of a Remedy That Actually Irrigates the Entire Blood Supply.

It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect of a most remarkable remedy known as S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In five minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capillary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every enunctory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities. The stimulating properties of S. S. S. compel the skin, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder to all work to the one end of casting out every irritating, every pain-inflicting atom of poison. It dissolves by irrigation all accumulations in the joints, dissolves acid accretions, renders them neutral and scatters those peculiar formations in the nerve centers that cause such mystifying and often baffling rheumatic pains.

And, best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach. If you have drugged yourself until your stomach is nearly paralyzed, you will be astonished to find that S. S. S. gives no sensation but goes right to work. This is because it is a pure vegetable infusion, is taken naturally into your blood just as pure air is inhaled naturally into your lungs.

The great Swift Laboratory has spent millions of dollars in perfecting, producing and placing in the hands of the public this wonderful remedy. So give your blood a good bath with S. S. S., for it knocks the worst forms of rheumatism every time.

You can get it at any drug store at $1 per bottle. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood specific ever discovered. If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice write to The Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift building, Atlanta, Ga.

JUNE 6 TO SEE FIRST RACE AT MOTORDROME

WITH a band concert announced for Sunday and with the date for the opening set for Friday night, June 6, and with the board motordrome at the old circus grounds pretty well finished, Atlanta's season of motorcycle racing in the "giant washtub" is closing in.

And you get the idea of what is going to happen from the expression "racing in a giant washtub." That's exactly what it is like. Jack Prince's new track is little more—and no less—than a board track, set on edge. Instead of riding on the floor of the tub the racers hurtle around on the inside of the sides, like cockroaches on the kitchen wall, setting laws of gravity at naught and affording to the spectators the most spectacular form of racing the world has ever known.

Jack Prince really has a big offering for the Atlanta public. His track is the latest and best board track in the world. It represents the last word in the building of board tracks. Jack has gathered in Atlanta already the best motorcycle racers in the world. He has more on the way. He is erecting comfortable seats, every one of which commands a view of the big inclosure. He has engaged a band. He has arranged for a corking car service—a service that will take the patrons of the motordrome from Five Points to the track in barely more than five minutes. He has an attractive program for opening night. As a result he will be greeted by one of the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a motorcycle race in America.

PEACOCK FLEET GIVES BOYS' HIGH BIG SCARE

Boys' High School nine received the closest call ofthe season yesterday afternoon when they were held to a 6 to 5 score by the Peacock Fleet school aggregation.

Boys' High began the scoring in the first inning when they registered a single tally and each team took its turns throughout the nine chapters at leading the score. The winning tally was registered in the ninth inning when Johnson scored on an error.

ODE.

This is an ode to men of great renown:
An ode to men who laugh and say:
"Pooh! Pooh!"
An ode to men who hold a great game down
And snap their fingers, saying:
"That for you!"
This is an ode to those who laugh and say
"Old P. T. Barnum had the proper dope.
Those rummies will be with us every day
And pay their kale and sit there full of hope."
I love to hear the wallop of the bat
And see the pill go bounding down the dell,
But when a lot of guys grow rich and fat
And then they rub it in—O whatthehel!

Jake Daubert has been suspended for three days. Jake Daubert is a member of the Brooklyn team, which has been winning too many games for the good of the National League.

Tom Jones says he will bet $10,000 on Jess Willard if said Jess Willard fights Gunboat Smith again. Mr. Jones shows his business acumen by speaking thus. It would cost him at least $7.50 to hire a hall.

Not that we care to queer an honest man's business, but our idea of obtaining money under false pretenses is to manage Jess Willard.

Ed Walsh threatens to teach the spitball by mail. Various batters in the American League would give half their year's salaries if Ed would only deliver his spitball by mail.

AS J. EVERS MIGHT SAY.

I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.
I could not, even in a pinch.
In fact, it is a lead pipe cinch
I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.

BRANNIGAN HANDS M'CUE FIRST DEFEAT OF CAREER

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27.—Matty McCue, variously known as the Racine terror, the Wisconsin whirlwind and the Racine wonder, is to-day simply plain McCue, for all the terror and whirlwind and wonder were punched out of him by Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg. It was McCue's first defeat, but it was decisive all along the ten-round route.

JAKE ABEL BEATS WHITE IN EIGHT-ROUND FIGHT

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 27.—Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, easily defeated Frankie White, of Chicago, here last night. Abel floored White in the eighth round with a right to the ribs. White did not land one clean blow.

ST. LOUIS, May 27.—Johnnie Billiter won two out of three falls last night from Eddie Hammer.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jack McGuigan says he has secured Jack Britton's signature to meet Young Erne at the baseball park in Philadelphia on Decoration Day. Both boys will weigh in at 138 pounds ringside.

* * *

"Bud" Anderson is taking up considerable of the pugilistic limelight. His knockout of Joe Mandot stamps him as one of the most dangerous boxers in his class.

* * *

Jack O'Brien, the Philadelphia heavyweight and one of the real veterans of the game, donned the mitts the other day. He boxed a three-round exhibition with Harry Ramsey in Pottstown, Pa.

* * *

Harry Trendall and Leo Kelly will clash in a scheduled eight-round bout at St. Louis Wednesday night. Trendall and Kelly met several months ago, and the former was credited with the shade.

* * *

Jimmy Perry will have a chance to make himself one of the biggest cards in the boxing game Thursday night. Jimmy is to take on Mike Gibbons in a six-round set-to, and the fur should fly. Reports from the Pennsylvania city state that both boys have trained hard for the go, and are ready for the gong.

* * *

Perry's friends here are anxiously awaiting the result. They point to the fact that Jimmy has been going great lately, and for the first time in months has trained faithfully for a scrap.

* * *

Meyer Pries, who will meet Spider Britt in one of the three ten-round bouts to be staged at the Auditorium June 13, paid us a visit yesterday. Meyer says that he is going to bet his end of the purse that he beats Britt. The little Hebrew also says that he is going to be right this time, and will start work for the bout in a couple of days.

* * *

Abe Attell is still gathering in the soft dough. The former featherweight champion has agreed to take on Phil Bloom in the ten-round windup of a special show at the Irving A. C., Brooklyn. Attell is to receive $700, win, lose or draw.

* * *

Tom Jones continues to challenge Gunboat Smith in behalf of his heavyweight, Jess Willard. As yet he has not received any satisfaction from Jim Buckley, manager of Smith.

* * *

Buckley is not worrying much these days. Besides having Smith, he also has a meat meal ticket in Harlem Tommy Murphy, one of the leading contenders for Willie Ritchie's crown.

* * *

Arthur Pelky threatens to quit the ring for good. The big heavyweight has taken McCarty's death to heart, and says he will never be able to enter the ring again and fight at his best.

* * *

Jack Denning, the New York middleweight, wants to get into action again. Denning is anxious to exchange blows with Dillon, Klaus, McGoorty or Jack McCarron.

* * *

Frank Klaus received the newspaper verdict over Eddie McGoorty in their six-round bout at Pittsburg Saturday night. Both boys were strong at the finish, and could have gone a number of rounds more.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight, had an easy time defeating Kid Scaler the other night. The bout went the full fifteen rounds, but Freddie had a big shade at the finish.

T. R. HOTLY DENIES HE EVER WAS DRUNK

Shuots Denial That Bull Moose Party Is Paying Cost of His $10,000 Libel Suit.

ADMITS HE OCCASIONALLY INDULGES IN CHAMPAGNE

Declares During White House Residence He Took Only Light Wines—Dislikes Beer.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 27.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt to-day took the stand in his suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore. Colonel Roosevelt denied emphatically that he ever drank intoxicating liquors to excess as charged in the editorial that resulted in his $10,000 libel suit.

He said he did not drink beer or whisky, except under the direction of a doctor, but admitted that he some times drank light wines.

He related briefly his career up to the time the editorial from The Iron Ore was brought to him as he lay in a hospital in Chicago, after having been wounded by a would-be assassin in Milwaukee.

Says Editorial Angered Him.

"I was very indignant," said the colonel, "when the editorial was shown me."

The former President mounted the stand after a stormy few minutes during which Attorney Pound, representing the plaintiff, was interrupted frequently by Attorney Belden while making his opening statement. Attorney Belden, Newett's counsel, declined to make his statement until after the testimony was taken.

Colonel Roosevelt took the stand at 9:30 o'clock this morning.

Replying to questions regarding his life and career, he said he was born in New York City, completed his studies at Harvard in 1880, was elected to the New York Legislature in 1881, appointed New York civil service commissioner in 1887, police commissioner of New York City in 1890, elected Lieutenant Governor in 1894, resigning in 1897 to become lieutenant colonel of the Rough Riders in the Spanish-American war, being promoted to colonel after the battle of Santiago.

Tells of War Service.

Strenuous objection was made by the defense to Roosevelt's replies regarding the number of times he was under fire in the Spanish-American war, but the court overruled them and the former President continued his story, declaring he was under fire many times, more particularly at San Juan Hill.

He told of his election as Governor of New York in 1898; as Vice President of the United States in 1900; his succession to the White House in 1901 when President McKinley was assassinated, and his election to the Presidency in 1904.

T. R. Inclines To Champagne

Defending himself against a charge of drunkenness, Colonel Roosevelt gives the following as an epitome of his drinking customs:

I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Florida Mob Tries To Lynch Head of Negro Pythians

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 27.—When a Jacksonville-New Orleans train pulled into Milton, 20 miles east of here, last night a mob of 75 men met the train and demanded S. W. Green, of New Orleans, chancellor of the negro Knights of Pythias, who was occupying a Pullman drawing room. He was only saved by the interference of Sheriff Harvell and deputies, of Santa Rosa County.

Green bought a Pullman ticket from Jacksonville to New Orleans. Several mobs met the train along the route before it reached Milton, but did not find him. At Milton, Green, seeing the mob, attempted to escape.

Green is now in jail at Milton for safe keeping and charged with violating the "jim crow" law.

He barely escaped a mob at DeFuniak on May 18 while going from New Orleans to Jacksonville.

Plans to Entertain Justice Lamar Off

Because of lack of time, plans of Atlanta attorneys to entertain Justice Joseph R. Lamar, of the United States Supreme Court, who will pass through Atlanta Wednesday afternoon en route to Warm Springs to deliver the chief address at the meeting of the Georgia Bar Association, have been abandoned.

After the sessions at Warm Springs Judge Lamar will hurry back to Washington, where a decision in the Minnesota rate case is expected soon from the Supreme Court.

FELDER AIDE OFFERS VICE LIST TO CHIEF

Attorney Carl Hutcheson Accuses Beavers of Permitting Unlawful Houses to Operate.

GAMBLERS' PLOT, SAYS LANFORD IN HOT REPLY

Detective Head Declares "Ring" Is Trying to Fix Charge of Bribery Against Him.

Ignoring the fresh volley of charges made by Carl Hutcheson, an attorney who offers to cite resorts which are allowed to operate by the city police, Chief Beavers Tuesday morning reiterated his declaration that the entire matter would be laid bare before the Grand Jury for decision.

Detective Chief Lanford revealed another angle of the warfare when he declared that the fight being made against him was backed by the gambling ring of Atlanta. C. C. Jones was named as the leader of the opposition in this fight.

Beavers in commenting upon Hutcheson's charges, declared that they were inspired by Thomas B. Felder, with whose office Hutcheson is connected, and that the attack was not therefore that of Hutcheson, but of Felder and his "gang."

Hutcheson, a young lawyer connected with the firm Felder, Anderson, Whitman & Dillon, wrote an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers, charging him with permitting unlawful houses to operate on certain city streets and promising to give addresses if the Chief asks personally for them within three days.

Regarded as Reply.

On Monday morning Chief Beavers declared Attorney Thomas B. Felder had no evidence of police cognizance of immoral resorts; that he never had had any, and that he was only bluffing when he said he had. Requested to reply, Colonel Felder announced he would make no more statements except in writing, and that he had nothing to say then.

A few hours later Mr. Hutcheson, a member of Colonel Felder's firm, issued the letter, which is regarded as a semi-official reply from Colonel Felder.

Mr. Hutcheson formerly was a newspaper man. Shortly after taking up the practice of law he achieved State-wide renown by conducting the campaign of William Schley Howard, who defeated Representative Leonidas Livingston and is now serving his second term in Congress.

Following is Mr. Hutcheson's open letter to Chief J. L. Beavers:

Scores Vice Crusade.

J. L. Beavers, Chief of Police, Atlanta:

Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives, Atlanta:

In your great crusade against Sodom and Gomorrah with your immaculate robes of Puritanism,

I accuse you in all your glory with allowing certain houses on Ivy Street, the business of which is to barter in immoral and indecent practices, to continue in flagrant operation. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, every sensible citizen of this city, who knows anything of the world, does. If you do not know these things, it is your duty to know, and you should be discharged from your high pedestals for dereliction.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on certain parts of Spring Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate in a certain section of Pryor Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on a certain section of Central Avenue. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not,

'Ship My Body to Atlanta,' Farewell Of Suicide in Jail

NEW YORK, May 27.—Using his belt and necktie as a noose, Eber Carmichael, a clerk, who was arrested yesterday for fatally stabbing Conrad Braun, subscription manager of Current Opinion, hanged himself in his cell in a police station to-day.

Carmichael was said to have been drinking heavily for some time and stabbed Braun, a friend of two years' standing, after Braun had refused to lend him money.

Carmichael was in bad shape, physically, when locked up and kept shouting, "Ship my body to Atlanta."

New Libel Charge In Marconi Scandal

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—The third criminal trial growing out of the Marconi scandal began in Old Bailey Court to-day. It is the libel case of Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the British Marconi Company, against Cecil Chesterton, journalist and brother of G. K. Chesterton, the famous essayist.

Chesterton is charged with libeling Isaacs in an article he wrote on the connection between certain officers of the British Government and the Marconi interests.

$25,000,000 Annual Road Fund Feared

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Claiming that a Committee on Good Roads will open the way to an annual Government expense of $25,000,000, economy advocates will fight the creating of the committee in the Democratic caucus next week. They declare the committee constantly will be agitating for tremendous appropriations which can not now be afforded.

It is conceded that, if the committee is created, its supporters will have enough strength to force big appropriations.

Gompers' Condition Serious, Friends Say

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 27. Conflicting reports are current here to-day over the condition of Samuel Gompers, labor leader, in a sanitarium here, according to reports, suffering from nervous breakdown and a serious operation.

Gompers' nurse says he is able to walk around and that he was on the boardwalk Sunday, but friends insist his condition is critical and that he has had a relapse.

$500,000 Telephone Rate Cut in Chicago

CHICAGO, May 27.—Telephone company patrons in Chicago will benefit to the extent of $500,000 a year under the provisions of a new telephone rate regulation ordinance passed by the City Council.

The ordinance, in addition to saving money for subscribers, provides for an increase in wages of employees and pensions amounting to $420,000 a year.

4 Dead in Crash of Theatrical Specials

SEDALIA, MO., May 27.—Four persons were killed in a head-on collision between two Missouri Pacific fast passenger trains at Brandt, 20 miles west of Jefferson City, this morning.

Both trains Nos. 11 and 12 are known as theatrical specials.

It is unofficially stated that lap orders caused the wreck.

Heflin to Lead House Attack on Suffrage

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Congress soon will ring with the echoes of anti-woman suffrage oratory. Representatives Heflin of Alabama and Stanley W. Bowdle of Ohio are both preparing extensive arguments against woman suffrage.

Bowdle is a firm believer in "no votes for women," and has a lot of homespun reasoning to present.

Walker's Death Her Model for Suicide

MUNCIE, IND., May 27.—After reading newspaper accounts of the death of B. Sanders Walker, the Macon, Ga., banker, who accidentally swallowed a bichloride of mercury tablet, Mrs. Elizabeth Hulderman, aged 20, wife of a wealthy real estate dealer here, swallowed several tablets and died.

LUTHER Z. ROSSER, who is leading attorney of counsel for the defense of Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phangan at the National Pencil factory.

Mr. Rosser, as usual, is playing a game of silence. He has not indicated his line of defense.

BRYAN COMES TO ATLANTA MONDAY

Secretary of State Will Be First Cabinet Member to Visit the South.

The first member of the Wilson Cabinet to visit the South will be Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan.

Mr. Bryan will make a trip to Atlanta to deliver the quarter-centennial anniversary address to the students and friends of the Georgia School of Technology at the Grand Opera House, Monday evening at 8:15 o'clock. It will be the first public address of such a character that Mr. Bryan has made since becoming Secretary of State.

It will be the first college address ever delivered in the South by a United States Secretary of State.

Mr. Bryan will reach Atlanta Monday afternoon at 5 o'clock over the Southern Railway. A suite of roooms has been reserved for him at the Gergian Terrace Hotel.

Would Tax Movies For French Defense

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 27.—M. Dumont, Minister of Finance, has proposed to the budget committee of the Chamber of Deputies that the moving picture shows be taxed to help pay for the increased national defenses.

He said he expected that $1,000,000 could be raised in this way.

ROUTE LAID FOR HOLIDAY PARADE

Grocers and Commission Men Tuesday Night to Arrange Details of June 4 Celebration.

Momentum will be added to the movement for the Wednesday half-holiday parade June 4 at a meeting of retail grocers and commission men in Taft Hall Tuesday night.

Business will be combined with pleasure at the meeting. A "Dutch" lunch will be served and five orators will be given free rein. R. A. Broyles, E. L. Adams, W. O. Stamps, John M. McCullough and Harry L. Schlesinger will be the speakers. Little remains to be done except to formally approve plans already made.

Two miles, at least, of emancipated working people will parade the principal streets of Atlanta, starting at 1:30 o'clock from the Mitchell Street side of the State Capitol. The line of march will include Mitchell Street to Whitehall, Whitehall and Peachtree to North Avenue, North Avenue to West Peachtree and West Peachtree and Peachtree again to Five Points.

Following the parade, special entertainment will be given the merchants, commission men and other employers giving the midweek half-holiday.

SUSPICION TURNED TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk. Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full-flare upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected assertion last week that he had written the notes found by the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, brought a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are rife in an effort to throw the blame on to Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, timekeeper of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty intoxicated on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 2 in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember anyone whom he saw during that time to bear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 6 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 6 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; this also has not been established. Conley states he stayed there the remainder of the night.

According to the new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday instead of Friday, as he claims, and not on anybody's dictation. It is further argued that, in order to engratiate himself with the law, he made his confession when he thought that the case against Frank was clinched—that his story was the product of his own imagination.

Conley's delay in making this confession until Frank's indictment seemed likely is another link against him.

His detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, shows premeditation on the negro's part, it is argued, and further that the story was conceived by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's childish brain was not capable of making it strong enough to withstand rigid investigation.

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as conclusive as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual eyewitnesses of the crime, this question naturally is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the mystery, and that means practically every person in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the close-lipped and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even at this early date, when only the vaguest of hints have been given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion, it is patent that there are many openings offered the defense for attacks upon the theories of the State.

Burden of Proof on State.

Those who are close to the daily developments in Atlanta's baffling murder mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered are bearing in mind that, in the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution and not upon the defense.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law has hedged everyone under suspicion of crime, that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime or establish his connection beyond a reasonable doubt.

Until the State is able to do this, Luther Z. Rosser may rest on his oars if he so desires. Leo Frank is innocent this moment in the eyes of the law. His innocence does not need to be proved. It is presumed.

It immediately becomes a question, therefore, as to whether the State really has made out a case against Frank, so far as can be judged from the evidence in the hands of the public. Have the detectives by any of their discoveries connected Frank directly with the crime? Have they assembled such a chain of circumstantial incidents as to make his guilt appear certain beyond a reasonable doubt?

Frank's Friends Deny Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank answer both questions emphatically in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence seriously.

The law will not permit Frank's conviction for the crime merely because the detectives have discovered that he had the opportunity. It will not permit his conviction, if no convincing evidence is found against him, merely because he is unable to put his hands on another man and say, "This is the man you want. He is the guilty person."

It is not the intention of the law to

BURNS SLEUTH QUITS; SAYS HE IS OPPOSED

Tobie Gives Out Statement Intimating Frank's Guilt—Has No Quarrel With Police.

C. W. Tobie, chief criminal investigator for the Burns Detective Agency, formally withdrew from the Phagan investigation Tuesday morning. The calling off of the Burns forces was announced by Dan P. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch, after Tobie had stated explicitly that he would not withdraw from the case.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who brought the Burns detectives into the Phagan case, would make no statement relative to their withdrawal, but announced that it did not mean the end of his investigation or connection with the case.

Tobie made up his mind last Friday to drop the Mary Phagan investigation—so he said Tuesday—but deferred action until Monday night, when he announced his intention to withdraw to Solicitor General Dorsey.

Disgusted With "Fuss."

Acute disgust at the "four or five cornered fuss" raised by the Phagan investigation was assigned by Tobie as the cause. This disgust was superinduced by the direct charge and general impression that the Burns Agency was pretending to ferret out the Phagan case, when in reality its purpose in Atlanta was to investigate the police department.

Tobie said to-day that while he had quit and was going to leave Atlanta, still the withdrawal of the Burns Agency need not be permanent.

"If certain features of this case are not developed, then there will be one, and maybe two, Burns men back here. I will send them here, but they will work in secret. There will be no more public investigation."

Tobie explained he believed Leo M. Frank was guilty of the Phagan murder and that the "certain features" meant additional clinching evidence not yet published that will make Frank's conviction certain.

"How can any house have harmony," said Tobie, "when the old man is fighting the old woman, and the old woman is fighting the children, and they are all fighting the hired girl? That's the shape this affair has gotten into, only worse.

"We came here to investigate this Phagan case, and for no other purpose. But the charge was made that in reality we were investigating the police department. The way things were shaped up the police could not help believing that charge to be true. Colonel Felder's attitude bore that out, so I decided last Friday to quit."

"Do you mean, then, that you were dissatisfied at Colonel Felder's attitude?" was asked.

"We were dissatisfied with that part of it, yes," was Tobie's reply.

Tobie Himself Through.

Tobie reiterated he ended the investigation himself. "I called myself off," he said. "Dan S. Lehon, our Southern superintendent, was close to Atlanta. It was as near for him to pass through here on his way back to New Orleans as it was for him to go any other way. I was in charge here, but, as you know, I do not belong to this territory. As a pure formality and a matter of courtesy, and because I knew he was coming here to visit his wife's relatives, I sent him a message inviting him to confer with me. When he got here I told him as a courtesy that I had decided to quit the case. He approved it. Had I told him I would continue, he would have approved that, too.

"This is the worst mix-up I ever saw anywhere, at any time. It's awful. Everybody is fighting everybody else, and I am through with this four or five cornered fracas, except that if more Burns men are sent here I shall send them here and they will report to me."

Bribery Charges Denied.

Rumored attempts to bribe witnesses were given strong denial in many circles, particularly by those whose names were connected by rumor with the alleged bribery attempts.

C. C. Sears, superintendent of the Atlanta branch of the Burns detective agency communicated to Chief of Detectives Lanford the announcement of the withdrawal of the Burns forces from the Phagan case.

Chief Lanford authorized the following statement on the departure of Tobie:

"Tobie, I believe, is straight and honest. He was victimized by Felder. I am convinced Mr. Tobie was working toward the interest of those seeking to clear the mystery."

Praises Superintendent.

A girl employee of the pencil factory has written the following statement, which upholds the working conditions of the factory and champions the character of the imprisoned superintendent:

"Nothing has ever been said of the girls of the pencil factory until after the terrible murder, but since then there has been one continuous talk, just as if we were to blame. We are just as anxious to see the guilty punished as the rest of the public, and we all loved Mary Phagan just as much as we possibly could.

"If the public only would interest itself to look into other factories and stores they would find the girls in the pencil factory are just as good as any other working girls.

"It looks mighty hard that we have to work in the place where our girl friend was so horribly murdered. But we are only poor working girls, trying to make an honest living, and we try not to think of the tragedy any more than possible; and we have the interest of the factory too much at heart to desert in times of trouble.

"We all hope and pray the guilty will be punished and the innocent given freedom, for we all think our superintendent has a soul himself and that he would not think of such a thing, much less commit such a horrible crime."

Planned to Trap Felder With His Own Dictograph.

If the dictograph belonging to Colonel Thomas B. Felder had not been in use by the Burns detective the first of last week it would have been used in A. S. Colyar's scheme to "trap" Felder in the room in the Williams House, according to Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey, who explained Tuesday his part in the Lanford-Felder controversy.

According to the Solicitor the story follows:

About ten days ago Chief of Detectives Lanford, who had been somewhat scarce around the Solicitor's office since that official made some slight criticism of the police detective's methods, threw pride to the four winds and called on the Solicitor in person. Following a long conference in which he advised Mr. Dorsey there was a scheme afoot to steal affidavits in the Phagan case, he departed with the words:

"I am going to get that fellow Felder."

About 30 minutes later Colonel Felder visited the Solicitor and told him a large corruption fund was being used among the city detectives, and he departed with:

"I am going to get that fellow Lanford."

The Solicitor kept his own council and took no official action, thinking, he said, the charges on each side were idle.

Later the same evening Chief Lanford made a second visit. He told Mr. Dorsey he wanted to get a dictograph for a few days.

Thinking the detective chief wanted to use it for something directly bearing on the Phagan case, and knowing where he could borrow one, he assured Lanford he would have it for him the next morning.

Forthwith he went to the office of Colonel Felder and said: "Colonel, Lanford needs a dictograph in his Phagan investigation. I would like to get yours."

"Sorry, Hugh," said the colonel, "but mine is busy to-day."

Water Fashionable Beverage in London

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—Champagne now takes a back seat in London, and claret, moselle and whisky and soda are the drinks of the moment. But temperance is a current craze. Barley water in special "brews" may be found at the Carlton and Bachelors' Clubs.

A few smart men drink plain cold water, among others Sir Arthur Walsh and Lord Charles Beresford. The King has cider laid down in his cellar, and among cider drinkers are the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Leeds, Lord Knollys and Lord Mount Stephen. Beer is seldom seen at dinner or luncheon, but iced lager beer is popular at balls and late parties.

Fears for Safety Of Missing Husband

Out at Blackwells a wistful little woman and her two babies are longing for the return of husband and father, who disappeared April 17. C. B. Allen is the man, and the fact that he loved his family so well causes the saddened wife to believe he has met with foul play.

Mrs. Allen is heart-broken over her husband's disappearance. She has requested the newspapers to aid in the search.

Eisenfeldt Case Is Postponed 30 Days

The case against Mrs. Julia Eisenfeldt, proprietor of the Walton Inn, arrested following the complaint of a man that he had been robbed of a small sum of money in her house, was continued for 30 days, the man making the complaint being too ill to appear in court Monday.

Mrs. Eisenfeldt is the woman accused by E. O. Miles of paying money for police protection. Mrs. Eisenfeldt denies the accusation.

Cripple Run Down By Cyclist Is Dying

MACON, GA., May 27.—Edward Green, a cripple of Monticello, Ga., who was struck by a motorcycle yesterday afternoon as he was being wheeled across Mulberry street, is expected to die.

W. J. Radcliff, of Atlanta, was trying out a new motorcycle, preparatory to starting on a ride to Norfolk Va., when the collision took place. He is under arrest.

Gov. McMillin U. S. Minister to Peru

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Ex-Governor Benton McMillin of Tennessee will be appointed envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to the republic of Peru.

The announcement is made on high authority, and it may be stated definitely that Mr. McMillin will accept the post.

The post pays $10,000 a year.

OFFERS BEAVERS LIST OF "OPEN HOUSES"

Attorney Carl Hutcheson, Felder's Aide, Also Accuses Police of Protecting Vice.

you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of falling to take cognizance of a certain house in Ivy Street, to which I called your attention several weeks ago, where young men were inveigled to gamble away their money, the mistress thereof being the banker and the recipient of these ill-gotten gains. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you and numbers of your forces with being cognizant of these facts, and yet you, the great crusade leaders, stand idly by and fold your lordly hands.

I accuse you with allowing, even yet, low class hotels in this city to exist and practice their nefarious games of lowly gain, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

If you can not "turn up" these places, there are hundreds of people who can. I can use infantile detective work and turn up dozens of them within a few days, AND YOU KNOW THIS CAN BE DONE. And, if you fail to get busy and continue to parade your great genius (?) you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Charges Police Protection.

I accuse you with protecting these places because of your lax methods in keeping "the houses within our midst" closed, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of closing Manhattan Avenue and converting our entire municipality into a "red light" district, AND YOU KNOW IT, and unless you change conditions at once you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of retaining on your forces men unfit to protect the "decent" citizens of Atlanta, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of knowing where numbers of houses which exist by immoral practices are located, AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Do you think that the public will be hoodwinked forever? Do you think that the public is so gullible as to believe all of this "bush-wah" about the great work that you are continuing? Yes, you closed Manhattan Avenue, but what did you do for the remainder of the city?

You and your bunch are very sore because you were unable to ferret out the Phagan murder, AND YOU KNOW IT. When the Solicitor General called in outside aid, numbers of your hirelings were very much perturbed and became insanely jealous. That is why all of this patched-up and hatched-up bunch of lies and slanders have been issued against Thomas B. Felder, whose shoes you are unworthy to untie, AND YOU KNOW IT.

I accuse you of retaining a large number of leather-heads for detectives. Detectives? That is a joke, isn't it? AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for allowing such an army of incompetents to work with your departments. You know, and I know, that these fellows secure their offices through political pull and not through efficiency. They are Sherlock Holmeses when it comes to arresting blind tigers and negro crap-players, but beyond that they would not know a clew if they saw it tagged.

In the Phagan case, the newspaper men are the ones who turned up the first clews of any merit, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be ashamed of that crowd down there to allow the members of the Fourth Estate to put one over on you; but you know newspaper men have brains, and brains are required to make detectives.

Now, follow forth again your promulgation of purity and tell the people of this great city what large men you are and how you protect the citizenry of this great Commonwealth.

If you haven't the addresses of the houses to which I refer, call at my office within three days and I will give you a bunch of them.

Friends of mine have advised me against printing this card. Some have feared for my life—but afraid of you and your crowd? Never. I am not afraid of anything that lays down its firearms and comes at me like a man in fair play. Now, "lay on, MacDuff, and damn'd be him who first cries, 'Hold! Enough!'"

CARL HUTCHESON.
Atlanta, Ga., May 27, 1913.

Gamblers' Plot, Declares Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford gave out a sensational statement Tuesday morning in which he charged that the efforts to fix accusations of bribery and malfeasance upon him were inspired by a "gambling ring," of which C. C. Jones was the head.

The cause of the fight against Lanford had been something of a mystery. Beavers readily explained the efforts to dispossess him from the office of Chief of Police by his war on vice in the city of Atlanta. Lanford's explanation reveals another angle of the crusade against a wide-open town.

"The gambling ring has been after me ever since I was made head of the detective department ten years ago," said Chief Lanford. "No more had I declared relentless warfare upon all forms of gambling in the city than I was notified that the gambling interests were out to 'get' me. Several times it was reported to me that I had been marked for an attack, and once the gamblers succeeded in carrying out their threats.

"That was five years ago. I was reduced from sergeant, which was the designation of the head of the department then, to service in the ranks. The gamblers were responsible for it. They gloated for nine months. Then I was raised to my former position again, with the title of chief. Since then I have continued my campaign against them.

"They have been very bitter. They have threatened me time and again. Now they have brought these charges against me."

Col. Felder Still Probing In the Phagan Case.

In the news columns of The Georgian yesterday it was said that Colonel Felder had been eliminated from the Phagan case. Colonel Felder says this is not true, that he is as deeply interested in solving the mystery as ever, and that he is lending every energy in that direction. The further statement in The Georgian that Colonel Felder was believed at one time to be interested in the defense of Frank was not intended to reflect in any way upon the lawyer. It was simply the gossip of the street, given for what it was worth. Colonel Felder's own statement that he is working solely for the public good makes his position perfectly clear, and everybody in the city will hope that he will continue actively in the case until the great mystery is disposed of.

Virginians Claim 'Light Horse' Lee

ROANOKE, VA., May 27.—A committee of the Virginia Legislature is on its way to Georgia to-day for the purpose of bringing to his native State the remains of Henry Lee, better known as "Light Horse Harry Lee," the father of General Robert E. Lee.

General Lee died at Savannah on his return journey from Cuba, where he had been on account of his health. He was buried on Cumberland Island, near that city, and his grave has since been cared for by the Georgia Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Cochran Decries Reform Upheavals

Ralph O. Cochran, Representative-elect from Fulton County and candidate for the United States Senate to succeed Senator Hoke Smith, received hearty congratulations Tuesday on a speech delivered Monday night at the commencement exercises of the Lithonia Public Schools.

Mr. Cochran took "Conservatism" as his subject. He declared really great things were accomplished by cautious individuals. He commended conservatism rather than a course of reform.

A large crowd of DeKalb County citizens turned out to hear the candidate.

Noted Woodmen to Visit Atlanta Camps

Two Woodmen of national reputation from Omaha, Nebr., will arrive here at noon Tuesday. They are Joseph Cullen Root, sovereign commander, and John T. Yates, sovereign secretary of the Omaha order.

The local camps and Georgia head officials of the order will escort the visitors to the Piedmont Hotel. A reception at Cable Hall Tuesday night will be given by J. C. Root Camp No. 80, assisted by other camps in the city, and State officials of the order.

Sunday, June 1, is the annual Memorial Day of the Woodmen of the World.

Mr. Melon Greets Old Friends

Florida His Present Address

Forerunner of Georgia Cousin

Smiling 'Rastus, one of Atlanta's welcoming committee, joyously greeting the first visitor from Florida.

Six Thousand Cars of Luscious Product to Pass Through Atlanta on Way North.

Men and women of Atlanta, we have with us to-night our old friend, Mr. Watermelon.

Just from Florida, dressed in the old-time mottled and variegated garb, flesh pinker than perfection, blood redder and juicier than ever, hankering to be split. He has arrived from Florida to tell us there are plenty more where he came from—enough to last four weeks.

And by that time the more numerous branch of the family, the Georgia watermelon, the most luscious of them all, will arrive in full flush of glory.

The Central of Georgia Railway has set apart 6,000 freight cars to transport watermelons from the South northward. Every car must pass through Atlanta, and prospects are that at least 1,500 of them will be halted on the way. There's a regular army of thirsty Georgians here, and it's hard to run the gantlet.

Commission merchants and transportation officials have a joyful announcement to make. The watermelon crop this year will be a bumper, one of the best ever in the State.

Let the small boy rejoice and be gay of heart, for he shall be satisfied. And let the old boy come down off of his high pedestal of dignity and rejoice also, for the older he gets the bigger fool he is about the fragrant fruit of the vine.

Six thousand freight cars will hold exactly 3,761,942 big watermelons and two small ones. That'll be enough to feed the country at large when the Georgia crop comes in. This year quality will be good and prices just right—high enough to suit the farmer and cheap enough to please the consumer. The season has already started.

Veterans Present Hat to Capt. Cook

As spokesman for the W. H. T. Walker Camp 925, United Confederate Veterans, Comrade J. H. Shellnut, a one-legged veteran, presented Captain J. H. Cook with a military-shaped black alpine hat.

The presentation took place just before the camp formed in line to march to the railway station to board the Chattanooga train. Accepting the gift in a few words, Captain Cook ordered the camp to fall in, and the veterans marched to the station to entrain for the scenes of their combat of 50 years ago.

STYLES DEMAND RAPID CHANGE BY DANDIES

Paris Men of Fashion Are Forced to Jump From One Pair of Trousers to Another.

PARIS, May 27.—The dandies of Paris have daily been rehearsing of late on quick-change dress in order to be able to slip from one suit into another with lightning speed so as to waste the minimum of time in this way during the height of the season.

The decrees of masculine fashion, which in recent years have become as inexorable as the requirements of feminine modes, are unusually Draconian this year. Even in the hottest weather it will not be permissible to appear in the streets wearing white flannels after 11 o'clock in the morning.

After lounging at his ease for an hour or so the well-dressed man must rush home and jump into a pair of neatly checked trousers. This garment which, as in the case of all the other trousers, the valet must iron out with sharply defined creases every morning, hangs broadest and loosest from the waist. With this may go a tobacco-colored business coat with narrow lapels, and a silk hat.

For the Afternoon Call.

This suit does for a stroll in the Bois, but after luncheon the dandy with calls to pay makes a second quick change. This time he dons a pair of well-creased chimney-pot trousers with faint stripes, and a cut-away coat, skin-tight. The latter must have a long tail, closely following the shape of the figure and bulging nowhere.

In the hottest weather the waistcoat may be dispensed with on the sole condition that the coat be unbuttoned and a white slip be worn sewed into the inner side of the lapel to give the similitude of a waistcoat.

If one is going to the races white flannel trousers may be worn with this coat, but not if attending receptions.

Both morning and afternoon coats are built up so as to give the man the appearance of being deep-chested and broad-shouldered, so tailors are now laying in a liberal supply of padding material.

Snuff-Colored Evening Dress.

The evening style runs in the direction of broad trousers. Again the striking feature, however, is the coat, which is a transparent imitation of the women's "jupe fourreau." The back and the tail, which fall below the knees, cling tightly to the body, and must fall in graceful curves not only behind but also in front. Black cloth is the evening wear, although colors are permitted this year, the choice mostly going to snuff-colored evening dress.

Terra-cotta colored handkerchiefs are also a feature of men's spring fashions.

Paris tailors have entered a campaign against London's supremacy in the matter of men's wear, and this year's fashions are designed with the object of persuading Americans to fit themselves out in Paris instead of in the British capital.

New Florida County Named for Wilson

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., May 27.—The Florida House of Representatives is the first legislative body to honor the name of Woodrow Wilson by naming a county for him.

The new county will be cut from Walton and Santa Rosa Counties in West Florida, bordered on the east by Walton, the west by Santa Rosa, the north by the State of Alabama and the south by the Gulf of Mexico. The county will extend the entire width of the State at that point.

Charges Attempt To Blind Him; Sues

Asserting that W. M. Henry tried to put his eyes out with an umbrella, O. M. Sutton has filed suit in the Superior Court against Henry for $2,500 damages.

Sutton alleges that Henry showered blows on him with the umbrella; jabbed the end of the umbrella into the back of his neck, into his stomach and against his back; threw him into a corner; beat him and then dragged him out and tried to poke the umbrella point into his eyes.

Kahn Urges Plan to Strengthen Army

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An army reserve created by one-year enlistments is advocated by Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, who declared to-day he believed Japan's pugnacious attitude was due to the knowledge that few American men have even the rudiments of military training.

Kahn advocates an enlistment of one year of active service and three years in the reserve.

SLEEPING CAR SERVICE TO TOXAWAY ANNOUNCED

Daily sleeping car service between Atlanta and Lake Toxaway for the summer season will be established June 22 by the Southern Railway. The Macon-Atlanta-Asheville sleeping car will be handled on a new train from Spartanburg, arriving at Asheville at 7 o'clock a. m.

WIDE INTEREST IN PIANO CAMPAIGN

Hundreds Interested in Club Offer Made by the Weatherholt Company.

Seldom has an advertising campaign in Atlanta caused such widespread interest as that inaugurated Sunday in The American by the Weatherholt Piano Company, 72 North Broad Street.

The double-page advertisement, followed by a page in The Georgian yesterday afternoon announcing the sale of 400 player-pianos through a co-operative club of 400 members, has caused crowds of interested persons to visit the Weatherholt store.

Although the membership books do not open until to-morrow, many insisted upon selecting player-pianos in advance of enrolling. In anticipation of just such a rush, T. E. Weatherholt, president of the Weatherholt Company, made arrangements with the factory several weeks ago. These arrangements, together with thorough co-operation on the part of the railroads, have resulted in carloads of player-pianos arriving at the Weatherholt building.

This is the first time that player-pianos have ever been offered in this section to the public through co-operative club buying, and the reasonable price and the attractive terms of $10 down and $2.50 per week have awakened interest to an unusual degree.

Mr. Weatherholt selected a player-piano worth $650 for his club offer, and because of the tremendous purchasing power of the 400 club members, he was enabled to get them at a price which made the offer of $488.50 and at the attractive terms possible.

A corps of expert demonstrators at the Weatherholt store shows visitors how easily these player-pianos may be operated.

Among many other attractive features, the Weatherholt club offer includes twelve rolls of player music, with the privilege of exchanging them daily, if desired, for any other music in the Weatherholt library of 5,000 rolls.

Union Musicians Have Celebration

One hundred and fifty members of Atlanta Local No. 148, American Federation of Musicians, celebrated the twelfth anniversary of the organization of their local at Turn Verein Hall last night. Many women are active members of the organization.

A supper was served and a large orchestra, composed of the members present, entertained.

A cornet solo by E. M. Coleman and vocal selections by Miss Sadie Percival, who was accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Mongen F. Smith, were enjoyed.

Remarks by Carl Karston, of Local No. 148; S. H. Brady, president of the Atlanta Federation of Trades; W. C. Puckett, third vice president of the Georgia State Federation; William Strauss, State organizer, and H. G. Wood, vice president of the Atlanta local, were heard.

Swallows Poison as Walker Did; Saved

ORLANDO, FLA., May 27.—That bichloride of mercury is not always fatal was demonstrated here when S. Walters Howe, cashier of the State National Bank, swallowed a tablet, mistaking it for a headache dose.

As the tablet passed down his throat it contracted the muscles so violently that he discovered his mistake and hurried to the city physician, who at once used the stomach pump and gave antidotes. Howe has experienced no harm.

LONDON, May 27.—Walter H. Page, the United States Ambassador to Great Britain, had no sooner reached London than he was asked by some English reporters concerning a report that he would refuse to wear knee breeches at Court. His answer was terse and pointed:

"Why do you ask me such a question? You surely don't want me to think that the imagination of a fool across the ocean begets more fools in London?"

Man, 72, Jilts Bride On Eve of Wedding

FORT COLLINS, COLO., May 27.—Cupid struck a snag here when he dallied with the affairs of T. C. Parker, 72, and Mrs. Nancy C. Pennington, 65, whose wedding was set for May 28.

The romance was shattered when the groom-to-be left here for Moline, Kans., where his relatives live. It is rumored here that an old sweetheart there is the attraction.

U. S. IS HOME OF SQUANDERERS, SAYS BANKER

Financier Warns of Credit Strain Resulting From Lavish Expenditure of Money.

DETROIT, May 27.—Joseph T. Talbert, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, in an address delivered before the Bankers' Club here, declared everything has been dear except credit, and, as a result, "our expanded loans and deposits constitute the weak spots in our domestic and business situation."

Mr. Talbert gave statistics showing the gross loans and investments of all the banks in the United States since 1907 has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, while the total increase in the gold stock of the United States since 1907 aggregated $506,000,000.

"This condition," said Mr. Talbert, "although perhaps not so strong as it should be to justify and properly sustain our increased loans, still is assuring and shows that there is no substantial ground for alarm."

Delight to Squander.

Mr. Talbert caused quite a stir when he said that "evidence tends to show that individually and collectively we are a nation of spendthrifts.

"It is our habit and delight to squander, and no amount of preaching will have any effect upon our prodigality as a national trait."

Mr. Talbert, in leading up to an explanation of the drain on New York's gold supply by Europe, said the lending power of German banks had been strained to the limit; that Germany borrowed money here and sought to draw gold from us.

In calling attention to the persistent hoarding of gold by the French, he said the French, not content with the mere hoarding of their own gold, at heavy losses of exchange, forced from us, either for their own account or for that of South America, upward of $56,000,000 of gold.

"The movement is going on and may continue indefinitely.

"For lack of protection for our gold stock we have been obliged to sit helplessly and to submit to this forced exportation of gold, to our disadvantage and discomfort.

"This gold movement taking place at such a time and under such conditions demonstrated the fact that often has been stated before—that New York is the only free market in the world for gold."

Need Outside Money.

Mr. Talbert said an enormous amount of railroad financing must be done during the next year or two, and nearly all of it will be done at home with difficulty and in all probability at a higher level of interest rates than we have been accustomed to in such undertakings in recent years.

Mr. Talbert uttered "a word of caution against the practice which has been all too common among merchants and manufacturers, of financing themselves too largely through note brokers."

In concluding, the banker said it should be remembered that we are neither in nor approaching a period of speculation, and that credit is in no danger whatever from that source now, nor will it be in the near future. He added that courage should be taken from the fact that thus far the promises of another year of bountiful crops are exceedingly bright.

Girl of 10 Is Best Speller in Missouri

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., May 27. Opal Mitchell, ten years old, of Licking, Texas County, won a $100 prize and was declared the best speller in the State. In a contest in which 60 pupils from as many counties contested, she misspelled but 3 of 200 words.

The three words misspelled by Opal Mitchell were: Chalice, besieged and weasel.

Baraca Leader to Speak in Atlanta

CURED TERRIBLE HUMOR ON FACE

Could Not Go On Street Without Veil—Tells What Resinol Did For Her.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1912.—"In December, 1908, my face became sore. I tried everything that was recommended, and my face got worse instead of better. I spent over $100 and got no benefit. The face and nose were very red and the eruption had the appearance of small boils, which itched me terribly. I can not tell you how terrible my face looked—all I can say is, it was dreadful, and I suffered beyond description.

I have not gone on the street any time since 1908 without a veil, until now. Just four months ago a friend persuaded me to give Resinol a trial. I have used three cakes of Resinol Soap and less than a jar of Resinol Ointment, and my face is perfectly free from any eruption, and my skin is as clear and clean as any child's. It is about four weeks since the last pimple disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. M. J. Bateman, 4256 Viola St.

Practically every druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00) and Resinol Soap (25c), but if you are suffering from itching, burning skin troubles, pimples, blackheads, dandruff, ulcers, boils, stubborn sores or piles, it will cost you nothing to try these soothing, healing preparations. Just send to Dept. 24-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for a free sample of each.

BULGARIA READY TO BEGIN WAR ON SERVIA

Latter Country Warned Not to Annex the Turkish Territory It Now Occupies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—Bulgaria will declare war against Servia if the latter country annexes all the Turkish territory it has occupied since the outbreak of the Balkan war.

This was the message received here to-day from Sofia, and it contained the additional information that Bulgaria is ready to begin hostilities at once.

Servia holds most of the strategic points in Central Albania and Macedonia. Czar Nicholas has informed the Bulgarian Government through M. Sazonoff, the Foreign Minister, that he will not act as arbitrator between Bulgaria and Servia.

Turks Plan to Resume War On Quarreling Allies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 27.—The possibility that Turkey, taking advantage of the dissension among the Balkan allies, may resume the war against the states in the Balkan league is looming up.

It was learned here to-day that the Porte has ordered $4,000,000 worth of fresh arms and ammunition, and that Enver Bey, chief of staff of the Turkish army, is attempting to re-form the various divisions of the Ottoman army.

Although peace negotiations have not been commenced by the plenipotentiaries in London, it is deemed unlikely that Europe would allow a resumption of the war.

'Naked Truth' Too Naked for St. Louis

NEW YORK, May 27.—When Professor William Wendschneider, the famous German sculptor, arrived today from England and learned that his statue, "The Naked Truth," designed for the Praetorius-Schurz-Daenzer Memorial Committee of St. Louis, Mo., had been rejected because it was too daring, he emitted a wail of protest.

The professor caught the first train going West, determined to change the opinions about "The Naked Truth."

Veterans Bar Riding Astride

Edict Arouses Fair Equestriennes

Whole Reunion Is Stirred by Tilt

J. E. Maddox, of 37 Richardson Street, one of the Atlanta veterans off for the reunion at Chattanooga.

Old Soldiers Cheer U. S. Regulars in First of Parades at Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 27. Confederate veterans, sponsors, maids and visitors to the annual Confederate reunion are exercised to-day over whether women shall ride astride in the reunion parades. General J. P. Hickman's order that only side saddles for women shall be permitted has caused the stir, and this promises to become an issue overshadowing the real business of the convention of veterans.

General Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division, is grand marshal of the veterans' parade. Although he issued his order last week that women should not ride astride, it was not until the visitors had begun to gather yesterday and to-day that real opposition to it became pronounced.

This opposition comes largely from sponsors and maids who had planned to don divided skirts or riding trousers and sit on their steeds like men, and Sons of Veterans chosen as their escorts.

Order Will Stand.

But for every opposing voice there is one commending General Hickman's decree, the approval coming from veterans and their wives and some of the younger generation who do not approve of the present-day style. To-day the indications are that General Hickman's order will stand and that in the veterans' parade at least side saddles alone will be permitted on women's mounts.

The first of the reunion parades took place this morning at 9 o'clock, when the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, on the edge of the Chickamauga battlefield national park, marched through the downtown streets of Chattanooga in full dress uniform and equipment.

Cheer U. S. Troops.

The old veterans of the gray cheered the Government troops despite the fact that they wore the blue uniform that 50 years ago the men of the South so bitterly hated. It was a notable illustration that this is again a united country and sectional lines are fast being obliterated.

A half-hour later a short business session was held by the Sons of Confederate Veterans, after which came the formal opening of the reunion by the veterans.

This afternoon business sessions will be held by the Veterans, Sons of Veterans and Confederate Memorial Association.

To-night the big social functions that will mark the reunion will begin.

Governor Attends Lucy Cobb Finals

Governor Joseph M. Brown left for Athens Monday, where he will attend the commencement exercises of Lucy Cobb Institute. The Governor's daughter, Miss Cora Brown, is a member of the graduating class.

While in Athens the Governor also will pay a visit to the University. He is not scheduled to make any addresses on the trip.

GIRLS BURN BOOKS AT AGNES SCOTT

Seniors End College Year With Torchlight Parade and Big Bonfire on Campus.

With stars twinkling and torchlights glimmering the seniors of Agnes Scott made a bonfire of their books on the campus. Aided in the torch-bearing by sophomores and surrounded by several hundred alumnae and friends, they went through the ceremony with all of the gayety that only a crowd of college maids could display.

Burning of the books followed a torchlight parade on the campus. As the torch-bearers tripped over the beautiful lawn, their class songs and cheers drew a hearty response from the crowd.

A glee club concert opened with the cantata, "Death of Joan of Arc," led by Miss Almedia Sadler and Miss Isabel Norwood.

"The Last Rose of Summer" and "A Serenade," by Miss Rosa Hill, "Mammy's Little Honey" and "My Lady Clo," by Miss Sadler; "Love's Dilemma," by Miss Norwood, and a rendition of "Annie Laurie," by Misses Jean Ashcraft, Isabel Norwood, Pauline Bruner and Rosa Hill, were features.

Tuesday night the two literary societies will cross swords in a debate on the question: "Resolved, That the Panama Canal should be free."

ACTOR SLAYS POLICEMAN.

HACKENSACK, N. J., May 27.—Policeman Patrick Constdine, shot by James Devlin, a vaudeville actor, because Devlin objected to alleged attentions paid to Mrs. Devlin, is dead. Devlin and Mrs. Devlin are in jail.

GIVES UP HUSBAND FOR UPLIFT WORK

Mrs. Sarah MacD. Sheridan, Former Georgian, Tells Why She Didn't Fight Divorce.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Mrs. Sarah MacDonald Sheridan, former Georgian and daughter of one of the leading men of the Southern States at the time of the Civil War, told to-day why she permitted her husband to obtain a divorce in Reno without contest.

Her husband, Charles Oscar Sheridan, went to Nevada four years ago for his health. She refused to join him there. He obtained a decree for absolute divorce last Saturday.

She said to-day she regarded it as her great duty to continue her sociological work, in which she had been engaged for 30 years. Mrs. Sheridan is the founder of the "New National Fireside" movement for the opening of public schools after hours as neighborhood social centers, and declared she believed her work along these lines of greater importance than the maintenance of her domestic relations.

"I have lived to see my son, Mark Sheridan, in the old family home in Atlanta, become one of the most promising young mural painters of the day," she said, "and my daughter happily married to the younger son of one of England's noblest families. This accomplished, I feel that my family life has been full."

Mrs. Sheridan is an intimate friend of President Wilson and his family and is a musician of ability as well as a sociologist. From her youth Mrs. Sheridan devoted her talents to the improvement of social conditions in her own State. The Martha Berry Industrial School was established mainly through her efforts.

Negro Leaders in Annual Conference

Dr. W. E. B. DuBose, of New York, former head of the sociological department of Atlanta University and founder of an annual conference for the study of negro problems, was the central figure at the eighteenth session at the University Monday.

Drills and songs were given by 150 negro children from the free negro kindergartens of Atlanta. The principal address was by Dr. DuBose on the need of education and play to conserve the moral forces of the negroes.

Hill's Market Basket Bond Sale a Success

ST. PAUL, May 27.—James J. Hill's plan of selling city bonds in certificates of $10 each through the Northwestern Trust Company was a big success to-day. Men and women were waiting at an early hour for the company's office to open, and a steady stream filed in and out all morning.

The officers were prepared and began to issue receipts for the money promptly. One hundred and seven small investors bought a total of $10,000 worth of certificates up to noon.

Girl of 4 Is Second Cousin to Herself

MINNEAPOLIS, May 27.—Mrs. Jennie Golden, who when thirteen years old was married to her half nephew, then twenty years old, has filed suit to have the marriage annulled, so the relationship of their four-year-old daughter, Margaret, may be straightened out and the girl not be compelled to go through life as second cousin to herself.

Christian Golden, the husband, wants the marriage annulled, too.

Baptist Ministers Hear Dr. Donaldson

The Rev. C. N. Donaldson, D. D., of Charleston, S. C., who was pastor of the Inman Park Baptist Church for six years, delivered an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Atlanta Monday afternoon.

Dr. Donaldson will return to Charleston Sunday. His many friends were glad to see him and to learn he is pleased with Charleston.

Marshall Tells Girls: 'Be Just to Servants'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Vice President Marshall was the star speaker before the graduating class of a local girls' seminary.

"Deal justly with your servant," he advised. "You do not need to try to make her your equal and introduce her to your fiance, nor is it necessary to make her a common menial."

BRYAN GETS INTO TRAP IN ROW WITH JAPAN

Abandons Course Used Successfully With England—Orientals to Grasp Opportunity.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Students of statecraft declare that the Wilson administration has needlessly, not to saw stupidly, walked into a trap in the controversy with Japan over the California alien land law.

In its reply to Great Britain's Panama Canal tolls protest, this Government laid down the principle that until an overt act had been committed against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, Great Britain would have no standing in court; in other words, that Great Britain's grievance would become a matter for diplomatic adjustment only after an American ship had actually passed through the canal free. This statement cleared the atmosphere and left Great Britain no reasonable grounds for continuing the debate.

The same principle applies in the controversy with Japan.

The obvious reply of Secretary of State Bryan to the first Japanese protest, in view of the attitude assumed toward Great Britain, was to state that the treaty with Japan had not been violated, and, therefore, there was no matter for contention between the two governments until after some Japanese subject in California had been aggrieved by the operation of some California law.

But instead of adopting this logical course, it was pointed out here to-day the Wilson administration floundered about in the diplomatic puddle, and, denying that the treaty of 1911 had been violated, invited further negotiations, thus giving the Japanese Ambassador an excellent opportunity to quote the State Department against itself, where the very same principle is involved.

As the matter is now, instead of making a firm stand on precedent and silencing the Japanese protest as the British protest was silenced, the Wilson administration has promoted bickering between the two nations, Japan and the United States, and is in the ridiculous position of holding two diametrically opposite policies in relation to identically the same problem. If the American position is right in regard to the Panama Canal protest, it is wrong in regard to the Japanese protest, and vice versa.

It is the expectation here that Japan will take instant advantage of the inconsistency and incongruity of the position of the United States.

Lawson and Friends in Real Panther Hunt

SCITUATE, MASS., May 27.—Thomas W. Lawson has taken a hand in the hunt for a panther which has invaded Scituate, and has been seen by a score of persons.

It is possible Mr. Lawson and a party of his friends will stalk the beast themselves. They want to add the beast to the menagerie at "Dreamwold."

ODDITIES —in the— DAY'S NEWS

BORE GRUDGE TO GRAVE.—Most of the will of Terance J. Larkin, just filed in New York, is devoted to disinheriting his daughter, Mrs. Agnes G. Bedford, of Middletown, N. Y., to whom he left only $5.

GIRL'S STROLL WORTH $5,000.—Miss Ethel Terry, of Sayville, N. Y., found a large piece of ambergris, valued at $5,000, while walking along the beach here.

SETS VISITING SPEED RECORD.—Forty-five calls in ninety minutes is the visiting record established in Washington by Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice President.

HORSES FIGHT DUEL.—Two horses fought a duel in a vacant lot at Harrison, N. J., while several hundred persons watched the fight. One of the animals finally dropped with a broken leg. A bullet ended its suffering and the other horse is under the care of a veterinary.

'HOPPER' INVASION REPORTED.—a column of grasshoppers, five miles wide and eighteen miles long, is coming from northern Mexico, according to reports to Amarillo, Tex. Government, State and railroad experts have combined to fight the insects with poison.

BIRDS BATTLE WORKMEN.—An army of sparrows fought riggers who destroyed their nests while dismantling the spire of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, at Chester, Pa. The steeple began to topple and was condemned.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! And Again, Wuxtry!

"Talk about nature faking," exclaimed the hotel clerk, "just listen to this from a paper published out West. The items were sent in by the correspondent at Azusa, wherever that is."

And then he read the following:

"James Snyder, of this town, brought home four baby squirrels the other day and the family cat has adopted them and nurses them with her kittens.

"Then John Davis and Sherman Ward caught eight young foxes and their family cats have adopted them.

"Fred Bierer owns a calf that has but one foreleg, but runs just as well as any calf with its complete quota of legs.

"Ardell Smith, 16 years old, was knocked down and run over by a hog. The doctors called in say his left knee will be stiff for the rest of his life as a result of the accident.

"J. L. Brown's old hen has every day for the past three weeks laid an egg three inches long.

"Since the 'clean up' here there hasn't been much refuse in the streets and the birds got to eating tobacco crumbs and acquired the tobacco habit. Now they refuse grain and live on cigar and cigarette stubs."

Sure, Let 'Em Pay For the Luxuries.

Atlanta barbers have been discussing the edict that came from Trenton, N. J., the other day raising the price of trimming a Van Dyke beard from two bits to 35 cents.

"They're right," said the head barber, as he deftly deposited a comb behind his left ear and began running his fingers through his customer's hair.

"Never saw a guy who insisted on wearing a bunch of spinach like that who wasn't harder to please than your wife with her new summer hat. And a guy who will insist on having his mustache curled—well, some men is queer. Soak 'em, says I, soak 'em, and soak 'em good and plenty."

And the customer went out warbling:

What! The kibosh on the Van Dyke,
And an extra charge to boot
When the barber does your mustache
With a curl so cute and sweet,
sweet and cute?

But we've something to be thankful for,
Downtrodden men, by heck!
The barbers haven't raised the price
For a shave
Upon
the
neck!

Preacher Sentenced To Gallows Appeals

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 27.—Rev. Marion Capps, a former Methodist preacher, has filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court from a sentence of death imposed upon him by a Sebastian County jury. He was convicted of burning to death three of his children. Evidence at the trial was that the children were tied in bed, which was saturated with oil, and the house fired.

Capps was convicted on the testimony of two elder children, who escaped, but who, it is alleged, have since declared they swore falsely against their father.

STATE FACES BIG TASK IN TRIAL OF FRANK

Burden of Proof Will Rest on Prosecution in the Phagan Slaying Case.

hang one man simply because no one else can be found who is the more likely culprit.

After the State has presented its reasons for believing in the guilt of Frank, it is regarded as likely that the defense will claim first of all that the State has failed to establish Frank's connection with the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The defense will represent that the most the State has done is to establish that he had the opportunity to commit the murder.

Frank never was seen with the girl, either on the day of the strangling or before. It is not known that he ever spoke to her except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed. None of Frank's clothing has been found with blood stains upon it. No finger prints upon the girl's body or her clothes were identified as his. None of his personal belonging were found near the girl's body. Absolutely nothing was discovered in the search of the detectives that fastened the crime on him.

Own Admission Caused Arrest.

The police possibly would never even have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission. He told the officers the moment he identified the body that that was the girl he paid at noon the day before. No one else knew that Mary Phagan was in the building at that time, so far as the evidence reveals. Frank did not have to tell if he had desired to conceal the fact.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission, given freely and voluntarily, be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time? Is a guilty man likely to tell the officers as soon as he is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission?"

If the State attempts to show that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as one of the theories contends, the defense will be able to argue that there were several other people in the factory at the time, this fact opening the way to the argument that if the crime was committed at this time it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely to attack the girl when he knew there were other persons in the factory at the time who might discover him.

May Prove an Alibi.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed in the evening, as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Fomby indicate may be done, the defense will be able to establish a very strong alibi for the suspected man from the testimony of seven persons who are said to have been at Frank's house Saturday evening playing a game of cards.

Several of them already have testified before the Coroner's jury, and all of them are said to be willing to give their testimony in court to the effect that they saw Frank come home that evening about the time he said in his statement to the Coroner's jury, and that he remained home the remainder of the evening, to the best of their knowledge.

This will bring it to an issue of veracity between Mrs. Mima Fomby and these seven persons, who are persons of reputation and standing in the community, if, indeed, the testimony of Mrs. Fomby is allowed admission, which appears very doubtful.

Mrs. Fomby swore in her affidavit that Frank called her on the telephone several times between 6:30 and 10:30 o'clock the Saturday night of the murder, asking her for permission to bring a girl to her place. She testified that she denied his request. It is between these hours that Frank has a very well established alibi from all appearances.

Another Motive Possible.

The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body either immediately after the crime or at the times the body was exhumed.

Added to this fact is the unexplained circumstance that the girl's purse never has been found. It contained only the wages she had drawn that day, to be sure, but even this small amount might prove an incentive to some persons, the defense very likely will argue. And it is not at all certain that the robber, if robbery was the motive, had any idea that the amount he would obtain would be so small.

"Is it probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when it could not have incriminated in any way any particular persons had it been lying near her body?" is a question that can be put to the jurors in this connection.

The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the Coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack the identification of Frank made by Officer House, of Druid Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer.

They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probabilities of a man of Frank's standing permitting himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the officer and saying, "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his identity secret. Probabilities are bound to play a large part in the trial, declare those interested, in the mystery, for it is very much on a sequence of probabilities that the police are basing their expectations of convicting Frank.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the park guard discovered in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will still be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons.

The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negro, James Conley, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with his statement that he wrote notes at the dictation of Frank the day before the murder.

Sentell May Yet Be Witness.

Laying aside the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one had even suggested up to the time of the negro's alleged confession, the friends of Frank, and those who are without personal interest as well, scouted the idea that Frank, who is an intelligent and shrewd man, would take an ignorant negro into his confidence and do everything but tell him that he was going to commit a murder on the next day.

It is rumored that E. L. Sentell may yet figure in the case again. Sentell is the man who declared positively before the Coroner's jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sentell knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he met her on the street in company with some man and that he said, "Hello, Mary," and that she replied, "Hello, Ed."

This testimony would appear quite conclusive were it not for the statements of the physicians that the girl must have been dead at least six hours when found. It is known, however, that some confidence is still being placed in his statements.

Minister Nabs 'Tiger' Then Rides With Him

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—After he had arrested Bert Snyder, driver for a wholesale liquor company, on a charge of violating the prohibition law, the Rev. J. M. Dunlavy, welfare officer of Kansas City, Kan., climbed into Snyder's wagon and accompanied him as he delivered beer to his various customers.

The minister remained with the driver until he made his legal deliveries and then took him to the police station, where the man was released on bond.

Morgan Firm Denies Attack on President

WASHINGTON, May 27.—A prompt repudiation of the anti-administration interview attributed to Henry P. Davison, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in Paris, has been received at the State Department.

This interview, attacking both President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, was cabled to a New York newspaper some days ago and was alleged to represent the ultimatum of Wall Street to the United States Government.

U. S. Court Dissolves Coaster Brake Trust

ROCHESTER, N. Y., May 27.—A final decree dissolving the Coaster Brake Trust was entered in the United States District Court here today.

The decree in the case was agreed to by all parties at interest without court proceedings. There is, though, a criminal case brought under the Sherman law pending.

Prisoners Shown Favors, Says Judge

SAVANNAH, GA., May 27.—Recorder John E. Schwarz, in police court, to-day announced that he had notified Judge Walter G. Charlton, of Superior Court, and the Chatham County Commissioners that officers at the county jail were showing favoritism to prisoners sentenced from Police Court.

The jail authorities decline to discuss the allegations of the Recorder.

EARNINGS OF BIG STORES FABULOUS

Marshall Field Clears $4,643,197 in Year; Sears, Roebuck & Co., $6,099,794.

CHICAGO, May 27.—The Illinois Senate white slave committee to-day was in possession of information which the members of the committee regarded as valuable in presenting their plea for a minimum law for women and girls to the Legislature. The committee had figures on the profits of several large corporations.

Maxwell Edgar, an attorney, who obtained the data while preparing "tax-dodging" suits, reported that Marshall Field & Co.'s net profits in 1909 were $4,643,197.98, and in 1910, $4,419,427.81. Sears, Roebuck & Co. he testified, earned net profits of $6,099,794.61 in 1909 and $6,606,291.47 in 1910. The net profits of Armour & Co. in 1909 were $4,358,488.93, and in 1910, $3,865,266.95. The Illinois Steel Company's net profits in 1909 were $11,165,839.22.

The capital stock of Marshall Field & Co. is $6,000,000.

Carolina Desperado Slain Near Sylvania

AUGUSTA, GA., May 27.—Richard Henry Austin, murderer of three white men at Allendale, S. C., several weeks ago, was killed Monday night near Sylvania. The negro was trying to cross an open space to get to a swamp when he was fired upon by a score of men.

Austin had only two shells left and they were loaded with buckshot. They were identified as shells taken from Magistrate Edenfield, when Austin killed him in Hampton County.

IT IS MIRACLE PELICANS EVER WIN ANY GAMES

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE wonder of it is that the Pelicans have won those thirteen games that now grace their records! How did they get them? What happened? The "Felder Mystery" is as nothing compared with it.

On what the Pelicans showed here yesterday, when they lost to the Crackers 8 to 3, they wouldn't be entitled to win thirteen games in ten years.

According to Charley Frank his club isn't altogether to blame. As is the case with most tail-end clubs injuries have done their devastating work. Both of the Pelicans' catchers have been shot away—and Yantz is out of the game for a year with a broken leg. Manush's bum knee has gone wrong again and he is out of it—for an indefinite stay. It is possible that he will never be his old self again. They think so in Toledo, where the accident happened.

The Pelicans are complaining of another affliction of the tail-enders—their nerve is gone. They couldn't take a game if it was handed to them. They are the worst fielders in the league—and they did not improve their averages any in Monday's game.

* * *

ELLIOTT DENT more or less vindicated himself Monday. Bill Smith slipped him in and he beat the Pelicans. He weakened a fraction in the eighth and ninth but he showed a lot better than his last out. With plenty of work this man may prove a star. He does not seem at his best yet, but maybe the next time he is worked he will be able to go all the way through.

* * *

THIS Cast-Off's Revenge stuff is getting to be a howling farce. "Rebel" Williams, a Cracker-for-a-day a while back, turned up Monday with the fiercest sort of batting and laced out four hits in four times up. He had but one fielding chance, which he looked out for in good style.

William's regular batting stride is so far below that which he showed yesterday as to make the whole thing a blooming burlesque. But it always happens. Generally the cast-offs win the game. Maybe the fact that Williams was an involuntary cast-off saved the Crackers from that misfortune.

* * *

WILLIAMS was not the only man who did some surprising batting. Another was Pitcher Dent, who scratched a couple through the infield and beat them to first.

Snedecor put a scratch and a double to his credit. He and Williams made three-fifths of the Pels' hits.

Welchonce put a single and a very timely three-bagger on the records. Welchonce had Dunn and Dent on bases and, of course, something ferocious was needed to score them. Welchonce hit it all right and both of the speed merchants tallied.

Harry Welchonce made six nice put-outs yesterday and added to the half-dozen he made the day before, gave him twelve put-outs in two days. His batting was timely but he made one of those old-time "Atlanta bunts"—a walloping drive to Evans which resulted in a put-out at second.

THE Crackers have two more games with the Pelicans and ought to win them both, unless the Pels show a tremendous improvement. Charley Frank has no pitcher calculated to stop the local batters and his fielders are pretty much to the bad.

Thursday Montgomery turns up for four games. On Friday, because of Federal Decoration Day, there will be two games.

JUNE 6 TO SEE FIRST RACE AT MOTORDROME

WITH a band concert announced for Sunday and with the date for the opening set for Friday night, June 6, and with the board motordrome at the old circus grounds pretty well finished, Atlanta's season of motorcycle racing in the "giant washtub" is closing in.

And you get the idea of what is going to happen from the expression "racing in a giant washtub." That's exactly what it is like. Jack Prince's new track is little more—and no less—than a board track, set on edge. Instead of riding on the floor of the tub the racers hurtle around on the inside of the sides, like cockroaches on the kitchen wall, setting laws of gravity at naught and affording to the spectators the most spectacular form of racing the world has ever known.

Jack Prince really has a big offering for the Atlanta public. His track is the latest and best board track in the world. It represents the last word in the building of board tracks. Jack has gathered in Atlanta already the best motorcycle racers in the world. He has more on the way. He is erecting comfortable seats, every one of which commands a view of the big inclosure. He has engaged a band. He has arranged for a corking car service—a service that will take the patrons of the motordrome from Five Points to the track in barely more than five minutes. He has an attractive program for opening night. As a result he will be greeted by one of the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a motorcycle race in America.

PEACOCK FLEET GIVES BOYS' HIGH BIG SCARE

Boys' High School nine received the closest call ofthe season yesterday afternoon when they were held to a 6 to 5 score by the Peacock-Fleet school aggregation.

Boys' High began the scoring in the first inning when they registered a single tally and each team took its turns throughout the nine chapters at leading the score. The winning tally was registered in the ninth inning when Johnson scored on an error.

ODE.

This is an ode to men of great renown;
An ode to men who laugh and say:
"Pooh! Pooh!"
An ode to men who hold a great game down
And snap their fingers, saying:
"That for you!"
This is an ode to those who laugh and say
"Old P. T. Barnum had the proper dope.
Those rummies will be with us every day
And pay their kale and sit there full of hope."
I love to hear the wallop of the bat
And see the pill go bounding down the dell,
But when a lot of guys grow rich and fat
And then they rub it in—O whatthehel!

Jake Daubert has been suspended for three days. Jake Daubert is a member of the Brooklyn team, which has been winning too many games for the good of the National League.

Tom Jones says he will bet $10,000 on Jess Willard if said Jess Willard fights Gunboat Smith again. Mr. Jones shows his business acumen by speaking thus. It would cost him at least $7.50 to hire a hall.

Not that we care to queer an honest man's business, but our idea of obtaining money under false pretenses is to manage Jess Willard.

Ed Walsh threatens to teach the spitball by mail. Various batters in the American League would give half their year's salaries if Ed would only deliver his spitball by mail.

I could not, even in a pinch.
In fact, it is a lead pipe cinch
I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.

BRANNIGAN HANDS M'CUE FIRST DEFEAT OF CAREER

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27.—Matty McCue, variously known as the Racine terror, the Wisconsin whirlwind and the Racine wonder, is to-day simply plain McCue, for all the terror and whirlwind and wonder were punched out of him by Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg. It was McCue's first defeat, but it was decisive all along the ten-round route.

JAKE ABEL BEATS WHITE IN EIGHT-ROUND FIGHT

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 27.—Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, easily defeated Frankie White, of Chicago, here last night. Abel floored White in the eighth round with a right to the ribs. White did not land one clean blow.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jack McGuigan says he has secured Jack Britton's signature to meet Young Erne at the baseball park in Philadelphia on Decoration Day. Both boys will weigh in at 148 pounds ringside.

* * *

"Bud" Anderson is taking up considerable of the pugilistic limelight. His knockout of Joe Mandot stamps him as one of the most dangerous boxers in his class.

* * *

Jack O'Brien, the Philadelphia heavyweight and one of the real veterans of the game, donned the mitts the other day. He boxed a three-round exhibition with Harry Ramsey in Pottstown, Pa.

* * *

Harry Trendall and Leo Kelly will clash in a scheduled eight-round bout at St. Louis Wednesday night. Trendall and Kelly met several months ago, and the former was credited with the shade.

* * *

Jimmy Perry will have a chance to make himself one of the biggest cards in the boxing game Thursday night. Jimmy is to take on Mike Gibbons in a six-round set-to, and the fur should fly. Reports from the Pennsylvania city state that both boys have trained hard for the go, and are ready for the gong.

* * *

Perry's friends here are anxiously awaiting the result. They point to the fact that Jimmy has been going great lately, and for the first time in months has trained faithfully for a scrap.

* * *

Meyer Pries, who will meet Spider Britt in one of the three ten-round bouts to be staged at the Auditorium June 13, paid us a visit yesterday. Meyer says that he is going to bet his end of the purse that he beats Britt. The little Hebrew also says that he is going to be right this time, and will start work for the bout in a couple of days.

* * *

Abe Attell is still gathering in the soft dough. The former featherweight champion has agreed to take on Phil Bloom in the ten-round windup of a special show at the Irving A. C., Brooklyn. Attell is to receive $700, win, lose or draw.

* * *

Tom Jones continues to challenge Gunboat Smith in behalf of his heavyweight, Jess Willard. As yet he has not received any satisfaction from Jim Buckley, manager of Smith.

* * *

Buckley is not worrying much these days. Besides having Smith, he also has a neat meal ticket in Harlem Tommy Murphy, one of the leading contenders for Willie Ritchie's crown.

* * *

Arthur Pelky threatens to quit the ring for good. The big heavyweight has taken McCarty's death to heart, and says he will never be able to enter the ring again and fight at his best.

* * *

* * *

Frank Klaus received the newspaper verdict over Eddie McGoorty in their six-round bout at Pittsburg Saturday night. Both boys were strong at the finish, and could have gone a number of rounds more.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight, had an easy time defeating Kid Scaler the other night. The bout went the full fifteen rounds, but Freddie had a big shade at the finish.

Blood Bath Knocks Rheumatism

Remarkable Effects of a Remedy That Actually Irrigates the Entire Blood Supply.

It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect of a most remarkable remedy known as S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In five minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capillary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every enunctory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities. The stimulating properties of S. S. S. compel the skin, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder to all work to the one end of casting out every irritating, every pain-inflicting atom of poison; it dislodges by irrigation all accumulations in the joints, dissolves acid accretions, renders them neutral and scatters those peculiar formations in the nerve centers that cause such mystifying and often baffling rheumatic pains.

And, best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach. If you have drugged yourself until your stomach is nearly paralyzed, you will be astonished to find that S. S. S. gives no sensation but goes right to work. This is because it is a pure vegetable infusion, is taken naturally into your blood just as pure air is inhaled naturally into your lungs.

The great Swift Laboratory has spent millions of dollars in perfecting, producing and placing in the hands of the public this wonderful remedy. So give your blood a good bath with S. S. S., for it knocks the worst forms of rheumatism every time.

You can get it at any drug store at $1 per bottle. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood specific ever discovered. If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice, write to The Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift building, Atlanta, Ga.

McCARTY'S DEATH PURE ACCIDENT, FINDING OF JURY

By Ed W. Smith.

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight, Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 27.—Luther McCarty's death in the glove contest here Saturday afternoon with Arthur Pelky was entirely an acoident. This was the verdict of the Coroner's jury, determined after two sittings, the decision being reached at 10 o'clock after a deliberation of half an hour. Pelky was exonerated completely from all blame in the case.

Almost immediately after, however, the Northwest mounted police put Pelky under arrest, charging him with manslaughter. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000, Fred C. Lowes, a wealthy real estate man, and Tommy Burns furnishing the surety. The threatened cases against Referee Smith, manager Billy McCarney and Promoter Tommy Burns did not develop, but Smith and McCarney, in lieu of being given their liberty, promised to remain in the city for a couple of days at least and give further testimony. No bonds were asked in their cases.

Following is the full verdict as announced:

"We, the Coroner's jury, find that Luther McCarty came by his death accidentally, the immediate cause being a subluxation of the cervical vertebrae at the Burns arena May 24, but there is no evidence to show how this injury occurred, we, the jury, therefore exonerate Arthur Pelky from all blame whatsoever."

This was signed by P. J. McManus as foreman. The other jurors were H. C. Hersey, R. Jackson, E. W. Schofield, C. P. McCallum, M. Dawson and E. A. Jones.

Trying for Criminal Case.

It was evident from the start that the crown, stung by the severe criticisms of local ministers, intended to make a desperate fight to get a verdict upon which to base a criminal case against Pelky and perhaps the others directly concerned in the unfortunate contest. The prosecuting attorney asked at once that all witnesses be excluded from the room before going on the stand, and carried his point.

Among the witnesses examined in great detail were McCarney, Burns, Smith, two of the local newspaper men and Dr. Moshier, who performed the autopsy. Pelky was not called at all, but remained during the entire case like a caged lion in a nearby room. He has been deeply affected all the way through, and during this hearing appeared almost heartbroken.

Dr. Moshier gave the most damaging testimony against the boxers. He declared that McCarty's neck had been dislocated under the base of the brain and that this injury caused the hemorrhage of the brain that brought about the death. He all but declared that the injury could have come about in no other way but from a blow or from the fall, the latter not being possible, because the boxer's neck did not strike any object as he fell.

Other Fights the Cause.

A highly dramatic incident came right at the close of the hearing when Pelky's attorney called upon Dr. C. J. Stewart, one of the oldest physicians in Alberta, to partially refute the testimony of Dr. Moshier. The physician was asked if he thought McCarty's injury could not have been caused by some other than a blow received. He said it was highly possible, and then, rising to his feet, he shook his finger at the prosecutor, who was then questioning him, and during intense silence, shouted:

"It is my opinion that the injury to Luther McCarty was received from Flynn or somebody else in a previous encounter. In this contest, never."

He was excused in a hurry by the prosecutor.

Referee Smith testified that in all there were only about six blows landed during the contest, and that none of them was at all hard or effective and could hardly have caused even an abrasion of the skin. He said the boxing was about even up to the time of McCarty's collapse, and that Luther had turned, smiled and winked at his own corner after the final clinch, collapsing about eight or ten seconds later.

The State attempted to tangle up all the witnesses in an effort to prove that the contest was for the world's white championship; that all championship conditions had been carried out, and that it was in every way a prize fight.

Georgia Ends Successful Season

Prospects for 1914 Appear Good

ATHENS, GA., May 27.—Despite the fact that Georgia lost the series she would have rather won than any other—the one against Tech—the Red and Black has had a remarkably successful season, both financially and in games won and lost.

During the season the team scored a total of 174 runs against 68 for its opponents. Twenty-seven games were played against the best teams in Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and but eight games were lost. Two to Michigan, one to Ohio Wesleyan, one to Clemson, one to Auburn and three to Tech. Nineteen victories were celebrated and most of them were by one-sided scores, while seven were shutouts for Georgia. Five of the games that Georgia lost were by one run.

Outlook for 1914 Good.

Since the season has closed and the tension assumed the normal post-schedule laxity Coach Cunningham has busied himself taking an introspective stock of his material for 1914 and of his present splendid array of talent he expects to have all but three present at the beginning of next season, with a possibility of only two being absent.

Big John Morris, who has earned himself a place on the All-Southern team his first year in college ball, graduates in law in June, and will immediately "hang out his shingle" over in Hart County, from where he hails.

Covington, who has played third base for two years and who served four years at center on the football team, is a victim of the four-year rule and after June will also join the ranks of the colonels in the legal profession.

May Lose Hutchens.

Hutchens, the Red and Black's great receiver of this season, is likewise a member of the law department and will receive his "dip" this year. There is but a slight chance for him to return, not unless he leads the team.

Bowden has a contract from the Boston Nationals whenever he sees fit to annex his signature to it and he is liable to become a member of Stalling's Braves at any time after college closes this summer. He has one more year in Southern athletics, and on account of his ability in both baseball and football a strenuous effort will be made to persuade him to return. With his wing in the shape it is now he would find it rough sailing in any league and would certainly have hard going to make good.

Many to Return.

These are about all the sure losses and doubtfuls, which leave a good working nucleus for the team next year. Henderson is slated to return for a place on the football eleven and will draw the first base assignment again. Harrison is taking pharmacy and will have another year, while Clements at shortstop is a four-year man and should make a strong bid for All-Southern next year. Ginn, McWhorter and Erwin all are sure to return and so will Corley and Hitchcock. The latter pitched but few games this year, but with a little more training will be a mainstay next year. Corley has already made an enviable record, although playing his first year in college ball.

Cobb Praised Brown.

This completes the list of regulars, to which may be added Brown, the freshman, who played in several games and who wields the willow in such good style that Ty Cobb pronounced him the most finished batter on the Red and Black squad. He is an outfielder and will be heard from next year. Another sub who filled in to a good advantage while Covington was ruled off the team is Holden, captain of the scrubs. He has another year in college and will be a valuable asset at a future date.

FLYNN'S FIGHT WITH COFFEY WAS A WONDER

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, America's greatest sporting fiction-writer, covered the Jim Flynn-Jim Coffey heavyweight bout in New York last Friday night for the New York American. His story is of especial interest to local boxing fans, as Flynn does battle with Jim Savage at the Auditorium-Armory here on June 13. Here is Van Loan's story:

Andrew Chariglione, whose business name is Jim Flynn, stunted the Dublin Giant somewhat in a ten-round argument before the Garden Athletic Club. Jim Coffey had age, weight, reach and 70 per cent of the house with him before he started, but the battle-scarred warrior of Pueblo ripped and tore and slashed his way to victory, whaling away at his taller opponent until he reduced him to six feet of staggering, knock-kneed humanity.

Not since the memorable fight between Ketchel and O'Brien has so much real fighting been crammed into ten rounds, and it was Flynn's experience, aggressiveness and cast iron jaw that won for him.

For some reason best known to himself, Flynn elected to stand still for the better part of the first round and allow Coffey to pop him on the jaw with rights and lefts and the Dublin import made the most of his opportunities. He slammed the veteran 732 times by actual count and brought the gore in streams from one of Flynn's eyes.

Flynn Dives Into Coffey.

The Pueblo product finally grew angry under this constant bombardment and at the end of the round he was driving into Coffey head first, endeavoring to remove his head from his shoulders with wild rights and lefts.

Coffey continued to score in the second and third rounds and Flynn's countenance gradually assumed the appearance of an overripe tomato.

In the fourth round, however, the Pueblo hodcarrier took matters into his own hands and began to lead with his haymaker swings and when the bell rang Coffey was reeling from a succession of swings to the body and jaw.

Flynn Had Coffey Reeling.

In the fifth and the sixth matters were fairly even, but from the seventh until the end the tough old veteran forged into the lead, and though Coffey kept up his left jabs and right crosses there was no power behind them. Flynn herded his taller opponent from one side of the ring to the other endeavoring to land the finishing punch.

Jim Flynn may be on the toboggan, but he is still good enough to put an enduring crimp in the aspirations of many members of the younger set.

NEW CLUB WILL ENTER FEDERAL NEXT SEASON

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 27.—A franchise to play in the new Federal League was granted Toledo by Organizer A. Bobrick. The Ohio Club will not join the third leaguers the current season, however, but Toledo will rake together a strong team for the 1914 crusade.

Bobrick believes that many other cities will be represented in the Federal next year. Buffalo and Detroit are two cities practically sure of entering the third league zone. The Toledo officers will be elected in the near future, and plans will be made for the organizing of the Toledo Club.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game.

$250 in Prizes for Best Solution of "The Triple Tie"

YOU read the first seven installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this eighth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain.

Now go on with the story.

"Wait till I tell you, Mr. Callaway," interrupted the manager, "Excuse us a minute, Gordon," he added, "I want to say something to Mr. Callaway," and he drew the president to an inner office, where he told him the little he had been able to learn about Kelly. When he had concluded, Callaway said:

"And you signed him up on the strength of that drive that broke the bull's ribs?"

"Yes, sir; that was enough for me."

"Well, Billy, you know I consider you are best manager in the world. And I reckon you know what you're doing. I will put through this contract, but remember, Billy, you must shoulder all the responsibility. If this Gordon Kelly 'blows up' the laugh will be on you, not me."

"I'll take my chances on that," said the manager, confidently.

"Anyway, it will make good reading in the newspapers. Send for the reporters, Billy, and we'll tell 'em all about your world beater."

The reporters came, they saw, but they were not conquered. They took copious notes of all the manager told them, but they refused to "fall" for Kelly as a ballplayer. They admired his shape and looks but demanded that they be "shown" before committing themselves to extravagant praise of the new man.

"All right, boys; I'll show you," declared Bill Smith, "and, mark my words"—every reporter made a mark in his notebook—"mark my words this fellow will turn out to be a wonder."

"Hope so, Billy," replied the reporters, as they filed out of the room.

They all handled the news in a facetious manner. In one of the newspapers there was this headline:

"Joshed" in the Papers.

ADONIS JOINS
THE CRACKERS

Bill Smith Signs a Player Who Has Never Seen a Game of Ball.

Another newspaper had this headline:

LEARNED BASEBALL IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

Atlanta Club Secured a "World Beater" Who Never Played a Game of Baseball.

And the third newspaper had this to say in its headlines:

COTILLION LEADER
TO PLAY BASEBALL

Bill Smith Lands a Handsome Young Man That Knows Everything Except the National Game.

Within twenty-four hours Bill Smith was the recipient of all sorts of pleasant jibes. Every friend or acquaintance he met had something to say about the "world beater." The manager took everything in good part, but mentally acknowledged that he had overplayed himself in making public the signing of Gordon Kelly. "I ought to have said nothing about it," he thought. "Now he will just have to make good or they'll give me the laugh all over the country. But," he added, grimly, "that kid will make good, all right, all right."

CHAPTER X.

WHAT Gorden Kelly himself thought of the "funny" stories printed about him in the newspapers no one ever knew. Bill Smith eyed his "world beater" keenly when he reported in the clubhouse at Ponce DeLeon Park early Monday morning. But Kelly was the same, quiet, good natured young man Smith had always found him to be.

"He's a game dog, sure enough," said the manager to himself, and satisfied with this disposal of the case, he began putting on his uniform.

It was the day on which the players of the Atlanta club were to report for spring practice, and it was a fine day overhead. There was to be a month of hard grind for the men in order that they might get into condition for the gruelling pennant race of the Southern League. Players of the rival clubs in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Chattanooga, Mobile, Nashville and Montgomery were supposed to report to their managers about the same time. In other parts of the South, in Athens, Ga., in Augusta, in Hot Springs, Ark., in Marlin Springs, Tex., in Tampa, Fla., and elsewhere the big league clubs of the North, and the Red Sox champions of the world and of the American League; the New York Giants, champions of the National League; the Chicago Cubs, the Detroit Tigers, the Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Browns, of St. Louis, the Cleveland club, the Washington club, the Pittsburg Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds, the Phillies, the Brooklyns and the Boston Braves were already training under the watchful eyes of the big league managers.

In far off California the Chicago White Sox and in Bermuda the New York Americans, in charge of Frank Chance, had pitched their training camps. At about this time, too, many of the International League clubs—Buffalo, Toronto, Providence, Montreal, Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Rochester—were scheduled to open their training season below the Mason and Dixon line. Likewise the American Association clubs—St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Toledo, Columbus, Milwaukee and Louisville—were due in the South about this time for their annual visit. All these clubs leave the "Sunny Land" richer every year by about $200,000, of which the railroads and the hotels get the lion's share and the moving picture shows, the laundries and the cigar stands what is left.

Players Arrive.

Smith and Kelly were hardly dressed in their uniforms before the players began to arrive and within half an hour there were fully a dozen of them on hand. There were "Whitey" Alperman, the old National League player, now second-baseman of the Atlanta club, as good as ever fielded a grounder when it was hot or muffed a liner when it was behiskered; Bailey, the heavy-hitting outfielder; McAllister, who wants to become an umpire; Long, Nixon, Smith, the new third-baseman; Musser and Brady, the clever pitchers; Dobard and Kernan, infielders, and Dunn, the catcher.

There were shaking of hands and merry greetings. Gordon Kelly met all the arrivals as fast as they came to the clubhouse. The homes of these players were scattered all over the country. The men had not seen each other since the last of September.

Alperman was the first of the new arrivals to don his uniform. He laced his shoes and then arose and stretched himself.

"Gee, I wish the Southern League season was over," he said, with a yawn.

This remark caused a great laugh in the clubhouse.

"Starting to 'crab' before you've touched a baseball, eh?" observed Bill Smith.

"No," returned the second baseman. "I wanted to get it off my system, that's all. Come on, boys, let's get a move on," and the players, laughing and shouting like schoolboys, ran on the field and began their season's work with that time-honored exercise of tossing the ball in pairs.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

"Study Your Expression," Says Pretty Gertrude Barnes

Miss Barnes in a summery pose.

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"SMILE and curl up your mouth corners," said merry Gertrude Barnes. She had just finished doing five character songs in characteristic costumes. She had run the gamut of emotion from the naughty little "enfant terrible" through the stranded show girl longing for the "old Kentucky home" to the mirth-mad exponent of "Row, row, row." And all this earnest and successful effort to please her audience left her cool, buoyant and ready to give the whole world of girls the kindly benefit of her study of how to have "a sane mind in a healthy body."

"Expression is important for character as well as to aid the search after beauty," said pretty Miss Gertrude, with laughing earnestness. "I used to be afraid to smile all I wanted to for fear I would get those heavy lines from nostril to lip; and then suddenly I became aware of all the hard-looking faces one sees—and the chief reason for the hardness was down drooping, disagreeable looking lips. I decided at once to take a chance on the lesser evil, and began curling my mouth up at the corners, even when I was not particularly anxious to 'look pleasant, please;' now as a result there may be lines around my mouth, but they are lines of pleasantness—aren't they?" she added anxiously. "And sometimes when I am ready to feel cross my mouth keeps on smiling—and I recover."

Merry good nature and kindly interest in life happen to be among the greatest charms of Miss Barnes' animated, expensive face, and very pleasing is the twinkle that reflects from big brown eyes to the merry dimpled corners of her this-is-a-fine-old-world mouth.

"You may safely go on smiling," I said with a smile of my own; "but how about all the other expressions you bring in rapid succession to your face—don't they make lines?"

A Brand-New One.

"Not lines that stay," answered Miss Barnes. "You see, I have a few methods of keeping my skin in good condition. They are cold water, sunburn and tan."

"Sunburn and tan!" I exclaimed. "I thought they were fatal to the fine texture of the skin."

"Perhaps they are fatal to the old, worn-out outer layer they destroy. But they give the fresh new layer waiting underneath a chance, and they help give strong, firm flesh, good, healthy flesh, without which fine-textured skin is just impossible. And sunburn and tan come from plenty of sunlight and fresh air, which are the best things in the whole world for the health and beauty seeker. So there you are in a perfect circle, when you have added plenty of cold water—and served up a fine, healthy skin on a background of strong, firm flesh that can throw off the little lines you make temporarily by twisting your face around into any extreme of expressions you choose.

"Cold water—cold water—cold water! Won't you sing its praises very earnestly, please? And tell all the girls not to be afraid of the charm of expression—they may indulge in it all they like if they have been sunburned and tanned and cold-watered, with good massage-like splashes that make the skin strong enough to throw off the little temporary blemishes of lines and wrinkles.

"Oh, my circle is not complete yet," laughed the cheery star, "I have a little more to say about fresh air. Go out into it all you can, and hunt and ride if you can. Riding is wonderful for the muscles of the limbs; hunting develops the muscles of the waist—but if you can do neither, swim. Anyone can swim if she just chooses to learn how—and it is a most wonderful, inspiring, lung-filling, flesh hardening form of exercise.

A "Water Baby."

"I manufactured a lot of my own healthfulness by going after it very earnestly. Being a water-baby and being an outdoor girl are almost equally important; they both make you healthy, and if you are wise enough to be both your chances of being a beauty increase.

"You see, fresh air and exercise have trained my figure for me, so I don't have to rely on corsets to do it. They have trained my skin for me, so I don't have to hold my face in a mask-like expression in order to avoid lines and wrinkles—so there is my basis, and then I go ahead and try to make the most of my looks, although I know perfectly well that the result is not beauty."

But on this latter bit of information Miss Gertrude Barnes has a monopoly, for good features added to the winsome charm of a bright face and the pose of a healthy body surely deserve the title of beauty.

"Now about arranging your face to the best advantage," said Miss Barnes with the earnest attention to every detail that makes her work so pleasing and conversation with her a true delight. "Of course, it is inadvisable for a girl who wishes to be accepted at face value as a lady to use any makeup on the street, for she is sure to look conspicuous and artificial—for the one all-embracing reason that without the earnest study an actress gives the subject the gentle art of makeup becomes a farce, instead of an art.

"However, any girl can teach her eyebrows to grow in a smooth, pretty curve by brushing them at night and morning with a tiny brush; and good cream will keep the face clean as to its pores as well as on the surface; and a well-poised head adds a final touch of charm. Girls should cultivate the habit of holding their heads with the natural poise of a flower instead of jutting forward like a swag, or bending back with the curve of a lightning-struck tree.

"And learn to design your own clothes. Make them express YOU so your personality will be a rounded whole without one jarring note."

And since there is no jarring note in Miss Barnes' unaffected, wholesome personality, this final bit of advice fits in with the beauty study of an expert in whatever she undertakes—and is well worth following.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it to-day.

Household Suggestions

A little soap shredded into the boiler on washing day makes the clothes a good color, and if you put a small piece into the starch it will make the ironing easier, and it imparts a lovely gloss to the clothes. All the little bits of soap that are left over should be put into a jar with a little water. Place the jar in a moderate oven and leave until the soap has dissolved. This is excellent for washing flannels and woollen things.

In choosing chickens, observe chiefly the length of leg. The best chickens have short legs in proportion to the size of the body; the bones are small and the flesh is white. The best test of age is found at the end of the breast-bone. When the bird is young, the end of the bone is soft and gelatinous, and it becomes gradually harder as the age of the bird increases.

A good way in which to keep plants fresh without watering them when the house must be closed is to take all the plants to the cellar or some other cold place and set them in tubs, with an ordinary brick under each flower pot. Pour into the tubs just enough water to cover the bricks. It is best to place the tubs by an east window if possible.

To boil milk without fear of burning, put two or three tablespoonfuls of water in the saucepan; let it boil rapidly for two or three minutes, add the milk, and it will not burn, however fierce the fire may be.

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Little cousin," he said with the deep tenderness of the man who finds happiness in the joy of the woman he loves, though he be shut from her very life, "there is nothing the matter with me. Life gives me almost all I want. No one can have everything. A banker's life has not much color and passion; I would rather make music than money. But don't think he stupidly discontented—or ungrateful for all I have. I cannot say all I mean! There is one thing in the world—in ALL THE WORLD there is one thing I want. For this I would give the world itself, if it were mine—and all the money in the world. And all life would be music, and color and passion then. And I can't tell you—I must never speak of it to you—and you will never understand!"

Outside sunshine and roses—here renunciation of al lthe joy life must never hold. Jacob felt that he must stifle in this litle room where hope had died. He strode to the doorway—to the gleaming terrace.

The Old Story.

And then slowly, swayed by a feeling she felt must be pity, Charlotte followed him, "Jacob, perhaps I do understand."

"Charlotte! If you do—I shall have spoken no word. In a sense it was not honorable of me—though at first I only meant to warn you, and I never thought; I should guard you against myself. Dear little Charlotte—forget what I said!"

"I cannot forget—so easily!" Charlotte's eyes were very soft, her little quivering lips were dangerously near, but Dame Fate had chosen capriciously to make this a day of unfinished climaxes, and only Frau Gudala's ready wit and loving heart intervened between the girl and a rather tragic scene, for at the particular moment when the sunny doorway framed the pretty picture she made as she stood looking pleadingly at a sorely-tempted Jacob, the hall door opened, admitting the Duke and Frau Gudula and her sons.

Gustavus of Taunus was asking: "I may have the honor of addressing your daughter?" and Grannie saved the situation. "There is wine in the garden—if you will honor me. Charlotte, dear, will you and Jacob show Count Fehrenberg the way? Duke Gustavus, could you make up your mind to a little chat with an old woman? Would you stop here with me—alone—for a few minutes? I ask it as a favor." And so Grannie prepared to make her fight for the happiness of her children.

"May I forget for a few moments that I am an old Jewess—and you a reigning Prince? I want to speak to you about Charlotte. She lost her mother many years ago—and now, at this important time of her life, I must try to be a mother to the child. My son Solomon, you know, sometimes sees only one side to a question, the one he wants to see. But I have looked at this marriage between you and Charlotte from many points of view—have you? Do you see the difficulties and danger?"

Gustavus thought for a moment of the girl who wished him to make this marriage in order that she might be the cousin of a wealthy man instead of a pauper Prince. The tricksy jade with her lying eyes—and for one supreme moment he had thought perhaps he and Evelyn might abdicate and face poverty together—well, she wanted money—on with the dance called life! Prince of Taunus, must dance to his piping—then dance merrily and proudly for all the world to see.

He answered the earnest old Jewess lightly indeed. "Oh, I admit the dangers in this marriage, Baroness. But they make the prospect more fascinating—to me. After all, I do not want my future comfortably laid out for me with mathematical certainty! I prefer to run a litle risk! I have lived in a world that grows tired of old games—and is always ready to learn new rules!"

"But marriage is not a game," said the old woman. To her marriage was a Sacrament.

"It may be an adventure if the consequences are not too early seen. Why, my life has ben one series of adventures. When I was a child Napoleon was shaking the ground he marched over. One day my father's little throne fell down, and was picked up and dropped into the Corsican sack! I have known exile, and my crown has been restored to me. I have had money—and it has gone—well, perhaps, I should have had to go after it—pouf!—if your sons had not now once again lifted me upon my little throne. Oh, you see, Baroness, I have had my ups and downs."

"You treat me as a plaything. What blessing can there be for a girl of my people in sharing such a life?"

"When I am married, Baroness"—

"Don't call me that! It is a pretense that does not please me," said the old Jewess impatiently to the reigning Duke of Taunus.

Gustavus exclaimed in amazement: "A pretense! The Emperor has—"

"Your Highness," interposed the old woman, "no Emperor can ennoble me—at my age of seventy-one. Rank is not worn so easily by old woman."

Gustavus of Taunus rose to the supreme height of his manhood as, with a sudden illuminating respect for a fineness he might have failed to glimpse in his little cousin's soul, but saw now in full splendid in the gentle mien of the old Jewess, he answered Frau Gudula: "I think, madame, you belong to a more ancient nobility than my own."

Then, in a little access of mischief, he added: "I shall be proud to be connected with you by marriage."

Frau Gudula had played her highest stake for Charlotte's happiness—and had failed! "Give your compliments to my grandchild, Duke Gustavus, and convince her with them if you can. I wash my hands of this marriage. The matter is beyond me. I pray Providence to guide and guard my little girl." With brimming eyes that scarce could see the sunshine, Frau Gudula walked to the door by the great arbor of pink roses and looked at the merry group sipping her beloved Meyer Amschel's burgundy out in the garden. Well, it is not given to every woman to be the wife of a man she can worship. Poor little Charlotte.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

WAIT A WHILE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am 22, and have been keeping company with a certain girl for six weeks. At first it seemed love at first sight, but lately she has grown cold. I buy her candy and flowers and try to please her, and her parents have taken a liking to me. But she now assumes an indifferent air. Do you think my proposal would be accepted? I am madly in love with her.
S. S.

Has it occurred to you that she may have grown tired of seeing so much of you? Try an application of that old adage, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

In any event, a proposal after an acquaintance of only six weeks is apt to be premature.

DON'T LET HIM KNOW.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of 18 years and in love with a man of 30 years. This man is a friend of my folks. He has never taken me out and he is very nice to me, and always talks of getting married. He doesn't know I love him. Please tell me how I could win his love.
A SPANISH GIRL.

Suppose I were to tell you to let him know of your love. You are only 18, and girls of that age transfer their hearts easily. If you let him know of your love to-day, the chances are you will love another man to-morrow. Spare yourself humiliation by keeping your love a secret until he asks for it.

NOT IMPROPER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Do you think it proper for a girl who is keeping steady company to ask the man when she will see him next? A. L. W.

Their intimacy warrants such a question from her, but I would not want her to be urgent or persistent, and it is in better taste if she lets him take the initiative in making future engagements.

MOTHERS SHOULD CALL FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady and wish to know if it is proper for the young lady's mother to call on my mother, or my mother to call on her, my mother being the elder. We will soon be engaged. S. S. L.

Such overtures should come from the family of the man, never from the family of the girl.

THE LADY FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Which is proper: For a lady to greet a gentleman first, or a gentleman to greet a lady, while walking on the street? ARCO.

The lady is the first always to give some sign of recognition.

Do You Know---

Some curious experiences seem to have befallen Mr. William Campbell, late of the Black Watch, who has just finished a 50,000-mile walk, in a kilt, through India, Ceylon, Australia and New Zealand. In Italy his dancing of a Highland fling in the street led to arrest, a New Zealand chief offered him a wife in exchange for his costume, and in Australia he lavished money on eau-de-cologne in order to keep the mosquitoes away from his knees. He was nearly murdered at a religious festival in Ceylon, being taken for a devil.

The Quebec agency of the Canadian Marine Department has received word that a gas buoy which drifted from its position in the lower St. Lawrence River during the winter of 1912 has been picked up by the lightship at Hellewick, New South Wales. It is supposed that the buoy drifted round Cape Horn, a distance of 16,000 miles. The date of the buoy's disappearance is not given, but even if it took place early in the winter of 1911-12 the buoy would have to drift 30 miles a day or more to reach New South Wales in the time.

Snared!

With the Golden Apple of Love for Bait

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

By NELL BRINKLEY

NELL BRINKLEY SAYS

IN this fashion is it done! In the depths of a lovely forest, velveted underfoot in emerald-moss and sewn thick with flowers—forget-me-nots, heartease and such like soft names—hide certain wary wights with very fat cheeks and tummies! Over the runways they set their snares—a cunning loop of golden cord—thrown over a high tree-bough and down, as high from the ground as—a maid's waist. On the green moss under the shining loop (which is so like a slanting sunbeam that a strolling lady would never catch it in her bright eye in the world) they drop a golden apple. And on the golden apple the sun smites hard enough to enchant and blind a maid with its flame. One malicious wight, the coldest-blooded of all, shins up the tree into the leafy green shadow and lies there with his bow drawn and a keen-tipped arrow necked. The rest fall upon the other end of the cord. They hold their breath, their eyes harden and brighten. The feathery curl on the tip top of one's head waves idly in the wind! One itches his pink heel with the toes of his other foot. One breathes too loud and gets a fat knee in his back for his stupidity. They WAIT—the cord a bit slack. Down the runway comes a maid, with soft black hair, primroses over her ears, a narrow slashed skirt (the better to dance the Tango in), silver buckles on her shoes and an unsuspecting sweet blue eye! And the sun on the golden apple smites into her eyes! The wights behind the tree-bole stiffen and dig their toes into the moss. With a little cry the maid pinches up her silken skirt between a forefinger and thumb and runs swiftly—in a soft rush—she dives down with a greedy hand for the apple in the moss. Her head hovers within the big golden loop. She straightens—ah-h-h down slithers the noose over her shoulders—"Heya"—the wights lean and pull like mad, and my lady's body is twirling in midair, her little heels kicking nothing! "Heya!"—the wight in the tree lets his arrow go singing straight to the captive's heart—and another maid is snared!

WITHIN THE LAW

A Powerful Story of Adventure, Intrigue and Love

By MARVIN DANA, from the Play of BERNARD VEILLER

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The father was impressed of a sudden with the fact that, while this affair was of supreme import to himself, it was, after all, of still greater significance to his son. To himself, the chief concerns were of the worldly kind. To this boy, the vital thing was something deeper, something of the heart; for, however absurd his feeling, the truth remained that he loved the woman. Yes, it was the son's name that Mary Turner had taken, as well as that of his father. In the case of the son, she had taken not only his name, but his very life. Yes, it was, indeed, Dick's tragedy. Whatever he, the father, might feel, the son was, after all, more affected. He must suffer more, must lose more, must pay more with happiness for his folly.

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect, but he could not let the situation go without protest, protest most vehement.

"Dick," he cried, and his big voice was shaken a little by the force of his emotion, "boy, you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow." He stood very erect, staring steadfastly out of his clear gray eyes into those of his son. His heavy face was rigid with feeling; the coarse mouth bent slightly in a smile of troubled fondness, as he added more softly: "You owe me that much."

The son's eyes met his father's freely. There was respect in them, and affection, but there was something else, too, something the older man recognized as beyond his control. He spoke gravely, with a deliberate conviction.

Gilder's Voice Rang Out.

"I owe something to her, too, Dad."

But Gilder would not let the statement go unchallenged. His heavy voice rang out rebukingly, overtoned with protest.

"What can you owe her?" he demanded, indignantly. "She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally, it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. The courts hold that is only a part of the marriage actually. The fact that she doesn't receive you makes it simpler, too. It can be arranged. We must get you out of the scrape."

He turned and went to the desk, as if to sit, but he was halted by his son's answer, given very gently, yet with a note of finality that to the father's ear rang like the crack of doom.

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

That was all, but those plain words summed the situation, made the issue a matter not of advice, but of the heart.

Gilder persisted, however, in trying to evade the integral fact of his son's feeling. Still he tried to fix the issue on the known unsavory reputation of the woman.

"You want to stay married to this jail bird!" he stormed.

"She Is Justified."

A gust of fury swept over the boy. He loved the woman, in spite of all; he respected her, even reverenced her. To hear her thus named moved him to a rage almost beyond his control. But he mastered himself. He remembered that the man who spoke loved him; he remembered, too, that the word of opprobrium was no more than the truth, however offensive it might be to his sensitiveness. He waited a moment until he could hold his voice even. Then his words were the sternest protest that could have been uttered, though they came from no exercise of thought, only out of the depths of his heart.

"I'm very fond of her."

That was all. But the simple sincerity of the saying gripped the father's mood as no argument could have done. There was a little silence. After all, what could meet such loving loyalty?

When at last he spoke Gilder's voice was subdued, a little husky.

"Now that you know?" he questioned.

There was no faltering in the answer.

"Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. Then abruptly the young man spoke with the energy of perfect faith in the woman. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way, in her own mind, anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison. She feels that the world owes her—"

But the older man would not permit the assertion to go uncontradicted. That reference to the woman's innocence was an arraignment of himself, for it had been he who sent her to the term of imprisonment.

"Don't talk to me about her innocence!" he said, and his voice was ominous. "I suppose next you will argue that, because she's been clever enough to keep within the law since she's got out of State's prison, she's not a criminal. But let me tell you—crime is crime, whether the law touches it in the particular case or whether it does not."

Gilder faced his son sternly for a moment, and then presently spoke again with deeper earnestness.

"There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up."

The son met his father's gaze with a level look in which there was no weakness.

"I've told you, Dad—" he began.

"You must, I tell you," the father insisted. Then he went on quickly, with a tone of utmost positiveness. "If you don't, what are you going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters—for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. He was furious at this supposition that she would continue in her irregular practices.

But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the Rogues' Gallery, but they will take another. Yes, and the imprints of her fingers, and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. It was blasphemy to think of her in such case, subjected to the degradation of these processes. Yet, every word had in it the piercing horrible sting of truth. His face whitened. He raised a supplicating hand.

"Father!"

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine." There was a little pause, and the father stood rigid, menacing. The final question came rasping. "What are you going to do about it?"

Dick went forward until he was close to his father. Then he spoke with profound conviction.

"It will never happen. She will go straight, Dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder once again put his hand tenderly on his son's shoulder. His voice was modulated to an unaccustomed mildness as he spoke.

"Be sensible, boy," he pleaded softly. "Be sensible!"

Dick dropped down on the couch, and made his answer very gently, his eyes unseeing as he dwelt on the things he know of the woman he loved.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"ME and brother Wilfred spent a week-end up in the country, and I have just came back," said the Manicure Lady. "I would rather than not spend all my week-ends in the country, George, because the air is so restful up there, but I guess Wilfred don't want to go back no more to the town where we was.

"You see, George, my poor, deluded brother had an idea that he could sail into the little town where we was going and just tell them that he was from New York. He thought that would make him an idol in said town. I didn't think so for a minute, George, because I know how people is in small towns. They mind their own business and everybody else's, but they don't care a rap where they find out you came from. You might as well try to make a gorilla kiss your hand as to make a small towner respect you because you are a New Yorker. They simply don't care where you are from, and the way they treated my poor brother I guess the bigger the town you came from the less they care."

They Go to Europe.

"I don't blame them," said the Head Barber. "I don't see why a man should figure himself a favorite just because he lives in a little New York flat and rides up and down town on the subway. How is that going to make a man wise? Most of the fellows that was born in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge—the kind that comes in here sometimes to get shaved—ain't got much idea of the great country they are living in. If they save up a little dough, they don't go out to the wonderful Pacific Coast. No; they go to Europe and get bunked. They pay a guide a lot of dough to show them some place where an English king had his nephews choked to death in a tower, and then they come back and tell about their travels."

"I hope you ain't doing a monologue, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I was trying to tell you something about this week-end party, if you are enough of a gent to listen. Well, Wilfred and me reached the town all right, and the minute we got to the hotel and were seated with our country friends around the table, poor brother pulls the very phrase that I asked him not to. 'This is fair,' he says to the company, 'but little old New York for mine.' I knew right off that he had made a bonehead play, because I seen the folks look at each other kind of funny, but he doesn't gete wise, not Wilfred. 'The reason I like Manhattan,' he babbles right on, 'is because Manhattan is the market for brains. I write, as perhaps some of you people know,' says poor brother, 'and the brains of the country, in literature, all flock to New York. If I were a farmer, I would like it up here, but being a writer, I have to be in the heart of the literary world, little old New York.'

A Quiet Fellow.

"There was a nice, quiet-looking fellow in the party, George, that I seen looking over my fool brother kind of sly and unobstructive like. He was dressed rough, because he was on a fishing trip, but I seen right away from his calm, well-bred misdemeanor that he was a gent. He listened a long time while Wilfred was telling them what a terrible strain it is on a writer to keep writing, and he even stood for my brother's reciting some of his own poems right at the table with his mouth full of chow-chow and new bread. Then he got up and went out with a smile at me. I seen then and there that him and me would be good friends, because we both knew Wilfred through and through.

"Honest to goodness, George, do you know who he was? I asked one of the ladies, and she told me. The gent that had been listening to Wilfred's hot air about writing and writers was George Ade, who wrote 'Fables in Slang' and 'Horatius at the Bridge' and 'David Copperfield' and a lot of other books and plays."

"Did Wilfred find out who he was?" asked the Head Barber.

"Sure he did, but it didn't feaze him. He said that the time would go swift for the party with two clever writers at the same table!"

The Care-Free Spin

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE is this difference: She is an Old Maid if she is old fashioned and resigned, and a Bachelor Girl if she fights hard.

It must be dreary to be a Spin and have no husband come home and growl all evening about the high cost of living.

When a Spin knows how to smooth a man's plumage an ideal wife is lost to the world.

No one can save money quite as fast as a Spin after she has put aside the curling iron with the conviction that no man is worth having.

When all her friends unite in saying "What a good time she has," you can bet "She's is either a Spin or a widow.

It is easy to compliment the mother of children, but when a woman has become a real old Spin the only way to reach her is to appeal through what she learned at school.

"The top of her voice" is a common expression, but the top note depends entirely on whether a woman is married or a Spin. Mothers reach a high key through experience in screaming at the children, their husbands and the dog, but the top of a Spin's voice is a low pitch, and when she tries to raise it it becomes a squeal. The top of a mother's voice would stop a fire engine, the top of a Spin's voice isn't loud enough to call the cat home from the next yard.

'Once Upon a Time there lived an Old Maid. She did not call herself a Spin. She was frank about it, and admitted she was an Old Maid, despising such subterfuges as Spin and Bachelor Girl. The Old Maid was lonesome, and lonesomeness for an Old Maid is DANGEROUS. She was more lonesome than her friends realized, and one day left Lonesome Land by walking from the altar with a Man. One morning a few years later her husband left the house after a stormy scene, banging the door with such violence that pictures and plates tumbled from the walls. The noise awoke the Twins, and they set up a Howl. "At least," said the ex-Old Maid, as she tried to soothe the crying babies and pick up pictures and broken glass and china at the same time, "I Am No Longer Lonesome." And having said that she said All!

THE SOCIAL WORLD

Banquet to Bridegroom.

A banquet was tendered Mr. P. W. Wilcox in honor of his approaching marriage to Miss Katherine Rawlings, of Druid Hills, by the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, in a private dining room at the Kimball House Monday evening. The dining room was decorated in palms and ferns. The table, with a floral centerpiece down its length, was attractive. The menu of seven or eight courses was interspersed with toasts and speeches.

Mr. J. B. Cleveland, president of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, presented a handsome gold watch to Mr. Wilcox, who is secretary and treasurer of the company. The presentation was in behalf of the company. The watch bore as an inside inscription:

"To Mr. P. W. Wilcox, from his friends and associates of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, May 28, 1913."

In presenting the watch, Mr. Cleveland made a witty talk on "Time," the gist of his remarks being the wish that "Every time you look at the watch to learn the time, may you think of the fine time you've had tonight and may you always have a good time and a good timepiece."

The company included Messrs. J. B. Cleveland, Harold S. Holmes, P. W. Wilcox, George Lamkin, W. M. Adams, W. M. Taylor, R. T. Skinner, Jr., C. R. Stone, J. H. Lamb, A. G. Cooper, T. W. Newbern, Fred Ball and T. C. Callaway.

Miss Gay Hostess.

Miss Eloise Gay entertained at a bowling party at the East Lake Country Club Tuesday afternoon. After bowling and boating on the lake, refreshments were served on the veranda.

Guests included Misses Louise Wilson and Evelyn Booth, Lynchburg, Va.; Sarah Hansell, Thomasville; Agnes Roberson, Texas; Willie Belle Jackson, Texas; Nunuzza Seymore, Alabama; Essie Roberts, Fairburn; Ethel McKay, Elizabeth Burke, Julia MacIntyre, Louise McMulty, Dolie McArthur, Kate Richardson, Eva Powers, Sarah Powers, Edna Taylor, Louise Oberly and Beverly Anderson, all members of the "Bulldog" Club of Agnes Scott College.

For Visitors.

Miss Mary Andrews will entertain a number of Brenau girls and an equal number of young men informally Tuesday evening at her home in Ansley Park to meet her guests, Misses Mary Trippe Ellison, of Mississippi, and Grace Pruett, of Clayton, Ala., students at Brenau.

Wednesday Mrs. L. W. Grey will give a luncheon at the Georgian Terrace in their honor. Wednesday afternoon Miss Annie Maude Schuessler will entertain at the Atlanta Theater for Miss Andrews' guests.

Thursday afternoon Miss Irene Bennett will give a matinee party at the Forsyth for the visitors.

Woman's Club Closes.

The final meeting of the Woman's Club this season was held in the club rooms Monday afternoon. The year's reports were presented and the club adjourned for the summer months.

Mrs. A. P. Coles presided. She read a paper on the work of the club the past year. Her paper was followed by talks by other officers.

Mrs. Jarnagin sang "One Fine Day," from Madame Butterly.

Many members made short talks on the club's work. They were Mrs. H. H. Tucker, Mrs. William Hurd Hillyer, Mrs. Lott Warren, Mrs. H. B. Scott, Mrs. P. H. McGovern, Mrs. Stockbridge, Mrs. Boiling Jones, Mrs. Lindsay Johnson, Rome; Mrs. H. H. Merry, Pelham; Mrs. James Jackson and Miss Alice Baxter.

Officers for the coming year are Mrs. A. P. Coles, president; Miss Alice Baxter, first vice president; Mrs. Linton Hopkins, second vice president; Mrs. Lott Warren, recording secretary; Mrs. Alber Akers, assistant recording secretary; Mrs. M. M. Davies, treasurer; Mrs. Arthur Powell, auditor and Mrs. Victor Kriegshaber, corresponding secretary.

The club will hold its next meeting in October.

For Miss Courtney Harrison.

Miss Lucy Harrison will entertain at bridge Thursday afternoon for Miss Courtney Harrison, whose marriage to Mr. Loring Raoul will take place Monday.

Art Association Meeting.

The monthly meeting of the Atlanta Art Association will be held at 11 o'clock Wednesday, May 28, in the Carnegie Library. The annual election of officers will take place.

Musical Tea.

There will be a musical tea at the home of Mrs. George A. Wight, 509 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, Thursday afternoon from 4 to 6 o'clock, for the benefit of Circle No. 10 of the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Methodist Church. A musical program will be rehdered.

The Jolly Twenty Club.

Miss Hulda Mae Suttles entertained the Jolly Twenty Club at her home in Ira Street recently. Those present were Misses Bertie Johnson, Virginia Weaks, Willie Johnson, Hula Mae Suttles; Messrs. Otis Smith, Warlick Belinger, Paul Cobler and Arthur Cooke. Hearts-dice was played. The prize, a pretty fan, was won by Miss Bertie Johnson. Refreshments were served. The next meeting will be held at the home of Miss Alma DeLucia, 45 Eugenia Street, Thursday evening. Officers will be elected.

Kitchens-Head.

Mrs. E. L. Kitchens announces the marriage of her daughter, Mary Estell, to Mr. Lewellyn Deering Head, May 24. The Rev. W. W. West performed the ceremony. A few relatives and intimate friends were present.

PERSONALS

Mrs. Peter Erwin will leave Wednesday to visit relatives in South Carolina.

Mrs. Edward Hafer has returned from a short visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Calvin, at Experiment Station.

Miss Irene Leinke left Monday for Chattanooga to attend the reunion as a guest of Mrs. W. H. Meacham.

Mrs. F. Roland Alston and young son, Whitman Morris, will leave Wednesday to visit relatives in Chattanooga.

Mrs. William P. Pattillo returned home Tuesday morning, after an absence of four months in Europe. She is being cordially welcomed.

Miss Van MacKinnon and Miss Elizabeth Dunson left Monday afternoon for Chattanooga to attend the reunion. They will be guests of Mrs. W. D. Davis.

After spending their honeymoon in Atlanta as guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. Pfitt, Mr. and Mrs. John Bannon have returned to their home in Winona, Minn.

Misses Petria and Olga Thiesen, of Pensacola, Fla., will arrive Friday to spend the week-end with Mrs. Jack Thiesen, before going on to New York to join a party of friends for a trip abroad.

Mr. Paul Seydel, of New York, who with Mrs. Seydel has spent the past ten days as a guest of Mrs. Seydel's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Vassar Woolley, will remain in Atlanta until Friday. Mrs. Seydel will be with her parents until the middle of June.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

GOOD BILL AT FORSYTH.

Old favorites and new join in the bill at the Forsyth this week—and an unusually good bill it is, too. Every act is a topnotcher of its kind and there's variety enough for every one.

Maggie Cline, by struggling along some way, it seems, has been able to miss Atlanta for nineteen years. But she's here this week, and although the younger generation is not on right close speaking terms with her at first she soon warms the house and gets one of her "regular" old-time receptions. She sings the good old Irish stuff in the way that made her famous many years ago, and for good measure gives her greatest hit of the olden days, "Throw 'Im Down, McCloskey," which brings down the upper part of the house as of yore.

Among the other splendid numbers on the bill are Ethel Kirk and Billy Fogarty, who have a high-class song and patter act; Carl Rosine, a magician who doesn't bore you as you think he is going to; the great Howard, a ventriloquist, who has an entirely new line of stuff and puts it over in a novel way; Cesare Nesi, a splendid singer who warbles under the title of "Young Caruso," and does not libel the great and only tenor to any extent; Madden and Fitzpatrick, in a clever sketch in which Madden does some original piano playing, and the Equilli brothers, equilibrists who really are different. Of course, there are the motion pictures.

All in all, it's a bill worth while—the best yet of the summer season.

"ST. ELMO" SATISFACTORY.

Miss Billy Long and her company began a week's engagement Monday at the Atlanta in "St. Elmo," presenting the old Southern book play as acceptably as it can be played.

The play is a selection from six offered the patrons of the Atlanta, and the strength of the company lent itself admirably to the play.

Mr. Vail as St. Elmo Murray, the cynic, played the part forcibly and sympathetically. Miss Long's part, Edna Earl, was almost negligible, but was well handled.

Miss Inslee as Gertrude Hammond, an irresponsible young girl, was responsible for a delightful bit of characterization, quite naturally done.

"St. Elmo" will be seen nightly and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"THE RESURRECTION" AT GRAND

Blanche Walsh, one of the few American actresses who deserves the name of tragedienne, will be seen in Atlanta this week in her most famous role, that of Katusha in Tolstoy's wonderful drama, "The Resurrection."

It is a picture play which brings Blanche Walsh and the Russian play to the Grand this week, and the photo-drama will begin Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and continue until 10:30 o'clock that evening, with repetitions on Friday and Saturday. The prices will range from 10 to 25 cents.

Special Will Take Hotel Men to Tybee

Big times are expected on Tybee Island June 13 and 14, when the Georgia Hotel Men's Association holds its annual mid-summer meeting there. Business and pleasure will go hand in hand, though fun is the main object of the gathering.

Legislation that will be asked of the Georgia Assembly will be discussed.

The Atlanta delegation and hotel men from cities and towns near Atlanta will go on a special train June 12. At Savannah they will be entertained at the new Savannah hotel. At Tybee they will be guests of the Tybee Hotel.

Cat With Harelip Whistles Like Boy

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May 27.—Stanislaus Czynszky, of Prospect Avenue, West Springfield, is the owner of a cat with a harelip, which whistles with the facility of a schoolboy, but can not mew or, at least, never has mewed.

Neighbors have suggested that the cat would prove a treasure to a maker of catgut violin strings.

CHICKENS GET SOUSED.

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—A dozen chickens in a coop at the city market were deluged by a broken jug of whisky. The chickens stuck their heads through the slats of the coop and snipped the liquor. Soon afterward the roosters began to crow noisily and the pullets flapped their wings.

A SURPRISE AWAITS YOU AT THE BONITA

ULM URGES PENAL REFORM FOR POOR

Governor's Executive Secretary Declares Present System Penalizes Poverty.

Major A. H. Ulm, executive secretary and ex-officio pardon attorney to Governor Brown, has given out an interview strongly commending the proposed efforts of the Georgia Prison Association to bring about healthy changes in the Georgia criminal laws and prison system.

"A person changed with misdemeanor is given the option of paying a fine or going to the chaingang," said Major Ulm. "Under our procedure, if he goes to the gang, he can not later change his mind and pay the fine. Many prisoners at time of sentence are unable to communicate with friends or relatives in time to pay the fine.

Must Appeal to Governor.

"The only way he can avail himself of the privilege of a money payment is by appealing to the Governor for clemency. If he pay an agent to attend to that routine, which we are compelled to enforce, nine times out of ten he will be forced to serve out the sentence.

"This amounts to penalizing poverty and misfortune. The State law on the subject should be the same as municipal laws, by which prisoners may pay, without bother and expense, the pro rata portion of the fine not worked out any time while serving the sentence.

Urges Suspended Sentences.

"Judges should be permitted to suspend sentences, with some form of probation, in all misdemeanor and, under wise restriction, in some felony cases, as that of a youth arraigned for the first time on a technical case of burglary.

"The State is in need of some form of indeterminate sentence. The parole law partly suffices, as it is intended to do, but it does not fill the need.

"Better provision also should be made for carrying out our present parole law. Virtually no funds are provided for investigating meritorious cases or for inspecting and supervising the conduct of those paroled."

Woman's Beauty Is Based on Health

To Have Health, Bowel Movement Is Absolutely Necessary---How Best to Obtain it.

MRS. JENNIE SNEDEKER.

If woman's beauty depended upon cosmetics every woman would be a picture of lovelliness. But beauty lies deeper than that. It lies in health. In the majority of cases the basis of health, and the cause of sickness, can be traced to the action of the bowels.

The headaches, the lassitude, the sallow skin and the lusterless eyes are usually due to constipation. So many things that women do habitually conduce to this trouble. They do not eat carefully, they eat indigestible foods because the foods are served daintily and they do not exercise enough. But whatever the particular cause may be, it is important that the condition should be corrected.

An ideal remedy for women, and one especially suited to their delicate requirements, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of women endorse highly. Mrs. Jennie Snedeker, 1041 West Monroe Street, Chicago, testifies that she is "cured of grave stomach and bowel troubles by using Syrup Pepsin and without the aid of a doctor or any other medicine." All the family can use Syrup Pepsin, for thousands of mothers give it to babies and children. It is also admirably suited to the requirements of elderly people, in fact, to all who, by reason of age or infirmity, can not stand harsh salts, cathartics, pills or purgatives. These should always be avoided, for, at best, their effect is only for that day, while a genuine remedy like Syrup Pepsin acts mildly but permanently.

It can be conveniently obtained at any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded. You will find it gentle in action, pleasant in taste, and free from griping, and its tonic properties have a distinct value to women. It is the most widely used laxative-tonic in America to-day and thousands of families are now never without it.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington Street, Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

ONLY FOUR DAYS LEFT TO ENTER GEORGIAN'S GREAT PONY CONTEST

Four days remain in which contestants can be nominated for The Georgian and The American pony outfit contest. Several boys and girls are believed to be preparing to enter at the last hour possible, and with a considerable number of votes pledged, believing there will be some advantage in taking the leaders by surprise.

This, though, is not likely to avail them much. Probably they believe the leaders are napping, but nothing could be further from the truth. Besides, late entrants are losing the value of vote coupons more than fifteen days old.

Those already in the race remain closely bunched.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook so far has been the greatest vote producer. She had 59,960 votes Tuesday, while Florence Greenoe in her district has polled 40,620.

Several other contestants have passed the 40,000 mark. George Rosser, in District 1, has 41,620; Miss Robert Harbour, in District 2, 48,055. Ross Greer and Mose Brodkin, in the City Carriers' and Newsboys' race, are running neck and neck with 42,145 and 41,700, respectively.

Another close contest, though the vote totals are not so large, is the contest for school boys and girls outside Georgia, where Lena Mae Smith, Knoxville, Tenn., has 16,715 votes, and Fain E. Webb, Jr., 16,650.

Names and standing of contestants follow:

47 Tried for Gaming; 3 Held by Recorder

What Recorder Pro Tem Preston termed the "record trial since this court was organized" was held Monday afternoon when the 47 men arrested in a raid on the Continental Club faced him. They were charged with gambling.

Evidence was found against three—Ira Soubliss, George Jaffas and Charlie Truffa—who were held under $200 bond. The proprietor, Jim Poulos, was held under $5,000 bond on charges of running a disorderly house, gambling house, tippling house and keeping open on Sunday. The place was ordered closed.

THE WEATHER.
Conditions.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—There will be showers to-night in New England, the Middle Atlantic and northern portion of the South Atlantic States, continuing Wednesday in New England, New York and New Jersey. Elsewhere east of the Mississippi River the weather will be fair to-night and Wednesday, with higher temperatures Wednesday throughout the upper Lake and Western lower Lake regions and the Ohio Valley.

General Forecast.

Following is the general forecast until 7 p. m. Wednesday:

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night in north and central portions.

Virginia—Showers to-night; Wednesday cloudy.

North Carolina—Showers to-night and Wednesday.

South Carolina—Showers to-night or Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night.

Florida—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

Alabama—Fair to-night; cooler in north and central portions; Wednesday fair, warmer in north portion.

Mississippi—Fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly warmer Wednesday in the interior.

Tennessee—Fair to-night; Wednesday fair, warmer.

Louisiana—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Wednesday

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Opinion on Government reports seem to have crystallized around 8c per cent, which, if June reports are indicative of final production, should be interpreted bearishly.

Norden & Co.: It is possible there may be further selling in an attempt to discount a good bureau report.

Sternberger, Sinn & Co.: It is still a weather market.

Newburger, Worms & Nawman: All strong spots should be taken advantage of to sell, especially the new crops.

Logan & Bryan: We favor sales on any upturn from this level.

Thompson, Towle & Co.: Market may go lower, but we do not advise selling at present.

COTTON

NEW YORK, May 27.—Poor cables, coupled with bearish weather map, led to active selling at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 3 points lower than Monday's final. Offerings were well absorbed and soon after the call the loss was made up.

During the forenoon the market was firm and under persistent buying from the large spot interests shorts covered considerable short lines. McFadden, Riordan and Parrott led the buying movement. Riordan was credited with purchasing about 12,000 to 15,000 bales of October and December, which was said to be for Wall Street. The character of the buying chased shorts to cover. Offerings were very light and scattered. It is believed by many that there is still an existing short interest in the market.

October and December displayed extraordinary firmness, October advanced 8 points and December 9 over the initial level. Other positions followed the advance moderately, advancing 3 to 7 points.

The advance came in the face of extremely bearish advices from all parts of the belt, as well as from abroad. A cable said:

"The market feels the influence of Continental buying, spinners well stocked, and notwithstanding a fair Manchester business we expect a weaker market in Liverpool for the present. Think market will be lower if crop accounts continue favorable."

Weather developments overnight were of the most favorable character. No rains fell of consequence. The map promises very favorable weather overnight; fair and warmer in the western and central States; cloudy and probably showers in the Carolinas and East Tennessee warmer.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: May, 11.54; July, 11.62; August, 11.41; October, 11.09; January, 11.05.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Reports to the Journal of Commerce state that the cotton crop is backward in the Carolinas and about normal in Tennessee. The acreage is slightly increased and the stands in general are poor. Rain was badly needed, but showers have been general recently. Some replanting in Tennessee with an increase in the acreage. In North Carolina the season is about two weeks late. Prospects are much brighter since the rains. South Carolina condition may fall below last year, when it was 79. Tennessee condition shows an increase of nearly ten points over last year, when it was 73.5.

* * *

It is believed that a good deal of short cotton has been covered during the past few days and a lower market is predicted, based on favorable weather conditions and reports which are coming in. Around the close yesterday Riordan bought about 10,000 bales of October and December. McFadden brokers also bought. However, they sold old crop positions.

* * *

Liverpool cables: "American middling fair 7.24d; good middling 6.90d; middling 6.70d; low middling 6.56d; good ordinary 6.82d; ordinary 5.88d."

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable. Shows fair and warmer in western portion of the Atlantics. Cloudy and warm in the Atlantics and Tennessee. No rain except in Tennessee and parts of North Carolina, where it will be beneficial.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Favorable crop reports came from many quarters and the cotton market declined. Of course, a wave of bearish sentiment passed over the rings and low-price people discussed the outlook for declines in more or less confident tones. Ten cents for new crops was talked of as a sure thing, nine cents as a probability, eight cents as likely, and, according to one lone bear, seven cents as a possibility. All the while the bull faction kept quiet and permitted the spell of depression to run its course. At the close underlying strength seemed to develop, and students of the market expressed the belief that near future fluctuations would range within 20 points.

"The weather over Sunday was very favorable, temperatures were higher and, on the face of things, the crop seemed to be in a fair way to make seasonable progress. The man on the fence, while admitting the presence of much more favorable climatic conditions, was inclined to believe that the flood of favorable crop advices, coming right at the close of the period on which the Government's condition bulletin on June 2 is to be based, traces some of its inspiration to a possible need of an offset to any relatively low condition that might have been reported on May 25 from the less favorable sections."

Memphis wires: "Generally fair weather will prevail in the cotton States except in the extreme northeastern sections, where showers are likely. Good weather in the central belt will be quickly followed by warmer. No rain of consequence has fallen. Favorable map."

No Better Chickens Than the White Plymouth Rocks

They Are as Beautiful as They Are Useful and Profitable—Are Good as They Look.

In our estimation there are no better chickens than the White Plymouth Rocks. When carefully bred and rightly handled they are as beautiful as they are useful and profitable.

With their glossy white plumage, red comb, wattles and earlobes, and yellow legs, they look fine enough to eat, and they are just as good as they look.

I am not raising them and I have none to sell, but I know what I am talking about, for I have handled them in years past and speak from experience.

If you want to produce good ones, however, you must be mighty careful to breed from first class stock. If you are just starting in the business you can not use too much care to produce a start of the very choicest breeders. Then let your selections each year be the very best. Cull out the poor ones, both as to shape and color. Keep nothing that does not show a robust constitution, the ones with the broad breasts and backs, heavy thighs, nice and tapering, arched necks, with a low carried tail. Such a specimen is not only good looking in shape, but contains stamina worth considering. Weed out those with the slim, straight necks, long and narrow or roached backs; legs too long, standing too close together at the knees; tail slim and carried too high, forming an angle with the back. These points of defect are very often seen, and upon what some call good specimens. Of course, they are rarely all seen upon the same fowl, but frequently two or more are.

High Type Utility Fowl.

When you have the very best possible shape in a White Rock for the show room you have a utility fowl of the very highest type. There is no doubt about that. As to color, the Standard says pure white throughout, web quill and all. You see there are no qualifications. Simply white. Any departure from this is defective, such as creaminess, brass and the like; brass simply being the creaminess intensified into a positive yellow, as seen upon poor specimens of males two years old or older. This is one of the things we have to fight against in our endeavors for the best. Gray or black specks are quite common and are often distributed through the plumage in pin head sizes, and are defective according to size and number and the intensity of color. Positive black spots of any kind will disqualify. A good, pure, white plumage throughout, free from any creamy tinge, even though it contains a few minute specks, is much more desirable in every way than one that has a tendency to be creamy. Do not throw that kind away, for it is a hard matter to get a pure white one. The ear lobes should be bright red, as in all the different varieties of rocks, any permanent, or what might be called enameled white, disqualifies. Look out for this, as it only takes a mighty few of the right kind of black specks to throw them out. What the Standard terms positive white, in treating with white in specimens demanding red lobes, is a white that seems coated right on to the surface, and not a changeable white that shows white one minute and reddens the next.

Single Comb.

The comb upon both the male and female should be single and straight upon the head, not soft enough to turn to one side or the other or to wrinkle in its course from where it starts at the base of the head to the blade at the rear. A comb of five points is the one desired, although a four-point one would not be so very objectionable in the eyes of the best breeders. Look out for feathers, stubs or down on the shanks, which should be clean and free from any appearance of feathers. One can soon learn to detect the greater defects and the little ones will come to light later on in the game.

If you get a strictly first class White Rock for the fancy man or the show room, you will have a good one to breed broilers or roasters from and a good one for laying, too, for that matter.

You know it used to be a great idea to those that knew nothing about the business that a thoroughbred or standard bred chicken, one good enough to put into the show room, was some kind of a freak not suited to any other purpose, and entirely unfit for the practical man. Nothing could have been farther from the facts, and many are just now getting wise along this line, for it has been one great aim and earnest endeavor of the standard makers for years to have for their ideal chicken one that was all chicken from head to tail.

Brass Band Funeral Provided in His Will

DANVILLE, ILL., May 27.—In addition to necessary expenses of his funeral, William Cramer, a Danville saloon keeper who died to-day, set aside $1,100 to be spent by two lodges to which he belonged for an elaborate funeral parade.

He wrote instructions several days ago about the line of march and the musical numbers to be played by the two bands.

DROUTH IN ILLINOIS ENDED.

CHICAGO, May 27.—B. W. Snow wires from Vincennes, Ind.: "Generally good rains from St. Louis; clear across Illinois and East. Light in spots, but enough to end drouth talk for the present. Wheat in big producing sections of Illinois promises unusually heavy rate of yield and this rain practically makes it. Crop is lighter in eastern counties, but fully up to the average on the Indiana side of the Wabash River. South of Terre Haute the crop is spotted with the average hardly up to the usual promise.

"Oats consistently poor all across Illinois; rather better on Indiana side, but distinctly a poor outlook. The rains will help, but crop in Missouri, Illinois and southwest Indiana will be a very short one regardless of future weather. The damage suffered when oats were germinating can not be repaid. Corn planting practically done and conditions favorable to a good start. Farmers are not making any contracts for delivery of new grain.

"Plenty of old corn everywhere, but oats stock reported light."

STOCKS

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Most issues shaded at the opening of the stock market to-day, although others gave a fair appearance of strength, which caused a show of irregularity in the list.

Canadian Pacific opened at 233½, for a loss of ⅝, but made a partial recovery. United States Steel common opened with a loss of ⅜, apparently on published reports of a price decline in Europe. Later the loss was made up and the issue scored a gain.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit shaded fractionally in spite of the dividend increase. Amalgamated Copper, after opening unchanged, declined fractionally.

Other issues which sold off were Louisville and Nashville ⅝, Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ⅛, Pennsylvania Railroad ¼, California Petroleum ⅛, Great Northern preferred ⅛ and Erie ¼. Reading shaded ⅛, but later recovered and scored a net gain of ¼.

There was renewed pressure against St. Louis and San Francisco.

The curb market was dull.

Americans in London were irregular.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Have Leghorns Been Bred to Fine Point?

Are They Too Small for the Best Value?—Question Worth Considering.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Have we not bred our Leghorns down to too fine a point to be of the greatest value as egg producers? In other words, are they not too small for the best value?

When I was a boy of 15 I bred first the White and then the Brown Leghorns. At that time both of these varieties were of quite a different type from the standard Leghorn of the present day. They were a good deal larger in frame, longer in body, of a coarser make-up. Their combs were much heavier and had longer serrations or points. As well as I can remember, they laid a larger egg than they do to-day. In carriage, they were lower in front, with body carried more horizontal than the average specimen of to-day. Taken all around, they were of decidedly better egg type, in my way of looking at it.

That a great many strains or families of the Leghorns have been so long to secure the very finest and neatest of combs and the trimmest of tails, and light, fancy shanks supporting a neat little body, no observing poultryman can deny.

I believe also that the average breeder, if he has given the matter a second thought, can see that the present-day Leghorn has not the real stamina and vitality that he should have if he is expected to carry the banner for egg production at the head of the column and not be trampled under foot by his more vigorous rivals.

Consider Size.

Perhaps many of us do not stop to consider the question of size, unless our attention is called to it by someone who has been making comparisons. We have lately seen a number of fowls of this class from the Old Country—a lot from Denmark and some from England. They were all larger than our American birds. This fact alone set us to thinking and wondering if we were not allowing our strains to be too finely bred in the mad rush for prize-winning stock. It may be all right for the fellow who makes his living selling stock and eggs for exhibition purposes. But should we not as producers of commercial eggs look after the utility part of the work? We learned from those who were breeding the Danish stock, and had been experimenting with them for years, that they found them really better layers of larger eggs and they were of a decidedly more robust constitution. For this they were less liable to break down after a season of heavy laying, as many of the finely bred American Leghorns do. Those who have been working with these Danish fowls have been using them both in their purity and crossing them with home-bred stock. They say they have found them very satisfactory when used in both ways. As one of these breeders expresses himself, one can make Bantams out of Brahmas with a few seasons of selecting, starving and breeding at the proper season, etc.

Commercial Business.

But we are not after that kind of stock for the commercial egg business. You who have been following the reports of the present national egg-laying contest are aware how the pen of English Leghorns are holding the lead against all comers, and bid fair to continue that way to the end of the year. This fact alone should be enough to make our Leghorn breeders sit up and take notice.

It looks to us very much like, if this fine type of Leghorn is continued, we will have to have two classes—one called the exhibition type, good only for that purpose, and another for utility, bred to serve its best possible purpose for that. But such a course would not be wise. The fancy should not only cater to the show-room foibles, but look after the real or substantial side of it as well. If this were done, the trade in fine stock would certainly be increased, if all understood it that way. Let there be a meeting upon common ground. For a time, at least, the standard should be so adjusted or modified that a rather large comb, legs stout in bone, body of good length, broad and deep, would be the correct type. In fact, describe a fowl with a little more stamina in its make-up. We would, however, keep it entirely distinct from the Minorca in every line of its make-up. This can easily be done and still get fair size.

Definite Size Standard.

Another thing that should be looked after in considering this matter of size, is that of fixing upon something definite.

Who can tell you what the size of a Leghorn should be? When the novice asks the question as to size or weight, what are we to tell him? Tell him that it is about midway between a Cochin Bantam and a Brahma? If he is sufficiently versed in weights to know what these weigh, he may be able to figure it out, but what nonsenses—why not fix standard weights for the Leghorn and be done with it? This has been my plan for years, but someone says when you put weight to them you put them in the Minorca class. Not a bit of it! The Minorca weights are 6 1-2, 7 1-2, 7 1-2 and 9, for pullet, hen, cockerel and cock, respectively. For the Leghorn class we would suggest weights as follows: Pullet, 4; hen, 5; cockerel, 6, and cock, 7 pounds. You will notice that there is quite a difference between these and the Minorca weights, yet it will give them a standing. We will know where to find them and what to tell people who want to know what their size is. It will place them in a better position in the show room when it comes to deciding special and sweepstake prizes. They will not be handicapped as they now are in these cases.

Let us do a little planning to get the best there is for the utility man, and at the same time not hurt the thoroughbred stock trade. The more in harmony we get these two branches of the trade working, the better for both of them.

Committee to Seek Peachtree Widening

Committee Wants Immediate Relief of Congestion—$5,000 Asked. Realty Notes of Interest.

A meeting of the utmost importance to property owners along downtown Peachtree and to the entire city will be held Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock by the finance committee of the City Council to hear from a representative committee on the pressing need of widening Peachtree from Carnegie Way and Forsyth Street to Harris Street, to relieve traffic congestion that has become almost menacing. Well-known citizens will ask that $5,000 be appropriated immediately for this purpose.

The plan, briefly stated, is to cut five feet from each sidewalk so as to add ten feet for vehicular traffic, and later on to set buildings back so as to create ten-foot sidewalks. The acquisition of ten feet more for vehicles, it is stated, will be sufficient to relieve a condition in traffic that has long been a cause for drastic action.

Among the citizens who have been asked to appear as a committee before the finance committee are Asa G. Candler, Forrest Adair, W. H. Kiser, Robert F. Maddox, John W. Grant, J. H. Ewing, E. W. Alfriend, Carl Witt, Henry H. Schaul, Dr. H. F. Scott, Dr. W. B. Hamby, John E. Murphy, H. L. Cobbs, Will Lowenstein, Hugh Richardson, Virgil and Roy Collier, Willis E. Ragan, Henry S. Jackson, J. H. Gilbert, Dr. J. R. Hopkins and others.

Some time ago citizens, backed up by city and county, guaranteed $50,000 for buying a ten-foot strip at the "bottle neck" (junction of Peachtree and Forsyth Streets and Carnegie Way) for setting buildings back. The Winecoff Hotel was built back in accordance with this plan. This part of the project will not be taken up just now, because the matter of widening to relieve traffic congestion immediately is considered of more pressing importance.

Property owners around Baker and Peachtree Streets also have a plan for cutting off the corners at that point so as to give more room for traffic. This plan will also be taken up later. The proposition is to shave off the front of Dr. J. R. Hopkins' lot at the southeast corner of Baker and Peachtree and take some of the Goldsmith front, controlled by E. W. Alfriend, at the northeast corner. This improvement would serve to reduce the curve of Peachtree and to make it possible for vehicles to pass without danger between cars and corners.

Sidewalks between Harris and Baker on Peachtree have already been widened and it is to further this scheme that the citizens' committee will petition the finance committee. It is estimated that the preliminary work can be done for $5,000, and that it can be accomplished in a short time and without closing the street.

The finance committee considered Monday morning the Whitehall regrade matter, when a number of prominent citizens were heard. Among the speakers was Sam Inman, V. H. Kriegshaber, Walker Dunson and others. No opposition developed, and the advocates of the project anticipate that the plan will be finally approved.

E. V. Moore's Change.

E. V. Moore, formerly general agent of the National Life and Accident Insurance Company and the Interstate Casualty Company, has formed a connection with Porter & Swift, the well-known real estate agents. During his short service as salesman he has made several interesting sales.

To Open Up West Tenth Street.

The proposition to extend the West Peachtree car line from Sixth Street to Tenth, west on Tenth to State and out State to the steel works, is considered in real estate circles to have considerable significance. The entire section west of West Peachtree and north of Sixth is undergoing a rapid development as a residence neighborhood, and it is pointed out that car-line facilities are badly needed. Announcement has been made recently of extensive subdivision work in the neighborhood affected, and more improvements, it is said, will come with the car service.

Interest in Art Gallery.

Several real estate men got busy Monday morning planning a location for Atlanta's proposed $250,000 art gallery, anticipating that possibly it might be deemed desirable to put the institution on private property. The first plan suggested was to put the building on the site of the old Government structure at Piedmont Park, and Haralson Bleckley, well-known architect and author of the Bleckley Plaza plan, drew blueprints for the same. The gallery will cover an extensive territory, and the ground provided for it will be valuable.

For Public Market Site.

Revival of the discussion of a public market, where citizens of Atlanta can buy on a co-operative basis, has attracted the attention of Atlanta real estate men through the possibilities it offers in the way of a site for a location. In nearly every case where a big enterprise is seeking to locate, the realty men find a desirable place. The proposal is to have a bond issue of $500,000 to buy a 200 by 300 foot site and to erect a $250,000 building. Several land brokers declared, however, that they thought this too high a price to pay for a site, and that they could furnish sites for half that amount. A thousand dollars a front foot, said a prominent lease man, will buy a mighty good location for a public market, and it will be close to the center of activities.

A Merchant Marine Becomes a Vital Necessity

Congress is Alone to Blame for the Neglect to Build Up a Great, Powerful, Progressive and Prosperous American Merchant Marine in Foreign Trade.

The lack of American merchant ships for the ordinary needs of our Government has been strikingly impressed upon the attention of the new Administration.

Recent developments made it necessary for the Government to secure possession of a considerable number of American merchantmen. They were needed as a precautionary measure, to insure preparedness against any sudden eventuality in which foreign ships could not be used.

THE PITIFULLY SMALL SUPPLY OF SUCH AMERICAN VESSELS BOTH ASTOUNDED AND ALARMED THE GOVERNMENT. Most of the few American vessels that are available are old, in many respects inadequate, and scarcely any of these measure up to urgent needs.

Not only are American merchantmen few and inefficient, but it is found that, even if American ships were now available in large numbers, THERE IS NO CORRESPONDING NUMBER OF TRAINED AND EXPERIENCED AMERICAN MASTERS, OFFICERS AND SEAMEN IMMEDIATELY OBTAINABLE.

The possibly grave consequence of our utter dependence upon foreign merchant ships, their officers and men, who would be unavailable for national needs in time of war, is causing the greatest uneasiness and concern.

American merchant ships, their officers and men, are required in times of emergency for scout purposes, for auxiliary cruisers, to carry troops, coal and ammunition supplies, and for a thousand and one needs for which warships would be neither desirable nor available.

These are serious problems for a new Administration so suddenly to face, and their satisfactory solution is difficult, if not impossible, at the moment.

CONGRESS IS ALONE TO BLAME FOR THE NEGLECT TO BUILD UP A GREAT, POWERFUL, PROGRESSIVE AND PROSPEROUS AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

THE PUNY PROVISION IN THE PENDING TARIFF BILL to merely make a beginning in the upbuilding of American shipping should be and is likely to be so strengthened and buttressed in the Senate as to lay a broad and solid foundation for the establishment of an effective and enduring American maritime policy.

The little so far provided has provoked the impudent protests of foreign nations that are determined to prevent, if they can, the maritime independence of the United States. The present conditions are far too useful and too profitable for these foreign monopolists to willingly relinquish.

EVERY NATIONAL INSTINCT OF PRESERVATION AND PROSPERITY SHOULD IMPEL CONGRESS TO IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Should steps be taken at once to remedy our intolerable dependence upon foreign merchant shipping, it will take years for the United States to reach a state of efficient preparedness in American merchant ships, officers and men, for either the ordinary or the emergency requirements of our Government and the peaceful transportation of our imports and exports. It is high time to make a beginning.

We have discovered shortcomings in several important particulars in naval equipment. BUT NOTHING HAS SO PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSED THE GOVERNMENT AT THIS TIME AS THE PRESSING NEED OF A GREAT AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, WISELY REGARDED AND OFFICIALLY STATED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON AS "ESSENTIAL TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE."

It would indeed be thoughtless and cowardly if, in this crisis in American affairs, the sinister protests of foreign governments against immediate and adequate legislative provision for the upbuilding of American deep sea shipping should receive the slightest consideration.

Are Women as Foolish as Men?

"We were introduced at a restaurant and four days later we were married and the next day he deserted me and ran away with $4,000 worth of my jewelry and money." This is the unvarnished narrative told by a woman who had a man arrested out west the other day.

This same woman would watch the iceman like a hawk, for fear he would give her only eight cents worth of ice instead of the ten cents worth she paid for. She would inspect her grocery and butcher bill, and the laundress does not wash who could get a penny ahead of her at the Monday suds festival. She submits her agent's reports as to rents or investments to the family lawyer, and she even keeps a shrewd and questioning eye on the lawyer himself.

But she meets a man in a restaurant, hearkens to his story that he is the temporarily embarrassed heir to a million or two, and hands herself and her fortune over to him without as much care as she bestows on the inspection of the chicken she buys for the family dinner.

Ordinarily the victim of the sort of sharper who despoiled the woman quoted above is not an ignorant, unsophisticated girl; on the contrary, she is commonly a mature woman, and not infrequently one who has had one or two whirls at the matrimonial lottery.

When we shake our heads at the credulity of such women we should not ascribe their misfortune to the feminine type of mind.

Remember, when you feel how superior men are to that sort of deception, that the gold-brick swindle and the green goods game, the Spanish prisoner trap and wire-tapping delusion continue year after year to earn fortunes for the rogues who have the hardihood to perpetrate them.

There are lots of foolish women in the world—almost as many as foolish men.

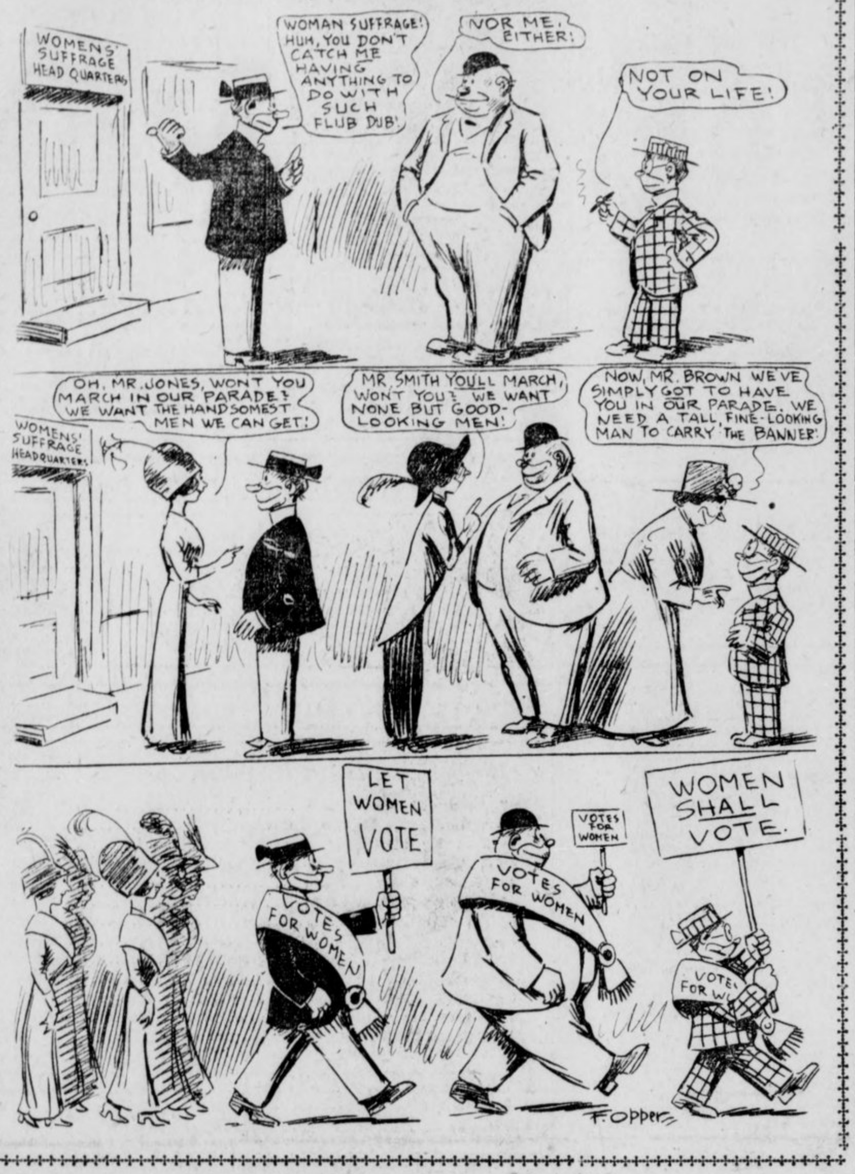
A Little Flattery Will Make a Man Do Anything



What Do You Like to Read About?

By WINIFRED BLACK.

"WHAT do you like to read about?" said the Man to me.

I stared. "I mean," said the Man, "what sort of folks—people in castles, with retainers and 'heirs' birthdays,' or people on yachts, with butlers and valets, or people out West, with Sheriffs and bad men dropping in to supper, and the wind blowing in from the desert and the coyotes yelping on the great red mountains in the dusky distance?"

"Oh," said I, "I don't like any of those people. I like folks—just plain folks. No, not 'folksy folks' with dialects—the women, with shawls on their heads that run in and gossip all about 'What made Maria stay an old maid so long?' and 'Who's goin' to git Mirandy, now Si's gone?' bore me to tears; and I can't bear the fair young schoolma'am who goes out West and makes the biggest boy fall in love with her, and then they go back home to visit, and he shocks the whole village by saying 'Darn it!' and wearing a red cowboy handkerchief instead of a collar.

Maids Don't Worry Me.

"I like to read about the sort of people I know myself, every day in the week—the woman with the fussy husband; the woman with the boy she hopes will be a genius, and he turns out to be just a lazy dreamer; the woman with the little girl who won't take music lessons, no matter how she tries to make her; the man with the business down-town, and the rival over the way trying to take it away from him; the girl on the stage who plays real parts and gets real criticisms; the newspaper man who doesn't beat the town the very first time he goes out on a story; the people who have comfy homes and a decent picture or two, and a lot of good books and some dogs, and either children or the hope of children.

"No, I don't care for butlers in mine, though if the butler belongs in the story I don't mind him at all; I only hate to have him dragged in by the heels to prove that the man who employs him really is no end of a swell.

"Valets? Yes, a valet is all right, if he isn't insisted on. Lots of fairly every-day men have valets—actors and musicians and other helpless creatures.

"Maids don't worry me—nor chauffeurs—as long as they stay discreetly in the background, but I must say secretaries and nursery governesses and under-gardeners and special trains and too many yachts do disconcert me a little. I always have to stop and add up what it would cost to have an establishment like that, and that interferes with the plot.

"No, I hate the Dickey and the Algy story, with the 'little gell in white' and her managing mama. I never can quite believe there are such helpless geese in the world as that little gell, and if I knew anyone like the 'managing mama' I'd have her locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

"Yes, it's folks I like—everyday folks—plain Americans, with plain American troubles and plain American joys, like buying a machine after you've saved for it for a year; and Daughter's graduating essay; and Son's first love affair.

The Chocolate-Cream Age.

"That's why I always choose a woman's stories, all other things being equal, I guess."

"The man looked at me more in sorrow than in anger. "Are all women like you?" he said. "I don't believe it. I believe they like to read about ropes of pearls and strings of emeralds and cables of real coral—and gowns of filmy lace—or 3——"

"That's the chocolate-cream age," I said. "They do, of course. That's because they are always hoping they'll be one of those heroines themselves some day, and they want to have the fun of planning their filmy gowns and thinking how sweet they'll look in the ropes and chains and things. When the woman is past wanting to read about people like herself, it heals her to realize that she isn't the only human being who has trouble keeping the expense accounts within scolding limits. What do you like to read about, Mr. Man?"

The man took a long pull on his pipe. "I like to read about damsels fair, and shady bowers, and nodding violets, and dashing cavaliers," he said, "and noble heroes, and soldiers of fortune—and quests, and all that. If anyone dares to hand me a book about 'How I Made My Money' or 'What I Did to Down the Lemon Trust' I'll make him wish he'd committed suicide that time he almost wanted to."

And then we both began to reconsider and talk it over, and we both decided that we really don't care so much about who the hero of the story was. The main thing is, who wrote it?

There's Bret Harte. He could take a bank clerk and cast such a sparkling veil of romance about him that his every pen flourish would mean sentiment. And as for the common little red-haired person he fell in love with—why, she'd be a wood nymph, a fairy, a siren from the cool green sea, even if she lived in a hall bedroom and ate 'weenies' and chocolate for supper.

Cable! Do you ever hunt up Cable's houses down in New Orleans? Dirty old tumble-down places, seen with everyday eyes. Look through the magic glasses of Cable, and you're in Elysia, the land of fair women and brave men. There's even something romantic about a piece of candied lemon peel when the right sort of man tells about it.

It Isn't the Subject.

No, it isn't the subject; it's the way it is handled, after all, we agreed, the man and I. There's so and so, the special writer on the Daily Enterprise. He'd write about a fire in a boiler factory, and make you hold your breath to find out whether the Maltese cat got out alive or not. And there's his brother on the Daily Scream, would tell the story of a plot to assassinate every beautiful woman in America, and keep you yawning all the way through. It isn't the story; it isn't the people in the story—it's the writer that matters.

"But still," said I to the Man, "all things being equal, I want folks in my stories—folks that I know."

"Gossip," said the man. And we both went and got our own particular kind of book and settled down to our own particular kind of evening, and were perfectly satisfied. What fun it is to talk these things over once in a while! Isn't it?

Awake at Last to Navy's Needs

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

COL. GRAVES.

THERE are substantial evidences of a reviving patriotism and common sense in the American Congress toward the American navy.

When Secretary Daniels was banqueted week before last in Savannah one of the speakers was Congressman Edwards, of the Savannah district. Mr. Edwards has been heretofore apathetic, if not openly antagonistic, to the ample navy program. On this latest occasion he said that, however indifferent and economic his views had been toward the navy, the recent international interchanges with Japan had opened his eyes and fixed him definitely and firmly as an advocate and champion of a greater navy.

Others Changed.

"Henceforth," said Mr. Edwards, "if the naval experts of the Government advise Congress that we need three battleships, or four battleships, or even five, I am for the navy and whatever it needs to defend our country. The anxieties aroused by our unpreparedness against Japan must never be repeated in America."

Savannah is one of the ultra-conservative cities of the South, and Congressman Edwards is notably conservative, cautious and economical. His complete conversion is in the highest degree significant of the awakening of Congress.

It is even so with Congressman Poor, of the Raleigh District of North Carolina, Secretary Daniels' district.

Mr. Poor has also been among the conservatives on the naval program of the House. The Japanese contention and the developments of our naval unpreparedness, as exposed by the Hearst newspapers, have aroused the North Carolinan to the perils of an undefended country and the necessity for a navy ample for our Western and Eastern Coasts. He is openly and heartily for the ample navy.

On the lips of scores of anti-navy Congressmen there are expressions similar to these. It is actually true that the naval information and comparisons developed by the recent international controversy have changed the spirit of the national Congress on this vital question of the national defense.

The American Congress and the American people have slept for years upon the idea that our "splendid isolation" protected our country, and that in case of war our navy and army were equal to every demand of defense and offense. Congress and some of the people have had the same feeling toward foreign nations that the South had toward the North preceding the Civil War. "One Southerner can whip a dozen Yankees," said some.

One Southern statesman declared in a public speech, "Why, we can whip the Yankees with popguns!" Challenged upon this assertion after the war was over, the orator responded: "Well, so we could, but the d—d fellows wouldn't fight that way!"

Awake at Last.

Our country has waked up at last to the fact that it is not immune from war, that it is not invincible in war, that it is not prepared for war.

The awakening will do us good. It is worth this flurry with Japan to have educated the American people and their representatives to an understanding of our real condition and of our national dangers.

I feel that the Hearst newspapers have performed a signal and patriotic service in helping to this national understanding. These newspapers can be indifferent to any criticism of sensationalism in the consciousness that more than any other American newspapers they have taught the people something about their navy.

Public opinion is coming to stand for the idea that preparedness in war is the best promoter of peace. The long centuries of exemption from attack that England's great navy has bought for England is teaching our people that they have a right to expect from their representatives just such an insurance policy against war.

Gatling Philosophy.

The treason of Congress against the Navy is not likely to be repeated in this generation.

The policy of national preparedness also pervades our national officials—always excepting Mr. Bryan, whose "doves" and "swans" and "flowers of rhetoric" delight the Chautauquas.

Secretary Daniels said to Mr. Gatling, of the Gatling gun: "Are you not conscience smitten over your invention? Do not your guns keep you from sleeping because of the people they have destroyed and may destroy?"

To which Mr. Gatling answered:

"My guns have saved more lives than they have ever destroyed. The existence of them and the knowledge of their destructiveness keep nations from war and mobs from bloody riots. The Gatling gun is a peace-maker."

And Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, is tremendously impressed just now with the Gatling philosophy.

Perhaps we shall have national cause to thank Japan and the Hearst newspapers!

How Opening of the Panama Canal Will Aid Historical Research

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AFTER the Panama Canal is opened we may begin to learn the true history of Ancient America.

Many readers may be unaware that this new world, as we call it, contains one of the oldest of all historical mysteries, and, in fact the very oldest if as some maintain, it forms a direct connection with the story of the lost continent of Atlantis.

Buried in the tropical jungles of Central America there are the ruins of once splendid cities, whose remains of a gigantic architecture are covered with hieroglyphics more puzzling than those of ancient Egypt, for no man has yet succeeded in discovering a complete key to their meaning. They guard their secret more jealously than the Sphinx.

Ruins of Temples.

Their origin is ascribed to a practically vanished race called the Mayas, related to the Aztec of Montezuma's Empire, but far excelling the ancient Mexicans in everything except warlike power. The ruins of their temples at Palenque, Copan, Peten and elsewhere, excite the wonder of the traveler, and contain some of the most beautiful and elaborate carving that can anywhere be found.

They had not only an exquisite picture language, but also a written language, of which undecipherable manuscripts yet exist.

They built about forty towns, connected by stone-paved roads. They had a postal system, conducted by means of swift-footed carriers who ran from town to town over the paved roadways. Sometimes they were at war with one another, and then armies marched to battle on the same roads.

They were skillful agriculturists, and cultivated broad fields, which are now overgrown with mossy trees and tangled vines and shrubs. They raised cotton and wove it into garments.

They made beautiful ornaments of gold and semi-precious stones, and were more skillful even than the Aztecs in feather work.

The designs carved on their buildings and ornamental, or symbolic, structures are of great beauty and astonishing perfection in detail. They covered the walls of rooms with brilliant paintings on stucco.

They Have Vanished.

Strange to say, the people believed to be descended from these Mayas are unable to throw any light upon the history of their supposed ancestors.

All their civilization has vanished, and with it, apparently, all memory of the ancient splendors of the race.

Some of the figures carved by the Mayas bear such striking resemblance to similar things found in the ancient ruins of the Old

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

World that the suggestion has been made that a connection formerly existed across the Atlantic Ocean, and this is the origin of the theory that the ancestors of the Mayas dwelt on the fabled continent of Atlantis, which Plato heard had been sunk in the western ocean ages before his time.

One of the strangest facts about the ancient land of the Mayas has recently been called to attention by Dr. Ellsworth Huntington. It is this: At present the whole district possesses a climate so warm, moist and debilitating that it is almost the worst place on the globe for human habitation.

The ruins of the ancient cities, instead of lying amid deserts, and under a burning sun, as happens with most of the abandoned capitals of the East, are so overgrown with tangled vegetation and enveloped in feverstricken swamps that some of them are nearly unapproachable.

The conclusion is that within the past two thousand years, a vast change of climate has occurred in that part of America, and that in the days of Mayan civilization the earth's climatic zones were shifted in such a manner that the land occupied by this remarkable people enjoyed very different atmospheric conditions from those that prevail there now.

Peten, one of their most important cities, which has not yet been well explored on account of the difficulties of approach, lies in the midst of a region which is, at present, very sparsely peopled, and where it would be impossible to cultivate the land as it was cultivated in the days of the Mayas.

May Be Read in Full.

Only by such a supposition, it is thought, can a rational explanation be found for the fact that the highest native civilization that this continent had developed before the white man came, was centered about a location which is now a deadened and almost uninhabitable wilderness.

When the Panama Canal has become a great highway, and the attention of the world has been turned upon its surroundings, fresh light is likely to be thrown upon this fascinating mystery.

Then the Mayan hieroglyphics may be read in full, and a hidden chapter of American history thrown open.

MR. BRYAN'S TOAST

Editor The Georgian:

You devote much of your space to Mr. Bryan. Will you please reproduce a portion of his toast at the Army and Navy Club, given at the farewell banquet to the Commissioners from Great Britain and Canada? Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: I have delivered three addresses of welcome to our visitors, but will have but one word of farewell, and that is in keeping with the environment which surrounds us this morning. We are met in the building of the Army and Navy Club, and the fact that we are the guests of those who represent those two arms of the Government suggests the thought which I present in bidding you adieu. While we are the advocates of peace, we are really engaged in the construction of a battleship which is to be the very culmination—the climax—of the seaman's art. Man has been engaged in the construction of water craft since the flapping sail first whispered its secret of strength to the voyager. He has designed vessels for pleasure, for commerce and for war. We have had the galley, the viking's ship, the frigate, the ironclad and the dreadnought. But no limit can be placed to the ambitions of man as a builder, and I ask you to join me in proposing a toast to a ship more potent than any which man has thus far employed in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart, its shells are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.

STATE FACES BIG TASK IN TRIAL OF FRANK

Prosecution, in Evidence Made Public, Has Not Directly Connected Him With Slaying.

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as conclusive as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual eyewitnessth of the crime, this question naturally is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the mystery, and that means practically every person in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the close-lipped and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even at this early date, when only the vaguest of hints have been given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion, it is patent that there are many openings offered the defense for attacks upon the theories of the State.

Burden of Proof on State.

Those who are close to the daily developments in Atlanta's baffling murder mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered are bearing in mind that, in the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution and not upon the defense.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law has hedged under suspicion of crime, that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime or establish his connection beyond a reasonable doubt.

Until the State is able to do this, Luther Z. Rosser may rest on his oars if he so desires. Leo Frank is innocent this moment in the eyes of the law. His innocence does not need to be proved. It is presumed.

It immediately becomes a question, therefore, as to whether the State really has made out a case against Frank, so far as can be judged from the evidence in the hands of the public. Have the detectives by any of their discoveries connected Frank directly with the crime? Have they assembled such a chain of circumstantial incidents as to make his guilt appear certain beyond a reasonable doubt?

Frank's Friends Deny Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank answer both questions emphatically in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence seriously.

The law will not permit Frank's conviction for the crime merely because the detectives have discovered that he had the opportunity. It will not permit his conviction, if no convincing evidence is found against him, merely because he is unable to put his hands on another man and say, "This is the man you want. He is the guilty person."

It is not the intention of the law to hang one man simply because no one else can be found who is the more likely culprit.

After the State has presented its reasons for believing in the guilt of Frank, it is regarded as likely that the defense will claim first of all that the State has failed to establish Frank's connection with the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The defense will represent that the most the State has done is to establish that he had the opportunity to commit the murder.

Frank never was seen with the girl, either on the day of the strangling or before. It is not known that he ever

47 Tried for Gaming; 3 Held by Recorder

What Recorder Pro Tem Preston termed the "record trial since this court was organized" was held Monday afternoon when the 47 men arrested in a raid on the Continental Club faced him. They were charged with gambling.

Evidence was found against three—Ira Soubliss, George Jaffas and Charlie Truffa—who were held under $200 bond. The proprietor, Jim Poulos, was held under $5,000 bond on charges of running a disorderly house, gambling house, tippling house and keeping open on Sunday. The place was ordered closed.

The majority of the men arrested were Greeks.

Virginians Claim 'Light Horse' Lee

ROANOKE, VA., May 27.—A committee of the Virginia Legislature is on its way to Georgia to-day for the purpose of bringing to his native State the remains of Henry Lee, better known as "Light Horse Harry Lee," the father of General Robert E. Lee.

General Lee died at Savannah on his return journey from Cuba, where he had been on account of his health. He was buried on Cumberland Island, near that city, and his grave has since been cared for by the Georgia Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution.

Swallows Poison as Walker Did; Saved

ORLANDO, FLA., May 27.—That bichloride of mercury is not always fatal was demonstrated here when S. Walters Howe, cashier of the State National Bank, swallowed a tablet, mistaking it for a headache dose.

As the tablet passed down his throat it contracted the muscles so violently that he discovered his mistake and hurried to the city physician, who at once used the stomach pump and gave antidotes. Howe has experienced no harm.

LONDON, May 27.—Walter H. Page, the United States Ambassador to Great Britain, had no sooner reached London than he was asked by some English reporters concerning a report that he would refuse to wear knee breeches at Court. His answer was terse and pointed:

"Why do you ask me such a question? You surely don't want me to think that the imagination of a fool across the ocean begets more fools in London?"

$6,000,000 Mission Fund Baptist Plan

DETROIT, MICH., May 27.—The fifth annual report of the general apportionment committee, which included a recommendation that the convention make the raising of $6,000,000 for missions annually the ultimate objective, was presented to the Northern Baptist Convention in session here.

The recommendation was approved.

Governor on Guard On Wall of Prison

PHOENIX, ARIZ., May 27.—Armed with rifle and revolver as regulations require, Governor George W. P. Hunt mounted guard on the penitentiary wall at Florence for two hours yesterday.

The convicts and their regular guards were enjoying a concert by vaudeville performers in the prison mess hall.

Kahn Urges Plan to Strengthen Army

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An army reserve created by one-year enlistments is advocated by Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, who declared to-day he believed Japan's pugnacious attitude was due to the knowledge that few American men have even the rudiments of military training.

Kahn advocates an enlistment of one year of active service and three years in the reserve.

GAMBLER'S PLOT, SAYS LANFORD IN DEFY

Detective Chief Accuses "Ring" of Trying to Fix Charge of Bribery Against Him.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford gave out a sensational statement Tuesday morning in which he charged that the efforts to fix accusations of bribery and malfeasance upon him were inspired by a "gambling ring," of which C. C. Jones was the head.

The cause of the fight against Lanford had been something of a mystery. Beavers readily explained the efforts to dispossess him from the office of Chief of Police by his war on vice in the city of Atlanta. Lanford's explanation reveals another angle of the crusade against a wide-open town.

"The gambling ring has been after me ever since I was made head of the detective department ten years ago," said Chief Lanford. "No more had I declared relentless warfare upon all forms of gambling in the city than I was notified that the gambling interests were out to 'get' me. Several times it was reported to me that I had been marked for an attack, and once the gamblers succeeded in carrying out heir threats.

"That was five years ago. I was reduced from sergeant, which was the designation of the head of the department then, to service in the ranks. The gamblers were responsible for it. They gloated for nine months. Then I was raised to my former position again, with the title of chief. Since then I have continued my campaign against them.

"They have been very bitter. They have threatened me time and again. Now they have brought these charges against me."

Georgia Hardware Men Here Wednesday

More than a hundred hardware men are looked for in Atlanta Tuesday and Wednesday for the annual convention of the Georgia Retail Hardware Men's Association.

Sessions will be held at the Auditorium, beginning Wednesday morning and will continue through Thursday and Friday. Several of the largest hardware manufacturers of the State will have exhibits.

Officers of the association are: President, T. G. Greene, Eatonton; first vice president, J. R. Hall, Moultrie; second vice president, J. E. Sapp, Albany; secretary and treasurer, J. L. Moore, Madison.

Liners Crippled in Crash Reach Port

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

CORUNNA, SPAIN, May 27.—With her bow plates broken, a big hole in the port side and her hold full of water the steamer Taitus, which collided with the British ship Inca yesterday, arrived in port here to-day.

VIGO, SPAIN, May 27.—The British passenger liner Inca, which was in collision off the Spanish Coast with the Taitus yesterday, arrived in port here to-day with her bows stove in and her forepeak full of water.

Would Tax Movies For French Defense

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 27.—M. Dumont, Minister of Finance, has proposed to the budget committee of the Chamber of Deputies that the moving picture shows be taxed to help pay for the increased national defenses.

He said he expected that $1,000,000 could be raised in this way.

Fears for Safety Of Missing Husband

Out at Blackwells a wistful little woman and her two babies are longing for the return of husband and father, who disappeared April 17. C. B. Allen is the man, and the fact that he loved his family so well causes the saddened wife to believe he has met with foul play.

Mrs. Allen is heart-broken over her husband's disappearance. She has requested the newspapers to aid in the search.

"Please make a note of this in the papers," is Mrs. Allen's request. "Perhaps he will see it and know that his wife is heart-broken, and let her and his babies know where he is."

Eisenfeldt Case Is Postponed 30 Days

The case against Mrs. Julia Eisenfeldt, proprietor of the Walton Inn, arrested following the complaint of a man that he had been robbed of a small sum of money in her house, was continued for 30 days, the man making the complaint being too ill to appear in court Monday.

Mrs. Eisenfeldt is the woman accused by E. O. Miles of paying money for police protection. Mrs. Eisenfeldt denies the accusation.

CRAWLS THROUGH LONG PIPE.

COLUMBUS, IND., May 27.—Thomas Hardin crawled through 630 feet of 20-inch water pipe, leading from the water works to the new filter building seeking obstructions in the main. When he emerged the skin was worn from each of his elbows.

Women Can't Ride Astride in U. C. V. Parade

Edict Arouses Fair Equestriennes at the Reunion

Veterans Cheer U. S. Regulars in First of Street Marches at Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 27. Confederate veterans, sponsors, maids and visitors to the annual Confederate reunion are exercised to-day over whether women shall ride astride in the reunion parades. General J. P. Hickman's order that only side saddles for women shall be permitted has caused the stir, and this promises to become an issue overshadowing the real business of the convention of veterans.

General Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division, is grand marshal of the veterans' parade. Although he issued his order last week that women should not ride astride, it was not until the visitors had begun to gather yesterday and to-day that real opposition to it became pronounced.

This opposition comes largely from sponsors and maids who had planned to don divided skirts or riding trousers and sit on their steeds like men, and Sons of Veterans chosen as their escorts.

Order Will Stand.

But for every opposing voice there is one commending General Hickman's decree, the approval coming from veterans and their wives and some of the younger generation who do not approve of the present-day style. To-day the indications are that General Hickman's order will stand and that in the veterans' parade at least side saddles alone will be permitted on women's mounts.

The first of the reunion parades took place this morning at 9 o'clock, when the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort Oglethorpe, on the edge of the Chickamauga battlefield national park, marched through the downtown streets of Chattanooga in full dress uniform and equipment.

Cheer U. S. Troops.

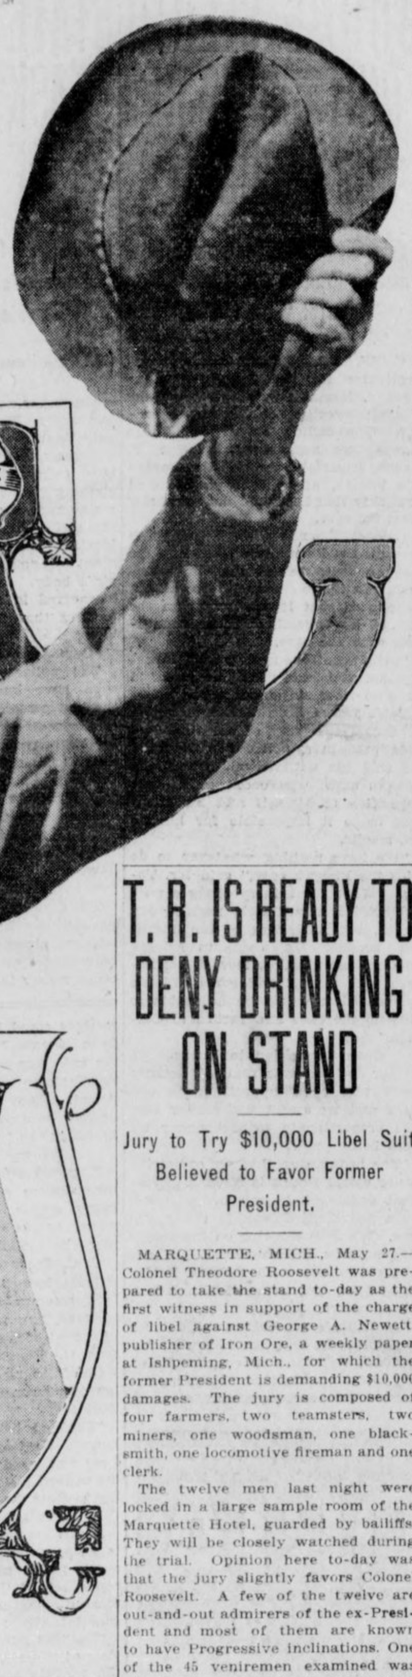
The old veterans of the gray cheered the Government troops despite the fact that they wore the blue uniform that 50 years ago the men of the South so bitterly hated. It was a notable illustration that this is again a united country and sectional lines are fast being obliterated.

A half-hour later a short business session was held by the Sons of Confedearte Veterans, after which came the formal opening of the reunion by the veterans.

This afternoon business sessions will be held by the Veterans, Sons of Veterans and Confederate Memorial Association.

To-night the big social functions that will mark the reunion will begin.

J. E. Maddox, of 37 Richardson Street, one of the Atlanta veterans off for the reunion at Chattanooga.



Charges Attempt To Blind Him; Sues

Asserting that W. M. Henry tried to put his eyes out with an umbrella, O. M. Sutton has filed suit in the Superior Court against Henry for $2,500 damages.

Sutton alleges that Henry showered blows on him with the umbrella; jabbed the end of the umbrella into the back of his neck, into his stomach and against his back; threw him into a corner; beat him and then dragged him out and tried to poke the umbrella point into his eyes.

T. R. IS READY TO DENY DRINKING ON STAND

Jury to Try $10,000 Libel Suit Believed to Favor Former President.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 27.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt was prepared to take the stand to-day as the first witness in support of the charge of libel against George A. Newett, publisher of Iron Ore, a weekly paper at Ishpeming, Mich., for which the former President is demanding $10,000 damages. The jury is composed of four farmers, two teamsters, two miners, one woodsman, one blacksmith, one locomotive fireman and one clerk.

The twelve men last night were locked in a large sample room of the Marquette Hotel, guarded by bailiffs. They will be closely watched during the trial. Opinion here to-day was that the jury slightly favors Colonel Roosevelt. A few of the twelve are out-and-out admirers of the ex-President and most of them are known to have Progressive inclinations. One of the 45 veniremen examined was about to be accepted as a juror when it was discovered he was wearing a Bull Moose button.

Colonel Roosevelt planned to make a sweeping denial of the charge contained in an Iron Ore editorial that he frequently was intoxicated. Attorneys for Newett have hinted that some surprises were in store. Most of the witnesses brought here to testify for Roosevelt will be used to contradict testimony offered by Newett's counsel.

FELDER AIDE OFFERS VICE LIST TO CHIEF

Attorney Carl Hutcheson Accuses Beavers of Permitting Unlawful Houses to Operate.

Carl Hutcheson, a young lawyer connected with the firm of Felder, Anderson, Whitman & Dillon, has written an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers, charging him with permitting unlawful houses to operate on certain city streets and promising to give addresses if the Chief asks personally for them within three days.

On Monday morning Chief Beavers declared Attorney Thomas B. Felder had no evidence of police cognizance of immoral resorts; that he never had had any, and that he was only bluffing when he said he had. Requested to reply, Colonel Felder announced he would make no more statements except in writing, and that he had nothing to say then.

Regarded as Reply.

A few hours later Mr. Hutcheson, a member of Colonel Felder's firm, issued the letter, which is regarded as a semi-official reply from Colonel Felder.

Mr. Hutcheson formerly was a newspaper man. Shortly after taking up the practice of law he achieved State-wide renown by conducting the campaign of William Schley Howard, who defeated Representative Leonidas Livingston and is now serving his second term in Congress.

Following is Mr. Hutcheson's open letter to Chief J. L. Beavers:

Scores Vice Crusade.

J. L. Beavers, Chief of Police, Atlanta:
Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives, Atlanta:

In your great crusade against Sodom and Gomorrah with your immaculate robes of Puritanism,

I accuse you in all your glory with allowing certain houses on Ivy Street, the business of which is to barter in immoral and indecent practices, to continue in flagrant operation. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, every sensible citizen of this city, who knows anything of the world, does. If you do not know these things, it is your duty to know, and you should be discharged from your high pedestals for dereliction.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on certain parts of Spring Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate in a certain section of Pryor Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on a certain section of Central Avenue. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Alleges Gambling Place.

I accuse you of failing to take cognizance of a certain house in Ivy Street, to which I called your attention several weeks ago, where young men were inveigled to gamble away their money, the mistress thereof being the banker and the recipient of these ill-gotten gains. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you and numbers of your forces with being cognizant of these facts, and yet you, the great crusade leaders, stand idly by and fold your lordly hands.

I accuse you with allowing, even yet, low class hotels in this city to exist and practice their nefarious games of lowly gain, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

If you can not "turn up" these places, there are hundreds of people who can. I can use infantile detective work and turn up dozens of them within a few days, AND YOU KNOW THIS CAN BE DONE. And, if you fail to get busy and continue to parade your great genius (?) you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Charges Police Protection.

I accuse you with protecting these places because of your lax methods in keeping "the houses within our midst" closed, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of closing Mary hattan Avenue and converting our entire municipality into a "red light" district. AND YOU KNOW IT, and unless you change conditions at once you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of retaining on your forces men unfit to protect the "decent" citizens of Atlanta. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of knowing where numbers of houses which exist by immoral practices are located. AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Do you think that the public will be hoodwinked forever? Do you think that the public is so gullible as to believe all of this "bush-wah" about the great work that you are continuing? Yes, you closed Manhattan Avenue, but what did you do for the remainder of the city?

You and your bunch are very sore because you were unable to ferret out the Phagan murder, AND YOU KNOW IT. When the Solicitor General called in outside aid, numbers of your hirelings were very much perturbed and became insanely jealous. That is why all of this patched-up and patched-up bunch of lies and slanders have been issued against Thomas B. Felder, whose shoes you are unworthy to untie, AND YOU KNOW IT.

I accuse you of retaining a large number of leather-heads for detectives. Detectives? That is a joke, isn't it? AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for allowing such an army of incompetents to work with your departments. You know, and I know, that these fellows secure their offices through political pull and not through efficiency. They are Sherlock Holmeses when it comes to arresting blind tigers and negro crap-players, but beyond that they would not know a clew if they saw it tagged.

In the Phagan case, the newspaper men are the ones who turned up the first clews of any merit, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be ashamed of that crowd down there to allow the members of the Fourth Estate to put one over on you; but you know newspaper men have brains, and brains are required to make detectives.

Now, volley forth again your promulgation of purity and tell the people of this great city what large men you are and how you protect the citizenry of this great Commonwealth.

If you haven't the addresses of the houses to which I refer, call at my office within three days and I will give you a bunch of them.

Friends of mine have advised me against printing this card. Some have feared for my life—but afraid of you and your crowd? Never. I am not afraid of anything that lays down its firearms and comes at me like a man in fair play. Now, "lay on, MacDuff, and damn'd be him who first cries, 'Hold! Enough!'"

CARL HUTCHESON.
Atlanta, Ga., May 27, 1913.

Col. Felder Still Probing In the Phagan Case.

In the news columns of The Georgian yesterday it was said that Colonel Felder had been eliminated from the Phagan case. Colonel Felder says this is not true, that he is as deeply interested in solving the mystery as ever, and that he is lending every energy in that direction. The further statement in The Georgian that Colonel Felder was believed at one time to be interested in the defense of Frank was not intended to reflect in any way upon the lawyer. It was simply the gossip of the street, given for what it was worth. Colonel Felder's own statement that he is working solely for the public good makes his position perfectly clear, and everybody in the city will hope that he will continue actively in the case until the great mystery is disposed of.

BURNS SLEUTH QUITS; SAYS HE IS OPPOSED

Tobie Gives Out Statement Intimating Frank's Guilt—Has No Quarrel With Police.

C. W. Tobie, chief criminal investigator for the Burns Detective Agency, formally withdrew from the Phagan investigation Tuesday morning. The calling off of the Burns forces was announced by Dan P. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch, after Tobie had stated explicitly that he would not withdraw from the case.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who brought the Burns detectives into the Phagan case, would make no statement relative to their withdrawal, but announced that it did not mean the end of his investigation or connection with the case.

"I shall continue my personal investigation as in the past," he said. "I have no other statement to make."

Tobie issued a statement in which he denied that any of his time had been used in a police investigation. He said his withdrawal from the Phagan case was because of open opposition to himself and his client that made it impossible for him to get results.

"We have nothing whatever to do with the Phagan case," said Mr. Tobie. "When the bribery charges were published I immediately notified Mr. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch. He came to Atlanta Monday morning. After a conference with myself and some officials he decided it would be adyisable to give up the case and return to Chicago."

Open Opposition to Burns.

"Our decision was reached because there was open opposition to our work and we could not render service proportionate to the money we were being paid."

"The insinuation that we are striving to shield Frank is absurd. From what developed in my investigation I am convinced Frank is the guilty man. We were working on the theory that he was the murderer. In my first conference with Colonel Felder he said he, too, believed Frank was the murderer.

"In Lehon's conference with Solicitor Dorsey he told Mr. Lehon he had evidence sufficient to convict Frank and he did not see that the Burns detectives could be of any great benefit in the case, hampered as they were. He said our work had been entirely satisfactory to him and had been efficient. Many features unearthed by us had been overlooked by the other investigators."

Bribery hCarge Denied.

Rumored attempts to bribe witnesses were given strong denial in many circles, particularly by those whose names were connected by rumor with the alleged bribery attempts.

C. C. Sears, superintendent of the Atlanta branch of the Burns detectives, communicated to Chief of Detectives Lanford the announcement of the withdrawal of the Burns forces from the Phagan case.

Chief Lanford authorized the following statement on the departure of Tobie:

"Tobie, I believe, is straight and honest. He was victimized by Felder. I am convinced Mr. Tobie was working toward the interest of those seeking to clear the mystery."

Praises Superintendent.

A girl employee of the pencil factory has written the following statement, which upholds the working conditions of the factory and champions the character of the imprisoned superintendent:

"Nothing has ever been said of the girls of the pencil factory until after the terrible murder, but since then there has been one continuous talk, just as if we were to blame. We are just as anxious to see the guilty punished as the rest of the public, and we all loved Mary Phagan just as much as we possibly could.

"If the public only would interest itself to look into other factories and stores they would find the girls in the pencil factory are just as good as any other working girls.

"It looks highty hard that we have to work in the place where our little friend was so horribly murdered. But we are only poor working girls, trying to make an honest living, and we try not to think of the tragedy any more than possible; and we have the interest of the factory too much at heart to desert in times of trouble.

"We all hope and pray the guilty will be punished and the innocent given freedom, for we all think our superintendent has a soul himself and that he would not think of such a thing; much less commit such a horrible crime."

STATE FACES BIG TASK IN TRIAL OF FRANK

Burden of Proof Will Rest on Prosecution in the Phagan Slaying Case.

spoke to her except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed. None of Frank's clothing has been found with blood stains upon it. No finger prints upon the girl's body or her clothes were identified as his. None of his personal belonging were found near the girl's body. Absolutely nothing was discovered in the search of the detectives that fastened the crime on him.

Own Admission Caused Arrest.

The police possibly would never even have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission. He told the officers the moment he identified the body that that was the girl he paid at noon the day before. No one else knew that Mary Phagan was in the building at that time, so far as the evidence reveals. Frank did not have to tell if he had desired to conceal the fact.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission, given freely and voluntarily, be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time?" It a guilty man likely to tell the officers as soon as he is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission?"

If the State attempts to show that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as one of the theories contends, the defense will be able to argue that there were several other peopl in the factory at the time, this fact opening the way to the argument that if the crime was committed at this time it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely to attack the girl when he knew there were other persons in the factory at the time who might discover him.

May Prove an Alibi.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed in the evening, as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Fomby indicate may be done, the defense will be able to establish a very strong alibi for the suspected man from the testimony of seven persons who are said to have been at Frank's house Saturday evening playing a game of cards.

Several of them already have testified before the Coroner's jury, and all of them are said to be willing to give their testimony in court to the effect that they saw Frank come home that evening about the time he said in his statement to the Coroner's jury, and that he remained home the remainder of the evening, to the best of their knowledge.

This will bring it to an issue of veracity between Mrs. Mima Fomby and these seven persons, who are persons of reputation and standing in the community, if, indeed, the testimony of Mrs. Fomby is allowed admission, which appears very doubtful.

Mrs. Fomby swore in her affidavit that Frank called her on the telephone several times between 6:30 and 10:30 o'clock the Saturday night of the murder, asking her for permission to bring a girl to her place. She testified that she denied his request. It is between these hours that Frank has a very well established alibi from all appearances.

Another Motive Possible.

The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body either immediately after the crime or at the times the body was exhumed.

Added to this fact is the unexplained circumstance that the girl's purse never has been found. It contained only the wages she had drawn that day, to be sure, but even this small amount might prove an incentive to some persons, the defense very likely will argue. And it is not at was the motive, had any idea that the all certain that the robber, if robbery amount he would obtain would be so small.

"It is probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when she could not have incriminated in any way any particular persons had it been lying near her body?" is a question that can be put to the jurors in this connection.

The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the Coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack the identification of Frank made by Officer House, of Druid Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer.

They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probabilities of a man of Frank's standing permittig himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the officer and saying, "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his identity secret. Probabilities are bound to play a large part in the trial, declare those interested in the mystery, for it is very much on a sequence of probabilities that the police are basing their expectations of convicting Frank.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the park guard discovered in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will still be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons.

The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negro, James Conley, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with his statement that he wrote notes at the dictation of Frank the day before the murder.

Sentell May Yet Be Witness.

Laying aside the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one had even suggested up to the time of the negro's alleged confession, the friends of Frank, and those who are without personal interest as well, scouted the idea that Frank, who is an intelligent and shrewd man, would take an ignorant negro into his confidence and do everything but tell him that he was going to commit a murder on the next day.

It is rumored that E. L. Sentell may yet figure in the case again. Sentell is the man who declared positively before the Coroner's Jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sentell knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he met her on the street in company with some man and that he said, "Hello, Mary," and that she replied, "Hello, Ed."

This testimony would appear quite conclusive were it not for the statements of the physicians that the girl must have been dead at least six hours when found. It is known, however, that some confidence is still being placed in his statements.

WILLIAM J. BRYAN BLUNDERS INTO JAP ROW TRAP

Abandons Course Used Successfully With England—Orientals to Grasp Opportunity.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Students of statecraft declare that the Wilson administration has needlessly, not to saw stupidly, walked into a trap in the controversy with Japan over the California alien land law.

In its reply to Great Britain's Panama Canal tolls protest, this Government laid down the principle that until an overt act had been committed against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, Great Britain would have no standing in court; in other words, that Great Britain's grievance would become a matter for diplomatic adjustment only after an American ship had actually passed through the canal free. This statement cleared the atmosphere and left Great Britain no reasonable grounds for continuing the debate.

The same principle applies in the controversy with Japan.

The obvious reply of Secretary of State Bryan to the first Japanese protest, in view of the attitude assumed toward Great Britain, was to state that the treay with Japan had not been violated, and, therefore, there was no matter for contention between the two governments until after some Japanese subject in California had been aggrieved by the operation of some California law.

But instead of adopting this logical course, it was pointed out here to-day the Wilson administration floundered about in the diplomatic puddle, and, denying that the treaty of 1911 had been violated, invited further negotiations, thus giving the Japanese Ambassador an excellent opportunity to quote the State Department against itself, where the very same principle is involved.

As the matter is now, instead of making a firm stand on precedent and silencing the Japanese protest as the British protest was silenced, the Wilson administration has promoted bickering between the two nations, Japan and the United States, and is in the ridiculous position of holding two diametrically opposite policies in relation to identically the same problem. If the American position is right in regard to the Panama Canal protest it is wrong in regard to the Japanese protest, and vice versa.

It is the expectation here that Japan will take instant advantage of the inconsistency and incongruity of the position of the United States.

Mr. Watermelon Comes to Town to See Old Friends

Florida Visitor Is Forerunner of Georgia Cousin

Six Thousand Cars of Luscious Product to Pass Through Atlanta on Way North.

Men and women of Atlanta, we have with us to-night our old friend, Mr. Watermelon.

Just from Florida, dressed in the old-time mottled and variegated garb, flesh pinker than perfection, blood redder and juicier than ever, hankering to be split. He has arrived from Florida to tell us there are plenty more where he came from—enough to last four weeks.

And by that time the more numerous branch of the family, the Georgia watermelon, the most luscious of them all, will arrive in full flush of glory.

The Central of Georgia Railway has set apart 6,000 freight cars to transport watermelons from the South northward. Every car must pass through Atlanta, and prospects are that at least 1,500 of them will be halted on the way. There's a regular army of thirsty Georgians here, and it's hard to run the gantlet.

Smiling 'Rastus, one of Atlanta's welcoming committee, joyously greeting the first visitor from Florida.

Commission merchants and transportation officials have a joyful announcement to make. The watermelon crop this year will be a bumper, one of the best ever in the State.

Let the small boy rejoice and be gay of heart, for he shall be satisfied. And let the old boy come down off of his high pedestal of dignity and rejoice also, for the older he gets the bigger fool he is about the fragrant fruit of the vine.

Six thousand freight cars will hold exactly 3,761,942 big watermelons and two small ones. That'll be enough to feed the country at large when the Georgia crop comes in. This year quality will be good and prices just right—high enough to suit the farmer and cheap enough to please the consumer. The season has already started.

Water Fashionable Beverage in London

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—Champagne now takes a back seat in London, and claret, moselle and whisky and soda are the drinks of the moment. But temperance is a current craze. Barley water in special "brews" may be found at the Carlton and Bachelors' Clubs.

A few smart men drink plain cold water, among others Sir Arthur Walsh and Lord Charles Beresford. The King has cider laid down in his cellar, and among cider drinkers are the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Leeds, Lord Knollys and Lord Mount Stephen. Beer is seldom seen at dinner or luncheon, but iced lager beer is popular at balls and late parties.

SECOND QUADRUPLET DIES.

BOSTON, May 27.—Eleanor Seeley, one of the quadruplets born to Mrs. Thomas H. Seeley, of Dorchester, is dead of inanition. This is the second of the four babies to die. The two others, now nine months old, are in fine health.

Preacher Sentenced To Gallows Appeals

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 27.—Rev. Marion Capps, a former Methodist preacher, has filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court from a sentence of death imposed upon him by a Sebastian County jury. He was convicted of burning to death three of his children. Evidence at the trial was that the children were tied in bed, which was saturated with oil, and the house fired.

Capps was convicted on the testimony of two elder children, who escaped, but who, it is alleged, have since declared they swore falsely against their father.

Governor Attends Lucy Cobb Finals

Governor Joseph M. Brown left for Athens Monday, where he will attend the commencement exercises of Lucy Cobb Institute. The Governor's daughter, Miss Cora Brown, is a member of the graduating class.

While in Athens the Governor also will pay a visit to the University. He is not scheduled to make any addresses on the trip.

Minister Nabs 'Tiger' Then Rides With Him

KANSAS CITY, May 27.—After he had arrested Bert Snyder, driver for a wholesale liquor company, on a charge of violating the prohibition law, the Rev. J. M. Dunlavy, welfare officer of Kansas City, Kan., climbed into Snyder's wagon and accompanied him as he delivered beer to his various customers.

The minister remained with the driver until he made his legal deliveries and then took him to the police station, where the man was released on bond.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! And Again, Wuxtry!

"Talk about nature faking," exclaimed the hotel clerk, "just listen to this from a paper published out West. The items were sent in by the correspondent at Azusa, wherever that is."

And then he read the following:

"James Snyder, of this town, brought home four baby squirrels the other day and the family cat has adopted them and nurses them with her kittens.

"Then John Davis and Sherman Ward caught eight young foxes and their family cats have adopted them.

"Fred Bierer owns a calf that has but one foreleg, but runs just as well as any calf with its complete quota of legs.

"Ardell Smith, 16 years old, was knocked down and run over by a hog. The doctors called in say his left knee will be stiff for the rest of his life as a result of the accident.

"J. L. Brown's old hen has every day for the past three weeks laid an egg three inches long.

"Since the 'clean up' here there hasn't been much refuse in the streets and the birds got to eating tobacco crumbs and acquired the tobacco habit. Now they refuse grain and live on cigar and cigarette stubs."

Sure, Let 'Em Pay For the Luxuries.

Atlanta barbers have been discussing the edict that came from Trenton, N. J., the other day raising the price of trimming a Van Dyke beard from two bits to 35 cents.

"They're right," said the head barber, as he deftly deposited a comb behind his left ear and began running his fingers through his customer's hair.

"Never saw a guy who insisted on wearing a bunch of spinach like that who wasn't harder to please than your wife with her new summer hat. And a guy who will insist on having his mustache curled—well, some men is queer. Soak 'em, says I, soak 'em, and soak 'em good and plenty."

And the customer went out warbling:

What! The kibosh on the Van Dyke,
And an extra charge to boot
When the barber does your mustache
With a curl so cute and sweet,
sweet and cute?

But we've something to be thankful for,
Downtrodden men; by heck!
The barbers haven't raised the price
For a shave
Upon
the
neck!

GIRLS FIRE BOOKS AT AGNES SCOTT

Seniors End College Year With Torchlight Parade and Big Bonfire on Campus.

With stars twinkling and torchlights glimmering, the seniors of Agnes Scott made a bonfire of their books on the campus. Aided in the torch-bearing by sophomores and surrounded by several hundred alumnae and friends, they went through the ceremony with all of the gayety that only a crowd of college maids could display.

Burning of the books followed a torchlight parade on the campus. As the torch-bearers tripped over the beautiful lawn, their class songs and cheers drew a hearty response from the crowd.

A glee club concert opened with the cantata, "Death of Joan of Arc," led by Miss Almedia Sadler and Miss Isabel Norwood.

"The Last Rose of Summer" and "A Serenade," by Miss Rosa Hill; "Mammy's Little Honey" and "My Lady Clo," by Miss Sadler; "Love's Dilemma," by Miss Norwood, and a rendition of "Annie Laurie," by Misses Jean Ashcraft, Isabel Norwood, Pauline Bruner and Rosa Hill, were features.

Tuesday night the two literary societies will cross swords in a debate on the question: "Resolved, That the Panama Canal should be free."

Hill's Market Basket Bond Sale a Success

ST. PAUL, May 27.—James J. Hill's plan of selling city bonds in certificates of $10 each through the Northwestern Trust Company was a big success to-day. Men and women were waiting at an early hour for the company's office to open, and a steady stream filed in and out all morning.

The officers were prepared and began to issue receipts for the money promptly. One hundred and seven small investors bought a total of $10,000 worth of certificates up to noon.

Lawson and Friends in Real Panther Hunt

SCITUATE, MASS., May 27.—Thomas W. Lawson has taken a hand in the hunt for a panther which has invaded Scituate, and has been seen by a score of persons.

It is possible Mr. Lawson and a party of his friends will stalk the beast themselves. They want to add the beast to the menagerie at "Dreamwold."

Marshall Tells Girls: 'Be Just to Servants'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Vice President Marshall was the star speaker before the graduating class of a local girls' seminary.

"Deal justly with your servant," he advised. "You do not need to try to make her your equal and introduce her to your fiance, nor is it necessary to make her a common menial."

'WITHIN THE LAW' IN LONDON.

LONDON, May 27.—"Within the Law" is running at the Haymarket Theater and gives promise of establishing a record.

The piece is localized in London, but the detectives are utterly unlike anything ever seen at Scotland Yard.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

GOOD BILL AT FORSYTH.

Old favorites and new join in the bill at the Forsyth this week—and an unusually good bill it is, too. Every act is a topnotcher of its kind and there's variety enough for every one.

Maggie Cline, by struggling along some way, it seems, has been able to miss Atlanta for nineteen years. But she's here this week, and although the younger generation is not on right close speaking terms with her at first she soon warms the house and gets one of her "regular" old-time receptions. She sings the good old Irish stuff in the way that made her famous many years ago, and for good measure gives her greatest hit of the olden days, "Throw 'Im Down, McCloskey," which brings down the upper part of the house as of yore.

Among the other splendid numbers on the bill are Ethel Kirk and Billy Fogarty, who have a high-class song and patter act; Carl Rosine, a magician who doesn't bore you as you think he is going to; the great Howard, a ventriloquist, who has an entirely new line of stuff and puts it over in a novel way; Cesare Nesi, a splendid singer who warbles under the title of "Young Caruso," and does not libel the great and only tenor to any extent; Madden and Fitzpatrick, in a clever sketch in which Madden does some original piano playing, and the Equilli brothers, equilibrists who really are different. Of course, there are the motion pictures.

All in all, it's a bill worth while—the best yet of the summer season.

"ST. ELMO" SATISFACTORY.

Miss Billy Long and her company began a week's engagement Monday at the Atlanta in "St. Elmo," presenting the old Southern book play as acceptably as it can be played.

The play is a selection from six offered the patrons of the Atlanta, and the strength of the company lent itself admirably to the play.

Mr. Vail as St. Elmo Murray, the cynic, played the part forcibly and sympathetically. Miss Long's part, Edna Earl, was almost negligible, but was well handled.

Miss Inslee as Gertrude Hammond, an irresponsible young girl, was responsible for a delightful bit of characterization, quite naturally done.

"St. Elmo" will be seen nightly and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

BANKER ASSERTS U. S. IS HOME OF WASTERS

Financier Warns of Credit Strain Resulting From Lavish Expenditure of Money.

DETROIT, May 27.—Joseph T. Talbert, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, in an address delivered before the Bankers' Club here, declared everything has been dear except credit, and, as a result, "our expanded loans and deposits constitute the weak spots in our domestic and business situation."

Mr. Talbert gave statistics showing the gross loans and investments of all the banks in the United States since 1907 has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, while the total increase in the gold stock of the United States since 1907 aggregated $506,000,000.

"This condition," said Mr. Talbert, "although perhaps not so strong as it should be to justify and properly sustain our increased loans, still is assuring and shows that there is no substantial ground for alarm."

Delight to Squander.

Mr. Talbert caused quite a stir when he said that "evidence tends to show that individually and collectively we are a nation of spendthrifts.

"It is our habit and delight to squander, and no amount of preaching will have any effect upon our prodigality as a national trait."

Mr. Talbert, in leading up to an explanation of the drain on New York's gold supply by Europe, said the lending power of German banks had been strained to the limit; that Germany borrowed money here and sought to draw gold from us.

In calling attention to the persistent hoarding of gold by the French, he said the French, not content with the mere hoarding of their own gold, at heavy losses of exchange, forced from us, either for their own account or for that of South America, upward of $56,000,000 of gold.

"The movement is going on and may continue indefinitely.

"For lack of protection for our gold stock we have been obliged to sit heplessly and to submit to this forced exportation of gold, to our disadvantage and discomfort.

"This gold movement taking place at such a time and under such conditions demonstrated the fact that often has been stated before—that New York is the only free market in the world for gold."

Need Outside Money.

Mr. Talbert said an enormous amount of railroad financing must be done during the next year or two, and nearly all of it will be done at home with difficulty and in all probability at a higher level of interest rates than we have been accustomed to in such undertakings in recent years.

Mr. Talbert uttered "a word of caution against the practice which has been all too common among merchants and manufacturers, of financing themselves too largely through note brokers."

In concluding, the banker said it should be remembered that we are neither in nor approaching a period of speculation, and that credit is in no danger whatever from that source now, nor will it be in the near future. He added that courage should be taken from the fact that thus far the promises of another year of bountiful crops are exceedingly bright.

STYLES DEMAND RAPID CHANGE BY DANDIES

Paris Men of Fashion Are Forced to Jump From One Pair of Trousers to Another.

PARIS, May 27.—The dandies of Paris have daily been rehearsing of late on quick-change dress in order to be able to slip from one suit into another with lightning speed so as to waste the minimum of time in this way during the height of the season.

The decrees of masculine fashion, which in recent years have become as inexorable as the requirements of feminine modes, are unusually Draconian this year. Even in the hottest weather it will not be permissible to appear in the streets wearing white flannels after 11 o'clock in the morning.

After lounging at his ease for an hour or so the well-dressed man must rush home and jump into a pair of neatly checked trousers. This garment which, as in the case of all the other trousers, the valet must iron out with sharply defined creases every morning, hangs broadest and loosest from the waist. With this may go a tobacco-colored business coat with narrow lapels, and a silk hat.

For the Afternoon Call.

This suit does for a stroll in the Bois, but after luncheon the dandy with calls to pay makes a second quick change. This time he dons a pair of well-creased chimney-pot trousers with faint stripes, and a cutaway coat, skin-tight. The latter must have a long tail, closely following the shape of the figure and bulging nowhere.

In the hottest weather the waistcoat may be dispensed with on the sole condition that the coat be unbuttoned and a white slip be worn sewed into the inner side of the lapel to give the similitude of a waistcoat.

If one is going to the races white flannel trousers may be worn with this coat, but not if attending receptions.

Both morning and afternoon coats are built up so as to give the man the appearance of being deep-chested and broad-shouldered, so tailors are now laying in a liberal supply of padding material.

Snuff-Colored Evening Dress.

The evening style runs in the direction of broad trousers. Again the striking feature, however, is the coat, which is a transparent imitation of the women's "jupe fourreau." The back and the tail, which fall below the knees, cling tightly to the body, and must fall in graceful curves not only behind but also in front. Black cloth is the evening wear, although colors are permitted this year, the choice mostly going to snuff-colored evening dress.

Terra-cotta colored handkerchiefs are also a feature of men's spring fashions.

Paris tailors have entered a campaign against London's supremacy in the matter of men's wear, and this year's fashions are designed with the object of persuading Americans to fit themselves out in Paris instead of in the British capital.

CURED TERRIBLE HUMOR ON FACE

Could Not Go On Street Without Veil—Tells What Resinol Did For Her.

Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1912.—"In December, 1908, my face became sore. I tried everything that was recommended, and my face got worse instead of better. I spent over $100 and got no benefit. The face and nose were very red and the eruption had the appearance of small boils, which itched me terribly. I can not tell you how terrible my face looked—all I can say is, it was dreadful, and I suffered beyond description.

"I have not gone on the street any time since 1908 without a veil, until now. Just four months ago a friend persuaded me to give Resinol a trial. I have used three cakes of Resinol Soap and less than a jar of Resinol Ointment, and my face is perfectly free from any eruption, and my skin is as clear and clean as any child's. It is about four weeks since the last pimple disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. M. J. Bateman, 4256 Viola St.

Practically every druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00) and Resinol Soap (25c), but if you are suffering from itching, burning skin troubles, pimples, blackheads, dandruff, ulcers, boils, stubborn sores, or piles, it will cost you nothing to try these soothing, healing preparations. Just send to Dept. 26-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for a free sample of each.

IT IS MIRACLE PELICANS EVER WIN ANY GAMES

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE wonder of it is that the Pelicans have won those thirteen games that now grace their records! How did they get them? What happened? The "Felder Mystery" is as nothing compared with it.

On what the Pelicans showed here yesterday, when they lost to the Crackers 8 to 3, they wouldn't be entitled to win thirteen games in ten years.

According to Charley Frank his club isn't altogether to blame. As is the case with most tail-end clubs injuries have done their devastating work. Both of the Pelicans' catchers have been shot away—and Yantz is out of the game for a year with a broken leg. Manush's bum knee has gone wrong again and he is out of it—for an indefinite stay. It is possible that he will never be his old self again. They think so in Toledo, where the accident happened.

The Pelicans are complaining of another affliction of the tail-enders—their nerve is gone. They couldn't take a game if it was handed to them. They are the worst fielders in the league—and they did not improve their averages any in Monday's game.

* * *

ELLIOTT DENT more or less vindicated himself Monday. Bill Smith slipped him in and he beat the Pelicans. He weakened a fraction in the eighth and ninth but he showed a lot better than his last out. With plenty of work this man may prove a star. He does not seem at his best yet, but maybe the next time he is worked he will be able to go all the way through.

* * *

THIS Cast-Off's Revenge stuff is getting to be a howling farce. "Rebel" Williams, a Cracker-for-a-day a while back, turned up Monday with the fiercest sort of batting and laced out four hits in four times up. He had but one fielding chance, which he looked out for in good style.

William's regular batting stride is so far below that which he showed yesterday as to make the whole thing a blooming burlesque. But it always happens. Generally the cast-offs win the game. Maybe the fact that Williams was an involuntary cast-off saved the Crackers from that misfortune.

* * *

WILLIAMS was not the only man who did some surprising batting. Another was Pitcher Dent, who scratched a couple through the infield and beat them to first.

Snedecor put a scratch and a double to his credit. He and Williams made three-fifths of the Pels' hits.

Welchonce put a single and a very timely three-bagger on the records. Welchonce had Dunn and Dent on bases and, of course, something ferocious was needed to score them. Welchonce hit it all right and both of the speed merchants tallied.

Harry Welchonce made six nice put-outs yesterday and added to the half-dozen he made the day before, gave him twelve put-outs in two days. His batting was timely but he made one of those old-time "Atlanta bunts"—a wallloping drive to Evans which resulted in a put-out at second.

THE Crackers have two more games with the Pelicans and ought to win them both, unless the Pels show a tremendous improvement. Charley Frank has no pitcher calculated to stop the local batters and his fielders are pretty much to the bad.

Thursday Montgomery turns up for four games. On Friday, because of Federal Decoration Day, there will be two games.

Blood Bath Knocks Rheumatism

Remarkable Effects of a Remedy That Actually Irrigates the Entire Blood Supply.

It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect of a most remarkable remedy known as S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In five minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capillary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every enunctory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities. The stimulating properties of S. S. S. compel the skin, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder to all work to the one end of casting out every irritating, every pain-inflicting atom of poison; it dislodges by irrigation all accumulations in the joints, dissolves acid accretions, renders them neutral and scatters those peculiar formations in the nerve centers that cause such mystifying and often baffling rheumatic pains.

And, best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach. If you have drugged yourself until your stomach is nearly paralyzed, you will be astonished to find that S. S. S. gives no sensation but goes right to work. This is because it is a pure vegetable infusion, is taken naturally into your blood just as pure air is inhaled naturally into your lungs.

The great Swift Laboratory has spent millions of dollars in perfecting, producing and placing in the hands of the public this wonderful remedy. So give your blood a good bath with S. S. S., for it knocks the worst forms of rheumatism every time.

You can get it at any drug store at $1 per bottle. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood specific ever discovered. If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice, write to The Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift building, Atlanta, Ga.

JUNE 6 TO SEE FIRST RACE AT MOTORDROME

WITH a band concert announced for Sunday and with the date for the opening set for Friday night, June 6, and with the board motordrome at the old circus grounds pretty well finished, Atlanta's season of motorcycle racing in the "giant washtub" is closing in.

And you get the idea of what is going to happen from the expression "racing in a giant washtub." That's exactly what it is like. Jack Prince's new track is little more—and no less—than a board track set on edge instead of riding on the floor of the tub the racers hurtle around on the inside of the sides, like cockroaches on the kitchen wall, setting laws of gravity at naught and affording to the spectators the most spectacular form of racing the world has ever known.

Jack Prince really has a big offering for the Atlanta public. His track is the latest and best board track in the world. It represents the last word in the building of board tracks. Jack has gathered in Atlanta already the best motorcycle racers in the world. He has more on the way. He is erecting comfortable seats, every one of which commands a view of the big inclosure. He has engaged a band. He has arranged for a corking car service—a service that will take the patrons of the motordrome from Five Points to the track in barely more than five minutes. He has an attractive program for opening night, as a result he will be greeted by one of the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a motorcycle race in America.

PEACOCK FLEET GIVES BOYS' HIGH BIG SCARE

Boys' High School nine received the closest call ofthe season yesterday afternoon when they were held to a 6 to 5 score by the Peacock-Fleet school aggregation.

Boys' High began the scoring in the first inning when they registered a single tally and each team took its turns throughout the nine chapters at leading the score. The winning tally was registered in the ninth inning when Johnson scored on an error.

ODE.

This is an ode to men of great renown;
An ode to men who laugh and say:
"Pooh! Pooh!"
An ode to men who hold a great game down
And snap their fingers, saying:
"That for you!"
This is an ode to those who laugh and say
"Old P. T. Barnum had the proper dope.
Those rummies will be with us every day
And pay their kale and sit there full of hope."
I love to hear the wallop of the bat
And see the pill go bounding down the dell,
But when a lot of guys grow rich and fat
And then they rub it in—O whatchelet!

Jake Daubert has been suspended for three days. Jake Daubert is a member of the Brooklyn team, which has been winning too many games for the good of the National League.

Tom Jones says he will bet $10,000 on Jess Willard if said Jess Willard fights Gunboat Smith again. Mr. Jones shows his business acumen by speaking thus. It would cost him at least $7,50 to hire a hall.

Not that we care to queer an honest man's business, but our idea of obtaining money under false pretenses is to manage Jess Willard.

Ed Walsh threatens to teach the spitball by mail. Various batters in the American League would give half their year's salaries if Ed would only deliver his spitball by mail.

AS J. EVERS MIGHT SAY.

I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.
I could not, even in a pinch.
In fact, it is a lead pipe cinch
I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.

BRANNIGAN HANDS M'CUE FIRST DEFEAT OF CAREER

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27.—Matty McCue, variously known as the Racine terror, the Wisconsin whirlwind and the Racine wonder, is to-day simply plain McCue, for all the terror and whirlwind and wonder were punched out of him by Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg. It was McCue's first defeat, but it was decisive all along the ten-round route.

JAKE ABEL BEATS WHITE IN EIGHT-ROUND FIGHT

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 27.—Jake Abel, of Chattanooga, easily defeated Frankie White, of Chicago, here last night. Abel floored White in the eighth round with a right to the ribs. White did not land one clean blow.

BILLITER WINS MAT BOUT.

ST. LOUIS, May 27.—Johnnie Billiter won two out of three falls last night from Eddie Hammer.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Jack McGuigan says he has secured Jack Britton's signature to meet Young Erne at the baseball park in Philadelphia on Decoration Day. Both boys will weigh in at 138 pounds ringside.

* * *

"Bud" Anderson is taking up considerable of the pugilistic limelight. His knockout of Joe Mandot stamps him as one of the most dangerous boxers in his class.

* * *

Jack O'Brien, the Philadelphia heavyweight and one of the real veterans of the game, donned the mitts the other day. He boxed a three-round exhibition with Harry Ramsey in Pottstown, Pa.

* * *

Harry Trendall and Leo Kelly will clash in a scheduled eight-round bout at St. Louis Wednesday night. Trendall and Kelly met several months ago, and the former was credited with the shade.

* * *

Jimmy Perry will have a chance to make himself one of the biggest cards in the boxing game Thursday night. Jimmy is to take on Mike Gibbons in a six-round set-to, and the fur should fly. Reports from the Pennsylvania city state that both boys have trained hard for the go, and are ready for the gong.

* * *

Perry's friends here are anxiously awaiting the result. They point to the fact that Jimmy has been going great lately, and for the first time in months has trained faithfully for a scrap.

* * *

Meyer Pries, who will meet Spider Britt in one of the three ten-round bouts to be staged at the Auditorium June 13, paid us a visit yesterday. Meyer says that he is going to bet his end of the purse that he beats Britt. The little Hebrew also says that he is going to be right this time, and will start work for the bout in a couple of days.

* * *

Abe Attell is still gathering in the soft dough. The former featherweight champion has agreed to take on Phil Bloom in the ten-round windup of a special show at the Irving A. C., Brooklyn. Attell is to receive $700, win, lose or draw.

* * *

Tom Jones continues to challenge Gunboat Smith in behalf of his heavyweight, Jess Willard. As yet he has not received any satisfaction from Jim Buckley, manager of Smith.

* * *

Buckley is not worrying much these days. Besides having Smith, he also has a neat meal ticket in Harlem Tommy Murphy, one of the leading contenders for Willie Ritchie's crown.

* * *

Arthur Pelky threatens to quit the ring for good. The big heavyweight has taken McCarty's death to heart, and says he will never be able to enter the ring again and fight at his best.

* * *

* * *

Frank Klaus received the newspaper verdict over Eddie McGoorty in their six-round bout at Pittsburg Saturday night. Both boys were strong at the finish, and could have gone a number of rounds more.

* * *

Freddie Welsh, the English lightweight, had an easy time defeating Kid Scaler the other night. The bout went the full fifteen rounds, but Freddie had a big shade at the finish.

McCARTY'S DEATH PURE ACCIDENT, FINDING OF JURY

By Ed W. Smith.

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight, Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 27.—Luther McCarty's death in the glove contest here Saturday afternoon with Arthur Pelky was entirely an accident. This was the verdict of the Coroner's jury, determined after two sittings, the decision being reached at 10 o'clock after a deliberation of half an hour. Pelky was exonerated completely from all blame in the case.

Almost immediately after, however, the Northwest mounted police put Pelky under arrest, charging him with manslaughter. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000, Fred C. Lowes, a wealthy real estate man, and Tommy Burns furnishing the surety. The threatened cases against Referee Smith, manager Billy McCarney and Promoter Tommy Burns did not develop, but Smith and McCarney, in lieu of being given their liberty, promised to remain in the city for a couple of days at least and give further testimony. No bonds were asked in their cases.

Following is the full verdict as announced:

"We, the Coroner's jury, find that Luther McCarty came by his death accidentally, the immediate cause being a subluxation of the cervical vertebrae at the Burns arena May 24, but there is no evidence to show how this injury occurred, we, the jury, therefore exonerate Arthur Pelky from all blame whatsoever."

This was signed by P. J. McManus as foreman. The other jurors were H. C. Hersey, R. Jackson, E. W. Schofield, C. P. McCallum, M. Dawson and E. A. Jones.

Trying for Criminal Case.

It was evident from the start that the crown, stung by the severe criticisms of local ministers, intended to make a desperate fight to get a verdict upon which to base a criminal case against Pelky and perhaps the others directly concerned in the unfortunate contest. The prosecuting attorney asked at once that all witnesses be excluded from the room before going on the stand, and carried his point.

Among the witnesses examined in great detail were McCarney, Burns, Smith, two of the local newspaper men and Dr. Moshier, who performed the autopsy. Pelky was not called at all, but remained during the entire case like a caged lion in a nearby room. He has been deeply affected all the way through, and during this hearing appeared almost heartbroken.

Dr. Moshier gave the most damaging testimony against the boxers. He declared that McCarty's neck had been dislocated under the base of the brain and that this injury caused the hemorrhage of the brain that brought about the death. He all but declared that the injury could have come about in no other way but from a blow or from the fall, the latter not being possible, because the boxer's neck did not strike any object as he fell.

Other Fights the Cause.

A highly dramatic incident came right at the close of the hearing when Pelky's attorney called upon Dr. C. J. Stewart, one of the oldest physicians in Alberta, to partially refute the testimony of Dr. Moshier. The physician was asked if he thought McCarty's injury could not have been caused by some other than a blow received. He said it was highly possible and then, rising to his feet, he shook his finger at the prosecutor, who was then questioning him, and during intense silence, shouted:

"It is my opinion that the injury to Luther McCarty was received from Flynn or somebody else in a previous encounter. In this contest, never."

He was excused in a hurry by the prosecutor.

Referee Smith testified that in all there were only about six blows landed during the contest, and that none of them was at all hard or effective and could hardly have caused even an abrasion of the skin. He said the boxing was about even up to the time of McCarty's collapse, and that Luther had turned, smiled and winked at his own corner after the final clinch, collapsing about eight or ten seconds later.

The State attempted to tangle up all the witnesses in an effort to prove that the contest was for the world's white championship; that all championship conditions had been carried out, and that it was in every way a prize fight.

Georgia Ends Successful Season

Prospects for 1914 Appear Good

ATHENS, GA., May 27.—Despite the fact that Georgia lost the series she would have rather won than any other—the one against Tech—the Red and Black has had a remarkably successful season, both financially and in games won and lost.

During the season the team scored a total of 174 runs against 68 for its opponents. Twenty-seven games were played against the best teams in Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and but eight games were lost. Two to Michigan, one to Ohio Wesleyan, one to Clemson, one to Auburn and three to Tech. Nineteen victories were celebrated and most of them were by one-sided scores, while seven were shutouts for Georgia. Five of the games that Georgia lost were by one run.

Outlook for 1914 Good.

Since the season has closed and the tension assumed the normal post-schedule laxity Coach Cunningham has busied himself taking an introspective stock of his material for 1914 and of his present splendid array of talent he expects to have all but three present at the beginning of next season, with a possibility of only two being absent.

Big John Morris, who has earned himself a place on the All-Southern team his first year in college ball, graduates in law in June, and will immediately "hang out his shingle" over in Hart County, from where he hails.

Covington, who has played third base for two years and who served four years at center on the football team, is a victim of the four-year rule and after June will also join the ranks of the colonels in the legal profession.

May Lose Hutchens.

Hutchens, the Red and Black's great receiver of this season, is likewise a member of the law department and will receive his "dip" this year. There is but a slight chance for him to return, not unless he leads the team.

Bowden has a contract from the Boston Nationals whenever he sees fit to annex his signature to it and he is liable to become a member of Stalling's Braves at any time after college closes this summer. He has one more year in Southern athletics, and on account of his ability in both baseball and football a strenuous effort will be made to persuade him to return. With his wing in the shape it is now he would find it rough sailing in any league and would certainly have hard going to make good.

Many to Return.

These are about all the sure losses and doubtfuls, which leave a good working nucleus for the team next year. Henderson is slated to return for a place on the football eleven and will draw the first base assignment again. Harrison is taking pharmacy and will have another year, while Clements at shortstop is a four-year man and should make a strong bid for All-Southern next year. Ginn, McWhorter and Erwin all are sure to return and so will Corley and Hitchcock. The latter pitched but few games this year, but with a little more training will be a mainstay next year. Corley has already made an enviable record, although playing his first year in college ball.

Cobb Praised Brown.

This completes the list of regulars to which may be added Brown, the freshman, who played in several games and who wields the willow in such good style that Ty Cobb pronounced him the most finished batter on the Red and Black squad. He is an outfielder and will be heard from next year. Another sub who filled in to a good advantage while Covington was ruled off the team is Holden, captain of the scrubs. He has another year in college and will be a valuable asset at a future date.

FLYNN'S FIGHT WITH COFFEY WAS A WONDER

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, America's greatest sporting fiction writer, covered the Jim Flynn-Jim Coffey heavyweight bout in New York last Friday night for the New York American. His story is of especial interest to local boxing fans, as Flynn does battle with Jim Savage at the Auditorium-Armory here on June 13. Here is Van Loan's story:

Andrew Chariglione, whose business name is Jim Flynn, stunted the Dublin Giant somewhat in a ten-round argument before the Garden Athletic Club. Jim Coffey had age, weight, reach and 70 per cent of the house with him before he started, but the battle-scarred warrior of Pueblo ripped and tore and slashed his way to victory, whaling away at his taller opponent until he reduced him to six feet of staggering, knock-kneed humanity.

Not since the memorable fight between Ketchel and O'Brien has so much real fighting been crammed into ten rounds, and it was Flynn's experience, aggressiveness and cast iron jaw that won for him.

For some reason best known to himself, Flynn elected to stand still for the better part of the first round and allow Coffey to pop him on the jaw with rights and lefts and the Dublin import made the most of his opportunities. He slammed the veteran 732 times by actual count and brought the gore i streams from one of Flynn's eyes.

Flynn Dives Into Coffey.

The Pueblo product finally grew angry under this constant bombardment and at the end of the round he was driving into Coffey head first, endeavoring to remove his head from his shoulders with wild rights and lefts.

Coffey continued to score in the second and third rounds and Flynn's countenance gradually assumed the appearance of an overripe tomato.

In the fourth round, however, the Pueblo hodcarrier took matters into his own hands and began to lead with his haymaker swings and when the bell rang Coffey was reeling from a succession of swings to the body and jaw.

Flynn Had Coffey Reeling.

In the fifth and the sixth matters were fairly even, but from the seventh until the end the tough old veteran forged into the lead, and though Coffey kept up his left jabs and right crosses there was no power behind them. Flynn herded his taller opponent from one side of the ring to the other endeavoring to land the finishing punch.

Jim Flynn may be on the toboggan, but he is still good enough to put an enduring crimp in the aspirations of many members of the younger set.

NEW CLUB WILL ENTER FEDERAL NEXT SEASON

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 27.—A franchise to play in the new Federal League was granted Toledo by Organizer A. Bobrick. The Ohio Club will not join the third leaguers the current season, however, but Toledo will rake together a strong team for the 1914 crusade.

Bobrick believes that many other cities will be represented in the Federal next year. Buffalo and Detroit are two cities practically sure of entering the third league zone. The Toledo officers will be elected in the near future, and plans will be made for the organizing of the Toledo Club.

YOU read the first seven installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this eighth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain.

Now go on with the story.

"Wait till I tell you, Mr. Callaway," interrupted the manager. "Excuse us a minute, Gordon," he added, "I want to say something to Mr. Callaway," and he drew the president to an inner office, where he told him the little he had been able to learn about Kelly. When he had concluded, Callaway said:

"And you signed him up on the strength of that drive that broke the bull's ribs?"

"Yes, sir; that was enough for me."

"Well, Billy, you know I consider you are best manager in the world. And I reckon you know what you're doing. I will put through this contract, but remember, Billy, you must shoulder all the responsibility. If this Gordon Kelly 'blows up' the laugh will be on you, not me."

"I'll take my chances on that," said the manager, confidently.

"Anyway, it will make good reading in the newspapers. Send for the reporters, Billy, and we'll tell 'em all about your world beater."

The reporters came, they saw, but they were not conquered. They took copious notes of all the manager told them, but they refused to "fall" for Kelly as a ballplayer. They admired his shape and looks but demanded that they be "shown" before committing themselves to extravagant praise of the new man.

"All right, boys; I'll show you," declared Bill Smith, "and, mark my words"—every reporter made a mark in his notebook—"mark my words this fellow will turn out to be a wonder."

"Hope so, Billy," replied the reporters, as they filed out of the room.

They all handled the news in a facetious manner. In one of the newspapers there was this headline:

"Joshed" in the Papers.

ADONIS JOINS
THE CRACKERS

Bill Smith Signs a Player Who Has Never Seen a Game of Ball.

Another newspaper had this headline:

LEARNED BASEBALL IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

Atlanta Club Secured a "World Beater" Who Never Played a Game of Baseball.

And the third newspaper had this to say in its headlines:

COTILLION LEADER
TO PLAY BASEBALL

Bill Smith Lands a Handsome Young Man That Knows Everything Except the National Game.

Within twenty-four hours Bill Smith was the recipient of all sorts of pleasant jibes. Every friend or acquaintance he met had something to say about the "world beater." The manager took everything in good part, but mentally acknowledged that he had overplayed himself in making public the signing of Gordon Kelly. "I ought to have said nothing about it," he thought. "Now he will just have to make good or they'll give me the laugh all over the country. But," he added, grimly, "that kid will make good, all right, all right."

CHAPTER X.

WHAT Gorden Kelly himself thought of the "funny" stories printed about him in the newspapers no one ever knew. Bill Smith eyed his "world beater" keenly when he reported in the clubhouse at Ponce DeLeon Park early Monday morning. But Kelly was the same, quiet, good natured young man Smith had always found him to be.

"He's a game dog, sure enough," said the manager to himself, and satisfied with this disposal of the case, he began putting on his uniform.

It was the day on which the players of the Atlanta club were to report for spring practice, and it was a fine day overhead. There was to be a month of hard grind for the men in order that they might get into condition for the gruelling pennant race of the Southern League. Players of the rival clubs in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Chattanooga, Mobile, Nashville and Montgomery were supposed to report to their managers about the same time. In other parts of the South, in Athens, Ga., in Augusta, in Hot Springs, Ark., in Marlin Springs, Tex., in Tampa, Fla., and elsewhere the big league clubs of the North, and the Red Sox champions of the world and of the American League; the New York Giants, champions of the National League, the Chicago Cubs, the Detroit Tigers, the Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Browns, of St. Louis, the Cleveland club, the Washington club, the Pittsburg Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds, the Phillies, the Brooklyns and the Boston Braves were already training under the watchful eyes of the big league managers.

In far off California the Chicago White Sox and in Bermuda the New York Americans in charge of Frank Chance, had pitched their training camps. At about this time, too, many of the International League clubs—Buffalo, Toronto, Providence, Montreal, Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Rochester—were scheduled to open their training season below the Mason and Dixon line. Likewise the American Association clubs—St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Toledo, Columbus, Milwaukee and Louisville—were due in the South about this time for their annual visit. All these clubs leave the "Sunny Land" richer every year by about $200,000, of which the railroads and the hotels get the lion's share and the moving picture shows, the laundries and the cigar stands what is left.

Players Arrive.

Smith and Kelly were hardly dressed in their uniforms before the players began to arrive and within half an hour there were fully a dozen of them on hand. There were "Whitey" Alperman, the old National League player, now second-baseman of the Atlanta club, as good as ever fielded a grounder when it was hot or muffed a liner when it was be-whiskered; Bailey, the heavy-hitting outfielder; McAllister, who wants to become an umpire; Long, Nixon, Smith, the new third-baseman; Musser and Brady, the clever pitchers, Dobard and Kernan, infielders, and Dunn, the catcher.

There were shaking of hands and merry greetings. Gordon Kelly met all the arrivals as fast as they came to the clubhouse. The homes of these players were scattered all over the country. The men had not seen each other since the last of September.

Alperman was the first of the new arrivals to don his uniform. He laced his shoes and then arose and stretched himself.

"Gee, I wish the Southern League season was over," he said, with a yawn.

This remark caused a great laugh in the clubhouse.

"Starting to 'crab' before you've touched a baseball, eh?" observed Bill Smith.

"No," returned the second baseman. "I wanted to get it off my system, that's all. Come on, boys, let's get a move on," and the players, laughing and shouting like schoolboys, ran on the field and began their season's work with that time-honored exercise of tossing the ball in pairs.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

"Study Your Expression," Says Pretty Gertrude Barnes

Miss Barnes in a summery pose.

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"SMILE and curl up your mouth corners," said merry Gertrude Barnes. She had just finished doing five character songs in characteristic costumes. She had run the gamut of emotion from the naughty little "enfant terrible" through the stranded show girl longing for the "old Kentucky home" to the mirth-mad exponent of "Row, row, row." And all this earnest and successful effort to please her audience left her cool, buoyant and ready to give the whole world of girls the kindly benefit of her study of how to have "a sane mind in a healthy body."

"Expression is important for character as well as to aid the search after beauty," said pretty Miss Gertrude, with laughing earnestness. "I used to be afraid to smile all I wanted to for fear I would get those heavy lines from nostril to lip; and then suddenly I became aware of all the hard-looking faces one sees—and the chief reason for the hardness was down drooping, disagreeable looking lips. I decided at once to take a chance on the lesser evil, and began curling my mouth up at the corners, even when I was not particularly anxious to 'look pleasant, please;' now as a result there may be lines around my mouth, but they are lines of pleasantness—aren't they?" she added anxiously. "And sometimes when I am ready to feel cross my mouth keeps on smiling—and I recover."

Merry good nature and kindly interest in life happen to be among the greatest charms of Miss Barnes' animated, expensive face, and very pleasing is the twinkle that reflects from big brown eyes to the merry dimpled corners of her this-is-a-fine-old-world mouth.

"You may safely go on smiling," I said with a smile of my own; "but how about all the other expressions you bring in rapid succession to your face—don't they make lines?"

A Brand-New One.

"Not lines that stay," answered Miss Barnes. "You see, I have a few methods of keeping my skin in good condition. They are cold water, sunburn and tan."

"Sunburn and tan!" I exclaimed. "I thought they were fatal to the fine texture of the skin."

"Perhaps they are fatal to the old, worn-out outer layer they destroy. But they give the fresh new layer waiting underneath a chance, and they help give strong, firm flesh, good, healthy flesh, without which fine-textured skin is just impossible. And sunburn and tan come from plenty of sunlight and fresh air, which are the best things in the whole world for the health and beauty seeker. So there you are in a perfect circle, when you have added plenty of cold water—and served up a fine, healthy skin on a background of strong, firm flesh that can throw off the little lines you make temporarily by twisting your face around into any extreme of expressions you choose.

"Cold water—cold water—cold water! Won't you sing its praises very earnestly, please? And tell all the girls not to be afraid of the charm of expression—they may indulge in it all they like if they have been sunburned and tanned and cold-watered, with good massage-like splashes that make the skin strong enough to throw off the little temporary blemishes of lines and wrinkles.

"Oh, my circle is not complete yet," laughed the cheery star, "I have a little more to say about fresh air. Go out into it all you can, and hunt and ride if you can. Riding is wonderful for the muscles of the limbs; hunting develops the muscles of the waist—but if you can do neither, swim. Anyone can swim if she just chooses to learn how—and it is a most wonderful, inspiring, lung-filling, flesh hardening form of exercise.

A "Water Baby."

"I manufactured a lot of my own healthfulness by going after it very earnestly. Being a water-baby and being an outdoor girl are almost equally important; they both make you healthy, and if you are wise enough to be both your chances of being a beauty increase.

"You see, fresh air and exercise have trained my figure for me, so I don't have to rely on corsets to do it. They have trained my skin for me, so I don't have to hold my face in a mask-like expression in order to avoid lines and wrinkles—so there is my basis, and then I go ahead and try to make the most of my looks, although I know perfectly well that the result is not beauty."

But on this latter bit of information Miss Gertrude Barnes has a monopoly, for good features added to the winsome charm of a bright face and the pose of a healthy body surely deserve the title of beauty.

"Now about arranging your face to the best advantage," said Miss Barnes with the earnest attention to every detail that makes her work so pleasing and conversation with her a true delight. "Of course, it is inadvisable for a girl who wishes to be accepted at face value as a lady to use any makeup on the street, for she is sure to look conspicuous and artificial—for the one all-embracing reason that without the earnest study an actress gives the subject the gentle art of makeup becomes a farce, instead of an art.

"However, any girl can teach her eyebrows to grow in a smooth, pretty curve by brushing them at night and morning with a tiny brush; and good cream will keep the face clean as to its pores as well as on the surface; and a well-poised head adds a final touch of charm. Girls should cultivate the habit of holding their heads with the natural poise of a flower instead of jutting forward like a swag, or bending back with the curve of a lightning-struck tree.

"And learn to design your own clothes. Make them express YOU so your personality will be a rounded whole without one jarring note."

And since there is no jarring note in Miss Barnes' unaffected, wholesome personality, this final bit of advice fits in with the beauty study of an expert in whatever she undertakes—and is well worth following.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

LYDIA E. PINKHAM

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it to-day.

Household Suggestions

A little soap shredded into the boiler on washing day makes the clothes a good color, and if you put a small piece into the starch it will make the ironing easier, and it imparts a lovely gloss to the clothes. All the little bits of soap that are left over should be put into a jar with a little water. Place the jar in a moderate oven and leave until the soap has dissolved. This is excellent for washing flannels and woollen things.

In choosing chickens, observe chiefly the length of leg. The best chickens have short legs in proportion to the size of the body; the bones are small and the flesh is white. The best test of age is found at the end of the breast-bone. When the bird is young, the end of the bone is soft and gelatinous, and it becomes gradually harder as the age of the bird increases.

A good way in which to keep plants fresh without watering them when the house must be closed is to take all the plants to the cellar or some other cold place and set them in tubs, with an ordinary brick under each flower pot. Pour into the tubs just enough water to cover the bricks. It is best to place the tubs by an east window if possible.

To boil milk without fear of burning, put two or three tablespoonfuls of water in the saucepan, let it boil rapidly for two or three minutes; add the milk, and it will not burn, however fierce the fire may be.

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Little cousin," he said with the deep tenderness of the man who finds happiness in the joy of the woman he loves, though he be shut from her very life, "there is nothing the matter with me. Life gives me almost all I want. No one can have everything. A banker's life has not much color and passion; I would rather make music than money. But don't think he stupidly discontented—or ungrateful for all I have. I cannot say all I mean! There is one thing in the world—in ALL THE WORLD there is one thing I want. For this I would give the world itself, if it were mine—and all the money in the world. And all life would be music, and color and passion then. And I can't tell you—I must never speak of it to you—and you will never understand!"

Outside sunshine and roses—here renunciation of al lthe joy life must never hold. Jacob felt that he must stifle in this little room where hope had died. He strode to the doorway—to the gleaming terrace.

The Old Story.

And then slowly, swayed by a feeling she felt must be pity, Charlotte followed him. "Jacob, perhaps I do understand."

"Charlotte! If you do—I shall have spoken no word. In a sense it was not honorable of me—though at first I only meant to warn you, and I never thought; I should regard you against myself. Dear little Charlotte—forget what I said!"

"I cannot forget—so easily!" Charlotte's eyes were very soft, her little quivering lips were dangerously near, but Dame Fate had chosen capriciously to make this a day of unfinished climaxes, and only Frau Gudala's ready wit and loving heart intervened between the girl and a rather tragic scene, for at the particular moment when the sunny doorway framed the pretty picture she made as she stood looking pleadingly at a sorely-tempted Jacob, the hall door opened, admitting the Duke and Frau Gudula and her sons.

Gustavus of Taunus was asking: "I may have the honor of addressing your daughter?" and Grannie saved the situation. "There is wine in the garden—if you will honor me. Charlotte, dear, will you and Jacob show Count Fehrenberg the way? Duke Gustavus, could you make up your mind to a little chat with an old woman? Would you stop here with me—alone—for a few minutes? I ask it as a favor." And so Grannie prepared to make her fight for the happiness of her children.

"May I forget for a few moments that I am an old Jewess—and you a reigning Prince? I want to speak to you about Charlotte. She lost her mother many years ago—and now, at this important time of her life, I must try to be a mother to the child. My son Solomon, you know, sometimes sees only one side to a question, the one he wants to see. But I have looked at this marriage between you and Charlotte from many points of view—have you? Do you see the difficulties and danger?"

Gustavus thought for a moment of the girl who wished him to make this marriage in order that she might be the cousin of a wealthy man instead of a pauper Prince. The tricksy jade with her lying eyes—and for one supreme moment he had thought perhaps he and Evelyn might abdicate and face poverty together—well, she wanted money—on with the dance called life! Prince of Taunus, must dance to his piping—then dance merrily and proudly for all the world to see.

He answered the earnest old Jewess lightly indeed. "Oh, I admit the dangers in this marriage, Baroness. But they make the prospect more fascinating—to me. After all, I do not want my future comfortably laid out for me with mathematical certainty! I prefer to run a litle risk! I have lived in a world that grows tired of old games—and is always ready to learn new rules!"

"But marriage is not a game," said the old woman. To her marriage was a Sacrament.

"It may be an adventure if the consequences are not too early seen. Why, my life has ben one series of adventures. When I was a child Napoleon was shaking the ground he marched over. One day my father's little throne fell down, and was picked up and dropped into the Corsican sack! I have known exile, and my crown has been restored to me. I have had money—and it has gone—well, perhaps, I should have had to go after it—pouf!—if your sons had not now once again lifted me upon my little throne. Oh, you see, Baroness, I have had my ups and downs."

"You treat me as a plaything. What blessing can there be for a girl of my people in sharing such a life?"

"When I am married, Baroness"—

"Don't call me that! It is a pretense that does not please me," said the old Jewess impatiently to the reigning Duke of Taunus.

Gustavus exclaimed in amazement: "A pretense! The Emperor has—"

"Your Highness," interposed the old woman, "no Emperor can ennoble me—at my age of seventy-one. Rank is not worn so easily by old woman."

Gustavus of Taunus rose to the supreme height of his manhood as, with a sudden illuminating respect for a fineness he might have failed to glimpse in his little cousin's soul, but saw now in full splendod in the gentle mien of the old Jewess, he answered Frau Gudula: "I think, madame, you belong to a more ancient nobility than my own."

Then, in a little access of mischief, he added: "I shall be proud to be connected with you by marriage."

Frau Gudula had played her highest stake for Charlotte's happiness—and had failed! "Give your compliments to my grandchild, Duke Gustavus, and convince her with them if you can. I wash my hands of this marriage. The matter is beyond me. I pray Providence to guide and guard my little girl." With brimming eyes that scarce could see the sunshine, Frau Gudula walked to the door by the great arbor of pink roses and looked at the merry group sipping her beloved Meyer Amschel's burgundy out in the garden. Well, it is not given to every woman to be the wife of a man she can worship. Poor little Charlotte.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

WAIT A WHILE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am 22, and have been keeping company with a certain girl for six weeks. At first it seemed love at first sight, but lately she has grown cold. I buy her candy and flowers and try to please her, and her parents have taken a liking to me. But she now assumes an indifferent air. Do you think my proposal would be accepted? I am madly in love with her.
S. S.

Has it occurred to you that she may have grown tired of seeing so much of you? Try an application of that old adage, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

In any event, a proposal after an acquaintance of only six weeks is apt to be premature.

DON'T LET HIM KNOW.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of 18 years and in love with a man of 30 years. This man is a friend of my folks. He has never taken me out and he is very nice to me, and always talks of getting married. He doesn't know I love him. Please tell me how I could win his love.
A SPANISH GIRL.

Suppose I were to tell you to let him know of your love. You are only 18, and girls of that age transfer their hearts easily. If you let him know of your love to-day, the chances are you will love another man to-morrow. Spare yourself humiliation by keeping your love a secret until he asks for it.

NOT IMPROPER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Do you think it proper for a girl who is keeping steady company to ask the man when she will see him next? A. L. W.

Their intimacy warrants such a question from her, but I would not want her to be urgent or persistent, and it is in better taste if she lets him take the initiative in making future engagements.

MOTHERS SHOULD CALL FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady and wish to know if it is proper for the young lady's mother to call on my mother, or my mother to call on her, my mother being the elder. We will soon be engaged. S. S. L.

Such overtures should come from the family of the man, never from the family of the girl.

THE LADY FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Which is proper: For a lady to greet a gentleman first, or a gentleman to greet a lady, while walking on the street? ARCO.

The lady is the first always to give some sign of recognition.

Do You Know---

Some curious experiences seem to have befallen Mr. William Campbell, late of the Black Watch, who has just finished a 50,000-mile walk, in a kilt, through India, Ceylon, Australia and New Zealand. In Italy his dancing of a Highland fling in the street led to arrest, a New Zealand chief offered him a wife in exchange for his costume, and in Australia he lavished money on eau-de-cologne in order to keep the mosquitoes away from his knees. He was nearly murdered at a religious festival in Ceylon, being taken for a devil.

The Quebec agency of the Canadian Marine Department has received word that a gas buoy which drifted from its position in the lower St. Lawrence River during the winter of 1912 has been picked up by the lightship at Hellewick, New South Wales. It is supposed that the buoy drifted round Cape Horn, a distance of 16,000 miles. The date of the buoy's disappearance is not given, but even if it took place early in the winter of 1911-12 the buoy would have to drift 30 miles a day or more to reach New South Wales in the time.

Snared!

With the Golden Apple of Love for Bait

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

NELL BRINKLEY SAYS

IN this fashion is it done! In the depths of a lovely forest, velveted underfoot in emerald-moss and sewn thick with flowers—forget-me-nots, heartease and such like soft names—hide certain wary wights with very fat cheeks and tummies! Over the runways they set their snares—a cunning loop of golden cord—thrown over a high tree-bough and down, as high from the ground as—a maid's waist. On the green moss under the shining loop (which is so like a slanting sunbeam that a strolling lady would never catch it in her bright eye in the world) they drop a golden apple. And on the golden apple the sun smites hard enough to enchant and blind a maid with its flame. One malicious wight, the coldest-blooded of all, shins up the tree into the leafy green shadow and lies there with his bow drawn and a keen-tipped arrow necked. The rest fall upon the other end of the cord. They hold their breath, their eyes harden and brighten. The feathery curl on the tip top of one's head waves idly in the wind! One itches his pink heel with the toes of his other foot. One breathes too loud and gets a fat knee in his back for his stupidity. They WAIT—the cord a bit slack. Down the runway comes a maid, with soft black hair, primroses over her ears, a narrow slashed skirt (the better to dance the Tango in), silver buckles on her shoes and an unsuspecting sweet blue eye! And the sun on the golden apple smites into her eyes! The wights behind the tree-bole stiffen and dig their toes into the moss. With a little cry the maid pinches up her silken skirt between a forefinger and thumb and runs swiftly—in a soft rush—she dives down with a greedy hand for the apple in the moss. Her head hovers within the big golden loop. She straightens—ah-h-h down slithers the noose over her shoulders—"Heya"—the wights lean and pull like mad, and my lady's body is twirling in midair, her little heels kicking nothing! "Heya!"—the wight in the tree lets his arrow go singing straight to the captive's heart—and another maid is snared!

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The father was impressed of a sudden with the fact that, while this affair was of supreme import to himself, it was, after all, of still greater significance to his son. To himself, the chief concerns were of the worldly kind. To this boy, the vital thing was something deeper, something of the heart; for, however absurd his feeling, the truth remained that he loved the woman. Yes, it was the son's name that Mary Turner had taken, as well as that of his father. In the case of the son, she had taken not only his name, but his very life. Yes, it was, indeed, Dick's tragedy. Whatever he, the father, might feel, the son was, after all, more affected. He must suffer more, must lose more, must pay more with happiness for his folly.

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect, but he could not let the situation go without protest, protest most vehement.

"Dick," he cried, and his big voice was shaken a little by the force of his emotion, "boy, you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow." He stood very erect, staring steadfastly out of his clear gray eyes into those of his son. His heavy face was rigid with feeling; the coarse mouth bent slightly in a smile of troubled fondness, as he added more softly: "You owe me that much."

The son's eyes met his father's freely. There was respect in them, and affection, but there was something else, too, something the older man recognized as beyond his control. He spoke gravely, with a deliberate conviction.

Gilder's Voice Rang Out.

"I owe something to her, too, Dad."

But Gilder would not let the statement go unchallenged. His heavy voice rang out rebukingly, overtoned with protest.

"What can you owe her?" he demanded, indignantly. "She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally, it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. The courts hold that is only a part of the marriage actually. The fact that she doesn't receive you makes it simpler, too. It can be arranged. We must get you out of the scrape."

He turned and went to the desk, as if to sit, but he was halted by his son's answer, given very gently, yet with a note of finality that to the father's ear rang like the crack of doom.

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

That was all, but those plain words summed the situation, made the issue a matter not of advice, but of the heart.

Gilder persisted, however, in trying to evade the integral fact of his son's feeling. Still he tried to fix the issue on the known unsavory reputation of the woman.

"You want to stay married to this jail bird!" he stormed.

"She Is Justified."

A gust of fury swept over the boy. He loved the woman, in spite of all; he respected her, even reverenced her. To hear her thus named moved him to a rage almost beyond his control. But he mastered himself. He remembered that the man who spoke loved him; he remembered, too, that the word of opprobrium was no more than the truth, however offensive it might be to his sensitiveness. He waited a moment until he could hold his voice even. Then his words were the sternest protest that could have been uttered, though they came from no exercise of thought, only out of the depths of his heart.

"I'm very fond of her."

That was all. But the simple sincerity of the saying gripped the father's mood as no argument could have done. There was a little silence. After all, what could meet such loving loyalty?

When at last he spoke Gilder's voice was subdued, a little husky.

"Now that you know?" he questioned.

There was no faltering in the answer.

"Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. Then abruptly the young man spoke with the energy of perfect faith in the woman. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way, in her own mind, anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison. She feels that the world owes her—"

But the older man would not permit the assertion to go uncontradicted. That reference to the woman's innocence was an arraignment of himself, for it had been he who sent her to the term of imprisonment.

"Don't talk to me about her innocence!" he said, and his voice was ominous. "I suppose next you will argue that, because she's been clever enough to keep within the law since she's got out of State's prison, she's not a criminal. But let me tell you—crime is crime, whether the law touches it in the particular case or whether it does not."

Gilder faced his son sternly for a moment, and then presently spoke again with deeper earnestness.

"There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up."

The son met his father's gaze with a level look in which there was no weakness.

"I've told you, Dad—" he began.

"You must, I tell you," the father insisted. Then he went on quickly, with a tone of utmost positiveness. "If you don't, what are you going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters—for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. He was furious at this supposition that she would continue in her irregular practices.

But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the Rogues' Gallery, but they will take another. Yes, and the imprints of her fingers, and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. It was blasphemy to think of her in such case, subjected to the degradation of these processes. Yet, every word had in it the piercing horrible sting of truth. His face whitened. He raised a supplicating hand.

"Father!"

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on, harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine." There was a little pause, and the father stood rigid, menacing. The final question came rasping. "What are you going to do about it?"

Dick went forward until he was close to his father. Then he spoke with profound conviction.

"It will never happen. She will go straight, Dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder once again put his hand tenderly on his son's shoulder. His voice was modulated to an unaccustomed mildness as he spoke.

"Be sensible, boy," he pleaded softly. "Be sensible!"

Dick dropped down on the couch, and made his answer very gently, his eyes unseeing as he dwelt on the things he know of the woman he loved.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"ME and brother Wilfred spent a week-end up in the country, and I have just came back," said the Manicure Lady. "I would rather than not spend all my week-ends in the country, George, because the air is so restful up there, but I guess Wilfred don't want to go back no more to the town where we was.

"You see, George, my poor, deluded brother had an idea that he could sail into the little town where we was going and just tell them that he was from New York. He thought that would make him an idol in said town. I didn't think so for a minute, George, because I know how people is in small towns. They mind their own business and everybody else's, but they don't care a rap where they find out you came from. You might as well try to make a gorilla kiss your hand as to make a small towner respect you because you are a New Yorker. They simply don't care where you are from, and the way they treated my poor brother I guess the bigger the town you came from the less they care."

They Go to Europe.

"I don't blame them," said the Head Barber. "I don't see why a man should figure himself a favorite just because he lives in a little New York flat and rides up and down town in the subway. How is that going to make a man wise? Most of the fellows that was born in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge—the kind that comes in here sometimes to get shaved—ain't got much idea of the great country they are living in. If they save up a little dough, they don't go out to the wonderful Pacific Coast. No; they go to Europe and get bunked. They pay a guide a lot of dough to show them some place where an English king had his nephews choked to death in a tower, and then they come back and tell about their travels."

"I hope you ain't doing a monologue, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I was trying to tell you something about this week-end party, if you are enough of a gent to listen. Well, Wilfred and me reached the town all right, and the minute we got to the hotel and were seated with our country friends around the table, poor brother pulls the very phrase that I asked him not to. 'This is fair,' he says to the company, 'but little old New York for mine.' I knew right off that he had made a bonehead play, because I seen the folks look at each other kind of funny, but he doesn't gete wise, not Wilfred. 'The reason I like Manhattan,' he babbles right on, 'is because Manhattan is the market for brains. I write, as perhaps some of you people know,' says poor brother, 'and the brains of the country, in literature, all flock to New York. If I were a farmer, I would like it up here, but being a writer, I have to be in the heart of the literary world, little old New York.'

A Quiet Fellow.

"There was a nice, quiet-looking fellow in the party, George, that I seen looking over my fool brother kind of sly and unobstructive like. He was dressed rough, because he was on a fishing trip, but I seen right away from his calm, well-bred misdemeanor that he was a gent. He listened a long time while Wilfred was telling them what a terrible strain it is on a writer to keep writing, and he even stood for my brother's reciting some of his own poems right at the table with his mouth full of chow-chow and new bread. Then he got up and went out with a smile at me. I seen then and there that him and me would be good friends, because we both knew Wilfred through and through.

"Honest to goodness, George, do you know who he was? I asked one of the ladies, and she told me. The gent that had been listening to Wilfred's hot air about writing and writers was George Ade, who wrote 'Fables in Slang' and 'Horatius at the Bridge' and 'David Copperfield' and a lot of other books and plays."

"Did Wilfred find out who he was?" asked the Head Barber.

"Sure he did, but it didn't feaze him. He said that the time would go swift for the party with two clever writers at the same table!"

The Care-Free Spin

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE is this difference: She is an Old Maid if she is old fashioned and resigned, and a Bachelor Girl if she fights hard.

It must be dreary to be a Spin and have no husband come home and growl all evening about the high cost of living.

When a Spin knows how to smooth a man's plumage an ideal wife is lost to the world.

No one can save money quite as fast as a Spin after she has put aside the curling iron with the conviction that no man is worth having.

When all her friends unite in saying "What a good time she has," you can bet "She's is either a Spin or a widow.

It is easy to compliment the mother of children, but when a woman has become a real old Spin the only way to reach her is to appeal through what she learned at school.

"The top of her voice" is a common expression, but the top note depends entirely on whether a woman is married or a Spin. Mothers reach a high key through experience in screaming at the children, their husbands and the dog, but the top of a Spin's voice is a low pitch, and when she tries to raise it it becomes a squeal. The top of a mother's voice would stop a fire engine, the top of a Spin's voice isn't loud enough to call the cat home from the next yard.

Once Upon a Time there lived an Old Maid. She did not call herself a Spin. She was frank about it, and admitted she was an Old Maid, despising such subterfuges as Spin and Bachelor Girl. The Old Maid was lonesome, and lonesomeness for an Old Maid is DANGEROUS. She was more lonesome than her friends realized, and one day left Lonesome Land by walking from the altar with a Man. One morning a few years later her husband left the house after a stormy scene, banging the door with such violence that pictures and plates tumbled from the walls. The noise awoke the Twins, and they set up a Howl. "At least," said the ex-Old Maid, as she tried to soothe the crying babies and pick up pictures and broken glass and china at the same time, "I Am No Longer Lonesome." And having said that she said All!

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Have Leghorns Been Bred to Fine Point?

Are They Too Small for the Best Value?—Question Worth Considering.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Have we not bred our Leghorns down to too fine a point to be of the greatest value as egg producers? In other words, are they not too small for the best value?

When I was a boy of 15 I bred first the White and then the Brown Leghorns. At that time both of these varieties were of quite a different type from the standard Leghorn of the present day. They were a good deal larger in frame, longer in body, of a coarser make-up. Their combs were much heavier and had longer serrations or points. As well as I can remember, they laid a larger egg than they do to-day. In carriage, they were lower in front, with body carried more horizontal than the average specimen of to-day. Taken all around, they were of decidedly better egg type, in my way of looking at it.

That a great many strains or families of the Leghorns have been so long to secure the very finest and neatest of combs and the trimmest of tails, and light, fancy shanks supporting a neat little body, no observing poultryman can deny.

I believe also that the average breeder, if he has given the matter a second thought, can see that the present-day Leghorn has not the real stamina and vitality that he should have if he is expected to carry the banner for egg production at the head of the column and not be trampled under foot by his more vigorous rivals.

Consider Size.

Perhaps many of us do not stop to consider the question of size, unless our attention is called to it by someone who has been making comparisons. We have lately seen a number of fowls of this class from the Old Country—a lot from Denmark and some from England. They were all larger than our American birds. This fact alone set us to thinking and wondering if we were not allowing our strains to be too finely bred in the mad rush for prize-winning stock. It may be all right for the fellow who makes his living selling stock and eggs for exhibition purposes. But should we not as producers of commercial eggs look after the utility part of the work? We learned from those who were breeding the Danish stock, and had been experimenting with them for years, that they found them really better layers of larger eggs and they were of a decidedly more robust constitution. For this they were less liable to break down after a season of heavy laying, as many of the finely bred American Leghorns do. Those who have been working with these Danish fowls have been using them both in their purity and crossing them with home-bred stock. They say they have found them very satisfactory when used in both ways. As one of these breeders expresses himself, one can make Bantams out of Brahmas with a few seasons of selecting, starving and breeding at the proper season, etc.

Commercial Business.

But we are not after that kind of stock for the commercial egg business. You who have been following the reports of the present national egg-laying contest are aware how the pen of English Leghorns are holding the lead against all comers, and bid fair to continue that way to the end of the year. This fact alone should be enough to make our Leghorn breeders sit up and take notice.

It looks to us very much like, if this fine type of Leghorn is continued, we will have to have two classes—one called the exhibition type, good only for that purpose, and another for utility, bred to serve its best possible purpose for that. But such a course would not be wise. The fancy should not only cater to the show-room foibles, but look after the real or substantial side of it as well. If this were done, the trade in fine stock would certainly be increased, if all understood it that way. Let there be a meeting upon common ground. For a time, at least, the standard should be so adjusted or modified that a rather large comb, legs stout in bone, body of good length, broad and deep, would be the correct type. In fact, describe a fowl with a little more stamina in its make-up. We would, however, keep it entirely distinct from the Minorca in every line of its make-up. This can easily be done and still get fair size.

Definite Size Standard.

Another thing that should be looked after in considering this matter of size, is that of fixing upon something definite.

Who can tell you what the size of a Leghorn should be? When the novice asks the question as to size or weight, what are we to tell him? Tell him that it is about midway between a Cochin Bantam and a Brahma? If he is sufficiently versed in weights to know what these weigh, he may be able to figure it out, but what nonsenses—why not fix standard weights for the Leghorn and be done with it? This has been my plan for years, but someone says when you put weight to them you put them in the Minorca class. Not a bit of it! The Minorca weights are 6 1-2, 7 1-2, 7 1-2 and 9, for pullet, hen, cockerel and cock, respectively. For the Leghorn class we would suggest weights as follows: Pullet, 4; hen, 5; cockerel, 6, and cock, 7 pounds. You will notice that there is quite a difference between these and the Minorca weights, yet it will give them a standing. We will know where to find them and what to tell people who want to know what their size is. It will place them in a better position in the show room when it comes to deciding special and sweepstake prizes. They will not be handicapped as they now are in these cases.

Let us do a little planning to get the best there is for the utility man, and at the same time not hurt the thoroughbred stock trade. The more in harmony we get these two branches of the trade working, the better for both of them.

Committee to Seek Peachtree Widening

Committee Wants Immediate Relief of Congestion—$5,000 Asked. Realty Notes of Interest.

A meeting of the utmost importance to property owners along downtown Peachtree and to the entire city will be held Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock by the finance committee of the City Council to hear from a representative committee on the pressing need of widening Peachtree from Carnegie Way and Forsyth Street to Harris Street, to relieve traffic congestion that has become almost menacing. Well-known citizens will ask that $5,000 be appropriated immediately for this purpose.

The plan, briefly stated, is to cut five feet from each sidewalk so as to add ten feet for vehicular traffic, and later on to set buildings back so as to create ten-foot sidewalks. The acquisition of ten feet more for vehicles, it is stated, will be sufficient to relieve a condition in traffic that has long been a cause for drastic action.

Among the citizens who have been asked to appear as a committee before the finance committee are Asa G. Candler, Forrest Adair, W. H. Kiser, Robert F. Maddox, John W. Grant, J. H. Ewing, E. W. Alfriend, Carl Witt, Henry H. Schaul, Dr. H. F. Scott, Dr. W. B. Hamby, John E. Murphy, H. L. Cobbs, Will Lowenstein, Hugh Richardson, Virgil and Roy Collier, Willis E. Ragan, Henry S. Jackson, J. H. Gilbert, Dr. J. R. Hopkins and others.

Some time ago citizens, backed up by city and county, guaranteed $50,000 for buying a ten-foot strip at the "bottle neck" (junction of Peachtree and Forsyth Streets and Carnegie Way) for setting buildings back. The Winecoff Hotel was built back in accordance with this plan. This part of the project will not be taken up just now, because the matter of widening to relieve traffic congestion immediately is considered of more pressing importance.

Property owners around Baker and Peachtree Streets also have a plan for cutting off the corners at that point so as to give more room for traffic. This plan will also be taken up later. The proposition is to shave off the front of Dr. J. R. Hopkins' lot at the southeast corner of Baker and Peachtree and take some of the Goldsmith front, controlled by E. W. Alfriend, at the northeast corner. This improvement would serve to reduce the curve of Peachtree and to make it possible for vehicles to pass without danger between cars and corners.

Sidewalks between Harris and Baker on Peachtree have already been widened and it is to further this scheme that the citizens' committee will petition the finance committee. It is estimated that the preliminary work can be done for $5,000, and that it can be accomplished in a short time and without closing the street.

The finance committee considered Monday morning the Whitehall regrade matter, when a number of prominent citizens were heard. Among the speakers was Sam Inman, V. H. Kriegshaber, Walker Dunson and others. No opposition developed, and the advocates of the project anticipate that the plan will be finally approved.

Building Permits.

$5,200—C. Shelverton, 68 Thirteenth Street, two-story frame apartment house. Day work.

$2,750—Keystone Investment Company, 47 Vedado Way, one-story frame dwelling. Day work.

$400—West End Greenhouse, 274 Sells Avenue, greenhouse. Day work.

$25—Smith, Ewing & Lankin, 46 Auburn Avenue, alterations. Day work.

$200—H. E. Eubanks, 82 Loomis Avenue, additions. Day work.

E. V. Moore's Change.

E. V. Moore, formerly general agent of the National Life and Accident Insurance Company and the Interstate Casualty Company, has formed a connection with Porter & Swift, the well-known real estate agents. During his short service as salesman he has made several interesting sales.

To Open Up West Tenth Street.

The proposition to extend the West Peachtree car line from Sixth Street to Tenth, west on Tenth to State and out State to the steel works, is considered in real estate circles to have considerable significance. The entire section west of West Peachtree and north of Sixth is undergoing a rapid development as a residence neighborhood, and it is pointed out that car-line facilities are badly needed. Announcement has been made recently of extensive subdivision work in the neighborhood affected, and more improvements, it is said, will come with the car service.

Interest in Art Gallery.

Several real estate men got busy Monday morning planning a location for Atlanta's proposed $250,000 art gallery, anticipating that possibly it might be deemed desirable to put the institution on private property. The first plan suggested was to put the building on the site of the old Government structure at Piedmont Park, and Haralson Bleckley, well-known architect and author of the Bleckley Plaza plan, drew blueprints for the same. The gallery will cover an extensive territory, and the ground provided for it will be valuable.

For Public Market Site.

Revival of the discussion of a public market, where citizens of Atlanta can buy on a co-operative basis, has attracted the attention of Atlanta real estate men through the possibilities it offers in the way of a site for a location. In nearly every case where a big enterprise is seeking to locate, the realty men find a desirable place. The proposal is to have a bond issue of $500,000 to buy a 200 by 300 foot site and to erect a $250,000 building. Several land brokers declared, however, that they thought this too high a price to pay for a site, and that they could furnish sites for half that amount. A thousand dollars a front foot, said a prominent lease man, will buy a mighty good location for a public market, and it will be close to the center of activities.

SUBURBAN HOMES.

IN INMAN PARK, Edgewood, Kirkwood and Decatur, we have a number of pretty cottages, and a few very attractive larger homes. Most of these places carry all of the conveniences. Kirkwood and Decatur as yet have not the gas, but electric lights and plumbing. This is the time when the country is most attractive, the car service fine, and to remain during the winter is no hardship. Large lots, good schools and churches, and reasonable rents. Let us tell you about these.

CLAIRMONT AVENUE, DECATUR, GA.

ON THE CORNER of Ponce DeLeon, in this pretty little town, within twenty-five minutes' ride of the city, we have this splendid modern eleven-room house, on large corner lot. Would be a choice location for a large private family or for summer boarders. We are offering at low rental to first-class parties.

BUSINESS HOUSES.

IF YOU ARE looking for a business location, either central or in some of the thickly populated suburbs, you should come in and consult our list. We will tell you about these, and we are then ready with comfortable conveyances to show you our properties.

Piedmont Avenue Frontage

We have recently had consigned with us some Piedmont Avenue frontage, ranging in price from $115 per foot to $135 per foot.

These lots are situated on the most desirable part of Piedmont Avenue, being between Twelfth, Thirteenth and Fourteenth Streets, facing Piedmont Park. The scarcity of building lots of this class of property on the north side is easily recognized by anyone who has been looking for a home site recently. The unusually good value offered here will be appreciated by anyone in the market for first-class residence property. Reasonable terms can be arranged.

A Merchant Marine Becomes a Vital Necessity

Congress is Alone to Blame for the Neglect to Build Up a Great, Powerful, Progressive and Prosperous American Merchant Marine in Foreign Trade.

The lack of American merchant ships for the ordinary needs of our Government has been strikingly impressed upon the attention of the new Administration.

Recent developments made it necessary for the Government to secure possession of a considerable number of American merchantmen. They were needed as a precautionary measure, to insure preparedness against any sudden eventuality in which foreign ships could not be used.

THE PITIFULLY SMALL SUPPLY OF SUCH AMERICAN VESSELS BOTH ASTOUNDED AND ALARMED THE GOVERNMENT. Most of the few American vessels that are available are old, in many respects inadequate, and scarcely any of these measure up to urgent needs.

Not only are American merchantmen few and inefficient, but it is found that, even if American ships were now available in large numbers, THERE IS NO CORRESPONDING NUMBER OF TRAINED AND EXPERIENCED AMERICAN MASTERS, OFFICERS AND SEAMEN IMMEDIATELY OBTAINABLE.

The possibly grave consequence of our utter dependence upon foreign merchant ships, their officers and men, who would be unavailable for national needs in time of war, is causing the greatest uneasiness and concern.

American merchant ships, their officers and men, are required in times of emergency for scout purposes, for auxiliary cruisers, to carry troops, coal and ammunition supplies, and for a thousand and one needs for which warships would be neither desirable nor available.

These are serious problems for a new Administration so suddenly to face, and their satisfactory solution is difficult, if not impossible, at the moment.

CONGRESS IS ALONE TO BLAME FOR THE NEGLECT TO BUILD UP A GREAT, POWERFUL, PROGRESSIVE AND PROSPEROUS AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

THE PUNY PROVISION IN THE PENDING TARIFF BILL to merely make a beginning in the upbuilding of American shipping should be and is likely to be so strengthened and buttressed in the Senate as to lay a broad and solid foundation for the establishment of an effective and enduring American maritime policy.

The little so far provided has provoked the impudent protests of foreign nations that are determined to prevent, if they can, the maritime independence of the United States. The present conditions are far too useful and too profitable for these foreign monopolists to willingly relinquish.

EVERY NATIONAL INSTINCT OF PRESERVATION AND PROSPERITY SHOULD IMPEL CONGRESS TO IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Should steps be taken at once to remedy our intolerable dependence upon foreign merchant shipping, it will take years for the United States to reach a state of efficient preparedness in American merchant ships, officers and men, for either the ordinary or the emergency requirements of our Government and the peaceful transportation of our imports and exports. It is high time to make a beginning.

We have discovered shortcomings in several important particulars in naval equipment. BUT NOTHING HAS SO PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSED THE GOVERNMENT AT THIS TIME AS THE PRESSING NEED OF A GREAT AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, WISELY REGARDED AND OFFICIALLY STATED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON AS "ESSENTIAL TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE."

It would indeed be thoughtless and cowardly if, in this crisis in American affairs, the sinister protests of foreign governments against immediate and adequate legislative provision for the upbuilding of American deep sea shipping should receive the slightest consideration.

Are Women as Foolish as Men?

"We were introduced at a restaurant and four days later we were married and the next day he deserted me and ran away with $4,000 worth of my jewelry and money." This is the unvarnished narrative told by a woman who had a man arrested out west the other day.

This same woman would watch the iceman like a hawk, for fear he would give her only eight cents worth of ice instead of the ten cents worth she paid for. She would inspect her grocery and butcher bill, and the laundress does not wash who could get a penny ahead of her at the Monday suds festival. She submits her agent's reports as to rents or investments to the family lawyer, and she even keeps a shrewd and questioning eye on the lawyer himself.

But she meets a man in a restaurant, hearkens to his story that he is the temporarily embarrassed heir to a million or two, and hands herself and her fortune over to him without as much care as she bestows on the inspection of the chicken she buys for the family dinner.

Ordinarily the victim of the sort of sharper who despoiled the woman quoted above is not an ignorant, unsophisticated girl; on the contrary, she is commonly a mature woman, and not infrequently one who has had one or two whirls at the matrimonial lottery.

When we shake our heads at the credulity of such women we should not ascribe their misfortune to the feminine type of mind.

Remember, when you feel how superior men are to that sort of deception, that the gold-brick swindle and the green goods game, the Spanish prisoner trap and wire-tapping delusion continue year after year to earn fortunes for the rogues who have the hardihood to perpetrate them.

There are lots of foolish women in the world—almost as many as foolish men.

A Little Flattery Will Make a Man Do Anything

What Do You Like to Read About?

By WINIFRED BLACK.

"WHAT do you like to read about?" said the Man to me.

I stared. "I mean," said the Man, "what sort of folks—people in castles, with retainers and 'heirs' birthdays,' or people on yachts, with butlers and valets, or people out West, with Sheriffs and bad men dropping in to supper, and the wind blowing in from the desert and the coyotes yelping on the great red mountains in the dusky distance?"

"Oh," said I, "I don't like any of those people. I like folks—just plain folks. No, not 'folksy folks' with dialects—the women, with shawls on their heads that run in and gossip all about 'What made Maria stay an old maid so long?' and 'Who's goin' to git Mirandy, now Si's gone?' bore me to tears; and I can't bear the fair young schoolma'am who goes out West and makes the biggest boy fall in love with her, and then they go back home to visit, and he shocks the whole village by saying 'Darn it!' and wearing a red cowboy handkerchief instead of a collar.

Maids Don't Worry Me.

"I like to read about the sort of people I know myself, every day in the week—the woman with the fussy husband; the woman with the boy she hopes will be a genius, and he turns out to be just a lazy dreamer; the woman with the little girl who won't take music lessons, no matter how she tries to make her; the man with the business down-town, and the rival over the way trying to take it away from him; the girl on the stage who plays real parts and gets real criticisms; the newspaper man who doesn't beat the town the very first time he goes out on a story; the people who have comfy homes and a decent picture or two, and a lot of good books and some dogs, and either children or the hope of children.

"No, I don't care for butlers in mine, though if the butler belongs in the story I don't mind him at all; I only hate to have him dragged in by the heels to prove that the man who employs him really is no end of a swell.

"Valets? Yes, a valet is all right, if he isn't insisted on. Lots of fairly every-day men have valets—actors and musicians and other helpless creatures.

"Maids don't worry me—nor chauffeurs—as long as they stay discreetly in the background, but I must say secretaries and nursery governesses and under-gardeners and special trains and too many yachts do disconcert me a little. I always have to stop and add up what it would cost to have an establishment like that, and that interferes with the plot.

"No, I hate the Dickey and the Algy story, with the 'little gell in white' and her managing mama. I never can quite believe there are such helpless geese in the world as that little gell, and if I knew anyone like the 'managing mama' I'd have her locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

"Yes, it's folks I like—everyday folks—plain Americans, with plain American troubles and plain American joys, like buying a machine after you've saved for it for a year; and Daughter's graduating essay; and Son's first love affair.

The Chocolate-Cream Age.

"That's why I always choose a woman's stories, all other things being equal, I guess."

"The man looked at me more in sorrow than in anger. "Are all women like you?" he said. "I don't believe it. I believe they like to read about ropes of pearls and strings of emeralds and cables of real coral—and gowns of filmy lace—or a——"

"That's the chocolate-cream age," I said. "They do, of course. That's because they are always hoping they'll be one of those heroines themselves some day, and they want to have the fun of planning their filmy gowns and thinking how sweet they'll look in the ropes and chains and things. When the woman is past wanting to read about people like herself, it heals her to realize that she isn't the only human being who has trouble keeping the expense accounts within scolding limits. What do you like to read about, Mr. Man?"

The man took a long pull on his pipe. "I like to read about damsels fair, and shady bowers, and nodding violets, and dashing cavaliers," he said, "and noble heroes, and soldiers of fortune—and quests, and all that. If anyone dares to hand me a book about 'How I Made My Money' or 'What I Did to Down the Lemon Trust' I'll make him wish he'd committed suicide that time he almost wanted to."

And then we both began to reconsider and talk it over, and we both decided that we really don't care so much about who the hero of the story was. The main thing is, who wrote it?

There's Bret Harte. He could take a bank clerk and cast such a sparkling veil of romance about him that his every pen flourish would mean sentiment. And as for the common little red-haired person he fell in love with—why, she'd be a wood nymph, a fairy, a siren from the cool green sea, even if she lived in a hall bedroom and ate 'weenies' and chocolate for supper.

Cable! Do you ever hunt up Cable's houses down in New Orleans? Dirty old tumble-down places, seen with everyday eyes. Look through the magic glasses of Cable, and you're in Elysia, the land of fair women and brave men. There's even something romantic about a piece of candied lemon peel when the right sort of man tells about it.

It Isn't the Subject.

No, it isn't the subject; it's the way it is handled, after all, we agreed, the man and I. There's so and so, the special writer on the Daily Enterprise. He'd write about a fire in a boiler factory, and make you hold your breath to find out whether the Maltese cat got out alive or not. And there's his brother on the Daily Scream, would tell the story of a plot to assassinate every beautiful woman in America, and keep you yawning all the way through. It isn't the story; it isn't the people in the story—it's the writer that matters.

"But still," said I to the Man, "all things being equal, I want folks in my stories—folks that I know."

"Gossip," said the man. And we both went and got our own particular kind of book and settled down to our own particular kind of evening, and were perfectly satisfied. What fun it is to talk these things over once in a while! Isn't it?

Awake at Last to Navy's Needs

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

COL. GRAVES.

THERE are substantial evidences of a reviving patriotism and common sense in the American Congress toward the American navy.

When Secretary Daniels was banqueted week before last in Savannah one of the speakers was Congressman Edwards, of the Savannah district. Mr. Edwards has been heretofore apathetic, if not openly antagonistic, to the ample navy program. On this latest occasion he said that, however indifferent and economic his views had been toward the navy, the recent international interchanges with Japan had opened his eyes and fixed him definitely and firmly as an advocate and champion of a greater navy.

Others Changed.

"Henceforth," said Mr. Edwards, "if the naval experts of the Government advise Congress that we need three battleships, or four battleships, or even five, I am for the navy and whatever it needs to defend our country. The anxieties aroused by our unpreparedness against Japan must never be repeated in America."

Savannah is one of the ultra-conservative cities of the South, and Congressman Edwards is notably conservative, cautious and economical. His complete conversion is in the highest degree significant of the awakening of Congress.

It is even so with Congressman Poor, of the Raleigh District of North Carolina, Secretary Daniels' district.

Mr. Poor has also been among the conservatives on the naval program of the House. The Japanese contention and the developments of our naval unpreparedness, as exposed by the Hearst newspapers, have aroused the North Carolinan to the perils of an undefended country and the necessity for a navy ample for our Western and Eastern Coasts. He is openly and heartily for the ample navy.

On the lips of scores of anti-navy Congressmen there are expressions similar to these. It is actually true that the naval information and comparisons developed by the recent international controversy have changed the spirit of the national Congress on this vital question of the national defense.

The American Congress and the American people have slept for years upon the idea that our "splendid isolation" protected our country, and that in case of war our navy and army were equal to every demand of defense and offense. Congress and some of the people have had the same feeling toward foreign nations that the South had toward the North preceding the Civil War. "One Southerner can whip a dozen Yankees," said some.

One Southern statesman declared in a public speech, "Why, we can whip the Yankees with popguns!" Challenged upon this assertion after the war was over, the orator responded: "Well, so we could, but the d—d fellows wouldn't fight that way!"

Awake at Last.

Our country has waked up at last to the fact that it is not immune from war, that it is not invincible in war, that it is not prepared for war.

The awakening will do us good. It is worth this flurry with Japan to have educated the American people and their representatives to an understanding of our real condition and of our national dangers.

I feel that the Hearst newspapers have performed a signal and patriotic service in helping to this national understanding. These newspapers can be indifferent to any criticism of sensationalism in the consciousness that more than any other American newspapers they have taught the people something about their navy.

Public opinion is coming to stand for the idea that preparedness in war is the best promoter of peace. The long centuries of exemption from attack that England's great navy has bought for England is teaching our people that they have a right to expect from their representatives just such an insurance policy against war.

Gatling Philosophy.

The treason of Congress against the Navy is not likely to be repeated in this generation.

The policy of national preparedness also pervades our national officials—always excepting Mr. Bryan, whose "doves" and "swans" and "flowers of rhetoric" delight the Chautauquas.

Secretary Daniels said to Mr. Gatling, of the Gatling gun: "Are you not conscience smitten over your invention? Do not your guns keep you from sleeping because of the people they have destroyed and may destroy?"

To which Mr. Gatling answered:

"My guns have saved more lives than they have ever destroyed. The existence of them and the knowledge of their destructiveness keep nations from war and mobs from bloody riots. The Gatling gun is a peace-maker."

And Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, is tremendously impressed just now with the Gatling philosophy.

Perhaps we shall have national cause to thank Japan and the Hearst newspapers!

How Opening of the Panama Canal Will Aid Historical Research

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AFTER the Panama Canal is opened we may begin to learn the true history of Ancient America.

Many readers may be unaware that this new world, as we call it, contains one of the oldest of all historical mysteries, and, in fact the very oldest if as some maintain, it forms a direct connection with the story of the lost continent of Atlantis.

Buried in the tropical jungles of Central America there are the ruins of once splendid cities, whose remains of a gigantic architecture are covered with hieroglyphics more puzzling than those of ancient Egypt, for no man has yet succeeded in discovering a complete key to their meaning. They guard their secret more jealously than the Sphinx.

Ruins of Temples.

Their origin is ascribed to a practically vanished race called the Mayas, related to the Aztec of Montezuma's Empire, but far excelling the ancient Mexicans in everything except warlike power. The ruins of their temples at Palenque, Copan, Peten and elsewhere, excite the wonder of the traveler, and contain some of the most beautiful and elaborate carving that can anywhere be found.

They had not only an exquisite picture language, but also a written language, of which undecipherable manuscripts yet exist.

They built about forty towns, connected by stone-paved roads. They had a postal system, conducted by means of swift-footed carriers who ran from town to town over the paved roadways. Sometimes they were at war with one another, and then armies marched to battle on the same roads.

They were skilful agriculturists, and cultivated broad fields, which are now overgrown with mossy trees and tangled vines and shrubs. They raised cotton and wove it into garments.

They made beautiful ornaments of gold and semi-precious stones, and were more skillful even than the Aztecs in feather work.

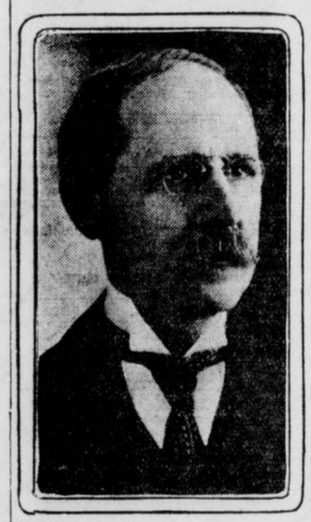
The designs carved on their buildings and ornamental, or symbolic, structures are of great beauty and astonishing perfection in detail. They covered the walls of rooms with brilliant paintings on stucco.

They Have Vanished.

Strange to say, the people believed to be descended from these Mayas are unable to throw any light upon the history of their supposed ancestors.

All their civilization has vanished, and with it, apparently, all memory of the ancient splendors of the race.

Some of the figures carved by the Mayas bear such striking resemblance to similar things found in the ancient ruins of the Old



GARRETT P. SERVISS.

World that the suggestion has been made that a connection formerly existed across the Atlantic Ocean, and this is the origin of the theory that the ancestors of the Mayas dwelt on the fabled continent of Atlantis, which Plato heard had been sunk in the western ocean ages before his time.

One of the strangest facts about the ancient land of the Mayas has recently been called to attention by Dr. Ellsworth Hunington. It is this: At present the whole district possesses a climate so warm, moist and debilitating that it is almost the worst place on the globe for human habitation.

The ruins of the ancient cities, instead of lying amid deserts, and under a burning sun, as happens with most of the abandoned capitals of the East, are so overgrown with tangled vegetation and enveloped in feverstricken swamps that some of them are nearly unapproachable.

The conclusion is that within the past two thousand years, a vast change of climate has occurred in that part of America, and that in the days of Mayan civilization the earth's climatic zones were shifted in such a manner that the land occupied by this remarkable people enjoyed very different atmospheric conditions from those that prevail there now.

Peten, one of their most important cities, which has not yet been well explored on account of the difficulties of approach, lies in the midst of a region which is, at present, very sparsely peopled, and where it would be impossible to cultivate the land as it was cultivated in the days of the Mayas.

May Be Read in Full.

Only by such a supposition, it is thought, can a rational explanation be found for the fact that the highest native civilization that this continent had developed before the white man came, was centered about a location which is now a deadened and almost uninhabitable wilderness.

When the Panama Canal has become a great highway, and the attention of the world has been turned upon its surroundings, fresh light is likely to be thrown upon this fascinating mystery.

Then the Mayan hieroglyphics may be read in full, and a hidden chapter of American history thrown open.

MR. BRYAN'S TOAST

Editor The Georgian:

You devote much of your space to Mr. Bryan. Will you please reproduce a portion of his toast at the Army and Navy Club, given at the farewell banquet to the Commissioners from Great Britain and Canada? Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: I have delivered three addresses of welcome to our visitors, but will have but one word of farewell, and that is in keeping with the environment which surrounds us this morning. We are met in the building of the Army and Navy Club, and the fact that we are the guests of those who represent those two arms of the Government suggests the thought which I present in bidding you adieu. While we are the advocates of peace, we are really engaged in the construction of a battleship which is to be the very culmination—the climax—of the seaman's art. Man has been engaged in the construction of water craft since the flapping sail first whispered its secret of strength to the voyager. He has designed vessels for pleasure, for commerce and for war. We have had the galley, the viking's ship, the frigate, the ironclad and the dreadnought. But no limit can be placed to the ambitions of man as a builder, and I ask you to join me in proposing a toast to a ship more potent than any which man has thus far employed in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart. Its shells are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.

HABERSHAM KING.

WHO ARE THE BRIBERS AND GRAFTERS? — FELDER MUST PROVE CHARGES

The charges of bribery and graft made by Thomas B. Felder are so important they can not be ignored. Statements by Chief Beavers and Chief of Detectives Lanford make it clear that some persons of influence are trying to use their "pull" to bring about a condition of affairs in the city that the majority of people are opposed to.

Investigation quick and relentless must be begun at once! The Grand Jury is now in session, and the investigation should be started at once.

The public is entitled to know all the facts, know the names of those giving or receiving bribes, and if Felder has seen a "graft list," as he says he has, he should be made to tell about it.

The public is not willing to believe anything against Beavers. He is regarded as honest and efficient. Felder must be made to prove his charges!

BEAVERS AND LANFORD TO PROSECUTE FELDER

Mayor Woodward Accused by Beavers in a New Statement

'HUB' TALLEY FATALLY WOUNDS ACCUSER

"Hub" Talley, a notorious police character, shot and probably fatally wounded George Blackstock, known as "Crip," just before noon Monday, and made his escape before police officers arrived.

The shooting took place on the sidewalk in front of 224 Peters Street, near the place where "Hub" Talley and his brother, Boyce Talley, lived. Talley was in his shirt sleeves. After shooting Blackstock, he went to his room and put on his coat, returned to Peters Street and walked away.

Information secured by John West, special call officer, and Eugene Coker, detective, who went to the scene, tended to show the shooting followed a charge of larceny made by Blackstock against Talley. Blackstock was said to have told Boyce Talley, who is a horse trader, that "Hub" stole some whisky out of his, Boyce's, room. The two were on Peters Street.

Talley Fires One Shot.

Boyce told "Hub," and the latter, incensed, hurried down to Peters Street before Blackstock left and asked him if he had made the accusation. Blackstock said, "Yes," and Talley drew his revolver and fired one shot, which found lodgment just above Blackstock's heart.

Blackstock is a stonemason, living at 66 Crumley Street. He was hurried to Grady Hospital, where his condition was pronounced precarious. He refused to make any statement whatever regarding the shooting.

Blackstock is well known personally to police officials, but actual points in his career are difficult to obtain.

42 Cases Against Him.

"Hub" Talley has one of the longest police records ever made in Atlanta. Dozens of times he has been arrested for liquor selling, his persistence in violating the liquor laws having gained for him the sobriquet of "The Blind Tiger King."

He has figured in numerous shooting escapades. Last year the Atlanta detective department compiled his record and found there had been 42 cases against him in two years. A week or two later a writ of lunacy was taken out against him and he was sent to the insane asylum at Milledgeville, from which he was later released on parole.

When report was made to police headquarters that Talley had escaped telegrams were sent out, giving his description and the crime for which he is wanted.

Ends Hunger Strike With 24 Doughnuts

DENVER, COLO., May 26.—Assemblyman Bacon, charged with slaying his wife and step-daughter, ended his hunger strike of over 124 hours when he drank two gallons of buttermilk and ate two dozen doughnuts.

He apparently is none the worse for his long fast.

"THE TEN" CLUB TO MEET WITH JUDGE M. W. BECK

Members of "The Ten" Club will be guests of Judge Marcus W. Beck at his home in Columbia Avenue, Friday, June 6.

The paper for the afternoon will be "Compulsory Education." It will be discussed by Messrs. Brittain and Purser.

Liners Collide; Aid Called by Wireless

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIGO, SPAIN, May 26.—The steamship Taitus collided to-day with the steamer Inca off the northwestern coast of Spain and both were badly damaged. The Taitus was able to proceed toward Corunna and the Niagara started at top speed to aid the Inca. The Inca is a British ship of 1,904 tons, hailing from London.

The position of the Inca became so perilous that her passengers were transferred to the British ship Garthcastle, bound from Wellington to London.

Mikado Improves; Empress Now Ill

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

TOKIO, May 26.—Just as Emperor Yoshihito has become convalescent from his recent attack of pneumonia, his imperial consort, Empress Sadako, has fallen ill.

At Aoyama Palace it was announced to-day that the Empress is suffering from a cold and fatigue brought on by her vigil at the Emperor's bedside.

She will not attend to-morrow's meeting of the Japanese Red Cross, as she had promised to do.

Woman Witness in Gibson Case Missing

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May 26.—Simultaneously with the opening today of the second week of the trial of Lawyer Burton W. Gibson, charged with drowning Countess Rosa Menschik Szabo, in Greenwood Lake, on July 16 last, in order to get her estate, it was reported that one of the new witnesses for the prosecution had disappeared.

This witness, a woman, is reported to have witnessed the drowning.

Tillman Asks Inquiry Of Armor Contract

WASHINGTON, May 26.—Senator Tillman, chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to-day said the fact that Secretary Meyer had let a contract for 8,000 tons of armor for the battleship Pennsylvania the very day before the Republican administration went out of power was sufficient to justify an investigation.

"Doesn't that fact suggest," said the Senator, "that there were some political debts to pay?"

Hold-Up Man Shoots Girl and Her Escort

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 26.—With a bullet in her own body and her sweetheart dead at her side, Julia Probert, aged 16, drove eight miles over a muddy road here at midnight Sunday.

The girl was driving with George Steele, aged 18. They were held up by a foreigner, who demanded money. Steele refused him and the highwayman shot them.

LAY BRIBERY EFFORT TO FRANK'S FRIENDS

Chief of Detectives Lanford was given two papers Monday accusing friends of Leo M. Frank of attempting to bribe a man and a woman to swear that they saw Mary Phagan at 10:30 Saturday night, April 26, at a soda fountain at Marietta and Forsyth Streets.

These papers were given Lanford by A. S. Colyar, whose entrance into the Phagan case has been marked by one sensation after another. Colyar told Lanford that the papers were copies of sworn affidavits and that he had the originals which he would produce at the proper time. The copies are not signed.

Haas Denies Charge.

Emphatic denial that he had in any manner resorted to bribery in behalf of Frank was made by Herbert Haas, well-known Atlanta attorney and friend of the pencil factory superintendent. Mr. Haas further declared that any intimation that he had sought to bribe anyone was absolutely false.

Two Affidavits Alleged.

Colyar said that one of the affidavits was signed by the woman it was sought to bribe and the other by the man, a traveling salesman. Five hundred dollars each is said by the alleged copies of the affidavits to have been offered to the man and the woman for their testimony.

Colyar alleges that the woman was brought here from Birmingham with the intention of inducing her to swear to the statement that she saw Mary Phagan late Saturday night. He said that he knew where she was at the present time, although the friends of Frank thought that she had left the city.

Another report of attempted bribery was submitted to Chief Lanford by Will Henson, of 12 Leonard Street. Henson told Lanford that he had been informed by Mrs. Edmondson, mother of little Monteen Stover, of 175 South Forsyth Street, that a man had come to her house and asked how much she (Mrs. Edmondson) would take to keep Monteen out of town until after the trial had concluded.

Swore Frank Wasn't in Office.

Monteen Stover is the girl who is reported to have gone to the factory at 12:05 o'clock Saturday afternoon and to have been unable to find Frank in his office, although he swore he was there all the time from the moment that Mary Phagan left his office until Lemmie Quinn is said to have entered at about 12:20.

After hearing the report, made to Chief Lanford, that an offer had been made to her to keep her daughter, Monteen Stover, out of Atlanta till after the trial of Frank, Mrs. Edmondson dictated a denial to a Georgian reporter. Her statement follows:

Mrs. Fomby Not at Home.

"No, there has been nothing like that at all. There has been no offer of money, or anything else, for my daughter to leave Atlanta. There has been nothing but just her little testimony you saw in the papers, and no improper offers have been made to either me or her."

The detectives also are working on reports that Mrs. Mima Fomby, of 400 Piedmont Avenue, the woman who reported that Frank had called her up several times by phone on Saturday night, has been approached by several persons who have attempted to bribe her to alter the statements contained in her affidavit.

Mrs. Fomby has not been seen at her residence for two days. She is said to be out of the city visiting friends.

Old Feud Results In Second Killing

HAWKINSVILLE, GA., May 26.—Jerry Perdue shot and killed Davis Walker in a quarrel at Hartford, across the river from Hawkinsville.

Some months ago Perdue killed the father of young Walker. He was acquitted on a self-defense plea. Since then there had been bitter feeling between Walker's sons and Perdue. This feeling, inflamed by liquor, resulted in the second killing.

Perdue was shot in the leg, and a bystander, W. H. Davis, was seriously wounded.

EVIDENCE AGAINST FRANK CONCLUSIVE, SAY POLICE

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford Monday announced that the mystery of the Mary Phagan tragedy is solved, as nearly as is possible without the absolute, direct testimony of eyewitnesses, and expressed himself as perfectly satisfied with the evidence now in hand.

Accompanying this statement comes the authoritative announcement that the great strangling crime will be placed on Leo M. Frank, now under indictment on the charge of murder, and that Newt Lee, the suspected negro night watchman of the National Pencil Factory, will not be indicted. Lee will be held in jail until the trial as a material witness and will be placed on the stand to give evidence against the factory superintendent.

Lee has completely been eliminated from the case as a suspect, and is now counted as one of the strongest witnesses against Frank.

"There is not the slightest doubt of the innocence of Newt Lee," said Chief Lanford. "I'm certain he has told all he knows of the death of Mary Phagan."

Can Hold Lee Indefinitely.

No further action nor proceedings of any kind will be necessary to hold the night watchman for the trial. He was ordered by the Coroner's jury held for investigation by the Grand Jury, and until the latter body either returns an indictment or a "no bill," he can not be freed from jail.

It is the plan of the State, it is understood, to defer action on his case by the Grand Jury until after the trial of Frank. He will then be released.

The great advantage gained by the State in holding Lee as a material witness is that he can be cross-examined when he goes on the stand. By this means the State can bring out every possible circumstance against Frank that has been related by the negro.

Were he indicted as an accomplice, or on any other charge, and appear in court as a defendant, Lee would merely make such statement as he chose and could not be cross-examined by either the State or the defense.

The refusal of the Grand Jury to indict Lee is one of the shrewdest moves yet made by the prosecution. It came as a great surprise, as it generally had been conceded that both Frank and Lee would be indicted, either jointly or Frank as principal and Lee as accessory.

Lanford Is Satisfied.

Chief Lanford, in declaring himself satisfied with the status of the case, said that the real work of his detectives is now over, and that all that remains for them to do is to knit some of the circumstances together and strengthen a few of the weak points. He said the case was circumstantial.

WILL TAKE CHARGE OF GRAFT TO GRAND JURY FOR VINDICATION

Chief of Police Beavers and Chief of Detectives Lanford both stated emphatically Monday that they intended to go to the full limit of the law in making Thomas B. Felder prove his charges of graft in the police department.

Both Beavers and Lanford will take the matter before the Grand Jury, and they will take other action in the courts against Felder forthwith.

Chief Beavers shortly before noon held a conference with City Attorney Mayson, after which he announced that he would take the whole matter of alleged attempted bribery and "conspiracy against him" before the Grand Jury next Friday.

The chief was advised by the City Attorney that this was the proper course to pursue. He declined to specifically name all of those who will be involved, remarking that he will lay all of his evidence before the grand jurors and ask indictments.

They do not intend to let Felder's statements go with a simple newspaper denial made by them. They intend to have a thorough investigaton, and they intend further to make Felder come forward with his evidence or take the consequences; and the consequences, they intend, shall be the fullest penalty that the law can inflict upon him.

SAY THEY WILL BARE "SECRETS."

Both Beavers and Lanford have determined to go at the matter systematically, thoroughly and in a legal way; and they intend that the investigations before the Grand Jury and in the courts will lay bare all the "secrets" that Felder is alleged to have of bribery and graft in the police department; and also make public the reasons Mayor Woodward has in the attempt to restore the restricted vice district in Atlanta.

It is regarded as certain that Felder is eliminated entirely from the Phagan case. It had been believed that he really was in the employ of the Frank defense up to the time that he began to bombard the public with statements against Frank and went on record in saying he believed in the guilt of Frank.

In making this statement, saying he believed in the guilt of Frank, he takes the same position as that of Lanford and Beavers, who also are convinced of Frank's guilt.

CAN'T APPEAR FOR FRANK.

Felder, therefore, can not appear as an attorney for Frank, nor he is wanted by the prosecution as an attorney to aid in prosecuting the case. It would seem, therefore, that he has no standing in the Phagan matter at all.

Both Beavers and Lanford state positively that the evidence collected by the police department in the Phagan case points to Frank's guilt, and that all the evidence collected by the Burns Agency and the Pinkerton Agency simply confirm that belief.

They add that no new evidence, not already secured by the city detectives, was produced by either Burns or the Pinkerton men.

Mayor Woodward to-day issued a statement denying Chief Beavers' assertion that he was eager for the restoration of the restricted district, and declaring that if Beavers and Chief Lanford framed the dictograph plot they were unfit to hold office, and should be ousted.

Mayor Eager to Bring Back Tenderloin, Declares Chief

Chief of Police James L. Beavers issued a statement Monday forenoon defying his accusers to prove that he had been guilty of any act of moral turpitude as Chief of Police or as a citizen.

He characterized the attack by Colonel Thomas B. Felder merely as an effort to detract attention from his own (Felder's) actions.

Referring to A. S. Colyar, in his sweeping denial of the charges that have been made against the police department, he made the pertinent observation, that it many times required a crook to turn up another crook."

"I never heard of A. S. Colyar, Jr., until this thing came up. He may be a crook, as far as I know. It seems that Mr. Felder has known for a long time that it is no uncommon thing for one crook to turn up another or turn State's evidence. When I heard of this deal that Mr. Felder was trying to make in the Phagan case I told Chief Lanford to confer with Solicitor Dorsey and get his advice in the matter, as I did not want anything done that was not perfectly legitimate.

"This he did, and G. C. February, who is a trusted man in the detective department, was instructed to carry out the deal with him.

"It appears that Mr. Felder has been associated with this man Colyar for a long time and certainly should know what manner of man he is. If he knew him to be a crook, why did he enter into a deal of this sort with him, if he wanted to do the straight thing?

"I say I never heard of this man Colyar, but I would have listened to any report or rumor in hunting for the guilty party in a case like the Phagan mystery. It seems that Mr. Felder in his ramifications through the press tried to get eloquent and attempted to tell about the Government of Scotland and the conditions in Ireland, as if that had anything to do with the case. He is simply trying to attract attention away from what he has done.

"As for any evidence he claims to have about my moral turpitude as chief of police or as a citizen, I defy him or any one else to show it. If he is the good, loyal citizen that he claims to be, why did he not lay this evidence before the Police Commission? He knows well enough that if he had anything damaging to the police department he would have hurried to lay it before the proper authorities.

Raps Woodward.

"I see that Mr. Woodward says that he has nothing against me personally. Now, I don't quite understand his connection with the Felder-Colyar affair. He knew that February was a trusted employee of the police department, and that if February knew of any crookedness in the department Mr. Woodward should have forced him to divulge it in the proper way or seen that he was thrown out of the department.

"If Febuary had known anything of the kind and not made it known, he would have been equally guilty. Mr. Woodward knows that in his frequent talks with me since he has been Mayor there has hardly been a time that he did not bring up the question of the red light district.

"He gave me to understand in his first talk with me that these women should be allowed to go back to Manhattan Avenue, where they had previously plied their nefarious trade. No longer than Saturday a week ago he asked me if I was willing for Eva Clark and her mother to move into a house on Armstrong Street in front of Grady Hospital, where she had previously lived. I told him I would answer him as I did Alderman McClelland, that it was none of my business where she moved, provided she did not violate the law. But if she did she would have to suffer the consequences.

Not Afraid of Graft.

"Mr. Woodward told me the first of the year that if my vice policy was continued that the police department would soon be reeking with graft like the New York police department. I told him that I was not afraid of any graft in the police department, but that from what I had heard certain people in Atlanta, outside of the police department, had been receiving money from this vice traffic that virtually amounted to graft and extortion.

"I am willing and ready to compare my past record, both as a citizen and an official, with that of Mr. Woodward and leave the public to judge between us as to which is in the right and which in the wrong."

Felder Prepares Reply to Beavers.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder declined this morning to answer the new statement of Chief Beavers, saying all his statements hereafter would be written.

"I have decided," said Colonel Felder, "to make no more statements except in writing. I will not write anything to-day.

"I am now working up this case. In due season I will make an appropriate reply."

Mayor Gives Out Sizzling Reply to Chief Beavers

Mayor James G. Woodward Monday gave out a sizzling interview in reply to Police Chief Beavers' accusations, which he concluded with this statement:

"If Beavers and Lanford authorized February, 'a trusted man,' to go out and tell lies about corruption in the department in an effort to trap somebody, they are unworthy to hold the places they occupy, and the sooner they are put out the better it will be for the police department and the city.

"February has proved that he is not fit to serve in the police department in any capacity."

Mayor Woodward, before beginning his statement, said he wanted to make it clear that he was vigorously opposed to public controversies with heads of departments. He said it was not the way to run the city's business, and but for Chief Beavers' attack, which misrepresented his position, he would say nothing.

Never Urged Reopening.

He said:

"I have never urged a reopening of the Tenderloin to Beavers.

"I told him it would be reopened as a result of a public demand for the interests of society because of the scattered conditions of vice all over the city.

"I have never placed a straw in the way of his vice crusade. When I have called him to my office to talk to him about it, it was to refer complaints to him—complaints of bad conditions in respectable sections.

"One day when he came to my office I referred to him a letter from a mother of little children who said there was an immoral place near her home and that she had written to Chief Beavers some ten days before and nothing had resulted from it.

Explains Eva Clark Affair.

"All I ever heard from the case was that the occupants of the bad house quieted down.

"The Eva Clark matter is very simple. She called me over the telephone and said she, with her mother, wanted to move into a house near the Grady Hospital and live respectably. I laid the whole matter before Beavers just as she appealed to me.

"I have called Beavers to task only with the view to getting him to clean up the streets so this city will be safe for respectable women.

"When February came to me with a tale about being able to get evidence from the safe at the police station which would prove that Beavers and Lanford were protecting disorderly houses and 'blind tigers' I knew it was either true or he was lying, and I decided for the time being to give him the benefit of the doubt and investigate.

"If I had known that that visit to the Williams House would be the last time I would see him I would have shown him up for the liar that he is. But in the interest of the public I decided to give him sufficient leeway to get at the truth of the graft charges."

"Plenty of Room for Graft."

Then he paid his respects to Beavers and Lanford for their part in the plot.

"I want to say it looks like there is plenty of room for graft," he continued. "Where there is so much smoke there must be some fire. And I am just as anxious to get at the truth as I was the day they thought they were trapping me with a dictograph.

"Eliminating Colyar and Felder, I think the connection of the police heads with this affair casts a dirty reflection on them. It reveals them as unfit."

Chairman Carlos H. Mason Monday declined to comment on the situation. He said it might come before the Police Commission and that he would then have to act in the capacity, but he did not believe the commission would take it up. He did not fail, however, to declare his confidence in the integrity of the heads of the police department and to say he thought the department was clean.

HEALTHY LIVER MAKES BEAUTY

Famous Actress Finds That a Healthy Liver Is Necessary to Good Looks and Youthfulness.

One of the best known women of the American stage is writing a series of articles on the preservation of beauty. She attaches great importance to keeping the liver active at all times, and she is right. Neither good looks nor happiness will stay long with any man or woman who lets the liver get lazy and sluggish.

It is not always safe to take calomel, the old liver remedy. Doctors agree that it is a very uncertain drug. But any dealer or drug store has a remedy for sale that they guarantee to take the place of calomel absolutely, and still be harmless, causing no restriction of habit or diet. This remedy is Dodson's Liver Tone.

Dodson's Liver Tone is a pleasant-tasting vegetable liquid, but it starts the liver gently and surely and relieves constipation and biliousness so promptly that it has become a dependable remedy in thousands of homes in the United States. There are scores of families in this vicinity who will not be without it in the house and who would not think of starting on a trip without a bottle of it.

All druggists have sold so much Dodson's Liver Tone that they are convinced of its merit and will give any person his 50 cents back who buys a bottle and does not find that it takes the place of calomel to perfection.

POLICE SAY CASE AGAINST FRANK IS COMPLETE

Negro Lee Will Not Be Indicted, but Will Be Used as State Witness.

but felt sure the State would be able to convict Frank.

He added:

"With the evidence we now have we could convict Frank, with a recommendation to mercy, in ten minutes. This would mean a life term. It is going to be difficult in this case to impose the extreme penalty of the law, as so many people are opposed to capital punishment on circumstantial evidence. The slaying of Mary Phagan, however, was straight murder or nothing, and the State will demand the limit.

"While the evidence is purely circumstantial, still I'm satisfied it is strong enough to thoroughly convince any jury."

The confession of Jim Conley, the negro factory sweeper, that, from dictation by Frank, he wrote the mysterious notes found beside the dead body of Mary Phagan in the factory basement, has added an unexpected phase to the case, and brought about much speculation. Detectives admit that they are skeptical of the negro's confession, as they are unable to reconcile it with other circumstances.

Was Slaying Planned?

If his story is true, detectives say it means that the murder was premeditated and planned, as he declares the notes were written the afternoon before the tragedy. The accepted theory is that the murder was not planned, but resulted from unexpected conditions at the time.

Conley sticks to his confession. He told a Georgian reporter that he confessed because he considered it safer for him, that he feared if he didn't tell the truth he might be hanged. He will be put through another rigid examination in the office of detectives Monday as a test of his truthfulness. He also will be shown the original murder notes for the purpose of identification. He has not seen these notes since his arrest three weeks ago.

Just what bearing the negro's story will have on the case officers are not prepared to say.

Chief of Detectives Lanford Monday afternoon declared his belief that the confession of James Connally, the negro sweeper, that he wrote the murder notes at the dictation of Frank, is absolutely false in every detail. He said he attached no importance whatever to the confession.

The lines on which the State will seek the conviction of Frank were carefully mapped out in a three-hour conference between Solicitor Dorsey and Chief Lanford the latter part of last week. The number of witnesses to be introduced, the order in which they will be called, and all other essential details were agreed on.

Contentions of State.

The contention of the State, briefly outlined, will be this:

First. That the murder of Mary Phagan was an "inside job;" that it was committed inside the factory, and by a person connected with the place.

Second. That Leo M. Frank, in struggling with the girl, accidentally forced her against a machine, knocking her unconscious, and, fearing exposure, killed the girl by strangulation, and hid her body in the basement, where it was found by Newt Lee, the night watchman.

Third. Mary Phagan had worked but one day, Monday, in the week of the tragedy, and was not notified that the employees would receive their money Friday afternoon and that the factory would be closed Saturday, on account of Memorial Day; that she went to the factory alone at noon Saturday to get her money, finding Frank alone in the office. She asked Frank if the metal had arrived. She worked in the metal department and had been laid off because of the lack of material. Frank, the State will claim, probably enticed the girl back into the factory by remarking that they would go back and see if the metal had come.

Fourth. That Frank had ordered Newt Lee to report for duty at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and that when Lee arrived at the factory Frank told him to go away and have a good time and return at 6 o'clock. Frank appeared nervous and agitated and was wringing his hands. After the negro left, Frank removed the girl and carried her down on the elevator. The girl revived after being taken from the closet, and Frank strangled her with a piece of twine, which probably he had used in binding her hands or feet in order that he might carry her more easily.

Negro Not Accomplice.

Fifth. That Frank left the factory shortly after 6 o'clock, and that he called Newt Lee over the telephone shortly afterwards, asking if everything was all right—a thing he had never done before.

Sixth. That Newt Lee had absolutely no connection with the crime further than the finding of the body at 3:30 o'clock Sunday morning.

Seventh. That Monteen Stover, of 175 South Forsyth Street, a girl employee, called for her money shortly after 12 o'clock on Saturday and found Frank out of the office. She waited ten minutes and left.

Evidence, which has not been disclosed, will be presented to strengthen these points.

From what has been made public, it is plain the State has only circumstantial evidence—and little of that bearing directly on the crime.

MASON BLOCKS ATTEMPTS TO OUST CHIEF

Police Board Minority as Anxious to Overthrow Chairman as Beavers and Lanford.

Well informed politicians declared Monday that any efforts to remove Chief of Police Beavers and Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford were doomed to failure because of the support of the two officers by Carlos Mason, chairman of the Police Board, and his supporters.

Despite rumors of changes of line-up on account of developments of the last few days, all indications are that, if the issue of removing Beavers and Lanford is made, the relative strength of the two old factions will remain constant, as follows:

How Board Lines Up.

For Beavers and Lanford—Chairman Carlos H. Mason, First Ward; W. P. Fain, Second Ward; W. A. Vernoy, Third Ward; B. Lee Smith, Fourth Ward; Charles R. Garner, Fifth Ward; J. N. McEachern, Seventh Ward; A. R. King, Ninth Ward, and Graham P. Dozier, Tenth Ward. Total, 8.

Against Beavers and Lanford—Mayor Woodward; George E. Johnson, Sixth Ward, and Robert C. Clark, Eighth Ward.

Doubtful—A. R. Colcord, chairman of the Council Police Committee.

The most illuminating fact in the whole situation is that the minority in the Police Commission is as desirous of overthrowing the Mason faction as it is of ousting Beavers. However, a number of members of the commission were laying for Lanford's scalp long before Beavers was made chief. Echoes of this opposition are constantly heard in the Council Finance Committee when efforts are made to secure increases in salaries for the detectives.

Police Ring Charged.

So intense are the feelings of the Mayor that he has announced he would oppose any effort of the Mason men to remove Beavers. If the Mason faction should start any reforms in the police department, which they are not at all likely to do—for Chairman Mason reiterates his confidence in his men and declares he thinks the charges of crookedness false—Mayor Woodward and his followers likely would oppose them. They charge the police department is being run by a "ring."

The Mayor and his followers see a slight hope of victory through the fight over Beavers' authority to name men for promotion. Privately, they charged that the Mason faction was dictating Beavers' nominations, and when the vote was taken Commissioners Vernoy and Garner joined them. The result was a tie vote, and the issue has not yet been decided. But the general opinion is the change is not very significant.

PINKERTON MAN SAYS FRANK IS GUILTY

Pencil Factory Owners Told Him Not to Shield Superintendent, Scott Declares.

Harry Scott, assistant superintendent of the Pinkertons, announced Monday his belief that Leo M. Frank was responsible for the slaying of 14-year-old Mary Phagan April 26. He added that his agency had been working on this theory from the time its services were engaged by officials of the National Pencil Company, two days after the crime.

Scott previously had said the Pinkertons were on the case to find the guilty man, even though it might be Frank. His latest statement is believed to have been prompted by the attack on the Pinkertons by Colonel Thomas B. Felder.

Mr. Scott declared he not only believed Frank responsible for the killing, but that he proposed to lay his evidence before the court and assist in the prosecution of the factory superintendent. He is in possession, he said, of considerable evidence which has not been made public.

Soon after the investigation was undertaken, Scott says he went to the men employing him and asked if he was supposed to protect Frank. He said if he was he would have to throw up the job. He was told, he said, that he had been engaged to find the guilty man, whoever he might be. It was on this assurance the Pinkertons continued the investigation, according to Scott.

Part of Brain Gone, He Sues for $60,000

George M. Downs filed suit for $60,000 against the George A. Fuller Construction Company with the Superior Court Monday for injuries he claims to have sustained April 24, when a brick fell from the eleventh story of the Winecoff Hotel and struck him on the head.

Downs claims that, in the operation made necessary, a portion of his brain was taken out and he found himself paralyzed in the right arm. He said at the time of the accident he was 28 years old and making $45 weekly as foreman of steel construction on the hotel.

MAYOR PARDONS ROPER FROM STOCKADE

Releases Druggist Whose Arrest, to Serve Blind Tiger Sentence, Recorder Ordered.

Broyles' Reply to Thrust of Mayor

Judge Broyles said to-day:

"The Mayor calls me a monomaniac because I believe firmly and uncompromisingly in suppressing crime and upholding the law. I believe that the lawlessness in Atlanta, in Georgia and in our whole country make a very serious situation—a situation only a few steps removed from anarchy—for the law is the only protection that organized society has against riot, murder and anarchy, and unless it is firmly enforced by the judges and juries of our country crime will increase instead of diminish.

"America is now the most lawless country in the world, and unless we can check the wave of crime that is sweeping over us anarchy will soon be among us.

"If these views make me a monomaniac, then I accept the title."

Mayor Woodward Monday retaliated for Recorder Nash R. Broyles' attack that he was blocking justice, by pardoning Dr. W. D. Roper, proprietor of a drug store at the corner of Pryor and Wall Streets, who had been convicted of operating a "blind tiger" and sentenced to 30 days in the stockade. Roper was given the preference of paying $500, but Saturday he began the service of his term in the city prison.

Recorder Broyles' judgment on Roper was sustained by the Court of Appeals about two months ago. The doctor appealed to Mayor Woodward for a pardon, and Mayor Woodward requested Chief Beavers to take no action until the case could be thoroughly investigated. Chief Beavers complied and Roper was free without any action being taken in his case until Saturday, when Recorder Broyles ordered him arrested and his sentence imposed.

Sees Lack of Evidence.

"I am not seeking any row with Recorder Broyles," said Mayor Woodward. "I am pardoning Dr. Roper because I don't think there is sufficient evidence against him. He was convicted on circumstantial evidence, principally because a number of whisky bottles were found in the basement of his store."

The pardoning row between Recorder Broyles and Mayor Woodward threatens to become even more acute over the case of Mattie Lou White, who has been convicted of selling whisky and disorderly conduct and sentenced to pay a fine of $500 or serve 30 days in the stockade. The Recorder's decision in this case was sustained by the Court of Appeals.

The woman is walking the streets free with a letter from Mayor Woodward, dated May 7, instructing policemen not to molest her until he has had time to go fully into her application for clemency.

To Take Similar Action.

"I expect to take the same course in the White case that I took in the Roper case," said Recorder Broyles Monday. "I am going to order her arrest unless the Mayor acts within the next few days.

"Probably I should act to-day, but I am going to give full time for the Mayor and myself to think deliberately over this matter.

"The Mayor has a right to exercise the pardoning power over sentences of 30 days and fines of $50 and over. But he has got to act in these matters and make written records of his interpositions. These people can't walk the streets free merely on his advice."

Broyles Made Charges.

These official acts of Atlanta's two prominent officials follow a severe denunciation of Mayor Woodward by Recorder Broyles, which was published Friday. He declared that the Mayor was blocking justice, practically immunizing "blind tigers" from punishment and seriously interfering with himself and the police in their efforts to keep Atlanta moral.

Mayor Woodward declared Monday that he was doing all he could to evade a newspaper controversy. He said it was decidedly improper for city officials to try to settle their differences in such a way. While his acts are defiant of the Recorder and the police, he mildly says he is merely doing his duty as he sees it.

"I have nothing to say about Beavers' statement published yesterday. He did not attack me. If he thinks I am after him he is mistaken.

"His attitude in this whole matter is a joke. It is unimportant."

ACCUSES TOBIE OF KIDNAPING ATTEMPT

Topeka, Kans., Chief Wires Beavers That Burns Detective Was Not Convicted.

That the local police authorities are tracing the past record of C. W. Tobie, the Burns operative investigating the Phagan case, came definitely into light Monday morning when Police Chief Beavers received a telefram from the Chief of Police of Topeka, Kans., regarding the detective.

The telegram was in answer to one sent by Beavers some days ago to Topeka asking for Tobie's police record there. The answer stated that while Tobie had been involved in a kidnaping case in Topeka, that he had never been convicted on this score. The telegram read:

Topeka, Kans., May 26, 1913.
Chief of Police, Atlanta, Ga.:

Tobie tried to kidnap incubator baby at Sedan, Kansas, but failed, being employed by Detective Tillotson. Subsequently, Tillotson kidnaped the child at Topeka and was convicted, but Tobie was not convicted of the Topeka kidnaping. J. W. F. HUGHES,
Chief of Police.

Burns Men Going Ahead.

Tobie said Monday that recent sensational developments in the Mary Phagan murder case, involving charges of frame-ups by and against the Burns agency, would have no effect whatever on the agency's investigations or the coming of W. J. Burns himself to Atlanta.

"We are going right ahead, just as if these things had not happened," said Tobie.

Tobie said W. J. Burns was not due to arrive in America until June 1. Recent developments, he repeated, would not influence one way or the other his proposed coming to Atlanta.

Telegraphic information was received from New York that Raymond Burns, son of the great detective, was on his way to Atlanta. Tobie said this afternoon that Raymond was in New York, and that he knew nothing of his contemplated or intended coming to Atlanta.

Following publication of newspaper articles in which Tobie said Pinkerton detectives were involved in a frame-up against the Burns agency, the Atlanta branch of the Pinkerton National Detective Agency has sent The Georgian a written denial. The denial applies also to similar charges voiced by Colonel Thomas B. Felder.

Pinkerton Makes Denial.

Allan Pinkerton, who signs the denial, says, in part:

"These statements, in so far as they refer to Pinkerton's National Detective Agency, are absolutely without an iota of truth, as Pinkerton's National Detective Agency had absolutely no previous knowledge or information concerning or pertaining to the issue between certain Atlanta city officials and Attorney-at-Law Thomas B. Felder."

Dan S. Lehon, general superintendent of all Southern agencies of the Burns detective service, stationed in New Orleans, spent Sunday and Monday in Atlanta. His arrival gave currency to reports that the Burns force in Atlanta had been strengthened for completion of their work on the Mary Phagan murder case, but Tobie said Lehon merely stopped over to visit him. He was on his way to another city, Tobie said, and his stay in Atlanta had no connection with the Phagan investigation.

MOTHER'S FRIEND IN EVERY HOME

Comfort and Safety Assured Before the Arrival of the Stork.

The old saying—what is home without a mother—should add "Mother's Friend."

In thousands of American homes there is a bottle of this splendid and famous remedy that has aided many a woman through the trying ordeal, saved her from suffering and pain, kept her in health of mind and body in advance of baby's coming and had a most wonderful influence in developing a healthy, lovely disposition in the child.

There is no other remedy so truly a help to nature as Mother's Friend. It relieves the pain and discomfort caused by the strain on the ligaments, makes pliant those fibers and muscles which nature is expanding and soothes the inflammation of breast glands.

Mother's Friend is an external remedy, acts quickly and not only banishes all distress in advance, but assures a speedy and complete recovery for the mother. Thus she becomes a healthy woman with all her strength preserved to thoroughly enjoy the rearing of her child. Mother's Friend can be had at any drug store at $1.00 a bottle, and is really one of the greatest blessings ever discovered for expectant mothers. 15,000 VISITORS GATHER IN CHATTANOOGA FOR BIG CONFEDERATE REUNION

Ideal Weather Marks Opening of Annual Assembly of Southern Veterans. Memorial Association's Session and Meeting of Sons Feature First Day.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 26. Ideal weather cheered the thousands of early Confederate reunion visitors and laboring committee men to-day. The sun was warm and but few light clouds flecked the sky. The indications from the present appearance of the streets and the books of the assignment committee are that the attendance will be 25 per cent greater than was expected. General Bennett H. Young, commander-in-chief, said this morning that he was confident that the crowds, however large, could be comfortably handled. Fully 15,000 visitors are already in the city, including at least 2,500 veterans, according to estimates by reunion officials.

Special Trains Arrive.

Special trains arriving every hour continue to pour their thousands into Chattanooga this afternoon. No confusion or congestion has resulted, however.

Information booths, which have been established at convenient places, and special telephones have resulted in general order, which is surprising in handling the crowds. The last finishing touches are being put on this afternoon, and Chattanooga now awaits the crest of the human flood.

Sudden clouds flecked the sky at intervals shortly before noon, but the return of a warm sun this afternoon and a weather forecast of generally fair to-day and to-morrow allayed any fear of bad weather.

Hospital Aid Stations.

Hospital aid stations are manned in every part of the city, arrows being placed along all streets pointing to the nearest. In addition, markers have been posted dividing the city into units for the benefit of strangers. The general camps and commissaries are prepared for the care of the veterans who will be quartered in them. The police, aided by a corps of special men, have the situation well in hand. All suspicious characters were picked up last week in a stringent campaign against loiterers.

The streets have a gala appearance, with banners, streamers, flags and festoons of Confederate and national colors.

Sons Meet To-night.

The first session of the reunion of Sons of Confederate Veterans will be held to-night at 8 o'clock at the City Auditorium. It will be called to order by Mayor T. C. Thompson, commandant of Camp Jonathan W. Bachman.

The invocation will be pronounced by Rev. W. T. Allen, of Jacksonville, Ala., chaplain general of the Sons of Veterans.

Following the welcome address by ex-Mayor A. W. Chambliss, Charles R. Collins, commander of the Tennessee Division, will take the chair and turn the meeting over to J. M. Dunwody, department commander, Army of Tennessee. Following the response to the welcome address by W. McDonald Lee, of Covington, Va., Commander Dunwody will turn the convention over to J. P. Norfleet, of Memphis, commander-in-chief, Sons of Veterans, who will preside through the remainder of the program.

Addresses will be made by James F. Finlay, of Chattanooga, and A. W. Hawkes, of Maryland.

The sponsors will be presented by Carlos Lee, and the response in their behalf will be made by George W. Hays. The music during the evening will be furnished by the United Confederate Choirs.

Memorial Session.

The first business meeting of Reunion Week will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock, when the Confederate Memorial Association will hold its annual session at the City Auditorium.

The parade of the Sons of Veterans, which takes place on Wednesday afternoon, has been changed to 2 instead of 4 o'clock to permit the participants and public generally to go to Fort Oglethorpe, where the Eleventh Cavalry, U. S. A., will give a special mounted drill for the veterans and visitors.

Georgia Cavalry Leaves Tuesday.

The Georgia cavalry brigade will leave the Union Depot at 8 o'clock Tuesday morning for Chattanooga to take part in the Confederate reunion. General N. Lyon will be in command and Colonel A. Webster, adjutant general.

The following sponsors and maids of honor will be in the party:

Sponsor, Miss Etta Hardeman, of Atlanta; matron, Mrs. C. C. Sanders, Gainesville; maids of honor, Miss Annie Sutton, Clarkesville; Miss Lilan Roberts, Macon; Miss Fannie McCormick, Rome; Miss Pauline Bailey, Cedartown; Miss Nelle Fielder, Carrollton; Miss Mamie Jones, Cartersville; Miss Irene Hargrove, Cedartown; Miss Woodsleigh West, Atlanta; Miss Susie Woodward, Atlanta; Miss May Woodward, McDonough; Miss Montine Williams, College Park, and Miss Katie Loftis, Atlanta.

T. R. IN MICHIGAN TO PRESS LIBEL CHARGES

Jokes of Private Car 'Clearwater' as Water Wagon Special. Will Take Stand.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 26.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt, who arrived to-day for the trial of his $10,000 libel suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore, was in a happy mood before the case was called at 2 o'clock this afternoon. He spent the morning after his arrival chatting with friends and visiting with George P. Shiras, the naturalist, whose guest he will be while in Marquette.

"I light a fresh cigar every time I take a drink of whisky," he said, as he declined a cigar proffered to him by Shiras. "And you know that I never smoked a cigar in my life.

"I am afraid that I am here strictly on business. I have been invited to speak to the high school and before several organizations, but I shall not be able to do so. I have also been invited to attend the performance of the 'Prince of Pilsen,' Thursday evening, out of compliment, no doubt, to my old Dutch ancestry.

Name Sounds Suspicious.

"But it sounds too much like Pilsener and the association just at this time is distasteful. So I shall not go."

Homer Cook, editor of The Houghton (Mich.) Gazette, stepped up to the Colonel during the morning and reminded him that he had met him in Cuba.

"Just a minute," said Roosevelt. "Oh, yes, I remember you. You were one of the sentries that stopped me at the bridge as I was riding into Santiago after the surrender."

"Yes," said Cook, with a laugh, "and we made you dig your pass out of your boot and show it to us. We were stationed there to keep the soldiers from getting into the city and getting drunk." Roosevelt laughed.

"If you could say that I looked as though I were riding into Santiago after a drink you would probably prove a most valuable witness in this case," he remarked.

Will Go on Stand.

Colonel Roosevelt to-day said that he would remain in Marquette until the trial is over, no matter how long it may require. His next engagement is in Buffalo, June 10, at which time he will deliver an address.

Colonel Roosevelt will take the stand himself. This was made known definitely to-day by Attorney Pound. The Colonel will probably be the first witness for the complainant.

Judge Richard C. Flannigan, who will preside at the trial, spent the morning on the bench hearing the reading of the calendar for the May term. When the Roosevelt case was reached it was set for trial at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Colonel's party made the trip from Chicago to-day on the special car "Clearwater."

The Colonel smiled when his attention was called to the fact.

"It is the water-wagon special, all right," he said.

Roberts Cites Power Of Presbyterianism

"The Characteristics of the Presbyterian Church as They Are Related to the Welfare of the American Nation" was the subject of a sermon by the Rev. William H. Roberts, D. D., of Philadelphia, Sunday morning at the Harris Street Presbyterian Church.

Dr. Roberts has been for 30 years stated secretary of the Northern General Assembly and for 25 years American secretary of the World's Presbyterian Alliance.

Dr. Roberts showed how the church had been a potent power in the development of the nation.

Atlanta Man Gets Richmond Diploma

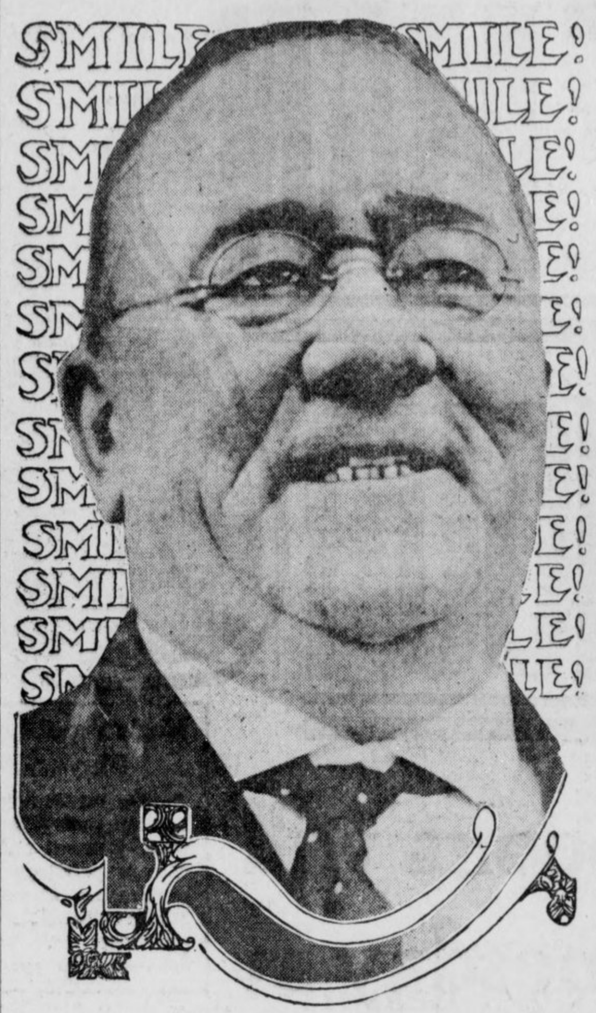
Dr. Eckles already has secured an appointment as interne at St. Luke's Hospital, Richmond, and will enter upon his duties there soon after graduation. He is the only member of the graduating class from Georgia.

Andy Stewart Gives Success Tip

'Smile Your Way Up,' He Says

Tells What Brought Him 'Luck'



"Andy" Stewart.

County Tax Collector Advises: "Never Loaf, Be Courteous, and Attend to Business."

"Smile your way to success. It can be done. Smiling won more friends for me than anything else. I paid strict attention to duty and handled the county's business as if it were my business."

In these words Andy Stewart, Tax Collector for 24 years and one of the most popular men in Atlanta, told how he rose from a tinner's apprentice to one of the highest and most trustworthy county officials.

Stewart is now serving his thirteenth term as Tax Collector and has temporary offices just across the street from the new court house, which is as yet uncompleted.

Andy Stewart started in as a tinner's apprentice when but 15 years of age. His first job was to paint 400 squares of tin roofing on the old Western and Alabama round house, in the month of August. He also blackened stoves in the basement of the tin shop.

He is large in stature, with a big, round jovial face. He says that he never allows anything to get him excited, which has also counted in his success and the winning of many friends. He smiles when everything else is blue. He even smiled when The Georgian reporter detained him from dinner.

"I attribute my success," he said, "to a few simple truths. By my success I mean possession of friends. I always did what I could to be honest and frank with everyone."

50,294 Freight Cars Reported Idle May 15

The surplus of idle freight cars in the United States and Canada on May 15 was 50,294, according to the American Railway Association. This is 10,495 more than on May 1. Nevertheless, the total reported is 7,204 cars fewer than on April 15 of this year.

On April 29, 1908, the surplus was 413,338.

The greatest shortage on the association's records occurred about February 26, 1907, when 137,847 freight cars were needed.

Best For Frying

The goodness and delicacy of fried foods depends upon the fat used for frying.

Swift's Silver-Leaf Lard

may be heated to a high degree without scorching or discoloring. This puts a delicate brown crisp crust on the food so quickly that it prevents its becoming grease soaked, and it enables you to use Swift's Silver-Leaf Lard many times for frying before clarifying.

It is economical, pure, efficient and does not flavor the food cooked in it or absorb odors from the food. Government inspected and passed; put up always in tight covered new tin pails, 3 sizes.

MAKES YOUR BACKACHE VANISH, DRIVES RHEUMATIC PAINS AWAY

Eases Stiff, Sore, Swollen Joints and Muscles, Relieving Backache and Bladder Disorders After Few Doses are Taken.

This is what Croxone, the new scientific discovery, does for sufferers of such troubles. It promptly relieves these diseases because it reaches the cause. It soaks right into the walls and linings of the kidneys and cleans out the stopped-up, inactive organs like water does a sponge—neutralizes, and dissolves every particle of uric acid and makes the kidneys sift from the blood all the waste matter and poisons that lodge in the joints and muscles to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism. It soothes and heals the delicate linings of the bladder and leaves the kidneys in a clean, strong, healthy condition, so they can filter the blood and keep you well.

If you suffer with backache—have pains in the neck or sides—nervous or dizzy spells—a few doses of Croxone will relieve the congestion and you will be surprised how quickly all kidney, bladder and rheumatic troubles will disappear.

Croxone is different from all other remedies. It is so prepared that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if Croxone should fail in a single case.

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Preparations are being made to bring the ponies downtown where everyone may see them. The little fellows have their summer coats on now, and are as handsome as anyone could wish. It is likely that they will be paraded as soon as the contest managers can stop counting votes long enough to make the necessary plans.

Time and place will be announced, so that the contestants who have not already been to the stockyards may get a close view of the prizes in The Georgian and American contest.

Sunday papers were in great demand, with their 30-vote coupons. Contestants realized that this was far from likely to happen again, and made the most of their opportunity. While it is possible to hold these votes for a few days, this week is expected to show great gains in the vote totals, not only because of the coupon, but also because of energetic hustling for new subscriptions.

Woman's Danger Signals

Hot flashes—dizziness, fainting spells, headache, bearing-down feeling and ills of a kindred nature—are nature's danger signals. The female disturbance or irregularity back of these calls for help, should have immediate care and attention. Otherwise the delicate female constitution soon breaks down.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Splendid Opportunities in the Ready-to-Wear Department

Voile and Linen Dresses and Linen Suits That Will Appeal to Woman's Sense of Style, Also to Her Sense of Economy.

Here is a very fine treat for the women of Atlanta!

We have gathered from here and there in the big well-assorted stocks of dresses and linen suits, some very likely and likable lots for a Tuesday sale.

Primarily they are just such dresses and suits that women want right now---a sale seasoned with timeliness. Fact is, most stores are still eagerly searching the markets for such garments to be sold in the very regular way. But that is one reason why the treat is so fine and why we are a bit proud of it.

$5.00 For $5.75 and $6.98 Voile Dresses

Breeze beguiling dresses if ever there were such! Voiles as sheer and soft as mist, white delicately striped in black Copenhagen and lavender. Little lace and net vests. Pipings and flat circular collars of cherry, Copenhagen or black satin. Others of Dresden crepe—very summery, in shades of green, lavender and Copenhagen, with pipings and wide satin girdle to match.

$10 For $15 to $17.85 Linen Dresses

Splendid variety here, any number of charming and new styles to choose from in shades most favored this season, such as Copenhagen, rose, tan and white. The linen is the greatly favored Cossack linen. One attractive style is a Bulgarian idea, with folded peplum and plain skirt, waist closing close to the throat and finished with a turn-back collar—then there are others and others you will like.

$7.50 For $11.75 to $15 Linen Suits

Grouped at $7.50 are some thirty coat suits of Cossack linen that are wonderful values. There are plain tailored styles and Bulgarian suits and very smart and jaunty cutaway suits finished with straps and buttons in Copenhagen, navy, tan and violet. They speak eloquently of comfortable warm-weather days and of comfortable warm-weather traveling.

A Sale of Waists

$3.95 For $5.00 to $7.50 Chiffon Waists

About all colors and a few in black; high and low neck. Pretty combinations of laces and nets about the yokes and perhaps touched at the sleeves and collar with a braid or fold of contrasting color. Long sleeves, three-quarter length sleeves.

$2.95 For $5.00 to $6.00 Voile Waists

There should be eager crowds for these. Plain and Dresden figured voiles and crepes, showing the tiny tucks that women like, hemstitched folds down fronts and crystal buttons—in colors—prettily finished round necks, with soft, broad collars. Buy them by the pair!

Your Bathing Suit

What a smart and charming affair it may be this summer! For here are the suits that the best maker in America has produced. He deserves the name BEST maker because he has the faculty of making bathing suits at once serviceable and attractive—silks, beautifully trimmed, and mohairs, too. We have gathered a fine variety of these to make your individual choice easy. Will you see them?

And to-morrow—

BATHING CAPS, AT 15c.

That are worth MORE. Plain and striped rubber.

THIS WEEK TO PROVE BIG ONE FOR CRACKERS

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE Crackers open this afternoon on what should be a large and profitable week. To begin with the puny Pelicans, now holders of the Boob Championship of the league, open here this afternoon for a three-game series.

The Pelicans, not such a rank team individually, seem to perform with about as slight effectiveness this year as ever in the world's history. They are absolutely, abjectly, almost hopelessly last.

If the Crackers play up to their game they will take all three from the Pelicans, which will be helpful indeed.

On Thursday the Montgomery club opens for four games in three days. On Friday, which is Federal Decoration Day, a double header will be played, the first on local soil this season.

The Montgomery club does not appear to class with the Crackers in strength and ought to furnish no very vicious opposition.

Surely with any luck at all the Crackers should win five out of the seven games slated.

The following week the Crackers jump out of town for games Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday and then back for three more here. This jumping stuff goes on until June 22, when the locals beat it into the South again for their second tough trip.

* * *

IF figures didn't lie like "experts," the Crackers would be leading the Southern League by a margin so wide as to be pitiful. For instance, take the matter of club batting. Here are the Southern League figures:

	A.B.	R.	H.	S.H.	S.B.	Pct.
Atlanta	1273	198	347	55	37	.273
Mobile	1284	191	329	61	88	.256
Mont.	1237	159	306	47	58	.247
Chatt.	1160	111	277	41	26	.239
Mem.	1229	142	293	46	55	.238
Birm.	1040	119	233	52	38	.224
N. O.	1273	139	283	60	57	.222
Nash.	1148	123	251	58	38	.219
Totals	9644	1182	2319	420	396	.240

League batting average .240.
Average number of runs for each team 148.
Average number of sacrifice hits made by each team in the league 52.
Average number of stolen bases 49.

Observe that the Crackers are batting .033 above the average of the league, that they have batted in 50 more runs than the average and 7 more than their nearest competitors, the Gulls. In stolen bases only do the Crackers fall below the average.

* * *

A TEAM that can hit the ball better than any other club in the league ought to FLY. And the Crackers do fly—at odd times.

The Cracker players have not only made the most hits of any team in the league but they have hit for the most total bases. They lead in hitting two-baggers, are third in three-baggers and tied for second in home runs—after playing their home games on a field which has no "short fence."

Naturally, being sluggers, the Crackers are not much given to absorbing bases on balls—and strange to relate they have struck out more times than any other club in the circuit.

The extra-base hitting and the number of strikeouts made and bases on balls received by the various teams are here given:

	2B.	3B.	H.R.	T.B.	B.B.	S.O.
Atlanta	48	17	7	450	118	172
Mobile	47	15	11	439	147	134
M'tgomery	44	30	7	431	130	142
Chatta.	43	11	5	357	116	146
Memphis	39	18	6	386	127	133
Birm.	31	11	5	301	129	126
N O.	45	11	5	365	138	151
Nashville	34	15	6	329	111	152

The team fielding averages of the league follow:

	G.	P.O.	A.	E.	Pct.
Nashville	37	974	464	50	.966
Mobile	40	1082	554	67	.961
Chattanooga	37	968	466	60	.960
Atlanta	38	982	483	69	.956
Montgomery	39	1034	516	72	.956
Memphis	39	1025	484	72	.954
Birmingham	34	870	411	72	.947
New Orleans	40	1082	520	102	.940

* * *

THE Crackers are about due to pull out for the lead. The pitchers are going to come around with a rush after a bit. Warm weather and hard work, along with the fear of the tinware, will produce the desired result. This week that is just beginning should furnish considerable uplift. If the Crackers can take five or six games, the newly acquired confidence will be worth a lot.

PUBLICITY.

"Thou shalt not speak," the magnate said, "to members of the press;
And if thou hast a tale to tell, just let the lowbrows guess."
The magnate bought himself a drink, and further more he spoke:
"If it were not for baseball games, the papers would go broke.
If it were not for baseball games, the gents who journey by
Would look upon the news stands with a cold and careless eye.
The crowds would never think to buy the extras on the street.
We baseball magnates help to keep the papers on their feet."
When snow is on the baseball yard and baseball games are nil
The baseball scribes are grinding dope and drawing shekels still,
And if the scribes would shun the yards where baseball games are played,
Said baseball magnates then would have to seek an honest trade.

Mr. Murphey of the Cubs denies the report that he has forbidden his athletes to speak to baseball scribes. Getting in bad and proving an alibi keeps Mr. Murphy busy approximately 24 hours per diem.

When a magnate forbids his athletes to associate with newspaper men, there is not likely to be any frenzied protest among said newspaper men.

Mr. Stovall has been fined, but if Mr. Ferguson had his way, Mr. Stovall would be sentenced to chew a sponge instead of a chunk of tobacco.

Pugilism and baseball both are afflicted with a malignant case of Too Much Johnson.

Bob Fitzsimmons avers that he can make a regular champion out of Jess Willard, demonstrating that too great attention to sport affects the mind.

Edmonton, which is in British Columbia, offers $25,000 for a conflict between Messrs. Ritchie and Welsh. All of which goes to show what an intoxicating climate there is in Edmonton.

Some time, when we have about 1,000 years to spare, we shall attempt to write a book on what Jess Willard does not know about fighting.

Quoth a boxing scribe: "In the first round Anderson fractured one of Mandot's ribs, making Joe's famous left useless." It must be comforting to fight a man when you know he cannot hit you with his left rib.

Reading a number of Horace Fogel's baseball magazine, one is convinced that he was more bulled against than bulling.

A scientist tells us that 75 per cent of all human energy is wasted. Jess Willard's press agent beat that average by approximately 25 per cent.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Champion Johnny Kilbane must not be figured by the fight promoters of California as much of a drawing card out there. Johnny is only receiving a guarantee of $1,000 and an additional $250 for training expenses to fight Jimmy Fox at Frisco, on June 10.

* * *

Blink McCloskey, who was knocked out by Buck Crouse the other night, broke a bone in his leg when he fell in the fourth round.

* * *

New York boxing fans are still talking about the great fight Jim Flynn put ing about the great fight Jim Flynn put-up against Jim Coffey at New York Friday night. Although the Pueblo fireman was outweighted several pounds he had a good shade at the finish and was forcing Coffey all around, the ring in the tenth session.

* * *

Jack Curley, manager of Flynn, writes that he will probably take his protege to the coast after he gets through with his bout against Jim Savage at the Auditorium here June 13. Curley also says he will have Flynn here ten days before the fight, so that local fans will be able to see him train for the fray.

Matty McCue and Patsy Brannigan will clash in a 10-round scrap at Milwaukee, Wis., Monday night. If McCue succeeds in trimming the Pittsburg boy he is to get a match with Abe Attell at Kenosha, Wis.

Scotty Monbeth, who is still out in Los Angeles with his great little battler, Johnny Dundee, writes that his boxer is down to hard training for his bout with Wolgast on June 12.

* * *

He further states that he has matched Dundee to fight Tommy Dixon for ten rounds at Albuquerque, N. M., on July 4.

Lay-off from the ring has done him more harm than good. The youngster has gone stale and he needs a lot of exercise to get into the condition that made of him one of the most talked-of boxers in the country.

Arthur Pelky has received an offer of $15,000 to box Gunboat Smith at Los Angeles. Tommy Burns, manager of Pelky, says he has the matter under serious consideration.

* * *

Two Chicago welterweights will clash at Terra Haute, Ind., to-night. Morrie Bloom and Phil Harrison are the gentlemen and the battle is said to be a grudge affair. The winner has been promised a match with "Wildcat" Ferns.

* * *

Jake Abel and Frankie White will also don the gloves to-night. The boys are to meet at Memphis in a scheduled eight-round affair.

* * *

New Orleans fans are going wild over the Frankie Russell-Johnny Lore fight, which will be staged this wek. Promoter Tortorich has promised to match the winner with Charlie White, the Chicago sensation, who is a great card in the Pelican City since his decisive wins over Joe Thomas.

* * *

Matty Baldwin has been matched to battle Joe Eagan in a 12-round bout at Boston on the afternoon of May 30. The men have agreed to weigh in at 133 pounds at 10 o'clock in the evening.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

BOSTON, May 26.—Within the last week two pitching staffs which were counted upon to swing into line at the beginning of the season have shown the form expected of them. The staffs belong to the Giants and Pirates, and from this point alone I predict that the race will settle down to a battle between the New York and Pittsburg clubs. They possess the two best batches of pitchers in the league now, with the possible exception of Philadelphia.

Both Tesreau and Marquard have attained their last season's form for New York, and Hendrix and Camnitz have resumed operations for the Pirates. Both teams have the natural strength to win ball games behind good pitching, which neither the Philadelphia nor the Brooklyn clubs, now leading the league, possess. That is the reason I figure out that the Giants and Pirates will finally battle for the title. The Cubs, who made such a brave showing at the beginning of the season, have faded very badly on this Eastern trip because of the crumbling of their pitching staff. Following this string of defeats, the dissension, which was anticipated, has developed in the club. Evers is up against a hard proposition in Chicago now.

So long as the Cubs were near the top, everything was rosy for him, as it is for any manager with a winning ball club. The fans were behind him. But now that the team has started to lose, the followers of the game are beginning to criticise Murphy for letting Chance go. They were prepared to do that at the opening of the race, but the unexpected winning streak of the club prevented the knockers from getting in their fine work.

THE Cubs at present are playing below their normal speed, as they were traveling above it at the beginning of the schedule. They will pick up some, but I never expect to see them out in front leading the league race again this season. They have shot their bolt. They have not the pitchers to stand the going which will be furnished by the Philadelphia, Pittsburg and New York clubs from now on.

The Quakers are still attracting attention in the front, although I regarded the club as a flash in the pan for a long time, and was surprised to see it hold up the pace for such a protracted period. I am now beginning to be convinced that the team has a chance to stick in the fight for the flag with the Giants and Pirates, which teams are bound to make the quarreling toward the end of the schedule.

What has surprised most close followers of baseball is the fact that the Philadelphia club is represented by practically the same men whose names appeared in the box scores last season, and therefore its start was not considered to be serious. There have been two angles from which the team has greatly improved. One is the pitching staff, which has always possessed the latent strength, and the other is the speed, pepper and aggressiveness added to the club that can be attributed to the new conditions in the management. The Philadelphia team has a lot of fighters in the game who are always "crabbing," and several of the players are very fast. Dooin, now that he is no longer bothered by Horace Fogel, can inject a little of his own ginger into the club and instill the players with his own fighting spirit.

KNABE, the second baseman, is a great fighter, never giving up any point without an argument, and Doolan is another bur under the saddle-flap to the umpires. He is also a very nifty shortstop, perhaps more highly regarded by ball players than by spectators. He covers acres of ground, and is fast on his feet. He is also a very regular pinch-hitter, as I have had reason to realize from some personal experience. Lobert has added strength to the team this season, because he is a vicious batter and is another "crabber." The infield of the Phillies right now is a strong one. The outfield is likewise formidable with Magee, Paskert and Cravath covering the territory.

Paskert is one of the best territory-covering outfielders in the league, and is sure on fly and ground balls. He is not the hardest hitter in the world, but he is a good base runner, once he does get on the bags. Magee's batting ability is beyond question. He will break up a ball game for you any time if you give him half a chance. He can hit a ball as hard as any man in the league, and, what is more, he does this with amazing frequency. He is what is known in baseball as "a free-swinger," and there are few men playing the game who can take a long wallop at the ball and connect.

The added dash to the team shows itself on the bases, and the players are running the sacks with the best teams in the league, taking all kinds of chances and frequently upsetting their opponents by these tactics. The pitching staff at present is one of the three strongest in the league. It is hard to say which one will show up to be the best finally, as time alone can tell that—time and a couple of long, hard swings around the Western circuit away from home grounds and sympathetic crowds. The Philadelphia club may go through a season such as was greatly enjoyed by the Boston Americans last year when they buzzed out the schedule to a pennant with hardly an injury.

THE lack of experienced substitutes is Dooin's big weakness. If a couple of his regulars get bunged up and out of the game, he won't have anybody who can properly fill their places. It was this shortage of good substitute material which caused the club to collapse so badly last season. But should the team hold together as it stands to-day, it is going to make it interesting for any aggregation that is in the fight for the pennant. Particularly will it be hard to overtake the Philadelphia team if luck pursues it persistently, as it sometimes does a club after it has deserted it entirely for a couple of seasons. The Quakers, it must be remembered, are getting out farther ahead all the time and will have a chance to drop back. All that the Giants and Pittsburg teams can work at for the present is catching up, and if somebody does not stop the Phillies soon, they will both have a man's-sized job on their hands to complete before September.

Clark Griffith is sore. Doc Johnson called him names at Cleveland the other day and when he called some back the umpire put Griff out and let "Doc" stay in.

Griff, by the way, is using the umpires as his stock alibi these days, which deceives nobody.

* * *

Ban Johnson has ordered his umpires not to allow Altrock to pitch for the Washington Club. Griff says he will send him in soon. When he does some umpire will have to forfeit a game against him. Then Johnson will be forced to fine Griffith $1,000. "Then he'll have to collect the thousand," says Griff. "Fine chance."

* * *

George Stovall admits that Ban Johnson was right in soaking him for the Ferguson incident and says he will not let it happen again.

* * *

Vincent Campbell, ex-Vanderbilt football star, later with the Pirates and Braves, is said to be slated for a berth with the St. Louis Federal League Club—which sounds improbable.

* * *

Jack O'Connor's telephone bill is $2(daily. He is searching for players for his Federal League team but nobody seems to want his game.

* * *

Enos Kirkpatrick is head substitute infielder for the Brooklyn team these days, with a chance that he may land a regular job soon.

* * *

The Giants are handicapped by Red Murray's weak batting. Old Sunset Top is apparently an in-and-outer.

* * *

Buffalo and Milwaukee may go in to Federal Circuit. Then, if Los Angeles, Nome and Tampa were added it would make a nice little circuit—for the railroads.

CRACKERS DOWN PELICANS BY SCORE 8-3

By Percy H. Whiting.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, May 26.—The Crackers defeated the Pels in the opening game of their series, 8 to 3 this afternoon. Dent twirled his first victory for Bill Smith's crew.

Welchonce and Dent did the heavy clouting for the home boys, each securing two hits. One of Welchonce's hits was a triple.

Evans pitched for Frank's men and was hit hard throughout. Williams did the heavy hitting for the visitors.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Hendryx flied to Welchonce. Atz grounded to Bisland and was safe when Agler missed the throw. Clancy walked. Breen flied to Welchonce. Spencer singled to left and Atz was out trying to score, Long to Dunn. NO RUNS.

Long walked. Welchonce bunted and Long was out at second, Hendryx to Clancy. Welchonce was out trying to steal, Adams to Atz. Alperman out, Atz to Snedecor. NO RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Williams singled past third. Snedecor beat out a bunt. Adams bunted to Smith and was out to Agler. Both runners advanced. Evans hit a sacrifice fly to Long and Williams scored. Hendryx out, Bisland to Agler. ONE RUN.

Bailey out, Clancy to Snedecor. Smith grounded to Calncy and went to second on his wild throw to first. Smith stole third. Bisland walked. Agler singled to left and Smith scored. Dunn flied to Hendryx. Dent grounded to Atz and was safe on his error and Bisland scored. Long walked. Welchonce fanned. TWO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Atz flied to Welchonce. Clancy out, Agler to Dent. Breen walked. Spencer out, Smith to Agler. NO RUNS.

Alperman flied to Spencer. Bailey bunted to Atz and beat it out for a hit. Smith lined to Clancy and Bailey was doubled at first to Snedecor. NO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Williams drove one through Smith for a single. Snedecor bunted to Dent and Williams was out to Alperman. Adams fouled out to Agler. Evans grounded to Bisland and Snedecor was forced at second. NO RUNS.

Bisland grounded to Atz and was out to Snedecor. Agler walked. Dunn drove a single to center and Agler took third. Dent grounded to Atz and Dunn was touched out going to second and Agler scored on the play. Long flied to Spencer. ONE RUN.

FIFTH INNING.

Hendryx out, Smith to Agler. Atz flied to Long. Clancy out, Bisland to Agler. NO RUNS.

Welchonce fanned. Alperman flied to Spencer. Bailey fanned. NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

Breen flied to Welchonce. Spencer out, Alperman to Agler. Williams singled to left. Snedecor was hit by a pitched ball, forcing Williams to second. Adams flied to Bisland. NO RUNS.

Smith grounded to Williams and was safe when Snedecor dropped the throw. Bisland sacrificed, Evans to Atz. Agler struck out, but Adams dropped the third strike and was forced to throw him out to Snedecor. Dunn fanned. NO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

Evans flied to Welchonce. Hendryx grounded out, Smith to Agler. Atz lined out to Long. NO RUNS.

Dent, at bat, and a hit. Long beat out a bunt and on Williams' wild throw Dent went to third. Welchonce singled to center, scoring Dent and Long went to third. Alperman flied to Spencer and when Spencer threw wild to third Long scored. Welchonce took second on the play and stole third. Bailey fouled to Snedecor. Everybody in Town At Public Worship

CINCINNATI, May 26.—Probably not since the days of the Pilgrim Fathers have the citizens of a town fastened their latchstrings on the outside of every door on Sunday morning and gone in a body to public worship. This is what the town of Wyoming, O., did Sunday.

Every person in the town went to church. Pink placards pasted up all over the village issued a general call and every one of its 1,700 inhabitants responded.

The Sunday American goes everywhere all over the South. If you have anything to sell The Sunday American is "The Market Place of the South." The Sunday American is the best advertising medium.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game.

$250 in Prizes for Best Solution of "The Triple Tie"

YOU read the first seven installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this eighth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain.

Now go on with the story.

"Wait till I tell you, Mr. Callaway," interrupted the manager. "Excuse us a minute, Gordon," he added, "I want to say something to Mr. Callaway," and he drew the president to an inner office, where he told him the little he had been able to learn about Kelly. When he had concluded, Callaway said:

"And you signed him up on the strength of that drive that broke the bull's ribs?"

"Yes, sir; that was enough for me."

"Well, Billy, you know I consider you are best manager in the world. And I reckon you know what you're doing. I will put through this contract, but remember, Billy, you must shoulder all the responsibility. If this Gordon Kelly 'blows up' the laugh will be on you, not me."

"I'll take my chances on that," said the manager confidently.

"Anyway, it will make good reading in the newspapers. Send for the reporters, Billy, and we'll tell 'em all about your world beater."

The reporters came, they saw, but they were not conquered. They took copious notes of all the manager told them, but they refused to "fall" for Kelly as a ballplayer. They admired his shape and looks but demanded that they be "shown" before committing themselves to extravagant praise of the new man.

"All right, boys; I'll show you," declared Bill Smith, "and, mark my words"—every reporter made a mark in his notebook—"mark my words this fellow will turn out to be a wonder."

"Hope so, Billy," replied the reporters, as they filed out of the room.

They all handled the news in a facetious manner. In one of the newspapers there was ths headline:

"Joshed" in the Papers.

ADONIS JOINS THE CRACKERS

Bill Smith Signs a Player Who Has Never Seen a Game of Ball.

Another newspaper had this headline:

LEARNED BASEBALL IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

Atlanta Club Secured a "World Beater" Who Never Played a Game of Baseball.

And the third newspaper had this to say in its headlines:

COTILLION LEADER TO PLAY BASEBALL

Bill Smith Lands a Handsome Young Man That Knows Everything Except the National Game.

Within twenty-four hours Bill Smith was the recipient of all sorts of pleasant jibes. Every friend or acquaintance he met had something to say about the "world beater." The manager took everything in good part, but mentally acknowledged that he had overplayed himself in making public the signing of Gordon Kelly. "I ought to have said nothing about it," he thought. "Now he will just have to make good or they'll give me the laugh all over the country. But," he added, grimly," that kid will make good, all right, all right."

CHAPTER X.

WHAT Gorden Kelly himself thought of the "funny" stories printed about him in the newspapers no one ever knew. Bill Smith eyed his "world beater" keenly when he reported in the clubhouse at Ponce DeLeon Park early Monday morning. But Kelly was the same, quiet, good natured young man Smith had always found him to be.

"He's a game dog, sure enough," said the manager to himself, and satisfied with this disposal of the case, he began putting on his uniform.

It was the day on which the players of the Atlanta club were to report for spring practice, and it was a fine day overhead. There was to be a month of hard grind for the men in order that they might get into condition for the gruelling pennant race of the Southern League. Players of the rival clubs in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Chattanooga, Mobile, Nashville and Montgomery were supposed to report to their managers about the same time. In other parts of the South, in Athens, Ga., in Augusta, in Hot Springs, Ark., in Marlin Springs, Tex., in Tampa, Fla., and elsewhere the big league clubs of the North, and the Red Sox champions of the world and of the American League; the New York Giants, champions of the National League; the Chicago Cubs, the Detroit Tigers, the Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Browns, of St. Louis, the Cleveland club, the Washington club, the Pittsburg Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds, the Phillies, the Brooklyns and the Boston Braves were already training under the watchful eyes of the big league managers.

In far off California the Chicago White Sox and in Bermuda the New York Americans in charge of Frank Chance, had pitched their training camps. At about this time, too, many of the International League clubs—Buffalo, Toronto, Providence, Montreal, Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Rochester—were scheduled to open their training season below the Mason and Dixon line. Likewise the American Association clubs—St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Toledo, Columbus, Milwaukee and Louisville—were due in the South about this time for their annual visit. All these clubs leave the "Sunny Land" richer every year by about $200,000, of which the railroads and the hotels get the lion's share and the moving picture shows, the laundries and the cigar stands what is left.

Players Arrive.

Smith and Kelly were hardly dressed in their uniforms before the players began to arrive and within half an hour there were fully a dozen of them on hand. There were "Whitey" Alperman, the old National League player, now second-baseman of the Atlanta club, as good as ever fielded a grounder when it was hot or muffed a liner when it was bewhiskered; Bailey, the heavy-hitting outfielder; McAllister, who wants to become an umpire; Long, Nixon, Smith, the new third-baseman; Musser and Brady, the clever pitchers; Dobard and Kernan, infielders, and Dunn, the catcher.

There were shaking of hands and merry greetings. Gordon Kelly met all the arrivals as fast as they came to the clubhouse. The homes of these players were scattered all over the country. The men had not seen each other since the last of September.

Alperman was the first of the new arrivals to don his uniform. He laced his shoes and then arose and stretched himself.

"Gee, I wish the Southern League season was over," he said, with a yawn.

This remark caused a great laugh in the clubhouse.

"Starting to 'crab' before you've touched a baseball, eh?" observed Bill Smith.

"No," returned the second baseman. "I wanted to get it off my system, that's all. Come on, boys, let's get a move on," and the players, laughing and shouting like schoolboys, ran on the field and began their season's work with that time-honored exercise of tossing the ball in pairs.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

"Study Your Expression," Says Pretty Gertrude Barnes

Miss Barnes in a summery pose.

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"SMILE and curl up your mouth corners," said merry Gertrude Barnes. She had just finished doing five character songs in characteristic costumes. She had run the gamut of emotion from the naughty little "enfant terrible" through the stranded show girl longing for the "old Kentucky home" to the mirth-mad exponent of "Row, row, row." And all this earnest and successful effort to please her audience left her cool, buoyant and ready to give the whole world of girls the kindly benefit of her study of how to have "a sane mind in a healthy body."

"Expression is important for character as well as to aid the search after beauty," said pretty Miss Gertrude, with laughing earnestness. "I used to be afraid to smile all I wanted to for fear I would get those heavy lines from nostril to lip; and then suddenly I became aware of all the hard-looking faces one sees—and the chief reason for the hardness was down drooping, disagreeable looking lips. I decided at once to take a chance on the lesser evil, and began curling my mouth up at the corners, even when I was not particularly anxious to 'look pleasant, please;' now as a result there may be lines around my mouth, but they are lines of pleasantness—aren't they?" she added anxiously. "And sometimes when I am ready to feel cross my mouth keeps on smiling—and I recover."

Merry good nature and kindly interest in life happen to be among the greatest charms of Miss Barnes' animated, expensive face, and very pleasing is the twinkle that reflects from big brown eyes to the merry dimpled corners of her this-is-a-fine-old-world mouth.

"You may safely go on smiling," I said with a smile of my own; "but how about all the other expressions you bring in rapid succession to your face—don't they make lines?"

A Brand-New One.

"Not lines that stay," answered Miss Barnes. "You see, I have a few methods of keeping my skin in good condition. They are cold water, sunburn and tan."

"Sunburn and tan!" I exclaimed. "I thought they were fatal to the fine texture of the skin."

"Perhaps they are fatal to the old, worn-out outer layer they destroy. But they give the fresh new layer waiting underneath a chance, and they help give strong, firm flesh, good, healthy flesh, without which fine-textured skin is just impossible. And sunburn and tan come from plenty of sunlight and fresh air, which are the best things in the whole world for the health and beauty seeker. So there you are in a perfect circle, when you have added plenty of cold water—and served up a fine, healthy skin on a background of strong, firm flesh that can throw off the little lines you make temporarily by twisting your face around into any extreme of expressions you choose.

"Cold water—cold water—cold water! Won't you sing its praises very earnestly, please? And tell all the girls not to be afraid of the charm of expression—they may indulge in it all they like if they have been sunburned and tanned and cold-watered, with good massage-like splashes that make the skin strong enough to throw off the little temporary blemishes of lines and wrinkles.

"Oh, my circle is not complete yet," laughed the cheery star, "I have a little more to say about fresh air. Go out into it all you can, and hunt and ride if you can. Riding is wonderful for the muscles of the limbs; hunting develops the muscles of the waist—but if you can do neither, swim. Anyone can swim if she just chooses to learn how—and it is a most wonderful, inspiring, lung-filling, flesh hardening form of exercise.

A "Water Baby."

"I manufactured a lot of my own healthfulness by going after it very earnestly. Being a water-baby and being an outdoor girl are almost equally important; they both make you healthy, and if you are wise enough to be both your chances of being a beauty increase.

"You see, fresh air and exercise have trained my figure for me, so I don't have to rely on corsets to do it. They have trained my skin for me, so I don't have to hold my face in a mask-like expression in order to avoid lines and wrinkles—so there is my basis, and then I go ahead and try to make the most of my looks, although I know perfectly well that the result is not beauty."

But on this latter bit of information Miss Gertrude Barnes has a monopoly, for good features added to the winsome charm of a bright face and the pose of a healthy body surely deserve the title of beauty.

"Now about arranging your face to the best advantage," said Miss Barnes with the earnest attention to every detail that makes her work so pleasing and conversation with her a true delight. "Of course, it is inadvisable for a girl who wishes to be accepted at face value as a lady to use any makeup on the street, for she is sure to look conspicuous and artificial—for the one all-embracing reason that without the earnest study an actress gives the subject the gentle art of makeup becomes a farce, instead of an art.

"However, any girl can teach her eyebrows to grow in a smooth, pretty curve by brushing them at night and morning with a tiny brush; and good cream will keep the face clean as to its pores as well as on the surface; and a well-poised head adds a final touch of charm. Girls should cultivate the habit of holding their heads with the natural poise of a flower instead of jutting forward like a swag, or bending back with the curve of a lightning-struck tree.

"And learn to design your own clothes. Make them express YOU so your personality will be a rounded whole without one jarring note."

And since there is no jarring note in Miss Barnes' unaffected, wholesome personality, this final bit of advice fits in with the beauty study of an expert in whatever she undertakes—and is well worth following.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it to-day.

Household Suggestions

A little soap shredded into the boiler on washing day makes the clothes a good color, and if you put a small piece into the starch it will make the ironing easier, and it imparts a lovely gloss to the clothes. All the little bits of soap that are left over should be put into a jar with a little water. Place the jar in a moderate oven and leave until the soap has dissolved. This is excellent for washing flannels and woollen things.

In choosing chickens, observe chiefly the length of leg. The best chickens have short legs in proportion to the size of the body; the bones are small and the flesh is white. The best test of age is found at the end of the breast-bone. When the bird is young, the end of the bone is soft and gelatinous, and it becomes gradually harder as the age of the bird increases.

A good way in which to keep plants fresh without watering them when the house must be closed is to take all the plants to the cellar or some other cold place and set them in tubs, with an ordinary brick under each flower pot. Pour into the tubs just enough water to cover the bricks. It is best to place the tubs by an east window if possible.

To boil milk without fear of burning, put two or three tablespoonfuls of water in the saucepan; let it boil rapidly for two or three minutes; add the milk, and it will not burn, however fierce the fire may be.

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

"Little cousin," he said with the deep tenderness of the man who finds happiness in the joy of the woman he loves, though he be shut from her very life, "there is nothing the matter with me. Life gives me almost all I want. No one can have everything. A banker's life has not much color and passion; I would rather make music than money. But don't think he stupidly discontented—or ungrateful for all I have. I cannot say all I mean! There is one thing in the world—in ALL THE WORLD there is one thing I want. For this I would give the world itself, if it were mine—and all the money in the world. And all life would be music, and color and passion then. And I can't tell you—I must never speak of it to you—and you will never understand!"

Outside sunshine and roses—here renunciation of al lthe joy life must never hold. Jacob felt that he must stifle in this litle room where hope had died. He strode to the doorway—to the gleaming terrace.

The Old Story.

And then slowly, swayed by a feeling she felt must be pity, Charlotte followed him. "Jacob, perhaps I do understand."

"Charlotte! If you do—I shall have spoken no word. In a sense it was not honorable of me—though at first I only meant to warn you, and I never thought; I should guard you against myself. Dear little Charlotte—forget what I said!"

"I cannot forget—so easily!" Charlotte's eyes were very soft, her little quivering lips were dangerously near, but Dame Fate had chosen capriciously to make this a day of unfinished climaxes, and only Frau Gudala's ready wit and loving heart intervened between the girl and a rather tragic scene, for at the particular moment when the sunny doorway framed the pretty picture she made as she stood looking pleadingly at a sorely-tempted Jacob, the hall door opened, admitting the Duke and Frau Gudula and her sons.

Gustavus of Taunus was asking: "I may have the honor of addressing your daughter?" and Grannie saved the situation. "There is wine in the garden—if you will honor me. Charlotte, dear, will you and Jacob show Count Fehrenberg the way? Duke Gustavus, could you make up your mind to a little chat with an old woman? Would you stop here with me—alone—for a few minutes? I ask it as a favor." And so Grannie prepared to make her fight for the happiness of her children.

"May I forget for a few moments that I am an old Jewess—and you a reigning Prince? I want to speak to you about Charlotte. She lost her mother many years ago—and now, at this important time of her life, I must try to be a mother to the child. My son Solomon, you know, sometimes sees only one side to a question, the one he wants to see. But I have looked at this marriage between you and Charlotte from many points of view—have you? Do you see the difficulties and danger?"

Gustavus thought for a moment of the girl who wished him to make this marriage in order that she might be the cousin of a wealthy man instead of a pauper Prince. The tricksy jade with her lying eyes—and for one supreme moment he had thought perhaps he and Evelyn might abdicate and face poverty together—well, she wanted money—on with the dance called life! Prince of Taunus, must dance to his piping—then dance merrily and proudly for all the world to see.

He answered the earnest old Jewess lightly indeed. "Oh, I admit the dangers in this marriage, Baroness. But they make the prospect more fascinating—to me. After all, I do not want my future comfortably laid out for me with mathematical certainty! I prefer to run a litle risk! I have lived in a world that grows tired of old games—and is always ready to learn new rules!"

"But marriage is not a game," said the old woman. To her marriage was a Sacrament.

"It may be an adventure if the consequences are not too early seen. Why, my life has ben one series of adventures. When I was a child Napoleon was shaking the ground he marched over. One day my father's little throne fell down, and was picked up and dropped into the Corsican sack! I have known exile, and my crown has been restored to me. I have had money—and it has gone—well, perhaps, I should have had to go after it—pouf!—if your sons had not now once again lifted me upon my little throne. Oh, you see, Baroness, I have had my ups and downs."

"You treat me as a plaything. What blessing can there be for a girl of my people in sharing such a life?"

"When I am married, Baroness"—

"Don't call me that! It is a pretense that does not please me," said the old Jewess impatiently to the reigning Duke of Taunus.

Gustavus exclaimed in amazement: "A pretense! The Emperor has—"

"Your Highness," interposed the old woman, "no Emperor can ennoble me—at my age of seventy-one. Rank is not worn so easily by old woman."

Gustavus of Taunus rose to the supreme height of his manhood as, with a sudden illuminating respect for a fineness he might have failed to glimpse in his little cousin's soul, but saw now in full splendod in the gentle mien of the old Jewess, he answered Frau Gudula: "I think, madame, you belong to a more ancient nobility than my own."

Then, in a little access of mischief, he added: "I shall be proud to be connected with you by marriage."

Frau Gudula had played her highest stake for Charlotte's happiness—and had failed! "Give your compliments to my grandchild, Duke Gustavus, and convince her with them if you can. I wash my hands of this marriage. The matter is beyond me. I pray Providence to guide and guard my little girl." With brimming eyes that scarce could see the sunshine, Frau Gudula walked to the door by the great arbor of pink roses and looked at the merry group sipping her beloved Meyer Amschel's burgundy out in the garden. Well, it is not given to every woman to be the wife of a man she can worship. Poor little Charlotte.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

WAIT A WHILE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am 22, and have been keeping company with a certain girl for six weeks. At first it seemed love at first sight, but lately she has grown cold. I buy her candy and flowers and try to please her, and her parents have taken a liking to me. But she now assumes an indifferent air. Do you think my proposal would be accepted? I am madly in love with her.
S. S.

Has it occurred to you that she may have grown tired of seeing so much of you? Try an application of that old adage, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

In any event, a proposal after an acquaintance of only six weeks is apt to be premature.

DON'T LET HIM KNOW.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of 18 years and in love with a man of 30 years. This man is a friend of my folks. He has never taken me out and he is very nice to me, and always talks of getting married. He doesn't know I love him. Please tell me how I could win his love.
A SPANISH GIRL.

Suppose I were to tell you to let him know of your love. You are only 18, and girls of that age transfer their hearts easily. If you let him know of your love to-day, the chances are you will love another man to-morrow. Spare yourself humiliation by keeping your love a secret until he asks for it.

NOT IMPROPER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Do you think it proper for a girl who is keeping steady company to ask the man when she will see him next? A. L. W.

Their intimacy warrants such a question from her, but I would not want her to be urgent or persistent, and it is in better taste if she lets him take the initiative in making future engagements.

MOTHERS SHOULD CALL FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady and wish to know if it is proper for the young lady's mother to call on my mother, or my mother to call on her, my mother being the elder. We will soon be engaged. S. S. L.

Such overtures should come from the family of the man, never from the family of the girl.

THE LADY FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Which is proper: For a lady to greet a gentleman first, or a gentleman to greet a lady, while walking on the street? ARCO.

The lady is the first always to give some sign of recognition.

Do You Know---

Some curious experiences seem to have befallen Mr. William Campbell, late of the Black Watch, who has just finished a 50,000-mile walk, in a kilt, through India, Ceylon, Australia and New Zealand. In Italy his dancing of a Highland fling in the street led to arrest, a New Zealand chief offered him a wife in exchange for his costume, and in Australia he lavished money on eau-de-cologne in order to keep the mosquitoes away from his knees. He was nearly murdered at a religious festival in Ceylon, being taken for a devil.

The Quebec agency of the Canadian Marine Department has received word that a gas buoy which drifted from its position in the lower St. Lawrence River during the winter of 1912 has been picked up by the lightship at Hellewick, New South Wales. It is supposed that the buoy drifted round Cape Horn, a distance of 16,000 miles. The date of the buoy's disappearance is not given, but even if it took place early in the winter of 1911-12 the buoy would have to drift 30 miles a day or more to reach New South Wales in the time.

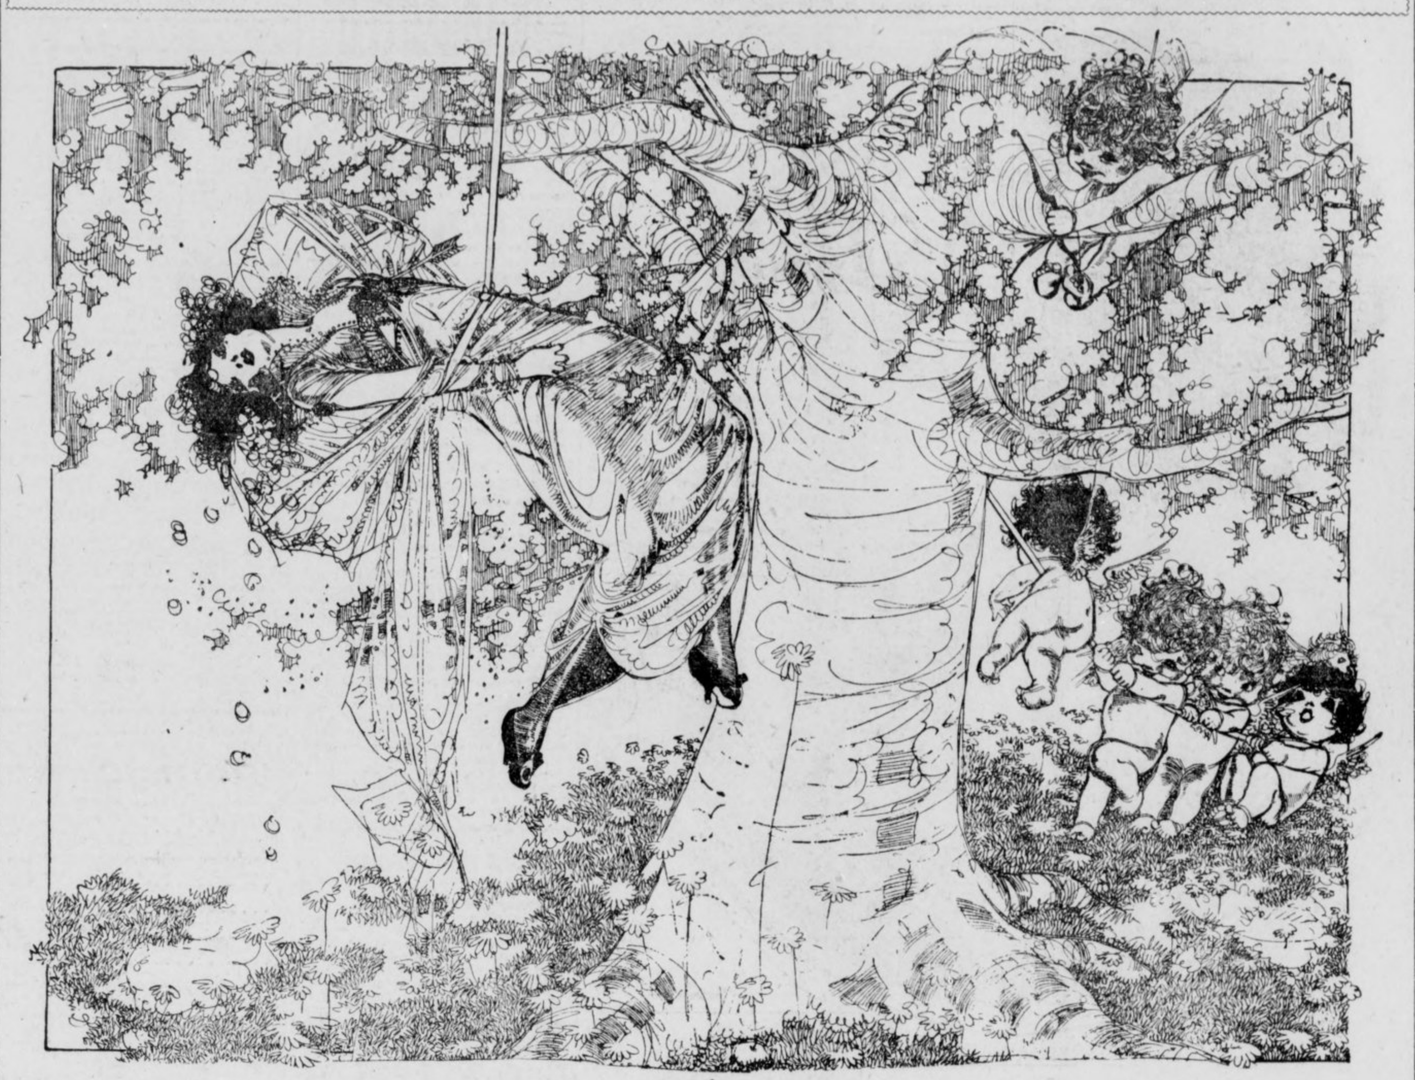
Snared!

With the Golden Apple of Love for Bait

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.

By NELL BRINKLEY



NELL BRINKLEY SAYS

IN this fashion is it done! In the depths of a lovely forest, velveted underfoot in emerald-moss and sewn thick with flowers—forget-me-nots, heartease and such like soft names—hide certain wary wights with very fat cheeks and tummies! Over the runways they set their snares—a cunning loop of golden cord—thrown over a high tree-bough and down, as high from the ground as—a maid's waist. On the green moss under the shining loop (which is so like a slanting sunbeam that a strolling lady would never catch it in her bright eye in the world) they drop a golden apple. And on the golden apple the sun smites hard enough to enchant and blind a maid with its flame. One malicious wight, the coldest-blooded of all, shins up the tree into the leafy green shadow and lies there with his bow drawn and a keen-tipped arrow necked. The rest fall upon the other end of the cord. They hold their breath, their eyes harden and brighten. The feathery curl on the tip top of one's head waves idly in the wind! One itches his pink heel with the toes of his other foot. One breathes too loud and gets a fat knee in his back for his stupidity. They WAIT—the cord a bit slack. Down the runway comes a maid, with soft black hair, primroses over her ears, a narrow slashed skirt (the better to dance the Tango in), silver buckles on her shoes and an unsuspecting sweet blue eye! And the sun on the golden apple smites into her eyes! The wights behind the tree-bole stiffen and dig their toes into the moss. With a little cry the maid pinches up her silken skirt between a forefinger and thumb and runs swiftly—in a soft rush—she dives down with a greedy hand for the apple in the moss. Her head hovers within the big golden loop. She straightens—ah-h-h down slithers the noose over her shoulders—"Heya"—the wights lean and pull like mad, and my lady's body is twirling in midair, her little heels kicking nothing! "Heya!"—the wight in the tree lets his arrow go singing straight to the captive's heart—and another maid is snared!

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The father was impressed of a sudden with the fact that, while this affair was of supreme import to himself, it was, after all, of still greater significance to his son. To himself, the chief concerns were of the worldly kind. To this boy, the vital thing was something deeper, something of the heart; for, however absurd his feeling, the truth remained that he loved the woman. Yes, it was the son's name that Mary Turner had taken, as well as that of his father. In the case of the son, she had taken not only his name, but his very life. Yes, it was, indeed, Dick's tragedy. Whatever he, the father, might feel, the son was, after all, more affected. He must suffer more, must lose more, must pay more with happiness for his folly.

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect, but he could not let the situation go without protest, protest most vehement.

"Dick," he cried, and his big voice was shaken a little by the force of his emotion, "boy, you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow." He stood very erect, staring steadfastly out of his clear gray eyes into those of his son. His heavy face was rigid with feeling; the coarse mouth bent slightly in a smile of troubled fondness, as he added more softly: "You owe me that much."

The son's eyes met his father's freely. There was respect in them, and affection, but there was something else, too, something the older man recognized as beyond his control. He spoke gravely, with a deliberate conviction.

Gilder's Voice Rang Out.

"I owe something to her, too, Dad."

But Gilder would not let the statement go unchallenged. His heavy voice rang out rebukingly, overtoned with protest.

"What can you owe her?" he demanded, indignantly. "She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally, it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. The courts hold that is only a part of the marriage actually. The fact that she doesn't receive you makes it simpler, too. It can be arranged. We must get you out of the scrape."

He turned and went to the desk, as if to sit, but he was halted by his son's answer, given very gently, yet with a note of finality that to the father's ear rang like the crack of doom.

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

That was all, but those plain words summed the situation, made the issue a matter not of advice, but of the heart.

Gilder persisted, however, in trying to evade the integral fact of his son's feeling. Still he tried to fix the issue on the known unsavory reputation of the woman.

"You want to stay married to this jail bird!" he stormed.

"She Is Justified."

A gust of fury swept over the boy. He loved the woman, in spite of all; he respected her, even reverenced her. To hear her thus named moved him to a rage almost beyond his control. But he mastered himself. He remembered that the man who spoke loved him; he remembered, too, that the word of opprobrium was no more than the truth, however offensive it might be to his sensitiveness. He waited a moment until he could hold his voice even. Then his words were the sternest protest that could have been uttered, though they came from no exercise of thought, only out of the depths of his heart.

"I'm very fond of her."

That was all. But the simple sincerity of the saying gripped the father's mood as no argument could have done. There was a little silence. After all, what could meet such loving loyalty?

When at last he spoke Gilder's voice was subdued, a little husky.

"Now that you know?" he questioned.

There was no faltering in the answer. "Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. Then abruptly the young man spoke with the energy of perfect faith in the woman. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way, in her own mind, anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison. She feels that the world owes her—"

But the older man would not permit the assertion to go uncontradicted. That reference to the woman's innocence was an arraignment of himself, for it had been he who sent her to the term of imprisonment.

"Don't talk to me about her innocence!" he said, and his voice was ominous. "I suppose next you will argue that, because she's been clever enough to keep within the law since she's got out of State's prison, she's not a criminal. But let me tell you—crime is crime, whether the law touches it in the particular case or whether it does not."

Gilder faced his son sternly for a moment, and then presently spoke again with deeper earnestness.

"There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up."

The son met his father's gaze with a level look in which there was no weakness.

"I've told you, Dad—" he began.

"You must, I tell you," the father insisted. Then he went on quickly, with a tone of utmost positiveness. "If you don't, what are you going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters—for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. He was furious at this supposition that she would continue in her irregular practices.

But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the Rogues' Gallery, but they will take another. Yes, and the imprints of her fingers, and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. It was blasphemy to think of her in such case, subjected to the degradation of these processes. Yet, every word had in it the piercing horrible sting of truth. His face whitened. He raised a supplicating hand.

"Father!"

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine." There was a little pause, and the father stood rigid, menacing. The final question came rasping. "What are you going to do about it?"

Dick went forward until he was close to his father. Then he spoke with profound conviction.

"It will never happen. She will go straight, Dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder once again put his hand tenderly on his son's shoulder. His voice was modulated to an unaccustomed mildness as he spoke.

"Be sensible, boy," he pleaded softly. "Be sensible!"

Dick dropped down on the couch, and made his answer very gently, his eyes unseeing as he dwelt on the things he know of the woman he loved.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"ME and brother Wilfred spent a week-end up in the country, and I have just came back," said the Manicure Lady. "I would rather than not spend all my week-ends in the country, George, because the air is so restful up there, but I guess Wilfred don't want to go back no more to the town where we was.

"You see, George, my poor, deluded brother had an idea that he could sail into the little town where we was going and just tell them that he was from New York. He thought that would make him an idol in said town. I didn't think so for a minute, George, because I know how people is in small towns. They mind their own business and everybody else's, but they don't care a rap where they find out you came from. You might as well try to make a gorilla kiss your hand as to make a small towner respect you because you are a New Yorker. They simply don't care where you are from, and the way they treated my poor brother I guess the bigger the town you came from the less they care."

They Go to Europe.

"I don't blame them," said the Head Barber. "I don't see why a man should figure himself a favorite just because he lives in a little New York flat and rides up and down town in the subway. How is that going to make a man wise? Most of the fellows that was born in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge—the kind that comes in here sometimes to get shaved—ain't got much idea of the great country they are living in. If they save up a little dough, they don't go out to the wonderful Pacific Coast. No; they go to Europe and get bunked. They pay a guide a lot of dough to show them some place where an English king had his nephews choked to death in a tower, and then they come back and tell about their travels."

"I hope you ain't doing a monologue, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I was trying to tell you something about this week-end party, if you are enough of a gent to listen. Well, Wilfred and me reached the town all right, and the minute we got to the hotel and were seated with our country friends around the table, poor brother pulls the very phrase that I asked him not to. 'This is fair,' he says to the company, 'but little old New York for mine.' I knew right off that he had made a bonehead play, because I seen the folks look at each other kind of funny, but he doesn't gete wise, not Wilfred. 'The reason I like Manhattan,' he babbles right on, 'is because Manhattan is the market for brains. I write, as perhaps some of you people know,' says poor brother, 'and the brains of the country, in literature, all flock to New York. If I were a farmer, I would like it up here, but being a writer, I have to be in the heart of the literary world, little old New York.'

A Quiet Fellow.

"There was a nice, quiet-looking fellow in the party, George, that I seen looking over my fool brother kind of sly and unobstructive like. He was dressed rough, because he was on a fishing trip, but I seen right away from his calm, well-bred misdemeanor that he was a gent. He listened a long time while Wilfred was telling them what a terrible strain it is on a writer to keep writing, and he even stood for my brother's reciting some of his own poems right at the table with his mouth full of chow-chow and new bread. Then he got up and went out with a smile at me. I seen then and there that him and me would be good friends, because we both knew Wilfred through and through.

"Honest to goodness, George, do you know who he was? I asked one of the ladies, and she told me. The gent that had been listening to Wilfred's hot air about writing and writers was George Ade, who wrote 'Fables in Slang' and 'Horatius at the Bridge' and 'David Copperfield' and a lot of other books and plays."

"Did Wilfred find out who he was?" asked the Head Barber.

"Sure he did, but it didn't feaze him. He said that the time would go swift for the party with two clever writers at the same table!"

The Care-Free Spin

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE is this difference: She is an Old Maid if she is old fashioned and resigned, and a Bachelor Girl if she fights hard.

It must be dreary to be a Spin and have no husband come home and growl all evening about the high cost of living.

When a Spin knows how to smooth a man's plumage an ideal wife is lost to the world.

No one can save money quite as fast as a Spin after she has put aside the curling iron with the conviction that no man is worth having.

When all her friends unite in saying "What a good time she has," you can bet "She's is either a Spin or a widow.

It is easy to compliment the mother of children, but when a woman has become a real old Spin the only way to reach her is to appeal through what she learned at school.

"The top of her voice" is a common expression, but the top note depends entirely on whether a woman is married or a Spin. Mothers reach a high key through experience in screaming at the children, their husbands and the dog, but the top of a Spin's voice is a low pitch, and when she tries to raise it it becomes a squeal. The top of a mother's voice would stop a fire engine, the top of a Spin's voice isn't loud enough to call the cat home from the next yard.

Once Upon a Time there lived an Old Maid. She did not call herself a Spin. She was frank about it, and admitted she was an Old Maid, despising such subterfuges as Spin and Bachelor Girl. The Old Maid was lonesome, and lonesomeness for an Old Maid is DANGEROUS. She was more lonesome than her friends realized, and one day left Lonesome Land by walking from the altar with a Man. One morning a few years later her husband left the house after a stormy scene, banging the door with such violence that pictures and plates tumbled from the walls. The noise awoke the Twins, and they set up a Howl. "At least," said the ex-Old Maid, as she tried to soothe the crying babies and pick up pictures and broken glass and china at the same time, "I Am No Longer Lonesome. And having said that she said All!

NEW YORK CENTRAL LINES

THE SOCIAL WORLD

Mrs. William D. Grant was hostess at an informal dinner Sunday evening in honor of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Seydel, of New York, who are being extensively entertained as guests of Mrs. Seydel's parents, Dr. and Mrs. Vassar Woolley. The dinner was given at the country home of Governor-elect and Mrs. John Marshall Slaton. The apartments were decorated with summer flowers from Mrs. Slaton's gardens.

Covers were laid for twelve at a table covered with filiet lace. Down the length of the table were three large silver vases filled with roses shading from pale pink to deep rose, caught together with garlands of pink and white sweetpeas. Smaller vases of sweetpeas flanked the central decoration. Place cards were hand painted in sweetpeas.

Mrs. Grant wore black charmeuse satin, the corsage of shadow lace embroidered in rose and gold. Mrs. Seydel's toilet of white chiffon was combined with pale pink and blue, and worn with a large pink hat.

Guests included Governor-elect and Mrs. Slaton, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Howell, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas R. Felder, Dr. and Mrs. Dunbar Roy and Colonel Willis Ragan.

Luncheon for Seniors.

Members of the Sigma Delta Phi Sorority of Agnes Scott College entertained at a luncheon Monday at the Georgian Terrace for three of their members who are graduates this year—Misses Helen Smith, Olivia Bogacki and Kate Clark. Others present were Misses Ruth Blue, Mynelle Blue, Lula White, Henrietta Lambdin, Bert Morgan, Dorothy Muetin, Elizabeth Willet, Aline Fischer, Pauline Brunner and Gladys Camp.

Cox College Commencement.

Cox College commencement last week closed the seventieth session of that institution. The program was marked by delightful social events and with literary and musical entertainments. The series of commencement events opened with a program presented by the two literary societies of the college, the Philologian and the Sidney Lanier. The feature of the evening was an address on "Cheerfulness" by Dr. S. R. Belk, of Atlanta, and short musical numbers by the students added to the variety of the program.

On Sunday afternoon the baccalaureate sermon was delivered by Dr. D. W. Key before one of the largest and most representative audiences ever gathered at Cox College. The new pipe organ recently installed in the college was heard to advantage under the skillful fingers of Mr. Charles A. Sheldon, Jr., the director of organ.

The exercises on Monday evening, in charge of the seniors and certificate girls, were interesting and original. Besides the literary work, the program was interspersed with piano and vocal numbers.

The home-coming of the "Old Cox College Girls" on Tuesday afternoon was the brightest feature of the commencement. The program given in the earlier part of the afternoon was presided over by Mrs. Sophie Blue Albright and consisted of papers and talks by graduates of many years ago and piano numbers by attractive young girls. After the program a social hour followed and the spirit of college loyalty was shown in the gay songs and college yells by the younger students and the enthusiastic applause of the older women.

The final exercises were held on Tuesday evening. The musical program was of a high artistic stamp. Diplomas and certificates were delivered to a class of 40. The programs of each evening were followed by informal receptions.

The closing of the seventieth session of Cox College marks an important epoch in the history of the school. For three-score and ten years this institution has stood for the highest along both literary and artistic lines and for the coming session its friends predict a successful future.

Musicale at Home for Old Women.

The Council of Jewish Women gave an entertainment to the inmates of the Home for Old Women Friday afternoon. A musical program was rendered by Mrs. Max Samuels and Miss Sylvia Spritz. An ice course with home-made cake was served at the close of the afternoon.

The hostesses were Mrs. Isaac Schoen, Mrs. Leo Grossman, Mrs. Dan Klein, Mrs. Harry Cohen, Mrs. Henry Kauffman, Mrs. H. Cronheim, Mrs. A. Dittler, Mrs. H. C. Sommers, Mrs. D. Steinheimer, Miss Sylvia Spritz, Mrs. Max Samuels and Mrs. J. W. Greenfield.

Halcyon Club Dance.

The members of the Halcyon Club of Decatur and their friends will have an informal dance in the club rooms Tuesday evening.

D. A. R. Chapter for Jackson.

Mrs. J. S. Jones has been made regent of the new D. A. R. chapter at Jackson. The chapter was organized Saturday by Mrs. Shephard W. Foster, of Atlanta, State regent. Fifteen charter members were enrolled. Mrs. F. S. Ethridge was elected vice regent; Mrs. Mary Butrell Watson, registrar; Miss Louise Harris, corresponding secretary; Mrs. P. W. Nolan, recording secretary; Miss Lucy Goodman, historian, and Mrs. W. L. Ethridge, auditor.

After the business meeting Mrs. Foster gave a talk on the work of the D. A. R. in Georgia.

The name for the chapter has not been decided. It will be one of the following three names, famous in Georgia history: William McIntosh, John McIntosh, John Martin.

Mrs. Foster was extensively entertained at Jackson.

Normal Commencement.

The Atlanta Kindergarten Normal School commencement exercises take place at the Woman's Club on Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock.

Following is the program:

Benediction.

Mrs. Borwne's Recital.

Last Friday evening at Cable Hall pupils of the Atlanta Conservatory of Music from the piano class of Mrs. Lottie Gray Browne, assisted by pupils from the violin and oratory departments, gave a recital.

Among those taking part were the Misses Elizabeth Sloan, Evelyn McGahee, Marie Lester, Marian Krieghshaber, Christine McEachern, Camille Work, Mary Louise Wray, Edna Heard, Isolyn Barker, Virginia Haugh, Elizabeth Richardson, Louise Bates, Marian Gillispie, Marie Almand, Phoebe Kirk, Messrs. Robert Turner, Frank Smith and Frank Turner.

Mother Goose Pageant.

The most brilliant and spectacular al fresco entertainment ever given in Atlanta will be the Mother Goose pageant Saturday. The occasion will be the reappearance of the people of Mother Goose's reign. The place of meeting will be the spacious lawn of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde King, in Druid Hills.

The Mother Goose pageant will be given under the management of the Joseph Habersham Chapter, D. A. R., and will be featured by many original specialties in dancing, parades and tableaux. There will be a baby show, and fairies, gnomes, witches, flowers and other picturesque characters.

Joseph Habersham Chapter has 350 members, all of whom, headed by Mrs. John A. Perdue, regent, are lending their assistance to the perfection of the show. Mrs. William L. Peel is general chairman.

Parts taken are as follows:

Baby Show—Mrs. George Dexter, Mrs. Lee Lewman and Mrs. W. F. Dykes.

Old Woman in the Shoe—Mrs. Henry DeGive.

Blue Beard—Mrs. Harvie Jordan.

Little Orphant Annie—Mrs. Allen Schoen.

The Fairies—Mrs. William Nixon, Mrs. Sherwood Higgs, Mrs. William Percy, Mrs. Albert Akers, Mrs. Dillon Akers and Mrs. Howard Candler.

The Beggars—Mrs. Colcord.

Indians and Cowboys—Mrs. Dinkins, Mrs. Parker, Mrs. Seabrook, Mrs. Owens, Mrs. Murry and Mrs. Lake.

Mistress Mary—Mrs. Niles, Mrs. Woodside and Mrs. Gause.

Pied Piper or Hamlin—Mrs. Hollaman.

Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves—Mrs. J. B. Hackoway, Mrs. H. L. Collier, Mrs. Yeates and Mrs. Stallings.

Country Dance—Mrs. William Speer.

Miss Moseley will have charge of the solo and feature dancing, in which Miss Anne Grant will appear in a specialty dance.

Mother Goose and her large family will be managed by Miss Irene Wight King, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde King. The tableaux presented by that wonderful family will be a feature of the pageant.

The country dance will be in the evening from 6 to 8 o'clock.

Informal Tea for Visitors.

Mrs. Bun Wylie's informal tea Monday afternoon assembled a dozen friends to meet three visitors, Mrs. Vassar Woolley's guest, Mrs. Paul Seydel, of New York; Mrs. Virgil Perryman's guest, Mrs. Strachan Barrett, of Henderson, Ky., and Mrs. A. E. Wheeler's guest, Mrs. George Addy, of Pittsburg.

Red rambler roses and daisies decorated the living room. Tea was served from a table having as a centerpiece a long rustic basket filled with Dorothy Perkins roses, the tall handle tied with pink tulle, surrounded by Dresden shaded tapers and minor details in pink and white.

Mrs. Wylie received in blue charmeuse, combined with shadow lace.

For Miss Hall.

Mrs. L. C. Moeckel will entertain a number of young girls at bridge on Wednesday afternoon in compliment to Miss Muriel Hall, who will be married to Mr. Lewis Turner in June.

Gerard-Bartel.

The marriage is announced of Mr. Emmett Bishop Bartel, of Chicago, and Miss Ella Pearle Gerard, also of Chicago. The announcement will be received with interest by Atlanta friends of the bride. The couple are at home for the present at the La-Salle Hotel.

Earle-Jones.

Mr. and Mrs. Theron Thomas Earle, of Greenville, S. C., have issued invitations to the marriage of their daughter, Miss Juliet Earle, to Mr. Joseph Olds Jones the evening of June 3 at the First Baptist Church, Greenville.

Students' Recital.

Students of the Atlanta Conservatory of Music and Oratory from the advanced pupils of the piano class of Mrs. Lottie Gray Browne, assisted by pupils from the voice, violin and oratory departments, will give a free recital in Cable Hall May 29, at 8:15 p. m.

Miss Morgan Hostess.

Miss Elizabeth Morgan entertained a number of visitors at a box party at the Atlanta Monday afternoon. Guests included Misses Elizabeth Boyd and her hostess, Carolyn King; Margaret McPheeters, of Raleigh, who is visiting her sister, Mrs. Samuel Inman; Marian Hodgson, of Athens, and her hostess, Laura Cowles.

Mrs. Jackson's Party.

Mrs. Berry R. Jackson gave a bridge party and linen shower Monday afternoon for Miss Ollie Fewell, whose marriage to Mr. Jerry Taylor will take place June 2.

Evening Bridge.

Mrs. Sheppard Foster will entertain at two tables of bridge Monday evening for Mr. and Mrs. Paul Seydel, of New York.

For Miss Boyd.

Miss Hildreth Burton-Smith will entertain at bridge Wednesday afternoon at her home in Fifteenth Street for Miss Elizabeth Boyd, a guest of Miss Carolyn King.

Miss Helen Jones will give an informal tea at the Driving Club for Miss Boyd this week.

INFLUENCE OF WOMEN

The influence of women, glorious in the possession of perfect physical health, upon men and upon the civilization of the world could never be measured—but what about the ailing, nervous, depressed woman who is a damper to all joyousness in the home and a drag upon her husband! Every such woman should remember that the one great American remedy for woman's ills is Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and give it a trial at once, and thus put herself in the way of restoring that perfect physical health which is hers by birthright.

MRS. PANKHURST FREE A MONTH REARRESTED

Militant Leader, Released When Near Death From Hunger Strike, Again Jailed.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 26.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, president of the Woman's Social and Political Union and leader of the militant suffragettes, who was sentenced to three years imprisonment last month, but who has been at liberty for a month because of sickness brought on by a hunger strike, was rearrested to-day as she was leaving the residence of Dr. Ethel Smyth in Woking.

Announcement to this effect was made at the weekly meeting of suffrage leaders.

Mrs. Pankhurst's release was effected on ticket of leave by Home Secretary McKenna, with the provision that she should be returned to Holloway jail as soon as she recovered sufficiently. She has been under treatment in a nursing home under guard.

Announcement that Mrs. Pankhurst had again been placed in jail to continue serving her sentence caused a hostile demonstration among the women.

Mrs. Pankhurst had just denied a report in British papers to-day that the Home Office is sure it has broken the backbone of the campaign of violence.

Mrs. Pankhurst was taken into Bow Street Court, where the sitting magistrate ordered her remanded to Holloway Jail. The court was informed that her health had improved sufficiently to allow her return to jail. The famous militant leader declared that she would immediately go on another hunger strike.

McKee Asks Increase In Postoffice Force

Postmaster Hugh McKee to-day declared the eight-hour law was a great step forward for the Postoffice Department.

"It is a good thing from a moral viewpoint," said Mr. McKee, "and if we have enough men I believe the system will work out all right.

"Atlanta is growing so rapidly I have been forced to put on additional men. I find I need more and have sent in a requisition for an increase. I shall not know if this requisition has been granted until after the end of the fiscal year, July 1."

Alston Lays Growth Of Trusts to Voter

That certain large corporations with a tendency to meddle in politics make headway because the average voter is too apathetic to resist, was the statement made by Robert Alston, prominent lawyer and general counsel for the Southern Express Company, in an address to the Atlanta bar and students of the Atlanta Law School.

The clause giving Congress the right to regulate interstate commerce was declared to be the twelve words of destiny of the constitution, the basis for enactments which finally "knocked States' rights into a cocked hat."

Severe Cough Led to Lung Trouble

Sufferers with Lung Trouble are rarely willing to acknowledge the fact. If you have a so-called "cold" that has long persisted; or a cough that keeps you anxious; or any of the symptoms of Lung Trouble, such as fever or night sweats, weakness, loss of appetite, or perhaps some raising of mucus, take Eckman's Alterative—as Mr. Bettersworth did:

Bowling Green, Ky., R. No. 4.

"Gentlemen: The spring of 1908 I had a severe cough for six months. I tried all the medicine that my doctors recommended to me, but no results came for the better. I had night sweats, and would cough and spit until I got so weak I could hardly do anything. But, at last, James Deering, of Glasgow Junction, insisted that I try your medicine. In one week's time there was quite an improvement in my condition, and after I had taken several bottles I felt as well as ever in my life. I desire the world to know that I firmly believe that your Eckman's Alterative will cure any case of lung trouble if taken before the last stage."

(Affidavit) A. C. BETTERSWORTH.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons, or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Jacobs' Drug Stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

QUAKER EXTRACT AND OIL OF BALM CURED MRS. C. C. LONG OF RHEUMATISM

Mrs. C. C. Long, of Palmetto, Ga., is another woman who proudly comes forward and tells the public that she was cured by the wonderful Quaker Extract and Oil of Balm that has been introduced in this city at Coursey & Munn's drug store. She said: "I have had rheumatism over five months. At first it was in my hands, but it gradually scattered to different parts of my body. Although the pains were severe and my joints would grind and crack, I was always able to do my housework until about five months ago. Then it seemed it grew worse and I can not explain the torments I suffered. Whenever there was a change in the weather my pains were more intense. I could not get up in the morning without assistance, but after moving around and getting my blood to circulate I would be somewhat relieved. I could not comb my own hair, as I could not raise either of my arms high enough, and I had to be very careful getting up and down the steps for fear of falling, as my knees were very weak. I began to read about the Quaker Extract. I knew a number of people who were cured, so I resolved to try, once more. I sent for a treatment of Quaker Extract and one bottle of Oil of Balm. At first these remedies did not seem to help me and I felt discouraged, yet I persevered and gradually I noticed a little change for the better, and I continued to improve until I can now do my work, can use my arms as well as ever, and my pains have vanished."

Was there ever a remedy introduced which has given such quick and remarkable results as Quaker Extract and Oil of Balm? If you suffer from rheumatism, catarrh, or stomach troubles, call at Coursey & Munn's drug store, 29 Marietta Street. Quaker Extract, 6 for $5.00; 3 for $2.50; $1.00 per bottle. Oil of Balm 25c, or 5 for $1.00. We prepay express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over. So do not delay your visit, but call to-day.

The Pity of It!

Yes, the pity of it---that children, little children, four, five, seven years of age, must be stunted and twisted by long hours of toil. Imagine a little baby girl---your little baby girl---standing all day at a table painfully sorting the petals of artificial roses. Imagine the dirt and squalor of the disease-ridden tenements. The sunlight never penetrates where these babies have to labor---human flowers withered in the making of artificial ones. And the average wage for each child is 2 cents an hour. Imagine it---in this country of ours that we call enlightened.

They Need Your Help

You, the thinking men and women of America, must come to the rescue of the forlorn little six-year-old who toils so long for so meagre a pittance. Hers is a tearful plea that should reach the heart of every parent among us.

Do Your Part

Good Housekeeping Magazine, with the vigor that has always characterized its work, is attacking the evils of child labor and its attendant home work. It is employing such fearless investigators as Judge Lindsey, George Creel, Mary Alden Hopkins, Mary Louisa Chamberlain. But it cannot carry on the campaign alone. You must do your share toward rooting out this cancerous evil. Buy the June issue now and see how the fight is being waged.

COTTON DROPS ON BEARISH REPORTS

Liverpool and New Orleans Turn Sellers and Low-Price Men Seize Opportunity.

NEW YORK, May 26.—Bearish weather news and weakness in cables, coupled with bearish private crop reports, caused the cotton market to open quiet to-day with first prices 2 to 7 points lower than saturday's final. Trade was of fair volume and included considerable pressure from the operators as well as liquidation by those who carried cotton over Sunday. The decline was helped along by an early wire from Memphis saying the crop outlook there was the best in several years.

After the call the ring seemed to have gone long and offerings became heavy. This selling was based on Cordill's report from Dallas, saying Texas conditions were excellent, also good condition in South and Central Mississippi. The market continued on the downward tendency throughout the morning session and during the late forenoon prices made a net decline of 5@11 points from the initial level.

What little buying was in evidence was attributed to a few brokers representing spot interests who purchased July, but sold new crop months. The general impression prevails tha the short interest has been greatly reduced and the market will likely sell much lower. Opinions and sentiment have changed from bullish to bearish for the majority of operators.

During the early selling movement New Orleans and Liverpool were credited with selling July.

Weather indications are for part cloudy except fair in the Southwestern quarter; probably scattered showers in the northern part of the belt and the Atlantics.

During the afternoon session several local operators who have been constantly supporting the market of late were noticeable buyers, which was thought to be for Wall Street houses. Commission houses also bought, resulting in the market developing a steady tone. Prices retrieved sharply from the early low point, except May, which held steady around 11.56. Other positions, however, advanced within 1 to 6 points from the opening.

The market is being evened up to a great extent, pending the census report on condition of the crop as of May 25, which will be made public Monday, June 2, following the adjournment of the triple holiday, beginning Friday. The market will be dull and narrow until after this report is out of the way. However, many conservatives believe that the market should be sold on all upturns while awaiting the publication of the report.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 7 to 14 points from the closing quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: May, 11.53; July, 11.61; August, 11.41; October, 11.08; January, 11.06.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 26.—News and weather developments over Sunday were rather against the market, which weakened in consequence to-day.

Liverpool came in very poor on futures, about 4 points lower than due on new crops, but shows larger sales, total 10,000, at 2 points lower quotations.

The market weakened materially in the last hour, closing 8 to 9 points lower.

Political news is unfavorable. Italy has been forced to resume military operations in Tripoli, increasing the financial burden of the country and injuring trade.

Our market worked lower to-day under the influence of good crop reports, but particularly on the dry and warmer weather over the belt, which is much needed. Trading in new crops settled around 11.20 for October. To-morrow's weekly weather report is expected to be mixed in character, owing to the recent cool spell. The report of The Journal of Commerce to-morrow on the western States is expected to be favorable and unless weather interferes, the disposition to look for a bureau 3 to 5 points higher than last year should manifest itself in a tendency to ease.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 26.—Montgomery apparently was the best buyer on the call, which was said to be for Weld. Later, however, he sold October and December.

* * *

The ring crowd was inclined to sell on the favorable weather map and bearish reports.

* * *

Wilson, Cone, Logan and Bryan bought July. New Orleans and Liverpool sold.

* * *

Waters, Wilson and Bashford were the principal supporters during the initial trading, but the selling was general and their support was withdrawn.

* * *

Habersham King says: "We consider the week's developments as favorable to fully 90 per cent of the belt and a standoff as to the remaining 10 per cent. Should rains continue, conditions will be very unfavorable."

* * *

S. H. Pearsall reports the following on the condition of the cotton crop:

"Mississippi—In last month's report correspondents estimated an increase in acreage of 3.5. Planting then was incomplete, but with the crop now practically all in, estimates of increase have about doubled. The percentage condition is approximately 10 points better than a year ago at this time, when it was 70.5 per cent. The weather has been unusually cool, causing seed to germinate slowly and making the crop ten days to two weeks late. Considerable replanting has been necessary and stands are spotted. Good rains have brightened prospects in a number of sections, and in the overflowed sections planting is not yet completed. Fields are clean, but the boll weevil has already made its appearance in several districts.

"Arkansas—Acreage estimates exceed those of a month ago, when they pointed to an increase of 4.3 per cent. The percentage condition points to a much higher average than a year ago at this time, when it was 72.3.

Georgia Commissioner of Agriculture, J. J. Connor, places the condition of cotton at 82 points in his May crop report. While there is a decrease of 4 per cent in cotton acreage compared with last year, there is a marked increase in the acreage planted in corn and small grains.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas clear and pleasant. Oklahoma generally clear and warm."

RATE CASE HOLDS TO NEXT SESSION

Supreme Court Plans Recess Without Action on Minnesoto Litigation.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 26.—Trading was active at the opening of the stock market to-day, but sentiment was diversified and the list presented an irregular appearance. Lehigh Valley was one of the strongest issues, rising ⅝. United States Steel common was under pressure. After opening up ¼ at 61⅛ it lost its advance and ⅛ additional. Union Pacific reflected strength it had shown in the London market. After opening unchanged it advanced ½. Southern Pacific was ⅜ higher at the beginning, but lost its gain. Reading commenced ⅜ lower, but recovered.

Amalgamated Copper soon lost its initial gain of ¼. Other losses included Mexican Petroleum ⅛, Great Northern preferred ⅛, Chino Copper ¼, Canadian Pacific ⅝ and American smelting ⅛. American Can advanced ½ and fractional gains were made by New York Central, Anaconda and Erie.

The curb was strong.

Americans in London were firm.

Some selling of leading issues was caused by the announcement that the United States Supreme Court would take a recess without handing down the rate decisions, thus prolonging suspense of business interests. Reading was freely supplied, losing 1 point, but later made a fractional recovery. There were fractional recessions in Southern Pacific, Steel, Union Pacific, Amalgamated Copper, Canadian Pacific, Lehigh Valley, Northern Pacific. Pennsylvania was steady, gaining fractionally.

The market closed dull. Government bonds unchanged; other bonds dull.

1913 Cotton Acreage Increase 3 Per Cent

The Memphis Commercial-Appeak in its annual cotton acreage and condition reports, gives the acreage for the 1913-14 cotton crop an increase of 3 per cent and condition as of May 21, 82.9 per cent.

The crop is earlier than last year in all States, except Tennessee and in the eastern section of the belt, where dry weather has changed an early start to a late one. In the entire belt the land is in an almost perfect state of cultivation, and the fields are universally clean.

Planting is generally healthy and vigorous, principal drawback is in every way of imperfect stands, which farmers are striving to remedy by replanting.

The general condition is lower materially by the low figures in Alabama, Georgia and the Carolinas, where dry weather has prevented germination of the seed and caused very poor stands. Rains inadequate in that section.

The reports by States follow:

States—	Increase in Acreage.	Condition May 21.
Texas	5.5	87
Oklahoma	7	93
Louisiana	20	90
Arkansas	4	90
Tennessee	6	90
Mississippi	1	88

DRY GOODS TRADE SHOWS RESPONSE TO FARM OUTLOOK

Marshall Field & Company in their weekly review of the dry goods trade says:

"The dry goods trade has responded during the week to the excellent agricultural conditions prevailing in all sections of the country. Current shipments have run ahead of the corresponding week a year ago. Merchants are meeting their obligations in a way that indicates a seasonable turning of stocks on a profitable basis.

"Future sales by our representatives on the road are the most encouraging feature of our business at the present time. Orders booked on both cotton and wool dress goods for fall total a large gain over those taken through the same period last year.

"Demand for rugs and carpets continue strong and it is very difficult to procure sufficient quantities of certain brands and sizes. It is quite probable that prices will not hold long on the present basis with the continuance of the heavy selling anticipated during the next few weeks."

WEATHER CONDITIONS.

Washington, May 26.—There will be showers to-night and Tuesday in the Ohio Valley and the Lake Region and to-night or Tuesday in the northern portion of the Middle Atlantic States.

In New England and the South the weather will be fair. There will be frost to-night in the interior of New England, followed by rising temperatures Tuesday, and it will also be warmer in the Ohio Valley and the greater portion of the Lake Region.

Forecast until 7 p. m. Tuesday:

Georgia: Fair to-night and Tuesday.

Virginia: Fair in east, local showers in west portion to-night or Tuesday.

North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama and Mississippi: Fair to-night and Tuesday.

Corn—No. 2	59½@ 60
Oats—No. 2	39½@ 40

CHICAGO, May 26.—Although wheat closed ¼c higher for May, unchanged for July and ⅛c better for September, the fact was fully demonstrated late in the session that the buying power was not as good as some people had believed it to be.

There was a string of unfavorable crop reports from Kansas and there were inklings of prospective deterioration in the spring wheat country. This had but momentary effect on values, however, as an inch of rain was reported both at Hudson and Stoddard, Kans. The wheat market at the moment is in a position where sharp price changes are certain to be seen and it is rather dangerous to make new and large commitments on either side of the situation and stand on it for a profit.

There were sharp advances in coarse grains and this fact helped wheat no little. Upturns were shown of 1⅛ in May corn, ⅝ in July and ¾ in September.

May oats were up 1⅛, July about ⅛ and September was unchanged. Provisions were higher all around.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

"ST. ELMO" AT THE ATLANTA.

At a matinee this afternoon the new offering by the Miss Billy Long Company will be presented at the Atlanta Theater. It is "St. Elmo" and should prove popular as it was the play selected by a vote of patrons of the theater. Miss Long will play the part of Edna Earl and she says it is her favorite role. She has played it many times before. Edwin Vail, the leading man, is cast for the part of St. Elmo. All the other members of the company have congenial roles. "St.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Have Leghorns Been Bred to Fine Point?

Are They Too Small for the Best Value?—Question Worth Considering.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Have we not bred our Leghorns down to too fine a point to be of the greatest value as egg producers? In other words, are they not too small for the best value?

When I was a boy of 15 I bred first the White and then the Brown Leghorns. At that time both of these varieties were of quite a different type from the standard Leghorn of the present day. They were a good deal larger in frame, longer in body, of a coarser make-up. Their combs were much heavier and had longer serrations or points. As well as I can remember, they laid a larger egg than they do to-day. In carriage, they were lower in front, with body carried more horizontal than the average specimen of to-day. Taken all around, they were of decidedly better egg type, in my way of looking at it.

That a great many strains or families of the Leghorns have been so long to secure the very finest and neatest of combs and the trimmest of tails, and light, fancy shanks supporting a neat little body, no observing poultryman can deny.

I believe also that the average breeder, if he has given the matter a second thought, can see that the present-day Leghorn has not the real stamina and vitality that he should have if he is expected to carry the banner for egg production at the head of the column and not be trampled under foot by his more vigorous rivals.

Consider Size.

Perhaps many of us do not stop to consider the question of size, unless our attention is called to it by someone who has been making comparisons. We have lately seen a number of fowls of this class from the Old Country—a lot from Denmark and some from England. They were all larger than our American birds. This fact alone set us to thinking and wondering if we were not allowing our strains to be too finely bred in the mad rush for prize-winning stock. It may be all right for the fellow who makes his living selling stock and eggs for exhibition purposes. But should we not as producers of commercial eggs look after the utility part of the work? We learned from those who were breeding the Danish stock, and had been experimenting with them for years, that they found them really better layers of larger eggs and they were of a decidedly more robust constitution. For this they were less liable to break down after a season of heavy laying, as many of the finely bred American Leghorns do. Those who have been working with these Danish fowls have been using them both in their purity and crossing them with home-bred stock. They say they have found them very satisfactory when used in both ways. As one of these breeders expresses himself, one can make Bantams out of Brahmas with a few seasons of selecting, starving and breeding at the proper season, etc.

Commercial Business.

But we are not after that kind of stock for the commercial egg business. You who have been following the reports of the present national egg-laying contest are aware how the pen of English Leghorns are holding the lead against all comers, and bid fair to continue that way to the end of the year. This fact alone should be enough to make our Leghorn breeders sit up and take notice.

It looks to us very much like, if this fine type of Leghorn is continued, we will have to have two classes—one called the exhibition type, good only for that purpose, and another for utility, bred to serve its best possible purpose for that. But such a course would not be wise. The fancy should not only cater to the show-room foibles, but look after the real or substantial side of it as well. If this were done, the trade in fine stock would certainly be increased, if all understood it that way. Let there be a meeting upon common ground. For a time, at least, the standard should be so adjusted or modified that a rather large comb, legs stout in bone, body of good length, broad and deep, would be the correct type. In fact, describe a fowl with a little more stamina in its make-up. We would, however, keep it entirely distinct from the Minorca in every line of its make-up. This can easily be done and still get fair size.

Definite Size Standard.

Another thing that should be looked after in considering this matter of size, is that of fixing upon something definite.

Who can tell you what the size of a Leghorn should be? When the novice asks the question as to size or weight, what are we to tell him? Tell him that it is about midway between a Cochin Bantam and a Brahma? If he is sufficiently versed in weights to know what these weigh, he may be able to figure it out, but what nonsenses—why not fix standard weights for the Leghorn and be done with it? This has been my plan for years, but someone says when you put weight to them you put them in the Minorca class. Not a bit of it! The Minorca weights are 6 1-2, 7 1-2, 7 1-2 and 9, for pullet, hen, cockerel and cock, respectively. For the Leghorn class we would suggest weights as follows: Pullet, 4; hen, 5; cockerel, 6, and cock, 7 pounds. You will notice that there is quite a difference between these and the Minorca weights, yet it will give them a standing. We will know where to find them and what to tell people who want to know what their size is. It will place them in a better position in the show room when it comes to deciding special and sweepstake prizes. They will not be handicapped as they now are in these cases.

Let us do a little planning to get the best there is for the utility man, and at the same time not hurt the thoroughbred stock trade. The more in harmony we get these two branches of the trade working, the better for both of them.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Committee to Seek Peachtree Widening

Committee Wants Immediate Relief of Congestion—$5,000 Asked. Realty Notes of Interest.

A meeting of the utmost importance to property owners along downtown Peachtree and to the entire city will be held Monday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock by the finance committee of the City Council to hear from a representative committee on the pressing need of widening Peachtree from Carnegie Way and Forsyth Street to Harris Street, to relieve traffic congestion that has become almost menacing. Well-known citizens will ask that $5,000 be appropriated immediately for this purpose.

The plan, briefly stated, is to cut five feet from each sidewalk so as to add ten feet for vehicular traffic, and later on to set buildings back so as to create ten-foot sidewalks. The acquisition of ten feet more for vehicles, it is stated, will be sufficient to relieve a condition in traffic that has long been a cause for drastic action.

Among the citizens who have been asked to appear as a committee before the finance committee are Asa G. Candler, Forrest Adair, W. H. Kiser, Robert F. Maddox, John W. Grant, J. H. Ewing, E. W. Alfriend, Carl Witt, Henry H. Schaul, Dr. H. F. Scott, Dr. W. B. Hamby, John E. Murphy, H. L. Cobbs, Will Lowenstein, Hugh Richardson, Virgil and Roy Collier, Willis E. Ragan, Henry S. Jackson, J. H. Gilbert, Dr. J. R. Hopkins and others.

Some time ago citizens, backed up by city and county, guaranteed $50,000 for buying a ten-foot strip at the "bottle neck" (junction of Peachtree and Forsyth Streets and Carnegie Way) for setting buildings back. The Winecoff Hotel was built back in accordance with this plan. This part of the project will not be taken up just now, because the matter of widening to relieve traffic congestion immediately is considered of more pressing importance.

Property owners around Baker and Peachtree Streets also have a plan for cutting off the corners at that point so as to give more room for traffic. This plan will also be taken up later. The proposition is to shave off the front of Dr. J. R. Hopkins' lot at the southeast corner of Baker and Peachtree and take some of the Goldsmith front, controlled by E. W. Alfriend, at the northeast corner. This improvement would serve to reduce the curve of Peachtree and to make it possible for vehicles to pass without danger between cars and corners.

Sidewalks between Harris and Baker on Peachtree have already been widened and it is to further this scheme that the citizens' committee will petition the finance committee. It is estimated that the preliminary work can be done for $5,000, and that it can be accomplished in a short time and without closing the street.

The finance committee considered Monday morning the Whitehall regrade matter, when a number of prominent citizens were heard. Among the speakers was Sam Inman, V. H. Kriegshaber, Walker Dunson and others. No opposition developed, and the advocates of the project anticipate that the plan will be finally approved.

Building Permits.

$5,200—C. Shelverton, 68 Thirteenth Street, two-story frame apartment house. Day work.

$2,750—Keystone Investment Company, 47 Vedado Way, one-story frame dwelling. Day work.

E. V. Moore's Change.

E. V. Moore, formerly general agent of the National Life and Accident Insurance Company and the Interstate Casualty Company, has formed a connection with Porter & Swift, the well-known real estate agents. During his short service as salesman he has made several interesting sales.

To Open Up West Tenth Street.

The proposition to extend the West Peachtree car line from Sixth Street to Tenth, west on Tenth to State and out State to the steel works, is considered in real estate circles to have considerable significance. The entire section west of West Peachtree and north of Sixth is undergoing a rapid development as a residence neighborhood, and it is pointed out that car-line facilities are badly needed. Announcement has been made recently of extensive subdivision work in the neighborhood affected, and more improvements, it is said, will come with the car service.

Interest in Art Gallery.

Several real estate men got busy Monday morning planning a location for Atlanta's proposed $250,000 art gallery, anticipating that possibly it might be deemed desirable to put the institution on private property. The first plan suggested was to put the building on the site of the old Government structure at Piedmont Park, and Haralson Bleckley, well-known architect and author of the Bleckley Plaza plan, drew blueprints for the same. The gallery will cover an extensive territory, and the ground provided for it will be valuable.

For Public Market Site.

Revival of the discussion of a public market, where citizens of Atlanta can buy on a co-operative basis, has attracted the attention of Atlanta real estate men through the possibilities it offers in the way of a site for a location. In nearly every case where a big enterprise is seeking to locate, the realty men find a desirable place. The proposal is to have a bond issue of $500,000 to buy a 200 by 300 foot site and to erect a $250,000 building. Several land brokers declared, however, that they thought this too high a price to pay for a site, and that they could furnish sites for half that amount. A thousand dollars a front foot, said a prominent lease man, will buy a mighty good location for a public market, and it will be close to the center of activities.

SUBURBAN HOMES.
IN INMAN PARK, Edgewood, Kirkwood and Decatur, we have a number of pretty cottages, and a few very attractive larger homes. Most of these places carry all of the conveniences. Kirkwood and Decatur as yet have not the gas, but electric lights and plumbing. This is the time when the country is most attractive, the car service fine, and to remain during the winter is no hardship. Large lots, good schools and churches, and reasonable rents. Let us tell you about these.

CLAIRMONT AVENUE, DECATUR, GA.
ON THE CORNER of Ponce DeLeon, in this pretty little town, within twenty-five minutes' ride of the city, we have this splendid modern eleven-room house, on large corner lot. Would be a choice location for a large private family or for summer boarders. We are offering at low rental to first-class parties.

BUSINESS HOUSES.
IF YOU ARE looking for a business location, either central or in some of the thickly populated suburbs, you should come in and consult our list. We will tell you about these, and we are then ready with comfortable conveyances to show you our properties.

A Merchant Marine Becomes a Vital Necessity

Congress is Alone to Blame for the Neglect to Build Up a Great, Powerful, Progressive and Prosperous American Merchant Marine in Foreign Trade.

The lack of American merchant ships for the ordinary needs of our Government has been strikingly impressed upon the attention of the new Administration.

Recent developments made it necessary for the Government to secure possession of a considerable number of American merchantmen. They were needed as a precautionary measure, to insure preparedness against any sudden eventuality in which foreign ships could not be used.

THE PITIFULLY SMALL SUPPLY OF SUCH AMERICAN VESSELS BOTH ASTOUNDED AND ALARMED THE GOVERNMENT. Most of the few American vessels that are available are old, in many respects inadequate, and scarcely any of these measure up to urgent needs.

Not only are American merchantmen few and inefficient, but it is found that, even if American ships were now available in large numbers, THERE IS NO CORRESPONDING NUMBER OF TRAINED AND EXPERIENCED AMERICAN MASTERS, OFFICERS AND SEAMEN IMMEDIATELY OBTAINABLE.

The possibly grave consequence of our utter dependence upon foreign merchant ships, their officers and men, who would be unavailable for national needs in time of war, is causing the greatest uneasiness and concern.

American merchant ships, their officers and men, are required in times of emergency for scout purposes, for auxiliary cruisers, to carry troops, coal and ammunition supplies, and for a thousand and one needs for which warships would be neither desirable nor available.

These are serious problems for a new Administration so suddenly to face, and their satisfactory solution is difficult, if not impossible, at the moment.

CONGRESS IS ALONE TO BLAME FOR THE NEGLECT TO BUILD UP A GREAT, POWERFUL, PROGRESSIVE AND PROSPEROUS AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

THE PUNY PROVISION IN THE PENDING TARIFF BILL to merely make a beginning in the upbuilding of American shipping should be and is likely to be so strengthened and buttressed in the Senate as to lay a broad and solid foundation for the establishment of an effective and enduring American maritime policy.

The little so far provided has provoked the impudent protests of foreign nations that are determined to prevent, if they can, the maritime independence of the United States. The present conditions are far too useful and too profitable for these foreign monopolists to willingly relinquish.

EVERY NATIONAL INSTINCT OF PRESERVATION AND PROSPERITY SHOULD IMPEL CONGRESS TO IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Should steps be taken at once to remedy our intolerable dependence upon foreign merchant shipping, it will take years for the United States to reach a state of efficient preparedness in American merchant ships, officers and men, for either the ordinary or the emergency requirements of our Government and the peaceful transportation of our imports and exports. It is high time to make a beginning.

We have discovered shortcomings in several important particulars in naval equipment. BUT NOTHING HAS SO PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSED THE GOVERNMENT AT THIS TIME AS THE PRESSING NEED OF A GREAT AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, WISELY REGARDED AND OFFICIALLY STATED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON AS "ESSENTIAL TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE."

It would indeed be thoughtless and cowardly if, in this crisis in American affairs, the sinister protests of foreign governments against immediate and adequate legislative provision for the upbuilding of American deep sea shipping should receive the slightest consideration.

Are Women as Foolish as Men?

"We were introduced at a restaurant and four days later we were married and the next day he deserted me and ran away with $4,000 worth of my jewelry and money." This is the unvarnished narrative told by a woman who had a man arrested out west the other day.

This same woman would watch the iceman like a hawk, for fear he would give her only eight cents worth of ice instead of the ten cents worth she paid for. She would inspect her grocery and butcher bill, and the laundress does not wash who could get a penny ahead of her at the Monday suds festival. She submits her agent's reports as to rents or investments to the family lawyer, and she even keeps a shrewd and questioning eye on the lawyer himself.

But she meets a man in a restaurant, hearkens to his story that he is the temporarily embarrassed heir to a million or two, and hands herself and her fortune over to him without as much care as she bestows on the inspection of the chicken she buys for the family dinner.

Ordinarily the victim of the sort of sharper who despoiled the woman quoted above is not an ignorant, unsophisticated girl; on the contrary, she is commonly a mature woman, and not infrequently one who has had one or two whirls at the matrimonial lottery.

When we shake our heads at the credulity of such women we should not ascribe their misfortune to the feminine type of mind.

Remember, when you feel how superior men are to that sort of deception, that the gold-brick swindle and the green goods game, the Spanish prisoner trap and wire-tapping delusion continue year after year to earn fortunes for the rogues who have the hardihood to perpetrate them.

There are lots of foolish women in the world—almost as many as foolish men.

A Little Flattery Will Make a Man Do Anything

What Do You Like to Read About?

By WINIFRED BLACK.

"WHAT do you like to read about?" said the Man to me.

I stared. "I mean," said the Man, "what sort of folks—people in castles, with retainers and 'heirs' birthdays,' or people on yachts, with butlers and valets, or people out West, with Sheriffs and bad men dropping in to supper, and the wind blowing in from the desert and the coyotes yelping on the great red mountains in the dusky distance?"

"Oh," said I, "I don't like any of those people. I like folks—just plain folks. No, not 'folksy folks' with dialects—the women, with shawls on their heads that run in and gossip all about 'What made Maria stay an old maid so long?' and 'Who's goin' to git Mirandy, now Si's gone?' bore me to tears; and I can't bear the fair young schoolma'am who goes out West and makes the biggest boy fall in love with her, and then they go back home to visit, and he shocks the whole village by saying 'Darn it!' and wearing a red cowboy handkerchief instead of a collar.

Maids Don't Worry Me.

"I like to read about the sort of people I know myself, every day in the week—the woman with the fussy husband; the woman with the boy she hopes will be a genius, and he turns out to be just a lazy dreamer; the woman with the little girl who won't take music lessons, no matter how she tries to make her; the man with the business down-town, and the rival over the way trying to take it away from him; the girl on the stage who plays real parts and gets real criticisms; the newspaper man who doesn't beat the town the very first time he goes out on a story; the people who have comfy homes and a decent picture or two, and a lot of good books and some dogs, and either children or the hope of children.

"No, I don't care for butlers in mine, though if the butler belongs in the story I don't mind him at all; I only hate to have him dragged in by the heels to prove that the man who employs him really is no end of a swell.

"Valets? Yes, a valet is all right, if he isn't insisted on. Lots of fairly every-day men have valets—actors and musicians and other helpless creatures.

"Maids don't worry me—nor chauffeurs—as long as they stay discreetly in the background, but I must say secretaries and nursery governesses and under-gardeners and special trains and too many yachts do disconcert me a little. I always have to stop and add up what it would cost to have an establishment like that, and that interferes with the plot.

"No, I hate the Dickey and the Algy story, with the 'little geil in white' and her managing mama. I never can quite believe there are such helpless geese in the world as that little gell, and if I knew anyone like the 'managing mama' I'd have her locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

"Yes, it's folks I like—everyday folks—plain Americans, with plain American troubles and plain American joys, like buying a machine after you've saved for it for a year; and Daughter's graduating essay; and Son's first love affair.

The Chocolate-Cream Age.

"That's why I always choose a woman's stories, all other things being equal, I guess."

"The man looked at me more in sorrow than in anger. "Are all women like you?" he said. "I don't believe it. I believe they like to read about ropes of pearls and strings of emeralds and cables of real coral—and gowns of filmy lace—or a——"

"That's the chocolate-cream age," I said. "They do, of course. That's because they are always hoping they'll be one of those heroines themselves some day, and they want to have the fun of planning their filmy gowns and thinking how sweet they'll look in the ropes and chains and things. When the woman is past wanting to read about people like herself, it heals her to realize that she isn't the only human being who has trouble keeping the expense accounts within scolding limits. What do you like to read about, Mr. Man?"

The man took a long pull on his pipe. "I like to read about damsels fair, and shady bowers, and nodding violets, and dashing cavaliers," he said, "and noble heroes, and soldiers of fortune—and quests, and all that. If anyone dares to hand me a book about 'How I Made My Money' or 'What I Did to Down the Lemon Trust' I'll make him wish he'd committed suicide that time he almost wanted to."

And then we both began to reconsider and talk it over, and we both decided that we really don't care so much about who the hero of the story was. The main thing is, who wrote it?

There's Bret Harte. He could take a bank clerk and cast such a sparkling veil of romance about him that his every pen flourish would mean sentiment. And as for the common little red-haired person he fell in love with—why, she'd be a wood nymph, a fairy, a siren from the cool green sea, even if she lived in a hall bedroom and ate 'weenies' and chocolate for supper.

Cable! Do you ever hunt up Cable's houses down in New Orleans? Dirty old tumble-down places, seen with everyday eyes. Look through the magic glasses of Cable, and you're in Elysia, the land of fair women and brave men. There's even something romantic about a piece of candied lemon peel when the right sort of man tells about it.

It Isn't the Subject.

No, it isn't the subject; it's the way it is handled, after all, we agreed, the man and I. There's so and so, the special writer on the Daily Enterprise. He'd write about a fire in a boiler factory, and make you hold your breath to find out whether the Maltese cat got out alive or not. And there's his brother on the Daily Scream, would tell the story of a plot to assassinate every beautiful woman in America, and keep you yawning all the way through. It isn't the story; it isn't the people in the story—it's the writer that matters.

"But still," said I to the Man, "all things being equal, I want folks in my stories—folks that I know."

"Gossip," said the man. And we both went and got our own particular kind of book and settled down to our own particular kind of evening, and were perfectly satisfied. What fun it is to talk these things over once in a while! Isn't it?

Awake at Last to Navy's Needs

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

COL. GRAVES.

THERE are substantial evidences of a reviving patriotism and common sense in the American Congress toward the American navy.

When Secretary Daniels was banqueted week before last in Savannah one of the speakers was Congressman Edwards, of the Savannah district. Mr. Edwards has been heretofore apathetic, if not openly antagonistic, to the ample navy program. On this latest occasion he said that, however indifferent and economic his views had been toward the navy, the recent international interchanges with Japan had opened his eyes and fixed him definitely and firmly as an advocate and champion of a greater navy.

Others Changed.

"Henceforth," said Mr. Edwards, "if the naval experts of the Government advise Congress that we need three battleships, or four battleships, or even five, I am for the navy and whatever it needs to defend our country. The anxieties aroused by our unpreparedness against Japan must never be repeated in America."

Savannah is one of the ultra-conservative cities of the South, and Congressman Edwards is notably conservative, cautious and economical. His complete conversion is in the highest degree significant of the awakening of Congress.

It is even so with Congressman Poor, of the Raleigh District of North Carolina, Secretary Daniels' district.

Mr. Poor has also been among the conservatives on the naval program of the House. The Japanese contention and the developments of our naval unpreparedness, as exposed by the Hearst newspapers, have aroused the North Carolinan to the perils of an undefended country and the necessity for a navy ample for our Western and Eastern Coasts. He is openly and heartily for the ample navy.

On the lips of scores of anti-navy Congressmen there are expressions similar to these. It is actually true that the naval information and comparisons developed by the recent international controversy have changed the spirit of the national Congress on this vital question of the national defense.

The American Congress and the American people have slept for years upon the idea that our "splendid isolation" protected our country, and that in case of war our navy and army were equal to every demand of defense and offense. Congress and some of the people have had the same feeling toward foreign nations that the South had toward the North preceding the Civil War. "One Southerner can whip a dozen Yankees," said some.

One Southern statesman declared in a public speech, "Why, we can whip the Yankees with popguns!" Challenged upon this assertion after the war was over, the orator responded: "Well, so we could, but the d—d fellows wouldn't fight that way!"

Awake at Last.

Our country has waked up at last to the fact that it is not immune from war, that it is not invincible in war, that it is not prepared for war.

The awakening will do us good. It is worth this flurry with Japan to have educated the American people and their representatives to an understanding of our real condition and of our national dangers.

I feel that the Hearst newspapers have performed a signal and patriotic service in helping to this national understanding. These newspapers can be indifferent to any criticism of sensationalism in the consciousness that more than any other American newspapers they have taught the people something about their navy.

Public opinion is coming to stand for the idea that preparedness in war is the best promoter of peace. The long centuries of exemption from attack that England's great navy has bought for England is teaching our people that they have a right to expect from their representatives just such an insurance policy against war.

Gatling Philosophy.

The treason of Congress against the Navy is not likely to be repeated in this generation.

The policy of national preparedness also pervades our national officials—always excepting Mr. Bryan, whose "doves" and "swans" and "flowers of rhetoric" delight the Chautauquas.

Secretary Daniels said to Mr. Gatling, of the Gatling gun: "Are you not conscience smitten over your invention? Do not your guns keep you from sleeping because of the people they have destroyed and may destroy?"

To which Mr. Gatling answered:

"My guns have saved more lives than they have ever destroyed. The existence of them and the knowledge of their destructiveness keep nations from war and mobs from bloody riots. The Gatling gun is a peace-maker."

And Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, is tremendously impressed just now with the Gatling philosophy.

Perhaps we shall have national peace in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart. Its shells are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.

How Opening of the Panama Canal Will Aid Historical Research

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AFTER the Panama Canal is opened we may begin to learn the true history of Ancient America.

Many readers may be unaware that this new world, as we call it, contains one of the oldest of all historical mysteries, and, in fact the very oldest if as some maintain, it forms a direct connection with the story of the lost continent of Atlantis.

Buried in the tropical jungles of Central America there are the ruins of once splendid cities, whose remains of a gigantic architecture are covered with hieroglyphics more puzzling than those of ancient Egypt, for no man has yet succeeded in discovering a complete key to their meaning. They guard their secret more jealously than the Sphinx.

Ruins of Temples.

Their origin is ascribed to a practically vanished race called the Mayas, related to the Aztec of Montezuma's Empire, but far excelling the ancient Mexicans in everything except warlike power. The ruins of their temples at Palenque, Copan, Peten and elsewhere, excite the wonder of the traveler, and contain some of the most beautiful and elaborate carving that can anywhere be found.

They had not only an exquisite picture language, but also a written language, of which undecipherable manuscripts yet exist.

They built about forty towns, connected by stone-paved roads. They had a postal system, conducted by means of swift-footed carriers who ran from town to town over the paved roadways. Sometimes they were at war with one another, and then armies marched to battle on the same roads.

They were skillful agriculturists, and cultivated broad fields, which are now overgrown with mossy trees and tangled vines and shrubs. They raised cotton and wove it into garments.

They made beautiful ornaments of gold and semi-precious stones, and were more skillful even than the Aztecs in feather work.

The designs carved on their buildings and ornamental, or symbolic, structures are of great beauty and astonishing perfection in detail. They covered the walls of rooms with brilliant paintings on stucco.

They Have Vanished.

Strange to say, the people believed to be descended from these Mayas are unable to throw any light upon the history of their supposed ancestors.

All their civilization has vanished, and with it, apparently, all memory of the ancient splendors of the race.

Some of the figures carved by the Mayas bear such striking resemblance to similar things found in the ancient ruins of the Old

GARRETT P. SERVISS.

World that the suggestion has been made that a connection formerly existed across the Atlantic Ocean, and this is the origin of the theory that the ancestors of the Mayas dwelt on the fabled continent of Atlantis, which Plato heard had been sunk in the western ocean ages before his time.

One of the strangest facts about the ancient land of the Mayas has recently been called to attention by Dr. Ellsworth Hunington. It is this: At present the whole district possesses a climate so warm, moist and debilitating that it is almost the worst place on the globe for human habitation.

The ruins of the ancient cities, instead of lying amid deserts, and under a burning sun, as happens with most of the abandoned capitals of the East, are so overgrown with tangled vegetation and enveloped in feverstricken swamps that some of them are nearly unapproachable.

The conclusion is that within the past two thousand years, a vast change of climate has occurred in that part of America, and that in the days of Mayan civilization the earth's climatic zones were shifted in such a manner that the land occupied by this remarkable people enjoyed very different atmospheric conditions from those that prevail there now.

Peten, one of their most important cities, which has not yet been well explored on account of the difficulties of approach, lies in the midst of a region which is, at present, very sparsely peopled, and where it would be impossible to cultivate the land as it was cultivated in the days of the Mayas.

May Be Read in Full.

Only by such a supposition, it is thought, can a rational explanation be found for the fact that the highest native civilization that this continent had developed before the white man came, was centered about a location which is now a deadened and almost uninhabitable wilderness.

When the Panama Canal has become a great highway, and the attention of the world has been turned upon its surroundings, fresh light is likely to be thrown upon this fascinating mystery.

Then the Mayan hieroglyphics may be read in full, and a hidden chapter of American history thrown open.

MR. BRYAN'S TOAST

Editor The Georgian:

You devote much of your space to Mr. Bryan. Will you please reproduce a portion of his toast at the Army and Navy Club, given at the farewell banquet to the Commissioners from Great Britain and Canada? Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: I have delivered three addresses of welcome to our visitors, but will have but one word of farewell, and that is in keeping with the environment which surrounds us this morning. We are met in the building of the Army and Navy Club, and the fact that we are the guests of those who represent those two arms of the Government suggests the thought which I present in bidding you adieu. While we are the advocates of peace, we are really engaged in the construction of a battleship which is to be the very culmination—the climax—of the seaman's art. Man has been engaged in the construction of water craft since the flapping sail first whispered its secret of strength to the voyager. He has designed vessels for pleasure, for commerce and for war. We have had the galley, the viking's ship, the frigate, the ironclad and the dreadnought. But no limit can be placed to the ambitions of man as a builder, and I ask you to join me in proposing a toast to a ship more potent than any which man has thus far employed in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart. Its shells are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.

M'CARTY'S DEATH PURE ACCIDENT, FINDING OF JURY

By Ed W. Smith.

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight, Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 27.—Luther McCarty's death in the glove contest here Saturday afternoon with Arthur Pelky was entirely an accident. This was the verdict of the Coroner's jury, determined after two sittings, the decision being reached at 10 o'clock after a deliberation of half an hour. Pelky was exonerated completely from all blame in the case.

Almost immediately after, however, the Northwest mounted police put Pelky under arrest, charging him with manslaughter. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000, Fred C. Lowes, a wealthy real estate man, and Tommy Burns furnishing the surety. The threatened cases against Referee Smith, manager Billy McCarney and Promoter Tommy Burns did not develop, but Smith and McCarney, in lieu of being given their liberty, promised to remain in the city for a couple of days at least and give further testimony. No bonds were asked in their cases.

Following is the full verdict as announced:

"We, the Coroner's jury, find that Luther McCarty came by his death accidentally, the immediate cause being a subluxation of the cervical vertebrae at the Burns arena May 24, but there is no evidence to show how this injury occurred, we, the jury, therefore exonerate Arthur Pelky from all blame whatsoever."

This was signed by P. J. McManus as foreman. The other jurors were H. C. Hersey, R. Jackson, E. W. Schofield, C. P. McCallum, M. Dawson and E. A. Jones.

Trying for Criminal Case.

It was evident from the start that the crown, stung by the severe criticisms of local ministers, intended to make a desperate fight to get a verdict upon which to base a criminal case against Pelky and perhaps the others directly concerned in the unfortunate contest. The prosecuting attorney asked at once that all witnesses be excluded from the room before going on the stand, and carried his point.

Among the witnesses examined in great detail were McCarney, Burns, Smith, two of the local newspaper men and Dr. Moshier, who performed the autopsy. Pelky was not called at all, but remained during the entire case like a caged lion in a nearby room. He has been deeply affected all the way through, and during this hearing appeared almost heartbroken.

Dr. Moshier gave the most damaging testimony against the boxers. He declared that McCarty's neck had been dislocated under the base of the brain and that this injury caused the hemorrhage of the brain that brought about the death. He all but declared that the injury could have come about in no other way but from a blow or from the fall, the latter not being possible, because the boxer's neck did not strike any object as he fell.

Other Fights the Cause.

A highly dramatic incident came right at the close of the hearing when Pelky's attorney called upon Dr. C. J. Stewart, one of the oldest physicians in Alberta, to partially refute the testimony of Dr. Moshier. The physician was asked if he thought McCarty's injury could not have been caused by some other than a blow received. He said it was highly possible and then, rising to his feet, he shook his finger at the prosecutor, who was then questioning him, and during intense silence, shouted:

"It is my opinion that the injury to Luther McCarty was received from Flynn or somebody else in a previous encounter. In this contest, never."

He was excused in a hurry by the prosecutor.

Referee Smith testified that in all there were only about six blows landed during the contest, and that none of them was at all hard or effective and could hardly have caused even an abrasion of the skin. He said the boxing was about even up to the time of McCarty's collapse, and that Luther had turned, smiled and winked at his own corner after the final clinch, collapsing about eight or ten seconds later.

The State attempted to tangle up all the witnesses in an effort to prove that the contest was for the world's white championship; that all championship conditions had been carried out, and that it was in every way a prize fight.

Georgia Ends Successful Season

Prospects for 1914 Appear Good

ATHENS, GA., May 27.—Despite the fact that Georgia lost the series she would have rather won than any other—the one against Tech—the Red and Black has had a remarkably successful season, both financially and in games won and lost.

During the season the team scored a total of 174 runs against 68 for its opponents. Twenty-seven games were played against the best teams in Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and but eight games were lost. Two to Michigan, one to Ohio Wesleyan, one to Clemson, one to Auburn and three to Tech. Nineteen victories were celebrated and most of them were by one-sided scores, while seven were shutouts for Georgia. Five of the games that Georgia lost were by one run.

Outlook for 1914 Good.

Since the season has closed and the tension assumed the normal post-schedule laxity Coach Cunningham has busied himself taking an introspective stock of his material for 1914 and of his present splendid array of talent he expects to have all but three present at the beginning of next season, with a possibility of only two being absent.

Big John Morris, who has earned himself a place on the All-Southern team his first year in college ball, graduates in law in June, and will immediately "hang out his shingle" over in Hart County, from where he hails.

Covington, who has played third base for two years and who served four years at center on the football team, is a victim of the four-year rule and after June will also join the ranks of the colonels in the legal profession.

May Lose Hutchens.

Hutchens, the Red and Black's great receiver of this season, is likewise a member of the law department and will receive his "dip" this year. There is but a slight chance for him to return, not unless he leads the team.

Bowden has a contract from the Boston Nationals whenever he sees fit to annex his signature to it and he is liable to become a member of Stalling's Braves at any time after college closes this summer. He has one more year in Southern athletics, and on account of his ability in both baseball and football a strenuous effort will be made to persuade him to return. With his wing in the shape it is now he would find it rough sailing in any league and would certainly have hard going to make good.

Many to Return.

These are about all the sure losses and doubtfuls, which leave a good working nucleus for the team next year. Henderson is slated to return for a place on the football eleven and will draw the first base assignment again. Harrison is taking pharmacy and will have another year, while Clements at shortstop is a four-year man and should make a strong bid for All-Southern next year. Ginn, McWhorter and Erwin all are sure to return and so will Corley and Hitchcock. The latter pitched but few games this year, but with a little more training will be a mainstay next year. Corley has already made an enviable record, although playing his first year in college ball.

Cobb Praised Brown.

This completes the list of regulars, to which may be added Brown, the freshman, who played in several games and who wields the willow in such good style that Ty Cobb pronounced him the most finished batter on the Red and Black squad. He is an outfielder and will be heard from next year. Another sub who filled in to a good advantage while Covington was ruled off the team is Holden, captain of the scrubs. He has another year in college and will be a valuable asset at a future date.

KELLY IN DRAW SCRAP.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Eddie Kelley and "Fighting" Fitzpatrick, local prides, fought ten fast rounds to a draw here last night.

FLYNN'S FIGHT WITH COFFEY WAS A WONDER

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, America's greatest sporting fiction writer, covered the Jim Flynn-Jim Coffey heavyweight bout in New York last Friday night for the New York American. His story is of especial interest to local boxing fans, as Flynn does battle with Jim Savage at the Auditorium-Armory here on June 13. Here is Van Loan's story:

Andrew Chariglione, whose business name is Jim Flynn, stunted the Dublin Giant somewhat in a ten-round argument before the Garden Athletic Club. Jim Coffey had age, weight, reach and 70 per cent of the house with him before he started, but the battle-scarred warrior of Pueblo ripped and tore and slashed his way to victory, whaling away at his taller opponent until he reduced him to six feet of staggering, knock-kneed humanity.

Not since the memorable fight between Ketchel and O'Brien has so much real fighting been crammed into ten rounds, and it was Flynn's experience, aggressiveness and cast iron jaw that won for him.

For some reason, best known to himself, Flynn elected to stand still for the better part of the first round and allow Coffey to pop him on the jaw with rights and lefts and the Dublin import made the most of his opportunities. He slammed the veteran 732 times by actual count and brought the gore i streams from one of Flynn's eyes.

Flynn Dives Into Coffey.

The Pueblo product finally grew angry under this constant bombardment and at the end of the round he was driving into Coffey head first, endeavoring to remove his head from his shoulders with wild rights and lefts.

Coffey continued to score in the second and third rounds and Flynn's countenance gradually assumed the appearance of an overripe tomato.

In the fourth round, however, the Pueblo hodcarrier took matters into his own hands and began to lead with his haymaker swings and when the bell rang Coffey was reeling from a succession of swings to the body and jaw.

Flynn Had Coffey Reeling.

In the fifth and the sixth matters were fairly even, but from the seventh until the end the tough old veteran forged into the lead, and though Coffey kept up his left jabs and right crosses there was no power behind them. Flynn herded his taller opponent from one side of the ring to the other endeavoring to land the finishing punch.

Jim Flynn may be on the toboggan, but he is still good enough to put an enduring crimp in the aspirations of many members of the younger set.

NEW CLUB WILL ENTER FEDERAL NEXT SEASON

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 27.—A franchise to play in the new Federal League was granted Toledo by Organizer A. Bobrick. The Ohio Club will not join the third leaguers the current season, however, but Toledo will rake together a strong team for the 1914 crusade.

Bobrick believes that many other cities will be represented in the Federal next year. Buffalo and Detroit are two cities practically sure of entering the third league zone. The Toledo officers will be elected in the near future, and plans will be made for the organizing of the Toledo Club.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game.

$250 in Prizes for Best Solution of "The Triple Tie"

YOU read the first seven installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this eighth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain.

Now go on with the story.

"Wait till I tell you, Mr. Callaway," interrupted the manager. "Excuse us a minute, Gordon," he added, "I want to say something to Mr. Callaway," and he drew the president to an inner office, where he told him the little he had been able to learn about Kelly. When he had concluded, Callaway said:

"And you signed him up on the strength of that drive that broke the bull's ribs?"

"Yes, sir; that was enough for me."

"Well, Billy, you know I consider you are best manager in the world. And I reckon you know what you're doing. I will put through this contract, but remember, Billy, you must shoulder all the responsibility. If this Gordon Kelly 'blows up' the laugh will be on you, not me."

"I'll take my chances on that," said the manager, confidently.

"Anyway, it will make good reading in the newspapers. Send for the reporters, Billy, and we'll tell 'em all about your world beater."

The reporters came, they saw, but they were not conquered. They took copious notes of all the manager told them, but they refused to "fall" for Kelly as a ballplayer. They admired his shape and looks but demanded that they be "shown" before committing themselves to extravagant praise of the new man.

"All right, boys; I'll show you," declared Bill Smith, "and, mark my words"—every reporter made a mark in his notebook—"mark my words this fellow will turn out to be a wonder."

"Hope so, Billy," replied the reporters, as they filed out of the room.

They all handled the news in a facetious manner. In one of the newspapers there was this headline:

"Joshed" in the Papers.

ADONIS JOINS
THE CRACKERS

Bill Smith Signs a Player Who Has Never Seen a Game of Ball.

Another newspaper had this headline:

LEARNED BASEBALL IN CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL

Atlanta Club Secured a "World Beater" Who Never Played a Game of Baseball.

And the third newspaper had this to say in its headlines:

COTILLION LEADER
TO PLAY BASEBALL

Bill Smith Lands a Handsome Young Man That Knows Everything Except the National Game.

Within twenty-four hours Bill Smith was the recipient of all sorts of pleasant jibes. Every friend or acquaintance he met had something to say about the "world beater." The manager took everything in good part, but mentally acknowledged that he had overplayed himself in making public the signing of Gordon Kelly. "I ought to have said nothing about it," he thought. "Now he will just have to make good or they'll give me the laugh all over the country. But," he added, grimly," that kid will make good, all right, all right."

CHAPTER X.

WHAT Gorden Kelly himself thought of the "funny" stories printed about him in the newspapers no one ever knew. Bill Smith eyed his "world beater" keenly when he reported in the clubhouse at Ponce DeLeon Park early Monday morning. But Kelly was the same, quiet, good natured young man Smith had always found him to be.

"He's a game dog, sure enough," said the manager to himself, and satisfied with this disposal of the case, he began putting on his uniform.

It was the day on which the players of the Atlanta club were to report for spring practice, and it was a fine day overhead. There was to be a month of hard grind for the men in order that they might get into condition for the gruelling pennant race of the Southern League. Players of the rival clubs in New Orleans, Birmingham, Memphis, Chattanooga, Mobile, Nashville and Montgomery were supposed to report to their managers about the same time. In other parts of the South, in Athens, Ga., in Augusta, in Hot Springs, Ark., in Marlin Springs, Tex., in Tampa, Fla., and elsewhere the big league clubs of the North, and the Red Sox champions of the world and of the American League; the New York Giants, champions of the National League; the Chicago Cubs, the Detroit Tigers, the Athletics, of Philadelphia, the Browns, of St. Louis, the Cleveland club, the Washington club, the Pittsburg Pirates, the Cincinnati Reds, the Phillies, the Brooklyns and the Boston Braves were already training under the watchful eyes of the big league managers.

In far off California the Chicago White Sox and in Bermuda the New York Americans in charge of Frank Chance, had pitched their training camps. At about this time, too, many of the International League clubs—Buffalo, Toronto, Providence, Montreal, Baltimore, Newark, Jersey City and Rochester—were scheduled to open their training season below the Mason and Dixon line. Likewise the American Association clubs—St. Paul, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Kansas City, Toledo, Columbus, Milwaukee and Louisville—were due in the South about this time for their annual visit. All these clubs leave the "Sunny Land" richer every year by about $200,000, of which the railroads and the hotels get the lion's share and the moving picture shows, the laundries and the cigar stands what is left.

Players Arrive.

Smith and Kelly were hardly dressed in their uniforms before the players began to arrive and within half an hour there were fully a dozen of them on hand. There were "Whitey" Alperman, the old National League player, now second-baseman of the Atlanta club, as good as ever fielded a grounder when it was hot or muffed a liner when it was bewhiskered; Bailey, the heavy-hitting outfielder; McAllister, who wants to become an umpire; Long, Nixon, Smith, the new third-baseman; Musser and Brady, the clever pitchers; Dobard and Kernan, infielders, and Dunn, the catcher.

There were shaking of hands and merry greetings. Gordon Kelly met all the arrivals as fast as they came to the clubhouse. The homes of these players were scattered all over the country. The men had not seen each other since the last of September.

Alperman was the first of the new arrivals to don his uniform. He laced his shoes and then arose and stretched himself.

"Gee, I wish the Southern League season was over," he said, with a yawn.

This remark caused a great laugh in the clubhouse.

"Starting to 'crab' before you've touched a baseball, eh?" observed Bill Smith.

"No," returned the second baseman. "I wanted to get it off my system, that's all. Come on, boys, let's get a move on," and the players, laughing and shouting like schoolboys, ran on the field and began their season's work with that time-honored exercise of tossing the ball in pairs.

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

"Study Your Expression," Says Pretty Gertrude Barnes

Miss Barnes in a summery pose.

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"SMILE and curl up your mouth corners," said merry Gertrude Barnes. She had just finished doing five character songs in characteristic costumes. She had run the gamut of emotion from the naughty little "enfant terrible" through the stranded show girl longing for the "old Kentucky home" to the mirth-mad exponent of "Row, row, row." And all this earnest and successful effort to please her audience left her cool, buoyant and ready to give the whole world of girls the kindly benefit of her study of how to have "a sane mind in a healthy body."

"Expression is important for character as well as to aid the search after beauty," said pretty Miss Gertrude, with laughing earnestness. "I used to be afraid to smile all I wanted to for fear I would get those heavy lines from nostril to lip; and then suddenly I became aware of all the hard-looking faces one sees—and the chief reason for the hardness was down drooping, disagreeable looking lips. I decided at once to take a chance on the lesser evil, and began curling my mouth up at the corners, even when I was not particularly anxious to 'look pleasant, please;' now as a result there may be lines around my mouth, but they are lines of pleasantness—aren't they?" she added anxiously. "And sometimes when I am ready to feel cross my mouth keeps on smiling—and I recover."

Merry good nature and kindly interest in life happen to be among the greatest charms of Miss Barnes' animated, expensive face, and very pleasing is the twinkle that reflects from big brown eyes to the merry dimpled corners of her this-is-a-fine-old-world mouth.

"You may safely go on smiling," I said with a smile of my own; "but how about all the other expressions you bring in rapid succession to your face—don't they make lines?"

A Brand-New One.

"Not lines that stay," answered Miss Barnes. "You see, I have a few methods of keeping my skin in good condition. They are cold water, sunburn and tan."

"Sunburn and tan!" I exclaimed. "I thought they were fatal to the fine texture of the skin."

"Perhaps they are fatal to the old, worn-out outer layer they destroy. But they give the fresh new layer waiting underneath a chance, and they help give strong, firm flesh, good, healthy flesh, without which fine-textured skin is just impossible. And sunburn and tan come from plenty of sunlight and fresh air, which are the best things in the whole world for the health and beauty seeker. So there you are in a perfect circle, when you have added plenty of cold water—and served up a fine, healthy skin on a background of strong, firm flesh that can throw off the little lines you make temporarily by twisting your face around into any extreme of expressions you choose.

"Cold water—cold water—cold water! Won't you sing its praises very earnestly, please? And tell all the girls not to be afraid of the charm of expression—they may indulge in it all they like if they have been sunburned and tanned and cold-watered, with good massage-like splashes that make the skin strong enough to throw off the little temporary blemishes of lines and wrinkles.

"Oh, my circle is not complete yet," laughed the cheery star, "I have a little more to say about fresh air. Go out into it all you can, and hunt and ride if you can. Riding is wonderful for the muscles of the limbs; hunting develops the muscles of the waist—but if you can do neither, swim. Anyone can swim if she just chooses to learn how—and it is a most wonderful, inspiring, lung-filling, flesh hardening form of exercise.

A "Water Baby."

"I manufactured a lot of my own healthfulness by going after it very earnestly. Being a water-baby and being an outdoor girl are almost equally important; they both make you healthy, and if you are wise enough to be both your chances of being a beauty increase.

"You see, fresh air and exercise have trained my figure for me, so I don't have to rely on corsets to do it. They have trained my skin for me, so I don't have to hold my face in a mask-like expression in order to avoid lines and wrinkles—so there is my basis, and then I go ahead and try to make the most of my looks, although I know perfectly well that the result is not beauty."

But on this latter bit of information Miss Gertrude Barnes has a monopoly, for good features added to the winsome charm of a bright face and the pose of a healthy body surely deserve the title of beauty.

"Now about arranging your face to the best advantage," said Miss Barnes with the earnest attention to every detail that makes her work so pleasing and conversation with her a true delight. "Of course, it is inadvisable for a girl who wishes to be accepted at face value as a lady to use any makeup on the street, for she is sure to look conspicuous and artificial—for the one all-embracing reason that without the earnest study an actress gives the subject the gentle art of makeup becomes a farce, instead of an art.

"However, any girl can teach her eyebrows to grow in a smooth, pretty curve by brushing them at night and morning with a tiny brush; and good cream will keep the face clean as to its pores as well as on the surface; and a well-poised head adds a final touch of charm. Girls should cultivate the habit of holding their heads with the natural poise of a flower instead of jutting forward like a swag, or bending back with the curve of a lightning-struck tree.

"And learn to design your own clothes. Make them express YOU so your personality will be a rounded whole without one jarring note."

And since there is no jarring note in Miss Barnes' unaffected, wholesome personality, this final bit of advice fits in with the beauty study of an expert in whatever she undertakes—and is well worth following.

FREE ADVICE TO SICK WOMEN

Thousands Have Been Helped By Common Sense Suggestions

Women suffering from any form of female ills are invited to communicate promptly with the woman's private correspondence department of the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established a confidential correspondence which has extended over many years and which has never been broken. Never have they published a testimonial or used a letter without the written consent of the writer, and never has the Company allowed these confidential letters to get out of their possession, as the hundreds of thousands of them in their files will attest.

Out of the vast volume of experience which they have to draw from, it is more than possible that they possess the very knowledge needed in your case. Nothing is asked in return except your good will, and their advice has helped thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, should be glad to take advantage of this generous offer of assistance. Address Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., (confidential) Lynn, Mass.

Every woman ought to have Lydia E. Pinkham's 80-page Text Book. It is not a book for general distribution, as it is too expensive. It is free and only obtainable by mail. Write for it to-day.

Household Suggestions

A little soap shredded into the boiler on washing day makes the clothes a good color, and if you put a small piece into the starch it will make the ironing easier, and it imparts a lovely gloss to the clothes. All the little bits of soap that are left over should be put into a jar with a little water. Place the jar in a moderate oven and leave until the soap has dissolved. This is excellent for washing flannels and woollen things.

In choosing chickens, observe chiefly the length of leg. The best chickens have short legs in proportion to the size of the body; the bones are small and the flesh is white. The best test of age is found at the end of the breast-bone. When the bird is young, the end of the bone is soft and gelatinous, and it becomes gradually harder as the age of the bird increases.

A good way in which to keep plants fresh without watering them when the house must be closed is to take all the plants to the cellar or some other cold place and set them in tubs, with an ordinary brick under each flower pot. Pour into the tubs just enough water to cover the bricks. It is best to place the tubs by an east window if possible.

To boil milk without fear of burning, put two or three tablespoonfuls of water in the saucepan; let it boil rapidly for two or three minutes; add the milk, and it will not burn, however fierce the fire may be.

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Little cousin," he said with the deep tenderness of the man who finds happiness in the joy of the woman he loves, though he be shut from her very life, "there is nothing the matter with me. Life gives me almost all I want. No one can have everything. A banker's life has not much color and passion; I would rather make music than money. But don't think he stupidly discontented—or ungrateful for all I have. I cannot say all I mean! There is one thing in the world—in ALL THE WORLD there is one thing I want. For this I would give the world itself, if it were mine—and all the money in the world. And all life would be music, and color and passion then. And I can't tell you—I must never speak of it to you—and you will never understand!"

Outside sunshine and roses—here renunciation of al lthe joy life must never hold. Jacob felt that he must stifle in this litle room where hope had died. He strode to the doorway—to the gleaming terrace.

The Old Story.

And then slowly, swayed by a feeling she felt must be pity, Charlotte followed him, "Jacob, perhaps I do understand."

"Charlotte! If you do—I shall have spoken no word. In a sense it was not honorable of me—though at first I only meant to warn you, and I never thought; I should guard you against myself. Dear little Charlotte—forget what I said!"

"I cannot forget—so easily!" Charlotte's eyes were very soft, her little quivering lips were dangerously near, but Dame Fate had chosen capriciously to make this a day of unfinished climaxes, and only Frau Gudala's ready wit and loving heart intervened between the girl and a rather tragic scene, for at the particular moment when the sunny doorway framed the pretty picture she made as she stood looking pleadingly at a sorely-tempted Jacob, the hall door opened, admitting the Duke and Frau Gudula and her sons.

Gustavus of Taunus was asking: "I may have the honor of addressing your daughter?" and Grannie saved the situation. "There is wine in the garden—if you will honor me. Charlotte, dear, will you and Jacob show Count Fehrenberg the way? Duke Gustavus, could you make up your mind to a little chat with an old woman? Would you stop here with me—alone—for a few minutes? I ask it as a favor." And so Grannie prepared to make her fight for the happiness of her children.

"May I forget for a few moments that I am an old Jewess—and you a reigning Prince? I want to speak to you about Charlotte. She lost her mother many years ago—and now, at this important time of her life, I must try to be a mother to the child. My son Solomon, you know, sometimes sees only one side to a question, the one he wants to see. But I have looked at this marriage between you and Charlotte from many points of view—have you? Do you see the difficulties and danger?"

Gustavus thought for a moment of the girl who wished him to make this marriage in order that she might be the cousin of a wealthy man instead of a pauper Prince. The tricksy jade with her lying eyes—and for one supreme moment he had thought perhaps he and Evelyn might abdicate and face poverty together—well, she wanted money—on with the dance called life! Prince of Taunus, must dance to his piping—then dance merrily and proudly for all the world to see.

He answered the earnest old Jewess lightly indeed. "Oh, I admit the dangers in this marriage, Baroness. But they make the prospect more fascinating—to me. After all, I do not want my future comfortably laid out for me with mathematical certainty! I prefer to run a litle risk! I have lived in a world that grows tired of old games—and is always ready to learn new rules!"

"But marriage is not a game," said the old woman. To her marriage was a Sacrament.

"It may be an adventure if the consequences are not too early seen. Why, my life has ben one series of adventures. When I was a child Napoleon was shaking the ground he marched over. One day my father's little throne fell down, and was picked up and dropped into the Corsican sack! I have known exile, and my crown has been restored to me. I have had money—and it has gone—well, perhaps, I should have had to go after it—pouf!—if your sons had not now once again lifted me upon my little throne. Oh, you see, Baroness, I have had my ups and downs."

"You treat me as a plaything. What blessing can there be for a girl of my people in sharing such a life?"

"When I am married, Baroness"—

"Don't call me that! It is a pretense that does not please me," said the old Jewess impatiently to the reigning Duke of Taunus.

Gustavus exclaimed in amazement: "A pretense! The Emperor has—"

"Your Highness," interposed the old woman, "no Emperor can ennoble me—at my age of seventy-one. Rank is not worn so easily by old woman."

Gustavus of Taunus rose to the supreme height of his manhood as, with a sudden illuminating respect for a fineness he might have failed to glimpse in his little cousin's soul, but saw now in full splendod in the gentle mien of the old Jewess, he answered Frau Gudula: "I think, madame, you belong to a more ancient nobility than my own."

Then, in a little access of mischief, he added: "I shall be proud to be connected with you by marriage."

Frau Gudula had played her highest stake for Charlotte's happiness—and had failed! "Give your compliments to my grandchild, Duke Gustavus, and convince her with them if you can. I wash my hands of this marriage. The matter is beyond me. I pray Providence to guide and guard my little girl." With brimming eyes that scarce could see the sunshine, Frau Gudula walked to the door by the great arbor of pink roses and looked at the merry group sipping her beloved Meyer Amschel's burgundy out in the garden. Well, it is not given to every woman to be the wife of a man she can worship. Poor little Charlotte.

The Pity of It!

Yes, the pity of it—that children, little children, four, five, seven years of age, must be stunted and twisted by long hours of toil. Imagine a little baby girl—your little baby girl—standing all day at a table painfully sorting the petals of artificial roses. Imagine the dirt and squalor of the disease-ridden tenements. The sunlight never penetrates where these babies have to labor—human flowers withered in the making of artificial ones. And the average wage for each child is 2 cents an hour. Imagine it—in this country of ours that we call enlightened.

They Need Your Help

You, the thinking men and women of America, must come to the rescue of the forlorn little six-year-old who toils so long for so meagre a pittance. Hers is a tearful plea that should reach the heart of every parent among us.

Do Your Part

Good Housekeeping Magazine, with the vigor that has always characterized its work, is attacking the evils of child labor and its attendant home work. It is employing such fearless investigators as Judge Lindsey, George Creel, Mary Alden Hopkins, Mary Louisa Chamberlain. But it cannot carry on the campaign alone. You must do your share toward rooting out this cancerous evil. Buy the June issue now and see how the fight is being waged.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

WAIT A WHILE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am 22, and have been keeping company with a certain girl for six weeks. At first it seemed love at first sight, but lately she has grown cold. I buy her candy and flowers and try to please her, and her parents have taken a liking to me. But she now assumes an indifferent air. Do you think my proposal would be accepted? I am madly in love with her.
S. S.

Has it occurred to you that she may have grown tired of seeing so much of you? Try an application of that old adage, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

In any event, a proposal after an acquaintance of only six weeks is apt to be premature.

DON'T LET HIM KNOW.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl of 18 years and in love with a man of 30 years. This man is a friend of my folks. He has never taken me out and he is very nice to me, and always talks of getting married. He doesn't know I love him. Please tell me how I could win his love.
A SPANISH GIRL.

Suppose I were to tell you to let him know of your love. You are only 18, and girls of that age transfer their hearts easily. If you let him know of your love to-day, the chances are you will love another man to-morrow. Spare yourself humiliation by keeping your love a secret until he asks for it.

NOT IMPROPER.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Do you think it proper for a girl who is keeping steady company to ask the man when she will see him next? A. L. W.

Their intimacy warrants such a question from her, but I would not want her to be urgent or persistent, and it is in better taste if she lets him take the initiative in making future engagements.

MOTHERS SHOULD CALL FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am keeping company with a young lady and wish to know if it is proper for the young lady's mother to call on my mother, or my mother to call on her, my mother being the elder. We will soon be engaged. S. S. L.

Such overtures should come from the family of the man, never from the family of the girl.

THE LADY FIRST.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
Which is proper: For a lady to greet a gentleman first, or a gentleman to greet a lady, while walking on the street? ARCO.

The lady is the first always to give some sign of recognition.

Do You Know---

Some curious experiences seem to have befallen Mr. William Campbell, late of the Black Watch, who has just finished a 50,000-mile walk, in a kilt, through India, Ceylon, Australia and New Zealand. In Italy his dancing of a Highland fling in the street led to arrest, a New Zealand chief offered him a wife in exchange for his costume, and in Australia he lavished money on eau-de-cologne in order to keep the mosquitoes away from his knees. He was nearly murdered at a religious festival in Ceylon, being taken for a devil.

The Quebec agency of the Canadian Marine Department has received word that a gas buoy which drifted from its position in the lower St. Lawrence River during the winter of 1912 has been picked up by the lightship at Hellewick, New South Wales. It is supposed that the buoy drifted round Cape Horn, a distance of 16,000 miles. The date of the buoy's disappearance is not given, but even if it took place early in the winter of 1911-12 the buoy would have to drift 30 miles a day or more to reach New South Wales in the time.

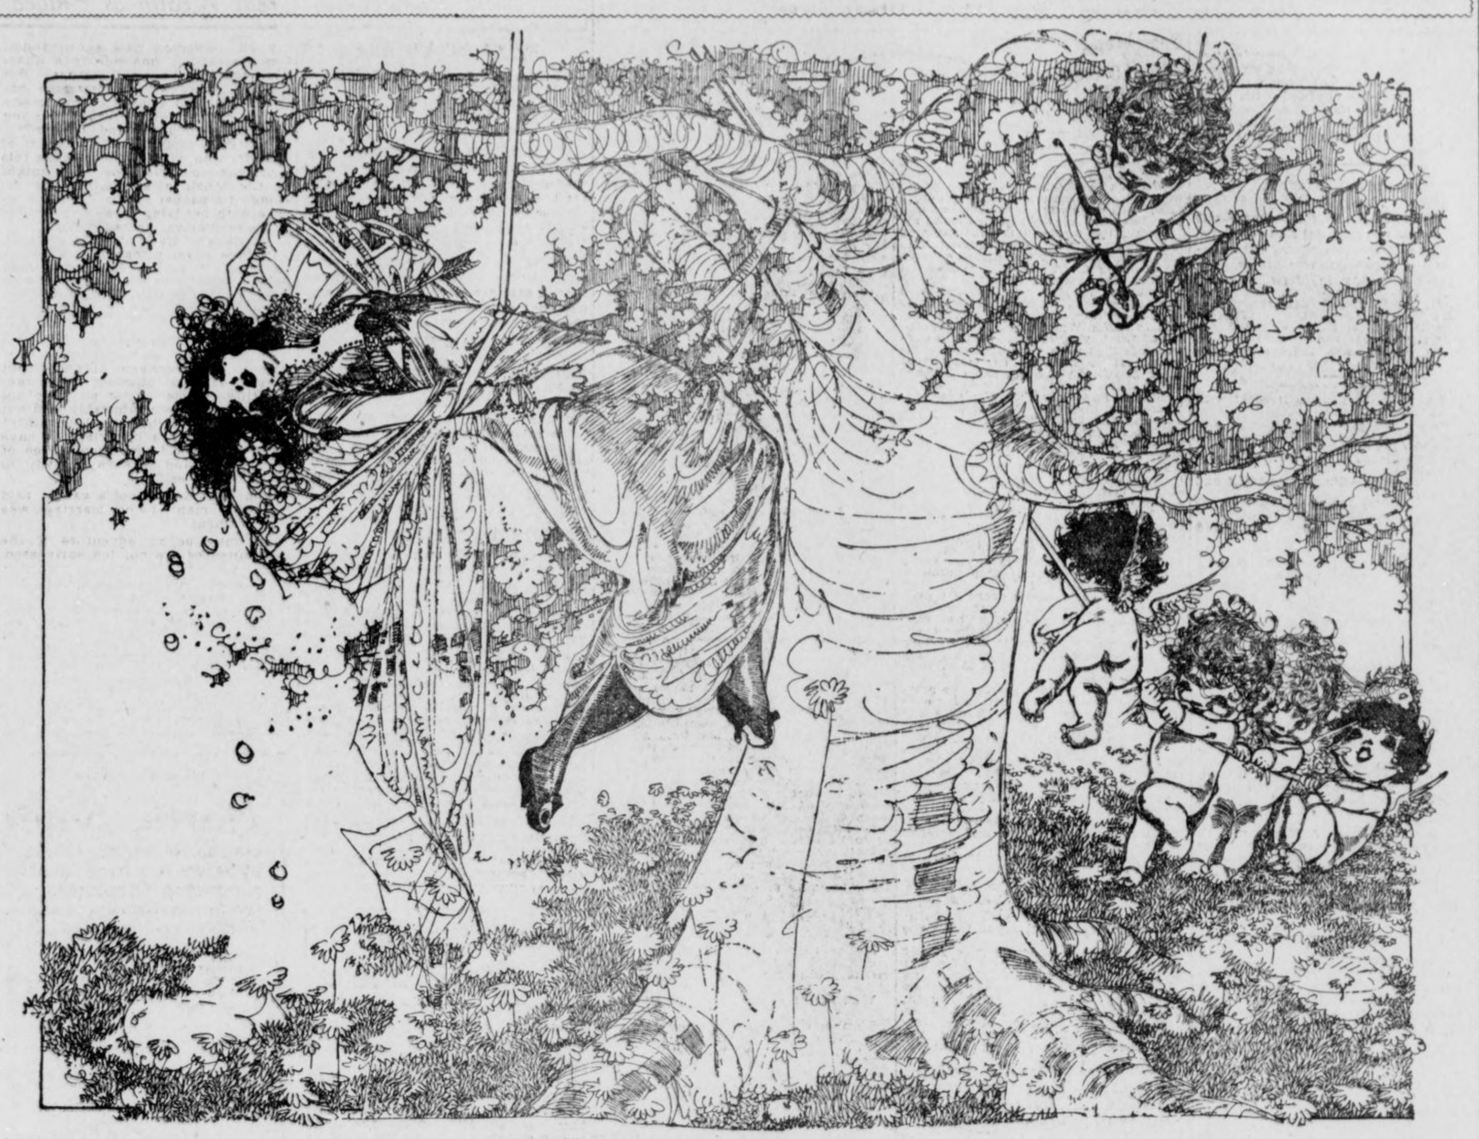
Snared!

With the Golden Apple of Love for Bait

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, by International News Service.



NELL BRINKLEY SAYS

IN this fashion is it done! In the depths of a lovely forest, velveted underfoot in emerald-moss and sewn thick with flowers—forget-me-nots, heartease and such like soft names—hide certain wary wights with very fat cheeks and tummies! Over the runways they set their snares—a cunning loop of golden cord—thrown over a high tree-bough and down, as high from the ground as—a maid's waist. On the green moss under the shining loop (which is so like a slanting sunbeam that a strolling lady would never catch it in her bright eye in the world) they drop a golden apple. And on the golden apple the sun smites hard enough to enchant and blind a maid with its flame. One malicious wight, the coldest-blooded of all, shins up the tree into the leafy green shadow and lies there with his bow drawn and a keen-tipped arrow necked. The rest fall upon the other end of the cord. They hold their breath, their eyes harden and brighten. The feathery curl on the tip top of one's head waves idly in the wind! One itches his pink heel with the toes of his other foot. One breathes too loud and gets a fat knee in his back for his stupidity. They WAIT—the cord a bit slack. Down the runway comes a maid, with soft black hair, primroses over her ears, a narrow slashed skirt (the better to dance the Tango in), silver buckles on her shoes and an unsuspecting sweet blue eye! And the sun on the golden apple smites into her eyes! The wights behind the tree-bole stiffen and dig their toes into the moss. With a little cry the maid pinches up her silken skirt between a forefinger and thumb and runs swiftly—in a soft rush—she dives down with a greedy hand for the apple in the moss. Her head hovers within the big golden loop. She straightens—ah-h-h down slithers the noose over her shoulders—"Heya"—the wights lean and pull like mad, and my lady's body is twirling in midair, her little heels kicking nothing! "Heya!"—the wight in the tree lets his arrow go singing straight to the captive's heart—and another maid is snared!

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The father was impressed of a sudden with the fact that, while this affair was of supreme import to himself, it was, after all, of still greater significance to his son. To himself, the chief concerns were of the worldly kind. To this boy, the vital thing was something deeper, something of the heart; for, however absurd his feeling, the truth remained that he loved the woman. Yes, it was the son's name that Mary Turner had taken, as well as that of his father. In the case of the son, she had taken not only his name, but his very life. Yes, it was, indeed, Dick's tragedy. Whatever he, the father, might feel, the son was, after all, more affected. He must suffer more, must lose more, must pay more with happiness for his folly.

Gilder looked at his son with a strange, new respect, but he could not let the situation go without protest, protest most vehement.

"Dick," he cried, and his big voice was shaken a little by the force of his emotion, "boy, you are all I have in the world. You will have to free yourself from this woman somehow." He stood very erect, staring steadfastly out of his clear gray eyes into those of his son. His heavy face was rigid with feeling; the coarse mouth bent slightly in a smile of troubled fondness, as he added more softly: "You owe me that much."

The son's eyes met his father's freely. There was respect in them, and affection, but there was something else, too, something the older man recognized as beyond his control. He spoke gravely, with a deliberate conviction.

Gilder's Voice Rang Out.

"I owe something to her, too, Dad."

But Gilder would not let the statement go unchallenged. His heavy voice rang out rebukingly, overtoned with protest.

"What can you owe her?" he demanded, indignantly. "She tricked you into the marriage. Why, legally, it's not even that. There's been nothing more than a wedding ceremony. The courts hold that is only a part of the marriage actually. The fact that she doesn't receive you makes it simpler, too. It can be arranged. We must get you out of the scrape."

He turned and went to the desk, as if to sit, but he was halted by his son's answer, given very gently, yet with a note of finality that to the father's ear rang like the crack of doom.

"I'm not sure that I want to get out of it, father."

That was all, but those plain words summed the situation, made the issue a matter not of advice, but of the heart.

Gilder persisted, however, in trying to evade the integral fact of his son's feeling. Still he tried to fix the issue on the known unsavory reputation of the woman.

"You want to stay married to this jail bird!" he stormed.

"She Is Justified."

A gust of fury swept over the boy. He loved the woman, in spite of all; he respected her, even reverenced her. To hear her thus named moved him to a rage almost beyond his control. But he mastered himself. He remembered that the man who spoke loved him; he remembered, too, that the word of opprobrium was no more than the truth, however offensive it might be to his sensitiveness. He waited a moment until he could hold his voice even. Then his words were the sternest protest that could have been uttered, though they came from no exercise of thought, only out of the depths of his heart.

"I'm very fond of her."

That was all. But the simple sincerity of the saying gripped the father's mood as no argument could have done. There was a little silence. After all, what could meet such loving loyalty?

When at last he spoke Gilder's voice was subdued, a little husky.

"Now that you know?" he questioned.

There was no faltering in the answer.

"Now that I know," Dick said distinctly. Then abruptly the young man spoke with the energy of perfect faith in the woman. "Don't you see, father? Why, she is justified in a way, in her own mind, anyhow, I mean. She was innocent when she was sent to prison. She feels that the world owes her—"

But the older man would not permit the assertion to go uncontradicted. That reference to the woman's innocence was an arraignment of himself, for it had been he who sent her to the term of imprisonment.

"Don't talk to me about her innocence!" he said, and his voice was ominous. "I suppose next you will argue that, because she's been clever enough to keep within the law, since she's got out of State's prison, she's not a criminal. But let me tell you—crime is crime, whether the law touches it in the particular case or whether it does not."

Gilder faced his son sternly for a moment, and then presently spoke again with deeper earnestness.

"There's only one course open to you, my boy. You must give this girl up."

The son met his father's gaze with a level look in which there was no weakness.

"I've told you, Dad—" he began.

"You must, I tell you," the father insisted. Then he went on quickly, with a tone of utmost positiveness. "If you don't, what are you going to do the day your wife is thrown into a patrol wagon and carried to police headquarters—for it's sure to happen? The cleverest of people make mistakes, and some day she'll make one."

Dick threw out his hands in a gesture of supreme denial. He was furious at this supposition that she would continue in her irregular practices.

But the father went on remorselessly.

"They will stand her up where the detectives will walk past her with masks on their faces. Her picture, of course, is already in the Rogues' Gallery, but they will take another. Yes, and the imprints of her fingers, and the measurements of her body."

The son was writhing under the words. The woman of whom these things were said was the woman whom he loved. It was blasphemy to think of her in such case, subjected to the degradation of these processes. Yet, every word had in it the piercing horrible sting of truth. His face whitened. He raised a supplicating hand.

"Father!"

"That's what they will do to your wife," Gilder went on harshly, "to the woman who bears your name and mine." There was a little pause, and the father stood rigid, menacing. The final question came rasping. "What are you going to do about it?"

Dick went forward until he was close to his father. Then he spoke with profound conviction.

"It will never happen. She will go straight, Dad. That I know. You would know it if you only knew her as I do."

Gilder once again put his hand tenderly on his son's shoulder. His voice was modulated to an unaccustomed mildness as he spoke.

"Be sensible, boy," he pleaded softly. "Be sensible!"

Dick dropped down on the couch, and made his answer very gently, his eyes unseeing as he dwelt on the things he know of the woman he loved.

The Manicure Lady

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

"ME and brother Wilfred spent a week-end up in the country, and I have just came back," said the Manicure Lady. "I would rather than not spend all my week-ends in the country, George, because the air is so restful up there, but I guess Wilfred don't want to go back no more to the town where we was.

"You see, George, my poor, deluded brother had an idea that he could sail into the little town where we was going and just tell them that he was from New York. He thought that would make him an idol in said town. I didn't think so for a minute, George, because I know how people is in small towns. They mind their own business and everybody else's, but they don't care a rap where they find out you came from. You might as well try to make a gorilla kiss your hand as to make a small towner respect you because you are a New Yorker. They simply don't care where you are from, and the way they treated my poor brother I guess the bigger the town you came from the less they care."

They Go to Europe.

"I don't blame them," said the Head Barber. "I don't see why a man should figure himself a favorite just because he lives in a little New York flat and rides up and down town in the subway. How is that going to make a man wise? Most of the fellows that was born in the shadow of the Brooklyn Bridge—the kind that comes in here sometimes to get shaved—ain't got much idea of the great country they are living in. If they save up a little dough, they don't go out to the wonderful Pacific Coast. No; they go to Europe and get bunked. They pay a guide a lot of dough to show them some place where an English king had his nephews choked to death in a tower, and then they come back and tell about their travels."

"I hope you ain't doing a monologue, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I was trying to tell you something about this week-end party, if you are enough of a gent to listen. Well, Wilfred and me reached the town all right, and the minute we got to the hotel and were seated with our country friends around the table, poor brother pulls the very phrase that I asked him not to. 'This is fair,' he says to the company, 'but little old New York for mine.' I knew right off that he had made a bonehead play, because I seen the folks look at each other kind of funny, but he doesn't gete wise, not Wilfred. 'The reason I like Manhattan,' he babbles right on, 'is because Manhattan is the market for brains. I write, as perhaps some of you people know,' says poor brother, 'and the brains of the country, in literature, all flock to New York. If I were a farmer, I would like it up here, but being a writer, I have to be in the heart of the literary world, little old New York.'

A Quiet Fellow.

"There was a nice, quiet-looking fellow in the party, George, that I seen looking over my fool brother kind of sly and unobstructive like. He was dressed rough, because he was on a fishing trip, but I seen right away from his calm, well-bred misdemeanor that he was a gent. He listened a long time while Wilfred was telling them what a terrible strain it is on a writer to keep writing, and he even stood for my brother's reciting some of his own poems right at the table with his mouth full of chow-chow and new bread. Then he got up and went out with a smile at me. I seen then and there that him and me would be good friends, because we both knew Wilfred through and through.

"Honest to goodness, George, do you know who he was? I asked one of the ladies, and she told me. The gent that had been listening to Wilfred's hot air about writing and writers was George Ade, who wrote 'Fables in Slang' and 'Horatius at the Bridge' and 'David Copperfield' and a lot of other books and plays."

"Did Wilfred find out who he was?" asked the Head Barber.

"Sure he did, but it didn't feaze him. He said that the time would go swift for the party with two clever writers at the same table!"

The Care-Free Spin

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

THERE is this difference: She is an Old Maid if she is old fashioned and resigned, and a Bachelor Girl if she fights hard.

It must be dreary to be a Spin and have no husband come home and growl all evening about the high cost of living.

When a Spin knows how to smooth a man's plumage an ideal wife is lost to the world.

No one can save money quite as fast as a Spin after she has put aside the curling iron with the conviction that no man is worth having.

When all her friends unite in saying, "What a good time she has," you can bet "She's is either a Spin or a widow."

It is easy to compliment the mother of children, but when a woman has become a real old Spin the only way to reach her is to appeal through what she learned at school.

"The top of her voice" is a common expression, but the top note depends entirely on whether a woman is married or a Spin. Mothers reach a high key through experience in screaming at the children, their husbands and the dog, but the top of a Spin's voice is a low pitch, and when she tries to raise it it becomes a squeal. The top of a mother's voice would stop a fire engine, the top of a Spin's voice isn't loud enough to call the cat home from the next yard.

Once Upon a Time there lived an Old Maid. She did not call herself a Spin. She was frank about it, and admitted she was an Old Maid, despising such subterfuges as Spin and Bachelor Girl. The Old Maid was lonesome, and lonesomeness for an Old Maid is DANGEROUS. She was more lonesome than her friends realized, and one day left Lonesome Land by walking from the altar with a Man. One morning a few years later her husband left the house after a stormy scene, banging the door with such violence that pictures and plates tumbled from the walls. The noise awoke the Twins, and they set up a Howl. "At least," said the ex-Old Maid, as she tried to soothe the crying babies and pick up pictures and broken glass and china at the same time, "I Am No Longer Lonesome." And having said that she said All!

ONLY FOUR DAYS LEFT TO ENTER GEORGIAN'S GREAT PONY CONTEST

Four days remain in which contestants can be nominated for The Georgian and The American pony outfit contest. Several boys and girls are believed to be preparing to enter at the last hour possible, and with a considerable number of votes pledged, believing there will be some advantage in taking the leaders by surprise.

This, though, is not likely to avail them much. Probably they believe the leaders are napping, but nothing could be further from the truth. Besides, late entrants are losing the value of vote coupons more than fifteen days old.

Those already in the race remain closely bunched.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook so far has been the greatest vote producer. She had 59,960 votes Tuesday, while Florence Greenoe in her district has polled 40,620.

Several other contestants have passed the 40,000 mark. George Rosser, in District 1, has 41,620; Miss Robert Harbour, in District 2, 48,055. Ross Greer and Mose Brodkin, in the City Carriers' and Newsboys' race, are running neck and neck with 42,145 and 41,700, respectively.

Another close contest, though the vote totals are not so large, is the contest for school boys and girls outside Georgia, where Lena Mae Smith, Knoxville, Tenn., has 16,715 votes, and Fain E. Webb, Jr., 16,650.

Names and standing of contestants follow:

Plot Charged by Defense of Gibson

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May 27.—The defense of Burton W. Gibson, the New York lawyer, accused of drowning Countess Rosa Menschik Szabo in order to get her estate, was revealed to-day.

Dr. Otto H. Schultz, Coroner's physician of New York, who testified that the countess had been strangled to death, will be charged with forcing the tongue down the Countess' throat while performing the autopsy, thus giving the appearance of strangulation.

THE WEATHER.

Conditions.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—There will be showers to-night in New England, the Middle Atlantic and northern portion of the South Atlantic States, continuing Wednesday in New England, New York and New Jersey. Elsewhere east of the Mississippi River the weather will be fair to-night and Wednesday, with higher temperatures Wednesday throughout the upper Lake and Western lower Lake regions and the Ohio Valley.

General Forecast.

Following is the general forecast until 7 p. m. Wednesday:

Georgia—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night in north and central portions.

Virginia—Showers to-night; Wednesday cloudy.

North Carolina—Showers to-night and Wednesday.

South Carolina—Showers to-night or Wednesday; slightly cooler to-night.

Florida—Generally fair to-night and Wednesday.

Alabama—Fair to-night; cooler in north and central portions; Wednesday fair, warmer in north portion.

Mississippi—Fair to-night and Wednesday; slightly warmer Wednesday in the interior.

Tennessee—Fair to-night; Wednesday fair, warmer.

Louisiana—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

Texas—Fair to-night and Wednesday.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Opinion on Government reports seem to have crystallized around 83 per cent, which, if June reports are indicative of final production, should be interpreted bearishly.

Norden & Co.: It is possible there may be further selling in an attempt to discount a good bureau report.

Sternberger, Sinn & Co.: It is still a weather market.

Newburger, Worms & Nawman: All strong spots should be taken advantage of to sell, especially the new crops.

Logan & Bryan: We favor sales on any upturn from this level.

Thompson, Towle & Co.: Market may go lower, but we do not advise selling at present.

SHORT COVERING PUTS COTTON UP

One Western Operator Covers 35,000 Bales on Narrow Market, Causing the Advance.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Poor cables, coupled with bearish weather map, led to active selling at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 3 points lower than Monday's final. Offerings were well absorbed and soon after the call the loss was made up.

During the forenoon the market was firm and under persistent buying from the large spot interests shorts covered considerable short lines. McFadden, Riordan and Parrott led the buying movement. Riordan was credited with purchasing about 12,000 to 15,000 bales of October and December, which was said to be for Wall Street. The character of the buying chased shorts to cover. Offerings were very light and scattered. It is believed by many that there is still an existing short interest in the market.

October and December displayed extraordinary firmness. October advanced 8 points and December 9 over the initial level. Other positions followed the advance moderately, advancing 3 to 7 points.

The advance came in the face of extremely bearish advices from all parts of the belt, as well as from abroad. A cable said:

"The market feels the influence of Continental buying, spinners well stocked, and notwithstanding a fair Manchester business we expect a small spot market in Liverpool for the present. Think market will be lower if crop accounts continue favorable."

Weather developments overnight were of the most favorable character. No rains fell of consequence. The map promises very favorable weather overnight; fair and warmer in the western and central States; cloudy and probably showers in the Carolinas and East Tennessee warmer.

During the afternoon session the market found good support from many conservative sources. Offerings were extremely light. One large Western operator was credited with covering about 20 bales on a narrow market, which caused October and December to advance to 11.20, while other positions held relatively steady, prices aggregated a net gain of about 8 to 13 points from the opening.

The National Ginners' Association of Memphis in its condition and acreage report placed the condition of the crop at 83 per cent and gave acreage an increase of 3.2 per cent increase. The report was construed as bearish, but had practically no effect upon the market.

The market is an evening-up affair over the triple holiday period and the pending government report to follow the holidays.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 2 to 8 points from the closing figures of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Liverpool developed further weakness, showing futures this morning about 2 points lower than due. Spots, 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. London news says that Bulgarians fired on the Greek fleet. War between the allies nearer and this menace distracts attention from peace negotiations.

Weather conditions continue very favorable. The map shows fair and warm weather west of Alabama, cloudy in the Atlantics and Tennessee; some nice rains in Tennessee and Western North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy weather and showers in the Carolinas, where rain is needed, and fair and warmer weather over the rest of the belt.

The market was idle during the first two hours around last night's closing prices, waiting for the weekly Government weather report at 11 o'clock, which is expected to be partly unfavorable, as it will cover the three-day cool spell of last week. Some little scalpers' buying caused a few points advance.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Reports to the Journal of Commerce state that the cotton crop is backward in the Carolinas and about normal in Tennessee. The acreage is slightly increased and the stands in general are poor. Rain was badly needed, but showers have been general recently. Some replanting in Tennessee with an increase in the acreage. In North Carolina the season is about two weeks late; prospects are much brighter since the rains. South Carolina condition may fall below last year, when it was 79. Tennessee condition shows an increase of nearly ten points over last year, when it was 73.5.

* * *

It is believed that a good deal of short cotton has been covered during the past few days and a lower market is predicted, based on favorable weather conditions and reports which are coming in. Around the close yesterday Riordan bought about 10,000 bales of October and December. McFadden brokers also bought. However, they sold old crop positions.

* * *

Liverpool cables: "American middling fair 7.24d; good middling 6.90d; middling 6.70d; low middling 6.56d; good ordinary 6.82d; ordinary 5.85d."

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable. Shows fair and warmer in western portion of the Atlantics. Cloudy and warm in the Atlantics and Tennessee. No rain except in Tennessee and parts of North Carolina, where it will be beneficial.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Favorable crop reports came from many quarters, and the cotton market declined. Of course, a wave of bearish sentiment passed over the rings and low-price people discussed the outlook for declines in more or less confident tones. Ten cents for new crops was talked of as a sure thing, nine cents as a probability, eight cents as likely, and, according to one lone bear, seven cents as a possibility. All the while the bull faction kept quiet and permitted the spell of depression to run its course. At the close underlying strength seemed to develop, and students of the market expressed the belief that near future fluctuations would range within 20 points.

"The weather over Sunday was very favorable, temperatures were higher and, on the face of things, the crop seemed to be in a fair way to make seasonable progress. The man on the fence, while admitting the presence of much more favorable climatic conditions, was inclined to believe that the flood of favorable crop advices, coming right at the close of the period on which the Government's condition bulletin on June 2 is to be based, traces some of its inspiration to a possible need of an offset to any relatively low condition that might have been reported on May 25 from the less favorable sections."

Weld makes the condition of the crop 84.

* * *

McFadden, Parrott and Riordan were the leading buyers to-day. Mohr and Hentz probably the best sellers.

* * *

Wall Street covered through Riordan.

* * *

Riordan was also a big buyer of the new crop positions for the Pell interests.

* * *

Memphis wires: "Generally fair weather will prevail in the cotton States, except in the extreme northeastern sections, where showers are likely. Good weather in the central belt will be quickly followed by warmer. No rain of consequence has fallen. Favorable map."

WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Mean temperatures were normal or slightly above over the extreme eastern portion of the cotton region and in northwestern Texas. Elsewhere there was a deficiency of from one to six degrees. The weekly mean temperatures ranged from 64 to 76 degrees over the eastern, from 66 to 74 over the central and from 64 to 76 over the western portion of the cotton growing States. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and Beaufort, S. C., Ark., and the highest, 76, at Jacksonville and Tampa, and at San Antonio and Del Rio, Texas.

Precipitation occurred throughout the cotton region, except that there was no rain at a few stations in southern and western Texas.

The precipitation was generally heaviest over the central and northeastern portion of the cotton region, amounts over those portions being generally more than two inches.

The greatest weekly amount, 4.65 inches, occurred at Donaldsonville, La.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 27.—The cotton seed oil market was barely steady at the start to-day in absence of outside support, but prices soon firmed up on local professional buying, inspired by higher lard and cotton. There was some selling of August for outside long account.

CANADIAN PACIFIC IS SOLD ABROAD

Other Issues Off on Rumor That U. S. Will Sue Anthracite Coal Trust.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Most issues shaded at the opening of the stock market to-day, although others gave a fair appearance of strength, which caused a show of irregularity in the list.

Canadian Pacific opened at 233½, for a loss of ⅝, but made a partial recovery. United States Steel common opened with a loss of ⅜, apparently on published reports of a price decline in Europe. Later the loss was made up and the issue scored a gain.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit shaded fractionally in spite of the dividend increase. Amalgamated Copper, after opening unchanged, declined fractionally.

Other issues which sold off were Louisville and Nashville ⅜; Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ⅛, Pennsylvania Railroad ¼, California Petroleum ⅛, Great Northern preferred ½ and Erie ¼. Reading shaded ⅛, but later recovered and scored a

TALLULAH CASE IS TRIED ON MERITS

Demurrers of Both State and the Power Company Overruled. Testimony Is Heard.

CLAYTON, GA., May 27.—Demurrers of both the State of Georgia, plaintiff, and the Georgia Railway and Power Company, defendant, were overruled to-day in the suit to determine the ownership of the gorge at Tallulah Falls and the case was ordered tried on its merits by Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northeastern Circuit. The introduction of testimony began when court reconvened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

When court assembled at 10 o'clock this morning both sides announced ready for trial and in a short itme the jury was drawn and sworn. The jurors are among the most prominent citizens of Rabun County.

The contention of the State is that the land in the Tallulah Falls gorge was never granted by the State and that land grants along the falls extended only to the brink of the gorge, thereby leaving the title to the gorge with the State.

The power company contends that the land grants on either side of the gorge extend to the river and include the gorge, and that the Legislature of 1905 passed a resolution estopping the State from laying claim to the gorge land.

No Action Yet on Street Car Service

Definite action on the part of the State Railroad Commission requiring the Georgia Railway and Electric Company to give better street-car service in Atlanta did not develop Tuesday morning as expected. A decision is expected Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning.

The commission also has under consideration a request of the Southern Express Company for an increase from 15 to 25 cents as the minimum on a shipment of milk. Dairymen of Fairburn, Ga., protested.

Budget for June to Be Made Up Friday

Council's Finance Committee Tuesday closed its public hearing, and Chairman W. G. Humphrey announced that a meeting would be held Friday morning to make up the June budget.

"We have about $71,000 for special appropriations," said Chairman Humphrey, "but I have no idea as yet how the committee will decide to divide it. Requests for new money amount to about $500,000."

Imaginative Drunk Thinks He Is Slayer

W. W. Baughn, whose home is on Broyles Street, outlined another basement murder mystery to the police Monday night. He rushed up to a patrolman in Forsyth Street and said he had just killed a man and had thrown him through a basement window of the Austell Building. The policeman hurried to the Austell Building and found a shattered plate glass window, but no dead man.

Before the Recorder Tuesday Baughn said he was drunk and did not remember what he said. He was put on probation.

Works Years With Heart Almost Bare

ST. JOHN, N. B., May 27.—Jose Carey, whose case was regarded as unique by the medical profession, is dead. Carey underwent an operation in Boston six years ago for lung trouble and part of the left lung and several of the ribs were removed, leaving the heart practically exposed.

Carey recovered his usual health and worked daily for the last four years.

Cat With Harelip Whistles Like Boy

SPRINGFIELD, MASS., May 27.—Stanislaus Czynszky, of Prospect Avenue, West Springfield, is the owner of a cat with a harelip, which whistles with the facility of a schoolboy, but can not mew or, at least, never has mewed.

Neighbors have suggested that the cat would prove a treasure to a maker of catgut violin strings.

Baptist Ministers Hear Dr. Donaldson

The Rev. C. N. Donaldson, D. D., of Charleston, S. C., who was pastor of the Inman Park Baptist Church for six years, delivered an address before the Baptist Ministers' Conference of Atlanta Monday afternoon.

Dr. Donaldson will return to Charleston Sunday. His many friends were glad to see him and to learn he is pleased with Charleston.

FIFE, SECRETARY TO SAMUEL INMAN, DIES

Manse Fife, 21 years old, died Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock at the residence, 18 Argard Avenue, after a short illness.

Mr. Fife was private secretary to Samuel Inman. He is survived by his father, J. A. Fife; five brothers, Walter, J. C., H. A., W. B., and Edward S. Fife, and a sister, Mrs. J. T. Gibson.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later.

3 Bandits Caught After Battle With Posse; 2 Wanted

MARIETTA, GA., May 27.—Frank Nation is in jail here to-day and John Goddard and a man named Haney are held prisoners at Cartersville, following a battle near Hugh, a small station between Cartersville and Marietta, with a pursuing posse in which Nation and Deputy Sheriff J. P. Gaines were wounded. A fourth member of Nation's gang escaped by swimming a river, after being chased six miles by dogs and officers.

Nation and his associates are said to have attempted to hold up and rob Thomas Sorrells, telegraph operator at Hugo.

Bartow County officers telephoned to Marietta for assistance and Deputy Sheriff George Hicks went to Hugo with dogs. They followed a trail to Nation's house across a mountain, where the battle took place.

February Cleared By Chief Lanford

Chief of Detectives Lanford exonerated G. C. February, his secretary, of any genuine intention of "selling out" to Colonel Thomas B. Felder, in a statement Tuesday afternoon.

"The deal with Felder was taken up with my consent and under my instructions," said Chief Lanford. "It was done on the suggestion of A. S. Colyar, and if there is any blame to be attached to the laying of the dictograph trap for Felder I am the one responsible. I thought that if they were planning to steal that Coleman affidavit and other papers they would be caught with the goods."

Atlantans to See 'Knoxville-Made' Fair

Chattanooga's exhibit of goods made in that city is regarded by Atlantans as a model for the exposition planned here, and for that reason about 50 members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Merchants' and Manufacturers' Association will go to Chattanooga Thursday to see the display.

A special car will be attached to the W. & A. train leaving Atlanta at 8 a. m.

Man of Mystery Is Likened to Hoch

CHICAGO, May 27.—The coroner will be asked to-day to investigate the death of Homer Edward Morrison, who was involved in a mystery which may rival that of Johann Hoch.

Two women already have appeared who say they were defrauded by a man named Morrison, and the police have a record of a third woman, who claims also to have been victimized.

Charges Attempt To Blind Him; Sues

Asserting that W. M. Henry tried to put his eyes out with an umbrella, O. M. Sutton has filed suit in the Superior Court against Henry for $2,500 damages.

Sutton alleges that Henry showered blows on him with the umbrella; jabbed the end of the umbrella into the back of his neck, into his stomach and against his back; threw him into a corner; beat him and then dragged him out and tried to poke the umbrella point into his eyes.

Governor Attends Lucy Cobb Finals

Governor Joseph M. Brown left for Athens Monday, where he will attend the commencement exercises of Lucy Cobb Institute. The Governor's daughter, Miss Cora Brown, is a member of the graduating class.

While in Athens the Governor also will pay a visit to the University. He is not scheduled to make any addresses on the trip.

U. S. Drops Inquiry Into Phthisis 'Cure'

WASHINGTON, May 27.—By order of Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo the Public Health Service to-day refused to make any further investigation into the so-called Duket "cure" for tuberculosis.

Duket is a Chicago surgeon who is backed by former Senator Lorimer and other influential men.

SISTERS SEE BROTHER SLAIN.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

No Better Chickens Than the White Plymouth Rocks

They Are as Beautiful as They Are Useful and Profitable—Are Good as They Look.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

In our estimation there are no better chickens than the White Plymouth Rocks. When carefully bred and rightly handled they are as beautiful as they are useful and profitable.

With their glossy white plumage, red comb, wattles and earlobes, and yellow legs, they look fine enough to eat, and they are just as good as they look.

I am not raising them and I have none to sell, but I know what I am talking about, for I have handled them in years past and speak from experience.

If you want to produce good ones, however, you must be mighty careful to breed from first class stock. If you are just starting in the business you can not use too much care to produce a start of the very choicest breeders. Then let your selections each year be the very best. Cull out the poor ones, both as to shape and color. Keep nothing that does not show a robust constitution, the ones with the broad breasts and backs, heavy thighs, nice and tapering, arched necks, with a low carried tail. Such a specimen is not only good looking in shape, but contains stamina worth considering. Weed out those with the slim, straight necks, long and narrow or roached backs; legs too long, standing too close together at the knees; tail slim and carried too high, forming an angle with the back. These points of defect are very often seen, and upon what some call good specimens. Of course, they are rarely all seen upon the same fowl, but frequently two or more are.

High Type Utility Fowl.

When you have the very best possible shape in a White Rock for the show room you have a utility fowl of the very highest type. There is no doubt about that. As to color, the Standard says pure white throughout, web, quill and all. You see there are no qualifications. Simply white. Any departure from this is defective, such as creaminess, brass and the like; brass simply being the creaminess intensified into a positive yellow, as seen upon poor specimens of males two years old or older. This is one of the things we have to fight against in our endeavors for the best. Gray or black specks are quite common and are often distributed through the plumage in pin head sizes, and are defective according to size and number and the intensity of color. Positive black spots of any kind will disqualify. A good, pure, white plumage throughout, free from any creamy tinge, even though it contains a few minute specks, is much more desirable in every way than one that has a tendency to be creamy. Do not throw that kind away, for it is a hard matter to get a pure white one. The ear lobes should be bright red, as in all the different varieties of rocks, any permanent, or what might be called enameled white, disqualifies. Look out for this, as it only takes a mighty few of the right kind of black specks to throw them out. What the Standard terms positive white, in treating with white in specimens demanding red lobes, is a white that seems coated right on to the surface, and not a changeable white that shows white one minute and reddens the next.

Single Comb.

The comb upon both the male and female should be single and straight upon the head, not soft enough to turn to one side or the other or to wrinkle in its course from where it starts at the base of the head to the blade at the rear. A comb of five points is the one desired, although a four-point one would not be so very objectionable in the eyes of the best breeders. Look out for feathers, stubs or down on the shanks, which should be clean and free from any appearance of feathers. One can soon learn to detect the greater defects and the little ones will come to light later on in the game.

If you get a strictly first class White Rock for the fancy man or the show room, you will have a good one to breed broilers or roasters from and a good one for laying, too, for that matter.

You know it used to be a great idea to those that knew nothing about the business that a thoroughbred or standard bred chicken, one good enough to put into the show room, was some kind of a freak not suited to any other purpose, and entirely unfit for the practical man. Nothing could have been farther from the facts, and many are just now getting wise along this line, for it has been one great aim and earnest endeavor of the standard makers for years to have for their ideal chicken one that was all chicken from head to tail.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Tract of 400 Acres To Be Subdivided

Woodland Hills as a Home Neighborhood—Peachtree Widening Postponed.

Announcement was made Tuesday of perfected plans for improving one of the largest acreage tracts in the Atlanta section. W. E. Worley, J. A. Mahoney and Eugene C. Callaway, incorporators of the Woodland Hills Company, will begin in a few days to improve 400 acres between Ansley Park and Druid Hills, and probably $40,000 will be spent at once putting in 80-foot chert drives, water and sewers and tile sidewalks.

This subdivision is to be known as Woodland Hills. The developers have consulted with engineers as to topography, and plats of the property will be out shortly. The lots will be large, and the owners expect to sell them all and to have a thriving home community in three years.

The last addition to this tract was made ten days ago, when 110 acres was bought for $40,000. There will be a combined frontage of about 20 miles. The tract is on the Cheshire Bridge, East Paces Ferry and Williams Mill Roads and Highland and Moreland Avenues.

Widening Considered.

The Finance Committee of Council will meet Friday to fix up the budget covering improvements for street work and other city improvements, and will at this time take up the matter of setting aside $5,000 for widening Peachtree from Harris Street to Forsyth Street. The citizens' committee went before the Finance Committee Monday afternoon and outlined its request.

Extensive improvements hang on this project. E. W. Alfriend and Mrs. J. B. Whitehead expect to erect a twelve-story office building between Cain and Harris Streets, and another property owner has plans for a five-story structure.

Building on Wesley Avenue.

Wesley Avenue, to the west of Peachtree Road and a few rods north of Peachtree Creek, is beginning to rival Pace's Ferry Road as a situation for country homes. Among the home owners on the thoroughfare are General Clifford L. Anderson, Clark Howell and David Woodward, and now comes J. C. Chipley, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, with announcement that he has started a residence. Mr. Chipley's house will be two stories high and will cost approximately $15,000.

Several other property owners, it is said, will build on Wesley Avenue during the summer.

Warehouse Is Completed.

Colonel John J. Woodside's storage warehouse No. 3, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been replaced with a more complete structure. In a few days the warehouse will be completed and ready to be used again. The building is located on Butler Street and has a great amount of floor space.

Pryor Street Building Finished.

The building at 96 South Pryor Street, built for Harry G. Poole, the undertaker, has been completed and is now occupied by the concern. This structure cost approximately $25,000 and is one of the handsomest of the smaller buildings on Pryor Street.

St. Charles Cottage Bought.

Mrs. Willie Mae Levi has bought from W. H. Craig, through the Ralph O. Cochran Company, a six-room cottage at 174 St. Charles Avenue, 60 by 190, for a price not named. This property is between Ponce DeLeon Place and Bonaventure Avenue.

Building on Ponce DeLeon.

People traveling out Ponce DeLeon Avenue of late have been impressed with the great amount of building that is being done on that thoroughfare and on tributary streets. In the neighborhood of Ponce DeLeon and Barnett Street and Bonaventure Avenue, for instance, twelve or fifteen new houses are either building or recently completed. It matters not which way you turn, say the realty men, there are more houses in process of erection than ever before in the city's history, with prospects for more in the future than at the present.

Fresh Bit of Acreage.

A 28-acre tract on Pace's Ferry Road that has been in the hands of the present owners for 50 years has been placed on the market at $13,500. This is between "Woodlawn," Robert F. Maddox's estate, and the Howell Mill Road. It has been listed with a well-known real estate agency, and has been suggested for subdivision.

A Merchant Marine Becomes a Vital Necessity

Congress is Alone to Blame for the Neglect to Build Up a Great, Powerful, Progressive and Prosperous American Merchant Marine in Foreign Trade.

The lack of American merchant ships for the ordinary needs of our Government has been strikingly impressed upon the attention of the new Administration.

Recent developments made it necessary for the Government to secure possession of a considerable number of American merchantmen. They were needed as a precautionary measure, to insure preparedness against any sudden eventuality in which foreign ships could not be used.

THE PITIFULLY SMALL SUPPLY OF SUCH AMERICAN VESSELS BOTH ASTOUNDED AND ALARMED THE GOVERNMENT. Most of the few American vessels that are available are old, in many respects inadequate, and scarcely any of these measure up to urgent needs.

Not only are American merchantmen few and inefficient, but it is found that, even if American ships were now available in large numbers, THERE IS NO CORRESPONDING NUMBER OF TRAINED AND EXPERIENCED AMERICAN MASTERS, OFFICERS AND SEAMEN IMMEDIATELY OBTAINABLE.

The possibly grave consequence of our utter dependence upon foreign merchant ships, their officers and men, who would be unavailable for national needs in time of war, is causing the greatest uneasiness and concern.

American merchant ships, their officers and men, are required in times of emergency for scout purposes, for auxiliary cruisers, to carry troops, coal and ammunition supplies, and for a thousand and one needs for which warships would be neither desirable nor available.

These are serious problems for a new Administration so suddenly to face, and their satisfactory solution is difficult, if not impossible, at the moment.

CONGRESS IS ALONE TO BLAME FOR THE NEGLECT TO BUILD UP A GREAT, POWERFUL, PROGRESSIVE AND PROSPEROUS AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE IN FOREIGN TRADE.

THE PUNY PROVISION IN THE PENDING TARIFF BILL to merely make a beginning in the upbuilding of American shipping should be and is likely to be so strengthened and buttressed in the Senate as to lay a broad and solid foundation for the establishment of an effective and enduring American maritime policy.

The little so far provided has provoked the impudent protests of foreign nations that are determined to prevent, if they can, the maritime independence of the United States. The present conditions are far too useful and too profitable for these foreign monopolists to willingly relinquish.

EVERY NATIONAL INSTINCT OF PRESERVATION AND PROSPERITY SHOULD IMPEL CONGRESS TO IMMEDIATE ACTION.

Should steps be taken at once to remedy our intolerable dependence upon foreign merchant shipping, it will take years for the United States to reach a state of efficient preparedness in American merchant ships, officers and men, for either the ordinary or the emergency requirements of our Government and the peaceful transportation of our imports and exports. It is high time to make a beginning.

We have discovered shortcomings in several important particulars in naval equipment. BUT NOTHING HAS SO PROFOUNDLY IMPRESSED THE GOVERNMENT AT THIS TIME AS THE PRESSING NEED OF A GREAT AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE, WISELY REGARDED AND OFFICIALLY STATED BY THOMAS JEFFERSON AS "ESSENTIAL TO THE NATIONAL DEFENSE."

It would indeed be thoughtless and cowardly if, in this crisis in American affairs, the sinister protests of foreign governments against immediate and adequate legislative provision for the upbuilding of American deep sea shipping should receive the slightest consideration.

Are Women as Foolish as Men?

"We were introduced at a restaurant and four days later we were married and the next day he deserted me and ran away with $4,000 worth of my jewelry and money." This is the unvarnished narrative told by a woman who had a man arrested out west the other day.

This same woman would watch the iceman like a hawk, for fear he would give her only eight cents worth of ice instead of the ten cents worth she paid for. She would inspect her grocery and butcher bill, and the laundress does not wash who could get a penny ahead of her at the Monday suds festival. She submits her agent's reports as to rents or investments to the family lawyer, and she even keeps a shrewd and questioning eye on the lawyer himself.

But she meets a man in a restaurant, hearkens to his story that he is the temporarily embarrassed heir to a million or two, and hands herself and her fortune over to him without as much care as she bestows on the inspection of the chicken she buys for the family dinner.

Ordinarily the victim of the sort of sharper who despoiled the woman quoted above is not an ignorant, unsophisticated girl; on the contrary, she is commonly a mature woman, and not infrequently one who has had one or two whirls at the matrimonial lottery.

When we shake our heads at the credulity of such women we should not ascribe their misfortune to the feminine type of mind.

Remember, when you feel how superior men are to that sort of deception, that the gold-brick swindle and the green goods game, the Spanish prisoner trap and wire-tapping delusion continue year after year to earn fortunes for the rogues who have the hardihood to perpetrate them.

There are lots of foolish women in the world—almost as many as foolish men.

A Little Flattery Will Make a Man Do Anything

What Do You Like to Read About?

By WINIFRED BLACK.

"WHAT do you like to read about?" said the Man to me.

I stared. "I mean," said the Man, "what sort of folks—people in castles, with retainers and 'heirs' birthdays,' or people on yachts, with butlers and valets, or people out West, with Sheriffs and bad men dropping in to supper, and the wind blowing in from the desert and the coyotes yelping on the great red mountains in the dusky distance?"

"Oh," said I, "I don't like any of those people. I like folks—just plain folks. No, not 'folksy folks' with dialects—the women, with shawls on their heads that run in and gossip all about 'What made Maria stay an old maid so long?' and 'Who's goin' to git Mirandy, now Si's gone?' bore me to tears; and I can't bear the fair young schoolma'am who goes out West and makes the biggest boy fall in love with her, and then they go back home to visit, and he shocks the whole village by saying 'Darn it!' and wearing a red cowboy handkerchief instead of a collar.

Maids Don't Worry Me.

"I like to read about the sort of people I know myself, every day in the week—the woman with the fussy husband; the woman with the boy she hopes will be a genius, and he turns out to be just a lazy dreamer; the woman with the little girl who won't take music lessons, no matter how she tries to make her; the man with the business down-town, and the rival over the way trying to take it away from him; the girl on the stage who plays real parts and gets real criticisms; the newspaper man who doesn't beat the town the very first time he goes out on a story; the people who have comfy homes and a decent picture or two, and a lot of good books and some dogs, and either children or the hope of children.

"No, I don't care for butlers in mine, though if the butler belongs in the story I don't mind him at all; I only hate to have him dragged in by the heels to prove that the man who employs him really is no end of a swell.

"Valets? Yes, a valet is all right, if he isn't insisted on. Lots of fairly every-day men have valets—actors and musicians and other helpless creatures.

"Maids don't worry me—nor chauffeurs—as long as they stay discreetly in the background, but I must say secretaries and nursery governesses and under-gardeners and special trains and too many yachts do disconcert me a little. I always have to stop and add up what it would cost to have an establishment like that, and that interferes with the plot.

"No, I hate the Dickey and the Algy story, with the 'little gell in white' and her managing mama. I never can quite believe there are such helpless geese in the world as that little gell, and if I knew anyone like the 'managing mama' I'd have her locked up on a charge of disturbing the peace.

"Yes, it's folks I like—everyday folks—plain Americans, with plain American troubles and plain American joys, like buying a machine after you've saved for it for a year; and Daughter's graduating essay; and Son's first love affair.

The Chocolate-Cream Age.

"That's why I always choose a woman's stories, all other things being equal, I guess."

"The man looked at me more in sorrow than in anger. "Are all women like you?" he said. "I don't believe it. I believe they like to read about ropes of pearls and strings of emeralds and cables of real coral—and gowns of filmy lace—or a——"

"That's the chocolate-cream age," I said. "They do, of course. That's because they are always hoping they'll be one of those heroines themselves some day, and they want to have the fun of planning their filmy gowns and thinking how sweet they'll look in the ropes and chains and things. When the woman is past wanting to read about people like herself, it heals her to realize that she isn't the only human being who has trouble keeping the expense accounts within scolding limits. What do you like to read about, Mr. Man?"

The man took a long pull on his pipe. "I like to read about damsels fair, and shady bowers, and nodding violets, and dashing cavaliers," he said, "and noble heroes, and soldiers of fortune—and quests, and all that. If anyone dares to hand me a book about 'How I Made My Money' or 'What I Did to Down the Lemon Trust' I'll make him wish he'd committed suicide that time he almost wanted to."

And then we both began to reconsider and talk it over, and we both decided that we really don't care so much about who the hero of the story was. The main thing is, who wrote it?

There's Bret Harte. He could take a bank clerk and cast such a sparkling veil of romance about him that his every pen flourish would mean sentiment. And as for the common little red-haired person he fell in love with—why, she'd be a wood nymph, a fairy, a siren from the cool green sea, even if she lived in a hall bedroom and ate 'weenies' and chocolate for supper.

Cable! Do you ever hunt up Cable's houses down in New Orleans? Dirty old tumble-down places, seen with everyday eyes. Look through the magic glasses of Cable, and you're in Elysia, the land of fair women and brave men. There's even something romantic about a piece of candied lemon peel when the right sort of man tells about it.

It Isn't the Subject.

No, it isn't the subject; it's the way it is handled, after all, we agreed, the man and I. There's so and so, the special writer on the Daily Enterprise. He'd write about a fire in a boiler factory, and make you hold your breath to find out whether the Maltese cat got out alive or not. And there's his brother on the Daily Scream, would tell the story of a plot to assassinate every beautiful woman in America, and keep you yawning all the way through. It isn't the story; it isn't the people in the story—it's the writer that matters.

"But still," said I to the Man, "all things being equal, I want folks in my stories—folks that I know."

"Gossip," said the man. And we both went and got our own particular kind of book and settled down to our own particular kind of evening, and were perfectly satisfied. What fun it is to talk these things over once in a while! Isn't it?

Awake at Last to Navy's Needs

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES.

COL. GRAVES.

THERE are substantial evidences of a reviving patriotism and common sense in the American Congress toward the American navy.

When Secretary Daniels was banqueted week before last in Savannah one of the speakers was Congressman Edwards, of the Savannah district. Mr. Edwards has been heretofore apathetic, if not openly antagonistic, to the ample navy program. On this latest occasion he said that, however indifferent and economic his views had been toward the navy, the recent international interchanges with Japan had opened his eyes and fixed him definitely and firmly as an advocate and champion of a greater navy.

Others Changed.

"Henceforth," said Mr. Edwards, "if the naval experts of the Government advise Congress that we need three battleships, or four battleships, or even five, I am for the navy and whatever it needs to defend our country. The anxieties aroused by our unpreparedness against Japan must never be repeated in America."

Savannah is one of the ultra-conservative cities of the South, and Congressman Edwards is notably conservative, cautious and economical. His complete conversion is in the highest degree significant of the awakening of Congress.

It is even so with Congressman Poor, of the Raleigh District of North Carolina, Secretary Daniels' district.

Mr. Poor has also been among the conservatives on the naval program of the House. The Japanese contention and the developments of our naval unpreparedness, as exposed by the Hearst newspapers, have aroused the North Carolinan to the perils of an undefended country and the necessity for a navy ample for our Western and Eastern Coasts. He is openly and heartily for the ample navy.

On the lips of scores of anti-navy Congressmen there are expressions similar to these. It is actually true that the naval information and comparisons developed by the recent international controversy have changed the spirit of the national Congress on this vital question of the national defense.

The American Congress and the American people have slept for years upon the idea that our "splendid isolation" protected our country, and that in case of war our navy and army were equal to every demand of defense and offense. Congress and some of the people have had the same feeling toward foreign nations that the South had toward the North preceding the Civil War. "One Southerner can whip a dozen Yankees," said some.

One Southern statesman declared in a public speech, "Why, we can whip the Yankees with popguns!" Challenged upon this assertion after the war was over, the orator responded: "Well, so we could, but the d—d fellows wouldn't fight that way!"

Awake at Last.

Our country has waked up at last to the fact that it is not immune from war, that it is not invincible in war, that it is not prepared for war.

The awakening will do us good. It is worth this flurry with Japan to have educated the American people and their representatives to an understanding of our real condition and of our national dangers.

I feel that the Hearst newspapers have performed a signal and patriotic service in helping to this national understanding. These newspapers can be indifferent to any criticism of sensationalism in the consciousness that more than any other American newspapers they have taught the people something about their navy.

Public opinion is coming to stand for the idea that preparedness in war is the best promoter of peace. The long centuries of exemption from attack that England's great navy has bought for England is teaching our people that they have a right to expect from their representatives just such an insurance policy against war.

Gatling Philosophy.

The treason of Congress against the Navy is not likely to be repeated in this generation.

The policy of national preparedness also pervades our national officials—always excepting Mr. Bryan, whose "doves" and "swans" and "flowers of rhetoric" delight the Chautauquas.

Secretary Daniels said to Mr. Gatling, of the Gatling gun: "Are you not conscience smitten over your invention? Do not your guns keep you from sleeping because of the people they have destroyed and may destroy?"

To which Mr. Gatling answered:

"My guns have saved more lives than they have ever destroyed. The existence of them and the knowledge of their destructiveness keep nations from war and mobs from bloody riots. The Gatling gun is a peace-maker."

And Secretary Daniels, of the Navy, is tremendously impressed just now with the Gatling philosophy.

Perhaps we shall have national cause to thank Japan and the Hearst newspapers!

How Opening of the Panama Canal Will Aid Historical Research

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

AFTER the Panama Canal is opened we may begin to learn the true history of Ancient America.

Many readers may be unaware that this new world, as we call it, contains one of the oldest of all historical mysteries, and, in fact the very oldest if as some maintain, it forms a direct connection with the story of the lost continent of Atlantis.

Buried in the tropical jungles of Central America there are the ruins of once splendid cities, whose remains of a gigantic architecture are covered with hieroglyphics more puzzling than those of ancient Egypt, for no man has yet succeeded in discovering a complete key to their meaning. They guard their secret more jealously than the Sphinx.

Ruins of Temples.

Their origin is ascribed to a practically vanished race called the Mayas, related to the Aztec of Montezuma's Empire, but far excelling the ancient Mexicans in everything except warlike power. The ruins of their temples at Palenque, Copan, Peten and elsewhere, excite the wonder of the traveler, and contain some of the most beautiful and elaborate carving that can anywhere be found.

They had not only an exquisite picture language, but also a written language, of which undecipherable manuscripts yet exist.

They built about forty towns, connected by stone-paved roads. They had a postal system, conducted by means of swift-footed carriers who ran from town to town over the paved roadways. Sometimes they were at war with one another, and then armies marched to battle on the same roads.

They were skillful agriculturists, and cultivated broad fields, which are now overgrown with mossy trees and tangled vines and shrubs. They raised cotton and wove it into garments.

They made beautiful ornaments of gold and semi-precious stones, and were more skillful even than the Aztecs in feather work.

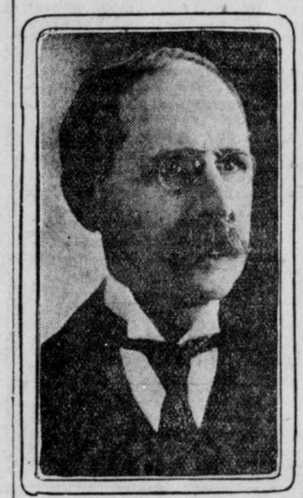
The designs carved on their buildings and ornamental, or symbolic, structures are of great beauty and astonishing perfection in detail. They covered the walls of rooms with brilliant paintings on stucco.

They Have Vanished.

Strange to say, the people believed to be descended from these Mayas are unable to throw any light upon the history of their supposed ancestors.

All their civilization has vanished, and with it, apparently, all memory of the ancient splendors of the race.

Some of the figures carved by the Mayas bear such striking resemblance to similar things found in the ancient ruins of the Old



GARRETT P. SERVISS.

World that the suggestion has been made that a connection formerly existed across the Atlantic Ocean, and this is the origin of the theory that the ancestors of the Mayas dwelt on the fabled continent of Atlantis, which Plato heard had been sunk in the western ocean ages before his time.

One of the strangest facts about the ancient land of the Mayas has recently been called to attention by Dr. Ellsworth Huntington. It is this: At present the whole district possesses a climate so warm, moist and debilitating that it is almost the worst place on the globe for human habitation.

The ruins of the ancient cities, instead of lying amid deserts, and under a burning sun, as happens with most of the abandoned capitals of the East, are so overgrown with tangled vegetation and enveloped in feverstricken swamps that some of them are nearly unapproachable.

The conclusion is that within the past two thousand years, a vast change of climate has occurred in that part of America, and that in the days of Mayan civilization the earth's climatic zones were shifted in such a manner that the land occupied by this remarkable people enjoyed very different atmospheric conditions from those that prevail there now.

Peten, one of their most important cities, which has not yet been well explored on account of the difficulties of approach, lies in the midst of a region which is, at present, very sparsely peopled, and where it would be impossible to cultivate the land as it was cultivated in the days of the Mayas.

May Be Read in Full.

Only by such a supposition, it is thought, can a rational explanation be found for the fact that the highest native civilization that this continent had developed before the white man came, was centered about a location which is now a deadened and almost uninhabitable wilderness.

When the Panama Canal has become a great highway, and the attention of the world has been turned upon its surroundings, fresh light is likely to be thrown upon this fascinating mystery.

Then the Mayan hieroglyphics may be read in full, and a hidden chapter of American history thrown open.

MR. BRYAN'S TOAST

Editor The Georgian:

You devote much of your space to Mr. Bryan. Will you please reproduce a portion of his toast at the Army and Navy Club, given at the farewell banquet to the Commissioners from Great Britain and Canada? Here it is:

Mr. Chairman: I have delivered three addresses of welcome to our visitors, but will have but one word of farewell, and that is in keeping with the environment which surrounds us this morning. We are met in the building of the Army and Navy Club, and the fact that we are the guests of those who represent those two arms of the Government suggests the thought which I present in bidding you adieu. While we are the advocates of peace, we are really engaged in the construction of a battleship which is to be the very culmination—the climax—of the seaman's art. Man has been engaged in the construction of water craft since the flapping sail first whispered its secret of strength to the voyager. He has designed vessels for pleasure, for commerce and for war. We have had the galley, the viking's ship, the frigate, the ironclad and the dreadnought. But no limit can be placed to the ambitions of man as a builder, and I ask you to join me in proposing a toast to a ship more potent than any which man has thus far employed in war—a ship with whose coming man's highest hopes will be realized, for there is nothing beyond.

Here's to the greatest of ships. Its compass is the human heart. Its sheils are bursting with good-will. Love is the smokeless powder that impels the projectiles which it sends forth. The Prince of Peace is its Captain. I propose as the consummation of our desire the enduring, the indestructible battleship, whose armor nothing can pierce—FRIENDSHIP.
