

Great Britain Makes the Official Announcement and Adds That Steps Will Be Taken to Prevent Disturbance in the Price of Cotton.

PROTEST TO BE MADE BY THE UNITED STATES

Negotiations Are Expected to Draw Out Full Explanation of the Reasons Behind the British Order—American Protest Will Cite Previous Policy of Britain in Regard to Cotton.

London, August 21.—Cotton has been secured absolutely in the United States, according to a statement issued by the foreign office this afternoon.

The statement declares that the government proposes to initiate measures to relieve depression which might temporarily reduce the cotton market because of the contraband order.

It was learned upon inquiry at the foreign office that the French government will issue a similar order early tomorrow. The announcement follows: "His majesty's government has declared cotton absolute contraband."

Based upon figures and estimates in the office of Comptroller General W. A. Wright, showing a decrease of some $1,675,000, and calculations of expense for next year, it appears that the tax rate will be fixed at somewhere between 4.7 mills and 4.8 mills. The present rate is 4.5 mills.

The decrease in revenue this year as a result of the cotton extraordinary session of the general assembly (taking no action which will further reduce the income of the state) shows the income of the state to be reduced by the extra session, however, it appears that it will be practically impossible to bring the rate of the tax on the full constitutional limit of 4 mills.

STATE TAX RATE WILL BE RAISED

Will Probably Be Fixed at 4.7 or 4.8 Mills as the Result of Decrease in Taxable Values.

The tax rate for the state of Georgia for the ensuing year, it is expected, will be fixed about Tuesday or Wednesday of this week.

Asa Candler Will Erect Warehouse and Compress To Aid Southern Farmers

Well-Known Atlantan Pays $120,000 for Forty Acres of Land, a Part of Anthony Murphy Estate on South Side of City.

$500,000 WILL BE SPENT MAKING IMPROVEMENTS; WORK TO BEGIN MONDAY

By This Arrangement 200,000 Bales of Cotton May Be Housed and Money Borrowed on This Collateral at a Rate of Seven Cents a Pound.

Through the J. R. Smith & J. H. Erving Realty company, Asa Candler has bought 40 acres of the Anthony Murphy estate on the south side of the city, lying between the Central of Georgia and Southern railways, on which Mr. Candler, through the Central Bank and Trust corporation, will within the next two months, expend a sum of $100,000 to build a mammoth cotton compress and cotton warehouse.

The proposed warehouse for Atlanta, which will be completed on Monday morning, will house 100,000 bales. The buildings will be of absolute fire-proof construction. The complete work on which work commences on Monday morning, will house 100,000 bales. The buildings will be of absolute fire-proof construction.

The decision of the allied nations to move the contraband of war has had a gloomy for Georgia cotton growers. But the announcement of Mr. Candler that arrangements would be made to house the cotton in the bales of their cotton, on which they may borrow money at 6 per cent interest, will be a great relief to the negotiable warehouse receipts, which will guarantee the weight, grade and quality of the cotton in the situation considerably.

Italian Ambassador Leaves Constantinople Following the Declaration of War. Notice of Declaration Is Given in All Capitals.

TURKEY HAS SUPPORTED REVOLT AGAINST ITALY

Alle g e d Constantinople Has Been Encouraging the Rebels in Libya—It Is Also Charged That the Ottoman Government Has Been Preventing Italian Civilians From Leaving Turkey

London, August 21.—Italy has declared war on Turkey, and the Italian ambassador, has left Constantinople. This announcement is made in a Reuters telegram from Constantinople via Berlin and Amsterdam.

Marquis di Caserta, Italian ambassador to Turkey, today handed to the porte a note declaring Italy considered the state of war between Italy and Turkey, and demanded his passport, according to an official telegram from Constantinople received at Amsterdam and transmitted to the Central News Bureau.

Although Italy declared war on Austria May 23, there never has been any declaration of war between Italy and Germany, nor until now between Italy and Turkey.

Friction between Turkey and Italy, however, has been in evidence since the shortly after the latter's entry into the war. Early in June there were reports that Italian consuls were being ordered to leave Turkey. Later charges were made that the Ottoman government was preventing consuls from leaving, and that similar coercion was being extended over Italian civilians who wished to quit Turkish soil.

On July 29 Rome advised Italy had declared war on Turkey, and that the United States asking it to use its influence to protect Italian subjects in Turkey. The United States has been becoming more interested from leaving was reiterated.

Twenty Vessels by Turkey. The Italian cabinet, it is supposed, proposed a cessation of relations with Turkey, and almost immediately the Italian government began to gather evidence which would show that Turkey had violated the Cretan district in Tripoli and help secure the submission of the annual rebellion in that locality. Instead of doing so, it was alleged, Enver Pasha, the Turkish war minister, last March sent a telegram to the Cretan district, to Tyrrhenia to foment rebellion.

On August 1, the Italian ambassador to Constantinople made a protest to Ottoman authorities towards Italian subjects. It was reported that Italian consuls still were being detained in Turkey. At that time tension between Italy and Turkey was becoming more acute daily.

It was announced on August 4 that Italy had asked for categorical explanations concerning Turkey's alleged refusal to withdraw her troops from the Cretan district in Tripoli and it was described as her last ultimatum. It then was announced as her last ultimatum.

THE HIGH COST OF LIVING

Each family pays $60 more for living expenses than it did last year.

The greater part of this increase goes into the higher cost of food products.

War and hard times have not materially checked the upward trend.

This financial barometer gives a very important reason why people should buy intelligently.

Proper selection of time, place and merchandise frequently means a lessened price.

KEEP COTTON SEED MEAL HERE, PRICES DENSE

State Veterinarian Returns From Southern Cattlemen's Convention.

What the exportation to foreign countries of cotton seed meal should not be discouraged, but rather should the feeding of cotton seed meal to live stock here in the south be encouraged was the sense of the Southern Cattlemen's convention held in Birmingham this week, stated Dr. Peter F. Bahnsen, state veterinarian and one of Georgia's delegates to that convention, who returned to his office in the state capital yesterday.

"This sentiment was brought out in a number of papers on feeding," continued Dr. Bahnsen in referring to this meeting. "It was shown in these papers that at the present price of meal the nutritional value of the plant food in cotton seed meal for feeding was worth probably the cost of the meal. From this it is seen that the cost of the cotton seed meal on cotton seed meal is practically nil."

Engineer Who Saved 700 Lives Is Here As Guest of Road

J. R. Clifton, of Fort Worth, Texas, engineer who saved "the man of the moment" for his deed of heroism at the throttle of a locomotive in which he was killed at Wichita Falls, Texas, last June, was in Atlanta yesterday afternoon while en route upon an opportunity awarded by his employer.

Clifton's heroism was pronounced by many newspapers to have been one of the most notable instances of "efficiency" in railroad history. Drawing a train of nine cars or more, loaded with passengers who had been marooned by the floods near Wichita Falls, Texas, Clifton had rolled upon the jolly train at Fort Worth and was on the road that spans the big Wichita-A mile before the terminal station.

LOW RATES GRANTED TO CHAMBER MEETING

Preliminary Plans for Annual Meeting of Organization Are Announced.

In a telegram to J. C. Beam, assistant general passenger agent of the Southern railway, from E. R. Carr, general passenger agent of the road, who is attending the meeting of the Railroad Passenger association in Chicago, it is announced that the association has voted unanimously to grant low round-trip rates to the annual meeting of the Georgia Chamber of Commerce at Macon on September 29 and 30.

The rates will be based on table A, which is one of the lowest rates put in on special occasions by the Georgia railway and every road in Georgia will put on this rate. This is a striking evidence of the regard in which the Georgia Chamber of Commerce is held by the railroad forces of the state, and emphasizes the importance of the annual meeting of the chamber, to be held at Macon on the 29th and 30th of September.

HOWARD SPAULDING

Mrs. HOWARD SPAULDING
from UNDERWOOD & UNDERWOOD, N.Y.

Mrs. ELIZABETH GOODRICH

WHAT, exactly, did she say? And did little Miss Elizabeth Goodrich really intend that whatever it was should acetylene a space in Mrs. Catherine Barker Spaulding's bridal party big enough for her own piquant figure to slip through to the bright, bright light of "My dear, have you heard?"

Did she honestly believe that Howard Spaulding had one eye on her friend's $30,000,000 fortune—and say as much? And if she did were her expressions dressed up in the glittering, barbed, Bar-Bib that lends so much interest to her usual observations?

Is that what made the groom angry? Or was her remark merely the pussy-pawed expression of dislike for the man who supplanted her in her dearest friend's affections?

Or—oh mystery!—did she call him "The Thirty-Million-Dollar Nobody Home?" Did she?

What Was the Remark by Which Elizabeth Goodrich Fell Out With the Bridegroom, Caused the Bride Anxious Moments, and Nearly Broke Up the Wedding Party, of the Richest Girl in America?

The guests were met, the feast was set—or just about to be—in the gorgeous Barker home at Harbor Springs. They'd come from far and near, the guests, from Chicago and St. Louis and New York and the far, far west. And from wherever they came they brought the dignity of great wealth and social prestige, for they were attending the wedding of the richest nineteen-year-old girl in the world.

'Twas a wild week for Harbor Point. The house party danced and drove, and tanned and banqueted and ran the Katy Fritz, favorite motor-boat of the bride, round and round the lake. It really looked as though there'd have to be a let down somewhere before somebody's nervous system went to pieces.

The bridal party was picked and the ushers were picked and the newspapers greeted their names. Miss Elizabeth Goodrich, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert W. Goodrich, of Chicago, the bride-to-be's boon companion and dearest, dearest friend, was to be the maid of honor.

But Miss Goodrich has long been possessed of an entertaining and equilibrium-jarring way of calling a spade a darn shovel. Which bit of diversion she allowed herself, he said, when she felt herself getting bored at the Barker house party.

Nobody knew very much about it until the dinner which the bride's guardian, James B. Forgan, of Chicago, gave for her three days before the wedding. The maid of honor wasn't present. She was ill, her family said. But the next day the older women in the Harbor Point households hoped to be affected by a break began a frantic attempt at patching-up. Miss Goodrich announced her withdrawal from the wedding party by returning the gown which had been the gift of the bride. She said further that she wouldn't be recalled. Mrs. Goodrich sent forth word that there'd been a trivial difficulty with the bridegroom; the Spauldings refused to discuss the affair at all. And a polite war on the eve of the ceremony was averted by splitting the ranks of house guests invited to a big dinner at the Goodrich cottage; sending most of them to the Harbor Point Club where Miss Elizabeth, still pouting, entertained them. Miss Rosemond Goodrich, a bridesmaid, took care of the bridal party at the cottage. Mrs. Goodrich made it evident that she was upbidding her daughter by merely looking in at the Casino dance which followed the dinner. Miss Elizabeth attended the dance, carefully refraining from dancing with Howard Spaulding.

And on the day of the wedding, while the procession was forming and the reception rooms were buzzing with anticipation, and Father Blackmann was waiting on the sun porch, Miss Elizabeth walked into the cottage and took a place among the guests.

"Now what do you suppose she'd said about the groom that started the two-n-to-ya-your-yard row?"

Mrs. Catherine Barker Spaulding and Miss Elizabeth Goodrich were most closely associated long, long before Spaulding loomed on their horizon. Time ago they were members of a coterie which included Miss Edith Harrison, of Chicago, and Carter H. Harrison, Jr. Miss Goodrich has always been loyal to the old association.

But that clique disintegrated; the girls went east to school; Harrison married Miss Lucy Brady. And the young man who lived in the Harbor Point cottage next to the Barker summer home began to take on definiteness.

All her life little Mrs. Spaulding's existence had been haunted by shadows lurking in its outskirts; shadows which at once materialized in candidates for matrimony the moment she turned her eyes on them. She was the richest little girl in America, sole owner of the Haskell-Barker Freight Car Company, of Michigan City, Ind., with an income of $60,000 yearly and the expectation of receiving her fortune when she is twenty-six.

She had been coming toward this great wealth since she was three years old. When she was only thirteen her mother died; six months later her father died. James B. Forgan, president of the Chicago First National Bank, who was appointed her guardian, did all in his power to shield her from publicity, fortune-hunters and the freakish trend toward which turn the thoughts of many rich girls. His ward was a level-headed, kindly-hearted, healthy girl, unpretentious and thoroughly American, who liked to swim, dance, play golf and tennis much too well to think much about men or bizarre escapades. She traveled in South America and through the states with her governess, Miss Margaret O'Regan, and her French teacher, Mrs. Currie. And the thousands of letters mailed her from all parts of the world by all classes of men, asking her hand in marriage, never found their way nearer her than her maid's waste-basket.

The little rich girl studied nursing and household economy and cooking, quite as though she expected some time to make a five-room bank case for someone. Miss Goodrich shared her school days and her confidences.

Then Howard Spaulding began to be more and more in evidence, not only at the Barker summer home, but in Michigan City, Ind. The rich little girl spent the Easter holidays a year ago at his parents' home in Chicago. Finally he left Yale, where he was studying law, to become an assistant secretary in the Haskell-Barker plant. And from that time, says rumor, the antagonism between him and Miss Goodrich began to be apparent. Whether or not she mentioned her dislike isn't stated.

Which brings us back to the original point of query, did she really consider Spaulding a "Thirty Million Dollar Nobody Home?"

What did she say?

Mr. Forgan evidently didn't class him (thus. He knew the young man as a friend of his ward's; regarded him as a delightful young person to associate with a girl who wouldn't think of marrying for oil, ever so many years!

Consequently he was surprised when the couple appeared before him and demanded his indorsement and blessing. He reminded his ward that she was only nineteen; she wanted everybody to enjoy the day. She ordered a tent built on the lawn and brought a three-string band from Chicago to play for their dances, and nothing but garden flowers were allowed to decorate the parties she gave and that were given for her by her friends. It was all very simple and "folksy" and everybody had the loveliest kind of time. That is, everybody had until Miss Goodrich let go of that three-edged remark.

It was pointed out afterward that by the terms of her father's will the bride may not settle a cent of her fortune on her husband unless she does it in her own will. A trust deed of the estate of the late John H. Barker provides that the heirless shall receive $60,000 yearly until she is twenty-one; $150,000 until she is twenty-six; after that the entire income of the trust fund except what is necessary to pay other annuities.

The deed also provides that payments to Mrs. Spaulding are to be made directly to her by check or draft payable to her order and shall not be made to any other person or on any written or verbal order given by her, or on any transfer or assignment made by her or cracked by operation of law.

All of which seems to knock the rumor that had her settling a fortune on Spaulding in a prenuptial contract.

Anyway, the bride and groom departed for the west and Honolulu, where they will spend some time on their year's trip around the world, with the public at large staring with curiosity.

Just what did Miss Goodrich say? To whom did she say it and why? Did she really believe that Spaulding had in mind those thirty million round, beautiful dollars, and if so, did she express her belief? Or did she cast odium upon his mentality by dubbing him a "Thirty million dollar nobody home?"

What DID she say?

was reported that a declaration of war by Italy would be announced on the sending of about 150,000 men to the aid of the Franco-British force on Gallipoli peninsula.

It was announced August 19 that a strong squadron of fast Italian cruisers was in readiness to sail from Genoa, Italy, at a moment's notice. It was expected that the warships would be sent against Turkey if the latter declined to satisfy Italian demands for the release of Italian subjects held in the Balkan empire.

At a meeting of the Italian cabinet yesterday, Baron Sonnino, the foreign minister, presented an exhaustive report on the Turkish situation. He declared Turkish provocations have been increasing since the outbreak of hostilities. He said that Italy had been instructed to hand to the port a note asking for the release of Italian subjects held in Constantinople and that a reply was expected Saturday.

REASONS FOR ACTION.

London, August 21.—The Italian government says a British dispatch from Rome has sent to all its representatives in the Balkans and the Near East forth the questions at issue between Italy and the other belligerents.

Italy asks an explicit promise of support from the free government of Bulgaria and the free government of Greece, and the Italian government has sent instructions to its consuls in those countries to demand that they support Italy.

PEOPLE'S VOICES

Socialist Leader Tells Reichstag War Will Stop Whenever the Enemies of Germany Are So Inclined.

Berlin, August 21.—(Via London.)—In the debate today in the Reichstag, Dr. Eduard David, the socialist leader, said: "There lives in the hearts of the German people as in all other peoples, a longing for the day of restoration of peace. It were ill for humanity if it were otherwise. The European peoples are bleeding from thousands and millions of deaths. Every day of the war means further further destruction of man."

"Therefore, I point again today to the declaration which our party has made in the Reichstag on August 19th, 1914, that peace must be made to the best of our enemies are inclined to make peace."

"Last for conquest must not prolong this war unecessarily. Emperor Wilhelm and the chancellor's speech yesterday were very wise. Unfortunately, Germany's enemies are not so wise. Their leading statesmen are determined to continue the war until they have learned their lesson. They are still looking for a peace which would be to the disadvantage of Germany. They say they are their ally, and hope to see Germany's command and military power, by continuing the war, their ally to be completely destroyed. If this can be done, they will be their ally to be completely destroyed."

How Turk Snipers Deceive Allies

At Gallipoli Peninsula various Turkish snipers and sharpshooters have adopted the novel ruse of covering themselves with branches of trees and bushes as they advance on the allies. By this method they get into close range and pick of many men. The illustration shows a Turk captured by Britishers while so disguised.

Little Hope for the Liner Marrowline and the 93 Persons on Board.

New Orleans, August 21.—Fears that the liner Marrowline, which was sunk in the recent West Indian hurricane, were increased when the steamship Marrowline of the same line arrived here late today and reported that the missing vessel had not been sighted nor heard from. The Marrowline left Belize, Honduras, August 11, with twenty-five passengers and a crew of sixty-five men, and should have reached here Monday night. The Housekeeper's Council Table of food. Low temperature delays bacterial growth and thus makes fresh fruit available throughout the year, but at high cost of operation.

A Page of Practical Talks On the Home, Conducted by Dorothy Dolan

There are several methods of canning, and the secret of success in each is absolute sterilization. The best and easiest method of canning are cooking the fruits in an open kettle; cooking the fruits in a pressure cooker; cooking the fruits in a steamer or in boiling water, and steaming the fruit before it is put into the jar.

Glass is the most satisfactory jar to use in canning. Glass jars are becoming so universally in favor that they are taking the place of tin cans for everything; even for tomatoes. They are more economical than tin, for although the glass costs more in the beginning, it lasts and can be used over and over again. While there are many kinds of jars, the preference should usually be given to those with wide mouths. In canning grapes or jelly it is important that the jars or berries should not be over-ripe. Fruit for preserves should be fresh, solid and not over-ripe. If over-ripe some of the spores may survive the boiling and fermentation takes place in a short time. In preparing the fruit, wash all pieces, then peel with a silver knife, core or remove the seeds or pits as the case may be. Peaches, pears or apples may be kept from discoloring if they are dropped after they are pared into cold water to which a little vinegar or lemon juice may be added.

Canned pears—Twenty-four Bartlett pears, eight cups water, two cups sugar. Bartlett pears are the best for canning. Put the water and sugar into a preserving bottle. Let the syrup come to boiling point and skim off the foam if any rises. While the syrup is heating carefully halve, peel and core the pears, being careful not to use those that are over-ripe or imperfectly shaped.

Drop pieces into a basin of cold water until all are pared. Put the halved pears into the boiling syrup, but do not stir. Take a large roasting pan with handles and place in it as many sterilized canning jars as it will hold. Pour some rapid water in the pan to a depth of about two inches, and place the pan on the side of the stove. The water will get hot and keep the jars warm. Sterilize the rubber rings and covers. By this time the fruit will be boiling. When the pears commence to lose their hard whiteness they are ready to take off. Lift out pieces separately with a spoon and put them into the hot jars. Fill jars and cover with the syrup, fill even with the rings and covers on and screw tight.

Canned cherries—The sweet exheart cherries are the best for canning. Stone the cherries and save the juice. Sterilize glass jars and their covers for twenty minutes in boiling water. Fill one can at a time with cherries. Have ready a syrup made by allowing three pounds of sugar and one-half pint of water to every six quarts of cherries. Boil the sugar and water for ten minutes. Then pour the hot syrup into the jars; cook in the oven or in a steamer for fifteen minutes. Take out, adjust the rubber, fill up with scalding syrup and seal. A few of the cherry stones may be added to give flavor.

Canned grapes—Stem some also grapes. Wash them and put into a clean jar that has a tight, sealable cover. Put a silver spoon into the jar so as not to break the glass. Cover the grapes with boiling water. Do this three times, draining off the water each time. Make a syrup with one cupful of sugar and one cupful of water. Pour it over the grapes and seal.

Blackberry Jelly—The unenlarged berry is the best for making jelly and should be rather immature. Put the berries into a stone jar. Stead in a pan of cold water, cover the top of the jar and boil slowly until the berries are quite soft. Now strain the juice and to each pint allow one pound of sugar by the following method: Put the juice in a clean pan and boil for twenty minutes. Heat the sugar, add it to the boiling juice and stir until the sugar is thoroughly dissolved. Then allow to boil again, pour into hot jelly glasses and seal.

Viivian's Heart to Heart Chat

A NUMBER of girls have asked the all-important question during the last few weeks, "Is it worth while to look for beauty and charm of manner in the man who is to become your life partner?"

There are a few Apollos in this world as there are Venuses and it is not necessary to have either Venuses or Apollos to make married life happy and worth while.

I grant there are many diverse opinions as to the qualities that make for beauty in man or woman. One woman will look for physical perfections, such as good figure, fine features, a clear complexion. Another will take as her standard an expressive face, which means clear eyes, a pleasant smile and plenty of intelligence that makes the face interesting and worth while.

If you were to choose between the two types of men I would prefer the second type. It is a more worth while type and wears better. Good looks are an attraction in either sex, but should be backed by more staid qualities to be made lasting—beauty handsome men are rare, and this very fact tends to make them self-satisfied and egotistical. Unless a man has an unusually strong character he is bound to be made conceited by constant flattery and attention. If he is level-headed he will argue that his good looks are merely accidental and he will be no less eager to cultivate other qualities.

Egotism is less likely to be pronounced in an interesting and clever man and for two reasons. Though he may be interesting by nature, he has cultivated his cleverness by hard work and therefore has little time and inclination to be egotistical. Even a homely man may be charming and worth while providing he makes an effort to develop his mind and cultivate a pleasant personality. It is a simple but arduous manner he can accentuate his mentality and manner to a point where his looks really count for little. He certainly will make a much more agreeable companion through life than the handsome man who has good looks and few manners. The commonplace adage that beauty is skin deep is as true for a handsome man as it is for a good-looking woman. Good looks have a certain recognized value, but the costly clothes which they have a certain place. They cannot be counted of supreme value for either sex.

Cheery Fireplace Is Woman's Best Aid in Making the Home Popular Family Meeting Place

Here is the "soul of the house"—the common meeting place for the family—the room which comes nearest to giving your children and guests the cheerful, congenial atmosphere so often the chief attraction in club life. The happiness of your family's life depends largely upon the joy and good fellowship found in their "living" room.

By MADAME MAISON.

SOME one has said that the "living room is the soul of the house." Surely it should be the very center of the room and the magnet that draws the family circle together with a cord that binds and warms not only the physical body but the very innermost hearts. Who could ever imagine being chimney or confidential over a steam radiator or a furnace register? While this is midsummer, there are many cool days and evenings by seasons or in the mountains when the glow from an open fire is most grateful.

There is a good arrangement for either a hall or living-room; just imagine it if you can. Have the fireplace bricked to the ceiling with a soft oriental oblong brick that has the very softest of dark colors which go well with any color-scheme, as they blend with any woodwork and are equally suitable for the simplest bungalow or the most expensive house.

If you have an old clock and do not know just where to put it, have a niche built just to fit over the wooden mantel shelf and there it will seem at home and tick off the merry hours in a most contented fashion. On this mantel place a couple of pewter plates and an old ginger jar for holding the marginals if they come in in season, marginals and naturals being especially good. Black frogs and a black wire screen will be in keeping, with a galvanized or bricked hearth wide enough to be of some service. Large oval rag rugs will be in keeping with a galvanized table at one side and an old-fashioned wooden settle at the other, piled with pillows covered with linen crash, which washes beautifully. A beamed ceiling adds to such a room and the woodwork may be stained any shade of brown, gray, green, or a dark mahogany, as the owner deems best. Leave the walls in the rough sand-finished plaster or do them in one of the many ornamental papers, which are always pleasing as a background.

If you put frames of dull, carved gold (wood) on the photographs, I am sure you will like them. For the etchings, if in the brownish tint I would have narrow frames of brown wood. You can also match the grayish ones in wood. Keep them alike and hang low and keep them together. The water colors must be hung where the light best suits them. The oil paintings of your ancestors may appropriately hang in the large combination living-room and hall. For the mirror over the hall table I would suggest dull gray silk cords tied with a bow and tassels at the top.

You will find a brick house warmer in winter and cooler in summer than one of frame. Had you considered stucco? I am rather partial to a house built of common brick, then stuccoed over. White trim is usually selected; have the window sills of stucco. I think a house built of tile and then stuccoed is very satisfactory. I would not consider frame. I am sure you will both come to an agreement and be glad that you can build, even if the house is small. There is no joy to be compared to living under one's own roof tree.

Reply to Victoria.

Frame or Brick House.

We would like your advice regarding a new house we are to build, just seven rooms and in the country. My husband thinks frame the best, and I want brick, as I think it will be less expensive in the future, though more costly to build at first. I do not want a red brick. If we do have brick of dark color, what trimming would you have where paint is used? I mean what color. I enjoy your suggestions in the Herald very much.

Inspiring Thoughts for Young Mothers

PERHAPS you have never stopped and thought, dear little mother, of what is the best inheritance you can give your child. If you were suddenly asked the question, you would no doubt answer that you want her to have a healthy body, an intelligent mind and a sturdy character. If you grant you that this is a worthy ambition, but it is really a part—not the whole.

You should want your child to have a quick imagination, because it is an essential part of her education and much of her future happiness depends on it. You can only get from life and the world what you bring to them. Much more depends on yourself than on the conditions about you. This is a large, splendid world, full of beauty and the things that make you laugh and thrill. The beauties of life and the world may appear lifeless because you lack the imagination to appreciate the hidden meanings of those things.

It is of minor importance at the start whether your child will ever become a great writer, or painter, or artist of any kind. The important point is that she may have a vivid imagination, which means finding the hidden meaning and the real truth in nature and in its mysteries.

You, dear little thoughtful mother, are the real keeper of your child's heart and imagination and it is your duty to take that dormant imagination and quicken it into being. As Florence Hill Winterburn says in her book, "The Mother in Education," "Little is gained indeed by attention to a child's purely mental processes, even when they are honestly studied. We gain more by considering his emotional expressions."

"I believe that every normal child has an instinctive appreciation of the good and the beautiful at least equal to the guiding light of our own adult experience. There is in fact a curious likeness between the pure impulse of a simple understanding and the aspiration of a mind broadly cultured. A little child's estimate of literature which is at all within the realm of his comprehension, is usually that of respect; it is often acute, searching just."

"A book that demands hard thinking cannot divide infantile fancy by an overlapping pleasantness above dullness. The demand a child makes of a story is that it shall have vitality, excitement that can kindle interest. Honor, pathos or a lively bit of talk stir him more than the older readers because his susceptibility has not been dulled by abuse."

Another Goode tells have always been and always shall be popular with little folk. Long before they understood the rhyme and even the meaning of "Little Jack Horner" and "This Little Pig Went to Market" they enjoyed the rhythm of the words and the action of playing with their fingers or toes.

Once you have called this wonderful thing called imagination into being your child will enjoy fairy stories such as Hans Anderson and Grimm. I know that there are those who are opposed to the fairy story, because they feel that it stimulates the imagination too much, but fairy stories like all other forms of literature should be given in moderate doses.

Gradually the fairy stories can be switched into the background and fables and tales may take their place. Here you have a host of stories from which to choose, such as Aesop's fables, the stories of the Bible, the legends of the Arthurian legends.

If you have girls and boys you will soon discover that there is a natural difference between their tastes. Boys want the excitement strong and sustained; girls prefer something more subtle. "They would have a heroine cynic, one doing agreeable little things, like Miss Alcott's 'Jo,' one of the most popular books for little girls. All the Louise Alcott books are extremely worth while for little girls.

You can do all this for your children and fall completely upon your own imagination you responsive that it will not only be able to repeat the stories in a child's own words but enable him to create stories out of his imagination.

This is not too much to ask of your child, and she is equal to it because she is going through the experience of the race. Story-making, not story writing, is one of the first things that the child's ancestors could do many centuries ago. I know one little girl who has never written a story in her life, but she can tell you a story about any flower you like to name. The child is only an average child, but she has been taught to give life to the things about her, and she has been taught to make up stories that will give pleasure to others, no less than to be for stories the living day. Do she knows how to exchange stories, just as every child should be taught to do.

You Should Walk On All Fours

Our Upright Posture Defies Nature—She Often Exacts a Heavy Toll, Say Eminent Doctors

Section of a Small Mammal—Note That Organs Do Not Rest Upon Each Other but Are Supported by the Walls of the Body. Man on All Fours Once, No Doubt, Had a Similar Body Structure.

MAN has been playing a practical joke on nature. For centuries he has walked on his "hind" legs and used his "fore" legs for other purposes. Very efficient of Mr. Human, no doubt, and a decided improvement over the means and manner of locomotion employed by his esteemed forefathers as named by Mr. Darwin. However, all practical jokes pay the price in due time and Mr. Human is not overlooked by Dame Nature when she sends out her bills.

In the past many of the ills and afflictions visited upon Mr. and Mrs. Human have been said to be due to their disregard to the various laws of nature.

Now, Dr. H. Forbes of Los Angeles, prominent in the American Osteopathic Association, says: "The human being belongs on all four instead of standing on two legs."

Dr. Forbes does not advocate that he and his fellows seek pellation and the friendships of nature by returning to the quadruped's posture.

We Own Wonderful Machine.

But he does say, "Many of the various forms of abdominal ills and stomach troubles, spinal afflictions, heart and foot troubles may be blamed to man's desire to carry himself in an upright position. A smart man by care and exercise so transforms his body that it will stand the strain of what is an unnatural posture he must pay the cost in bodily ills."

This startling advance in the theory of the true fundamental causes for most of man's ills is now accepted by a number of the most successful of the more modern schools.

Dr. Charles E. Cushman of Chicago not only believes that the human body is now in the course of reconstruction but in aiding his patients to secure relief from strains prescribes various exercises in which the patient walks on all fours.

Dr. Cushman said: "There is no doubt that man has in a manner of speaking been lying in the face of nature by walking on his 'hind' legs." From our study of the anatomy of other animals we are led to the conclusion that man's organs were not originally arranged to be superimposed upon each other, but rather to rest upon the sides of his body.

"Still we must remember that every man, woman and child is carrying about the greatest machine ever created. This machine has the power of curving itself of injuries and ills, will stand great abuse, and often, when the abuse is continued, remedies and shapes itself to meet the changed conditions."

"We find that the ligaments and muscles upon which a great strain was placed when man first assumed an upright position have grown stronger and are bearing the weight of supporting organs instead of merely holding them in place.

"There is no doubt that the human body in an upright position is under a strain which often would be avoided if we walked on hands and feet. A woman hanging to a strap in a street car will sometimes receive a strain in the back by a sudden lurching of the car.

"While not so common as some authorities seem to believe, there are many cases where such a strain results in what is called the pelvic slip. The ligaments holding the bones of the pelvis in place in the back are strained and a displacement is caused.

"The displacement is not painful, perhaps, and goes unnoticed, but it may cause the impingement of a nerve. That is, the displacement causes a pressure upon some nerve or nerve center. Now, the nerves control the supply of blood to the arteries. The impingement may result in too much blood in the arteries about some organ, resulting in inflammation, or a lack of good circulation, which means that the organ, poorly nourished, is more susceptible to the attack of a poisonous germ.

"I have treated many women whose ills came from pressures and displacement, some caused by the failure of their bodies to withstand some sudden strain, or because the organs and their supporting ligaments were weakened by unhealthy and abnormal pressure of corsets.

"I have found in some cases that the result was a muscle in a chronic state of contraction. Now much of our happiness and usefulness in life depends upon healthy muscles. The first essential of a healthy muscle is that it be abundantly supplied with pure blood.

"There must be freedom from compression, for if we are to enjoy free circulation, for compression of any nerve or blood vessel may mean privation of a steady flow of pure blood, thus preventing the necessary deposit of materials required by the waste of the system, and also the removal of the injurious products of the decomposition of tissues.

"So often my first thought is to find the means by which all the muscles of the body may be given exercise, not violent but sufficient to remove any contractions.

"To secure this I have often found that both with women and men it is an excellent idea for them to practice walking on all fours. This exercise seems to aid their organs in assuming more natural positions.

"Often I have met business men and workmen whose work was such that they were under a constant mental strain. This strain was mirrored in various muscles of their bodies. For hours some men keep certain muscles of hand or arm contracted. Then when the day's work is over they get a mental relaxation, but the muscle does not as readily return to the flexibility it should. Other severe massage is necessary to relieve the strained condition, a condition which prevents good circulation, and good circulation is health.

"Let any of the professional and business men I know get out once in a while and walk on their hands and knees, roll on the grass and act as their progenitors did, and I believe their bodies would be more

A Sport for None but Vikings

One of the Most Strenuous of All Games Invented by Man for His Moments of Relaxation is That Enjoyed by North Woods Lumbermen.

NEXT to war, the most strenuous activity played by civilized men is known as "Hard man, who?" It is played by the Scandinavian lumbermen of the north woods of Wisconsin. A Washington lawyer who witnessed the game on a visit to the lumber camps describes it as follows:

"We strolled over to a bunkhouse one night and there found the Scandinavians gathered into seven or eight groups of a dozen each. Lots were placed in a hat and every man of the party drew. The man who got the black lot was 'it.'

"He was forthwith blindfolded, tightly and a stool being brought forth, he leaned forward and placed his hands, with palms flat, on the seat. The palms flat, remember; therefore, since the stool was low the victim had to bend over considerably.

"The victim being thus in sacrificial posture, the remainder of the party now draw lots again. The lucky man who gets the highest lot pulls off his coat and from the corner brings forth what would be called in law the 'gist of the action.'

"It is a formidable weapon fashioned from a club or outside cutting of a sawlog, about three feet long and about six inches wide by three inches thick at one end.

"He now grasps this sinister implement by the business end, squares himself away behind the luckless victim bent prayerfully over the stool. Lifts his terrifying bludgeon high over his shoulder and with a swing like the stroke of a pile driver lands full upon the Norseman with a resounding whack that echoes like a shot from an elephant gun.

"I looked to see the spinal vertebrae of that poor mortal driven out through the roof of his skull as, under the terrific impact, victim and stool were driven sprawling some dozen feet away, but, to my astonishment, the invulnerable Scandinavian leaped unharmed to his feet and bowed.

"It's Ole Hansen!"

"Howls of gusty laughter greeted this remark, when I gathered that the stricken one had failed to guess the name of the striker. Again the hapless blindfold bent stiffly over the stool, palms down; again the burly executioner who wasn't Ole Hansen grasped his tremendous weapon and, now warmed up to his work, dealt a blow that would have killed a Texas steer, and again the stricken one, picking himself up from the dirt floor, cried out:

"Ha, it's Lars Orndorf!"

"But alas for him! Shouts of boisterous glee, rising above the noise of numerous other games in progress through the long room, told that he had guessed wrong again. With the philosophic calm of Sidney Carton the unfortunate subject took his place a third time and once again faced death backward. As he arose a third time in somewhat disheveled condition he cried out:

"That bare Lief Carlsen!"

"Then there was a roar from all the players except the man with the murderous tool, for he had guessed right this time. The much-battered one whipped off his blindfold and took his place with the others, while the unhappy Lief placed the handle about his eyes, his late victim seeming to it that no loophole for sight was left. Lots were again drawn for the office of executioner and it fell to the man lastly blindfolded. He declined the honor, however, as under the rules he had a right, fearing lest the temptation to guess his name would be too strong in Lief's breast.

"In this he showed his foresight, for, as Lief picked himself from the floor, whither he had been driven by a sledge hammer blow at the hands of Orndorf, he bawled out:

"It's Olelsen, it's Olelsen!" the name of the late victim.

"And I chimed in with Olelsen when he led the cheering over Lief's failure; he'd certainly earned a right to gloat over that Lief."

"For an hour I stood and watched those fellows hammer each other in a way that, in any other company, would have meant a long list of killed and wounded—all in the name of playful sport!"

SCIENCE AND NEAR-SCIENCE UP-TO-DATE

The Unsinkable Ship—Will the World's Master Minds Reach This Goal of Centuries?

CAN ships be designed to remain afloat under any conditions and thus be really unsinkable? Does this safety depend on steering clear of icebergs and mines? The sinking of the Titanic, the Lusitania and the Express of Ireland, which snuffed out thousands of human lives and destroyed millions of dollars' worth of property in the greatest sea disasters of history, have proclaimed to the world that the unsinkable ship has not been built.

The numbers of those lost in these three terrible disasters would imply that ocean travel is unsafe. But when the number of persons lost is compared with the total number of persons who travel the high seas it is evident that in reality it is far safer to cross the ocean than it is to cross a busy street in Cleveland. The vast number of safe voyages occasion no comment; it is only those few which terminate in disaster that are chronicled far and wide.

As a great ship steams majestically out of port with flags flying, and later perhaps when tossed in the grip of some howling gale a thousand miles from the nearest land, the passenger often wonders at the ingenuity which has solved the seemingly impossible problem of keeping such a structure afloat. Men have been going down to the sea in boats ever since the dawn of history, and have learned by experience the laws which make ship design and navigation possible.

Modern shipbuilding as a science is the result of evolution, but the fundamentals, although unfamiliar to the landman, are in fact quite simple. They apply equally as well to the little clipper of a hundred years ago as to the steam leviathan of today.

Every one knows that a block of wood will float because it is lighter than water. Wood weighs about fifty pounds and sea water about sixty-four pounds per cubic foot. If ships are built of iron, which weighs almost eight times as much as water, it will float under ordinary conditions are more buoyant than ships built of wood. This is because buoyancy depends rather on the shape than the material of a ship's hull, and in consequence steel, which possesses more strength for weight than wood, is preferable as shipbuilding material.

A steel hull, being lighter than a wood hull of the same strength, will not displace as much water—it will float higher and possess greater reserve buoyancy. As the part of the hull out of water, or "freeboard," as it is called, is greater, the cargo capacity is larger; hence a steel ship will pay better on the money invested than a wooden one.

The small boy sailing his toy boat in the duck pond notices that it sinks somewhat in the water. Some years later at school he learns that it sinks until the weight of the water it displaces equals its own weight. He also learns that the two forces which balance each other are the downward weight of the object and the upward buoyant effect of the displaced water. In designing larger boats the naval architect makes use of these same two forces and assumes that the weight of the ship acts at its central point or center of gravity, while the buoyant force acts at the center of the displaced volume of water, or center of buoyancy.

Some of the difficulty experienced by the designer of ocean vessels in adjusting these forces is only slightly greater than the one of making a tin tomato can float upright in the water—a problem which often causes young America to wrinkle his forehead in perplexity on his summer days.

Every boy-legged urchin knows that no can will float upright unless a stone is placed inside. Sometimes two or three are necessary before his efforts are rewarded and the can floats triumphantly away. Instead of using stones to make his ship stay upright the ship designer varies the form of his vessel so that when tilted its position by the waves its own weight will tend to bring it right, just as did the stones in the tomato can. He is aided in this by the fact that he can compute the position of the point about which his ship swings—the transverse metacenter, as he calls it—and can choose its location so that the ship will swing gradually or abruptly back to the normal position. He must be careful, however, that the metacenter is

To learn the entire alphabet in this way should be a matter of a few weeks or months, but the amount of practice required will vary greatly from one person to another, as only a "musical" ear can detect the omission of certain notes from a given chord. Given an adequate alignment and line-changing mechanism, there is no reason why, with plenty of practice, a blind person thus trained to allocate certain notes to certain positions should ship in order to make it sit properly on the water, just as the small boy knows he must place his stone exactly in the center of his tin can before it will float exactly upright. In order to fix this trim, as it is called, the designer computes the location of the metacenter for the fore and aft movement of his ship, and then fixes the loading of the different cargo holds so that the boat draws the right amount of water at all points.

The center of gravity varies with the loading of a vessel, a cargo which is stowed high up in the hold tending to raise it and to make the vessel roll more in a seaway; while a cargo of iron ore, for example, loaded mostly below decks, will lower the center of gravity and make the ship more steady when the weather is rough. Steamers carrying heavy deckloads will take in water ballast to keep the weight in the lower part of the ship, and thus increase the stability during a storm. Cargo vessels are provided with trim tanks which may be filled or emptied at will, and which are utilized to preserve the proper trim both fore and aft and athwartships.

The power of resistance against storms at sea is second only to the power to remain upright; one quality is of little use without the aid of the other. An important part of ship design is to provide strength enough internally so that it will not break in two in a heavy sea due to its own weight. When a ship "sags," or rides with both bow and stern supported on crests of waves, while the midships section is over a trough, it acts like an ordinary bridge and must be strong enough to support both its own weight and that of its cargo. When a ship is "hogging" or riding with the midships section on a crest, it must also be strong enough so that it will not break in two as one would break a stick over a stone. A careful investigation is made under the most unfavorable conditions of loading, and additional steel beams riveted to give sufficient strength where necessary.

The sides of a ship must not only be designed to withstand the pressure due to depth of water, but also must be strong enough to buck back the attacks of the monstrous seas which are often encountered in midocean. Steel plates and angles are so placed that the tons and tons of water are carried safely over the decks and allowed to fall harmlessly into the sea over the lee side. It is difficult to measure the direct force of huge waves in terms of pounds, but the battered and broken breakwaters along our coasts give mute evidence of their power of destruction.

A ship designed with these considerations of strength and stability in mind will probably outlive any gale the whim of Father Neptune can visit on the unfortunate mariner. Let us see what modern shipbuilding practice requires for safety under extraordinary circumstances—circumstances not likely to happen to one vessel in a hundred. Lloyd's specify double hulls and watertight bulkheads for every ship, cargo and passenger, and further specify that ships be designed to float with any two of their watertight compartments filled. The opening of a compartment to the sea at once lessens the buoyancy of the ship and produces a list. It also decreases the stability and renders the ship more liable to capsize; so careful provision must be made in the design computation that the intact compartments may possess sufficient reserve buoyancy to overcome this tendency to capsize.

The watertight bulkheads required by Lloyd's must first of all be really watertight. By this is meant that the doors must close quickly and positively. A "water-tight" bulkhead which allows water to pass is worse than none at all, for it imparts a false sense of security. These bulkheads extend as high as the main deck and are provided with doors which, according to Lloyd's, must close in all of three ways—by hand, by power, either electric or hydraulic, and by the inrush of the water itself. Newer types of ships have bulkheads so designed that even with the doors closed a man imprisoned inside may still get out through a small opening which closes automatically behind him. This removes the probability that the crew will purposely block the bulkhead doors so they cannot be imprisoned in case of accident.

Even with proper handling of the doors of watertight compartments the safety of a ship cannot be assured unless other considerations are met. The Titanic doors were all closed, yet she filled and sank, none the less surely. It is probable that the compartments filled by overcrowding into the fore, beginning at the bow, after the ship had listed, and she sank because her officers did not think to flood her after compartments sufficiently to bring her to an even keel and thus prevent the overcrowding to continue. Human frailty had provided for everything but the possibility of the loss of human presence of mind in time of stress. Until provision is made for even this contingency the liability of accidents must continue unavoidably.

Double hulls have come to be regarded as absolutely essential in ocean passenger steamers. Formerly they were merely double bottoms—the second hull being an additional layer of steel riveted over the beams forming the main frame of the vessel as high as the water line or slightly below. Since the Titanic disaster these inner shells as well as the bulkheads have been extended in all large ships to the level of the main deck, and produce the effect of a ship within a ship. The distance between shells is about six feet in ocean steamers, cargo space being accordingly while in lake or boats this may be as much as sixteen feet, smaller stowage space being required owing to the greater weight of the ore. Often some of this space is used for coal bunkers, which in a case of collision might act as cushions to lessen the shock.

This Shield Makes a Projectile of Each Fighting Man

A STEEL shield for use of soldiers storming the enemy's trenches has been invented by H. J. Reddywick of Glasgow. From the standpoint of military experts, its great advantage will lie in its use by a small number of men as a means of diverting the attention of the enemy from the main point of attack.

It is claimed that a small number of men by means of this invention could gain the enemy's trenches and with a supporting column put up such a hot fight that the enemy would neglect a distant portion of their trench line, which would fall easily.

The shield, which is on wheels and is pushed forward by the soldier within, weighs about 200 pounds and is so constructed that it easily deflects bullets. Soldiers will be able to fire from cover of the shields, which are said to be much better for the demands of present day warfare than the flat shields used by the Germans.

Blind May See With Help of This Instrument

HERE, at last, is an instrument that actually makes the blind see!

But it is with the ears and not the eyes that the sightless are enabled to view printed words. The new instrument is the "optophone" and it promises to be one of the greatest boons for the blind ever conceived by man.

Any instrument designed for translating optical into organic effects or light into sound and to some extent substituting the ear for the eye may be termed an "optophone," according to Professor E. E. Fournier D'Albe.

The latest of these, described before the Royal Society recently, is designed with the object of enabling blind persons to "read" ordinary letterpress by means of the ear.

An optical system throws the image of a glowing Neumast filament upon the printed paper, lid faces downward on a suitable desk. This image is broken up into a series of seven or eight light dots, flashing with different musical numbers, by means of a rotating glass disc placed immediately in front of the Neumast filament.

It has been found possible to obtain a "readable" sound from type of the ordinary newspaper size. The straight black stem of a letter produces silence and a curved letter, such as R, produces in its passage a set of gradually changing notes which are characteristic of the letter and cannot be mistaken even after a few minutes' practice. To learn the entire alphabet in this way should be a matter of a few weeks or months, but the amount of practice required will vary greatly from one person to another, as only a "musical" ear can detect the omission of certain notes from a given chord. Given an adequate alignment and line-changing mechanism, there is no reason why, with plenty of practice, a blind person thus trained to allocate certain notes to certain positions should not be able to construct "instinctively" a tactile image of any new or unfamiliar letter-press type at the first hearing.

Making Lead Poisoning Harmless

SINCE Banker Saunders Walker of Macon, Ga., died a living death from bichloride of mercury poisoning no cub reporter loses a chance to unearth instances of this terrible death.

Now comes the latest and most practical of these wonderful discoveries. It was made a few weeks ago at Newcastle, England, by Dr. R. Maltby Clague, chemist. He had been called into one of the largest lead factories thereabouts to find out why so many of the employees were taken down with lead poisoning.

He found that girls, too, who used face ornaments and powders had particles of arsenic in their faces, so it occurred to him that there might be an electrical method by which these spots could be extracted.

For the purpose of treating lead or mercury poisoning, Sir Thomas says, the human body must be regarded as a bag of salt water. In this salt water there is also some iron, arsenic and lead, mere traces present in all mankind. In severe cases of lead or mercury poisoning there is about the ten-th of the part of a 3-cent piece.

Now, to remove this Dr. Clague and Sir Thomas say that an electric current must be sent through the poisoned person in as great a quantity as is compatible with safety and comfort.

One bath is for the feet and another is for the hands, arms and the rest of the body. In this way a current can be sent through the tissues and yet be absolutely under the control of the doctor.

Does a Cat Think With Its Feet?

THERE is nothing especially striking about the feet of a cat except its ability always to land on them. Hold a young cat by its feet a short distance from the ground for a few seconds and then let go. The cat's back, being heavier than its feet, should strike the ground first. But it doesn't. Just as the cat is being let go it gives a quick upward thrust with its chest and as its feet are freed they swing under it so it lands on them.

In the case of the young cat that has never experienced this before, it doesn't know that it is going to be dropped. If it were a long drop, there would be time to think, but in the short drop the cat must act and act immediately. In fact, it is really beforehand. The natural conclusion then is that this faculty in the cat is located in its feet. It is inherent in them.

Using Blood in Bread Making

PROFESSOR KOBER of Munich has published a little treatise on the utilization of blood as food, from which Die Umschau quotes the following statements concerning the use of blood in breadmaking. For centuries blood bread has been the staple of life of the Korbansians of the Baltic provinces and their colonies in all parts of Russia. It is made of rye flour, with an admixture of at least 10 per cent of whipped hog's blood. In the vicinity of Petrograd ox blood is also used.

Americans Famed For Jewel Fondness

AMERICANS have the reputation of being extremely fond of jewelry. This is because they are known the world over as being great buyers of pearls, diamonds and other precious gems.

But we have a close rival in this fondness for costly finery in the Hindus. The men and women both are extravagantly fond of jewelry. The very poorest often wear gold rings set with pearls. They wear rings in their noses and ears, and upon their fingers and toes. The arms and ankles are often decorated with bracelets of gold, silver, copper or glass. They are very modest about speaking of their finery.

This is because they lay claim to great politeness of manner. It is a breach of etiquette to use the left hand in bowing, eating and drinking.

Injured Soldier Loses Color Sense

THE cerebral theory of color vision of Dr. Edridge Green was borne out in a recent battle in Europe. A soldier was shot in the forehead, the bullet passing out of the back of his head without killing or even stunning him. He remarked: "Everything seems green all around me." When in the hospital he still perceived everything looked green. Thus the theory of Dr. Edridge Green was favored, the shock to the brain having altered the discriminatory apparatus so that impulses caused by green rays had preponderating influence.

Battle Ship Saved By Heavy Blasting

THE Tapperheten, one of the largest warships of the Swedish navy, has been saved after nine days of continual work. The vessel, grounded near Stockholm, was at first believed to be a complete loss. There existed only one way it could be saved, according to experts—that of blasting away the rock from beneath it.

The drilling and the planting of the explosives was done by divers. Two thousand tons of stones were removed before the boat slid into the water. The Tapperheten is again in commission.

Simple Air Pressure Test

ANYONE can demonstrate the pressure of the atmosphere by the simple experiment which follows:

On the flat of an iron lay a thin sheet of rubber—part of an old tobacco pouch will do. Place a small tin lid containing some wetting soaked in spirits of wine on the rubber and ignite the spirits. Then press a wineglass down tightly over the flame.

When the flame dies out it will be found that the two articles are firmly united, and may be suspended by a wire as shown, and some time will elapse before they separate. The explanation is that the flame consumes the oxygen in the glass and lowers the pressure, when the greater pressure of the atmosphere squeezes the articles together.

EIGHTH INSTALLMENT

SYNOPSIS

Kitty Gray, newspaper woman, finds in a curio shop half of a broken coin, the mutilated inscription on which reads "EMERSON HOUGH." She sends her, at the order of her managing editor, to go to the principality of Gretzshoffen to place out the story suggested by the inscription. She is followed, and on arrival in Gretzshoffen her address while chasing the secret of the broken coin begins.

CHAPTER XXXII.

King Cortislaw.
"So you find it convenient to enter my room once more unasked?" Kitty's eyes flashed in genuine indignation as she faced Count Sachio.
"It is not your room, mademoiselle, but ours. We pay for it and have definite purpose in securing it here away from my friends."
"Assuredly, a purpose very definite, and one from which we do not intend to be severed, mademoiselle."

"What then do you purpose doing with me?"
"We plan taking you before the king—not the king of Gretzshoffen, but our own king, Cortislaw of Grabhoffen. He wishes to see you, mademoiselle."

Kitty turned back into the room and Sachio, irritated at the delay, went so far as to take her by the arm to induce her to leave the room with him. She resisted so vigorously that for the time he stood back nonplused.

But at length the girl's powers proved no match for those brought against her. She was forced from the room toward the front of the building. Once more Kitty adopted the policy of Rolan herself—she ceased to struggle when she found struggling useless, and lay back to wait until a time when resistance might be more effective.

"Very well, gentlemen," said she. "Do as you like. I am weaker than yourselves. Since you are men and gentlemen, naturally you are strong."

Count Sachio made no answer to her biting words. In truth, matters had not gone so well with him as he would have liked. He had been ordered to report to his own king, and now must soon make that report, and certainly he could not tell of the unquiet success which he had so contentedly hoped. He had not yet secured possession of both halves of the coveted Gretzshoffen coin. So all through the long and weary journey across the open plain he had not been able to rest. He had a moody silence, wondering perhaps what should be his policy when he had brought his new-captured artful before the king.

Arrived at the capital of Grabhoffen, Kitty was allowed small time to arrange her toilet or compose herself after the fatigue of the journey. Very presently she was brought before King Cortislaw himself.

She found him an old man, thin, wrinkled, crabbed, irritable, excitable. Cortislaw regarded the young girl steadily as she stood before him.

"So this is the woman?" he demanded of Count Sachio, who stood beside her.
"The same, your majesty. She can explain what you desire to know."

The king looked intently at something he held in his hand. Kitty caught sight of it—it was the half coin which she had once possessed, which had been taken from her but lately by these men. Evidently Count Sachio had turned it over forthwith to his royal possessor.

"Mademoiselle," said he, "tell me what it is. The inscription is broken. I wish to know it all. I am informed that you have seen both halves of this coin, and therefore know the entire message. Read it to me at once."

Kitty took the coin in her hand as though to study it, but swiftly put her own hand behind her back as she clutched it. "It is my property," said she stoutly. "Not even a king can take away property without course of law."

Even a king was astounded at the effrontery of the young girl—who held her possession until two sturdy guards forced the coin from her hand. The king smiled at her, a somewhat toothless smile.

"So you value it? Many do. We are willing to pay for what we have, mademoiselle—and the message of this coin we mean to have. Give it to us, and you shall be set free."

"Your majesty is liberal—you offer what is almost mine—the liberty. But what you ask is impossible for me. True, I have seen each half of the coin—even I saw both halves at one time—but never have I read the entire inscription."

"But you have seen both halves," went on Cortislaw. "Tell me, what was on the other half?"
"Your majesty, I cannot—I do not know."

"By the saints of our forefathers," exclaimed Cortislaw, "if this were in the olden days the torture chamber should show you something. But now—"

"The torture could write only deception from your majesty, and that deception would be of no service to you. I have told you the truth—and that alone can serve you. Give me my liberty again—and then perhaps I might learn more of the other half of the coin."

"The girl argues well," said Cortislaw. "I am not sure whether or not she speaks truth, but her argument goes to the same thing in either case. Let her go under guard—perhaps something may arise to give us further insight into this."

"As for you, Count Sachio, you have not yet succeeded in what was asked of you—you have not yet taught us where lies the hidden treasure of Gretzshoffen!"
"Your majesty," replied the count, reddening. "It is but inadvertence, which shall be amended. In my next I fancied your majesty would rather have this young woman than have the other half of the coin. To secure that may require yet more time."

The king fixed on him the cold smile which his courtiers had learned to dread, yet he could not fall to see the shrewdness of Sachio's reply.
"At least guard her, then," said he dryly. "She shall be our guest until we learn more of what she knows. It means too much to forego the full reading of this coin these days. I mean to have it. I trust all my officers will realize that fact."

"Mademoiselle," said Sachio to Kitty, later, when she had withdrawn to quarters which virtually were to prove a prison to her. "You have heard what the king has said—he will allow you to return to your own country unharmed if you but help him to the meaning of that inscription. What is it to you? It is only idle curiosity brings you hither. With us it may mean the life or death of our country."

Kitty gave herself up to certain reflections at the words. As to war between the two kingdoms, that came, why should she aid Grabhoffen against the country with which she had become more familiar? Neither had done her much courtesy, true, but for some strange reason her sympathies were not with the country governed by this irascible and unlovely king.

"Think well, mademoiselle," went on Sachio. "It is a long way from here to your country. The coin can mean but little to you at best."
"It may mean much to me," broke out Kitty suddenly. "Listen. This coin is not the property of your king or of that other king. It is the property of the people of these countries. It seeks to tell them its story—not to any king for his selfish ends."

"But, my dear count," he reproached that gentleman one day, "you have left one errand uncompleted. You have brought us your coin back again, that is true, but the young lady who we fancied would come after it still remains absent from our court. There has been no word from her for many days."

"True, your majesty, she has disappeared. It seems I do not, myself, know where she is."

"What, you do not?" You have not consented our wishes in this matter?"
"I am as much distressed as you, your majesty over the mystery of her disappearance," rejoined the count, and for once he spoke the truth to his king.

"You have made inquiry at her usual place of residence—some hotel, was it not. An absurd thing, for such a woman as herself to live in a hotel."

"At her hotel," replied Count Frederick. "They know nothing. They tell me that she comes and goes at all hours, and leaves no word as to her return. Nearly two weeks ago she left, and has not yet returned. The management remains perplexed."

"Two weeks—so long as that?" exclaimed Michael. "Then believe me, my dear count, something is wrong—that young woman has come to some hurt. She must be found at once. If she is not brought back to our palace in the next day I shall send out a searching party for her—I will scour the town, if I need be."

"There may be many reasons," said Count Frederick, "for her continued absence. Perhaps the business upon which she came is not yet completed. Perhaps her employers have called her away. Perhaps she may have been intimidated by certain obstacles in her way."

"By whom, Count Frederick?"
"Well, she has seemed curious herself regarding the coin. Perhaps she knows somewhat of it."
"So she also has studied this trinket that we gave her? Very well—we meant it to prove of interest."

"Doubtless. But regarding the coin so many threats have been made—"

"What? What threats? What do you know of any?"
"Many things come to my ears, your majesty, but I strive to keep them from your own ears so much as I may be I find them unwelcome."

"The most unwelcome thing that could come to us, my dear Frederick, is the absence of this young woman now. Where, think you, may she be?"
"I could not guess unless perhaps she may have returned to her own country—in which case we shall never see her again, your majesty. We can make examination of the passenger lists of all sailings within the last two weeks. I will look into that. If she has not gone back to her own country, she either remains in this somewhere, or in some other near by."

"You do not mean Grabhoffen?"
Count Frederick nodded. "That is what I do mean. In truth, your majesty, there are Grabhoffen spies in this city—they were even at your side. Perhaps they concern themselves with this young lady. Why not? If they suspect that she had part of the coin—and it was easily seen by that one she did have that part—might they not undertake to make trouble for their own purpose with her?"

"But what good would come of that?"
Count Frederick said that his argument had gone too far for his own purpose. He did not care to tell the king all he knew, yet his zeal for Kitty had led him far.

"Much good might come of Grabhoffen's war department, your majesty, if they knew our secrets. Perhaps they thought she could give some information."

"But you do not predict trouble between us and our neighbor—you do not mean war?"
"It is a long way from here to your country. The coin can mean but little to you at best."

"It may mean much to me," broke out Kitty suddenly. "Listen. This coin is not the property of your king or of that other king. It is the property of the people of these countries. It seeks to tell them its story—not to any king for his selfish ends."

regarding it seriously, as though it were the first car she had ever seen in her life—something very far from true. She was busily examining its mechanism, so that she might be the better able to carry out the sudden resolution she had formed regarding it.

What the guards, who smugly regarded her through the windows, saw was a swift tap of the girl to the driver's seat, her rapid movements with the controlling levers as she cut on the spark, gave the car gas threw in the clutch, threw open the throttle, and drove away, the cut-out muffler roaring her own defiance to pursuit.

"What she has escaped—that prisoner! She was more important than any held here in our own remembrance. You shall all be held to account for this. How now, Count Sachio, did we not give her into your immediate charge?"
"Your majesty, you did. I dare no explanation of her escape. Only—she is gone."

Roleu Knocks Down the Guards and Escapes From Grabhoffen.

Kitty Hides From Count Sachio and the Guards After Her Escape From the Palace.

CHAPTER XXXV.

In the Name of the King.
It was plain enough to Count Sachio which way Kitty would head to her fight. Her car was little more than out of sight on the Gretzshoffen road ere Sachio himself was in pursuit.

Count Sachio was no blunderer, and no common thief chaser, but a courier and a man of intelligence. He knew it would be futile to make a direct demand of the hotel management regarding the whereabouts of the young American. Therefore, while he himself approached the hotel desk to engage the clerks in conversation, he sent two of his own men—one of them Bartel, the spy, who had been established here so long by way of a rear alleyway to find Kitty's rooms and report to him what they learned.

He stood for some time making polite speeches with the desk men and the porters, asking for certain information as to routes and distances, but all the time carrying with him the impatient that he heard no report from his messengers. As he stood, there came news of them—starting news enough. There came shrieking down the stairs, incoherent, babbling a maid who called out to the clerk, or to any who would hear her!

"A man," she cried—"A man—killed in her room—the young American's room—murdered—it is murder, sir!"

The officials of the hotel took prompt action. "Close all the doors," ordered the porter. "Clear the corridors at once, in the king's name. Apprehend the murderer wherever it may be. Have the gardeners come at once. You, boy—run! I say!"

It was hush and cry more, and Sachio was glad enough that his own ally was plain, for he knew not what might happen. One of his men returned him—the spy Bartel. The other remained behind—his fate unknown as yet.

As for Kitty, she was at this moment once more away from her hotel and once more in the stately palace of Count Frederick.

She entered her room, Rolan as usual somewhat remote, to guard against any sudden intrusion. Once more she cast about a searching eye upon the details of the place. All its disorder had been removed, and an air of military neatness the apartment lay before her.

Upon the dresser, in full view, openly displayed, was a picture in a little frame—a frame of silver set in brilliant metal. She looked at it and—indeed, it was the portrait of herself which once had stood on her own dressing table in her hotel! Now it was here. Why? Kitty felt a strange flush come to her cheeks.

Something now arrested her—as she paused, reluctant to resume a search which ever had been distasteful to her. No, she would not touch a thing—had he not been more respectful than herself another woman's privacy? Had he had taken anything from her apartments it was but—this. And apparently he had cherished it. No, she would not search for the coin. She would leave this country disappointed, if need be. But this time at least—

With this proof of another's civility before her—she would herself be chivalrous.

But there lay, just at the foot of the little portrait, an object which caught her eye. It was the half of the broken coin, which she had seen in the curio shop.

Yes, here it was in full view, openly displayed, which she might see if she liked, who chanced to be there. Apparently Count Frederick felt that all pursuers of the coin had ended—that no longer could any intruder have access to his palace. Kitty hesitated for a moment. The appeal of the coin came to her once more. She took it up, held it in her hand, gazed at it—and once more, as she gazed, she remembered the case—the found herself surprised at the very moment of her success.

She heard Count Frederick's quick footsteps, his calm voice behind her.
"Mademoiselle, again!"
The count stood there regarding her.

"Evidently, mademoiselle, you did not realize that these repeated visits rendered necessary the installation of an electric system of my own devising—you see, I knew of your presence, and as you see, I have come. You rang. Of what service can I be, mademoiselle?"

"Leave me alone," panted Kitty, her face hot, tears almost in her eyes. "I hate you! I hate you!"

"I grieve at that, mademoiselle," said Count Frederick evenly. "I wish I could say the same of you—of course. With every reason to distrust you—I cannot. Continually we cross swords do we not? And you were easy to deceive this time. See—you are trapped as simply as a bird which steps into its cage without hesitation."

"Will you not give me back my coin, mademoiselle? Will you not assist me in reading the message of the coin, so that we may make an end of all this—so that I may not continually cross swords with me another?"

In answer Kitty darted past him, found her way into the hall, ran she knew not where. Before her lay a little narrow stairway, and she sprang up it, hoping to find escape somewhere. Alas! the door that closed the head of the stair was locked. She heard his low laugh as an iron grille snapped across the opening, cutting off escape.

"Won't you give it me now—my coin?" he asked. "Once regained in the great white marble palace of Count Frederick of Gretzshoffen."

And now, far off in other parts of the city, where men sought one who had done a crime, there rose in the streets the sound of hurrying feet, with the warning cry, "In the name of the king!"

GREENSBORO, NORTH CAROLINA, IS CENTRE FOR MODEL MILL SETTLEMENT OF THE WORLD

Sewing class conducted by Welfare Department of Proximity Cotton Mills.

CAESAR CONE.

A BEVY of robust, rosy cheeked and bright eyed boys and girls were clustered on the spacious lawn surrounding The Cottage. They were being drilled by their physical culture instructor in the new movements and formations in their calisthenic exercises, for there was to be a prize contest in a few weeks and each participant was keyed up to his or her best effort.

Within The Cottage sat a group of contented, earnest women—mothers all. In the centre of the big and cheery living room a gracious and deft fingered young woman sat before a well appointed table pouring tea for her score of visitors. She, the chaitaine of The Cottage, had just finished demonstrating this or that new embroidery stitch, the newest and most effective manner of trimming a hat at the least cost, how a dress might be made over to conform with the latest modes, or else how time and labor could be saved in the kitchen by the introduction of some cheap device she had just inspected.

When merry shouts from without indicated that the afternoon drill was at end, this little group of deeply interested mothers arose in a body and chorused—
"I had no idea it was so late. I must hurry home and have supper waiting for my man and the boys. We have enjoyed every minute of our afternoon here."

Now, as might be supposed, this was not a church affair, a woman's guild or a gathering of suffragists, but a scene that is daily enacted in one of the cosiest, well appointed settlement houses attached to the biggest denim mills in the world. The children on the lawn were those of mill operatives. The women at the settlement house were the wives and mothers of these operatives. Stranger still, perhaps, these mills are in the South, and the majority of the operatives there employed did their first stroke of work under the roofs that now cover them. Many of them rumped about these same spacious lawns when their fathers and their grandfathers were at work before the looms and shuttles that click so merrily year in and year out.

Everything about this big and bustling plant is in striking contradiction to the prevailing impression that Southern cotton mills are pest holes, afflicted by slave drivers and peopled by underpaid, half-fed and stunted boys and girls—serfs from the moment they were able to toddle forth from their cradles until their disease racked bodies are fled by the spirit so long stifled within them.

"A Mill Hand's Utopia," two of our Presidents, Roosevelt and Taft, characterized these busy mills. As President Wilson spent many years of his life within a short distance of them, he, too, knows intimately how readily conditions here give the lie to those who, without taking the trouble to investigate for themselves, write volumes about "the appalling conditions in the Southern mills."

Pictures in the mind's eye a little town laid out in checkerboard fashion with wide and generously shaded streets in which at regular intervals stand comfortable and attractive vine clad cottages facing and flanked by yards of ample proportions to permit of chicken runs and flourishing vegetable gardens. Then one will have a fair idea of this North Carolina mill settlement.

When the reader realizes that the 5,000 or more operatives receive good wages—pay far in excess of

"A Mill Hand's Utopia" Is Characterization of These Busy Cotton Manufactories, Where Working Conditions and Contentment of Operatives Contradict Prevailing Impression That Southern Mills Are Pest Holes.

No strike babies can be found here. In their place healthy and robust boys and girls scamper through the village streets and over the settlement common on their way to and from the magnificent schools the company erected and maintained at its own expense. Platted and drawn faces and rags and squalor have no place here. Happy and normal children and contented housewives who have been schooled in the principles of hygiene and sanitation the welfare of his operatives that he does in his high priced machinery he will not only surround himself with useful and productive helpers, but he will be able to turn out a pretty high standard of the finished product. That, doubtless, has been one of the secrets of our success. We have gathered here a splendid lot of men and women who have seized the opportunities we created for them. Realizing how readily they grasped these chances to better them-bright, well ventilated quarters, while all about them is clean, sanitary and wholesome. The machinery is all of the latest pattern, and wherever a labor saving device could be installed there it was found.

But it was the settlements which interested the visitor and to them he made his way. The smaller cottages rent for $3 a month, while the larger ones bring $5. For every third cottage there is an artesian well and the water from these is cool, sparkling and as healthy as any in the State. The cottages stand on brick piers, thus insuring dry and warm interiors and offsetting any danger of dampness. All are bright and airy, nicely painted, and all within and without bespeak comfort and homelike cheer. The rental from the cottages barely offsets taxes and repairs.

Each year the company makes its distribution of flower and vegetable seeds. Shrubs and plants also are given out and, annually, thirty prizes are awarded for the best vegetable and flower gardens, as well as the most attractive home in the settlement. These prizes range in value from $5 to $50. Naturally, the housewives vie with one another to win these bonuses, and in consequence the settlements, from end to end, present the appearance of variegated flower gardens from early spring until Jack Frost comes and lays his blight on plants and blossom.

Attached to each settlement and maintained at the company's expense is a young woman thoroughly trained and equipped to go among the women and instruct and co-operate with them in giving to their homes those deft and intricate little touches which in reality make it a home for each member of the household. These young women conduct cooking and sewing classes in the schools for the girl pupils. In the afternoons similar classes are conducted for the mothers and older girls who wish to learn how to conduct the homes on the most approved lines. They are given the opportunity to familiarize themselves with the best sanitary methods, dietetics and the latest and most approved ways and modes employed by up to date mothers. They also conduct classes in raffia and basketry work.

In order to do all this infinite tact has to be employed. This is especially true where these young settlement workers have to deal with the older girls and the mothers. If the housewife happens to be a new-comer she is not unacquainted with the difficulties that face her when she first enters the gates. She is frequently scoffed at the idea of "a young upstart of a girl telling me how to run my house."

Sometimes these newcomers are fresh from a mountain home, having lived in isolated places among persons who rarely left the sterile little patches that surrounded their log cabins. There was little or no uplift work done in these mountain fastnesses and after having fought a losing fight there they come to the new settlement with a feeling of timidity and autism, resulting interference of any kind.

In such cases the secretary of the settlement school drops in on the newcomer and encourages her in friendly chat. She may direct the conversation into such channels whereby she can show the housewife some new scheme for lightening the burden of her housework or else show her a new stitch that may interest her when she picks up her knitting again. If there is a baby in the house the secretary's surest of her ground, for with such a medium she invariably finds her way straight to the mother's heart.

By tact, perseverance and cordiality she wins the mother's heart and extracts from her a promise to

"union rules"—and they pay but $3 a month for their cottages one can get the more readily understand why these mills have been running full blast since they were started more than twenty years ago, or why no dispute has ever arisen between employer and employe as to wages or the number of hours comprising a working day.

This settlement stands on the outskirts of Greensboro, itself a busy and bustling little manufacturing city, which has trebled its population in a decade, and this without a boom. The settlements are clustered about the White Oak and Proximity mills, each a mammoth establishment, and operated by the same concern. The mills have been referred to by students of industrial, economic and social problems who have visited them as the model mill settlements of the world. Not only have the homes and the environment of the mill operatives been a source of never ceasing wonder and gratification to those who are constantly on the alert to promote uplift work among toilers, but they have unanimously agreed that the mills proper have been equipped with every conceivable device that tends to better the comfort and sanitary surroundings of the operatives.

The Proximity Manufacturing Company, of which Mr. Caesar Cone is principal owner, president and managing director, owns the mills, and one of his most stringent rules is that all in and about the mills shall be so conducted that the settlements' reputation as "Spotless Towns" shall remain unimpaired. Cleanliness and sanitation are his hobbies. Prizes are annually distributed among the operatives for the best kept garden and lawn conforming to the company's specifications, and when these are distributed the laudatory flattery that they have missed a bonus well worth striving for.

In the course of a recent visit to Greensboro the writer went through the mills and their settlements and found them in strong contradiction to those at Lawrence, Mass., another big cotton mill centre, whence came the "strike babies" who testified before the Congressional committee at Washington to conditions which made strong men ill and the women who gathered at the hearing turn pale and faint. The women spectators wept copiously throughout this now celebrated probe, and Mrs. Taft was no less visibly affected than others of the official and Cabinet circles.

are to be found in the homes, while the man of the household—the mill operative—is the personification of the thrifty and prosperous American laudand of the working class. He is thoroughly content with his work and secure in the knowledge that his job is safe so long as he does his part and meets his employer half way. He realizes, too, that the heart of the company knows from first hand knowledge just how he is performing his task and, furthermore, he knows to the minutest detail just what his home life is.

"These mills," said Mr. Cone, "are what my late brother, Moses, intended them to be. From the day we came South and located here he spent his every waking hour striving to bring about a realization of his dreams. That they proved an agreeable reality there is no doubt, for when he was taken from us he died happy in the thought that his years of toil were crowned with the appreciation of those for whom it was done. I am striving to carry on the work along the lines he prescribed. When I succeed in bringing the mills up to the very highest possible degree of excellence I shall feel that my brother needs no more lasting monument to his noble and useful life."

"To what do you attach the most importance as a factor in bringing about this Utopian condition of affairs?" I asked Mr. Cone.

"From the first we worked on the principle that if the manufacturer manifests the same interest in soves we continued to create them, and this we kept doing until we are beginning to think our mills are nearly perfect from a mechanical, social and economic viewpoint as it is possible to make them.

"The best treatment we have made since coming South was the money spent for the welfare and uplift of our operatives, their wives and their children. The majority of them were quick to learn and they were appreciative. The result is we have built up a settlement of sturdy and healthily minded men and women whose children upon completing the educational course we demand that they take will find good places at good wages in the mills where their fathers have been content to toil. Few leave us, and in consequence there are few new-comers among us. Many families are occupying the same cottages they moved into when they came to us fifteen years or more ago."

Mr. Cone's caller then remarked:—"Then you are the one man in the country, and the South in particular, who has solved the labor problem?"

"I am one of the men seeking to solve it, you had better say," Mr. Cone replied.

The tour through the mills had revealed the total absence of dust—that arch enemy of every mill operative. Every device known to mechanics and science had been installed to minimize this peril. Light and air are other essentials that had been given due consideration, with the result that men, women, youths and well grown girls work in come to The Cottage and meet those women who will be of most use to her in settling down to the routine of life in the mill settlement. She is sure to have on hand for this first visit other women who have profited by just such an experience and she knows these women will take the newcomer in and make her feel at home and realize from the first that she has a place in this busy little community, after all.

Caesar Cone occupies a magnificent home in Summit Avenue, Greensboro, and may be truthfully characterized as that city's foremost and most progressive citizen. The beautiful park in which his home is set is one of Greensboro's show places. Next his residence stands St. Leo's Hospital, a magnificent institution conducted under the auspices of Sisters of Mercy. Mr. Cone donated the land on which the hospital stands, subscribed liberally toward its building fund, and is one of its most generous patrons to-day.

All in all, these mill settlements are revelations and they never cease to interest industrial students who journey to the mills to see just how a cotton mill can be conducted along sane and scientific lines when a level headed man in its presiding genius and one who thinks just as much of his operatives as he does of his machinery. That, perhaps, is why Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt saw in these communities that Utopia which labor has so long dreamed of, yet rarely attained.

Unmasking the Underworld

Here Is Vividly Told the Story of the Most Daring of All Criminal Feats, the Daylight Robbery— Every Man Who Joins the "Mob" Is an Actor Trained and Skilled in a Most Exciting School

By J. A. PETERS.

THE people of the upper world as well as the majority of the underworld comparatively little is known of the activities and income of the "heel worker" or "damper getter." Years ago he was called a "hill tapper" and the tool was generally a daring small boy, working under the instruction of a "Fagin" who sent him into shops to crawl underneath the counters to steal from the money drawers whatever of silver or bills there.

But that was before the advent of the "music bar" (cash register) took the graft out of boys' line to a proposition demanding considerable brains to plan and ability to execute store robberies with minimum risk and maximum profit. It has developed into a regular occupation with many bands of two, three and four members known as heel mobs.

Busy at Their Trade.

Although some of these "mobs" stay in one city permanently, the higher class of "damper getters" work about a month in Chicago, a month in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, shorter periods in smaller cities, always going and coming, prying their trade every day, all day long, everywhere. They become known as heel men to the police of one city only when one of their number "drops for a fall." The rare times I have heard of a first-class heel man going to prison were on account of failure to save sufficient "fall money" out of the earnings of a mob, money with which to hire a clever "mouthpiece" (lawyer) or bribe the judge.

Tom, Jerry, Harry and Dick form a "mob out on the heel." Tom is middle-aged, ruddy, in dress and appearance a prosperous stock broker. Jerry is younger, an athletic, vigorous young bank clerk to call the casual glance. Harry is past 30, with hair almost white and would pass for that well known taxpayer, "pre bono publico." Dick, of uncertain age, can assume with equal ease the role of meter inspector or police inspector.

Laying Out the Day's Work.

They meet by appointment at their favorite cafe at 7 a. m. have a cocktail as they read the papers and map out the morning's work, which starts at 8 a. m. sharp. Selecting eight square blocks in the busiest section of town, each is given two blocks to cover in the following manner:

Tom goes to his allotted station, where every building contains one or more stores. He enters each one in turn to note how business is carried on—where the registers are located, their particular model, how easily accessible, how near an opening in the counter they are placed, whether a cashier is employed or if the salespeople operate the music boxes. Also where conditions seem favorable he makes a "buy" in order to see if the register contains many big bills.

Jerry Makes the Decision

By a careful process of elimination Jerry reduces these prospects in number to about a half-dozen stores, and upon him rests the final decision as to which places shall be robbed. That afternoon he visits each of the stores on the revised list, selects the one which seems the best venture for his men and perfects his plan of future action there. The next day Jerry devotes to the others on the list, while the other three continue in their "findings."

At the end of a week they have thoroughly covered a large district and Jerry has a number of stores picked out for robbery, the details for each one thoroughly worked out and decided upon. Jerry is the tool or actual money getter, the others are his stalls, and although he is open to suggestions from the stalls they must finally be governed by his instructions, because he runs the risk of losing his liberty; he alone "takes a chance."

The first store they rob is, we will say, a busy hardware retail establishment having several different departments, each department having its own special clerk and cash register. This particular place has a rush hour in which it is hard to be waited on. The music box where the steel drill, etc., are sold is the objective of our friends. During the rush hour Tom goes there and has the salesman wrap up for a $2 twist drill, and then takes the clerk back to the manager's office to get figures on the installation of a steam heating plant in his castle in Spain, a twenty-room house.

By this time Harry (pre bono publico) is at the next counter to the rear making a stall purchase. Dick, standing in the aisle, signals, by taking his hat off, to Jerry on the sidewalk just as Tom goes away from the drill counter with the salesman. Jerry, bareheaded, in his shirt sleeves, walks in rapidly with a businesslike air and goes directly to the cash register behind the counter. The moment he reaches the music box Harry drops $10 in silver quarters on the floor, attracting general attention to himself as he nervously starts to gather up the scattered coins, while Jerry calmly empties the register and walks out of the store.

Calmly Continues Robbing.

In a few minutes the four are together again, with Jerry giving final instructions to his stalls regarding the next place he has chosen to rob. Back in the hardware store the loss may not be discovered for half an hour or more, and often the salesman is not only unsuspected of the theft but is lucky if he escapes imprisonment for the heel job he knows nothing about.

I myself with two stalls have taken through such a business of an hour.

But this graft is not by any means confined to music boxes. As a rule the biggest money on the heel is stolen from saloons. Nearly every cafe has besides the registers a damper or money drawer located in the back bar, wherein are kept cash and bills. The damper is a small business hours and in the safe at night. Out of this damper the proprietor may pay his landlord the rent, the brewery collector for the beer, and here, too, is kept the cash for the accommodation of well-known customers who desire to have checks cashed.

In one of our large cities is a saloon run by a big German who does considerable business. Jake, the boss, pays all his bills in currency out of a cigar box he keeps in a damper while he is behind the bar, and when he goes upstairs he takes it with him. Beyond the bar he has a small store of his leguency in vain attempts to get Jake to leave this damper unprotected for a few minutes during the hour when his two bartenders were upstairs eating dinner and he alone in the bar. But whether it was because Jake could not be stilled on account of suspicious nature or just his stolid laziness they failed to accomplish their purpose.

Out for Big Game.

Finally two heel men formed a plan and waited until the first of the month, when they were reasonably sure, if successful, to get a month's rent, beer bill and the check money. On the afternoon of the first day of the month Jake was leaning his enormous frame against the back bar, talking to two German friends who stood drinking beer before him. A well-dressed stranger came in, ordered a beer, accidentally spilled some of it on his hands, asked Jake where he could wash them, and was directed to the washroom in the rear.

Shortly after the stranger went to wash his hands Jake's attention was drawn to the front window by the sight of a man in overalls ascending a ladder with a saw in his hand.

"Hey, Shultz, go out and see vot dot fella is doin' mit my house," said Jake.

Shultz went out and came back to the door, calling excitedly, "Come here once, Jake. Dot's a fella what's got a order from the mayor to take away from over your place the beer sign."

With a loud bellow of protest Jake and his friends hurried to the foot of the ladder upon which the workman was coolly starting to saw through an ornamental gilt going.

"Hey, you, what the helmdemition you doin' by saw here mit you do?"

"Who are you?" asked the workman.

"I'm der boss."

"Not my boss," calmly said the man on the ladder as he turned to the sign again.

Jake carried the ladder and saw into the store to await the arrival of the policeman. But long before any officer came Jake discovered that some one had pried open the damper with a "James" (jimmy) and stolen over $1,100. The saw now hangs over the bar as a souvenir of one of Jake's most unlucky days.

After Jerry's mob has cleaned up the main business section of town they go to the poorer parts, where the shopkeeper lives in the rear of the shop. There are different conditions and a different objective. The meager day's receipts in a damper or register have no attraction for Jerry and his men.

They now go after the "plant" of the owner. This plant may vary from $50 to $500, seldom less than the former and sometimes greater than the latter. The mob meets much earlier now, about 6 a. m., in the neighborhood chosen, and each man again has an area to cover and a report to make.

Locating Hidden Money.

Tom visits several groceries, asking for change for $10, before he sees a likely opening. Here he buys of a woman alone in the store a quarter's worth and gives a $5 bill in payment. The woman goes back into the living-room and as Tom hears a drawer being pulled out he steps to the doorway and politely offers a $1 bill instead of the other, saying "didn't know I had it," as he sees where the plant is kept.

In this manner one pretext or another serves to locate the plant and note is taken of essential details. The reports are reviewed, passed upon and where necessary further perfected by other visits to the prospect. Once the plant, representing hoarded savings or funds with which to Ever Wonder How Much Was in Your Neighbor's Pay Envelope?

Here is the Report of Uncle Sam, Which Shows That if You Earn More Than $1,000 a Year You Are Better Off Than Fifty-Nine Out of Sixty Men Who Meet on the Street.

By JOHN CALLAN O'LAUGHLIN.

DO YOU earn more than $1,000 a year? If so, you are better off than fifty-nine out of every sixty persons in the United States.

Statistics compiled show that the average yearly income of persons employed in the principal industrial states of the Union range from $501 to $310.

Dr. Frank H. Straightoff, an authority on economic, places the minimum family income adequate to the maintenance of normal living conditions in the smaller cities of the North, according to the general prevailing American notion of decent living, at $980. Accordingly, unless more than one member of each family contributes to the household expenses the income is $150 a year less than adequate.

Estimates compiled show that not more than one person in every twenty-five engaged in gainful occupations in the United States earns over $1,000 a year. The latest census statistics show that only 40 per cent of the population is employed. From this the deduction is made that not more than one person in every sixty men, women and children in the United States earns $1,000 a year or more.

While the federal government has never made a survey of the earnings of the entire population, statistics have been compiled in certain industries. The last table made on the earnings of railroad employees shows that only seven men in every 100 earned as much as $1,000 a year. Earnings of male employees under 21 years of age were not considered. Neither were the earnings of female employees. It is impossible to think long of one without the other. In the course of my life I have become well acquainted in hundreds of saloons, ranging from sailors' haunts to the rendezvous of respected citizens, and without exception I have found the most regular customers are the men who follow crime for a living.

(Copyright, 1915, by J. Keeler.)

With one of every twenty-five persons in the country making $1,000 a year or more, there are in the United States approximately 1,500,000 with incomes of more than $1,000 a year. The last census showed 28,167,266 persons engaged in gainful occupations. The total population at that time was 91,972,268, and the number of persons 10 years of age or over was 71,590,270. Fifty-three per cent, or a little more than half, of all the persons in the United States over 10 years of age were engaged in gainful occupations.

Those who were engaged as follows:

Agriculture	11,659,262
Extraction of minerals	944,324
Manufacturing and mechanical industries	14,658,881
Transportation	2,637,531
Professional service	822,768
Domestic and personal service	3,172,474
Miscellaneous occupations	1,771,043

According to the estimates made as to the number of persons in the United States making in excess of $1,000 a year and the returns made to the Treasury Department on the income tax statements, there are in this country 1,165,097 persons who have incomes of more than $1,000 but less than $2,000.

When the law was passed it was believed that over 100 persons in the United States had incomes of more than $1,000,000 a year. The returns showed only forty-four to be getting more than $1,000,000. Similar reductions were made in all classes.

These industries of the United States the number of employees receiving $5 a week is twenty times as great as the number receiving $25 a week. In the cotton industry in New Jersey there were 1,007 employees at $5 and 67 a week to forty-nine at $25. A survey made in New Jersey in 1908 shows the average annual wage in 2,137 establishments to be $602.14. The number of persons employed in that number of establishments was 378,964.

PHYSICIANS TO AID FIGHT DRUG HABIT

Revenue Agent Gannt, Attorney Hooper Alexander and Dr. Stewart Roberts Hold Conference.

Stirred to action by the declaration of Internal Revenue Agent D. J. Gannt that a census of Atlanta has shown more than 5,000 victims of the drug habit, city and government officials Saturday at a conference with United States District Attorney Hooper Alexander took steps to bring about cooperation between the medical society and public officials with a view to reducing the traffic in harmful drugs.

Dr. Stewart Roberts, president of the Fulton County Medical Society, was in the conference, and he announced that he would call a meeting of the society for some time in the week and get the proposition before them and get their assistance for the drug campaign.

Work of Department. Mr. Gannt told of some of the work the department has been doing in Atlanta during the past few weeks and reported that the traffickers had been reduced about 50 per cent. The victims of the habit are not in one class, nor of a certain age, said Mr. Gannt. "We have found hundreds of aged women victims of the habit, husbands and wives are users of the dope and even young men and women and children are on our list. One of the most deplorable features of the traffic in harmful drugs is that various Atlanta business houses have fallen under its weight, and when unable to get the traffic from physicians have come to our office and begged for an order for sufficient amount of the stuff to relieve their suffering. So far as we have found, it is impossible to cut them off entirely, because it would result in too much suffering. The tapering-off method is the only satisfactory method we have found."

Tapering-Off Method. Mr. Alexander suggested at the conference Saturday that a physician be employed to stay at Grady hospital and give the tapering-off treatment to users of the drug who are sent there by physicians and revenue officers. It was pointed out, however, that Grady is a hospital in emergency cases and have tested the institution to its capacity. Unless a physician is sent to some other provision is made to furnish adequate facilities, it was stated that no relief could be gotten there.

Mr. Alexander has put the matter up to the city officials, and he agreed to co-operate with his department in cleaning up the city, and he says that with the necessary support the city can be cleaned up by the first of next year.

O. H. Hales, Internal Revenue collector, was in the conference with Mr. Alexander, and he is assisting in every way possible in rounding up the drug habit, and he is sending his field agents out for extra effort in enforcing the Harrison narcotic law.

ALLEGED PEDDLERS OF Dope HELD. Systematic peddling of large amounts of dope among Atlanta negroes was cut short Saturday evening, according to government officials, when "Black" Shepard and Ben Jackson were arrested on Decatur Street. At a midnight session of commissioners, Judge Carter placed the negroes under temporary bonds of $100 each, pending their hearing next week, and stated that he desired such a heavy sum as a guarantee against their repeating the violation of the government's prohibition to drive dope peddlers from the city.

After obtaining the names of 3,000 addicts in the city, rounding up two hundred and twenty-five peddlers of the Harrison act, getting a line on the illegal sale of dope by prescription books and having bound over to the federal grand jury several peddlers of drugs, the government has set about to clean up the traffic in harmful drugs as the most important step in eradicating the habit of dope peddling from Atlanta.

BULGAR TROOPS ON TURK BORDER

Turco-Bulgarian Relations Reported to Have Reached Breaking Point—150,000 Bulgar Troops Concentrated.

London, August 21.—Telegrams from the Balkan capitals say Turco-Bulgarian relations have reached the breaking point and that Turkey is strengthening her fortifications in Thracia because of fear of a Bulgarian invasion. No open breach between the Bulgars and Turks is considered likely, however, until Bulgaria learns whether the Serbian parliament, which has been in recess since for three days, is willing to vote Macedonia to her.

Red Cross Workers To Visit Russ Camps

Berlin, August 21.—(Via London, August 21, 2:45 p. m.)—Abbasador Gerard announced today that arrangements virtually had been completed for sending American Red Cross physicians and nurses to visit Russian camps in Germany and Austria.

Because of a shortage of funds it had been planned to recall to the United States all the American Red Cross attaches in Europe. The German government suggested it was willing to pay expense of a corps if, instead of returning home, they would go to Russia and investigate conditions thoroughly.

ambassador Gerard, after securing sanction of the Red Cross authorities, called for physicians. Three doctors and sixteen nurses responded.

This Is the Best Stearns Ever Built The Price Is $1395 For the past six years our organization has been developing and improving the Silent Knight motor to meet Stearns standards. This, we believe, accounts for the prestige won by Stearns. It has taken Stearns experience, Stearns design and Stearns workmanship to apply the Knight principle so successfully. For the Knight type of sliding doors is a principle. There are differences in Knight motorized engines—just as there are differences in poppet valve motors. The Knight principle is only one feature of the famous Stearns motor—just as the motor is but part of the whole car. So the practicability of this principle depends on our application of it—just as each of Europe's foremost makers had to adapt it to meet different requirements. Four-Year Certainty The results obtained from the Knight motor made in our scientifically managed shops are not equalled anywhere in the world. Only in Stearns will you find the Stearns-built Knight type motor. So when you choose a Stearns you select a car that has reached a standard that only years of study and labor can bring. The experience we have gained in all these years teaches us that our success with this type of motor depends largely on our especially trained workmen and our perfectly equipped plants. It is logical, therefore, that the Stearns engineers should be the first to produce a high-grade car embodying the Knight feature at a lowered price. All the initial costs of producing such a car have been paid. Our developments of production have now become standardized. So now the price can be reduced from $1750 to $1395, even with additional improvements. Car Improved—Price Lowered A few years ago only rich men could afford Knight motor cars. Now a better car—the last word in motor luxury—a car backed by years of practical demonstration—costs less than similarly well built cars without this. To learn more about "The Ultimate Car" first write the factory of the Stearns. There is nothing so interesting in motor literature. Then see the car at our local dealer. Let him take you for such a ride as you never had before. Write today for our book. SPECIFICATIONS MOTOR—4 cylinder—18 H.P.—14 Stroke, 115 rated H.P. We guarantee 100,000 miles on one motor. Forced Feed Lubrication to all parts. CLUTCH—Leather faced cone type, so designed as to give easy starting. TRANSMISSION—Selective type, three speeds forward and one reverse, unit with engine. DRIVE—Through propeller shaft and universal joint to rear axle. REAR AXLE—One piece of pressed steel with bevel gear housing mounted in center, making a very rigid construction. FRONT AXLE—One piece forging, Stearns special design. SPRINGS—Semi-elliptic front—Cant-lever rear. BRAKES—Foot brake contracting on propeller shaft. Hand brake—expanding in drums on rear wheels. "AN' GEORGE SAYS TO ME, HE SAYS--"

Corra Harris Gives Her Views on Suffrage In New Book, "Co-Citizens," Soon to Be Published

By Jena Dooly.

I have read the advance sheets of Corra Harris' new book entitled "Co-Citizens," which Doubleday, Page & Co., publishers, promise to have on the market in September. The story, in the name implies, hinges on the suffrage question.

The anti-suffragists may interpret the book as an expression in their favor, if they wish. The suffragists have equal right to claim the book is favorable to their cause, but it is obvious that the book was not written with the intention of influencing opinion either way. It attempts to solve no problem; to suggest no reforms, but shows that the suffrage question is an incident in the history of woman's development; that it will not influence the character of woman to that extent that she will neglect the duties which are essentially hers, nor will it necessarily lead to political perfection.

Belah Adams, the younger heroine of the two who had the interest of the story, had no sooner heard the news that the Jordan county election had gone overwhelmingly in favor of suffrage, after vigorous campaigning on her part for the cause, than she could hardly be surprised to find that she had herself been converted, and in honor of those pledged with her to permit her to perform the home duties, making especially clear the condition of his people. Indeed, she became almost sentimental about the socks when she said: "You do wear holes in them, don't you?"

Woman's Life in Small Town.

The book is a graphic record of life in the small town with women there striving as they are doing in all towns, large and small. There are the same conditions to be met with, politically and socially; the men are human beings, with their good qualities and weaknesses, and there is the town editor, the banker, preacher, "the colonel," the judge and "Mike Finn," the dirty politician.

There are the women, human beings, too, none perfect in beauty or character; no angles and no very bad characters, with the slight heroine of the story, Susan Walton, just the type of types which Corra Harris can so well picture and "write" in her stories, which deal with life as it is—not life as painted in pictures, doctored in literature, or elaborated in the drama.

Susan Walton takes advantage of being a woman and, says things she would be spoken down for if she were a man.

"She made public speeches at a time," says the writer, "when no other woman in the south would go further than give her experience in church or read missionary reports before the woman's district conference. She was for temperance and education even before the days of local option and when the public school system consisted of eight weeks in the summer. She had the brains of a man and the temper of an indignant but tender-hearted woman. This is an exact description of her literary style, which was not literary, but it was versatile wit and sarcasm and outrageous veracity. She used it as an instrument of torture and vengeance in the public arena upon the characters of political demagogues, liquor interests and the state treasury. And what she said was violently effective. Her victims might perish in the error of their ways, but not one of them ever recovered from the insupportable fury of her attack."

The Abuse of Power.

Susan and her followers abused their power when they set it in the town, as surely as the men did who presided over the festivals of these women, as the writer describes as "living on remote farms, tragic beyond relief."

When one of them dies of the strain, she just dies. Or she lives after the struggle and hardship, and tells to Belah Adams who reach to help her: "My hens is all dead, and my children is all dead, and I'm dead, too. Women don't live, you know, they just work."

Would you think you are going to make the women live same as men. You can't do it. We ain't for ourselves, we are just made for them.

I would not mind so much if my hens hadn't all died."

An Interview on Co-Citizens.

Mrs. Harris' book will be as differently interpreted by her readers as her spoken statements are by her interviewers.

"In case the interviewer is a violent suffragist, and I am not equally so, I find myself exploited as an anti-suffragist, and the experience is similar," said Mrs. Harris in a recent interview I had with her.

"The first of the articles on suffrage six years ago, when the opposition was so strong among women of my section that some of them wrote protests to the dear men of the papers where I lived, and the views held and published by an anti-suffragist female! Now, these same women belong to suffrage leagues. My article, 'The Price of Citizenship for Women,' appeared in the Post as long ago as 1909. But I have never joined a suffrage league, because, really, I have never been sufficiently urged, and in my case, I doubt if I will so long as women do not think shrewdly enough on this subject to know and make clearly the distinction between suffrage for women and socialism for women.

Suffrage and Socialism.

"At the present time many of them do not, and I am everlastingly opposed to the conclusions to which the doctrines of a man and his victims, especially his women victims. It is not so bad for men to proclaim socialism as their faith, being in some ways a loose-jointed sex, morally anyhow. But women cannot afford to take any liberties with morals, not even intellectual liberties—leads to the amazing license in living, divorce, infidelity, and other forms of moral laxity fatal to the honor and health of the race. The making of this distinction has led to the belief in some quarters that I do not believe in suffrage for women."

Common Justice.

"I do believe in it, because it is a matter of common justice that they should have it, the good women and the bad women the same as the good men and the bad ones have it. And more particularly do I believe in it because women are fearfully in need of something to awaken their sense of responsibility, which has been rendered child-like and narrow, and often feeble by the fact that they are not held responsible much for anything beyond preserving their chastity.

"I doubt if giving them the franchise will improve political morals. On the contrary, they are born politicians trained to get what they want by policy do it. The ballot box is sure to be offset by the will they will accomplish—their cunning. But they have a right to be equal in the common law, and I believe in the same as other two-legged animals who think and are capable of ideals."

Her Position.

"This is my position and you may say so. When some millions of slaves were given the franchise in the south nobody raised the question of how they would vote, or where they would exercise their rights for the good of the country. They received the franchise as a matter of justice, and I never begrudged it of them. Let the women and the daughters of the 'privileges' have it on the same basis, and they will get the sense and the courage to do it. The vast majority of our best men, citizens, who either 'haven't the time' or are too indifferent to their duties as citizens to go to the polls."

Suffrage from "Co-Citizens."

"A town without women in the streets is like a meadow without flowers a bay tree without leaves. The life without wings of birds in it and the sweet sounds they make there show that flowers and birds."

"I was once asked women's desires for any means to secure herself upon the man's side in the economic life of the town, she may engage in a glamorous flirtation with some other man. I know how to exile him from his home with a reception of a bridge party. But when a good faithful wife under her virtuous mind to humble her man and glorify her own supremacy, she sits on her rug right over her head to keep the dust off her shoes, dashes twelve gallons of clean water on the floor, keeps it in with the old stiff broom and begins to sweep.

In their first moments of growth all political movements are divinely democratic. It is not until the thing has been reduced to a working formula that some base intense the formula and the trappings of mechanical methods begin.

If there is anything more exasperating than a republican in an old school democratic of the south, it must be the little political beast in his side swept into a narrow female suffragist with no realizations and no sense of consciousness to keep her inside established party lines.

When men have employed every other argument to get their way with women, they cease to argue, back their ears, plant their feet and ball.

Men have been our little children for so long that we do not know how to want them.

Be some immediately to the point, a man who does business with women, who are such you have the drop on the other side."

General Gestals at Home.

(From The Philadelphia Public Ledger.)

General Gestals, the builder of the Panama canal and the ruler of the zone, who is back, virtually free for all time from the task from which he retired officially in November, remarked on arriving that he felt quite "at home" when he read of "widespread in the Calabro Post." Asked about Mexico, he said loudly that if they needed a "vindicator" against the "Mexican" he would be glad to speak in fact, and though it is out of the question one cannot imagine a better fate for war-torn Mexico than to have as its administrator a man like General Gestals, whose only concern would be to avoid any and every political opposition. For the world, the long since put him on a pedestal. And though the murky agencies of a crowd had been charged with the smoke of huge battlefields and the clang of arms and the roar of guns at the achievement of Panama, no one is in any doubt where man and turn for relief and inspiration in this year of grace.

The patriotism of sacrifice even to death is inspiring, but after all the confusion of the maddest now making Europe a shambles has cleared away mankind will remember the achievement of these brave men, who crown the work where mind and matter together in the promotion of human relations through the completion of the canal as the great glory of the year.

Claim to the general and field marshal, whose name will go down in history as the name of the man who have taken this or that place, it is pleasant to think that General Gestals, who saved lives and built up a world "at home" among these who the world will delight to honor.

Earthquakes cause electric waves, and an Italian scientist has invented apparatus which has registered them several minutes before seismographs have shown such movements.
