MOTHER AND GIRL DEAD IN FIRE; SON IS HUNTED

Sheriff Sees Slaying Mystery in Burning of Farm House Near Atlanta—Finds Evidence.

That the mother and girl whose charred remains were found in the ruins of their home seven miles southeast of Atlanta early Wednesday morning were murdered and the house set afire by the murderer in an effort to obliterate all evidence of the deed was the astounding declaration made by Sheriff J. A. McCurdy after an investigation of the tragedy.

Positive identifications of the two women as Mrs. S. C. Stevens, 40 years old, wife of William Stevens, a 70-year-old Confederate veteran now in Chattanooga at the reunion, and their adopted daughter, Nellie Stevens, 13 years old, were made by neighbors

Conditions leading up to the theory that the deaths were the result of murder are these:

The charred bodies of the women were found lying in the center of a bed room in the rear of the cottage. Near at hand were the remains of a shotgun.

Mrs. Stevens' skull had been crushed in. A hoe found in what had been the hallway leading from the room is believed to have been the instrument used to strike the woman as she arose from her bed, with the shotgun, to meet the intruder.

That the door of the room was open at the time of the encounter is believed to add another link to prove the affair a murder.

The method in which the daughter met her death could not be ascertained, owing to the charred condition of her body.

Son Quarreled With Mother.

Inquiry among the neighbors developed the fact that Wade Stevens, the 16-year-old son, who disappeared from his home Tuesday afternoon, had quarreled with his mother and sister.

Mrs. L. G. Self, who lives a short distance from the Stevens home, told Sheriff McCurdy that the boy had a tilt with his parent because she would not permit him to come to Atlanta during the absence of his father.

Mrs. Self stated that Nellis Stevens had appeared at her home with a package of Wade's clothing, which she asked Mrs. Self to keep that night to prevent the boy from disobeying his mother and leaving the house.

This statement, coupled with others, to the effect that Wade Stevens had on numerous occasions acted in an infractious manner—at one time snatching $65 from his mother's hand and running away—have led Sheriff McCurdy to start a hunt for him in order that he may be questioned in connection with the murder.

The house was burned during the night. Its ruins were first discovered at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning by J. A. Nelms, who was passing the scene in a milk wagon. Nelms, after viewing the smoking embers of the building, summoned J. L. Cowan, a neighbor, and notified the county police.

When Sheriff McCurdy arrived on the scene the remains of the two women already had been found by Nelms and Cowan. Mrs. Stevens was identified by her false teeth.

When the bodies had been taken out of the ruins they were examined. Mrs. Stevens' skull was seen to have been crushed in.

It was this fact that first led the authorities to suspect foul play. Careful examination of the surrounding embers in the place where the bodies were found brough to light a shotgun barrel, the stock and woodwork of which had been burned off.

The weapon was seen to have been close to the positions where the bodies were discovered.

That the women had left their beds before they met their deaths was another conclusion drawn by Sheriff McCurdy. The bodies lay in the center of the floor while the iron frames of the beds were over in a corner of the room.

The door to the room was open. Its half demolished frame still stands in the ruins. Just outside the door the hoe was found.

Sheriff McCurdy's theory is that the murderer fled through the door, casting the hoe with which he had slain the women in the hall. That the plan to set fire to the house and

CONLEY SAYS FRANK TOOK HIM TO PLANT ON DAY OF SLAYING

Negro Sweeper in New Affidavit Denies His Former Testimony and Makes Startling Assertions; Now Declares He Wrote Notes Saturday.

James Conley, negro sweeper, in an affidavit made Wednesday, said that he was lying when he said he went to the National Pencil Factory on Friday. He said that he made the statement that it was Friday when Frank (as he says) told him to write the death notes, because he was afraid he would be accused of the murder of Mary Phagan if he told the truth.

He said he felt that if he said he was there Saturday the police would connect him with the murder. Conley said he got up between 9 and 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning, he knew the time because he looked at the clock on the Atlanta University from his front door. He returned indoors and had breakfast.

He got three silver dollars from his wife to exchange for paper money so that she would not lose it. He continued:

"I told my wife I was going to Peters Street. I went toPeters Street and stopped at a beer saloon at Peters and Haynes Streets. I bought two beers in there, drank one myself and gave another to a man named Bob. I stayed in the barroom three or four minutes and then walked back to the pool table and shot dice with four men. One of them was named Joe Bobs and one Bob Williams. I won 90 cents.

Drank Some Whisky.

"I don't know how long we had been shooting, but I think it was about fifteen minutes. I left there then and went to Erler saloon on Peters Street. I bought a glass of beer there. I walked back to the rear of the place, rolled a cigarette, came back and bought a half pint of whisky. I drank part of the whisky. I started from there to the Capital City Laundry to see my mother.

"I met Mr. Frank at the corner of Forsyth and Nelson Streets. He stopped me and asked me where I was going. I told him I was going to the Capital City Laundry to see my mother. He said, 'Wait 'til I come back.'

"He said he was going to see Mr. Montague. He was gone about 20 minutes. He came back and told me to come to the factory, that he wanted to see me. I went with him, walking behind him. He stopped at the Curtis drug store at Mitchell and Forsyth and got a drink. I waited for him outside. Frank had a bundle in his hand.

"After we got to the factory he put the bundle in the trash barrel right near the steps. He put a box there for me to sit on and other boxes back further in the factory. He told me to sit there until he whistled. He told me not to let Darley see me.

Tells of Seeing Darley.

"Along came a woman down stairs, Miss Mattie, I think her name was. She had on a dark suit and a raincoat. She carried a parasol. (This was Miss Mattie Smith). Then Darley came down stairs. He wore a grey suit and had no hat. He stopped Miss Mattie at the front door. She was wiping her eyes like she was crying. I heard him say, 'Don't worry, I will see that you get that next week.'

"She went out and he went back up the steps. In a few minutes he came back down and left. Then came Holloway down stairs about five minutes after Darley left. Holloway stood on the sidewalk five or six minutes and then came back.

"Then a negro drove up to the factory in a wagon. He went upstairs. He had some bills in his hand. Holloway came back with the negro, who was pegleg. The negro drove away and Holloway went back upstairs.

Oil Flows to Blacksmith Forge; Town In Ruins; 3 Dead

TULSA, OKLA., May 28.—Four hundred gallons of gasoline from an overturned tank trickled down the main street of Kiefer late yesterday.

Forty feet away a tiny stream ran into the village blacksmith shop and the gasoline touched the red hot coals of the smith's forge.

There was a series of low rumbling explosions, a blinding flash of flame and on the ground lay eight persons, badly burned.

An hour later the building and yards of a lumber company and six homes were in ruins.

Three of the injured men died in Tulsa last night.

CITY LOSES IN CREMATORY SUIT

The Supreme Court of Georgia this afternoon handed down a decision, ruling against the city in the fight over the $276,000 crematory, work on which has started.

The appeal to the highest tribunal followed a long battle on the contract by Mayor Woodward, and is a distinct victory for the city executive.

The Supreme Court held that one council can not bind a future council. The ruling is a blow at contracts made on "the good faith" of the city.

Office Building Owners Organize

A number of the owners and managers of Atlanta office buildings and apartment houses Tuesday afternoon organized the Association of Building Owners and Managers of Atlanta. Nearly all the buildings of these types in the city are represented in the membership.

The Atlanta Convention Bureau was the promoter of the new organization, and the first official act of the association will be to send a delegation to the annual convention of the National Association of Building Owners and Managers at Cincinnati in June and try to pull the next 1914 convention to Atlanta.

On the committee on constitution and by-laws are J. R. Pendleton, chairman, and J. M. Barclay.

A committee on membership was appointed, J. M. Shearer, chairman; W. B. Stovall and J. L. Fincher.

POLICE EXPECT NEGRO CONLEY TO CONFESS

"In a few minutes he came down and left the building for good. Then came another lady. She works on the fourth floor for Arthur White. She was upstairs six or seven minutes. Then she came back down with her money. She stood by me and tore open the envelope and counted the money. Then she left the building and for about fifteen minutes there was no one passing me.

Heard Frank Whistle.

"I sat down on the box and put my head against the trash barrel and stretched my feet out with my hat in my lap. I don't know whether I went to sleep or not. The next thing I knew I heard Frank's whistle twice, just like this (imitating whistle). I went upstairs. The double doors were closed. Frank was standing at the top of the steps. He said, 'I see you heard me, all right,' and I said 'Yes.'

"Frank grabbed me by the arm very tight and his hand was trembling. It was just like he was walking down the street with a lady. He carried me through the first office into his private office, came back and shut the door into the outer office. Then he came back to where I was. He didn't say anything but grabbed up a box of sulphur matches and went into the outer office. When he came back he pulled out a round chair.

"He brought the chair for me to sit in. Then he closed the door and asked me to address a letter 'Dear Brother.' Then he asked me to write some things for him. I don't remember all of it, but I remember one of them was this: 'That long tall black negro did it by hisself.' I wrote these things at his dictation. Then Mr. Frank patted me on the back and said that I was a good boy. Then he handed me a box of cigarettes and I took them."

Vital Evidence Kept Secret.

From this point the negro's statement was similar to the affidavit published a few days ago. The negro said that he left the factory between five and ten minutes after 1 o'clock, went back to Peters Street and then went home.

Chief Lanford read the above which he said was about half of the affidavit. The chief said that he had only given out the unimportant details, leaving it to be inferred that Conley had given vital evidence.

Harry Scott intimated that the negro's affidavit Wednesday morning had practically cleared the mystery and was the most important bit of evidence in the hands of the State.

At 2:45 o'clock the negro was taken into the chief's office for another sweating.

Admission that he was in the National Pencil factory on the day of the murder of Mary Phagan was gained from Conley, after cross-examination by detectives at police headquarters.

The negro, who became the center of attention with his amazing story that Leo Frank had told him to write the death notes, changed his narrative again to-day. Confronted by E. F. Holloway, a foreman in the plant, he admitted having been in the factory after having steadily maintained that he was on Peters Street between 10 and 2 o'clock that fatal Saturday and at home all other hours of the day.

Says Confession Is Near.

Holloway, after leaving the secret grilling at which the admission was obtained, declared he was sure it was only a matter of hours before Conley would confess. He asserted that if he had been allowed to put questions to Conley he could have gotten important information.

The police questions were, of course, all put with the idea of gaining information against Frank.

Chief Lanford had announced that he would go before Judge Roan with a request for an order allowing him to confront Frank with the negro, so that Conley's statement would be admissible in court. Lanford, however, failed to carry out his plans, although he would not admit they had been abandoned.

Later Chief Beavers said that the plan to confront Frank with Conley would not be carried out to-day and that its wisdom was doubtful, as, of course, Frank could not be compelled to answer any questions.

Refuse to Admit Suspicion.

The police refused to admit that suspicion was turning or should be turned to Conley, who has told one falsehood after another since his arrest. They tried resolutely to construe every one of his statements as against Frank and would not admit that the continued contradictions of the negro made his value as a witness next to nothing.

The police declared that Conley had been asked to write the contents of the death notes and had spelled night watch" as it was in the note, "night witch," and "self" with the "I" and "e" transposed as in the notes. What all this shows, in view of the fact that the same officials had announced that they had conclusive evidence by "experts" and that Frank wrote the notes, is not plain.

Conley was also confronted by General Foreman N. V. Darley in the presence of Detectives Black, Scott and Lanford and the negro made important admissions that will no doubt force him to admit his guilt.

Conley admitted that he sat at the elevator shaft on the first floor at 12:30 on the afternoon of the murder and saw Darley in company with Miss Smith descend the stairs. Conley described Miss Smith as wearing a raincoat and Darley with his coat on with no hat. Darley stated that both descriptions were absolutely correct in every particular. Strange to say, neither Darley nor Miss Smith saw the negro, for he was seated in the shadow of the steps and never made a sound.

Conley said that after Darley came down stairs with Miss Smith he walked to the door with her and then returned and ascended the stairs. This Darley says is true.

Shortly after this Mrs. Albert White went into the factory to see her husband and get some money to buy a dress. Her husband, Albert White, was at work on the fourth floor with the assistant foreman and machinist, Harry Denham. Mrs. White says that she saw a negro who sat immovable at the foot of the elevator shaft as she entered the factory. She could not identify him because of the indistinct light. But as Conley admitted he was there five minutes before it is reasonable to believe that it was Conley that Mrs. White passed.

According to the statement of E. F. Holloway Conley had no business in the factory on the day of the murder, which was a holiday. Holloway says that the negro denied being there when questioned by him. Now Conley admits that he was there.

Holloway believes that had not Darley escorted Miss Mattie Smith down stairs that she and not Mary Phagan would have been the victim.

WILSON OPPOSES CURRENCY FRILLS

President Reported to Have Told House Leaders to Use Common Sense.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—President Wilson has confided to House leaders, according to information obtained to-day, that he wants currency reform legislation next month conducted along common sense lines. He believes too much expert opinion will tend to becloud fundamental questions.

Prominent New York City bankers are said to have approved the essentials of a draft of the bill, although not being willing to accept all the details.

The President, it is stated, will be satisfied if they agree on the main features.

Only two members of the Cabinet, Bryan and McAdoo, have been consulted, according to reliable information. The former is said to have contributed several valuable ideas to the bill on the issuance of notes by reserve associations.

Conner Begs for Additional Funds

J. J. Conner, State Commissioner of Agriculture, in his annual report to Governor Brown, declares better facilities in his department are imperative. He said the annual appropriation to the department was fixed by the Legislature of 1874 at $10,000, and that the growth of the department demands that this amount be supplemented by $5,000.

"In operating the law with respect to the inspection of gasoline, benzine, naphtha and other products of petroleum I find that some hardships are worked on certain classes of industries in the State," he said. "I recommend that merely nominal fees be collected for the inspection of these products where they are used only for manufacturing purposes.

"During my service I have felt very much cramped in getting out department bulletins and publications."

He commends the work of the State food inspector and suggests that the office of an assistant be created.

He recommends that the salary of the State oil inspector be increased from $1,200 to $2,000 a year.

He urges that the next Legislature add at least $30,000 to the veterinary department to combat cholera among hogs and tuberculosis among cattle.

Woman Badly Hurt By Fighting Cats

GADSDEN, ALA., May 28.—When Mrs. J. A. Bacon, 50 years old, attempted to separate two house cats that were fighting on the back porch of her home, both attacked her, inflicting more than 100 wounds on her throat, chest and arms. Her husband and daughter fought ten minutes before they subdued the cats.

Some of the wounds on Mrs. Bacon's throat are half an inch deep. A physician spent four hours sewing up the gashes.

Only Italy Leads U. S. In Aviators' Deaths

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The United States has more accidental deaths among Government aviators than any other nation, save Italy, official figures show.

England is third and France fourth. It is pointed out, however, that American aviators average nearly twice the number of hours and miles covered.

ODD FELLOWS OF STATE IN SESSION

Establishment of Fraternity Home Question Before Savannah Grand Lodge Meeting.

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Georgia met in annual convention in Savannah to-day, when Mayor Richard J. Davant delivered the address of welcome for the city, and Thomas Hoynes, deputy grand master, for the Savannah lodges. Response was made by Grand Master W. S. Coleman, of Cedartown. Following the public exercises the Grand Lodge went into executive session.

Simultaneously the Daughters of Rebekah, the woman's auxiliary of the Odd Fellows, met in grand assembly at Odd Fellows' Hall. A good deal of politics is to come up during the sessions of the assembly. It is rumored that there is to be a fight for grand warden, for which Mrs. R. J. Winters, of Atlanta, is a candidate.

Whether or not Georgia is to have an Odd Fellows' home is one of the questions to be decided by the Grand Lodge. At the Gainesville meeting last year a committee was appointed to investigate and report at this meeting. Under the present arrangement the Odd Fellows have a pension plan, but it is said that this is not satisfactory.

There are 2,500 Odd Fellows and 300 Rebekahs present.

Mr. Belmont will urge the Senate leaders to call Mr. McAdoo and ask for the benefit of his opinion.

BODIES OF TWO WOMEN FOUND IN FIRE RUINS

burn the bodies to hide the crime came as a second thought.

The house was about 50 yards from the road in a clump of trees. It is in a lonely spot and the nearest neighbor is beyond earshot. That the screams of the women would not have been heard is safe to conclude.

Girl's Skull Crushed.

Another development that tends to show murder, came with the discovery that the skull of Nellie Stevens had been fractured, also. A sharp crack across the top of the head showed possibility that a knifelike weapon had been used, striking with such force as to cleave the bone.

The positions of the bodies in the ruins tend to bear this theory out—that the murderer had struck the girl with his hoe after crushing Mrs. Stevens' skull.

Mrs. Stevens' skull, it was shown, was crushed in by a blow directed at her from in front. Her body was found just three feet from the doorway. Directly behind this lay the body of Nellie Stevens.

It is thought that Mrs. Stevens, when she took up the shotgun and started toward the door at the sound of the intruder, was followed by her daughter. When the older woman opened the door, Nellie was directly behind her. The murderer, then, if he stood just without the doorway, with hoe in hand, struck Mrs. Stevens first. With a second blow he felled the girl behind her.

Open Knife Under Girl's Body.

The gun barrel was found close to the bodies of the women and the hoe was found out in the hallway. An open knife was found under the girl's body.

That the door was open at the time the women met their deaths was established by the fact that the doorknob was discovered in the ashes inside the room. The door opened on the inside and, therefore, the knob would have fallen in the room if the door had been opened.

The testimony of Nelms, the milk wagon driver, who was first on the scene, is considered of great importance in describing the positions of the bodies and the weapons found. Nelms Wednesday morning, in telling of the tragedy, said:

"When I saw the smoking embers of the building, as I was driving by, I hastened up. At first I did not suspect that anybody was dead.

Finds Two Bodies.

"I looked about in the ruins, however, and soon discovered through the smoke what looked to be a body. I walked through the ashes to the spot, and sure enough there was a human form. I looked about and soon found another form. Both were charred and beyond recognition.

"I didn't wait to look further, but ran over to the next house, about 200 yards away, and got Mr. Cowan and telephoned the police. Cowan and I came back and together we hunted over the ruins until the police came. We found the shotgun, the iron part of the hoe just outside the room, the knife under the girl's body and the doorknob. We didn't touch a thing, though."

With the arrival of Sheriff McCurdy came also Police Chief Beavers and Police Sergeant Whatley, of Atlanta. Mr. Whatley is a brother of Mrs. Stevens.

Boy Had Quarreled.

Mrs. L. G. Self's statement to the police authorities regarding the visit of Nellie Stevens to her home with Wade Stevens' clothing, directed suspicion to the boy.

"Nellie came to my house in the late afternoon," said Mrs. Self. "She carried a bundle of men's clothing with her and asked me to keep the clothes that night. She said that her brother and her mother had had an altercation.

"It seems that Wade wanted to leave home and his mother had objected. From what Nellie said, I understood that hot words had been passed. Nellie said that she had slipped out of the room quietly and bundled Wade's clothes and taken them away in order that the boy could not leave."

Saw Boy in Atlanta.

Charles B. McWilliams, 483 Leggett Avenue, East Atlanta, declared Wednesday afternoon that he had met Wade Stevens and another boy named "Red" Merchant at Five Points at 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

McWilliams said the boys expressed their intention of leaving the city that night—that they were going to catch a W. & A. train and go to Chattanooga and Cincinnati. McWilliams said the boys were dressed in overalls and had no money.

He declared that he accompanied them to the Terminal Station and waited there with them until fifteen minutes before their train was due to leave. Then he left them.

Prowler Routed Two Weeks Ago.

That an attempt was made to burglarize the Stevens home two weeks ago was the statement made by a neighbor to Sheriff McCurdy.

The person said that Mrs. Stevens had told of hearing a noise in the rear of the house one night and that upon going out to investigate it, saw a man jump from the back porch to the ground and run off into the woods.

Mrs. Stevens shot at the retreating form with the same gun which was found near her body in the ruins. Police authorities place much importance in this information as a possible clew to the murderer.

Evidences that a horse had stood for some time Tuesday night about 50 yards from the house were discovered. Hoof prints were found where the animal had kicked up the turf. Also traces of a person's footsteps were discovered nearby, which, from the great distance they were apart, proved that the person was running. These footprints lead from the house towards the woods nearby and are so plain as to be easily followed.

Chief of Police Beavers sent the following telegram to Fred W. Hill, Chief of Police at Chattanooga, carrying word of the tragedy to William Stevens, the husband and father of the murdered women:

"Please locate William Stevens, care U. C. V. Advise him that his house has been destroyed by fire and that his wife and daughter were burned to death. Tell him to return immediately."

'T. R. Averted War With Japan'

Witness Says Fleet Turned Trick

Defense's Mainstay Faces Jail

Colonel Roosevelt and, at top, George Newett, who is being sued for libel; at the bottom, Judge Flannagan, who is presiding

Deposition, Said to Accuse Roosevelt of Being Drunk, Will Be Read to Jury.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 28.—That there was very serious danger of war with Japan during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt and that the Chief Executive met the danger and averted war by sending a fleet around the world was the statement of John Callan O'Laughlin, a Washington correspondent of a Chicago newspaper and a commissioner to the Tokio Exposition, appointed by President Roosevelt.

O'Laughlin was a witness for the Colonel in Roosevelt's $10,000 libel suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.

"Did you seriously mean that there was danger of war with Japan during Roosevelt's administration?" asked Attorney Belden, who was cross-examining O'Laughlin.

"There was very serious danger," replied the witness.

Settled Question "Right."

"Colonel Roosevelt met that danger. "Obviously Japan would not start with a fleet in the Pacific waters. We settled the immigration question right then."

The witness emphasized the word "right."

O'Laughlin was asked by Attorney Belden if he had been an emissary to arrange for the reception of Roosevelt by the Pope and the King of Italy when the Colonel was in Rome. O'Laughlin said he had not.

The jury was sent from the room while the attorneys argued on the admitting of testimony concerning published reports about Colonel Roosevelt's drinking. Attorney Belden said that the defense wished to show that reports that Roosevelt drank were general in 1912.

"Did Not Deny Reports."

"We shall show," he said, "that this defendant heard those reports and that this plaintiff did not deny them. Roosevelt has been the most talked of man in this country, and if reports of his drinking have been so common as we shall show, he could not be damaged in any sum by the publication of such a report in a little country paper.

"The question of Roosevelt's reputation is vital in this case—his reputation in Marquette County, in this country and in the civilized world. In the plaintiff's bill, he asserts that his reputation for sobriety is well known throughout the 48 States of this country, and that his reputation for sobriety was good before the publication of this article by the defendant.

Disclaims Any Malice.

"Mr. Pound is an able lawyer. No lawyer in Michigan has tried more libel suits than he has. He knew that damages could be increased by reason of malice behind the publication. We will show there was no malice.

"In our answer we set up that there was no malice and that publication was made in good faith and that the defendant had been told and believed reports of Roosevelt's drunkenness were true.

"Dr. Abbott recognized the existence of such reports and deemed it worth while to answer them in The Outlook. Therefore, we have a right to show the existence of these reports as showing good faith and absence of malice on the part of this defendant."

"We shall not claim," said Attorney Pound, "any vindictive or punitory damages. We ask only actual damages such as would accrue in the absence of express malice. This is by direction of the plaintiff."

Claim Actual Damages.

"That means," said the court, "only actual damages, which my be 6 cents or $60,000."

"That is correct," said Mr. Pound.

"Then," said Attorney Belden, "in the absence of the demand for a retraction, no damages may be asked by way of punishment. But counsel has already charged malice to this jury and we can not eliminate these impressions from their minds. Therefore, we have a right to show there was no malice and we purpose to offer testimony of men of standing to show this general reputation.

"Precedents are few, for men of Roosevelt's standing and prominence have seldom brought such suits, but we have a somewhat parallel case in that of Dalley vs. Kalamazoo Publishing Company in the Supreme Court."

Cites Parallel Case.

He then cited the case.

"Mr. Belden and ourselves are not very far apart," said Van Benschoten, addressing the court. "Newspapers, however, do not always tell the truth and reports can not be admitted unless it is first shown that Mr. Newett had read the newspaper or heard the report in question. If Mr. Newett takes the stand and swears he had not read or read such reports and believed them to be true, they would become pertinent."

Scores Defense's Stand.

"The result of the contention of Mr. Belden," said Attorney Pound, "would be that a reputation as pure as that of St. Paul could be blasted by a lot of irresponsible gossip mongers. Counsel is not entitled to this testimony, anyhow. He can not mitigate and justify at the same time. The two things are incompatible.

"The presumption of law, as your honor has said, is that the character of every man is all right. No affirmative proof of character is required. The Supreme Court has also held that unless the truth of the published charges is proved the good faith or lack of malice of the published can by no means mitigate actual damages."

Judge Flannagan interrupted to say:

"Counsel will please confine himself to the two questions here at issue, which are:

State's Points at Issue.

"'May defendant introduce evidence of reports and reputation by way of mitigating damages.'"

"I shall so confine myself," said Mr. Pound.

"I shall show your honor the King of England sued a newspaper for libel for claiming that the King was a bigamist because, while prince, he married a daughter of an admiral of the fleet before he married Queen Mary.

"Would it have been a defense to say that defendant knew nothing of the facts, but had heard rumors to that effect? The court held it would not."

At this point Judge Flannagan adjourned court until 2 p. m.

T. R. Coins New Expression.

"Bully, plus," was the new expression coined by Colonel Roosevelt this morning to describe his state of physical well-being, following a long walk along the shores of Lake Superior and a hearty breakfast. He arose early and appeared in excellent spirits when court opened.

John Callan O'Laughlin, Washington correspondent for a Chicago newspaper, the first witness called, devoted the early part of his testimony to answering questions relative to the intimacy of his friendship with the former President.

Prior to the examination of O'Laughlin the counsel for the defense spent three hours going over 200 depositions they expect to present, and discussing the points they hope to bring out in support of the editorial in which Newett stated that Roosevelt "was drunk, not infrequently." Judge Flannagan also announced there will be no session of the court on Memorial Day, but that a full day's work would be done Saturday.

Known Him Many Years.

O'Laughlin testified that he came to know Colonel Roosevelt when the latter was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in 1897; that Roosevelt dissuaded him from enlisting at the time of the Spanish-American War because he (O'Laughlin) "was married and had no money to keep his wife," and that during the seven years Roosevelt was President he saw him morning, noon and night and at the shaving hour. It was Roosevelt's custom, he explained, to receive callers while he was being shaved each morning.

Following the expiration of the Colonel's term as President, the correspondent continued, he met him at Khartoum upon his return to civilization from Africa; accompanied him on the greater part of his Continental tour, and upon his return to the United States met him frequently until the New York campaign in 1910 and the swing around the country in 1912, when he was with the Colonel's campaign party. His testimony regarding Roosevelt's drinking follows:

Denies Seeing Him Drunk.

Q. From that acquaintance what can you say as to whether or not you ever saw him under the influence of liquor? —A. Not only have I never seen him under the influence of liquor, but such a suggestion seems to me silly.

Q. Ever see him drink?—A. I have seen him drink a small stem glass of champagne at dinners. He never drank more than one glass.

Q. What is the Gridiron Club?—A. An organization of newspaper men in Washington, organized to receive distinguished men. It gives two dinners a year.

Q. Are there official dinners in Washington?—A. Four dinners and five receptions given by the president are official.

Q. Is liquor served at these?—A. At the dinners—seldom at the receptions during Mr. Roosevelt's term.

A wordy skirmish between counsel on the two sides in the case, in which Judge Flannagan entered, was caused by an objection to one of Attorney Pound's questions. Judge Flannagan ordered Attorney Pound to beg Attorney Andrews' pardon. The cross-examination of O'Laughlin was by Attorney Belden, chief counsel for Newett.

Main Witness Faces Arrest.

James Martin Miller, depended upon as the chief witness for the defense, will not appear on the stand, it was learned to-day. Instead a deposition by him will be read to the jury.

When it was announced that Miller would testify at the trial that Colonel Roosevelt was intoxicated at a dinner given for former Speaker Cannon, a telegram came to Marquette requesting that Miller be arrested and detained until an officer could arrive from New York, where a charge of grand larceny had been made against him.

It was then announced that Miller's deposition would be read in court, and that Miller would remain at his home in Minot, N. Dak.

WOMAN WRITES IN DEFENSE OF LEO M. FRANK

Mrs. Rebecca Brannon Declares Her Belief in Innocence of Factory Superintendent.

Mrs. Rebecca C. Brannon, 356 Forrest Avenue, a well known Atlanta woman, has written a letter to The Georgian in defense of Leo M. Frank. Mrs. Brannon, in her communication, avows a strong belief in the pencil factory superintendent's innocence, and denounces the hardships which the law has thrust upon him.

In line with its policy to present all sides of the Phagan case, The Georgian herewith prints Mrs. Brannon's letter:

In the name of God, humanity, and justice, I beg the public to suspend judgment in the case of Mr. Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, until he has had a fair trial before a jury of his peers.

I consider Mr. Frank an innocent man. Is it because he is a Jew that the negro's word is taken as gospel truth, and reflection cast on his testimony? From the first, pap seemed to be put in Newt Lee's mouth, as well as that of Conley, to make them say or hint that Mr. Frank was suspected by them of committing the crime.

Calls It Persecution.

What negro, with dread of lynching or summary justice being meted out to him, would not swear to a lie, and put the crime on another if he could thereby escape the consequences of his crime? And even so late as Saturday the negro Conley admitted he wrote the notes found beside the murdered girl, as he said, at the suggestion of Mr. Frank.

Is it not inconceivable to think that an astute man, planning with finesse, to kill a little girl who might possibly call for her pay envelope the following day, would take into his confidence the sweeper Conley, and have him write what he contemplated putting in a note he intended to lay before her mutilated body, when he shall have murdered her the next day, and exclaiming, "There is no reason why I should hang for it!"

Oh, no! Gentlemen, this is entirely too unlikely a thing for a man of his astuteness and caliber to have done or said. There has been some colossal blunder on the part of the city detectives in rounding up the quarry.

It looks very like persecuting this man simply because he is a Jew. I like to see fair play and justice. This is the first time a Jew has ever been in any serious trouble in Atlanta, and see how ready is every one to believe the worst of him.

In the first place, Mr. Frank, in his deposition, told the hour he reached his home for dinner and supper, was seen by a number of reputable people assembled at his home that evening. He had on the same business suit he had on at his office that day and which he wore at the Coroner's inquest. If he had murdered the girl he must have had some scratches or blood marks on his person, as it was said at the time Mary Phagan had struggled with her assailant.

Cites Weak Link.

One very weak link in the State's chain of evidence is the fact that Newt Lee testified that he made a complete round of the building every half hour, yet he failed to notice the bloodstains on the floor of the metal room in making all those rounds, and then strangely went down the trap door to the basement at 3:30 on a flimsy excuse—flimsy, I say, because no one being there to prevent it, if he really wanted to go to the toilet he surely would have used the one on the upper floor in preference to going down the trap door at 3:30 to the basement closet, and in a dimly lighted place, in which he could scarcely see his hand before his face, and at an angle that the detectives at first said they could not see how he made the discovery of the body. He claimed to have made the find.

Another thing the detectives said was that blood was still flowing from the body when they first discovered it—rigor mortis had not taken place, two facts that in my mind are irrefutable proofs that that girl was not murdered at 12 m., at 4 or at 6 o'clock in the evening, which would have been the case if Mr. Frank had murdered the little girl any time between 12 m. and 6 p. m.

I do not know Mr. Frank, but that he is a Jew he holds my especial interest and esteem, for the Jews are good, law-abiding people.

Calls Frank Innocent.

He must be a leader among his people, as he is the president of the B'nai Brith Association of Atlanta. This society is the highest Jewish organization in the world, and you can not persuade me to believe that such a splendid lot of level headed men as the Jews of Atlanta would select a moral degenerate to head their organization.

I believe Mr. Frank innocent and confidently look for his complete vindication when tried by an impartial jury of his countrymen, when the mesh of lies shall have been swept away, that at present shroud the case. Meanwhile, all my sympathies are with him.

A class of nineteen girls will be graduated from Miss Hanna's School at 8:30 Wednesday night. The members of the class are:

Misses Eva Caroline Doyle, Frances Robena Shaw, Margaret Lucille Callahan, Marie Louise Cox, and Mary Frances Harper, who receive full course diplomas; Misses Marie Bruce Cobb, Louise Lois Donaldson, Sara Martha Liddell, Mattie Evelyn Nesbitt, Julia Margaret Callahan, Helen Jeff Atkissen, Winnie Davis, Couch, Mary Bradley, Lyra Jane Seymour, Sara Louise Thrash, Ruby Allen Anchors, Mattie Lou Morris, Frances Marion Wardlaw, and Frances Louise Kilpatrick, who have taken special courses. All are Atlanta girls.

The graduating exercises will be held at the Grand Theater. Immediately after the presentation of diplomas, and adaptation by Miss Hanna from Keat's poem, "Endymion" will be presented by the pupils of the school. There are over one hundred girls in the cast, the leading roles being taken by seniors. A number of graceful dances will be given during the action of the play, the scenes of which are laid in ancient Greece.

A feature of the performance will be an original ballet dance by Miss Theodora Warfield, who made such a hit in the Kirmess last year.

Thursday night at 8:30 the alumnae and the senior class of Miss Hanna's School will have a banquet at the Piedmont Hotel. About 200 guests are expected at the banquet, which will be followed by a dance.

This has been one of the most successful years of the school. It is one of the oldest in Atlanta, and some of the most prominent women in Georgia are among its alumnae.

MINISTER'S WIFE ACCUSED AS SIREN

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 28.—Mrs. Mae Free Patterson, wife of the Rev. Gerard F. Patterson, pastor of the Church of the Incarnation, in the fashionable East End district, has been made defendant in a $10,000 alienation suit.

The action was brought by Mrs. Margaret Lloyd because of the alleged loss of the affections of her husband, Martin Van Voorhees Lloyd, a wealthy grain dealer. Mrs. Patterson is a cousin of Charles Free, vice president of the Southern Pacific Railway.

The suit charges that Mrs. Patterson enticed Lloyd from his home, that she wined and dined with Lloyd in public places, entertained him at her home and went with him to cafes, grill rooms, ball games, horse races and other places of amusement and "with her artifices, blandishments and coquetry and with malicious purpose deprived the plaintiff of her husband's society and affection."

The Lloyds have been separated since November 6, 1912.

CHIEF BEAVERS TO RENEW HIS VICE WAR

Declares That He Will "Clean Out" Disorderly Places When Hutcheson Furnishes List.

Renewed crusades to clean out vice in Atlanta have been precipitated by the publication Tuesday of an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers by Carl Hutcheson, an Atlanta attorney.

Chief Beavers called up Hutcheson with a demand for his information, asking names, addresses and character of occupants, and declared Wednesday that he would proceed to clean up if the requested information was furnished.

Hutcheson is now preparing a list of the places which he declared are immoral and told the chief he would place the list in Beavers' hands three days hence. Hutcheson was asked by the chief to swear to the character of the inmates of each house he names and to sign his name to his affidavit, and will be called as a witness in prosecuting the landlords.

"We will have some clean-up sure," said Chief Beavers Wednesday. "When I get Hutcheson's information I will prove that I am giving no protection to anybody. I would be glad to have every one report to me any resort that they might know of. It will help in the crusade. I will take speedy action against them all."

Dorsey to Confer With Felder.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey declared Wednesday that he would confer with Colonel T. B. Felder relative to the proposed Grand Jury probe of his corruption charges against police officials and the counter charges of bribery made against him by the police.

Colonel Felder would not comment on the affair at all, other than to say he was not yet ready to issue his statement substantiating his sensational charges.

Detective Chief Lanford issued a signed statement proposing to send Colyar handcuffed to Knoxville and Colonel Felder in charge of a detective to Columbia, S. C.

Lanford's Contribution.

"I will make this proposition to Colonel Felder," he said. "I will handcuff A. S. Colyar and send him back to Knoxville, Tenn., without requisition papers, if he (Colonel Felder) will accompany one of my men to Columbia, S. C., waiving requisition papers. Thereby I will get rid of two nuisances."

Colonel Felder issued the following statement relative to the proposed Grand Jury investigation:

"No investigation would be too exhaustive. I would be pleased to go before any committee, organization or tribunal. I have done nothing wrong. There is nothing in my whole professional career of which I am ashamed. I wish an investigation would be started."

Are You Growing As Atlanta Grows?

There are 2,000 new homes built in and around Atlanta every year.

1,200 of these new homes are built each year within the city limits.

This is the statement of the city tax assessors. Ask them.

With Atlanta growing at the rate of 15,000 new population every year, these figures are conservative.

Do you know what this means?

By just the percentage that Atlanta increases in population each year, by just that percentage grows the DEMAND FOR PEACHTREE HOMES.

In a year or two every available choice building lot will have been snapped up, and when you try to get one of them, you will find you will have to pay two or three times the present price.

COUNTY SEEKS CREATION TO GET ROADS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The proposed County of Candler is to petition the incoming Legislature for creation along new lines, and with an argument not only novel, but perhaps winning.

Candler County is to ask for existence as a powerful argument in favor of good roads.

It will seek to prove its right to creation as an absolute good roads necessity—that, of course, along with other reasons likely to appeal to intelligent legislative consideration.

It is a fact that there are several parts of Georgia in which are to be found highly prosperous towns, from a business point of view, that yet are hampered mightily by reason of their remoteness from their County seats and the consequent improbability of very active good roads work in their vicinities.

In some of these places, it is claimed, road taxes in remote neighborhoods are applied exclusively to good roads work near the county seat, and that brings about not only much dissatisfaction, but positive discontent.

Metter, a prosperous and hustling town of South Georgia, is an example of this, and it is about Metter that the proposed new county of Candler is to be framed.

If Candler County is created, it is contended that, with Metter as the County seat, good roads construction will radiate from Metter throughout the neighboring territory, and that there will not be a farm in the new county not soon connected with the County seat by ample and sufficient roads.

There is great enthusiasm among the people about Metter in favor of the new county, and very little opposition from the people of the counties from which it is to be taken. Candler generally is regarded as a good new county proposition, too, and it should surprise no one, therefore, to see the new Legislature put the seal of its approval upon it.

It would be located in one of the richest and most promising sections of the entire State.

Disquieting news comes from the bedside of Representative-elect Samuel E. Berry, of Whitfield.

He recently was stricken with an acute valvular heart trouble, and has been in critical condition since, with the chances of recovery hardly even. For a time, he seemed to get better, but of late has not improved.

Mr. Berry has represented Whitfield several times in the Legislature, and is looked upon as a particularly valuable member.

The Young Men's Democratic Club of Savannah proposes taking a hand in the election of a representative to succeed Mr. Stovall, resigned.

There are certain measures which this organization desires passed, and it is probable that the club will either put out a candidate of its own or undertake to pledge some other candidate to support its bills. Indications are that there may be several aspirants for the place.

The club wants a white primary law to govern city elections. Notice of the fact that such a bill will be introduced at the coming session has been advertised in the newspapers as well as posted on the bulletin board at the Court House.

The need of such a law was impressed upon the leaders of the club at the January city election, when hundreds of negroes were bought. It was charged that both factions cooped up the colored voters in halls, and held them overnight, voting them in batches of four or five, practically under guard.

Under a white primary election law this would be eliminated, it is claimed, as in the campaign for County and State officers. The contest would be settled in the preliminary skirmish, in which the negro voter would have no part.

A well meaning member-elect of the Legislature soon to assemble in Georgia has announced his intention of introducing early in the session a resolution providing for night sessions.

His motive is worthy enough, as he says it is to prevent congestion at the end of the session—and congestion always is there, right on the job!

Notwithstanding the eminent respectability of his intent, though, the impression generally will be that he is destined to disappointment. The Legislature has had that proposition submitted to it by people who earnestly desired to get the work hurried along, but it never got anywhere. The Legislature simply will not sit more than two or three hours a day in its earlier proceedings, and the incoming Legislature is not likely to be very different from its predecessors.

The better way to conserve legislative time, perhaps, is to find some method whereby local legislation may be disposed of more readily than now.

"Whitfield County stands far above the average in the manner in which it handles its convicts," said Chairman Davidson, of the Prison Commission, who returned from a tour of inspection of that County Tuesday.

In discussing the work as a whole, Mr. Davidson said some of the counties are wasting their efforts and money under the mistaken idea that "the best warden is the one who can be secured for the least salary."

The majority of counties, the chairman added, are working their convicts at a profit.

A bill will be introduced in the Legislature seeking to abolish the City Court of Floyd County.

It will be provided in the bill, though, that the court shall not be abolished until the expiration of the term of the present judge, John C. Reece.

A further effort will be made, so it has been stated, to make Floyd County a separate judicial circuit within itself, and provide for four sittings of the court each year, instead of two, as is the law now.

The movement generally is favored in Floyd, and will not be opposed in Walker and Chattooga, the other two counties composing the Rome Superior Court circuit.

WAR IN BALKANS NEAR; POWERS ONLY CHECK

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 28.—Actual war between Bulgaria and the allied armies of Greece and Servia is very near, according to a statement made here to-day by M. Teodoroff, Bulgarian Minister of Finance, who is here on a political mission.

"Only tremendous pressure by the European powers can prevent a fresh conflict in the Balkans," said M. Teodoroff. "Unknown to the outside world, affairs have been getting more and more serious for months. An army of 280,000 Servians and Greeks is massed on the western and southern frontiers of Bulgaria, ready for a general outbreak.

"The contention of the Bulgarian Government is that Servia and Greece are exceeding the terms of the agreement drawn up by the Balkan league before the outbreak of the war with Turkey."

Austrian Reservists Ordered Remobilized.

VIENNA, May 28.—Remobilization of the Austrian reservists, recently dismissed when peace in the Balkans seemed near, was ordered to-day by the Government.

A telegram from Athens states that another fight between the Bulgarians and Greeks north of Salonika is imminent. The Bulgars are massing vast quantities of heavy artillery at Elevthera, about 100 miles east of Salonika.

A Sofia dispatch to The Reichspost to-day states that the Bulgarian Government has decided to submit the future status of Salonika to the powers. Tension between Bulgaria and Servia, however, is tightening.

Greeks to Fight To Hold Salonika.

SALONIKA, May 28.—Premier Vinezilos, of Greece, arrived here to-day en route to Sofia, where he will try to patch up the differences between the Greek and Bulgarian Governments.

King Constantine is reported to have given the impression to his staff that Greece will fight Bulgaria before she will consent to give up Salonika.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gaiety beauty, has brought action against her husband, Eric Loder, asking for a restoration of her conjugal rights. The action will be heard at the coming session of the divorce court and is preliminary to a suit for divorce.

Loder has made no defense. The basis of the actress' petition has not been disclosed.

Gabrielle Ray and Eric Loder, son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married here March 1, 1912. Miss Ray was one of the most popular and beautiful musical comedy actresses in England. She had been showered with attentions from many notable gallants, including ex-King Manuel of Portugal, Lord Dalmeny and the Marquis of Anglesey, but she declared her heart had been touched only by the dashing young Loder, who is tall, good-looking and wealthy.

Miss Ray and Loder were to have been married at Windsor, February 29, the day that made 1912 a leap year. At the last moment the charming, bride-elect changed her mind, and literally left Loder "waiting at the church."

The next day Miss Ray relented and the marriage took place.

The Loders amassed a fortune in the tallow trade in Russia, and the baronetcy was one of the jubilee honors conferred by Queen Victoria in 1887.

PARIS, May 28.—Professor Albert Turpain, after a series of researches extending over three years, has succeeded in solving the problem of registering radio-telegrams by Morse signals.

NO CHANGE MADE IN COTTON AND SUGAR TARIFF

Only Revision Senate Plans of Income Tax Lessens Burden on Married Men.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Underwood tariff bill as reported to the Democratic caucus after the revision of its various schedules by the subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee is forecast as follows:

There will be no change in the cotton, sugar and wool schedules as written into the measure by the House with the exception of a slight increase in duty on wool manufactures.

The only change in the income tax amendment will be the aleration of sub-section D, so that a man of family will not be compelled to pay as great a tax as a single man with the same income.

In the cotton and wool schedules a period of from 60 to 90 days of grace will be extended to manufacturers before the provisions of the new bill go into effect. The rest of the bill takes effect the day after its passage.

The amendments to the Underwood bill permitting the arbitrary valuation of imports by the Secretary of the Treasury will be adopted. In the metal schedule duties on structural steel will be revised downward, while ferro-maganese and pig iron will be free listed.

Wheat, cattle and other staples whose manufactures are all on the free list also will be free listed.

Duties on pottery will be raised.

President Wilson, it was stated, has been notified of the proposed changes in the bill and has consented to the revisions.

BRYAN WILL GET "GRAPE JUICE" WELCOME

Atlanta Decorates for Secretary's Coming Monday in His Favorite Beverage.

With the coming of Colonel William Jennings Bryan on Monday all Atlanta is rallying to the support of her reputation as a grape juice center.

Grape juice in every form—in bottles big and little, square and round, and some of it as old as the vintage of last August—is making its appearance in every show window to greet the eyes of the world-renowned connoisseur, "Grape Juice Bill."

At the Capital City Club Colonel Bryan will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Colonel Walter P. Andrews. No wine or other liquors will be served, but in their stead will be an abundance of grape juice cocktails, grape juice highballs, and grape juice punch. This fact was revealed in a letter of instructions to the steward of the club in which Mr. Andrews made implicit his desire that the precedent of "wineless" dinners established by the distinguished Secretary of State in Washington be followed here.

The dinner will be served at the club at 6 o'clock. It will be attended by a number of prominent Atlanta citizens.

Mr. Bryan will arrive in the city at 5 o'clock. At 8 o'clock he will deliver an address before the students of the Georgia School of Technology at the Grand Opera House.

MAKES RHEUMATISM PROMPTLY DISAPPEAR

Crippled-up Sufferers Find Relief After Few Doses of Croxone are Taken.

It is needless to suffer any longer with rheumatism, and be all crippled up, and bent out of shape with its heart-wrenching pains, when you can surely avoid it.

Rheumatism comes from weak, inactive kidneys, that fail to filter from the blod the poisonous waste matter and uric acid; and it is useless to rub on liniments or take ordinary remedies to relieve the pain. This only prolongs the misery.

The only way to cure rheumatism is to remove the cause. The new discovery, Croxone, does this because it neutralizes and dissolves all the poisonous substances and uric acid that lodge in the joints and muscles, to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism, and cleans out and strengthens the stopped up, inactive kidneys, so they can filter all the poison from the blod, and drive it on and out of the system.

Croxone is the most wonderful medicine ever made for chronic rheumatism, kidney troubles, and bladder disorders. You will find it different from all other remedies. There is nothing else on earth like it. It matters not how old you are, or how long you have suffered, it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. You will find relief from the first few doses, and you will be surprised how quickly all misery and suffering will end.

An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle at any first-class drug store. All druggists are authorized to sell it on a positive money-back guarantee. Three doses a day for a few days is often all that is ever needed to overcome the worst backache or urinary disorders.

CLARK HOWELL AND THE WORK OF BEAVERS

No Attack Was Made by the Chief of Police—Editor Makes His Position Clear.

The following letter from Chief Beavers and the interview with Mr. Clark Howell explain themselves:

Atlanta, Ga., May 27.

My attention has been called to an article in the Sunday papers in which an interview with me makes it appear that I was attacking Mr. Clark Howell personally and his policy with The Constitution.

I only repeated the conversation I had with him on the next day after he returned from Panama on about March 1, this year.

I meant no reflection on Mr. Howell, but only had reference to certain local reports in his paper, and he now assures me that there was no intention on his part to discredit the work which I have been trying to do in this city, and that the article that appeared in the reportorial columns of The Constitution was without his knowledge and consent, and that it was not his intention nor does he approve of anything that would in the least hinder or discredit the work that the police department has ben trying to carry out.

I would regret very much indeed to have any utterance of mine construed into an attack upon Mr. Howell, whom I have always regarded, and now esteem, as an exemplary citizen and journalist who holds the merited confidence of the public, as he does of my department and of myself.

J. L. BEAVERS,
Chief of Police.

In reference to Chief Beavers' statement Mr. Howell said:

"During my absence in Panama in January a police raid was made on a certain downtown rooming hotel. The Constitution next morning locally reported the affair and the fact that a man and his wife were subjected to undue treatment, with comment from the inadvertent victims and the manager of the hotel.

"When I returned from Panama the Chief complained of the local report referred to. I explained to him that nothing was further from our intention than to discredit his work, and that following The Constitution's oft-repeated commendation of his high sense of duty in endeavoring to enforce the law, he would have our cordial support to that end.

"He thanked me, recalling the fact that two days after the houses were closed I had sent for him to tell him that his attitude would have The Constitution's support.

"Next morning—September 26—The Constitution's leading editorial, 'A Wholesome Example,' unqualifiedly approved the Chief as 'an official with the nerve and the courage to enforce the law,' stating that 'he has set a singularly wholesome example of a blunt interpretation of duty.'

"I am still of the opinion that no good citizen would invite the return of the segregated district, nor the spread of its attendant evil in other directions. In my talk with the Chief I expressed my doubt as to his ability to absolutely eliminate the evil, and while the segregated district has been closed we are still wrestling with other phases of the problem.

"I think the Chief is doing the best he can, and he should have the support of all good citizens in his efforts."

CATTLE TICK IS COSTING STATE $6,000,000

Veterinarian's Report Discloses Astounding Facts—Tuberculosis Menace to Health.

The losses from the ravages of hog cholera reached $1,000,000 in 1912.

Tuberculosis in cattle is spreading through the State with alarming rapidity and threatens to infect every herd.

These are the startling facts revealed in the annual report of State Veterinarian Peter F. Bahnsen, issued Wednesday.

For the amelioration of these conditions Dr. Bahnsen recommends an appropriation of $30,000. He cites the conservation of human health as the absolute and pressing necessity for the expenditure of this amount.

Losses Are Enormous.

"Our losses from tick infestation," reads the report, "are under present conditions in excess of $6,000,000 annually. All of this enormous waste could be stopped in a few years with a sufficient fund to employ cattle inspectors, and by appealing to the counties and the Federal Government for increased aid.

"Hog cholera cost the State not less than $1,000,000 in 1912, or approximately 20 per cent of the total value of the hogs owned in this State.

"Tuberculosis is prevalent to a considerable extent among the dairy cattle of the State. The milk of tuberculous cattle is dangerous to man and the health of our people is in the balance. We have taken this matter in hand with the limited means available and the public is anxious that our services along this line be extended into a State-wide movement. Our greatest need in this matter is more funds for extending the work.

Slaughter Houses Menace.

"Slaughter house conditions are extremely bad in most sections of the State and the public is frequently fed on meat not fit for human consumption. Animals with communicable diseases are often slaughtered and sold without restriction and the sanitary conditions of fully 70 per cent of our slaughter houses is a crying shame. It demands rigid State supervision.

"We should have an appropriation of not less than $30,000 for this work. It is essential in conserving the health of the people that their food products be obtained from healthy animals and handled and distributed under conditions that will prevent subsequent contamination or putrefaction."

Wife Kidnaped Him And Kept Him Drunk

CHICAGO, May 28.—That he was kidnaped by his wife, whom he is suing for divorce, taken to New York and kept under the influence of champagne and cocktails, was the statement of Louis Frank, a saloon keeper, in an affidavit filed to-day.

About two weeks ago a stipulation dismissing Frank's divorce suit was filed by Mrs. Frank's attorneys, who said Frank and his wife were reconciled and living in New York. This Frank denies.

Bath Cost Her $108; Finds Shoe Poor Bank

BOSTON, May 28.—Mrs. Mary Garabedian says her bath at the Cambridge Field Public Bathhouse cost her $108. Said Mrs. Garabedian:

"I paid 2 cents for a piece of soap and a towel. Instead of giving my valuables to the clerk I hid them in one of my shoes. When I came back the articles were gone, although the shoe remained."

Mrs. Garabedian is out exactly the price of 5,401 baths.

COL. NASH TO TRAIN RIVERSIDE CADETS

GAINESVILLE, GA., May 28.—Colonel J. Q. Nash has been appointed commandant of the cadet corps at Riverside Military and Naval Academy. He will take charge June 1.

Few cadet commandants in Southern preparatory schools are better known than Colonel Nash. He has been instructor of more Georgia youths in military tactics than any man in the State. His selection is a distinct accusition to Riverside's faculty.

Colonel Nash was graduated with first honor from Gordon College in 1896. He was superintendent of the public schools of Henry County; vice president and commandant of Reinhardt College, and commandant of Gordon Institute for several years. His more recent position has been commanding officer and instructor in the Georgia Military Academy.

The adjutant general of the National Guard of Georgia has detailed Colonel Nash as instructor and inspector in camp and target practice. He was detailed by the Governor to serve on the staff of the grand marshal at the inauguration of President Roosevelt and again at the inauguration of President Taft. He holds commissions with the National Guard from second lieutenant to lieutenant colonel and as assistant inspector general of Georgia.

HUNT FOR YOUNG CONDUCTOR VAIN

Wife of W. S. Culpepper, Who Disappeared in Atlanta Monday, Fears Foul Play.

Culpepper, who is 24 years old, a freight conductor on the Georgia Railroad, disappeared in Atlanta Monday afternoon. He was due to take out No. 210 Monday night, but failed to appear at the scheduled time.

Fearing he had been injured, his friends visited every hospital and infirmary in Atlanta Tuesday morning and also inquired at the police station, but in vain.

Culpepper lived a temperate life, has a good character, was devoted to his family and was popular among officials and workingmen of the Georgia Railroad. He had just been promoted to conductor. The theory of a voluntary flight is scouted by his family and friends. The young wife fears her husband has met with foul play.

2,000 TO MARCH IN BIG HOLIDAY PARADE

Pageant by Retailers June 4 Will Eclipse Anything of Its Kind Ever Seen in Atlanta.

With practically all plans completed for the pageant, local retail grocers and clerks Wednesday are predicting that the parade of June 4, with which they will celebrate the opening of the "Wednesday closing" season, will be one of the greatest ever seen in Atlanta.

F. E. Kamper, chairman of the arrangements committee, in charge of active preparations for the parade, declares nothing that has ever been held in Atlanta in the past will even approach it in interest. "It is a sure thing," declared Mr. Kamper, "that when we get through the people of Atlanta will know that clerks and retailers appreciate the opportunity of getting a half-holiday every week. The parade we are going to pull off will make the circus parades look sick."

And a glance at the arrangements induces the belief that Mr. Kamper knows what he is talking about. Probably 2,000 men will march in the parade, and Atlantans will see some weird costumes. Three miles of wagons and automobiles, decorated and emblazoned with banners, will follow the marchers. Five mounted policemen, the handsomest and bravest of Chief Beavers' force, will ride at the head of the column.

Three Brass Bands.

Three brass bands will tread proudly in the ranks.

Following the mounted policemen and a brass band will come aides and their marshals as follows: F. E. Kamper, H. Winberg, C. J. McCoy, R. H. Comer, W. J. Burton, J. H. Merritt, J. F. McNair and W. A. Byers. Each of these men will appoint five assistants to ride with him, and all will be clothed in uniforms that represent the last word in splendor.

The parade will form near the Capitol, on Washington, Hunter, Mitchell, Whitehall and other nearby streets. The exact route of the parade has not been determined, but it probably will be down to Whitehall and up Peachtree, until everybody gets tired. The rivalry among the merchants for the best decorated wagon and automobile already has begun, and some unique schemes in decoration are promised.

The celebration will not be confined to retailers. Wholesalers have expressed a desire to send their automobile trucks to the parade, and ice manufacturers, bakers, packers and the commission merchants also will work to make the parade a success.

Many lines of business were represented at the Taft Hall meeting Tuesday night, and every representative of every line pledged the assistance of himself and his fellows to making the parade a success. E. L. Adams was there to ladle out encouragement in behalf of the jobbers of the city, and J. D. Simmons told how far the City Salesmen's Association would go to make the affair a success. Then there were wholesalers, retail grocers, bakers, commission men, clerks and employees galore.

All Boost Atlanta.

Several stirring addresses were made, all emphasizing the necessity of working together and boosting for Atlanta. Among the speakers were Harry L. Schlesinger, father of the closing movement; Hon. John Y. Smith, Representative-elect from Fulton County; O. T. Camp, a consistent booster for the parade; E. L. Adams, of the jobbers; John McCullough, of the commission merchants; Olin Stamps, who boosts anything and everything pertaining to the good of the city; L. E. Rogers, one of the live wires among the clerks, and John Bratton, of the Georgia Retail Grocers' Association.

Before adjourning the clerks extended a vote of thanks to their employers for the half-holiday. It was announced by Mr. Schlesinger that more than 800 grocers had signed an agreement to close at noon every Wednesday through the months of June, July and August. Merchants in East Point also have joined in the movement and will take part in the parade.

DECATUR PLANS BIG HOME-COMING

Reception Committee Arranging New Festivities to Make June 3 a Memorable Day.

Extra festivities are being planned every day for Decatur's home-coming day and smoker on June 3. The reception committee of the Board of Trade will meet to-night at organization headquarters in the Weekes Building. Mayor John A. Montgomery is chairman of this committee.

The day and the night of June 3 will be, in effect, one continuous good time. The morning will be given over to oratory. Dr. Soule, of the State Agricultural College, will speak on DeKalb County's opportunities for truck farming, dairying and poultry raising; E. F. Smith on ways and means of locating the Fifth District Agricultural School in DeKalb County; C. Murphy Candler on the life and accomplishments of Jefferson Davis.

The afternoon will be made memorable by the laying of the cornerstone of Decatur's new $25,000 school, under the auspices of the Masons. George M. Napier is the orator of the day, while five-minute addresses will be made by Mayor Montgomery, J. Howell Green and Hooper Alexander.

Some time during the day a shield will be presented to the Decatur troop of Boy Scouts. The shield is a trophy of a recent field day contest. All Atlanta Boy Scout troops, with their drum corps, will participate in the presentation.

The second smoker of the Board of Trade will be held at 6:30 o'clock, as the concluding event of home-coming day. "GOOD EATS" will be served, followed by things to smoke, with music throughout. Good speakers will entertain the crowd, which is expected to be large.

Instant Postum

Is in thousands of homes where health is valued.

Former coffee users who have felt the pinch of indigestion, headache, heart disturbance, nervous irritation, etc., have written by the score, telling of remarkable benefits following the change from coffee to Instant Postum.

A level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"Thanks for the sample of Instant Postum sent me. I had been drinking coffee for a long time and thought it would be difficult to give it up, but I was mistaken.

"While I was drinking coffee I always felt exhausted and I weighed but 112 pounds. After using Instant Postum I soon recovered and now am as healthy as any person can be. I now weigh 120 pounds and am steadily gaining in weight. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.

Both kinds are sold by grocers everywhere.

The Quantities Involved and the Halved Prices Make It Such

That housekeeper who right now finds that she needs another or a new set of china is indeed fortunate, and she who needs but an extra plate or so, a platter or a few cups and saucers is indeed fortunate.

TO-MORROW SHE WILL PAY BUT HALF (in an instance or so possibly a litle more, in a greater number of instances less than half) of what she had expected.

And she will have such fine choice at the same time! Here are fine Limoges china---including a pattern from the Haviland potteries---Japanese china, Austrian china and German and English porcelains---china to grace elegant dining rooms and china that is best for summer homes.

It is the righting of stocks with us and is done in the characteristic Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. fashion, let prices fall where they will.

You will notice below that in many instances former prices are for the dozen pieces and that present prices are for the single piece---this means that now you may buy one piece or as many pieces of any of the china as you may want.

TALLULAH FALLS LAND SUIT WILL GO TO JURY THURSDAY

State Ends Its Introduction of Testimony—Defense Finishes Tuesday Afternoon.

CLAYTON, GA., May 28.—All testimony, it is expected, will have been heard and arguments begun in the suits of the State of Georgia against the Georgia Railway and Power Company to determine the ownership of the Tallulah Falls gorge by the time the afternoon session of Rabun Superior Court adjourns to-day.

All of the State's evidence was concluded at this morning's session. That of the defense is expected to be concluded in the afternoon in time for attorneys to begin their speeches to the jury. The case will probably go to the jury Thursday morning and a verdict is expected by the afternoon.

The State began the introduction of testimony when court reconvened Tuesday afternoon. Old residents of Tallulah Falls, ranging from 60 to 70 years of age, who had lived there practically their entire lives, were offered as State's witnesses. They testified that of their own knowledge, hearsay and tradition former holders of the land along the Tallulah Gorge, now in dispute, and those who transferred the property to the power company did not lay claim to the land in the gorge, but only to the gorge's brink.

Professor Strong, of the University of Georgia, who, with Professor Koch, also of the university, made surveys of the disputed property and reported on it to the Governor and Attorney General, testified as to this survey and report, on which at the time the State officials declined to bring suit. Numerous maps and plats of the falls property were filed as exhibits to Professor Strong's testimony.

Further documentary evidence was introduced by the State this morning.

It was generally expected before the noon adjournment that the defense would offer a motion for a non-suit, which would be overruled by Judge J. B. Jones, president, and then the defense would offer its testimony, principally in documentary form.

LATEST DECREE IN RIDING HABITS IS FLAT-BRIMMED TILE

MISS ELIZABETH BIGELOW.

The new dress and flat brimmed "tile" worn by Miss Bigelow at the Brookline Country Club's annual Horse Show caused widespread comment in the Hub's Social circles.

Equestriennes of Atlanta, this is the last word in women's riding habits:

Also it was the most talked of costume worn at the revival of the Horse Show of the Brookline Country Club, and to-day tailors all through Boston and the surrounding countryside are beset by equestrian enthusiasts for duplicates. The costume was worn by Miss Elizabeth Bigelow, one of the most noted of the Boston women who have in recent years taken to the saddle as a means of recreation.

The usual pique stock is discarded by Miss Bigelow in favor of a straight standing collar of white linen with a broad tie of black. This closely resembles the style of 60 years ago and gives a decidedly natty appearance to the wearer. In place of the conservative black derby Miss Bigelow wears the bell-shaped silk tile, with a flat rim, fitting snugly over the head and which, it is said, "sticks" much more closely to the head of the rider than the small crowned derby.

Miss Bigelow's coat is of a dark material and hangs closely to the figure and displays to an excellent degree her trim, clean-cut figure. The young woman, who is one of the most popular society leaders in the "Hub's smart set," rode to a decided advantage in the various rings in which she competed, and her general appearance added to the enthusiasm with which she was greeted by the spectators and gallery.

4 PINNED BENEATH OVERTURNED AUTO

Fifth Passenger in Wrecked Car Summons Help to Extricate Others and Chauffeur.

MARIETTA, GA., May 28.—Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Flemister, Miss Charlotte Flemister, Miss Charlotte Fite and a negro chauffeur, all of Cartersville, were injured when Mr. Flemister's automobile to-day turned turtle two miles from Marietta, near Fair Oaks. None suffered broken bones.

Mrs. Flemister's condition is serious from the shock. She had been in a highly nervous state for two weeks following the death of her baby.

The accident occurred when a front wheel came off. It was said a garage attendant at Cartersville had warned Mr. Flemister of danger from this wheel.

The chauffeur was pinioned to the ground by the steering wheel and Mrs. Flemister was caught under the back of a seat, while Mr. Flemister and his daughter were held down by the body of the car. Miss Fite alone was able to extricate herself. She summoned nearby cotton field hands, who lifted the car from the victims. They were brought to Marietta by a passing auto for medical attention.

Mr. Flemister is a wholesale grocer of Cartersville.

Carolina Desperado Not Slain; Captured

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—Richard Henry Austin, South Carolina assailant and murderer, reported killed near Sylvania yesterday, is still alive. He was desperately wounded and captured in the swamps near Newington last night, was brought to Savannah to-day, being safely lodged in the Chatham County jail. He admits his identity, but maintains that he did not commit the assault charged to him.

It is hardly expected that the negro will live to be tried. There has been some talk of an attempt to lynch Austin, but no such trouble is anticipated by the police or Sheriff.

STRENGTH IN WHEAT BASED ON HOT WINDS

CHICAGO, May 28.—The Inter Ocean says: "Hot winds were reported in the Southwest last night and the Kansas City curb on wheat was up ¾ of a cent. Chicago was the weakest market yesterday, which bulls attributed to the break in corn. With unfavorable crop reports and a few days of dry, hot weather bulls are looking for higher prices and said wheat should be bought on breaks.

"It was the theory of the bears that the crop scare has been worked for all it was worth for the time being and wheat should be sold on all bulges. Corn traders believe that there will be little in it for the bulls in May corn the balance of the month. The trade has been largely evened up as indicated by the bulge Monday and the break of yesterday.

"It would not be surprising to see fireworks in May oats in the two and a half trading days remaining of the month, including to-day. Those who have watched the market say that the open interest is larger than it is possible for the shorts to deliver and they will have to go into the pit and cover."

MRS. SLATON ASKS FREE PARK MUSIC

The Fifth Regiment band will give another musical concert in Grant Park Sunday afternoon, the Georgia Railway and Power Company having donated a sum for it.

Unless Council makes an appropriation for park music there will be no more concerts this season, though W. H. Glenn, manager of the railway department of the company, said his company was willing to supplement any appropriation Council might make, but that it would not pay the full cost.

Mrs. John M. Slaton, wife of the Governor-elect, went before the Finance Committee of Council and pleaded for a fund for free music. She said it was recognized by the whole country that Atlanta was a music-loving city and it was the duty of Council to stimulate this feeling.

Councilman Claude L. Ashley, author of a resolution to appropriate $5,000 for music in both Grant and Piedmont Parks, said he felt sure a good sum would be given when the Finance Committee met Friday and made up the June budget.

Eloper Glenn Out Of Jail on $250 Bond

L. J. Glenn, who has been confined in the Tower since the first part of April, when he was brought back to Atlanta to answer a charge of abandoning his two little children to elope with Mrs. Ione Pidcock, wife of a railroad president, was released under a $250 bond Wednesday morning.

Glenn said he would remain in Atlanto until the divorce proceedings brought by his wife were heard.

Glenn's father, G. F. Glenn, secured his bond. His attorney is L. F. McClelland.

President Moellring, Savannah; first vice president, George Mau, Atlanta, are among the officers re-elected. William Neisi, Brunswick, and Louis Scheibe, Macon, fifth and sixth vice presidents; H. E. Dreeson, Savannah, treasurer, and Paul Wierse, Charleston, secretary, are new officers.

Works 18 Years as Clerk Without Pay

MONTPELIER, IND., May 28.—J. Stewart, who died here to-day, had worked eighteen years as a cigar clerk without pay.

Although offered money by his employer, he would accept only 15 cents three times a day to buy meals.

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Why Do Folks Pull Flowers in Parks?

"It sure gets my nanny," said the park policeman, "why some folks will come out here and pull flowers. The park commission spends a lot of money getting plants and a lot more to keep them in good condition and then along comes somebody and crabs the whole act by tearing off a bunch of the flowers.

"Last Sunday a young fellow came out here and nothing would do but he must have a magnolia. He thought they were pretty. So they were; but that gave him no license to pull a blossom. But he did just the same. I happened to see him after he had secured the flower and I called him.

"'Here,' said I, 'is a copy of charges. Suppose you straighten out this little affair with the Recorder.'

"'Why, I didn't know there was any harm in taking these flowers,' said he.

"'Well, what do you suppose we got 'em out here for?' I told him. 'These flowers belong to the city and they are put here to be looked at, that's all. If you want to give your best girl a bouquet why don't you go to the florist's? That's what they are in business for.'

"'I don't see any sign out here saying not to pull flowers,' says he, nettled I guess about that best girl remark of mine.

"'Sure, you don't, I says. 'An' what's more, you don't see no sign tellin' you to fall in the lake or commit suicide, yet I haven't seen you tryin' to do either.'

"He didn't have any answer for that one and I guess he was some wiser when he went home. And next day he paid his little fine like a man. Bet HE don't pull any more magnolias in Grant Park."

Motion Picture Show Takes Place of Nurse.

Out in West End women with small children have solved a problem. They have learned how to get along without nurses. Of course those with babies are not so fortunate, but the ones whose youngsters can run about are reaping the reward of ingeniousness.

Now when a mother wants to go to the matinee or shopping in town she doesn't have to call in mother-in-law or a neighbor to look after the children until she gets back. The plan is much more simple and gives general satisfaction. She takes them to a motion picture show.

It should be known, of course, that West End boasts a full-fledged "movie" show. The children go in droves every day and the proprietor must be an all-fired generous soul because the kiddies just stay and stay and stay. He never asks them to go out. And that is the real secret of the scheme taken advantage of by the mothers.

Mrs. West End decides that she wants to go shopping. She washes and dresses Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude and escorts them to the picture show. She pays 15 cents and the three young ones hike in to see the show. And there they stay. Mrs. West End goes to town, travels from one store to another until exhausted and returns homeward. She stops at the picture show and there is Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude still gazing in speechless ecstasy at the pictures on the screen.

What matters it if they have seen the same films half a dozen times that afternoon? They get just as much fun out of it as if they observed them for the first time. Mrs. West End calls her darlings and they all return home. Mamma is satisfied, the youngsters are decidedly so, and Mr. Picture Man evidently is, because next time he is just as smiling as ever.

means that scrupulous care has been given every detail of construction; that every part has been manufactured by the W. W. Kimball Company; that it has been made by skilled workmen, under the direction of experts in their respective lines. That ability, experience and responsibility are back of the piano. The ear and eye can judge of the the construction, case design and the finish, but you must look to the name for reliability of construction, and the assurance that the good qualities will endure. The house of KIMBALL has had an experience of over fifty years in the music industry, and artists, amateurs, and thousands of satisfied customers give abundant proof of the merit of the Kimball.

We are showing a large variety of styles in 88-note Player Pianos and Uprights. We have your choice in woods, such as Rosewood, Walnut, Circassian Walnut, Oak, Mission, Satin Mahogany and Mahogany. Prices ranging from $195 to $1,250.

Our one, absolutely one, price insures you, whether an experienced buyer or not, of securing the best instrument for the amount you wish to pay. It is not safe to buy a piano, or any other article of merchandise, from a dealer who has a sliding scale of prices, because you will never know when he has given you his lowest price. Then, too, your neighbor may buy the same merchandise for from $50 to $75 less money. A piano has but one value, and that should fix its price—the right price. Each and every instrument on our wareroom floor is tagged at the cash figure, and no one pays more or less.

It is not only safe, but pleasant, to deal with the world's largest manufacturers of Pianos, Player Pianos, Residence, and Church Pipe Organs, through this Branch Store.

WOODMEN HOSTS TO LODGE HEAD

John T. Yates, Visiting Atlanta Camps, Praises Georgia Bonds as Investment.

John T. Yates, of Omaha, Nebr., sovereign secretary of the Woodmen of the World, was the guest of honor at a reception given by the local camp of the order Tuesday night at Cable Hall.

Mr. Yates, accompanied by his wife, arrived in Atlanta Tuesday morning and leaves at noon Thursday for Macon, Columbus and other Georgia cities. He is en route to the biennial convention of the Woodmen at Jacksonville, which meets early in June.

Dr. F. L. Rosenthal, of Columbus, Ga., head consul of Georgia for the order, welcomed Mr. Yates to Atlanta, and Judge W. A. Roan made a short talk on the good of the order.

Mr. Yates said this was his first visit to Atlanta in fifteen years, and that there was a wonderful change.

"Especially noticeable is the cosmopolitan and metropolitan air of your city," he said.

Mr. Yates intends to purchase more Georgia bonds for the Woodmen.

"Georgia has the best bond laws of any State," he said, "and for that reason Georgia bonds will sell higher than those of other States. The Woodmen of the World already has purchased nearly $1,000 worth of bonds in this State."

Mr. and Mrs. Yates were taken on an automobile tour of the city Wednesday. They are stopping at the Piedmont Hotel.

Sunday, June 8, a special train, bringing Woodmen from Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and other Middle Western States, will stop for a few hours in Atlanta. The visiting members will be tendered a luncheon by the local camps at the Piedmont Hotel.

Cotton and Mixed Fabrics

Quite impossible to tell you on paper all it means to women to be able to select from such an assortment of desirable fabrics as these—the season's most popular materials, reduced by active selling, to short lengths—at half-price.

Wonderful assemblage—larger in its scope, more varied in its kinds than any previous sale of Remnants. You can hardly think of a practical or desirable fabric that is not among them—from the least expensive gingham to silk-and-cotton mixed novelties, and each piece means the saving of exactly half.

The collection is made up about equally of white and colored goods, including such as ratines, voiles, Swisses, poplins, seco silks, chiffon lisse, silk-and-cotton mixed goods, crepes, piques, luna lawns, Persian lawns, dimities, nainsooks, madras, ginghams, percales, and various others.

Lengths varying from two yards to dress patterns, of which there is a goodly supply.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THARE was a yung man caim to our house the other nite wich has jest graduated from West Point. He was a nice yung man. He was as strate as a arrow & his clothes fit him fine. He is a friend of Ma's unkel, wich also went to West Point & was shot in the back yeers ago in a Injun campaign. Ma never likes to talk much about her unkel, beekaus Pa is all the time wanting to know how it was that he got shot in the back.

The naim of the yung man was Galbraith Denton. His naim was like the naims of the army ossifers in plays & stories & he was vary handsum. The only thing I didn't like about him was that he was all the time bragging. He is the only West Point man I evver saw that bragged. Moast of them knows better wen they git thru school.

I havent the faintest idee ware they will send me, he toald Pa & Ma. My only wish is to be sent to some post ware thare is plenty of action & danger. Danger is my middel naim, he sed. The direst peril in the world is like that much custard pie to me. I think I grow taller & broader on a diet of danger, he sed. Doant you feel that way? he asked Pa.

Pa Is Modest.

I think Pa was going to say Yes, but he saw Ma grinning at him & he sed Well, to tell you the truth, I am not so full of fire & recklessness as I was wen I was a yung man. In those days, Pa sed, I cud put my hand in a mad dog's mouth with a smile, or face the charge of a en-raged bull without batting a eye, but my advanced yeers have sobered me down a bit & made me think of other & greater things than fiteing.

Well, sed the yung man, Mister Dention, it is this way with me, he sed to Pa. I do not imagine that I shal grow less feerless with the added yeers. In fack, I beeleeve that when I am a old man I will be eeven moar dauntless than I am now, & wen the grim reaper cums he will find me in the hour of Deth as I ever was in life, unafraid.

That is a fine way to be, said Pa. You will find, sed Pa, wen you go to the front, many things in acktual warfare to try yure currage sorely. In the dark days of the Civil War, Pa sed, the days that I dred to recall to any grate extent eeven now, I went thru hardships & faced dangers that wud have killed any ordinary man or made him crazy. I wonder now & then, sed Pa, that that terribul war dident mailk me reely insane. Dont you, wife?

Oh, I suppoas so, sed Ma. Sumtimes I think you are a littel dippy at that.

Ma Gives Him Away.

Pa got kind of red in the face, but he kept on talking. My boy, he sed to Mister Dention, wen you have gone thru a baptism of fire such as me & my braiv comrades went thru at Misshunary Ridge or in the battel of the Wilderness, or at Shiloh or Chancellorsville, Pa sed, you will show them how reely braiv you are. One night I was surrounded by a whole company of cavalry Pa sed I nevver lost my superb nerve. Taking advantage of a blue mist that hung oaver a gray landscape, I mingled freely with the enemy & thus made my escape.

Mr. Dention beeleeved Pa until Ma sed: Lissen, Galbraith; this deer husband of mine was never in war except with me.

Far More Important.

The old man had given his son a very fair education, and had taken him into his shop. The young fellow was over-particular about a great many little things, but the father made no comment. One day an order came in from a regular customer.

"I wish to goodness," exclaimed the son, "that Jones would learn to spell."

"What's the matter now?" inquired the father cheerfully.

"Why, he spells coffee with a 'k.'"

"No—does he? I never noticed it."

"Of course you never did," said the son, pettishly. "You never notice anything like that."

"Perhaps not, my son," replied the old man; "but there is one thing I do notice, which you will learn by and by, and that is that Jones pays cash."

Speedy Courtship.

A man recently in New York laid a wager that he would woo, win, and marry within an hour a young lady whom, with his companions, he had just seen arrive at the hotel where he was living.

There is nothing in the American marriage law to prevent this dispatch. He introduced himself to the damsel, she smiled upon his suit, a minister was called in, and they were married within an hour.

The wager, of no inconsiderable amount, was handed over to the bridegroom, who left with his bride the following day. It was shortly afterward discovered that the couple had long been man and wife, and that they had been traveling about playing the same trick at various hotels.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain. Manager Smith tells the newspapers about his new find and the reporters print all sorts of "joshing" stories about Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

At the same time the newspaper photographers unlimbered their batteries and began bombarding everything in sight. The reporters took possession of the players' bench and passed intimate remarks with their friends in uniform. The training season of the Atlanta club was on and Manager Smith, in full charge was right in his element. Next in importance, judging by his own personal estimate to himself, was Whiskey, the colored man-of-all-work.

Ed Gillespie, the groundkeeper, had the field in fine shape, despite the severe rains of the preceding week, which had nearly driven him to drink.

Then minutes of tossing the ball sufficed.

Batting Practice.

"Batting practice!" suddenly yelled Bill Smith. "Dunn, put on your shin guards. Brady, go into the box and toss up a few. I'll just take first crack at that ball myself. Gee, boys, it feels good to get a bat in my hands again."

To the player all the joys of baseball are confined to batting and pay days, and it is believed that many a ball player would waive his salary if he could make a base hit whenever he wanted to. Every player would bat for 1,000 if he could have his way and pitchers would be driven out of the profession.

Smith took his place at the plate, a dozen negro boys spread themselves in he outfield to shack the balls; Brady went to the mound and threw up a straight ball. Smith pasted it to left and ran gleefully to first.

"A hit!" he shouted. "I'll lead the Pinch Hit League this year."

One by one the players took their turn at bat. Most of them hadn't had a club in their hands for six months. Many of them swung wildly at the ball. Their eyes had not yet become accustomed to the novelty of the situation.

Gordon Kelly, being the "kid" of the party, was the last man to face the pitcher. He assumed the same pose that filled Bill Smith with astonishment the day they first met. Whiskey crept up to the players' bench and stood grinning behind the reporters.

"Here's Billy's phenom," remarked Percy Whiting, the dean of the reportorial corps. "Watch him miss the ball a mile."

"He looks like business, anyhow," observed Murphy, a confrere.

"Whatyer got, kid, something new," demanded Brady, with a grin.

"The only way I know," replied Kelly, smiling. "If I'm wrong you fellows will have to teach me something dif"—

A Great Hit.

His remarks were cut short. The ball was sailing up to the plate. Kelly stepped forward and with a tremendous swing met the sphere fairly and squarely with his bat. There was a crashing sound and the ball, describing a huge arc in the air, cleared the bull by thirty feet and fell to earth far beyond that rampant figure.

An ear-splitting yell, such as can only be emitted by a negro under the pressure of pleasureable excitement, issued from the throat of Whiskey, nearly bursting the ear drums of the three reporters seated on the bench.

"Some hitter, gem'men, some hitter; Wow!" shouted the colored attendant.

The instant he hit the ball, Kelly dropped his bat and circled around the bases with the speed of a Mott Haven sprinter. Percy Whiting jumped to his feet.

"Hey, Hypo!" he shouted to his camera man, "come here." And when that individual rushed up he whispered hoarsely:

"Snap that fellow in tweny different poses—standing up, lying down, roll over, say please, play dead and everything on the calendar; catching the ball, running the bases and at bat—especially at bat. Hustle now and we'll spring a good one in the late editions of The Georgian this afternoon."

"Do you hit all the ptichers like that kid?" laughed Brady, as Kelly raced over the plate.

"I don't know," replied Kelly, pleased at the question. "You see I never faced a good pitcher in my life. What I mean by that Mr. Brady," he added hastily, running out to the box in fear his answer had been misconstrued, "is that I never played a game of ball in my life and what I will be able to do with your pitching when you get in condition and cut loose is something I know nothing about, I'm afraid I will fall down hard. You see all you did was to toss up a slow straight one that time."

"That's al right, kid," said Brady. "No one ever made such a long hit off me before, and if you can meet the fast one and the curves the way you did that one they will go just as far—further if you pickle a curve ball. Stick around, kid, stick around."

Kelly thanked him for his encouraging words and walked away.

"How fast can you run, Gordon?" asked Bill Smith.

"I have done a hundred in nine an' four-fifths," replied the recruit, with a laugh, "but I'm afraid the record won't stand. You see I timed myself."

"You timed yourself?" queried the manager, in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

Bill Smith looked at his "phenom" long and earnestly. He said at last, "Can that stuff, boy; can that stuff. If you don't, you'll drive me bughouse."

CHAPTER XI.

IT is to be presumed a ball player would look foolish if, just as a game was about to start, he stepped to the home plate, faced the assembled throng, removed his cap and sang the following from the prologue to "Pagliacci:"

"E voi, pruttosto che le ombre povere gabbane d' istrioni, le nostr' anime considerate, poiche noi siam uomini di carne e d' ossa, e che di quest' orfano mondo all pari di voi spiriamo l' aere!"

He would doubtless appear equally foolish if he sang the same words in English:

"Ah, think then, sweet people,
When ye look upon us, clad in our motley and tinsel
Ours are human hearts, beating with passion,
We are but men like you, for gladness or sorrow.
'Tis the same broad Heaven above us,
The same wide lonely world before us!"

There might be some scattering applause, but a vast majority of the unfeeling crowd would yell: "Cut it out!"

Fine Men Among Players.

Yet ball players are men. They are human beings, a fact often lost sight of by those who pay to see them perform. Frequently they are jeered and hooted and insulted by men of a low order of intelligence in the crowds; men who would not dare to say the same things to the players, if they met them face to face on the street.

There are those who say the life of a ball player is degrading; that baseball is a trivial profession. Yet the Governor of Pennsylvania was a professional ball player. So was "Billy" Sunday, the revivalist. So was A. G. Spalding, millionaire and near-Senator from California. So was Edward Hanlon, one of Baltimore's most successful real estate operators. So was Ted Lewis, a professor at Amherst College. So were hundreds of men who are now successful in other walks of life.

Things happen in baseball which never reach the ears of the public. There are tragedies and sorrows, joys and happiness in the national game that the outside world wots not of. All of which in this roundabout way leads up to the introduction to the reader of Thomas P. Morrissey, familiarly known by the sobriquet of "Long Tom."

For fifteen years Long Tom caught behind the bat in the big leagues. In his prime he was reckoned among the best men that ever wore a mask. One year he caught 148 games, handling the delivery of all kinds of pitchers—those that were as wild as hawks and those that had fine control; the ones that had "everything" and the ones that had nothing but a prayer; the curve balls and the treacherous "spitballs." But Long Tom had seen his best days and he was now down in the minor All of which, in the roundabout way, leads up to the introduction to the leagues, with only a brief baseball life before him. His fingers were gnarled and distorted. His right arm was no longer the terror of baseballers. His legs had gone back on him.

Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta club, had taken a chance and signed Long Tom to a contract. He wanted him principally to coach the young pitchers on his staff and he had an idea that the hot Southern climate might boil the old fellow out and put him into something like his real form. Long Tom was not old except in a baseball sense. He had just turned thirty-five, but in baseball youth must be served.

Made Him Jealous.

Long Tom reported for practice the first day. He arrived in the clubhouse just as the others began their practice on the field. He slowly undressed and put on a uniform, and, picking up his mitt, mask, chest protector and shin guards, walked through the runway that led to the field. He came on the scene at the very moment Gordon Kelly was standing at the plate waiting for Brady to pitch to him, and when Kelly made that tremendous drive he stood stock still and watched the ball in its flight far into right field. Then he turned his eyes on the young man and followed the tall, powerful, lithe-limbed figure as it sped around the bases. Something in the sight of the youth filled the veteran with rage and jealousy.

"That's the kind that is putting us veterans out of the business," he muttered.

He sauntered up to the group that stood around the home plate and was cordially greeted by those who knew him of old. He was then made acquainted with the young players, who, of course, while they knew him by reputation, had never met him on the ball field. Included in the latter was Gordon Kelly, who shook Long Tom's warped hand and gave the customary greeting. Morrissey eyed the other critically and remarked:

"You're the fence buster of the Southern League, I take it."

"Nothing like that," laughed Kelly, "but I'd like to be."

"I guess you would, all right," returned Long Tom.

A Star Catch.

It wasn't what he said, but the half-sneering way he said it that caused Kelly to look up quickly.

"You must be that correspondence school guy I read about in the paper. I see another paper calls you a 'cotillion leader.' Well, that's where you belong, I'm a-thinking."

Kelly flushed and a look of surprise came over his face at the sarcastic tone of Long Tom. But he merely answered "Maybe so" and walked away. There were some unpleasant things connected with baseball, he thought. He could not understand why Morrissey should go out of his way to belittle him. Long Tom's remarks were entirely uncalled for. There was no occasion for them. He finally came to the conclusion that Morrissey was of a crabbed and morose disposition. Yet he recalled having read columns and columns in the newspapers about this veteran catcher and there had been no word that would lead one to think he was other than normal in his disposition.

As a matter of fact, Tom Morrissey's disposition was naturally peaceful. He, like most ball players, had had his clubhouse scraps, but they had not been of his own seeking. They had seemed to come naturally. He had the reputation of being as game a man as ever went behind the bat, and by hard work and strict attention to business he had earned the respect of his fellow players. But his relegation to the minor leagues had seemed to work a change in him. The truth had come home to him that his baseball days were numbered. The realization of this fact came to him on this fine day in March when he saw in Gordon Kelly the perfect picture of youth. It had suddenly made him angry with himself, and, contrary to his nature, he had proceeded to vent his spleen on Kelly.

When Gordon Kelly walked away from him, Long Tom continued to keep his eyes on the young man, and he watched his every movement. At last he was interrupted by Bill Smith, who yelled:

"A little infield practice now, boys. I'll bat the grounders. The rest of you go in the outfield. Tom, get a bat and knock up some fungoes."

Bailey, Nixon and Long journeyed to the outfield and Kelly went with them. Morrissey selected a lightweight fungo bat and began sending up easy flies. He served Bailey, Nixon and Long in turn and then shouted, "Here, y'are, kid." At the same time he put all the force he could command behind his bat and drove the ball high in the air and labeled to land far over the head of Gordon Kelly.

With the crack of the bat, however, Kelly had turned suddenly and raced with all his marvelous speed toward the center field. After covering more than a hundred feet he stopped and turned again, facing the grandstand and an instant later the ball settled in his uplifted hands. He had timed the hit to a hair.

"If he gets under that one, he's a wonder," murmured the manager. Since the newspapers had spoken so facetiously about his "world-beater" he had become harassed by the thought that he had made a mistake in saying anything about the youngster until he had demonstrated his ability in a more substantial manner. There was little or nothing at stake financially and that end of it did not trouble Smith at all. But no manager of a ball club cares to have anything "put over" on him, so that he becomes the butt of the baseball public. When, therefore, Kelly made a really wonderful catch, the worried look faded from Bill Smith's face, he sighed deeply and his somewhat funereal smile shone like a candle through a hollow squash.

"Is that your correspondence school ball player, Billy?" asked Long Tom Morrissey.

"That's him. What do you think of him?" replied Smith.

TOO MANY KIDS

THEY told old Watkins, the showman, that there was no use giving his show in Kornshucks. There were too many kids there.

Old Watkins was in the free show business, and others in the same business had said to him: "The kids crowd in ahead of the old folks and monopolize the show. They absorb all the humorous offerings, and actually interrupt the doctor just at the important point when he unloads his wares, including cures for toothache, rheumatism, and colds and complexion beautifiers, at 50 cents a whack."

These kids, as far back as tradition goes, had spoiled everything in Kornshucks. They had interrupted sermons and lawn fetesand comic operas; and once when there was a sham battle the shooting could not be heard for them.

But in spite of all he was told about those kids, old Watkins went on putting up his tent for his medicine show. He merely listened politely to the people, who wagged their heads and warned him of failure. By the time his tent was up the kids filled the entire landscape back to the horizon. But he went ahead.

About fifteen minutes before the time the show was supposed to start something occurred on another vacant lot a little distance off. A man built a bonfire. Then he produced an explosion. It was no little explosion, but a regular Fourth of July affair. Then came more explosions.

Along about the third of the series the vacant lot where this was going on began accumulating kids. They came at the rate of 1,000 per bang from that time on. By the sixth bang all the kids in town were there, and only the old folks were left for the free show.

Old Watkins said: "You need not follow the kids to see what is going on there, my friends. There is nothing there but a bonfire and an ear-splitting racket. But it will keep the kids occupied and happy, and we can now proceed to have a show in peace."

"Hooray!" applauded the grown people. "Go ahead! Isn't it delightful?"

The performance proceeded. The mothers laughed and the fathers laughed. Why shouldn't they? There was no one stamping on their toes and pulling their arms off. There was no fighting and scuffing and crowding—nothing disagreeable at all. Only the refreshing jokes of the medicine man, made up as a negro or a Dutchman or some other inhabitant of the realm of mirth!

It was great! They laughed and enjoyed themselves and listened with breathless alarm to the dreadful things that might happen to them if they did not avail themselves of the providential chance to buy medicines that would heal all known diseases.

The show was over and all the money to be had was acquired by old Watkins, the free show medicine man, before the explosions and the bonfire died down and released the kids.

DANGER IN EATING MEAT

Statistics Show That People Who Eat Meat Are Susceptible to Typhoid Fever.

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if the patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after-effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has left masses of meat particles undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting; no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name, but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, upon receipt of price, full size jar mailed, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, Atlanta, Ga.

THE
Ice-Kist Crankless Freezer

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

Write us to-day for our beautifully illustrated booklet, telling all about the freezer; it is ABSOLUTELY FREE—and receive our free trial offer.

When One Is Very Young

"Love is a sickness full of woes,
all remedies refusing."
—Samuel Daniel.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

G. K. writes: "I am seventeen years of age and in love with a girl one year my junior. I am in love with her very much, but I don't know if she loves me. I feel as if I am getting sick, knowing not what to do."

The letter bears a date of ten days ago. If it were of yesterday, or the day previous, there might be reason for some uneasiness regarding the condition of G. K., but ten days is a long, long time, and without doubt he has gone through all the chills, the fever, the pangs, and made a complete recovery ere this.

This boy and girl love—calf love, some say—may develop into something larger, truer, finer, but the chances are all against it. A boy of seventeen thinks he has found the one love for life, and he also thinks he will never become too old to prefer ple to potatoes. He is sure that his heart will never waver from the choice of his youth, and just as sure that when he has grown old and gray, and has earned the right to spend money as he chooses, that he will at last gratify his youthful longing for nut sundaes.

Seldom Serious.

The love of his extreme youth is seldom serious, and does not even become a pleasant memory, for the reason that there were so many of them. The one picture he thinks he will always carry in his heart becomes the composite picture of many, and he forgets in a few years if Ethel had blue eyes or brown, and if it were Mary who gave him a lock of her hair, or Susan.

His emotions are so short-lived that calf love would be something to laugh about were it not for the waste of time every such love represents.

In the growing, developing, eventful and impressionable period of life, when a boy and girl should be studying their school books and laying the foundation for helpful manhood or womanhood, they moon around to the neglect of everything in life that is worth while, devoting every hope, every energy, every thought, to what they call love, but which bears no nearer resemblance to love than a worthless pebble bears to a precious jewel.

It is most regrettable that so much time is wasted in seeking for the counterfeit, instead of preparing one's self by study and training and self-control to appreciate the genuine that will come later.

Needless Waste.

G. K. has recovered from the sickness that prompted his letter long ere this. It is as if he called a physician to minister to an ailment so short-lived that it had vanished when the physician arrived. But the physician would warn him against another such attack, and explain the folly of needless pain, the waste of health and energy that could be avoided.

I can do no more. The remedy lies in his own hands. He must put such devotion into the effort to make a man of himself that there isn't time, room or inclination left for indulgence in the emotions that are not his due till he reaches man's estate.

The Five Frankforters

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Solomon, you may come in. Our tete-a-tete is quite over. We have not much in common—his Highness and I," said the old woman sadly.

The five Frankforters came quickly at their mother's summons. Charlotte came too, and stood in the doorway where for one fleeting moment she had touched the garments of the God of Love as he sped by.

"Madame! Shall I speak now?" asked Duke Gustavus with firm decision. Then he turned from the old mother to Solomon. "Sir—you know already why I am here to-day. I have the honor to beg for your daughter's hand in marriage."

With due solemnity Solomon answered: "We thank you, Duke Gustavus, for the high honor you confer on our family. We accept that honor—gratefully and gladly. I give my daughter to you."

Who shall fathom the heart of a maid? Who shall tell to what knowledge of her woman's heritage Charlotte had grown in one full hour? The girl came gently to her father and put her hand on his shoulder and looked deep into his eyes—into his soul, perhaps. "Father, you CANNOT without a word from me!"

"What do you mean?" asked her father sternly.

"I am ashamed! I know now that you arranged this yesterday—and I am ashamed."

The Crisis.

In growing anger the man asked his daughter, "How ashamed?"

"Ashamed to have been offered and accepted in this way."

"It is the custom of our people to arrange marriages in this way." Solomon's growing anger would not brook long delay—or argument.

"A hateful custom! A shameful custom!" cried Charlotte.

"Shameful?" Solomon's wrath was threatening to overwhelm his dignified manners.

"Yes. Yes—shameful. Your Highness, I will not be a party to a bargain so shameful to both of us. I thank you—and refuse."

"Do you know what you are saying?" thundered the baffled father.

"Do you know what I am FEELING? Father, do you believe that I could ever be happy without a home? For I could never find a home in that castle, with the very servants laughing at me behind my back. And the portraits on the walls staring at me and seeming to say: 'If you please you have come here too soon; wait another century or so!' No, no! If I marry, I—Grannie——" And poor little Charlotte, having fought her first battle—life's great battle—for the right to happiness—fell sobbing at her grandmother's feet.

"Grannie!" Poor little banker's daughter, who has never known a mother, will you plead in vain to the dear old woman who has been the saint of your girlish dreams?

Solomon spoke. He was very angry, but it was that cold, implacable anger that brooks no interference with his desires. "Your Highness will forgive this exhibition? My daughter will soon see reason?"

But Gustavus was to struggle slowly to-day to his full heritage of manhood. "I beg you—I insist—that you shall not persuade her against her will."

"Her will?" said Solomon. "In this family the children obey their parents."

A Boomerang.

Frau Gudula rose with quiet dignity from her great arm chair. "Then YOU obey ME—and let the child have her way in this. Duke Gustavus, I think you at last are wise enough to understand it must be so. Love is greater than any of us. No! little Charlotte, get up! Grannie won't let anyone hurt you."

Gustavus smiled. "Madame, I have looked into the souls of three women to-day—and I think I understand. But now, Baron, if I do not fulfil my part"——

Solomon spoke bitterly: "Count Fehrenberg has the money! He is half way to the castle by now."

"It will be returned to you, of course," began Gustavus, quietly, and then his old merry, devil-may-care spirit finished the sentence—"if there is any left."

Frau Gudula spoke with stately authority: "No, Duke Gustavus, be thankful you have it. Perhaps it will make a great difference in all of your life. If I know my sons, they will not be losers."

"My mother is right," said Amschel. "We have never yet taken back a signature."

"If your Highness is not too anxious to return to Neustadt Castle at once," said Nathan, "we can discuss the situation over the rest of the Burgundy. Will you come, Carl, Amschel? I think we still feel that Your Highness's personal security is what we want."

And as they discussed the salt mines and great forests that might yet make the Duchy of Taunus a wealthy province, the brothers little dreamed of the hidden wealth Gustavus was finding in his dream of a pair of eyes that had not lied. For suddenly the Duke of Taunus knew that the old home was his and he must not leave it—that a man must not abdicate for the woman he loves—but that when he is worthy to rule, then he is worthy to win even her love. And the money? Oh, Gustavus of Taunus could always find plenty of use for that! Love may work miracles, but because his sweetheart's hair is spun gold, a spendthrift does not learn to scorn all other gold!

The Real Reason.

And Solomon was thinking of the plans that had gone so sadly amiss—and of his twelve millions of florins! They might have been better invested!

"Who could have believed it!" said he. "A young fellow like that to have the best of us! Providence has helped him."

"Perhaps he is sharper than you thought," said his mother.

"Then I am all the more sorry to lose him as a son-in-law. Now—Fraudlein Charlotte—you will be so good as to give me your reasons for what you have done."

The girl moved slowly, almost as one in a dream, across to the father she had so sorely displeased. Her little scene was set and she must play out her part before her audience. Grannie was sitting again in her great arm-chair by the little breakfast table. Old Sol still shone across the rose arbor and traced a pattern of flowers and leaves on the soft green carpet. Across the room, stood her Cousin Jacob—intent, waiting—one would scarcely dare guess for what. But Charlotte and her father standing close—close in the little heart of that sunny room, were talking to each other across grim, gray seas of misunderstanding.

"Your reasons, Charlotte," said the man. This was not father talking to daughter—it was the man of business talking to the woman who had dared to balk his dearest plans.

"You know them, father. If I marry, it will not be for a castle, and a grand title, and position—the Duke would have given those to me—but I want more—far more—than he could ever give me."

"Go on."

"And I must be able to give more—infinitely more than I could ever give to him. Then I would be content to live anywhere—as dear Grannie was."

The Truth Comes Out.

Solomon sank into a great chair across the room from his mother. On Frau Gudula's face was a sweet smile of memory—and hope for this younger generation whom she loved. And Jacob? Jacob was waiting—waiting with throbbing pulses and yearning eyes for that supreme thing for which he would have given the world had the world been his!

"Is there anyone to whom you could give—and who could give to you—all you mean?" asked Solomon with slow insistence. He would sift this matter of his daughter's daring disobedience to the bottom.

"I—I—believe so, father."

"Will you tell me who he is?"

The girl did not answer. Pulsing, telltale blood stained her cheeks with love's own royal crimson—but she could not lift her starry eyes.

"So! It is all arranged between you, I suppose. What is his position in life?"

Charlotte answered so low that one might scarcely hear her timid tones: "He is—a business man, I think you would call it."

"Every tailor calls himself that. What kind of a business is his?"

"Banking"—still lower.

"A banker?"

"Yes; like you." The girl wondered if this torture would ever cease—would she ever be at peace—and happy?

The ultra extreme of evening dress.

THE picture on the left shows a rich and effective model for theater or semi-evening wear. The original gown was of sulphur-colored brocaded satin over a foundation of sulphur chiffon.

The under part of the bodice is formed by a very high draped belt which rises in two points from the under arm to the chest. Shadow lace edged with beads starts from a beaded ornament at the center front and comes over the shoulder, falling in the back in long angel sleeves, which end in a beaded tassel.

The skirt is made in two pieces, draped one over the other, and is held at the right by a buckle of beads, from which starts a small round train.

For the Extremist.

The model on the right cannot be recommended to the woman who wishes to be modest. The consideration of what not to wear is almost as important as what clothes to select; and together with the extremes of the overworked Balkan blouse fashion, the wise woman will avoid the sleeveless corsage and the skirt slit to the knees. It will be easily seen how the modifications that good taste suggests to every woman will change these dresses from extremes of freakishness into really graceful dresses.

This model shows an evening gown of Persian blue and gold over a foundation of black chiffon; the bodice is plain in corselet style, and the top consists of a fichu of black chiffon which drapes over the shoulder to form small sleeves. The waist is girdled by a belt of Persian blue satin, with a huge flower of the same material in front. The plain skirt is split at the knees to show the foundation of pleated chiffon. On one side of this cut it curves up about three inches from the floor, and on the left it lengthens into a train with rounding corners.

Do You Know That—

One of the longest concrete viaducts in the world is being erected over the Cuyaroga River in Cleveland. It has a length of 2,880 feet and is a double-decker, the upper deck carrying a driveway 42 feet wide for automobiles and other vehicles, with 12 feet of "sidewalk" on each side. The lower deck will carry four street railway tracks. The clearance over the channel will be 93 feet. Some 1,500 concrete spiles are being driven to carry the nine piers nearest the water.

Experiments have been made in Germany in the use of pigeons for scouting purposes. The pigeons are provided with miniature cameras furnished with shutters that are released automatically. The birds are set free from selected points so that they fly over the enemy's fortifications. When they return home the photographs they have taken are developed, and sometimes important disclosures appear on the film.

At Loerrach, in the Black Forest, there is a lake, the bed of which remains dry from 10 to 13 years at a time, and then suddenly refills with water from subterranean springs to a depth of 12 to 15 feet. After ten years the Eichener Sea, as it is called, has again commenced to fill, and has destroyed all the crops which farmers had planted on the bed.

Value of Bluff.

In a close encounter during the American Civil war, two soldiers, one from each army, came face to face within short range.

Each put up his gun and fired, as it subsequently appeared, his last cartridge. Both missed. The bullet of one man buried itself in a tree, and the shot of the other passed through the coat of his enemy. Each man, knowing his ammunition was gone, supposed himself to be at a disadvantage.

One of them made a great show of reloading his gun, and, stepping forward, demanded a surrender. The other threw down his arms with a groan.

"If I had another cartridge I would never surrender," he exclaimed.

"That's all right," calmly remarked the captor, marching off his prisoner. "If I had another, you may be sure I shouldn't have asked you to surrender."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T WORRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and for some time past have been keeping company with two young men, R. and G. Now, as they are having numerous disputes over me, I decided to meet just one of them and stop their quarrels. I prefer the society of G., and I told this to R., thinking it best to be honest with him. He became very angry and said I had done him a great wrong in not telling him before. He als accused me of encouraging him. He has vowed he will cause trouble between G. and me. I am only a little girl and such a thing as love never occurred to me. GLADYS.

I think R. is blustering in the hope of frightening you. If you prefer G. you have the right to show your preference. It will be much better for you to go with neither than to try to meet both.

THEY ARE RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am seventeen and deeply in love with a girl one year my junior, whom I have known three years. Now, as my parents think I am too young to have anything to do with girls, I would like to have your advice on the matter. JACK.

Your constancy for three years is in your favor. Be constant a few years longer and this will prove your love more than any protestations.

In the meantime remember your parents know best.

KNEW A LITTLE

A gentleman traveling some time ago asked a one-armed mendicant by whom he was accosted how he lost his arm.

"It was like this, sir. The last time I went to sea we was caught in a typhoon off Cape 'Orn. The ship went over on her beam ends, so the cap'n 'e orders me an' Tom to go out on the yardarm to keelhaul the bo'sprit and ter splice the jib-boom to the mainmast. I was a-hangin' on to the top-gallant ratlin's when Tom suddenly let go his end, an' I was pitched 40 feet in the 'old."

The gentleman smiled.

"That's a capital yarn," he said. "You ought to have been a sailor," and, without giving him anything, went on his way.

Crestfallen, the beggar watched his interrogator, and saw a crossing-sweeper touch his hat most deferentially to him.

"I say, Jim, who's 'e w'en 'e's at 'ome?" he called.

"Him?" replied the sweeper. "Don't you know who that is? Why, that's Admiral Beresford."

Always Merry and Bright.

False to all the traditions of Scotland and of farming, Sandy McTavish was a supreme optimist.

Nothing ever seemed to worry him.

One day—so the story goes—during the great floods, he was found by a neighbor lucky enough to possess a boat sitting peacefully on the roof of his house, smoking his pipe while the waters rose.

"Hello, Sandy!" cried the neighbor.

"Hello, Sam!" cried the cheerful one. "All your fowls washed away, I suppose?"

Sandy nodded.

"Ay," he said; "but the ducks can swim!"

"Apple trees gone, too, eh?"

"Well, the crop would have failed anyhow."

"So will you," said Sam, "if you sit up there much longer. Why, the waters have covered your ground floor windows already."

"I know," replied Sandy, as he smoked on; "and a good thing, too. Them windows did want washin'!"

"Why, Dad," he said, "she is young. She's just a little child in a hundred ways. She loves the trees and the grass and the flowers—and everything that's simple and real! And as for her heart—" His voice was low and very tender. "Why, her heart is the biggest I've ever known. It's just overflowing with sweetness and kindness. I've seen her pick up a baby that had fallen in the street and mother it in a way that—well, no one could do it as she did it, unless her soul was clean."

Gilder in Despair.

The father was silent, a little awed. He made an effort to shake off the feeling, and spoke with a sneer.

"You heard what she said yesterday, and you still are such a fool as to think that."

The answer of the son came with an immutable finality, the sublime faith of love.

"I don't think—I know!"

Gilder was in despair. What argument could avail him? He cried out sharply in desperation.

"Do you realize what you're doing? Don't go to smash, Dick, just at the beginning of your life. Oh, I beg you, boy, stop! Put this girl out of your thoughts and start fresh."

The reply was of the simplest, and it was the end of the argument.

"Father," Dick said, very gently, "I can't."

There followed a little period of quiet between the two. The father, from his desk, stood facing his son, who thus denied him in all honesty because the heart so commanded. The son rested motionless and looked with unflinching eyes into his father's face. In the gaze of each was a great affection.

"You're all I have, my boy," the older man said at last. And now the big voice was a mildest whisper of love.

"Yes, Dad," came the answer—another whisper, since it is hard to voice the truth of feeling such as this. "If I could avoid it, I wouldn't hurt you for anything in the world. I'm sorry, Dad, awfully sorry—" He hesitated; then his voice rang out clearly. There was in his tone, when he spoke again, a recognition of that loneliness which is the curse and the crown of being:

"But," he ended, "I must fight this out by myself—fight it out in my own way. . . . And I'm going to do it!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Burke Plots.

THE butler entered. "A man to see you, sir," he said. Gilder made a gesture of irritation, as he sank into the chair at his desk.

"I can't see any one to-night, Thomas," he exclaimed, sharply.

"But he said it was important, sir," the servant went on. He held out the tray insistently.

The master took the card grudgingly. As his eyes caught the name, his expression changed slightly.

"Very well," he said, "show him up." His glance met the wondering gaze of his son.

"It's Burke," he explained.

"What on earth can he want—at this time of night?" Dick exclaimed.

The father smiled grimly.

"You may as well get used to visits from the police."

There was something ghastly in his effort toward playfulness.

A moment later Inspector Burke entered the room.

"Oh, you're here, too," he said, as his eyes fell on Dick. "That's good! I wanted to see you, too."

Inspector Burke was, in fact, much concerned over the situation that had developed. He was a man of undoubted ability, and he took a keen professional pride in his work.

He possessed the faults of his class, was not too scrupulous where he saw a safe opportunity to make a snug sum of money through the employment of his official authority, was ready to truckle to those whose influence could help or hinder his ambition. But, in spite of these ordinary defects, he was fond of his work and wishful to excel in it.

Thus, Mary Turner had come to be a thorn in his side. She flouted his authority and sustained her incredible effrontery by a restraining order from the court. The thing was outrageous to him, and he set himself to match her cunning. The fact that she had involved Dick Gilder within her toils made him the more anxious to overcome her in the strife of resources between them.

After much studying, he had at last planned something that, while it would not directly touch Mary herself, would at least serve to intimidate her, and as well make further action easier against her.

It was in pursuit of this scheme that he now came to Gilder's house, and the presence of the young man abruptly gave him another idea that might benefit him well. So he disregarded Gilder's greeting, and went on speaking to the son.

Dick's Eyes Flashed.

"She's skipped!" he said triumphantly.

Dick made a step forward. His eyes flashed, and there was anger in his voice as he replied:

"I don't believe it."

The inspector smiled, unperturbed.

"She left this morning for Chicago," he said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go." He turned to the father, and spoke with an air of boastful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape, and you'll be all right."

"If we only could!"

The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

The inspector, however, was confident of success, and his tones rang cheerfully as he answered:

A LITTLE SIX-YEAR-OLD DARLING IS RESCUED FROM ITS MISERIES

Little Willie Shumate, the little six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Shumate, of 168 Kirkwood Avenue, this city, suffered like thousands of other little children are suffering. He was pale and puny; in his sleep he would roll and toss; in the morning his breath was bad, and during the day he was very nervous and constantly biting his finger nails or picking his nose. He was too young to take severe medicines and the parents were simply told not to worry, because the child would get over its troubles as he grew older. But the parents did worry. They could not help it, seeing their child in such constant misery. They called at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store and obtained a treatment of Quaker Extract. The child was given this remedy regularly according to directions, and the results came to light. He took one bottle and a half of the Extract, and expelled not one but a handful of small worms, some alive and some dead. These were the cause of the child's sufferings, and Quaker Extract, by removing the cause, cured the child. These worms were two inches long each. To-day the little fellow is happy as a lark and his happiness is shared by his loving parents, his cheeks are red and rosy.

The case again proves the powers of the wonderful Quaker Extract. If you suffer from rheumatism, catarrh or stomach worms, call at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store, 29 Marietta Street, for Quaker Extract, 6 for $5.00, 3 for $2.50 or $1.00 a bottle. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. Do not fail to call to-day and obtain good health. We prepay express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

"WHITEY" HURT, CRACKERS PLAY WRETCHED GAME

By Percy H. Whiting.

WHEN Whitey Alperman went over after a terrific grounder hit by Spencer in the sixth and caught the ball with the side of his head there was a gasp from the crowd. It was a terrific blow—enough to floor an ox. It didn't floor Whitey, quite, but it put him out of the game.

And through the rest of a gloomy afternoon the fans had a chance to think what a difference it would make to the Crackers if anything happened to Alperman.

The odd thing about Alperman is that he's playing better ball now than he ever played in his life.

It will be recalled that spite work put him out of the big leagues. He and Charley Ebbets had words and the Brooklyn mogul said he would spend $10,000 to keep "Whitey" out of the big leagues. So he sent him to Rochester. But when John Ganzel gave him up there was no question of spite work. Jawn thought he was "all through."

Last year Alperman played sensational ball. This year, with a better club, he is going even stronger.

Said King Brady, the other day, "I've known Alperman off and on through his whole career. He is playing better ball now than he ever did in his life—vastly better than when he was with Brooklyn. And he was a grand infielder then."

ALPERMAN has been a great man for Atlanta. His batting has been timely and his fielding phenomenal. Any man who could plug the gap that Otto Jordan left has some size to him. And Alperman has more than done it. If anything happened to old Whitey the Cracker team would be messed up proper.

IT was a freaky game the Crackers lost yesterday. Up to the seventh the Pelicans had made five hits and four runs. The Crackers had made eight hits and two runs. Then everybody "blew" at once on the Cracker side and the visitors romped, 8 to 2.

It was another wretched game for the Crackers. Good old Joe Dunn had a hideous time of it, Agler pulled a miscue that cost two runs, a couple of pops fell safe for lack of a little determination in getting under them, Tommy Long slumbered at the switch and failed to score from third on a slow double play at first and second and the Crackers wasted enough hits to win three ordinary games.

SEVERAL odd propositions developed. Seventy-seven per cent of the Pelicans' hits came after the fifth inning. Seventy-five per cent of the Crackers' hits were made by the first two men on the batting order. One hundred per cent were made by Long, Welchonce and Smith. Seventy-seven per cent of Atlanta's put-outs were made by the last three men in the batting order.

Everything went by spots. And it was a spotty, sloppy, chilly game.

THE Pels had all the luck. Spencer's home run over the signs was an easy loft. The same hit to center or left would undoubtedly have been an out to a fielder. A little pebble gave the ball that hit Alperman a bad bound, knocked out a steady infielder and cost another run. The Crackers batted terrifically but never at the right time. For instance, note this coincidence: Three times in succession Long hit a single and Welchonce followed him with a single. Twice none was out. Once one was out. Not once in three times could either Alperman or Bailey, two of the league's greatest pinch-hitters, deliver a safe swat.

Once or twice Pat was palpably off. In a close game it would have been exasperating. With everything shot to blazes anyhow it did not matter.

"But," as one of the ball players remarked, anent the fact that the veteran is generally wrong, "It's lucky Pat's name is Wright."

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 28.—A few days ago I discussed the different teams in the National League race in general. To-day I will return to the same subject, sizing up the Giants and Pirates. Both teams were off all over in the early part of the race.

The New York players displayed some of the worst fielding seen on any diamond since the late world's series. Nothing was sure to the Giants. The pitchers were also out of sorts, Tesreau failing to get moving and Marquard being out of condition from sickness. The Giants hopped into their fielding stride last week with a single bound, and the infield is moving like a string of firecrackers now. Instead of turning outs into base hits, as we were doing, the infielders are now cutting down base hits and converting them into outs, as several of the Pittsburg players will tell you if you get a chance to consult them. That helps.

Following this encouraging sign, both Tesreau and Marquard stepped out and pitched good baseball last week, Rube showing a very fine game against the Pirates when he got tangled up in a pitching battle with Camnitz, the one that went fourteen innings. His fast ball had the hop on it for the first time this season, and when he is getting the jump on his fast one he is one of the best southpaws in the business anywhere. Tesreau also stepped forth in the latter part of this same game and displayed his old speed and the break on his spitter which made him really the leading pitcher of the National League last season.

With these two men going at their best, the Giants are sure to get pitching. The only man on the staff not up to the top of his stride now is Al Demaree, the recruit who has shown such grand form so far this season. He strained his side recently, and will not be ready to work regularly again for about a week. But Tesreau can go to the box every other day if necessary, but it won't be necessary with Marquard and myself in shape to take our regular turns.

THE Giants have not hit up to anything like the pace they showed last season so far, but they should bat harder. Shafer, who has replaced Snodgrass in center field, is one of the most natural hitters I have ever seen, and it is impossible to get him to go after a bad ball. He has a wonderful eye and is a splendid judge of balls and strikes. His batting average does not show his true strength, because he reaches first base so often on passes. He is also lightning fast on the bases once he arrives, and will worry any pitcher badly.

Burns is capable of batting better than he is doing at present. He is still a little strange in the big league berth, but he is a good ball player.

Fletcher is batting hard, and Merkle and Murray have picked up within the last week. Meyers so far has not acquired his last season's punch.

The club will get batting, and then we should climb through the league like the gossip of a kiss through a boarding house.

PITTSBURG afrittered away ball games until it came to New York, when it took one of those sudden braces and battled us to a practical standstill. After leaving the Polo Grounds, the Pirates went over to Brooklyn and choked down the fond hopes of the Dodgers, when Dahlen had been led to expect something soft after the fine manner in which the Boston club cleaned up four straight on Clarke's crew. The Pirates have the pitching and the hitting, and will be in the contention for the championship.

BROOKLYN has started to fade, and I expect to see the team drop. Of course the club will not go down to the depths to which other Brooklyn teams have descended in years past, but it will be fighting to remain out of the second division before the last word is in.

THE St. Louis club is a big surprise, especially to the Giants, but it is going ahead of its normal speed now. It has not the staunchness to last. The team has two excellent pitchers, Harmon and Sallee, and Konetchy is a great ball player. So is Huggins. The rest of the team is nothing out of the ordinary, and a club must be out of the ordinary to win a pennant. Huggins' peppery personality has done a lot for the team. Sallee will do a lot more if he sticks in shape all season.

CARDINALS WILL HOLD ON TO JIMMY SHECKARD

ST. Louis, May 28.—A yarn emanating from Cincinnati to the effect that Jimmy Sheckard would be released by the Cardinal club because his salary was too bulky was spiked yesterday by Manager Huggins. "I have no intention of releasing Sheckard," declared the Cardinal commander, "and I want to state that emphatically. Sheckard is a great ball player, and he was paid accordingly by the Chicago club. We took over his contract, but we're not kicking. Whether he will play regularly is a question. Our club really hasn't shaped itself as yet."

WILLIAMS BREAKS YALE'S LONG WINNING STREAK

NEW HAVEN, CONN., May 28.—Williams broke Yale's record of seventeen consecutive victories by shutting out the Blue on Yale field yesterday, 2 to 0. The game was played on a water-soaked diamond, with the drizzling rain falling at intervals. Each team fielded brilliantly

The Athletics took a double-header in easy fashion from the Senators yesterday, winning the first 8 to 0 and the second 7 to 1. Eddie Plank, the veteran southpaw, pitched in the first and allowed the Senators only two hits.

Peckinpaugh, the former Nap utility infielder, secured in trade by the Yankees, will be given a regular position at shortstop. "Peck" is regarded as a fast and brilliant fielder, but somewhat shy with the war club.

Harry Lumley, once manager and star player with the Dodgers, has been released by the Troy, N. Y., team. An injury to his throwing wrist perhaps will neecssitate his retirement from baseball.

The Braves' second victory of the day was a clean-cut, deserved affair, but the first game was won on a fluke. In the ninth Sweeney hit to the outfield, and Connelly, rounding third, started for the plate. Burns would have thrown him out by nearly ten feet, but the ball, instead of bounding into Catcher Meyers' hand, struck Sweeney's discarded bat and bounded away, while Connelly scored the only run of the game.

Manager Stovall's triple in the seventh which scored a run, followed by Austin's single, scoring Stovall, were enough to gain a victory yesterday for the Browns over the Tigers.

C. Webb Murphy, owner of the Cubs, who recently forbade his players to converse with reporters, has another grievance against the newspapers. A short time back Murphy set out on the trail of "Rube" Scheur, a promising pitcher of the Superior, Wis., team, in the Northern League. The newspapers printed the fact and the Superior club owners at once boosted the price of Scheur so high that Murphy balked. Murphy now states the newspapers "queered my deal."

Dick Rudolph, the recruit from the Toronto team, in the International League, who pitched for the Braves Monday, holding the Giants at his mercy, acted as a relief pitcher again yesterday and once again the New Yorkers were unable to score on him.

By Left Hook.

LUTHER M'CARTY, one of the most valuable instruments of the getting of money under false pretenses in the hands of men who don't like to work, was finally killed in the prize-ring, a place he should never have been allowed to enter. He is the fifty-eighth victim of prize-fighting since the brutality has been eliminated, and it has been used solely to inculcate these principles of manliness and fair play that is invaluable to the youth of our city.

According to the doctors who examined the fighter's body, he had organic heart trouble. According to Jim Corbett and other experts who saw him shortly before he went into the fight with Pelky at Calgary, he was not in good condition. You will be interested to know how it was possible that a man with a bad heart could reach a position in pugilism where even a few gulls and greedy men could call him a champion of anything and draw crowds of a size that would justify their offering him $5,000 to fight for them. This is how it was done and how he was killed:

Up until recent years prize-fighting, the actual fighting, has been possible only to pure brutes, strong-thewed, iron-hearted animals. All fights were either to a finish or for twenty-five or forty-five rounds. This condition made McCarty impossible. It was a survival of the most uncivilized. With the growth of the influence of the public schools this type of man began to disappear. Young men with intelligence boxed or exercised and went into a decent business for a living.

Finally only two of the old breed were left, in two negroes—Johnson and Langford. It is white men who like to see fights and make pugilism possible, and they would not pay much to see the two negroes. Johnson and Langford had practically abolished heavyweight prize-fighting because there were no fighters fit to meet them.

This condition was bad for a number of men who had made a life work of capitalizing the degradation and blood lust of pugilism. They were threatened with the necessity of doing something useful or starving to death. They dug up the poor old ruin, Jeffries, and pitted him against Johnson, and followed with one or two valiant and unskillful youngsters, but the public wearied quickly of this sort of sport, and heavyweight fighting died.

It was up to these gentlemen to do something in a hurry. The Frawley bill was passed in New York, where the most money is, and this permitted ten-round fights. The ten-round limit is useful because with a little luck an invalid might go through with it and not die the same night. The boxing commission was created. Its business was, among other things, to see that it got enough revenue out of the prize-fighting game to pay its own salaries and expenses.

If Johnson and Langford were allowed to fight that would be practically impossible, so the only two real fighting men in the heavyweight division were barred. This let down the barriers with no real fighters to fear and everybody had a chance to make easy money. Inside of a year a horde of white hopes descended on New York.

They were big, unskilled, inept, clumsy, low-browed somnambulists who, for the most part, to do them justice, knew that they were not fighting men, but were willing to pose along, as there was money in it. The pace was slow; the fights were short, and one was as bad as another, so there was nothing to fear.

Shaky mitral valves and fat paunch didn't make any difference. In this atmosphere and out of this sort of material Luther McCarty was grown by hothouse methods into a white champion, so that he would draw just so many dollars to the box office. It is doubtful if he knew that his heart was weak. None of the men who were fattening on him would have told him. They could take a chance against the kind of men he was called upon to meet.

Had it been a day of real fighters he would never have gotten out of the preliminary class, and would soon have gone back to some decent work. And now the other incompetent (Pelky) is held for killing him, whereas the real authors of his death are the shrewd money getters who lied to him day after day and told him he could fight.

SOUTH ATLANTIC LEAGUE REVISES BALL SCHEDULE

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—A special meeting of the South Atlantic League magnates was held in Savannah yesterday for the purpose of making a number of revisions of the present playing schedule. These revisions are necessary because of the late entrance of Charleston into the circuit. Charleston is said to be suffering considerable inconvenience by reason of the present schedule.

Those in attendance on the meeting were President J. K. Pray, of the Albany club; President W. H. Walsh, of the Charleston club; Secretary Charles E. Walton, of the Columbus association; President A. W. Barrs, of the Jacksonville club; President M. J. Etherage, of the Macon club, and President George W. Armstrong, of the Savannah club.

GALLANT DEFEATS HOGAN.

BOSTON, May 28.—"One Round" Hogan, of California, who was substituted for K. O. Sweeney in the main bout at the Atlas A. A., was defeated in a ten-round bout with Johnny Gallant, of Boston, last night.

CHAPMAN HAS SIGNED.

Catcher Chapman, Bill Smith's new backstopper, will work for the local team to-day. He was signed last night and replaces Graham, who was released outright.

Get Up When I'm Going to Bed? No, Sir! — By "Bud" Fisher

100 MILES HOUR POSSIBLE AT MOTORDROME

That speeds of 100 miles an hour for short flashes will inevitably be reached on the new motordome, going up now at the old show grounds, is the belief of the motorcycle experts who are gathered here to follow the season of racing which is soon to start over Jack Prince's Southern circuit.

Already, with the top of the track completed, and with serious danger lurking in any speed over 75 miles an hour, the riders are hitting up a speed of 90 an hour. That gives a hint of what they will do later. Before they can really "let out" the track must be completed—and this will soon be done. To finish it two feet six inches of heavy planks will be placed at the top of the real racing surface. This surface now in place is at an angle of 58 degrees. The new planking will be placed at 90 degrees—or "straight up." On top of this, also at 90 degrees, will be extremely heavy wire netting, four feet six inches high. On top of this will be the guard rail.

Men Will "Ride the Wire."

When the wire netting and the planks are in place the real speeding will begin. And when this happens the riders will not only ride on the 58-degree surface, but they will actually mount the perpendicular wall and will even ride on the wire netting.

With everything in place the riders can begin to find out what speed the track really has. It is their opinion that it is extremely fast. It has been particularly well constructed and seems right in every particular.

Not Motorcycles Here.

To add to the speed possibilities two new consignments of racing motorcycles have been shipped to the track from different factories, and they are the latest and most improved machines, made strictly for speed, and faster than anything of their size ever built before. Every morning and afternoon now the riders are tuning up their machines and getting them ready for the big doings.

On a good board track the speed limits are usually the nerve and the strength of the driver. The track, when once a man is fairly started, is nothing but a flat road of boards. There is nothing in the way and no turns to take—for the track is a perfect circle.

No Limit But the Sky.

It takes tremendous nerve and coolness to hold a machine steady at high speed, and it takes great power to hold its nose down and to keep it from going straight up and over the top. Aside from this, there is no limit to the speed except the power of the engines, and they are built fast enough to go at a rate faster than man ever rode before.

LIEBHARDT WILL HOOK UP WITH TURTLE TEAM

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—"Sugar Glen" Liebhardt, renowned in song and story as the "Iron Man of the Minors," will return to the Southern League as a member of the Memphis pitching staff as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made by Manager Bernhard. While no announcement has been made to the effect, it is understood that Floyd Kroh, the erratic left-hander, will be released.

BEAUMONT CLUB WILL GET PITCHER WEAVER

Orlie Weaver will probably go to Beaumont, Texas, instead of to New Orleans. Charley Frank has refused to take Weaver unless he can get a clear title to his services, and Smith is not willing to give him up on that basis. Waivers have been secured on him and he will be sent to the Texas League.

CALGARY.

A human life snuffed out, and all for what?
A youth who played the game and reckoned not;
A crowd of human creatures known as men,
And every manlike instinct all forgot.

A crowd of creatures, all in human shape,
Who sit beside the shambles, all agape,
And cry for crimson blood, and still more blood—
And yet men frown upon the lowly ape!

Were we a politician with a desire to commit political suicide, our first move would be to support a bill legalizing the alleged manly art of self-defense.

We have various reasons to be thankful, one of which is that we are not Arthur Pelky.

Clark Griffith informs us that Walter Johnson has not attained his best form, but the form that he has attained is good enough to suit at least seven teams in the American League.

Not that we are prone to find fault with Charley Murphy, but if baseball players were to hold more conversations with baseball scribes and less with barkeeps there would be more regular baseball played.

There is no truth in the report that Mr. Murphy does not allow his athletes to talk to him. Among the athletes this is considered hard luck.

Garry Herrmann puts forth the information that the purpose of the national baseball agreement is to protect baseball players. This will be news to baseball players.

Somehow we have a hunch that even if those English poloists do happen to win there will not be any general mourning.

Some day some wise guy will tell us why it is that, when a baseball league opens its schedule the first ball must be heaved by a mayor or a sheriff or a constable or a justice of the peace or an alley inspector or something.

MERELY A PLEASANT DREAM.

It happened in a cosy spot across the River Styx.
A portly gent who lingered there was in an awful fix.
A crowd of wild and howling imps were walking on his toes
I said to Satan: "Why abuse yon poor old helpless guy?"
"That person owned a baseball park on earth," he made reply.
"Not only that," he ambled on, with visage grim and dark.
"He is the guy who introduced the peddlers in the park."

MEMPHIS HEARS THAT ATLANTA WANTS KROH

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—Memphis to-day made a cash offer for Third Baseman Frank Manush, of New Orleans, and was turned down by Manager Frank, who insisted that Manush would not be sold unless it were to some major league club. At present the infielder is out of the game, nursing a wrenched leg.

It was also announced that Manager Bernhard would confer with Third Baseman Bales when the Memphis club reached Chattanooga Thursday. Whether the collegian will be taken on depends upon the showing of Abstein. Ward has given perfect satisfaction at third, and if any further change is made it will have to do with first base.

Waivers have been asked on Pitcher Floyd Kroh, and sea-deep information is to the effect that Bill Smith, of Atlanta, may take the erratic southpaw on for a try-out.

BRONCHO RIDING IS BLAMED FOR M'CARTY'S DEATH

By Ed W. Smith

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight and Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 28—Despite the exonerating verdict of the Coroner's jury Monday night, both Arthur Pelky, or Peltier, as his right name is, and Tommy Burns were held in $10,000 each at a court hearing to answer to the charge of manslaughter preferred by the Dominion Government for the death of Luther McCarty in the ring of Tommy Burns' arena.

Pelky was held directly; Burns as promoter of the contest. The other two concerned—William McCarney, manager of McCarty, and Referee Ed Smith—were detained for a short time only as witnesses and later were permitted to leave the city of Calgary and the country upon furnishing a bond of $500 each and their promise to appear here at some later date to testify during the trial.

Bonds were furnished in all cases without trouble, townspeople flocking out plentifully to sign the court documents.

The preliminary hearing was before Inspector Duffus at the mounted police barracks, and practically the same testimony was gone over as that at the Coroner's jury hearing. Both McCarney and Smith testified at length with Pelky in the prisoner's cage. Burns was not heard, as he was held to be equally guilty with Pelky.

McCarney Off for East.

A strong effort was made by the crown to show that McCarney was an equal promoter in the show with Burns, but this failed and the Philadelphia man was permitted to leave on the midnight train with the body of McCarty.

Dr. H. H. Moshier, the man who declared that the death of McCarty was due to a fractured spine at the base of the brain resulting in a hemorrhage, again was called and repeated what he had said the day before. As a result nothing new was brought out and the case remained as mysterious as it was ten minutes after McCarty had been declared dead.

Billy McCarney, manager of McCarty, gave me his first statement of what he thought was the matter with McCarty in the ring. After hearing McCarney and the testimony of the doctors I am strongly of the opinion that McCarty received a slight fracture of the neck during some practice work he did with bucking broncos a short time before the contest.

McCarney said to me before boarding his train with the body of McCarty:

"These doctors say that a fracture of the kind might have been received within four days of autopsy and that there then would be no fibrous growth around the injury.

Luther delighted to ride fractious horses and get them to buck. He often got some nasty twists in this way and I was forever begging him to cease the sport that he thought was so good. But he would not, and I have an idea that he might have been injured in this way and not known it."

McCarney is out of the boxing game for good, he said. He will make no attempt to find anybody to take McCarty's place in his estimation, and will go into the theatrical profession, in which he has made many friends.

Wife Will Accompany Remains.

On the way East McCarney expected Mrs. Luther McCarty to board the train and accompany the remains into Chicago and beyond into Ohio, where the burial will take place at Piqua.

The settlement of Luther's estate will be made at that time. It is known that Luther's ambition was to provide for the future of the child now two years old. McCarney will endeavor to arrange to carry out the "big boy's" wishes in this matter. Luther's father will be waiting the arrival of the remains at Piqua.

HOPPE BEATS JAP CUE EXPERT EASILY, 500 TO 33

NEW YORK, May 28.—Willie Hoppe successfully defended his world's billiard championship title at 18-inch balk line, two shots in, against the challenger, Kodji Yamada, of Japan, here, the score being 500 to 33.

Since the rules of the game were so changed that the "anchor" was barred, no other such one-sided championship game has been seen. Hoppe won the bank, but failed to score when he led off. Yamada ran 15 and this was his best attempt, as in the next ten innings he added only 18.

GIBBONS STOPS SHAW.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Tom Gibbons, of St. Paul, scored an easy victory last night over Johnny Shaw, of Fort Hamilton, Ontario. The bout was stopped in the third round.

KEEFE BESTS DRISCOLL.

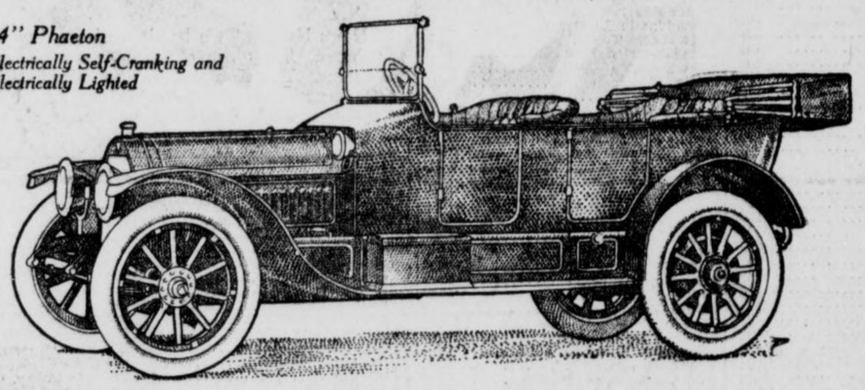
The World's Largest Builders of Six-Cylinder Automobiles

"54" Phaeton
Electrically Self-Cranking and Electrically Lighted



Study the Dealer as Intently as You Do the Car

Do not purchase an automobile of a dealer in whom you cannot have complete confidence. Personality is a large factor in business dealings. The dealer whose personality engenders your confidence in him, whose business principles are sound, who is prosperous and for whom owners of cars he has sold say good words is the logical man from whom you can safely purchase an automobile.

If you would know the value of dealers' service in the operation of an automobile, you have but to consult men who have owned several different makes of cars and, if you will talk with any HUDSON owner, you will appreciate the value of the type of service we furnish to the owner of an automobile.

All business is done solely on confidence.

Confidence of one man in another. If you cannot have confidence in a dealer who sells the car you have selected, then yours is an unsafe purchase.

The Service You Buy When Your Choice is a HUDSON

There is scarcely any limit to which we will not go to insure HUDSON owners the fullest satisfaction from their cars. We are more interested in you and your motoring interests after we have sold you the car than before you have bought. Yet, we realize that this is contrary to the attitude of the average automobile concern.

This service that we give you is but keeping faith with the Hudson Motor Car Company. There is a clause in our contract with the factory, which insures every purchaser of the highest standard of motor car service to be had, and this we cheerfully and rigidly adhere to in our deals with owners.

The New HUDSON "Six" rose to a higher point as a sales success than any 6-cylinder car has ever seen in the same length of time it has been on the market. Its exceptional performance has been unusual among 6-cylinder cars.

Its smooth, sweet-running mechanism gives a sensation of flying that is lacking in a 4-cylinder car. You can throttle it down to 3 miles an hour on high speed and pick up to 60 miles an hour with smoothness and ease that will be a revelation to you, if you have owned 4-cylinder cars.

You can go through city traffic at 3 miles an hour on high, with every cylinder hitting as smoothly as if you were going ten times as fast.

Avoid Disappointment in Getting Delivery

Ninety per cent of HUDSON orders are for spring delivery—hence, within a few days, it will be impossible to secure a delivery date for a car.

Hence, we cannot impress too strongly upon prospective purchasers the necessity of securing a fixed delivery date for their cars.

It would be well to come see the New HUDSON "Six" at your earliest convenience, or write or phone for new catalog.

The "54" Phaeton sells at $2450. The "37"—the "Four-cylinder masterpiece"—is $1875, prices f. o. b. Detroit.

BIG VOTE GAINS MAKE PONY CONTEST MORE EXCITING EVERY DAY

Saturday night the lists close in The Georgian and American's pony contest, and the entrants will "run it out" without further competition.

The list has gone well beyond 300 and includes boys and girls from all parts of Atlanta and the State and widely scattered areas outside the State.

One advantage the contestants are overlooking to a large extent is the fact that payments of overdue accounts bring votes just the same as the identical amount paid on new subscriptions. Boys and girls whose parents, relatives or acquaintances owe anything for subscriptions to The Georgian and American can collect the money themselves, bring it in and be credited with votes.

The same interview will open an opportunity for them to seek renewals, so even if they know that acquaintances have been taking The Georgian and American they may profit by seeing them and canvassing for votes.

Big gains continue to be shown in the vote column. From now on the races promise to grow more exciting daily. Names and standing of contestants follow:

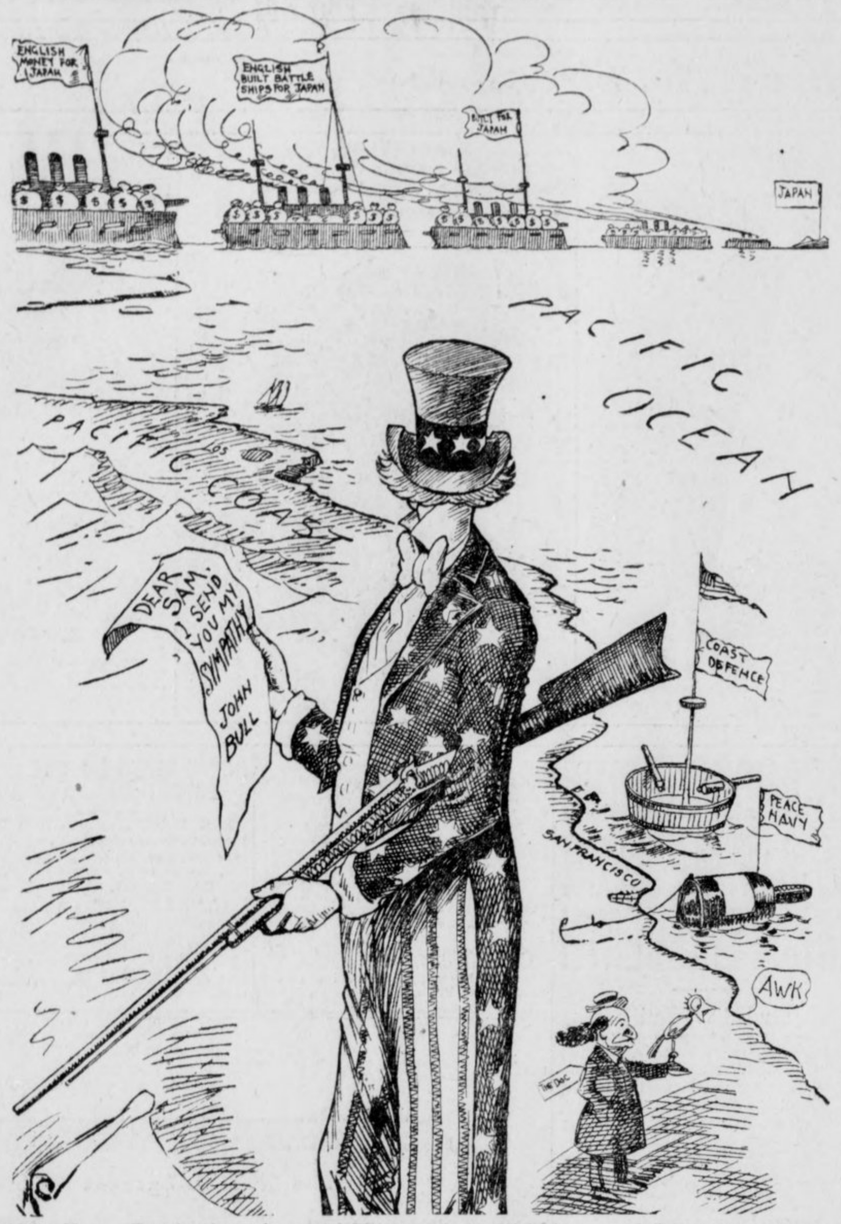
SYMPATHY AND GUNBOATS



News Note: Two battle cruisers, the Kongo and the Kirishima, are being built in England for Japan. They are of 25,000 tons dsplacement and 27 knots speed. They are armed with 13 1-2 inch guns. The Kongo is about completed. Former Secretary Meyer expressed belief that these battle cruisers are as powerful as any battleships afloat and of five knots greater speed. Within the past week Japan has purchased at least four ships suitable for transports in England. They are the Narrung, Benacre, Bentola and Vadala. All are of more than 3,000 tons displacement.

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

It is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. You can obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" at any drug store at $1.00, and it will be the best dollar's worth you ever obtained. It preserves the mother's health, enables her to make a quick and complete recovery, and thus renewed strength she will eagerly devote herself to the care and attention which mean so much to the welfare of the child. Write to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 129 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their valuable and instructive book of guidance for expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

Blanche Walsh Here Monday in 'Movies'

An innovation in Atlanta's motion picture world will be the appearance all next week of Blanche Walsh, celebrated emotional actress, in a picture presentation of "The Resurrection," Tolstoi's drama, at the Grand Theater Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

Not a point that made the drama a success has been missed. Miss Walsh hesitated before risking her reputation to the "movies," but when she had seen the film, she declared it a wonderful success.

COTTON SAGS ON BEARISH ADVICES

NEW YORK, May 28.—Influenced by easier cables and further bearish weather news, the cotton market opened easy to-day, first prices being 1 to 3 points lower than Tuesday's final. Old crop deliveries came in for considerable pressure, but was also some liberal selling of new positions. Later the cable prices rallied.

Liverpool was said to be a seller of July after the call, but the large spot interest purchased July in rather large volume, causing the market to steady, with the result that prices rallied about 1 to 4 points higher than the initial level. The selling was scattered.

During the forenoon the ring crowd was inclined to sell on the favorable map and the selling became freer. The buying of July was scattered and those buying seemed to be selling the new crop. Schill and Mitchell sold July as well as late positions.

The market developed a reactionary tendency, May dropping 8 points to 11.45, while July receded 3 points from the opening. New crop months, however, held steady around the opening level.

A certain broker issued notices today for 10,000 May, which was said to be for Liverpool account. This, however, had no effect, and fell flat on the market.

Theo Price, in this week's issue of his market report, is decidedly bearish. The report, in part, follows: "American short interest about covered and obtained its cotton from visible and invisible supply. Unless if July prices are forced to extreme there is enough tenderable low grade cotton to liquidate that position. He refers to present large excess of interior stocks, and says crop has improved since rains fell. Think people expect Bureau of 83.5. Believe acreage will be increased about 5 per cent."

The market gave up to the bearish influences during the last hour of trading when the ring and brokers representing spot houses dumped considerable cotton upon the market. July was heavily sold, but ruled extraordinarily steady. October and December were also under pressure. The market held remarkably steady and the offerings were absorbed by prominent operators. May notices tendered during the early trading were stopped by spot houses and was quickly redelivered, as it was not of a desirable grade for shipment.

It seems as if every one is awaiting the Government figures to be made public Monday, June 2, and we may expect a very narrow market until this report is out of the way.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 4 to 10 points from Tuesday's close.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—Liverpool shows decided weakness this morning with futures 2 to 4 points lower than due. Spots unchanged; sales, 10,000 bales. Political news is not good. London says that the powers practically extended an ultimatum to the allies to force the signing of the peace pact with Turkey. Forced peace of this character is hardly satisfactory.

The Journal of Commerce on Texas attracted much attention, as it is entirely out of line with information received from the best private sources. It appears strange, indeed, that Texas should be three weeks late on account of cold weather and the Oklahoma crop early, when, as a master of fact, Government records show that Oklahoma temperatures have all along been on an average of 6 to 13 degrees colder than in Texas.

The market opened about 5 points lower, but sellers were scarce owing to anticipation of further professional support in New York, which, in fact, made its appearance soon after the opening and caused a rally of 5 points. According to New York advices this support is furnished with the intention of benefiting from short covering before the holidays. New York will be closed Friday and Saturday. The bureau report to May 28 will be issued Monday, June 2, at 11 a. m., our time. We compare with a belt average of 78.9 last year, 87.8 in 1911, 82 in 1910, and ten-year average of 79.9. The trade looks for a report between 81 and 84.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 28.—Liverpool sold July on and after the call, but after the call McFadden, Wilson, Riordan and Hubbard were buyers of July. The selling was scattered. Later the ring sold on favorable weather map and easier feeling abroad. Mitchell and Schill were the leading sellers.

Hentz issued 10,000 notices on May, which was said to be for Liverpool. These notices were stopped by Hopkins, Dwight & Co., Robert More & Co. and Rich.

Mitchell and Schill were fair sellers of July; also new crop positions.

Warehouse stocks in New York today are 72,970; certificated 60,222 bales.

Norden & Cc. makes the condition of the crop 85 per cent and acreage increase 4.7 per cent.

About 800 replies received by the Georgia State Department of Agriculture are the basis of a report by that office that 23 per cent of the crop has been replanted and the average planting time is seventeen days late. Acreage has decreased about 6 per cent, compared with last year, but the condition is 82 per cent.

Last week Turner, of Memphis, made the condition of Georgia 74 per cent, and Monday The Commercial-Appeal made it 72 per cent.

George W. Neville, of the New York Cotton Exchange, in his annual report on the New York Cotton Exchange, said: "During the past five years when the New York Cotton Exchange was subjected to so much unjust criticism, there was never any complaint made of members resorting to undignified methods of soliciting business, but recently some of our members have expressed opinions in their market letters in such a way as to cause the complaint and supervisory committees to go thoroughly into this matter and reprimands have been administered."

The New York Cotton Exchange is to be congratulated on being so careful to maintain a high standard of business conduct among its members.

The Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crop in Texas and Oklahoma:

Texas—"Estimates of acreage do not vary greatly from a month ago, when an increase of 3.5 per cent was indicated. The percentage of condition will be approximately the same as last year, when it was 81.8 per cent. The season is very late, being nearly three weeks backward, due chiefly to cold weather. Considerable cotton is not yet up, and a number of farmers have not finished planting. Some replanting has been necessary. Rain has generally been plentiful and the ground is in a good state of preparation. Stands are rather spotted, but prospects are generally favorable."

Oklahoma—"A very substantial increase in acreage is indicated for Oklahoma over last year. Percentage condition will probably show a considerably higher figure than a year ago, when it was 78.7 per cent. Stands are very generally good and the crop has an excellent start. Rains have been somewhat excessive in some localities and grass is making headway. Some correspondents consider prospects the best in years. The season is early in many sections, but in the majority of cases ten to fifteen days late."

T. H. Price presents a bearish view of the cotton market in this week's issue of Cotton and Finance.

The Federal Grand Jury has postponed the inquiry into the cotton pool case indefinitely.

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable; shows cloudy in the Atlantics; fair elsewhere. General rains in North Georgia and Carolinas. Some good rains in Carolinas, where they will be of great benefit. Indications are for fair and warmer over the entire belt, except possibly some showers on the Atlantic coast.

Memphis wires: "Generally fair and warmer weather is indicated for all cotton States. Heavy rains fell yesterday in North Carolina. Little or none elsewhere. Very favorable conditions."

BEAR PRESSURE PUTS STOCKS OFF

Receivership for St. L. and S. F. Railway Has Bad Effect on Foreign Capital.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Pressure was exerted on the list at the opening, of the stock market to-day, and declines ranging from fractions to 2 points were sustained. St. Louis and San Francisco shares were the weakest in consequence of the appointment of a receiver for the road in St. Louis. Frisco common was 1⅝ lower, selling around 31½, while the second preferred lost 2 points. Union Pacific and Southern Pacific bore up well. The former gained ½, while the latter, after sharing fractionally, recovered.

American Smelting was sold for a loss of 1½. Other issues which were off were Amalgamated Copper, ⅛; American Can, ¼; Canadian Pacific, ⅛; General Electric, ⅝; Missouri Pacific, ½; Pennsylvania, ⅝, and United States Steel common, ⅛.

Steel soon recovered its loss. St. Paul also recovered its fractional decline in twenty minutes of trading. Chesapeake and Ohio opened ¼ up, but lost late gain. Reading gained fractionally after opening unchanged.

The curb market was irregular. Despite the suit brought in London charging that an illegal pool was formed for speculation in shares of American Marconi stock after the Titanic disaster, this issue was only ⅝ lower on the curb.

Americans in London drooped.

The market continued irregular and dull during the forenoon and recessions were in evidence. Smelting declined 1⅝ to 66⅛. Copper was off ⅝ at 73¼. Canadian Pacific was off ⅛ at 232. Southern Pacific was up ⅛. Steel, St. Paul and Reading were off ¼. Chesapeake and Ohio was up 6¼ at 64⅜.

Call money loaning at 2⅜c.

Most active issues shaded in the last hour. Canadian Pacific sold down to 229⅞, for a loss of 2⅛, but later recovered. Reading fell to 159⅞, for the loss of a point, but it rallied in the final half-hour. Other stocks which were under the noon range were St. Paul, Erie, Steel, Union Pacific and Pennsylvania.

Amalgamated Copper held firm.

PRICE CURRENT CROP REPORT.

CINCINNATI, May 28.—Corn planting in Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas and Nebraska has been seriously delayed by wet weather. In the southern territory of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma an extremely spotted condition has developed. Rain is needed in portions of this territory, particularly to relieve the hard surface conditions. Growth of winter wheat continues favorable. No critical conditions are in sight.

The crop thus far has not been molested to any extent by pests. We estimate the yield 335,320,000 bushels on present conditions for Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

The growth and condition of oats in the northern territory are above the ten-year average, while the condition in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois is below the ten-year average. Farm reserves of wheat in the twelve leading States are 11.6 per cent, oats 17.6, corn 19 per cent.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red .....98 @105
Oats—No. 2 .....38⅝@ 39

CHICAGO, May 28.—Many of the early buyers of wheat changed their positions late in the day and sold wheat quite freely and some of this grain showed severe losses. There were declines of ⅛ for September, ⅜ for July and ⅝ for May. The last prices were ⅛ to 1c below the highest levels of the morning. There were unconfirmed rumors late in the day of rains in scattered localities over Kansas.

Corn closed ⅛ to ¼c lower, while oats were ¼ to 3⅛c higher. The most strength in coarse grains was to be seen in the May future, as shorts were covering in that month.

Provisions closed a shade lower for the day for all save July ribs and September pork.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

If Little Chicks Are Properly Fed Loss Will Be Less

Wholesome Advice by an Expert Who Has Tried It From Every Angle.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Judge Marshall: I want to ask you a number of questions, if you will not think I am too greedy for information.

I live on a farm about two miles from town and am trying to raise chickens enough to make a living from.

I do very well with those I succeeded in raising, but I loose about half of my chicks before they are two weeks old.

As soon as the chicks are hatched I give them a good feed of mash, composed of equal parts of corn meal and wheat bran mixed with hot water, allowing it to cool a little before feeding. I feed this once a day and cracked corn three times a day; but I have much trouble with sparrows eating up the feed.

I also have much trouble with the red mites bothering my sitting hens, which I seem unable to control.

Then, again, I have trouble every summer by having great, big, fat hens drop dead without any warning. They will be apparently well one day and the next they will be dead. They are very fat and fine and I see no reason why they should die thus.

I always feed a little good condition powder of some kind three times a week.

If it is not asking too much of you I should appreciate an answer to these troubles. I am yours very truly, MRS. E. E. SPEER.

Tifton, Ga.

Cut Out Wet Mash.

ANSWER—We have texts enough for a number of good sermons but will have to do like the boy said he did in hunting for the cows: Go to the end of the lane and scatter.

First, in regard to the little chicks, I would say cut out the wet mash entirely, or, at least, until they are two months old and then if you want to use some of your feed in that way it will be all right, but not for the newly hatched ones. Feed rolled oats dry, and the cracked corn fine enough so they can eat it well, providing you can not get the ready mixed chick feed at your grocers in Tifton. But there is no question that the rolled oats is good, and so is the corn, but feed them absolutely dry.

Another place where you have erred seriously is in feeding as soon as hatched, if that is what you intended to say.

There is nothing that will so quickly get the digestive organs out of order, or, for that matter, prevent them from ever getting in order, as feeding newly hatched chicks at first once. Give them a chance to season out a little, as one old poultryman used to say. When they first hatch they are a jelly, as it were, and it takes a day or two for them to toughen up, ready to digest what is given them. So, the way to do is to wait forty-eight hours before any feed is given. They will not starve, but be all the better for the little fast. They may have a good supply of sharp sand to peck at. Then feed the rolled oats or prepared dry chick feed. This can be continued until they can handle coarser cracked corn and wheat.

Green Feed Necessary.

All the while they must have good green stuff of some kind and a little dried beef scrap after they are three weeks old, and I think you will have no trouble if everything is kept clean and free from mites. The sparrows can be controlled by feeding under wire netting runs.

When you set your hens, move them out of the hen house into some clean shed, or, for that matter, out of doors, using barrels for the nest. But you should not have them in the houses. Take a pint of oil of tar, a pint of gasoline, three quarts of kerosene; mix thoroughly and spray or pour over the roosts and the sides of the house where the roost poles rest. If this is attended to an hour before roosting time, it will usually about finish the job, both on the poles and the hens. If any are left on the hens, dust them thoroughly with some good lice powder. After they have been really cleaned out, it will pay to grease the poles with hot lard and a brush.

As to your loosing your fat hens by sudden deaths, I would say that I think you have been using too much condition powders. In my estimation even a little is too much when hens are in health and laying. You have weakened their digestive organs by overstimulation, coupled with too much fat in hens that are, no doubt, over two years old. When hens get a little old and fat, heavy behind, it is the best policy to send them to the butchers.

Such hens have passed their useful time. They have slowed up on laying and with no drain upon their systems they fill up with fat inside, where it presses on the heart and is the cause of the sudden deaths you speak of. It is no trouble to detect such hens in the yard, and it is a good plan to weed them while they are in good health, rather than wait for them to come to the sudden death referred to.

Deed Filed in Purchase of $19,750 Lots on Paces Ferry Road. Other Notes.

Papers in the sale of two residences on Ponce DeLeon Avenue and one on Gordon Street in West End have gone to record. Minnie M. Costner has sold to J. E. McRee 403 Gordon Street, 373 feet south of Holderness Street, for $9,000.

John B. Daniel has sold to J. T. Tuggle, 644 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, 50 by 180 feet, for $12,500.

Mrs. Mattie F. Huggins has sold to Mrs. Kate G. Pryor, 346 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, 343 feet east of North Boulevard, for $13,000. The lot is 38 by 321 feet.

Executors' Deed Filed.

An interesting executors' deed has also been filed. This conveys to Robert F. Maddox two tracts of land adjoining his country place, "Woodlawn," for an aggregate of $19,750. The grantors are Mrs. Gertrude J. Dickey and others, executors of the estate of the late James L. Dickey.

Favor Roswell Road Work.

E. T. Luckie, of the Holmes & Luckie Realty Company, reports good progress in the work of signing up property owners who favor widening the Roswell Road 20 feet from Buckhead to Piedmont Road. Among the signers are John W. Grant, F. M. Brownell and George B. Powell, who have an aggregate of about 3,000 feet of frontage; George M. Hope, J. H. and J. M. Karwisch, L. W. Rogers, C. S. Honour, J. L. Riley and A. C. Walters.

Building Owners Organize.

For the purpose of perfecting a permanent organization and for inviting the National Association of Building Owners and Managers to Atlanta in 1914, local office building and apartment house owners and managers met Tuesday. The new body is known as the Association of Building Owners and Managers of Atlanta, and it has decided to send a committee to Cincinnati next month to present its invitation to the national association.

Action of the "big building" men in combining is taken as an indication that the office building and apartment house business in Atlanta will take great strides forward in future. Among the members of the new association are Ivan E. Allen, Fred Houser, Charles E. Wilkinson, A. W. Martin, Fred Shaefer, J. B. Pendleton, J. M. Barclay, J. M. Shearer, W. B. Stovall and J. L. Fincher. One hundred members are expected to join.

Auction Sale Saturday.

John H. James, auctioneer, will sell at public outcry Saturday 40 lots on Ashby Street for J. T. Elliott, the owner. Mr. James has plats at his office.

Inquiries for Colonial Home.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, reports many inquiries for the colonial home which he will auction off Thursday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at 101 West Tenth Street. This home is a two-story brick affair and the property of W. C. Harper.

More Peachtree Improvements.

Peachtree has been promised another substantial business building. C. J. Sheehan will erect at once a two-story structure on the east side of the thoroughfare between Pine and Merritts Avenue. There are already several automobile shops in this block.

Mr. Sheehan traded for this 21 by 186 foot lot through the Cheatham Brothers' real estate agency, giving to Dr. A. W. VanHoose, of Rome, 228 South Pryor Street and 135 Davis Street, for $11,500, and paying the balance in cash and notes. The Peachtree property brought $26,250, or $1,250 a front foot. Dr. VanHoose recently sold 21 feet at this point to Ben J. Massell, who has put a sign on his lot announcing that he will build for acceptable tenant.

Speech and Thought Make Our Lives

Everything That We Do Is Accomplished in Time BY THOUGHT. Thinking Is Your Only Real Power; Time Is Your Real Property—and There Is Little of It.

Copyright, 1913.

We human beings ceased to be animals and became MEN when we first used thought in place of brute strength.

At some distant day in our development the animal that preceded us here made up its feeble mind that there was something better than strength, teeth and claws, and began to use its little brain.

This animal, our ancestor, the so-called pithecanthropos, or monkey-man, observed the saber-toothed tiger ripping open the stomach of a monster three times its size, watched the mammoth ploughing through swamps, crushing down trees, observed the great reptiles and all other proofs of brute force, and, without realizing it, this ancestor said vaguely to himself:

"I can't compete when it comes to teeth and claws, weight and bulk. I am a feeble thing in this jumble of power and battle. I must THINK the way out."

And so our real human life began.

Our ancestor with a forehead one-quarter of an inch high, a jaw that stuck out as far as the jaw of a gorilla, with teeth bigger than any of those of any bulldog, and with long arms dropping below the knees, that could crush a man of to-day with ease—this old ancestor of ours decided that he would get out of the battle for supremacy of muscle and teeth and see what could be done with the brain AND WITH THINKING.

You can imagine how the thinking process started.

It was hardly real thought at first, just a kind of intelligent impulse. Our ancestor sat up in a tree rubbing his nose and looking at the saber-toothed tiger that couldn't climb.

He saw the shining teeth, six inches long perhaps, and he didn't like the looks of them.

Later, when the tiger was gone, he climbed down and picked up a sharp flint, ten inches long, heavier, sharper and harder than the tiger's tooth.

He held this in his hand, struck his brother with it, killed the brother, and felt highly satisfied with his intellectual accomplishment.

He had discovered that a tooth made of stone, held at the end of an arm four feet long, could do as much damage as the tooth of a tiger.

So he fastened his sharp flint to the end of a piece of wood, sat in the tree, stabbed the tiger in the back as he passed, broke his backbone, ate his flesh, took the teeth to make implements and ornaments for himself—and so began the thinking human race.

Later man used explosive dynamite shells in place of sharp flints, he dwelt in skyscrapers in place of holes in the rocks, he used flying machines in place of canoes dug out of a log.

BUT ALL THE TIME HE WAS A THINKING ANIMAL INSTEAD OF AN ANIMAL RELYING ON STRENGTH, TEETH, MUSCLE, THICK HIDE, CLAWS.

And every step that he gained in his upward climb toward control of the earth and dominion over the animals was gained by the THOUGHT that was started when he made up his mind to use the sharp flint and conquer the long white tooth

He is a descendant of all the thinkers of three hundred thousand years past.

He comes in an unbroken line from the old half monkey, half thinking creature that discovered the possibility of conquering animals stronger than himself.

And this thinker on the ash barrel in poverty, in anxiety, in remorse, is unfortunately the type of many of those—more than half, probably—who represent the so-called "civilization and marvels of achievement."

This picture is a copy, simply made, of Rodin's great statue, "Le Penseur."

In the picture that we print on this page the artist shows the man of sorrow and of weakness, pitifully trying to use for his betterment and for his defense the power which has been man's only weapon.

Readers, whether you be old or young, realize NOW that your salvation, your hope, your chances in life, are all in the thinking power hidden away in your head.

How much will you use that power of thought?

How long are you going to wait to use it efficiently?

To what extent can you make thought, recently acquired by men, control the animal forces and passions that date back millions of years to our earliest ancestors of the days when this earth was young?

Are you going to use your power, your health, your clear mind, and your will NOW to solve your problems and protect yourself, and be a benefit to the human race, or are you to wait, and waste, and wonder, and delay, until it is too late, as with this man?

The Thinker

He Thinks Hard, Bitterly—But Too Late. Thought Conquers and Solves Life's Problems, but Only When the Thought Controls the Power of the Body and the Mind. When the Power is Gone, THOUGHT COMES TOO LATE. (SEE EDITORIAL.)

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Ill Temper

If Allowed to Progress in Children, Its Effect Is Felt in Later Generations to Destroy Often the Happiness of Many Homes.

Written For The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

SOMETHING like one hundred and twenty-five years ago, a little girl was born in New England. She was pretty and bright, and her parents made much of her; and she soon became a spoiled child in the way of disposition.

She was irritable and fault-finding; and these tendencies were not corrected, but excused on the ground that "Abbie was high-strung," and "smart," and "not like other ordinary children."

She married, young, a man of rare sweetness of character, and with an inexhaustible patience. He was devoted to his handsome wife, and she made him a very good consort, so far as her industry and economy and loyalty went.

But she worried him with her fault-finding and irritability.

He made the great mistake of establishing his wife with his relatives, and all her quarrelsome and irritable tendencies were, of course, aggravated.

She bore him six children, and as she had never been taught anything of the laws of prenatal influence, she fretted and complained about the increasing numbers of her children, before their birth.

Erred in Telling Them.

And after they came into life and she grew to love them she made the great error of telling them how unwelcome they had been. This was especially true of the second child, who was scarcely a year younger than her older sister.

This second child inherited all her mother's irritable characteristics and prided herself upon being extremely high-spirited and capable of "answering back" with some sharp retort.

She, too, was excused, and even lauded for her peculiarities.

She was regarded as "out of the common" and "just like Abbie."

When she married her husband did not possess the amiable qualities of her father, and, of course, discord soon prevailed.

Children came into this home, and so a second generation was reared in this unfortunate atmosphere.

The grandmother lived until she reached the age of ninety-four, and with each year her disposition grew more unpleasant.

When the daughter visited at her old home there was always bickering and scolding and quarrelling.

And into these family fusses three generations were drawn.

Then came a fourth generation, after the grandmother died, and this fourth generation was brought up under the same conditions, and to-day this generation is cursed with the original uncurbed temper and unhappy tendency to find fault of the first great-grandmother, which came down through the second grandmother and the father, and was, like a river, fed from streams running into it from other branches, which all became corrupted when the original stream was approached.

Have Wrecked Homes.

Sisters have become enemies, brothers quarrel; jealousy, ill temper, gossip, back-biting and all manner of bad habits, resulting from uncontrolled temper, have destroyed homes, and in some of these homes a fifth generation of little children is becoming infected.

And all this might have been averted, and heaven, instead of hell, been established in the homes of four generations had the first child been taught self-control, good-will, amiability, gentle manners, the religion of kindness and courtesy.

All of these women had kind hearts toward the poor, sick and needy. They were always "good neighbors" when there was trouble in other homes.

But they never learned the strength and power which lies in silence, and they never learned the beauty of the soft answer which turneth away wrath.

The two original sinners (for such uncontrolled tempers are sinful) were women of great strength of intellect and of dominating personalities, therefore, their influence was far-reaching and powerful. In many of their descendants the unpleasant qualities have taken the form of petty meanness and ignoble nagging toward all those with whom they are thrown in close association.

Teach Them Kindness.

If your child, madam or sir, shows wonderful "spirit" and is very "high strung" and brilliant with repartee in the way of the quick retort, do not laugh and applaud and think you have something to be proud of, something out of the ordinary.

Teach your children the religion of kindness, the religion of gentle voices, amiable manners, generous judgments and self-control.

Make them understand early how vulgar is uncontrolled temper and how ill-bred the sharp rejoinder.

Do this for their own sakes and the sakes of unborn generations.

.:. Housewives and the Art of Housekeeping .:.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE reign of the good housekeeper is only just beginning. Every month sees some new invention that helps to diminish the slavery of housework. Housekeeping has for ages been an art, and, as with all arts, its practitioners range in their abilities from mediocrity through fair talent up to positive genius.

Now housekeeping is becoming a science, and science has this advantage over art—that it tends to equalize abilities by bringing results through mechanical and automatic methods which anybody can employ.

The French Kitchen.

For a plain male citizen, who knows little about the secrets of the kitchen, it is a wonderful revelation to read the articles in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE and to look at the devices there shown which relate to this fast-growing science. Almost everything about a house can now be done with half the expenditure of labor and time formerly required. To be without this knowledge and these inventions is not merely to be behind the times, but it is to live harder, less well and more expensively than there is any necessity for.

The kitchen is the stomach of the house, and upon the way in which it performs its functions, the welfare of the whole establishment depends. My attention has just been called to a model French kitchen. All the world has long looked up to France as the ideal home of culinary art, and it is evident that she does not intend to be left behind in the modern transformation of this art into a science.

The kitchen has also been called "the theater of the French housewife," and this theater is becoming really a fascinating place with its display of electrical ranges, scientific lamps, automatic grinders, mills and churns, Pasteur filters, coffee makers, ice cream freezers, devices for easily getting rid of waste substances, porcelain sinks as white and clean as Alpine snow, scouring machines, filters, convenient cupboards, and all the glittering array of nickel, silver, copper, aluminum, bronze and graniteware utensils that fill the room with bright reflections.

Not to Visit, But to Help.

One of the great charms of a French kitchen is that the mistress is frequently to be seen there, not merely as a visitor, but as a helper and director. She inspires her servants by her presence, and by her advice. She does not pretend to live in another world than theirs. They know that she understands their business as well as they do themselves, and even better. She can take their place if necessary. This is as true of the rich as of the relatively poor.

The economy of the French people has long been world-famous, and nowhere is it more brilliantly displayed than in the kitchen. A French family, as has often been said, could live, and live well, upon the waste of many American families. And the exercise of this economy—this art of getting all the good out of things—fascinates those who practise it. It has the charm of all applied knowledge. They not only get all that is good—they make the good better. I know many a little country inn in France where, for three or four francs, wine included (a franc is worth 20 cents), one can have a really better meal than can be had in Atlanta for two or three dollars.

And yet meats, and similar things, cost about as much in France as they do here. The secret lies in economical management and good cooking. It is no wonder that a first-rate French cook can command in New York a salary of $5,000, or even more. And if he, or she, retains on this side of the Atlantic the economical skill learned at home, more than half the salary is saved to the employer.

To Learn Economy.

One thing to be noticed in the French kitchen is that there is usually no false economy in the choice of apparatus. Everything is of the best, or at least good and substantial. The kitchen, in its way, is as well furnished as the parlor. You may be sure that this spells economy in the end, for if it did not it would not be found in France.

I have often been surprised on entering a house in France, which, in America, might be taken as the abode of people in very humble circumstances, to find a far larger and better-stocked kitchen than many rather pretentious houses possess here, accompanied by a culinary skill in its mistress which would earn her a large salary on this side of the ocean.

No doubt we shall learn this economical wisdom in good time—and the sooner the better.

I SHOULD WORRY

By WEX JONES.

IT used to be jolly to chatter with Polly
On fashion and frivol and froth of the day;
But now it's sheer folly talking to Polly,
For she puts "I should worry" to all that she'll say.

"I should worry like an onion"
(Here she laughs, she feels so tickled),
"I should worry like an onion
And discover that I'm pickled.
I should worry like a saw"
(How that "worry" gets me riled!),
"I should worry like a saw
Till my teeth have all been filed."

You hear all the flappers, tongues going like clappers
Bandy about this ridiculous phrase;
Prue, Polly and Lizzie will jabber you dizzy,
Twisting it round in its different ways:

"I should worry seven days
And become a little weak."
"I should worry," "I should worry,"
Every time they speak.
"I should worry like a fish
And get the hook."
"I should worry like a gumdrop
And go North with old Doc Cook."
"I should worry," "I should worry"—
Phrase that sets me in a flurry,
Phrase that sets my goat a-scurry—

Oh, well, I should worry.

MOTHER AND GIRL DEAD IN FIRE; SON IS HUNTED

Coroner's Jury Recommends Missing Lad Be Arrested and Held for Investigation.

T. H. P. Fincher, a justice of the peace in DeKalb County, held an inquest over the charred bodies of Mrs. S. C. Stevens and her adopted daughter, Nellie Stevens, Wednesday afternoon. The jury decided the two women had been murdered and recommended that Wade Stevens, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Stevens, who is missing, be apprehended and held for investigation.

The jury made a search of the ruins and found that a $400 diamond ring worn by Mrs. Stevens, the two gold watches worn by Mrs. Stevens and the girl, and two revolvers were missing.

Miss Josephine McCauley, of 791 Glenwood Avenue, said Mrs. Stevens told her, a short while ago, that she had had a half-breed Indian working around the house, but had discharged him because he made insulting remarks to Miss Nellie Stevens. He had returned two nights later and prowled about the house, when Mrs. Stevens shot at him.

Two Found in Burned Home.

That the mother and girl whose charred remains were found in the ruins of their home seven miles southeast of Atlanta early Wednesday morning were murdered and the house set afire by the murderer in an effort to obliterate all evidence of the deed was the astounding declaration made by Sheriff J. A. McCurdy after an investigation of the tragedy.

Positive identifications of the two women as Mrs. S. C. Stevens, 40 years old, wife of William Stevens, a 70-year-old Confederate veteran now in Chattanooga at the reunion, and their adopted daughter, Nellie Stevens, 13 years old, were made by neighbors.

Conditions leading up to the theory that the deaths were the result of murder are these:

The charred bodies of the women were found lying in the center of a bed room in the rear of the cottage. Near at hand were the remains of a shotgun.

Mrs. Stevens' skull had been crushed in. A hoe found in what had been the hallway leading from the room is believed to have been the instrument used to strike the woman as she arose from her bed, with the shotgun, to meet the intruder.

That the door of the room was open at the time of the encounter is believed to add another link to prove the affair a murder.

The method in which the daughter met her death could not be ascertained, owing to the charred condition of her body.

Son Quarreled With Mother.

Inquiry among the neighbors developed the fact that Wade Stevens, the 16-year-old son, who disappeared from his home Tuesday afternoon, had quarreled with his mother and sister.

Mrs. L. G. Self, who lives a short distance from the Stevens home, told Sheriff McCurdy that the boy had a tilt with his parent because she would not permit him to come to Atlanta during the absence of his father.

Mrs. Self stated that Nellis Stevens had appeared at her home with a package of Wade's clothing, which she asked Mrs. Self to keep that night to prevent the boy from disobeying his mother and leaving the house.

This statement, coupled with others, to the effect that Wade Stevens had on numerous occasions acted in an infractious manner—at one time snatching $65 from his mother's hand and running away—have led Sheriff McCurdy to start a hunt for him in order that he may be questioned in connection with the murder.

The house was burned during the night. Its ruins were first discovered at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning by J. A. Nelms, who was passing the scene in a milk wagon. Nelms, after viewing the smoking embers of the building, summoned J. L. Cowan, a neighbor, and notified the county police.

When Sheriff McCurdy arrived on

CREMATORY HELD UP BY COURT; CITY NOW FACES A SERIOUS SITUATION

In a unanimous decision by the Supreme Court of Georgia, the city loses in its fight to uphold the legality of the $276,000 crematory contract and Atlanta faces a serious health problem.

The ruling declares the contract illegal on the ground that the moral obligation involved in the pledge of payment to the Destructor Company of New York is a debt. The constitution of the State expressly forbids the Council of one year binding the Council of another in a financial obligation.

The decision acts as an injunction, the city and the contractors being restrained from continuing operations on the crematory which is now under construction until two-thirds of the voters shall have approved of the project at a special election.

Mayor Woodward, who fought the contract from the beginning, scores a big victory, but Atlanta is confronted with a menacing problem in the disposal of its garbage during the summer months. The decision was written by Chief Justice Fish.

CONLEY WAS IN FACTORY ON DAY OF SLAYING

Police Secure Admission From Negro Sweeper During Examination for Phagan Clews.

James Conley, negro sweeper, in an affidavit made Wednesday, said that he was lying when he said he went to the National Pencil Factory on Friday. He said that he made the statement that it was Friday when Frank (as he says) told him to write the death notes, because he was afraid he would be accused of the murder of Mary Phagan if he told the truth.

He said he felt that if he said he was there Saturday the police would connect him with the murder. Conley said he got up between 9 and 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning, he knew the time because he looked at the clock on the Atlanta University from his front door. He returned indoors and had breakfast.

He got three silver dollars from his wife to exchange for paper money so that she would not lose it. He continued:

"I told my wife I was going to Peters Street. I went toPeters Street and stopped at a beer saloon at Peters and Haynes Streets. I bought two beers in there, drank one myself and gave another to a man named Bob. I stayed in the barroom three or four minutes and then walked back to the pool table and shot dice with four men. One of them was named Joe Bobs and one Bob Williams. I won 90 cents.

Drank Some Whisky.

"I don't know how long we had been shooting, but I think it was about fifteen minutes. I left there then and went to Erler saloon on Peters Street. I bought a glass of beer there. I walked back to the rear of the place, rolled a cigarette, came back and bought a half pint of whisky. I drank part of the whisky. I started from there to the Capital City Laundry to see my mother.

"I met Mr. Frank at the corner of Forsyth and Nelson Streets. He stopped me and asked me where I was going. I told him I was going to the Capital City Laundry to see my mother. He said, 'Wait 'til I come back.'

"He said he was going to see Mr. Montague. He was gone about 20 minutes. He came back and told me to come to the factory, that he wanted to see me. I went with him, walking behind him. He stopped at the Curtis drug store at Mitchell and Forsyth and got a drink. I waited for him outride. Frank had a bundle in his hand.

"After we got to the factory he put the bundle in the trash barrel right near the steps. He put a box there for me to sit on and other boxes back further in the factory. He told me to sit there until he whistled. He told me not to let Darley see me.

Tells of Seeing Darley.

"Along came a woman down stairs, Miss Mattie, I think her name was. She had on a dark suit and a raincoat. She carried a parasol. (This was Miss Mattie Smith). Then Darley came down stairs. He wore a grey suit and had no hat. He stopped Miss Mattie at the front door. She was wiping her eyes like she was crying. I heard him say, 'Don't worry, I will see that you get that next week.'

"She went out and he went back up the steps. In a few minutes he came back down and left. Then came Holloway down stairs about five minutes after Darley left. Holloway stood on the sidewalk five or six minutes and then came back.

"Then a negro drove up to the factory in a wagon. He went upstairs. He had some bills in his hand. Holloway came back with the negro, who was pegleg. The negro drove away and Holloway went back upstairs.

Family Has Heard Nothing of Martin

MEMPHIS, May 28.—Despite rumors that Joseph W. Martin, president of the Martin-Phillips Company, whose mysterious disappearance in London was followed by the failure of the company, had communicated with his family, his relatives still deny that they have any information as to his whereabouts.

The family about two weeks ago settled debts of the firm of Martin-Phillips Company amounting to about $180,000. Following this action it was rumored that Martin would return.

POLICE EXPECT NEGRO CONLEY TO CONFESS

"In a few minutes he came down and left the building for good. Then came another lady. She works on the fourth floor for Arthur White. She was upstairs six or seven minutes. Then she came back down with her money. She stood by me and tore open the envelope and counted the money. Then she left the building and for about fifteen minutes there was no one passing me.

Heard Frank Whistle.

"I sat down on the box and put my head against the trash barrel and stretched my feet out with my hat in my lap. I don't know whether I went to sleep or not. The next thing I knew I heard Frank's whistle twice, just like this (imitating whistle). I went upstairs. The double doors were closed. Frank was standing at the top of the steps. He said, 'I see you heard me, all right,' and I said 'Yes.'

"Frank grabbed me by the arm very tight and his hand was trembling. It was just like he was walking down the street with a lady. He carried me through the first office into his private office, came back and shut the door into the outer office. Then he came back to where I was. He didn't say anything but grabbed up a box of sulphur matches and went into the outer office. When he came back he pulled out a rouad chair.

"He brought the chair for me to sit in. Then he closed the door and asked me to address a letter 'Dear Brother.' Then he asked me to write some things for him. I don't remember all of it, but I remember one of them was this: 'That long tall black negro did it by hisself.' I wrote these things at his dictation. Then Mr. Frank patted me on the back and said that I was a good boy. Then he handed me a box of cigarettes and I took them."

Vital Evidence Kept Secret.

From this point the negro's statement was similar to the affidavit published a few days ago. The negro said that he left the factory between five and ten minutes after 1 o'clock, went back to Peters Street and then went home.

Chief Lanford read the above which he said was about half of the affidavit. The chief said that he had only given out the unimportant details, leaving it to be inferred that Conley had given vital evidence.

Harry Scott intimated that the negro's affidavit Wednesday morning had practically cleared the mystery and was the most important bit of evidence in the hands of the State.

At 2:45 o'clock the negro was taken into the chief's office for another sweating.

Admission that he was in the National Pencil factory on the day of the murder of Mary Phagan was gained from Conley, after cross-examination by detectives at police headquarters.

The negro, who became the center of attention with his amazing story that Leo Frank had told him to write the death notes, changed his narrative again to-day. Confronted by E. F. Holloway, a foreman in the plant, he admitted having been in the factory after having steadily maintained that he was on Peters Street between 10 and 2 o'clock that fatal Saturday and at home all other hours of the day.

Says Confession Is Near.

Holloway, after leaving the secret grilling at which the admission was obtained, declared he was sure it was only a matter of hours before Conley would confess. He asserted that if he had been allowed to put questions to Conley he could have gotten important information.

The police questions were, of course, all put with the idea of gaining information against Frank.

Chief Lanford had announced that he would go before Judge Roan with a request for an order allowing him to confront Frank with the negro, so that Conley's statement would be admissible in court. Lanford, however, failed to carry out his plans, although he would not admit they had been abandoned.

Later Chief Beavers said that the plan to confront Frank with Conley would not be carried out to-day and that its wisdom was doubtful, as, of course, Frank could not be compelled to answer any questions.

Refuse to Admit Suspicion.

The police refused to admit that suspicion was turning or should be turned to Conley, who has told one falsehood after another since his arrest. They tried resolutely to construe every one of his statements as against Frank and would not admit that the continued contradictions of the negro made his value as a witness next to nothing.

The police declared that Conley had been asked to write the contents of the death notes and had spelled night watch" as it was in the note, "night witch," and "self" with the "I" and "e" transposed as in the notes. What all this shows, in view of the fact that the same officials had announced that they had conclusive evidence by "experts" and that Frank wrote the notes, is not plain.

Conley was also confronted by General Foreman N. V. Darley in the presence of Detectives Black, Scott and Lanford and the negro made important admissions that will no doubt force him to admit his guilt.

Conley admitted that he sat at the elevator shaft on the first floor at 12:30 on the afternoon of the murder and saw Darley in company with Miss Smith descend the stairs. Conley described Miss Smith as wearing a raincoat and Darley with his coat on with no hat. Darley stated that both descriptions were absolutely correct in every particular. Strange to say, neither Darley nor Miss Smith saw the negro, for he was seated in the shadow of the steps and never made a sound.

Conley said that after Darley came down stairs with Miss Smith he walked to the door with her and then returned and ascended the stairs. This Darley says is true.

Shortly after this Mrs. Albert White went into the factory to see her husband and get some money to buy a dress. Her husband, Albert White, was at work on the fourth floor with the assistant foreman and machinist, Harry Denham. Mrs. White says that she saw a negro who sat immovable at the foot of the elevator shaft as she entered the factory. She could not identify him because of the indistinct light. But as Conley admitted he was there five minutes before it is reasonable to believe that it was Conley that Mrs. White passed.

According to the statement of E. F. Holloway Conley had no business in the factory on the day of the murder, which was a holiday. Holloway says that the negro denied being there when questioned by him. Now Conley admits that he was there.

Holloway believes that had not Darley escorted Miss Mattie Smith down stairs that she and not Mary Phagan would have been the victim.

WILSON OPPOSES CURRENCY FRILLS

President Reported to Have Told House Leaders to Use Common Sense.

WASHINGTON, May 28—President Wilson has confided to House leaders, according to information obtained to-day, that he wants currency reform legislation next month conducted along common sense lines. He believes too much expert opinion will tend to becloud fundamental questions.

Prominent New York City bankers are said to have approved the essentials of a draft of the bill, although not being willing to accept all the details.

The President, it is stated, will be satisfied if they agree on the main features.

Only two members of the Cabinet, Bryan and McAdoo, have been consulted, according to reliable information. The former is said to have contributed several valuable ideas to the bill on the issuance of notes by reserve associations.

Conner Begs for Additional Funds

J. J. Conner, State Commissioner of Agriculture, in his annual report to Governor Brown, declares better facilities in his department are imperative. He said the annual appropriation to the department was fixed by the Legislature of 1874 at $10,000, and that the growth of the department demands that this amount be supplemented by $5,000.

"In operating the law with respect to the inspection of gasoline, benzine, naphtha and other products of petroleum I find that some hardships are worked on certain classes of industries in the State," he said. "I recommend that merely nominal fees be collected for the inspection of these products where they are used only for manufacturing purposes.

"During my service I have felt very much cramped in getting out department bulletins and publications."

He commends the work of the State food inspector and suggests that the office of an assistant be created.

He recommends that the salary of the State oil inspector be increased from $1,200 to $2,000 a year.

He urges that the next Legislature add at least $30,000 to the veterinary department to combat cholera among hogs and tuberculosis among cattle.

Woman Badly Hurt By Fighting Cats

GADSDEN, ALA., May 28.—When Mrs. J. A. Bacon, 50 years old, attempted to separate two house cats that were fighting on the back porch of her home, both attacked her, inflicting more than 100 wounds on her throat, chest and arms. Her husband and daughter fought ten minutes before they subdued the cats.

Only Italy Leads U. S. In Aviators' Deaths

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The United States has more accidental deaths among Government aviators than any other nation, save Italy, official figures show.

England is third and France fourth. It is pointed out, however, that American aviators average nearly twice the number of hours and miles covered.

MRS. EDESON IMPROVES.

SOUTHAMPTON, N. Y., May 28.—The condition of Mrs. Robert Edeson, wife of the actor, who is confined in a hospital here, to-day was reported improved.

ODD FELLOWS OF STATE IN SESSION

Establishment of Fraternity Home Question Before Savannah Grand Lodge Meeting.

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Georgia met in annual convention in Savannah to-day, when Mayor Richard J. Davant delivered the address of welcome for the city, and Thomas Hoynes, deputy grand master, for the Savannah lodges. Response was made by Grand Master W. S. Coleman, of Cedartown. Following the public exercises the Grand Lodge went into executive session.

Simultaneously the Daughters of Rebekah, the woman's auxiliary of the Odd Fellows, met in grand assembly at Odd Fellows' Hall. A good deal of politics is to come up during the sessions of the assembly. It is rumored that there is to be a fight for grand warden, for which Mrs. R. J. Winters, of Atlanta, is a candidate.

Whether or not Georgia is to have an Odd Fellows' home is one of the questions to be decided by the Grand Lodge. At the Gainesville meeting last year a committee was appointed to investigate and report at this meeting. Under the present arrangement the Odd Fellows have a pension plan, but it is said that this is not satisfactory.

There are 2,500 Odd Fellows and 300 Rebekahs present.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Perry Belmont has called the attention of the leaders of the Senate to an act of 1789 which he says gives Congress the right to summon Secretary of the Treasury McAdoo before it and ask for a statement as to his opinion of the effect of the tariff law on the revenues of the country.

Mr. Belmont will urge the Senate leaders to call Mr. McAdoo and ask for the benefit of his opinion.

BODIES OF TWO WOMEN FOUND IN FIRE RUINS

the scene the remains of the two women already had been found by Nelms and Cowan. Mrs. Stevens was identified by her false teeth.

When the bodies had been taken out of the ruins they were examined. Mrs. Stevens' skull was seen to have been crushed in.

It was this fact that first led the authorities to suspect foul play. Careful examination of the surrounding embers in the place where the bodies were found brough to light a shotgun barrel, the stock and woodwork of which had been burned off.

The weapon was seen to have been close to the positions where the bodies were discovered.

That the women had left their beds before they met their deaths was another conclusion drawn by Sheriff McCurdy. The bodies lay in the center of the floor while the iron frames of the beds were over in a corner of the room.

The door to the room was open. Its half demolished frame still stands in the ruins. Just outside the door the hoe was found.

Sheriff McCurdy's theory is that the murderer fled through the door, casting the hoe with which he had slain the women in the hall. That the plan to set fire to the house and burn the bodies to hide the crime came as a second thought.

The house was about 50 yards from the road in a clump of trees. It is in a lonely spot and the nearest neighbor is beyond earshot. That the screams of the women would not have been heard is safe to conclude.

Girl's Skull Crushed.

Another development that tends to show murder, came with the discovery that the skull of Nellie Stevens had been fractured, also. A sharp crack across the top of the head showed possibility that a knifelike weapon had been used, striking with such force as to cleave the bone.

The positions of the bodies in the ruins tend to bear this theory out—that the murderer had struck the girl with his hoe after crushing Mrs. Stevens' skull.

Mrs. Stevens' skull, it was shown, was crushed in by a blow directed at her from in front. Her body was found just three feet from the doorway. Directly behind this lay the body of Nellie Stevens.

It is thought that Mrs. Stevens, when she took up the shotgun and started toward the door at the sound of the intruder, was followed by her daughter. When the older woman opened the door, Nellie was directly behind her. The murderer, then, if he stood just without the doorway, with hoe in hand, struck Mrs. Stevens first. With a second blow he felled the girl behind her.

Open Knife Under Girl's Body.

The gun barrel was found close to the bodies of the women and the hoe was found out in the hallway. An open knife was found under the girl's body.

That the door was open at the time the women met their deaths was established by the fact that the doorknob was discovered in the ashes inside the room. The door opened on the inside and, therefore, the knob would have fallen in the room if the door had been opened.

The testimony of Nelms, the milk wagon driver, who was first on the scene, is considered of great importance in describing the positions of the bodies and the weapons found. Nelms Wednesday morning, in telling of the tragedy, said:

"When I saw the smoking embers of the building, as I was driving by, I hastened up. At first I did not suspect that anybody was dead.

Finds Two Bodies.

"I looked about in the ruins, however, and soon discovered through the smoke what looked to be a body. I walked through the ashes to the spot, and sure enough there was a human form. I looked about and soon found another form. Both were charred and beyond recognition.

"I didn't wait to look further, but ran over to the next house, about 200 yards away, and got Mr. Cowan and telephoned the police. Cowan and I came back and together we hunted over the ruins until the police came. We found the shotgun, the iron part of the hoe just outside the room, the knife under the girl's body and the doorknob. We didn't touch a thing, though."

With the arrival of Sheriff McCurdy came also Police Chief Beavers and Police Sergeant Whatley, of Atlanta. Mr. Whatley is a brother of Mrs. Stevens.

Boy Had Quarreled.

Mrs. L. G. Self's statement to the police authorities regarding the visit of Nellie Stevens to her home with Wade Stevens' clothing, directed suspicion to the boy.

"Nellie came to my house in the late afternoon," said Mrs. Self. "She carried a bundle of men's clothing with her and asked me to keep the clothes that night. She said that her brother and her mother had had an altercation.

"It seems that Wade wanted to leave home and his mother had objected. From what Nellie said, I understood that hot words had been passed. Nellie said that she had slipped out of the room quietly and bundled Wade's clothes and taken them away in order that the boy could not leave."

Saw Boy in Atlanta.

Charles B. McWilliams, 483 Leggett Avenue, East Atlanta, declared Wednesday afternoon that he had met Wade Stevens and another boy named "Red" Merchant at Five Points at 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

McWilliams said the boys expressed their intention of leaving the city that night—that they were going to catch a W. & A. train and go to Chattanooga and Cincinnati. McWilliams said the boys were dressed in overalls and had no money.

He declared that he accompanied them to the Terminal Station and waited there with them until fifteen minutes before their train was due to leave. Then he left them.

Prowler Routed Two Weeks Ago.

That an attempt was made to burglarize the Stevens home two weeks ago was the statement made by a neighbor to Sheriff McCurdy.

'T. R. Averted War With Japan'

Witness Says Fleet Turned Trick

Defense's Mainstay Faces Jail

Colonel Roosevelt and, at top, George Newett, who is being sued for libel; at the bottom, Judge Flannagan, who is presiding

Deposition, Said to Accuse Roosevelt of Being Drunk, Will Be Read to Jury.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 28.—That there was very serious danger of war with Japan during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt and that the Chief Executive met the danger and averted war by sending a fleet around the world was the statement of John Callan O'Laughlin, a Washington correspondent of a Chicago newspaper and a commissioner to the Tokio Exposition, appointed by President Roosevelt.

O'Laughlin was a witness for the Colonel in Roosevelt's $10,000 libel suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.

"Did you seriously mean that there was danger of war with Japan during Roosevelt's administration?" asked Attorney Belden, who was cross-examining O'Laughlin.

"There was very serious danger," replied the witness.

Settled Question "Right."

"Colonel Roosevelt met that danger.

"Obviously Japan would not start with a fleet in the Pacific waters. We settled the immigration question right then."

The witness emphasized the word "right."

O'Laughlin was asked by Attorney Belden if he had been an emissary to arrange for the reception of Roosevelt by the Pope and the King of Italy when the Colonel was in Rome. O'Laughlin said he had not.

The jury was sent from the room while the attorneys argued on the admitting of testimony concerning published reports about Colonel Roosevelt's drinking. Attorney Belden said that the defense wished to show that reports that Roosevelt drank were general in 1912.

"Did Not Deny Reports."

"We shall show," he said, "that this defendant heard those reports and that this plaintiff did not deny them. Roosevelt has been the most talked of man in this country, and if reports of his drinking have been so common as we shall show, he could not be damaged in any sum by the publication of such a report in a little country paper.

"The question of Roosevelt's reputation is vital in this case—his reputation in Marquette County, in this country and in the civilized world. In the plaintiff's bill, he asserts that his reputation for sobriety is well known throughout the 48 States of this country, and that his reputation for sobriety was good before the publication of this article by the defendant.

Disclaims Any Malice.

"Mr. Pound is an able lawyer. No lawyer in Michigan has tried more libel suits than he has. He knew that damages could be increased by reason of malice behind the publication. We will show there was no malice.

"In our answer we set up that there was no malice and that publication was made in good faith and that the defendant had been told and believed reports of Roosevelt's drunkenness were true.

"Dr. Abbott recognized the existence of such reports and deemed it worth while to answer them in The Outlook. Therefore, we have a right to show the existence of these reports as showing good faith and absence of malice on the part of this defendant."

"We shall not claim," said Attorney Pound, "any vindictive or punitory damages. We ask only actual damages such as would accrue in the absence of express malice. This is by direction of the plaintiff."

"That means," said the court, "only actual damages, which my be 6 cents or $60,000."

"That is correct," said Mr. Pound.

"Then," said Attorney Belden, "in the absence of the demand for a retraction no damages may be asked by way of punishment. But counsel has already charged malice to this jury and we can not eliminate these impressions from their minds. Therefore, we have a right to show there was no malice and we purpose to offer testimony of men of standing to show this general reputation.

"Precedents are few, for men of Roosevelt's standing and prominence have seldom brought such suits, but we have a somewhat parallel case in that of Dailey vs. Kalamazoo Publishing Company in the Supreme Court."

Cites Parallel Case.

He then cited the case.

Colonel Roosevelt held a whispered conference with Attorney Van Benschoten.

"Mr. Belden and ourselves are not very far apart," said Van Benschoten, addressing the court. "Newspapers, however, do not always tell the truth and reports can not be admitted unless it is first shown that Mr. Newett had read the newspaper or heard the report in question. If Mr. Newett takes the stand and swears he had not read or read such reports and believed them to be true, they would become pertinent."

Scores Defense's Stand.

"The result of the contention of Mr. Belden," said Attorney Pound, "would be that a reputation as pure as that of St. Paul could be blasted by a lot of irresponsible gossip mongers. Counsel is not entitled to this testimony, anyhow. He can not mitigate and justify at the same time. The two things are incompatible.

"The presumption of law, as your honor has said, is that the character of every man is all right. No affirmative proof of character is required. The Supreme Court has also held that unless the truth of the published charges is proved the good faith or lack of malice of the published can by no means mitigate actual damages."

Judge Flannagan interrupted to say:

"Counsel will please confine himself to the two questions here at issue, which are:

State's Points at Issue.

"'May defense introduce evidence of reports and reputation to demonstrate his good faith.'

"'May defendant introduce evidence of reports and reputation by way of mitigating damages.'"

"I shall so confine myself," said Mr. Pound.

"I shall show your honor the King of England sued a newspaper for libel for claiming that the King was a bigamist because, while prince, he married a daughter of an admiral of the fleet before he married Queen Mary.

"Would it have been a defense to say that defendant knew nothing of the facts, but had heard rumors to that effect? The court held it would not."

At this point Judge Flannagan adjourned court until 2 p. m.

VETERANS VOTE ON CHIEFTAIN AT REUNION

Next Meeting Place Also to Be Selected Wednesday Afternoon At Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 28. The decision to vote on the election of commander-in-chief and to select the next meeting place at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon were the important results of this morning's session of the United Confederate Veterans, in reunion here. Some routine business was transacted, but the two impending selections overshadowed all other matters, allowing them but little import.

Upon the very eve of the election it is still generally believed that General Bennett H. Young will be re-elected commander-in-chief. The selection of the next meeting place appears to be a dead heat between Jacksonville, Fla., and Richmond, Va.

The only aspirant to the office held by General Young appears to be General K. M. VanZant, of San Antonio, Texas, who has a fairly formidable following.

General Irvine Walker, chairman of the committee appointed at the Macon reunion to co-operate with a committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to a joint peace jubilee of the two organizations, submitted a report recommending that at least 10,000 Confederate veterans attend.

The dedicatory exercises of the Alabama and Florida monuments this morning drew thousands of veterans and the attendance at the morning session was unusually light.

Action by the veterans on a resolution asking the Federal Government to purchase Johnson's Island in Lake Erie, near Sandusky, Ohio, will be taken Thursday morning, according to a committee report submitted today. Thousands of Confederate veterans who died in Northern prisons are buried there and a monument has been erected to them on the island by the women of the South, at a cost of $30,000. It is stated that the island will be obliterated as a historic point unless immediate action is taken to preserve it.

Major W. P. Gorman, a Birmingham veteran, who fell yesterday and sustained a fractured skull, lies at the point of death at a local hospital today.

Morse Again Heads Steamship Company

NEW YORK, May 28.—Charles W. Morse was elected to-day president of the Hudson Navigation Company, owners of a line of steamers operating on the Hudson River.

Morse was head of the company in 1909, but was deposed a year later. John W. McKinnon, who succeeded him, sold his interest in the line to a syndicate of bankers, who placed it in Morse's hands, thus giving him control.

Southern Pacific Must Give Up C. P.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Attorney General McReynolds has decided to contend that the Southern Pacific must give up the Central Pacific in the pending dissolution of the Union Pacific merger and will bring a suit under the Sherman law to accomplish that end if the dissolution plans fail to include it.

WOMAN WRITES IN DEFENSE OF LEO M. FRANK

Mrs. Rebecca Brannon Declares Her Belief in Innocence of Factory Superintendent.

Mrs. Rebecca C. Brannon, 356 Forrest Avenue, a well known Atlanta woman, has written a letter to The Georgian in defense of Leo M. Frank. Mrs. Brannon, in her communication, avows a strong belief in the pencil factory superintendent's innocence, and denounces the hardships which the law has thrust upon him.

In line with its policy to present all sides of the Phagan case, The Georgian herewith prints Mrs. Brannon's letter:

In the name of God, humanity, and justice, I beg the public to suspend judgment in the case of Mr. Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, until he has had a fair trial before a jury of his peers.

I consider Mr. Frank an innocent man. Is it because he is a Jew that the negro's word is taken as gospel truth, and reflection cast on his testimony? From the first, pap seemed to be put in Newt Lee's mouth, as well as that of Conley, to make them say or hint that Mr. Frank was suspected by them of committing the crime.

Calls It Persecution.

What negro, with dread of lynching or summary justice being meted out to him, would not swear to a lie, and put the crime on another if he could thereby escape the consequences of his crime? And even so late as Saturday the negro Conley admitted he wrote the notes found beside the murdered girl, as he said, at the suggestion of Mr. Frank.

Is it not inconceivable to think that an astute man, planning with finesse, to kill a little girl who might possibly call for her pay envelope the following day, would take into his confidence the sweeper Conley and have him write what he contemplated putting in a note he intended to lay before her mutilated body, when he shall have murdered her the next day, and exclaiming, "There is no reason why I should hang for it!"

Oh, no! Gentlemen, this is entirely too unlikely a thing for a man of his astuteness and caliber to have done or said. There has been some colossal blunder on the part of the city detectives in rounding up the quarry.

It looks very like persecuting this man simply because he is a Jew. I like to see fair play and justice. This is the first time a Jew has ever been in any serious trouble in Atlanta, and see how ready is every one to believe the worst of him.

In the first place, Mr. Frank, in his deposition, told the hour he reached his home for dinner and supper, was seen by a number of reputable people assembled at his home that evening. He had on the same business suit he had on at his office that day and which he wore at the Coroner's inquest. If he had murdered the girl he must have had some scratches or blood marks on his person, as it was said at the time Mary Phagan had struggled with her assailant.

Cites Weak Link.

One very weak link in the State's chain of evidence is the fact that Newt Lee testified that he made a complete round of the building every half hour, yet he failed to notice the bloodstains on the floor of the metal room in making all those rounds, and then strangely went down the trap door to the basement at 3:30 on a flimsy excuse—flimsy, I say, because no one being there to prevent it, if he really wanted to go to the toilet he surely would have used the one on the upper floor in preference to going down the trap door at 3:30 to the basement closet, and in a dimly lighted place, in which he could scarcely see his hand before his face, and at an angle that the detectives at first said they could not see how he made the discovery of the body. He claimed to have made the find.

Another thing the detectives said was that blood was still flowing from the body when they first discovered it—rigor mortis had not taken place, two facts that in my mind are irrefutable proofs that that girl was not murdered at 12 m., at 4 or at 6 o'clock in the evening, which would have been the case if Mr. Frank had murdered the little girl any time between 12 m. and 6 p. m.

I do not know Mr. Frank, but that he is a Jew he holds my especial interest and esteem, for the Jews are good, law-abiding people.

Calls Frank Innocent.

He must be a leader among his people, as he is the president of the B'nai Brith Association of Atlanta. This society is the highest Jewish organization in the world, and you can not persuade me to believe that such a splendid lot of level headed men as the Jews of Atlanta would select a moral degenerate to head their organization.

I believe Mr. Frank innocent and confidently look for his complete vindication when tried by an impartial jury of his countrymen, when the mesh of lies shall have been swept away, that at present shroud the case. Meanwhile, all my sympathies are with him.

'Endymion,' Adapted From Keats' Poem, To Be Staged at the Grand.

A class of nineteen girls will be graduated from Miss Hanna's School at 8:30 Wednesday night. The members of the class are:

A feature of the performance will be an original ballet dance by Miss Theodora Warfield, who made such a hit in the Kirmess last year.

Thursday night at 8:30 the alumnae and the senior class of Miss Hanna's School will have a banquet at the Piedmont Hotel. About 200 guests are expected at the banquet, which will be followed by a dance.

This has been one of the most successful years of the school. It is one of the oldest in Atlanta, and some of the most prominent women in Georgia are among its alumnae.

Jack London's new story, "The Scarlet Plague," begins in the American Monthly Magazine given free with every copy of next Sunday's American.

MINISTER'S WIFE ACCUSED AS SIREN

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 28.—Mrs. Mae Free Patterson, wife of the Rev. Gerard F. Patterson, pastor of the Church of the Incarnation, in the fashionable East End district, has been made defendant in a $10,000 alienation suit.

The action was brought by Mrs. Margaret Lloyd because of the alleged loss of the affections of her husband, Martin Van Voorhees Lloyd, a wealthy grain dealer. Mrs. Patterson is a cousin of Charles Free, vice president of the Southern Pacific Railway.

The suit charges that Mrs. Patterson enticed Lloyd from his home, that she wined and dined with Lloyd in public places, entertained him at her home and went with him to cafes, grill rooms, ball games, horse races and other places of amusement and "with her artifices, blandishments and coquetry and with malicious purpose deprived the plaintiff of her husband's society and affection."

The Lloyds have been separated since November 6, 1912.

CHIEF BEAVERS TO RENEW HIS VICE WAR

Declares That He Will "Clean Out" Disorderly Places When Hutcheson Furnishes List.

Renewed crusades to clean out vice in Atlanta have been precipitated by the publication Tuesday of an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers by Carl Hutcheson, an Atlanta attorney.

Chief Beavers called up Hutcheson with a demand for his information, asking names, addresses and character of occupants, and declared Wednesday that he would proceed to clean up if the requested information was furnished.

Hutcheson is now preparing a list of the places which he declared are immoral and told the chief he would place the list in Beavers' hands three days hence. Hutcheson was asked by the chief to swear to the character of the inmates of each house he names and to sign his name to his affidavit, and will be called as a witness in prosecuting the landlords.

"We will have some clean-up sure," said Chief Beavers Wednesday. "When I get Hutcheson's information I will prove that I am giving no protection to anybody. I would be glad to have every one report to me any resort that they might know of. It will help in the crusade. I will take speedy action against them all."

Dorsey to Confer With Felder.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey declared Wednesday that he would confer with Colonel T. B. Felder relative to the proposed Grand Jury probe of his corruption charges against police officials and the counter charges of bribery made against him by the police.

Colonel Felder would not comment on the affair at all, other than to say he was not yet ready to issue his statement substantiating his sensational charges.

Detective Chief Lanford issued a signed statement proposing to send Colyar handcuffed to Knoxville and Colonel Felder in charge of a detective to Columbia, S. C.

Lanford's Contribution.

"I will make this proposition to Colonel Felder," he said. "I will handcuff A. S. Colyar and send him back to Knoxville, Tenn., without requisition papers, if he (Colonel Felder) will accompany one of my men to Columbia, S. C., waiving requisition papers. Thereby I will get rid of two nuisances."

Colonel Felder issued the following statement relative to the proposed Grand Jury investigation:

"No investigation would be too exhaustive. I would be pleased to go before any committee, organization or tribunal. I have done nothing wrong. There is nothing in my whole professional career of which I am ashamed. I wish an investigation would be started."

Are You Growing As Atlanta Grows?

There are 2,000 new homes built in and around Atlanta every year.

1,200 of these new homes are built each year within the city limits.

This is the statement of the city tax assessors. Ask them.

With Atlanta growing at the rate of 15,000 new population every year, these figures are conservative.

Do you know what this means?

By just the percentage that Atlanta increases in population each year, by just that percentage grows the DEMAND FOR PEACHTREE HOMES.

In a year or two every available choice building lot will have been snapped up, and when you try to get one of them, you will find you will have to pay two or three times the present price.

COUNTY SEEKS CREATION TO GET ROADS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The proposed County of Candler is to petition the incoming Legislature for creation along new lines, and with an argument not only novel, but perhaps winning.

Candler County is to ask for existence as a powerful argument in favor of good roads.

It will seek to prove its right to creation as an absolute good roads necessity—that, of course, along with other reasons likely to appeal to intelligent legislative consideration.

It is a fact that there are several parts of Georgia in which are to be found highly prosperous towns, from a business point of view, that yet are hampered mightily by reason of their remoteness from their County seats and the consequent improbability of very active good roads work in their vicinities.

In some of these places, it is claimed, road taxes in remote neighborhoods are applied exclusively to good roads work near the county seat, and that brings about not only much dissatisfaction, but positive discontent.

Metter, a prosperous and hustling town of South Georgia, is an example of this, and it is about Metter that the proposed new county of Candler is to be framed.

If Candler County is created, it is contended that, with Metter as the County seat, good roads construction will radiate from Metter throughout the neighboring territory, and that there will not be a farm in the new county not soon connected with the County seat by ample and sufficient roads.

There is great enthusiasm among the people about Metter in favor of the new county, and very little opposition from the people of the counties from which it is to be taken. Candler generally is regarded as a good new county proposition, too, and it should surprise no one, therefore, to see the new Legislature put the seal of its approval upon it.

It would be located in one of the richest and most promising sections of the entire State.

Disquieting news comes from the bedside of Representative-elect Samuel E. Berry, of Whitfield.

He recently was stricken with an acute valvular heart trouble, and has been in critical condition since, with the chances of recovery hardly even. For a time, he seemed to get better, but of late has not improved.

Mr. Berry has represented Whitfield several times in the Legislature, and is looked upon as a particularly valuable member.

The Young Men's Democratic Club of Savannah proposes taking a hand in the election of a representative to succeed Mr. Stovall, resigned.

There are certain measures which this organization desires passed, and it is probable that the club will either put out a candidate of its own or undertake to pledge some other candidate to support its bills. Indications are that there may be several aspirants for the place.

The club wants a white primary law to govern city elections. Notice of the fact that such a bill will be introduced at the coming session has been advertised in the newspapers as well as posted on the bulletin board at the Court House.

The need of such a law was impressed upon the leaders of the club at the January city election, when hundreds of negroes were bought. It was charged that both factions cooped up the colored voters in halls, and held them overnight, voting them in batches of four or five, practically under guard.

Under a white primary election law this would be eliminated, it is claimed, as in the campaign for County and State officers. The contest would be settled in the preliminary skirmish, in which the negro voter would have no part.

A well meaning member-elect of the Legislature soon to assemble in Georgia has announced his intention of introducing early in the session a resolution providing for night sessions.

His motive is worthy enough, as he says it is to prevent congestion at the end of the session—and congestion always is there, right on the job!

Notwithstanding the eminent respectability of his intent, though, the impression generally will be that he is destined to disappointment. The Legislature has had that proposition submitted to it by people who earnestly desired to get the work hurried along, but it never got anywhere. The Legislature simply will not sit more than two or three hours a day in its earlier proceedings, and the incoming Legislature is not likely to be very different from its predecessors.

The better way to conserve legislative time, perhaps, is to find some method whereby local legislation may be disposed of more readily than now.

"Whitfield County stands far above the average in the manner in which it handles its convicts," said Chairman Davidson, of the Prison Commission, who returned from a tour of inspection of that County Tuesday.

In discussing the work as a whole, Mr. Davidson said some of the counties are wasting their efforts and money under the mistaken idea that "the best warden is the one who can be secured for the least salary."

The majority of counties, the chairman added, are working their convicts at a profit.

A bill will be introduced in the Legislature seeking to abolish the City Court of Floyd County.

It will be provided in the bill, though, that the court shall not be abolished until the expiration of the term of the present judge, John C. Reece.

A further effort will be made, so it has been stated, to make Floyd County a separate judicial circuit within itself, and provide for four sittings of the court each year, instead of two, as is the law now.

The movement generally is favored in Floyd, and will not be opposed in Walker and Chattooga, the other two counties composing the Rome Superior Court circuit.

WAR IN BALKANS NEAR; POWERS ONLY CHECK

Greece and Servia Allied Against Bulgarians, Who Claim Treaty Violations.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 28.—Actual war between Bulgaria and the allied armies of Greece and Servia is very near, according to a statement made here to-day by M. Teodoroff, Bulgarian Minister of Finance, who is here on a political mission.

"Only tremendous pressure by the European powers can prevent a fresh conflict in the Balkans," said M. Teodoroff. "Unknown to the outside world, affairs have been getting more and more serious for months. An army of 280,000 Servians and Greeks is massed on the western and southern frontiers of Bulgaria, ready for a general outbreak.

"The contention of the Bulgarian Government is that Servia and Greece are exceeding the terms of the agreement drawn up by the Balkan league before the outbreak of the war with Turkey."

Austrian Reservists Ordered Remobilized.

VIENNA, May 28.—Remobilization of the Austrian reservists, recently dismissed when peace in the Balkans seemed near, was ordered to-day by the Government.

A telegram from Athens states that another fight between the Bulgarians and Greeks north of Salonika is imminent. The Bulgars are massing vast quantities of heavy artillery at Elevthera, about 100 miles east of Salonika.

A Sofia dispatch to The Reichspost to-day states that the Bulgarian Government has decided to submit the future status of Salonika to the powers. Tension between Bulgaria and Servia, however, is tightening.

Greeks to Fight To Hold Salonika.

SALONIKA, May 28.—Premier Vinezilos, of Greece, arrived here to-day en route to Sofia, where he will try to patch up the differences between the Greek and Bulgarian Governments.

King Constantine is reported to have given the impression to his staff that Greece will fight Bulgaria before she will consent to give up Salonika.

Stage Beauty Sues Eric Loder

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gaiety beauty, has brought action against her husband, Eric Loder, asking for a restoration of her conjugal rights. The action will be heard at the coming session of the divorce court and is preliminary to a suit for divorce.

Loder has made no defense. The basis of the actress' petition has not been disclosed.

Gabrielle Ray and Eric Loder, son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married here March 1, 1912. Miss Ray was one of the most popular and beautiful musical comedy actresses in England. She had been showered with attentions from many notable gallants, including ex-King Manuel of Portugal, Lord Dalmeny and the Marquis of Anglesey, but she declared her heart had been touched only by the dashing young Loder, who is tall, good-looking and wealthy.

Miss Ray and Loder were to have been married at Windsor, February 29, the day that made 1912 a leap year. At the last moment the charming bride-elect changed her mind, and literally left Loder "waiting at the church."

The next day Miss Ray relented and the marriage took place.

The Loders amassed a fortune in the tallow trade in Russia, and the baronetcy was one of the jubilee honors conferred by Queen Victoria in 1887.

Radio-Telegrams By Morse Signals

PARIS, May 28.—Professor Albert Turpain, after a series of researches extending over three years, has succeeded in solving the problem of registering radio-telegrams by Morse signals.

By using highly sensitive relays he succeeded in inscribing currents of one-millionth of a microampere. Such exactness is unnecessary, but with wires of a diameter of one-tenth of a millimeter he has constructed a relay cable to close currents of ten to twenty microamperes.

NO CHANGE MADE IN COTTON AND SUGAR TARIFF

Only Revision Senate Plans of Income Tax Lessens Burden on Married Men.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Underwood tariff bill as reported to the Democratic caucus after the revision of its various schedules by the subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee is forecast as follows:

There will be no change in the cotton, sugar and wool schedules as written into the measure by the House with the exception of a slight increase in duty on wool manufactures.

The only change in the income tax amendment will be the aleration of sub-section D, so that a man of family will not be compelled to pay as great a tax as a single man with the same income.

In the cotton and wool schedules a period of from 60 to 90 days of grace will be extended to manufacturers before the provisions of the new bill go into effect. The rest of the bill takes effect the day after its passage.

The amendments to the Underwood bill permitting the arbitrary valuation of imports by the Secretary of the Treasury will be adopted. In the metal schedule duties on structural steel will be revised downward, while ferro-maganese and pig iron will be free listed.

Wheat, cattle and other staples whose manufactures are all on the free list also will be free listed.

Duties on pottery will be raised.

President Wilson, it was stated, has been notified of the proposed changes in the bill and has consented to the revisions.

BRYAN WILL GET "GRAPE JUICE" WELCOME

Atlanta Decorates for Secretary's Coming Monday in His Favorite Beverage.

With the coming of Colonel William Jennings Bryan on Monday all Atlanta is rallying to the support of her reputation as a grape juice center.

Grape juice in every form,—in bottles big and little, square and round, and some of it as old as the vintage of last August—is making its appearance in every show window to greet the eyes of the world-renowned connoisseur, "Grape Juice Bill."

At the Capital City Club Colonel Bryan will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Colonel Walter P. Andrews. No wine or other liquors will be served, but in their stead will be an abundance of grape juice cocktails, grape juice highballs, and grape juice punch. This fact was revealed in a letter of instructions to the steward of the club in which Mr. Andrews made implicit his desire that the precedent of "wineless" dinners established by the distinguished Secretary of State in Washington be followed here.

The dinner will be served at the club at 6 o'clock. It will be attended by a number of prominent Atlanta citizens.

Mr. Bryan will arrive in the city at 5 o'clock. At 8 o'clock he will deliver an address before the students of the Georgia School of Technology at the Grand Opera House.

MAKES RHEUMATISM PROMPTLY DISAPPEAR

Crippled-up Sufferers Find Relief After Few Doses of Croxone are Taken.

It is needless to suffer any longer with rheumatism, and be all crippled up, and bent out of shape with its heart-wrenching pains, when you can surely avoid it.

Rheumatism comes from weak, inactive kidneys, that fail to filter from the blod the poisonous waste matter and uric acid; and it is useless to rub on liniments or take ordinary remedies to relieve the pain. This only prolongs the misery.

The only way to cure rheumatism is to remove the cause. The new discovery, Croxone, does this because it neutralizes and dissolves all the poisonous substances and uric acid that lodge in the joints and muscles, to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism, and cleans out and strengthens the stopped up, inactive kidneys, so they can filter all the poison from the blod, and drive it on and out of the system.

Croxone is the most wonderful medicine ever made for chronic rheumatism, kidney troubles, and bladder disorders. You will find it different from all other remedies. There is nothing else on earth like it. It matters not how old you are, or how long you have suffered, it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. You will find relief from the first few doses, and you will be surprised how quickly all misery and suffering will end.

An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle at any first-class drug store. All druggists are authorized to sell it on a positive money-back guarantee. Three doses a day for a few days is often all that is ever needed to overcome the worst backache or urinary disorders.

CLARK HOWELL AND THE WORK OF BEAVERS

The following letter from Chief Beavers and the interview with Mr. Clark Howell explain themselves:

Atlanta, Ga., May 27.

My attention has been called to an article in the Sunday papers in which an interview with me makes it appear that I was attacking Mr. Clark Howell personally and his policy with The Constitution.

I only repeated the conversation I had with him on the next day after he returned from Panama on about March 1, this year.

I meant no reflection on Mr. Howell, but only had reference to certain local reports in his paper, and he now assures me that there was no intention on his part to discredit the work which I have been trying to do in this city, and that the article that appeared in the reportorial columns of The Constitution was without his knowledge and consent, and that it was not his intention nor does he approve of anything that would in the least hinder or discredit the work that the police department has ben trying to carry out.

I would regret very much indeed to have any utterance of mine construed into an attack upon Mr. Howell, whom I have always regarded, and now esteem, as an exemplary citizen and journalist who holds the merited confidence of the public, as he does of my department and of myself.

J. L. BEAVERS,
Chief of Police.

In reference to Chief Beavers' statement Mr. Howell said:

"During my absence in Panama in January a police raid was made on a certain downtown rooming hotel. The Constitution next morning locally reported the affair and the fact that a man and his wife were subjected to undue treatment, with comment from the inadvertent victims and the manager of the hotel.

"When I returned from Panama the Chief complained of the local report referred to. I explained to him that nothing was further from our intention than to discredit his work, and that following The Constitution's oft-repeated commendation of his high sense of duty in endeavoring to enforce the law, he would have our cordial support to that end.

"He thanked me, recalling the fact that two days after the houses were closed I had sent for him to tell him that his attitude would have The Constitution's support.

"Next morning—September 26—The Constitution's leading editorial, 'A Wholesome Example,' unqualifiedly approved the Chief as 'an official with the nerve and the courage to enforce the law,' stating that 'he has set a singularly wholesome example of a blunt interpretation of duty.'

"I am still of the opinion that no good citizen would invite the return of the segregated district, nor the spread of its attendant evil in other directions. In my talk with the Chief I expressed my doubt as to his ability to absolutely eliminate the evil, and while the segregated district has been closed we are still wrestling with other phases of the problem.

"I think the Chief is doing the best he can, and he should have the support of all good citizens in his efforts."

CATTLE TICK IS COSTING STATE $6,000,000

Veterinarian's Report Discloses Astounding Facts—Tuberculosis Menace to Health.

The losses from the ravages of hog cholera reached $1,000,000 in 1912.

Tuberculosis in cattle is spreading through the State with alarming rapidity and threatens to infect every herd.

These are the startling facts revealed in the annual report of State Veterinarian Peter F. Bahnsen, issued Wednesday.

For the amelioration of these conditions Dr. Bahnsen recommends an appropriation of $30,000. He cites the conservation of human health as the absolute and pressing necessity for the expenditure of this amount.

Losses Are Enormous.

"Our losses from tick infestation," reads the report, "are under present conditions in excess of $6,000,000 annually. All of this enormous waste could be stopped in a few years with a sufficient fund to employ cattle inspectors, and by appealing to the counties and the Federal Government for increased aid.

"Hog cholera cost the State not less than $1,000,000 in 1912, or approximately 20 per cent of the total value of the hogs owned in this State.

"Tuberculosis is prevalent to a considerable extent among the dairy cattle of the State. The milk of tuberculous cattle is dangerous to man and the health of our people is in the balance. We have taken this matter in hand with the limited means available and the public is anxious that our services along this line be extended into a State-wide movement. Our greatest need in this matter is more funds for extending the work.

Slaughter Houses Menace.

"Slaughter house conditions are extremely bad in most sections of the State and the public is frequently fed on meat not fit for human consumption. Animals with communicable diseases are often slaughtered and sold without restriction and the sanitary conditions of fully 70 per cent of our slaughter houses is a crying shame. It demands rigid State supervision.

"We should have an appropriation of not less than $30,000 for this work. It is essential in conserving the health of the people that their food products be obtained from healthy animals and handled and distributed under conditions that will prevent subsequent contamination or putrefaction."

Wife Kidnaped Him And Kept Him Drunk

CHICAGO, May 28.—That he was kidnaped by his wife, whom he is suing for divorce, taken to New York and kept under the influence of champagne and cocktails, was the statement of Louis Frank, a saloon keeper, in an affidavit filed to-day.

About two weeks ago a stipulation dismissing Frank's divorce suit was filed by Mrs. Frank's attorneys, who said Frank and his wife were reconciled and living in New York. This Frank denies.

BOSTON, May 28.—Mrs. Mary Garabedian says her bath at the Cambridge Field Public Bathhouse cost her $108. Said Mrs. Garabedian:

"I paid 2 cents for a piece of soap and a towel. Instead of giving my valuables to the clerk I hid them in one of my shoes. When I came back the articles were gone, although the shoe remained."

Mrs. Garabedian is out exactly the price of 5,401 baths.

COL. NASH TO TRAIN RIVERSIDE CADETS

GAINESVILLE, GA., May 28.—Colonel J. Q. Nash has been appointed commandant of the cadet corps at Riverside Military and Naval Academy. He will take charge June 1.

Few cadet commandants in Southern preparatory schools are better known than Colonel Nash. He has been instructor of more Georgia youths in military tactics than any man in the State. His selection is a distinct accusition to Riverside's faculty.

Colonel Nash was graduated with first honor from Gordon College in 1896. He was superintendent of the public schools of Henry County; vice president and commandant of Reinhardt College, and commandant of Gordon Institute for several years. His more recent position has been commanding officer and instructor in the Georgia Military Academy.

The adjutant general of the National Guard of Georgia has detailed Colonel Nash as instructor and inspector in camp and target practice. He was detailed by the Governor to serve on the staff of the grand marshal at the inauguration of President Roosevelt and again at the inauguration of President Taft. He holds commissions with the National Guard from second lieutenant to lieutenant colonel and as assistant inspector general of Georgia.

HUNT FOR YOUNG CONDUCTOR VAIN

Wife of W. S. Culpepper, Who Disappeared in Atlanta Monday, Fears Foul Play.

Culpepper, who is 24 years old, a freight conductor on the Georgia Railroad, disappeared in Atlanta Monday afternoon. He was due to take out No. 210 Monday night, but failed to appear at the scheduled time.

Fearing he had been injured, his friends visited every hospital and infirmary in Atlanta Tuesday morning and also inquired at the police station, but in vain.

Culpepper lived a temperate life, has a good character, was devoted to his family and was popular among officials and workingmen of the Georgia Railroad. He had just been promoted to conductor. The theory of a voluntary flight is scouted by his family and friends. The young wife fears her husband has met with foul play.

2,000 TO MARCH IN BIG HOLIDAY PARADE

Pageant by Retailers June 4 Will Eclipse Anything of Its Kind Ever Seen in Atlanta.

With practically all plans completed for the pageant, local retail grocers and clerks Wednesday are predicting that the parade of June 4, with which they will celebrate the opening of the "Wednesday closing" season, will be one of the greatest ever seen in Atlanta.

F. E. Kamper, chairman of the arrangements committee, in charge of active preparations for the parade, declares nothing that has ever been held in Atlanta in the past will even approach it in interest. "It is a sure thing," declared Mr. Kamper, "that when we get through the people of Atlanta will know that clerks and retailers appreciate the opportunity of getting a half-holiday every week. The parade we are going to pull off will make the circus parades look sick."

And a glance at the arrangements induces the belief that Mr. Kamper knows what he is talking about. Probably 2,000 men will march in the parade, and Atlantans will see some weird costumes. Three miles of wagons and automobiles, decorated and emblazoned with banners, will follow the marchers. Five mounted policemen, the handsomest and bravest of Chief Beavers' force, will ride at the head of the column.

Three Brass Bands.

Three brass bands will tread proudly in the ranks.

Following the mounted policemen and a brass band will come aides and their marshals as follows: F. E. Kamper, H. Winberg, C. J. McCoy, R. H. Comer, W. J. Burton, J. H. Merritt, J. F. McNair and W. A. Byers. Each of these men will appoint five assistants to ride with him, and all will be clothed in uniforms that represent the last word in splendor.

The parade will form near the Capitol, on Washington, Hunter, Mitchell, Whitehall and other nearby streets. The exact route of the parade has not been determined, but it probably will be down to Whitehall and up Peachtree, until everybody gets tired. The rivalry among the merchants for the best decorated wagon and automobile already has begun, and some unique schemes in decoration are promised.

The celebration will not be confined to retailers. Wholesalers have expressed a desire to send their automobile trucks to the parade, and ice manufacturers, bakers, packers and the commission merchants also will work to make the parade a success.

Many lines of business were represented at the Taft Hall meeting Tuesday night, and every representative of every line pledged the assistance of himself and his fellows to making the parade a success. E. L. Adams was there to ladle out encouragement in behalf of the jobbers of the city, and J. D. Simmons told how far the City Salesmen's Association would go to make the affair a success. Then there were wholesalers, retail grocers, bakers, commission men, clerks and employees galore.

All Boost Atlanta.

Several stirring addresses were made, all emphasizing the necessity of working together and boosting for Atlanta. Among the speakers were Harry L. Schlesinger, father of the closing movement; Hon. John Y. Smith, Representative-elect from Fulton County; O. T. Camp, a consistent booster for the parade; E. L. Adams, of the jobbers; John McCullough, of the commission merchants; Olin Stamps, who boosts anything and everything pertaining to the good of the city; L. E. Rogers, one of the live wires among the clerks, and John Bratton, of the Georgia Retail Grocers' Association.

Before adjourning the clerks extended a vote of thanks to their employers for the half-holiday. It was announced by Mr. Schlesinger that more than 800 grocers had signed an agreement to close at noon every Wednesday through the months of June, July and August. Merchants in East Point also have joined in the movement and will take part in the parade.

DECATUR PLANS BIG HOME-COMING

Reception Committee Arranging New Festivities to Make June 3 a Memorable Day.

Extra festivities are being planned every day for Decatur's home-coming day and smoker on June 3. The reception committee of the Board of Trade will meet to-night at organization headquarters in the Weekes Building. Mayor John A. Montgomery is chairman of this committee.

The day and the night of June 3 will be, in effect, one continuous good time. The morning will be given over to oratory. Dr. Soule, of the State Agricultural College, will speak on DeKalb County's opportunities for truck farming, dairying and poultry raising; E. F. Smith on ways and means of locating the Fifth District Agricultural School in DeKalb County; C. Murphy Candler on the life and accomplishments of Jefferson Davis.

The afternoon will be made memorable by the laying of the cornerstone of Decatur's new $25,000 school, under the auspices of the Masons. George M. Napier is the orator of the day, while five-minute addresses will be made by Mayor Montgomery, J. Howell Green and Hooper Alexander.

Some time during the day a shield will be presented to the Decatur troop of Boy Scouts. The shield is a trophy of a recent field day contest. All Atlanta Boy Scout troops, with their drum corps, will participate in the presentation.

The second smoker of the Board of Trade will be held at 6:30 o'clock, as the concluding event of home-coming day. "GOOD EATS" will be served, followed by things to smoke, with music throughout. Good speakers will entertain the crowd, which is expected to be large.

Instant Postum

Is in thousands of homes where health is valued.

Former coffee users who have felt the pinch of indigestion, headache, heart disturbance, nervous irritation, etc., have written by the score, telling of remarkable benefits following the change from coffee to Instant Postum.

A level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"Thanks for the sample of Instant Postum sent me. I had been drinking coffee for a long time and thought it would be difficult to give it up, but I was mistaken.

"While I was drinking coffee I always felt exhausted and I weighed but 112 pounds. After using Instant Postum I soon recovered and now am as healthy as any person can be. I now weigh 120 pounds and am steadily gaining in weight. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.

Both kinds are sold by grocers everywhere.

TALLULAH FALLS LAND SUIT WILL GO TO JURY THURSDAY

State Ends Its Introduction of Testimony—Defense Finishes Tuesday Afternoon.

CLAYTON, GA., May 28.—All testimony, it is expected, will have been heard and arguments begun in the suits of the State of Georgia against the Georgia Railway and Power Company to determine the ownership of the Tallulah Falls gorge by the time the afternoon session of Rabun Superior Court adjourns to-day.

All of the State's evidence was concluded at this morning's session. That of the defense is expected to be concluded in the afternoon in time for attorneys to begin their speeches to the jury. The case will probably go to the jury Thursday morning and a verdict is expected by the afternoon.

The State began the introduction of testimony when court reconvened Tuesday afternoon. Old residents of Tallulah Falls, ranging from 60 to 70 years of age, who had lived there practically their entire lives, were offered as State's witnesses. They testified that of their own knowledge, hearsay and tradition former holders of the land along the Tallulah Gorge, now in dispute, and those who transferred the property to the power company did not lay claim to the land in the gorge, but only to the gorge's brink.

Professor Strong, of the University of Georgia, who, with Professor Koch, also of the university, made surveys of the disputed property and reported on it to the Governor and Attorney General, testified as to this survey and report, on which at the time the State officials declined to bring suit. Numerous maps and plats of the falls property were filed as exhibits to Professor Strong's testimony.

Further documentary evidence was introduced by the State this morning.

It was generally expected before the noon adjournment that the defense would offer a motion for a non-suit, which would be overruled by Judge J. B. Jones, president, and then the defense would offer its testimony, principally in documentary form.

LATEST DECREE IN RIDING HABITS IS FLAT-BRIMMED TILE

MISS ELIZABETH BIGELOW.

The new dress and flat brimmed "tile" worn by Miss Bigelow at the Brookline Country Club's annual Horse Show caused widespread comment in the Hub's Social circles.

Equestriennes of Atlanta, this is the last word in women's riding habits:

Also it was the most talked of costume worn at the revival of the Horse Show of the Brookline Country Club, and to-day tailors all through Boston and the surrounding countryside are beset by equestrian enthusiasts for duplicates. The costume was worn by Miss Elizabeth Bigelow, one of the most noted of the Boston women who have in recent years taken to the saddle as a means of recreation.

The usual pique stock is discarded by Miss Bigelow in favor of a straight standing collar of white linen with a broad tie of black. This closely resembles the style of 60 years ago and gives a decidedly natty appearance to the wearer. In place of the conservative black derby Miss Bigelow wears the bell-shaped silk tile, with a flat rim, fitting snugly over the head and which, it is said, "sticks" much more closely to the head of the rider than the small crowned derby.

Miss Bigelow's coat is of a dark material and hangs closely to the figure and displays to an excellent degree her trim, clean-cut figure. The young woman, who is one of the most popular society leaders in the "Hub's smart set," rode to a decided advantage in the various rings in which she competed, and her general appearance added to the enthusiasm with which she was greeted by the spectators and gallery.

4 PINNED BENEATH OVERTURNED AUTO

MARIETTA, GA., May 28.—Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Flemister, Miss Charlotte Flemister, Miss Charlotte Fite and a negro chauffeur, all of Cartersville, were injured when Mr. Flemister's automobile to-day turned turtle two miles from Marietta, near Fair Oaks. None suffered broken bones.

Mrs. Flemister's condition is serious from the shock. She had been in a highly nervous state for two weeks following the death of her baby.

The accident occurred when a front wheel came off. It was said a garage attendant at Cartersville had warned Mr. Flemister of danger from this wheel.

The chauffeur was pinioned to the ground by the steering wheel and Mrs. Flemister was caught under the back of a seat, while Mr. Flemister and his daughter were held down by the body of the car. Miss Fite alone was able to extricate herself. She summoned nearby cotton field hands, who lifted the car from the victims. They were brought to Marietta by a passing auto for medical attention.

Mr. Flemister is a wholesale grocer of Cartersville.

Carolina Desperado Not Slain; Captured

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—Richard Henry Austin, South Carolina assailant and murderer, reported killed near Sylvania yesterday, is still alive. He was desperately wounded and captured in the swamps near Newington last night, was brought to Savannah to-day, being safely lodged in the Chatham County jail. He admits his identity, but maintains that he did not commit the assault charged to him.

It is hardly expected that the negro will live to be tried. There has been some talk of an attempt to lynch Austin, but no such trouble is anticipated by the police or Sheriff.

STRENGTH IN WHEAT BASED ON HOT WINDS

CHICAGO, May 28.—The Inter Ocean says: "Hot winds were reported in the Southwest last night and the Kansas City curb on wheat was up ⅝ of a cent. Chicago was the weakest market yesterday, which bulls attributed to the break in corn. With unfavorable crop reports and a few days of dry, hot weather bulls are looking for higher prices and said wheat should be bought on breaks.

"It was the theory of the bears that the crop scare has been worked for all it was worth for the time being and wheat should be sold on all bulges. Corn traders believe that there will be little in it for the bulls in May corn the balance of the month. The trade has been largely evened up as indicated by the bulge Monday and the break of yesterday.

"It would not be surprising to see fireworks in May oats in the two and a half trading days remaining of the month, including to-day. Those who have watched the market say that the open interest is larger than it is possible for the shorts to deliver and they will have to go into the pit and cover."

MRS. SLATON ASKS FREE PARK MUSIC

The Fifth Regiment band will give another musical concert in Grant Park Sunday afternoon, the Georgia Railway and Power Company having donated a sum for it.

Unless Council makes an appropriation for park music there will be no more concerts this season, though W. H. Glenn, manager of the railway department of the company, said his company was willing to supplement any appropriation Council might make, but that it would not pay the full cost.

Mrs. John M. Slaton, wife of the Governor-elect, went before the Finance Committee of Council and pleaded for a fund for free music. She said it was recognized by the whole country that Atlanta was a music-loving city and it was the duty of Council to stimulate this feeling.

Councilman Claude L. Ashley, author of a resolution to appropriate $5,000 for music in both Grant and Piedmont Parks, said he felt sure a good sum would be given when the Finance Committee met Friday and made up the June budget.

Eloper Glenn Out Of Jail on $250 Bond

L. J. Glenn, who has been confined in the Tower since the first part of April, when he was brought back to Atlanta to answer a charge of abandoning his two little children to elope with Mrs. Ione Pidcock, wife of a railroad president, was released under a $250 bond Wednesday morning.

Glenn said he would remain in Atlanta until the divorce proceedings brought by his wife were heard.

Glenn's father, G. F. Glenn, secured his bond. His attorney is L. F. McClelland.

President Moelling, Savannah; first vice president, George Mau, Atlanta, are among the officers re-elected. William Neisi, Brunswick, and Louis Scheibe, Macon, fifth and sixth vice presidents; H. E. Dreeson, Savannah, treasurer, and Paul Wierse, Charleston, secretary, are new officers.

Works 18 Years as Clerk Without Pay

MONTPELIER, IND., May 28.—J. Stewart, who died here to-day, had worked eighteen years as a cigar clerk without pay.

Although offered money by his employer, he would accept only 15 cents three times a day to buy meals.

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Why Do Folks Pull Flowers in Parks?

"It sure gets my nanny," said the park policeman, "why some folks will come out here and pull flowers. The park commission spends a lot of money getting plants and a lot more to keep them in good condition and then along comes somebody and crabs the whole act by tearing off a bunch of the flowers.

"Last Sunday a young fellow came out here and nothing would do but he must have a magnolia. He thought they were pretty. So they were; but that gave him no license to pull a blossom. But he did just the same. I happened to see him after he had secured the flower and I called him.

"'Here,' said I, 'is a copy of charges. Suppose you straighten out this little affair with the Recorder.'

"'Why, I didn't know there was any harm in taking these flowers,' said he.

"'Well, what do you suppose we got 'em out here for?' I told him. 'These flowers belong to the city and they are put here to be looked at, that's all. If you want to give your best girl a bouquet why don't you go to the florist's? That's what they are in business for.'

"'I don't see any sign out here saying not to pull flowers,' says he, nettled I guess about that best girl remark of mine.

"'Sure, you don't, I says. 'An' what's more, you don't see no sign tellin' you to fall in the lake or commit suicide, yet I haven't seen you tryin' to do either.'

"He didn't have any answer for that one and I guess he was some wiser when he went home. And next day he paid his little fine like a man. Bet HE don't pull any more magnolias in Grant Park."

Motion Picture Show Takes Place of Nurse.

Out in West End women with small children have solved a problem. They have learned how to get along without nurses. Of course those with babies are not so fortunate, but the ones whose youngsters can run about are reaping the reward of ingeniousness.

Now when a mother wants to go to the matinee or shopping in town she doesn't have to call in mother-in-law or a neighbor to look after the children until she gets back. The plan is much more simple and gives general satisfaction. She takes them to a motion picture show.

It should be known, of course, that West End boasts a full-fledged "movie" show. The children go in droves every day and the proprietor must be an all-fired generous soul because the kiddies just stay and stay and stay. He never asks them to go out. And that is the real secret of the scheme taken advantage of by the mothers.

Mrs. West End decides that she wants to go shopping. She washes and dresses Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude and escorts them to the picture show. She pays 15 cents and the three young ones hike in to see the show. And there they stay. Mrs. West End goes to town, travels from one store to another until exhausted and returns homeward. She stops at the picture show and there is Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude still gazing in speechless ecstasy at the pictures on the screen.

What matters it if they have seen the same films half a dozen times that afternoon? They get just as much fun out of it as if they observed them for the first time. Mrs. West End calls her darlings and they all return home. Mamma is satisfied, the yungsters are decidedly so and Mr. Picture Man evidently is, because next time he is just as smiling as ever.

WOODMEN HOSTS TO LODGE HEAD

John T. Yates, of Omaha, Nebr., sovereign secretary of the Woodmen of the World, was the guest of honor at a reception given by the local camp of the order Tuesday night at Cable Hall.

Mr. Yates, accompanied by his wife, arrived in Atlanta Tuesday morning and leaves at noon Thursday for Macon, Columbus and other Georgia cities. He is en route to the biennial convention of the Woodmen at Jacksonville, which meets early in June.

Dr. F. L. Rosenthal, of Columbus, Ga., head consul of Georgia for the order, welcomed Mr. Yates to Atlanta, and Judge W. A. Roan made a short talk on the good of the order.

Mr. Yates said this was his first visit to Atlanta in fifteen years, and that there was a wonderful change.

"Especially noticeable is the cosmopolitan and metropolitan air of your city," he said.

Mr. Yates intends to purchase more Georgia bonds for the Woodmen.

"Georgia has the best bond laws of any State," he said, "and for that reason Georgia bonds will sell higher than those of other States. The Woodmen of the World already has purchased nearly $100,000 worth of bonds in this State."

Mr. and Mrs. Yates were taken on an automobile tour of the city Wednesday. They are stopping at the Piedmont Hotel.

Sunday, June 8, a special train, bringing Woodmen from Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and other Middle Western States, will stop for a few hours in Atlanta. The visiting members will be tendered a luncheon by the local camps at the Piedmont Hotel.

The Name
KIMBALL

means that scrupulous care has been given every detail of construction; that every part has been manufactured by the W. W. Kimball Company; that it has been made by skilled workmen, under the direction of experts in their respective lines. That ability, experience and responsibility are back of the piano. The ear and eye can judge of the the construction, case design and the finish, but you must look to the name for reliability of construction, and the assurance that the good qualities will endure. The house of KIMBALL has had an experience of over fifty years in the music industry, and artists, amateurs, and thousands of satisfied customers give abundant proof of the merit of the Kimball.

We are showing a large variety of styles in 88-note Player Pianos and Uprights. We have your choice in woods, such as Rosewood, Walnut, Circassian Walnut, Oak, Mission, Satin Mahogany and Mahogany. Prices ranging from $195 to $1,250.

Our one, absolutely one, price insures you, whether an experienced buyer or not, of securing the best instrument for the amount you wish to pay. It is not safe to buy a piano, or any other article of merchandise, from a dealer who has a sliding scale of prices, because you will never know when he has given you his lowest price. Then, too, your neighbor may buy the same merchandise for from $50 to $75 less money. A piano has but one value, and that should fix its price—the right price. Each and every instrument on our wareroom floor is tagged at the cash figure, and no one pays more or less.

It is not only safe, but pleasant, to deal with the world's largest manufacturers of Pianos, Player Pianos, Residence and Church Pipe Organs, through this Branch Store.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THARE was a yung man caim to our house the other nite wich has jest graduated from West Point. He was a nice yung man. He was as strate as a arrow & his clothes fit him fine. He is a friend of Ma's unkel, wich also went to West Point & was shot in the back yeers ago in a Injun campaign. Ma never likes to talk much about her unkel, beekaus Pa is all the time wanting to know how it was that he got shot in the back.

The naim of the yung man was Galbraith Denton. His naim was like the naims of the army ossifers in plays & stories & he was vary handsum. The only thing I didn't like about him was that he was all the time bragging. He is the only West Point man I evver saw that bragged. Moast of them knows better wen they git thru school.

I havent the faintest idee ware they will send me, he toald Pa & Ma. My only wish is to be sent to some post ware thare is plenty of action & danger. Danger is my middel naim, he sed. The direst peril in the world is like that much custard pie to me. I think I grow taller & broader on a diet of danger, he sed. Doant you feel that way? he asked Pa.

Pa Is Modest.

I think Pa was going to say Yes, but he saw Ma grinning at him & he sed Well, to tell you the truth, I am not so full of fire & recklessness as I was wen I was a yung man. In those days, Pa sed, I cud put my hand in a mad dog's mouth with a smile, or face the charge of a en-raged bull without batting a eye, but my advanced yeers have sobered me down a bit & made me think of other & greater things than fiteing.

Well, sed the yung man, Mister Dention, it is this way with me, he sed to Pa. I do not imagine that I shal grow less feerless with the added yeers. In fack, I beeleeve that when I am a old man I will be eeven moar dauntless than I am now, & wen the grim reaper cums he will find me in the hour of Deth as I ever was in life, unafraid.

That is a fine way to be, said Pa. You will find, sed Pa, wen you go to the front, many things in acktual warfare to try yure currage sorely. In the dark days of the Civil War, Pa sed, the days that I dred to recall to any grate extent eeven now, I went thru hardships & faced dangers that wud have killed any ordinary man or made him crazy. I wonder now & then, sed Pa, that that terribul war dident maik me reely insane. Dont you, wife?

Oh, I supposs so, sed Ma. Sumtimes I think you are a littel dippy at that.

Ma Gives Him Away.

Pa got kind of red in the face, but he kept on talking. My boy, he sed to Mister Dention, wen you have gone thru a baptism of fire such as me & my braiv comrades went thru at Mishunary Ridge or in the battel of the Wilderness, or at Shiloh or Chancellorsville, Pa sed, you will show them how reely braiv you are. One night I was surrounded by a whole company of cavalry, Pa sed. I never lost my superb nerve. Taking advantage of a blue mist that hung oavey a gray landscape, I mingled freely with the enemy & thus made my escape.

Mr. Dention beeleeved Pa until Ma sed: Lissen, Galbraith; this deer husband of mine was never in war except with me.

Far More Important.

The old man had given his son a very fair education, and had taken him into his shop. The young fellow was over-particular about a great many little things, but the father made no comment. One day an order came in from a regular customer.

"I wish to goodness," exclaimed the son, "that Jones would learn to spell."

"What's the matter now?" inquired the father cheerfully.

"Why, he spells coffee with a 'k.'"

"No—does he? I never noticed it."

"Of course you never did," said the son, pettishly. "You never notice anything like that."

"Perhaps not, my son," replied the old man; "but there is one thing I do notice, which you will learn by and by, and that is that Jones pays cash."

Speedy Courtship.

A man recently in New York laid a wager that he would woo, win, and marry within an hour a young lady whom, with his companions, he had just seen arrive at the hotel where he was living.

There is nothing in the American marriage law to prevent this dispatch. He introduced himself to the damsel, she smiled upon his suit, a minister was called in, and they were married within an hour.

The wager, of no inconsiderable amount, was handed over to the bridegroom, who left with his bride the following day. It was shortly afterward discovered that the couple had long been man and wife, and that they had been traveling about playing the same trick at various hotels.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to five Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain. Manager Smith tells the newspapers about his new find and the reporters print all sorts of "joshing" stories about Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

At the same time the newspaper photographers unlimbered their batteries and began bombarding everything in sight. The reporters took possession of the players' bench and passed intimate remarks with their friends in uniform. The training season of the Atlanta club was on and Manager Smith, in full charge was right in his element. Next in importance, judging by his own personal estimate to himself, was Whiskey, the colored man-of-all-work.

Ed Gillespie, the groundkeeper, had the field in fine shape, despite the severe rains of the preceding week, which had nearly driven him to drink.

Then minutes of tossing the ball sufficed.

Batting Practice.

"Batting practice!" suddenly yelled Bill Smith. "Dunn, put on your shin guards. Brady, go into the box and toss up a few. I'll just take first crack at that ball myself. Gee, boys, it feels good to get a bat in my hands again."

To the player all the joys of baseball are confined to batting and pay days, and it is believed that many a ball player would waive his salary if he could make a base hit whenever he wanted to. Every player would bat for 1,000 if he could have his way and pitchers would be driven out of the profession.

Smith took his place at the plate, a dozen negro boys spread themselves in he outfield to shack the balls; Brady went to the mound and threw up a straight ball. Smith pasted it to left and ran gleefully to first.

"A hit!" he shouted. "I'll lead the Pinch Hit League this year."

One by one the players took their turn at bat. Most of them hadn't had a club in their hands for six months. Many of them swung wildly at the ball. Their eyes had not yet become accustomed to the novelty of the situation.

Gordon Kelly, being the "kid" of the party, was the last man to face the pitcher. He assumed the same pose that filled Bill Smith with astonishment the day they first met. Whiskey crept up to the players' bench and stood grinning behind the reporters.

"Here's Billy's phenom," remarked Percy Whiting, the dean of the reportorial corps. "Watch him miss the ball a mile."

"He looks like business, anyhow," observed Murphy, a confrere.

"The only way I know," replied Kelly, smiling. "If I'm wrong you fellows will have to teach me something dif"—

A Great Hit.

His remarks were cut short. The ball was sailing up to the plate. Kelly stepped forward and with a tremendous swing met the sphere fairly and squarely with his bat. There was a crashing sound and the ball, describing a huge arc in the air, cleared the bull by thirty feet and fell to earth far beyond that rampant figure.

An ear-splitting yell, such as can only be emitted by a negro under the pressure of pleasureable excitement, issued from the throat of Whiskey, nearly bursting the ear drums of the three reporters seated on the bench.

The instant he hit the ball, Kelly dropped his bat and circled around the bases with the speed of a Mott Haven sprinter. Percy Whiting jumped to his feet.

"Hey, Hypo!" he shouted to his camera man, "come here." And when that individual rushed up he whispered hoarsely:

"Snap that fellow in tweny different poses—standing up, lying down, roll over, say please, play dead and everything on the calendar; catching the ball, running the bases and at bat—especially at bat. Hustle now and we'll spring a good one in the late editions of The Georgian this afternoon."

"Do you hit all the ptichers like that kid?" laughed Brady, as Kelly raced over the plate.

"I don't know," replied Kelly, pleased at the question. "You see I never faced a good pitcher in my life. What I mean by that Mr. Brady," he added hastily, running out to the box in fear his answer had been misconstrued, "is that I never played a game of ball in my life and what I will be able to do with your pitching when you get in condition and cut loose is something I know nothing about. I'm afraid I will fall down hard. You see all you did was to toss up a slow straight one that time."

"That's al right, kid," said Brady. "No one ever made such a long hit off me before, and if you can meet the fast one and the curves the way you did that one they will go just as far—further if you pickle a curve ball. Stick around, kid, stick around."

Kelly thanked him for his encouraging words and walked away.

"How fast can you run, Gordon?" asked Bill Smith.

"I have done a hundred in nine an1 four-fifths," replied the recruit, with a laugh, "but I'm afraid the record won't stand. You see I timed myself."

"You timed yourself?" queried the manager, in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

Bill Smith looked at his "phenom" long and earnestly. He said at last, "Can that stuff, boy; can that stuff. If you don't, you'll drive me bughouse."

CHAPTER XI.

IT is to be presumed a ball player would look foolish if, just as a game was about to start, he stepped to the home plate, faced the assembled throng, removed his cap and sang the following from the prologue to "Pagliacci:"

"E voi, pruttosto che le onstre povere gabbane d' istrioni, le nostr' anime considerate, poiche noi siam uomini di carne e d' ossa, e che di quest' orfano mondo all pari di voi spiriamo l' aere!"

He would doubtless appear equally foolish if he sang the same words in English:

"Ah, think then, sweet people,
When ye look upon us, clad in our motley and tinsel
Ours are human hearts, beating with passion,
We are but men like you, for gladness or sorrow.
'Tis the same broad Heaven above us,
The same wide lonely world before us!"

There might be some scattering applause, but a vast majority of the unfeeling crowd would yell: "Cut it out!"

Fine Men Among Players.

Yet ball players are men. They are human beings, a fact often lost sight of by those who pay to see them perform. Frequently they are jeered and hooted and insulted by men of a low order of intelligence in the crowds; men who would not dare to say the same things to the players, if they met them face to face on the street.

There are those who say the life of a ball player is degrading; that baseball is a trivial profession. Yet the Governor of Pennsylvania was a professional ball player. So was "Billy" Sunday, the revivalist. So was A. G. Spalding, millionaire and near-Senator from California. So was Edward Hanlon, one of Baltimore's most successful real estate operators. So was Ted Lewis, a professor at Amherst College. So were hundreds of men who are now successful in other walks of life.

Things happen in baseball which never reach the ears of the public. There are tragedies and sorrows, joys and happiness in the national game that the outside world wots not of. All of which in this roundabout way leads up to the introduction to the reader of Thomas P. Morrissey, familiarly known by the sobriquet of "Long Tom."

For fifteen years Long Tom caught behind the bat in the big leagues. In his prime he was reckoned among the best men that ever wore a mask. One year he caught 148 games, handling the delivery of all kinds of pitchers—those that were as wild as hawks and those that had fine control; the ones that had "everything" and the ones that had nothing but a prayer; the curve balls and the treacherous "spitballs." But Long Tom had seen his best days and he was now down in the minor All of which, in the roundabout way, leads up to the introduction to the leagues, with only a brief baseball life before him. His fingers were gnarled and distorted. His right arm was no longer the terror of base-stealers. His legs had gone back on him.

Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta club, had taken a chance and signed Long Tom to a contract. He wanted him principally to coach the young pitchers on his staff and he had an idea that the hot Southern climate might boil the old fellow out and put him into something like his real form. Long Tom was not old except in a baseball sense. He had just turned thirty-five, but in baseball youth must be served.

Made Him Jealous.

Long Tom reported for practice the first day. He arrived in the clubhouse just as the others began their practice on the field. He slowly undressed and put on a uniform, and, picking up his mitt, mask, chest protector and shin guards, walked through the runway that led to the field. He came on the scene at the very moment Gordon Kelly was standing at the plate waiting for Brady to pitch to him, and when Kelly made that tremendous drive he stood stock still and watched the ball in its flight far into right field. Then he turned his eyes on the young man and followed the tall, powerful, lithe-limbed figure as it sped around the bases. Something in the sight of the youth filled the veteran with rage and jealousy.

"That's the kind that is putting us veterans out of the business," he muttered.

He sauntered up to the group that stood around the home plate and was cordially greeted by those who knew him of old. He was then made acquainted with the young players, who, of course, while they knew him by reputation, had never met him on the ball field. Included in the latter was Gordon Kelly, who shook Long Tom's warped hand and gave the customary greeting. Morrissey eyed the other critically and remarked:

"You're the fence buster of the Southern League, I take it."

"Nothing like that," laughed Kelly, "but I'd like to be."

"I guess you would, all right," returned Long Tom.

A Star Catch.

It wasn't what he said, but the half-sneering way he said it that caused Kelly to look up quickly.

"You must be that correspondence school guy I read about in the paper. I see another paper calls you a 'cotillion leader.' Well, that's where you belong, I'm a-thinking."

Kelly flushed and a look of surprise came over his face at the sarcastic tone of Long Tom. But he merely answered "Maybe so" and walked away. There were some unpleasant things connected with baseball, he thought. He could not understand why Morrissey should go out of his way to belittle him. Long Tom's remarks were entirely uncalled for. There was no occasion for them. He finally came to the conclusion that Morrissey was of a crabbed and morose disposition. Yet he recalled having read columns and columns in the newspapers about this veteran catcher and there had been no word that would lead one to think he was other than normal in his disposition.

As a matter of fact, Tom Morrissey's disposition was naturally peaceful. He, like most ball players, had had his clubhouse scraps, but they had not been of his own seeking. They had seemed to come naturally. He had the reputation of being as game a man as ever went behind the bat, and by hard work and strict attention to business he had earned the respect of his fellow players. But his relegation to the minor leagues had seemed to work a change in him. The truth had come home to him that his baseball days were numbered. The realization of this fact came to him on this fine day in March when he saw in Gordon Kelly the perfect picture of youth. It had suddenly made him angry with himself, and, contrary to his nature, he had proceeded to vent his spleen on Kelly.

When Gordon Kelly walked away from him, Long Tom continued to keep his eyes on the young man, and he watched his every movement. At last he was interrupted by Bill Smith, who yelled:

"A little infield practice now, boys. I'll bat the grounders. The rest of you go in the outfield. Tom, get a bat and knock up some fungoes."

Bailey, Nixon and Long journeyed to the outfield and Kelly went with them. Morrissey selected a lightweight fungo bat and began sending up easy flies. He served Bailey, Nixon and Long in turn and then shouted, "Here y'are, kid." At the same time he put all the force he could command behind his bat and drove the ball high in the air and labeled to land far over the head of Gordon Kelly.

With the crack of the bat, however, Kelly had turned suddenly and raced with all his marvelous speed toward the center field. After covering more than a hundred feet he stopped and turned again, facing the grandstand and an instant later the ball settled in his uplifted hands. He had timed the hit to a hair.

"If he gets under that one, he's a wonder," murmured the manager. Since the newspapers had spoken so facetiously about his "world-beater" he had become harassed by the thought that he had made a mistake in saying anything about the youngster until he had demonstrated his ability in a more substantial manner. There was little or nothing at stake financially and that end of it did not trouble Smith at all. But no manager of a ball club cares to have anything "put over" on him, so that he becomes the butt of the baseball public. When, therefore, Kelly made a really wonderful catch, the worried look faded from Bill Smith's face, he sighed deeply and his somewhat funereal smile shone like a candle through a hollow squash.

"Is that your correspondence school ball player, Billy?" asked Long Tom Morrissey.

"That's him. What do you think of him?" replied Smith.

TOO MANY KIDS

THEY told old Watkins, the showman, that there was no use giving his show in Kornshucks. There were too many kids there.

Old Watkins was in the free show business, and others in the same business had said to him: "The kids crowd in ahead of the old folks and monopolize the show. They absorb all the humorous offerings, and actually interrupt the doctor just at the important point when he unloads his wares, including cures for toothache, rheumatism, and colds and complexion beautifiers, at 50 cents a whack."

These kids, as far back as tradition goes, had spoiled everything in Kornshucks. They had interrupted sermons and lawn fetesand comic operas; and once when there was a sham battle the shooting could not be heard for them.

But in spite of all he was told about those kids, old Watkins went on putting up his tent for his medicine show. He merely listened politely to the people, who wagged their heads and warned him of failure. By the time his tent was up the kids filled the entire landscape back to the horizon. But he went ahead.

About fifteen minutes before the time the show was supposed to start something occurred on another vacant lot a little distance off. A man built a bonfire. Then he produced an explosion. It was no little explosion, but a regular Fourth of July affair. Then came more explosions.

Along about the third of the series the vacant lot where this was going on began accumulating kids. They came at the rate of 1,000 per bang from that time on. By the sixth bang all the kids in town were there, and only the old folks were left for the free show.

Old Watkins said: "You need not follow the kids to see what is going on there, my friends. There is nothing there but a bonfire and an ear-splitting racket. But it will keep the kids occupied and happy, and we can now proceed to have a show in peace."

"Hooray!" applauded the grown people. "Go ahead! Isn't it delightful?"

The performance proceeded. The mothers laughed and the fathers laughed. Why shouldn't they? There was no one stamping on their toes and pulling their arms off. There was no fighting and scuffing and crowding—nothing disagreeable at all. Only the refreshing jokes of the medicine man, made up as a negro or a Dutchman or some other inhabitant of the realm of mirth!

It was great! They laughed and enjoyed themselves and listened with breathless alarm to the dreadful things that might happen to them if they did not avail themselves of the providential chance to buy medicines that would heal all known diseases.

The show was over and all the money to be had was acquired by old Watkins, the free show medicine man, before the explosions and the bonfire died down and released the kids.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this ninth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

Asking Too Much.

"I suppose you're going to Dr. Mason's funeral, grandpa?"

"Oh," snarled the infirm old man, "don't talk to me about other people's funerals. It's as much as I shall be able to do to get to my own."

DANGER IN EATING MEAT

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if the patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after-effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has left masses of meat particles undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting; no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name, but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, upon receipt of price, full size jar mailed, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, Atlanta, Ga.

THE Ice-Kist Crankless Freezer

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

When One Is Very Young

"Love is a sickness full of woes,
all remedies refusing."
—Samuel Daniel.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

G. K. writes: "I am seventeen years of age and in love with a girl one year my junior. I am in love with her very much, but I don't know if she loves me. I feel as if I am getting sick, knowing not what to do."

The letter bears a date of ten days ago. If it were of yesterday, or the day previous, there might be reason for some uneasiness regarding the condition of G. K., but ten days is a long, long time, and without doubt he has gone through all the chills, the fever, the pangs, and made a complete recovery ere this.

This boy and girl love—calf love, some say—may develop into something larger, truer, finer, but the chances are all against it. A boy of seventeen thinks he has found the one love for life, and he also thinks he will never become too old to prefer pie to potatoes. He is sure that his heart will never waver from the choice of his youth, and just as sure that when he has grown old and gray, and has earned the right to spend money as he chooses, that he will at last gratify his youthful longing for nut sundaes.

Seldom Serious.

The love of his extreme youth is seldom serious, and does not even become a pleasant memory, for the reason that there were so many of them. The one picture he thinks he will always carry in his heart becomes the composite picture of many, and he forgets in a few years if Ethel had blue eyes or brown, and if it were Mary who gave him a lock of her hair, or Susan.

His emotions are so short-lived that calf love would be something to laugh about were it not for the waste of time every such love represents.

In the growing, developing, eventful and impressionable period of life, when a boy and girl should be studying their school books and laying the foundation for helpful manhood or womanhood, they moon around to the neglect of everything in life that is worth while, devoting every hope, every energy, every thought, to what they call love, but which bears no nearer resemblance to love than a worthless pebble bears to a precious jewel.

It is most regrettable that so much time is wasted in seeking for the counterfeit, instead of preparing one's self by study and training and self-control to appreciate the genuine that will come later.

Needless Waste.

G. K. has recovered from the sickness that prompted his letter long ere this. It is as if he called a physician to minister to an ailment so short-lived that it had vanished when the physician arrived. But the physician would warn him against another such attack, and explain the folly of needless pain, the waste of health and energy that could be avoided.

I can do no more. The remedy lies in his own hands. He must put such devotion into the effort to make a man of himself that there isn't time, room or inclination left for indulgence in the emotions that are not his due till he reaches man's estate.

The Five Frankforters

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Solomon, you may come in. Our tete-a-tete is quite over. We have not much in common—his Highness and I," said the old woman sadly.

The five Frankforters came quickly at their mother's summons. Charlotte came too, and stood in the doorway where for one fleeting moment she had touched the garments of the God of Love as he sped by.

"Madame! Shall I speak now?" asked Duke Gustavus with firm decision. Then he turned from the old mother to Solomon. "Sir—you know already why I am here to-day. I have the honor to beg for your daughter's hand in marriage."

With due solemnity Solomon answered: "We thank you, Duke Gustavus, for the high honor you confer on our family. We accept that honor—gratefully and gladly. I give my daughter to you."

Who shall fathom the heart of a maid? Who shall tell to what knowledge of her woman's heritage Charlotte had grown in one full hour? The girl came gently to her father and put her hand on his shoulder and looked deep into his eyes—into his soul, perhaps. "Father, you CANNOT without a word from me!"

"What do you mean?" asked her father sternly.

"I am ashamed! I know now that you arranged this yesterday—and I am ashamed."

The Crisis.

In growing anger the man asked his daughter, "How ashamed?"

"Ashamed to have been offered and accepted in this way."

"It is the custom of our people to arrange marriages in this way," Solomon's growing anger would not brook long delay—or argument.

"A hateful custom! A shameful custom!" cried Charlotte.

"Shameful?" Solomon's wrath was threatening to overwhelm his dignified manners.

"Yes. Yes—shameful. Your Highness, I will not be a party to a bargain so shameful to both of us. I thank you—and refuse."

"Do you know what you are saying?" thundered the baffled father.

"Do you know what I am FEELING? Father, do you believe that I could ever be happy without a home? For I could never find a home in that castle, with the very servants laughing at me behind my back. And the portraits on the walls staring at me and seeming to say: 'If you please you have come here too soon; wait another century or so!' No, no! If I marry, I—Grannie——" And poor little Charlotte, having fought her first battle—life's great battle for the right to happiness—fell sobbing at her grandmother's feet.

"Grannie!" Poor little banker's daughter, who has never known a mother, will you plead in vain to the dear old woman who has been the saint of your girlish dreams?

Solomon spoke. He was very angry, but it was that cold, implacable anger that brooks no interference with his desires. "Your Highness will forgive this exhibition? My daughter will soon see reason?"

But Gustavus was to struggle slowly to-day to his full heritage of manhood. "I beg you—I insist—that you shall not persuade her against her will."

"Her will?" said Sollomon. "In this family the children obey their parents."

A Boomerang.

Frau Gudula rose with quiet dignity from her great arm chair. "Then YOU obey ME—and let the child have her way in this. Duke Gustavus, I think you at last are wise enough to understand it must be so. Love is greater than any of us. No! little Charlotte, get up! Grannie won't let anyone hurt you."

Gustavus smiled. "Madame, I have looked into the souls of three women to-day—and I think I understand. But now, Baron, if I do not fulfil my part'——"

Solomon spoke bitterly: "Count Rehrenberg has the money! He is half way to the castle by now."

"It will be returned to you, of course," began Gustavus, quietly, and then his old merry, devil-may-care spirit finished the sentence—"if there is any left."

Frau Gudula spoke with stately authority: "No, Duke Gustavus, be thankful you have it. Perhaps it will make a great difference in all of your life. If I know my sons, they will not be losers."

"My mother is right," said Amschel. "We have never yet taken back a signature."

"If your Highness is not too anxious to return to Neustadt Castle at once," said Nathan, "we can discuss the situation over the rest of the Burgundy. Will you come, Carl, Amschel? I think we still feel that Your Highness's personal security is what we want."

And as they discussed the salt mines and great forests that might yet make the Duchy of Taunus a wealthy province, the brothers little dreamed of the hidden wealth Gustavus was finding in his dream of a pair of eyes that had not lied. For suddenly the Duke of Taunus knew that the old home was his and he must not leave it—that a man must not abdicate for the woman he loves—but that when he is worthy to rule, then he is worthy to win even her love. And the money? Oh, Gustavus of Taunus could always find plenty of use for that! Love may work miracles, but because his sweetheart's hair is spun gold, a spendthrift does not learn to scorn all other gold!

The Real Reason.

And Solomon was thinking of the plans that had gone so sadly amiss—and of his twelve millions of florins! They might have been better invested!

"Who could have believed it!" said he. "A young fellow like that to have the best of us! Providence has helped him."

"Perhaps he is sharper than you thought," said his mother.

"Then I am all the more sorry to lose him as a son-in-law. Now—Fraudlein Charlotte—you will be so good as to give me your reasons for what you have done."

The girl moved slowly, almost as one in a dream, across to the father she had so sorely displeased. Her little scene was set and she must play out her part before her audience. Grannie was sitting again in her great arm-chair by the little breakfast table. Old Soi still shone across the rose arbor and traced a pattern of flowers and leaves on the soft green carpet. Across the room, stood her Cousin Jacob—intent, waiting—one would scarcely dare guess for what. But Charlotte and her father standing close—close in the little heart of that sunny room, were talking to each other across grim, gray seas of misunderstanding.

"Your reasons, Charlotte," said the man. This was not father talking to daughter—it was the man of business talking to the woman who had dared to balk his dearest plans.

"You know them, father. If I marry, it will not be for a castle, and a grand title, and position—the Duke would have given those to me—but I want more—far more—than he could ever give me."

"Go on."

"And I must be able to give more—infinitely more than I could ever give to him. Then I would be content to live anywhere—as dear Grannie was."

The Truth Comes Out.

Solomon sank into a great chair across the room from his mother. On Frau Gudula's face was a sweet smile of memory—and hope for this younger generation whom she loved. And Jacob? Jacob was waiting—waiting with throbbing pulses and yearning eyes for that supreme thing for which he would have given the world had the world been his!

"Is there anyone to whom you could give—and who could give to you—all you mean?" asked Solomon with slow insistence. He would sift this matter of his daughter's daring disobedience to the bottom.

"I—I—believe so, father."

"Will you tell me who he is?"

The girl did not answer. Pulsing, telltale blood stained her cheeks with love's own royal crimson—but she could not lift her starry eyes.

"So! It is all arranged between you, I suppose. What is his position in life?"

Charlotte answered so low that one might scarcely hear her timid tones: "He is—a business man, I think you would call it."

"Every tailor calls himself that. What kind of a business is his?"

"Banking"—still lower.

"A banker?"

"Yes; like you." The girl wondered if this torture would ever cease—would she ever be at peace—and happy?

Extremes of Fashion From Paris

The ultra extreme of evening dress.

THE picture on the left shows a rich and effective model for theater or semi-evening wear. The original gown was of sulphur-colored brocaded satin over a foundation of sulphur chiffon.

The under part of the bodice is formed by a very high draped belt which rises in two points from the under arm to the chest. Shadow lace edged with beads starts from a beaded ornament at the center front and comes over the shoulder, falling in the back in long angel sleeves, which end in a beaded tassel.

The skirt is made in two pieces, draped one over the other, and is held at the right by a buckle of beads, from which starts a small round train.

For the Extremist.

The model on the right cannot be recommended to the woman who wishes to be modest. The consideration of what not to wear is almost as important as what clothes to select; and together with the extremes of the overworked Balkan blouse fashion, the wise woman will avoid the sleeveless corsage and the skirt slit to the knees. It will be easily seen how the modifications that good taste suggests to every woman will change these dresses from extremes of freakishness into really graceful dresses.

This model shows an evening gown of Persian blue and gold over a foundation of black chiffon; the bodice is plain in corselet style, and the top consists of a fichu of black chiffon which drapes over the shoulder to form small sleeves. The waist is girdled by a belt of Persian blue satin, with a huge flower of the same material in front. The plain skirt is split at the knees to show the foundation of pleated chiffon. On one side of this cut it curves up about three inches from the floor, and on the left it lengthens into a train with rounding corners.

Do You Know That—

One of the longest concrete viaducts in the world is being erected over the Cuyaroga River in Cleveland. It has a length of 2,880 feet and is a double-decker, the upper deck carrying a driveway 42 feet wide for automobiles and other vehicles, with 12 feet of "sidewalk" on each side. The lower deck will carry four street railway tracks. The clearance over the channel will be 93 feet. Some 1,500 concrete spiles are being driven to carry the nine piers nearest the water.

Experiments have been made in Germany in the use of pigeons for scouting purposes. The pigeons are provided with miniature cameras furnished with shutters that are released automatically. The birds are set free from selected points so that they fly over the enemy's fortifications. When they return home the photographs they have taken are developed, and sometimes important disclosures appear on the film.

At Loerrach, in the Black Forest, there is a lake, the bed of which remains dry from 10 to 13 years at a time, and then suddenly refills with water from subterranean springs to a depth of 12 to 15 feet. After ten years the Eichener Sea, as it is called, has again commenced to fill, and has destroyed all the crops which farmers had planted on the bed.

Value of Bluff.

In a close encounter during the American Civil war, two soldiers, one from each army, came face to face within short range.

Each put up his gun and fired, as it subsequently appeared, his last cartridge. Both missed. The bullet of one man buried itself in a tree, and the shot of the other passed through the coat of his enemy. Each man, knowing his ammunition was gone, supposed himself to be at a disadvantage.

One of them made a great show of reloading his gun, and, stepping forward, demanded a surrender. The other threw down his arms with a groan.

"If I had another cartridge I would never surrender," he exclaimed.

"That's all right," calmly remarked the captor, marching off his prisoner. "If I had another, you may be sure I shouldn't have asked you to surrender."

"Do you think $20 will be enough to give the minister?" inquired the prospective bridegroom.

"You'd better make it $25," replied the best man. "He is going to be married himself next week."

"Do you know how to run a motor car?"

"Well," replied Mr. Chuggins, "I know all about the mechanism of the thing. But I haven't yet mastered the city ordinances."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T WORRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and for some time past have been keeping company with two young men, R. and G. Now, as they are having numerous disputes over me, I decided to meet just one of them and stop their quarrels. I prefer the society of G., and I told this to R., thinking it best to be honest with him. He became very angry and said I had done him a great wrong in not telling him before. He als accused me of encouraging him. He has vowed he will cause trouble between G. and me. I am only a little girl and such a thing as love never occurred to me. GLADYS.

I think R. is blustering in the hope of frightening you. If you prefer G. you have the right to show your preference. It will be much better for you to go with neither than to try to meet both.

THEY ARE RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am seventeen and deeply in love with a girl one year my junior, whom I have known three years. Now, as my parents think I am too young to have anything to do with girls, I would like to have your advice on the matter. JACK.

Your constancy for three years is in your favor. Be constant a few years longer and this will prove your love more than any protestations.

In the meantime remember your parents know best.

KNEW A LITTLE

A gentleman traveling some time ago asked a one-armed mendicant by whom he was accosted how he lost his arm.

"It was like this, sir. The last time I went to sea we was caught in a typhoon off Cape 'Orn. The ship went over on her beam ends, so the cap'n 'e orders me an' Tom to go out on the yardarm to keelhaul the bo'sprit and ter splice the jib-boom to the mainmast. I was a-hangin' on to the top-gallant ratlin's when Tom suddenly let go his end, an' I was pitched 40 feet in the 'old."

The gentleman smiled.

"That's a capital yarn," he said. "You ought to have been a sailor," and, without giving him anything, went on his way.

Crestfallen, the beggar watched his interrogator, and saw a crossing-sweeper touch his hat most deferentially to him.

"I say, Jim, who's 'e w'en 'e's at 'ome?" he called.

"Him?" replied the sweeper. "Don't you know who that is? Why, that's Admiral Beresford."

Always Merry and Bright.

False to all the traditions of Scotland and of farming, Sandy McTavish was a supreme optimist.

Nothing ever seemed to worry him.

One day—so the story goes—during the great floods, he was found by a neighbor lucky enough to possess a boat sitting peacefully on the roof of his house, smoking his pipe while the waters rose.

"Hello, Sandy!" cried the neighbor.

"Hello, Sam!" cried the cheerful one. "All your fowls washed away, I suppose?"

Sandy nodded.

"Ay," he said; "but the ducks can swim!"

"Apple trees gone, too, eh?"

"Well, the crop would have failed anyhow."

"So will you," said Sam, "if you sit up there much longer. Why, the waters have covered your ground floor windows already."

"I know," replied Sandy, as he smoked on; "and a good thing, too. Them windows did want washin'!"

A LITTLE SIX-YEAR-OLD DARLING IS RESCUED FROM ITS MISERIES

Little Willie Shumate, the little six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Shumate, of 168 Kirkwood Avenue, this city, suffered like thousands of other little children are suffering. He was pale and puny; in his sleep he would roll and toss; in the morning his breath was bad, and during the day he was very nervous and constantly biting his finger nails or picking his nose. He was too young to take severe medicines and the parents were simply told not to worry, because the child would get over its troubles as he grew older. But the parents did worry. They could not help it, seeing their child in such constant misery. They called at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store and obtained a treatment of Quaker Extract. The child was given this remedy regularly according to directions, and the results came to light. He took one bottle and a half of the Extract, and expelled not one but a handful of small worms, some alive and some dead. These were the cause of the child's sufferings, and Quaker Extract, by removing the cause, cured the child. These worms were two inches long each. To-day the little fellow is happy as a lark and his happiness is shared by his loving parents, his cheeks are red and rosy.

The case again proves the powers of the wonderful Quaker Extract. If you suffer from rheumatism, catarrh or stomach worms, call at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store, 29 Marietta Street, for Quaker Extract, 6 for $5.00, 3 for $2.50 or $1.00 a bottle. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. Do not fail to call to-day and obtain good health. We prepay express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Why, Dad," he said, "she is young. She's just a little child in a hundred ways. She loves the trees and the grass and the flowers—and everything that's simple and real! And as for her heart—" His voice was low and very tender. "Why, her heart is the biggest I've ever known. It's just overflowing with sweetness and kindness. I've seen her pick up a baby that had fallen in the street and mother it in a way that—well, no one could do it as she did it, unless her soul was clean."

Gilder in Despair.

The father was silent, a little awed. He made an effort to shake off the feeling, and spoke with a sneer.

"You heard what she said yesterday, and you still are such a fool as to think that."

The answer of the son came with an immutable finality, the sublime faith of love.

"I don't think—I know!"

Gilder was in despair. What argument could avail him? He cried out sharply in desperation.

"Do you realize what you're doing? Don't go to smash, Dick, just at the beginning of your life. Oh, I beg you, boy, stop! Put this girl out of your thoughts and start fresh."

The reply was of the simplest, and it was the end of the argument.

"Father," Dick said, very gently, "I can't."

There followed a little period of quiet between the two. The father, from his desk, stood facing his son, who thus denied him in all honesty because the heart so commanded. The son rested motionless and looked with unflinching eyes into his father's face. In the gaze of each was a great affection.

"You're all I have, my boy," the older man said at last. And now the big voice was a mildest whisper of love.

"Yes, Dad," came the answer—another whisper, since it is hard to voice the truth of feeling such as this. "If I could avoid it, I wouldn't hurt you for anything in the world. I'm sorry, Dad, awfully sorry—" He hesitated; then his voice rang out clearly. There was in his tone, when he spoke again, a recognition of that loneliness which is the curse and the crown of being:

"But," he ended, "I must fight this out by myself—fight it out in my own way. . . . And I'm going to do it!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Burke Plots.

THE butler entered. "A man to see you, sir," he said. Gilder made a gesture of irritation, as he sank into the chair at his desk.

"I can't see any one to-night, Thomas," he exclaimed, sharply.

"But he said it was important, sir," the servant went on. He held out the tray insistently.

The master took the card grudgingly. As his eyes caught the name, his expression changed slightly.

"Very well," he said, "show him up." His glance met the wondering gaze of his son.

"It's Burke," he explained.

"What on earth can he want—at this time of night?" Dick exclaimed.

The father smiled grimly.

"You may as well get used to visits from the police."

There was something ghastly in his effort toward playfulness.

A moment later Inspector Burke entered the room.

"Oh, you're here, too," he said, as his eyes fell on Dick. "That's good! I wanted to see you, too."

Inspector Burke was, in fact, much concerned over the situation that had developed. He was a man of undoubted ability, and he took a keen professional pride in his work.

He possessed the faults of his class, was not too scrupulous where he saw a safe opportunity to make a snug sum of money through the employment of his official authority, was ready to truckle to those whose influence could help or hinder his ambition. But, in spite of these ordinary defects, he was fond of his work and wishful to excel in it.

Thus, Mary Turner had come to be a thorn in his side. She flouted his authority and sustained her incredible effrontery by a restraining order from the court. The thing was outrageous to him, and he set himself to match her cunning. The fact that she had involved Dick Gilder within her toils made him the more anxious to overcome her in the strife of resources between them.

After much studying, he had at last planned something that, while it would not directly touch Mary herself, would at least serve to intimidate her, and as well make further action easier against her.

It was in pursuit of this scheme that he now came to Gilder's house, and the presence of the young man abruptly gave him another idea that might benefit him well. So he disregarded Gilder's greeting, and went on speaking to the son.

Dick's Eyes Flashed.

"She's skipped!" he said triumphantly.

Dick made a step forward. His eyes flashed, and there was anger in his voice as he replied:

"I don't believe it."

The inspector smiled, unperturbed.

"She left this morning for Chicago," he said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go." He turned to the father, and spoke with an air of boastful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape and you'll be all right."

"If we only could!"

The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

The inspector, however, was confident of success, and his tones rang cheerfully as he answered:

'WHITEY' HURT, CRACKERS PLAY WRETCHED GAME

By Percy H. Whiting.

WHEN Whitey Alperman went over after a terrific grounder hit by Spencer in the sixth and caught the ball with the side of his head there was a gasp from the crowd. It was a terrific blow—enough to floor an ox. It didn't floor Whitey, quite, but it put him out of the game.

And through the rest of a gloomy afternoon the fans had a chance to think what a difference it would make to the Crackers if anything happened to Alperman.

The odd thing about Alperman is that he's playing better ball now than he ever played in his life.

It will be recalled that spite work put him out of the big leagues. He and Charley Ebbets had words and the Brooklyn mogul said he would spend $10,000 to keep "Whitey" out of the big leagues. So he sent him to Rochester. But when John Ganzel gave him up there was no question of spite work. Jawn thought he was "all through."

Last year Alperman played sensational ball. This year, with a better club, he is going even stronger.

Said King Brady, the other day, "I've known Alperman off and on through his whole career. He is playing better ball now than he ever did in his life—vastly better than when he was with Brooklyn. And he was a grand infielder then."

ALPERMAN has been a great man for Atlanta. His batting has been timely and his fielding phenomenal. Any man who could plug the gap that Otto Jordan left has some size to him. And Alperman has more than done it. If anything happened to old Whitey the Cracker team would be messed up proper.

IT was a freaky game the Crackers lost yesterday. Up to the seventh the Pelicans had made five hits and four runs. The Crackers had made eight hits and two runs. Then everybody "blew" at once on the Cracker side and the visitors romped, 8 to 2.

It was another wretched game for the Crackers. Good old Joe Dunn had a hideous time of it, Agler pulled a miscue that cost two runs, a couple of pops fell safe for lack of a little determination in getting under them, Tommy Long slumbered at the switch and failed to score from third on a slow double play at first and second and the Crackers wasted enough hits to win three ordinary games.

SEVERAL odd propositions developed. Seventy-seven per cent of the Pelicans' hits came after the fifth inning. Seventy-five per cent of the Crackers' hits were made by the first two men on the batting order. One hundred per cent were made by Long, Welchonce and Smith. Seventy-seven per cent of Atlanta's put-outs were made by the last three men in the batting order.

Everything went by spots. And it was a spotty, sloppy, chilly game.

THE Pels had all the luck. Spencer's home run over the signs was an easy loft. The same hit to center or left would undoubtedly have been an out to a fielder. A little pebble gave the ball that hit Alperman a bad bound, knocked out a steady infielder and cost another run. The Crackers batted terrifically but never at the right time. For instance, note this coincidence: Three times in succession Long hit a single and Welchonce followed him with a single. Twice none was out. Once one was out. Not once in three times could either Alperman or Bailey, two of the league's greatest pinch-hitters, deliver a safe swat.

Once or twice Pat was palpably off. In a close game it would have been exasperating. With everything shot to blazes anyhow it did not matter.

"But," as one of the ball players remarked, anent the fact that the veteran is generally wrong, "it's lucky Pat's name is Wright."

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 28.—A few days ago I discussed the different teams in the National League race in general. To-day I will return to the same subject, sizing up the Giants and Pirates. Both teams were off all over in the early part of the race.

The New York players displayed some of the worst fielding seen on any diamond since the late world's series. Nothing was sure to the Giants. The pitchers were also out of sorts, Tesreau failing to get moving and Marquard being out of condition from sickness. The Giants hopped into their fielding stride last week with a single bound, and the infield is moving like a string of firecrackers now. Instead of turning outs into base hits, as we were doing, the infielders are now cutting down base hits and converting them into outs, as several of the Pittsburg players will tell you if you get a chance to consult them. That helps.

Following this encouraging sign, both Tesreau and Marquard stepped out and pitched good baseball last week, Rube showing a very fine game against the Pirates when he got tangled up in a pitching battle with Camnitz, the one that went fourteen innings. His fast ball had the hop on it for the first time this season, and when he is getting the jump on his fast one he is one of the best southpaws in the business anywhere. Tesreau also stepped forth in the latter part of this same game and displayed his old speed and the break on his spitter which made him really the leading pitcher of the National League last season.

With these two men going at their best, the Giants are sure to get pitching. The only man on the staff not up to the top of his stride now is Al Demaree, the recruit who has shown such grand form so far this season. He strained his side recently, and will not be ready to work regularly again for about a week. But Tesreau can go to the box every other day if necessary, but it won't be necessary with Marquard and myself in shape to take our regular turns.

THE Giants have not hit up to anything like the pace they showed last season so far, but they should bat harder. Shafer, who has replaced Snodgrass in center field, is one of the most natural hitters I have ever seen, and it is impossible to get him to go after a bad ball. He has a wonderful eye and is a splendid judge of balls and strikes. His batting average does not show his true strength, because he reaches first base so often on passes. He is also lightning fast on the bases once he arrives, and will worry any pitcher badly.

Burns is capable of batting better than he is doing at present. He is still a little strange in the big league berth, but he is a good ball player.

Fletcher is batting hard, and Merkle and Murray have picked up within the last week. Meyers so far has not acquired his last season's punch.

The club will get batting, and then we should climb through the league like the gossip of a kiss through a boarding house.

PITTSBURG afrittered away ball games until it came to New York, when it took one of those sudden braces and battled us to a practical standstill. After leaving the Polo Grounds, the Pirates went over to Brooklyn and choked down the fond hopes of the Dodgers, when Dahlen had been led to expect something soft after the fine manner in which the Boston club cleaned up four straight on Clarke's crew. The Pirates have the pitching and the hitting, and will be in the contention for the championship.

BROOKLYN has started to fade, and I expect to see the team drop. Of course the club will not go down to the depths to which other Brooklyn teams have descended in years past, but it will be fighting to remain out of the second division before the last word is in.

THE St. Louis club is a big surprise, especially to the Giants, but it is going ahead of its normal speed now. It has not the staunchness to last. The team has two excellent pitchers, Harmon and Sallee, and Konetchy is a great ball player. So is Huggins. The rest of the team is nothing out of the ordinary, and a club must be out of the ordinary to win a pennant. Huggins's peppery personality has done a lot for the team. Sallee will do a lot more if he sticks in shape all season.

CARDINALS WILL HOLD ON TO JIMMY SHECKARD

ST. Louis, May 28.—A yarn emanating from Cincinnati to the effect that Jimmy Sheckard would be released by the Cardinal club because his salary was too bulky was spiked yesterday by Manager Huggins. "I have no intention of releasing Sheckard," declared the Cardinal commander, "and I want to state that emphatically. Sheckard is a great ball player, and he was paid accordingly by the Chicago club. We took over his contract, but we're not kicking. Whether he will play regularly is a question. Our club really hasn't shaped itself as yet."

WILLIAMS BREAKS YALE'S LONG WINNING STREAK

NEW HAVEN, CONN., May 28.—Williams broke Yale's record of seventeen consecutive victories by shutting out the Blue on Yale field yesterday, 2 to 0. The game was played on a water-soaked diamond, with the drizzling rain falling at intervals. Each team fielded brilliantly.

The Athletics took a double-header in easy fashion from the Senators yesterday, winning the first 8 to 0 and the second 7 to 1. Eddie Plank, the veteran southpaw, pitched in the first and allowed the Senators only two hits.

Peckinpaugh, the former Nap utility infielder, secured in trade by the Yankees, will be given a regular position at shortstop. "Peck" is regarded as a fast and brilliant fielder, but somewhat shy with the war club.

Harry Lumley, once manager and star player with the Dodgers, has been released by the Troy, N. Y., team. An injury to his throwing wrist perhaps will neecssitate his retirement from baseball.

The Braves' second victory of the day was a clean-cut, deserved affair, but the first game was won on a fluke. In the ninth Sweeney hit to the outfield, and Connelly, rounding third, started for the plate. Burns would have thrown him out by nearly ten feet, but the ball, instead of bounding into Catcher Meyers' hand, struck Sweeney's discarded bat and bounded away, while Connelly scored the only run of the game.

Manager Stovall's triple in the seventh which scored a run, followed by Austin's single, scoring Stovall, were enough to gain a victory yesterday for the Browns over the Tigers.

C. Webb Murphy, owner of the Cubs, who recently forbade his players to converse with reporters, has another grievance against the newspapers. A short time back Murphy set out on the trail of "Rube" Scheur, a promising pitcher of the Superior, Wis., team, in the Northern League. The newspapers printed the fact and the Superior club owners at once boosted the price of Scheur so high that Murphy balked. Murphy now states the newspapers "queered my deal."

* * *

Dick Rudolph, the recruit from the Toronto team, in the International League, who pitched for the Braves Monday, holding the Giants at his mercy, acted as a relief pitcher again yesterday and once again the New Yorkers were unable to score on him.

By Left Hook.

LUTHER M'CARTY, one of the most valuable instruments of the getting of money under false pretenses in the hands of men who don't like to work, was finally killed in the prize-ring, a place he should never have been allowed to enter. He is the fifty-eighth victim of prize-fighting since the brutality has been eliminated, and it has been used solely to inculcate these principles of manliness and fair play that is invaluable to the youth of our city.

According to the doctors who examined the fighter's body, he had organic heart trouble. According to Jim Corbett and other experts who saw him shortly before he went into the fight with Pelky at Calgary, he was not in good condition. You will be interested to know how it was possible that a man with a bad heart could reach a position in pugilism where even a few gulls and greedy men could call him a champion of anything and draw crowds of a size that would justify their offering him $5,000 to fight for them. This is how it was done and how he was killed:

Up until recent years prize-fighting, the actual fighting, has been possible only to pure brutes, strong-thewed, iron-hearted animals. All fights were either to a finish or for twenty-five or forty-five rounds. This condition made McCarty impossible. It was a survival of the most uncivilized. With the growth of the influence of the public schools this type of man began to disappear. Young men with intelligence boxed or exercised and went into a decent business for a living.

Finally only two of the old breed were left, in two negroes—Johnson and Langford. It is white men who pay to see fights and make pugilism possible, and they would not pay much to see the two negroes. Johnson and Langford had practically abolished heavyweight prize-fighting because there were no fighters fit to meet them.

This condition was bad for a number of men who had made a life work of capitalizing the degradation and blood lust of pugilism. They were threatened with the necessity of doing something useful or starving to death. They dug up the poor old ruin, Jeffries, and pitted him against Johnson, and followed with one or two valiant and unskilful youngsters, but the public wearied quickly of this sort of sport, and heavyweight fighting died.

It was up to these gentlemen to do something in a hurry. The Frawley bill was passed in New York, where the most money is, and this permitted ten-round fights. The ten-round limit is useful because with a little luck an invalid might go through with it and not die the same night. The boxing commission was created. Its business was, among other things, to see that it got enough revenue out of the prize-fighting game to pay its own salaries and expenses.

If Johnson and Langford were allowed to fight that would be practically impossible, so the only two real fighting men in the heavyweight division were barred. This let down the barriers with no real fighters to fear and everybody had a chance to make easy money. Inside of a year a horde of white hopes descended on New York.

They were big, unskilled, inept clumsy, low-browed somnambulists who for the most part, to do them justice, knew that they were not fighting men, but were willing to pose along, as there was money in it. The pace was slow; the fights were short, and one was as bad as another, so there was nothing to fear.

Shaky mitral valves and fat paunch didn't make any difference. In this atmosphere and out of this sort of material Luther McCarty was grown by hothouse methods into a white champion, so that he would draw just so many dollars to the box office. It is doubtful if he knew that his heart was weak. None of the men who were fattening on him would have told him. They could take a chance against the kind of men he was called upon to meet.

Had it been a day of real fighters he would never have gotten out of the preliminary class, and would soon have gone back to some decent work. And now the other incompetent (Pelky) is held for killing him, whereas the real authors of his death are the shrewd money getters who lied to him day after day and told him he could fight.

SOUTH ATLANTIC LEAGUE REVISES BALL SCHEDULE

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—A special meeting of the South Atlantic League magnates was held in Savannah yesterday for the purpose of making a number of revisions of the present playing schedule. These revisions are necessary because of the late entrance of Charleston into the circuit. Charleston is said to be suffering considerable inconvenience by reason of the present schedule.

Those in attendance on the meeting were President J. K. Pray, of the Albany club; President W. H. Walsh, of the Charleston club; Secretary Charles E. Walton, of the Columbus association; President A. W. Barrs, of the Jacksonville club; President M. J. Etherage, of the Macon club, and President George W. Armstrong, of the Savannah club.

GALLANT DEFEATS HOGAN.

BOSTON, May 28.—"One Round" Hogan, of California, who was substituted for K. O. Sweeney in the main bout at the Atlas A. A., was defeated in a ten-round bout with Johnny Gallant, of Boston, last night.

CHAPMAN HAS SIGNED.

Catcher Chapman, Bill Smith's new backstopper, will work for the local team to-day. He was signed last night and replaces Graham, who was released outright.

Get Up When I'm Going to Bed? No, Sir! — By "Bud" Fisher

100 MILES HOUR POSSIBLE AT MOTORDROME

That speeds of 100 miles an hour for short flashes will inevitably be reached on the new motordome, going up now at the old show grounds, is the belief of the motorcycle experts who are gathered here to follow the season of racing which is soon to start over Jack Prince's Southern circuit.

Already, with the top of the track completed, and with serious danger lurking in any speed over 75 miles an hour, the riders are hitting up a speed of 90 an hour. That gives a hint of what they will do later. Before they can really "let out" the track must be completed—and this will soon be done. To finish it two feet six inches of heavy planks will be placed at the top of the real racing surface. This surface now in place is at an angle of 58 degrees. The new planking will be placed at 90 degrees—or "straight up." On top of this, also at 90 degrees, will be extremely heavy wire netting, four feet six inches high. On top of this will be the guard rail.

Men Will "Ride the Wire."

When the wire netting and the planks are in place the real speeding will begin. And when this happens the riders will not only ride on the 58-degree surface, but they will actually mount the perpendicular wall and will even ride on the wire netting.

With everything in place the riders can begin to find out what speed the track really has. It is their opinion that it is extremely fast. It has been particularly well constructed and seems right in every particular.

Not Motorcycles Here.

To add to the speed possibilities two new consignments of racing motorcycles have been shipped to the track from different factories, and they are the latest and most improved machines, made strictly for speed, and faster than anything of their size ever built before. Every morning and afternoon now the riders are tuning up their machines and getting them ready for the big doings.

On a good board track the speed limits are usually the nerve and the strength of the driver. The track, when once a man is fairly started, is nothing but a flat road of boards. There is nothing in the way and no turns to take—for the track is a perfect circle.

No Limit But the Sky.

It takes tremendous nerve and coolness to hold a machine steady at high speed, and it takes great power to hold its nose down and to keep it from going straight up and over the top. Aside from this, there is no limit to the speed except the power of the engines, and they are built fast enough to go at a rate faster than man ever rode before.

LIEBHARDT WILL HOOK UP WITH TURTLE TEAM

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—"Sugar Glen" Liebhardt, renowned in song and story as the "Iron Man of the Minors," will return to the Southern League as a member of the Memphis pitching staff as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made by Manager Bernhard. While no announcement has been made to the effect, it is understood that Floyd Kroh, the erratic left-hander, will be released.

BEAUMONT CLUB WILL GET PITCHER WEAVER

Orlie Weaver will probably go to Beaumont, Texas, instead of to New Orleans. Charley Frank has refused to take Weaver unless he can get a clear title to his services, and Smith is not willing to give him up on that basis. Waivers have been secured on him and he will be sent to the Texas League.

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

CALGARY.

A human life snuffed out, and all for what?
A youth who played the game and reckoned not;
A crowd of human creatures known as men,
And every manlike instinct all forgot.

A crowd of creatures, all in human shape,
Who sit beside the shambles, all agape,
And cry for crimson blood, and still more blood—
And yet men frown upon the lowly ape!

Were we a politician with a desire to commit political suicide, our first move would be to support a bill legalizing the alleged manly art of self-defense.

We have various reasons to be thankful, one of which is that we are not Arthur Pelky.

Clark Griffith informs us that Walter Johnson has not attained his best form, but the form that he has attained is good enough to suit at least seven teams in the American League.

Not that we are prone to find fault with Charley Murphy, but if baseball players were to hold more conversations with baseball scribes and less with barkeeps there would be more regular baseball played.

There is no truth in the report that Mr. Murphy does not allow his athletes to talk to him. Among the athletes this is considered hard luck.

Garry Herrmann puts forth the information that the purpose of the national baseball agreement is to protect baseball players. This will be news to baseball players.

Somehow we have a hunch that even if those English poloists do happen to win there will not be any general mourning.

Some day some wise guy will tell us why it is that, when a baseball league opens its schedule the first ball must be heaved by a mayor or a sheriff or a constable or a justice of the peace or an alley inspector or something.

MERELY A PLEASANT DREAM.

It happened in a cosy spot across the River Styx.
A portly gent who lingered there was in an awful fix.
A crowd of wild and howling imps were walking on his toes
And shoving trays of glowing coals beneath his ruby nose.
I said to Satan: "Why abuse you poor old helpless guy?"
"That person owned a baseball park on earth," he made reply.
"Not only that," he ambled on, with visage grim and dark.
"He is the guy who introduced the peddlers in the park."

MEMPHIS HEARS THAT ATLANTA WANTS KROH

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—Memphis to-day made a cash offer for Third Baseman Frank Manush, of New Orleans, and was turned down by Manager Frank, who insisted that Manush would not be sold unless it were to some major league club. At present the infielder is out of the game, nursing a wrenched leg.

It was also announced that Manager Bernhard would confer with Third Baseman Bales when the Memphis club reached Chattanooga Thursday. Whether the collegian will be taken on depends upon the showing of Abstein. Ward has given perfect satisfaction at third, and if any further change is made it will have to do with first base.

Waivers have been asked on Pitcher Floyd Kroh, and sea-deep information is to the effect that Bill Smith, of Atlanta, may take the erratic southpaw on for a try-out.

BRONCHO RIDING IS BLAMED FOR M'CARTY'S DEATH

By Ed W. Smith

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 28—Despite the exonerating verdict of the Coroner's jury Monday night, both Arthur Pelky, or Peltier, as his right name is, and Tommy Burns were held in $10,000 each at a court hearing to answer to the charge of manslaughter preferred by the Dominion Government for the death of Luther McCarty in the ring of Tommy Burns' arena.

Pelky was held directly; Burns as promoter of the contest. The other two concerned—William McCarney, manager of McCarty, and Referee Ed Smith—were detained for a short time only as witnesses and later were permitted to leave the city of Calgary and the country upon furnishing a bond of $500 each and their promise to appear here at some later date to testify during the trial.

Bonds were furnished in all cases without trouble, townspeople flocking out plentifully to sign the court documents.

The preliminary hearing was before Inspector Duffus at the mounted police barracks, and practically the same testimony was gone over as that at the Coroner's jury hearing. Both McCarney and Smith testified at length with Pelky in the prisoner's cage. Burns was not heard, as he was held to be equally guilty with Pelky.

McCarney Off for East.

A strong effort was made by the crown to show that McCarney was an equal promoter in the show with Burns, but this failed and the Philadelphia man was permitted to leave on the midnight train with the body of McCarty.

Dr. H. H. Moshier, the man who declared that the death of McCarty was due to a fractured spine at the base of the brain resulting in a hemorrhage, again was called and repeated what he had said the day before. As a result nothing new was brought out and the case remained as mysterious as it was ten minutes after McCarty had been declared dead.

Billy McCarney, manager of McCarty, gave me his first statement of what he thought was the matter with McCarty in the ring. After hearing McCarney and the testimony of the doctors I am strongly of the opinion that McCarty received a slight fracture of the neck during some practice work he did with bucking bronchos a short time before the contest.

McCarney said to me before boarding his train with the body of McCarty:

"These doctors say that a fracture of the kind might have been received within four days of autopsy and that there then would be no fibrous growth around the injury.

Luther delighted to ride fractious horses and get them to buck. He often got some nasty twists in this way and I was forever begging him to cease the sport that he thought was so good. But he would not, and I have an idea that he might have been injured in this way and not known it."

McCarney is out of the boxing game for good, he said. He will make no attempt to find anybody to take McCarty's place in his estimation, and will go into the theatrical profession, in which he has made many friends.

Wife Will Accompany Remains.

On the way East McCarney expected Mrs. Luther McCarty to board the train and accompany the remains into Chicago and beyond into Ohio, where the burial will take place at Piqua.

The settlement of Luther's estate will be made at that time. It is known that Luther's ambition was to provide for the future of the child now two years old. McCarney will endeavor to arrange to carry out the "big boy's" wishes in this matter. Luther's father will be waiting the arrival of the remains at Piqua.

HOPPE BEATS JAP CUE EXPERT EASILY, 500 TO 33

NEW YORK, May 28.—Willie Hoppe successfully defended his world's billiard championship title at 18-inch balk line, two shots in, against the challenger, Kodji Yamada, of Japan, here, the score being 500 to 33.

Since the rules of the game were so changed that the "anchor" was barred, no other such one-sided championship game has been seen. Hoppe won the bank, but failed to score when he led off. Yamada ran 15 and this was his best attempt, as in the next ten innings he added only 18.

GIBBONS STOPS SHAW.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Tom Gibbons, of St. Paul, scored an easy victory last night over Johnny Shaw, of Fort Hamilton, Ontario. The bout was stopped in the third round.

KEEFE BESTS DRISCOLL.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 28. Catcher Charley Moran worked out with the Lookouts to-day and will probably be signed in the next few days to replace Hannah. Moran is now a free agent. He was unconditionally released by the Dobbers when he injured his leg in 1912.

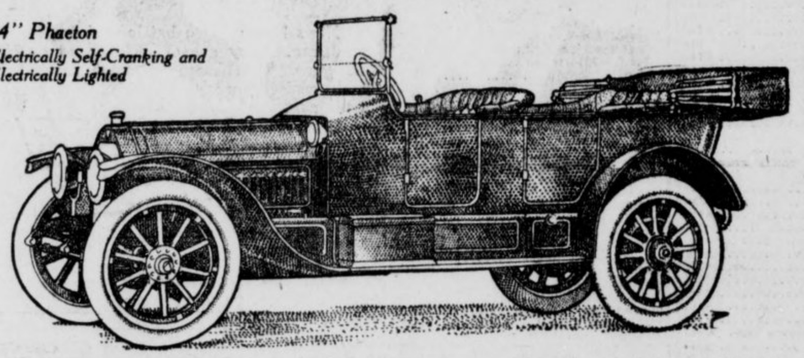
The World's Largest Builders of Six-Cylinder Automobiles

"54" Phaeton
Electrically Self-Cranking and Electrically Lighted



Study the Dealer as Intently as You Do the Car

Do not purchase an automobile of a dealer in whom you cannot have complete confidence. Personality is a large factor in business dealings. The dealer whose personality engenders your confidence in him, whose business principles are sound, who is prosperous and for whom owners of cars he has sold say good words is the logical man from whose firm you can safely purchase an automobile.

If you would know the value of dealers' service in the operation of an automobile, you have but to consult men who have owned several different makes of cars and, if you will talk with any HUDSON owner, you will appreciate the value of the type of service we furnish to the owner of an automobile.

All business is done solely on confidence.

Confidence of one man in another. If you cannot have confidence in a dealer who sells the car you have selected, then yours is an unsafe purchase.

There is scarcely any limit to which we will not go to insure HUDSON owners the fullest satisfaction from their cars. We are more interested in you and your motoring interests after we have sold you the car than before you have bought. Yet, we realize that this is contrary to the attitude of the average automobile concern.

This service that we give you is but keeping faith with the Hudson Motor Car Company. There is a clause in our contract with the factory, which insures every purchaser of the highest standard of motor car service to be had, and this we cheerfully and rigidly adhere to in our deals with owners.

The New HUDSON "Six" rose to a higher point as a sales success than any 6-cylinder car has ever seen in the same length of time it has been on the market. Its exceptional performance has been unusual among 6-cylinder cars.

Its smooth, sweet-running mechanism gives a sensation of flying that is lacking in a 4-cylinder car. You can throttle it down to 3 miles an hour on high speed and pick up to 60 miles an hour with smoothness and ease that will be a revelation to you, if you have owned 4-cylinder cars.

You can go through city traffic at 3 miles an hour on high, with every cylinder hitting as smoothly as if you were going ten times as fast.

Avoid Disappointment in Getting Delivery

Ninety per cent of HUDSON orders are for spring delivery—hence, within a few days, it will be impossible to secure a delivery date for a car.

Hence, we cannot impress too strongly upon prospective purchasers the necessity of securing a fixed delivery date for their cars.

It would be well to come see the New HUDSON "Six" at your earliest convenience, or write or phone for new catalog.

The "54" Phaeton sells at $2450. The "37"—the "Four-cylinder masterpiece"—is $1875, prices f. o. b. Detroit.

BIG VOTE GAINS MAKE PONY CONTEST MORE EXCITING EVERY DAY

Saturday night the lists close in The Georgian and American's pony contest, and the entrants will "run it out" without further competition.

The list has gone well beyond 300 and includes boys and girls from all parts of Atlanta and the State and widely scattered areas outside the State.

One advantage the contestants are overlooking to a large extent is the fact that payments of overdue accounts bring votes just the same as the identical amount paid on new subscriptions. Boys and girls whose parents, relatives or acquaintances owe anything for subscriptions to The Georgian and American can collect the money themselves, bring it in and be credited with votes.

The same interview will open an opportunity for them to seek renewals, so even if they know that acquaintances have been taking The Georgian and American they may profit by seeing them and canvassing for votes.

Big gains continue to be shown in the vote column. From now on the races promise to grow more exciting daily. Names and standing of contestants follow:

SYMPATHY AND GUNBOATS

News Note: Two battle cruisers, the Kongo and the Kirishima, are being built in England for Japan. They are of 25,000 tons dsplacement and 27 knots speed. They are armed with 13 1-2 inch guns. The Kongo is about completed. Former Secretary Meyer expressed belief that these battle cruisers are as powerful as any battleships afloat and of five knots greater speed. Within the past week Japan has purchased at least four ships suitable for transports in England. They are the Narrung, Benacre, Bentola and Vadala. All are of more than 3,000 tons displacement.

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

It is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. You can obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" at any drug store at $1.00, and it will be the best dollar's worth you ever obtained. It preserves the mother's health, enables her to make a quick and complete recovery, and thus renewed strength she will eagerly devote herself to the care and attention which mean so much to the welfare of the child. Write to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 128 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their valuable and instructive book of guidance for expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend today.

Mrs. Etta Lovett Dies at Augusta

AUGUSTA, GA., May 28.—Mrs. Etta Lovett, widow of the late Dr. W. C. Lovett, died at the residence of Mrs. H. M. Lovett, in Augusta to-day. She was the step-mother of Dr. W. C. Blanche Walsh Here Monday in 'Movies'

An innovation in Atlanta's motion picture world will be the appearance all next week of Blanche Walsh, celebrated emotional actress, in a picture presentation of "The Resurrection," Tolstoi's drama, at the Grand Theater Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

Not a point that made the drama a success has been missed. Miss Walsh hesitated before risking her reputation to the "movies," but when she had seen the film, she declared it a wonderful success.

Council of Griffin Still Defies Mayor

GRIFFIN, GA., May 28.—Another chapter to the long fight between the Mayor and Council of Griffin was written last night when the Finance Committee recommended and Council voted to accept the auto nre truck just delivered by the American-LaFrance Fire Engine Company. Excepting the protest of Mayor Smith, no opposition was raised.

No method of payment is prescribed, although a warrant for payment is directed. This is the mooted question.

COTTON SAGS ON BEARISH ADVICES

NEW YORK, May 28.—Influenced by easier cables and further bearish weather news, the cotton market opened easy to-day, first prices being 1 to 3 points lower than Tuesday's final. Old crop deliveries came in for considerable pressure, but was also some liberal selling of new positions. Later the cable prices rallied.

Liverpool was said to be a seller of July after the call, but the large spot interest purchased July in rather large volume, causing the market to steady, with the result that prices rallied about 1 to 4 points higher than the initial level. The selling was scattered.

During the forenoon the ring crowd was inclined to sell on the favorable map and the selling became freer. The buying of July was scattered and those buying seemed to be selling the new crop. Schill and Mitchell sold July as well as late positions.

The market developed a reactionary tendency, May dropping 8 points to 11.46, while July receded 3 points from the opening. New crop months, however, held steady around the opening level.

A certain broker issued notices today for 10,000 May, which was said to be for Liverpool account. This, however, had no effect, and fell flat on the market.

Theo Price, in this week's issue of his market report, is decidedly bearish. The report, in part, says: "American short interest about covered and obtained its cotton from visible and invisible supply. Says if July prices are forced to extreme there is enough tenderable low grade cotton to liquidate that position. He refers to present large excess of interior stocks, and says crop has improved since rains fell. Think people expect Bureau of 83.5. Believe acreage will be increased about 5 per cent."

The market gave up to the bearish influences during the last hour of trading when the ring and brokers representing spot houses dumped considerable cotton upon the market. July was heavily sold, but ruled extraordinarily steady. October and December were also under pressure. The market held remarkably steady and the offerings were absorbed by prominent operators. May notices tendered during the early trading were stopped by spot houses and was quickly redelivered, as it was not of a desirable grade for shipment.

It seems as if every one is awaiting the Government figures to be made public Monday, June 2, and we may expect a very narrow market until this report is out of the way.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 4 to 10 points from Tuesday's close.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—Liverpool shows decided weakness this morning with futures 2 to 4 points lower than due. Spots unchanged; sales, 10,000 bales. Political news is not good. London says that the powers practically extended an ultimatum to the allies to force the signing of the peace pact with Turkey. Forced peace of this character is hardly satisfactory.

The Journal of Commerce on Texas attracted much attention, as it is entirely out of line with information received from the best private sources. It appears strange, indeed, that Texas should be three weeks late on account of cold weather and the Oklahoma crop early, when, as a master of fact, Government records show that Oklahoma temperatures have all along been on an average of 6 to 13 degrees colder than in Texas.

The market opened about 5 points lower, but sellers were scarce owing to anticipation of further professional support in New York, which, in fact, made its appearance soon after the opening and caused a rally of 5 points. According to New York advices this support is furnished with the intention of benefiting from short covering before the holidays. New York will be closed Friday and Saturday. The bureau report to May 28 will be issued Monday, June 2, at 11 a. m., our time. We compare with a belt average of 78.9 last year, 87.8 in 1911, 82 in 1910, and ten-year average of 79.9. The trade looks for a report between 81 and 84.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 28.—Liverpool sold July on and after the call, but after the call McFadden, Wilson, Riordan and Hubbard were buyers of July. The selling was scattered. Later the ring sold on favorable weather map and easier feeling abroad. Mitchell and Schill were the leading sellers.

Hentz issued 10,000 notices on May, which was said to be for Liverpool. These notices were stopped by Hopkins, Dwight & Co., Robert More & Co. and Rich.

Mitchell and Schill were fair sellers of July; also new crop positions.

Warehouse stocks in New York today are 72,970; certificated 60,222 bales.

Norden & Co. makes the condition of the crop 85 per cent and acreage increase 4.7 per cent.

About 800 replies received by the Georgia State Department of Agriculture are the basis of a report by that office that 23 per cent of the crop has been replanted and the average planting time is seventeen days late. Acreage has decreased about 6 per cent, compared with last year, but the condition is 82 per cent.

Last week Turner, of Memphis, made the condition of Georgia 74 per cent, and Monday The Commercial-Appeal made it 72 per cent.

George W. Neville, of the New York Cotton Exchange, in his annual report on the New York Cotton Exchange, said: "During the past five years when the New York Cotton Exchange was subjected to so much unjust criticism, there was never any complaint made of members resorting to undignified methods of soliciting business, but recently some of our members have expressed opinions in their market letters in such a way as to cause the complaint and supervisory committees to go thoroughly into this matter and reprimands have been administered."

The New York Cotton Exchange is to be congratulated on being so careful to maintain a high standard of business conduct among its members.

The Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crop in Texas and Oklahoma:

Texas—"Estimates of acreage do not vary greatly from a month ago, when an increase of 3.5 per cent was indicated. The percentage of condition will be approximately the same as last year, when it was 81.8 per cent. The season is very late, being nearly three weeks backward, due chiefly to cold weather. Considerable cotton is not yet up, and a number of farmers have not finished planting. Some replanting has been necessary. Rain has generally been plentiful and the ground is in a good state of preparation. Stands are rather spotted, but prospects are generally favorable."

Oklahoma—"A very substantial increase in acreage is indicated for Oklahoma over last year. Percentage condition will probably show a considerably higher figure than a year ago, when it was 78.7 per cent. Stands are very generally good and the crop has an excellent start. Rains have been somewhat excessive in some localities and grass is making headway. Some correspondents consider prospects the best in years. The season is early in many sections, but in the majority of cases ten to fifteen days late."

T. H. Price presents a bearish view of the cotton market in this week's issue of Cotton and Finance.

The Federal Grand Jury has postponed the inquiry into the cotton pool case indefinitely.

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable; shows cloudy in the Atlantics; fair elsewhere. General rains in North Georgia and Carolinas. Some good rains in Carolinas, where they will be of great benefit. Indications are for fair and warmer over the entire belt, except possibly some showers on the Atlantic coast.

Memphis wires: "Generally fair and warmer weather is indicated for all cotton States. Heavy rains fell yesterday in North Carolina. Little or none elsewhere. Very favorable conditions."

BEAR PRESSURE PUTS STOCKS OFF

Receivership for St. L. and S. F. Railway Has Bad Effect on Foreign Capital.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Pressure was exerted on the list at the opening of the stock market to-day, and declines ranging from fractions to 2 points were sustained. St. Louis and San Francisco shares were the weakest in consequence of the appointment of a receiver for the road in St. Louis. Frisco common was 1⅝ lower, selling around 3½, while the second preferred lost 2 points. Union Pacific and Southern Pacific bore up well. The former gained ½, while the latter, after sharing fractionally, recovered.

American Smelting was sold for a loss of 1½. Other issues which were off were: Amalgamated Copper, ½; American Can, ½; Canadian Pacific, ½; General Electric, ⅝; Missouri Pacific, ½; Pennsylvania, ⅝, and United States Steel common, ⅛.

Steel soon recovered its loss. St. Paul also recovered its fractional decline in twenty minutes of trading. Chesapeake and Ohio opened ¼ up, but lost its gain. Reading gained fractionally after opening unchanged.

The curb market was irregular. Despite the suit brought in London charging that an illegal pool was formed for speculation in shares of American Marconi stock after the Titanic disaster, this issue was only ⅝ lower on the curb.

Americans in London drooped.

The market continued irregular and dull during the forenoon and recessions were in evidence. Smelting declined 1⅝ to 66⅛. Copper was off ⅝ at 73¼. Canadian Pacific was off ⅛ at 232. Southern Pacific was up ⅛. Steel, St. Paul and Reading were off ¼. Chesapeake and Ohio was up 6⅝ at 64⅝.

Call money loaning at 2¾c.

Most active issues shaded in the last hour. Canadian Pacific sold down to 229⅞, for a loss of 2¼, but later recovered. Reading fell to 159⅞, for the loss of a point, but it rallied in the final half-hour. Other stocks which were under the noon range were St. Paul, Erie, Steel, Union Pacific and Pennsylvania.

Amalgamated Copper held firm.

PRICE CURRENT CROP REPORT.

CINCINNATI, May 28.—Corn planting in Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas and Nebraska has been seriously delayed by wet weather. In the southern territory of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma an extremely spotted condition has developed. Rain is needed in portions of this territory, particularly to relieve the hard surface conditions. Growth of winter wheat continues favorable. No critical conditions are in sight.

The crop thus far has not been molested to any extent by pests. We estimate the yield 335,320,000 bushels on present conditions for Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

The growth and condition of oats in the northern territory are above the ten-year average, while the condition in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois is below the ten-year average. Farm reserves of wheat in the twelve leading States are 11.6 per cent, oats 17.6, corn 19 per cent.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red	98 @105
Oats—No. 2	38¾ @ 39

CHICAGO, May 28.—Many of the early buyers of wheat changed their positions late in the day and sold wheat quite freely and some of this grain showed severe losses. There were declines of ¼ for September, ⅜ for July and ⅝ for May. The last prices were ⅛ to 1c below the highest levels of the morning. There were unconfirmed rumors late in the day of rains in scattered localities over Kansas.

Corn closed ⅛ to ¼c lower, while oats were ¼ to 3⅛c higher. The most strength in coarse grains was to be seen in the May future, as shorts were covering in that month.

Provisions were a shade lower for the day for all save July ribs and September pork.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

If Little Chicks Are Properly Fed Loss Will Be Less

Wholesome Advice by an Expert Who Has Tried It From Every Angle.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Judge Marshall: I want to ask you a number of questions, if you will not think I am too greedy for information.

I live on a farm about two miles from town and am trying to raise chickens enough to make a living from.

I do very well with those I succeeded in raising, but I loose about half of my chicks before they are two weeks old.

As soon as the chicks are hatched I give them a good feed of mash, composed of equal parts of corn meal and wheat bran mixed with hot water, allowing it to cool a little before feeding. I feed this once a day and cracked corn three times a day; but I have much trouble with sparrows eating up the feed.

I also have much trouble with the red mites bothering my sitting hens, which I seem unable to control.

Then, again, I have trouble every summer by having great, big, fat hens drop dead without any warning. They will be apparently well one day and the next they will be dead. They are very fat and fine and I see no reason why they should die thus.

I always feed a little good condition powder of some kind three times a week.

If it is not asking too much of you I should appreciate an answer to these troubles. I am yours very truly, MRS. E. E. SPEER.

Tifton, Ga.

Cut Out Wet Mash.

ANSWER—We have texts enough for a number of good sermons but will have to do like the boy said he did in hunting for the cows: Go to the end of the lane and scatter.

First, in regard to the little chicks, I would say cut out the wet mash entirely, or, at least, until they are two months old and then if you want to use some of your feed in that way it will be all right, but not for the newly hatched ones. Feed rolled oats dry, and the cracked corn fine enough so they can eat it well, providing you can not get the ready mixed chick feed at your grocers in Tifton. But there is no question that the rolled oats is good, and so is the corn, but feed them absolutely dry.

Another place where you have erred seriously is in feeding as soon as hatched, if that is what you intended to say.

There is nothing that will so quickly get the digestive organs out of order, or, for that matter, prevent them from ever getting in order, as feeding newly hatched chicks at once. Give them a chance to season out a little, as one old poultryman used to say. When they first hatch they are a jelly, as it were, and it takes a day or two for them to toughen up, ready to digest what is given them. So, the way to do is to wait forty-eight hours before any feed is given. They will not starve, but be all the better for the little fast. They may have a good supply of sharp sand to peck at. Then feed the rolled oats or prepared dry chick feed. This can be continued until they can handle coarser cracked corn and wheat.

Green Feed Necessary.

All the while they must have good green stuff of some kind and a little dried beef scrap after they are three weeks old, and I think you will have no trouble if everything is kept clean and free from mites. The sparrows can be controlled by feeding under wire netting runs.

When you set your hens, move them out of the hen house into some clean shed, or, for that matter, out of doors, using barrels for the nest. But you should not have them in the houses. Take a pint of oil of tar, a pint of gasoline, three quarts of kerosene; mix thoroughly and spray or pour over the roosts and the sides of the house where the roost poles rest. If this is attended to an hour before roosting time, it will usually about finish the job, both on the poles and the hens. If any are left on the hens, dust them thoroughly with some good lice powder. After they have been really cleaned out, it will pay to grease the poles with hot lard and a brush.

As to your loosing your fat hens by sudden deaths, I would say that I think you have been using too much condition powders. In my estimation even a little is too much when hens are in health and laying. You have weakened their digestive organs by overstimulation, coupled with too much fat in hens that are, no doubt, over two years old. When hens get a little old and fat, heavy behind, it is the best policy to send them to the butchers.

Such hens have passed their useful time. They have slowed up on laying and with no drain upon their systems they fill up with fat inside, where it presses on the heart and is the cause of the sudden deaths you speak of. It is no trouble to detect such hens in the yard, and it is a good plan to use them while they are in good health, rather than wait for them to come to the sudden death referred to.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Deed Filed in Purchase of $19,750 Lots on Paces Ferry Road. Other Notes.

Papers in the sale of two residences on Ponce DeLeon Avenue and one on Gordon Street in West End have gone to record. Minnie M. Costner has sold to J. E. McRee 403 Gordon Street, 373 feet south of Holderness Street, for $9,000.

John B. Daniel has sold to J. T. Tuggle, 644 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, 50 by 180 feet, for $12,500.

Mrs. Mattie F. Huggins has sold to Mrs. Kate G. Pryor, 346 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, 343 feet east of North Boulevard, for $13,000. The lot is 38 by 321 feet.

Executors' Deed Filed.

An interesting executors' deed has also been filed. This conveys to Robert F. Maddox two tracts of land adjoining his country place, "Woodlawn," for an aggregate of $19,750. The grantors are Mrs. Gertrude J. Dickey and others, executors of the estate of the late James L. Dickey.

Favor Roswell Road Work.

E. T. Luckie, of the Holmes & Luckie Realty Company, reports good progress in the work of signing up property owners who favor widening the Roswell Road 20 feet from Buckhead to Piedmont Road. Among the signers are John W. Grant, F. M. Brownell and George B. Powell, who have an aggregate of about 3,000 feet of frontage; George M. Hope, J. H. and J. M. Karwisch, L. W. Rogers, C. S. Honour, J. L. Riley and A. C. Walters.

Building Owners Organize.

For the purpose of perfecting a permanent organization and for inviting the National Association of Building Owners and Managers to Atlanta in 1914, local office building and apartment house owners and managers met Tuesday. The new body is known as the Association of Building Owners and Managers of Atlanta, and it has decided to send a committee to Cincinnati next month to present its invitation to the national association.

Action of the "big building" men in combining is taken as an indication that the office building and apartment house business in Atlanta will take great strides forward in future. Among the members of the new association are Ivan E. Allen, Fred Houser, Charles E. Wilkinson, A. W. Martin, Fred Shaefer, J. B. Pendleton, J. M. Barclay, J. M. Shearer, W. B. Stovall and J. L. Fincher. One hundred members are expected to join.

Auction Sale Saturday.

John H. James, auctioneer, will sell at public outcry Saturday 40 lots on Ashby Street for J. T. Elliott, the owner. Mr. James has plats at his office.

Inquiries for Colonial Home.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, reports many inquiries for the colonial home which he will auction off Thursday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at 101 West Tenth Street. This home is a two-story brick affair and the property of W. C. Harper.

More Peachtree Improvements.

Peachtree has been promised another substantial business building. C. J. Sheehan will erect at once a two-story structure on the east side of the thoroughfare between Pine and Merritts Avenue. There are already several automobile shops in this block.

Mr. Sheehan traded for this 21 by 186 foot lot through the Cheatham Brothers' real estate agency, giving to Dr. A. W. VanHoose, of Rome, 228 South Pryor Street and 135 Davis Street, for $11,500, and paying the balance in cash and notes. The Peachtree property brought $26,250, or $1,250 a front foot. Dr. VanHoose recently sold 21 feet at this point to Ben J. Massell, who has put a sign on his lot announcing that he will build for acceptable tenant.

Speech and Thought Make Our Lives

Everything That We Do Is Accomplished in Time BY THOUGHT. Thinking Is Your Only Real Power; Time Is Your Real Property—and There Is Little of It.

Copyright, 1913.

We human beings ceased to be animals and became MEN when we first used thought in place of brute strength.

At some distant day in our development the animal that preceded us here made up its feeble mind that there was something better than strength, teeth and claws, and began to use its little brain.

This animal, our ancestor, the so-called pithecanthropos, or monkey-man, observed the saber-toothed tiger ripping open the stomach of a monster three times its size, watched the mammoth ploughing through swamps, crushing down trees, observed the great reptiles and all other proofs of brute force, and, without realizing it, this ancestor said vaguely to himself:

"I can't compete when it comes to teeth and claws, weight and bulk. I am a feeble thing in this jumble of power and battle. I must THINK the way out."

And so our real human life began.

Our ancestor with a forehead one-quarter of an inch high, a jaw that stuck out as far as the jaw of a gorilla, with teeth bigger than any of those of any bulldog, and with long arms dropping below the knees, that could crush a man of to-day with ease—this old ancestor of ours decided that he would get out of the battle for supremacy of muscle and teeth and see what could be done with the brain AND WITH THINKING.

You can imagine how the thinking process started.

It was hardly real thought at first, just a kind of intelligent impulse. Our ancestor sat up in a tree rubbing his nose and looking at the saber-toothed tiger that couldn't climb.

He saw the shining teeth, six inches long perhaps, and he didn't like the looks of them.

Later, when the tiger was gone, he climbed down and picked up a sharp flint, ten inches long, heavier, sharper and harder than the tiger's tooth.

He held this in his hand, struck his brother with it, killed the brother, and felt highly satisfied with his intellectual accomplishment.

He had discovered that a tooth made of stone, held at the end of an arm four feet long, could do as much damage as the tooth of a tiger.

So he fastened his sharp flint to the end of a piece of wood, sat in the tree, stabbed the tiger in the back as he passed, broke his backbone, ate his flesh, took the teeth to make implements and ornaments for himself—and so began the thinking human race.

Later man used explosive dynamite shells in place of sharp flints, he dwelt in skyscrapers in place of holes in the rocks, he used flying machines in place of canoes dug out of a log.

BUT ALL THE TIME HE WAS A THINKING ANIMAL INSTEAD OF AN ANIMAL RELYING ON STRENGTH, TEETH, MUSCLE, THICK HIDE, CLAWS.

And every step that he gained in his upward climb toward control of the earth and dominion over the animals was gained by the THOUGHT that was started when he made up his mind to use the sharp flint and conquer the long white tooth

---

He is a descendant of all the thinkers of three hundred thousand years past.

He comes in an unbroken line from the old half monkey, half thinking creature that discovered the possibility of conquering animals stronger than himself.

And this thinker on the ash barrel in poverty, in anxiety, in remorse, is unfortunately the type of many of those—more than half, probably—who represent the so-called "civilization and marvels of achievement."

This picture is a copy, simply made, of Rodin's great statue, "Le Penseur."

In the picture that we print on this page the artist shows the man of sorrow and of weakness, pitifully trying to use for his betterment and for his defense the power which has been man's only weapon.

Readers, whether you be old or young, realize NOW that your salvation, your hope, your chances in life, are all in the thinking power hidden away in your head.

How much will you use that power of thought?

How long are you going to wait to use it efficiently?

To what extent can you make thought, recently acquired by men, control the animal forces and passions that date back millions of years to our earliest ancestors of the days when this earth was young?

Are you going to use your power, your health, your clear mind, and your will NOW to solve your problems and protect yourself, and be a benefit to the human race, or are you to wait, and waste, and wonder, and delay, until it is too late, as with this man?

The Thinker

He Thinks Hard, Bitterly—But Too Late. Thought Conquers and Solves Life's Problems, but Only When the Thought Controls the Power of the Body and the Mind. When the Power is Gone, THOUGHT COMES TOO LATE. (SEE EDITORIAL.)

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Ill Temper

If Allowed to Progress in Children, Its Effect Is Felt in Later Generations to Destroy Often the Happiness of Many Homes.

Written For The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

SOMETHING like one hundred and twenty-five years ago, a little girl was born in New England. She was pretty and bright, and her parents made much of her; and she soon became a spoiled child in the way of disposition.

She was irritable and fault-finding; and these tendencies were not corrected, but excused on the ground that "Abbie was high-strung," and "smart," and "not like other ordinary children."

She married, young, a man of rare sweetness of character, and with an inexhaustible patience. He was devoted to his handsome wife, and she made him a very good consort, so far as her industry and economy and loyalty went.

But she worried him with her fault-finding and irritability.

He made the great mistake of establishing his wife with his relatives, and all her quarrelsome and irritable tendencies were, of course, aggravated.

She bore him six children, and as she had never been taught anything of the laws of prenatal influence, she fretted and complained about the increasing numbers of her children, before their birth.

Erred in Telling Them.

And after they came into life and she grew to love them she made the great error of telling them how unwelcome they had been. This was especially true of the second child, who was scarcely a year younger than her older sister.

This second child inherited all her mother's irritable characteristics and prided herself upon being extremely high-spirited and capable of "answering back" with some sharp retort.

She, too, was excused, and even lauded for her peculiarities.

She was regarded as "out of the common" and "just like Abbie."

When she married her husband did not possess the amiable qualities of her father, and, of course, discord soon prevailed.

Children came into this home, and so a second generation was reared in this unfortunate atmosphere.

The grandmother lived until she reached the age of ninety-four, and with each year her disposition grew more unpleasant.

When the daughter visited at her old home there was always bickering and scolding and quarrelling.

And into these family fusses three generations were drawn.

Then came a fourth generation, after the grandmother died, and this fourth generation was brought up under the same conditions, and to-day this generation is cursed with the original uncurbed temper and unhappy tendency to find fault of the first great-grandmother, which came down through the second grandmother and the father, and was, like a river, fed from streams running into it from other branches, which all became corrupted when the original stream was approached.

Have Wrecked Homes.

Sisters have become enemies, brothers quarrel; jealousy, ill temper, gossip, back-biting and all manner of bad habits, resulting from uncontrolled temper, have destroyed homes, and in some of these homes a fifth generation of little children is becoming infected.

And all this might have been averted, and heaven, instead of hell, been established in the homes of four generations had the first child been taught self-control, good-will, amiability, gentle manners, the religion of kindness and courtesy.

All of these women had kind hearts toward the poor, sick and needy. They were always "good neighbors" when there was trouble in other homes.

But they never learned the strength and power which lies in silence, and they never learned the beauty of the soft answer which turneth away wrath.

The two original sinners (for such uncontrolled tempers are sinful) were women of great strength of intellect and of dominating personalities, therefore, their influence was far-reaching and powerful. In many of their descendants the unpleasant qualities have taken the form of petty meanness and ignoble nagging toward all those with whom they are thrown in close association.

Teach Them Kindness.

If your child, madam or sir, shows wonderful "spirit" and is very "high strung" and brilliant with repartee in the way of the quick retort, do not laugh and applaud and think you have something to be proud of, something out of the ordinary.

Teach your children the religion of kindness, the religion of gentle voices, amiable manners, generous judgments and self-control.

Make them understand early how vulgar is uncontrolled temper and how ill-bred the sharp rejoinder.

Do this for their own sakes and the sakes of unborn generations.

.:. Housewives and the Art of Housekeeping .:.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE reign of the good housekeeper is only just beginning. Every month sees some new invention that helps to diminish the slavery of housework. Housekeeping has for ages been an art, and, as with all arts, its practitioners range in their abilities from mediocrity through fair talent up to positive genius.

Now housekeeping is becoming a science, and science has this advantage over art—that it tends to equalize abilities by bringing results through mechanical and automatic methods which anybody can employ.

The French Kitchen.

For a plain male citizen, who knows little about the secrets of the kitchen, it is a wonderful revelation to read the articles in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE and to look at the devices there shown which relate to this fast-growing science. Almost everything about a house can now be done with half the expenditure of labor and time formerly required. To be without this knowledge and these inventions is not merely to be behind the times, but it is to live harder, less well and more expensively than there is any necessity for.

The kitchen is the stomach of the house, and upon the way in which it performs its functions the welfare of the whole establishment depends. My attention has just been called to a model French kitchen. All the world has long looked up to France as the ideal home of culinary art, and it is evident that she does not intend to be left behind in the modern transformation of this art into a science.

The kitchen has also been called "the theater of the French housewife," and this theater is becoming really a fascinating place with its display of electrical ranges, scientific lamps, automatic grinders, mills and churns, Pasteur filters, coffee makers, ice cream freezers, devices for easily getting rid of waste substances, porcelain sinks as white and clean as Alpine snow, scouring machines, filters, convenient cupboards, and all the glittering array of nickel, silver, copper, aluminum, bronze and graniteware utensils that fill the room with bright reflections.

Not to Visit, But to Help.

One of the great charms of a French kitchen is that the mistress is frequently to be seen there, not merely as a visitor, but as a helper and director. She inspires her servants by her presence, and by her advice. She does not pretend to live in another world than theirs. They know that she understands their business as well as they do themselves, and even better. She can take their place if necessary. This is as true of the rich as of the relatively poor.

The economy of the French people has long been world-famous, and nowhere is it more brilliantly displayed than in the kitchen. A French family, as has often been said, could live, and live well, upon the waste of many American families. And the exercise of this economy—this art of getting all the good out of things—fascinates those who practise it. It has the charm of all applied knowledge. They not only get all that is good—they make the good better. I know many a little country inn in France where, for three or four francs, wine included (a franc is worth 20 cents), one can have a really better meal than can be had in Atlanta for two or three dollars.

And yet meats, and similar things, cost about as much in France as they do here. The secret lies in economical management and good cooking. It is no wonder that a first-rate French cook can command in New York a salary of $5,000, or even more. And if he, or she, retains on this side of the Atlantic the economical skill learned at home, more than half the salary is saved to the employer.

To Learn Economy.

One thing to be noticed in the French kitchen is that there is usually no false economy in the choice of apparatus. Everything is of the best, or at least good and substantial. The kitchen, in its way, is as well furnished as the parlor. You may be sure that this spells economy in the end, for if it did not it would not be found in France.

I have often been surprised on entering a house in France, which, in America, might be taken as the abode of people in very humble circumstances, to find a far larger and better-stocked kitchen than many rather pretentious houses possess here, accompanied by a culinary skill in its mistress which would earn her a large salary on this side of the ocean.

No doubt we shall learn this economical wisdom in good time—and the sooner the better.

I SHOULD WORRY

By WEX JONES.

IT used to be jolly to chatter with Polly
On fashion and frivol and froth of the day;
But now it's sheer folly talking to Polly,
For she puts "I should worry" to all that she'll say.

"I should worry like an onion"
(Here she laughs, she feels so tickled),
"I should worry like an onion
And discover that I'm pickled.
I should worry like a saw"
(How that "worry" gets me riled!),
"I should worry like a saw
Till my teeth have all been filed."

You hear all the flappers, tongues going like clappers
Bandy about this ridiculous phrase;
Prue, Polly and Lizzie will jabber you dizzy,
Twisting it round in its different ways:

"I should worry seven days
And become a little weak."
"I should worry," "I should worry,"
Every time they speak.
"I should worry like a fish
And get the hook."
"I should worry like a gumdrop
And go North with old Doc Cook."
"I should worry," "I should worry"—
Phrase that sets me in a flurry,
Phrase that sets my goat a-scurry—

Oh, well, I should worry.

MOTHER AND GIRL DEAD IN FIRE; SON IS HUNTED

Coroner's Jury Recommends Missing Lad Be Arrested and Held for Investigation.

T. H. P. Fincher, a justice of the peace in DeKalb County, held an inquest over the charred bodies of Mrs. S. C. Stevens and her adopted daughter, Nellie Stevens, Wednesday afternoon. The jury decided the two women had been murdered and recommended that Wade Stevens, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. C. Stevens, who is missing, be apprehended and held for investigation.

The jury made a search of the ruins and found that a $400 diamond ring worn by Mrs. Stevens, the two gold watches worn by Mrs. Stevens and the girl, and two revolvers were missing.

Miss Josephine McCauley, of 791 Glenwood Avenue, said Mrs. Stevens told her, a short while ago, that she had had a half-breed Indian working around the house, but had discharged him because he made insulting remarks to Miss Nellie Stevens. He had returned two nights later and prowled about the house, when Mrs. Stevens shot at him.

Two Found in Burned Home.

That the mother and girl whose charred remains were found in the ruins of their home seven miles southeast of Atlanta early Wednesday morning were murdered and the house set afire by the murderer in an effort to obliterate all evidence of the deed was the astounding declaration made by Sheriff J. A. McCurdy after an investigation of the tragedy.

Positive identifications of the two women as Mrs. S. C. Stevens, 40 years old, wife of William Stevens, a 70-year-old Confederate veteran now in Chattanooga at the reunion, and their adopted daughter, Nellie Stevens, 13 years old, were made by neighbors.

Conditions leading up to the theory that the deaths were the result of murder are these:

The charred bodies of the women were found lying in the center of a bed room in the rear of the cottage. Near at hand were the remains of a shotgun.

Mrs. Stevens' skull had been crushed in. A hoe found in what had been the hallway leading from the room is believed to have been the instrument used to strike the woman as she arose from her bed, with the shotgun, to meet the intruder.

That the door of the room was open at the time of the encounter is believed to add another link to prove the affair a murder.

The method in which the daughter met her death could not be ascertained, owing to the charred condition of her body.

Son Quarreled With Mother.

Inquiry among the neighbors developed the fact that Wade Stevens, the 16-year-old son, who disappeared from his home Tuesday afternoon, had quarreled with his mother and sister.

Mrs. L. G. Self, who lives a short distance from the Stevens home, told Sheriff McCurdy that the boy had a tilt with his parent because she would not permit him to come to Atlanta during the absence of his father.

Mrs. Self stated that Nellis Stevens had appeared at her home with a package of Wade's clothing, which she asked Mrs. Self to keep that night to prevent the boy from disobeying his mother and leaving the house.

This statement, coupled with others, to the effect that Wade Stevens had on numerous occasions acted in an infractious manner—at one time snatching $65 from his mother's hand and running away—have led Sheriff McCurdy to start a hunt for him in order that he may be questioned in connection with the murder.

The house was burned during the night. Its ruins were first discovered at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning by J. A. Nelms, who was passing the scene in a milk wagon. Nelms, after viewing the smoking embers of the building, summoned J. L. Cowan, a neighbor, and notified the county police.

When Sheriff McCurdy arrived on

CREMATORY HELD UP BY COURT; CITY NOW FACES A SERIOUS SITUATION

In a unanimous decision by the Supreme Court of Georgia, the city loses in its fight to uphold the legality of the $276,000 crematory contract and Atlanta faces a serious health problem.

The ruling declares the contract illegal on the ground that the moral obligation involved in the pledge of payment to the Destructor Company of New York is a debt. The constitution of the State expressly forbids the Council of one year binding the Council of another in a financial obligation.

The decision acts as an injunction, the city and the contractors being restrained from continuing operations on the crematory which is now under construction until two-thirds of the voters shall have approved of the project at a special election.

Mayor Woodward, who fought the contract from the beginning, scores a big victory, but Atlanta is confronted with a menacing problem in the disposal of its garbage during the summer months. The decision was written by Chief Justice Fish.

CONLEY WAS IN FACTORY ON DAY OF SLAYING

James Conley, negro sweeper, in an affidavit made Wednesday, said that he was lying when he said he went to the National Pencil Factory on Friday. He said that he made the statement that it was Friday when Frank (as he says) told him to write the death notes, because he was afraid he would be accused of the murder of Mary Phagan if he told the truth.

He said he felt that if he said he was there Saturday the police would connect him with the murder. Conley said he got up between 9 and 9:30 o'clock Saturday morning, he knew the time because he looked at the clock on the Atlanta University from his front door. He returned indoors and had breakfast.

He got three silver dollars from his wife to exchange for paper money so that she would not lose it. He continued:

"I told my wife I was going to Peters Street. I went toPeters Street and stopped at a beer saloon at Peters and Haynes Streets. I bought two beers in there, drankone myself and gave another to a man named Bob. I stayed in the barroom three or four minutes and then walked back to the pool table and shot dice with four men. One of them was named Joe Bobs and one Bob Williams. I won 90 cents.

Drank Some Whisky.

"I don't know how long we had been shooting, but I think it was about fifteen minutes. I left there then and went to Erler saloon on Peters Street. I bought a glass of beer there. I walked back to the rear of the place, roiled a cigarette, came back and bought a half pint of whisky. I drank part of the whisky. I started from there to the Capital City Laundry to see my mother.

"I met Mr. Frank at the corner of Forsyth and Nelson Streets. He stopped me and asked me where I was going. I told him I was going to the Capital City Laundry to see my mother. He said, 'Wait 'til I come back.'

"He said he was going to see Mr. Montague. He was gone about 20 minutes. He came back and told me to come to the factory, that he wanted to see me. I went with him, walking behind him. He stopped at the Curtis drug store at Mitchell and Forsyth and got a drink. I waited for him outside. Frank had a bundle in his hand.

"After we got to the factory he put the bundle in the trash barrel right near the steps. He put a box there for me to sit on and other boxes back further in the factory. He told me to sit there until he whistled. He told me not to let Darley see me.

Tells of Seeing Darley.

"Along came a woman down stairs, Miss Mattie, I think her name was. She had on a dark suit and a raincoat. She carried a parasol. (This was Miss Mattie Smith). Then Darley came down stairs. He wore a grey suit and had no hat. He stopped Miss Mattie at the front door. She was wiping her eyes like she was crying. I heard him say, 'Don't worry, I will see that you get that next week.'

"She went out and he went back up the steps. In a few minutes he came back down and left. Then came Holloway down stairs about five minutes after Darley left. Holloway stood on the sidewalk five or six minutes and then came back.

"Then a negro drove up to the factory in a wagon. He went upstairs. He had some bills in his hand. Holloway came back with the negro, who was pegleg. The negro drove away and Holloway went back upstairs.

POLICE EXPECT NEGRO CONLEY TO CONFESS

Sweeper, Under Fire of Questions, Admits Being in Factory on Day of Slaying.

"In a few minutes he came down and left the building for good. Then came another lady. She works on the fourth floor for Arthur White. She was upstairs six or seven minutes. Then she came back down with her money. She stood by me and tore open the envelope and counted the money. Then she left the building and for about fifteen minutes there was no one passing me.

Heard Frank Whistle.

"I sat down on the box and put my head against the trash barrel and stretched my feet out with my hat in my lap. I don't know whether I went to sleep or not. The next thing I knew I heard Frank's whistle twice, just like this (imitating whistle). I went upstairs. The double doors were closed. Frank was standing at the top of the steps. He said, 'I see you heard me, all right,' and I said 'Yes.'

"Frank grabbed me by the arm very tight and his hand was trembling. It was just like he was walking down the street with a lady. He carried me through the first office into his private office, came back and shut the door into the outer office. Then he came back to where I was. He didn't say anything but grabbed up a box of sulphur matches and went into the outer office. When he came back he pulled out a round chair.

"He brought the chair for me to sit in. Then he closed the door and asked me to address a letter 'Dear Brother.' Then he asked me to write some things for him. I don't remember all of it, but I remember one of them was this: 'That long tall black negro did it by hisself.' I wrote these things at his dictation. Then Mr. Frank patted me on the back and said that I was a good boy. Then he handed me a box of cigarettes and I took them."

Vital Evidence Kept Secret.

From this point the negro's statement was similar to the affidavit published a few days ago. The negro said that he left the factory between five and ten minutes after 1 o'clock, went back to Peters Street and then went home.

Chief Lanford read the above which he said was about half of the affidavit. The chief said that he had only given out the unimportant details, leaving it to be inferred that Conley had given vital evidence.

Harry Scott intimated that the negro's affidavit Wednesday morning had practically cleared the mystery and was the most important bit of evidence in the hands of the State.

At 2:45 o'clock the negro was taken into the chief's office for another sweating.

Admission that he was in the National Pencil factory on the day of the murder of Mary Phagan was gained from Conley, after cross-examination by detectives at police headquarters.

The negro, who became the center of attention with his amazing story that Leo Frank had told him to write the death notes, changed his narrative again to-day. Confronted by E. F. Holloway, a foreman in the plant, he admitted having been in the factory after having steadily maintained that he was on Peters Street between 10 and 2 o'clock that fatal Saturday and at home all other hours of the day.

Says Confession Is Near.

Holloway, after leaving the secret grilling at which the admission was obtained, declared he was sure it was only a matter of hours before Conley would confess. He asserted that if he had been allowed to put questions to Conley he could have gotten important information.

The police questions were, of course, all put with the idea of gaining information against Frank.

Chief Lanford had announced that he would go before Judge Roan with a request for an order allowing him to confront Frank with the negro, so that Conley's statement would be admissible in court. Lanford, however, failed to carry out his plans, although he would not admit they had been abandoned.

Later Chief Beavers said that the plan to confront Frank with Conley would not be carried out to-day and that its wisdom was doubtful, as, of course, Frank could not be compelled to answer any questions.

Refuse to Admit Suspicion.

The police refused to admit that suspicion was turning or should be turned to Conley, who has told one falsehood after another since his arrest. They tried resolutely to construe every one of his statements as against Frank and would not admit that the continued contradictions of the negro made his value as a witness next to nothing.

The police declared that Conley had been asked to write the contents of the death notes and had spelled night watch" as it was in the note, "night witch," and "self" with the "f" and "e" transposed as in the notes. What all this shows, in view of the fact that the same officials had announced that they had conclusive evidence by "experts" and that Frank wrote the notes, is not plain.

Conley was also confronted by General Foreman N. V. Darley in the presence of Detectives Black, Scott and Lanford and the negro made important admissions that will no doubt force him to admit his guilt.

Conley admitted that he sat at the elevator shaft on the first floor at 12:30 on the afternoon of the murder and saw Darley in company with Miss Smith descend the stairs. Conley described Miss Smith as wearing a raincoat and Darley with his coat on with no hat. Darley stated that both descriptions were absolutely correct in every particular. Strange to say, neither Darley nor Miss Smith saw the negro, for he was seated in the shadow of the steps and never made a sound.

Conley said that after Darley came down stairs with Miss Smith he walked to the door with her and then returned and ascended the stairs. This Darley says is true.

Shortly after this Mrs. Albert White went into the factory to see her husband and get some money to buy a dress. Her husband, Albert White, was at work on the fourth floor with the assistant foreman and machinist, Harry Denham. Mrs. White says that she saw a negro who sat immovable at the foot of the elevator shaft as she entered the factory. She could not identify him because of the indistinct light. But as Conley admitted he was there five minutes before it is reasonable to believe that it was Conley that Mrs. White passed.

According to the statement of E. F. Holloway Conley had no business in the factory on the day of the murder, which was a holiday. Holloway says that the negro denied being there when questioned by him. Now Conley admits that he was there.

Holloway believes that had not Darley escorted Miss Mattie Smith down stairs that she and not Mary Phagan would have been the victim.

WILSON OPPOSES CURRENCY FRILLS

President Reported to Have Told House Leaders to Use Common Sense.

WASHINGTON, May 28—President Wilson has confided to House leaders, according to information obtained to-day, that he wants currency reform legislation next month conducted along common sense lines. He believes too much expert opinion will tend to becloud fundamental questions.

Prominent New York City bankers are said to have approved the essentials of a draft of the bill, although not being willing to accept all the details.

The President, it is stated, will be satisfied if they agree on the main features.

Only two members of the Cabinet, Bryan and McAdoo, have been consulted, according to reliable information. The former is said to have contributed several valuable ideas to the bill on the issuance of notes by reserve associations.

Conner Begs for Additional Funds

J. J. Conner, State Commissioner of Agrfculture, in his annual report to Governor Brown, declares better facilities in his department are imperative. He said the annual appropriation to the department was fixed by the Legislature of 1874 at $10,000, and that the growth of the department demands that this amount be supplemented by $5,000.

"In operating the law with respect to the inspection of gasoline, benzine, naphtha and other products of petroleum I find that some hardships are worked on certain classes of industries in the State," he said. "I recommend that merely nominal fees be collected for the inspection of these products where they are used only for manufacturing purposes.

"During my service I have felt very much cramped in getting out department bulletins and publications."

He commends the work of the State food inspector and suggests that the office of an assistant be created.

He recommends that the salary of the State oil inspector be increased from $1,200 to $2,000 a year.

He urges that the next Legislature add at least $30,000 to the veterinary department to combat cholera among hogs and tuberculosis among cattle.

Woman Badly Hurt By Fighting Cats

GADSDEN, ALA., May 28.—When Mrs. J. A. Bacon, 50 years old, attempted to separate two house cats that were fighting on the back porch of her home, both attacked her, inflicting more than 100 wounds on her throat, chest and arms. Her husband and daughter fought ten minutes before they subdued the cats.

Some of the wounds on Mrs. Bacon's throat are half an inch deep. A physician spent four hours sewing up the gashes.

Only Italy Leads U. S. In Aviators' Deaths

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The United States has more accidental deaths among Government aviators than any other nation, save Italy, official figures show.

England is third and France fourth. It is pointed out, however, that American aviators average nearly twice the number of hours and miles covered.

ODD FELLOWS OF STATE IN SESSION

Establishment of Fraternity Home Question Before Savannah Grand Lodge Meeting.

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Georgia met in annual convention in Savannah to-day, when Mayor Richard J. Davant delivered the address of welcome for the city, and Thomas Hoynes, deputy grand master, for the Savannah lodges. Response was made by Grand Master W. S. Coleman, of Cedartown. Following the public exercises the Grand Lodge went into executive session.

Simultaneously the Daughters of Rebekah, the woman's auxiliary of the Odd Fellows, met in grand assembly at Odd Fellows' Hall. A good deal of politics is to come up during the sessions of the assembly. It is rumored that there is to be a fight for grand warden, for which Mrs. R. J. Winters, of Atlanta, is a candidate.

Whether or not Georgia is to have an Odd Fellows' home is one of the questions to be decided by the Grand Lodge. At the Gainesville meeting last year a committee was appointed to investigate and report at this meeting. Under the present arrangement the Odd Fellows have a pension plan, but it is said that this is not satisfactory.

There are 2,500 Odd Fellows and 300 Rebekahs present.

BODIES OF TWO WOMEN FOUND IN FIRE RUINS

the scene the remains of the two women already had been found by Nelms and Cowan. Mrs. Stevens was identified by her false teeth.

When the bodies had been taken out of the ruins they were examined. Mrs. Stevens' skull was seen to have been crushed in.

It was this fact that first led the authorities to suspect foul play. Careful examination of the surrounding embers in the place where the bodies were found brough to light a shotgun barrel, the stock and woodwork of which had been burned off.

The weapon was seen to have been close to the positions where the bodies were discovered.

That the women had left their beds before they met their deaths was another conclusion drawn by Sheriff McCurdy. The bodies lay in the center of the floor while the iron frames of the beds were over in a corner of the room.

The door to the room was open. Its half demolished frame still stands in the ruins. Just outside the door the hoe was found.

Sheriff McCurdy's theory is that the murderer fled through the door, casting the hoe with which he had slain the women in the hall. That the plan to set fire to the house and burn the bodies to hide the crime came as a second thought.

The house was about 50 yards from the road in a clump of trees. It is in a lonely spot and the nearest neighbor is beyond earshot. That the screams of the women would not have been heard is safe to conclude.

Girl's Skull Crushed.

Another development that tends to show murder, came with the discovery that the skull of Nellie Stevens had been fractured, also. A sharp crack across the top of the head showed possibility that a knifelike weapon had been used, striking with such force as to cleave the bone.

The positions of the bodies in the ruins tend to bear this theory out —that the murderer had struck the girl with his hoe after crushing Mrs. Stevens' skull.

Mrs. Stevens' skull, it was shown, was crushed in by a blow directed at her from in front. Her body was found just three feet from the doorway. Directly behind this lay the body of Nellie Stevens.

It is thought that Mrs. Stevens, when she took up the shotgun and started toward the door at the sound of the intruder, was followed by her daughter. When the older woman opened the door, Nellie was directly behind her. The murderer, then, if he stood just without the doorway, with hoe in hand, struck Mrs. Stevens first. With a second blow he felled the girl behind her.

Open Knife Under Girl's Body.

The gun barrel was found close to the bodies of the women and the hoe was found out in the hallway. An open knife was found under the girl's body.

That the door was open at the time the women met their deaths was established by the fact that the doorknob was discovered in the ashes inside the room. The door opened on the inside and, therefore, the knob would have fallen in the room if the door had been opened.

The testimony of Nelms, the milk wagon driver, who was first on the scene, is considered of great importance in describing the positions of the bodies and the weapons found. Nelms Wednesday morning, in telling of the tragedy, said:

"When I saw the smoking embers of the building, as I was driving by, I hastened up. At first I did not suspect that anybody was dead.

Finds Two Bodies.

"I looked about in the ruins, however, and soon discovered through the smoke what looked to be a body. I walked through the ashes to the spot, and sure enough there was a human form. I looked about and soon found another form. Both were charred and beyond recognition.

"I didn't wait to look further, but ran over to the next house, about 200 yards away, and got Mr. Cowan and telephoned the police. Cowan and I came back and together we hunted over the ruins until the police came. We found the shotgun, the iron part of the hoe just outside the room, the knife under the girl's body and the doorknob. We didn't touch a thing, though."

With the arrival of Sheriff McCurdy came also Police Chief Beavers and Police Sergeant Whatley, of Atlanta. Mr. Whatley is a brother of Mrs. Stevens.

Excitement ran high as crowds of persons from the surrounding country arrived at the scene.

Boy Had Quarreled.

Mrs. L. G. Self's statement to the police authorities regarding the visit of Nellie Stevens to her home with Wade Stevens' clothing, directed suspicion to the boy.

"Nellie came to my house in the late afternoon," said Mrs. Self. "She carried a bundle of men's clothing with her and asked me to keep the clothes that night. She said that her brother and her mother had had an altercation.

"It seems that Wade wanted to leave home and his mother had objected. From what Nellie said, I understood that hot words had been passed. Nellie said that she had slipped out of the room quietly and bundled Wade's clothes and taken them away in order that the boy could not leave."

Saw Boy in Atlanta.

Charles B. McWilliams, 483 Leggett Avenue, East Atlanta, declared Wednesday afternoon that he had met Wade Stevens and another boy named "Red" Merchant at Five Points at 8 o'clock Tuesday night.

McWilliams said the boys expressed their intention of leaving the city that night—that they were going to catch a W. & A. train and go to Chattanooga and Cincinnati. McWilliams said the boys were dressed in overalls and had no money.

He declared that he accompanied them to the Terminal Station and waited there with them until fifteen minutes before their train was due to leave. Then he left them.

Prowler Routed Two Weeks Ago.

That an attempt was made to burglarize the Stevens home two weeks ago was the statement made by a neighbor to Sheriff McCurdy.

'T. R. Averted War With Japan'

Witness Says Fleet Turned Trick

Defense's Mainstay Faces Jail

Colonel Roosevelt and, at top, George Newett, who is being sued for libel; at the bottom, Judge Flannagan, who is presiding

Deposition, Said to Accuse Roosevelt of Being Drunk, Will Be Read to Jury.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 28.—That there was very serious danger of war with Japan during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt and that the Chief Executive met the danger and averted war by sending a fleet around the world was the statement of John Callan O'Laughlin, a Washington correspondent of a Chicago newspaper and a commissioner to the Tokio Exposition, appointed by President Roosevelt.

O'Laughlin was a witness for the Colonel in Roosevelt's $10,000 libel suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.

"Did you seriously mean that there was danger of war with Japan during Roosevelt's administration?" asked Attorney Belden, who was cross-examining O'Laughlin.

"There was very serious danger," replied the witness.

Settled Question "Right."

"Colonel Roosevelt met that danger.

"Obviously Japan would not start with a fleet in the Pacific waters. We settled the immigration question right then."

The witness emphasized the word "right."

O'Laughlin was asked by Attorney Belden if he had been an emissary to arrange for the reception of Roosevelt by the Pope and the King of Italy when the Colonel was in Rome. O'Laughlin said he had not.

The jury was sent from the room while the attorneys argued on the admitting of testimony concerning published reports about Colonel Roosevelt's drinking. Attorney Belden said that the defense wished to show that reports that Roosevelt drank were general in 1912.

"Did Not Deny Reports."

"We shall show," he said, "that this defendant heard those reports and that this plaintiff did not deny them. Roosevelt has been the most talked of man in this country, and if reports of his drinking have been so common as we shall show, he could not be damaged in any sum by the publication of such a report in a little country paper.

"The question of Roosevelt's reputation is vital in this case—his reputation in Marquette County, in this country and in the civilized world. In the plaintiff's bill, he asserts that his reputation for sobriety is well known throughout the 48 States of this country, and that his reputation for sobriety was good before the publication of this article by the defendant.

Disclaims Any Malice.

"Mr. Pound is an able lawyer. No lawyer in Michigan has tried more libel suits than he has. He knew that damages could be increased by reason of malice behind the publication. We will show there was no malice.

"In our answer we set up that there was no malice and that publication was made in good faith and that the defendant had been told and believed reports of Roosevelt's drunkenness were true.

"Dr. Abbott recognized the existence of such reports and deemed it worth while to answer them in The Outlook. Therefore, we have a right to show the existence of these reports as showing good faith and absence of malice on the part of this defendant."

"We shall not claim," said Attorney Pound, "any vindictive or punitory damages. We ask only actual damages such as would accrue in the absence of express malice. This is by direction of the plaintiff."

"That means," said the court, "only actual damages, which my be 6 cents or $60,000."

"That is correct," said Mr. Pound.

"Then," said Attorney Belden, "in the absence of the demand for a retraction, no damages may be asked by way of punishment. But counsel has already charged malice to this jury and we can not eliminate these impressions from their minds. Therefore, we have a right to show there was no malice and we purpose to offer testimony of men of standing to show this general reputation.

"Precedents are few, for men of Roosevelt's standing and prominence have seldom brought such suits, but we have a somewhat parallel case in that of Dailey vs. Kalamazoo Publishing Company in the Supreme Court."

Cites Parallel Case.

He then cited the case.

Colonel Roosevelt held a whispered conference with Attorney Van Benschoten.

"Mr. Belden and ourselves are not very far apart," said Van Benschoten, addressing the court. "Newspapers, however, do not always tell the truth and reports can not be admitted unless it is first shown that Mr. Newett had read the newspaper or heard the report in question. If Mr. Newett takes the stand and swears he had not read such reports and believed them to be true, they would become pertinent."

Scores Defense's Stand.

"The result of the contention of Mr. Belden," said Attorney Pound, "would be that a reputation as pure as that of St. Paul could be blasted by a lot of irresponsible gossip mongers. Counsel is not entitled to this testimony, anyhow. He can not mitigate and justify at the same time. The two things are incompatible.

"The presumption of law, as your honor has said, is that the character of every man is all right. No affirmative proof of character is required. The Supreme Court has also held that unless the truth of the published charges is proved the good faith or lack of malice of the published can by no means mitigate actual damages."

Judge Flannagan interrupted to say:

"Counsel will please confine himself to the two questions here at issue, which are:

State's Points at Issue.

"'May defense introduce evidence of reports and reputation to demonstrate his good faith.'

"'May defendant introduce evidence of reports and reputation by way of mitigating damages.'"

"I shall so confine myself," said Mr. Pound.

"I shall show your honor the King of England sued a newspaper for libel for claiming that the King was a bigamist because, while prince, he married a daughter of an admiral of the fleet before he married Queen Mary.

"Would it have been a defense to say that defendant knew nothing of the facts, but had heard rumors to that effect? The court held it would not."

At this point Judge Flannagan adjourned court until 2 p. m.

VETERANS VOTE ON CHIEFTAIN AT REUNION

Next Meeting Place Also to Be Selected Wednesday Afternoon At Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 28. The decision to vote on the election of commander-in-chief and to select the next meeting place at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon were the important results of this morning's session of the United Confederate Veterans, in reunion here. Some routine business was transacted, but the two impending selections overshadowed all other matters, allowing them but little import.

Upon the very eve of the election it is still generally believed that General Bennett H. Young will be re-elected commander-in-chief. The selection of the next meeting place appears to be a dead heat between Jacksonville, Fla., and Richmond, Va.

The only aspirant to the office held by General Young appears to be General K. M. VanZant, of San Antonio, Texas, who has a fairly formidable following.

General Irvine Walker, chairman of the committee appointed at the Macon reunion to co-operate with a committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to a joint peace jubilee of the two organizations, submitted a report recommending that at least 10,000 Confederate veterans attend.

The dedicatory exercises of the Alabama and Florida monuments this morning drew thousands of veterans and the attendance at the morning session was unusually light.

Action by the veterans on a resolution asking the Federal Government to purchase Johnson's Island in Lake Erie, near Sandusky, Ohio, will be taken Thursday morning, according to a committee report submitted today. Thousands of Confederate veterans who died in Northern prisons are buried there and a monument has been erected to them on the island by the women of the South, at a cost of $30,000. It is stated that the island will be obliterated as a historic point unless immediate action is taken to preserve it.

Major W. P. Gorman, a Birmingham veteran, who fell yesterday and sustained a fractured skull, lies at the point of death at a local hospital today.

Morse Again Heads Steamship Company

NEW YORK, May 28.—Charles W. Morse was elected to-day president of the Hudson Navigation Company, owners of a line of steamers operating on the Hudson River.

Morse was head of the company in 1909, but was deposed a year later. John W. McKinnon, who succeeded him, sold his interest in the line to a syndicate of bankers, who placed it in Morse's hands, thus giving him control.

Southern Pacific Must Give Up C. P.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—Attorney General McReynolds has decided to contend that the Southern Pacific must give up the Central Pacific in the pending dissolution of the Union Pacific merger and will bring a suit under the Sherman law to accomplish that end if the dissolution plans fail to include it.

WOMAN WRITES IN DEFENSE OF LEO M. FRANK

Mrs. Rebecca Brannon Declares Her Belief in Innocence of Factory Superintendent.

Mrs. Rebecca C. Brannon, 356 Forrest Avenue, a well known Atlanta woman, has written a letter to The Georgian in defense of Leo M. Frank. Mrs. Brannon, in her communication, avows a strong belief in the pencil factory superintendent's innocence, and denounces the hardships which the law has thrust upon him.

In line with its policy to present all sides of the Phagan case, The Georgian herewith prints Mrs. Brannon's letter:

In the name of God, humanity, and justice, I beg the public to suspend judgment in the case of Mr. Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, until he has had a fair trial before a jury of his peers.

I consider Mr. Frank an innocent man. Is it because he is a Jew that the negro's word is taken as gospel truth, and reflection cast on his testimony? From the first, pap seemed to be put in Newt Lee's mouth, as well as that of Conley, to make them say or hint that Mr. Frank was suspected by them of committing the crime.

Calls It Persecution.

What negro, with dread of lynching or summary justice being meted out to him, would not swear to a lie, and put the crime on another if he could thereby escape the consequences of his crime? And even so late as Saturday the negro Conley admitted he wrote the notes found beside the murdered girl, as he said, at the suggestion of Mr. Frank.

Is it not inconceivable to think that an astute man, planning with finesse, to kill a little girl who might possibly call for her pay envelope the following day, would take into his confidence the sweeper Conley and have him write what he contemplated putting in a note he intended to lay before her mutilated body, when he shall have murdered her the next day, and exclaiming, "There is no reason why I should hang for it!"

Oh, no! Gentlemen, this is entirely too unlikely a thing for a man of his astuteness and caliber to have done or said. There has been some colossal blunder on the part of the city detectives in rounding up the quarry.

It looks very like persecuting this man simply because he is a Jew. I like to see fair play and justice. This is the first time a Jew has ever been in any serious trouble in Atlanta, and see how ready is every one to believe the worst of him.

In the first place, Mr. Frank, in his deposition, told the hour he reached his home for dinner and supper, was seen by a number of reputable people assembled at his home that evening. He had on the same business suit he had on at his office that day and which he wore at the Coroner's inquest. If he had murdered the girl he must have had some scratches or blood marks on his person, as it was said at the time Mary Phagan had struggled with her assailant.

Cites Weak Link.

One very weak link in the State's chain of evidence is the fact that Newt Lee testified that he made a complete round of the building every half hour, yet he failed to notice the bloodstains on the floor of the metal room in making all those rounds, and then strangely went down the trap door to the basement at 3:30 on a flimsy excuse—flimsy, I say, because no one being there to prevent it, if he really wanted to go to the toilet he surely would have used the one on the upper floor in preference to going down the trap door at 3:30 to the basement closet, and in a dimly lighted place, in which he could scarcely see his hand before his face, and at an angle that the detectives at first said they could not see how he made the discovery of the body. He claimed to have made the find.

Another thing the detectives said was that blood was still flowing from the body when they first discovered it—rigor mortis had not taken place, two facts that in my mind are irrefutable proofs that that girl was not murdered at 12 m., at 4 or at 6 o'clock in the evening, which would have been the case if Mr. Frank had murdered the little girl any time between 12 m. and 6 p. m.

I do not know Mr. Frank, but that he is a Jew he holds my especial interest and esteem, for the Jews are good, law-abiding people.

Calls Frank Innocent.

He must be a leader among his people, as he is the president of the B'nai Brith Association of Atlanta. This society is the highest Jewish organization in the world, and you can not persuade me to believe that such a splendid lot of level headed men as the Jews of Atlanta would select a moral degenerate to head their organization.

I believe Mr. Frank innocent and confidently look for his complete vindication when tried by an impartial jury of his countrymen, when the mesh of lies shall have been swept away, that at present shroud the case. Meanwhile, all my sympathies are with him.

The graduating exercises will be held at the Grand Theater. Immediately after the presentation of diplomas, and adaptation by Miss Hanna from Keat's poem, "Endymion" will be presented by the pupils of the school. There are over one hundred girls in the cast, the leading roles being taken by seniors. A number of graceful dances will be given during the action of the play, the scenes of which are laid in ancient Greece.

A feature of the performance will be an original ballet dance by Miss Theodora Warfield, who made such a hit in the Kirmess last year.

Thursday night at 8:30 the alumnae and the senior class of Miss Hanna's School will have a banquet at the Piedmont Hotel. About 200 guests are expected at the banquet, which will be followed by a dance.

This has been one of the most successful years of the school. It is one of the oldest in Atlanta, and some of the most prominent women in Georgia are among its alumnae.

MINISTER'S WIFE ACCUSED AS SIREN

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 28.—Mrs. Mae Free Patterson, wife of the Rev. Gerard F. Patterson, pastor of the Church of the Incarnation, in the fashionable East End district, has been made defendant in a $10,000 alienation suit.

The action was brought by Mrs. Margaret Lloyd because of the alleged loss of the affections of her husband, Martin Van Voorhees Lloyd, a wealthy grain dealer. Mrs. Patterson is a cousin of Charles Free, vice president of the Southern Pacific Railway.

The suit charges that Mrs. Patterson enticed Lloyd from his home, that she wined and dined with Lloyd in public places, entertained him at her home and went with him to cafes, grill rooms, ball games, horse races and other places of amusement and "with her artifices, blandishments and coquetry and with malicious purpose deprived the plaintiff of her husband's society and affection."

The Lloyds have been separated since November 6, 1912.

CHIEF BEAVERS TO RENEW HIS VICE WAR

Declares That He Will "Clean Out" Disorderly Places When Hutcheson Furnishes List.

Renewed crusades to clean out vice in Atlanta have been precipitated by the publication Tuesday of an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers by Carl Hutcheson, an Atlanta attorney.

Chief Beavers called up Hutcheson with a demand for his information, asking names, addresses and character of occupants, and declared Wednesday that he would proceed to clean up if the requested information was furnished.

Hutcheson is now preparing a list of the places which he declared are immoral and told the chief he would place the list in Beavers' hands three days hence. Hutcheson was asked by the chief to swear to the character of the inmates of each house he names and to sign his name to his affidavit, and will be called as a witness in prosecuting the landlords.

"We will have some clean-up sure," said Chief Beavers Wednesday. "When I get Hutcheson's information I will prove that I am giving no protection to anybody. I would be glad to have every one report to me any resort that they might know of. It will help in the crusade. I will take speedy action against them all."

Dorsey to Confer With Felder.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey declared Wednesday that he would confer with Colonel T. B. Felder relative to the proposed Grand Jury probe of his corruption charges against police officials and the counter charges of bribery made against him by the police.

Colonel Felder would not comment on the affair at all, other than to say he was not yet ready to issue his statement substantiating his sensational charges.

Detective Chief Lanford issued a signed statement proposing to send Colyar handcuffed to Knoxville and Colonel Felder in charge of a detective to Columbia, S. C.

Lanford's Contribution.

"I will make this proposition to Colonel Felder," he said. "I will handcuff A. S. Colyar and send him back to Knoxville, Tenn., without requisition papers, if he (Colonel Felder) will accompany one of my men to Columbia, S. C., waiving requisition papers. Thereby I will get rid of two nuisances."

Colonel Felder issued the following statement relative to the proposed Grand Jury investigation:

"No investigation would be too exhaustive. I would be pleased to go before any committee, organization or tribunal. I have done nothing wrong. There is nothing in my whole professional career of which I am ashamed. I wish an investigation would be started."

COUNTY SEEKS CREATION TO GET ROADS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The proposed County of Candler is to petition the incoming Legislature for creation along new lines, and with an argument not only novel, but perhaps winning.

Candler County is to ask for existence as a powerful argument in favor of good roads.

It will seek to prove its right to creation as an absolute good roads necessity—that, of course, along with other reasons likely to appeal to intelligent legislative consideration.

It is a fact that there are several parts of Georgia in which are to be found highly prosperous towns, from a business point of view, that yet are hampered mightily by reason of their remoteness from their County seats and the consequent improbability of very active good roads work in their vicinities.

In some of these places, it is claimed, road taxes in remote neighborhoods are applied exclusively to good roads work near the county seat, and that brings about not only much dissatisfaction, but positive discontent.

Metter, a prosperous and hustling town of South Georgia, is an example of this, and it is about Metter that the proposed new county of Candler is to be framed.

If Candler County is created, it is contended that, with Metter as the County seat, good roads construction will radiate from Metter throughout the neighboring territory, and that there will not be a farm in the new county not soon connected with the County seat by ample and sufficient roads.

There is great enthusiasm among the people about Metter in favor of the new county, and very little opposition from the people of the counties from which it is to be taken. Candler generally is regarded as a good new county proposition, too, and it should surprise no one, therefore, to see the new Legislature put the seal of its approval upon it.

It would be located in one of the richest and most promising sections of the entire State.

Disquieting news comes from the bedside of Representative-elect Samuel E. Berry, of Whitfield.

He recently was stricken with an acute valvular heart trouble, and has been in critical condition since, with the chances of recovery hardly even. For a time, he seemed to get better, but of late has not improved.

Mr. Berry has represented Whitfield several times in the Legislature, and is looked upon as a particularly valuable member.

The Young Men's Democratic Club of Savannah proposes taking a hand in the election of a representative to succeed Mr. Stovall, resigned.

There are certain measures which this organization desires passed, and it is probable that the club will either put out a candidate of its own or undertake to pledge some other candidate to support its bills. Indications are that there may be several aspirants for the place.

The club wants a white primary law to govern city elections. Notice of the fact that such a bill will be introduced at the coming session has been advertised in the newspapers as well as posted on the bulletin board at the Court House.

The need of such a law was impressed upon the leaders of the club at the January city election, when hundreds of negroes were bought. It was charged that both factions cooped up the colored voters in halls, and held them overnight, voting them in batches of four or five, practically under guard.

Under a white primary election law this would be eliminated, it is claimed, as in the campaign for County and State officers. The contest would be settled in the preliminary skirmish, in which the negro voter would have no part.

A well meaning member-elect of the Legislature soon to assemble in Georgia has announced his intention of introducing early in the session a resolution providing for night sessions.

His motive is worthy enough, as he says it is to prevent congestion at the end of the session—and congestion always is there, right on the job!

Notwithstanding the eminent respectability of his intent, though, the impression generally will be that he is destined to disappointment. The Legislature has had that proposition submitted to it by people who earnestly desired to get the work hurried along, but it never got anywhere. The Legislature simply will not sit more than two or three hours a day in its earlier proceedings, and the incoming Legislature is not likely to be very different from its predecessors.

The better way to conserve legislative time, perhaps, is to find some method whereby local legislation may be disposed of more readily than now.

"Whitfield County stands far above the average in the manner in which it handles its convicts," said Chairman Davidson, of the Prison Commission, who returned from a tour of inspection of that County Tuesday.

In discussing the work as a whole, Mr. Davidson said some of the counties are wasting their efforts and money under the mistaken idea that "the best warden is the one who can be secured for the least salary."

The majority of counties, the chairman added, are working their convicts at a profit.

A bill will be introduced in the Legislature seeking to abolish the City Court of Floyd County.

It will be provided in the bill, though, that the court shall not be abolished until the expiration of the term of the present judge, John C. Reece.

A further effort will be made, so it has been stated, to make Floyd County a separate judicial circuit within itself, and provide for four sittings of the court each year, instead of two, as is the law now.

The movement generally is favored in Floyd, and will not be opposed in Walker and Chattooga, the other two counties composing the Rome Superior Court circuit.

WAR IN BALKANS NEAR; POWERS ONLY CHECK

Greece and Servia Allied Against Bulgarians, Who Claim Treaty Violations.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 28.—Actual war between Bulgaria and the allied armies of Greece and Servia is very near, according to a statement made here to-day by M. Teodoroff, Bulgarian Minister of Finance, who is here on a political mission.

"Only tremendous pressure by the European powers can prevent a fresh conflict in the Balkans," said M. Teodoroff. "Unknown to the outside world, affairs have been getting more and more serious for months. An army of 280,000 Servians and Greeks is massed on the western and southern frontiers of Bulgaria, ready for a general outbreak.

"The contention of the Bulgarian Government is that Servia and Greece are exceeding the terms of the agreement drawn up by the Balkan league before the outbreak of the war with Turkey."

Austrian Reservists Ordered Remobilized.

VIENNA, May 28.—Remobilization of the Austrian reservists, recently dismissed when peace in the Balkans seemed near, was ordered to-day by the Government.

A telegram from Athens states that another fight between the Bulgarians and Greeks north of Salonika is imminent. The Bulgars are massing vast quantities of heavy artillery at Elevthera, about 100 miles east of Salonika.

A Sofia dispatch to The Reichspost to-day states that the Bulgarian Government has decided to submit the future status of Salonika to the powers. Tension between Bulgaria and Servia, however, is tightening.

Greeks to Fight To Hold Salonika.

SALONIKA, May 28.—Premier Venezilos, of Greece, arrived here to-day en route to Sofia, where he will try to patch up the differences between the Greek and Bulgarian Governments.

King Constantine is reported to have given the impression to his staff that Greece will fight Bulgaria before she will consent to give up Salonika.

Stage Beauty Sues Eric Loder

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gaiety beauty, has brought action against her husband, Eric Loder, asking for a restoration of her conjugal rights. The action will be heard at the coming session of the divorce court and is preliminary to a suit for divorce.

Loder has made no defense. The basis of the actress' petition has not been disclosed.

Gabrielle Ray and Eric Loder, son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married here March 1, 1912. Miss Ray was one of the most popular and beautiful musical comedy actresses in England. She had been showered with attentions from many notable gallants, including ex-King Manuel of Portugal, Lord Dalmeny and the Marquis of Anglesey, but she declared her heart had been touched only by the dashing young Loder, who is tall, good-looking and wealthy.

Miss Ray and Loder were to have been married at Windsor, February 29, the day that made 1912 a leap year. At the last moment the charming bride-elect changed her mind, and literally left Loder "waiting at the church."

The next day Miss Ray relented and the marriage took place.

The Loders amassed a fortune in the tallow trade in Russia, and the baronetcy was one of the jubilee honors conferred by Queen Victoria in 1887.

NO CHANGE MADE IN COTTON AND SUGAR TARIFF

Only Revision Senate Plans of Income Tax Lessens Burden on Married Men.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Underwood tariff bill as reported to the Democratic caucus after the revision of its various schedules by the subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee is forecast as follows:

There will be no change in the cotton, sugar and wool schedules as written into the measure by the House with the exception of a slight increase in duty on wool manufactures.

The only change in the income tax amendment will be the alteration of sub-section D, so that a man of family will not be compelled to pay as great a tax as a single man with the same income.

In the cotton and wool schedules a period of from 60 to 90 days of grace will be extended to manufacturers before the provisions of the new bill go into effect. The rest of the bill takes effect the day after its passage.

The amendments to the Underwood bill permitting the arbitrary valuation of imports by the Secretary of the Treasury will be adopted. In the metal schedule duties on structural steel will be revised downward, while ferro-maganese and pig iron will be free listed.

Wheat, cattle and other staples whose manufactures are all on the free list also will be free listed.

Duties on pottery will be raised.

President Wilson, it was stated, has been notified of the proposed changes in the bill and has consented to the revisions.

BRYAN WILL GET "GRAPE JUICE" WELCOME

Atlanta Decorates for Secretary's Coming Monday in His Favorite Beverage.

With the coming of Colonel William Jennings Bryan on Monday all Atlanta is rallying to the support of her reputation as a grape juice center.

Grape juice in every form—in bottles big and little, square and round, and some of it as old as the vintage of last August—is making its appearance in every show window to greet the eyes of the world-renowned connoisseur, "Grape Juice Bill."

At the Capital City Club Colonel Bryan will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Colonel Walter P. Andrews. No wine or other liquors will be served, but in their stead will be an abundance of grape juice cocktails, grape juice highballs, and grape juice punch. This fact was revealed in a letter of instructions to the steward of the club in which Mr. Andrews made implicit his desire that the precedent of "wineless" dinners established by the distinguished Secretary of State in Washington be followed here.

The dinner will be served at the club at 6 o'clock. It will be attended by a number of prominent Atlanta citizens.

Mr. Bryan will arrive in the city at 5 o'clock. At 8 o'clock he will deliver an address before the students of the Georgia School of Technology at the Grand Opera House.

MAKES RHEUMATISM PROMPTLY DISAPPEAR

Crippled-up Sufferers Find Relief After Few Doses of Croxone are Taken.

It is needless to suffer any longer with rheumatism, and be all crippled up, and bent out of shape with its heart-wrenching pains, when you can surely avoid it.

Rheumatism comes from weak, inactive kidneys, that fail to filter from the blod the poisonous waste matter and uric acid; and it is useless to rub on liniments or take ordinary remedies to relieve the pain. This only prolongs the misery.

The only way to cure rheumatism is to remove the cause. The new discovery, Croxone, does this because it neutralizes and dissolves all the poisonous substances and uric acid that lodge in the joints and muscles, to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism, and cleans out and strengthens the stopped up, inactive kidneys, so they can filter all the poison from the blod, and drive it on and out of the system.

Croxone is the most wonderful medicine ever made for chronic rheumatism, kidney troubles, and bladder disorders. You will find it different from all other remedies. There is nothing else on earth like it. It matters not how old you are, or how long you have suffered, it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. You will find relief from the first few doses, and you will be surprised how quickly all misery and suffering will end.

An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle at any first-class drug store. All druggists are authorized to sell it on a positive money-back guarantee. Three doses a day for a few days is often all that is ever needed to overcome the worst backache or urinary disorders.

CLARK HOWELL AND THE WORK OF BEAVERS

The following letter from Chief Beavers and the interview with Mr. Clark Howell explain themselves:

Atlanta, Ga., May 27.

My attention has been called to an article in the Sunday papers in which an interview with me makes it appear that I was attacking Mr. Clark Howell personally and his policy with The Constitution.

I only repeated the conversation I had with him on the next day after he returned from Panama on about March 1, this year.

I meant no reflection on Mr. Howell, but only had reference to certain local reports in his paper, and he now assures me that there was no intention on his part to discredit the work which I have been trying to do in this city, and that the article that appeared in the reportorial columns of The Constitution was without his knowledge and consent, and that it was not his intention nor does he approve of anything that would in the least hinder or discredit the work that the police department has ben trying to carry out.

I would regret very much indeed to have any utterance of mine construed into an attack upon Mr. Howell, whom I have always regarded, and now esteem, as an exemplary citizen and journalist who holds the merited confidence of the public, as he does of my department and of myself.

J. L. BEAVERS,
Chief of Police.

In reference to Chief Beavers' statement Mr. Howell said:

"During my absence in Panama in January a police raid was made on a certain downtown rooming hotel. The Constitution next morning locally reported the affair and the fact that a man and his wife were subjected to undue treatment, with comment from the inadvertent victims and the manager of the hotel.

"When I returned from Panama the Chief complained of the local report referred to. I explained to him that nothing was further from our intention than to discredit his work, and that following The Constitution's oft-repeated commendation of his high sense of duty in endeavoring to enforce the law, he would have our cordial support to that end.

"He thanked me, recalling the fact that two days after the houses were closed I had sent for him to tell him that his attitude would have The Constitution's support.

"Next morning—September 26—The Constitution's leading editorial, 'A Wholesome Example,' unqualifiedly approved the Chief as 'an official with the nerve and the courage to enforce the law,' stating that 'he has set a singularly wholesome example of a blunt interpretation of duty.'

"I am still of the opinion that no good citizen would invite the return of the segregated district, nor the spread of its attendant evil in other directions. In my talk with the Chief I expressed my doubt as to his ability to absolutely eliminate the evil, and while the segregated district has been closed we are still wrestling with other phases of the problem.

"I think the Chief is doing the best he can, and he should have the support of all good citizens in his efforts."

CATTLE TICK IS COSTING STATE $6,000,000

Veterinarian's Report Discloses Astounding Facts—Tuberculosis Menace to Health.

The losses from the ravages of hog cholera reached $1,000,000 in 1912.

Tuberculosis in cattle is spreading through the State with alarming rapidity and threatens to infect every herd.

These are the startling facts revealed in the annual report of State Veterinarian Peter F. Bahnsen, issued Wednesday.

For the amelioration of these conditions Dr. Bahnsen recommends an appropriation of $30,000. He cites the conservation of human health as the absolute and pressing necessity for the expenditure of this amount.

Losses Are Enormous.

"Our losses from tick infestation," reads the report, "are under present conditions in excess of $6,000,000 annually. All of this enormous waste could be stopped in a few years with a sufficient fund to employ cattle inspectors, and by appealing to the counties and the Federal Government for increased aid.

"Hog cholera cost the State not less than $1,000,000 in 1912, or approximately 20 per cent of the total value of the hogs owned in this State.

"Tuberculosis is prevalent to a considerable extent among the dairy cattle of the State. The milk of tuberculous cattle is dangerous to man and the health of our people is in the balance. We have taken this matter in hand with the limited means available and the public is anxious that our services along this line be extended into a State-wide movement. Our greatest need in this matter is more funds for extending the work.

Slaughter Houses Menace.

"Slaughter house conditions are extremely bad in most sections of the State and the public is frequently fed on meat not fit for human consumption. Animals with communicable diseases are often slaughtered and sold without restriction and the sanitary conditions of fully 70 per cent of our slaughter houses is a crying shame. It demands rigid State supervision.

"We should have an appropriation of not less than $30,000 for this work. It is essential in conserving the health of the people that their food products be obtained from healthy animals and handled and distributed under conditions that will prevent subsequent contamination or putrefaction."

Wife Kidnaped Him And Kept Him Drunk

CHICAGO, May 28.—That he was kidnaped by his wife, whom he is suing for divorce, taken to New York and kept under the influence of champagne and cocktails, was the statement of Louis Frank, a saloon keeper, in an affidavit filed to-day.

About two weeks ago a stipulation dismissing Frank's divorce suit was filed by Mrs. Frank's attorneys, who said Frank and his wife were reconciled and living in New York. This Frank denies.

Bath Cost Her $108; Finds Shoe Poor Bank

BOSTON, May 28.—Mrs. Mary Garabedian says her bath at the Cambridge Field Public Bathhouse cost her $108. Said Mrs. Garabedian:

"I paid 2 cents for a piece of soap and a towel. Instead of giving my valuables to the clerk I hid them in one of my shoes. When I came back the articles were gone, although the shoe remained."

Mrs. Garabedian is out exactly the price of 5,401 baths.

COL. NASH TO TRAIN RIVERSIDE CADETS

New Commandant Takes Charge at Military and Naval Academy on June 1.

GAINESVILLE, GA., May 28.—Colonel J. Q. Nash has been appointed commandant of the cadet corps at Riverside Military and Naval Academy. He will take charge June 1.

Few cadet commandants in Southern preparatory schools are better known than Colonel Nash. He has been instructor of more Georgia youths in military tactics than any man in the State. His selection is a distinct accusition to Riverside's faculty.

Colonel Nash was graduated with first honor from Gordon College in 1896. He was superintendent of the public schools of Henry County; vice president and commandant of Reinhardt College, and commandant of Gordon Institute for several years. His more recent position has been commanding officer and instructor in the Georgia Military Academy.

The adjutant general of the National Guard of Georgia has detailed Colonel Nash as instructor and inspector in camp and target practice. He was detailed by the Governor to serve on the staff of the grand marshal at the inauguration of President Roosevelt and again at the inauguration of President Taft. He holds commissions with the National Guard from second lieutenant to lieutenant colonel and as assistant inspector general of Georgia.

HUNT FOR YOUNG CONDUCTOR VAIN

Wife of W. S. Culpepper, Who Disappeared in Atlanta Monday, Fears Foul Play.

Culpepper, who is 24 years old, a freight conductor on the Georgia Railroad, disappeared in Atlanta Monday afternoon. He was due to take out No. 210 Monday night, but failed to appear at the scheduled time.

Fearing he had been injured, his friends visited every hospital and infirmary in Atlanta Tuesday morning and also inquired at the police station, but in vain.

Culpepper lived a temperate life, has a good character, was devoted to his family and was popular among officials and workingmen of the Georgia Railroad. He had just been promoted to conductor. The theory of a voluntary flight is scouted by his family and friends. The young wife fears her husband has met with foul play.

2,000 TO MARCH IN BIG HOLIDAY PARADE

Pageant by Retailers June 4 Will Eclipse Anything of Its Kind Ever Seen in Atlanta.

With practically all plans completed for the pageant, local retail grocers and clerks Wednesday are predicting that the parade of June 4, with which they will celebrate the opening of the "Wednesday closing" season, will be one of the greatest ever seen in Atlanta.

F. E. Kamper, chairman of the arrangements committee, in charge of active preparations for the parade, declares nothing that has ever been held in Atlanta in the past will even approach it in interest. "It is a sure thing," declared Mr. Kamper, "that when we get through the people of Atlanta will know that clerks and retailers appreciate the opportunity of getting a half-holiday every week. The parade we are going to pull off will make the circus parades look sick."

And a glance at the arrangements induces the belief that Mr. Kamper knows what he is talking about. Probably 2,000 men will march in the parade, and Atlantans will see some weird costumes. Three miles of wagons and automobiles, decorated and emblazoned with banners, will follow the marchers. Five mounted policemen, the handsomest and bravest of Chief Beavers' force, will ride at the head of the column.

Three Brass Bands.

Three brass bands will tread proudly in the ranks.

Following the mounted policemen and a brass band will come aides and their marshals as follows: F. E. Kamper, H. Winberg, C. J. McCoy, R. H. Comer, W. J. Burton, J. H. Merritt, J. F. McNair and W. A. Byers. Each of these men will appoint five assistants to ride with him, and all will be clothed in uniforms that represent the last word in splendor.

The parade will form near the Capitol, on Washington, Hunter, Mitchell, Whitehall and other nearby streets. The exact route of the parade has not been determined, but it probably will be down to Whitehall and up Peachtree, until everybody gets tired. The rivalry among the merchants for the best decorated wagon and automobile already has begun, and some unique schemes in decoration are promised.

The celebration will not be confined to retailers. Wholesalers have expressed a desire to send their automobile trucks to the parade, and ice manufacturers, bakers, packers and the commission merchants also will work to make the parade a success.

Many lines of business were represented at the Taft Hall meeting Tuesday night, and every representative of every line pledged the assistance of himself and his fellows to making the parade a success. E. L. Adams was there to ladle out encouragement in behalf of the jobbers of the city, and J. D. Simmons told how far the City Salesmen's Association would go to make the affair a success. Then there were wholesalers, retail grocers, bakers, commission men, clerks and employees galore.

All Boost Atlanta.

Several stirring addresses were made, all emphasizing the necessity of working together and boosting for Atlanta. Among the speakers were Harry L. Schlesinger, father of the closing movement; Hon. John Y. Smith, Representative-elect from Fulton County; O. T. Camp, a consistent booster for the parade; E. L. Adams, of the jobbers; John McCullough, of the commission merchants; Olin Stamps, who boosts anything and everything pertaining to the good of the city; L. E. Rogers, one of the live wires among the clerks, and John Bratton, of the Georgia Retail Grocers' Association.

Before adjourning the clerks extended a vote of thanks to their employers for the half-holiday. It was announced by Mr. Schlesinger that more than 800 grocers had signed an agreement to close at noon every Wednesday through the months of June, July and August. Merchants in East Point also have joined in the movement and will take part in the parade.

DECATUR PLANS BIG HOME-COMING

Reception Committee Arranging New Festivities to Make June 3 a Memorable Day.

Extra festivities are being planned every day for Decatur's home-coming day and smoker on June 3. The reception committee of the Board of Trade will meet to-night at organization headquarters in the Weekes Building. Mayor John A. Montgomery is chairman of this committee.

The day and the night of June 3 will be, in effect, one continuous good time. The morning will be given over to oratory. Dr. Soule, of the State Agricultural College, will speak on DeKalb County's opportunities for truck farming, dairying and poultry raising; E. F. Smith on ways and means of locating the Fifth District Agricultural School in DeKalb County; C. Murphy Candler on the life and accomplishments of Jefferson Davis.

The afternoon will be made memorable by the laying of the cornerstone of Decatur's new $25,000 school, under the auspices of the Masons. George M. Napier is the orator of the day, while five-minute addresses will be made by Mayor Montgomery, J. Howell Green and Hooper Alexander.

Some time during the day a shield will be presented to the Decatur troop of Boy Scouts. The shield is a trophy of a recent field day contest. All Atlanta Boy Scout troops, with their drum corps, will participate in the presentation.

The second smoker of the Board of Trade will be held at 6:30 o'clock, as the concluding event of home-coming day. "GOOD EATS" will be served, followed by things to smoke, with music throughout. Good speakers will entertain the crowd, which is expected to be large.

Instant Postum

Is in thousands of homes where health is valued.

Former coffee users who have felt the pinch of indigestion, headache, heart disturbance, nervous irritation, etc., have written by the score, telling of remarkable benefits following the change from coffee to Instant Postum.

A level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"Thanks for the sample of Instant Postum sent me. I had been drinking coffee for a long time and thought it would be difficult to give it up, but I was mistaken.

"While I was drinking coffee I always felt exhausted and I weighed but 112 pounds. After using Instant Postum I soon recovered and now am as healthy as any person can be. I now weigh 120 pounds and am steadily gaining in weight. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.

Both kinds are sold by grocers everywhere.

This We Consider the Year's Most Remarkable
Sale of Chinaware

The Quantities Involved and the Halved Prices Make It Such

That housekeeper who right now finds that she needs another or a new set of china is indeed fortunate, and she who needs but an extra plate or so, a platter or a few cups and saucers is indeed fortunate.

TO-MORROW SHE WILL PAY BUT HALF (in an instance or so possibly a litle more, in a greater number of instances less than half) of what she had expected.

And she will have such fine choice at the same time! Here are fine Limoges china---including a pattern from the Haviland potteries---Japanese china, Austrian china and German and English porcelains---china to grace elegant dining rooms and china that is best for summer homes.

It is the righting of stocks with us and is done in the characteristic Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co. fashion, let prices fall where they will.

You will notice below that in many instances former prices are for the dozen pieces and that present prices are for the single piece---this means that now you may buy one piece or as many pieces of any of the china as you may want.

TALLULAH FALLS LAND SUIT WILL GO TO JURY THURSDAY

State Ends Its Introduction of Testimony—Defense Finishes Tuesday Afternoon.

CLAYTON, GA., May 28.—All testimony, it is expected, will have been heard and arguments begun in the suits of the State of Georgia against the Georgia Railway and Power Company to determine the ownership of the Tallulah Falls gorge by the time the afternoon session of Rabun Superior Court adjourns to-day.

All of the State's evidence was concluded at this morning's session. That of the defense is expected to be concluded in the afternoon in time for attorneys to begin their speeches to the jury. The case will probably go to the jury Thursday morning and a verdict is expected by the afternoon.

The State began the introduction of testimony when court reconvened Tuesday afternoon. Old residents of Tallulah Falls, ranging from 60 to 70 years of age, who had lived there practically their entire lives, were offered as State's witnesses. They testified that of their own knowledge, hearsay and tradition former holders of the land along the Tallulah Gorge, now in dispute, and those who transferred the property to the power company did not lay claim to the land in the gorge, but only to the gorge's brink.

Professor Strong, of the University of Georgia, who, with Professor Koch, also of the university, made surveys of the disputed property and reported on it to the Governor and Attorney General, testified as to this survey and report, on which at the time the State officials declined to bring suit. Numerous maps and plats of the falls property were filed as exhibits to Professor Strong's testimony.

Further documentary evidence was introduced by the State this morning.

It was generally expected before the noon adjournment that the defense would offer a motion for a non-suit, which would be overruled by Judge J. B. Jones, president, and then the defense would offer its testimony, principally in documentary form.

LATEST DECREE IN RIDING HABITS IS FLAT-BRIMMED TILE

MISS ELIZABETH BIGELOW.
The new dress and flat brimmed "tile" worn by Miss Bigelow at the Brookline Country Club's annual Horse Show caused widespread comment in the Hub's Social circles.

Equestriennes of Atlanta, this is the last word in women's riding habits:

Also it was the most talked of costume worn at the revival of the Horse Show of the Brookline Country Club, and to-day tailors all through Boston and the surrounding countryside are beset by equestrian enthusiasts for duplicates. The costume was worn by Miss Elizabeth Bigelow, one of the most noted of the Boston women who have in recent years taken to the saddle as a means of recreation.

The usual pique stock is discarded by Miss Bigelow in favor of a straight standing collar of white linen with a broad tie of black. This closely resembles the style of 60 years ago and gives a decidedly natty appearance to the wearer. In place of the conservative black derby Miss Bigelow wears the bell-shaped silk tile, with a flat rim, fitting snugly over the head and which, it is said, "sticks" much more closely to the head of the rider than the small crowned derby.

Miss Bigelow's coat is of a dark material and hangs closely to the figure and displays to an excellent degree her trim, clean-cut figure. The young woman, who is one of the most popular society leaders in the "Hub's smart set," rode to a decided advantage in the various rings in which she competed, and her general appearance added to the enthusiasm with which she was greeted by the spectators and gallery.

4 PINNED BENEATH OVERTURNED AUTO

MARIETTA, GA., May 28.—Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Flemister, Miss Charlotte Flemister, Miss Charlotte Fite and a negro chauffeur, all of Cartersville, were injured when Mr. Flemister's automobile to-day turned turtle two miles from Marietta, near Fair Oaks. None suffered broken bones.

Mrs. Flemister's condition is serious from the shock. She had been in a highly nervous state for two weeks following the death of her baby.

The accident occurred when a front wheel came off. It was said a garage attendant at Cartersville had warned Mr. Flemister of danger from this wheel.

The chauffeur was pinioned to the ground by the steering wheel and Mrs. Flemister was caught under the back of a seat, while Mr. Flemister and his daughter were held down by the body of the car. Miss Fite alone was able to extricate herself. She summoned nearby cotton field hands, who lifted the car from the victims. They were brought to Marietta by a passing auto for medical attention.

Mr. Flemister is a wholesale grocer of Cartersville.

Carolina Desperado Not Slain; Captured

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—Richard Henry Austin, South Carolina assailant and murderer, reported killed near Sylvania yesterday, is still alive. He was desperately wounded and captured in the swamps near Newington last night, was brought to Savannah to-day, being safely lodged in the Chatham County jail. He admits his identity, but maintains that he did not commit the assault charged to him.

It is hardly expected that the negro will live to be tried. There has been some talk of an attempt to lynch Austin, but no such trouble is anticipated by the police or Sheriff.

STRENGTH IN WHEAT BASED ON HOT WINDS

CHICAGO, May 28.—The Inter Ocean says: "Hot winds were reported in the Southwest last night and the Kansas City curb on wheat was up ⅝ of a cent. Chicago was the weakest market yesterday, which bulls attributed to the break in corn. With unfavorable crop reports and a few days of dry, hot weather bulls are looking for higher prices and said wheat should be bought on breaks.

"It was the theory of the bears that the crop scare has been worked for all it was worth for the time being and wheat should be sold on all bulges. Corn traders believe that there will be little in it for the bulls in May corn the balance of the month. The trade has been largely evened up as indicated by the bulge Monday and the break of yesterday.

"It would not be surprising to see fireworks in May oats in the two and a half trading days remaining of the month, including to-day. Those who have watched the market say that the open interest is larger than it is possible for the shorts to deliver and they will have to go into the pit and cover."

MRS. SLATON ASKS FREE PARK MUSIC

The Fifth Regiment band will give another musical concert in Grant Park Sunday afternoon, the Georgia Railway and Power Company having donated a sum for it.

Unless Council makes an appropriation for park music there will be no more concerts this season, though W. H. Glenn, manager of the railway department of the company, said his company was willing to supplement any appropriation Council might make, but that it would not pay the full cost.

Mrs. John M. Slaton, wife of the Governor-elect, went before the Finance Committee of Council and pleaded for a fund for free music. She said it was recognized by the whole country that Atlanta was a music-loving city and it was the duty of Council to stimulate this feeling.

Councilman Claude L. Ashley, author of a resolution to appropriate $5,000 for music in both Grant and Piedmont Parks, said he felt sure a good sum would be given when the Finance Committee met Friday and made up the June budget.

Eloper Glenn Out Of Jail on $250 Bond

L. J. Glenn, who has been confined in the Tower since the first part of April, when he was brought back to Atlanta to answer a charge of abandoning his two little children to elope with Mrs. Ione Pidcock, wife of a railroad president, was released under a $250 bond Wednesday morning.

Glenn said he would remain in Atlanto until the divorce proceedings brought by his wife were heard.

Glenn's father, G. F. Glenn, secured his bond. His attorney is L. F. McClelland.

George Mau Officer Of German Societies

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 31.—Savannah will be the next meeting place of the South Atlantic German Societies.

President Moellring, Savannah; first vice president, George Mau, Atlanta, are among the officers re-elected. William Neisi, Brunswick, and Louis Scheibe, Macon, fifth and sixth vice presidents; H. E. Dreeson, Savannah, treasurer, and Paul Wierse, Charleston, secretary, are new officers.

Works 18 Years as Clerk Without Pay

MONTPELIER, IND., May 28.—J. Stewart, who died here to-day, had worked eighteen years as a cigar clerk without pay.

Although offered money by his employer, he would accept only 15 cents three times a day to buy meals.

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Why Do Folks Pull Flowers in Parks?

"It sure gets my nanny," said the park policeman, "why some folks will come out here and pull flowers. The park commission spends a lot of money getting plants and a lot more to keep them in good condition and then along comes somebody and crabs the whole act by tearing off a bunch of the flowers.

"Last Sunday a young fellow came out here and nothing would do but he must have a magnolia. He thought they were pretty. So they were; but that gave him no license to pull a blossom. But he did just the same. I happened to see him after he had secured the flower and I called him.

"'Here,' said I, 'is a copy of charges. Suppose you straighten out this little affair with the Recorder.'

"'Why, I didn't know there was any harm in taking these flowers,' said he.

"'Well, what do you suppose we got 'em out here for?' I told him. 'These flowers belong to the city and they are put here to be looked at, that's all. If you want to give your best girl a bouquet why don't you go to the florist's? That's what they are in business for.'

"'I don't see any sign out here saying not to pull flowers,' says he, nettled I guess about that best girl remark of mine.

"'Sure, you don't, I says. 'An' what's more, you don't see no sign tellin' you to fall in the lake or commit suicide, yet I haven't seen you tryin' to do either.'

"He didn't have any answer for that one and I guess he was some wiser when he went home. And next day he paid his little fine like a man. Bet HE don't pull any more magnolias in Grant Park."

Motion Picture Show Takes Place of Nurse.

Out in West End women with small children have solved a problem. They have learned how to get along without nurses. Of course those with babies are not so fortunate, but the ones whose youngsters can run about are reaping the reward of ingenuousness.

Now when a mother wants to go to the matinee or shopping in town she doesn't have to call in mother-in-law or a neighbor to look after the children until she gets back. The plan is much more simple and gives general satisfaction. She takes them to a motion picture show.

It should be known, of course, that West End boasts a full-fledged "movie" show. The children go in droves every day and the proprietor must be an all-fired generous soul because the kiddies just stay and stay and stay. He never asks them to go out. And that is the real secret of the scheme taken advantage of by the mothers.

Mrs. West End decides that she wants to go shopping. She washes and dresses Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude and escorts them to the picture show. She pays 15 cents and the three young ones hike in to see the show. And there they stay. Mrs. West End goes to town, travels from one store to another until exhausted and returns homeward. She stops at the picture show and there is Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude still gazing in speechless ecstasy at the pictures on the screen.

What matters it if they have seen the same films half a dozen times that afternoon? They get just as much fun out of it as if they observed them for the first time. Mrs. West End calls her darlings and they all return home. Mamma is satisfied, the youngsters are decidedly so and Mr. Picture Man evidently is, because next time he is just as smiling as ever.

means that scrupulous care has been given every detail of construction; that every part has been manufactured by the W. W. Kimball Company; that it has been made by skilled workmen, under the direction of experts in their respective lines. That ability, experience and responsibility are back of the piano. The ear and eye can judge of the the construction, case design and the finish, but you must look to the name for reliability of construction, and the assurance that the good qualities will endure. The house of KIMBALL has had an experience of over fifty years in the music industry, and artists, amateurs, and thousands of satisfied customers give abundant proof of the merit of the Kimball.

We are showing a large variety of styles in 88-note Player Pianos and Uprights. We have your choice in woods, such as Rosewood, Walnut, Circassian Walnut, Oak, Mission, Satin Mahogany and Mahogany. Prices ranging from $195 to $1,250.

Our one, absolutely one, price insures you, whether an experienced buyer or not, of securing the best instrument for the amount you wish to pay. It is not safe to buy a piano, or any other article of merchandise, from a dealer who has a sliding scale of prices, because you will never know when he has given you his lowest price. Then, too, your neighbor may buy the same merchandise for from $50 to $75 less money. A piano has but one value, and that should fix its price—the right price. Each and every instrument on our wareroom floor is tagged at the cash figure, and no one pays more or less.

It is not only safe, but pleasant, to deal with the world's largest manufacturers of Pianos, Player Pianos, Residence and Church Pipe Organs, through this Branch Store.

WOODMEN HOSTS TO LODGE HEAD

John T. Yates, of Omaha, Nebr., sovereign secretary of the Woodmen of the World, was the guest of honor at a reception given by the local camp of the order Tuesday night at Cable Hall.

Mr. Yates, accompanied by his wife, arrived in Atlanta Tuesday morning and leaves at noon Thursday for Macon, Columbus and other Georgia cities. He is en route to the biennial convention of the Woodmen at Jacksonville, which meets early in June.

Dr. F. L. Rosenthal, of Columbus, Ga., head consul of Georgia for the order, welcomed Mr. Yates to Atlanta, and Judge W. A. Roan made a short talk on the good of the order.

Mr. Yates said this was his first visit to Atlanta in fifteen years, and that there was a wonderful change.

"Especially noticeable is the cosmopolitan and metropolitan air of your city," he said.

Mr. Yates intends to purchase more Georgia bonds for the Woodmen.

"Georgia has the best bond laws of any State," he said, "and for that reason Georgia bonds will sell higher than those of other States. The Woodmen of the World already has purchased nearly $100,000 worth of bonds in this State."

Mr. and Mrs. Yates were taken on an automobile tour of the city Wednesday. They are stopping at the Piedmont Hotel.

Sunday, June 8, a special train, bringing Woodmen from Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and other Middle Western States, will stop for a few hours in Atlanta. The visiting members will be tendered a luncheon by the local camps at the Piedmont Hotel.

The collection is made up about equally of white and colored goods, including such as ratines, voiles, Swisses, poplins, seco silks, chiffon lisse, silk-and-cotton mixed goods, crepes, piques, luna lawns, Persian lawns, dimities, nainsooks, madras, ginghams, percales, and various others.

Lengths varying from two yards to dress patterns, of which there is a goodly supply.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THARE was a yung man caim to our house the other nite wich has jest graduated from West Point. He was a nice yung man. He was as strate as a arrow & his clothes fit him fine. He is a friend of Ma's unkel, wich also went to West Point & was shot in the back yeers ago in a Injun campaign. Ma never likes to talk much about her unkel, beekaus Pa is all the time wanting to know how it was that he got shot in the back

The naim of the yung man was Galbraith Denton. His naim was like the naims of the army ossifers in plays & stories & he was vary handsum. The only thing I didn't like about him was that he was all the time bragging. He is the only West Point man I evver saw that bragged. Moast of them knows better wen they git thru school.

I havent the faintest idee ware they will send me, he toald Pa & Ma. My only wish is to be sent to some post ware thare is plenty of action & danger. Danger is my middel naim, he sed. The direst peril in the world is like that much custard pie to me. I think I grow taller & broader on a diet of danger, he sed. Doant you feel that way? he asked Pa.

Pa Is Modest.

I think Pa was going to say Yes, but he saw Ma grinning at him & he sed Well, to tell you the truth, I am not so full of fire & recklessness as I was wen I was a yung man. In those days, Pa sed, I cud put my hand in a mad dog's mouth with a smile, or face the charge of a en-raged bull without batting a eye, but my advanced yeers have sobered me down a bit & made me think of other & greater things than fiteing.

Well, sed the yung man, Mister Dention, it is this way with me, he sed to Pa. I do not imagine that I shal grow less feerless with the added yeers. In fack,I beeleeve that when I am a old man I will be eeven moar dauntless than I am now, & wen the grim reaper cums he will find me in the hour of Deth as I ever was in life, unafraid.

That is a fine way to be, said Pa. You will find, sed Pa, wen you go to the front, many things in acktual warfare to try yure currage sorely. In the dark days of the Civil War, Pa sed, the days that I dred to recall to any grate extent eeven now, I went thru hardships & faced dangers that wud have killed any ordinary man or made him crazy. I wonder now & then, sed Pa, that that terribul war dident maik me reely insane. Dont you, wife?

Oh, I supposs so, sed Ma. Sumtimes I think you are a littel dippy at that.

Ma Gives Him Away.

Pa got kind of red in the face, but he kept on talking. My boy, he sed to Mister Dention, wen you have gone thru a baptism of fire such as me & my braiv comrades went thru at Misshunary Ridge or in the battel of the Wilderness, or at Shiloh or Chancellorsville, Pa sed, you will show them how reely braiv you are. One night I was surrounded by a whole company of cavalry, Pa sed. I nevver lost my superb nerve. Taking advantage of a blue mist that hung cuvg a gray landscape, I mingled freely with the enemy & thus made my escape.

I supposs yure face was blue with feer, sed Ma.

Mr. Dention beeleeved Pa until Ma sed: Lissen, Galbraith; this deer husband of mine was never in war except with me.

Far More Important.

The old man had given his son a very fair education, and had taken him into his shop. The young fellow was over-particular about a great many little things, but the father made no comment. One day an order came in from a regular customer.

"I wish to goodness," exclaimed the son, "that Jones would learn to spell."

"What's the matter now?" inquired the father cheerfully.

"Why, he spells coffee with a 'k.'"

"No—does he? I never noticed it."

"Of course you never did," said the son, pettishly. "You never notice anything like that."

"Perhaps not, my son," replied the old man; "but there is one thing I do notice, which you will learn by and by, and that is that Jones pays cash."

Speedy Courtship.

A man recently in New York laid a wager that he would woo, win, and marry within an hour a young lady whom, with his companions, he had just seen arrive at the hotel where he was living.

There is nothing in the American marriage law to prevent this dispatch. He introduced himself to the damsel, she smiled upon his suit, a minister was called in, and they were married within an hour.

The wager, of no inconsiderable amount, was handed over to the bridegroom, who left with his bride the following day. It was shortly afterward discovered that the couple had long been man and wife, and that they had been traveling about playing the same trick at various hotels.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to five Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain. Manager Smith tells the newspapers about his new find and the reporters print all sorts of "joshing" stories about Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

At the same time the newspaper photographers unlimbered their batteries and began bombarding everything in sight. The reporters took possession of the players' bench and passed intimate remarks with their friends in uniform. The training season of the Atlanta club was on and Manager Smith, in full charge was right in his element. Next in importance, judging by his own personal estimate to himself, was Whiskey, the colored man-of-all-work.

Ed Gillespie, the groundkeeper, had the field in fine shape, despite the severe rains of the preceding week, which had nearly driven him to drink.

Then minutes of tossing the ball sufficed.

Batting Practice.

"Batting practice!" suddenly yelled Bill Smith. "Dunn, put on your shin guards. Brady, go into the box and toss up a few. I'll just take first crack at that ball myself. Gee, boys, it feels good to get a bat in my hands again."

To the player all the joys of baseball are confined to batting and pay days, and it is believed that many a ball player would waive his salary if he could make a base hit whenever he wanted to. Every player would bat for 1,000 if he could have his way and pitchers would be driven out of the profession.

Smith took his place at the plate, a dozen negro boys spread themselves in he outfield to shack the balls; Brady went to the mound and threw up a straight ball. Smith pasted it to left and ran gleefully to first.

"A hit!" he shouted. "I'll lead the Pinch Hit League this year."

One by one the players took their turn at bat. Most of them hadn't had a club in their hands for six months. Many of them swung wildly at the ball. Their eyes had not yet become accustomed to the novelty of the situation.

Gordon Kelly, being the "kid" of the party, was the last man to face the pitcher. He assumed the same pose that filled Bill Smith with astonishment the day they first met. Whisk y crept up to the players' bench and stood grinning behind the reporters.

"Here's Billy's phenom," remarked Percy Whiting, the dean of the reportorial corps. "Watch him miss the ball a mile."

"He looks like business, anyhow," observed Murphy, a confrere.

Behind the plate Dunn spat in the big mitt and pounded it down with his right fist.

"Whatyer got, kid, something new," demanded Brady, with a grin.

"The only way I know," replied Kelly, smiling. "If I'm wrong you fellows will have to teach me something dif"—

A Great Hit.

His remarks were cut short. The ball was sailing up to the plate. Kelly stepped forward and with a tremendous swing met the sphere fairly and squarely with his bat. There was a crashing sound and the ball, describing a huge arc in the air, cleared the bull by thirty feet and fell to earth far beyond that rampant figure.

An ear-splitting yell, such as can only be emitted by a negro under the pressure of pleasureable excitement, issued from the throat of Whiskey, nearly bursting the ear drums of the three reporters seated on the bench.

"Some hitter, gem'men, some hitter; Wow!" shouted the colored attendant.

The instant he hit the ball, Kelly dropped his bat and circled around the bases with the speed of a Mott Haven sprinter. Percy Whiting jumped to his feet.

"Hey, Hypo!" he shouted to his camera man, "come here." And when that individual rushed up he whispered hoarsely:

"Snap that fellow in tweny different poses—standing up, lying down, roll over, say please, play dead and everything on the calendar; catching the ball, running the bases and at bat—especially at bat. Hustle now and we'll spring a good one in the late editions of The Georgian this afternoon."

"Do you hit all the ptichers like that kid?" laughed Brady, as Kelly raced over the plate.

"I don't know," replied Kelly, pleased at the question. "You see I never faced a good pitcher in my life. What I mean by that Mr. Brady," he added hastily, running out to the box in fear his answer had been misconstrued, "is that I never played a game of ball in my life and what I will be able to do with your pitching when you get in condition and cut loose is something I know nothing about. I'm afraid I will fall down hard. You see all you did was to toss up a slow straight one that time."

"That's al right, kid," said Brady. "No one ever made such a long hit off me before, and if you can meet the fast one and the curves the way you did that one they will go just as far—further if you pickle a curve ball. Stick around, kid, stick around."

Kelly thanked him for his encouraging words and walked away.

"How fast can you run, Gordon?" asked Bill Smith.

"I have done a hundred in nine an l four-fifths," replied the recruit, with a laugh, "but I'm afraid the record won't stand. You see I timed myself."

"You timed yourself?" queried the manager, in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

Bill Smith looked at his "phenom" long and earnestly. He said at last, "Can that stuff, boy; can that stuff. If you don't, you'll drive me bughouse."

CHAPTER XI.

IT is to be presumed a ball player would look foolish if, just as a game was about to start, he stepped to the home plate, faced the assembled throng, removed his cap and sang the following from the prologue to "Pagliacci:"

"E voi, pruttosto che le onstre povere gabbane d' istrioni, le nostr' anime considerate, poiche noi siam uomini di carne e d' ossa, e che di quest' orfano mondo all pari di voi spiriamo l' aere!"

He would doubtless appear equally foolish if he sang the same words in English:

"Ah, think then, sweet people,
When ye look upon us, clad in our motley and tinsel
Ours are human hearts, beating with passion,
We are but men like you, for gladness or sorrow.
'Tis the same broad Heaven above us,
The same wide lonely world before us!"

There might be some scattering applause, but a vast majority of the unfeeling crowd would yell: "Cut it out!"

Fine Men Among Players.

Yet ball players are men. They are human beings, a fact often lost sight of by those who pay to see them perform. Frequently they are jeered and hooted and insulted by men of a low order of intelligence in the crowds; men who would not dare to say the same things to the players, if they met them face to face on the street.

There are those who say the life of a ball player is degrading; that baseball is a trivial profession. Yet the Governor of Pennsylvania was a professional ball player. So was "Billy" Sunday, the revivalist. So was A. G. Spalding, millionaire and near-Senator from California. So was Edward Hanlon, one of Baltimore's most successful real estate operators. So was Ted Lewis, a professor at Amherst College. So were hundreds of men who are now successful in other walks of life.

Things happen in baseball which never reach the ears of the public. There are tragedies and sorrows, joys and happiness in the national game that the outside world wots not of. All of which in this roundabout way leads up to the introduction to the reader of Thomas P. Morrissey, familiarly known by the sobriquet of "Long Tom."

For fifteen years Long Tom caught behind the bat in the big leagues. In his prime he was reckoned among the best men that ever wore a mask. One year he caught 148 games, handling the delivery of all kinds of pitchers—those that were as wild as hawks and those that had fine control; the ones that had "everything" and the ones that had nothing but a prayer; the curve balls and the treacherous "spitballs." But Long Tom had seen his best days and he was now down in the minor All of which, in the roundabout way, leads up to the introduction to the leagues, with only a brief baseball life before him. His fingers were gnarled and distorted. His right arm was no longer the terror of basestealers. His legs had gone back on him.

Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta club, had taken a chance and signed Long Tom to a contract. He wanted him principally to coach the young pitchers on his staff and he had an idea that the hot Southern climate might boil the old fellow out and put him into something like his real form. Long Tom was not old except in a baseball sense. He had just turned thirty-five, but in baseball youth must be served.

Made Him Jealous.

Long Tom reported for practice the first day. He arrived in the clubhouse just as the others began their practice on the field. He slowly undressed and put on a uniform, and, picking up his mitt, mask, chest protector and shin guards, walked through the runway that led to the field. He came on the scene at the very moment Gordon Kelly was standing at the plate waiting for Brady to pitch to him, and when Kelly made that tremendous drive he stood stock still and watched the ball in its flight far into right field. Then he turned his eyes on the young man and followed the tall, powerful, lithe-limbed figure as it sped around the bases. Something in the sight of the youth filled the veteran with rage and jealousy.

"That's the kind that is putting us veterans out of the business," he muttered.

He sauntered up to the group that stood around the home plate and was cordially greeted by those who knew him of old. He was then made acquainted with the young players, who, of course,while they knew him by reputation, had never met him on the ball field. Included in the latter was Gordon Kelly, who shook Long Tom's warped hand and gave the customary greeting. Morrissey eyed the other critically and remarked:

"You're the fence buster of the Southern League, I take it."

"Nothing like that," laughed Kelly, "but I'd like to be."

"I guess you would, all right," returned Long Tom.

A Star Catch.

It wasn't what he said, but the half-sneering way he said it that caused Kelly to look up quickly.

"You must be that correspondence school guy I read about in the paper. I see another paper calls you a 'cotillion leader.' Well, that's where you belong, I'm a-thinking."

Kelly flushed and a look of surprise came over his face at the sarcastic tone of Long Tom. But he merely answered "Maybe so" and walked away. There were some unpleasant things connected with baseball, he thought. He could not understand why Morrissey should go out of his way to belittle him. Long Tom's remarks were entirely uncalled for. There was no occasion for them. He finally came to the conclusion that Morrissey was of a crabbed and morose disposition. Yet he recalled having read columns and columns in the newspapers about this veteran catcher and there had been no word that would lead one to think he was other than normal in his disposition.

As a matter of fact, Tom Morrissey's disposition was naturally peaceful. He, like most ball players, had had his clubhouse scraps, but they had not been of his own seeking. They had seemed to come naturally. He had the reputation of being as game a man as ever went behind the bat, and by hard work and strict attention to business he had earned the respect of his fellow players. But his relegation to the minor leagues had seemed to work a change in him. The truth had come home to him that his baseball days were numbered. The realization of this fact came to him on this fine day in March when he saw in Gordon Kelly the perfect picture of youth. It had suddenly made him angry with himself, and, contrary to his nature, he had proceeded to vent his spleen on Kelly.

When Gordon Kelly walked away from him, Long Tom continued to keep his eyes on the young man, and he watched his every movement. At last he was interrupted by Bill Smith, who yelled:

"A little infield practice now, boys. I'll bat the grounders. The rest of you go in the outfield. Tom, get a bat and knock up some fungoes."

Bailey, Nixon and Long journeyed to the outfield and Kelly went with them. Morrissey selected a lightweight fungo bat and began sending up easy flies. He served Bailey, Nixon and Long in turn and then shouted, "Here, y'are, kid." At the same time he put all the force he could command behind his bat and drove the ball high in the air and labeled to land far over the head of Gordon Kelly.

With the crack of the bat, however, Kelly had turned suddenly and raced with all his marvelous speed toward the center field. After covering more than a hundred feet he stopped and turned again, facing the grandstand and an instant later the ball settled in his uplifted hands. He had timed the hit to a hair.

When Long Tom had signified his intention of sending up a fly ball in Kelly's direction, Bill Smith suspended his work to watch the result.

"If he gets under that one, he's a wonder," murmured the manager. Since the newspapers had spoken so facetiously about his "world-beater" he had become harassed by the thought that he had made a mistake in saying anything about the youngster until he had demonstrated his ability in a more substantial manner. There was little or nothing at stake financially and that end of it did not trouble Smith at all. But no manager of a ball club cares to have anything "put over" on him, so that he becomes the butt of the baseball public. When, therefore, Kelly made a really wonderful catch, the worried look faded from Bill Smith's face, he sighed deeply and his somewhat funereal smile shone like a candle through a hollow squash.

"Is that your correspondence school ball player, Billy?" asked Long Tom Morrissey.

"That's him. What do you think of him?" replied Smith.

$250 in Prizes for Best Solution of "The Triple Tie"

YOU read the first eight installments of the great baseball mystery story of "The Triple Tie" and now you have a fair idea of the simplicity of the offer The Georgian makes—how you may win $100 by working out the solution of the mystery as nearly as its author, A. H. C. Mitchell, has done as you can.

Mr. Mitchell has written the last chapter, but his copy is sealed up in a vault at the American National Bank. When all but this final chapter has been printed, The Georgian readers will be asked to submit to three competent judges, none of them connected with this newspaper, their version of what the grand denouement should be.

To the person who most closely approximates Mr. Mitchell's final chapter $100 will be awarded. Other prizes, making the total prize list $250, also will be distributed.

Here is the list of the awards:

No. 1	$100
No. 2	$50
No. 3	$25
No. 4	$15
Nos. 5 to 16, each	5

Read this ninth installment of the great mystery story and you will not need to be urged to read the succeeding chapters. The story will grip you. As you read, try to follow the author's channel of thought and when the time comes for you to sit down and write that final chapter, be ready to win one of the big cash prizes in The Georgian's great offer.

Asking Too Much.

"I suppose you're going to Dr. Mason's funeral, grandpa?"

"Oh," snarled the infirm old man, "don't talk to me about other people's funerals. It's as much as I shall be able to do to get to my own."

TOO MANY KIDS

THEY told old Watkins, the showman, that there was no use giving his show in Kornshucks. There were too many kids there.

Old Watkins was in the free show business, and others in the same business had said to him: "The kids crowd in ahead of the old folks and monopolize the show. They absorb all the humorous offerings, and actually interrupt the doctor just at the important point when he unloads his wares, including cures for toothache, rheumatism, and colds and complexion beautifiers, at 50 cents a whack."

These kids, as far back as tradition goes, had spoiled everything in Kornshucks. They had interrupted sermons and lawn fetesand comic operas; and once when there was a sham battle the shooting could not be heard for them.

But in spite of all he was told about those kids, old Watkins went on putting up his tent for his medicine show. He merely listened politely to the people, who wagged their heads and warned him of failure. By the time his tent was up the kids filled the entire landscape back to the horizon. But he went ahead.

About fifteen minutes before the time the show was supposed to start something occurred on another vacant lot a little distance off. A man built a bonfire. Then he produced an explosion. It was no little explosion, but a regular Fourth of July affair. Then came more explosions.

Along about the third of the series the vacant lot where this was going on began accumulating kids. They came at the rate of 1,000 per bang from that time on. By the sixth bang all the kids in town were there, and only the old folks were left for the free show.

Old Watkins said: "You need not follow the kids to see what is going on there, my friends. There is nothing there but a bonfire and an ear-splitting racket. But it will keep the kids occupied and happy, and we can now proceed to have a show in peace."

"Hooray!" applauded the grown people. "Go ahead! Isn't it delightful?"

The performance proceeded. The mothers laughed and the fathers laughed. Why shouldn't they? There was no one stamping on their toes and pulling their arms off. There was no fighting and scuffing and crowding—nothing disagreeable at all. Only the refreshing jokes of the medicine man, made up as a negro or a Dutchman or some other inhabitant of the realm of mirth!

It was great! They laughed and enjoyed themselves and listened with breathless alarm to the dreadful things that might happen to them if they did not avail themselves of the providential chance to buy medicines that would heal all known diseases.

The show was over and all the money to be had was acquired by old Watkins, the free show medicine man, before the explosions and the bonfire died down and released the kids.

DANGER IN EATING MEAT

Statistics Show That People Who Eat Meat Are Susceptible to Typhoid Fever.

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if the patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after-effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has left masses of meat particles undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting; no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name, but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, upon receipt of price, full size jar mailed, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, Atlanta, Ga.

Ice-Kist Crankless Freezer

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

Write us to-day for our beautifully illustrated booklet, telling all about the freezer; it is ABSOLUTELY FREE—and receive our free trial offer.

McCARTY'S DEATH PURE ACCIDENT, FINDING OF JURY

By Ed W. Smith.

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight, Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 27.—Luther McCarty's death in the glove contest here Saturday afternoon with Arthur Pelky was entirely an accident. This was the verdict of the Coroner's jury, determined after two sittings, the decision being reached at 10 o'clock after a deliberation of half an hour. Pelky was exonerated completely from all blame in the case.

Almost immediately after, however, the Northwest mounted police put Pelky under arrest, charging him with manslaughter. He gave bail in the sum of $10,000, Fred C. Lowes, a wealthy real estate man, and Tommy Burns furnishing the surety. The threatened cases against Referee Smith, manager Billy McCarney and Promoter Tommy Burns did not develop, but Smith and McCarney, in lieu of being given their liberty, promised to remain in the city for a couple of days at least and give further testimony. No bonds were asked in their cases.

Following is the full verdict as announced:

"We, the Coroner's jury, find that Luther McCarty came by his death accidentally, the immediate cause being a subluxation of the cervical vertebrae at the Burns arena May 24, but there is no evidence to show how this injury occurred, we, the jury, therefore exonerate Arthur Pelky from all blame whatsoever."

This was signed by P. J. McManus as foreman. The other jurors were H. C. Hersey, R. Jackson, E. W. Schofield, C. P. McCallum, M. Dawson and E. A. Jones.

Trying for Criminal Case.

It was evident from the start that the crown, stung by the severe criticisms of local ministers, intended to make a desperate fight to get a verdict upon which to base a criminal case against Pelky and perhaps the others directly concerned in the unfortunate contest. The prosecuting attorney asked at once that all witnesses be excluded from the room before going on the stand, and carried his point.

Among the witnesses examined in great detail were McCarney, Burns, Smith, two of the local newspaper men and Dr. Moshier, who performed the autopsy. Pelky was not called at all, but remained during the entire case like a caged lion in a nearby room. He has been deeply affected all the way through, and during this hearing appeared almost heartbroken.

Dr. Moshier gave the most damaging testimony against the boxers. He declared that McCarty's neck had been dislocated under the base of the brain and that this injury caused the hemorrhage of the brain that brought about the death. He all but declared that the injury could have come about in no other way but from a blow or from the fall, the latter not being possible, because the boxer's neck did not strike any object as he fell.

Other Fights the Cause.

A highly dramatic incident came right at the close of the hearing when Pelky's attorney called upon Dr. C. J. Stewart, one of the oldest physicians in Alberta, to partially refute the testimony of Dr. Moshier. The physician was asked if he thought McCarty's injury could not have been caused by some other than a blow received. He said it was highly possible and then, rising to his feet, he shook his finger at the prosecutor, who was then questioning him, and during intense silence, shouted:

"It is my opinion that the injury to Luther McCarty was received from Flynn or somebody else in a previous encounter. In this contest, never."

He was excused in a hurry by the prosecutor.

Referee Smith testified that in all there were only about six blows landed during the contest, and that none of them was at all hard or effective and could hardly have caused even an abrasion of the skin. He said the boxing was about even up to the time of McCarty's collapse, and that Luther had turned, smiled and winked at his own corner after the final clinch, collapsing about eight or ten seconds later.

The State attempted to tangle up all the witnesses in an effort to prove that the contest was for the world's white championship: that all championship conditions had been carried out, and that it was in every way a prize fight.

Georgia Ends Successful Season

Prospects for 1914 Appear Good

ATHENS, GA., May 27.—Despite the fact that Georgia lost the series she would have rather won than any other—the one against Tech—the Red and Black has had a remarkably successful season, both financially and in games won and lost.

During the season the team scored a total of 174 runs against 68 for its opponents. Twenty-seven games were played against the best teams in Michigan, Ohio, Tennessee, Louisiana, Alabama, South Carolina and Georgia, and but eight games were lost. Two to Michigan, one to Ohio Wesleyan, one to Clemson, one to Auburn and three to Tech. Nineteen victories were celebrated and most of them were by one-sided scores, while seven were shutouts for Georgia. Five of the games that Georgia lost were by one run.

Outlook for 1914 Good.

Since the season has closed and the tension assumed the normal post-schedule laxity Coach Cunningham has busied himself taking an introspective stock of his material for 1914 and of his present splendid array of talent he expects to have all but three present at the beginning of next season, with a possibility of only two being absent.

Big John Morris, who has earned himself a place on the All-Southern team his first year in college ball, graduates in law in June, and will immediately "hang out his shingle" over in Hart County, from where he hails.

Covington, who has played taird base for two years and who served four years at center on the football team, is a victim of the four-year rule and after June will also join the ranks of the colonels in the legal profession.

May Lose Hutchens.

Hutchens, the Red and Black's great receiver of this season, is likewise a member of the law department and will receive his "dip" this year. There is but a slight chance for him to return, not unless he leads the team.

Bowden has a contract from the Boston Nationals whenever he sees fit to annex his signature to it and he is liable to become a member of Stalling's Braves at any time after College closes this summer. He has one more year in Southern athletics, and on account of his ability in both baseball and football a strenuous effort will be made to persuade him to return. With his wing in the shape it is now he would find it rough sailing in any league and would certainly have hard going to make good.

Many to Return.

These are about all the sure losses and doubtfuls, which leave a good working nucleus for the team next year. Henderson is slated to return for a place on the football eleven and will draw the first base assignment again. Harrison is taking pharmacy and will have another year, while Clements at shortstop is a four-year man and should make a strong bid for All-Southern next year. Ginn, McWhorter and Erwin all are sure to return and so will Corley and Hitchcock. The latter pitched but few games this year, but with a little more training will be a mainstay next year. Corley has already made an enviable record, although playing his first year in college ball.

Cobb Praised Brown.

This completes the list of regulars, to which may be added Brown, the freshman, who played in several games and who wields the willow in such good style that Ty Cobb pronounced him the most finished batter on the Red and Black squad. He is an outfielder and will be heard from next year. Another sub who filled in to a good advantage while Covington was ruled off the team is Holden, captain of the scrubs. He has another year in college and will be a valuable asset at a future date.

KELLY IN DRAW SCRAP.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Eddie Kelley and "Fighting" Fitzpatrick, local prides, fought ten fast rounds to a draw here last night.

FLYNN'S FIGHT WITH COFFEY WAS A WONDER

CHARLES E. VAN LOAN, America's greatest sporting fiction writer, covered the Jim Flynn-Jim Coffey heavyweight bout in New York last Friday night for the New York American. His story is of especial interest to local boxing fans, as Flynn does battle with Jim Savage at the Auditorium-Armory here on June 13. Here is Van Loan's story:

Andrew Chariglione, whose business name is Jim Flynn, stunted the Dublin Giant somewhat in a ten-round argument before the Garden Athletic Club. Jim Coffey had age, weight, reach and 70 per cent of the house with him before he started, but the battle-scarred warrior of Pueblo ripped and tore and slashed his way to victory, whaling away at his taller opponent until he reduced him to six feet of staggering, knock-kneed humanity.

Not since the memorable fight between Ketchel and O'Brien has so much real fighting been crammed into ten rounds, and it was Flynn's experience, aggressiveness and cast iron jaw that won for him.

For some reason best known to himself, Flynn elected to stand still for the better part of the first round and allow Coffey to pop him on the jaw with rights and lefts and the Dublin import made the most of his opportunities. He slammed the veteran 732 times by actual count and brought the gore in streams from one of Flynn's eyes.

Flynn Dives Into Coffey.

The Pueblo product finally grew angry under this constant bombardment and at the end of the round he was driving into Coffey head first, endeavoring to remove his head from his shoulders with wild rights and lefts.

Coffey continued to score in the second and third rounds and Flynn's countenance gradually assumed the appearance of an overripe tomato.

In the fourth round, however, the Pueblo hodcarrier took matters into his own hands and began to lead with his haymaker swings and when the bell rang Coffey was reeling from a succession of swings to the body and jaw.

Flynn Had Coffey Reeling.

In the fifth and the sixth matters were fairly even, but from the seventh until the end the tough old veteran forged into the lead, and though Coffey kept up his left jabs and right crosses there was no power behind them. Flynn herded his taller opponent from one side of the ring to the other endeavoring to land the finishing punch.

Jim Flynn may be on the toboggan, but he is still good enough to put an enduring crimp in the aspirations of many members of the younger set.

NEW CLUB WILL ENTER FEDERAL NEXT SEASON

TOLEDO, OHIO, May 27.—A franchise to play in the new Federal League was granted Toledo by Organizer A. Bobrick. The Ohio Club will not join the third leaguers the current season, however, but Toledo will rake together a strong team for the 1914 crusade.

Bobrick believes that many other cities will be represented in the Federal next year. Buffalo and Detroit are two cities practically sure of entering the third league zone. The Toledo officers will be elected in the near future, and plans will be made for the organizing of the Toledo Club.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THARE was a yung man caim to our house the other nite wich has jest graduated from West Point. He was a nice yung man. He was as strate as a arrow & his clothes fit him fine. He is a friend of Ma's unkel, wich also went to West Point & was shot in the back yeers ago in a Injun campaign. Ma never likes to talk much about her unkel, beekaus Pa is all the time wanting to know how it was that he got shot in the back.

The naim of the yung man was Galbraith Denton. His naim was like the naims of the army ossifers in plays & stories & he was vary handsum. The only thing I didn't like about him was that he was all the time bragging. He is the only West Point man I evver saw that bragged. Moast of them knows better wen they git thru school.

I havent the faintest idee ware they will send me, he toald Pa & Ma. My only wish is to be sent to some post ware thare is plenty of action & danger. Danger is my middel naim, he sed. The direst peril in the world is like that much custard pie to me. I think I grow taller & broader on a diet of danger, he sed. Doant you feel that way? he asked Pa.

Pa Is Modest.

I think Pa was going to say Yes, but he saw Ma grinning at him & he sed Well, to tell you the truth, I am not so full of fire & recklessness as I was wen I was a yung man. In those days, Pa sed, I cud put my hand in a mad dog's mouth with a smile, or face the charge of a en-raged bull without batting a eye, but my advanced yeers have sobered me down a bit & made me think of other & greater things than fiteing.

Well, sed the yung man, Mister Dention, it is this way with me, he sed to Pa. I do not imagine that I shal grow less feerless with the added yeers. In fack, I beeleeve that when I am a old man I will be eeven moar dauntless than I am now, & wen the grim reaper cums he will find me in the hour of Deth as I ever was in life, unafraid.

That is a fine way to be, said Pa. You will find, sed Pa, wen you go to the front, many things in acktual warfare to try yure currage sorely. In the dark days of the Civil War, Pa sed, the days that I dred to recall to any grate extent eeven now, I went thru hardships & faced dangers that wud have killed any ordinary man or made him crazy. I wonder now & then, sed Pa, that that terribul war dident maik me reely insane. Dont you, wife?

Oh, I suppoas so, sed Ma. Sumtimes I think you are a littel dippy at that.

Ma Gives Him Away.

Pa got kind of red in the face, but he kept on talking. My boy, he sed to Mister Dention, wen you have gone thru a baptism of fire such as me & my braiv comrades went thru at Missshunary Ridge or in the battel of the Wilderness, or at Shiloh or Chancellorsville, Pa sed, you will show them how reely braiv you are. One night I was surrounded by a whole company of cavalry, Pa sed. I nevver lost my superb nerve. Taking advantage of a blue mist that hung oavez a gray landscape, I mingled freely with the enemy & thus made my escape.

I suppoas yure face was blue with feer, sed Ma.

Mr. Dention beeleeved Pa until Ma sed: Lissen, Galbraith; this deer husband of mine was never in war except with me.

Far More Important.

The old man had given his son a very fair education, and had taken him into his shop. The young fellow was over-particular about a great many little things, but the father made no comment. One day an order came in from a regular customer.

"I wish to goodness," exclaimed the son, "that Jones would learn to spell."

"What's the matter now?" inquired the father cheerfully.

"Why, he spells coffee with a 'k.'"

"No—does he? I never noticed it."

"Of course you never did," said the son, pettishly. "You never notice anything like that."

"Perhaps not, my son," replied the old man; "but there is one thing I do notice, which you will learn by and by, and that is that Jones pays cash."

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to five Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain. Manager Smith tells the newspapers about his new find and the reporters print all sorts of "joshing" stories about Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

At the same time the newspaper photographers unlimbered their batteries and began bombarding everything in sight. The reporters took possession of the players' bench and passed intimate remarks with their friends in uniform. The training season of the Atlanta club was on and Manager Smith, in full charge was right in his element. Next in importance, judging by his own personal estimate to himself, was Whiskey, the colored man-of-all-work.

Ed Gillespie, the groundkeeper, had the field in fine shape, despite the severe rains of the preceding week, which had nearly driven him to drink.

Then minutes of tossing the ball sufficed.

Batting Practice.

"Batting practice!" suddenly yelled Bill Smith. "Dunn, put on your shin guards. Brady, go into the box and toss up a few. I'll just take first crack at that ball myself. Gee, boys, it feels good to get a bat in my hands again."

To the player all the joys of baseball are confined to batting and pay days, and it is believed that many a ball player would waive his salary if he could make a base hit whenever he wanted to. Every player would bat for 1,000 if he could have his way and pitchers would be driven out of the profession.

Smith took his place at the plate, a dozen negro boys spread themselves in he outfield to shack the balls; Brady went to the mound and threw up a straight ball. Smith pasted it to left and ran gleefully to first.

"A hit!" he shouted. "I'll lead the Pinch Hit League this year."

One by one the players took their turn at bat. Most of them hadn't had a club in their hands for six months. Many of them swung wildly at the ball. Their eyes had not yet become accustomed to the novelty of the situation.

Gordon Kelly, being the "kid" of the party, was the last man to face the pitcher. He assumed the same pose that filled Bill Smith with astonishment the day they first met. Whiskey crept up to the players' bench and stood grinning behind the reporters.

"Here's Billy's phenom," remarked Percy Whiting, the dean of the reportorial corps. "Watch him miss the ball a mile."

"He looks like business, anyhow," observed Murphy, a confrere.

Behind the plate Dunn spat in the big mitt and pounded it down with his right fist.

"Whatyer got, kid, something new," demanded Brady, with a grin.

"The only way I know," replied Kelly, smiling. "If I'm wrong you fellows will have to teach me something dif"—

A Great Hit.

His remarks were cut short. The ball was sailing up to the plate. Kelly stepped forward and with a tremendous swing met the sphere fairly and squarely with his bat. There was a crashing sound and the ball, describing a huge arc in the air, cleared the bull by thirty feet and fell to earth far beyond that rampant figure.

An ear-splitting yell, such as can only be emitted by a negro under the pressure of pleasureable excitement, issued from the throat of Whiskey, nearly bursting the ear drums of the three reporters seated on the bench.

"Some hitter, gem'men, some hitter; Wow!" shouted the colored attendant.

The instant he hit the ball, Kelly dropped his bat and circled around the bases with the speed of a Mott Haven sprinter. Percy Whiting jumped to his feet.

"Hey, Hypo!" he shouted to his camera man, "come here." And when that individual rushed up he whispered hoarsely:

"Snap that fellow in tweny different poses—standing up, lying down, roll over, say please, play dead and everything on the calendar; catching the ball, running the bases and at bat—especially at bat. Hustle now and we'll spring a good one in the late editions of The Georgian this afternoon."

"Can That Stuff."

"Do you hit all the ptichers like that kid?" laughed Brady, as Kelly raced over the plate.

"I don't know," replied Kelly, pleased at the question. "You see I never faced a good pitcher in my life. What I mean by that Mr. Brady," he added hastily, running out to the box in fear his answer had been misconstrued, "is that I never played a game of ball in my life and what I will be able to do with your pitching when you get in condition and cut loose is something I know nothing about, I'm afraid I will fall down hard. You see all you did was to toss up a slow straight one that time."

"That's al right, kid," said Brady. "No one ever made such a long hit off me before, and if you can meet the fast one and the curves the way you did that one they will go just as far—further if you pickle a curve ball. Stick around, kid, stick around."

Kelly thanked him for his encouraging words and walked away.

"How fast can you run, Gordon?" asked Bill Smith.

"I have done a hundred in nine and four-fifths," replied the recruit, with a laugh, "but I'm afraid the record won't stand. You see I timed myself."

"You timed yourself?" queried the manager, in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

Bill Smith looked at his "phenom" long and earnestly. He said at last, "Can that stuff, boy; can that stuff. If you don't, you'll drive me bughouse."

CHAPTER XI.

IT is to be presumed a ball player would look foolish if, just as a game was about to start, he stepped to the home plate, faced the assembled throng, removed his cap and sang the following from the prologue to "Pagliacci:"

"E voi, pruttosto che le onstre povere gabbane d' istrioni, le nostr' anime considerate, poiche noi siam uomini di carne e d' ossa, e che di quest' orfano mondo all pari di voi spiriamo l' aere!"

He would doubtless appear equally foolish if he sang the same words in English:

"Ah, think then, sweet people,
When ye look upon us, clad in our motley and tinsel
Ours are human hearts, beating with passion,
We are but men like you, for gladness or sorrow.
'Tis the same broad Heaven above us,
The same wide lonely world before us!"

There might be some scattering applause, but a vast majority of the unfeeling crowd would yell: "Cut it out!"

Fine Men Among Players.

Yet ball players are men. They are human beings, a fact often lost sight of by those who pay to see them perform. Frequently they are jeered and hooted and insulted by men of a low order of intelligence in the crowds; men who would not dare to say the same things to the players, if they met them face to face on the street.

There are those who say the life of a ball player is degrading; that baseball is a trivial profession. Yet the Governor of Pennsylvania was a professional ball player. So was "Billy" Sunday, the revivalist. So was A. G. Spalding, millionaire and near-Senator from California. So was Edward Hanlon, one of Baltimore's most successful real estate operators. So was Ted Lewis, a professor at Amherst College. So were hundreds of men who are now successful in other walks of life.

Things happen in baseball which never reach the ears of the public. There are tragedies and sorrows, joys and happiness in the national game that the outside world wots not of. All of which, in the roundabout way, leads up to the introduction to the leagues, with only a brief baseball life before him. His fingers were gnarled and distorted. His right arm was no longer the terror of base-stealers. His legs had gone back on him.

Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta club, had taken a chance and signed Long Tom to a contract. He wanted him principally to coach the young pitchers on his staff and he had an idea that the hot Southern climate might boil the old fellow out and put him into something like his real form. Long Tom was not old except in a baseball sense. He had just turned thirty-five, but in baseball youth must be served.

Made Him Jealous.

Long Tom reported for practice the first day. He arrived in the clubhouse just as the others began their practice on the field. He slowly undressed and put on a uniform, and, picking up his mitt, mask, chest protector and shin guards, walked through the runway that led to the field. He came on the scene at the very moment Gordon Kelly was standing at the plate waiting for Brady to pitch to him, and when Kelly made that tremendous drive he stood stock still and watched the ball in its flight far into right field. Then he turned his eyes on the young man and followed the tall, powerful, lithe-limbed figure as it sped around the bases. Something in the sight of the youth filled the veteran with rage and jealousy.

"That's the kind that is putting us veterans out of the business," he muttered.

He sauntered up to the group that stood around the home plate and was cordially greeted by those who knew him of old. He was then made acquainted with the young players, who, of course, while they knew him by reputation, had never met him on the ball field. Included in the latter was Gordon Kelly, who shook Long Tom's warped hand and gave the customary greeting. Morrissey eyed the other critically and remarked:

"You're the fence buster of the Southern League, I take it."

"Nothing like that," laughed Kelly, "but I'd like to be."

"I guess you would, all right," returned Long Tom.

A Star Catch.

It wasn't what he said, but the half-sneering way he said it that caused Kelly to look up quickly.

"You must be that correspondence school guy I read about in the paper. I see another paper calls you a 'cotillion leader.' Well, that's where you belong, I'm a-thinking."

Kelly flushed and a look of surprise came over his face at the sarcastic tone of Long Tom. But he merely answered "Maybe so" and walked away. There were some unpleasant things connected with baseball, he thought. He could not understand why Morrissey should go out of his way to belittle him. Long Tom's remarks were entirely uncalled for. There was no occasion for them. He finally came to the conclusion that Morrissey was of a crabbed and morose disposition. Yet he recalled having read columns and columns in the newspapers about this veteran catcher and there had been no word that would lead one to think he was other than normal in his disposition.

As a matter of fact, Tom Morrissey's disposition was naturally peaceful. He, like most ball players, had had his clubhouse scraps, but they had not been of his own seeking. They had seemed to come naturally. He had the reputation of being as game a man as ever went behind the bat, and by hard work and strict attention to business he had earned the respect of his fellow players. But his relegation to the minor leagues had seemed to work a change in him. The truth had come home to him that his baseball days were numbered. The realization of this fact came to him on this fine day in March when he saw in Gordon Kelly the perfect picture of youth. It had suddenly made him angry with himself, and, contrary to his nature, he had proceeded to vent his spleen on Kelly.

When Gordon Kelly walked away from him, Long Tom continued to keep his eyes on the young man, and he watched his every movement. At last he was interrupted by Bill Smith, who yelled:

"A little infield practice now, boys. I'll bat the grounders. The rest of you go in the outfield. Tom, get a bat and knock up some fungoes."

Bailey, Nixon and Long journeyed to the outfield and Kelly went with them. Morrissey selected a lightweight fungo bat and began sending up easy flies. He served Bailey, Nixon and Long in turn and then shouted, "Here, y'are, kid." At the same time he put all the force he could command behind his bat and drove the ball high in the air and labeled to land far over the head of Gordon Kelly.

With the crack of the bat, however, Kelly had turned suddenly and raced with all his marvelous speed toward the center field. After covering more than a hundred feet he stopped and turned again, facing the grandstand and an instant later the ball settled in his uplifted hands. He had timed the hit to a hair.

When Long Tom had signified his intention of sending up a fly ball in Kelly's direction, Bill Smith suspended his work to watch the result.

"If he gets under that one, he's a wonder," murmured the manager. Since the newspapers had spoken so facetiously about his "world-beater" he had become harassed by the thought that he had made a mistake in saying anything about the youngster until he had demonstrated his ability in a more substantial manner. There was little or nothing at stake financially and that end of it did not trouble Smith at all. But no manager of a ball club cares to have anything "put over" on him, so that he becomes the butt of the baseball public. When, therefore, Kelly made a really wonderful catch, the worried look faded from Bill Smith's face, he sighed deeply and his somewhat funereal smile shone like a candle through a hollow squash.

"Is that your correspondence school ball player, Billy?" asked Long Tom Morrissey.

"That's him. What do you think of him?" replied Smith.

TOO MANY KIDS

THEY told old Watkins, the showman, that there was no use giving his show in Kornshucks. There were too many kids there.

Old Watkins was in the free show business, and others in the same business had said to him: "The kids crowd in ahead of the old folks and monopolize the show. They absorb all the humorous offerings, and actually interrupt the doctor just at the important point when he unloads his wares, including cures for toothache, rheumatism, and colds and complexion beautifiers, at 50 cents a whack."

These kids, as far back as tradition goes, had spoiled everything in Kornshucks. They had interrupted sermons and lawn fetesand comic operas; and once when there was a sham battle the shooting could not be heard for them.

But in spite of all he was told about those kids, old Watkins went on putting up his tent for his medicine show. He merely listened politely to the people, who wagged their heads and warned him of failure. By the time his tent was up the kids filled the entire landscape back to the horizon. But he went ahead.

About fifteen minutes before the time the show was supposed to start something occurred on another vacant lot a little distance off. A man built a bonfire. Then he produced an explosion. It was no little explosion, but a regular Fourth of July affair. Then came more explosions.

Along about the third of the series the vacant lot where this was going on began accumulating kids. They came at the rate of 1,000 per bang from that time on. By the sixth bang all the kids in town were there, and only the old folks were left for the free show.

Old Watkins said: "You need not follow the kids to see what is going on there, my friends. There is nothing there but a bonfire and an ear-splitting racket. But it will keep the kids occupied and happy, and we can now proceed to have a show in peace."

"Hooray!" applauded the grown people. "Go ahead! Isn't it delightful?"

The performance proceeded. The mothers laughed and the fathers laughed. Why shouldn't they? There was no one stamping on their toes and pulling their arms off. There was no fighting and scuffing and crowding—nothing disagreeable at all. Only the refreshing jokes of the medicine man, made up as a negro or a Dutchman or some other inhabitant of the realm of mirth!

It was great! They laughed and enjoyed themselves and listened with breathless alarm to the dreadful things that might happen to them if they did not avail themselves of the providential chance to buy medicines that would heal all known diseases.

The show was over and all the money to be had was acquired by old Watkins, the free show medicine man, before the explosions and the bonfire died down and released the kids.

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

DRESSING FOR LUNCH

MRS. DRIVER (who has been conversing over the telephone on general topics for fifteen minutes)—"Now, my dear, I'll tell you what I called you up for. You know I told you about Mrs. Crittenden, the woman I met last summer at Aunt Sarah's. One of those women, don't you know, that just seem to take everyone by storm. And she has simply loads of money. But then, she's one of those people that take it so naturally, don't you know? Just like a queen in disguise, or something. And clothes! My dear, she has the most wonderful clothes you ever saw.

"Oh, yes; I didn't tell you, did I? She's coming to visit Mrs. Catlin. You know Mrs. Catlin, of course. Oh, you don't? Well, isn't that funny? She's really quite a person. I thought of course you knew her.

"Well, to go back to Mrs. Crittenden. I simply must entertain her while she's here, don't you know? Aunt Sarah would think I ought to. I met her so many times when I was there last summer. No; she didn't really give anything especially for me, but she had a tea while I was there and Aunt Sarah and I were invited.

On Dinners.

"A luncheon. Luncheons can be made so much more distinguished, don't you think, than afternoon affairs? Of course, a dinner. But then it's such an awful proposition about men for a dinner. I know my husband has to be simply badgered into his evening clothes, and I wouldn't undertake to find even half a dozen presentable men for a real dinner party. Women are so much more presentable, don't you think? And then I can entertain practically twice as many by having a luncheon. I can get eight women who make a really good appearance, and some of their husbands! Well, my dear, you know how men are.

"Oh, yes, I wanted to know if you'd lend me your salad plates. Those little beauties that your cousin Harriet brought you from New York. I thought they would add such an air to the table. If you could just have seen the wonderful things Mrs. Crittenden had on the table at her tea! My dear, it was like an exhibition of beautiful china and silver. And that reminds me—could you loan me your best knives and forks? Of course, I have plenty of knives and forks myself, but I want to have things look distinguished, you know. Oh, will you lend me the spoons, too? You're a darling.

"Oh, the guests? Well, I thought I'd have Mrs. Wrollman. I've always wanted to have her here, but somehow I never had anything that I felt was quite up to her, don't you know? She's so stunning. Then I'm going to ask Mrs. Trenton. You know her, don't you? Oh, you don't? I thought, of course, you did. She's one of the most distinguished people I know. That makes five, doesn't it, counting Mrs. Crittenden and Mrs. Catlin and me? Well, then, I must ask Mrs. Prentice and her daughter. They'll come in their new car.

"Oh, before I forget it, I want to ask if you could possibly let me have your little maid for the day. You know I want to have someone in the dressing room. If you could have seen the servants Mrs. Crittenden had at her tea! The place was simply swarming with them. Well, if you could let Mary come over that day it would be such an accommodation.

"Oh, the eighth guest? Well, I haven't quite made up my mind about that. I thought maybe I'd ask Ms. Porter, because she'd come in her new car, and it's such a beauty; but she's rather socialistic in her tendencies and goes almost everywhere. You know, I want this to be a really exclusive affair.

"What was that you said about Mary? You don't think you could let her come? Oh, that quite upsets my plans. I'm so disappointed.

"How do you think Miss Purcell would do for the eighth? She is such an interesting talker, and I must confess that Mrs. Crittenden isn't very entertaining. She's rather apt to just sit and take people in.

Not Swell Enough.

"Oh, did you say your knives and forks are in the vault? Don't you think you could get them out? I don't know what I'll do if I can't have them.

"Do you know, I've just been wondering if I might venture to ask you to come? I just couldn't make up my mind to do it, because I know how much more interested you are in your philanthropic work than you are in social affairs. I felt as if it would be such an imposition to ask you. I was so afraid you'd think you had to come, don't you know, and that you'd be bored to death by so purely frivolous an occasion. But if you would come! My dear, you've no idea how much it would gratify me!

"You don't think you're swell enough? My dear, now you're sarcastic. You know I'd rather have you than all those other people, but I really thought you wouldn't care about coming, that you'd hate to come, don't you know, and yet you'd think you had to——

"Oh, you think you'll be much more aristocratically represented by your spoons? Oh, say dear, you know I'd rather have you!"

"Hello! Hello! Hello! Oh, dear, she's run off! I suppose she's angry and I won't get any of her things. How stupid of me! Why didn't I ask her in the first place? She probably wouldn't have come, anyway, and—oh, well!"

Speedy Courtship.

A man recently in New York laid a wager that he would woo, win, and marry within an hour a young lady whom, with his companions, he had just seen arrive at the hotel where he was living.

There is nothing in the American marriage law to prevent this dispatch. He introduced himself to the damsel, she smiled upon his suit, a minister was called in, and they were married within an hour.

The wager, of no inconsiderable amount, was handed over to the bridegroom, who left with his bride the following day. It was shortly afterward discovered that the couple had long been man and wife, and that they had been traveling about playing the same trick at various hotels.

DANGER IN EATING MEAT

Statistics Show That People Who Eat Meat Are Susceptible to Typhoid Fever.

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if the patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after-effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has left masses of meat particles undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting; no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name, but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, upon receipt of price, full size jar mailed, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, Atlanta, Ga.

When One Is Very Young

"Love is a sickness full of woes,
all remedies refusing."
—Samuel Daniel.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

G. K. writes: "I am seventeen years of age and in love with a girl one year my junior. I am in love with her very much, but I don't know if she loves me. I feel as if I am getting sick, knowing not what to do."

The letter bears a date of ten days ago. If it were of yesterday, or the day previous, there might be reason for some uneasiness regarding the condition of G. K., but ten days is a long, long time, and without doubt he has gone through all the chills, the fever, the pangs, and made a complete recovery ere this.

This boy and girl love—calf love, some say—may develop into something larger, truer, finer, but the chances are all against it. A boy of seventeen thinks he has found the one love for life, and he also thinks he will never become too old to prefer pie to potatoes. He is sure that his heart will never waver from the choice of his youth, and just as sure that when he has grown old and gray, and has earned the right to spend money as he chooses, that he will at last gratify his youthful longing for nut sundaes.

Seldom Serious.

The love of his extreme youth is seldom serious, and does not even become a pleasant memory, for the reason that there were so many of them. The one picture he thinks he will always carry in his heart becomes the composite picture of many, and he forgets in a few years if Ethel had blue eyes or brown, and if it were Mary who gave him a lock of her hair, or Susan.

His emotions are so short-lived that calf love would be something to laugh about were it not for the waste of time every such love represents.

In the growing, developing, eventful and impressionable period of life, when a boy and girl should be studying their school books and laying the foundation for helpful manhood or womanhood, they moon around to the neglect of everything in life that is worth while, devoting every hope, every energy, every thought, to what they call love, but which bears no nearer resemblance to love than a worthless pebble bears to a precious jewel.

It is most regrettable that so much time is wasted in seeking for the counterfeit, instead of preparing one's self by study and training and self-control to appreciate the genuine that will come later.

Needless Waste.

G. K. has recovered from the sickness that prompted his letter long ere this. It is as if he called a physician to minister to an ailment so short-lived that it had vanished when the physician arrived. But the physician would warn him against another such attack, and explain the folly of needless pain, the waste of health and energy that could be avoided.

I can do no more. The remedy lies in his own hands. He must put such devotion into the effort to make a man of himself that there isn't time, room or inclination left for indulgence in the emotions that are not his due till he reaches man's estate.

The Five Frankforters

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Solomon, you may come in. Our tete-a-tete is quite over. We have not much in common—his Highness and I," said the old woman sadly.

The five Frankforters came quickly at their mother's summons. Charlotte came too, and stood in the doorway where for one fleeting moment she had touched the garments of the God of Love as he sped by.

"Madame! Shall I speak now?" asked Duke Gustavus with firm decision. Then he turned from the old mother to Solomon. "Sir—you know already why I am here to-day. I have the honor to beg for your daughter's hand in marriage."

With due solemnity Solomon answered: "We thank you, Duke Gustavus, for the high honor you confer on our family. We accept that honor—gratefully and gladly. I give my daughter to you."

Who shall fathom the heart of a maid? Who shall tell to what knowledge of her woman's heritage Charlotte had grown in one full hour? The girl came gently to her father and put her hand on his shoulder and looked deep into his eyes—into his soul, perhaps. "Father, you CANNOT without a word from me!"

"What do you mean?" asked her father sternly.

"I am ashamed! I know now that you arranged this yesterday—and I am ashamed."

The Crisis.

In growing anger the man asked his daughter. "How ashamed?"

"Ashamed to have been offered and accepted in this way."

"It is the custom of our people to arrange marriages in this way." Solomon's growing anger would not brook long delay—or argument.

"A hateful custom! A shameful custom!" cried Charlotte.

"Shameful?" Solomon's wrath was threatening to overwhelm his dignified manners.

"Yes. Yes—shameful. Your Highness, I will not be a party to a bargain so shameful to both of us. I thank you—and refuse."

"Do you know what you are saying?" thundered the baffled father.

"Do you know what I am FEELING? Father, do you believe that I could ever be happy without a home? For I could never find a home in that castle, with the very servants laughing at me behind my back. And the portraits on the walls staring at me and seeming to say: 'If you please you have come here too soon; wait another century or so!' No, no! If I marry, I—Grannie——" And poor little Charlotte, having fought her first battle—life's great battle for the right to happiness—fell sobbing at her grandmother's feet.

"Grannie!" Poor little banker's daughter, who has never known a mother, will you plead in vain to the dear old woman who has been the saint of your girlish dreams?"

Solomon spoke. He was very angry, but it was that cold, implacable anger that brooks no interference with his desires. "Your Highness will forgive this exhibition? My daughter will soon see reason?"

But Gustavus was to struggle slowly to-day to his full heritage of manhood. "I beg you—I insist—that you shall not persuade her against her will."

"Her will?" said Solomon. "In this family the children obey their parents."

A Boomerang.

Frau Gudula rose with quiet dignity from her great arm chair. "Then YOU obey ME—and let the child have her way in this. Duke Gustavus, I think you at last are wise enough to understand it must be so. Love is greater than any of us. No! little Charlotte, get up! Grannie won't let anyone hurt you."

Gustavus smiled. "Madame, I have looked into the souls of three women to-day—and I think I understand. But now, Baron, if I do not fulfil my part"——

Solomon spoke bitterly: "Count Fehrenberg has the money! He is half way to the castle by now."

"It will be returned to you, of course," began Gustavus, quietly, and then his old merry, devil-may-care spirit finished the sentence—"if there is any left."

Frau Gudula spoke with stately authority: "No, Duke Gustavus, be thankful you have it. Perhaps it will make a great difference in all of your life. If I know my sons, they will not be losers."

"My mother is right," said Amschel. "We have never yet taken back a signature."

"If your Highness is not too anxious to return to Neustadt Castle at once," said Nathan, "we can discuss the situation over the rest of the Burgundy. Will you come, Carl, Amschel? I think we still feel that Your Highness's personal security is what we want."

And as they discussed the salt mines and great forests that might yet make the Duchy of Taunus a wealthy province, the brothers little dreamed of the hidden wealth Gustavus was finding in his dream of a pair of eyes that had not lied. For suddenly the Duke of Taunus knew that the old home was his and he must not leave it—that a man must not abdicate for the woman he loves—but that when he is worthy to rule, then he is worthy to win even her love. And the money? Oh, Gustavus of Taunus could always find plenty of use for that! Love may work miracles, but because his sweetheart's hair is spun gold, a spendthrift does not learn to scorn all other gold!

The Real Reason.

And Solomon was thinking of the plans that had gone so sadly amiss—and of his twelve millions of florins! They might have been better invested!

"Who could have believed it!" said he. "A young fellow like that to have the best of us! Providence has helped him."

"Perhaps he is sharper than you thought," said his mother.

"Then I am all the more sorry to lose him as a son-in-law. Now—Fraudlein Charlotte—you will be so good as to give me your reasons for what you have done."

The girl moved slowly, almost as one in a dream, across to the father she had so sorely displeased. Her little scene was set and she must play out her part before her audience. Grannie was sitting again in her great arm-chair by the little breakfast table. Old Sol still shone across the rose arbor and traced a pattern of flowers and leaves on the soft green carpet. Across the room, stood her Cousin Jacob—intent, waiting—one would scarcely dare guess for what. But Charlotte and her father standing close—close in the little heart of that sunny room, were talking to each other across grim, gray seas of misunderstanding.

"Your reasons, Charlotte," said the man. This was not father talking to daughter—it was the man of business talking to the woman who had dared to balk his dearest plans.

"You know them, father. If I marry it will not be for a castle, and a grand title, and position—the Duke would have given those to me—but I want more—far more—than he could ever give me."

"Go on."

"And I must be able to give more—infinitely more than I could ever give to him. Then I would be content to live anywhere—as dear Grannie was."

The Truth Comes Out.

Solomon sank into a great chair across the room from his mother. On Frau Gudula's face was a sweet smile of memory—and hope for this younger generation whom she loved. And Jacob? Jacob was waiting—waiting with throbbing pulses and yearning eyes for that supreme thing for which he would have given the world had the world been his!

"Is there anyone to whom you could give—and who could give to you—all you mean?" asked Solomon with slow insistence. He would sift this matter of his daughter's daring disobedience to the bottom.

"I—I—believe so, father."

"Will you tell me who he is?"

The girl did not answer. Pulsing, telltale blood stained her cheeks with love's own royal crimson—but she could not lift her starry eyes.

"So! It is all arranged between you, I suppose. What is his position in life?"

Charlotte answered so low that one might scarcely hear her timid tones: "He is—a business man, I think you would call it."

"Every tailor calls himself that. What kind of a business is his?"

"Banking"—still lower.

"A banker?"

"Yes; like you." The girl wondered if this torture would ever cease—would she ever be at peace—and happy?

The ultra extreme of evening dress.

THE picture on the left shows a rich and effective model for theater or semi-evening wear. The original gown was of sulphur-colored brocaded satin over a foundation of sulphur chiffon.

The under part of the bodice is formed by a very high draped belt which rises in two points from the under arm to the chest. Shadow lace edged with beads starts from a beaded ornament at the center front and comes over the shoulder, falling in the back in long angel sleeves, which end in a beaded tassel.

The skirt is made in two pieces, draped one over the other, and is held at the right by a buckle of beads, from which starts a small round train.

For the Extremist.

The model on the right cannot be recommended to the woman who wishes to be modest. The consideration of what not to wear is almost as important as what clothes to select; and together with the extremes of the overworked Balkan blouse fashion, the wise woman will avoid the sleeveless corsage and the skirt slit to the knees. It will be easily seen how the modifications that good taste suggests to every woman will change these dresses from extremes of freakishness into really graceful dresses.

This model shows an evening gown of Persian blue and gold over a foundation of black chiffon; the bodice is plain in corselet style, and the top consists of a fichu of black chiffon which drapes over the shoulder to form small sleeves. The waist is girdled by a belt of Persian blue satin, with a huge flower of the same material in front. The plain skirt is split at the knees to show the foundation of pleated chiffon. On one side of this cut it curves up about three inches from the floor, and on the left it lengthens into a train with rounding corners.

Do You Know That—

One of the longest concrete viaducts in the world is being erected over the Cuyaroga River in Cleveland. It has a length of 2,880 feet and is a double-decker, the upper deck carrying a driveway 42 feet wide for automobiles and other vehicles, with 12 feet of "sidewalk" on each side. The lower deck will carry four street railway tracks. The clearance over the channel will be 93 feet. Some 1,500 concrete spiles are being driven to carry the nine piers nearest the water.

Experiments have been made in Germany in the use of pigeons for scouting purposes. The pigeons are provided with miniature cameras furnished with shutters that are released automatically. The birds are set free from selected points so that they fly over the enemy's fortifications. When they return home the photographs they have taken are developed, and sometimes important disclosures appear on the film.

At Loerrach, in the Black Forest, there is a lake, the bed of which remains dry from 10 to 13 years at a time, and then suddenly refills with water from subterranean springs to a depth of 12 to 15 feet. After ten years the Eichener Sea, as it is called, has again commenced to fill, and has destroyed all the crops which farmers had planted on the bed.

Value of Bluff.

In a close encounter during the American Civil war, two soldiers, one from each army, came face to face within short range.

Each put up his gun and fired, as it subsequently appeared, his last cartridge. Both missed. The bullet of one man buried itself in a tree, and the shot of the other passed through the coat of his enemy. Each man, knowing his ammunition was gone, supposed himself to be at a disadvantage.

One of them made a great show of reloading his gun, and, stepping forward, demanded a surrender. The other threw down his arms with a groan.

"If I had another cartridge I would never surrender," he exclaimed.

"That's all right," calmly remarked the captor, marching off his prisoner. "If I had another, you may be sure I shouldn't have asked you to surrender."

"Do you think $20 will be enough to give the minister?" inquired the prospective bridegroom.

"You'd better make it $25," replied the best man. "He is going to be married himself next week."

"Do you know how to run a motor car?"

"Well," replied Mr. Chuggins, "I know all about the mechanism of the thing. But I haven't yet mastered the city ordinances."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T WORRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and for some time past have been keeping company with two young men, R. and G. Now, as they are having numerous disputes over me, I decided to meet just one of them and stop their quarrels. I prefer the society of G., and I told this to R., thinking it best to be honest with him. He became very angry and said I had done him a great wrong in not telling him before. He als accused me of encouraging him. He has vowed he will cause trouble between G. and me. I am only a little girl and such a thing as love never occurred to me. GLADYS.

I think R. is blustering in the hope of frightening you. If you prefer G. you have the right to show your preference. It will be much better for you to go with neither than to try to meet both.

THEY ARE RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am seventeen and deeply in love with a girl one year my junior, whom I have known three years. Now, as my parents think I am too young to have anything to do with girls, I would like to have your advice on the matter. JACK.

Your constancy for three years is in your favor. Be constant a few years longer and this will prove your love more than any protestations.

In the meantime remember your parents know best.

KNEW A LITTLE

A gentleman traveling some time ago asked a one-armed mendicant by whom he was accosted how he lost his arm.

"It was like this, sir. The last time I went to sea we was caught in a typhoon off Cape 'Orn. The ship went over on her beam ends, so the cap'n 'e orders me an' Tom to go out on the yardarm to keelhaul the bo'sprit and ter splice the jib-boom to the mainmast. I was a-hangin' on to the top-gallant ratlin's when Tom suddenly let go his end, an' I was pitched 40 feet in the 'old."

The gentleman smiled.

"That's a capital yarn," he said. "You ought to have been a sailor," and, without giving him anything, went on his way.

Crestfallen, the beggar watched his interrogator, and saw a crossing-sweeper touch his hat most deferentially to him.

"I say, Jim, who's 'e w'en 'e's at 'ome?" he called.

"Him?" replied the sweeper. "Don't you know who that is? Why, that's Admiral Beresford."

Always Merry and Bright.

False to all the traditions of Scotland and of farming, Sandy McTavish was a supreme optimist.

Nothing ever seemed to worry him.

One day—so the story goes—during the great floods, he was found by a neighbor lucky enough to possess a boat sitting peacefully on the roof of his house, smoking his pipe while the waters rose.

"Hello, Sandy!" cried the neighbor.

"Hello, Sam!" cried the cheerful one. "All your fowls washed away, I suppose?"

Sandy nodded.

"Ay," he said; "but the ducks can swim!"

"Apple trees gone, too, eh?"

"Well, the crop would have failed anyhow."

"So will you," said Sam, "if you sit up there much longer. Why, the waters have covered your ground floor windows already."

"I know," replied Sandy, as he smoked on; "and a good thing, too. Them windows did want washin'!"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Why, Dad," he said, "she is young. She's just a little child in a hundred ways. She loves the trees and the grass and the flowers—and everything that's simple and real! And as for her heart—" His voice was low and very tender. "Why, her heart is the biggest I've ever known. It's just overflowing with sweetness and kindness. I've seen her pick up a baby that had fallen in the street and mother it in a way that—well, no one could do it as she did it, unless her soul was clean."

Gilder in Despair.

The father was silent, a little awed. He made an effort to shake off the feeling, and spoke with a sneer.

"You heard what she said yesterday, and you still are such a fool as to think that."

The answer of the son came with an immutable finality, the sublime faith of love.

"I don't think—I know!"

Gilder was in despair. What argument could avail him? He cried out sharply in desperation.

"Do you realize what you're doing? Don't go to smash, Dick, just at the beginning of your life. Oh, I beg you, boy, stop! Put this girl out of your thoughts and start fresh."

The reply was of the simplest, and it was the end of the argument.

"Father," Dick said, very gently, "I can't."

There followed a little period of quiet between the two. The father, from his desk, stood facing his son, who thus denied him in all honesty because the heart so commanded. The son rested motionless and looked with unflinching eyes into his father's face. In the gaze of each was a great affection.

"You're all I have, my boy," the older man said at last. And now the big voice was a mildest whisper of love.

"Yes, Dad," came the answer—another whisper, since it is hard to voice the truth of feeling such as this. "If I could avoid it, I wouldn't hurt you for anything in the world. I'm sorry, Dad, awfully sorry—" He hesitated; then his voice rang out clearly. There was in his tone, when he spoke again, a recognition of that loneliness which is the curse and the crown of being:

"But," he ended, "I must fight this out by myself—fight it out in my own way. . . . And I'm going to do it!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Burke Plots.

THE butler entered. "A man to see you, sir," he said. Gilder made a gecture of irritation, as he sank into the chair at his desk.

"I can't see any one to-night, Thomas," he exclaimed, sharply.

"But he said it was important, sir," the servant went on. He held out the tray insistently.

The master took the card grudgingly. As his eyes caught the name, his expression changed slightly.

"Very well," he said, "show him up." His glance met the wondering gaze of his son.

"It's Burke," he explained.

"What on earth can he want—at this time of night?" Dick exclaimed.

The father smiled grimly.

"You may as well get used to visits from the police."

There was something ghastly in his effort toward playfulness.

A moment later Inspector Burke entered the room.

"Oh, you're here, too," he said, as his eyes fell on Dick. "That's good! I wanted to see you, too."

Inspector Burke was, in fact, much concerned over the situation that had developed. He was a man of undoubted ability, and he took a keen professional pride in his work.

He possessed the faults of his class, was not too scrupulous where he saw a safe opportunity to make a snug sum of money through the employment of his official authority, was ready to truckle to those whose influence could help or hinder his ambition. But, in spite of these ordinary defects, he was fond of his work and wishful to excel in it.

Thus, Mary Turner had come to be a thorn in his side. She flouted his authority and sustained her incredible effrontery by a restraining order from the court. The thing was outrageous to him, and he set himself to match her cunning. The fact that she had involved Dick Gilder within her toils made him the more anxious to overcome her in the strife of resources between them.

After much studying, he had at last planned something that, while it would not directly touch Mary herself, would at least serve to intimidate her, and as well make further action easier against her.

It was in pursuit of this scheme that he now came to Gilder's house, and the presence of the young man abruptly gave him another idea that might benefit him well. So he disregarded Gilder's greeting, and went on speaking to the son.

Dick's Eyes Flashed.

"She's skipped!" he said triumphantly.

Dick made a step forward. His eyes flashed, and there was anger in his voice as he replied:

"I don't believe it."

The inspector smiled, unperturbed.

"She left this morning for Chicago," he said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go." He turned to the father, and spoke with an air of boastful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape and you'll be all right."

"If we only could!"

The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

The inspector, however, was confident of success, and his tones rang cheerfully as he answered:

A LITTLE SIX-YEAR-OLD DARLING IS RESCUED FROM ITS MISERIES

Little Willie Shumate, the little six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Shumate, of 168 Kirkwood Avenue, this city, suffered like thousands of other little children are suffering. He was pale and puny; in his sleep he would roll and toss; in the morning his breath was bad, and during the day he was very nervous and constantly biting his finger nails or picking his nose. He was too young to take severe medicines and the parents were simply told not to worry, because the child would get over its troubles as he grew older. But the parents did worry. They could not help it, seeing their child in such constant misery. They called at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store and obtained a treatment of Quaker Extract. The child was given this remedy regularly according to directions, and the results came to light. He took one bottle and a half of the Extract, and expelled not one but a handful of small worms, some alive and some dead. These were the cause of the child's sufferings, and Quaker Extract, by removing the cause, cured the child. These worms were two inches long each. To-day the little fellow is happy as a lark and his happiness is shared by his loving parents, his cheeks are red and rosy.

The case again proves the powers of the wonderful Quaker Extract. If you suffer from rheumatism, catarrh or stomach worms, call at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store, 29 Marietta Street, for Quaker Extract, 6 for $5.00, 3 for $2.50 or $1.00 a bottle. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. Do not fail to call to-day and obtain good health. We prepay express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

ONLY FOUR DAYS LEFT TO ENTER GEORGIAN'S GREAT PONY CONTEST

Four days remain in which contestants can be nominated for The Georgian and The American pony outfit contest. Several boys and girls are believed to be preparing to enter at the last hour possible, and with a considerable number of votes pledged, believing there will be some advantage in taking the leaders by surprise.

This, though, is not likely to avail them much. Probably they believe the leaders are napping, but nothing could be further from the truth. Besides, late entrants are losing the value of vote coupons more than fifteen days old.

Those already in the race remain closely bunched.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook so far has been the greatest vote producer. She had 59,960 votes Tuesday, while Florence Greenoe in her district has polled 40,620.

Several other contestants have passed the 40,000 mark. George Rosser, in District 1, has 41,620; Miss Robert Harbour, in District 2, 48,055. Ross Greer and Mose Brodkin, in the City Carriers' and Newsboys' race, are running neck and neck with 42,145 and 41,700, respectively.

Another close contest, though the vote totals are not so large, is the contest for school boys and girls outside Georgia, where Lena Mae Smith, Knoxville, Tenn., has 16,715 votes, and Fain E. Webb, Jr., 16,650.

Names and standing of contestants follow:

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Miller & Co.: Opinion on Government reports seem to have crystallized around 83 per cent, which, if June reports are indicative of final production, should be interpreted bearishly.

Norden & Co.: It is possible there may be further selling in an attempt to discount a good bureau report.

Sternberger, Sinn & Co.: It is still a weather market.

Newburger, Worms & Nawman: All strong spots should be taken advantage of to sell, especially the new crops.

Logan & Bryan: We favor sales on any upturn from this level.

Thompson, Towle & Co.: Market may go lower, but we do not advise selling at present.

SHORT COVERING PUTS COTTON UP

One Western Operator Covers 35,000 Bales on Narrow Market, Causing the Advance.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Poor cables, coupled with bearish weather map, led to active selling at the opening of the cotton market to-day and first prices were 1 to 3 points lower than Monday's final. Offerings were well absorbed and soon after the call the loss was made up.

During the forenoon the market was firm and under persistent buying from the large spot interests shorts covered considerable short lines. McFadden, Riordan and Parrott led the buying movement. Riordan was credited with purchasing about 12,000 to 15,000 bales of October and December, which was said to be for Wall Street. The character of the buying chased shorts to cover. Offerings were very light and scattered. It is believed by many that there is still an existing short interest in the market.

October and December displayed extraordinary firmness. October advanced 8 points and December 9 over the initial level. Other positions followed the advance moderately, advancing 3 to 7 points.

The advance came in the face of extremely bearish advices from all parts of the belt, as well as from abroad. A cable said:

"The market feels the influence of Continental buying, spinners well stocked, and notwithstanding a fair Manchester business we expect a small spot market in Liverpool for the present. Think market will be lower if crop accounts continue favorable."

Weather developments overnight were of the most favorable character. No rains fell of consequence. The map promises very favorable weather overnight; fair and warmer in the western and central States; cloudy and probably showers in the Carolinas and East Tennessee warmer.

During the afternoon session the market found good support from many conservative sources. Offerings were extremely light. One large Western operator was credited with covering about 30 bales on a narrow market, which caused October and December to advance 11@20. Liverpool cables proved held relatively steady, prices aggregated a net gain of about 8 to 13 points from the opening.

The National Ginners' Association of Memphis in its condition and acreage report placed the condition of the crop at 80.7 and gave acreage an increase of 3.2 per cent increase. The report was construed as bearish, but had practically no effect upon the market.

The market is an evening-up affair over the triple holiday period and the pending government report to follow the holidays.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 2 to 8 points from the closing figures of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Liverpool developed further weakness, showing futures this morning about 2 points lower than due. Spots, 6 points lower; sales 7,000 bales. London news says that Bulgarians fired on the Greek fleet. War between the allies nearer and this new menace distracts attention from peace negotiations.

Weather conditions continue very favorable. The map shows fair and warm weather west of Alabama, cloudy in the Atlantics and Tennessee; some rains rains in Tennessee and Western North Carolina. Indications are for cloudy weather and showers in the Carolinas, where rain is needed, and fair and warmer weather over the rest of the belt.

The market was idle during the first two hours around last night's closing prices, waiting for the weekly Government weather report at 11 o'clock, which is expected to be partly unfavorable, as it will cover the three-day cool spell of last week. Some little scalpers' buying caused a few points advance.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 27.—Reports to the Journal of Commerce state that the cotton crop is backward in the Carolinas and about normal in Tennessee. The acreage is slightly increased and the stands in general are poor. Rain was badly needed, but showers have been general recently. Some replanting in Tennessee with an increase in the acreage. In North Carolina the season is about two weeks late; prospects are much brighter since the rains. South Carolina condition may fall below last year, when it was 79. Tennessee condition shows an increase of nearly ten points over last year, when it was 73.5.

It is believed that a good deal of short cotton has been covered during the past few days and a lower market is predicted, based on favorable weather conditions and reports which are coming in. Around the close yesterday Riordan bought about 10,000 bales of October and December. McFadden brokers also bought. However, they sold old crop positions.

Dallas wires: "Texas Panhandle cloudy, rest clear; hot. Oklahoma clear; warm."

NEW ORLEANS, May 27.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable. Shows fair and warmer in western portion of the Atlantics. Cloudy and warm in the Atlantics and Tennessee. No rain except in Tennessee and parts of North Carolina, where it will be beneficial.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Favorable crop reports came from many quarters, and the cotton market declined, of course, as wave of bearish sentiment passed over the rings and low-price people discussed the outlook for declines in more or less confident tones. Ten cents for new crops was talked of as a sure thing, nine cents as a probability, eight cents as likely, and, according to one lone bear, seven cents as a possibility. All the while the bull faction kept quiet and permitted the spell of depression to run its course. At the close underlying strength seemed to develop, as shorts over the market expressed the belief that near future fluctuations would range within 20 points.

"The weather over Sunday was very favorable, temperatures were higher and, on the face of things, the crop seemed to be in a fair way to make seasonable progress. The man on the fence, while admitting the presence of much more favorable climatic conditions, was inclined to believe that the flood of favorable crop advices, coming right at the close of the period on which the Government's condition bulletin on June 2 is to be based, traces some of its inspiration to a possible need of an offset to any relatively low condition that might have been reported on May 25 from the less favorable sections."

Weld makes the condition of the crop 84.

* * *

McFadden, Parrott and Riordan were the leading buyers to-day. Mohr and Hentz probably the best sellers.

Wall Street covered through Riordan.

Riordan was also a big buyer of the new crop positions for the Pell interests.

* * *

Memphis wires: "Generally fair weather will prevail in the cotton States except in the extreme northeastern sections, where showers are likely. Good weather in the central belt will be quickly followed by warmer. No rain of consequence has fallen. Favorable map."

WEEKLY WEATHER REPORT.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Mean temperatures were normal or slightly above over the extreme eastern portion of the cotton region and in northwestern Texas. Elsewhere there was a deficiency of from one to six degrees. The weekly mean temperatures ranged from 64 to 76 degrees over the eastern, from 66 to 74 over the central and from 64 to 76 over the western portion of the cotton growing states. The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and Bentonville, Ark., and the highest, 76, at Jacksonville and Tampa, and at San Antonio and Del Rio, Texas.

Precipitation occurred throughout the cotton region, except that there was no rain at a few stations in southern and western Texas.

The precipitation was generally heaviest over the central and northeastern portion of the cotton region, amounts over those portions being generally more than two inches.

The greatest weekly amount, 4.65 inches, occurred at Donaldsonville, La.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 27.—The cotton seed oil market was barely steady at the start to-day in absence of outside support, but prices soon firmed up on local professional buying, inspired by higher oil and cotton. There was some selling of August for outside long account.

CANADIAN PACIFIC IS SOLD ABROAD

Other Issues Off on Rumor That U. S. Will Sue Anthracite Coal Trust.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Most issues shaded at the opening of the stock market to-day, although others gave a fair appearance of strength, which caused a show of irregularity in the list.

Canadian Pacific opened at 233½, for a loss of ⅝, but made a partial recovery. United States Steel common opened with a loss of ⅜, apparently on published reports of a price decline in Europe. Later the loss was made up and the issue scored a gain.

Brooklyn Rapid Transit shaded fractionally in spite of the dividend increase. Amalgamated Copper, after opening unchanged, declined fractionally.

Other issues which sold off were Louisville and Nashville ⅝; Union Pacific ⅝, Southern Pacific ⅛, Pennsylvania Railroad ¼, California Petroleum ⅛, Great Northern preferred ½ and Erie ¼. Reading shaded ⅛, but later recovered and scored a net gain of ⅛.

There was renewed pressure against St. Louis and San Francisco.

The curb market was dull.

Americans in London were irregular.

A downward movement started after the first half hour and weakness continued to

TALLULAH CASE IS TRIED ON MERITS

Demurrers of Both State and the Power Company Overruled. Testimony Is Heard.

CLAYTON, GA., May 27.—Demurrers of both the State of Georgia, plaintiff, and the Georgia Railway and Power Company, defendant, were overruled to-day in the suit to determine the ownership of the gorge at Tallulah Falls and the case was ordered tried on its merits by Judge J. B. Jones, of the Northeastern Circuit. The introduction of testimony began when court reconvened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

When court assembled at 10 o'clock this morning both sides announced ready for trial and in a short time the jury was drawn and sworn. The jurors are among the most prominent citizens of Rabun County.

The contention of the State is that the land in the Tallulah Falls gorge was never granted by the State and that land grants along the falls extended only to the brink of the gorge, thereby leaving the title to the gorge with the State.

The power company contends that the land grants on either side of the gorge extend to the river and include the gorge, and that the Legislature of 1905 passed a resolution estopping the State from laying claim to the gorge land.

No Action Yet on Street Car Service

Definite action on the part of the State Railroad Commission requiring the Georgia Railway and Electric Company to give better street-car service in Atlanta did not develop Tuesday morning as expected. A decision is expected Tuesday afternoon or Wednesday morning.

The commission also has under consideration a request of the Southern Express Company for an increase from 15 to 25 cents as the minimum on a shipment of milk. Dairymen of Fairburn, Ga., protested.

Imaginative Drunk Thinks He Is Slayer

W. W. Baughn, whose home is on Broyles Street, outlined another basement murder mystery to the police Monday night. The policeman hurried to the Austell Building and found a shattered plate glass window, but no dead man.

Before the Recorder Tuesday Baughn said he was drunk and did not remember what he said. He was put on probation.

3 Bandits Caught After Battle With Posse; 2 Wanted

MARIETTA, GA., May 27.—Frank Nation is in jail here to-day and John Goddard and a man named Haney are held prisoners at Cartersville, following a battle near Hugh, a small station between Cartersville and Marietta, with a pursuing posse in which Nation and Deputy Sheriff J. Nation and his associates are said to have attempted to hold up and rob Thomas Sorrells, telegraph operator at Hugo.

February Cleared By Chief Lanford

Chief of Detectives Lanford exonerated G. C. February, his secretary, of any genuine intention of "selling out" to Colonel Thomas B. Felder, in a statement Tuesday afternoon.

"The deal with Felder was taken up with my consent and under my instructions," said Chief Lanford. "It was done on the suggestion of A. S. Colyar, and if there is any blame to be attached to the laying of the dictograph trap for Felder I am the one responsible. I thought that if they were planning to steal that Coleman affidavit and other papers they would be caught with the goods."

No Better Chickens Than the White Plymouth Rocks

They Are as Beautiful as They Are Useful and Profitable—Are Good as They Look.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

In our estimation there are no better chickens than the White Plymouth Rocks. When carefully bred and rightly handled they are as beautiful as they are useful and profitable.

With their glossy white plumage, red comb, wattles and earlobes, and yellow legs, they look fine enough to eat, and they are just as good as they look.

I am not raising them and I have none to sell, but I know what I am talking about, for I have handled them in years past and speak from experience.

If you want to produce good ones, however, you must be mighty careful to breed from first class stock. If you are just starting in the business you can not use too much care to produce a start of the very choicest breeders. Then let your selections each year be the very best. Cull out the poor ones, both as to shape and color. Keep nothing that does not show a robust constitution, the ones with the broad breasts and backs, heavy thighs, nice and tapering, arched necks, with a low carried tail. Such a specimen is not only good looking in shape, but contains stamina worth considering. Weed out those with the slim, straight necks, long and narrow or roached backs; legs too long, standing too close together at the knees; tail slim and carried too high, forming an angle with the back. These points of defect are very often seen, and upon what some call good specimens. Of course, they are rarely all seen upon the same fowl, but frequently two or more are.

High Type Utility Fowl.

When you have the very best possible shape in a White Rock for the show room you have a utility fowl of the very highest type. There is no doubt about that. As to color, the Standard says pure white throughout, web quill and all. You see there are no qualifications. Simply white. Any departure from this is defective, such as creaminess, brass and the like; brass simply being the creaminess intensified into a positive yellow, as seen upon poor specimens of males two years old or older. This is one of the things we have to fight against in our endeavors for the best. Gray or black specks are quite common and are often distributed through the plumage in pin head sizes, and are defective according to size and number and the intensity of color. Positive black spots of any kind will disqualify. A good, pure, white plumage throughout, free from any creamy tinge, even though it contains a few minute specks, is much more desirable in every way than one that has a tendency to be creamy. Do not throw that kind away, for it is a hard matter to get a pure white one. The ear lobes should be bright red, as in all the different varieties of rocks, any permanent, or what might be called enameled white, disqualifies. Look out for this, as it only takes a mighty few of the right kind of black specks to throw them out. What the Standard terms positive white, in treating with white in specimens demanding red lobes, is a white that seems coated right on to the surface, and not a changeable white that shows white one minute and reddens the next.

Single Comb.

The comb upon both the male and female should be single and straight upon the head, not soft enough to turn to one side or the other or to wrinkle in its course from where it starts at the base of the head to the blade at the rear. A comb of five points is the one desired, although a four-point one would not be so very objectionable in the eyes of the best breeders. Look out for feathers, stubs or down on the shanks, which should be clean and free from any appearance of feathers. One can soon learn to detect the greater defects and the little ones will come to light later on in the game.

If you get a strictly first class White Rock for the fancy man of the show room, you will have a good one to breed broilers or roasters from and a good one for laying, too, for that matter.

You know it used to be a great idea to those that knew nothing about the business that a thoroughbred or standard bred chicken, one good enough to put into the show room, was some kind of a freak not suited to any other purpose, and entirely unfit for the practical man. Nothing could have been farther from the facts, and many are just now getting wise along this line, for it has been one great aim and earnest endeavor of the standard makers for years to have for their ideal chicken one that was all chicken from head to tail.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Tract of 400 Acres To Be Subdivided

Woodland Hills as a Home Neighborhood—Peachtree Widening Postponed.

Announcement was made Tuesday of perfected plans for improving one of the largest acreage tracts in the Atlanta section. W. E. Worley, J. A. Mahoney and Eugene C. Callaway, incorporators of the Woodland Hills Company, will begin in a few days to improve 400 acres between Ansley Park and Druid Hills, and probably $40,000 will be spent at once putting in 80-foot chert drives, water and sewers and tile sidewalks.

This subdivision is to be known as Woodland Hills. The developers have consulted with engineers as to topography, and plats of the property will be out shortly. The lots will be large, and the owners expect to sell them all and to have a thriving home community in three years.

The last addition to this tract was made ten days ago, when 110 acres was bought for $40,000. There will be a combined frontage of about 20 miles. The tract is on the Cheshire Bridge, East Paces Ferry and Williams Mill Roads and Highland and Moreland Avenues.

Widening Considered.

The Finance Committee of Council will meet Friday to fix up the budget covering improvements for street work and other city improvements, and will at this time take up the matter of setting aside $5,000 for widening Peachtree from Harris Street to Forsyth Street. The citizens' committee went before the Finance Committee Monday afternoon and outlined its request.

Extensive improvements hang on this project. E. W. Alfriend and Mrs. J. B. Whitehead expect to erect a twelve-story office building between Cain and Harris Streets, and another property owner has plans for a five-story structure.

Building on Wesley Avenue.

Wesley Avenue, to the west of Peachtree Road and a few rods north of Peachtree Creek, is beginning to rival Pace's Ferry Road as a situation for country homes. Among the home owners on the thoroughfare are General Clifford L. Anderson, Clark Howell and David Woodward, and now comes J. C. Chipley, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, with announcement that he has started a residence. Mr. Chipley's house will be two stories high and will cost approximately $15,000.

Several other property owners, it is said, will build on Wesley Avenue during the summer.

Warehouse Is Completed.

Colonel John J. Woodside's storage warehouse No. 3, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been replaced with a more complete structure. In a few days the warehouse will be completed and ready to be used again. The building is located on Butler Street and has a great amount of floor space.

Pryor Street Building Finished.

The building at 96 South Pryor Street, built for Harry G. Poole, the undertaker, has been completed and is now occupied by the concern. This structure cost approximately $25,000 and is one of the handsomest of the smaller buildings on Pryor Street.

St. Charles Cottage Bought.

Mrs. Willie Mae Levi has bought from W. H. Craig, through the Ralph O. Cochran Company, a six-room cottage at 174 St. Charles Avenue, 60 by 190, for a price not named. This property is between Ponce DeLeon Place and Bonaventure Avenue.

Building on Ponce DeLeon.

People traveling out Ponce DeLeon Avenue of late have been impressed with the great amount of building that is being done on that thoroughfare and on tributary streets. In the neighborhood of Ponce DeLeon and Barnett Street and Bonaventure Avenue, for instance, twelve or fifteen new houses are either building or recently completed. It matters not which way you turn, say the realty men, there are more houses in process of erection than ever before in the city's history, with prospects for more in the future than at the present.

Fresh Bit of Acreage.

A 28-acre tract on Pace's Ferry Road that has been in the hands of the present owners for 50 years has been placed on the market at $13,500. This is between "Woodlawn," Robert F. Maddox's estate, and the Howell Mill Road. It has been listed with a well-known real estate agency, and has been suggested for subdivision.

Speech and Thought Make Our Lives

Everything That We Do Is Accomplished in Time BY THOUGHT. Thinking Is Your Only Real Power; Time Is Your Real Property—and There Is Little of It.

Copyright, 1913.

We human beings ceased to be animals and became MEN when we first used thought in place of brute strength.

At some distant day in our development the animal that preceded us here made up its feeble mind that there was something better than strength, teeth and claws, and began to use its little brain.

This animal, our ancestor, the so-called pithecanthropos, or monkey-man, observed the saber-toothed tiger ripping open the stomach of a monster three times its size, watched the mammoth ploughing through swamps, crushing down trees, observed the great reptiles and all other proofs of brute force, and, without realizing it, this ancestor said vaguely to himself:

"I can't compete when it comes to teeth and claws, weight and bulk. I am a feeble thing in this jumble of power and battle. I must THINK the way out."

And so our real human life began.

Our ancestor with a forehead one-quarter of an inch high, a jaw that stuck out as far as the jaw of a gorilla, with teeth bigger than any of those of any bulldog, and with long arms dropping below the knees, that could crush a man of to-day with ease—this old ancestor of ours decided that he would get out of the battle for supremacy of muscle and teeth and see what could be done with the brain AND WITH THINKING.

You can imagine how the thinking process started.

It was hardly real thought at first, just a kind of intelligent impulse. Our ancestor sat up in a tree rubbing his nose and looking at the saber-toothed tiger that couldn't climb.

He saw the shining teeth, six inches long perhaps, and he didn't like the looks of them.

Later, when the tiger was gone, he climbed down and picked up a sharp flint, ten inches long, heavier, sharper and harder than the tiger's tooth.

He held this in his hand, struck his brother with it, killed the brother, and felt highly satisfied with his intellectual accomplishment.

He had discovered that a tooth made of stone, held at the end of an arm four feet long, could do as much damage as the tooth of a tiger.

So he fastened his sharp flint to the end of a piece of wood, sat in the tree, stabbed the tiger in the back as he passed, broke his backbone, ate his flesh, took the teeth to make implements and ornaments for himself—and so began the thinking human race.

Later man used explosive dynamite shells in place of sharp flints, he dwelt in skyscrapers in place of holes in the rocks, he used flying machines in place of canoes dug out of a log.

BUT ALL THE TIME HE WAS A THINKING ANIMAL INSTEAD OF AN ANIMAL RELYING ON STRENGTH, TEETH, MUSCLE, THICK HIDE, CLAWS.

And every step that he gained in his upward climb toward control of the earth and dominion over the animals was gained by the THOUGHT that was started when he made up his mind to use the sharp flint and conquer the long white tooth.

All of this leads to the thinking man, sitting on the ash barrel in the picture at the top of this page.

He is a descendant of all the thinkers of three hundred thousand years past.

He comes in an unbroken line from the old half monkey, half thinking creature that discovered the possibility of conquering animals stronger than himself.

And this thinker on the ash barrel in poverty, in anxiety, in remorse, is unfortunately the type of many of those—more than half, probably—who represent the so-called "civilization and marvels of achievement."

This picture is a copy, simply made, of Rodin's great statue, "Le Penseur."

In his statue of thought Rodin shows the man of power seated on the rock solving his problems by thought.

In the picture that we print on this page the artist shows the man of sorrow and of weakness, pitifully trying to use for his betterment and for his defense the power which has been man's only weapon.

Readers, whether you be old or young, realize NOW that your salvation, your hope, your chances in life, are all in the thinking power hidden away in your head.

How much will you use that power of thought?

How long are you going to wait to use it efficiently?

To what extent can you make thought, recently acquired by men, control the animal forces and passions that date back millions of years to our earliest ancestors of the days when this earth was young?

Are you going to use your power, your health, your clear mind, and your will NOW to solve your problems and protect yourself, and be a benefit to the human race, or are you to wait, and waste, and wonder, and delay, until it is too late, as with this man?

The Thinker

He Thinks Hard, Bitterly—But Too Late. Thought Conquers and Solves Life's Problems, but Only When the Thought Controls the Power of the Body and the Mind. When the Power is Gone, THOUGHT COMES TOO LATE. (SEE EDITORIAL.)

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Ill Temper

If Allowed to Progress in Children, Its Effect Is Felt in Later Generations to Destroy Often the Happiness of Many Homes.

Written For The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

SOMETHING like one hundred and twenty-five years ago, a little girl was born in New England. She was pretty and bright, and her parents made much of her; and she soon became a spoiled child in the way of disposition.

She was irritable and fault-finding; and these tendencies were not corrected, but excused on the ground that "Abbie was high-strung," and "smart," and "not like other ordinary children."

She married, young, a man of rare sweetness of character, and with an inexhaustible patience. He was devoted to his handsome wife, and she made him a very good consort, so far as her industry and economy and loyalty went.

But she worried him with her fault-finding and irritability.

He made the great mistake of establishing his wife with his relatives, and all her quarrelsome and irritable tendencies were, of course, aggravated.

She bore him six children, and as she had never been taught anything of the laws of prenatal influence, she fretted and complained about the increasing numbers of her children, before their birth.

Erred in Telling Them.

And after they came into life and she grew to love them she made the great error of telling them how unwelcome they had been. This was especially true of the second child, who was scarcely a year younger than her older sister.

This second child inherited all her mother's irritable characteristics and prided herself upon being extremely high-spirited and capable of "answering back" with some sharp retort.

She, too, was excused, and even lauded for her peculiarities.

She was regarded as "out of the common" and "just like Abbie."

When she married her husband did not possess the amiable qualities of her father, and, of course, discord soon prevailed.

Children came into this home, and so a second generation was reared in this unfortunate atmosphere.

The grandmother lived until she reached the age of ninety-four, and with each year her disposition grew more unpleasant.

When the daughter visited at her old home there was always bickering and scolding and quarrelling.

And into these family fusses three generations were drawn.

Then came a fourth generation, after the grandmother died, and this fourth generation was brought up under the same conditions, and to-day this generation is cursed with the original uncurbed temper and unhappy tendency to find fault of the first great-grandmother, which came down through the second grandmother and the father, and was, like a river, fed from streams running into it from other branches, which all became corrupted when the original stream was approached.

Have Wrecked Homes.

Sisters have become enemies, brothers quarrel; jealousy, ill temper, gossip, back-biting and all manner of bad habits, resulting from uncontrolled temper, have destroyed homes, and in some of these homes a fifth generation of little children is becoming infected.

And all this might have been averted, and heaven, instead of hell, been established in the homes of four generations had the first child been taught self-control, good-will, amiability, gentle manners, the religion of kindness and courtesy.

All of these women had kind hearts toward the poor, sick and needy. They were always "good neighbors" when there was trouble in other homes.

But they never learned the strength and power which lies in silence, and they never learned the beauty of the soft answer which turneth away wrath.

The two original sinners (for such uncontrolled tempers are sinful) were women of great strength of intellect and of dominating personalities, therefore, their influence was far-reaching and powerful. In many of their descendants the unpleasant qualities have taken the form of petty meanness and ignoble nagging toward all those with whom they are thrown in close association.

Yet the tendencies can all be traced back to the first source.

Teach Them Kindness.

If your child, madam or sir, shows wonderful "spirit" and is very "high strung" and brilliant with repartee in the way of the quick retort, do not laugh and applaud and think you have something to be proud of, something out of the ordinary.

Teach your children the religion of kindness, the religion of gentle voices, amiable manners, generous judgments and self-control.

Make them understand early how vulgar is uncontrolled temper and how ill-bred the sharp rejoinder.

Do this for their own sakes and the sakes of unborn generations.

.:. Housewives and the Art of Housekeeping .:.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE reign of the good housekeeper is only just beginning. Every month sees some new invention that helps to diminish the slavery of housework. Housekeeping has for ages been an art, and, as with all arts, its practitioners range in their abilities from mediocrity through fair talent up to positive genius.

Now housekeeping is becoming a science, and science has this advantage over art—that it tends to equalize abilities by bringing results through mechanical and automatic methods which anybody can employ.

The French Kitchen.

For a plain male citizen, who knows little about the secrets of the kitchen, it is a wonderful revelation to read the articles in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE and to look at the devices there shown which relate to this fast-growing science. Almost everything about a house can now be done with half the expenditure of labor and time formerly required. To be without this knowledge and these inventions is not merely to be behind the times, but it is to live harder, less well and more expensively than there is any necessity for.

The kitchen is the stomach of the house, and upon the way in which it performs its functions, the welfare of the whole establishment depends. My attention has just been called to a model French kitchen. All the world has long looked up to France as the ideal home of culinary art, and it is evident that she does not intend to be left behind in the modern transformation of this art into a science.

The kitchen has also been called "the theater of the French housewife," and this theater is becoming really a fascinating place with its display of electrical ranges, scientific lamps, automatic grinders, mills and churns, Pasteur filters, coffee makers, ice cream freezers, devices for easily getting rid of waste substances, porcelain sinks as white and clean as Alpine snow, scouring machines, filters, convenient cupboards, and all the glittering array of nickel, silver, copper, aluminum, bronze and graniteware utensils that fill the room with bright reflections.

Not to Visit, But to Help.

One of the great charms of a French kitchen is that the mistress is frequently to be seen there, not merely as a visitor, but as a helper and director. She inspires her servants by her presence, and by her advice. She does not pretend to live in another world than theirs. They know that she understands their business as well as they do themselves, and even better. She can take their place if necessary. This is as true of the rich as of the relatively poor.

The economy of the French people has long been world-famous, and nowhere is it more brilliantly displayed than in the kitchen. A French family, as has often been said, could live, and live well, upon the waste of many American families. And the exercise of this economy—this art of getting all the good out of things—fascinates those who practise it. It has the charm of all applied knowledge. They not only get all that is good—they make the good better. I know many a little country inn in France where, for three or four francs, wine included (a franc is worth 20 cents), one can have a really better meal than can be had in Atlanta for two or three dollars.

And yet meats, and similar things, cost about as much in France as they do here. The secret lies in economical management and good cooking. It is no wonder that a first-rate French cook can command in New York a salary of $5,000, or even more. And if he, or she, retains on this side of the Atlantic the economical skill learned at home, more than half the salary is saved to the employer.

To Learn Economy.

One thing to be noticed in the French kitchen is that there is usually no false economy in the choice of apparatus. Everything is of the best, or at least good and substantial. The kitchen, in its way, is as well furnished as the parlor. You may be sure that this spells economy in the end, for if it did not it would not be found in France.

I have often been surprised on entering a house in France, which, in America, might be taken as the abode of people in very humble circumstances, to find a far larger and better-stocked kitchen than many rather pretentious houses possess here, accompanied by a culinary skill in its mistress which would earn her a large salary on this side of the ocean.

No doubt we shall learn this economical wisdom in good time—and the sooner the better.

I SHOULD WORRY

By WEX JONES.

IT used to be jolly to chatter with Polly
On fashion and frivol and froth of the day;
But now it's sheer folly talking to Polly,
For she puts "I should worry" to all that she'll say.

"I should worry like an onion"
(Here she laughs, she feels so tickled),
"I should worry like an onion
And discover that I'm pickled.
I should worry like a saw"
(How that "worry" gets me riled!),
"I should worry like a saw
Till my teeth have all been filed."

You hear all the flappers, tongues going like clappers
Bandy about this ridiculous phrase;
Prue, Polly and Lizzie will jabber you dizzy,
Twisting it round in its different ways:

"I should worry seven days
And become a little weak."
"I should worry," "I should worry,"
Every time they speak.
"I should worry like a fish
And get the hook."
"I should worry like a gumdrop
And go North with old Doc Cook."
"I should worry," "I should worry"—
Phrase that sets me in a flurry,
Phrase that sets my goat a-scurry—

Oh, well, I should worry.

CONLEY CONFESSION IS EXPECTED

T. R. Known as Drinker, Defense Declares

CONLEY WAS IN FACTORY ON DAY OF SLAYING

Admission that he was in the National Pencil factory on the day of the murder of Mary Phagan was gained from James Conley, the negro sweeper on whom suspicion has turned, after cross-examination by detectives at police headquarters.

The negro, who became the center of attention with his amazing story that Leo Frank had told him to write the death notes, changed his narrative again to-day. Confronted by E. F. Holloway, a foreman in the plant, he admitted having been in the factory after having steadily maintained that he was on Peters Street between 10 and 2 o'clock that fatal Saturday and at home all other hours of the day.

Says Confession Is Near.

Holloway, after leaving the secret grilling at which the admission was obtained, declared he was sure it was only a matter of hours before Conley would confess. He asserted that if he had been allowed to put questions to Conley he could have gotten important information.

The police questions were, of course, all put with the idea of gaining information against Frank.

Chief Lanford had announced that he would go before Judge Roan with a request for an order allowing him to confront Frank with the negro, so that Conley's statement would be admissible in court. Lanford, however, failed to carry out his plans, although he would not admit they had been abandoned.

Found Negro Falsified.

Conley told the officers when he was first arrested that he could not write. Later they found releases that he had written for watches, and he admitted he had been lying. He gave them an address on Tattnall Street when they took him in custody. It later was found that he had not lived there for six months or a year.

In his affidavit of last Saturday he swore that he wrote the notes found by the body of the dead girl at the dictation of Leo Frank the day before the crime. Tuesday night he repudiated this affidavit and said that it was on Saturday that he wrote them.

The result of this series of lies and misstatements was that suspicion was gradually shifting from Leo Frank to Conley in spite of the attitude of the police. The culminating action that pointed the accusing finger in his direction was his new statement of Tuesday night, which was utterly at variance with his affidavit in its most essential point—the date.

With his first affidavit repudiated and worthless, it will be practically impossible to get any court to accept a second one. If a second one is offered action will be taken at once to impeach it and it is regarded as most unlikely that it would be accepted in the circumstances.

Now Changes Date.

In his original affidavit Conley swore that he wrote on Friday, April 25—the day before the murder—the notes which he believes were found by the body of Mary Phagan. He swore that he wrote them at Frank's dictation. In the revised statement that he

T. R. AVERTED JAP WAR WITNESS CLAIMS

John Callan O'Laughlin, Testifying in Libel Suit, Declares There Was Real Danger.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 28.—That there was very serious danger of war with Japan during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt and that the Chief Executive met the danger and averted war by sending a fleet around the world was the statement of John Callan O'Laughlin, a Washington correspondent of a Chicago newspaper and a commissioner to the Tokio Exposition, appointed by President Roosevelt.

O'Laughlin was a witness for the Colonel in Roosevelt's $10,000 libel suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.

"Did you seriously mean that there was danger of war with Japan during Roosevelt's administration?" asked Attorney Belden, who was cross-examining O'Laughlin.

"There was very serious danger," replied the witness.

Settled Question "Right."

"Colonel Roosevelt met that danger. "Obviously Japan would not start with a fleet in the Pacific waters. We settled the immigration question right then."

The witness emphasized the word "right."

O'Laughlin was asked by Attorney Belden if he had been an emissary to arrange for the reception of Roosevelt by the Pope and the King of Italy when the Colonel was in Rome. O'Laughlin said he had not.

The jury was sent from the room while the attorneys argued on the admitting of testimony concerning published reports about Colonel Roosevelt's drinking. Attorney Belden said that the defense wished to show that reports that Roosevelt drank were general in 1912.

"Did Not Deny Reports."

"We shall show," he said, "that this defendant heard those reports and that this plaintiff did not deny them. Roosevelt has been the most talked of man in this country, and if reports of his drinking have been so common as we shall show, he could not be damaged in any sum by the publication of such a report in a little country paper.

MOTHER AND GIRL DEAD; SEEK SON; MISSING

Sheriff Sees Slaying Mystery in Burning of Mrs. S. C. Stevens and Daughter.

That the mother and girl whose charred remains were found in the ruins of their home seven miles southeast of Atlanta early Wednesday morning were murdered and the house set afire by the murderer in an effort to obliterate all evidence of the deed was the astounding declaration made by Sheriff J. A. McCurdy after an investigation of the tragedy.

Positive identifications of the two women as Mrs. S. C. Stevens, 40 years old, wife of William Stevens, a 70-year-old Confederate veteran now in Chattanooga at the reunion, and their adopted daughter, Nellie Stevens, 13 years old, were made by neighbors.

Conditions leading up to the theory that the deaths were the result of murder are these:

The charred bodies of the women were found lying in the center of a bed room in the rear of the cottage. Near at hand were the remains of a shotgun.

Mrs. Stevens' skull had been crushed in. A hoe found in what had been the hallway leading from the room is believed to have been the instrument used to strike the woman as she arose from her bed, with the shotgun, to meet the intruder.

That the door of the room was open at the time of the encounter is believed to add another link to prove the affair a murder.

The method in which the daughter met her death could not be ascertained, owing to the charred condition of her body.

Mrs. J. H. Stevens, a well-known resident of the country about Constitution, Ga., less than ten miles from Atlanta, and her adopted daughter were found burned to death in the ruins of the Stevens place on McDonough Road Wednesday morning.

Mystery surrounds the tragedy, as no one has been found who saw the blaze. The house was in ruins when the discovery was made.

Mrs. Stevens was a sister of Police Sergeant Whatley, of Atlanta, who was summoned by telephone. Her husband, a respected veteran of the war between the States, was in Chattanooga attending the reunion.

The girl who shared the older woman's fate was 14 years old.

A Mr. Nelms, just starting out on his milkman's route, discovered the bodies, burned almost beyond recognition, in the ruins of what had been an eight-room house.

Chief Beavers started with Sergeant Whatley for the scene of the tragedy in an automobile.

STATEMENTS OF NEGRO CONLEY CONFLICT

made to the police Tuesday night, Conley declared that instead of writing the notes on Friday, he wrote them Saturday about four minutes before 1 o'clock.

His second statement is impeached by the fact that the negro has repudiated his first affidavit. It may be impeached further by the development that at the time he says Frank was dictating the notes to him Frank, as a matter of fact, was on another floor talking to Harry Denham, Arthur White and Mrs. White.

Frank and the other three persons all have testified that it was within a few minutes of 1 o'clock that Frank came upstairs and said that he was going to leave the building and that if the three did not wish to be locked in the building they would have to leave also. Mrs. White left at 1 o'clock Frank and Denham and White remained in the building.

The negro in making the second statement described exactly who was in the building at the time, on what floors they were and what they were doing, indicating that he must actually have been there or else has read the papers very carefully. Until his second statement he had denied repeatedly that he was in the factory on the day of the crime, and had told the detectives of his whereabouts at various times of the day.

Unable to Prove Whereabouts.

He was unable, however, to corroborate his declaration that he was on Peters Street between 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He could name no one he had seen between those hours.

Despite the new developments, the detectives, of course, stand firmly by their theory of Frank's guilt. They assert that they have the testimony of four handwriting experts that the writing on the notes found by the body of Mary Phagan positively is that of Frank. This evidence is lessened in importance by the fact that three other handwriting experts have declared as positively that the writing is that of Newt Lee, the negro night watchman in the pencil factory.

So far as is known no expert comparison has been made between the notes and the handwriting of Conley. If such a comparison has been made the results have not been announced.

The detectives are placed in a peculiar position by the new statement of Conley. If they are to believe a word of his statement that he wrote the notes at Frank's dictation they are forced to discredit absolutely the testimony of their four handwriting experts that the notes are those of Frank. If they accept the testimony of the experts, on the other hand, they must take the position that both the first and second statements of the negro are worthless and have no bearing on the mystery.

Contradicted by Wife.

Maggie Conley, wife of James Conley, whose confession that he wrote the mysterious notes found at the side of murdered Mary Phagan at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, has developed into one of the most puzzling incidents of the case, made a statement to a Georgian reporter on Wednesday morning bearing on the whereabouts of her husband on the afternoon of the murder that is utterly at variance with statements made by Conley.

Conley has repeatedly told detectives that on the evening of April 26, the night Mary Phagan was murdered, he left his home at 172 Rhodes Street at 6 o'clock and went downtown, remaining there until 8, when he returned home.

The woman who says she is his wife told a Georgian reporter that Conley came home at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of April 26, and REMAINED AT HOME UNTIL MONDAY MORNING AT 8 O'CLOCK, APRIL 28, when he went to work at the pencil factory. He returned home about an hour later, she said, and told her he didn't have to work that day, because a white girl had been murdered.

Her Story of His Actions.

The woman told the following story of her husband's action on the day of the murder:

"Jim left home about 9 or 10 o'clock Saturday morning and said he was going downtown. He came back somewhere in the neighborhood of 2 o'clock, and told me he had been at the near-beer saloons on Peters Street with a gang of niggers. I was in the kitchen when Jim came in the front door, and I heard him moving around in the front room several minutes before I called him. Then he began joking me and fooling like he always does. We sat in the front room and talked a little while and then I went back in the kitchen.

"I heard Jim moving around after I went into the kitchen, and I thought he was going out again. I went into the front room and couldn't see Jim. I reached over to pick up a shawl that had fallen to the floor, and Jim poked his head over the top of the dresser. He had been hiding behind it, just to see what I would say. We sat around all afternoon and talked, and Jim didn't leave the house any more until Monday morning, when he went to work."

Not Seen by Neighbors.

The woman said her husband did not appear nervous or excited when he came home on the Saturday afternoon of the murder. She said he is always fooling and joking, and was even a little more playful than usual. She said also that he said nothing to her about having written any notes for Mr. Frank, and said she had never heard him speak of his employer.

No negro could be found in the neighborhood where Conley lives who had seen him at home Saturday afternoon.

Hattie Crawford, a negress, who lives at 170 Rhodes Street, next door to Conley, declared that she was at home all Saturday afternoon and Saturday night and that she did not see Conley. The first time she saw him was Sunday morning, when he was sitting on a stump in his back yard, she says.

Accuse Negro Conley.

In an effort to discover how the negro Jim Conley, now the center of attention in the Phagan mystery, was regarded at the National Pencil factory by the girls employed in the trimming and finishing departments where Conley worked as a sweeper, two Georgian reporters late Tuesday afternoon interviewed six forelaides and some 50-odd girls at the factory, 37-39 South Forsyth Street.

Without exception, the ordinary workers said that they had no opportunity to ever judge Conley's character, as they were too busy and there were foreladies there to protect them.

Mrs. G. W. Small, a forelady of 37 West Fair Street, said that before the murder of Mary Phagan the negro Jim Conley was slow moving and negligent of his duties, taking his time about performing any task he was asked to do.

"After the Phagan murder," said Mrs. Small, "I noticed a great change in the negro. He did the things I told him to do with much more promptness. His whole demeanor changed.

"I never did trust him," declared Mrs. Small, "and he knew it. I certainly believe that if anyone working in this factory did that terrible deed it was the negro Conley. I said from the first that it was no white man's job, and I have always believed that Mr Frank was innocent."

Several of the young women, however, defended the negro as a fairly good workman.

All Think Frank Innocent.

Every employee of the National Pencil factory, without exception, scouts the idea that Leo Frank had anything to do with the fate of Mary Phagan. Each one is loyal and is yet to be convinced that he had any part in the crime of which he now stands accused.

One woman who is employed in the finishing department asserted that the negro Conley was impudent several time.

A number of the girls stated that they had smelled whisky on the negro. Miss Eulah May Flowers told of her experience when she went to the storage room one evening and there stumbled over Conley, who was dead drunk, stretched on the floor.

E. F. Holloway, the timekeeper and foreman of the pencil factory, says he had just about made up his mind to discharge Conley when the crime was committed, but Conley showed improvement and that he kept him on, until he caught him washing the shirt which caused his arrest.

Deductions Damaging.

Making deductions from Conley's first affidavit, here are a few facts which tend to throw suspicion on the negro:

Conley says that Frank, after dictating the notes, said to him: "Why should I hang?" If Frank intended committing a deed which would warrant hanging it is preposterous to hold that he would so commit himself to as unreliable a person as a negro.

Conley did not say he had written the notes until after he had lain in jail for weeks. Yet, his confession was not in the least incriminating to himself.

Conley made his statement not until Frank's case was under investigation by the Grand Jury. He made it voluntarily then.

Frequently Intoxicated.

Conley, the negro, was brought into close association with the factory girl employees. As sweeper he brushed the refuse from beneath the chairs in which they sat. As elevator conductor he operated the cage, crowded with girls, up and down the shaft.

Conley frequently was intoxicated while on duty.

On the afternoon of the murder Conley's story as to his whereabouts lack corroboration. The negro states that he was on Peters Street for at least two hours, yet he can give the name of no one whom he saw there during that time to bear out his statement.

At the first address Conley gave as his home it was found he had not lived there for a year.

had read the newspaper or heard the report in question. If Mr. Newett takes the stand and swears he had heard or read such reports and believed them to be true, they would become pertinent."

T. R. Coins New Expression.

"Bully, plus," was the new expression coined by Colonel Roosevelt this morning to describe his state of physical well-being, following a long walk along the shores of Lake Superior and a hearty breakfast. He arose early and appeared in excellent spirits when court opened.

John Callan O'Laughlin, Washington correspondent for a Chicago newspaper, the first witness called, devoted the early part of his testimony to answering questions relative to the intimacy of his friendship with the former President.

Prior to the examination of O'Laughlin the counsel for the defense spent three hours going over 200 depositions they expect to present, and discussing the points they hope to bring out in support of the tation in Marquette County, in this country and in the civilized world. In the plaintiff's bill, he asserts that his reputation for sobriety is well known throughout the 48 States of this country, and that his reputation for sobriety was good before the publication of this article by the defendant.

Disclaims Any Malice.

"Mr. Pound is an able lawyer. No lawyer in Michigan has tried more libel suits than he has. He knew that damages could be increased by reason of malice behind the publication. We will show there was no malice.

"In our answer we set up that there was no malice and that publication was made in good faith and that the defendant had been told and believed reports of Roosevelt's drunkenness were true.

"Dr. Abbott recognized the existence of such reports and deemed it worth while to answer them in The Outlook. Therefore, we have a right to show the existence of these reports as showing good faith and absence of malice on the part of this defendant."

"We shall not claim," said Attorney Pound, "any vindictive or punitory damages. We ask only actual damages such as would accrue in the absence of express malice. This is by direction of the plaintiff."

Claim Actual Damages.

"That means," said the court, "only actual damages, which may be 6 cents or $60,000."

"That is correct," said Mr. Pound.

"Then," said Attorney Belden, "in the absence of the demand for a retraction, no damages may be asked by way of punishment. But counsel has already charged malice to this jury and we can not eliminate these impressions from their minds. Therefore, we have a right to show there was no malice and we purpose to offer testimony of men of standing to show this general reputation.

"Precedents are few, for men of Roosevelt's standing and prominence have seldom brought such suits, but we have a somewhat parallel case in that of Dailey vs. Kalamazoo Publishing Company in the Supreme Court."

Cites Parallel Case.

He then cited the case.

Colonel Roosevelt held a whispered conference with Attorney Van Benschoten.

"Mr. Belden and ourselves are not very far apart," said Van Benschoten, addressing the court. "Newspapers, however, do not always tell the truth and reports can not be admitted unless it is first shown that Mr. Newett editorial in which Newett stated that Roosevelt "was drunk, not infrequently." Judge Flannagan also announced there will be no session of the court on Memorial Day, but that a full day's work would be done Saturday.

Known Him Many Years.

O'Laughlin testified that he came to know Colonel Roosevelt when the latter was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in 1897; that Roosevelt dissuaded him from enlisting at the time of the Spanish-American War because he (O'Laughlin) "was married and had no money to keep his wife," and that during the seven years Roosevelt was President he saw him morning, noon and night and at the shaving hour. It was Roosevelt's custom, he explained, to receive callers while he was being shaved each morning.

Following the expiration of the Colonel's term as President, the correspondent continued, he met him at Khartoum upon his return to civilization from Africa; accompanied him on the greater part of his Continental tour, and upon his return to the United States met him frequently until the New York campaign in 1910 and the swing around the country in 1912, when he was with the Colonel's campaign party. His testimony regarding Roosevelt's drinking follows:

Denies Seeing Him Drunk.

Q. From that acquaintance what can you say as to whether or not you ever saw him under the influence of liquor? —A. Not only have I never seen him under the influence of liquor, but such a suggestion seems to me silly.

Q. Ever see him drink?—A. I have seen him drink a small stem glass of champagne at dinners. He never drank more than one glass.

Q. What is the Gridiron Club?—A. An organization of newspaper men in Washington, organized to receive distinguished men. It gives two dinners a year.

Q. Are there official dinners in Washington?—A. Four dinners and five receptions given by the president are official.

Main Witness Faces Arrest.

James Martin Miller, depended upon as the chief witness for the defense, will not appear on the stand, it was learned to-day. Instead a deposition by him will be read to the jury.

When it was announced that Miller would testify at the trial that Colonel Roosevelt was intoxicated at a dinner given for former Speaker Cannon, a telegram came to Marquette requesting that Miller be arrested and detained until an officer could arrive from New York, where a charge of grand larceny had been made against him.

It was then announced that Miller's deposition would be read in court, and that Miller would remain at his home in Minot, N. Dak.

WILSON OPPOSES CURRENCY FRILLS

President Reported to Have Told House Leaders to Use Common Sense.

WASHINGTON, May 28—President Wilson has confided to House leaders, according to information obtained to-day, that he wants currency reform legislation next month conducted along common sense lines. He believes too much expert opinion will tend to becloud fundamental questions.

Prominent New York City bankers are said to have approved the essentials of a draft of the bill, although not being willing to accept all the details.

The President, it is stated, will be satisfied if they agree on the main features.

Only two members of the Cabinet, Bryan and McAdoo, have been consulted, according to reliable information. The former is said to have contributed several valuable ideas to the bill on the issuance of notes by reserve associations.

WOMAN WRITES IN DEFENSE OF LEO M. FRANK

Mrs. Rebecca Brannon Declares Her Belief in Innocence of Factory Superintendent.

Mrs. Rebecca C. Brannon, 356 Forrest Avenue, a well known Atlanta woman, has written a letter to The Georgian in defense of Leo M. Frank. Mrs. Brannon, in her communication, avows a strong belief in the pencil factory superintendent's innocence, and denounces the hardships which the law has thrust upon him.

In line with its policy to present all sides of the Phagan case, The Georgian herewith prints Mrs. Brannon's letter:

In the name of God, humanity, and justice, I beg the public to suspend judgment in the case of Mr. Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, until he has had a fair trial before a jury of his peers.

I consider Mr. Frank an innocent man. Is it because he is a Jew that the negro's word is taken as gospel truth, and reflection cast on his testimony? From the first, pap seemed to be put in Newt Lee's mouth, as well as that of Conley, to make them say or hint that Mr. Frank was suspected by them of committing the crime.

Calls It Persecution.

What negro, with dread of lynching or summary justice being meted out to him, would not swear to a lie, and put the crime on another if he could thereby escape the consequences of his crime? And even so late as Saturday the negro Conley admitted he wrote the notes found beside the murdered girl, as he said, at the suggestion of Mr. Frank.

Is it not inconceivable to think that an astute man, planning with finesse, to kill a little girl who might possibly call for her pay envelope the following day, would take into his confidence the sweeper Conley and have him write what he contemplated putting in a note he intended to lay before her mutilated body, when he shall have murdered her the next day, and exclaiming, "There is no reason why I should hang for it!"

Oh, no! Gentlemen, this is entirely too unlikely a thing for a man of his astuteness and caliber to have done or said. There has been some colossal blunder on the part of the city detectives in rounding up the quarry.

It looks very like persecuting this man simply because he is a Jew. I like to see fair play and justice. This is the first time a Jew has ever been in any serious trouble in Atlanta, and see how ready is every one to believe the worst of him.

In the first place, Mr. Frank, in his deposition, told the hour he reached his home for dinner and supper, was seen by a number of reputable people assembled at his home that evening. He had on the same business suit he had on at his office that day and which he wore at the Coroner's inquest. If he had murdered the girl he must have had some scratches or blood marks on his person, as it was said at the time Mary Phagan had struggled with her assailant.

Cites Weak Link.

One very weak link in the State's chain of evidence is the fact that Newt Lee testified that he made a complete round of the building every half hour, yet he failed to notice the bloodstains on the floor of the metal room in making all those rounds, and then strangely went down the trap door to the basement at 3:30 on a flimsy excuse—flimsy, I say, because no one being there to prevent it, if he really wanted to go to the toilet he surely would have used the one on the upper floor in preference to going down the trap door at 3:30 to the basement closet, and in a dimly lighted place, in which he could scarcely see his hand before his face, and at an angle that the detectives at first said they could not see how he made the discovery of the body. He claimed to have made the find.

Another thing the detectives said was that blood was still flowing from the body when they first discovered it—rigor mortis had not taken place, two facts that in my mind are irrefutable proofs that that girl was not murdered at 12 m., at 4 or at 6 o'clock in the evening which would have been the case if Mr. Frank had murdered the little girl any time between 12 m. and 6 p. m.

I do not know Mr. Frank, but that he is a Jew he holds my especial interest and esteem, for the Jews are good, law-abiding people.

Calls Frank Innocent.

He must be a leader among his people, as he is the president of the B'nai Brith Association of Atlanta. This society is the highest Jewish organization in the world, and you can not persuade me to believe that such a splendid lot of level headed men as the Jews of Atlanta would select a moral degenerate to head their organization.

I believe Mr. Frank innocent and confidently look for his complete vindication when tried by an impartial jury of his countrymen, when the mesh of lies shall have been swept away, that at present shroud the case. Meanwhile, all my sympathies are with him.

MINISTER'S WIFE ACCUSED AS SIREN

Woman in Alienation Suit Charges She Enticed Wealthy Grain Dealer From His Home.

CELEVLAND, OHIO, May 28.—Mrs. Mae Free Patterson, wife of the Rev. Gerard F. Patterson, pastor of the Church of the Incarnation, in the fashionable East End district, has been made defendant in a $10,000 alienation suit.

The action was brought by Mrs. Margaret Lloyd because of the alleged loss of the affections of her husband, Martin Van Voorhees Lloyd, a wealthy grain dealer. Mrs. Patterson is a cousin of Charles Free, vice president of the Southern Pacific Railway.

The suit charges that Mrs. Paterson enticed Lloyd from his home, that she wined and dined with Lloyd in public places, entertained him at her home and went with him to cafes, grill rooms, ball games, horse races and other places of amusement and "with her artifices, blandishments and coquetry and with malicious purpose deprived the plaintiff of her husband's society and affection."

CHIEF BEAVERS TO RENEW HIS VICE WAR

Chief Declares He Will "Clean Out" Disorderly Places When Hutcheson Furnishes List.

Renewed crusades to clean out vice in Atlanta have been precipitated by the publication Tuesday of an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers by Carl Hutcheson, an Atlanta attorney.

Chief Beavers called up Hutcheson with a demand for his information, asking names, addresses and character of occupants, and declared Wednesday that he would proceed to clean up if the requested information was furnished.

Hutcheson is now preparing a list of the places which he declared are immoral and told the chief he would place the list in Beavers' hands three days hence. Hutcheson was asked by the chief to swear to the character of the inmates of each house he rames and to sign his name to his affidavit, and will be called as a witness in prosecuting the landlords.

"We will have some clean-up sure," said Chief Beavers Wednesday. "When I get Hutcheson's information I will prove that I am giving no protection to anybody. I would be glad to have every one report to me any resort that they might know of. It will help in the crusade. I will take speedy action against them all."

Dorsey to Confer With Felder.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey declared Wednesday that he would confer with Colonel T. B. Felder relative to the proposed Grand Jury probe of his corruption charges against police officials and the counter charges of bribery made against him by the police.

Colonel Felder would not comment on the affair at all, other than to say he was not yet ready to issue his statement substantiating his sensational charges.

Detective Chief Lanford issued a signed statement proposing to send Colyar handcuffed to Knoxville and Colonel Felder in charge of a detective to Columbia, S. C.

Lanford's Contribution.

"I will make this proposition to Colonel Felder," he said. "I will handcuff A. S. Colyar and send him back to Knoxville, Tenn., without requisition papers, if he (Colonel Felder) will accompany one of my men to Columbia, S. C., waiving requisition papers. Thereby I will get rid of two nuisances."

Colonel Felder issued the following statement relative to the proposed Grand Jury investigation:

"No investigation would be too exhaustive. I would be pleased to go before any committee, organization or tribunal. I have done nothing wrong. There is nothing in my whole professional career of which I am ashamed. I wish an investigation would be started."

DIXIE DEMOCRATS DEMAND 'SPOILS'

WASHINGTON, May 28.—President Woodrow Wilson, a sincere believer in the Civil Service, is having to sit mighty tight on the lid of the classified service to kep it from blowing off. Petition after petition to have the bars thrown down and let the Democrats in is coming to Washington.

For weeks there have been rumblings from the South and West about the lack of places for Democrats. Congressmen have been criticised for their seeming indifference toward supporters.

A crisis has been reached: Senator Lee S. Overman of North Carolina is ready to blow the lid off regardless of what follows. He has prepared a resolution which, if passed by Congress, would accomplish two things:

First—Suspend the order placing fourth-class postmasters under the Civil Service until March 10, 1917.

Second—Remove protection of the Civil Service from the deputy collectors of internal revenue, constitutinga small army of men.

President Wilson is not disposed to turn his party into an army of political spoilsmen, but some of his Cabinet members have begun to realize that unless the Democrats are given positions under the Postoffice and in the Internal Revenue Service which are now filled by Republicans many Democrats will remain away from the polls next year and endanger a number of Democraitc Congressmen.

COUNTY SEEKS CREATION TO GET ROADS

Candler Argues Its Existence Is Necessary to Benefit Prosperous Town of Metter.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The proposed County of Candler is to petition the incoming Legislature for creation along new lines, and with an argument not only novel, but perhaps winning.

Candler County is to ask for existence as a powerful argument in favor of good roads.

It will seek to prove its right to creation as an absolute good roads necessity—that, of course, along with other reasons likely to appeal to intelligent legislative consideration.

It is a fact that there are several parts of Georgia in which are to be found highly prosperous towns, from a business point of view, that yet are hampered mightily by reason of their remoteness from their County seats and the consequent improbability of very active good roads work in their vicinities.

In some of these places, it is claimed, road taxes in remote neighborhoods are applied exclusively to good roads work near the county seat, and that brings about not only much dissatisfaction, but positive discontent.

Metter, a prosperous and hustling town of South Georgia, is an example of this, and it is about Metter that the proposed new county of Candler is to be framed.

If Candler County is created, it is contended that, with Metter as the County seat, good roads construction will radiate from Metter throughout the neighboring territory, and that there will not be a farm in the new county not soon connected with the County seat by ample and sufficient roads.

There is great enthusiasm among the people about Metter in favor of the new county, and very little opposition from the people of the counties from which it is to be taken. Candler generally is regarded as a good new county proposition, too, and it should surprise no one, therefore, to see the new Legislature put the seal of its approval upon it.

It would be located in one of the richest and most promising sections of the entire State.

Disquieting news comes from the bedside of Representative-elect Samuel E. Berry, of Whitfield.

He recently was stricken with an acute valvular heart trouble, and has been in critical condition since, with the chances of recovery hardly even. For a time, he seemed to get better, but of late has not improved.

Mr. Berry has represented Whitfield several times in the Legislature, and is looked upon as a particularly valuable member.

The Young Men's Democratic Club of Savannah proposes taking a hand in the election of a representative to succeed Mr. Stovall, resigned.

There are certain measures which this organization desires passed, and it is probable that the club will either put out a candidate of its own or undertake to pledge some other candidate to support its bills. Indications are that there may be several aspirants for the place.

The club wants a white primary law to govern city elections. Notice of the fact that such a bill will be introduced at the coming session has been advertised in the newspapers as well as posted on the bulletin board at the Court House.

The need of such a law was impressed upon the leaders of the club at the January city election, when hundreds of negroes were bought. It was charged that both factions cooped up the colored voters in halls, and held them overnight, voting them in batches of four or five, practically under guard.

Under a white primary election law this would be eliminated, it is claimed, as in the campaign for County and State officers. The contest would be settled in the preliminary skirmish, in which the negro voter would have no part.

A well meaning member-elect of the Legislature soon to assemble in Georgia has announced his intention of introducing early in the session a resolution providing for night sessions.

His motive is worthy enough, as he says it is to prevent congestion at the end of the session—and congestion always is there, right on the job!

Notwithstanding the eminent respectability of his intent, though, the impression generally will be that he is destined to disappointment. The Legislature has had that proposition submitted to it by people who earnestly desired to get the work hurried along, but it never got anywhere. The Legislature simply will not sit more than two or three hours a day in its earlier proceedings, and the coming Legislature is not likely to be very different from its predecessors.

The better way to conserve legislative time, perhaps, is to find some method whereby local legislation may be disposed of more readily than now.

"Whitfield County stands far above the average in the manner in which it handles its convicts," said Chairman Davidson, of the Prison Commission, who returned from a tour of inspection of that County Tuesday.

"In discussing the work as a whole, Mr. Davidson said some of the counties are wasting their efforts and money under the mistaken idea that the best warden is the one who can be secured for the least salary."

The majority of counties, the chairman added, are working their convicts at a profit.

A bill will be introduced in the Legislature seeking to abolish the City Court of Floyd County.

It will be provided in the bill, though, that the court shall not be abolished until the expiration of the term of the present judge, John C. Reece.

A further effort will be made, so it has been stated, to make Floyd County a separate judicial circuit within itself, and provide for four sittings of the court each year, instead of two, as is the law now.

The movement generally is favored in Floyd, and will not be opposed in Walker and Chattooga, the other two counties composing the Rome Superior Court circuit.

WAR IN BALKANS NEAR; POWERS ONLY CHECK

Greece and Servia Allied Against Bulgarians, Who Claim Treaty Violations.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 28.—Actual war between Bulgaria and the allied armies of Greece and Servia is very near, according to a statement made here to-day by M. Teodoroff, Bulgarian Minister of Finance, who is here on a political mission.

"Only tremendous pressure by the European powers can prevent a fresh conflict in the Balkans," said M. Teodoroff. "Unknown to the outside world, affairs have been getting more and more serious for months. An army of 280,000 Servians and Greeks is massed on the western and southern frontiers of Bulgaria, ready for a general outbreak.

"The contention of the Bulgarian Government is that Servia and Greece are exceeding the terms of the agreement drawn up by the Balkan league before the outbreak of the war with Turkey."

Austrian Reservists Ordered Remobilized.

VIENNA, May 28.—Remobilization of the Austrian reservists, recently dismissed when peace in the Balkans seemed near, was ordered to-day by the Government.

A telegram from Athens states that another fight between the Bulgarians and Greeks north of Salonika is imminent. The Bulgars are massing vast quantities of heavy artillery at Elevthera, about 100 miles east of Salonika.

A Sofia dispatch to The Reichspost to-day states that the Bulgarian Government has decided to submit the future status of Salonika to the powers. Tension between Bulgaria and Servia, however, is tightening.

Greeks to Fight To Hold Salonika.

SALONIKA, May 28.—Premier Vinezilos, of Greece, arrived here to-day en route to Sofia, where he will try to patch up the differences between the Greek and Bulgarian Governments.

The Greeks maintain that Salonika must remain a Hellenic possession.

King Constantine is reported to have given the impression to his staff that Greece will fight Bulgaria before she will consent to give up Salonika.

Gabrielle Ray Seeks a Divorce

Asks Restoration of Her Conjugal Rights—Action Goes Undefended.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gaiety beauty, has brought action against her husband, Eric Loder, asking for a restoration of her conjugal rights. The action will be heard at the coming session of the divorce court and is preliminary to a suit for divorce.

Loder has made no defense. The basis of the actress' petition has not been disclosed.

Gabrielle Ray and Eric Loder, son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married here March 1, 1912. Miss Ray was one of the most popular and beautiful musical comedy actresses in England. She had been showered with attentions from many notable gallants, including ex-King Manuel of Portugal, Lord Dalmeny and the Marquis of Anglesey, but she declared her heart had been touched only by the dashing young Loder, who is tall, good-looking and wealthy.

Miss Ray and Loder were to have been married at Windsor, February 29, the day that made 1912 a leap year. At the last moment the charming bride-elect changed her mind, and literally left Loder "waiting at the church."

The next day Miss Ray relented and the marriage took place.

The Loders amassed a fortune in the tallow trade in Russia, and the baronetcy was one of the jubilee honors conferred by Queen Victoria in 1887.

Radio-Telegrams By Morse Signals

PARIS, May 28.—Professor Albert Turpain, after a series of researches extending over three years, has succeeded in solving the problem of registering radio-telegrams by Morse signals.

By using highly sensitive relays he succeeded in inscribing currents of one-millionth of a microampere. Such exactness is unnecessary, but with wires of a diameter of one-tenth of a millimeter he has constructed a relay cable to close currents of ten to twenty microamperes.

NO CHANGE MADE IN COTTON AND SUGAR TARIFF

Only Revision Senate Plans of Income Tax Lessens Burden on Married Men.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Underwood tariff bill as reported to the Democratic caucus after the revision of its various schedules by the subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee is forecast as follows:

There will be no change in the cotton, sugar and wool schedules as written into the measure by the House with the exception of a slight increase in duty on wool manufactures.

The only change in the income tax amendment will be the aleration of sub-section D, so that a man of family will not be compelled to pay as great a tax as a single man with the same income.

In the cotton and wool schedules a period of from 60 to 90 days of grace will be extended to manufacturers before the provisions of the new bill go into effect. The rest of the bill takes effect the day after its passage.

The amendments to the Underwood bill permitting the arbitrary valuation of imports by the Secretary of the Treasury will be adopted. In the metal schedule duties on structural steel will be revised downward, while ferro-maganese and pig iron will be free listed.

Wheat, cattle and other staples whose manufactures are all on the free list also will be free listed.

Duties on pottery will be raised.

President Wilson, it was stated, has been notified of the proposed changes in the bill and has consented to the revisions.

BRYAN WILL GET "GRAPE JUICE" WELCOME

Atlanta Decorates for Secretary's Coming Monday in His Favorite Beverage.

With the coming of Colonel William Jennings Bryan on Monday all Atlanta is rallying to the support of her reputation as a grape juice center.

Grape juice in every form—in bottles big and little, square and round, and some of it as old as the vintage of last August—is making its appearance in every show window to greet the eyes of the world-renowned connoisseur, "Grape Juice Bill."

At the Capital City Club Colonel Bryan will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Colonel Walter P. Andrews. No wine or other liquors will be served, but in their stead will be an abundance of grape juice cocktails, grape juice highballs, and grape juice punch. This fact was revealed in a letter of instructions to the steward of the club in which Mr. Andrews made implicit his desire that the precedent of "wineless" dinners established by the distinguished Secretary of State in Washington be followed here.

The dinner will be served at the club at 6 o'clock. It will be attended by a number of prominent Atlanta citizens.

Mr. Bryan will arrive in the city at 5 o'clock. At 8 o'clock he will deliver an address before the students of the Georgia School of Technology at the Grand Opera House.

MAKES RHEUMATISM PROMPTLY DISAPPEAR

Crippled-up Sufferers Find Relief After Few Doses of Croxone are Taken.

It is needless to suffer any longer with rheumatism, and be all crippled up, and bent out of shape with its heart-wrenching pains, when you can surely avoid it.

Rheumatism comes from weak, inactive kidneys, that fail to filter from the blod the poisonous waste matter and uric acid; and it is useless to rub on liniments or take ordinary remedies to relieve the pain. This only prolongs the misery.

The only way to cure rheumatism is to remove the cause. The new discovery, Croxone, does this because it neutralizes and dissolves all the poisonous substances and uric acid that lodge in the joints and muscles, to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism, and cleans out and strengthens the stopped up, inactive kidneys, so they can filter all the poison from the blod, and drive it on and out of the system.

Croxone is the most wonderful medicine ever made for chronic rheumatism, kidney troubles, and bladder disorders. You will find it different from all other remedies. There is nothing else on earth like it. It matters not how old you are, or how long you have suffered, it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. You will find relief from the first few doses, and you will be surprised how quickly all misery and suffering will end.

An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle at any first-class drug store. All druggists are authorized to sell it on a positive money-back guarantee. Three doses a day for a few days is often all that is ever needed to overcome the worst backache or urinary disorders.

C. & E. I. Also Is in Bankruptcy Because of Tightness in the Money Market.

ST. LOUIS, May 28.—The expected receivership for the St. Louis and San Francisco (the Frisco System) and the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroads was recorded here to-day. Thomas H. CLARK HOWELL AND THE WORK OF BEAVERS

No Attack Was Made by the Chief of Police—Editor Wishes His Position Clear.

The following letter from Chief Beavers and the interview with Mr. Clark Howell explain themselves:

Atlanta, Ga., May 27.

My attention has been called to an article in the Sunday papers in which an interview with me makes it appear that I was attacking Mr. Clark Howell personally and his policy with The Constitution.

I only repeated the conversation I had with him on the next day after he returned from Panama on about March 1, this year.

I meant no reflection on Mr. Howell, but only had reference to certain local reports in his paper, and he now assures me that there wasno intention on his part to discredit the work which I have been trying to do in this city, and that the article that appeared in the reportorial columns of The Constitution was without his knowledge and consent, and that it was not his intention nor does he approve of anything that would in the least hinder or discredit the work that the Police Department has been trying to carry out.

I would regret very much indeed to have any utterance of mine construed into an attack upon Mr. Howell, whom I have always regarded, and now esteem, as an exemplary citizen and journalist who holds the merited confidence of the public, as he does of my department and of myself.

In reference to Chief Beavers' statement Mr. Howell said:

"During my absence in Panama in January a police raid was made on a certain downtown rooming hotel. The Constitution next morning locally reported the affair and the fact that a man and his wife were subjected to undue treatment, with comment from the inadvertent victims and the manager of the hotel.

"When I returned from Panama the Chief complained of the local report referred to. I explained to him that nothing was further from our intention than to discredit his work, and that following The Constitution's oft-repeated commendation of his high sense of duty in endeavoring to enforce the law, he would have our cordial support to that end.

"He thanked me, recalling the fact that two days after the houses were closed I had sent for him to tell him that his attitude would have The Constitution's support.

"Next morning—September 26—The Constitution's leading editorial, 'A Wholesome Example,' unqualifiedly approved the Chief as an official with the nerve and the courage to enforce the law,' stating that 'he has set a singularly wholesome example of a blunt interpretation of duty.'

"I am still of the opinion that no good citizen would invite the return of the segregated district, nor the spread of its attendant evil in other directions. In my talk with the Chief I expressed my doubt as to his ability to absolutely eliminate the evil, and while the segregated district has been closed we are still wrestling with other phases of the problem.

"I think the Chief is doing the best he can, and he should have the support of all good citizens in his efforts."

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Why Do Folks Pull Flowers in Parks?

"It sure gets my nanny," said the park policeman, "why some folks will come out here and pull flowers. The park commission spends a lot of money getting plants and a lot more to keep them in good condition and then along comes somebody and crabs the whole act by tearing off a bunch of the flowers.

"Last Sunday a young fellow came out here and nothing would do but he must have a magnolia. He thought they were pretty. So they were; but that gave him no license to pull a blossom. But he did just the same. I happened to see him after he had secured the flower and I called him.

"'Here' said I, 'is a copy of charges. Suppose you straighten out this little affair with the Recorder.'

"'Why, I didn't know there was any harm in taking these flowers,' said he.

"'Well, what do you suppose we got 'em out here for?' I told him. 'These flowers belong to the city and they are put here to be looked at, that's all. If you want to give your best girl a bouquet why don't you go to the florist's? That's what they are in business for.'

"'I don't see any sign out here saying not to pull flowers,' says he, nettled I guess about that best girl remark of mine.

"'Sure, you don't, I says. 'An' what's more, you don't see no sign tellin' you to fall in the lake or commit suicide, yet I haven't seen you tryin' to do either.'

"He didn't have any answer for that one and I guess he was some wiser when he went home. And next day he paid his little fine like a man. Bet HE don't pull any more magnolias in Grant Park."

Motion Picture Show Takes Place of Nurse.

Out in West End women with small children have solved a problem. They have learned how to get along without nurses. Of course those with babies are not so fortunate, but the ones whose youngsters can run about are reaping the reward of ingeniousness.

Now when a mother wants to go to the matinee or shopping in town she doesn't have to call in mother-in-law or a neighbor to look after the children until she gets back. The plan is much more simple and gives general satisfaction. She takes them to a motion picture show.

It should be known, of course, that West End boasts a full-fledged "movie" show. The children go in droves every day and the proprietor must be an all-fired generous soul because the kiddies just stay and stay and stay. He never asks them to go out. And that is the real secret of the scheme taken advantage of by the mothers.

Mrs. West End decides that she wants to go shopping. She washes and dresses Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude and escorts them to the picture show. She pays 15 cents and the three young ones hike in to see the show. And there they stay. Mrs. West End goes to town, travels from one store to another until exhausted and returns homeward. She stops at the picture show and there is Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude still gazing in speechless ecstasy at the pictures on the screen.

What matters it if they have seen the same films half a dozen times that afternoon? They get just as much fun out of it as if they observed them for the first time. Mrs. West End calls her darlings and they all return home. Mamma is satisfied, the yungsters are decidedly so and Mr. Picture Man evidently is, because next time he is just as smiling as ever.

Wife Kidnaped Him And Kept Him Drunk

CHICAGO, May 28.—That he was kidnaped by his wife, whom he is suing for divorce, taken to New York and kept under the influence of champagne and cocktails, was the statement of Louis Frank, a saloon keeper, in an affidavit filed to-day.

About two weeks ago a stipulation dismissing Frank's divorce suit was filed by Mrs. Frank's attorneys, who said Frank and his wife were reconciled and living in New York. This Frank denies.

COL. NASH TO TRAIN RIVERSIDE CADETS

New Commandant Takes Charge at Military and Naval Academy on June 1.

GAINESVILLE, GA., May 28.—Colonel J. Q. Nash has been appointed commandant of the cadet corps at Riverside Military and Naval Academy. He will take charge June 1.

Few cadet commandants in Southern preparatory schools are better known than Colonel Nash. He has been instructor of more Georgia youths in military tactics than any man in the State. His selection is a distinct accusition to Riverside's faculty.

Colonel Nash was graduated with first honor from Gordon College in 1896. He was superintendent of the public schools of Henry County; vice president and commandant of Reinhardt College, and commandant of Gordon Institute for several years. His more recent position has been commanding officer and instructor in the Georgia Military Academy.

The adjutant general of the National Guard of Georgia has detailed Colonel Nash as instructor and inspector in camp and target practice. He was detailed by the Governor to serve on the staff of the grand marshal at the inauguration of President Roosevelt and again at the inauguration of President Taft. He holds commissions with the National Guard from second lieutenant to lieutenant colonel and as assistant inspector general of Georgia.

'Astral Scarf' Is the Capital's Latest Fad

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The "astral scarf," which in its delicate colors reproduces the spiritual atmosphere, or aura, surrounding the wearer, has made its appearance here. Society women are busy consulting students of the occult to ascertain exactly what their astral colors are.

Mrs. George Hagner, of the famous Hagner family, one member of which is Miss Isabella Hagner, Mrs. Wilson's confidential secretary, is responsible for this fad.

HUNT FOR YOUNG CONDUCTOR VAIN

Wife of W. S. Culpepper, Who Disappeared in Atlanta Monday, Fears Foul Play.

Culpepper, who is 24 years old, a freight conductor on the Georgia Railroad, disappeared in Atlanta Monday afternoon. He was due to take out No. 210 Monday night, but failed to appear at the scheduled time.

Fearing he had been injured, his friends visited every hospital and infirmary in Atlanta Tuesday morning and also inquired at the police station, but in vain.

Culpepper lived a temperate life, has a good character, was devoted to his family and was popular among officials and workingmen of the Georgia Railroad. He had just been promoted to conductor. The theory of a voluntary flight is scouted by his family and friends. The young wife fears her husband has met with foul play.

2,000 TO MARCH IN BIG HOLIDAY PARADE

Pageant by Retailers June 4 Will Eclipse Anything of Its Kind Ever Seen in Atlanta.

With practically all plans completed for the pageant, local retail grocers and clerks Wednesday are predicting that the parade of June 4, with which they will celebrate the opening of the "Wednesday closing" season, will be one of the greatest ever seen in Atlanta.

F. E. Kamper, chairman of the arrangements committee, in charge of active preparations for the parade, declares nothing that has ever been held in Atlanta in the past will even approach it in interest. "It is a sure thing," declared Mr. Kamper, "that when we get through the people of Atlanta will know that clerks and retailers appreciate the opportunity of getting a half-holiday every week. The parade we are going to pull off will make the circus parades look sick."

And a glance at the arrangements induces the belief that Mr. Kamper knows what he is talking about. Probably 2,000 men will march in the parade, and Atlantans will see some weird costumes. Three miles of wagons and automobiles, decorated and emblazoned with banners, will follow the marchers. Five mounted policemen, the handsomest and bravest of Chief Beavers' force, will ride at the head of the column.

Three Brass Bands.

Three brass bands will tread proudly in the ranks.

Following the mounted policemen and a brass band will come aides and their marshals as follows: F. E. Kamper, H. Winberg, C. J. McCoy, R. H. Comer, W. J. Burton, J. H. Merritt, J. F. McNair and W. A. Byers. Each of these men will appoint five assistants to ride with him, and all will be clothed in uniforms that represent the last word in splendor.

The parade will form near the Capitol, on Washington, Hunter, Mitchell, Whitehall and other nearby streets. The exact route of the parade has not been determined, but it probably will be down to Whitehall and up Peachtree, until everybody gets tired. The rivalry among the merchants for the best decorated wagon and automobile already has begun, and some unique schemes in decoration are promised.

The celebration will not be confined to retailers. Wholesalers have expressed a desire to send their automobile trucks to the parade, and ice manufacturers, bakers, packers and the commission merchants also will work to make the parade a success.

Many lines of business were represented at the Taft Hall meeting Tuesday night, and every representative of every line pledged the assistance of himself and his fellows to making the parade a success. E. L. Adams was there to ladle out encouragement in behalf of the jobbers of the city, and J. D. Simms told how far the City Salesmen's Association would go to make the affair a success. Then there were wholesalers, retail grocers, bakers, commission men, clerks and employees galore.

All Boost Atlanta.

Several stirring addresses were made, all emphasizing the necessity of working together and boosting for Atlanta. Among the speakers were Harry L. Schlesinger, father of the closing movement; Hon. John Y. Smith, Representative-elect from Fulton County; O. T. Camp, a consistent booster for the parade; E. L. Adams, of the jobbers; John McCullough, of the commission merchants; Olin Stamps, who boosts anything and everything pertaining to the good of the city; L. E. Rogers, one of the live wires among the clerks, and John Bratton, of the Georgia Retail Grocers' Association.

Before adjourning the clerks extended a vote of thanks to their employers for the half-holiday. It was announced by Mr. Schlesinger that more than 800 grocers had signed an agreement to close at noon every Wednesday through the months of June, July and August. Merchants in East Point also have joined in the movement and will take part in the parade.

DECATUR PLANS BIG HOME-COMING

Reception Committee Arranging New Festivities to Make June 3 a Memorable Day.

Extra festivities are being planned every day for Decatur's home-coming day and smoker on June 3. The reception committee of the Board of Trade will meet to-night at organization headquarters in the Weekes Building. Mayor John A. Montgomery is chairman of this committee.

The day and the night of June 3 will be, in effect, one continuous good time. The morning will be given over to oratory. Dr. Soule, of the State Agricultural College, will speak on DeKalb County's opportunities for truck farming, dairying and poultry raising; E. F. Smith on ways and means of locating the Fifth District Agricultural School in DeKalb County; C. Murphy Candler on the life and accomplishments of Jefferson Davis.

The afternoon will be made memorable by the laying of the cornerstone of Decatur's new $25,000 school, under the auspices of the Masons. George M. Napier is the orator of the day, while five-minute addresses will be made by Mayor Montgomery, J. Howell Green and Hooper Alexander.

Some time during the day a shield will be presented to the Decatur troop of Boy Scouts. The shield is a trophy of a recent field day contest. All Atlanta Boy Scout troops, with their drum corps, will participate in the presentation.

The second smoker of the Board of Trade will be held at 6:30 o'clock, as the concluding event of homecoming day. "GOOD EATS" will be served, followed by things to smoke, with music throughout. Good speakers will entertain the crowd, which is expected to be large.

Instant Postum

Is in thousands of homes where health is valued.

Former coffee users who have felt the pinch of indigestion, headache, heart disturbance, nervous irritation, etc., have written by the score, telling of remarkable benefits following the change from coffee to Instant Postum.

A level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"Thanks for the sample of Instant Postum sent me. I had been drinking coffee for a long time and thought it would be difficult to give it up, but I was mistaken.

"While I was drinking coffee I always felt exhausted and I weighed but 112 pounds. After using Instant Postum I soon recovered and now am as healthy as any person can be. I now weigh 120 pounds and am steadily gaining in weight. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.

Both kinds are sold by grocers everywhere.

When One Is Very Young

"Love is a sickness full of woes,
All remedies refusing."
—Samuel Daniel.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

G. K. writes: "I am seventeen years of age and in love with a girl one year my junior. I am in love with her very much, but I don't know if she loves me. I feel as if I am getting sick, knowing not what to do."

The letter bears a date of ten days ago. If it were of yesterday, or the day previous, there might be reason for some uneasiness regarding the condition of G. K., but ten days is a long, long time, and without doubt he has gone through all the chills, the fever, the pangs, and made a complete recovery ere this.

This boy and girl love—calf love, some say—may develop into something larger, truer, finer, but the chances are all against it. A boy of seventeen thinks he has found the one love for life, and he also thinks he will never become too old to prefer pie to potatoes. He is sure that his heart will never waver from the choice of his youth, and just as sure that when he has grown old and gray, and has earned the right to spend money as he chooses, that he will at last gratify his youthful longing for nut sundaes.

Seldom Serious.

The love of his extreme youth is seldom serious, and does not even become a pleasant memory, for the reason that there were so many of them. The one picture he thinks he will always carry in his heart becomes the composite picture of many, and he forgets in a few years if Ethel had blue eyes or brown, and if it were Mary who gave him a lock of her hair, or Susan.

His emotions are so short-lived that calf love would be something to laugh about were it not for the waste of time every such love represents.

In the growing, developing, eventful and impressionable period of life, when a boy and girl should be studying their school books and laying the foundation for helpful manhood or womanhood, they moon around to the neglect of everything in life that is worth while, devoting every hope, every energy, every thought, to what they call love, but which bears no nearer resemblance to love than a worthless pebble bears to a precious jewel.

It is most regrettable that so much time is wasted in seeking for the counterfeit, instead of preparing one's self by study and training and self-control to appreciate the genuine that will come later.

Needless Waste.

G. K. has recovered from the sickness that prompted his letter long ere this. It is as if he called a physician to minister to an ailment so short-lived that it had vanished when the physician arrived. But the physician would warn him against another such attack, and explain the folly of needless pain, the waste of health and energy that could be avoided.

I can do no more. The remedy lies in his own hands. He must put such devotion into the effort to make a man of himself that there isn't time, room or inclination left for indulgence in the emotions that are not his due till he reaches man's estate.

The Five Frankforters

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Solomon, you may come in. Our tete-a-tete is quite over. We have not much in common—his Highness and I," said the old woman sadly.

The five Frankforters came quickly at their mother's summons. Charlotte came too, and stood in the doorway where for one fleeting moment she had touched the garments of the God of Love as he sped by.

"Madame! Shall I speak now?" asked Duke Gustavus with firm decision. Then he turned from the old mother to Solomon. "Sir—you know already why I am here to-day. I have the honor to beg for your daughter's hand in marriage."

With due solemnity Solomon answered: "We thank you, Duke Gustavus, for the high honor you confer on our family. We accept that honor gratefully and gladly. I give my daughter to you."

Who shall fathom the heart of a maid? Who shall tell to what knowledge of her woman's heritage Charlotte had grown in one full hour? She girl came gently to her father and put her hand on his shoulder and looked deep into his eyes—into his soul, perhaps. "Father, you CANNOT without a word from me!"

"What do you mean?" asked her father sternly.

"I am ashamed! I know now that you arranged this yesterday—and I am ashamed."

The Crisis.

In growing anger the man asked his daughter, "How ashamed?"

"Ashamed to have been offered and accepted in this way."

"It is the custom of our people to arrange marriages in this way." Solomon's growing anger would not brook long delay—or argument.

"A hateful custom! A shameful custom!" cried Charlotte.

"Shameful?" Solomon's wrath was threatening to overwhelm his dignified manners.

"Yes. Yes—shameful. Your Highness, I will not be a party to a bargain so shameful to both of us. I thank you—and refuse."

"Do you know what you are saying?" thundered the baffled father.

"Do you know what I am REFUSING? Father, do you believe that I could ever be happy without a home? Or I could never find a home in that castle, with the very servants laughing at me behind my back. And the portraits on the walls staring at me and seeming to say: 'If you please you have come here too soon; wait another century or so!' No, no! If I marry, I—Grannie——" And poor little Charlotte, having fought her first battle—life's great battle—for the right to happiness—fell sobbing in her grandmother's feet.

"Grannie!" Poor little banker's daughter, who has never known a mother, will you plead in vain to the dear old woman who has been the saint of your girlish dreams?

Solomon spoke. He was very angry, but it was that cold, implacable anger that brooks no interference with his desires. "Your Highness will forgive this exhibition? My daughter will soon see reason?"

But Gustavus was to struggle slowly to-day to his full heritage of manhood. "I beg you—I insist—that you shall not persuade her against her will."

"Her will?" said Sollomon. "In this family the children obey their parents."

The Boomerang.

Frau Gudula rose with quiet dignity from her great arm chair. "Then YOU obey ME—and let the child have her way in this. Duke Gustavus, I think you at last are wise enough to understand it must be so. Love is greater than any of us. No! little Charlotte, get up! Grannie won't let anyone hurt you."

Gustavus smiled. "Madame, I have looked into the souls of three women to-day—and I think I understand. But now, Baron, if I do not fulfil my part——"

Solomon spoke bitterly: "Count Ehrenberg has the money! He is all the way to the castle by now."

"It will be returned to you, of course," began Gustavus, quietly, and then his old merry, devil-may-care spirit finished the sentence—"if there is any left."

Frau Gudula spoke with stately austerity: "No, Duke Gustavus, be thankful you have it. Perhaps it will make a great difference in all of your life. If I know my sons, they will not be losers."

"My mother is right," said Ainsuel. "We have never yet taken back a signature."

"If your Highness is not too anxious to return to Neustadt Castle at once," said Nathan, "we can discuss the situation over the rest of the Burgundy. Will you come, Carl, Amschel? I think we still feel that Your Highness's personal security is what we want."

And as they discussed the salt mines and great forests that might yet make the Duchy of Taunus a wealthy province, the brothers little dreamed of the hidden wealth Gustavus was finding in his dream of a pair of eyes that had not lied. For suddenly the Duke of Taunus knew that the old home was his and he must not leave it—that a man must not abdicate for the woman he loves—but that when he is worthy to rule, then he is worthy to win even her love. And the money? Oh, Gustavus of Taunus could always find plenty of use for that! Love may work miracles, but because his sweetheart's hair is spun gold, a spendthrift does not learn to scorn all other gold!

The Real Reason.

And Solomon was thinking of the plans that had gone so sadly amiss—and of his twelve millions of florins! They might have been better invested!

"Who could have believed it!" said he. "A young fellow like that to have the best of us! Providence has helped him."

"Perhaps he is sharper than you thought," said his mother.

"Then I am all the more sorry to lose him as a son-in-law. Now—Fraudlein Charlotte—you will be so good as to give me your reasons for what you have done."

The girl moved slowly, almost as one in a dream, across to the father she had so sorely displeased. Her little scene was set and she must play out her part before her audience. Grannie was sitting again in her great arm-chair by the little breakfast table—Old Sol still shone across the rose arbor and traced a pattern of flowers and leaves on the soft green carpet. Across the room, stood her Cousin Jacob—intent, waiting—one would scarcely dare guess for what. But Charlotte and her father standing close—close in the little heart of that sunny room, were talking to each other across grim, gray seas of misunderstanding.

"Your reasons, Charlotte," said the man. This was not father talking to daughter—it was the man of business talking to the woman who had dared to balk his dearest plans.

"You know them, father. If I marry, it will not be for a castle, and a grand title, and position—the Duke would have given those to me—but I want more—far more—than he could ever give me."

"Go on."

"And I must be able to give more—infinitely more than I could ever give to him. Then I would be content to live anywhere—as dear Grannie was."

The Truth Comes Out.

Solomon sank into a great chair across the room from his mother. On Frau Gudula's face was a sweet smile of memory—and hope for this younger generation whom she loved. And Jacob? Jacob was waiting—waiting with throbbing pulses and yearning eyes for that supreme thing for which he would have given the world had the world been his!

"Is there anyone to whom you could give—and who could give to you—all you mean?" asked Solomon with slow insistence. He would sift this matter of his daughter's daring disobedience to the bottom.

"I—I—believe so, father."

"Will you tell me who he is?"

The girl did not answer. Pulsing, telltale blood stained her cheeks with love's own royal crimson—but she could not lift her starry eyes.

"So! It is all arranged between you, I suppose. What is his position in life?"

Charlotte answered so low that one might scarcely hear her timid tones: "He is—a business man. I think you would call it."

"Every tailor calls himself that. What kind of a business is his?"

"Banking"—still lower.

"A banker?"

"Yes; like you." The girl wondered if this torture would ever cease—would she ever be at peace—and happy?

Extremes of Fashion From Paris

The ultra extreme of evening dress.

THE picture on the left shows a rich and effective model for theater or semi-evening wear. The original gown was of sulphur-colored brocaded satin over a foundation of sulphur chiffon.

The under part of the bodice is formed by a very high draped belt which rises in two points from the under arm to the chest. Shadow lace edged with beads starts from a beaded ornament at the center front and comes over the shoulder, falling in the back in long angel sleeves, which end in a beaded tassel.

The skirt is made in two pieces, draped one over the other, and is held at the right by a buckle of beads, from which starts a small round train.

For the Extremist.

The model on the right cannot be recommended to the woman who wishes to be modest. The consideration of what not to wear is almost as important as what clothes to select; and together with the extremes of the overworked Balkan blouse fashion, the wise woman will avoid the sleeveless corsage and the skirt slit to the knees. It will be easily seen how the modifications that good taste suggests to every woman will change these dresses from extremes of freakishness into really graceful dresses.

This model shows an evening gown of Persian blue and gold over a foundation of black chiffon; the bodice is plain in corselet style, and the top consists of a fichu of black chiffon which drapes over the shoulder to form small sleeves. The waist is girdled by a belt of Persian blue satin, with a huge flower of the same material in front. The plain skirt is split at the knees to show the foundation of pleated chiffon. On one side of this cut it curves up about three inches from the floor, and on the left it lengthens into a train with rounding corners.

Do You Know That—

One of the longest concrete viaducts in the world is being erected over the Cuyaroga River in Cleveland. It has a length of 2,880 feet and is a double-decker, the upper deck carrying a driveway 42 feet wide for automobiles and other vehicles, with 12 feet of "sidewalk" on each side. The lower deck will carry four street railway tracks. The clearance over the channel will be 93 feet. Some 1,500 concrete spiles are being driven to carry the nine piers nearest the water.

Experiments have been made in Germany in the use of pigeons for scouting purposes. The pigeons are provided with miniature cameras furnished with shutters that are released automatically. The birds are set free from selected points so that they fly over the enemy's fortifications. When they return home the photographs they have taken are developed, and sometimes important disclosures appear on the film.

At Loerrach, in the Black Forest, there is a lake, the bed of which remains dry from 10 to 13 years at a time, and then suddenly refills with water from subterranean springs to a depth of 12 to 15 feet. After ten years the Eichener Sea, as it is called, has again commenced to fill, and has destroyed all the crops which farmers had planted on the bed.

Value of Bluff.

In a close encounter during the American Civil war, two soldiers, one from each army, came face to face within short range.

Each put up his gun and fired, as it subsequently appeared, his last cartridge. Both missed. The bullet of one man buried itself in a tree, and the shot of the other passed through the coat of his enemy. Each man, knowing his ammunition was gone, supposed himself to be at a disadvantage.

One of them made a great show of reloading his gun, and, stepping forward, demanded a surrender. The other threw down his arms with a groan.

"If I had another cartridge I would never surrender," he exclaimed.

"That's all right," calmly remarked the captor, marching off his prisoner. "If I had another, you may be sure I shouldn't have asked you to surrender."

"Do you think $20 will be enough to give the minister?" inquired the prospective bridegroom.

"You'd better make it $25," replied the best man. "He is going to be married himself next week."

"Do you know how to run a motor car?"

"Well," replied Mr. Chuggins, "I know all about the mechanism of the thing. But I haven't yet mastered the city ordinances."

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T WORRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am nineteen and for some time past have been keeping company with two young men, R. and G. Now, as they are having numerous disputes over me, I decided to meet just one of them and stop their quarrels. I prefer the society of G., and I told this to R., thinking it best to be honest with him. He became very angry and said I had done him a great wrong in not telling him before. He als accused me of encouraging him. He has vowed he will cause trouble between G. and me. I am only a little girl and such a thing as love never occurred to me. GLADYS.

I think R. is blustering in the hope of frightening you. If you prefer G. you have the right to show your preference. It will be much better for you to go with neither than to try to meet both.

THEY ARE RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am seventeen and deeply in love with a girl one year my junior, whom I have known three years. Now, as my parents think I am too young to have anything to do with girls, I would like to have your advice on the matter. JACK.

Your constancy for three years is in your favor. Be constant a few years longer and this will prove your love more than any protestations.

In the meantime remember your parents know best.

KNEW A LITTLE

A gentleman traveling some time ago asked a one-armed mendicant by whom he was accosted how he lost his arm.

"It was like this, sir. The last time I went to sea we was caught in a typhoon off Cape 'Orn. The ship went over on her beam ends, so the cap'n 'e orders me an' Tom to go out on the yardarm to keelhaul the bo'sprit and ter splice the jib-boom to the mainmast. I was a-hangin' on to the top-gallant ratlin's when Tom suddenly let go his end, an' I was pitched 40 feet in the 'old."

The gentleman smiled.

"That's a capital yarn," he said. "You ought to have been a sailor," and, without giving him anything, went on his way.

Crestfallen, the beggar watched his interrogator, and saw a crossing-sweeper touch his hat most deferentially to him.

"I say, Jim, who's 'e w'en 'e's at 'ome?" he called.

"Him?" replied the sweeper. "Don't you know who that is? Why, that's Admiral Beresford."

Always Merry and Bright.

False to all the traditions of Scotland and of farming, Sandy McTavish was a supreme optimist.

Nothing ever seemed to worry him.

One day—so the story goes—during the great floods, he was found by a neighbor lucky enough to possess a boat sitting peacefully on the roof of his house, smoking his pipe while the waters rose.

"Hello, Sandy!" cried the neighbor.

"Hello, Sam!" cried the cheerful one. "All your fowls washed away, I suppose?"

Sandy nodded.

"Ay," he said; "but the ducks can swim!"

"Apple trees gone, too, eh?"

"Well, the crop would have failed anyhow."

"So will you," said Sam, "if you sit up there much longer. Why, the waters have covered your ground floor windows already."

"I know," replied Sandy, as he smoked on; "and a good thing, too. Them windows did want washin'!"

"Why, Dad," he said, "she is young. She's just a little child in a hundred ways. She loves the trees and the grass and the flowers—and everything that's simple and real! And as for her heart—" His voice was low and very tender. "Why, her heart is the biggest I've ever known. It's just overflowing with sweetness and kindness. I've seen her pick up a baby that had fallen in the street and mother it in a way that—well, no one could do it as she did it, unless her soul was clean."

Gilder in Despair.

The father was silent, a little awed. He made an effort to shake off the feeling, and spoke with a sneer.

"You heard what she said yesterday, and you still are such a fool as to think that."

The answer of the son came with an immutable finality, the sublime faith of love.

"I don't think—I know!"

Gilder was in despair. What argument could avail him? He cried out sharply in desperation.

"Do you realize what you're doing? Don't go to smash, Dick, just at the beginning of your life. Oh, I beg you, boy, stop! Put this girl out of your thoughts and start fresh."

The reply was of the simplest, and it was the end of the argument.

"Father," Dick said, very gently, "I can't."

There followed a little period of quiet between the two. The father, from his desk, stood facing his son, who thus denied him in all honesty because the heart so commanded. The son rested motionless and looked with unflinching eyes into his father's face. In the gaze of each was a great affection.

"You're all I have, my boy," the older man said at last. And now the big voice was a mildest whisper of love.

"Yes, Dad," came the answer—another whisper, since it is hard to voice the truth of feeling such as this. "If I could avoid it, I wouldn't hurt you for anything in the world. I'm sorry, Dad, awfully sorry—" He hesitated; then his voice rang out clearly. There was in his tone, when he spoke again, a recognition of that loneliness which is the curse and the crown of being:

"But," he ended, "I must fight this out by myself—fight it out in my own way. . . . And I'm going to do it!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Burke Plots.

THE butler entered. "A man to see you, sir," he said. Gilder made a gesture of irritation, as he sank into the chair at his desk.

"I can't see any one to-night, Thomas," he exclaimed, sharply.

"But he said it was important, sir," the servant went on. He held out the tray insistently.

The master took the card grudgingly. As his eyes caught the name, his expression changed slightly.

"Very well," he said, "show him up." His glance met the wondering gaze of his son.

"It's Burke," he explained.

"What on earth can he want—at this time of night?" Dick exclaimed.

The father smiled grimly.

"You may as well get used to visits from the police."

There was something ghastly in his effort toward playfulness.

A moment later Inspector Burke entered the room.

"Oh, you're here, too," he said, as his eyes fell on Dick. "That's good! I wanted to see you, too."

Inspector Burke was, in fact, much concerned over the situation that had developed. He was a man of undoubted ability, and he took a keen professional pride in his work.

He possessed the faults of his class, was not too scrupulous where he saw a safe opportunity to make a snug sum of money through the employment of his official authority, was ready to truckle to those whose influence could help or hinder his ambition. But, in spite of these ordinary defects, he was fond of his work and wishful to excel in it.

Thus, Mary Turner had come to be a thorn in his side. She flouted his authority and sustained her incredible effrontery by a restraining order from the court. The thing was outrageous to him, and he set himself to match her cunning. The fact that she had involved Dick Gilder within her toils made him the more anxious to overcome her in the strife of resources between them.

After much studying, he had at last planned something that, while it would not directly touch Mary herself, would at least serve to intimidate her, and as well make further action easier against her.

It was in pursuit of this scheme that he now came to Gilder's house, and the presence of the young man abruptly gave him another idea that might benefit him well. So he disregarded Gilder's greeting, and went on speaking to the son.

Dick's Eyes Flashed.

"She's skipped!" he said triumphantly.

Dick made a step forward. His eyes flashed, and there was anger in his voice as he replied:

"I don't believe it."

The inspector smiled, unperturbed.

"She left this morning for Chicago," he said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go." He turned to the father, and spoke with an air of boastful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape and you'll be all right."

"If we only could!"

The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

The inspector, however, was confident of success, and his tones rang cheerfully as he answered:

A LITTLE SIX-YEAR-OLD DARLING IS RESCUED FROM ITS MISERIES

Little Willie Shumate, the little six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Shumate, of 168 Kirkwood Avenue, this city, suffered like thousands of other little children are suffering. He was pale and puny; in his sleep he would roll and toss; in the morning his breath was bad, and during the day he was very nervous and constantly biting his finger nails or picking his nose. He was too young to take severe medicines and the parents were simply told not to worry, because the child would get over its troubles as he grew older. But the parents did worry. They could not help it, seeing their child in such constant misery. They called at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store and obtained a treatment of Quaker Extract. The child was given this remedy regularly according to directions, and the results came to light. He took one bottle and a half of the Extract, and expelled not one but a handful of small worms, some alive and some dead. These were the cause of the child's sufferings, and Quaker Extract, by removing the cause, cured the child. These worms were two inches long each. To-day the little fellow is happy as a lark and his happiness is shared by his loving parents, his cheeks are red and rosy.

The case again proves the powers of the wonderful Quaker Extract. If you suffer from rheumatism, catarrh or stomach worms, call at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store, 29 Marietta Street, for Quaker Extract, 6 for $5.00, 2 for $2.50 or $1.00 a bottle. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. Do not fail to call to-day and obtain good health. We prepay express charges on all orders of $2.00 or over.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THARE was a yung man caim to our house the other nite wich has jest graduated from West Point. He was a nice yung man. He was as strate as a arrow & his clothes fit him fine. He is a friend of Ma's unkel, wich also went to West Point & was shot in the back yeers ago in a Injun campaign. Ma never likes to talk much about her unkel, beekaus Pa is all the time wanting to know how it was that he got shot in the back.

The naim of the yung man was Galbraith Denton. His naim was like the naims of the army ossifers in plays & stories & he was vary handsum. The only thing I didn't like about him was that he was all the time bragging. He is the only West Point man I evver saw that bragged. Moast of them knows better wen they git thru school.

I havent the faintest idee ware they will send me, he toald Pa & Ma. My only wish is to be sent to some post ware thare is plenty of action & danger. Danger is my middel naim, he sed. The direst peril in the world is like that much custard pie to me. I think I grow taller & broader on a diet of danger, he sed. Doant you feel that way? he asked Pa.

Pa Is Modest.

I think Pa was going to say Yes, but he saw Ma grinning at him & he sed Well, to tell you the truth, I am not so full of fire & recklessness as I was wen I was a yung man. In those days, Pa sed, I cud put my hand in a mad dog's mouth with a smile, or face the charge of a en-raged bull without batting a eye, but my advanced yeers have sobered me down a bit & made me think of other & greater things than fiteing.

Well, sed the yung man, Mister Dention, it is this way with me, he sed to Pa. I do not imagine that I shal grow less feerless with the added yeers. In fack, I beeleeve that when I am a old man I will be eeven moar dauntless than I am now, & wen the grim reaper cums he will find me in the hour of Deth as I ever was in life, unafraid.

That is a fine way to be, said Pa. You will find, sed Pa, wen you go to the front, many things in acktual warfare to try yure currage sorely. In the dark days of the Civil War, Pa sed, the days that I dred to recall to any grate extent eeven now, I went thru hardships & faced dangers that wud have killed any ordinary man or made him crazy. I wonder now & then, sed Pa, that that terribul war dident maik me reely insane. Dont you, wife?

Oh, I suppoas so, sed Ma. Sumtimes I think you are a littel dippy at that.

Ma Gives Him Away.

Pa got kind of red in the face, but he kept on talking. My boy, he sed to Mister Dention, wen you have gone thru a baptism of fire such as me & my braiv comrades went thru at Misshunary Ridge or in the battel of the Wilderness, or at Shiloh or Chancellorsville, Pa sed, you will show them how reely braiv you are. One night I was surrounded by a whole company of cavalry, Pa sed. I nevver lost my superb nerve. Taking advantage of a blue mist that hung over a gray landscape, I mingled freely with the enemy & thus made my escape.

I suppoas yure face was blue with fear, sed Ma.

Mr. Dention beeleeved Pa until Ma sed: Lissen, Galbraith; this deer husband of mine was never in war except with me.

Far More Important.

The old man had given his son a very fair education, and had taken him into his shop. The young fellow was over-particular about a great many little things, but the father made no comment. One day an order came in from a regular customer.

"I wish to goodness," exclaimed the son, "that Jones would learn to spell."

"What's the matter now?" inquired the father cheerfully.

"Why, he spells coffee with a 'k.'"

"No—does he? I never noticed it."

"Of course you never did," said the son, pettishly. "You never notice anything like that."

"Perhaps not, my son," replied the old man; "but there is one thing I do notice, which you will learn by and by, and that is that Jones pays cash."

Speedy Courtship.

A man recently in New York laid a wager that he would woo, win, and marry within an hour a young lady whom, with his companions, he had just seen arrive at the hotel where he was living.

There is nothing in the American marriage law to prevent this dispatch. He introduced himself to the damsel, she smiled upon his suit, a minister was called in, and they were married within an hour.

The wager, of no inconsiderable amount, was handed over to the bridegroom, who left with his bride the following day. It was shortly afterward discovered that the couple had long been man and wife, and that they had been traveling about playing the same trick at various hotels.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to give Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Cain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain. Manager Smith tells the newspapers about his new find and the reporters print all sorts of "joshing" stories about Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

At the same time the newspaper photographers unlimbered their batteries and began bombarding everything in sight. The reporters took possession of the players' bench and passed intimate remarks with their friends in uniform. The training season of the Atlanta club was on and Manager Smith, in full charge was right in his element. Next in importance, judging by his own personal estimate to himself, was Whiskey, the colored man-of-all-work.

Ed Gillespie, the groundkeeper, had the field in fine shape, despite the severe rains of the preceding week, which had nearly driven him to drink.

Then minutes of tossing the ball sufficed.

Batting Practice.

"Batting practice!" suddenly yelled Bill Smith. "Dunn, put on your shin guards. Brady, go into the box and toss up a few. I'll just take first crack at that ball myself. Gee, boys, it feels good to get a bat in my hands again."

To the player all the joys of baseball are confined to batting and pay days, and it is believed that many a ball player would waive his salary if he could make a base hit whenever he wanted to. Every player would bat for 1,000 if he could have his way and pitchers would be driven out of the profession.

Smith took his place at the plate, a dozen negro boys spread themselves in he outfield to shack the balls; Brady went to the mound and threw up a straight ball. Smith pasted it to left and ran gleefully to first.

"A hit!" he shouted. "I'll lead the Pinch Hit League this year."

One by one the players took their turn at bat. Most of them hadn't had a club in their hands for six months. Many of them swung wildly at the ball. Their eyes had not yet become accustomed to the novelty of the situation.

Gordon Kelly, being the "kid" of the party, was the last man to face the pitcher. He assumed the same pose that filled Bill Smith with astonishment the day they first met. Whiskey crept up to the players' bench and stood grinning behind the reporters.

"Here's Billy's phenom," remarked Percy Whiting, the dean of the reportorial corps. "Watch him miss the ball a mile."

"He looks like business, anyhow," observed Murphy, a confrere.

Behind the plate Dunn spat in the big mitt and pounded it down with his right fist.

"Look who's here," he cried to Brady in the box.

"Whatyer got, kid, something new," demanded Brady, with a grin.

"The only way I know," replied Kelly, smiling. "If I'm wrong you fellows will have to teach me something dif"—

A Great Hit.

His remarks were cut short. The ball was sailing up to the plate. Kelly stepped forward and with a tremendous swing met the sphere fairly and squarely with his bat. There was a crashing sound and the ball, describing a huge arc in the air, cleared the bull by thirty feet and fell to earth far beyond that rampant figure.

An ear-splitting yell, such as can only be emitted by a negro under the pressure of pleasureable excitement, issued from the throat of Whiskey, nearly bursting the ear drums of the three reporters seated on the bench.

"Some hitter, gem'men, some hitter; Wow!" shouted the colored attendant.

The instant he hit the ball, Kelly dropped his bat and circled around the bases with the speed of a Mott Haven sprinter. Percy Whiting jumped to his feet.

"Hey, Hypo!" he shouted to his camera man, "come here." And when that individual rushed up he whispered hoarsely:

"Snap that fellow in tweny different poses—standing up, lying down, roll over, say please, play dead and everything on the calendar; catching the ball, running the bases and at bat—especially at bat. Hustle now and we'll spring a good one in the late editions of The Georgian this afternoon."

"Do you hit all the ptichers like that kid?" laughed Brady, as Kelly raced over the plate.

"I don't know," replied Kelly, pleased at the question. "You see I never faced a good pitcher in my life. What I mean by that Mr. Brady," he added hastily, running out to the box in fear his answer had been misconstrued, "is that I never played a game of ball in my life and what I will be able to do with your pitching when you get in condition and cut loose is something I know nothing about, I'm afraid I will fall down hard. You see all you did was to toss up a slow straight one that time."

"That's al right, kid," said Brady. "No one ever made such a long hit off me before, and if you can meet the fast one and the curves the way you did that one they will go just as far—further if you pickle a curve ball. Stick around, kid, stick around."

Kelly thanked him for his encouraging words and walked away.

"How fast can you run, Gordon?" asked Bill Smith.

"I have done a hundred in nine an I four-fifths," replied the recruit, with a laugh, "but I'm afraid the record won't stand. You see I timed myself."

"You timed yourself?" queried the manager, in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

Bill Smith looked at his "phenom" long and earnestly. He said at last, "Can that stuff, boy; can that stuff. If you don't, you'll drive me bughouse."

CHAPTER XI.

IT is to be presumed a ball player would look foolish if, just as a game was about to start, he stepped to the home plate, faced the assembled throng, removed his cap and sang the following from the prologue to "Pagliacci:"

"E voi, prutiosto che le onstre povere gabbane d' istrioni, le nostr' anime considerate, poiche noi siam uomini di carne e d' ossa, e che di quest' orfano mondo all pari di voi spiriamo l' aere!"

He would doubtless appear equally foolish if he sang the same words in English:

"Ah, think then, sweet people,
When ye look upon us, clad in our motley and tinsel
Ours are human hearts, beating with passion.
We are but men like you, for gladness or sorrow.
'Tis the same broad Heaven above us,
The same wide lonely world before us!"

There might be some scattering applause, but a vast majority of the unfeeling crowd would yell: "Cut it out!"

Fine Men Among Players.

Yet ball players are men. They are human beings, a fact often lost sight of by those who pay to see them perform. Frequently they are jeered and hooted and insulted by men of a low order of intelligence in the crowds; men who would not dare to say the same things to the players, if they met them face to face on the street.

There are those who say the life of a ball player is degrading; that baseball is a trivial profession. Yet the Governor of Pennsylvania was a professional ball player. So was "Billy" Sunday, the revivalist. So was A. G. Spalding, millionaire and near-Senator from California. So was Edward Hanlon, one of Baltimore's most successful real estate operators. So was Ted Lewis, a professor at Amherst College. So were hundreds of men who are now successful in other walks of life.

Things happen in baseball which never reach the ears of the public. There are tragedies and sorrows, joys and happiness in the national game that the outside world wots not of. All of which in this roundabout way leads up to the introduction to the reader of Thomas P. Morrissey, familiarly known by the sobriquet of "Long Tom."

For fifteen years Long Tom caught behind the bat in the big leagues. In his prime he was reckoned among the best men that ever wore a mask. One year he caught 148 games, handling the delivery of all kinds of pitchers—those that were as wild as hawks and those that had fine control; the ones that had "everything" and the ones that had nothing but a prayer; the curve balls and the treacherous "spitballs." But Long Tom had seen his best days and he was now down in the minor All of which, in the roundabout way, leads up to the introduction to the leagues, with only a brief baseball life before him. His fingers were gnarled and distorted. His right arm was no longer the terror of baseStealers. His legs had gone back on him.

Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta club, had taken a chance and signed Long Tom to a contract. He wanted him principally to coach the young pitchers on his staff and he had an idea that the hot Southern climate might boil the old fellow out and put him into something like his real form. Long Tom was not old except in a baseball sense. He had just turned thirty-five, but in baseball youth must be served.

Made Him Jealous.

Long Tom reported for practice the first day. He arrived in the clubhouse just as the others began their practice on the field. He slowly undressed and put on a uniform, and, picking up his mitt, mask, chest protector and shin guards, walked through the runway that led to the field. He came on the scene at the very moment Gordon Kelly was standing at the plate waiting for Brady to pitch to him, and when Kelly made that tremendous drive he stood stock still and watched the ball in its flight far into right field. Then he turned his eyes on the young man and followed the tall, powerful, lithelimbed figure as it sped around the bases. Something in the sight of the youth filled the veteran with rage and jealousy.

"That's the kind that is puttin veterans out of the business," muttered.

He sauntered up to the group that stood around the home plate and was cordially greeted by those who knew him of old. He was then made acquainted with the young players, who, of course, while they knew him by reputation, had never met him on the ball field. Included in the latter was Gordon Kelly, who shook Long Tom's warped hand and gave the customary greeting. Morrissey eyed the other critically and remarked:

"You're the fence buster of the Southern League, I take it."

"Nothing like that," laughed Kelly, "but I'd like to be."

"I guess you would, all right," returned Long Tom.

A Star Catch.

It wasn't what he said, but the half-sneering way he said it that caused Kelly to look up quickly.

"You must be that correspondence school guy I read about in the paper. I see another paper calls you a 'cotillion leader.' Well, that's where you belong, I'm a-thinking."

Kelly flushed and a look of surprise came over his face at the sarcastic tone of Long Tom. But he merely answered "Maybe so" and walked away. There were some unpleasant things connected with baseball, he thought. He could not understand why Morrissey should go out of his way to belittle him. Long Tom's remarks were entirely uncalled for. There was no occasion for them. He finally came to the conclusion that Morrissey was of a crabbed and morose disposition. Yet he recalled having read columns and columns in the newspapers about this veteran catcher and there had been no word that would lead one to think he was other than normal in his disposition.

As a matter of fact, Tom Morrissey's disposition was naturally peaceful. He, like most ball players, had had his clubhouse scraps, but they had not been of his own seeking. They had seemed to come naturally. He had the reputation of being as game a man as ever went behind the bat, and by hard work and strict attention to business he had earned the respect of his fellow players. But his relegation to the minor leagues had seemed to work a change in him. The truth had come home to him that his baseball days were numbered. The realization of this fact came to him on this fine day in March when he saw in Gordon Kelly the perfect picture of youth. It had suddenly made him angry with himself, and, contrary to his nature, he had proceeded to vent his spleen on Kelly.

When Gordon Kelly walked away from him, Long Tom continued to keep his eyes on the young man, and he watched his every movement. At last he was interrupted by Bill Smith, who yelled:

"A little infield practice now, boys. I'll bat the grounders. The rest of you go in the outfield. Tom, get a bat and knock up some fungoes."

Bailey, Nixon and Long journeyed to the outfield and Kelly went with them. Morrissey selected a lightweight fungo bat and began sending up easy flies. He served Bailey, Nixon and Long in turn and then shouted, "Here, y'are, kid." At the same time he put all the force he could command behind his bat and drove the ball high in the air and labeled to land far over the head of Gordon Kelly.

With the crack of the bat, however, Kelly had turned suddenly and raced with all his marvelous speed toward the center field. After covering more than a hundred feet he stopped and turned again, facing the grandstand and an instant later the ball settled in his uplifted hands. He had timed the hit to a hair.

When Long Tom had signified his intention of sending up a fly ball in Kelly's direction, Bill Smith suspended his work to watch the result

"If he gets under that one, he's a wonder," murmured the manager. Since the newspapers had spoken so facetiously about his "world-beater" he had become harassed by the thought that he had made a mistake in saying anything about the youngster until he had demonstrated his ability in a more substantial manner. There was little or nothing at stake financially and that end of it did not trouble Smith at all. But no manager of a ball club cares to have anything "put over" on him, so that he becomes the butt of the baseball public. When, therefore, Kelly made a really wonderful catch, the worried look faded from Bill Smith's face, he sighed deeply and his somewhat funereal smile shone like a candle through a hollow squash.

"Is that your correspondence school ball player, Billy?" asked Long Tom Morrissey.

"That's him. What do you think of him?" replied Smith.

TOO MANY KIDS

THEY told old Watkins, the showman, that there was no use giving his show in Kornshucks. There were too many kids there.

Old Watkins was in the free show business, and others in the same business had said to him: "The kids crowd in ahead of the old folks and monopolize the show. They absorb all the humorous offerings, and actually interrupt the doctor just at the important point when he unloads his wares, including cures for toothache, rheumatism, and colds and complexion beautifiers, at 50 cents a whack."

These kids, as far back as tradition goes, had spoiled everything in Kornshucks. They had interrupted sermons and lawn fetesand comic operas; and once when there was a sham battle the shooting could not be heard for them.

But in spite of all he was told about those kids, old Watkins went on putting up his tent for his medicine show. He merely listened politely to the people, who wagged their heads and warned him of failure. By the time his tent was up the kids filled the entire landscape back to the horizon. But he went ahead.

About fifteen minutes before the time the show was supposed to start something occurred on another vacant lot a little distance off. A man built a bonfire. Then he produced an explosion. It was no little explosion, but a regular Fourth of July affair. Then came more explosions.

Along about the third of the series the vacant lot where this was going on began accumulating kids. They came at the rate of 1,000 per bang from that time on. By the sixth bang all the kids in town were there, and only the old folks were left for the free show.

Old Watkins said: "You need not follow the kids to see what is going on there, my friends. There is nothing there but a bonfire and an ear-splitting racket. But it will keep the kids occupied and happy, and we can now proceed to have a show in peace."

"Hooray!" applauded the grown people. "Go ahead! Isn't it delightful?"

The performance proceeded. The mothers laughed and the fathers laughed. Why shouldn't they? There was no one stamping on their toes and pulling their arms off. There was no fighting and scuffing and crowding—nothing disagreeable at all. Only the refreshing jokes of the medicine man, made up as a negro or a Dutchman or some other inhabitant of the realm of mirth!

It was great! They laughed and enjoyed themselves and listened with breathless alarm to the dreadful things that might happen to them if they did not avail themselves of the providential chance to buy medicines that would heal all known diseases.

The show was over and all the money to be had was acquired by old Watkins, the free show medicine man, before the explosions and the bonfire died down and released the kids.

DANGER IN EATING MEAT

Statistics Show That People Who Eat Meat Are Susceptible to Typhoid Fever.

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if the patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after-effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has left masses of meat particles undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting; no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name, but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, upon receipt of price, full size jar mailed, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, Atlanta, Ga.

THE

Ice-Kist Crankless Freezer

Just pack it—that's all! The freezer will do the rest. No crank to turn—no hard work—no dasher to clean—no glass to break—no hoops to fall off.

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

'WHITEY' HURT, CRACKERS PLAY WRETCHED GAME

By Percy H. Whiting.

WHEN Whitey Alperman went over after a terrific grounder hit by Spencer in the sixth and caught the ball with the side of his head there was a gasp from the crowd. It was a terrific blow—enough to floor an ox. It didn't floor Whitey, quite, but it put him out of the game.

And through the rest of a gloomy afternoon the fans had a chance to think what a difference it would make to the Crackers if anything happened to Alperman.

The odd thing about Alperman is that he's playing better ball now than he ever played in his life.

It will be recalled that spite work put him out of the big leagues. He and Charley Ebbets had words and the Brooklyn mogul said he would spend $10,000 to keep "Whitey" out of the big leagues. So he sent him to Rochester. But when John Ganzel gave him up there was no question of spite work. Jawn thought he was "all through."

Last year Alperman played sensational ball. This year, with a better club, he is going even stronger.

Said King Brady, the other day, "I've known Alperman off and on through his whole career. He is playing better ball now than he ever did in his life—vastly better than when he was with Brooklyn. And he was a grand infielder then."

ALPERMAN has been a great man for Atlanta. His batting has been timely and his fielding phenomenal. Any man who could plug the gap that Otto Jordan left has some size to him. And Alperman has more than done it. If anything happened to old Whitey the Cracker team would be messed up proper.

IT was a freaky game the Crackers lost yesterday. Up to the seventh the Pelicans had made five hits and four runs. The Crackers had made eight hits and two runs. Then everybody "blew" at once on the Cracker side and the visitors romped, 8 to 2.

It was another wretched game for the Crackers. Good old Joe Dunn had a hideous time of it. Agler pulled a miscue that cost two runs, a couple of pops fell safe for lack of a little determination in getting under them. Tommy Long slumbered at the switch and failed to score from third on a slow double play at first and second and the Crackers wasted enough hits to win three ordinary games.

SEVERAL odd propositions developed. Seventy-seven per cent of the Pelicans' hits came after the fifth inning. Seventy-five per cent of the Crackers' hits were made by the first two men on the batting order. One hundred per cent were made by Long, Welchonce and Smith. Seventy-seven per cent of Atlanta's put-outs were made by the last three men in the batting order.

Everything went by spots. And it was a spotty, sloppy, chilly game.

* * *

THE Pels had all the luck. Spencer's home run over the signs was an easy loft. The same hit to center or left would undoubtedly have been an out to a fielder. A little pebble gave the ball that hit Alperman a bad bound, knocked out a steady infielder and cost another run. The Crackers batted terrifically but never at the right time. For instance, note this coincidence: Three times in succession Long hit a single and Welchonce followed him with a single. Twice none was out. Once one was out. Not once in three times could either Alperman or Bailey, two of the league's greatest pinch-hitters, deliver a safe swat.

PAT WRIGHT, most bitterly execrated of President's Kavanaugh's staff of umpires, served his first sentence behind the bat Tuesday.

Once or twice Pat was palpably off. In a close game it would have been exasperating. With everything shot to blazes anyhow it did not matter.

"But," as one of the ball players remarked, anent the fact that the veteran is generally wrong, "It's lucky Pat's name is Wright."

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 28.—A few days ago I discussed the different teams in the National League race in general. To-day I will return to the same subject, sizing up the Giants and Pirates. Both teams were off all over in the early part of the race.

The New York players displayed some of the worst fielding seen on any diamond since the late world's series. Nothing was sure to the Giants. The pitchers were also out of sorts, Tesreau failing to get moving and Marquard being out of condition from sickness. The Giants hopped into their fielding stride last week with a single bound, and the infield is moving like a string of firecrackers now. Instead of turning outs into base hits, as we were doing, the infielders are now cutting down base hits and converting them into outs, as several of the Pittsburg players will tell you if you get a chance to consult them. That helps.

Following this encouraging sign, both Tesreau and Marquard stepped out and pitched good baseball last week, Rube showing a very fine game against the Pirates when he got tangled up in a pitching battle with Camnitz, the one that went fourteen innings. His fast ball had the hop on it for the first time this season, and when he is getting the jump on his fast one he is one of the best southpaws in the business anywhere. Tesreau also stepped forth in the latter part of this same game and displayed his old speed and the break on his spitter which made him really the leading pitcher of the National League last season.

With these two men going at their best, the Giants are sure to get pitching. The only man on the staff not up to the top of his stride now is Al Demaree, the recruit who has shown such grand form so far this season. He strained his side recently, and will not be ready to work regularly again for about a week. But Tesreau can go to the box every other day if necessary, but it won't be necessary with Marquard and myself in shape to take our regular turns.

THE Giants have not hit up to anything like the pace they showed last season so far, but they should hit harder. Shafer, who has replaced Snodgrass in center field, is one of the most natural hitters I have ever seen, and it is impossible to get him to go after a bad ball. He has a wonderful eye and is a splendid judge of balls and strikes. His batting average does not show his true strength, because he reaches first base so often on passes. He is also lightning fast on the bases once he arrives, and will worry any pitcher badly.

Burns is capable of batting better than he is doing at present. He is still a little strange in the big league berth, but he is a good ball player.

Fletcher is batting hard, and Merkle and Murray have picked up within the last week. Meyers so far has not acquired his last season's punch.

The club will get batting, and then we should climb through the league like the gossip of a kiss through a boarding house.

* * *

PITTSBURG afrittered away ball games until it came to New York, when it took one of those sudden braces and battled us to a practical standstill. After leaving the Polo Grounds, the Pirates went over to Brooklyn and choked down the fond hopes of the Dodgers, when Dahlen had been led to expect something soft after the fine manner in which the Boston club cleaned up four straight on Clarke's crew. The Pirates have the pitching and the hitting, and will be in the contention for the championship.

* * *

BROOKLYN has started to fade, and I expect to see the team drop. Of course the club will not go down to the depths to which other Brooklyn teams have descended in years past, but it will be fighting to remain out of the second division before the last word is in.

* * *

THE St. Louis club is a big surprise, especially to the Giants, but it is going ahead of its normal speed now. It has not the staunchness to last. The team has two excellent pitchers, Harmon and Sallee, and Konetchy is a great ball player. So is Huggins. The rest of the team is nothing out of the ordinary, and a club must be out of the ordinary to win a pennant. Huggins' peppery personality has done a lot for the team. Sallee will do a lot more if he sticks in shape all season.

CARDINALS WILL HOLD ON TO JIMMY SHECKARD

ST. Louis, May 28.—A yarn emanating from Cincinnati to the effect that Jimmy Sheckard would be released by the Cardinal club because his salary was too bulky was spiked yesterday by Manager Huggins. "I have no intention of releasing Sheckard," declared the Cardinal commander, "and I want to state that emphatically. Sheckard is a great ball player, and he was paid accordingly by the Chicago club. We took over his contract, but we're not kicking. Whether he will play regularly is a question. Our club really hasn't shaped itself as yet."

WILLIAMS BREAKS YALE'S LONG WINNING STREAK

NEW HAVEN, CONN., May 28.—Williams broke Yale's record of seventeen consecutive victories by shutting out the Blue on Yale field yesterday, 2 to 0. The game was played on a water-soaked diamond, with the drizzling rain falling at intervals. Each team fielded brilliantly.

Overall, of the Cubs, and Sallee, of the Cardinals, engaged in a pitchers' battle yesterday, which resulted in favor of the former.

The Athletics took a double-header in easy fashion from the Senators yesterday, winning the first 8 to 0 and the second 7 to 1. Eddie Plank, the veteran southpaw, pitched in the first and allowed the Senators only two hits.

* * *

Peckinpaugh, the former Nap utility infielder, secured in trade by the Yankees, will be given a regular position at shortstop. "Peck" is regarded as a fast and brilliant fielder, but somewhat shy with the war club.

* * *

* * *

Harry Lumley, once manager and star player with the Dodgers, has been released by the Troy, N. Y., team. An injury to his throwing wrist perhaps will neeessitate his retirement from baseball.

* * *

* * *

The Braves' second victory of the day was a clean-cut, deserved affair, but the first game was won on a fluke. In the ninth Sweeney hit to the outfield, and Connelly, rounding third, started for the plate. Burns would have thrown him out by nearly ten feet, but the ball, instead of bounding into Catcher Meyers' hand, struck Sweeney's discarded bat and bounded away, while Connelly scored the only run of the game.

* * *

Manager Stovall's triple in the seventh which scored a run, followed by Austin's single, scoring Stovall, were enough to gain a victory yesterday for the Browns over the Tigers.

* * *

C. Webb Murphy, owner of the Cubs, who recently forbade his players to converse with reporters, has another grievance against the newspapers. A short time back Murphy set out on the trail of "Rube" Scheur, a promising pitcher of the Superior, Wis., team, in the Northern League. The newspapers printed the fact and the Superior club owners at once boosted the price of Scheur so high that Murphy balked. Murphy now states the newspapers "queered my deal."

* * *

Dick Rudolph, the recruit from the Toronto team, in the International League, who pitched for the Braves Monday, holding the Giants at his mercy, acted as a relief pitcher again yesterday and once again the New Yorkers were unable to score on him.

COIN GRABBERS CAUSE OF LUTE M'CARTY'S END

By Left Hook.

LUTHER M'CARTY, one of the most valuable instruments of the getting of money under false pretenses in the hands of men who don't like to work, was finally killed in the prize-ring, a place he should never have been allowed to enter. He is the fifty-eighth victim of prize-fighting since the brutality has been eliminated, and it has been used solely to inculcate these principles of manliness and fair play that is invaluable to the youth of our city.

According to the doctors who examined the fighter's body, he had organic heart trouble. According to Jim Corbett and other experts who saw him shortly before he went into the fight with Pelky at Calgary, he was not in good condition. You will be interested to know how it was possible that a man with a bad heart could reach a position in pugilism where even a few gulls and greedy men could call him a champion of anything and draw crowds of a size that would justify their offering him $5,000 to fight for them. This is how it was done and how he was killed:

Up until recent years prize-fighting, the actual fighting, has been possible only to pure brutes, strong-thewed, iron-hearted animals. All fights were either to a finish or for twenty-five or forty-five rounds. This condition made McCarty impossible. It was a survival of the most uncivilized. With the growth of the influence of the public schools this type of man began to disappear. Young men with intelligence boxed or exercised and went into a decent business for a living.

Finally only two of the old breed were left, in two negroes—Johnson and Langford. It is white men who pay to see fights and make pugilism possible, and they would not pay much to see the two negroes. Johnson and Langford had practically abolished heavyweight prize-fighting because there were no fighters fit to meet them.

This condition was bad for a number of men who had made a life work of capitalizing the degradation and blood lust of pugilism. They were threatened with the necessity of doing something useful or starving to death. They dug up the poor old ruin, Jeffries, and pitted him against Johnson, and followed with one or two valiant and unskillful youngsters, but the public wearied quickly of this sort of sport, and heavyweight fighting died.

It was up to these gentlemen to do something in a hurry. The Frawley bill was passed in New York, where the most money is, and this permitted ten-round fights. The ten-round limit is useful because with a little luck an invalid might go through with it and not die the same night. The boxing commission was created. Its business was, among other things, to see that it got enough revenue out of the prize-fighting game to pay its own salaries and expenses.

If Johnson and Langford were allowed to fight that would be practically impossible, so the only two real fighting men in the heavyweight division were barred. This let down the barriers with no real fighters to fear and everybody had a chance to make easy money. Inside of a year a horde of white hopes descended on New York.

They were big, unskilled, inept clumsy, low-browed somnambulists who for the most part, to do them justice, knew that they were not fighting men, but were willing to pose along, as there was money in it. The pace was slow; the fights were short, and one was as bad as another, so there was nothing to fear.

Shaky mitral valves and fat paunch didn't make any difference. In this atmosphere and out of this sort of material Luther McCarty was grown by hothouse methods into a white champion, so that he would draw just so many dollars to the box office. It is doubtful if he knew that his heart was weak. None of the men who were fattening on him would have told him. They could take a chance against the kind of men he was called upon to meet.

Had it been a day of real fighters he would never have gotten out of the preliminary class, and would soon have gone back to some decent work. And now the other incompetent (Pelky) is held for killing him whereas the real authors of his death are the shrewd money getters who lied to him day after day and told him he could fight.

SOUTH ATLANTIC LEAGUE REVISES BALL SCHEDULE

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—A special meeting of the South Atlantic League magnates was held in Savannah yesterday for the purpose of making a number of revisions of the present playing schedule. These revisions are necessary because of the late entrance of Charleston into the circuit. Charleston is said to be suffering considerable inconvenience by reason of the present schedule.

Those in attendance on the meeting were President J. K. Pray, of the Albany club; President W. H. Walsh, of the Charleston club; Secretary Charles E. Walton, of the Columbus association; President A. W. Barrs, of the Jacksonville club; President M. J. Etherage, of the Macon club, and President George W. Armstrong, of the Savannah club.

BOSTON, May 28.—"One Round" Hogan, of California, who was substituted for K. O. Sweeney in the main bout at the Atlas A. A., was defeated in a ten-round bout with Johnny Galiant, of Boston, last night.

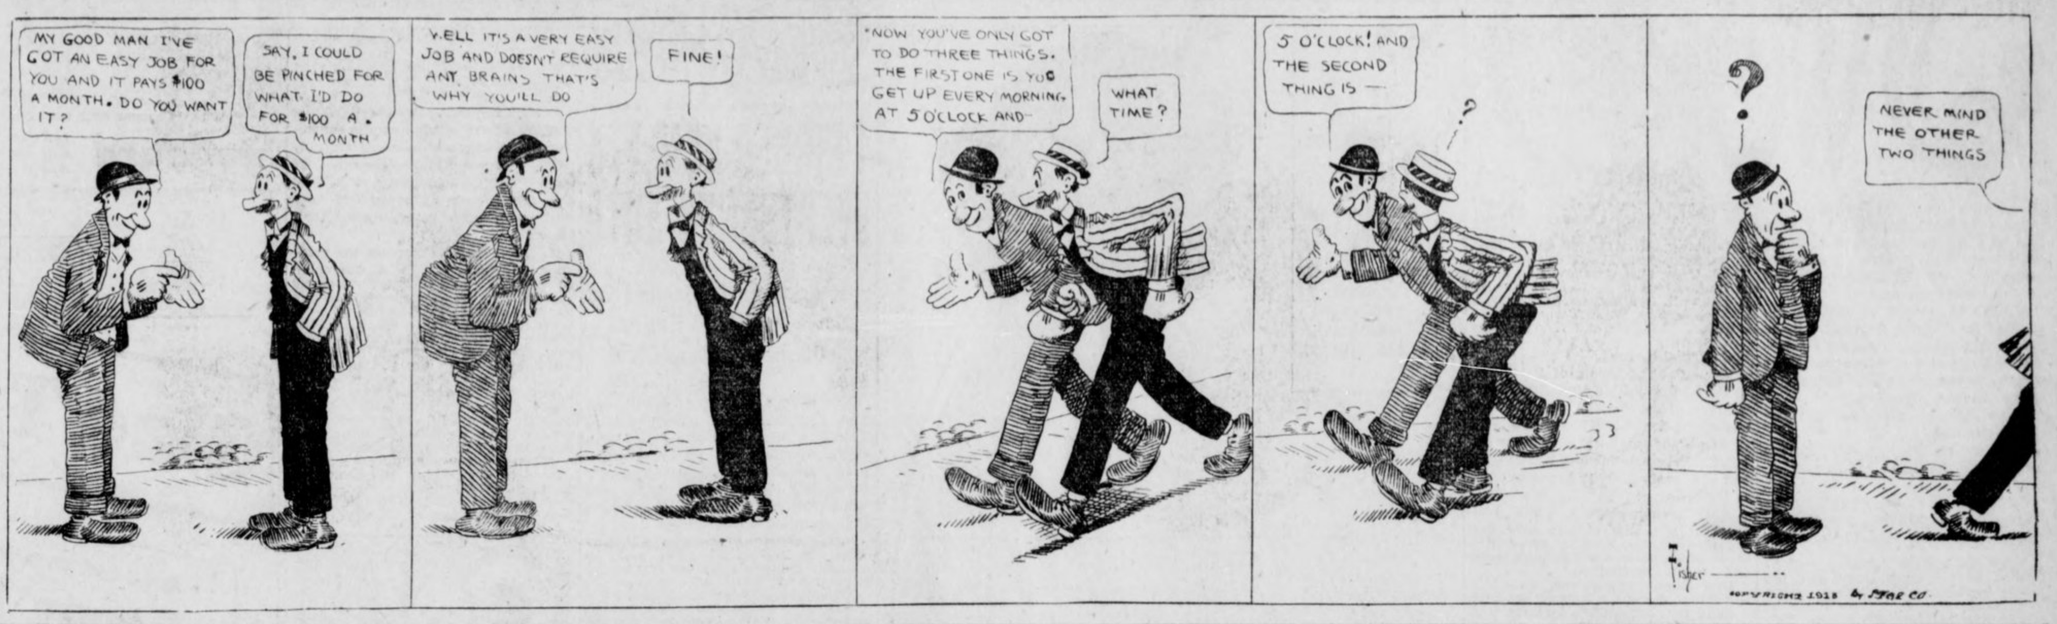
GEORGIAN SPORTS COVERED by EXPERTS

Get Up When I'm Going to Bed? No, Sir! — By "Bud" Fisher



100 MILES HOUR POSSIBLE AT MOTORDROME

That speeds of 100 miles an hour for short flashes will inevitably be reached on the new motordome, going up now at the old show grounds, is the belief of the motorcycle experts who are gathered here to follow the season of racing which is soon to start over Jack Prince's Southern circuit.

Already, with the top of the track completed, and with serious danger lurking in any speed over 75 miles an hour, the riders are hitting up a speed of 90 any hour. That gives a hint of what they will do later. Before they can really "let out" the track must be completed—and this will soon be done. To finish it two feet six inches of heavy planks will be placed at the top of the real racing surface. This surface now in place is at an angle of 58 degrees. The new planking will be placed at 90 degrees—or "straight up." On top of this, also at 90 degrees, will be extremely heavy wire netting, four feet six inches high. On top of this will be the guard rail.

Men Will "Ride the Wire."

When the wire netting and the planks are in place the real speeding will begin. And when this happens the riders will not only ride on the 58-degree surface, but they will actually mount the perpendicular wall and will even ride on the wire netting.

With everything in place the riders can begin to find out what speed the track really has. It is their opinion that it is extremely fast. It has been particularly well constructed and seems right in every particular.

Not Motorcycles Here.

To add to the speed possibilities two new consignments of racing motorcycles have been shipped to the track from different factories, and they are the latest and most improved machines, made strictly for speed, and faster than anything of their size ever built before. Every morning and afternoon now the riders are tuning up their machines and getting them ready for the big doings.

On a good board track the speed limits are usually the nerve and the strength of the driver. The track, when once a man is fairly started, is nothing but a flat road of boards. There is nothing in the way and no turns to take—for the track is a perfect circle.

No Limit But the Sky.

It takes tremendous nerve and coolness to hold a machine steady at high speed, and it takes great power to hold its nose down and to keep it from going straight up and over the top. Aside from this, there is no limit to the speed except the power of the engines, and they are built fast enough to go at a rate faster than man ever rode before.

LIEBHARDT WILL HOOK UP WITH TURTLE TEAM

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—"Sugar Glen" Liebhardt, renowned in song and story as the "Iron Man of the Minors," will return to the Southern League as a member of the Memphis pitching staff as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made by Manager Bernhard. While no announcement has been made to the effect, it is understood that Floyd Kroh, the erratic left-hander, will be released.

BEAUMONT CLUB WILL GET PITCHER WEAVER

Orlie Weaver will probably go to Beaumont, Texas, instead of to New Orleans. Charley Frank has refused to take Weaver unless he can get a clear title to his services, and Smith is not willing to give him up on that basis. Waivers have been secured on him and he will be sent to the Texas League.

CALGARY.

A human life snuffed out, and all for what?
A youth who played the game and reckoned not;
A crowd of human creatures known as men,
And every manlike instinct all forgot.

A crowd of creatures, all in human shape,
Who sit beside the shambles, all agape,
And cry for crimson blood, and still more blood—
And yet men frown upon the lowly ape!

Were we a politician with a desire to commit political suicide, our first move would be to support a bill legalizing the alleged manly art of self-defense.

We have various reasons to be thankful, one of which is that we are not Arthur Pelky.

Clark Griffith informs us that Walter Johnson has not attained his best form, but the form that he has attained is good enough to suit at least seven teams in the American League.

Not that we are prone to find fault with Charley Murphy, but if baseball players were to hold more conversations with baseball scribes and less with barkeeps there would be more regular baseball played.

There is no truth in the report that Mr. Murphy does not allow his athletes to talk to him. Among the athletes this is considered hard luck.

Traveling eighty-seven miles an hour in a motor car is a great little pastime for a man who intends to die with his boots on.

Garry Herrmann puts forth the information that the purpose of the national baseball agreement is to protect baseball players. This will be news to baseball players.

Somehow we have a hunch that even if those English poloists do happen to win there will not be any general mourning.

Some day some wise guy will tell us why it is that, when a baseball league opens its schedule the first ball must be heaved by a mayor or a sheriff or a constable or a justice of the peace or an alley inspector or something.

MERELY A PLEASANT DREAM.

It happened in a cosy spot across the River Styx.
A portly gent who lingered there was in an awful fix.
A crowd of wild and howling imps were walking on his toes
And shoving trays of glowing coals beneath his ruby nose.
I said to Satan: "Why abuse you poor old helpless guy?"
"That person owned a baseball park on earth," he made reply.
"Not only that," he ambled on, with visage grim and dark.
"He is the guy who introduced the peddlers in the park."

MEMPHIS HEARS THAT ATLANTA WANTS KROH

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—Memphis to-day made a cash offer for Third Baseman Frank Manush, of New Orleans, and was turned down by Manager Frank, who insisted that Manush would not be sold unless it were to some major league club. At present the infielder is out of the game, nursing a wrenched leg.

It was also announced that Manager Bernhard would confer with Third Baseman Bales when the Memphis club reached Chattanooga Thursday. Whether the colleglan will be taken on depends upon the showing of Abstein. Ward has given perfect satisfaction at third, and if any further change is made it will have to do with first base.

Waivers have been asked on Pitcher Floyd Kroh, and sea-deep information is to the effect that Bill Smith, of Atlanta, may take the erratic southpaw on for a try-out.

BRONCHO RIDING IS BLAMED FOR M'CARTY'S DEATH

By Ed W. Smith

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight and Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 28—Despite the exonerating verdict of the Coroner's jury Monday night, both Arthur Pelky, or Peltier, as his right name is, and Tommy Burns were held in $10,000 each at a court hearing to answer to the charge of manslaughter preferred by the Dominion Government for the death of Luther McCarty in the ring of Tommy Burns' arena.

Pelky was held directly; Burns as promoter of the contest. The other two concerned—William McCarney, manager of McCarty, and Referee Ed Smith—were detained for a short time only as witnesses and later were permitted to leave the city of Calgary and the country upon furnishing a bond of $500 each and their promise to appear here at some later date to testify during the trial.

Bonds were furnished in all cases without trouble, townspeople flocking out plentifully to sign the court documents.

The preliminary hearing was before Inspector Duffus at the mounted police barracks, and practically the same testimony was gone over as that at the Coroner's jury hearing. Both McCarney and Smith testified at length with Pelky in the prisoner's cage. Burns was not heard, as he was held to be equally guilty with Pelky.

McCarney Off for East.

A strong effort was made by the crown to show that McCarney was an equal promoter in the show with Burns, but this failed and the Philadelphia man was permitted to leave on the midnight train with the body of McCarty.

Dr. H. H. Moshier, the man who declared that the death of McCarty was due to a fractured spine at the base of the brain resulting in a hemorrhage, again was called and repeated what he had said the day before. As a result nothing new was brought out and the case remained as mysterious as it was ten minutes after McCarty had been declared dead.

Billy McCarney, manager of McCarty, gave me his first statement of what he thought was the matter with McCarty in the ring. After hearing McCarney and the testimony of the doctors I am strongly of the opinion that McCarty received a slight fracture of the neck during some practice work he did with bucking bronchos a short time before the contest.

McCarney said to me before boarding his train with the body of McCarty:

"These doctors say that a fracture of the kind might have been received within four days of autopsy and that there then would be no fibrous growth around the injury.

Luther delighted to ride fractious horses and get them to buck. He often got some nasty twists in this way and I was forever begging him to cease the sport that he thought was so good. But he would not, and I have an idea that he might have been injured in this way and not known it."

McCarney is out of the boxing game for good, he said. He will make no attempt to find anybody to take McCarty's place in his estimation, and will go into the theatrical profession, in which he has made many friends.

Wife Will Accompany Remains.

On the way East McCarney expected Mrs. Luther McCarty to board the train and accompany the remains into Chicago and beyond into Ohio, where the burial will take place at Piqua.

The settlement of Luther's estate will be made at that time. It is known that Luther's ambition was to provide for the future of the child now two years old. McCarney will endeavor to arrange to carry out the "big boy's" wishes in this matter. Luther's father will be waiting the arrival of the remains at Piqua.

HOPPE BEATS JAP CUE EXPERT EASILY, 500 TO 33

NEW YORK, May 28.—Willie Hoppe successfully defended his world's billiard championship title at 18-inch balk line, two shots in, against the challenger, Kodji Yamada, of Japan, here, the score being 500 to 33.

Since the rules of the game were so changed that the "anchor" was barred, no other such one-sided championship game has been seen. Hoppe won the bank, but failed to score when he led off. Yamada ran 15 and this was his best attempt, as in the next ten innings he added only 18.

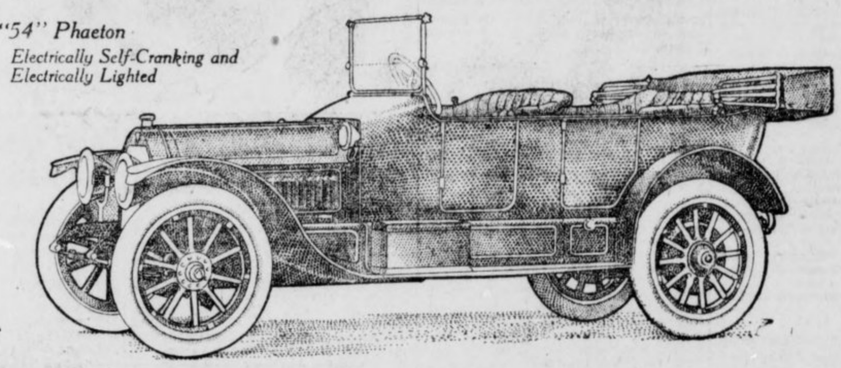
The World's Largest Builders of Six-Cylinder Automobiles

"54" Phaeton
Electrically Self-Cranking and Electrically Lighted



Study the Dealer as Intently as You Do the Car

Do not purchase an automobile of a dealer in whom you cannot have complete confidence. Personality is a large factor in business dealings. The dealer whose personality engenders your confidence in him, whose business principles are sound, who is prosperous and for whom owners of cars he has sold say good words is the logical man from whose firm you can safely purchase an automobile.

GOOD SERVICE with a poor car is a better buy than poor service with a good car.

If you would know the value of dealers' service in the operation of an automobile, you have but to consult men who have owned several different makes of cars and, if you will talk with any HUDSON owner, you will appreciate the value of the type of service we furnish to the owner of an automobile.

All business is done solely on confidence.

Confidence of one man in another. If you cannot have confidence in a dealer who sells the car you have selected, then yours is an unsafe purchase.

The Service You Buy When Your Choice is a HUDSON

There is scarcely any limit to which we will not go to insure HUDSON owners the fullest satisfaction from their cars. We are more interested in you and your motoring interests after we have sold you the car than before you have bought. Yet, we realize that this is contrary to the attitude of the average automobile concern.

This service that we give you is but keeping faith with the Hudson Motor Car Company. There is a clause in our contract with the factory, which insures every purchaser of the highest standard of motor car service to be had, and this we cheerfully and rigidly adhere to in our deals with owners.

The New HUDSON "Six" rose to a higher point as a sales success than any 6-cylinder car has ever seen in the same length of time it has been on the market. Its exceptional performance has been unusual among 6-cylinder cars.

Its smooth, sweet-running mechanism gives a sensation of flying that is lacking in a 4-cylinder car. You can throttle it down to 3 miles an hour on high speed and pick up to 60 miles an hour with smoothness and ease that will be a revelation to you, if you have owned 4-cylinder cars.

You can go through city traffic at 3 miles an hour on high, with every cylinder hitting as smoothly as if you were going ten times as fast.

Avoid Disappointment in Getting Delivery

Ninety per cent of HUDSON orders are for spring delivery—hence, within a few days, it will be impossible to secure a delivery date for a car.

Hence, we cannot impress too strongly upon prospective purchasers the necessity of securing a fixed delivery date for their cars.

It would be well to come see the New HUDSON "Six" at your earliest convenience, or write or phone for new catalog.

The "54" Phaeton sells at $2450. The "37"—the "Four-cylinder masterpiece"—is $1875, prices f. o. b. Detroit.

4 PINNED BENEATH OVERTURNED AUTO

Fifth Passenger in Wrecked Car Summons Help to Extricate Others and Chauffeur.

MARIETTA, GA., May 28.—Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Flemister, Miss Charlotte Flemister, Miss Charlotte Fite and a negro chauffeur, all of Cartersville, were injured when Mr. Flemister's automobile to-day turned turtle two miles from Marietta, near Fair Oaks. None suffered broken bones.

Mrs. Flemister's condition is serious from the shock. She had been in a highly nervous state for two weeks following the death of her baby.

The accident occurred when a front wheel came off. It was said a garage attendant at Cartersville had warned Mr. Flemister of danger from this wheel.

The chauffeur was pinioned to the ground by the steering wheel and Mrs. Flemister was caught under the back of a seat, while Mr. Flemister and his daughter were held down by the body of the car. Miss Fite alone was able to extricate herself. She summoned nearby cotton field hands, who lifted the car from the victims. They were brought to Marietta by a passing auto for medical attention.

Mr. Flemister is a wholesale grocer of Cartersville.

A Shower of

Remnants

Of White and Colored Cotton and Mixed Fabrics

At Half-Price

Quite impossible to tell you on paper all it means to women to be able to select from such an assortment of desirable fabrics as these—the season's most popular materials, reduced by active selling, to short lengths—at half-price.

Wonderful assemblage—larger in its scope, more varied in its kinds than any previous sale of Remnants. You can hardly think of a practical or desirable fabric that is not among them—from the least expensive gingham to silk-and-cotton mixed novelties, and each piece means the saving of exactly half.

The collection is made up about equally of white and colored goods, including such as ratines, voiles, Swisses, poplins, seco silks, chiffon lisse, silk-and-cotton mixed goods, crepes, piques, luna lawns, Persian lawns, dimities, nainsooks, madras, ginghams, percales, and various others.

Lengths varying from two yards to dress patterns, of which there is a goodly supply.

Find the remnants on special tables in the Wash Goods Section, second floor, opposite the elevators.

BIG VOTE GAINS MAKE PONY CONTEST MORE EXCITING EVERY DAY

Saturday night the lists close in The Georgian and American's pony contest, and the entrants will "run it out" without further competition.

The list has gone well beyond 300 and includes boys and girls from all parts of Atlanta and the State and widely scattered areas outside the State.

One advantage the contestants are overlooking to a large extent is the fact that payments of overdue accounts bring votes just the same as the identical amount paid on new subscriptions. Boys and girls whose parents, relatives or acquaintances owe anything for subscriptions to The Georgian and American can collect the money themselves, bring it in and be credited with votes.

The same interview will open an opportunity for them to seek renewals, so even if they know that acquaintances have been taking The Georgian and American they may profit by seeing them and canvassing for votes.

Big gains continue to be shown in the vote column. From now on the races promise to grow more exciting daily. Names and standing of contestants follow:

The following are the officers of the association: Charles F. Wilkerson, president; A. W. Martin, vice president; Fred Shaefer, secretary and treasurer.

On the committee on constitution and by-laws are J. R. Pendleton, chairman, and J. M. Barclay.

A committee on membership was appointed. J. M. Shearer, chairman; W. B. Stovall and J. L. Fincher.

COTTON

NEW YORK, May 28.—Influenced by easier cables and further bearish weather news, the cotton market opened easy to-day, first prices being 1 to 3 points lower than Tuesday's final. Old crop deliveries came in for considerable pressure, but was also some liberal selling of new positions. Later the cable prices rallied.

Liverpool was said to be a seller of July after the call, but the large spot interest purchased July in rather large volume, causing the market to steady, with the result that prices rallied about 1 to 4 points higher than the initial level. The selling was scattered.

During the forenoon the ring crowd was inclined to sell on the favorable map and the selling became freer. The buying of July was scattered and those buying seemed to be selling the new crop. Schill and Mitchell sold July as well as late positions.

The market developed a reactionary tendency, May dropping 8 points to 11.45, while July receded 3 points from the opening. New crop months, however, held steady around the opening level.

A certain broker issued notices to-day for 10,000 May, which was said to be for Liverpool account. This, however, had no effect, and fell flat on the market.

Theo Price, in this week's issue of his market report, is decidedly bearish. The report, in part, follows: "American short interest about covered and obtained its cotton from visible and invisible supply. Says if July prices are forced to extreme there is enough tenderable low grade cotton to liquidate that position. He refers to present large excess of interior stocks, and says crop has improved since rains fell. Think people expect Bureau of 83.5. Believe acreage will be increased about 5 per cent."

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: May, 11.45; July, 11.58; August, 11.40; October, 11.14; January, 11.10.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: May, 12.37; July, 12.03; August, 11.63; October, 11.24; January, 11.28.

If Little Chicks Are Properly Fed Loss Will Be Less

Wholesome Advice by an Expert Who Has Tried It From Every Angle.

Judge Marshall: I want to ask you a number of questions, if you will not think I am too greedy for information.

I live on a farm about two miles from town and am trying to raise chickens enough to make a living from.

I do very well with those I succeeded in raising, but I loose about half of my chicks before they are two weeks old.

As soon as the chicks are hatched I give them a good feed of mash, composed of equal parts of corn meal and wheat bran mixed with hot water, allowing it to cool a little before feeding. I feed this once a day and cracked corn three times a day; but I have much trouble with sparrows eating up the feed.

I also have much trouble with the red mites bothering my sitting hens, which I seem unable to control.

Then, again, I have trouble every summer by having great, big, fat hens drop dead without any warning. They will be apparently well one day and the next they will be dead. They are very fat and fine and I see no reason why they should die thus.

I always feed a little good condition powder of some kind three times a week.

If it is not asking too much of you I should appreciate an answer to these troubles. I am yours very truly, MRS. E. E. SPEER.

Tifton, Ga.

Cut Out Wet Mash.

ANSWER—We have texts enough for a number of good sermons but will have to do like the boy said he did in hunting for the cows: Go to the end of the lane and scatter.

First, in regard to the little chicks, I would say cut out the wet mash entirely, or, at least, until they are two months old and then if you want to use some of your feed in that way it will be all right, but not for the newly hatched ones. Feed rolled oats dry, and the cracked corn fine enough so they can eat it well, providing you can not get the ready mixed chick feed at your grocers in Tifton. But there is no question that the rolled oats is good, and so is the corn, but feed them absolutely dry.

Another place where you have erred seriously is in feeding as soon as hatched, if that is what you intended to say.

There is nothing that will so quickly get the digestive organs out of order; or, for that matter, prevent them from ever getting in order, as feeding newly hatched chicks at once. Give them a chance to season out a little, as one old poulityman used to say. When they first hatch they are a jelly, as it were, and it takes a day or two for them to toughen up, ready to digest what is given them. So, the way to do is to wait forty-eight hours before any feed is given. They will not starve, but be all the better for the little fast. They may have a good supply of sharp sand to peck at. Then feed the rolled oats or prepared dry chick feed. This can be continued until they can handle coarser cracked corn and wheat.

Green Feed Necessary.

All the while they must have good green stuff of some kind and a little dried beef scrap after they are three weeks old, and I think you will have no trouble if everything is kept clean and free from mites. The sparrows can be controlled by feeding under wire netting runs.

When you set your hens, move them out of the hen house into some clean shed, or, for that matter, out of doors, using barrels for the nest. But you should not have them in the houses. Take a pint of oil of tar, a pint of gasoline, three quarts of kerosene; mix thoroughly and spray or pour over the roosts and the sides of the house where the roost poles rest. If this is attended to an hour before roosting time, it will usually about finish the job, both on the poles and the hens. If any are left on the hens, dust them thoroughly with some good lice powder. After they have been really cleaned out, it will pay to grease the poles with hot lard and a brush.

As to your loosing your fat hens by sudden deaths, I would say that I think you have been using too much condition powders. In my estimation even a little is too much when hens are in health and laying. You have weakened their digestive organs by overstimulation, coupled with too much fat in hens that are, no doubt, over two years old. When hens get a little old and fat, heavy behind, it is the best policy to send them to the butchers.

Such hens have passed their useful time. They have slowed up on laying and with no drain upon their systems they fill up with fat inside, where it presses on the heart and is the cause of the sudden deaths you speak of. It is no trouble to detect such hens in the yard, and it is a good plan to use them while they are in good health, rather than wait for them to come to the sudden death referred to.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, May 28.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.: Wheat—General trend of crop advices indicate that no improvement is taking place in the winter wheat situation, and while the volume of new buying is not large, the pressure from short sales is light. We continue to prefer the long side on weak spots.

Corn—Speculative sentiment swung to the selling side; being more or less influenced by the sharp break in the May delivery and the probability of larger receipts. Some further recession in prices seems probable, but we would not press the short side on weak spots.

Oats—Local professionals seem to favor the selling side. An easier corn market would probably effect oats to some extent. On sharp depressions we favor the long side preferable.

Provisions—We are apt to get a somewhat easier market to-day, but on weak spots there seems to be a continued good class of buying.

STOCKS

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Pressure was exerted on the list at the opening of the stock market to-day, and declines ranging from fractions to 2 points were sustained. St. Louis and San Francisco shares were the weakest in consequence of the appointment of a receiver for the road in St. Louis. Frisco common was 1⅝ lower, selling around 21½, while the second preferred lost 2 points. Union Pacific and Southern Pacific bore up well. The former gained ½, while the latter, after sharing fractionally, recovered.

American Smelting was sold for a loss of 1½. Other issues which were off were Amalgamated Copper, ⅛; American Can, ⅛; Canadian Pacific, ⅛; General Electric, ⅝; Missouri Pacific, ½; Pennsylvania, ⅝, and United States Steel common, ⅛.

Steel soon recovered its loss. St. Paul also recovered its fractional decline in twenty minutes of trading. Chesapeake and Ohio opened ⅛ up, but lost its gain. Reading gained fractionally after opening unchanged.

The curb market was irregular. Despite the suit brought in London charging that an illegal pool was formed for speculation in shares of American Marconi stock after the Titanic disaster, this issue was only ⅝ lower on the curb.

Americans in London drooped.

The market continued irregular and dull during the forenoon and recessions were in evidence. Smelting declined 1⅝ to 66⅛. Copper was off ⅝ at 73⅛. Canadian Pacific was off ⅛ at 232. Southern Pacific was up ⅛. Steel, St. Paul and Reading were off ¼. Chesapeake and Ohio was up 6⅛ at 64⅜.

Call money loaning at 2¾c.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

No Better Chickens Than the White Plymouth Rocks

They Are as Beautiful as They Are Useful and Profitable—Are Good as They Look.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

In our estimation there are no better chickens than the White Plymouth Rocks. When carefully bred and rightly handled they are as beautiful as they are useful and profitable.

With their glossy white plumage, red comb, wattles and earlobes, and yellow legs, they look fine enough to eat, and they are just as good as they look.

I am not raising them and I have none to sell, but I know what I am talking about, for I have handled them in years past and speak from experience.

If you want to produce good ones, however, you must be mighty careful to breed from first class stock. If you are just starting in the business you can not use too much care to produce a start of the very choicest breeders. Then let your selections each year be the very best. Cull out the poor ones, both as to shape and color. Keep nothing that does not show a robust constitution, the ones with the broad breasts and backs, heavy thighs, nice and taperring, arched necks, with a low carried tail. Such a specimen is not only good looking in shape, but contains stamina worth considering. Weed out those with the slim, straight necks, long and narrow or roached backs; legs too long, standing too close together at the knees; tail slim and carried too high, forming an angle with the back. These points of defect are very often seen, and upon what some call good specimens. Of course, they are rarely all seen upon the same fowl, but frequently two or more are.

High Type Utility Fowl.

When you have the very best possible shape in a White Rock for the show room you have a utility fowl of the very highest type. There is no doubt about that. As to color, the Standard says pure white throughout, web quill and all. You see there are no qualifications. Simply white. Any departure from this is defective, such as creaminess, brass and the like; brass simply being the creaminess intensified into a positive yellow, as seen upon poor specimens of males two years old or older. This is one of the things we have to fight against in our endeavors for the best. Gray or black specks are quite common and are often distributed through the plumage in pin head sizes, and are defective according to size and number and the intensity of color. Positive black spots of any kind will disqualify. A good, pure, white plumage throughout, free from any creamy tinge, even though it contains a few minute specks, is much more desirable in every way than one that has a tendency to be creamy. Do not throw that kind away, for it is a hard matter to get a pure white one. The ear lobes should be bright red, as in all the different varieties of rocks, any permanent, or what might be called enameled white, disqualifies. Look out for this, as it only takes a mighty few of the right kind of black specks to throw them out. What the Standard terms positive white, in treating with white in specimens demanding red lobes, is a white that seems coated right on to the surface, and not a changeable white that shows white one minute and reddens the next.

Single Comb.

The comb upon both the male and female should be single and straight upon the head, not soft enough to turn to one side or the other or to wrinkle in its course from where it starts at the base of the head to the blade at the rear. A comb of five points is the one desired, although a four-point one would not be so very objectionable in the eyes of the best breeders. Look out for feathers, stubs or down on the shanks, which should be clean and free from any appearance of feathers. One can soon learn to detect the greater defects and the little ones will come to light later on in the game.

If you get a strictly first class White Rock for the fancy man or the show room, you will have a good one to breed broilers or roasters from and a good one for laying, too, for that matter.

You know it used to be a great idea to those that knew nothing about the business that a thoroughbred or standard bred chicken, one good enough to put into the show room, was some kind of a freak not suited to any other purpose, and entirely unfit for the practical man. Nothing could have been farther from the facts, and many are just now getting wise along this line, for it has been one great aim and earnest endeavor of the standard makers for years to have for their ideal chicken one that was all chicken from head to tail.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Tract of 400 Acres To Be Subdivided

Woodland Hills as a Home Neighborhood—Peachtree Widening Postponed.

Announcement was made Tuesday of perfected plans for improving one of the largest acreage tracts in the Atlanta section. W. E. Worley, J. A. Mahoney and Eugene C. Callaway, incorporators of the Woodland Hills Company, will begin in a few days to improve 400 acres between Ansley Park and Druid Hills, and probably $40,000 will be spent at once putting in 80-foot chert drives, water and sewers and tile sidewalks.

This subdivision is to be known as Woodland Hills. The developers have consulted with engineers as to topography, and plats of the property will be out shortly. The lots will be large, and the owners expect to sell them all and to have a thriving home community in three years.

The last addition to this tract was made ten days ago, when 110 acres was bought for $40,000. There will be a combined frontage of about 2½ miles. The tract is on the Cheshire Bridge, East Paces Ferry and Williams Mill Roads and Highland and Moreland Avenues.

Widening Considered.

The Finance Committee of Council will meet Friday to fix up the budget covering improvements for street work and other city improvements, and will at this time take up the matter of setting aside $5,000 for widening Peachtree from Harris Street to Forsyth Street. The citizens' committee went before the Finance Committee Monday afternoon and outlined its request.

Extensive improvements hang on this project. E. W. Alfriend and Mrs. J. B. Whitehead expect to erect a twelve-story office building between Cain and Harris Streets, and another property owner has plans for a five-story structure.

Building on Wesley Avenue.

Wesley Avenue, to the west of Peachtree Road and a few rods north of Peachtree Creek, is beginning to rival Pace's Ferry Road as a situation for country homes. Among the home owners on the thoroughfare are General Clifford L. Anderson, Clark Howell and David Woodward, and now comes J. C. Chipley, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, with announcement that he has started a residence. Mr. Chipley's house will be two stories high and will cost approximately $15,000.

Several other property owners, it is said, will build on Wesley Avenue during the summer.

Warehouse Is Completed.

Colonel John J. Woodside's storage warehouse No. 3, which was destroyed by fire some time ago, has been replaced with a more complete structure. In a few days the warehouse will be completed and ready to be used again. The building is located on Butler Street and has a great amount of floor space.

Pryor Street Building Finished.

The building at 96 South Pryor Street, built for Harry G. Poole, the undertaker, has been completed and is now occupied by the concern. This structure cost approximately $25,000 and is one of the handsomest of the smaller buildings on Pryor Street.

St. Charles Cottage Bought.

Mrs. Willie Mae Levi has bought, from W. H. Craig, through the Ralph O. Cochran Company, a six-room cottage at 174 St. Charles Avenue, 60 by 190, for a price not named. This property is between Ponce DeLeon Place and Bonaventure Avenue.

Building on Ponce DeLeon.

People traveling out Ponce DeLeon Avenue of late have been impressed with the great amount of building that is being done on that thoroughfare and on tributary streets. In the neighborhood of Ponce DeLeon and Barnett Street and Bonaventure Avenue, for instance, twelve or fifteen new houses are either building or recently completed. It matters not which way you turn, say the realty men, there are more houses in process of erection than ever before in the city's history, with prospects for more in the future than at the present.

Fresh Bit of Acreage.

A 28-acre tract on Pace's Ferry Road that has been in the hands of the present owners for 50 years has been placed on the market at $13,500. This is between "Woodlawn," Robert F. Maddox's estate, and the Howell Mill Road. It has been listed with a well-known real estate agency, and has been suggested for subdivision.

Speech and Thought Make Our Lives

Everything That We Do Is Accomplished in Time BY THOUGHT. Thinking Is Your Only Real Power; Time Is Your Real Property—and There Is Little of It.

Copyright, 1913.

We human beings ceased to be animals and became MEN when we first used thought in place of brute strength.

At some distant day in our development the animal that preceded us here made up its feeble mind that there was something better than strength, teeth and claws, and began to use its little brain.

This animal, our ancestor, the so-called pithecanthropos, or monkey-man, observed the saber-toothed tiger ripping open the stomach of a monster three times its size, watched the mammoth ploughing through swamps, crushing down trees, observed the great reptiles and all other proofs of brute force, and, without realizing it, this ancestor said vaguely to himself:

"I can't compete when it comes to teeth and claws, weight and bulk. I am a feeble thing in this jumble of power and battle. I must THINK the way out."

And so our real human life began.

Our ancestor with a forehead one-quarter of an inch high, a jaw that stuck out as far as the jaw of a gorilla, with teeth bigger than any of those of any bulldog, and with long arms dropping below the knees, that could crush a man of to-day with ease—this old ancestor of ours decided that he would get out of the battle for supremacy of muscle and teeth and see what could be done with the brain AND WITH THINKING.

You can imagine how the thinking process started.

It was hardly real thought at first, just a kind of intelligent impulse. Our ancestor sat up in a tree rubbing his nose and looking at the saber-toothed tiger that couldn't climb.

He saw the shining teeth, six inches long perhaps, and he didn't like the looks of them.

Later, when the tiger was gone, he climbed down and picked up a sharp flint, ten inches long, heavier, sharper and harder than the tiger's tooth.

He held this in his hand, struck his brother with it, killed the brother, and felt highly satisfied with his intellectual accomplishment.

He had discovered that a tooth made of stone, held at the end of an arm four feet long, could do as much damage as the tooth of a tiger.

So he fastened his sharp flint to the end of a piece of wood, sat in the tree, stabbed the tiger in the back as he passed, broke his backbone, ate his flesh, took the teeth to make implements and ornaments for himself—and so began the thinking human race.

Later man used explosive dynamite shells in place of sharp flints, he dwelt in skyscrapers in place of holes in the rocks, he used flying machines in place of canoes dug out of a log.

BUT ALL THE TIME HE WAS A THINKING ANIMAL INSTEAD OF AN ANIMAL RELYING ON STRENGTH, TEETH, MUSCLE, THICK HIDE, CLAWS.

And every step that he gained in his upward climb toward control of the earth and dominion over the animals was gained by the THOUGHT that was started when he made up his mind to use the sharp flint and conquer the long white tooth.

All of this leads to the thinking man, sitting on the ash barrel in the picture at the top of this page.

He is a descendant of all the thinkers of three hundred thousand years past.

He comes in an unbroken line from the old half monkey, half thinking creature that discovered the possibility of conquering animals stronger than himself.

And this thinker on the ash barrel in poverty, in anxiety, in remorse, is unfortunately the type of many of those—more than half, probably—who represent the so-called "civilization and marvels of achievement."

This picture is a copy, simply made, of Rodin's great statue, "Le Penseur."

In his statue of thought Rodin shows the man of power seated on the rock solving his problems by thought.

In the picture that we print on this page the artist shows the man of sorrow and of weakness, pitifully trying to use for his betterment and for his defense the power which has been man's only weapon.

Readers, whether you be old or young, realize NOW that your salvation, your hope, your chances in life, are all in the thinking power hidden away in your head.

How much will you use that power of thought?

How long are you going to wait to use it efficiently?

To what extent can you make thought, recently acquired by men, control the animal forces and passions that date back millions of years to our earliest ancestors of the days when this earth was young?

Are you going to use your power, your health, your clear mind, and your will NOW to solve your problems and protect yourself, and be a benefit to the human race, or are you to wait, and waste, and wonder, and delay, until it is too late, as with this man?

The Thinker

He Thinks Hard, Bitterly—But Too Late. Thought Conquers and Solves Life's Problems, but Only When the Thought Controls the Power of the Body and the Mind. When the Power is Gone, THOUGHT COMES TOO LATE. (SEE EDITORIAL.)

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Ill Temper

If Allowed to Progress in Children, Its Effect Is Felt in Later Generations to Destroy Often the Happiness of Many Homes.

Written For The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

SOMETHING like one hundred and twenty-five years ago, a little girl was born in New England. She was pretty and bright, and her parents made much of her; and she soon became a spoiled child in the way of disposition.

She was irritable and fault-finding; and these tendencies were not corrected, but excused on the ground that "Abbie was high-strung," and "smart," and "not like other ordinary children."

She married, young, a man of rare sweetness of character, and with an inexhaustible patience. He was devoted to his handsome wife, and she made him a very good consort, so far as her industry and economy and loyalty went.

But she worried him with her fault-finding and irritability.

He made the great mistake of establishing his wife with his relatives, and all her quarrelsome and irritable tendencies were, of course, aggravated.

She bore him six children, and as she had never been taught anything of the laws of prenatal influence, she fretted and complained about the increasing numbers of her children, before their birth.

Erred in Telling Them.

And after they came into life and she grew to love them she made the great error of telling them how unwelcome they had been. This was especially true of the second child, who was scarcely a year younger than her older sister.

This second child inherited all her mother's irritable characteristics and prided herself upon being extremely high-spirited and capable of "answering back" with some sharp retort.

She, too, was excused, and even lauded for her peculiarities.

She was regarded as "out of the common" and "just like Abbie."

When she married her husband did not possess the amiable qualities of her father, and, of course, discord soon prevailed.

Children came into this home, and so a second generation was reared in this unfortunate atmosphere.

The grandmother lived until she reached the age of ninety-four, and with each year her disposition grew more unpleasant.

When the daughter visited at her old home there was always bickering and scolding and quarrelling.

And into these family fusses three generations were drawn.

Then came a fourth generation, after the grandmother died, and this fourth generation was brought up under the same conditions, and to-day this generation is cursed with the original uncurbed temper and unhappy tendency to find fault of the first great-grandmother, which came down through the second grandmother and the father, and was, like a river, fed from streams running into it from other branches, which all became corrupted when the original stream was approached.

Have Wrecked Homes.

Sisters have become enemies, brothers quarrel; jealousy, ill temper, gossip, back-biting and all manner of bad habits, resulting from uncontrolled temper, have destroyed homes, and in some of these homes a fifth generation of little children is becoming infected.

And all this might have been averted, and heaven, instead of hell, been established in the homes of four generations had the first child been taught self-control, good-will, amiability, gentle manners, the religion of kindness and courtesy.

All of these women had kind hearts toward the poor, sick and needy. They were always "good neighbors" when there was trouble in other homes.

But they never learned the strength and power which lies in silence, and they never learned the beauty of the soft answer which turneth away wrath.

The two original sinners (for such uncontrolled tempers are sinful) were women of great strength of intellect and of dominating personalities, therefore, their influence was far-reaching and powerful. In many of their descendants the unpleasant qualities have taken the form of petty meanness and ignoble nagging toward all those with whom they are thrown in close association.

Yet the tendencies can all be traced back to the first source.

Teach Them Kindness.

If your child, madam or sir, shows wonderful "spirit" and is very "high strung" and brilliant with repartee in the way of the quick retort, do not laugh and applaud and think you have something to be proud of, something out of the ordinary.

Teach your children the religion of kindness, the religion of gentle voices, amiable manners, generous judgments and self-control.

Make them understand early how vulgar is uncontrolled temper and how ill-bred the sharp rejoinder.

Do this for their own sakes and the sakes of unborn generations.

.:. Housewives and the Art of Housekeeping .:.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE reign of the good housekeeper is only just beginning. Every month sees some new invention that helps to diminish the slavery of housework. Housekeeping has for ages been an art, and, as with all arts, its practitioners range in their abilities from mediocrity through fair talent up to positive genius.

Now housekeeping is becoming a science, and science has this advantage over art—that it tends to equalize abilities by bringing results through mechanical and automatic methods which, anybody can employ.

The French Kitchen.

For a plain male citizen, who knows little about the secrets of the kitchen, it is a wonderful revelation to read the articles in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE and to look at the devices there shown which relate to this fast-growing science. Almost everything about a house can now be done with half the expenditure of labor and time formerly required. To be without this knowledge and these inventions is not merely to be behind the times, but it is to live harder, less well and more expensively than there is any necessity for.

The kitchen is the stomach of the house, and upon the way in which it performs its functions the welfare of the whole establishment depends. My attention has just been called to a model French kitchen. All the world has long looked up to France as the ideal home of culinary art, and it is evident that she does not intend to be left behind in the modern transformation of this art into a science.

The kitchen has also been called "the theater of the French housewife," and this theater is becoming really a fascinating place with its display of electrical ranges, scientific lamps, automatic grinders, mills and churns, Pasteur filters, coffee makers, ice cream freezers, devices for easily getting rid of waste substances, porcelain sinks as white and clean as Alpine snow, scouring machines, filters, convenient cupboards, and all the glittering array of nickel, silver, copper, aluminum, bronze and granite-ware utensils that fill the room with bright reflections.

Not to Visit, But to Help.

One of the great charms of a French kitchen is that the mistress is frequently to be seen there, not merely as a visitor, but as a helper and director. She inspires her servants by her presence, and by her advice. She does not pretend to live in another world than theirs. They know that she understands their business as well as they do themselves, and even better. She can take their place if necessary. This is as true of the rich as of the relatively poor.

The economy of the French people has long been world-famous, and nowhere is it more brilliantly displayed than in the kitchen. A French family, as has often been said, could live, and live well, upon the waste of many American families. And the exercise of this economy—this art of getting all the good out of things—fascinates those who practise it. It has the charm of all applied knowledge. They not only get all that is good—they make the good better. I know many a little country inn in France where, for three or four francs, wine included (a franc is worth 20 cents), one can have a really better meal than can be had in Atlanta for two or three dollars.

And yet meats, and similar things, cost about as much in France as they do here. The secret lies in economical management and good cooking. It is no wonder that a first-rate French cook can command in New York a salary of $5,000, or even more. And if he, or she, retains on this side of the Atlantic the economical skill learned at home, more than half the salary is saved to the employer.

To Learn Economy.

One thing to be noticed in the French kitchen is that there is usually no false economy in the choice of apparatus. Everything is of the best, or at least good and substantial. The kitchen, in its way, is as well furnished as the parlor. You may be sure that this spells economy in the end, for if it did not it would not be found in France.

I have often been surprised on entering a house in France, which, in America, might be taken as the abode of people in very humble circumstances, to find a far larger and better-stocked kitchen than many rather pretentious houses possess here, accompanied by a culinary skill in its mistress which would earn her a large salary on this side of the ocean.

No doubt we shall learn this economical wisdom in good time—and the sooner the better.

I SHOULD WORRY

By WEX JONES.

IT used to be jolly to chatter with Polly
On fashion and frivol and froth of the day;
But now it's sheer folly talking to Polly,
For she puts "I should worry" to all that she'll say.

"I should worry like an onion"
(Here she laughs, she feels so tickled),
"I should worry like an onion
And discover that I'm pickled.
I should worry like a saw"
(How that "worry" gets me riled!),
"I should worry like a saw
Till my teeth have all been filed."

You hear all the flappers, tongues going like clappers,
Bandy about this ridiculous phrase;
Prue, Polly and Lizzie will jabber you dizzy,
Twisting it round in its different ways:

"I should worry seven days
And become a little weak."
"I should worry," "I should worry,"
Every time they speak.
"I should worry like a fish
And get the hook."
"I should worry like a gumdrop
And go North with old Doc Cook."
"I should worry," "I should worry"—
Phrase that sets me in a flurry,
Phrase that sets my goat a-scurry—

Oh, well, I should worry.

VETERANS READY FOR VOTE ON COMMANDER

Miss Ruth Johnson, of Cleveland, Tenn., maid of honor for Tennessee Division, Sons of Confederate Veterans, and below, Miss Katherine Todhunter, of Lexington, Mo., maid of honor for Missouri Division, United Confederate Veterans.

Next Reunion Place To Be Selected Wednesday Afternoon. Alabama Monument Dedicated.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 28.—The decision to vote on the election of commander-in-chief and to select the next meeting place at 3:30 o'clock this afternoon were the important results of this morning's session of the United Confederate Veterans, in reunion here. Some routine business was transacted, but the two impending selections overshadowed all other matters, allowing them but little import.

Upon the very eve of the election it is still generally believed that General Bennett H. Young will be re-elected commander-in-chief. The selection of the next meeting place appears to be a dead heat between Jacksonville, Fla., and Richmond, Va.

The only aspirant to the office held by General Young appears to be General K. M. VanZant, of San Antonio, Texas, who has a fairly formidable following.

General Irvine Walker, chairman of the committee appointed at the Macon reunion to co-operate with a committee of the Grand Army of the Republic in regard to a joint peace jubilee of the two organizations, submitted a report recommending that at least 10,000 Confederate veterans attend.

The dedicatory exercises of the Alabama and Florida monuments this morning drew thousands of veterans and the attendance at the morning session was unusually light.

Action by the veterans on a resolution asking the Federal Government to purchase Johnson's Island in Lake Erie, near Sandusky, Ohio, will be taken Thursday morning, according to a committee report submitted today. Thousands of Confederate veterans who died in Northern prisons are buried there and a monument has been erected to them on the island by the women of the South, at a cost of $30,000. It is stated that the island will be obliterated as a historic point unless immediate action is taken to preserve it.

Try Macon Man for Shooting Neighbor

MACON, GA., May 28.—Mallary Bedingfield, a prominent Macon business man, is on trial in Superior Court to-day, charged with assault with intent to murder, because of the shooting last November of his next-door neighbor, Fred Guttenberger, an orchestra leader, whom he mistook for a burglar.

Mr. and Mrs. Guttenberger were the principal witnesses for the State. Mr. Bedingfield told the jury that he fired toward the ground and one of the bullets deflected, striking Mr. Guttenberger.

Gen. Lomax, Dixie War Veteran, Dead

WASHINGTON, May 28.—General Lindsay Lundsford Lomax, Confederate officer in the war between the States, died at Providence Hospital to-day. He was 78 years old. Funeral services will be held to-morrow at his old home in Warrenton, Va.

General Lomax was taken to the hospital about two weeks ago with a fractured hip, the result of a fall while visiting his daughter in Warrenton

Wilson Would End Party Conventions

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The abolition of political conventions for nominating purposes and the elimination of the electoral college were advocated by President Wilson to-day in a talk with Representative Britten, of Illinois.

The President told the Congressman that he long has favored the shortening of the ballot and he believes the abolition of the electoral college would accomplish this purpose.

Georgia Millionaire Weds Sister-in-Law

NEW YORK, May 28.—Thomas McMillan, Savannah millionaire, member of the firm of McMillan Brothers, manufacturers of copper turpentine stills, was married to-day to Miss Mamie Bliss, of Savannah, sister of his first wife and for the last seven years, since her sister's death, in charge of the McMillan household.

The bride was visiting her sister, Mrs. Edmund Usina, in this city, when Mr. McMillan met her here. The wedding came as a surprise.

Clyde Ship Calls Help by Wireless

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 28.—The Clyde line freight steamer, Katahdin, is lying disabled off the North Carolina coast, according to an interrupted wireless message received here.

An electrical storm put the wireless station out of commission as the message was being received, and the nature and extent of the Katahdin's injuries could not be ascertained.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., May 28.—Senator Himes' common marriage bill, providing that any man and woman who register at a hotel as man and wife are duly married, passed the Senate by an overwhelming majority.

The measure is expected to pass the House without opposition.

CONLEY WAS IN FACTORY ON DAY OF SLAYING

James Conley in his new affidavit to the police Wednesday admitted he lied in his first, when he said he wrote the Mary Phagan death notes Friday. He said he arose about 9:30 Saturday morning, drank some whisky and at the corner of Forsyth and Nelson Streets met Frank carrying a bundle. Frank told him to wait for him. He went to the factory with the superintendent, he said, and Frank put the bundle into a trash barrel.

Admission that he was in the National Pencil factory on the day of the murder of Mary Phagan was gained from James Conley, the negro sweeper on whom suspicion has turned, after cross-examination by detectives at police headquarters.

The negro, who became the center of attention with his amazing story that Leo Frank had told him to write the death notes, changed his narrative again to-day. Confronted by E. F. Holloway, a foreman in the plant, he admitted having been in the factory after having steadily maintained that he was on Peters Street between 10 and 2 o'clock that fatal Saturday and at home all other hours of the day.

Says Confession Is Near.

Holloway, after leaving the secret grilling at which the admission was obtained, declared he was sure it was only a matter of hours before Conley would confess. He asserted that if he had been allowed to put questions to Conley he could have gotten important information.

The police questions were, of course, all put with the idea of gaining information against Frank.

Chief Lanford had announced that he would go before Judge Roan with a request for an order allowing him to confront Frank with the negro, so that Conley's statement would be admissible in court. Lanford, however, failed to carry out his plans, although he would not admit they had been abandoned.

Later Chief Beavers said that the plan to confront Frank with Conley would not be carried out to-day and that its wisdom was doubtful, as, of course, Frank could not be compelled to answer any questions.

Refuse to Admit Suspicion.

The police refused to admit that suspicion was turning or should be turned to Conley, who has told one falsehood after another since his arrest. They tried resolutely to construe every one of his statements as against Frank and would not admit that the continued contradictions of the negro made his value as a witness next to nothing.

The police declared that Conley had been asked to write the contents of the death notes and had spelled night watch" as it was in the note, "night witch," and "self" with the "l" and "e" transposed as in the notes. What all this shows, in view of the fact that the same officials had announced that they had conclusive evidence by "experts" and that Frank wrote the notes, is not plain.

Conley was also confronted by General Foreman N. V. Darley in the presence of Detectives Black, Scott and Lanford and the negro made important admissions that will no doubt force him to admit his guilt.

Conley admitted that he sat at the elevator shaft on the first floor at 12:30 on the afternoon of the murder and saw Darley in company with Miss Smith descend the stairs. Conley described Miss Smith as wearing a raincoat and Darley with his coat on with no hat. Darley stated that both descriptions were absolutely correct in every particular. Strange to say, neither Darley nor Miss Smith saw the negro, for he was seated in the shadow of the steps and never made a sound.

Conley said that after Darley came

G. T. Pruitt, an iron worker, 71 Walthall Street, was crushed by a swinging beam at the Healy Building, Wednesday. He was taken to Grady Hospital. His leg was injured badly.

Pruitt and a companion were pinned against a wall by a girder swung by a huge crane. Pruitt's companion escaped injury.

BODIES OF MOTHER AND GIRL IN RUINS OF HOME; SON HUNTED

Sheriff Sees Slaying Mystery in Burning to Death of Mrs. S. C. Stevens and Her Daughter in Lonely Farm House---Find Evidence of Crime.

That the mother and girl whose charred remains were found in the ruins of their home seven miles southeast of Atlanta early Wednesday morning were murdered and the house set afire by the murderer in an effort to obliterate all evidence of the deed was the astounding declaration made by Sheriff J. A. McCurdy after an investigation of the tragedy.

Positive identifications of the two women as Mrs. S. C. Stevens, 40 years old, wife of William Stevens, a 70-year-old Confederate veteran now in Chattanooga at the reunion, and their adopted daughter, Nellie Stevens, 13 years old, were made by neighbors

Conditions leading up to the theory that the deaths were the result of murder are these:

The charred bodies of the women were found lying in the center of a bed room in the rear of the cottage. Near at hand were the remains of a shotgun.

Mrs. Stevens' skull had been crushed in. A hoe found in what had been the hallway leading from the room is believed to have been the instrument used to strike the woman as she arose from her bed, with the shotgun, to meet the intruder.

That the door of the room was open at the time of the encounter is believed to add another link to prove the affair a murder.

The method in which the daughter met her death could not be ascertained, owing to the charred condition of her body.

Son Quarreled With Mother.

Inquiry among the neighbors developed the fact that Wade Stevens, the 16-year-old son, who disappeared from his home Tuesday afternoon, had quarreled with his mother and sister.

Mrs. L. G. Self, who lives a short distance from the Stevens home, told Sheriff McCurdy that the boy had a tilt with his parent because she would not permit him to come to Atlanta during the absence of his father.

Mrs. Self stated that Nellis Stevens had appeared at her home with a package of Wade's clothing, which she asked Mrs. Self to keep that night to prevent the boy from disobeying his mother and leaving the house.

This statement, coupled with others, to the effect that Wade Stevens had on numerous occasions acted in an infractious manner—at one time snatching $65 from his mother's hand and running away—have led Sheriff McCurdy to start a hunt for him in order that he may be questioned in connection with the murder.

The house was burned during the night. Its ruins were first discovered at 8 o'clock Wednesday morning by J. A. Nelms, who was passing the scene in a milk wagon. Nelms, after viewing the smoking embers of the building, summoned J. L. Cowan, a neighbor, and notified the county police.

When Sheriff McCurdy arrived on the scene the remains of the two women already had been found by Nelms and Cowan. Mrs. Stevens was identified by her false teeth.

When the bodies had been taken out of the ruins they were examined. Mrs. Stevens' skull was seen to have been crushed in.

It was this fact that first led the authorities to suspect foul play. Careful examination of the surrounding embers in the place where the bodies were found brough to light a shotgun barrel, the stock and woodwork of which had been burned off.

The weapon was seen to have been close to the positions where the bodies were discovered.

That the women had left their beds before they met their deaths was another conclusion drawn by Sheriff McCurdy. The bodies lay in the center of the floor while the iron frames of the beds were over in a corner of the room.

The door to the room was open. Its half demolished frame still stands in the ruins. Just outside the door the hoe was found.

Sheriff McCurdy's theory is that the murderer fled through the door, casting the hoe with which he had slain the women in the hall. That the plan to set fire to the house and burn the bodies to hide the crime came as a second thought.

The house was about 50 yards from the road in a clump of trees. It is in a lonely spot and the nearest neighbor is beyond earshot. That the screams of the women would not have been heard is safe to conclude.

Girl's Skull Crushed.

Another development that tends to show murder, came with the discovery that the skull of Nellie Stevens had been fractured, also. A sharp crack across the top of the head showed possibility that a knife-like weapon had been used, striking with such force as to cleave the bone.

The positions of the bodies in the ruins tends to bear this theory out—that the murderer had struck the girl with his hoe after crushing Mrs. Stevens' skull.

Mrs. Stevens' skull, it was shown, was crushed in by a blow directed at her from in front. Her body was found just three feet from the doorway. Directly behind this lay the body of Nellie Stevens.

It is thought that Mrs. Stevens, when she took up the shotgun and started towards the door at the sound of the intruder, was followed by her daughter. When the older woman opened the door, Nellie was directly behind her. The murderer, then, if he stood just without the doorway, with hoe in hand, struck Mrs. Stevens first. With a second blow he felled the girl behind her.

Open Knife Under Girl's Body.

The gun barrel was found close to the bodies of the women and the hoe was found out in the hallway.

POLICE EXPECT NEGRO CONLEY TO CONFESS

Sweeper, Under Fire of Questions, Admits Being in Factory on Day of Slaying.

ley, whose confession that he wrote the mysterious notes found at the side of murdered Mary Phagan at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, has developed into one of the most puzzling incidents of the case, made a statement to a Georgian reporter on Wednesday morning bearing on the whereabouts of her husband on the afternoon of the murder that is utterly at variance with statements made by Conley.

Conley has repeatedly told detectives that on the evening of April 26, the night Mary Phagan was murdered, he left his home at 172 Rhodes Street at 6 o'clock and went downtown, remaining there until 8, when he returned home.

The woman who says she is his wife told a Georgian reporter that Conley came home at 2 o'clock in the afternoon of April 26, and REMAINED AT HOME UNTIL MONDAY MORNING AT 8 O'CLOCK, APRIL 28, when he went to work at the pencil factory. He returned home about an hour later, she said, and told her he didn't have to work that day, because a white girl had been murdered.

Her Story of His Actions.

"Jim left home about 9 or 10 o'clock Saturday morning and said he was going downtown. He came back somewhere in the neighborhood of 2 o'clock, and told me he had been at the near-beer saloons on Peters Street with a gang of niggers. I was in the kitchen when Jim came in the front door, and I heard him moving around in the front room several minutes before I called him. Then he began joking me and fooling like he always does. We sat in the front room and talked a little while and then I went back in the kitchen.

"I heard Jim moving around after I went into the kitchen, and I thought he was going out again. I went into the front room and couldn't see Jim. I reached over to pick up a shawl that had fallen to the floor, and Jim poked his head over the top of the dresser. He had been hiding behind it, just to see what I would say. We sat around all afternoon and talked, and Jim didn't leave the house any more until Monday morning, when he went to work."

Not Seen by Neighbors.

The woman said her husband did not appear nervous or excited when he came home on the Saturday afternoon of the murder. She said he is always fooling and joking, and was even a little more playful than usual. She said also that he said nothing to her about having written any notes for Mr. Frank, and said she had never heard him speak of his employer.

No negro could be found in the neighborhood where Conley lives who had seen him at home Saturday afternoon.

Hattie Crawford, a negress who lives at 170 Rhodes Street, next door to Conley, declared that she was at home all Saturday afternoon and Saturday night and that she did not see Conley. The first time she saw him was Sunday morning, when he was sitting on a stump in his back yard, she says.

Accuse Negro Conley.

In an effort to discover how the negro Jim Conley, now the center of attention in the Phagan mystery, was regarded at the National Pencil factory by the girls employed in the trimming and finishing departments where Conley worked as a sweeper, two Georgian reporters late Tuesday afternoon interviewed six forteladies and some 50-odd girls at the factory, 37-39 South Forsyth Street.

Without exception, the ordinary workers said that they had no opportunity to ever judge Conley's character, as they were too busy and there were forteladies there to protect them.

Mrs. G. W. Small, a forelady of 37 West Fair Street, said that before the murder of Mary Phagan the negro Jim Conley was slow moving and negligent of his duties, taking his time about performing any task he was asked to do.

"After the Phagan murder," said Mrs. Small, "I noticed a great change in the negro. He did the things I told him to do with much more promptness. His whole demeanor changed.

"I never did trust him," declared Mrs. Small, "and he knew it. I certainly believe that if anyone working in this factory did that terrible deed it was the negro Conley. I said from the first that it was no white man's job, and I have always believed that Mr. Frank was innocent."

Several of the young women, however, defended the negro as a fairly good workman.

All Think Frank Innocent.

Every employee of the National Pencil factory, without exception, scouts the idea that Leo Frank had anything to do with the fate of Mary Phagan. Each one is loyal and is yet to be convinced that he had any part in the crime of which he now stands accused.

One woman who is employed in the finishing department asserted that the negro Conley was impudent several time.

A number of the girls stated that they had smelled whisky on the negro. Miss Eulah May Flowers told of her experience when she went to the storage room one evening and there stumbled over Conley, who was dead drunk, stretched on the floor.

E. F Holloway, the timekeeper and foreman of the pencil factory, says he had just about made up his mind to discharge Conley when the crime was committed, but Conley showed improvement and that he kept him on, until he caught him washing the shirt which caused his arrest.

Deductions Damaging.

Making deductions from Conley's first affidavit, here are a few facts which tend to throw suspicion on the negro:

Conley says that Frank, after dictating the notes, said to him: "Why should I hang?" If Frank intended committing a deed which would warrant hanging it is preposterous to hold that he would so commit himself to as unreliable a person as a negro.

Conley did not say he had written the notes until after he had lain in jail for weeks. Yet, his confession was not in the least incriminating to himself.

Conley made his statement not until Frank's case was under investigation by the Grand Jury. He made it voluntarily then.

Frequently Intoxicated.

Conley, the negro, was brought into close association with the factory girl employees. As sweeper he brushed the refuse from beneath the chairs in which they sat. As elevator conductor he operated the cage, crowded with girls, up and down the shaft.

Conley frequently was intoxicated while on duty.

On the afternoon of the murder Conley's story as to his whereabouts lack corroboration. The negro states that he was on Peters Street for at least two hours, yet he can give the name of no one whom he saw there during that time to bear out his statement.

At the first address Conley gave as his home it was found he had not lived there for a year.

Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, declares she saw a negro sitting by the elevator shaft (which Conley operated) as she left the factory at 1 o'clock.

Shortly after this Mrs. Albert White went into the factory to see her husband and get some money to buy a dress. Her husband, Albert White, was at work on the fourth floor with the assistant foreman and Tom Darley says is true.

Mrs. White says that she saw a negro who sat immovable at the foot of the elevator shaft as she entered the factory. She could not identify him because of the indistinct light. But as Conley admitted he was there five minutes before it is reasonable to believe that it was Conley that Mrs. White passed.

According to the statement of E. F. Holloway Conley had no business in the factory on the day of the murder, which was a holiday. Holloway says that the negro denied being there when questioned by him. Now Conley admits that he was there.

Holloway believes that had not Darley escorted Miss Mattie Smith down stairs that she and not Mary Phagan would have been the victim.

Found Negro Falsified.

Conley told the officers when he was first arrested that he could not write. Later they found releases that he had written for watches, and he admitted he had been lying. He gave them an address on Tattnall Street when they took him in custody. It later was found that he had not lived there for six months or a year.

In his affidavit of last Saturday he swore that he wrote the notes found by the body of the dead girl at the dictation of Leo Frank the day before the crime. Tuesday night he repudiated this affidavit and said that it was on Saturday that he wrote them.

The result of this series of lies and misstatements was that suspicion was gradually shifting from Leo Frank to Conley in spite of the attitude of the police. The culminating action that pointed the accusing finger in his direction was his new statement of Tuesday night, which was utterly at variance with his affidavit in its most essential point—the date.

With his first affidavit repudiated and worthless, it will be practically impossible to get any court to accept a second one. If a second one is offered action will be taken at once to impeach it and it is regarded as most unlikely that it would be accepted in the circumstances.

Now Changes Date.

In his original affidavit Conley swore that he wrote on Friday, April 25—the day before the murder—the notes which he believes were found by the body of Mary Phagan. He swore that he wrote them at Frank's dictation. In the revised statement that he made to the police Tuesday night, Conley declared that instead of writing the notes on Friday, he wrote them Saturday about four minutes before 1 o'clock.

His second statement is impeached by the fact that the negro has repudiated his first affidavit. It may be impeached further by the development that at the time he says Frank was dictating the notes to him Frank, as a matter of fact, was on another floor talking to Harry Denham, Arthur White and Mrs. White.

Frank and the other three persons all have testified that it was within a few minutes of 1 o'clock that Frank came upstairs and said that he was going to leave the building and that if the three did not wish to be locked in the building they would have to leave also. Mrs. White left at 1 o'clock Frank and Denham and White remained in the building.

The negro in making the second statement described exactly who was in the building at the time, on what floors they were and what they were doing, indicating that he must actually have been there or else has read the papers very carefully. Until his second statement he had denied repeatedly that he was in the factory on the day of the crime, and had told the detectives of his whereabouts at various times of the day.

Unable to Prove Whereabouts.

He was unable, however, to corroborate his declaration that he was on Peters Street between 10 o'clock in the forenoon and 2 o'clock in the afternoon. He could name no one he had seen between those hours.

Despite the new developments, the detectives, of course, stand firmly by their theory of Frank's guilt. They assert that they have the testimony of four handwriting experts that the writing on the notes found by the body of Mary Phagan positively is that of Frank. This evidence is lessened in importance by the fact that three other handwriting experts have declared as positively that the writing is that of Newt Lee, the negro night watchman in the pencil factory.

So far as is known no expert comparison has been made between the notes and the handwriting of Conley. If such a comparison has been made the results have not been announced.

The detectives are placed in a peculiar position by the new statement of Conley. If they are to believe a word of his statement that he wrote the notes at Frank's dictation they are forced to discredit absolutely the testimony of their four handwriting experts that the notes are those of Frank. If they accept the testimony of the experts, on the other hand, they must take the position that both the first and second statements of the negro are worthless and have no bearing on the mystery.

ODD FELLOWS OF STATE IN SESSION

Establishment of Fraternity Home Question Before Savannah Grand Lodge Meeting.

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—The Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows of Georgia met in annual convention in Savannah to-day, when Mayor Richard J. Davant delivered the address of welcome for the city, and Thomas Hoynes, deputy grand master, for the Savannah lodges. Response was made by Grand Master W. S. Coleman, of Cedartown. Following the public exercises the Grand Lodge went into executive session.

Simultaneously the Daughters of Rebekah, the woman's auxiliary of the Odd Fellows, met in grand assembly at Odd Fellows' Hall. A good deal of politics is to come up during the sessions of the assembly. It is rumored that there is to be a fight for grand warden, for which Mrs. R. J. Winters, of Atlanta, is a candidate.

Whether or not Georgia is to have an Odd Fellows' home is one of the questions to be decided by the Grand Lodge. At the Gainesville meeting last year a committee was appointed to investigate and report at this meeting. Under the present arrangement the Odd Fellows have a pension plan, but it is said that this is not satisfactory.

There are 2,500 Odd Fellows and 300 Rebekahs present.

Mr. Belmont will urge the Senate leaders to call Mr. McAdoo and ask for the benefit of his opinion.

BODIES OF TWO WOMEN FOUND IN FIRE RUINS

Sheriff Suspects Victims in Tragedy in Lonely Country Home Were Slain.

An open knife was found under the girl's body.

That the door was open at the time the women met their deaths was established by the fact that the doorknob was discovered in the ashes inside the room. The door opened on the inside and, therefore, the knob would have fallen in the room if the door had been opened.

The testimony of Nelms, the milk wagon driver, who was first on the scene, is considered of great importance in describing the positions of the bodies and the weapons found. Nelms Wednesday morning, in telling of the tragedy, said:

"When I saw the smoking embers of the building, as I was driving by, I hastened up. At first I did not suspect that anybody was dead.

Finds Two Bodies.

"I looked about in the ruins, however, and soon discovered through the smoke what looked to be a body. I walked through the ashes to the spot, and sure enough there was a human form. I looked about and soon found another form. Both were charred and beyond recognition.

"I didn't wait to look further, but ran over to the next house, about 200 yards away, and got Mr. Cowan and telephoned the police. Cowan and I came back and together we hunted over the ruins until the police came. We found the shotgun, the iron part of the hoe just outside the room, the knife under the girl's body and the doorknob. We didn't touch a thing, though."

With the arrival of Sheriff McCurdy came also Police Chief Beavers and Police Sergeant Whatley, of Atlanta. Mr. Whatley is a brother of Mrs. Stevens.

Excitement ran high as crowds of persons from the surrounding country arrived at the scene.

'T. R. Averted War With Japan'

Witness Says Fleet Turned Trick

Defense's Mainstay Faces Jail

Colonel Roosevelt and, at top, George Newett, who is being sued for libel; at the bottom, Judge Flannagan, who is presiding

Deposition, Said to Accuse Roosevelt of Being Drunk, Will Be Read to Jury.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 28.—That there was very serious danger of war with Japan during the administration of Theodore Roosevelt and that the Chief Executive met the danger and averted war by sending a fleet around the world was the statement of John Callan O'Laughlin, a Washington correspondent of a Chicago newspaper and a commissioner to the Tokio Exposition, appointed by President Roosevelt.

O'Laughlin was a witness for the Colonel in Roosevelt's $10,000 libel suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.

"Did you seriously mean that there was danger of war with Japan during Roosevelt's administration?" asked Attorney Belden, who was cross-examining O'Laughlin.

"There was very serious danger," replied the witness.

Settled Question "Right."

"Colonel Roosevelt met that danger. Obviously Japan would not start with a fleet in the Pacific waters. We settled the immigration question right then."

The witness emphasized the word "right."

O'Laughlin was asked by Attorney Belden if he had been an emissary to arrange for the reception of Roosevelt by the Pope and the King of Italy when the Colonel was in Rome. O'Laughlin said he had not.

The jury was sent from the room while the attorneys argued on the admitting of testimony concerning published reports about Colonel Roosevelt's drinking. Attorney Belden said that the defense wished to show that reports that Roosevelt drank were general in 1912.

"Did Not Deny Reports."

"We shall show," he said, "that this defendant heard those reports and that this plaintiff did not deny them. Roosevelt has been the most talked of man in this country, and if reports of his drinking have been so common as we shall show, he could not be damaged in any sum by the publication of such a report in a little country paper.

"The question of Roosevelt's reputation is vital in this case—his reputation in Marquette County, in this country and in the civilized world. In the plaintiff's bill, he asserts that his reputation for sobriety is well known throughout the 48 States of this country, and that his reputation for sobriety was good before the publication of this article by the defendant.

Disclaims Any Malice.

"Mr. Pound is an able lawyer. No lawyer in Michigan has tried more libel suits than he has. He knew that damages could be increased by reason of malice behind the publication. We will show there was no malice.

"In our answer we set up that there was no malice and that publication was made in good faith and that the defendant had been told and believed reports of Roosevelt's drunkenness were true.

"Dr. Abbott recognized the existence of such reports and deemed it worth while to answer them in The Outlook. Therefore, we have a right to show the existence of these reports as showing good faith and absence of malice on the part of this defendant."

"We shall not claim," said Attorney Pound, "any vindictive or punitory damages. We ask only actual damages such as would accrue in the absence of express malice. This is by direction of the plaintiff."

Claim Actual Damages.

"That means," said the court, "only actual damages, which my be 6 cents or $60,000."

"That is correct," said Mr. Pound.

"Then," said Attorney Belden, "in the absence of the demand for a retraction, no damages may be asked by way of punishment. But counsel has already charged malice to this jury and we can not eliminate these impressions from their minds. Therefore, we have a right to show there was no malice and we purpose to offer testimony of men of standing to show this general reputation.

"Precedents are few, for men of Roosevelt's standing and prominence have seldom brought such suits, but we have a somewhat parallel case in that of Dailey vs. Kalamazoo Publishing Company in the Supreme Court."

Cites Parallel Case.

He then cited the case.

Colonel Roosevelt held a whispered conference with Attorney Van Benschoten.

"Mr. Belden and ourselves are not very far apart," said Van Benschoten, addressing the court. "Newspapers, however, do not always tell the truth and reports can not be admitted unless it is first shown that Mr. Newett had read the newspaper or heard the report in question. If Mr. Newett takes the stand and swears he had heard or read such reports and believed them to be true, they would become pertinent."

Scores Defense's Stand.

"The result of the contention of Mr. Belden," said Attorney Pound, "would be that a reputation as pure as that of St. Paul could be blasted by a lot of irresponsible gossip mongers. Counsel is not entitled to this testimony, anyhow. He can not mitigate and justify at the same time. The two things are incompatible.

"The presumption of law, as your honor has said, is that the character of every man is all right. No affirmative proof of character is required. The Supreme Court has also held that unless the truth of the published charges is proved the good faith or lack of malice of the published can by no means mitigate actual damages."

Judge Flannagan interrupted to say:

"Counsel will please confine himself to the two questions here at issue, which are:

State's Points at Issue.

"'May defense introduce evidence of reports and reputation to demonstrate his good faith.'

"'May defendant introduce evidence of reports and reputation by way of mitigating damages.'"

"I shall so confine myself," said Mr. Pound.

"I shall show your honor the King of England sued a newspaper for libel for claiming that the King was a bigamist because, while prince, he married a daughter of an admiral of the fleet before he married Queen Mary.

"Would it have been a defense to say that defendant knew nothing of the facts, but had heard rumors to that effect? The court held it would not."

At this point Judge Flannagan adjourned court until 2 p. m.

T. R. Coins New Expression.

"Bully, plus," was the new expression coined by Colonel Roosevelt this morning to describe his state of physical well-being, following a long walk along the shores of Lake Superior and a hearty breakfast. He arose early and appeared in excellent spirits when court opened.

John Callan O'Laughlin, Washington correspondent for a Chicago newspaper, the first witness called, devoted the early part of his testimony to answering questions relative to the intimacy of his friendship with the former President.

Prior to the examination of O'Laughlin the counsel for the defense spent three hours going over 200 depositions they expect to present, and discussing the points they hope to bring out in support of the editorial in which Newett stated that Roosevelt "was drunk, not infrequently." Judge Flannagan also announced there will be no session of the court on Memorial Day, but that a full day's work would be done Saturday.

Known Him Many Years.

O'Laughlin testified that he came to know Colonel Roosevelt when the latter was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in 1897; that Roosevelt dissuaded him from enlisting at the time of the Spanish-American War because he (O'Laughlin) "was married and had no money to keep his wife," and that during the seven years Roosevelt was President he saw him morning, noon and night and at the shaving hour. It was Roosevelt's custom, he explained, to receive callers while he was being shaved each morning.

Following the expiration of the Colonel's term as President, the correspondent continued, he met him at Khartoum upon his return to civilization from Africa; accompanied him on the greater part of his Continental tour, and upon his return to the United States met him frequently until the New York campaign in 1910 and the swing around the country in 1912, when he was with the Colonel's campaign party. His testimony regarding Roosevelt's drinking follows:

Denies Seeing Him Drunk.

Q. From that acquaintance what can you say as to whether or not you ever saw him under the influence of liquor?—A. Not only have I never seen him under the influence of liquor, but such a suggestion seems to me silly.

Q. Ever see him drink?—A. I have seen him drink a small stem glass of champagne at dinners. He never drank more than one glass.

Q. What is the Gridiron Club?—A. An organization of newspaper men in Washington, organized to receive distinguished men. It gives two dinners a year.

Q. Are there official dinners in Washington?—A. Four dinners and five receptions given by the president are official.

Q. Is liquor served at these?—A. At the dinners—seldom at the receptions during Mr. Roosevelt's term.

A wordy skirmish between counsel on the two sides in the case, in which Judge Flannagan entered, was caused by an objection to one of Attorney Pound's questions. Judge Flannagan ordered Attorney Pound to beg Attorney Andrews' pardon. The cross-examiantion of O'Laughlin was by Attorney Belden, chief counsel for Newett.

Main Witness Faces Arrest.

James Martin Miller, depended upon as the chief witness for the defense, will not appear on the stand, it was learned to-day. Instead a deposition by him will be read to the jury.

When it was announced that Miller would testify at the trial that Colonel Roosevelt was intoxicated at a dinner given for former Speaker Cannon, a telegram came to Marquette requesting that Miller be arrested and detained until an officer could arrive from New York, where a charge of grand larceny had been made against him.

It was then announced that Miller's deposition would be read in court, and that Miller would remain at his home in Minot, N. Dak.

MISSIONARIES IN JAPAN DECRY ALIEN LAW

Strong Protest Against Oriental Exclusion Is Sent Protestant Churches in America.

NEW YORK, May 28.—The attitude of the American missionaries in Japan toward the California alien bill is contained in the following resolution received here to-day by the Rev. Charles H. McFarland, secretary of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the strongest Protestant organization in the United States.

As American missionaries resident in Tokio, Yokohama and vicinity, we have viewed with deep solicitude the news concerning the proposed land legislation in California and deprecate any discrimination against the Japanese lest it mar the friendship between Japan and America and work injury to both countries. Therefore,

Resolved, That we appeal to our missionary constituency in the name of our home land, to the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, to the Federation of Churches in California, and to Christian public sentiment of the nation in favor of just legislation.

That we express our sincere appreciation of the earnest efforts of the President of the United States and the leading men of both countries and record our firm belief that the true public sentiment of both lands will support them in securing an equitable and mutually satisfactory settlement.

WOMAN WRITES IN DEFENSE OF LEO M. FRANK

Mrs. Rebecca Brannon Declares Her Belief in Innocence of Factory Superintendent.

Mrs. Rebecca C. Brannon, 356 Forrest Avenue, a well known Atlanta woman, has written a letter to The Georgian in defense of Leo M. Frank. Mrs. Brannon, in her communication, avows a strong belief in the pencil factory superintendent's innocence, and denounces the hardships which the law has thrust upon him.

In line with its policy to present all sides of the Phagan case, The Georgian herewith prints Mrs. Brannon's letter:

In the name of God, humanity, and justice, I beg the public to suspend judgment in the case of Mr. Leo M. Frank, indicted for the murder of Mary Phagan, until he has had a fair trial before a jury of his peers.

I consider Mr. Frank an innocent man. Is it because he is a Jew that the negro's word is taken as gospel truth, and reflection cast on his testimony? From the first, pap seemed to be put in Newt Lee's mouth, as well as that of Conley, to make them say or hint that Mr. Frank was suspected by them of committing the crime.

Calls It Persecution.

What negro, with dread of lynching or summary justice being meted out to him, would not swear to a lie, and put the crime on another if he could thereby escape the consequences of his crime? And even so late as Saturday the negro Conley admitted he wrote the notes found beside the murdered girl, as he said, at the suggestion of Mr. Frank.

Is it not inconceivable to think that an astute man, planning with finesse, to kill a little girl who might possibly call for her pay envelope the following day, would take into his confidence the sweeper Conley and have him write what he contemplated putting in a note he intended to lay before her mutilated body, when he shall have murdered her the next day, and exclaiming, "There is no reason why I should hang for it!"

Oh, no! Gentlemen, this is entirely too unlikely a thing for a man of his astuteness and caliber to have done or said. There has been some colossal blunder on the part of the city detectives in rounding up the quarry.

It looks very like persecuting this man simply because he is a Jew. I like to see fair play and justice. This is the first time a Jew has ever been in any serious trouble in Atlanta, and see how ready is every one to believe the worst of him.

In the first place, Mr. Frank, in his deposition, told the hour he reached his home for dinner and supper, was seen by a number of reputable people assembled at his home that evening. He had on the same business suit he had on at his office that day and which he wore at the Coroner's inquest. If he had murdered the girl he must have had some scratches or blood marks on his person, as it was said at the time Mary Phagan had struggled with her assailant.

Cites Weak Link.

One very weak link in the State's chain of evidence is the fact that Newt Lee testified that he made a complete round of the building every half hour, yet he failed to notice the bloodstains on the floor of the metal room in making all those rounds, and then strangely went down the trap door to the basement at 3:30 on a flimsy excuse—flimsy, I say, because no one being there to prevent it, if he really wanted to go to the toilet he surely would have used the one on the upper floor in preference to going down the trap door at 3:30 to the basement closet, and in a dimly lighted place, in which he could scarcely see his hand before his face, and at an angle that the detectives at first said they could not see how he made the discovery of the body. He claimed to have made the find.

Another thing the detectives said was that blood was still flowing from the body when they first discovered it—rigor mortis had not taken place, two facts that in my mind are irrefutable proofs that that girl was not murdered at 12 m., at 4 or at 6 o'clock in the evening, which would have been the case if Mr. Frank had murdered the little girl any time between 12 m. and 6 p. m.

I do not know Mr. Frank, but that he is a Jew he holds my especial interest and esteem, for the Jews are good, law-abiding people.

Calls Frank Innocent.

He must be a leader among his people, as he is the president of the B'nai Brith Association of Atlanta. This society is the highest Jewish organization in the world, and you can not persuade me to believe that such a splendid lot of level headed men as the Jews of Atlanta would select a moral degenerate to head their organization.

I believe Mr. Frank innocent and confidently look for his complete vindication when tried by an impartial jury of his countrymen, when the mesh of lies shall have been swept away, that at present shroud the case. Meanwhile, all my sympathies are with him.

The graduating exercises will be held at the Grand Theater. Immediately after the presentation of diplomas, and adaptation by Miss Hanna from Keat's poem, "Endymion" will be presented by the pupils of the school. There are over one hundred girls in the cast, the leading roles being taken by seniors. A number of graceful dances will be given during the action of the play, the scenes of which are laid in ancient Greece.

Miss Thelma Harrell, one of last year's graduates, will appear in several Grecian dances, while Miss Mamie Clyburn will sing three solos.

A feature of the performance will be an original ballet dance by Miss Theodora Warfield, who made such a hit in the Kirmess last year.

Thursday night at 8:30 the alumnae and the senior class of Miss Hanna's School will have a banquet at the Piedmont Hotel. About 200 guests are expected at the banquet, which will be followed by a dance.

This has been one of the most successful years of the school. It is one of the oldest in Atlanta, and some of the most prominent women in Georgia are among its alumnae.

MINISTER'S WIFE ACCUSED AS SIREN

Woman in Alienation Suit Charges She Enticed Wealthy Grain Dealer From His Home.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, May 28.—Mrs. Mae Free Patterson, wife of the Rev. Gerard F. Patterson, pastor of the Church of the Incarnation, in the fashionable East End district, has been made defendant in a $10,000 alienation suit.

The action was brought by Mrs. Margaret Lloyd because of the alleged loss of the affections of her husband, Martin Van Voorhees Lloyd, a wealthy grain dealer. Mrs. Patterson is a cousin of Charles Free, vice president of the Southern Pacific Railway.

The suit charges that Mrs. Patterson enticed Lloyd from his home, that she wined and dined with Lloyd in public places, entertained him at her home and went with him to cafes, grill rooms, ball games, horse races and other places of amusement and "with her artifices, blandishments and coquetry and with malicious purpose deprived the plaintiff of her husband's society and affection."

The Lloyds have been separated since November 6, 1912.

CHIEF BEAVERS TO RENEW HIS VICE WAR

Declares That He Will "Clean Out" Disorderly Places When Hutcheson Furnishes List.

Renewed crusades to clean out vice in Atlanta have been precipitated by the publication Tuesday of an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers by Carl Hutcheson, an Atlanta attorney.

Chief Beavers called up Hutcheson with a demand for his information, asking names, addresses and character of occupants, and declared Wednesday that he would proceed to clean up if the requested information was furnished.

Hutcheson is now preparing a list of the places which he declared are immoral and told the chief he would place the list in Beavers' hands three days hence. Hutcheson was asked by the chief to swear to the character of the inmates of each house he names and to sign his name to his affidavit, and will be called as a witness in prosecuting the landlords.

"We will have some clean-up sure," said Chief Beavers Wednesday. "When I get Hutcheson's information I will prove that I am giving no protection to anybody. I would be glad to have every one report to me any resort that they might know of. It will help in the crusade. I will take speedy action against them all."

Dorsey to Confer With Felder.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey declared Wednesday that he would confer with Colonel T. B. Felder relative to the proposed Grand Jury probe of his corruption charges against police officials and the counter charges of bribery made against him by the police.

Colonel Felder would not comment on the affair at all, other than to say he was not yet ready to issue his statement substantiating his sensational charges.

Detective Chief Lanford issued a signed statement proposing to send Colyar handcuffed to Knoxville and Colonel Felder in charge of a detective to Columbia, S. C.

Lanford's Contribution.

"I will make this proposition to Colonel Felder," he said. "I will handcuff A. S. Colyar and send him back to Knoxville, Tenn., without requisition papers, if he (Colonel Felder) will accompany one of my men to Columbia, S. C., waiving requisition papers. Thereby I will get rid of two nuisances."

Colonel Felder issued the following statement relative to the proposed Grand Jury investigation:

"No investigation would be too exhaustive. I would be pleased to go before any committee, organization or tribunal. I have done nothing wrong. There is nothing in my whole professional career of which I am ashamed. I wish an investigation would be started."

Are You Growing As Atlanta Grows?

There are 2,000 new homes built in and around Atlanta every year.

This is the statement of the lumber mill men of Atlanta. Ask them.

1,200 of these new homes are built each year within the city limits.

This is the statement of the city tax assessors. Ask them.

With Atlanta growing at the rate of 15,000 new population every year, these figures are conservative.

Do you know what this means?

By just the percentage that Atlanta increases in population each year, by just that percentage grows the DEMAND FOR PEACHTREE HOMES.

In a year or two every available choice building lot will have been snapped up, and when you try to get one of them, you will find you will have to pay two or three times the present price.

COUNTY SEEKS CREATION TO GET ROADS

Candler Argues Its Existence Is Necessary to Benefit Prosperous Town of Metter.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The proposed County of Candler is to petition the incoming Legislature for creation along new lines, and with an argument not only novel, but perhaps winning.

Candler County is to ask for existence as a powerful argument in favor of good roads.

It will seek to prove its right to creation as an absolute good roads necessity—that, of course, along with other reasons likely to appeal to intelligent legislative consideration.

It is a fact that there are several parts of Georgia in which are to be found highly prosperous towns, from a business point of view, that yet are hampered mightily by reason of their remoteness from their County seats and the consequent improbability of very active good roads work in their vicinities.

In some of these places, it is claimed, road taxes in remote neighborhoods are applied exclusively to good roads work near the county seat, and that brings about not only much dissatisfaction, but positive discontent.

Metter, a prosperous and hustling town of South Georgia, is an example of this, and it is about Metter that the proposed new county of Candler is to be framed.

If Candler County is created, it is contended that, with Metter as the County seat, good roads construction will radiate from Metter throughout the neighboring territory, and that there will not be a farm in the new county not soon connected with the County seat by ample and sufficient roads.

There is great enthusiasm among the people about Metter in favor of the new county, and very little opposition from the people of the counties from which it is to be taken. Candler generally is regarded as a good new county proposition, too, and it should surprise no one, therefore, to see the new Legislature put the seal of its approval upon it.

It would be located in one of the richest and most promising sections of the entire State.

Disquieting news comes from the bedside of Representative-elect Samuel E. Berry, of Whitfield.

He recently was stricken with an acute valvular heart trouble, and has been in critical condition since, with the chances of recovery hardly even. For a time, he seemed to get better, but of late has not improved.

Mr. Berry has represented Whitfield several times in the Legislature, and is looked upon as a particularly valuable member.

The Young Men's Democratic Club of Savannah proposes taking a hand in the election of a representative to succeed Mr. Stovall, resigned.

There are certain measures which this organization desires passed, and it is probable that the club will either put out a candidate of its own or undertake to pledge some other candidate to support its bills. Indications are that there may be several aspirants for the place.

The club wants a white primary law to govern city elections. Notice of the fact that such a bill will be introduced at the coming session has been advertised in the newspapers as well as posted on the bulletin board at the Court House.

The need of such a law was impressed upon the leaders of the club at the January city election, when hundreds of negroes were bought. It was charged that both factions cooped up the colored voters in halls, and held them overnight, voting them in batches of four or five, practically under guard.

Under a white primary election law this would be eliminated, it is claimed, as in the campaign for County and State officers. The contest would be settled in the preliminary skirmish, in which the negro voter would have no part.

A well meaning member-elect of the Legislature soon to assemble in Georgia has announced his intention of introducing early in the session a resolution providing for night sessions.

His motive is worthy enough, as he says it is to prevent congestion at the end of the session—and congestion always is there, right on the job!

Notwithstanding the eminent respectability of his intent, though, the impression generally will be that he is destined to disappointment. The Legislature has had that proposition submitted to it by people who earnestly desired to get the work hurried along, but it never got anywhere. The Legislature simply will not sit more than two or three hours a day in its earlier proceedings, and the incoming Legislature is not likely to be very different from its predecessors.

The better way to conserve legislative time, perhaps, is to find some method whereby local legislation may be disposed of more readily than now.

"Whitfield County stands far above the average in the manner in which it handles its convicts," said Chairman Davidson, of the Prison Commission, who returned from a tour of inspection of that County Tuesday.

In discussing the work as a whole, Mr. Davidson said some of the counties are wasting their efforts and money under the mistaken idea that "the best warden is the one who can be secured for the least salary."

The majority of counties, the chairman added, are working their convicts at a profit.

A bill will be introduced in the Legislature seeking to abolish the City Court of Floyd County.

It will be provided in the bill, though, that the court shall not be abolished until the expiration of the term of the present judge, John C. Reece.

A further effort will be made, so it has been stated, to make Floyd County a separate judicial circuit within itself, and provide for four sittings of the court each year, instead of two, as is the law now.

The movement generally is favored in Floyd, and will not be opposed in Walker and Chattooga, the other two counties composing the Rome Superior Court circuit.

WAR IN BALKANS NEAR; POWERS ONLY CHECK

Greece and Servia Allied Against Bulgarians, Who Claim Treaty Violations.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 28.—Actual war between Bulgaria and the allied armies of Greece and Servia is very near, according to a statement made here to-day by M. Teodoroff, Bulgarian Minister of Finance, who is here on a political mission.

"Only tremendous pressure by the European powers can prevent a fresh conflict in the Balkans," said M. Teodoroff. "Unknown to the outside world, affairs have been getting more and more serious for months. An army of 280,000 Servians and Greeks is massed on the western and southern frontiers of Bulgaria, ready for a general outbreak.

"The contention of the Bulgarian Government is that Servia and Greece are exceeding the terms of the agreement drawn up by the Balkan league before the outbreak of the war with Turkey."

VIENNA, May 28.—Remobilization of the Austrian reservists, recently dismissed when peace in the Balkans seemed near, was ordered to-day by the Government.

Greeks to Fight To Hold Salonika.

Asks Restoration of Her Conjugal Rights—Action Goes Undefended.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 28.—Gabrielle Ray, the famous Gaiety beauty, has brought action against her husband, Eric Loder, asking for a restoration of her conjugal rights. The action will be heard at the coming session of the divorce court and is preliminary to a suit for divorce.

Loder has made no defense. The basis of the actress' petition has not been disclosed.

Gabrielle Ray and Eric Loder, son of the late Alfred Loder and grandson of the late Sir Robert Loder, were married here March 1, 1912. Miss Ray was one of the most popular and beautiful musical comedy actresses in England. She had been showered with attentions from many notable gallants, including ex-King Manuel of Portugal, Lord Dalmeny and the Marquis of Anglesey, but she declared her heart had been touched only by the dashing young Loder, who is tall, good-looking and wealthy.

Miss Ray and Loder were to have been married at Windsor, February 29, the day that made 1912 a leap year. At the last moment the charming bride-elect changed her mind, and literally left Loder "waiting at the church."

The next day Miss Ray relented and the marriage took place.

The Loders amassed a fortune in the tellow trade in Russia, and the baronetcy was one of the jubilee honors conferred by Queen Victoria in 1887.

NO CHANGE MADE IN COTTON AND SUGAR TARIFF

Only Revision Senate Plans of Income Tax Lessens Burden on Married Men.

WASHINGTON, May 28.—The Underwood tariff bill as reported to the Democratic caucus after the revision of its various schedules by the subcommittee of the Senate Finance Committee is forecast as follows:

There will be no change in the cotton, sugar and wool schedules as written into the measure by the House with the exception of a slight increase in duty on wool manufactures.

The only change in the income tax amendment will be the alteration of sub-section D, so that a man of family will not be compelled to pay as great a tax as a single man with the same income.

In the cotton and wool schedules a period of from 60 to 90 days of grace will be extended to manufacturers before the provisions of the new bill go into effect. The rest of the bill takes effect the day after its passage.

The amendments to the Underwood bill permitting the arbitrary valuation of imports by the Secretary of the Treasury will be adopted, in the metal schedule duties on structural steel will be revised downward, while ferro-maganese and pig iron will be free listed.

Wheat, cattle and other staples whose manufactures are all on the free list also will be free listed.

Duties on pottery will be raised.

President Wilson, it was stated, has been notified of the proposed changes in the bill and has consented to the revisions.

BRYAN WILL GET "GRAPE JUICE" WELCOME

Atlanta Decorates for Secretary's Coming Monday in His Favorite Beverage.

With the coming of Colonel William Jennings Bryan on Monday all Atlanta is rallying to the support of her reputation as a grape juice center.

Grape juice in every form—in bottles big and little, square and round, and some of it as old as the vintage of last August—is making its appearance in every show window to greet the eyes of the world-renowned connoisseur, "Grape Juice Bill."

At the Capital City Club Colonel Bryan will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be given by Colonel Walter P. Andrews. No wine or other liquors will be served, but in their stead will be an abundance of grape juice cocktails, grape juice highballs, and grape juice punch. This fact was revealed in a letter of instructions to the steward of the club in which Mr. Andrews made implicit his desire that the precedent of "wineless" dinners established by the distinguished Secretary of State in Washington be followed here.

The dinner will be served at the club at 6 o'clock. It will be attended by a number of prominent Atlanta citizens.

Mr. Bryan will arrive in the city at 5 o'clock. At 8 o'clock he will deliver an address before the students of the Georgia School of Technology at the Grand Opera House.

Senator Sentenced For Seeking Bribe

Stillwell was found guilty of soliciting a $3,500 bribe in connection with legislation at Albany.

MAKES RHEUMATISM PROMPTLY DISAPPEAR

Crippled-up Sufferers Find Relief After Few Doses of Croxone are Taken.

It is needless to suffer any longer with rheumatism, and be all crippled up, and bent out of shape with its heart-wrenching pains, when you can surely avoid it.

Rheumatism comes from weak, inactive kidneys, that fail to filter from the blod the poisonous waste matter and uric acid; and it is useless to rub on liniments or take ordinary remedies to relieve the pain. This only prolongs the misery.

The only way to cure rheumatism is to remove the cause. The new discovery, Croxone, does this because it neutralizes and dissolves all the poisonous substances and uric acid that lodge in the joints and muscles, to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism, and cleans out and strengthens the stopped up, inactive kidneys, so they can filter all the poison from the blod, and drive it on and out of the system.

Croxone is the most wonderful medicine ever made for chronic rheumatism, kidney troubles, and bladder disorders. You will find it different from all other remedies. There is nothing else on earth like it. It matters not how old you are, or how long you have suffered, it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results. You will find relief from the first few doses, and you will be surprised how quickly all misery and suffering will end.

An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle at any first-class drug store. All druggists are authorized to sell it on a positive money-back guarantee. Three doses a day for a few days is often all that is ever needed to overcome the worst backache or urinary disorders.

ST. LOUIS, May 28.—The expected receivership for the St. Louis and San Francisco (the Frisco System) and the Chicago and Eastern Illinois Railroads was recorded here to-day. Thomas H. CLARK HOWELL AND THE WORK OF BEAVERS

No Attack Was Made by the Chief of Police—Editor Makes His Position Clear.

The following letter from Chief Beavers and the interview with Mr. Clark Howell explain themselves:

Atlanta, Ga., May 27.

My attention has been called to an article in the Sunday papers in which an interview with me makes it appear that I was attacking Mr. Clark Howell personally and his policy with The Constitution.

I only repeated the conversation I had with him on the next day after he returned from Panama on about March 1, this year.

I meant no reflection on Mr. Howell, but only had reference to certain local reports in his paper, and he now assures me that there was no intention on his part to discredit the work which I have been trying to do in this city, and that the article that appeared in the reportorial columns of The Constitution was without his knowledge and consent, and that it was not his intention nor does he approve of anything that would in the least hinder or discredit the work that the police department has ben trying to carry out.

I would regret very much indeed to have any utterance of mine construed into an attack upon Mr. Howell, whom I have always regarded, and now esteem, as an exemplary citizen and journalist who holds the merited confidence of the public, as he does of my department and of myself.

J. L. BEAVERS,
Chief of Police.

In reference to Chief Beavers statement Mr. Howell said:

"During my absence in Panama in January a police raid was made on a certain downtown rooming hotel. The Constitution next morning locally reported the affair and the fact that a man and his wife were subjected to undue treatment, with comment from the inadvertent victims and the manager of the hotel.

"When I returned from Panama the Chief complained of the local report referred to. I explained to him that nothing was further from our intention than to discredit his work, and that following The Constitution's oft-repeated commendation of his high sense of duty in endeavoring to enforce the law, he would have our cordial support to that end.

"He thanked me, recalling the fact that two days after the houses were closed I had sent for him to tell him that his attitude would have The Constitution's support.

"Next morning—September 26—The Constitution's leading editorial, 'A Wholesome Example,' unqualifiedly approved the Chief as 'an official with the nerve and the courage to enforce the law,' stating that 'he has set a singularly wholesome example of a blunt interpretation of duty.'

"I am still of the opinion that no good citizen would invite the return of the segregated district, nor the spread of its attendant evil in other directions. In my talk with the Chief I expressed my doubt as to his ability to absolutely eliminate the evil, and while the segregated district has been closed we are still wrestling with other phases of the problem.

"I think the Chief is doing the best he can, and he should have the support of all good citizens in his efforts."

CATTLE TICK IS COSTING STATE $6,000,000

Veterinarian's Report Discloses Astounding Facts—Tuberculosis Menace to Health.

The State of Georgia is losing $6,000,000 annually from tick infestation.

The losses from the ravages of hog cholera reached $1,000,000 in 1912.

Tuberculosis in cattle is spreading through the State with alarming rapidity and threatens to infect every herd.

Slaughter house conditions are in a deplorable state in most parts of Georgia.

These are the startling facts revealed in the annual report of State Veterinarian Peter F. Bahnsen, issued Wednesday.

For the amelioration of these conditions Dr. Bahnsen recommends an appropriation of $30,000. He cites the conservation of human health as the absolute and pressing necessity for the expenditure of this amount.

Losses Are Enormous.

"Our losses from tick infestation," reads the report, "are under present conditions in excess of $6,000,000 annually. All of this enormous waste could be stopped in a few years with a sufficient fund to employ cattle inspectors, and by appealing to the counties and the Federal Government for increased aid.

"Hog cholera cost the State not less than $1,000,000 in 1912, or approximately 20 per cent of the total value of the hogs owned in this State.

"Tuberculosis is prevalent to a considerable extent among the dairy cattle of the State. The milk of tuberculous cattle is dangerous to man and the health of our people is in the balance. We have taken this matter in hand with the limited means available and the public is anxious that our services along this line be extended into a State-wide movement. Our greatest need in this matter is more funds for extending the work.

Slaughter Houses Menace.

"Slaughter house conditions are extremely bad in most sections of the State and the public is frequently fed on meat not fit for human consumption. Animals with communicable diseases are often slaughtered and sold without restriction and the sanitary conditions of fully 70 per cent of our slaughter houses is a crying shame. It demands rigid State supervision.

"We should have an appropriation of not less than $30,000 for this work. It is essential in conserving the health of the people that their food products be obtained from healthy animals and handled and distributed under conditions that will prevent subsequent contamination or putrefaction."

Wife Kidnaped Him And Kept Him Drunk

BOSTON, May 28.—Mrs. Mary Garabedian says her bath at the Cambridge Field Public Bathhouse cost her $108. Said Mrs. Garabedian:

Mrs. Garabedian is out exactly the price of 5,401 baths.

COL. NASH TO TRAIN RIVERSIDE CADETS

New Commandant Takes Charge at Military and Naval Academy on June 1.

GAINESVILLE, GA., May 28.—Colonel J. Q. Nash has been appointed commandant of the cadet corps at Riverside Military and Naval Academy. He will take charge June 1.

Few cadet commandants in Southern preparatory schools are better known than Colonel Nash. He has been instructor of more Georgia youths in military tactics than any man in the State. His selection is a distinct accusition to Riverside's faculty.

Colonel Nash was graduated with first honor from Gordon College in 1896. He was superintendent of the public schools of Henry County; vice president and commandant of Reinhardt College, and commandant of Gordon Institute for several years. His more recent position has been commanding officer and instructor in the Georgia Military Academy.

The adjutant general of the National Guard of Georgia has detailed Colonel Nash as instructor and inspector in camp and target practice. He was detailed by the Governor to serve on the staff of the grand marshal at the inauguration of President Roosevelt and again at the inauguration of President Taft. He holds commissions with the National Guard from second lieutenant to lieutenant colonel and as assistant inspector general of Georgia.

HUNT FOR YOUNG CONDUCTOR VAIN

Wife of W. S. Culpepper, Who Disappeared in Atlanta Monday, Fears Foul Play.

Culpepper, who is 24 years old, a freight conductor on the Georgia Railroad, disappeared in Atlanta Monday afternoon. He was due to take out No. 210 Monday night, but failed to appear at the scheduled time.

Fearing he had been injured, his friends visited every hospital and infirmary in Atlanta Tuesday morning and also inquired at the police station, but in vain.

Culpepper lived a temperate life, has a good character, was devoted to his family and was popular among officials and workingmen of the Georgia Railroad. He had just been promoted to conducton. The theory of a voluntary flight is scouted by his family and friends. The young wife fears her husband has met with foul play.

2,000 TO MARCH IN BIG HOLIDAY PARADE

Pageant by Retailers June 4 Will Eclipse Anything of Its Kind Ever Seen in Atlanta.

With practically all plans completed for the pageant, local retail grocers and clerks Wednesday are predicting that the parade of June 4, with which they will celebrate the opening of the "Wednesday closing" season, will be one of the greatest ever seen in Atlanta.

F. E. Kamper, chairman of the arrangements committee, in charge of active preparations for the parade, declares nothing that has ever been held in Atlanta in the past will even approach it in interest. "It is a sure thing," declared Mr. Kamper, "that when we get through the people of Atlanta will know that clerks and retailers appreciate the opportunity of getting a half-holiday every week. The parade we are going to pull off will make the circus parades look sick."

And a glance at the arrangements induces the belief that Mr. Kamper knows what he is talking about. Probably 2,000 men will march in the parade, and Atlantans will see some weird costumes. Three miles of wagons and automobiles, decorated and emblazoned with banners, will follow the marchers. Five mounted policemen, the handsomest and bravest of Chief Beavers' force, will ride at the head of the column.

Three Brass Bands.

Three brass bands will tread proudly in the ranks.

Following the mounted policemen and a brass band will come aides and their marshals as follows: F. E. Kamper, H. Winberg, C. J. McCoy, R. H. Comer, W. J. Burton, J. H. Merritt, J. F. McNair and W. A. Byers. Each of these men will appoint five assistants to ride with him, and all will be clothed in uniforms that represent the last word in splendor.

The parade will form near the Capitol, on Washington, Hunter, Mitchell, Whitehall and other nearby streets. The exact route of the parade has not been determined, but it probably will be down to Whitehall and up Peachtree, until everybody gets tired. The rivalry among the merchants for the best decorated wagon and automobile already has begun, and some unique schemes in decoration are promised.

The celebration will not be confined to retailers. Wholesalers have expressed a desire to send their automobile trucks to the parade, and ice manufacturers, bakers, packers and the commission merchants also will work to make the parade a success.

Many lines of business were represented at the Taft Hall meeting Tuesday night, and every representative of every line pledged the assistance of himself and his fellows to making the parade a success. E. L. Adams was there to ladle out encouragement in behalf of the jobbers of the city, and J. D. Simmons told how far the City Salesmen's Association would go to make the affair a success. Then there were wholesalers, retail grocers, bakers, commission men, clerks and employees galore.

All Boost Atlanta.

Several stirring addresses were made, all emphasizing the necessity of working together and boosting for Atlanta. Among the speakers were Harry L. Schlesinger, father of the closing movement; Hon. John Y. Smith, Representative-elect from Fulton County; O. T. Camp, a consistent booster for the parade; E. L. Adams, of the jobbers; John McCullough, of the commission merchants; Olin Stamps, who boosts anything and everything pertaining to the good of the city; L. E. Rogers, one of the live wires among the clerks, and John Bratton, of the Georgia Retail Grocers' Association.

Before adjourning the clerks extended a vote of thanks to their employers for the half-holiday. It was announced by Mr. Schlesinger that more than 800 grocers had signed an agreement to close at noon every Wednesday through the months of June, July and August. Merchants in East Point also have joined in the movement and will take part in the parade.

DECATUR PLANS BIG HOME-COMING

Reception Committee Arranging New Festivities to Make June 3 a Memorable Day.

Extra festivities are being planned every day for Decatur's home-coming day and smoker on June 3. The reception committee of the Board of Trade will meet to-night at organization headquarters in the Weekes Building. Mayor John A. Montgomery is chairman of this committee.

The day and the night of June 3 will be, in effect, one continuous good time. The morning will be given over to oratory. Dr. Soule, of the State Agricultural College, will speak on DeKalb County's opportunities for truck farming, dairying and poultry raising; E. F. Smith on ways and means of locating the Fifth District Agricultural School in DeKalb County; C. Murphy Candler on the life and accomplishments of Jefferson Davis.

The afternoon will be made memorable by the laying of the cornerstone of Decatur's new $25,000 school, under the auspices of the Masons. George M. Napier is the orator of the day, while five-minute addresses will be made by Mayor Montgomery, J. Howell Green and Hooper Alexander.

Some time during the day a shield will be presented to the Decatur troop of Boy Scouts. The shield is a trophy of a recent field day contest. All Atlanta Boy Scout troops, with their drum corps, will participate in the presentation.

The second smoker of the Board of Trade will be held at 6:30 o'clock, as the concluding event of home-coming day. "GOOD EATS" will be served, followed by things to smoke, with music throughout. Good speakers will entertain the crowd, which is expected to be large.

The New Food-Drink
Instant Postum

Is in thousands of homes where health is valued.

Former coffee users who have felt the pinch of indigestion, headache, heart disturbance, nervous irritation, etc., have written by the score, telling of remarkable benefits following the change from coffee to Instant Postum.

A level teaspoonful in an ordinary cup of hot water dissolves instantly and makes it right for most persons.

A big cup requires more and some people who like strong things put in a heaping spoonful and temper it with a large supply of cream.

Experiment until you know the amount that pleases your palate and have it served that way in the future.

"Thanks for the sample of Instant Postum sent me. I had been drinking coffee for a long time and thought it would be difficult to give it up, but I was mistaken.

"While I was drinking coffee I always felt exhausted and I weighed but 112 pounds. After using Instant Postum I soon recovered and now am as healthy as any person can be. I now weigh 120 pounds and am steadily gaining in weight. Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum comes in two forms.

Regular (must be boiled).

Instant Postum doesn't require boiling, but is prepared instantly by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water.

Both kinds are sold by grocers everywhere.

TALLULAH FALLS LAND SUIT WILL GO TO JURY THURSDAY

State Ends Its Introduction of Testimony—Defense Finishes Tuesday Afternoon.

CLAYTON, GA., May 28.—All testimony, it is expected, will have been heard and arguments begun in the suits of the State of Georgia against the Georgia Railway and Power Company to determine the ownership of the Tallulah Falls gorge by the time the afternoon session of Rabun Superior Court adjourns to-day.

All of the State's evidence was concluded at this morning's session. That of the defense is expected to be concluded in the afternoon in time for attorneys to begin their speeches to the jury. The case will probably go to the jury Thursday morning and a verdict is expected by the afternoon.

The State began the introduction of testimony when court reconvened Tuesday afternoon. Old residents of Tallulah Falls, ranging from 60 to 70 years of age, who had lived there practically their entire lives, were offered as State's witnesses. They testified that of their own knowledge, hearsay and tradition former holders of the land along the Tallulah Gorge, now in dispute, and those who transferred the property to the power company did not lay claim to the land in the gorge, but only to the gorge's brink.

Professor Strong, of the University of Georgia, who, with Professor Koch, also of the university, made surveys of the disputed property and reported on it to the Governor and Attorney General, testified as to this survey and report, on which at the time the State officials declined to bring suit. Numerous maps and plats of the falls property were filed as exhibits to Professor Strong's testimony.

Further documentary evidence was introduced by the State this morning.

It was generally expected before the noon adjournment that the defense would offer a motion for a non-suit, which would be overruled by Judge J. B. Jones, president, and then the defense would offer its testimony, principally in documentary form.

LATEST DECREE IN RIDING HABITS IS FLAT-BRIMMED TILE

MISS ELIZABETH BIGELOW.

The new dress and flat brimmed "tile" worn by Miss Bigelow at the Brookline Country Club's annual Horse Show caused widespread comment in the Hub's Social circles.

Equestriennes of Atlanta, this is the last word in women's riding habits:

Also it was the most talked of costume worn at the revival of the Horse Show of the Brookline Country Club, and to-day tailors all through Boston and the surrounding countryside are beset by equestrian enthusiasts for duplicates. The costume was worn by Miss Elizabeth Bigelow, one of the most noted of the Boston women who have in recent years taken to the saddle as a means of recreation.

The usual pique stock is discarded by Miss Bigelow in favor of a straight standing collar of white linen with a broad tie of black. This closely resembles the style of 60 years ago and gives a decidedly natty appearance to the wearer. In place of the conservative black derby Miss Bigelow wears the bell-shaped silk tile, with a flat rim, fitting snugly over the head and which, it is said, "sticks" much more closely to the head of the rider than the small crowned derby.

Miss Bigelow's coat is of a dark material and hangs closely to the figure and displays to an excellent degree her trim, clean-cut figure. The young woman, who is one of the most popular society leaders in the "Hub's smart set," rode to a decided advantage in the various rings in which she competed, and her general appearance added to the enthusiasm with which she was greeted by the spectators and gallery.

WOODMEN HOSTS TO LODGE HEAD

John T. Yates, Visiting Atlanta Camps, Praises Georgia Bonds as Investment.

John T. Yates, of Omaha, Nebr., sovereign secretary of the Woodmen of the World, was the guest of honor at a reception given by the local camp of the order Tuesday night at Cable Hall.

Mr. Yates, accompanied by his wife, arrived in Atlanta Tuesday morning and leaves at noon Thursday for Macon, Columbus and other Georgia cities. He is en route to the biennial convention of the Woodmen at Jacksonville, which meets early in June.

Dr. F. L. Rosenthal, of Columbus, Ga., head consul of Georgia for the order, welcomed Mr. Yates to Atlanta, and Judge W. A. Roan made a short talk on the good of the order.

Mr. Yates said this was his first visit to Atlanta in fifteen years, and that there was a wonderful change.

"Especially noticeable is the cosmopolitan and metropolitan air of your city," he said.

Mr. Yates intends to purchase more Georgia bonds for the Woodmen.

"Georgia has the best bond laws of any State," he said, "and for that reason Georgia bonds will sell higher than those of other States. The Woodmen of the World already has purchased nearly $100,000 worth of bonds in this State."

Mr. and Mrs. Yates were taken on an automobile tour of the city Wednesday. They are stopping at the Piedmont Hotel.

Sunday, June 8, a special train, bringing Woodmen from Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and other Middle Western States, will stop for a few hours in Atlanta. The visiting members will be tendered a luncheon by the local camps at the Piedmont Hotel.

4 PINNED BENEATH OVERTURNED AUTO

Fifth Passenger in Wrecked Car Summons Help to Extricate Others and Chauffeur.

MARIETTA, GA., May 28.—Mr. and Mrs. T. C. Flemister, Miss Charlotte Flemister, Miss Charlotte Fite and a negro chauffeur, all of Cartersville, were injured when Mr. Flemister's automobile to-day turned turtle two miles from Marietta, near Fair Oaks. None suffered broken bones.

Mrs. Flemister's condition is serious from the shock. She had been in a highly nervous state for two weeks following the death of her baby.

The accident occurred when a front wheel came off. It was said a garage attendant at Cartersville had warned Mr. Flemister of danger from this wheel.

The chauffeur was pinioned to the ground by the steering wheel and Mrs. Flemister was caught under the back of a seat, while Mr. Flemister and his daughter were held down by the body of the car. Miss Fite alone was able to extricate herself. She summoned nearby cotton field hands, who lifted the car from the victims. They were brought to Marietta by a passing auto for medical attention.

Mr. Flemister is a wholesale grocer of Cartersville.

Carolina Desperado Not Slain; Captured

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—Richard Henry Austin, South Carolina assailant and murderer, reported killed near Sylvania yesterday, is still alive. He was desperately wounded and captured in the swamps near Newington last night, was brought to Savannah to-day, being safely lodged in the Chatham County jail. He admits his identity, but maintains that he did not commit the assault charged to him.

It is hardly expected that the negro will live to be tried. There has been some talk of an attempt to lynch Austin, but no such trouble is anticipated by the police or Sheriff.

STRENGTH IN WHEAT BASED ON HOT WINDS

CHICAGO, May 28.—The Inter Ocean says: "Hot winds were reported in the Southwest last night and the Kansas City curb on wheat was up ⅜ of a cent. Chicago was the weakest market yesterday, which bulls attributed to the break in corn. With unfavorable crop reports and a few days of dry, hot weather bulls are looking for higher prices and said wheat should be bought on breaks.

"It was the theory of the bears that the crop scare has been worked for all it was worth for the time being and wheat should be sold on all bulges. Corn traders believe that there will be little in it for the bulls in May corn the balance of the month. The trade has been largely evened up as indicated by the bulge Monday and the break of yesterday.

"It would not be surprising to see fireworks in May oats in the two and a half trading days remaining of the month, including to-day. Those who have watched the market say that the open interest is larger than it is possible for the shorts to deliver and they will have to go into the pit and cover."

MRS. SLATON ASKS FREE PARK MUSIC

Goes Before Finance Committee, Urging Appropriation—Traction Company Offers Aid.

The Fifth Regiment band will give another musical concert in Grant Park Sunday afternoon, the Georgia Railway and Power Company having donated a sum for it.

Unless Council makes an appropriation for park music there will be no more concerts this season, though W. H. Glenn, manager of the railway department of the company, said his company was willing to supplement any appropriation Council might make, but that it would not pay the full cost.

Mrs. John M. Slaton, wife of the Governor-elect, went before the Finance Committee of Council and pleaded for a fund for free music. She said it was recognized by the whole country that Atlanta was a music-loving city and it was the duty of Council to stimulate this feeling.

Councilman Claude L. Ashley, author of a resolution to appropriate $5,000 for music in both Grant and Piedmont Parks, said he felt sure a good sum would be given when the Finance Committee met Friday and made up the June budget.

Eloper Glenn Out Of Jail on $250 Bond

L. J. Glenn, who has been confined in the Tower since the first part of April, when he was brought back to Atlanta to answer a charge of abandoning his two little children to elope with Mrs. Ione Pidcock, wife of a railroad president, was released under a $250 bond Wednesday morning.

Glenn said he would remain in Atlanto until the divorce proceedings brought by his wife were heard.

Glenn's father, G. F. Glenn, secured his bond. His attorney is L. F. McClelland.

Although offered money by his employer, he would accept only 15 cents three times a day to buy meals.

ROUND-ABOUT-TOWN STORIES

Why Do Folks Pull Flowers in Parks?

"It sure gets my nanny," said the park policeman, "why some folks will come out here and pull flowers. The park commission spends a lot of money getting plants and a lot more to keep them in good condition and then along comes somebody and crabs the whole act by tearing off a bunch of the flowers.

"Last Sunday a young fellow came out here and nothing would do but he must have a magnolia. He thought they were pretty. So they were; but that gave him no license to pull a blossom. But he did just the same. I happened to see him after he had secured the flower and I called him.

"'Here,' said I, 'is a copy of charges. Suppose you straighten out this little affair with the Recorder.'

"'Why, I didn't know there was any harm in taking these flowers,' said he.

"'Well, what do you suppose we got 'em out here for?' I told him. 'These flowers belong to the city and they are put here to be looked at, that's all. If you want to give your best girl a bouquet why don't you go to the florist's? That's what they are in business for.'

"'I don't see any sign out here saying not to pull flowers,' says he, nettled I guess about that best girl remark of mine.

"'Sure, you don't, I says. 'An' what's more, you don't see no sign tellin' you to fall in the lake or commit suicide, yet I haven't seen you tryin' to do either.'

"He didn't have any answer for that one and I guess he was some wiser when he went home. And next day he paid his little fine like a man. But HE don't pull any more magnolias in Grant Park."

Motion Picture Show Takes Place of Nurse.

Out in West End women with small children have solved a problem. They have learned how to get along without nurses. Of course those with babies are not so fortunate, but the ones whose youngsters can run about are reaping the reward of ingeniousness.

Now when a mother wants to go to the matinee or shopping in town she doesn't have to call in mother-in-law or a neighbor to look after the children until she gets back. The plan is much more simple and gives general satisfaction. She takes them to a motion picture show.

It should be known, of course, that West End boasts a full-fledged "movie" show. The children go in droves every day and the proprietor must be an all-fired generous soul because the kiddies just stay and stay and stay. He never asks them to go out. And that is the real secret of the scheme taken advantage of by the mothers.

Mrs. West End decides that she wants to go shopping. She washes and dresses Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude and escorts them to the picture show. She pays 15 cents and the three young ones hike in to see the show. And there they stay. Mrs. West End goes to town, travels from one store to another until exhausted and returns homeward. She stops at the picture show and there is Bobbie and Harry and Gertrude still gazing in speechless ecstasy at the pictures on the screen.

What matters it if they have seen the same films half a dozen times that afternoon? They get just as much fun out of it as if they observed them for the first time. Mrs. West End calls her darlings and they all return home. Mamma is satisfied, the youngsters are decidedly so and Mr. Picture Man evidently is, because next time he is just as smiling as ever.

The Name
KIMBALL
on a
PIANO

means that scrupulous care has been given every detail of construction; that every part has been manufactured by the W. W. Kimball Company; that it has been made by skilled workmen, under the direction of experts in their respective lines. That ability, experience and responsibility are back of the piano. The ear and eye can judge of the

Beauty of Tone

the construction, case design and the finish, but you must look to the name for reliability of construction, and the assurance that the good qualities will endure. The house of KIMBALL has had an experience of over fifty years in the music industry, and artists, amateurs, and thousands of satisfied customers give abundant proof of the merit of the Kimball.

We are showing a large variety of styles in 88-note Player Pianos and Uprights. We have your choice in woods, such as Rosewood, Walnut, Circassian Walnut, Oak, Mission, Satin Mahogany and Mahogany. Prices ranging from $195 to $1,250.

Our one, absolutely one, price insures you, whether an experienced buyer or not, of securing the best instrument for the amount you wish to pay. It is not safe to buy a piano, or any other article of merchandise, from a dealer who has a sliding scale of prices, because you will never know when he has given you his lowest price. Then, too, your neighbor may buy the same merchandise for from $50 to $75 less money. A piano has but one value, and that should fix its price—the right price. Each and every instrument on our wareroom floor is tagged at the cash figure, and no one pays more or less.

It is not only safe, but pleasant, to deal with the world's largest manufacturers of Pianos, Player Pianos, Residence and Church Pipe Organs, through this Branch Store.

A Shower of

Remnants

Of White and Colored Cotton and Mixed Fabrics

At Half-Price

Quite impossible to tell you on paper all it means to women to be able to select from such an assortment of desirable fabrics as these—the season's most popular materials, reduced by active selling, to short lengths—at half-price.

Wonderful assemblage—larger in its scope, more varied in its kinds than any previous sale of Remnants. You can hardly think of a practical or desirable fabric that is not among them—from the least expensive gingham to silk-and-cotton mixed novelties, and each piece means the saving of exactly half.

The collection is made up about equally of white and colored goods, including such as ratines, voiles, Swisses, poplins, seco silks, chiffon lisse, silk-and-cotton mixed goods, crepes, piques, luna lawns, Persian lawns, dimities, nainsooks, madras, ginghams, percales, and various others.

Lengths varying from two yards to dress patterns, of which there is a goodly supply.

Find the remnants on special tables in the Wash Goods Section, second floor, opposite the elevators.

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THARE was a yung man caim to our house the other nite wich has jest graduated from West Point. He was a nice yung man. He was as strate as a arrow & his clothes fit him fine. He is a friend of Ma's unkel, wich also went to West Point & was shot in the back yeers ago in a Injun campaign. Ma never likes to talk much about her unkel, beekaus Pa is all the time wanting to know how it was that he got shot in the back.

The naim of the yung man was Galbraith Denton. His naim was like the naims of the army ossifers in plays & stories & he was vary handsum. The only thing I didn't like about him was that he was all the time bragging. He is the only West Point man I evver saw that bragged. Moast of them knows better wen they git thru school.

I havent the faintest idee ware they will send me, he toald Pa & Ma. My only wish is to be sent to some post ware thare is plenty of action & danger. Danger is my middel naim, he sed. The direst peril in the world is like that much custard pie to me. I think I grow taller & broader on a diet of danger, he sed. Doant you feel that way? he asked Pa.

Pa Is Modest.

I think Pa was going to say Yes, but he saw Ma grinning at him & he sed Well, to tell you the truth, I am not so full of fire & recklessness as I was wen I was a yung man. In those days, Pa sed, I cud put my hand in a mad dog's mouth with a smile, or face the charge of a en-raged bull without batting a eye, but my advanced yeers have sobered me down a bit & made me think of other & greater things than fiteing.

Well, sed the yung man, Mister Dention, it is this way with me, he sed to Pa. I do not imagine that I shal grow less feerless with the added yeers. In fack, I beeleeve that when I am a old man I will be eeven moar dauntless than I am now, & wen the grim reaper cums he will find me in the hour of Deth as I ever was in life, unafraid.

That is a fine way to be, said Pa. You will find, sed Pa, wen you go to the front, many things in acktual warfare to try yure currage sorely. In the dark days of the Civil War, Pa sed, the days that I dred to recall to any grate extent eeven now, I went thru hardships & faced dangers that wud have killed any ordinary man or made him crazy. I wonder now & then, sed Pa, that that terribul war dident malk me reely insane. Dont you, wife?

Oh, I suppoas so, sed Ma. Sumtimes I think you are a littel dippy at that.

Ma Gives Him Away.

Pa got kind of red in the face, but he kept on talking. My boy, he sed to Mister Dention, wen you have gone thru a baptism of fire such as me & my braiv comrades went thru at Mishunary Ridge or in the battel of the Wilderness, or at Shiloh or Chancellorsville, Pa sed, you will show them how reely braiv you are. One night I was surrounded by a whole company of cavalry, Pa sed. I never lost my superb nerve. Taking advantage of a blue mist that hung over a gray landscape, I mingled freely with the enemy & thus made my escape.

I suppoas yure face was blue with feer, sed Ma.

Mr. Dention beeleeved Pa until Ma sed: Lissen, Galbraith; this deer husband of mine was never in war except with me.

Far More Important.

The old man had given his son a very fair education, and had taken him into his shop. The young fellow was over-particular about a great many little things, but the father made no comment. One day an order came in from a regular customer.

"I wish to goodness," exclaimed the son, "that Jones would learn to spell."

"What's the matter now?" inquired the father cheerfully.

"Why, he spells coffee with a 'k.'"

"No—does he? I never noticed it."

"Of course you never did," said the son, petulshly. "You never notice anything like that."

"Perhaps not, my son," replied the old man; "but there is one thing I do notice, which you will learn by and by, and that is that Jones pays cash."

Speedy Courtship.

A man recently in New York laid a wager that he would woo, win, and marry within an hour a young lady whom, with his companions, he had just seen arrive at the hotel where he was living.

There is nothing in the American marriage law to prevent this dispatch. He introduced himself to the damsel, she smiled upon his suit, a minister was called in, and they were married within an hour.

The wager, of no inconsiderable amount, was handed over to the bridegroom, who left with his bride the following day. It was shortly afterward discovered that the couple had long been man and wife, and that they had been traveling about playing the same trick at various hotels.

THE TRIPLE TIE

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game

SYNOPSIS.

Gordon Kelly, a young North Georgia mountaineer, comes to Atlanta to get a place with Billy Smith's Crackers. It is raining when he reaches Ponce DeLeon and he is nearly run over by an auto, in which are two persons—a man and a young girl. The driver of the car is an arrogant fellow. The girl makes him stop the machine. She gets out and inquires if Kelly is injured. She apologizes for her companion's brusque manner. Kelly sees Manager Smith and tells him he has never played a game of ball. Smith consents to flive Kelly a trial. The girl in the auto is Mildred Deery, daughter of Galen Deery, a crafty and wealthy speculator in timber lands. Her companion is Forrest Gain, a rich young man about town. Kelly owns timber land that Deery would like to possess. Kelly is invited to the Deery home, where he is introduced to Mildred. Cain hears Mildred order an auto to take her guest to his hotel. He takes the driver's place and carries Kelly out into the woods. Kelly thrashes Cain. Manager Smith tells the newspapers about his new find and the reporters print all sorts of "joshing" stories about Kelly.

Now go on with the story.

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

At the same time the newspaper photographers unlimbered their batteries and began bombarding everything in sight. The reporters took possession of the players' bench and passed intimate remarks with their friends in uniform. The training season of the Atlanta club was on and Manager Smith, in full charge was right in his element. Next in importance, judging by his own personal estimate to himself, was Whiskey, the colored man-of-all-work.

Ed Gillespie, the groundkeeper, had the field in fine shape, despite the severe rains of the preceding week, which had nearly driven him to drink.

Then minutes of tossing the ball sufficed.

Batting Practice.

"Batting practice!" suddenly yelled Bill Smith. "Dunn, put on your shin guards. Brady, go into the box and toss up a few. I'll just take first crack at that ball myself. Gee, boys, it feels good to get a bat in my hands again."

To the player all the joys of baseball are confined to batting and pay days, and it is believed that many a ball player would waive his salary if he couid make a base hit whenever he wanted to. Every player would bat for 1,000 if he could have his way and pitchers would be driven out of the profession.

Smith took his place at the plate, a dozen negro boys spread themselves in the outfield to shack the balls; Brady went to the mound and threw up a straight ball. Smith pasted it to left and ran gleefully to first.

"A hit!" he shouted. "I'll lead the Pinch Hit League this year."

One by one the players took their turn at bat. Most of them hadn't had a club in their hands for six months. Many of them swung wildly at the ball. Their eyes had not yet become accustomed to the novelty of the situation.

Gordon Kelly, being the "kid" of the party, was the last man to face the pitcher. He assumed the same pose that filled Bill Smith with astonishment the day they first met. Whiskey crept up to the players' bench and stood grinning behind the reporters.

"Here's Billy's phenom," remarked Percy Whiting, the dean of the reportorial corps. "Watch him miss the ball a mile."

"He looks like business, anyhow," observed Murphy, a confrere.

Behind the plate Dunn spat in the big mitt and pounded it down with his right fist.

"Look who's here," he cried to Brady in the box.

"Whatyer got, kid, something new," demanded Brady, with a grin.

"The only way I know," replied Kelly, smiling. "If I'm wrong you fellows will have to teach me something dif"—

A Great Hit.

His remarks were cut short. The ball was sailing up to the plate. Kelly stepped forward and with a tremendous swing met the sphere fairly and squarely with his bat. There was a crashing sound and the ball, describing a huge arc in the air, cleared the bull by thirty feet and fell to earth far beyond that rampant figure.

An ear-splitting yell, such as can only be emitted by a negro under the pressure of pleasureable excitement, issued from the throat of Whiskey, nearly bursting the ear drums of the three reporters seated on the bench.

"Some hitter, gem'men, some hitter; Wow!" shouted the colored attendant.

The instant he hit the ball, Kelly dropped his bat and circled around the bases with the speed of a Mott Haven sprinter. Percy Whiting jumped to his feet.

"Hey, Hypo!" he shouted to his camera man, "come here." And when that individual rushed up he whispered hoarsely:

"Snap that fellow in tweny different poses—standing up, lying down, roll over, say please, play dead and everything on the calendar; catching the ball, running the bases and at bat—especially at bat. Hustle now and we'll spring a good one in the late editions of The Georgian this afternoon."

"Do you hit all the ptichers like that kid?" laughed Brady, as Kelly raced over the plate.

"I don't know," replied Kelly, pleased at the question. "You see I never faced a good pitcher in my life. What I mean by that Mr. Brady," he added hastily, running out to the box in fear his answer had been misconstrued, "is that I never played a game of ball in my life and what I will be able to do with your pitching when you get in condition and cut loose is something I know nothing about, I'm afraid I will fall down hard. You see all you did was to toss up a slow straight one that time."

"That's al right, kid," said Brady. "No one ever made such a long hit off me before, and if you can meet the fast one and the curves the way you did that one they will go just as far—further if you pickle a curve ball. Stick around, kid, stick around."

Kelly thanked him for his encouraging words and walked away.

"How fast can you run, Gordon?" asked Bill Smith.

"I have done a hundred in nine and four-fifths," replied the recruit, with a laugh, "but I'm afraid the record won't stand. You see I timed myself."

"You timed yourself?" queried the manager in surprise.

"Yes, sir."

Bill Smith looked at his "phenom" long and earnestly. He said at last, "Can that stuff, boy; can that stuff. If you don't, you'll drive me bughouse."

CHAPTER XI.

IT is to be presumed a ball player would look foolish if, just as a game was about to start, he stepped to the home plate, faced the assembled throng, removed his cap and sang the following from the prologue to "Pagliacci:"

"E voi, pruttosto che le onstre povere gabbane d' istrioni, le nostr' anime considerate, poiche noi siam uomini di carne e d' ossa, e che di quest' orfano mondo all pari di voi spiriamo l' aere!"

He would doubtless appear equally foolish if he sang the same words in English:

"Ah, think then, sweet people,
When ye look upon us, clad in our motley and tinsel
Ours are human hearts, beating with passion,
We are but men like you, for gladness or sorrow.
'Tis the same broad Heaven above us,
The same wide lonely world before us!"

There might be some scattering applause, but a vast majority of the unfeeling crowd would yell: "Cut it out!"

Fine Men Among Players.

Yet ball players are men. They are human beings, a fact often lost sight of by those who pay to see them perform. Frequently they are jeered and hooted and insulted by men of a low order of intelligence in the crowds; men who would not dare to say the same things to the players, if they met them face to face on the street.

There are those who say the life of a ball player is degrading; that baseball is a trivial profession. Yet the Governor of Pennsylvania was a professional ball player. So was "Billy" Sunday, the revivalist. So was A. G. Spalding, millionaire and near-Senator from California. So was Edward Hanlon, one of Baltimore's most successful real estate operators. So was Ted Lewis, a professor at Amherst College. So were hundreds of men who are now successful in other walks of life.

Things happen in baseball which never reach the ears of the public. There are tragedies and sorrows, joys and happiness in the national game that the outside world wots not of. All of which in this roundabout way leads up to the introduction to the reader of Thomas P. Morrissey, familiarly known by the sobriquet of "Long Tom."

For fifteen years Long Tom caught behind the bat in the big leagues. In his prime he was reckoned among the best men that ever wore a mask. One year he caught 148 games, handling the delivery of all kinds of pitchers—those that were as wild as hawks and those that had fine control; the ones that had "everything" and the ones that had nothing but a prayer; the curve balls and the treacherous "spitballs." But Long Tom had seen his best days and he was now down in the minor All of which, in the roundabout way, leads up to the introduction to the leagues, with only a brief baseball life before him. His fingers were gnarled and distorted. His right arm was no longer the terror of base-stealers. His legs had gone back on him.

Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta club, had taken a chance and signed Long Tom to a contract. He wanted him principally to coach the young pitchers on his staff and he had an idea that the hot Southern climate might boil the old fellow out and put him into something like his real form. Long Tom was not old except in a baseball sense. He had just turned thirty-five, but in baseball youth must be served.

Made Him Jealous.

Long Tom reported for practice the first day. He arrived in the clubhouse just as the others began their practice on the field. He slowly undressed and put on a uniform, and, picking up his mitt, mask, chest protector and shin guards, walked through the runway that led to the field. He came on the scene at the very moment Gordon Kelly was standing at the plate waiting for Brady to pitch to him, and when Kelly made that tremendous drive he stood stock still and watched the ball in its flight far into right field. Then he turned his eyes on the young man and followed the tall, powerful, lithe-limbed figure as it sped around the bases. Something in the sight of the youth filled the veteran with rage and jealousy.

"That's the kind that is putting us veterans out of the business," he muttered.

He sauntered up to the group that stood around the home plate and was cordially greeted by those who knew him of old. He was then made acquainted with the young players, who, of course, while they knew him by reputation, had never met him on the ball field. Included in the latter was Gordon Kelly, who shook Long Tom's warped hand and gave the customary greeting. Morrissey eyed the other critically and remarked:

"You're the fence buster of the Southern League, I take it."

"Nothing like that," laughed Kelly, "but I'd like to be."

"I guess you would, all right," returned Long Tom.

A Star Catch.

It wasn't what he said, but the half-sneering way he said it that caused Kelly to look up quickly.

"You must be that correspondence school guy I read about in the paper, I see another paper calls you a 'cotillion leader.' Well, that's where you belong, I'm a-thinking."

Kelly flushed and a look of surprise came over his face at the sarcastic tone of Long Tom. But he merely answered "Maybe so" and walked away. There were some unpleasant things connected with baseball, he thought. He could not understand why Morrissey should go out of his way to belittle him. Long Tom's remarks were entirely uncalled for. There was no occasion for them. He finally came to the conclusion that Morrissey was of a crabbed and morose disposition. Yet he recalled having read columns and columns in the newspapers about this veteran catcher and there had been no word that would lead one to think he was other than normal in his disposition.

As a matter of fact, Tom Morrissey's disposition was naturally peaceful. He, like most ball players, had had his clubhouse scraps, but they had not been of his own seeking. They had seemed to come naturally. He had the reputation of being as game a man as ever went behind the bat, and by hard work and strict attention to business he had earned the respect of his fellow players. But his relegation to the minor leagues had seemed to work a change in him. The truth had come home to him that his baseball days were numbered. The realization of this fact came to him on this fine day in March when he saw in Gordon Kelly the perfect picture of youth. It had suddenly made him angry with himself, and, contrary to his nature, he had proceeded to vent his spleen on Kelly.

When Gordon Kelly walked away from him, Long Tom continued to keep his eyes on the young man, and he watched his every movement. At last he was interrupted by Bill Smith, who yelled:

"A little infield practice now, boys. I'll bat the grounders. The rest of you go in the outfield. Tom, get a bat and knock up some fungoes."

Bailey, Nixon and Long journeyed to the outfield and Kelly went with them. Morrissey selected a lightweight fungo bat and began sending up easy flies. He served Bailey, Nixon and Long in turn and then shouted, "Here y'are, kid." At the same time he put all the force he could command behind his bat and drove the ball high in the air and labeled to land far over the head of Gordon Kelly.

With the crack of the bat, however, Kelly had turned suddenly and raced with all his marvelous speed toward the center field. After covering more than a hundred feet he stopped and turned again, facing the grandstand and an instant later the ball settled in his uplifted hands. He had timed the hit to a hair.

When Long Tom had signified his intention of sending up a fly ball in Kelly's direction, Bill Smith suspended his work to watch the result.

"If he gets under that one, he's a wonder," murmured the manager. Since the newspapers had spoken so facetiously about his "world-beater" he had become harassed by the thought that he had made a mistake in saying anything about the youngster until he had demonstrated his ability in a more substantial manner. There was little or nothing at stake financially and that end of it did not trouble Smith at all. But no manager of a ball club cares to have anything "put over" on him, so that he becomes the butt of the baseball public. When, therefore, Kelly made a really wonderful catch, the worried look faded from Bill Smith's face, he sighed deeply and his somewhat funereal smile shone like a candle through a hollow squash.

"Is that your correspondence school ball player, Billy?" asked Long Tom Morrissey.

"That's him. What do you think of him?" replied Smith.

TOO MANY KIDS

THEY told old Watkins, the showman, that there was no use giving his show in Kornshucks. There were too many kids there.

Old Watkins was in the free show business, and others in the same business had said to him: "The kids crowd in ahead of the old folks and monopolize the show. They absorb all the humorous offerings, and actually interrupt the doctor just at the important point when he unloads his wares, including cures for toothache, rheumatism, and colds and complexion beautifiers, at 50 cents a whack."

These kids, as far back as tradition goes, had spoiled everything in Kornshucks. They had interrupted sermons and lawn fetesand comic operas; and once when there was a sham battle the shooting could not be heard for them.

But in spite of all he was told about those kids, old Watkins went on putting up his tent for his medicine show. He merely listened politely to the people, who wagged their heads and warned him of failure. By the time his tent was up the kids filled the entire landscape back to the horizon. But he went ahead.

About fifteen minutes before the time the show was supposed to start something occurred on another vacant lot a little distance off. A man built a bonfire. Then he produced an explosion, it was no little explosion, but a regular Fourth of July affair. Then came more explosions.

Along about the third of the series the vacant lot where this was going on began accumulating kids. They came at the rate of 1,000 per bang from that time on. By the sixth bang all the kids in town were there, and only the old folks were left for the free show.

Old Watkins said: "You need not follow the kids to see what is going on there, my friends. There is nothing there but a bonfire and an ear-splitting racket. But it will keep the kids occupied and happy, and we can now proceed to have a show in peace."

"Hooray!" applauded the grown people. "Go ahead! Isn't it delightful?"

The performance proceeded. The mothers laughed and the fathers laughed. Why shouldn't they? There was no one stamping on their toes and pulling their arms off. There was no fighting and scuffing and crowding—nothing disagreeable at all. Only the refreshing jokes of the medicine man, made up as a negro or a Dutchman or some other inhabitant of the realm of mirth!

It was great! They laughed and enjoyed themselves and listened with breathless alarm to the dreadful things that might happen to them if they did not avail themselves of the providential chance to buy medicines that would heal all known diseases.

The show was over and all the money to be had was acquired by old Watkins, the free show medicine man, before the explosions and the medicine died down and released the kids.

DANGER IN EATING MEAT

Statistics Show That People Who Eat Meat Are Susceptible to Typhoid Fever.

The death rate of Typhoid has been 10 per cent for many years. Even if the patient recovers, there is danger. Weakened constitution, languidness, loss of energy and other after-effects.

In a majority of cases typhoid fever is directly traceable to an inactive liver which has left masses of meat particles undigested in the alimentary canal. This mass putrefies and sends out death-dealing poisons, to result in typhoid fever.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT is the greatest known liver stimulant. Its action is gentle, yet effective. It draws water to the alimentary tract, flushes stomach and bowels, washes away the undigested meat particles and removes the danger of fermentation. The blood is purified through the renewed activity of the liver.

JACOBS' LIVER SALT does not cause nausea and vomiting; no dangerous after-effects as with calomel. Don't take an inferior substitute; many imitate the name, but can not produce the same natural, flushing action of the genuine JACOBS' LIVER SALT. At all druggists, 25c. If your druggist can not supply you, upon receipt of price, full size jar mailed, postage free. Made and guaranteed by Jacobs' Pharmacy Company, Atlanta, Ga.

Ice-Kist Crankless Freezer

Be Wise! Make Your Own Ice Cream

Of course, you know that home-made ice creams, sherbets or ices are superior from every viewpoint. They are always sweet, pure and wholesome; there is a flavor and genuine goodness about them that is not found in the general run of factory products. Besides that, when you make your own preparations you know that the ingredients are always pure, and that the can is clean and sanitary. The main reason why ice cream is made in but comparatively few homes, is the work and bother connected with the old-fashioned crank freezer. That is one reason why the arrival of

will be hailed with delight by every one who is fond of ice creams, etc., because it eliminates the tedious turning of the crank entirely, and produces creams, sherbets and ices that will make your mouth water. That is one reason, but there are many others.

DON'T YOU KNOW that the enjoyment of a dish largely depends upon the manner in which it is served? Could you imagine a daintier and more appetizing manner of serving ice creams than provided for by the "Ice-Kist?"

When One Is Very Young

"Love is a sickness full of woes,
all remedies refusing."
—Samuel Daniel.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

G. K. writes: "I am seventeen years of age and in love with a girl one year my junior. I am in love with her very much, but I don't know if she loves me. I feel as if I am getting sick, knowing not what to do."

The letter bears a date of ten days ago. If it were of yesterday, or the day previous, there might be reason for some uneasiness regarding the condition of G. K., but ten days is a long, long time, and without doubt he has gone through all the chills, the fever, the pangs, and made a complete recovery ere this.

This boy and girl love—calf love, some say—may develop into something larger, truer, finer, but the chances are all against it. A boy of seventeen thinks he has found the one love for life, and he also thinks he will never become too old to prefer pie to potatoes. He is sure that his heart will never waver from the choice of his youth, and just as sure that when he has grown old and gray, and has earned the right to spend money as he chooses, that he will at last gratify his youthful longing for nut sundaes.

Seldom Serious.

The love of his extreme youth is seldom serious, and does not even become a pleasant memory, for the reason that there were so many of them. The one picture he thinks he will always carry in his heart becomes the composite picture of many, and he forgets in a few years if Ethel had blue eyes or brown, and if it were Mary who gave him a lock of her hair, or Susan.

His emotions are so short-lived that calf love would be something to laugh about were it not for the waste of time every such love represents.

In the growing, developing, eventful and impressionable period of life, when a boy and girl should be studying their school books and laying the foundation for helpful manhood or womanhood, they moon around to the neglect of everything in life that is worth while, devoting every hope, every energy, every thought, to what they call love, but which bears no nearer resemblance to love than a worthless pebble bears to a precious jewel.

It is most regrettable that so much time is wasted in seeking for the counterfeit, instead of preparing one's self by study and training and self-control to appreciate the genuine that will come later.

Needless Waste.

G. K. has recovered from the sickness that prompted his letter long ere this. It is as if he called a physician to minister to an ailment so short-lived that it had vanished when the physician arrived. But the physician would warn him against another such attack, and explain the folly of needless pain, the waste of health and energy that could be avoided.

I can do no more. The remedy lies in his own hands. He must put such devotion into the effort to make a man of himself that there isn't time, room or inclination left for indulgence in the emotions that are not his due till he reaches man's estate.

The Five Frankforters

A Romance of Great Wealth as Played by Money Kings

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Solomon, you may come in. Our tete-a-tete is quite over. We have not much in common—his Highness and I," said the old woman sadly.

The five Frankforters came quickly at their mother's summons. Charlotte came too, and stood in the doorway where for one fleeting moment she had touched the garments of the God of Love as he sped by.

"Madame! Shall I speak now?" asked Duke Gustavus with firm decision. Then he turned from the old mother to Solomon. "Sir—you know already why I am here to-day. I have the honor to beg for your daughter's hand in marriage."

With due solemnity Solomon answered: "We thank you, Duke Gustavus, for the high honor you confer on our family. We accept that honor—gratefully and gladly. I give my daughter to you."

Who shall fathom the heart of a maid? Who shall tell to what knowledge of her woman's heritage Charlotte had grown in one full hour? The girl came gently to her father and put her hand on his shoulder and looked deep into his eyes—into his soul, perhaps. "Father, you CANNOT without a word from me!"

"What do you mean?" asked her father sternly.

"I am ashamed! I know now that you arranged this yesterday—and I am ashamed."

The Crisis.

In growing anger the man asked his daughter, "How ashamed?"

"Ashamed to have been offered and accepted in this way."

"It is the custom of our people to arrange marriages in this way." Solomon's growing anger would not brook long delay—or argument.

"A hateful custom! A shameful custom!" cried Charlotte.

"Shameful?" Solomon's wrath was threatening to overwhelm his dignified manners.

"Yes. Yes—shameful. Your Highness, I will not be a party to a bargain so shameful to both of us. I thank you—and refuse."

"Do you know what you are saying?" thundered the baffled father.

"Do you know what I am FEELING? Father, do you believe that I could ever be happy without a home? For I could never find a home in that castle, with the very servants laughing at me behind my back. And the portraits on the walls staring at me and seeming to say: 'If you please you have come here too soon; wait another century or so!' No, no! If I marry, I—Grannie——" And poor little Charlotte, having fought her first battle—life's great battle for the right to happiness—fell sobbing at her grandmother's feet.

"Grannie!" Poor little banker's daughter, who has never known a mother, will you plead in vain to the dear old woman who has been the saint of your girlish dreams?

Solomon spoke. He was very angry, but it was that cold, implacable anger that brooks no interference with his desires. "Your Highness will forgive this exhibition? My daughter will soon see reason?"

But Gustavus was to struggle slowly to-day to his full heritage of manhood. "I beg you—I insist—that you shall not persuade her against her will."

"Her will?" said Solomon. "In this family the children obey their parents."

A Boomerang.

Frau Gudula rose with quiet dignity from her great arm chair. "Then YOU obey ME—and let the child have her way in this. Duke Gustavus, I think you at last are wise enough to understand it must be so. Love is greater than any of us. No! little Charlotte, get up! Grannie won't let anyone hurt you."

Gustavus smiled. "Madame, I have looked into the souls of three women to-day—and I think I understand. But now, Baron, if I do not fulfil my part"——

Solomon spoke bitterly: "Count Fehrenberg has the money! He is half way to the castle by now."

"It will be returned to you, of course," began Gustavus, quietly, and then his old merry, devil-may-care spirit finished the sentence—"if there is any left."

Frau Gudula spoke with stately authority: "No, Duke Gustavus, be thankful you have it. Perhaps it will make a great difference in all of your life. If I know my sons, they will not be losers."

"My mother is right," said Amschel. "We have never yet taken back a signature."

"If your Highness is not too anxious to return to Neustadt Castle at once," said Nathan, "we can discuss the situation over the rest of the Burgundy. Will you come, Carl, Amschel? I think we still feel that Your Highness's personal security is what we want."

And as they discussed the salt mines and great forests that might yet make the Duchy of Taunus a wealthy province, the brothers little dreamed of the hidden wealth Gustavus was finding in his dream of a pair of eyes that had not lied. For suddenly the Duke of Taunus knew that the old home was his and he must not leave it—that a man must not abdicate for the woman he loves—but that when he is worthy to rule, then he is worthy to win even her love. And the money? Oh, Gustavus of Taunus could always find plenty of use for that! Love may work miracles, but because his sweetheart's hair is spun gold, a spendthrift does not learn to scorn all other gold!

The Real Reason.

And Solomon was thinking of the plans that had gone so sadly amiss—and of his twelve millions of florins! They might have been better invested!

"Who could have believed it!" said he. "A young fellow like that to have the best of us! Providence has helped him."

"Perhaps he is sharper than you thought," said his mother.

"Then I am all the more sorry to lose him as a son-in-law. Now—Fraudlein Charlotte—you will be so good as to give me your reasons for what you have done."

The girl moved slowly, almost as one in a dream, across to the father she had so sorely displeased. Her little scene was set and she must play out her part before her audience. Grannie was sitting again in her great arm-chair by the little breakfast table. Old Sol still shone across the rose arbor and traced a pattern of flowers and leaves on the soft green carpet. Across the room, stood her Cousin Jacob—intent, waiting—one would scarcely dare guess for what. But Charlotte and her father standing close—close in the little heart of that sunny room, were talking to each other across grim, gray seas of misunderstanding.

"Your reasons, Charlotte," said the man. This was not father talking to daughter—it was the man of business talking to the woman who had dared to balk his dearest plans.

"You know them, father. If I marry, it will not be for a castle, and a grand title, and position—the Duke would have given those to me—but I want more—far more—than he could ever give me."

"Go on."

"And I must be able to give more—infinitely more than I could ever give to him. Then I would be content to live anywhere—as dear Grannie was."

The Truth Comes Out.

Solomon sank into a great chair across the room from his mother. On Frau Gudula's face was a sweet smile of memory—and hope for this younger generation whom she loved. And Jacob? Jacob was waiting—waiting with throbbing pulses and yearning eyes for that supreme thing for which he would have given the world had the world been his!

"Is there anone to whom you could give—and who could give to you—all you mean?" asked Solomon with slow insistence. He would sift this matter of his daughter's daring disobedience to the bottom.

"I—I—believe so, father."

"Will you tell me who he is?"

The girl did not answer. Pulsing, telltale blood stained her cheeks with love's own royal crimson—but she could not lift her sturry eyes.

"So! It is all arranged between you, I suppose. What is his position in life?"

Charlotte answered so low that one might scarcely hear her timid tones: "He is—a business man, I think you would call it."

"Every tailor calls himself that. What kind of a business is his?"

"Banking"—still lower.

"A banker?"

"Yes; like you." The girl wondered if this torture would ever cease—would she ever be at peace—and happy?

Extremes of Fashion From Paris

The ultra extreme of evening dress.

THE picture on the left shows a rich and effective model for theater or semi-evening wear. The original gown was of sulphur-colored brocaded satin over a foundation of sulphur chiffon.

The under part of the bodice is formed by a very high draped belt which rises in two points from the under arm to the chest. Shadow lace edged with beads starts from a beaded ornament at the center front and comes over the shoulder, falling in the back in long angel sleeves, which end in a beaded tassel.

The skirt is made in two pieces, draped one over the other, and is held at the right by a buckle of beads, from which starts a small round train.

For the Extremist.

The model on the right cannot be recommended to the woman who wishes to be modest. The consideration of what not to wear is almost as important as what clothes to select, and together with the extremes of the overworked Balkan blouse fashion, the wise woman will avoid the sleeveless corsage and the skirt slit to the knees. It will be easily seen how the modifications that good taste suggests to every woman will change these dresses from extremes of freakishness into really graceful dresses.

This model shows an evening gown of Persian blue and gold over a foundation of black chiffon; the bodice is plain in corselet style, and the top consists of a fichu of black chiffon which drapes over the shoulder to form small sleeves. The waist is girdled by a belt of Persian blue satin, with a huge flower of the same material in front. The plain skirt is split at the knees to show the foundation of pleated chiffon. On one side of this cut it curves up about three inches from the floor, and on the left it lengthens into a train with rounding corners.

Do You Know That—

One of the longest concrete viaducts in the world is being erected over the Cuyaroga River in Cleveland. It has a length of 2,880 feet and is a double-decker, the upper deck carrying a driveway 42 feet wide for automobiles and other vehicles, with 12 feet of "sidewalk" on each side. The lower deck will carry four street railway tracks. The clearance over the channel will be 93 feet. Some 1,500 concrete spiles are being driven to carry the nine piers nearest the water.

Experiments have been made in Germany in the use of pigeons for scouting purposes. The pigeons are provided with miniature cameras furnished with shutters that are released automatically. The birds are set free from selected points so that they fly over the enemy's fortifications. When they return home the photographs they have taken are developed, and sometimes important disclosures appear on the film.

At Loerrach, in the Black Forest, there is a lake, the bed of which remains dry from 10 to 13 years at a time, and then suddenly refills with water from subterranean springs to a depth of 12 to 15 feet. After ten years the Eichener Sea, as it is called, has again commenced to fill, and has destroyed all the crops which farmers had planted on the bed.

Value of Bluff.

In a close encounter during the American Civil war, two soldiers, one from each army, came face to face within short range.

Each put up his gun and fired, as it subsequently appeared, his last cartridge. Both missed. The bullet of one man buried itself in a tree, and the shot of the other passed through the coat of his enemy. Each man, knowing his ammunition was gone, supposed himself to be at a disadvantage.

One of them made a great show of reloading his gun, and, stepping forward, demanded a surrender. The other threw down his arms with a groan.

"If I had another cartridge I would never surrender," he exclaimed.

"That's all right," calmly remarked the captor, marching off his prisoner. "If I had another, you may be sure I shouldn't have asked you to surrender."

"Do you think $20 will be enough to give the minister?" inquired the prospective bridegroom.

"You'd better make it $25," replied the best man. "He is going to be married himself next week."

"Do you know how to run a motor car?"

"Well," replied Mr. Chuggins, "I know all about the mechanism of the thing. But I haven't yet mastered the city ordinances."

A LITTLE SIX-YEAR-OLD DARLING IS RESCUED FROM ITS MISERIES

Little Willie Shumate, the little six-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Shumate, of 168 Kirkwood Avenue, this city, suffered like thousands of other little children are suffering. He was pale and puny; in his sleep he would roll and toss; in the morning his breath was bad, and during the day he was very nervous and constantly biting his finger nails or picking his nose. He was too young to take severe medicines and the parents were simply told not to worry, because the child would get over its troubles as he grew older. But the parents did worry. They could not help it, seeing their child in such constant misery. They called at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store and obtained a treatment of Quaker Extract. The child was given this remedy regularly according to directions, and the results came to light. He took one bottle and a half of the Extract, and expelled not one but a handful of small worms, some alive and some dead. These were the cause of the child's sufferings, and Quaker Extract, by removing the cause, cured the child. These worms were two inches long each. To-day the little fellow is happy as a lark and his happiness is shared by his loving parents, his cheeks are red and rosy.

The case again proves the powers of the wonderful Quaker Extract. If you suffer from rheumatism, catarrh or stomach worms, call at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store, 29 Marietta Street, for Quaker Extract, 6 for $5.00, 3 for $2.50 or $1.00 a bottle. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1.00. Do not fail to call to-day and obtain good health. We prepay express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T WORRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am nineteen and for some time past have been keeping company with two young men, R. and G. Now, as they are having numerous disputes over me, I decided to meet just one of them and stop their quarrels. I prefer the society of G., and I told this to R., thinking it best to be honest with him. He became very angry and said I had done him a great wrong in not telling him before. He als accused me of encouraging him. He has vowed he will cause trouble between G. and me. I am only a little girl and such a thing as love never occurred to me. GLADYS.

I think R. is blustering in the hope of frightening you. If you prefer G. you have the right to show your preference. It will be much better for you to go with neither than to try to meet both.

THEY ARE RIGHT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am seventeen and deeply in love with a girl one year my junior, whom I have known three years. Now, as my parents think I am too young to have anything to do with girls, I would like to have your advice on the matter. JACK.

Your constancy for three years is in your favor. Be constant a few years longer and this will prove your love more than any protestations.

In the meantime remember your parents know best.

KNEW A LITTLE

A gentleman traveling some time ago asked a one-armed mendicant by whom he was accosted how he lost his arm.

"It was like this, sir. The last time I went to sea we was caught in a typhoon off Cape 'Orn. The ship went over on her beam ends, so the cap'n 'e orders me an' Tom to go out on the yardarm to keelhaul the bo'sprit and ter splice the jib-boom to the mainmast. I was a-hangin' on to the top-gallant ratlin's when Tom suddenly let go his end, an' I was pitched 40 feet in the 'old."

The gentleman smiled.

"That's a capital yarn," he said. "You ought to have been a sailor," and, without giving him anything, went on his way.

Crestfallen, the beggar watched his interrogator, and saw a crossing-sweeper touch his hat most deferentially to him.

"I say, Jim, who's 'e w'en 'e's at 'ome?" he called.

"Him?" replied the sweeper. "Don't you know who that is? Why, that's Admiral Beresford."

Always Merry and Bright.

False to all the traditions of Scotland and of farming, Sandy McTavish was a supreme optimist.

Nothing ever seemed to worry him.

One day—so the story goes—during the great floods, he was found by a neighbor lucky enough to possess a boat sitting peacefully on the roof of his house, smoking his pipe while the waters rose.

"Hello, Sandy!" cried the neighbor.

"Hello, Sam!" cried the cheerful one. "All your fowls washed away, I suppose?"

Sandy nodded.

"Ay," he said; "but the ducks can swim!"

"Apple trees gone, too, eh?"

"Well, the crop would have failed anyhow."

"So will you," said Sam, "if you sit up there much longer. Why, the waters have covered your ground floor windows already."

"I know," replied Sandy, as he smoked on; "and a good thing, too. Them windows did want washin'!"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Why, Dad," he said, "she is young. She's just a little child in a hundred ways. She loves the trees and the grass and the flowers—and everything that's simple and real! And as for her heart—" His voice was low and very tender. "Why, her heart is the biggest I've ever known. It's just overflowing with sweetness and kindness. I've seen her pick up a baby that had fallen in the street and mother it in a way that—well, no one could do it as she did it, unless her soul was clean."

Gilder in Despair.

The father was silent, a little awed. He made an effort to shake off the feeling, and spoke with a sneer.

"You heard what she said yesterday, and you still are such a fool as to think that."

The answer of the son came with an immutable finality, the sublime faith of love.

"I don't think—I know!"

Gilder was in despair. What argument could avail him? He cried out sharply in desperation.

'Do you realize what you're doing? Don't go to smash, Dick, just at the beginning of your life. Oh, I beg you, boy, stop! Put this girl out of your thoughts and start fresh."

The reply was of the simplest, and it was the end of the argument.

"Father," Dick said, very gently, "I can't."

There followed a little period of quiet between the two. The father, from his desk, stood facing his son, who thus denied him in all honesty because the heart so commanded. The son rested motionless and looked with unflinching eyes into his father's face. In the gaze of each was a great affection.

"You're all I have, my boy," the older man said at last. And now the big voice was a mildest whisper of love.

"Yes, Dad," came the answer—another whisper, since it is hard to voice the truth of feeling such as this. "If I could avoid it, I wouldn't hurt you for anything in the world. I'm sorry, Dad, awfully sorry—" He hesitated; then his voice rang out clearly. There was in his tone, when he spoke again, a recognition of that loneliness which is the curse and the crown of being:

"But," he ended, "I must fight this out by myself—fight it out in my own way. . . . And I'm going to do it!"

CHAPTER XVI.

Burke Plots.

THE butler entered. "A man to see you, sir," he said. Gilder made a gesture of irritation, as he sank into the chair at his desk.

"I can't see any one to-night, Thomas," he exclaimed, sharply.

"But he said it was important, sir," the servant went on. He held out the tray insistently.

The master took the card grudgingly. As his eyes caught the name, his expression changed slightly.

"Very well," he said, "show him up." His glance met the wondering gaze of his son.

"It's Burke," he explained.

"What on earth can he want—at this time of night?" Dick exclaimed.

The father smiled grimly.

"You may as well get used to visits from the police."

There was something ghastly in his effort toward playfulness.

A moment later Inspector Burke entered the room.

"Oh, you're here, too," he said, as his eyes fell on Dick. "That's good! I wanted to see you, too."

Inspector Burke was, in fact, much concerned over the situation that had developed. He was a man of undoubted ability, and he took a keen professional pride in his work.

He possessed the faults of his class, was not too scrupulous where he saw a safe opportunity to make a snug sum of money through the employment of his official authority, was ready to truckle to those whose influence could help or hinder his ambition. But, in spite of these ordinary defects, he was fond of his work and wishful to excel in it.

Thus, Mary Turner had come to be a thorn in his side. She flouted his authority and sustained her incredible effrontery by a restraining order from the court. The thing was outrageous to him, and he set himself to match her cunning. The fact that she had involved Dick Gilder within her toils made him the more anxious to overcome her in the strife of resources between them.

After much studying, he had at last planned something that, while it would not directly touch Mary herself, would at least serve to intimidate her, and as well make further action easier against her.

It was in pursuit of this scheme that he now came to Gilder's house, and the presence of the young man abruptly gave him another idea that might benefit him well. So he disregarded Gilder's greeting, and went on speaking to the son.

Dick's Eyes Flashed.

"She's skipped!" he said triumphantly.

Dick made a step forward. His eyes flashed, and there was anger in his voice as he replied:

"I don't believe it."

The inspector smiled, unperturbed.

"She left this morning for Chicago," he said, lying with a manner that long habit rendered altogether convincing. "I told you she'd go." He turned to the father, and spoke with an air of boastful good nature. "Now, all you have to do is to get this boy out of the scrape and you'll be all right."

"If we only could!"

The cry came with deepest earnestness from the lips of Gilder, but there was little hope in his voice.

The inspector, however, was confident of success, and his tones rang cheerfully as he answered:

'WHITEY' HURT, CRACKERS PLAY WRETCHED GAME

By Percy H. Whiting.

WHEN Whitey Alperman went over after a terrific grounder hit by Spencer in the sixth and caught the ball with the side of his head there was a gasp from the ——. It was a terrific blow—enough to noor an ox. It didn't floor Whitey, quite, but it put him out of the game.

And through the rest of a gloomy afternoon the fans had a chance to think what a difference it would make to the Crackers if anything happened to Alperman.

The odd thing about Alperman is that he's playing better ball now than he ever played in his life.

It will be recalled that spite work put him out of the big leagues. He and Charley Ebbets had words and the Brooklyn mogul said he would spend $10,000 to keep "Whitey" out of the big leagues. So he sent him to Rochester. But when John Ganzel gave him up there was no question of spite work. Jawn thought he was "all through."

Last year Alperman played sensational ball. This year, with a better club, he is going even stronger.

Said King Brady, the other day, "I've known Alperman off and on through his whole career. He is playing better ball now than he ever did in his life—vastly better than when he was with Brooklyn. And he was a grand infielder then."

* * *

ALPERMAN has been a great man for Atlanta. His batting has been timely and his fielding phenomenal. Any man who could plug the gap that Otto Jordan left has some size to him. And Alperman has more than done it. If anything happened to old Whitey the Cracker team would be messed up proper.

IT was a freaky game the Crackers lost yesterday. Up to the seventh the Pelicans had made five hits and four runs. The Crackers had made eight hits and two runs. Then everybody "blew" at once on the Cracker side and the visitors romped, 8 to 2.

It was another wretched game for the Crackers. Good old Joe Dunn had a hideous time of it, Agler pulled a miscue that cost two runs, a couple of pops fell safe for lack of a little determination in getting under them, Tommy Long slumbered at the switch and failed to score from third on a slow double play at first and second and the Crackers wasted enough hits to win three ordinary games.

* * *

SEVERAL odd propositions developed. Seventy-seven per cent of the Pelicans' hits came after the fifth inning. Seventy-five per cent of the Crackers' hits were made by the first two men on the batting order. One hundred per cent were made by Long, Welchonce and Smith. Seventy-seven per cent of Atlanta's put-outs were made by the last three men in the batting order.

Everything went by spots. And it was a spotty, sloppy, chilly game.

* * *

THE Pels had all the luck. Spencer's home run over the signs was an easy loft. The same hit to center or left would undoubtedly have been an out to a fielder. A little pebble gave the ball that hit Alperman a bad bound, knocked out a steady infielder and cost another run. The Crackers batted terrifically but never at the right time. For instance, note this coincidence: Three times in succession Long hit a single and Welchonce followed him with a single. Twice none was out. Once one was out. Not once in three times could either Alperman or Bailey, two of the league's greatest pinch-hitters, deliver a safe swat.

PAT WRIGHT, most bitterly execrated of President's Kavanaugh's staff of umpires, served his first sentence behind the bat Tuesday.

Once or twice Pat was palpably off. In a close game it would have been exasperating. With everything shot to blazes anyhow it did not matter.

"But," as one of the ball players remarked, anent the fact that the veteran is generally wrong, "It's lucky Pat's name is Wright."

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 28.—A few days ago I discussed the different teams in the National League race in general. To-day I will return to the same subject, sizing up the Giants and Pirates. Both teams were off all over in the early part of the race.

The New York players displayed some of the worst fielding seen on any diamond since the late world's series. Nothing was sure to the Giants. The pitchers were also out of sorts. Tesreau failing to get moving and Marquard being out of condition from sickness. The Giants hopped into their fielding stride last week with a single bound, and the infield is moving like a string of firecrackers now. Instead of turning outs into base hits, as we were doing, the infielders are now cutting down base hits and converting them into outs, as several of the Pittsburg players will tell you if you get a chance to consult them. That helps.

Following this encouraging sign, both Tesreau and Marquard stepped out and pitched good baseball last week, Rube showing a very fine game against the Pirates when he got tangled up in a pitching battle with Camnitz, the one that went fourteen innings. His fast ball had the hop on it for the first time this season, and when he is getting the jump on his fast one he is one of the best southpaws in the business anywhere. Tesreau also stepped forth in the latter part of this same game and displayed his old speed and the break on his spitter which made him really the leading pitcher of the National League last season.

With these two men going at their best, the Giants are sure to get pitching. The only man on the staff not up to the top of his stride now is Al Demaree, the recruit who has shown such grand form so far this season. He strained his side recently, and will not be ready to work regularly again for about a week. But Tesreau can go to the box every other day if necessary, but it won't be necessary with Marquard and myself in shape to take our regular turns.

THE Giants have not hit up to anything like the pace they showed last season so far, but they should bat harder. Shafer, who has replaced Snodgrass in center field, is one of the most natural hitters I have ever seen, and it is impossible to get him to go after a bad ball. He has a wonderful eye and is a splendid judge of balls and strikes. His batting average does not show his true strength, because he reaches first base so often on passes. He is also lightning fast on the bases once he arrives, and will worry any pitcher badly.

Burns is capable of batting better than he is doing at present. He is still a little strange in the big league berth, but he is a good ball player.

Fletcher is batting hard, and Merkle and Murray have picked up within the last week. Meyers so far has not acquired his last season's punch.

The club will get batting, and then we should climb through the league like the gossip of a kiss through a boarding house.

* * *

PITTSBURG afrittered away ball games until it came to New York, when it took one of those sudden braces and battled us to a practical standstill. After leaving the Polo Grounds, the Pirates went over to Brooklyn and choked down the fond hopes of the Dodgers, when Dahlen had been led to expect something soft after the fine manner in which the Boston club cleaned up four straight on Clarke's crew. The Pirates have the pitching and the hitting, and will be in the contention for the championship.

* * *

BROOKLYN has started to fade, and I expect to see the team drop. Of course the club will not go down to the depths to which other Brooklyn teams have descended in years past, but it will be fighting to remain out of the second division before the last word is in.

* * *

THE St. Louis club is a big surprise, especially to the Giants, but it is going ahead of its normal speed now. It has not the staunchness to last. The team has two excellent pitchers, Harmon and Sallee, and Konetchy is a great ball player. So is Huggins. The rest of the team is nothing out of the ordinary, and a club must be out of the ordinary to win a pennant. Huggins' peppery personality has done a lot for the team. Sallee will do a lot more if he sticks in shape all season.

CARDINALS WILL HOLD ON TO JIMMY SHECKARD

ST. Louis, May 28.—A yarn emanating from Cincinnati to the effect that Jimmy Sheckard would be released by the Cardinal club because his salary was too bulky was spiked yesterday by Manager Huggins. "I have no intention of releasing Sheckard," declared the Cardinal commander, "and I want to state that emphatically. Sheckard is a great ball player, and he was paid accordingly by the Chicago club. We took over his contract, but we're not kicking. Whether he will play regularly is a question. Our club really hasn't shaped itself as yet."

WILLIAMS BREAKS YALE'S LONG WINNING STREAK

NEW HAVEN, CONN., May 28.—Williams broke Yale's record of seventeen consecutive victories by shutting out the Blue on Yale field yesterday, 2 to 0. The game was played on a water-soaked diamond, with the drizzling rain falling at intervals. Each team fielded brilliantly

Overall, of the Cubs, and Sallee, of the Cardinals, engaged in a pitchers' battle yesterday, which resulted in favor of the former.

The Athletics took a double-header in easy fashion from the Senators yesterday, winning the first 8 to 0 and the second 7 to 1. Eddie Plank, the veteran southpaw, pitched in the first and allowed the Senators only two hits.

Peckinpaugh, the former Nap utility infielder, secured in trade by the Yankees, will be given a regular position at shortstop. "Peck" is regarded as a fast and brilliant fielder, but somewhat shy with the war club.

Harry Lumley, once manager and star player with the Dodgers, has been released by the Troy, N. Y., team. An injury to his throwing wrist perhaps will neecssitate his retirement from baseball.

* * *

* * *

The Braves' second victory of the day was a clean-cut, deserved affair, but the first game was won on a fluke. In the ninth Sweeney hit to the outfield, and Connelly, rounding third, started for the plate. Burns would have thrown him out by nearly ten feet, but the ball, instead of bounding into Catcher Meyers' hand, struck Sweeney's discarded bat and bounded away, while Connelly scored the only run of the game.

* * *

Manager Stovall's triple in the seventh which scored a run, followed by Austin's single, scoring Stovall, were enough to gain a victory yesterday for the Browns over the Tigers.

* * *

C. Webb Murphy, owner of the Cubs, who recently forbade his players to converse with reporters, has another grievance against the newspapers. A short time back Murphy set out on the trail of "Rube" Scheur, a promising pitcher of the Superior, Wis., team, in the Northern League. The newspapers prinied the fact and the Superior club owners at once boosted the price of Scheur so high that Murphy balked. Murphy now states the newspapers "queered my deal."

* * *

Dick Rudolph, the recruit from the Toronto team, in the International League, who pitched for the Braves Monday, holding the Giants at his mercy, acted as a relief pitcher again yesterday and once again the New Yorkers were unable to score on him.

COIN GRABBERS CAUSE OF LUTE M'CARTY'S END

By Left Hook.

LUTHER M'CARTY, one of the most valuable instruments of the setting of money under false pretenses in the hands of men who don't like to work, was finally killed in the prize-ring, a place he should never have been allowed to enter. He is the fifty-eighth victim of prize-fighting since the brutality has been eliminated, and it has been used solely to inculcate these principles of manliness and fair play that is invaluable to the youth of our city.

According to the doctors who examined the fighter's body, he had organic heart trouble. According to Jim Corbett and other experts who saw him shortly before he went into the fight with Pelky at Calgary, he was not in good condition. You will be interested to know how it was possible that a man with a bad heart could reach a position in pugilism where even a few gulls and greedy men could call him a champion of anything and draw crowds of a size that would justify their offering him $5,000 to fight for them. This is how it was done and how he was killed:

Up until recent years prize-fighting, the actual fighting, has been possible only to pure brutes, strong-thewed, iron-hearted animals. All fights were either to a finish or for twenty-five or forty-five rounds. This condition made McCarty impossible. It was a survival of the most uncivilized. With the growth of the influence of the public schools this type of man began to disappear. Young men with intelligence boxed or exercised and went into a decent business for a living.

Finally only two of the old breed were left, in two negroes—Johnson and Langford. It is white men who pay to see fights and make pugilism possible, and they would not pay much to see the two negroes. Johnson and Langford had practically abolished heavyweight prize-fighting because there were no fighters fit to meet them.

This condition was bad for a number of men who had made a life work of capitalizing the degradation and blood lust of pugilism. They were threatened with the necessity of doing something useful or starving to death. They dug up the poor old ruin, Jeffries, and pitted him against Johnson, and followed with one or two valiant and unskillful youngsters, but the public wearied quickly of this sort of sport, and heavyweight fighting died.

It was up to these gentlemen to do something in a hurry. The Frawley bill was passed in New York, where the most money is, and this permitted ten-round fights. The ten-round limit is useful because with a little luck an invalid might go through with it and not die the same night. The boxing commission was created. Its business was, among other things, to see that it got enough revenue out of the prize-fighting game to pay its own salaries and expenses.

If Johnson and Langford were allowed to fight that would be practically impossible, so the only two real fighting men in the heavyweight division were barred. This let down the barriers with no real fighters to fear and everybody had a chance to make easy money. Inside of a year a horde of white hopes descended on New York.

They were big, unskilled, inept clumsy, low-browed somnambulists who for the most part, to do them justice, knew that they were not fighting men, but were willing to pose along, as there was money in it. The pace was slow; the fights were short, and one was as bad as another, so there was nothing to fear.

Shaky mitral valves and fat paunch didn't make any difference. In this atmosphere and out of this sort of material Luther McCarty was grown by hothouse methods into a white champion, so that he would draw just so many dollars to the box office. It is doubtful if he knew that his heart was weak. None of the men who were fattening on him would have told him. They could take a chance against the kind of men he was called upon to meet.

Had it been a day of real fighters he would never have gotten out of the preliminary class, and would soon have gone back to some decent work. And now the other incompetent (Pelky) is held for killing him, whereas the real authors of his death are the shrewd money getters who lied to him day after day and told him he could fight.

SOUTH ATLANTIC LEAGUE REVISES BALL SCHEDULE

SAVANNAH, GA., May 28.—A special meeting of the South Atlantic League magnates was held in Savannah yesterday for the purpose of making a number of revisions of the present playing schedule. These revisions are necessary because of the late entrance of Charleston into the circuit. Charleston is said to be suffering considerable inconvenience by reason of the present schedule.

Those in attendance on the meeting were President J. K. Pray, of the Albany club; President W. H. Walsh, of the Charleston club; Secretary Charles E. Walton, of the Columbus association; President A. W. Barrs, of the Jacksonville club; President M. J. Etherage, of the Macon club, and President George W. Armstrong, of the Savannah club.

GALLANT DEFEATS HOGAN.

BOSTON, May 28.—"One Round" Hogan, of California, who was substituted for K. O. Sweeney in the main bout at the Atlas A. A., was defeated in a ten-round bout with Johnny Gallant, of Boston, last night.

GEORGIAN SPORTS COVERED by EXPERTS

Get Up When I'm Going to Bed? No, Sir! — By "Bud" Fisher

100 MILES HOUR POSSIBLE AT MOTORDROME

That speeds of 100 miles an hour for short flashes will inevitably be reached on the new motordome, going up now at the old show grounds, is the belief of the motorcycle experts who are gathered here to follow the season of racing which is soon to start over Jack Prince's Southern circuit.

Already, with the top of the track completed, and with serious danger lurking in any speed over 75 miles an hour, the riders are hitting up a speed of 90 an hour. That gives a hint of what they will do later. Before they can really "let out" the track must be completed—and this will soon be done. To finish it two feet six inches of heavy planks will be placed at the top of the real racing surface. This surface now in place is at an angle of 58 degrees. The new planking will be placed at 90 degrees—or "straight up." On top of this, also at 90 degrees, will be extremely heavy wire netting, four feet six inches high. On top of this will be the guard rail.

Men Will "Ride the Wire."

When the wire netting and the planks are in place the real speeding will begin. And when this happens the riders will not only ride on the 58-degree surface, but they will actually mount the perpendicular wall and will even ride on the wire netting.

With everything in place the riders can begin to find out what speed the track really has. It is their opinion that it is extremely fast. It has been particularly well constructed and seems right in every particular.

Not Motorcycles Here.

To add to the speed possibilities two new consignments of racing motorcycles have been shipped to the track from different factories, and they are the latest and most improved machines, made strictly for speed, and faster than anything of their size ever built before. Every morning and afternoon now the riders are tuning up their machines and getting them ready for the big doings.

On a good board track the speed limits are usually the nerve and the strength of the driver. The track, when once a man is fairly started, is nothing but a flat road of boards. There is nothing in the way and no turns to take—for the track is a perfect circle.

No Limit But the Sky.

It takes tremendous nerve and coolness to hold a machine steady at high speed, and it takes great power to hold its nose down and to keep it from going straight up and over the top. Aside from this, there is no limit to the speed except the power of the engines, and they are built fast enough to go at a rate faster than man ever rode before.

LIEBHARDT WILL HOOK UP WITH TURTLE TEAM

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—"Sugar Glen" Liebhardt, renowned in song and story as the "Iron Man of the Minors," will return to the Southern League as a member of the Memphis pitching staff as soon as satisfactory arrangements can be made by Manager Bernhard. While no announcement has been made to the effect, it is understood that Floyd Kroh, the erratic left-hander, will be released.

BEAUMONT CLUB WILL GET PITCHER WEAVER

Orlie Weaver will probably go to Beaumont, Texas, instead of to New Orleans. Charley Frank has refused to take Weaver unless he can get a clear title to his services, and Smith is not willing to give him up on that basis. Waivers have been secured on him and he will be sent to the Texas League.

CALGARY.

A human life snuffed out, and all for what?
A youth who played the game and reckoned not:
A crowd of human creatures known as men,
And every manlike instinct all forgot.

A crowd of creatures, all in human shape,
Who sit beside the shambles, all agape,
And cry for crimson blood, and still more blood—
And yet men frown upon the lowly ape!

Were we a politician with a desire to commit political suicide, our first move would be to support a bill legalizing the alleged manly art of self-defense.

We have various reasons to be thankful, one of which is that we are not Arthur Pelky.

Clark Griffith informs us that Walter Johnson has not attained his best form, but the form that he has attained is good enough to suit at least seven teams in the American League.

Not that we are prone to find fault with Charley Murphy, but if baseball players were to hold more conversations with baseball scribes and less with barkeeps there would be more regular baseball played.

There is no truth in the report that Mr. Murphy does not allow his athletes to talk to him. Among the athletes this is considered hard luck.

Traveling eighty-seven miles an hour in a motor car is a great little pastime for a man who intends to die with his boots on.

Garry Herrmann puts forth the information that the purpose of the national baseball agreement is to protect baseball players. This will be news to baseball players.

Somehow we have a hunch that even if those English poloists do happen to win there will not be any general mourning.

Some day some wise guy will tell us why it is that, when a baseball league opens its schedule the first ball must be heaved by a mayor or a sheriff or a constable or a justice of the peace or an alley inspector or something.

MERELY A PLEASANT DREAM.

It happened in a cosy spot across the River Styx.
A portly gent who lingered there was in an awful fix.
A crowd of wild and howling imps were walking on his toes
And shoving trays of glowing coals beneath his ruby nose.
I said to Satan: "Why abuse you poor old helpless guy?"
"That person owned a baseball park on earth," he made reply.
"Not only that," he ambled on, with visage grim and dark.
"He is the guy who introduced the peddlers in the park."

MEMPHIS HEARS THAT ATLANTA WANTS KROH

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 28.—Memphis to-day made a cash offer for Third Baseman Frank Manush, of New Orleans, and was turned down by Manager Frank, who insisted that Manush would not be sold unless it were to some major league club. At present the infielder is out of the game, nursing a wrenched leg.

It was also announced that Manager Bernhard would confer with Third Baseman Bales when the Memphis club reached Chattanooga Thursday. Whether the collegian will be taken on depends upon the showing of Absteln. Ward has given perfect satisfaction at third, and if any further change is made it will have to do with first base.

Waivers have been asked on Pitcher Floyd Kroh, and sea-deep information is to the effect that Bill Smith, of Atlanta, may take the erratic southpaw on for a try-out.

BRONCHO RIDING IS BLAMED FOR M'CARTY'S DEATH

By Ed W. Smith

(Referee Pelky-McCarty Fight and Sporting Editor Chicago American.)

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 28—Despite the exonerating verdict of the Coroner's jury Monday night, both Arthur Pelky, or Peltier, as his right name is, and Tommy Burns were held in $10,000 each at a court hearing to answer to the charge of manslaughter preferred by the Dominion Government for the death of Luther McCarty in the ring of Tommy Burns' arena.

Pelky was held directly; Burns as promoter of the contest. The other two concerned—William McCarney, manager of McCarty, and Referee Ed Smith—were detained for a short time only as witnesses and, later were permitted to leave the city of Calgary and the country upon furnishing a bond of $500 each and their promise to appear here at some later date to testify during the trial.

Bonds were furnished in all cases without trouble, townspeople flocking out plentifully to sign the court documents.

The preliminary hearing was before Inspector Duffus at the mounted police barracks, and practically the same testimony was gone over as that at the Coroner's jury hearing. Both McCarney and Smith testified at length with Pelky in the prisoner's cage. Burns was not heard, as he was held to be equally guilty with Pelky.

McCarney Off for East.

A strong effort was made by the crown to show that McCarney was an equal promoter in the show with Burns, but this failed and the Philadelphia man was permitted to leave on the midnight train with the body of McCarty.

Dr. H. H. Moshier, the man who declared that the death of McCarty was due to a fractured spine at the base of the brain resulting in a hemorrhage, again was called and repeated what he had said the day before. As a result nothing new was brought out and the case remained as mysterious as it was ten minutes after McCarty had been declared dead.

Billy McCarney, manager of McCarty, gave me his first statement of what he thought was the matter with McCarty in the ring. After hearing McCarney and the testimony of the doctors I am strongly of the opinion that McCarty received a slight fracture of the neck during some practice work he did with bucking broncos a short time before the contest.

McCarney said to me before boarding his train with the body of McCarty:

"These doctors say that a fracture of the kind might have been received within four days of autopsy and that there then would be no fibrous growth around the injury.

Luther delighted to ride fractious horses and get them to buck. He often got some nasty twists in this way and I was forever begging him to cease the sport that he thought was so good. But he would not, and I have an idea that he might have been injured in this way and not known it."

McCarney is out of the boxing game for good, he said. He will make no attempt to find anybody to take McCarty's place in his estimation, and will go into the theatrical profession, in which he has made many friends.

Wife Will Accompany Remains.

On the way East McCarney expected Mrs. Luther McCarty to board the train and accompany the remains into Chicago and beyond into Ohio, where the burial will take place at Piqua.

The settlement of Luther's estate will be made at that time. It is known that Luther's ambition was to provide for the future of the child now two years old. McCarney will endeavor to arrange to carry out the "big boy's" wishes in this matter. Luther's father will be waiting the arrival of the remains at Piqua.

HOPPE BEATS JAP CUE EXPERT EASILY, 500 TO 33

NEW YORK, May 28.—Willie Hoppe successfully defended his world's billiard championship title at 18-inch balk line, two shots in, against the challenger, Kodji Yamada, of Japan, here, the score being 500 to 33.

Since the rules of the game were so changed that the "anchor" was barred, no other such one-sided championship game has been seen. Hoppe won the bank, but failed to score when he led off. Yamada ran 15 and this was his best attempt, as in the next ten innings he added only 18.

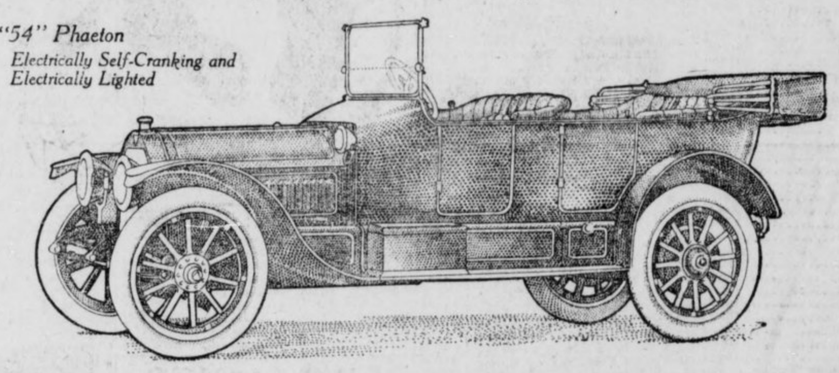
The World's Largest Builders of Six-Cylinder Automobiles

"54" Phaeton
Electrically Self-Cranking and Electrically Lighted



Study the Dealer as Intently as You Do the Car

Do not purchase an automobile of a dealer in whom you cannot have complete confidence. Personality is a large factor in business dealings. The dealer whose personality engenders your confidence in him, whose business principles are sound, who is prosperous and for whom owners of cars he has sold say good words is the logical man from whose firm you can safely purchase an automobile.

GOOD SERVICE with a poor car is a better buy than poor service with a good car.

If you would know the value of dealers' service in the operation of an automobile, you have but to consult men who have owned several different makes of cars and, if you will talk with any HUDSON owner, you will appreciate the value of the type of service we furnish to the owner of an automobile.

All business is done solely on confidence.

Confidence of one man in another. If you cannot have confidence in a dealer who sells the car you have selected, then yours is an unsafe purchase.

The Service You Buy When Your Choice is a HUDSON

There is scarcely any limit to which we will not go to insure HUDSON owners the fullest satisfaction from their cars. We are more interested in you and your motoring interests after we have sold you the car than before you have bought. Yet, we realize that this is contrary to the attitude of the average automobile concern.

This service that we give you is but keeping faith with the Hudson Motor Car Company. There is a clause in our contract with the factory, which insures every purchaser of the highest standard of motor car service to be had, and this we cheerfully and rigidly adhere to in our deals with owners.

The New HUDSON "Six" rose to a higher point as a sales success than any 6-cylinder car has ever seen in the same length of time it has been on the market. Its exceptional performance has been unusual among 6-cylinder cars.

Its smooth, sweet-running mechanism gives a sensation of flying that is lacking in a 4-cylinder car. You can throttle it down to 3 miles an hour on high speed and pick up to 60 miles an hour with smoothness and ease that will be a revelation to you, if you have owned 4-cylinder cars.

You can go through city traffic at 3 miles an hour on high, with every cylinder hitting as smoothly as if you were going ten times as fast.

Avoid Disappointment in Getting Delivery

Ninety per cent of HUDSON orders are for spring delivery—hence, within a few days, it will be impossible to secure a delivery date for a car.

Hence, we cannot impress too strongly upon prospective purchasers the necessity of securing a fixed delivery date for their cars.

It would be well to come see the New HUDSON "Six" at your earliest convenience, or write or phone for new catalog.

The "54" Phaeton sells at $2450. The "37"—the "Four-cylinder masterpiece"—is $1875, prices f. o. b. Detroit.

BIG VOTE GAINS MAKE PONY CONTEST MORE EXCITING EVERY DAY

Saturday night the lists close in The Georgian and American's pony contest, and the entrants will "run it out" without further competition.

The list has gone well beyond 300 and includes boys and girls from all parts of Atlanta and the State and widely scattered areas outside the State.

One advan age the contestants are overlooking to a large extent is the fact that payments of overdue accounts bring votes just the same as the identical amount paid on new subscriptions. Boys and girls whose parents, relatives or acquaintances owe anything for subscriptions to The Georgian and American can collect the money themselves, bring it in and be credited with votes.

The same interview will open an opportunity for them to seek renewals, so even if they know that acquaintances have been taking The Georgian and American they may profit by seeing them and canvassing for votes.

Big gains continue to be shown in the vote column. From now on the races promise to grow more exciting daily. Names and standing of contestants follow:

SYMPATHY AND GUNBOATS

News Note: Two battle cruisers, the Kongo and the Kirishima, are being built in England for Japan. They are of 25,000 tons dsplacement and 27 knots speed. They are armed with 13 1-2 inch guns. The Kongo is about completed. Former Secretary Meyer expressed belief that these battle cruisers are as powerful as any battleships afloat and of five knots greater speed. Within the past week Japan has purchased at least four ships suitable for transports in England. They are the Narrung, Benacre, Bentola and Vadala. All are of more than 3,000 tons displacement.

MEN WELCOME MOTHER'S FRIEND

A Duty That Every Man Owes to Those Who Perpetuate the Race.

... is just as important that men should know of progressive methods in advance of motherhood. The suffering, pain and distress incident to child-bearing can be easily avoided by having at hand a bottle of Mother's Friend.

This is a wonderful penetrating, external application that relieves all tension upon the muscles and enables them to expand without the painful strain upon the ligaments. Thus there is avoided all those nervous spells; the tendency to nausea or morning sickness is counteracted, and a bright, sunny, happy disposition is preserved that reflects wonderfully upon the character and temperament of the little one soon to open its eyes in bewilderment at the joy of his arrival. You can obtain a bottle of "Mother's Friend" at any drug store at $1.00, and it will be the best dollar's worth you ever obtained. It preserves the mother's health, enables her to make a quick and complete recovery, and thus renewed strength she will eagerly devote herself to the care and attention which mean so much to the welfare of the child. Write to the Bradfield Regulator Co., 129 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., for their valuable and instructive book of guidance for expectant mothers. Get a bottle of Mother's Friend to-day.

Blanche Walsh Here Monday in 'Movies'

An innovation in Atlanta's motion picture world will be the appearance all next week of Blanche Walsh, celebrated emotional actress, in a picture presentation of "The Resurrection," Tolstoi's drama, at the Grand Theater Thursday morning at 10 o'clock.

Not a point that made the drama a success has been missed. Miss Walsh hesitated before risking her reputation to the "movies," but when she had seen the film, she declared it a wonderful success.

Council of Griffin Still Defies Mayor

GRIFFIN, GA., May 28.—Another chapter to the long fight between the Mayor and Council of Griffin was written last night when the Finance Committee recommended and Council voted to accept the auto fire truck just delivered by the American-LaFrance Fire Engine Company. Excepting the protest of Mayor Smith, no opposition was raised.

No method of payment is prescribed, although a warrant for payment is directed. This is the mooted question.

COTTON SAGS ON BEARISH ADVICES

Offerings Are Absorbed by Strong Traders—Market Is Narrow Pending Census Report.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Influenced by easier cables and further bearish weather news, the cotton market opened easy to-day, first prices being 1 to 3 points lower than Tuesday's final. Old crop deliveries came in for considerable pressure, but was also some liberal selling of new positions. Later the cable prices rallied.

Liverpool was said to be a seller of July after the call, but the large spot interest purchased July in rather large volume, causing the market to steady, with the result that prices rallied about 1 to 4 points higher than the initial level. The selling was scattered.

During the forenoon the ring crowd was inclined to sell on the favorable map and the selling became freer. The buying of July was scattered and those buying seemed to be selling the new crop. Schill and Mitchell sold July as well as late positions.

The market developed a reactionary tendency, May dropping 8 points to 11.45, while July receded 3 points from the opening. New crop months, however, held steady around the opening level.

A certain broker issued notices today for 10,000 May, which was said to be for Liverpool account. This, however, had no effect, and fell flat on the market.

Theo Price, in this week's issue of his market report, is decidedly bearish. The report, in part, follows: "American short interest about covered and obtained its cotton from visible and invisible supply. Says if July prices are forced to extreme there is enough tenderable low grade cotton to liquidate that position. He refers to present large excess of interior stocks, and says crop has improved since rains fell. Think people expect Bureau of 83.5. Believe acreage will be increased about 5 per cent."

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: May, 11.45; July, 11.58; August, 11.40; October, 11.14; January, 10.10.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—Liverpool shows decided weakness this morning with futures 2 to 4 points lower than due. Spots unchanged; sales, 10,000 bales. Political news is not good. London says that the powers practically extended an ultimatum to the allies to force the signing of the peace pact with Turkey. Forced peace of this character is hardly satisfactory.

The Journal of Commerce on Texas attracted much attention, as it is entirely out of line with information received from the best private sources. It appears strange, indeed, that Texas should be three weeks late on account of cold weather and the Oklahoma crop early, when, as a master of fact, Government records show that Oklahoma temperatures have all along been on an average of 6 to 13 degrees colder than in Texas.

The market opened about 5 points lower, but sellers were scarce owing to anticipation of further professional support in New York, which, in fact, made its appearance soon after the opening and caused a rally of 5 points. According to New York advices this support is furnished with the intention of benefiting from short covering before the holidays. New York will be closed Friday and Saturday. The bureau report to May 28 will be issued Monday, June 2, at 11 a. m., our time. We compare with a belt average of 78.9 last year, 87.8 in 1911, 82 in 1910, and ten-year average of 79.9. The trade looks for a report between 81 and 84.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 28.—Liverpool sold July on and after the call, but after the call McFadden, Wilson, Riordan and Hubbard were buyers of July. The selling was scattered. Later the ring sold on favorable weather map and easier feeling abroad. Mitchell and Schill were the leading sellers.

Henz issued 10,000 notices on May, which was said to be for Liverpool. These notices were stopped by Hopkins, Dwight & Co., Robert More & Co. and Rich.

* * *

Mitchell and Schill were fair sellers of July; also new crop positions.

* * *

Warehouse stocks in New York today are 72,970; certificated 60,222 bales.

Norden & Co. makes the condition of the crop 85 per cent and acreage increase 4.7 per cent.

* * *

About 800 replies received by the Georgia State Department of Agriculture are the basis of a report by that office that 23 per cent of the crop has been replanted and the average planting time is seventeen days late. Acreage has decreased about 5 per cent, compared with last year, but the condition is 82 per cent.

* * *

Last week Turner, of Memphis, made the condition of Georgia 74 per cent and Monday The Commercial-Appeal made it 72 per cent.

* * *

George W. Neville, of the New York Cotton Exchange, in his annual report on the New York Cotton Exchange, said: "During the past five years when the New York Cotton Exchange was subjected to so much unjust criticism, there was never any complaint made of members resorting to undignified methods of soliciting business, but recently some of our members have expressed opinions in their market letters in such a way as to cause the committee and supervisory committees to go thoroughly into this matter and reprimands have been administered."

The New York Cotton Exchange is to be congratulated on being so careful to maintain a high standard of business conduct among its members.

The Journal of Commerce has the following on the condition of the cotton crop in Texas and Oklahoma:

Texas—"Estimates of acreage do not vary greatly from a month ago, when an increase of 3.5 per cent was indicated. The percentage of condition will be approximately the same as last year, when it was 81.8 per cent. The season is very late, being nearly three weeks backward, due chiefly to cold weather. Considerable cotton is not yet up, and a number of farmers have not finished planting. Some replanting has been necessary. Rain has generally been plentiful and the ground is in a good state of preparation. Stands are rather spotted, but prospects are generally favorable."

Oklahoma—"A very substantial increase in acreage is indicated for Oklahoma over last year. Percentage condition will probably show a considerably higher figure than one year ago, when it was 78.7 per cent. Stands are very generally good and the crop has an excellent start. Rains have been somewhat excessive in some localities and grass is making headway. Some correspondents consider prospects the best in years. The season is early in many sections, but in the majority of cases ten to fifteen days late."

Dallas wires: "Texas generally clear, Oklahoma, light showers in Oklahoma City; north portion part cloudy; rest clear."

T. H. Price presents a bearish view of the cotton market in this week's issue of Cotton and Finance.

* * *

The Federal Grand Jury has postponed the inquiry into the cotton pool case indefinitely.

NEW ORLEANS, May 28.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map is very favorable; shows cloudy in the Atlantics; fair elsewhere. General rains in North Georgia and Carolinas. Some good rains in Carolinas, where they will be of great benefit. Indications are for fair and warmer over the entire belt, except possibly some showers on the Atlantic coast.

Memphis wires: "Generally fair and warmer weather is indicated for all cotton States. Heavy rains fell yesterday in North Carolina. Little or none elsewhere. Very favorable conditions."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Tuesday's weather was good enough, but the day's quota of crop reports lacked the favorable tone enthusiastic short sellers of Monday expected. The trade continued to buy contracts, and the underlying strength generated thereby and by covering by small shorts was made acute by the change of position by one or more extensive operators who had been working on the short side of the account. The result was an advance which just about wiped out Monday's decline. Business is in very small volume, fluctuations are narrow and constitutional partisans adhere to the old belief with the simplicity of impaired faith.

"Consumption is running on a heavier scale than is absorption of the raw material by spinners, consequently, reserves are being reduced. Bulls believe an average of about 15,000,000 bales a year is needed, and that the probability is against average crops of 15,000,000 yet a while. For this reason friends of the market can see no reason to fear the possibility of serious declines in the value of the raw material. On the other hand, bear price people know that the weather is good, that the demand is limited and the world's visible supply of all kinds of cotton is larger than it was at this time last year. Consequently they can not understand how anybody can anticipate any other than a downward price movement."

MILLER-CARTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, May 28.—In the absence of general business, fluctuations are narrow. Sentiment is bearish, and market would decline were not sellers afraid of fresh commitments over week-end holidays and the Government condition report on Monday. Weather very favorable and later acreage and condition figures larger than early ones.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 28.—The cotton seed oil market was easy under scattered liquidation. On decline in lard local professionals attempted to support the market, but offerings were liberal and served to check any advancing tendency. Cotton houses sold August.

BEAR PRESSURE PUTS STOCKS OFF

Receivership for St. L. and S. F. and F. Ry. Has Bad Effect on Foreign Capital.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 28.—Pressure was exerted on the list at the opening of the stock market to-day, and declines ranging from fractions to 2 points were sustained. St. Louis and San Francisco shares were the weakest in consequence of the appointment of a receiver for the road in St. Louis. Frisco common was 1⅞ lower, selling around 31½, while the second preferred lost 2 points. Union Pacific and Southern Pacific bore up well. The former gained ½, while the latter, after sharing fractionally, recovered.

American Smelting was sold for a loss of 1½. Other issues which were off were Amalgamated Copper, ⅛; American Can, ½; Canadian Pacific, ⅛; General Electric, ⅜; Missouri Pacific, ½; Pennsylvania, ⅝, and United States Steel common, ⅛.

Steel soon recovered its loss. St. Paul also recovered its fractional decline in twenty minutes of trading. Chesapeake and Ohio opened ¼ up, but lost its gain. Reading gained fractionally after opening unchanged.

The curb market was irregular. Despite the suit brought in London charging that an illegal pool was formed for speculation in shares of American Marconi stock after the Titanic disaster, this issue was only ⅝ lower on the curb.

Americans in London drooped.

The market continued irregular and dull during the forenoon and recessions were in evidence. Smelting declined 1⅝ to 66⅛. Copper was off ⅝ at 73¼. Canadian Pacific was off ⅛ at 232. Southern Pacific was up ¼. Steel, St. Paul and Reading were off ¼. Chesapeake and Ohio was up 6¼ at 64⅝.

Call money loaning at 2¾.

Invents a Machine To Replace Soldiers

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

COPENHAGEN, May 28.—An automaton, invented by a Danish engineer, may replace soldiers. It may be buried in the ground for years, doing no damage until operated by electricity.

PRICE CURRENT CROP REPORT.

CINCINNATI, May 28.—Corn planting in Iowa, Minnesota, the Dakotas and Nebraska has been seriously delayed by wet weather. In the southern territory of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma an extremely spotted condition has developed. Rain is needed in portions of this territory, particularly to relieve the hard surface conditions. Growth of winter wheat continues favorable. No critical conditions are in sight.

The crop thus far has not been molested to any extent by pests. We estimate the yield 335,320,000 bushels on present conditions for Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas.

The growth and condition of oats in the northern territory are above the ten-year average, while the condition in Ohio, Indiana and Illinois is below the ten-year average. Farm reserves of wheat in the twelve leading States are 11.6 per cent, oats 17.6, corn 19 per cent.

French Defenses Cost $270,000,000

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 28.—By the end of 1914 France will have spent $270,000,000 in strengthening the national defenses, it was announced in the Senate today by M. Gervais. This will be expended in battleships building, strengthening of frontier fortifications, augmentation of land forces and purchase of new style heavy ordnance.

The army air corps will receive special attention because of the constant extension of this branch by Germany.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red	98 @105
Corn—No. 2	59
Oats—No. 2	38¾@ 39

CHICAGO, May 28.—Wheat was fractionally lower early to-day on the offering of Argentine wheat abroad at declines of 1½d@3d, although the general markets there were stronger. While there were additional unfavorable crop reports received from Kansas, there were many good ones to come forward and the latter overbalanced the former. Northwestern receipts were about equal to those of a year ago and Winnipeg receipts were larger than at that time.

Corn was unchanged to ½c higher with May the strongest on covering by shorts.

Oats were ⅛@⅜c better on small offerings.

Provisions were lower all around by 5@10c decline in hogs at the yards.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, May 28.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.: Wheat—General trend of crop advices indicate that no improvement is taking place in the winter wheat situation, and while the volume of new buying is not large, the pressure from short sales is light. We continue to prefer the long side on weak spots.

Corn—Speculative sentiment swung to the selling side, being more or less influenced by the sharp break in the May delivery and the probability of larger receipts. Some further recession in prices seems probable, but we would not press the short side on weak spots.

Oats—Local professionals seem to favor the selling side. An easier corn market would probably effect oats to some extent. On sharp depressions we rank the long side preferable.

Provisions—We are apt to get a somewhat easier market to-day, but on weak spots there seems to be a continued good class of buying.

OHIO WHEAT CONDITION POOR.

CHICAGO, May 28.—Snow wires from Cincinnati: "Wheat in Central and Southern Indiana is not making good its early promise. In Wabash and White River Valleys on overflowed lands the water killed stools, leaving only seed stalk to mature. Stalks are well headed, but necessarily stand is thin, on high lands particularly. From Seymour and Greenburg to Indianapolis prospects much better, but even here straw is short and stand not good.

"State as a whole will hardly get an average yield. Harvest about June 16 to 20, a week early than normal. Oats very spotted. Some early fields good, but prospect as a whole is very poor. A little corn still to plant, but the stand is good and has a good color."

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

If Little Chicks Are Properly Fed Loss Will Be Less

Wholesome Advice by an Expert Who Has Tried It From Every Angle.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Judge Marshall: I want to ask you a number of questions, if you will not think I am too greedy for information.

I live on a farm about two miles from town and am trying to raise chickens enough to make a living from.

I do very well with those I succeeded in raising, but I loose about half of my chicks before they are two weeks old.

As soon as the chicks are hatched I give them a good feed of mash, composed of equal parts of corn meal and wheat bran mixed with hot water, allowing it to cool a little before feeding. I feed this once a day and cracked corn three times a day; but I have much trouble with sparrows eating up the feed.

I also have much trouble with the red mites bothering my sitting hens, which I seem unable to control.

Then, again, I have trouble every summer by having great, big, fat hens drop dead without any warning. They will be apparently well one day and the next they will be dead. They are very fat and fine and I see no reason why they should die thus.

I always feed a little good condition powder of some kind three times a week.

If it is not asking too much of you I should appreciate an answer to these troubles. I am yours very truly,
MRS. E. E. SPEER.
Tifton, Ga.

Cut Out Wet Mash.

ANSWER—We have texts enough for a number of good sermons but will have to do like the boy said he did in hunting for the cows: Go to the end of the lane and scatter.

First, in regard to the little chicks, I would say cut out the wet mash entirely, or, at least, until they are two months old and then if you want to use some of your feed in that way it will be all right, but not for the newly hatched ones. Feed rolled oats dry, and the cracked corn fine enough so they can eat it well, providing you can not get the ready mixed chick feed at your grocers in Tifton. But there is no question that the rolled oats is good, and so is the corn, but feed them absolutely dry.

Another place where you have erred seriously is in feeding as soon as hatched, if that is what you intended to say.

There is nothing that will so quickly get the digestive organs out of order, or, for that matter, prevent them from ever getting in order, as feeding newly hatched chicks at once. Give them a chance to season out a little, as one old poultryman used to say. When they first hatch they are a jelly, as it were, and it takes a day or two for them to toughen up, ready to digest what is given them. So, the way to do is to wait forty-eight hours before any feed is given. They will not starve, but be all the better for the little fast. They may have a good supply of sharp sand to peck at. Then feed the rolled oats or prepared dry chick feed. This can be continued until they can handle coarser cracked corn and wheat.

Green Feed Necessary.

All the while they must have good green stuff of some kind and a little dried beef scrap after they are three weeks old, and I think you will have no trouble if everything is kept clean and free from mites. The sparrows can be controlled by feeding under wire netting runs.

When you set your hens, move them out of the hen house into some clean shed, or, for that matter, out of doors, using barrels for the nest. But you should not have them in the houses. Take a pint of oil of tar, a pint of gasoline, three quarts of kerosene; mix thoroughly and spray or pour over the roosts and the sides of the house where the roost poles rest. If this is attended to an hour before roosting time, it will usually about finish the job, both on the poles and the hens. If any are left on the hens, dust them thoroughly with some good lice powder. After they have been really cleaned out, it will pay to grease the poles with hot lard and a brush.

As to your loosing your fat hens by sudden deaths, I would say that I think you have been using too much condition powders. In my estimation even a little is too much when hens are in health and laying. You have weakened their digestive organs by overstimulation, coupled with too much fat in hens that are, no doubt, over two years old. When hens get a little old and fat, heavy behind, it is the best policy to send them to the butchers.

Such hens have passed their useful time. They have slowed up on laying and with no drain upon their systems they fill up with fat inside, where it presses on the heart and is the cause of the sudden deaths you speak of. It is no trouble to detect such hens in the yard, and it is a good plan to use them while they are in good health, rather than wait for them to come to the sudden death referred to.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Residences Bring Total of $34,500

Deed Filed in Purchase of $19,750 Lots on Paces Ferry Road. Other Notes.

Papers in the sale of two residences on Ponce DeLeon Avenue and one on Gordon Street in West End have gone to record. Minnie M. Costner has sold to J. E. McRee 403 Gordon Street, 373 feet south of Holderness Street, for $9,000.

John B. Daniel has sold to J. T. Tuggle, 644 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, 50 by 180 feet, for $12,500.

Mrs. Mattie F. Huggins has sold to Mrs. Kate G. Pryor, 346 Ponce DeLeon Avenue, 343 feet east of North Boulevard, for $13,000. The lot is 38 by 321 feet.

Executors' Deed Filed.

An interesting executors' deed has also been filed. This conveys to Robert F. Maddox two tracts of land adjoining his country place, "Woodlawn," for an aggregate of $19,750. The grantors are Mrs. Gertrude J. Dickey and others, executors of the estate of the late James L. Dickey.

Favor Roswell Road Work.

E. T. Luckie, of the Holmes & Luckie Realty Company, reports good progress in the work of signing up property owners who favor widening the Roswell Road 20 feet from Buckhead to Piedmont Road. Among the signers are John W. Grant, F. M. Brownell and George B. Powell, who have an aggregate of about 3,000 feet of frontage; George M. Hope, J. H. and J. M. Karwisch, L. W. Rogers, C. S. Honour, J. L. Riley and A. C. Walters.

Building Owners Organize.

For the purpose of perfecting a permanent organization and for inviting the National Association of Building Owners and Managers to Atlanta in 1914, local office building and apartment house owners and managers met Tuesday. The new body is known as the Association of Building Owners and Managers of Atlanta, and it has decided to send a committee to Cincinnati next month to present its invitation to the national association.

Action of the "big building" men in combining is taken as an indication that the office building and apartment house business in Atlanta will take great strides forward in future. Among the members of the new association are Ivan E. Allen, Fred Houser, Charles E. Wilkinson, A. W. Martin, Fred Shaefer, J. B. Pendleton, J. M. Barclay, J. M. Shearer, W. B. Stovall and J. L. Fincher. One hundred members are expected to join.

Auction Sale Saturday.

John H. James, auctioneer, will sell at public outcry Saturday 40 lots on Ashby Street for J. T. Elliott, the owner. Mr. James has plats at his office.

Inquiries for Colonial Home.

Ralph O. Cochran, the well-known real estate man, reports many inquiries for the colonial home which he will auction off Thursday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at 101 West Tenth Street. This home is a two-story brick affair and the property of W. C. Harper.

More Peachtree Improvements.

Peachtree has been promised another substantial business building. C. J. Sheehan will erect at once a two-story structure on the east side of the thoroughfare between Pine and Merritts Avenue. There are already several automobile shops in this block.

Mr. Sheehan traded for this 21 by 186 foot lot through the Cheatham Brothers' real estate agency, giving to Dr. A. W. VanHoose, of Rome, 228 South Pryor Street and 135 Davis Street, for $11,500, and paying the balance in cash and notes. The Peachtree property brought $26,250, or $1,250 a front foot. Dr. VanHoose recently sold 21 feet at this point to Ben J. Massell, who has put a sign on his lot announcing that he will build for acceptable tenant.

Speech and Thought Make Our Lives

Everything That We Do Is Accomplished in Time BY THOUGHT. Thinking Is Your Only Real Power; Time Is Your Real Property—and There Is Little of It.

Copyright, 1913.

We human beings ceased to be animals and became MEN when we first used thought in place of brute strength.

At some distant day in our development the animal that preceded us here made up its feeble mind that there was something better than strength, teeth and claws, and began to use its little brain.

This animal, our ancestor, the so-called pithecanthropos, or monkey-man, observed the saber-toothed tiger ripping open the stomach of a monster three times its size, watched the mammoth ploughing through swamps, crushing down trees, observed the great reptiles and all other proofs of brute force, and, without realizing it, this ancestor said vaguely to himself:

"I can't compete when it comes to teeth and claws, weight and bulk. I am a feeble thing in this jumble of power and battle. I must THINK the way out."

And so our real human life began.

Our ancestor with a forehead one-quarter of an inch high, a jaw that stuck out as far as the jaw of a gorilla, with teeth bigger than any of those of any bulldog, and with long arms dropping below the knees, that could crush a man of to-day with ease—this old ancestor of ours decided that he would get out of the battle for supremacy of muscle and teeth and see what could be done with the brain AND WITH THINKING.

You can imagine how the thinking process started.

It was hardly real thought at first, just a kind of intelligent impulse. Our ancestor sat up in a tree rubbing his nose and looking at the saber-toothed tiger that couldn't climb.

He saw the shining teeth, six inches long perhaps, and he didn't like the looks of them.

Later, when the tiger was gone, he climbed down and picked up a sharp flint, ten inches long, heavier, sharper and harder than the tiger's tooth.

He held this in his hand, struck his brother with it, killed the brother, and felt highly satisfied with his intellectual accomplishment.

He had discovered that a tooth made of stone, held at the end of an arm four feet long, could do as much damage as the tooth of a tiger.

So he fastened his sharp flint to the end of a piece of wood, sat in the tree, stabbed the tiger in the back as he passed, broke his backbone, ate his flesh, took the teeth to make implements and ornaments for himself—and so began the thinking human race.

Later man used explosive dynamite shells in place of sharp flints, he dwelt in skyscrapers in place of holes in the rocks, he used flying machines in place of canoes dug out of a log.

BUT ALL THE TIME HE WAS A THINKING ANIMAL INSTEAD OF AN ANIMAL RELYING ON STRENGTH, TEETH, MUSCLE, THICK HIDE, CLAWS.

And every step that he gained in his upward climb toward control of the earth and dominion over the animals was gained by the THOUGHT that was started when he made up his mind to use the sharp flint and conquer the long white tooth.

All of this leads to the thinking man, sitting on the ash barrel in the picture at the top of this page.

He is a descendant of all the thinkers of three hundred thousand years past.

He comes in an unbroken line from the old half monkey, half thinking creature that discovered the possibility of conquering animals stronger than himself.

And this thinker on the ash barrel in poverty, in anxiety, in remorse, is unfortunately the type of many of those—more than half, probably—who represent the so-called "civilization and marvels of achievement."

This picture is a copy, simply made, of Rodin's great statue, "Le Penseur."

In his statue of thought Rodin shows the man of power seated on the rock solving his problems by thought.

In the picture that we print on this page the artist shows the man of sorrow and of weakness, pitifully trying to use for his betterment and for his defense the power which has been man's only weapon.

Readers, whether you be old or young, realize NOW that your salvation, your hope, your chances in life, are all in the thinking power hidden away in your head.

How much will you use that power of thought?

How long are you going to wait to use it efficiently?

To what extent can you make thought, recently acquired by men, control the animal forces and passions that date back millions of years to our earliest ancestors of the days when this earth was young?

Are you going to use your power, your health, your clear mind, and your will NOW to solve your problems and protect yourself, and be a benefit to the human race, or are you to wait, and waste, and wonder, and delay, until it is too late, as with this man?

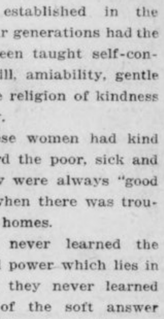
The Thinker

He Thinks Hard, Bitterly—But Too Late. Thought Conquers and Solves Life's Problems, but Only When the Thought Controls the Power of the Body and the Mind. When the Power is Gone, THOUGHT COMES TOO LATE. (SEE EDITORIAL.)

Ella Wheeler Wilcox Writes on Ill Temper



If Allowed to Progress in Children, Its Effect Is Felt in Later Generations to Destroy Often the Happiness of Many Homes.

Written For The Atlanta Georgian

By Ella Wheeler Wilcox

Copyright, 1913, by Star Company.

SOMETHING like one hundred and twenty-five years ago, a little girl was born in New England. She was pretty and bright, and her parents made much of her; and she soon became a spoiled child in the way of disposition.

She was irritable and fault-finding; and these tendencies were not corrected, but excused on the ground that "Abbie was high-strung," and "smart," and "not like other ordinary children."

She married, young, a man of rare sweetness of character, and with an inexhaustible patience. He was devoted to his handsome wife, and she made him a very good consort, so far as her industry and economy and loyalty went.

But she worried him with her fault-finding and irritability.

He made the great mistake of establishing his wife with his relatives, and all her quarrelsome and irritable tendencies were, of course, aggravated.

She bore him six children, and as she had never been taught anything of the laws of prenatal influence, she fretted and complained about the increasing numbers of her children, before their birth.

Erred in Telling Them.

And after they came into life and she grew to love them she made the great error of telling them how unwelcome they had been. This was especially true of the second child, who was scarcely a year younger than her older sister.

This second child inherited all her mother's irritable characteristics and prided herself upon being extremely high-spirited and capable of "answering back" with some sharp retort.

She, too, was excused, and even lauded for her peculiarities.

She was regarded as "out of the common" and "just like Abbie."

When she married her husband did not possess the amiable qualities of her father, and, of course, discord soon prevailed.

Children came into this home, and so a second generation was reared in this unfortunate atmosphere.

The grandmother lived until she reached the age of ninety-four, and with each year her disposition grew more unpleasant.

When the daughter visited at her old home there was always bickering and scolding and quarrelling.

And into these family fusses three generations were drawn.

Then came a fourth generation, after the grandmother died, and this fourth generation was brought up under the same conditions, and to-day this generation is cursed with the original uncurbed temper and unhappy tendency to find fault of the first great-grandmother, which came down through the second grandmother and the father, and was, like a river, fed from streams running into it from other branches, which all became corrupted when the original stream was approached.

Have Wrecked Homes.

Sisters have become enemies, brothers quarrel; jealousy, ill temper, gossip, back-biting and all manner of bad habits, resulting from uncontrolled temper, have destroyed homes, and in some of these homes a fifth generation of little children is becoming infected.

And all this might have been averted, and heaven, instead of hell, been established in the homes of four generations had the first child been taught self-control, good-will, amiability, gentle manners, the religion of kindness and courtesy.

All of these women had kind hearts toward the poor, sick and needy. They were always "good neighbors" when there was trouble in other homes.

But they never learned the strength and power which lies in silence, and they never learned the beauty of the soft answer which turneth away wrath.

The two original sinners (for such uncontrolled tempers are sinful) were women of great strength of intellect and of dominating personalities, therefore, their influence was far-reaching and powerful. In many of their descendants the unpleasant qualities have taken the form of petty meanness and ignoble nagging toward all those with whom they are thrown in close association.

Yet the tendencies can all be traced back to the first source.

Teach Them Kindness.

If your child, madam or sir, shows wonderful "spirit" and is very "high strung" and brilliant with repartee in the way of the quick retort, do not laugh and applaud and think you have something to be proud of, something out of the ordinary.

Teach your children the religion of kindness, the religion of gentle voices, amiable manners, generous judgments and self-control.

Make them understand early how vulgar is uncontrolled temper and how ill-bred the sharp rejoinder.

Do this for their own sakes and the sakes of unborn generations.

.:. Housewives and the Art of Housekeeping .:.

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE reign of the good housekeeper is only just beginning. Every month sees some new invention that helps to diminish the slavery of housework. Housekeeping has for ages been an art, and, as with all arts, its practitioners range in their abilities from mediocrity through fair talent up to positive genius.

Now housekeeping is becoming a science, and science has this advantage over art—that it tends to equalize abilities by bringing results through mechanical and automatic methods which anybody can employ.

The French Kitchen.

For a plain male citizen, who knows little about the secrets of the kitchen, it is a wonderful revelation to read the articles in GOOD HOUSEKEEPING MAGAZINE and to look at the devices there shown which relate to this fast-growing science. Almost everything about a house can now be done with half the expenditure of labor and time formerly required. To be without this knowledge and these inventions is not merely to be behind the times, but it is to live harder, less well and more expensively than there is any necessity for.

The kitchen is the stomach of the house, and upon the way in which it performs its functions the welfare of the whole establishment depends. My attention has just been called to a model French kitchen. All the world has long looked up to France as the ideal home of culinary art, and it is evident that she does not intend to be left behind in the modern transformation of this art into a science.

The kitchen has also been called "the theater of the French housewife," and this theater is becoming really a fascinating place with its display of electrical ranges, scientific lamps, automatic grinders, mills and churns, Pasteur filters, coffee makers, ice cream freezers, devices for easily getting rid of waste substances, porcelain sinks as white and clean as Alpine snow, scouring machines, filters, convenient cupboards, and all the glittering array of nickel, silver, copper, aluminum, bronze and graniteware utensils that fill the room with bright reflections.

Not to Visit, But to Help.

One of the great charms of a French kitchen is that the mistress is frequently to be seen there, not merely as a visitor, but as a helper and director. She inspires her servants by her presence, and by her advice. She does not pretend to live in another world than theirs. They know that she understands their business as well as they do themselves, and even better. She can take their place if necessary. This is as true of the rich as of the relatively poor.

The economy of the French people has long been world-famous, and nowhere is it more brilliantly displayed than in the kitchen. A French family, as has often been said, could live, and live well, upon the waste of many American families. And the exercise of this economy—this art of getting all the good out of things—fascinates those who practise it. It has the charm of all applied knowledge. They not only get all that is good—they make the good better. I know many a little country inn in France where, for three or four francs, wine included (a franc is worth 20 cents), one can have a really better meal than can be had in Atlanta for two or three dollars.

And yet meats, and similar things, cost about as much in France as they do here. The secret lies in economical management and good cooking. It is no wonder that a first-rate French cook can command in New York a salary of $5,000, or even more. And if he, or she, retains on this side of the Atlantic the economical skill learned at home, more than half the salary is saved to the employer.

To Learn Economy.

One thing to be noticed in the French kitchen is that there is usually no false economy in the choice of apparatus. Everything is of the best, or at least good and substantial. The kitchen, in its way, is as well furnished as the parlor. You may be sure that this spells economy in the end, for if it did not it would not be found in France.

I have often been surprised on entering a house in France, which, in America, might be taken as the abode of people in very humble circumstances, to find a far larger and better-stocked kitchen than many rather pretentious houses possess here, accompanied by a culinary skill in its mistress which would earn her a large salary on this side of the ocean.

No doubt we shall learn this economical wisdom in good time—and the sooner the better.

I SHOULD WORRY

By WEX JONES.

IT used to be jolly to chatter with Polly
On fashion and frivol and froth of the day;
But now it's sheer folly talking to Polly,
For she puts "I should worry" to all that she'll say.

"I should worry like an onion"
(Here she laughs, she feels so tickled),
"I should worry like an onion
And discover that I'm pickled.
I should worry like a saw"
(How that "worry" gets me riled!),
"I should worry like a saw
Till my teeth have all been filed."

You hear all the flappers, tongues going like clappers,
Bandy about this ridiculous phrase;
Prue, Polly and Lizzie will jabber you dizzy,
Twisting it round in its different ways:

"I should worry seven days
And become a little weak."
"I should worry," "I should worry,"
Every time they speak.
"I should worry like a fish
And get the hook."
"I should worry like a gumdrop
And go North with old Doc Cook."
"I should worry," "I should worry"—
Phrase that sets me in a flurry,
Phrase that sets my goat a-scurry—
Oh, well, I should worry.

Shuots Denial That Bull Moose Party Is Paying Cost of His $10,000 Libel Suit.

MARQUETTE, MICH., May 27.—Colonel Theodore Roosevelt to-day took the stand in his suit against George Newett, editor of The Ishpeming Iron Ore. Colonel Roosevelt denied emphatically that he ever drank intoxicating liquors to excess as charged in the editorial that resulted in his $10,000 libel suit.

He said he did not drink beer or whisky, except under the direction of a doctor, but admitted that he some times drank light wines.

He related briefly his career up to the time the editorial from The Iron Ore was brought to him as he lay in a hospital in Chicago, after having been wounded by a would-be assassin in Milwaukee.

Says Editorial Angered Him.

"I was very indignant," said the colonel, "when the editorial was shown me."

The former President mounted the stand after a stormy few minutes during which Attorney Pound, representing the plaintiff, was interrupted frequently by Attorney Belden while making his opening statement. Attorney Belden, Newett's counsel, declined to make his statement until after the testimony was taken.

Colonel Roosevelt took the stand at 9:30 o'clock this morning.

Replying to questions regarding his life and career, he said he was born in New York City, completed his studies at Harvard in 1880, was elected to the New York Legislature in 1881, appointed New York civil service commissioner in 1887, police commissioner of New York City in 1890, elected Lieutenant Governor in 1894, resigning in 1897 to become lieutenant colonel of the Rough Riders in the Spanish-American war, being promoted to colonel after the battle of Santiago.

Tells of War Service.

Strenuous objection was made by the defense to Roosevelt's replies regarding the number of times he was under fire in the Spanish-American war, but the court overruled them and the former President continued his story, declaring he was under fire many times, more particularly at San Juan Hill.

He told of his election as Governor of New York in 1898; as Vice Presi-

Florida Mob Tries To Lynch Head of Negro Pythians

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 27.—When a Jacksonville-New Orleans train pulled into Milton, 20 miles east of here, last night a mob of 75 men met the train and demanded S. W. Green, of New Orleans, chancellor of the negro Knights of Pythias, who was occupying a Pullman drawing room. He was only saved by the interference of Sheriff Harvell and deputies, of Santa Rosa County.

Green bought a Pullman ticket from Jacksonville to New Orleans. Several mobs met the train along the route before it reached Milton, but did not find him. At Milton, Green, seeing the mob, attempted to escape.

Green is now in jail at Milton for safe keeping and charged with violating the "jim crow" law.

He barely escaped a mob at DeFuniak on May 18 while going from New Orleans to Jacksonville.

Plans to Entertain Justice Lamar Off

Because of lack of time, plans of Atlanta attorneys to entertain Justice Joseph R. Lamar, of the United States Supreme Court, who will pass through Atlanta Wednesday afternoon en route to Warm Springs to deliver the chief address at the meeting of the Georgia Bar Association, have been abandoned.

After the sessions at Warm Springs Judge Lamar will hurry back to Washington, where a decision in the Minnesota rate case is expected soon from the Supreme Court.

War on Fraternities Launched at Mercer

MACON, GA., May 27.—A petition signed by more than 200 non-fraternity students of Mercer University, asking for the abolition of the Greek letter chapters at Mercer will be presented this week to the faculty.

As President S. Y. Jameson is now of the belief that frats are a detriment to college work, it is expected the faculty will recommend to the trustees that the fraternities be abolished.

FELDER AIDE OFFERS VICE LIST TO CHIEF

Attorney Carl Hutcheson Accuses Beavers of Permitting Unlawful Houses to Operate.

Ignoring the fresh volley of charges made by Carl Hutcheson, an attorney, who offers to cite resorts which are allowed to operate by the city police, Chief Beavers Tuesday morning reiterated his declaration that the entire matter would be laid bare before the Grand Jury for decision.

Detective Chief Lanford revealed another angle of the warfare when he declared that the fight being made against him was backed by the gambling ring of Atlanta. C. C. Jones was named as the leader of the opposition in this fight.

Beavers in commenting upon Hutcheson's charges, declared that they were inspired by Thomas B. Felder, with whose office Hutcheson is connected, and that the attack was not therefore that of Hutcheson, but of Felder and his "gang."

Hutcheson, a young lawyer connected with the firm Felder, Anderson, Whitman & Dillon, wrote an open letter to Chief of Police Beavers, charging him with permitting unlawful houses to operate on certain city streets and promising to give addresses if the Chief asks personally for them within three days.

Beavers to Ignore Attack.

Characterizing Carl Hutcheson as of too little importance to warrant an answer to his charges made against the police force, Chief Beavers declared that he would ignore him altogether.

"I don't care to answer Hutcheson's attack," said the police official. "Hutcheson is too small a fry to even take notice of. An answer to him would give him too much dignity. This young man is in Felder's office and is merely being used as a tool of Felder and his gang. Felder prompted him to make the statement that he did, and so I will pay no attention to Hutcheson.

"This matter is going before the Grand Jury, and not Carl Hutcheson."

Regarded as Reply.

On Monday morning Chief Beavers declared Attorney Thomas B. Felder had no evidence of police cognizance of immoral resorts; that he never had had any, and that he was only bluffing when he said he had. Requested to reply, Colonel Felder announced he would make no more statements except in writing, and that he had nothing to say then.

A few hours later Mr. Hutcheson, a member of Colonel Felder's firm, issued the letter, which is regarded as a semi-official reply from Colonel Felder.

Mr. Hutcheson formerly was a newspaper man. Shortly after taking up the practice of law he achieved State-wide renown by conducting the campaign of William Schley Howard, who defeated Representative Leonidas Livingston and is now serving his second term in Congress.

Following is Mr. Hutcheson's open letter to Chief J. L. Beavers:

Scores Vice Crusade.

J. L. Beavers, Chief of Police, Atlanta:

Newport Lanford, Chief of Detectives, Atlanta:

In your great crusade against Sodom and Gomorrah with your immaculate robes of Puritanism,

I accuse you in all your glory with allowing certain houses on Ivy Street, the business of which is to barter in immoral and indecent practices, to continue in flagrant operation. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, every sensible citizen of this city, who knows anything of the world, does. If you do not know these

NEW YORK, May 27.—Using his belt and necktie as a noose, Eber Carmichael, a clerk, who was arrested yesterday for fatally stabbing Conrad Braun, subscription manager of Current Opinion, hanged himself in his cell in a police station to-day.

Carmichael was in bad shape, physically, when locked up and kept shouting, "Ship my body to Atlanta."

LONDON, May 27.—The third criminal trial growing out of the Marconi scandal began in Old Bailey Court to-day. It is the libel case of Godfrey Isaacs, managing director of the British Marconi Company, against Cecil Chesterton, journalist and brother of G. K. Chesterton, the famous essayist.

Chesterton is charged with libeling Isaacs in an article he wrote on the connection between certain officers of the British Government and the Marconi interests.

$25,000,000 Annual Road Fund Feared

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Claiming that a Committee on Good Roads will open the way to an annual Government expense of $25,000,000, economy advocates will fight the creating of the committee in the Democratic caucus next week. They declare the committee constantly will be agitating for tremendous appropriations which can not now be afforded.

It is conceded that, if the committee is created, its supporters will have enough strength to force big appropriations.

Heflin to Lead House Attack on Suffrage

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Congress soon will ring with the echoes of anti-woman suffrage oratory. Representatives Heflin of Alabama and Stanley W. Bowdle of Ohio are both preparing extensive arguments against woman suffrage.

ROUTE LAID FOR HOLIDAY PARADE

Momentum will be added to the movement for the Wednesday half-holiday parade June 4 at a meeting of retail grocers and commission men in Taft Hall Tuesday night.

Business will be combined with pleasure at the meeting. A "Dutch" lunch will be served and five orators will be given free rein. R. A. Broyles, E. L. Adams, W. O. Stamps, John M. McCullough and Harry L. Schlesinger will be the speakers. Little remains to be done except to formally approve plans already made.

Two miles, at least, of emancipated working people will parade the principal streets of Atlanta, starting at 1:30 o'clock from the Mitchell Street side of the State Capitol. The line of march will include Mitchell Street to Whitehall, Whitehall and Peachtree to North Avenue, North Avenue to West Peachtree and West Peachtree and Peachtree again to Five Points.

Following the parade, special entertainment will be given the merchants, commission men and other employers giving the midweek half-holiday.

SUSPICION TURNED TO CONLEY; ACCUSED BY FACTORY FOREMAN

Negro, Whose Story That He Wrote Notes at Frank's Dictation Is Generally Disbelieved, Was Often Drunk. Mrs. White Can Not Identify Him.

Suspicion in the Phagan case was Tuesday morning turned full-flare upon James Conley, the negro whose unexpected assertion last week that he had written the notes found beside the body of Mary Phagan, at the dictation of Leo M. Frank, was followed by a speedy indictment of the pencil factory superintendent.

In the opinion of E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman in the factory, Conley is the guilty man.

Careful study of the negro's story has revealed many absurdities in its structure, wherein evidences of childish cunning are rife in an effort to throw the blame onto Frank. It is this which has served to bring the deed to Conley's door.

However, Mrs. Arthur White, wife of a machinist at the factory, who testified that she saw a negro lurking in the building between 12 noon and 2 o'clock on the afternoon of the murder, denied the published report in an afternoon paper that she had identified Conley as the one. Mrs. White stated Tuesday morning that she had secured only a glimpse of the man. It may have been Conley, or another negro. Mrs. White was asked to pick Conley out of a crowd of twelve negroes some time ago, but her identification was a second choice.

The police, in spite of bending every effort to show that Frank is guilty, therefore, have resorted to a dissection of Conley's story. One of its weakest links, they believe, is the negro's quotation of Frank's statement to him "Why should I hang?" That the superintendent should place this confidence in the negro sweeper appears absurd.

Another damaging point against Conley lies in the declaration of Holloway, timekeeper of the factory, that the negro had appeared for duty intoxicated on several occasions; that his duties as sweeper brought him in contact with the girls, who feared him.

Where Was Conley?

According to Conley's story, he was on Peters Street from 10 o'clock until 2 in the afternoon of the murder. Police investigation of this has failed to prove the statement. Conley admits that he can not remember anyone whom he saw during that time to bear up his statement. From 2 o'clock until 6 Conley was at his home. This has been proven. Conley declares that from 6 until 8 o'clock that night he was down town; this also has not been established. Conley states he stayed there the remainder of the night.

According to the new theory of Conley's implication, the negro wrote the notes on Saturday instead of Friday, as he claims, and not on anybody's dictation. It is further argued that, in order to ingratiate himself with the law, he made his confession when he thought that the case against Frank was clinched—that his story was the product of his own imagination.

Conley's delay in making this confession until Frank's indictment seemed likely is another link against him.

His detailed account of the incident of the note writing, in which he even went so far as to attempt a quotation of what Frank said to him, shows premeditation on the negro's part, it is argued, and further that the story was conceived by Conley while he was in prison. However, the negro's childish brain was not capable of making it strong enough to withstand rigid investigation.

E. F. Holloway, timekeeper and foreman of the National Pencil factory, seen to-day by a Georgian reporter, said he was confident the negro Jim Conley, under arrest as a suspect in the Mary Phagan murder mystery, committed the crime.

Here is what Holloway told the reporter:

"Jim Conley, when he came to work here about one year ago, was a pretty good negro. We had no trouble with him for about two months. Then Jim got drunk. He had been running the elevator and we were afraid to trust him afterward. We then put him to work sweeping in the trimming department. Here Conley was closely associated with the girls. He used to move their chairs when he was sweeping. Conley was the only negro allowed in this department.

"Jim got so bad he used to carry whisky with him in his pocket. Several times he was caught by employees taking a drink. This was not known by the management until after the murder of Mary Phagan.

Drunk In Factory.

"About one week before the crime was committed the forelady of the trimming and finishing department, Miss Eulah May Flowers, went to the top floor of the building to look over the stock of boxes. When Conley was not sweeping he was supposed to fill the box bins with boxes. When Miss Flowers moved toward the bin to look in she stumbled over a form. She screamed and fell back. It was Conley. He was dead drunk. Miss Flowers tried to wake him up, but was unable.

Caught Washing Shirt.

"On the morning of the Coroner's investigation, Thursday after the murder, when the plant was shut down because we all were called to the investigation, I testified and went back to the factory. As I entered the metal department I heard a splashing in the cooling tank. There was Conley washing his shirt. When I entered he was very much startled and tried to hide the shirt by trying to drop it through a crack in the floor. It was a blue shirt and I saw no bloodstains, for he had evidently been washing it for some time as it was pretty clean.

"This is the first time in the year that Jim Conley worked here that he ever washed his clothes here.

"Now, I don't say Conley was degenerate enough to commit a crime so terrible when he was sober, but I am thoroughly convinced that he things, it is your duty to know, and you should be discharged from your high pedestals for dereliction.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on certain parts of Spring Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate in a certain section of Pryor Street. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of allowing similar houses to operate on a certain section of Central Avenue. AND YOU KNOW IT. If you do not, you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of failing to take cognizance of a certain house in Ivy Street, to which I called your attention several weeks ago, where young men were inveigled to gamble away their money, the mistress thereof being the banker and the recipient of these ill-gotten gains. AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you and numbers of your forces with being cognizant of these facts, and yet you, the great crusade leaders, stand idly by and fold your lordly hands.

I accuse you with allowing, even yet, low class hotels in this city to exist and practice their nefarious games of lowly gain, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

If you can not "turn up" these places, there are hundreds of people who can. I can use infantile detective work and turn up dozens of them within a few days, AND YOU KNOW THIS CAN BE DONE. And, if you fail to get busy and continue to parade your great genius (?) you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Charges Police Protection.

I accuse you with protecting these places because of your lax methods in keeping "the houses within our midst" closed, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of closing Manhattan Avenue and converting our entire municipality into a "red light" district. AND YOU KNOW IT, and unless you change conditions at once you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of retaining on your forces men unfit to protect the "decent" citizens of Atlanta, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

I accuse you of knowing where numbers of houses which exist by immoral practices are located, AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for dereliction of duty.

Do you think that the public will be hoodwinked forever? Do you think that the public is so gullible as to believe all of this "bush-wah" about the great work that you are continuing? Yes, you closed Manhattan Avenue, but what did you do for the remainder of the city?

You and your bunch are very sore because you were unable to ferret out the Phagan murder, AND YOU KNOW IT. When the Solicitor General called in outside aid, numbers of your hirelings were very much perturbed and became insanely jealous. That is why all of this patched-up and hatched-up bunch of lies and slanders have been issued against Thomas B. Felder, whose shoes you are unworthy to untie, AND YOU KNOW IT.

I accuse you of retaining a large number of leather-heads for detectives. Detectives? That is a joke, isn't it? AND YOU KNOW IT, and you should be removed from office for allowing such an army of incompetents to work with your departments. You know, and I know, that these fellows secure their offices through political pull and not through efficiency. They are Sherlock Holmeses when it comes to arresting blind tigers and negro crap-players, but beyond that they would not know a clew if they saw it tagged.

In the Phagan case, the newspaper men are the ones who turned up the first clews of any merit, AND YOU KNOW IT, and should be ashamed of that crowd down there to allow the members of the Fourth Estate to put one over on you; but you know newspaper men have brains, and brains are required to make detectives.

Now, volley forth again your promulgation of purity and tell the people of this great city what large men you are and how you protect the citizenry of this great Commonwealth.

If you haven't the addresses of the houses to which I refer, call at my office within three days and I will give you a bunch of them.

Friends of mine have advised me against printing this card. Some have feared for my life—but afraid of you and your crowd? Never. I am not afraid of anything that lays down its firearms and comes at me like a man in fair play. Now, "lay on, MacDuff, and damn'd be him who first cries, 'Hold! Enough!'"

The Duty of the Grand Jury== Investigate All the Charges of Graft and Bribery!

The Georgian repeats its suggestion that the Grand Jury MUST TAKE UP AND INVESTIGATE THOROUGHLY the charges of graft and bribery that have been made in the newspapers during the past few days.

And the matter should not end with the Grand Jury. It should be taken into a court of law,

Colonel Thomas B. Felder has made some accusations that merit immediate attention.

If there is graft in the police department or bribery anywhere, the public has a right to know about it; and if Colonel Felder or anyone else can establish that, he will receive the thanks of the entire community, and there will be a speedy turning out of the guilty men.

The matter is too serious to begin and end in a newspaper war.

The good name of the city is involved. The good name of public servants is involved.

Trials in newspapers are never effective. They lead nowhere. The public is still unconvinced.

Trials by judges and juries are final and conclusive.

THE PUBLIC WANTS FACTS.

There is no reason to believe that the charges against Beavers are true. Even the bitterest enemies of Beavers admit his honesty. He has made a good record. He is entitled to have the charges against him examined by a judge and jury, so that all the facts may be known.

Whether Beavers' attitude is right in putting an end to the segregated district is not an issue. The law does not permit any choice in the matter. The law does not sanction a segregated district for the barter and sale of human beings and for the enrichment of a few ringsters.

It is not improbable that a little more liberality in some of the laws would be a good thing for the city and all concerned. But the way to get that liberality is to change the present statutes.

Beavers has no alternative but to enforce the law as he sees it, and he has no alternative but to compel those who accuse his department to go into court and try the case there instead of in the columns of the newspapers.

STAND BY BEAVERS AND THE LAW!

Gamblers' Plot, Declares Lanford.

Chief of Detectives Newport A. Lanford gave out a sensational statement Tuesday morning in which he charged that the efforts to fix accusations of bribery and malfeasance upon him were inspired by a "gambling ring," of which C. C. Jones was the head.

The cause of the fight against Lanford had been something of a mystery. Beavers readily explained the efforts to dispossess him from the office of Chief of Police by his war on vice in the city of Atlanta. Lanford's explanation reveals another angle of the crusade against a wide-open town.

"The gambling ring has been after me ever since I was made head of the detective department ten years ago," said Chief Lanford. "No more had I declared relentless warfare upon all forms of gambling in the city than I was notified that the gambling interests were out to 'get' me. Several times it was reported to me that I had been marked for an attack, and once the gamblers succeeded in carrying out their threats.

"That was five years ago. I was reduced from sergeant, which was the designation of the head of the department then, to service in the ranks. The gamblers were responsible for it. They gloated for nine months. Then I was raised to my former position again, with the title of chief. Since then I have continued my campaign against them.

"They have been very bitter. They have threatened me time and again. Now they have brought these charges against me."

Col. Felder Still Probing In the Phagan Case.

In the news columns of The Georgian yesterday it was said that Colonel Felder had been eliminated from the Phagan case. Colonel Felder says this is not true, that he is as deeply interested in solving the mystery as ever, and that he is lending every energy in that direction. The further statement in The Georgian that Colonel Felder was believed at one time to be interested in the defense of Frank was not intended to reflect in any way upon the lawyer. It was simply the gossip of the street, given for what it was worth. Colonel Felder's own statement that he is working solely for the public good makes his position perfectly clear, and everybody in the city will hope that he will continue actively in the case until the great mystery is disposed of.

Cochran Decries Reform Upheavals

Ralph O. Cochran, Representative-elect from Fulton County and candidate for the United States Senate to succeed Senator Hoke Smith, received hearty congratulations Tuesday on a speech delivered Monday night at the commencement exercises of the Lithonia Public Schools.

Mr. Cochran took "Conservatism" as his subject. He declared really great things were accomplished by cautious individuals. He commended conservatism rather than a course of reform.

A large crowd of DeKalb County citizens turned out to hear the candidate.

Noted Woodmen to Visit Atlanta Camps

Mr. Melon Greets Old Friends

Florida His Present Address

Forerunner of Georgia Cousin

Smiling 'Rastus, one of Atlanta's welcoming committee, joyously greeting the first visitor from Florida.

Six Thousand Cars of Luscious Product to Pass Through Atlanta on Way North.

Men and women of Atlanta, we have with us to-night our old friend, Mr. Watermelon.

Just from Florida, dressed in the old-time mottled and variegated garb, flesh pinker than perfection, blood redder and juicier than ever, hankering to be split. He has arrived from Florida to tell us there are plenty more where he came from—enough to last four weeks.

And by that time the more numerous branch of the family, the Georgia watermelon, the most luscious of them all, will arrive in full flush of glory.

The Central of Georgia Railway has set apart 6,000 freight cars to transport watermelons from the South northward. Every car must pass through Atlanta, and prospects are that at least 1,500 of them will be halted on the way. There's a regular army of thirsty Georgians here, and it's hard to run the gantlet.

Commission merchants and transportation officials have a joyful announcement to make. The watermelon crop this year will be a bumper, one of the best ever in the State.

Let the small boy rejoice and be gay of heart, for he shall be satisfied. And let the old boy come down off of his high pedestal of dignity and rejoice also, for the older he gets the bigger fool he is about the fragrant fruit of the vine.

Six thousand freight cars will hold exactly 3,761,942 big watermelons and two small ones. That'll be enough to feed the country at large when the Georgia crop comes in. This year quality will be good and prices just right—high enough to suit the farmer and cheap enough to please the consumer. The season has already started.

Union Musicians Have Celebration

One hundred and fifty members of Atlanta Local No. 148, American Federation of Musicians, celebrated the twelfth anniversary of the organization of their local at Turn Verein Hall last night. Many women are active members of the organization.

A supper was served and a large orchestra, composed of the members present, entertained.

A cornet solo by E. M. Coleman and vocal selections by Miss Sadie Percival, who was accompanied at the piano by Mrs. Mongen F. Smith, were enjoyed.

Remarks by Carl Karston, of Local No. 148; S. H. Brady, president of the Atlanta Federation of Trades; W. C. Puckett, third vice president of the Georgia State Federation; William Strauss, State organizer, and H. G. Wood, vice president of the Atlanta local, were heard.

Water Fashionable Beverage in London

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 27.—Champagne now takes a back seat in London, and claret, moselle and whisky and soda are the drinks of the moment. But temperance is a current craze. Barley water in special "brews" may be found at the Carlton and Bachelors' Clubs.

A few smart men drink plain cold water, among others Sir Arthur Walsh and Lord Charles Beresford. The King has cider laid down in his cellar, and among cider drinkers are the Duke and Duchess of Teck, the Duchess of Leeds, Lord Knollys and Lord Mount Stephen. Beer is seldom seen at dinner or luncheon, but iced lager beer is popular at balls and late parties.

BURNS MAN QUITS CASE; DECLARES HE IS OPPOSED

C. W. Tobie, chief criminal investigator for the Burns Detective Agency, formally withdrew from the Phagan investigation Tuesday morning. The calling off of the Burns forces was announced by Dan P. Lehon, superintendent of the Southern branch, after Tobie had stated explicitly that he would not withdraw from the case.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder, who brought the Burns detectives into the Phagan case, would make no statement relative to their withdrawal, but announced that it did not mean the end of his investigation or connection with the case.

Tobie made up his mind last Friday to drop the Mary Phagan investigation—so he said Tuesday—but deferred action until Monday night, when he announced his intention to withdraw to Solicitor General Dorsey.

Disgusted With "Fuss."

Acute disgust at the "four or five cornered fuss" raised by the Phagan investigation was assigned by Tobie as the cause. This disgust was superinduced by the direct charge and general impression that the Burns Agency was pretending to ferret out the Phagan case, when in reality its purpose in Atlanta was to investigate the police department.

Tobie said to-day that while he had quit and was going to leave Atlanta, still the withdrawal of the Burns Agency need not be permanent.

"If certain features of this case are not developed, then there will be one, and maybe two, Burns men back here. I will send them here, but they will work in secret. There will be no more public investigation."

Tobie explained he believed Leo M. Frank was guilty of the Phagan murder and that the "certain features" meant additional clinching evidence not yet published that will make Frank's conviction certain.

"How can any house have harmony," said Tobie, "when the old man is fighting the old woman, and the old woman is fighting the children, and they are all fighting the hired girl? That's the shape this affair has gotten into, only worse.

"We came here to investigate this Phagan case, and for no other purpose. But the charge was made that in reality we were investigating the police department. The way things were shaped up the police could not help believing that charge to be true. Colonel Felder's attitude bore that out, so I decided last Friday to quit."

"Do you mean, then, that you were dissatisfied at Colonel Felder's attitude?" was asked.

"We were dissatisfied with that part of it, yes," was Tobie's reply.

Tobie Himself Through.

Tobie reiterated he ended the investigation himself. "I called myself off," he said. "Dan S. Lehon, our Southern superintendent, was close to Atlanta. It was as near for him to pass through here on his way back to New Orleans as it was for him to go any other way. I was in charge here, but, as you know, I do not belong to this territory. As a pure formality and a matter of courtesy, and because I knew he was coming here to visit his wife's relatives, I sent him a message inviting him to confer with me. When he got here I told him as a courtesy that I had decided to quit the case. He approved it. Had I told him I would continue, he would have approved that, too.

"This is the worst mix-up I ever saw anywhere, at any time. It's awful. Everybody is fighting everybody else, and I am through with this four or five cornered fracas, except that if more Burns men are sent here I shall send them here and they will report to me."

Bribery Charges Denied.

Rumored attempts to bribe witnesses were given strong denial in many circles, particularly by those whose names were connected by rumor with the alleged bribery attempts.

C. C. Sears, superintendent of the Atlanta branch of the Burns detective agency communicated to Chief of Detectives Lanford the announcement of the withdrawal of the Burns forces from the Phagan case.

Chief Lanford authorized the following statement on the departure of Tobie:

"Tobie, I believe, is straight and honest. He was victimized by Felder. I am convinced Mr. Tobie was working toward the interest of those seeking to clear the mystery."

Praises Superintendent.

A girl employee of the pencil factory has written the following statement, which upholds the working conditions of the factory and champions the character of the imprisoned superintendent:

"Nothing has ever been said of the girls of the pencil factory until after the terrible murder, but since then there has been one continuous talk, just as if we were to blame. We are just as anxious to see the guilty punished as the rest of the public, and we all loved Mary Phagan just as much as we possibly could.

"If the public only would interest itself to look into other factories and stores they would find the girls in the pencil factory are just as good as any other working girls.

"It looks mighty hard that we have to work in the place where our little friend was so horribly murdered. But we are only poor working girls, trying to make an honest living, and we try not to think of the tragedy any more than possible; and we have the interest of the factory too much at heart to desert in times of trouble.

"We all hope and pray the guilty will be punished and the innocent given freedom, for we all think our superintendent has a soul himself and that he would not think of such a thing, much less commit such a horrible crime."

Swallows Poison as Walker Did; Saved

ORLANDO, FLA., May 27.—That bichloride of mercury is not always fatal was demonstrated here when S. Walters Howe, cashier of the State National Bank, swallowed a tablet, mistaking it for a headache dose.

As the tablet passed down his throat it contracted the muscles so violently that he discovered his mistake and hurried to the city physician, who at once used the stomach pump and gave antidotes. Howe has experienced no harm.

U. S. IS HOME OF SQUANDERERS, SAYS BANKER

Financier Warns of Credit Strain Resulting From Lavish Expenditure of Money.

DETROIT, May 27.—Joseph T. Talbert, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, in an address delivered before the Bankers' Club here, declared everything has been dear except credit, and, as a result, "our expanded loans and deposits constitute the weak spots in our domestic and business situation."

Mr. Talbert gave statistics showing the gross loans and investments of all the banks in the United States since 1907 has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $5,000,000,000, while the total increase in the gold stock of the United States since 1907 aggregated $506,000,000.

"This condition," said Mr. Talbert, "although perhaps not so strong as it should be to justify and properly sustain our increased loans, still is assuring and shows that there is no substantial ground for alarm."

Delight to Squander.

Mr. Talbert caused quite a stir when he said that "evidence tends to show that individually and collectively we are a nation of spendthrifts.

"It is our habit and delight to squander, and no amount of preaching will have any effect upon our prodigality as a national trait."

Mr. Talbert, in leading up to an explanation of the drain on New York's gold supply by Europe, said the lending power of German banks had been strained to the limit; that Germany borrowed money here and sought to draw gold from us.

In calling attention to the persistent hoarding of gold by the French, he said the French, not content with the mere hoarding of their own gold, at heavy losses of exchange, forced from us, either for their own account or for that of South America, upward of $56,000,000 of gold.

"The movement is going on and may continue indefinitely.

"For lack of protection for our gold stock, we have been obliged to sit helplessly and to submit to this forced exportation of gold, to our disadvantage and discomfort.

"This gold movement taking place at such a time and under such conditions demonstrated the fact that often has been stated before—that New York is the only free market in the world for gold."

Need Outside Money.

Mr. Talbert said an enormous amount of railroad financing must be done during the next year or two, and nearly all of it will be done at home with difficulty and in all probability at a higher level of interest rates than we have been accustomed to in such undertakings in recent years.

Mr. Talbert uttered "a word of caution against the practice which has been all too common among merchants and manufacturers, of financing themselves too largely through note brokers."

In concluding, the banker said it should be remembered that we are neither in nor approaching a period of speculation, and that credit is in no danger whatever from that source now, nor will it be in the near future. He added that courage should be taken from the fact that thus far the promises of another year of bountiful crops are exceedingly bright.

JEFFERSON CITY, MO., May 27. Opal Mitchell, ten years old, of Licking, Texas County, won a $100 prize and was declared the best speller in the State. In a contest in which 60 pupils from as many counties contested, she misspelled but 3 of 200 words.

The three words misspelled by Opal Mitchell were: Chalice, besieged and weasel.

CURED TERRIBLE HUMOR ON FACE

Could Not Go On Street Without Veil—Tells What Resinol Did For Her.

"Philadelphia, Dec. 6, 1912.—In December, 1908, my face became sore. I tried everything that was recommended, and my face got worse instead of better. I spent over $100 and got no benefit. The face and nose were very red and the eruption had the appearance of small boils, which itched me terribly. I can not tell you how terrible my face looked—all I can say is, it was dreadful, and I suffered beyond description.

"I have not gone on the street any time since 1908 without a veil, until now. Just four months ago a friend persuaded me to give Resinol a trial. I have used three cakes of Resinol Soap and less than a jar of Resinol Ointment, and my face is perfectly free from any eruption, and my skin is as clear and clean as any child's. It is about four weeks since the last pimple disappeared." (Signed) Mrs. M. J. Bateman, 4256 Viola St.

Practically every druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1.00) and Resinol Soap (25c), but if you are suffering from itching, burning skin troubles, pimples, blackheads, dandruff, rashes, boils, stubborn sores, or piles, it will cost you nothing to try these soothing, healing preparations. Just send to Dept. 26-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for a free sample of each.

Wylie Smith Says He Will Be Cleared

Released from a prison cell Monday afternoon on $3,000 bond, J. Wylie Smith, former president of the Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who recently was brought back from Mexico after eluding officers of the law for two years and seeing service on the battlefield with Diaz and Madero, expects to devote his entire time to recovering his health.

No date has been set for the trial of Smith on the charge of forgery. Smith declares that papers found since his return to Atlanta will prove his innocence.

BULGARIA READY TO BEGIN WAR ON SERVIA

Latter Country Warned Not to Annex the Turkish Territory It Now Occupies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 27.—Bulgaria will declare war against Servia if the latter country annexes all the Turkish territory it has occupied since the outbreak of the Balkan war.

This was the message received here to-day from Sofia, and it contained the additional information that Bulgaria is ready to begin hostilities at once.

Servia holds most of the strategic points in Central Albania and Macedonia. Czar Nicholas has informed the Bulgarian Government through M. Sazonoff, the Foreign Minister, that he will not act as arbitrator between Bulgaria and Servia.

Turks Plan to Resume War On Quarreling Allies.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 27.—The possibility that Turkey, taking advantage of the dissension among the Balkan allies, may resume the war against the states in the Balkan league is looming up.

It was learned here to-day that the Porte has ordered $4,000,000 worth of fresh arms and ammunition, and that Enver Bey, chief of staff of the Turkish army, is attempting to re-form the various divisions of the Ottoman army.

Although peace negotiations have not been commenced by the plenipotentiaries in London, it is deemed unlikely that Europe would allow a resumption of the war.

'Naked Truth' Too Naked for St. Louis

NEW YORK, May 27.—When Professor William Wendschneider, the famous German sculptor, arrived today from England and learned that his statue, "The Naked Truth," designed for the Praetorius-Schurz-Daenzer Memorial Committee of St. Louis, Mo., had been rejected because it was too daring, he emitted a wail of protest.

The professor caught the first train going West, determined to change the opinions about "The Naked Truth."

Girls Burn Books at Agnes Scott

Seniors End College Year With Torchlight Parade and Big Bonfire on Campus.

With stars twinkling and torchlights glimmering, the seniors of Agnes Scott made a bonfire of their books on the campus. Aided in the torch-bearing by sophomores and surrounded by several hundred alumnae and friends, they went through the ceremony with all of the gayety that only a crowd of college maids could display.

Burning of the books followed a torchlight parade on the campus. As the torch-bearers tripped over the beautiful lawn, their class songs and cheers drew a hearty response from the crowd.

A glee club concert opened with the cantata, "Death of Joan of Arc," led by Miss Almedia Sadler and Miss Isabel Norwood.

"The Last Rose of Summer" and "A Serenade," by Miss Rosa Hill; "Mammy's Little Honey" and "My Lady Clo," by Miss Sadler; "Love's Dilemma," by Miss Norwood, and a rendition of "Annie Laurie," by Misses Jean Ashcraft, Isabel Norwood, Pauline Bruner and Rosa Hill, were features.

Tuesday night the two literary societies will cross swords in a debate on the question: "Resolved, That the Panama Canal should be free."

Christian Golden, the husband, wants the marriage annulled, too.

Kahn Urges Plan to Strengthen Army

WASHINGTON, May 27.—An army reserve created by one-year enlistments is advocated by Congressman Julius Kahn, of California, who declared to-day he believed Japan's pugnacious attitude was due to the knowledge that few American men have even the rudiments of military training.

Kahn advocates an enlistment of one year of active service and three years in the reserve.

GIVES UP HUSBAND FOR UPLIFT WORK

Mrs. Sarah MacD. Sheridan, Former Georgian, Tells Why She Didn't Fight Divorce.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Mrs. Sarah MacDonald Sheridan, former Georgian and daughter of one of the leading men of the Southern States at the time of the Civil War, told to-day why she permitted her husband to obtain a divorce in Reno without contest.

Her husband, Charles Oscar Sheridan, went to Nevada four years ago for his health. She refused to join him there. He obtained a decree for absolute divorce last Saturday.

She said to-day she regarded it as her great duty to continue her sociological work, in which she had been engaged for 30 years. Mrs. Sheridan is the founder of the "New National Fireside" movement for the opening of public schools after hours as neighborhood social centers, and declared she believed her work along these lines of greater importance than the maintenance of her domestic relations.

"I have lived to see my son, Mark Sheridan, in the old family home in Atlanta, become one of the most promising young mural painters of the day," she said, "and my daughter happily married to the younger son of one of England's noblest families. This accomplished, I feel that my family life has been full."

Mrs. Sheridan is an intimate friend of President Wilson and his family and is a musician of ability as well as a sociologist. From her youth, Mrs. Sheridan devoted her talents to the improvement of social conditions in her own State. The Martha Berry Industrial School was established mainly through her efforts.

Officers of the association are: President, W. G. Greene, Eatonton; first vice president, J. R. Hall, Moultrie; second vice president, J. E. Sapp, Albany; secretary and treasurer, J. L. Moore, Madison.

Policeman Knocked Out by Thunderbolt

Policeman J. J. Clack was shocked into unconsciousness by a bolt of lightning that struck somewhere in the vicinity of Peachtree and Houston Streets, punctuating the downpour of rain early Tuesday morning.

The policeman at the time of the thunder clap was reporting to headquarters from the police box on that corner.

Clack was revived in a nearby drug store and taken to his home.

Ask Wilson to Force Clerks to Pay Debts

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Protesting against the number of government employees who fail to pay their debts, the Retail Merchants' Association will send a letter to President Wilson asking that the matter be laid before the several members of the Cabinet, with the request that some action be taken in each of the ten departments.

Old Soldiers Cheer U. S. Regulars in First of Parades at Chattanooga.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 27. For the first time in the more than twenty years of the organization, the United Confederate Veterans were welcomed at their annual reunion by a Republican Governor to-day when Ben W. Hooper officially extended the hospitality of Tennessee to the old soldiers and the thousands of other visitors assembled here.

The reunion formally opened at 10 o'clock with exercises at the reunion auditorium. Meetings of affiliated bodies yesterday were only preliminary to the assembling of the veterans.

W. E. Brock, general chairman of the Chattanooga reunion committees, called the assemblage to order and delivered the gavel to General John P. Hickman, of Nashville, commander of the Tennessee division. Dr. J. W. Bachman, of Chattanooga, chaplain general of the U. C. V., pronounced the opening invocation and then Governor Hooper delivered his address. It was rumored that a hostile demonstration against the Republican Governor would be attempted, but it failed to materialize.

General Young a Speaker.

General Bennett H. Young, commander in chief, followed Governor Hooper with his annual address, the chief feature of which was his tribute to Southern womanhood.

Veterans, sponsors, maids and visitors are exercised to-day over whether women shall ride astride in the reunion parades. General J. P. Hickman's order that only side saddles for women shall be permitted has caused the stir, and this promises to become an issue overshadowing the real business of the convention of veterans.

General Hickman, commander of the Tennessee division, is grand marshal of the veterans' parade. Although he issued his order last week that women should not ride astride, it was not until the visitors had begun to gather yesterday and to-day that real opposition to it became pronounced.

This opposition comes largely from sponsors and maids who had planned to don divided skirts or riding trousers and sit on their steeds like men, and Sons of Veterans chosen as their escorts.

Order Will Stand.

But for every opposing voice there is one commending General Hickman's decree, the approval coming from veterans and their wives and some of the younger generation who do not approve of the present-day style. To-day the indications are that General Hickman's order will stand and that in the veterans' parade at least side saddles alone will be permitted on women's mounts.

The first of the reunion parades took place this morning at 9 o'clock when the Eleventh United States Cavalry, stationed at Fort Oglethorpe on the edge of the Chickamauga battlefield national park, marched through the downtown streets of Chattanooga in full dress uniform and equipment.

Cheer U. S. Troops.

The old veterans of the gray cheered the Government troops despite the fact that they wore the blue uniform that 50 years ago the men of the South so bitterly hated. It was a notable illustration that this is again a united country and sectional lines are fast being obliterated.

A half-hour later a short business session was held by the Sons of Confederate Veterans, after which came the formal opening of the reunion by the veterans.

This afternoon business sessions will be held by the Veterans, Sons of Veterans and Confederate Memorial Association.

To-night the big social functions that will mark the reunion will begin.

Business sessions were held this afternoon by the veterans, Sons of Veterans and the memorial associations.

Social Affairs Begin.

At 4 o'clock this afternoon the army of official sponsors and maids of honor will parade the downtown streets in automobiles provided by the entertainment committee and their escorts.

At 7 o'clock a garden party will be tendered the sponsors and maids at Warner Park.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy will entertain the veterans with a reception at the Bennett Young Pavilion to-night.

A business session of the Sons will take place at 8 o'clock at the Auditorium.

Preparations for the unveiling of the Alabama monument to-morrow morning are being made to-day. A large delegation has arrived from Alabama on a special train. The unveiling will take place at 10:30 o'clock. The Florida monument will be unveiled an hour earlier.

Young for Re-election.

General Bennett H. Young, commander-in-chief, will probably be re-elected by the veterans, though there is some talk of opposing candidates. He is serving his first year, having been elected at the Macon reunion last year.

Active campaigns have been launched by Jacksonville, Fla., and Tulsa, Okla., for next year's gathering. Other cities mentioned for this honor are Nashville, Richmond, Baltimore, San Antonio and Denver. Nashville and Richmond have entertained the veterans in the past. None of the other cities mentioned has had a reunion.

Camp A. P. Stewart, in Jackson Park, where tents and commissaries have been established for those veterans unable to pay for hotel accommodations, is to-day sheltering its quota of old soldiers and presents a warlike appearance. Last night, after the day's arrivals had been assigned to quarters, unpacked their luggage and had supper, they gathered around their camp fires and retold stories of the war and particularly of the campaigns around Chattanooga and Chickamauga.

BRYAN GETS INTO TRAP IN ROW WITH JAPAN

Abandons Course Used Successfully With England—Orientals to Grasp Opportunity.

WASHINGTON, May 27.—Students of statecraft declare that the Wilson administration has needlessly, not to saw stupidly, walked into a trap in the controversy with Japan over the California alien land law.

In its reply to Great Britain's Panama Canal tolls protest, this Government laid down the principle that until an overt act had been committed against the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, Great Britain would have no standing in court; in other words, that Great Britain's grievance would become a matter for diplomatic adjustment only after an American ship had actually passed through the canal free. This statement cleared the atmosphere and left Great Britain no reasonable grounds for continuing the debate.

The same principle applies in the controversy with Japan.

The obvious reply of Secretary of State Bryan to the first Japanese protest, in view of the attitude assumed toward Great Britain, was to state that the treaty with Japan had not been violated, and, therefore, there was no matter for contention between the two governments until after some Japanese subject in California had been aggrieved by the operation of some California law.

But instead of adopting this logical course, it was pointed out here to-day the Wilson administration floundered about in the diplomatic puddle, and, denying that the treaty of 1911 had been violated, invited further negotiations, thus giving the Japanese Ambassador an excellent opportunity to quote the State Department against itself, where the very same principle is involved.

As the matter is now, instead of making a firm stand on precedent and silencing the Japanese protest as the British protest was silenced, the Wilson administration has promoted bickering between the two nations, Japan and the United States, and is in the ridiculous position of holding two diametrically opposite policies in relation to identically the same problem. If the American position is right in regard to the Panama Canal protest, it is wrong in regard to the Japanese protest, and vice versa.

It is the expectation here that Japan will take instant advantage of the inconsistency and incongruity of the position of the United States.

Lawson and Friends in Real Panther Hunt

SCITUATE, MASS., May 27.—Thomas W. Lawson has taken a hand in the hunt for a panther, which has invaded Scituate, and has been seen by a score of persons.

It is possible Mr. Lawson and a party of his friends will stalk the beast themselves. They want to add the beast to the menagerie at "Dreamwold."

ODDITIES —in the— DAY'S NEWS

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Wuxtry! Wuxtry! And Again, Wuxtry!

"Talk about nature faking," exclaimed the hotel clerk, "just listen to this from a paper published out West. The items were sent in by the correspondent at Azusa, wherever that is."

And then he read the following:

"James Snyder, of this town, brought home four baby squirrels the other day and the family cat has adopted them and nurses them with her kittens.

"Then John Davis and Sherman Ward caught eight young foxes and their family cats have adopted them.

"Fred Bierer owns a calf that has but one foreleg, but runs just as well as any calf with its complete quota of legs.

"Ardell Smith, 16 years old, was knocked down and run over by a hog. The doctors called in say his left knee will be stiff for the rest of his life as a result of the accident.

"J. L. Brown's old hen has every day for the past three weeks laid an egg three inches long.

"Since the 'clean up' here there hasn't been much refuse in the streets and the birds got to eating tobacco crumbs and acquired the tobacco habit. Now they refuse grain and live on cigar and cigarette stubs."

Sure, Let 'Em Pay For the Luxuries.

Atlanta barbers have been discussing the edict that came from Trenton, N. J., the other day raising the price of trimming a Van Dyke beard from two bits to 35 cents.

"They're right," said the head barber, as he deftly deposited a comb behind his left ear and began running his fingers through his customer's hair.

"Never saw a guy who insisted on wearing a bunch of spinach like that who wasn't harder to please than your wife with her new summer hat. And a guy who will insist on having his mustache curled—well, some men is queer. Soak 'em, says I, soak 'em, and soak 'em good and plenty."

And the customer went out warbling:

What! The kibosh on the Van Dyke,
And an extra charge to boot
When the barber does your mustache
With a curl so cute and sweet, sweet and cute?

But we've something to be thankful for,
Downtrodden men, by heck!
The barbers haven't raised the price
For a shave
Upon
the neck!

Preacher Sentenced To Gallows Appeals

LITTLE ROCK, ARK., May 27.—Rev. Marion Capps, a former Methodist preacher, has filed an appeal to the State Supreme Court from a sentence of death imposed upon him by a Sebastian County jury. He was convicted of burning to death three of his children. Evidence at the trial was that the children were tied in bed, which was saturated with oil, and the house fired.

Capps was convicted on the testimony of two elder children, who escaped, but who, it is alleged, have since declared they swore falsely against their father.

FOREMAN OF FACTORY ACCUSES NEGRO CONLEY

strangled Mary Phagan when about half drunk.

"I'll go further and say that the last three months that Conley was here I was suspicious of him and tried to watch him as closely as possible, for I placed no dependence in him. He became indifferent about his work and shiftless."

Mrs. White Denies Identification.

Mrs. J. Arthur White, of 59 Bonnie Brae Avenue, made positive denial to the Solicitor General's office Tuesday that she ever had made any identification of James Conley, the negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, as published in an afternoon paper.

"I can not understand why such a story should have been manufactured and published," she said to a reporter. "I was just called by the Solicitor General to confirm it, and told him, as I had told him before, that I never had identified the negro.

"I saw a negro sitting on a box on the first floor of the factory as I left there about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of the murder. I did not get a good look at his face. I got just a general impression of his clothes and of his size.

"At the police station ten negroes were brought before me. I picked out one with a green derby and said that he looked considerably like the man I had seen. They told me to look again, and I picked out another man that I thought looked a little more like the negro I had seen, but I never made any positive identification; and I told the detectives, in the first place, that I would not be able to. They never told me the names of the men I had picked out, so I don't know whether one of them was Conley or not."

The detectives never have placed much weight on the identification of Mrs. White, as she said that she could not be positive. Added to this is the fact that she saw a negro loitering around the factory at 1 o'clock, which, it is thought, he would have been very unlikely to do had he had anything to do with the disappearance of Mary Phagan, who was in the factory a few minutes after 12 o'clock.

State Faces Big Task in Trial of Frank as Slayer

What will be the defense of Leo M. Frank when he is called upon next month to answer to the charge of strangling little Mary Phagan?

With the confident announcement of the police Monday that they had completed a case against the factory superintendent that was as conclusive as it possibly could be without the testimony of actual eyewitnesses of the crime, this question naturally is being asked to-day by everyone who has any interest in the mystery, and that means practically every person in Atlanta.

The people will not get their answer from Luther Z. Rosser, the close-lipped and able attorney of Frank, until the trial actually begins. But even at this early date, when only the vaguest of hints have been given as to the course that will be followed in the battle to free Frank from all suspicion, it is patent that there are many openings offered the defense for attacks upon the theories of the State.

Burden of Proof on State.

Those who are close to the daily developments in Atlanta's baffling murder mystery and who venture to predict the line of defense that will be offered are bearing in mind that, in the first place, the great burden of proof is upon the prosecution and not upon the defense.

It is absolutely necessary, due to the protection with which the law has hedged everyone under suspicion of crime, that the State in some manner, by some piece of evidence, connect Frank directly with the crime or establish his connection beyond a reasonable doubt.

Until the State is able to do this, Luther Z. Rosser may rest on his oars if he so desires. Leo Frank is innocent this moment in the eyes of the law. His innocence does not need to be proved. It is presumed.

It immediately becomes a question, therefore, as to whether the State really has made out a case against Frank, so far as can be judged from the evidence in the hands of the public. Have the detectives by any of their discoveries connected Frank directly with the crime? Have they assembled such a chain of circumstantial incidents as to make his guilt appear certain beyond a reasonable doubt?

Frank's Friends Deny Connection.

Those interested in the defense of Frank answer both questions emphatically in the negative. Not one thing has been found, they declare, that connects Frank directly with the mysterious strangling. Nor do they regard the circumstantial evidence seriously.

The law will not permit Frank's conviction for the crime merely because the detectives have discovered that he had the opportunity. It will not permit his conviction, if no convincing evidence is found against him, merely because he is unable to put his hands on another man and say, "This is the man you want. He is the guilty person."

It is not the intention of the law to hang one man simply because no one else can be found who is the more likely culprit.

After the State has presented its reasons for believing in the guilt of Frank, it is regarded as likely that the defense will claim first of all that the State has failed to establish Frank's connection with the crime beyond a reasonable doubt. The defense will represent that the most the State has done is to establish that he had the opportunity to commit the murder.

Frank never was seen with the girl, either on the day of the strangling or before. It is not known that he ever spoke to her except in connection with her work. Nothing was found to point the finger of accusation directly at Frank, so far as the public has been informed. None of Frank's clothing has been found with blood stains upon it. No finger prints upon the girl's body or her clothes were identified as his. None of his personal belonging were found near the girl's body. Absolutely nothing was discovered in the search of the detectives that fastened the crime on him.

Own Admission Caused Arrest.

The police possibly would never even have known that Frank was the last person to see Mary Phagan, so far as is known, had it not been for his own free admission. He told the officers the moment he identified the body that that was the girl he paid at noon the day before. No one else knew that Mary Phagan was in the building at that time, so far as the evidence reveals. Frank did not have to tell if he had desired to conceal the fact.

The defense, therefore, will be in a position to ask: "Should not this admission, given freely and voluntarily, be regarded as an indication of innocence rather than as an admission of guilt, as the detectives have considered it up to this time? Is a guilty man likely to tell the officers as soon as he is approached that he saw the girl and talked with her, when there is no need of such an admission?"

If the State attempts to show that the murder was committed between 12 and 1 o'clock Saturday afternoon, as one of the theories contends, the defense will be able to argue that there were several other people in the factory at the time, this fact opening the way to the argument that if the crime was committed at this time it need not have been Frank who did it, and to another argument that Frank would have been very unlikely to attack the girl when he knew there were other persons in the factory at the time who might discover him.

May Prove an Alibi.

Should the State seek to prove that the murder was committed in the evening, as the affidavits obtained from Mrs. Mima Fomby indicate may be done, the defense will be able to establish a very strong alibi for the suspected man from the testimony of seven persons who are said to have been at Frank's house Saturday evening playing a game of cards.

Several of them already have testified before the Coroner's jury, and all of them are said to be willing to give their testimony in court to the effect that they saw Frank come home that evening about the time he said in his statement to the Coroner's jury, and that he remained home the remainder of the evening, to the best of their knowledge.

This will bring it to an issue of veracity between Mrs. Mima Fomby and these seven persons, who are persons of reputation and standing in the community, if, indeed, the testimony of Mrs. Fomby is allowed admission, which appears very doubtful.

Mrs. Fomby swore in her affidavit that Frank called her on the telephone several times between 6:30 and 10:30 o'clock the Saturday night of the murder, asking her for permission to bring a girl to her place. She testified that she denied his request. It is between these hours that Frank has a very well established alibi from all appearances.

Another Motive Possible.

The defense also will be in a position to suggest that there might have been another motive for the crime than the one generally accepted. No physician has stated positively that he was certain of any conclusions from his examination of the body either immediately after the crime or at the times the body was exhumed. Added to this fact is the unexplained circumstance that the girl's purse never has been found. It contained only the wages she had drawn that day, to be sure, but even this small amount might prove an incentive to some persons, the defense very likely will argue. And it is not at all certain that the robber, if robbery was the motive, had any idea that the amount he would obtain would be so small.

"Is it probable that Frank would have taken the trouble to hide the girl's purse when it could not have incriminated in any way any particular persons had it been lying near her body?" is a question that can be put to the jurors in this connection.

The defense also will fight against the introduction of much of the character testimony that was permitted to go before the Coroner's jury. Frank's attorneys will attack the identification of Frank made by Officer House, of Druid Hills Park, on the grounds of its utter improbability.

Will Attack Officer.

They will question the ability of House to identify a man he has seen only once and after a lapse of two years. They will attack the probabilities of a man of Frank's standing permitting himself to be seen in company with a girl in short skirts.

They will question the probability of his admitting his identity to the officer and saying, "I am Leo Frank, superintendent of the National Pencil Factory," when his main concern naturally would have been to keep his identity secret. Probabilities are bound to play a large part in the trial, declare those interested in the mystery, for it is very much on a sequence of probabilities that the police are basing their expectations of convicting Frank.

Even should the State be able to prove beyond a doubt that it was Frank whom the park guard discovered in company with a young girl two years ago, the defense will still be able to say that this fact no more connects Frank with the murder than it does hundreds of other persons.

The announcement of the detectives themselves that they do not place implicit confidence in the so-called confession of the negro, James Conley, makes it unlikely that the trial will have anything to do with his statement that he wrote notes at the dictation of Frank the day before the murder.

Sentell May Yet Be Witness.

Laying aside the possibility of a premeditated murder, which no one had even suggested up to the time of the negro's alleged confession, the friends of Frank, and those who are without personal interest as well, scouted the idea that Frank, who is an intelligent and shrewd man, would take an ignorant negro into his confidence and do everything but tell him that he was going to commit a murder on the next day.

It is rumored that E. L. Sentell may yet figure in the case again. Sentell is the man who declared positively before the Coroner's jury that he saw Mary Phagan shortly before midnight the night of the murder. Sentell knew Mary Phagan from infancy. He said that he could not be mistaken in her identification. He testified that he met her on the street in company with some man and that he said, "Hello, Mary," and that she replied, "Hello, Ed."

This testimony would appear quite conclusive were it not for the statements of the physicians that the girl must have been dead at least six hours when found. It is known, however, that some confidence is still being placed in his statements.

STYLES DEMAND RAPID CHANGE BY DANDIES

Paris Men of Fashion Are Forced to Jump From One Pair of Trousers to Another.

PARIS, May 27.—The dandies of Paris have daily been rehearsing of late on quick-change dress in order to be able to slip from one suit into another with lightning speed so as to waste the minimum of time in this way during the height of the season.

The decrees of masculine fashion, which in recent years have become as inexorable as the requirements of feminine modes, are unusually Draconian this year. Even in the hottest weather it will not be permissible to appear in the streets wearing white flannels after 11 o'clock in the morning.

After lounging at his ease for an hour or so the well-dressed man must rush home and jump into a pair of neatly checked trousers. This garment which, as in the case of all the other trousers, the valet must iron out with sharply defined creases every morning, hangs broadest and loosest from the waist. With this may go a tobacco-colored business coat with narrow lapels, and a silk hat.

For the Afternoon Call.

This suit does for a stroll in the Bois, but after luncheon the dandy with calls to pay makes a second quick change. This time he dons a pair of well-creased chimney-pot trousers with faint stripes, and a cutaway coat, skin-tight. The latter must have a long tail, closely following the shape of the figure and bulging nowhere.

In the hottest weather the waistcoat may be dispensed with on the sole condition that the coat be unbuttoned and a white slip be worn sewed into the inner side of the lapel to give the similitude of a waistcoat.

If one is going to the races white flannel trousers may be worn with this coat, but not if attending receptions.

Both morning and afternoon coats are built up so as to give the man the appearance of being deep-chested and broad-shouldered, so tailors are now laying in a liberal supply of padding material.

Snuff-Colored Evening Dress.

The evening style runs in the direction of broad trousers. Again the striking feature, however, is the coat, which is a transparent imitation of the women's "jupe fourreau." The back and the tail, which fall below the knees, cling tightly to the body, and must fall in graceful curves not only behind but also in front. Black cloth is the evening wear, although colors are permitted this year, the choice mostly going to snuff-colored evening dress.

Terra-cotta colored handkerchiefs are also a feature of men's spring fashions.

Paris tailors have entered a campaign against London's supremacy in the matter of men's wear, and this year's fashions are designed with the object of persuading Americans to fit themselves out in Paris instead of in the British capital.

Morgan Firm Denies Attack on President

WASHINGTON, May 27.—A prompt repudiation of the anti-administration interview attributed to Henry P. Davison, of the firm of J. P. Morgan & Co. in Paris, has been received at the State Department.

This interview, attacking both President Wilson and Secretary of State Bryan, was cabled to a New York newspaper some days ago and was alleged to represent the ultimatum of Wall Street to the United States Government.

Cripple Run Down By Cyclist Is Dying

MACON, GA., May 27.—Edward Green, a cripple of Monticello, Ga., who was struck by a motorcycle yesterday afternoon as he was being wheeled across Mulberry street, is expected to die.

W. J. Radcliff, of Atlanta, was trying out a new motorcycle, preparatory to starting on a ride to Norfolk, Va., when the collision took place. He is under arrest.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

GOOD BILL AT FORSYTH.

Old favorites and new join in the bill at the Forsyth this week—and an unusually good bill it is, too. Every act is a topnotcher of its kind and there's variety enough for every one.

Maggie Cline, by struggling along some way, it seems, has been able to miss Atlanta for nineteen years. But she's here this week, and although the younger generation is not on right close speaking terms with her at first she soon warms the house and gets one of her "regular" old-time receptions. She sings the good old Irish stuff in the way that made her famous many years ago, and for good measure gives her greatest hit of the olden days, "Throw 'Im Down, McCloskey," which brings down the upper part of the house as of yore.

Among the other splendid numbers on the bill are Ethel Kirk and Billy Fogarty, who have a high-class song and patter act; Carl Rosine, a magician who doesn't bore you as you think he is going to; the great Howard, a ventriloquist, who has an entirely new line of stuff and puts it over in a novel way; Cesare Nesi, a splendid singer who warbles under the title of "Young Caruso," and does not libel the great and only tenor to any extent; Madden and Fitzpatrick, in a clever sketch in which Madden does some original piano playing, and the Equilli brotherz, equilibrists who really are different. Of course, there are the motion pictures.

"ST. ELMO" SATISFACTORY.

Miss Billy Long and her company began a week's engagement Monday at the Atlanta in "St. Elmo," presenting the old Southern book play as acceptably as it can be played.

The play is a selection from six offered the patrons of the Atlanta, and the strength of the company lent itself admirably to the play.

Mr. Vail as St. Elmo Murray, the cynic, played the part forcibly and sympathetically. Miss Long's part, Edna Earl, was almost negligible, but was well handled.

"St. Elmo" will be seen nightly and Wednesday and Saturday matinees.

"THE RESURRECTION" AT GRAND

Blanche Walsh, one of the few American actresses who deserves the name of tragedienne, will be seen in Atlanta this week in her most famous role, that of Katusha in Tolstoy's wonderful drama, "The Resurrection."

It is a picture play which brings Blanche Walsh and the Russian play to the Grand this week, and the photo-drama will begin Thursday morning at 10 o'clock and continue until 10:30 o'clock that evening, with repetitions on Friday and Saturday. The prices will range from 10 to 25 cents.

Accepting the gift in a few words, Captain Cook ordered the camp to fall in, and the veterans marched to the station to entrain for the scenes of their combat of 50 years ago.

FLAGLER AND SON ESTRANGED TEN YEARS

Share of Youth in $60,000,000 Estate of Oil Magnate Is Conjectural.

NEW YORK, May 27.—Much interest is expressed by men of financial affairs as to the part Harry Harkness Flagler will play in the disposition of the great fortune of his father, Henry M. Flagler, estimated to be more than $60,000,000. Harry Harkness Flagler is 42 years old. He has been connected but little with the work of his father either in the Standard Oil Company or in the great development plans carried on in Florida.

It was said by men who have had close acquaintance with the Flagler affairs that the son and the father had been estranged for a long period, and that for ten years they had not spoken until the day before Flagler died, when the younger man arrived at Palm Beach from Europe in time to see his father alive.

Harry Harkness Flagler, though a man of acknowledged business capacity, never has engaged in business. He has kept singularly aloof from the affairs of the Standard Oil Company. He never showed interest in the Florida railroad and hotel projects of his father, so far as is known. At the age of 22, with a large career in business before him if he chose, it was regarded as doubtful that he ever would go into business.

His temperament is artistic and his nature is one of excessive delicacy. It is said that as a child he preferred to play with girls rather than with boys.

It was held yesterday that a possible reason for the trusteeing of the Flagler estate lay in the divergence of interests of the son and the father. It was conjectured that the elder Flagler decided that his plans for further development of Florida, which it is believed he caused to be drawn up when he was ill, could be carried out better under the direction of trustees in close association with his life activities than in any other way.

The younger Flagler is a Columbia University man of the class of 1894. He is a son of Flagler's first wife, who was a member of the Standard Oil family of Harkness. He married Miss Anna Lamont in 1898.

ULM URGES PENAL REFORM FOR POOR

Governor's Executive Secretary Declares Present System Penalizes Poverty.

Major A. H. Ulm, executive secretary and ex-officio pardon attorney to Governor Brown, has given out an interview strongly commending the proposed efforts of the Georgia Prison Association to bring about healthy changes in the Georgia criminal laws and prison system.

"A person changed with misdemeanor is given the option of paying a fine or going to the chaingang," said Major Ulm. "Under our procedure, if he goes to the gang, he can not later change his mind and pay the fine. Many prisoners at time of sentence are unable to communicate with friends or relatives in time to pay the fine.

Must Appeal to Governor.

"The only way he can avail himself of the privilege of a money payment is by appealing to the Governor for clemency. If he pay an agent to attend to that routine, which we are compelled to enforce, nine times out of ten he will be forced to serve out the sentence.

"This amounts to penalizing poverty and misfortune. The State law on the subject should be the same as municipal laws, by which prisoners may pay, without bother and expense, the pro rata portion of the fine not worked out any time while serving the sentence.

Urges Suspended Sentences.

"Judges should be permitted to suspend sentences, with some form of probation, in all misdemeanor and, under wise restriction, in some felony cases, as that of a youth arraigned for the first time on a technical case of burglary.

"The State is in need of some form of indeterminate sentence. The parole law partly suffices, as it is intended to do, but it does not fill the need.

"Better provision also should be made for carrying out our present parole law. Virtually no funds are provided for investigating meritorious cases or for inspecting and supervising the conduct of those paroled."

Eisenfeldt Case Is Postponed 30 Days

WIDE INTEREST IN PIANO CAMPAIGN

Hundreds Interested in Club Offer Made by the Weatherholt Company.

Seldom has an advertising campaign in Atlanta caused such widespread interest as that inaugurated Sunday in The American by the Weatherholt Piano Company, 72 North Broad Street.

The double-page advertisement, followed by a page in The Georgian yesterday afternoon announcing the sale of 400 player-pianos through a cooperative club of 400 members, has caused crowds of interested persons to visit the Weatherholt store.

Although the membership books do not open until to-morrow, many insisted upon selecting player-pianos in advance of enrolling. In anticipation of just such a rush, T. E. Weatherholt, president of the Weatherholt Company, made arrangements with the factory several weeks ago. These arrangements, together with thorough co-operation on the part of the railroads, have resulted in carloads of player-pianos arriving at the Weatherholt building.

This is the first time that player-pianos have ever been offered in this section to the public through cooperative club buying, and the reasonable price and the attractive terms of $10 down and $2.50 per week have awakened interest to an unusual degree.

Mr. Weatherholt selected a player-piano worth $650 for his club offer, and because of the tremendous purchasing power of the 400 club members, he was enabled to get them at a price which made the offer of $488.50 and at the attractive terms possible.

A corps of expert demonstrators at the Weatherholt store shows visitors how easily these player-pianos may be operated.

Among many other attractive features, the Weatherholt club offer includes twelve rolls of player music, with the privilege of exchanging them daily, if desired, for any other music in the Weatherholt library of 5,000 rolls.

WIRE TROUBLE DID NOT FEAZE CUPID

Romance, Shattered After Eight-Dollar Phone Conversation, Ends in Marriage.

A romance that began in an Atlanta moving picture show, gained in strength at a New York motorcycle track, stood firm amid the vicissitudes of a theatrical career, and was broken off last week in an eight-dollar telephone conversation between Atlanta and Jacksonville, culminated in marriage Monday night, is being recounted to-day by friends of Miss Lena Quinn, a former Atlanta girl, who lives in Fitzgerald.

Miss Quinn is now the wife of Jack Morley, of Kansas City, who claims to be a moforcycle rider here for the races at Jack Prince's motordome. The wedding took place at the bride's home in Fitzgerald. They probably will return to Atlanta.

Mr. Morley came to Atlanta with his motorcycle last week, and several days ago Miss Quinn called him over long distance telephone from Jacksonville, where she has been spending the winter. Just what was said over the phone during the thirteen mintues conversation is unknown, but after it was over Mr. Morley flatly refused to pay the $8 telephone tolls and declared furthermore that his romance was shattered for good.

Miss Quinn, however, refused to have her romance shattered. She boarded the first train and arrived in Atlanta Monday morning. A reconciliation was soon effected.

Dr. Vaughan Defends Prison Treatment

Charges that prisoners in the Fulton County camps have been inhumanly treated are vigorously denied by the Rev. E. L. Vaughan, convict chaplain. Dr. Vaughan's prison work covers a period of 33 years, a score in direct touch with Fulton County prisoners.

"Especially," said Dr. Vaughan, "are these charges unjust in connection with Captain Tom Donaldson. I never have known him to be other than considerate.

"I do not believe there ever has been a prisoner punished in Fulton County unless he deserved it."

ROOSEVELT DENIES EVER BEING DRUNK IN HIS LIFE

dent of the United States in 1900; his succession to the White House in 1901 when President McKinley was assassinated, and his election to the Presidency in 1904.

Colonel Roosevelt then testified as follows:

Q. What did you do on the expiration of your term in 1909?—A. I went to Africa as special curator for the Smithsonian Institution and spent several months there in research work. Returning home, I became connected with the "Outlook."

Q. Where were you in October, 1912?—A. What part of that month? Cite an incident to remind me.

Q. Have you ever seen this paper?—(The colonel was shown a copy of The Ishpeming Iron Ore.) A. Yes, in October, 1912.

Copy of Paper Admitted.

Q. Where were you?—A. In Mercy Hospital.

Q. What city? (Attorney Belden objected. The court overruled the objection and allowed an exception.) A. In Chicago.

Q. Why were you there?—A. I had been shot.

Q. In what city?—A. In Milwaukee.

(Attorney Pound here introduced a copy of the paper in evidence and it was admitted without objection.)

Q. How did you feel when you read the editorial, "The Roosevelt Way?"—A. I was very indignant.

At this point Attorney Pound read the editorial, stating that action was based on the following:

What Caused the Suit.

Theodore Roosevelt is the only one that can call people liars, rascals and thieves. If any one calls him names he roars terribly, yet he is a pretty good liar himself. Roosevelt lies and curses in a most disgusting manner. He gets drunk, too, and that not infrequently, and all his intimates know about it.

Q. Have you ever been drunk?—A. I have never in my life been drunk or in the slightest degree under the influence of liquor.

Q. What use do you make of liquor?—A. I do not drink either whisky or brandy, save as I shall hereafter say, or under the direction of a doctor. I don't drink beer—I do not like it. I do sometimes drink light wines. I have never drunk a high ball or cocktail in my life, but sometimes I have drunk a mint julep. There was a bed of mint in the White House yard. Perhaps I drank half a dozen of them a year.

Q. All at one time?

Judge Commands Order.

There was laughter and Judge Flannigan interrupted sternly.

"If there is any further demonstration the sheriff will clear the court room. I will not have any disorder. Understand that."

A. Never but one mint julep at a time. I doubt very much if I drank over half a dozen in the seven years I was in the White House. In the four years since that time I have had two mint juleps—one at the Cincinnati Country Club and one in Arkansas from a loving cup. At dinner or at banquets I occasionally drink one or two glasses of light wine or champagne. I drink it publicly and openly.

Q. In the White House were there given so-called diplomatic dinners?—A. Yes, and there was served and I drank openly wine or champagne, one or two glasses of champagne. At state dinners, diplomatic dinners, at my dinners to my Cabinet, light wines and champagne were served. They were kept in the White House. I would not usually drink while alone, and it was not usually served unless there were guests. If there were guests, light wine was served and I would frequently drink one or two glasses. If there were diplomatic guests there would be champagne. I would drink about the same amount.

Drinks Brandy for Fever.

Q. Now as to the instruction of the doctor to which you referred, will you explain it?—A. Yes. During the Cuban campaign I had the Cuban fever and since that time I have had recurring attacks of it. These attacks usually come as the result of over-exertion, and at the direction of Surgeon Rixey I have occasionally used brandy in teaspoonful doses to check it. I had a severe attack of this illness while in Africa and had prepared for it by having a supply of brandy along.

I also had such attacks while in the Rocky Mountains and several touches of it during the political campaigns in which I made speeches. Usually brandy was taken along in case of need and there was champagne in my private car for the use of members of the party that used it.

I made it a rule never to drink anything at all during the day while on these trips and rarely anything at any time. What I did take on such trips was invariably on the advice of my physician, who always accompanied me.

Attorney Andrews for the defense conducted the cross-examination. He asked Colonel Roosevelt if he was paying the expenses of the prosecution of the libel suit against Editor Newett, or if the Progressive party were bearing it.

Colonel Roosevelt shouted his denial that any one except himself was paying. Sight of the colonel displaying his feelings caused a commotion among those in the court room, and Judge Flannigan ordered a bailiff to rap for order. The direct examination then continued.

Q. Are you a teetotaler or a prohibitionist?

An objection was overruled.

A. I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky, and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Q. Describe yourself as to your use of intoxicating liquors.—A. I am not a total abstainer, but am very abstemious, perhaps it would aid you to understand that if I were to describe the routine of my life at the White House.

Q. Yes; please do so.—A. I usually rose rather early and had breakfast with the members of my family. For twenty minutes I would walk in the White House grounds, often with one of the children or some member of my Cabinet. From my walk I would go directly to my office, where Secretary Loeb and I would go through the mail and receive Senators, Representatives and diplomatic officers. Unless I had shaved myself, I would be shaved by the barber in the room between my office and Mr. Loeb's. I was very busy, and it was necessary to save every minute of time, so I would dictate letters or talk to some callers while being shaved.

No Drinks Before Luncheon.

I would then be busy with conferences and correspondence until lunch time. Then I would wash my face and hands and walk down the terrace to the White House, where I would have lunch with my family. Never under any circumstances did I touch a drop of liquor of any kind before luncheon. If we lunched alone there was rarely any liquor, but if there were guests there would be served either light wine or champagne, and in either case I would usually drink one or two glasses of that.

After luncheon I would return to my office and be busy with my mail and callers until 4 o'clock. At that hour I went for a walk or ride, frequently with some member of my Cabinet. I would walk or ride until 6, when I returned to the White House. I would spend a half hour with the children, and then would bathe and dress for dinner.

At dinner there were usually guests, and wine was usually served. Occasionally I drank a glass or two. After dinner I either returned to my office or had Mr. Loeb in my library, where we went over mail and worked on messages and the like. About midnight I would read for twenty minutes some book to take my mind off public business. Then I would go to sleep. Dr. Rixey usually was in to see me at bedtime.

Q. When you was mustered out of the army, what was your rank?

Attorney Belden: We object. That is irrelevant.

Court: It is relevant to show the plaintiff's position.

A. I was acting brigade commander, and was recommended to be brevetted a brigadier general.

Didn't Drink on Trips.

Q. Now, what were your drinking habits while on speaking trips?—A. I never drank anything during the day, and never anything at any time except on the advice of Dr. Rixey or my throat specialist, Dr. Curtis. After a hard day I often took one or two glasses of milk with a teaspoonful of brandy in each. Then I would read twenty minutes, see Dr. Rixey and go to sleep. I would sleep soundly to feel clear in the morning.

Q. When you speak of a hard day, just what do you mean?—A. I mean a long journey and many speeches, or either. Many of those trips were very exhausting, and that was the reason Dr. Rixey accompanied me. When you are President you can not be ill, and a President's work must go on, regardless.

Here the direct examination ended, and Horace Andrews, of Cleveland, Ohio, began the cross-examination.

Q. You are not a resident of Michigan?—A. No, sir; I have always been a resident of the State and city of New York, although ever since I was a boy I have usually spent a few summer months in the country. As a boy my time in the country was usually on a farm or country place of my father's.

Q. Then your visits to Michigan have been flying trips?—A. They have usually been brief trips.

Enumerates His Friends.

Q. Do you know anybody in Marquette County?—A. I know several people; Mr. Shiras best of all.

Q. You know that Mr. Shiras is not really a resident of Marquette; that he lives in the East and only spends his summers here?—A. I know that he is frequently away during the winter on natural history work. As to his legal residence I can not speak.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette?—A. I know Mr. Hill there.

Q. Mr. Hill of your counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Just met him since you hired him as your lawyer, did you not?—A. I think I met him last summer.

Q. Think? Don't you know?—A. I don't remember certainly.

Q. Who else do you know in Marquette County?—A. I have met a number of people at various times.

Q. And have promptly forgotten them, eh?—A. No, sir, but when one meets so many people one can't always recall names unless one is reminded by seeing the person.

Q. Ah, I see. Do you see any reminiscent faces in the court room?—A. No, sir.

Q. Your entire life has been given mostly to politics, has it not?—A. I should not say that. I would say that, previous to the Spanish war, I was as much of a naturalist and historian and writer as anything else.

Q. As President you met Senators and entertained them and were invited to their homes—is that not true?—A. I knew every Senator and entertained all of them at the White House. I was rarely invited to their houses.

Q. And you met members of Congress and received them at your house, did you not?—A. I knew every Representative in Congress and received all who called.

Q. And in traveling you attended many banquets given in your honor, did you not?—A. I attended some banquets.

Q. Where liquor was served?—A. Yes, certainly, where liquor was served.

Q. Yet, in all the fifteen years you have been in politics you have never drank anything except a little brandy and milk?—A. I did not say that.

Q. Just so, now as to the wines that you speak of as light wines, just what kind of wines were those?—A. Light white wines, California wines or Sauternes; once in a while I took a little Madeira.

Q. Is that all?—A. Once in a while a bit of sherry; I never drink red wines.

Q. Oh, you will swear that you have never tasted red wine?—A. No, certainly not. You know I did not mean that. What I mean is that I do not like red wines and that I never drink them. I do not mean that I have never tasted them. Probably I have and probably when they have been passed I have touched the glass to my lips.

Q. Do you keep wine, brandy and whisky in your house?—A. Yes, sir, all three.

Q. Did you keep liquor in the White House?—A. Yes. I kept the stock left me by Mr. McKinley.

Mr. Andrews: "I move the last part of that answer be stricken out as not responsive to my question."

Mr. Pound: "I think it is competent to show that he merely continued a custom already established."

Shows Signs of Anger.

The Court: "It is proper to show that if he will answer it in the way you indicate."

Mr. Roosevelt: "Then may I revise my answer?"

Mr. Andrews: "Certainly you may amend it, Mr. Roosevelt, if you can not wish to answer it directly or would be embarrassed to do so."

Mr. Roosevelt: "I can and will answer it directly."

The former president showed signs of anger.

A. I did keep wine, whisky and brandy of several kinds in the White House, as my predecessor had done before me, and as President Cleveland and President Garfield and others had done.

Q. And is it true that you kept two butlers to take care of this stock of liquors?—A. It is true that I kept two butlers, but they took care of the wines merely as an incident to their employment.

Q. Do you know Mr. Wallace, National Committeeman of the Progressive Party in Michigan?—A. I do.

Q. Did he institute this prosecution, this suit?—A. I don't know.

Q. What? You don't know who started this important piece of litigation for you?—A. I was in Mercy Hospital when it started and I can not say.

Again Denies Knowledge.

Q. Did Mr. Wallace have anything to do with filing it?—A. I could not say.

Q. It was reported in newspaper interviews that he had started this suit on your behalf. Did you see those interviews or articles?—A. Not that I am able to recall.

Q. Have you borne all the expense of this suit personally, the cost of finding and summoning witnesses and bringing them here and taking depositions and the like?—A. I have borne all the expense.

Q. Was not a portion of that expense borne by the Progressive party of Michigan or by the Progressive national committee?—A. It was not. I paid everything.

Colonel's Voice Squeaked.

Colonel Roosevelt was thoroughly angry now, his face flushed, his voice squeaked and he clenched his fists and half rose from the chair.

Q. Would you know it if any expense in this suit were borne by any person other than yourself?—A. I certainly would, and it has all been borne by myself.

Mr. Andrews announced that this completed the cross-examination.

Mr. Pound, on redirect examination, asked two questions, both designed to bring out the fact that Colonel Roosevelt was paying the expenses of the prosecution.

Q. This suit was brought by your direction, was it not, at your expense?—A. It was.

Q. Did the Progressive party or any branch of its organization or any of its officers or workers or any other persons at any time contribute anything to the expense of this suit?—A. No, I bore the entire expense myself.

Pledged Speaker's Health.

Q. Tell us about Speaker Cannon's birthday party.—A. I drank a glass of champagne on that occasion in pledging the Speaker's birthday health.

Defense Scores "Eulogy."

"Hunting exploits and public acts are improper in an opening statement," was the objection raised by Attorney Belden, representing Newett, to the opening address of Attorney Pounds for Colonel Roosevelt. Two minutes after Judge Flannagan overruled his objection he was again on his feet, protesting against the statement which, he declared, was "an oration—a eulogy."

Judge Flannagan again refused to check Attorney Pounds' address, but ruled that the defense might save their objection. When Pounds, however, referred to the time when "this plaintiff was in power," the court upheld the objection of the defense and ordered Pounds to confine his remarks to a statement of what he intended to prove. The defense announced it would defer making a statement until after taking of testimony.

Before court session began, Judge Flannagan ordered all the witnesses on both sides out of the room. No person connected with the case was admitted to the court room during the trial, except the principals, their attorneys and the witness who was on the stand.

T. R. Inclines To Champagne

Defending himself against a charge of drunkenness, Colonel Roosevelt gives the following as an epitome of his drinking customs:

I am neither a teetotaler nor a prohibitionist. I never drink beer, ale, stout, porter or any malt liquors. I do not like them. Frequently when I am a guest I am invited to drink beer or drink whisky and I always, if I take anything, take a light wine or champagne instead.

Hill's Market Basket Bond Sale a Success

ST. PAUL, May 27.—James J. Hill's plan of selling city bonds in certificates of $10 each through the Northwestern Trust Company was a big success to-day. Men and women were waiting at an early hour for the company's office to open, and a steady stream filed in and out all morning.

The officers were prepared and began to issue receipts for the money promptly. One hundred and seven small investors bought a total of $10,000 worth of certificates up to noon.

MEN AND RELIGION BULLETIN NO. 57

Atlanta Upholds Chief Beavers

The "Itching Palm" And The Character Assassin Have No Place Here.

The itching palm.

Judas Iscariot had it.

Thirty pieces of silver upon his hand, and Judas betrayed his Lord.

Poor Judas, learning too late the curse of the itching palm, threw away the money and killed himself in shame and sorrow.

Notwithstanding itching palms are here to-day.

And again and again would they betray Christ, our saviour, and rear for him a cross.

Their pay coming from the betrayal of girls matters not to them.

If they get their hire, they care not that their success would mean the dishonoring of motherhood, the blinding of babies, and the spreading of disease, insanity and death among innocent children and women.

These they ignore with a sneering curse.

But you do not; you care and understand; you recall.

Annually seven hundred thousand dollars and more poured through the white slave market of Atlanta into the itching palm.

The lie of segregation so prospered seven houses that their reputed owners received forty-three thousand and seventy-four dollars in the form of rent every year, more than twice as much as the rental of thirty-three other houses scattered throughout the city.

Chief Beavers closed them all and ended the ghastly farce of segregation.

Eight months have passed and the owners of the itching palm have become frantic.

For eight months the "unbreakable bank of the corrupt politicians" has been hampered by the honesty of a man whose palms will not itch.

How much have the owners of the houses and the liquor dealers lost?

Eight months is two-thirds of a year; two-thirds of seven hundred thousand dollars is four hundred and sixty-six thousand, six hundred and sixty dollars and sixty-six cents.

How their palms do itch!

And they have despaired of corrupting the Chief.

They have to get rid of him, if they ever open again their market with its unspeakable pimps and procurers plying their trade of debauching girls.

IS THIS CONNECTED WITH THE RECENT STUDIED EFFORT TO DISCREDIT THE CHIEF AND ATLANTA'S POLICE DEPARTMENT IN THE EYES OF THE WORLD?

Consider this before you answer.

Incorruptibility is not inefficiency.

And an unwillingness to violate one's oath—a refusal to let criminals live upon the shame of women is no evidence that a man is incompetent to be Chief of Atlanta's Police Force.

Hence the plight of protected vice and its servants.

THEY CANNOT CORRUPT; HENCE, THEY SEEK TO RUIN WITH LIES.

Their itching palms know not how to labor honestly, though they are skilled in squeezing money from helpless fallen women, their "meal tickets."

Being hungry, they snarl and snap.

God pity them and open their eyes to their unutterable degradation!

The outside world is pointing to the fearless honesty of our Chief of Police and the efficient way in which he is handling the most difficult of all city problems.

And in this age of graft he will not be sacrificed to put into office a dishonest man satisfactory to the owners of brothels and bars and their henchmen.

Never!

AND ATLANTA WILL REMEMBER FOR FUTURE RECKONING THOSE MEN, IN OR OUT OF OFFICE, WHO TRY TO HAMPER THE CHIEF AS HE DOES HIS DUTY.

Recall the itching palms of the servants of protected vice and be on your guard.

"A lie turned loose put Christ on the Cross." Nail their lies!

Note those who are trying by the most foul of all means, character assassination, to bring back upon Atlanta the disgrace of a traffic which demands for its existence the sacrifice of innocent girls.

For the day of accounting is coming.

Vice is fighting to regain the privilege of making dirty dollars by defiling women.

Chief Beavers is battling for decency and health, the welfare of our families and your loved ones.

He does not fight alone. You are with him.

Thank God! You are awake and watching.

Chief Beavers and his men will be upheld by Atlanta.

The World of Society

MRS. WILTON DARGAN entertained twelve guests informally at luncheon Tuesday for Mrs. C. A. Wood, who will leave soon to spend the summer at Toxaway.

The luncheon was given at the Piedmont Driving Club. The table, placed in the green room of the club, was decorated with vivid red poppies, arranged in a tall silver vase. The place cards bore medish hand-painted figures of up-to-date ladies.

Mrs. Dargan wore wistaria canton crepe, with a hat of black maline.

Banquet to Bridegroom.

A banquet was tendered Mr. P. W. Wilcox in honor of his approaching marriage to Miss Katherine Rawlings, of Druid Hills, by the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, in a private dining room at the Kimball House Monday evening. The dining room was decorated in palms and ferns. The table, with a floral centerpiece down its length, was attractive. The menu of seven or eight courses was interspersed with toasts and speeches.

Mr. J. B. Cleveland, president of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, presented a handsome gold watch to Mr. Wilcox, who is secretary and treasurer of the company. The presentation was in behalf of the company. The watch bore as an inside inscription:

"To Mr. P. W. Wilcox, from his friends and associates of the Cleveland-Manning Piano Company, May 28, 1913."

In presenting the watch, Mr. Cleveland made a witty talk on "Time," the gist of his remarks being the wish that "Every time you look at the watch to learn the time, may you think of the fine time you've had tonight and may you always have a good time and a good timepiece."

The company included Messrs. J. B. Cleveland, Harold S. Holmes, P. W. Wilcox, George Lamkin, W. M. Adams, W. M. Taylor, R. T. Skinner, Jr., C. R. Stone, J. H. Lamb, A. G. Cooper, T. W. Newbern, Fred Ball and T. C. Callaway.

An interesting feature will be the appearance of the little grandchildren of Joel Chandler Harris, who will take part in the coronation ceremonies. They are LeRose Wagener and Chandler Harris, who will act as flower girl and canopy bearer.

There will be amusements on the grounds in the way of a fishing pond, lemonade well, candy and cake booth and the honey tree, thimble finger well, home of Miss Meaders and the girls, and other specialties.

"Br'er Rabbit" and "Br'er B'ar" will be at the festival, and maybe, if the visitors look around among the lovely flowers and trees at the Wren's Nest and Snap Bean Farm, they can catch a glimpse of Uncle Remus and the little Boy who made Mr. Harris' writing so dear to children all over the world.

Cars will leave the city at all hours, so that everybody can get to the festival and have a good time.

Mrs. Brevard Montgomery, who originated the first May Festival at the Wren's Nest, has charge of the entertainment this year.

Woman's Beauty Is Based on Health

To Have Health, Bowel Movement Is Absolutely Necessary---How Best to Obtain it.

If woman's beauty depended upon cosmetics every woman would be a picture of loveliness. But beauty lies deeper than that. It lies in health. In the majority of cases the basis of health, and the cause of sickness, can be traced to the action of the bowels.

The headaches, the lassitude, the sallow skin and the lusterless eyes are usually due to constipation. So many things that women do habitually conduce to this trouble. They do not eat carefully, they eat indigestible foods because the foods are served daintily and they do not exercise enough. But whatever the particular cause may be, it is important that the condition should be corrected.

An ideal remedy for women, and one especially suited to their delicate requirements, is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which thousands of women endorse highly. Mrs. Jennie Snedeker, 1041 West Monroe Street, Chicago, testifies that she is "cured of grave stomach and bowel troubles by using Syrup Pepsin and without the aid of a doctor or any other medicine." All the family can use Syrup Pepsin, for thousands of mothers give it to babies and children. It is also admirably suited to the requirements of elderly people, in fact, to all who, by reason of age or infirmity, can not stand harsh salts, cathartics, pills or purgatives. These should always be avoided, for, at best, their effect is only for that day, while a genuine remedy like Syrup Pepsin acts mildly but permanently.

MRS. JENNIE SNEDEKER.

It can be conveniently obtained at any drug store at fifty cents or one dollar a bottle. Results are always guaranteed or money will be refunded. You will find it gentle in action, pleasant in taste, and free from griping, and its tonic properties have a distinct value to women. It is the most widely used laxative-tonic in America to-day and thousands of families are now never without it.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 517 Washington Street, Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

ODE.

This is an ode to men of great renown;
An ode to men who laugh and say;
"Pooh! Pooh!"
An ode to men who hold a great game down
And snap their fingers, saying:
"That for you!"
This is an ode to those who laugh and say
"Old P. T. Barnum had the proper dope.
Those rummies will be with us every day
And pay their kale and sit there full of hope."
I love to hear the wallop of the bat
And see the pill go bounding down the dell,
But when a lot of guys grow rich and fat
And then they rub it in—O whatthehel!

Jake Daubert has been suspended for three days. Jake Daubert is a member of the Brooklyn team, which has been winning too many games for the good of the National League.

Tom Jones says he will bet $10,000 on Jess Willard if said Jess Willard fights Gunboat Smith again. Mr. Jones shows his business acumen by speaking thus. It would cost him at least $7.50 to hire a hall.

Not that we care to queer an honest man's business, but our idea of obtaining money under false pretenses is to manage Jess Willard.

Ed Walsh threatens to teach the spitball by mail. Various batters in the American League would give half their year's salaries if Ed would only deliver his spitball by mail.

AS J. EVERS MIGHT SAY.

I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.
I could not, even in a pinch.
In fact, it is a lead pipe cinch
I do not love you, Thomas Lynch.

BRANNIGAN HANDS M'CUE FIRST DEFEAT OF CAREER

MILWAUKEE, WIS., May 27.—Matty McCue, variously known as the Racine terror, the Wisconsin whirlwind and the Racine wonder, is to-day simply plain McCue, for all the terror and whirlwind and wonder were punched out of him by Patsy Brannigan, of Pittsburg. It was McCue's first defeat, but it was decisive all along the ten-round route.

JUNE 6 TO SEE FIRST RACE AT MOTORDROME

WITH a band concert announced for Sunday and with the date for the opening set for Friday night, June 6, and with the board motordrome at the old circus grounds pretty well finished, Atlanta's season of motorcycle racing in the "giant washtub" is closing in.

And you get the idea of what is going to happen from the expression "racing in a giant washtub." That's exactly what it is like. Jack Prince's new track is little more—and no less—than a board track, set on edge. Instead of riding on the floor of the tub the racers hurtle around on the inside of the sides, like cockroaches on the kitchen wall, setting laws of gravity at naught and affording to the spectators the most spectacular form of racing the world has ever known.

Jack Prince really has a big offering for the Atlanta public. His track is the latest and best board track in the world. It represents the last word in the building of board tracks. Jack has gathered in Atlanta already the best motorcycle racers in the world. He has more on the way. He is erecting comfortable seats, every one of which commands a view of the big inclosure. He has engaged a band. He has arranged for a corking car service—a service that will take the patrons of the motordrome from Five Points to the track in barely more than five minutes. He has an attractive program for opening night. As a result he will be greeted by one of the largest gatherings that ever witnessed a motorcycle race in America.

Blood Bath Knocks Rheumatism

Remarkable Effects of a Remedy That Actually Irrigates the Entire Blood Supply.

It sounds queer to take a blood bath, but that is precisely the effect of a most remarkable remedy known as S. S. S. It has the peculiar action of soaking through the intestines directly into the blood. In five minutes its influence is at work in every artery, vein and tiny capillary. Every membrane, every organ of the body, every anunctory becomes in effect a filter to strain the blood of impurities. The stimulating properties of S. S. S. compel the skin, liver, bowels, kidneys, bladder to all work to the one end of casting out every irritating, every pain-inflicting atom of poison; it dissolves by irrigation all accumulations in the joints, dissolves acid accretions, renders them neutral and scatters those peculiar formations in the nerve centers that cause such mystifying and often baffling rheumatic pains.

And, best of all, this remarkable remedy is welcome to the weakest stomach. If you have drugged yourself until your stomach is nearly paralyzed, you will be astonished to find that S. S. S. gives no sensation but goes right to work. This is because it is a pure vegetable infusion, is taken naturally into your blood just as pure air is inhaled naturally into your lungs.

The great Swift Laboratory has spent millions of dollars in perfecting, producing and placing in the hands of the public this wonderful remedy. So give your blood a good bath with S. S. S., for it knocks the worst forms of rheumatism every time.

You can get it at any drug store at $1 per bottle. It is a standard remedy, recognized everywhere as the greatest blood specific ever discovered. If yours is a peculiar case and you desire expert advice, write to The Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift building, Atlanta, Ga.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

FOR HER SAKE, DO.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am twenty, and deeply in love with a girl of eighteen. She told me she loved me, and I love her, too, but some way I doubt her love. The other evening she attended a dance with a friend of mine after I asked her not to go. E. S. B.

Your attitude is one of fault-finding, and I not sure that the giving of your love to a woman means her happiness.

She says she loves you. Be grateful for that much and don't attempt to control her as if she were a child. If you can not be that generous, it will be a kindness to her to transfer your affections.

DON'T GO TO EXTREMES.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a girl 20 years old. A few young men would like to keep steady company with me but I always refuse because I do not seem to care for them much. Do you think I should accept just the same? I am so lonesome because I am always home, while the other girls have a good time. LONESOME.

Unless these men are objectionable to you, you must accept an occasional invitation, for it may be the means of meeting the man you will some day love. Don't get into the habit of isolation and consequent lonesomeness. It will grow on you.

FORGET YOURSELF.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:
I am a young man of twenty and have been keeping company with a young lady for the past six months. I love this young lady very much and would be thankful for your advice on how to win her. R. M.

Forget yourself in an effort to make her happy. Be considerate, agreeable, persistent; let her know you love her and are willing to devote your life to her.

Household Suggestions

Moths can be kept away from furs or clothes by putting a piece of linen damped in turpentine in drawers or wardrobes. This should be renewed once or twice during the year. Moths will never attack carpets and curtains which have been well sprinkled with salt.

A small box of brickdust with a cork in it kept at the side of the sink will be found most useful for taking stains from knives, cups and all kinds of china and enamel ware. If at hand at washing-up time it saves many an after cleaning.

A good cleaning paste for enameled baths, zinc pails, etc., is made of equal parts of shaved yellow soap, whiting and common soda, dissolved over the fire in the least possible amount of water required to keep it from burning.

To hang pictures on a plastered wall try dipping the nail into cold water before driving it into the wall. It will bite into the plaster if this is done, and will hold a heavy weight without loosening.

Silencing the Philosopher.

"Yes," remarked the philosopher; "deafness is indeed a terrible affliction. But in such cases nature, you know, always provides some compensation. At any rate, if a man is deficient in one sense, he usually has another abnormally developed. Now, I once knew a poor blind fellow whose sense of touch was positively uncanny. Really, it served him almost as well as eyes do a normal man."

"Sure," said the genial Irishman, who hitherto had taken no part in the discussion, "an' I've noticed that, too! There's a friend of mine, he's lame, poor chap, but he can get about almost as easily as you or I. True, one of his legs is short, but the other makes up for it by being three inches longer!"

A Popular Song

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

BY NELL BRINKLEY

Nell Brinkley Says

THEY call it "I LOVE YOU." The Kings of Babylon and the slaves by the river sang it with equal fervor. In faeryland they know it. Adam brought it home to Eve and sang it tirelessly. On the plaintive "ukulele" of soft-aired Hawaii they have played it since the isles were born. Steel and iron clad men of the rough days of chivalry caroled it to the maids they met from the broad backs of their dray horses. Cleopatra whined it in her honey-sweet voice to dull-witted Antony. In the backwoods of Tennessee they know it. In the gray, melancholy uplands of wild Thibet rough-haired youths whisper it to bead-strung slant eyed girls. In the hidden corner of the music room, screened in spikes of fruit blossoms, a smart young chap hums it to a girl who never twisted up her own hair in her life, and out in the country, in an orchard, on the top rail of a gray old worm fence, a boy in a blue "jumper" chants it to a girl in a pink sunbonnet shading her sun-browned cheeks. Oh, it's a popular song—everybody knows it and everybody always did know it.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"I guess we can find a way to have the marriage annulled, or whatever they do to marriages that don't take."

The brutal assurance of the man in thus referring to things that were sacred moved Dick to wrath.

"Don't you interfere," he said. His words were spoken softly but tensely.

Nevertheless, Burke held to the topic, but an indefinable change in his manner rendered it less offensive to the young man.

"Interfere! Huh!" he ejaculated, grinning broadly. "Why, that's what I'm paid to do. Listen to me, son. The minute you begin mixing up with crooks, you ain't in a position to give orders to any one. The crooks have got no rights in the eyes of the police. Just remember that."

He Was Not Listening.

The Inspector spoke the simple truth as he knew it from years of experience. The theory of the law is that a presumption of innocence exists until the accused is proven guilty. But the police are out of sympathy with such finical methods. With them, the crook is presumed guilty at the outset of whatever may be charged against him. If need be, there will be proof a-plenty against him—of the sort that the underworld knows to its sorrow.

But Dick was not listening. His thoughts were again wholly with the woman he loved, who, as the Inspector declared, had fled from him.

"Where's she gone in Chicago?"

Burke answered in his usual gruff fashion, but with a note of kindliness that was not without its effect on Dick.

"I'm no mind reader," he said. "But she's a swell little girl, all right. I've got to hand it to her for that. So, she'll probably stop at the Blackstone—that is, until the Chicago police are tipped off that she is in town."

Of a sudden, the face of the young man took on a totally different expression. Where before had been anger, now was a vivid eagerness. He went close to the Inspector, and spoke with intense seriousness.

"Burke," he said, pleadingly, "give me a chance. I'll leave for Chicago in the morning. Give me twenty-four hours' start before you begin hounding her."

The Inspector regarded the speaker searchingly. His heavy face was drawn in an expression of apparent doubt. Abruptly, then, he smiled acquiescence.

"Seems reasonable," he admitted.

But the father strode to his son.

"No, no, Dick," he cried. "You shall not go. You shall not go."

Burke, however, shook his head in remonstrance against Gilder's plea. His huge voice came booming, weightily impressive.

"Why not?" he questioned. "It's a fair gamble. And, besides, I like the boy's nerve."

Dick seized on the admission eagerly.

"And you'll agree?" he cried.

"Yes, I'll agree," the Inspector answered.

"Thank you," Dick said quietly.

But the father was not content. On the contrary, he went toward the two hurriedly, with a gesture of reproval.

"You shall not go, Dick," he declared, impetuously.

The Inspector shot a word of warning to Gilder in an aside that Dick could not hear.

"Keep still," he replied. "It's all right."

Dick went on speaking with a seriousness suited to the magnitude of his interests.

"You give me your word, Inspector," he said, "that you won't notify the police in Chicago until I've been there twenty-four hours?"

"I Don't Like It."

"You're on," Burke replied genially. "They won't get a whisper out of me until the time is up." He swung about to face the father, and there was a complete change in his manner. "Now, then, Mr. Gilder," he said briskly, "I want to talk to you about another little matter——"

Dick caught the suggestion, and interrupted quickly.

"Then I'll go." He smiled rather wanly at his father. "You know, Dad, I'm sorry, but I've got to do what I think is the right thing."

Burke helped to save the situation from the growing tenseness.

"Sure," he cried heartily; "sure you have! That's the best any of us can do." He watched keenly as the young man went out of the room. It was not until the door closed after Dick that he spoke. Then he dropped to a seat on the couch, and proceeded to make his confidence to the magnate.

"He'll go to Chicago in the morning, you think, don't you?"

"Certainly," Gilder answered. "But I don't like it."

Burke slapped his leg with an enthusiasm that might have broken a weaker member.

"Best thing that could have happened!" he vociferated. And then, as Gilder regarded him in astonishment, he added, chuckling: "You see, he won't find her there."

"Why do you think that?" Gilder demanded, greatly puzzled.

Burke permitted himself the luxury of laughing appreciatively a moment more before making his explanation. Then he said quietly:

Little Bobbie's Pa

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

THARE was two ladies up to the house last nite. Both of them has daughters wich is jest going to git married & that maiks them feel kind of love sick themselfs, I guess, beekaus that is all that thay did all the time thay was to the house, talk about love. Pa dident like it a bit, beekaus both of the ladies was oalder than he is, & I have offen herd Pa say that wimmen shud talk about other topicks than love wen thay git middel aged, topicks like church work or how much life insurance thare husbands is going to leave them when thay die.

One of the ladies was naimed Missus Raymond & the other was Missus Belcher. Missus Raymond sed to Pa:

"Don't Cry," Said Ma.

I was jest telling your wife beefoar you caim in the room how sweet & innocent & gurlish my littel daughter looked to-day wen she was looking oaver sum pritty material for her trousseo. The deer littel cherup seemed so charming and confused and bewil-deringly pretty that I almost envied the man that is going to taik her away from me, sed Missus Raymond. Then she beegan to cry.

I doant think I wud cry if I was you, deerest, Ma sed to her. Do calm yurself & taik cumfurt in thinking about the pritty hoam that her husband is going to maik for her. Maybe you will be thare a grate deel of the time. Won't that be nice & cumfurtable? Ma sed to her.

It will be pretty tuff corn beef for her husband, sed Pa, the yung lady's husband, I meen. Wife, sed Pa, I suppoas you reemember the time yure loving mother caim here all the way from Wisconsin & started rite in trying to be the managing editor of our littel hoam. Of course, you reemember it, sed Pa. Will you ever fergit, sed Pa, the look of pained surprise that caim into her eyes wen I explained to her, as gently as I cud, that she dident have anything in the world to say about the management of my domestick affairs? If my memory dosent fail me, Pa sed, & I do not think it does, she stayed only three days insted of all summer.

You acted like a perfect cave man all the time she was here, I remember that, sed Ma. No wonder my poor mother seldum menshuns you in her letters.

But as I was saying about my daughter and Missus Raymond, I cudent help thinking as I sat there & saw her, a dainty bud with youth's fresh bloom on her cheeks, that no man in this wurld was good enuff to be the husband of so divine a creechur. Of course the man she is going to marry is a splendid yung man & is the vice president of a big bank. But eeven if he were the president of the united Staits, sed Missus Raymond, he wuddent be good enuff for my daughter. No man is good enuff for a woman.

Looks for Gray Hairs.

They are good enuff for a woman around pay day, sed Pa. I have always notised that when it gtts neer the first of the month my wife beegins looking in my head for gray hairs & calling me her deer old boy. & the morning of pay day, Pa sed, she always follows me to the door and kisses me aggenn and aggenn, with the luv lite shining in her eyes, & says Be sure & come rite hoam after you git yure pay to-day, won't you, darling.

I nevver do any such thing, sed Ma, & I agree with Missus Raymond that her daughter or any sweet, good guri is too good for a man.

Oh, my daughter, sed Missus Raymond, can't let her go, I jest can't, & my daughter, too, sed Missus Belcher, it seems as if sum monster of the sea was coming neerer & neerer to drag my daughter from her mother's arms. Then they both beegan to cry & Pa sneeked out of the room & went in the library ware the side board is.

The Bashful Boy

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

"WHAT I would like to ask," writes Rebecca, "is why it is better for a girl to associate with a bashful boy. On several occasions I have noticed that you state that a girl should honor such a young man, but you have never stated why."

The qualities in a bashful boy which make him a welcome suitor are more of a negative nature than of a positive. It is not that which he does, so much as that which he does not do. His sins are of omission and they are small compared with the sins of commission of his bolder brother.

The bashful boy doesn't flirt. With a tongue that halts and stammers, and a tell-tale color that is quicker than the blush of a young girl to proclaim his dishonesty did he attempt to be dishonest, he is not an adept at hypocrisy or concealment.

He is not a dandy. Neither is he a lady's man, and, my dear Rebecca, the presidents of banks and railroads, the powers in commercial life, the most profound thinkers and the men of letters the world honors, were never ladies' men.

His Hands.

He does not know what to do with his hands when out in society, but his employer will tell you he knows good use for them when at work.

Afraid of girls, he is forced to seek companionship in books and boys. The fear of girls gives him a respect for them which is wholesome; the companionship of boys gives him the outdoor exercise every young man needs.

He needs this tiring of every muscle, not alone for the results that are physical, but for moral returns. You are not too young, my dear, to know that the wolf that has been racing furiously up and down hill all day feels at night only the cry of tired limbs and aching muscles begging for rest. He is not the wolf that goes seeking an opening to break into the sheepfold.

If a bashful boy loves a girl it is with a sense of humility and his own unworthiness. He knows that he is the one who will be honored if his love is returned; his bolder brother has a faint suspicion, which the homage of silly girls confirms, that it is the girl who should be on her knees.

A Safe Way.

During his calf days he does all his signing for love's sake at a distance, which mothers will agree is the only safe and sane way for young girls to be loved.

He is always a good listener—no woman was ever bored to death by the talking of a bashful man.

Saying little, he says little for which he or others have cause for regret. He is a safe depository for secrets, a good man in whom to have confidence. If he is not a girl's lover the next best thing that could happen her would be to have him for a brother or a friend.

His compliments are not practiced, and are therefore sincere. When it takes effort and stupendous courage to hand a modest little flower to a girl, it follows that he will never throw bouquets at the head of every woman he meets.

Best of all, Rebecca, the bashful boy is a home boy. He is unafraid when with his mother and finds in her companionship the delight less bashful boys seek from home.

He is "a good boy" in the sweet old-fashioned sense, a boy who has escaped contamination a few years later than it comes to boys more bold.

COACH HEISMAN SPENDS 2 DAYS WITH THE PREPS

By J. W. Heisman.

UNTIL last week it had been long since I had seen a game of either football or baseball between any of the preparatory school teams of the State. But on the 19th and 20th last I slipped down to Milledgeville to see the Georgia Military College team of that place lock horns with the team from the Riverside Military Academy of Gainesville.

Well, I witnessed both games, and it won't take me long to say that they were good games, splendid, both of them. There was fast, clean fielding, excellent base running, fair batting, fine pitching and considerable inside baseball. Riverside won both games, each by a score of 2 to 0. The pitching of all four hurlers, Williamson and Haines for Riverside, and Camp and Gheesling for G. M. C., was impressively good, and it averaged in effectiveness but little below the average of what the college teams showed this year, if any. Riverside seemed stronger with the stick than G. M. C., which was, perhaps, the principal reason why they got away with the big end of the scoring.

NOW, I had heard more than one rumor to the effect that the Riverside team was made up of a bunch of "ringers." Among others the Wake Forest players had given me solemn assurance of this. Recalling that Wake Forest has since been blacklisted for having three professional players on its roster this now strikes me as a good place to giggle. (It will also be remembered that the Riverside team held Wake Forest to a 6-6 tie game).

Quite prepared was I, therefore, to see on the Riverside line-up a bunch of matured men, some of them giving every evidence of life among professionals, most of them omitting, sulphurous language every time they opened their mouths, chewing tobacco like demons and putting up a brand of baseball few college teams in the country could hope to duplicate. Did I see these things? No, none of them, and nothing like it. In the first place they were clearly and indubitably all young boys with one possible exception, and he not over 21 years of age. They all dressed neatly and in excellent taste. They talked like your average well behaved and schooled Prep. They played surprisingly good ball for such youngsters, but nothing like what professionals, even in Class D, play. I tell you they were BOYS, nothing else.

What is a "ringer?" Any one of a lot of things makes a "ringer." True, they may still have been ringers in the sense that they were not bona fide students, were at Riverside only to play ball and never to study; but don't believe that for one minute: they didn't look the part. As for ever having played in professional leagues, or ANY of them ever having received any but the most trifling recompense for any past playing, that was even more unbelievable.

No, they have a very well balanced nine, they field, hit, and run bases fairly well, are strong in the box and are weak in no department of play; they are full of "pep," are in good physical condition, have nice team work, stick to their work and never lose confidence in their ability to win the game—and that's how they do win, and that's all. And that's how they won 19 straight games this spring without losing one.

This is really a very extraordinary achievement, and Coach Frank Anderson deserves an extraordinary amount of credit for the wonderful showing of the team. It was he who taught them their team play and inside ball; he who kept up their fighting spirit after he had generated it, and he who has made them very largely what they are. It is undeniably a jim-dandy young team. But I don't believe they are ringers.

THE G. M. C. boys were also a nice, clean-looking lot, and they played good steady ball. In two innings only out of 19 played did Riverside succeed in scoring on these hard working lads. Except in hitting they showed no inferiority worth mentioning to the Riverside team.

I desire to express my very warm admiration for the clean and sportsmanly conduct of the G. M. C. cadets and their friends and rooters. The very best of order prevailed at all times on the field, and their treatment of the Riverside team was, so far as I could observe, not only just and courteous but such as befits the honored guest. The work of Umpire Lamar Ham, an old Georgia player, was excellent, and no word of fault finding or bitterness was ever addressed within my hearing either to him or to the visitors by the G. M. C. players or any of their supporters: it was fine conduct and good sport all around.

G. M. C. has a very pretty campus, and the main building of the school is the old Georgia State Capitol: it is a handsome and very substantial edifice still.

I STOPPED off at Barnesville, hoping to see the rained-out game of the day before played off between Florida and Gordon Institute. In this I met with disappointment, as the Florida team had gone home; but I enjoyed a visit of a few hours there nevertheless.

Gordon also has a very fine athletic field, and several very handsome new buildings. Lieutenant Riley, the former star West Point guard, had all the boys looking spick-and-span, and their military drill was much more than worth watching. The athletes I was so fortunate as to meet were a remarkably fine looking set of fellows who seemed to measure right up to college standards in both stature and outlines. And, by the way, I have just read that their splendid catcher, Everett Bankston, whom I was hoping might come to Tech, has received an offer from the Pittsburg League team. This will give an idea of the class of the athletes they are developing in our Georgia preparatory schools.

GLENN WILL BE STAR AT BOARD TRACK RACING

—JACK PRINCE.

"HARRY GLENN, this local boy, will make one of the greatest board track riders in the world; you watch what I say." So says Jack Prince, inventor of the board track, who knows more about "racing on edge" than any other living man.

Glenn made his real exhibition debut Wednesday. He had been flirting with the track for several days. His first time out he wabbled about on it like a drunken sailor—and wabbling at 65 or 70 miles an hour is a dangerous pastime. Glenn's racing machine, ordered some weeks ago, has not come yet, so he has not been doing much at the track.

Wednesday afternoon five or six of the world's best board-track racers were tuning up their machines and getting ready for the big tournament next week. And a crowd of 6,000 or 8,000 board-track cranks were watching the free exhibition that goes on every afternoon. For nothing at all, the crowd was seeing fancy riding by the best in the business. But even then they were not satisfied.

"Harry Glenn: we want Harry Glenn," they shouted.

Glenn Forced to Ride.

There was not a chance to announce to all of them that Harry's racing machine had not come. And finally the cries became so insistent that "Smiling Harry" mounted a road machine and, grinning happily, set out for his first real attempt at speed on the treacherous banks.

No veteran rider could have handled the track with greater ease. He circled it at the pole and he took it high, he rode fast and slow; but never was there a slip or any show of inexperience. And round after round was greeted with thunderous cheering. That Glenn is a tremendous local favorite was never better demonstrated.

Glenn deserves it, too. Never has more intrepid dirt-track rider shown himself to the public than Harry, and he has won the crowds by his courage and cleverness.

Lad's Success Is Sure.

When Glenn was riding, the experts gathered at the paddock and discussed his work. And it was not long before all agreed that his future in the racing game was assured. He has many times shown his courage and cool-headedness in races, and now that he has shown that he can "ride the boards" as well, there is nothing to it but a big showing for "Smiling Harry" Glenn around the Southern circuit of tracks.

If Glenn's racing machine arrives in time, he will probably try his luck in the first race meet, set for one week from to-morrow.

A PLEA.

(Inspired by C. Webb Murphy.)

"Knock, if you will—I have no dread—
But keep my name in type!" he said.

The only fault to be found with the Manly Art of Self-Defense is that it sometimes back fires.

One learns from the public prints that Mr. Zbyszko still insists that he can throw Mr. Gotch. Some of these foreigners never get any sense.

The fracture of a wrestler's dome indicates that even a billiard ball is not immune.

There is a move afoot to eliminate hammer throwing from track meets. Messrs. Evers, Tinker and Chance are in favor of a move to eliminate same from the pastime known as baseball.

Considering the athletic activities of those Cleveland persons, it behooves Mr. Birmingham to fracture a few more of his athletes' limbs.

REFERRING TO A SPANISH ATHLETE.

(By the Miller of Osgood.)
(Being a Contribution.)

"Ladies and gents!" the Barker cried,
"We'll win the flag with games to spare!"
Oh, please sir, tie your bull brute outside!
You can't win games with heated air.

If the Calgary affair will only put a crimp in the white hope market, it will not have been fought in vain.

One Johnny Evers, pugilist, makes his appearance in our midst. One W. Klem, umpire, will testify that anybody with that name is a fighter.

Tommy Leach is the only Cub outfielder who is hitting in the .300 class. All of which goes to show the value of young blood.

Reports come from Virginia, Minn., that Rube Waddell has disappeared again. Virginia, Minn., fears that he may come back.

George Stovall is back in the game. It is rumored that he now chews cotton instead of tobacco.

SHAME.

Full many a man is filled with bitter shame
And hears men make a byword of his name,
But never one who hung his head so low
As one I witnessed in a baseball game.

With bases filled, they called him to the fore;
He whiffed when but a hit would tie the score,
And as he journeyed benchward from the plate
It must have seemed a hundred miles or more.

WOLGAST BACKS HOPPE.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Ad Wolgast, who is reported to have lost heavily in his last few bets on prize fights, to-day is said to have placed a large bet on Willie Hoppe to beat Frankie Burns when they meet next month.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 29.—One of the most important series of the season begins at the Polo Grounds to-day, when the Giants and Phillies, now leading the league, meet to play four games in three days. This will be a real test of the Quakers, who have been setting a terrific pace ever since the race began.

The games are going to be largely a question of pitchers, and the Giants' twirlers will be thrown against the finest staff in the league in this series. It is the pitching the Quakers have been getting that has kept them up in the race so far, and it will be pitching that must stop them. When McGraw traded three Giants to Cincinnati last week, he was looking ahead to these games, which he realized would be critical and might have a direct bearing on the final result of the season. He needed good, reliable twirlers to work in these battles. Now he has Tesreau, Fromme and Marquard. Doubtless, they will meet Seaton, Alexander, Chalmers and Rixey.

IT is not only the actual result of this series which will count, but the effect the outcome will have on the hearts and playing of the plunging Phillies. If the Giants can stop them with a jerk we will start them off on a long road tour without the idea that they are invincible, and we will send them away with Pittsburg as their next stop, except for one game at home with Brooklyn. They will encounter some more excellent pitching and a club that has been vastly strengthened within the last two weeks when they meet the Pirates. But should the Quakers take these games in New York or the majority of them, they would still retain the notion that they cannot be beaten, and doubtless would go stampeding through the West at a great rate, increasing their lead to dangerous proportions. It would also have the opposite effect on the New York club, which is about to leave for its swing through the West. Therefore, it is easy to see that the series is an important one.

The Quakers are going to put forth the best that they have against us for two reasons. One is that there never has been any too much good feeling between the two teams, and the other is that every club in the league is always eager to beat the Big Town boys, and especially the champions of the league.

That is the reason the Giants constantly meet the best pitching, whereas some second-rate club gets second-rate twirlers.

THE Philadelphia club is still playing at top speed, while the Giants are not themselves yet. Our hitting is not timely, and the fielding is uncertain. Demaree, who showed so well at first, has not entirely recovered from a strained back, another reason why the coming of Fromme was timely. The Phillies are likely to make a good bid for the pennant, provided Dooln can keep the team in condition and the regulars can steer clear of injuries. The lack of capable substitutes is what will probably drag the Quakers back. The pitching staff, however, should keep the club a factor in the race right up to September.

The Philadelphia sprint is not the same kind that Cincinnati sprang last year, to my mind. There is more backbone to the Philadelphia club, and the team is a good one as far as the first string men go. Give it a lead of a few games and it's going to be a long chase catching Dooln's crowd. They can then afford to slump and recover. What the team does on this long road trip will give some indication of how it is going to finish, because most of the games it has played to date have been at home. This will be a real test. They play twenty-three of their next twenty-four games on the road.

ASIDE from actually strengthening the pitching staff, McGraw's trade with Cincinnati displayed considerable wisdom on the part of the New York manager in another direction. The bad weather of the first part of the season has piled up a long string of double-headers for later along, and double-headers eat into pitchers faster than a high-priced automobile does into gasoline. The Giants now have eleven double-headers slated, and, in order to work a reliable pitcher every day, McGraw will need four or five twirlers in service all the time. By the addition of Fromme, he has enough talent to start a reliable performer in each game, in spite of the double-headers, when Demaree gets back in shape.

* * *

BROOKLYN has apparently begun to slip back through the league. I look to see the club finish no better than fourth, because two teams are bound to come and pass the Superbas. These are the Giants and Pittsburg, and I don't figure the Dodgers any way to beat out Philadelphia. The pitching staff appears to be slipping some now, and the infielders are not playing the game they were when the psychology of the winning streak was on the whole team and carrying it up through the league.

* * *

THE Cubs have faded, but should get a revival of form on their return to the home diamond. The improvement in pitching would mean an improvement of the team, because it is weak twirling that has been continuously holding the club back. The rest of the team is strong enough, with a wonderful catching staff.

* * *

WHEN the Eastern clubs invade the West next week, the first real test of the Easterners will occur in comparing them with the West. They waded through the Western teams in the late intersectional series, and the question now is whether or not they can repeat the performance away from home. The St. Louis club made the best showing of all the Westerners in the East, and, with Brooklyn and Philadelphia, has been the surprise of the league. Two good pitchers have been holding the club up in the race, and a team that was regarded before the season as a competitor with Brooklyn and Boston for last place has shot to the front and is crowding a lot of us for the first division.

"PRICE HAS NOT QUIT LOCAL CLUB,"—CALLAWAY

President Callaway, of the Atlanta Baseball Association, denies the story printed to-day that Southpaw Gilbert Price has quit the local ball club.

According to Callaway, Price reported for practice this morning and will appear in uniform this afternoon, ready to twirl if called upon.

"I know nothing of the rumor that Price is to quit our club and enter business," said Callaway, "and if he was I certainly would know it by this time."

Yell Defiance at Blood Disorders

A Remedy That Has Shown a Most Remarkable Purifying Effect.

At Last You Can Get Rid of Blood Troubles—S. S. S.

The word medicine is one of the most abused in our language. There are certain medicinal properties just as necessary to health as the food we eat. Take, for example, the well-known tonic medicine, S. S. S. This famous blood purifier contains medicinal components just as vital and essential to healthy blood as the elements of wheat, roast beef, the fats and the sugars that make up our daily ration.

As a matter of fact, there is one ingredient in S. S. S. which serves the active purpose of stimulating each cellular part of the body to the healthy and judicious selection of its own essential nutriment. That is why it regenerates the blood supply; why it has such a tremendous influence in overcoming eczema, rash, pimples, and all skin afflictions.

And in regenerating the tissues S. S. S. has a rapid and positive antidotal effect upon all those irritating influences that cause rheumatism, sore throat, weak eyes, falling hair, loss of weight, thin, pale cheeks, and that weariness of muscle and nerve that is generally experienced as spring fever. Get a bottle of S. S. S. at any drug store, and in a few days you will not only feel bright and energetic, but you will be the picture of new life. S. S. S. is prepared only in the laboratory of The Swift Specific Co., 137 Swift Bldg., Atlanta, Ga., who maintain a very efficient Medical Department, where all who have any blood disorder of a stubborn nature may write freely for advice and a special book of instruction. S. S. S. is sold everywhere by drug stores, department and general stores.

USE OF BEAN BALL SHOULD BE FORBIDDEN

By Percy H. Whiting.

THE agitation in the major league against the "bean ball" has stirred a responsive chord in the Southern League. "Go to it," say players and fans alike.

You know what the "bean ball" is, of course.

It is a ball thrown by the pitcher at the head of the batter. Its purpose may be to intimidate a batter lacking in courage or to force away from the plate a man who is crowding in too close to suit the pitcher.

The play is barbarous and should be eliminated from the game.

AS contemptible an exhibition of bean ball throwing as Atlanta fans ever saw occurred yesterday. In the sixth inning, when Wally Smith was at bat, he ran in to the limit of the batter's box in an effort to smear one of Finis Wilson's curves. Wilson put up a complaint to the umpire, but there were no grounds for it, and Umpire Pfenninger disregarded it.

The next ball Wilson threw straight at Smith's head. Wally ducked and escaped, but by no wide margin. Again Wilson threw at Smith's head, and this time with such unerring aim and such tremendous speed that when Smith ducked the ball struck the bat that he threw in front of his head as he went down. But for this lucky chance Smith would have received a terrible wallop on the head, would unquestionably have been laid out and perhaps killed.

WILSON'S act was doubtless that of a fresh kid. He threw at Smith's head because he lacked any better sense.

But if Wilson had killed Smith—and the thing could easily have happened—it would have been cold-blooded, brutal, willful murder.

THE bean ball is no more a part of legitimate baseball than would be the use of an axe on the head of a base runner or the knifing of a fielder.

It would be difficult absolutely to stop it. However, in most cases a trained observer—such as an umpire is supposed to be and usually isn't—could tell a "bean ball" from a wild heave that went at the same mark. A pitcher who uses it ought to be fired out of baseball for one year and fined not less than a thousand dollars. That might help to break up the practice.

WEDNESDAY'S ball game was pie for the Crackers—4 to 1—with New Orleans the victim. Paul Musser came around and pitched a really first-class game. The "fatal gift" was with him to the extent of six passes, but he was never in danger, chiefly because he allowed only five hits. He kept the hits pretty well separated from the passes and the only time it seemed possible that anything unfortunate might happen Hendryx walloped into a double play and relieved the pressure.

CATCHER CHAPMAN made his Atlanta debut and pleased mightily. He is a husky brute, with lots of gab and considerable cleverness. The entire team showed a lot of added "pep," but how much was due to Chapman's example and how much to something Manager Smith might or might not have said in a club house talk nobody knows.

If Chapman proves as good as he looks, the Crackers are a vastly different team. Graham has been an uncertainty all the season. And Dunn was signed only as a second catcher and could not be expected to carry the whole thing along by himself.

With Chapman to do the heavy backstopping and to lead in the chatter; with Dent promising to prove a winning pitcher with Musser back in shape again, and with the rest of the club playing to form, the locals ought to begin forging toward the front again.

AMERICANS MAY BE FACTORS IN ENGLISH DERBY

By E. G. B. Fitzhamon.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 29.—American owners, horses and jockeys seem likely to cut a pretty wide swath in the great English Derby this year. Harry Payne Whitney's colt, Meeting House, which ran third in the Guineas, has a nice chance of winning. So has Herman B. Duryea's Boyne, which won the Paris Biennial, at ten furlongs, quite comfortably from a smart field. August Belmont also has a colt in France which is going to take some stopping on Epsom Downs, barring accident.

Whitney's Meeting House is a fine big colt by Voter out of Noonday, and is one of the thirty yearlings he purchased from the late James Keene eighteen months ago.

Meeting House began slowly in the mile race at Newmarket for the Guineas and for a few strides he was the last of a field of 15, but he moved up to ninth in the first quarter, was seventh after going five furlongs, and ran over four well fancied candidates in the final quarter, being beaten only two lengths in the final quarter by Louvois and Craganour, which was almost dead-heated. Meeting House ran practically unbacked, with 15 to 1 against him to show, and Frank O'Neill riding.

Was Nipped at The Last.

Craganour divided favoritism with Fairy King and they showed the way for six furlongs, when Craganour drew clear, with Johnny Reiff on the 20 to 1 shot, Louvois, in hot pursuit. Craganour should have won, but his English jockey was overconfident and tossed it off and the American nipped him on the post with Louvois.

O'Neill would have ridden the winner if Jack Joyner had kept Meeting House in the barn. O'Neill was engaged last year to ride for Whitney in this race if he was wanted. Subsequently Mr. Raphael, the owner of Louvois, as well as of last year's Derby winner, engaged both O'Neill and Reiff to come over from Paris to ride Louvois in the Guineas, O'Neill's engagament being conditional that Joyner would not want him for Whitney.

When Joyner decided to take a chance with Meeting House, Raphael had Johnny Reiff to fall back upon, and it was Johnny who won the Derby for him on Tagalie last year.

But Mr. Raphael agrees with me that Frank O'Neill is the greatest jockey in Europe, and probably in the world just now, and he has contracted with Frank to ride Louvois in the Derby and other important races. So if American owners and horses fail in the Derby an American rider is quite likely to win it.

Louvois Shows.

Louvois is the colt of which I wrote last December: that if I had to make my selection for the Derby from last season's two-year-olds before they ran this season as three-year-olds, he would be my choice. Louvois not only showed speed last year but he impressed me as the most likely to carry it over the Derby route this year.

Judging from the manner in which he came from behind and wore down Craganour at one mile I expect Louvois to beat ismay's colt easily at a mile and a half. To some extent this argument also applies to Whitney's Meeting House being likely to beat Craganour for the Derby. However, the talent makes Craganour favorite at present at 9 to 2.

Shogun is going to become a hot tip for Derby, but I can not stand for a colt with two splints coming down the hill at Epsom unless the going should be very soft, which it seldom is there.

Mr. Duryea's Boyne is by Irish Lad out of Running Water by Sir Dixon. He is being pointed for the Derby, so I hear from France.

Belmont's good Derby colt in France is Vulcain, by Rock Sand out of Lady of the Vale.

Players' Fraternity Branching Out

Magnates Dodged Punishment

By W. J. McBeth.

NEW YORK, May 29.—A new power arises in organized baseball, clamoring for certain long neglected rights. This is the Baseball Players' Fraternity, organized less than a year ago under the wise direction of David Fultz, a prominent lawyer of New York and in his day one of the greatest outfielders in the big league. The Fraternity already embraces three hundred members; practically all of the players of the two major leagues.

It is but a matter of a very short time until the Baseball Players' Fraternity branches out to include the minor leagues as well. And as power lies in force of numbers it becomes evident that this Fraternity will very shortly be in a position to force the recognition it rightfully deserves. There is absolutely no idea of unionism in the fraternity. Rather the association stands for a strict interpretation of the laws governing organized baseball. But the organization proposes to see that laws and regulations shall be fairly applied; that the magnates shall not be favored one whit over the rank and file of players who have built up and made the great game the popular sport which it is.

ULTIMATELY, no doubt, players will have some sort of representation on the National Commission, the supreme court of the laws governing the game. This is no more than fair. At present the baseball commission is made up of a National League club owner and the two presidents of the major leagues. In their favor it must be said that on the whole the work of this National Commission has been above reproach. There have been instances of discrimination when discrimination was to the best interests of magnates in general.

* * *

Baseball is presumably the only honest professional sport, if such a broad name may be applied to such a gigantic amusement enterprise. Its honesty reflects the character of the professional player rather than of the professional promoter. It is a matter of record that in its thousands and thousands of cases involving thousands and thousands of dollars no player has ever lied who testified before the National Commission. Who can say as much for some of our highly respected club owners whose first creed seems to be subterfuge if not deceit?

* * *

WHILE the National Commission prides itself upon an iron hand in administering justice to ball players, high and low, it religiously evades shouldering equal responsibility in a case of the magnate. For the benefit of a trusting public it may bluster and bluff a whole lot; but that is as far as it goes. There are too many illustrious examples of the past few years to bear contradiction. It is true that the National League expelled from its ranks last winter Horace Fogel, president of the Philidelphia Nationals, because he had given utterances uncomplimentary to the honesty of the sport and its administration. But the National League fawned upon Charles W. Murphy, president of the Chicago Cubs, who was directly responsible for Horace Fogel's outburst. They had the "goods" on Murphy. Were they afraid of the backing of this little trouble-maker—the millions of Charles P. Taft?

* * *

IF Ban Johnson's word amounts to anything it was not the first time that Murphy stood upon the brink, ready for the kindly shove that in the best interests of the game should have been applied. Johnson declares that Murphy should have been driven out of baseball for speculating in world's series tickets in 1908 when his Cubs drubbed the Tigers. Ban was also very vehement in his outcry against certain New York officials during the series between the Giants and Athletics in 1911. He was also determined, he said, to expose the shady manipulations of the celebrated attempt to bribe the umpires at the post-season play-off of the well known Cub-Giant pennant tie at the Polo Grounds in 1908.

JOHNSON may have been sincere in both instances. If so then the powers of organized baseball as embodied in the magnates stayed his hand. The magnates were afraid of public exposure.

We have had in the past too many examples of lop-sided justice. Where inconsequential players have drawn maximum penalty for infraction of the laws stars have been exonerated. Hal Chase furnishes a very striking example. He quit New York and Griffith cold in 1908 when he was the only player left of the saddest tail end aggregation one could imagine. He committed the unpardonable sin of organized baseball. He not only "jumped" his contract with organized baseball but went to an "outlaw" league. This penalty at the time should have drawn a lifelong "black-list." But organized baseball could not afford to lose such a drawing card as Chase. The very next spring he was pardoned after a "mock" trail. They sought Chase. If he had been an average player all the influence in the world could never have tempted the National Commission to let down the bars.

TY COBB is another bright example. His indefinite suspension by Johnson last year, because Ty assaulted a spectator at the Hilltop, was the direct cause of a strike by the Detroit Tigers. This action was a very grave offense, but wholesale punishment would have been equivalent to annulment of Detroit's valuable chattels in players. Because of the strength of numbers Ban Johnson was compelled to leniency. Afterward he singled out Delehanty, a passing veteran, on whom to vent his disciplinary spleen. In compliance with the Detroit ultimatum Cobb was immediately reinstated. This spring Ty Cobb held out for a record salary. Organized baseball was obdurate until the newspaper publicity threatened a Congressional probe into organized baseball to determine whether or not it was a trust. Then organized baseball fairly broke its neck welcoming the Tiger hold-out. Though Ty had violated baseball law by playing with a baseball team in the South when he should have been with Jennings, he was reinstated by Ban Johnson before his application could be brought before the National Commission. Had it been some obscure "busher" instead of Cobb, he would now undoubtedly be on the suspended list. The National Commission might never discover his application for reinstatement.

* * *

THE Baseball Players' Fraternity is a most admirable organization and is very likely to result in great good to the game. Playing managers are excluded from membership. Its chief aim is mutual protection. It intends to work along harmonious lines with organized baseball government. It held aloof from the controversy between Cobb and the Detroit club, maintaining that its chief purpose was the observation and not negotiation of contracts. It has no objection to the so-called "yoke" of the reserve clause but it hopes to establish some sense of equitable justice in observation of contract and some limit at least to the reserve clause. Now the magnate has the power to hold a player for life or to release him on ten days' notice. The player has no redress and must accept the terms offered. The fraternity hopes to be able in time to adjust salaries on a far more sensible basis. Last year a player on the Pittsburg team was signed up for $800. He had no say in the matter. Wagner in the same club was drawing $10,000. Wagner may have been twelve times the more valuable asset. Yet a player who is worth no more than $800 should not be in the big league. He can get more in the "sticks" with a chance of development at the same time.

* * *

ORGANIZED baseball may need the kindly services of the fraternity before many months roll around. Perhaps the magnates have been killing the goose of the golden eggs. Public sympathy seems on the wane. Jack O'Connor in the civil courts in St. Louis quite recently was awarded a verdict for $5,000 against the St. Louis Americans. This was the amount of a year's salary as manager of the Browns on a contract that Ban Johnson canceled because he alleged that O'Connor had purposely countenanced a scheme to boost Napoleon Lajoie's batting record above that of Ty Cobb. Lajoie, it is said, was allowed to make a hit every time he came to bat in the final game of the season so that he might earn an automobile which went for the batting championship.

* * *

NOW, that little scandal was hushed up at the time by the wily Johnson. He straightened out the matter by getting an extra benzine buggy for Larry and awarding Cobb the honors. The skeleton in the closet, however, was rattled again in the O'Connor suit when Ban Johnson produced witnesses who testified that they had overheard O'Connor instructing his men to give Lajoie an unfavorable advantage over Cobb. Such testimony was not of a nature to reassure public confidence in professional baseball. And it did absolutely no good, as the jury disregarded it anyhow.

PELKY AND BURNS MAY BE TRIED ON JUNE 23

CALGARY, ALBERTA, May 29.—If Tommy Burns and Arthur Pelky ever come to trial on a charge of manslaughter in connection with the death of Luther McCarty, it will be on June 23 at the Supreme Criminal Court session.

Burns will not give out his plans, but it is said that he is being urged to abandon all connection with ring affairs.

Fargo dispatches giving McCarty's estate as worth $65,000 are grossly exaggerated. His property is worth about $12,000.

Floto Yearns for Days of Old

Scores All Typewriter Fighters

By Otto C. Floto.

IN slanting a glance over the lightweight situation as it presents itself to us at the present time we are forced to the conclusion that there is more talk than doin' and more challenges flying back and forth than there are acceptances of the same. Take the whole list of the boys that claim this division as their own, each and every one of them have a chip on their shoulder and are aiming their 14-inch guns at Willie Ritchie, the titleholder. Their ammunition, however, is mostly "buncombe," and the almighty dollar is receiving far more attention in these deliberations than is the glory of becoming champion.

All of which forces us to lean back and sigh, "Oh, you fortunate champions of to-day. How lucky you are not to have been compelled to battle in the time when real fighters graced the roped inclosure." Days when the end was never in sight; days when the finish came only with the referee's count and the acknowledgment from the "seconds" of one or the other principal that his charge could go no further.

SOME may shrug their shoulders and say, "Yes, but those were the brutal days of the London prize ring." Maybe they were, but they also represented the period when gladiators of real merit held sway, days when it required a stout heart, stamina, a knowledge of wrestling as well as fighting, and an adept so far as the science and punching ability of the game went.

Seldom if ever did a champion return to the ring once the stigma of defeat was placed against his name. He retired in those days unless for some exceptional reason he was allowed to come back. His future connection with the game was as second, bottle-holder or representative of some champion. Tom Sayers, after his defeat by Langham, came back and, in support of the move, we need but add that he was never defeated again. He was a middleweight, while Langham was a heavy one when they fought.

TAKE the average run of the Queensberry babies we have in our midst at the present time and when they stagger up against defeat or adverse verdicts they hurry to the nearest typewriter and frame fifty-seven different varieties of alibis in a made endeavor to explain away their rout.

Mind, we don't wish you to misunderstand us in that the Queensberry code failed to produce great champions. On the contrary, it did. Jimmy Barry, Jack McAuliffe, Jack Dempsey, Jim Corbett, Fitzsimmons and others won titles under their clauses. But remember, too, that they all fought "TO A FINISH" in order to succeed to the emblem. The present day limited affairs were foreign to them.

MANY will wonder why John L. Sullivan's name is among those missing from the above list. Simple enough, and equally surprising to as many to learn that Sullivan won his title according to the L. P. R. rules. The only time he met defeat was by the Queensberry route. So that technically speaking Sullivan was never defeated for the title. He at any rate never lost it in the same manner in which he won it. The last London prize ring fight in this country was between Sullivan and Kilrain, at Richburg, Miss. This will perhaps be news to many as well.

With the abolition of the L. P. R. rules came a flock of "box fighters," to whom the limited round journey with eight-ounce gloves and Queensberry methods appealed as the short route to easy money. Over 70 per cent of this same band would have found employment at some other way of making a living had the old-time fashion of battles on the turf "to a finish" still been in vogue.

ZBYSZKO COLLAPSES IN MAT BOUT; LURICH WINS

NEW YORK, May 29.—George Lurich was awarded the decision over Stanislaus Zbyszko in the wrestling bout at Madison Square Garden when the latter failed after 16 minutes and 27 seconds of strenuous struggling on the mat.

The Polish champion was said to be suffering from the effects of a recent injury received at Montreal and his weakened condition resulted in his collapse in the ring.

BOXING

News of the Ring Game

Spider Britt is on the warpath. The little bantamweight read Meyer Pries' challenge in the Georgian the other day and says he will gladly meet Pries on a "winner-take-all" basis. Britt also states that he will give Meyer a side bet of $50. Let's hear from Pries!

Jack Dillon has finished hard training for his 10-round set-to with Frank Klaus Thursday night at Indianapolis. Dillon is down to the required weight and says he will be strong at 160 pounds, the figure both men have agreed to make.

Eddie Campi and Charles Ledoux will clash in the next bantamweight fight to be staged on the Coast. Tom McCarey signed the boys yesterday. They will meet on June 20 in a scheduled 20-round go.

* * *

Jack Britton will make his next fight against Jimmy Duffy, the tough Buffalo boy, on Thursday night. They will meet in Duffy's home town and Britton will have his hands full carrying away the verdict. The boys are billed to go ten rounds.

* * *

Matty McCue was handed a neat setback the other night. Matty attempted to land his haymaker on Fatsy Brannigan's jaw, but the latter was far too clever for the Racine sensation and had a good shade at the end of the tenth round.

* * *

Another New Orleans fighter has been defeated. Frankie Russell tried hard to put the Pelican City back on the fighting map Monday night, but Lore proved too tough a customer for Frankie. The Eastern boy was given the newspaper verdict by a good margin.

COTTON WEAK ON EVE OF HOLIDAY

May Rides the "Toboggan" at an Early Hour, Others Following. Bearish Cable Causes.

NEW YORK, May 29.—A break of 18 points in May was the feature of the cotton market at the opening of the cotton market to-day. June followed with a decline of 16 points and July 9 points from last night's close. New crop positions were under pressure, but only lost 4 to 6 points. The decline was due to private cables reporting a lockout in the mills of northern Lancashire, coupled with a bearish crop condition and acreage estimate by Miss Giles. She gave the condition of the crop to May 24 as 86.4 and acreage an increase of 3.7 per cent, indicating the acreage of 1913 would be 35,709,400 acres.

The weather map and sentiment were bearish, which encouraged the bears. The ring and certain brokers who usually represent spot interests were the leading sellers. After the call the list increased its decline 1 to 3 points from the opening. Liverpool was a good seller of July. There were about 5,000 May and June notices issued, which were immediately stopped by good sources.

The bears were thunderstruck during the forenoon when shorts grasped the opportunity to cover and sent May back to 11.44, within 2 points of the previous close. July jumped to 11.40. Within fifteen minutes the entire list rallied within 2 to 6 points from Wednesday's final, or unchanged to 16 points above the opening range.

About the only condition issued to-day encouraging to the bulls was The Journal of Commerce, which was 80.5. However, there was a pressure to sell the market from all quarters, but the market took the selling remarkably well in the face of the bearish situation.

May went out at 11.36, a net loss of 8 points from the early high point.

The strength of the market was due to covering over the holidays. In addition to this the trade expects a bullish visible supply statement to-morrow. It is said that clearances from the Pacific coast of 13,630 goes in to-day's receipts and to-morrow's mill takings, which are expected to be bullish.

During the afternoon session the market was quiet. Price movement was practically unchanged from the opening level. It is believed that the market is in an even keel to go over the holidays. Should the government report Monday show the condition above 83 the market will be sold.

HAYWOOD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER.

NEW ORLEANS, May 29.—With May drawig to a close near positions and spots are weakening, showing plainly that professional support and operations have alope held up prices. Liverpool this morning is 6@8 points down on old crops against one point lower due and 3 points downon new against 1 point to 2 points lower due. Political news is bad. It is feared that a general war will break out in the Balkans. A Liverpool cable again made strong reference to the probability of labor troubles in Lancashire.

Weather conditions continue very good; fair and warmer over entire belt, no rains except in the Carolina coast districts and fair and continued warm weather is indicated for the entire belt.

Our market opened 30 points down on May, 7 points down on July and 5 points on new crops. Support to new crops in New York checked selling pressure, but feeling is against the market. New York says that the strong support to new crops yesterday came from a Cincinnati operator. Between 6,000 and 8,000 tenders on May were made here this morning.

The into-sight for the week looks around 60,000 bales against 65,064 last year. We compare with mill takings of 159,000 bales for this week last year. They were small then owing to holidays, and, therefore, favorable comparisons are probable. After this week, however, to the end of the season consumption statistics have very poor prospect of comparing very unfavorably with those of last year; the contract market settled around 11.17 for October with trading very quiet. Some further covering in New York before the holidays caused steadiness.

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The cotton seed oil market was active and higher to-day on covering of shorts, new speculative buying, firmness in lard and buying of July, thought to be for refiners. Bulls took advantage of the light offerings to help along the advance.

Outside speculative longs were moderate sellers on the advance.

MILLER-CARTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, TENN., May 29.—Several condition reports, all of bearish import, were issued to-day and the market was plainly of bearish temper. But Liverpool bought new crops on this side, undoing straddles and our markets have given appearance of steadiness, while Liverpool was weak, which is just the reverse of recent relations.

The weather is very favorable now and for the next few days.

With the holidays beginning to-night business is restricted, but we anticipate lower prices after the bureau.

G. A. R. Makes Plans For Decoration Day

O. M. Mitchell, chairman of a committee appointed by G. A. R. Post, No. 1, of Atlanta, to plan for the celebration of Decoration Day, has completed arrangements. Ceremonies will be held in the National Cemetery at Marietta.

Commander George P. Leavitt, of Post No. 1, will speak on "The Duty of the Day," while the tribute to the dead will be paid by F. A. Jones, of Tallapoosa. Two companies of troops from Fort McPherson will participate.

Loss of Home Makes Mrs. Theo Shonts Ill

NEW YORK, May 29.—Mrs. Hilla D. Shonts, wife of Theodore P. Shonts, president of the Interborough, is in a serious condition as the result of the burning of her country home near Mobile, Ala., April 19 last, when she and her daughters were driven out by the flames.

A statement to this effect was made in the Supreme Court yesterday by Dr. E. B. Ligon, of Mobile, Mrs. Shonts' physician, on an application for the adjournment of a suit brought against Mrs. Shonts on a note.

Says Husband Made Her Feign Happiness

NEW YORK, May 29.—A story of hardships to which she was subjected by her husband, including long horseback rides over the Mexican mountains and threats of death, was told to-day by 22-year-old Mrs. Dace Charlet, who is suing Alfonson Charlet for separation.

Charlet is president of the Charlet Mines and Smelters Company.

"Sometimes he would threaten to shoot me if I was not merry," said the wife.

HARRIMAN ISSUES FEATURE STOCKS

Dissolution Plan Submitted by Judge Lovett Not Approved, Causing Weakness.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 29.—Moderate improvement was shown at the opening of the stock market to-day, there being a noticeable absence of pressure. Reading and Union Pacific were strong features, the former gaining ⅝ on earnings reports and the latter advancing ½ after selling ex-dividend of 2½. Amalgamated Copper opened at 73½, against 73 at the close last night.

Among the other advances were American Can, ½; American Smelting, ⅝; Erie, ¼; Northern Pacific, ¾; Pennsylvania, ⅛; Southern Pacific, ¼, and United States Steel common, ⅛.

Canadian Pacific was weak in consequence of selling in London and was 2⅜ lower. Western Union, Erie and Atchison shaded fractionally.

There was some covering by traders who feared to go short over the three-day holiday.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were irregular.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 29.—The principal trading at the outset to-day was in July, which was very weak. Mitchell and Schill were the leading sellers of July. After the call Riordan, Rothschild, Schley and Hartcorn were principal buyers. The market was sold on bearish cables telling of a lockout in Lancashire and also on Miss Giles' report.

* * *

Weather news and sentiment were against the market, which helped the decline along.

* * *

Schill, Mitchell and Hubbard sold July freely. The ring sold new crop months. Wilson, Munds and Riordan were the principal buyers of July.

* * *

The market sure hit the "toboggan" at the outset, but quickly recovered its course and rode the "airship."

* * *

The cotton seed oil market will be closed Friday, but will be open Saturday.

New Orleans wires: "About 7,000 notices out. Bullish visible expected to-morrow."

Warehouse stocks in New York to-day are 71,086 bales; certificated, 58,911 bales.

* * *

Miss Giles' condition figures were 2 per cent above the Government report last year, and if she had reported the same this year it would have been a bullish report.

* * *

Of the particular features of the market yesterday during the late trading was the weakness in the old crop positions, which was due partly to liquidation by foreign straddlers and partly against purchase of new crop and outside liquidation. May option was weak, promoted by big tenders, which was said to be for foreign accounts.

The market was flooded with private condition and acreage reports to-day, and the particular thing about them was that they were all bearish to the core. The acreage was given about 1,000,000 acres increase over the previous year.

* * *

Dallas, Tex., wires: "Texas: San Antonio threatening; balance State clear, pleasant. Oklahoma: Generally clear; cool."

* * *

It was learned yesterday that the heavy buying of new crop by Riordan on Tuesday was long buying for an operator connected with a large Cincinnati soap manufacturing concern.

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, May 29.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows fair in entire belt; fine, warm weather with night temperatures rather above normal. No rain except in Carolina coast districts. Indications are for continued fair and warmer weather except little cloudy in Northwest Texas, very favorable.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Excellent rains in the Atlantic States put an end to dry weather talk about that section. A promise now of rather heavy tenders in New Orleans to-day and a report to the effect that some of the cotton taken up on New York May contracts three weeks ago was retendered there yesterday helped foster bearish sentiment.

"Favorable weather has convinced the talent that improving crop advices will be received during the next week or two. Under the circumstances sellers outnumber buyers and the cotton market eased off. However, the talent is convinced that the market is a live corpse, with a kick, and nobody is now treating it as a dead one. Meanwhile, New Orleans May closed at 12.35, a premium of 34 points over July, while New York May closed at 11.46, a discount of 9 points under July. New Orleans May stands at a premium of 89 points over New York May. If there be any scientific reason for such a remarkable difference between the two markets, the student of cotton has been unable to find it."

KANSAS WHEAT IN BAD SHAPE.

CHICAGO, May 29.—Snow says: "The reports of crop deterioration from Kansas are nearly all from territory west of the 99th meridian. This district has been reported as ragged and uncertain all season and while there has been some further loss in the main it is a tardy recognition of a situation that has existed all season. It will be time enough to get seriously alarmed about Kansas when the crop promise east of the 99th meridian is dangerously threatened.

Frog Two Feet High, Eyes Like Teacups

HYNDMAN, PA., May 29.—This section is considerably stirred up over reports of a giant frog who has his abode near a big rock in Wills Creek. His frogship has caused consternation among the trainmen on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad because of his ability to imitate the deeptoned whistles on the freight engines.

Brakeman J. W. Fleegle, of Cumberland, Md., who saw the frog, says he stands two feet high and has eyes as big as teacups.

OPINION ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, May 29.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.: Wheat—The weather map shows mostly clear in the Northwest. We feel that purchases on breaks should be made.

Corn—Weather very favorable. We do not care to press the short side.

Oats—On any fair decline prefer the long side.

Provisions—The market seems to meet with good buying on all setbacks.

COURSE OF WHEAT RELYING ON CHARACTER OF WEATHER

CHICAGO, May 29.—The Inter Ocean says: "It was the general belief of wheat traders last night that the market from now on will be governed largely by the character of the weather and crop reports. The bull interests contend that sufficient damage has been done to winter wheat to warrant higher prices.

"There were many bears on corn last night who expect lower prices with an increased movement, which is due from now on. Those who are buying on breaks advise the theory that the movement will not come up to expectations of the bears. Conservative people are advising caution in buying oats on bulges, although they believe that a continuation of the buying that has of late been seen will carry prices higher."

GILES MAKES CONDITION OF COTTON 84.6 PER CENT

Miss Giles makes the condition of the cotton crop as of May 24 at 84.6, as compared with 80.8 on May 25 last year. She gives the acreage an increase of 3.7 per cent and the amount of land still to be planted 9 per cent, against 12 per cent last year; also approximate area planted and to be planted as 35,709,000 acres, compared with her estimate in 1912 of 34,424,000 acres picked.

The condition to May 24, by States, follows:

Virginia, 80, against 79; North Carolina, 82, against 83; South Carolina, 73, against 85; Georgia, 75, against 86; Florida, 89, against 80; Alabama, 79, against 79; Mississippi, 89, against 74; Louisiana, 85, against 72; Texas, 90, against 86; Arkansas, 88, against 68; Tennessee, 87, against 75; Oklahoma, 96, against 76. Total, 84.6, against 80.8.

COTTON ACREAGE INCREASES 4.8 P. C.

The Journal of Commerce Gives Number of Acres Planted in 1913 as 36,435,000.

NEW YORK, May 29.—The cotton acreage for the season of 1913, as determined by 1,907 special correspondents of The Journal of Commerce, shows an increase of 4.8 per cent over last year, based upon the revised estimate of the Government of 34,766,000 acres for 1912.

The area planted for 1913 would be 36,435,000 acres. Percentage condition of an average date of May 20 is 80.5, as compared with 76.9 a year ago and 79 for the ten-year acreage. In 1911 the percentage condition was 83.8. Figures for North and South Carolina are incomplete, owing to late planting and to the fact that a large proportion of the cotton is not yet up.

Acreage changes and the condition by States are shown in the following table:

States—	Acreage Estimate 1913.	Condition to May 20, 1913.	Condition to May 20, 1913.

Chapter I

THE way led along upon what had once been the embankment of a railroad. But no train had run upon it for many years. The forest on either side swelled up the slopes of the embankment and crested across it in a green wave of trees and bushes. The trail was as narrow as a man's body, and was no more than a wild-animal runway. Occasionally, a piece of rusty iron, showing through the forest mould, advertised that the rail and the ties still remained. In one place, a ten-inch tree, having through at a connection, had lifted the rail clearly into view. The tie had followed the rail, held to it by the spikes for its bed to be filled with ... so that now the crumbling ... half up at ...

His beard, which should have been snow white, but which showed the same weather-wear and camp-stain as his hair, fell nearly to his waist in a great tangled mass. About his chest and shoulders hung a single, mangy garment of goat-skin. His arms and legs, withered and skinny, betokened extreme age, as well as did their sunburn and scars and scratches betoken long years of exposure to the elements.

The boy, who led the way, checking the eagerness of his muscles to the slow progress of the elder, likewise wore a single garment—a ragged-edged piece of bearskin, with a hole in the middle through which he had thrust his head. He could not be more than twelve years old. Tuck... one ear was the freshly ... one hand he carried a ... He did not like them, and growled querulously. Slowly the boy fitted the arrow to the bow, and slowly he pulled the bowstring taut. But he never removed his eyes from the bear. The old man peered from under his green leaf at the danger, and stood as quietly as the boy. For a few seconds this mutual scrutinizing went on; then, the bear betraying a growing irritability, the boy, with a movement of his head, indicated that the old man must step aside from the trail and go down ... bankment. PONY CONTEST DRAWS ENTRANTS, CERTAIN OF SUCCESS, FROM AFAR

Atlanta children were the first to catch the fire of enthusiasm in The Georgian and American pony contest. The children out in the State and outside Georgia were a little slow at first.

But how they are coming now!

Every mail brings a heap of letters from distant addresses, and the letters are full of "ginger." Every girl or boy seems sure of winning.

Dorothy Davis, of Dothan, Ala., writes: "I have my subscription book, and so I am going to work in earnest now."

"Please send me subscription blanks, etc., so I can win a pony," as O. S. Morton, Jr., writes, is a more frequently used wording.

The flood of mail is becoming a serious problem. Once this week two men in the contest department worked all night answering letters, and then did not catch up entirely with the work. It is hoped, therefore, that contestants who do not receive answers the following day will remember that it is not always possible to go through all the letters, check all the votes and keep up with the routine work of the contest in a day, and be patient.

Names of contestants and their standing follow:

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Caponizing May Be Made Profitable Poultry Sideline

Can Be Made an Additional Source of Income—Questions and Answers.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Caponizing may be made a profitable side line upon every well regulated poultry plant of any size.

If well managed, it may be made an additional source of income, particularly where there is not a very remunerative market for broilers.

Upon many poultry plants the surplus cockerels are marketed as broilers that they may be gotten out of the way before they have eaten their heads off, as the saying goes. There are locations, however, where it is not at all convenient to get them into a market that will pay good prices. Where such conditions prevail, then it is that the business of caponizing comes in play and can often be made to turn the young male into capons that will grow into money-makers. Of course, one must have the proper kind of stock or the operation will not be a paying one. Take, for example, the smaller laying breeds like the Leghorns. It does not pay at all to try to make a paying capon of them. The increased weight will not be enough to justify it. And the quality of the flesh will not be enough improved to pay for the work. Where one breeds any of the Rock or Wyandotte family, the Reds or Orpingtons, it will be all right, for they will all make good ones, not only as to size, but in quality as well. A good heavy-boned Plymouth Rock cockerel can often be made to weigh from eight to ten pounds at ten to twelve months of age, and bring the top of the market for capons, which is usually about double that of the ordinary fowl upon the market. This, of course, pays well for the little extra trouble that is incurred for the operation and the chances of loss. Of course, when it comes to a real business for the best there is in it the Light Brahma and the Buff Cochin make the finest and best capons. They are so tender in fiber and the skin so loosely put on that they will allow for almost any kind of growth without becoming hidebound, as will many of the smaller breeds.

The proper time for doing the work of caponizing is between the ages of two and three months, at the time when they will weigh about two pounds. It should not be done when they weigh less than this, and if one waits much longer they get older and the chances of loss are much greater. It will not take any one of average intelligence to get accustomed to the mode of operation so that there will not average a loss of more than one or two in a hundred, which does not amount to anything when compared to the great gain in growth to be obtained after it is performed.

A good set of instruments and the dexterity that comes from a little experience is all that is essential to success. Although it may be done at any time of the year, the most propitious time is during the spring and summer when everything is at its best for good growth. There are no special things required, or extra housing; just good feed and plenty of it.

It is not possible as a rule to market them in the country towns, but at the finest hotels and resort places, where the price is not so important as the quality of the meat. We have known a very good trade to be worked up for them at the holiday season by visiting private families in the towns, telling them what you have and the splendid quality they will get from you. Then they make mighty good eating for home consumption, so much better than attempting to eat the great overgrown, strong-flavored cockerels late in the fall and winter.

Questions and Answers.

Judge F. J. Marshall.—Is it advisable to feed oats to hens as it comes from the field; that is, without being clipped or ground? I have been feeding about twice a week for some time, and my hens do not seem to thrive very well upon it. I would like to have your valued opinion about it. I shall thank you for the advice.

R. R. C., Locust Grove, Ga.

Answer.—It has been our experience to feed a good deal of oats to chickens of all ages from three months on up to grown fowls. When we did feed it, it was fed regularly once a day in moderate quantities and in connection with other grains. I believe your trouble is caused by your being afraid to feed it every day. Feeding as you have done but once a week the hens would fill up on it and get more than they really needed. When they get it every day they will only eat a small amount of it, then it is easily digested. We should advise you to feed it every day, at first in very small amounts, gradually increasing the amount. Always with some other grain, preferably cracked corn. Fed in this way, we see no real reason why you should have any trouble whatever, and it is a splendid food to induce laying along with corn. In fact, if one will take the trouble to parch it as coffee is browned in the oven until the points are almost burned, it will be the best laying food you can contrive. Do not, however, feed it to chicks under three months of age.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

New Hotel Ansley Will Open June 16

Building Completed at Cost of $500,000—West Harris Sale $20,000. Committee Meetings.

Monday, June 16, has been fixed as the date for the formal opening to the public of the Hotel Ansley, at the southwest corner of North Forsyth and James Streets. The hotel will be run on the European plan, and J. F. Letton will be the manager.

The structure was started in the spring of 1912, and is to cost $500,000. It is eleven stories high and contains 300 rooms. The Ansley Hotel Company is the builder. All but 40 of the rooms have private baths.

Interesting Deeds Recorded.

Deeds have gone to record in several interesting realty transfers. For $20,000 Mrs. Fannie B. Eady has sold to Mrs. Mabel H. Moody and Dayton Hale 41 and 43 West Harris Street, 50 by 192 feet and 100 feet west of Spring Street. The terms were $3,000 cash and four notes of $4,250 each, with interest at 6 per cent.

For $12,000 Mrs. Ellen McGowan Phelan Goldsmith has sold to William and J. A. Cook and G. R. Maddox 390 Whitehall Street, 50 by 196 feet, 100 feet southwest of Hood Street. The terms were $3,000 cash and the assumption of a $4,000 loan, with notes at 6 per cent.

For $5,000 E. A. Holbrook has sold to Sidney Hagerton a large building lot on Paces Ferry Road, 1,398 feet west of Tuxedo Drive. One thousand dollars was cash.

Healey Building Active.

The hole for the Healey Building foundations was fairly alive with steel girders Thursday morning. The steel gang has pushed this work fast since the arrival of the two monster derricks, and in another week there will be considerable framework in evidence. Thousands of people have stopped by to view the scene.

Peachtree Owners Hopeful.

Prominent members of the Peachtree Street property owners' committee, who appeared before the Finance Committee of Council this week to ask for $5,000 for widening Peachtree between Forsyth and Harris Streets, will go before that body again Friday morning. Considerable hope of success in this project has been expressed on account of the nominal amount asked for.

Whitehall's Chance Friday.

People conversant with city hall matters declare that Whitehall Street property owners have a better chance of an appropriation for regrading Whitehall than any of the various claimants who want improvements in different sections of the city. They base this assertion on the fact that council and the streets committee have already gone on record almost unanimously as favoring the Whitehall project, and the further fact that owners of properly have raised $17,000 and are asking the city for only $30,000 for the improvement.

A citizen whose business is in the city hall declared that should Mayor Woodward see fit for any reason to veto the appropriation, council would doubtless pass the measure over his veto, since the project is one of city-wide concern.

The proposition which Whitehall interests have put up to council is to cut down greatly at Trinity Avenue and fill correspondingly at Brotherton, in order to perfect the grade and provide an improvement of lasting benefit. This agitation was started months ago by leading representatives of the populous South Side, the argument being that the city needed an extension of its retail district, and that southward on Whitehall was the logical course for this to take. Incidentally, real estate dealers who are interested along Whitehall contend that prices have been proportionately too low, and they anticipate a quick rise and much activity as soon as the prayed-for improvements are assured.

Decatur's Home-Coming Day.

Realty prospects desiring to acquaint themselves with the advantages of Decatur will find a good opportunity, say DeKalb county citizens, in the annual Home-coming Day, June 3. Not only will DeKalb's chosen leaders regale the assembled throngs with oratory, but a systematic effort will be made to show visitors just as much of Decatur as possible. This suburban town has made rapid strides in the last few years, and its citizens are expected to welcome the opportunity to exhibit some of the things that have been accomplished. Land values have climbed to an unbelievable degree, and what is more, people are buying it.

To Build $8,000 House.

A permit has been asked of Building Inspector Hays for a two-story frame dwelling for Frederick Fayram, at 41 Oakdale Road, Oruid Hills. Day labor will be used.

The Stalwart Senate Should Stand by Our American Merchant Marine

The United States Senate fronts an opportunity and a duty in dealing with our merchant marine.

Public attention is rapidly focusing upon American maritime conditions, and it is high time that it did.

The favor with which the readoption of the early American discriminatory maritime policy is regarded by the thoughtful press and by influential Americans who are indifferent to foreign protests and threats is additionally reassuring.

Even more important, the people are realizing that an American deep sea shipping will form an urgently needed and entirely lacking secondary reserve for our navy.

Mr. Underwood's mere insertion of the thin edge of the wedge of discriminatory duties in his tariff bill has served to arouse both national and international interest.

Public indorsement of the policy is so strong that the stalwart Senate should promptly DRIVE IN THIS WEDGE. It will separate the United States from its trade agreements and conventions with other nations whose people know that the American navy will remain weak so long as it lacks the resource of a strong American shipping with officers and men.

The House tariff bill only provides a discount of 5 per cent of the duty on imports in vessels of American register. It applies to less than half our imports—only to those that are dutiable. It applies to only 10 per cent of our imports from South America, the other 90 per cent being duty free.

That discount will not suffice to attract American capital into oversea shipping with the new duties so low. The pending provision would give foreign yards the building of all the ships its enactment would bring under American register.

And finally there are conflicting opinions as to whether or not the withdrawal of the United States from trade conventions and agreements that now estop it from applying the policy is assuredly provided for.

THE SENATE MUST REMEDY EACH OF THESE DEFECTS AND OBSCURITIES. We must have a whole-hearted and not a half-hearted readoption and enforcement of the policy that gave American ships the carriage of 80 per cent of our imports and exports during all of the more than sixty years it was previously in force.

There is an overwhelming American demand for the repeal of all restraining conventions and suspensory laws that perpetuate our present maritime importance.

The need of the Nation, the need of our Navy, and the need of our foreign commerce alike demand it.

The Senate must infuse vigor and vim into this section of the House bill, so that its enforcement will fill every American shipyard with orders for oversea ships that will reassert American maritime independence and carry the American flag over all the seven seas to the business ports of the civilized world.

Big Business Men And Despotic Power

Judge Gary is the working head of the greatest industrial corporation in America—the United States Steel Corporation.

He is especially notable among the big business men of the country because he believes and has constantly declared during the last few years that the great interstate business concerns that now control most of the output of the necessaries of life MUST CEASE TO BE ARBITRARY AND DESPOTIC IN THE USE OF THIS POWER AND MUST SUBMIT THEMSELVES TO PUBLIC AUTHORITY.

Speaking to an organization of his business associates last week, Judge Gary remarked: "The President of the United States recently said that honest business need not be afraid. Well, let us be honest. Let us take him at his word; let us assume that he means exactly what he says."

The Georgian takes occasion to say that SOMETHING MORE THAN WHAT COMMONLY GOES BY THE NAME OF "HONESTY" IS NOW REQUIRED OF THE INDUSTRIAL LEADERS OF THE UNITED STATES.

What is required is that big business men shall have the high intelligence TO HATE THEIR OWN ARBITRARY POWER OVER THE INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATION OF THE COUNTRY.

It is time that these men should come to understand that it is absolutely impossible for the republic to submit to irresponsible power of any kind. IF THE REPUBLIC IS TO ENDURE, THE ECONOMIC DESPOTS CANNOT STAND.

The principle that all power over the essentials of life must be in the hands of men accountable to the people is the principle upon which the political and legal systems of the United States are founded. This is no fine-spun theory. It is a part of the everyday consciousness of the American man.

It follows from this principle that whenever any man in America is seen by the people to be exercising a selfish and unregulated power over the people's lives, IT IS IMPOSSIBLE FOR THE PEOPLE TO REGARD HIM OTHERWISE THAN AS A PUBLIC ENEMY.

The people are patient with private monopolies only so long as there is a reasonable doubt whether they really are private monopolies. But as soon as it becomes perfectly plain that certain men are levying private taxes upon the people, the people cannot and will not any longer have patience with such men.

Judge Gary has pointed out the right road for corporate managers who are suspected and who suspect themselves of being monopolists. Many months ago he told a committee of Congress that the industrial trusts must be controlled by the Government—even to the legal limitation of dividends and of commodity prices. In short, Judge Gary is the one corporation manager in the country whose intelligence has been absolutely clear on the point that no monopoly can endure in a republic—EXCEPT A PUBLIC MONOPOLY.

In quoting the words of President Wilson last week, Judge Gary spoke truly enough—but feebly. He has often spoken better from other texts.

It is not by mere scrupulosity, not by mere freedom from rascality, that big business men are to set themselves right before the country or to set the country right in the light of its democratic tradition.

THE COUNTRY EXPECTS TO SEE AN UPRISING OF BIG BUSINESS MEN, WHO ARE AMERICANS MORE THAN THEY ARE MONOPOLISTS—WHO HATE ARBITRARY AND DESPOTIC POWER AND ARE DETERMINED TO PUT IT DOWN.

Rev. John E. White Writes on The Biggest Politics

R R

Three Great Races---the Teuton, Slav and Mongolian---Are Lined Up on the Map of the World, and the American People Are at a Perilous Point About It.

WRITTEN FOR THE GEORGIAN

By REV. DR. JOHN E. WHITE

Pastor Second Baptist Church

IT was stated that Dr. John Bassett Moore had been brought into President Wilson's administration with no reference whatever to politics.

That was a very great mistake.

Dr. John Bassett Moore is First Assistant Secretary of State precisely because he is such a politician — the broadest, biggest, world-wideliest politician at Washington.

The sort of politics that absorbs Professor Moore's attention is not as scrappy as the race for Constable in a small town, but for variety, strategy and ominousness it is the big game of the world.

It has been Professor Moore's life work to study the vaster forces of the human movement called civilization. He is the astronomer of the Democratic administration. With his telescope sweeping immense political areas, he locates the points of disturbance in the field of civilization and tells his superiors what to do about it.

He keeps a wise eye on the great mass formations in the scrimmage of nations and races. He has a man's job all right.

The Big Line-Up.

At this moment three great races—the Teuton, Slav and Mongolian—are lined up on the map of Europe and Asia.

They are looking each other in the eyes and each is confident of its ultimate ascendency. This is politics more than continental or international. It is the biggest, deepest, most titanic situation of human competition the mind of man ever contemplated.

The smaller questions occupying the foreground of public interest are bagatelles compared with the issue presented by racial ambition. Such immense energies are involved that to think of them as let loose upon each other appals the imagination.

Outside university cloisters, from which Dr. John Bassett Moore has emerged, few people have dared to entertain the problem of collision on so colossal a scale. Within each of these great race masses we are told that instinctive tendencies are not controlling the point of view of diplomacy, and these tendencies have become manifestly contripetal.

The family disputes within each of the race groups are to grow less and less frequent under the resistless pressures of race unities. Quarrels between England and Germany, for instance, or between Russia and the smaller Slav States, are decreasingly capable of serious consequences.

The get-together race movement is dominating the motive in world politics and the indications are that the Mongolian race will be the first to arrive at the goal of solidarity in a political game.

The Japanese Imbroglio.

Here is uncovered the background which renders American complications with Japan at the present time a subject of intense solicitude all over the world. The London Times is not given to groundless alarm and its Foreign Editor, Sir Valentine Chirot, has just sounded a solemn note on the subject:

"The ultimate point of dispute," he says, "does not affect the United States alone, still less California. It is a world question essentially. Fears of the inhabitants of the Pacific slope may be premature, but they are not entirely groundless. They spring from the instinct of self-preservation and if the present minor dispute is composed they will assuredly recur."

Commenting editorially on the situation, The Times says that: "However it may be settled now, the issue will have to receive the earnest attention of the white races in times to come."

The American people have heretofore occupied a superior attitude toward this "big politics" and has kept away from it, but fate seems now about to thrust upon us the necessity of putting out our hand toward it.

It is impossible to exaggerate the consequences which depend upon the hand we put out. If it is a fist we may as well get ready to tax ourselves, our children and children's children with the cost. There will be the price of trouble enough to last a hundred years.

Putting Our Fist In.

The expense of warships and army equipment is an insignificant item in the reckoning. The losses in markets affecting American labor and capital, and particularly the cotton trade through a long period would be staggering.

But the really great sacrifice that a gladiatorial attitude our part in the problem of big politics would exact of us would be the surrender of the moral supremacy in relation to these things which the founders of the American republic committed to us and which the historians have cheerfully accorded.

Is it not our better destiny to play the part of a big, fearless, chivalric brother with courage, firmness and wisdom, and with fairness and patience, than to seek the role of the "Big Fist," or the "Big Stick" with the commonplace distinction which history has committed to all its boastful and selfish peoples?

Letters From The Georgian's Readers

FREE SCHOOL BOOKS.

Editor The Georgian:

The Constitution of Georgia provides for free public schools and provides a school fund for the support of such schools. The Constitution further provides for local taxation for public schools.

I hope that the Legislature will pass a law authorizing the State School Commissioner or some other public authority to purchase for the use of the public schools of the State all school books necessary for the children attending the schools.

This law would result in the saving of thousands of dollars annually to the people of Georgia.

I do not think the State itself should embark in the publication of free school books, but I am sincerely of the opinion that the State and towns and cities should furnish free school books.

A few of the reasons for my opinion are as follows:

1. The child of the poor man has the same chance to obtain an education as the child of the rich or well-to-do man.

2. The "thorough system of common schools" provided for by the Constitution of Georgia is thus made in fact a "thorough system" because to the free school house and free tuition is added free school books.

3. The work of the school can be begun without delay when school books are furnished at public expense and thus become effective from the beginning of the school term.

4. Uniformity in the use of school books throughout the State is thus secured—although under the Georgia adoption law uniformity is already obtained in the County schools.

5. The common schools, established for the education of the common people, are made popular and attendance is encouraged and prolonged.

6. The school books are public property and through the use of them respect for public property may be taught.

The following States have laws providing for free school books for the public schools: Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania, Nebraska, Maryland, Wyoming and Utah.

SHEPARD BRYAN,
Former Member Atlanta Board of Education.

WHY IS A FIRETRAP?

Editor The Georgian:

The Georgian quoted Professor Slaton, superintendent of Atlanta public schools, the other day as saying, "The Atlanta schools are firetraps."

The firetrap may be avoided by insisting that the architect observe the following simple rules: Every school house of more than one story should have at least two stairways, located at extreme opposite ends of the building, so that should fire break out at, say, the east end, and block that exit, the west end stairway would be the last part of the building to burn.

The stairs should not be located in the main corridors, where they would form a trap in case of panic, but in separate stairway halls, running out at right angles to the main corridors. They should land in immediate proximity to the exits, so the pupil will not have to run through the building looking for a way out. They should be 4½ feet wide, and have small round hand rails on both sides.

The main corridors leading to exits should be entirely free from obstruction of all kinds. The corridors should give free and unobstructed passage directly to exit doors that open outward at a slight push from inside.

Have all the steps that lead to the first floor on the outside of the building, so that if, in a rush to get out, a child falls or is thrown down he will be on the outside, where he can be rescued. Have no inside vestibule steps.

Locate heating plant near the center of the building, in an absolutely fireproof room, with entrance from outside the building only.
