5 THRASHED IN COURT BY BURTON SMITH

Well Known Lawyer Whips One After Another in Dispute Over Witness.

HYSTERICAL WOMEN FIGHT TO ESCAPE FROM CORRIDOR

Deputy Sheriffs Part Contestants After Two-Minute Battle. Victory Ready for More.

Burton Smith, well-known attorney and brother of Senator Hoke Smith, on Tuesday afternoon thrashed five men who objected to him conversing in the corridors of the court rooms in the Thrower building with a woman witness in the famous Crawford will case.

Two of the men, C. W. Walton, of Buckhead, and W. H. Byrd, 41 West Twelfth Street, were badly beaten up, both showing black eyes and contusions on their faces where Smith struck them. The other three men also were given severe drubbings before friends and policemen separated the belligerents.

According to eyewitnesses of the fight, Attorney Smith had stopped Mrs. Cash as she passed through the corridors of the building and was talking to her. Walton, it is claimed, approached and said:

Walton Objects to Action.

"Here, you; don't talk to that woman!"

"What do you care?" asked Smith. "Do you own her?"

"Yes, I do," answered Walton, and, it is said, raised his arm as though intending to strike the attorney.

Walton is a powerfully built man, fully as large as the attorney. Hardly had the words left his mouth, however, when Attorney Smith lunged forward and struck Walton squarely on the point of the jaw. Walton fell limply to the floor, and Byrd rushed into the fry. He was met with a stiff right arm jolt from Mr. Smith and was knocked down for the count.

Three Men Enter Fray.

Then three men who had entered the court house with Walton and Byrd, and who were with them when the attorney knocked them down, leaped at Smith. The attorney met them, and knocked them down as fast as they came at him. One of them he knocked down twice, while one blow sufficed to put the other two hors de combat.

Before the five men could arise and rush the attorney, deputy sheriffs, policemen and friends of the attorney rushed between them and prevented further hostilities. Included in the rescue party were Deputy Sheriffs John S. Owens, Dave Goodlin, Newton Garner and Attorneys Reuben Arnold and Colonel James Anderson.

Attorney Smith's hand was bleeding from the force of the blows he had struck the five men, and on one of his knuckles was a wound from one of his opponent's teeth. His friends started to take him out of the building, and as they passed Walton, the latter began getting up from the floor.

Wanted to Continue Bout.

"I'm ready for you again," he remarked.

Mr. Smith tried to break away from his friends and expressed a desire to again knock Walton down, but he was restrained and went to his office, where physicians dressed his wounds. Walton and Byrd and the other three men left the building immediately.

The fight lasted about two minutes. Several women who were in the corridor near the belligerents, became hysterical and fairly fought their way into the court room. Deputy sheriffs were called to quiet the excitement.

Mrs. Cash Tells Story.

The woman over whom the fight started was Mrs. Cora Cash, of Buckhead. According to Mrs. Cash, she and her daughter, Mrs. Violet Whitemire, were sitting on a bench near the entrance to the court room, when Attorney Smith came up and began talking to Mrs. Whitmire, an attractive young woman.

Then, Mrs. Cash says, Walton and Byrd came up and demanded that Smith stop talking to the young woman. Smith retaliated with his question as to the ownership of the woman, and the fight followed.

Woods Favored for 4th Circuit Bench

WASHINGTON, May 20.—The Senate Committee on Judiciary has ordered favorably reported the nomination of C. A. Woods, of Charleston, S. C., to be judge in the Fourth Judicial Circuit and Judge Edward K. Campbell, of Birmingham, Ala., to be chief justice of the Court of Claims.

A sharp fight was made against Woods, charges having been filed against him alleging he was a member of a political ring in South Carolina.

Jacksonville to Get 'Jedge Briles' Justice

That he might gather pointers on how to conduct the police court in Jacksonville, of which he will assume charge June 1, Judge W. W. Anderson sat through the session of Recorder Broyles' court Monday an intensely interested spectator of the proceedings.

Judge Anderson expressed himself as greatly pleased with Judge Broyles' methods and his determination to enforce law.

Heaviest Woman Ill In Chicago Hospital

CHICAGO, May 20.—Mary Perry, said to be the heaviest woman in the world, was seriously ill to-day at the County Hospital and fear was expressed that she would not recover.

She was brought to the hospital from an amusement park on a specially constructed stretcher. She weighs nearly 600 pounds.

Capitol Dictographs Alarm Congressmen

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Congressmen holding a meeting in one of the committee rooms at the Capitol were alarmed when they were informed that each of the four committee rooms contains a dictograph.

The instruments were installed for convenience in calling clerks.

BIG BARBECUE GIVEN FOR JUDGES AT ROME

ROME, GA., May 20.—Twenty-five Georgia lambs, 100 chickens and 50 gallons of Brunswick stew were served at an old-fashioned barbecue given to-day by Wright Willingham at his home, in honor of Judge William T. Newman, Judge Moses Wright and Federal and Superior Court officials. There were 500 persons in attendance.

FLAGLER, OIL POWER AND RAIL HEAD, IS DEAD

BEGAN LIFE AS CLERK IN A GROCERY STORE

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA., May 20.—Henry M. Flagler, wealthy railroad builder and owner, died here today.

Mr. Flagler had been sick for three months, although it was thought several weeks ago that he would recover. Mr. and Mrs. Flagler came here in February. At that time he was suffering from excessive nervousness. A general breakdown followed.

Mr. Flagler, one of America's foremost financial giants, and known in the South as the "King of Florida," was born in a little village just south of Rochester, N. Y., in 1850. His father was pastor of the village church, and at the age of 14 Henry decided that his mother and sister could get along more comfortably if he ceased to be one of the family burden.

Goes Out to Seek Fortune.

So he started from home, with a few dollars in his pocket, and gradually worked his way westward to Republic, Ohio, where he went to work in a country store for $5 per month and board.

Strict economy soon enabled young Flagler to open a grain business in Bellevue, Ohio. And here began a little business which ultimately resulted in the formation of the greatest corporation in the world.

Mr. Flagler used to ship his carloads of grain to Cleveland, where it was sold for him by a young commission merchant named John D. Rockefeller.

Loses All in Salt Venture.

After amassing a fortune of $50,000 in Bellevue, he went to Saginaw, Mich., and made an unsuccessful venture in the salt business, losing every dollar of his money. With the aid of money furnished by his wife's relatives, he moved to Cleveland and reentered the grain business. He renewed his acquaintance with John D. and William Rockefeller, who were at that time confining their efforts to the oil refining business. He became interested in the brothers' new venture and in 1867, with the aid of more money from his wife's relatives, he entered into a $100,000 partnership with the Rockefellers and Samuel Andrews.

Wife Becomes Insane.

Mr. Flagler's second marriage occurred in 1883, and in the next ten years his fortune increased by leaps and bounds. His wife became the mistress of a fine mansion on Fifth Avenue, New York, as well as a palatial country home on Long Island and in Florida, and to all outward appearances Henry M. Flagler was the happiest man in the world. Then a terrible misfortune came into his life.

His wife's mind became unbalanced. The grief-stricken man kept the awful truth hidden as long as possible. He paid thousands and thousands of dollars to alienists in the hope of restoring her mentality, but her condition gradually grew worse. When, in 1899, the unfortunate woman finally became unmanageable, the Standard Oil magnate was forced to have his wife declared legally insane.

Divorces Insane Wife.

The following year a law was passed by the Florida Legislature, whereby permanent insanity was made ample grounds for a divorce. It was alleged at the time that this law was passed for the benefit of Mr. Flagler, who had come to be a power in Florida as a result of his vast railroad and hotel enterprises.

He devoted a great deal of his money and energy toward the upbuilding of the State of Florida, and making the southeastern peninsula one of the greatest winter resorts in the world. His greatest work in this connection was the completion recently of the extension of the Florida East Coast Railway from Knights' Key to Key West, which is known as the "railroad over the sea." This stretch of track is 156 miles in length and connects the chain of islands between the mainland and Key West. Its construction was one of the greatest engineering feats of the present age, as it is built almost entirely over water.

Mr. Flagler's fortune was estimated at $100,000,000.

CASES READY AGAINST LEE AND LEO FRANK

Solicitor General Dorsey Declares All Evidence Will Go to the Grand Jury Friday.

THINKS MORE ARRESTS WILL MAKE NO CHANGE

Mrs. Jane Carr Begs Women to Help Solve Mystery—Burns Agent on New Trail.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey announced Tuesday morning that the State's case against Leo M. Frank and Newt Lee in connection with the Phagan murder, would go to the Grand Jury Friday of this week. He said that he could anticipate no new arrest or development that would make it necessary to change this plan.

Mrs. Jane F. Carr, 251 Ponce De-Leon Avenue, in an open letter, asked every woman in Atlanta to contribute to the fund to employ the Burns detective and Mr. Burns himself to work in the Phagan investigation. She appealed to women of every walk in life to give according to their means.

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?" was the subject of her letter.

Felder Asks for Funds.

The Burns fund, after going above the $2,000 mark, slacked considerably. Colonel Thomas B. Felder said this sum would not be sufficient if it became necessary for the Burns men to make an exhaustive investigation, and asked the people to contribute liberally to the end that Atlanta's greatest mystery be satisfactorily cleared.

C. W. Tobie, chief of the Burns' criminal investigation department, was even more optimistic Tuesday morning than he was Monday that the Phagan mystery would be cleared to the satisfaction of Atlanta.

"Another day on the scene has only convinced me that the crime is far from the most baffling the Burns detectives have solved," he said at his hotel Tuesday morning. "I am not at liberty to make public the result of my investigation, but we have certainly made progress."

Search for Phone Girl.

City detectives are searching for a telephone girl who was reported to have heard a conversation over the telephone the night of the murder between two persons said to be attaches of the pencil factory.

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford said that he had learned from a responsible source of a switchboard operator who was reported to have overheard a conversation that would be of the greatest importance in the Phagan case. He would not say whether he had learned the identity of the girl.

A corps of department detectives were detailed to the search that will take in every private branch exchange in Atlanta.

Connecticut To Be Taft's Official Home

NEW HAVEN, CONN., May 20.—Former President Taft is preparing to transfer his voting residence from Ohio to Connecticut. He will have his name put on the list of "voters to be made," and in September the board for admitting voters will pass on his qualifications, after an examination which will include the applicant's reading, as usual, of any section of the Constitution of the United States that the board may select.

As President Taft must live in the State one year before he can vote, he will not be eligible for the city election in the fall, but will be qualified for the State election in 1914.

HERESY FIGHT STORMY

Controversy Stirs Assembly

School Head Answers Critics

Dr. Francis Brown, President Union Theological Seminary, who vigorously defended the doctrinal views of his college.

Moderator Struggles to Keep Order as Discussion Over Union College Charges Grows Bitter.

Vigorous Defense of Institution Made by Dr. Francis Brown; Recess Taken to End Uproar.

Stormy outbursts, silenced by the active gavel of Moderator Stone, only to break out afresh, marked the bitter Union Theological Seminary controversy on the floor of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly Tuesday forenoon.

Half a dozen men were on their feet simultaneously, clamoring for recognition by the chair. Toward the close of the forenoon session, the discussion was involved in a tangle of parliamentary procedure, from which relief was obtained only by the recess taken until the afternoon.

Mr. Flagler died at 10 o'clock. The end was peaceful. To those at the bedside it seemed that the sick man died in his sleep. Among those in the death chamber were Mrs. Flagler and Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler.

The body will be placed in the mausoleum in the Flagler plot at St. Augustine. The date of the funeral probably will not be fixed until tonight.

The intense feeling of the commissioners cropped out in many different ways, and the moderator was able to maintain a semblance of order only with the greatest difficulty.

"Sit Down," the Cry.

An unexpected but futile effort was made to avoid the issue by tabling the resolution condemning the seminary. The majority, however, were eager to have the question settled once and for all.

Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., was the author of the motion to postpone action indefinitely.

"Sit down!" some militant preacher at the side of the room shouted as soon as he realized the import of the motion.

The eys of Moderator Stone blazed as he pounded thunderously with his gavel.

"I want no such expression in this Assembly," he ordered. "I am saying this to the man who made that remark. I do not care who he may be."

Spirited Defense.

The debate proper had not begun when the morning session adjourned. Dr. Francis Brown, president of the seminary which is under fire, was permitted to close the remarks which he had started when the session adjourned Monday afternoon. After this ensued the maelstrom of motions and points of order that kept the session in a turmoil until recess.

Dr. Brown came to a spirited defense of Union Seminary, its directors and its faculty.

Divine Aid Asked.

Many women were among the spectators in the packed balcony when the debate was started by Dr. Francis Brown, president of Union Seminary. The walls were lined by several score of men, who were compelled to stand. Even the upper gallery had its fringe of keenly interested listeners.

In the main auditorium every seat was taken. Ushers were instructed to keep the doors barred while the debate was in progress.

Moderator Stone ruled at the opening of the discussion that there should be no disorder of any sort. To insure the carrying out of his order, he forbade applause of any sort during or after the speeches.

He called upon Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, one of the instructors in Union Theological Seminary, and Rev. C. A. R. Janvier, of Philadelphia, to invoke the aid of God in deciding the question.

In spite of Moderator Stone's ruling that there should be no applause or manifestation of approval or disapproval, there was a marked murmur of dissent when President Brown, of Union Seminary, declared that he metophorically had been met at the door of the Assembly hall with a club

FIANCE STRICKEN ON WEDDING EVE IS DEAD

Stricken on the eve of his wedding day, R. W. Sutton, 25 years old, of 419 Washington Street, is dead at the Grady Hospital—a victim of meningitis. His bride-to-be, Miss Lillian A. Tutwiler, 300 South Pryor Street, is prostrated and his aged mother, Mrs. T. B. Sutton, added this new sorrow to that cast over her by the death of her husband a month ago.

Although but a few doors down the corridor from her son, Mrs. Sutton, who is paralyzed and unable to move, has not been informed of her son's demise. Physicians feared that this second shock would prove fatal to her.

The younger Sutton's death occurred at 2 o'clock Tuesday morning. It was the culmination of a stroke of meningitis the day before he was to have married Miss Tutwiler, three weeks ago. With the same affliction his father had died.

Fiancee Became His Nurse.

Following his removal to the hospital, his fiancee became his nurse. During the three weeks of anxiety which came, when death was ever present and physicians shook their heads in forebodings, the young couple did not despair. Miss Tutwiler kept her newly-made wedding gown in readiness for the wedding which she was sure would come.

In his conscious moments the young bridegroom-to-be talked constantly of the happiness that lay in store for them when he got well. Nurses and attendants at the hospital heard with aching hearts the plans for the future that the couple made as during the long days and nights they sat holding hands.

Mr. Sutton was alone when death came. Miss Tutwiler, exhausted and worn out by her constant vigil at the bedside of her lover, was prostrated Monday when told by physicians that there was no hope. She visited Sutton for the last time late Monday afternoon, when already death was at the door. She was the last person Mr. Sutton recognized.

Recognized Her While Dying.

When she came into his room and laid her hand on the wasted arm, the eyes that were fast closing in the last sleep lighted up. Choking with sobs, the two bade each other goodbye, and Miss Tutwiler, prostrated by her sorrow, was taken to her home.

After Miss Tutwiler left his room Sutton sank rapidly, and soon relapsed into a coma from which he never awakened. Death came to his relief a few hours later. The young man's father, T. B. Sutton, died recently of the same disease.

Mr. Sutton and Miss Tutwiler had planned to be married on April 23. Arrangements had been made for the wedding, the minister had been engaged, and the friends of the happy couple had been invited. On April 22 Mr. Sutton suddenly was taken ill. Thinking the illness soon would pass, no halt was made in the plans for the wedding. On the morning of April 23 Mr. Sutton was suffering intense pain and a physician was called. In the afternoon of the same day he diagnosed the trouble as meningitis, and ordered the young man taken to Grady Hospital.

Girl Plans for Wedding.

The friends of the young people were notified of the illness of Mr. Sutton, and the wedding was postponed. Confident that her lover soon would recover from his illness, Miss Tutwiler fully completed the final details of her trousseau.

But the wedding gown was never to be worn, and to-day it lies unfolded, emphasizing the grief of the young woman. Miss Tutwiler was hysterical with grief when she learned of her fiance's death, and on Tuesday morning was prostrated at her home. During the day her family became alarmed, and physicians were called. Her condition is considered serious.

ASSEMBLY SKIRMISH WILL AID ATTACKED SEMINARY, DECLARES DR. STELZLE

Union Theological School Not So Anxious for Presbyterians to Take It Under Its Wing, He Says---The Church Made Move for "Wedding."

By Rev. Cha rles Stelzle.

Everybody had supposed that the relationship between Union Theological Seminary and the Presbyterian General Assembly in the last year or two was that of courtship, with the General Assembly as the suitor.

At least this is the impression that one might have secured by listening to the debates and particularly the resolutions adopted at previous assemblies, with reference to this matter.

The Assembly proposed union—it was the aggressor—but while the basis of union, or, at least, of closer relationship was accepted by Union Seminary, the Assembly seemed in a mood Monday to "break the engagement," and it found itself Tuesday morning in the position of returning the little "tokens of endearment" which had been confidently placed in its hands.

Here is the resolution adopted by the Assembly of 1911, which was the basis of the approach to the divorced but "haughty body," who yet was believed to have tender feelings toward the Presbyterian Assembly.

Resolution of Last Year.

Whereas, The Union Theological Seminary in the city of New York was founded by Presbyterians and largely endowed from Presbyterian sources; and

Whereas, Some years past there developed a condition which led to the severing of the rations which had existed from the the organization of the seminary, between it and the General Assembly; and

Whereas, We are persuaded that there are in the faculty and in the directorate of Union Theological Seminary men who are in accord with evangelical Christianity as expressed in the Standards of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and who are zealous in all good work for the growth of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in the world; and

Whereas, We believe that it would be a signal manifestation of the spirit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who prayed "that they all may be one," for Christian brethren, under the gracious guidance of the Holy Spirit, to remove all misunderstandings, alienations and antagonism, and to become vitally and aggressively united in the doctrine of our beloved church in the work of bringing nations and the world to Christ; therefore, be it

Committee Named.

Resolved, That the Assembly hereby authorizes the moderator to appoint a committee of nine, to consist of five ministers, of whom the moderator shall be one, and four ruling elders, none of whom shall be connected with the directors and faculty of the said seminary, with a view of the re-establishment of relations between the seminary and the General Assembly on the basis of the Standards of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America; this committee to report at the next Assembly.

This committee, after much discussion, finally submitted to Union Seminary two proposition, which were to serve as the basis of closer friendship.

The first of these questions is this: Will the board of directors make such provision as will secure to all Presbyterian students in attendance upon Union Theological Seminary such adequate instruction in the departments of church government, discipline, organization and history as will qualify them to answer satisfactorily the questions on these subjects, propounded, according to church law and usage, at their licensure and ordination to the Presbyterian ministry?

The second question is this: Will the board of directors make such provision as will secure to all Presbyterian students in attendance upon Union Theological Seminary such adequate instruction, as an integral part of their theological training, in the special system of doctrine contained in the symbols of the Presbyterian Church, as will enable them to answer satisfactorily the questions respecting Presbyterian doctrine, propounded according to church law and usage, at their licensure and ordination to the Presbyterian ministry?

But They Cut "Her" Dead.

"Yes," said the directors and faculty, "we accept your proposal." This may have been "too sudden"—not to the seminary, but to the committee. Anyway, when it made its report Monday, it said some "awful nice things" about the "lady," but it "cut her dead."

"We'll just be a brother to you," said the committee, "and maybe some time in the future—five years, perhaps—we'll see how we feel toward each other; and then possibly the wedding will take place."

Now, this was all very beautiful, and it seemed perfectly reasonable that the big, strong General Assembly suitor should dictate the terms in this courtship, but—

"Nobody asked you, sir, she said," was what Dr. Brown remarked, in substance, when he got the platform.

This was a stunner. Most people had supposed that Union Seminary was eager to come back into the Assembly. Dr. Brown's simple little speech rather nonplussed them for a while.

"Union Seminary isn't asking for anything. It comes here because you've asked us to come. We wanted to meet you, and perhaps become better acquainted with you, so that we might work out together some of the big problems in the church," Dr. Brown said in substance.

As Usual, There Are "Rivals."

But, like in every love story, there were "rivals." They appeared in the presentation of the minority reports. Dr. John R. Davies, who presented minority report No. 1, is a director in Princeton Theological Seminary, Union's most bitter enemy. Dr. F. C. Monfort, who brought in minority report No. 2, is a director in Lane Theological Seminary, which isn't too fond of Union. Now, rivals don't, as a rule, say nice things about the girl who is really being courted by the great big strong fellow whom they like, too.

It wasn't surprising, therefore, that such phrases as "Hindoo philosophy is being taught at Union Seminary" and "unitarianism is the belief of its professors," and even worse charges of downright dishonesty should be made by the men who represented these rival institutions. To be sure, they were perfectly sincere—aside from their intimate connection with these conservative institutions, rivals always are sincere.

But the fact remains—Union Seminary had fulfilled its contract in the particular proposition made to it by the committee of the Assembly and was then turned down.

Now Union Theological Seminary is working for an endowment of a million and a half—the exact amount doesn't matter much, for Union probably will plan for even bigger things when it secures this sum, because this theological university—big, broad, but thoroughly evangelical—is growing at a tremendous rate in influence and in enrollment.

Row Will Aid School.

Yesterday's skirmish in the General Assembly will help to increase both Union's endowment and its number of students. It has always been so in previous fights. Perhaps when the newspapers this morning printed the story that the Assembly was in a frame of mind to rebuke the seminary for standing by what seemed right to its directors and faculty, somebody immediately wrote out a check for a good big sum and sent it to Dr. Francis Brown, its calm, cultured, Christian president.

The other men in this fight are Christian men, too. Both Dr. Davies and Dr. Monfort are noted for their fine admirable Christian characters.

That's what makes this whole controversy so sad and so difficult to adjust. It's a case of good men and true differing, not merely in personal matters, but they all truly believe that they are "fighting the battle of the Lord." And when a man believes that, he'll die rather than betray his trust.

However, Union Theological Seminary and the General Assembly will some day be "wed." Not in just the way that some folks wish, but they'll fight together against the common foe of injustice and sin, and then they'll find that the hearts of these men on the other side are right, whatever may have been their theological differences—and a man's good heart is a whole lot bigger thing than his theological convictions, no matter how profound.

Meanwhile other suitors have been making advances to Union Seminary. The Methodists, Baptists and Episcopalians have made arrangements through which students from their bodies will receive special instruction in their peculiar doctrine and polity. This probably forever precludes the possibility of making Union Seminary a distinctively Presbyterian institution.

Press Censorship Asked in Florida

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., May 20.—Representative Darnell, of Key West, has introduced a resolution in the Florida House for a press censorship, particularly for the weekly papers of the State. His resolution follows:

"Whereas, a number of corporation-serving newspapers have published malicious, untruthful and misleading editorials relative to proceedings, thereby doing grave injustice to members of this House,

"Resolved, That a publicity committee first be appointed to prepare series of concise articles for the newspapers, especially the weekly press, in order that the public may be correctly informed regarding the proceedings."

3 Greatest Makers Of History Named

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20.—An American, a Spaniard and a Latin-American were declared to be the three greatest makers of history since Christ, by Senor Don Jose De Diego, speaker of the Porto Rican House of Delegates in an address before the Spanish-American Athenaeum in the new national museum.

He said they were Christopher Columbus, who discovered the new world; George Washington, who led it to freedom, and Bolivar, the liberator of South America, who freed Latin-America from the Spanish yoke.

Southern Body Stirred by New Statement of Belief

A motion to adopt the ad interim committee's report on the statement of belief, as read by Dr. J. M. Wells, created a furor of discussion at Tuesday's session of the Southern Assembly.

The statement is a corrected form of that drawn up by last year's committee. After it was read, Dr. T. S. Knox, of Texas, opened the discussion by declaring first that it was wholly unnecessary.

"The adoption of this statement would make void all possibilities of a union between the three Presbyterian bodies," declared Dr. Knox. "The article is not only bad grammar but it is also bad theology."

Cries of shame followed Dr. Knox's speech.

"It is outrageous," declared Dr. McPheeters, "that such words should be uttered in a Presbyterian church."

Dr. A. P. Gregory, of Tennessee, spoke, declaring that the statement was badly needed. Dr. J. B. Works, of Texas, contradicted Dr. Knox's assertion that the change was not desired in the West, by stating that it would be welcomed in that district.

Following other short addresses, the motion was tabled until the afternoon session.

The change in the basis of representation, which has become a law by the enactment of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, will increase materially the representation to future Assemblies.

The change means that in future the commissioners to the General Assembly shall be chosen as follows: Every Presbytery shall be entitled to elect one minister and one elder as commissioners, and all Presbyteries where the combined membership of ministers and communicants exceed 4,000 will be entitled to elect one minister and one elder additional. This ratio will continue with the addition of each four thousand members in the Presbytery.

Among the first features of the Assembly Tuesday morning was the fraternal messenger from the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church.

The "special order" for 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon was a report of the committee on foreign correspondence.

Beneficence Discussed.

Consideration of the report of the standing committee on systematic beneficence was resumed. The part of the report presented was with reference to the permanent committee of systematic beneficence.

The only item of the report that provoked discusison was that with reference to the restoration of the power of the permanent committee to nominate members and secretaries of the excutive committees of the Assembly. This power formerly belonged to the committee, but was taken from it at the Assembly of 1912. The report of the standing committee recommended the restoration of this power, but with the provision that it should not deprive any other member of the Assembly rimiar right.

Dr. W. M. F. Alexander opposed the restoraation of this power, upon the ground that it would mean too much centralization of power; that in time the association of this committee with the executive committees might begetupon the part of members of the latter the disposition to bow to the former in order to receive nomination for the committees.

Clyce to the Defense.

Dr. T. S. Clyce met this opposoition with the statement that he had been a member of the Permanent Committee on Systematic Beneficence when it possessed the power under consideration and that there was no log rolling on the part of any one; further, that it is not likely there would be such at any time. He urged that the Assembly have more concentration of power in the transactions of its business.

The report of the committee was adopted and the power of the Permanent Committee was restored.

The time for uniting all Presbyterian churches is not yet ripe. This is the decision of the Southern Presbyterian Church, unanimous apparently. If there were any who opposed, they failed to voice their sentiment against such an overwhelming vote for the retention of the Southern church's individuality.

Report of the committee on overtures against uniting was adopted almost unanimously. It stated that the time was not just ripe for the uniting of the Southern church with other branches of the Presbyterian. The fact that negotiations are already under way between the Southern Presbyterian Church and the United ed, the present time appeared as inopportune for a discussion of union.

The beneficence committee's report recommended that the percentage for foreign missions be cut from 60 to 54 per cent; that home missions receive 27 instead of 21 per cent; Christian education and ministeriaj relief to receive 14 1-2 instead of 14 per cent, and Sunday school publications reduced from 4 to 3 1-2 per cent.

Ministers' Ranks Thinning; Missionaries Increasing

The first report heard at the Tuesday morning session of the United Presbyterian Assembly was that of the woman's board. This report showed a larger number of unmarried woman missionaries sent out the past year than any preceding year. The year closed without a deficit. The report was adopted without discussion.

Reports on the state of religion and education were unanimously adopted.

An attempt was made to bring up the fight between the home mission board and the board of publication for control of Sabbath school work. Dr. John A. Henderson presented a resolution that a special committee, consisting of seven men not connected with either board, be appointed to investigate the conflicting claims, and report the results of this investigation to next year's Assembly. Dr. McGill opposed its appointment, saying it would hinder the Sabbath school work. Other delegates supported him.

Dr. L. W. Williamson, of Topeka, Kans., declared it seemed that neither board was hurt but that a certain worker was, and asked the Assembly to find a position for the worker referred to. Dr. Russell replied that the report yesterday merely showed the worker's term had expired. Dr. Henderson then withdrew his motion.

Ministers Decrease in Number.

It was shown by the report on theological seminaries that the number of deaths in the ministerial ranks exceeded the number of young men entering by 11, and recommended that a campaign be waged presenting the claims of the gospel ministry to the young men in the colleges. The report was adopted.

It was voted to change the time of adjournment from 12 to 12:30 after to-day.

The session on Monday afternoon was featured by a stormy debate over a recommendation made by the committee on bills and overtures to reaffirm the action of last year's Assembly in taking control of mission Sabbath schools and Sabbath school extension work from the hands of the board of publication and putting it in charge of the board of home missions.

Dr. W. B. Smiley, secretary of the Sabbath school work, which office would be abolished if the recommendation were adopted, made the charge that politics was at the bottom of the recommendation. Mr. Smiley stated to a Georgian reporter that some one outside the mission board was responsible for the recommendation being made.

The courtesies of the floor were extended to Dr. W. J. Reed, chairman of the Sabbath school committee. Dr. Reed stated that Dr. Smiley wrote him several weeks ago that a plot was on foot to take all matters pertaining to the Sabbath school work from the hands of the board of publication.

Reed Denies Plot.

Dr. Reed said that he had investigated these charges and found no evidence of such a plot. He stated further that the Sabbath school work was one of the most important parts of church work, and that the home mission board desired to retain control of it for another year.

A motion was next made and carried by a majority of about ten to put control of the Sabbah school work back in the hands of the board of publication. This motion later was killed. An amendment was then made and unanimously carried that the present arrangement be continued until next year. This leaves control in the hands of the home mission board, and abolishes Dr. Smiley's office.

It was decided that The Christian Instructor be disposed of at the best possible terms and as early as possible, the committee having found that it was being operated at a loss of about $500 a month.

Oppose Mission Cut.

Dr. A. R. Robinson, of Pittsburg, Pa., was chairman of the committee on bills and overtures. The other members were Rev. W. J. Grimes, Rev. W. J. Buchanan, Rev. J. B. Work, J. A. McLaughty, Hon. J. H. Staveley and W. H. Ramsey.

Miss Hanson Scoffs at 'Temptations of Stage'

Blames Publicity for Popular Idea of Its Evils

"The evils of the stage? They are just the same—and many times not so bad—as the evils of other professions. Stage life isn't any more of a temptation to young girls than other walks of life."

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook, or Gladys Hanson, as she is known to fame, beautiful Atlanta actress who has just come back home for a six-weeks' vacation, stopped serving tea and leaned forward. She was at her country place out on Cleburne Avenue.

"The truth is this: The limelight is always turned, full force, on the stage when it is not on other professions. As soon as an actress does an imprudent or perhaps an unconventional thing, the news immediately spreads—and it gathers force as it spreads. Elsewhere there is less publicity, and therefore a better chance for covering things up, that's all."

Urges Stage for Girls.

Miss Hanson, who belongs to one of Georgia's oldest families, and who is in love with her art to her fingertips, has just finished a successful ten-months' season with David Belasco in "The Governor's Lady." In the six years she has been on the stage she has been wonderfully successful, having been with Frohman, Sothern and other big directors besides Belasco. She strongly advocates the stage as a profession for young women.

"There never have been such opportunities for capable young women as there are to-day," she declared, dropping a bit of lemon into a cup of tea, "and really it's almost nonsense to talk about stage evils and morals at all. The stigma that formerly attached to the theater is almost a thing of the past, for the simple reason that people have come more and more to realize that immorality is not confined to class, but is purely individual.

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook.

More Actors of Big Brains.

"Also year by year the stage is being more and more occupied by persons of big brains—big souls—people who are realities, and who are there because of the big 'call.'"

"And that 'call' is the great thing," she stressed. "I don't care what you say. When people follow their star, as it were—when they feel the burning of the 'spark' inside and set out to give it expression, it means the development of soul. And people of great souls can only be good.

"I grant this," she said, deprecatingly, "the world looks upon the stage from an outsider's standpoint, and, therefore, can only criticise from that angle, which may be entirely wrong.

"For instance, many times I have seen a man rush back to a dressing room, where the actress with whom he was to appear was in negligee and making up, to run over the lines in a coming scene. But I only wish that the public might see how in earnest it all is.

Had to Ignore Convention.

"The man is not sure of himself in the scene, and if he did not seize this moment, he might make a botch of the play, and he could not wait until the actress was all 'made up.'

"But, as they go over the lines they practically do not see each other—they are like two machines. The thought of everything is sunk in the play. He talks his lines in quick, high tones, and she comes in with hers to meet him. And the moment that is done he rushes out like mad to get ready to 'go on.'

"Don't you ever believe," Miss Hanson emphasized, "that the rules in practically all theaters are not strict. And in high-class houses it is practically the same as in your own home. The people are all big people—they're men and women—they're not silly nincompoops!

"Again, if a girl enters the profession, she can be sure that if she gets with a good director—and there are more good ones than otherwise—she is going to be pushed along to success—not only by her own effort, but by his—for he is just as anxious for her to make good as she is to make good herself.

Finds Splendid Associates.

"She will usually find a number of splendid women to associate with, too—if she'll keep her eyes open—and also a number of broad-minded men. There's where she may learn many things about her art—they will all help her—and that and working hard will get her her to the top if she has any 'possibilities' at all. If for no other reason, I would have been glad I had gone on the stage simply for the people I have met."

Miss Hanson expects to go abroad for the summer. She will return the latter part of August for rehearsals, being again with Belasco. She and Emma Dunn, one of her best friends, will again appear for a time in "The Governor's Lady," later taking up other work Mr. Belasco has not yet made public. While in Atlanta Miss Snook expects to be quite a great deal with her friends, a number of parties having been planned for her.

Calls Atlanta Hers, Too.

Speaking of Atlanta things, she said it almost made her angry—that is, it would if she wasn't so even-tempered, for which she took credit to herself—when she was out and people asked her how she liked "our" country club, or "our" city—or other things.

"Why, it's mine, too," she said. "I don't feel that just because I'm away in the winter this isn't my home. Why, I grew up here and I belong to the place! Of course, it's usually strangers, who don't know, who ask me things like that; but, all the same, it gives me a funny little feeling around my heart. I feel just like I ought to be asking them instead, being"—she hesitated and laughed—"as I was here first!"

Wife Digs Miner's Body From Cave-in

OROVILLE, CAL., May 20.—Frank Martin, a miner, was killed by a landslide on his property along the Feather River, near Oroville. He was found entombed in the dirt by his wife, who went to hunt for him when he did not return to his home at the usual time.

She made her ghastly discovery and found her husband crushed and dead, buried in the earth and rock that had fallen on him. She returned to her cabin for help and with the aid of her children dug the body from its untimely grave.

DRUG, GIVEN BY DOCTOR, CAUSES PATIENT'S DEATH

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 20. Horace Hamilton i dead at Erlanger Hospital from a dose of phyiocogen, administered by his physician a few hours earlier, although the dose was the smallest prescribed by medical books. The drug acted as a poison because of a peculiar condition of the blood.

Witness Bares Plot In Lawrence Strike

BOSTON, May 20.—Daniel J. Collins, the Cambridge dog fancier, indicted jointly with William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Mills, and Frederick Atteaux on a charge of conspiring to "plant" dynamite in Lawrence, on the stand today told of going to Lawrence with John J. Breen, of wrapping up some "sticks" which Breen called "the juice" in pieces of newspaper and of his having asked Breen, "What does this mean?" Here is what Collins declared was Breen's answer:

"What does it mean? It means that I will be Mayor of this city some day. Man, there are millions behind me in this. Do you know Wood? Well, then, just you watch the papers tomorrow. You will see what it means."

POOL ROOM IS CLOSED FOR REVIVAL SERVICES

DALTON, GA., May 20.—A number of local business firms have signed an agreement to close their places of business each morning from 10 to 11 o'clock to permit their employees to attend revival services at the First Methodist Church. One of the first to close was a pool room.

RESUME BATTLE AGAINST UNION SEMINARY

"Waiting With Club."

"It is as though you had invited a friend to your home under the pretense of hospitality," he declared, "and then had met him at the door to crack open his skull.

"Of the second minority report I knew nothing until ten days ago. It was signed by one man only, and he a member of the committee for only a few months. His report and his opinions had not been made a subject of conference. They were as unexpected as a thunderbolt.

"All of these criticisms, however, can be met without any difficulty. The author has been grossly misinformed and mistaken. In the first place, the annulling of the agreement of 1870 was done on the advice of two distinguished lawyers, who advised the directors they had gone too far under the provisions in the charter in making the agreement at all."

Resents Charges.

Dr. Brown named the men who had been in charge of the affairs of the seminary for years as an evidence that it had been in the hands of capable, God-fearing directors and instructors.

He grew bitter when he came to comment on the arraignment of William Adams Brown, professor of systematic theology in the seminary.

"That criticism was most unjust and unwarranted," declared President Brown. "Professor Brown is one of the most ardent, earnest and sincere Presbyterians in this Assembly. So to attack his religious principles was cruel and not supported by any evidence. Terms were used that never should be used by one Christian in reference to another Christian or to any human being.

"That reference, too, to Hindu philosophy was a simple travesty—a simple travesty! I find it more difficult to be calm at this time. I don't want to lose my temper, but such unjust and unsupported charges have been hurled at this seminary that restraint is not wholly possible.

"Asks Nothing."

"Remember that the seminary asks nothing, seeks nothing. It is not represented here voluntarily. It came on invitation. We want to be of service to the Presbyterian Church, but if you can not use us, we do not care to try.

"The members of the faculty have given evidences of their Christian faith that should be accepted if the matter is considered at all. I hold, however, that discussion on the second minority report should have no place on this floor, as the report was never made a subject of conference.

"In regard to the students going forth from our seminary, I want to deny the scurrilous stories which have gone forth about the country. There is not a single man from the seminary who has been licensed by a presbytery who has denied his belief in the atoning work of Jesus, the resurrection of the Lord and the other fundamental doctrines concerning which we have been accused of lack of faith."

Dr. Brown spoke quietly and without any evidence of rancor until he came to discuss the charges of Christian infidelity lodged against his seminary and its faculty. Then his voice rose and he lost the poise that had characterized his calm discussion of the legal phase of the seminary's action in abrogating the agreement of 1870.

The friends of the seminary applauded lightly when Dr. Brown was finished, despite the injunction of the moderator that there was to be no manifestation whatever of approval or disapproval.

'THE TRIPLE TIE' GRIPS EVERY READER

Are you reading "The Triple Tie?" With to-day's installment this fascinating story which is appearing daily in The Georgian has made everyone who started it a willing slave to the hero and heroine and the adventures through which they have been started.

It is not too late to begin this story. The first installment appeared Monday. Readers of The Georgian will recall the odd picture of the bearded and eye-glassed man who had three black ties on his shirt bosom. From that picture readers were invited to guess the title to the story which was promised them in The Georgian's columns. Five prizes of $5 each were offered for the best suggestions for a name, gleaned from the picture. "The Triple Tie" was the name.

The story's first installment related the opening adventures of Gordon Kelly, a real, live, red-blooded young man, his love for a girl, and the baseball romance which is to follow.

The story will run until June 29. Toward the close the serial will end abruptly at one of the most dramatic situations ever conceived by a novelist. Readers will then be asked to supply the solution to the several mysteries unsolved.

This is not a guessing contest. The answers are logical conclusions to what has gone before and the reader can hit upon them only through reasoning them out.

For the best solutions prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Georgian. The first prize is $100, second prize $50, third prize $25, fourth prize $15. There are also twelve prizes of $5 each.

Originality, literary value and analytical clearness will be considered in awarding the prizes.

Address all letters to Mystery Editor, Atlanta Georgian.

Here's the Prize List in Great Story Contest

Prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Atlanta Georgian for the best solution of the great serial novel, "The Triple Tie," now running in The Georgian, as follows:

First Prize - -	$100
Second Prize -	50
Third Prize - -	25
Fourth Prize - -	15
12 other prizes, each.	5

"The Triple Tie" will be run in generous daily installments until June 29, when the final chapter will be published. Synopsis of the last installment is now in the hands of Mr. T. J. Peeples, cashier of the American National Bank.

It will be held by him in a sealed envelope until a committee of three Atlanta citizens not connected in any way with The Georgian may select the winners of the prizes.

Elliott Gives Last Of Ethical Lectures

The last of the series of lectures under the auspices of the Atlanta Ethical Society will be given at Cable Hall Thursday night by Dr. John Lovejoy Elliott, who will speak on "The Driving Power of Social Unrest."

More than 1,000 invitations have been issued, and a section of the hall has been set aside for negroes. No admission will be charged.

Methodist Nurses to Get Diplomas Friday

Graduating exercises at Wesley Memorial Hospital Training School will be held Friday evening at 8 o'clock at Wesley Memorial Church. Graduates this year are Miss Corrie Mims, Elliott, Ga.; Miss Annie Traber, Atlanta; Miss Fannie Mary Catron, Barboursville, Ky.; Miss Annie Mae Luckie, Valdosta, Ga.

Wesley Memorial Hospital is the hospital of Georgia Methodism and draws its patronage from the entire State and other sections. Dr. H. M. DuBose, of the First Methodist Church, will deliver the address to the graduating class.

Woman, 106, Doesn't Care to Live Longer

BALTIMORE, May 20.—A birthday reception on one's hundred and sixth anniversary is certainly an unusual experience, yet Mrs. Ann Bouder, 723 North Carey Street, enjoyed that privilege.

In a big armchair in her home, Mrs. Pouder talked of the happenings of a century ago in the animated manner one might more reasonably expect of a hero of Gettysburg recounting tales of the "sixties."

Mrs. Pouder told her friends she did not care to live until another birthday.

Girls Deaf, Dumb and Blind, Can Converse

AUSTIN, TEX., May 20.—Enrolled in the State Deaf and Dumb Institute are two girls, Ruby Rice and Pearl Thomas, who were blind, deaf and dumb. By great patience they have been taught the sign language and converse with their teachers and others knowing the sign language by means of touch. They know the positions of the figures in making the letters and by feeling another's hands can converse with them.

Both have been at the institute several years and will not graduate for two more years.

Germany Prosperous; $200,000 Bet in Day

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, May 20.—The newspapers point out that there can be little basis for the suspicion that Germany is suffering from a lack of ready money in the presence of the fact that the Government betting machines at the Grunewald course recorded the gross takings as roundly $200,000 on Whit Monday. The gate receipts for the day totaled $27,000.

Both figures are record-breakers in Germany. The betting machines take the place of bookmakers.

FORMER ATLANTAN FOR U. S. PRINTER

WASHINGTON, May 20.—President Wilson, it was learned to-day, has about made up his mind to appoint W. V. Turley, of Chattanooga, Tenn., to the post of Public Printer, which pays $5,500 a year. Although there are a large number of candidates for this place, which is peculiarly a presidential appointment, the race some time ago narrowed down to a contest between Cornelius Ford, of Hoboken, N. J., and Turley.

The President is said to be personally in favor of Ford, but the many indorsements obtained and presented by the friends of Turley have greatly impressed the President.

Mr. Turley is a former Atlantan, having resided here in 1909, when he was engaged in theatrical publicity work for the Wells Syndicate as editor of The Pilot, a weekly theatrical magazine. Since then he has operated a job printing establishment in Chattanooga. Before coming to Atlanta he was city editor of The Chattanooga News and was with other Chattanooga papers. He also has done newspaper work in Washington. He is a member of the Chattanooga Typographical Union.

Friends of Alabama Belle, in Atlanta School,, Acclaim Her as Charming as Actress.

Miss Nellie McCravey, of Huntsville, Ala., a member of the graduating class of Washington Seminary, Atlanta, has been adjudged a double of Ethel Barrymore, whose beauty won recognition on two continents.

Among the girls' younger set of Huntsville Miss McCravey was considered the most beautiful, possessing all the attractions and graces. Her friends at Washington Seminary and acquaintances in Atlanta are even more enthusiastic over her personal charms, if possible, than her Huntsville associates. They promptly acquiesced in the opinion of Huntsville's elite that Miss McCravey was the "Ethel Barrymore of the South."

Miss McCravey is a niece of Mrs. John W. Davis, of Atlanta. She has acquired many friends in Atlanta through her talents and capacity for entertaining. Her beauty is of the most pronounced Southern type.

Intervention Urged By Mayor of El Paso.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Describing conditions in Mexico as similar to those in France before the French revolution, J. U. Sweeney, Mayor of El Paso, Tex., is telling Government officials here that intervention in Mexico is the only solution of that nation's problems.

He declares that the peons worked from sunrise to sunset before the Madero uprising, but that subsequently they have found it possible to make a better living in shorter hours by looting and they will be reluctant to return to old conditions. The Mayor declares that American interests have suffered greatly in Mexico.

SECRET WEDDING ROMANCE CLIMAX

Ben McDonnold, a postoffice clerk, and his bride, who was Miss Haribel Colson, enjoyed a honeymoon of nearly two days before their friends found out what had happened. They were married Sunday, but it was not until to-day that the news went out and congratulations began coming in.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Colson, 257 Crumley Street, and the bridegroom a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. McDonnold, of College Park. They were married at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon by the Rev. V. C. Norcross at his residence, Druid Hills. The only attendants—and the only ones who knew of the marriage until to-day—were the bridegroom's brothers and sister, Hoke McDonnold, Paul McDonnold and Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Willingham.

Next Thing to Runaway.

It was not exactly a runaway affair, but was the next thing to it, for the young couple told their parents nothing about their intentions. The wedding was the culmination of a romance begun in Birmingham just before Christmas.

The bride's father is claim agent for the A., B. & A. Railroad, having moved to Atlanta only two months ago. McDonnold met Miss Colson while clerking in her father's office, but it was not known they were attached to one another.

But Colson moved to Atlanta—and so did McDonnold. He started wooing in earnest, and last Sunday he and Miss Colson brought their brief romance to the only logical conclusion. They are now at home with the bridegroom's family, waiting to fit out a home of their own in College Park.

Mother Thinks It's "Mean."

"It was not a runaway match, but they surprised me, and I am all put out by it," said the bride's mother to a Georgian reporter to-day. "If Mr. Colson had been in town, it would not have happened. They are entirely too young—he is only 21 while my daughter is 18, just a little girl. She graduated from the Convent of the Sacred Heart, at Cullman, Ala., only two years ago. I think it was mean of him to take her away. The only consolation I have is that he is a fine young man, and I believe they will be happy."

The bride is an attractive brunette and a talented musician.

WALKER SHOWS IMPROVEMENT; MAY RECOVER

MACON, GA., May 20.—Another slight sluggish action of B. Sanders Walker's kidneys to-day gave the attending physicians still more hope for his ultimate recovery. Walker's pulse is 118 and his respiration 30. He is still very weak.

MACON, GA., May 20.—After having made all, even minute, preparations to die, under the belief that his death was inevitable and a matter of only a few days, B. Sanders Walker, Jr., the banker and real estate operator, is now given the hope that possibly he will survive the accidental taking of a bichloride of mercury tablet by mistake for a headache pill.

From Thursday until Monday Mr. Walker's kidneys were paralyzed, but then there was a slight manifestation, sufficient to justify the attending physicians in holding out a little encouragement to the man who for five days has regarded himself as on the very brink of the grave. Two physicians have been at Mr. Walker's bedside almost from the minute when the terrible pains in his stomach showed that he had taken poison instead of an aspirin tablet, and they have employed heroic remedies. From all parts of the United States have come about 40 telegrams from persons who were similarly poisoned or from doctors and nurses suggesting methods of treatment.

Nurse Suggests Remedy.

One such message came from a young woman nurse at Johns Hopkins Hospital, suggesting that a remedy of flax seed and olive oil might save the fast ebbing life of the dying man, as it had her own when she had been in a similar condition. If he lives, Walker will owe his life to this young woman, of whose existence he was not even aware—a person whom he would not know were he to meet her face to face.

This remedy has been applied and has given Walker a fighting chance for life. Euremic poisoning had already set in when the doctors decided to adopt the suggestion of the young woman, and unless relief had been immediate Walker would soon have succumbed.

Visitors Now Excluded.

All persons, except his wife, doctors and nurses, are now kept from Mr. Walker. The physicians say that the announcement to him that he might survive, after he had gone through the ordeal of preparing for death, brought on a nervous attack and intensified his weakness. It was believed necessary, as well as ethical, however, to tell the stricken man that he had a chance to live.

B. S. Walker, Sr., of Monroe, the father; Cliff M. Walker, Solicitor General of the Western Circuit, who is a brother, and other relatives are at the residence.

Mrs. Walker is making a fight that is the wonder of her friends. In her husband's company she has been ever brave and cheerful. Not once has she presented anything but a courageous front.

Walker's Nerve Unbroken.

Walker's first thought when told by the doctors that death was sure to result from his mistaken dose was of his business; his second, of his friends. He immediately sent for his business associates, and in a short while had given definite intructions concerning the final disposition of all his affairs.

Following the winding up of his business, he called in his friends, announced his doom and gave them one and all a cheerful farewell.

His cool nerve during the strain of the last three days has been the cause of comment upon the days when, as a star athlete for the University of Georgia, he time and again demonstrated the fact that he was possessed of an indomitable spirit that held him up when his teammates were breaking in their support.

Still on Brink of Eternity.

The friends who knew him a few days ago as the picture of health and a perfect specimen of manhood can hardly realize that following his tragic error in taking bichloride of mercury tablets instead of the headache medicine, he has been doomed to death, and that, although hope is now expressed for his recovery, he is even yet standing upon the brink of eternity.

Policeman Hit by Auto Nabs Driver

City Detective L. F. Carter is being congratulated by his friends for the agility and coolness which he displayed Monday night when he narrowly escaped being run down by an automobile driven by J. A. Brigman, of Decatur.

Carter was crossing Forsyth at Marietta Street, and when struck by the machine, sprang up on the hood, where he perched until the car was stopped. Carter immediately arrested Brigman and charged him with reckless driving. Brigman was released without bail.

Court Rules Clubs Can't Sell Liquor

The Court of Appeals, in a decision handed down Tuesday, held that it was illegal for an employee of a social club to sell whisky, even though he did not derive any profit from the sale. The decision was in the case of Ike Rothchild, steward of the Brunswick Oglethorpe Club.

The court said: "It is no defense that the accused sold the liquor as an employee of a social club. Intoxicating liquor can not be sold in the State by an individual or company as a beverage."

Mrs. Hutchins 'Poor' On $2,000 a Month

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Mrs. Rosa Keeling Hutchins, widow of Stilson Hutchins, millionaire newspaper owner, has filed suit in another attempt to obtain one-third of the income from her husband's personal estate. According to her petition, she is in "straitened circumstances," although she has $2,000 a month from the estate.

The personal property left by Mr. Hutchins is estimated at $1,155,685, while the realty value is fixed at $3,347,000. Distribution has been delayed by disputes among the heirs and the filing of a caveat by Lee Hutchins, a son.

Wife Advertised as "Dead" Seeks Divorce

ST. LOUIS, May 20.—Mrs. Anna Meehan has sued John P. She says that when she accused him of inserting the "ad" he laughed and refused to deny it.

She also charges that during their eleven years of married life they moved fifteen times and also that ten of the movings were the result of suits for rent.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Express companies for the year 1912 did a total business of $81,545,658, with expenses aggregating $73,255,682, leaving a total net revenue of $8,289,972, according to a statement made by the Interstate Commerce Commission today. Dividends declared from current income amounted to $4,625,832 and from surplus $2,823,785.

The Pullman Car Company, in reports to the commission, placed its total business for the year 1912 at $37,090,414, with expenses amounting to $26,256,695. Cars were operated over 123,000 miles of road. The physical property is valued at $148,780,453.

'Rosy Cheek Teachers Excel Brainy Ones'

NEW YORK, May 20.—President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education told the Associate Alumnae of Normal College that he would rather "a teacher had the pulchritude of red cheeks than the wisdom of an encyclopedia."

"A certain type of teacher," said he, "seems to think she must study all summer, but she would be a better teacher if she spent her vacation rowing a boat or playing golf. There is no reason why teachers should be divorced from health."

Gov. Slaton Speaker At A. and M. Finals

Governor-elect John M. Slaton is expected to return home Tuesday from Americus, Ga., where on Monday night he delivered the principal address at the annual commencement exercises of the Third District Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Diplomas were presented by John M. Collum, the superintendent. An exhibition of the industrial work of the college preceded the graduating exercises.

Governor-elect Slaton and the other speakers were entertained with a barbecue dinner after the exercises.

Mexico Buys Field Guns From French

PARIS, May 20.—The Mexican Government has ordered twelve batteries of field guns and one hundred mitrailleuses from French manufacturers.

Gen. Mondragon, the Mexican War Minister, is quoted as saying that he chose French makes because the Bulgarians proved their superiority over the Krupp guns used by the Turks.

Peary to Get High Honors in France

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—According to Marcelin Boule, Vice President of the French Geographical Society, Admiral Peary is to be paid the same honors as were granted to Amundsen by the French society.

The fact that no preparation has been made is due to the absence from Paris of the society's President, Prince Roland Bonaparte.

Schwab Admits He Formed Steel Pools

NEW YORK, May 20.—Charles M. Schwab, former president of the United States Steel Corporation, today admitted under cross-examination that he had formed many pools in the steel trade, but that he had arranged none since the formation of the United States Steel Corporation.

Schwab, now president of the Bethlehem Steel Company, was questioned by Judge Dickinson, one of counsel for the Government in its suit to declare the Steel Corporation a trust.

PHAGAN CASE IN READINESS FOR INDICTMENT

heard nothing of the report and was quite sure the Burns detective had not. The Pinkertons, through Harry Scott, said they attached little importance to the report, but that if it were true the girl could be easily located.

City detectives and the Pinkertons spent several hours at the pencil factory plant last night. The premises were minutely searched for new clews. The result was not made public.

Working independent of every one, Tobie, the Burns agent, was away from his hotel bright and early Tuesday morning following up a lead that he said had been heretofore overlooked. He will make daily reports to Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Colonel Felder.

Here is Mrs. Carr's letter urging all women to interest themselves in the Mary Phagan case:

Calls It Women's Case.

"To the Women of Atlanta:

"The Mary Phagan case is our case, and it behooves every woman to set the seal of condemnation upon lawlessness and demand that no means shall be unused, no expense spared in bringing to justice the foul villain who perpetrated this unparalleled crime. His freedom is a menace to the honor and life of every woman in our community.

"But no mistake must be made. Some of our most prominent men, and a few big-hearted women, have taken the initiative in contributing to the fund which obtains the best detective talent in America, and in the increasing of that fund we women have our opportunity.

Wants All to Contribute.

"Let every woman give something, however small the amount, and in the aggregation of these such a sum will be acquired as shall employ and reward all the legal and detective talent that has been so continuously and generously given, and will be given in the search for the criminal.

"To systematize this wholesale giving, let the women in all departments of endeavor—in offices, in plants, in stores or wherever women congregate, select one of their number to receive the individual contributions and send, as a whole, the amount they realize to The Georgian, with these instructions: 'For the Mary Phagan Investigation Fund.' Let the same plan be pursued in neighborhoods.

"Let us be up and doing!

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?

(Signed) "MRS. JAMES F. CARR."

Black Scores Burns Man.

Detective John Black, who has been working on the Phagan case in conjunction with Pinkerton Detective Harry Scott, Tuesday declared that Detective Tobie, the Burns man, was not justified in his charge that certain features of the mystery have been overlooked.

"Mr. Tobie has gone entirely too far in his statements," said Detective Black. "He doesn't know what has been done by detectives on this case, and doesn't know what evidence we have in our possession. We are not showing our hand to everyone who comes along. If he can show us some thing in this case that has been overlooked, then we'll think he knows what he is talking about, but unless he does show something, we'll attach no importance, whatever, to his statements."

Detective Scott declined to discuss the Burns detective's theory or position in the case. As to the Pinkerton's part in the affair, he said:

"We have worked this case from fully 500 different angles. Every possible phase and feature has been investigated. Nothing has been overlooked. The public has no idea of the many and varied angles that have been presented by this tragedy."

SEEK FARM HOME FOR NEEDY FAMILY

Woman Offers to Do Manual Work to Give Boys Benefit of Country Life.

Miss Minnie VanEpps, district agent of the Associated Charities, is looking for a country home for a strong, Western woman who walked into her office with two boys, a cash capital of 10 cents and a recollection of many hardships.

The woman is Mrs. May Lang, 31 years old. Her boys are Aurelius Ragland, 7 years old, and Milton Ragland, 5 years old. Mrs. Lang says she can milk a cow, scrub floors, cook, sew, hitch up horses and mules, plow and hoe, cut wood and do anything else on a farm. She is a Western woman, in good health and willing to do any kind of hard work to provide a home for herself and children.

Last winter Mrs. Lang left Skull Valley, Ariz., with tickets for New Orleans and $2 in cash. She came to Atlanta in February and went at once to Miss VanEpps. Work was provided in an Atlanta factory, but Mrs. Lang's wages were only $3 a week.

Mrs. Lang was left an orphan at 12. She was adopted, but her foster father died. Then his brother married her, but he died in a few years. Again she married, but her second husband died. For five years Mrs. Lang has eked out a scant living for herself and children by performing manual labor.

"I can do anything, even the hardest work on the farm," she said to Miss VanEpps. "If only I can get out in the country, where my two sons can breathe the pure air and get enough to eat, I will be happy. I will do the hardest work they give me, and be contented. I want a home for my boys."

References Mrs. Lang gave to the Associated Charities have been traced by Miss VanEpps, and replies to letters of inquiry indicate Mrs. Lang has been a good and a hard-working woman.

DENTAL TESTS IN CITY'S SCHOOLS PROBABLE

Board Conducting Experiments Will Make Strong Recommendation for Examinations.

Dental examinations of all children in Atlanta public schools will be permanently provided for unless V. H. Kriegshaber, of the Chamber of Commerce, and representatives of the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons are too optimistic over their forthcoming report.

Monday marked the beginning and Tuesday the end of dental examinations in the Bell Street and Crew Street Schools by representatives of the joint committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons. It was the third of a series of tests begun last September at the request of the Chamber of Commerce and continued in January, to prove the beneficial effects of sound teeth on scholarship and attendance, general health and moral character.

V. H. Kriegshaber, from the Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. S. W. Foster, Dr. C. M. Barnwell, Dr. DeLos Hill and Dr. M. D. Huff, from the dental society, make up the joint committee.

Dentists Meet Tuesday Night.

Dr. Hill and Dr. Foster, who made the actual tests, will meet with the other dentists Wednesday night and make up the final report to be submitted to the Chamber of Commerce, whence it will be sent to the Board of Education with recommendations.

"Statistics have not been compiled, but from results already noted we believe the full data will warrant a recommendation that dental inspections in the public schools be made permanent," said Mr. Kriegshaber.

Following published results of benefits of five years' medical inspection in the public schools, the Chamber of Commerce last September asked the Board of Education for permission to make experimental dental tests. The dentists agreed to inspect two schools for a year, without fees, to prove the efficacy of the system.

At the first tests pupils were provided with written notices to parents of needed dental treatment. When these notices resulted in securing treatment, the operating dentists signed the slips, which were returned to the examiners. Additional signed slips were collected Monday and Tuesday after the final tests. Records of pupils in attendance, deportment and scholarship, both those who acted on the suggestions and those who did not, will be compared, and the results, with other figures, will make up the dentists' report.

Finish Report Tuesday.

"We hope to get this report finished Tuesday night," said Mr. Kriegshaber. "We are sure it will warrant the recommendation that dental examinations be made permanent. Then if the Board of Education approves our recommendation, we want to submit it to the Finance Committee of the City Council Thursday morning, if possible, and secure the necessary appropriation and authorization for permanent dental inspections in all Atlanta public schools."

In the Crew Street and Bell Street Schools nearly 500 pupils were examined. Dr. Foster and Dr. Hill were surprised at getting through in two days, since they expected three would be required.

Another Reason Why Socialist Vote Grows

GENEVA, N. Y., May 20.—An extensive obituary notice appeared in the newspapers here recounting the virtues of Fido, the pet dog af Henry A. Zobrist, a capitalist. Mr. Zobrist called a specialist from New York and paid $300 to have the dog treated, but Fido took a relapse and died.

Mr. Zobrist had provided $20,000 in his will for Fido, and had offered an endowment of $3,000 a year to the Sand Hill Cemetery Corporation for permission to bury the dog in the graveyard.

Fido lay in state in an expensive coffin banked with flowers.

LIQUOR DEALERS ORGANIZE LAW ENFORCEMENT LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., May 20.—For the purpose of eliminating the blind tiger and enforcing the provisions of the laws regulating the sale of whisky in Russell County, Alabama, a law enforcement league has been organized in Girard, with Sam Kaufman, a wholesale liquor dealer, as president.

The wholesale and retail liquor dealers claim that the blind tiger is hurting their legitimate business. Eighteen liquor dealers of the town are members of the organization.

RESINOL A SAFE SKIN TREATMENT

You need never hesitate to use Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. There is nothing in them to injure the tenderest surface. Resinol is a doctor's prescription which proved so successful for eczema, ringworm and other itching, burning, unsightly skin eruptions, that it has been used by other physicians all over the country for eighteen years. No other treatment for the skin now before the public can show such a record of professional approval.

In a single month, two hundred and twenty-one doctors wrote us indorsing the Resinol preparations. They would not have done so if they had not found them highly valuable in their own practice. They prescribe Resinol freely, confident that its soothing, healing action is brought about by agents so bland and gentle as to be suited to the most delicate skin—even of a tiny baby.

The nearest druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1) and Resinol Soap (25c) or you can try them free by writing to Dept. 25-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for liberal sample of each.

J. Wylie Smith's Own Story

Stirring Episodes in Long Flight

Career in Mexican Army Thrilling

This is the second installment of the story of J. Wylie Smith, the refugee president of the defunct Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who, after evading extradition during two years of service in the insurrecto army of General Orozco, in Mexico, returned to Atlanta to stand trial because he dying with tuberculosis—a phantom of his former self.

By J. WYLIE SMITH.

I was given a room over the warden's office. I had credit at the commissary. You have to furnish your own bed clothing and buy any food you get except etole, a sort of gruel, bif stik—furnished to you raw—and frijole, beans cooked in pure water at every meal. Grease and salt are unknown.

I remember a hideous tragedy one day as a result of the practice of allowing the prisoners to cook their own meals in their cells. A peon, held for murder, was found dead in bed one morning, his charcoal pot still giving off its fumes over him.

Soon I was allowed to go downtown without a guard. The discipline in Mexican prisons is lax. Once when the prisoners were working on the waterworks a number of them stole away and got drunk. When they returned the only punishment that was administered was that they were not allowed to return to work but were forced to play. They suffered, though. They hated to give up their wages. I knew a number of them who preferred prison life to freedom.

"Neda en calles menos Americanos y toras," spoke a Mexican who was reclining under the shade of a tree in his yard as I passed down the street on one of my daily strolls from the prison.

His meaning was that nobody ever comes out on the street between 12 o'clock and 2:30 but Americans and bulls—a statement which has the weight of a proverb in Mexico. All business houses are closed between those hours. Indeed it was a hot sultry day and I was regretting that I had come out when suddenly I was startled out of my laziness by a sharp piercing bark.

My footsteps had aroused a bull who was lying in the shade of a shrub, not a Mexican bull but a Boston bull terrier. He came towards me belligerent but I spoke to him kindly, so glad to see anything so truly American. And as I walked on that dog followed.

Truly only an American and a bull were on the streets and later only an American and a bull were together at another place, the presence of the bull changing the trend of fate from savage death to the greatest triumph of my life.

But that was later. However, the interesting and important things which led up to it began to absorb my attention. For the first time a personal interest was aroused in me in the revolutionary movement.

I had made the acquaintance of about 75 revolutionary leaders who were confined in the penitentiary. Walking with General Rojas, the most prominent of them, one day our conversation grew intimate.

"I would think that you revolutionists would be shot," I said to him.

"Do you know why I am here?" he asked. Before I could speak he answered his own question.

"I said that General Orozco was a damned rascal.

"All of us would be shot," he continued, "but Orozco has plans of his own."

Orozco's Plan.

"He is planning a new revolution. On March he will resign as commander of the Federal forces in Chihuahau. He is confining his staff here so he will have them ready when he needs them.

"The moment he insurges I will be freed, and I will take you with me."

My interest in the plans of the revolutionists immediately became intense. I was having an easy time but things were getting monotonous. I did not know how long I would be held a prisoner nor how much chance I had of escaping extradition. My fighting blood was up. Added to my fear of being taken back to Atlanta and being tried was the ire aroused by the treachery of my pursuers, like Franke I was determined to outwit them. Then there is nothing in the world like Anglo-Saxon freedom.

Then the strangest and most romantic event in my whole experience took place. I was the only American in prison and something of a curiosity. People often came to look at me, and I desired to avoid them as much as possible. But the warden came to me one day and said that two American women were in his office to see me.

Puzzled but greatly interested I hurried down. I gazed at them, unable to recognize either, but I carefully noted that they were handsomely dressed. They said they were interested in my case because I was an American and they wanted to help me. When I told them I had no lawyer they said they would look after that. My clothes were washed in the prison, but not starched. One of the women arranged to have them starched and laundered out in town. They they left without giving any information about themselves.

A few days later, January 26, 1912, my extradition papers arrived and it looked like the jig was up. I was absolutely ignorant of Mexican law and I hardly expected any of my new friends to come to my aid with sufficient funds to hire a competent attorney.

Help at Last—From a Woman.

As mysteriously as she had first come to me one of the beautiful woman returned. With her were two fine looking Mexicans of the cientifico (aristocratic) class. They were lawyers.

Francisco Cardero was an ex-justice of the Supreme Court and a supporter of Madero. Geillermo Porras was ex-Lieutenant Governor and a Diaz enthusiast. I learned later that they were among the highest legal authorities in the State.

Porras took active charge of my case and looked over the extradition papers. He said they were full of flaws but that he did not think I could get justice in Chihuahua on account of the opposition to his politics. So he had the case transferred to Jaurez and went there to prosecute it.

The woman came to me again and I asked her why she had taken such an interest in my case.

"You are an American; so am I," she said. "You have a wife and child to be saved (for I had told her of my family); I have no one in the world to care for."

I found that she was a somewhat notorious woman in Chihuahua and I also learned from other sources than herself that she had paid each of those lawyers $400 in gold to defend me. Her name was Vivian Sinclair.

They won the case through unseen forces, at least to me.

On the night of January 30 the people of Jaurez went to sleep under the seemingly peaceful rule of Madero. They awoke the next morning at daybreak—Mexicans always begin fighting at daybreak—to find a band of revolutionists in possession of everything. They looted the post-office and the customs house, burning all the papers in a bonfire in the streets.

My extradition papers were among them.

I have often thought that Porras knew what was going to happen and I was just as grateful to him as though he had won the case in court.

I heard just before I left Mexico that he had been executed by Madero Constitutionalists near Porral, Chihuahua. I have written for verification.

Only 85 strong the new insurrectos started toward Chihuahua to storm the jail. They arrived on February 2 and at daybreak the next morning began storming the jail.

Such grit I have never seen, before or since. Those Mexicans are slow starting and they always stop at dark they have absorbed the superstition from the Yaqui Indian that the soul leaves the body after dark. It is hard to get them out of their houses at night.

The Fight Begins.

Clinging to the tops of houses and hiding behind fences they began a most vicious and effective attack. They picked off every guard who showed himself on that wall. I was where I could get a good view and every now and then I would see a Federal plug an insurrecto who was lying flat on a house roof like sticking a sharp stick in the back of a toad. One after another were wriggling to death after such shots. There were 700 men defending the jail and defeat for the insurrectos was imminent when a guard had his head split by a bullet that came through a loop hole. The soldier rolled down a flight of steps and landed some twenty feet away at the feet of the Warden, his ghastly face turned upward.

"Stop the fighting," shrieked the Warden, and he turned to General Rojas for help.

"They want me," replied General Rojas. "Free me and the firing will stop in five minutes."

The Warden would not consent, but the fighting continued so fierce he consented to allow Rojas to see the Governor with a guard of five men.

The visit to the Governor was a mere formality. He refused the pardon. But on the return to the jail Rojas, walking a few paces in front of his guard, turned a corner ahead of them at the corner of Calle Libertad and Calle Tercera and took to his heels.

"Halt," shouted the guard, and they raised their guns.

But they were covered by a band of insurrectos before they could shoot.

My heart jumped with joy when the news reached the prison. I felt that I soon would be able to join him. But my blood was chilled the next day by that most horrible of all features of warfare—the shooting of a traitor.

General Orozco came down from Jaurez next day. He wanted Rojas free, but to make a show of enforcing authority he ordered the five guards shot as traitors, the finding of the courtmartial being that they had purposely allowed Rojas to escape. No one knows what cruelty a Mexican can resort to.

Rojas was as good as his word. The firing stopped before his guard returned to the jail. Eagerly did I observe and seek information as to the skirmishes and maneuvers around Chinuahua. The story of Rojas' first victory was typically Mexican.

Captain Mendoza had led the attack on the jail. He was the most unusual looking man I have ever seen and as we were closely associated together thereafter I became very much interested in his odd personality. He was six feet four inches in height but he lost two inches of his size in a stoop in his shoulders. His hair and eye lashes were raven black and his eyes were a greenish gray that shined with an uncanniness. But the oddest thing about him was his mustache, which was a brilliant red. He was as active as a cat and the most wicked man I have ever seen.

When Rojas escaped his plan was to attack the jail and free us all. But Mendoza had retreated out from the city. The reason Mexican revolutions last so long is that an army never will follow up a victory.

Out from Chihuahua Mendoza, with about 25 men, was captured by Colonel Sevrin, of Madero's forces. When Rojas heard of it he declared that Mendoza had freed him and that he was going to the rescue.

With only 260 men, while Sevrin had 700, Rojas began a ruse. Approaching Sevrin after it was too dark for him to tell the number of the revolutionists, Rojas went into camp in plain view. It is the custom to have a camp fire for every ten men. Rojas built about 200 fires. He had his men blow bugles over a long line.

The strategy was successful. Under a flag of truce Rojas sent an ultimatum to Sevrin at daybreak next morning that he must surrender Mendoza or be annihilated. Sevrin surrendered Mendoza. And Mendoza became a colonel under Rojas, the two marching toward Jaurez gathering men as they went. It really was like Napoleon's return from Elba.

White City Park Now Open

$120,000 NOW IN HAND, BUT CITY WANTS MORE

Chairman W. G. Humphrey, of the Council Finance Committee, said Tuesday that the maximum amount of new money to be apportioned in June would be $120,000. This includes all increases in revenue, he explained.

The adoption of the Whitehall Street regrading plan and other projects that developed at the meeting of Council Monday would require an expenditure of more than twice that amount. Council's action in calling on the Finance Committee to provide $30,000 for the Whitehall Street work practically assures the beginning of that project this year, but advocates of other much needed improvements will suffer bitter disappointment.

Candler Anticipates Veto.

Declaring that the form of the resolution presented by the Streets Committee, providing for the Whitehall Street work, invited a veto, Alderman John S. Candler said:

"But I am going to vote for it now and after it is vetoed."

The School Board wants $75,000 for an English-Commercial Girls' High School building. The Grady Hospital board got $25,000 for a nurses' dormitory in January and they declare it will take $25,000 more to complete the building. Chairman Orville Hall, of the Streets Committee, insisted that $50,000 was necessary for new streets. All departments want additional appropriations.

Not Enough to Go Around.

In view of this situation Council adopted Councilman Albert Thomson's resolution creating a special committee of ten councilmen and five citizens to investigate the advisability of a bond issue. Mayor Pro Tem Warren will announce this committee within a few days.

On one matter Council was unanimous. Every one voted aye overruling Mayor Woodward's scorching veto of the fire department probe committee's report vindicating Chief Cummings of the charges of graft and corruption. Council Charles W. Smith made a vigorous speech defending the committee against Mayor Woodward's attack.

Alderman James R. Nutting endeavored to settle the Police Board row over the authority of Chief Beavers to promote subordinates by putting through an ordinance giving all heads of departments power to name their assistants.

Police Deadlock Stands.

Mayor Pro Tem Warren, opposing the ordinance, declared it was introduced for the purpose of politics and that it would reduce board members to mere figureheads.

Alderman Nutting replied that Mayor Pro Tem Warren's attitude was the most palpable sort of politics.

The ordinance was referred to the Ordinance Committee. The Police Board's tangle caused by a tie vote over the right of the chief to promote subordinates remains unsettled.

A surprise to some of the members was the vote sustaining the veto of Mayor Woodward of the dog muzzling ordinance. Mayor Woodward ridiculed the ordinance as absurd and Council sustained his veto by a vote of 15 to override and 9 against. It takes a two-thirds vote to set aside a veto.

AGED FLOOD SUFFERERS FINISHING LONG WALK

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Their money having given out at Harrisburg, Pa., after they had been forced to leave their home at Steubenville, Ohio, by the floods, Albert Price, aged 67, and Sadie, his wife, aged 59, set out a-foot for Richmond, Va., where they have a brother, and have reached Washington en route.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 20.—The Daily Citizen, the official labor organ, says in an editorial:

"It is possible to admire tremendously the Republican simplicity of America without understanding the objection of the new Ambassador to wearing knee breeches. What is there in them offensive to Democratic sentiment? After all John Burns wears them on occasion and with George Washington they were the habitual garment.

"Of course it is not everybody who can boast a leg and it is just possible that Mr. Page's repugnance to knee breeches may be founded on better reasons than the world can wot of."

Loss of Cat Costs University $100,000

MIDDLETOWN, May 20.—The story of how Wesleyan University lost a bequest of $100,000 or more because students stole a pet cat for dissecting purposes a dozen or more years ago was revealed when the will of Miss Margaret Van Deursen, who died a few days ago, was filed. Miss Van Deursen was a great lover of cats. When one to which she was attached disappeared one day, she was grieved. A large reward was offered for its recovery, but it was learned that students hunting for specimens for the biological laboratory had taken it.

Troops Mutiny Over French Military Bill

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Serious mutinous uprisings, due to the proposed extension of the military term from two years to three, are occurring in the ranks of the French Army.

The war office to-day received dispatches from frontier points which stated that dangerous consequences may follow if the Government persists in putting through the bill.

In several instances barracks have been burned.

British Carry Coal for American Navy

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Paymaster John S. Higgins, U. S. N., appearing before the Senate Committee on territories said that practically all of the 250,000 tons of coal shipped annually for Pacific Coast Navy use was carried in British bottoms.

He said that the opening of the Alaska coal fields the subject under consideration by the committee would establish a Pacific supply.

GIRL IN DISTRICT 4 GOES TO TOP IN PONY CONTEST

Miss Fannie Mae Cook, With 40,340 Votes, Takes Big Lead Over Rivals. Nominations to Close May 31.

I nominate, as a candidate in The Hearst's Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian Pony Outfit Contest:

Name .....

Address .....

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook now enjoys the distinction of having gathered more votes than any of the other contestants in The Georgian and American pony outfit contests. She has 40,340 votes.

Miss Cook is in District Four, where the hottest kind of a race is in progress. At the end of last week Miss Florence Greenoe had the lead with 30,950 votes. Now she has 32,320, but even this gain was not enough to keep her in the lead.

Frank Ison, Jr., had a big lead in District No. 5, but Richard Rainey is making gains and promises to be a dangerous competitor.

How great is the interest in the pony contest from out in the State is shown by the publication of the addresses of the Georgia boys and girls who are in the race. Lithonia, Chipley, Macon, Social Circle, Savannah, Columbus, Barnesville, Gainesville, Washington, Quitman, Tennille, Waycross and Rome are among the towns represented.

There still is a large number of boys and girls with just 1,000 votes, as all the contestants have this at the start, there is no telling but that one of the winners may come from among these. As yet no one of the boys and girls has a sufficient lead to discourage competitors.

A few more days remain in which nominations can be made. After May 31 the lists will be closed and those entered by that time will run it out among themselves.

Names and the standing of contestants in the various districts follow:

Saloonist in Ireland Indicted in Georgia

MACON, GA., May 20.—Although he has been in Ireland for five years, Hugh Devlin, a former well-known resident of Macon, has been indicted by four successive grand juries for violating the prohibition law. Sheriff Hicks disclaims any idea of going to Ireland to serve the warrants.

The saloon still is owned by Devlin and operated in his name, and when witnesses testify that they bought liquor there and can not identify the bartender, the grand juries indict the proprietor.

If Devlin ever returns to Macon, he will have considerable explanation to make to the courts.

SOLDIERS GUARD INAUGURATION IN CUBA

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, May 20.—Rigid military precautions were taken here to-day to prevent any revolutionary outbreaks upon the occasion of the inauguration of Juan Mario Menocal, who succeeds Senor Gomez as President of Cuba. All principal streets were patrolled by troops and batteries of machine guns were placed at strategetic points.

As General Menocal was formerly commander-in-chief of the Cuban army sentiment exists for him in military circles and there is no fear of a mutinous disturbance.

General Menocal is a conservative. His election caused grave fears on account of the bitterness manifested by the Liberals. An attempt was made to have the election declared unconstitutional, but it failed.

The ceremonies to-day took on unusual interest because of the part played by the United States. A special mission came to this city from Washington, representing President Wilson.

A new era is promised for Cuba under the administration of General Menocal, who is avowedly pro-American. One of the chief aims of the new President will be to induce fresh foreign capital to come here.

General Menocal sent the following message to the people of the United States:

"I have stated many times, and I now take advantage of the opportunity to repeat that as Chief Executive of the Cuban Republic my energies will be devoted to fostering and cementing still more closely the friendly ties binding Cuba to the United States."

Head of Brenau Done Injustice by Report

An Atlanta friend of Dr. T. J. Simmons, president of Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., has pointed out an error published on Saturday, May 17, relative to a news item sent from Rome, Ga.

Max Meyerhardt, city attorney of Rome, by letter informed Dr. Simmons that the old Conservatory of Music, formerly connected with Shorter College and owned by Dr. Simmons, had been declared unsafe and insanitary, and suggested that it either be repaired or removed. Dr. Simmons had, three days before receipt of this letter, given instructions to demolish the building.

The report as to the summons of Dr. Simmons before the City Council or in Police Court was incorrect.

Dr. Simmons is one of the leading educators in Georgia and the South, and is a man of whom both Rome and Gainesville have cause to be proud for the work he has done in the interest of higher education.

Serbs and Greeks Fix New Boundaries

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Servia and Greece have entered a territorial alliance with Bulgaria, it is stated in a telegram from Athens to-day.

This message stated that the two countries had entered an agreement respecting the boundaries of Turkish territory to be acquired by both, and have bound each other to support the agreement with arms if Bulgaria objects.

Peace Likely to Come Slowly.

BERLIN, May 20.—Dispatches received to-day from the various European capitals indicate that the Turco-Balkan peace conference in London may be a drawn-out affair. Some predict that it will last at least three months.

Price Bars Are Down on All Bedding Needs So Prudent Housewives Will Profit by This

30th Semi-Annual Sale of Linens & White Goods

—One of the two best times of the year to supply your bedding needs went by in our 29th Semi Annual Sale.

—The other best time is right now in our 30th Semi-Annual Sale.

—Twice a year to stimulate business and to get stocks to rights, we hold these sales, wherein we drop prices to the last notch. Such an occasion is now. Here are the reasons for laying in a six months' supply.

it is a good time to lay in your summer's supply. Especially when the stockings are of such excellent qualities.

Made of pure thread silk, full fashioned; beautifully finished. Choice of medium or heavy weight, all silk, silk with lisle feet and tops, silk with lisle feet and silk tops.

The little price because the maker says these are "seconds"—but you would never know if we hadn't told. Black only.

(Main Floor, Right Aisle)

$3 Allover Emb'd Crepe $1.98

Imagine a soft, sheer, crinkly white crepe, embroidered every inch or two with a dainty white spray. Think of the possibilities for lovely waists and dresses. Suppose you know that this crepe is scarce even at full price, so no need telling you it is a "windfall" at $1.98. 45 inches wide—doesn't take much for that new waist or dress.

85c & $1 French Linens 69c

We stock these French linens to have a perfect match for our embroideries. The embroideries have sold—we now let go of the linens. Approved weight and texture. White and colors; 50 inches wide, only 69c.

DEFEAT IS LIKELY FOR BANKING REFORM

Pressure of Other Bills Will Sidetrack Issue in Summer Legislative Session.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The apprehension of Georgia bankers, recently in session in Savannah, that their proposed banking reform bill may fail of passage in the next Legislature because of the pressure of other matter probably is well founded.

The banking reform bill is voluminous and canpot get through the Legislature without mature deliberation, both in committee and on the floor. It necessarily will be taken up section by section and that means that it must be whipped out four times in detail. Rather a long, rough and rugged road to travel, to be sure.

Like the general insurance legislation effected in the last General Assembly, however, it is highly important business, and Legislators will decline to vote for it without knowing exactly what each section provides.

The prospect ahead of the banking bill has served to renew the talk of providing a more satisfactory way of disposing of purely local legislation in the future. It is local legislation invariably that ties up the two houses and serves to kill through inattention many meritorious general bills. Members will pass their immediate local legislation, if the rest of the State's legislation program goes hang!

If local legislation might be disposed of, particularly where there is no opposition, through some simple legislative method, it easily would save 50 per cent of the General Assembly's time. As it is now, a local measure takes up almost if not quite as much time as the average general measure, yet it is a matter of a relatively small importance in separate instances to the State at large.

It takes about as much time to increase the number of county commissioners in Dodge County, for instance, as it does to amend the game laws, and yet who outside of Dodge County cares a hoot whether that county has three or five county commissioners?

An effort will be made in the next Legislature to simplify the process of local legislation, and many people will sincerely hope that the effort may succeed.

Judge John T. Allen, of Baldwin County, Senator-elect from the twentieth district, passed through Atlanta to-day.

Judge Allen was in high spirits and expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the status of his race for the presidency of the next Senate.

"If the vote were to be taken to-morrow," said he, "I am sure absolutely that I would be elected, and, in the best of good nature, I really believe I shall be the only candidate before the Senate when the voting takes place next month."

Judge Allen has been described as the one man in Georgia politics about whom there is absolutely no "lost motion," and somehow the description seems to fit him snugly.

He is one of the very best lawyers in the State and one of Georgia's most astute statesmen.

The United States Supreme Court is expected to hand down soon a decision in the famous Cureton case from Georgia, that will interest the prohibitionists of the State particularly.

The question involved is whether the prohibition laws of Georgia shall be construed similarly to the prohibition laws of Tennessee, the Supreme Courts of the two States being of exact opposite opinions as to the point raised.

Cureton, a Chattanooga soft drink dealer, owned a large distillery near Rising Fawn, Ga. He received an order for whisky in his Chattanooga house, and sent it to his Georgia distillery to be filled. The whisky was shipped from Rising Fawn, and Cureton was arrested on a charge of selling whisky, was tried and found guilty, the Georgia Supreme Court holding that the delivery at Rising Fawn to the common carrier was the consummation of a sale. Cureton appealed to the United States Court, claiming protection under the interstate commerce laws.

If the United States Supreme Court upholds the Georgia Supreme Court, the prohibitionists will regard it as a victory. If, on the contrary, the United States Courts take the view as set up in the Tennessee Supreme Court, the "dry" people will feel that they have lost a point.

The decision is expected shortly.

Representative Burwell, of Hancock County, will be the oldest member of the new Legislature in point of continuous service. He has been a member of the General Assembly since 1896.

Joe Hill Hall, of Bibb; Byron Bower, of Decatur; John M. Slaton, of Fulton, and John N. Holder, of Jackson, all of whom ranked with Mr. Burwell in point of continuous service, will be missing from the new House, leaving Burwell the veteran and the dean.

The effort to increase heavily the appropriation for Confederate pensions in the next Legislature, while likely to arouse much sympathy, probably will have a hard road to travel.

There will be few if any members who would not like to see the pension increased, and yet there will be many who will be unable to see how it is to be done and meet the other necessary expenses of the State in addition.

It is very well known that Legislatures of late years have found it extremely difficult to keep the State's outgo within its income, and one of the heaviest items of annual expense is the Confederate pension appropriation.

If some statesman is able to show the Legislature how the pensions may be increased without greatly embarrassing some of the departments, the pensions probably will be increased all right. Unless the Legislature is shown that, however, the increase is not to be slight, if anything.

DEATH ENDS TRIAL OF MAN LONG DEAD

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—The death of the second plaintiff, while the case was being heard in the City Court of Augusta, to-day brought to a sudden termination the fifth trial of a suit to collect at $3,000 insurance policy on the life of John Moore, who was slain near Keysville in January, 1907. The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States is the defendant. A sixth trial will now result with a third plaintiff to prosecute the suit. The four previous hearings resulted in mistrials.

Tom Moore, who several months ago was killed as an escaped convict while a fugitive with "Old Bill" Miner, from the State Farm at Milledgeville, originally brought the suit. He was the beneficiary named in the policy.

Tom Moore was accused of killing his brother and was given a life sentence in the penitentiary. The Supreme Court affirmed it. He was serving this when he escaped from the State Farm and met death.

Mrs. Louise Moore, as administratrix of the estate of her husband, Tom Moore, continued the insurance suit.

To-day, while the case was on trial, a telegram was received from Washington, Ga., announcing the death of Mrs. Moore.

Judge Eve dismissed the jury, after expressing regret that the case could not proceed.

L. S. Peeples, counsel for the plaintiff, announced after court adjourned, that he would bring the suit in behalf of another administrator of the Tom Moore estate.

When the trial came to such an abrupt ending to-day, the attorneys for the insurance company were endeavoring to prove that Tom Moore killed his brother, because Judge Eve had placed the burden of proof on the insurance people, not taking into consideration the fact that Moore was convicted of the murder in Burke Superior Court.

Reward for Men Who Blew Up Home of Negro Attracts Much Attention.

Governor Joseph M. Brown's proclamation, offering a reward for the apprehension of the Cobb County dynamiters, has attracted a great deal of attention and brought forth many expressions of approval throughout the State.

The Governor's uncompromisingly hostile attitude toward all forms of lawlessness has been so persistently demonstrated that there are few if any criminals left in Georgia who do not know that he means to enforce the law sternly against them if they violate the same.

Not only has he set every agency of the State at work seeking to establish the identity of the Cobb County dynamiters, but he also has offered substantial rewards for the apprehension of certain lynchers recently operating in Columbia and Heard Counties.

As he draws near the end of his term in the executive office, Governor Brown, instead of weakening in any of his positions against lawlessness, seems all the more inclined to emphasize his personal and official detestation of it.

The Governor holds that there are very many more law-abiding people in Georgia than there are lawbreakers, and that law-observers are entitled to full and complete protection against the criminal classes.

JAPS' MOVE NOW ONLY COMMENT AT CAPITOL

Orientals May Not Hasten to Answer U. S. Reply to the Alien Bill Protest.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—It is Japan's next move, was the only comment State Department officials would make to-day on the Japanese situation. The reports vary as to the time when the Mikado's statesmen will make their reply to the note delivered by Secretary of State Bryan to the Japanese Ambassador yesterday.

Some officials expect it within the next three days and others say the Japanese might take prolonged consideration, since the Webb act will not go into effect before August.

Reports of unusual activity in the way of shipments of supplies to the Presidio of San Francisco were denied at the War Department to-day.

Secretary of War Garrison declared the effort now being made to recruit the regiments in the Philippines to their full strength has been going on for nearly twelve months, and has no relation to the present situation between Japan and the United States.

Asiatic League Would Deny Orientals Leases.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—The executive committee of the Asiatic Constitutional League has begun obtaining signatures to a referendum petition to defeat the anti-alien land law which was signed by Governor Johnson yesterday.

The league's objection to the law is the clause permitting an alien to hold a three-year leare. The officials of the league soon will circulate an initiative petition for a law which will exclude Japanese and Chinese from both ownership and leaseholds under any conditions.

California Only Trying To Save Itself, He Says.

NEW YORK, May 20.—"The people of California have reached a crisis in their affairs. They have to determine right now whether California is to be overrun by Asiatics or whether it is to be kept for Californians. In three years California will be completely overrun if the wrong steps are taken now."

This statement was made here to-day by Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, as he and Mrs. Wheeler were sailing for Europe. Dr. Wheeler expressed the opinion, though, that there is no danger of actual hostilities between this country and Japan.

"The diplomats will be able to bring about a common understanding," said he. At the same time he declared the alien land bill, barring Japanese from ownership of land in California, was just and should be the law of the State.

COUNTERFEITER CONVICTED.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 20. R. T. Lawing, member of the counterfeiting gang tried a few days ago, was to-day sentenced in the Federal Court to two years in the Atlanta Penitentiary. He is the fourth prisoner convicted at this term of court to be sent to Atlanta.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Entertaining Bill at Forsyth.

First nighters—those afflicted with the desire to see and hear before anybody else—who settled into their accustomed seats Monday night at the Forsyth Theater prepared to endure at any cost the routine vaudeville, were given several surprises of their young and biase lives before the program was finished.

Perhaps the most unusual number of the entertaining bill was John Geiger and his "talking violin." Mr. Geiger certainly made his violin do everything but speak and after he had put it through its paces, including imitations of almost everything from a "Spizzerinctum" to a woodsaw, his audience had forgotten that he hadn't made the instrument emit vocal sounds.

For first-row habitues the Dunedin troupe, a bicycle novelty act, composed of one man and three girls, proved an interesting feature. The one man can certainly ride, and the girls are very good to look at, especially to the first-row crowd. Other numbers of the bill included Josephine Dunfee, whose voice, while very good, was wrongly applied in the caliber of songs she rendered; Nevins and Erwood, old-timers on Atlanta's dancing stage; Adam and Eve, a monkey act especially attractive to children; Gallagher and Fields in a comedy act entitled "The Battle of Bay Rum," which proved a winner, and Bradshaw Brothers, who presented some amazing new twists and turns in a contortion act.

"The Deep Purple" Pleases.

Patrons of the Atlanta Theater were treated to a new phase of Miss Billy Long's ability as leading lady yesterday, when "The Deep Purple," Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's play, was presented in Atlanta for the first time. The initial performance was at a matinee.

Ably assisting Miss Long in her triumph in the portrayal of New York underworld life was Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison, the popular young Atlanta girl, who took the part of the unconscious blackmailer.

The play is an interesting one from start to finish, and the company appears to advantage in it. Mr. Vail, the leading man, does some good work in the part assigned him.

Generous applause was accorded the company for its work by the moderately filled house.

Tabloid Musical Comedy at Bijou.

Tabloid musical comedy—"A Trip to Joyville" the attraction—got a fine start on Monday at the Bijou. Four big audiences indorsed the great big dime's worth of entertainment. The show, the theater and the general conditions all pointed to the fact that tabloid entertainment had caught on, in just the fashion the knowing ones had predicted.

"A Trip to Joyville" is an hour and a third of singing, dancing, comedy and music, with some vaudeville interruptions that are clever. There is a story about a lot of jolly folks going off for a day of frolic; they are pretty girls, well-groomed young men and a corps of character comedians who will perhaps be found some day in "faster company."

"A Trip to Joyville" will be presented at daily matinee—two on Saturday—and twice each night the rest of the week.

Bond Registration Closes.

COLUMBUS. — The registration books for the Dillingham Street bridge bonds have closed with only 456 voters having qualified for the election on June 7. The issue is for $50,000, it being the third to be voted upon for the bridge.

G. O. P. LEADERS TO REUNITE FACTIONS

New Plan Lets Committee Rearrange Representation Instead of Calling Convention.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Recommendation that the Republican National Committee readjust the basis of representation in national conventions, instead of calling a national convention to effect this change, probably will be made by the executive committee of the national committee when it meets here Saturday to take up this question. This was the consensus of opinion to-day.

Many members of the committee favor accomplishing the change without calling a convention. National Chairman Charles D. Hilles will preside at the meeting.

On this committee are three men who were Roosevelt sympathizers at the Chicago convention. They are Neidringhaus, West and Williams. Committeeman Adams, of Iowa, is friendly to the Cummins reorganization plan.

"This committee is as progressive as anybody," said a Republican leader to-day, "and ought to be satisfactory to LaFollette men."

The theory of the Republicans is that the Progressive faction of the party can be brought closer into the fold by merely readjusting representation in national conventions. It will be a cheap and convenient way of reuniting the party.

BRIEF STATEMENT OF BELIEFS OF SOUTHERN CHURCH IS SUBMITTED

Revised Epitome of Doctrine Is Drawn Up and Presented by Committee.

Here is the "Brief Statement of Belief," submitted to the Presbyterian Church (South) to-day by Dr. J. M. Wells, for the committee named for the purpose:

Explanatory Note.

Inasmuch as there is some difference of opinion concerning the status and use of any report which it may make, this committee desires to state that it does not understand that the Assembly instructed it to prepare a statement of doctrine which shall be a substitute for, or a condition or an amendment to, any of the documents contained in the constitution of the church, or of any of them. It respectfully suggests that, in the event the Assembly approves this report, the statement submitted shall be referred to the executive committee of publication, to be printed and circulated as may be deemed best.

The Statement.

I. God.

God is a spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable; all-powerful, holy, wise, good, true, and just, hating all sin. He is merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance; this truth is summed up in the Bible statement, "God is love." He exists in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, who are one God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory.

II. The Bible.

The Word of God, written by men inspired by the Holy Spirit, is contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and are the will of God. It is the revelation of God's will for man and of man's duty to God, and is the only infallible and authoritative rule of faith and life.

III. God's Purpose.

The eternal purpose of God includes all events; it is holy and wise, and does not deprive man of freedom, nor make God the author of sin.

IV. Creation.

For the manifestation of his own glory, God created the world and all things therein, whether visible or invisible, and all very good. He made man after his own image; male and female created he them, with immortal souls, endowed with knowledge, righteousness and holiness, having the law of God in their hearts, and power to fulfill it; and yet under a possibility of transgression, being left to the freedom of their own will.

V. Sin and the Fall.

Sin is the violation of God's law, either by omission or commission. Our first parents, being tempted by Satan, disobeyed God's command, and so by their own choice fell from their original state of innocence and communion with God, and came under the power of sin, the penalty of which is eternal death. All men, by reason of their relationship to Adam as their representative head and common ancestor, are born with a sinful nature from which all actual transgressions proceed; and out of this condition no one is able to deliver himself.

VI. Salvation.

God, who is rich in mercy, so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to be the Saviour of sinners. The salvation thus provided is freely offered to all men, and is sufficient for all, but becomes efficacious only in those who believe in Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

VII. Election.

Before the foundation of the world, God the Father chose unto Himself in Christ a people whom He gave to His Son, that they should be holy and without blame before Him in love. Those who come to years of discretion receive this salvation only through faith in Christ, being regenerated by the Holy Spirit. Those who die in infancy, and all others who are incapable of exercising choice, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit who works when and where and how he pleases. We thus declare that God's electing grace has peopled heaven with a multitude that no man can number, and has never sent one soul to hell.

VIII. Christ the Redeemer.

The Lord Jesus Christ, being the eternal Son of God, became truly He is both God and man, and the man, being conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, yet without sin; so that He is both God and man, and the only perfect mediator between God and man, by whom alone we can come unto the Father. By a life of perfect obedience and by His sacrificial death, He satisfied divine justice, made a perfect atonement for sin, and reconciles us to God. He rose from the dead and ascended into heaven, where he makes continual intercession for us; and He sits at the right hand of God, clothed with honor and power, subduing His people unto Himself, ruling and defending them, and restraining and conquering all His and their enemies. He will come again to receive and reward His people and to judge the world.

IX. The Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit, the third person of the Godhead, applies the redemption purchased by Christ. He persuades and enables men to obey the call of the gospel, and dwells continually in every believer as the spirit of truth, of holiness, of power and of comfort, and is thereby the author of all Christian experience.

X. Justification by Faith.

Everyone who humbly relies upon Christ alone for salvation and in repentance confesses and forsakes his sins, is pardoned and accepted as righteous in God's sight, solely on the ground of the perfect obedience and sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Everyone thus pardoned and accepted is adopted into God's family, and becomes an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ.

XI. The Christian Life.

The Holy Spirit imparts spiritual life by the direct operation of his power; so that, being born from above, we are the children of God, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which are not the ground but the fruits of salvation. Dwelling in Christ's people, he purifies them more and more from sin, enables them to render a cheerful and loving obedience to God's commandments, and perseveres in his sanctifying work in their hearts until at last they stand perfect in the presence of Christ in glory. Believers may at times backslide, growing indifferent and cold, and even falling into grievous sins; yet God does not cast them off, but chastens them, and restores them through repentance to fellowship with him.

XII. The Church.

We acknowledge one universal church, the same in all ages, and of which Christ is the head. The church invisible consists of all the redeemed. The church visible is composed of all those throughout the world who profess faith in Jesus Christ, our Lord, together with their children, and it is the duty of all believers openly to profess their faith by uniting with the church. The church exists to bring to Christ those whom the Father has given him, and to establish the Redeemer's kingdom. The mission of the church is spiritual, and its work is to witness to the truth of God to the ends of the earth, and to preach the gospel to all men in every generation. We believe in the separation of church and State. The scriptural form of church government is by elders or presbyters, chosen by the members of the church; but we do not regard the form of government of a church as essential to its existence. We recognize the validity of the ministry and sacraments of all evangelical churches, and seek the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. Ministers, elders and deacons, at their ordination, are required to subscribe to the system of doctrine contained in our standards, but the sole condition for membership in the church is a credible confession of Christ as Saviour.

XIII. The Sacraments.

There are two sacraments, baptism, which symbolizes the work of the Holy Spirit, and the Lord's Supper, which symbolizes the sacrificial death of Christ. Sprinkling or pouring is the Scriptural mode of baptism, but the mode is not essential to the validity of the sacrament. Children of believers, before reaching the age of personal accountability, are to be baptized on the faith of their parents, who in the sacramental act enter into covenant relations with God. We invite to the Lord's table all who love Him in sincerity and truth and who are in good and regular standing in evangelical churches.

XIV. Death and Resurrection.

The souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness; and do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in the grave till the resurrection. At the resurrection, believers being raised up in glory, shall be openly acknowledged and acquitted in the day of judgment, and made perfectly blessed in the full enjoyment of God to all eternity; but the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment.

XV. The Final State.

There are but two states of future existence, heaven, the home of the redeemed, and hell, the abode of the finally impenitent. There is no purgatory, nor is there any probation after death. Man retains his identity after death, and there will be recognition in the future life. We believe in the ultimate and complete triumph of the Saviour's kingdom, and with all his followers in all ages we toil and pray for the speedy coming of the day when our glorious Lord shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied.

Nurses Hear Talks For Better Health

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—Dr. W. H. Doughty, dean of the medical department of the University of Georgia, delivered the address of welcome at the opening of the seventh annual convention of the Georgia Association of Graduate Nurses here to-day. Mrs. E. S. Tupman, of Atlanta, responded. The convention will continue through to-morrow.

"Educational Prevention in Infant Mortality" was the subject of an address this afternoon by Miss G. B. Knipp, executive secretary of the American Association for the Prevention of Infant Mortality. Miss Ella P. Crandall, executive secretary of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, made an address this afternoon on "Public Health Nursing."

Chicago Claims First 'July Fourth' Victim

CHICAGO, May 20.—Harry Cramer, aged 11, was the first Chicago victim of premature Fourth of July celebrations.

He was lighting firecrackers in front of his home to-day and put his right hand, which held a piece of burning "punk," into his coat pocket. A whole package of firecrackers exploded. His injury may result fatally.

Paterson Strikers Start Bread Riots

PATERSON, N. J., May 20.—Bread riots were begun here to-day by famished silk mill strikers. A band of idle men, driven to desperation by hunger and by the sight of their suffering families, raided the fashionable section of the town and stole a number of milk bottles and packages of bread from doorsteps. Others raided grocery stores.

Angry keepers called the police, and desultory fighting resulted.

Gibson, Deserted by Lawyer, Is Penniless

NEWBURGH, N. Y., May 20.—Declaring he had been deserted by his counsel, Burton W. Gibson, accused of drowning Rosa Menschik Szabo to secure her estate, was arraigned to-day for his second trial.

"I am without funds and my lawyer has not communicated with me," Gibson claimed.

The case was delayed until his lawyer could be reached in Brooklyn by telephone.

Cincinnati Strikers Win Street Car War

CINCINNATI, May 20.—The suit for a receiver for the Cincinnati Traction Company asked for by Mayor Hunt during the strike tie-up was dismissed here to-day following the settlement of the difficulty between the company and men, the latter winning the fight for recognition of the union and increased pay.

Cars were operating again to-day.

Police Find 'Thieves' Stealing Only Kisses

MACON, GA., May 20.—Police headquarters received a telephone call last night for officers to hasten to the Gresham High School, Cotton Avenue and New Street, as persons were trying to break in the building.

Two policemen, after a cautious search, found a young couple seated in the side vestibule, engaged in the gentle pastime of kissing.

When the couple explained that they had just become engaged, the policemen apologized and withdrew, first taking the names of the sweethearts. They were Miss Alma Jones, of Georgia Avenue, and Paul Jackson, a druggist.

OBITUARY NOTICE.

Mrs. Katie Heath, widow of H. G. Heath, died Monday night at her home, 62 Connally Street. She is survived by a daughter, Miss Willie Heath, and two sisters, Mrs. H. E. Bray and Mrs. Willie Malley. The funeral will be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday night at the residence. Interment at Gainesville, Ga., Wednesday.

HUFF LOSES FIRST CONTEMPT RULING

Judge Grubb Overrules Demurrer Offered by Defense—Point of Law Raised.

MACON, GA., May 20.—The defense lost the first point in the contempt of court case against Colonel W. A. Huff, whose trial began here today in Federal Court, when Judge W. I. Grubb, presiding, overruled a demurrer offered by the defense.

A recess was taken until 3 o'clock, when a point of law will be argued. This point is whether the sending of the caustic leter by Colonel Huff to Judge Emory Speer at his home last July constituted contempt of court. All witnesses have been dismissed until to-morrow.

The Federal Court was thronged when the case was called for trial this morning.

Attorneys for the prosecution are District Attorney O. D. Street, of Alabama; Assistant District Attorney A. H. Codington, of Macon; Judge Enoch Calloway, of Augusta, and George S. Jones and Orville A. Park, of Macon. The defendant is represented by Thomas S. Felder, Attorney General of Georgia, who for nine years has been Colonel Huff's attorney in bankruptcy litigation, out of which the contempt case developed. Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, was designated by the circuit judge to preside over the trial.

Judge Speer will be the chief witness for the Government. District Attorney Alexander Akerman and Judge A. J. Cobb, of Athens, are among the other witnesses.

Colonel Huff declares that, regardless of the result of his trial, he will proceed with his charges against Judge Speer. He says that the charges will be laid before the President and Congress within two weeks.

Speaking of the Number of Wash Dresses Young Women Need at This Season

Doubtless much could be said by mothers, and doubtless more will be said as the days grow warmer. But here is the interesting part—all these much needed wash dresses may be bought to-morrow at very, very great reductions. They go into a sale to-morrow in the Junior Department.

Prices point to worth-while savings and to the certain fact that to-morrow will be the day to secure all the wash dresses this summer is going to call for.

Here is the proof:

$2.25 Junior Wash Dresses $1.19

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. They are of ginghams, percales, bright summery patterns and colorings and styles—low-necks and short-sleeves—trimmed becomingly with braids, bands and pipings of self and contrasting colors. No question about you and daughter liking them!

None will be exchanged, none sent C. O. D.

$3.50 Junior Wash Dresses $1.95

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. Percales and ginghams of fine weave—many of them imported—and of choicest patterns. And please note how very carefully these dresses are made. Every stitch, every seam is right. Choose from high neck and long sleeve styles and low neck and short sleeve styles in two-piece and one-piece dresses.

$7.50 Junior Outing Balkan Blouses $3.75

Half price for the smartest little outing coats the season has brought out for the Junior Miss! We call them outing coats, but the way the young folks are wearing them with white dresses these cool mornings and evenings would seem to discredit that as their first use.

Red flannel—made with just that fullness through the waist that is most attractive.

Sizes fifteen and seventeen years.

With the Help of Mrs. Marvin Now With Us Demonstrating

La Vida Corsets

you may do much right now that will tend toward personal comfort this summer. Warm weather and an ill-fitting corset! Banish the thought, banish the possibility!

Besides it is altogether unnecessary.

We have a new summer weight La Vida—true to the approved fashion lines—in a model that is right for you and right for the light and filmy dresses that it must support and hold in graceful lines. And right now (to the end of this week), Mrs Marvin, a skilled and experienced corset woman, is here to fit you.

It is a splendid time to attend to summer corsets!

Making Charles Happy

A Humorous Story, Complete.

"IT seems a curious perversity of fate," said the young married woman, "that I should have a husband who really has a high regard for clothes, when so many women complain that they can not enlist their husbands' attention or check books in that noble cause.

"When Charles said yesterday morning, 'My dear, you will attend to ordering your spring hats before long, will you not?' I knew it was useless to put off the matter any longer. So I promised him that I would get something that very day. I laid aside that wonderful new play of Strindberg's that I was going to take over to the park and read, and the poor dear wrote me a check and went to the office looking quite relieved in his mind.

"After he had gone, I stopped to finish only one act of Strindberg and then I started. On the way downtown I figured out just what kind of hat I should get.

"It was not so hard to plan one in my mind, but it was a different matter to find the hat that I had planned. I went to six shops and tried on about 80 hats before I began to feel discouraged and decided that there must be something wrong with my looks.

She Looked Wild.

"In the sixth shop I met Mrs. Pelton, who looked wild-eyed and belligerent, and had a curious little straw concoction set upon the top of her hair, with round red objects falling off the back of it like a peck of apples descending a stairway.

"When she saw me, she clutched me menacingly by the arm, as if I were responsible for the present social system, for she said: 'Isn't it an outrage that human intelligence has to be expended upon pursuits like this! They talk about the senseless fashions of women! Do they realize that men make these styles and then force them upon us? Do you know the meaning of this whole insane subject of fashion? It's a device perpetrated by the merchants and manufacturers to get rid of the unconsumed surplus. Now, when our sex has the ballot, I hope——'

"I calmed her down, as much as I could by telling her that I felt that way about it. However, I was so relieved to find that perhaps the trouble was not with my looks, after all, that I walked over to a counter where several untrimmed hats were piled up in a bin and a lot of women were clutching at them and bought the first one from the top of the heap. It was light and soft and felt comfortable and did not make me look entirely like a cartoon when I was trying it on.

"So great was my relief at ending my search that I took home the hat with quite a feeling of satisfaction. I reasoned that it would be a simple matter to trim it myself, for all I should have to do was to leave off most of the things that the trimmed hats had on.

"That was yesterday morning. The rest of the day and until midnight last night I devoted to attempts to trim the hat. Fortunately Charles stayed downtown to dinner, so I could work without interruption. I trimmed and untrimmed eight times and nothing that I could devise looked right, so I gave it up in despair and went to bed.

"This morning as soon as Charles had gone I got the odious hat out from under the bed, where I had hidden it, and by the broad light of early day discovered what was the matter with it. The trouble was in the color, which I had failed to observe closely. It was not a normal straw color nor a yellow nor a brown, but a sickly, bilious, yellowish green, which made everything that it came into contact with look seasick, including me.

"It being now too late to return the hat, which had begun to show signs of wear, I carried it down to a dye shop and found that they could color it for me, but would have to change the shape, which was the least objectionable thing about it, and that it would take four weeks.

More Trouble.

"I then went to a department store and bought a bottle of dye, which the saleswoman said any child could apply with a small brush. In attempting to open the bottle after I had carried it home my knife slipped, the tin cap flew off and half the contents spilled over the kitchen table, a stack of dishes and the kitchen sink, to all of which it immediately adhered like enamel.

"Fortunately, it was Delia's afternoon out, but as I knew that she would be very cross when she saw the dye I spent two hours and a half and a can of scouring powder in removing it from the kitchen landscape before I could return my attention to the hat. The remaining contents of the bottle I then applied to the hat, except the part that splattered on myself. I then relined it, trimmed it for the ninth time, tried it on and found that I could stand to look at the finished product in the glass without feeling ill. I felt that I had earned that hat.

"When Charles came home I had it stuck on my head for him to look at and was just beginning the second act of Strindberg. He was very much pleased, and said: 'That looks very nice, my dear. Now, you see how easy it is to get becoming hats, so you must go down and order two or three more, and then you will be supplied for the summer."

Not What He Meant.

JONES and Long had not met for years. Once—that is, in the days when both had been striving for fame in their different professions—they had been really good chums, and many a talk had they enjoyed together by the fireside as to the little places they would take in the country "when their ships came home."

The dream of Jones has been realized, and now, although a portly old fellow, it was with a sense of real pleasure that he prepared for a visit from his former friend.

"Ah, it's splendid seeing you down here, Long!" he said cordially, by way of greeting. "Quite like old times—what? And the missus, I know, is longing to shake you by the hand. But first—yes, you must come along and have a look at my greenhouse. You simply must!"

And Long went.

"Well, Jones," he said, "you've got a mighty pretty place down here; but, to my mind, it's just a bit bare."

"Oh!" replied Jones, cheerfully, "that's because the trees are so young! Next time you come—why, they'll be so big that you won't recognize them!"

The Social World

The dance recital given by pupils of Miss Lillian Viola Moseley at Segadlo's Monday evening was attended by a large number of guests. The program of beautiful dances was most enthusiastically received. A number of clever children presented ballroom dances, ballet numbers, esthetic and solo interpretative dances, reflecting great credit upon themselves and upon their teacher.

Among the solo dancers Miss Idelia Andrews did extraordinary work. Her "Little Boy Blue," done in costume, was very fine, and she was a leader in all the group dances.

Miss Nell Summerall in a fetching costume danced "La Paloma," to the delight of all who saw her. Little Miss Martha Boynton, in a white tulle gown covered with pink roses, was a bewitching little dancer presenting "The Spirit of Spring." Another pretty little girl who danced beautifully alone was Miss Sarah Wagstaff, whose number was "Polka Miniature." Miss Ruth Carr Benson presented "Fulano," a Venetian gondolier dance, wearing a pretty fancy dress.

A large number of children, both girls and boys, took part in the evening's entertainment. The little girls were beautifully gowned in pink and white and blue dancing frocks, with ballet slippers of the color of their dresses. Miss Moseley wore a handsome evening gown of black satin charmeuse, with draped skirt and corsage of shadow lace and chiffon adorned with a corsage bouquet of pastel-tinted sweetpeas.

Music at Lawn Fete.

A feature of the lawn fete to be held Friday afternoon and evening on the lawns surrounding the homes of Mrs. George Dexter and Mrs. George Traylor, on Ponce DeLeon Avenue, will be a program of music including an old fashioned quartette and a country dance. Mr. James Wardwell will be in charge of this program, and other attractions will include a row of booths with household supplies for sale, candy table, etc. A housekeepers' booth, with many articles suitable for housekeepers, and a supply of fresh vegetables, will be arranged. Special attractions will be given during the afternoon for children. Members of St. Elizabeth Guild of St. Luke's Church will sponsor the affair.

Dinner at the Driving Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Bancker will entertain eight guests at dinner at the Piedmont Driving Club Tuesday evening for Mrs. Bates Block's guests, Miss Caroline Scott, of Arkansas, and Miss Lorna Carr, of St. Louis.

For Mr. and Mrs. Finley.

Mr. W. W. Finley, of Washington, D. C., president of the Southern Railway, and Mrs. Finley, who spent Tuesday in Atlanta, were tendered a luncheon Tuesday at the Piedmont Driving Club by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Weihiler.

For Mr. and Mrs. Seydel.

A series of parties will be tendered Mr. and Mrs. Paul Seydel during their visit to Dr. and Mrs. Vassar Wooley.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Duncan will entertain at dinner Tuesday evening at the Brookhaven Club; Mr. and Mrs. William D. Ellis, Jr., will entertain at dinner Wednesday evening. Other affairs include Dr. and Mrs. Woolley's on Thursday and Mrs. James Jackson's matinee party Saturday. Mrs. Seydel will remain with her mother after the departure of Mr. Seydel next week.

For Mrs. Hynds.

Mrs. Arthur Hynds has returned from Chattanooga, where she visited Mrs. Fountain Rice, Jr., during Mr. Hynds' absence in Dallas, Texas. Among the parties tendered Mrs. Hynds in Chattanooga were a tea at the Golf Club, given by Mrs. Stacy, and a bridge party by Mrs. Burke, with an informal tea by Mrs. Rice. On her return Mrs. Rice accompanied Mrs. Hynds for a visit to her father and sister, Mr. C. E. Sergeant and Miss Lulie Sergeant.

For Mr. and Mrs. Wellhouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wellhouse, who will sail May 26 for a summer abroad, will be tendered a dinner of eight guests Tuesday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Werner S. Byck.

Miss Lewis Hostess.

Miss Margaret Lewis' bridge luncheon Tuesday morning complimented her guests, Miss Wilhelmina Drummond and Mrs. O. V. Derr, of Indiana. Sweetpeas in all the pink and lavender shades decorated the apartment. Silk hose were given as the first and consolation prizes and the guests of honor were presented with hand-embroidered collar and cuff sets.

Miss Lewis' guests were Misses Penelope Clarke, Frances Connally, Marian Foster, Aurelia Speer, Cobbie Vaughan, Nellie Stewart, Elizabeth Morgan, Clifford West, May O'Brien, Eloise Oliver, Edith Dunson, Adrienne Battey, Josephine Stoney, Susan Osborne, Mary King, Louise Bloodworth of Forsyth, Mrs. S. CROW FIGHTS WITH SNAKE; CAW'S THANKS WHEN SAVED

GRAND RAPIDS, WIS., May 20.—While hunting for May flowers on Blueberry Ridge, seven miles from this city, Richard Arpin and Henry and Ernest Smith, witnessed a fight between a garter snake and a crow.

The snake was getting the better of the crow and had coiled itself several times around the bird's neck, when the boys struck the snake on the head.

The rescued crow expressed its gratitude in crow language and made no objection when young Arpin formally adopted him.

MACON TO SEEK STATE K. OF P. HEADQUARTERS

MACON, GA., May 20.—More than 30 Macon delegates leave to-night to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Waycross. A determined effort will be made to land the permanent headquarters of the grand lodge for this city. T. J. Carling, supreme chancellor of the world, who is a resident of this city, is throwing his influence to Macon in this regard.

HUSBAND JAILED AS HE RETURNS TO SUE WIFE

D. H. Clark, Held on Wife's Charge of Desertion, Admits He Alone Stole Son.

The young husband returned to Atlanta Monday, he said, for the purpose of entering suit for divorce against his wife, and Monday night visited her at her home, to make the proposition that if she would not contest the divorce action he would permit her to keep both children. Mrs. Clark, he said, informed him she would fight to a finish.

Wife Has Him Arrested.

After Clark left the house, Mrs. Clark hurriedly telephoned to Police Chief Beavers, informing him that her husband was back in the city and asking his immediate arrest for desertion. Clark was taken into custody shortly after midnight at the home of his mother, 184 Hill Street.

Clark declared Tuesday he never again would live with his wife, but would fight in the courts for the custody of little Augustus Hamilton Clark. He said he would make no effort to regain the youngest child, Charles, aged 1 year.

"My mother is wrapped up in little Augustus, and I want to give him to her," said Clark. "I want my mother to care for the little fellow and educate him. My wife can keep the other child."

Mother Under Indictment.

Mrs. George S. Clark, mother of the young husband, is now under bond on a grand jury indictment charging her with kidnaping little Augustus. Mrs. Clark took the little fellow to Chicago in March, and was later met there by young Clark. Mrs. Clark is said to have become ill in Chicago. She returned to Atlanta with the little boy, where the wife regained him.

Clark Tuesday relieved his mother of all blame for the spiriting away of the child, admitting that he planned the whole affair.

Clark said he came here from Jackson, Miss., where he is connected with the Jackson Light and Power Company.

SLUMMING PARTIES NOT TOLERATED AT MACON

MACON, GA., May 20.—Slumming parties are not tolerated in Macon. Miss Dorothy Smith, a corset demonstrator, and C. K. Hildreath, a traveling man, ascertained this fact when they were arrested in the restricted district by policemen especially instructed to take such sight-seeing parties in custody. The couple were fined $11 each.

ALWAYS NEW, ALWAYS BEST, AT THE BONITA

The new musical comedy company at the Bonita has sprung a surprise and won a home in Atlanta. Good, clean, catchy—and the prettiest bunch of show girls to be found anywhere. There is also a plot, which is unusual.

Take the tip and go to the Bonita this week—to-day. You will enjoy the show.

INDICTS CHURCH AS NEGLECTING NEGROES

A severe indictment was passed upon the Presbyterian Church for its indifference to the negro problem by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., in the report of his committee on the freedmen of the country.

"The Presbyterians are making absolutely no effective effort toward the solution of this great problem," declared Dr. Johnston. "We are asleep on the job. The enormity of our recreancy is apparent when we consider that every tenth man over whom our flag flies is a black man.

"We need a trained leadership to take charge of the situation. We need trained Christian teachers to go into the schools and higher institutions and instruct these people.

Little Financial Aid Given.

"How poorly we have responded to the needs of this problem is indicated by the pitifully small financial aid we have given. There are only 30,000 negro communicants in our Northern Church. Yet these poor, illiterate persons give more than a third of that contributed by the million and a half white members of the Northern Church.

"We have been the rankest sort of cowards. We have feared to take any brave, decided step. At the rate we are going, our progress will continue at a snail's pace. Some say send them to Liberia; some say send them somewhere else—get rid of the problem by shipping the black people out of the country. But God says: 'They need not depart; give Me them.'"

John Gaston, of Pittsburg, Pa., associate secretary of the Freedmen's Board, declared that the key to the whole problem must be found in the negro ministry.

"Georgia has a million negroes within its boundaries, more than all of the Northern States combined," said Mr. Gaston. "This constitutes an immense, an appalling problem. How are you going to solve it? I believe its solution can come only in a trained, educated negro ministry. The Presbyterian Church has made a start along this line. It is a small start, but we are relying in the Christian spirit of our white communicants to give it a splendid impetus. In thirteen Southern States we have established four synods and sixteen presbyteries. Ministering to the negro people are 241 negro preachers."

Sees Lessening of Crime.

Mr. Gaston said that the incalculable benefit of gospel training and educational instruction had been demonstrated to his satisfaction in many places in the South. In one Arkansas county, he said that the percentage of negro crimes was five times that of the white crimes. In spite of this, he declared, that in the ten years' history of a negro training school in that county not one of the students had appeared before the county court on the charge of being guilty of a crime against the State.

Healthy Baby is Precious Blessing

To Make It Healthy and Keep It Healthy Use a Reliable Baby Laxative

DOROTHY JOHNSON.

In spite of the greatest personal care and the most intelligent attention to diet, babies and children will become constipated, and it is a fact that constipation and indigestion have wrecked many a young life. To start with a good digestive apparatus is to start life without handicap.

But as we can not all have perfect working bowels we must do the next best thing and acquire them, or train them to become healthy. This can be done by the use of a laxative-tonic very highly recommended by a great many mothers. The remedy is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and has been on the market for two generations. It can be bought conveniently at any drug store for fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, and those who are already convinced of its merits buy the dollar size.

Its mildness makes it the ideal medicine for children, and it is also very pleasant to the taste. It is sure in its effect and genuinely harmless. Very little of it is required and its frequent use does not cause it to lose its effect, as is the case with so many other remedies.

Thousands can testify to its merits in constipation, indigestion, biliousness, sick headaches, etc., among them reliable people like Mrs. M. Johnson, 752 Dayton St., Kenosha, Wis. She is the mother of little Dorothy Johnson, who was always in delicate health until her mother gave her Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mrs. Johnson says: "I never saw such rapid improvement in the health of anyone. Syrup Pepsin is a wonderful remedy and I shall never be without it again." Thousands keep Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it from infancy to old age. The users of Syrup Pepsin have learned to avoid cathartics, salts, mineral waters, pills and other harsh remedies, for they do but temporary good and are a shock to any delicate system.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

KODAK

You never knew a person in your life who didn't enjoy looking at Kodak pictures. And why Kodak pictures more than any other kind? Simply because of the personal interest attached to them. Because you, or some of your friends, actually made them. Because there is movement, life, interest in a snap-shot. Half the fun of a picnic, outing, vacation is lost if you don't take Kodak pictures. Every day, every season, every pleasure lends itself to Kodaking. There is no trouble. They're easy to take. A mere child can operate a Kodak successfully. The price—well, it surely won't worry you when you can get a perfectly practical Brownie Camera from $1 to $12, and the higher priced Kodaks, $5 to $65 (depending on the lens equipment). Send for a catalog or come in and see them. But whatever you do, get busy and get a Kodak right now. Find out what real summer enjoyment means. Send us a trial roll of films for the best finishing that can be produced. Big stock fresh films and supplies.

"DON'T WORRY OVER PITCHING STAFF"--SMITH

By Percy H. Whiting.

"WE'LL go flying when our pitchers get right." So said Bill Smith before Monday's game. "Nobody need think we're scared. I never saw a team playing better ball and losing in my life than the Crackers did on their trip. And they never lost their nerve. If the pitchers come through we'll win in a walk. And you needn't worry. They're coming."

One of the pitchers came through Monday and it was plain sailing for the Crackers.

* * *

THE Crackers have the best infield and outfield combination that the Southern League ever saw. That's positively official. There's nothing else in the world to it.

Bailey, Welchonce and Long form the best outfield ever seen in the Southern League.

Agler, Alperman, Bisland and Smith constitute an infield the like of which was never seen before in Dixie.

The catching staff will do as it stands to-day, and if it doesn't continue standing right Bill Smith will kick it overboard and load up with some men who can deliver. That's official too and right from Bill Smith.

The pitchers are Smith's only trouble.

"At that they look pretty good," says Billy. "This Gilbert Price is a positive marvel. I never in all my days saw a hurler with more stuff. He seems to weaken sometimes at the end of a game. I don't know whether he gets overconfident or weakens physically. If he gets to lasting all the way they couldn't beat him in fifty years.

"Bill Chappelle showed us a good game his last out and will win for us I think. Brady's work is perfectly satisfactory. If this Dent goes all right I'll take my chances."

* * *

AS for Paul Musser, he showed that he was there with everything in the catalogue yesterday. He allowed five hits, one a scratch home run. If Tommy Long hadn't misjudged this ball badly only one run would have been made off Musser. His control was vastly better than usual and he looked a great pitcher.

As for the Crackers—they played the ball they have been playing almost all the season. They got to Pitcher Kissinger of the Turtle team only twice but it was enough.

In the fourth Bisland put across a clean home run that won the game. After that time the locals made but one hit. But they did not need even that one.

* * *

THE new man, Bisland, looked like a legacy from your rich uncle. Besides hitting the homer that won the game he fielded neatly and he looks so much like a big league ball player you couldn't detect him from the real thing in the broad daylight.

Wally Smith kept right on looking like the wonder of the league. And Whitey Alperman surely had a big day. In the eighth he actually flew after Ward's liner and in the ninth he nipped what might have been a rally by grabbing down Abstein's awful poke.

* * *

THE game was played in one hour and forty-six minutes, which is amazingly fast considering how other contests of the year have lagged. Umpires Bill Hart and Dan Pfenninger seemed to have developed some pepper in their old age and kept things hustling. That the good work will be continued is the earnest hope of the fans. Draggy baseball games don't please anybody.

Cobb Not Greatest Ball Player

"Keeler Superior to Ty"--Sullivan

By Ted Sullivan

THE return of Cobb to the Detroit club and its continued clump since he began to wear the team's uniform has served one object lesson to the American public, and that is that no one player, no matter how great or skillful, can win games alone. It takes nine men to win ball in any fast league. It has been the case in the past, and it will be ever thus in the future. A pitcher of Walsh or Johnson's caliber may figure conspicuously in the winning of a game, but at that they must have fielding and run-getting powers in their teams to make them winners.

But let one thing be impressed on the public mind—players may come and go, but the game will go on forever. Had Cobb not returned to the Detroit team, the continued losings of the club would have been laid to his absence, but it was a great victory and eye-opener both for the Detroit people in all parts of America that he did return, to show the superficial and unsophisticated how little one man figures in the game, and especially an outfielder.

To look at Cobb, or Cobbism, from a dispassionate and impartial standpoint, let us see what Cobb's status is in the game. I grant he has the right to ask for any salary he thinks his services are worth; he realizes that he is a drawing card at home and abroad. He knows the owners of the club look at him from a commercial standpoint, and he views them in the same light. He knows also that there is a time limit to his playing days, and he wants to make the most of it. The home press and the unsophisticated press throughout the United States have been burning incense to his greatness and telling him that he is the one ball player in the history of the game, which he never was. But as Detroit made him a drawing card, in their slopology, he had a right to make them pay for it. Which he has.

Infielder More Important.

Let us see where he figures as a ball player, compared with the players of the past and present. He is playing in the outer works of the game—as a fielder, averaging about two fly balls to a game, with plenty of time to think what he will do after catching a fly ball or the grounder that is bounding toward him. No outfielder can be compared with an infielder or a catcher, as their positions are entirely different in the nature of the work they have to perform. An infielder's brain is in perpetual action from the time the pitcher delivers the ball, and he has only a fraction of a second to think, so quick does the machinery of the infield work.

Cobb is the best run getter in the profession to-day. Run getting is the combination of hitting and base running. Base running has ever been the spectacular part of a ball player's work, with all other things nearly equal. To say Cobb was the greatest ball player in the history of the game would be like telling a man who saw the Mississippi River that the Illinois River was the longest and largest in the United States, or to tell a person who saw the summit of Pike's Peak that the range of the Allegheny was higher.

I suppose it will be the same in the next generation of ball players. They will be as skeptical of the baseball prowess of Cobb, Wagner and Lajoie, as the present ones are of the greatness of Mike Kelly, Ewing and Williamson. As a fielder and thrower Cobb could not stand comparison with Fogarty, Curt Welsh, Bill Lange, and a few others of the past and he is not to-day the superior as a fielder and thrower of Graney of Cleveland and Moeller of Washington.

Thinks Keeler Was Better.

There is a little modest man who left the ball field two years ago, namely, William Keeler, who did not wear sleigh bells around a hotel to let people know he was around, but he was the superior of Cobb, as versatile a batter. But to say that Cobb was the equal of the three great ball players of the past, namely, Ewing, Williamson, and Mike Kelly, would be ridiculous.

Williamson was a third baseman and a shortstop. He was one of the greatest base runners in the history of the game. Besides being one of the greatest infielders that ever lived, he was also a catcher and a pitcher. Buck Ewing was undoubtedly the greatest throwing, hitting and base running catcher of them all. But to compare Cobb, the outfielder, to the immortal Kelly, who was the craftiest base runner of all times, besides being one of the best batters and catchers that ever lived, would be like comparing a 2:40 horse to a 2:10 one.

To use a hyperbole, it could be said that Mike Kelly behind the bat and on the bases in the crucial contest of a game sweat more baseball cells into the rim of his cap than some players of to-day have in their skulls.

If Ty Cobb is guilty of the alleged prima-donna breaks in wanting extra hotels and extra rooms from other players and practicing when he wants to—no one is to blame but the Detroit management themselves. They have petted and coddled him as much as an indulgent mother does to a child she has spoiled.

DIABETES NO LONGER FEARED

S. S. S. Quickly Puts Vim and Energy Into You.

There is no need to feel any alarm over the symptoms of diabetes. This disease is apt to be purely a digestive trouble, and for this reason the liver is held largely responsible. The liver is the largest organ of the body, and is not only a mass of threadlike blood vessels, but throughout its entire fabric is intimately associated with the digestive system.

The thing to do is to so stimulate the action of this myriad of blood vessels that each cellular part selects its own essential nutriment by healthy and judicious divine discretion. This is accomplished by S. S. S., the most potent, the most active and the most naturally stimulating blood medicine known. You do not need purgatives; do not be alarmed at the presence of sugar nor of so-called sediment.

Just stick to S. S. S. and bear in mind that this celebrated remedy has such a specific stimulating action on the local cells of the liver as to preserve their mutual welfare and give a proper relative assistance, each cell to the other.

Dropsical tendencies are thus overcome, biliousness soon becomes a memory and jaundice, malaria, afflictions of the spleen and glandular swellings will be entirely eliminated. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores and for competent medical advice, free, consult by mail the laboratory of the Swift Specific Company, 157 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—I have decided to give much space in this article to the fast-going Phillies and Dodgers. The Phillies merit considerable analysis. When the Giants played them recently, I never saw a Philadelphia team playing better, and, as there has always been plenty of feeling between the two clubs, they were very glad to clean up on New York as they did. The team is benefiting from much better conditions this season than have existed in Philadelphia for many years, and these are mainly responsible for the marked improvement, as it will be noted that practically the same men are appearing in the batting order that landed the team in the second division last summer. William Locks, the new president of the club, is a practical baseball man, and he is giving Dooin a chance to manage the team without worrying him with a lot of trivialities. The result is that Dooin is getting good baseball out of his men, the best that is in each individual.

Again the Quakers have advanced so far into the season without any of the regulars suffering serious injuries and being out of the game, almost a record for the club. It is not likely the team will go through the race with this rosy record, and an injured regular or two will slow the club up a good deal because Dooin is not well fortified with substitutes.

* * *

THE real strength of the team lies in the excellent pitching staff which is the unexcelled feature of the league at this writing. When either Alexander, Chalmers or Seaton has been working, it has been practically impossible for an opposing club to do any hitting. It is this great pitching which has permitted the Phillies to make the good showing that they have, because they are not a crowd of hard batters themselves. They win their games by small scores, depending on the pitchers and smooth fielding to prevent the other side from rolling up many runs. Now, when this pitching staff begins to wilt under the strain of the race and the heat of the summer, as it is liable to do, the Quakers are going to find a very much harder road to travel. They would have a good chance for the pennant with more sturdy batters. As it is now, they are depending on their twirlers and have not better than an outside opportunity for the championship.

* * *

THE Philadelphia club has been the surprise of the race. In its ante-season performances, it made a very poor showing, being easy for both the Athletics and Washington teams of the American League. From those scores, the Quakers looked like the same old bunch, dead on their feet, as they have always been, but with the opening of the race on their own circuit, they jumped away in good style and are playing fast ball. It is their speed and pitching that have held them up so far.

* * *

"WHERE will Brooklyn stop?" is the question which is stirring the baseball following portion of the populace now.

One of these days the Brooklyn team is going to wake up and discover that it is rated as a great ball club, tremble at the idea and start to lose. The Brooklyn boys should finish in the first division. They have talent at present to warrant such a prediction, but they should not crowd the winner of the pennant in September. That is merely my opinion. Perhaps it is based on the years of mediocre baseball played in Brooklyn and Philadelphia will find it harder traveling when they start away from home and invade the West. Not that they will encounter particularly tough competition in the West, but the handicap of playing away from home diamonds and home crowds is going to be a big one. It will be observed that most of the successes of both these teams have been made at home under the watchful eye of home crowds. The Brooklyn club has set its admirers crazy, and men who have not been able to raise up their voices to root for the home club for years are tearing their throats out regardless now. This all helps a ball club, especially on that floats into a winning streak suddenly, as Brooklyn has. Still the Dodgers may tear through the league as Washington did last year and not let up.

* * *

THE Boston club is the one which is paralyzing the ante-season critics. Nobody could see any good in that team before the race opened, with the possible exception of Stallings, the manager, and James Gaffney, the owner, and yet it is playing ball and becoming the talk of the town in place of the declining Red Sox. Stallings is responsible for it, because he is a manager who builds up a club. Within a year or two the Boston team is going to be one to take into the pennant reckoning I believe. The manager is digging up new material which suits his purposes and developing it. One thing he is looking for and which no other Boston team has possessed for a good many years is speed. His system very closely resembles that followed by McGraw.

So far I have not seen St. Louis in action, but I do not believe its showing to date is its normal stride. It does not strike me that Huggins can maintain anything like a first division pace. His club will not stand it.

* * *

WHEN the Giants were going badly two or three weeks ago and everybody was kicking the ball, McGraw called "Larry" Doyle, the good natured, to him after a game and took up with him the matter of an error he had made which figured largely in the defeat of the Giants.

"Well," replied "Larry," "you've got to hand it to me, boss. I make all my errors when they count."

This answer disarmed McGraw.

* * *

IT must not be thought that I am slighting the American League, but there has been little change during the week in that organization. The Athletics are still piling along with a comfortable lead, and Boston is crashing down through the standing, giving little indication of having even a look-in for the flag. The Washington club is the worst sufferer. Griffith has had some hard luck that has slowed up his team and hurt his chances for the pennant very largely. Foster, who within a year developed into one of the best third basemen in the league, is laid up with typhoid fever and will be out of the game for pretty nearly two months anyway. This destroys the smooth working of the infield, because Laporte is slow.

Johnson, the pitcher, is the wonder of the season. He established his record of fifty-six scoreless innings last week. To my mind, he is not only the greatest in the game to-day, but the greatest in the game has ever produced. He did not make this record against easy teams, but against clubs composed of the hardest hitters in the country. Griffith did not pick any "spots" for him. My hat is off to him.

Easy to Pick All-Star Prep Team

Armistead Would Be Good Captain

By Jim Glover

TO select an all-star baseball team from the prep schools of Atlanta this year is not as difficult as it has been in past seasons. This year there is a star for almost every position who is so much better than his nearest competitor that there is little chance for any disagreement.

Here are the names of the players, the positions that they are given and the schools which they represented the past season.

Name	Position	School
Armistead	catcher (Capt.)	Boys High
Fox	pitcher	Boys High
Weston	pitcher	Tech High
Callahan	pitcher	Marist
Lowery	first base	Marist
Bedell	second base	Tech High
Allen	third base	Marist
Spurlock	shortstop	Boys High
Laird	left field	Tech High
Rennolds	center field	Tech High
Wells	right field	Peacock
J. Parks	utility	Tech High

Sam Armistead, of Boys High, is without a doubt the best backstop in the league this year. He steadies a pitcher, leads the league in batting and seldom allows a man to steal a base. He is made captain of the nine as he knows the game thoroughly.

Fox Leading Pitcher.

The pitching staff is the only problem on the team. Fox has shown up the best this year, but one man is not enough to do the twirling for a team, so another had to be selected; and right here is where the rub comes in. Weston and Callahan are so nearly equal in ability that it is necessary to name both. Callahan is a pitcher of the sensational style, a pitcher who often fans the first nine or ten men who face him and then when his support weakens blows up and loses the game. Weston has pitched in only two games this year but his showing in both contests was fine. Besides his pitching he is the best batting and fielding twirler of them all.

Jim Lowery gets the job at first base without any trouble. He is a steady player and about the only man on the Marist team who has not "spilled the beans" in some game.

Bill Bedell is the right man for second base. He is fast and has swiped more bases this year than any man in the league. He is also a good batter.

Charlie Allen, of Marist, has not played quite up to his usual standard at third base this year, but, nevertheless, his playing and hitting has been good enough to warrant him a place on the all-star team.

Weston and Parks, of Tech High, are also crack third sackers, but Weston is also a pitcher and Parks has been given the utility job.

Spurlock Crack Shortstop.

Spurlock is in a class by himself when it comes to playing shortstop. He has a good head and can hit and field well. He is just what a shortstop should be. Harry Rennolds is the best outfielder in the bunch and is given a place at center. His fielding average for the season is .996 and he is always there with the stick.

Johnny Laird is another good outfielder and is especially good on difficult balls. The other outfield position is given to Wells, of Peacock, although he is a shortstop. He is too good a man to be kept off the team and could play the outfield as well as any of them.

Jim Parks, of Tech High, gets the position of utility man, which is just as important a place as any other one on a team. Parks is a good pitcher, crack infielder and a slugger, one of the best in the league, and he would be a great asset to this team.

GREAT MANAGER IS NOT ALWAYS TEAM BUILDER

By Otto C. Floto.

WHILE viewing with regret the poor showing that such popular men as Chance and Tinker are making this year we often wonder whether there is a distinction between a great manager and a builder of a successful baseball team. There must be something to this contention or else why does it constantly flash across our think pan?

There is no one will deny but that Frank Chance is a great manager; that he can get more out of the same men under his charge than any other one individual out of a hundred that try. Yet he's an absolute failure to date with New York. Why? Because he did not build the team he commands. Scouts were sent abroad to bring home the recruits, and from present observation the scouts failed in their missions. Added to this is the poor luck that has greeted the team for the past four or five years. To play a whole series against all the clubs in the Eastern division of the American League and not win a single game—well, we are at a loss to explain it. Yet that's the record, and that's the verdict that will go down against the Peerless Leader in future discussions.

* * *

MIND, no one expected Chance to make good in a single season, nor in two or three seasons for that matter. But we surely looked for better results than have been brought to date. A lot of wooden Indians, frequently seen as advertisements in front of cigar stores, could have accomplished no less.

It's now up to Chance to demonstrate to us that he can "build" as well as manage. He has proven to us beyond a doubt that the managerial abilities are his—won in actual contest time and time again in the severest kind of battle. With manager, he must show that he is really all his friends have claimed for him. He must weed out the dead and replace them with live and winning material. When he has done this we'll shout bravo!

* * *

CHANCE did not build up the great machine that won four National League and two world's championships. He was part of the machine before it was handed over to him, but the late Frank Selee gathered Tinker, Kling, Schulte, Evers, Hofman and the rest of the bunch that stood so gallantly by the P. L. in all those now historic struggles. Selee had to step down and out owing to poor health, and Chance stepped in and developed the heirlooms that his manager left to him.

True, Chance made some advantageous trades that still further strengthened his machine. But the men traded were all gathered by Selee and proved such alluring bait to the other clubs that the swap which brought Brown, Shekard and others into the Cub fold was comparatively easy. So without taking any credit away from Chance, all he had to do in this instance was to keep the well-organized machine moving. This he did with wonderful results. He succeeded where another man might have failed.

* * *

TAKE Clark Griffith, of the Washington team. He is one of the best managers in the business. Time and time again he has proved this. But we ask, is he a builder? To a certain extent we believe him to be. He surely showed such ability when he organized the Highlanders for their first appearance in the American League. Things, however, were rather easy at that time because the younger league was grabbing all the stars from the National. When he got Chesbro he had pretty nearly a team.

He failed to make much of a show with Cincinnati. (But so do all the others.) In Washington last year as well as this he is doing wonders. But in figuring matters remember that it was Cantillon who got Johnson to come there, and the other half of the team was helped along by Jimmy McAleer. Clark, however, is getting every ounce out of them.

MANDOT 10-TO-8 CHOICE OVER ANDERSON TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, May 20.—The experience and ring generalship of Joe Mandot, the New Orleans lightweight, has caused a flood of money to be offered by his admirers at the eleventh hour, and just twelve hours before he is due to enter the Vernon ring to box Jud Anderson, of Medford, Oreg., the Southern boy is a favorite at odds of 10 to 8.

With their training concluded in the best of shape, both boys are in perfect condition and confident. Mandot feeling sure he will redeem himself, and Anderson certain that he will add another knock-out to his record.

BENEFIT GAME TO RAISE COIN TO BOOST CITY

And for the first time this season the people of Atlanta will be given an opportunity to show that they appreciate what the Ad Men have done for them and what they are planning to do.

"What have they done?" you ask.

Well, for one thing, they have, within the year, raised more than $100,000 for various good causes in Atlanta. The Y. M. C. A., the Chamber of Commerce and goodness knows how many charitable organizations have been helped by money they have raised.

This spring when it appeared that Atlanta was to lose the honor of turning out the largest opening day crowd, the Ad Men's Club whirled in and whooped things up with a result that all Southern League records for all time were fractured.

At every convention of Ad Men's Clubs which they have attended they have whooped up Atlanta in some really spectacular way that has put the Gate City before the delegates in a most favorable light.

"Wht will they do with the money they raise?" you inquire.

They don't want their car fare paid. They are all blowing themselves to that. They don't want it for entertainment or for themselves in any way.

They want it for Atlanta.

The scheme is this. The big feature of the convention will be a night parade. There will be 100 motor truck floats, prepared by national advertisers. There will be bands galore. And every Ad Men's Club represented there will march in uniform in the parade. The local men are going to buy their uniforms—and it will cost them about $35 apiece for this. They need money, however, to buy big, white parasols, on which the word, "Atlanta" will be printed in huge, red letters. They need money also for big electric flash lamps, which will be provided with huge glass globes, on which, in red, will be the words "Atlanta Always Ahead." They need money for a band. In other words they need it to boost Atlanta at Baltimore.

The cause is a worthy one.

The Ad Men do just as much to boost Atlanta as any organization here. They take over all the odd jobs that the Chamber of Commerce is too dignified to handle, and any good boosting organization needs support.

CHARLIE WHITE STOPS THOMAS IN TWO ROUNDS

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Charlie White stopped Joe Thomas in the second round of their 10-round bout last night. The local boy was an easy victim for the Chicago star.

Thomas was knocked down for the count of nine in the first round, after going down two other times, the bell saving him the last time.

At the opening of the second, Thomas appeared to have regained his strength, but a few well directed rights and lefts put him groggy again, and after about one minute of the second round the referee, Dick Burke, raised White's hand and motioned Thomas to his corner.

SHUGRUE AND LORE BOX FAST 12-ROUND DRAW

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, May 20.—Young Shrugrue, of Jersey City, and Johnny Lore, of New York, boxed a fast 12-round draw here last night. Tommy Bresnahan, of Newcastle, Pa., was given a well-earned decision over Louis Deponthieu, of Paris, at the end of a 10-round semi-final.

TOMMY SHEEHAN WINS.

BILLINGS, MONT., May 20.—Tommy Sheehan, of Chicago, won a decision here last night over Roy Coquit, of Cody, Wyo., at the end of a 12-round bout.

Mathewson As Savior of Giants

Keeps Champs in Race--Marquard

By Rube Marquard

(Holder of the World's Record of Nineteen Consecutive Victories.)

SO many startling surprises have developed in the first month of the major league campaigns it is hard to figure out where it will all end.

By the looks of things anything is liable to happen. The "dope" has been upset in so many surprising manners that it seems after all as if there is some "jinx" attached to the magic "13" of this year of grace. However, there are enough beacons shining through the gloom of uncertainty to re-establish faith in ability as opposed to superstition.

We do not have to travel very far just now to find the one real beacon of Giant hope. His name is Christy Mathewson. His work alone is enough to break all the charms of "jinxes" and "hoodoos," for he arises in the thirteenth year of his career as a Giant and a major league performer to a height of perfection that in any other pitcher would be regarded as miraculous. Mathewson has been the great bulwark of the Giant pitching staff so long that the public has come to regard his wonderful brilliancy as a matter of common habit.

To none other than the great master of pitching science may New York contratulate itself upon being as well to the front in the 1913 National League race. So far he has been the only reliable pitching asset of the veteran talent. Matty is confident that this will be his greatest year, and I share the belief with him.

Here is a pitcher who very wisely has conserved every ounce of vitality. By the use of his head he has been able to shine year after year with the very least possible strain to his arm. And I believe that Christy Mathewson will live to as ripe an age of efficiency as did the venerable Cy Young. To-day Mathewson is better than he has ever been before.

Illness Sets "Rube" Back.

Mathewson has had to shoulder the great bulk of the pitching responsibility so far this season, but I think there will be plenty of help for him from now on. My chief regret for Mathewson, McGraw and all my fellow players has been that I am not capable of doing my share toward making it three pennants in a row. I offer no excuses, for I know in my heart that very soon I will be back into my proper stride. I was just hitting my pace when an attack of tonsilitis set me back.

By the time I am on my feet once more—and that will not be very long, I can tell you—the Giants should be as well provided with pitching material as any club could desire. I know from the condition in which the men returned from Texas that a week or two of summer weather would put all our pitchers in first-class shape.

Our club is not the only one that has suffered in this respect. Pitching, as a general rule, has been very unsatisfactory so far in both leagues. With very few exceptions—principally Mathewson, Johnson and Plank—pitchers usually the most reliable have been most unsteady. By every law of precedent this condition should not obtain when the veteran pitchers finally round into shape.

Having seen all our rivals but St. Louis, I am more convinced than ever that the Giants should win the pennant. It will not be the runaway that most of our supporters presumed before the start. It will mean a good, steady fight through the whole course, a condition that should make the current season a most memorable one.

League Strength in East.

The strength of the National League, as evidenced in the first month's play, centered in the East, just as it does in the American. Philadelphia and Brooklyn, rather than Pittsburg and Chicago, seem bent upon most forcibly debating the championship with the Giants.

With Hans Wagner back in the game the Pirates are almost bound to greatly improve their standing. Fred Clarke's pitchers have been woefully off color all along, and this condition has resulted in a very severe handicap for his team. Pittsburg will undoubtedly get back among the leaders, but has so much ground to make up that it can not now be seriously regarded as a challenger of the Giants.

Chicago has a very good looking club outside its pitchers, but is so weak in box material that it can not hope, under present conditions, to cope with any one of the three strongest Eastern clubs.

Cincinnati is in the same boat as Chicago. The Indian, Johnston, has been Tinker's only reliable pitcher so far. Yet there is fair strength in the Reds' staff if the men ever get to working properly. Chicago can not muster as much twirling strength as Cincinnati, though Evers' team in all other respects is superior.

A very pleasing circumstance to the Giants is the manner in which George Stallings has resurrected the Boston Braves. Out of practically nothing he has shaped a collection capable of giving the best a very stiff argument. This will prove of great help to the Giants, no doubt, as Boston will be able to stop New York's rivals once in a while. Heretofore Boston always managed somehow to make things interesting enough for New York, but never did a great deal against Pittsburg and Chicago.

Giants in Lead Soon.

I think that inside of a very short time the Giants will step out into the lead, and once there our club will never be dislodged. It is a fact that we have not played the game of which we are capable. The fault did not lie wholly in poor pitching, either. We have lost many games because we did not get the most out of our hitting ability and speed.

I suppose we looked too lightly upon the other teams. But if so we have learned a good lesson, for every Giant player will try his very best from now until the season is over. Over-confidence is blamed for the loss of a pennant to the Athletics last year. It will not be our sad lot this season. McGraw is a man who will not stand for trifling.

SPORT.

When Nero lived in ancient days
Men had their sport in brutal ways.
They sat around on cushioned seats
And loudly cheered the bloody feats
Performed by large and lowbrowed gents
Who earned their bread by putting dents
And fractures in another's dome
To please the populace of Rome
To-day we all would take offense
(We men of high intelligence)
To see a pair of fellows wield
A butcher's cleaver and a shield,
And clout each other on the dome
As in the days of ancient Rome.
We love a nobler form of sport,
A milder and a gentler sort,
And so we pay our hard earned seads
To see a lot of healthy lads
Who race on motorcycle tracks
And break their arms and legs and backs,
Who travel at a fearful rate
And finish in a scrambled state.
And if, perchance, they do not die
We heave a disappointed sigh.
"Ah, yes!" we say while riding home,
"What brutes there were in ancient Rome!"

One Jeff O'Connell wishes to state that the climate of Racine, Wis., is too densely populated with boxing gloves to be healthful.

Still, Mr. O'Connell made a deep impression in Racine. In fact, he made five separate and distinct impressions in the floor.

Nick Altrock, comedian, wants to pitch, whereas some of our Cracker pitchers pitch as if they were trying to be comedians.

From this distance it is hard to tell whether O. Overall is coming back or going back.

Willie Ritchie avers that he will engage in mortal conflict for the small sum of $17,500, demonstrating that there are various ways to obtain money under false pretenses.

Hugh Jennings is said to be on the verge of nervous breakdown, due to a severe case of Ty Cobb, aided and abetted by a losing streak.

Abstinence Will Bring Success

Shun Tobacco, Says Frank Chance

By Frank L. Chance

This is my sixteenth year in major league baseball. For fifteen of those years I was connected with the Chicago club. In that time I have served at practically everything, from all-round utility man to manager.

And, incidentally, I believe that I have about sized up the situation in regard to ball players. In the first place, it is essential that tobacco and drink be left alone. If drink is tabooed it naturally follows that late hours also will be tabooed. It is necessary for a youngster aspiring to succeed in baseball to see to it that his constitution is made strong and that he does nothing to interfere with his physical development.

I have come to the conclusion that a man is not fully developed until he has reached 30 years of age. Possibly after that the moderate use of tobacco will not do him any great injury.

So much for my advice to youngsters who aspire to make baseball a profession.

"My advent into baseball was probably as inauspicious as an event of such a nature could possibly be. There were no brass bands to meet me at the station, and, as I remember, the newspapers of Chicago devoted a short paragraph—maybe it was only a sentence—to the fact that the Chicago team had signed a young catcher.

But I am getting a bit ahead of the story. In 1894-95 I played ball on the Washington College (California) team. With me was a young fellow, also a student at the college, named "Rod" Wagner. During the summer months he was manager or had something to do with a town team at Sullivan, Ill. He asked me how I would like to play ball there. He told me I could get $40 a month and my board and lodging.

At that time I was only 16, and $10 a week sounded pretty good to me, so I accepted. The club didn't make any money and I was "done" out of my pay.

I returned to college in 1897 and took part in a big amateur baseball tournament held in California for youths under 18 years of age. Some of the fellows who entered it of course cheated, but that has nothing to do with my case.

"Cal" McVey, who one time was a member of the Cincinnati team, saw me play and recommended me to "Cap" Anson, who was then manager of the Chicago club. Anson refused to give me a trial. That was either in the spring or early summer of 1897. In the autumn of the same year McVey wrote to "Jim" Hart, who had succeeded Anson, and Hart sent for me.

I was signed as an extra catcher, but after I had been in Chicago for a while it seemed to me as if I had been signed as a sort of make-yourself-useful around the ball park. Any little odd jobs that were to be done and there wasn't anybody else handy to do them I was ordered to pitch in.

If the bat boys didn't show up, I had to look after the bats. If there was no one else to carry the bats from the "bus" into the ball park, or from the ball park to the "bus," I did it. If Hart or some of the veteran players on the club forgot anything, such as gloves and the like, I was sent after them. Even some of the "bushers" who were just breaking in pretty much the same as I was, but who happened to be my seniors by a couple of years, employed me as errand boy for them.

But I stood it. I was in the big show and I was determined to make good. I realized that the best way to make good was to stick around as long as they would let me and watch the cavortings of those who knew. I did, and eventually my time came. And I guess I must have made good.

The club was in need of a first baseman, and I was delegated to cover the bag.

It was in 1906 that I was made manager of the Cubs, after nine years of service. Of course, the rest is what might be called modern history and there is no use rehashing that.

SMITH 10-TO-8 FAVORITE OVER JESS WILLARD

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—In James W. Coffroth's Eighth Avenue arena to-night a couple of huskies will have designs on the world's championship. They are heavyweights and their names are Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith.

Did they belong in any other class there would be haggling and maybe claiming of forfeit if one man scaled a few ounces over a stipulated notch. As it is, Willard will have fifty pounds the better of the poundage and Smith will have no redress, for the laws of the ring, so far as they bear upon avoirdupois, do not hold "north of '58." Smith has been made favorite, the price this morning being 10 to 8. This is in pursuance of San Francisco's policy of pinning its faith to the man it knows when a local fighter and a stranger become embroiled.

Just what the odds would be if the heavies met in the East is not known, but it is doubtful if Smith would be installed first choice. The Gunner's best performance there was his victory over Bombardier Wells, and Willard outboxed Luther McCarty, who beat Al Palzer, who beat Bombardier Wells.

Both Willard and Smith are well thought of around New York and are regarded as fit candidates for the world's championship. Willard lacks the experience of Smith, and this is one reason of the San Francisco fight followers' liking for Smith. Gunboat's vaunted knockout punch is another. It may be that Willard also possesses a knockout punch, but San Francisco has no knowledge of the fact. He certainly has not been advertised in that direction to the same extent as Smith.

FODDER FOR FANS

C. Webb Murphy, disgusted with the weakness of his pitching staff, sent eight scouts to different parts of the country yesterday with orders to gather in some pitchers.

* * *

The Reds defeated the Braves yesterday in a ten-inning battle that was characterized by considerable slugging and many errors.

* * *

The wonderful showing made this season by the Phillies has necessitated the building of six additional ticket booths to facilitate the handling of the crowds.

* * *

And perhaps Horace Fogel, who used to own the Phillies, isn't experiencing a seasick feeling when he notes that the daily attendance figures at the Phillies' grounds is double and treble what they were last year.

* * *

The Dodgers again beat the Cardinals, but failed to move into first place because the Phillies had an easy time defeating the Cubs.

* * *

"Smoky Joe" Wood seems to be back in form again. He held the White Sox to one run yesterday, while his own club piled up ten.

* * *

Ty Cobb's three hits out of three times up were big factors in the defeat of the Athletics by the Tigers.

* * *

Eddie Collins, who is near the top of the American League batting column, harvested four hits out of four times up yesterday.

* * *

"Jake" Daubert, the Dodgers' first sacker, continues to slug the ball. He made a single and a triple yesterday.

* * *

Falkenberg, the elongated "comeback" twirler for the Naps, added another victory to his string yesterday, making eight in a row.

* * *

With the bases full in the eighth inning, Manager Chance up for the second time in that inning, batted out of turn, singled and scored the two runs that won the game for the Yankees from the Browns. When the Browns protested the trick it was too late to be availing.

* * *

The most thrilling game staged on the Polo grounds for a long time was that of yesterday, which the Giants won in the fourteenth 3 to 2. Time and again the pitchers for both the Giants and the Pirates were in "holes," but wonderful fielding pulled them out. The Pirates used fourteen and the Giants eighteen players.

* * *

"Heinie" Zimmerman and Manager Evers, of the Cubs, had a wordy battle on the field yesterday which may result in Evers suspending the third sacker, who, it is said, objects to playing under Evers.

* * *

Evers, by the way, may soon hear other highly uncomplimentary things about his future. President Murphy is on his way to Boston for a confab with his manager, and it is not likely that C. Webb will wax enthusiastic over the miserable showing the Cubs have made so far in the East.

GEORGIA TACKLE DIES FROM TYPHOID FEVER

ATHENS, GA., May 20.—William Luther Arnett, of Odessa, a member of the junior law class of the University of Georgia, died after an illness of four days here this morning from typhoid fever. His body was carried to his home this afternoon, the law class following the casket in a body. He was 26 years old, and in the final games of football last fall he was a star tackle. He was one of the best men physically, mentally and morally in the University.

VOLS BUY NICHOLSON; MAY GET OUTFIELD BERTH

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 20.—President Hirsig announced yesterday the purchase from Louisville of Outfielder Ovid Nicholson, formerly of the Blue Grass League, where he established a great record for stolen bases. He was secured by Louisville from Pittsburg, who drafted him from the Blue Grass. Nicholson will probably replace Daley in the Vols' outfield.

HANLON IN DRAW BOUT.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Eddie Hanlon and Lew Diamond fought a 10-round draw here last night.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Sammy Harris, manager of Kid Williams, is still hounding Johnny Coulon, the bantamweight champion, for a match. Harris says he is willing to give Coulon a guarantee of $3,000 to fight Williams in a 15 or 20 round bout on July 4.

* * *

Jimmy Hurst, who handles the reins over "Wildcat" Ferns, writes from Kansas City that he has his protege matched to box "Patty" McIntyre, Canadian welterweight champion, 10 rounds at Winnipeg, Manitoba, June 7. Ferns will also meet Anton La Grave, at Taft, Cal., July 4, for a 20-round fight.

* * *

Tommy Walsh, Mandot's hustling manager, abused his typewriter long enough to let us know that the French baker boy is in great trim for his 20-round engagement with Bud Anderson on the coast Tuesday night.

* * *

If victor over Anderson, Walsh says he has two big fights planned for the Southerner. Tommy expects to send Joe against Rivers on July 4, and Willie Ritchie on Labor Day.

* * *

Leach Cross vs. Tommy Marto and Ray Bronson vs. Phil Cross, is the card arranged for the McMahon brothers for their club in New York next Wednesday night.

* * *

Because Johnny Coulon demanded his traveling expenses from Chicago to Boston the officials of the Atlas A. A., of Boston, have declared off the 12-round bout between Coulon and Charley Goldman scheduled to take place May 28. In place of this bout Matty Baldwin and Dick Gallant will battle.

* * *

Frank Mantell and Larry English will clash in a 10-round set-to at New York Tuesday night. They are middleweights, having agreed to make 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

* * *

Pittsburg fans are looking for Frank Klaus to win both his battles this month with Eddie McGoorty and Jack Dillon. The Pittsburg boy will surely have his hands full coming out a winner, as both his opponents are running him a close race for the title.

CROUSE STOPS M'CLOSKEY.

PITTSBURG, May 20.—"Blink" McCloskey, of Philadelphia, was knocked out in the fourth round of his bout last night with "Buck" Crouse, of Pittsburg.

DUFFY DEFEATS O'BRIEN.

PHILADELPHIA, May 20.—Young Jack O'Brien made his reappearance in the ring last night and was defeated by Jimmy Duffy in six rounds.

CHAPTER II.

SEATED in a chair, with his feet resting on the edge of a small stove in the center of the room, was a short, keen-eyed man in his thirties, reading a copy of Sporting Life. He turned his head as the door opened and swept his eye over the dripping figure that stood, tall and erect, just within the doorway. Pools of water formed on the floor under the stranger and they came together in a rivulet, which crept snake-like along the planking until it found a friendly crack.

"I am looking for Mr. Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta Baseball Club," said the young man.

"I am Bill Smith," replied the man in the chair. "What can I do for you?"

"I want to play ball on your team."

Long experience in managing pennant-winning ball teams (and some that were not pennant-winners) had taught Bill Smith many valuable baseball lessons. One of these was never to pass snap judgment on a ball player; another was never to take a ball player's estimate of his own ability. Nineteen managers out of twenty would have taken just one glance at the bedraggled figure in the doorway and dismissed it with a curt "nothing doing." That was not Bill Smith's way. And his method of handling this particular applicant for a position on his team led to the most surprising series of sensations that ever happened in the history of the national game.

"You look somewhat moist," observed the manager. "Take off your clothes and dry them at this stove. "Whisky!" he suddenly yelled. "That isn't an invitation to take a drink," he added; "I am only calling my attendant."

Smith Surprised.

In response to the summons a colored man entered the room briskly.

"Yassir, yassir," replied Whisky, getting busy at once. Many seasons spent in attending to the wants of impatient ball players in that club house had developed an activity in Whisky far beyond the trend of his race. In a jiffy he had every stitch of the young man's clothes off him. Then he brought towels and began to administer a 'horough rubdown.

Familiar as he was with all stages of dress and undress, Bill Smith could not repress an exclamation of admiration for the wonderful specimen of young manhood that stood before him, arms outstretched, while the attendant vigorously applied the towel. The manager cast aside his "Sporting Life" and walked completely around the young man, sizing him up from tip to toe. Six feet two inches, perhaps a trifle under that, he appeared to be. Smith guessed his weight to be a good 200 pounds, with not more than five pounds to come off. A well-shaped head and neck were set on a pair of broad shoulders not too square. Even as the stranger's body swayed and his arms moved slightly under the manipulations of the skillful rubber, Smith could see the back muscles ripple. Clean-limbed he was all the way down, waist somewhat tapering, small, but strong-looking hips and legs like a quarter-mile runner. His skin was as fair, almost, as a woman's.

The manager grabbed his chair, turned it around to face the stranger, and sat down in it.

"What's your name," he asked.

"Gordon Kelly."

"Sounds like a good combination. Gordon was a great Georgia soldier and Kelly was a great baseball general. How old are you?"

"Twenty-one next month."

Never Saw a Game.

"What club did you play with last?"

"Never played on any club."

"What?"

"Never saw a ball game in my life."

Whisky promptly ceased rubbing, threw down the towel and moved off with an expression of disgust on his face.

"Pick up that towel and finish your job, Whisky. We're not through with this young man yet," remarked Bill Smith.

"Dis ain't no ball player, boss. Dishyere is jest a common, ordinary white man," expostulated the attendant.

"You never can tell, Whisky; you never can tell," replied Bill Smith, letting fall a philosophic remark that had not a little to do with his success as a manager of ball players.

Whisky took up the towel and started in again, but it was plainly to be seen his heart was not in his work. Whisky lived, moved and breathed in the atmosphere of baseball. Ball players were as food and drink to him. A syndicate of John L. Sullivans, Frank Gotches, Eugene Sandows and Percy Herculeses would have created but a sorry impression on Whisky if it couldn't play ball.

"All right, Whisky, that's enough," declared the manager. "Now, hten, bring me a uniform pants and shirt. That's the stuff. Crawl into these, Mr. Kelly, and draw up a chair and toast your shins in front of this fire while your clothes are drying out. Have a cigar?"

"I never smoke."

"Have a chew?"

"I never use it."

"I should say you didn't by the looks of those molars. Have a drink?"

"I never drink."

"Well, you couldn't get it here if you wanted it. Now, tell me, what put it into your head that you wanted to play ball?"

A Cobb or a Speaker.

"I'll tell you, Mr. Smith," replied Kelly, with a smile of engaging frankness that displayed his fine teeth. "I read in the newspapers about Ty Cobb getting $10,000 a year and holding out for $15,000. It looked good to me."

"Is that all?"

"Not quite. I came from the Georgia mountain country, Mr. Smith. I have never been in a city before. The first time I ever rode in a street car was this morning. But, I know all about baseball, although I have never even seen a ball game."

Whisky waited to hear no more. With a look of immeasurable superiority on his black face, he turned and left the club house. Gordon Kelly continued:

"Now, all this may sound strange to you, Mr. Smith, but I am just as confident that I can soon become a good ball player as I am that you will continue to win baseball pennants."

Bill Smith laughed.

"That seems to put it up to me," he said. "You've got the instincts of a ball player all right. They always put it up to the manager, especially the pitchers. You must want to be a pitcher."

"No, sir; I want to be an outfielder."

"A Ty Cobb, eh?"

"A Ty Cobb, or a Tris Speaker, or better."

Bill Smith grinned. Ever since he broke into the game he had been pestered, off and on, by all sorts of baseball "bugs," but this was about the worst case he ever experienced. Here was a young man who confessed he never saw a game of ball, yet was positive he had the makings in him of a player that would surpass two of the greatest diamond stars the game ever produced. The idea was as absurd as if a street sweeper came in and said that while he didn't know anything about the oil business, he was sure he could make more money in it than John D. Rockefeller. The whole thing was so ridiculous it was really funny. Bill Smith's grin broke into a hearty laugh. But Gordon Kelly didn't laugh. He was never more serious in his life. The manager noticed the expression on the young man's face and his laughter ceased.

A High Standard.

"Better than a Cobb or Speaker, eh? Well, I don't mind saying, Mr. Kelly, you have set a pretty high standard for yourself. Now, then, what do you want me to do, sign you up at Ty Cobb's salary?"

Gordon Kelly shifted his chair so that he faced the manager.

"Nothing like that, Mr. Smith," he said soberly. "Here's my proposition: The Southern League championship season opens on April 10, about six weeks from now. What I want you to do is this: Give me permission to practice here with you and your players until the season opens. If by that time I haven't demonstrated my worth to you as a ball player, just say so, and we will part the best of friends as far as I am concerned. If, on the other hand, I do demonstrate to you that I am entitled to a place on your team, I will ask that you sign me up at whatever salary you care to pay me. There's nothing unfair, or unreasonable in that, is there?"

Bill Smith took three or four puffs of his cigar before replying to this direct question. What sort of person was he dealing with, he wondered. Was this young man simply an extraordinary baseball "bug," or was he mentally unbalanced? Was he baseball crazy, or crazy in the real sense of the word? If he simply had the baseball craze, there was nothing astonishing about that and Bill Smith figured he would have no trouble in handling the case. He had handled many of them successfully in his time. But the other kind of insanity was a little out of his line, and required not a baseball exuert, but an allenist.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

What Caraway Seeds Did

"NO, I thank you," said the man from Michigan. "Not any thanks. I never eat cake or candy."

"How strange!" murmured the innocent young woman.

"Listen," said the man from Michigan, "and I will tell you the whole sad story. Once I was very fond of cake, and perhaps I would now be if I were not for fear"—here the Michigander looked fearfully over his shoulder—"of caraway seed."

"I can not stand caraway seed. That's why I eat neither candy nor cake, and almost no bread. It is a great hardship."

"But there are some kinds of cake and candy that do not contain caraway seed," objected the innocent young woman.

"No. I used to think there were. Once or twice I thought I had discovered a kind that was free from caraway seed, but it always turned out to have some caraway seed in it.

"I once hired a special baker to bake cake and bread for me without caraway seed in it. I was happy for a while. Then all of a sudden I hit full force into a caraway seed in the midst of my cake. It was a pink cake with gothic ornaments such as I delighted in. It was a cruel shock.

"I flew down the street to the dentist's to get him to give me something for the pain in my tooth, and after he had administered cocaine plentifully I went after the baker. He tried to explain that the boy was responsible for the caraway seed and that it was all an accident, but I chased that baker over the counter and under the counter until I had him.

"Nevertheless, people have put caraway seeds over on me many times since. Sometimes I analyze a piece of cake when I am especially hungry for it, exploring the last crumb. When I am reassured and thrown off my guard I bite into a sixty horsepower caraway seed that makes my hair stand on end.

"There is no help for it. Caraway seed is a universal affliction."

Do You Wonder

That Cupid Is Such an Adorable Rogue When His Mother Was Such a Lovely Trouble Maker?

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

LOVELY he is—adorable, a plotter, irresistible, a knave, sweet as an almond-blossom, a dabbler in trouble, soft-hearted, cruel, "Love" his business, a promiser, offering bitter-sweet, unutterably a darling, unchangeably a rascal! And everybody—('specially those who have been stirred 'round in one of his concoctions which he calls "an affair")—everybody ('specially those who know he is both an almond blossom and a rascal—and yet love him)—everybody wonders why he is all this! Maybe you do not think of his mother when you wonder that. How could he help but be lovable, a rascal, and a contradiction? For his mother he had a creature, herself born of the sea, the sea which is tender and terrible, smiling and stormy, and all mystery—Venus—goddess of beauty, lover of laughter and love and light, herself a rogue and a saint! Playing all day long under the sun and sky of dream-fostering Greece, in the white-circle of her arms, strained to her breast, teased with a rose in her idle hand, looking often into the hot blue of her eyes, hearing her laughter, comrade in her mischief—son of a Beauty—a devotee of Love—a sweet Rogue—how could he be other than what he is!

The forger smiled, and there was malignant triumph in his expression.

"Pooh!" he exclaimed. "Even if I used it, they would never get on to me. See this?" He pointed at the strange contrivance on the muzzle.

"What is it?" she asked, interestedly. "I have never seen anything like that before."

"Of course, you haven't," Garson answered with much pride. "I'm the first man in the business to get one, and I'll bet on it. I keep up with the times." For once, he was revealing that fundamental egotism which is the characteristic of all his kind. "That's one of the new Maxim silencers," he continued. "With smokeless powder in the cartridges, and the silencers on, I can make a shot from my coat-pocket, and you wouldn't even know it had been done. * * * And I'm some shot, believe me."

"Impossible!" Mary ejaculated.

"Good gracious, not here!" Mary exclaimed in alarm. "We would have the whole place down on us."

Garson chuckled.

"You just watch the dinky little vase on the table across the room there. 'Tain't very valuable, is it?"

"No," Mary whispered.

A Spectacular Shot.

In the same instant, while still her eyes were on the vase, it fell in a cascade of shivered glass to the table and floor. She had heard no sound; she saw no smoke. Perhaps there had been a faintest clicking noise. She was not sure. She stared dumfounded for a few seconds, then turned her bewildered face toward Garson, who was grinning in high enjoyment.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," she declared, vastly impressed.

"Neat little thing, ain't it?" the man asked, exultantly.

"Where did you get it?" Mary asked.

"In Boston, last week. And between you and me, Mary, it's the only model, and it sure is a corker for crime."

The sinister association of ideas made Mary shudder, but she said no more. She would have shuddered again if she could have guessed the vital part that pistol was destined to play, but she had no thought of any actual peril to come from it. She might have thought, otherwise, could she have known of the meeting that night in the back room of Blinkey's, where English Eddie and Garson sat with their heads close together over a table.

"A chance like this," Griggs was saying, "a chance that will make a fortune for all of us."

"It sounds good," Garson admitted wistfully.

"It is good," the other declared with an oath. "Why, if this goes through, we're set up for life. We can quit, all of us."

"Yes," Garson agreed, "we can quit, all of us." There was avarice in his voice.

The tempter was sure that the battle was won, and smiled contentedly.

"Well," he urged, "what do you say?"

"How would we split it?" It was plain that Garson had given over the struggle against greed. After all, Mary was only a woman, despite her cleverness, and with all a woman's timidity. Here was sport for men.

"Three ways would be right," Griggs answered. "One to me, one to you and one to be divided up among the others."

Garson brought his fist down on the table with a force that made the glasses jingle.

"You're on," he said, strongly.

"Fine!" Griggs declared, and the two men shook hands. "Now, I'll get——"

"Get nothing!" Garson interrupted. "I'll get my own men. Chicago Red is in town. So is Dacey, with perhaps a couple of others of the right sort. I'll get them to meet you at Blinkey's at 2 to-morrow afternoon, and, if it looks right, we'll turn the trick to-morrow night."

"That's the stuff," Griggs agreed, greatly pleased.

But a sudden shadow fell on the face of Garson. He bent closer to his companion, and spoke with a fierce intensity that brooked no denial.

"She must never know."

Griggs nodded understandingly.

"Of course," he answered. "I give you my word that I'll never tell her. And you know you can trust me, Joe."

"Yes," the forger replied somberly, "I know I can trust you." But the shadow did not lift from his face.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Wedding Announcement.

Mary dismissed Garson presently and betook herself to her bedroom for a nap. The day had been a trying one, and, though her superb health could endure much, she felt that both prudence and comfort required that she should recruit her energies while there was opportunity.

She was not in the least surprised that Dick had not yet returned, though he had mentioned half an hour. At the best, there were many things that might detain him, his father's absence from the office, difficulties in making arrangements for his projected honeymoon trip abroad—which would never occur—or the like. At the worst, there was a chance of finding his father promptly, and of that father as promptly taking steps to prevent the son from ever again seeing the woman who had so indiscreetly married him.

Yet, somehow, Mary could not believe that her husband would yield to such paternal coercion. Rather, she was sure that he would prove loyal to her whom he loved, through every trouble. At the thought a certain wistfulness pervaded her, and a poignant regret that this particular man should have been the one chosen of fate to be entangled within her mesh of revenge.

He Has a Fight With a Scotch Kid and Comes Out a Victor After a Hard "Scrap."

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

I HAD a fite with a Scotch kid yesterday. It was a close fite; the Scotch kid came close to gitting killed beefoar I felt sorry for him. I got a black eye & that was all.

I doant like fites, & I nevver have a fite until I am forced into it, but this Scotch kid was too fresh. He caim to our house with his father. His father was a Scotch Highlander wich had fought all thru the Boer war & dident git hurted. He was jest like his littel boy. His naim was Duglas McNabb & the naim of the kid was Sandy McNabb.

We went out into the yard to play catch & Sandy wasent a good player at all. He had on kilts; he sed that his mother always asked him to wear kilts, but he sed he was glad of it beekaus he was a true Scotchman & wasent ashamed of it. The Scotch are a undefeated race, he toald me, & these kilts stands for currage & fiteing qualities.

The Irish is pritty good fiters, too, I sed. My father is Scotch, but my mother is half Scotch & half Irish, & I am proud of the Irish blood that is in me.

But the Irish aint a undefeated race, sed Sandy. Maybe thay have been defeated, I sed, but thay nevver knew it if thay was. Why doant you catch the ball onst in a while, butter fingers? I sed to him.

Golf Was His Pie.

I dinna care much for this sorry kind of a gaim, he sed to me. Golf, that is a braw gaim. I doant think much of gold, I toald Sandy. Golf is a high-toned cousin of shinney. Baseball is the gratest gaim in the wurld. It taiks brains to play baseball.

It can't taik much brains to play baseball or the Scotch wud be playin it, sed Sandy McNabb. The Scotch are all brains. Look at Eobbie Burns, he sed. That man knew everything. Shakespeer knew a lot, too, I sed. He knew a littel, sed Sandy, but not as much as Bobbie Burns. Bobbie Burns knew moar than my own father knows, he sed.

Tom Moore was Irish, I sed, & he rote pritty potrey, too. Why doant you catch that ball?

I dinna cair to play moar the noo, sed Sandy. It hurts my fingers muckle, he sed. So we quit, but Sandy dident stop talking.

Bobbie Burns was a all around geenyus, he sed. My father says I am going to look like him wen I grow up & rite potrey, too, to keep up the naim of the undefeated race.

How It Started.

Maybe you will rite potrey, sed I to Sandy, but you will nevver look like Bobbie Burns, you littel wart. Bobbie Burns was always handsome, as a kid & as a man. When you grow up you will prubly look like you look now, only you will have to spend a littel Scotch munny for bigger kilts & you will have red hair on the calfs of yure legs ware you havent any pants, I sed.

I will na be called a wart, sed Sandy. Hoot mon, he sed, taik that, and he hit me in the eye. I didn't know he was going to hit me; that is how I got my black eye. Then I sailed into Sandy, licked him good & proper. I was going to maik fun of him & his underfeated race, but I happened to think that I am 3-4 Scotch, too.

He Was a Great Man

"LOOKING impressive is well worth while," said the drug store man. "Let me tell you a story.

"John Higginbotham, who lived in the town that I came from, was a fine old fellow. But he was of such a retiring disposition that he got the worst of everything. He was so meek and mild that he never went anywhere, saw anything or did anything.

"He was given a back seat on all special occasions. He wore a smile most of the time, so few people ever knew how sensitive he was about his clothes and his personal appearance generally.

"There came a time when the doctor said John must wear spectacles. John was filled with consternation because of his apprehension as to their effect on his looks. He feared that men, women and children would make fun of him.

"Nevertheless, he wanted to wear spectacles, because the President of the United States was coming to town and John wanted to see him. He wanted to know if the President looked like the pictures in the newspaper. So he wore spectacles.

"His legs trembled beneath him when he first ventured out on the street wearing the spectacles. However, the clear vision they gave him was delightful!

"The first friend he met was Gabriel Von Vorden, and John colored to the roots of his hair at the steady gaze with which Gabe regarded him. He could see plainly through the new spectacles, however, that Gabe's face wore an expression of wonder rather than amusement.

"'The very man!' exclaimed Gabe.

"'You see,' he went on to explain, 'there isn't a man in the village to preside on the platform when the President speaks. There isn't a man who looks impressive enough to sit beside the President. But with them specs, John, you can sit right up there and the President will take you for a college professor.'

"That's how it happened that John Higginbotham shared the honors of the occasion along with the water pitcher, the drinking glass and the President's handkerchief. And no doubt the President thought the village was quite a seat of learning, judging from the appearance of the man who sat on the platform, for every now and then he turned around to get the approval of the presiding dignitary, which John was too badly frightened to give.

"John's imperturbability made the President still more anxious to win the approval of such a stern and ponderous individual. As John never turned a hair all through the speech, the head of the nation went on his way thinking how shallow and inconsequential his efforts were in the eyes of the deep man on the platform."

Rod in Pickle.

"How well behaved your children are," said the minister's wife.

"They are perfectly lovely children," added the minister.

The parents smiled proudly, and up spoke little Agnes:

"Pa said if we didn't behave he'd knock our blocks off; didn't you, pa?"

Snap Shots

By LILLIAN LAUFERTY.

"There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best shall come back to you.

Give love, and love to your heart will flow,
A strength to your inmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what you are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you."

Instinctly Jacob had come closer to Charlotte. He knew well what was this "business" they were about to discuss.

"My nephew will take care of her," said Solomon firmly, "your presence is not necessary here. We know your views." And Solomon never guessed the riot of feeling beneath Jacob's calm exterior—nor what that feeling might threaten to his own well-laid plans.

"Will you come with me?" Jacob's voice thrilled with all the tenderness he must never put into words.

"But you are quite sure you ought not to be here?" Charlotte asked.

Jacob looked with all the stern fatalism of his race, at the men who were to gamble with a girl's happiness, then he turned with gentle tenderness to his fair-haired cousin.

"Quite sure," he said.

Charlotte shyly held out her hand to her cousin, and the Duke caught the other hand in his own, and as he softly voiced his 'Au revoir" he put his lips again to that little right hand.

Was It an Omen?

Was it an omen that as Jacob drew the girl away down the long shady alley of the great hedges, he held his cousin's left hand? And who can tell what the little Princess Evelyn thought as she watched this other pair of cousins strolling beneath her tower window?

The Duke stood at the great hedge gate and watched the little white figure until it was dim and far. There was a long pause. Even Solomon hesitated to speak, when Dame Fate showed such remarkable ability to play his game for mi.

At last Duke Gustavus broke this silence so fraught with meaning for him: "If you plese, gentlemen"—

"Your Highness," said Amschel, hopefully; "you are quite sure you wouldn't rather have lunch earlier and talk business afterward?"

The Duke was a bit amused; "O, no!" said he.

"Oh, well, it was only a suggestion." But just at this hungry juncture, luncheon seemed more essential to our country gentlemen than financing all the reigning princes in the empire.

Solomon spoke: "Your highness, we have considered the question of a loan to you. May I ask how you purpose to invest such a sum as $12,-600,000 florins?"

"O, we shall find good use for it, you may be sure. Speaking generally, I shall devote it to the improvement of my circumstances."

Gustavus' tons showed the atriest amusement at his own bankrupt condition. Why trouble himself? Was it not the place of Providence and these very Jews of Frankfort to see that royal treasuries do not collapse for lack of proper support?

"Now, supposing that our firm would advance such a sum as you suggest," said Solomon, "what is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

"Security? Would it be customary to offer security in a matter of this kind?"

Gustavus did not often trouble his royal self with the details of such an every day matter as mere business.

"It is usual," said Amschel, dryly. He was still considering the way in which his suggestion as to lunching had been received.

The Duke looked at Fehrenberg as at a master. "Well, we could pledge a part of my revenue—of my taxes"——

"I must remind your Highness that you have already anticipated the next five years' income," said Fehrenberg. "But, gentlemen, the produce of the duchy could be enormously increased by a careful and prudent administration."

"Such as I will give it when he is my son-in-law," thought Solomon.

Fehrenberg went on, unconscious of how he was drawing the net closer and closer about the loving hearts of two unconsidered cousins —Jacob and Evelyn.

"There are extensive forests—some coal and mineral springs"——

A Brilliant Idea.

The Duke had a brilliant idea. He broke in: "Cannot I give you my personal security?"

And here was the cue for Solomon to make his great suggestion. The time had come when the die must be cast.

The brothers stirred uneasily—they knew what was coming. Amschel spoke: "Pardon me, I should like to leave you now."

"I don't understand," said Gustavus. And in truth he did not. What turn were matters taking?

Ceremony was beyond Amschel.

"At this point I beg to retire," he said plaintively. "I apologize—but I won't stay."

"Carl, with suave elegance, followed him; but the Duke and Solomon managed to retain Count Fehrenberg and Nathan, the impassive English brother, as seconds in the duel of wits that was about to follow.

There was an elaborate tensity in the atmosphere. The air, that great medium for carrying all "wireless" messages, conveyed in its taut stillness some foreboding to the four men who were about to play fate, of what this moment might mean to many lives.

Gustavus was nervously toying with Evelyn's crimson rose. At a moment like this he vaguely sensed the presence, the influence, of his girlish cousin. "I am getting inquisitive."

You Are Bankrupt.

"Your Highness," began Solomon with solemn intensity; "you give me your permission to be quite candid? You are on the verge of bankruptcy. One thing, I believe, and one thing only, can save you, and that is"——Here even Solomon hesitated.

"Yes, yes?" impatiently.

"A judicious marriage."

Gustavus laughed in evident relief. "We have thought of that, haven't we, Fehrenberg? We looked about for an alliance of that kind, but we could find nothing suitable!"

He considered the beauty of the glowing red rose for a moment, and then, with a sudden access of feeling, buried his lips in his flaming crimson heart. Little Evelyn, little Evelyn, the time has come when all your good fairies must guard you!

The Duke laughed, but was there an undercurrent of bitterness flowing beneath the nonchalance of that laugh? "Youth, charm, beauty—and —and a great deal of money!"

Still more gravely, Solomon made answer:

"I can offer you these qualities."

The Duke was evidently amused.

"YOU can! I am overwhelmed by the versatility of your enterprise! Where have you found a lady of my rank so admirably fitting?"

Then Solomon voiced a truth so deep that even he who spoke scarcely realized the depth of its sacred import.

"Your Highness, the conception of equality is not the same to-day as it was yesterday. Times change. Your Highness is not one of those who refuse to advance with the times."

Lifting the Cloud.

Always there is a little time of lifting cloud before the storm breaks. Gustavus laughed.

"If you compliment me you will make me suspicious." A line of his Virgil came to his mind: "I fead the Greeks even when they come bearing gifts."

Nathan broke in: "Solomon—your Highness—I thing we should reconsider our proposal"——

"Before I hear what it is," exclaimed Gustavus, impatiently. "Come, Baron, what have you on your mind?"

"I propose that you should marry my daughter, Charlotte."

Duke Gustavus of Taunus rose. His sword clattered against the stone rim of Cupid's fountain. Evelyn's red rose slipped from his fingers and fell unheeded at his feet. Perhaps he could soon trample on that blood-red rose and crush it. Perhaps, but the second sped on.

"Sir! Fehrenberg, you hear? What do you say to that?"

"Your Highness, court etiquette has not considered such an emergency. I have never heard of a precedent for such a proposal."

"I admit I am a little taken back. But you might have chosen a moment when I would have requested you to leave my house instantly as the most convenient conclusion to our conversation."

Solomon answered the Duke:

"Sir, in the choice of the right moment lies the success of the game."

"Are you a gambler?" the Duke asked with slow earnestness.

"All games are not games of chance. I do ont trust to luck, but to calculation."

Knowledge of the World.

"And you calculated on my being driven into accepting your proposal by my dread of bankruptcy?"

"I calculated on my knowledge of the world enabling you to consider its advantage impartially."

"Oh, I appreciate the advantages," said Gustavus with slow scorn of himself who could be bought, scorn of the man who sold in his turn.

"Advantages to both our families,' said Solomon.

"Sir, you tempt me to speak without reserve. You make me think of a highwayman gone mad; who says to me: 'Stand! Take my money! It is yours. Refuse it at your peril!' Such audacity is magnificent, but a little unusual."

He looked at the red rose that lay on the ground, and then picked it up very gently and threw it in the clear waters of the Fountain of Cupid. Alas for the Princess Evelyn! Alas for Jacob! "Yet your persistence commands a certain admiration and attention."

Solomon bent over the Duke, who had sunk to a seat on the fountain's edge. "And your Highness will come to a decision? This is the great moment. If your Highness will but say 'Yes' now, the agreement shall be signed at noon to-omorrow and the money handed to you at once."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

What Has Gone Before.

Having backed heavily the peace of Europe Nathan Rothschild is disconcerted to find that Napoleon has burst forth again, and all the banker's outpouring of gold for national development in England will be endangered. The banker hastens to Waterloo. There are the English, who have guaranteed to him that the peace of Europe shall be maintained. From a height above the field of battle Rothschild sees the whole of it. Rothschild sees that the wealth of the world lies in London, his for the taking if he can be first on the ground with the news of the battle. He hurries to London, and next morning appeared on the Exchange. That night he went to bed $10,000 000 richer.

Seven years later a great banker left Vienna, another Naples, another Paris and another London, and traveled to a little old house in Jews' Lane, in Frankfort-am-Main. It was a gathering of the house of Rothschild. Perhaps some king was very hard pressed for money. "Little Jacob" opposes Solomon's plan to marry Charlotte off to the Duke of Taunus. He is backed up by Frau Gudula. The Duke makes love to Charlotte.

Natural History Lessons

No. 1---The Hook Worm

By DOROTHY DIX.

AMONG the most interesting of the native fauna and flora to be found in our midst is the hook worm. This valuable creature belongs to the category of domestic animals (genus henpeckis), and it forms a useful and indispensable adjunct to households where no maid is kept.

The hook worm is indigenous to the United States, and it flourishes most plentifully in cities, only a few rare and scattering specimens of it having ever been found in the country. Scientists differ concerning its history, but a consensus of the best authorities indicates that its origin was contemporaneous with the coming in of the fashion of frocks that button up the back, and that the great original hook worm was discovered by a fat woman with short arms.

From this small and humble beginning sprang the millions of hook worms that now pervade the land and make glad the waist places of swell dressers by pulling together belts that do not meet by four inches. Thus do we see how marvelously nature provides for all contingencies.

In appearance the hook worm is an elongated and tubular - looking animal with two feet, two antennae (technically known as hands), and two eyes situated near the top of its head, which is not infrequently bald. Also it has a tongue, which it shoots off with great rapidity and volubility upon occasions.

Apparently the eyesight of the hook worm is very poor, as it is unable to see a button unless it is the size of a silver dollar, and it cannot distinguish an invisible loop from a chance to tear a hole with a hook in the back of an imported dinner gown.

Likewise the hook worm is very awkward and clumsy in the way in which it manipulates its antennae, it having been estimated that it makes 11,496,851 different motions and dabs and fumbles in trying to insert a perfectly plain hook in a perfectly obvious eye.

These faults of the hook worm are accounted for, however, by scientists on the theory that it is still an imperfectly developed animal, and it yet lacks about seventeen additional hands and four more pairs of eyes in order to perform satisfactorily the function for which it was created. Doubtless these will be acquired in the process of evolution, and our great-great-great-great-great-granddaughters may rejoice in the possession of hook worms with a full complement of faculties that will be able to do their appointed tasks and fasten up a French confection before you could say "Scat!"

Little is known of the habits of the hook worm, as, although it is a domestic animal, it absents itself from the house all day, only returning at night to be fed. Its period of greatest activity is just before dinner and theatre time, when it gets busy and may be heard making weird and profane noises.

The hook worm is exclusively a lady's pet, men seeming to have no use for the animal, though they are so highly esteemed by women. It should be stated in this connection, though, that opinion among women is equally divided as to whether it is best to catch a hook worm when he is young and break him in to your own style of fastenings, or to tie up with a hook worm that has been thoroughly trained by some deceased lady who was addicted to lingerie shirt waists. Much is to be said in favor of each side of the question; but, alas! there are many problems in life, and even the young hook worm who is conscientiously bent on doing his duty sometimes gets in bad, for in his excess of zeal he displays a skill that sets the woman who owns him to guessing.

The hook worm has a very limited vocabulary, the only two expressions that it has ever been heard to use being "Helen Blazes" and a word that is muffled and indistinguishable, but that sounds as if it started with a big, big D.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"WHEN engaged in washing dishes," a woman of exalted ideals advised in a woman's magazine, "fix not your mind upon the sordidness of the task. Rise above it by looking with appreciative eyes at the delicate tints in the china, its pure transparency, the softness of its curves. Learn the history of Dresden, Limoges and Sevres, and the task becomes an intellectual joy."

Daysey Mayme Appleton read, and what she read sank in to come out the next morning when she found herself confronted with the task of washing greens.

A young man, of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, was coming and he had expressed the yearning that comes to all in the spring to have greens for dinner.

She had bought a peck in the belief that there would be enough left to last a week, and when she poured out cold water preparatory to washing them she fixed her mind on all that they represented: Springtime, freshening showers, the sunlight, the singing of the birds, blue skies, the drowsy humming of insects and fragrant zephyrs that stirred the leaves to dancing motion.

She washed and washed and rewashed, digging back into her brain for some knowledge of botany. "That is a scutate," she said, taking a leaf through seven waters, "and this is a reticulate, and here is a beautiful example of the pinnated."

She took the leaves through the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth waters, unconsciously thinking less each time of the tender zephyrs that had stirred the leaves to dancing, the bright sunlight and the gentle showers. There was an accumulation of sand that proved her task was only begun, and she washed the greens through four more waters. Her back ached, she stood first on one foot and then on the other; her hands began to feel as if they belonged to the washerwoman, and her spirits began to droop.

When she submerged the greens into the twelfth water her soul was submerged with them and it never rose again to the plane of exaltation advised by the woman of lofty ideals in the magazine. At last her task was completed and she put the greens over to boil and there seemed a Great Plenty, and when she dressed to meet the man of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, they boiled and boiled and boiled, looking a little less every time she lifted the lid.

"It's a whole peck of greens," she said with a sob at the dinner table an hour later, putting before her Best Beloved a dish in the center of which was a little green mess no bigger than a bug that had been stepped on.

Being Kind to Children

"IT doesn't pay to be too kind to children," said Gritzen.

"Why?" asked the motherly woman.

"Well, I'll give you an illustration. We had a man come to dig our garden. I know well how it hurts to dig. An innocent man can do enough digging in three hours to lame himself for three weeks. We were all glad to see the man come, and he seemed to be a very good sort of fellow. He was fond of children. He said our twins would not bother him at all.

"William and Theodore hustled into their overalls and went out to watch the man, delighted to have him for a companion. The conversation for the first half-hour was something like this:

"'Me afraid of snakes?' said the man. 'Well, I should say not! I eat 'em.'

"'Do you like 'em?' asked Theodore.

"'Oh, no; I just eat 'em to show that I can.'

"'Don't they make your stomach ache?' asked William.

"'Not a bit. If they did I would just swallow a little fire and burn 'em up.'

"'Well, ain't you really afraid of 'em?'

"'Me? Afraid? Ha, ha! That makes me laugh.'

"'Well, ain't you?'

"'No; I'm used to 'em. I'm a circus man. Did you ever see the man in the cage with the lions at the circus?'

"'Yes; I saw a circus once, and there was a man right in the cage with the lions!'

"'I'm that man. Nothing can scare me. But I've quit the circus business for a little while. I took to diggin' just for a change.'

"After an hour or so the conversation was more like this:

"'Here, you rapscallion! Move your foot!'

"'What for?'

"'What for? I want to dig there. I'm not supposed to dig your feet. Here, let them things alone!'

"'What for?'

"'Because your father will want to be able to find them. Stop throwing that dirt. Don't you hear your mamma knocking on the window pane at you? Here, who done that? I'll have to tell your mamma on you. You kids are a nuisance! Get out of here!'

"It's all right being nice to children for a while, but, you see, they can stand it a lot longer than you can!' concluded Gritzen.

Probably Right.

School children know a great deal more than they used to. In fact, some of them, in their own opinion, at least, are quite capable of tutoring their tutors.

"Those kiddies I teach are as knowing as an encyclopedia," said a teacher a week or two ago.

"In what way?" asked his friend.

"Well," replied the scholastic person, the other day I set a problem in arithmetic: 'A rich man dies and leaves a million dollars. One-fifth is to go to his wife, one-fifth to his son, one-eighth to a brother, and the rest to the hospitals. What does each get?'"

"Yes?" inquired the friend, not very interested.

"Back came the reply from the smallest boy in the class: 'A lawyer, sir.'"

: Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women :

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

"BEAUTY is exactly like a spring that wells up clear and sparkling from a pure source," said Willette Kershaw to me.

Slowly and gropingly I was finding my way back to sunshine and the simple facts of every day after the final curtain had fallen on the five artistic plays at the Princess Theater, in New York, and "Any Night" was a memory instead of a presentation of a shamefully bitter reality. But it was a potent, poignant memory, and the sweet, wistful-eyed girl sitting with me in the quiet office had just presented a death-in-life portrait of Mary Magdalen of to-day.

"Take the sad, sodden consumptive I have just portrayed; she has the same features; she is really a different phase of the Fancy I had just been in "Fancy Free." But the butterfly Fancy is saved, her wings are not trailed in the mud, and even though she is not a fine, deep, spiritual creature, she is still a woman, with the joy-of-living in her veins—so she is sweet and pretty. And the other creature, with a different story written on her eyes and mouth, is almost repulsive to look upon."

"I have never posed as a beauty. The only facts in my appearance that please me are hair and eyes—so I take very good care of them—and of the source of the fountain."

Her Secret.

"Ah, do tell me how you care for the beauty you—don't think you possess," said I, eagerly. Willette Kershaw is so genuinely girl—so dainty and attractive in the well-bred simplicity of simple blue serge and black and white hat that she seems an ideal model for Miss Sweet and Twenty to follow over the road to Springtime loveliness.

"It is not much of a secret—and yet so few seekers after beauty seem to have heard of it," said Miss Kershaw, whimsically. "It is just keep clean! Wash and wash and keep very, very clean—clean in body and mind and soul, until you fairly exhale a perfume of sweet, sane, cleanliness. Plenty of water for my hair, and plenty of cold water to bathe tired eyes. That is how I keep my pet assets in good condition. And I don't neglect the lesser favorites."

The clear eyes looked at me with the grave sweetness that makes you feel that this slip of a girl knows life and the facts thereof. Not a trace of make-up of any sort gave to Miss Kershaw the appearance of being anything she was not.

"No," said this observing young woman in answer to my interrogatory glance, "I do not make up for street use. Apart from questions of good taste it is not pretty. And I can't see why nice girls want to take their ideas of beauty from women they would never know. They would not deliberately copy the lack-luster, don believe anything-worth-while-will-ever-happen-again expression that a woman who has given all the world for nothing naturally comes to have. Then why copy her artificial complexion?

"Cleanness and simplicity," I mused. "To you these make beauty."

"These and being in tune with life," answered the girlish star. "If a girl is bitter and discontented—for just cause or merely because she is deliberately cultivating the bitterness in her nature, she gets down-drooping lips, a pinched expression around her nostrils, and, worst of all, her eyes lose all power to radiate magnetism and charm.

The Bitter Side.

"I speak from experience," she went on, in a hushed, hurt little voice in which I could hear the vibration of deep tenderness. "My mother was killed in a railroad accident. That was a time of anguish and bitterness. I hated the sun for shining. I could have murdered the birds for singing. I almost felt a desire to take the life of any happy human being I met. I almost went mad because I let my sorrow turn my whole nature to bitterness.

"Probably there is in all the world scarcely one girl who has come to be 20 without knowing life's hurts. Think of the young girls you know whose faces have a sad and wistful expression whenever they relax and stop playing the game of keeping up appearances.

"Perhaps bitter experiences are best of all, as Elbert Hubbard has said. They are if you use experience instead of letting it use you up.

"I'd like to tell all girls that bitterness and paint spoil the face with about equal thoroughness. And the two in conjunction! They just destroy every claim to beauty.

"Life is pretty impersonal. I found that out when I was in the 'Brown of Harvard's' company, that the indignant Harvard students abused because the star (Mr. Woodruff) wore the Harvard athletic H, to which, of course, he had no right. I could not be resentful nor bitter over their treatment of me; it was just what they considered the wrongful use of a sacred old custom that they were protesting against.

"Well, life is like that—impersonal—she is not abusing you; she is just going ahead, and if you get in the way you will get hurt. So you have to learn that, and take things impersonally—and keep in tune."

"Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
And a trouble is what you make it;
And it isn't how much you are hurt that counts,
But only—how did you take it?"

I quoted.

"Exactly," assented the pretty philosopher. "If you keep clean and sweet and simple, and in tune with life, the fountain of beauty must sparkle in the clear sunlight."

Miss Willett Kershaw in Two Charming Poses.

High Society.

A new-rich dowager, only recently removed from the environs of a Western packing house, has afforded much amusement while clambering up the slippery rounds of the social ladder. One day, after she had returned from circumnavigating the globe, she essayed to entertain a drawing room with a boastful account of her travels. She had been everywhere, and her flow of English was augmented by frequent wavings of her bediamoned hands and forceful noddings of her tiaraed head.

"Did you see the Dardanelles?" asked a sprightly debutante.

"And the Himalayas?" inquired another fair young bud.

"I dined with them in Paris," replied the dowager, triumphantly.

And she wondered why everybody smiled.

His First Mistake

ONE of the first tasks they set the new curate, who was handicapped by youth and inexperience, was to investigate the bona fides of a "widow woman" who had applied to the church for help. He departed nervously on his errand and knocked, as ill luck would have it, at the wrong door.

"How long has your poor husband been dead, my good woman? What number of children have you? Are any of them working? If so, what amount of money are they earning altogether?" were the questions he fired, like shots from a revolver, at the slatternly woman who answered his summons. "I presume I am addressing Mrs. Harriet Smith?" he added, noticing, with alarm, that she looked angry.

"No, you ain't," answered the woman, snappishly. "My name is Selina Jackson, my bairns go to school, and my 'usband's doin' what is necessary to a plateful of steak and onions at this very moment. Would you like to know anything else? Where I was born? When I was christened? At what age I started courtin'? Perhaps," she concluded, sarcastically, rolling her tattered sleeve up above the elbow, "you'd like to see my vaccination mark before you go?"

But the bashful curate, redder in the face than a poppy, was already in full flight.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Severe Case of a Philadelphia Woman—Her Symptoms.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I had a severe case of nervous prostration, with palpitation of the heart, constipation, headaches, dizziness, noise in my ears, timid, nervous, restless feelings and sleeplessness.

"I read in the paper where a young woman had been cured of the same troubles by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I threw away the medicines the doctor left me and began taking the Compound. Before I had taken half a bottle I was able to sit up and in a short time I was able to do all my work. Your medicine has proved itself able to do all you say it will and I have recommended it in every household I have visited."—Mrs. Mary Johnston, 210 Siegel Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Bad Case.

Ephrata, Pa.—"About a year ago I was down with nervous prostration. I was pale and weak and would have hysteric spells, sick headaches and a bad pain under my shoulder-blade. I was under the care of different doctors, but did not improve. I was so weak I could hardly stand long enough to do my dishes.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and happy and I have begun to gain in weight and my face looks healthy now."—Mrs. J. W. Hornberger, R. No. 3, Ephrata, Pa.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

TRADING IS DULL IN COTTON RINGS

NEW YORK, May 20.—Further covering by shorts sustained the cotton market at the opening to-day, despite further rains throughout the cotton States. First prices were unchanged to 3 points higher than last night's close. Spot people again bought July, which seemed to be the strength of the market, but the ring crowd was inclined to sell on favorable weather conditions and promise of further rains over the Eastern and Central belt.

There was not much buying of new crop positions and prices in these options soon fell some 2 to 3 points from the opening, while July and August held steady around the early high level. The bears seem to be following out their recent policy of covering short commitments on all favorable weather or crop advices. After the call offerings were freer, while the buying was concentrated. The principal absorption seemed to come from Wall Street operators.

The principal point of the detailed weather records yesterday is the rather general rainfall in the Augusta, Ga., district, which averaged about .90.

During the forenoon the market was rather quiet and prices fluctuated within a very narrow range. The feeling was general that weather reports and crop advices were too good to sustain the market and further advances would encounter selling.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: May, 11.50; July, 11.63; August, 11.42; October, 11.02; January, 11.00.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Liverpool came in poor again and spot sales were very small, total 4,000 at 4 points higher quotations. Weather conditions continue very favorable. A moderate rainfall was general overnight in Texas and South Texas, and showers were quite general over the remainder of the belt. Temperatures were normal or above. Indications are for rainy weather; slightly cooler in the northwestern quarter; partly cloudy with scattered showers in the rest of the belt.

Our market opened 4 points higher on July, unchanged on new crops, but soon lost 5 points on new crops. Selling, however, is small and cautious. Bull operations with July in New York may carry the whole list higher and the market has acted lately in support of news that certain strong interests were buying new crops in anticipation of the usual short scares during the summer.

LIVERPOOL COTTON MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, May 20.—This market was due to open 2½ points higher on near positions and 3 to 3½ points advance on late months, but opened quiet at a net gain of 3½ points. At 12:15 p. m. the market was quiet and steady, 3½ points higher. Later the market declined ½ point from 12:15 p. m.

Spot cotton dull at 4 points advance; middling 6.73d; sales 5,000 bales, including 4,800 American; imports 21,000 bales.

At the close the market was quiet, but steady, with prices showing a net gain of 1@5½ points from the final quotations of Monday.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—There will be showers to-night and Wednesday in the Lake Region and the Ohio Valley, and to-night or Wednesday in the East Gulf and South Atlantic States and the northern portion of the Middle Atlantic States. It will be somewhat warmer Wednesday in New England and the Middle Atlantic States.

Forecast until 7 p. m. Wednesday:

Georgia: Local showers to-night and Wednesday.

Virginia: Generally cloudy to-night and Wednesday.

North and South Carolina: Local showers to-night and Wednesday.

Florida, Alabama and Mississippi: Showers to-night or Wednesday.

Louisiana: Showers and thunder storms to-night or Wednesday.

Western Texas: Fair and colder to-night; Wednesday fair.

Eastern Texas: Showers to-night and Wednesday. Colder in north portion.

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Logan & Bryan: We feel that a further advance is not at all unlikely.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: There seems to be nothing in the outlook to stimulate bullish activity as long as the weather is favorable for the progress of the new crop.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—The steadiness of the market to-day was credited to the buying of July by spot houses. Wilson and Waters were the principal buyers after the call and Mitchell and Hentz were the leading sellers of new crop months. McFadden, Mohr and Henneman were good buyers of July and many traders were advocating a setback in the market from present levels.

* * *

On the call McElroy bought 7,000 bales of October. Springs was a good buyer also. The selling came from Bashford, Mitchell, Hicks, Wiggins and Schill.

Warehouse stocks in New York to-day are 82,105 bales; certificated, 70,563 bales.

* * *

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows perfect conditions; cloudy in western States, rainy in Central and South Texas, partly cloudy in rest of the belt. Nice rains in Texas, Oklahoma and rather general showers over the Atlantics; warm weather.

Rainfall: Oklahoma City, .26; Abilene, .40; Fort Worth, raining, 1.09; Taylor, raining, .42; San Antonio, raining, .16; Shreveport, Augusta, .12; Little Rock, Atlanta, .38; Vicksburg, .02; New Orleans, .54; Chattanooga, .01; Wilmington, .34; Del Rio, .08; Jackson and Corinth, Miss., .04; Birmingham, .18.

* * *

Weather indications are for unsettled rains over the northwestern quarter of the belt and cloudy to scattered showers over rest of the belt.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market, on the heels of needed general rains, took exactly the opposite course from the course the talent expected it to take. It advanced. Of course, explanations, as plausible as prompt, were forthcoming, but the bald fact remained that the market refused to decline in the presence of a widely exploited bearish influence of real importance. Bulls said the reason therefor was the great number of shorts who, of late, have counted on general rains, which were included in the weather forecast a few days ago, to weaken the market and give them a chance to buy in their commitments. Bears said the big fellows were buying and the crop killers were busy, and that, in the presence of such conditions, little shorts had become frightened and scampered to cover.

"It can not now be denied that the weather conditions over the belt, as a whole, are favorable. The weather bureau promises favorable weather throughout the week. Consequently, current weather can not be interpreted as a bullish factor. But the bull makes out a pretty good case for himself by exploiting lateness of the crop both East and West and by the use of trustworthy advices from many sections, showing that repeated replanting has placed the crop squarely on the defensive. Nobody claims that the chance for a large crop has been eliminated, but many do claim that the status of the crop to-day does not warrant childlike confidence in an arbitrary result approaching the outturn of 1911-1912."

Austin, Texas: "Crop prospects are very bright. It would take a long drouth to overcome the moisture which now is in the ground. Promoters of curtailing acreage to artificially boost prices are considerably worried over the increase in acreage, which is larger than in any previous year. There is a very large increase in virgin ranch regions of West and South Texas."

WEEKLY GOVERNMENT WEATHER REPORT

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Precipitation occurred during the week throughout the cotton region, except that there were small areas with no precipitation in Texas, Arkansas, Southeastern Louisiana, Georgia and South Carolina.

More than two inches of precipitation occurred at scattered stations in East Texas, Southeastern Oklahoma, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida and Mississippi. The greatest weekly precipitaion, 4 inches, occurred at Paris, Texas. Mean temperatures ranged from 1 degree to 4 degrees above normal, except in Florida and Southeastern Alabama, where there was a deficiency of 1 to 2 degrees. The weekly mean temperature ranged from 64 to 74 degrees over the eastern, from 70 to 76 degrees over the central, and from 70 to 78 degrees over the western portion of the cotton region.

The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64 degrees, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and the highest, 78 degrees, at Del Rio, Texas.

SHOOTS HAND HOLDING KNIFE AIMED AT NECK

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—With one hand grasping Ben Gardner's neck and the other hand holding a big knife, which he attempted to open with his teeth, Bob White, a negro, came near cutting the throat of the white man here yesterday. Only the prompt action of Mr. Gardner in drawing a revolver and shooting White through the hand which held the knife saved him.

STREET WATCHING DISSOLUTION PLAN

New York City Bond Sale Prospects Excellent, Lending Some Strength to the Market.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 20.—There was considerable irregularity in the stock market at the opening today. Canadian Pacific was the weakest feature, opening 1⅝ lower at 236¼. Rock Island was also under pressure around 16⅛ for a loss of ⅝.

There was a little business in Brooklyn Rapid Transit, which gained ¼. Amalgamated Copper, which began ¼ higher, soon lost its gain and declined fractionally.

Among the other declines were American Can, ⅛; American Smelting, ¼; Chino Copper, ¼; Erie, ¼; New York Central, ⅛; Pennsylvania, ⅛; Union Pacific, ⅛, and United States common, ½.

Southern Pacific began ¼ up, but soon lost it. Reading declined fractionally, after opening unchanged, but soon recovered.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were dull. Canadian Pacific in London slumped on Berlin selling.

After the first half hour the market became active and stocks took an upward movement. Steel recovered its early loss of ⅝. Union Pacific and Copper were up ⅛. At 86⅝ Southern Pacific was up ⅜. Brooklyn Rapid Transit advanced ¼. Missouri Pacific up ½; New York Central rose to 100. Call money loaned at 2¾.

Fate of Mexico Rests With U. S.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Paul Hudson, editor of The Mexican Herald, of the City of Mexico, in an article printed in that paper argues that the United States should recognize the Huerta Government. He says:

"The Mexican situation is equally critical to-day for Mexico, for Americans and their interests in Mexico and for our American commercial and official relations with that troubled land.

"The time has passed for theoretical consideration of Mexico's plight. The country confronts very real and very difficult conditions that must be met in a prompt and practical way. The one thing that will help most quickly is recognition of the Huerta Government by the United States.

"The Huerta-Diaz combination is as strong a one as could be formed in Mexico to-day. It has the support of as large a proportion of the best elements of the country as any alliance could hope to secure. It is guided by one of the best cabinets Mexico ever has known.

"Mexicans realize, and it is time Americans realized, too, that the alternative to-day is the success of the Huerta Government or chaos.

"There is nothing else in the Mexican situation."

Wheat—No. 2 red	97 @104
Corn—No. 2	59½
Oats—No. 2	38 @ 39

CHICAGO, May 20.—The strength at Liverpool for wheat was a fractional help in the Chicago pit at the opening this morning. Prices were ⅛@¼c above resting spots of last night. Northwestern receipts were a great deal larger than a year ago, but a little smaller than a week ago. The foreign crop situation was favorable except France and Bulgaria.

Corn was a shade higher on wet weather.

Oats were firmer in sympathy with the other grains.

The provisions list was fractionally better on a higher hog market.

OPINIONS ON GRAIN.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Bartlett, Frazier & Co.—Wheat: Map shows general rains in Northwest, also Nebraska, Iowa and Southwest, with very little in Illinois or the Ohio Valley. We look for a continuation of firmness.

Corn: If country offerings should cease a further advance will be probable.

LIVERPOOL GRAIN.

LIVERPOOL, May 20.—Wheat opened ¼ to ⅜d higher. At 1:30 p. m. the market was ⅜ to ½d higher. Closed ⅜ to ½d higher.

Corn opened ¼d higher. At 1:30 p. m. the market was ⅜d higher. Closed ½d higher.

GRAIN MARKET NERVOUS, PENDING MAY DELIVERY

CHICAGO, May 20.—The Inter-Ocean says:

"It is the belief of the conservative element of the trade that until the May delivery is out of the way, nervous grain markets, with advances like those of yesterday, are to be expected every few days.

"There is a good sized outstanding short interest in May, compared with the stocks, particularly corn and oats, which gives a few of the big operators sufficient prestige to enable them to handle the markets with comparative ease, to the discomfort of the shorts.

"Trade in wheat and corn is mixed."

LIVE STOCK MARKET.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Hogs: Receipts, 8,000. Market 10@15c higher. Mixed and butchers, $8.45@8.75; good heavy, $8.50@8.70; rough heavy, $8.25@8.40; light, $8.45@8.75; pigs, $6.75@8.35; bulk, $8.60@8.70.

Cattle—Receipts, 2,500. Market steady. Beeves, $7.15@8.90; cows and heifers, $3.40@8.35; stockers and feeders, $5.75@7.65; Texans, $7.00@8.75.

Sheep — Receipts, 10,000. Market strong. Native and Western, $5.50@6.35; lambs, $5.50@8.40.

ST. LOUIS, May 20.—Cattle: Receipts, 5,000, including 1,200 Southerns; natives, steady to strong; beef steers, $5.75@9.00; cows and heifers, $4.50@8.50; stockers and feeders, $5.25@7.50; calves, $6.00@9.75. Southern steady; steers, $5.25@7.75; cows and heifers, $4.00@7.00; Texas calves, $5.00@6.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 12,500. Market five cents higher; mixed and butchers, $8.50@8.70; good heavy, $8.65@8.65; rough heavy, $7.90@8.25; light, $8.55@8.70; pigs, $7.25@8.35; bulk, $8.50@8.65.

Sheep—Receipts, 500. Market steady. Muttons, $5.00@6.75; lambs, $7.00@8.25.

OATS CROP LOOKS BAD.

CHICAGO, May 20.—Bloomington, Ill., says never has seen the oats crop looking so badly. "Unless much rain comes there is not more than a quarter of acreage that will make half a crop.

The weekly Iowa weather report says only about 25 per cent of corn is planted and much plowing still to be done.

WHEAT CONDITIONS GOOD.

CHICAGO, May 20.—The weekly report of the Chicago and Northwestern belt, covering Nebraska points, says wheat is making good headway and in the best condition in many years.

GOV. SULZER SIGNS STOCK BILL.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Governor Sulzer signed the Stock Exchange reform bills, making trading against customer's orders a felony; also requiring brokers to deliver memoranda to customers of securities purchased.

HEARST'S SUNDAY AMERICAN

U. S. WILL HONOR MAINE HEROES AT UNVEILING

Military and Naval Bodies to Participate in Ceremonies at New York City May 30.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Nation-wide interest in the unveiling of the national Maine monument on the afternoon of May 30 is shown in letters received from many sections of the United States and Cuba by the National Maine Monument Committee.

President Wilson has directed that a floral piece be placed on the monument in the name of the United States. Father John P. Chidwick, who was chaplain of the Maine when the warship was sunk in Havana harbor, has been asked to place the wreath on the monument. At the same time a large floral piece will be placed in position by surviving members of the battleship's crew.

Governor Sulzer of New York and Governor Haines of Maine have notified the committee that they will attend the ceremonies. The two executives will follow the example of President Wilson in placing floral tributes on the monument. Mayor Gaynor announces that the city of New York will also send a floral piece. One of the Mayor's daughters has been invited to place this wreath in position. Still another wreath will probably come from Cuba. The monument committee and survivors of the Maine and their relatives will also be represented by floral pieces.

Rear Admiral Cameron McCrea Winslow, who is to be grand marshal of the land parade, has issued final orders to all military and naval bodies that are to march. Major General Barry, U. S. A., who has been cooperating with him, has assigned Colonel Mallory, of Governors Island, to command the troops from the United States Army. Every available man from army posts near New York will turn out.

There will be about 5,000 bluejackets from the North Atlantic fleet in the parade.

Ask Co-Ordinate Negro Missions

Co-operation in negro mission work has been recommended by the executive council of the Reformed Churches in America, and the consensus of opinion among the Presbyterian delegates in Atlanta is that it will be adopted.

Presbyterian missions among negroes have heretofore overlapped one another. The recommendation for cooperation followed a fervent address by Dr. J. S. Lyons, of Louisville, moderator of the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, when the executive committee of the general council, acting upon his suggestion, called a hurried conference and adopted specific recommendations.

Plea to General Synod.

The recommendations of the executive committee were addressed to the General Assemblies of the Presbyterian churches now in session in Atlanta, to the General Synod of the Reformed Church in America, to meet at Ocean Grove, N. J., in June, and to the General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States, to meet at Lancaster, Pa., in May, 1914.

In communities where two or more churches of the general council are represented by negro missions, the sessions of the respective churches are urged to work together. Presbyterians, individually, are requested to see that this recommendation receives due consideration.

Plan to Train Teachers.

Means of carrying out the new plan are also recommended. The Knoxville College, of Knoxville, Tenn., is requested to consider the propriety of establishing a training department for equipping workers in the colored field.

The committee, which unanimously favored the report, was composed of J. G. Snedecor, Chairman, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; W. J. Darby, secretary, Evansville, Ind.; Charles E. Schaeffer, Philadelphia; E. P. Cowan, Pittsburg, and R. W. McGranahan, of Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Hapeville Man Sighs For Canned Goods.

"My wife," said the Hapeville man, as he settled down in his seat in the car bound for town, "has worried herself half-way ill over the prospect of little fruit this year. Last year she got it into her head that she should can some fruit and vegetables. She kept after me until I bought her a canner, and right away, with the aid of the children, she set to work to can everything in sight.

"Every evening when I returned home it was to find the evidences of a strenuous day's work in our home canning factory. I couldn't tell you how many cans of all sorts of things she did put away for future reference. This past winter she began to make calls upon her stock. And, believe me, we had the best eating all through the season that I ever experienced.

"The wife learned the whole thing from the little book of instructions which came with the canner, and she certainly learned the lesson good, because the canned stuff she served on our table was just about the best I have ever had the pleasure of eating. I am now almost as worried as she is over the report that the dry weather recently and the cold weather of a month or so back will give us only about half a crop. I had been looking forward to a bumper crop, and we all had expected to put away enough fruit and vegetables in cans to last the whole winter.

"Anyway, the stuff we put up at home always tastes better than the canned stuff we buy, and that's one reason I'm pretty strong for the home-made goods."

Working Old Gag To Get the Coin.

"I had thought," said the business man, "that the newsboys had abandoned that old gag of weeping and telling a hard luck story about mother being ill just to get rid of a bundle of papers on which they had been 'stuck,' but I guess competition is now so keen they have had to go back to the ancient dodge.

"The other afternoon I was on my way home when I saw a little shaver, who looked to be about 6 or 7 years old, standing on the corner of Broad and Alabama Streets sniffling as if his heart would break. I was going to ask the kid what the matter was when a woman just ahead beat me to it.

"She leaned over the boy in a motherly fashion and inquired what was the trouble.

"'Me mudder's dyin',' replied the youngster, 'an' I ain't been able ter sell me papers ter buy her no medicine. De youther kids won't lemme sell eround here an' I can't do nottin'.

"The boy's tears were real and his tale evidently touched the woman, for she fished around in her handbag and gave him a quarter.

"'Here, my little man,' she said, 'run along and get that medicine, and then take it to your mother as quick as you can.' Then she leaned over and kissed the chap.

"That sort of had me going, and I gave the kid a half-dollar. The woman gave me a grateful look and turned to go her way when we both were astonished to see the kid, who a moment before had been the most dejected looking person in seven States, give a whoop, throw his bundle of papers to the winds and with a wild cry of joy, in which was mixed a couple of healthy swear words, start off in the direction of two newsboys on the next corner.

"'De two guys fell fer it,' shouted the kid. 'I got 75 cents. Le's beat it fer somethin' ter eat.'

"It was the old gag and I had been bitten."

To Give $300 for Charity Cost $5,000

CHICAGO, May 20.—Records to show that one woman dependent upon charity received less than $300 during eighteen months, while $5,000 was spent in investigating her condition, have been produced before the legislative committee investigating charitable institutions.

HUSBAND FREED; WIFE, WHO HAD HIM ARRESTED, FINED

DALTON, GA., May 20.—Recorder Tarver dismissed a charge of disorderly conduct lodged against John Burnett by his wife and fined Mrs. Burnett $5 for beating her husband with an umbrella.

Mrs. Burnett contended that her husband was drunk, as she ran him away from a crowd surrounding a keg of beer, but the Recorder ruled that there was no evidence to show that Burnett was either drunk or disorderly.

GATE CITY GUARD RECEIVED BY PRESIDENT

Noted Atlanta Military Company Parades Washington Streets and Visits White House.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—With a battalion of the National Guard of the District of Columbia acting as escort and the band of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army heading the parade, the old Gate City Guard of Atlanta marched triumphantly up Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House this afternoon and was formally welcomed to the Capital by President Wilson. Included in the battalion of guardsmen which formed the escort to the famous Georgia contingent was the crack company of Washington Light Infantry, the showiest organization in the militia of the District.

Major J. F. Burke was in command of the Old Guard and the Georgia company made a brilliant showing in its fancy full dress uniforms.

White House Reception.

The parade began at the Continental Hotel, the headquarters of the visitors, and continued to the historic east entrance of the White House. Arrived there, the guardsmen were met by Senator Hoke Smith and Representative William Schley Howard of Georgia and taken into the east room, the scene of all state functions since the White House was erected.

President Wilson, accompanied by Major Rhoads, his military aide, entered the room and the guardsmen were presented individually to the President.

Later in the afternoon the members of the Gate City Guard were taken to the American League baseball park, where they witnessed a series of exhibition drills by the cadet organizations from the District of Columbia. The guardsmen, for years crack drillers of the South, enjoyed the exhibition immensely.

To Baltimore Wednesday.

From the exhibition drill the members of the guard returned to their hotel. To-night they will go to a theater and early to-morrow morning they will leave for Baltimore, to be entertained by the Fifth Maryland Regiment.

The visitors arrived at 8 o'clock this morning over the Southern Railway and went at once to their hotel, which is close to the Capitol and the Union Station. There were no special arrangements for the morning entertainment, so most of them remained at the hotel in their fatigue uniforms. Some of them visited the Capitol and other points of interest, revisiting the scenes of their famous peace-making trip of 1879.

Mrs. Longstreet Seeks Vindication

The following telegram from Washington was received to-day by The Georgian from Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, regarding her hearing before the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Postroads relative to the Gainesville postmastership:

I did not go before the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Postroads to prevent the confirmation of Mrs. Ham. I went before that committee to have my record vindicated. I went there to call on the majority party, in recommending my successor for confirmation, to have the manhood and courage to say that I had been kicked out of office by the sinister influences of the invisible government which is doing business in Georgia under the name of the Georgia Railway and Power Company and to say that my record in office is above reproach. I challenge Southern manhood to give me that vindication. What answer to the challenge of Southern honor will they make?

"Knightliest of a knightly race,
Who since the days of old
Have kept the lamps of chivalry
Alight in hearts of gold."

I believe that answer will ring true. But if the Southern manhood which is in the saddle to-day should fail, under the pressure of the money power, the honor of the minority party will not fail. The men in whose veins courses the blood of a conquering race—a race that through the long centuries has mounted the thrones of kings, taken empires and builded republics—will awaken that vindication on our Atlantic shores, to follow the morning sun to its setting beyond our Pacific seas, until a nation shall read in the shining track that the woman whom the warhorse of the Confederacy dowered with his love and a name that will live forever—the woman who was honored by Theodore Roosevelt and trusted by William Howard Taft—is true as tempered steel and pure as refined gold.

DOOLY OFFICIALS STUDY COMMISSION GOVERNMENT

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 20. The five members of the Dooly County (Georgia) Commission are visiting Chattanooga to investigate conditions under the commission government here and to see historic points in the vicinity. The Georgians will probably be here several days. They are J. G. Adams, chairman; J. D. Taylor, clerk; W. W. Wells, warden; J. J. Shell and S. J. Shepherd.

MOTORCYCLE PATROL FOR STATE.—Kansas will be the first State to establish a motorcycle patrol in every county. The 1,750 members will receive no pay.

"BATH HOUSE JOHN" WRITES DRAMA.—Alderman "Bath House John" Coughlin, of Chicago, announced that he is writing a drama that carries a lesson for women in the matter of dress reform.

ZIONISTS WARNED AGAINST PIE.—Overseer Wilbur Glenn Voliva, successor to John Alexander Dowie, chief of Zion City, warned his followers against eating pie. "Shun fried potatoes as you would a rattlesnake," he also said. "They contain hog fat."

GRAZED BY AUTO, HE HITS DRIVER.—When Menlo Moore nearly ran down Mr. and Mrs. William Yearick, Yearick jumped upon the running board of Moore's auto and punched Moore in the jaw. Judge Gemmell discharged Yearick, saying, "you did exactly right."

EVIDENTLY "SOME" SPEECH.—A negro who introduced himself as an officer of the local negro Y. M. C. A., met Vice President Marshall in a Washington street car and told him that a speech made by Senator Works before the association was "decapitating."

SOUTH CAROLINA PASTORS' REPARTEE.—"Is that the hand that administered the Lord's Supper?" asked the Rev. James D. Chick, of Spartanburg, S. C., after he had been struck a stinging blow in the face by the Rev. Stephen A. Nettles during a quarrel over a financial transaction.

PROUD PAPA AT 70.—Leo Quadenfield, a Philadelphia contractor, aged 70, and his wife, Marie, aged 15, are the proud parents of a twelve-pound boy. Neighbors who mobbed the aged bridegroom when he married his widow's ward last year, gave a lawn fete in honor of "Pa." Quadenfield.

URGE MUSIC IN STREET CARS. That the St. Louis street car company shall equip its cars with phonographs to play a certain number of records each trip, is the requirement of an ordinance which will be introduced in the City Council.

JOY RIDES ON FIRE TRUCK.—The chief of the Huntington (N. Y.) fire department is investigating a report that firemen here have used the department's new motor truck for taking young women on midnight joy rides.

Ousted Official Holds City Cash

WASHINGTON, GA., May 20.—Whether the Mayor or City Treasurer is the legal custodian of city funds will be argued at Warrenton to-day before Judge B. F. Walker, of Toombs Circuit, on a writ of mandamus brought by the Mayor and Council of Washington against City Treasurer F. H. Ficklen.

Mayor Favor claims that he has the right to say when and for what purposes the city finances shall be used, while Treasurer Ficklen holds to a contrary view. When $30,000 of bond money for city paving was placed in the hands of Treasurer Ficklen, Mayor Favor issued vouchers against the fund aggregating $21,000, which the City Treasurer refused to pay until he was advised of the purpose of the disbursement and otherwise consulted in the matter.

Upon this refusal the City Council declared the office of City Treasurer vacant and ordered the Treasurer to place the city funds in certain depositories at once. He refused.

The court's aid has now been invoked by the Mayor and Council to require the Treasurer to surrender the city's cash.

Lynn to Know His Fate Next Month

Alonzo L. Lynn's motion for a new trial, whereby he hopes to evade a life sentence for the killing of E. M. Hightower at the Lynn home in Laurens County, December 18, 1912, will be decided by the Supreme Court after its next opinion day in the middle of June.

The motion was argued Monday before Justices Atkinson, Evans and Hill. Solicitor General Stephens of Laurens County and Judge John S. Adams argued for the affirmation of the lower court's decree. Stephen P. New and George B. Davis, of Dublin, represented Lynn.

Hightower, a Confederate veteran, was found dead in the Lynn home. A Burns detective, employed by the State, ferreted out evidence and adduced a theory of conspiracy, resulting in the indictment of Lynn and his wife, Alice Lynn.

Mrs. Lynn admitted firing the shot which killed the veteran, but swore he had made improper proposals to her. After deliberating five days, the jury acquitted Mrs. Lynn, but found Lynn guilty of murder, recommending life imprisonment. Judge Hawkins imposed the full sentence.

Motion for a new trial by Lynn's attorneys was predicated upon 21 assumptions of error. Chief among them was the charge that the Grand Jury sat in unlawful session, that improper testimony was admitted to evidence and that the evidence was insufficient to convict. The detective secured most of his evidence from a dictograph put in Lynn's calle while he awaited indictment.

Lynn to Know His Fate Next Month

Alonzo L. Lynn's motion for a new trial, whereby he hopes to evade a life sentence for the killing of E. M. Hightower at the Lynn home in Laurens County, December 18, 1912, will be decided by the Supreme Court after its next opinion day in the middle of June.

The motion was argued Monday before Justices Atkinson, Evans and Hill. Solicitor General Stephens of Laurens County and Judge John S. Adams argued for the affirmation of the lower court's decree. Stephen P. New and George B. Davis, of Dublin, represented Lynn.

Hightower, a Confederate veteran, was found dead in the Lynn home. A Burns detective, employed by the State, ferreted out evidence and adduced a theory of conspiracy, resulting in the indictment of Lynn and his wife, Alice Lynn.

Mrs. Lynn admitted firing the shot which killed the veteran, but swore he had made improper proposals to her. After deliberating five days, the jury acquitted Mrs. Lynn, but found Lynn guilty of murder, recommending life imprisonment. Judge Hawkins imposed the full sentence.

Motion for a new trial by Lynn's attorneys was predicated upon 21 assumptions of error. Chief among them was the charge that the Grand Jury sat in unlawful session, that improper testimony was admitted to evidence and that the evidence was insufficient to convict. The detective secured most of his evidence from a dictograph put in Lynn's calle while he awaited indictment.

A Treaty Japan Has Steadily Dodged

The Japanese Have Not Lived Up to the Treaty They Are NOW Invoking in Their Own Behalf

Japan, we now know, has not only protested specifically against the California alien land bill on the ground that it is contrary to the treaty of 1911, but on the more general basis that it is an offense as between nations and not in harmony with the traditions and friendship existing between the Mikado's Government and that of the United States.

The reply of our Government is that there is no violation of treaty, and that the broader question of offense is a proper subject for diplomatic negotiations.

But with how clean hands can the Japanese Government complain of a violation of treaty?

If, under its terms, Japanese subjects have irrevocable rights to own and lease land in the United States, there must also be an equivalent. Citizens of the United States must have the right to own and lease land in Japan. Have they? The Japanese Parliament passed such a law, but IT HAS NEVER BEEN PROMULGATED. It has never been put into force by imperial decree. It is a dead letter.

That law, even as it stands, is not an equivalent such as Japan is claiming in the United States. An American corporation, for instance, cannot acquire lands or any other rights in Japan, even under the statute, unless a special charter is issued and the application approved by the Minister of Home Affairs.

The law reserves to the Japanese Government the right to exclude aliens and alien corporations from any place the Home Minister may deem advisable. The law excepts Hakodate, Nagasaki, Formosa and many other places where Americans might want to go.

JAPAN HAS NOT LIVED UP TO THE TREATY IT IS NOW INVOKING IN ITS OWN BEHALF.

As for the broader and more serious protest against an "offense between nations," this newspaper has already pointed out that the sovereignty of the United States is thereby challenged more than the sovereignty of Japan.

For eighteen years, until quite recently, the State of New York maintained a law prohibiting aliens from holding land. Indeed, that law was repealed only at the just-closed session of the Legislature and the repealing measure signed by Governor Sulzer.

IN ALL THOSE EIGHTEEN YEARS NO NATION OBJECTED TO THAT LAW AS A NATIONAL AFFRONT.

Any such objection would have been an international ABSURDITY.

It is the sovereign right of the United States to determine who shall and who shall not be citizens, and each State has its own right to determine whether individuals not citizens shall own land in it.

To challenge these sovereign rights is to step out of the domain of international law and custom into the arena.

Bryan's Still-Water Statesmanship

What shall one say when the registered pilot of the ship of state refuses to face anything but fine weather and a smooth sea?

Mr. Bryan is not willing to superintend the foreign relations of the United States if there is going to be any serious trouble about them. He says: "I made up my mind before I accepted the office of Secretary of State that I would not take the office if I thought there was to be a war during my tenure."

Now that Mr. Bryan's mind is thoroughly made up about it, he says he feels sure there will be no storm while his discriminating hand is on the helm.

These assurances may reveal a tender heart in Mr. Bryan, But they expose the incompetence of his executive character and the shallowness of his political thought. The implication is that wars are simply sinful and that they occur only when unjust or unamiable men are put by unhappy accident into places of power.

Mr. Bryan has lived and prospered so well by the mere facility of his tongue that he seems to have lost all sense of those real and passionate contradictions of human interest and honor that spring out of settled rights and moral convictions and that can not be disposed of by any form of words.

Imagine, for example, what would happen if Mr. Bryan's free and unlimited coinage of fine words were to be applied to such an issue as that raised by the suggestion that the "national honor" of Japan requires the admission to American citizenship of hordes of Orientals on equal terms with Germans or Frenchmen.

IMAGINE, IF YOU CAN, THE MEEK SUBMISSION OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO A JUDGMENT OF HAGUE LAWYERS THAT THIS COUNTRY OUGHT TO CONSENT TO BE ORIENTALIZED WITHIN THE NEXT TWENTY YEARS!

The plain truth is, of course, that nations, as they are now constituted, can not keep clear of war for a single year save as "strong men, armed," who keep their palace that their goods may be in peace. Brave and foreseeing men have indeed a right to look forward to a day when nations that now confront each other with menaces may be so transformed in their social and economic substance that all marked antagonisms of interest shall be canceled and dissolved.

BUT IN THE MEANTIME IT IS NOTHING LESS THAN A GRAVE MISFORTUNE THAT THE CHIEF SPOKESMAN OF THE UNITED STATES IN ITS FOREIGN RELATIONS SHOULD BE A STILL-WATER STATESMAN, WHO DECLINES IN ADVANCE TO FACE THE POSSIBILITY OF A STORM, AND WHO RELIES SOLELY UPON RAPTUROUS PHRASES TO MEET DANGEROUS EMERGENCIES.

OUR ANTEDILUVIAN ANCESTORS!

Rev. John E. White on "Marriage in a Hurry"

By REV. JOHN E. WHITE.
Pastor Second Baptist Church.

A YOUNG lady of Georgia went to Vienna to complete her musical education in the great conservatory there. She met her fate in the person of a splendid young Austrian. The distance from her home in Georgia and the impatience natural to love's young dream seemed to make it impossible for the marriage to take place in due and ancient form at the bride's home. Desiring to proceed with the wedding ceremony in Vienna, after a full correspondence with the bride's family, a stubborn obstacle presented itself in their path.

Our Hurry-Up System.

The Austrian Government interposed a startling amount of legal red-tape with reference to the bride. It was required that legal evidence be transmitted through the Austrian Consul at Savannah that the young lady in question was of marriageable age, health record, moral character, and that her father was a citizen in good standing—all to be certified to in writing and attested by Government officials and ministers of religion.

Fortunately the young lady had no difficulty in complying with the Austrian marriage laws. The Germans are a long-headed people. They have discovered that the marriage altar is a national strength or a national weakness.

This discovery has not yet been made in Georgia and in this country. If statesmen had planned for it a more efficient hurry-up system for marriage than ours could not have been devised. There are enough forces of self-interest brought into play to facilitate matrimony in Georgia to constitute a practical conspiracy to get as many people married as possible.

The State and County laws of license make it profitable to the officers to issue licenses.

Over the doors of the office of Ordinary in Fulton County might be written the motto: "Marriage for Revenue Only," without serious offense. Justices of the Peace profusely welcome the touch of romance and the tingle of silver which brighten their dusty offices.

The preacher and the preacher's wife ardently believe in people getting married, and not for reasons too numerous to mention. So from the man who sells rice and cow-bells to the liveryman and the instalment furniture shop there is a chorus of "Hurry up, John, and hurry up Mary, and get off."

If the young foreigner had met his fate in Georgia, our hurry-up system, which asks no questions, and trusts to matrimonial luck, with a spur on both heels, would have convinced him that the people of this country were looking for a chance to marry off their young ladies quite regardless of whom they married.

So we have the fiddler to pay. Hurry-up marriages demand hurry-up divorce courts. The serious vows of wedlock, their sacred sanctions and solemn responsibilities, so vitally concerning the welfare of society and the happiness of souls, are bound to lack impressiveness since they are left almost entirely to a passing mention in the wedding ceremony which the average bride and bridegroom in this country wants hurried up and over with.

People are not likely to stick together through thick and thin if their marriage is cheaply conceived and unimpressively consummated.

"Hold Up, There!"

Another penalty but recently regarded as mentionable is the gross inattention to physical fitness. What brides can not be expected to know parents should insist on knowing.

If we believe what the physicians are testifying, the marriage altar is society's "bloody angle," when it ought to be the open sesame of health, happiness and the growing of a stronger and purer race.

The demand for a "Hold up, there!" can not be long postponed. The only voice that can utter it effectively is the voice of the State.

The talk among ministers about organization for the purpose of refusing to perform a wedding ceremony except on conditions is practically useless. The Legislature must impose the necessary conditions with proper penalties attached.

Parents are perfectly ready to be protected, but are helpless to protect themselves. Proper marriage laws would educate public opinion against the matrimonial speed mania. Jacob could be trained to wait at least three months for his Rachel, and Rachel would not have to have her Jacob on a week's acquaintance.

It ought not to be possible for anybody's best man to swear successfully that the bride is 18 years old because the bridegroom told him so. The Ordinary is protected by the lie that is sworn to. The preacher is protected by the certificate of the same lie which has received the seal of the Ordinary.

Georgia is behind every other Southern State, except South Carolina, in the looseness with which marriage licenses are issued and in the practical absence of any requirements of vital statistics.

June is coming and our hurry-up system will celebrate itself.

Qualities That Popularize Men With Women and Women With Men

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX
Copyright, 1913, by Journal-American-Examiner.

JUST what are the qualities which make men popular with women and women with men?

Men with no decided talents, men of no social prowess; men without money; men with shadowy records, have all succeeded with women where other and seemingly more attractive and certainly more desirable men have failed.

A bigamist who was under engagement of marriage to thirty girls, when he married two of them, says his success resulted from "always talking to women about themselves."

That is the secret of most friendships and all love affairs, and the explanation of most divorces lies in the fact that the man or woman ceases to talk about the virtues and charms of the other.

That is why beautiful women seldom make men happy, and why plain women frequently fascinate and hold.

It is not a peculiarly feminine trait, this love of hearing oneself analyzed and made the leading topic of discussion—it is merely HUMAN.

Might Gain Fiancees.

Men claim to be above it, but in truth they are delighted to be the absorbing subject of conversation when a woman is the converser. Any girl, however devoid of physical charm, if she possesses refinement and tact, can win the man she admires if she understands the art of keeping him entertained about himself and gives him to understand in a subtle manner that his characteristics, his aims, his desires and interests are matters of continual observation and study to her. The woman who undertakes such a course of action must be modest, however, and in no way thrust herself upon the man's notice. She must not be bold or self-assertive, for these are repulsive qualities to a man.

She must simply utilize her opportunities and be patient. A man, on the contrary, can make his opportunities to see a woman, and when he uses boldness and self-assertion in his suit she is all the better pleased, so long as he continues to occupy her time by talking about her, with only occasional references to himself and other people.

Therefore, it is not difficult to understand how, while an earnest woman might be slow in succeeding in her wish to win and hold the regard of one man, a busy, trifling man might accumulate thirty fiancees with ease and celerity.

Yet, on the other hand, woman has more latitude than man for conversation of this kind. A man is perfectly willing a woman should discuss his faults, and delights in having her analyze his sins and weaknesses (before marriage), with occasional laudations of his virtues; while a woman limits him to the recounting of her charming qualities and to anxious solicitude for her welfare.

The only fault she allows him to refer to is her ability to break hearts, or her cruelty to men who adore her, or her delicate physical organization. Most lovers talk of the charms of their sweethearts during courtship. Few husbands make the virtues of their wives a topic of conversation in the family circle—hence the divorce court is busy.

Few lovers are so tactless as to devote many minutes to lauding the virtues or charms of other women to their sweethearts.

Accuse Wives of Jealousy.

But, many husbands enjoy this topic of conversation, and accuse their wives of jealousy if they seem uninterested.

The successful bigamist surely would know better than to pursue such a course; so while better men have been losing their wives and sweethearts he has been winning an embarrassment of riches.

Which Is the Better Business Policy, He Asks, the Spending of $60,000,000 for Our Navy or War Costing This Country $2,000,000,000?

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

A BUSINESS man who refused to spend $100 in order to save $1,000 would be regarded among business men as miserly and incapable.

The representatives of a rich nation who would refuse to spend fifty or sixty million dollars within two years to save an expenditure of two thousand million dollars ought inevitably to be classed as stupid, miserly and unpatriotic. The comparision is perfect with the conditions of to-day.

War with Japan is not only possible, but it is not improbable within the present month.

If we have war with Japan the experts who know and not merely the gossips who speculate are a unit in the belief that within a few weeks Japan could easily capture the Phillipines, the Hawaiian Islands and the Sandwich Islands.

Might Land an Army.

It is also agreed that Japan might land an army by trasports through Puget Sound upon American soil, make a demonstration against our beautiful City of San Francisco and invest the Panama Canal for bombardment or surrender.

The value of these island possessions are insignificant as compared with the after expense. This nation could not afford and certainly would not afford to suffer this indignity at the hands of the Japanese soldiers and sailors. If it took the last dollar of our money and the last contingent of our soldiers the United States would be compelled to vindicate its honor and its prestige by recapturing what Japan should win and fortify against us.

There is not a statistician of war who does not believe that this gigantic effort would cost our country between one thousand and two thousand million dollars.

The records of the Russian-Japanese war vindicate the belief that this is not an extravagant estimate of the cost.

Two thousand million dollars is a prodigious sum even in the day of magnificent figures in money.

These two thousand million dollars, plainly stated, would represent just exactly what the stupid, selfish, unpatriotic and mercenary statesmanship of our recent Congresses have cost this country.

Japan Would Be Silent.

There is no escaping the arraignment. If the naval programs which have been presented to Congress within the last ten years by men who are paid by the Government to tell the Government what is needed for the national defense had been adopted, as they ought to have been, by the representatives of the people there would have been a navy large enough to make this war, which is now probable, not only improbable, but impossible.

Japan would never have voiced a comparative ultimatum and certinly never have ventured upon a war against such a navy as our programs had required.

The men who have been responsible by their blindness and parsimony for our debilitated navy and our unpreparedness in national defense must inevitably be held responsible for the record—responsible for war and its expense and its humiliation.

It is useless and weak for the men to plead that they did not know and could not foresee.

It was their business as statesmen, looking beyond the present moment, to know the probabilities of the future. Their intelligence has been appealed to by information and by argument from experts and veterans so as to leave them no excuse save obstinacy not to have understood and to have foreseen.

The narrow selfishness of local and district legislation and the desire for personal preferment will always be held as the explanation of the unpatriotic and parsimonious policy which has crippled our navy and made possible the humiliation that seems to be at hand.

The only possible reparation which these blind and stingy statesmen can make to the country and to the people is to stand ready to vote now for prompt and liberal expenditures for the national defense.

"Pork Barrel" Politics.

They must do more than this. They must realize that the present instance, which follows fast upon an incident that occurred two years ago, may be and probably will be followed by a similar incident at a near-coming time.

And, whether or not the present difference with Japan should be composed or should result in a prodigiously expensive war, the representatives of the American people in Congress can only vindicate their stupendous folly and narrowness of the last decade by voting in succeeding years for a naval program which will make impossible the shameful conditions and the frowning menace of to-day.

Hereafter the American Congressman who votes to squander millions upon the pork barrel and his own re-election and refuses to expend the necessary millions for his country's peace and its defense must be branded as incompetent and treasonable and sent back to the people who were foolish enough to send him to Washington.

THE Pharisees are not all dead yet.

Bob and his sister Polly, in a crowd, walked all the way home from Sabbath school, a full quarter of a mile, each with an arm around the other. While passing over the little bridge they kissed with a smack that was heard above the rippling of the brook.

Bob and Polly had not been home ten minutes when their invalid mother was heard to shriek, "If you grown children do not stop quarreling you will kill me dead!"

Bob and Polly are Pharisees and simpletons.

A Baalam on Broadway, or in Bowery, who, through a megaphone, proclaims his love for his mother, is not to be trusted by her or by any one else. If she has any sense or decency herself she will, upon hearing him, pluck him gentiy by the sleeve and say, "Don't do that, my boy! Come home and whisper it in my ear or speak it to me with your eyes or manifest it with some little deed of kindness or act of courtesy."

Baalam is a Pharisee and a fool!

Schnickman, at the club, loudly and repeatedly declared that his wife was the sweetest, prettiest little woman in the world. He offered to bet $25 that he loved her better than any other husband ever loved a wife.

Schnickman was cashier at the ice plant. One night he absconded with the funds. A week later his wife and babies disappeared.

On entering Schnickman's house his bondsmen and the officers found a closet full of empty jugs and bottles. In the dining room they found a buggy whip that showed much use. Schnickman kept no horse and was never known to drive one.

Schnickman is a Pharisee and a villain!

When the old prophet Elijah, thinking there were none righteous left on earth, went up on Mount Horeb, as he was commanded, he stood to hear his Lord's condemnation of a wayward world.

Elijah was probably surprised when God's wrath was not proclaimed in the tempest, or in the earthquake, or in the thunderlight.

After these noisy things had passed by a still small voice informed Elijah that there were yet seven thousand Israelites whose lips had not kissed Baal.

The Still-Small-Voice was no Pharisee.

Mother-love ever expresses itself "Sweet and low, sweet and low," like the wind of a Western sea, while her little one, her pretty one, sleeps.

Mother is not a Pharisee.

Love may get itself expressed in the odor of a violet or in the dream of a kiss or in the memory of a silent sunset.

True lover never blusters.

True love is not loud.

TURTLES	000
CRACKERS	30

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, May 20.—The Crackers and the Turtles hooked up in the second game of their series here this afternoon.

Atlanta registered three runs in the first inning.

Bill Smith selected Chappelle and Dunn to do the battery work for the Crackers, while Bernhard designated Kroh and Seabaugh for the Turtles.

THE GAME:

FIRST INNING.

Love fouled out to Smith. Baerwald out, Bisland to Agler. Schweitzer flied out to Bailey. NO RUNS.

Long walked. Bailey sacrificed, Ward to Abstein. Alperman drove one through Ward too hot to handle, got two bases on it and Long scored. Schweitzer let the ball get by him in left field for an error and Alperman scored. Welchonce lined out to Shanley. Smith got a base on balls. Bisland drove a three-bagger to deep left center and Smith tallied. Bisland tried to score when Seabaugh let the ball get by him, but was out, Seabaugh to Kroh. THREE RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Ward flied to Long. Abstein lifted one to Welchonce, who let it get away for an error and Abstein took second. Butler flied to Long. Shanley out, Bisland to Agler. NO RUNS.

Agler walked. Dunn bunted to Kroh, who threw to second to get Agler, but it was too late. Chappelle fanned. Long popped out to Butler. Bailey fanned. NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Seabaugh out, Alperman to Agler. Kroh popped to Bisland. Love walked. Baerwald was an easy out, Alperman to Agler. NO RUNS.

Cornell Men Prove Good Breadwinners

ITHACA, N. Y., May 20.—It is found that 1,069 Cornell undergraduates are partially self-suppporting, and their combined earnings a year amount to $184,906, or $173 per capita, by figures compiled by an organization of working students.

This sum represents 32 per cent of their college expenses, which amounted to $573,794. Only 122 students are earning their room and board.

Of individual earnings, 380 men made between $100 and $200, 218 between $200 and $300, 51 from $300 to $400, 31 between $400 and $500, and 42 more than $500.

CASES READY AGAINST LEE AND LEO FRANK

Solicitor General Dorsey Declares All Evidence Will Go to the Grand Jury Friday.

THINKS MORE ARRESTS WILL MAKE NO CHANGE

Mrs. Jane Carr Begs Women to Help Solve Mystery—Burns Agent on New Trail.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey announced Tuesday morning that the State's case against Leo M. Frank and Newt Lee in connection with the Phagan murder, would go to the Grand Jury Friday of this week. He said that he could anticipate no new arrest or development that would make it necessary to change this plan.

Mrs. Jane F. Carr, 251 Ponce De-Leon Avenue, in an open letter, asked every woman in Atlanta to contribute to the fund to employ the Burns detective and Mr. Burns himself to work in the Phagan investigation. She appealed to women of every walk in life to give according to their means.

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?" was the subject of her letter.

Felder Asks for Funds.

The Burns fund, after going above the $2,000 mark, slacked considerably. Colonel Thomas B. Felder said this sum would not be sufficient if it became necessary for the Burns men to make an exhaustive investigation, and asked the people to contribute liberally to the end that Atlanta's greatest mystery be satisfactorily cleared.

C. W. Tobie, chief of the Burns' criminal investigation department, was even more optimistic Tuesday morning than he was Monday that the Phagan mystery would be cleared to the satisfaction of Atlanta.

"Another day on the scene has only convinced me that the crime is far from the most baffling the Burns detectives have solved," he said at his hotel Tuesday morning. "I am not at liberty to make public the result of my investigation, but we have certainly made progress."

Search for Phone Girl.

City detectives are searching for a telephone girl who was reported to have heard a conversation over the telephone the night of the murder between two persons said to be attaches of the pencil factory.

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford said that he had learned from a responsible source of a switchboard operator who was reported to have overheard a conversation that would be of the greatest importance in the Phagan case. He would not say whether he had learned the identity of the girl.

A corps of department detectives were detailed to the search that will take in every private branch exchange in Atlanta.

Colonel Felder said that he had heard nothing of the report and was quite sure the Burns detective had not. The Pinkertons, through Harry Scott, said they attached little importance to the report, but that if it were true the girl could be easily located.

City detectives and the Pinkertons spent several hours at the pencil factory plant last night. The premises were minutely searched for new clews. The result was not made public.

Working independent of every one, Tobie, the Burns agent, was away from his hotel bright and early Tuesday morning following up a lead that he said had been heretofore overlooked. He will make daily reports to Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Colonel Felder.

Here is Mrs. Carr's letter urging all women to interest themselves in the Mary Phagan case:

Calls It Women's Case.

"To the Women of Atlanta:

"The Mary Phagan case is our case, and it behooves every woman to set the seal of condemnation upon lawlessness and demand that no means shall be unused, no expense spared in

FLAGLER, OIL AND RAIL MAGNATE, IS DEAD

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA., May 20.—Henry M. Flagler, wealthy railroad builder and owner, died here today.

Mr. Flagler had been sick for three months, although it was thought several weeks ago that he would recover. Mr. and Mrs. Flagler came here in February. At that time he was suffering from excessive nervousness. A general breakdown followed.

Mr. Flagler died at 10 o'clock. The end was peaceful. To those at the bedside it seemed that the sick man died in his sleep. Among those in the death chamber were Mrs. Flagler and Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler.

The body will be placed in the mausoleum in the Flagler plot at St. Augustine. The date of the funeral probably will not be fixed until to-night.

Mr. Flagler, one of America's foremost financial giants, and known in the South as the "King of Florida," was born in a little village just south of Rochester, N. Y., in 1850. His father was pastor of the village church, and at the age of 14 Henry decided that his mother and sister could get along more comfortably if he ceased to be one of the family burden.

Goes Out to Seek Fortune.

So he started from home, with a few dollars in his pocket, and gradually worked his way westward to Republic, Ohio, where he went to work in a country store for $5 per month and board.

Strict economy soon enabled young Flagler to open a grain business in Bellevue, Ohio. And here began a little business which ultimately result-

STRICKEN ON EVE OF HIS WEDDING FIANCE DIES

R. W. Sutton Victim of Meningitis as He Planned to Marry Miss Lillian Tutwiler.

Stricken on the eve of his wedding day, R. W. Sutton, 25 years old, of 419 Washington Street, is dead at the Grady Hospital—a victim of meningitis. His bride-to-be, Miss Lillian A. Tutwiler, 300 South Pryor Street, is prostrated and his aged mother, Mrs. T. B. Sutton, added this new sorrow to that cast over her by the death of her husband a month ago.

Although but a few doors down the corridor from her son, Mrs. Sutton, who is paralyzed and unable to move, has not been informed of her son's demise. Physicians feared that this second shock would prove fatal to her.

The younger Sutton's death occurred at 2 o'clock Tuesday morning. It was the culmination of a stroke of meningitis the day before he was to have married Miss Tutwiler, three weeks ago. With the same affliction his father had died.

Fiancee Became His Nurse.

Following his removal to the hospital, his fiancee became his nurse. During the three weeks of anxiety which came, when death was ever present and physicians shook their heads in forebodings, the young couple did not despair. Miss Tutwiler kept her newly-made wedding gown in readiness for the wedding which she was sure would come.

In his conscious moments the young bridegroom-to-be talked constantly of the happiness that lay in store for them when he got well. Nurses and attendants at the hospital heard with aching hearts the plans for the future that the couple made as during the long days and nights they sat holding hands.

Mr. Sutton was alone when death

5 THRASHED IN COURT BY BURTON SMITH IN FIGHT OVER WITNESS

Well Known Lawyer Whips One After Another Before Deputy Sheriffs End Bout---Hysterical Women in Scramble to Escape from Courtroom

Burton Smith, well-known attorney and brother of Senator Hoke Smith, on Tuesday afternoon thrashed five men who objected to him conversing in the corridors of the court rooms in the Thrower building with a woman witness in the famous Crawford will case.

Two of the men, C. W. Walton, of Buckhead, and W. H. Byrd, 41 West Twelfth Street, were badly beaten up, both showing black eyes and contusions on their faces where Smith struck them. The other three men also were given severe drubbings before friends and policemen separated the belligerents.

According to eyewitnesses of the fight, Attorney Smith had stopped Mrs. Cash as she passed through the corridors of the building and was talking to her. Walton, it is claimed, approached and said:

"Here, you; don't talk to that woman!"

"What do you care?" asked Smith. "Do you own her?"

"Yes, I do," answered Walton, and, it is said, raised his arm as though intending to strike the attorney.

Walton is a powerfully built man, fully as large as the attorney. Hardly had the words left his mouth, however, when Attorney Smith lunged forward and struck Walton squarely on the point of the jaw. Walton fell limply to the floor, and Byrd rushed into the fray. He was met with a stiff right arm jolt from Mr. Smith and was knocked down for the count.

Three Men Enter Fray.

Then three men who had entered the court house with Walton and Byrd, and who were with them when the attorney knocked them down, leaped at Smith. The attorney met them, and knocked them down as fast as they came at him. One of them he knocked down twice, while one blow sufficed to put the other two hors de combat.

Before the five men could arise and rush the attorney, deputy sheriffs, policemen and friends of the attorney rushed between them and prevented further hostilities. Included in the rescue party were Deputy Sheriffs John S. Owens, Dave Goodlin, Newton Garner and Attorneys Reuben Arnold and Colonel James Anderson.

Attorney Smith's hand was bleeding from the force of the blows he had struck the five men, and on one of his knuckles was a wound from one of his opponent's teeth. His friends started to take him out of the building, and as they passed Walton, the latter began getting up from the floor.

Wanted to Continue Bout.

"I'm ready for you again," he remarked.

Mr. Smith tried to break away from his friends and expressed a desire to again knock Walton down, but he was restrained and went to his office, where physicians dressed his wounds. Walton and Byrd and the other three men left the building immediately.

The fight lasted about two minutes.

Several women who were in the corridor near the belligerents, became hysterical and fairly fought their way into the court room. Deputy sheriffs were called to quiet the excitement.

Mrs. Cash Tells Story.

The woman over whom the fight started was Mrs. Cora Cash, of Buckhead. According to Mrs. Cash, she and her daughter, Mrs. Violet Whitmire, were sitting on a bench near the entrance to the court room, when Attorney Smith came up and began talking to Mrs. Whitmire, an attractive young woman.

Then, Mrs. Cash says, Walton and Byrd came up and demanded that Smith stop talking to the young woman. Smith retaliated with his question as to the ownership of the woman, and the fight followed.

J. S. James, representing the heirs in the Crawford case and retained by Walton and Byrd, announced after the fight that he will at once have warrants issued for the arrest of Attorney Reuben Arnold and Mr. Smith and also for a man named J. C. Cox, who, it is alleged, held Walton while Smith struck him. Arnold, it is alleged, kicked Byrd while he was on the floor.

Mr. Smith declares that during the hearing he had been forced, in order to bring out certain points, to use language that might have been a bit aggressive. He says he met Mrs. Cash in the hallway later, and she told him she didn't think he had used proper language in his interrogation. Mr. Smith was explaining and apologizing for whatever he might have said that would hurt her feelings.

Roosevelt's Double Searching for Wife

MADISON, WIS., May 20.—Albert Monroe Graves, who describes himself as Colonel Roosevelt's double, except that his teeth are more human than Roosevelt's, has written to Secretary of State Donald, asking that a wife be found for him. Graves lives in Alberta, Canada.

In his letter to the Secretary of State he said:

"I can lick Roosevelt at anything. I never failed to carry my own precinct and I was never licked by a Democrat."

Judge Anderson expressed himself as greatly pleased with Judge Broyles' methods and his determination to enforce law.

Mr. Flagler used to ship his carloads of grain to Cleveland, where it was sold for him by a young commission merchant named John D. Rockefeller.

Loses All in Salt Venture.

After amassing a fortune of $50,000 in Bellevue, he went to Saginaw, Mich., and made an unsuccessful venture in the salt business, losing every dollar of his money. With the aid of money furnished by his wife's relatives, he moved to Cleveland and reentered the grain business. He renewed his acquaintance with John D. and William Rockefeller, who were at that time confining their efforts to the oil refining business. He became interested in the brothers' new venture and in 1867, with the aid of more money from his wife's relatives, he entered into a $100,000 partnership with the Rockefellers and Samuel Andrews.

Wife Becomes Insane.

Mr. Flagler's second marriage occurred in 1883, and in the next ten years his fortune increased by leaps and bounds. His wife became the mistress of a fine mansion on Fifth Avenue, New York, as well as a palatial country home on Long Island and in Florida, and to all outward appearances Henry M. Flagler was the happiest man in the world. Then a terrible misfortune came into his life.

His wife's mind became unbalanced. The grief-stricken man kept the awful truth hidden as long as possible. He paid thousands and thousands of dollars to alienists in the hope of restoring her mentality, but her condition gradually grew worse. When, in 1899, the unfortunate woman finally became unmanageably, the Standard Oil magnate was forced to have his wife declared legally insane.

Divorces Insane Wife.

The following year a law was passed by the Florida Legislature, whereby permanent insanity was made ample grounds for a divorce. It was alleged at the time that this law was passed for the benefit of Mr. Flagler, who had come to be a power in Florida as a result of his vast railroad and hotel enterprises.

He devoted a great deal of his money and energy toward the upbuilding of the State of Florida, and making the southeastern peninsula one of the greatest winter resorts in the world. His greatest work in this connection was the completion recently of the extension of the Florida East Coast Railway from Knights' Key to Key West, which is known as the "railroad over the sea." This stretch of track is 156 miles in length and connects the chain of islands between the mainland and Key West. Its construction was one of the greatest engineering feats of the present age, as it is built almost entirely over water.

Wife Digs Miner's Body From Cave-in

OROVILLE, CAL., May 20.—Frank Martin, a miner, was killed by a landslide on his property along the Feather River, near Oroville. He was found entombed in the dirt by his wife, who went to hunt for him when he did not return to his home at the usual time.

She made her ghastly discovery and found her husband crushed and deadburied in the earth and rock that had fallen on him. She returned to her cabin for help and with the aid of her children dug the body from its untimely grave.

3 Greatest Makers Of History Named

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 20.—An American, a Spaniard and a Latin-American were declared to be the three greatest makers of history since Christ, by Senor Don Jose De Diego, speaker of the Porto Rican House of Delegates in an address before the Spanish-American Athenaeum in the new national museum.

He said they were Christopher Columbus, who discovered the new world; George Washington, who led it to ffeedom, and Bolivar, the liberator of South America, who freed Latin-America from the Spanish yoke.

came. Miss Tutwiler, exhausted and worn out by her constant vigil at the bedside of her lover, was prostrated Monday when told by physicians that there was no hope. She visited Sutton for the last time late Monday afternoon, when already death was at the door. She was the last person Mr. Sutton recognized.

Recognized Her While Dying.

When she came into his room and laid her hand on the wasted arm, the eyes that were fast closing in the last sleep lighted up. Choking with sobs, the two bade each other goodbye, and Miss Tutwiler, prostrated by her sorrow, was taken to her home.

After Miss Tutwiler left his room Sutton sank rapidly, and soon relapsed into a coma from which he never awakened. Death came to his relief a few hours later. The young man's father, T. B. Sutton, died recently of the same disease.

Mr. Sutton and Miss Tutwiler had planned to be married on April 23. Arrangements had been made for the wedding, the minister had been engaged, and the friends of the happy couple had been invited. On April 22 Mr. Sutton suddenly was taken ill. Thinking the illness soon would pass, no halt was made in the plans for the wedding. On the morning of April 23 Mr. Sutton was suffering intense pain and a physician was called. In the afternoon of the same day he diagnosed the trouble as meningitis, and ordered the young man taken to Grady Hospital.

Girl Plans for Wedding.

The friends of the young people were notified of the illness of Mr. Sutton, and the wedding was postponed. Confident that her lover soon would recover from his illness, Miss Tutwiler fully completed the final details of her trousseau.

But the wedding gown was never to be worn, and to-day it lies unfolded, emphasizing the grief of the young woman. Miss Tutwiler was hysterical with grief when she learned of her fiance's death, and on Tuesday morning was prostrated at her home. During the day her family became alarmed, and physicians were called. Her condition is considered serious.

Press Censorship Asked in Florida

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., May 20.—Representative Darnell, of Key West, has introduced a resolution in the Florida House for a press censorship, particularly for the weekly papers of the State. His resolution follows:

"Whereas, a number of corporation-serving newspapers have published malicious, untruthful and misleading editorials relative to proceedings, thereby doing grave injustice to members of this House,

"Resolved, That a publicity committee first be appointed to prepare series of concise articles for the newspapers, especially the weekly press, in order that the public may be correctly informed regarding the proceedings."

Intervention Urged By Mayor of El Paso.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Describing conditions in Mexico as similar to those in France before the French revolution, J. U. Sweeney, Mayor of El Paso, Tex., is telling Government officials here that intervention in Mexico is the only solution of that nation's problems.

He declares that the peons worked from sunrise to sunset before the Madero uprising, but that subsequently they have found it possible to make a better living in shorter hours by looting and they will be reluctant to return to old conditions. The Mayor declares that American interests have suffered greatly in Mexico.

Moderator Struggles to Keep Order as Discussion Over Union College Charges Grows Bitter.

The bitter controversy which for the past two days has been rife within the ranks of the Northern Assembly regarding the Union Theological Seminary of New York, was brought to a sudden close late Tuesday with the adoption of a motion by Dr. Mark A. Matthews that a committee of seven be appointed to investigate the charges of heresy against the Seminary and report at next year's meeting.

Dr. Matthews' proposal was accepted almost unanimously by a rising vote.

Immediately after the question was settled, the entire meeting sang, 'Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

Dr. Francis Brown, President Union Theological Seminary, who vigorously defended the doctrinal views of his college.

Stormy outbursts, silenced by the active gavel of Moderator Stone, only to break out afresh, marked the bitter Union Theological Seminary controversy on the floor of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly Tuesday forenoon.

Half a dozen men were on their feet simultaneously, clamoring for recognition by the chair. Toward the close of the forenoon session, the discussion was involved in a tangle of parliamentary procedure, from which relief was obtained only by the recess taken until the afternoon.

The intense feeling of the commissioners cropped out in many different ways, and the moderator was able to maintain a semblance of order only with the greatest difficulty.

"Sit Down," the Cry.

An unexpected but futile effort was made to avoid the issue by tabling the resolution condemning the seminary. The majority, however, were eager to have the question settled once and for all.

Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., was the author of the motion to postpone action indefinitely.

"Sit down!" some militant preacher at the side of the room shouted as soon as he realized the import of the motion.

The eys of Moderator Stone blazed as he pounded thunderously with his gavel.

"I want no such expression in this Assembly," he ordered. "I am saying this to the man who made that remark. I do not care who he may be."

Spirited Defense.

The debate proper had not begun when the morning session adjourned. Dr. Francis Brown, president of the seminary which is under fire, was permitted to close the remarks which he had started when the session adjourned Monday afternoon. After this ensued the maelstrom of motions and points of order that kept the session in a turmoil until recess.

Dr. Brown came to a spirited defense of Union Seminary, its directors and its faculty.

Many women were among the spectators in the packed balcony when the debate was started by Dr. Francis Brown, president of Union Seminary. The walls were lined by several score of men, who were compelled to stand. Even the upper gallery had its fringe of keenly interested listeners.

In the main auditorium every seat was taken. Ushers were instructed to keep the doors barred while the debate was in progress.

Moderator Stone ruled at the opening of the discussion that there should be no disorder of any sort. To insure the carrying out of his order, he forbade applause of any sort during or after the speeches.

He called upon Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, one of the instructors in Union Theological Seminary, and Rev. C. A. R. Janvier, of Philadelphia, to invoke the aid of God in deciding the question.

In spite of Moderator Stone's ruling that there should be no applause or manifestation of approval or disapproval, there was a marked murmur of dissent when President Brown, of Union Seminary, declared that he metophorically had been met at the door of the Assembly hall with a club with which it was purposed to "break his head."

"Waiting With Club."

"It is as though you had invited a friend to your home under the pretense of hospitality," he declared, "and then had met him at the door to crack open his skull.

"For the second minority report I knew nothing until ten days ago. It was signed by one man only, and he a member of the committee for only a few months. His report and his opinions had not been made a subject of conference. They were as unexpected as a thunderbolt.

"All of these criticisms, however, can be met without any difficulty. The author has been grossly misinformed and mistaken. In the first place, the annulling of the agreement of 1870 was done on the advice of two distinguished lawyers, who advised the directors they had gone too far under the life provisions in the charter in making the agreement at all."

Resents Charges.

Dr. Brown named the men who had been in charge of the affairs of the seminary for years as an evidence that it had been in the hands of capable, God-fearing directors and instructors.

He grew bitter when he came to comment on the arraignment of William Adams Brown, professor of systematic theology in the seminary.

"That criticism was most unjust and unwarranted," declared President Brown. "Professor Brown is one of the most ardent, earnest and sincere Presbyterians in this Assembly. So to attack his religious principles was cruel and not supported by any evidence. Terms were used that never should be used by one Christian in reference to another Christian or to any human being.

"That reference, too, to Hindu philosophy was a simple travesty—a simple travesty! I find it more difficult to be calm at this time. I don't want to lose my temper, but such unfast and unsupported charges have been hurled at this seminary that restraint is not wholly possible.

"Remember that the seminary asks nothing, seeks nothing. It is not represented here voluntarily. It came on invitation. We want to be of service to the Presbyterian Church, but if you can not use us, we do not care to try.

"The members of the faculty have given evidences of their Christian faith that should be accepted if the matter is considered at all. I hold, however, that discussion on the second minority report should have no place on this floor, as the report was never made a subject of conference.

"In regard to the students going forth from our seminary, I want to deny the scurrilous stories which have gone forth about the country. There is not a single man from the seminary who has been licensed by a presbytery who has denied his belief in the atoning work of Jesus, the resurrection of the Lord and the other fundamental doctrines concerning which we have been accused of lack of faith."

Dr. Brown spoke quietly and without any evidence of rancor until he came to discuss the charges of Christian infidelity lodged against his seminary and its faculty. Then his voice rose and he lost the poise that had characterized his calm discussion of the legal phase of the seminary's action in abrogating the agreement of 1870.

The friends of the seminary applauded lightly when Dr. Brown was finished, despite the injunction of the moderator that there was to be no manifestation whatever of approval or disapproval.

The moderator followed the address of Dr. Brown by a statement of the procedure which would be employed in taking up the formal debate on the reports. The confusion which developed was largely the result of a shower of varying suggestions of slightly different lines of procedure the commissioners thought advisable.

When recess came it was practically decided that every speaker would have 10 minutes in which to debate the reports. One report was to be discussed by a speaker favorable to it, then by one of its adherents, and after this the third.

If any person in the Assembly had a proposition not coinciding with any of the three reports, he was to be given the opportunity of presenting his views after the others had concluded.

When the round had been made, the first report was to be taken up again, and this procedure repeated until the Assembly was ready to take a vote. Before the voting, Dr. William G. Wylie, of New York, who presents the majority report favorable to the seminary; Dr. John Davies, of Philadelphia, who presented the first unfavorable minority report; Dr. F. C. Monfort, of Cincinnati, the author of the second minority report, which was strongest in its accusations of heresy, and President Brown, of the seminary, were to be allowed ten minutes each for summing up their arguments.

"There is to be no lobbying or politics in this debate," said Moderator Stone, firmly. "I shal lendeavor to be guided by the Spirit of God and my best Christian judgment, and I pray that you will do the same. I shall try to be fair. I shall try to favor no side above antoehr. If I make a ruling that may be questioned by you, I shall be glad to take you into my confidence and tell you exactly why I do it."

Southern Body Stirred by New Statement of Belief

The amended brief statement of belief was adopted by the assembly by a vote of 119 to 64.

A motion to adopt the ad interim committee's report on the statement of belief, as read by Dr. J. M. Wells, created a furor of discussion at Tuesday's session of the Southern Assembly.

The statement is a corrected form of that drawn up by last year's committee. After it was read, Dr. T. S. Knox, of Texas, opened the discussion by declaring first that it was wholly unnecessary.

"The adoption of this statement would make void all possibilities of a union between the three Presbyterian bodies," declared Dr. Knox. "The article is not only bad grammar but it is also bad theology."

Cries of shame followed Dr. Knox's speech.

"It is outrageous," declared Dr. McPheeters, "that such words should be uttered in a Presbyterian church."

Dr. A. P. Gregory, of Tennessee, spoke, declaring that the statement was badly needed. Dr. J. B. Works, of Texas, contradicted Dr. Knox's assertion that the change was not desired in the West, by stating that it would be welcomed in that district.

Following other short addresses, the motion was tabled until the afternoon session.

The change in the basis of representation, which has become a law by the enactment of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, will increase materially the representation to future Assemblies.

The change means that in future the commissioners to the General Assembly shall be chosen as follows: Every Presbytery shall be entitled to elect one minister and one elder as commissioners, and all Presbyteries where the combined membership of ministers and communicants exceed 4,000 will be entitled to elect one minister and one elder additional. This ratio will continue with the addition of each four thousand members in the Presbytery.

Among the first features of the Assembly Tuesday morning was the fraternal messenger from the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church.

The "special order" for 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon was a report of the committee on foreign correspondence.

Beneficence Discussed.

Consideration of the report of the standing committee on systematic beneficence was resumed. The part of the report presented was with reference to the permanent committee of systematic beneficence.

The only item of the report that provoked discusison was that with reference to the restoration of the power of the permanent committee to nominate members and secretaries of the excutive committees of the Assembly. This power formerly belonged to the committee, but was taken from it at the Assembly of 1912. The report of the standing committee recommended the restoration of this power, but with the provision that it should not deprive any other member of the Assembly similar right.

Dr. W. M. F. Alexander opposed the restoraation of this power, upon the ground that it would mean too much centralization of power; that in time the association of this committee with the executive committees might beget upon the part of members of the latter the disposition to bow to the former in order to receive nomination for the committees.

Clyce to the Defense.

Dr. T. S. Clyce met this opposition with the statement that he had been a member of the Permanent Committee on Systematic Beneficence when it possessed the power under consideration and that there was no log rolling on the part of any one; further, that it is not likely there would be such at any time. He urged that the Assembly have more concentration of power in the transactions of its business.

The report of the committee was adopted and the power of the Permanent Committee was restored.

The time for uniting all Presbyterian churches is not yet ripe. This is the decision of the Southern Presbyterian Church, unanimous apparently. If there were any who opposed, they failed to voice their sentiment against such an overwhelming vote for the retention of the Southern church's individuality.

Report of the committee on overtures against uniting was adopted almost unanimously. It stated that the time was not just ripe for the uniting of the Southern church with other branches of the Presbyterian. The fact that negotiations are already under way between the Southern Presbyterian Church and the United, the present time appeared as inopportune for a discussion of union.

The beneficence committee's report recommended that the percentage for foreign missions be cut from 60 to 54 per cent; that home missions receive 27 instead of 21 per cent; Christian education and ministerial relief to receive 14 1-2 instead of 14 per cent and Sunday school publications reduced from 4 to 3 1-2 per cent.

SECRET WEDDING ROMANCE CLIMAX

Ben McDonnold, a postoffice clerk, and his bride, who was Miss Haribel Colson, enjoyed a honeymoon of nearly two days before their friends found out what had happened. They were married Sunday, but it was not until to-day that the news went out and congratulations began coming in.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Colson, 257 Crumley Street, and the bridegroom a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. McDonnold, of College Park. They were married at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon by the Rev. V. C. Norcross at his residence, Druid Hills. The only attendants—and the only ones who knew of the marriage until to-day—were the bridegroom's brothers and sister, Hoke McDonnold, Paul McDonnold and Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Willingham.

It was not exactly a runaway affair, but was the next thing to it, for the young couple told their parents nothing about their intentions. The wedding was the culmination of a romance begun in Birmingham just before Christmas.

The bride's father is claim agent for the A., B. & A. Railroad, having moved to Atlanta only two months ago. McDonnold met Miss Colson while clerking in her father's office, but it was not known they were attached to one another.

But Colson moved to Atlanta—and so did McDonnold. He started wooing in earnest, and last Sunday he and Miss Colson brought their brief romance to the only logical conclusion. They are now at home with the bridegroom's family, waiting to fit out a home of their own in College Park.

FORMER ATLANTAN FOR U. S. PRINTER

WASHINGTON, May 20.—President Wilson, it was learned to-day, has about made up his mind to appoint W. V. Turley, of Chattanooga, Tenn., to the post of Public Printer, which pays $5,500 a year. Although there are a large number of candidates for this place, which is peculiarly a presidential appointment, the race some time ago narrowed down to a contest between Cornelius Ford, of Hoboken, N. J., and Turley.

The President is said to be personally in favor of Ford, but the many indorsements obtained and presented by the friends of Turley have greatly impressed the President.

Mr. Turley is a former Atlantan, having resided here in 1909, when he was engaged in theatrical publicity work for the Wells Syndicate as editor of The Pilot, a weekly theatrical magazine. Since then he has operated a job printing establishment in Chattanooga. Before coming to Atlanta he was city editor of The Chattanooga News and was with other Chattanooga papers. He also has done newspaper work in Washington. He is a member of the Chattanooga Typographical Union.

White City Park Now Open

GATE CITY GUARD RECEIVED BY PRESIDENT

Noted Atlanta Military Company Parades Washington Streets and Visits White House.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—With a battalion of the National Guard of the District of Columbia acting as escort and the band of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army heading the parade, the old Gate City Guard of Atlanta marched triumphantly up Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House this afternoon and was formally welcomed to the Capital by President Wilson. Included in the battalion of guardsmen which formed the escort to the famous Georgia contingent was the crack company of Washington Light Infantry, the showiest organization in the militia of the District.

Major J. F. Burke was in command of the Old Guard and the Georgia company made a brilliant showing in its fancy full dress uniforms.

White House Reception.

The parade began at the Continental Hotel, the headquarters of the visitors, and continued to the historic east entrance of the White House. Arrived there, the guardsmen were met by Senator Hoke Smith and Representative William Schley Howard of Georgia and taken into the east room, the scene of all state functions since the White House was erected, President Wilson, accompanied by Major Rhoads, his military aide, entered the room and the guardsmen were presented individually to the President.

Later in the afternoon the members of the Gate City Guard were taken to the American League baseball park, where they witnessed a series of exhibition drills by the cadet organizations from the District of Columbia. The guardsmen, for years crack drillers of the South, enjoyed the exhibition immensely.

To Baltimore Wednesday.

From the exhibition drill the members of the guard returned to their hotel. To-night they will go to a theater and early to-morrow morning they will leave for Baltimore, to be entertained by the Fifth Maryland Regiment.

The visitors arrived at 8 o'clock this morning over the Southern Railway and went at once to their hotel, which is close to the Capitol and the Union Station. There were no special arrangements for the morning entertainment, so most of them remained at the hotel in their fatigue uniforms. Some of them visited the Capitol and other points of interest, revisiting the scenes of their famous peace-making trip of 1879.

PHAGAN CASE IN READINESS FOR INDICTMENT

bringing to justice the foul villain who perpetrated this unparalleled crime. His freedom is a menace to the honor and life of every woman in our community.

"But no mistake must be made. Some of our most prominent men, and a few big-hearted women, have taken the initiative in contributing to the fund which obtains the best detective talent in America, and in the increasing of that fund we women have our opportunity.

Wants All to Contribute.

"Let every woman give something, however small the amount, and in the aggregation of these such a sum will be acquired as shall employ and reward all the legal and detective talent that has been so continuously and generously given, and will be given in the search for the criminal.

"To systematize this wholesale giving, let the women in all departments of endeavor—in offices, in plants, in stores or wherever women congregate, select one of their number to receive the individual contributions and send, as a whole, the amount they realize to The Georgian, with these instructions: 'For the Mary Phagan Investigation Fund.' Let the same plan be pursued in neighborhoods.

"Let us be up and doing!

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?

(Signed) "MRS. JAMES F. CARR."

Black Scores Burns Man.

Detective John Black, who has been working on the Phagan case in conjunction with Pinkerton Detective Harry Scott, Tuesday declared that Detective Tobie, the Burns man, was not justified in his charge that certain features of the mystery have been overlooked.

"Mr. Tobie has gone entirely too far in his statements," said Detective Black. "He doesn't know what has been done by detectives on this case, and doesn't know what evidence we have in our possession. We are not showing our hand to everyone who comes along. If he can show us some thing in this case that has been overlooked, then we'll think he knows what he is talking about, but unless he does show something, we'll attach no importance, whatever, to his statements."

Detective Scott declined to discuss the Burns detective's theory or position in the case. As to the Pinkerton's part in the affair, he said:

"We have worked this case from fully 500 different angles. Every possible phase and feature has been investigated. Nothing has been overlooked. The public has no idea of the many and varied angles that have been presented by this tragedy."

Lynn to Know His Fate Next Month

Alonzo L. Lynn's motion for a new trial, whereby he hopes to evade a life sentence for the killing of F. M. Hightower at the Lynn home in Laurens County, December 18, 1912, will be decided by the Supreme Court after its next opinion day in the middle of June.

The motion was argued Monday before Justices Atkinson, Evans and Hill. Solicitor General Stephens of Laurens County and Judge John S. Adams argued for the affirmation of the lower court's decree. Stephen P. New and George B. Davis, of Dublin, represented Lynn.

Hightower, a Confederate veteran, was found dead in the Lynn home. A Burns detective, employed by the State, ferreted out evidence and adduced a theory of conspiracy, resulting in the indictment of Lynn and his wife, Alice Lynn.

Mrs. Lynn admitted firing the shot which killed the veteran, but swore he had made improper proposals to her. After deliberating five days, the jury acquitted Mrs. Lynn, but found Lynn guilty of murder, recommending life imprisonment. Judge Hawkins imposed the full sentence.

Motion for a new trial by Lynn's attorneys was predicated upon 21 assumptions of error. Chief among them was the charge that the Grand Jury sat in unlawful session, that improper testimony was admitted to evidence and that the evidence was insufficient to convict. The detective secured most of his evidence from a dictograph put in Lynn's calle while he awaited indictment.

Miss Hanson Scoffs at 'Temptations of Stage'

Blames Publicity for Popular Idea of Its Evils

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook.

"The evils of the stage? They are just the same—and many times not so bad—as the evils of other professions. Stage life isn't any more of a temptation to young girls than other walks of life."

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook, or Gladys Hanson, as she is known to fame, beautiful Atlanta actress who has just come back home for a six-weeks' vacation, stopped serving tea and leaned forward. She was at her country place out on Cleburne Avenue.

"The truth is this: The limelight is always turned, full force, on the stage when it is not on other professions. As soon as an actress does an imprudent or perhaps an unconventional thing, the news immediately spreads—and it gathers force as it spreads. Elsewhere there is less publicity, and therefore a better chance for covering things up, that's all."

Urges Stage for Girls.

Miss Hanson, who belongs to one of Georgia's oldest families, and who is in love with her art to her fingertips, has just finished a successful ten-months' season with David Belasco in "The Governor's Lady." In the six years she has been on the stage she has been wonderfully successful, having been with Frohman, Sothern and other big directors besides Belasco. She strongly advocates the stage as a profession for young women.

"There never have been such opportunities for capable young women as there are to-day," she declared, dropping a bit of lemon into a cup of tea, "and really it's almost nonsense to talk about stage evils and morals at all. The stigma that formerly attached to the theater is almost a thing of the past, for the simple reason that people have come more and more to realize that immorality is not confined to class, but is purely individual.

More Actors of Big Brains.

"Also year by year the stage is being more and more occupied by persons of big brains—big souls—people who are realities, and who are there because of the big 'call.'"

"And that 'call' is the great thing," she stressed. "I don't care what you say. When people follow their star, as it were—when they feel the burning of the 'spark' inside and set out to give it expression, it means the development of soul. And people of great souls can only be good.

"I grant this," she said, deprecatingly, "the world looks upon the stage from an outsider's standpoint, and, therefore, can only criticise from that angle, which may be entirely wrong.

"For instance, many times I have seen a man rush back to a dressing room, where the actress with whom he was to appear was in negligee and making up, to run over the lines in a coming scene. But I only wish that the public might see how in earnest it all is.

Had to Ignore Convention.

"The man is not sure of himself in the scene, and if he did not seize this moment, he might make a botch of the play, and he could not wait until the actress was all 'made up.'

"But, as they go over the lines they practically do not see each other—they are like two machines. The thought of everything is sunk in the play. He talks his lines in quick, high tones, and she comes in with hers to meet him. And the moment that is done he rushes out like mad to get ready to 'go on.'

"Don't you ever believe," Miss Hanson emphasized, "that the rules in practically all theaters are not strict. And in high-class houses it is practically the same as in your own home. The people are all big people—they're men and women—they're not silly nincompoops!

"Again, if a girl enters the profession, she can be sure that if she gets with a good director—and there are more good ones than otherwise—she is going to be pushed along to success—not only by her own effort, but by his—for he is just as anxious for her to make good as she is to make good herself.

Finds Splendid Associates.

"She will usually find a number of splendid women to associate with, too—if she'll keep her eyes open—and also a number of broad-minded men. There's where she may learn many things about her art—they will all help her—and that and working hard will get her her to the top if she has any 'possibilities' at all. If for no other reason, I would have been glad I had gone on the stage simply for the people I have met."

Miss Hanson expects to go abroad for the summer. She will return the latter part of August for rehearsals, being again with Belasco. She and Emma Dunn, one of her best friends, will again appear for a time in "The Governor's Lady," later taking up other work Mr. Belasco has not yet made public. While in Atlanta Miss Snook expects to be quite a great deal with her friends, a number of parties having been planned for her.

Calls Atlanta Hers, Too.

Speaking of Atlanta things, she said it almost made her angry—that is, it would if she wasn't so even-tempered, for which she took credit to herself—when she was out and people asked her how she liked "our" country club, or "our" city—or other things.

"Why, it's mine, too," she said. "I don't feel that just because I'm away in the winter this isn't my home. Why, I grew up here and I belong to the place! Of course, it's usually strangers, who don't know, who ask me things like that; but, all the same, it gives me a funny little feeling around my heart. I feel just like I ought to be asking them instead, being"—she hesitated and laughed—"as I was here first!"

Ousted Official Holds City Cash

WASHINGTON, GA., May 20.—Whether the Mayor or City Treasurer is the legal custodian of city funds will be argued at Warrenton to-day before Judge B. F. Walker, of Toombs Circuit, on a writ of mandamus brought by the Mayor and Council of Washington against City Treasurer F. H. Ficklen.

Mayor Favor claims that he has the right to say when and for what purposes the city finances shall be used, while Treasurer Ficklen holds to a contrary view. When $30,000 of bond money for city paving was placed in the hands of Treasurer Ficklen, Mayor Favor issued vouchers against the fund aggregating $21,000, which the City Treasurer refused to pay until he was advised of the purpose of the disbursement and otherwise consulted in the matter.

Upon this refusal the City Council declared the office of City Treasurer vacant and ordered the Treasurer to place the city funds in certain depositories at once. He refused.

The court's aid has now been invoked by the Mayor and Council to require the Treasurer to surrender the city's cash.

Nurses Hear Talks For Better Health

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—Dr. W. H. Doughty, dean of the medical department of the University of Georgia, delivered the address of welcome at the opening of the seventh annual convention of the Georgia Association of Graduate Nurses here to-day. Mrs. E. S. Tupman, of Atlanta, responded. The convention will continue through to-morrow.

"Educational Prevention in Infant Mortality" was the subject of an address this afternoon by Miss G. B. Knipp, executive secretary of the American Association for the Prevention of Infant Mortality. Miss Ella P. Crandall, executive secretary of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, made an address this afternoon on "Public Health Nursing."

OBITUARY NOTICE.

Mrs. Katie Heath, widow of H. G. Heath, died Monday night at her home, 62 Connally Street. She is survived by a daughter, Miss Willie Heath, and two sisters, Mrs. H. E. Bray and Mrs. Willie Malley. The funeral will be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday night at the residence. Interment at Gainesville, Ga., Wednesday.

WALKER SHOWS IMPROVEMENT; MAY RECOVER

MACON, GA., May 20.—Another slight sluggish action of B. Sanders Walker's kidneys to-day gave the attending physicians still more hope for his ultimate recovery. Walker's pulse is 118 and his respiration 30. He is still very weak.

MACON, GA., May 20.—After having made all, even minute, preparations to die, under the belief that his death was inevitable and a matter of only a few days, B. Sanders Walker, Jr., the banker and real estate operator, is now given the hope that possibly he will survive the accidental taking of a bichloride of mercury tablet by mistake for a headache pill.

From Thursday until Monday Mr. Walker's kidneys were paralyzed, but then there was a slight manifestation, sufficient to justify the attending physicians in holding out a little encouragement to the man who for five days has regarded himself as on the very brink of the grave. Two physicians have been at Mr. Walker's bedside almost from the minute when the terrible pains in his stomach showed that he had taken poison instead of an aspirin tablet, and they have employed heroic remedies. From all parts of the United States have come about 40 telegrams from persons who were similarly poisoned or from doctors and nurses suggesting methods of treatment.

Nurse Suggests Remedy.

One such message came from a young woman nurse at Johns Hopkins Hospital, suggesting that a remedy of flax seed and olive oil might save the fast ebbing life of the dying man, as it had her own when she had her own when she had been in a similar condition. If he lives, Walker will owe his life to this young woman, of whose existence he was not even aware—a person whom he would not know were he to meet her face to face.

This remedy has been applied and has given Walker a fighting chance for life. Euremic poisoning had already set in when the doctors decided to adopt the suggestion of the young woman, and unless relief had been immediate Walker would soon have succumbed.

Visitors Now Excluded.

All persons, except his wife, doctors and nurses, are now kept from Mr. Walker. The physicians say that the announcement to him that he might survive, after he had gone through the ordeal of preparing for death, brought on a nervous attack and intensified his weakness. It was believed necessary, as well as ethical, however, to tell the stricken man that he had a chance to live.

B. S. Walker, Sr., of Monroe, the father; Cliff M. Walker, Solicitor General of the Western Circuit, who is a brother, and other relatives are at the residence.

Mrs. Walker is making a fight that is the wonder of her friends. In her husband's company she has been ever brave and cheerful. Not once has she presented anything but a courageous front.

Walker's Nerve Unbroken.

Walker's first thought when told by the doctors that death was sure to result from his mistaken dose was of his business; his second, of his friends. He immediately sent for his business associates, and in a short while had given definite intructions concerning the final disposition of all his affairs.

Following the winding up of his business, he called in his friends, announced his doom and gave them one and all a cheerful farewell.

His cool nerve during the strain of the last three days has been the cause of comment upon the days when, as a star athlete for the University of Georgia, he time and again demonstrated the fact that he was possessed of an indomitable spirit that held him up when his teammates were breaking in their support.

Still on Brink of Eternity.

The friends who knew him a few days ago as the picture of health and a perfect specimen of manhood can hardly realize that following his tragic error in taking bichloride of mercury tablets instead of the headache medicine, he has been doomed to death, and that, although hope is now expressed for his recovery, he is even yet standing upon the brink of eternity.

Policeman Hit by Auto Nabs Driver

City Detective L. F. Carter is being congratulated by his friends for the agility and coolness which he displayed Monday night when he narrowly escaped being run down by an automobile driven by J. A. Brigman, of Decatur.

Carter was crossing Forsyth at Marietta Street, and when struck by the machine, sprang up on the hood, where he perched until the car was stopped. Carter immediately arrested Brigman and charged him with reckless driving. Brigman was released without bail.

Court Rules Clubs Can't Sell Liquor

The Court of Appeals, in a decision handed down Tuesday, held that it was illegal for an employee of a social club to sell whisky, even though he did not derive any profit from the sale. The decision was in the case of Ike Rothchild, steward of the Brunswick Oglethorpe Club.

The court said: "It is no defense that the accused sold the liquor as an employee of a social club. Intoxicating liquor can not be sold in the State by an individual or company as a beverage."

Mrs. Hutchins 'Poor' On $2,000 a Month

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Mrs. Rosa Keeling Hutchins, widow of Stilson Hutchins, millionaire newspaper owner, has filed suit in another attempt to obtain one-third of the income from her husband's personal estate. According to her petition, she is in "straitened circumstances," although she has $2,000 a month from the estate.

The personal property left by Mr. Hutchins is estimated at $1,155,685, while the realty value is fixed at $3,347,000. Distribution has been delayed by disputes among the heirs and the filing of a caveat by Lee Hutchins, a son.

Wife Advertised as "Dead" Seeks Divorce

ST. LOUIS, May 20.—Mrs. Anna Meehan has sued John P. Meehan, a salesman, for divorce, charging among a long list of alleged abuses that he advertised in St. Louis papers on Easter Sunday announcing her death and that the notice of fuheral arrangements would be given. She says that when she accused him of inserting the "ad" he laughed and refused to deny it.

She also charges that during their eleven years of married life they moved fifteen times and also that ten of the movings were the result of suits for rent.

Express Profits for 1912 Eight Millions

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Express companies for the year 1912 did a total business of $81,545,658, with expenses aggregating $73,255,682, leaving a total net revenue of $8,289,972, according to a statement made by the Interstate Commerce Commission today. Dividends declared from current income amounted to $4,625,832 and from surplus $2,823,785.

The Pullman Car Company, in reports to the commission, placed its total business for the year 1912 at $37,090,414, with expenses amounting to $26,256,695. Cars were operated over 123,000 miles of road. The physical property is valued at $148,780,453.

'Rosy Cheek Teachers Excel Brainy Ones'

NEW YORK, May 20.—President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education told the Associate Alumnae of Normal College that he would rather "a teacher had the pulchritude of red cheeks than the wisdom of an encyclopedia."

"A certain type of teacher," said he, "seems to think she must study all summer, but she would be a better teacher if she spent her vacation rowing a boat or playing golf. There is no reason why teachers should be divorced from health."

Gov. Slaton Speaker At A. and M. Finals

Governor-elect John M. Slaton is expected to return home Tuesday from Americus, Ga., where on Monday night he delivered the principal address at the annual commencement exercises of the Third District Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Diplomas were presented by John M. Collum, the superintendent. An exhibition of the industrial work of the college preceded the graduating exercises.

Governor-elect Slaton and the other speakers were entertained with a barbecue dinner after the exercises.

Mexico Buys Field Guns From French

PARIS, May 20.—The Mexican Government has ordered twelve batteries of field guns and one hundred mitrailleuses from French manufacturers.

Gen. Mondragon, the Mexican War Minister, is quoted as saying that he chose French makes because the Bulgarians proved their superiority over the Krupp guns used by the Turks.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—According to Marcelin Boule, Vice President of the French Geographical Society, Admiral Peary is to be paid the same honors as were granted to Amundsen by the French society.

The fact that no preparation has been made is due to the absence from Paris of the society's President, Prince Roland Bonaparte.

Schwab Admits He Formed Steel Pools

NEW YORK, May 20.—Charles M. Schwab, former president of the United States Steel Corporation, today admitted under cross-examination that he had formed many pools in the steel trade, but that he had arranged none since the formation of the United States Steel Corporation.

Schwab, now president of the Bethlehem Steel Company, was questioned by Judge Dickinson, one of counsel for the Government in its suit to declare the Steel Corporation a trust.

PENN. R. R. HEAD PRAISES ATLANTA

Samuel Rea, Here for Short Visit, Foresees Great Future for the Gate City.

Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was in Atlanta a short while Tuesday. His visit, however, had no business significance, being merely a pleasure jaunt which Mr. and Mrs. Rea are taking.

H. W. Miller, assistant to the president of the Southern Railway, entertained Mr. Rea at luncheon at the Piedmont Driving Club, following an automobile ride around the city.

"No, there's no business connection at all with my trip," said Mr. Rea to a reporter. "I am just going about on a little pleasure trip, accompanied by my real boss, Mrs. Rea, and am just visiting a few of my friends."

Mr. Rea praised Atlanta highly and foresaw for the city a great future.

The hurriedly arranged luncheon proved a delightful affair despite the haste. Those present were Captain J. W. English, John W. Grant, President Wilmer L. Moore, of the Chamber of Commerce; Colonel Robert J. Lowry, Frank Hawkins, E. H. Coapman, vice president and general manager of the Southern Railway Company, whose headquarters are at Washington, and Mr. Miller.

Mrs. Miller held an informal reception for Mrs. Rea at the Piedmont Driving Club.

Mrs. Longstreet Seeks Vindication

The following telegram from Washington was received to-day by The Georgian from Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, regarding her hearing before the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Postroads relative to the Gainesville postmastership:

I did not go before the Senate Comimttee on Postoffices and Postroads to prevent the confirmation of Mrs. Ham. I went before that committee to have my record vindicated. I went there to call on the majority party, in recommending my successor for confirmation, to have the manhood and courage to say that I had been kicked out of office by the sinister influences of the invisible government which is doing business in Georgia under the name of the Georgia Railway and Power Company and to say that my record in office is above reproach. I challenge Southern manhood to give me that vindication. What answer to the challenge of Southern honor will they make?

"Knightliest of a knightly race,
Who since the days of old
Have kept the lamps of chivalry
Alight in hearts of gold."

I believe that answer will ring true. But if the Southern manhood which is in the saddle today should fail, under the pressure of the money power, the honor of the minority party will not fail. The men in whose veins courses the blood of a conquering race—a race that through the long centuries has mounted the thrones of kings, taken empires and builded republics—will waken that vindication on our Atlantic shores, to follow the morning sun to its setting beyond our Pacific seas, until a nation shall read in the shining track that the woman whom the warhorse of the Confederacy dowered with his love and a name that will live forever—the woman who was honored by Theodore Roosevelt and trusted by William Howard Taft—is true as tempered steel and pure as refined gold.

SEEK FARM HOME FOR NEEDY FAMILY

Woman Offers to Do Manual Work to Give Boys Benefit of Country Life.

Miss Minnie VanEpps, district agent of the Associated Charities, is looking for a country home for a strong, Western woman who walked into her office with two boys, a cash capital of 10 cents and a recollection of many hardships.

The woman is Mrs. May Lang, 31 years old. Her boys are Aurelius Ragland, 7 years old, and Milton Ragland, 5 years old. Mrs. Lang says she can milk a cow, scrub floors, cook, sew, hitch up horses and mules, plow and hoe, cut wood and do anything else on a farm. She is a Western woman, in good health and willing to do any kind of hard work to provide a home for herself and children.

Last winter Mrs. Lang left Skull Valley, Ariz., with tickets for New Orleans and $2 in cash. She came to Atlanta in February and went at once to Miss VanEpps. Work was provided in an Atlanta factory, but Mrs. Lang's wages were only $3 a week.

Mrs. Lang was left an orphan at 12. She was adopted, but her foster father died. Then his brother married her, but he died in a few years. Again she married, but her second husband died. For five years Mrs. Lang has eked out a scant living for herself and children by performing manual labor.

"I can do anything, even the hardest work on the farm," she said to Miss VanEpps. "If only I can get out in the country, where my two sons can breathe the pure air and get enough to eat, I will be happy. I will do the hardest work they give me, and be contented. I want a home for my boys."

References Mrs. Lang gave to the Associated Charities have been traced by Miss VanEpps, and replies to letters of inquiry indicate Mrs. Lang has been a good and a hard-working woman.

DENTAL TESTS IN CITY'S SCHOOLS PROBABLE

Board Conducting Experiments Will Make Strong Recommendation for Examinations.

Dental examinations of all children in Atlanta public schools will be permanently provided for unless V. H. Kriegshaber, of the Chamber of Commerce, and representatives of the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons are too optimistic over their forthcoming report.

Monday marked the beginning and Tuesday the end of dental examinations in the Bell Street and Crew Street Schools by representatives of the joint committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons. It was the third of a series of tests begun last September at the request of the Chamber of Commerce and continued in January, to prove the beneficial effects of sound teeth on scholarship and attendance, general health and moral character.

V. H. Kriegshaber, from the Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. S. W. Foster, Dr. C. M. Barnwell, Dr. DeLos Hill and Dr. M. D. Huff, from the dental society, make up the joint committee.

Dentists Meet Tuesday Night.

Dr. Hill and Dr. Foster, who made the actual tests, will meet with the other dentists Wednesday night and make up the final report to be submitted to the Chamber of Commerce, whence it will be sent to the Board of Education with recommendations.

"Statistics have not been compiled, but from results already noted we believe the full data will warrant a recommendation that dental inspections in the public schools be made permanent," said Mr. Kriegshaber.

Following published results of benefits of five years' medical inspection in the public schools, the Chamber of Commerce last September asked the Board of Education for permission to make experimental dental tests. The dentists agreed to inspect two schools for a year, without fees, to prove the efficacy of the system.

At the first tests pupils were provided with written notices to parents of needed dental treatment. When these notices resulted in securing treatment, the operating dentists signed the slips, which were returned to the examiners. Additional signed slips were collected Monday and Tuesday after the final tests. Records of pupils in attendance, deportment and scholarship, both those who acted on the suggestions and those who did not, will be compared, and the results, with other figures, will make up the dentists' report.

Finish Report Tuesday.

"We hope to get this report finished Tuesday night," said Mr. Kriegshaber. "We are sure it will warrant the recommendation that dental examinations be made permanent. Then if the Board of Education approves our recommendation, we want to submit it to the Finance Committee of the City Council Thursday morning, if possible, and secure the necessary appropriation and authorization for permanent dental inspections in all Atlanta public schools."

In the Crew Street and Bell Street Schools nearly 500 pupils were examined. Dr. Foster and Dr. Hill were surprised at getting through in two days, since they expected three would be required.

Another Reason Why Socialist Vote Grows

GENEVA, N. Y., May 20.—An extensive obituary notice appeared in the newspapers here recounting the virtues of Fido, the pet dog af Henry A. Zobrist, a capitalist. Mr. Zobrist called a specialist from New York and paid $300 to have the dog treated, but Fido took a relapse and died.

Mr. Zobrist had provided $20,000 in his will for Fido, and had offered an endowment of $3,000 a year to the Sand Hill Cemetery Corporation for permission to bury the dog in the graveyard.

Fido lay in state in an expensive coffin banked with flowers.

LIQUOR DEALERS ORGANIZE LAW ENFORCEMENT LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., May 20.—For the purpose of eliminating the blind tiger and enforcing the provisions of the laws regulating the sale of whisky in Russell County, Alabama, a law enforcement league has been organized in Girard, with Sam Kaufman, a wholesale liquor dealer, as president.

The wholesale and retail liquor dealers claim that the blind tiger is hurting their legitimate business. Eighteen liquor dealers of the town are members of the organization.

RESINOL A SAFE SKIN TREATMENT

You need never hesitate to use Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. There is nothing in them to injure the tenderest surface. Resinol is a doctor's prescription which proved so successful for eczema, ringworm and other itching, burning, unsightly skin eruptions, that it has been used by other physicians all over the country for eighteen years. No other treatment for the skin now before the public can show such a record of professional approval.

In a single month, two hundred and twenty-one doctors wrote us indorsing the Resinol preparations. They would not have done so if they had not found them highly valuable in their own practice. They prescribe Resinol freely, confident that its soothing, healing action is brought about by agents so bland and gentle as to be suited to the most delicate skin—even of a tiny baby.

The nearest druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1) and Resinol Soap (25c) or you can try them free by writing to Dept. 23-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for liberal sample of each.

J. Wylie Smith's Own Story

Stirring Episodes in Long Flight

Career in Mexican Army Thrilling

This is the second installment of the story of J. Wylie Smith, the refugee president of the defunct Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who, after evading extradition during two years of service in the insurrecto army of General Orozco, in Mexico, returned to Atlanta to stand trial because he dying with tuberculosis—a phantom of his former self.

By J. WYLIE SMITH.

I was given a room over the warden's office. I had credit at the commissary. You have to furnish your own bed clothing and buy any food you get except etole, a sort of gruel, bif stik—furnished to you raw—and frijole, beans cooked in pure water at every meal. Grease and salt are unknown.

I remember a hideous tragedy one day as a result of the practice of allowing the prisoners to cook their own meals in their cells. A peon, held for murder, was found dead in bed one morning, his charcoal pot still giving off its fumes over him.

Soon I was allowed to go downtown without a guard. The discipline in Mexican prisons is lax. Once when the prisoners were working on the waterworks a number of them stole away and got drunk. When they returned the only punishment that was administered was that they were not allowed to return to work but were forced to play. They suffered, though. They hated to give up their wages. I knew a number of them who preferred prison life to freedom.

"Neda en calles menos Americanos y toras," spoke a Mexican who was reclining under the shade of a tree in his yard as I passed down the street on one of my daily strolls from the prison.

His meaning was that nobody ever comes out on the street between 12 o'clock and 2:30 but Americans and bulls—a statement which has the weight of a proverb in Mexico. All business houses are closed between those hours. Indeed it was a hot sultry day and I was regretting that I had come out when suddenly I was startled out of my laziness by a sharp piercing bark.

My footsteps had aroused a bull who was lying in the shade of a shrub, not a Mexican bull but a Boston bull terrier. He came towards me belligerent but I spoke to him kindly, so glad to see anything so truly American. And as I walked on that dog followed.

Truly only an American and a bull were on the streets and later only an American and a bull were together at another place, the presence of the bull changing the trend of fate from savage death to the greatest triumph of my life.

But that was later. However, the interesting and important things which led up to it began to absorb my attention. For the first time a personal interest was aroused in me in the revolutionary movement.

I had made the acquaintance of about 75 revolutionary leaders who were confined in the penitentiary. Walking with General Rojas, the most prominent of them, one day our conversation grew intimate.

"I would think that you revolutionists would be shot," I said to him.

"Do you know why I am here?" he asked. Before I could speak he answered his own question.

"I said that General Orozco was a damned rascal.

"All of us would be shot," he continued, "but Orozco has plans of his own."

Orozco's Plan.

"He is planning a new revolution. On March he will resign as commander of the Federal forces in Chihuahua. He is confining his staff here so he will have them ready when he needs them.

"The moment he insurges I will be freed, and I will take you with me."

My interest in the plans of the revolutionists immediately became intense. I was having an easy time but things were getting monotonous. I did not know how long I would be held a prisoner nor how much chance I had of escaping extradition. My fighting blood was up. Added to my fear of being taken back to Atlanta and being tried was the ire aroused by the treachery of my pursuers, like Franke I was determined to outwit them. Then there is nothing in the world like Anglo-Saxon freedom.

Then the strangest and most romantic event in my whole experience took place. I was the only American in prison and something of a curiosity. People often came to look at me, and I desired to avoid them as much as possible. But the warden came to me one day and said that two American women were in his office to see me.

Puzzled but greatly interested I hurried down. I gazed at them, unable to recognize either, but I carefully noted that they were handsomely dressed. They said they were interested in my case because I was an American and they wanted to help me. When I told them I had no lawyer they said they would look after that. My clothes were washed in the prison, but not starched. One of the women arranged to have them starched and laundered out in town. They they left without giving any information about themselves.

A few days later, January 26, 1912, my extradition papers arrived and it looked like the jig was up. I was absolutely ignorant of Mexican law and I hardly expected any of my new friends to come to my aid with sufficient funds to hire a competent attorney.

Help at Last—From a Woman.

As mysteriously as she had first come to me one of the beautiful woman returned. With her were two fine looking Mexicans of the cientifico (aristocratic) class. They were lawyers.

Francisco Cardero was an ex-justice of the Supreme Court and a supporter of Madero. Geillermo Porras was ex-Lieutenant Governor and a Diaz enthusiast. I learned later that they were among the highest legal authorities in the State.

Porras took active charge of my case and looked over the extradition papers. He said they were full of flaws but that he did not think I could get justice in Chihuahua on account of the opposition to his politics. So he had the case transferred to Jaurez and went there to prosecute it.

The woman came to me again and I asked her why she had taken such an interest in my case.

"You are an American; so am I," she said. "You have a wife and child to be saved (for I had told her of my family); I have no one in the world to care for."

I found that she was a somewhat notorious woman in Chihuahua and I also learned from other sources than herself that she had paid each of those lawyers $400 in gold to defend me. Her name was Vivian Sinclair.

They won the case through unseen forces, at least to me.

On the night of January 30 the people of Jaurez went to sleep under the seemingly peaceful rule of Madero. They awoke the next morning at daybreak—Mexicans always begin fighting at daybreak—to find a band of revolutionists in possession of everything. They looted the post-office and the customs house, burning all the papers in a bonfire in the streets.

My extradition papers were among them.

I have often thought that Porras knew what was going to happen and I was just as grateful to him as though he had won the case in court.

I heard just before I left Mexico that he had been executed by Madero Constitutionalists near Porral, Chihuahua. I have written for verification.

Only 85 strong the new insurrectos started toward Chihuahua to storm the jail. They arrived on February 2 and at daybreak the next morning began storming the jail.

Such grit I have never seen, before or since. Those Mexicans are slow starting and they always stop at dark they have absorbed the superstition from the Yaqui Indian that the soul leaves the body after dark. It is hard to get them out of their houses at night.

The Fight Begins.

Clinging to the tops of houses and hiding behind fences they began a most vicious and effective attack. They picked off every guard who showed himself on that wall. I was where I could get a good view and every now and then I would see a Federal plug an insurrecto who was lying flat on a house roof like sticking a sharp stick in the back of a toad. One after another were wriggling to death after such shots. There were 700 men defending the jail and defeat for the insurrectos was imminent when a guard had his head split by a bullet that came through a loop hole. The soldier rolled down a flight of steps and landed some twenty feet away at the feet of the Warden, his ghastly face turned upward.

"Stop the fighting," shrieked the Warden, and he turned to General Rojas for help.

"They want me," replied General Rojas. "Free me and the firing will stop in five minutes."

The Warden would not consent, but the fighting continued so fierce he consented to allow Rojas to see the Governor with a guard of five men. The visit to the Governor was a mere formality. He refused the pardon. But on the return to the jail Rojas, walking a few paces in front of his guard, turned a corner ahead of them at the corner of Calle Liberstad and Calle Tercera and took to his heels.

"Halt," shouted the guard, and they raised their guns.

But they were covered by a band of insurrectos before they could shoot.

My heart jumped with joy when the news reached the prison. I felt that I soon would be able to join him. But my blood was chilled the next day by that most horrible of all features of warfare—the shooting of a traitor.

General Orozco came down from Jaurez next day. He wanted Rojas free, but to make a show of enforcing authority he ordered the five guards shot as traitors, the finding of the courtmartial being that they had purposely allowed Rojas to escape. No one knows what cruelty a Mexican can resort to.

Rojas was as good as his word. The firing stopped before his guard returned to the jail. Eagerly did I observe and seek information as to the skirmishes and maneuvers around Chihuahua. The story of Rojas' first victory was typically Mexican.

Captain Mendoza had led the attack on the jail. He was the most unusual looking man I have ever seen and as we were closely associated together thereafter I became very much interested in his odd personality. He was six feet four inches in height but he lost two inches of his size in a stoop in his shoulders. His hair and eye lashes were raven black and his eyes were a greenish gray that shined with an uncanniness. But the oddest thing about him was his mustache, which was a brilliant red. He was as active as a cat and the most wicked man I have ever seen. When Rojas escaped his plan was to attack the jail and free us all. But Mendoza had retreated out from the city. The reason Mexican revolutions last so long is that an army never will follow up a victory.

Out from Chihuahua Mendoza, with about 25 men, was captured by Colonel Sevrin, of Madero's forces. When Rojas heard of it he declared that Mendoza had freed him and that he was going to the rescue.

With only 260 men, while Sevrin had 700, Rojas began a ruse. Approaching Sevrin after it was too dark for him to tell the number of the revolutionists, Rojas went into camp in plain view. It is the custom to have a camp fire for every ten men. Rojas built about 200 fires. He had his men blow bugles over a long line.

The strategy was successful. Under a flag of truce Rojas sent an ultimatum to Sevrin at daybreak next morning that he must surrender Mendoza or be annihilated. Sevrin surrendered Mendoza. And Mendoza became a colonel under Rojas, the two marching toward Jaurez gathering men as they went. It really was like Napoleon's return from Elba.

$120,000 NOW IN HAND, BUT CITY WANTS MORE

Chairman W. G. Humphrey, of the Council Finance Committee, said Tuesday that the maximum amount of new money to be apportioned in June would be $120,000. This includes all increases in revenue, he explained.

The adoption of the Whitehall Street regrading plan and other projects that developed at the meeting of Council Monday would require an expenditure of more than twice that amount. Council's action in calling on the Finance Committee to provide $30,000 for the Whitehall Street work practically assures the beginning of that project this year, but advocates of other much needed improvements will suffer bitter disappointment.

Candler Anticipates Veto.

Declaring that the form of the resolution presented by the Streets Committee, providing for the Whitehall Street work, invited a veto, Alderman John S. Candler said:

"But I am going to vote for it now and after it is vetoed."

The School Board wants $75,000 for an English-Commercial Girls' High School building. The Grady Hospital board got $25,000 for a nurses' dormitory in January and they declare it will take $25,000 more to complete the building. Chairman Orville Hall, of the Streets Committee, insisted that $50,000 was necessary for new streets. All departments want additional appropriations.

Not Enough to Go Around.

In view of this situation Council adopted Councilman Albert Thomson's resolution creating a special committee of ten councilmen and five citizens to investigate the advisability of a bond issue. Mayor Pro Tem Warren will announce this committee within a few days.

On one matter Council was unanimous. Every one voted aye overruling Mayor Woodward's scorching veto of the fire department probe committee's report vindicating Chief Cummings of the charges of graft and corruption. Council Charles W. Smith made a vigorous speech defending the committee against Mayor Woodward's attack.

Alderman James R. Nutting endeavored to settle the Police Board row over the authority of Chief Beavers to promote subordinates by putting through an ordinance giving all heads of departments power to name their assistants.

Police Deadlock Stands.

Mayor Pro Tem Warren, opposing the ordinance, declared it was introduced for the purpose of politics and that it would reduce board members to mere figureheads.

Alderman Nutting replied that Mayor Pro Tem Warren's attitude was the most palpable sort of politics.

The ordinance was referred to the Ordinance Committee. The Police Board's tangle caused by a tie vote over the right of the chief to promote subordinates remains unsettled.

A surprise to some of the members was the vote sustaining the veto of Mayor Woodward of the dog muzzling ordinance. Mayor Woodward ridiculed the ordinance as absurd and Council sustained his veto by a vote of 15 to override and 9 against. It takes a two-thirds vote to set aside a veto.

AGED FLOOD SUFFERERS FINISHING LONG WALK

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Their money having given out at Harrisburg, Pa., after they had been forced to leave their home at Steubenville, Ohio, by the floods, Albert Price, aged 67, and Sadie, his wife, aged 59, set out a-foot for Richmond, Va., where they have a brother, and have reached Washington en route.

Knee Breeches? Why Not for U. S. Envoy?

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 20.—The Daily Citizen, the official labor organ, says in an editorial:

"It is possible to admire tremendously the Republican simplicity of America without understanding the objection of the new Ambassador to wearing knee breeches. What is there in them offensive to Democratic sentiment? After all John Burns wears them on occasion and with George Washington they were the habitual garment.

"Of course it is not everybody who can boast a leg and it is just possible that Mr. Page's repugnance to knee breeches may be founded on better reasons than the world can wot of."

Loss of Cat Costs University $100,000

MIDDLETOWN, May 20.—The story of how Wesleyan University lost a bequest of $100,000 or more because students stole a pet cat for dissecting purposes a dozen or more years ago was revealed when the will of Miss Margaret Van Deursen, who died a few days ago, was filed. Miss Van Deursen was a great lover of cats. When one to which she was attached disappeared one day, she was grieved. A large reward was offered for its recovery, but it was learned that students hunting for specimens for the biological laboratory had taken it.

Troops Mutiny Over French Military Bill

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Serious mutinous uprisings, due to the proposed extension of the military term from two years to three, are occurring in the ranks of the French Army.

The war office to-day received dispatches from frontier points which stated that dangerous consequences may follow if the Government persists in putting through the bill.

In several instances barracks have been burned.

British Carry Coal for American Navy

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Paymaster John S. Higgins, U. S. N., appearing before the Senate Committee on territories said that practically all of the 250,000 tons of coal shipped annually for Pacific Coast Navy use was carried in British bottoms.

He said that the opening of the Alaska coal fields the subject under consideration by the committee would establish a Pacific supply.

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook now enjoys the distinction of having gathered more votes than any of the other contestants in The Georgian and American pony outfit contests. She has 40,340 votes.

Miss Cook is in District Four, where the hottest kind of a race is in progress. At the end of last week Miss Florence Greenoe had the lead with 30,950 votes. Now she has 32,320, but even this gain was not enough to keep her in the lead.

Frank Ison, Jr., had a big lead in District No. 5, but Richard Rainey is making gains and promises to be a dangerous competitor.

How great is the interest in the pony contest from out in the State is shown by the publication of the addresses of the Georgia boys and girls who are in the race. Lithonia, Chipley, Macon, Social Circle, Savannah, Columbus, Barnesville, Gainesville, Washington, Quitman, Tennille, Waycross and Rome are among the towns represented.

There still is a large number of boys and girls with just 1,000 votes, as all the contestants have this at the start, there is no telling but that one of the winners may come from among these. As yet no one of the boys and girls has a sufficient lead to discourage competitors.

A few more days remain in which nominations can be made. After May 31 the lists will be closed and those entered by that time will run it out among themselves.

Names and the standing of contestants in the various districts follow:

Saloonist in Ireland Indicted in Georgia

MACON, GA., May 20.—Although he has been in Ireland for five years, Hugh Devlin, a former well-known resident of Macon, has been indicted by four successive grand juries for violating the prohibition law. Sheriff Hicks disclaims any idea of going to Ireland to serve the warrants.

The saloon still is owned by Devlin and operated in his name, and when witnesses testify that they bought liquor there and can not identify the bartender, the grand juries indict the proprietor.

If Devlin ever returns to Macon, he will have considerable explanation to make to the courts.

SOLDIERS GUARD INAUGURATION IN CUBA

Revolutionary Outbreak Feared at Induction of Menocal to Succeed President Gomez.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, May 20.—Rigid military precautions were taken here to-day to prevent any revolutionary outbreaks upon the occasion of the inauguration of Juan Mario Menocal, who succeeds Señor Gomez as President of Cuba. All principal streets were patrolled by troops and batteries of machine guns were placed at strategetic points.

As General Menocal was formerly commander-in-chief of the Cuban army sentiment exists for him in military circles and there is no fear of a mutinous disturbance.

General Menocal is a conservative. His election caused grave fears on account of the bitterness manifested by the Liberals. An attempt was made to have the election declared unconstitutional, but it failed.

The ceremonies to-day took on unusual interest because of the part played by the United States. A special mission came to this city from Washington, representing President Wilson.

A new era is promised for Cuba under the administration of General Menocal, who is avowedly pro-American. One of the chief aims of the new President will be to induce fresh foreign capital to come here.

General Menocal sent the following message to the people of the United States:

"I have stated many times, and I now take advantage of the opportunity to repeat that as Chief Executive of the Cuban Republic my energies will be devoted to fostering and cementing still more closely the friendly ties binding Cuba to the United States."

Head of Brenau Done Injustice by Report

An Atlanta friend of Dr. T. J. Simmons, president of Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., has pointed out an error published on Saturday, May 17, relative to a news item sent from Rome, Ga.

Max Meyerhardt, city attorney of Rome, by letter informed Dr. Simmons that the old Conservatory of Music, formerly connected with Shorter College and owned by Dr. Simmons, had been declared unsafe and insanitary, and suggested that it either be repaired or removed. Dr. Simmons had, three days before receipt of this letter, given instructions to demolish the building.

The report as to the summons of Dr. Simmons before the City Council or in Police Court was incorrect.

Dr. Simmons is one of the leading educators in Georgia and the South, and is a man of whom both Rome and Gainesville have cause to be proud for the work he has done in the interest of higher education.

Serbs and Greeks Fix New Boundaries

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Servia and Greece have entered a territorial alliance with Bulgaria, it is stated in a telegram from Athens to-day.

This message stated that the two countries had entered an agreement respecting the boundaries of Turkish territory to be acquired by both, and have bound each other to support the agreement with arms if Bulgaria objects.

Peace Likely to Come Slowly.

BERLIN, May 20.—Dispatches received to-day from the various European capitals indicate that the Turco-Balkan peace conference in London may be a drawn-out affair. Some predict that it will last at least three months.

In addition to this lot we have the suits advertised for the first time Sunday. These are in plain navy blue and black serges, white Bedford cords with black or colored stripes and fancy mixtures. Values $25 to $35, for $12.85.

Lovely New Waists $4.95

Actual values $6, $7 to $8.50

Sixty and nine waists that registered to-day should be gone to-morrow. Their maker supplies us regularly—identical copies of some of the waists have sold here at $7 to $8.50. The other styles will be shown for the first time to-morrow.

Materials are white embroidered crepes, voiles, marquisettes and lingeries. Some with high necks and long sleeves, some with low necks, some with the new flat Gaby collars. Possibly a dozen styles in all—each a dream of sheer loveliness. Not a waist worth less than $6; many worth $7 to $8.50. Choice $4.95.

DEFEAT IS LIKELY FOR BANKING REFORM

Pressure of Other Bills Will Sidetrack Issue in Summer Legislative Session.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The apprehension of Georgia bankers, recently in session in Savannah, that their proposed banking reform bill may fail of passage in the next Legislature because of the pressure of other matter probably is well founded.

The banking reform bill is voluminous and cannot get through the Legislature without mature deliberation, both in committee and on the floor. It necessarily will be taken up section by section and that means that it must be whipped out four times in detail. Rather a long, rough and rugged road to travel, to be sure.

Like the general insurance legislation effected in the last General Assembly, however, it is highly important business, and Legislators will decline to vote for it without knowing exactly what each section provides.

The prospect ahead of the banking bill has served to renew the talk of providing a more satisfactory way of disposing of purely local legislation in the future. It is local legislation invariably that ties up the two houses and serves to kill through inattention many meritorious general bills. Members will pass their immediate local legislation, if the rest of the State's legislation program goes hang!

If local legislation might be disposed of, particularly where there is no opposition, through some simple legislative method, it easily would save 50 per cent of the General Assembly's time. As it is now, a local measure takes up almost if not quite as much time as the average general measure, yet it is a matter of a relatively small importance in separate instances to the State at large.

It takes about as much time to increase the number of county commissioners in Dodge County, for instance, as it does to amend the game laws, and yet who outside of Dodge County cares a hoot whether that county has three or five county commissioners?

An effort will be made in the next Legislature to simplify the process of local legislation, and many people will sincerely hope that the effort may succeed.

Judge John T. Allen, of Baldwin County, Senator-elect from the twentieth district, passed through Atlanta to-day.

Judge Allen was in high spirits and expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the status of his race for the presidency of the next Senate.

"If the vote were to be taken to-morrow," said he, "I am sure absolutely that I would be elected, and, in the best of good nature, I really believe I shall be the only candidate before the Senate when the voting takes place next month."

Judge Allen has been described as the one man in Georgia politics about whom there is absolutely no "foot motion," and somehow the description seems to fit him snugly.

The United States Supreme Court is expected to hand down soon a decision in the famous Cureton case from Georgia, that will interest the prohibitionists of the State particularly.

The question involved is whether the prohibition laws of Georgia shall be construed similarly to the prohibition laws of Tennessee, the Supreme Courts of the two States being of exact opposite opinions as to the point raised.

Cureton, a Chattanooga soft drink dealer, owned a large distillery near Rising Fawn, Ga. He received an order for whisky in his Chattanooga house, and sent it to his Georgia distillery to be filled. The whisky was shipped from Rising Fawn, and Cureton was arrested on a charge of selling whisky, was tried and found guilty, the Georgia Supreme Court holding that the delivery at Rising Fawn to the common carrier was the consummation of a sale. Cureton appealed to the United States Court, claiming protection under the interstate commerce laws.

If the United States Supreme Court upholds the Georgia Supreme Court, the prohibitionists will regard it as a victory. If, on the contrary, the United States Courts take the view as set up in the Tennessee Supreme Court, the "dry" people will feel that they have lost a point.

The decision is expected shortly.

Representative Burwell, of Hancock County, will be the oldest member of the new Legislature in point of continuous service. He has been a member of the General Assembly since 1896.

Joe Hill Hall, of Bibb; Byron Bower, of Decatur; John M. Slaton, of Fulton, and John N. Holder, of Jackson, all of whom ranked with Mr. Burwell in point of continuous service, will be missing from the new House, leaving Burwell the veteran and the dean.

The gentleman from Hancock has been in the Legislature almost from the date o his twenty-first birthday.

The effort to increase heavily the appropriation for Confederate pensions in the next Legislature, while likely to arouse much sympathy, probably will have a hard road to travel.

There will be few if any members who would not like to see the pension increased, and yet there will be many who will be unable to see how it is to be done and meet the other necessary expenses of the State in addition.

It is very well known that Legislatures of late years have found it extremely difficult to keep the State's outgo within its income, and one of the heaviest items of annual expense is the Confederate pension appropriation.

If some statesman is able to show the Legislature how the pensions may be increased without greatly embarrassing some of the departments, the pensions probably will be increased, all right. Unless the Legislature is shown that, however, the increase is apt to be slight, if anything.

DEATH ENDS TRIAL OF MAN LONG DEAD

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—The death of the second plaintiff, while the case was being heard in the City Court of Augusta, to-day brought to a sudden termination the fifth trial of a suit to collect at $3,000 insurance policy on the life of John Moore, who was slain near Keysville in January, 1907. The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States is the defendant. A sixth trial will now result with a third plaintiff to prosecute the suit. The four previous hearings resulted in mistrials.

Tom Moore, who several months ago was killed as an escaped convict while a fugitive with "Old Bill" Minor, from the State Farm at Milledgeville, originally brought the suit. He was the beneficiary named in the policy.

Tom Moore was accused of killing his brother and was given a life sentence in the penitentiary. The Supreme Court affirmed it. He was serving this when he escaped from the State Farm and met death.

Mrs. Louise Moore, as administratrix of the estate of her husband, Tom Moore, continued the insurance suit.

To-day, while the case was on trial, a telegram was received from Washington, Ga., announcing the death of Mrs. Moore.

Judge Eve dismissed the jury, after expressing regret that the acse could not proceed.

L. S. Pepples, counsel for the plaintiff, announced after court adjourned, that he would bring the suit in behalf of another administrator of the Tom Moore estate.

When the trial came to such an abrupt ending to-day, the attorneys for the insurance company were endeavoring to prove that Tom Moore killed his brother, because Judge Eve had placed the burden of proof on the insurance people, not taking into consideration the fact that Moore was convicted of the murder in Burke Superior Court.

Governor Joseph M. Brown's proclamation, offering a reward for the apprehension of the Cobb County dynamiters, has attracted a great deal of attention and brought forth many expressions of approval throughout the State.

The Governor's uncompromisingly hostile attitude toward all forms of lawlessness has been so persistently demonstrated that there are few if any criminals left in Georgia who do not know that he means to enforce the law sternly against them if they violate the same.

Not only has he set every agency of the State at work seeking to establish the identity of the Cobb County dynamiters, but he also has offered substantial rewards for the apprehension of certain lynchers recently operating in Columbia and Heard Counties.

As he draws near the end of his term in the executive office, Governor Brown, instead of weakening in any of his positions against lawlessness, seems all the more inclined to emphasize his personal and official detestation of it.

The Governor holds that there are very many more law-abiding people in Georgia than there are lawbreakers, and that law-observers are entitled to full and complete protection against the criminal classes.

JAPS' MOVE NOW ONLY COMMENT AT CAPITOL

Orientals May Not Hasten to Answer U. S. Reply to the Alien Bill Protest.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—It is Japan's next move, was the only comment State Department officials would make to-day on the Japanese situation. The reports vary as to the time when the Mikado's statesmen will make their reply to the note delivered by Secretary of State Bryan to the Japanese Ambassador yesterday.

Some officials expect it within the next three days and others say the Japanese might take prolonged consideration, since the Webb act will not go into effect before August.

Reports of unusual activity in the way of shipments of supplies to the Presidio of San Francisco were denied at the War Department to-day.

Secretary of War Garrison declared the effort now being made to recruit the regiments in the Philippines to their full strength has been going on for nearly twelve months, and has no relation to the present situation between Japan and the United States.

Asiatic League Would Deny Orientals Leases.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—The executive committee of the Asiatic Constitutional League has begun obtaining signatures to a referendum petition to defeat the anti-alien land law which was signed by Governor Johnson yesterday.

The league's objection to the law is the clause permitting an alien to hold a three-year lease. The officials of the league soon will circulate an initiative petition for a law which will exclude Japanese and Chinese from both ownership and leaseholds under any conditions.

California Only Trying To Save Itself, He Says.

NEW YORK, May 20.—"The people of California have reached a crisis in their affairs. They have to determine right now whether California is to be overrun by Asiatics or whether it is to be kept for Californians. In three years California will be completely overrun if the wrong steps are taken now."

This statement was made here today by Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, as he and Mrs. Wheeler were sailing for Europe. Dr. Wheeler expressed the opinion, though, that there is no danger of actual hostilities between this country and Japan.

"The diplomats will be able to bring about a common understanding," said he. At the same time he declared the alien land bill, barring Japanese from ownership of land in California, was just and should be the law of the State.

COUNTERFEITER CONVICTED.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 20. R. T. Lawing, member of the counterfeiting gang tried a few days ago, was to-day sentenced in the Federal Court to two years in the Atlanta Penitentiary. He is the fourth prisoner convicted at this term of court to be sent to Atlanta.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Entertaining Bill at Forsyth.

First nighters—those afflicted with the desire to see and hear before anybody else—who settled into their accustomed seats Monday night at the Forsyth Theater prepared to endure at any cost the routine vaudeville, were given several surprises of their young and blase lives before the program was finished.

Perhaps the most unusual number of the entertaining bill was John Geiger and his "talking violin." Mr. Geiger certainly made his violin do everything but speak and after he had put it through its paces, including imitations of almost everything from a "Spizzerinctum" to a woodsaw, his audience had forgotten that he hadn't made the instrument emit vocal sounds.

For first-row habitues the Dunedin troupe, a bicycle novelty act, composed of one man and three girls, proved an interesting feature. The one man can certainly ride, and the girls are very good to look at, especially to the first-row crowd. Other numbers of the bill included Josephine Dunfee, whose voice, while very good, was wrongly applied in the caliber of songs she rendered; Nevins and Erwood, old-timers on Atlanta's dancing stage; Adam and Eve, a monkey act especially attractive to children; Gallagher and Fields in a comedy act entitled "The Battle of Bay Rum," which proved a winner, and Bradshaw Brothers, who presented some amazing new twists and turns in a contortion act.

"The Deep Purple" Pleases.

Patrons of the Atlanta Theater were treated to a new phase of Miss Billy Long's ability as leading lady yesterday, when "The Deep Purple," Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's play, was presented in Atlanta for the first time. The initial performance was at a matinee.

Ably assisting Miss Long in her triumph in the portrayal of New York underworld life was Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison, the popular young Atlanta girl, who took the part of the unconscious blackmailer.

The play is an interesting one from start to finish, and the company appears to advantage in it. Mr. Vail, the leading man, does some good work in the part assigned him.

Generous applause was accorded the company for its work by the moderately filled house.

Tabloid Musical Comedy at Bijou.

Tabloid musical comedy—"A Trip to Joyville" the attraction—got a fine start on Monday at the Bijou. Four big audiences indorsed the great big dime's worth of entertainment. The show, the theater and the general conditions all pointed to the fact that tabloid entertainment had caught on, in just the fashion the knowing ones had predicted.

"A Trip to Joyville" is an hour and a third of singing, dancing, comedy and music, with some vaudeville interruptions that are clever. There is a story about a lot of jolly folks going off for a day of frolic; they are pretty girls, well-groomed young men and a corps of character comedians who will perhaps be found some day in "faster company."

"A Trip to Joyville" will be presented at daily matinee—two on Saturday—and twice each night the rest of the week.

Bond Registration Closes.

COLUMBUS. — The registration books for the Dillingham Street bridge bonds have closed with only 456 voters having qualified for the election on June 7. The issue is for $50,000, it being the third to be voted upon for the bridge.

G. O. P. LEADERS TO REUNITE FACTIONS

New Plan Lets Committee Rearrange Representation Instead of Calling Convention.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Recommendation that the Republican National Committee readjust the basis of representation in national conventions, instead of calling a national convention to effect this change, probably will be made by the executive committee of the national committee when it meets here Saturday to take up this question. This was the consensus of opinion to-day.

Many members of the committee favor accomplishing the change without calling a convention. National Chairman Charles D. Hilles will preside at the meeting.

On this committee are three men who were Roosevelt sympathizers at the Chicago convention. They are Neidringhaus, West and Williams. Committeeman Adams, of Iowa, is friendly to the Cummins reorganization plan.

"This committee is as progressive as anybody," said a Republican leader to-day, "and ought to be satisfactory to LaFollette men."

The theory of the Republicans is that the Progressive faction of the party can be brought closer into the fold by merely readjusting representation in national conventions. It will be a cheap and convenient way of reuniting the party.

'THE TRIPLE TIE' GRIPS EVERY READER

Are you reading "The Triple Tie?" With to-day's installment this fascinating story which is appearing daily in The Georgian has made everyone who started it a willing slave to the hero and heroine and the adventures through which they have been started.

It is not too late to begin this story. The first installment appeared Monday. Readers of The Georgian will recall the odd picture of the bearded and eye-glassed man who had three black ties on his shirt bosom. From that picture readers were invited to guess the title to the story which was promised them in The Georgian's columns. Five prizes of $5 each were offered for the best suggestions for a name, gleaned from the picture. "The Triple Tie" was the name.

The story's first installment related the opening adventures of Gordon Kelly, a real, live, red-blooded young man, his love for a girl, and the baseball romance which is to follow.

The story will run until June 29. Toward the close the serial will end abruptly at one of the most dramatic situations ever conceived by a novelist. Readers will then be asked to supply the solution to the several mysteries unsolved.

This is not a guessing contest. The answers are logical conclusions to what has gone before and the reader can hit upon them only through reasoning them out.

For the best solutions prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Georgian. The first prize is $100, second prize $50, third prize $25, fourth prize $15. There are also twelve prizes of $5 each.

Originality, literary value and analytical clearness will be considered in awarding the prizes.

Address all letters to Mystery Editor, Atlanta Georgian.

Here's the Prize List in Great Story Contest

Prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Atlanta Georgian for the best solution of the great serial novel, "The Triple Tie," now running in The Georgian, as follows:

First Prize - -	$100
Second Prize -	50
Third Prize - -	25
Fourth Prize - -	15
12 other prizes, each,	5

"The Triple Tie" will be run in generous daily installments until June 29, when the final chapter will be published. Synopsis of the last installment is now in the hands of Mr. T. J. Peeples, cashier of the American National Bank.

It will be held by him in a sealed envelope until a committee of three Atlanta citizens not connected in any way with The Georgian may select the winners of the prizes.

Elliott Gives Last Of Ethical Lectures

The last of the series of lectures under the auspices of the Atlanta Ethical Society will be given at Cable Hall Thursday night by Dr. John Lovejoy Elliott, who will speak on "The Driving Power of Social Unrest."

More than 1,000 invitations have been issued, and a section of the hall has been set aside for negroes. No admission will be charged.

Graduating exercises at Wesley Memorial Hospital Training School will be held Friday evening at 8 o'clock at Wesley Memorial Church. Graduates this year are Miss Corrie Mims, Elliott, Ga.; Miss Annie Traber, Atlanta; Miss Fannie Mary Catron, Barboursville, Ky.; Miss Annie Mae Luckie, Valdosta, Ga.

Wesley Memorial Hospital is the hospital of Georgia Methodism and draws its patronage from the entire State and other sections. Dr. H. M. DuBose, of the First Methodist Church, will deliver the address to the graduating class.

Woman, 106, Doesn't Care to Live Longer

BALTIMORE, May 20.—A birthday reception on one's hundred and sixth anniversary is certainly an unusual experience, yet Mrs. Ann Bouder, 723 North Carey Street, enjoyed that privilege.

In a big armchair in her home, Mrs. Pouder talked of the happenings of a century ago in the animated manner one might more reasonably expect of a hero of Gettysburg recounting tales of the "sixties."

Mrs. Pouder told her friends she did not care to live until another birthday.

BERLIN, May 20.—The newspapers point out that there can be little basis for the suspicion that Germany is suffering from a lack of ready money in the presence of the fact that the Government betting machines at the Grunewald course recorded the gross takings as roundly $200,000 on Whit Monday. The gate receipts for the day totaled $27,000.

Both figures are record-breakers in Germany. The betting machines take the place of bookmakers.

HUFF LOSES FIRST CONTEMPT RULING

Judge Grubb Overrules Demurrer Offered by Defense—Point of Law Raised.

MACON, GA., May 20.—The defense lost the first point in the contempt of court case against Colonel W. A. Huff, whose trial began here today in Federal Court, when Judge W. I. Grubb, presiding, overruled a demurrer offered by the defense.

A recess was taken until 3 o'clock, when a point of law will be argued. This point is whether the sending of the caustic leter by Colonel Huff to Judge Emory Speer at his home last July constituted contempt of court. All witnesses have been dismissed until to-morrow.

The Federal Court was thronged when the case was called for trial this morning.

Attorneys for the prosecution are District Attorney O. D. Street, of Alabama; Assistant District Attorney A. H. Codington, of Macon; Judge Enoch Calloway, of Augusta, and George S. Jones and Orville A. Park, of Macon. The defendant is represented by Thomas S. Felder, Attorney General of Georgia, who for nine years has been Colonel Huff's attorney in bankruptcy litigation, out of which the contempt case developed. Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, was designated by the circuit judge to preside over the trial.

Judge Speer will be the chief witness for the Government. District Attorney Alexander Akerman and Judge A. J. Cobb, of Athens, are among the other witnesses.

Colonel Huff declares that, regardless of the result of his trial, he will proceed with his charges against Judge Speer. He says that the charges will be laid before the President and Congress within two weeks.

Speaking of the Number of Wash Dresses Young Women Need at This Season

Doubtless much could be said by mothers, and doubtless more will be said as the days grow warmer. But here is the interesting part—all these much needed wash dresses may be bought to-morrow at very, very great reductions. They go into a sale to-morrow in the Junior Department.

Prices point to worth-while savings and to the certain fact that to-morrow will be the day to secure all the wash dresses this summer is going to call for.

Here is the proof:

$2.25 Junior Wash Dresses $1.19

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. They are of ginghams, percales, bright summery patterns and colorings and styles—low-necks and short-sleeves—trimmed becomingly with braids, bands and pipings of self and contrasting colors. No question about you and daughter liking them!

None will be exchanged, none sent C. O. D.

$3.50 Junior Wash Dresses $1.95

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. Percales and ginghams of fine weave—many of them imported—and of choicest patterns. And please note how very carefully these dresses are made. Every stitch, every seam is right. Choose from high neck and long sleeve styles and low neck and short sleeve styles in two-piece and one-piece dresses.

$7.50 Junior Outing Balkan Blouses $3.75

Half price for the smartest little outing coats the season has brought out for the Junior Miss! We call them outing coats, but the way the young folks are wearing them with white dresses these cool mornings and evenings would seem to discredit that as their first use.

Red flannel—made with just that fullness through the waist that is most attractive.

Sizes fifteen and seventeen years.

With the Help of Mrs. Marvin Now With Us Demonstrating La Vida Corsets

you may do much right now that will tend toward personal comfort this summer. Warm weather and an ill-fitting corset! Banish the thought, banish the possibility!

Besides it is altogether unnecessary.

We have a new summer weight La Vida—true to the approved fashion lines—in a model that is right for you and right for the light and filmy dresses that it must support and hold in graceful lines. And right now (to the end of this week), Mrs Marvin, a skilled and experienced corset woman, is here to fit you.

It is a splendid time to attend to summer corsets!

A Notice in Good Time The Ask Mr. Foster

Free Information Bureau Closes Saturday

So those who have delayed have but the intervening days now to ask questions about summer traveling; and there is no question that all who are planning vacation trips may gain from these travel experts information that will be valuable to them when the going-away time comes around.

Their engagement expires then, next Saturday, so be advised and profit by this notice.

Making Charles Happy

A Humorous Story, Complete.

"It seems a curious perversity of fate," said the young married woman, "that I should have a husband who really has a high regard for clothes, when so many women complain that they can not enlist their husbands' attention or check books in that noble cause.

"When Charles said yesterday morning, 'My dear, you will attend to ordering your spring hats before long, will you not?' I knew it was useless to put off the matter any longer. So I promised him that I would get something that very day. I laid aside that wonderful new play of Strindberg's that I was going to take over to the park and read, and the poor dear wrote me a check and went to the office looking quite relieved in his mind.

"After he had gone, I stopped to finish only one act of Strindberg and then I started. On the way downtown I figured out just what kind of hat I should get.

"It was not so hard to plan one in my mind, but it was a different matter to find the hat that I had planned. I went to six shops and tried on about 80 hats before I began to feel discouraged and decided that there must be something wrong with my looks.

She Looked Wild.

"In the sixth shop I met Mrs. Felton, who looked wild-eyed and belligerent, and had a curious little straw concoction set upon the top of her hair, with round red objects falling off the back of it like a peck of apples descending a stairway.

"When she saw me, she clutched me menacingly by the arm, as if I were responsible for the present social system, for she said: 'Isn't it an outrage that human intelligence has to be expended upon pursuits like this! They talk about the senseless fashions of women! Do they realize that men make these styles and then force them upon us? Do you know the meaning of this whole insane subject of fashion? It's a device perpetrated by the merchants and manufacturers to get rid of the unconsumed surplus. Now, when our sex has the ballot, I hope——'

"I calmed her down, as much as I could by telling her that I felt that way about it. However, I was so relieved to find that perhaps the trouble was not with my looks, after all, that I walked over to a counter where several untrimmed hats were piled up in a bin and a lot of women were clutching at them and bought the first one from the top of the heap. It was light and soft and felt comfortable and did not make me look entirely like a cartoon when I was trying it on.

"So great was my relief at ending my search that I took home the hat with quite a feeling of satisfaction. I reasoned that it would be a simple matter to trim it myself, for all I should have to do was to leave on most of the things that the trimmed hats had on.

"That was yesterday morning. The rest of the day and until midnight last night I devoted to attempts to trim the hat. Fortunately Charles stayed downtown to dinner, so I could work without interruption. I trimmed and untrimmed eight times and nothing that I could devise looked right, so I gave it up in despair and went to bed.

"This morning as soon as Charles had gone I got the odious hat out from under the bed, where I had hidden it, and by the broad light of early day discovered what was the matter with it. The trouble was in the color, which I had failed to observe closely. It was not a normal straw color nor a yellow nor a brown, but a sickly, bilious, yellowish green, which made everything that it came into contact with look seasick, including me.

"It being now too late to return the hat, which had begun to show signs of wear, I carried it down to a dye shop and found that they could color it for me, but would have to change the shape, which was the least objectionable thing about it, and that it would take four weeks.

More Trouble.

"I then went to a department store and bought a bottle of dye, which the saleswoman said any child could apply with a small brush. In attempting to open the bottle after I had carried it home my knife slipped, the tin cap flew off and half the contents spilled over the kitchen table, a stack of dishes and the kitchen sink, to all of which it immediately adhered like enamel.

"Fortunately, it was Delia's afternoon out, but as I knew that she would be very cross when she saw the dye I spent two hours and a half and a can of scouring powder in removing it from the kitchen landscape before I could return my attention to the hat. The remaining contents of the bottle I then applied to the hat, except the part that splattered on myself. I then relined it, trimmed it for the ninth time, tried it on and found that I could stand to look at the finished product in the glass without feeling ill. I felt that I had earned that hat.

"When Charles came home I had it stuck on my head for him to look at and was just beginning the second act of Strindberg. He was very much pleased, and said: 'That looks very nice, my dear. Now, you see how easy it is to get becoming hats, so you must go down and order two or three more, and then you will be supplied for the summer."

Not What He Meant.

JONES and Long had not met for years. Once—that is, in the days when both had been striving for fame in their different professions—they had been really good chums, and many a talk had they enjoyed together by the fireside as to the little places they would take in the country "when their ships came home."

The dream of Jones has been realized, and now, although a portly old fellow, it was with a sense of real pleasure that he prepared for a visit from his former friend.

"Ah, it's splendid seeing you down here, Long!" he said cordially, by way of greeting. "Quite like old times—what? And the missus, I know, is longing to shake you by the hand. But first—yes, you must come along and have a look at my greenhouse. You simply must!"

And Long went.

"Well, Jones," he said, "you've got a mighty pretty place down here; but to my mind, it's just a bit bare."

"Oh!" replied Jones, cheerfully, "that's because the trees are so young! Next time you come—why, they'll be so big that you won't recognize them!"

The Social World

The dance recital given by pupils of Miss Lillian Viola Moseley at Segadlo's Monday evening was attended by a large number of guests. The program of beautiful dances was most enthusiastically received. A number of clever children presented ballroom dances, ballet numbers, esthetic and solo interpretative dances, reflecting great credit upon themselves and upon their teacher.

Among the solo dancers Miss Idelia Andrews did extraordinary work. Her "Little Boy Blue," done in costume, was very fine, and she was a leader in all the group dances.

Miss Nell Summerall in a fetching costume danced "La Paloma," to the delight of all who saw her. Little Miss Martha Boynton, in a white tulle gown covered with pink roses, was a bewitching little dancer presenting "The Spirit of Spring." Another pretty little girl who danced beautifully alone was Miss Sarah Wagstaff, whose number was "Polka Miniature." Miss Ruth Carr Benson presented "Fulano," a Venetian gondolier dance, wearing a pretty fancy dress.

A large number of children, both girls and boys, took part in the evening's entertainment. The little girls were beautifully gowned in pink and white and blue dancing frocks, with ballet slippers of the color of their dresses. Miss Moseley wore a handsome evening gown of black satin charmeuse, with draped skirt and corsage of shadow lace and chiffon adorned with a corsage bouquet of pastel-tinted sweetpeas.

Music at Lawn Fete.

A feature of the lawn fete to be held Friday afternoon and evening on the lawns surrounding the homes of Mrs. George Dexter and Mrs. George Traylor, on Ponce DeLeon Avenue, will be a program of music including an old fashioned quartette and a country dance. Mr. James Wardwell will be in charge of this program, and other attractions will include a row of booths with household supplies for sale, candy table, etc. A housekeepers' booth, with many articles suitable for housekeepers, and a supply of fresh vegetables, will be arranged. Special attractions will be given during the afternoon for children. Members of St. Elizabeth Guild of St. Luke's Church will sponsor the affair.

Dinner at the Driving Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Bancker will entertain eight guests at dinner at the Piedmont Driving Club Tuesday evening for Mrs. Bates Block's guests, Miss Caroline Scott, of Arkansas, and Miss Lorna Carr, of St. Louis.

A series of parties will be tendered Mr. and Mrs. Paul Seydel during their visit to Dr. and Mrs. Vassar Wooley. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Duncan will entertain at dinner Tuesday evening at the Brookhaven Club; Mr. and Mrs. William D. Ellis, Jr., will entertain at dinner Wednesday evening. Other affairs include Dr. and Mrs. Wooley's tea Thursday and Mrs. James Jackson's matinee party Saturday. Mrs. Seydel will remain with her mother after the departure of Mr. Seydel next week.

For Mrs. Hynds.

Mrs. Arthur Hynds has returned from Chattanooga, where she visited Mrs. Fountain Rice, Jr., during Mr. Hynds' absence in Dallas, Texas. Among the parties tendered Mrs. Hynds in Chattanooga were a tea at the Golf Club, given by Mrs. Stacy, and a bridge party by Mrs. Burke, with an informal tea by Mrs. Rice. On her return Mrs. Rice accompanied Mrs. Hynds for a visit to her father and sister, Mr. C. E. Sergeant and Miss Lule Sergeant.

For Mr. and Mrs. Wellhouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wellhouse, who will sail May 26 for a summer abroad, will be tendered a dinner of eight guests Tuesday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Werner S. Byck.

Miss Lewis Hostess.

Miss Margaret Lewis' bridge luncheon Tuesday morning complimented her guests, Miss Wilhelmina Drummond and Mrs. O. V. Derr, of Indiana. Sweetpeas in all the pink and lavender shades decorated the apartment. Silk hose were given as the first and consolation prizes and the guests of honor were presented with hand-embroidered collar and cuff sets.

Miss Lewis' guests were Misses Penelope Clarke, Frances Connally, Marian Foster, Aurelia Speer, Cobbie Vaughan, Nellie Stewart, Elizabeth Morgan, Clifford West, May O'Brien, Eloise Oliver, Edith Dunson, Adrienne Battey, Josephine Stoney, Susan Osborne, Mary King, Louise Bloodworth of Forsyth, Mrs. S. CROW FIGHTS WITH SNAKE; CAW'S THANKS WHEN SAVED

GRAND RAPIDS, WIS., May 20.—While hunting for May flowers on Blueberry Ridge, seven miles from this city, Richard Arpin and Henry and Ernest Smith, witnessed a fight between a garter snake and a crow.

The snake was getting the better of the crow and had coiled itself several times around the bird's neck, when the boys struck the snake on the head.

The rescued crow expressed its gratitude in crow language and made no objection when young Arpin formally adopted him.

MACON TO SEEK STATE K. OF P. HEADQUARTERS

MACON, GA., May 20.—More than 30 Macon delegates leave to-night to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Waycross. A determined effort will be made to land the permanent headquarters of the grand lodge for this city. T. J. Carling, supreme chancellor of the world, who is a resident of this city, is throwing his influence to Macon in this regard.

HUSBAND JAILED AS HE RETURNS TO SUE WIFE

D. H. Clark, Held on Wife's Charge of Desertion, Admits He Alone Stole Son.

The young husband returned to Atlanta Monday, he said, for the purpose of entering suit for divorce against his wife, and Monday night visited her at her home, to make the proposition that if she would not contest the divorce action he would permit her to keep both children. Mrs. Clark, he said, informed him she would fight to a finish.

Wife Has Him Arrested.

After Clark left the house, Mrs. Clark hurriedly telephoned to Police Chief Beavers, informing him that her husband was back in the city and asking his immediate arrest for desertion. Clark was taken into custody shortly after midnight at the home of his mother, 184 Hill Street.

Clark declared Tuesday he never again would live with his wife, but would fight in the courts for the custody of little Augustus Hamilton Clark. He said he would make no effort to regain the youngest child, Charles, aged 1 year.

"My mother is wrapped up in little Augustus, and I want to give him to her," said Clark. "I want my mother to care for the little fellow and educate him. My wife can keep the other child."

Mother Under Indictment.

Mrs. George S. Clark, mother of the young husband, is now under bond on a grand jury indictment charging her with kidnaping little Augustus. Mrs. Clark took the little fellow to Chicago in March, and was later met there by young Clark. Mrs. Clark is said to have become ill in Chicago. She returned to Atlanta with the little boy, where the wife regained him.

Clark said he came here from Jackson, Miss., where he is connected with the Jackson Light and Power Company.

SLUMMING PARTIES NOT TOLERATED AT MACON

MACON, GA., May 20.—Slumming parties are not tolerated in Macon. Miss Dorothy Smith, a corset demonstrator, and C. K. Hildreath, a traveling man, ascertained this fact when they were arrested in the restricted district by policemen especially instructed to take such sight-seeing parties in custody. The couple were fined $11 each.

ALWAYS NEW, ALWAYS BEST, AT THE BONITA

The new musical comedy company at the Bonita has sprung a surprise and won a home in Atlanta. Good, clean, catchy—and the prettiest bunch of show girls to be found anywhere. There is also a plot, which is unusual.

Take the tip and go to the Bonita this week—to-day. You will enjoy the show.

INDICTS CHURCH AS NEGLECTING NEGROES

A severe indictment was passed upon the Presbyterian Church for its indifference to the negro problem by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., in the report of his committee on the freedmen of the country.

"The Presbyterians are making absolutely no effective effort toward the solution of this great problem," declared Dr. Johnston. "We are asleep on the job. The enormity of our recreancy is apparent when we consider that every tenth man over whom our flag flies is a black man.

"We need a trained leadership to take charge of the situation. We need trained Christian teachers to go into the schools and higher institutions and instruct these people.

Little Financial Aid Given.

"How poorly we have responded to the needs of this problem is indicated by the pitifully small financial aid we have given. There are only 30,000 negro communicants in our Northern Church. Yet these poor, illiterate persons give more than a third of that contributed by the million and a half white members of the Northern Church.

"We have been the rankest sort of cowards. We have feared to take any brave, decided step." At the rate we are going, our progress will continue at a snail's pace. Some say send them to Liberia; some say send them somewhere else—get rid of the problem by shipping the black people out of the country. But God says: 'They need not depart; give Me them.'"

John Gaston, of Pittsburg, Pa., associate secretary of the Freedmen's Board, declared that the key to the whole problem must be found in the negro ministry.

"Georgia has a million negroes within its boundaries, more than all of the Northern States combined," said Mr. Gaston. "This constitutes an immense, an appalling problem. How are you going to solve it? I believe its solution can come only in a trained, educated negro ministry. The Presbyterian Church has made a start along this line. It is a small start, but we are relying in the Christian spirit of our white communicants to give it a splendid impetus. In thirteen Southern States we have established four synods and sixteen presbyteries. Ministering to the negro people are 241 negro preachers."

Sees Lessening of Crime.

Mr. Gaston said that the incalculable benefit of gospel training and educational instruction had been demonstrated to his satisfaction in many places in the South. In one Arkansas county, he said that the percentage of negro crimes was five times that of the white crimes. In spite of this, he declared, that in the ten years' history of a negro training school in that county not one of the students had appeared before the county court on the charge of being guilty of a crime against the State.

Healthy Baby is Precious Blessing

To Make It Healthy and Keep It Healthy Use a Reliable Baby Laxative

DOROTHY JOHNSON.

In spite of the greatest personal care and the most intelligent attention to diet, babies and children will become constipated, and it is a fact that constipation and indigestion have wrecked many a young life. To start with a good digestive apparatus is to start life without handicap.

But as we can not all have perfect working bowels we must do the next best thing and acquire them, or train them to become healthy. This can be done by the use of a laxative-tonic very highly recommended by a great many mothers. The remedy is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and has been on the market for two generations. It can be bought conveniently at any drug store for fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, and those who are already convinced of its merits buy the dollar size.

Its mildness makes it the ideal medicine for children, and it is also very pleasant to the taste. It is sure in its effect and genuinely harmless. Very little of it is required and its frequent use does not cause it to lose its effect, as is the case with so many other remedies.

Thousands can testify to its merits in constipation, indigestion, biliousness, sick headaches, etc., among them reliable people like Mrs. M. Johnson, 752 Dayton St., Kenosha, Wis. She is the mother of little Dorothy Johnson, who was always in delicate health until her mother gave her Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mrs. Johnson says: "I never saw such rapid improvement in the health of anyone. Syrup Pepsin is a wonderful remedy and I shall never be without it again." Thousands keep Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it from infancy to old age. The users of Syrup Pepsin have learned to avoid cathartics, salts, mineral waters, pills and other harsh remedies, for they do but temporary good and are a shock to any delicate system.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

KODAK

You never knew a person in your life who didn't enjoy looking at Kodak pictures. And why Kodak pictures more than any other kind? Simply because of the personal interest attached to them. Because you, or some of your friends, actually made them. Because there is movement, life, interest in a snap-shot. Half the fun of a picnic, outing, vacation is lost if you don't take Kodak pictures. Every day, every season, every pleasure lends itself to Kodaking. There is no trouble. They're easy to take. A mere child can operate a Kodak successfully. The price—well, it surely won't worry you when you can get a perfectly practical Brownie Camera from $1 to $12, and the higher priced Kodaks, $5 to $65 (depending on the lens equipment). Send for a catalog or come in and see them. But whatever you do, get busy and get a Kodak right now. Find out what real summer enjoyment means. Send us a trial roll of films for the best finishing that can be produced. Big stock fresh films and supplies.

"DON'T WORRY OVER PITCHING STAFF"--SMITH

By Percy H. Whiting.

"WE'LL go flying when our pitchers get right." So said Bill Smith before Monday's game. "Nobody need think we're scared. I never saw a team playing better ball and losing in my life than the Crackers did on their trip. And they never lost their nerve. If the pitchers come through we'll win in a walk. And you needn't worry. They're coming."

One of the pitchers came through Monday and it was plain sailing for the Crackers.

* * *

THE Crackers have the best infield and outfield combination that the Southern League ever saw. That's positively official. There's nothing else in the world to it.

Bailey, Welchonce and Long form the best outfield ever seen in the Southern League.

Agler, Alperman, Bisland and Smith constitute an infield the like of which was never seen before in Dixie.

The catching staff will do as it stands to-day, and if it doesn't continue standing right Bill Smith will kick it overboard and load up with some men who can deliver. That's official too and right from Bill Smith.

The pitchers are Smith's only trouble.

"At that they look pretty good," says Billy. "This Gilbert Price is a positive marvel. I never in all my days saw a hurler with more stuff. He seems to weaken sometimes at the end of a game. I don't know whether he gets overconfident or weakens physically. If he gets to lasting all the way they couldn't beat him in fifty years.

"Bill Chappelle showed us a good game his last out and will win for us I think. Brady's work is perfectly satisfactory. If this Dent goes all right I'll take my chances."

* * *

AS for Paul Musser, he showed that he was there with everything in the catalogue yesterday. He allowed five hits, one a scratch home run. If Tommy Long hadn't misjudged this ball badly only one run would have been made off Musser. His control was vastly better than usual and he looked a great pitcher.

As for the Crackers—they played the ball they have been playing almost all the season. They got to Pitcher Kissinger of the Turtle team only twice but it was enough.

In the fourth Bisland put across a clean home run that won the game. After that time the locals made but one hit. But they did not need even that one.

* * *

THE new man, Bisland, looked like a legacy from your rich uncle. Besides hitting the homer that won the game he fielded neatly and he looks so much like a big league ball player you couldn't detect him from the real thing in the broad daylight.

Wally Smith kept right on looking like the wonder of the league. And Whitey Alperman surely had a big day. In the eighth he actually flew after Ward's liner and in the ninth he nipped what might have been a rally by grabbing down Abstein's awful poke.

* * *

THE game was played in one hour and forty-six minutes, which is amazingly fast considering how other contests of the year have lagged. Umpires Bill Hart and Dan Pfenninger seemed to have developed some pepper in their old age and kept things hustling. That the good work will be continued is the earnest hope of the fans. Draggy baseball games don't please anybody.

DIABETES NO LONGER FEARED

S. S. S. Quickly Puts Vim and Energy Into You.

There is no need to feel any alarm over the symptoms of diabetes. This disease is apt to be purely a digestive trouble, and for this reason the liver is held largely responsible. The liver is the largest organ of the body, and is not only a mass of threadlike blood vessels, but throughout its entire fabric is intimately associated with the digestive system.

The thing to do is to so stimulate the action of this myriad of blood vessels that each cellular part selects its own essential nutriment by healthy and judicious divine discretion. This is accomplished by S. S. S., the most potent, the most active and the most naturally stimulating blood medicine known. You do not need purgatives; do not be alarmed at the presence of sugar nor of so-called sediment.

Just stick to S. S. S. and bear in mind that this celebrated remedy has such a specific stimulating action on the local cells of the liver as to preserve their mutual welfare and give a proper relative assistance, each cell to the other.

Dropsical tendencies are thus overcome, biliousness soon becomes a memory and jaundice, malaria, afflictions of the spleen and glandular swellings will be entirely eliminated. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores and for competent medical advice, free, consult by mail the laboratory of the Swift Specific Company, 159 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Cobb Not Greatest Ball Player

"Keeler Superior to Ty"--Sullivan

By Ted Sullivan

THE return of Cobb to the Detroit club and its continued clump since he began to wear the team's uniform has served one object lesson to the American public, and that is that no one player, no matter how great or skillful, can win games alone. It takes nine men to win ball in any fast league. It has been the case in the past, and it will be ever thus in the future. A pitcher of Walsh or Johnson's caliber may figure conspicuously in the winning of a game, but at that they must have fielding and run-getting powers in their teams to make them winners.

But let one thing be impressed on the public mind—players may come and go, but the game will go on forever. Had Cobb not returned to the Detroit team, the continued losings of the club would have been laid to his absence, but it was a great victory and eye-opener both for the Detroit people in all parts of America that he did return, to show the superficial and unsophisticated how little one man figures in the game, and especially an outfielder.

To look at Cobb, or Cobbism, from a dispassionate and impartial standpoint, let us see what Cobb's status is in the game. I grant he has the right to ask for any salary he thinks his services are worth; he realizes that he is a drawing card at home and abroad. He knows the owners of the club look at him from a commercial standpoint, and he views them in the same light. He knows also that there is a time limit to his playing days, and he wants to make the most of it. The home press and the unsophisticated press throughout the United States have been burning incense to his greatness and telling him that he is the one ball player in the history of the game, which he never was. But as Detroit made him a drawing card, in their slopology, he had a right to make them pay for it. Which he has.

Infielder More Important.

Let us see where he figures as a ball player, compared with the players of the past and present. He is playing in the outer works of the game—as a fielder, averaging about two fly balls to a game, with plenty of time to think what he will do after catching a fly ball or the grounder that is bounding toward him. No outfielder can be compared with an infielder or a catcher, as their positions are entirely different in the nature of the work they have to perform. An infielder's brain is in perpetual action from the time the pitcher delivers the ball, and he has only a fraction of a second to think, so quick does the machinery of the infield work.

Cobb is the best run getter in the profession to-day. Run getting is the combination of hitting and base running. Base running has ever been the spectacular part of a ball player's work, with all other things nearly equal. To say Cobb was the greatest ball player in the history of the game would be like telling a man who saw the Mississippi River that the Illinois River was the longest and largest in the United States, or to tell a person who saw the summit of Pike's Peak that the range of the Allegheny was higher.

I suppose it will be the same in the next generation of ball players. They will be as skeptical of the baseball prowess of Cobb, Wagner and Lajoie, as the present ones are of the greatness of Mike Kelly, Ewing and Williamson. As a fielder and thrower Cobb could not stand comparison with Fogarty, Curt Welsh, Bill Lange, and a few others of the past and he is not to-day the superior as a fielder and thrower of Graney of Cleveland and Moeller of Washington.

Thinks Keeler Was Better.

There is a little modest man who left the ball field two years ago, namely, William Keeler, who did not wear sleigh bells around a hotel to let people know he was around, but he was the superior of Cobb, as versatile a batter. But to say that Cobb was the equal of the three great ball players of the past, namely, Ewing, Williamson, and Mike Kelly, would be ridiculous.

Williamson was a third baseman and a shortstop. He was one of the greatest base runners in the history of the game. Besides being one of the greatest infielders that ever lived, he was also a catcher and a pitcher. Buck Ewing was undoubtedly the greatest throwing, hitting and base running catcher of them all. But to compare Cobb, the outfielder, to the immortal Kelly, who was the craftiest base runner of all times, besides being one of the best batters and catchers that ever lived, would be like comparing a 2:40 horse to a 2:10 one.

To use a hyperbole, it could be said that Mike Kelly behind the bat and on the bases in the crucial contest of a game sweat more baseball cells into the rim of his cap than some players of to-day have in their skulls.

If Ty Cobb is guilty of the alleged prima-donna breaks in wanting extra hotels and extra rooms from other players and practicing when he wants to—no one is to blame but the Detroit management themselves. They have petted and coddled him as much as an indulgent mother does to a child she has spoiled.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—I have decided to give much space in this article to the fast-going Phillies and Dodgers. The Phillies merit considerable analysis. When the Giants played them recently, I never saw a Philadelphia team playing better, and, as there has always been plenty of feeling between the two clubs, they were very glad to clean up on New York as they did. The team is benefiting from much better conditions this season than have existed in Philadelphia for many years, and these are mainly responsible for the marked improvement, as it will be noted that practically the same men are appearing in the batting order that landed the team in the second division last summer. William Locks, the new president of the club, is a practical baseball man, and he is giving Dooin a chance to manage the team without worrying him with a lot of trivialities. The result is that Dooin is getting good baseball out of his men, the best that is in each individual.

Again the Quakers have advanced so far into the season without any of the regulars suffering serious injuries and being out of the game, almost a record for the club. It is not likely the team will go through the race with this rosy record, and an injured regular or two will slow the club up a good deal because Dooin is not well fortified with substitutes.

* * *

THE real strength of the team lies in the excellent pitching staff which is the unexcelled feature of the league at this writing. When either Alexander, Chalmers or Seaton has been working, it has been practically impossible for an opposing club to do any hitting. It is this great pitching which has permitted the Phillies to make the good showing that they have, because they are not a crowd of hard batters themselves. They win their games by small scores, depending on the pitchers and smooth fielding to prevent the other side from rolling up many runs. Now, when this pitching staff begins to wilt under the strain of the race and the heat of the summer, as it is liable to do, the Quakers are going to find a very much harder road to travel. They would have a good chance for the pennant with more sturdy batters. As it is now, they are depending on their twirlers and have not better than an outside opportunity for the championship.

* * *

THE Philadelphia club has been the surprise of the race. In its ante-season performances, it made a very poor showing, being easy for both the Athletics and Washington teams of the American League. From those scores, the Quakers looked like the same old bunch, dead on their feet, as they have always been, but with the opening of the race on their own circuit, they jumped away in good style and are playing fast ball. It is their speed and pitching that have held them up so far.

* * *

"WHERE will Brooklyn stop?" is the question which is stirring the baseball following portion of the populace now.

One of these days the Brooklyn team is going to wake up and discover that it is rated as a great ball club, tremble at the idea and start to lose. The Brooklyn boys should finish in the first division. They have talent at present to warrant such a prediction, but they should not crowd the winner of the pennant in September. That is merely my opinion. Perhaps it is based on the years of mediocre baseball played in Brooklyn and Philadelphia will find it harder traveling when they start away from home and invade the West. Not that they will encounter particularly tough competition in the West, but the handicap of playing away from home diamonds and home crowds is going to be a big one. It will be observed that most of the successes of both these teams have been made at home under the watchful eye of home crowds. The Brooklyn club has set its admirers crazy, and men who have not been able to raise up their voices to root for the home club for years are tearing their throats out regardless now. This all helps a ball club, especially on that floats into a winning streak suddenly, as Brooklyn has. Still the Dodgers may tear through the league as Washington did last year and not let up.

* * *

THE Boston club is the one which is paralyzing the ante-season critics. Nobody could see any good in that team before the race opened, with the possible exception of Stallings, the manager, and James Gaffney, the owner, and yet it is playing ball and becoming the talk of the town in place of the declining Red Sox. Stallings is responsible for it, because he is a manager who builds up a club. Within a year or two the Boston team is going to be one to take into the pennant reckoning I believe. The manager is digging up new material which suits his purposes and developing it. One thing he is looking for and which no other Boston team has possessed for a good many years is speed. His system very closely resembles that followed by McGraw.

So far I have not seen St. Louis in action, but I do not believe its showing to date is its normal stride. It does not strike me that Huggins can maintain anything like a first division pace. His club will not stand it.

* * *

WHEN the Giants were going badly two or three weeks ago and everybody was kicking the ball, McGraw called "Larry" Doyle, the good natured, to him after a game and took up with him the matter of an error he had made which figured largely in the defeat of the Giants.

"Well," replied "Larry," "you've got to hand it to me, boss. I make all my errors when they count."

This answer disarmed McGraw.

* * *

IT must not be thought that I am slighting the American League, but there has been little change during the week in that organization. The Athletics are still piling along with a comfortable lead, and Boston is crashing down through the standing, giving little indication of having even a look-in for the flag. The Washington club is the worst sufferer. Griffith has had some hard luck that has slowed up his team and hurt his chances for the pennant very largely. Foster, who within a year developed into one of the best third basemen in the league, is laid up with typhoid fever and will be out of the game for pretty nearly two months anyway. This destroys the smooth working of the infield, because Laporte is slow.

Johnson, the pitcher, is the wonder of the season. He established his record of fifty-six scoreless innings last week. To my mind, he is not only the greatest in the game to-day, but the greatest in the game has ever produced. He did not make this record against easy teams, but against clubs composed of the hardest hitters in the country. Griffith did not pick any "spots" for him. My hat is off to him.

Easy to Pick All-Star Prep Team

Armistead Would Be Good Captain

By Jim Glover

TO select an all-star baseball team from the prep schools of Atlanta this year is not as difficult as it has been in past seasons. This year there is a star for almost every position who is so much better than his nearest competitor that there is little chance for any disagreement.

Here are the names of the players, the positions that they are given and the schools which they represented the past season.

Name	Position	School
Armistead	catcher (Capt.)	Boys High
Fox	pitcher	Boys High
Weston	pitcher	Tech High
Callahan	pitcher	Marist
Lowery	first base	Marist
Bedell	second base	Tech High
Allen	third base	Marist
Spurlock	shortstop	Boys High
Laird	left field	Tech High
Rennolds	center field	Tech High
Wells	right field	Peacock
J. Parks	utility	Tech High

Sam Armistead, of Boys High, is without a doubt the best backstop in the league this year. He steadies a pitcher, leads the league in batting and seldom allows a man to steal a base. He is made captain of the nine as he knows the game thoroughly.

Fox Leading Pitcher.

The pitching staff is the only problem on the team. Fox has shown up the best this year, but one man is not enough to do the twirling for a team, so another had to be selected; and right here is where the rub comes in. Weston and Callahan are so nearly equal in ability that it is necessary to name both. Callahan is a pitcher of the sensational style, a pitcher who often fans the first nine or ten men who face him and then when his support weakens blows up and loses the game. Weston has pitched in only two games this year but his showing in both contests was fine. Besides his pitching he is the best batting and fielding twirler of them all.

Jim Lowery gets the job at first base without any trouble. He is a steady player and about the only man on the Marist team who has not "spilled the beans" in some game.

Bill Bedell is the right man for second base. He is fast and has swiped more bases this year than any man in the league. He is also a good batter.

Charlie Allen, of Marist, has not played quite up to his usual standard at third base this year, but, nevertheless, his playing and hitting has been good enough to warrant him a place on the all-star team.

Weston and Parks, of Tech High, are also crack third sackers, but Weston is also a pitcher and Parks has been given the utility job.

Spurlock Crack Shortstop.

Spurlock is in a class by himself when it comes to playing shortstop. He has a good head and can hit and field well. He is just what a shortstop should be. Harry Rennolds is the best outfielder in the bunch and is given a place at center. His fielding average for the season is 996 and he is always there with the stick.

Johnny Laird is another good outfielder and is especially good on difficult balls. The other outfield position is given to Wells, of Peacock, although he is a shortstop. He is too good a man to be kept off the team and could play the outfield as well as any of them.

Jim Parks, of Tech High, gets the position of utility man, which is just as important a place as any other one on a team. Parks is a good pitcher, crack infielder and a slugger, one of the best in the league, and he would be a great asset to this team.

GREAT MANAGER IS NOT ALWAYS TEAM BUILDER

By Otto C. Floto.

WHILE viewing with regret the poor showing that such popular men as Chance and Tinker are making this year we often wonder whether there is a distinction between a great manager and a builder of a successful baseball team. There must be something to this contention or else why does it constantly flash across our think pan?

There is no one will deny but that Frank Chance is a great manager; that he can get more out of the same men under his charge than any other one individual out of a hundred that try. Yet he's an absolute failure to date with New York. Why? Because he did not build the team he commands. Scouts were sent abroad to bring home the recruits, and from present observation the scouts failed in their missions. Added to this is the poor luck that has greeted the team for the past four or five years. To play a whole series against all the clubs in the Eastern division of the American League and not win a single game—well, we are at a loss to explain it. Yet that's the record, and that's the verdict that will go down against the Peerless Leader in future discussions.

* * *

MIND, no one expected Chance to make good in a single season, nor in two or three seasons for that matter. But we surely looked for better results than have been brought to date. A lot of wooden Indians, frequently seen as advertisements in front of cigar stores, could have accomplished no less.

It's now up to Chance to demonstrate to us that he can "build" as well as manage. He has proven to us beyond a doubt that the managerial abilities are his—won in actual contest time and time again in the severest kind of battle. With manager, he must show that he is really all his friends have claimed for him. He must weed out the dead and replace them with live and winning material. When he has done this we'll shout bravo!

* * *

CHANCE did not build up the great machine that won four National League and two world's championships. He was part of the machine before it was handed over to him, but the late Frank Selee gathered Tinker, Kling, Schulte, Evers, Hofman and the rest of the bunch that stood so gallantly by the P. L. in all those now historic struggles. Selee had to step down and out owing to poor health, and Chance stepped in and developed the heirlooms that his manager left to him.

True, Chance made some advantageous trades that still further strengthened his machine. But the men traded were all gathered by Selee and proved such alluring bait to the other clubs that the swap which brought Brown, Shekard and others into the Cub fold was comparatively easy. So without taking any credit away from Chance, all he had to do in this instance was to keep the well-organized machine moving. This he did with wonderful results. He succeeded where another man might have failed.

* * *

TAKE Clark Griffith, of the Washington team. He is one of the best managers in the business. Time and time again he has proved this. But we ask, is he a builder? To a certain extent we believe him to be. He surely showed such ability when he organized the Highlanders for their first appearance in the American League. Things, however, were rather easy at that time because the younger league was grabbing all the stars from the National. When he got Chesbro he had pretty nearly a team.

He failed to make much of a show with Cincinnati. (But so do all the others.) In Washington last year as well as this he is doing wonders. But in figuring matters remember that it was Cantillon who got Johnson to come there, and the other half of the team was helped along by Jimmy McAleer. Clark, however, is getting every ounce out of them.

MANDOT 10-TO-8 CHOICE OVER ANDERSON TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, May 20.—The experience and ring generalship of Joe Mandot, the New Orleans lightweight, has caused a flood of money to be offered by his admirers at the eleventh hour, and just twelve hours before he is due to enter the Vernon ring to box Bud Anderson, of Medford, Oreg., the Southern boy is a favorite at odds of 10 to 8.

With their training concluded in the best of shape, both boys are in perfect condition and confident. Mandot feeling sure he will redeem himself, and Anderson certain that he will add another knock-out to his record.

BENEFIT GAME TO RAISE COIN TO BOOST CITY

WEDNESDAY is Ad Men's Day at Ponce DeLeon ball park. And for the first time this season the people of Atlanta will be given an opportunity to show that they appreciate what the Ad Men have done for them and what they are planning to do.

"What have they done?" you ask.

Well, for one thing, they have, within the year, raised more than $100,000 for various good causes in Atlanta. The Y. M. C. A., the Chamber of Commerce and goodness knows how many charitable organizations have been helped by money they have raised.

This spring when it appeared that Atlanta was to lose the honor of turning out the largest opening day crowd, the Ad Men's Club whirled in and whooped things up with a result that all Southern League records for all time were fractured.

At every convention of Ad Men's Clubs which they have attended they have whooped up Atlanta in some really spectacular way that has put the Gate City before the delegates in a most favorable light.

"Wht will they do with the money they raise?" you inquire.

They don't want their car fare paid. They are all blowing themselves to that. They don't want it for entertainment or for themselves in any way.

They want it for Atlanta.

The scheme is this. The big feature of the convention will be a night parade. There will be 100 motor truck floats, prepared by national advertisers. There will be bands galore. And every Ad Men's Club represented there will march in uniform in the parade. The local men are going to buy their uniforms—and it will cost them about $35 apiece for this. They need money, however, to buy big, white parasols, on which the word, "Atlanta" will be printed in huge, red letters. They need money also for big electric flash lamps, which will be provided with huge glass globes, on which, in red, will be the words "Atlanta Always Ahead." They need money for a band. In other words they need it to boost Atlanta at Baltimore.

The cause is a worthy one.

The Ad Men do just as much to boost Atlanta as any organization here. They take over all the odd jobs that the Chamber of Commerce is too dignified to handle, and any good boosting organization needs support.

CHARLIE WHITE STOPS THOMAS IN TWO ROUNDS

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Charlie White stopped Joe Thomas in the second round of their 10-round bout last night. The local boy was an easy victim for the Chicago star.

Thomas was knocked down for the count of nine in the first round, after going down two other times, the bell saving him the last time.

At the opening of the second, Thomas appeared to have regained his strength, but a few well directed rights and lefts put him groggy again, and after about one minute of the second round the referee, Dick Burke, raised White's hand and motioned Thomas to his corner.

SHUGRUE AND LORE BOX FAST 12-ROUND DRAW

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, May 20.—Young Shrugrue, of Jersey City, and Johnny Lore, of New York, boxed a fast 12-round draw here last night. Tommy Brenahan, of Newcastle, Pa., was given a well-earned decision over Louis Decontilieu, of Paris, at the end of a 10-round semi-final.

TOMMY SHEEHAN WINS.

BILLINGS, MONT., May 29.—Tommy Sheehan, of Chicago, won a decision here last night over Roy Cocuit, of Cody, Wyo., at the end of a 12-round bout.

Mathewson As Savior of Giants

Keeps Champs in Race—Marquard

By Rube Marquard

(Holder of the World's Record of Nineteen Consecutive Victories.)

SO many startling surprises have developed in the first month of the major league campaigns it is hard to figure out where it will all end.

By the looks of things anything is liable to happen. The "dope" has been upset in so many surprising manners that it seems after all as if there is some "jinx" attached to the magic "13" of this year of grace. However, there are enough beacons shining through the gloom of uncertainty to re-establish faith in ability as opposed to superstition.

We do not have to travel very far just now to find the one real beacon of Giant hope. His name is Christy Mathewson. His work alone is enough to break all the charms of "jinxes" and "hoodoos," for he arises in the thirteenth year of his career as a Giant and a major league performer to a height of perfection that in any other pitcher would be regarded as miraculous. Mathewson has been the great bulwark of the Giant pitching staff so long that the public has come to regard his wonderful brilliancy as a matter of common habit.

To none other than the great master of pitching science may New York contratulate itself upon being as well to the front in the 1913 National League race. So far he has been the only reliable pitching asset of the veteran talent. Matty is confident that this will be his greatest year, and I share the belief with him.

Here is a pitcher who very wisely has conserved every ounce of vitality. By the use of his head he has been able to shine year after year with the very least possible strain to his arm. And I believe that Christy Mathewson will live to as ripe an age of efficiency as did the venerable Cy Young. To-day Mathewson is better than he has ever been before.

Illness Sets "Rube" Back.

Mathewson has had to shoulder the great bulk of the pitching responsibility so far this season, but I think there will be plenty of help for him from now on. My chief regret for Mathewson, McGraw and all my fellow players has been that I am not capable of doing my share toward making it three pennants in a row. I offer no excuses, for I know in my heart that very soon I will be back into my proper stride. I was just hitting my pace when an attack of tonsilitis set me back.

By the time I am on my feet once more—and that will not be very long, I can tell you—the Giants should be as well provided with pitching material as any club could desire. I know from the condition in which the men returned from Texas that a week or two of summer weather would put all our pitchers in first-class shape.

Our club is not the only one that has suffered in this respect. Pitching, as a general rule, has been very unsatisfactory so far in both leagues. With very few exceptions—principally Mathewson, Johnson and Plank—pitchers usually the most reliable have been most unsteady. By every law of precedent this condition should not obtain when the veteran pitchers finally round into shape.

Having seen all our rivals but St. Louis, I am more convinced than ever that the Giants should win the pennant. It will not be the runaway that most of our supporters presumed before the start, it will mean a good, steady fight through the whole course, a condition that should make the current season a most memorable one.

League Strength in East.

The strength of the National League, as evidenced in the first month's play, centered in the East, just as it does in the American. Philadelphia and Brooklyn, rather than Pittsburg and Chicago, seem bent upon most forcibly debating the championship with the Giants.

With Hans Wagner back in the game the Pirates are almost bound to greatly improve their standing. Fred Clarke's pitchers have been woefully off color all along, and this condition has resulted in a very severe handicap for his team. Pittsburg will undoubtedly get back among the leaders, but has so much ground to make up that it can not now be seriously regarded as a challenger of the Giants.

Chicago has a very good looking club outside its pitchers, but is so weak in box material that it can not hope, under present conditions, to cope with any one of the three strongest Eastern clubs.

Cincinnati is in the same boat as Chicago. The Indian, Johnston, has been Tinker's only reliable pitcher so far. Yet there is fair strength in the Reds' staff if the men ever get to working properly. Chicago can not muster as much twirling strength as Cincinnati, though Evers' team in all other respects is superior.

A very pleasing circumstance to the Giants is the manner in which George Stallings has resurrected the Boston Braves. Out of practically nothing he has shaped a collection capable of giving the best a very stiff argument. This will prove of great help to the Giants, no doubt, as Boston will be able to stop New York's rivals once in a while. Heretofore Boston always managed somehow to make things interesting enough for New York, but never did a great deal against Pittsburg and Chicago.

Giants in Lead Soon.

I think that inside of a very short time the Giants will step out into the lead, and once there our club will never be dislodged. It is a fact that we have not played the game of which we are capable. The fault did not lie wholly in poor pitching, either. We have lost many games because we did not get the most out of our hitting ability and speed.

I suppose we looked too lightly upon the other teams. But if so we have learned a good lesson, for every Giant player will try his very best from now until the season is over. Over-confidence is blamed for the loss of a pennant to the Athletics last year. It will not be our sad lot this season. McGraw is a man who will not stand for trifling.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR.

SPORT.

When Nero lived in ancient days
Men had their sport in brutal ways.
They sat around on cushioned seats
And loudly cheered the bloody feats
Performed by large and lowbrowed genis
Who earned their bread by putting denis
And fractures in another's dome
To please the populace of Rome
To-day we all would take offense
(We men of high intelligence)
To see a pair of fellows wield
A butcher's cleaver and a shield,
And clout each other on the dome
As in the days of ancient Rome.
We love a nobler form of sport,
A milder and a gentler sort,
And so we pay our hard earned scads
To see a lot of healthy lads
Who race on motorcycle tracks
And break their arms and legs and backs,
Who travel at a fearful rate
And finish in a scrambled state.
And if, perchance, they do not die
We heave a disappointed sigh.
"Ah, yes!" we say while riding home,
"What brutes there were in ancient Rome!"

One Jeff O'Connell wishes to state that the climate of Racine, Wis., is too densely populated with boxing gloves to be healthful.

Still, Mr. O'Connell made a deep impression in Racine. In fact, he made five separate and distinct impressions in the floor.

Nick Altrock, comedian, wants to pitch, whereas some of our Cracker pitchers pitch as if they were trying to be comedians.

From this distance it is hard to tell whether O. Overall is coming back or going back.

Willie Ritchie avers that he will engage in mortal conflict for the small sum of $17,500, demonstrating that there are various ways to obtain money under false pretenses.

Hugh Jennings is said to be on the verge of nervous breakdown, due to a severe case of Ty Cobb, aided and abetted by a losing streak.

FODDER FOR FANS

C. Webb Murphy, disgusted with the weakness of his pitching staff, sent eight scouts to different parts of the country yesterday with orders to gather in some pitchers.

* * *

The Reds defeated the Braves yesterday in a ten-inning battle that was characterized by considerable slugging and many errors.

* * *

The wonderful showing made this season by the Phillies has necessitated the building of six additional ticket booths to facilitate the handling of the crowds.

* * *

And perhaps Horace Fogel, who used to own the Phillies, isn't experiencing a seasick feeling when he notes that the daily attendance figures at the Phillies' grounds is double and treble what they were last year.

* * *

The Dodgers again beat the Cardinals, but failed to move into first place because the Phillies had an easy time defeating the Cubs.

* * *

"Smoky Joe" Wood seems to be back in form again. He held the White Sox to one run yesterday, while his own club piled up ten.

* * *

Ty Cobb's three hits out of three times up were big factors in the defeat of the Athletics by the Tigers.

* * *

Eddie Collins, who is near the top of the American League batting column, harvested four hits out of four times up yesterday.

* * *

"Jake" Daubert, the Dodgers' first sacker, continues to slug the ball. He made a single and a triple yesterday.

* * *

* * *

With the bases full in the eighth inning, Manager Chance up for the second time in that inning, batted out of turn, singled and scored the two runs that won the game for the Yankees from the Browns. When the Browns protested the trick it was too late to be availing.

* * *

The most thrilling game staged on the Polo grounds for a long time was that of yesterday, when the Giants won in the fourteenth 3 to 2. Time and again the pitchers for both the Giants and the Pirates were in "holes," but wonderful fielding pulled them out. The Pirates used fourteen and the Giants eighteen players.

* * *

"Heinie" Zimmerman and Manager Evers, of the Cubs, had a wordy battle on the field yesterday which may result in Evers suspending the third sacker, who, it is said, objects to playing under Evers.

* * *

Evers, by the way, may soon hear other highly uncomplimentary things about his future. President Murphy is on his way to Boston for a confab with his manager, and it is not likely that C. Webb will wax enthusiastic over the miserable showing the Cubs have made so far in the East.

GEORGIA TACKLE DIES FROM TYPHOID FEVER

ATHENS, GA., May 20.—William Luther Arnett, of Odessa, a member of the junior law class of the University of Georgia, died after an illness of four days here this morning from typhoid fever. His body was carried to his home this afternoon, the law class following the casket in a body. He was 26 years old, and in the final games of football last fall he was a star tackle. He was one of the best men physically, mentally and morally in the University.

VOLS BUY NICHOLSON; MAY GET OUTFIELD BERTH

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 20.—President Hirsig announced yesterday the purchase from Louisville of Outfielder Ovid Nicholson, formerly of the Blue Grass League, where he established a great record for stolen bases. He was secured by Louisville from Pittsburg, who drafted him from the Blue Grass. Nicholson will probably replace Daley in the Vols' outfield.

HANLON IN DRAW BOUT.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Eddie Hanlon and Lew Dimond fought a 10-round draw here last night.

Abstinence Will Bring Success

Shun Tobacco, Says Frank Chance

By Frank L. Chance

This is my sixteenth year in major league baseball. For fifteen of those years I was connected with the Chicago club. In that time I have served at practically everything, from all-round utility man to manager.

And, incidentally, I believe that I have about sized up the situation in regard to ball players. In the first place, it is essential that tobacco and drink be left alone. If drink is tabooed it naturally follows that late hours also will be tabooed. It is necessary for a youngster aspiring to succeed in baseball to see to it that his constitution is made strong and that he does nothing to interfere with his physical development.

I have come to the conclusion that a man is not fully developed until he has reached 30 years of age. Possibly after that the moderate use of tobacco will not do him any great injury.

So much for my advice to youngsters who aspire to make baseball a profession.

"My advent into baseball was probably as inauspicious as an event of such a nature could possibly be. There were no brass bands to meet me at the station, and, as I remember, the newspapers of Chicago devoted a short paragraph—maybe it was only a sentence—to the fact that the Chicago team had signed a young catcher.

But I am getting a bit ahead of the story. In 1894-95 I played ball on the Washington College (California) team. With me was a young fellow, also a student at the college, named "Rod" Wagner. During the summer months he was manager or had something to do with a town team at Sullivan, Ill. He asked me how I would like to play ball there. He told me I could get $40 a month and my board and lodging.

At that time I was only 16, and $10 a week sounded pretty good to me, so I accepted. The club didn't make any money and I was "done" out of my pay.

I returned to college in 1897 and took part in a big amateur baseball tournament held in California for youths under 18 years of age. Some of the fellows who entered it of course cheated, but that has nothing to do with my case.

"Cal" McVey, who one time was a member of the Cincinnati team, saw me play and recommended me to "Cap" Anson, who was then manager of the Chicago club. Anson refused to give me a trial. That was either in the spring or early summer of 1897. In the autumn of the same year McVey wrote to "Jim" Hart, who had succeeded Anson, and Hart sent for me.

I was signed as an extra catcher, but after I had been in Chicago for a while it seemed to me as if I had been signed as a sort of make-yourself-useful around the ball park. Any little odd jobs that were to be done and there wasn't anybody else handy to do them I was ordered to pitch in.

If the bat boys didn't show up, I had to look after the bats. If there was no one else to carry the bats from the "bus" into the ball park, or from the ball park to the "bus," I did it. If Hart or some of the veteran players on the club forgot anything, such as gloves and the like, I was sent after them. Even some of the "bushers" who were just breaking in pretty much the same as I was, but who happened to be my seniors by a couple of years, employed me as errand boy for them.

But I stood it. I was in the big show and I was determined to make good. I realized that the best way to make good was to stick around as long as they would let me and watch the cavortings of those who knew. I did, and eventually my time came. And I guess I must have made good.

The club was in need of a first baseman, and I was delegated to cover the bag.

It was in 1906 that I was made manager of the Cubs, after nine years of service. Of course, the rest is what might be called modern history and there is no use rehashing that.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Sammy Harris, manager of Kid Williams, is still hounding Johnny Coulon, the bantamweight champion, for a match. Harris says he is willing to give Coulon a guarantee of $2,000 to fight Williams in a 15 or 20 round bout on July 4.

* * *

Jimmy Hurst, who handles the reins over "Wildcat" Ferns, writes from Kansas City that he has his protege matched to box "Patsy" McIntyre, Canadian welterweight champion, 10 rounds at Winnipeg, Manitoba, June 7. Ferns will also meet Anton La Grave, at Taft, Cal., July 4, for a 20-round fight.

* * *

Tommy Walsh, Mandot's hustling manager, abused his typewriter long enough to let us know that the French baker boy is in great trim for his 20-round engagement with Bud Anderson on the coast Tuesday night.

* * *

If victor over Anderson, Walsh says he has two big fights planned for the Southerner. Tommy expects to send Joe against Rivers on July 4, and Willie Ritchie on Labor Day.

* * *

Leach Cross vs. Tommy Marto and Ray Bronson vs. Phil Cross, is the card arranged for the McMahon brothers for their club in New York next Wednesday night.

* * *

Because Johnny Coulon demanded his traveling expenses from Chicago to Boston the officials of the Atlas A. A., of Boston, have declared off the 12-round bout between Coulon and Charley Goldman scheduled to take place May 28. In place of this bout Matty Baldwin and Dick Gallant will battle.

* * *

Frank Mantell and Larry English will clash in a 10-round set-to at New York Tuesday night. They are middleweights, having agreed to make 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

* * *

The Pittsburg boy will surely have his hands full coming out a winner, as both his opponents are running him a close race for the title.

SMITH 10-TO-8 FAVORITE OVER JESS WILLARD

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—In James W. Coffroth's Eighth Avenue arena to-night a couple of huskies will have designs on the world's championship. They are heavyweights and their names are Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith.

Did they belong in any other class there would be haggling and maybe claiming of forfeit if one man scaled a few ounces over a stipulated notch. As it is, Willard will have fifty pounds the better of the poundage and Smith will have no redress, for the laws of the ring, so far as they bear upon avoirdupois, do not hold "north of '58." Smith has been made favorite, the price this morning being 10 to 8. This is in pursuance of San Francisco's policy of pinning its faith to the man it knows when a local fighter and a stranger become embroiled.

Just what the odds would be if the heavies met in the East is not known, but it is doubtful if Smith would be installed first choice. The Gunner's best performance there was his victory over Bombardier Wells, and Willard outboxed Luther McCarty, who beat Al Palzer, who beat Bombardier Wells.

Both Willard and Smith are well thought of around New York and are regarded as fit candidates for the world's championship. Willard lacks the experience of Smith, and this is one reason of the San Francisco fight followers' liking for Smith. Gunboat's vaunted knockout punch is another. It may be that Willard also possesses a knockout punch, but San Francisco has no knowledge of the fact. He certainly has not been advertised in that direction to the same extent as Smith.

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game.

To-day's Installment.

CHAPTER II.

SEATED in a chair, with his feet resting on the edge of a small stove in the center of the room, was a short, keen-eyed man in his thirties, reading a copy of Sporting Life. He turned his head as the door opened and swept his eye over the dripping figure that stood, tall and erect, just within the doorway. Pools of water formed on the floor under the stranger and they came together in a rivulet, which crept snake-like along the planking until it found a friendly crack.

"I am looking for Mr. Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta Baseball Club," said the young man.

"I am Bill Smith," replied the man in the chair. "What can I do for you?"

"I want to play ball on your team."

Long experience in managing pennant-winning ball teams (and some that were not pennant-winners) had taught Bill Smith many valuable baseball lessons. One of these was never to pass snap judgment on a ball player; another was never to take a ball player's estimate of his own ability. Nineteen managers out of twenty would have taken just one glance at the bedraggled figure in the doorway and dismissed it with a curt "nothing doing." That was not Bill Smith's way. And his method of handling this particular applicant for a position on his team led to the most surprising series of sensations that ever happened in the history of the national game.

"You look somewhat moist," observed the manager. "Take off your clothes and dry them at this stove. "Whisky!" he suddenly yelled. "That isn't an invitation to take a drink," he added; "I am only calling my attendant."

Smith Surprised.

In response to the summons a colored man entered the room briskly.

"Yassir, yassir," replied Whisky, getting busy at once. Many seasons spent in attending to the wants of impatient ball players in that club house had developed an activity in Whisky far beyond the trend of his race. In a jiffy he had every stitch of the young man's clothes off him. Then he brought towels and began to administer a 'horough rubdown.

Familiar as he was with all stages of dress and undress, Bill Smith could not repress an exclamation of admiration for the wonderful specimen of young manhood that stood before him, arms outstretched, while the attendant vigorously applied the towel. The manager cast aside his "Sporting Life" and walked completely around the young man, sizing him up from tip to toe. Six feet two inches, perhaps a trifle under that, he appeared to be. Smith guessed his weight to be a good 200 pounds, with not more than five pounds to come off. A well-shaped head and neck were set on a pair of broad shoulders not too square. Even as the stranger's body swayed and his arms moved slightly under the manipulations of the skillful rubber, Smith could see the back muscles ripple. Clean-limbed he was all the way down, waist somewhat tapering, small, but strong-looking hips and legs like a quarter-mile runner. His skin was as fair, almost, as a woman's.

The manager grabbed his chair, turned it around to face the stranger, and sat down in it.

"What's your name," he asked.

"Gordon Kelly."

"Sounds like a good combination. Gordon was a great Georgia soldier and Kelly was a great baseball general. How old are you?"

"Twenty-one next month."

Never Saw a Game.

"What club did you play with last?"

"Never played on any club."

"What?"

"Never saw a ball game in my life."

Whisky promptly ceased rubbing, threw down the towel and moved off with an expression of disgust on his face.

"Pick up that towel and finish your job, Whisky. We're not through with this young man yet," remarked Bill Smith.

"Dis ain't no ball player, boss. Dishyere is jest a common, ordinary white man," expostulated the attendant.

"You never can tell, Whisky; you never can tell," replied Bill Smith, letting fall a philosophic remark that had not a little to do with his success as a manager of ball players.

Whisky took up the towel and started in again, but it was plainly to be seen his heart was not in his work. Whisky lived, moved and breathed in the atmosphere of baseball. Ball players were as food and drink to him. A syndicate of John L. Sullivans, Frank Gotches, Eugene Sandows and Percy Herculeses would have created but a sorry impression on Whisky if it couldn't play ball.

"All right, Whisky, that's enough," declared the manager. "Now, hten bring me a uniform-pants and shirt. That's the stuff. Crawl into these, Mr. Kelly, and draw up a chair and toast your shins in front of this fire while your clothes are drying out. Have a cigar?"

"I never smoke."

"Have a chew?"

"I never use it."

"I should say you didn't by the looks of those molars. Have a drink?"

"I never drink."

"Well, you couldn't get it here if you wanted it. Now, tell me, what put it into your head that you wanted to play ball?"

A Cobb or a Speaker.

"I'll tell you, Mr. Smith," replied Kelly, with a smile of engaging frankness that displayed his fine teeth. "I read in the newspapers about Ty Cobb getting $10,000 a year and holding out for $15,000. It looked good to me."

"Is that all?"

"Not quite. I came from the Georgia mountain country, Mr. Smith. I have never been in a city before. The first time I ever rode in a street car was this morning. But, I know all about baseball, although I have never even seen a ball game."

Whisky waited to hear no more. With a look of immeasurable superiority on his black face, he turned and left the club house. Gordon Kelly continued:

"Now, all this may sound strange to you, Mr. Smith, but I am just as confident that I can soon become a good ball player as I am that you will continue to win baseball pennants."

Bill Smith laughed.

"That seems to put it up to me," he said. "You've got the instincts of a ball player all right. They always put it up to the manager, especially the pitchers. You must want to be a pitcher."

"No, sir; I want to be an outfielder."

"A Ty Cobb, eh?"

"A Ty Cobb, or a Tris Speaker, or better."

Bill Smith grinned. Ever since he broke into the game he had been pestered, off and on, by all sorts of baseball "bugs," but this was about the worst case he ever experienced. Here was a young man who confessed he never saw a game of ball, yet was positive he had the makings in him of a player that would surpass two of the greatest diamond stars the game ever produced. The idea was as absurd as if a street sweeper came in and said that while he didn't know anything about the oil business, he was sure he could make more money in it than John D. Rockefeller. The whole thing was so ridiculous it was really funny. Bill Smith's grin broke into a hearty laugh. But Gordon Kelly didn't laugh. He was never more serious in his life. The manager noticed the expression on the young man's face and his laughter ceased.

A High Standard.

"Better than a Cobb or Speaker, eh? Well, I don't mind saying, Mr. Kelly, you have set a pretty high standard for yourself. Now, then, what do you want me to do, sign you up at Ty Cobb's salary?"

Gordon Kelly shifted his chair so that he faced the manager.

"Nothing like that, Mr. Smith," he said soberly. "Here's my proposition: The Southern League championship season opens on April 10, about six weeks from now. What I want you to do is this: Give me permission to practice here with you and your players until the season opens. If by that time I haven't demonstrated my worth to you as a ball player, just say so and we will part the best of friends as far as I am concerned. If, on the other hand, I do demonstrate to you that I am entitled to a place on your team, I will ask that you sign me up at whatever salary you care to pay me. There's nothing unfair, or unreasonable in that, is there?"

Bill Smith took three or four puffs of his cigar before replying to this direct question. What sort of person was he dealing with, he wondered. Was this young man simply an extraordinary baseball "bug," or was he mentally unbalanced? Was he baseball crazy, or crazy in the real sense of the word? If he simply had the baseball craze, there was nothing astonishing about that and Bill Smith figured he would have no trouble in handling the case. He had handled many of them successfully in his time. But the other kind of insanity was a little out of his line, and required not a baseball exuert, but an allenist.

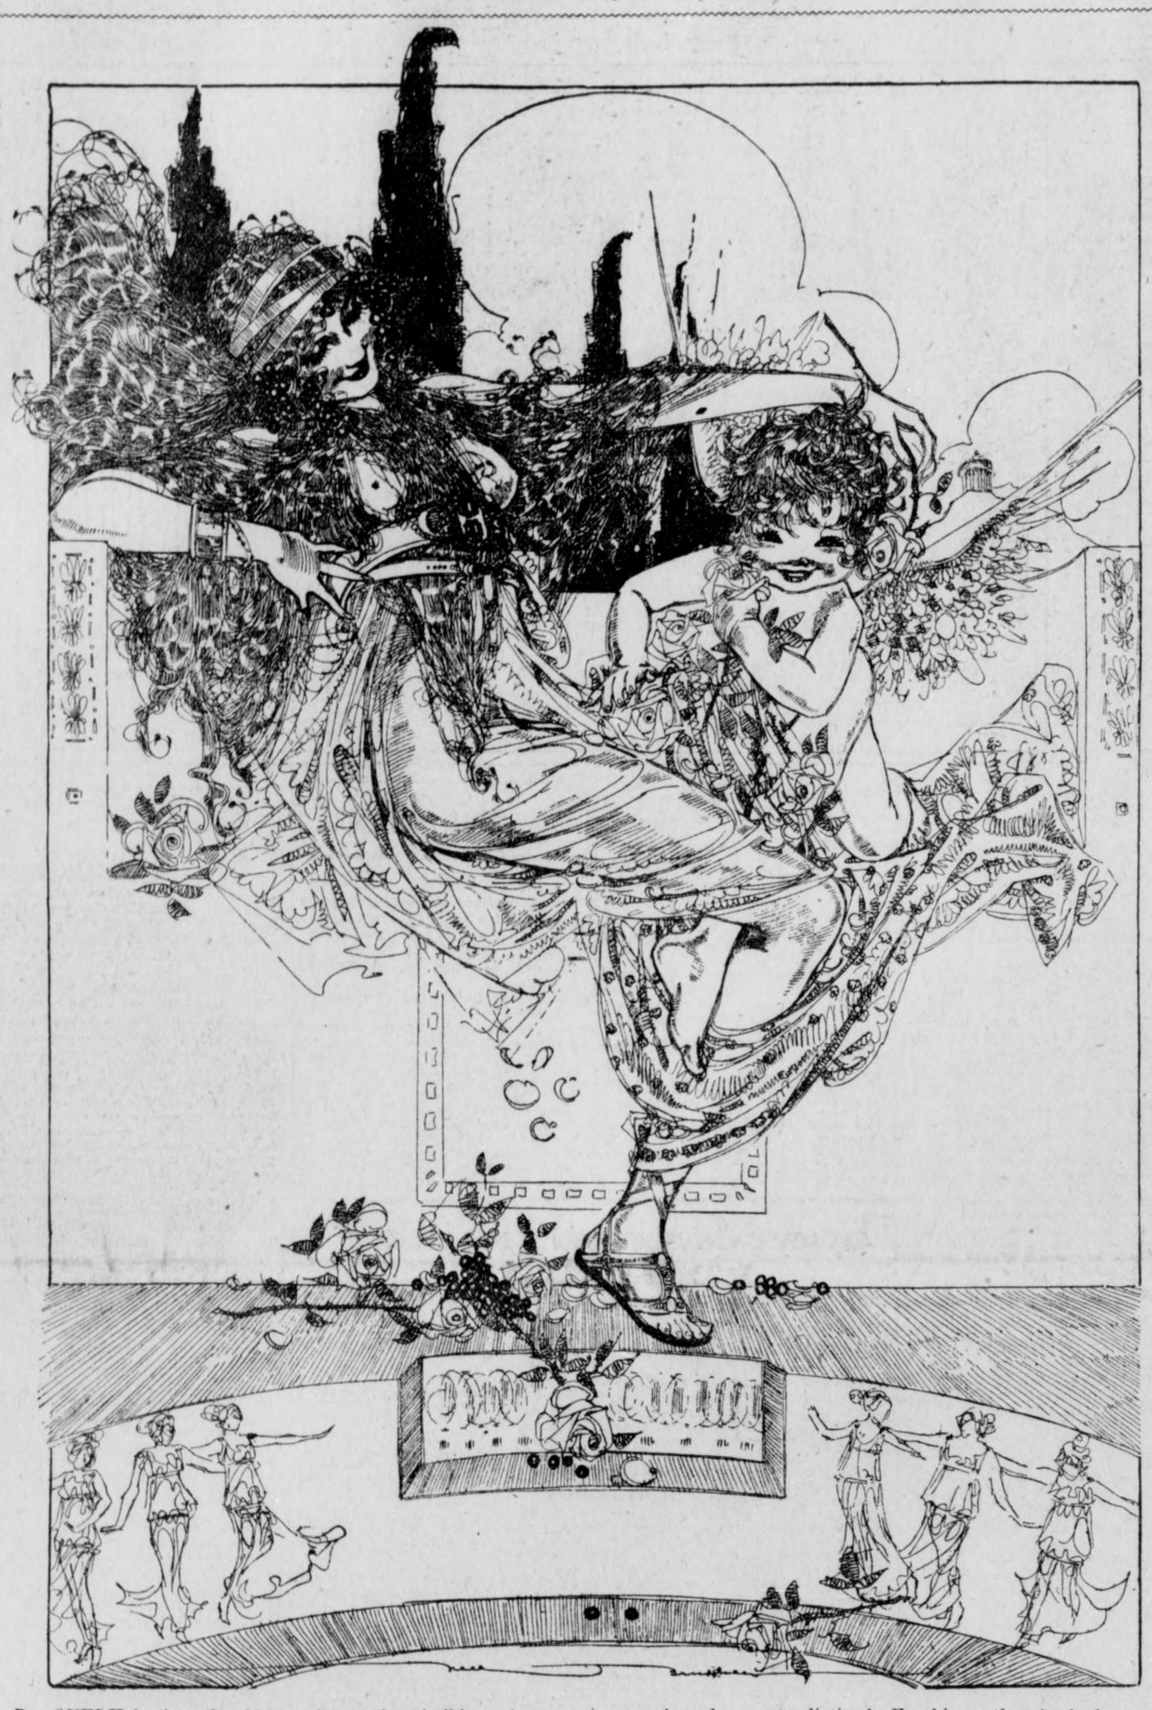
Do You Wonder

That Cupid Is Such an Adorable Rogue When His Mother Was Such a Lovely Trouble Maker?

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.



LOVELY he is—adorable, a plotter, irresistible, a knave, sweet as an almond-blossom, a dabbler in trouble, soft-hearted, cruel, "Love" his business, a promiser, offering bitter-sweet, unutterably a darling, unchangeably a rascal! And everybody—('specially those who have been stirred 'round in one of his concoctions which he calls "an affair")—everybody ('specially those who know he is both an almond blossom and a rascal—and yet love him)—everybody wonders why he is all this! Maybe you do not think of his mother when you wonder that. How could he help but be lovable, a rascal, and a contradiction? For his mother he had a creature, herself born of the sea, the sea which is tender and terrible, smiling and stormy, and all mystery—Venus—goddess of beauty, lover of laughter and love and light, herself a rogue and a saint! Playing all day long under the sun and sky of dream-fostering Greece, in the white-circle of her arms, strained to her breast, teased with a rose in her idle hand, looking often into the hot blue of her eyes, hearing her laughter, comrade in her mischief—son of a Beauty—a devotee of Love—a sweet Rogue—how could he be other than what he is!

He Has a Fight With a Scotch Kid and Comes Out a Victor After a Hard "Scrap."

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

I HAD a fite with a Scotch kid yesterday. It was a close fite; the Scotch kid came close to gitting killed beefoar I felt sorry for him. I got a black eye & that was all.

I doant like fites, & I nevver have a fite until I am forced into it, but this Scotch kid was too fresh. He caim to our house with his father. His father was a Scotch Highlander wich had fought all thru the Boer war & dident git hurted. He was jest like his littel boy. His naim was Duglas McNabb & the naim of the kid was Sandy McNabb.

We went out into the yard to play catch & Sandy wasent a good player at all. He had on kilts; he sed that his mother always asked him to wear kilts, but he sed he was glad of it beekaus he was a true Scotchman & wasent ashamed of it. The Scotch are a undefeated race, he toald me, & these kilts stands for currage & fiteing qualities.

The Irish is pritty good fiters, too, I sed. My father is Scotch, but my mother is half Scotch & half Irish, & I am proud of the Irish blood that is in me.

But the Irish aint a undefeated race, sed Sandy. Maybe thay have been defeated, I sed, but thay nevver knew it if thay was. Why doant you catch the ball onst in a while, butter fingers? I sed to him.

Golf Was His Pie.

I dinna care much for this sorry kind of a gaim, he sed to me. Golf, that is a braw gaim. I doant think much of gold, I toald Sandy. Golf is a high-toned cousin of shinney. Baseball is the gratest gaim in the wurld. It taiks brains to play baseball.

It can't taik much brains to play baseball or the Scotch wud be playin it, sed Sandy McNabb. The Scotch are all brains. Look at Bobbie Burns, he sed. That man knew everything. Shakespeer knew a lot, too, I sed. He knew a littel, sed Sandy, but not as much as Bobbie Burns. Bobbie Burns knew moar than my own father knows, he sed.

Tom Moore was Irish, I sed, & he rote pritty potrey, too. Why doant you catch that ball?

I dinna cair to play moar the noo, sed Sandy. It hurts my fingers muckle, he sed. So we quit, but Sandy dident stop talking.

Bobbie Burns was a all around geenyus, he sed. My father says I am going to look like him wen I grow up & rite potrey, too, to keep up the naim of the undefeated race.

How It Started.

Maybe you will rite potrey, sed I to Sandy, but you will nevver look like Bobbie Burns, you littel wart. Bobbie Burns was always handsome, as a kid & as a man. When you grow up you will prubly look like you look now, only you will have to spend a littel Scotch munny for bigger kilts & you will have red hair on the calfs of yure legs ware you havent any pants, I sed.

I will na be called a wart, sed Sandy. Hoot mon, he sed, taik that, and he hit me in the eye. I didn't know he was going to hit me; that is how I got my black eye. Then I sailed into Sandy, licked him good & proper. I was going to maik fun of him & his underfeated race, but I happened to think that I am 3-4 Scotch, too.

He Was a Great Man

"LOOKING impressive is well worth while," said the drug store man. "Let me tell you a story.

"John Higginbotham, who lived in the town that I came from, was a fine old fellow. But he was of such a retiring disposition that he got the worst of everything. He was so meek and mild that he never went anywhere, saw anything or did anything.

"He was given a back seat on all special occasions. He wore a smile most of the time, so few people ever knew how sensitive he was about his clothes and his personal appearance generally.

"There came a time when the doctor said John must wear spectacles. John was filled with consternation because of his apprehension as to their effect on his looks. He feared that men, women and children would make fun of him.

"Nevertheless, he wanted to wear spectacles, because the President of the United States was coming to town and John wanted to see him. He wanted to know if the President looked like the pictures in the newspaper. So he wore spectacles.

"His legs trembled beneath him when he first ventured out on the street wearing the spectacles. However, the clear vision they gave him was delightful!

"The first friend he met was Gabriel Von Vorden, and John colored to the roots of his hair at the steady gaze with which Gabe regarded him. He could see plainly through the new spectacles, however, that Gabe's face wore an expression of wonder rather than amusement.

"'The very man!' exclaimed Gabe.

"'You see,' he went on to explain, 'there isn't a man in the village to preside on the platform when the President speaks. There isn't a man who looks impressive enough to sit beside the President. But with them specs, John, you can sit right up there and the President will take you for a college professor.'

"That's how it happened that John Higginbotham shared the honors of the occasion along with the water pitcher, the drinking glass and the President's handkerchief. And no doubt the President thought the village was quite a seat of learning, judging from the appearance of the man who sat on the platform, for every now and then he turned around to get the approval of the presiding dignitary, which John was too badly frightened to give.

"John's imperturbability made the President still more anxious to win the approval of such a stern and ponderous individual. As John never turned a hair all through the speech, the head of the nation went on his way thinking how shallow and inconsequential his efforts were in the eyes of the deep man on the platform."

Rod in Pickle.

"How well behaved your children are," said the minister's wife.

"They are perfectly lovely children," added the minister.

The parents smiled proudly, and up spoke little Agnes:

"Pa said if we didn't behave he'd knock our blocks off; didn't you, pa?"

What Caraway Seeds Did

"NO, I thank you," said the man from Michigan. "Not any, thanks. I never eat cake or candy."

"How strange!" murmured the innocent young woman.

"Listen," said the man from Michigan, "and I will tell you the whole sad story. Once I was very fond of cake, and perhaps I would now be if it were not for fear"—here the Michigander looked fearfully over his shoulder—"of caraway seed."

"I can not stand caraway seed. That's why I eat neither candy nor cake, and almost no bread. It is a great hardship."

"But there are some kinds of cake and candy that do not contain caraway seed," objected the innocent young woman.

"No. I used to think there were. Once or twice I thought I had discovered a kind that was free from caraway seed, but it always turned out to have some caraway seed in it.

"I once hired a special baker to bake cake and bread for me without caraway seed in it. I was happy for a while. Then all of a sudden I hit full force into a caraway seed in the midst of my cake. It was a pink cake with gothic ornaments such as I delighted in. It was a cruel shock.

"I flew down the street to the dentist's to get him to give me something for the pain in my tooth, and after he had administered cocaine plentifully I went after the baker. He tried to explain that the boy was responsible for the caraway seed and that it was all an accident, but I chased that baker over the counter and under the counter until I had him.

"Nevertheless, people have put caraway seeds over on me many times since. Sometimes I analyze a piece of cake when I am especially hungry for it, exploring the last crumb. When I am reassured and thrown off my guard I bite into a sixty horsepower caraway seed that makes my hair stand on end.

"There is no help for it. Caraway seed is a universal affliction."

The forger smiled, and there was malignant triumph in his expression.

"Pooh!" he exclaimed. "Even if I used it, they would never get on to me. See this?" He pointed at the strange contrivance on the muzzle.

Mary's curiosity made her forget for a moment her distaste.

"What is it?" she asked, interestedly. "I have never seen anything like that before."

"Of course, you naven't," Garson answered with much pride. "I'm the first man in the business to get one, and I'll bet on it. I keep up with the times." For once, he was revealing that fundamental egotism which is the characteristic of all his kind. "That's one of the new Maxim silencers," he continued. "With smokeless powder in the cartridges, and the silencers on, I can make a shot from my coat-pocket, and you wouldn't even know it had been done. * * * And I'm some shot, believe me."

"Impossible!" Mary ejaculated.

"Good gracious, not here!" Mary exclaimed in alarm. "We would have the whole place down on us."

Garson chuckled.

"You just watch the dinky little vase on the table across the room there. Tain't very valuable, is it?"

"No," Mary whispered.

A Spectacular Shot.

In the same instant, while still her eyes were on the vase, it fell in a cascade of shivered glass to the table and floor. She had heard no sound; she saw no smoke. Perhaps there had been a faintest clicking noise. She was not sure. She stared dumfounded for a few seconds, then turned her bewildered face toward Garson, who was grinning in high enjoyment.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," she declared, vastly impressed.

"Neat little thing, ain't it?" the man asked, exultantly.

"Where did you get it?" Mary asked.

"In Boston, last week. And between you and me, Mary, it's the only model, and it sure is a corker for crime."

The sinister association of ideas made Mary shudder, but she said no more. She would have shuddered again if she could have guessed the vital part that pistol was destined to play. But she had no thought of any actual peril to come from it. She might have thought otherwise, could she have known of the meeting that night in the back room of Blinkey's, where English Eddie and Garson sat with their heads close together over a table.

"A chance like this," Griggs was saying, "a chance that will make a fortune for all of us."

"It sounds good," Garson admitted wistfully.

"It is good," the other declared with an oath. "Why, if this goes through, we're set up for life. We can quit, all of us."

"Yes," Garson agreed, "we can quit, all of us." There was avarice in his voice.

The tempter was sure that the battle was won, and smiled contentedly.

"Well," he urged, "what do you say?"

"How would we split it?" It was plain that Garson had given over the struggle against greed. After all, Mary was only a woman, despite her cleverness, and with all a woman's timidity. Here was sport for men.

"Three ways would be right," Griggs answered. "One to me, one to you and one to be divided up among the others."

Garson brought his fist down on the table with a force that made the glasses jingle.

"You're on," he said, strongly.

"Fine!" Griggs declared, and the two men shook hands. "Now, I'll get——"

"Get nothing!" Garson interrupted. "I'll get my own men. Chicago Red is in town. So is Dacey, with perhaps a couple of others of the right sort. I'll get them to meet you at Blinkey's at 2 to-morrow afternoon, and, if it looks right, we'll turn the trick to-morrow night."

"That's the stuff," Griggs agreed, greatly pleased.

But a sudden shadow fell on the face of Garson. He bent closer to his companion, and spoke with a fierce intensity that brooked no denial.

"She must never know."

Griggs nodded understandingly.

"Of course," he answered. "I give you my word that I'll never tell her. And you know you can trust me, Joe."

"Yes," the forger replied somberly, "I know I can trust you." But the shadow did not lift from his face.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Wedding Announcement.

Mary dismissed Garson presently and betook herself to her bedroom for a nap. The day had been a trying one, and, though her superb health could endure much, she felt that both prudence and comfort required that she should recruit her energies while there was opportunity.

She was not in the least surprised that Dick had not yet returned, though he had mentioned half an hour. At the best, there were many things that might detain him, his father's absence from the office, difficulties in making arrangements for his projected honeymoon trip abroad—which would never occur—or the like. At the worst, there was a chance of finding his father promptly, and of that father as promptly taking steps to prevent the son from ever again seeing the woman who had so indiscreetly married him.

Yet, somehow, Mary could not believe that her husband would yield to such paternal coercion. Rather, she was sure that he would prove loyal to her whom he loved, through every trouble. At the thought a certain wistfulness pervaded her, and a poignant regret that this particular man should have been the one chosen of fate to be entangled within her mesh of revenge.

THE FIVE FRANKFORTERS

A Novelization of the Play of the Same Name Now Running in New York

"What is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

By KATHRYN KEY.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Instinctly Jacob had come closer to Charlotte. He knew well what was this "business" they were about to discuss.

"My nephew will take care of her," said Solomon firmly, "your presence is not necessary here. We know your views." And Solomon never guessed the riot of feeling beneath Jacob's calm exterior—nor what that feeling might threaten to his own well-laid plans.

"Will you come with me?" Jacob's voice thrilled with all the tenderness he must never put into words.

"But you are quite sure you ought not to be here?" Charlotte asked.

Jacob looked with all the stern fatalism of his race, at the men who were to gamble with a girl's happiness, then he turned with gentle tenderness to his fair-haired cousin.

"Quite sure," he said.

Charlotte shyly held out her hand to her cousin, and the Duke caught the other hand in his own, and as he softly voiced his 'Au revoir" he put his lips again to that little right hand.

Was It an Omen?

Was it an omen that as Jacob drew the girl away down the long shady alley of the great hedges, he held his cousin's left hand? And who can tell what the little Princess Evelyn thought as she watched this other pair of cousins strolling beneath her tower window?

The Duke stood at the great hedge gate and watched the little white figure until it was dim and far. There was a long pause. Even Solomon hesitated to speak, when Dame Fate showed such remarkable ability to play his game for mi.

At last Duke Gustavus broke this silence so fraught with meaning for him: "If you plese, gentlemen"—

"Your Highness," said Amschel, hopefully; "you are quite sure you wouldn't rather have lunch earlier and talk business afterward?"

The Duke was a bit amused; "O, no!" said he.

"Oh, well, it was only a suggestion." But just at this hungry juncture, luncheon seemed more essential to our country gentlemen than financing all the reigning princes in the empire.

Solomon spoke: "Your highness, we have considered the question of a loan to you. May I ask how you purpose to invest such a sum as $12,000,000 florins?"

"O, we shall find good use for it, you may be sure. Speaking generally, I shall devote it to the improvement of my circumstances."

Gustavus' tons showed the airiest amusement at his own bankrupt condition. Why trouble himself? Was it not the place of Providence and these very Jews of Frankfort to see that royal treasuries do not collapse for lack of proper support?

"Now, supposing that our firm would advance such a sum as you suggest," said Solomon, "what is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

"Security? Would it be customary to offer security in a matter of this kind?"

Gustavus did not often trouble his royal self with the details of such an every day matter as mere business.

"It is usual," said Amschel, dryly. He was still considering the way in which his suggestion as to luncheon had been received.

The Duke looked at Fehrenberg as at a master. "Well, we could pledge a part of my revenue—of my taxes"——

"I must remind your Highness that you have already anticipated the next five years' income," said Fehrenberg. "But, gentlemen, the produce of the duchy could be enormously increased by a careful and prudent administration."

"Such as I will give it when he is my son-in-law," thought Solomon.

Fehrenberg went on, unconscious of how he was drawing the net closer and closer about the loving hearts of two unconsidered cousins —Jacob and Evelyn.

"There are extensive forests—some coal and mineral springs"——

A Brilliant Idea.

The Duke had a brilliant idea. He broke in: "Cannot I give you my personal security?"

And here was the cue for Solomon to make his great suggestion. The time had come when the die must be cast.

The brothers stirred uneasily—they knew what was coming. Amschel spoke: "Pardon me, I should like to leave you now."

"I don't understand," said Gustavus. And in truth-he did not. What turn were matters taking?

Ceremony was beyond Amschel.

"At this point I beg to retire," he said plaintively. "I apologize—but I won't stay."

"Carl, with suave elegance, followed him; but the Duke and Solomon managed to retain Count Fehrenberg and Nathan, the impassive English brother, as seconds, in the duel of wits that was about to follow.

There was an elaborate tensity in the atmosphere. The air, that great medium for carrying all "wireless" messages, conveyed in its taut stillness some foreboding to the four men who were about to play fate, of what this moment might mean to many lives.

Gustavus was nervously toying with Evelyn's crimson rose. At a moment like this he vaguely sensed the presence, the influence, of his girlish cousin. "I am getting inquisitive."

You Are Bankrupt.

"Your Highness," began Solomon with solemn intensity; "you give me your permission to be quite candid? You are on the verge of bankruptcy. One thing, I believe, and one thing only, can save you, and that is"——Here even Solomon hesitated.

"Yes, yes?" impatiently.

"A judicious marriage."

Gustavus laughed in evident relief. "We have thought of that, haven't we, Fehrenberg? We looked about for an alliance of that kind, but we could find nothing suitable!"

He considered the beauty of the glowing red rose for a moment, and then, with a sudden access of feeling, buried his lips in his flaming crimson heart. Little Evelyn, little Evelyn, the time has come when all your good fairies must guard you!

The Duke laughed, but was there an undercurrent of bitterness flowing beneath the nonchalance of that laugh? "Youth, charm, beauty—and —and a great deal of money!"

Still more gravely, Solomon made answer:

"I can offer you these qualities."

The Duke was evidently amused.

"YOU can! I am overwhelmed by the versatility of your enterprise! Where have you found a lady of my rank so admirably fitting?"

Then Solomon voiced a truth so deep that even he who spoke scarcely realized the depth of its sacred import.

"Your Highness, the conception of equality is not the same to-day as it was yesterday. Times change. Your Highness is not one of those who refuse to advance with the times."

Lifting the Cloud.

Always there is a little time of lifting cloud before the storm breaks. Gustavus laughed.

"If you compliment me you will make me suspicious." A line of his Virgil came to his mind: "I fead the Greeks even when they come bearing gifts."

Nathan broke in: "Solomon—your Highness—I thing we should reconsider our proposal"——

"Before I hear what it is," exclaimed Gustavus, impatiently. "Come, Baron, what have you on your mind?"

"I propose that you should marry my daughter, Charlotte."

Duke Gustavus of Taunus rose. His sword clattered against the stone rim of Cupid's fountain. Evelyn's red rose slipped from his fingers and fell unheeded at his feet. Perhaps he could soon trample on that blood-red rose and crush it. Perhaps, but the second sped on.

"Sir! Fehrenberg, you hear? What do you say to that?"

"Your Highness, court etiquette has not considered such an emergency. I have never heard of a precedent for such a proposal."

"I admit I am a little taken back. But you might have chosen a moment when I would have requested you to leave my house instantly as the most convenient conclusion to our conversation."

Solomon answered the Duke:

"Sir, in the choice of the right moment lies the success of the game."

"Are you a gambler?" the Duke asked with slow earnestness.

"All games are not games of chance. I do ont trust to luck, but to calculation."

Knowledge of the World.

"And you calculated on my being driven into accepting your proposal by my dread of bankruptcy?"

"I calculated on my knowledge of the world enabling you to consider its advantage impartially."

"Oh, I appreciate the advantages," said Gustavus with slow scorn of himself who could be bought, scorn of the man who sold in his turn.

"Advantages to both our families," said Solomon.

"Sir, you tempt me to speak without reserve. You make me think of a highwayman gone mad; who says to me: 'Stand! Take my money! It is yours. Refuse it at your peril!' Such audacity is magnificent, but a little unusual."

He looked at the red rose that lay on the ground, and then picked it up very gently and threw it in the clear waters of the Fountain of Cupid. Alas for the Princess Evelyn! Alas for Jacob! "Yet your persistence commands a certain admiration and attention."

Solomon bent over the Duke, who had sunk to a seat on the fountain's edge. "And your Highness will come to a decision? This is the great moment. If your Highness will but say 'Yes' now, the agreement shall be signed at noon to-morrow and the money handed to you at once."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

What Has Gone Before.

Having backed heavily the peace of Europe Nathan Rothschild is disconcerted to find that Napoleon has burst forth again, and all the banker's outpouring of gold for national development in England will be endangered. The banker hastens to Waterloo. There are the English, who have guaranteed to him that the peace of Europe shall be maintained. From a height above the field of battle Rothschild sees the whole of it. Rothschild sees that the wealth of the world lies in London, his for the taking if he can be first on the ground with the news of the battle. He hurries to London, and next morning appeared on the Exchange. That night he went to bed $10,000,000 richer.

Seven years later a great banker left Vienna, another Naples, another Paris and another London, and traveled to a little old house in Jews' Lane, in Frankfort-an-Main. It was a gathering of the house of Rothschild. Perhaps some king was very hard pressed for money. "Little Jacob" opposes Solomon's plan to marry Charlotte off to the Duke of Taunus. He is backed up by Frau Gudula. The Duke makes love to Charlotte.

Natural History Lessons

No. 1---The Hook Worm

By DOROTHY DIX.

AMONG the most interesting of the native fauna and flora to be found in our midst is the hook worm. This valuable creature belongs to the category of domestic animals (genus henpeckis), and it forms a useful and indispensable adjunct to households where no maid is kept.

The hook worm is indigenous to the United States, and it flourishes most plentifully in cities, only a few rare and scattering specimens of it having ever been found in the country. Scientists differ concerning its history, but a consensus of the best authorities indicates that its origin was contemporaneous with the coming in of the fashion of frocks that button up the back, and that the great original hook worm was discovered by a fat woman with short arms.

From this small and humble beginning sprang the millions of hook worms that now pervade the land and make glad the waist places of swell dressers by pulling together belts that do not meet by four inches. Thus do we see how marvelously nature provides for all contingencies.

In appearance the hook worm is an elongated and tubular - looking animal with two feet, two antennae (technically known as hands), and two eyes situated near the top of its head, which is not infrequently bald. Also it has a tongue, which it shoots off with great rapidity and volubility upon occasions.

Apparently the eyesight of the hook worm is very poor, as it is unable to see a button unless it is the size of a silver dollar, and it cannot distinguish an invisible loop from a chance to tear a hole with a hook in the back of an imported dinner gown.

Likewise the hook worm is very awkward and clumsy in the way in which it manipulates its antennae, it having been estimated that it makes 11,496,851 different motions and dabs and fumbles in trying to insert a perfectly plain hook in a perfectly obvious eye.

These faults of the hook worm are accounted for, however, by scientists on the theory that it is still an imperfectly developed animal, and it yet lacks about seventeen additional hands and four more pairs of eyes in order to perform satisfactorily the function for which it was created. Doubtless these will be acquired in the process of evolution, and our great-great-great-great-granddaughters may rejoice in the possession of hook worms with a full complement of faculties that will be able to do their appointed tasks and fasten up a French confection before you could say "Scat!"

Little is known of the habits of the hook worm, as, although it is a domestic animal, it absents itself from the house all day, only returning at night to be fed. Its period of greatest activity is just before dinner and theatre time, when it gets busy and may be heard making weird and profane noises.

The hook worm is exclusively a lady's pet, men seeming to have no use for the animal, though they are so highly esteemed by women. It should be stated in this connection, though, that opinion among women is equally divided as to whether it is best to catch a hook worm when he is young and break him in to your own style of fastenings, or to tie up with a hook worm that has been thoroughly trained by some deceased lady who was addicted to lingerie shirt waists. Much is to be said in favor of each side of the question; but, alas! there are many problems in life, and even the young hook worm who is conscientiously bent on doing his duty sometimes gets in bad, for in his excess of zeal he displays a skill that sets the woman who owns him to guessing.

The hook worm has a very limited vocabulary, the only two expressions that it has ever been heard to use being "Helen Blazes" and a word that is muffled and indistinguishable, but that sounds as if it started with a big, big D.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"WHEN engaged in washing dishes," a woman of exalted ideals advised in a woman's magazine, "fix not your mind upon the sordidness of the task. Rise above it by looking with appreciative eyes at the delicate tints in the china, its pure transparency, the softness of its curves. Learn the history of Dresden, Limoges and Sevres, and the task becomes an intellectual joy."

Daysey Mayme Appleton read, and what she read sank in to come out the next morning when she found herself confronted with the task of washing greens.

A young man, of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, was coming and he had expressed the yearning that comes to all in the spring to have greens for dinner.

She had bought a peck in the belief that there would be enough left to last a week, and when she poured out cold water preparatory to washing them she fixed her mind on all that they represented: Springtime, freshening showers, the sunlight, the singing of the birds, blue skies, the drowsy humming of insects and fragrant zephyrs that stirred the leaves to dancing motion.

She washed and washed and rewashed, digging back into her brain for some knowledge of botany. "That is a scutate," she said, taking a leaf through seven waters, "and this is a reticulate, and here is a beautiful example of the pinnated."

She took the leaves through the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth waters, unconsciously thinking less each time of the tender zephyrs that had stirred the leaves to dancing, the bright sunlight and the gentle showers. There was an accumulation of sand that proved her task was only begun, and she washed the greens through four more waters. Her back ached, she stood first on one foot and then on the other; her hands began to feel as if they belonged to the washerwoman, and her spirits began to droop.

When she submerged the greens into the twelfth water her soul was submerged with them and it never rose again to the plane of exaltation advised by the woman of lofty ideals in the magazine. At last her task was completed and she put the greens over to boil and there seemed a Great Plenty, and when she dressed to meet the man of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, they boiled and boiled and boiled, looking a little less every time she lifted the lid.

"It's a whole peck of greens," she said with a sob at the dinner table an hour later, putting before her Best Beloved a dish in the center of which was a little green mess no bigger than a bug that had been stepped on.

Being Kind to Children

"IT doesn't pay to be too kind to children," said Gritzen.

"Why?" asked the motherly woman.

"Well, I'll give you an illustration. We had a man come to dig our garden. I know well how it hurts to dig. An innocent man can do enough digging in three hours to lame himself for three weeks. We were all glad to see the man come, and he seemed to be a very good sort of fellow. He was fond of children. He said our twins would not bother him at all.

"William and Theodore hustled into their overalls and went out to watch the man, delighted to have him for a companion. The conversation for the first half-hour was something like this:

"'Me afraid of snakes?' said the man. 'Well, I should say not! I eat 'em.'

"'Do you like 'em?' asked Theodore.

"'Oh, no; I just eat 'em to show that I can.'

"'Don't they make your stomach ache?' asked William.

"'Not a bit. If they did I would just swallow a little fire and burn 'em up.'

"'Well, ain't you really afraid of 'em?'

"'Me? Afraid? Ha, ha! That makes me laugh.'

"'Well, ain't you?'

"'No; I'm used to 'em. I'm a circus man. Did you ever see the man in the cage with the lions at the circus?'

"'Yes; I saw a circus once, and there was a man right in the cage with the lions!'

"'I'm that man. Nothing can scare me. But I've quit the circus business for a little while. I took to diggin' just for a change.'

"After an hour or so the conversation was more like this:

"'Here, you rapscallion! Move your foot!'

"'What for?'

"'What for? I want to dig there. I'm not supposed to dig your feet. Here, let them things alone!'

"'What for?'

"'Because your father will want to be able to find them. Stop throwing that dirt. Don't you hear your mamma knocking on the window pane at you? Here, who done that? I'll have to tell your mamma on you. You kids are a nuisance! Get out of here!'

"It's all right being nice to children for a while, but, you see, they can stand it a lot longer than you can!" concluded Gritzen.

Probably Right.

School children know a great deal more than they used to. In fact, some of them, in their own opinion, at least, are quite capable of tutoring their tutors.

"Those kiddies I teach are as knowing as an encyclopedia," said a teacher a week or two ago.

"In what way?" asked his friend.

"Well," replied the scholastic person, "the other day I set a problem in arithmetic: 'A rich man dies and leaves a million dollars. One-fifth is to go to his wife, one-fifth to his son, one-eighth to his brother, and the rest to the hospitals. What does each get?'"

"Yes?" inquired the friend, not very interested.

"Back came the reply from the smallest boy in the class: 'A lawyer, sir.'"

: Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women :

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

"BEAUTY is exactly like a spring that wells up clear and sparkling from a pure source," said Willette Kershaw to me.

Slowly and gropingly I was finding my way back to sunshine and the simple facts of every day after the final curtain had fallen on the five artistic plays at the Princess Theater, in New York, and "Any Night" was a memory instead of a presentation of a shamefully bitter reality. But it was a potent, poignant memory, and the sweet, wistful-eyed girl sitting with me in the quiet office had just presented a death-in-life portrait of Mary Magdalen of to-day.

"Take the sad, sodden consumptive I have just portrayed; she has the same features; she is really a different phase of the Fancy I had just been in "Fancy Free." But the butterfly Fancy is saved, her wings are not trailed in the mud, and even though she is not a fine, deep, spiritual creature, she is still a woman, with the joy-of-living in her veins—so she is sweet and pretty. And the other creature, with a different story written on her eyes and mouth, is almost repulsive to look upon."

"I have never posed as a beauty. The only facts in my appearance that please me are hair and eyes—so I take very good care of them—and of the source of the fountain."

Her Secret.

"Ah, do tell me how you care for the beauty you—don't think you possess," said I, eagerly. Willette Kershaw is so genuinely girl—so dainty and attractive in the well-bred simplicity of simple blue serge and black and white hat that she seems an ideal model for Miss Sweet and Twenty to follow over the road to Springtime loveliness.

"It is not much of a secret—and yet so few seekers after beauty seem to have heard of it," said Miss Kershaw, whimsically. "It is just keep clean! Wash and wash and keep very, very clean—clean in body and mind and soul, until you fairly exhale a perfume of sweet, sane, cleanliness. Plenty of water for my hair, and plenty of cold water to bathe tired eyes. That is how I keep my pet assets in good condition. And I don't neglect the lesser favorites."

Miss Willett Kershaw in Two Charming Poses.

The clear eyes looked at me with the grave sweetness that makes you feel that this slip of a girl knows life and the facts thereof. Not a trace of make-up of any sort gave to Miss Kershaw the appearance of being anything she was not.

"No," said this observing young woman in answer to my interrogatory glance, "I do not make up for street use. Apart from questions of good taste it is not pretty. And I can't see why nice girls want to take their ideas of beauty from women they would never know. They would not deliberately copy the lack-luster, don believe anything-worth-while-will-ever-happen-again expression that a woman who has given all the world for nothing naturally comes to have. Then why copy her artificial complexion?

"Cleanness and simplicity," I mused. "To you these make beauty."

"These and being in tune with life," answered the girlish star. "If a girl is bitter and discontented—for just cause or merely because she is deliberately cultivating the bitterness in her nature, she gets down-drooping lips, a pinched expression around her nostrils, and, worst of all, her eyes lose all power to radiate magnetism and charm.

The Bitter Side.

"I speak from experience," she went on, in a hushed, hurt little voice in which I could hear the vibration of deep tenderness. "My mother was killed in a railroad accident. That was a time of anguish and bitterness. I hated the sun for shining. I could have murdered the birds for singing. I almost felt a desire to take the life of any happy human being I met. I almost went mad because I let my sorrow turn my whole nature to bitterness.

"Probably there is in all the world scarcely one girl who has come to be 20 without knowing life's hurts. Think of the young girls you know whose faces have a sad and wistful expression whenever they relax and stop playing the game of keeping up appearances.

"Perhaps bitter experiences are best of all, as Elbert Hubbard has said. They are if you use experience instead of letting it use you up.

"I'd like to tell all girls that bitterness and paint spoil the face with about equal thoroughness. And the two in conjunction! They just destroy every claim to beauty.

"Life is pretty impersonal. I found that out when I was in the 'Brown of Harvard's' company, that the indignant Harvard students abused because the star (Mr. Woodruff) wore the Harvard athletic H, to which, of course, he had no right. I could not be resentful nor bitter over their treatment of me; it was just what they considered the wrongful use of a sacred old custom that they were protesting against.

"Well, life is like that—impersonal—she is not abusing you; she is just going ahead, and if you get in the way you will get hurt. So you have to learn that, and take things impersonally—and keep in tune."

"Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
And a trouble is what you make it;
And it isn't, how much you are hurt that counts,
But only—how did you take it?"

I quoted.

"Exactly," assented the pretty philosopher. "If you keep clean and sweet and simple, and in tune with life, the fountain of beauty must sparkle in the clear sunlight."

High Society.

A new-rich dowager, only recently removed from the environs of a Western packing house, has afforded much amusement while clambering up the slippery rounds of the social ladder. One day, after she had returned from circumnavigating the globe, she essayed to entertain a drawing room with a boastful account of her travels. She had been everywhere, and her flow of English was augmented by frequent wavings of her bediamoned hands and forceful noddings of her tiaraed head.

"Did you see the Dardanelles?" asked a sprightly debutante.

"And the Himalayas?" inquired another fair young bud.

"I dined with them in Paris," replied the dowager, triumphantly.

And she wondered why everybody smiled.

His First Mistake

ONE of the first tasks they set the new curate, who was handicapped by youth and inexperience, was to investigate the bona fides of a "widow woman" who had applied to the church for help. He departed nervously on his errand and knocked, as ill luck would have it, at the wrong door.

"How long has your poor husband been dead, my good woman? What number of children have you? Are any of them working? If so, what amount of money are they earning altogether?" were the questions he fired, like shots from a revolver, at the slatternly woman who answered his summons. "I presume I am addressing Mrs. Harriet Smith?" he added, noticing, with alarm, that she looked angry.

"No, you ain't," answered the woman, snappishly. "My name is Selina Jackson, my bairns go to school, and my 'usband's doin' what is necessary to a plateful of steak and onions at this very moment. Would you like to know anything else? Where I was born? When I was christened? At what age I started courtin'? Perhaps," she concluded, sarcastically, rolling her tattered sleeve up above the elbow, "you'd like to see my vaccination mark before you go?"

But the bashful curate, redder in the face than a poppy, was already in full flight.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Severe Case of a Philadelphia Woman—Her Symptoms.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I had a severe case of nervous prostration, with palpitation of the heart, constipation, headaches, dizziness, noise in my ears, timid, nervous, restless feelings and sleeplessness.

"I read in the paper where a young woman had been cured of the same troubles by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I threw away the medicines the doctor left me and began taking the Compound. Before I had taken half a bottle I was able to sit up and in a short time I was able to do all my work. Your medicine has proved itself able to do all you say it will and I have recommended it in every household I have visited."—Mrs. Mary Johnston, 210 Siegel Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Bad Case.

Ephrata, Pa.—"About a year ago I was down with nervous prostration. I was pale and weak and would have hysteric spells, sick headaches and a bad pain under my shoulder-blade. I was under the care of different doctors, but did not improve. I was so weak I could hardly stand long enough to do my dishes.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and happy and I have begun to gain in weight and my face looks healthy now."—Mrs. J. W. Hornberger, R. No. 2, Ephrata, Pa.

If you want special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

TRADING IS DULL IN COTTON RINGS

NEW YORK, May 20.—Further covering by shorts sustained the cotton market at the opening to-day, despite further rains throughout the cotton States. First prices were unchanged to 3 points higher than last night's close. Spot people again bought July, which seemed to be the strength of the market, but the ring crowd was inclined to sell on favorable weather conditions and promise of further rains over the Eastern and Central belt.

There was not much buying of new crop positions and prices in these options soon fell some 2 to 3 points from the opening, while July and August held steady around the early high level. The bears seem to be following out their recent policy of covering short commitments on all favorable weather or crop advices. After the call offerings were freer, while the buying was concentrated. The principal absorption seemed to come from Wall Street operators.

The principal point of the detailed weather records yesterday is the rather general rainfall in the Augusta, Ga., district, which averaged about .90.

During the forenoon the market was rather quiet and prices fluctuated within a very narrow range. The feeling was general that weather reports and crop advices were too good to sustain the market and further advances would encounter selling.

The market continued dull and inactive throughout the afternoon session, but general sentiment continues bearish and there was a disposition on the part of the average trader to sell on all rallies. Until further developments throughout the belt the trade can not look for nothing but a dull and narrow market.

At the close the market was steady with prices 1 point higher to 4 points decline from the final quotations of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Liverpool came in poor again and spot sales were very small, total 4,000 at 4 points higher quotations. Weather conditions continue very favorable. A moderate rainfall was general overnight in Texas and South Texas, and showers were quite general over the remainder of the belt. Temperatures were normal or above. Indications are for rainy weather; slightly cooler in the northwestern quarter; partly cloudy with scattered showers in the rest of the belt.

Our market opened 4 points higher on July, unchanged on new crops, but soon lost 5 points on new crops. Selling, however, is small and cautious. Bull operations with July in New York may carry the whole list higher and the market has acted lately in support of news that certain strong interests were buying new crops in anticipation of the usual short scares during the summer.

Western Texas: Fair and colder to-night; Wednesday fair.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—The steadiness of the market to-day was credited to the buying of July by spot houses. Wilson and Waters were the principal buyers after the call and Mitchell and Hentz were the leading sellers of new crop months. McFadden, Mohr and Henneman were good buyers of July and many traders were advocating a setback in the market from present levels.

* * *

On the call McElroy bought 7,000 bales of October. Springs was a good buyer also. The selling came from Bashford, Mitchell, Hicks, Wiggins and Schill.

Warehouse stocks in New York today are 82,105 bales; certificated, 70,563 bales.

* * *

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows perfect conditions; cloudy in western States, rainy in Central and South Texas, partly cloudy in rest of the belt. Nice rains in Texas, Oklahoma and rather general showers over the Atlantics; warm weather.

Rainfall: Oklahoma City, .26; Abilene, .40; Fort Worth, raining, 1.09; Taylor, raining, .42; San Antonio, raining, .16; Shreveport, Augusta, .12; Little Rock, Atlanta, .38; Vicksburg, .02; New Orleans, .54; Chattanooga, .01; Wilmington, .34; Del Rio, .08; Jackson and Corinth, Miss., .04; Birmingham, .18.

* * *

Weather indications are for unsettled rains over the northwestern quarter of the belt and cloudy to scattered showers over rest of the belt.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market, on the heels of needed general rains, took exactly the opposite course from the course the talent expected it to take. It advanced. Of course, explanations, as plausible as prompt, were forthcoming, but the bald fact remained that the market refused to decline in the presence of a widely exploited bearish influence of real importance. Bulls said the reason therefor was the great number of shorts who, of late, have counted on general rains, which were included in the weather forecast a few days ago, to weaken the market and give them a chance to buy in their commitments. Bears said the big fellows were buying and the crop killers were busy, and that, in the presence of such conditions, little shorts had become frightened and scampered to cover.

"It can not now be denied that the weather conditions over the belt, as a whole, are favorable. The weather bureau promises favorable weather throughout the week. Consequently, current weather can not be interpreted as a bullish factor. But the bull makes out a pretty good case for himself by exploiting lateness of the crop both East and West and by the use of trustworthy advices from many sections, showing that repeated replanting has placed the crop squarely on the defensive. Nobody claims that the chance for a large crop has been eliminated, but many do claim that the status of the crop to-day does not warrant childlike confidence in an arbitrary result approaching the outturn of 1911-1912."

Austin, Texas: "Crop prospects are very bright. It would take a long drouth to overcome the moisture which now is in the ground. Promoters of curtailing acreage to artificially boost prices are considerably worried over the increase in acreage, which is larger than in any previous year. There is a very large increase in virgin ranch regions of West and South Texas."

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Logan & Bryan: We feel that a further advance is not at all unlikely.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: There seems to be nothing in the outlook to stimulate bullish activity as long as the weather is favorable for the progress of the new crop.

WEEKLY GOVERNMENT WEATHER REPORT

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Precipitation occurred during the week throughout the cotton region, except that there were small areas with no precipitation in Texas, Arkansas, Southeastern Louisiana, Georgia and South Carolina.

More than two inches of precipitation occurred at scattered stations in East Texas, Southeastern Oklahoma, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida and Mississippi. The greatest weekly precipitaion, 4 inches, occurred at Paris, Texas. Mean temperatures ranged from 1 degree to 4 degrees above normal, except in Florida and Southeastern Alabama, where there was a deficiency of 1 to 2 degrees. The weekly mean temperature ranged from 64 to 74 degrees over the eastern, from 70 to 76 degrees over the central, and from 70 to 78 degrees over the western portion of the cotton region.

The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64 degrees, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and the highest, 78 degrees, at Del Rio, Texas.

STREET WATCHING DISSOLUTION PLAN

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 20.—There was considerable irregularity in the stock market at the opening today. Canadian Pacific was the weakest feature, opening 1⅜ lower at 236¼. Rock Island was also under pressure around 16⅛ for a loss of ⅝.

There was a little business in Brooklyn Rapid Transit, which gained ¼. Amalgamated Copper, which began ¼ higher, soon lost its gain and declined fractionally.

Among the other declines were American Can, ⅛; American Smelting, ⅛; Chino Copper, ¼; Erie, ⅛; New York Central, ⅛; Pennsylvania, ⅛; Union Pacific, ¼, and United States common, ⅛.

Southern Pacific began ¼ up, but soon lost it. Reading declined fractionally, after opening unchanged, but soon recovered.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were dull. Canadian Pacific in London slumped on Berlin selling.

After the first half hour the market became active and stocks took an upward movement. Steel recovered its early loss of ⅛. Union Pacific and Copper were up ⅛. At 86⅜ Southern Pacific was up ⅜. Brooklyn Rapid Transit advanced ¼. Missouri Pacific up ½; New York Central rose to 100. Call money loaned at 2¾.

Stock movements were without importance in the last hour. Fractional gains were made by Amalgamated Copper, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Northern Pacific. American Can sold around 32¾ for a fractional loss. St. Paul was off ⅛.

The market closed steady.

Government bonds unchanged. Other bonds steady.

Wheat—No. 2 red	.97 @104
Oats—No. 2	38 @ 39

CHICAGO, May 20.—While the May wheat future reached 91⅛ to 91¼ as the high price for the day, it sold off to 90⅝, where it closed with a loss of ⅜c. This fact showed that those who are long the May wheat are not anxious to boost it up to a high level, as there is a great deal of wheat at Duluth that is accessible for May delivery here, and it will be brought down here without any great amount of ceremony. The July and September closed with losses of about ½c. The world's available supply, as compiled by Bradstreet, showed a decrease of 6,421,000 bushels of wheat, 1,410,000 bushels of corn and 757,000 bushels of oats.

Corn closed ⅛c lower to unchanged and oats were ⅜c to ½c lower.

St. Louis reported Toledo as a buyer of 30 cars of No. 2 red wheat there at a bargain counter price.

Provisions were without any change to speak of.

ASSEMBLY SKIRMISH WILL AID ATTACKED SEMINARY, DECLARES DR. STELZLE

Union Theological School Not So Anxious for Presbyterians to Take It Under Its Wing, He Says---The Church Made Move for "Wedding."

By Rev. Cha rles Stelzle.

Everybody had supposed that the relationship between Union Theological Seminary and the Presbyterian General Assembly in the last year or two was that of courtship, with the General Assembly as the suitor.

At least this is the impression that one might have secured by listening to the debates and particularly the resolutions adopted at previous assemblies, with reference to this matter.

The Assembly proposed union—it was the aggressor—but while the basis of union, or, at least, of closer relationship was accepted by Union Seminary, the Assembly seemed in a mood Monday to "break the engagement," and it found itself Tuesday morning in the position of returning the little "tokens of endearment" which had been confidently placed in its hands.

Here is the resolution adopted by the Assembly of 1911, which was the basis of the approach to the divorced but "haughty body," who yet was believed to have tender feelings toward the Presbyterian Assembly.

Resolution of Last Year.

Whereas, The Union Theological Seminary in the city of New York was founded by Presbyterians and largely endowed from Presbyterian sources; and

Whereas, Some years past there developed a condition which led to the severing of the rations which had existed from the the organization of the seminary, between it and the General Assembly; and

Whereas, We are persuaded that there are in the faculty and in the directorate of Union Theological Seminary men who are in accord with evangelical Christianity as expressed in the Standards of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and who are zealous in all good work for the growth of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in the world; and

Whereas, We believe that it would be a signal manifestation of the spirit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who prayed "that they all may be one," for Christian brethren, under the gracious guidance of the Holy Spirit, to remove all misunderstandings, alienations and antagonism, and to become vitally and aggressively united in the doctrine of our beloved church in the work of bringing nations and the world to Christ; therefore, be it

Committee Named.

Resolved, That the Assembly hereby authorizes the moderator to appoint a committee of nine, to consist of five ministers, of whom the moderator shall be one, and four ruling elders, none of whom shall be connected with the directors and faculty of the said seminary, with a view of the re-establishment of relations between the seminary and the General Assembly on the basis of the Standards of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America; this committee to report at the next Assembly.

This committee, after much discussion, finally submitted to Union Seminary two proposition, which were to serve as the basis of closer friendship.

The first of these questions is this: Will the board of directors make such provision as will secure to all Presbyterian students in attendance upon Union Theological Seminary such adequate instruction in the departments of church government, discipline, organization and history as will qualify them to answer satisfactorily the questions on these subjects, propounded, according to church law and usage, at their licensure and ordination to the Presbyterian ministry?

The second question is this: Will the board of directors make such provision as will secure to all Presbyterian students in attendance upon Union Theological Seminary such adequate instruction, as an integral part of their theological training, in the special system of doctrine contained in the symbols of the Presbyterian Church, as will enable them to answer satisfactorily the questions respecting Presbyterian doctrine, propounded according to church law and usage, at their licensure and ordination to the Presbyterian ministry?

But They Cut "Her" Dead.

"Yes," said the directors and faculty, "we accept your proposal." This may have been "too sudden"—not to the seminary, but to the committee. Anyway, when it made its report Monday, it said some "awful nice things" about the "lady," but it "cut her dead."

"We'll just be a brother to you," said the committee, "and maybe some time in the future—five years, perhaps—we'll see how we feel toward each other; and then possibly the wedding will take place."

Now, this was all very beautiful, and it seemed perfectly reasonable that the big, strong General Assembly suitor should dictate the terms in this courtship, but—

"Nobody asked you, sir, she said," was what Dr. Brown remarked, in substance, when he got the platform.

This was a stunner. Most people had supposed that Union Seminary was eager to come back into the Assembly. Dr. Brown's simple little speech rather nonplussed them for a while.

"Union Seminary isn't asking for anything. It comes here because you've asked us to come. We wanted to meet you, and perhaps become better acquainted with you, so that we might work out together some of the big problems in the church," Dr. Brown said in substance.

As Usual, There Are "Rivals."

But, like in every love story, there were "rivals." They appeared in the presentation of the minority reports. Dr. John R. Davies, who presented minority report No. 1, is a director in Princeton Theological Seminary, Union's most bitter enemy. Dr. F. C. Monfort, who brought in minority report No. 2, is a director in Lane Theological Seminary, which isn't too fond of Union. Now, rivals don't, as a rule, say nice things about the girl who is really being courted by the great big strong fellow whom they like, too.

tI wasn't surprising, therefore, that such phrases as "Hindoo philosophy is being taught at Union Seminary" and "unitarianism is the belief of its professors," and even worse charges of downright dishonesty should be made by the men who represented these rival institutions. To be sure, they were perfectly sincere—aside from their intimate connection with these conservative institutions, rivals always are sincere.

But the fact remains—Union Seminary had fulfilled its contract in the particular proposition made to it by the committee of the Assembly and was then turned down.

Now Union Theological Seminary is working for an endowment of a million and a half—the exact amount doesn't matter much, for Union probably will plan for even bigger things when it secures this sum, because this theological university—big, broad, but thoroughly evangelical—is growing at a tremendous rate in influence and in enrollment.

Row Will Aid School.

Yesterday's skirmish in the General Assembly will help to increase both Union's endowment and its number of students. It has always been so in previous fights. Perhaps when the newspapers this morning printed the story that the Assembly was in a frame of mind to rebuke the seminary for standing by what seemed right to its directors and faculty, somebody immediately wrote out a check for a good big sum and sent it to Dr. Francis Brown, its calm, cultured, Christian president.

The other men in this fight are Christian men, too. Both Dr. Davies and Dr. Monfort are noted for their fine admirable Christian characters.

That's what makes this whole controversy so sad and so difficult to adjust. It's a case of good men and true differing, not merely in personal matters, but they all truly believe that they are "fighting the battle of the Lord." And when a man believes that, he'll die rather than betray his trust.

However, Union Theological Seminary and the General Assembly will some day be "wed." Not in just the way that some folks wish, but they'll fight together against the common foe of injustice and sin, and then they'll find that the hearts of these men on the other side are right, whatever may have been their theological differences—and a man's good heart is a whole lot bigger thing than his theological convictions, no matter how profound.

Meanwhile other suitors have been making advances to Union Seminary. The Methodists, Baptists and Episcopalians have made arrangements through which students from their bodies will receive special instruction in their peculiar doctrine and polity. This probably forever precludes the possibility of making Union Seminary a distinctively Presbyterian institution.

SOUTH CHURCH SETS FORTH BELIEFS

Revised Epitome of Doctrine Is Drawn Up and Presented by Committee.

Here is the "Brief Statement of Belief," submitted to the Presbyterian Church (South) to-day by Dr. J. M. Wells, for the committee named for the purpose:

Explanatory Note.

Inasmuch as there is some difference of opinion concerning the status and use of any report which it may make, this committee desires to state that it does not understand that the Assembly instructed it to provide a statement of doctrine which shall be a substitute for, or an addition or an amendment to, any of the documents contained in the constitution of the church, or of any part thereof.

It respectfully suggests that, in the event the Assembly approves this report, the statement submitted shall be referred to the executive committee of publication, to be printed and circulated as may be deemed best.

The Statement.

I. God.

God is a spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable; all-powerful, holy, wise, good true, and just, hating all sin. He is merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance; this truth is summed up in the Bible statement, "God is love." He exists in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, who are one God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory.

II. The Bible.

The Word of God, written by men inspired by the Holy Spirit, is contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and are the will of God. It is the revelation of God's will for man and of man's duty to God, and is the only infallible and authoritative rule of faith and life.

III. God's Purpose.

The eternal purpose of God includes all events; it is holy and wise, and does not deprive man of freedom, nor make God the author of sin.

IV. Creation.

For the manifestation of his own glory, God created the world and all things therein, whether visible or invisible, and all very good. He made man after his own image; male and female created he them, with immortal souls, endowed with knowledge, righteousness and holiness, having the law of God in their hearts, and power to fulfill it; and yet under a possibility of transgression, being left to the freedom of their own will.

V. Sin and the Fall.

Sin is the violation of God's law, either by omission or commission. Our first parents, being tempted by Satan, disobeyed God's command, and so by their own choice fell from their original state of innocence and communion with God, and came under the power of sin, the penalty of which is eternal death. All men, by reason of their relationship to Adam as their representative head and common ancestor, are born with a sinful nature from which all actual transgressions proceed; and out of this condition no one is able to deliver himself.

VI. Salvation.

God, who is rich in mercy, so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to be the Saviour of sinners. The salvation thus provided is freely offered to all men, and is sufficient for all, but becomes efficacious only in those who believe in Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

VII. Election.

Before the foundation of the world, God the Father chose unto Himself in Christ a people whom He gave to His Son, that they should be holy and without blame before Him in love. Those who come to years of discretion receive this salvation only through faith in Christ, being regenerated by the Holy Spirit. Those who die in infancy, and all others who are incapable of exercising choice, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit who works when and where and how he pleases. We thus declare that God's electing grave has peopled heaven with a multitude that no man can number, and has never sent one soul to hell.

VIII. Christ the Redeemer.

The Lord Jesus Christ, being the eternal Son of God, became truly man, being conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, yet without sin; so that He is both God and man, and the only perfect mediator between God and man, by whom alone we can come unto the Father. By a life of perfect obedience and by His sacrificial death, He satisfied divine justice, made a perfect atonement for sin, and reconciles us to God. He rose from the dead and ascended into heaven, where he makes continual intercession for us; and He sits at the right hand of God, clothed with honor and power, subduing His people unto Himself, ruling and defending them, and restraining and conquering all His and their enemies. He will come again to receive and reward His people and to judge the world.

IX. The Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit, the third person of the Godhead, applies the redemption purchased by Christ. He persuades and enables men to obey the call of the gospel, and dwells continually in every believer as the spirit of truth, of holiness, of power and of comfort, and is thereby the author of all Christian experience.

X. Justification by Faith.

Everyone who humbly relies upon Christ alone for salvation and in repentance confesses and forsakes his sins, is pardoned and accepted as righteous in God's sight, solely on the ground of the perfect obedience and sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Everyone thus pardoned and accepted is adopted into God's family, and becomes an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ.

XI. The Christian Life.

The Holy Spirit imparts spiritual life by the direct operation of his power; so that, being born from above, we are the children of God, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which are not the ground but the fruits of salvation. Dwelling in Christ's people, he purifies them more and more from sin, enables them to render a cheerful and loving obedience to God's commandments, and perseveres in his sanctifying work in their hearts until at last they stand perfect in the presence of Christ in glory. Believers may at times backslide, growing indifferent and cold, and even falling into grievous sins; yet God does not cast them off, but chastens them, and restores them through repentance to fellowship with him.

XII. The Church.

We acknowledge one universal church, the same in all ages, and of which Christ is the head. The church invisible consists of all the redeemed. The church visible is composed of all those throughout the world who profess faith in Jesus Christ, our Lord, together with their children, and it is the duty of all believers openly to profess their faith by uniting with the church. The church exists to bring to Christ those whom the Father has given him, and to establish the Redeemer's kingdom. The mission of the church is spiritual, and its work is to witness to the truth of God to the ends of the earth, and to preach the gospel to all men in every generation. We believe in the separation of church and state. The scriptural form of church government is by elders or presbyters, chosen by the members of the church; but we do not regard the form of government of a church as essential to its existence. We recognize the validity of the ministry and sacraments of all evangelical churches, and seek the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. Ministers, elders and deacons, at their ordination, are required to subscribe to the system of doctrine contained in our standards, but the sole condition for membership in the church is a credible confession of Christ as Saviour.

XIII. The Sacraments.

There are two sacraments, baptism, which symbolizes the work of the Holy Spirit, and the Lord's Supper, which symbolizes the sacrificial death of Christ. Sprinkling or pouring is the Scriptural mode of baptism, but the mode is not essential to the validity of the sacrament. Children of believers, before reaching the age of personal accountability, are to be baptized on the faith of their parents, who in the sacramental act enter into covenant relations with God. We invite to the Lord's table all who love Him in sincerity and truth and who are in good and regular standing in evangelical churches.

XIV. Death and Resurrection.

The souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness; and do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in the grave till the resurrection. At the resurrection, believers being raised up in glory, shall be openly acknowledged and acquitted in the day of judgment, and made perfectly blessed in the full enjoyment of God to all eternity; but the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment.

XV. The Final State.

There are but two states of future existence, heaven, the home of the redeemed, and hell, the abode of the finally impenitent. There is no purgatory, nor is there any probation after death. Man retains his identity after death, and there will be recognition in the future life. We believe in the ultimate and complete triumph of the Saviour's kingdom, and with all His followers in all ages we toil and pray for the speedy coming of the day when our glorious Lord shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied.

Ministers' Ranks Thinning; Missionaries Increasing

The first report heard at the Tuesday morning session of the United Presbyterian Assembly was that of the woman's board. This report showed a larger number of unmarried woman missionaries sent out the past year than any preceding year. The year closed without a deficit. The report was adopted without discussion.

Reports on the state of religion and education were unanimously adopted.

An attempt was made to bring up the fight between the home mission board and the board of publication for control of Sabbath school work. Dr. John A. Henderson presented a resolution that a special committee, consisting of seven men not connected with either board, be appointed to investigate the conflicting claims, and report the results of this investigation to next year's Assembly. Dr. McGill opposed its appointment, saying it would hinder the Sabbath school work. Other delegates supported him.

Dr. L. W. Williamson, of Topeka, Kans., declared it seemed that neither board was hurt but that a certain worker was, and asked the Assembly to find a position for the worker referred to. Dr. Russell replied that the report yesterday merely showed the worker's term had expired. Dr. Henderson then withdrew his motion.

Ministers Decrease in Number.

It was shown by the report on theological seminaries that the number of deaths in the ministerial ranks exceeded the number of young men entering by 11, and recommended that a campaign be waged presenting the claims of the gospel ministry to the young men in the colleges. The report was adopted.

It was voted to change the time of adjournment from 12 to 12:30 after to-day.

The session on Monday afternoon was featured by a stormy debate over a recommendation made by the committee on bills and overtures to reaffirm the action of last year's Assembly in taking control of mission Sabbath schools and Sabbath school extension work from the hands of the board of publication and putting it in charge of the board of home missions.

Dr. W. B. Smiley, secretary of the Sabbath school work, which office would be abolished if the recommendation were adopted, made the charge that politics was at the bottom of the recommendation. Mr. Smiley stated to a Georgian reporter that some one outside the mission board was responsible for the recommendation being made.

The courtesies of the floor were extended to Dr. W. J. Reed, chairman of the Sabbath school committee. Dr. Reed stated that Dr. Smiley wrote him several weeks ago that a plot was on foot to take all matters pertaining to the Sabbath school work from the hands of the board of publication.

Dr. Reed said that he had investigated these charges and found no evidence of such a plot. He stated further that the Sabbath school work was one of the most important parts of church work, and that the home mission board desired to retain control of it for another year.

A motion was next made and carried by a majority of about ten to put control of the Sabbah school work back in the hands of the board of publication. This motion later was killed. An amendment was then made and unanimously carried that the present arrangement be continued until next year. This leaves control in the hands of the home mission board, and abolishes Dr. Smiley's office.

It was decided that The Christian Instructor be disposed of at the best possible terms and as early as possible, the committee having found that it was being operated at a loss of about $500 a month.

Dr. A. R. Robinson, of Pittsburg, Pa., was chairman of the committee on bills and overtures. The other members were Rev. W. J. Grimes, Rev. W. J. Buchanan, Rev. J. B. Work, J. A. McLaughty, Hon. J. H. Staveley and W. H. Ramsey.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

The Light Brahma Well Established Breed of Chickens

Has Been Bred in This Country for Sixty-five Years—Good Winter Layers.

The Light Brahma is one of the old well-established breeds of chickens. It has been bred in this country for about 65 years—at first in a rather crude state, as compared with what it has attained to at this time; then it was termed rather gawky, rather irregular and ill-shaped in its lines of make-up. To-day it is a breed of sturdy and commanding appearance, yet graceful and symmetrical in every line of its make-up. At least, so it appears to all who admire a chicken of some size. It is the heaviest chicken in the standard category. Cocks or old males weigh 12 pounds; hens and mature females, 9 pounds; cockerels, 10 pounds, and pullets, 8 pounds. This makes a pretty heavy quartet, with a combined weight of 39 pounds. With all this it is not an inactive breed like the Cochins.

They are good winter layers, and lay fairly well all the year. Their eggs are large, with a heavy brown shell, and command a better price in the Boston market than any of the lighter or white shell eggs. The Brahma is well adapted to cold climates and does very well in warmer ones. It has what is known as a pea comb, composed of three rows of small points running side by side and are connected at the base where it joins the head. It is a breed of good length in sections composing. Neck is of good length and full feathered and well arched; back of good length, broad and rather flat at shoulders, with a long concave sweep to tail; tail is full and well expanded all around, but rather short, with short sickles; breast and body are broad and deep and of good length, and standing upon stout, heavy thighs and shanks of medium length.

As to color, it might be described in a few words as being white, with a neck distinctively striped with clear black stripes down the center of each feather, ending in a point near the end of each feather. The tail is glossy black, with a good supply of coverts black edged with white. In the female the two top feathers are edged in white or gray. The wings, when folded, show no black, but when opened, the primaries are black, with a faint white edging; the secondary or upper feathers should show black above the quill or stem and white below. A little mixture of black is seen in the toe feathering. A dark or slaty undercolor is not a defect, if it does not show upon the surface. In the make-up of a good specimen stamina is shown in every line. A slim or delicate Brahma should not be tolerated. They are not a success as a rule. They do not fly and they are easily confined by the ordinary wire fence.

Indigestion.

Judge F. J. Marshall: Have noticed among my chickens and turkeys several that are droopy. Their crops are soft and when I hold their heads down a watery substance runs from their mouth. Can you tell me what the trouble is and a remedy for it?
Plainsville, Ga. MISS M. M.

ANSWER—You do not say what you are feeding, but I take it that you are feeding too much sloppy or wet cornmeal mash or something of that nature, which has caused indigestion among them and a fermentation is going on in the crop, preventing it from passing on to the gizzard as quickly as it should. If this is the case, we would advise you to change the feed to a good mixed cracked grain ration, fed dry and in limited quantites. Do not try to crowd them with feed. Let them get hungry. Provide yourself with some pulverized or granulated charcoal. It may be about the size of a half grain of wheat. Give each one affected about a half teaspoonful twice a day, whether they have any feed or not, for a day or two does not matter. Let them have some good green food and be sure they have good sharp grit. These are very essential to health. We think with the above treatment and cautious feeding in small quantities until they become normal will bring them around all right.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Building Plans Call for $100,000

Not only did several interesting sales of real estate take place Tuesday, but announcement was made of a considerable amount of building, aggregating in money nearly $100,000.

J. J. Haverty will build a two-story and basement residence, costing $30,000, on the west side of Peachtree Road directly north of Jack J. Spalding's "Deerland." Mr. Haverty has received plans from Edward E. Dougherty, architect, and will let the contract shortly. This residence will be of white tapestry brick, and some of the features will be French windows, a loggia and wide terrace in front, a sleeping porch, a sun parlor and tile roof. Mr. Haverty has six acres of the original "Deerland" estate, with a frontage of 300 feet and a depth of 800. In this immediate neighborhood are the E. R. DuBose place and the recently completed home of Judge E. W. Born.

Flat to Cost $43,500.

Mrs. Ida A. Turner has filed an application for a building permit on a two-story brick veneer flat at 48 West Peachtree Place, the building to cost $43,500. The Fulton County Home Builders have the contract and will be the architects. This firm has plans for a $3,300 cottage at 191 Wabash Avenue, and to build for Mrs. Joseph E. Leppert a two-story frame dwelling on Moreland Avenue, at a cost of $5,000.

S. Cunningham will build three one-story frame dwellings at 334, 358 and 360 West Fair Street, at a total cost of $2,700, and a cottage at 62 Parsons Street for $700.

Mrs. J. E. Wragg will build two one-story frame dwellings at 47-49 Coleman Street, at a total cost of $1,300.

Porter & Swift's Sales.

Four sales of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, through E. V. Moore, netted $17,950, and Mr. Moore has also sold a West Cain Street parcel at a price which is withheld.

Arthur Deveney has sold to a client of the Porter & Swift agency 126 East Cain Street, a three-story building, on a 20 by 140-foot lot, for $6,500; to Davis W. John, for a client, 35 South Prado, Ansley Park, 50 by 200, for $5,500; for a client to Davis W. John, 95 Williams Street, a cottage on a 40 by 67-foot lot, for $3,250; a residence lot on the south side of the Jackson Estate Drive, Brookwood, 50 by 200, for $2,700. Also to W. P. and T. M. Callaway, for a client, the southwest corner of West Cain and James Streets, 50 by 53 feet, for a figure that is withheld. Property around this parcel has brought $230 a front foot.

Piedmont Avenue Sale.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Kontz has bought from James S. Middleton, of South Carolina, the residence at 616 Piedmont Avenue, for $12,800. This lot is 65 by 195 feet. The cash consideration was $2,800. The sale was handled by W. L. & John O. DuPree.

Colonial Home at Auction.

On Thursday, May 29, at 5:30 o'clock, the two-story brick colonial house at 101 West Tenth Street, just west of Spring Street, will be sold at auction on the premises by the Ralph O. Cochran Company. This home is about a year old, is of nine rooms and the property of W. C. Harper, who bought it from the builder and present occupant, E. W. Long. The lot is 100 by 200 feet. Terms have not been definitely fixed, but the cash required will be $1,500 to $2,000.

Ellis Home for Rent.

The well-known Ellis home at 547 Peachtree, on the east side of the street between North Avenue and the Ponce DeLeon Apartments, has been offered for lease by a leading real estate and renting agency, at the rate of $100 a month for twelve months. The lot is 50 by 150 feet and the two-story residence is one of the most substantially built in Atlanta.

WEST END.

LUCILE AVE.—Near Peeples St., we can sell you a 10-room, 2-story house on extra large, elevated lot for $6,000. This place has a loan bearing only 5 per cent interest, balance easy. Owner a non-resident and wants to sell.

BEECHER ST.—Near Lee; this is a nearly new 6-room cottage on lot 50x200 feet. This is a genuine pick-up at the price—$3,250—and look, only $300 cash and balance $30 per month.

St. Charles Avenue Lot.

THIS is the cheapest lot on this street. See us for price, terms and location.

SACRIFICE.

We have a new 6-room bungalow that we want to sell on Monday at $1,000 less than what it is worth and ought to sell for. It is close to car line and has city water, sewer connection, nice bath, and sidewalks have been passed up. The way to buy property safely is to buy in a coming section and get the certain enhancement in valuation.

This house is 45 Sterling Street, close to McLendon Street car line. If you want to buy a home at a price you will never get again, go out and look at it and come to my office and we will close a bargain.

A Treaty Japan Has Steadily Dodged

The Japanese Have Not Lived Up to the Treaty They Are NOW Invoking in Their Own Behalf

Japan, we now know, has not only protested specifically against the California alien land bill on the ground that it is contrary to the treaty of 1911, but on the more general basis that it is an offense as between nations and not in harmony with the traditions and friendship existing between the Mikado's Government and that of the United States.

The reply of our Government is that there is no violation of treaty, and that the broader question of offense is a proper subject for diplomatic negotiations.

But with how clean hands can the Japanese Government complain of a violation of treaty?

If, under its terms, Japanese subjects have irrevocable rights to own and lease land in the United States, there must also be an equivalent. Citizens of the United States must have the right to own and lease land in Japan. Have they? The Japanese Parliament passed such a law, but IT HAS NEVER BEEN PROMULGATED. It has never been put into force by imperial decree. It is a dead letter.

That law, even as it stands, is not an equivalent such as Japan is claiming in the United States. An American corporation, for instance, cannot acquire lands or any other rights in Japan, even under the statute, unless a special charter is issued and the application approved by the Minister of Home Affairs.

The law reserves to the Japanese Government the right to exclude aliens and alien corporations from any place the Home Minister may deem advisable. The law excepts Hakodate, Nagasaki, Formosa and many other places where Americans might want to go.

JAPAN HAS NOT LIVED UP TO THE TREATY IT IS NOW INVOKING IN ITS OWN BEHALF.

As for the broader and more serious protest against an "offense between nations," this newspaper has already pointed out that the sovereignty of the United States is thereby challenged more than the sovereignty of Japan.

For eighteen years, until quite recently, the State of New York maintained a law prohibiting aliens from holding land. Indeed, that law was repealed only at the just-closed session of the Legislature and the repealing measure signed by Governor Sulzer.

IN ALL THOSE EIGHTEEN YEARS NO NATION OBJECTED TO THAT LAW AS A NATIONAL AFFRONT.

Any such objection would have been an international ABSURDITY.

It is the sovereign right of the United States to determine who shall and who shall not be citizens, and each State has its own right to determine whether individuals not citizens shall own land in it.

To challenge these sovereign rights is to step out of the domain of international law and custom into the arena.

Bryan's Still-Water Statesmanship

What shall one say when the registered pilot of the ship of state refuses to face anything but fine weather and a smooth sea?

Mr. Bryan is not willing to superintend the foreign relations of the United States if there is going to be any serious trouble about them. He says: "I made up my mind before I accepted the office of Secretary of State that I would not take the office if I thought there was to be a war during my tenure."

Now that Mr. Bryan's mind is thoroughly made up about it, he says he feels sure there will be no storm while his discriminating hand is on the helm.

These assurances may reveal a tender heart in Mr. Bryan, But they expose the incompetence of his executive character and the shallowness of his political thought. The implication is that wars are simply sinful and that they occur only when unjust or unamiable men are put by unhappy accident into places of power.

Mr. Bryan has lived and prospered so well by the mere facility of his tongue that he seems to have lost all sense of those real and passionate contradictions of human interest and honor that spring out of settled rights and moral convictions and that can not be disposed of by any form of words.

Imagine, for example, what would happen if Mr. Bryan's free and unlimited coinage of fine words were to be applied to such an issue as that raised by the suggestion that the "national honor" of Japan requires the admission to American citizenship of hordes of Orientals on equal terms with Germans or Frenchmen.

IMAGINE, IF YOU CAN, THE MEEK SUBMISSION OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO A JUDGMENT OF HAGUE LAWYERS THAT THIS COUNTRY OUGHT TO CONSENT TO BE ORIENTALIZED WITHIN THE NEXT TWENTY YEARS!

The plain truth is, of course, that nations, as they are now constituted, can not keep clear of war for a single year save as "strong men, armed," who keep their palace that their goods may be in peace. Brave and foreseeing men have indeed a right to look forward to a day when nations that now confront each other with menaces may be so transformed in their social and economic substance that all marked antagonisms of interest shall be canceled and dissolved.

BUT IN THE MEANTIME IT IS NOTHING LESS THAN A GRAVE MISFORTUNE THAT THE CHIEF SPOKESMAN OF THE UNITED STATES IN ITS FOREIGN RELATIONS SHOULD BE A STILL-WATER STATESMAN, WHO DECLINES IN ADVANCE TO FACE THE POSSIBILITY OF A STORM, AND WHO RELIES SOLELY UPON RAPTUROUS PHRASES TO MEET DANGEROUS EMERGENCIES.

Rev. John E. White on "Marriage in a Hurry"

By REV. JOHN E. WHITE.
Pastor Second Baptist Church.

A YOUNG lady of Georgia went to Vienna to complete her musical education in the great conservatory there. She met her fate in the person of a splendid young Austrian. The distance from her home in Georgia and the impatience natural to love's young dream seemed to make it impossible for the marriage to take place in due and ancient form at the bride's home. Desiring to proceed with the wedding ceremony in Vienna, after a full correspondence with the bride's family, a stubborn obstacle presented itself in their path.

Our Hurry-Up System.

The Austrian Government interposed a startling amount of legal red-tape with reference to the bride. It was required that legal evidence be transmitted through the Austrian Consul at Savannah that the young lady in question was of marriageable age, health record, moral character, and that her father was a citizen in good standing—all to be certified to in writing and attested by Government officials and ministers of religion.

Fortunately the young lady had no difficulty in complying with the Austrian marriage laws. The Germans are a long-headed people. They have discovered that the marriage altar is a national strength or a national weakness.

This discovery has not yet been made in Georgia and in this country. If statesmen had planned for it a more efficient hurry-up system for marriage than ours could not have been devised. There are enough forces of self-interest brought into play to facilitate matrimony in Georgia to constitute a practical conspiracy to get as many people married as possible.

The State and County laws of license make it profitable to the officers to issue licenses.

Over the doors of the office of Ordinary in Fulton County might be written the motto: "Marriage for Revenue Only," without serious offense. Justices of the Peace profusely welcome the touch of romance and the tingle of silver which brighten their dusty offices.

The preacher and the preacher's wife ardently believe in people getting married, and not for reasons too numerous to mention. So from the man who sells rice and cow-bells to the liveryman and the instalment furniture shop there is a chorus of "Hurry up, John, and hurry up Mary, and get off."

If the young foreigner had met his fate in Georgia, our hurry-up system, which asks no questions, and trusts to matrimonial luck, with a spur on both heels, would have convinced him that the people of this country were looking for a chance to marry off their young ladies quite regardless of whom they married.

So we have the fiddler to pay. Hurry-up marriages demand hurry-up divorce courts. The serious vows of wedlock, their sacred sanctions and solemn responsibilities, so vitally concerning the welfare of society and the happiness of souls, are bound to lack impressiveness since they are left almost entirely to a passing mention in the wedding ceremony which the average bride and bridegroom in this country wants hurried up and over with.

People are not likely to stick together through thick and thin if their marriage is cheaply conceived and unimpressively consummated.

"Hold Up, There!"

Another penalty but recently regarded as mentionable is the gross inattention to physical fitness. What brides can not be expected to know parents should insist on knowing.

If we believe what the physicians are testifying, the marriage altar is society's "bloody angle," when it ought to be the open sesame of health, happiness and the growing of a stronger and purer race.

The demand for a "Hold up, there!" can not be long postponed. The only voice that can utter it effectively is the voice of the State.

The talk among ministers about organization for the purpose of refusing to perform a wedding ceremony except on conditions is practically useless. The Legislature must impose the necessary conditions with proper penalties attached.

Parents are perfectly ready to be protected, but are helpless to protect themselves. Proper marriage laws would educate public opinion against the matrimonial speed mania. Jacob could be trained to wait at least three months for his Rachel, and Rachel would not have to have her Jacob on a week's acquaintance.

It ought not to be possible for anybody's best man to swear successfully that the bride is 18 years old because the bridegroom told him so. The Ordinary is protected by the lie that is sworn to. The preacher is protected by the certificate of the same lie which has received the seal of the Ordinary.

Georgia is behind every other Southern State, except South Carolina, in the looseness with which marriage licenses are issued and in the practical absence of any requirements of vital statistics.

June is coming and our hurry-up system will celebrate itself.

Qualities That Popularize Men With Women and Women With Men

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Copyright, 1913, by Journal-American-Examiner.

JUST what are the qualities which make men popular with women and women with men? This query ofttimes puzzles wise heads to answer.

Men with no decided talents; men of no social prowess; men without money; men with shadowy records, have all succeeded with women where other and seemingly more attractive and certainly more desirable men have failed.

A bigamist who was under engagement of marriage to thirty girls, when he married two of them, says his success resulted from "always talking to women about themselves."

That is the secret of most friendships and all love affairs, and the explanation of most divorces lies in the fact that the man or woman ceases to talk about the virtues and charms of the other.

That is why beautiful women seldom make men happy, and why plain women frequently fascinate and hold.

It is not a peculiarly feminine trait, this love of hearing oneself analyzed and made the leading topic of discussion—it is merely HUMAN.

Might Gain Fiancees.

Men claim to be above it, but in truth they are delighted to be the absorbing subject of conversation when a woman is the converser. Any girl, however devoid of physical charm, if she possesses refinement and tact, can win the man she admires if she understands the art of keeping him entertained about himself and gives him to understand in a subtle manner that his characteristics, his aims, his desires and interests are matters of continual observation and study to her. The woman who undertakes such a course of action must be modest, however, and in no way thrust herself upon the man's notice. She must not be bold or self-assertive, for these are repulsive qualities to a man.

She must simply utilize her opportunities and be patient. A man, on the contrary, can make his opportunities to see a woman, and when he uses boldness and self-assertion in his suit she is all the better pleased, so long as he continues to occupy her time by talking about her, with only occasional references to himself and other people.

Therefore, it is not difficult to understand how, while an earnest woman might be slow in succeeding in her wish to win and hold the regard of one man, a busy, trifling man might accumulate thirty fiancees with ease and celerity.

Yet, on the other hand, woman has more latitude than man for conversation of this kind. A man is perfectly willing a woman should discuss his faults, and delights in having her analyze his sins and weaknesses (before marriage), with occasional laudations of his virtues; while a woman limits him to the recounting of her charming qualities and to anxious solicitude for her welfare.

The only fault she allows him to refer to is her ability to break hearts, or her cruelty to men who adore her, or her delicate physical organization. Most lovers talk of the charms of their sweethearts during courtship. Few husbands make the virtues of their wives a topic of conversation in the family circle—hence the divorce court is busy.

Few lovers are so tactless as to devote many minutes to lauding the virtues or charms of other women to their sweethearts.

Accuse Wives of Jealousy.

But, many husbands enjoy this topic of conversation, and accuse their wives of jealousy if they seem uninterested.

The successful bigamist surely would know better than to pursue such a course; so while better men have been losing their wives and sweethearts he has been winning an embarrassment of riches.

The way to win a woman lies through praise of her.

False Economy

Which Is the Better Business Policy, He Asks, the Spending of $60,000,000 for Our Navy or War Costing This Country $2,000,000,000?

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

A BUSINESS man who refused to spend $100 in order to save $1,000 would be regarded among business men as miserly and incapable.

The representatives of a rich nation who would refuse to spend fifty or sixty million dollars within two years to save an expenditure of two thousand million dollars ought inevitably to be classed as stupid, miserly and unpatriotic. The comparision is perfect with the conditions of to-day.

War with Japan is not only possible, but it is not improbable within the present month.

If we have war with Japan the experts who know and not merely the gossips who speculate are a unit in the belief that within a few weeks Japan could easily capture the Phillipines, the Hawaiian Islands and the Sandwich Islands.

Might Land an Army.

It is also agreed that Japan might land an army by trasports through Puget Sound upon American soil, make a demonstration against our beautiful City of San Francisco and invest the Panama Canal for bombardment or surrender.

The value of these island possessions are insignificant as compared with the after expense. This nation could not afford and certainly would not afford to suffer this indignity at the hands of the Japanese soldiers and sailors. If it took the last dollar of our money and the last contingent of our soldiers the United States would be compelled to vindicate its honor and its prestige by recapturing what Japan should win and fortify against us.

There is not a statistician of war who does not believe that this gigantic effort would cost our country between one thousand and two thousand million dollars.

The records of the Russian-Japanese war vindicate the belief that this is not an extravagant estimate of the cost.

Two thousand million dollars is a prodigious sum even in the day of magnificent figures in money.

These two thousand million dollars, plainly stated, would represent just exactly what the stupid, selfish, unpatriotic and mercenary statesmanship of our recent Congresses have cost this country.

Japan Would Be Silent.

There is no escaping the arraignment. If the naval programs which have been presented to Congress within the last ten years by men who are paid by the Government to tell the Government what is needed for the national defense had been adopted, as they ought to have been, by the representatives of the people there would have been a navy large enough to make this war, which is now probable, not only improbable, but impossible.

Japan would never have voiced a comparative ultimatum and certinly never have ventured upon a war against such a navy as our programs had required.

The men who have been responsible by their blindness and parsimony for our debilitated navy and our unpreparedness in national defense must inevitably be held responsible for the record—responsible for war and its expense and its humiliation.

It is useless and weak for the men to plead that they did not know and could not foresee.

It was their business as statesmen, looking beyond the present moment, to know the probabilities of the future. Their intelligence has been appealed to by information and by argument from experts and veterans so as to leave them no excuse save obstinacy not to have understood and to have foreseen.

The narrow selfishness of local and district legislation and the desire for personal preferment will always be held as the explanation of the unpatriotic and parsimonious policy which has crippled our navy and made possible the humiliation that seems to be at hand.

The only possible reparation which these blind and stingy statesmen can make to the country and to the people is to stand ready to vote now for prompt and liberal expenditures for the national defense.

"Pork Barrel" Politics.

They must do more than this. They must realise that the present instance, which follows fast upon an incident that occurred two years ago, may be and probably will be followed by a similar incident at a near-coming time.

And, whether or not the present difference with Japan should be composed or should result in a prodigiously expensive war, the representatives of the American people in Congress can only vindicate their stupendous folly and narrowness of the last decade by voting in succeeding years for a naval program which will make impossible the shameful conditions and the frowning menace of to-day.

Hereafter the American Congressman who votes to squander millions upon the pork barrel and his own re-election and refuses to expend the necessary millions for his country's peace and its defense must be branded as incompetent and treasonable and sent back to the people who were foolish enough to send him to Washington.

of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.

THE Pharisees are not all dead yet.

Bob and his sister Polly, in a crowd, walked all the way home from Sabbath school, a full quarter of a mile, each with an arm around the other. While passing over the little bridge they kissed with a smack that was heard above the rippling of the brook.

Bob and Polly had not been home ten minutes when their invalid mother was heard to shriek, "If you grown children do not stop quarreling you will kill me dead!"

Bob and Polly are Pharisees and simpletons.

A Baalam on Broadway, or in Bowery, who, through a megaphone, proclaims his love for his mother, is not to be trusted by her or by any one else. If she has any sense or decency herself she will, upon hearing him, pluck him gently by the sleeve and say, "Don't do that, my boy! Come home and whisper it in my ear or speak it to me with your eyes or manifest it with some little deed of kindness or act of courtesy."

Baalam is a Pharisee and a fool!

Schnickman, at the club, loudly and repeatedly declared that his wife was the sweetest, prettiest little woman in the world. He offered to bet $25 that he loved her better than any other husband ever loved a wife.

Schnickman was cashier at the ice plant. One night he absconded with the funds. A week later his wife and babies disappeared.

On entering Schnickman's house his bondsmen and the officers found a closet full of empty jugs and bottles. In the dining room they found a buggy whip that showed much use. Schnickman kept no horse and was never known to drive one.

Schnickman is a Pharisee and a villain!

When the old prophet Elijah, thinking there were none righteous left on earth, went up on Mount Horeb, as he was commanded, he stood to hear his Lord's condemnation of a wayway world.

Elijah was probably surprised when God's wrath was not proclaimed in the tempest, or in the earthquake, or in the thunderlight.

After these noisy things had passed by a still small voice informed Elijah that there were yet seven thousand Israelites whose lips had not kissed Baal.

The Still-Small-Voice was no Pharisee.

Mother-love ever expresses itself "Sweet and low, sweet and low," like the wind of a Western sea, while her little one, her pretty one, sleeps.

Mother is not a Pharisee.

Love may get itself expressed in the odor of a violet or in the dream of a kiss or in the memory of a silent sunset.

True lover never blusters.

True love is not loud.

ATLANTA PILES UP ELEVEN RUNS

Billy Smith's Men Wallop Kroh Hard, While Chappelle Is in Excellent Form.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, May 20.—The Crackers trimmed the Turtles here this afternoon to the tune of 11 to 0.

The game was called at the end of the first half of the sixth on account of rain.

THE GAME:

FIRST INNING.

Love fouled out to Smith. Baerwald out, Bisland to Agler. Schweitzer flied out to Bailey. NO RUNS.

Long walked. Bailey sacrificed, Ward to Abstein. Alperman drove one through Ward [illegible] got two bases on it and Long scored. Schweitzer let the ball get by him in left field for an error and Alperman scored. Welchonce lined out to Shanley. Smith got a base on balls. Bisland drove a three-bagger to deep left center and Smith tallied. Bisland tried to score when Seabaugh let the ball get by him, but was out, Seabaugh to Kroh. THREE RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Ward flied to Long. Abstein lifted one to Welchonce, who let it get away for an error and Abstein took second. Butler flied to Long. Shanley out, Bisland to Agler. NO RUNS.

Agler walked. Dunn bunted to Kroh, who threw to second to get Agler, but it was too late. Chappelle fanned. Long popped out to Butler. Bailey fanned. NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Seabaugh out, Alperman to Agler. Kroh popped to Bisland. Love walked. Baerwald was an easy out, Alperman to Agler. NO RUNS.

Alperman hit one through Ward. The game was then held up a few minutes on account of rain. Welchonce bunted and beat it to first for a hit. Smith sacrificed out, Kroh to Abstein. Bisland cleaned up with a nice single to center, scoring Alperman and Welchonce. Agler got another base on balls. Dunn bounded one to Ward, who retired Bisland at third and then doubled Joe at first to Abstein. TWO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Schweitzer stung one into the mud at Smith's feet, who threw him out at first. Ward popped out to Bisland. Abstein was out, Chappelle to Agler. NO RUNS.

Chappelle popped out to Abstein. Long slipped a single past Ward, but was caught napping off first, Kroh to Abstein to Butler. Bailey out, Shanley to Abstein. NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

Butler flied to Bailey. Shanley popped a high foul to Dunn. Seabaugh out, Bisland to Agler. Up to this period only five balls had been hit out of the infield by the Turtles. NO RUNS.

Alperman doubled to center. Welchonce bunted to Kroh and beat the throw to first and Alperman circled to third. Smith hit a pop foul to Abstein. Bisland was walked by Kroh. Agler grounded to Kroh, who threw to Seabaugh. Pat dropped the ball and all hands were safe. Alperman scored. Dunn singled to center and Welchonce and Bisland scored. Chappelle drove one through Butler too hot to handle, Agler scored and Dunn went to third. Long smashed a single to center and Dunn scored. Chappelle went to second. Bailey bunted to Ward and beat it out for a hit, filling the bases. Alperman out, Shanley to Abstein, and Chappelle scored. Welchonce fouled out to Seabaugh. SIX RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

San Diego Chases Anarchists Again

SAN DIEGO, CAL., May 20.—Five thousand people this afternoon surrounded the county jail where Emma Goldman and Dr. Ben Reitman, anarchists, were held and howled at them. The couple was arrested with Wm. Gerke, their advance agent, on a charge of distributing incendiary literature.

The trio were led to the city limits at 3 p. m., where an outbound train was stopped to allow them to get aboard. The crowd followed howling and jerring. Officers protected the trio from the mob.

CASES READY AGAINST LEE AND LEO FRANK

Solicitor General Dorsey Declares All Evidence Will Go to the Grand Jury Friday.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey announced Tuesday morning that the State's case against Leo M. Frank and Newt Lee in connection with the Phagan murder, would go to the Grand Jury Friday of this week. He said that he could anticipate no new arrest or development that would make it necessary to change this plan.

Mrs. Jane F. Carr, 251 Ponce De Leon Avenue, in an open letter, asked every woman in Atlanta to contribute to the fund to employ the Burns detective and Mr. Burns himself to work in the Phagan investigation. She appealed to women of every walk in life to give according to their means.

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?" was the subject of her letter.

Felder Asks for Funds.

The Burns fund, after going above the $2,000 mark, slacked considerably. Colonel Thomas B. Felder said this sum would not be sufficient if it became necessary for the Burns men to make an exhaustive investigation, and asked the people to contribute liberally to the end that Atlanta's greatest mystery be satisfactorily cleared.

C. W. Tobie, chief of the Burns' criminal investigation department, was even more optimistic Tuesday morning than he was Monday that the Phagan mystery would be cleared to the satisfaction of Atlanta.

"Another day on the scene has only convinced me that the crime is far from the most baffling the Burns detectives have solved," he said at his hotel Tuesday morning. "I am not at liberty to make public the result of my investigation, but we have certainly made progress."

Search for Phone Girl.

City detectives are searching for a telephone girl who was reported to have heard a conversation over the telephone the night of the murder between two persons said to be attaches of the pencil factory.

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford said that he had learned from a responsible source of a switchboard operator who was reported to have overheard a conversation that would be of the greatest importance in the Phagan case. He would not say whether he had learned the identity of the girl.

A corps of department detectives were detailed to the search that will take in every private branch exchange in Atlanta.

Colonel Felder said that he had heard nothing of the report and was quite sure the Burns detective had not. The Pinkertons, through Harry Scott, said they attached little importance to the report, but that if it were true the girl could be easily located.

City detectives and the Pinkertons spent several hours at the pencil factory plant last night. The premises were minutely searched for new clews. The result was not made public.

Working independent of every one, Tobie, the Burns agent, was away from his hotel bright and early Tuesday morning following up a lead that he said had been heretofore overlooked. He will make daily reports to Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Colonel Felder.

Here is Mrs. Carr's letter urging all women to interest themselves in the Mary Phagan case:

Calls It Women's Case.

"To the Women of Atlanta:

"The Mary Phagan case is our case, and it behooves every woman to set the seal of condemnation upon lawlessness and demand that no means shall be unused, no expense spared in

STRICKEN ON HIS WEDDING EVE, YOUNG MAN DIES

R. W. Sutton Victim of Meningitis as He Planned to Marry Miss Lillian Tutwiler.

Stricken on the eve of his wedding day, R. W. Sutton, 25 years old, of 419 Washington Street, is dead at the Grady Hospital—a victim of meningitis. His bride-to-be, Miss Lillian A. Tutwiler, 300 South Pryor Street, is prostrated and his aged mother, Mrs. T. B. Sutton, added this new sorrow to that cast over her by the death of her husband a month ago.

Although but a few doors down the corridor from her son, Mrs. Sutton, who is paralyzed and unable to move, has not been informed of her son's demise. Physicians feared that this second shock would prove fatal to her.

The younger Sutton's death occurred at 2 o'clock Tuesday morning. It was the culmination of a stroke of meningitis the day before he was to have married Miss Tutwiler, three weeks ago. With the same affliction his father had died.

Fiancee Became His Nurse.

Following his removal to the hospital, his fiancee became his nurse. During the three weeks of anxiety which came, when death was ever present and physicians shook their heads in forebodings, the young couple did not despair. Miss Tutwiler kept her newly-made wedding gown in readiness for the wedding which she was sure would come.

In his conscious moments the young bridegroom-to-be talked constantly of the happiness that lay in store for them when he got well. Nurses and attendants at the hospital heard with aching hearts the plans for the future that the couple made as during the long days and nights they sat holding hands.

Mr. Sutton was alone when death came. Miss Tutwiler, exhausted and worn out by her constant vigil at the bedside of her lover, was prostrated Monday when told by physicians that there was no hope. She visited Sutton for the last time late Monday afternoon, when already death was at the door. She was the last person Mr. Sutton recognized.

Recognized Her While Dying.

When she came into his room and laid her hand on the wasted arm, the eyes that were fast closing in the last sleep lighted up. Choking with sobs, the two bade each other goodbye, and Miss Tutwiler, prostrated by her sorrow, was taken to her home.

After Miss Tutwiler left his room Sutton sank rapidly, and soon relapsed into a coma from whch he never awakened. Death came to his relief a few hours later. The young man's father, T. B. Sutton, died recently of the same disease.

Mr. Sutton and Miss Tutwiler had planned to be married on April 23. Arrangements had been made for the wedding, the minister had been engaged, and the friends of the happy couple had been invited. On April 22 Mr. Sutton suddenly was taken ill. Thinking the illness soon would pass, no halt was made in the plans for the wedding. On the morning of April 23 Mr. Sutton was suffering intense pain and a physician was called. In the afternoon of the same day he diagnosed the trouble as meningitis, and ordered the young man taken to Grady Hospital.

Girl Plans for Wedding.

The friends of the young people were notified of the illness of Mr. Sutton, and the wedding was postponed. Confident that her lover soon would recover from his illness, Miss Tutwiler fully completed the final details of her trousseau.

But the wedding gown was never to be worn, and to-day it lies unfolded, emphasizing the grief of the young woman. Miss Tutwiler was hysterical with grief when she learned of her fiance's death, and on Tuesday morning was prostrated at her home. During the day her family became alarmed, and physicians were called. Her condition is considered serious.

Jacksonville to Get 'Jedge Briles' Justice

That he might gather pointers on how to conduct the police court in Jacksonville, of which he will assume charge June 1, Judge W. W. Anderson sat through the session of Recorder Broyles' court Monday an intensely interested spectator of the proceedings.

Judge Anderson expressed himself as greatly pleased with Judge Broyles' methods and his determination to enforce law.

5 THRASHED IN COURT BY BURTON SMITH

Burton Smith, well-known attorney and brother of Senator Hoke Smith, on Tuesday afternoon thrashed five men who objected to him conversing in the corridors of the court rooms in the Thrower building with a woman witness in the famous Crawford will case.

Two of the men, C. W. Walton, of Buckhead, and W. H. Byrd, 41 West Twelfth Street, were badly beaten up, both showing black eyes and contusions on their faces where Smith struck them. The other three men also were given severe drubbings before friends and policemen separated the belligerents.

According to eyewitnesses of the fight, Attorney Smith had stopped Mrs. Cash as she passed through the corridors of the building and was talking to her. Walton, it is claimed, approached and said:

"Here, you; don't talk to that woman!"

"What do you care?" asked Smith. "Do you own her?"

"Yes, I do," answered Walton, and, it is said, raised his arm as though intending to strike the attorney.

Walton is a powerfully built man, fully as large as the attorney. Hardly had the words left his mouth, however, when Attorney Smith lunged forward and struck Walton squarely on the point of the jaw. Walton fell limply to the floor, and Byrd rushed into the fray. He was met with a stiff right arm jolt from Mr. Smith and was knocked down for the count.

Three Men Enter Fray.

Then three men who had entered the court house with Walton and Byrd, and who were with them when the attorney knocked them down, leaped at Smith. The attorney met them, and knocked them down as fast as they came at him. One of them he knocked down twice, while one blow sufficed to put the other two hors de combat.

Before the five men could arise and rush the attorney, deputy sheriffs, policemen and friends of the attorney rushed between them and prevented further hostilities. Included in the rescue party were Deputy Sheriffs John S. Owens, Dave Goodlin, Newton Garner and Attorneys Reuben Arnold and Colonel James Anderson.

Attorney Smith's hand was bleeding from the force of the blows he had struck the five men, and on one of his knuckles was a wound from one of his opponent's teeth. His friends started to take him out of the building, and as they passed Walton, the latter began getting up from the floor.

Wanted to Continue Bout.

"I'm ready for you again," he remarked.

Mr. Smith tried to break away from his friends and expressed a desire to again knock Walton down, but he was restrained and went to his office, where physicians dressed his wounds. Walton and Byrd and the other three men left the building immediately.

The fight lasted about two minutes.

Several women who were in the corridor near the belligerents, became hysterical and fairly fought their way into the court room. Deputy sheriffs were called to quiet the excitement.

Mrs. Cash Tells Story.

The woman over whom the fight started was Mrs. Cora Cash, of Buckhead. According to Mrs. Cash, she and her daughter, Mrs. Violet Whitmire, were sitting on a bench near the entrance to the court room, when Attorney Smith came up and began talking to Mrs. Whitmire, an attractive young woman.

Then, Mrs. Cash says, Walton and Byrd came up and demanded that Smith stop talking to the young woman. Smith retaliated with his question as to the ownership of the woman, and the fight followed.

J. S. James, representing the heirs in the Crawford case and retained by Walton and Byrd, announced after the fight that he will at once have warrants issued for the arrest of Attorney Reuben Arnold and Mr. Smith and also for a man named J. C. Cox, who, it is alleged, held Walton while Smith struck him. Arnold, it is alleged, kicked Byrd while he was on the floor.

Mr. Smith declares that during the hearing he had been forced, in order to bring out certain points, to use language that might have been a bit aggressive. He says he met Mrs. Cash in the hallway later, and she told him she didn't think he had used proper language in his interrogation. Mr. Smith was explaining and apologizing for whatever he might have said that would hurt her feelings.

Wife Digs Miner's Body From Cave-in

OROVILLE, CAL., May 20.—Frank Martin, a miner, was killed by a landslide on his property along the Feather River, near Oroville. He was found entombed in the dirt by his wife, who went to hunt for him when he did not return to his home at the usual time.

She made her ghastly discovery and found her husband crushed and dead, buried in the earth and rock that had fallen on him. She returned to her cabin for help and with the aid of her children dug the body from its untimely grave.

FLAGLER, OIL AND RAIL MAGNATE, IS DEAD

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA., May 20.—Henry M. Flagler, wealthy railroad builder and owner, died here today.

Mr. Flagler had been sick for three months, although it was thought several weeks ago that he would recover. Mr. and Mrs. Flagler came here in February. At that time he was suffering from excessive nervousness. A general breakdown followed.

Mr. Flagler died at 10 o'clock. The end was peaceful. To those at the bedside it seemed that the sick man died in his sleep. Among those in the death chamber were Mrs. Flagler and Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler.

The body will be placed in the mausoleum in the Flagler plot at St. Augustine. The date of the funeral probably will not be fixed until tonight.

Mr. Flagler, one of America's foremost financial giants, and known in the South as the "King of Florida," was born in a little village just south of Rochester, N. Y., in 1850. His father was pastor of the village church, and at the age of 14 Henry decided that his mother and sister could get along more comfortably if he ceased to be one of the family burden.

Goes Out to Seek Fortune.

So he started from home, with a few dollars in his pocket, and gradually worked his way westward to Republic, Ohio, where he went to work in a country store for $5 per month and board.

Strict economy soon enabled young Flagler to open a grain business in Bellevue, Ohio. And here began a little business which ultimately resulted in the formation of the greatest corporation in the world.

Mr. Flagler used to ship his carloads of grain to Cleveland, where it was sold for him by a young commission merchant named John D. Rockefeller.

Loses All in Salt Venture.

After amassing a fortune of $50,000 in Bellevue, he went to Saginaw, Mich., and made an unsuccessful venture in the salt business, losing every dollar of his money. With the aid of money furnished by his wife's relatives, he moved to Cleveland and reentered the grain business. He renewed his acquaintance with John D. and William Rockefeller, who were at that time confining their efforts to the oil refining business. He became interested in the brothers' new venture and in 1867, with the aid of more money from his wife's relatives, he entered into a $100,000 partnership with the Rockefellers and Samuel Andrews.

Wife Becomes Insane.

Mr. Flagler's second marriage occurred in 1883, and in the next ten years his fortune increased by leaps and bounds. His wife became the mistress of a fine mansion on Fifth Avenue, New York, as well as a palatial country home on Long Island and in Florida, and to all outward appearances Henry M. Flagler was the happiest man in the world. Then a terrible misfortune came into his life.

His wife's mind became unbalanced. The grief-stricken man kept the awful truth hidden as long as possible. He paid thousands and thousands of dollars to alienists in the hope of restoring her mentality, but her condition gradually grew worse. When, in 1899, the unfortunate woman finally became unmanageable, the Standard Oil magnate was forced to have his wife declared legally insane.

Divorces Insane Wife.

The following year a law was passed by the Florida Legislature, whereby permanent insanity was made ample grounds for a divorce. It was alleged at the time that this law was passed for the benefit of Mr. Flagler, who had come to be a power in Florida as a result of his vast railroad and hotel enterprises.

He devoted a great deal of his money and energy toward the upbuilding of the State of Florida, and making the southeastern peninsula one of the greatest winter resorts in the world. His greatest work in this connection was the completion recently of the extension of the Florida East Coast Railway from Knights' Key to Key West, which is known as the "railroad over the sea." This stretch of track is 156 miles in length and connects the chain of islands between the mainland and Key West. Its construction was one of the greatest engineering feats of the present age, as it is built almost entirely over water.

Mr. Flagler's fortune was estimated at $100,000,000.

Moderator Struggles to Keep Order as Discussion Over Union College Charges Grows Bitter.

The bitter controversy which for the past two days has been rife within the ranks of the Northern Assembly regarding the Union Theological Seminary of New York, was brought to a sudden close late Tuesday with the adoption of a motion by Dr. Mark A. Matthews that a committee of seven be appointed to investigate the charges of heresy against the Seminary and report at next year's meeting.

Dr. Matthews' proposal was accepted almost unanimously by a rising vote.

Immediately after the question was settled, the entire meeting sang, 'Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

Dr. Francis Brown, President Union Theological Seminary, who vigorously defended the doctrinal views of his college.

Stormy outbursts, silenced by the active gavel of Moderator Stone, only to break out afresh, marked the bitter Union Theological Seminary controversy on the floor of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly Tuesday forenoon.

Half a dozen men were on their feet simultaneously, clamoring for recognition by the chair. Toward the close of the forenoon session, the discussion was involved in a tangle of parliamentary procedure, from which relief was obtained only by the recess taken until the afternoon.

The intense feeling of the commissioners cropped out in many different ways, and the moderator was able to maintain a semblance of order only with the greatest difficulty.

"Sit Down," the Cry.

An unexpected but futile effort was made to avoid the issue by tabling the resolution condemning the seminary. The majority, however, were eager to have the question settled once and for all.

Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., was the author of the motion to postpone action indefinitely.

"Sit down!" some militant preacher at the side of the room shouted as soon as he realized the import of the motion.

The eys of Moderator Stone blazed as he pounded thunderously with his gavel.

"I want no such expression in this Assembly," he ordered. "I am saying this to the man who made that remark. I do not care who he may be."

Spirited Defense.

The debate proper had not begun when the morning session adjourned. Dr. Francis Brown, president of the seminary which is under fire, was permitted to close the remarks which he had started when the session adjourned Monday afternoon. After this ensued the maelstrom of motions and points of order that kept the session in a turmoil until recess.

Dr. Brown came to a spirited defense of Union Seminary, its directors and its faculty.

Many women were among the spectators in the packed balcony when the debate was started by Dr. Francis Brown, president of Union Seminary. The walls were lined by several score of men, who were compelled to stand. Even the upper gallery had its fringe of keenly interested listeners.

In the main auditorium every seat was taken. Ushers were instructed to keep the doors barred while the debate was in progress.

Moderator Stone ruled at the opening of the discussion that there should be no disorder of any sort. To insure the carrying out of his order, he forbade applause of any sort during or after the speeches.

He called upon Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, one of the instructors in Union Theological Seminary, and Rev. C. A. R. Janvier, of Philadelphia, to invoke the aid of God in deciding the question.

In spite of Moderator Stone's ruling that there should be no applause or manifestation of approval or disapproval, there was a marked murmur of dissent when President Brown, of Union Seminary, declared that he metophorically had been met at the door of the Assembly hall with a club with which it was purposed to "break his head."

"Waiting With Club."

"It is as though you had invited a friend to your home under the pretext of hospitality," he declared, "and then had met him at the door to crack open his skull.

"Of the second minority report I knew nothing until ten days ago. It was signed by one man only, and he a member of the committee for only a few months. His report and his opinions had not been made a subject of conference. They were as unexpected as a thunderbolt.

"All of these criticisms, however, can be met without any difficulty. The author has been grossly misinformed and mistaken. In the first place, the annulling of the agreement of 1870 was done on the advice of two distinguished lawyers, who advised the directors they had gone too far under the provisions in the charter in making the agreement at all."

Resents Charges.

Dr. Brown named the men who had been in charge of the affairs of the seminary for years as an evidence that it had been in the hands of capable, God-fearing directors and instructors.

He grew bitter when he came to comment on the arraignment of William Adams Brown, professor of systematic theology in the seminary.

"That criticism was most unjust and unwarranted," declared President Brown. "Professor Brown is one of the most ardent, earnest and sincere Presbyterians in this Assembly. So to attack his religious principles was cruel and not supported by any evidence. Terms were used that never should be used by one Christian in reference to another Christian or to any human being.

"That reference, too, to Hindu philosophy was a simple travesty—a simple travesty! I find it more difficult to be calm at this time. I don't want to lose my temper, but such unjust and unsupported charges have been hurled at this seminary that restraint is not wholly possible.

"Remember that the seminary asks nothing, seeks nothing. It is not represented here voluntarily. It came on invitation. We want to be of service to the Presbyterian Church, but if you can not use us, we do not care to try.

"The members of the faculty have given evidences of their Christian faith that should be accepted if the matter is considered at all. I hold, however, that discussion on the second minority report should have no place on this floor, as the report was never made a subject of conference.

"In regard to the students going forth from our seminary, I want to deny the scurrilous stories which have gone forth about the country. There is not a single man from the seminary who has been licensed by a presbytery who has denied his belief in the atoning work of Jesus, the resurrection of the Lord and the other fundamental doctrines concerning which we have been accused of lack of faith."

Dr. Brown spoke quietly and without any evidence of rancor until he came to discuss the charges of Christian infidelity lodged against his seminary and its faculty. Then his voice rose and he lost the poise that had characterized his calm discussion of the legal phase of the seminary's action in abrogating the agreement of 1870.

The friends of the seminary applauded lightly when Dr. Brown was finished, despite the injunction of the moderator that there was to be no manifestation whatever of approval or disapproval.

The moderator followed the address of Dr. Brown by a statement of the procedure which would be employed in taking up the formal debate on the reports. The confusion which developed was largely the result of a shower of varying suggestions of slightly different lines of procedure the commissioners thought advisable.

When recess came it was practically decided that every speaker would have 10 minutes in which to debate the reports. One report was to be discussed by a speaker favorable to it, then by one of its adherents, and after this the third.

If any person in the Assembly had a proposition not coinciding with any of the three reports, he was to be given the opportunity of presenting his views after the others had concluded.

When the round had been made, the first report was to be taken up again, and this procedure repeated until the Assembly was ready to take a vote. Before the voting, Dr. William G. Wylie, of New York, who presented the majority report favorable to the seminary; Dr. John Davies, of Philadelphia, who presented the first unfavorable minority report; Dr. F. C. Monfort, of Cincinnati, the author of the second minority report, which was strongest in its accusations of heresy, and President Brown, of the seminary, were to be allowed ten minutes each for summing up their arguments.

"There is to be no lobbying or politics in this debate," said Moderator Stone, firmly. "I shal endeavor to be guided by the Spirit of God and my best Christian judgment, and I pray that you will do the same. I shall try to be fair. I shall try to favor no side above antoehr. If I make a ruling that may be questioned by you, I shall be glad to take you into my confidence and tell you exactly why I do it."

Southern Body Stirred by New Statement of Belief

The amended brief statement of belief was adopted by the assembly by a vote of 119 to 64.

A motion to adopt the ad interim committee's report on the statement of belief, as read by Dr. J. M. Wells, created a furor of discussion at Tuesday's session of the Southern Assembly.

The statement is a corrected form of that drawn up by last year's committee. After it was read, Dr. T. S. Knox, of Texas, opened the discussion by declaring first that it was wholly unnecessary.

"The adoption of this statement would make void all possibilities of a union between the three Presbyterian bodies," declared Dr. Knox. "The article is not only bad grammar but it is also bad theology."

Cries of shame followed Dr. Knox's speech.

"It is outrageous," declared Dr. McPheeters, "that such words should be uttered in a Presbyterian church."

Dr. A. P. Gregory, of Tennessee, spoke, declaring that the statement was badly needed. Dr. J. B. Works, of Texas, contradicted Dr. Knox's assertion that the change was not desired in the West, by stating thst it would be welcomed in that district.

Following other short addresses, the motion was tabled until the afternoon session.

The change in the basis of representation, which has become a law by the enactment of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, will increase materially the representation to future Assemblies.

The change means that in future the commissioners to the General Assembly shall be chosen as follows: Every Presbytery shall be entitled to elect one minister and one elder as commissioners, and all Presbyteries where the combined membership of ministers and communicants exceed 4,000 will be entitled to elect one minister and one elder additional. This ratio will continue with the addition of each four thousand members in the Presbytery.

Among the first features of the Assembly Tuesday morning was the fraternal messenger from the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church.

The "special order" for 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon was a report of the committee on foreign correspondence.

Beneficence Discussed.

Consideration of the report of the standing committee on systematic beneficence was resumed. The part of the report presented was with reference to the permanent committee of systematic beneficence.

The only item of the report that provoked discusison was that with reference to the restoration of the power of the permanent committee to nominate members and secretaries of the excutive committees of the Assembly. This power formerly belonged to the committee, but was taken from it at the Assembly of 1912. The report of the standing committee recommended the restoration of this power, but with the provision that it should not deprive any other member of the Assembly rimilar right.

Dr. W. M. F. Alexander opposed the restoration of this power, upon the ground that it would mean too much centralization of power; that in time the association of this committee with the executive committees might begei upon the part of members of the latter the disposition to bow to the former in order to receive nomination for the committees.

Clyce to the Defense.

Dr. T. S. Clyce met this opposoition with the statement that he had been a member of the Permanent Committee on Systematic Beneficence when it possessed the power under consideration and that there was no log rolling on the part of any one; further, that it is not likely there would be such at any time. He urged that the Assembly have more concentration of power in the transactions of its business.

The report of the committee was adopted and the power of the Permanent Committee was restored.

The time for uniting all Presbyterian churches is not yet ripe. This is the decision of the Southern Presbyterian Church, unanimous apparently. If there were any who opposed, they failed to voice their sentiment against such an overwhelming vote for the retention of the Southern church's individuality.

Report of the committee on overtures against uniting was adopted almost unanimously. It stated that the time was not just ripe for the uniting of the Southern church with other branches of the Presbyterian. The fact that negotiations are already under way between the Southern Presbyterian Church and the United ed, the present time appeared as inopportune for a discussion of union.

The beneficence committee's report recommended that the percentage for foreign missions be cut from 60 to 54 per cent; that home missions receive 27 instead of 21 per cent; Christian education and ministerial relief to receive 14 1-2 instead of 14 per cent, and Sunday school publications reduced from 4 to 3 1-2 per cent.

SECRET WEDDING ROMANCE CLIMAX

Ben McDonnold, a postoffice clerk, and his bride, who was Miss Haribel Colson, enjoyed a honeymoon of nearly two days before their friends found out what had happened. They were married Sunday, but it was not until to-day that the news went out and congratulations began coming in.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Colson, 257 Crumley Street, and the bridegroom a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. McDonnold, of College Park. They were married at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon by the Rev. V. C. Norcross at his residence, Druid Hills. The only attendants—and the only ones who knew of the marriage until to-day—were the bridegroom's brothers and sister, Hoke McDonnold, Paul McDonnold and Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Willingham.

It was not exactly a runaway affair, but was the next thing to it, for the young couple told their parents nothing about their intentions. The wedding was the culmination of a romance begun in Birmingham just before Christmas.

The bride's father is claim agent for the A., B. & A. Railroad, having moved to Atlanta only two months ago. McDonnold met Miss Colson while clerking in her father's office, but it was not known they were attached to one another.

But Colson moved to Atlanta—and so did McDonnold. He started wooing in earnest, and last Sunday he and Miss Colson brought their brief romance to the only logical conclusion. They are now at home with the bridegroom's family, waiting to fit out a home of their own in College Park.

FORMER ATLANTAN FOR U. S. PRINTER

WASHINGTON, May 20.—President Wilson, it was learned to-day, has about made up his mind to appoint W. V. Turley, of Chattanooga, Tenn., to the post of Public Printer, which pays $5,500 a year. Although there are a large number of candidates for this place, which is peculiarly a presidential appointment, the race some time ago narrowed down to a contest between Cornelius Ford, of Hoboken, N. J., and Turley.

The President is said to be personally in favor of Ford, but the many indorsements obtained and presented by the friends of Turley have greatly impressed the President.

Mr. Turley is a former Atlantan, having resided here in 1909, when he was engaged in theatrical publicity work for the Wells Syndicate as editor of The Pilot, a weekly theatrical magazine. Since then he has operated a job printing establishment in Chattanooga. Before coming to Atlanta he was city editor of The Chattanooga News and was with other Chattanooga papers. He also has done newspaper work in Washington. He is a member of the Chattanooga Typographical Union.

White City Park Now Open

GATE CITY GUARD RECEIVED BY PRESIDENT

Noted Atlanta Military Company Parades Washington Streets and Visits White House.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—With a battalion of the National Guard of the District of Columbia acting as escort and the band of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army heading the parade, the old Gate City Guard of Atlanta marched triumphantly up Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House this afternoon and was formally welcomed to the Capital by President Wilson. Included in the battalion of guardsmen which formed the escort to the famous Georgia contingent was the crack company of Washington Light Infantry, the showiest organization in the militia of the District.

Major J. F. Burke was in command of the Old Guard and the Georgia company made a brilliant showing in its fancy full dress uniforms.

White House Reception.

The parade began at the Continental Hotel, the headquarters of the visitors, and continued to the historic east entrance of the White House. Arrived there, the guardsmen were met by Senator Hoke Smith and Representative William Schley Howard of Georgia and taken into the east room, the scene of all state functions since the White House was erected. President Wilson, accompanied by Major Rhoads, his military aide, entered the room and the guardsmen were presented individually to the President.

Later in the afternoon the members of the Gate City Guard were taken to the American League baseball park, where they witnessed a series of exhibition drills by the cadet organizations from the District of Columbia. The guardsmen, for years crack drillers of the South, enjoyed the exhibition immensely.

To Baltimore Wednesday.

From the exhibition drill the members of the guard returned to their hotel. To-night they will go to a theater and early to-morrow morning they will leave for Baltimore, to be entertained by the Fifth Maryland Regiment.

The visitors arrived at 8 o'clock this morning over the Southern Railway and went at once to their hotel, which is close to the Capitol and the Union Station. There were no special arrangements for the morning entertainment, so most of them remained at the hotel in their fatigue uniforms. Some of them visited the Capitol and other points of interest, revisiting the scenes of their famous peace-making trip of 1879.

PHAGAN CASE IN READINESS FOR INDICTMENT

bringing to justice the foul villain who perpetrated this unparalleled crime. His freedom is a menace to the honor and life of every woman in our community.

"But no mistake must be made. Some of our most prominent men, and a few big-hearted women, have taken the initiative in contributing to the fund which obtains the best detective talent in America, and in the increasing of that fund we women have our opportunity.

Wants All to Contribute.

"Let every woman give something, however small the amount, and in the aggregation of these such a sum will be acquired as shall employ and reward all the legal and detective talent that has been so continuously and generously given, and will be given in the search for the criminal.

"To systematize this wholesale giving, let the women in all departments of endeavor—in offices, in plants, in stores or wherever women congregate, select one of their number to receive the individual contributions and send, as a whole, the amount they realize to The Georgian, with these instructions: 'For the Mary Phagan Investigation Fund.' Let the same plan be pursued in neighborhoods.

"Let us be up and doing!

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?

(Signed) "MRS. JAMES F. CARR."

Black Scores Burns Man.

Detective John Black, who has been working on the Phagan case in conjunction with Pinkerton Detective Harry Scott, Tuesday declared that Detective Tobie, the Burns man, was not justified in his charge that certain features of the mystery have been overlooked.

"Mr. Tobie has gone entirely too far in his statements," said Detective Black. "He doesn't know what has been done by detectives on this case, and doesn't know what evidence we have in our possession. We are not showing our hand to everyone who comes along. If he can show us some thing in this case that has been overlooked, then we'll think he knows what he is talking about, but unless he does show something, we'll attach no importance, whatever, to his statements."

Detective Scott declined to discuss the Burns detective's theory or position in the case. As to the Pinkerton's part in the affair, he said:

"We have worked this case from fully 500 different angles. Every possible phase and feature has been investigated. Nothing has been overlooked. The public has no idea of the many and varied angles that have been presented by this tragedy."

Lynn to Know His Fate Next Month

Alonzo L. Lynn's motion for a new trial, whereby he hopes to evade a life sentence for the killing of F. M. Hightower at the Lynn home in Laurens County, December 18, 1912, will be decided by the Supreme Court after its next opinion day in the middle of June.

The motion was argued Monday before Justices Atkinson, Evans and Hill. Solicitor General Stephens of Laurens County and Judge John S. Adams argued for the affirmation of the lower court's decree. Stephen P. New and George B. Davis, of Dublin, represented Lynn.

Hightower, a Confederate veteran, was found dead in the Lynn home. A Burns detective, employed by the State, ferreted out evidence and adduced a theory of conspiracy, resulting in the indictment of Lynn and his wife, Alice Lynn.

Mrs. Lynn admitted firing the shot which killed the veteran, but swore he had made improper proposals to her. After deliberating five days, the jury acquitted Mrs. Lynn, but found Lynn guilty of murder, recommending life imprisonment. Judge Hawkins imposed the full sentence.

Motion for a new trial by Lynn's attorneys was predicated upon 21 assumptions of error. Chief among them was the charge that the Grand Jury sat in unlawful session, that improper testimony was admitted to evidence and that the evidence was insufficient to convict. The detective secured most of his evidence from a dictograph put in Lynn's calle while he awaited indictment.

Miss Hanson Scoffs at 'Temptations of Stage'

Blames Publicity for Popular Idea of Its Evils

Beautiful Atlanta Leading Woman Strongly Advocates Drama as Profession for Women.

"The evils of the stage? They are just the same—and many times not so bad—as the evils of other professions. Stage life isn't any more of a temptation to young girls than other walks of life."

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook, or

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook.

Gladys Hanson, as she is known to fame, beautiful Atlanta actress who has just come back home for a six-weeks' vacation, stopped serving tea and leaned forward. She was at her country place out on Cleburne Avenue.

"The truth is this: The limelight is always turned, full force, on the stage when it is not on other professions. As soon as an actress does an imprudent or perhaps an unconventional thing, the news immediately spreads—and it gathers force as it spreads. Elsewhere there is less publicity, and therefore a better chance for covering things up, that's all."

Urges Stage for Girls.

Miss Hanson, who belongs to one of Georgia's oldest families, and who is in love with her art to her fingertips, has just finished a successful ten-months' season with David Belasco in "The Governor's Lady." In the six years she has been on the stage she has been wonderfully successful, having been with Frohman, Sothern and other big directors besides Belasco. She strongly advocates the stage as a profession for young women.

"There never have been such opportunities for capable young women as there are to-day," she declared, dropping a bit of lemon into a cup of tea, "and really it's almost nonsense to talk about stage evils and morals at all. The stigma that formerly attached to the theater is almost a thing of the past, for the simple reason that people have come more and more to realize that immorality is not confined to class, but is purely individual.

More Actors of Big Brains.

"Also year by year the stage is being more and more occupied by persons of big brains—big souls—people who are realities, and who are there because of the big 'call.'"

"And that 'call' is the great thing," she stressed. "I don't care what you say. When people follow their star, as it were—when they feel the burning of the 'spark' inside and set out to give it expression, it means the development of soul. And people of great souls can only be good.

"I grant this," she said, deprecatingly, "the world looks upon the stage from an outsider's standpoint, and, therefore, can only criticise from that angle, which may be entirely wrong.

"For instance, many times I have seen a man rush back to a dressing room, where the actress with whom he was to appear was in negligee and making up, to run over the lines in a coming scene. But I only wish that the public might see how in earnest it all is.

Had to Ignore Convention.

"The man is not sure of himself in the scene, and if he did not seize this moment, he might make a botch of the play, and he could not wait until the actress was all 'made up.'

"But, as they go over the lines they practically do not see each other—they are like two machines. The thought of everything is sunk in the play. He talks his lines in quick, high tones, and she comes in with hers to meet him. And the moment that is done he rushes out like mad to get ready to 'go on.'

"Don't you ever believe," Miss Hanson emphasized, "that the rules in practically all theaters are not strict. And in high-class houses it is practically the same as in your own home. The people are all big people—they're men and women—they're not silly nincompoops!

"Again, if a girl enters the profession, she can be sure that if she gets with a good director—and there are more good ones than otherwise—she is going to be pushed along to success—not only by her own effort, but by his—for he is just as anxious for her to make good as she is to make good herself.

Finds Splendid Associates.

"She will usually find a number of splendid women to associate with, too—if she'll keep her eyes open—and also a number of broad-minded men. There's where she may learn many things about her art—they will all help her—and that and working hard will get her her to the top if she has any 'possibilities' at all. If for no other reason, I would have been glad I had gone on the stage simply for the people I have met."

Miss Hanson expects to go abroad for the summer. She will return the latter part of August for rehearsals, being again with Belasco. She and Emma Dunn, one of her best friends, will again appear for a time in "The Governor's Lady," later taking up other work Mr. Belasco has not yet made public. While in Atlanta Miss Snook expects to be quite a great deal with her friends, a number of parties having been planned for her.

Calls Atlanta Hers, Too.

Speaking of Atlanta things, she said it almost made her angry—that is, it would if she wasn't so even-tempered, for which she took credit to herself—when she was out and people asked her how she liked "our" country club, or "our" city—or other things.

"Why, it's mine, too," she said. "I don't feel that just because I'm away in the winter this isn't my home. Why, I grew up here and I belong to the place! Of course, it's usually strangers, who don't know, who ask me things like that; but, all the same, it gives me a funny little feeling around my heart. I feel just like I ought to be asking them instead, being"—she hesitated and laughed—"as I was here first!"

Ousted Official Holds City Cash

WASHINGTON, GA., May 20.—Whether the Mayor or City Treasurer is the legal custodian of city funds will be argued at Warrenton to-day before Judge B. F. Walker, of Toombs Circuit, on a writ of mandamus brought by the Mayor and Council of Washington against City Treasurer F. H. Ficklen.

Mayor Favor claims that he has the right to say when and for what purposes the city finances shall be used, while Treasurer Ficklen holds to a contrary view. When $30,000 of bond money for city paving was placed in the hands of Treasurer Ficklen, Mayor Favor issued vouchers against the fund aggregating $21,000, which the City Treasurer refused to pay until he was advised of the purpose of the disbursement and otherwise consulted in the matter.

Upon this refusal the City Council declared the office of City Treasurer vacant and ordered the Treasurer to place the city funds in certain depositories at once. He refused.

The court's aid has now been invoked by the Mayor and Council to require the Treasurer to surrender the city's cash.

OBITUARY NOTICE.

Mrs. Katie Heath, widow of H. G. Heath, died Monday night at her home, 62 Connally Street. She is survived by a daughter, Miss Willie Heath, and two sisters, Mrs. H. E. Bray and Mrs. Willie Malley. The funeral will be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday night at the residence. Interment at Gainesville, Ga., Wednesday.

Nurses Hear Talks For Better Health

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—Dr. W. H. Doughty, dean of the medical department of the University of Georgia, delivered the address of welcome at the opening of the seventh annual convention of the Georgia Association of Graduate Nurses here to-day. Mrs. E. S. Tupman, of Atlanta, responded. The convention will continue through to-morrow.

"Educational Prevention in Infant Mortality" was the subject of an address this afternoon by Miss G. B. Knipp, executive secretary of the American Association for the Prevention of Infant Mortality. Miss Ella P. Crandall, executive secretary of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, made an address this afternoon on "Public Health Nursing."

BIG BARBECUE GIVEN FOR JUDGES AT ROME

ROME, GA., May 20.—Twenty-five Georgia lambs, 100 chickens and 50 gallons of Brunswick stew were served at an old-fashioned barbecue given to-day by Wright Willingham at his home, in honor of Judge William T. Newman. Judge Moses Wright and Federal and Superior Court officials. There were 500 persons in attendance.

WALKER SHOWS IMPROVEMENT; MAY RECOVER

MACON, GA., May 20.—Another slight sluggish action of B. Sanders Walker's kidneys to-day gave the attending physicians still more hope for his ultimate recovery. Walker's pulse is 118 and his respiration 30. He is still very weak.

MACON, GA., May 20.—After having made all, even minute, preparations to die, under the belief that his death was inevitable and a matter of only a few days, B. Sanders Walker, Jr., the banker and real estate operator, is now given the hope that possibly he will survive the accidental taking of a bichloride of mercury tablet by mistake for a headache pill.

From Thursday until Monday Mr. Walker's kidneys were paralyzed, but then there was a slight manifestation, sufficient to justify the attending physicians in holding out a little encouragement to the man who for five days has regarded himself as on the very brink of the grave. Two physicians have been at Mr. Walker's bedside almost from the minute when the terrible pains in his stomach showed that he had taken poison instead of an aspirin tablet, and they have employed heroic remedies. From all parts of the United States have come about 40 telegrams from persons who were similarly poisoned or from doctors and nurses suggesting methods of treatment.

Nurse Suggests Remedy.

One such message came from a young woman nurse at Johns Hopkins Hospital, suggesting that a remedy of flax seed and olive oil might save the fast ebbing life of the dying man, as it had her own when she had her own when she had been in a similar condition. If he lives, Walker will owe his life to this young woman, of whose existence he was not even aware—a person whom he would not know were he to meet her face to face.

This remedy has been applied and has given Walker a fighting chance for life. Euremic poisoning had already set in when the doctors decided to adopt the suggestion of the young woman, and unless relief had been immediate Walker would soon have succumbed.

Visitors Now Excluded.

All persons, except his wife, doctors and nurses, are now kept from Mr. Walker. The physicians say that the announcement to him that he might survive, after he had gone through the ordeal of preparing for death, brought on a nervous attack and intensified his weakness. It was believed necessary, as well as ethical, however, to tell the stricken man that he had a chance to live.

B. S. Walker, Sr., of Monroe, the father; Cliff M. Walker, Solicitor General of the Western Circuit, who is a brother, and other relatives are at the residence.

Mrs. Walker is making a fight that is the wonder of her friends. In her husband's company she has been ever brave and cheerful. Not once has she presented anything but a courageous front.

Walker's Nerve Unbroken.

Walker's first thought when told by the doctors that death was sure to result from his mistaken dose was of his business; his second, of his friends. He immediately sent for his business associates, and in a short while had given definite intructions concerning the final disposition of all his affairs.

Following the winding up of his business, he called in his friends, announced his doom and gave them one and all a cheerful farewell.

His cool nerve during the strain of the last three days has been the cause of comment upon the days when, as a star athlete for the University of Georgia, he time and again demonstrated the fact that he was possessed of an indomitable spirit that held him up when his teammates were breaking in their support.

Still on Brink of Eternity.

The friends who knew him a few days ago as the picture of health and a perfect specimen of manhood can hardly realize that following his tragic error in taking bichloride of mercury tablets instead of the headache medicine, he has been doomed to death, and that, although hope is now expressed for his recovery, he is even yet standing upon the brink of eternity.

Policeman Hit by Auto Nabs Driver

City Detective L. F. Carter is being congratulated by his friends for the agility and coolness which he displayed Monday night when he narrowly escaped being run down by an automobile driven by J. A. Brigman, of Decatur.

Carter was crossing Forsyth at Marietta Street, and when struck by the machine, sprang up on the hood, where he perched until the car was stopped. Carter immediately arrested Brigman and charged him with reckless driving. Brigman was released without bail.

Court Rules Clubs Can't Sell Liquor

The Court of Appeals, in a decision handed down Tuesday, held that it was illegal for an employee of a social club to sell whisky, even though he did not derive any profit from the sale. The decision was in the case of Ike Rothchild, steward of the Brunswick Oglethorpe Club.

The court said: "It is no defense that the accused sold the liquor as an employée of a social club. Intoxicating liquor can not be sold in the State by an individual or company as a beverage."

Mrs. Hutchins 'Poor' On $2,000 a Month

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Mrs. Rosa Keeling Hutchins, widow of Stilson Hutchins, millionaire newspaper owner, has filed suit in another attempt to obtain one-third of the income from her husband's personal estate. According to her petition, she is in "straitened circumstances," although she has $2,000 a month from the estate.

The personal property left by Mr. Hutchins is estimated at $1,155,685, while the realty value is fixed at $3,347,000. Distribution has been delayed by disputes among the heirs and the filing of a caveat by Lee Hutchins, a son.

Wife Advertised as "Dead" Seeks Divorce

ST. LOUIS, May 20.—Mrs. Anna Meehan has sued John P. Meehan, a salesman, for divorce, charging among a long list of alleged abuses that he advertised in St. Louis papers on Easter Sunday announcing her death and that the notice of funeral arrangements would be given. She says that when she accused him of inserting the "ad" he laughed and refused to deny it.

She also charges that during their eleven years of married life they moved fifteen times and also that ten of the movings were the result of suits for rent.

Express Profits for 1912 Eight Millions

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Express companies for the year 1912 did a total business of $81,545,658, with expenses aggregating $73,255,682, leaving a total net revenue of $8,289,972, according to a statement made by the Interstate Commerce Commission today. Dividends declared from current income amounted to $4,625,832 and from surplus $2,823,785.

The Pullman Car Company, in reports to the commission, placed its total business for the year 1912 at $37,090,414, with expenses amounting to $26,256,695. Cars were operated over 123,000 miles of road. The physical property is valued at $148,780,453.

'Rosy Cheek Teachers Excel Brainy Ones'

NEW YORK, May 20.—President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education told the Associate Alumnae of Normal College that he would rather "a teacher had the pulchritude of red cheeks than the wisdom of an encyclopedia."

"A certain type of teacher," said he, "seems to think she must study all summer, but she would be a better teacher if she spent her vacation rowing a boat or playing golf. There is no reason why teachers should be divorced from health."

Gov. Slaton Speaker At A. and M. Finals

Governor-elect John M. Slaton is expected to return home Tuesday from Americus, Ga., where on Monday night he delivered the principal address at the annual commencement exercises of the Third District Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Diplomas were presented by John M. Collum, the superintendent. An exhibition of the industrial work of the college preceded the graduating exercises.

Governor-elect Slaton and the other speakers were entertained with a barbecue dinner after the exercises.

Mexico Buys Field Guns From French

PARIS, May 20.—The Mexican Government has ordered twelve batteries of field guns and one hundred mitrailleuses from French manufacturers.

Gen. Mondragon, the Mexican War Minister, is quoted as saying that he chose French makes because the Bulgarians proved their superiority over the Krupp guns used by the Turks.

Peary to Get High Honors in France

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—According to Marcelin Boule, Vice President of the French Geographical Society, Admiral Peary is to be paid the same honors as were granted to Amundsen by the French society.

The fact that no preparation has been made is due to the absence from Paris of the society's President, Prince Roland Bonaparte.

Schwab Admits He Formed Steel Pools

NEW YORK, May 20.—Charles M. Schwab, former president of the United States Steel Corporation, today admitted under cross-examination that he had formed many pools in the steel trade, but that he had arranged none since the formation of the United States Steel Corporation.

Schwab, now president of the Bethlehem Steel Company, was questioned by Judge Dickinson, one of counsel for the Government in its suit to declare the Steel Corporation a trust.

PENN. R. R. HEAD PRAISES ATLANTA

Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was in Atlanta a short while Tuesday. His visit, however, had no business significance, being merely a pleasure jaunt which Mr. and Mrs. Rea are taking.

H. W. Miller, assistant to the president of the Southern Railway, entertained Mr. Rea at luncheon at the Piedmont Driving Club, following an automobile ride around the city.

"No, there's no business connection at all with my trip," said Mr. Rea to a reporter. "I am just going about on a little pleasure trip, accompanied by my real boss, Mrs. Rea, and am just visiting a few of my friends."

Mr. Rea praised Atlanta highly and foresaw for the city a great future.

The hurriedly arranged luncheon proved a delightful affair despite the haste. Those present were Captain J. W. English, John W. Grant, President Wilmer L. Moore, of the Chamber of Commerce; Colonel Robert J. Lowry, Frank Hawkins, E. H. Coapman, vice president and general manager of the Southern Railway Company, whose headquarters are at Washington, and Mr. Miller.

Mrs. Miller held an informal reception for Mrs. Rea at the Piedmont Driving Club.

Mrs. Longstreet Seeks Vindication

The following telegram from Washington was received to-day by The Georgian from Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, regarding her hearing before the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Postroads relative to the Gainesville postmastership:

I did not go before the Senate Comimttee on Postoffices and Postroads to prevent the confirmation of Mrs. Ham. I went before that committee to have my record vindicated. I went there to call on the majority party, in recommendin g my successor for confirmation, to have the manhood and courage to say that I had been kicked out of office by the sinister influences of the invisible government which is doing business in Georgia under the name of the Georgia Railway and Power Company and to say that my record in office is above reproach. I challenge Southern manhood to give me that vindication. What answer to the challenge of Southern honor will they make?

"Knightliest of a knightly race,
Who since the days of old
Have kept the lamps of chivalry
Alight in hearts of gold."

I believe that answer will ring true. But if the Southern manhood which is in the saddle today should fail, under the pressure of the money power, the honor of the minority party will not fail. The men in whose veins courses the blood of a conquering race—a race that through the long centuries has mounted the thrones of kings, taken empires and builded republics—will waken that vindication on our Atlantic shores, to follow the morning sun to its setting beyond our Pacific seas, until a nation shall read in the shining track that the woman whom the warhorse of the Confederacy dowered with his love and a name that will live forever—the woman who was honored by Theodore Roosevelt and trusted by William Howard Taft—is true as tempered steel and pure as refined gold.

SEEK FARM HOME FOR NEEDY FAMILY

Woman Offers to Do Manual Work to Give Boys Benefit of Country Life.

Miss Minnie VanEpps, district agent of the Associated Charities, is looking for a country home for a strong, Western woman who walked into her office with two boys, a cash capital of 10 cents and a recollection of many hardships.

The woman is Mrs. May Lang, 31 years old. Her boys are Aurellus Ragland, 7 years old, and Milton Ragland, 5 years old. Mrs. Lang says she can milk a cow, scrub floors, cook, sew, hitch up horses and mules, plow and hoe, cut wood and do anything else on a farm. She is a Western woman, in good health and willing to do any kind of hard work to provide a home for herself and children.

Last winter Mrs. Lang left Skull Valley, Ariz., with tickets for New Orleans and $2 in cash. She came to Atlanta in February and went at once to Miss VanEpps. Work was provided in an Atlanta factory, but Mrs. Lang's wages were only $3 a week.

Mrs. Lang was left an orphan at 12. She was adopted, but her foster father died. Then his brother married her, but he died in a few years. Again she married, but her second husband died. For five years Mrs. Lang has eked out a scant living for herself and children by performing manual labor.

"I can do anything, even the hardest work on the farm," she said to Miss VanEpps. "If only I can get out in the country, where my two sons can breathe the pure air and get enough to eat, I will be happy. I will do the hardest work they give me, and be contented. I want a home for my boys."

References Mrs. Lang gave to the Associated Charities have been traced by Miss VanEpps, and replies to letters of inquiry indicate Mrs. Lang has been a good and a hard-working woman.

DENTAL TESTS IN CITY'S SCHOOLS PROBABLE

Board Conducting Experiments Will Make Strong Recommendation for Examinations.

Dental examinations of all children in Atlanta public schools will be permanently provided for unless V. H. Kriegshaber, of the Chamber of Commerce, and representatives of the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons are too optimistic over their forthcoming report.

Monday marked the beginning and Tuesday the end of dental examinations in the Bell Street and Crew Street Schools by representatives of the joint committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons. It was the third of a series of tests begun last September at the request of the Chamber of Commerce and continued in January, to prove the beneficial effects of sound teeth on scholarship and attendance, general health and moral character.

V. H. Kriegshaber, from the Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. S. W. Foster, Dr. C. M. Barnwell, Dr. DeLos Hill and Dr. M. D. Huff, from the dental society, make up the joint committee.

Dentists Meet Tuesday Night.

Dr. Hill and Dr. Foster, who made the actual tests, will meet with the other dentists Wednesday night and make up the final report to be submitted to the Chamber of Commerce, whence it will be sent to the Board of Education with recommendations.

"Statistics have not been compiled, but from results already noted we believe the full data will warrant a recommendation that dental inspections in the public schools be made permanent," said Mr. Kriegshaber.

Following published results of benefits of five years' medical inspection in the public schools, the Chamber of Commerce last September asked the Board of Education for permission to make experimental dental tests. The dentists agreed to inspect two schools for a year, without fees, to prove the efficacy of the system.

At the first tests pupils were provided with written notices to parents of needed dental treatment. When these notices resulted in securing treatment, the operating dentists signed the slips, which were returned to the examiners. Additional signed slips were collected Monday and Tuesday after the final tests. Records of pupils in attendance, deportment and scholarship, both those who acted on the suggestions and those who did not, will be compared, and the results, with other figures, will make up the dentists' report.

Finish Report Tuesday.

"We hope to get this report finished Tuesday night," said Mr. Kriegshaber. "We are sure it will warrant the recommendation that dental examinations be made permanent. Then if the Board of Education approves our recommendation, we want to submit it to the Finance Committee of the City Council Thursday morning, if possible, and secure the necessary appropriation and authorization for permanent dental inspections in all Atlanta public schools."

In the Crew Street and Bell Street Schools nearly 500 pupils were examined. Dr. Foster and Dr. Hill were surprised at getting through in two days, since they expected three would be required.

Another Reason Why Socialist Vote Grows

GENEVA, N. Y., May 20.—An extensive obituary notice appeared in the newspapers here recounting the virtues of Fido, the pet dog af Henry A. Zobrist, a capitalist. Mr. Zobrist called a specialist from New York and paid $300 to have the dog treated, but Fido took a relapse and died.

Mr. Zobrist had provided $20,000 in his will for Fido, and had offered an endowment of $3,000 a year to the Sand Hill Cemetery Corporation for permission to bury the dog in the graveyard.

Fido lay in state in an expensive coffin banked with flowers.

COLUMBUS, GA., May 20.—For the purpose of eliminating the blind tiger and enforcing the provisions of the laws regulating the sale of whisky in Russell County, Alabama, a law enforcement league has been organized in Girard, with Sam Kaufman, a wholesale liquor dealer, as president.

The wholesale and retail liquor dealers claim that the blind tiger is hurting their legitimate business. Eighteen liquor dealers of the town are members of the organization.

RESINOL A SAFE SKIN TREATMENT

You need never hesitate to use Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. There is nothing in them to injure the tenderest surface. Resinol is a doctor's prescription which proved so successful for eczema, ringworm and other itching, burning, unsightly skin eruptions, that it has been used by other physicians all over the country for eighteen years. No other treatment for the skin now before the public can show such a record of professional approval.

In a single month, two hundred and twenty-one doctors wrote us indorsing the Resinol preparations. They would not have done so if they had not found them highly valuable in their own practice. They prescribe Resinol freely, confident that its soothing, healing action is brought about by agents so bland and gentle as to be suited to the most delicate skin—even of a tiny baby.

The nearest druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1) and Resinol Soap (25c) or you can try them free by writing to Dept. 23-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for liberal sample of each.

J. Wylie Smith's Own Story

Stirring Episodes in Long Flight

Career in Mexican Army Thrilling

This is the second installment of the story of J. Wylie Smith, the refugee president of the defunct Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who, after evading extradition during two years of service in the insurrecto army of General Orozco, in Mexico, returned to Atlanta to stand trial because he dying with tuberculosis—a phantom of his former self.

By J. WYLIE SMITH.

I was given a room over the warden's office. I had credit at the commissary. You have to furnish your own bed clothing and buy any food you get except etole, a sort of gruel, bif stik—furnished to you raw—and frijole, beans cooked in pure water at every meal. Grease and salt are unknown.

I remember a hideous tragedy one day as a result of the practice of allowing the prisoners to cook their own meals in their cells. A peon, held for murder, was found dead in bed one morning, his charcoal pot still giving off its fumes over him.

Soon I was allowed to go downtown without a guard. The discipline in Mexican prisons is lax. Once when the prisoners were working on the waterworks a number of them stole away and got drunk. When they returned the only punishment that was administered was that they were not allowed to return to work but were forced to play. They suffered, though. They hated to give up their wages. I knew a number of them who preferred prison life to freedom.

"Neda en calles menos Americanos y toras," spoke a Mexican who was reclining under the shade of a tree in his yard as I passed down the street on one of my daily strolls from the prison.

His meaning was that nobody ever comes out on the street between 12 o'clock and 2:30 but Americans and bulls—a statement which has the weight of a proverb in Mexico. All business houses are closed between those hours. Indeed it was a hot sultry day and I was regretting that I had come out when suddenly I was startled out of my laziness by a sharp piercing bark.

My footsteps had aroused a bull who was lying in the shade of a shrub, not a Mexican bull but a Boston bull terrier. He came towards me belligerent but I spoke to him kindly, so glad to see anything so truly American. And as I walked on that dog followed.

Truly only an American and a bull were on the streets and later only an American and a bull were together at another place, the presence of the bull changing the trend of fate from savage death to the greatest triumph of my life.

But that was later. However, the interesting and important things which led up to it began to absorb my attention. For the first time a personal interest was aroused in me in the revolutionary movement.

I had made the acquaintance of about 75 revolutionary leaders who were confined in the penitentiary. Walking with General Rojas, the most prominent of them, one day our conversation grew intimate.

"I would think that you revolutionists would be shot," I said to him.

"Do you know why I am here?" he asked. Before I could speak he answered his own question.

"I said that General Orozco was a damned rascal."

"All of us would be shot," he continued, "but Orozco has plans of his own."

Orozco's Plan.

"He is planning a new revolution. On March he will resign as commander of the Federal forces in Chihuahau. He is confining his staff here so he will have them ready when he needs them.

"The moment he insurges I will be freed, and I will take you with me."

My interest in the plans of the revolutionists immediately became intense. I was having an easy time but things were getting monotonous. I did not know how long I would be held a prisoner nor how much chance I had of escaping extradition. My fighting blood was up. Added to my fear of being taken back to Atlanta and being tried was the ire aroused by the treachery of my pursuers, like Franke I was determined to outwit them. Then there is nothing in the world like Anglo-Saxon freedom.

Then the strangest and most romantic event in my whole experience took place. I was the only American in prison and something of a curiosity. People often came to look at me, and I desired to avoid them as much as possible. But the warden came to me one day and said that two American women were in his office to see me.

Puzzled but greatly interested I hurried down. I gazed at them, unable to recognize either, but I carefully noted that they were handsomely dressed. They said they were interested in my case because I was an American and they wanted to help me. When I told them I had no lawyer they said they would look after that. My clothes were washed in the prison, but not starched. One of the women arranged to have them starched and laundered out in town. They they left without giving any information about themselves.

A few days later, January 26, 1912, my extradition papers arrived and it looked like the jig was up. I was absolutely ignorant of Mexican law and I hardly expected any of my new friends to come to my aid with sufficient funds to hire a competent attorney.

Help at Last—From a Woman.

As mysteriously as she had first come to me one of the beautiful woman returned. With her were two fine looking Mexicans of the clentifico (aristocratic) class. They were lawyers.

Francisco Cardero was an ex-justice of the Supreme Court and a supporter of Madero. Guillermo Porras was ex-Lieutenant Governor and a Diaz enthusiast. I learned later that they were among the highest legal authorities in the State.

Porras took active charge of my case and looked over the extradition papers. He said they were full of flaws but that he did not think I could get justice in Chihuahua on account of the opposition to his politics. So he had the case transferred to Jaurez and went there to prosecute it.

The woman came to me again and I asked her why she had taken such an interest in my case.

"You are an American; so am I," she said. "You have a wife and child to be saved (for I had told her of my family); I have no one in the world to care for."

I found that she was a somewhat notorious woman in Chihuahua and I also learned from other sources than herself that she had paid each of those lawyers $400 in gold to defend me. Her name was Vivian Sinclair.

They won the case through unseen forces, at least to me.

On the night of January 30 the people of Jaurez went to sleep under the seemingly peaceful rule of Madero. They awoke the next morning at daybreak—Mexicans always begin fighting at daybreak—to find a band of revolutionists in possession of everything. They looted the post-office and the customs house, burning all the papers in a bonfire in the streets.

My extradition papers were among them.

I have often thought that Porras knew what was going to happen and I was just as grateful to him as though he had won the case in court.

I heard just before I left Mexico that he had been executed by Madero Constitutionalists near Porral, Chihuahua. I have written for verification.

Only 85 strong the new insurrectos started toward Chihuahua to storm the jail. They arrived on February 2 and at daybreak the next morning began storming the jail.

Such grit I have never seen, before or since. Those Mexicans are slow starting and they always stop at dark they have absorbed the superstition from the Yaqui Indian that the soul leaves the body after dark. It is hard to get them out of their houses at night.

The Fight Begins.

Clinging to the tops of houses and hiding behind fences they began a most vicious and effective attack. They picked off every guard who showed himself on that wall. I was where I could get a good view and every now and then I would see a Federal plug an insurrecto who was lying flat on a house roof like sticking a sharp stick in the back of a toad. One after another were wriggling to death after such shots. There were 700 men defending the jail and defeat for the insurrectos was imminent when a guard had his head split by a bullet that came through a loop hole. The soldier rolled down a flight of steps and landed some twenty feet away at the feet of the Warden, his ghastly face turned upward.

"Stop the fighting," shrieked the Warden, and he turned to General Rojas for help.

"They want me," replied General Rojas. "Free me and the firing will stop in five minutes."

The Warden would not consent, but the fighting continued so fierce he consented to allow Rojas to see the Governor with a guard of five men.

The visit to the Governor was a mere formality. He refused the pardon. But on the return to the jail Rojas, walking a few paces in front of his guard, turned a corner ahead of them at the corner of Calle Liberstad and Calle Tercera and took to his heels.

"Halt," shouted the guard, and they raised their guns.

But they were covered by a band of insurrectos before they could shoot.

My heart jumped with joy when the news reached the prison. I felt that I soon would be able to join him. But my blood was chilled the next day by that most horrible of all features of warfare—the shooting of a traitor.

General Orozco came down from Jaurez next day. He wanted Rojas free, but to make a show of enforcing authority he ordered the five guards shot as traitors, the finding of the courtmartial being that they had purposely allowed Rojas to escape. No one knows what cruelty a Mexican can resort to.

Rojas was as good as his word. The firing stopped before his guard returned to the jail. Eagerly did I observe and seek information as to the skirmishes and maneuvers around Chihuahua. The story of Rojas' first victory was typically Mexican.

Captain Mendoza had led the attack on the jail. He was the most unusual looking man I have ever seen and as we were closely associated together thereafter I became very much interested in his odd personality. He was six feet four inches in height but he lost two inches of his size in a stoop in his shoulders. His hair and eye lashes were raven black and his eyes were a greenish gray that shined with an uncanniness. But the oddest thing about him was his mustache, which was a brilliant red. He was as active as a cat and the most wicked man I have ever seen.

When Rojas escaped his plan was to attack the jail and free us all. But Mendoza had retreated out from the city. The reason Mexican revolutions last so long is that an army never will follow up a victory.

Out from Chihuahua Mendoza, with about 25 men, was captured by Colonel Sevrin, of Madero's forces. When Rojas heard of it he declared that Mendoza had freed him and that he was going to the rescue.

With only 260 men, while Sevrin had 700, Rojas began a ruse. Approaching Sevrin after it was too dark for him to tell the number of the revolutionists, Rojas went into camp in plain view. It is the custom to have a camp fire for every ten men. Rojas built about 200 fires. He had his men blow bugles over a long line.

The strategy was successful. Under a flag of truce Rojas sent an ultimatum to Sevrin at daybreak next morning that he must surrender Mendoza or be annihilated. Sevrin surrendered Mendoza. And Mendoza became a colonel under Rojas, the two marching toward Jaurez gathering men as they went. It really was like Napoleon's return from Elba.

$120,000 NOW IN HAND, BUT CITY WANTS MORE

Chairman W. G. Humphrey, of the Council Finance Committee, said Tuesday that the maximum amount of new money to be apportioned in June would be $120,000. This includes all increases in revenue, he explained.

The adoption of the Whitehall Street regrading plan and other projects that developed at the meeting of Council Monday would require an expenditure of more than twice that amount. Council's action in calling on the Finance Committee to provide $30,000 for the Whitehall Street work practically assures the beginning of that project this year, but advocates of other much needed improvements will suffer bitter disappointment.

Candler Anticipates Veto.

Declaring that the form of the resolution presented by the Streets Committee, providing for the Whitehall Street work, invited a veto, Alderman John S. Candler said:

"But I am going to vote for it now and after it is vetoed."

The School Board wants $75,000 for an English-Commercial Girls' High School building. The Grady Hospital board got $25,000 for a nurses' dormitory in January and they declare it will take $25,000 more to complete the building. Chairman Orville Hall, of the Streets Committee, insisted that $50,000 was necessary for new streets. All departments want additional appropriations.

Not Enough to Go Around.

In view of this situation Council adopted Councilman Albert Thomson's resolution creating a special committee of ten councilmen and five citizens to investigate the advisability of a bond issue. Mayor Pro Tem Warren will announce this committee within a few days.

On one matter Council was unanimous. Every one voted aye overruling Mayor Woodward's scorching veto of the fire department probe committee's report vindicating Chief Cummings of the charges of graft and corruption. Council Charles W. Smith made a vigorous speech defending the committee against Mayor Woodward's attack.

Alderman James R. Nutting endeavored to settle the Police Board row over the authority of Chief Beavers to promote subordinates by putting through an ordinance giving all heads of departments power to name their assistants.

Police Deadlock Stands.

Mayor Pro Tem Warren, opposing the ordinance, declared it was introduced for the purpose of politics and that it would reduce board members to mere figureheads.

Alderman Nutting replied that Mayor Pro Tem Warren's attitude was the most palpable sort of politics.

The ordinance was referred to the Ordinance Committee. The Police Board's tangle caused by a tie vote over the right of the chief to promote subordinates remains unsettled.

A surprise to some of the members was the vote sustaining the veto of Mayor Woodward of the dog muzzling ordinance. Mayor Woodward ridiculed the ordinance as absurd and Council sustained his veto by a vote of 15 to override and 9 against. It takes a two-thirds vote to set aside a veto.

AGED FLOOD SUFFERERS FINISHING LONG WALK

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Their money having given out at Harrisburg, Pa., after they had been forced to leave their home at Steubenville, Ohio, by the floods, Albert Price, aged 67, and Sadie, his wife, aged 59, set out a-foot for Richmond, Va., where they have a brother, and have reached Washington en route.

Knee Breeches? Why Not for U. S. Envoy?

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 20.—The Daily Citizen, the official labor organ, says in an editorial:

"It is possible to admire tremendously the Republican simplicity of America without understanding the objection of the new Ambassador to wearing knee breeches. What is there in them offensive to Democratic sentiment? After all John Burns wears them on occasion and with George Washington they were the habitual garment.

"Of course it is not everybody who can boast a leg and it is just possible that Mr. Page's repugnance to knee breeches may be founded on better reasons than the world can wot of."

Loss of Cat Costs University $100,000

MIDDLETOWN, May 20.—The story of how Wesleyan University lost a bequest of $100,000 or more because students stole a pet cat for dissecting purposes a dozen or more years ago was revealed when the will of Miss Margaret Van Deursen, who died a few days ago, was filed. Miss Van Deursen was a great lover of cats. When one to which she was attached disappeared one day, she was grieved. A large reward was offered for its recovery, but it was learned that students hunting for specimens for the biological laboratory had taken it.

Troops Mutiny Over French Military Bill

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Serious mutinous uprisings, due to the proposed extension of the military term from two years to three, are occurring in the ranks of the French Army.

The war office to-day received dispatches from frontier points which stated that dangerous consequences may follow if the Government persists in putting through the bill.

In several instances barracks have been burned.

British Carry Coal for American Navy

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Paymaster John S. Higgins, U. S. N., appearing before the Senate Committee on territories said that practically all of the 250,000 tons of coal shipped annually for Pacific Coast Navy use was carried in British bottoms.

He said that the opening of the Alaska coal fields the subject under consideration by the committee would establish a Pacific supply.

GIRL IN DISTRICT 4 GOES TO TOP IN PONY CONTEST

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook now enjoys the distinction of having gathered more votes than any of the other contestants in The Georgian and American pony outfit contests. She has 40,340 votes.

Miss Cook is in District Four, where the hottest kind of a race is in progress. At the end of last week Miss Florence Greenoe had the lead with 30,950 votes. Now she has 32,320, but even this gain was not enough to keep her in the lead.

Frank Ison, Jr., had a big lead in District No. 5, but Richard Rainey is making gains and promises to be a dangerous competitor.

How great is the interest in the pony contest from out in the State is shown by the publication of the addresses of the Georgia boys and girls who are in the race. Lithonia, Chipley, Macon, Social Circle, Savannah, Columbus, Barnesville, Gainesville, Washington, Quitman, Tennille, Waycross and Rome are among the towns represented.

There still is a large number of boys and girls with just 1,000 votes, as all the contestants have this at the start, there is no telling but that one of the winners may come from among these. As yet no one of the boys and girls has a sufficient lead to discourage competitors.

A few more days remain in which nominations can be made. After May 31 the lists will be closed and those entered by that time will run it out among themselves.

Names and the standing of contestants in the various districts follow:

Saloonist in Ireland Indicted in Georgia

MACON, GA., May 20.—Although he has been in Ireland for five years, Hugh Devlin, a former well-known resident of Macon, has been indicted by four successive grand juries for violating the prohibition law. Sheriff Hicks disclaims any idea of going to Ireland to serve the warrants.

The saloon still is owned by Devlin and operated in his name, and when witnesses testify that they bought liquor there and can not identify the bartender, the grand juries indict the proprietor.

If Devlin ever returns to Macon, he will have considerable explanation to make to the courts.

SOLDIERS GUARD INAUGURATION IN CUBA

Revolutionary Outbreak Feared at Induction of Menocal to Succeed President Gomez.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, May 20.—Rigid military precautions were taken here to-day to prevent any revolutionary outbreaks upon the occasion of the inauguration of Juan Mario Menocal, who succeeds Senor Gomez as President of Cuba. All principal streets were patrolled by troops and batteries of machine guns were placed at strategetic points.

As General Menocal was formerly commander-in-chief of the Cuban army sentiment exists for him in military circles and there is no fear of a mutinous disturbance.

General Menocal is a conservative. His election caused grave fears on account of the bitterness manifested by the Liberals. An attempt was made to have the election declared unconstitutional, but it failed.

The ceremonies to-day took on unusual interest because of the part played by the United States. A special mission came to this city from Washington, representing President Wilson.

A new era is promised for Cuba under the administration of General Menocal, who is avowedly pro-American. One of the chief aims of the new President will be to induce fresh foreign capital to come here.

General Menocal sent the following message to the people of the United States:

"I have stated many times, and I now take advantage of the opportunity to repeat that as Chief Executive of the Cuban Republic my energies will be devoted to fostering and cementing still more closely the friendly ties binding Cuba to the United States."

Head of Brenau Done Injustice by Report

An Atlanta friend of Dr. T. J. Simmons, president of Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., has pointed out an error published on Saturday, May 17, relative to a news item sent from Rome, Ga.

Max Meyerhardt, city attorney of Rome, by letter informed Dr. Simmons that the old Conservatory of Music, formerly connected with Shorter College and owned by Dr. Simmons, had been declared unsafe and insanitary, and suggested that it either be repaired or removed. Dr. Simmons had, three days before receipt this letter, given instructions to demolish the building.

The report as to the summons of Dr. Simmons before the City Council or in Police Court was incorrect.

Dr. Simmons is one of the leading educators in Georgia and the South, and is a man of whom both Rome and Gainesville have cause to be proud for the work he has done in the interest of higher education.

Serbs and Greeks Fix New Boundaries

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Servia and Greece have entered a territorial alliance with Bulgaria, it is stated in a telegram from Athens to-day.

This message stated that the two countries had entered an agreement respecting the boundaries of Turkish territory to be acquired by both, and have bound each other to support the agreement with arms if Bulgaria objects.

Peace Likely to Come Slowly.

BERLIN, May 20.—Dispatches received to-day from the various European capitals indicate that the Turco-Balkan peace conference in London may be a drawn-out affair. Some predict that it will last at least three months.

Developed in Bedford cord or ratine, smartly fashioned in a fashionable cutaway model—and beautifully tailored. Lined with splendid quality messaline silk to match. Tans, blues and greys.

In addition to this lot we have the suits advertised for the first time Sunday. These are in plain navy blue and black serges, white Bedford cords with black or colored stripes and fancy mixtures. Values $25 to $35, for $12.85.

Lovely New Waists $4.95

Actual values $6, $7 to $8.50

Sixty and nine waists that registered to-day should be gone to-morrow. Their maker supplies us regularly—identical copies of some of the waists have sold here at $7 to $8.50. The other styles will be shown for the first time to-morrow.

Materials are white embroidered crepes, voiles, marquisettes and lingeries. Some with high necks and long sleeves, some with low necks, some with the new flat Gaby collars. Possibly a dozen styles in all—each a dream of sheer loveliness. Not a waist worth less than $6; many worth $7 to $8.50. Choice $4.95.

DEFEAT IS LIKELY FOR BANKING REFORM

Pressure of Other Bills Will Sidetrack Issue in Summer Legislative Session.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The apprehension of Georgia bankers, recently in session in Savannah, that their proposed banking reform bill may fail of passage in the next Legislature because of the pressure of other matter probably is well founded.

The banking reform bill is voluminous and cannot get through the Legislature without mature deliberation, both in committee and on the floor. It necessarily will be taken up section by section and that means that it must be whipped out four times in detail. Rather a long, rough and rugged road to travel, to be sure.

Like the general insurance legislation effected in the last General Assembly, however, it is highly important business, and Legislators will decline to vote for it without knowing exactly what each section provides.

The prospect ahead of the banking bill has served to renew the talk of providing a more satisfactory way of disposing of purely local legislation in the future. It is local legislation invariably that ties up the two houses and serves to kill through inattention many meritorious general bills. Members will pass their immediate local legislation, if the rest of the State's legislation program goes hang!

If local legislation might be disposed of, particularly where there is no opposition, through some simple legislative method, it easily would save 50 per cent of the General Assembly's time. As it is now, a local measure takes up almost if not quite as much time as the average general measure, yet it is a matter of a relatively small importance in separate instances to the State at large.

It takes about as much time to increase the number of county commissioners in Dodge County, for instance, as it does to amend the game laws, and yet who outside of Dodge County cares a hoot whether that county has three or five county commissioners?

An effort will be made in the next Legislature to simplify the process of local legislation, and many people will sincerely hope that the effort may succeed.

Judge John T. Allen, of Baldwin County, Senator-elect from the twentieth district, passed through Atlanta to-day.

Judge Allen was in high spirits and expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the status of his race for the presidency of the next Senate.

"If the vote were to be taken to-morrow," said he, "I am sure absolutely that I would be elected, and, in the best of good nature, I really believe I shall be the only candidate before the Senate when the voting takes place next month."

Judge Allen has been described as the one man in Georgia politics about whom there is absolutely no "lost motion," and somehow the description seems to fit him snugly.

He is one of the very best lawyers in the State and one of Georgia's most astute statesmen.

The United States Supreme Court is expected to hand down soon a decision in the famous Cureton case from Georgia, that will interest the prohibitionists of the State particularly.

The question involved is whether the prohibition laws of Georgia shall be construed similarly to the prohibition laws of Tennessee, the Supreme Courts of the two States being of exact opposite opinions as to the point raised.

Cureton, a Chattanooga soft drink dealer, owned a large distillery near Rising Fawn, Ga. He received an order for whisky in his Chattanooga house, and sent it to his Georgia distillery to be filled. The whisky was shipped from Rising Fawn, and Cureton was arrested on a charge of selling whisky, was tried and found guilty, the Georgia Supreme Court holding that the delivery at Rising Fawn to the common carrier was the consummation of a sale. Cureton appealed to the United States Court, claiming protection under the interstate commerce laws.

If the United States Supreme Court upholds the Georgia Supreme Court, the prohibitionists will regard it as a victory. If, on the contrary, the United States Courts take the view as set up in the Tennessee Supreme Court, the "dry" people will feel that they have lost a point.

The decision is expected shortly.

Representative Burwell, of Hancock County, will be the oldest member of the new Legislature in point of continuous service. He has been a member of the General Assembly since 1896.

Joe Hill Hall, of Bibb; Byron Bower, of Decatur; John M. Slaton, of Fulton, and John N. Holder, of Jackson, all of whom ranked with Mr. Burwell in point of continuous service, will be missing from the new House, leaving Burwell the veteran and the dean.

The gentleman from Hancock has been in the Legislature almost from the date of his twenty-first birthday.

The effort to increase heavily the appropriation for Confederate pensions in the next Legislature, while likely to arouse much sympathy, probably will have a hard road to travel.

There will be few if any members who would not like to see the pension increased, and yet there will be many who will be unable to see how it is to be done and meet the other necessary expenses of the State in addition.

It is very well known that Legislatures of late years have found it extremely difficult to keep the State's outgo within its income, and one of the heaviest items of annual expense is the Confederate pension appropriation.

If some statesman is able to show the Legislature how the pensions may be increased without greatly embarrassing some of the departments, the pensions probably will be increased all right. Unless the Legislature is known that, however, the increase is likely to be slight, if anything.

DEATH ENDS TRIAL OF MAN LONG DEAD

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—The death of the second plaintiff, while the case was being heard in the City Court of Augusta, to-day brought to a sudden termination the fifth trial of a suit to collect af $3,000 insurance policy on the life of John Moore, who was slain near Keysville in January, 1907. The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States is the defendant. A sixth trial will now result with a third plaintiff to prosecute the suit. The four previous hearings resulted in mistrials.

Tom Moore, who several months ago was killed as an escaped convict while a fugitive with "Old Bill" Minor, from the State Farm at Milledgeville, originally brought the suit. He was the beneficiary named in the policy.

Tom Moore was accused of killing his brother and was given a life sentence in the penitentiary. The Supreme Court affirmed it. He was serving this when he escaped from the State Farm and met death.

Mrs. Louise Moore, as administratrix of the estate of her husband, Tom Moore, continued the insurance suit.

To-day, while the case was on trial, a telegram was received from Washington, Ga., announcing the death of Mrs. Moore.

Judge Eve dismissed the jury, after expressing regret that the acse could not proceed.

L. S. Peeples, counsel for the plaintiff, announced after court adjourned, that he would bring the suit in behalf of another administrator of the Tom Moore estate.

When the trial came to such an abrupt ending to-day, the attorneys for the insurance company were endeavoring to prove that Tom Moore killed his brother, because Judge Eve had placed the burden of proof on the insurance people, not taking into consideration the fact that Moore was convicted of the murder in Burke Superior Court.

Reward for Men Who Blew Up Home of Negro Attracts Much Attention.

Governor Joseph M. Brown's proclamation, offering a reward for the apprehension of the Cobb County dynamiters, has attracted a great deal of attention and brought forth many expressions of approval throughout the State.

The Governor's uncompromisingly hostile attitude toward all forms of lawlessness has been so persistently demonstrated that there are few if any criminals left in Georgia who do not know that he means to enforce the law sternly against them if they violate the same.

Not only has he set every agency of the State at work seeking to establish the identity of the Cobb County dynamiters, but he also has offered substantial rewards for the apprehension of certain lynchers recently operating in Columbia and Heard Counties.

As he draws near the end of his term in the executive office, Governor Brown, instead of weakening in any of his positions against lawlessness, seems all the more inclined to emphasize his personal and official detestation of it.

The Governor holds that there are very many more law-abiding people in Georgia than there are lawbreakers, and that law-observers are entitled to full and complete protection against the criminal classes.

JAPS' MOVE NOW ONLY COMMENT AT CAPITOL

Orientals May Not Hasten to Answer U. S. Reply to the Alien Bill Protest.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—It is Japan's next move, was the only comment State Department officials would make to-day on the Japanese situation. The reports vary as to the time when the Mikado's statesmen will make their reply to the note delivered by Secretary of State Bryan to the Japanese Ambassador yesterday.

Some officials expect it within the next three days and others say the Japanese might take prolonged consideration, since the Webb act will not go into effect before August.

Reports of unusual activity in the way of shipments of supplies to the Presidio of San Francisco were denied at the War Department to-day.

Secretary of War Garrison declared the effort now being made to recruit the regiments in the Philippines to their full strength has been going on for nearly twelve months, and has no relation to the present situation between Japan and the United States.

Asiatic League Would Deny Orientals Leases.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—The executive committee of the Asiatic Constitutional League has begun obtaining signatures to a referendum petition to defeat the anti-alien land law which was signed by Governor Johnson yesterday.

The league's objection to the law is the clause permitting an alien to hold a three-year lease. The officials of the league soon will circulate an initiative petition for a law which will exclude Japanese and Chinese from both ownership and leaseholds under any conditions.

California Only Trying To Save Itself, He Says.

NEW YORK, May 20.—"The people of California have reached a crisis in their affairs. They have to determine right now whether California is to be overrun by Asiatics or whether it is to be kept for Californians. In three years California will be completely overrun if the wrong steps are taken now."

This statement was made here to-day by Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, as he and Mrs. Wheeler were sailing for Europe. Dr. Wheeler expressed the opinion, though, that there is no danger of actual hostilities between this country and Japan.

"The diplomats will be able to bring about a common understanding," said he. At the same time he declared the alien land bill, barring Japanese from ownership of land in California, was just and should be the law of the State.

COUNTERFEITER CONVICTED.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 20. R. T. Lawing, member of the counterfeiting gang tried a few days ago, was to-day sentenced in the Federal Court to two years in the Atlanta Penitentiary. He is the fourth prisoner convicted at this term of court to be sent to Atlanta.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Entertaining Bill at Forsyth.

First nighters—those afflicted with the desire to see and hear before anybody else—who settled into their accustomed seats Monday night at the Forsyth Theater prepared to endure at any cost the routine vaudeville, were given several surprises of their young and blase lives before the program was finished.

Perhaps the most unusual number of the entertaining bill was John Geiger and his "talking violin." Mr. Geiger certainly made his violin do everything but speak and after he had put it through its paces, including imitations of almost everything from a "Spizzerinctum" to a woodsaw, his audience had forgotten that he hadn't made the instrument emit vocal sounds.

For first-row habitues the Dunedin troupe, a bicycle novelty act, composed of one man and three girls, proved an interesting feature. The one man can certainly ride, and the girls are very good to look at, especially to the first-row crowd. Other numbers of the bill included Josephine Dunfee, whose voice, while very good, was wrongly applied in the caliber of songs she rendered; Nevins and Erwood, old-timers on Atlanta's dancing stage; Adam and Eve, a monkey act especially attractive to children; Gallagher and Fields in a comedy act entitled "The Battle of Bay Rum," which proved a winner, and Bradshaw Brothers, who presented some amazing new twists and turns in a contortion act.

"The Deep Purple" Pleases.

Patrons of the Atlanta Theater were treated to a new phase of Miss Billy Long's ability as leading lady yesterday, when "The Deep Purple," Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's play, was presented in Atlanta for the first time. The initial performance was at a matinee.

Ably assisting Miss Long in her triumph in the portrayal of New York underworld life was Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison, the popular young Atlanta girl, who took the part of the unconscious blackmailer.

The play is an interesting one from start to finish, and the company appears to advantage in it. Mr. Vail, the leading man, does some good work in the part assigned him.

Generous applause was accorded the company for its work by the moderately filled house.

Tabloid Musical Comedy at Bijou.

Tabloid musical comedy—"A Trip to Joyville" the attraction—got a fine start on Monday at the Bijou. Four big audiences indorsed the great big dime's worth of entertainment. The show, the theater and the general conditions all pointed to the fact that tabloid entertainment had caught on, in just the fashion the knowing ones had predicted.

"A Trip to Joyville" is an hour and a third of singing, dancing, comedy and music, with some vaudeville interruptions that are clever. There is a story about a lot of jolly folks going off for a day of frolic; they are pretty girls, well-groomed young men and a corps of character comedians who will perhaps be found some day in "faster company."

"A Trip to Joyville" will be presented at daily matinee—two on Saturday—and twice each night the rest of the week.

Bond Registration Closes.

COLUMBUS. — The registration books for the Dillingham Street bridge bonds have closed with only 456 voters having qualified for the election on June 7. The issue is for $50,000, it being the third to be voted upon for the bridge.

G. O. P. LEADERS TO REUNITE FACTIONS

New Plan Lets Committee Rearrange Representation Instead of Calling Convention.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Recommendation that the Republican National Committee readjust the basis of representation in national conventions, instead of calling a national convention to effect this change, probably will be made by the executive committee of the national committee when it meets here Saturday to take up this question. This was the consensus of opinion to-day.

Many members of the committee favor accomplishing the change without calling a convention. National Chairman Charles D. Hilles will preside at the meeting.

Members of the executive committee are John T. Adams, Iowa; Fred W. Estabrook, New Hampshire; Thomas P. Goodrich, Indiana; Thomas A. Marlow, Montana; Alvah H. Martin, Virginia; Thomas K. Neidringhaus, Missouri; Samuel M. Perkins, Washington; Newell Sanders, Tennessee; Charles B. Warren, Michigan; Roy O. West, Illinois; Ralph E. Williams, Oregon.

On this committee are three men who were Roosevelt sympathizers at the Chicago convention. They are Neidringhaus, West and Williams. Committeeman Adams, of Iowa, is friendly to the Cummins reorganization plan.

"This committee is as progressive as anybody," said a Republican leader to-day, "and ought to be satisfactory to LaFollette men."

The theory of the Republicans is that the Progressive faction of the party can be brought closer into the fold by merely readjusting representation in national conventions. It will be a cheap and convenient way of reuniting the party.

'THE TRIPLE TIE' GRIPS EVERY READER

Are you reading "The Triple Tie?"

With to-day's installment this fascinating story which is appearing daily in The Georgian has made everyone who started it a willing slave to the hero and heroine and the adventures through which they have been started.

It is not too late to begin this story. The first installment appeared Monday. Readers of The Georgian will recall the odd picture of the bearded and eye-glassed man who had three black ties on his shirt bosom. From that picture readers were invited to guess the title to the story which was promised them in The Georgian's columns. Five prizes of $5 each were offered for the best suggestions for a name, gleaned from the picture. "The Triple Tie" was the name.

The story's first installment related the opening adventures of Gordon Kelly, a real, live, red-blooded young man, his love for a girl, and the baseball romance which is to follow.

The story will run until June 29. Toward the close the serial will end abruptly at one of the most dramatic situations ever conceived by a novelist. Readers will then be asked to supply the solution to the several mysteries unsolved.

This is not a guessing contest. The answers are logical conclusions to what has gone before and the reader can hit upon them only through reasoning them out.

For the best solutions prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Georgian. The first prize is $100, second prize $50, third prize $25, fourth prize $15. There are also twelve prizes of $5 each.

Originality, literary value and analytical clearness will be considered in awarding the prizes.

Address all letters to Mystery Editor, Atlanta Georgian.

Methodist Nurses to Get Diplomas Friday

Graduating exercises at Wesley Memorial Hospital Training School will be held Friday evening at 8 o'clock at Wesley Memorial Church. Graduates this year are Miss Corrie Mims, Elliott, Ga.; Miss Annie Traber, Atlanta; Miss Fannie Mary Catron, Barboursville, Ky.; Miss Annie Mae Luckie, Valdosta, Ga.

Wesley Memorial Hospital is the hospital of Georgia Methodism and draws its patronage from the entire State and other sections. Dr. H. M. DuBose, of the First Methodist Church, will deliver the address to the graduating class.

Woman, 106, Doesn't Care to Live Longer

BALTIMORE, May 20.—A birthday reception on one's hundred and sixth anniversary is certainly an unusual experience, yet Mrs. Ann Bouder, 723 North Carey Street, enjoyed that privilege.

In a big armchair in her home, Mrs. Pouder talked of the happenings of a century ago in the animated manner one might more reasonably expect of a hero of Gettysburg recounting tales of the "sixties."

Mrs. Pouder told her friends she did not care to live until another birthday.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, May 20.—The newspapers point out that there can be little basis for the suspicion that Germany is suffering from a lack of ready money in the presence of the fact that the Government betting machines at the Grunewald course recorded the gross takings as roundly $200,000 on Whit Monday. The gate receipts for the day totaled $27,000.

Both figures are record-breakers in Germany. The betting machines take the place of bookmakers.

Miss Nellie McCravey, of Huntsville, Ala., a member of the graduating class of Washington Seminary, Atlanta, has been adjudged a double of Ethel Barrymore, whose beauty won recognition on two continents.

Among the girls' younger set of Huntsville Miss McCravey was considered the most beautiful, possessing all the attractions and graces. Her friends at Washington Seminary and acquaintances in Atlanta are even more enthusiastic over her personal charms, if possible, than her Huntsville associates. They promptly acquiesced in the opinion of Huntsville's elite that Miss McCravey was "the Ethel Barrymore of the South."

HUFF LOSES FIRST CONTEMPT RULING

Judge Grubb Overrules Demurrer Offered by Defense—Point of Law Raised.

MACON, GA., May 20.—The defense lost the first point in the contempt of court case against Colonel W. A. Huff, whose trial began here today in Federal Court, when Judge W. I. Grubb, presiding, overruled a demurrer offered by the defense.

A recess was taken until 3 o'clock, when a point of law will be argued. This point is whether the sending of the caustic leter by Colonel Huff to Judge Emory Speer at his home last July constituted contempt of court. All witnesses have been dismissed until to-morrow.

The Federal Court was thronged when the case was called for trial this morning.

Attorneys for the prosecution are District Attorney O. D. Street, of Alabama; Assistant District Attorney A. H. Codington, of Macon, Judge Enoch Calloway, of Augusta, and George S. Jones and Orville A. Park, of Macon. The defendant is represented by Thomas S. Felder, Attorney General of Georgia, who for nine years has been Colonel Huff's attorney in bankruptcy litigation, out of which the contempt case developed. Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, was designated by the circuit judge to preside over the trial.

Judge Speer will be the chief witness for the Government. District Attorney Alexander Akerman and Judge A. J. Cobb, of Athens, are among the other witnesses.

Colonel Huff declares that, regardless of the result of his trial, he will proceed with his charges against Judge Speer. He says that the charges will be laid before the President and Congress within two weeks.

Speaking of the Number of Wash Dresses Young Women Need at This Season

Doubtless much could be said by mothers, and doubtless more will be said as the days grow warmer. But here is the interesting part—all these much needed wash dresses may be bought to-morrow at very, very great reductions. They go into a sale to-morrow in the Junior Department.

Prices point to worth-while savings and to the certain fact that to-morrow will be the day to secure all the wash dresses this summer is going to call for.

Here is the proof:

$2.25 Junior Wash Dresses $1.19

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. They are of ginghams, percales, bright summery patterns and colorings and styles—low-necks and short-sleeves—trimmed becomingly with braids, bands and pipings of self and contrasting colors. No question about you and daughter liking them!

None will be exchanged, none sent C. O. D.

$3.50 Junior Wash Dresses $1.95

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. Percales and ginghams of fine weave—many of them imported—and of choicest patterns. And please note how very carefully these dresses are made. Every stitch, every seam is right. Choose from high neck and long sleeve styles and low neck and short sleeve styles in two-piece and one-piece dresses.

$7.50 Junior Outing Balkan Blouses $3.75

Half price for the smartest little outing coats the season has brought out for the Junior Miss! We call them outing coats, but the way the young folks are wearing them with white dresses these cool mornings and evenings would seem to discredit that as their first use.

Red flannel—made with just that fullness through the waist that is most attractive.

Sizes fifteen and seventeen years.

With the Help of Mrs. Marvin Now With Us Demonstrating La Vida Corsets

you may do much right now that will tend toward personal comfort this summer. Warm weather and an ill-fitting corset! Banish the thought, banish the possibility!

Besides it is altogether unnecessary.

We have a new summer weight La Vida—true to the approved fashion lines—in a model that is right for you and right for the light and filmy dresses that it must support and hold in graceful lines. And right now (to the end of this week), Mrs Marvin, a skilled and experienced corset woman, is here to fit you.

It is a splendid time to attend to summer corsets!

A Notice in Good Time The Ask Mr. Foster

Free Information Bureau Closes Saturday

So those who have delayed have but the intervening days now to ask questions about summer traveling; and there is no question that all who are planning vacation trips may gain from these travel experts information that will be valuable to them when the going-away time comes around.

Their engagement expires then, next Saturday, so be advised and profit by this notice.

Making Charles Happy

A Humorous Story, Complete.

"IT seems a curious perversity of fate," said the young married woman, "that I should have a husband who really has a high regard for clothes, when so many women complain that they can not enlist their husbands' attention or check books in that noble cause.

"When Charles said yesterday morning, 'My dear, you will attend to ordering your spring hats before long, will you not?' I knew it was useless to put off the matter any longer. So I promised him that I would get something that very day. I laid aside that wonderful new play of Strindberg's that I was going to take over to the park and read, and the poor dear wrote me a check and went to the office looking quite relieved in his mind.

"After he had gone, I stopped to finish only one act of Strindberg and then I started. On the way downtown I figured out just what kind of hat I should get.

"It was not so hard to plan one in my mind, but it was a different matter to find the hat that I had planned. I went to six shops and tried on about 80 hats before I began to feel discouraged and decided that there must be something wrong with my looks.

She Looked Wild.

"In the sixth shop I met Mrs. Felton, who looked wild-eyed and belligerent, and had a curious little straw concoction set upon the top of her hair, with round red objects falling off the back of it like a peck of apples descending a stairway.

"When she saw me, she clutched me menacingly by the arm, as if I were responsible for the present social system, for she said: 'Isn't it an outrage that human intelligence has to be expended upon pursuits like this! They talk about the senseless fashions of women! Do they realize that men make these styles and then force them upon us? Do you know the meaning of this whole insane subject of fashion? It's a device perpetrated by the merchants and manufacturers to get rid of the unconsumed surplus. Now, when our sex has the ballot, I hope——'

"I calmed her down, as much as I could by telling her that I felt that way about it. However, I was so relieved to find that perhaps the trouble was not with my looks, after all, that I walked over to a counter where several untrimmed hats were piled up in a bin and a lot of women were clutching at them and bought the first one from the top of the heap. It was light and soft and felt comfortable and did not make me look entirely like a cartoon when I was trying it on.

"So great was my relief at ending my search that I took home the hat with quite a feeling of satisfaction. I reasoned that it would be a simple matter to trim it myself, for all I should have to do was to leave on most of the things that the trimmed hats had on.

"That was yesterday morning. The rest of the day and until midnight last night I devoted to attempts to trim the hat. Fortunately Charles stayed downtown to dinner, so I could work without interruption. I trimmed and untrimmed eight times and nothing that I could devise looked right, so I gave it up in despair and went to bed.

"This morning as soon as Charles had gone I got the odious hat out from under the bed, where I had hidden it, and by the broad light of early day discovered what was the matter with it. The trouble was in the color, which I had failed to observe closely. It was not a normal straw color nor a yellow nor a brown, but a sickly, bilious, yellowish green, which made everything that it came into contact with look seasick, including me.

"It being now too late to return the hat, which had begun to show signs of wear, I carried it down to a dye shop and found that they could color it for me, but would have to change the shape, which was the least objectionable thing about it, and that it would take four weeks.

More Trouble.

"I then went to a department store and bought a bottle of dye, which the saleswoman said any child could apply with a small brush. In attempting to open the bottle after I had carried it home my knife slipped, the tin cap flew off and half the contents spilled over the kitchen table, a stack of dishes and the kitchen sink, to all of which it immediately adhered like enamel.

"Fortunately, it was Delia's afternoon out, but as I knew that she would be very cross when she saw the dye I spent two hours and a half and a can of scouring powder in removing it from the kitchen landscape before I could return my attention to the hat. The remaining contents of the bottle I then applied to the hat, except the part that splattered on myself. I then relined it, trimmed it for the ninth time, tried it on and found that I could stand to look at the finished product in the glass without feeling ill. I felt that I had earned that hat.

"When Charles came home I had it stuck on my head for him to look at and was just beginning the second act of Strindberg. He was very much pleased, and said: 'That looks very nice, my dear. Now, you see how easy it is to get becoming hats, so you must go down and order two or three more, and then you will be supplied for the summer.'"

Not What He Meant.

JONES and Long had not met for years. Once—that is, in the days when both had been striving for fame in their different professions—they had been really good chums, and many a talk had they enjoyed together by the fireside as to the little places they would take in the country "when their ships came home."

The dream of Jones has been realized, and now, although a portly old fellow, it was with a sense of real pleasure that he prepared for a visit from his former friend.

"Ah, it's splendid seeing you down here, Long!" he said cordially, by way of greeting. "Quite like old times—what? And the missus, I know, is longing to shake you by the hand. But first—yes, you must come along and have a look at my greenhouse. You simply must!"

And Long went.

"Well, Jones," he said, "you've got a mighty pretty place down here; but to my mind, it's just a bit bare."

"Oh!" replied Jones, cheerfully, "that's because the trees are so young! Next time you come—why, they'll be so big that you won't recognize them!"

The Social World

The dance recital given by pupils of Miss Lillian Viola Moseley at Segadlo's Monday evening was attended by a large number of guests. The program of beautiful dances was most enthusiastically received. A number of clever children presented ballroom dances, ballet numbers, esthetic and solo interpretative dances, reflecting great credit upon themselves and upon their teacher.

Among the solo dancers Miss Idelia Andrews did extraordinary work. Her "Little Boy Blue," done in costume, was very fine, and she was a leader in all the group dances.

Miss Nell Summerall in a fetching costume danced "La Paloma," to the delight of all who saw her. Little Miss Martha Boynton, in a white tulle gown covered with pink roses, was a bewitching little dancer presenting "The Spirit of Spring." Another pretty little girl who danced beautifully alone was Miss Sarah Wagstaff, whose number was "Polka Miniature." Miss Ruth Carr Benson presented "Fulano," a Venetian gondolier dance, wearing a pretty fancy dress.

A large number of children, both girls and boys, took part in the evening's entertainment. The little girls were beautifully gowned in pink and white and blue dancing frocks, with ballet slippers of the color of their dresses. Miss Moseley wore a handsome evening gown of black satin charmeuse, with draped skirt and corsage of shadow lace and chiffon adorned with a corsage bouquet of pastel-tinted sweetpeas.

Music at Lawn Fete.

A feature of the lawn fete to be held Friday afternoon and evening on the lawns surrounding the homes of Mrs. George Dexter and Mrs. George Traylor, on Ponce DeLeon Avenue, will be a program of music including an old fashioned quartette and a country dance. Mr. James Wardwell will be in charge of this program, and other attractions will include a row of booths with household supplies for sale, candy table, etc. A housekeepers' booth, with many articles suitable for housekeepers, and a supply of fresh vegetables, will be arranged. Special attractions will be given during the afternoon for children. Members of St. Elizabeth Guild of St. Luke's Church will sponsor the affair.

Dinner at the Driving Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Bancker will entertain eight guests at dinner at the Piedmont Driving Club Tuesday evening for Mrs. Bates Block's guests, Miss Caroline Scott, of Arkansas, and Miss Lorna Carr, of St. Louis.

The Young Ladies' Missionary Society, Circle No. 1, of the First Methodist Church, will have a silver tea at the home of Miss Hazel Kirk, 119 East Pine Street, on Tuesday afternoon and evening from 4 to 6 and 8 to 10. Refreshments will be served and home-made candies will be sold.

For Mr. and Mrs. Finley.

Mr. W. W. Finley, of Washington, D. C., president of the Southern Railway, and Mrs. Finley, who spent Tuesday in Atlanta, were tendered a luncheon Tuesday at the Piedmont Driving Club by Mr. and Mrs. Henry Miller.

For Mr. and Mrs. Seydel.

A series of parties will be tendered Mr. and Mrs. Paul Seydel during their visit to Dr. and Mrs. Vassar Wooley. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Duncan will entertain at dinner Tuesday evening at the Brookhaven Club; Mr. and Mrs. William D. Ellis, Jr., will entertain at dinner Wednesday evening. Other affairs include Dr. and Mrs. Woolley's tea Thursday and Mrs. James Jackson's matinee party Saturday. Mrs. Seydel will remain with her mother after the departure of Mr. Seydel next week.

For Mrs. Hynds.

Mrs. Arthur Hynds has returned from Chattanooga, where she visited Mrs. Fountain Rice, Jr., during Mr. Hynds' absence in Dallas, Texas. Among the parties tendered Mrs. Hynds in Chattanooga were a tea at the Golf Club, given by Mrs. Stacy, and a bridge party by Mrs. Burke, with an informal tea by Mrs. Rice. On her return Mrs. Rice accompanied Mrs. Hynds for a visit to her father and sister, Mr. C. E. Sergeant and Miss Lulie Sergeant.

For Mr. and Mrs. Wellhouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wellhouse, who will sail May 26 for a summer abroad, will be tendered a dinner of eight guests Tuesday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Werner S. Byck.

Miss Lewis Hostess.

Miss Margaret Lewis' bridge luncheon Tuesday morning complimented her guests, Miss Wilhelmina Drummond and Mrs. O. V. Derr, of Indiana. Sweetpeas in all the pink and lavender shades decorated the apartment. Silk hose were given as the first and consolation prizes and the guests of honor were presented with hand-embroidered collar and cuff sets.

Miss Lewis' guests were Misses Penelope Clarke, Frances Connally, Marian Foster, Aurelia Speer, Cobble Vaughan, Nellie Stewart, Elizabeth Morgan, Clifford West, May O'Brien, Eloise Oliver, Edith Dunson, Adrienne Battey, Josephine Stoney, Susan Osborne, Mary King, Louise Bloodworth of Forsyth, Mrs. S. CROW FIGHTS WITH SNAKE; CAW'S THANKS WHEN SAVED

GRAND RAPIDS, WIS., May 20.—While hunting for May flowers on Blueberry Ridge, seven miles from this city, Richard Arpin and Henry and Ernest Smith, witnessed a fight between a garter snake and a crow.

The snake was getting the better of the crow and had coiled itself several times around the bird's neck, when the boys struck the snake on the head.

The rescued crow expressed its gratitude in crow language and made no objection when young Arpin formally adopted him.

MACON TO SEEK STATE K. OF P. HEADQUARTERS

MACON, GA., May 20.—More than 30 Macon delegates leave to-night to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Waycross. A determined effort will be made to land the permanent headquarters of the grand lodge for this city. T. J. Carling, supreme chancellor of the world, who is a resident of this city, is throwing his influence to Macon in this regard.

HUSBAND JAILED AS HE RETURNS TO SUE WIFE

D. H. Clark, Held on Wife's Charge of Desertion, Admits He Alone Stole Son.

Augustus H. Clark, formerly with the Atlanta Gas Light Company, whose 3-year-old boy, Augustus Hamilton Clark, Jr., recently figured in a sensational kidnaping episode, is in police station Tuesday at the instigation of his wife, who, with her two little children, lives at 156 Richardson Street.

The young husband returned to Atlanta Monday, he said, for the purpose of entering suit for divorce against his wife, and Monday night visited her at her home, to make the proposition that if she would not contest the divorce action he would permit her to keep both children. Mrs. Clark, he said, informed him she would fight to a finish.

Wife Has Him Arrested.

After Clark left the house, Mrs. Clark hurriedly telephoned to Police Chief Beavers, informing him that her husband was back in the city and asking his immediate arrest for desertion. Clark was taken into custody shortly after midnight at the home of his mother, 184 Hill Street.

Clark declared Tuesday he never again would live with his wife, but would fight in the courts for the custody of little Augustus Hamilton Clark. He said he would make no effort to regain the youngest child, Charles, aged 1 year.

"My mother is wrapped up in little Augustus, and I want to give him to her," said Clark. "I want my mother to care for the little fellow and educate him. My wife can keep the other child."

Mother Under Indictment.

Mrs. George S. Clark, mother of the young husband, is now under bond on a grand jury indictment charging her with kidnaping little Augustus. Mrs. Clark took the little fellow to Chicago in March, and was later met there by young Clark. Mrs. Clark is said to have become ill in Chicago. She returned to Atlanta with the little boy, where the wife regained him.

Clark Tuesday relieved his mother of all blame for the spiriting away of the child, admitting that he planned the whole affair.

Clark said he came here from Jackson, Miss., where he is connected with the Jackson Light and Power Company.

SLUMMING PARTIES NOT TOLERATED AT MACON

MACON, GA., May 20.—Slumming parties are not tolerated in Macon. Miss Dorothy Smith, a corset demonstrator, and C. K. Hildreath, a traveling man, ascertained this fact when they were arrested in the restricted district by policemen especially instructed to take such sight-seeing parties in custody. The couple were fined $11 each.

ALWAYS NEW, ALWAYS BEST, AT THE BONITA

The new musical comedy company at the Bonita has sprung a surprise and won a home in Atlanta. Good, clean, catchy—and the prettiest bunch of show girls to be found anywhere. There is also a plot, which is unusual.

Take the tip and go to the Bonita this week—to-day. You will enjoy the show.

INDICTS CHURCH AS NEGLECTING NEGROES

A severe indictment was passed upon the Presbyterian Church for its indifference to the negro problem by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., in the report of his committee on the freedmen of the country.

"The Presbyterians are making absolutely no effective effort toward the solution of this great problem," declared Dr. Johnston. "We are asleep on the job. The enormity of our recreancy is apparent when we consider that every tenth man over whom our flag flies is a black man.

"We need a trained leadership to take charge of the situation. We need trained Christian teachers to go into the schools and higher institutions and instruct these people.

Little Financial Aid Given.

"How poorly we have responded to the needs of this problem is indicated by the pitifully small financial aid we have given. There are only 30,000 negro communicants in our Northern Church. Yet these poor, illiterate persons give more than a third of that contributed by the million and a half white members of the Northern Church.

"We have been the rankest sort of cowards. We have feared to take any brave, decided step. At the rate we are going, our progress will continue at a snail's pace. Some say send them to Liberia; some say send them somewhere else—get rid of the problem by shipping the black people out of the country. But God says: 'They need not depart; give Me them.'"

John Gaston, of Pittsburg, Pa., associate secretary of the Freedmen's Board, declared that the key to the whole problem must be found in the negro ministry.

"Georgia has a million negroes within its boundaries, more than all of the Northern States combined," said Mr. Gaston. "This constitutes an immense, an appalling problem. How are you going to solve it? I believe its solution can come only in a trained, educated negro ministry. The Presbyterian Church has made a start along this line. It is a small start, but we are relying in the Christian spirit of our white communicants to give it a splendid impetus. In thirteen Southern States we have established four synods and sixteen presbyteries. Ministering to the negro people are 241 negro preachers."

Sees Lessening of Crime.

Mr. Gaston said that the incalculable benefit of gospel training and educational instruction had been demonstrated to his satisfaction in many places in the South. In one Arkansas county, he said that the percentage of negro crimes was five times that of the white crimes. In spite of this, he declared, that in the ten years' history of a negro training school in that county not one of the students had appeared before the county court on the charge of being guilty of a crime against the State.

Healthy Baby is Precious Blessing

To Make It Healthy and Keep It Healthy Use a Reliable Baby Laxative

DOROTHY JOHNSON.

In spite of the greatest personal care and the most intelligent attention to diet, babies and children will become constipated, and it is a fact that constipation and indigestion have wrecked many a young life. To start with a good digestive apparatus is to start life without handicap.

But as we can not all have perfect working bowels we must do the next best thing and acquire them, or train them to become healthy. This can be done by the use of a laxative-tonic very highly recommended by a great many mothers. The remedy is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and has been on the market for two generations. It can be bought conveniently at any drug store for fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, and those who are already convinced of its merits buy the dollar size.

Its mildness makes it the ideal medicine for children, and it is also very pleasant to the taste. It is sure in its effect and genuinely harmless. Very little of it is required and its frequent use does not cause it to lose its effect, as is the case with so many other remedies.

Thousands can testify to its merits in constipation, indigestion, biliousness, sick headaches, etc., among them reliable people like Mrs. M. Johnson, 752 Dayton St., Kenosha, Wis. She is the mother of little Dorothy Johnson, who was always in delicate health until her mother gave her Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mrs. Johnson says: "I never saw such rapid improvement in the health of anyone. Syrup Pepsin is a wonderful remedy and I shall never be without it again." Thousands keep Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it from infancy to old age. The users of Syrup Pepsin have learned to avoid cathartics, salts, mineral waters, pills and other harsh remedies, for they do but temporary good and are a shock to any delicate system.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

KODAK

You never knew a person in your life who didn't enjoy looking at Kodak pictures. And why Kodak pictures more than any other kind? Simply because of the personal interest attached to them. Because you, or some of your friends, actually made them. Because there is movement, life, interest in a snap-shot. Half the fun of a picnic, outing, vacation is lost if you don't take Kodak pictures. Every day, every season, every pleasure lends itself to Kodaking. There is no trouble. They're easy to take. A mere child can operate a Kodak successfully. The price—well, it surely won't worry you when you can get a perfectly practical Brownie Camera from $1 to $12, and the higher priced Kodaks, $5 to $65 (depending on the lens equipment). Send for a catalog or come in and see them. But whatever you do, get busy and get a Kodak right now. Find out what real summer enjoyment means. Send us a trial roll of films for the best finishing that can be produced. Big stock fresh films and supplies.

"DON'T WORRY OVER PITCHING STAFF"--SMITH

By Percy H. Whiting.

"WE'LL go flying when our pitchers get right." So said Bill Smith before Monday's game. "Nobody need think we're scared. I never saw a team playing better ball and losing in my life than the Crackers did on their trip. And they never lost their nerve. If the pitchers come through we'll win in a walk. And you needn't worry. They're coming."

One of the pitchers came through Monday and it was plain sailing for the Crackers.

* * *

THE Crackers have the best infield and outfield combination that the Southern League ever saw. That's positively official. There's nothing else in the world to it.

Bailey, Welchonce and Long form the best outfield ever seen in the Southern League.

Agler, Alperman, Bisland and Smith constitute an infield the like of which was never seen before in Dixie.

The catching staff will do as it stands to-day, and if it doesn't continue standing right Bill Smith will kick it overboard and load up with some men who can deliver. That's official too and right from Bill Smith.

The pitchers are Smith's only trouble.

"At that they look pretty good," says Billy. "This Gilbert Price is a positive marvel. I never in all my days saw a hurler with more stuff. He seems to weaken sometimes at the end of a game. I don't know whether he gets overconfident or weakens physically. If he gets to lasting all the way they couldn't beat him in fifty years.

"Bill Chappelle showed us a good game his last out and will win for us I think. Brady's work is perfectly satisfactory. If this Dent goes all right I'll take my chances."

* * *

AS for Paul Musser, he showed that he was there with everything in the catalogue yesterday. He allowed five hits, one a scratch home run. If Tommy Long hadn't misjudged this ball badly only one run would have been made off Musser. His control was vastly better than usual and he looked a great pitcher.

As for the Crackers—they played the ball they have been playing almost all the season. They got to Pitcher Kissinger of the Turtle team only twice but it was enough.

In the third Graham slipped one by Kissinger. Musser bunted safe—a peach of a performance for a pitcher—and Bailey cleaned up with a single.

In the fourth Bisland put across a clean home run that won the game. After that time the locals made but one hit. But they did not need even that one.

* * *

THE new man, Bisland, looked like a legacy from your rich uncle. Besides hitting the homer that won the game he fielded neatly and he looks so much like a big league ball player you couldn't detect him from the real thing in the broad daylight.

Wally Smith kept right on looking like the wonder of the league. And Whitey Alperman surely had a big day. In the eighth he actually flew after Ward's liner and in the ninth he nipped what might have been a rally by grabbing down Abstein's awful poke.

* * *

THE game was played in one hour and forty-six minutes, which is amazingly fast considering how other contests of the year have lagged. Umpires Bill Hart and Dan Pfenninger seemed to have developed some pepper in their old age and kept things hustling. That the good work will be continued is the earnest hope of the fans. Draggy baseball games don't please anybody.

DIABETES NO LONGER FEARED

Peculiar Action of a Remarkable Remedy in Controlling Liver Action.

S. S. S. Quickly Puts Vim and Energy Into You.

There is no need to feel any alarm over the symptoms of diabetes. This disease is apt to be purely a digestive trouble, and for this reason the liver is held largely responsible. The liver is the largest organ of the body, and is not only a mass of threadlike blood vessels, but throughout its entire fabric is intimately associated with the digestive system.

The thing to do is to so stimulate the action of this myriad of blood vessels that each cellular part selects its own essential nutriment by healthy and judicious divine discretion. This is accomplished by S. S. S., the most potent, the most active and the most naturally stimulating blood medicine known. You do not need purgatives; do not be alarmed at the presence of sugar nor of so-called sediment.

Just stick to S. S. S. and bear in mind that this celebrated remedy has such a specific stimulating action on the local cells of the liver as to preserve their mutual welfare and give a proper relative assistance, each cell to the other.

Dropsical tendencies are thus overcome, biliousness soon becomes a memory and jaundice, malaria, afflictions of the spleen and glandular swellings will be entirely eliminated. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores and for competent medical advise, free, consult by mail the laboratories of the Swift Specific Company, 127 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Cobb Not Greatest Ball Player

"Keeler Superior to Ty"--Sullivan

By Ted Sullivan

THE return of Cobb to the Detroit club and its continued clump since he began to wear the team's uniform has served one object lesson to the American public, and that is that no one player, no matter how great or skillful, can win games alone. It takes nine men to win ball in any fast league. It has been the case in the past, and it will be ever thus in the future. A pitcher of Walsh or Johnson's caliber may figure conspicuously in the winning of a game, but at that they must have fielding and run-getting powers in their teams to make them winners.

But let one thing be impressed on the public mind—players may come and go, but the game will go on forever. Had Cobb not returned to the Detroit team, the continued losings of the club would have been laid to his absence, but it was a great victory and eye-opener both for the Detroit people in all parts of America that he did return, to show the superficial and unsophisticated how little one man figures in the game, and especially an outfielder.

To look at Cobb, or Cobbism, from a dispassionate and impartial standpoint, let us see what Cobb's status is in the game. I grant he has the right to ask for any salary he thinks his services are worth; he realizes that he is a drawing card at home and abroad. He knows the owners of the club look at him from a commercial standpoint, and he views them in the same light. He knows also that there is a time limit to his playing days, and he wants to make the most of it. The home press and the unsophisticated press throughout the United States have been burning incense to his greatness and telling him that he is the one ball player in the history of the game, which he never was. But as Detroit made him a drawing card, in their sopology, he had a right to make them pay for it. Which he has.

Infielder More Important.

Let us see where he figures as a ball player, compared with the players of the past and present. He is playing in the outer works of the game—as a fielder, averaging about two fly balls to a game, with plenty of time to think what he will do after catching a fly ball or the grounder that is bounding toward him. No outfielder can be compared with an infielder or a catcher, as their positions are entirely different in the nature of the work they have to perform. An infielder's brain is in perpetual action from the time the pitcher delivers the ball, and he has only a fraction of a second to think, so quick does the machinery of the infield work.

Cobb is the best run getter in the profession to-day. Run getting is the combination of hitting and base running. Base running has ever been the spectacular part of a ball player's work, with all other things nearly equal. To say Cobb was the greatest ball player in the history of the game would be like telling a man who saw the Mississippi River that the Illinois River was the longest and largest in the United States, or to tell a person who saw the summit of Pike's Peak that the range of the Allegheny was higher.

I suppose it will be the same in the next generation of ball players. They will be as skeptical of the baseball prowess of Cobb, Wagner and Lajoie, as the present ones are of the greatness of Mike Kelly, Ewing and Williamson. As a fielder and thrower Cobb could not stand comparison with Fogarty, Curt Welsh, Bill Lange, and a few others of the past and he is not to-day the superior as a fielder and thrower of Graney of Cleveland and Moeller of Washington.

Thinks Keeler Was Better.

There is a little modest man who left the ball field two years ago, namely, William Keeler, who did not wear sleigh bells around a hotel to let people know he was around, but he was the superior of Cobb, as versatile a batter. But to say that Cobb was the equal of the three great ball players of the part, namely, Ewing, Williamson, and Mike Kelly, would be ridiculous.

Williamson was a third baseman and a shortstop. He was one of the greatest base runners in the history of the game. Besides being one of the greatest infielders that ever lived, he was also a catcher and a pitcher. Buck Ewing was undoubtedly the greatest throwing, hitting and base running catcher of them all. But to compare Cobb, the outfielder, to the immortal Kelly, who was the craftiest base runner of all times, besides being one of the best batters and catchers that ever lived, would be like comparing a 2:40 horse to a 2:10 one.

To use a hyperbole, it could be said that Mike Kelly behind the bat and on the bases in the crucial contest of a game sweat more baseball cells into the rim of his cap than some players of to-day have in their skulls.

If Ty Cobb is guilty of the alleged prima-donna breaks in wanting extra hotels and extra rooms from other players and practicing when he wants to—no one is to blame but the Detroit management themselves. They have petted and coddled him as much as an indulgent mother does to a child she has spoiled.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—I have decided to give much space in this article to the fast-going Phillies and Dodgers. The Phillies merit considerable analysis. When the Giants played them recently, I never saw a Philadelphia team playing better, and, as there has always been plenty of feeling between the two clubs, they were very glad to clean up on New York as they did. The team is benefiting from much better conditions this season than have existed in Philadelphia for many years, and these are mainly responsible for the marked improvement, as it will be noted that practically the same men are appearing in the batting order that landed the team in the second division last summer. William Locks, the new president of the club, is a practical baseball man, and he is giving Dooin a chance to manage the team without worrying him with a lot of trivialities. The result is that Dooin is getting good baseball out of his men, the best that is in each individual.

Again the Quakers have advanced so far into the season without any of the regulars suffering serious injuries and being out of the game, almost a record for the club. It is not likely the team will go through the race with this rosy record, and an injured regular or two will slow the club up a good deal because Dooin is not well fortified with substitutes.

* * *

THE real strength of the team lies in the excellent pitching staff which is the unexcelled feature of the league at this writing. When either Alexander, Chalmers or Seaton has been working, it has been practically impossible for an opposing club to do any hitting. It is this great pitching which has permitted the Phillies to make the good showing that they have, because they are not a crowd of hard batters themselves. They win their games by small scores, depending on the pitchers and smooth fielding to prevent the other side from rolling up many runs. Now, when this pitching staff begins to wilt under the strain of the race and the heat of the summer, as it is liable to do, the Quakers are going to find a very much harder road to travel. They would have a good chance for the pennant with more sturdy batters. As it is now, they are depending on their twirlers and have not better than an outside opportunity for the championship.

* * *

THE Philadelphia club has been the surprise of the race. In its ante-season performances, it made a very poor showing, being easy for both the Athletics and Washington teams of the American League. From those scores, the Quakers looked like the same old bunch, dead on their feet, as they have always been, but with the opening of the race on their own circuit, they jumped away in good style and are playing fast ball. It is their speed and pitching that have held them up so far.

* * *

"WHERE will Brooklyn stop?" is the question which is stirring the baseball following portion of the populace now.

One of these days the Brooklyn team is going to wake up and discover that it is rated as a great ball club, tremble at the idea and start to lose. The Brooklyn boys should finish in the first division. They have talent at present to warrant such a prediction, but they should not crowd the winner of the pennant in September. That is merely my opinion. Perhaps it is based on the years of mediocre baseball played in Brooklyn and Philadelphia will find it harder traveling when they start away from home and invade the West. Not that they will encounter particularly tough competition in the West, but the handicap of playing away from home diamonds and home crowds is going to be a big one. It will be observed that most of the successes of both these teams have been made at home under the watchful eye of home crowds. The Brooklyn club has set its admirers crazy, and men who have not been able to raise up their voices to root for the home club for years are tearing their throats out regardless now. This all helps a ball club, especially on that floats into a winning streak suddenly, as Brooklyn has. Still the Dodgers may tear through the league as Washington did last year and not let up.

* * *

THE Boston club is the one which is paralyzing the ante-season critics. Nobody could see any good in that team before the race opened, with the possible exception of Stallings, the manager, and James Gaffney, the owner, and yet it is playing ball and becoming the talk of the town in place of the declining Red Sox. Stallings is responsible for it, because he is a manager who builds up a club. Within a year or two the Boston team is going to be one to take into the pennant reckoning I believe. The manager is digging up new material which suits his purposes and developing it. One thing he is looking for and which no other Boston team has possessed for a good many years is speed. His system very closely resembles that followed by McGraw.

So far I have not seen St. Louis in action, but I do not believe its showing to date is its normal stride. It does not strike me that Huggins can maintain anything like a first division pace. His club will not stand it.

* * *

WHEN the Giants were going badly two or three weeks ago and everybody was kicking the ball, McGraw called "Larry" Doyle, the good natured, to him after a game and took up with him the matter of an error he had made which figured largely in the defeat of the Giants.

"Well," replied "Larry," "you've got to hand it to me, boss. I make all my errors when they count."

This answer disarmed McGraw.

* * *

IT must not be thought that I am slighting the American League, but there has been little change during the week in that organization. The Athletics are still piling along with a comfortable lead, and Boston is crashing down through the standing, giving little indication of having even a look-in for the flag. The Washington club is the worst sufferer. Griffith has had some hard luck that has slowed up his team and hurt his chances for the pennant very largely. Foster, who within a year developed into one of the best third basemen in the league, is laid up with typhoid fever and will be out of the game for pretty nearly two months anyway. This destroys the smooth working of the infield, because Laporte is slow.

Johnson, the pitcher, is the wonder of the season. He established his record of fifty-six scoreless innings last week. To my mind, he is not only the greatest in the game to-day, but the greatest in the game has ever produced. He did not make this record against easy teams, but against clubs composed of the hardest hitters in the country. Griffith did not pick any "spots" for him. My hat is off to him.

Easy to Pick All-Star Prep Team

Armistead Would Be Good Captain

By Jim Glover

TO select an all-star baseball team from the prep schools of Atlanta this year is not as difficult as it has been in past seasons. This year there is a star for almost every position who is so much better than his nearest competitor that there is little chance for any disagreement.

Here are the names of the players, the positions that they are given and the schools which they represented the past season.

Name	Position	School
Armistead	catcher (Capt.)	Boys High
Fox	pitcher	Boys High
Weston	pitcher	Tech High
Callahan	pitcher	Marist
Lowery	first base	Marist
Bedell	second base	Tech High
Allen	third base	Marist
Spurlock	shortstop	Boys High
Laird	left field	Tech High
Rennolds	center field	Tech High
Wells	right field	Peacock
J. Parks	utility	Tech High

Sam Armistead, of Boys High, is without a doubt the best backstop in the league this year. He steadies a pitcher, leads the league in batting and seldom allows a man to steal a base. He is made captain of the nine as he knows the game thoroughly.

Fox Leading Pitcher.

The pitching staff is the only problem on the team. Fox has shown up the best this year, but one man is not enough to do the twirling for a team, so another had to be selected; and right here is where the rub comes in. Weston and Callahan are so nearly equal in ability that it is necessary to name both. Callahan is a pitcher of the sensational style, a pitcher who often fans the first nine or ten men who face him and then when his support weakens blows up and loses the game. Weston has pitched in only two games this year but his showing in both contests was fine. Besides his pitching he is the best batting and fielding twirler of them all.

Jim Lowery gets the job at first base without any trouble. He is a steady player and about the only man on the Marist team who has not "spilled the beans" in some game.

Bill Bedell is the right man for second base. He is fast and has swiped more bases this year than any man in the league. He is also a good batter.

Charlie Allen, of Marist, has not played quite up to his usual standard at third base this year, but, nevertheless, his playing and hitting has been good enough to warrant him a place on the all-star team.

Weston and Parks, of Tech High, are also crack third sackers, but Weston is also a pitcher and Parks has been given the utility job.

Spurlock Crack Shortstop.

Spurlock is in a class by himself when it comes to playing shortstop. He has a good head and can hit and field well. He is just what a shortstop should be. Harry Rennolds is the best outfielder in the bunch and is given a place at center. His fielding average for the season is .996 and he is always there with the stick.

Johnny Laird is another good outfielder and is especially good on difficult balls. The other outfield position is given to Wells, of Peacock, although he is a shortstop. He is too good a man to be kept off the team and could play the outfield as well as any of them.

Jim Parks, of Tech High, gets the position of utility man, which is just as important a place as any other one on a team. Parks is a good pitcher, crack infielder and a slugger, one of the best in the league, and he would be a great asset to this team.

GREAT MANAGER IS NOT ALWAYS TEAM BUILDER

By Otto C. Floto.

WHILE viewing with regret the poor showing that such popular men as Chance and Tinker are making this year we often wonder whether there is a distinction between a great manager and a builder of a successful baseball team. There must be something to this contention or else why does it constantly flash across our think pan?

There is no one will deny but that Frank Chance is a great manager; that he can get more out of the same men under his charge than any other one individual out of a hundred that try. Yet he's an absolute failure to date with New York. Why? Because he did not build the team he commands. Scouts were sent abroad to bring home the recruits, and from present observation the scouts failed in their missions. Added to this is the poor luck that has greeted the team for the past four or five years. To play a whole series against all the clubs in the Eastern division of the American League and not win a single game—well, we are at a loss to explain it. Yet that's the record, and that's the verdict that will go down against the Peerless Leader in future discussions.

* * *

MIND, no one expected Chance to make good in a single season, nor in two or three seasons for that matter. But we surely looked for better results than have been brought to date. A lot of wooden Indians, frequently seen as advertisements in front of cigar stores, could have accomplished no less.

It's now up to Chance to demonstrate to us that he can "build" as well as manage. He has proven to us beyond a doubt that the managerial abilities are his—won in actual contest time and time again in the severest kind of battle. With manager, he must show that he is really all his friends have claimed for him. He must weed out the dead and replace them with live and winning material. When he has done this we'll shout bravo!

* * *

CHANCE did not build up the great machine that won four National League and two world's championships. He was part of the machine before it was handed over to him, but the late Frank Selee gathered Tinker, Kling, Schulte, Evers, Hofman and the rest of the bunch that stood so gallantly by the P. L. in all those now historic struggles. Selee had to step down and out owing to poor health, and Chance stepped in and developed the heirlooms that his manager left to him.

True, Chance made some advantageous trades that still further strengthened his machine. But the men traded were all gathered by Selee and proved such alluring bait to the other clubs that the swap which brought Brown, Slckard and others into the Cub fold was comparatively easy. So without taking any credit away from Chance, all he had to do in this instance was to keep the well-organized machine moving. This he did with wonderful results. He succeeded where another man might have failed.

* * *

TAKE Clark Griffith, of the Washington team. He is one of the best managers in the business. Time and time again he has proved this. But we ask, is he a builder? To a certain extent we believe him to be. He surely showed such ability when he organized the Highlanders for their first appearance in the American League. Things, however, were rather easy at that time because the younger league was grabbing all the stars from the National. When he got Chesbro he had pretty nearly a team.

He failed to make much of a show with Cincinnati. (But so do all the others.) In Washington last year as well as this he is doing wonders. But in figuring matters remember that it was Cantillon who got Johnson to come there, and the other half of the team was helped along by Jimmy McAleer. Clark, however, is getting every ounce out of them.

MANDOT 10-TO-8 CHOICE OVER ANDERSON TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, May 20.—The experience and ring generalship of Joe Mandot, the New Orleans lightweight, has caused a flood of money to be offered by his admirers at the eleventh hour, and just twelve hours before he is due to enter the Vernon ring to box Bud Anderson, of Medford, Oreg., the Southern boy is a favorite at odds of 10 to 8.

With their training concluded in the best of shape, both boys are in perfect condition and confident. Mandot feeling sure he will redeem himself, and Anderson certain that he will add another knock-out to his record.

BENEFIT GAME TO RAISE COIN TO BOOST CITY

WEDNESDAY is Ad Men's Day at Ponce DeLeon ball park.

And for the first time this season the people of Atlanta will be given an opportunity to show that they appreciate what the Ad Men have done for them and what they are planning to do.

"What have they done?" you ask.

Well, for one thing, they have, within the year, raised more than $100,000 for various good causes in Atlanta. The Y. M. C. A., the Chamber of Commerce and goodness knows how many charitable organizations have been helped by money they have raised.

This spring when it appeared that Atlanta was to lose the honor of turning out the largest opening day crowd, the Ad Men's Club whirled in and whooped things up with a result that all Southern League records for all time were fractured.

At every convention of Ad Men's Clubs which they have attended they have whooped up Atlanta in some really spectacular way that has put the Gate City before the delegates in a most favorable light.

"Wht will they do with the money they raise?" you inquire.

Just this—they will use it to boost Atlanta at the Baltimore convention.

They don't want their car fare paid. They are all blowing themselves to that. They don't want it for entertainment or for themselves in any way.

They want it for Atlanta.

The scheme is this. The big feature of the convention will be a night parade. There will be 100 motor truck floats, prepared by national advertisers. There will be bands galore. And every Ad Men's Club represented there will march in uniform in the parade. The local men are going to buy their uniforms—and it will cost them about $35 apiece for this. They need money, however, to buy big, white parasols, on which the word, "Atlanta" will be printed in huge, red letters. They need money also for big electric flash lamps, which will be provided with huge glass globes, on which, in red, will be the words "Atlanta Always Ahead." They need money for a band. In other words they need it to boost Atlanta at Baltimore.

The cause is a worthy one.

The Ad Men do just as much to boost Atlanta as any organization here. They take over all the odd jobs that the Chamber of Commerce is too dignified to handle, and any good boosting organization needs support.

CHARLIE WHITE STOPS THOMAS IN TWO ROUNDS

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Charlie White stopped Joe Thomas in the second round of their 10-round bout last night. The local boy was an easy victim for the Chicago star.

Thomas was knocked down for the count of nine in the first round, after going down two other times, the bell saving him the last time.

At the opening of the second, Thomas appeared to have regained his strength, but a few well directed rights and lefts put him groggy again, and after about one minute of the second round the referee, Dick Burke, raised White's hand and motioned Thomas to his corner.

SHUGRUE AND LORE BOX FAST 12-ROUND DRAW

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, May 20.—Young Shrugue, of Jersey City, and Johnny Lore, of New York, boxed a fast 12-round draw here last night. Tommy Bresnahan, of Newcastle, Pa., was given a well-earned decision over Louis Deponthieu, of Paris, at the end of a 10-round semi-final.

TOMMY SHEEHAN WINS.

BILLINGS, MONT., May 20.—Tommy Sheehan, of Chicago, won a decision here last night over Roy Coquit, of Cody, Wyo., at the end of a 12-round bout.

Mathewson As Savior of Giants

Keeps Champs in Race--Marquard

By Rube Marquard

(Holder of the World's Record of Nineteen Consecutive Victories.)

SO many startling surprises have developed in the first month of the major league campaigns it is hard to figure out where it will all end.

By the looks of things anything is liable to happen. The "dope" has been upset in so many surprising manners that it seems after all as if there is some "jinx" attached to the magic "13" of this year of grace. However, there are enough beacons shining through the gloom of uncertainty to re-establish faith in ability as opposed to superstition.

We do not have to travel very far just now to find the one real beacon of Giant hope. His name is Christy Mathewson. His work alone is enough to break all the charms of "jinxes" and "hoodoos," for he arises in the thirteenth year of his career as a Giant and a major league performer to a height of perfection that in any other pitcher would be regarded as miraculous. Mathewson has been the great bulwark of the Giant pitching staff so long that the public has come to regard his wonderful brilliancy as a matter of common habit.

To none other than the great master of pitching science may New York contratulate itself upon being as well to the front in the 1913 National League race. So far he has been the only reliable pitching asset of the veteran talent. Matty is confident that this will be his greatest year, and I share the belief with him.

Here is a pitcher who very wisely has conserved every ounce of vitality. By the use of his head he has been able to shine year after year with the very least possible strain to his arm. And I believe that Christy Mathewson will live to as ripe an age of efficiency as did the venerable Cy Young. To-day Mathewson is better than he has ever been before.

Illness Sets "Rube" Back.

Mathewson has had to shoulder the great bulk of the pitching responsibility so far this season, but I think there will be plenty of help for him from now on. My chief regret for Mathewson, McGraw and all my fellow players has been that I am not capable of doing my share toward making it three pennants in a row. I offer no excuses, for I know in my heart that very soon I will be back into my proper stride. I was just hitting my pace when an attack of tonsilitis set me back.

By the time I am on my feet once more—and that will not be very long, I can tell you—the Giants should be as well provided with pitching material as any club could desire. I know from the condition in which the men returned from Texas that a week or two of summer weather would put all our pitchers in first-class shape.

Our club is not the only one that has suffered in this respect. Pitching, as a general rule, has been very unsatisfactory so far in both leagues. With very few exceptions—principally Mathewson, Johnson and Plank—pitchers usually the most reliable have been most unsteady. By every law of precedent this condition should not obtain when the veteran pitchers finally round into shape.

Having seen all our rivals but St. Louis, I am more convinced than ever that the Giants should win the pennant. It will not be the runaway that most of our supporters presumed before the start. It will mean a good, steady fight through the whole course, a condition that should make the current season a most memorable one.

League Strength in East.

The strength of the National League, as evidenced in the first month's play, centered in the East, just as it does in the American. Philadelphia and Brooklyn, rather than Pittsburg and Chicago, seem bent upon most forcibly debating the championship with the Giants.

With Hans Wagner back in the game the Pirates are almost bound to greatly improve their standing. Fred Clarke's pitchers have been woefully off color all along, and this condition has resulted in a very severe handicap for his team. Pittsburg will undoubtedly get back among the leaders, but has so much ground to make up that it can not now be seriously regarded as a challenger of the Giants.

Chicago has a very good looking club outside its pitchers, but is so weak in box material that it can not hope, under present conditions, to cope with any one of the three strongest Eastern clubs.

Cincinnati is in the same boat as Chicago. The Indian Johnston has been Tinker's only reliable pitcher so far. Yet there is fair strength in the Reds' staff if the men ever get to working properly. Chicago can not muster as much twirling strength as Cincinnati, though Evers' team in all other respects is superior.

A very pleasing circumstance to the Giants is the manner in which George Stallings has resurrected the Boston Braves. Out of practically nothing he has shaped a collection capable of giving the best a very stiff argument. This will prove of great help to the Giants, no doubt, as Boston will be able to stop New York's rivals once in a while. Heretofore Boston always managed somehow to make things interesting enough for New York, but never did a great deal against Pittsburg and Chicago.

Giants in Lead Soon.

I think that inside of a very short time the Giants will step out into the lead, and once there our club will never be dislodged. It is a fact that we have not played the game of which we are capable. The fault did not lie wholly in poor pitching, either. We have lost many games because we did not get the most out of our hitting ability and speed.

I suppose we looked too lightly upon the other teams. But if so we have learned a good lesson, for every Giant player will try his very best from now until the season is over. Over-confidence is blamed for the loss of a pennant to the Athletics last year. It will not be our sad lot this season. McGraw is a man who will not stand for trifling.

SPORT.

When Nero lived in ancient days
Men had their sport in brutal ways.
They sat around on cushioned seats
And loudly cheered the bloody feats
Performed by large and lowbrowed gents
Who earned their bread by putting
dents
And fractures in another's dome
To please the populace of Rome
To-day we all would take offense
(We men of high intelligence)
To see a pair of fellows wield
A butcher's cleaver and a shield,
And clout each other on the dome
As in the days of ancient Rome.
We love a nobler form of sport,
A milder and a gentler sort,
And so we pay our hard earned scads
To see a lot of healthy lads
Who race on motorcycle tracks
And break their arms and legs and backs,
Who travel at a fearful rate
And finish in a scrambled state.
And if, perchance, they do not die
We heave a disappointed sigh.
"Ah, yes!" we say while riding home,
"What brutes there were in ancient Rome!"

One Jeff O'Connell wishes to state that the climate of Racine, Wis., is too densely populated with boxing gloves to be healthful.

Still, Mr. O'Connell made a deep impression in Racine. In fact, he made five separate and distinct impressions in the floor.

Nick Altrock, comedian, wants to pitch, whereas some of our Cracker pitchers pitch as if they were trying to be comedians.

From this distance it is hard to tell whether O. Overall is coming back or going back.

Willie Ritchie avers that he will engage in mortal conflict for the small sum of $17,500, demonstrating that there are various ways to obtain money under false pretenses.

Hugh Jennings is said to be on the verge of nervous breakdown, due to a severe case of Ty Cobb, aided and abetted by a losing streak.

FODDER FOR FANS

C. Webb Murphy, disgusted with the weakness of his pitching staff, sent eight scouts to different parts of the country yesterday with orders to gather in some pitchers.

* * *

The Reds defeated the Braves yesterday in a ten-inning battle that was characterized by considerable slugging and many errors.

* * *

The wonderful showing made this season by the Phillies has necessitated the building of six additional ticket booths to facilitate the handling of the crowds.

* * *

And perhaps Horace Fogel, who used to own the Phillies, isn't experiencing a seasick feeling when he notes that the daily attendance figures at the Phillies' grounds is double and treble what they were last year.

* * *

The Dodgers again beat the Cardinals, but failed to move into first place because the Phillies had an easy time defeating the Cubs.

* * *

"Smoky Joe" Wood seems to be back in form again. He held the White Sox to one run yesterday, while his own club piled up ten.

* * *

Ty Cobb's three hits out of three times up were big factors in the defeat of the Athletics by the Tigers.

* * *

Eddie Collins, who is near the top of the American League batting column, harvested four hits out of four times up yesterday.

* * *

"Jake" Daubert, the Dodgers' first sacker, continues to slug the ball. He made a single and a triple yesterday.

* * *

Falkenberg, the elongated "comeback" twirler for the Naps, added another victory to his string yesterday, making eight in a row.

* * *

With the bases full in the eighth inning, Manager Chance up for the second time in that inning, batted out of turn, singled and scored the two runs that won the game for the Yankees from the Browns. When the Browns protested the trick it was too late to be availing.

* * *

The most thrilling game staged on the Polo grounds for a long time was that of yesterday, which the Giants won in the fourteenth 3 to 2. Time and again the pitchers for both the Giants and the Pirates were in "holes," but wonderful fielding pulled them out. The Pirates used fourteen and the Giants eighteen players.

* * *

"Heinie" Zimmerman and Manager Evers, of the Cubs, had a wordy battle on the field yesterday which may result in Evers suspending the third sacker, who, it is said, objects to playing under Evers.

* * *

Evers, by the way, may soon hear other highly uncomplimentary things about his future. President Murphy is on his way to Boston for a confab with his manager, and it is not likely that C. Webb will wax enthusiastic over the miserable showing the Cubs have made so far in the East.

GEORGIA TACKLE DIES FROM TYPHOID FEVER

ATHENS, GA., May 20.—William Luther Arnett, of Odessa, a member of the junior law class of the University of Georgia, died after an illness of four days here this morning from typhoid fever. His body was carried to his home this afternoon, the law class following the casket in a body. He was 26 years old, and in the final games of football last fall he was a star tackle. He was one of the best men physically, mentally and morally in the University.

VOLS BUY NICHOLSON; MAY GET OUTFIELD BERTH

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 20.—President Hirsig announced yesterday the purchase from Louisville of Outfielder Ovid Nicholson, formerly of the Blue Grass League, where he established a great record for stolen bases. He was secured by Louisville from Pittsburg, who drafted him from the Blue Grass. Nicholson will probably replace Daley in the Vols' outfield.

HANLON IN DRAW BOUT.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Eddie Hanlon and Lew Diamond fought a 10-round draw here last night.

Abstinence Will Bring Success

Shun Tobacco, Says Frank Chance

By Frank L. Chance

This is my sixteenth year in major league baseball. For fifteen of those years I was connected with the Chicago club. In that time I have served at practically everything, from all-round utility man to manager.

And, incidentally, I believe that I have about sized up the situation in regard to ball players. In the first place, it is essential that tobacco and drink be left alone. If drink is tabooed it naturally follows that late hours also will be tabooed. It is necessary for a youngster aspiring to succeed in baseball to see to it that his constitution is made strong and that he does nothing to interfere with his physical development.

I have come to the conclusion that a man is not fully developed until he has reached 30 years of age. Possibly after that the moderate use of tobacco will not do him any great injury.

So much for my advice to youngsters who aspire to make baseball a profession.

"My advent into baseball was probably as inauspicious as an event of such a nature could possibly be. There were no brass bands to meet me at the station, and, as I remember, the newspapers of Chicago devoted a short paragraph—maybe it was only a sentence—to the fact that the Chicago team had signed a young catcher.

But I am getting a bit ahead of the story. In 1894-95 I played ball on the Washington College (California) team. With me was a young fellow, also a student at the college, named "Rod" Wagner. During the summer months he was manager or had something to do with a town team at Sullivan, Ill. He asked me how I would like to play ball there. He told me I could get $40 a month and my board and lodging.

At that time I was only 16, and $10 a week sounded pretty good to me, so I accepted. The club didn't make any money and I was "done" out of my pay.

I returned to college in 1897 and took part in a big amateur baseball tournament held in California for youths under 18 years of age. Some of the fellows who entered it of course cheated, but that has nothing to do with my case.

"Cal" McVey, who one time was a member of the Cincinnati team, saw me play and recommended me to "Cap" Anson, who was then manager of the Chicago club. Anson refused to give me a trial. That was either in the spring or early summer of 1897. In the autumn of the same year McVey wrote to "Jim" Hart, who had succeeded Anson, and Hart sent for me.

I was signed as an extra catcher, but after I had been in Chicago for a while it seemed to me as if I had been signed as a sort of make-yourself-useful around the ball park. Any little odd jobs that were to be done and there wasn't anybody else handy to do them I was ordered to pitch in.

If the bat boys didn't show up, I had to look after the bats. If there was no one else to carry the bats from the "bus" into the ball park, or from the ball park to the "bus," I did it. If Hart or some of the veteran players on the club forgot anything, such as gloves and the like, I was sent after them. Even some of the "bushers" who were just breaking in pretty much the same as I was, but who happened to be my seniors by a couple of years, employed me as errand boy for them.

But I stood it. I was in the big show and I was determined to make good. I realized that the best way to make good was to stick around as long as they would let me and watch the cavortings of those who knew. I did, and eventually my time came. And I guess I must have made good.

The club was in need of a first baseman, and I was delegated to cover the bag.

It was in 1906 that I was made manager of the Cubs, after nine years of service. Of course, the rest is what might be called modern history and there is no use rehashing that.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Sammy Harris, manager of Kid Williams, is still hounding Johnny Coulon, the bantamweight champion, for a match. Harris says he is willing to give Coulon a guarantee of $2,000 to fight Williams in a 15 or 20 round bout on July 4.

* * *

Jimmy Hurst, who handles the reins over "Wildcat" Ferns, writes from Kansas City that he has his protege matched to box "Patsy" McIntyre, Canadian welterweight champion, 10 rounds at Winnipeg, Manitoba, June 7. Ferns will also meet Anton La Grave, at Taft, Cal., July 4, for a 20-round fight.

* * *

Tommy Walsh, Mandot's hustling manager, abused his typewriter long enough to let us know that the French baker boy is in great trim for his 20-round engagement with Bud Anderson on the coast Tuesday night.

* * *

If victor over Anderson, Walsh says he has two big fights planned for the Southerner. Tommy expects to send Joe against Rivers on July 4, and Willie Ritchie on Labor Day.

* * *

Leach Cross vs. Tommy Marto and Ray Bronson vs. Phil Cross, is the card arranged for the McMahon brothers for their club in New York next Wednesday night.

* * *

Because Johnny Coulon demanded his traveling expenses from Chicago to Boston the officials of the Atlas A. A., of Boston, have declared off the 12-round bout between Coulon and Charley Goldman scheduled to take place May 28. In place of this bout Matty Baldwin and Dick Gallant will battle.

* * *

Frank Mantell and Larry English will clash in a 10-round set-to at New York Tuesday night. Both are middleweights, having agreed to make 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

* * *

Pittsburg fans are looking for Frank Klaus to win both his battles this month with Eddie McGoorty and Jack Dillon. The Pittsburg boy will surely have his hands full coming out a winner, as both his opponents are running him a close race for the title.

SMITH 10-TO-8 FAVORITE OVER JESS WILLARD

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—In James W. Coffroth's Eighth Avenue arena to-night a couple of huskies will have designs on the world's championship. They are heavyweights and their names are Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith.

Did they belong in any other class there would be haggling and maybe claiming of forfeit if one man scaled a few ounces over a stipulated notch. As it is, Willard will have fifty pounds the better of the poundage and Smith will have no redress, for the laws of the ring, so far as they bear upon avoirdupois, do not hold "north of '58." Smith has been made favorite, the price this morning being 10 to 8. This is in pursuance of San Francisco's policy of pinning its faith to the man it knows when a local fighter and a stranger become embroiled.

Just what the odds would be if the heavies met in the East is not known, but it is doubtful if Smith would be installed first choice. The Gunner's best performance there was his victory over Bombardier Wells, and Willard outboxed Luther McCarty, who beat Al Palzer, who beat Bombardier Wells.

Both Willard and Smith are well thought of around New York and are regarded as fit candidates for the world's championship. Willard lacks the experience of Smith, and this is one reason of the San Francisco fight followers' liking for Smith. Gunboat's vaunted knockout punch is another. It may be that Willard also possesses a knockout punch, but San Francisco has no knowledge of the fact. He certainly has not been advertised in that direction to the same extent as Smith.

CHAPTER II.

SEATED in a chair, with his feet resting on the edge of a small stove in the center of the room, was a short, keen-eyed man in his thirties, reading a copy of Sporting Life. He turned his head as the door opened and swept his eye over the dripping figure that stood, tall and erect, just within the doorway. Pools of water formed on the floor under the stranger and they came together in a rivulet, which crept snake-like along the planking until it found a friendly crack.

"I am looking for Mr. Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta Baseball Club," said the young man.

"I am Bill Smith," replied the man in the chair. "What can I do for you?"

"I want to play ball on your team."

Long experience in managing pennant-winning ball teams (and some that were not pennant-winners) had taught Bill Smith many valuable baseball lessons. One of these was never to pass snap judgment on a ball player; another was never to take a ball player's estimate of his own ability. Nineteen managers out of twenty would have taken just one glance at the bedraggled figure in the doorway and dismissed it with a curt "nothing doing." That was not Bill Smith's way. And his method of handling this particular applicant for a position on his team led to the most surprising series of sensations that ever happened in the history of the national game.

"You look somewhat moist," observed the manager. "Take off your clothes and dry them at this stove. "Whisky!" he suddenly yelled. "That isn't an invitation to take a drink," he added; "I am only calling my attendant."

Smith Surprised.

In response to the summons a colored man entered the room briskly.

"Yassir, yassir," rapiied Whisky, getting busy at once. Many seasons spent in attending to the wants of impatient ball players in that club house had developed an activity in Whisky far beyond the trend of his race. In a jiffy he had every stitch of the young man's clothes off him. Then he brought towels and began to administer a thorough rubdown.

Familiar as he was with all stages of dress and undress, Bill Smith could not repress an exclamation of admiration for the wonderful specimen of young manhood that stood before him, arms outstretched, while the attendant vigorously applied the towel. The manager cast aside his "Sporting Life" and walked completely around the young man, sizing him up from tip to toe. Six feet two inches, perhaps a trifle under that, he appeared to be. Smith guessed his weight to be a good 200 pounds, with not more than five pounds to come off. A well-shaped head and neck were set on a pair of broad shoulders not too square. Even as the stranger's body swayed and his arms moved slightly under the manipulations of the skillful rubber, Smith could see the back muscles ripple. Clean-limbed he was all the way down, waist somewhat tapering, small, but strong-looking hips and legs like a quarter-mile runner. His skin was as fair, almost, as a woman's.

The manager grabbed his chair, turned it around to face the stranger, and sat down in it.

"What's your name," he asked.

"Gordon Kelly."

"Sounds like a good combination. Gordon was a great Georgia soldier and Kelly was a great baseball general. How old are you?"

"Twenty-one next month."

Never Saw a Game.

"What club did you play with last?"

"Never played on any club."

"What?"

"Never saw a ball game in my life."

Whisky promptly ceased rubbing, threw down the towel and moved off with an expression of disgust on his face.

"Pick up that towel and finish your job, Whisky. We're not through with this young man yet," remarked Bill Smith.

"Dis ain't no ball player, boss. Dishyere is jest a common, ordinary white man," expostulated the attendant.

"You never can tell, Whisky; you never can tell," replied Bill Smith, letting fall a philosophic remark that had not a little to do with his success as a manager of ball players.

Whisky took up the towel and started in again, but it was plainly to be seen his heart was not in his work. Whisky lived, moved and breathed in the atmosphere of baseball. Ball players were as food and drink to him. A syndicate of John L. Sullivans, Frank Gotches, Eugene Sandows and Percy Herculeses would have created but a sorry impression on Whisky if it couldn't play ball.

"All right, Whisky, that's enough," declared the manager. "Now, hten bring me a uniform-pants and shirt. That's the stuff. Crawl into these, Mr. Kelly, and draw up a chair and toast your shins in front of this fire while your clothes are drying out. Have a cigar?"

"I never smoke."

"Have a chew?"

"I never use it."

"I should say you didn't by the looks of those molars. Have a drink?"

"I never drink."

"Well, you couldn't get it here if you wanted it. Now, tell me, what put it into your head that you wanted to play ball?"

A Cobb or a Speaker.

"I'll tell you, Mr. Smith," replied Kelly, with a smile of engaging frankness that displayed his fine teeth. "I read in the newspapers about Ty Cobb getting $10,000 a year and holding out for $15,000. It looked good to me."

"Is that all?"

"Not quite. I came from the Georgia mountain country, Mr. Smith. I have never been in a city before. The first time I ever rode in a street car was this morning. But, I know all about baseball, although I have never even seen a ball game."

Whisky waited to hear no more. With a look of immeasurable superiority on his black face, he turned and left the club house. Gordon Kelly continued:

"Now, all this may sound strange to you, Mr. Smith, but I am just as confident that I can soon become a good ball player as I am that you will continue to win baseball pennants."

Bill Smith laughed.

"That seems to put it up to me," he said. "You've got the instincts of a ball player all right. They always put it up to the manager, especially the pitchers. You must want to be a pitcher."

"No, sir; I want to be an outfielder."

"A Ty Cobb, eh?"

"A Ty Cobb, or a Tris Speaker, or better."

Bill Smith grinned. Ever since he broke into the game he had been pestered, off and on, by all sorts of baseball "bugs," but this was about the worst case he ever experienced. Here was a young man who confessed he never saw a game of ball, yet was positive he had the makings in him of a player that would surpass two of the greatest diamond stars the game ever produced. The idea was as absurd as if a street sweeper came in and said that while he didn't know anything about the oil business, he was sure he could make more money in it than John D. Rockefeller. The whole thing was so ridiculous it was really funny. Bill Smith's grin broke into a hearty laugh. But Gordon Kelly didn't laugh. He was never more serious in his life. The manager noticed the expression on the young man's face and his laughter ceased.

A High Standard.

"Better than a Cobb or Speaker, eh? Well, I don't mind saying, Mr. Kelly, you have set a pretty high standard for yourself. Now, then, what do you want me to do, sign you up at Ty Cobb's salary?"

Gordon Kelly shifted his chair so that he faced the manager.

"Nothing like that, Mr. Smith," he said soberly. "Here's my proposition: The Southern League championship season opens on April 10, about six weeks from now. What I want you to do is this: Give me permission to practice here with you and your players until the season opens. If by that time I haven't demonstrated my worth to you as a ball player, just say so, and we will part the best of friends as far as I am concerned. If, on the other hand, I do demonstrate to you that I am entitled to a place on your team, I will ask that you sign me up at whatever salary you care to pay me. There's nothing unfair, or unreasonable in that, is there?"

Bill Smith took three or four puffs of his cigar before replying to this direct question. What sort of person was he dealing with, he wondered. Was this young man simply an extraordinary baseball "bug," or was he mentally unbalanced? Was he baseball crazy, or crazy in the real sense of the word? If he simply had the baseball craze, there was nothing astonishing about that and Bill Smith figured he would have no trouble in handling the case. He had handled many of them successfully in his time. But the other kind of insanity was a little out of his line, and required not a baseball exuert, but an allenist.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

What Caraway Seeds Did

"NO, I thank you," said the man from Michigan. "Not any, thanks. I never eat cake or candy."

"How strange!" murmured the innocent young woman.

"Listen," said the man from Michigan, "and I will tell you the whole sad story. Once I was very fond of cake, and perhaps I would now be if it were not for fear"—here the Michigander looked fearfully over his shoulder—"of caraway seed."

"I can not stand caraway seed. That's why I eat neither candy nor cake, and almost no bread. It is a great hardship."

"But there are some kinds of cake and candy that do not contain caraway seed," objected the innocent young woman.

"No. I used to think there were. Once or twice I thought I had discovered a kind that was free from caraway seed, but it always turned out to have some caraway seed in it.

"I once hired a special baker to bake cake and bread for me without caraway seed in it. I was happy for a while. Then all of a sudden I hit full force into a caraway seed in the midst of my cake. It was a pink cake with gothic ornaments such as I delighted in. It was a cruel shock.

"I flew down the street to the dentist's to get him to give me something for the pain in my tooth, and after he had adpinistered cocaine plentifully I went after the baker. He tried to explain that the boy was responsible for the caraway seed and that it was all an accident, but I chased that baker over the counter and under the counter until I had him.

"Nevertheless, people have put caraway seeds over on me many times since. Sometimes I analyze a piece of cake when I am especially hungry for it, exploring the last crumb. When I am reassured and thrown off my guard I bite into a sixty horsepower caraway seed that makes my hair stand on end.

"There is no help for it. Caraway seed is a universal affliction."

Do You Wonder

That Cupid Is Such an Adorable Rogue When His Mother Was Such a Lovely Trouble Maker?

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

LOVELY he is—adorable, a plotter, irresistible, a knave, sweet as an almond-blossom, a dabbler in trouble, soft-hearted, cruel, "Love" his business, a promiser, offering bitter-sweet, unutterably a darling, unchangeably a rascal! And everybody—('specially those who have been stirred 'round in one of his concoctions which he calls "an affair")—everybody ('specially those who know he is both an almond blossom and a rascal—and yet love him)—everybody wonders why he is all this! Maybe you do not think of his mother when you wonder that. How could he help but be lovable, a rascal, and a contradiction? For his mother he had a creature, herself born of the sea, the sea which is tender and terrible, smiling and stormy, and all mystery—Venus—goddess of beauty, lover of laughter and love and light, herself a rogue and a saint! Playing all day long under the sun and sky of dream-fostering Greece, in the white-circle of her arms, strained to her breast, teased with a rose in her idle hand, looking often into the hot blue of her eyes, hearing her laughter, comrade in her mischief—son of a Beauty—a devotee of Love—a sweet Rogue—how could he be other than what he is!

The forger smiled, and there was malignant triumph in his expression.

"Pooh!" he exclaimed. "Even if I used it, they would never get on to me. See this?" He pointed at the strange contrivance on the muzzle.

Mary's curiosity made her forget for a moment her distaste.

"What is it?" she asked, interestedly. "I have never seen anything like that before."

"Of course, you naven't," Garson answered with much pride. "I'm the first man in the business to get one, and I'll bet on it. I keep up with the times." For once, he was revealing that fundamental egotism which is the characteristic of all his kind. "That's one of the new Maxim silencers," he continued. "With smokeless powder in the cartridges, and the silencers on, I can make a shot from my coat-pocket, and you wouldn't even know it had been done. * * * And I'm some shot, believe me."

"Impossible!" Mary ejaculated.

"No, it ain't," the man asserted. "Here, wait; I'll show you."

"Good gracious, not here!" Mary exclaimed in alarm. "We would have the whole place down on us."

Garson chuckled.

"You just watch the dinky little vase on the table across the room there. 'Tain't very valuable, is it?"

"No," Mary whispered.

A Spectacular Shot.

In the same instant, while still her eyes were on the vase, it fell in a cascade of shivered glass to the table and floor. She had heard no sound; she saw no smoke. Perhaps there had been a faintest clicking noise. She was not sure. She stared dumfounded for a few seconds, then turned her bewildered face toward Garson, who was grinning in high enjoyment.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," she declared, vastly impressed.

"Neat little thing, ain't it?" the man asked, exultantly.

"Where did you get it?" Mary asked.

"In Boston, last week. And between you and me, Mary, it's the only model, and it sure is a corker for crime."

The sinister association of ideas made Mary shudder, but she said no more. She would have shuddered again if she could have guessed the vital part that pistol was destined to play. But she had no thought of any actual peril to come from it. She might have thought otherwise, could she have known of the meeting that night in the back room of Blinkey's, where English Eddie and Garson sat with their heads close together over a table.

"A chance like this," Griggs was saying, "a chance that will make a fortune for all of us."

"It sounds good," Garson admitted wistfully.

"It is good," the other declared with an oath. "Why, if this goes through, we're set up for life. We can quit, all of us."

"Yes" Garson agreed, "we can quit, all of us." There was avarice in his voice.

The tempter was sure that the battle was won, and smiled contentedly.

"Well," he urged, "what do you say?"

"How would we split it?" It was plain that Garson had given over the struggle against greed. After all, Mary was only a woman, despite her cleverness, and with all a woman's timidity. Here was sport for men.

"Three ways would be right," Griggs answered. "One to me, one to you and one to be divided up among the others."

Garson brought his fist down on the table with a force that made the glasses jingle.

"You're on," he said, strongly.

"Fine!" Griggs declared, and the two men shook hands. "Now, I'll get——"

"Get nothing!" Garson interrupted. "I'll get my own men. Chicago Red is in town. So is Dacey, with perhaps a couple of others of the right sort. I'll get them to meet you at Blinkey's at 2 to-morrow afternoon, and, if it looks right, we'll turn the trick to-morrow night."

"That's the stuff," Griggs agreed, greatly pleased.

But a sudden shadow fell on the face of Garson. He bent closer to his companion, and spoke with a fierce intensity that brooked no denial.

"She must never know."

Griggs nodded understandingly.

"Of course," he answered. "I give you my word that I'll never tell her. And you know you can trust me, Joe."

"Yes," the forger replied somberly. "I know I can trust you." But the shadow did not lift from his face.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Wedding Announcement.

Mary dismissed Garson presently and betook herself to her bedroom for a nap. The day had been a trying one, and, though her superb health could endure much, she felt that both prudence and comfort required that she should recruit her energies while there was opportunity.

She was not in the least surprised that Dick had not yet returned, though he had mentioned half an hour. At the best, there were many things that might detain him, his father's absence from the office, difficulties in making arrangements for his projected honeymoon trip abroad—which would never occur—or the like. At the worst, there was a chance of finding his father promptly, and of that father as promptly taking steps to prevent the son from ever again seeing the woman who had so indiscreetly married him.

Yet, somehow, Mary could not believe that her husband would yield to such paternal coercion. Rather, she was sure that he would prove loyal to her whom he loved, through every trouble. At the thought a certain wistfulness pervaded her, and a poignant regret that this particular man should have been the one chosen of fate to be entangled within her mesh of revenge.

He Has a Fight With a Scotch Kid and Comes Out a Victor After a Hard "Scrap."

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

I HAD a fite with a Scotch kid yesterday. It was a close fite; the Scotch kid came close to gitting killed beefoar I felt sorry for him. I got a black eye & that was all.

I doant like fites, & I nevver have a fite until I am forced into it, but this Scotch kid was too fresh. He caim to our house with his father. His father was a Scotch Highlander wich had fought all thru the Boer war & dident git hurted. He was jest like his littel boy. His naim was Duglas McNabb & the naim of the kid was Sandy McNabb.

We went out into the yard to play catch & Sandy wasent a good player at all. He had on kilts; he sed that his mother always asked him to wear kilts, but he sed he was glad of it beekaus he was a true Scotchman & wasent ashamed of it. The Scotch are a undefeated race, he toald me, & these kilts stands for currage & fiteing qualities.

The Irish is pritty good fiters, too, I sed. My father is Scotch, but my mother is half Scotch & half Irish, & I am proud of the Irish blood that is in me.

But the Irish aint a undefeated race, sed Sandy. Maybe thay have been defeated, I sed, but thay nevver knew it if thay was. Why doant you catch the ball onst in a while, butter fingers? I sed to him.

Golf Was His Pie.

I dinna care much for this sorry kind of a gaim, he sed to me. Golf, that is a braw gaim. I doant think much of gold, I toald Sandy. Golf is a high-toned cousin of shinney. Baseball is the gratest gaim in the wurld. It taiks brains to play baseball.

It can't taik much brains to play baseball or the Scotch wud be playin it, sed Sandy McNabb. The Scotch are all brains. Look at Bobbie Burns, he sed. That man knew everything. Shakespeer knew a lot, too, I sed. He knew a littel, sed Sandy, but not as much as Bobbie Burns. Bobbie Burns knew moar than my own father knows, he sed.

Tom Moore was Irish, I sed, & he rote pritty potrey, too. Why doant you catch that ball?

I dinna cair to play moar the noo, sed Sandy. It hurts my fingers muckle, he sed. So we quit, but Sandy dident stop talking.

Bobbie Burns was a all around geenyus, he sed. My father says I am going to look like him wen I grow up & rite potrey, too, to keep up the naim of the undefeated race.

How It Started.

Maybe you will rite potrey, sed I to Sandy, but you will nevver look like Bobbie Burns, you littel wart. Bobbie Burns was always handsome, as a kid & as a man. When you grow up you will prubly look like you look now, only you will have to spend a littel Scotch munny for bigger kilts & you will have red hair on the calfs of yure legs ware you havent any pants, I sed.

I will na be called a wart, sed Sandy. Hoot mon, he sed, taik that, and he hit me in the eye. I didn't know he was going to hit me; that is how I got my black eye. Then I sailed into Sandy, licked him good & proper. I was going to maik fun of him & his underfeated race, but I happened to think that I am 3-4 Scotch, too.

He Was a Great Man

"LOOKING impressive is well worth while," said the drug store man. "Let me tell you a story.

"John Higginbotham, who lived in the town that I came from, was a fine old fellow. But he was of such a retiring disposition that he got the worst of everything. He was so meek and mild that he never went anywhere, saw anything or did anything.

"He was given a back seat on all special occasions. He wore a smile most of the time, so few people ever knew how sensitive he was about his clothes and his personal appearance generally.

"There came a time when the doctor said John must wear spectacles. John was filled with consternation because of his apprehension as to their effect on his looks. He feared that men, women and children would make fun of him.

"Nevertheless, he wanted to wear spectacles, because the President of the United States was coming to town and John wanted to see him. He wanted to know if the President looked like the pictures in the newspaper. So he wore spectacles.

"His legs trembled beneath him when he first ventured out on the street wearing the spectacles. However, the clear vision they gave him was delightful!

"The first friend he met was Gabriel Von Vorden, and John colored to the roots of his hair at the steady gaze with which Gabe regarded him. He could see plainly through the new spectacles, however, that Gabe's face wore an expression of wonder rather than amusement.

"'The very man!' exclaimed Gabe.

"'You see,' he went on to explain, 'there isn't a man in the village to preside on the platform when the President speaks. There isn't a man who looks impressive enough to sit beside the President. But with them specs, John, you can sit right up there and the President will take you for a college professor.'

"That's how it happened that John Higginbotham shared the honors of the occasion along with the water pitcher, the drinking glass and the President's handkerchief. And no doubt the President thought the village was quite a seat of learning, judging from the appearance of the man who sat on the platform, for every now and then he turned around to get the approval of the presiding dignitary, which John was too badly frightened to give.

"John's imperturbability made the President still more anxious to win the approval of such a stern and ponderous individual. As John never turned a hair all through the speech, the head of the nation went on his way thinking how shallow and inconsequential his efforts were in the eyes of the deep man on the platform."

Rod in Pickle.

"How well behaved your children are," said the minister's wife.

"They are perfectly lovely children," added the minister.

The parents smiled proudly, and up spoke little Agnes:

"Pa said if we didn't behave he'd knock our blocks off; didn't you, pa?"

"There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best shall come back to you.

Give love, and love to your heart will flow,
A strength to your inmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what you are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you."

THE FIVE FRANKFORTERS

A Novelization of the Play of the Same Name Now Running in New York

"What is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Instinctly Jacob had come closer to Charlotte. He knew well what was this "business" they were about to discuss.

"My nephew will take care of her," said Solomon firmly, "your presence is not necessary here. We know your views." And Solomon never guessed the riot of feeling beneath Jacob's calm exterior—nor what that feeling might threaten to his own well-laid plans.

"Will you come with me?" Jacob's voice thrilled with all the tenderness he must never put into words.

"But you are quite sure you ought not to be here?" Charlotte asked.

Jacob looked with all the stern fatalism of his race, at the men who were to gamble with a girl's happiness, then he turned with gentle tenderness to his fair-haired cousin.

"Quite sure," he said.

Charlotte shyly held out her hand to her cousin, and the Duke caught the other hand in his own, and as he softly voiced his "Au revoir" he put his lips again to that little right hand.

Was It an Omen?

Was it an omen that as Jacob drew the girl away down the long shady alley of the great hedges, he held his cousin's left hand? And who can tell what the little Princess Evelyn thought as she watched this other pair of cousins strolling beneath her tower window?

The Duke stood at the great hedge gate and watched the little white figure until it was dim and far. There was a long pause. Even Solomon hesitated to speak, when Dame Fate showed such remarkable ability to play his game for mi.

At last Duke Gustavus broke this silence so fraught with meaning for him: "If you plese, gentlemen"—

"Your Highness," said Amschel, hopefully; "you are quite sure you wouldn't rather have lunch earlier and talk business afterward?"

The Duke was a bit amused; "O, no!" said he.

"Oh, well, it was only a suggestion." But just at this hungry juncture, luncheon seemed more essential to our country gentlemen than financing all the reigning princes in the empire.

Solomon spoke: "Your highness, we have considered the question of a loan to you. May I ask how you purpose to invest such a sum as $12,600,000 florins?"

"O, we shall find good use for it, you may be sure. Speaking generally, I shall devote it to the improvement of my circumstances."

Gustavus' tons showed the atriest amusement at his own bankrupt condition. Why trouble himself? Was it not the place of Providence and these very Jews of Frankfort to see that royal treasuries do not collapse for lack of proper support?

"Now, supposing that our firm would advance such a sum as you suggest," said Solomon, "what is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

"Security? Would it be customary to offer security in a matter of this kind?"

Gustavus did not often trouble his royal self with the details of such an every day matter as mere business.

"It is usual," said Amschel, dryly. He was still considering the way in which his suggestion as to lunching had been received.

The Duke looked at Fehrenberg as at a master. "Well, we could pledge a part of my revenue—of my taxes"——

"I must remind your Highness that you have already anticipated the next five years' income," said Fehrenberg.

"But, gentlemen, the produce of the duchy could be enormously increased by a careful and prudent administration."

"Such as I will give it when he is my son-in-law," thought Solomon.

Fehrenberg went on, unconscious of how he was drawing the net closer and closer about the loving hearts of two unconsidered cousins—Jacob and Evelyn.

"There are extensive forests—some coal and mineral springs"——

A Brilliant Idea.

The Duke had a brilliant idea. He broke in: "Cannot I give you my personal security?"

And here was the cue for Solomon to make his great suggestion. The time had come when the die must be cast.

The brothers stirred uneasily—they knew what was coming. Amschel spoke: "Pardon me, I should like to leave you now."

"I don't understand," said Gustavus. And in truth he did not. What turn were matters taking?

Ceremony was beyond Amschel.

"At this point I beg to retire," he said plaintively. "I apologize—but I won't stay."

"Carl, with suave elegance, followed him; but the Duke and Solomon managed to retain Count Fehrenberg and Nathan, the impassive English brother, as seconds in the duel of wits that was about to follow.

There was an elaborate tensity in the atmosphere. The air, that great medium for carrying all "wireless" messages, conveyed in its taut stillness some foreboding to the four men who were about to play fate, of what this moment might mean to many lives.

Gustavus was nervously toying with Evelyn's crimson rose. At a moment like this he vaguely sensed the presence, the influence, of his girlish cousin. "I am getting inquisitive."

You Are Bankrupt.

"Your Highness," began Solomon with solemn intensity; "you give me your permission to be quite candid? You are on the verge of bankruptcy. One thing I believe, and one thing only, can save you, and that is"——

Here even Solomon hesitated.

"Yes, yes?" impatiently.

"A judicious marriage."

Gustavus laughed in evident relief. "We have thought of that, haven't we, Fehrenberg? We looked about for an alliance of that kind, but we could find nothing suitable!"

He considered the beauty of the glowing red rose for a moment, and then, with a sudden access of feeling, buried his lips in his flaming crimson heart. Little Evelyn, little Evelyn, the time has come when all your good fairies must guard you!

"What would your Highness consider suitable?" asked Solomon with grave insistence.

The Duke laughed, but was there an undercurrent of bitterness flowing beneath the nonchalance of that laugh? "Youth, charm, beauty—and—and a great deal of money!"

Still more gravely, Solomon made answer:

"I can offer you these qualities."

The Duke was evidently amused.

"YOU can! I am overwhelmed by the versatility of your enterprise! Where have you found a lady of my rank so admirably fitting?"

Then Solomon voiced a truth so deep that even he who spoke scarcely realized the depth of its sacred import.

"Your Highness, the conception of equality is not the same to-day as it was yesterday. Times change. Your Highness is not one of those who refuse to advance with the times."

Lifting the Cloud.

Always there is a little time of lifting cloud before the storm breaks. Gustavus laughed.

"If you compliment me you will make me suspicious." A line of his Virgil came to his mind: "I fead the Greeks even when they come bearing gifts."

Nathan broke in: "Solomon—your Highness—I thing we should reconsider our proposal"——

"Before I hear what it is," exclaimed Gustavus, impatiently. "Come, Baron, what have you on your mind?"

"I propose that you should marry my daughter, Charlotte."

Duke Gustavus of Taunus rose. His sword clattered against the stone rim of Cupid's fountain. Evelyn's red rose slipped from his fingers and fell unheeded at his feet. Perhaps he could soon trample on that blood-red rose and crush it. Perhaps, but the second sped on.

"Sir! Fehrenberg, you hear? What do you say to that?"

Fehrenberg answered with the stiffness of his utter horror and amazement:

"Your Highness, court etiquette has not considered such an emergency. I have never heard of a precedent for such a proposal."

"I admit I am a little taken back. But you might have chosen a moment when I would have requested you to leave my house instantly as the most convenient conclusion to our conversation."

Solomon answered the Duke:

"Sir, in the choice of the right moment lies the success of the game."

"Are you a gambler?" the Duke asked with slow earnestness.

"All games are not games of chance. I do ont trust to luck, but to calculation."

Knowledge of the World.

"And you calculated on my being driven into accepting your proposal by my dread of bankruptcy?"

"I calculated on my knowledge of the world enabling you to consider its advantage impartially."

"'Oh, I appreciate the advantages," said Gustavus with slow scorn of himself who could be bought, scorn of the man who sold in his turn.

"Advantages to both our families,' said Solomon.

"Sir, you tempt me to speak without reserve. You make me think of a highwayman gone mad; who says to me: 'Stand! Take my money! It is yours. Refuse it at your peril!' Such audacity is magnificent, but a little unusual."

He looked at the red rose that lay on the ground, and then picked it up very gently and threw it in the clear waters of the Fountain of Cupid. Alas for the Princess Evelyn! Alas for Jacob! "Yet your persistence commands a certain admiration and attention."

Solomon bent over the Duke, who had sunk to a seat on the fountain's edge. "And your Highness will come to a decision? This is the great moment. If your Highness will but say 'Yes' now, the agreement shall be signed at noon to-morrow and the money handed to you at once."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

What Has Gone Before.

Having backed heavily the peace of Europe Nathan Rothschild is disconcerted to find that Napoleon has burst forth again, and all the banker's outpouring of gold for national development in England will be endangered. The banker hastens to Waterloo. There are the English, who have guaranteed to him that the peace of Europe shall be maintained. From a height above the field of battle Rothschild sees the whole of it. Rothschild sees that the wealth of the world lies in London, his for the taking if he can be first on the ground with the news of the battle. He hurries to London, and next morning appeared on the Exchange. That night he went to bed $10,000 000 richer.

Seven years later a great banker left Vienna, another Naples, another Paris and another London, and traveled to a little old house in Jews' Lane, in Frankfort-am-Main. It was a gathering of the house of Rothschild. Perhaps some king was very hard pressed for money. "Little Jacob" opposes Solomon's plan to marry Charlotte off to the Duke of Taunus. He is backed up by Frau Gudula. The Duke makes love to Charlotte.

Natural History Lessons

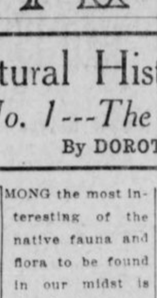
No. 1---The Hook Worm

By DOROTHY DIX.

AMONG the most interesting of the native fauna and flora to be found in our midst is the hook worm. This valuable creature belongs to the category of domestic animals (genus henpeckis), and it forms a useful and indispensable adjunct to households where no maid is kept.

The hook worm is indigenous to the United States, and it flourishes most plentifully in cities, only a few rare and scattering specimens of it having ever been found in the country. Scientists differ concerning its history, but a consensus of the best authorities indicates that its origin was contemporaneous with the coming in of the fashion of frocks that button up the back, and that the great original hook worm was discovered by a fat woman with short arms.

From this small and humble beginning sprang the millions of hook worms that now pervade the land and make glad the waist places of swell dressers by pulling together belts that do not meet by four inches. Thus do we see how marvelously nature provides for all contingencies.



In appearance the hook worm is an elongated and tubular - looking animal with two feet, two antennae (technically known as hands), and two eyes situated near the top of its head, which is not infrequently bald. Also it has a tongue, which it shoots off with great rapidity and volubility upon occasions.

Apparently the eyesight of the hook worm is very poor, as it is unable to see a button unless it is the size of a silver dollar, and it cannot distinguish an invisible loop from a chance to tear a hole with a hook in the back of an imported dinner gown.

Likewise the hook worm is very awkward and clumsy in the way in which it manipulates its antennae, it having been estimated that it makes 11,496,851 different motions and dabs and fumbles in trying to insert a perfectly plain hook in a perfectly obvious eye.

These faults of the hook worm are accounted for, however, by scientists on the theory that it is still an imperfectly developed animal, and it yet lacks about seventeen additional hands and four more pairs of eyes in order to perform satisfactorily the function for which it was created. Doubtless these will be acquired in the process of evolution, and our great-great-great-great-granddaughters may rejoice in the possession of hook worms with a full complement of faculties that will be able to do their appointed tasks and fasten up a French confection before you could say "Scat!"

Little is known of the habits of the hook worm, as, although it is a domestic animal, it absents itself from the house all day, only returning at night to be fed. Its period of greatest activity is just before dinner and theatre time, when it gets busy and may be heard making weird and profane noises.

The hook worm is exclusively a lady's pet, men seeming to have no use for the animal, though they are so highly esteemed by women. It should be stated in this connection, though, that opinion among women is equally divided as to whether it is best to catch a hook-worm when he is young and break him in to your own style of fastenings, or to tie up with a hook worm that has been thoroughly trained by some deceased lady who was addicted to lingerie shirt waists. Much is to be said in favor of each side of the question; but, alas! there are many problems in life, and even the young hook worm who is conscientiously bent on doing his duty sometimes gets in bad, for in his excess of zeal he displays a skill that sets the woman who owns him to guessing.

The hook worm has a very limited vocabulary, the only two expressions that it has ever been heard to use being "Helen Blazes" and a word that is muffled and indistinguishable, but that sounds as if it started with a big, big D.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"WHEN engaged in washing dishes," a woman of exalted ideals advised in a woman's magazine, "fix not your mind upon the sordidness of the task. Rise above it by looking with appreciative eyes at the delicate tints in the china, its pure transparency, the softness of its curves. Learn the history of Dresden, Limoges and Sevres, and the task becomes an intellectual joy."

Daysey Mayme Appleton read, and what she read sank in to come out the next morning when she found herself confronted with the task of washing greens.

A young man, of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, was coming and he had expressed the yearning that comes to all in the spring to have greens for dinner.

She had bought a peck in the belief that there would be enough left to last a week, and when she poured out cold water preparatory to washing them she fixed her mind on all that they represented: Springtime, freshening showers, the sunlight, the singing of the birds, blue skies, the drowsy humming of insects and fragrant zephyrs that stirred the leaves to dancing motion.

She washed and washed and rewashed, digging back into her brain for some knowledge of botany. "That is a scutate," she said, taking a leaf through seven waters, "and this is a reticulate, and here is a beautiful example of the pinnated."

She took the leaves through the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth waters, unconsciously thinking less each time of the tender zephyrs that had stirred the leaves to dancing, the bright sunlight and the gentle showers. There was an accumulation of sand that proved her task was only begun, and she washed the greens through four more waters. Her back ached, she stood first on one foot and then on the other; her hands began to feel as if they belonged to the washerwoman, and her spirits began to droop.

When she submerged the greens into the twelfth water her soul was submerged with them and it never rose again to the plane of exaltation advised by the woman of lofty ideals in the magazine. At last her task was completed and she put the greens over to boil and there seemed a Great Plenty, and when she dressed to meet the man of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, they boiled and boiled and boiled, looking a little less every time she lifted the lid.

"It's a whole peck of greens," she said with a sob at the dinner table an hour later, putting before her Best Beloved a dish in the center of which was a little green mess no bigger than a bug that had been stepped on.

Being Kind to Children

"IT doesn't pay to be too kind to children," said Gritzen.

"Why?" asked the motherly woman.

"Well, I'll give you an illustration. We had a man come to dig our garden. I know well how it hurts to dig. An innocent man can do enough digging in three hours to lame himself for three weeks. We were all glad to see the man come, and he seemed to be a very good sort of fellow. He was fond of children. He said our twins would not bother him at all.

"William and Theodore hustled into their overalls and went out to watch the man, delighted to have him for a companion. The conversation for the first half-hour was something like this:

"'Me afraid of snakes?' said the man. 'Well, I should say not! I eat 'em.'

"'Do you like 'em?' asked Theodore.

"'Oh, no; I just eat 'em to show that I can.'

"'Don't they make your stomach ache?' asked William.

"'Not a bit. If they did I would just swallow a little fire and burn 'em up.'

"'Well, ain't you really afraid of 'em?'

"'Me? Afraid? Ha, ha! That makes me laugh.'

"'Well, ain't you?'

"'No; I'm used to 'em. I'm a circus man. Did you ever see the man in the cage with the lions at the circus?'

"'Yes; I saw a circus once, and there was a man right in the cage with the lions!'

"'I'm that man. Nothing can scare me. But I've quit the circus business for a little while. I took to diggin' just for a change.'

"After an hour or so the conversation was more like this:

"'Here, you rapscallion! Move your foot!'

"'What for?'

"'What for? I want to dig there. I'm not supposed to dig your feet. Here, let them things alone!'

"'What for?'

"'Because your father will want to be able to find them. Stop throwing that dirt. Don't you hear your mamma knocking on the window pane at you? Here, who done that? I'll have to tell your mamma on you. You kids are a nuisance! Get out of here!'

"It's all right being nice to children for a while, but, you see, they can stand it a lot longer than you can!" concluded Gritzen.

Probably Right.

School children know a great deal more than they used to. In fact, some of them, in their own opinion, at least, are quite capable of tutoring their tutors.

"Those kiddies I teach are as knowing as an encyclopedia," said a teacher a week or two ago.

"In what way?" asked his friend.

"Well," replied the scholastic person, "the ether day I set a problem in arithmetic: 'A rich man dies and leaves a million dollars.' One-fifth is to go to his wife, one-fifth to his son, one-eighth to his brother, and the rest to the hospitals. What does each get?'"

"Yes?" inquired the friend, not very interested.

"Back came the reply from the smallest boy in the class: 'A lawyer, sir.'"

: Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women :

How Girlish Willet Kershaw Employs Simple Methods to Retain Her Natural Loveliness

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

"BEAUTY is exactly like a spring that wells up clear and sparkling from a pure source," said Willette Kershaw to me.

Slowly and gropingly I was finding my way back to sunshine and the simple facts of every day after the final curtain had fallen on the five artistic plays at the Princess Theater, in New York, and "Any Night" was a memory instead of a presentation of a shamefully bitter reality. But it was a potent, poignant memory, and the sweet, wistful-eyed girl sitting with me in the quiet office had just presented a death-in-life portrait of Mary Magdalen of to-day.

"Take the sad, sodden consumptive I have just portrayed; she has the same features; she is really a different phase of the Fancy I had just been in "Fancy Free." But the butterfly Fancy is saved, her wings are not trailed in the mud, and even though she is not a fine, deep, spiritual creature, she is still a woman, with the joy-of-living in her veins—so she is sweet and pretty. And the other creature, with a different story written on her eyes and mouth, is almost repulsive to look upon."

"I have never posed as a beauty. The only facts in my appearance that please me are hair and eyes—so I take very good care of them—and of the source of the fountain."

Her Secret.

"Ah, do tell me how you care for the beauty you—don't think you possess," said I, eagerly. Willette Kershaw is so genuinely girl—so dainty and attractive in the well-bred simplicity of simple blue serge and black and white hat that she seems an ideal model for Miss Sweet and Twenty to follow over the road to Springtime loveliness.

"It is not much of a secret—and yet so few seekers after beauty seem to have heard of it," said Miss Kershaw, whimsically. "It is just keep clean! Wash and wash and keep very, very clean—clean in body and mind and soul, until you fairly exhale a perfume of sweet, sane, cleanliness. Plenty of water for my hair, and plenty of cold water to bathe tired eyes. That is how I keep my pet assets in good condition. And I don't neglect the lesser favorites."

Miss Willett Kershaw in Two Charming Poses.

The clear eyes looked at me with the grave sweetness that makes you feel that this slip of a girl knows life and the facts thereof. Not a trace of make-up of any sort gave to Miss Kershaw the appearance of being anything she was not.

"No," said this observing young woman in answer to my interrogatory glance, "I do not make up for street use. Apart from questions of good taste it is not pretty. And I can't see why nice girls want to take their ideas of beauty from women they would never know. They would not deliberately copy the lack-luster, don believe anything-worth-while-will-ever-happen-again expression that a woman who has given all the world for nothing naturally comes to have. Then why copy her artificial complexion?

"Cleanness and simplicity," I mused. "To you these make beauty."

"These and being in tune with life," answered the girlish star. "If a girl is bitter and discontented—for just cause or merely because she is deliberately cultivating the bitterness in her nature, she gets down-drooping lips, a pinched expression around her nostrils, and, worst of all, her eyes lose all power to radiate magnetism and charm.

The Bitter Side.

"I speak from experience," she went on, in a hushed, hurt little voice in which I could hear the vibration of deep tenderness. "My mother was killed in a railroad accident. That was a time of anguish and bitterness. I hated the sun for shining. I could have murdered the birds for singing. I almost felt a desire to take the life of any happy human being I met. I almost went mad because I let my sorrow turn my whole nature to bitterness.

"Probably there is in all the world scarcely one girl who has come to be 20 without knowing life's hurts. Think of the young girls you know whose faces have a sad and wistful expression whenever they relax and stop playing the game of keeping up appearances.

"Perhaps bitter experiences are best of all, as Elbert Hubbard has said. They are if you use experience instead of letting it use you up.

"I'd like to tell all girls that bitterness and paint spoil the face with about equal thoroughness. And the two in conjunction! They just destroy every claim to beauty.

"Life is pretty impersonal. I found that out when I was in the 'Brown of Harvard's' company, that the indignant Harvard students abused because the star (Mr. Woodruff) wore the Harvard athletic H, to which, of course, he had no right. I could not be resentful nor bitter over their treatment of me; it was just what they considered the wrongful use of a sacred old custom that they were protesting against.

"Well, life is like that—impersonal—she is not abusing you; she is just going ahead, and if you get in the way you will get hurt. So you have to learn that, and take things impersonally—and keep in tune."

"Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
And a trouble is what you make it;
And it isn't how much you are hurt that counts,
But only—how did you take it?"

I quoted.

"Exactly," assented the pretty philosopher. "If you keep clean and sweet and simple, and in tune with life, the fountain of beauty must sparkle in the clear sunlight."

High Society.

A new-rich dowager, only recently removed from the environs of a Western packing house, has afforded much amusement while clambering up the slippery rounds of the social ladder. One day, after she had returned from circumnavigating the globe, she essayed to entertain a drawing room with a boastful account of her travels. She had been everywhere, and her flow of English was augmented by frequent wavings of her bedamoned hands and forceful noddings of her tiaraed head.

"Did you see the Dardanelles?" asked a sprightly debutante.

"And the Himalayas?" inquired another fair young bud.

"I dined with them in Paris," replied the dowager, triumphantly.

And she wondered why everybody smiled.

His First Mistake

ONE of the first tasks they set the new curate, who was handicapped by youth and inexperience, was to investigate the bona fides of a "widow woman" who had applied to the church for help. He departed nervously on his errand and knocked, as ill luck would have it, at the wrong door.

"How long has your poor husband been dead, my good woman? What number of children have you? Are any of them working? If so, what amount of money are they earning altogether?" were the questions he fired, like shots from a revolver, at the slatternly woman who answered his summons. "I presume I am addressing Mrs. Harriet Smith?" he added, noticing, with alarm, that she looked angry.

"No, you ain't," answered the woman, snappishly. "My name is Selina Jackson, my bairns go to school, and my 'usband's doin' what is necessary to a plateful of steak and onions at this very moment. Would you like to know anything else? Where I was born? When I was christened? At what age I started courtin'? Perhaps," she concluded, sarcastically, rolling her tattered sleeve up above the elbow, "you'd like to see my vaccination mark before you go?"

But the bashful curate, redder in the face than a poppy, was already in full flight.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Severe Case of a Philadelphia Woman—Her Symptoms.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I had a severe case of nervous prostration, with palpitation of the heart, constipation, headaches, dizziness, noise in my ears, timid, nervous, restless feelings and sleeplessness.

"I read in the paper where a young woman had been cured of the same troubles by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I threw away the medicines the doctor left me and began taking the Compound. Before I had taken half a bottle I was able to sit up and in a short time I was able to do all my work. Your medicine has proved itself able to do all you say it will and I have recommended it in every household I have visited."—Mrs. Mary Johnston, 210 Siegel Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Bad Case.

Ephrata, Pa.—"About a year ago I was down with nervous prostration. I was pale and weak and would have hysteric spells, sick headaches and a bad pain under my shoulder-blade. I was under the care of different doctors, but did not improve. I was so weak I could hardly stand long enough to do my dishes.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and happy and I have begun to gain in weight and my face looks healthy now."—Mrs. J. W. Hornberger, R. No 3, Ephrata, Pa.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

TRADING IS DULL IN COTTON RINGS

NEW YORK, May 20.—Further covering by shorts sustained the cotton market at the opening to-day, despite further rains throughout the cotton States. First prices were unchanged to 2 points higher than last night's close. Spot people again bought July, which lent aid to the strength of the market, but the ring crowd was inclined to sell on favorable weather conditions and promise of further rains over the Eastern and Central belt.

There was not much buying of new crop positions and prices in these options soon fell some 2 to 3 points from the opening, while July and August held steady around the early high level. The bears seem to be following out their recent policy of covering short commitments on all favorable weather or crop advices. After the call offerings were freer, while the buying was concentrated. The principal absorption seemed to come from Wall Street operators.

The principal point of the detailed weather records yesterday is the rather general rainfall in the Augusta, Ga., district, which averaged about .90.

During the forenoon the market was rather quiet and prices fluctuated within a very narrow range. The feeling was general that weather reports and crop advices were too good to sustain the market and further advances would encounter selling.

The market continued dull and inactive throughout the afternoon session, but general sentiment continues bearish and there was a disposition on the part of the average trader to sell on all rallies. Until further developments throughout the belt the trade can not look for nothing but a dull and narrow market.

At the close the market was steady with prices 1 point higher to 4 points decline from the final quotations of Monday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Liverpool came in poor again and spot sales were very small, total 4,000 at 4 points higher quotations. Weather conditions continue very favorable. A moderate rainfall was general overnight in Texas and South Texas, and showers were quite general over the remainder of the belt. Temperatures were normal or above. Indications are for rainy weather; slightly cooler in the northwestern quarter; partly cloudy with scattered showers in the rest of the belt.

Our market opened 4 points higher on July, unchanged on new crops, but soon lost 5 points on new crops. Selling, however, is small and cautious. Bull operations with July in New York may carry the whole list higher and the market has acted lately in support of news that certain strong interests were buying new crops in anticipation of the usual short scares during the summer.

Western Texas: Fair and colder to-night; Wednesday fair.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—The steadiness of the market to-day was credited to the buying of July by spot houses. Wilson and Waters were the principal buyers after the call and Mitchell and Hentz were the leading sellers of new crop months. McFadden, Mohr and Henneman were good buyers of July and many traders were advocating a setback in the market from present levels.

* * *

On the call McElroy bought 7,000 bales of October. Springs was a good buyer also. The selling came from Bashford, Mitchell, Hicks, Wiggins and Schill.

Warehouse stocks in New York today are 82,105 bales; certificated, 70,563 bales.

Liverpool cables: "American middling fair, 7.27d; good middling, 6.93d; middling, 6.73d; low middling, 6.59d; good ordinary, 6.25d; ordinary, 5.91d."

* * *

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows perfect conditions; cloudy in western States, rainy in Central and South Texas, partly cloudy in rest of the belt. Nice rains in Texas, Oklahoma and rather general showers over the Atlantics; warm weather.

Rainfall: Oklahoma City, .26; Abilene, .40; Fort Worth, raining, 1.09; Taylor, raining, .42; San Antonio, raining, .16; Shreveport, Augusta, .12; Little Rock, Atlanta, .38; Vicksburg, .02; New Orleans, .54; Chattanooga, .01; Wilmington, .34; Del Rio, .08; Jackson and Corinth, Miss., .04; Birmingham, .18.

* * *

Weather indications are for unsettled rains over the northwestern quarter of the belt and cloudy to scattered showers over rest of the belt.

* * *

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "Monday's cotton market, on the heels of needed general rains, took exactly the opposite course from the course the talent expected it to take. It advanced. Of course, explanations, as plausible as prompt, were forthcoming, but the bald fact remained that the market refused to decline in the presence of a widely exploited bearish influence of real importance. Bulls said the reason therefor was the great number of shorts who, of late, have counted on general rains, which were included in the weather forecast a few days ago, to weaken the market and give them a chance to buy in their commitments. Bears said the big fellows were buying and the crop killers were busy, and that, in the presence of such conditions, little shorts had become frightened and scampered to cover.

"It can not now be denied that the weather conditions over the belt, as a whole, are favorable. The weather bureau promises favorable weather throughout the week. Consequently, current weather can not be interpreted as a bullish factor. But the bull makes out a pretty good case for himself by exploiting lateness of the crop both East and West and by the use of trustworthy advices from many sections, showing that repeated replanting has placed the crop squarely on the defensive. Nobody claims that the chance for a large crop has been eliminated, but many do claim that the status of the crop to-day does not warrant childlike confidence in an arbitrary result approaching the outturn of 1911-1912."

Austin, Texas: "Crop prospects are very bright. It would take a long drouth to overcome the moisture which now is in the ground. Promoters of curtailing acreage to artificially boost prices are considerably worried over the increase in acreage, which is larger than in any previous year. There is a very large increase in virgin ranch regions of West and South Texas."

COTTON MARKET OPINIONS.

Logan & Bryan: "We feel that a further advance is not at all unlikely.

Hayden, Stone & Co.: There seems to be nothing in the outlook to stimulate bullish activity as long as the weather is favorable for the progress of the new crop.

WEEKLY GOVERNMENT WEATHER REPORT

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Precipitation occurred during the week throughout the cotton region, except that there were small areas with no precipitation in Texas, Arkansas, Southeastern Louisiana, Georgia and South Carolina.

More than two inches of precipitation occurred at scattered stations in East Texas, Southeastern Oklahoma, Louisiana, Georgia, Florida and Mississippi. The greatest weekly precipitaion, 4 inches, occurred at Paris, Texas. Mean temperatures ranged from 1 degree to 4 degrees above normal, except in Florida and Southeastern Alabama, where there was a deficiency of 1 to 2 degrees. The weekly mean temperature ranged from 64 to 74 degrees over the eastern, from 70 to 76 degrees over the central, and from 70 to 78 degrees over the western portion of the cotton region.

The lowest weekly mean temperature, 64 degrees, occurred at Asheville, N. C., and the highest, 78 degrees, at Del Rio, Texas.

STREET WATCHING DISSOLUTION PLAN

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 20.—There was considerable irregularity in the stock market at the opening today. Canadian Pacific was the weakest feature, opening 1⅜ lower at 236¼. Rock Island was also under pressure around 16⅛ for a loss of ⅝.

There was a little business in Brooklyn Rapid Transit, which gained ⅛. Amalgamated Copper, which began ¼ higher, soon lost its gain and declined fractionally.

Among the other declines were American Can, ⅛; American Smelting, ⅛; Chino Copper, ¼; Erie, ¼; New York Central, ⅛; Pennsylvania, ⅛; Union Pacific, ⅛, and United States common, ⅛.

Southern Pacific began ¼ up, but soon lost it. Reading declined fractionally, after opening unchanged, but soon recovered.

The curb was steady.

Americans in London were dull. Canadian Pacific in London slumped on Berlin selling.

After the first half hour the market became active and stocks took an upward movement. Steel recovered its early loss of ⅝. Union Pacific and Copper were up ⅛. At 86⅞ Southern Pacific was up ⅜. Brooklyn Rapid Transit advanced ⅛. Missouri Pacific up ½; New York Central rose to 100. Call money loaned at 2¾.

Stock movements were without importance in the last hour. Fractional gains were made by Amalgamated Copper, Southern Pacific, Union Pacific and Northern Pacific. American Can sold around 32¼ for a fractional loss. St. Paul was off ⅛.

The market closed steady.

Government bonds unchanged. Other bonds steady.

Wheat—No. 2 red ....97 @104
Corn—No. 2 .... 59½
Oats—No. 2 .... 38 @ 39

CHICAGO, May 20.—While the May wheat future reached 91⅛ to 91¼ as the high price for the day, it sold off to 90⅝, where it closed with a loss of ⅜c. This fact showed that those who are long the May wheat are not anxious to boost it up to a high level, as there is a great deal of wheat at Duluth that is accessible for May delivery here, and it will be brought down here without any great amount of ceremony. The July and September closed with losses of about ½c. The world's available supply, as compiled by Bradstreet, showed a decrease of 6,421,000 bushels of wheat, 1,410,000 bushels of corn and 757,000 bushels of oats.

Corn closed ⅛c lower to unchanged and oats were ⅜c to ½c lower.

St. Louis reported Toledo as a buyer of 30 cars of No. 2 red wheat there at a bargain counter price.

Provisions were without any change to speak of.

ASSEMBLY SKIRMISH WILL AID ATTACKED SEMINARY, DECLARES DR. STELZLE

Union Theological School Not So Anxious for Presbyterians to Take It Under Its Wing, He Says---The Church Made Move for "Wedding."

By Rev. Charles Stelzle.

Everybody had supposed that the relationship between Union Theological Seminary and the Presbyterian General Assembly in the last year or two was that of courtship, with the General Assembly as the suitor.

At least this is the impression that one might have secured by listening to the debates and particularly the resolutions adopted at previous assemblies, with reference to this matter.

The Assembly proposed union—it was the aggressor—but while the basis of union, or, at least, of closer relationship was accepted by Union Seminary, the Assembly seemed in a mood Monday to "break the engagement," and it found itself Tuesday morning in the position of returning the little "tokens of endearment" which had been confidently placed in its hands.

Here is the resolution adopted by the Assembly of 1911, which was the basis of the approach to the divorced but "haughty body," who yet was believed to have tender feelings toward the Presbyterian Assembly.

Resolution of Last Year.

Whereas, The Union Theological Seminary in the city of New York was founded by Presbyterians and largely endowed from Presbyterian sources; and

Whereas, Some years past there developed a condition which led to the severing of the rations which had existed from the the organization of the seminary, between it and the General Assembly; and

Whereas, We are persuaded that there are in the faculty and in the directorate of Union Theological Seminary men who are in accord with evangelical Christianity as expressed in the Standards of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America, and who are zealous in all good work for the growth of the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ in the world; and

Whereas, We believe that it would be a signal manifestation of the spirit of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, who prayed "that they all may be one," for Christian brethren, under the gracious guidance of the Holy Spirit, to remove all misunderstandings, alienations and antagonism, and to become vitally and aggressively united in the doctrine of our beloved church in the work of bringing nations and the world to Christ; therefore, be it

Committee Named.

Resolved, That the Assembly hereby authorizes the moderator to appoint a committee of nine, to consist of five ministers, of whom the moderator shall be one, and four ruling elders, none of whom shall be connected with the directors and faculty of the said seminary, with a view of the re-establishment of relations between the seminary and the General Assembly on the basis of the Standards of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America; this committee to report at the next Assembly.

This committee, after much discussion, finally submitted to Union Seminary two proposition, which were to serve as the basis of closer friendship.

The first of these questions is this: Will the board of directors make such provision as will secure to all Presbyterian students in attendance upon Union Theological Seminary such adequate instruction in the departments of church government, discipline, organization and history as will qualify them to answer satisfactorily the questions on these subjects, propounded, according to church law and usage, at their licensure and ordination to the Presbyterian ministry?

The second question is this: Will the board of directors make such provision as will secure to all Presbyterian students in attendance upon Union Theological Seminary such adequate instruction, as an integral part of their theological training, in the special system of doctrine contained in the symbols of the Presbyterian Church, as will enable them to answer satisfactorily the questions respecting Presbyterian doctrine, propounded according to church law and usage, at their licensure and ordination to the Presbyterian ministry?

But They Cut "Her" Dead.

"Yes," said the directors and faculty, "we accept your proposal." This may have been "too sudden"—not to the seminary, but to the committee. Anyway, when it made its report Monday, it said some "awful nice things" about the "lady," but it "cut her dead."

"We'll just be a brother to you," said the committee, "and maybe some time in the future—five years, perhaps—we'll see how we feel toward each other; and then possibly the wedding will take place."

Now, this was all very beautiful, and it seemed perfectly reasonable that the big, strong General Assembly suitor should dictate the terms in this courtship, but—

"Nobody asked you, sir, she said," was what Dr. Brown remarked, in substance, when he got the platform.

This was a stunner. Most people had supposed that Union Seminary was eager to come back into the Assembly. Dr. Brown's simple little speech rather nonplussed them for a while.

"Union Seminary isn't asking for anything. It comes here because you've asked us to come. We wanted to meet you, and perhaps become better acquainted with you, so that we might work out together some of the big problems in the church," Dr. Brown said in substance.

As Usual, There Are "Rivals."

But, like in every love story, there were "rivals." They appeared in the presentation of the minority reports. Dr. John R. Davies, who presented minority report No. 1, is a director in Princeton Theological Seminary, Union's most bitter enemy. Dr. F. C. Monfort, who brought in minority report No. 2, is a director in Lane Theological Seminary, which isn't too fond of Union. Now, rivals don't, as a rule, say nice things about the girl who is really being courted by the great big strong fellow whom they like, too.

It wasn't surprising, therefore, that such phrases as "Hindoo philosophy is being taught at Union Seminary" and "unitarianism is the belief of its professors," and even worse charges of downright dishonesty should be made by the men who represented these rival institutions. To be sure, they were perfectly sincere—aside from their intimate connection with these conservative institutions, rivals always are sincere.

But the fact remains—Union Seminary had fulfilled its contract in the particular proposition made to it by the committee of the Assembly and was then turned down.

Now Union Theological Seminary is working for an endowment of a million and a half—the exact amount doesn't matter much, for Union probably will plan for even bigger things when it secures this sum, because this theological university—big, broad, but thoroughly evangelical—is growing at a tremendous rate in influence and in enrollment.

Row Will Aid School.

Yesterday's skirmish in the General Assembly will help to increase both Union's endowment and its number of students. It has always been so in previous fights. Perhaps when the newspapers this morning printed the story that the Assembly was in a frame of mind to rebuke the seminary for standing by what seemed right to its directors and faculty, somebody immediately wrote out a check for a good big sum and sent it to Dr. Francis Brown, its calm, cultured, Christian president.

The other men in this fight are Christian men, too. Both Dr. Davies and Dr. Monfort are noted for their fine admirable Christian characters.

That's what makes this whole controversy so sad and so difficult to adjust. It's a case of good men and true differing, not merely in personal matters, but they all truly believe that they are "fighting the battle of the Lord." And when a man believes that, he'll die rather than betray his trust.

However, Union Theological Seminary and the General Assembly will some day be "wed." Not in just the way that some folks wish, but they'll fight together against the common foe of injustice and sin, and then they'll find that the hearts of these men on the other side are right, whatever may have been their theological differences—and a man's good heart is a whole lot bigger thing than his theological convictions, no matter how profound.

Meanwhile other suitors have been making advances to Union Seminary. The Methodists, Baptists and Episcopalians have made arrangements through which students from their bodies will receive special instruction in their peculiar doctrine and polity. This probably forever precludes the possibility of making Union Seminary a distinctively Presbyterian institution.

SOUTH CHURCH SETS FORTH BELIEFS

Revised Epitome of Doctrine Is Drawn Up and Presented by Committee.

Here is the "Brief Statement of Belief," submitted to the Presbyterian Church (South) to-day by Dr. J. M. Wells, for the committee named for the purpose:

Explanatory Note.

Inasmuch as there is some difference of opinion concerning the status and use of any report which it may make, this committee desires to state that it does not understand that the Assembly instructed it to provide a statement of doctrine which shall be a substitute for, or an addition or an amendment to, any of the documents contained in the constitution of the church, or of any part thereof.

It respectfully suggests that, in the event the Assembly approves this report, the statement submitted shall be referred to the executive committee of publication, to be printed and circulated as may be deemed best.

The Statement.

I. God.

God is a spirit, infinite, eternal, and unchangeable; all-powerful, holy, wise, good, true, and just, hating all sin. He is merciful and gracious, long suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance; this truth is summed up in the Bible statement, "God is love." He exists in three persons, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, who are one God, the same in substance, equal in power and glory.

II. The Bible.

The Word of God, written by men inspired by the Holy Spirit, is contained in the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments, and are the will of God. It is the revelation of God's will for man and of man's duty to God, and is the only infallible and authoritative rule of faith and life.

III. God's Purpose.

The eternal purpose of God includes all events; it is holy and wise, and does not deprive man of freedom, nor make God the author of sin.

IV. Creation.

For the manifestation of his own glory, God created the world and all things therein, whether visible or invisible, and all very good. He made man after his own image; male and female created he them, with immortal souls, endowed with knowledge, righteousness and holiness, having the law of God in their hearts, and power to fulfill it; and yet under a possibility of transgression, being left to the freedom of their own will.

V. Sin and the Fall.

Sin is the violation of God's law, either by omission or commission. Our first parents, being tempted by Satan, disobeyed God's command, and so by their own choice fell from their original state of innocence and communion with God, and came under the power of sin, the penalty of which is eternal death. All men, by reason of their relationship to Adam as their representative head and common ancestor, are born with a sinful nature from which all actual transgressions proceed; and out of this condition no one is able to deliver himself.

VI. Salvation.

God, who is rich in mercy, so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to be the Saviour of sinners. The salvation thus provided is freely offered to all men, and is sufficient for all, but becomes efficacious only in those who believe in Jesus Christ unto eternal life.

VII. Election.

Before the foundation of the world, God the Father chose unto Himself in Christ a people whom He gave to His Son, that they should be holy and without blame before Him in love. Those who come to years of discretion receive this salvation only through faith in Christ, being regenerated by the Holy Spirit. Those who die in infancy, and all others who are incapable of exercising choice, are regenerated and saved by Christ through the Spirit who works when and where and how he pleases. We thus declare that God's electing grave has peopled heaven with a multitude that no man can number, and has never sent one soul to hell.

VIII. Christ the Redeemer.

The Lord Jesus Christ, being the eternal Son of God, became truly man, being conceived by the Holy Ghost and born of the Virgin Mary, yet without sin; so that He is both God and man, and the only perfect mediator between God and man, by whom alone we can come unto the Father. By a life of perfect obedience and by His sacrificial death, He satisfied divine justice, made a perfect atonement for sin, and reconciles us to God. He rose from the dead and ascended into heaven, where he makes continual intercession for us; and He sits at the right hand of God, clothed with honor and power, subduing His people unto Himself, ruling and defending them, and restraining and conquering all His and their enemies. He will come again to receive and reward His people and to judge the world.

IX. The Holy Spirit.

The Holy Spirit, the third person of the Godhead, applies the redemption purchased by Christ. He persuades and enables men to obey the call of the gospel, and dwells continually in every believer as the spirit of truth, of holiness, of power and of comfort, and is thereby the author of all Christian experience.

X. Justification by Faith.

Everyone who humbly relies upon Christ alone for salvation and in repentance confesses and forsakes his sins, is pardoned and accepted as righteous in God's sight, solely on the ground of the perfect obedience and sacrifice of Jesus Christ. Everyone thus pardoned and accepted is adopted into God's family, and becomes an heir of God and a joint heir with Jesus Christ.

XI. The Christian Life.

The Holy Spirit imparts spiritual life by the direct operation of his power; so that, being born from above, we are the children of God, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which are not the ground but the fruits of salvation. Dwelling in Christ's people, he purifies them more and more from sin, enables them to render a cheerful and loving obedience to God's commandments, and perseveres in his sanctifying work in their hearts until at last they stand perfect in the presence of Christ in glory. Believers may at times backslide, growing indifferent and cold, and even falling into grievous sins; yet God does not cast them off, but chastens them, and restores them through repentance to fellowship with him.

XII. The Church.

We acknowledge one universal church, the same in all ages, and of which Christ is the head. The church invisible consists of all the redeemed. The church visible is composed of all those throughout the world who profess faith in Jesus Christ, our Lord, together with their children, and it is the duty of all believers openly to profess their faith by uniting with the church. The church exists to bring to Christ those whom the Father has given him, and to establish the Redeemer's kingdom. The mission of the church is spiritual, and its work is to witness to the truth of God to the ends of the earth, and to preach the gospel to all men in every generation. We believe in the separation of church and state. The scriptural form of church government is by elders or presbyters, chosen by the members of the church; but we do not regard the form of government essential to the church's existence. We recognize the validity of the ministry and sacraments of all evangelical churches, and seek the unity of the Spirit in the bonds of peace. Ministers, elders and deacons, at their ordination, are required to subscribe to the system of doctrine contained in our standards, but the sole condition for membership in the church is a credible confession of Christ as Saviour.

XIII. The Sacraments.

There are two sacraments, baptism, which symbolizes the work of the Holy Spirit, and the Lord's Supper, which symbolizes the sacrificial death of Christ. Sprinkling or pouring is the Scriptural mode of baptism, but this mode is not essential to the validity of the sacrament. Children of believers, before reaching the age of personal accountability, are to be baptized on the faith of their parents, who in the sacramental act enter into covenant relations with God. We invite to the Lord's table all who love Him in sincerity and truth and who are in good and regular standing in evangelical churches.

XIV. Death and Resurrection.

The souls of believers are at their death made perfect in holiness; and do immediately pass into glory, and their bodies, being still united to Christ, do rest in the grave till the resurrection. At the resurrection, believers, being raised up in glory, shall be openly acknowledged and acquitted in the day of judgment, and made perfectly blessed in the full enjoyment of God to all eternity; but the wicked shall go away into everlasting punishment.

XV. The Final State.

There are but two states of future existence, heaven, the home of the redeemed, and hell, the abode of the finally impenitent. There is no purgatory, nor is there any probation after death. Man retains his identity after death, and there will be recognition in the future life. We believe in the ultimate and complete triumph of the Saviour's kingdom, and with all His followers in all ages we toil and pray for the speedy coming of the day when our glorious Lord shall see of the travail of His soul and shall be satisfied.

Ministers' Ranks Thinning; Missionaries Increasing

The first report heard at the Tuesday morning session of the United Presbyterian Assembly was that of the woman's board. This report showed a larger number of unmarried woman missionaries sent out the past year than any preceding year. The year closed without a deficit. The report was adopted without discussion.

Reports on the state of religion and education were unanimously adopted.

An attempt was made to bring up the fight between the home mission board and the board of publication for control of Sabbath school work. Dr. John A. Henderson presented a resolution that a special committee, consisting of seven men not connected with either board, be appointed to investigate the conflicting claims, and report the results of this investigation to next year's Assembly. Dr. McGill opposed its appointment, saying it would hinder the Sabbath school work. Other delegates supported him.

Dr. L. W. Williamson, of Topeka, Kans., declared it seemed that neither board was hurt but that a certain worker was, and asked the Assembly to find a position for the worker referred to. Dr. Russell replied that the report yesterday merely showed the worker's term had expired. Dr. Henderson then withdrew his motion.

Ministers Decrease in Number.

It was shown by the report on theological seminaries that the number of deaths in the ministerial ranks exceeded the number of young men entering by 11, and recommended that a campaign be waged presenting the claims of the gospel ministry to the young men in the colleges. The report was adopted.

It was voted to change the time of adjournment from 12 to 12:30 after to-day.

The session on Monday afternoon was featured by a stormy debate over a recommendation made by the committee on bills and overtures to reaffirm the action of last year's Assembly in taking control of mission Sabbath schools and Sabbath school extension work from the hands of the board of publication and putting it in charge of the board of home missions.

Dr. W. B. Smiley, secretary of the Sabbath school work, which office would be abolished if the recommendation were adopted, made the charge that politics was at the bottom of the recommendation. Mr. Smiley stated to a Georgian reporter that some one outside the mission board was responsible for the recommendation being made.

The courtesies of the floor were extended to Dr. W. J. Reed, chairman of the Sabbath school committee. Dr. Reed stated that Dr. Smiley wrote him several weeks ago that a plot was on foot to take all matters pertaining to the Sabbath school work from the hands of the board of publication.

Dr. Reed said that he had investigated these charges and found no evidence of such a plot. He stated further that the Sabbath school work was one of the most important parts of church work, and that the home mission board desired to retain control of it for another year.

A motion was next made and carried by a majority of about ten to put control of the Sabbah school work back in the hands of the board of publication. This motion later was killed. An amendment was then made and unanimously carried that the present arrangement be continued until next year. This leaves control in the hands of the home mission board, and abolishes Dr. Smiley's office.

It was decided that The Christian Instructor be disposed of at the best possible terms and as early as possible, the committee having found that it was being operated at a loss of about $500 a month.

Dr. A. R. Robinson, of Pittsburg, Pa., was chairman of the committee on bills and overtures. The other members were Rev. W. J. Grimes, Rev. W. J. Buchanan, Rev. J. B. Work, J. A. McLaughty, Hon. J. H. Staveley and W. H. Ramsey.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

The Light Brahma Well Established Breed of Chickens

Has Been Bred in This Country for Sixty-five Years—Good Winter Layers.

The Light Brahma is one of the old well-established breeds of chickens. It has been bred in this country for about 65 years—at first in a rather crude state, as compared with what it has attained to at this time; then it was termed rather gawky, rather irregular and ill-shaped in its lines of make-up. To-day it is a breed of sturdy and commanding appearance, yet graceful and symmetrical in every line of its make-up. At least, so it appears to all who admire a chicken of some size. It is the heaviest chicken in the standard category. Cocks or old males weigh 12 pounds; hens and mature females, 9 pounds; cockerels, 10 pounds, and pullets, 8 pounds. This makes a pretty heavy quartet, with a combined weight of 39 pounds. With all this it is not an inactive breed like the Cochins.

They are good winter layers, and lay fairly well all the year. Their eggs are large, with a heavy brown shell, and command a better price in the Boston market than any of the lighter or white shell eggs. The Brahma is well adapted to cold climates and does very well in warmer ones. It has what is known as a pea comb, composed of three rows of small points running side by side and are connected at the base where it joins the head. It is a breed of good length in sections composing. Neck is of good length and full feathered and well arched; back of good length, broad and rather flat at shoulders, with a long concave sweep to tail; tail is full and well expanded all around, but rather short, with short sickles; breast and body are broad and deep and of good length, and standing upon stout, heavy thighs and shanks of medium length.

As to color, it might be described in a few words as being white, with a neck distinctively striped with clear black stripes down the center of each feather, ending in a point near the end of each feather. The tail is glossy black, with a good supply of coverts black edged with white. In the female the two top feathers are edged in white or gray. The wings, when folded, show no black, but when opened, the primaries are black, with a faint white edging; the secondary or upper feathers should show black above the quill or stem and white below. A little mixture of black is seen in the toe feathering. A dark or slaty under-color is not a defect, if it does not show upon the surface. In the make-up of a good specimen stamina is shown in every line. A slim or delicate Brahma should not be tolerated. They are not a success as a rule. They do not fly and they are easily confined by the ordinary wire fence.

Indigestion.

Judge F. J. Marshall: Have noticed among my chickens and turkeys several that are droopy. Their crops are soft and when I hold their heads down a watery substance runs from their mouth. Can you tell me what the trouble is and a remedy for it?

Plainsville, Ga. MISS M. M.

ANSWER—You do not say what you are feeding, but I take it that you are feeding too much sloppy or wet cornmeal mash or something of that nature, which has caused indigestion among them and a fermentation is going on in the crop, preventing it from passing on to the gizzard as quickly as it should. If this is the case, we would advise you to change the feed to a good mixed cracked grain ration, fed dry and in limited quantities. Do not try to crowd them with feed. Let them get hungry. Provide yourself with some pulverized or granulated charcoal. It may be about the size of a half grain of wheat. Give each one affected about a half teaspoonful twice a day, whether they have any feed or not, for a day or two does not matter. Let them have some good green food and be sure they have good sharp grit. These are very essential to health. We think with the above treatment and cautious feeding in small quantities until they become normal will bring them around all right.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Building Plans Call for $100,000

Not only did several interesting sales of real estate take place Tuesday, but announcement was made of a considerable amount of building, aggregating in money nearly $100,000.

J. J. Haverty will build a two-story and basement residence, costing $30,000, on the west side of Peachtree Road directly north of Jack J. Spalding's "Deerland." Mr. Haverty has received plans from Edward E. Dougherty, architect, and will let the contract shortly. This residence will be of white tapestry brick, and some of the features will be French windows, a loggia and wide terrace in front, a sleeping porch, a sun parlor and tile roof. Mr. Haverty has six acres of the original "Deerland" estate, with a frontage of 300 feet and a depth of 800. In this immediate neighborhood are the E. R. DuBose place and the recently completed home of Judge E. W. Born.

Flat to Cost $43,500.

Mrs. Ida A. Turner has filed an application for a building permit on a two-story brick veneer flat at 48 West Peachtree Place, the building to cost $43,500. The Fulton County Home Builders have the contract and will be the architects. This firm has plans for a $3,300 cottage at 191 Wabash Avenue, and to build for Mrs. Joseph E. Leppert a two-story frame dwelling on Moreland Avenue, at a cost of $5,000.

S. Cunningham will build three one-story frame dwellings at 334, 358 and 360 West Fair Street, at a total cost of $2,700, and a cottage at 62 Parsons Street for $700.

Mrs. J. E. Wragg will build two one-story frame dwellings at 47-49 Coleman Street, at a total cost of $1,300.

Porter & Swift's Sales.

Four sales of the Porter & Swift Real Estate Agency, through E. V. Moore, netted $17,950, and Mr. Moore has also sold a West Cain Street parcel at a price which is withheld.

Arthur Deveney has sold to a client of the Porter & Swift agency 126 East Cain Street, a three-story building, on a 20 by 140-foot lot, for $6,500; to Davis W. John, for a client, 35 South Prado, Ansley Park, 50 by 200, for $5,500; for a client to Davis W. John, 95 Williams Street, a cottage on a 40 by 67-foot lot, for $3,250; a residence lot on the south side of the Jackson Estate Drive, Brookwood, 50 by 200, for $2,700. Also to W. P. and T. M. Callaway, for a client, the southwest corner of West Cain and James Streets, 50 by 53 feet, for a figure that is withheld. Property around this parcel has brought $230 a front foot.

Piedmont Avenue Sale.

Mrs. Mary Elizabeth Kontz has bought from James S. Middleton, of South Carolina, the residence at 616 Piedmont Avenue, for $12,800. This lot is 85 by 195 feet. The cash consideration was $2,800. The sale was handled by W. L. & John O. DuPree.

Colonial Home at Auction.

On Thursday, May 29, at 5:30 o'clock, the two-story brick colonial house at 101 West Tenth Street, just west of Spring Street, will be sold at auction on the premises by the Ralph O. Cochran Company. This home is about a year old, is of nine rooms and the property of W. C. Harper, who bought it from the builder and present occupant, E. W. Long. The lot is 100 by 200 feet. Terms have not been definitely fixed, but the cash required will be $1,500 to $2,000.

Ellis Home for Rent.

The well-known Ellis home at 547 Peachtree, on the east side of the street between North Avenue and the Ponce DeLeon Apartments, has been offered for lease by a leading real estate and renting agency, at the rate of $100 a month for twelve months. The lot is 50 by 150 feet and the two-story residence is one of the most substantially built in Atlanta.

WEST END.

LUCILE AVE.—Near Peeples St., we can sell you a 10-room, 2-story house on extra large, elevated lot for $6,000. This place has a loan bearing only 5 per cent interest, balance easy. Owner a non-resident and wants to sell.

BEECHER ST.—Near Lee; this is a nearly new 6-room cottage on lot 50x200 feet. This is a genuine pick-up at the price—$3,250—and look, only $300 cash and balance $30 per month.

St. Charles Avenue Lot.

THIS is the cheapest lot on this street. See us for price, terms and location.

SACRIFICE.

We have a new 6-room bungalow that we want to sell on Monday at $1,000 less than what it is worth and ought to sell for. It is close to car line and has city water, sewer connection, nice bath, and sidewalks have been passed up. The way to buy property safely is to buy in a coming section and get the certain enhancement in valuation.

This house is 45 Sterling Street, close to McLendon Street car line. If you want to buy a home at a price you will never get again, go out and look at it and come to my office and we will close a bargain.

A Treaty Japan Has Steadily Dodged

The Japanese Have Not Lived Up to the Treaty They Are NOW Invoking in Their Own Behalf

Japan, we now know, has not only protested specifically against the California alien land bill on the ground that it is contrary to the treaty of 1911, but on the more general basis that it is an offense as between nations and not in harmony with the traditions and friendship existing between the Mikado's Government and that of the United States.

The reply of our Government is that there is no violation of treaty, and that the broader question of offense is a proper subject for diplomatic negotiations.

But with how clean hands can the Japanese Government complain of a violation of treaty?

If, under its terms, Japanese subjects have irrevocable rights to own and lease land in the United States, there must also be an equivalent. Citizens of the United States must have the right to own and lease land in Japan. Have they? The Japanese Parliament passed such a law, but IT HAS NEVER BEEN PROMULGATED. It has never been put into force by imperial decree. It is a dead letter.

That law, even as it stands, is not an equivalent such as Japan is claiming in the United States. An American corporation, for instance, cannot acquire lands or any other rights in Japan, even under the statute, unless a special charter is issued and the application approved by the Minister of Home Affairs.

The law reserves to the Japanese Government the right to exclude aliens and alien corporations from any place the Home Minister may deem advisable. The law excepts Hakodate, Nagasaki, Formosa and many other places where Americans might want to go.

JAPAN HAS NOT LIVED UP TO THE TREATY IT IS NOW INVOKING IN ITS OWN BEHALF.

As for the broader and more serious protest against an "offense between nations," this newspaper has already pointed out that the sovereignty of the United States is thereby challenged more than the sovereignty of Japan.

For eighteen years, until quite recently, the State of New York maintained a law prohibiting aliens from holding land. Indeed, that law was repealed only at the just-closed session of the Legislature and the repealing measure signed by Governor Sulzer.

IN ALL THOSE EIGHTEEN YEARS NO NATION OBJECTED TO THAT LAW AS A NATIONAL AFFRONT.

Any such objection would have been an international ABSURDITY.

It is the sovereign right of the United States to determine who shall and who shall not be citizens, and each State has its own right to determine whether individuals not citizens shall own land in it.

To challenge these sovereign rights is to step out of the domain of international law and custom into the arena.

Bryan's Still-Water Statesmanship

What shall one say when the registered pilot of the ship of state refuses to face anything but fine weather and a smooth sea?

Mr. Bryan is not willing to superintend the foreign relations of the United States if there is going to be any serious trouble about them. He says: "I made up my mind before I accepted the office of Secretary of State that I would not take the office if I thought there was to be a war during my tenure."

Now that Mr. Bryan's mind is thoroughly made up about it, he says he feels sure there will be no storm while his discriminating hand is on the helm.

These assurances may reveal a tender heart in Mr. Bryan, But they expose the incompetence of his executive character and the shallowness of his political thought. The implication is that wars are simply sinful and that they occur only when unjust or unamiable men are put by unhappy accident into places of power.

Mr. Bryan has lived and prospered so well by the mere facility of his tongue that he seems to have lost all sense of those real and passionate contradictions of human interest and honor that spring out of settled rights and moral convictions and that can not be disposed of by any form of words.

Imagine, for example, what would happen if Mr. Bryan's free and unlimited coinage of fine words were to be applied to such an issue as that raised by the suggestion that the "national honor" of Japan requires the admission to American citizenship of hordes of Orientals on equal terms with Germans or Frenchmen.

IMAGINE, IF YOU CAN, THE MEEK SUBMISSION OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO A JUDGMENT OF HAGUE LAWYERS THAT THIS COUNTRY OUGHT TO CONSENT TO BE ORIENTALIZED WITHIN THE NEXT TWENTY YEARS!

The plain truth is, of course, that nations, as they are now constituted, can not keep clear of war for a single year save as "strong men, armed," who keep their palace that their goods may be in peace. Brave and foreseeing men have indeed a right to look forward to a day when nations that now confront each other with menaces may be so transformed in their social and economic substance that all marked antagonisms of interest shall be canceled and dissolved.

BUT IN THE MEANTIME IT IS NOTHING LESS THAN A GRAVE MISFORTUNE THAT THE CHIEF SPOKESMAN OF THE UNITED STATES IN ITS FOREIGN RELATIONS SHOULD BE A STILL-WATER STATESMAN, WHO DECLINES IN ADVANCE TO FACE THE POSSIBILITY OF A STORM, AND WHO RELIES SOLELY UPON RAPTUROUS PHRASES TO MEET DANGEROUS EMERGENCIES.

Rev. John E. White on "Marriage in a Hurry"

By REV. JOHN E. WHITE.
Pastor Second Baptist Church.

A YOUNG lady of Georgia went to Vienna to complete her musical education in the great conservatory there. She met her fate in the person of a splendid young Austrian. The distance from her home in Georgia and the impatience natural to love's young dream seemed to make it impossible for the marriage to take place in due and ancient form at the bride's home. Desiring to proceed with the wedding ceremony in Vienna, after a full correspondence with the bride's family, a stubborn obstacle presented itself in their path.

Our Hurry-Up System.

The Austrian Government interposed a startling amount of legal red-tape with reference to the bride. It was required that legal evidence be transmitted through the Austrian Consul at Savannah that the young lady in question was of marriageable age, health record, moral character; and that her father was a citizen in good standing—all to be certified to in writing and attested by Government officials and ministers of religion.

Fortunately the young lady had no difficulty in complying with the Austrian marriage laws. The Germans are a long-headed people. They have discovered that the marriage altar is a national strength or a national weakness.

This discovery has not yet been made in Georgia and in this country. If statesmen had planned for it a more efficient hurry-up system for marriage than ours could not have been devised. There are enough forces of self-interest brought into play to facilitate matrimony in Georgia to constitute a practical conspiracy to get as many people married as possible.

The State and County laws of license make it profitable to the officers to issue licenses.

Over the doors of the office of Ordinary in Fulton County might be written the motto: "Marriage for Revenue Only," without serious offense. Justices of the Peace profusely welcome the touch of romance and the tingle of silver which brighten their dusty offices.

The preacher and the preacher's wife ardently believe in people getting married, and not for reasons too numerous to mention. So from the man who sells rice and cow-bells to the liveryman and the instalment furniture shop there is a chorus of "Hurry up, John, and hurry up Mary, and get off."

If the young foreigner had met his fate in Georgia, our hurry-up system, which asks no questions, and trusts to matrimonial luck, with a spur on both heels, would have convinced him that the people of this country were looking for a chance to marry off their young ladies quite regardless of whom they married.

So we have the fiddler to pay. Hurry-up marriages demand hurry-up divorce courts. The serious vows of wedlock, their sacred sanctions and solemn responsibilities, so vitally concerning the welfare of society and the happiness of souls, are bound to lack impressiveness since they are left almost entirely to a passing mention in the wedding ceremony which the average bride and bridegroom in this country wants hurried up and over with.

People are not likely to stick together through thick and thin if their marriage is cheaply conceived and unimpressively consummated.

"Hold Up, There!"

Another penalty but recently regarded as mentionable is the gross inattention to physical fitness. What brides can not be expected to know parents should insist on knowing.

The perpetuation of disease through the blood channels of the race begins at the unguarded marriage altar.

If we believe what the physicians are testifying, the marriage altar is society's "bloody angle," when it ought to be the open sesame of health, happiness and the growing of a stronger and purer race.

The demand for a "Hold up, there!" can not be long postponed. The only voice that can utter it effectively is the voice of the State.

The talk among ministers about organization for the purpose of refusing to perform a wedding ceremony except on conditions is practically useless. The Legislature must impose the necessary conditions with proper penalties attached.

Parents are perfectly ready to be protected, but are helpless to protect themselves. Proper marriage laws would educate public opinion against the matrimonial speed mania. Jacob could be trained to wait at least three months for his Rachel, and Rachel would not have to have her Jacob on a week's acquaintance.

It ought not to be possible for anybody's best man to swear successfully that the bride is 18 years old because the bridegroom told him so. The Ordinary is protected by the lie that is sworn to. The preacher is protected by the certificate of the same lie which has received the seal of the Ordinary.

Georgia is behind every other Southern State, except South Carolina, in the looseness with which marriage licenses are issued and in the practical absence of any requirements of vital statistics.

June is coming and our hurry-up system will celebrate itself.

Qualities That Popularize Men With Women and Women With Men

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX
Copyright, 1913, by Journal-American-Examiner.

JUST what are the qualities which make men popular with women and women with men? This query ofttimes puzzles wise heads to answer.

Some of the ugliest men physically have been great Lotharios; and women without marked beauty have been heart winners.

Men with no decided talents; men of no social prowess; men without money; men with shadowy records, have all succeeded with women where other and seemingly more attractive and certainly more desirable men have failed.

A bigamist who was under engagement of marriage to thirty girls, when he married two of them, says his success resulted from "always talking to women about themselves."

That is the secret of most friendships and all love affairs, and the explanation of most divorces lies in the fact that the man or woman ceases to talk about the virtues and charms of the other.

That is why beautiful women seldom make men happy, and why plain women frequently fascinate and hold.

It is not a peculiarly feminine trait, this love of hearing oneself analyzed and made the leading topic of discussion—it is merely HUMAN.

Might Gain Fiancees.

Men claim to be above it, but in truth they are delighted to be the absorbing subject of conversation when a woman is the converser. Any girl, however devoid of physical charm, if she possesses refinement and tact, can win the man she admires if she understands the art of keeping him entertained about himself and gives him to understand in a subtle manner that his characteristics, his aims, his desires and interests are matters of continual observation and study to her. The woman who undertakes such a course of action must be modest, however, and in no way thrust herself upon the man's notice. She must not be bold or self-assertive, for these are repulsive qualities to a man.

She must simply utilize her opportunities and be patient. A man, on the contrary, can make his opportunities to see a woman, and when he uses boldness and self-assertion in his suit she is all the better pleased, so long as he continues to occupy her time by talking about her, with only occasional references to himself and other people.

Therefore, it is not difficult to understand how, while an earnest woman might be slow in succeeding in her wish to win and hold the regard of one man, a busy, trifling man might accumulate thirty fiancees with ease and celerity.

Yet, on the other hand, woman has more latitude than man for conversation of this kind. A man is perfectly willing a woman should discuss his faults, and delights in having her analyze his sins and weaknesses (before marriage), with occasional laudations of his virtues; while a woman limits him to the recounting of her charming qualities and to anxious solicitude for her welfare.

The only fault she allows him to refer to is her ability to break hearts, or her cruelty to men who adore her, or her delicate physical organization. Most lovers talk of the charms of their sweethearts during courtship. Few husbands make the virtues of their wives a topic of conversation in the family circle—hence the divorce court is busy.

Few lovers are so tactless as to devote many minutes to lauding the virtues or charms of other women to their sweethearts.

Accuse Wives of Jealousy.

But, many husbands enjoy this topic of conversation, and accuse their wives of jealousy if they seem uninterested.

The successful bigamist surely would know better than to pursue such a course; so while better men have been losing their wives and sweethearts he has been winning an embarrassment of riches.

The way to win a woman lies through praise of her.

The way to lose her through praise of other women.

Which Is the Better Business Policy, He Asks, the Spending of $60,000,000 for Our Navy or War Costing This Country $2,000,000,000?

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

A BUSINESS man who refused to spend $100 in order to save $1,000 would be regarded among business men as miserly and incapable.

The representatives of a rich nation who would refuse to spend fifty or sixty million dollars within two years to save an expenditure of two thousand million dollars ought inevitably to be classed as stupid, miserly and unpatriotic. The comparision is perfect with the conditions of to-day.

War with Japan is not only possible, but it is not improbable within the present month.

If we have war with Japan the experts who know and not merely the gossips who speculate are a unit in the belief that within a few weeks Japan could easily capture the Phillipines, the Hawaiian Islands and the Sandwich Islands.

Might Land an Army.

It is also agreed that Japan might land an army by trasports through Puget Sound upon American soil, make a demonstration against our beautiful City of San Francisco and invest the Panama Canal for bombardment or surrender.

The value of these island possessions are insignificant as compared with the after expense. This nation could not afford and certainly would not afford to suffer this indignity at the hands of the Japanese soldiers and sailors. If it took the last dollar of our money and the last contingent of our soldiers the United States would be compelled to vindicate its honor and its prestige by recapturing what Japan should win and fortify against us.

There is not a statistician of war who does not believe that this gigantic effort would cost our country between one thousand and two thousand million dollars.

The records of the Russian-Japanese war vindicate the belief that this is not an extravagant estimate of the cost.

Two thousand million dollars is a prodigious sum even in the day of magnificent figures in money.

These two thousand million dollars, plainly stated, would represent just exactly what the stupid, selfish, unpatriotic and mercenary statesmanship of our recent Congresses have cost this country.

Japan Would Be Silent..

There is no escaping the arraignment. If the naval programs which have been presented to Congress within the last ten years by men who are paid by the Government to tell the Government what is needed for the national defense had been adopted, as they ought to have been, by the representatives of the people there would have been a navy large enough to make this war, which is now probable, not only improbable, but impossible.

Japan would never have voiced a comparative ultimatum and certinly never have ventured upon a war against such a navy as our programs had required.

The men who have been responsible by their blindness and parsimony for our debilitated navy and our unpreparedness in national defense must inevitably be held responsible for the record—responsible for war and its expense and its humiliation.

It is useless and weak for the men to plead that they did not know and could not foresee.

It was their business as statesmen, looking beyond the present moment, to know the probabilities of the future. Their intelligence has been appealed to by information and by argument from experts and veterans so as to leave them no excuse save obstinacy not to have understood and to have foreseen.

The narrow selfishness of local and district legislation and the desire for personal preferment will always be held as the explanation of the unpatriotic and parsimonious policy which has crippled our navy and made possible the humiliation that seems to be at hand.

The only possible reparation which these blind and stingy statesmen can make to the country and to the people is to stand ready to vote now for prompt and liberal expenditures for the national defense.

"Pork Barrel" Politics.

They must do more than this. They must realize that the present instance, which follows fast upon an incident that occurred two years ago, may be and probably will be followed by a similar incident at a near-coming time.

And, whether or not the present difference with Japan should be composed or should result in a prodigiously expensive war, the representatives of the American people in Congress can only vindicate their stupendous folly and narrowness of the last decade by voting in succeeding years for a naval program which will make impossible the shameful conditions and the frowning menace of to-day.

Hereafter the American Congressman who votes to squander millions upon the pork barrel and his own re-election and refuses to expend the necessary millions for his country's peace and its defense must be branded as incompetent and treasonable and sent back to the people who were foolish enough to send him to Washington.

of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.

THE Pharisees are not all dead yet.

Bob and his sister Polly, in a crowd, walked all the way home from Sabbath school, a full quarter of a mile, each with an arm around the other. While passing over the little bridge they kissed with a smack that was heard above the rippling of the brook.

Bob and Polly had not been home ten minutes when their invalid mother was heard to shriek, "If you grown children do not stop quarreling you will kill me dead!"

Bob and Polly are Pharisees and simpletons.

A Baalam on Broadway, or in Bowery, who, through a megaphone, proclaims his love for his mother, is not to be trusted by her or by any one else. If she has any sense or decency herself she will, upon hearing him, pluck him gently by the sleeve and say, "Don't do that, my boy! Come home and whisper it in my ear or speak it to me with your eyes or manifest it with some little deed of kindness or act of courtesy."

Baalam is a Pharisee and a fool!

Schnickman, at the club, loudly and repeatedly declared that his wife was the sweetest, prettiest little woman in the world. He offered to bet $25 that he loved her better than any other husband ever loved a wife.

Schnickman was cashier at the ice plant. One night he absconded with the funds. A week later his wife and babies disappeared.

On entering Schnickman's house his bondsmen and the officers found a closet full of empty jugs and bottles. In the dining room they found a buggy whip that showed much use. Schnickman kept no horse and was never known to drive one.

Schnickman is a Pharisee and a villain!

When the old prophet Elijah, thinking there were none righteous left on earth, went up on Mount Horeb, as he was commanded, he stood to hear his Lord's condemnation of a way-way world.

Elijah was probably surprised when God's wrath was not proclaimed in the tempest, or in the earthquake, or in the thunderlight.

After these noisy things had passed by a still small voice informed Elijah that there were yet seven thousand Israelites whose lips had not kissed Baal.

The Still-Small-Voice was no Pharisee.

Mother-love ever expresses itself "Sweet and low, sweet and low," like the wind of a Western sea, while her little one, her pretty one, sleeps.

Mother is not a Pharisee.

Love may get itself expressed in the odor of a violet or in the dream of a kiss or in the memory of a silent sunset.

True lover never blusters.

True love is not loud.

ATLANTA PILES UP ELEVEN RUNS

Billy Smith's Men Wallop Kroh Hard, While Chappelle Is in Excellent Form.

PONCE DE LEON BALL PARK, May 20.—The Crackers trimmed the Turtles here this afternoon to the tune of 11 to 0.

The game was called at the end of the first half of the sixth on account of rain.

THE GAME:

FIRST INNING.

Love fouled out to Smith. Baerwald out, Bisland to Agler. Schweitzer flied out to Bailey. NO RUNS.

Long walked. Bailey sacrificed, Ward to Abstein. Alperman drove one through Ward too hot to handle, got two bases on it and Long scored. Schweitzer let the ball get by him in left field for an error and Alperman scored. Welchonce lined out to Shanley. Smith got a base on balls. Bisland drove a three-bagger to deep left center and Smith tallied. Bisland tried to score when Seabaugh let the ball get by him, but was out, Seabaugh to Kroh. THREE RUNS.

SECOND INNING.

Ward flied to Long. Abstein lifted one to Welchonce, who let it get away for an error and Abstein took second. Butler flied to Long. Shanley out, Bisland to Agler. NO RUNS.

Agler walked. Dunn bunted to Kroh, who threw to second to get Agler, but it was too late. Chappelle fanned. Long popped out to Butler. Bailey fanned. NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

Seabaugh out, Alperman to Agler. Kroh popped to Bisland. Love walked. Baerwald was an easy out, Alperman to Agler. NO RUNS.

Alperman hit one through Ward. The game was then held up a few minutes on account of rain. Welchonce bunted and beat it to first for a hit. Smith sacrificed out, Kroh to Abstein. Bisland cleaned up with a nice single to center, scoring Alperman and Welchonce. Agler got another base on balls. Dunn bounded one to Ward, who retired Bisland at third and then doubled Joe at first to Abstein. TWO RUNS.

FOURTH INNING.

Schweitzer stung one into the mud at Smith's feet, who threw him out at first. Ward popped out to Bisland. Abstein was out, Chappelle to Agler. NO RUNS.

Chappelle popped out to Abstein. Long slipped a single past Ward, but was caught napping off first, Kroh to Abstein to Butler. Bailey out, Shanley to Abstein. NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

Butler flied to Bailey. Shanley popped a high foul to Dunn. Seabaugh out, Bisland to Agler. Up to this period only five balls had been hit out of the infield by the Turtles. NO RUNS.

Alperman doubled to center. Welchonce bunted to Kroh and beat the throw to first and Alperman circled to third. Smith hit a pop foul to Abstein. Bisland was walked by Kroh. Agler grounded to Kroh, who threw to Seabaugh. Pat dropped the ball and all hands were safe. Alperman scored. Dunn singled to center and Welchonce and Bisland scored. Chappelle drove one through Butler too hot to handle. Agler scored and Dunn wept to third. Long smashed a single to center and Dunn scored. Chappelle went to second. Bailey bunted to Ward and beat it out for a hit, filling the bases. Alperman out, Shanley to Abstein, and Chappelle scored. Welchonce fouled out to Seabaugh. SIX RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

To Give $300 for Charity Cost $5,000

CHICAGO, May 20.—Records to show that one woman dependent upon charity received less than $300 during eighteen months, while $5,000 was spent in investigating her condition, have been produced before the legislative committee investigating charitable institutions.

CASES READY AGAINST LEE AND LEO FRANK

Solicitor General Dorsey Declares All Evidence Will Go to the Grand Jury Friday.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey announced Tuesday morning that the State's case against Leo M. Frank and Newt Lee in connection with the Phagan murder, would go to the Grand Jury Friday of this week. He said that he could anticipate no new arrest or development that would make it necessary to change this plan.

Mrs. Jane F. Carr, 251 Ponce De-Leon Avenue, in an open letter, asked every woman in Atlanta to contribute to the fund to employ the Burns detective and Mr. Burns himself to work in the Phagan investigation. She appealed to women of every walk in life to give according to their means.

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?" was the subject of her letter.

Felder Asks for Funds.

The Burns fund, after going above the $2,000 mark, slacked considerably. Colonel Thomas B. Felder said this sum would not be sufficient if it became necessary for the Burns men to make an exhaustive investigation, and asked the people to contribute liberally to the end that Atlanta's greatest mystery be satisfactorily cleared.

C. W. Tobie, chief of the Burns' criminal investigation department, was even more optimistic Tuesday morning than he was Monday that the Phagan mystery would be cleared to the satisfaction of Atlanta.

"Another day on the scene has only convinced me that the crime is far from the most baffling the Burns detectives have solved," he said at his hotel Tuesday morning. "I am not at liberty to make public the result of my investigation, but we have certainly made progress."

Search for Phone Girl.

City detectives are searching for a telephone girl who was reported to have heard a conversation over the telephone the night of the murder between two persons said to be attaches of the pencil factory.

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford said that he had learned from a responsible source of a switchboard operator who was reported to have overheard a conversation that would be of the greatest importance in the Phagan case. He would not say whether he had learned the identity of the girl.

A corps of department detectives were detailed to the search that will take in every private branch exchange in Atlanta.

Colonel Felder said that he had heard nothing of the report and was quite sure the Burns detective had not. The Pinkertons, through Harry Scott, said they attached little importance to the report, but that if it were true the girl could be easily located.

City detectives and the Pinkertons spent several hours at the pencil factory plant last night. The premises were minutely searched for new clews. The result was not made public.

Working independent of every one, Tobie, the Burns agent, was away from his hotel bright and early Tuesday morning following up a lead that he said had been heretofore overlooked. He will make daily reports to Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Colonel Felder.

Here is Mrs. Carr's letter urging all women to interest themselves in the Mary Phagan case:

Calls It Women's Case.

"To the Women of Atlanta:

"The Mary Phagan case is our case, and it behooves every woman to set the seal of condemnation upon lawlessness and demand that no means shall be unused, no expense spared in

STRICKEN ON HIS WEDDING EVE, YOUNG MAN DIES

R. W. Sutton Victim of Meningitis as He Planned to Marry Miss Lillian Tutwiler.

Stricken on the eve of his wedding day, R. W. Sutton, 25 years old, of 419 Washington Street, is dead at the Grady Hospital—a victim of meningitis. His bride-to-be, Miss Lillian A. Tutwiler, 300 South Pryor Street, is prostrated and his aged mother, Mrs. T. B. Sutton, added this new sorrow to that cast over her by the death of her husband a month ago.

Although but a few doors down the corridor from her son, Mrs. Sutton, who is paralyzed and unable to move, has not been informed of her son's demise. Physicians feared that this second shock would prove fatal to her.

The younger Sutton's death occurred at 2 o'clock Tuesday morning. It was the culmination of a stroke of meningitis the day before he was to have married Miss Tutwiler, three weeks ago. With the same affliction his father had died.

Fiancee Became His Nurse.

Following his removal to the hospital, his fiancee became his nurse. During the three weeks of anxiety which came, when death was ever present and physicians shook their heads in forebodings, the young couple did not despair. Miss Tutwiler kept her newly-made wedding gown in readiness for the wedding which she was sure would come.

In his conscious moments the young bridegroom-to-be talked constantly of the happiness that lay in store for them when he got well. Nurses and attendants at the hospital heard with aching hearts the plans for the future that the couple made as during the long days and nights they sat holding hands.

Mr. Sutton was alone when death came. Miss Tutwiler, exhausted and worn out by her constant vigil at the bedside of her lover, was prostrated Monday when told by physicians that there was no hope. She visited Sutton for the last time late Monday afternoon, when already death was at the door. She was the last person Mr. Sutton recognized.

Recognized Her While Dying.

When she came into his room and laid her hand on the wasted arm, the eyes that were fast closing in the last sleep lighted up. Choking with sobs, the two bade each other goodbye, and Miss Tutwiler, prostrated by her sorrow, was taken to her home.

After Miss Tutwiler left his room Sutton sank rapidly, and soon relapsed into a coma from which he never awakened. Death came to his relief a few hours later. The young man's father, T. B. Sutton, died recently of the same disease.

Mr. Sutton and Miss Tutwiler had planned to be married on April 23. Arrangements had been made for the wedding, the minister had been engaged, and the friends of the happy couple had been invited. On April 22 Mr. Sutton suddenly was taken ill. Thinking the illness soon would pass, no halt was made in the plans for the wedding. On the morning of April 23 Mr. Sutton was suffering intense pain and a physician was called. In the afternoon of the same day he diagnosed the trouble as meningitis, and ordered the young man taken to Grady Hospital.

Girl Plans for Wedding.

The friends of the young people were notified of the illness of Mr. Sutton, and the wedding was postponed. Confident that her lover soon would recover from his illness, Miss Tutwiler fully completed the final details of her trousseau.

But the wedding gown was never to be worn, and to-day it lies unfolded, emphasizing the grief of the young woman. Miss Tutwiler was hysterical with grief when she learned of her fiance's death, and on Tuesday morning was prostrated at her home. During the day her family became alarmed, and physicians were called. Her condition is considered serious.

5 THRASHED IN COURT BY BURTON SMITH

Well Known Lawyer Whips One After Another in Dispute Over Witness.

Burton Smith, well-known attorney and brother of Senator Hoke Smith, on Tuesday afternoon thrashed five men who objected to him conversing in the corridors of the court rooms in the Thrower building with a woman witness in the famous Crawford will case.

Two of the men, C. W. Walton, of Buckhead, and W. H. Byrd, 41 West Twelfth Street, were badly beaten up, both showing black eyes and contusions on their faces where Smith struck them. The other three men also were given severe drubbings before friends and policemen separated the belligerents.

According to eyewitnesses of the fight, Attorney Smith had stopped Mrs. Cash as she passed through the corridors of the building and was talking to her. Walton, it is claimed, approached and said:

"Here, you; don't talk to that woman!"

"What do you care?" asked Smith. "Do you own her?"

"Yes, I do," answered Walton, and, it is said, raised his arm as though intending to strike the attorney.

Walton is a powerfully built man, fully as large as the attorney. Hardly had the words left his mouth, however, when Attorney Smith lunged forward and struck Walton squarely on the point of the jaw. Walton fell limply to the floor, and Byrd rushed into the fray. He was met with a stiff right arm jolt from Mr. Smith and was knocked down for the count.

Three Men Enter Fray.

Then three men who had entered the court house with Walton and Byrd, and who were with them when the attorney knocked them down, leaped at Smith. The attorney met them, and knocked them down as fast as they came at him. One of them he knocked down twice, while one blow sufficed to put the other two hors de combat.

Before the five men could arise and rush the attorney, deputy sheriffs, policemen and friends of the attorney rushed between them and prevented further hostilities. Included in the rescue party were Deputy Sheriffs John S. Owens, Dave Goodlin, Newton Garner and Attorneys Reuben Arnold and Colonel James Anderson.

Attorney Smith's hand was bleeding from the force of the blows he had struck the five men, and on one of his knuckles was a wound from one of his opponent's teeth. His friends started to take him out of the building, and as they passed Walton, the latter began getting up from the floor.

Wanted to Continue Bout.

"I'm ready for you again," he remarked.

Mr. Smith tried to break away from his friends and expressed a desire to again knock Walton down, but he was restrained and went to his office, where physicians dressed his wounds. Walton and Byrd and the other three men left the building immediately.

The fight lasted about two minutes.

Several women who were in the corridor near the belligerents, became hysterical and fairly fought their way into the court room. Deputy sheriffs were called to quiet the excitement.

Mrs. Cash Tells Story.

The woman over whom the fight started was Mrs. Cora Cash, of Buckhead. According to Mrs. Cash, she and her daughter, Mrs. Violet Whitmire, were sitting on a bench near the entrance to the court room, when Attorney Smith came up and began talking to Mrs. Whitmire, an attractive young woman.

Then, Mrs. Cash says, Walton and Byrd came up and demanded that Smith stop talking to the young woman. Smith retaliated with his question as to the ownership of the woman, and the fight followed.

J. S. James, representing the heirs in the Crawford case and retained by Walton and Byrd, announced after the fight that he will at once have warrants issued for the arrest of Attorney Reuben Arnold and Mr. Smith and also for a man named J. C. Cox, who, it is alleged, held Walton while Smith struck him. Arnold, it is alleged, kicked Byrd while he was on the floor.

Mr. Smith declares that during the hearing he had been forced, in order to bring out certain points, to use language that might have been a bit aggressive. He says he met Mrs. Cash in the hallway later, and she told him she didn't think he had used proper language in his interrogation. Mr. Smith was explaining and apologizing for whatever he might have said that would hurt her feelings.

Wife Digs Miner's Body From Cave-in

OROVILLE, CAL., May 20.—Frank Martin, a miner, was killed by a landslide on his property along the Feather River, near Oroville. He was found entombed in the dirt by his wife, who went to hunt for him when he did not return to his home at the usual time.

She made her ghastly discovery and found her husband crushed and dead, buried in the earth and rock that had fallen on him. She returned to her cabin for help and with the aid of her children dug the body from its untimely grave.

Witness Bares Plot In Lawrence Strike

BOSTON, May 20.—Daniel J. Collins, the Cambridge dog fancier, indicted jointly with William M. Wood, president of the American Woolen Mills, and Frederick Atteaux on a charge of conspiring to "plant" dynamite in Lawrence, on the stand today told of going to Lawrence with John J. Breen, of wrapping up some "sticks" which Breen called "the juice" in pieces of newspaper and of his having asked Breen, "What does this mean?" Here is what Collins declared was Breen's answer:

"What does it mean? It means that I will be Mayor of this city some day. Man, there are millions behind me in this. Do you know Wood? Well, then, just you watch the papers tomorrow. You will see what it means."

Florida House Pays Tribute to Flagler.

TALLAHASSEE, FLA., May 20.—Official notice of the death of Henry M. Flagler at West Palm Beach today, when the House of Representatives of the State Legislature this afternoon adopted the the followin resolution:

Whereas, It has just come to the notice of this House that Henry M. Flagler has passed to his eternal reward, and whereas, Florida is indebted to Henry M. Flagler for the mighty power of his genius in developing the wonderful resources of the East Coast of this State,

Therefore, Be it resolved by this House of Representatives, that we, the members, extend to Mrs. Flagler and the other members of the family bereaved the sincere sympathy that it possibly can express, with the conviction that the works of this great man will live and endure as long as the State lives and that this expression is but a poor and inadequate testimonial to the greatness and goodness of the man.

FLAGLER, OIL AND RAIL MAGNATE, IS DEAD

End Comes to Builder of Over-the-Sea Railroad at His Home in Florida.

WEST PALM BEACH, FLA., May 20.—Henry M. Flagler, wealthy railroad builder and owner, died here today.

Mr. Flagler had been sick for three months, although it was thought several weeks ago that he would recover. Mr. and Mrs. Flagler came here in February. At that time he was suffering from excessive nervousness. A general breakdown followed.

Mr. Flagler died at 10 o'clock. The end was peaceful. To those at the bedside it seemed that the sick man died in his sleep. Among those in the death chamber were Mrs. Flagler and Mrs. Harry Harkness Flagler.

The body will be placed in the mausoleum in the Flagler plot at St. Augustine. The date of the funeral probably will not be fixed until tonight.

Mr. Flagler, one of America's foremost financial giants, and known in the South as the "King of Florida," was born in a little village just south of Rochester, N. Y., in 1850. His father was pastor of the village church, and at the age of 14 Henry decided that his mother and sister could get along more comfortably if he ceased to be one of the family burden.

Goes Out to Seek Fortune.

So he started from home, with a few dollars in his pocket, and gradually worked his way westward to Republic, Ohio, where he went to work in a country store for $5 per month and board.

Strict economy soon enabled young Flagler to open a grain business in Bellevue, Ohio. And here began a little business which ultimately resulted in the formation of the greatest corporation in the world.

Mr. Flagler used to ship his carloads of grain to Cleveland, where it was sold for him by a young commission merchant named John D. Rockefeller.

Loses All in Salt Venture.

After amassing a fortune of $50,000 in Bellevue, he went to Saginaw, Mich., and made an unsuccessful venture in the salt business, losing every dollar of his money. With the aid of money furnished by his wife's relatives, he moved to Cleveland and reentered the grain business. He renewed his acquaintance with John D. and William Rockefeller, who were at that time confining their efforts to the oil refining business. He became interested in the brothers' new venture and in 1867, with the aid of more money from his wife's relatives, he entered into a $100,000 partnership with the Rockefellers and Samuel Andrews.

Wife Becomes Insane.

Mr. Flagler's second marriage occurred in 1883, and in the next ten years his fortune increased by leaps and bounds. His wife became the mistress of a fine mansion on Fifth Avenue, New York, as well as a palatial country home on Long Island and in Florida, and to all outward appearances Henry M. Flagler was the happiest man in the world. Then a terrible misfortune came into his life.

His wife's mind became unbalanced. The grief-stricken man kept the awful truth hidden as long as possible. He paid thousands and thousands of dollars to alienists in the hope of restoring her mentality, but her condition gradually grew worse. When, in 1899, the unfortunate woman finally became unmanageable, the Standard Oil magnate was forced to have his wife declared legally insane.

Divorces Insane Wife.

The following year a law was passed by the Florida Legislature, whereby permanent insanity was made ample grounds for a divorce. It was alleged at the time that this law was passed for the benefit of Mr. Flagler, who had come to be a power in Florida as a result of his vast railroad and hotel enterprises.

He devoted a great deal of his money and energy toward the upbuilding of the State of Florida, and making the southeastern peninsula one of the greatest winter resorts in the world. His greatest work in this connection was the completion recently of the extension of the Florida East Coast Railway from Knights' Key to Key West, which is known as the "railroad over the sea." This stretch of track is 156 miles in length and connects the chain of islands between the mainland and Key West. Its construction was one of the greatest engineering feats of the present age, as it is built almost entirely over water.

Mr. Flagler's fortune was estimated at $100,000,000.

Moderator Struggles to Keep Order as Discussion Over Union College Charges Grows Bitter.

The bitter controversy which for the past two days has been rife within the ranks of the Northern Assembly regarding the Union Theological Seminary of New York, was brought to a sudden close late Tuesday with the adoption of a motion by Dr. Mark A. Matthews that a committee of seven be appointed to investigate the charges of heresy against the Seminary and report at next year's meeting.

Dr. Matthews' proposal was accepted almost unanimously by a rising vote.

Immediately after the question was settled, the entire meeting sang, 'Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow."

Dr. Francis Brown, President Union Theological Seminary, who vigorously defended the doctrinal views of his college.

Stormy outbursts, silenced by the active gavel of Moderator Stone, only to break out afresh, marked the bitter Union Theological Seminary controversy on the floor of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly Tuesday forenoon.

Half a dozen men were on their feet simultaneously, clamoring for recognition by the chair. Toward the close of the forenoon session, the discussion was involved in a tangle of parliamentary procedure, from which relief was obtained only by the recess taken until the afternoon.

The intense feeling of the commissioners cropped out in many different ways, and the moderator was able to maintain a semblance of order only with the greatest difficulty.

"Sit Down," the Cry.

An unexpected but futile effort was made to avoid the issue by tabling the resolution condemning the seminary. The majority, however, were eager to have the question settled once and for all.

Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., was the author of the motion to postpone action indefinitely.

"Sit down!" some militant preacher at the side of the room shouted as soon as he realized the import of the motion.

The eye of Moderator Stone blazed as he pounded thunderously with his gavel.

"I want no such expression in this Assembly," he ordered. "I am saying this to the man who made that remark. I do not care who he may be."

Spirited Defense.

The debate proper had not begun when the morning session adjourned. Dr. Francis Brown, president of the seminary which is under fire, was permitted to close the remarks which he had started when the session adjourned Monday afternoon. After this ensued the maelstrom of motions and points of order that kept the session in a turmoil until recess.

Dr. Brown came to a spirited defense of Union Seminary, its directors and its faculty.

He was especially angered against what he described as a libel upon the spiritual character of one of the professors, Dr. William Adams Brown.

Many women were among the spectators in the packed balcony when the debate was started by Dr. Francis Brown, president of Union Seminary. The walls were lined by several score of men, who were compelled to stand. Even the upper gallery had its fringe of keenly interested listeners.

In the main auditorium every seat was taken. Ushers were instructed to keep the doors barred while the debate was in progress.

Moderator Stone ruled at the opening of the discussion that there should be no disorder of any sort. To insure the carrying out of his order, he forbade applause of any sort during or after the speeches.

He called upon Dr. Henry Sloane Coffin, one of the instructors in Union Theological Seminary, and Rev. C. A. R. Janvier, of Philadelphia, to invoke the aid of God in deciding the question.

In spite of Moderator Stone's ruling that there should be no applause or manifestation of approval or disapproval, there was a marked murmur of dissent when President Brown, of Union Seminary, declared that he metophorically had been met at the door of the Assembly hall with a club with which it was purposed to "break his head."

"Waiting With Club."

"It is as though you had invited a friend to your home under the pretense of hospitality," he declared, "and then had met him at the door to crack open his skull.

"Of the second minority report I knew nothing until ten days ago. It was signed by one man only, and he a member of the committee for only a few months. His report and his opinions had not been made a subject of conference. They were as unexpected as a thunderbolt.

"All of these criticisms, however, can be met without any difficulty. The author has been grossly misinformed and mistaken. In the first place, the annulling of the agreement of 1870 was done on the advice of two distinguished lawyers, who advised the directors they had gone too far under the provisions in the charter in making the agreement at all."

Resents Charges.

Dr. Brown named the men who had been in charge of the affairs of the seminary for years as an evidence that it had been in the hands of capable, God-fearing directors and instructors.

He grew bitter when he came to comment on the arraignment of William Adams Brown, professor of systematic theology in the seminary.

"That criticism was most unjust and unwarranted," declared President Brown. "Professor Brown is one of the most ardent, earnest and sincere Presbyterians in this Assembly. So to attack his religious principles was cruel and not supported by any evidence. Terms were used that never should be used by one Christian in reference to another Christian or to any human being.

"That reference, too, to Hindu philosophy was a simple travesty—a simple travesty! I find it more difficult to be calm at this time. I don't want to lose my temper, but such unjust and unsupported charges have been hurled at this seminary that restraint is not wholly possible.

"Remember that the seminary asks nothing, seeks nothing. It is not represented here voluntarily. It came on invitation. We want to be of service to the Presbyterian Church, but if you can not use us, we do not care to try.

"The members of the faculty have given evidences of their Christian faith that should be accepted if the matter is considered at all. I hold, however, that discussion on the second minority report should have no place on this floor, as the report was never made a subject of conference.

"In regard to the students going forth from our seminary, I want to deny the scurrilous stories which have gone forth about the country. There is not a single man from the seminary who has been licensed by a presbytery who has denied his belief in the atoning work of Jesus, the resurrection of the Lord and the other fundamental doctrines concerning which we have been accused of lack of faith."

Dr. Brown spoke quietly and without any evidence of rancor until he came to discuss the charges of Christian infidelity lodged against his seminary and its faculty. Then his voice rose and he lost the poise that had characterized his calm discussion of the legal phase of the seminary's action in abrogating the agreement of 1870.

The friends of the seminary applauded lightly when Dr. Brown was finished, despite the injunction of the moderator that there was to be no manifestation whatever of approval or disapproval.

The moderator followed the address of Dr. Brown by a statement of the procedure which would be employed in taking up the formal debate on the reports. The confusion which developed was largely the result of a shower of varying suggestions of slightly different lines of procedure the commissioners thought advisable.

When recess came it was practically decided that every speaker would have 10 minutes in which to debate the reports. One report was to be discussed by a speaker favorable to it, then by one of its adherents, and after this the third.

If any person in the Assembly had a proposition not coinciding with any of the three reports, he was to be given the opportunity of presenting his views after the others had concluded.

When the round had been made, the first report was to be taken up again, and this procedure repeated until the Assembly was ready to take a vote. Before the voting, Dr. William G. Wylie, of New York, who presented the majority report favorable to the seminary; Dr. John Davies, of Philadelphia, who presented the first unfavorable minority report; Dr. F. C. Monfort, of Cincinnati, the author of the second minority report, which was strongest in its accusations of heresy, and President Brown, of the seminary, were to be allowed ten minutes each for summing up their arguments.

"There is to be no lobbying or politics in this debate," said Moderator Stone firmly. "I shal endeavor to be guided by the Spirit of God and my best Christian judgment, and I pray that you will do the same. I shall try to be fair. I shall try to favor no side above antoehr. If I make a ruling that may be questioned by you, I shall be glad to take you into my confidence and tell you exactly why I do it."

Southern Body Stirred by New Statement of Belief

The amended brief statement of belief was adopted by the assembly by a vote of 119 to 64.

A motion to adopt the ad interim committee's report on the statement of belief, as read by Dr. J. M. Wells, created a furor of discussion at Tuesday's session of the Southern Assembly.

The statement is a corrected form of that drawn up by last year's committee. After it was read, Dr. T. S. Knox, of Texas, opened the discussion by declaring first that it was wholly unnecessary.

"The adoption of this statement would make void all possibilities of a union between the three Presbyterian bodies," declared Dr. Knox. "The article is not only bad grammar but it is also bad theology."

Cries of shame followed Dr. Knox's speech.

"It is outrageous," declared Dr. McPheeters, "that such words should be uttered in a Presbyterian church."

Dr. A. P. Gregory, of Tennessee, spoke, declaring that the statement was badly needed. Dr. J. B. Works, of Texas, contradicted Dr. Knox's assertion that the change was not desired in the West, by stating that it would be welcomed in that district.

Following other short addresses, the motion was tabled until the afternoon session.

The change in the basis of representation, which has become a law by the enactment of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church, will increase materially the representation to future Assemblies.

The change means that in future the commissioners to the General Assembly shall be chosen as follows: Every Presbytery shall be entitled to elect one minister and one elder as commissioners, and all Presbyteries where the combined membership of ministers and communicants exceed 4,000 will be entitled to elect one minister and one elder additional. This ratio will continue with the addition of each four thousand members in the Presbytery.

Among the first features of the Assembly Tuesday morning was the fraternal messenger from the General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church.

The "special order" for 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon was a report of the committee on foreign correspondence.

Beneficence Discussed.

Consideration of the report of the standing committee on systematic beneficence was resumed. The part of the report presented was with reference to the permanent committee of systematic beneficence.

The only item of the report that provoked discusison was that with reference to the restoration of the power of the permanent committee to nominate members and secretaries of the excutive committees of the Assembly. This power formerly belonged to the committee, but was taken from it at the Assembly of 1912. The report of the standing committee recommended the restoration of this power, but with the provision that it should not deprive any other member of the Assembly rimilar right.

Dr. W. M. F. Alexander opposed the restoraation of this power, upon the ground that it would mean too much centralization of power; that in time the association of this committee with the executive committees might begot upon the part of members of the latter the disposition to bow to the former in order to receive nomination for the committees.

Clyce to the Defense.

Dr. T. S. Clyce met this opposoition with the statement that he had been a member of the Permanent Committee on Systematic Beneficence when it possessed the power under consideration and that there was no log rolling on the part of any one; further, that it is not likely there would be such at any time. He urged that the Assembly have more concentration of power in the transactions of its business.

The report of the committee was adopted and the power of the Permanent Committee was restored.

The time for uniting all Presbyterian churches is not yet ripe. This is the decision of the Southern Presbyterian Church, unanimous apparently. If there were any who opposed, they failed to voice their sentiment against such an overwhelming vote for the retention of the Southern church's individuality.

Report of the committee on overtures against uniting was adopted almost unanimously. It stated that the time was not just ripe for the uniting of the Southern church with other branches of the Presbyterian. The fact that negotiations are already under way between the Southern Presbyterian Church and the United ed, the present time appeared as inopportune for a discussion of union.

The beneficence committee's report recommended that the percentage for foreign missions be cut from 60 to 54 per cent; that home missions receive 27 instead of 21 per cent; Christian education and ministerial relief to receive 14 1-2 instead of 14 per cent, and Sunday school publications reduced from 4 to 3 1-2 per cent.

SECRET WEDDING ROMANCE CLIMAX

Ben McDonnold and Miss Haribel Colson, 18, Are Principals in Near-Runaway Match.

Ben McDonnold, a postoffice clerk, and his bride, who was Miss Haribel Colson, enjoyed a honeymoon of nearly two days before their friends found out what had happened. They were married Sunday, but it was not until to-day that the news went out and congratulations began coming in.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Colson, 257 Crumley Street, and the bridegroom a son of Mr. and Mrs. W. O. McDonnold, of College Park. They were married at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon by the Rev. V. C. Norcross at his residence, Druid Hills. The only attendants—and the only ones who knew of the marriage until to-day—were the bridegroom's brothers and sister, Hoke McDonnold, Paul McDonnold and Mr. and Mrs. Frank R. Willingham.

It was not exactly a runaway affair, but was the next thing to it, for the young couple told their parents nothing about their intentions. The wedding was the culmination of a romance begun in Birmingham just before Christmas.

The bride's father is claim agent for the A., B. & A. Railroad, having moved to Atlanta only two months ago. McDonnold met Miss Colson while clerking in her father's office, but it was not known they were attached to one another.

But Colson moved to Atlanta—and so did McDonnold. He started wooing in earnest, and last Sunday he and Miss Colson brought their brief romance to the only logical conclusion. They are now at home with the bridegroom's family, waiting to fit out a home of their own in College Park.

FORMER ATLANTAN FOR U. S. PRINTER

President Wilson Likely to Name W. V. Turley, of Chattanooga, to Government Post.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—President Wilson, it was learned to-day, has about made up his mind to appoint W. V. Turley, of Chattanooga, Tenn., to the post of Public Printer, which pays $5,500 a year. Although there are a large number of candidates for this place, which is peculiarly a presidential appointment, the race some time ago narrowed down to a contest between Cornelius Ford, of Hoboken, N. J., and Turley.

The President is said to be personally in favor of Ford, but the many indorsements obtained and presented by the friends of Turley have greatly impressed the President.

Mr. Turley is a former Atlantan, having resided here in 1909, when he was engaged in theatrical publicity work for the Wells Syndicate as editor of The Pilot, a weekly theatrical magazine. Since then he has operated a job printing establishment in Chattanooga. Before coming to Atlanta he was city editor of The Chattanooga News and was with other Chattanooga papers. He also has done newspaper work in Washington. He is a member of the Chattanooga Typographical Union.

White City Park Now Open

GATE CITY GUARD RECEIVED BY PRESIDENT

Noted Atlanta Military Company Parades Washington Streets and Visits White House.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—With a battalion of the National Guard of the District of Columbia acting as escort and the band of the Engineer Corps of the United States Army heading the parade, the old Gate City Guard of Atlanta marched triumphantly up Pennsylvania Avenue to the White House this afternoon and was formally welcomed to the Capital by President Wilson. Included in the battalion of guardsmen which formed the escort to the famous Georgia contingent was the crack company of Washington Light Infantry, the showiest organization in the militia of the District.

Major J. F. Burke was in command of the Old Guard and the Georgia company made a brilliant showing in its fancy full dress uniforms.

White House Reception.

The parade began at the Continental Hotel, the headquarters of the visitors, and continued to the historic east entrance of the White House. Arrived there, the guardsmen were met by Senator Hoke Smith and Representative William Schley Howard of Georgia and taken into the east room, the scene of all state functions since the White House was erected. President Wilson, accompanied by Major Rhoads, his military aide, entered the room and the guardsmen were presented individually to the President.

Later in the afternoon the members of the Gate City Guard were taken to the American League baseball park, where they witnessed a series of exhibition drills by the cadet organizations from the District of Columbia. The guardsmen, for years crack drillers of the South, enjoyed the exhibition immensely.

To Baltimore Wednesday.

From the exhibition drill the members of the guard returned to their hotel. To-night they will go to a theater and early to-morrow morning they will leave for Baltimore, to be entertained by the Fifth Maryland Regiment.

The visitors arrived at 8 o'clock this morning over the Southern Railway and went at once to their hotel, which is close to the Capitol and the Union Station. There were no special arrangements for the morning entertainment, so most of them remained at the hotel in their fatigue uniforms. Some of them visited the Capitol and other points of interest, revisiting the scenes of their famous peace-making trip of 1879.

PHAGAN CASE IN READINESS FOR INDICTMENT

Solicitor General Hugh Dorsey Will Ask Grand Jury for True Bills on Friday.

bringing to justice the foul villain who perpetrated this unparalleled crime. His freedom is a menace to the honor and life of every woman in our community.

"But no mistake must be made. Some of our most prominent men, and a few big-hearted women, have taken the initiative in contributing to the fund which obtains the best detective talent in America, and in the increasing of that fund we women have our opportunity.

Wants All to Contribute.

"Let every woman give something, however small the amount, and in the aggregation of these such a sum will be acquired as shall employ and reward all the legal and detective talent that has been so continuously and generously given, and will be given in the search for the criminal.

"To systematize this wholesale giving, let the women in all departments of endeavor—in offices, in plants, in stores or wherever women congregate, select one of their number to receive the individual contributions and send, as a whole, the amount they realize to The Georgian, with these instructions: 'For the Mary Phagan Investigation Fund.' Let the same plan be pursued in neighborhoods.

"Let us be up and doing!

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?

(Signed) "MRS. JAMES F. CARR."

Black Scores Burns Man.

Detective John Black, who has been working on the Phagan case in conjunction with Pinkerton Detective Harry Scott, Tuesday declared that Detective Tobie, the Burns man, was not justified in his charge that certain features of the mystery have been overlooked.

"Mr. Tobie has gone entirely too far in his statements," said Detective Black. "He doesn't know what has been done by detectives on this case, and doesn't know what evidence we have in our possession. We are not showing our hand to everyone who comes along. If he can show us some thing in this case that has been overlooked, then we'll think he knows what he is talking about, but unless he does show something, we'll attach no importance, whatever, to his statements."

Detective Scott declined to discuss the Burns detective's theory or position in the case. As to the Pinkerton's part in the affair, he said:

"We have worked this case from fully 500 different angles. Every possible phase and feature has been investigated. Nothing has been overlooked. The public has no idea of the many and varied angles that have been presented by this tragedy."

Lynn to Know His Fate Next Month

Alonzo L. Lynn's motion for a new trial, whereby he hopes to evade a life sentence for the killing of F. M. Hightower at the Lynn home in Laurens County, December 18, 1912, will be decided by the Supreme Court after its next opinion day in the middle of June.

The motion was argued Monday before Justices Atkinson, Evans and Hill. Solicitor General Stephens of Laurens County and Judge John S. Adams argued for the affirmation of the lower court's decree. Stephen P. New and George B. Davis, of Dublin, represented Lynn.

Hightower, a Confederate veteran, was found dead in the Lynn home. A Burns detective, employed by the State, ferreted out evidence and adduced a theory of conspiracy, resulting in the indictment of Lynn and his wife, Alice Lynn.

Mrs. Lynn admitted firing the shot which killed the veteran, but swore he had made improper proposals to her. After deliberating five days, the jury acquitted Mrs. Lynn, but found Lynn guilty of murder, recommending life imprisonment. Judge Hawkins imposed the full sentence.

Motion for a new trial by Lynn's attorneys was predicated upon 21 assumptions of error. Chief among them was the charge that the Grand Jury sat in unlawful session, that improper testimony was admitted to evidence and that the evidence was insufficient to convict. The detective secured most of his evidence from a dictograph put in Lynn's calle while he awaited indictment.

Miss Hanson Scoffs at 'Temptations of Stage'

Blames Publicity for Popular Idea of Its Evils

Beautiful Atlanta Leading Woman Strongly Advocates Drama as Profession for Women.

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook.

"The evils of the stage? They are just the same—and many times not so bad—as the evils of other professions. Stage life isn't any more of a temptation to young girls than other walks of life."

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook, or Gladys Hanson, as she is known to fame, beautiful Atlanta actress who has just come back home for a six-weeks' vacation, stopped serving tea and leaned forward. She was at her country place out on Cleburne Avenue.

"The truth is this: The limelight is always turned, full force, on the stage when it is not on other professions. As soon as an actress does an imprudent or perhaps an unconventional thing, the news immediately spreads—and it gathers force as it spreads. Elsewhere there is less publicity, and therefore a better chance for covering things up, that's all."

Urges Stage for Girls.

Miss Hanson, who belongs to one of Georgia's oldest families, and who is in love with her art to her fingertips, has just finished a successful ten-months' season with David Belasco in "The Governor's Lady." In the six years she has been on the stage she has been wonderfully successful, having been with Frohman, Sothern and other big directors besides Belasco. She strongly advocates the stage as a profession for young women.

"There never have been such opportunities for capable young women as there are to-day," she declared, dropping a bit of lemon into a cup of tea, "and really it's almost nonsense to talk about stage evils and morals at all. The stigma that formerly attached to the theater is almost a thing of the past, for the simple reason that people have come more and more to realize that immorality is not confined to class, but is purely individual.

More Actors of Big Brains.

"Also year by year the stage is being more and more occupied by persons of big brains—big souls—people who are realities, and who are there because of the big 'call.'"

"And that 'call' is the great thing," she stressed. "I don't care what you say. When people follow their star, as it were—when they feel the burning of the 'spark' inside and set out to give it expression, it means the development of soul. And people of great souls can only be good.

"I grant this," she said, deprecatingly, "the world looks upon the stage from an outsider's standpoint, and, therefore, can only criticise from that angle, which may be entirely wrong.

"For instance, many times I have seen a man rush back to a dressing room, where the actress with whom he was to appear was in negligee and making up, to run over the lines in a coming scene. But I only wish that the public might see how in earnest it all is.

Had to Ignore Convention.

"The man is not sure of himself in the scene, and if he did not seize this moment, he might make a botch of the play, and he could not wait until the actress was all 'made up.'

"But, as they go over the lines they practically do not see each other—they are like two machines. The thought of everything is sunk in the play. He talks his lines in quick, high tones, and she comes in with hers to meet him. And the moment that is done he rushes out like mad to get ready to 'go on.'

"Don't you ever believe," Miss Hanson emphasized, "that the rules in practically all theaters are not strict. And in high-class houses it is practically the same as in your own home. The people are all big people—they're men and women—they're not silly nincompoops!

"Again, if a girl enters the profession, she can be sure that if she gets with a good director—and there are more good ones than otherwise—she is going to be pushed along to success—not only by her own effort, but by his—for he is just as anxious for her to make good as she is to make good herself.

Finds Splendid Associates.

"She will usually find a number of splendid women to associate with, too—if she'll keep her eyes open—and also a number of broad-minded men. There's where she may learn many things about her art—they will all help her—and that and working hard will get her her to the top if she has any 'possibilities' at all. If for no other reason, I would have been glad I had gone on the stage simply for the people I have met."

Miss Hanson expects to go abroad for the summer. She will return the latter part of August for rehearsals, being again with Belasco. She and Emma Dunn, one of her best friends, will again appear for a time in "The Governor's Lady," later taking up other work Mr. Belasco has not yet made public. While in Atlanta Miss Snook expects to be quite a great deal with her friends, a number of parties having been planned for her.

Calls Atlanta Hers, Too.

Speaking of Atlanta things, she said it almost made her angry—that is, it would if she wasn't so even-tempered, for which she took credit to herself—when she was out and people asked her how she liked "our" country club, or "our" city—or other things.

"Why, it's mine, too," she said. "I don't feel that just because I'm away in the winter this isn't my home. Why, I grew up here and I belong to the place! Of course, it's usually strangers, who don't know, who ask me things like that; but, all the same, it gives me a funny little feeling around my heart. I feel just like I ought to be asking them instead, being"—she hesitated and laughed—"as I was here first!"

Ousted Official Holds City Cash

WASHINGTON, GA., May 20.—Whether the Mayor or City Treasurer is the legal custodian of city funds will be argued at Warrenton to-day before Judge B. F. Walker, of Toombs Circuit, on a writ of mandamus brought by the Mayor and Council of Washington against City Treasurer F. H. Ficklen.

Mayor Favor claims that he has the right to say when and for what purposes the city finances shall be used, while Treasurer Ficklen holds to a contrary view. When $30,000 of bond money for city paving was placed in the hands of Treasurer Ficklen, Mayor Favor issued vouchers against the fund aggregating $21,000, which the City Treasurer refused to pay until he was advised of the purpose of the disbursement and otherwise consulted in the matter.

Upon this refusal the City Council declared the office of City Treasurer vacant and ordered the Treasurer to place the city funds in certain depositories at once. He refused.

The court's aid has now been invoked by the Mayor and Council to require the Treasurer to surrender the city's cash.

OBITUARY NOTICE.

Mrs. Katie Heath, widow of H. G. Heath, died Monday night at her home, 62 Connally Street. She is survived by a daughter, Miss Willie Heath, and two sisters, Mrs. H. E. Bray and Mrs. Willie Malley. The funeral will be held at 8 o'clock Tuesday night at the residence. Interment at Gainesville, Ga., Wednesday.

Nurses Hear Talks For Better Health

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—Dr. W. H. Doughty, dean of the medical department of the University of Georgia, delivered the address of welcome at the opening of the seventh annual convention of the Georgia Association of Graduate Nurses here to-day. Mrs. E. S. Tupman, of Atlanta, responded. The convention will continue through to-morrow.

"Educational Prevention in Infant Mortality" was the subject of an address this afternoon by Miss G. B. Knipp, executive secretary of the American Association for the Prevention of Infant Mortality. Miss Ella P. Crandall, executive secretary of the National Organization for Public Health Nursing, made an address this afternoon on "Public Health Nursing."

BIG BARBECUE GIVEN FOR JUDGES AT ROME

ROME, GA., May 20.—Twenty-five Georgia lambs, 100 chickens and 50 gallons of Brunswick stew were served at an old-fashioned barbecue given to-day by Wright Willingham at his home, in honor of Judge William T. Newman. Judge Moses Wright and Federal and Superior Court officials. There were 500 persons in attendance.

WALKER SHOWS IMPROVEMENT; MAY RECOVER

MACON, GA., May 20.—Another slight sluggish action of B. Sanders Walker's kidneys to-day gave the attending physicians still more hope for his ultimate recovery. Walker's pulse is 118 and his respiration 30. He is still very weak.

MACON, GA., May 20.—After having made all, even minute, preparations to die, under the belief that his death was inevitable and a matter of only a few days, B. Sanders Walker, Jr., the banker and real estate operator, is now given the hope that possibly he will survive the accidental taking of a bichloride of mercury tablet by mistake for a headache pill.

From Thursday until Monday Mr. Walker's kidneys were paralyzed, but then there was a slight manifestation, sufficient to justify the attending physicians in holding out a little encouragement to the man who for five days has regarded himself as on the very brink of the grave. Two physicians have been at Mr. Walker's bedside almost from the minute when the terrible pains in his stomach showed that he had taken poison instead of an aspirin tablet, and they have employed heroic remedies. From all parts of the United States have come about 40 telegrams from persons who were similarly poisoned or from doctors and nurses suggesting methods of treatment.

Nurse Suggests Remedy.

One such message came from a young woman nurse at Johns Hopkins Hospital, suggesting that a remedy of flax seed and olive oil might save the fast ebbing life of the dying man, as it had her own when she had her own when she had been in a similar condition. If he lives, Walker will owe his life to this young woman, of whose existence he was not even aware—a person whom he would not know were he to meet her face to face.

This remedy has been applied and has given Walker a fighting chance for life. Euremic poisoning had already set in when the doctors decided to adopt the suggestion of the young woman, and unless relief had been immediate Walker would soon have succumbed.

Visitors Now Excluded.

All persons, except his wife, doctors and nurses, are now kept from Mr. Walker. The physicians say that the announcement to him that he might survive, after he had gone through the ordeal of preparing for death, brought on a nervous attack and intensified his weakness. It was believed necessary, as well as ethical, however, to tell the stricken man that he had a chance to live.

B. S. Walker, Sr., of Monroe, the father; Cliff M. Walker, Solicitor General of the Western Circuit, who is a brother, and other relatives are at the residence.

Mrs. Walker is making a fight that is the wonder of her friends. In her husband's company she has been ever brave and cheerful. Not once has she presented anything but a courageous front.

Walker's Nerve Unbroken.

Walker's first thought when told by the doctors that death was sure to result from his mistaken dose was of his business; his second, of his friends. He immediately sent for his business associates, and in a short while had given definite intructions concerning the final disposition of all his affairs.

Following the winding up of his business, he called in his friends, announced his doom and gave them one and all a cheerful farewell.

His cool nerve during the strain of the last three days has been the cause of comment upon the days when, as a star athlete for the University of Georgia, he time and again demonstrated the fact that he was possessed of an indomitable spirit that held him up when his teammates were breaking in their support.

Still on Brink of Eternity.

The friends who knew him a few days ago as the picture of health and a perfect specimen of manhood can hardly realize that following his tragic error in taking bichloride of mercury tablets instead of the headache medicine, he has been doomed to death, and that, although hope is now expressed for his recovery, he is even yet standing upon the brink of eternity.

Policeman Hit by Auto Nabs Driver

City Detective L. F. Carter is being congratulated by his friends for the agility and coolness which he displayed Monday night when he narrowly escaped being run down by an automobile driven by J. A. Brigman, of Decatur.

Carter was crossing Forsyth at Marietta Street, and when struck by the machine, sprang up on the hood, where he perched until the car was stopped. Carter immediately arrested Brigman and charged him with reckless driving. Brigman was released without bail.

Court Rules Clubs Can't Sell Liquor

The Court of Appeals, in a decision handed down Tuesday, held that it was illegal for an employee of a social club to sell whisky, even though he did not derive any profit from the sale. The decision was in the case of Ike Rothchild, steward of the Brunswick Oglethorpe Club.

The court said: "It is no defense that the accused sold the liquor as an employee of a social club. Intoxicating liquor can not be sold in the State by an individual or company as a beverage."

Mrs. Hutchins 'Poor' On $2,000 a Month

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Mrs. Rosa Keeling Hutchins, widow of Stilson Hutchins, millionaire newspaper owner, has filed suit in another attempt to obtain one-third of the income from her husband's personal estate. According to her petition, she is in "straitened circumstances," although she has $2,000 a month from the estate.

The personal property left by Mr. Hutchins is estimated at $1,155,685, while the realty value is fixed at $3,347,000. Distribution has been delayed by disputes among the heirs and the filing of a caveat by Lee Hutchins, a son.

Wife Advertised as "Dead" Seeks Divorce

ST. LOUIS, May 20.—Mrs. Anna Meehan has sued John P. Meehan, a salesman, for divorce, charging among a long list of alleged abuses that he advertised in St. Louis papers on Easter Sunday announcing her death and that the notice of funeral arrangements would be given. She says that when she accused him of inserting the "ad" he laughed and refused to deny it.

She also charges that during their eleven years of married life they moved fifteen times and also that ten of the movings were the result of suits for rent.

Express Profits for 1912 Eight Millions

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Express companies for the year 1912 did a total business of $81,545,658, with expenses aggregating $73,255,682, leaving a total net revenue of $8,289,972, according to a statement made by the Interstate Commerce Commission today. Dividends declared from current income amounted to $4,625,832 and from surplus $2,823,785.

The Pullman Car Company, in reports to the commission, placed its total business for the year 1912 at $37,090,414, with expenses amounting to $26,256,695. Cars were operated over 123,000 miles of road. The physical property is valued at $148,780,453.

'Rosy Cheek Teachers Excel Brainy Ones'

NEW YORK, May 20.—President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education told the Associate Alumnae of Normal College that he would rather "a teacher had the pulchritude of red cheeks than the wisdom of an encyclopedia."

"A certain type of teacher," said he, "seems to think she must study all summer, but she would be a better teacher if she spent her vacation rowing a boat or playing golf. There is no reason why teachers should be divorced from health."

Gov. Slaton Speaker At A. and M. Finals

Governor-elect John M. Slaton is expected to return home Tuesday from Americus, Ga., where on Monday night he delivered the principal address at the annual commencement exercises of the Third District Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Diplomas were presented by John M. Collum, the superintendent. An exhibition of the industrial work of the college preceded the graduating exercises.

Governor-elect Slaton and the other speakers were entertained with a barbecue dinner after the exercises.

Mexico Buys Field Guns From French

PARIS, May 20.—The Mexican Government has ordered twelve batteries of field guns and one hundred mitrailleuses from French manufacturers.

Gen. Mondragon, the Mexican War Minister, is quoted as saying that he chose French makes because the Bulgarians proved their superiority over the Krupp guns used by the Turks.

Peary to Get High Honors in France

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—According to Marcelin Boule, Vice President of the French Geographical Society, Admiral Peary is to be paid the same honors as were granted to Amundsen by the French society.

The fact that no preparation has been made is due to the absence from Paris of the society's President, Prince Roland Bonaparte.

Schwab Admits He Formed Steel Pools

NEW YORK, May 20.—Charles M. Schwab, former president of the United States Steel Corporation, today admitted under cross-examination that he had formed many pools in the steel trade, but that he had arranged none since the formation of the United States Steel Corporation.

Schwab, now president of the Bethlehem Steel Company, was questioned by Judge Dickinson, one of counsel for the Government in its suit to declare the Steel Corporation a trust.

PENN. R. R. HEAD PRAISES ATLANTA

Samuel Rea, Here for Short Visit, Foresees Great Future for the Gate City.

Samuel Rea, president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, was in Atlanta a short while Tuesday. His visit, however, had no business significance, being merely a pleasure jaunt which Mr. and Mrs. Rea are taking.

H. W. Miller, assistant to the president of the Southern Railway, entertained Mr. Rea at luncheon at the Piedmont Driving Club, following an automobile ride around the city.

"No, there's no business connection at all with my trip," said Mr. Rea to a reporter. "I am just going about on a little pleasure trip, accompanied by my real boss, Mrs. Rea, and am just visiting a few of my friends."

Mr. Rea praised Atlanta highly and foresaw for the city a great future.

The hurriedly arranged luncheon proved a delightful affair despite the haste. Those present were Captain J. W. English, John W. Grant, President Wilmer L. Moore, of the Chamber of Commerce; Colonel Robert J. Lowry, Frank Hawkins, E. H. Coapman, vice president and general manager of the Southern Railway Company, whose headquarters are at Washington, and Mr. Miller.

Mrs. Miller held an informal reception for Mrs. Rea at the Piedmont Driving Club.

Mrs. Longstreet Seeks Vindication

The following telegram from Washington was received to-day by The Georgian from Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, regarding her hearing before the Senate Committee on Postoffices and Postroads relative to the Gainesville postmastership:

I did not go before the Senate Comimttee on Postoffices and Postroads to prevent the confirmation of Mrs. Ham. I went before that committee to have my record vindicated. I went there to call on the majority party, in recommendin g my successor for confirmation, to have the manhood and courage to say that I had been kicked out of office by the sinister influences of the invisible government which is doing business in Georgia under the name of the Georgia Railway and Power Company and to say that my record in office is above reproach. I challenge Southern manhood to give me that vindication. What answer to the challenge of Southern honor will they make?

"Knightliest of a knightly race,
Who since the days of old
Have kept the lamps of chivalry
Alight in hearts of gold."

I believe that answer will ring true. But if the Southern manhood which is in the saddle today should fail, under the pressure of the money power, the honor of the minority party will not fail. The men in whose veins courses the blood of a conquering race—a race that through the long centuries has mounted the thrones of kings, taken empires and builded republics—will waken that vindication on our Atlantic shores, to follow the morning sun to its setting beyond our Pacific seas, until a nation shall read in the shining track that the woman whom the warhorse of the Confederacy dowered with his love and a name that will live forever—the woman who was honored by Theodore Roosevelt and trusted by William Howard Taft—is true as tempered steel and pure as refined gold.

SEEK FARM HOME FOR NEEDY FAMILY

Woman Offers to Do Manual Work to Give Boys Benefit of Country Life.

Miss Minnie VanEpps, district agent of the Associated Charities, is looking for a country home for a strong, Western woman who walked into her office with two boys, a cash capital of 10 cents and a recollection of many hardships.

The woman is Mrs. May Lang, 31 years old. Her boys are Aurelius Ragland, 7 years old, and Milton Ragland, 5 years old. Mrs. Lang says she can milk a cow, scrub floors, cook, sew, hitch up horses and mules, plow and hoe, cut wood and do anything else on a farm. She is a Western woman, in good health and willing to do any kind of hard work to provide a home for herself and children.

Last winter Mrs. Lang left Skull Valley, Ariz., with tickets for New Orleans and $2 in cash. She came to Atlanta in February and went at once to Miss VanEpps. Work was provided in an Atlanta factory, but Mrs. Lang's wages were only $3 a week.

Mrs. Lang was left an orphan at 12. She was adopted, but her foster father died. Then his brother married her, but he died in a few years. Again she married, but her second husband died. For five years Mrs. Lang has eked out a scant living for herself and children by performing manual labor.

"I can do anything, even the hardest work on the farm," she said to Miss VanEpps. "If only I can get out in the country, where my two sons can breathe the pure air and get enough to eat, I will be happy. I will do the hardest work they give me, and be contented. I want a home for my boys."

References Mrs. Lang gave to the Associated Charities have been traced by Miss VanEpps, and replies to letters of inquiry indicate Mrs. Lang has been a good and a hard-working woman.

DENTAL TESTS IN CITY'S SCHOOLS PROBABLE

Board Conducting Experiments Will Make Strong Recommendation for Examinations.

Dental examinations of all children in Atlanta public schools will be permanently provided for unless V. H. Kriegshaber, of the Chamber of Commerce, and representatives of the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons are too optimistic over their forthcoming report.

Monday marked the beginning and Tuesday the end of dental examinations in the Bell Street and Crew Street Schools by representatives of the joint committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons. It was the third of a series of tests begun last September at the request of the Chamber of Commerce and continued in January, to prove the beneficial effects of sound teeth on scholarship and attendance, general health and moral character.

V. H. Kriegshaber, from the Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. S. W. Foster, Dr. C. M. Barnwell, Dr. DeLos Hill and Dr. M. D. Huff, from the dental, society, make up the joint committee.

Dentists Meet Tuesday Night.

Dr. Hill and Dr. Foster, who made the actual tests, will meet with the other dentists Wednesday night and make up the final report to be submitted to the Chamber of Commerce, whence it will be sent to the Board of Education with recommendations.

"Statistics have not been compiled, but from results already noted we believe the full data will warrant a recommendation that dental inspections in the public schools be made permanent," said Mr. Kriegshaber.

Following published results of benefits of five years' medical inspection in the public schools, the Chamber of Commerce last September asked the Board of Education for permission to make experimental dental tests. The dentists agreed to inspect two schools for a year, without fees, to prove the efficacy of the system.

At the first tests pupils were provided with written notices to parents of needed dental treatment. When these notices resulted in securing treatment, the operating dentists signed the slips, which were returned to the examiners. Additional signed slips were collected Monday and Tuesday after the final tests. Records of pupils in attendance, deportment and scholarship, both those who acted on the suggestions and those who did not, will be compared, and the results, with other figures, will make up the dentists' report.

Finish Report Tuesday.

"We hope to get this report finished Tuesday night," said Mr. Kriegshaber. "We are sure it will warrant the recommendation that dental examinations be made permanent. Then if the Board of Education approves our recommendation, we want to submit it to the Finance Committee of the City Council Thursday morning, if possible, and secure the necessary appropriation and authorization for permanent dental inspections in all Atlanta public schools."

In the Crew Street and Bell Street Schools nearly 500 pupils were examined. Dr. Foster and Dr. Hill were surprised at getting through in two days, since they expected three would be required.

Another Reason Why Socialist Vote Grows

GENEVA, N. Y., May 20.—An extensive obituary notice appeared in the newspapers here recounting the virtues of Fido, the pet dog of Henry A. Zobrist, a capitalist. Mr. Zobrist called a specialist from New York and paid $300 to have the dog treated, but Fido took a relapse and died.

Mr. Zobrist had provided $20,000 in his will for Fido, and had offered an endowment of $3,000 a year to the Sand Hill Cemetery Corporation for permission to bury the dog in the graveyard.

Fido lay in state in an expensive coffin banked with flowers.

LIQUOR DEALERS ORGANIZE LAW ENFORCEMENT LEAGUE

COLUMBUS, GA., May 20.—For the purpose of eliminating the blind tiger and enforcing the provisions of the laws regulating the sale of whisky in Russell County, Alabama, a law enforcement league has been organized in Girard, with Sam Kaufman, a wholesale liquor dealer, as president.

The wholesale and retail liquor dealers claim that the blind tiger is hurting their legitimate business. Eighteen liquor dealers of the town are members of the organization.

RESINOL A SAFE SKIN TREATMENT

You need never hesitate to use Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment. There is nothing in them to injure the tenderest surface. Resinol is a doctor's prescription which proved so successful for eczema, ringworm and other itching, burning, unsightly skin eruptions, that it has been used by other physicians all over the country for eighteen years. No other treatment for the skin now before the public can show such a record of professional approval.

In a single month, two hundred and twenty-one doctors wrote us indorsing the Resinol preparations. They would not have done so if they had not found them highly valuable in their own practice. They prescribe Resinol freely, confident that its soothing, healing action is brought about by agents so bland and gentle as to be suited to the most delicate skin—even of a tiny baby.

The nearest druggist sells Resinol Ointment (50c and $1) and Resinol Soap (25c) or you can try them free by writing to Dept. 25-S, Resinol, Baltimore, Md., for liberal sample of each.

J. Wylie Smith's Own Story

Stirring Episodes in Long Flight Career in Mexican Army Thrilling

This is the second installment of the story of J. Wylie Smith, the refugee president of the defunct Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who, after evading extradition during two years of service in the insurrecto army of General Orozco, in Mexico, returned to Atlanta to stand trial because he dying with tuberculosis—a phantom of his former self.

By J. WYLIE SMITH.

I was given a room over the warden's office. I had credit at the commissary. You have to furnish your own bed clothing and buy any food you get except etole, a sort of gruel, bif stik—furnished to you raw—and frijole, beans cooked in pure water at every meal. Grease and salt are unknown.

I remember a hideous tragedy one day as a result of the practice of allowing the prisoners to cook their own meals in their cells. A peon, held for murder, was found dead in bed one morning, his charcoal pot still giving off its fumes over him.

Soon I was allowed to go downtown without a guard. The discipline in Mexican prisons is lax. Once when the prisoners were working on the waterworks a number of them stole away and got drunk. When they returned the only punishment that was administered was that they were not allowed to return to work but were forced to play. They suffered, though. They hated to give up their wages. I knew a number of them who preferred prison life to freedom.

"Neda en calles menos Americanos y toras," spoke a Mexican who was reclining under the shade of a tree in his yard as I passed down the street on one of my daily strolls from the prison.

His meaning was that nobody ever comes out on the street between 12 o'clock and 2:30 but Americans and bulls—a statement which has the weight of a proverb in Mexico. All business houses are closed between those hours. Indeed it was a hot sultry day and I was regretting that I had come out when suddenly I was startled out of my laziness by a sharp piercing bark.

My footsteps had aroused a bull who was lying in the shade of a shrub, not a Mexican bull but a Boston bull terrier. He came towards me belligerent but I spoke to him kindly, so glad to see anything so truly American. And as I walked on that dog followed.

Truly only an American and a bull were on the streets and later only an American and a bull were together at another place, the presence of the bull changing the trend of fate from savage death to the greatest triumph of my life.

But that was later. However, the interesting and important things which led up to it began to absorb my attention. For the first time a personal interest was aroused in me in the revolutionary movement.

I had made the acquaintance of about 75 revolutionary leaders who were confined in the penitentiary. Walking with General Rojas, the most prominent of them, one day our conversation grew intimate.

"I would think that you revolutionists would be shot," I said to him. "Do you know why I am here?" he asked. Before I could speak he answered his own question.

"I said that General Orozco was a damned rascal.

"All of us would be shot," he continued, "but Orozco has plans of his own."

Orozco's Plan.

"He is planning a new revolution. On March he will resign as commander of the Federal forces in Chihuahau. He is confining his staff here so he will have them ready when he needs them.

"The moment he insurges I will be freed, and I will take you with me."

My interest in the plans of the revolutionists immediately became intense. I was having an easy time but things were getting monotonous. I did not know how long I would be held a prisoner nor how much chance I had of escaping extradition. My fighting blood was up. Added to my fear of being taken back to Atlanta and being tried was the ire aroused by the treachery of my pursuers, like Franke I was determined to outwit them. Then there is nothing in the world like Anglo-Saxon freedom.

Then the strangest and most romantic event in my whole experience took place. I was the only American in prison and something of a curiosity. People often came to look at me, and I desired to avoid them as much as possible. But the warden came to me one day and said that two American women were in his office to see me.

Puzzled but greatly interested I hurried down. I gazed at them, unable to recognize either, but I carefully noted that they were handsomely dressed. They said they were interested in my case because I was an American and they wanted to help me. When I told them I had no lawyer they said they would look after that. My clothes were washed in the prison, but not starched. One of the women arranged to have them starched and laundered out in town. They they left without giving any information about themselves.

A few days later, January 26, 1912, my extradition papers arrived and it looked like the jig was up. I was absolutely ignorant of Mexican law and I hardly expected any of my new friends to come to my aid with sufficient funds to hire a competent attorney.

Help at Last—From a Woman.

As mysteriously as she had first come to me one of the beautiful woman returned. With her were two fine looking Mexicans of the cientifico (aristocratic) class. They were lawyers.

Francisco Cardero was an ex-justice of the Supreme Court and a supporter of Madero. Guillermo Porras was ex-Lieutenant Governor and a Diaz enthusiast. I learned later that they were among the highest legal authorities in the State.

Porras took active charge of my case and looked over the extradition papers. He said they were full of flaws but that he did not think I could get justice in Chihuahua on account of the opposition to his politics. So he had the case transferred to Jaurez and went there to prosecute it.

The woman came to me again and I asked her why she had taken such an interest in my case.

"You are an American; so am I," she said. "You have a wife and child to be saved (for I had told her of my family); I have no one in the world to care for."

I found that she was a somewhat notorious woman in Chihuahua and I also learned from other sources than herself that she had paid each of those lawyers $400 in gold to defend me. Her name was Vivian Sinclair.

They won the case through unseen forces, at least to me.

On the night of January 30 the people of Jaurez went to sleep under the seemingly peaceful rule of Madero. They awoke the next morning at daybreak—Mexicans always begin fighting at daybreak—to find a band of revolutionists in possession of everything. They looted the post-office and the customs house, burning all the papers in a bonfire in the streets.

My extradition papers were among them.

I have often thought that Porras knew what was going to happen and I was just as grateful to him as though he had won the case in court.

I heard just before I left Mexico that he had been executed by Madero Constitutionalists near Porral, Chihuahua. I have written for verification.

Only 85 strong the new insurrectos started toward Chihuahua to storm the jail. They arrived on February 2 and at daybreak the next morning began storming the jail.

Such grit I have never seen, before or since. Those Mexicans are slow starting and they always stop at dark they have absorbed the superstition from the Yaqui Indian that the soul leaves the body after dark. It is hard to get them out of their houses at night.

The Fight Begins.

Clinging to the tops of houses and hiding behind fences they began a most vicious and effective attack. They picked off every guard who showed himself on that wall. I was where I could get a good view and every now and then I would see a Federal plug an insurrecto who was lying flat on a house roof like sticking a sharp stick in the back of a toad. One after another were wriggling to death after such shots. There were 700 men defending the jail and defeat for the insurrectos was imminent when a guard had his head split by a bullet that came through a loop hole. The soldier rolled down a flight of steps and landed some twenty feet away at the feet of the Warden, his ghastly face turned upward.

"Stop the fighting," shrieked the Warden, and he turned to General Rojas for help.

"They want me," replied General Rojas. "Free me and the firing will stop in five minutes."

The Warden would not consent, but the fighting continued so fierce he consented to allow Rojas to see the Governor with a guard of five men.

The visit to the Governor was a mere formality. He refused the pardon. But on the return to the jail Rojas, walking a few paces in front of his guard, turned a corner ahead of them at the corner of Calle Liberstad and Calle Tercera and took to his heels.

"Halt," shouted the guard, and they raised their guns.

But they were covered by a band of insurrectos before they could shoot.

My heart jumped with joy when the news reached the prison. I felt that I soon would be able to join him. But my blood was chilled the next day by that most horrible of all features of warfare—the shooting of a traitor.

General Orozco came down from Jaurez next day. He wanted Rojas free but to make a show of enforcing authority he ordered the five guards shot as traitors, the finding of the courtmartial being that they had purposely allowed Rojas to escape. No one knows what cruelty a Mexican can resort to.

Rojas was as good as his word. The firing stopped before his guard returned to the jail. Eagerly did I observe and seek information as to the skirmishes and maneuvers around Chihuahua. The story of Rojas' first victory was typically Mexican.

Captain Mendoza had led the attack on the jail. He was the most unusual looking man I have ever seen and as we were closely associated together thereafter I became very much interested in his odd personality. He was six feet four inches in height but he lost two inches of his size in a stoop in his shoulders. His hair and eye lashes were raven black and his eyes were a greenish gray that shined with an uncanniness. But the oddest thing about him was his mustache, which was a brilliant red. He was as active as a cat and the most wicked man I have ever seen.

When Rojas escaped his plan was to attack the jail and free us all. But Mendoza had retreated out from the city. The reason Mexican revolutions last so long is that an army never will follow up a victory.

Out from Chihuahua Mendoza, with about 25 men, was captured by Colonel Sevrin, of Madero's forces. When Rojas heard of it he declared that Mendoza had freed him and that he was going to the rescue.

With only 260 men, while Sevrin had 700, Rojas began a ruse. Approaching Sevrin after it was too dark for him to tell the number of the revolutionists, Rojas went into camp in plain view. It is the custom to have a camp fire for every ten men. Rojas built about 200 fires. He had his men blow bugles over a long line.

The strategy was successful. Under a flag of truce Rojas sent an ultimatum to Sevrin at daybreak next morning that he must surrender Mendoza or be annihilated. Sevrin surrendered Mendoza. And Mendoza became a colonel under Rojas, the two marching toward Jaurez gathering men as they went. It really was like Napoleon's return from Elba.

MRS. WILSON NOT TO TALK TO WOMEN CIVIC WORKERS

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Mrs. Wilson, wife of the President, will not address the meeting of the woman's branch of the National Civic Federation to-morrow morning, Mrs. Archibald Hopkins, chairman of the association, said:

"Mrs. Wilson is greatly interested in our work, but we don't expect her to address our meetings."

$120,000 NOW IN HAND, BUT CITY WANTS MORE

Council's Projects Overrun June Revenue—Mayor's "Whitewash Veto" Rejected.

Chairman W. G. Humphrey, of the Council Finance Committee, said Tuesday that the maximum amount of new money to be apportioned in June would be $120,000. This includes all increases in revenue, he explained.

The adoption of the Whitehall Street regrading plan and other projects that developed at the meeting of Council Monday would require an expenditure of more than twice that amount. Council's action in calling on the Finance Committee to provide $30,000 for the Whitehall Street work practically assures the beginning of that project this year, but advocates of other much needed improvements will suffer bitter disappointment.

Candler Anticipates Veto.

Declaring that the form of the resolution presented by the Streets Committee, providing for the Whitehall Street work, invited a veto, Alderman John S. Candler said:

"But I am going to vote for it now and after it is vetoed."

The School Board wants $75,000 for an English-Commercial Girls' High School building. The Grady Hospital board got $25,000 for a nurses' dormitory in January and they declare it will take $25,000 more to complete the building. Chairman Orville Hall, of the Streets Committee, insisted that $50,000 was necessary for new streets. All departments want additional appropriations.

Not Enough to Go Around.

There simply won't be enough money in the June budget to go around.

In view of this situation Council adopted Councilman Albert Thomson's resolution creating a special committee of ten councilmen and five citizens to investigate the advisability of a bond issue. Mayor Pro Tem Warren will announce this committee within a few days.

On one matter Council was unanimous. Every one voted aye overruling Mayor Woodward's scorching veto of the fire department probe committee's report vindicating Chief Cummings of the charges of graft and corruption. Council Charles W. Smith made a vigorous speech defending the committee against Mayor Woodward's attack.

Alderman James R. Nutting endeavored to settle the Police Board row over the authority of Chief Beavers to promote subordinates by putting through an ordinance giving all heads of departments power to name their assistants.

Police Deadlock Stands.

Mayor Pro Tem Warren, opposing the ordinance, declared it was introduced for the purpose of politics and that it would reduce board members to mere figureheads.

Alderman Nuting replied that Mayor Pro Tem Warren's attitude was the most palpable sort of politics.

The ordinance was referred to the Ordinance Committee. The Police Board's tangle caused by a tie vote over the right of the chief to promote subordinates remains unsettled.

A surprise to some of the members was the vote sustaining the veto of Mayor Woodward of the dog muzzling ordinance. Mayor Woodward ridiculed the ordinance as absurd and Council sustained his veto by a vote of 15 to override and 9 against. It takes a two-thirds vote to set aside a veto.

AGED FLOOD SUFFERERS FINISHING LONG WALK

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Their money having given out at Harrisburg, Pa., after they had been forced to leave their home at Steubenville, Ohio, by the floods, Albert Price, aged 67, and Sadie, his wife, aged 59, set out a-foot for Richmond, Va., where they have a brother, and have reached Washington en route.

Knee Breeches? Why Not for U. S. Envoy?

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 20.—The Daily Citizen, the official labor organ, says in an editorial:

"It is possible to admire tremendously the Republican simplicity of America without understanding the objection of the new Ambassador to wearing knee breeches. What is there in them offensive to Democratic sentiment? After all John Burns wears them on occasion and with George Washington they were the habitual garment.

"Of course it is not everybody who can boast a leg and it is just possible that Mr. Page's repugnance to knee breeches may be founded on better reasons than the world can wot of."

Loss of Cat Costs University $100,000

MIDDLETOWN, May 20.—The story of how Wesleyan University lost a bequest of $100,000 or more because students stole a pet cat for dissecting purposes a dozen or more years ago was revealed when the will of Miss Margaret Van Deursen, who died a few days ago, was filed. Miss Van Deursen was a great lover of cats. When one to which she was attached disappeared one day, she was grieved. A large reward was offered for its recovery, but it was learned that students hunting for specimens for the biological laboratory had taken it.

Troops Mutiny Over French Military Bill

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Serious mutinous uprisings, due to the proposed extension of the military term from two years to three, are occurring in the ranks of the French Army.

The war office to-day received dispatches from frontier points which stated that dangerous consequences may follow if the Government persists in putting through the bill.

In several instances barracks have been burned.

British Carry Coal for American Navy

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Paymaster John S. Higgins, U. S. N., appearing before the Senate Committee on territories said that practically all of the 250,000 tons of coal shipped annually for Pacific Coast Navy use was carried in British bottoms.

He said that the opening of the Alaska coal fields the subject under consideration by the committee would establish a Pacific supply.

GIRL IN DISTRICT 4 GOES TO TOP IN PONY CONTEST

Miss Fannie Mae Cook, With 40,340 Votes, Takes Big Lead Over Rivals. Nominations to Close May 31.

GOOD FOR 1,000 VOTES.

Only One Nomination Blank Can be Voted for Any Contestant.

Miss Fannie Mae Cook now enjoys the distinction of having gathered more votes than any of the other contestants in The Georgian and American pony outfit contests. She has 40,340 votes.

Miss Cook is in District Four, where the hottest kind of a race is in progress. At the end of last week Miss Florence Greenoe had the lead with 30,950 votes. Now she has 32,320, but even this gain was not enough to keep her in the lead.

Frank Ison, Jr., had a big lead in District No. 5, but Richard Rainey is making gains and promises to be a dangerous competitor.

How great is the interest in the pony contest from out in the State is shown by the publication of the addresses of the Georgia boys and girls who are in the race. Lithonia, Chipley, Macon, Social Circle, Savannah, Columbus, Barnesville, Gainesville, Washington, Quitman, Tennille, Waycross and Rome are among the towns represented.

There still is a large number of boys and girls with just 1,000 votes, as all the contestants have this at the start, there is no telling but that one of the winners may come from among these. As yet no one of the boys and girls has a sufficient lead to discourage competitors.

A few more days remain in which nominations can be made. After May 31 the lists will be closed and those entered by that time will run it out among themselves.

Names and the standing of contestants in the various districts follow:

Saloonist in Ireland Indicted in Georgia

MACON, GA., May 20.—Although he has been in Ireland for five years, Hugh Devlin, a former well-known resident of Macon, has been indicted by four successive grand juries for violating the prohibition law. Sheriff Hicks disclaims any idea of going to Ireland to serve the warrants.

The saloon still is owned by Devlin and operated in his name, and when witnesses testify that they bought liquor there and can not identify the bartender, the grand juries indict the proprietor.

If Devlin ever returns to Macon, he will have considerable explanation to make to the courts.

SOLDIERS GUARD INAUGURATION IN CUBA

Revolutionary Outbreak Feared at Induction of Menocal to Succeed President Gomez.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, May 20.—Rigid military precautions were taken here to-day to prevent any revolutionary outbreaks upon the occasion of the inauguration of Juan Mario Menocal, who succeeds Senor Gomez as President of Cuba. All principal streets were patrolled by troops and batteries of machine guns were placed at strategetic points.

As General Menocal was formerly commander-in-chief of the Cuban army sentiment exists for him in military circles and there is no fear of a mutinous disturbance.

General Menocal is a conservative. His election caused grave fears on account of the bitterness manifested by the Liberals. An attempt was made to have the election declared unconstitutional, but it failed.

The ceremonies to-day took on unusual interest because of the part played by the United States. A special mission came to this city from Washington, representing President Wilson.

A new era is promised for Cuba under the administration of General Menocal, who is avowedly pro-American. One of the chief aims of the new President will be to induce fresh foreign capital to come here.

General Menocal sent the following message to the people of the United States:

"I have stated many times, and I now take advantage of the opportunity to repeat that as Chief Executive of the Cuban Republic my energies will be devoted to fostering and cementing still more closely the friendly ties binding Cuba to the United States."

Head of Brenau Done Injustice by Report

An Atlanta friend of Dr. T. J. Simmons, president of Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., has pointed out an error published on Saturday, May 17, relative to a news item sent from Rome, Ga.

Max Meyerhardt, city attorney of Rome, by letter informed Dr. Simmons that the old Conservatory of Music, formerly connected with Shorter College and owned by Dr. Simmons, had been declared unsafe and insanitary, and suggested that it either be repaired or removed. Dr. Simmons had, three days before receipt of this letter, given instructions to demolish the building.

The report as to the summons of Dr. Simmons before the City Council or in Police Court was incorrect.

Dr. Simmons is one of the leading educators in Georgia and the South, and is a man of whom both Rome and Gainesville have cause to be proud for the work he has done in the interest of higher education.

Serbs and Greeks Fix New Boundaries

DEFEAT IS LIKELY FOR BANKING REFORM

Pressure of Other Bills Will Sidetrack Issue in Summer Legislative Session.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The apprehension of Georgia bankers, recently in session in Savannah, that their proposed banking reform bill may fall of passage in the next Legislature because of the pressure of other matter probably is well founded.

The banking reform bill is voluminous and cannot get through the Legislature without mature deliberation both in committee and on the floor. It necessarily will be taken up section by section and that means that it must be whipped out four times in detail. Rather a long, rough and rugged road to travel, to be sure.

Like the general insurance legislation effected in the last General Assembly, however, it is highly important business, and Legislators will decline to vote for it without knowing exactly what each section provides.

The prospect ahead of the banking bill has served to renew the talk of providing a more satisfactory way of disposing of purely local legislation in the future. If is local legislation invariably that ties up the two houses and serves to kill through inattention many meritorious general bills. Members will pass their immediate local legislation, if the rest of the State's legislation program goes hang.

If local legislation might be disposed of, particularly where there is no opposition, through some simple legislative method, it easily would save 50 per cent of the General Assembly's time. As it is now, a local measure takes up almost if not quite as much time as the average general measure, yet it is a matter of a relatively small importance in separate instances to the State at large.

It takes about as much time to increase the number of county commissioners in Dodge County, for instance, as it does to amend the game laws, and yet who outside of Dodge County cares a hoot whether that county has three or five county commissioners?

An effort will be made in the next Legislature to simplify the process of local legislation, and many people will sincerely hope that the effort may succeed.

Judge John T. Allen, of Baldwin County, Senator-elect from the twentieth district, passed through Atlanta to-day.

Judge Allen was in high spirits and expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the status of his race for the presidency of the next Senate.

"If the vote were to be taken to-morrow," said he, "I am sure absolutely that I would be elected, and, in the best of good nature, I really believe I shall be the only candidate before the Senate when the voting takes place next month."

Judge Allen has been described as the one man in Georgia politics about whom there is absolutely no "lost motion," and somehow the description seems to fit him snugly.

He is one of the very best lawyers in the State and one of Georgia's most astute statesmen.

The United States Supreme Court is expected to hand down soon a decision in the famous Cureton case from Georgia, that will interest the prohibitionists of the State particularly.

The question involved is whether the prohibition laws of Georgia shall be construed similarly to the prohibition laws of Tennessee, the Supreme Courts of the two States being of exact opposite opinions as to the point raised.

Cureton, a Chattanooga soft drink dealer, owned a large distillery near Rising Fawn, Ga. He received an order for whisky in his Chattanooga house, and sent it to his Georgia distillery to be filled. The whisky was shipped from Rising Fawn, and Cureton was arrested on a charge of selling whisky, was tried and found guilty, the Georgia Supreme Court holding that the delivery at Rising Fawn to the common carrier was the consummation of a sale. Cureton appealed to the United States Court, claiming protection under the interstate commerce laws.

If the United States Supreme Court upholds the Georgia Supreme Court, th., prohibitionists will regard it as a victory. If, on the contrary, the United States Courts take the view as set up in the Tennessee Supreme Court, the "dry" people will feel that they have lost a point.

The decision is expected shortly.

Representative Burwell, of Hancock County, will be the oldest member of the new Legislature in point of continuous service. He has been a member of the General Assembly since 1896.

Joe Hill Hall, of Bibb; Byron Bower, of Decatur; John M. Slaton, of Fulton, and John N. Holder, of Jackson, all of whom ranked with Mr. Burwell in point of continuous service, will be missing from the new House, leaving Burwell the veteran and the dean.

The gentleman from Hancock has been in the Legislature almost from the date o' his twenty-first birthday.

The effort to increase heavily the appropriation for Confederate pensions in the next Legislature, while likely to arouse much sympathy, probably will have a hard road to travel.

There will be few if any members who would not like to see the pension increased, and yet there will be many who will be unable to see how it is to be done and meet the other necessary expenses of the State in addition.

It is very well known that Legislatures of late years have found it extremely difficult to keep the State's outgo within its income, and one of the heaviest items of annual expense is the Confederate pension appropriation.

If some statesman is able to show the Legislature how the pensions may be increased without greatly embarrassing some of the departments, the pensions probably will be increased, all right. Unless the Legislature is shown that, however, the increase is apt to be slight, if anything.

DEATH ENDS TRIAL OF MAN LONG DEAD

AUGUSTA, GA., May 20.—The death of the second plaintiff, while the case was being heard in the City Court of Augusta, to-day brought to a sudden termination the fifth trial of a suit to collect an $2,000 insurance policy on the life of John Moore, who was slain near Keysville in January, 1907. The Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States is the defendant. A sixth trial will now result with a third plaintiff to prosecute the suit. The four previous hearings resulted in mistrials.

Tom Moore, who several months ago was killed as an escaped convict while a fugitive with "Old Bill" Minor, from the State Farm at Milledgeville, originally brought the suit. He was the beneficiary named in the policy.

Tom Moore was accused of killing his brother and was given a life sentence in the penitentiary. The Supreme Court affirmed it. He was serving this when he escaped from the State Farm and met death.

Mrs. Louise Moore, as administratrix of the estate of her husband, Tom Moore, continued the insurance suit.

To-day, while the case was on trial, a telegram was received from Washington, Ga., announcing the death of Mrs. Moore.

Judge Eve dismissed the jury, after expressing regret that the acse could not proceed.

L. S. Peeples, counsel for the plaintiff, announced after court adjourned, that he would bring the suit in behalf of another administrator of the Tom Moore estate.

When the trial came to such an abrupt ending to-day, the attorneys for the insurance company were endeavoring to prove that Tom Moore killed his brother, because Judge Eve had placed the burden of proof on the insurance people, not taking into consideration the fact that Moore was convicted of the murder in Burke Superior Court.

Reward for Men Who Blew Up Home of Negro Attracts Much Attention.

Governor Joseph M. Brown's proclamation, offering a reward for the apprehension of the Cobb County dynamiters, has attracted a great deal of attention and brought forth many expressions of approval throughout the State.

The Governor's uncompromisingly hostile attitude toward all forms of lawlessness has been so persistently demonstrated that there are few if any criminals left in Georgia who do not know that he means to enforce the law sternly against them if they violate the same.

Not only has he set every agency of the State at work seeking to establish the identity of the Cobb County dynamiters, but he also has offered substantial rewards for the apprehension of certain lynchers recently operating in Columbia and Heard Counties.

As he draws near the end of his term in the executive office, Governor Brown, instead of weakening in any of his positions against lawlessness, seems all the more inclined to emphasize his personal and official detestation of it.

The Governor holds that there are very many more law-abiding people in Georgia than there are lawbreakers, and that law-observers are entitled to full and complete protection against the criminal classes.

JAPS' MOVE NOW ONLY COMMENT AT CAPITOL

Orientals May Not Hasten to Answer U. S. Reply to the Alien Bill Protest.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—It is Japan's next move, was the only comment State Department officials would make to-day on the Japanese situation. The reports vary as to the time when the Mikado's statesmen will make their reply to the note delivered by Secretary of State Bryan to the Japanese Ambassador yesterday.

Some officials expect it within the next three days and others say the Japanese might take prolonged consideration, since the Webb act will not go into effect before August.

Reports of unusual activity in the way of shipments of supplies to the Presidio of San Francisco were denied at the War Department to-day.

Secretary of War Garrison declared the effort now being made to recruit the regiments in the Philippines to their full strength has been going on for nearly twelve months, and has no relation to the present situation between Japan and the United States.

Asiatic League Would Deny Orientals Leases.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—The executive committee of the Asiatic Constitutional League has begun obtaining signatures to a referendum petition to defeat the anti-alien land law which was signed by Governor Johnson yesterday.

The league's objection to the law is the clause permitting an alien to hold a three-year lease. The officials of the league soon will circulate an initiative petition for a law which will exclude Japanese and Chinese from both ownership and leaseholds under any conditions.

California Only Trying To Save Itself, He Says.

NEW YORK, May 20.—"The people of California have reached a crisis in their affairs. They have to determine right now whether California is to be overrun by Asiatics or whether it is to be kept for Californians. In three years California will be completely overrun if the wrong steps are taken now."

This statement was made here to-day by Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, as he and Mrs. Wheeler were sailing for Europe. Dr. Wheeler expressed the opinion, though, that there is no danger of actual hostilities between this country and Japan.

"The diplomats will be able to bring about a common understanding," said he. At the same time he declared the alien land bill, barring Japanese from ownership of land in California, was just and should be the law of the State.

COUNTERFEITER CONVICTED.

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., May 20. R. T. Lawing, member of the counterfeiting gang tried a few days ago, was to-day sentenced in the Federal Court to two years in the Atlanta Penitentiary. He is the fourth prisoner convicted at this term of court to be sent to Atlanta.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Entertaining Bill at Forsyth.

First nighters—those afflicted with the desire to see and hear before anybody else—who settled into their accustomed seats Monday night at the Forsyth Theater prepared to endure at any cost the routine vaudeville, were given several surprises of their young and blase lives before the program was finished.

Perhaps the most unusual number of the entertaining bill was John Geiger and his "talking violin." Mr. Geiger certainly made his violin do everything but speak and after he had put it through its paces, including imitations of almost everything from a "Spizzerinctum" to a woodsaw, his audience had forgotten that he hadn't made the instrument emit vocal sounds.

For first-row habitues the Dunedin troupe, a bicycle novelty act, composed of one man and three girls, proved an interesting feature. The one man can certainly ride, and the girls are very good to look at, especially to the first-row crowd. Other numbers of the bill included Josephine Dunfee, whose voice, while very good, was wrongly applied in the calibre of songs she rendered; Nevins and Erwood, old-timers on Atlanta's dancing stage; Adam and Eve, a monkey act especially attractive to children; Gallagher and Fleida in a comedy act entitled "The Battle of Bay Rum," which proved a winner, and Bradshaw Brothers, who presented some amazing new twists and turns in a contortion act.

"The Deep Purple" Pleases.

Patrons of the Atlanta Theater were treated to a new phase of Miss Billy Long's ability as leading lady yesterday, when "The Deep Purple," Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's play, was presented in Atlanta for the first time. The initial performance was at a matinee.

Ably assisting Miss Long in her triumph in the portrayal of New York underworld life was Miss Agnes Tinsley Harrison, the popular young Atlanta girl, who took the part of the unconscious blackmailer.

The play is an interesting one from start to finish, and the company appears to advantage in it. Mr. Wall, the leading man, does some good work in the part assigned him.

Generous applause was accorded the company for its work by the moderately filled house.

Tabloid Musical Comedy at Bijou.

Tabloid musical comedy—"A Trip to Joyville" the attraction—got a fine start on Monday at the Bijou. Four big audiences indorsed the great big dime's worth of entertainment. The show, the theater and the general conditions all pointed to the fact that tabloid entertainment had caught on in just the fashion the knowing ones had predicted.

"A Trip to Joyville" is an hour and a third of singing, dancing, comedy and music, with some vaudeville interruptions that are clever. There is a story about a lot of jolly folks going off for a day of frolic; they are pretty girls, well-groomed young men and a corps of character comedians who will perhaps be found some day in "faster company."

"A Trip to Joyville" will be presented at daily matinee—two on Saturday—and twice each night the rest of the week.

Bond Registration Closes.

COLUMBUS. — The registration books for the Dillingham Street bridge bonds have closed with only 456 voters having qualified for the election on June 7. The issue is for $50,000, it being the third to be voted upon for the bridge.

G. O. P. LEADERS TO REUNITE FACTIONS

New Plan Lets Committee Rearrange Representation Instead of Calling Convention.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Recommendation that the Republican National Committee readjust the basis of representation in national conventions, instead of calling a national convention to effect this change, probably will be made by the executive committee of the national committee when it meets here Saturday to take up this question. This was the consensus of opinion to-day.

Many members of the committee favor accomplishing the change without calling a convention. National Chairman Charles D. Hilles will preside at the meeting.

Members of the executive committee are John T. Adams, Iowa; Fred W. Estabrook, New Hampshire; Thomas P. Goodrich, Indiana; Thomas A. Marlow, Montana; Alvah H. Martin, Virginia; Thomas K. Neidringhaus, Missouri; Samuel M. Perkins, Washington; Newell Sanders, Tennessee; Charles B. Warren, Michigan; Roy O. West, Illinois; Ralph E. Williams, Oregon.

On this committee are three men who were Roosevelt sympathizers at the Chicago convention. They are Neidringhaus, West and Williams. Committeeman Adams, of Iowa, is friendly to the Cummins reorganization plan.

"This committee is as progressive as anybody," said a Republican leader to-day, "and ought to be satisfactory to LaFollette men."

The theory of the Republicans is that the Progressive faction of the party can be brought closer into the fold by merely readjusting representation in national conventions. It will be a cheap and convenient way of reuniting the party.

'THE TRIPLE TIE' GRIPS EVERY READER

Are you reading "The Triple Tie?" With to-day's installment this fascinating story which is appearing daily in The Georgian has made everyone who started it a willing slave to the hero and heroine and the adventures through which they have been started.

It is not too late to begin this story. The first installment appeared Monday. Readers of The Georgian will recall the odd picture of the bearded and eye-glassed man who had three black ties on his shirt bosom. From that picture readers were invited to guess the title to the story which was promised them in The Georgian's columns. Five prizes of $5 each were offered for the best suggestions for a name, gleaned from the picture. "The Triple Tie" was the name.

The story's first installment related the opening adventures of Gordon Kelly, a real, live, red-blooded young man, his love for a girl, and the baseball romance which is to follow.

The story will run until June 29. Toward the close the serial will end abruptly at one of the most dramatic situations ever conceived by a novelist. Readers will then be asked to supply the solution to the several mysteries unsolved.

This is not a guessing contest. The answers are logical conclusions to what has gone before and the reader can hit upon them only through reasoning them out.

For the best solutions prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Georgian. The first prize is $100, second prize $50, third prize $25, fourth prize $15. There are also twelve prizes of $5 each.

Originality, literary value and analytical clearness will be considered in awarding the prizes.

Address all letters to Mystery Editor, Atlanta Georgian.

Here's the Prize List in Great Story Contest

Prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Atlanta Georgian for the best solution of the great serial novel, "The Triple Tie," now running in The Georgian, as follows:

First Prize - -	$100
Second Prize -	50
Third Prize - -	25
Fourth Prize - -	15
12 other prizes, each.	5

"The Triple Tie" will be run in generous daily installments until June 29, when the final chapter will be published. Synopsis of the last installment is now in the hands of Mr. T. J. Peeples, cashier of the American National Bank.

It will be held by him in a sealed envelope until a committee of three Atlanta citizens not connected in any way with The Georgian may select the winners of the prizes.

Graduating exercises at Wesley Memorial Hospital Training School will be held Friday evening at 8 o'clock at Wesley Memorial Church. Graduates this year are Miss Corrie Mims, Elliott, Ga.; Miss Annie Traber, Atlanta; Miss Fannie Mary Catron, Barboursville, Ky.; Miss Annie Mae Luckie, Valdosta, Ga.

Wesley Memorial Hospital is the hospital of Georgia Methodism and draws its patronage from the entire State and other sections. Dr. H. M. DuBose, of the First Methodist Church, will deliver the address to the graduating class.

Woman, 106, Doesn't Care to Live Longer

BALTIMORE, May 20.—A birthday reception on one's hundred and sixth anniversary is certainly an unusual experience, yet Mrs. Ann Bouder, 723 North Carey Street, enjoyed that privilege.

In a big armchair in her home, Mrs. Pouder talked of the happenings of a century ago in the animated manner one might more reasonably expect of a hero of Gettysburg recounting tales of the "sixties."

Mrs. Pouder told her friends she did not care to live until another birthday.

Girls Deaf, Dumb and Blind, Can Converse

AUSTIN, TEX., May 20.—Enrolled in the State Deaf and Dumb Institute are two girls, Ruby Rice and Pearl Thomas, who were blind, deaf and dumb. By great patience they have been taught the sign language and converse with their teachers and others knowing the sign language by means of touch. They know the positions of the figures in making the letters and by feeling another's hands can converse with them.

Both have been at the institute several years and will not graduate for two more years.

Germany Prosperous; $200,000 Bet in Day

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

BERLIN, May 20.—The newspapers point out that there can be little basis for the suspicion that Germany is suffering from a lack of ready money in the presence of the fact that the Government betting machines at the Grunewald course recorded the gross takings as roundly $200,000 on Whit Monday. The gate receipts for the day totaled $27,000.

Both figures are record-breakers in Germany. The betting machines take the place of bookmakers.

Militants Threaten Ruin to Famous Links

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. ANDREWS, SCOTLAND, May 20.—Placards posted by suffragettes threatening to destroy the putting greens of the famous golf links here and prevent the playing of the amateur golf championship games next week threw this village into a panic to-day. The townspeople rely largely upon the golf links for prosperity, and ruination of the links would mean desolation of the community.

Ethel Barrymore Has Double Here

Seminary Girl Her Counterpart

Miss Nellie McCravey, of Huntsville, Ala.

Miss Nellie McCravey, of Huntsville, Ala., a member of the graduating class of Washington Seminary, Atlanta, has been adjudged a double of Ethel Barrymore, whose beauty won recognition on two continents.

Among the girls' younger set of Huntsville Miss McCravey was considered the most beautiful, possessing all the attractions and graces. Her friends at Washington Seminary and acquaintances in Atlanta are even more enthusiastic over her personal charms, if possible, than her Huntsville associates. They promptly acquiesced in the opinion of Huntsville's elite that Miss McCravey was the "Ethel Barrymore of the South."

HUFF LOSES FIRST CONTEMPT RULING

Judge Grubb Overrules Demurrer Offered by Defense—Point of Law Raised.

MACON, GA., May 20.—The defense lost the first point in the contempt of court case against Colonel W. A. Huff, whose trial began here today in Federal Court, when Judge W. I. Grubb, presiding, overruled a demurrer offered by the defense.

A recess was taken until 3 o'clock, when a point of law will be argued. This point is whether the sending of the caustic leter by Colonel Huff to Judge Emory Speer at his home last July constituted contempt of court. All witnesses have been dismissed until to-morrow.

The Federal Court was thronged when the case was called for trial this morning.

Attorneys for the prosecution are District Attorney O. D. Street, of Alabama; Assistant District Attorney A. H. Codington, of Macon; Judge Enoch Calloway, of Augusta, and George S. Jones and Orville A. Park, of Macon. The defendant is represented by Thomas S. Felder, Attorney General of Georgia, who for nine years has been Colonel Huff's attorney in bankruptcy litigation, out of which the contempt case developed. Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, was designated by the circuit judge to preside over the trial.

Judge Speer will be the chief witness for the Government. District Attorney Alexander Akerman and Judge A. J. Cobb, of Athens, are among the other witnesses.

Colonel Huff declares that, regardless of the result of his trial, he will proceed with his charges against Judge Speer. He says that the charges will be laid before the President and Congress within two weeks.

Speaking of the Number of Wash Dresses Young Women Need at This Season

Doubtless much could be said by mothers, and doubtless more will be said as the days grow warmer. But here is the interesting part—all these much needed wash dresses may be bought to-morrow at very, very great reductions. They go into a sale to-morrow in the Junior Department.

Prices point to worth-while savings and to the certain fact that to-morrow will be the day to secure all the wash dresses this summer is going to call for.

Here is the proof:

$2.25 Junior Wash Dresses $1.19

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. They are of ginghams, percales, bright summery patterns and colorings and styles—low-necks and short-sleeves—trimmed becomingly with braids, bands and pipings of self and contrasting colors. No question about you and daughter liking them!

None will be exchanged, none sent C. O. D.

$3.50 Junior Wash Dresses $1.95

In sizes fifteen, seventeen and nineteen years. Percales and ginghams of fine weave—many of them imported—and of choicest patterns. And please note how very carefully these dresses are made. Every stitch, every seam is right. Choose from high neck and long sleeve styles and low neck and short sleeve styles in two-piece and one-piece dresses.

$7.50 Junior Outing Balkan Blouses $3.75

Half price for the smartest little outing coats the season has brought out for the Junior Miss! We call them outing coats, but the way the young folks are wearing them with white dresses these cool mornings and evenings would seem to discredit that as their first use.

Red flannel—made with just that fullness through the waist that is most attractive.

Sizes fifteen and seventeen years.

With the Help of Mrs. Marvin Now With Us Demonstrating La Vida Corsets

you may do much right now that will tend toward personal comfort this summer. Warm weather and an ill-fitting corset! Banish the thought, banish the possibility!

Besides it is altogether unnecessary.

We have a new summer weight La Vida—true to the approved fashion lines—in a model that is right for you and right for the light and filmy dresses that it must support and hold in graceful lines. And right now (to the end of this week), Mrs Marvin, a skilled and experienced corset woman, is here to fit you.

It is a splendid time to attend to summer corsets!

A Notice in Good Time The Ask Mr. Foster

Free Information Bureau Closes Saturday

So those who have delayed have but the intervening days now to ask questions about summer traveling; and there is no question that all who are planning vacation trips may gain from these travel experts information that will be valuable to them when the going-away time comes around.

Making Charles Happy

A Humorous Story, Complete.

"IT seems a curious perversity of fate," said the young married woman, "that I should have a husband who really has a high regard for clothes, when so many women complain that they can not enlist their husbands' attention or check books in that noble cause.

"When Charles said yesterday morning, 'My dear, you will attend to ordering your spring hats before long, will you not?' I knew it was useless to put off the matter any longer. So I promised him that I would get something that very day. I laid aside that wonderful new play of Strindberg's that I was going to take over to the park and read, and the poor dear wrote me a check and went to the office looking quite relieved in his mind.

"After he had gone, I stopped to finish only one act of Strindberg and then I started. On the way downtown I figured out just what kind of hat I should get.

"It was not so hard to plan one in my mind, but it was a different matter to find the hat that I had planned. I went to six shops and tried on about 80 hats before I began to feel discouraged and decided that there must be something wrong with my looks.

She Looked Wild.

"In the sixth shop I met Mrs. Pelton, who looked wild-eyed and belligerent, and had a curious little straw concoction set upon the top of her hair, with round red objects falling off the back of it like a peck of apples descending a stairway.

"When she saw me, she clutched me menacingly by the arm, as if I were responsible for the present social system, for she said: 'Isn't it an outrage that human intelligence has to be expended upon pursuits like this! They talk about the senseless fashions of women! Do they realize that men make these styles and then force them upon us? Do you know the meaning of this whole insane subject of fashion? It's a device perpetrated by the merchants and manufacturers to get rid of the unconsumed surplus. Now, when our sex has the ballot, I hope——'

"I calmed her down, as much as I could by telling her that I felt that way about it. However, I was so relieved to find that perhaps the trouble was not with my looks, after all, that I walked over to a counter where several untrimmed hats were piled up in a bin and a lot of women were clutching at them and bought the first one from the top of the heap. It was light and soft and felt comfortable and did not make me look entirely like a cartoon when I was trying it on.

"So great was my relief at ending my search that I took home the hat with quite a feeling of satisfaction. I reasoned that it would be a simple matter to trim it myself, for all I should have to do was to leave off most of the things that the trimmed hats had on.

"That was yesterday morning. The rest of the day and until midnight last night I devoted to attempts to trim the hat. Fortunately Charles stayed downtown to dinner, so I could work without interruption. I trimmed and untrimmed eight times and nothing that I could devise looked right, so I gave it up in despair and went to bed.

"This morning as soon as Charles had gone I got the odious hat out from under the bed, where I had hidden it, and by the broad light of early day discovered what was the matter with it. The trouble was in the color, which I had failed to observe closely. It was not a normal straw color nor a yellow nor a brown, but a sickly, bilious, yellowish green, which made everything that it came into contact with look seasick, including me.

"It being now too late to return the hat, which had begun to show signs of wear, I carried it down to a dye shop and found that they could color it for me, but would have to change the shape, which was the least objectionable thing about it, and that it would take four weeks.

More Trouble.

"I then went to a department store and bought a bottle of dye, which the saleswoman said any child could apply with a small brush. In attempting to open the bottle after I had carried it home my knife slipped, the tin cap flew off and half the contents spilled over the kitchen table, a stack of dishes and the kitchen sink, to all of which it immediately adhered like enamel.

"Fortunately, it was Delia's afternoon out, but as I knew that she would be very cross when she saw the dye I spent two hours and a half and a can of scouring powder in removing it from the kitchen landscape before I could return my attention to the hat. The remaining contents of the bottle I then applied to the hat, except the part that splattered on myself. I then relined it, trimmed it for the ninth time, tried it on and found that I could stand to look at the finished product in the glass without feeling ill. I felt that I had earned that hat.

"When Charles came home I had it stuck on my head for him to look at and was just beginning the second act of Strindberg. He was very much pleased, and said: 'That looks very nice, my dear. Now, you see how easy it is to get becoming hats, so you must go down and order two or three more, and then you will be supplied for the summer.'"

Not What He Meant.

JONES and Long had not met for years. Once—that is, in the days when both had been striving for fame in their different professions—they had been really good chums, and many a talk had they enjoyed together by the fireside as to the little places they would take in the country "when their ships came home."

The dream of Jones has been realized, and now, although a portly old fellow, it was with a sense of real pleasure that he prepared for a visit from his former friend.

"Ah, it's splendid seeing you down here, Long!" he said cordially, by way of greeting. "Quite like old times—what? And the missus, I know, is longing to shake you by the hand. But first—yes, you must come along and have a look at my greenhouse. You simply must!"

And Long went.

"Well, Jones," he said, "you've got a mighty pretty place down here; but, to my mind, it's just a bit bare."

"Oh!" replied Jones, cheerfully, "that's because the trees are so young! Next time you come—why, they'll be so big that you won't recognize them!"

The Social World

The dance recital given by pupils of Miss Lillian Viola Moseley at Segadlo's Monday evening was attended by a large number of guests. The program of beautiful dances was most enthusiastically received. A number of clever children presented ballroom dances, ballet numbers, esthetic and solo interpretative dances, reflecting great credit upon themselves and upon their teacher.

Among the solo dancers Miss Idelia Andrews did extraordinary work. Her "Little Boy Blue," done in costume, was very fine, and she was a leader in all the group dances.

Miss Nell Summerall in a fetching costume danced "La Paloma," to the delight of all who saw her. Little Miss Martha Boynton, in a white tulle gown covered with pink roses, was a bewitching little dancer presenting "The Spirit of Spring." Another pretty little girl who danced beautifully alone was Miss Sarah Wagstaff, whose number was "Polka Miniature." Miss Ruth Carr Benson presented "Fulano," a Venetian gondolier dance, wearing a pretty fancy dress.

A large number of children, both girls and boys, took part in the evening's entertainment. The little girls were beautifully gowned in pink and white and blue dancing frocks, with ballet slippers of the color of their dresses. Miss Moseley wore a handsome evening gown of black satin charmeuse, with draped skirt and corsage of shadow lace and chiffon adorned with a corsage bouquet of pastel-tinted sweetpeas.

Music at Lawn Fete.

A feature of the lawn fete to be held Friday afternoon and evening on the lawns surrounding the homes of Mrs. George Dexter and Mrs. George Traylor, on Ponce DeLeon Avenue, will be a program of music including an old fashioned quartette and a country dance. Mr. James Wardwell will be in charge of this program, and other attractions will include a row of booths with household supplies for sale, candy table, etc. A housekeepers' booth, with many articles suitable for housekeepers, and a supply of fresh vegetables, will be arranged. Special attractions will be given during the afternoon for children. Members of St. Elizabeth Guild of St. Luke's Church will sponsor the affair.

Dinner at the Driving Club.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Bancker will entertain eight guests at dinner at the Piedmont Driving Club Tuesday evening for Mrs. Bates Block's guests, Miss Caroline Scott, of Arkansas, and Miss Lorna Carr, of St. Louis.

Embroidery Club to Meet.

For Mr. and Mrs. Seydel.

A series of parties will be tendered Mr. and Mrs. Paul Seydel during their visit to Dr. and Mrs. Vassar Woolley. Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Duncan will entertain at dinner Tuesday evening at the Brookhaven Club; Mr. and Mrs. William D. Ellis, Jr., will entertain at dinner Wednesday evening. Other affairs include Dr. and Mrs. Woolley's tea Thursday and Mrs. James Jackson's matinee party Saturday. Mrs. Seydel will remain with her mother after the departure of Mr. Seydel next week.

For Mrs. Hynds.

Mrs. Arthur Hynds has returned from Chattanooga, where she visited Mrs. Fountain Rice, Jr., during Mr. Hynds' absence in Dallas, Texas. Among the parties tendered Mrs. Hynds in Chattanooga were a tea at the Golf Club, given by Mrs. Stacy, and a bridge party by Mrs. Burke, with an informal tea by Mrs. Rice. On her return Mrs. Rice accompanied Mrs. Hynds for a visit to her father and sister, Mr. C. E. Sergeant and Miss Lule Sergeant.

For Mr. and Mrs. Wellhouse.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Wellhouse, who will sail May 26 for a summer abroad, will be tendered a dinner of eight guests Tuesday evening by Mr. and Mrs. Werner S. Byck.

Miss Lewis Hostess.

Miss Margaret Lewis' bridge luncheon Tuesday morning complimented her guests, Miss Wilhelmina Drummond and Mrs. O. V. Derr, of Indiana. Sweetpeas in all the pink and lavender shades decorated the apartment. Silk hose were given as the first and consolation prizes and the guests of honor were presented with hand-embroidered collar and cuff sets.

Miss Lewis' guests were Misses Penelope Clarke, Frances Connally, Marian Foster, Aurelia Speer, Cobbie Vaughan, Nellie Stewart, Elizabeth Morgan, Clifford West, May O'Brien, Eloise Oliver, Edith Dunson, Adrienne Battey, Josephine Stoney, Susan Osborne, Mary King, Louise Bloodworth of Forsyth, Mrs. S. Senior Class Exercises.

Of much interest to the seniors of the Washington Seminary and their friends are the class exercises to take place in the seminary auditorium Tuesday evening.

The choruses will be sung by the seniors.

Miss Dorothy Traynham will deliver the president's address. The class history will be told by Miss Elizabeth Hancock. The prophecy will be foretold by Miss Helen Douglas, and the class poem will be recited by Miss Louise Ware. Misses Taylor, Springer, Dyson, Shippen, Cureton, Andrews and Hancock will furnish the music.

Dance at Segadlo's.

The Entre Nous Club will give an informal dance at Segadlo's Wednesday evening.

Visitors Entertained.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mathews, assisted by Mr. and Mrs. C. W. McClure, entertained at an informal social hour in Inman Park on Monday evening in honor of several United Presbyterian commissioners attending the General Assembly. The commissioners were Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Ashwood, Cambridge, Ohio; Rev. S. J. Huey, St. Louis, Mo.; Rev. P. H. Yourd, Marissa, Ill.; Mr. J. H. Hamilton, Kirkaussas City, Ark.; Dr. S. R. Lyons, Richmond, Ind.; Rev. J. H. McCormick, Paxton, Ill.; Dr. R. W. Nairn, Zanesville, Ohio; Mr. John McMillan, Marissa, Ill.; Rev. J. M. McQuilken, Carnegie, Pa., and Mr. A. C. Drama League to Meet.

At a meeting of the Atlanta branch of the Drama League at 4 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, at the Georgian Terrace, the Rev. W. W. Memminger will read "The Pigeon," by John Galsworthy. Mrs. William C. Spiker, president, will give a short talk explaining the purposes of the league, preceding Dr. Memminger's reading. All interested persons wishing to join the league have been invited.

Tea for Visitors.

Mrs. Willis B. Parks and Miss Aline Parks gave a tea Tuesday afternoon for their guests, Mrs. J. F. John, of North Carolina, and Miss Louise Dowmer, of Hopkinsville, Ky. Roses and spring flowers formed the decorations.

Assisting in entertaining were Mrs. F. G. Byrd, Mrs. John W. Moore, Mrs. George Noble, Mrs. S. F. Boykin, Mrs. W. M. Zirkle, Mrs. J. W. Stubbs, Mrs. John Means Daniel, Mrs. Lucius McConnell, Misses Jane Stanfiel, Margaret Armstrong, Florence Dugger, Mildred Noble and Ethel Noble.

For Brides-Elect.

Miss Ada Turner and Miss Muriel Hall, two brides-elect of June, were tendered a tea Tuesday afternoon by Miss Nan Stephens at her Druid Hills residence. Red roses and daisies formed decorations in the music room, with pink and white roses in the drawing room and breakfast room.

A bronze wicker basket of pink and white roses, with Dresden shaded candles, and decorative details in pink and white, adorned the tea table. Punch was served from a mound of red roses, in the music room, Misses Grace Stephens and Daisy Martin presiding. Others assisting were Mrs Lyman Hall, Mrs. J. D. Turner, Mrs. John C. Turner, Mrs. William Comer, Misses Anne Mitchell, Marian Woodward and Fannie Turner.

Miss Stephens wore pale blue embroidered crepe over pink satin Misses Grace Stephens and Daisy Martin wore white lingerie.

GIRL ATTACKED AND SLAIN ON HER WAY TO SCHOOL

PITTSBURG, May 20.—The body of pretty 14-year-old Grace Johnson lies at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Johnson, near Trafford, to-day, and the State constabulary, aided by citizens with bloodhounds, are scouring the district to capture the man who attacked and murdered the child as she was on her way to school along the public road.

PERSONALS

Miss Mattie Ball, of Jacksonville, Fla., is visiting in the city for a few weeks.

Mrs. M. E. Harris will give a party Thursday afternoon for Miss Irene Hartzog.

Mrs. J. W. Falkenburg will entertain Friday for Miss Irene Hartzog, who will be married in June.

Miss Emma Kate Amorous has returned from Asheville, where she was entertained as the guest of Miss Ellen Smathers.

Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Chapman, Jr., announce the birth of a daughter May 17. Mrs. Chapman was Miss Julia Manning.

Mrs. Edward M. Hafer leaves Wednesday for a week's visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Calvin, at Experiment Station.

Miss Ruth Rosser will return from Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., Friday to spend the summer with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Luther Rosser.

Mrs. R. T. Moon and Miss Ellie Howard left Tuesday morning for Cartersville, where they will join friends for a fishing trip on the Etowah River.

Mr. and Mrs. I. Y. Sage, Jr., and family have closed their home and will be with Mrs. I. Y. Sage at "Oak Cliff," on the Williams Mill Road, until September.

Miss Katherine Farmer, of New York, arrived Tuesday for a two weeks' visit to her cousin, Mrs. Gadsden Russell, on North Avenue. A series of informal parties will be given for her.

Mrs. R. E. Davidson won the prize, a hand-painted plate, and Mrs. J. R. Black cut the consolation, a lemon dish, at Mrs. F. P. Cook's bridge party, when twenty guests were entertained.

The Rev. and Mrs. Donald McQueen and little daughter, Lois, of Shelbyville, Tenn., who are attending the Presbyterian Assembly, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. R. D. Crusoe on Eighth Street for luncheon Tuesday.

CROW FIGHTS WITH SNAKE; CAW'S THANKS WHEN SAVED

GRAND RAPIDS, WIS., May 20.—While hunting for May flowers on Blueberry Ridge, seven miles from this city, Richard Arpin and Henry and Ernest Smith, witnessed a fight between a garter snake and a crow.

The snake was getting the better of the crow and had coiled itself several times around the bird's neck, when the boys struck the snake on the head.

The rescued crow expressed its gratitude in crow language and made no objection when young Arpin formally adopted him.

MACON TO SEEK STATE K. OF P. HEADQUARTERS

MACON, GA., May 20.—More than 30 Macon delegates leave to-night to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Waycross. A determined effort will be made to land the permanent headquarters of the grand lodge for this city. T. J. Carling, supreme chancellor of the world, who is a resident of this city, is throwing his influence to Macon in this regard.

HUSBAND JAILED AS HE RETURNS TO SUE WIFE

D. H. Clark, Held on Wife's Charge of Desertion, Admits He Alone Stole Son.

Augustus H. Clark, formerly with the Atlanta Gas Light Company, whose 3-year-old boy, Augustus Hamilton Clark, Jr., recently figured in a sensational kidnaping episode, is in police station Tuesday at the instigation of his wife, who, with her two little children, lives at 156 Richardson Street.

The young husband returned to Atlanta Monday, he said, for the purpose of entering suit for divorce against his wife, and Monday night visited her at her home, to make the proposition that if she would not contest the divorce action he would permit her to keep both children. Mrs. Clark, he said, informed him she would fight to a finish.

Wife Has Him Arrested.

After Clark left the house, Mrs. Clark hurriedly telephoned to Police Chief Beavers, informing him that her husband was back in the city and asking his immediate arrest for desertion. Clark was taken into custody shortly after midnight at the home of his mother, 184 Hill Street.

Clark declared Tuesday he never again would live with his wife, but would fight in the courts for the custody of little Augustus Hamilton Clark. He said he would make no effort to regain the youngest child, Charles, aged 1 year.

"My mother is wrapped up in little Augustus, and I want to give him to her," said Clark. "I want my mother to care for the little fellow and educate him. My wife can keep the other child."

Mother Under Indictment.

Mrs. George S. Clark, mother of the young husband, is now under bond on a grand jury indictment charging her with kidnaping little Augustus. Mrs. Clark took the little fellow to Chicago in March, and was later met there by young Clark. Mrs. Clark is said to have become ill in Chicago. She returned to Atlanta with the little boy, where the wife regained him.

Clark Tuesday relieved his mother of all blame for the spiriting away of the child, admitting that he planned the whole affair.

Clark said he came here from Jackson, Miss., where he is connected with the Jackson Light and Power Company.

SLUMMING PARTIES NOT TOLERATED AT MACON

MACON, GA., May 20.—Slumming parties are not tolerated in Macon. Miss Dorothy Smith, a corset demonstrator, and C. K. Hildreath, a traveling man, ascertained this fact when they were arrested in the restricted district by policemen especially instructed to take such sight-seeing parties in custody. The couple were fined $11 each.

ALWAYS NEW, ALWAYS BEST, AT THE BONITA

Take the tip and go to the Bonita this week—to-day. You will enjoy the show.

INDICTS CHURCH AS NEGLECTING NEGROES

A severe indictment was passed upon the Presbyterian Church for its indifference to the negro problem by Dr. Howard Agnew Johnston, of the First Presbyterian Church, Stamford, Conn., in the report of his committee on the freedmen of the country.

"The Presbyterians are making absolutely no effective effort toward the solution of this great problem," declared Dr. Johnston. "We are asleep on the job. The enormity of our recreancy is apparent when we consider that every tenth man over whom our flag flies is a black man.

"We need a trained leadership to take charge of the situation. We need trained Christian teachers to go into the schools and higher institutions and instruct these people.

Little Financial Aid Given.

"How poorly we have responded to the needs of this problem is indicated by the pitifully small financial aid we have given. There are only 30,000 negro communicants in our Northern Church. Yet these poor, illiterate persons give more than a third of that contributed by the million and a half white members of the Northern Church.

"We have been the rankest sort of cowards. We have feared to take any brave, decided step. At the rate we are going, our progress will continue at a snail's pace. Some say send them to Liberia; some say send them somewhere else—get rid of the problem by shipping the black people out of the country. But God says: 'They need not depart; give ye them.'"

John Gaston, of Pittsburg, Pa., associate secretary of the Freedmen's Board, declared that the key to the whole problem must be found in the negro ministry.

"Georgia has a million negroes within its boundaries, more than all of the Northern States combined," said Mr. Gaston. "This constitutes an immense, an appalling problem. How are you going to solve it? I believe its solution can come only in a trained, educated negro ministry. The Presbyterian Church has made a start along this line. It is a small start, but we are relying in the Christian spirit of our white communicants to give it a splendid impetus. In thirteen Southern States we have established four synods and sixteen presbyteries. Ministering to the negro people are 241 negro preachers."

Sees Lessening of Crime.

Mr. Gaston said that the incalculable benefit of gospel-training and educational instruction had been demonstrated to his satisfaction in many places in the South. In one Arkansas county, he said that the percentage of negro crimes was five times that of the white crimes. In spite of this, he declared, that in the ten years' history of a negro training school in that county not one of the students had appeared before the county court on the charge of being guilty of a crime against the State.

Healthy Baby is Precious Blessing

To Make It Healthy and Keep It Healthy Use a Reliable Baby Laxative

DOROTHY JOHNSON.

In spite of the greatest personal care and the most intelligent attention to diet, babies and children will become constipated, and it is a fact that constipation and indigestion have wrecked many a young life. To start with a good digestive apparatus is to start life without handicap.

But as we can not all have perfect working bowels we must do the next best thing and acquire them, or train them to become healthy. This can be done by the use of a laxative-tonic very highly recommended by a great many mothers. The remedy is called Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin and has been on the market for two generations. It can be bought conveniently at any drug store for fifty cents or one dollar a bottle, and those who are already convinced of its merits buy the dollar size.

Its mildness makes it the ideal medicine for children, and it is also very pleasant to the taste. It is sure in its effect and genuinely harmless. Very little of it is required and its frequent use does not cause it to lose its effect, as is the case with so many other remedies.

Thousands can testify to its merits in constipation, indigestion, biliousness, sick headaches, etc., among them reliable people like Mrs. M. Johnson, 752 Dayton St., Kenosha, Wis. She is the mother of little Dorothy Johnson, who was always in delicate health until her mother gave her Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Mrs. Johnson says: "I never saw such rapid improvement in the health of anyone. Syrup Pepsin is a wonderful remedy and I shall never be without it again." Thousands keep Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin constantly in the house, for every member of the family can use it from infancy to old age. The users of Syrup Pepsin have learned to avoid cathartics, salts, mineral waters, pills and other harsh remedies, for they do but temporary good and are a shock to any delicate system.

If no member of your family has ever used Syrup Pepsin and you would like to make a personal trial of it before buying it in the regular way of a druggist, send your address—a postal will do—to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 417 Washington St., Monticello, Ill., and a free sample bottle will be mailed you.

The Greatest Pleasure Maker In the Whole World

KODAK

You never knew a person in your life who didn't enjoy looking at Kodak pictures. And why Kodak pictures more than any other kind? Simply because of the personal interest attached to them. Because you, or some of your friends, actually made them. Because there is movement, life, interest in a snap-shot. Half the fun of a picnic, outing, vacation is lost if you don't take Kodak pictures. Every day, every season, every pleasure lends itself to Kodaking. There is no trouble. They're easy to take. A mere child can operate a Kodak successfully. The price—well, it surely won't worry you when you can get a perfectly practical Brownie Camera from $1 to $12, and the higher priced Kodaks, $5 to $65 (depending on the lens equipment). Send for a catalog or come in and see them. But whatever you do, get busy and get a Kodak right now. Find out what real summer enjoyment means. Send us a trial roll of films for the best finishing that can be produced. Big stock fresh films and supplies.

"DON'T WORRY OVER PITCHING STAFF"--SMITH

By Percy H. Whiting.

"WE'LL go flying when our pitchers get right." So said Bill Smith before Monday's game. "Nobody need think we're scared. I never saw a team playing better ball and losing in my life than the Crackers did on their trip. And they never lost their nerve. If the pitchers come through we'll win in a walk. And you needn't worry. They're coming."

One of the pitchers came through Monday and it was plain sailing for the Crackers.

* * *

THE Crackers have the best infield and outfield combination that the Southern League ever saw. That's positively official. There's nothing else in the world to it.

Bailey, Welchonce and Long form the best outfield ever seen in the Southern League.

Agler, Alperman, Bisland and Smith constitute an infield the like of which was never seen before in Dixie.

The catching staff will do as it stands to-day, and if it doesn't continue standing right Bill Smith will kick it overboard and load up with some men who can deliver. That's official too and right from Bill Smith.

The pitchers are Smith's only trouble.

"At that they look pretty good," says Billy. "This Gilbert Price is a positive marvel. I never in all my days saw a hurler with more stuff. He seems to weaken sometimes at the end of a game. I don't know whether he gets overconfident or weakens physically. If he gets to lasting all the way they couldn't beat him in fifty years.

"Bill Chappelle showed us a good game his last out and will win for us I think. Brady's work is perfectly satisfactory. If this Dent goes all right I'll take my chances."

* * *

AS for Paul Musser, he showed that he was there with everything in the catalogue yesterday. He allowed five hits, one a scratch home run. If Tommy Long hadn't misjudged this ball badly only one run would have been made off Musser. His control was vastly better than usual and he looked a great pitcher.

As for the Crackers—they played the ball they have been playing almost all the season. They got to Pitcher Kissinger of the Turtle team only twice but it was enough.

In the third Graham slipped one by Kissinger. Musser bunted safe—a peach of a performance for a pitcher—and Bailey cleaned up with a single.

In the fourth Bisland put across a clean home run that won the game. After that time the locals made but one hit. But they did not need even that one.

* * *

THE new man, Bisland, looked like a legacy from your rich uncle. Besides hitting the homer that won the game he fielded neatly and he looks so much like a big league ball player you couldn't detect him from the real thing in the broad daylight.

Wally Smith kept right on looking like the wonder of the league. And Whitey Alperman surely had a big day. In the eighth he actually flew after Ward's liner and in the ninth he nipped what might have been a rally by grabbing down Abstein's awful poke.

* * *

THE game was played in one hour and forty-six minutes, which is amazingly fast considering how other contests of the year have lagged. Umpires Bill Hart and Dan Pfenninger seemed to have developed some pepper in their old age and kept things hustling. That the good work will be continued is the earnest hope of the fans. Draggy baseball games don't please anybody.

DIABETES NO LONGER FEARED

Peculiar Action of a Remarkable Remedy in Controlling Liver Action.

S. S. S. Quickly Puts Vim and Energy Into You.

There is no need to feel any alarm over the symptoms of diabetes. This disease is apt to be purely a digestive trouble, and for this reason the liver is held largely responsible. The liver is the largest organ of the body, and is not only a mass of threadlike blood vessels, but throughout its entire fabric is intimately associated with the digestive system.

The thing to do is to so stimulate the action of this myriad of blood vessels that each cellular part selects its own essential nutriment by healthy and judicious divine discretion. This is accomplished by S. S. S., the most potent, the most active and the most naturally stimulating blood medicine known. You do not need purgatives; do not be alarmed at the presence of sugar nor of so-called sediment.

Just stick to S. S. S. and bear in mind that this celebrated remedy has such a specific stimulating action on the local cells of the liver as to preserve their mutual welfare and give a proper relative assistance, each cell to the other.

Dropsical tendencies are thus overcome, biliousness soon becomes a memory and jaundice, malaria, afflictions of the spleen and glandular swellings will be entirely eliminated. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores and for competent medical advice, free, consult by mail the laboratory of the Swift Specific Company, 159 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Cobb Not Greatest Ball Player

"Keeler Superior to Ty"--Sullivan

By Ted Sullivan

THE return of Cobb to the Detroit club and its continued clump since he began to wear the team's uniform has served one object lesson to the American public, and that is that no one player, no matter how great or skillful, can win games alone. It takes nine men to win ball in any fast league. It has been the case in the past, and it will be ever thus in the future. A pitcher of Walsh or Johnson's caliber may figure conspicuously in the winning of a game, but at that they must have fielding and run-getting powers in their teams to make them winners.

But let one thing be impressed on the public mind—players may come and go, but the game will go on forever. Had Cobb not returned to the Detroit team, the continued losings of the club would have been laid to his absence, but it was a great victory and eye-opener both for the Detroit people in all parts of America that he did return, to show the superficial and unsophisticated how little one man figures in the game, and especially an outfielder.

To look at Cobb, or Cobbism, from a dispassionate and impartial standpoint, let us see what Cobb's status is in the game. I grant he has the right to ask for any salary he thinks his services are worth; he realizes that he is a drawing card at home and abroad. He knows the owners of the club look at him from a commercial standpoint, and he views them in the same light. He knows also that there is a time limit to his playing days, and he wants to make the most of it. The home press and the unsophisticated press throughout the United States have been burning incense to his greatness and telling him that he is the one ball player in the history of the game, which he never was. But as Detroit made him a drawing card, in their slopology, he had a right to make them pay for it. Which he has.

Infielder More Important.

Let us see where he figures as a ball player, compared with the players of the past and present. He is playing in the outer works of the game—as a fielder, averaging about two fly balls to a game, with plenty of time to think what he will do after catching a fly ball or the grounder that is bounding toward him. No outfielder can be compared with an infielder or a catcher, as their positions are entirely different in the nature of the work they have to perform. An infielder's brain is in perpetual action from the time the pitcher delivers the ball, and he has only a fraction of a second to think, so quick does the machinery of the infield work.

Cobb is the best run getter in the profession to-day. Run getting is the combination of hitting and base running. Base running has ever been the spectacular part of a ball player's work, with all other things nearly equal. To say Cobb was the greatest ball player in the history of the game would be like telling a man who saw the Mississippi River that the Illinois River was the longest and largest in the United States, or to tell a person who saw the summit of Pike's Peak that the range of the Allegheny was higher.

I suppose it will be the same in the next generation of ball players. They will be as skeptical of the baseball prowess of Cobb, Wagner and Lajoie, as the present ones are of the greatness of Mike Kelly, Ewing and Williamson. As a fielder and thrower Cobb could not stand comparison with Fogarty, Curt Welsh, Bill Lange, and a few others of the past and he is not to-day the superior as a fielder and thrower of Graney of Cleveland and Moeller of Washington.

Thinks Keeler Was Better.

There is a little modest man who left the ball field two years ago, namely, William Keeler, who did not wear sleigh bells around a hotel to let people know he was around, but he was the superior of Cobb, as versatile a batter. But to say that Cobb was the equal of the three great ball players of the past, namely, Ewing, Williamson, and Mike Kelly, would be ridiculous.

Williamson was a third baseman and a shortstop. He was one of the greatest base runners in the history of the game. Besides being one of the greatest infielders that ever lived, he was also a catcher and a pitcher. Buck Ewing was undoubtedly the greatest throwing, hitting and base running catcher of them all. But to compare Cobb, the outfielder, to the immortal Kelly, who was the craftiest base runner of all times, besides being one of the best batters and catchers that ever lived, would be like comparing a 2:40 horse to a 2:10 one.

To use a hyperbole, it could be said that Mike Kelly behind the bat and on the bases in the crucial contest of a game sweat more baseball cells into the rim of his cap than some players of to-day have in their skulls.

If Ty Cobb is guilty of the alleged prima-donna breaks in wanting extra hotels and extra rooms from other players and practicing when he wants to—no one is to blame but the Detroit management themselves. They have petted and coddled him as much as an indulgent mother does to a child she has spoiled.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—I have decided to give much space in this article to the fast-going Phillies and Dodgers. The Phillies merit considerable analysis. When the Giants played them recently, I never saw a Philadelphia team playing better, and, as there has always been plenty of feeling between the two clubs, they were very glad to clean up on New York as they did. The team is benefiting from much better conditions this season than have existed in Philadelphia for many years, and these are mainly responsible for the marked improvement, as it will be noted that practically the same men are appearing in the batting order that landed the team in the second division last summer. William Locks, the new president of the club, is a practical baseball man, and he is giving Dooin a chance to manage the team without worrying him with a lot of trivialities. The result is that Dooin is getting good baseball out of his men, the best that is in each individual.

Again the Quakers have advanced so far into the season without any of the regulars suffering serious injuries and being out of the game, almost a record for the club. It is not likely the team will go through the race with this rosy record, and an injured regular or two will slow the club up a good deal because Dooin is not well fortified with substitutes.

* * *

THE real strength of the team lies in the excellent pitching staff which is the unexcelled feature of the league at this writing. When either Alexander, Chalmers or Seaton has been working, it has been practically impossible for an opposing club to do any hitting. It is this great pitching which has permitted the Phillies to make the good showing that they have, because they are not a crowd of hard batters themselves. They win their games by small scores, depending on the pitchers and smooth fielding to prevent the other side from rolling up many runs. Now, when this pitching staff begins to wilt under the strain of the race and the heat of the summer, as it is liable to do, the Quakers are going to find a very much harder road to travel. They would have a good chance for the pennant with more sturdy batters. As it is now, they are depending on their twirlers and have not better than an outside opportunity for the championship.

* * *

THE Philadelphia club has been the surprise of the race. In its ante-season performances, it made a very poor showing, being easy for both the Athletics and Washington teams of the American League. From those scores, the Quakers looked like the same old bunch, dead on their feet, as they have always been, but with the opening of the race on their own circuit, they jumped away in good style and are playing fast ball. It is their speed and pitching that have held them up so far.

* * *

"WHERE will Brooklyn stop?" is the question which is stirring the baseball following portion of the populace now.

One of these days the Brooklyn team is going to wake up and discover that it is rated as a great ball club, tremble at the idea and start to lose. The Brooklyn boys should finish in the first division. They have talent at present to warrant such a prediction, but they should not crowd the winner of the pennant in September. That is merely my opinion. Perhaps it is based on the years of mediocre baseball played in Brooklyn and Philadelphia will find it harder traveling when they start away from home and invade the West. Not that they will encounter particularly tough competition in the West, but the handicap of playing away from home diamonds and home crowds is going to be a big one. It will be observed that most of the successes of both these teams have been made at home under the watchful eye of home crowds. The Brooklyn club has set its admirers crazy, and men who have not been able to raise up their voices to root for the home club for years are tearing their throats out regardless now. This all helps a ball club, especially on that floats into a winning streak suddenly, as Brooklyn has. Still the Dodgers may tear through the league as Washington did last year and not let up.

* * *

THE Boston club is the one which is paralyzing the ante-season critics. Nobody could see any good in that team before the race opened, with the possible exception of Stallings, the manager, and James Gaffney, the owner, and yet it is playing ball and becoming the talk of the town in place of the declining Red Sox. Stallings is responsible for it, because he is a manager who builds up a club. Within a year or two the Boston team is going to be one to take into the pennant reckoning I believe. The manager is digging up new material which suits his purposes and developing it. One thing he is looking for and which no other Boston team has possessed for a good many years is speed. His system very closely resembles that followed by McGraw.

So far I have not seen St. Louis in action, but I do not believe its showing to date is its normal stride. It does not strike me that Huggins can maintain anything like a first division pace. His club will not stand it.

* * *

WHEN the Giants were going badly two or three weeks ago and everybody was kicking the ball, McGraw called "Larry" Doyle, the good natured, to him after a game and took up with him the matter of an error he had made which figured largely in the defeat of the Giants.

"Well," replied "Larry," "you've got to hand it to me, boss. I make all my errors when they count."

This answer disarmed McGraw.

* * *

IT must not be thought that I am slighting the American League, but there has been little change during the week in that organization. The Athletics are still piling along with a comfortable lead, and Boston is crashing down through the standing, giving little indication of having even a look-in for the flag. The Washington club is the worst sufferer. Griffith has had some hard luck that has slowed up his team and hurt his chances for the pennant very largely. Foster, who within a year developed into one of the best third basemen in the league, is laid up with typhoid fever and will be out of the game for pretty nearly two months anyway. This destroys the smooth working of the infield, because Laporte is slow.

Johnson, the pitcher, is the wonder of the season. He established his record of fifty-six scoreless innings last week. To my mind, he is not only the greatest in the game to-day, but the greatest in the game has ever produced. He did not make this record against easy teams, but against clubs composed of the hardest hitters in the country. Griffith did not pick any "spots" for him. My hat is off to him.

Easy to Pick All-Star Prep Team

Armistead Would Be Good Captain

By Jim Glover

TO select an all-star baseball team from the prep schools of Atlanta this year is not as difficult as it has been in past seasons. This year there is a star for almost every position who is so much better than his nearest competitor that there is little chance for any disagreement.

Here are the names of the players, the positions that they are given and the schools which they represented the past season.

Name	Position	School
Armistead	catcher (Capt.)	Boys High
Fox	pitcher	Boys High
Weston	pitcher	Tech High
Callahan	pitcher	Marist
Lowery	first base	Marist
Bedell	second base	Tech High
Allen	third base	Marist
Spurlock	shortstop	Boys High
Laird	left field	Tech High
Rennolds	center field	Tech High
Wells	right field	Peacock
J. Parks	utility	Tech High

Sam Armistead, of Boys High, is without a doubt the best backstop in the league this year. He steadies a pitcher, leads the league in batting and seldom allows a man to steal a base. He is made captain of the nine as he knows the game thoroughly.

Fox Leading Pitcher.

The pitching staff is the only problem on the team. Fox has shown up the best this year, but one man is not enough to do the twirling for a team, so another had to be selected; and right here is where the rub comes in. Weston and Callahan are so nearly equal in ability that it is necessary to name both. Callahan is a pitcher of the sensational style, a pitcher who often fans the first nine or ten men who face him and then when his support weakens blows up and loses the game. Weston has pitched in only two games this year but his showing in both contests was fine. Besides his pitching he is the best batting and fielding twirler of them all.

Jim Lowery gets the job at first base without any trouble. He is a steady player and about the only man on the Marist team who has not "spilled the beans" in some game.

Bill Bedell is the right man for second base. He is fast and has swiped more bases this year than any man in the league. He is also a good batter.

Charlie Allen, of Marist, has not played quite up to his usual standard at third base this year, but, nevertheless, his playing and hitting has been good enough to warrant him a place on the all-star team.

Weston and Parks, of Tech High, are also crack third sackers, but Weston is also a pitcher and Parks has been given the utility job.

Spurlock Crack Shortstop.

Spurlock is in a class by himself when it comes to playing shortstop. He has a good head and can hit and field well. He is just what a shortstop should be. Harry Rennolds is the best outfielder in the bunch and is given a place at center. His fielding average for the season is .996 and he is always there with the stick.

Johnny Laird is another good outfielder and is especially good on difficult balls. The other outfield position is given to Wells, of Peacock, although he is a shortstop. He is too good a man to be kept off the team and could play the outfield as well as any of them.

Jim Parks, of Tech High, gets the position of utility man, which is just as important a place as any other one on a team. Parks is a good pitcher, crack infielder and a slugger, one of the best in the league, and he would be a great asset to this team.

GREAT MANAGER IS NOT ALWAYS TEAM BUILDER

By Otto C. Floto.

WHILE viewing with regret the poor showing that such popular men as Chance and Tinker are making this year we often wonder whether there is a distinction between a great manager and a builder of a successful baseball team. There must be something to this contention or else why does it constantly flash across our think pan?

There is no one will deny but that Frank Chance is a great manager; that he can get more out of the same men under his charge than any other one individual out of a hundred that try. Yet he's an absolute failure to date with New York. Why? Because he did not build the team he commands. Scouts were sent abroad to bring home the recruits, and from present observation the scouts failed in their missions. Added to this is the poor luck that has greeted the team for the past four or five years. To play a whole series against all the clubs in the Eastern division of the American League and not win a single game—well, we are at a loss to explain it. Yet that's the record, and that's the verdict that will go down against the Peerless Leader in future discussions.

* * *

MIND, no one expected Chance to make good in a single season, nor in two or three seasons for that matter. But we surely looked for better results than have been brought to date. A lot of wooden Indians, frequently seen as advertisements in front of cigar stores, could have accomplished no less.

It's now up to Chance to demonstrate to us that he can "build" as well as manage. He has proven to us beyond a doubt that the managerial abilities are his—won in actual contest time and time again in the severest kind of battle. With manager, he must show that he is really all his friends have claimed for him. He must weed out the dead and replace them with live and winning material. When he has done this we'll shout bravo!

* * *

CHANCE did not build up the great machine that won four National League and two world's championships. He was part of the machine before it was handed over to him, but the late Frank Selee gathered Tinker, Kling, Schulte, Evers, Hofman and the rest of the bunch that stood so gallantly by the P. L. in all those now historic struggles. Selee had to step down and out owing to poor health, and Chance stepped in and developed the heirlooms that his manager left to him.

True, Chance made some advantageous trades that still further strengthened his machine. But the men traded were all gathered by Selee and proved such alluring bait to the other clubs that the swap which brought Brown, Shekard and others into the Cub fold was comparatively easy. So without taking any credit away from Chance, all he had to do in this instance was to keep the well-organized machine moving. This he did with wonderful results. He succeeded where another man might have failed.

* * *

TAKE Clark Griffith, of the Washington team. He is one of the best managers in the business. Time and time again he has proved this. But we ask, is he a builder? To a certain extent we believe him to be. He surely showed such ability when he organized the Highlanders for their first appearance in the American League. Things, however, were rather easy at that time because the younger league was grabbing all the stars from the National. When he got Chesbro he had pretty nearly a team.

He failed to make much of a show with Cincinnati. (But so do all the others.) In Washington last year as well as this he is doing wonders. But in figuring matters remember that it was Cantillon who got Johnson to come there, and the other half of the team was helped along by Jimmy McAleer. Clark, however, is getting every ounce out of them.

MANDOT 10-TO-8 CHOICE OVER ANDERSON TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, May 20.—The experience and ring generalship of Joe Mandot, the New Orleans lightweight, has caused a flood of money to be offered by his admirers at the eleventh hour, and just twelve hours before he is due to enter the Vernon ring to box Bud Anderson, of Medford, Oreg., the Southern boy is a favorite at odds of 10 to 8.

With their training concluded in the best of shape, both boys are in perfect condition and confident, Mandot feeling sure he will redeem himself, and Anderson certain that he will add another knock-out to his record.

BENEFIT GAME TO RAISE COIN TO BOOST CITY

WEDNESDAY is Ad Men's Day at Ponce DeLeon ball park.

And for the first time this season the people of Atlanta will be given an opportunity to show that they appreciate what the Ad Men have done for them and what they are planning to do.

"What have they done?" you ask.

Well, for one thing, they have, within the year, raised more than $100,000 for various good causes in Atlanta. The Y. M. C. A., the Chamber of Commerce and goodness knows how many charitable organizations have been helped by money they have raised.

This spring when it appeared that Atlanta was to lose the honor of turning out the largest opening day crowd, the Ad Men's Club whirled in and whooped things up with a result that all Southern League records for all time were fractured.

At every convention of Ad Men's Clubs which they have attended they have whooped up Atlanta in some really spectacular way that has put the Gate City before the delegates in a most favorable light.

"Wht will they do with the money they raise?" you inquire.

Just this—they will use it to boost Atlanta at the Baltimore convention.

They don't want their car fare paid. They are all blowing themselves to that.

They don't want it for entertainment or for themselves in any way.

They want it for Atlanta.

The scheme is this. The big feature of the convention will be a night parade. There will be 100 motor truck floats, prepared by national advertisers. There will be bands galore. And every Ad Men's Club represented there will march in uniform in the parade. The local men are going to buy their uniforms—and it will cost them about $35 apiece for this. They need money, however, to buy big, white parasols, on which the word, "Atlanta" will be printed in huge, red letters. They need money also for big electric flash lamps, which will be provided with huge glass globes, on which, in red, will be the words "Atlanta Always Ahead." They need money for a band. In other words they need it to boost Atlanta at Baltimore.

The cause is a worthy one.

The Ad Men do just as much to boost Atlanta as any organization here. They take over all the odd jobs that the Chamber of Commerce is too dignified to handle, and any good boosting organization needs support.

CHARLIE WHITE STOPS THOMAS IN TWO ROUNDS

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Charlie White stopped Joe Thomas in the second round of their 10-round bout last night. The local boy was an easy victim for the Chicago star.

Thomas was knocked down for the count of nine in the first round, after going down two other times, the bell saving him the last time.

At the opening of the second, Thomas appeared to have regained his strength, but a few well directed rights and lefts put him groggy again, and after about one minute of the second round the referee, Dick Burke, raised White's hand and motioned Thomas to his corner.

SHUGRUE AND LORE BOX FAST 12-ROUND DRAW

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, May 20.—Young Shrugrue, of Jersey City, and Johnny Lore, of New York, boxed a fast 12-round draw here last night. Tommy Bresnahan, of Newcastle, Pa., was given a well-earned decision over Louis Deponthieu, of Paris, at the end of a 10-round semi-final.

TOMMY SHEEHAN WINS.

BILLINGS, MONT., May 20.—Tommy Sheehan, of Chicago, won a decision here last night over Roy Coquit, of Cody, Wyo., at the end of a 12-round bout.

Mathewson As Savior of Giants

Keeps Champs in Race--Marquard

By Rube Marquard

(Holder of the World's Record of Nineteen Consecutive Victories.)

SO many startling surprises have developed in the first month of the major league campaigns it is hard to figure out where it will all end.

By the looks of things anything is liable to happen. The "dope" has been upset in so many surprising manners that it seems after all as if there is some "jinx" attached to the magic "13" of this year of grace. However, there are enough beacons shining through the gloom of uncertainty to re-establish faith in ability as opposed to superstition.

We do not have to travel very far just now to find the one real beacon of Giant hope. His name is Christy Mathewson. His work alone is enough to break all the charms of "jinxes" and "hoodoos," for he arises in the thirteenth year of his career as a Giant and a major league performer to a height of perfection that in any other pitcher would be regarded as miraculous. Mathewson has been the great bulwark of the Giant pitching staff so long that the public has come to regard his wonderful brilliancy as a matter of common habit.

To none other than the great master of pitching science may New York contratulate itself upon being as well to the front in the 1913 National League race. So far he has been the only reliable pitching asset of the veteran talent. Matty is confident that this will be his greatest year, and I share the belief with him.

Here is a pitcher who very wisely has conserved every ounce of vitality. By the use of his head he has been able to shine year after year with the very least possible strain to his arm. And I believe that Christy Mathewson will live to as ripe an age of efficiency as did the venerable Cy Young. To-day Mathewson is better than he has ever been before.

Illness Sets "Rube" Back.

Mathewson has had to shoulder the great bulk of the pitching responsibility so far this season, but I think there will be plenty of help for him from now on. My chief regret for Mathewson, McGraw and all my fellow players has been that I am not capable of doing my share toward making it three pennants in a row. I offer no excuses, for I know in my heart that very soon I will be back into my proper stride. I was just hitting my pace when an attack of tonsilitis set me back.

By the time I am on my feet once more—and that will not be very long, I can tell you—the Giants should be as well provided with pitching material as any club could desire. I know from the condition in which the men returned from Texas that a week or two of summer weather would put all our pitchers in first-class shape.

Our club is not the only one that has suffered in this respect. Pitching, as a general rule, has been very unsatisfactory so far in both leagues. With very few exceptions—principally Mathewson, Johnson and Plank—pitchers usually the most reliable have been most unsteady. By every law of precedent this condition should not obtain when the veteran pitchers finally round into shape.

Having seen all our rivals but St. Louis, I am more convinced than ever that the Giants should win the pennant. It will not be the runaway that most of our supporters presumed before the start. It will mean a good, steady fight through the whole course, a condition that should make the current season a most memorable one.

League Strength in East.

The strength of the National League, as evidenced in the first month's play, centered in the East, just as it does in the American. Philadelphia and Brooklyn, rather than Pittsburg and Chicago, seem best upon most forcibly debating the championship with the Giants.

With Hans Wagner back in the game the Pirates are almost bound to greatly improve their standing. Fred Clarke's pitchers have been woefully off color all along, and this condition has resulted in a very severe handicap for his team. Pittsburg will undoubtedly get back among the leaders, but has so much ground to make up that it can not now be seriously regarded as a challenger of the Giants.

Chicago has a very good looking club outside its pitchers, but is so weak in box material that it can not hope, under present conditions, to cope with any one of the three strongest Eastern clubs.

Cincinnati is in the same boat as Chicago. The Indian Johnston, has been Tinker's only reliable pitcher so far. Yet there is fair strength in the Reds' staff if the men ever get to working properly. Chicago can not muster as much twirling strength as Cincinnati, though Evers' team in all other respects is superior.

A very pleasing circumstance to the Giants is the manner in which George Stallings has resurrected the Boston Braves. Out of practically nothing he has shaped a collection capable of giving the best a very stiff argument. This will prove of great help to the Giants, no doubt, as Boston will be able to stop New York's rivals once in a while. Heretofore Boston always managed somehow to make things interesting enough for New York, but never did a great deal against Pittsburg and Chicago.

Giants in Lead Soon.

I think that inside of a very short time the Giants will step out into the lead, and once there our club will never be dislodged. It is a fact that we have not played the game of which we are capable. The fault did not lie wholly in poor pitching, either. We have lost many games because we did not get the most out of our hitting ability and speed.

I suppose we looked too lightly upon the other teams. But if so we have learned a good lesson, for every Giant player will try his very best from now until the season is over. Over-confidence is blamed for the loss of a pennant to the Athletics last year. It will not be our sad lot this season. McGraw is a man who will not stand for trifling.

Sporting Food

By GEORGE E. PHAIR

SPORT.

When Nero lived in ancient days
Men had their sport in brutal ways.
They sat around on cushioned seats
And loudly cheered the bloody feats
Performed by large and lowbrowed gents
Who earned their bread by putting dents
And fractures in another's dome
To please the populace of Rome
To-day we all would take offense
(We men of high intelligence)
To see a pair of fellows wield
A butcher's cleaver and a shield,
And clout each other on the dome
As in the days of ancient Rome.
We love a nobler form of sport,
A milder and a gentler sort,
And so we pay our hard earned scads
To see a lot of healthy lads
Who race on motorcycle tracks
And break their arms and legs and backs.
Who travel at a fearful rate
And finish in a scrambled state.
And if, perchance, they do not die
We heave a disappointed sigh.
"Ah, yes!" we say while riding home,
"What brutes there were in ancient Rome!"

One Jeff O'Connell wishes to state that the climate of Racine, Wis., is too densely populated with boxing gloves to be healthful.

Still, Mr. O'Connell made a deep impression in Racine. In fact, he made five separate and distinct impressions in the floor.

Nick Altrock, comedian, wants to pitch, whereas some of our Cracker pitchers pitch as if they were trying to be comedians.

From this distance it is hard to tell whether O. Overall is coming back or going back.

Willie Ritchie avers that he will engage in mortal conflict for the small sum of $17,500, demonstrating that there are various ways to obtain money under false pretenses.

Hugh Jennings is said to be on the verge of nervous breakdown, due to a severe case of Ty Cobb, aided and abetted by a losing streak.

GEORGIA TACKLE DIES FROM TYPHOID FEVER

ATHENS, GA., May 20.—William Luther Arnett, of Odessa, a member of the junior law class of the University of Georgia, died after an illness of four days here this morning from typhoid fever. His body was carried to his home this afternoon, the law class following the casket in a body. He was 26 years old, and in the final games of football last fall he was a star tackle. He was one of the best men physically, mentally and morally in the University.

VOLS BUY NICHOLSON; MAY GET OUTFIELD BERTH

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 20.—President Hirsig announced yesterday the purchase from Louisville of Outfielder Ovid Nicholson, formerly of the Blue Grass League, where he established a great record for stolen bases. He was secured by Louisville from Pittsburg, who drafted him from the Blue Grass. Nicholson will probably replace Daley in the Vols' outfield.

HANLON IN DRAW BOUT.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Eddie Hanlon and Lew Diamond fought a 10-round draw here last night.

Abstinence Will Bring Success

Shun Tobacco, Says Frank Chance

By Frank L. Chance

This is my sixteenth year in major league baseball. For fifteen of those years I was connected with the Chicago club. In that time I have served at practically everything, from all-round utility man to manager.

And, incidentally, I believe that I have about sized up the situation in regard to ball players. In the first place, it is essential that tobacco and drink be left alone. If drink is tabooed it naturally follows that late hours also will be tabooed. It is necessary for a youngster aspiring to succeed in baseball to see to it that his constitution is made strong and that he does nothing to interfere with his physical development.

I have come to the conclusion that a man is not fully developed until he has reached 30 years of age. Possibly after that the moderate use of tobacco will not do him any great injury.

So much for my advice to youngsters who aspire to make baseball a profession.

"My advent into baseball was probably as inauspicious as an event of such a nature could possibly be. There were no brass bands to meet me at the station, and, as I remember, the newspapers of Chicago devoted a short paragraph—maybe it was only a sentence—to the fact that the Chicago team had signed a young catcher.

But I am getting a bit ahead of the story. In 1894-95 I played ball on the Washington College (California) team. With me was a young fellow, also a student at the college, named "Rod" Wagner. During the summer months he was manager or had something to do with a town team at Sullivan, Ill. He asked me how I would like to play ball there. He told me I could get $40 a month and my board and lodging.

At that time I was only 16, and $10 a week sounded pretty good to me, so I accepted. The club didn't make any money and I was "done" out of my pay.

I returned to college in 1897 and took part in a big amateur baseball tournament held in California for youths under 18 years of age. Some of the fellows who entered it of course cheated, but that has nothing to do with my case.

"Cal" McVey, who one time was a member of the Cincinnati team, saw me play and recommended me to "Cap" Anson, who was then manager of the Chicago club. Anson refused to give me a trial. That was either in the spring or early summer of 1897. In the autumn of the same year McVey wrote to "Jim" Hart, who had succeeded Anson, and Hart sent for me.

I was signed as an extra catcher, but after I had been in Chicago for a while it seemed to me as if I had been signed as a sort of make-your-self-useful around the ball park. Any little odd jobs that were to be done and there wasn't anybody else handy to do them I was ordered to pitch in.

If the bat boys didn't show up, I had to look after the bats. If there was no one else to carry the bats from the "bus" into the ball park, or from the ball park to the "bus," I did it. If Hart or some of the veteran players on the club forgot anything, such as gloves and the like, I was sent after them. Even some of the "bushers" who were just breaking in pretty much the same as I was, but who happened to be my seniors by a couple of years, employed me as errand boy for them.

But I stood it. I was in the big show and I was determined to make good. I realized that the best way to make good was to stick around as long as they would let me and watch the cavortings of those who knew. I did, and eventually my time came. And I guess I must have made good.

The club was in need of a first baseman, and I was delegated to cover the bag.

It was in 1906 that I was made manager of the Cubs, after nine years of service. Of course, the rest is what might be called modern history and there is no use rehashing that.

FODDER FOR FANS

C. Webb Murphy, disgusted with the weakness of his pitching staff, sent eight scouts to different parts of the country yesterday with orders to gather in some pitchers.

* * *

The Reds defeated the Braves yesterday in a ten-inning battle that was characterized by considerable slugging and many errors.

* * *

The wonderful showing made this season by the Phillies has necessitated the building of six additional ticket booths to facilitate the handling of the crowds.

* * *

And perhaps Horace Fogel, who used to own the Phillies, isn't experiencing a seasick feeling when he notes that the daily attendance figures at the Phillies' grounds is double and trebie what they were last year.

* * *

The Dodgers again beat the Cardinals, but failed to move into first place because the Phillies had an easy time defeating the Cubs.

* * *

"Smoky Joe" Wood seems to be back in form again. He held the White Sox to one run yesterday, while his own club piled up ten.

* * *

Ty Cobb's three hits out of three times up were big factors in the defeat of the Athletics by the Tigers.

* * *

Eddie Collins, who is near the top of the American League batting column, harvested four hits out of four times up yesterday.

* * *

"Jake" Daubert, the Dodgers' first sacker, continues to slug the ball. He made a single and a triple yesterday.

* * *

Falkenberg, the elongated "comeback" twirler for the Naps, added another victory to his string yesterday, making eight in a row.

* * *

With the bases full in the eighth inning, Manager Chance up for the second time in that inning, batted out of turn, singled and scored the two runs that won the game for the Yankees from the Browns. When the Browns protested the trick it was too late to be availing.

* * *

The most thrilling game staged on the Polo grounds for a long time was that of yesterday, when the Giants won in the fourteenth 3 to 2. Time and again the pitchers for both the Giants and the Pirates were in "holes," but wonderful fielding pulled them out. The Pirates used fourteen and the Giants eighteen players.

* * *

"Heinie" Zimmerman and Manager Evers, of the Cubs, had a wordy battle on the field yesterday which may result in Evers suspending the third sacker, who, it is said, objects to playing under Evers.

* * *

Evers, by the way, may soon hear other highly uncomplimentary things about his future. President Murphy is on his way to Boston for a confab with his manager, and it is not likely that C. Webb will wax enthusiastic over the miserable showing the Cubs have made so far in the East.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Sammy Harris, manager of Kid Williams, is still hounding Johnny Coulon, the bantamweight champion, for a match. Harris says he is willing to give Coulon a guarantee of $2,000 to fight Williams in a 15 or 20 round bout on July 4.

* * *

Jimmy Hurst, who handles the reins over "Wildcat" Ferns, writes from Kansas City that he has his protege matched to box "Patty" McIntyre, Canadian welterweight champion, 10 rounds at Winnipeg, Manitoba, June 7. Ferns will also meet Anton La Grave, at Taft, Cal., July 4, for a 20-round fight.

* * *

Tommy Walsh, Mandot's hustling manager, abused his typewriter long enough to let us know that the French baker boy is in great trim for his 20-round engagement with Bud Anderson on the coast Tuesday night.

* * *

If victor over Anderson, Walsh says he has two big fights planned for the Southerner, Tommy expects to send Joe Rivers on July 4, and Willie Ritchie on Labor Day.

* * *

Leach Cross vs. Tommy Marto and Ray Bronson vs. Phil Cross, is the card arranged for the McMahon brothers for their club in New York next Wednesday night.

* * *

Because Johnny Coulon demanded his traveling expenses from Chicago to Boston the officials of the Atlas A. A., of Boston, have declared off the 12-round bout between Coulon and Charley Goldman scheduled to take place May 28. In place of this bout Marty Baldwin and Dick Gallant will battle.

* * *

Frank Mantell and Larry English will clash in a 10-round set-to at New York Tuesday night. They are middleweights, having agreed to make 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

* * *

Pittsburg fans are looking for Frank Klaus to win both his battles this month with Eddie McGeorty and Jack Dillon. The Pittsburg boy will surely have his hands full coming out a winner, as both his opponents are running him a close race for the title.

SMITH 10-TO-8 FAVORITE OVER JESS WILLARD

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—In James W. Coffroth's Eighth Avenue arena to-night a couple of huskies will have designs on the world's championship. They are heavyweights and their names are Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith.

Did they belong in any other class there would be haggling and maybe claiming of forfeit if one man scaled a few ounces over a stipulated notch. As it is, Willard will have fifty pounds the better of the poundage and Smith will have no redress, for the laws of the ring, so far as they bear upon avoirdupois, do not hold "north of '58." Smith has been made favorite, the price this morning being 10 to 8. This is in pursuance of San Francisco's policy of pinning its faith to the man it knows when a local fighter and a stranger become embroiled.

Just what the odds would be if the heavies met in the East is not known, but it is doubtful if Smith would be installed first choice. The Gunner's best performance there was his victory over Bombardier Wells, and Willard outboxed Luther McCarty, who beat Al Palzer, who beat Bombardier Wells.

Both Willard and Smith are well thought of around New York and are regarded as fit candidates for the world's championship. Willard lacks the experience of Smith, and this is one reason of the San Francisco fight followers' liking for Smith. Gunboat's vaunted knockout punch is another. It may be that Willard also possesses a knockout punch, but San Francisco has no knowledge of the fact. He certainly has not been advertised in that direction to the same extent as Smith.

CHAPTER II.

SEATED in a chair, with his feet resting on the edge of a small stove in the center of the room, was a short, keen-eyed man in his thirties, reading a copy of Sporting Life. He turned his head as the door opened and swept his eye over the dripping figure that stood, tall and erect, just within the doorway. Pools of water formed on the floor under the stranger and they came together in a rivulet, which crept snake-like along the planking until it found a friendly crack.

"I am looking for Mr. Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta Baseball Club," said the young man.

"I am Bill Smith," replied the man in the chair. "What can I do for you?"

"I want to play ball on your team."

Long experience in managing pennant-winning ball teams (and some that were not pennant-winners) had taught Bill Smith many valuable baseball lessons. One of these was never to pass snap judgment on a ball player; another was never to take a ball player's estimate of his own ability. Nineteen managers out of twenty would have taken just one glance at the bedraggled figure in the doorway and dismissed it with a curt "nothing doing." That was not Bill Smith's way. And his method of handling this particular applicant for a position on his team led to the most surprising series of sensations that ever happened in the history of the national game.

"You look somewhat moist," observed the manager. "Take off your clothes and dry them at this stove. "Whisky!" he suddenly yelled. "That isn't an invitation to take a drink," he added; "I am only calling my attendant."

Smith Surprised.

In response to the summons a colored man entered the room briskly.

"Yassir, yassir," replied Whisky, getting busy at once. Many seasons spent in attending to the wants of impatient ball players in that club house had developed an activity in Whisky far beyond the trend of his race. In a jiffy he had every stitch of the young man's clothes off him. Then he brought towels and began to administer a 'horough rubdown.

Familiar as he was with all stages of dress and undress, Bill Smith could not repress an exclamation of admiration for the wonderful specimen of young manhood that stood before him, arms outstretched, while the attendant vigorously applied the towel. The manager cast aside his "Sporting Life" and walked completely around the young man, sizing him up from tip to toe. Six feet two inches, perhaps a trifle under that, he appeared to be. Smith guessed his weight to be a good 200 pounds, with not more than five pounds to come off. A well-shaped head and neck were set on a pair of broad shoulders not too square. Even as the stranger's body swayed and his arms moved slightly under the manipulations of the skillful rubber, Smith could see the back muscles ripple. Clean-limbed he was all the way down, waist somewhat tapering, small, but strong-looking hips and legs like a quarter-mile runner. His skin was as fair, almost, as a woman's.

The manager grabbed his chair, turned it around to face the stranger, and sat down in it.

"What's your name," he asked.

"Gordon Kelly."

"Sounds like a good combination. Gordon was a great Georgia soldier and Kelly was a great baseball general. How old are you?"

"Twenty-one next month."

Never Saw a Game.

"What club did you play with last?"

"Never played on any club."

"What?"

"Never saw a ball game in my life."

Whisky promptly ceased rubbing, threw down the towel and moved off with an expression of disgust on his face.

"Pick up that towel and finish your job, Whisky. We're not through with this young man yet," remarked Bill Smith.

"Dis ain't no ball player, boss. Dishyere is jest a common, ordinary white man," expostulated the attendant.

"You never can tell, Whisky; you never can tell," replied Bill Smith, letting fall a philosophic remark that had not a little to do with his success as a manager of ball players.

Whisky took up the towel and started in again, but it was plainly to be seen his heart was not in his work. Whisky lived, moved and breathed in the atmosphere of baseball. Ball players were as food and drink to him. A syndicate of John L. Sullivans, Frank Gotches, Eugene Sandows and Percy Herculeses would have created but a sorry impression on Whisky if it couldn't play ball.

"All right, Whisky, that's enough," declared the manager. "Now, hten bring me a uniform-pants and shirt. That's the stuff. Crawl into these, Mr. Kelly, and draw up a chair and toast your shins in front of this fire while your clothes are drying out. Have a cigar?"

"I never smoke."

"Have a chew?"

"I never use it."

"I should say you didn't by the looks of those molars. Have a drink?"

"I never drink."

"Well, you couldn't get it here if you wanted it. Now, tell me, what put it into your head that you wanted to play ball?"

A Cobb or a Speaker.

"I'll tell you, Mr. Smith," replied Kelly, with a smile of engaging frankness that displayed his fine teeth. "I read in the newspapers about Ty Cobb getting $10,000 a year and holding out for $15,000. It looked good to me."

"Is that all?"

"Not quite. I came from the Georgia mountain country, Mr. Smith. I have never been in a city before. The first time I ever rode in a street car was this morning. But, I know all about baseball, although I have never even seen a ball game."

Whisky waited to hear no more. With a look of immeasurable superiority on his black face, he turned and left the club house. Gordon Kelly continued:

"Now, all this may sound strange to you, Mr. Smith, but I am just as confident that I can soon become a good ball player as I am that you will continue to win baseball pennants."

Bill Smith laughed.

"That seems to put it up to me," he said. "You've got the instincts of a ball player all right. They always put it up to the manager, especially the pitchers. You must want to be a pitcher."

"No, sir; I want to be an outfielder."

"A Ty Cobb, eh?"

"A Ty Cobb, or a Tris Speaker, or better."

Bill Smith grinned. Ever since he broke into the game he had been pestered, off and on, by all sorts of baseball "bugs," but this was about the worst case he ever experienced. Here was a young man who confessed he never saw a game of ball, yet was positive he had the makings in him of a player that would surpass two of the greatest diamond stars the game ever produced. The idea was as absurd as if a street sweeper came in and said that while he didn't know anything about the oil business, he was sure he could make more money in it than John D. Rockefeller. The whole thing was so ridiculous it was really funny. Bill Smith's grin broke into a hearty laugh. But Gordon Kelly didn't laugh. He was never more serious in his life. The manager noticed the expression on the young man's face and his laughter ceased.

A High Standard.

"Better than a Cobb or Speaker, eh? Well, I don't mind saying, Mr. Kelly, you have set a pretty high standard for yourself. Now, then, what do you want me to do, sign you up at Ty Cobb's salary?"

Gordon Kelly shifted his chair so that he faced the manager.

"Nothing like that, Mr. Smith," he said soberly. "Here's my proposition: The Southern League championship season opens on April 10, about six weeks from now. What I want you to do is this: Give me permission to practice here with you and your players until the season opens. If by that time I haven't demonstrated my worth to you as a ball player, just say so and we will part the best of friends as far as I am concerned. If, on the other hand, I do demonstrate to you that I am entitled to a place on your team, I will ask that you sign me up at whatever salary you care to pay me. There's nothing unfair, or unreasonable in that, is there?"

Bill Smith took three or four puffs of his cigar before replying to this direct question. What sort of person was he dealing with, he wondered. Was this young man simply an extraordinary baseball "bug," or was he mentally unbalanced? Was he baseball crazy, or crazy in the real sense of the word? If he simply had the baseball craze, there was nothing astonishing about that and Bill Smith figured he would have no trouble in handling the case. He had handled many of them successfully in his time. But the other kind of insanity was a little out of his line, and required not a baseball expert, but an alienist.

What Caraway Seeds Did

"NO, I thank you," said the man from Michigan. "Not any, thanks. I never eat cake or candy."

"How strange!" murmured the innocent young woman.

"Listen," said the man from Michigan, "and I will tell you the whole sad story. Once I was very fond of cake, and perhaps I would now be if it were not for fear"—here the Michigander looked fearfully over his shoulder—"of caraway seed."

"I can not stand caraway seed. That's why I eat neither candy nor cake, and almost no bread. It is a great hardship."

"But there are some kinds of cake and candy that do not contain caraway seed," objected the innocent young woman.

"No. I used to think there were. Once or twice I thought I had discovered a kind that was free from caraway seed, but it always turned out to have some caraway seed in it.

"I once hired a special baker to bake cake and bread for me without caraway seed in it. I was happy for a while. Then all of a sudden I hit full force into a caraway seed in the midst of my cake. It was a pink cake with gothic ornaments such as I delighted in. It was a cruel shock.

"I flew down the street to the dentist's to get him to give me something for the pain in my tooth, and after he had administered cocaine plentifully I went after the baker. He tried to explain that the boy was responsible for the caraway seed and that it was all an accident, but I chased that baker over the counter and under the counter until I had him.

"Nevertheless, people have put caraway seeds over on me many times since. Sometimes I analyze a piece of cake when I am especially hungry for it, exploring the last crumb. When I am reassured and thrown off my guard I bite into a sixty horsepower caraway seed that makes my hair stand on end.

"There is no help for it. Caraway seed is a universal affliction."

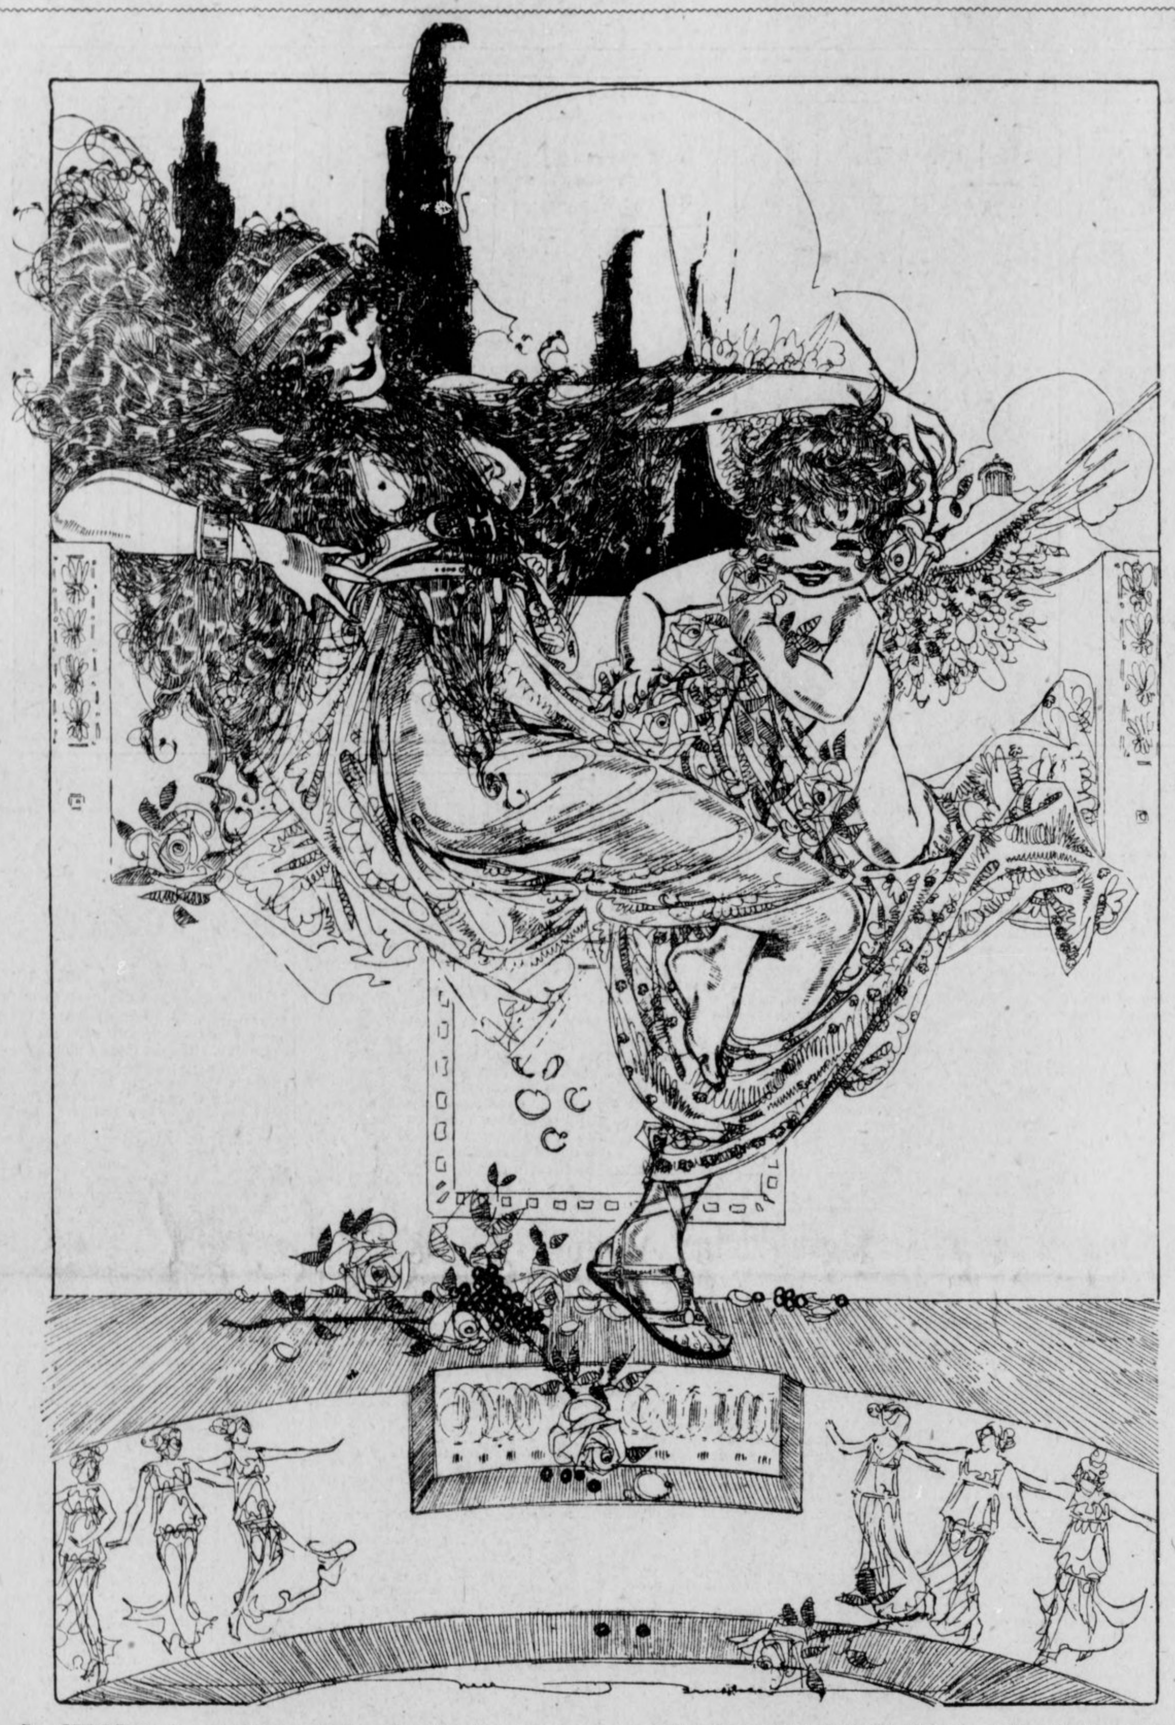
Do You Wonder

That Cupid Is Such an Adorable Rogue When His Mother Was Such a Lovely Trouble Maker?

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.



LOVELY he is—adorable, a plotter, irresistible, a knave, sweet as an almond-blossom, a dabbler in trouble, soft-hearted, cruel, "Love" his business, a promiser, offering bitter-sweet, unutterably a darling, unchangeably a rascal! And everybody—('specially those who have been stirred 'round in one of his concoctions which he calls "an affair")—everybody ('specially those who know he is both an almond blossom and a rascal—and yet love him)—everybody wonders why he is all this! Maybe you do not think of his mother when you wonder that. How could he help but be lovable, a rascal, and a contradiction? For his mother he had a creature, herself born of the sea, the sea which is tender and terrible, smiling and stormy, and all mystery—Venus—goddess of beauty, lover of laughter and love and light, herself a rogue and a saint! Playing all day long under the sun and sky of dream-fostering Greece, in the white-circle of her arms, strained to her breast, teased with a rose in her idle hand, looking often into the hot blue of her eyes, hearing her laughter, comrade in her mischief—son of a Beauty—a devotee of Love—a sweet Rogue—how could he be other than what he is!

The forger smiled, and there was malignant triumph in his expression.

"Pooh!" he exclaimed. "Even if I used it, they would never get on to me. See this?" He pointed at the strange contrivance on the muzzle.

Mary's curiosity made her forget for a moment her distaste.

"What is it?" she asked, interestedly. "I have never seen anything like that before."

"Of course, you haven't," Garson answered with much pride. "I'm the first man in the business to get one, and I'll bet on it. I keep up with the times." For once, he was revealing that fundamental egotism which is the characteristic of all his kind. "That's one of the new Maxim silencers," he continued. "With smokeless powder in the cartridges, and the silencers on, I can make a shot from my coat-pocket, and you wouldn't even know it had been done. * * * And I'm some shot, believe me."

"Impossible!" Mary ejaculated.

"No, it ain't," the man asserted. "Here, wait; I'll show you."

"Good gracious, not here!" Mary exclaimed in alarm. "We would have the whole place down on us."

Garson chuckled.

"You just watch the dinky little vase on the table across the room there. 'Tain't very valuable, is it?"

"No," Mary whispered.

A Spectacular Shot.

In the same instant, while still her eyes were on the vase, it fell in a cascade of shivered glass to the table and floor. She had heard no sound; she saw no smoke. Perhaps there had been a faintest clicking noise. She was not sure. She stared dumfounded for a few seconds, then turned her bewildered face toward Garson, who was grinning in high enjoyment.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," she declared, vastly impressed.

"Neat little thing, ain't it?" the man asked, exultantly.

"Where did you get it?" Mary asked.

"In Boston, last week. And between you and me, Mary, it's the only model, and it sure is a corker for crime."

The sinister association of ideas made Mary shudder, but she said no more. She would have shuddered again if she could have guessed the vital part that pistol was destined to play. But she had no thought of any actual peril to come from it. She might have thought otherwise, could she have known of the meeting that night in the back room of Blinkey's, where English Eddie and Garson sat with their heads close together over a table.

"A chance like this," Griggs was saying, "a chance that will make a fortune for all of us."

"It sounds good," Garson admitted wistfully.

"It is good," the other declared with an oath. "Why, if this goes through, we're set up for life. We can quit, all of us."

"Yes," Garson agreed, "we can quit, all of us." There was avarice in his voice.

The tempter was sure that the battle was won, and smiled contentedly.

"Well," he urged, "what do you say?"

"How would we split it?" It was plain that Garson had given over the struggle against greed. After all, Mary was only a woman, despite her cleverness, and with all a woman's timidity. Here was sport for men.

"Three ways would be right," Griggs answered. "One to me, one to you and one to be divided up among the others."

Garson brought his fist down on the table with a force that made the glasses jingle.

"You're on," he said, strongly.

"Fine!" Griggs declared, and the two men shook hands. "Now, I'll get——"

"Get nothing!" Garson interrupted. "I'll get my own men. Chicago Red is in town. So is Dacey, with perhaps a couple of others of the right sort. I'll get them to meet you at Blinkey's at 2 to-morrow afternoon, and, if it looks right, we'll turn the trick to-morrow night."

"That's the stuff," Griggs agreed, greatly pleased.

But a sudden shadow fell on the face of Garson. He bent closer to his companion, and spoke with a fierce intensity that brooked no denial.

"She must never know."

Griggs nodded understandingly.

"Of course," he answered. "I give you my word that I'll never tell her. And you know you can trust me, Joe."

"Yes," the forger replied somberly. "I know I can trust you." But the shadow did not lift from his face.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Wedding Announcement.

Mary dismissed Garson presently and betook herself to her bedroom for a nap. The day had been a trying one, and, though her superb health could endure much, she felt that both prudence and comfort required that she should recruit her energies while there was opportunity.

She was not in the least surprised that Dick had not yet returned, though he had mentioned half an hour. At the best, there were many things that might detain him, his father's absence from the office, difficulties in making arrangements for his projected honeymoon trip abroad—which would never occur—or the like. At the worst, there was a chance of finding his father promptly, and of that father as promptly taking steps to prevent the son from ever again seeing the woman who had so indiscreetly married him.

Yet, somehow, Mary could not believe that her husband would yield to such paternal coercion. Rather, she was sure that he would prove loyal to her whom he loved, through every trouble. At the thought a certain wistfulness pervaded her, and a poignant regret that this particular man should have been the one chosen of fate to be entangled within her mesh of revenge.

He Has a Fight With a Scotch Kid and Comes Out a Victor After a Hard "Scrap."

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

I HAD a fite with a Scotch kid yesterday. It was a close fite; the Scotch kid came close to gitting killed beefoar I felt sorry for him. I got a black eye & that was all.

I doant like fites, & I nevver have a fite until I am forced into it, but this Scotch kid was too fresh. He caim to our house with his father. His father was a Scotch Highlander wich had fought all thru the Boer war & dident git hurted. He was jest like his littel boy. His naim was Duglas McNabb & the naim of the kid was Sandy McNabb.

We went out into the yard to play catch & Sandy wasent a good player at all. He had on kilts; he sed that his mother always asked him to wear kilts, but he sed he was glad of it beekaus he was a true Scotchman & wasent ashamed of it. The Scotch are a undefeated race, he toald me, & these kilts stands for currage & fiteing qualities.

The Irish is pritty good fiters, too, I sed. My father is Scotch, but my mother is half Scotch & half Irish, & I am proud of the Irish blood that is in me.

But the Irish aint a undefeated race, sed Sandy. Maybe thay have been defeated, I sed, but thay nevver knew it if thay was. Why doant you catch the ball onst in a while, butter fingers? I sed to him.

Golf Was His Pie.

I dinna care much for this sorry kind of a gaim, he sed to me. Golf, that is a braw gaim. I doant think much of gold, I toald Sandy. Golf is a high-toned cousin of shinney. Baseball is the gratest gaim in the wurld. It taiks brains to play baseball.

It can't taik much brains to play baseball or the Scotch wud be playin it, sed Sandy McNabb. The Scotch are all brains. Look at Bobbie Burns, he sed. That man knew everything. Shakespeer knew a lot, too, I sed. He knew a littel, sed Sandy, but not as much as Bobbie Burns. Bobbie Burns knew moar than my own father knows, he sed.

Tom Moore was Irish, I sed, & he rote pritty potrey, too. Why doant you catch that ball?

I dinna cair to play moar the noo, sed Sandy. It hurts my fingers muckle, he sed. So we quit, but Sandy dident stop talking.

Bobbie Burns was a all around geenyus, he sed. My father says I am going to look like him wen I grow up & rite potrey, too, to keep up the naim of the undefeated race.

How It Started.

Maybe you will rite potrey, sed I to Sandy, but you will nevver look like Bobbie Burns, you littel wart. Bobbie Burns was always handsome, as a kid & as a man. When you grow up you will prubly look like you look now, only you will have to spend a littel Scotch munny for bigger kits & you will have red hair on the calfs of yure legs ware you havent any pants, I sed.

I will na be called a wart, sed Sandy. Hoot mon, he sed, taik that, and he hit me in the eye. I didn't know he was going to hit me; that is how I got my black eye. Then I sailed into Sandy, licked him good & proper. I was going to maik fun of him & his underfeated race, but I happened to think that I am 3-4 Scotch, too.

He Was a Great Man

"LOOKING impressive is well worth while," said the drug store man. "Let me tell you a story.

"John Higginbotham, who lived in the town that I came from, was a fine old fellow. But he was of such a retiring disposition that he got the worst of everything. He was so meek and mild that he never went anywhere, saw anything or did anything.

"He was given a back seat on all special occasions. He wore a smile most of the time, so few people ever knew how sensitive he was about his clothes and his personal appearance generally.

"There came a time when the doctor said John must wear spectacles. John was filled with consternation because of his apprehension as to their effect on his looks. He feared that men, women and children would make fun of him.

"Nevertheless, he wanted to wear spectacles, because the President of the United States was coming to town and John wanted to see him. He wanted to know if the President looked like the pictures in the newspaper. So he wore spectacles.

"His legs trembled beneath him when he first ventured out on the street wearing the spectacles. However, the clear vision they gave him was delightful!

"The first friend he met was Gabriel Von Vorden, and John colored to the roots of his hair at the steady gaze with which Gabe regarded him. He could see plainly through the new spectacles, however, that Gabe's face wore an expression of wonder rather than amusement.

"'The very man!' exclaimed Gabe.

"'You see,' he went on to explain, 'there isn't a man in the village to preside on the platform when the President speaks. There isn't a man who looks impressive enough to sit beside the President. But with them specs, John, you can sit right up there and the President will take you for a college professor.'

"That's how it happened that John Higginbotham shared the honors of the occasion along with the water pitcher, the drinking glass and the President's handkerchief. And no doubt the President thought the village was quite a seat of learning, judging from the appearance of the man who sat on the platform, for every now and then he turned around to get the approval of the presiding dignitary, which John was too badly frightened to give.

"John's imperturbability made the President still more anxious to win the approval of such a stern and ponderous individual. As John never turned a hair all through the speech, the head of the nation went on his way thinking how shallow and in consequential his efforts were in the eyes of the deep man on the platform."

"How well behaved your children are," said the minister's wife.

"They are perfectly lovely children," added the minister.

The parents smiled proudly, and up spoke little Agnes:

"Pa said if we didn't behave he'd knock our blocks off; didn't you, pa?"

MODERATOR STONE ON POLITICS IN THE ASSEMBLY

At the opening of the Presbyterian Assembly of the Northern Church on Monday the newly elected moderator, Rev. Dr. Stone, made the following brief reference to the published report that he had been chosen to his high office through "political pull:"

Gentlemen, I ask you to give your undivided attention for a moment. We are here as representatives of a great church to do the work of the church. We have no right to allow any personalities or any diverging thoughts to control our time. I believe that the newspapers which have so well reported, and are reporting, the work of the assembly are intending in every way to do the work of God with us. If any have erred in judgment let us overlook it, or, better still, look not at it. I have not seen the morning paper, and I beg of you not to take my time discussing personal matters. I wish to state all I have to say is, I believe in my Lord, I believe in my brother and I believe in doing my duty.

BURNS AGENT OUTLINES PHAGAN THEORY

Famous Detective's Aid, C. W. Tobie, Issues First Statement on Work in Slaying Case.

C. W. Tobie, manager of the criminal department of the W. J. Burns Detective Agency, Monday made public his theory of the murder of Mary Phagan For the first time the man who is representing Burns in Atlanta's greatest mystery until the noted detective arrived consented to see reporters.

Tobie's theory is that Mary Phagan was murdered inside the National Pencil plant, by some one familiar with the premises, and that her body was dragged to the basement for purposes of concealment and probably destruction. He scouted the idea she was killed on the outside and dragged inside, and declared that too much buncombe has been given out by men who have only muddied the waters.

While no new arrests are expected immediately, Tobie declared the mystery is not at all impossible of solution, and that the guilty man will be apprehended in due time. Meanwhile, he promised to issue statements telling the progress made from time to time.

Burns Expert's Theory.

Mary Phagan, while in the pencil factory, was approached by some one who made an improper proposal. She resented it and the man asked her to remain silent. She refused, saying she would report the affair to the proper authorities, and the man struck her, hurling her against a machine, the impact causing the skull wound.

Seeing the injury he had inflicted, the assailant became desperate. If the girl revived she would tell the story of the assault and he would be sentenced to the penitentiary. Actual murder and prompt disposition of the body offered the only possible escape, and this he concluded to do. He completed his work by tying a cord around the 14-year-old girl's neck and strangling her.

Intended to Burn Body.

The body was then taken to the basement of the factory, Tobie thinks, because the murderer intended to incinerate it.

There was no fire in the furnace, or not enough, or time was too short. The next possible ruse was to manufacture evidence that the murder had been committed on the outside and the body dragged in. The guilty man then pulled a staple out of the back basement door and dragged the body to make it appear it had been brought in from the outside.

"The door was opened from the inside," said Tobie. "All the abrasions are on the inside, and all the evidence points to the fact the door was forced from the inside. The murder was committed by some one familiar with the factory, one who had probably worked there, and the body was taken to the factory basement to hide the crime. The note found there was written for this purpose, also."

Big Developments Rumored.

Hurried conferences Monday at noon between Solicitor Dorsey and Chief of Detectives Lanford and then later between Chief Lanford and Pinkerton Detective Harry Scott led to persistent reports about the police station that important developments in the Phagan case were expected during the afternoon.

Neither of the officials, however, would divulge the nature of the conferences, further than to declare that "we were merely going over evidence in the case."

Notwithstanding this reticence, however, the two conferences, one directly following the other, caused the

Here's the Prize List in Great Story Contest

Prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Atlanta Georgian for the best solution of the great serial novel, "The Triple Tie," that begins today in The Georgian, as follows:

First Prize - - $100
Second Prize - 50
Third Prize - - 25
Fourth Prize - - 15
12 other prizes. each. 5

"The Triple Tie" will be run in generous daily installments until June 29, when the final chapter will be published. Synopsis of the last installment is now in the hands of Mr. T. J. Peeples, cashier of the American National Bank.

It will be held by him in a sealed envelope until a committee of three Atlanta citizens not connected in any way with The Georgian may select the winners of the prizes.

Mr. Hearst Guest At Luncheon Given By Robt. F. Maddox

Robert F. Maddox gave a luncheon in honor of William Randolph Hearst at the Capital City Club Monday at 1 o'clock.

The luncheon was informal, and was arranged to give Mr. Hearst an opportunity to become acquainted with representative men of Atlanta business and professional circles.

Among the guests were Governor-elect John M. Slaton, P. S. Arkwright, W. L. Peel, W. H. Kiser, F. J. Paxon, Forrest Adair, H. C. Worthen, John E. Murphy, James H. Nunnally, Hugh Murray, J. R. Gray, F. S. Ellis, Clark Howell, Jr., John S. Cohen, W. H. Brittain, J. K. Orr, Henry S. Johnson, Walter Rich, W. T. Gentry, Dr. W. S. Elkin, Thomas B. Felder, John W. Grant, Clifford L. Fire in City Hall Basement; Smoke Routs Workers

Fire broke out in the basement of the City Hall at noon Monday and in a few minutes the whole building was so flooded with smoke that all work had to be suspended.

It started in the room where the health department's fumigating liquid and the gasoline supply are kept and for a brief time threatened to be serious.

The fire department soon put the flames out, but the calling out of all the nearby companies on account of the central location of the fire created considerable excitement in the streets and a great crowd gathered.

GREAT STORY STARTED IN GEORGIAN TO-DAY

'The Triple Tie,' Absorbing Baseball Romance, Offers Chance to Win $250 in Prizes.

The Georgian to-day begins the publication of a great serial story entitled, "The Triple Tie," which, it may be said with assurance, is the most interesting story that has been published for years.

In "The Triple Tie" romance, adventure and a great national sport are woven together in a most ingenious and fascinating way. The reader is kept constantly on the anxious seat, wondering what is coming next.

Readers of The Georgian will recall the queer picture of the man with the curling beard, the eyeglasses and the three ties on the bosom of his shirt that has been appearing in this newspaper for two weeks. That picture was published with the idea of exciting the reader's curiosity. The three ties were supposed to suggest the title of the story—"The Triple Tie."

Winners To Be Named Soon.

To stimulate interest in this great contest, The Georgian offered five prizes of $5 each for the best suggestions for a title for this story, based on the picture published. At the time the offer was made The Georgian placed in the hands of Mr. T. J. Peeples, cashier of the American National Bank, a sealed envelope containing the name of the story—"The Triple Tie."

A flood of answers was received by The Georgian. Everybody in Atlanta, young and old, was interested. The winners of this contest will be announced in the next few days.

The picture itself has nothing whatever to do with the story. The hero is a real, live, red-blooded young man, and the reader, be he man or be she woman, or young or old, will fall in love with Gordon Kelly, for such is the hero's name.

Chance to Win $250 in Prizes.

"The Triple Tie" will be published daily in The Georgian in generous installments. It will run until June 29. Toward the very close the serial will end abruptly at one of the most dramatic situations ever conceived by a novelist. Readers will then be asked to supply the solution to the several mysteries that are unsolved when the installments end.

This is not a guessing contest.

For the best solutions prizes aggregating $250 are offered by The Georgian. The first prize is $100, second prize $50, third prize $25, fourth prize $15, and there are also twelve prizes of $5 each.

ORIGINALITY, LITERARY VALUE AND ANALYTICAL CLEANNESS WILL BE CONSIDERED IN AWARDING THE PRIZES.

The Georgian assures its readers that "The Triple Tie" is a story of uncommon interest that will hold close attention from the beginning to the very end. It is handled by the author in a manner that is different from that of any novel we have ever read. It is written in brisk style and there is absolutely not a dull moment in the serial.

Be sure and begin reading "The Triple Tie" in The Georgian to-day.

ASSEMBLY IS STIRRED BY HERESY CHARGE

Teachings of Union Theological Seminary Attacked in Northern Presbyterian Report.

Charges that heretical teachings are being spread by Union Theological Seminary, of New York, confronted the commissioners of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly at their session Monday afternoon.

The accusations were contained in one of the minority reports, already printed in The Georgian, of the special committee on the re-establishing of relations between the church and the seminary. The report was signed by Rev. F. C. Montfort, D. D., of Cincinnati.

The new theology was most vigorously attacked in the following paragraph of Dr. Montfort's report:

A theology which denies the supernatural; that regards sin not as the result of an 'abrupt transformation' or the fall, but as 'the survival of the animal in man,' and salvation 'not as an act,' but as 'a process rooted as sin is, in the nature of man,' that regards Christ 'not as God and man,' but as 'God in man' and 'a type to which all men are ultimately destined to conform,' and which acknowledges as man's supreme authority not the Scriptures, but the 'lightt hat is in him,' is not the theology of the Westminster Confession nor of the Presbyterian Church.

The Northern Assembly had been stirred by the charges that politics had brought about the election of Dr. John T. Stone as moderator. Dr. Stone at the beginning of the morning session took occasion to reply in a dignified manner, asking that all personalities be laid aside and that if any mistake had been made that it be overlooked.

The most pretentious plan for the amalgamation of the Presbyterian Churches of America was made public before the Northern Assembly. It proposed a union of all the family of Presbyterian Churches. Other proposals which have received indorsement have embraced the union of two or three of the branches. None before has ventured to suggest for actual consideration the union of all.

"Elect Infant Clause" to Stand.

The majority of the committee reported that prospects were favorable for a return to the former relations between the church and the seminary and that the directors of the institution appeared most willing to make all the changes desired by the representative of the Assembly. They asked that their committee be continued so that the work of reunion might be effected.

The committee having in hand the consideration of the "elect infant clause" reported to the Southern Assembly with the recommendation that the phrasing of the clause be let stand as it was.

Elect Infant Clause To Remain Unchanged.

The taking of the report of the permanent committee of systematic beneficence from the docket of the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church is anticipated with special interest. It is known that ten overtures have been presented to the Assembly from as many presbyteries touching this committee and that requests have been made for the full restoration of former powers of this committee.

During the Assembly of 1912 this committee was deprived of some of its power and seven members resigned.

The keenest interest was precipitated on the Assembly floor Monday when a second report touching the

'Dixie Girls' Charm Stage Asset'

Gladys Hanson Counsels Friends

Famous Actress Loves Atlanta

Miss Gladys Hanson.

Returns Home for Rest After New York Triumph in Belasco's 'The Governor's Lady.'

"I love Atlanta. The thing which pleases me most about my success is that it has pleased my Atlanta friends."

Miss Gladys Hanson Snook, one of the most beautiful actresses Atlanta has given the New York stage, fresh from triumphs as one of the leading players in David Belasco's production of "The Governor's Lady," thus expressed Monday her loyalty to her home city.

She is at her home, 103 Cleburne Avenue, for a month's rest after her metropolitan engagement. This summer she sails for Europe, returning only in time for the New York opening of the play in which she added to her fame this past season.

"Many of my Atlanta girl friends are anxious to attempt a stage career, and already they are calling on me," Miss Hanson has told Atlanta friends. "They start with well wishes and congratulations and personal chat, but always the conversation works around to the question, 'What chance would I have?'

"Southern Girls Have Charm."

"I may as well answer them all at once. Atlanta girls who have any talent for acting will find the stage no more difficult, but certainly no more easy, than any other profession. Indeed, I think the Atlanta girls stand a little better chance of real success than girls from other sections.

"Southern girls have a charm, which is the birthright of Dixie, and which managers are quick to recognize. Then the famous 'Atlanta spirit' is not limited, I feel sure, to the men who are making the city famous. This spirit of enterprise, of perseverance in the face of obstacles, and the habit of succeeding should help Atlanta's daughters as well as her sons.

"Sometimes I think, though, that the rewards of the stage are hardly enough to compensate for living away from Atlanta. This is a dear, beautiful city; I always want to get back."

MACON BANKER, LIFE EBBING FROM POISON, PREPARES FOR DEATH

B. Sanders Walker, Jr., Makes Will When Told He Cannot Survive Day. Prayers Offered in Churches for Recovery--Took Mercury by Mistake

MACON, GA., May 19.—"I wish it was all over now," said B. Sanders Walker, Jr., when told this morning that this was his last day on earth. He is dying from poison, having swallowed a bichloride of mercury tablet by mistake for a headache pill last Thursday.

He is suffering intensely and is very weak, his death being considered but a matter of a few hours. His father, B. S. Walker, of Monroe; his brother, Cliff M. Walker, Solicitor General of the Western Circuit, and other relatives are at his bedside.

Without exception, in every church in Macon, Protestant and Catholic, prayers were offered yesterday for his recovery and his case was commented upon from nearly all the pulpits in the sermons.

Walker's case is one of pathetic interest. He is one of the wealthiest young business men in Macon or middle Georgia, controlling property estimated at $700,000 valuation. He is a graduate of the University of Georgia, in the class of 1903. He played shortstop on the Georgia baseball team while a student at Athens.

Walker was in the prime of young manhood and a specimen of perfect health when his mistake of four days ago placed him upon his deathbed.

After the first day the pain caused by the gnawing poison eased and set about its deadly work of slowly but surely destroying the functions of the kidneys and liver. Within another day the kidneys were paralyzed. But for a slight pallor, no one would know from his appearance he was a living dead man.

Calmly Winds Up Affairs.

When told he could not recover, Walker summoned several of his business associates and gave directions concerning the disposition of pressing business matters. Besides being a banker, he is interested in many business enterprises, particularly in real estate.

"I know I must die," he said to his friends. "It is something that can not be helped, and I have made up my mind to face it as bravely as possible. I do not feel the slightest pain; it is strange that I must die from a cause that makes itself so little felt. If I didn't have so much faith in my physicians and know that the poison is in my system, I would laugh at my sentence to death.

"I suffered terribly from nausea and burning pains for twelve or fourteen hours after swallowing the poison; then the distress gradually wore away until it ceased altogether. It is difficult for me to believe my end is so near."

Makes Will After Banquet.

Following his return from a banquet given to delegates to the Georgia State Bankers' Association, who were in convention here, Walker, who left his bed and donned his evening clothes to attend the dinner, called his lawyer and made his will. Previous to going to the banquet, he was a little skeptical concerning his approaching death and as one of the hosts to the bankers he was as gay as the gay.

Excepting for the sad and at times tearful faces of his wife and children and other relatives, it is difficult to realize the Walker mansion is a house of death. The members of the family have agreed not to talk of the impending fate of the master in his presence and make every effort to turn his mind from his approaching end.

BROWN TO CRUSH WAR ON BLACKS IN COBB

Offers Reward for Dynamiter of Negro's Home—"This State Will Not Brook Anarchy."

Governor Joseph M. Brown Monday issued a proclamation, offering a reward of $150 for the dynamiter of a negro house on the plantation of James T. Anderson, in Cobb County. He said the crime indicated that certain men in Cobb County had taken up the movement started by a lawless element in Forsyth County to drive the negroes out, and that a firm position by the State was demanded.

"I want it clearly understood that this State will not make the slightest concession to anarchy; and I feel confident the people are back of me," said the Governor.

This action by Governor Brown comes close on the heels of the offering of rewards for the apprehension of lynchers in Columbia and Heard Counties. Copies of these proclamations have been sent to the county papers of both these counties to be inserted as advertisements.

Issues Proclamation.

When the Sheriff of Cobb County called Governor Brown early Monday and told him of the dynamiting, he immediately responded with a proclamation, clearly indicating that he was ready to begin warfare against mob rule and uphold the supremacy of the law with all available means.

Said the Governor:

"The State's process for enforcing her laws is definite and complete. She has not abdicated the power to apply that process nor does she permit her power to be usurped by any person or combination of persons. She does not concede that anarchy in any form nor in any degree shall supplant her laws."

Blow House to Pieces.

The house, occupied by a negro named Lewis, was blown to pieces about 12:30 o'clock Monday morning. The negro was ordered to leave the community last winter. He fled, but returned again April 1.

When Sheriff Swanson reached the scene soon after the explosion with bloodhounds he was unable to follow the dynamiters. It was discovered that they had come and gone in a buggy. The dynamite, with a long fuse, had been pushed up under the house.

Several negroes were in the house at the time, but none was hurt. The Anderson plantation is eight miles south of Marietta on the Powder Springs road.

INDICTS CHURCH FOR LOW PAY TO PASTORS

Relief Secretary Declares Money-Mad Corporations Take Better Care of Their Employees.

A bitter attack on what was described as the niggardly policy of the church in dealing with its ministers was made by William H. Foulkes, of Philadelphia, secretary of the Ministerial Relief and Sustentation Board, at Monday's session of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly.

That the Presbyterian Church, after paying its ministers an average salary of only $730 a year, should make no adequate provision for the time of their disability he regarded as an indictment more severe than could be made against any money-mad corporation in the country.

He charged that ministers of the church are in a bondage of fear and that they are not treated even with common humanity.

"One criticism made of our ministers," he said, "is that they are not good business men. It is said that too many of them are tempted by these get-rich-quick financial schemes by which they hope to reap profits of 20 to 25 per cent on their modest investments instead of 4 or 6 per cent they more reasonably should expect.

Average Salary Only $730.

"But is this to be wondered at when one considers that the average salary of a Presbyterian minister is only $730? He gets so little that 4 per cent on his savings would yield practically nothing.

"I am not condoning him for bringing shame upo himself and upon the ministry, but conditions under which he works should be changed and provision made for the time of his disability.

"The price of fuel and provisions has gone up instead of going down. The minister must buy clothes and must care for the needs of a growing family. He must buy books and contribute to benevolences which meet him before they meet the people of his church. He must be prepared for times of sickness and death. All this he has to do on the average salary of $730 a year. He must live so that the richest of his church may not despise him nor the poorest envy him.

"When a minister can do this he has reached the pinnacle of financial statesmanship.

"Medicine, law, civil engineering promise for those who follow in these professions wealth or a comfortable living for old age, as well as glory and fame and dominion for middle life.

"The ministry draws by reason of its most noble mission. I would not give up the privilege of preaching the Gospel to the lost and the dying for everything else in the world.

Offers Little But Poverty.

"Yet the ministry, once the preacher passes the meridian of life, offers little but poverty and dependence.

"Young men will continue to enlist in the sacred cause. Nothing can prevent that. But they will enlist with a blunted enthusiasm, for they know that the church will leave them poverty-stricken and helpless."

Mr. Foulkes is engaged in a campaign for a $10,000,000 relief and sustentation fund to be used in caring for the aged ministers of the church and for the widows and families of those who are taken by death.

Dr. Van Dyke Prepares To Defend His Son.

NEW YORK, May 19.—Dr. Henry VanDyke, author and clergyman, is preparing to make a vigorous defense of his son, Tertius VanDyke, who was ordained a Presbyterian minister yesterday, if the younger VanDyke is mentioned with others in heresy charges presented to the Northern Presbyterian Assembly at Atlanta, Ga.

When Rev. Mr. VanDyke was ordained at Brick Church yesterday, along with the other Union Theological Seminary graduates, Dr. VanDyke delivered a stirring sermon on heresy. He wept several times while speaking against heresy trials.

"If such things must be, let men (not boys) be the victims," he said. "If I refused the right hand of fellowship to these young followers of Jesus, I should be ashemed to look my Saviour in the face."

To The Young Expectant Mother

Women of Experience Advise the Use of Mother's Friend.

There is a certain degree of trepidation in the minds of most women in regard to the subject of motherhood. The longing to possess is often contradicted by the inherent fear of a period of distress.

But there need be no such dread in view of the fact that we have a most noble remedy in what is known as Mother's Friend. This is an external application that has a wonderful influence and control over the muscular tissues of the abdomen. By its daily use the muscles, cords, tendons and ligaments all gently expand without the slightest strain; there is no pain, no nausea, no nervousness; what was dreaded as a severe physical ordeal becomes a calm, serene, joyful anticipation that has its impress such as our foremost teachers of Eugenics are striving to drill into the minds of the present generation.

In almost every community there are women who have used Mother's Friend, and they are the ones that recovered quickly, conserved their health and strength to thus preside over families destined by every rule of physiology and the history of successful men and women to repeat the story of greater achievement.

Mother's Friend is prepared after the formula of a noted family doctor by the Bradfield Regulator Co., 138 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

Write them for their instructive book to expectant mothers. You will find Mother's Friend on sale by all drug stores at $1.00 a bottle.

RURAL CHURCHES FACING CRISIS, SAYS WILSON

"elect infant clause" recommended that the deliverance of the Assembly of 1902 be reiterated; that the Scriptures warrant the belief that all infants dying in infancy are saved, and that in view of this no recommendation regarding any change in the Confession of Faith be handed down to the presbyteries touching the "elect infant clause."

Dr. W. M. McPheeters, of Columbia, cautioned against the adoption of the report.

Speaking for the report of the committee of which he is chairman, Dr. T. S. Clyce said the Confession of Faith in its entirety suits him, but the passage conveying the teaching of the church on the election of infants is not clear; that the people are demanding a change of expression, many wanting it stricken from the confession.

The church, he said, gives forth the hope that all infants dying in infancy are saved, and that it is the duty of the church to express that hope.

Speaking again, Dr. McPheeters urged that all reference to the Assembly of 1902 be stricken from the report of the committee and leave the report to recommend that no suggested amendment be sent down to the presbyteries on this question.

Difference of Opinion.

Remarks from a number of commissioners were heard, some speaking in favor of the report and others in favor of the amendment.

When the call for the question came, the vote was taken first on the amendment offered by Dr. McPheeters and the amendment was lost.

Before the vote on the report could be taken, Dr. J. M. Wells offered as a substitute to the report the recommendation that the whole of the "elect infant clause" be stricken from the Confession of Faith.

The vote was taken and the substitute was lost.

No recommendation for change in the "elect infant clause" is sent down to the presbyteries, and the Assembly reaffirmed the action of the Assembly of 1902.

The remainder of the session was devoted to addresses and reports.

United Church Takes Stand for Workingman.

The General Assembly of the United Presbyterian Church resumed its session Monday morning at 9 o'clock at the Central Presbyterian Church. The first report heard was that of the committee on reform. This was a special committee, composed of five members, three ministers and two elders, as follows: Rev. J. R. Jamieson, chairman; Rev. S. A. McCallon, Rev. R. M. McCracken, Elders John Brownlee and Peter Brotherton. Three papers had been referred to this committee, the report of the permanent committee on temperance and other reforms, report of committee on Sabbath reforms and a communication from the Federal Council of Christian Churches in America, relative to the exposition at San Francisco in 1915.

The report said that the committee finds much to encourage it in the review of conditions that confront the church to-day in civil, social, moral and religious life, and in various agencies employed in bettering conditions. They rejoice in the "enactment of the Webb-Kenyon interstate commerce bill in the closing days of the last Congress, and its passage over the veto of the President by an overwhelming vote by both branches of Congress, which was a severe blow to the liquor traffic and indicative of a nation-wide sentiment not even dreamed of by the most sanguine friends of temperance."

Grape Juice Diplomacy Praised.

They also rejoice in the attitude taken by the President, Vice President and Secretary of State in banishing liquors of all kinds from White House functions during the present administration.

The following recommendations were submitted:

1. Support of the following organizations and agencies is commended to the people. The National Reform Association, the Anti-Saloon League, the W. C. T. U. and the Lord's Day Alliance.

2. The efforts of the permanent committee on temperance in the Sabbath schools and young people's organizations is commended.

3. A recommendation that the Second World's Christian Citizenship Conference, to be held in Portland, Oreg., June 29 to July 6, be remembered in all prayers.

4. The city government and directors of the Panama-Pacific Exposition, to be held in San Francisco in 1915, are urged to adopt every possible means to prevent the exploitation of the exposition by commercialized vice, and to protect visitors from all evil influences.

5. Gratitude is expressed to God for the institution of the Sabbath, and for history's evidence of blessing upon the nations and individuals who have honored the Lord's Day.

6. The growing tendency toward a careless observance of the Sabbath by professing Christians is viewed with alarm, and a more aggressive policy in defense of it is urged.

7. The efforts of the National Reform Association to preserve in its purity the Sabbath is commended for support.

8. The national officials are urged to make all appropriations to the Panama-Pacific Exposition conditioned upon the exposition managers signing contracts to close said exposition on Sunday.

9. Congress is asked to pass stricter laws in the District of Columbia prohibiting all unnecessary work, theaters and games on the Lord's Day.

10. Fitting observance of Lord's Day Week, April 19 to 26, is urged.

11. It is recommended that unceasing war be waged by all cities and commonwealths against prostitution and the white slave traffic.

12. Bible reading is urged in all public schools.

The members of the committee put themselves on record as standing for:

For Workingman's Rights.

1. Equal rights and complete justice for all men in all stations of life. 2. Protection of the family by the single standard of purity, uniform divorce laws, proper regulation of marriage, and proper housing. 3. Abolition of child labor. 4. Such regulation of the conditions of toil as shall best safeguard the health and moral welfare of the community. 5. Protection of the individual and society from the social, economic and moral waste of the liquor traffic. 6. Suitable provision for the old age of workers and those incapacitated by injury. 7. Principle of conciliation and reconciliation in all industrial disputes. 8. A release from employment one day in seven. 9. The most equitable of the products of industry that can ultimately be devised.

The report was adopted and short speeches of fraternal greetings were delivered by Rev. Charles Parker, D. D., of Pittsburg, Pa., for the Reformed Church of America, and Rev. I. M. Kennedy, of Ora, S. C., for the A. R. P. Church.

The report on industrial reform stated that the last two years have been notable in the number of laws placed on the statute books by the workingman, and he is beginning to recast the Constitution and remold in a measure political platforms.

Dr. Stone Makes Reply to His Critics.

The reply of Dr. John T. Stone to the ory of "politics" in his election as moderator and a new proposal for the federation of the Presbyterian churches of America were the important features of Monday's session of the Northern Assembly in the Baptist Tabernacle.

Dr. Stone deplored the introduction of personalities into the conferences of the Assembly, but would not comment at length on the charge that his election as a "dark horse" had been prearranged for six weeks before the meeting of the Assembly.

"If any have erred in judgment, let us overlook it, or, better still, look not at it," he admonished the commissioners. "I wish to state that all I have to say is that I believe in God, I believe in my brethren and I believe in doing my duty."

Deny Charges.

Dr. W. R. King, of Monmouth, Ill., who made the nominating speech in behalf of Dr. Stone, said in regard to the charge that politics had been played in the selection of the Chicago man:

"It is absolutely false. I nominated him simply and solely because I regarded him as the best man. There was no chicanery or trickery or political prearrangement of any sort. I wish to say that the story is the cruelest sort of an injustice, both to Dr. Stone and to the persons who assisted in choosing him to lead the deliberations of the Assembly."

W. T. Ellis, who seconded the nomination, said:

"If there is a particle of truth in the story that Dr. Stone's nomination was in any way prearranged, then, obviously, since we explicitly stated to the contrary, neither Dr. King nor myself is a gentleman or a sincere Christian. Therefore, the subject is out of the realm of discussion on my part."

OLD GUARD, TO TUNE OF DIXIE, MARCHES OFF TO NORTH

Thousands Cheer Famous Gate City Organization as It Leaves on Peace Tour.

With unlimited enthusiasm, wearing brand-new uniforms but the old Atlanta smile, the Old Guard of Atlanta marched from the Piedmont to the Terminal Station Monday and at 11:30 o'clock started in a special train on the long jaunt to Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

In the procession from the hotel to the Terminal Station the guard got a rousing reception, hundreds lining the streets and hundreds from skyscraper windows acclaiming with hand clapping and cheering. Above the music—always "Dixie" and "Sewanee River"—could be heard voices imploring the Old Guard to "Tell 'em about Atlanta."

"Old Guards? Why, they walk like young roosters," was the comment of one enthusiastic citizen.

Eager to Boost Atlanta.

Themselves bubbling over with the Atlanta spirit, the Old Guard members left looking forward to a good time for themselves and good advertising for their home town.

"We'll do everything on earth we can to boost the town," said C. P. Byrd, first liteutenant of Company A. "Atlanta first, last and always is the motto of the Old Guard. I think this is as big an advertisement for Atlanta as the Shriners' convention will be."

"Everybody knows the Atlanta spirit that permeates us all, but they will know it better before we get back," said P. F. Clarke, first lieutenant of Company B.

Colonel J. F. Burke, commander, gave out the following interview:

Big Time in Boston.

"The big time will be at the banquet in Boston, after we, a Southern battalion, have escorted the Union veterans over their own city. I will be one of the speakers at the banquet, and I intend to tell them something. I intend to answer, in the proper way, the old statement that the South was lacking in patriotism, and to bring out certain points of history that have not been made as prominent as they should be."

"We'll fight for Atlanta," said H. M. Beutell.

Edmund W. Martin said: "We are going to do our best to please our friends, the Yankees, to astonish them with our friendship and invite them down here. Keep alive the memories of the past, and peace at present—those are my sentiments."

"I'm going to do my darndest to keep this shako on my head," said Tom H. Pitt.

"I'll back the boys up in anything they do, and 'insure' them a fine trip," said Colonel George M. Hone.

Atlanta to the Front.

Sergeant Frank Ridge left determined to do any old thing to keep Atlanta to the front. "Me, too," said W. E. Hancock, first sergeant of Company A.

"I'll leave the Old Guard at New York and take a trip up the Hudson to see some friends," said W. S. Lounsbury. "I will go to the Peekskills and see my mother, who is the best friend I have."

Captain W. M. Crumley, of the colonel's staff, put it this way: "We are going to give them just as hot a time up there as they gave us in Virginia 50 years ago."

And this is what Ben Lee Crew, the color bearer, intends to do: "That big white banner with the gold fringe weighs 40 pounds, so I am going to boost Atlanta with 40 pounds of steam. Atlanta will be heard from."

Four members of the Old Guard have been selected as the orators for all occasions. They are Colonel J. F. Burke, Harrison Jones, J. R. Smith and W. S. Witham.

Only Four "Seventy-niners."

Mr. Witham, sometimes known as "Wall Street Witham, the Banking Trust," is also the poet and humorist of the Old Guard. He told his board of directors good-bye and went away, saying, "I'm the most important man in the whole Guard, for I am going to carry the big bass drum."

Only four "Seventy-niners"—those who made the trip 34 years ago—left on the present tour. They were Colonel J. F. Burke, C. P. Byrd, P. F Clarke and Chief W. B. Cummings.

The Old Guard members wore their resplendent full dress uniform, which was never on parade before. It consists of broadcloth, moleskin jackets, navy blue trousers with white and gold stripes, gold epaulets, Hungarian shakos and real swords. Every gold button bears the inscription, "Old Guard—Gate City Guard, 1855," and every sword has the engraving, "Old Guard, Georgia."

At the Terminal a crowd estimated at 1,500 gathered to cheer the Old Guard on their way. The Guard assembled on the plaza and posed for moving pictures. Then they told their friends good-bye, wiped the perspiration off their brows and at 11:30 started on the invasion of the East.

Washington Will Honor Old Guard.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 19.—Elaborate preparations for the reception of the members of the Old Guard Battalion of Gate City Guard, of Atlanta, have been made by Representative Howard, of Georgia. The members of the Guard arrive to-morrow morning and will stay until Wednesday morning.

The National Guard of the District of Columbia will furnish an escort for the visitors and will take them to the White House to meet the President.

In the afternoon the visitors will witness fancy drills by the Fort Myers troops. When it was learned that the Guard was coming to Washington, Major General Leonard Wood, chief-of-staff, at once gave orders that a special exhibition drill be given in its honor.

MRS. LONGSTREET PLEADS IN SENATE

Declares She Was Made Victim of Power Company and Political Spoilsmen.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, of Gainesville, Ga., who has been replaced as postmistress there by an appointee of President Wilson, appeared before the sub-committee of the Senate Postoffice and Postroads Committee today to protest against her removal from office.

She said that she was the victim of the Georgia Railway and Power Company, of Georgia, which she fought, and of Democratic political spoilsmen. She was appointed by President Roosevelt, whom she called "the first statesman of the land."

"It remained for President Wilson's 60-day Postmaster General to attack my record," said Mrs. Longstreet. "The people who have been familiar with my work for eight years are more competent to judge of my efficiency than he."

Mrs. Longstreet says she has no desire for office if the administration does not want her, but she will not submit quietly to the attempt to "blacken" her record. She presented many indorsements and declared that her office was "the best managed office on the Western Continent."

general belief that they were significant and that some new plan was being determined.

More Arrests Are Denied.

It was positively denied by the trio of officers, however, that any new arrests were to be made.

"I don't know who it would be," replied Chief Lanford when asked a direct question.

The first conference was held when Solicitor Dorsey summoned Chief Lanford to his office. The two were closeted for nearly an hour. Then Chief Lanford called Detective Scott to the police station. The Pinkerton man, when he arrived, declared he had no idea what the chief should want with him. He and the chief were behind closed doors for fully an hour or more.

"We have merely been looking over the evidence in a general way," said both officers when they emerged from the office.

Asked as to the nature of his conference with the Solicitor, Chief Lanford made the same reply.

"We were just going over the evidence," he said.

No Friction, Chief Asserts.

Chief Lanford also denied that there had been any friction among the officials over the work on the mystery, or that the conferences had any bearing along this line. As to a report that he had withheld evidence from the Solicitor, Chief Lanford said:

"I don't remember of having withheld any evidence. Mr. Dorsey didn't ask me anything about this report at all."

The Solicitor and the Pinkertons have held no conferences. Detective Scott makes reports to Chief Lanford and these are submitted to the Solicitor.

Detective Scott said Monday that he still has five men at work on the mystery, but refused to discuss any particular line on which they are working.

Colonel Thomas B. Felder announced Monday morning that he had received word from William J. Burns that he would arrive in America before June 1 and would probably be on the scene of the Phagan slaying before that date.

Colonel Felder said the great detective had taken an unusual interest in the Phagan mystery and he would not be surprised to hear from him in America any day soon.

"Burns is more interested in this case than I have known him to be in another," said Colonel Felder. "I am advised that he will hasten his return from Europe on this account and be in America some days before June 1. He will, of course, come direct to Atlanta.

"The meantime developments since his investigator has been here are more than satisfactory. The Burns detective convinced Mr. Dorsey Sunday afternoon that he had touched upon heretofore overlooked evidence of importance, and in his report today we expect valuable information."

Search Grows More Active.

With investigation into the mystery more active Monday than it has been at any time during the last two weeks, the Solicitor was hopeful that important developments would be made during the day.

The special representativa of the Burns agency was reported to have struck upon an important and heretofore overlooked clew that throws a new light on the case. He will make a definite report at 11 o'clock this morning at the office of the Solicitor, when it is not unlikely some announcement will be made.

Leo M. Frank, the factory superintendent, received a large number of visitors at his cell in the Tower Sunday. He would not discuss the case, or even comment on it. He said his health was fine and he had accustomed himself to the daily routine in prison.

The examination of the handwriting of the negro, James Connolly, held at the police station in connection with the murder of Mary Phagan, failed to connect him with writing the notes found near the slain girl's body in the basement of the pencil factory, according to City Detective John Black, Monday morning. The detective said that unless the negro could be connected with the crime in this way there was nothing against him.

5 HURLED FROM MOTOR CAR BY FAST TRAIN

Atlanta Party Has Remarkable Escape in Collision at East Lake Road Crossing.

Five prominent Atlantans had a remarkable escape from death a railroad crossing on the East Lake Road Sunday afternoon when a Georgia Railroad passenger train struck the big Winton Six automobile in which the party were riding and hurled them all out.

The autoists were J. H. Hirsch, of 345 Myrtle Street, owner and driver of the car; Mr. and Mrs. L. R. Carmichael and the 15-year-old son and 12-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Carmichael. All escaped without a scratch, except Mr. and Mrs. Carmichael, who were slightly bruised, but badly shocked.

Winter Alfriend and Hughes Roberts came up in a machine just after the accident happened. Mr. Alfriend took Mrs. Carmichael in his machine and rushed her to her home, 645 Edgewood Avenue, Inman Park.

The Hirsch car was badly damaged.

Hirsch Tells of Crash.

The accident occurred about 5:30 o'clock as the party were riding into town over the beautiful East Lake Road. Mr. Hirsch told the story of the accident to a Georgian reporter as follows:

"There is a little house and an embankment at the East Lake approach to the crossing and I could not see. I had slowed my machine down to a walking pace and listened for a train, but could hear none.

"Just as we came upon the track the iron monster was upon us. I do not know at what rate it thundered up, but it looked as big as all the trains I have ever seen combined into one.

"We were almost on the track. I shoved on my emergency and turned my car as much as I could in the direction the train was going.

No Time to Leap.

"That was all that saved us. Instead of absolutely demolishing us the train sideswiped us. We all tried to jump, but did not have time—we were hurled out.

"Except for the shock none of us were hurt to amount to anything."

Mr. Hirsch is a member of the firm of Hirsch & Spitz Manufacturing Company. Mr. Carmichael is the manager of the furniture department of M. Rich & Bros. Co.

LEPER COLONIES IN U. S. WELL CONDUCTED

America, However, Helps Million Victims in Orient Little, Asserts Woman Missionary.

Although there are several hundred lepers in the United States, they are well cared for and leprosy is not apt to spread, according to Miss Bertha G. Johnson, of Chicago, who, as field secretary of the mission to lepers in India and the Far East, addressed church workers Monday morning in the Central Congregational Church. The occasion was the annual meeting of the central committee of Presbyterian women for foreign missions, representing the six women's boards of foreign missions in connection with the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A.

"Out of several hundred lepers in the United States," declared Miss Johnson, "there are only two colonies officially designated as such. One of these is near New Orleans and the other in Massachusetts, at Penikese, both of which are well managed.

Small Fund Raised in U. S.

"There are perhaps 1,000,000 lepers in the world, chiefly found in the Oriental lands. They are, of course, very plentiful in India, where my work has taken me. Lepers receive little assistance from the other natives of India, since they are considered outcasts. Barely more than $15,000 was raised in the United States in 1912, but $35,000 is expected to be raised this year. Leprosy is both contagious and incurable, according to the latest in science, but clinical investigations give hope that a cure may be discovered."

Miss Margaret E. Hodge, president of the Philadelphia board, presided. Prominent among the speakers were Mrs. D. E. Wald, of New York, of the Woman's Board of Home Missions of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A.; Mrs. W. C. Winsborough, of Kansas City, of the Woman's Council of Missions of the Presbyterian Church U. S. A., and Mrs. H. C. Campbell, of Pittsburg, of the Women's General Missionary Society of the United Presbyterian Church of North America.

Welcomed by Mrs. Ottley.

Mrs. J. K. Ottley welcomed the missionaries to Atlanta; Mrs. Halsey L. Wood, of New York, reported for the central committee; Mrs. W. B. Jennings, of Philadelphia, introduced the missionaries, and Mrs. E. Boyd Weltzel, of Philadelphia; Mrs. H. R. Elliott, editor of Woman's Work, and Miss K. M. Birdsall, editor of Over Sea and Land, contributed to the program. Mrs. George S. Moffett and Miss Mabel Moore took charge of the delegates for the committee on arrangements.

At the conclusion of Miss Johnson's talk on lepers a collection was taken up to further this work.

On the program for Tuesday afternoon is a discussion of problems which the Christian church finds in China, as presented by the Rev. Frank W. Bible, of Hangchow, China, a talk on womanhood and its possibilities in Persia, by the Rev. Robert Labaree, of Urumia, Persia, and a general discussion by Mrs. C. H. Bandy, of Fatehgarh, India.

Banquet to McCormick Alumni Commissioners.

An enjoyable social feature in connection with the Presbyterian Assemblies will be the banquet at the Ponce DeLeon Baptist Church on Monday, beginning at 5:30 o'clock in the afternoon and continuing for two hours.

The Rev. George H. Atkinson, president of the Albemarle Normal and Industrial Institute, Albemarle, N. C., will be the host upon this occasion. He has extended to all members of the alumni of McCormick Theological Seminary, Chicago, of which seminary he also is a graduate, an invitation to be his guests.

The Rev. Mr. Atkinson desires it to be understood that all commissioners of the Presbyterian Assemblies who are McCormick alumni are cordially invited to be present at the banquet.

There will be a number of other specially invited guests present, the whole party to number more than 100

New Comet Pale; It Has No Tail

CAMBRIDGE, May 19. — The Schaumasse comet, the latest visitor from the inter-stellar regions, is rather disappointing to the ordinary star gazer, according to a report of observations received in the Harvard observatory. Prof. Barnard, of the Yerkes Observatory at Lake Geneva, Wis., has been unable to find any semblance of the usual fiery appendage, commonly known as a tail. The comet's illuminating powers have reached only the tenth magnitude.

Astronomers hope the comet's brilliancy will increase in the next few weeks.

RURAL CHURCHES FAILING, HE SAYS

Warren H. Wilson Stirs Assemblies by His Address at the Tabernacle.

Agitation among Presbyterians attending the three great Assemblies reached a high pitch Monday morning in discussions of the declaration Sunday by Warren H. Wilton that the church faced a serious crisis.

Mr. Wilson spoke before the Country Life mass meeting at the Baptist Tabernacle. His statistics, presented before the gathering to prove his assertions that lack of religious interest throughout the country was rapidly precipitating a general abandonment of churches, have brought the matter forcibly before the commissioners. From the results produced there is little doubt that prompt action will be taken in an effort to remedy the existing condition.

Discussions on the subject were heard everywhere among those at the morning sessions of the Assemblies. Committees probably will be appointed before the close of the week to confer with Mr. Wilson, whose activities throughout the rural church field have given him a wonderful insight into conditions there, and remedial steps will be taken.

At Sunday's meeting Mr. Wilson analyzed farm life from its religious aspect. While in some sections he ascribed church abandonment to proper causes, he declared in general that it was due to lack of evangelistic work. Evangelism, he averred, was what was needed, and he urged that a strenuous campaign along this line be inaugurated immediately.

"We are facing a very serious crisis in the country, and church people generally realize it," Mr. Wilson said. "That the Presbyterian Church should have more than 300 abandoned church houses is itself very serious. But more serious than this is the fact that every Sunday of the year there are 3,323 Presbyterian Churches closed.

"These churches are not abandoned, but on the Lord's day they are not opened. So irregular is the worship of God in these church houses that more than 3,000 of them, 50 per cent of all country churches, stand closed and silent when the Sabbath comes. Of another great denomination in the South 6,000 country churches are closed on each Sunday of the year, and of a third great communion 10,000 country churches when the Sabbath day comes do not open their doors. There is something wrong.

"Now, in this situation the remedy is of profound importance to all. I believe in evangelism, in increasing the number of members and in increasing the number of our churches in the country.

"Let us open the church also to every form of better farming. Let the minister be the agent, the secretary, the representative and the scholar of good farming."

New Moderator Tells His Plans

Dr. Stone to Dodge 'Itinerating'

Chicago Pastor Describes His $1,000,000 Religious 'Plant' and Social Service Ideals.

By REV. CHARLES STELZLE.

John Timothy Stone, moderator of the Northern Presbyterian General Assembly, will not spend the year "itinerating"—he will remain pretty close to his great church enterprise in Chicago. His touch upon the national life of the church will be through his leadership in the executive commission, which is the General Assembly's official active agency during the interim of the yearly meetings, and of which the moderator is chairman.

Dr. Stone also will retain a sympathetic relationship with the various boards of the church, advising with their officials in the matter of greater efficiency. If there's any time left beyond these tasks he will give it to some of the functions which are of a more social character. This, in brief, Dr. Stone told me to-day, is his program for the coming year.

It was in this connection that Dr. Stone spoke of the duties of a minister:

"The first duty of a minister is to his pulpit and the message which God gives him to deliver. His second duty is to his parish and to the people which make up the community in which his church is situated. His third duty is toward the city and all Christian and philanthropic influences which make for human betterment."

Thinks Work Is Scattered.

It is Dr. Stone's conviction that the influence of the church to-day is lessened by too much scattered effort—too much abstract discussion of theories and philosophies of what may be done, but which never lead to anything definite and constructive. The thing that has marked Dr. Stone's ministry has been his remarkable concentration upon certain definite tasks and then driving them through with all the force of a fine physical and mental endowment.

The great Men's Club of Fourth Church in Chicago, of which he is pastor, which has an enrollment of 900, bears testimony to this fact. But the significant reason of the moderator's success is his ability to make other men work. He believes in the philosophy of Dwight L. Moody, the greatest evangelist of this generation: "It is better to put ten men at work than to do ten men's work."

"The greatest obligation of a pastor is not, in my judgment, to win souls to Christ, but to train his members to be soul-winners," said Dr. Stone. And here we have one of the reasons why there are to-day hundreds of people on the "waiting list" of Fourth Church, eager to become members of the church.

"However," Dr. Stone quickly added, "every pastor who so seeks to train his members is constantly and always preaching a soul-winning gospel in his pulpit."

Noted Men Assist Him.

The group of men who are standing by Dr. Stone in his Chicago church are among the most prominent in American business life. Here are just a few of them: Cyrus McCormick, president of the International Harvester Company; E. H. Smith, president of the Oliver Typewriter Company; Richard R. Sears, of Sears, Roebuck & Co.; Alexander Revell, president of the Revell Furniture Company; Howard Elting, president of the Chicago Association of Commerce, which has 4,000 members; Frank J. Loesch, the Western attorney for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; Henry P. Crowell, president of the American Cereal Company, of Quaker Oats fame—but the list might be continued indefinitely.

These men are loyal to their minister in the great plans which have been maturing under Dr. Stone's direction during the past four years. When he was called to Chicago from his Baltimore church, Dr. Stone was frankly told by his friends that there was no field in this district in Chicago for the building up of a religious enterprise. But Dr. Stone has amply demonstrated the fallacy of this prediction. Fourth Church is crowded at every service. It is often impossible to secure a seat.

"What should be the attitude of the church toward the people—the poor?" I asked Dr. Stone, and this is about what he said:

Outlines Community Ideal.

"The church should care for all the people. It should minister to the needs of the entire community. Its services should be so arranged that, like those of the Roman Catholic Church, they suit the convenience of all grades of workers. The church building should be open all day, so that the poor workingwoman as well as her richer sister may come in to rest and pray.

"But the church itself should be used only for worship. In our new church building we shall put in the best organ that it is possible to build. It is to be given by Mrs. Emmons Blaine, who is greatly interested in social work in Chicago. She has given orders to Skinner, the famous organ builder of Boston, to spare no expense in building it. This organ will be dedicated for the purposes of worship.

"Our new plans, which will cover an entire city square, costing nearly $1,000,000, will be so arranged that we shall have buildings for every legitimate purpose in connection with church work, including gymnasiums, club rooms and the various other organizations. Facing Lake Shore Drive, the church itself will be of pure Gothic structure, seating 1,500 persons. The plan of the group of buildings will be much like that adopted by many English colleges. In the center will be an open fountain court, a cloister in front separating the buildings from the street. There will be a fine manse for the minister's family, but which will really be the 'people's house.'"

Building Fund Paid In.

"I am glad to say," said Dr. Stone, "that every dollar of the amount necessary to erect this magnificent series of buildings was paid in before we began to build. The chairman of the committee of eight having the entire matter of the construction of the buildings in charge is Thomas B. Jones, who was president of the University Club of Chicago and chairman of its building committee. The plant of the University Club is said to be the finest of its kind in America. Mr. Jones is the type of man who is giving his time to the work that we are doing in Chicago."

"It must not be imagined that our fine equipment is to be used only for the rich," said Dr. Stone. "The survey recently made of our parish—the Twenty-First Ward of Chicago—revealed the fact that we have every conceivable problem which confronts the average downtown city church. We shall make every attempt to get at this situation.

"Fourth Church field was once characteristically residential. It had within its area some of the finest residences and best families in Chicago. But the other night within a few blocks of the church a murder was committed in one of the worst saloons in the city.

Has Dance Hall Problem.

"It is said by the social workers who are familiar with the conditions that many of the worst dance halls are found in this district. These are visited every night by young people who live in the boarding houses and apartments near by. It is quite apparent that one of the most important groups to which Fourth Church has to minister is found among these young men and women. Rather unusual is the fact that while the population of the ward is growing minors are rapidly decreasing, while adults are increasing.

"In the two public schools found in this district the enrollment has decreased in the past ten years from 1,721 to 1,196. Indeed, out of a total population of 47,906 there are only 8,274 persons under 21 years of age. It is striking also that of this total population in the ward 26,831 are Americans, and the principal groups consist of Americans, Germans, Irish, Scandinavians and English.

"Ninety saloons are battling against five churches, and the saloons are among the most demoralizing in Chicago.

"Hidden away in the cheaper lodging houses and housekeeping apartments in this district are many persons who are trying to forget their past. Many of them are making an honest struggle toward better things. They need to be sought out and given encouragement and cheer. They have a strong prejudice against the church."

CHURCH IN INDIA NOW LED BY NATIVES

Country Is Undergoing Great Social and Political Awakening, Says Missionary.

The day when masterful, resourceful missionaries—men who are able to lead and who find their natural sphere in leadership—were needed in India is past, in the opinion of D. J. Fleming, of Lahore, in the Punjab district of India, one of the most noted of the foreign missionaries who are here attending the Presbyterian Assemblies.

"India is undergoing a great social and political awakening," Mr. Fleming said Monday, "and the Indian sees in Christianity his salvation both spiritually and in a political sense. The church of Christ is now organized in India, and the kind of missionaries we need are not the ones who want to lead and who have the power to lead, but men who are willing to step into the background and let the natives lead.

"The missionary who goes to India to-day should not lead the native so much as he should teach the native to lead himself. If there are committees to be formed, the missionary should not put himself in the foreground and take the chairmanship, but he should allow a native to be the head of the organization. If there is a moderatorship in the church to be filled, the missionary should not fill it; the post should be given to a native.

"The present unrest in India grew out of the embracing of Christianity and the organizing of the church. The English Government has been forced to give the people a certain voice in their government, and the government and the church are now working hand in hand for the betterment of the Indians.

"A full-blooded Hindu, Rev. Mr. Azariah, was recently ordained a bishop in the Church of England. Within the past ten years the church of Christ has increased in membership 30 per cent, just six times as fast as Hinduism and Mohammedanism. One out of every four native Christians can read, one out of every 20 Hindus and one out of every 27 Mohammedans."

Mr. Fleming is a member of the faculty of Foreman Christian College, at Lahore, which has about 500 native students.

MODERATOR HITS AT NEW THEOLOGY

Stone Has No Patience With Doctrines That Detract From the Divinity of Christ.

A mammoth crowd heard the sermon of Dr. John T. Stone, Moderator of the Northern Presbyterian Assembly, Sunday afternoon in the Harris Street Church. When the main auditorium was filled, the class rooms adjoining were thrown open and quickly crowded.

Dr. Stone emphasized the supernatural characteristics of Christ and displayed plainly the fact that he was not in sympathy with any doctrinal movement which would detract from the divine attributes of the Saviour.

Speaking of the proposed merger of two of the Assemblies, Dr. Stone said: "Christ will attend to that in due time and to His glory."

Dr. George H. Mack, of Nashville, Tenn., one of the founders of the church and its first pastor, offered the first prayer.

Dr. J. S. Lyons, of Louisville, Moderator of the Southern Assembly, prophesied in his sermon in the North Avenue Presbyterian Church that this denomination whose three Assemblies are meeting in Atlanta will some day become the most powerful religious influence in the world. "I don't believe that the great Presbyterian Church is going to be false to God in a day like this," he said. "God is going to make all of us fall in line for the kingdom of Christ."

The Moderator said that there is a growing disposition about the country to dedicate money and influence to the church.

SMALL ARMY OF OFFICERS TAKE 7 OZARK DISTILLERS

ALTON, MO., May 19.—The biggest round-up of moonshiners made in Southern Missouri in fifteen years was completed yesterday by a party of eleven Federal officers, six deputy United States marshals and five revenue agents, who captured seven "hillbillies" distillers in central Oregon County, in the very midst of the Ozarks.

WHEN YOUR LIVER GOES WRONG

Nearly Everybody Needs a Liver Stimulant at One Time or Another.

Nearly everybody now and then is annoyed with a sluggish, lazy liver or by constipation or by biliousness.

It is for this reason that Dodson's Liver Tone is such a good medicine to keep always in the house.

Either children or grown-ups can take Dodson's Liver Tone without bad after-effects and without restriction of habit or diet. It is a vegetable liquid with a pleasant taste, but a reliever of constipation and liver troubles, and entirely takes the place of calomel. All druggists guarantee every bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone they sell. It costs 50 cents per bottle, and if you are not satisfied that it is worth the money, they will hand your half-dollar back to you with a smile.

Don't be fooled by preparations imitating the claims of Dodson's Liver Tone. Just remember any dealer will give you back your money if Dodson's Liver Tone fails you. That is a guarantee that guarantees.

'WHITE SLAVERS' ORGANIZED IN NEW YORK

Rockefeller Vice Report Shows Trade in Women Is Established on Commercial Basis.

NEW YORK, May 19.—White slavery in the city of New York is established upon a commercial basis, and those engaged are thoroughly organized, according to the report of George Kneeland, of the Bureau of Social Hygiene, of which John D. Rockefeller, Jr., is chairman, made public to-day.

Investigators found that an immoral life was not often the alternative of starvation. They did learn, however, that the great preponderance of fallen women came from the ranks of those engaged in unskilled occupations. Hundreds of immoral resorts were investigated and hundreds of proprietors and inmates interviewed. It is the conservative estimate of Mr. Kneeland that there are not less than 15,000 fallen women in New York City.

More Found in Streets.

The tabulation showed that 6,759 were found in the streets and 8,167 in immoral resorts, tenements, massage parlors, hotels, saloons, concert halls, etc. The report estimates that fully 90 per cent are diseased.

Men who procure girls, act as "light-houses," own resorts, rent their property for immoral purposes and "drum up trade" are described. Men seem to be the real owners of most of the evil resorts, and one, described as the "king," owns eleven houses of ill fame.

In making investigations, Mr. Kneeland, with a trained body of social investigators and detectives, also probed into the underworlds of Chicago, Philadelphia and Syracuse. Subsequent reports will deal with these cities and with other parts of New York City. The report made public to-day deals only with Manhattan.

Others Also Banded Together.

From the report by Mr. Kneeland it is evident that not only those actually engaged in vice as a business are banded together, but that the proprietors of establishments such as saloons, concert halls, a certain class of cabaret shows, dance halls, burlesque theaters, amusement parks and excursion boats make an open business of catering to vice. Vice and alcohol are even more firmly allied.

During the investigation, from January 24, 1912, to November 15, 1912, 142 parlor houses were found and investigated and 1,172 resorts found in 575 different tenement houses. Furnished room houses used as houses of assignation are branded as particularly dangerous. There are 300 massage parlors in New York, the report says, many of which are believed to be for immoral purposes. Of 765 rear rooms of saloons investigated, 380 were found to be regular gathering places of slaves and victims.

Public Dance Halls Scored.

The public dance hall was found to justify the worst that has been said of it. Of 75 dances reported on between January 24 and June 24 only five were characterized by the investigators as "decent."

These dances are attended by many innocent working girls, who seek legitimate recreation, and the hired cadet, usually well-dressed and well-mannered. These 'powers that prey' are a constant danger in public dance halls and find there an easy quarry.

Speaking of resorts where those in the "trade" discuss their affairs, the author gives an astounding description of a delicatessen store, used for that purpose, located in one of the poorer sections of the city.

The final chapter of the report is contributed by Miss Kathrine Bement Davis, superintendent of the New York State Reformatory for Women, at Bedford Hills, and contains a detailed study of the 647 inmates.

Husband Handcuffs And Jails His Rival

YONKERS, N. Y., May 19.—When Daniel Lawson found Daniel Scoll paying attentions to Mrs. Lawson, he snapped a pair of handcuffs around Scoll's wrists and marched him to the police station.

While he had the satisfaction of seeing his rival thrust into a cell, he also was arrested charged with carrying concealed weapons. He was bailed out promptly.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

NEW POLICY AT THE BIJOU.

Beginning with the matinee this afternoon, a new policy will be inaugurated at the Bijou Theater. This week and hereafter tabloid musical comedy, interspersed with vaudeville, will be the bill. The offering this week is "A Trip to Joyville." There will be no change in the Bijou prices which have prevailed all season.

KEITH VAUDEVILLE AT FORSYTH.

Variety is the keynote of this week's bill of Keith vaudeville at the Forsyth Theater. The headline act is Ed Gillette's monkeys, "Adam" and "Eve," billed as the smartest simians alive. Gallagher and Fields will present "The Battle of Bay Rum," said to be really amusing, and another featured act is that of the Dunedin troupe of cyclists. There are three pretty girls in this number. Other acts are Josephine Dunfee, vocalist; Bradshaw brothers, gymnasts; John Geiser, violinist, and Nevin and Erwood in a comedy skit. This bill will be presented for the first time at a matinee this afternoon.

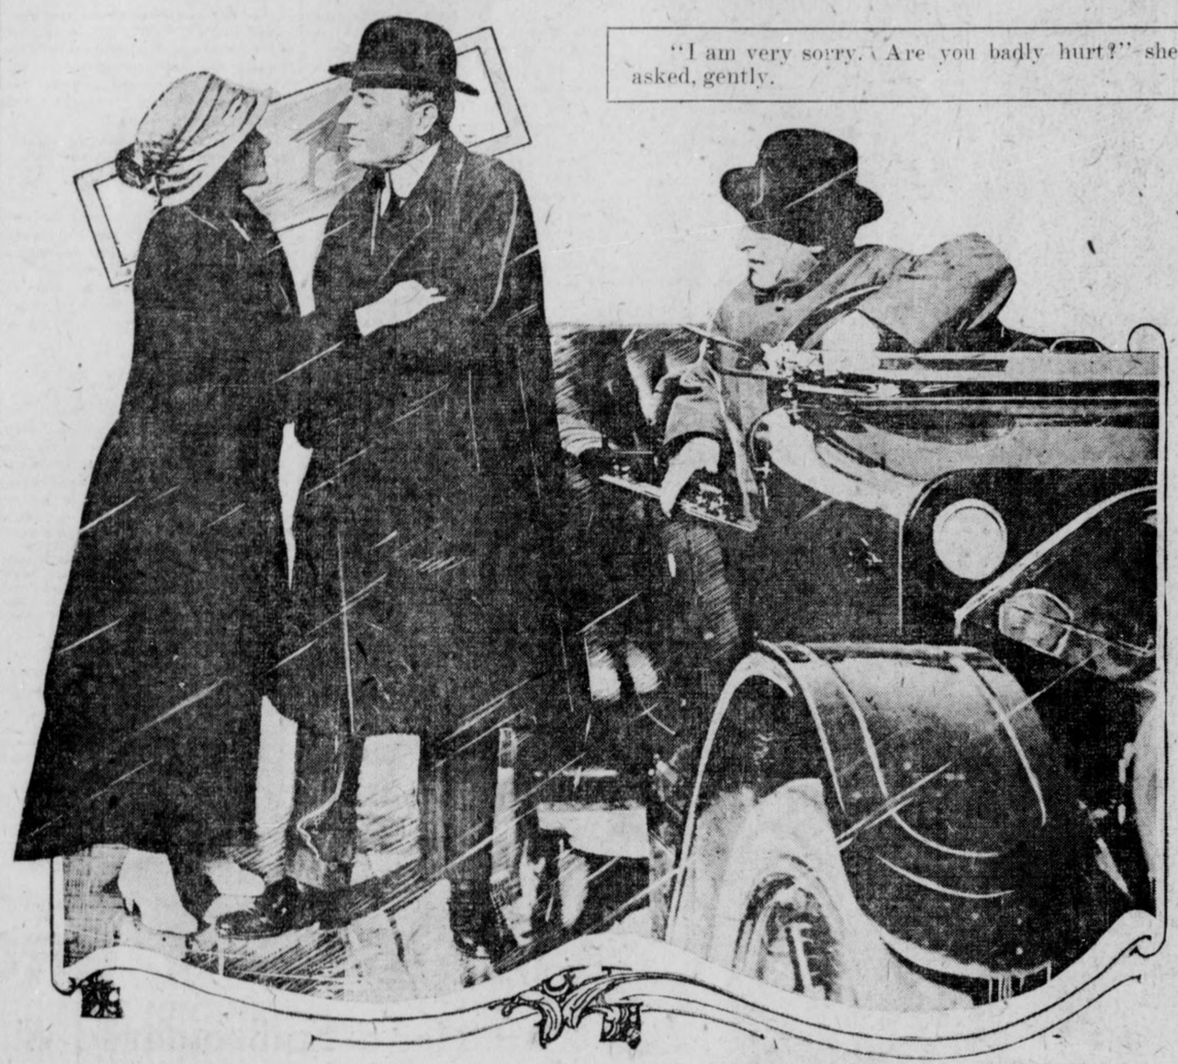
"THE DEEP PURPLE" AT THE ATLANTA.

"The Deep Purple," Paul Armstrong and Wilson Mizner's play of the "underworld," will be presented for the first time in Atlanta by Miss Billy Long and her capable company at a matinee at the Atlanta Theater this afternoon. The play was a tremendous hit in the north. It is strong in plot and deals with a condition of affairs but hazily understood by the average person. The characters are all drawn true to life, and Miss Long and her associate players should appear to advantage, as the play gives opportunity for excellent acting. There will be no performance of "The Deep Purple" Wednesday night.

THE TRIPLE TIE

The 'Man of Mystery' Makes Everything Clear in This Great Story

A STORY FOR BASEBALL FANS THAT WILL INTEREST EVERY LOVER OF THE NATIONAL GAME



"I am very sorry. Are you badly hurt?" she asked, gently.

By A. H. C. MITCHELL.

CHAPTER I.

IT was 10 o'clock in the morning of March 1. Low, dark clouds, driven from east to west by a brisk wind, raced over Ponce DeLeon Park. Before the street car came to a full stop in front of the Atlanta baseball grounds a young man jumped off the step and walked swiftly toward the park. Within three seconds these things happened:

First—Without the slightest warning, without even a few preliminary spatters, rain poured down in sweeping, blinding torrents, as though millions of buckets of water on high were emptied at the same instant.

Second—A terrifying scream from the throat of a woman burst in the ears of the young man. It was instantly followed by a hoarse "Get out of the way," written here in five words, but yelled at the time in one quick command.

The young man shot a startled glance over his shoulder and then, with incredible swiftness, sprang forward. As he did so a high-powered, underslung automobile rushed past him. One inch farther and he would have been clear of the car, but the front wheel of it struck his flying heel and he was flung sprawling on the rain-soaked pavement. There was another scream. The car raced on.

For a brief period the young man lay as if stunned. Then he arose and looked to see what hit him. The car was rushing up the hill on high speed and by this time was nearly a furlong away, hardly discernible through the heavy sheets of rain. But as the young man looked the car slowed down and came to a stop close to the sidewalk. Two persons were in the car. One of them started to get out of it, but paused and then sat down again. The car took motion, turned and coasted back to the point in front of the ball park where the young man still stood motionless.

The Girl Interferes.

The driver gave the emergency brake a vicious jerk and glared at the young man. His heavy features were flushed and he scowled at the bedraggled figure in the road as he spoke.

"Why don't you look where you're going, you boob?" he snarled. "You're not up among the pine needles now, you understand. You ought to have a colored mammy with you when——"

His companion in the car, a young woman, reached up a hand and smothered further words.

"I'm sorry I didn't come back alone," she said to the driver in a low tone.

The young man in the road strode to the side of the car and, looking the driver full in the eye, said, very quietly:

"I want to say to you, sir, that I don't know much about automobiles, but if this young lady wasn't here I'd yank you out in the street and mop up some of this rain with you. Civil talk is what I want from you or none at all."

The driver made a threatening gesture and started to speak, but again the restraining hand was placed on him and he contented himself with glaring savagely at the young man in the road. The young woman arose and stepped on the running board. The driver caught her by the arm.

"Don't be foolish, Mildred," he growled. "Sit down and we'll get away from here. You are drenched to the skin. I must take you home in a hurry."

"Wait a minute, Forrest, please. I can stand a little rain," the young woman replied. She shook off the detaining hand and, jumping to the ground, walked around the front of the car, stopping close to the young man in the road.

"We are very sorry. I am very sorry. Are you badly hurt?" she asked gently.

The young man, who had not taken his eyes off the driver of the car, turned his head and looked into the glowing brown eyes of the young woman and a slight flush stole over his features. His gaze was long and earnest, as though he had never seen such eyes before in all his life. Finally his mouth broke into a smile, disclosing two rows of strong, even, dazzling white teeth. The corners of his eyes wrinkled, giving his features an expression that showed beyond question that he was blessed with the saving sense of humor. The young woman smiled, too, and when she did so the young man found his tongue.

"I guess I was just scared," he said. "I'm not hurt in my body as near as I can make out, but my feelings were injured when your friend spoke to me the way he did. Maybe it was my fault; I guess it was. I ought to have kept my eyes open. It was your scream that saved me. I'm much obliged to you."

The young woman held out her hand.

"I'm right glad you are not hurt," she said.

The young man took the hand and held it. The rain beat down upon them in torrents, but neither seemed to mind it. The ride in the automobile had loosened the hair of the young woman, but the overpowering rain had soaked through her small hat and the driving spray had plastered the loose strands to the side of her face and neck. As she stood there she looked as though she had just been dragged from a river. Yet in spite of everything it was easy to see that she was a handsome woman. She—but this is not the time or the place to describe her. The conditions are unfavorable. Wait. She plays a not unimportant part in this narrative and there will be plenty of opportunity later on to tell all about her.

Stood Holding Hands.

And what of the young man that held her hand out in the roadway in that driving rainstorm? Well, he is the central figure in the story. Strange events are involved in his career. But please be patient. This is not a magazine editor's preliminary announcement. It is the story of a great baseball mystery. Let us to it in regular order.

The two young persons stood in the roadway holding hands ten minutes, one would imagine from this reading of it, but only ten seconds in reality.

Ten seconds make a long time under certain conditions. The young woman doubtless thought so, for at last she smiled again, gave the hand that held hers a healthy pumplike shake and broke the clasp.

"Good-bye," she said, and stepped quickly into the automobile, the motor of which had been softly purring all the while. The driver eased in the clutch, the car gathered headway, and as it turned in the road, the driver leaned out and said with a harsh laugh:

"Get some of that cotton seed out of your hair, young fellow, and you better go in out of the wet now."

The car sped up the hill. The young man watched it without stirring until it had disappeared in the distance. But he had noted the number of the car. It was "50000 Ga."

The rain ceased as suddenly as it began.

Walking to the entrance of the ball park, the young man tried several doors and gates without being able to gain admittance. At last he found a door that opened to his touch and, seeing smoke issuing from the chimney of a little house within the inclosure, he went to the door, knocked, and, after a moment's pause, entered.

Poll Shows Overwhelming Sentiment Against Naturalization

WASHINGTON, May 19.—If Japan is hoping to make a new treaty granting her natives citizenship in the United States, she is hoping in vain.

The New York American has taken a poll of the Senate, which has the sole power to confirm all treaties, and found the members all but unanimously opposed to such a proposition.

Senators Bacon and Hoke Smith, of Georgia, are against it.

Of all who gave their views, only one, Cummins, of Iowa, said he would give the Japanese the right they appear to demand, and then only to those now in the United States.

The Senator's views follow:

Smith, Democrat, Arizona—No.

Robinson, Democrat, Arkansas—I am opposed to it.

Works, Democrat, California—I am against it.

Thomas, Democrat, Colorado—Of course, I am against it.

Brandegee, Republican, Connecticut—Never.

McLean, Republican, Connecticut—I am thoroughly in sympathy with California in the Japanese controversy.

Bacon, Democrat, Georgia—My views on the question are well known.

Smith, Democrat, Georgia — The Japs should never be admitted to citizenship with us.

Lewis, Democrat, Illinois—I have never yet seen any proposition in behalf of Japanese citizenship that I could approve.

Sherman, Republican, Illinois—I am opposed to it.

Kern, Democrat, Indiana—Of course I am against it.

Cummins, Republican, Iowa—Let those already in be admitted to citizenship, but I am opposed to unrestricted Japanese immigration.

Thompson, Democrat, Kansas—I am opposed to it.

James, Democrat, Kentucky—Never should the Japs be admitted to citizenship.

Townsend, Republican, Michigan—I am opposed to it.

Nelson, Republican, Minnesota—The Japs have no right to be admitted to American citizenship.

Vardaman, Democrat, Mississippi—I would give citizenship only to caucasians.

Walsh, Democrat, Montana—I am opposed to it.

Norris, Republican, Nebraska—So am I opposed to it.

Newlands, Democrat, Nevada—I am against it.

Hollis, Democrat, New Hampshire—Never.

Catron, Republican, New Mexico—I am opposed to it.

Overman, Democrat, North Carolina—I am unutterably opposed to it.

Burton, Republican, Ohio—The Japs have no claim to American citizenship.

Tillman, Democrat, South Carolina—I am opposed to it now and forever.

Shields, Democrat, Tennessee—I am absolutely opposed to it.

Sheppard, Democrat, Texas—If my own State will not admit Japs to citizenship, then I am bitterly opposed to it.

Smoot, Republican, Utah—You bet I am opposed to it.

Swanson, Democrat, Virginia—I am absolutely opposed to it.

Poindexter, Republican, Washington—I am not in favor of admitting the Japs to citizenship.

Chilton, Democrat, West Virginia—I am also opposed to it.

Root, Republican, New York—I am opposed to it.

Ashurst, Democrat, Arizona—I am unalterably opposed to it.

Borah, Republican, Idaho—Of course not.

Bristow, Republican, Kansas—I would never think of such a thing.

Chamberlain, Democrat, Oregon—Such a proposition would not be seriously considered by any one on the Pacific Coast, at least.

Fall, Republican, New Mexico—I am not in favor of such a proposition.

Jones, Republican, Washington—I should not favor citizenship for the Japs.

Perkins, Republican, California—Of course I should not agree to such a thing.

J. WYLIE SMITH'S OWN STORY

Tells a Tale of Many Thrilling Adventures

He Fought Two Years for His Freedom

Wylie Smith as he is to-day, a mere phantom of his former self.

The following article was written by J. Wylie Smith, the refugee president of the defunct Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who, after evading extradition during two years of service in the insurrecto army of General Orozco, in Mexico, returned to Atlanta to stand trial because he is dying with tuberculosis—a phantom of his former self.

By J. WYLIE SMITH.

I have decided to tell my story exclusively through The Georgian—and what a story it is!

It is brimful of intrigue and treachery, battle and blood, and the horror of slow, certain death. As I lie on my cot in the hospital quarter of the Tower it seems too hellish for a human being to have endured such experience on earth. I would that I could close my lips in silence and pass into forgetfulness.

Then I think of the days when I was strong in heart and hand. None of the old knights enjoyed such adventures. About it all there was a tinge of romance. A woman, who was fair to look upon reached out a helping hand and saved me once. A faithful dog kept me from being cut into ribbons. I have known friendship that would have warmed the heart of the most fiendish devil. I have felt the inspiring triumph over unscrupulous foes.

But now I am penniless and dying. My wife, the little woman whom I love so dearly and who has stood by me so loyally, is working in San Antonio as a cook to support herself and my little six-year-old girl. I saw the child as I came through; the mother was too ill to come to the train.

God, how I would love to go and live with them. But I'll never live to pay the penalty for my offense. Death before me is too certain. The terror of it all is their struggle to survive their awful poverty. But to my story.

I'll begin with the day I realized my business was doomed to collapse and I left Atlanta. I will tell all my experiences—experiences that were thrilling but ended in a horror such as only Edgar Allen Poe could picture.

I left Atlanta at 2 o'clock on the afternoon of June 14, 1911, with an amount of money that was a mere bagatelle—some folks believed and still believe that I have had a large amount of cash hid away somewhere, and it has caused me trouble more than once—I was obliged to depend on friends to get from place to place.

I spent the first night at LaGrange, stopped at Talladega, Ala., Meridian, Jackson, Clarkesville and Lula, Miss. In Helena, Ark., I wrote to my brother, Berry Smith, and decided to wait for an answer. I had not stopped long enough for a newspaper to catch me and I did not know what the situation in Atlanta was. My brother's letter enlightened me as to the anger of my former associates and I hit the trail again.

At Tucumori, New Mexico, I wrote and waited for another letter from home. I learned they were after me and I wasted no time getting across the border.

I Reach Mexico.

On July 4 I arrived in Chihuahua, a city of some 35,000 people in the State of Chihuahua. This event and another on the same day the following year have made July 4 a more important day to me than the anniversary of American independence. It was the beginning of freedom then and the next year, not only for me, but through me for others.

I had no money and at first I strolled the streets bewildered and despondent. Then I spied a hotel, the Robertson House. I have always been able to talk, no matter how dilapidated or downcast I was. So I brushed into the hotel with as confident an air as I could assume.

A dark, keen-eyed youth was leaning over the desk. Well, before I went to bed that night I was calling him "Honolulu George." He took me into his room and fed me at his table. Then I began to look for work.

Promised a job in a lumber yard I found a boarding house—run by a Mexican senora. While waiting for that job "Honolulu George" lost his. I persuaded the kindly old woman to let him live with me.

Mexicans are the most hospitable people in the world as long as you treat them square. But they want what you owe them. When I failed to get a place with the lumber company and George's funds gave out, our trouble began.

George told the woman he had written his father, a wealthy man in Honolulu, Hawaii, to send him money and that the "good ship" would soon arrive.

We had met a man by the name of A. A. Franke and he found out about the money we were expecting.

Oh, that little misstep has impressed me how important little things in life are.

Unless you have a box at the postoffice in Mexico, notice that there is mail for you is posted on a bulletin. If your name appears on that list you call on the postmaster and he gives you what is for you. It developed later that as soon as Franke learned of our plans he began watching that list, and he was rewarded for his efforts, but not by money, at first.

The letter he got was for me, telling of my affairs in Atlanta.

Wise as to my past, Franke came to me and told me I was about to be arrested by a bunch of crooks for a $600 reward that was offered. He said it would take $1,000 to protect me and he even wrote to my people here about it, posing that he was shielding me.

It came to an issue in my room one night. I told him he was a crook, and grabbing an iron bar, rushed at him. He fled but did not drop his persecution.

Soon afterwards I was arrested by the jefe, the chief of police, on orders of Ambassador Wilson. Franke had written him. Failing to get the $1,000 he was scheming to get the $600 reward.

I submitted and probably would have been back in Atlanta within a few weeks had not Franke acted such a crook. He came to me in jail and posed as my friend, but he was so zealous before the American consul to get the reward that the consul's suspicions were aroused.

The consul called on me and I tell you I was glad when I discovered he was a Georgian, Marion Letcher, from Conyers. He gave me money and said he wanted to help me in any way he could.

A complication arose when my landlady demanded her board money. I owed her $75 "Mex.—$37.50 in American money—and they can imprison you for debt in Mexico. I was already in jail, but "Honolulu George"—God bless him—advised that if I refused to pay and was held on a charge of debt they could not send me into the States. But I wanted to pay that woman—despite the fact that I owe her yet.

George had got a job at $5 a week. Anticipating his check from home he told the woman he would pay her within ten days.

That promise caused George's flight, for Franke got his money as he had got my letter. Ponce, the old woman, put the jefe after him. A year later, when I returned to Chihuahua in triumph I looked for him everywhere but could not find him.

Franke Calls Again.

I was feeling very bitter over this when Franke called to see me at the prison and advised that I should not resist extradition. I boiled all over and tried to get hold of him. But he was too sly. He slipped out of the jail like an eel, wriggling from my grasp. And that was the last I ever saw of him.

I learned later that General Orozco had had his partner shot as a thief. General Orozco told me the last time I saw him that if he ever laid hands on Franke he would have him shot.

If Franke and I ever meet again one thing is sure—one of us will die.

Somehow I made friends easily with the Mexicans. Therefore I was more angry with the men who proved treacherous. I did not go there to join a revolution but to live peacefully, hoping to soon bring my wife and child to me. When Franke and others wrecked my plans I was exasperated. The local paper came out with a front page story that I had offered the jefe $800 in gold to free me. I was facing an indefinite term amid what I thought to be the most terrible of all horrors—a Mexican prison.

That belief brought me the most pleasing surprise of my life. Mexico would do well to model after our court system but America could learn much from Mexican prisons.

The State prison of Chihuahua is a fifteen-acre tract about a mile from town surrounded by a 20-adobe, concrete wall. This wall is twelve feet thick at the bottom and six feet thick at the top, with a guard station at each of the four corners. A company of militia is always in charge of it, patrolling the walls at regular intervals.

In the center are eight buildings standing in a semicircle and in front of these is a two-acre playground. The prisoners are paid if they will work at the rate of 25 cents a day Mex. If they don't want to work they are encouraged to take exercise on the playground.

There is a commissary owned by the prisoners, the stock of which was worth $3.75 when I was there. The penitentiary is the manufacturing center of the town, furnishing the residents their bread, doing their blacksmithing, carpenter work and everything else almost. That warden is a keen grafter and he is getting rich.

Philip Baber, a rather prominent man, discovered that I was a Mason. He came over to see me and after that all went well.

10,000 Workers Are Out at Philadelphia

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—Over 10,000 union workers, men and women, employed in various industries in this city, are on strike to-day for increased wages, reduction in hours of labor and the recognition of the unions of longshoremen, stone masons, sugar refiners, teamsters and textile workers.

There are over 3,000 longshoremen on strike and the shipping industry virtually is tied up.

Waters of Pacific Are Let Into Canal

PANAMA, May 19.—Water from the Pacific Ocean to-day filled a large section of the Panama Canal. It was let into the canal by the explosion of 32,750 pounds of dynamite that had been loaded into the dike south of Miraflores locks.

Thousands of Americans witnessed the destruction of the dike.

TALLULAH FIGHT NOT ABANDONED

Mrs. Longstreet Declares She Will Continue Her Efforts to Save Falls.

Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet Monday sent The Georgian the following telegram from Washington:

The report printed that I had abandoned the fight to save Tallulah Falls is not true.

The struggle to save Tallulah Falls does not end with driving me from the Gainesville postoffice. It does not end with the dummy lawsuit which is being pulled off in Rabun County, at a special term trial four months ahead of time and before the lawyers employed by me, under the direction of the men of Georgia who make laws for Georgia, could have the case ready for trial.

The struggle to rescue Tallulah is just in its beginning, and if God lets me live that struggle will never end until the vandals and pirates who are to-day criminal trespassers on the red old hills of the land of my best affection have pitched their tents in some other quarter of the the world. It is true that they have been successful in exiling me from the land of my fathers. But the St. Helena to which I am banished will not be so far away that I can not be recalled. Recalled I shall be. If not sooner, then at last, at last, the red old hills of the land on whose bosom I was cradled shall open to receive me, and within sound of Tallulah's endless anthems I shall find sleep.

WON $100,000 IN DAY ON RACES, BUT DIES IN WANT

NEW YORK, May 19.—Ed Gaines, a former bookmaker and soldier of fortune, who operated on both sides of the Atlantic, is dead, practically penniless. Gaines, so the story goes, once cleaned up $100,000 laying against the big bettors on the lawn at Gravesend one day many years ago.

AMERICANS FLEE MEXICAN CAPITAL

Transportation Provided for All Who Wish to Leave—Anti-American Feeling Grows.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

MEXICO CITY, May 19.—A number of Americans to-day left Mexico City through the instrumentality of Dr. William H. Lilley, who had the following advertisement printed in the Herald Saturday:

All Americans wishing free transportation home should send their names and addresses to Dr. William H. Lilley, Isabel La Catolica 69.

Dr. Lilley is the man who led the Tepic relief expedition last year when the lives of a number of foreigners were menaced there by rebels.

Anti-American sentiment, owing to President Wilson's refusal to recognize Mexico, is becoming more bitter every day.

Rebels Closing In On Port of Tampico.

MEXICO CITY, Mty 19.—A heavy force of rebels is closing in on the port of Tampico. The insurgents already control all the land approaches to the port, thus cutting off the oil supply of the railroads. Railroad traffic throughout all the Northern part of Mexico is netrly at a standstill.

The Government denied to-day that it had entered into a compact with Japan with reference to landing Japanese troops on Mexican soil in the event of a break between the United States tnd Japan.

UNION TO PHOTOGRAPH MEMBERS IN OPEN SHOP

CHICAGO, May 19.—Every union man who enters the plant of Lyon & Healy, piano manufacturers, and works alongside the non-union men employed there will be photographed and his picture will be hung in every union hall in Chicago. This action was determined on by the officials of the Piano and Harp Makers' Union.

Death Threats Made In Paterson Strike

PATERSON, N. J., May 19.—Death threats are being made by striking silk mill operatives against the owners of factories unless all work ceases.

Savage rioting broke out at the silk mills following an order to the police to arrest members of a mob which was making a hostile demonstration against the resumption of work there. Another riot, led by women, broke out in Main Street, where a woman was so badly injured that she had to be taken to the hospital.

William Haywood, Miss Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, Carlo Tresca and other members of the Industrial Workers of the World, who are leading the strike, warned the mill owners not to try to operate with strikebreakers, declaring that it would bring on fresh violence.

A Physician's Faith in Eckman's Alterative

"Have used Eckman's Alterative in several cases of tubercular glands of the neck, with excellent results every time. In one case it cost me $50, for the girl was put on it until she could arrange to be operated on, and in a short time an operation was not needed. I suppose your records are just as fine as of old. You know my faith in it."

(Original of this physician's letter on file.)

Eckman's Alterative is effective in other forms. Read what Mrs. Garvin says:

Idaho Falls, Idaho.

"Gentlemen: I have gained twenty-two pounds since last February and my baby is in perfect health. I have been waiting since she was born to see how I would get along. I am now doing all my work, have been ever since she was four weeks old, and I am steadily gaining. I do not cough or raise anything at all, so I think I am completely cured of Lung Trouble."

(Affidavit) MRS. M. H. GARVIN.

Note—Mrs. Garvin has seven children.

Eckman's Alterative has been proven by many years' test to be most efficacious in cases of severe Throat and Lung Affections, Bronchitis, Bronchial Asthma, Stubborn Colds and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain narcotics, poisons or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all of Jacobs' drug stores and other leading druggists. Write the Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for booklet telling of recoveries and additional evidence.

SLEEP DISTURBING BLADDER WEAKNESS BACKACHE-RHEUMATISM, QUICKLY VANISH

Even Most Chronic Sufferers Find Relief After A Few Doses Are Taken.

Backache, urinary disorders and rheumatism are caused from weak, inactive kidneys, which fail to filter out the impurities and keep the blood pure, and the only way on earth to permanently and positively cure such troubles is to remove the cause.

The new discovery, Croxone, soon relieves such conditions because it reaches the very roots of the disease. It soaks right into the stopped up, inactive kidneys, through the walls and linings; cleans out the little filtering cells and glands; neutralizes and dissolves the poisonous uric acid substances that lodge in the joints and muscles to scratch and irritate and cause rheumatism; heals the inflamed membranes of the bladder, and cleans out and strengthens the stopped up, lifeless kidneys so they filter and sift all the poisons from the blood, and drive it out of the system.

So sure, so positive, so quick and lasting are the results obtained from the use of Croxone, that three doses a day for a few days are often all that is required to cure the worst backache, regulate the most annoying bladder disorders, and overcome the numerous other similar conditions.

It is the most wonderful preparation ever made for the purpose. It is so prepared that it is practically impossible to take it into the human system without results.

An original package of Croxone costs but a trifle, and all druggists are authorized to return the purchase price if Croxone fails to give desired results, regardless of how old you are, how long you have suffered, or what else has failed to cure you.

NAVY IMPERILED BY BLUNDERERS, CHARGES SEN. ASHURST

Asks Senate to Probe Contracts With Armor Plate Trust Which Mulcted U. S. of Millions.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Sensational charges of a maladministration of naval funds that has cost the Government over $6,000,000 and endangered the impregnability of the most formidable vessels in the American fleet were made against the Taft administration to-day by Senator Ashurst, of Arizona, who has a resolution before the Senate calling for an investigation of Class A armor plate contracts awarded the armor plate trust for the dreadnought Pennsylvania.

"My investigation of this matter," said the Senator, "has convinced me that a most deplorable state of affairs existed with regard to the purchase of armor plate during the last administration. As I have heretofore stated in the case of the dreadnought Pennsylvania, approximately 8,000 tons of Class A plate was let to the trust at $454 per ton. I have an expert who is willing to testify that a good profit could be made on such plate at a price of $254 per ton.

"The difference in these prices netted the trust $1,600,000.

Millions in Swollen Profits.

"I wish to add to that statement that if those figures be found to be correct, Class A armor plate contracts on the dreadnoughts Arkansas, Nevada, Texas and Florida, which were let to the trust at $420 per ton, netted that organization a swollen profit of $4,571,872 on 24,542 tons of this commodity. None of this material, I am credibly informed, was passed upon by a Government expert, for the very simple reason that there was no man in the employ of this country capable of this important duty.

"I am not a jingoist or a large navy man," continued the Senator, "but I do want the United States to get a square deal, and I intend to see this matter through to the finish."

The Senator said that for years the Midvale Steel Company, the Carnegie Steel Company and the Bethlehem Steel Company, comprising an absolute monopoly in the manufacture of armor plate, had maintained a lobby in Washington and that they had conspired to mulct the Government of millions of dollars.

In this connection, the Senator called attention to the investigation started in the House some years ago by John Sharp Williams, which resulted in the finding of a defective plate, and in the fining of the Carnegie Steel Company. This and other armor plate, said the Senator, had been furnished the Government at a profit of approximately 50 per cent.

Senator Ashurst declared that not only would he push his resolution for the investigation of the contracts of Class A armor plate for the dreadnought Pennsylvania, but that he would endeavor to enlist his colleagues in a campaign to break up the armor plate trust and substitute Government manufacture of this commodity.

At the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy Department it was ascertained that approximately 8,000 tons of Class A armor plate had been let to the trust at $454 per ton for the dreadnought Pennsylvania, and 27,542 of Class A plate had been let to the same organization for the building of the dreadnoughts Arkansas, Nevada, Texas and Florida.

COURT TO HEAR STORY OF FEUDIST'S ASSASSINATION

LEXINGTON, KY., May 19.—The story of the assassination of Ed Callahan, the last of the famous Breathitt County feudists of the Kentucky mountains, will be told this week at Harrodsburg, where A. H. Patton, of Jackson, one of the best known lawyers in the State, will be placed on trial for subornation of perjury growing out of the recent trial of fifteen alleged assassins in proving alleged alibis for the men accused of actually firing the fatal shots. More than 100 feudists are at Harrodsburg, which is a Blue Grass town. Chief witnesses in the murder trial will testify in Patton's case.

Negro Trying to Ride In Pullman Saved From Florida Crowd

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 19.—The timely signal of the conductor for the engineer to start the train saved a negro from rough treatment at the hands of a crowd of angry men at DeFuniak, because the negro had purchased a Pullman ticket and attempted to "ride in style" in a Pullman car occupied by white persons.

J. T. Fenn, Representative in the Legislature, and members of his family were among the occupants of the Pullman buffet car when a well-dressed negro entered, hung up his hat and sat down to breakfast.

Representative Fenn and three other prominent Florida men started toward the negro, when he grabbed his baggage and hastened to the negro day coach.

The operator at DeFuniak heard a message about the incident going to Superintendent Saltmarsh and told some of the loungers around the depot. When the train reached DeFuniak angry men boarded the train, searching for the negro.

Miss Page's Husband Must Be an American

PHILADELPHIA, May 19.—Miss Kathleen Page, daughter of Walter Hines Page, American Ambassador to England, admitted at Pembrooke Hall, Bryn Mawr, that she was looking forward with interest to her visit next month to the Court of St. James.

"I suppose we will do some entertaining," she said, "but father is going to be a diplomat, not a society man."

When asked if she thought she might become so attached to England that she would want to make her home there and perhaps marry an Englishman, she replied:

"I haven't had time to think of marriage, but when I do the man must be an American, and just half as good as father."

Six-Day Babe Weighs Only Pound and Half

SYRACUSE, May 19.—The village of Minilus, nine miles east of here, boasts of having the smallest six-days-old baby on record in Central New York. The infant—a boy—was born last Saturday to Mr. and Mrs. Lewis Foote. It weighed at birth a trifle more than a pound, and has been gaining an ounce or more each day. It tipped the scales to-night at a pound and a half.

The infant is well formed, but is in a weak condition. Mr. and Mrs. Foote have five other children, and none of them weighed less than nine pounds at birth. One weighed twelve pounds.

Burt, Once Famous Railway Figure, dies

CHICAGO, May 19.—Horace Greeley Burt, once president of the Union Pacific Railroad, died to-day at the Oak Park Hospital. He was operated on three weeks ago for a malignant trouble. Complications involving the heart caused his death.

Mr. Burt started in railroad work as a rodman and worked his way up to president of the Union Pacific. He was succeeded in 1904 by the late E. H. Harriman. After his retirement, Mr. Harriman paid him $30,000 a year to investigate railroad possibilities in Japan and China.

U. S. Theatrical Man In Jail in England

LONDON, May 19.—Salter Hansen, Chicago theatrical man, arrested on the charge of making threats of physical violence against Arthur Bourchier, his opponent in the war started by Hansen's objections to the production of Dr. Henri DeRothschild's play, "Croesus," at the Garden Theater, was arraigned to-day.

Counsel for Mr. Bourchier stated that Hansen had used "abominable language" toward his client, and had frequently threatened him.

The hearing was adjourned until Friday, and Hansen was remanded. In the meantime Hansen has appealed to the United States Embassy against detention.

Cochran to Deliver Graduation Address

Ralph O. Cochran, real estate man, legislator-elect and candidate to succeed Senator Hoke Smith, will go to Palmetto Friday night to deliver the annual commencement address of the public schools. Palmetto is Mr. Cochran's native heath, and he always receives a warm welcome there.

Mr. Cochran will go Monday night, May 26, to Lithonia to deliver the annual address at the public schools there. Both addresses will be educational in character.

'Wilson Waggle' Now Fad in Washington

WASHINGTON, May 19.—A new walk called the "Wilson Waggle" is the latest here. It can not be accomplished without low flat heels, and is described as "a graceful creeping."

The walk has been originated since the President's family came to the Capital.

PULITZER MAGAZINE WILL MUCKRAKE MUCKRAKERS

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Walter Pulitzer, of New York, is in Washington making arrangements to start a magazine which he proposes to bring out September 1.

Mr. Pulitzer said that his new publication would be built to muckrake the muckraker.

HITS 8-HOUR DAY FOR WOMEN

CHICAGO, May 19.—Protesting against an eight-hour day law for women, D. E. Prescott, a manufacturer, told a senatorial committee here to-day that the proposed law was not practicable.

COUNCIL TAKES UP SEWER BOND ISSUE

Special Committee To Be Named to Report on Plan for Improvements, Says Thomson.

Councilman Albert Thomson Monday said Council would approve his resolution creating a special committee to consider a sewer and park bond issue. Several Councilmen have shown interest in his plan for municipal improvements. The object of the committee is to have a detailed report on the advisability of a bond issue.

Councilman Thomson's idea is that if bond money can be obtained to complete the sewer system outlined and to extend the park system, the city's normal income will be sufficient to carry on street improvements and other municipal works.

Among important matters presented to Council Monday afternoon will be Mayor Woodward's veto message on the fire probe committee's report, published in full in The Sunday American.

The recommendation of the streets committee that $30,000 be apportioned for the regrading of Whitehall Street will be read and referred to the finance committee.

Councilman Claude L. Ashley will demand a report from the police committee on his race segregation ordinance. It is charged that the police committee wants to kill this ordinance by pigeonholing it. A bitter fight will develop if its adoption is insisted on, not only negroes being opposed to it, but many influential white men, who own houses rented to negroes.

The new dirt ordinance also will be presented, Council Claude L. Ashley championing it and Alderman James W. Maddox, a grading contractor, leading the opposition. The present dirt law has proved ineffective.

CANADIAN BANK THIEVES CHANGE LOOT TO U. S. COIN

CHICAGO, May 19.—Almost $100,000 of the $271,000 in Canadian money stolen from the branch of the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, B. C., has been exchanged for United States currency by Chicago saloonkeepers, according to the assertion of the superintendent of a detective agency made last night.

WOULD LIFT DUTY TO PUNISH TRUSTS

Iowa Senator Proposes Putting All Goods Made by Monopolies on Free List.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—Senator Kenyon of Iowa to-day introduced in the Senate an amendment to the tariff bill which provides that when a concern has been declared by the courts a monopoly within the meaning of the Sherman law, the products controlled, or substantially controlled, by it shall go on the free list.

It will be the duty of the Attorney General to notify the Treasury Department when a concern has been declared by the courts a monopoly, and it will then be mandatory on the Secretary of the Treasury to relieve of all duties articles controlled by the monopoly.

Such a law would cover products controlled by Standard Oil and a number of monopolies.

Senator Kenyon says this is in harmony with the old Iowa idea of "no shelter to monopoly." He believes the Senate Democrats can not refuse to adopt it.

WAR ON NEGROES RENEWED IN COBB

Foreman's House Wrecked With Dynamite on the Farm of James T. Anderson.

MARIETTA, GA., May 19.—Cobb County officers to-day are searching for unknown men who early yesterday wrecked with dynamite a tenant house on the farm of James T. Anderson, eight miles from Marietta. The house was occupied by a negro foreman.

It is believed the same men are responsible for this as for other depredations in this county in recent months, all directed against negroes in efforts to drive them from this section. Heretofore one store was burned near the Kennesaw Marble Company's plant and several notices were posted in conspicuous places warning negroes to leave. The perpetrators became so bold that special watchmen were employed at many factories and mills in and near the city where negro labor is employed.

Mr. Anderson's foreman was one of those warned to leave and did so, but a month ago was prevailed on by Mr. Anderson to return.

Early Sunday occupants of the foreman's house were thrown from their beds by a terrific explosion. No one was injured, as they were sleeping at the far end from where the dynamite was set off.

Investigation revealed that the perpetrators had driven in a buggy to within 30 feet of the house and, with a long pole, had pushed the dynamite under the building, setting it off with a three-foot fuse. They drove off before it had time to explode.

The Sheriff was notified and hurried to the scene with a posse and dogs, but the buggy tracks could not be followed.

Citizens here are indignant over these continued depredations and have started a fund as a reward for the apprehension of the guilty parties, who are supposed to be low-class white men.

Mr. Anderson declares that his foreman is an industrious negro who does not interfere with outsiders and seldom leaves the place.

Senate Lifts Duty on Panama Exhibits

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The Senate to-day passed a bill by Representative Kettner, of California, providing for the exemption from duty of exhibits for the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco in 1915.

FIRST HOT WAVE HERE HERALDS SUMMER

Forecaster Predicts Scorching Weather for Atlanta Following Mercury Rise.

"I by see the papers, suh," said the Atlanta colonel, "that the weather man prophesies mint julep weather."

Forecasts by C. F. VonHerrmann, Section Director of the United States Weather Bureau, Monday announced that Atlanta is in the path of an approaching heat wave. Local temperature, which Sunday registered at its height 88 degrees, is on the rise. Tuesday will see a temperature of 90 degrees, Mr. VonHerrmann said, and advances above this will follow rapidly.

Monday morning at 7 o'clock the thermometer registered 72, but gradually rose ot 89 degrees.

"Summer weather's arrival in Atlanta is rather late this year, however," remarked the forecaster. "As a rule we have 90 degrees during the first five days of the month. With the advent of the 90s in temperature summer is generally understood to be on in full force. The weather will continue to have maximum degrees of 90 and above until in October. The last day for a maximum of 90 degrees in October during the last decade was in 1911, when we had no more high temperatures after the third day."

Hot All Over East.

Mr. VonHerrmann's report for Monday read as follows:

"The weather is generally clear over most of the country east of the Rocky Mountains, excepting that showers fell during the past 24 hours at a few stations on the North Pacific coast and in the St. Lawrence Valley. The temperatures in the East are high, especially in the eastern portion of the cotton belt.

"A moderate disturbance exists this morning over Colorado, with the atmospheric pressure below 29.65 inches at Denver. This is accompanied by generally cloudy threatening weather over the entire country east of the Mississippi River.

"Temperatures are generally above 40 degrees this morning except at a few places. Conditions are favorable for thunder showers to-night or Tuesday."

Despite the approaching hot weather, the nights will continue to be cool, according to Mr. VonHerrmann.

"Atlanta enjoys the coolest nights during the summer of almost any other Southern city. I would advise everyone to fit up sleeping porches. A good rest at night, unannoyed by heat, will enable a person to withstand the hot days much easier than otherwise.

Let Ice Water Alone.

"Above all, people should not drink cold liquids during the summer. They are most destructive to the vitality.

"The best way to handle children, especially babies, in hot weather is to put as few clothes as possible on them and then let them alone. Do not wrap hot, stuffy blankets around the babies or put safety pins next to their bodies. Place them on the floor, where they will come in contact with nothing that would induce warmth. Babies suffer from heat more than grown persons."

WILSON BLAMES JAP PRIDE FOR ALIEN ROW

President Thinks Belief That Americans Regard Them as Inferior Riled Orientals.

WASHINGTON, May 19.—The State Department indicated to-day that the administration has completed its consideration of all points in the reply to the Japanese protest against the California land law, and it will be transmitted to Viscount Chinda, Japanese Ambassador, either to-night or to-morrow, when, it is anticipated, the State Department will make public an official statement outlining both sides in the controversy.

Secretary of State Bryan believes this will be the best method of ridding the nation of its "war scare."

Calls Pride Cause of Row.

That President Wilson believes the root of the whole trouble lies in the national pride of the Japanese was indicated at the semi-weekly newspaper Cabinet meeting to-day.

The President has concluded that Japan is not so much annoyed by the Webb bill as at the intimation that Americans do not wish to meet the Orientals on equal terms. This feeling, he considers, was born of the Chinese exclusion act.

See Insult to Nation.

The Japanese, as a nation, do not care particularly whether their brothers hold land in California, but they feel a prohibition of this provides an insult to their race and country.

Kaiser Picks Prince For Albanian Throne

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, May 19.—Announcement was made here to-day that, at to-morrow's conference of the Ambassadors in London, the German Ambassador will propose Prince Frederick Wied, a Protestant, for the throne of Albania. Prince Frederick is a nephew of Queen Elizabeth of Roumania.

King Charles of Roumania is a member of the German Hohenzollern family, but not the branch from which the Kaiser comes.

These Are Wash Goods That Women Want Right Now and They Are Priced

There are signs of a crowd in the prices!

We have been going through the Wash Goods Department with a sharp eye for all stray lots—for, as the best housekeepers know, things will be overlooked, misplaced and forgotten in the best regulated households—and stores.

This is an instance.

Also this is an instance of the way Chamberlin-Johnson DuBose Co. set things aright.

And, since these are the materials women want for their summertime dresses, skirts and waists, and since qualities are just what you would expect here at the original prices, you may judge that the setting-aright will be quick.

At 29c French Piques, regularly 50c. They are 28 inches wide. Choose from about all colors and white and white with dainty stripes. Also at this price are colored checked piques and piques with a ratine stripe. These were 65c a yard.

At 29c Embroidered Mulls, regularly 65c; 32 inches wide; very soft quality, with small dots embroidered over their surfaces—all white; also colored striped French voiles with embroidered dots.

At 19c French Piques, regularly 35c, 28 inches wide, in colors, in plain white and in white with colored stripes. A splendid material for dresses and skirts.

At 59c French Voiles, regularly 90c. As sheer and summery a fabric as ever the looms clacked off. In colors, daintily striped; with these are white batistes embroidered in colors. Both 32 inches wide.

At 49c French Lingerie cloth, regularly $1.50. Sure to go very, very quickly. White, embroidered in open-work patterns. 32 inches wide.

$20,000000 MORTGAGE IS FILED AT PENSACOLA

PENSACOLA, FLA., May 19.—The Southern Utilities Company, which recently purchased several publicutility plants in Florida, to-day filed mortgage to the United States Mortgage and Trust Company for $20,000,000 to secure 20-year gold bonds, bearing interest at 5 per cent. The interest amounts to $2,800 per day, or more than $1,000,000 per annum. The mortgage is being filed in Kings County, New York, and fifteen counties of Florida.

Actor's "Make-up" Fooled the Doctors

MILWAUKEE, May 19.—Gysberger Vandesend, an aged actor, appeared in November at the office of a physician, apparently afflicted with a dangerous looking rash. The physician was puzzled and sent the man to the County Hospital.

There the physicians gave Vandesend a series of examinations and studied to find a way to combat his unknown malady. One day recently Vandesend had an altercation with an attendant and a small package fell from his pocket. The package was red grease paint, the cause of the "rash," which disapeared like magic when a little pumice stone and hot water were used.

Russia Likes the Gun Uncle Sam Refused

NEW YORK, May 19.—Barclay Warburton, who went to St. Petersburg to demonstrate to the Russian War Office a 20-pound automobile rapid fire gun, has returned.

He said the Russian Government had placed with him so large an order for the guns that a factory will be put up in Birmingham, England, to fill it.

The gun is the invention of Col. J. N. Low, of the United States Coast Artillery. It was offered to the United States Government and was rejected.

Two of the Most Value-ful Sales We Have Announced This Spring

A Sale of Embroideries---A Sale of Silks

To-morrow shall be a notable day; notable for the two sales that get under way here at nine o'clock.

A sale of embroideries, a sale of silks; both bringing values worthy of being cried from the house-tops.

But still, crying them from the house-tops or in the biggest, blackest type right here would not add a jot or tittle to these truly remarkable values.

We believe they are in themselves sufficient to interest you. You who know this store and know the quality and worth merchandise here at regular prices will understand there is no need of words on such an occasion as this. Here are loud-speaking actions---

The Embroideries

Regularly 25c to 75c a Yd.

At 15c Heavy linen bands and daintiest and sheerest Swiss bands in white and colors—an out-clearing that will interest women with dresses and waists to trim and with children's clothes to make.

Regularly 50c to $1.00 a Yd.

At 29c A ruthless and unwarranted reduction here, and, therefore, possibly all the more remarkable. The lot is made up of all odd lots of flouncings, allover embroideries and bands that were 50c to $1.00. You may know that it is a goodly group.

Regularly $1 to $1.50 a Yd.

At 50c Embroidery Flouncings in 27-inch and 45-inch widths. All hand loom embroideries, some as sheer as you could wish—and the patterns—they are from our regular stock. All white.

Regularly $1.50 to $2.50 a Yd.

At 75c A lot made up of embroidery flouncings, 27 inches to 45 inches wide, and of allover embroideries. Among these are all white and colored embroideries—for dresses, for waists and for underwear. And the beautiful patterns that are here!

Regularly $3 to $4.50 a Yd.

At $1.50 Perhaps the choicest embroideries of the whole sale. 45-inch flouncings—the wonderfully woven, intricately patterned affairs that make into glorious summer dresses, commencement dresses and the like. Swiss and mull are the materials—eyelet and blind patterns. With these are embroidery bands that, too, were $3.00 to $4.50 a yard

Regularly $3 to $4.50 a Yd.

At $1.50 Linen flouncings, 45 inches wide, with bands to match—a very remarkable choice of patterns and of colors—choose from light blue, pink, lavender, gray and white.

The Silks

Silks Regularly 59c

At 39c Kimono Silks, 31 inches wide. Tans, browns, navy, light blue, red—big floral patterns and neat conventional patterns.

Foulards Regularly 85c & $1

At 59c And they are Shower-Proof Foulards, 23 inches wide. Choicest patterns in wanted shades: Navy and Copenhagen, navy and white, black and white, and others and others, including dainty stripes.

Silk Shirtings Regularly 85c

At 69c And right at the time when silk shirts are most popular. These are 33 inches wide, all white, and white with black, navy, brown and heliotrope stripes. A beautiful quality, all silk.

And Furthermore To-morrow Will Be

Silk Remnant Day

And Silk Remnant Day of itself is always an event at Chamberlin-Johnson-DuBose Co.'s. Because reductions are real and great; because our sole end is to clear the stock of short lengths—let prices fall where they will.

CASE LAST OF OLD GUARD TO LEAVE VOLS

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 19.—The passing of Hard Luck Charlie Case, from the Volunteers, marks the exit of the last of the old guard, who, under the Bernhard regime, brought in 1908 the last piece of bunting that has floated in Sulphur Dell.

The new manager for the Turtles brought Chick to Nashville from the Pirates and it was due in a great measure to his grand twirling during that gruelling campaign with the Pelicans that enabled the Vols to flash under the wire ahead.

It would be a strange prank of Fate did the season which sent Case to Montgomery allow history to repeat itself and give the gonfalon to the Schwartzmen.

It must be admitted that the Vols are displaying a bunch of nerve in harping on pennants with their boxmen doddering along and being blistered with wallops day after day, but if Schwartz ever should be able to gather a quintet of steady hurlers it would be hard to figure his crew among the flag contenders.

To the naked eye the advantage gained by either Nashville or Montgomery in the trade of Case for Piggy Paige is not visible. Charlie is on his way, and has travelled a good distance toward the other end, while Paige is about through. Either will have to travel quite a bit before they meet a first-class twirler coming out.

Wanted to Join Turtles.

Case would have preferred to land with the Turtles and it would no doubt have been better for him, for he and Bernhard are great pals and Big Bill certainly did inject in some mysterious manner into Doc Seabough new life when he looked to be down for the count.

Fleharty is the only veteran remaining for slab duty and the beanball artist has not proved of any great value to the club so far. If Schwartz can land a high-grade mound artist, Earl will be invited to visit his home folks. But the Vols are having a tough time landing dependable flingers, having already hired and fired a list of alleged pitchers as long as the delinquent tax roll.

The Reds continue to hang on to Chick Smith, although they have sold this southpaw to the Vols, and, despite the gaping holes in the slab corps, he has failed to put in an appearance. He ought to bolster up the staff considerably since a number of the Southern League clubs this season appear to be helpless against portsiders, the most conspicuous of the bunch being the Vols themselves, for any left-hander who waves his glove in the faces of the Schwartzmen has them beat to a frazzle.

New Pitcher on the Job.

Jack Dandridge, the big righthander who was signed as a free agent, is in town awaiting the return of the club from the present road trip. He was with Vernon last season, won a majority of his games and is in good shape.

Bill Schwartz appears to have fozzled when he turned down Rudy Summers, on account of the boy's health, since he has been setting the league afire for the Lookouts, cracking George Beck's winning streak to say nothing of busting up the Gulls' long string. Schwartz had the dope of Rudy all wrong, for he figured he couldn't last in this climate another season, for the little fellow was always on the sick list while with the Vols. Surely a grand pitcher for a boy billed to the undertakers.

Williams Going Immense.

The sudden return to form of Lefty Williams and his feat of defeating the fast going Gulls twice in three days, one game running for eleven innings with only one scratch hit off his delivery, is the most encouraging happening of the present road trip. The Springfield, Mo., boy stood a great chance of finding a pink paper in his mail just when he began to deliver the goods. He crowded right up into the select circle that so far has been monopolized by Beck, for whom the Reds offered 7,500 regular dollars and Reuben Benton. Of course the Vols' treasury is too small to accommodate such a swarm of dollars and there is no place on the team for Benton. Of course not.

Time enough when the season is over to turn this trick and Beck will be worth just as much then as he would bring now if he keeps up his brilliant work, and there is little chance of his going the draft route for too many of the majors will be after him for that to happen. The quickest way for Hirsig to wreck baseball in Nashville would be to dispose of Beck, and Hirsig is too much interested in collecting the eggs to investigate the anatomy of the goose. It's a great temptation, admitted, but the goose eats entirely too little to warrant any undue curiosity.

ANDERSON EVEN MONEY CHOICE AGAINST MANDOT

By H. M. Walker.

LOS ANGELES, CAL., May 19.—The fight that he will make against Joe Mandot next Tuesday night will either "make or break" Young Bud Anderson. The Medford boy will either leave the ring as one of the best lightweight cards in the country or an exploded "comer" with nothing better than second grade dates in store for him.

Anderson and Mandot are matched to box twenty rounds before the Pacific Athletic Club at Vernon on Tuesday night. The weight is 133 pounds at 6 o'clock. There is no choice in the betting, which is at even money.

Just as Joe Rivers began an unknown and fought himself into a following of thousands, so Anderson is building for himself, and should be win decisively over Mandot, a match between Bud and the Mexican would necessitate the enlarging of the arena building.

"Anderson's best punch is his left hook," said Donald. "He had little or no chance to use this blow against Brown, as 'Kayo' fights with his right hand extended. We realize that Mandot is a fast and clever boxer. Were we foolish enough to try to outbox him, we probably would be outpointed in every round. What we intend to do is to keep on top of Mandot and make him fight every inch of the way. I am as sure that Bud will stop Joe inside the limit as I am that I am standing here."

Mandot, working at Venice, has trained faithfully. Joe figures that Anderson has been greatly overestimated and takes it for granted that he will have an easy time of it with the Oregon youth.

Mandot's Manager Confident.

"We know exactly where we stand in this affair," said Manager Tommy Walsh, Monday. "We have been brought out here to act as a trial horse. We are willing to be called a trial horse so long as it gets us the money. Mandot is a more scientific man, is a better ring general, and has had much more experience than Anderson. He will make this young chap look like a boob.

"We figure, though, that by stopping a young fellow like this boy that Joe will be in line for another crack at Rivers. We are easy to do business with. Wednesday morning will find us ready to sign articles with either Rivers, Ritchie, Welsh, Cross or Murphy."

THE HAMMER.

Beneath a spreading chestnut tree
The idle smithy stands.
The smith, a howling fan is he
With lungs like iron bands.
He swings with wild and ghoulish glee
The hammer in his hands.

The lowing of a distant cow,
The warbling of a lark,
Are all that stir the village now—
The forge is cold and dark.
The blacksmith swings with dripping brow
At yonder baseball park.

Mr. McGraw called Mr. Klem a catfish, thereby offering a deadly insult to an innocent fish.

The St. Louis baseball magnate who was amputated from $5,000 is on the road to recovery, but he never will look the same.

THERE IS HOPE.

There, little Cub, don't cry!
You are hitting the bumps, I know,
And a winning streak that would last a week
Is a thing of the long ago.
You MAY be a winner when horses fly,
So there, little Cub, don't cry!

Under the workmen's compensation act, Ty Cobb is entitled to $10 a week while hors du combat. Under the present circumstances the rest of the team is entitled to that amount while playing.

The consensus of opinion is that the United States League died of infantile paralysis.

If we mistake not, the United States League once offered Ty Cobb $15,000 a year. Still, it was a great little offer.

FAKE.

Though the motorbikes were scooting
And the frenzied crowd was rooting,
Not a single man was seen to break his back.
"They are all a bunch of fakers!"
Said a pair of undertakers
As they beat it sadly homeward from the track.

Up to date, Gunboat Smith has not mangled any sparring partners, demonstrating that his press agent is not there with the punch.

If it be true that Tyrus Cobb has weak eyes, we know a great number of athletes who are stone blind.

Baseball players play ball when not engaged in joint debates with umpires and beating it off the field.

Pep is a great little institution, but not when it is wasted in casting aspersions on the ancestry of an umpire.

LINES TO F. CHANCE.

They love you for the way you smote the ball
In ancient days when Cubs and Giants played.
They love you for your worth, but most of all,
They love you for the enemics you've made.

JOE RIVERS WILL NOT BOX RITCHIE AT FRISCO

LOS ANGELES, May 19.—"Joe Rivers will not box Willie Ritchie at San Francisco on July 4," said Promoter T. J. McCarey, of the Pacific Athletic Club, to-day, relative to the announcement last night by Ritchie's manager that a match for the lightweight championship had been arranged with Eddie Graney. McCarey declared Rivers had agreed to box at Vernon arena on the Fourth of July with any lightweight selected by McCarey.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 19.—The race in the National League so far this season has been the most unsettled one I have seen since I came into the big league. The going of the first three clubs in the American League has been steadier and more according to the dope. The National League has been crowded with upsets and surprises.

Of the two teams that were leading the National League through the first weeks of the race, one is holding up, but none too strongly, and the other has wilted. The Cubs and Philadelphia made the early going, and the Phillies spent last week struggling to keep ahead of the plunging Brooklyn boys. The Chicago club has cracked badly since invading the East, and I cannot see it as a pennant contender. It looks like a bad road club, and the traveling ability of the old Chicago machines was what won the pennants for them.

* * *

THE percentage table is still all tangled up, and the teams have shown little inclination to straighten themselves out in the order it was expected they would before the season opened. The Giants were the only rated contenders who approached their natural form last week. The New York club bucked up considerably and settled to something like its normal stride, although it is still very unsteady in the field.

McGraw, fighting the old over-confidence which was holding the team down, tore the club apart and shook up his batting order until it now looks as if he had found a strong combination. By sticking Shafer in center field he has propped up the club in the hitting department, and seems to have slipped a plug in the right place. Shafer has been batting as hard as anybody on the team this season, and is playing wonderful ball.

THE pitchers are returning to form. Tesreau showed some of his last season's stuff in a game against the Cubs last week, when he delivered the best battle he has pitched so far this season. Demaree is a great addition to the staff, but has been working in very hard luck so far, giving few hits and losing many games through bad support. Marquard is not himself yet, but he has hardly recovered entirely from weakness following the attack of tonsilitis.

Naturally, I cannot see any club but the Giants for the pennant. I know we have the stuff there, and the team is better this year than last. The aggregations we have to beat to get into first place now are the Brooklyn and Philadelphia clubs, and it does not strike me that either one can hold up through a gruelling race. They should cause us little worry. Brooklyn has been playing great ball, the dashing, irresistible, winning sort, but it is not a pennant team.

* * *

PERSONALLY, I still have faith in the Pittsburg club. I appreciate that I am in the small minority, even many of the Pittsburg fans having deserted the ship after the team had lost seven straight games in the East, four of these going to Boston. Having played against the Pirates, I know them for battlers. They are like the Giants. They have not got going, but their poor start has brought no tears of sorrow to our eyes, because it is generally realized among us how they are liable to finish. The team is playing bad ball, but it is only necessary to read over the list of the names of the men associated with the Pittsburg movement to realize it will play better ball very shortly.

MATTY THE MARVEL.

WHEN Earth's last ball game is finished and the leagues are busted and done,
When the fattest magnate has wilted and no longer gum-shoes for spon,
We shall rest—go back to the bushes and lie up a season or so
Till the master of all the magnates announces the real big show.

And those that were bugs shall be happy—they shall sit in a ten-cent seat
(The which shall be back of the catcher) and have free peanuts to eat.
They shall have new umps to cuss at—nice targets, broadlike and tall;
They shall peg bottles at them for hours and never be tired at all.

And none of our bunch shall make bobbles and all of our bunch shall make hits;
They shall fall on the enemy's twirlers and pummel them all into bits;
And there with his "smoke" and his "fader"—this is the sure thing of all—
We shall see the same trusty old Matty still pitching his old shut-ball!

THERE ARE THE MAKINGS of a humorist in a young man who boxed in a preliminary at a local club a few weeks back. His opponent was pounding his face with great skill and accuracy, and when he returned to his corner his second growled:

"Stop some o' them—stop some o' them!"

"Stop 'em!" retorted the fighter, indignantly. "You don't see any of 'em gettin' by, do you?"

* * *

Out of the South the wild news came:
"The Crackers win another game."

THREE CORKING TEN-ROUNDERS HERE ON JUNE 9

THE promoters of the boxing contests to be staged at the Auditorium-Armory June 9 have now clinched two crackerjack ten-round bouts. In the main event Jim Flynn will hook up with Jim Savage. In the semi-windup Mike Saul and Terry Nelson will travel over a scheduled ten-round route. There is still one other ten-round scrap to be arranged.

It is likely that Spider Britt and Meyer Pries will be selected to meet in the other ten-rounder. These lads always put up a corking battle when pitted against each other. They have met a half dozen times and the result has always been doubtful. In a ten-round mill it's a cinch that one or the other will have earned a big enough lead to give him the decision.

Kid Young also wants to get on. But there is nobody around this neck of the woods who is of his weight and at the same time in his class.

It may be just possible, however, that in case Britt and Pries can't agree on weight, terms, etc., that some topnotch boy will be imported to meet Young.

RINGSIDE NEWS

Two important bouts are scheduled to take place on the coast Tuesday night. Bud Anderson, the Western sensation, will meet Joe Mandot in Tom McCarey's arena in Los Angeles, while Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith will clash at San Francisco. Both bouts are billed to go twenty rounds.

* * *

Honey Mellody, ex-champion welterweight of the world, has retired from the boxing game for good. The other day he had a cataract removed from his eye. He will be compelled to wear glasses the rest of his life.

* * *

* * *

Tom McCarey may give Jim Flynn, the fighting fireman, another chance at the heavyweight title. The coast promoter may match Flynn against the winner of the Luther McCarty-Pelky bout, if the cowboy refuses to meet the Smith-Willard winner.

* * *

However, Flynn must beat Savage when the two heavyweights clash here June 9 in order to get the match. Danny Morgan, manager of Savage, has already received several offers for his protege's service, providing Savage is the winner. Both heavyweights are doing light training out East for the match.

* * *

The Mike Saul-Terry Nelson scrap, which will be staged as the semi-windup to the Flynn-Savage set-to, should also be a corker. Although neither boy is a champion, both are good willing sluggers, and should put up an interesting mill. They are billed to go ten rounds.

* * *

Meyer Pries stopped at the Georgian sporting department the other day long enough to announce that he would like to get on with Spider Britt again. These two bantams put up a corking mill for six rounds about a month ago.

* * *

Joe Thomas will have a chance Monday night to redeem himself for his former defeat at the hands of Charlie White, the Chicago speed marvel. Thomas and White met in a ten-round battle at New Orleans, and the fur should fly.

* * *

Matty McCue may meet Abe Attell at Kenosha, Wis., before long. Nate Lewis, matchmaker of the Kenosha club, is trying hard to get the ex-champion to clash with the Racine sensation. We would advise Abraham to be extremely careful if he dons the gloves with Mr. McCue.

* * *

In the other match between the pair Thomas was stopped in eight rounds, but he blamed the defeat to a lucky punch White landed on his chin in the second session. That is, Thomas says the punch was lucky.

* * *

Tom McCarey has wired an offer to Jimmy Johnson, of New York, to bring George Rodel, the Boer heavyweight, to Vernon for a battle with Bull Young, a promising heavyweight, who helped train McCarty for several bouts on the coast.

* * *

It took Matty just 90 seconds to polish off Jeff O'Connell, one of the toughest featherweights in the game to-day. O'Connell has fought such stars as Wolgast (four times), Frankie Whitney, Frankie Conley and others.

* * *

Not satisfied with having been knocked out twice by Soldier Kearns, "One-Round" Davis, the Buffalo heavyweight, asked for a return match after he was put away in Buffalo a few nights ago, and Kearns agreed. They will meet for the third time at Buffalo on the night of June 6.

* * *

Mike Gibbons and Jimmy Perry will exchange blows in a scheduled six-round affair at Pittsburg May 29. Perry will have to be at his best against the St. Paul boy, as Mike has been going great of late.

* * *

Billy Kyne, the Frisco fight promoter, has offered a $10,000 guarantee to Willie Ritchie, lightweight champion, to meet Joe Rivers on the coast July 4. If Ritchie accepts, Kyne says he will build a big open air arena.

TWO WHITE SOX TWIRLERS ARE OUT OF THE GAME

CHICAGO, May 19.—Two of the stellar lights in the White Sox pitching corps are out of commission, but Manager Callahan is comforted by the thought that he has a reserve pitching staff second to none in the American League. Eddie Cicotte reported to his chief to-day that he is suffering from tonsilitis and will not be able to work for several days. Ed Walsh was called to Meriden, Conn., by the death of a relative.

PREP LEAGUE NOTES

The G. M. A. baseball team has disbanded after a poor season. G. M. A. has won but one game this year, and that was against Peacock.

* * *

The series between Formwalt and Edgewood for the grammar school championship of Atlanta is now tied, with a game each. The deciding contest will be played Wednesday afternoon.

* * *

The railroad that connects Emory College with the city of Covington has been electrified, and the old horse and mule cars will soon pass out of existence. For many years students at Emory have been transported from Covington to their college by the old mule cars, and all are glad of the change.

* * *

Joe Bean, the Marist coach, is working hard with the team in order to have it in fine shape for the postponed game with Boys' High, which will be played soon. The Marist lads are anxious to even up for their defeat at the hands of the high school boys last week.

* * *

Nearly every team in the local Prep League this season has a better batting average than in former years. This shows the result of special coaching in this line early in the season. Boys' High has the best team batting average of any nine in the league.

* * *

Bob McWhorter, of Georgia, has a brother playing ball on the Gordon Institute team this year. He is a husky young chap, and has played fine ball all season. He will enter Georgia University in the fall.

* * *

Louis Sams, the young pitching marvel at Peacock this year, ought to be a great asset to the team next year.

* * *

For the past two years Sam Armistead, the catcher of Boys' High, has led the local Prep men in batting. Last season his average for fifteen games was over .500, and this year it is considerable over .400.

* * *

The Marist Specials have three stars in Cheeves, Wrigley and Adair. These lads have been playing good ball all season.

ZBYSZKO AND CAZEAU IN FINISH MATCH MONDAY

NEW YORK, May 19.—Stanislaus Zbyszko, the Polish heavyweight mat champion, and Raymond Cazeau meet in a finish match at the Garden to-night, best two in three falls. On the strength of their work will depend whether the sport can be re-established in this city. Frank Gotch intimated recently that he would be willing to come here and meet a worthy foe.

"QUAKER DID IT AND I WILL SWEAR TO IT"

Strong Assertion Made by Mr. G. A. Smedley, at Coursey & Munn's Drug Store.

The home of G. A. Smedley is located at 140 West Tenth Street, a locomotive engineer for a contractor, Mr. C. A. Daley, very convenient for any person to call who may wish to investigate his remarkable results from the use of Quaker Herb Extract, particulars of which are given herewith. For over three years he had been suffering from catarrh of the bowels and his appendix. When he arose in the morning he was more tired than when he went to bed. His limbs ached. He would cough up great chunks of mucus. After eating his meals he would be in misery for hours, and some things would not agree with him at all. Headaches were a common occurrence, and continuous pains in the appendix. His breath was simply awful and his tongue continuously coated.

During the time that this man was afflicted he used many remedies, tried various physicians, but somehow they never seemed to do any good in his case. Altogether he was in a pitiable condition. Many a day he was plying his vocation when he really should have been in bed. But weak and sick as he was, he had too much will power to give up.

Mr. Smedley went to Coursey & Munn's drug store to explain his case, and, after doing so, was advised a treatment of the Quaker Herb Extract, which was bought by him, and used faithfully according to instructions. He again returned to the drug store and said: "I came back to get three more bottles of the wonderful Quaker Herb Extract. Since I used it I have found that my appetite is good and I am much stronger. I can get about better than I ever could; my troubles have disappeared, and I am so very much pleased that I am telling all my neighbors and friends. I had begun to think that there was no cure for my troubles, but I know now that I am on the right road to health."

If you are a sufferer from catarrh in any form, stomach trouble of any description, kidney, liver, rheumatism or blood troubles, you are the one to call at Coursey & Munn's drug store and obtain Quaker Herb Extract, 6 for $5. 3 for $2.50; $1 a bottle. Oil of Balm, 25c, or 5 for $1. So call to-day at Coursey & Munn's drug store, 29 Marietta Street. We prepay express charges on all orders of $3.00 or over.

Willard Has Many Peculiarities

Jess Made Famous By Secret Work

By W. W. Naughton

SAN FRANCISCO, May 19.—Jess Willard has become known to fame. When the sport critics begin to harp upon a ring man's peculiarities it is a sure sign that the ring man has made his mark. He has reached a stage which parallels that of the renowned citizen whose life story is published accompanied with photographs of the subject at the ages of two, seven, twenty-five, forty-three and fifty-eight.

A New York scribe says that "considerable mystery" surrounds the training methods of the Kansas giant. It is pointed out that Willard figured in several bouts in New York, yet no one ever heard of him doing any training within a hundred miles of the city named.

It is claimed that Jess used to bob up suddenly on the night of a bout, score a victory, collect his emoluments and disappear as though the earth had swallowed him.

According to this Willard possesses some traits of Scotty, the Death Valley spendthrift. Maybe it was Jess' wont to load his training paraphernalia on a pack mule and condition himself out on his native Kansas plains.

A friendly tree limb would no doubt make a fair substitute for a punching bag ceiling and it would be easy enough to convert a "lariat" into a skipping rope. But, however Jess prepared himself, it is his secret.

It may interest New York to learn that Jess has changed. An air of secrecy surrounds his training no longer. In the matter of working hours he adheres to the scale set by the Brotherhood of White Hopes, and he may be seen fully extended every afternoon at the Seal Rock gymnasium. And the more that come to see him go through his exercises the better he likes it.

• • •

JIM Buckley, manager of Gunboat J Smith, is looking ahead. He is permitting his thoughts to wander from the Gunboat Smith-Jess Willard contest at the Eighth Street arena to-morrow. He is talking about the evasive methods of one Luther McCarty and is expressing the fear that McCarty will dodge a match with Gunboat when the latter has trounced Willard.

It may be, of course, that Buckley is more concerned about the tussle with Willard than he would have us believe. It is an old trick with managers to talk lightly of a coming engagement when they are giving a lot of serious consideration to it.

There is good reason for believing that McCarty will agree to box the winner of to-morrow's bout. If he refuses he will look foolish.

The truth about Luther is that, while he is called white heavyweight champion of the world, he has an exceedingly slim hold on the title. For that matter, there isn't a single world's champion in any class right now that has the respect of the public. They—the champions—are mostly jokes.

• • •

TO get back to Luther: At times when he has been introduced as world's champion he has been booed by the crowd. Did anyone ever hear of a fight gathering hooting John L. Sullivan or Jim Corbett?

To get back to Luther again: When anyone asks him wherefore he is the champion, he points to his insignia of office. It is in the shape of a belt given to him by Tom McCarey of Los Angeles.

Now, belts are jokes, too. Anyone can give a belt, and anyone can wear one. And very many have given them and very many have worn them. The pawn shops are filled with bespangled girdles that some time or another encircled the waists of alleged world's champions.

CHAPTER II.

SEATED in a chair, with his feet resting on the edge of a small stove in the center of the room, was a short, keen-eyed man in his thirties, reading a copy of Sporting Life. He turned his head as the door opened and swept his eye over the dripping figure that stood, tall and erect, just within the doorway. Pools of water formed on the floor under the stranger and they came together in a rivulet, which crept snake-like along the planking until it found a friendly crack.

"I am looking for Mr. Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta Baseball Club," said the young man.

"I am Bill Smith," replied the man in the chair. "What can I do for you?"

"I want to play ball on your team."

Long experience in managing pennant-winning ball teams (and some that were not pennant-winners) had taught Bill Smith many valuable baseball lessons. One of these was never to pass snap judgment on a ball player; another was never to take a ball player's estimate of his own ability. Nineteen managers out of twenty would have taken just one glance at the bedraggled figure in the doorway and dismissed it with a curt "nothing doing." That was not Bill Smith's way. And his method of handling this particular applicant for a position on his team led to the most surprising series of sensations that ever happened in the history of the national game.

"You look somewhat moist," observed the manager. "Take off your clothes and dry them at this stove. Whisky!" he suddenly yelled. "That isn't an invitation to take a drink," he added; "I am only calling my attendant."

Smith Surprised.

In response to the summons a colored man entered the room briskly.

"Yassir, yassir," replied Whisky, getting busy at once. Many seasons spent in attending to the wants of impatient ball players in that club house had developed an activity in Whisky far beyond the trend of his race. In a jiffy he had every stitch of the young man's clothes off him. Then he brought towels and began to administer a thorough rubdown.

Familiar as he was with all stages of dress and undress, Bill Smith could not repress an exclamation of admiration for the wonderful specimen of young manhood that stood before him, arms outstretched, while the attendant vigorously applied the towel. The manager cast aside his "Sporting Life" and walked completely around the young man, sizing him up from tip to toe. Six feet two inches, perhaps a trifle under that, he appeared to be. Smith guessed his weight to be a good 200 pounds, with not more than five pounds to come off. A well-shaped head and neck were set on a pair of broad shoulders not too square. Even as the stranger's body swayed and his arms moved slightly under the manipulations of the skillful rubber, Smith could see the back muscles ripple. Clean-limbed he was all the way down, waist somewhat tapering, small, but strong-looking hips and legs like a quarter-mile runner. His skin was as fair, almost, as a woman's.

The manager grabbed his chair, turned it around to face the stranger, and sat down in it.

"What's your name," he asked.

"Gordon Kelly."

"Sounds like a good combination. Gordon was a great Georgia soldier and Kelly was a great baseball general. How old are you?"

"Twenty-one next month."

Never Saw a Game.

"What club did you play with last?"

"Never played on any club."

"What?"

"Never saw a ball game in my life."

Whisky promptly ceased rubbing, threw down the towel and moved off with an expression of disgust on his face.

"Pick up that towel and finish your job, Whisky. We're not through with this young man yet," remarked Bill Smith.

"Dis ain't no ball player, boss. Dishyere is jest a common, ordinary white man," expostulated the attendant.

"You never can tell, Whisky; you never can tell," replied Bill Smith, letting fall a philosophic remark that had not a little to do with his success as a manager of ball players.

Whisky took up the towel and started in again, but it was plainly to be seen his heart was not in his work. Whisky lived, moved and breathed in the atmosphere of baseball. Ball players were as food and drink to him. A syndicate of John L. Sullivans, Frank Gotches, Eugene Sandows and Percy Herculeses would have created but a sorry impression on Whisky if it couldn't play ball.

"All right, Whisky, that's enough," declared the manager. "Now, hten bring me a uniform-pants and shirt. That's the stuff. Crawl into these, Mr. Kelly, and draw up a chair and toast your shins in front of this fire while your clothes are drying out. Have a cigar?"

"I never smoke."

"Have a chew?"

"I never use it."

"I should say you didn't by the looks of those molars. Have a drink?"

"I never drink."

"Well, you couldn't get it here if you wanted it. Now, tell me, what put it into your head that you wanted to play ball?"

A Cobb or a Speaker.

"I'll tell you, Mr. Smith," replied Kelly, with a smile of engaging frankness that displayed his fine teeth, "I read in the newspapers about Ty Cobb getting $10,000 a year and holding out for $15,000. It looked good to me."

"Is that all?"

"Not quite. I came from the Georgia mountain country, Mr. Smith. I have never been in a city before. The first time I ever rode in a street car was this morning. But, I know all about baseball, although I have never even seen a ball game."

Whisky waited to hear no more. With a look of immeasurable superiority on his black face, he turned and left the club house. Gordon Kelly continued:

"Now, all this may sound strange to you, Mr. Smith, but I am just as confident that I can soon become a good ball player as I am that you will continue to win baseball pennants."

Bill Smith laughed.

"That seems to put it up to me," he said. "You've got the instincts of a ball player all right. They always put it up to the manager, especially the pitchers. You must want to be a pitcher."

"No, sir; I want to be an outfielder."

"A Ty Cobb, eh?"

"A Ty Cobb, or a Tris Speaker, or better."

Bill Smith grinned. Ever since he broke into the game he had been pestered, off and on, by all sorts of baseball "hugs," but this was about the worst case he ever experienced. Here was a young man who confessed he never saw a game of ball, yet was positive he had the makings in him of a player that would surpass two of the greatest diamond stars the game ever produced. The idea was as absurd as if a street sweeper came in and said that while he didn't know anything about the oil business, he was sure he could make more money in it than John D. Rockefeller. The whole thing was so ridiculous it was really funny. Bill Smith's grin broke into a hearty laugh. But Gordon Kelly didn't laugh. He was never more serious in his life. The manager noticed the expression on the young man's face and his laughter ceased.

A High Standard.

"Better than a Cobb or Speaker, eh? Well, I don't mind saying, Mr. Kelly, you have set a pretty high standard for yourself. Now, then, what do you want me to do, sign you up at Ty Cobb's salary?"

Gordon Kelly shifted his chair so that he faced the manager.

"Nothing like that, Mr. Smith," he said soberly. "Here's my proposition: The Southern League championship season opens on April 10, about six weeks from now. What I want you to do is this: Give me permission to practice here with you and your players until the season opens. If by that time I haven't demonstrated my worth to you as a ball player, just say so, and we will part the best of friends as far as I am concerned. If, on the other hand, I do demonstrate to you that I am entitled to a place on your team, I will ask that you sign me up at whatever salary you care to pay me. There's nothing unfair, or unreasonable in that, is there?"

Bill Smith took three or four puffs of his cigar before replying to this direct question. What sort of person was he dealing with, he wondered. Was this young man simply an extraordinary baseball "bug," or was he mentally unbalanced? Was he baseball crazy, or crazy in the real sense of the word? If he simply had the baseball craze, there was nothing astonishing about that and Bill Smith figured he would have no trouble in handling the case. He had handled many of them successfully in his time. But the other kind of insanity was a little out of his line, and required not a baseball exuert, but an alienist.

To Be Continued To-morrow.

What Caraway Seeds Did

"NO, I thank you," said the man from Michigan. "Not any, thanks. I never eat cake or candy."

"How strange!" murmured the innocent young woman.

"Listen," said the man from Michigan, "and I will tell you the whole sad story. Once I was very fond of cake, and perhaps I would now be if it were not for fear"—here the Michigander looked fearfully over his shoulder—"of caraway seed."

"I can not stand caraway seed. That's why I eat neither candy nor cake, and almost no bread. It is a great hardship."

"But there are some kinds of cake and candy that do not contain caraway seed," objected the innocent young woman.

"No. I used to think there were. Once or twice I thought I had discovered a kind that was free from caraway seed, but it always turned out to have some caraway seed in it.

"I once hired a special baker to bake cake and bread for me without caraway seed in it. I was happy for a while. Then all of a sudden I hit full force into a caraway seed in the midst of my cake. It was a pink cake with gothic ornaments such as I delighted in. It was a cruel shock.

"I flew down the street to the dentist's to get him to give me something for the pain in my tooth, and after he had administered cocaine plentifully I went after the baker. He tried to explain that the boy was responsible for the caraway seed and that it was all an accident, but I chased that baker over the counter and under the counter until I had him.

"Nevertheless, people have put caraway seeds over on me many times since. Sometimes I analyze a piece of cake when I am especially hungry for it, exploring the last crumb. When I am reassured and thrown off my guard I bite into a sixty horsepower caraway seed that makes my hair stand on end.

"There is no help for it. Caraway seed is a universal affliction."

Do You Wonder

That Cupid Is Such an Adorable Rogue When His Mother Was Such a Lovely Trouble Maker?

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

LOVELY he is—adorable, a plotter, irresistible, a knave, sweet as an almond-blossom, a dabbler in trouble, soft-hearted, cruel, "Love" his business, a promiser, offering bitter-sweet, unutterably a darling, unchangeably a rascal! And everybody—('specially those who have been stirred 'round in one of his concoctions which he calls "an affair")—everybody ('specially those who know he is both an almond blossom and a rascal—and yet love him)—everybody wonders why he is all this! Maybe you do not think of his mother when you wonder that. How could he help but be lovable, a rascal, and a contradiction? For his mother he had a creature, herself born of the sea, the sea which is tender and terrible, smiling and stormy, and all mystery—Venus—goddess of beauty, lover of laughter and love and light, herself a rogue and a saint! Playing all day long under the sun and sky of dream-fostering Greece, in the white-circle of her arms, strained to her breast, teased with a rose in her idle hand, looking often into the hot blue of her eyes, hearing her laughter, comrade in her mischief—son of a Beauty—a devotee of Love—a sweet Rogue—how could he be other than what he is!

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

The forger smiled, and there was malignant triumph in his expression.

"Pooh!" he exclaimed. "Even if I used it, they would never get on to me. See this?" He pointed at the strange contrivance on the muzzle.

Mary's curiosity made her forget for a moment her distaste.

"What is it?" she asked, interestedly. "I have never seen anything like that before."

"Of course, you haven't," Garson answered with much pride. "I'm the first man in the business to get one, and I'll bet on it. I keep up with the times." For once, he was revealing that fundamental egotism which is the characteristic of all his kind. "That's one of the new Maxim silencers," he continued. "With smokeless powder in the cartridges, and the silencers on, I can make a shot from my coat-pocket, and you wouldn't even know it had been done. * * * And I'm some shot, believe me."

"Impossible!" Mary ejaculated.

"No, it ain't," the man asserted. "Here, wait; I'll show you."

"Good gracious, not here!" Mary exclaimed in alarm. "We would have the whole place down on us."

Garson chuckled.

"You just watch the dinky little vase on the table across the room there. Tain't very valuable, is it?"

"No," Mary whispered.

A Spectacular Shot.

In the same instant, while still her eyes were on the vase, it fell in a cascade of shivered glass to the table and floor. She had heard no sound; she saw no smoke. Perhaps there had been a faintest clicking noise. She was not sure. She stared dumfounded for a few seconds, then turned her bewildered face toward Garson, who was grinning in high enjoyment.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," she declared, vastly impressed.

"Neat little thing, ain't it?" the man asked, exultantly.

"Where did you get it?" Mary asked.

"In Boston, last week. And between you and me, Mary, it's the only model, and it sure is a corker for crime."

The sinister association of ideas made Mary shudder, but she said no more. She would have shuddered again if she could have guessed the vital part that pistol was destined to play. But she had no thought of any actual peril to come from it. She might have thought otherwise, could she have known of the meeting that night in the back room of Blinkey's, where English Eddie and Garson sat with their heads close together over a table.

"A chance like this," Griggs was saying, "a chance that will make a fortune for all of us."

"It sounds good," Garson admitted wistfully.

"It is good," the other declared with an oath. "Why, if this goes through, we're set up for life. We can quit, all of us."

"Yes," Garson agreed, "we can quit, all of us." There was avarice in his voice.

The tempter was sure that the battle was won, and smiled contentedly.

"Well," he urged, "what do you say?"

"How would we split it?" It was plain that Garson had given over the struggle against greed. After all, Mary was only a woman, despite her cleverness, and with all a woman's timidity. Here was sport for men.

"Three ways would be right," Griggs answered. "One to me, one to you and one to be divided up among the others."

Garson brought his fist down on the table with a force that made the glasses jingle.

"You're on," he said, strongly.

"Fine!" Griggs declared, and the two men shook hands. "Now, I'll get——"

"Get nothing!" Garson interrupted. "I'll get my own men. Chicago Red is in town. So is Dacey, with perhaps a couple of others of the right sort. I'll get them to meet you at Blinkey's at 2 to-morrow afternoon, and, if it looks right, we'll turn the trick to-morrow night."

"That's the stuff," Griggs agreed, greatly pleased.

But a sudden shadow fell on the face of Garson. He bent closer to his companion, and spoke with a fierce intensity that brooked no denial.

"She must never know."

Griggs nodded understandingly.

"Of course," he answered. "I give you my word that I'll never tell her. And you know you can trust me, Joe."

"Yes," the forger replied somberly. "I know I can trust you." But the shadow did not lift from his face.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Wedding Announcement.

Mary dismissed Garson presently and betook herself to her bedroom for a nap. The day had been a trying one, and, though her superb health could endure much, she felt that both prudence and comfort required that she should recruit her energies while there was opportunity.

She was not in the least surprised that Dick had not yet returned, though he had mentioned half an hour. At the best, there were many things that might detain him, his father's absence from the office, difficulties in making arrangements for his projected honeymoon trip abroad—which would never occur—or the like. At the worst, there was a chance of finding his father promptly, and of that father as promptly taking steps to prevent the son from ever again seeing the woman who had so indiscreetly married him.

Yet, somehow, Mary could not believe that her husband would yield to such paternal coercion. Rather, she was sure that he would prove loyal to her whom he loved, through every trouble. At the thought a certain wistfulness pervaded her, and a poignant regret that this particular man should have been the one chosen of fate to be entangled within her mesh of revenge.

He Has a Fight With a Scotch Kid and Comes Out a Victor After a Hard "Scrap."

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

I HAD a fite with a Scotch kid yesterday. It was a close fite; the Scotch kid came close to gitting killed beefoar I felt sorry for him. I got a black eye & that was all.

I doant like fites, & I nevver have a fite until I am forced into it, but this Scotch kid was too fresh. He caim to our house with his father. His father was a Scotch Highlander wich had fought all thru the Boer war & dident git hurted. He was jest like his littel boy. His naim was Duglas McNabb & the naim of the kid was Sandy McNabb.

We went out into the yard to play catch & Sandy wasent a good player at all. He had on kilts; he sed that his mother always asked him to wear kilts, but he sed he was glad of it beekaus he was a true Scotchman & wasent ashamed of it. The Scotch are a undefeated race, he toald me, & these kilts stands for currage & fiteing qualities.

The Irish is pritty good fiters, too, I sed. My father is Scotch, but my mother is half Scotch & half Irish, & I am proud of the Irish blood that is in me.

But the Irish aint a undefeated race, sed Sandy. Maybe thay have been defeated, I sed, but thay nevver knew it if thay was. Why doant you catch the ball onst in a while, butter fingers? I sed to him.

Golf Was His Pie.

I dinna care much for this sorry kind of a gaim, he sed to me. Golf that is a braw gaim. I doant think much of gold, I toald Sandy. Golf is a high-toned cousin of shinney. Baseball is the gratest gaim in the wurld. It taiks brains to play baseball.

It can't talk much brains to play baseball or the Scotch wud be playin it, sed Sandy McNabb. The Scotch are all brains. Look at Bobbie Burns, he sed. That man knew everything. Shakespeer knew a lot, too, I sed. He knew a littel, sed Sandy, but not as much as Bobbie Burns. Bobbie Burns knew moar than my own father knows, he sed.

Tom Moore was Irish, I sed, & he rote pritty potrey, too. Why doant you catch that ball?

I dinna cair to play moar the noo, sed Sandy. It hurts my fingers muckle, he sed. So we quit, but Sandy dident stop talking.

Bobbie Burns was a all around geenyus, he sed. My father says I am going to look like him wen I grow up & rite potrey, too, to keep up the naim of the undefeated race.

How It Started.

Maybe you will rite potrey, sed I to Sandy, but you will nevver look like Bobbie Burns, you littel wart. Bobbie Burns was always handsome, as a kid & as a man. When you grow up you will prubly look like you look now, only you will have to spend a littel Scotch munny for bigger kilts & you will have red hair on the calfs of yure legs ware you havent any pants, I sed.

I will na be called a wart, sed Sandy. Hoot mon, he sed, talk that, and he hit me in the eye. I didn't know he was going to hit me; that is how I got my black eye. Then I sailed into Sandy, licked him good & proper. I was going to maik fun of him & his underfeated race, but I happened to think that I am 3-4 Scotch, too.

He Was a Great Man

"LOOKING impressive is well worth while," said the drug store man. "Let me tell you a story.

"John Higginbotham, who lived in the town that I came from, was a fine old fellow. But he was of such a retiring disposition that he got the worst of everything. He was so meek and mild that he never went anywhere, saw anything or did anything.

"He was given a back seat on all special occasions. He wore a smile most of the time, so few people ever knew how sensitive he was about his clothes and his personal appearance generally.

"There came a time when the doctor said John must wear spectacles. John was filled with consternation because of his apprehension as to their effect on his looks. He feared that men, women and children would make fun of him.

"Nevertheless, he wanted to wear spectacles, because the President of the United States was coming to town and John wanted to see him. He wanted to know if the President looked like the pictures in the newspaper. So he wore spectacles.

"His legs trembled beneath him when he first ventured out on the street wearing the spectacles. However, the clear vision they gave him was delightful!

"The first friend he met was Gabriel Von Vorden, and John colored to the roots of his hair at the steady gaze with which Gabe regarded him. He could see plainly through the new spectacles, however, that Gabe's face wore an expression of wonder rather than amusement.

"'The very man!' exclaimed Gabe.

"'You see,' he went on to explain, 'there isn't a man in the village to preside on the platform when the President speaks. There isn't a man who looks impressive enough to sit beside the President. But with them specs, John, you can sit right up there and the President will take you for a college professor.'

"That's how it happened that John Higginbotham shared the honors of the occasion along with the water pitcher, the drinking glass and the President's handkerchief. And no doubt the President thought the village was quite a seat of learning, judging from the appearance of the man who sat on the platform, for every now and then he turned around to get the approval of the presiding dignitary, which John was too badly frightened to give.

"John's imperturbability made the President still more anxious to win the approval of such a stern and ponderous individual. As John never turned a hair all through the speech, the head of the nation went on his way thinking how shallow and in consequential his efforts were in the eyes of the deep man on the platform."

"How well behaved your children are," said the minister's wife.

"They are perfectly lovely children," added the minister.

The parents smiled proudly, and up spoke little Agnes:

"Pa said if we didn't behave he'd knock our blocks off; didn't you, pa?"

"There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best shall come back to you.

Give love, and love to your heart will flow,
A strength to your inmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

For life is the mirror of king and slave,
'Tis just what you are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have
And the best will come back to you."

THE FIVE FRANKFORTERS

A Novelization of the Play of the Same Name Now Running in New York

"What is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

By KATHRYN KEY.

Copyright, 1913, by the New York Evening Journal Publishing Company.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Instinctly Jacob had come closer to Charlotte. He knew well what was this "business" they were about to discuss.

"My nephew will take care of her," said Solomon firmly, "your presence is not necessary here. We know your views." And Solomon never guessed the riot of feeling beneath Jacob's calm exterior—nor what that feeling might threaten to his own well-laid plans.

"Will you come with me?" Jacob's voice thrilled with all the tenderness he must never put into words.

"But you are quite sure you ought not to be here?" Charlotte asked.

Jacob looked with all the stern fatalism of his race, at the men who were to gamble with a girl's happiness, then he turned with gentle tenderness to his fair-haired cousin.

"Quite sure," he said.

Charlotte shyly held out her hand to her cousin, and the Duke caught the other hand in his own, and as he softly voiced his 'An revoir" he put his lips again to that little right hand.

Was It an Omen?

Was it an omen that as Jacob drew the girl away down the long shady alley of the great hedges, he held his cousin's left hand? And who can tell what the little Princess Evelyn thought as she watched this other pair of cousins strolling beneath her tower window?

The Duke stood at the great hedge gate and watched the little white figure until it was dim and far. There was a long pause. Even Solomon hesitated to speak, when Dame Fate showed such remarkable ability to play his game for mi.

At last Duke Gustavus broke this silence so fraught with meaning for him: "If you plese, gentlemen"—

"Your Highness," said Amschel, hopefully; "you are quite sure you wouldn't rather have lun h earlier and talk business afterward?"

The Duke was a bit amused: "O, no!" said he.

"Oh, well, it was only a suggestion." But just at this hungry juncture, luncheon seemed more essential to our country gentlemen than financing all the reigning princes in the empire.

Solomon spoke: "Your highness, we have considered the question of a loan to you. May I ask how you purpose to invest such a sum as $12,-600,000 florins?"

"O, we shall find good use for it, you may be sure. Speaking generally, I shall devote it to the improvement of my circumstances."

Gustavus' tons showed the airiest amusement at his own bankrupt condition. Why trouble himself? Was it not the place of Providence and these very Jews of Frankfort to see that royal treasuries do not collapse for lack of proper support?

"Now, supposing that our firm would advance such a sum as you suggest," said Solomon, "what is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

"Security? Would it be customary to offer security in a matter of this kind?"

Gustavus did not often trouble his royal self with the details of such an every day matter as mere business.

"It is usual," said Amschel, dryly. He was still considering the way in which his suggestion as to lunching had been received.

The Duke looked at Fehrenberg as at a master. "Well, we could pledge a part of my revenue—of my taxes"——

"I must remind your Highness that you have already anticipated the next five years' income," said Fehrenberg. "But, gentlemen, the produce of the duchy could be enormously increased by a careful and prudent administration."

"Such as I will give it when he is my son-in-law," thought Solomon.

Fehrenberg went on, unconscious of how he was drawing the net closer and closer about the loving hearts of two unconsidered cousins —Jacob and Evelyn.

"There are extensive forests—some coal and mineral springs"——

A Brilliant Idea.

The Duke had a brilliant idea. He broke in: "Cannot I give you my personal security?"

And here was the cue for Solomon to make his great suggestion. The time had come when the die must be cast.

The brothers stirred uneasily—they knew what was coming. Amschel spoke: "Pardon me, I should like to leave you now."

"I don't understand," said Gustavus. And in truth he did not. What turn were matters taking?

Ceremony was beyond Amschel.

"At this point I beg to cetire," he said plaintively. "I apologize—but I won't stay."

"Carl, with suave elegance, followed him; but the Duke and Solomon managed to retain Count Fehrenberg and Nathan, the impassive English brother, as seconds in the duel of wits that was about to follow.

There was an elaborate tensity in the atmosphere. The air, that great medium for carrying all "wireless" messages, conveyed in its taut stillness some foreboding to the four men who were about to play fate, of what this moment might mean to many lives.

Gustavus was nervously toying with Evelyn's crimson rose. At a moment like this he vaguely sensed the presence, the influence, of his girlish cousin. "I am getting inquisitive."

You Are Bankrupt.

"Your Highness," began Solomon with solemn intensity; "you give me your permission to be quite candid? You are on the verge of bankruptcy. One thing, I believe, and one thing only, can save you, and that is"——

Here even Solomon hesitated.

"Yes, yes?" impatiently.

"A judicious marriage."

Gustavus laughed in evident relief. "We have thought of that, haven't we, Fehrenberg? We looked about for an alliance of that kind, but we could find nothing suitable!"

He considered the beauty of the glowing red rose for a moment, and then, with a sudden access of feeling, buried his lips in his flaming crimson heart. Little Evelyn, little Evelyn, the time has come when all your good fairies must guard you!

"What would your Highness consider suitable?" asked Solomon with grave insistence.

The Duke laughed, but was there an undercurrent of bitterness flowing beneath the nonchalance of that laugh? "Youth, charm, beauty—and —and a great deal of money!"

Still more gravely, Solomon made answer:

"I can offer you these qualities."

The Duke was evidently amused.

"YOU can! I am overwhelmed by the versatility of your enterprise! Where have you found a lady of my rank so admirably fitting?"

Then Solomon voiced a truth so deep that even he who spoke scarcely realized the depth of its sacred import.

"Your Highness, the conception of equality is not the same to-day as it was yesterday. Times change. Your Highness is not one of those who refuse to advance with the times."

Lifting the Cloud.

Always there is a little time of lifting cloud before the storm breaks. Gustavus laughed.

"If you compliment me you will make me suspicious." A line of his Virgil came to his mind: "I fead the Greeks even when they come bearing gifts."

Nathan broke in: "Solomon—your Highness—I thing we should reconsider our proposal"——

"Before I hear what it is," exclaimed Gustavus, impatiently. "Come, Baron, what have you on your mind?"

"I propose that you should marry my daughter, Charlotte."

Duke Gustavus of Taunus rose. His sword clattered against the stone rim of Cupid's fountain. Evelyn's red rose slipped from his fingers and fell unheeded at his feet. Perhaps he could soon trample on that blood-red rose and crush it. Perhaps, but the second sped on.

"Sir! Fehrenberg, you hear? What do you say to that?"

Fehrenberg answered with the stiffness of his utter horror and amazement:

"Your Highness, court etiquette has not considered such an emergency. I have never heard of a precedent for such a proposal."

"I admit I am a little taken back. But you might have chosen a moment when I would have requested you to leave my house instantly as the most convenient conclusion to our conversation."

Solomon answered the Duke:

"Sir, in the choice of the right moment lies the success of the game."

"Are you a gambler?" the Duke asked with slow earnestness.

"All games are not games of chance. I do ont trust to luck, but to calculation."

Knowledge of the World.

"And you calculated on my being driven into accepting your proposal by my dread of bankruptcy?"

"I calculated on my knowledge of the world enabling you to consider its advantage impartially."

"Oh, I appreciate the advantages," said Gustavus with slow scorn of himself who could be bought, scorn of the man who sold in his turn.

"Advantages to both our families,' said Solomon.

"Sir, you tempt me to speak without reserve. You make me think of a highwayman gone mad; who says to me: 'Stand! Take my money! It is yours. Refuse it at your peril!' Such audacity is magnificent, but a little unusual."

He looked at the red rose that lay on the ground, and then picked it up very gently and threw it in the clear waters of the Fountain of Cupid. Alas for the Princess Evelyn! Alas for Jacob! "Yet your persistence commands a certain admiration and attention."

Solomon bent over the Duke, who had sunk to a seat on the fountain's edge. "And your Highness will come to a decision? This is the great moment. If your Highness will but say 'Yes' now, the agreement shall be signed at noon to-omorrow and the money handed to you at once."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

What Has Gone Before.

Having backed heavily the peace of Europe Nathan Rothschild is disconcerted to find that Napoleon has burst forth again, and all the banker's outpouring of gold for national development in England will be endangered. The banker hastens to Waterloo. There are the English, who have guaranteed to him that the peace of Europe shall be maintained. From a height above the field of battle Rothschild sees the whole of it. Rothschild sees that the wealth of the world lies in London, his for the taking if he can be first on the ground with the news of the battle. He hurries to London, and next morning appeared on the Exchange. That night he went to bed $10,000 000 richer.

Seven years later a great banker left Vienna, another Naples, another Paris and another London, and traveled to a little old house in Jews' Lane, in Frankfort-am-Main. It was a gathering of the house of Rothschild. Perhaps some king was very hard pressed for money. "Little Jacob" opposes Solomon's plan to marry Charlotte off to the Duke of Taunus. He is backed up by Frau Gadula. The Duke makes love to Charlotte.

Natural History Lessons

No. 1---The Hook Worm

By DOROTHY DIX.

AMONG the most interesting of the native fauna and flora to be found in our midst is the hook worm. This valuable creature belongs to the category of domestic animals (genus henpeckis), and it forms a useful and indispensab'e adjunct to households where no maid is kept.

The hook worm is indigenous to the United States, and it flourishes most plentifully in cities, only a few rare and scattering specimens of it having ever been found in the country. Scientists differ concerning its history, but a consensus of the best authorities indicates that its origin was contemporaneous with the coming in of the fashion of frocks that button up the back, and that the great original hook worm was discovered by a fat woman with short arms.

From this small and humble beginning sprang the millions of hook worms that now pervade the land and make glad the waist places of swell dressers by pulling together belts that do not meet by four inches. Thus do we see how marvelously nature provides for all contingencies.

In appearance the hook worm is an elongated and tubular - looking animal with two feet, two antennae (technically known as hands), and two eyes situated near the top of its head, which is not infrequently bald. Also it has a tongue, which it shoots off with great rapidity and volubility upon occasions.

Apparently the eyesight of the hook worm is very poor, as it is unable to see a button unless it is the size of a silver dollar, and it cannot distinguish an invisible loop from a chance to tear a hole with a hook in the back of an imported dinner gown.

Likewise the hook worm is very awkward and clumsy in the way in which it manipulates its antennae, it having been estimated that it makes 11,496,851 different motions and dabs and fumbles in trying to insert a perfectly plain hook in a perfectly obvious eye.

These faults of the hook worm are accounted for, however, by scientists on the theory that it is still an imperfectly developed animal, and it yet lacks about seventeen additional hands and four more pairs of eyes in order to perform satisfactorily the function for which it was created. Doubtless these will be acquired in the process of evolution, and our great-great-great-great-granddaughters may rejoice in the possession of hook worms with a full complement of faculties that will be able to do their appointed tasks and fasten up a French confection before you could say "Scat!"

Little is known of the habits of the hook worm, as, although it is a domestic animal, it absents itself from the house all day, only returning at night to be fed. Its period of greatest activity is just before dinner and theatre time, when it gets busy and may be heard making weird and profane noises.

The hook worm is exclusively a lady's pet, men seeming to have no use for the animal, though they are so highly esteemed by women. It should be stated in this connection, though, that opinion among women is equally divided as to whether it is best to catch a hook worm when he is young and break him in to your own style of fastenings, or to tie up with a hook worm that has been thoroughly trained by some deceased lady who was addicted to lingerie shirt waists. Much is to be said in favor of each side of the question; but, alas! there are many problems in life, and even the young hook worm who is conscientiously bent on doing his duty sometimes gets in bad, for in his excess of zeal he displays a skill that sets the woman who owns him to guessing.

The hook worm has a very limited vocabulary, the only two expressions that it has ever been heard to use being "Helen Blazes" and a word that is muffled and indistinguishable, but that sounds as if it started with a big, big D.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"WHEN engaged in washing dishes," a woman of exalted ideals advised in a woman's magazine, "fix not your mind upon the sordidness of the task. Rise above it by looking with appreciative eyes at the delicate tints in the china, its pure transparency, the softness of its curves. Learn the history of Dresden, Limoges and Sévres, and the task becomes an intellectual joy."

Daysey Mayme Appleton read, and what she read sank in to come out the next morning when she found herself confronted with the task of washing greens.

A young man, of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, was coming and he had expressed the yearning that comes to all in the spring to have greens for dinner.

She had bought a peck in the belief that there would be enough left to last a week, and when she poured out cold water preparatory to washing them she fixed her mind on all that they represented: Springtime, freshening showers, the sunlight, the singing of the birds, blue skies, the drowsy humming of insects and fragrant zephyrs that stirred the leaves to dancing motion.

She washed and washed and rewashed, digging back into her brain for some knowledge of botany. "That is a scutate," she said, taking a leaf through seven waters, "and this is a reticulate, and here is a beautiful example of the pinnated."

She took the leaves through the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth waters, unconsciously thinking less each time of the tender zephyrs that had stirred the leaves to dancing, the bright sunlight and the gentle showers. There was an accumulation of sand that proved her task was only begun, and she washed the greens through four more waters. Her back ached, she stood first on one foot and then on the other; her hands began to feel as if they belonged to the washerwoman, and her spirits began to droop.

When she submerged the greens into the twelfth water her soul was submerged with them and it never rose again to the plane of exaltation advised by the woman of lofty ideals in the magazine. At last her task was completed and she put the greens over to boil and there seemed a Great Plenty, and when she dressed to meet the man of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, they boiled and boiled and boiled, looking a little less every time she lifted the lid.

"It's a whole peck of greens," she said with a sob at the dinner table an hour later, putting before her Best Beloved a dish in the center of which was a little green mess no bigger than a bug that had been stepped on.

Being Kind to Children

"IT doesn't pay to be too kind to children," said Gritzen.

"Why?" asked the motherly woman.

"Well, I'll give you an illustration. We had a man come to dig our garden. I know well how it hurts to dig. An innocent man can do enough digging in three hours to lame himself for three weeks. We were all glad to see the man come, and he seemed to be a very good sort of fellow. He was fond of children. He said our twins would not bother him at all.

"William and Theodore hustled into their overalls and went out to watch the man, delighted to have him for a companion. The conversation for the first half-hour was something like this:

"'Me afraid of snakes?' said the man. 'Well, I should say not! I eat 'em.'

"'Do you like 'em?' asked Theodore.

"'Oh, no; I just eat 'em to show that I can.'

"'Don't they make your stomach ache?' asked William.

"'Not a bit. If they did I would just swallow a little fire and burn 'em up.'

"'Well, ain't you really afraid of 'em?'

"'Me? Afraid? Ha, ha! That makes me laugh.'

"'Well, ain't you?'

"'No; I'm used to 'em. I'm a circus man. Did you ever see the man in the cage with the lions at the circus?'

"'Yes; I saw a circus once, and there was a man right in the cage with the lions!'

"'I'm that man. Nothing can scare me. But I've quit the circus business for a little while. I took to diggin' just for a change.'

"After an hour or so the conversation was more like this:

"'Here, you rapscallion! Move your foot!'

"'What for?'

"'What for? I want to dig there. I'm not supposed to dig your feet. Here, let them things alone!'

"'What for?'

"'Because your father will want to be able to find them. Stop throwing that dirt. Don't you hear your mamma knocking on the window pane at you? Here, who done that? I'll have to tell your mamma on you. You kids are a nuisance! Get out of here!'

"It's all right being nice to children for a while, but, you see, they can stand it a lot longer than you can!' concluded Gritzen.

Probably Right.

School children know a great deal more than they used to. In fact, some of them, in their own opinion, at least, are quite capable of tutoring their tutors.

"Those kiddies I teach are as knowing as an encyclopedia," said a teacher a week or two ago.

"In what way?" asked his friend.

"Well," replied the scholastic person, "the other day I set a problem in arithmetic: 'A rich man dies and leaves a million dollars. One-fifth is to go to his wife, one-fifth to his son, one-eighth to his brother, and the rest to the hospitals. What does each get?'"

"Yes?" inquired the friend, not very interested.

"Back came the reply from the smallest boy in the class: 'A lawyer, sir.'"

: Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women :

How Girlish Willet Kershaw Employs Simple Methods to Retain Her Natural Loveliness

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

"BEAUTY is exactly like a spring that wells up clear and sparkling from a pure source," said Willette Kershaw to me.

Slowly and gropingly I was finding my way back to sunshine and the simple facts of every day after the final curtain had fallen on the five artistic plays at the Princess Theater, in New York, and "Any Night" was a memory instead of a presentation of a shamefully bitter reality. But it was a potent, poignant memory, and the sweet, wistful-eyed girl sitting with me in the quiet office had just presented a death-in-life portrait of Mary Magdalen of to-day.

"Take the sad, sodden consumptive I have just portrayed; she has the same features; she is really a different phase of the Fancy I had just been in "Fancy Free." But the butterfly Fancy is saved, her wings are not trailed in the mud, and even though she is not a fine, deep, spiritual creature, she is still a woman, with the joy-of-living in her veins—so she is sweet and pretty. And the other creature, with a different story written on her eyes and mouth, is almost repulsive to look upon."

"I have never posed as a beauty. The only facts in my appearance that please me are hair and eyes—so I take very good care of them—and of the source of the fountain."

Her Secret.

"Ah, do tell me how you care for the beauty you—don't think you possess," said I, eagerly. Willette Kershaw is so genuinely girl—so dainty and attractive in the well-bred simplicity of simple blue serge and black and white hat that she seems an ideal model for Miss Sweet and Twenty to follow over the road to Springtime loveliness.

"It is not much of a secret—and yet so few seekers after beauty seem to have heard of it," said Miss Kershaw, whimsically. "It is just keep clean! Wash and wash and keep very, very clean—clean in body and mind and soul, until you fairly exhale a perfume of sweet, sane, cleanliness. Plenty of water for my hair, and plenty of cold water to bathe tired eyes. That is how I keep my pet assets in good condition. And I don't neglect the lesser faverites."

The clear eyes looked at me with the grave sweetness that makes you feel that this slip of a girl knows life and the facts thereof. Not a trace of make-up of any sort gave to Miss Kershaw the appearance of being anything she was not.

"No," said this observing young woman in answer to my interrogatory glance, "I do not make up for street use. Apart from questions of good taste it is not pretty. And I can't see why nice girls want to take their ideas of beauty from women they would never know. They would not deliberately copy the lack-luster, don believe anything-worth-while-will-ever-happen-again expression that a woman who has given all the world for nothing naturally comes to have. Then why copy her artificial complexion?

"Cleanness and simplicity," I mused. "To you these make beauty."

"These and being in tune with life," answered the girlish star. "If a girl is bitter and discontented—for just cause or merely because she is deliberately cultivating the bitterness in her nature, she gets down-drooping lips, a pinched expression around her nostrils, and, worst of all, her eyes lose all power to radiate magnetism and charm.

The Bitter Side.

"I speak from experience," she went on, in a hushed, hurt little voice in which I could hear the vibration of deep tenderness. "My mother was killed in a railroad accident. That was a time of anguish and bitterness. I hated the sun for shining. I could have murdered the birds for singing. I almost felt a desire to take the life of any happy human being I met. I almost went mad because I let my sorrow turn my whole nature to bitterness.

"Probably there is in all the world scarcely one girl who has come to be 20 without knowing life's hurts. Think of the young girls you know whose faces have a sad and wistful expression whenever they relax and stop playing the game of keeping up appearances.

"Perhaps bitter experiences are best of all, as Elbert Hubbard has said. They are if you use experience instead of letting it use you up.

"I'd like to tell all girls that bitterness and paint spoil the face with about equal thoroughness. And the two in conjunction! They just destroy every claim to beauty.

"Life is pretty impersonal. I found that out when I was in the 'Brown of Harvard's' company, that the indignant Harvard students abused because the star (Mr. Woodruff) wore the Harvard athletic H, to which, of course, he had no right. I could not be resentful nor bitter over their treatment of me; it was just what they considered the wrongful use of a sacred old custom that they were protesting against.

"Well, life is like that—impersonal—she is not abusing you; she is just going ahead, and if you get in the way you will get hurt. So you have to learn that, and take things impersonally—and keep in tune."

"Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
And a trouble is what you make it;
And it isn't how much you are hurt that counts,
But only—how did you take it?"

I quoted.

"Exactly," assented the pretty philosopher. "If you keep clean and sweet and simple, and in tune with life, the fountain of beauty must sparkle in the clear sunlight."

Miss Willett Kershaw in Two Charming Poses.

High Society.

A new-rich dowager, only recently removed from the environs of a Western packing house, has afforded much amusement while clambering up the slippery rounds of the social ladder. One day, after she had returned from circumnavigating the globe, she essayed to entertain a drawing room with a boastful account of her travels. She had been everywhere, and her flow of English was augmented by frequent wavings of her bediamoned hands and forceful noddings of her tiaraed head.

"Did you see the Dardanelles?" asked a sprightly debutante.

"And the Himalayas?" inquired another fair young bud.

"I dined with them in Paris," replied the dowager, triumphantly.

And she wondered why everybody smiled.

His First Mistake

ONE of the first tasks they set the new curate, who was handicapped by youth and inexperience, was to investigate the bona fides of a "widow woman" who had applied to the church for help. He departed nervously on his errand and knocked, as ill luck would have it, at the wrong door.

"How long has your poor husband been dead, my good woman? What number of children have you? Are any of them working? If so, what amount of money are they earning altogether?" were the questions he fired, like shots from a revolver, at the slatternly woman who answered his summons. "I presume I am addressing Mrs. Harriet Smith?" he added, noticing, with alarm, that she looked angry.

"No, you ain't," answered the woman, snappishly. "My name is Selfna Jackson, my bairns go to school, and my 'usband's doin' what is necessary to a plateful of steak and onions at this very moment. Would you like to know anything else? Where I was born? When I was christened? At what age I started courtin'? Perhaps," she concluded, sarcastically, rolling her tattered sleeve up above the elbow, "you'd like to see my vaccination mark before you go?"

But the bashful curate, redder in the face than a poppy, was already in full flight.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Severe Case of a Philadelphia Woman—Her Symptoms.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I had a severe case of nervous prostration, with palpitation of the heart, constipation, headaches, dizziness, noise in my ears, timid, nervous, restless feelings and sleeplessness.

"I read in the paper where a young woman had been cured of the same troubles by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I threw away the medicines the doctor left me and began taking the Compound. Before I had taken half a bottle I was able to sit up and in a short time I was able to do all my work. Your medicine has proved itself able to do all you say it will and I have recommended it in every household I have visited."—Mrs. Mary Johnston, 210 Siegel Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Bad Case.

Ephrata, Pa.—"About a year ago I was down with nervous prostration. I was pale and weak and would have hysteric spells, sick headaches and a bad pain under my shoulder-blade. I was under the care of different doctors, but did not improve. I was so weak I could hardly stand long enough to do my dishes.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and happy and I have begun to gain in weight and my face looks healthy now."—Mrs. J. W. Hornberger, R. No 3, Ephrata, Pa.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Making Charles Happy

A Humorous Story, Complete.

"IT seems a curious perversity of fate," said the young married woman, "that I should have a husband who really has a high regard for clothes, when so many women complain that they can not enlist their husbands' attention or check books in that noble cause.

"When Charles said yesterday morning, 'My dear, you will attend to ordering your spring hats before long, will you not?' I knew it was useless to put off the matter any longer. So I promised him that I would get something that very day. I laid aside that wonderful new play of Strindberg's that I was going to take over to the park and read, and the poor dear wrote me a check and went to the office looking quite relieved in his mind.

"After he had gone, I stopped to finish only one act of Strindberg and then I started. On the way downtown I figured out just what kind of hat I should get.

"It was not so hard to plan one in my mind, but it was a different matter to find the hat that I had planned. I went to six shops and tried on about 80 hats before I began to feel discouraged and decided that there must be something wrong with my looks.

She Looked Wild.

"In the sixth shop I met Mrs. Pelton, who looked wild-eyed and belligerent, and had a curious little straw concoction set upon the top of her hair, with round red objects falling off the back of it like a peck of apples descending a stairway.

"When she saw me, she clutched me menacingly by the arm, as if I were responsible for the present social system, for she said: 'Isn't it an outrage that human intelligence has to be expended upon pursuits like this! They talk about the senseless fashions of women! Do they realize that men make these styles and then force them upon us? Do you know the meaning of this whole insane subject of fashion? It's a device perpetrated by the merchants and manufacturers to get rid of the unconsumed surplus. Now, when our sex has the ballot, I hope——'

"I calmed her down, as much as I could by telling her that I felt that way about it. However, I was so relieved to find that perhaps the trouble was not with my looks, after all, that I walked over to a counter where several untrimmed hats were piled up in a bin and a lot of women were clutching at them and bought the first one from the top of the heap. It was light and soft and felt comfortable and did not make me look entirely like a cartoon when I was trying it on.

"So great was my relief at ending my search that I took home the hat with quite a feeling of satisfaction. I reasoned that it would be a simple matter to trim it myself, for all I should have to do was to leave off most of the things that the trimmed hats had on.

"That was yesterday morning. The rest of the day and until midnight last night I devoted to attempts to trim the hat. Fortunately Charles stayed downtown to dinner, so I could work without interruption. I trimmed and untrimmed eight times and nothing that I could devise looked right, so I gave it up in despair and went to bed.

"This morning as soon as Charles had gone I got the odious hat out from under the bed, where I had hidden it, and by the broad light of early day discovered what was the matter with it. The trouble was in the color, which I had failed to observe closely. It was not a normal straw color nor a yellow nor a brown, but a sickly, bilious, yellowish green, which made everything that it came into contact with look seasick, including me.

"It being now too late to return the hat, which had begun to show signs of wear, I carried it down to a dye shop and found that they could color it for me, but would have to change the shape, which was the least objectionable thing about it, and that it would take four weeks.

More Trouble.

"I then went to a department store and bought a bottle of dye, which the saleswoman said any child could apply with a small brush. In attempting to open the bottle after I had carried it home my knife slipped, the tin cap flew off and half the contents spilled over the kitchen table, a stack of dishes and the kitchen sink, to all of which it immediately adhered like enamel.

"Fortunately, it was Delia's afternoon out, but as I knew that she would be very cross when she saw the dye I spent two hours and a half and a can of scouring powder in removing it from the kitchen landscape before I could return my attention to the hat. The remaining contents of the bottle I then applied to the hat, except the part that splattered on myself. I then relined it, trimmed it for the ninth time, tried it on and found that I could stand to look at the finished product in the glass without feeling ill. I felt that I had earned that hat.

"When Charles came home I had it stuck on my head for him to look at and was just beginning the second act of Strindberg. He was very much pleased, and said: 'That looks very nice, my dear. Now, you see how easy it is to get becoming hats, so you must go down and order two or three more, and then you will be supplied for the summer."

Not What He Meant.

JONES and Long had not met for years. Once—that is in the days when both had been striving for fame in their different professions—they had been really good chums, and many a talk had they enjoyed together by the fireside as to the little places they would take in the country "when their ships came home."

The dream of Jones has been realized, and now, although a portly old fellow, it was with a sense of real pleasure that he prepared for a visit from his former friend.

"Ah, it's splendid seeing you down here, Long!" he said cordially, by way of greeting. "Quite like old times—what? And the missus, I know, is longing to shake you by the hand. But first—yes, you must come along and have a look at my greenhouse. You simply must!"

And Long went.

"Well, Jones," he said, "you've got a mighty pretty place down here; but to my mind, it's just a bit bare."

"Oh!" replied Jones, cheerfully, "that's because the trees are so young! Next time you come—why, they'll be so big that you won't recognize them!"

GIRL WRESTS FIRST PLACE IN PONY CONTEST FROM BOY

Florence Greenoe Jumps to Head of List With Almost 31,000 Votes---350 Entrants Competing for Prizes

Almost 350 contestants now are racing for the twelve Georgia and American ponies, and the votes of the leaders alone totaled 200,000 up to midnight Saturday.

District Four is the city contest with the most entrants. There are 58 boys and girls racing for the pony outfit in that district. District Seven, by a strange freak of circumstances, has just seven contestants, and the leader there seems to be having the easiest time of it, with only about 12,000 votes. A. Morrison is the leader, but he may have to bestir himself as hard as the leaders in any of the other districts before the finish is reached.

There are 86 boys and girls outside the city of Atlanta, but in the State of Georgia, contesting for prizes. Andrew B. Tribble, with about 11,000 votes, is leading.

The honor of pulling the most votes has been wrested from Frank Ison, Jr. Florence Greenoe passed him Saturday and rolled up a total of almost 31,000 votes.

Through inadvertence, the vote coupon was omitted from The Sunday American. It has been decided that the fairest way to remedy this is to make next Sunday's coupon worth thirty votes. Watch for next Sunday's paper, therefore. The coupon from it will count the same as the coupons from all six days' issues of The Georgian.

GOVERNMENT BY THREAT WILL FALL FLAT

Protectionest Wages Under Free Trade Methods Cannot Be Enforced.

BY B. C. FORBES.

Government by threat has been ushered in by President Wilson and his henchmen, business men complain.

* * *

Woodrow Wilson, you remember, began it before he took office by threatening the gallows for any financiers who spoke or acted panicky. His advisers were quick to catch the cue. To-day the air is charged with dire threatenings. Business men who won't stay in business until their last dollar has gone under free trade are to be hanged, drawn and quartered. They are to have nothing to say about the running of their affairs. The Government is to run things—at least to the extent of enforcing protectionist wages under free trade methods.

* * *

It can't be did. That's not grammatical, but it's expressive—and true.

* * *

No power under heaven can force a non-public company or firm to stay in business at a loss. Secretary of Commerce Redfield may rave until he is red in the face, a thousand high-priced investigators may pry into cost sheets and pay rolls, and indictments may be issued galore, but if capital cannot be employed at a reasonable profit in any industry, then capital will quit. That should be as plain as a pikestaff even to the neophytes who are talking nonsense about the veriest elementals of business.

* * *

The public, however, had better hesitate to accept at face value statements made by certain manufacturers to the effect that they will emigrate, bag and baggage, to Europe if pet schedules be not left uncut. No American manufacturer will fly to foreign ills he knows not of until he has been driven to the last ditch at home. This was admitted by John Hanan, for years President of the National Shoe Manufacturers' Association. He said:

"We have no disposition to ask our work people to accept less than they are earning now, and we shall continue to pay as high as we are doing now. But there must come a time when we must stop. Then we will have to take the line of least resistance. We do not want to enter into a conflict with the labor people, and therefore we must remove a large portion of our works to England or Germany, where there is cheaper labor.

* * *

Another manufacturer is quoted as saying:

I am assured on very high authority that the Singer people in Elizabeth, N. J., intend to move. What is there to prevent them? They have factories in Scotland, Italy, Russia. Nothing could prevent them from closing down their shops here and making the parts over there, and after importing them put them together in this country. That will be one effect of the tariff policy, and I am inclined to believe that many industries would adopt just that course. I know of other industries that contemplate such a course.

SHORT COVERING PUTS COTTON UP

Strength of Summer Months Is Notable in the Face of Favorable Rains.

NEW YORK, May 19.—At the opening of the cotton market to-day prices were 2 to 5 points lower than Saturday's final, on account of weakness in Liverpool cables and favorable weather reports. However, traders said it was an indication that the market was still short and there was much talk of higher prices.

A precipitant buying movement developed after the call, based on the strength of the summer positions. Shorts struggled for old and new crops, but offerings were very light and prices made a rapid advance of 7 to 13 points generally from the initial level. October seemed to be the heaviest pressed option on the list. This option rallied to 11.05, for a gain of 13 points. Other late months were in active demand; also near positions showed relative strength.

The feeling around the ring was more bullish than has been for several days. The advance came in the face of bearish reports from the belt. A wire from Texas said: "Believe conditions in Texas are very promising." The ring crowd is inclined to cover. It is generally believed that there is a large short interest existing, and favorable reports from the belt will be discounted for the moment. Apparently the bears do not care to extend themselves further, pending more propitious crop developments.

The weather map showed good rains over Sunday over the larger part of the Eastern belt, Texas and Mississippi. Indications pointed for further showers over the larger part of the cotton States. Washington's weekly weather forecast indicated occasional showers throughout the week.

During the late forenoon the market was steady with prices around the early high point. Offerings continued light, while the larger spot houses and shorts were aggressive in their bidding.

At the close the market was steady, with prices at a net gain of 5 to 10 points from the final quotations of Saturday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: May, 11.44; July, 11.57; August, 11.36; October, 10.97; January, 10.96.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: May, 12.21; July, 12c; August, 11.57; October, 11.10; January, 11.11.

Estimated cotton receipts:

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, May 19.—Liverpool came in surprisingly poor this morning, with futures about 7 points lower than due on old crops and 3 points lower than due on new crops. Spots 3 points lower; sales, 6,000 bales. One need not go far for an explanation of this weakness. The favorable weather towards the end of last week and more particularly the very unfavorable political news are again causing pessimism.

The latest continental advices say that Turkey is reinforcing its lines of defense and borrowing money to carry on the war, and that no peace treaty will be signed. Bulgaria and Servia are on the verge of war. The London peace conference seems destined to failure, as was the last one from the start. Under such conditions trade revival in Europe is more than uncertain. The masses will continue to practice reserve and economy and value decline.

Weather conditions over Sunday were very good. There were further beneficial showers Saturday in the Eastern States, followed by partly cloudy to fair, warm weather yesterday over the entire belt. Northwest Texas had some good rains Sunday.

Our market opened lower with a disappointed feeling over the poor Liverpool and the political news, but was upheld by the strength of July in New York, which position seems to be used to sustain the markets.

Montgomery, Ala., said: "All of the late planted now coming up and outlook is more favorable since the general rains over the belt. The replanted crop is a little later than normal, but with good weather can recover the recent setback."

ROCK ISLAND IS FEATURE OF DAY

Other Issues Hold Steady in Spite of Slump in C., R. I. and P. and Frisco.

By CHARLES W. STORM.

NEW YORK, May 19.—Sentiment was about evenly divided at the opening of the stock market to-day, and the list had an irregular appearance. Profit-taking developed in issues which had opened up, and some of them lost all or part of their gain.

Canadian Pacific opened ⅜ higher on account of strength in London, but within half an hour had lost all its advance and was ⅜ under Saturday's closing. Amalgamated Copper moved in a similar way. After opening unchanged, it declined ⅜. New York, New Haven and Hartford was again under pressure, opening ½ lower. Westinghouse gained ½, going to 62.

Among the other advances were Brooklyn Rapid Transit ¼, Great Northern preferred ¼, Reading ⅜, Union Pacific ½ and United States Steel common ¼.

Anaconda, Baltimore and Ohio, Missouri Pacific, Pennsylvania and Southern Pacific were lower.

The curb market was steady.

Americans in London were irregular.

The market was very irregular during the forenoon, with fractional losses in all leading issues. Missouri Pacific, Baltimore and Ohio, Erie and Pennsylvania were off ⅛. Lehigh Valley was up ¼ at 153. Reading up ½ at 160. At 95⅞ Southern Pacific was up ⅜. Canadian Pacific was unchanged at 236. Call money loaned at 2⅞.

Buying became a little brisker in the last hour and a number of securities made substantial gains over the midday range. American Can advanced ⅛, Brooklyn Rapid Transit ½, St. Paul ¼, New York, New Haven and Hartford ½, Pennsylvania ¼, United States Steel ¼, Union Pacific ⅛, Southern Pacific ⅜ and Reading ½. Amalgamated Copper made a slight fractional decline.

The market closed active. Governments unchanged; other bonds firm.

MONEY AND EXCHANGE.

NEW YORK, May 19.—Money on call 2½@2¾; time money unchanged; 60 days, 3¾@4; 90 days, 4; six months, 4¼@4½.

Posted Rates: Sterling exchange, 4.83½@4.87, with actual business in bankers' bills at 4.86½ for demand and 4.83 for 60-day bills.

Prime mercantile paper unchanged.

DRY GOODS TRADE REVIEW.

CHICAGO, May 19.—Marshall Field & Company, in their weekly review of the dry goods trade, say:

Although the weather in most sections of the country has been cool during the past week, totals of transactions continue to run ahead of those of 1912. Interest has been pretty equally divided between current and future business.

It is a significant fact that the preponderance of sales in dry goods at wholesale during the week has been in lines that are not considered necessities. This has been true of merchandise sold for both immediate and future shipment.

The opening of the selling season on drapery fabrics for autumn delivery shows a marked gain in sales over the corresponding period a year ago. Scrim curtains offered at special prices for immediate delivery were quickly taken.

Orders booked for furs and fur effect materials in women's coats indicate that merchants are keenly anticipating their future wants in this line.

Ambassador Page Bars Knee Breeches

NEW YORK, May 19.—Walter Hines Page, the new Ambassador from the United States to Great Britain, has sailed for his post at London.

In an interview at the pier on the subject of a court uniform for American diplomatic representatives, he remarked: "I have not considered that, but what was good enough for my worthy predecessors—Lowell, Choate and Reid—ought to be good enough for me."

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 19.—Hicks, Renskorf and Lyon were the leading buyers on the advance to-day and very little cotton was offered.

* * *

According to R. G. Dun & Co., the planting of cotton is progressing satisfactorily and an enlarged acreage is indicated, although it is doubtful whether the expansion will be as large as was previously anticipated. Complaints have been heard of cold, wet weather in Texas (much the largest production State), but, everything considered, the new crop situation is encouraging.

The New York Commercial says: "According to reports from the principal weather stations of the United States bureau the average precipitation in the eastern belt from the 1st to the 13th of May was approximately .51 of an inch. At this rate average precipitation this month will fall behind that of May, 1911, when it was but 2.32 inches. May of that year was the driest in four years, but that did not prevent the belt from growing the largest crop of all times. Precipitation during May in seven States comprising the eastern belt, expressed in inches, is shown in the following table:

States—	1912.	1911.	1910.	1909.
North Carolina	4.62	1.27	3.64	5.36
South Carolina	4.08	.65	4.03	4.76
Georgia	4.08	2.14	3.61	4.42
Florida	5.48	4.43	2.36	1.13
Alabama	3.60	2.85	1.69	6.51
Mississippi	4.41	2.10	4.88	9.95
Louisiana	6.98	2.82	5.68	5.85
Av. precipitation	4.75	2.32	3.56	4.46

Conservative buying of cotton on reactions appears to be favored.

Browne, Drakeford & Co., Liverpool, cable: "Market influenced by favorable weather reports and selling orders from the continent."

Dallas wires: "Texas and Oklahoma generally clear and warm."

NEW ORLEANS, May 19.—Hayward & Clark: The weather map shows partly cloudy to fair in belt, nice warm weather; nice rains in Northwest Texas. Very few, scattered light showers elsewhere.

Indications are for unsettled showers in northwestern quarter of the belt, part cloudy rest of the belt, possibly few isolated thunder showers.

Rainfall: Abilene, Texas, .62; Mobile, .04; Corinth, .12.

Washington's revised acreage in cotton last year proved to be 34,766,000 acres. The preliminary estimate made July 1 last year was 34,097,000 acres.

Washington forecast for week: Occasional local thunder showers in East Gulf and South Atlantic States during the week; showers locally in West Gulf States first of the week, general later. Temperature about normal.

Eastern Texas: Fair in south, showers in north portion to-night or to-morrow, cooler in northwest portion.

Western Texas: Fair in south, showers in north portion to-night or Tuesday; cooler to-night except in southeast portion. Cooler Tuesday.

Arkansas: Unsettled, scattered showers; warmer.

Oklahoma: Unsettled showers; cooler

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, May 19.—The cotton seed oil market was moderately active this morning, with the price 5 to 6 points over Saturday's closing bids. New speculative buying of August was in evidence. There was also some scattered covering of shorts. The firmness in lard and cotton were sustaining features.

ST. LOUIS CASH QUOTATIONS.

Wheat—No. 2 red ..... 100 @104
Corn—No. 2 ..... 59½
Oats—No. 2 38

CHICAGO, May 19.—While May wheat was firm and a shade higher on small offerings and buying by shorts, the more deferred months were ⅛c to ¼c lower and under more or less pressure.

Many of the shorts in wheat covered during the last half of the session, when May was bid up from 90 to 91.

July closed with an advance of ⅝ and September was ¼c higher. The buying of coarse grains by James Rankin and one or two others in the trade, who are given considerable credit for knowing crop conditions throughout the country, was the principal influence in wheat. There were further additional decreases in the visible supply of all the grains for the week—2,712,000 bushels of wheat, 1,483,000 bushels of corn and 800,000 bushels of oats.

These changes were about as looked for. There were many reports from Iowa of unfavorable conditions surrounding the corn planting and there were persistent reports of crop conditions in the oats country as being unfavorable. A great deal of the corn ground in Iowa and especially in the central part of the State was reported under water.

Corn showed gains of ½c to ¾c and oats were up ⅝c to ¾c.

Provisions were higher and firm.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Past Failures Are Stepping-Stones To Future Success

Be Sure There Will Not Be a Repetition of Disaster. Pointers in Poultry.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Experience is one of the best old teachers we have. The mistakes we made last year should be stepping-stones to better ones this year. Whenever you get into a hole and are able to get out again, fill the hole up before you leave it, to be sure that there will not be a repetition of the disaster.

Do not sell off your best stock at any price, unless you are sure you can buy something better at a fair price. This thing of selling off all the best eggs and stock will soon deplete any breeder's stock in trade. And that is just what many breeders are doing—just because they have the demand and can not resist the temptation to sell.

Hens that have access to the wood ash pile will pick out the small bits of charcoal, eagerly hunting for them. This is a gentle hint that where they do not have access to it, it should be supplied. Charcoal is one of the best things to ward off indigestion that can be used.

Douglass mixture is a strong iron tonic mixture supposed to be valuable for hens which have been laying heavily all spring and seem to be somewhat prostrated during the late springtime. It is made by adding one-half pound of copperas to one gallon of soft water; when dissolved, add one-half ounce of sulphuric acid. The mixture should be kept in a stone or glass vessel. Use a tablespoonful to the drinking water for a dozen hens.

In the matter of small things, do not try to follow too closely the methods of others. You can profit by the experience of others, but you can improve upon the details as you go along.

In procuring strong, fertile eggs for hatching, less forcing feeds should be used than when you are striving to produce all the market eggs possible and are not particular about the fertility. Milk is excellent for laying hens. Feed green cut bone sparingly to breeding hens. A constant supply of fresh green stuff is essential.

The foundation factors in the poultry business are: First, love of the work; second, a determination to succeed; third, attention to details, leaving nothing undone.

It is a very convenient and profitable plan to have two yards for each lot of fowls, so that one may be plowed and sowed down to green stuff while the other is being occupied. It can be used while the second is being sowed to green stuff.

Small Eggs.

Judge Marshall: I have a small lot of Plymouth Rock hens, raised in 1912. I have them now in a pen. They have laid a good many eggs, but the eggs are very small. I consider the eggs too small to set. The hens are healthy and large and hearty. What is the cause of the eggs being so small? Very truly, A. J. E. SMITH.

Madison, Ga., May 8, 1913.

ANSWER—There are several reasons why your hens may lay the small eggs. They may be from a class of hens which have been producing small eggs naturally, or they may be from stock that has been inbred for years. Some people think nothing of keeping the roosters they raise each year with the old hens and the pullets raised that year, which is the very worst kind of inbreeding and has a bad effect upon the stock raised from them. They are weak in constitution and lay small, insignificant looking eggs. Then, again, there is such a thing as getting your hens too fat—that is, all filled up with fat inside—which very frequently, but not always, causes the hen to lay small eggs.

Hatching chickens during the late summer or fall, when they do not fully mature before cold weather, very often causes them to produce small eggs during the first period of their laying. The matter of feed has something to do with the size of eggs. Hens that are fed too long upon restricted rations, with but little variety and little or no green stuff, beefscrap and such things, do not develop their eggs as they should.

Not knowing the conditions connected with your hens, I throw out these suggestions for you to gather your own conclusions.

Eggs—All Varieties.

THE EGGS of different varieties of fowls will be found classified under their respective breeds in the future, instead of under the classification of "Eggs."

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Derricks Arrive For Healey Bldg.

Work on Skyscraper Can Now Proceed—Preparing for Ivy St. Grade—Other Notes.

Two immense steel cranes, intended to lift girders into place for the Healey Building, have arrived and were lowered Monday morning into the great hole where the foundation of Atlanta's latest skyscraper is to be. These are the derricks which were delayed so long that they set the Healey Building work back several weeks.

Just as soon as the parts of the derricks can be assembled the actual work of raising the Healey Building will start, which should be by Tuesday. Everything else is ready, and hands are anxious to take up the job again.

Adjustments on Ivy Street.

Property owners along Ivy Street, where regrading is in progress, have begun to meet the new conditions. Gude & Co. applied Monday morning at the Building Inspector's office for a permit to underpin the Wellington Apartments, at the corner of Ivy and Houston Streets, so that this structure can be adjusted to the new level.

Decatur Land Boom.

Faith in Decatur land has of late found considerable expression in a sweeping publicity campaign carried on by Atlanta real estate agents. Among local advertisers who have extensive interests in the DeKalb suburb are Edwin P. Ansley, who is developing Winona Park; L. P. Bottenfield, who has a subdivision of 235 lots in Claremont Park; the E. Rivers Realty Company, who are offering fourteen lots; Charlton Barrett, developer of Decatur Heights; Foster & Robson, agents for the Wash Houston property; William S. Ansley and Cliff W. Ansley, who have long handled Decatur properties, and the W. E. Treadwell Company, who have installed a Decatur department, with J. M. Worsham in charge.

West Harris Street Sale.

D. W. Hale and Mrs. Mabel H. Moody have bought from a client of the Adair & Holt real estate agency a lot on West Harris Street, adjoining the northwest corner of Harris and Spring Streets, for $20,000. The frontage is 50 feet and the lot contains a ten-room double house.

The Adair & Holt agency have announced other sales aggregating $11,962.

Sales Aggregate $16,700.

Real estate men report a continued demand for lots in various sections. The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company have announced sales aggregating $16,700 in the Hedgerose Heights and Howell Mill Road subdivisions.

Whitehall Street Conveyance.

Mrs. J. W. Goldsmith, Jr., has sold, through the Turman, Black & Calhoun real estate agency, to G. R. Maddox and others 390 Whitehall Street for $12,000, or at the rate of $240 a front foot. This lot is 50x196, and north of Whitehall Terrace. It is improved with a small dwelling.

Turman, Black & Calhoun have sold for W. M. Cook and others to a client three lots on DeKalb Avenue and Wall Street for an aggregate of $2,500.

Ponce DeLeon Avenue Sale.

Mrs. M. F. Huggins has sold to Mrs. Kate G. Ryder, through J. F. Mayfield, of the Harris G. White agency, 346 Ponce DeLeon Avenue for $13,000. This is a ten-room two-story brick veneer residence on a 38x231-foot lot.

A Treaty Japan Has Steadily Dodged

The Japanese Have Not Lived Up to the Treaty They Are NOW Invoking in Their Own Behalf

Japan, we now know, has not only protested specifically against the California alien land bill on the ground that it is contrary to the treaty of 1911, but on the more general basis that it is an offense as between nations and not in harmony with the traditions and friendship existing between the Mikado's Government and that of the United States.

The reply of our Government is that there is no violation of treaty, and that the broader question of offense is a proper subject for diplomatic negotiations.

But with how clean hands can the Japanese Government complain of a violation of treaty?

If, under its terms, Japanese subjects have irrevocable rights to own and lease land in the United States, there must also be an equivalent. Citizens of the United States must have the right to own and lease land in Japan. Have they? The Japanese Parliament passed such a law, but IT HAS NEVER BEEN PROMULGATED. It has never been put into force by imperial decree. It is a dead letter.

That law, even as it stands, is not an equivalent such as Japan is claiming in the United States. An American corporation, for instance, cannot acquire lands or any other rights in Japan, even under the statute, unless a special charter is issued and the application approved by the Minister of Home Affairs.

The law reserves to the Japanese Government the right to exclude aliens and alien corporations from any place the Home Minister may deem advisable. The law excepts Hakodate, Nagasaki, Formosa and many other places where Americans might want to go.

JAPAN HAS NOT LIVED UP TO THE TREATY IT IS NOW INVOKING IN ITS OWN BEHALF.

As for the broader and more serious protest against an "offense between nations," this newspaper has already pointed out that the sovereignty of the United States is thereby challenged more than the sovereignty of Japan.

For eighteen years, until quite recently, the State of New York maintained a law prohibiting aliens from holding land. Indeed, that law was repealed only at the just-closed session of the Legislature and the repealing measure signed by Governor Sulzer.

IN ALL THOSE EIGHTEEN YEARS NO NATION OBJECTED TO THAT LAW AS A NATIONAL AFFRONT.

Any such objection would have been an international ABSURDITY.

It is the sovereign right of the United States to determine who shall and who shall not be citizens, and each State has its own right to determine whether individuals not citizens shall own land in it.

To challenge these sovereign rights is to step out of the domain of international law and custom into the arena.

Bryan's Still-Water Statesmanship

What shall one say when the registered pilot of the ship of state refuses to face anything but fine weather and a smooth sea?

Mr. Bryan is not willing to superintend the foreign relations of the United States if there is going to be any serious trouble about them. He says: "I made up my mind before I accepted the office of Secretary of State that I would not take the office if I thought there was to be a war during my tenure."

Now that Mr. Bryan's mind is thoroughly made up about it, he says he feels sure there will be no storm while his discriminating hand is on the helm.

These assurances may reveal a tender heart in Mr. Bryan, But they expose the incompetence of his executive character and the shallowness of his political thought. The implication is that wars are simply sinful and that they occur only when unjust or unamiable men are put by unhappy accident into places of power.

Mr. Bryan has lived and prospered so well by the mere facility of his tongue that he seems to have lost all sense of those real and passionate contradictions of human interest and honor that spring out of settled rights and moral convictions and that can not be disposed of by any form of words.

Imagine, for example, what would happen if Mr. Bryan's free and unlimited coinage of fine words were to be applied to such an issue as that raised by the suggestion that the "national honor" of Japan requires the admission to American citizenship of hordes of Orientals on equal terms with Germans or Frenchmen.

IMAGINE, IF YOU CAN, THE MEEK SUBMISSION OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO A JUDGMENT OF HAGUE LAWYERS THAT THIS COUNTRY OUGHT TO CONSENT TO BE ORIENTALIZED WITHIN THE NEXT TWENTY YEARS!

The plain truth is, of course, that nations, as they are now constituted, can not keep clear of war for a single year save as "strong men, armed," who keep their palace that their goods may be in peace. Brave and foreseeing men have indeed a right to look forward to a day when nations that now confront each other with menaces may be so transformed in their social and economic substance that all marked antagonisms of interest shall be canceled and dissolved.

BUT IN THE MEANTIME IT IS NOTHING LESS THAN A GRAVE MISFORTUNE THAT THE CHIEF SPOKESMAN OF THE UNITED STATES IN ITS FOREIGN RELATIONS SHOULD BE A STILL-WATER STATESMAN, WHO DECLINES IN ADVANCE TO FACE THE POSSIBILITY OF A STORM, AND WHO RELIES SOLELY UPON RAPTUROUS PHRASES TO MEET DANGEROUS EMERGENCIES.

Rev. John E. White on "Marriage in a Hurry"

By REV. JOHN E. WHITE.
Pastor Second Baptist Church.

A YOUNG lady of Georgia went to Vienna to complete her musical education in the great conservatory there. She met her fate in the person of a splendid young Austrian. The distance from her home in Georgia and the impatience natural to love's young dream seemed to make it impossible for the marriage to take place in due and ancient form at the bride's home. Desiring to proceed with the wedding ceremony in Vienna, after a full correspondence with the bride's family, a stubborn obstacle presented itself in their path.

Our Hurry-Up System.

The Austrian Government interposed a startling amount of legal red-tape with reference to the bride. It was required that legal evidence be transmitted through the Austrian Consul at Savannah that the young lady in question was of marriageable age, health record, moral character, and that her father was a citizen in good standing—all to be certified to in writing and attested by Government officials and ministers of religion.

Fortunately the young lady had no difficulty in complying with the Austrian marriage laws. The Germans are a long-headed people. They have discovered that the marriage altar is a national strength or a national weakness.

This discovery has not yet been made in Georgia and in this country. If statesmen had planned for it a more efficient hurry-up system for marriage than ours could not have been devised. There are enough forces of self-interest brought into play to facilitate matrimony in Georgia to constitute a practical conspiracy to get as many people married as possible.

The State and County laws of license make it profitable to the officers to issue licenses.

Over the doors of the office of Ordinary in Fulton County might be written the motto: "Marriage for Revenue Only," without serious offense. Justices of the Peace profusely welcome the touch of romance and the tingle of silver which brighten their dusty offices.

The preacher and the preacher's wife ardently believe in people getting married, and not for reasons too numerous to mention. So from the man who sells rice and cow-bells to the liveryman and the instalment furniture shop there is a chorus of "Hurry up, John, and hurry up Mary, and get off."

If the young foreigner had met his fate in Georgia, our hurry-up system, which asks no questions, and trusts to matrimonial luck, with a spur on both heels, would have convinced him that the people of this country were looking for a chance to marry off their young ladies quite regardless of whom they married.

So we have the fiddler to pay. Hurry-up marriages demand hurry-up divorce courts. The serious vows of wedlock, their sacred sanctions and solemn responsibilities, so vitally concerning the welfare of society and the happiness of souls, are bound to lack impressiveness since they are left almost entirely to a passing mention in the wedding ceremony which the average bride and bridegroom in this country wants hurried up and over with.

People are not likely to stick together through thick and thin if their marriage is cheaply conceived and unimpressively consummated.

"Hold Up, There!"

Another penalty but recently regarded as mentionable is the gross inattention to physical fitness. What brides can not be expected to know parents should insist on knowing.

The perpetuation of disease through the blood channels of the race begins at the unguarded marriage altar.

If we believe what the physicians are testifying, the marriage altar is society's "bloody angle," when it ought to be the open sesame of health, happiness and the growing of a stronger and purer race.

The demand for a "Hold up, there!" can not be long postponed. The only voice that can utter it effectively is the voice of the State.

The talk among ministers about organization for the purpose of refusing to perform a wedding ceremony except on conditions is practically useless. The Legislature must impose the necessary conditions with proper penalties attached.

Parents are perfectly ready to be protected, but are helpless to protect themselves. Proper marriage laws would educate public opinion against the matrimonial speed mania. Jacob could be trained to wait at least three months for his Rachel, and Rachel would not have to have her Jacob on a week's acquaintance.

It ought not to be possible for anybody's best man to swear successfully that the bride is 18 years old because the bridegroom told him so. The Ordinary is protected by the lie that is sworn to. The preacher is protected by the certificate of the same lie which has received the seal of the Ordinary.

Georgia is behind every other Southern State, except South Carolina, in the looseness with which marriage licenses are issued and in the practical absence of any requirements of vital statistics.

June is coming and our hurry-up system will celebrate itself.

Qualities That Popularize Men With Women and Women With Men

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX
Copyright, 1913, by Journal-American-Examiner.

JUST what are the qualities which make men popular with women and women with men? This query ofttimes puzzles wise heads to answer.

Some of the ugliest men physically have been great Lotharios; and women without marked beauty have been heart winners.

Men with no decided talents; men of no social prowess; men without money; men with shadowy records, have all succeeded with women where other and seemingly more attractive and certainly more desirable men have failed.

A bigamist who was under engagement of marriage to thirty girls, when he married two of them, says his success resulted from "always talking to women about themselves."

That is the secret of most friendships and all love affairs, and the explanation of most divorces lies in the fact that the man or woman ceases to talk about the virtues and charms of the other.

That is why beautiful women seldom make men happy, and why plain women frequently fascinate and hold.

It is not a peculiarly feminine trait, this love of hearing oneself analyzed and made the leading topic of discussion—it is merely HUMAN.

Might Gain Fiancees.

Men claim to be above it, but in truth they are delighted to be the absorbing subject of conversation when a woman is the converser. Any girl, however devoid of physical charm, if she possesses refinement and tact, can win the man she admires if she understands the art of keeping him entertained about himself and gives him to understand in a subtle manner that his characteristics, his aims, his desires and interests are matters of continual observation and study to her. The woman who undertakes such a course of action must be modest, however, and in no way thrust herself upon the man's notice. She must not be bold or self-assertive, for these are repulsive qualities to a man.

She must simply utilize her opportunities and be patient. A man, on the contrary, can make his opportunities to see a woman, and when he uses boldness and self-assertion in his suit she is all the better pleased, so long as he continues to occupy her time by talking about her, with only occasional references to himself and other people.

Therefore, it is not difficult to understand how, while an earnest woman might be slow in succeeding in her wish to win and hold the regard of one man, a busy, trifling man might accumulate thirty fiancees with ease and celerity.

Yet, on the other hand, woman has more latitude than man for conversation of this kind. A man is perfectly willing a woman should discuss his faults, and delights in having her analyze his sins and weaknesses (before marriage), with occasional laudations of his virtues; while a woman limits him to the recounting of her charming qualities and to anxious solicitude for her welfare.

The only fault she allows him to refer to is her ability to break hearts, or her cruelty to men who adore her, or her delicate physical organization. Most lovers talk of the charms of their sweethearts during courtship. Few husbands make the virtues of their wives a topic of conversation in the family circle—hence the divorce court is busy.

Few lovers are so tactless as to devote many minutes to lauding the virtues or charms of other women to their sweethearts.

Accuse Wives of Jealousy.

But, many husbands enjoy this topic of conversation, and accuse their wives of jealousy if they seem uninterested.

The successful bigamist surely would know better than to pursue such a course; so while better men have been losing their wives and sweethearts he has been winning an embarrassment of riches.

The way to win a woman lies through praise of her.

The way to lose her through praise of other women.

False Economy

Which Is the Better Business Policy, He Asks, the Spending of $60,000,000 for Our Navy or War Costing This Country $2,000,000,000?

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

A BUSINESS man who refused to spend $100 in order to save $1,000 would be regarded among business men as miserly and incapable.

The representatives of a rich nation who would refuse to spend fifty or sixty million dollars within two years to save an expenditure of two thousand million dollars ought inevitably to be classed as stupid, miserly and unpatriotic. The comparision is perfect with the conditions of to-day.

War with Japan is not only possible, but it is not improbable within the present month.

If we have war with Japan the experts who know and not merely the gossips who speculate are a unit in the belief that within a few weeks Japan could easily capture the Phillipines, the Hawaiian Islands and the Sandwich Islands.

Might Land an Army.

It is also agreed that Japan might land an army by trasports through Puget Sound upon American soil, make a demonstration against our beautiful City of San Francisco and invest the Panama Canal for bombardment or surrender.

The value of these island possessions are insignificant as compared with the after expense. This nation could not afford and certainly would not afford to suffer this indignity at the hands of the Japanese soldiers and sailors. If it took the last dollar of our money and the last contingent of our soldiers the United States would be compelled to vindicate its honor and its prestige by recapturing what Japan should win and fortify against us.

There is not a statistician of war who does not believe that this gigantic effort would cost our country between one thousand and two thousand million dollars.

The records of the Russian-Japanese war vindicate the belief that this is not an extravagant estimate of the cost.

Two thousand million dollars is a prodigious sum even in the day of magnificent figures in money.

These two thousand million dollars, plainly stated, would represent just exactly what the stupid, selfish, unpatriotic and mercenary statesmanship of our recent Congresses have cost this country.

Japan Would Be Silent.

There is no escaping the arraignment. If the naval programs which have been presented to Congress within the last ten years by men who are paid by the Government to tell the Government what is needed for the national defense had been adopted, as they ought to have been, by the representatives of the people there would have been a navy large enough to make this war, which is now probable, not only improbable, but impossible.

Japan would never have voiced a comparative ultimatum and certinly never have ventured upon a war against such a navy as our programs had required.

The men who have been responsible by their blindness and parsimony for our debilitated navy and our unpreparedness in national defense must inevitably be held responsible for the record—responsible for war and its expense and its humiliation.

It is useless and weak for the men to plead that they did not know and could not foresee.

It was their business as statesmen, looking beyond the present moment, to know the probabilities of the future. Their intelligence has been appealed to by information and by argument from experts and veterans so as to leave them no excuse save obstinacy not to have understood and to have foreseen.

The narrow selfishness of local and district legislation and the desire for personal preferment will always be held as the explanation of the unpatriotic and parsimonious policy which has crippled our navy and made possible the humiliation that seems to be at hand.

The only possible reparation which these blind and stingy statesmen can make to the country and to the people is to stand ready to vote now for prompt and liberal expenditures for the national defense.

"Pork Barrel" Politics.

They must do more than this. They must realize that the present instance, which follows fast upon an incident that occurred two years ago, may be and probably will be followed by a similar incident at a near-coming time.

And, whether or not the present difference with Japan should be composed or should result in a prodigiously expensive war, the representatives of the American people in Congress can only vindicate their stupendous folly and narrowness of the last decade by voting in succeeding years for a naval program which will make impossible the shameful conditions and the frowning menace of to-day.

Hereafter the American Congressman who votes to squander millions upon the pork barrel and his own re-election and refuses to expend the necessary millions for his country's peace and its defense must be branded as incompetent and treasonable and sent back to the people who were foolish enough to send him to Washington.

THE Pharisees are not all dead yet.

Bob and his sister Polly, in a crowd, walked all the way home from Sabbath school, a full quarter of a mile, each with an arm around the other. While passing over the little bridge they kissed with a smack that was heard above the rippling of the brook.

Bob and Polly had not been home ten minutes when their invalid mother was heard to shriek, "If you grown children do not stop quarreling you will kill me dead!"

Bob and Polly are Pharisees and simpletons.

A Baalam on Broadway, or in Bowery, who, through a megaphone, proclaims his love for his mother, is not to be trusted by her or by any one else. If she has any sense or decency herself she will, upon hearing him, pluck him gently by the sleeve and say, "Don't do that, my boy! Come home and whisper it in my ear or speak it to me with your eyes or manifest it with some little deed of kindness or act of courtesy."

Baalam is a Pharisee and a fool!

Schnickman, at the club, loudly and repeatedly declared that his wife was the sweetest, prettiest little woman in the world. He offered to bet $25 that he loved her better than any other husband ever loved a wife.

Schnickman was cashier at the ice plant. One night he absconded with the funds. A week later his wife and babies disappeared.

On entering Schnickman's house his bondsmen and the officers found a closet full of empty jugs and bottles. In the dining room they found a buggy whip that showed much use. Schnickman kept no horse and was never known to drive one.

Schnickman is a Pharisee and a villain!

When the old prophet Elijah, thinking there were none righteous left on earth, went up on Mount Horeb, as he was commanded, he stood to hear his Lord's condemnation of a way-way world.

Elijah was probably surprised when God's wrath was not proclaimed in the tempest, or in the earthquake, or in the thunderlight.

After these noisy things had passed by a still small voice informed Elijah that there were yet seven thousand Israelites whose lips had not kissed Baal.

The Still-Small-Voice was no Pharisee.

Mother-love ever expresses itself "Sweet and low, sweet and low," like the wind of a Western sea, while her little one, her pretty one, sleeps.

Mother is not a Pharisee.

Love may get itself expressed in the odor of a violet or in the dream of a kiss or in the memory of a silent sunset.

True lover never blusters.

True love is not loud.

WALKER HAS CHANCE TO SURVIVE POISON

Unknown Nurse Suggests Remedy That Gives Hope for Rich Banker's Recovery.

MACON, GA., May 20.—After having made all, even minute, preparations to die, under the belief that his death was inevitable and a matter of only a few days, B. Sanders Walker, Jr., the banker and real estate operator, is now given the hope that possibly he will survive the accidental taking of a bichloride of mercury tablet by mistake for a headache pill.

From Thursday until Monday Mr. Walker's kidneys were paralyzed, but then there was a slight manifestation, sufficient to justify the attending physicians in holding out a little encouragement to the man who for five days has regarded himself as on the very brink of the grave. Two physicians have been at Mr. Walker's bedside almost from the minute when the terrible pains in his stomach showed that he had taken poison instead of an aspirin tablet, and they have employed heroic remedies. From all parts of the United States have come about 40 telegrams from persons who were similarly poisoned or from doctors and nurses suggesting methods of treatment.

Nurse Suggests Remedy.

One such message came from a young woman nurses at Johns Hopkins Hospital, suggesting that a remedy of ax seed and olive oil might save the fast ebbing life of the dying man, as it had her own when she had her own when she had been in a similar condition. If he lives, Walker will owe his life to this young woman, of whose existence he was not even aware—a person whom he would not know were he to meet her face to face.

This remedy has been applied and has given Walker a fighting chance for life. Euremic poinsoning had already set in when the doctors decided to adopt the suggestion of the young woman, and unless relief had been immediate Walker would soon have succumbed.

Visitors Now Excluded.

All persons, except his wife, doctors and nurses, are now kept from Mr. Walker. The physicians say that the announcement to him that he might survive, after he had gone through the ordeal of preparing for death, brought on a nervous attack and intensified his weakness. It was believed necessary, as well as ethical, however, to tell the stricken man that he had a chance to live.

B. S. Walker, Sr., of Monroe, the father; Cliff M. Walker, Solicitor General of the Western Circuit, who is a brother, and other relatives are at the residence.

Mrs. Walker is making a fight that is the wonder of her friends. In her husband's company she has been ever brave and cheerful. Not once has she presented anything but a courageous front.

Walker's Nerve Unbroken.

Walker's first thought when told by the doctors that death was sure to result from his mistaken dose, was of his business; his second, of his friends. He immediately sent for his business associates, and in a short while had given definite intructions concerning the final disposition of all his affairs.

Following the winding up of his business, he called in his friends, announced hs doom and gave them one and all a cheerful farewell.

His cool nerve during the strain of the last three days has been the cause of comment upon the days when, as a star athlete for the University of Georgia, he time and again demonstrated the fact that he was possessed of an indomitable spirit that held him up when his teammates were breaking in their support.

Still on Brink of Eternity.

The friends who knew him a few days ago as the picture of health and a perfect specimen of manhood can hardly realize that following his tragic error in taking bichloride of mercury tablets instead of the headache medicine, he has been doomed to death, and that, although hope is now expressed for his recovery, he is even yet standing upon the brink of eternity.

Knee Breeches? Why Not for U. S. Envoy?

LONDON, May 20.—The Daily Citizen, the official labor organ, says in an editorial:

"It is possible to admire tremendously the Republican simplicity of America without understanding the objection of the new Ambassador to wearing knee breeches. What is there in them offensive to Democratic sentiment? After all John Burns wears them on occasion and with George Washington they were the habitual garment.

"Of course it is not everybody who can boast a leg and it is just possible that Mr. Page's repugnance to knee breeches may be founded on better reasons than the world can wot of."

Loss of Cat Costs University $100,000

MIDDLETOWN, May 20.—The story of how Wesleyan University lost a bequest of $100,000 or more because students stole a pet cat for dissecting purposes a dozen or more years ago was revealed when the will of Miss Margaret Van Deursen, who died a few days ago, was filed. Miss Van Deursen was a great lover of cats. When one to which she was attached disappeared one day, she was grieved. A large reward was offered for its recovery, but it was learned that students hunting for specimens for the biological laboratory had taken it.

Jacksonville to Get 'Jedge Briles' Justice

That he might gather pointers on how to conduct the police court in Jacksonville, of which he will assume charge June 1, Judge W. W. Anderson sat through the session of Recorder Broyles' court Monday an intensely interested spectator of the proceedings.

Judge Anderson expressed himself as greatly pleased with Judge Broyles' methods and his determination to enforce law.

Troops Mutiny Over French Military Bill

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Serious mutinous uprisings, due to the proposed extension of the military term from two years to three, are occurring in the ranks of the French Army.

The war office to-day received dispatches from frontier points which stated that dangerous consequences may follow if the Government persists in putting through the bill.

In several instances barracks have been burned.

Woods Favored for 4th Circuit Bench

WASHINGTON, May 20.—The Senate Committee on Judiciary has ordered favorably reported the nomination of C. A. Woods, of Charleston, S. C., to be judge in the Fourth Judicial Circuit and Judge Edward K. Campbell, of Birmingham, Ala., to be chief justice of the Court of Claims.

A sharp fight was made against Woods, charges having been filed against him alleging he was a member of a political ring in South Carolina.

British Carry Coal for American Navy

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Paymaster John S. Higgins, U. S. N., appearing before the Senate Committee on territories said that practically all of the 250,000 tons of coal shipped annually for Pacific Coast Navy use was carried in British bottoms.

He said that the opening of the Alaska coal fields the subject under consideration by the committee would establish a Pacific supply.

Peary to Get High Honors in France

PARIS, May 20.—According to Marcelin Boule, Vice President of the French Geographical Society, Admiral Peary is to be paid the same honors as were granted to Amundsen by the French society.

The fact that no preparation has been made is due to the absence from Paris of the society's President, Prince Roland Bonaparte.

OLD SCHOOL RESUMES 'HERESY' FIGHT

Attack Led by Dr. F. C. Monfort. President Francis Brown Defends School and Faculty.

The battle against Union Theological Seminary marked its first day by bitter onslaughts upon the teachings of the New York school, which were freely characterized as heretical and as a species of Hindu philosophy, was on in full fury again Tuesday afternoon at the Northern Presbyterian Assembly, and no limit was set to the time through which it might be waged.

As on Monday, every seat in the main auditorium was filled and the galleries were packed to witness the struggle between the forces of the old school of religious thought and the new, which was made a special order for 11 o'clock in the forenoon.

Feeling was high. The commissioners had been warned to conduct themselves in a calm and prayerful spirit, but the occasion was too tense to permit of a great deal of calmness. The men of the old school felt that the foundations of the religion of their fathers was being swept away by these new doctrines. They were prepared to fight to the last ditch to prevent the formal recognition of Union Seminary as a Presbyterian institution and the re-establishing of close relations between the school and the church.

Hush Precedes the Storm.

When Moderator Stone stopped the regular business at 11 o'clock a hush fell on the Auditorium, but it appeared to be the preliminary calm that presaged a long and determined battle. Prayer was offered up for divine guidance and wisdom in dealing with the most delicate and important question, and then the stillness was broken by the businesslike voice of the moderator outlining the rules of the conict.

The debate first was upon the minority report of Dr. F. C. Monfort, white-haired religious writer and editor of Cincinnati, whose opposition to the ideas of Union Seminary led him Monday to brand them as part and parcel of a modern heathen philosophy. The debate was according to the plan suggested by Moderator Stone Monday.

It was agreed that the Assembly should listen to and "accept" the majority report signed by Dr. J. F. Carson, the echairman, and then follow the same procedure with the first minority report signed by E. H. Perkins, an elder of Baltimore, and Dr. John R. Davies, pastor of the Bethlehem Presbyterian Church of Philadelphia.

Minority Report Last.

The minority report of Dr. Monfort was received last. It was while explaining his stand in submitting a re-

Ethel Barrymore Has Double Here

Seminary Girl Her Counterpart

Miss McCravey Rival for Beauty

Miss Nellie McCravey, of Huntsville, Ala.

Friends of Alabama Belle, in Atlanta School,, Acclaim Her as Charming as Actress.

Miss Nellie McCravey, of Huntsville, Ala., a member of the graduating class of Washington Seminary, Atlanta, has been adjudged a double of Ethel Barrymore, whose beauty won recognition on two continents.

Among the girls' younger set of Huntsville Miss McCravey was considered the most beautiful, possessing all the attractions and graces. Her friends at Washington Seminary and acquaintances in Atlanta are even more enthusiastic over her personal charms, if possible, than her Huntsville associates. They promptly acquiesced in the opinion of Huntsville's elite that Miss McCravey was the "Ethel Barrymore of the South."

Miss McCravey is a niece of Mrs. John W. Davis, of Atlanta. She has acquired many friends in Atlanta through her talents and capacity for entertaining. Her beauty is of the most pronounced Southern type.

MACON TO SEEK STATE K. OF P. HEADQUARTERS

MACON, GA., May 20.—More than 30 Macon delegates leave to-night to attend the annual meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Knights of Pythias at Waycross. A determined effort will be made to land the permanent headquarters of the grand lodge for this city. T. J. Carling, supreme chancellor of the world, who is a resident of this city, is throwing his influence to Macon in this regard.

Policeman Hit by Auto Nabs Driver

City Detective L. F. Carter is being congratulated by his friends for the agility and coolness which he displayed Monday night when he narrowly escaped being run down by an automobile driven by J. A. Brigman, of Decatur.

Carter was crossing Forsyth at Marietta Street, and when struck by the machine, sprang up on the hood, where he perched until the car was stopped. Carter immediately arrested Brigman and charged him with reckless driving. Brigman was released without bail.

Woman, 106, Doesn't Care to Live Longer

BALTIMORE, May 20.—A birthday reception on one's hundred and sixth anniversary is certainly an unusual experience, yet Mrs. Ann Bouder, 723 North Carey Street, enjoyed that privilege.

In a big armchair in her home, Mrs. Pouder talked of the happenings of a century ago in the animated manner one might more reasonably expect of a hero of Gettysburg, recounting tales of the "sixties."

Mrs. Pouder told her friends she did not care to live until another birthday.

CASES READY AGAINST LEE AND LEO FRANK

Solicitor General Dorsey Declares All Evidence Will Go to the Grand Jury Friday.

Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey announced Tuesday morning that the State's case against Leo M. Frank and Newt Lee in connection with the Phagan murder, would go to the Grand Jury Friday of this week. He said that he could anticipate no new arrest or development that would make it necessary to change this plan.

Mrs. Jane F. Carr, 251 Ponce De-Leon Avenue, in an open letter, asked every woman in Atlanta to contribute to the fund to employ the Burns detective and Mr. Burns himself to work in the Phagan investigation. She appealed to women of every walk in life to give according to their means.

"What if Mary Phagan were your child?" was the subject of her letter.

Felder Asks for Funds.

The Burns fund, after going above the $2,000 mark, slacked considerably. Colonel Thomas B. Felder said this sum would not be sufficient if it became necessary for the Burns men to make an exhaustive investigation, and asked the people to contribute liberally to the end that Atlanta's greatest mystery be satisfactorily cleared.

C. W. Tobie, chief of the Burns' criminal investigation department, was even more optimistic Tuesday morning than he was Monday that the Phagan mystery would be cleared to the satisfaction of Atlanta.

"Another day on the scene has only convinced me that the crime is far from the most baffling the Burns detectives have solved," he said at his hotel Tuesday morning. "I am not at liberty to make public the result of my investigation, but we have certainly made progress."

Search for Phone Girl.

City detectives are searching for a telephone girl who was reported to have heard a conversation over the telephone the night of the murder between two persons said to be attaches of the pencil factory.

Chief of Detectives Newport Lanford said that he had learned from a responsible source of a switchboard operator who was reported to have overheard a conversation that would be of the greatest importance in the Phagan case. He would not say whether he had learned the identity of the girl.

A corps of department detectives were detailed to the search that will take in every private branch exchange in Atlanta.

Tobie Follows New Lead.

Colonel Felder said that he had heard nothing of the report and was quite sure the Burns detective had not. The Pinkertons, through Harry Scott, said they attached little importance to the report, but that if it were true the girl could be easily located.

City detectives and the Pinkertons spent several hours at the pencil factory plant last night. The premises were minutely searched for new clews. The result was not made public.

Working independent of every one, Tobie, the Burns agent, was away from his hotel bright and early Tuesday morning following up a lead that he said had been heretofore overlooked. He will make daily reports to Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey and Colonel Felder.

Here is Mrs. Carr's letter urging all women to interest themselves in the Mary Phagan case:

Calls It Women's Case.

"To the Women of Atlanta:

"The Mary Phagan case is our case, and it behooves every woman to set the seal of condemnation upon lawlessness and demand that no means shall be unused, no expense spared in bringing to justice the foul villain who perpetrated this unparalleled crime. His freedom is a menace to the honor and life of every woman in our community.

"But no mistake must be made. Some of our most prominent men, and a few big-hearted women, have taken the initiative in contributing to the

HUFF CONTEMPT CASE ON AT MACON

Trial of Suit Growing Out of Caustic Letter to Judge Speer Brings Out Big Crowd.

MACON, GA., May 20.—An enormous crowd thronged the Federal building to-day to hear the trial of Colonel W. A. Huff, charged with contempt of court, in that he sent Judge Emory Speer a caustic letter last July.

Attorneys for the prosecution are District Attorney O. D. Street, of Alabama; Assistant District Attorney A. H. Codington, of Macon; Judge Enoch Calloway, of Augusta, and George S. Jones and Orville A. Park, of Macon. The defendant is represented by Thomas S. Felder, Attorney General of Georgia, who for nine years has been Colonel Huff's attorney in bankruptcy litigation, out of which the contempt case developed. Judge W. I. Grubb, of Birmingham, was designated by the circuit judge to preside over the trial.

Judge Speer will be the chief witness for the Government. District Attorney Alexander Akerman and Judge A. J. Cobb, of Athens, are among the other witnesses.

Colonel Huff declares that, regardless of the result of his trial, he will proceed with his charges against Judge Speer. He says that the charges will be laid before the President and Congress within two weeks.

Mrs. Hutchins 'Poor' On $2,000 a Month

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Mrs. Rosa Keeling Hutchins, widow of Stilson Hutchins, millionaire newspaper owner, has filed suit in another attempt to obtain one-third of the income from her husband's personal estate. According to her petition, she is in "straitened circumstances," although she has $2,000 a month from the estate.

The personal property left by Mr. Hutchins is estimated at $1,155,685, while the realty value is fixed at $3,347,000. Distribution has been delayed by disputes among the heirs and the filing of a caveat by Lee Hutchins, a son.

Says Londoner Is the Laziest of All

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, May 20.—The Londoner is the laziest human being in the world, according to the dictum of James Douglas, a well-known litterateur, in the course of a discussion on the effects of metropolitan conditions upon human energy.

The London atmosphere, it is agreed, produces lassitude and lethargy. Provincials achieve success in London. Nearly all the men at the top in London are not Londoners born.

LYNN TO KNOW HIS FATE NEXT MONTH

Supreme Court Hears Argument for New Trial of Laurens County Slaying Case.

Alonzo L. Lynn's motion for a new trial, whereby he hopes to evade a life sentence for the killing of F. M. Hightower at the Lynn home in Laurens County, December 18, 1912, will be decided by the Supreme Court after its next opinion day in the middle of June.

The motion was argued Monday before Justices Atkinson, Evans and Hill. Solicitor General Stephens of Laurens County and Judge John S. Adams argued for the affirmation of the lower court's decree. Stephen P. New and George B. Davis, of Dublin, represented Lynn.

Hightower, a Confederate veteran, was found dead in the Lynn home. A Burns detective, employed by the State, ferreted out evidence and adduced a theory of conspiracy, resulting in the indictment of Lynn and his wife, Alice Lynn.

Mrs. Lynn admitted firing the shot which killed the veteran, but swore he had made improper proposals to her. After deliberating five days, the jury acquitted Mrs. Lynn, but found Lynn guilty of murder, recommending life imprisonment. Judge Hawkins imposed the full sentence.

'Rosy Cheek Teachers Excel Brainy Ones'

NEW YORK, May 20.—President Thomas W. Churchill of the Board of Education told the Associate Alumnae of Normal College that he would rather "a teacher had the pulchritude of red cheeks than the wisdom of an encyclopedia."

"A certain type of teacher," said he, "seems to think she must study all summer, but she would be a better teacher if she spent her vacation rowing a boat or playing golf. There is no reason why teachers should be divorced from health."

Gov. Slaton Speaker At A. and M. Finals

Governor-elect John M. Slaton is expected to return home Tuesday from Americus, Ga., where on Monday night he delivered the principal address at the annual commencement exercises of the Third District Agricultural and Mechanical College.

Diplomas were presented by John M. Collum, the superintendent. An exhibition of the industrial work of the college preceded the graduating exercises.

Governor-elect Slaton and the other speakers were entertained with a barbecue dinner after the exercises.

RESUME BATTLE AGAINST UNION SEMINARY

port most bitter in its denunciation of Union Seminary's orthodoxy that Dr. Monfort made his impassioned attack upon the new religious ideas.

Voice trembling with earnestness, the veteran editor stood before the great Assembly and brought forth round after round of applause by his assault on what he termed the enemy of real religion. The spirit of the Assembly seemed to be with him. It looked as if a vote taken at that moment would have been overwhelmingly in condemnation of Union Seminary.

"Here's a Hindoo philosophy masquerading under the guise of the Presbyterian religion," he said. "It's not Presbyterian; it's pagan. The time has come to say whether or not we shall follow it and take it to our bosoms. If the Lord be God, then follow Him."

Would Report It at Once.

Dr. Monfort said he was in sympathy with the report of Dr. Davies, who submitted the first minority report, but that he would go even further. He did not intend to let the new religio get any further hold on the minds of the Presbyterian people. He would uproot it at once or forever disclaim any connection with it.

"It is time to put a stop to these heretical doctrines," he said. "The New York Presbytery, in which the school is situated, is the religious gateway to the nation so far as our denomination is concerned. The promulgation of such beliefs lowers the tone of the Presbyterian religion throughout the country."

Dr. Monfort said that he was attacking the religious attitude of Union Seminary from three directions—the moral, the doctrinal and the legal.

At the very foundation of the school, he declared, the directors and faculty were pledged to the Westminster Confession of Faith and the Presbyterian form of government. This pledge was incorporated in the constitution of the seminary and was irrevocable, he said.

Sees Charter Violated.

"Whenever the directors of the seminary allow the faculty to teach contrary to the Westminster Confession of Faith," continued Dr. Monfort, "they are going outside the provisions of the charter under which they are incorporated.

"Every man who gave a dollar to the school has a right to see that the students are taught according to the sacred doctrines of the church.

"I believe the time has come when the Assembly should reinstate the constitution and put back those articles which affirm the doctrines of the church. I believe the agreement of 1870, which has been rescinded by the Seminary, should be reaffirmed. We should not forget the dead donors whose sacrifice made the institution possible."

Dr. Davies introduced the first minority report by the emphatic statement that a resumption of relations between the church and the school was impossible at the present time. He said there were three reasons:

The directors and the faculty do not desire such a reunion. They say that the independence and additional power they have under the present arrangement are more to be desired than close affiliation with the church.

Represent Different Bodies.

The faculty represents different Protestant communions—the Methodist, Baptist, Congregational, etc., as well as the Presbyterian.

On the part of some of the faculty, the divergence from the standard orthodoxy of the church is too marked to warrant the church standing sponsor for the teachings.

"You may talk about evangelism from now until doomsday," said Dr. Davies, "but if your evangel is without the spirit and grace of God and has no sound religious faith, of what value is the evangelism?

"Let us get back to the old-time religion. I have been in the ministry for over 30 years, and sometimes in these latter years it looks to me as though the foundations of our belief were being swept away."

Presented by Dr. Wylie.

In the absence of Chairman Carson, the majority report was presented to the Assembly by Dr. David G. Wylie, pastor of Scotch Church, New York. He said that the professors in the college were not the unbelieving persons that their detractors pictured them, but declared that they were sincere and earnest and filled with the spirit of God. He recommended that the committee be continued to complete the re-establishing of friendly relations with the seminary.

Dr. Francis Brown, president of the seminary, was accorded fifteen minutes at the close of the Monday session to present the side of the seminary. He said that he was there under invitation and not as a person held to an accounting. He added that the seminary was not responsible to the church morally, doctrinally or legally, in spite of the opinion of Dr. Monfort to the contrary.

"Union Seminary is a religious institution founded and maintained for the purpose of training young men in the Gospel of Jesus Christ," said Dr. Brown. "It does not regard itself as confined to the teaching of purely Presbyterian doctrines. It regards its mission as broader. It desires to teach the simple and fundamental principles of religion without particular regard to creed.

Denies "Abstract" Charge.

"It has been intimated that we deal only in abstract theology. On the contrary, we are concerned with the life of God in the souls of men.

"Union Seminary does not ask anything. It is here in response to an invitation. But I venture to say that a stranger coming in from the outside would not form the right impression. It would appear that we have been called before the bar to explain and excuse and make apologies. Such is not the case. Union Seminary has not been summoned. I came here on a courteous invitation merely that the misunderstandings might be straightened out, if possible.

"Two questions were propounded to the directors of Union Seminary at their meeting with your committee. Both were as to whether we were willing to add to our instruction in the Presbyterian discipline, church government and doctrines. We answered both questions in the affirmative. Was there any more for us to do? If your committee went wrong or bungled its duty, I maintain that the seminary should not be made to suffer."

Southern Church Almost Unanimous Against Union.

The time for uniting all Presbyterian churches is not yet ripe. This is the decision of the Southern Presbyterian Church, unanimous apparently. If there were any who opposed, they failed to voice their sentiment against such an overwhelming vote for the retention of the Southern church's individuality.

Report of the committee on overtures against uniting was adopted almost unanimously. It stated that the time was not just ripe for the uniting of the Southern church with other branches of the Presbyterian. The fact that negotiations are already under way between the Southern Presbyterian Church and the United, the present time appeared as inopportune for a discussion of union.

Decision Made in Hurry.

In view of the great interest which has been shown in the matter of uniting of the three great branches of the Presbyterian Church, the Southern Assembly disposed of the matter in unusually short order. The reading of the report, however, and taking of the vote received the most intense intention which has been paid to any matter coming before the Southerners.

There was one plea for union, made by the Rev. Sartell Prentiss, of New York. His talk lasted for several minutes and was dramatic in its intensity.

"The forces of evil are encroaching upon the grounds of the good. Hosts of the devil are combining into one huge mass with which to force the acceptance of their wickedness.

Strong Plea for Union.

"To combat them the people of God must unite. The Presbyterians in their divisions represent different units, each waging a separate fight and without unity of purpose. As one church we would present a stronger battle line, our strength as workers for the advancement of Christian faith would be materially strengthened."

The beneficence committee's report recommended that the percentage for foreign missions be cut from 60 to 54 per cent; that home missions receive 27 instead of 21 per cent; Christian education and ministerial relief to receive 14 1-2 instead of 14 per cent, and Sunday school publications reduced from 4 to 3 1-2 per cent.

Dr. W. A. Smith, of the foreign mission board, and Dr. S. L. Morris, secretary of the home mission board, had several little sharp tilts over the report. Dr. Smith urged that the old ratio of 60 per cent be retained, charging that a reduction would mean a backset to the work in foreign fields; that the Southern Presbyterian Church would be the one church to recede in its fight for the onward movement of Christianity.

Urges Regular Allowance.

"We can barely get along on what we are receiving now," said he. "A reduction in the allowance means that we will face a yearly deficit of $60,000, for it will be impossible to keep from going into debt."

Dr. Morris charged Dr. Smith with having conferred in a secret manner with the members of the permanent committee in the effort to have the committee recommend the continuance of the 60 per cent allowance. This was strenuously denied by Dr. Smith, and it was necessary for Moderator Lyons to rap for order several times.

Mission Board Given Sabbath School Work.

The session of the United Presbyterian Assembly Monday afternoon was featured by a stormy debate over a recommendation made by the committee on bills and overtures to reaffirm the action of last year's Assembly in taking control of mission Sabbath schools and Sabbath school extension work from the hands of the board of publication and putting it in charge of the board of home missions.

Dr. W. B. Smiley, secretary of the Sabbath school work, which office would be abolished if the recommendation were adopted, made the charge that politics was at the bottom of the recommendation. Mr. Smiley stated to a Georgian reporter that some one outside the mission board was responsible for the recommendation being made.

The courtesies of the floor were extended to Dr. W. J. Reed, chairman of the Sabbath school committee. Dr. Reed stated that Dr. Smiley wrote him several weeks ago that a plot was on foot to take all matters pertaining to the Sabbath school work from the hands of the board of publication.

Dr. Reed said that he had investigated these charges and found no evidence of such a plot. He stated further that the Sabbath school work was one of the most important parts of church work and that the home mission board desired to retain control of it for another year.

A motion was next made and carried by a majority of about ten to put control of the Sabbath school work back in the hands of the board of publication. This motion later was killed. An amendment was then made and unanimously carried that the present arrangement be continued until next year. This leaves control in the hands of the home mission board, and abolishes Dr. Smiley's office.

It was decided that The Christian Instructor be disposed of at the best possible terms and as early as possible, the committee having found that it was being operated at a loss of about $500 a month.

Oppose Mission Cut.

Dr. A. R. Robinson, of Pittsburg, Pa., was chairman of the committee on bills and overtures. The other members were Rev. W. J. Grimes, Rev. W. J. Buchanan, Rev. J. B. Work, J. A. McLaughty, Hon. J. H. Staveley and W. H. Ramsey.

When the report on appropriations was presented there was a sharp debate over the proposed cut of 1 per cent in the foreign mission fund. Dr. Charles A. Watson, secretary of the foreign mission board, speaking against the cut. The following division of the general fund was adopted:

Foreign missions, 40 per cent; home missions, 27.5 per cent; freedmen's fund, 10 per cent; church extension, 10 per cent; education, 6.5 per cent; publication, 5 per cent; ministerial relief, 2 per cent; assembly fund, 3 per cent.

Wife Digs Miner's Body From Cave-in

OROVILLE, CAL., May 20.—Frank Martin, a miner, was killed by a landslide on his property along the Feather River, near Oroville. He was found entombed in the dirt by his wife, who went to hunt for him when he did not return to his home at the usual time.

She made her ghastly discovery and found her husband crushed and dead, buried in the earth and rock that had fallen on him. She returned to her cabin for help and with the aid of her children dug the body from its untimely grave.

SOLDIERS GUARD INAUGURATION IN CUBA

Revolutionary Outbreak Feared at Induction of Menocal to Succeed President Gomez.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, May 20.—Rigid military precautions were taken here to-day to prevent any revolutionary outbreaks upon the occasion of the inauguration of Juan Mario Menocal, who succeeds Senor Gomez as President of Cuba. All principal streets were patrolled by troops and batteries of machine guns were placed at strategetic points.

As General Menocal was formerly commander-in-chief of the Cuban army sentiment exists for him in military circles and there is no fear of a mutinous disturbance.

General Menocal is a conservative. His election caused grave fears on account of the bitterness manifested by the Liberals. An attempt was made to have the election declared unconstitutional, but it failed.

The ceremonies to-day took on unusual interest because of the part played by the United States. A special mission came to this city from Washington, representing President Wilson.

Head of Brenau Done Injustice by Report

An Atlanta friend of Dr. T. J. Simmons, president of Brenau College, Gainesville, Ga., has pointed out an error published on Saturday, May 17, relative to a news item sent from Rome, Ga.

Max Meyerhardt, city attorney of Rome, by letter informed Dr. Simmons that the old Conservatory of Music, formerly connected with Shorter College and owned by Dr. Simmons, had been declared unsafe and insanitary, and suggested that it either be repaired or removed. Dr. Simmons had three days before receipt of this letter given instructions to demolish the building.

The report as to the summons of Dr. Simmons before the City Council or in Police Court was incorrect.

Dr. Simmons is one of the leading educators in Georgia and the South, and is a man of whom both Rome and Gainesville have cause to be proud for the work he has done in the interest of higher education.

Police Find 'Thieves' Stealing Only Kisses

MACON, GA., May 20.—Police headquarters received a telephone call last night for officers to hasten to the Gresham High School, Cotton Avenue and New Street, as persons were trying to break in the building.

Two policemen, after a cautious search, found a young couple seated in the side vestibule, engaged in the gentle pastime of kissing.

When the couple explained that they had just become engaged, the policemen apologized and withdrew, first taking the names of the sweethearts. They were Miss Alma Jones, of Georgia Avenue, and Paul Jackson, a druggist.

Saloonist in Ireland Indicted in Georgia

MACON, GA., May 20.—Although he has been in Ireland for five years, Hugh Devlin, a former well-known resident of Macon, has been indicted by four successive grand juries for violating the prohibition law. Sheriff Hicks disclaims any idea of going to Ireland to serve the warrants.

The saloon still is owned by Devlin and operated in his name, and when witnesses testify that they bought liquor there and can not identify the bartender, the grand juries indict the proprietor.

If Devlin ever returns to Macon, he will have considerable explanation to make to the courts.

Good Citizens Praise Governor His War on Lawlessness Lauded

Hunt for Cobb Dynamiters Diligent

"The State does not concede that anarchy in any form shall supplant her laws."

Governor Joseph M. Brown.

ASK CO-ORDINATE NEGRO MISSIONS

Expected That Recommendations for Co-operation Will Be Adopted by Assemblies.

Co-operation in negro mission work has been recommended by the executive council of the Reformed Churches in America, and the concensus of opinion among the Presbyterian delegates in Atlanta is that it will be adopted.

Presbyterian missions among negroes have heretofore overlapped one another. The recommendation for co-operation followed a fervent address by Dr. J. S. Lyons, of Louisville, moderator of the Southern Presbyterian Assembly, when the executive committee of the general council, acting upon his suggestion, called a hurried conference ad adopted specific recommendations.

Plea to General Synod.

The recommendations of the executive committee were addressed to the general assemblies of the Presbyterian churches now in session in Atlanta, to the general synod of the Reformed Church in America, to meet at Ocean Grove, N. J., in June, and to the general synod of the Reformed Church in the United States, to meet at Lancaster, Pa., in May, 1914.

In communities where two or more churches of the general council are represented by negro missions, the sessions of the respective churches are urged to work together. Presbyterians, individually, are requested to see that this recommendation received as due consideration.

Plan to Train Teachers.

Means of carrying out the naw plan are also recommended. The Knoxville College, of Knoxville, Tenn., is requested to consider the propriety of establishing a training department for equipping workers in the colored field.

The committee, which unanimously favored the report, was composed of J. G. Snedecor, Chairman, Tuscaloosa, Ala.; W. J. Darby, secretary, Evansville, Ind.; Charles E. Schaeffer, Philadelphia; E. P. Cowan, Pittsburg, and R. W. McGranahan, of Knoxville College, Knoxville, Tenn.

Reward for Men Who Blew Up Home of Negro Attracts Much Attention.

Governor Joseph M. Brown's proclamation, offering a reward for the apprehension of the Cobb County dynamiters, has attracted a great deal of attention and brought forth many expressions of approval throughout the State.

The Governor's uncompromisingly hostile attitude toward all forms of lawlessness has been so persistently demonstrated that there are few if any criminals left in Georgia who do not know that he means to enforce the law sternly against them if they violate the same.

Not only has he set every agency of the State at work seeking to establish the identity of the Cobb County dynamiters, but he also has offered substantial rewards for the apprehension of certain lynchers recently operating in Columbia and Heard Counties.

As he draws near the end of his term in the executive office, Governor Brown, instead of weakening in any of his positions against lawlessness, seems all the more inclined to emphasize his personal and official detestation of it.

The Governor holds that there are very many more law-abiding people in Georgia than there are lawbreakers, and that law-observers are entitled to full and complete protection against the criminal classes.

KING GEORGE AND CZAR TO CONFER ON MONGOLIA

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, May 20.—A conference of much importance will be held between King George, Czar Nicholas and the Foreign Ministers of both countries in June. At the meeting the future of China and the future of Mongolia will be discussed.

Liberal newspapers stated to-day that the present visit will result in Mongolia and Thibet receiving the same fate from England and Russia as Persia.

SLUMMING PARTIES NOT TOLERATED AT MACON

MACON, GA., May 20.—Slumming parties are not tolerated in Macon. Miss Dorothy Smith, a corset demonstrator, and C. K. Hildreath, a traveling man, ascertained this fact when they were arrested in the restricted district by policemen especially instructed to take such sight-seeing parties in custody. The couple were fined $11 each.

Wife Advertised as "Dead" Seeks Divorce

ST. LOUIS, May 20.—Mrs. Anna Meehan has sued John P. Meehan, a salesman, for divorce, charging among a long list of alleged abuses that he advertised in St. Louis papers on Easter Sunday announcing her death and that the notice of funeral arrangements would be given. She says that when she accused him of inserting the "ad" he laughed and refused to deny it.

She also charges that during their eleven years of married life they moved fifteen times and also that ten of the movings were the result of suits for rent.

DENTAL TESTS IN CITY'S SCHOOLS PROBABLE

Board Conducting Experiments Will Make Strong Recommendation for Examinations.

Dental examinations of all children in Atlanta public schools will be permanently provided for unless V. H. Kriegshaber, of the Chamber of Commerce, and representatives of the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons are too optimistic over their forthcoming report.

Monday marked the beginning and Tuesday the end of dental examinations in the Bell Street and Crew Street Schools by representatives of the joint committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and the Atlanta Society of Dental Surgeons. It was the third of a series of tests begun last September at the request of the Chamber of Commerce and continued in January, to prove the beneficial effects of sound teeth on scholarship and attendance, general health and moral character.

V. H. Kriegshaber, from the Chamber of Commerce, and Dr. S. W. Foster, Dr. C. M. Barnwell, Dr. DeLos Hill and Dr. M. D. Huff, from the dental society, make up the joint committee.

Dentists Meet Tuesday Night.

Dr. Hill and Dr. Foster, who made the actual tests, will meet with the other dentists Tuesday night and make up the final report to be submitted to the Chamber of Commerce, whence it will be sent to the Board of Education with recommendations.

"Statistics have not been compiled, but from results already noted we believe the full data will warrant a recommendation that dental inspections in the public schools be made permanent," said Mr. Kriegshaber.

Following published results of benefits of five years' medical inspection in the public schools, the Chamber of Commerce last September asked the Board of Education for permission to make experimental dental tests. The dentists agreed to inspect two schools for a year, without fees, to prove the efficacy of the system.

At the first tests pupils were provided with written notices to parents of needed dental treatment. When these notices resulted in securing treatment, the operating dentists signed the slips, which were returned to the examiners. Additional signed slips were collected Monday and Tuesday after the final tests. Records of pupils in attendance, deportment and scholarship, both those who acted on the suggestions and those who did not, will be compared, and the results, with other figures, will make up the dentists' report.

Finish Report Tuesday.

"We hope to get this report finished Tuesday night," said Mr. Kriegshaber. "We are sure it will warrant the recommendation that dental examinations be made permanent. Then if the Board of Education approves our recommendation, we want to submit it to the Finance Committee of the City Council Thursday morning, if possible, and secure the necessary appropriation and authorization for permanent dental inspections in all Atlanta public schools."

In the Crew Street and Bell Street Schools nearly 500 pupils were examined. Dr. Foster and Dr. Hill were surprised at getting through in two days, since they expected three would be required.

Another Reason Why Socialist Vote Grows

GENEVA, N. Y., May 20.—An extensive obituary notice appeared in the newspapers here recounting the virtues of Fido, the pet dog of Henry A. Zobrist, a capitalist. Mr. Zobrist called a specialist from New York and paid $300 to have the dog treated, but Fido took a relapse and died.

Mr. Zobrist had provided $20,000 in his will for Fido, and had offered an endowment of $3,000 a year to the Sand Hill Cemetery Corporation for permission to bury the dog in the graveyard.

Fido lay in state in an expensive coffin banked with flowers.

CARE of the teeth is taught today in thousands of schools—the children are saved much misery from toothache and have better general health.

In your home—as well as in the schools—the common sense of "Good Teeth—Good Health" is plain—for adults as well as for children.

Twice-a-day care with a safe, antiseptic, pleasant-tasting dentifrice does wonders for man, woman and child.

DIAMOND DEALERS HAD A BAD YEAR

Slump in Trade Throughout Europe Followed Record Business in 1911.

WASHINGTON, May 20.—Diamond dealers throughout the world, but especially in all Europe, have cold shivers every time they think of the year 1912. It was a blue year in Europe for luxuries of all kinds, particularly for expensive jewels.

The most surprising part about it, according to United States Consul General Henry W. Diederich, stationed at Antwerp, is that every Antwerp dealer expected on January 1, 1912, the best year in the history of his firm. The year previous had literally been marvelous, Mr. Diederich says, for all engaged in the diamond industry, and when the new year 1912 began all conditions seemed favorable to them to make it equally prosperous or more so.

"In the face of this outlook," adds Mr. Diederich, "business began to slacken somewhat during the spring and summer, owing to a rise in the price of raw material. Retailers with a sufficient stock on hand were not eager to buy. It was hoped that business would take a new impetus in the second half year, when, however, international political troubles arose, putting a damper on all the usual transactions in the diamond trade. On the one hand fear of war and on the other the tight money market showed its effect immediately upon all articles of luxury, so that 1912 did not reach the average mark. Such was the general condition of the diamond market at Antwerp in 1912, which was, however, relieved by one favorable market—the diamond trade with the United States, which continued very brisk to the end of the year.

"Practically all the diamonds come from South Africa, the world's most important producing center. British South Africa, and German Southwest Africa, the former being the most important. There is a marked difference in value of the stones yielded by these two fields, though they are located somewhat adjacent."

To Give $300 for Charity Cost $5,000

CHICAGO, May 20.—Records to show that one woman dependent upon charity received less than $300 during eighteen months while $5,000 was spent in investigating her condition, have been produced before the legislative committee investigating charitable institutions.

LITTLE STORIES of the TOWN

Hapeville Man Sighs For Canned Goods.

"My wife," said the Hapeville man, as he settled down in his seat in the car bound for town, "has worried herself half-way ill over the prospect of little fruit this year. Last year she got it into her head that she should can some fruit and vegetables. She kept after me until I bought her a canner, and right away, with the aid of the children, she set to work to can everything in sight.

"Every evening when I returned home it was to find the evidences of a strenuous day's work in our home canning factory. I couldn't tell you how many cans of all sorts of things she did put away for future reference. This past winter she began to make calls upon her stock. And, believe me, we had the best eating all through the season that I ever experienced.

"The wife learned the whole thing from the little book of instructions which came with the canner, and she certainly learned the lesson good, because the canned stuff she served on our table was just about the best I have ever had the pleasure of eating. I am now almost as worried as she is over the report that the dry weather recently and the cold weather of a month or so back will give us only about half a crop. I had been looking forward to a bumper crop, and we all had expected to put away enough fruit and vegetables in cans to last the whole winter.

"Anyway, the stuff we put up at home always tastes better than the canned stuff we buy, and that's one reason I'm pretty strong for the home-made goods."

Working Old Gag To Get the Coin.

"I had thought," said the business man, "that the newsboys had abandoned that old gag of weeping and telling a hard luck story about mother being ill just to get rid of a bundle of papers on which they had been 'stuck,' but I guess competition is now so keen they have had to go back to the ancient dodge.

"The other afternoon I was on my way home when I saw a little shaver, who looked to be about 6 or 7 years old, standing on the corner of Broad and Alabama Streets sniffling as if his heart would break. I was going to ask the kid what the matter was when a woman just ahead beat me to it.

"She leaned over the boy in a motherly fashion and inquired what was the trouble.

"'Me mudder's dyin',' replied the youngster, 'an' I ain't been able ter sell me papers ter buy her no medicine. De youther kids won't lemme sell eround here an' I can't do nottin'.'

"The boy's tears were real and his tale evidently touched the woman, for she fished around in her handbag and gave him a quarter.

"'Here, my little man,' she said, 'run along and get that medicine, and then take it to your mother as quick as you can.' Then she leaned over and kissed the chap.

"That sort of had me going, and I gave the kid a half-dollar. The woman gave me a grateful look and turned to go her way when we both were astonished to see the kid, who a moment before had been the most dejected looking person in seven States, give a whoop, throw his bundle of papers to the winds and with a wild cry of joy, in which was mixed a couple of healthy swear words, start off in the direction of two newsboys on the next corner.

"'De two guys fell fer it,' shouted the kid. 'I got 75 cents. Le's beat it fer somethin' ter eat.'

"It was the old gag and I had been bitten."

SOLVES WOMEN'S MANIA FOR DRESS

Display Gratifies Vanity in Some, Aesthetic Sense in Others, Asserts London Specialist.

LONDON, May 20.—An atempt to analyze scientifically the motives which cause women to love pretty clothes was made this week by a distinguished London brain specialist, Dr. C. T. Ewart, at a meeting of the Section of Psychiatry of the Royal Society of Medicine.

Dr. Ewart, who is attached to an asylum, instanced the case of a patient who suffered from a washing mania. For 16 years she was obsessed with the idea of washing herself all day.

In attempting to account for her action, Dr. Ewart pointed out that of two women who loved to wear beautiful clothes one might be actuated by the mere desire for self-display, whereas the other received her impulses from an aesthetic sense, her love for the beautiful and delicate.

First a Slattern When Alone.

The first, Dr. Ewart argued, could be distinguished because she was a slattern when no one was present to notice her appearance. In addition, in her case, the unseen part of her apparel were usually "of an entirely different order from that seen."

A woman whose love of dress was due to a fine aesthetic sense became, on the other hand, said the lecturer, more and more particular about her clothing and more intimate its relation was to the body.

PASTOR, IN 1864, SAW ATLANTA FROM COT

Rev. J. G. Mason, Church Delegate, Tells of First Visit Here With Sherman.

"The first time I came to Atlanta they carried me in on a cot," said the Rev. J. G. Mason, D.D., who is attending the Presbyterian convention, to a Georgian reporter.

Dr. Mason has for 36 years been pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Metuchen, N. J. He always has been prominent in public affairs and is now the nominee of the Prohibition party for Governor of New Jeersey.

"The Republican party is dead; the Democrats can be overcome; there will be a new alignment and the Prohibition party will be the best one," he said.

Dr. Mason is a native of East Tennessee, and during the war he secured from President Andrew Johnson a pardon for his father, who had been indicted for treason along with virtually all the other prominent East Tennessee civilians. Dr. Mason himself was a United States sanitary commissioner, having volunteered while attending Union Seminary, New York.

Came Here With Sherman.

He came to Atlanta with General Sherman's army in 1864. His father, Archibald Mason, of Jonesboro, Tenn., had supported Johnson for the presidency, and remained his personal friend, but his sympathies were with the South.

"When my father was arraigned for treason, I went to see the President. In an exceedingly gruff voice, the President told me to stand aside for others more worthy. I pleaded that I was not there to ask a pardon for myself, but for one who was more worthy.

"'And who is it, then?' asked the President.

"'For my father, Archibald Mason,' was the reply.

President Pardoned Father.

"'Oh, yes, I know him,' replied the President." The elder Mr. Mason was immediately pardoned.

"The first time I tried to get into Atlanta I had to be carried back," said Dr. J. G. Mason, continuing the interview. "The next day Sherman got in, and they took me in on a cot.

"I was here again 35 years ago, attending the International Sunday School Convention. I was entertained by Sam Inman, the big cotton man—you know him—and, my, but I did have a royal time. Atlanta was all right then, but I can see it is one of the most hustling places in the world now. I'm glad to be back and glad to stay here the rest of the week."

Serbs and Greeks Fix New Boundaries

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, May 20.—Servia and Greece have entered a territorial alliance with Bulgaria, it is stated in a telegram from Athens to-day.

This message stated that the two countries had entered an agreement respecting the boundaries of Turkish territory to be acquired by both, and have bound each other to support the agreement with arms if Bulgaria objects.

Peace Likely to Come Slowly.

BERLIN, May 20.—Dispatches received to-day from the various European capitals indicate that the Turco-Balkan peace conference in London may be a drawn-out affair. Some predict that it will last at least three months.

Making Charles Happy

A Humorous Story, Complete.

"IT seems a curious perversity of fate," said the young married woman, "that I should have a husband who really has a high regard for clothes, when so many women complain that they can not enlist their husbands' attention or check books in that noble cause.

"When Charles said yesterday morning, 'My dear, you will attend to ordering your spring hats before long, will you not?' I knew it was useless to put off the matter any longer. So I promised him that I would get something that very day. I laid aside that wonderful new play of Strindberg's that I was going to take over to the park and read, and the poor dear wrote me a check and went to the office looking quite relieved in his mind.

"After he had gone, I stopped to finish only one act of Strindberg and then I started. On the way downtown I figured out just what kind of hat I should get.

"It was not so hard to plan one in my mind, but it was a different matter to find the hat that I had planned. I went to six shops and tried on about 80 hats before I began to feel discouraged and decided that there must be something wrong with my looks.

She Looked Wild.

"In the sixth shop I met Mrs. Pelton, who looked wild-eyed and belligerent, and had a curious little straw concoction set upon the top of her hair, with round red objects falling off the back of it like a peck of apples descending a stairway.

"When she saw me, she clutched me menacingly by the arm, as if I were responsible for the present social system, for she said: 'Isn't it an outrage that human intelligence has to be expended upon pursuits like this! They talk about the senseless fashions of women! Do they realize that men make these styles and then force them upon us? Do you know the meaning of this whole insane subject of fashion?' It's a device perpetrated by the merchants and manufacturers to get rid of the unconsumed surplus. Now, when our sex has the ballot, I hope——'

"I calmed her down, as much as I could by telling her that I felt that way about it. However, I was so relieved to find that perhaps the trouble was not with my looks, after all, that I walked over to a counter where several untrimmed hats were piled up in a bin and a lot of women were clutching at them and bought the first one from the top of the heap. It was light and soft and felt comfortable and did not make me look entirely like a cartoon when I was trying it on.

"So great was my relief at ending my search that I took home the hat with quite a feeling of satisfaction. I reasoned that it would be a simple matter to trim it myself, for all I should have to do was to leave off most of the things that the trimmed hats had on.

"That was yesterday morning. The rest of the day and until midnight last night I devoted to attempts to trim the hat. Fortunately Charles stayed downtown to dinner, so I could work without interruption. I trimmed and untrimmed eight times and nothing that I could devise looked right, so I gave it up in despair and went to bed.

"This morning as soon as Charles had gone I got the odious hat out from under the bed, where I had hidden it, and by the broad light of early day discovered what was the matter with it. The trouble was in the color, which I had failed to observe closely. It was not a normal straw color nor a yellow nor a brown, but a sickly, bilious, yellowish green, which made everything that it came into contact with look seasick, including me.

"It being now too late to return the hat, which had begun to show signs of wear, I carried it down to a dye shop and found that they could color it for me, but would have to change the shape, which was the least objectionable thing about it, and that it would take four weeks.

More Trouble.

"I then went to a department store and bought a bottle of dye, which the saleswoman said any child could apply with a small brush. In attempting to open the bottle after I had carried it home my knife slipped, the tin cap flew off and half the contents spilled over the kitchen table, a stack of dishes and the kitchen sink, to all of which it immediately adhered like enamel.

"Fortunately, it was Delia's afternoon out, but as I knew that she would be very cross when she saw the dye I spent two hours and a half and a can of scouring powder in removing it from the kitchen landscape before I could return my attention to the hat. The remaining contents of the bottle I then applied to the hat, except the part that splattered on myself. I then relined it, trimmed it for the ninth time, tried it on and found that I could stand to look at the finished product in the glass without feeling ill. I felt that I had earned that hat.

"When Charles came home I had it stuck on my head for him to look at and was just beginning the second act of Strindberg. He was very much pleased, and said: 'That looks very nice, my dear. Now, you see how easy it is to get becoming hats, so you must go down and order two or three more, and then you will be supplied for the summer.'"

Not What He Meant.

JONES and Long had not met for years. Once—that is in the days when both had been striving for fame in their different professions—they had been really good chums, and many a talk had they enjoyed together by the fireside as to the little places they would take in the country "when their ships came home."

The dream of Jones has been realized, and now, although a portly old fellow, it was with a sense of real pleasure that he prepared for a visit from his former friend.

"Ah, it's splendid seeing you down here, Long!" he said cordially, by way of greeting. "Quite like old times—what? And the missus, I know, is longing to shake you by the hand. But first—yes, you must come along and have a look at my greenhouse. You simply must!"

And Long went.

"Well, Jones," he said, "you've got a mighty pretty place down here; but to my mind, it's just a bit bare."

"Oh!" replied Jones, cheerfully, "that's because the trees are so young! Next time you come—why, they'll be so big that you won't recognize them!"

DEFEAT AHEAD FOR BANKING REFORM

Pressure of Other Bills Will Sidetrack Issue in Summer Legislative Session.

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

The apprehension of Georgia bankers, recently in session in Savannah, that their proposed banking reform bill may fail of passage in the next Legislature because of the pressure of other matter probably is well founded.

The banking reform bill is voluminous and cannot get through the Legislature without mature deliberation, both in committee and on the floor it necessarily will be taken up section by section and that means that it must be whipped out four times in detail. Rather a long, rough and rugged road to travel, to be sure.

Like the general insurance legislation effected in the last General Assembly, however, it is highly important business, and Legislators will decline to vote for it without knowing exactly what each section provides.

The prospect ahead of the banking bill has served to renew the talk of providing a more satisfactory way of disposing of purely local legislation in the future. It is local legislation invariably that ties up the two houses and serves to kill through inattention many meritorious general bills. Members will pass their immediate local legislation, if the rest of the State's legislation program goes hang!

If local legislation might be disposed of, particularly where there is no opposition, through some simple legislative method, it easily would save 50 per cent of the General Assembly's time. As it is now, a local measure takes up almost if not quite as much time as the average general measure, yet it is a matter of a relatively small importance in separate instances to the State at large.

It takes about as much time to increase the number of county commissioners in Dodge County, for instance, as it does to amend the game laws, and yet who outside of Dodge County cares a hoot whether that county has three or five county commissioners?

An effort will be made in the next Legislature to simplify the process of local legislation, and many people will sincerely hope that the effort may succeed.

Judge John T. Allen, of Baldwin County, Senator-elect from the twentieth district, passed through Atlanta to-day.

Judge Allen was in high spirits and expressed himself as entirely satisfied with the status of his race for the presidency of the next Senate.

"If the vote were to be taken tomorrow," said he, "I am sure absolutely that I would be elected, and, in the best of good nature, I really believe I shall be the only candidate before the Senate when the voting takes place next month."

Judge Allen has been described as the one man in Georgia politics about whom there is absolutely no "lost motion," and somehow the description seems to fit him snugly.

He is one of the very best lawyers in the State and one of Georgia's most astute statesmen.

The United States Supreme Court is expected to hand down soon a decision in the famous Cureton case from Georgia, that will interest the prohibitionists of the State particularly.

The question involved is whether the prohibition laws of Georgia shall be construed similarly to the prohibition laws of Tennessee, the Supreme Courts of the two States being of exact opposite opinions as to the point raised.

Cureton, a Chattanooga soft drink dealer, owned a large distillery near Rising Fawn, Ga. He received an order for whisky in his Chattanooga house, and sent it to his Georgia distillery to be filled. The whisky was shipped from Rising Fawn, and Cureton was arrested on a charge of selling whisky, was tried and found guilty, the Georgia Supreme Court holding that the delivery at Rising Fawn to the common carrier was the consummation of a sale. Cureton appealed to the United States Court, claiming protection under the interstate commerce laws.

If the United States Supreme Court upholds the Georgia Supreme Court, the prohibitionists will regard it as a victory. If, on the contrary, the United States Courts take the view as set up in the Tennessee Supreme Court, the "dry" people will feel that they have lost a point.

The decision is expected shortly.

Representative Burwell, of Hancock County, will be the oldest member of the new Legislature in point of continuous service. He has been a member of the General Assembly since 1896.

Joe Hill Hall, of Bibb; Byron Bower, of Decatur; John M. Slaton, of Fulton, and John N. Holder, of Jackson, all of whom ranked with Mr. Burwell in point of continuous service, will be missing from the new House, leaving Burwell the veteran and the dean.

The gentleman from Hancock has been in the Legislature almost from the date of his twenty-first birthday.

The effort to increase heavily the appropriation for Confederate pensions in the next Legislature, while likely to arouse much sympathy, probably will have a hard road to travel.

There will be few if any members who would not like to see the pension increased, and, yet, there will be many who will be unable to see how it is to be done and meet the other necessary expenses of the State inaddition.

It is very well known that Legislatures of late years have found it extremely difficult to keep the State's outgo within its income, and one of the heaviest items of annual expense is the Confederate pension appropriation.

If some statesman is able to show the Legislature how the pensions may be increased without greatly embarrassing some of the departments, the pensions probably will be increased, all right. Unless the Legislature is shown that, however, the increase is apt to be slight, if anything.

J. Wylie Smith's Own Story

Stirring Episodes in Long Flight

Career in Mexican Army Thrilling

This is the second installment of the story of J. Wylie Smith, the refugee president of the defunct Commercial Loan and Discount Company, who, after evading extradition during two years of service in the insurrecto army of General Orozco, in Mexico, returned to Atlanta to stand trial because he dying with tuberculosis—a phantom of his former self.

By J. WYLIE SMITH.

I was given a room over the warden's office. I had credit at the commissary. You have to furnish your own bed clothing and buy any food you get except etole, a sort of gruel, bif stik—furnished to you raw—and frijole, beans cooked in pure water at every meal. Grease and salt are unknown.

I remember a hideous tragedy one day as a result of the practice of allowing the prisoners to cook their own meals in their cells. A peon, held for murder, was found dead in bed one morning, his charcoal pot still giving off its fumes over him.

Soon I was allowed to go downtown without a guard. The discipline in Mexican prisons is lax. Once when the prisoners were working on the waterworks a number of them stole away and got drunk. When they returned the only punishment that was administered was that they were not allowed to return to work but were forced to play. They suffered, though. They hated to give up their wages. I knew a number of them who preferred prison life to freedom.

"Neda en calles menos Americanos y toras," spoke a Mexican who was reclining under the shade of a tree in his yard as I passed down the street on one of my daily strolls from the prison.

His meaning was that nobody ever comes out on the street between 12 o'clock and 2:30 but Americans and bulls—a statement which has the weight of a proverb in Mexico. All business houses are closed between those hours. Indeed it was a hot sultry day and I was regretting that I had come out when suddenly I was startled out of my laziness by a sharp piercing bark.

My footsteps had aroused a bull who was lying in the shade of a shrub, not a Mexican bull but a Boston bull terrier. He came towards me belligerent but I spoke to him kindly, so glad to see anything so truly American. And as I walked on that dog followed.

Truly only an American and a bull were on the streets and later only an American and a bull were together at another place, the presence of the bull changing the trend of fate from savage death to the greatest triumph of my life.

But that was later. However, the interesting and important things which led up to it began to absorb my attention. For the first time a personal interest was aroused in me in the revolutionary movement.

I had made the acquaintance of about 75 revolutionary leaders who were confined in the penitentiary. Walking with General Rojas, the most prominent of them, one day our conversation grew intimate.

"I would think that you revolutionists would be shot," I said to him.

"Do you know why I am here?" he asked. Before I could speak he answered his own question.

"I said that General Orozco was a damned rascal.

"All of us would be shot," he continued, "but Orozco has plans of his own."

Orozco's Plan.

"He is planning a new revolution. On March he will resign as commander of the Federal forces in Chihuahau. He is confining his staff here so he will have them ready when he needs them.

"The moment he insurges I will be freed, and I will take you with me."

My interest in the plans of the revolutionists immediately became intense. I was having an easy time but things were getting monotonous. I did not know how long I would be held a prisoner nor how much chance I had of escaping extradition. My fighting blood was up. Added to my fear of being taken back to Atlanta and being tried was the ire aroused by the treachery of my pursuers, like Franke I was determined to outwit them. Then there is nothing in the world like Anglo-Saxon freedom.

Then the strangest and most romantic event in my whole experience took place. I was the only American in prison and something of a curiosity. People often came to look at me, and I desired to avoid them as much as possible. But the warden came to me one day and said that two American women were in his office to see me.

Puzzled but greatly interested I hurried down. I gazed at them, unable to recognize either, but I carefully noted that they were handsomely dressed. They said they were interested in my case because I was an American and they wanted to help me. When I told them I had no lawyer they said they would look after that. My clothes were washed in the prison, but not starched. One of the women arranged to have them starched and laundered out in town. They they left without giving any information about themselves.

A few days later, January 26, 1912, my extradition papers arrived and it looked like the jig was up. I was absolutely ignorant of Mexican law and I hardly expected any of my new friends to come to my aid with sufficient funds to hire a competent attorney.

Help at Last—From a Woman.

As mysteriously as she had first come to me one of the beautiful woman returned. With her were two fine looking Mexicans of the cientifico (aristocratic) class. They were lawyers.

Francisco Cardero was an ex-justice of the Supreme Court and a supporter of Madero. Geillermo Porras was ex-Lieutenant Governor and a Diaz enthusiast. I learned later that they were among the highest legal authorities in the State.

Porras took active charge of my case and looked over the extradition papers. He said they were full of flaws but that he did not think I could get justice in Chihuahua on account of the opposition to his politics. So he had the case transferred to Jaurez and went there to prosecute it.

The woman came to me again and I asked her why she had taken such an interest in my case.

"You are an American; so am I," she said. "You have a wife and child to be saved (for I had told her of my family); I have no one in the world to care for."

I found that she was a somewhat notorious woman in Chihuahua and I also learned from other sources than herself that she had paid each of those lawyers $400 in gold to defend me. Her name was Vivian Sinclair.

They won the case through unseen forces, at least to me.

On the night of January 30 the people of Jaurez went to sleep under the seemingly peaceful rule of Madero. They awoke the next morning at daybreak—Mexicans always begin fighting at daybreak—to find a band of revolutionists in possession of everything. They looted the post-office and the customs house, burning all the papers in a bonfire in the streets.

My extradition papers were among them.

I have often thought that Porras knew what was going to happen and I was just as grateful to him as though he had won the case in court.

I heard just before I left Mexico that he had been executed by Madero Constitutionalists near Porral, Chihuahua. I have written for verification.

Only 85 strong the new insurrectos started toward Chihuahua to storm the jail. They arrived on February 2 and at daybreak the next morning began storming the jail.

Such grit I have never seen, before or since. Those Mexicans are slow starting and they always stop at dark they have absorbed the superstition from the Yaqui Indian that the soul leaves the body after dark. It is hard to get them out of their houses at night.

The Fight Begins.

Clinging to the tops of houses and hiding behind fences they began a most vicious and effective attack. They picked off every guard who showed himself on that wall. I was where I could get a good view and every now and then I would see a Federal plug an insurrecto who was lying flat on a house roof like sticking a sharp stick in the back of a toad. One after another were wriggling to death after such shots. There were 700 men defending the jail and defeat for the insurrectos was imminent when a guard had his head split by a bullet that came through a loop hole. The soldier rolled down a flight of steps and landed some twenty feet away at the feet of the Warden, his ghastly face turned upward.

"Stop the fighting," shrieked the Warden, and he turned to General Rojas for help.

"They want me," replied General Rojas. "Free me and the firing will stop in five minutes."

The Warden would not consent, but the fighting continued so fierce he consented to allow Rojas to see the Governor with a guard of five men.

The visit to the Governor was a mere formality. He refused the pardon. But on the return to the jail Rojas, walking a few paces in front of his guard, turned a corner ahead of them at the corner of Calle Liberstad and Calle Tercera and took to his heels.

"Halt," shouted the guard, and they raised their guns.

But they were covered by a band of insurrectos before they could shoot.

My heart jumped with joy when the news reached the prison. I felt that I soon would be able to join him. But my blood was chilled the next day by that most horrible of all features of warfare—the shooting of a traitor.

General Orozco came down from Jaurez next day. He wanted Rojas free, but to make a show of enforcing authority he ordered the five guards shot as traitors, the finding of the courtmartial being that they had purposely allowed Rojas to escape. No one knows what cruelty a Mexican can resort to.

Rojas was as good as his word. The firing stopped before his guard returned to the jail. Eagerly did I observe and seek information as to the skirmishes and maneuvers around Chihuahua. The story of Rojas' first victory was typically Mexican.

Captain Mendoza had led the attack on the jail. He was the most unusual looking man I have ever seen and as we were closely associated together thereafter I became very much interested in his odd personality. He was six feet four inches in height but he lost two inches of his size in a stoop in his shoulders. His hair and eye lashes were raven black and his eyes were a greenish gray that shined with an uncanniness. But the oddest thing about him was his mustache, which was a brilliant red. He was as active as a cat and the most wicked man I have ever seen.

When Rojas escaped his plan was to attack the jail and free us all. But Mendoza had retreated out from the city. The reason Mexican revolutions last so long is that an army never will follow up a victory.

Out from Chihuahua Mendoza, with about 25 men, was captured by Colonel Sevrin, of Madero's forces. When Rojas heard of it he declared that Mendoza had freed him and that he was going to the rescue.

With only 260 men, while Sevrin had 700, Rojas began a ruse. Approaching Sevrin after it was too dark for him to tell the number of the revolutionists, Rojas went into camp in plain view. It is the custom to have a camp fire for every ten men. Rojas built about 200 fires. He had his men blow bugles over a long line.

The strategy was successful. Under a flag of truce Rojas sent an ultimatum to Sevrin at daybreak next morning that he must surrender Mendoza or be annihilated. Sevrin surrendered Mendoza. And Mendoza became a colonel under Rojas, the two marching toward Jaurez gathering men as they went. It really was like Napoleon's return from Elba.

Mexico Buys Field Guns From French

PARIS, May 20.—The Mexican Government has ordered twelve batteries of field guns and one hundred mitrailleuses from French manufacturers.

Gen. Mondragon, the Mexican War Minister, is quoted as saying that he chose French makes because the Bulgarians proved their superiority over the Krupp guns used by the Turks.

"DON'T WORRY OVER PITCHING STAFF"--SMITH

By Percy H. Whiting.

"WE'LL go flying when our pitchers get right." So said Bill Smith before Monday's game. "Nobody need think we're scared. I never saw a team playing better ball and losing in my life than the Crackers did on their trip. And they never lost their nerve. If the pitchers come through we'll win in a walk. And you needn't worry. They're coming."

One of the pitchers came through Monday and it was plain sailing for the Crackers.

* * *

THE Crackers have the best infield and outfield combination that the Southern League ever saw. That's positively official. There's nothing else in the world to it.

Bailey, Welchonce and Long form the best outfield ever seen in the Southern League.

Agler, Alperman, Bisland and Smith constitute an infield the like of which was never seen before in Dixie.

The catching staff will do as it stands to-day, and if it doesn't continue standing right Bill Smith will kick it overboard and load up with some men who can deliver. That's official too and right from Bill Smith.

The pitchers are Smith's only trouble.

"At that they look pretty good," says Billy. "This Gilbert Price is a positive marvel. I never in all my days saw a hurler with more stuff. He seems to weaken sometimes at the end of a game. I don't know whether he gets overconfident or weakens physically. If he gets to lasting all the way they couldn't beat him in fifty years.

"Bill Chappelle showed us a good game his last out and will win for us I think. Brady's work is perfectly satisfactory. If this Dent goes all right I'll take my chances."

* * *

AS for Paul Musser, he showed that he was there with everything in the catalogue yesterday. He allowed five hits, one a scratch home run. If Tommy Long hadn't misjudged this ball badly only one run would have been made off Musser. His control was vastly better than usual and he looked a great pitcher.

As for the Crackers—they played the ball they have been playing almost all the season. They got to Pitcher Kissinger of the Turtle team only twice but it was enough.

In the third Graham slipped one by Kissinger. Musser bunted safe—a peach of a performance for a pitcher—and Bailey cleaned up with a single.

In the fourth Bisland put across a clean home run that won the game. After that time the locals made but one hit. But they did not need even that one.

* * *

THE new man, Bisland, looked like a legacy from your rich uncle. Besides hitting the homer that won the game he fielded neatly and he looks so much like a big league ball player you couldn't detect him from the real thing in the broad daylight.

Wally Smith kept right on looking like the wonder of the league. And Whitey Alperman surely had a big day. In the eighth he actually flew after Ward's liner and in the ninth he nipped what might have been a rally by grabbing down Abstein's awful poke.

* * *

THE game was played in one hour and forty-six minutes, which is amazingly fast considering how other contests of the year have lagged. Umpires Bill Hart and Dan Pfenninger seemed to have developed some pepper in their old age and kept things hustling. That the good work will be continued is the earnest hope of the fans. Draggy baseball games don't please anybody.

DIABETES NO LONGER FEARED

Peculiar Action of a Remarkable Remedy in Controlling Liver Action.

S. S. S. Quickly Puts Vim and Energy Into You.

There is no need to feel any alarm over the symptoms of diabetes. This disease is apt to be purely a digestive trouble, and for this reason the liver is held largely responsible. The liver is the largest organ of the body, and is not only a mass of threadlike blood vessels, but throughout its entire fabric is intimately associated with the digestive system.

The thing to do is to so stimulate the action of this myriad of blood vessels that each cellular part selects its own essential nutriment by healthy and judicious divine discretion. This is accomplished by S. S. S., the most potent, the most active and the most naturally stimulating blood medicine known. You do not need purgatives; do not be alarmed at the presence of sugar nor of so-called sediment.

Just stick to S. S. S. and bear in mind that this celebrated remedy has such a specific stimulating action on the local cells of the liver as to preserve their mutual welfare and give a proper relative assistance, each cell to the other.

Dropsical tendencies are thus overcome, biliousness soon becomes a memory and jaundice, malaria, afflictions of the spleen and glandular swellings will be entirely eliminated. You will find S. S. S. on sale at all drug stores and for competent medical advice, free, consult by mail the laboratory of the Swift Specific Company, 137 Swift Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Cobb Not Greatest Ball Player

"Keeler Superior to Ty"--Sullivan

By Ted Sullivan

THE return of Cobb to the Detroit club and its continued clump since he began to wear the team's uniform has served one object lesson to the American public, and that is that no one player, no matter how great or skillful, can win games alone. It takes nine men to win ball in any fast league. It has been the case in the past, and it will be ever thus in the future. A pitcher of Walsh or Johnson's caliber may figure conspicuously in the winning of a game, but at that they must have fielding and run-getting powers in their teams to make them winners.

But let one thing be impressed on the public mind—players may come and go, but the game will go on forever. Had Cobb not returned to the Detroit team, the continued losings of the club would have been laid to his absence, but it was a great victory and eye-opener both for the Detroit people in all parts of America that he did return, to show the superficial and unsophisticated how little one man figures in the game, and especially an outfielder.

To look at Cobb, or Cobbism, from a dispassionate and impartial standpoint, let us see what Cobb's status is in the game. I grant he has the right to ask for any salary he thinks his services are worth; he realizes that he is a drawing card at home and abroad. He knows the owners of the club look at him from a commercial standpoint, and he views them in the same light. He knows also that there is a time limit to his playing days, and he wants to make the most of it. The home press and the unsophisticated press throughout the United States have been burning incense to his greatness and telling him that he is the one ball player in the history of the game, which he never was. But as Detroit made him a drawing card, in their slopology, he had a right to make them pay for it. Which he has.

Infielder More Important.

Let us see where he figures as a ball player, compared with the players of the past and present. He is playing in the outer works of the game—as a fielder, averaging about two fly balls to a game, with plenty of time to think what he will do after catching a fly ball or the grounder that is bounding toward him. No outfielder can be compared with an infielder or a catcher, as their positions are entirely different in the nature of the work they have to perform. An infielder's brain is in perpetual action from the time the pitcher delivers the ball, and he has only a fraction of a second to think, so quick does the machinery of the infield work.

Cobb is the best run getter in the profession to-day. Run getting is the combination of hitting and base running. Base running has ever been the spectacular part of a ball player's work, with all other things nearly equal. To say Cobb was the greatest ball player in the history of the game would be like telling a man who saw the Mississippi River that the Illinois River was the longest and largest in the United States, or to tell a person who saw the summit of Pike's Peak that the range of the Allegheny was higher.

I suppose it will be the same in the next generation of ball players. They will be as skeptical of the baseball prowess of Cobb, Wagner and Lajoie, as the present ones are of the greatness of Mike Kelly, Ewing and Williamson. As a fielder and thrower Cobb could not stand comparison with Fogarty, Curt Welsh, Bill Lange, and a few others of the past and he is not to-day the superior as a fielder and thrower of Graney of Cleveland and Moeller of Washington.

Thinks Keeler Was Better.

There is a little modest man who left the ball field two years ago, namely, William Keeler, who did not wear sleigh bells around a hotel to let people know he was around, but he was the superior of Cobb, as versatile a batter. But to say that Cobb was the equal of the three great ball players of the past, namely, Ewing, Williamson, and Mike Kelly, would be ridiculous.

Williamson was a third baseman and a shortstop. He was one of the greatest base runners in the history of the game. Besides being one of the greatest infielders that ever lived, he was also a catcher and a pitcher. Buck Ewing was undoubtedly the greatest throwing, hitting and base running catcher of them all. But to compare Cobb, the outfielder, to the immortal Kelly, who was the craftiest base runner of all times, besides being one of the best batters and catchers that ever lived, would be like comparing a 2:40 horse to a 2:10 one.

To use a hyperbole, it could be said that Mike Kelly behind the bat and on the bases in the crucial contest of a game sweat more baseball cells into the rim of his cap than some players of to-day have in their skulls.

If Ty Cobb is guilty of the alleged prima-donna breaks in wanting extra hotels and extra rooms from other players and practicing when he wants to—no one is to blame but the Detroit management themselves. They have petted and coddled him as much as an indulgent mother does to a child she has spoiled.

CHRISTY MATHEWSON'S BIG LEAGUE GOSSIP

NEW YORK, May 20.—I have decided to give much space in this article to the fast-going Phillies and Dodgers. The Phillies merit considerable analysis. When the Giants played them recently, I never saw a Philadelphia team playing better, and, as there has always been plenty of feeling between the two clubs, they were very glad to clean up on New York as they did. The team is benefiting from much better conditions this season than have existed in Philadelphia for many years, and these are mainly responsible for the marked improvement, as it will be noted that practically the same men are appearing in the batting order that landed the team in the second division last summer. William Locke, the new president of the club, is a practical baseball man, and he is giving Dooin a chance to manage the team without worrying him with a lot of trivialities. The result is that Dooin is getting good baseball out of his men, the best that is in each individual.

Again the Quakers have advanced so far into the season without any of the regulars suffering serious injuries and being out of the game, almost a record for the club. It is not likely the team will go through the race with this rosy record, and an injured regular or two will slow the club up a good deal because Dooin is not well fortified with substitutes.

* * *

THE real strength of the team lies in the excellent pitching staff which is the unexcelled feature of the league at this writing. When either Alexander, Chalmers or Seaton has been working, it has been practically impossible for an opposing club to do any hitting. It is this great pitching which has permitted the Phillies to make the good showing that they have, because they are not a crowd of hard batters themselves. They win their games by small scores, depending on the pitchers and smooth fielding to prevent the other side from rolling up many runs. Now, when this pitching staff begins to wilt under the strain of the race and the heat of the summer, as it is liable to do, the Quakers are going to find a very much harder road to travel. They would have a good chance for the pennant with more sturdy batters. As it is now, they are depending on their twirlers and have not better than an outside opportunity for the championship.

* * *

THE Philadelphia club has been the surprise of the race. In its ante-season performances, it made a very poor showing, being easy for both the Athletics and Washington teams of the American League. From those scores, the Quakers looked like the same old bunch, dead on their feet, as they have always been, but with the opening of the race on their own circuit, they jumped away in good style and are playing fast ball. It is their speed and pitching that have held them up so far.

* * *

"WHERE will Brooklyn stop?" is the question which is stirring the baseball following portion of the populace now.

One of these days the Brooklyn team is going to wake up and discover that it is rated as a great ball club, tremble at the idea and start to lose. The Brooklyn boys should finish in the first division. They have talent at present to warrant such a prediction, but they should not crowd the winner of the pennant in September. That is merely my opinion. Perhaps it is based on the years of mediocre baseball played in Brooklyn and Philadelphia will find it harder traveling when they start away from home and invade the West. Not that they will encounter particularly tough competition in the West, but the handicap of playing away from home diamonds and home crowds is going to be a big one. It will be observed that most of the successes of both these teams have been made at home under the watchful eye of home crowds. The Brooklyn club has set its admirers crazy, and men who have not been able to raise up their voices to root for the home club for years are tearing their throats out regardless now. This all helps a ball club, especially on that floats into a winning streak suddenly, as Brooklyn has. Still the Dodgers may tear through the league as Washington did last year and not let up.

* * *

THE Boston club is the one which is paralyzing the ante-season critics. Nobody could see any good in that team before the race opened, with the possible exception of Stallings, the manager, and James Gaffney, the owner, and yet it is playing ball and becoming the talk of the town in place of the declining Red Sox. Stallings is responsible for it, because he is a manager who builds up a club. Within a year or two the Boston team is going to be one to take into the pennant reckoning I believe. The manager is digging up new material which suits his purposes and developing it. One thing he is looking for and which no other Boston team has possessed for a good many years is speed. His system very closely resembles that followed by McGraw.

So far I have not seen St. Louis in action, but I do not believe its showing to date is its normal stride. It does not strike me that Huggins can maintain anything like a first division pace. His club will not stand it.

* * *

WHEN the Giants were going badly two or three weeks ago and everybody was kicking the ball, McGraw called "Larry" Doyle, the good natured, to him after a game and took up with him the matter of an error he had made which figured largely in the defeat of the Giants.

"Well," replied "Larry," "you've got to hand it to me, boss. I make all my errors when they count."

This answer disarmed McGraw.

* * *

IT must not be thought that I am slighting the American League, but there has been little change during the week in that organization. The Athletics are still piling along with a comfortable lead, and Boston is crashing down through the standing, giving little indication of having even a look-in for the flag. The Washington club is the worst sufferer. Griffith has had some hard luck that has slowed up his team and hurt his chances for the pennant very largely. Foster, who within a year developed into one of the best third basemen in the league, is laid up with typhoid fever and will be out of the game for pretty nearly two months anyway. This destroys the smooth working of the infield, because Laporte is slow.

Johnson, the pitcher, is the wonder of the season. He established his record of fifty-six scoreless innings last week. To my mind, he is not only the greatest in the game to-day, but the greatest in the game has ever produced. He did not make this record against easy teams, but against clubs composed of the hardest hitters in the country. Griffith did not pick any "spots" for him. My hat is off to him.

White City Park Now Open

Easy to Pick All-Star Prep Team

Armistead Would Be Good Captain

By Jim Glover

TO select an all-star baseball team from the prep schools of Atlanta this year is not as difficult as it has been in past seasons. This year there is a star for almost every position who is so much better than his nearest competitor that there is little chance for any disagreement.

Here are the names of the players, the positions that they are given and the schools which they represented the past season.

Name	Position	School
Armistead	catcher (Capt.)	Boys High
Fox	pitcher	Boys High
Weston	pitcher	Tech High
Callahan	pitcher	Marist
Lowery	first base	Marist
Bedell	second base	Tech High
Allen	third base	Marist
Spurlock	shortstop	Boys High
Laird	left field	Tech High
Rennolds	center field	Tech High
Wells	right field	Peacock
J. Parks	utility	Tech High

Sam Armistead, of Boys High, is without a doubt the best backstop in the league this year. He steadies a pitcher, leads the league in batting and seldom allows a man to steal a base. He is made captain of the nine as he knows the game thoroughly.

Fox Leading Pitcher.

The pitching staff is the only problem on the team. Fox has shown up the best this year, but one man is not enough to do the twirling for a team, so another had to be selected; and right here is where the rub comes in. Weston and Callahan are so nearly equal in ability that it is necessary to name both. Callahan is a pitcher of the sensational style, a pitcher who often fans the first nine or ten men who face him and then when his support weakens blows up and loses the game. Weston has pitched in only two games this year but his showing in both contests was fine. Besides his pitching he is the best batting and fielding twirler of them all.

Jim Lowery gets the job at first base without any trouble. He is a steady player and about the only man on the Marist team who has not "spilled the beans" in some game.

Bill Bedell is the right man for second base. He is fast and has swiped more bases this year than any man in the league. He is also a good batter.

Charlie Allen, of Marist, has not played quite up to his usual standard at third base this year, but, nevertheless, his playing and hitting has been good enough to warrant him a place on the all-star team.

Weston and Parks, of Tech High, are also crack third sackers, but Weston is also a pitcher and Parks has been given the utility job.

Spurlock Crack Shortstop.

Spurlock is in a class by himself when it comes to playing shortstop. He has a good head and can hit and field well. He is just what a shortstop should be. Harry Rennolds is the best outfielder in the bunch and is given a place at center. His fielding average for the season is .996 and he is always there with the stick.

Johnny Laird is another good outfielder and is especially good on difficult balls. The other outfield position is given to Wells, of Peacock, although he is a shortstop. He is too good a man to be kept off the team and could play the outfield as well as any of them.

Jim Parks, of Tech High, gets the position of utility man, which is just as important a place as any other one on a team. Parks is a good pitcher, crack infielder and a slugger, one of the best in the league, and he would be a great asset to this team.

GREAT MANAGER IS NOT ALWAYS TEAM BUILDER

By Otto C. Floto.

WHILE viewing with regret the poor showing that such popular men as Chance and Tinker are making this year we often wonder whether there is a distinction between a great manager and a builder of a successful baseball team. There must be something to this contention or else why does it constantly flash across our think pan?

There is no one will deny but that Frank Chance is a great manager; that he can get more out of the same men under his charge than any other one individual out of a hundred that try. Yet he's an absolute failure to date with New York. Why? Because he did not build the team he commands. Scouts were sent abroad to bring home the recruits, and from present observation the scouts failed in their missions. Added to this is the poor luck that has greeted the team for the past four or five years. To play a whole series against all the clubs in the Eastern division of the American League and not win a single game—well, we are at a loss to explain it. Yet that's the record, and that's the verdict that will go down against the Peerless Leader in future discussions.

• • •

MIND, no one expected Chance to make good in a single season, nor in two or three seasons for that matter. But we surely looked for better results than have been brought to date. A lot of wooden Indians, frequently seen as advertisements in front of cigar stores, could have accomplished no less.

It's now up to Chance to demonstrate to us that he can "build" as well as manage. He has proven to us beyond a doubt that the managerial abilities are his—won in actual contest time and time again in the severest kind of battle. With manager, he must show that he is really all his friends have claimed for him. He must weed out the dead and replace them with live and winning material. When he has done this we'll shout bravo!

• • •

CHANCE did not build up the great machine that won four National League and two world's championships. He was part of the machine before it was handed over to him, but the late Frank Selee gathered Tinker, Kling, Schulte, Evers, Hofman and the rest of the bunch that stood so gallantly by the P. L. in all those now historic struggles. Selee had to step down and out owing to poor health, and Chance stepped in and developed the heirlooms that his manager left to him.

True, Chance made some advantageous trades that still further strengthened his machine. But the men traded were all gathered by Selee and proved such alluring bait to the other clubs that the swap which brought Brown, Shekard and others into the Cub fold was comparatively easy. So without taking any credit away from Chance, all he had to do in this instance was to keep the well-organized machine moving. This he did with wonderful results. He succeeded where another man might have failed.

• • •

TAKE Clark Griffith, of the Washington team. He is one of the best managers in the business. Time and time again he has proved this. But we ask, is he a builder? To a certain extent we believe him to be. He surely showed such ability when he organized the Highlanders for their first appearance in the American League. Things, however, were rather easy at that time because the younger league was grabbing all the stars from the National. When he got Chesbro he had pretty nearly a team.

He failed to make much of a show with Cincinnati. (But so do all the others.) In Washington last year as well as this he is doing wonders. But in figuring matters remember that it was Cantillon who got Johnson to come there, and the other half of the team was helped along by Jimmy McAleer. Clark, however, is getting every ounce out of them.

MANDOT 10-TO-8 CHOICE OVER ANDERSON TO-NIGHT

LOS ANGELES, May 20.—The experience and ring generalship of Joe Mandot, the New Orleans lightweight, has caused a flood of money to be offered by his admirers at the eleventh hour, and just twelve hours before he is due to enter the Vernon ring to box Bud Anderson, of Medford, Oreg., the Southern boy is a favorite at odds of 10 to 8.

With their training concluded in the best of shape, both boys are in perfect condition and confident, Mandot feeling sure he will redeem himself, and Anderson certain that he will add another knock-out to his record.

SMITH 10-TO-8 FAVORITE OVER JESS WILLARD

By W. W. Naughton.

SAN FRANCISCO, May 20.—In James W. Coffroth's Eighth Avenue arena to-night a couple of huskies will have designs on the world's championship. They are heavyweights and their names are Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith.

Did they belong in any other class there would be haggling and maybe claiming of forfeit if one man scaled a few ounces over a stipulated notch. As it is, Willard will have fifty pounds the better of the poundage and Smith will have no redress, for the laws of the ring, so far as they bear upon avoirdupois, do not hold "north of '58." Smith has been made favorite, the price this morning being 10 to 8. This is in pursuance of San Francisco's policy of pinning its faith to the man it knows when a local fighter and a stranger become embroiled.

Just what the odds would be if the heavies met in the East is not known, but it is doubtful if Smith would be installed first choice. The Gunner's best performance there was his victory over Bombardier Wells, and Willard outboxed Luther McCarty, who beat Al Palzer, who beat Bombardier Wells.

Both Willard and Smith are well thought of around New York and are regarded as fit candidates for the world's championship. Willard lacks the experience of Smith, and this is one reason of the San Francisco fight followers' liking for Smith. Gunboat's vaunted knockout punch is another. It may be that Willard also possesses a knockout punch, but San Francisco has no knowledge of the fact. He certainly has not been advertised in that direction to the same extent as Smith.

CHARLIE WHITE STOPS THOMAS IN TWO ROUNDS

NEW ORLEANS, May 20.—Charlie White stopped Joe Thomas in the second round of their 10-round bout last night. The local boy was an easy victim for the Chicago star.

Thomas was knocked down for the count of nine in the first round, after going down two other times, the bell saving him the last time.

At the opening of the second, Thomas appeared to have regained his strength, but a few well directed rights and lefts put him groggy again, and after about one minute of the second round the referee, Dick Burke, raised White's hand and motioned Thomas to his corner.

MURPHY OFFERS $25,000 FOR RIXEY OR ALEXANDER

CHICAGO, May 20.—Charles W. Murphy, president of the Chicago Cubs, to-day is on his way East to join the team.

It was said at Cub headquarters that he will stop off en route and try to close a deal whereby three Cubs will be traded for a pitcher, said slab star to be the "Walter Johnson of the National League." Murphy is desperate in his desire to bring his club back to the top, and before departing declared he would spend $25,000 for a Rixey, Alexander or man of that type.

SHUGRUE AND LORE BOX FAST 12-ROUND DRAW

YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, May 20.—Young Shrugrue, of Jersey City, and Johnny Lore, of New York, boxed a fast 12-round draw here last night. Tommy Bresnahan, of Newcastle, Pa., was given a well-earned decision over Louis Deponthieu, of Paris, at the end of a 10-round semi-final.

TOMMY SHEEHAN WINS.

BILLINGS, MONT., May 20.—Tommy Sheehan, of Chicago, won a decision here last night over Roy Cojuit, of Cody, Wyo., at the end of a 12-round bout.

Mathewson As Savior of Giants

Keeps Champs in Race--Marquard

By Rube Marquard

(Holder of the World's Record of Nineteen Consecutive Victories.)

SO many startling surprises have developed in the first month of the major league campaigns it is hard to figure out where it will all end.

By the looks of things anything is liable to happen. The "dope" has been upset in so many surprising manners that it seems after all as if there is some "jinx" attached to the magic "13" of this year of grace. However, there are enough beacons shining through the gloom of uncertainty to re-establish faith in ability as opposed to superstition.

We do not have to travel very far just now to find the one real beacon of Giant hope. His name is Christy Mathewson. His work alone is enough to break all the charms of "jinxes" and "hoodoos," for he arises in the thirteenth year of his career as a Giant and a major league performer to a height of perfection that in any other pitcher would be regarded as miraculous. Mathewson has been the great bulwark of the Giant pitching staff so long that the public has come to regard his wonderful brilliancy as a matter of common habit.

To none other than the great master of pitching science may New York contratulate itself upon being as well to the front in the 1913 National League race. So far he has been the only reliable pitching asset of the veteran talent. Matty is confident that this will be his greatest year, and I share the belief with him.

Here is a pitcher who very wisely has conserved every ounce of vitality. By the use of his head he has been able to shine year after year with the very least possible strain to his arm. And I believe that Christy Mathewson will live to as ripe an age of efficiency as did the venerable Cy Young. To-day Mathewson is better than he has ever been before.

Illness Sets "Rube" Back.

Mathewson has had to shoulder the great bulk of the pitching responsibility so far this season, but I think there will be plenty of help for him from now on. My chief regret for Mathewson, McGraw and all my fellow players has been that I am not capable of doing my share toward making it three pennants in a row. I offer no excuses, for I know in my heart that very soon I will be back into my proper stride. I was just hitting my pace when an attack of tonsilitis set me back.

By the time I am on my feet once more—and that will not be very long, I can tell you—the Giants should be as well provided with pitching material as any club could desire. I know from the condition in which the men returned from Texas that a week or two of summer weather would put all our pitchers in first-class shape.

Our club is not the only one that has suffered in this respect. Pitching, as a general rule, has been very unsatisfactory so far in both leagues. With very few exceptions—principally Mathewson, Johnson and Plank—pitchers usually the most reliable have been most unsteady. By every law of precedent this condition should not obtain when the veteran pitchers finally round into shape.

Having seen all our rivals but St. Louis, I am more convinced than ever that the Giants should win the pennant. It will not be the runaway that most of our supporters presumed before the start. It will mean a good, steady fight through the whole course, a condition that should make the current season a most memorable one.

League Strength in East.

The strength of the National League, as evidenced in the first month's play, centered in the East, just as it does in the American. Philadelphia and Brooklyn, rather than Pittsburg and Chicago, seem bent upon most forcibly debating the championship with the Giants.

With Hans Wagner back in the game the Pirates are almost bound to greatly improve their standing. Fred Clarke's pitchers have been woefully off color all along, and this condition has resulted in a very severe handicap for his team. Pittsburg will undoubtedly get back among the leaders, but has so much ground to make up that it can not now be seriously regarded as a challenger of the Giants.

Chicago has a very good looking club outside its pitchers, but is so weak in box material that it can not hope, under present conditions, to cope with any one of the three strongest Eastern clubs.

Cincinnati is in the same boat as Chicago. The Indian Johnston, has been Tinker's only reliable pitcher so far. Yet there is fair strength in the Reds' staff if the men ever get to working properly. Chicago can not muster as much twirling strength as Cincinnati, though Evers' team in all other respects is superior.

A very pleasing circumstance to the Giants is the manner in which George Stallings has resurrected the Boston Braves. Out of practically nothing he has shaped a collection capable of giving the best a very stiff argument. This will prove of great help to the Giants, no doubt, as Boston will be able to stop New York's rivals once in a while. Heretofore Boston always managed somehow to make things interesting enough for New York, but never did a great deal against Pittsburg and Chicago.

Giants in Lead Soon.

I think that inside of a very short time the Giants will step out into the lead, and once there our club will never be dislodged. It is a fact that we have not played the game of which we are capable. The fault did not lie wholly in poor pitching, either. We have lost many games because we did not get the most out of our hitting ability and speed.

I suppose we looked too lightly upon the other teams. But if so we have learned a good lesson, for every Giant player will try his very best from now until the season is over. Over-confidence is blamed for the loss of a pennant to the Athletics last year. It will not be our sad lot this season. McGraw is a man who will not stand for trifling.

Sporting Food

SPORT.

When Nero lived in ancient days
Men had their sport in brutal ways.
They sat around on cushioned seats
And loudly cheered the bloody feats
Performed by large and lowbrowed gents
Who earned their bread by putting dents
And fractures in another's dome
To please the populace of Rome
To-day we all would take offense
(We men of high intelligence)
To see a pair of fellows wield
A butcher's cleaver and a shield,
And cloud each other on the dome
As in the days of ancient Rome.
We love a nobler form of sport,
A milder and a gentler sort,
And so we pay our hard earned scads
To see a lot of healthy lads
Who race on motorcycle tracks
And break their arms and legs and backs,
Who travel at a fearful rate
And finish in a scrambled state.
And if, perchance, they do not die
We heave a disappointed sigh.
"Ah, yes!" we say while riding home,
"What brutes there were in ancient Rome!"

One Jeff O'Connell wishes to state that the climate of Racine, Wis., is too densely populated with boxing gloves to be healthful.

Still, Mr. O'Connell made a deep impression in Racine. In fact, he made five separate and distinct impressions in the floor.

Nick Altrock, comedian, wants to pitch, whereas some of our Cracker pitchers pitch as if they were trying to be comedians.

From this distance it is hard to tell whether O. Overall is coming back or going back.

Willie Ritchie avers that he will engage in mortal conflict for the small sum of $17,500, demonstrating that there are various ways to obtain money under false pretenses.

Hugh Jennings is said to be on the verge of nervous breakdown, due to a severe case of Ty Cobb, aided and abetted by a losing streak.

Abstinence Will Bring Success

Shun Tobacco, Says Frank Chance

By Frank L. Chance

This is my sixteenth year in major league baseball. For fifteen of those years I was connected with the Chicago club. In that time I have served at practically everything, from all-round utility man to manager.

And, incidentally, I believe that I have about sized up the situation in regard to ball players. In the first place, it is essential that tobacco and drink be left alone. If drink is tabooed it naturally follows that late hours also will be tabooed. It is necessary for a youngster aspiring to succeed in baseball to see to it that his constitution is made strong and that he does nothing to interfere with his physical development.

I have come to the conclusion that a man is not fully developed until he has reached 30 years of age. Possibly after that the moderate use of tobacco will not do him any great injury.

So much for my advice to youngsters who aspire to make baseball a profession.

"My advent into baseball was probably as inauspicious as an event of such a nature could possibly be. There were no brass bands to meet me at the station, and, as I remember, the newspapers of Chicago devoted a short paragraph—maybe it was only a sentence—to the fact that the Chicago team had signed a young catcher.

But I am getting a bit ahead of the story. In 1894-95 I played ball on the Washington College (California) team. With me was a young fellow, also a student at the college, named "Rod" Wagner. During the summer months he was manager or had something to do with a town team at Sullivan, Ill. He asked me how I would like to play ball there. He told me I could get $40 a month and my board and lodging.

At that time I was only 16, and $10 a week sounded pretty good to me, so I accepted. The club didn't make any money and I was "done" out of my pay.

I returned to college in 1897 and took part in a big amateur baseball tournament held in California for youths under 18 years of age. Some of the fellows who entered it of course cheated, but that has nothing to do with my case.

"Cal" McVey, who one time was a member of the Cincinnati team, saw me play and recommended me to "Cap" Anson, who was then manager of the Chicago club. Anson refused to give me a trial. That was either in the spring or early summer of 1897. In the autumn of the same year McVey wrote to "Jim" Hart, who had succeeded Anson, and Hart sent for me.

I was signed as an extra catcher, but after I had been in Chicago for a while it seemed to me as if I had been signed as a sort of make-yourself-useful around the ball park. Any little odd jobs that were to be done and there wasn't anybody else handy to do them I was ordered to pitch in.

If the bat boys didn't show up, I had to look after the bats. If there was no one else to carry the bats from the "bus" into the ball park, or from the ball park to the "bus," I did it. If Hart or some of the veteran players on the club forgot anything, such as gloves and the like, I was sent after them. Even some of the "bushers" who were just breaking in pretty much the same as I was, but who happened to be my seniors by a couple of years, employed me as errand boy for them.

But I stood it. I was in the big show and I was determined to make good. I realized that the best way to make good was to stick around as long as they would let me and watch the cavortings of those who knew. I did, and eventually my time came. And I guess I must have made good.

The club was in need of a first baseman, and I was delegated to cover the bag.

It was in 1905 that I was made manager of the Cubs, after nine years of service. Of course, the rest is what might be called modern history and there is no use rehashing that.

MANY CORKING FIGHTS ARE ON TAP THIS WEEK

By Left Hook.

BOXING attracts unusual attention this week inasmuch as some of the leading pugilists will take part in important battles in various parts of the country.

The big event is the twenty round clash between Jess Willard and Gunboat Smith in San Francisco Tuesday night. On the coast there is little speculation on the result. The Californians never have seen Willard fight, but in the East ring followers believe that Willard is too big and clever for the heavy hitting Smith.

The winner of this battle will be in a position to force Luther McCarty into a fight, which ought to determine the ownership of the world's title.

Klaus Meets McGoorty.

Frank Klaus, middleweight champion, will make his first appearance in this country since whipping Papke and Carpentier in France, at Pittsburg Saturday night. He will hook up with Eddie McGoorty, of Oshkosh, in a six round affair. If Klaus whips McGoorty, which he ought to do rather easily, he will be matched to box Mike Gibbons in New York, as the latter showed in the scrap with Jack McCarron last week that he had come back with all of his former skill.

Jim Flynn Fights Coffey.

Heavyweights will provide two ten round bouts in New York Friday night. Fireman Jim Flynn will try conclusions with Jim Coffey, a rawboned Irishman from Dublin, who can hit like a pile driver. Coffey has knocked out all comers.

In Los Angeles Bud Anderson and Joe Mandot offer a dandy scrap, which should go twenty rounds. It is booked for Tuesday night.

At Kenosha Tuesday night Murphy and Britton meet, but little enthusiasm is shown in the affair.

CROUSE STOPS M'CLOSKEY.

PITTSBURG, May 20.—"Blink" McCloskey, of Philadelphia, was knocked out in the fourth round of his bout last night with "Buck" Crouse, of Pittsburg.

DUFFY DEFEATS O'BRIEN.

PHILADELPHIA, May 20.—Young Jack O'Brien made his reappearance in the ring last night and was defeated by Jimmy Duffy in six rounds.

$50 REWARD

STOLEN MOTORCYCLE

Seven H. P. twin cylinder, 1913 model (red) Indian motorcycle, stolen from Y. M. C. A. building, Atlanta, about 9:15 p. m. Wednesday, May 14.

Motor No. 80 E 263. Flange broken off valve chamber of front cylinder; frame bent under front part of tank; front forks plainly show having been straightened; Goodyear tire on rear wheel, U. S. tire on front wheel.

Believed to have been stolen by young man of 20 or 21, about 5 ft. 9 ins., rather slim, light hair, wearing blue suit and soft hat. (Can be identified by three people.)

$25 reward for recovery of machine and $25 additional for evidence sufficient to convict guilty party.

FODDER FOR FANS

C. Webb Murphy, disgusted with the weakness of his pitching staff, sent eight scouts to different parts of the country yesterday with orders to gather in some pitchers.

• • •

The Reds defeated the Braves yesterday in a ten-inning battle that was characterized by considerable slugging and many errors.

• • •

The wonderful showing made this season by the Phillies has necessitated the building of six additional ticket booths to facilitate the handling of the crowds.

• • •

And perhaps Horace Fogel, who used to own the Phillies, isn't experiencing a seasick feeling when he notes that the daily attendance figures at the Phillies' grounds is double and treble what it was last year.

• • •

The Dodgers again beat the Cardinals, but failed to move into first place because the Phillies had an easy time defeating the Cubs.

• • •

"Smoky Joe" Wood seems to be back in form again. He held the White Sox to one run yesterday, while his own club piled up ten.

• • •

Ty Cobb's three hits out of three times up were big factors in the defeat of the Athletics by the Tigers.

• • •

Eddie Collins, who is near the top of the American League batting column, harvested four hits out of four times up yesterday.

• • •

"Jake" Daubert, the Dodgers' first sacker, continues to slug the ball. He made a single and a triple yesterday.

• • •

Falkenberg, the elongated "comeback twirler for the Naps, added another victory to his string yesterday, making eight in a row.

• • •

With the bases full in the eighth inning, Manager Chance up for the second time in that inning, batted out of turn, singled and scored the two runs that won the game for the Yankees from the Browns. When the Browns protested the trick it was too late to be availing.

• • •

The most thrilling game staged on the Polo grounds for a long time was that of yesterday, which the Giants won in the fourteenth 3 to 2. Time and again the pitchers for both the Giants and the Pirates were in "holes," but wonderful fielding pulled them out. The Pirates used fourteen and the Giants eighteen players.

• • •

"Heinie" Zimmerman and Manager Evers, of the Cubs, had a wordy battle on the field yesterday which may result in Evers suspending the third sacker, who, it is said, objects to playing under Evers.

• • •

Evers, by the way, may soon hear other highly uncomplimentary things about his future. President Murphy is on his way to E. A ton for a confab with his manager, and it is not likely that C. Webb will wax enthusiastic over the miserable showing the Cubs have made so far in the East.

GEORGIA TACKLE DIES FROM TYPHOID FEVER

ATHENS, GA., May 20.—William Luther Arnett, of Odessa, a member of the junior law class of the University of Georgia, died after an illness of four days here this morning from typhoid fever. His body was carried to his home this afternoon, the law class following the casket in a body. He was 26 years old, and in the final games of football last fall he was a star tackle. He was one of the best men physically, mentally and morally in the University.

VOLS BUY NICHOLSON; MAY GET OUTFIELD BERTH

NASHVILLE, TENN., May 20.—President Hirsig announced yesterday the purchase from Louisville of Outfielder Ovid Nicholson, formerly of the Blue Grass League, where he established a great record for stolen bases. He was secured by Louisville from Pittsburg, who drafted him from the Blue Grass. Nicholson will probably replace Daley in the Vols' outfield.

HANLON IN DRAW BOUT.

NEW YORK, May 20.—Eddie Hanlon and Lew Diamond fought a 10-round draw here last night.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Sammy Harris, manager of Kid Williams, is still hounding Johnny Coulon, the bantamweight champion, for a match. Harris says he is willing to give Coulon a guarantee of $3,000 to fight Williams in a 15 or 20 round bout on July 4.

• • •

Jimmy Hurst, who handles the reins over "Wildcat" Ferns, writes from Kansas City that he has his protege matched to box "Patty" McIntyre, Canadian welterweight champion, 10 rounds at Winnipeg, Manitoba, June 7. Ferns will also meet Anton La Grave at Taft, Cal., July 4, for a 20-round fight.

• • •

Tommy Walsh, Mandot's hustling manager, abused his typewriter long enough to let us know that the French baker boy is in great trim for his 20-round engagement with Bud Anderson on the coast Tuesday night.

• • •

If victor over Anderson, Walsh says he has two big fights planned for the Southerner. Tommy expects to send Joe against Rivers on July 4, and Willie Ritchie on Labor Day.

• • •

Leach Cross vs. Tommy Marto and Ray Bronson vs. Phil Cross, is the card arranged for the McMahon brothers for their club in New York next Wednesday night.

• • •

Because Johnny Coulon demanded his traveling expenses from Chicago to Boston the officials of the Atlas A. A., of Boston, have declared off the 12-round bout between Coulon and Charley Goldman scheduled to take place May 28. In place of this bout Matty Baldwin and Dick Gallant will battle.

• • •

Frank Mantell and Larry English will clash in a 10-round set-to at New York Tuesday night. They are middleweights, having agreed to make 158 pounds at 3 o'clock.

• • •

Pittsburg fans are looking for Frank Klaus to win both his battles this month with Eddie McGoorty and Jack Dillon. The Pittsburg boy will surely have his hands full coming out a winner, as both his opponents are running him a close race for the title.

• • •

The opponents of the Illinois boxing bill have a hot fight on their hands and there is much feeling being displayed by both sides. We should worry.

• • •

Following are some of the bouts scheduled to take place Tuesday night: Ollie Kirk vs. Louis De Ponthieu, 10 rounds, Binghamton, N. Y.; Gunboat Smith vs. Jess Willard, 20 rounds, San Francisco, Cal.; Joe Mandot vs. Bud Anderson, 20 rounds, Los Angeles, Cal.; Jack Britton vs. Eddie Murphy 10 rounds, Kenosha, Wis.; Battling Nelson vs. Tommy Lowe, 12 rounds, Altoona, Pa.

A Story for Baseball Fans That Will Interest Every Lover of the National Game.

To-day's Installment.

CHAPTER II.

SEATED in a chair, with his feet resting on the edge of a small stove in the center of the room, was a short, keen-eyed man in his thirties, reading a copy of Sporting Life. He turned his head as the door opened and swept his eye over the dripping figure that stood, tall and erect, just within the doorway. Pools of water formed on the floor under the stranger and they came together in a rivulet, which crept snake-like along the planking until it found a friendly crack.

"I am looking for Mr. Bill Smith, manager of the Atlanta Baseball Club," said the young man.

"I am Bill Smith," replied the man in the chair. "What can I do for you?"

"I want to play ball on your team."

Long experience in managing pennant-winning ball teams (and some that were not pennant-winners) had taught Bill Smith many valuable baseball lessons. One of these was never to pass snap judgment on a ball player; another was never to take a ball player's estimate of his own ability. Nineteen managers out of twenty would have taken just one glance at the bedraggled figure in the doorway and dismissed it with a curt "nothing doing." That was not Bill Smith's way. And his method of handling this particular applicant for a position on his team led to the most surprising series of sensations that ever happened in the history of the national game.

"You look somewhat moist," observed the manager. "Take off your clothes and dry them at this stove. "Whisky!" he suddenly yelled. "That isn't an invitation to take a drink," he added; "I am only calling my attendant."

Smith Surprised.

In response to the summons a colored man entered the room briskly.

"Yassir, yassir," replied Whisky, getting busy at once. Many seasons spent in attending to the wants of impatient ball players in that club house had developed an activity in Whisky far beyond the trend of his race. In a jiffy he had every stitch of the young man's clothes off him. Then he brought towels and began to administer a thorough rubdown.

Familiar as he was with all stages of dress and undress, Bill Smith could not repress an exclamation of admiration for the wonderful specimen of young manhood that stood before him, arms outstretched, while the attendant vigorously applied the towel. The manager cast aside his "Sporting Life" and walked completely around the young man, sizing him up from tip to toe. Six feet two inches, perhaps a trifle under that, he appeared to be. Smith guessed his weight to be a good 200 pounds, with not more than five pounds to come off. A well-shaped head and neck were set on a pair of broad shoulders not too square. Even as the stranger's body swayed and his arms moved slightly under the manipulations of the skillful rubber, Smith could see the back muscles ripple. Clean-limbed he was all the way down, waist somewhat tapering, small, but strong-looking hips and legs like a quarter-mile runner. His skin was as fair, almost, as a woman's.

The manager grabbed his chair, turned it around to face the stranger, and sat down in it.

"What's your name," he asked.

"Gordon Kelly."

"Sounds like a good combination. Gordon was a great Georgia soldier and Kelly was a great baseball general. How old are you?"

"Twenty-one next month."

Never Saw a Game.

"What club did you play with last?"

"Never played on any club."

"What?"

"Never saw a ball game in my life."

Whisky promptly ceased rubbing, threw down the towel and moved off with an expression of disgust on his face.

"Pick up that towel and finish your job, Whisky. We're not through with this young man yet," remarked Bill Smith.

"Dis ain't no ball player, boss. Dishyere is jest a common, ordinary white man," expostulated the attendant.

"You never can tell, Whisky; you never can tell," replied Bill Smith, letting fall a philosophic remark that had not a little to do with his success as a manager of ball players.

Whisky took up the towel and started in again, but it was plainly to be seen his heart was not in his work. Whisky lived, moved and breathed in the atmosphere of baseball. Ball players were as food and drink to him. A syndicate of John L. Sullivans, Frank Gotches, Eugene Sandows and Percy Herculeses would have created but a sorry impression on Whisky if it couldn't play ball.

"All right, Whisky, that's enough," declared the manager. "Now, hten bring me a uniform-pants and shirt. That's the stuff. Crawl into these, Mr. Kelly, and draw up a chair and toast your shins in front of this fire while your clothes are drying out. Have a cigar?"

"I never smoke."

"Have a chew?"

"I never use it."

"I should say you didn't by the looks of those molars. Have a drink?"

"I never drink."

"Well, you couldn't get it here if you wanted it. Now, tell me, what put it into your head that you wanted to play ball?"

A Cobb or a Speaker.

"I'll tell you, Mr. Smith," replied Kelly, with a smile of engaging frankness that displayed his fine teeth. "I read in the newspapers about Ty Cobb getting $10,000 a year and holding out for $15,000. It looked good to me."

"Is that all?"

"Not quite. I came from the Georgia mountain country, Mr. Smith. I have never been in a city before. The first time I ever rode in a street car was this morning. But, I know all about baseball, although I have never even seen a ball game."

Whisky waited to hear no more. With a look of immeasurable superiority on his black face, he turned and left the club house. Gordon Kelly continued:

"Now, all this may sound strange to you, Mr. Smith, but I am just as confident that I can soon become a good ball player as I am that you will continue to win baseball pennants."

Bill Smith laughed.

"That seems to put it up to me," he said. "You've got the instincts of a ball player all right. They always put it up to the manager, especially the pitchers. You must want to be a pitcher."

"No, sir; I want to be an outfielder."

"A Ty Cobb, eh?"

"A Ty Cobb, or a Tris Speaker, or better."

Bill Smith grinned. Ever since he broke into the game he had been pestered, off and on, by all sorts of baseball "bugs," but this was about the worst case he ever experienced. Here was a young man who confessed he never saw a game of ball, yet was positive he had the makings in him of a player that would surpass two of the greatest diamond stars the game ever produced. The idea was as absurd as if a street sweeper came in and said that while he didn't know anything about the oil business, he was sure he could make more money in it than John D. Rockefeller. The whole thing was so ridiculous it was really funny. Bill Smith's grin broke into a hearty laugh. But Gordon Kelly didn't laugh. He was never more serious in his life. The manager noticed the expression on the young man's face and his laughter ceased.

A High Standard.

"Better than a Cobb or Speaker, eh? Well, I don't mind saying, Mr. Kelly, you have set a pretty high standard for yourself. Now, then, what do you want me to do, sign you up at Ty Cobb's salary?"

Gordon Kelly shifted his chair so that he faced the manager.

"Nothing like that, Mr. Smith," he said soberly. "Here's my proposition: The Southern League championship season opens on April 10, about six weeks from now. What I want you to do is this: Give me permission to practice here with you and your players until the season opens. If by that time I haven't demonstrated my worth to you as a ball player, just say so, and we will part the best of friends as far as I am concerned. If, on the other hand, I do demonstrate to you that I am entitled to a place on your team, I will ask that you sign me up at whatever salary you care to pay me. There's nothing unfair, or unreasonable in that, is there?"

Bill Smith took three or four puffs of his cigar before replying to this direct question. What sort of person was he dealing with, he wondered. Was this young man simply an extraordinary baseball "bug," or was he mentally unbalanced? Was he baseball crazy, or crazy in the real sense of the word? If he simply had the baseball craze, there was nothing astonishing about that and Bill Smith figured he would have no trouble in handling the case. He had handled many of them successfully in his time. But the other kind of insanity was a little out of his line, and required not a baseball exuert, but an alienist.

Do You Wonder

That Cupid Is Such an Adorable Rogue When His Mother Was Such a Lovely Trouble Maker?

By NELL BRINKLEY

Copyright, 1913, International News Service.

LOVELY he is—adorable, a plotter, irresistible, a knave, sweet as an almond-blossom, a dabbler in trouble, soft-hearted, cruel, "Love" his business, a promiser, offering bitter-sweet, unutterably a darling, unchangeably a rascal! And everybody—('specially those who have been stirred 'round in one of his concoctions which he calls "an affair")—everybody ('specially those who know he is both an almond blossom and a rascal—and yet love him)—everybody wonders why he is all this! Maybe you do not think of his mother when you wonder that. How could he help but be lovable, a rascal, and a contradiction? For his mother he had a creature, herself born of the sea, the sea which is tender and terrible, smiling and stormy, and all mystery—Venus—goddess of beauty, lover of laughter and love and light, herself a rogue and a saint! Playing all day long under the sun and sky of dream-fostering Greece, in the white-circle of her arms, strained to her breast, teased with a rose in her idle hand, looking often into the hot blue of her eyes, hearing her laughter, comrade in her mischief—son of a Beauty—a devotee of Love—a sweet Rogue—how could he be other than what he is!

He Has a Fight With a Scotch Kid and Comes Out a Victor After a Hard "Scrap."

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

I HAD a fite with a Scotch kid yesterday. It was a close fite; the Scotch kid came close to gitting killed beefoar I felt sorry for him. I got a black eye & that was all.

I doant like fites, & I nevver have a fite until I am forced into it, but this Scotch kid was too fresh. He caim to our house with his father. His father was a Scotch Highlander wich had fought all thru the Boer war & dident git hurted. He was jest like his littel boy. His naim was Duglas McNabb & the naim of the kid was Sandy McNabb.

We went out into the yard to play catch & Sandy wasent a good player at all. He had on kilts; he sed that his mother always asked him to wear kilts, but he sed he was glad of it beekaus he was a true Scotchman & wasent ashamed of it. The Scotch are a undefeated race, he toald me, & these kilts stands for currage & fiteing qualities.

The Irish is pritty good fiters, too, I sed. My father is Scotch, but my mother is half Scotch & half Irish, & I am proud of the Irish blood that is in me.

But the Irish aint a undefeated race, sed Sandy. Maybe thay have been defeated, I sed, but thay nevver knew it if thay was. Why doant you catch the ball onst in a while, butter fingers? I sed to him.

Golf Was His Pie.

I dinna care much for this sorry kind of a gaim, he sed to me. Golf, that is a braw gaim. I doant think much of gold, I toald Sandy.. Golf is a high-toned cousin of shinney. Baseball is the gratest gaim in the wurld. It taiks brains to play baseball.

It can't taik much brains to play baseball or the Scotch wud be playin it, sed Sandy McNabb. The Scotch are all brains. Look at Bobbie Burns, he sed. That man knew everything. Shakespeer knew a lot, too, I sed. He knew a littel, sed Sandy, but not as much as Bobbie Burns. Bobbie Burns knew moar than my own father knows, he sed.

Tom Moore was Irish, I sed, & he rote pritty potrey, too. Why doant you catch that ball?

I dinna cair to play moar the noo, sed Sandy. It hurts my fingers muckle, he sed. So we quit, but Sandy dident stop talking.

Bobbie Burns was a all around geenyus, he sed. My father says I am going to look like him wen I grow up & rite potrey, too, to keep up the naim of the undefeated race.

How It Started.

Maybe you will rite potrey, sed I to Sandy, but you will nevver look like Bobbie Burns, you littel wart. Bobbie Burns was always handsome, as a kid & as a man. When you grow up you will prubly look like you look now, only you will have to spend a littel Scotch munny for bigger kits & you will have red hair on the calfs of yure legs ware you havent any pants, I sed.

I will na be called a wart, sed Sandy. Hoot mon, he sed, taik that, and he hit me in the eye. I didn't know he was going to hit me; that is how I got my black eye. Then I sailed into Sandy, licked him good & proper. I was going to maik fun of him & his underfeated race, but I happened to think that I am 3-4 Scotch, too.

He Was a Great Man

"LOOKING impressive is well worth while," said the drug store man. "Let me tell you a story.

"John Higginbotham, who lived in the town that I came from, was a fine old fellow. But he was of such a retiring disposition that he got the worst of everything. He was so meek and mild that he never went anywhere, saw anything or did anything.

"He was given a back seat on all special occasions. He wore a smile most of the time, so few people ever knew how sensitive he was about his clothes and his personal appearance generally.

"There came a time when the doctor said John must wear spectacles. John was filled with consternation because of his apprehension as to their effect on his looks. He feared that men, women and children would make fun of him.

"Nevertheless, he wanted to wear spectacles, because the President of the United States was coming to town and John wanted to see him. He wanted to know if the President looked like the pictures in the newspaper. So he wore spectacles.

"His legs trembled beneath him when he first ventured out on the street wearing the spectacles. However, the clear vision they gave him was delightful!

"The first friend he met was Gabriel Von Vorden, and John colored to the roots of his hair at the steady gaze with which Gabe regarded him. He could see plainly through the new spectacles, however, that Gabe's face wore an expression of wonder rather than amusement.

"'The very man!' exclaimed Gabe.

"'You see,' he went on to explain, 'there isn't a man in the village to preside on the platform when the President speaks. There isn't a man who looks impressive enough to sit beside the President. But with them specs, John, you can sit right up there and the President will take you for a college professor.'

"That's how it happened that John Higginbotham shared the honors of the occasion along with the water pitcher, the drinking glass and the President's handkerchief. And no doubt the President thought the village was quite a seat of learning, judging from the appearance of the man who sat on the platform, for every now and then he turned around to get the approval of the presiding dignitary, which John was too badly frightened to give.

"John's imperturbability made the President still more anxious to win the approval of such a stern and ponderous individual. As John never turned a hair all through the speech, the head of the nation went on his way thinking how shallow and inconsequential his efforts were in the eyes of the deep man on the platform."

Rod in Pickle.

"How well behaved your children are," said the minister's wife.

"They are perfectly lovely children," added the minister.

The parents smiled proudly, and up spoke little Agnes:

"Pa said if we didn't behave he'd knock our blocks off; didn't you, pa?"

What Caraway Seeds Did

"NO, I thank you," said the man from Michigan. "Not any, thanks. I never eat cake or candy."

"How strange!" murmured the innocent young woman.

"Listen," said the man from Michigan, "and I will tell you the whole sad story. Once I was very fond of cake, and perhaps I would now be if it were not for fear"—here the Michigander looked fearfully over his shoulder—"of caraway seed."

"I can not stand caraway seed. That's why I eat neither candy nor cake, and almost no bread. It is a great hardship."

"But there are some kinds of cake and candy that do not contain caraway seed," objected the innocent young woman.

"No. I used to think there were. Once or twice I thought I had discovered a kind that was free from caraway seed, but it always turned out to have some caraway seed in it.

"I once hired a special baker to bake cake and bread for me without caraway seed in it. I was happy for a while. Then all of a sudden I hit full force into a caraway seed in the midst of my cake. It was a pink cake with gothic ornaments such as I delighted in. It was a cruel shock.

"I flew down the street to the dentist's to get him to give me something for the pain in my tooth, and after he had administered cocaine plentifully I went after the baker. He tried to explain that the boy was responsible for the caraway seed and that it was all an accident, but I chased that baker over the counter and under the counter until I had him.

"Nevertheless, people have put caraway seeds over on me many times since. Sometimes I analyze a piece of cake when I am especially hungry for it, exploring the last crumb. When I am reassured and thrown off my guard I bite into a sixty horsepower caraway seed that makes my hair stand on end.

"There is no help for it. Caraway seed is a universal affliction."

The forger smiled, and there was malignant triumph in his expression.

"Pooh!" he exclaimed. "Even if I used it, they would never get on to me. See this?" He pointed at the strange contrivance on the muzzle.

"What is it?" she asked, interestedly. "I have never seen anything like that before."

"Of course, you naven't," Garson answered with much pride. "I'm the first man in the business to get one, and I'll bet on it. I keep up with the times." For once, he was revealing that fundamental egotism which is the characteristic of all his kind. "That's one of the new Maxim silencers," he continued. "With smokeless powder in the cartridges, and the silencers on, I can make a shot from my coat-pocket, and you wouldn't even know it had been done. * * * And I'm some shot, believe me."

"Impossible!" Mary ejaculated.

"Good gracious, not here!" Mary exclaimed in alarm. "We would have the whole place down on us."

Garson chuckled.

"You just watch the dinky little vase on the table across the room there. 'Tain't very valuable, is it?"

"No," Mary whispered.

A Spectacular Shot.

In the same instant, while still her eyes were on the vase, it fell in a cascade of shivered glass to the table and floor. She had heard no sound; she saw no smoke. Perhaps there had been a faintest clicking noise. She was not sure. She stared dumfounded for a few seconds, then turned her bewildered face toward Garson, who was grinning in high enjoyment.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," she declared, vastly impressed.

"Neat little thing, ain't it?" the man asked, exultantly.

"Where did you get it?" Mary asked.

"In Boston, last week. And between you and me, Mary, it's the only model, and it sure is a corker for crime."

The sinister association of ideas made Mary shudder, but she said no more. She would have shuddered again if she could have guessed the vital part that pistol was destined to play. But she had no thought of any actual peril to come from it. She might have thought otherwise, could she have known of the meeting that night in the back room of Blinkey's, where English Eddie and Garson sat with their heads close together over a table.

"A chance like this," Griggs was saying, "a chance that will make a fortune for all of us."

"It sounds good," Garson admitted wistfully.

"If is good," the other declared with an oath. "Why, if this goes through, we're set up for life. We can quit, all of us."

"Yes," Garson agreed, "we can quit, all of us." There was avarice in his voice.

The tempter was sure that the battle was won, and smiled contentedly.

"Well," he urged, "what do you say?"

"How would we split it?" It was plain that Garson had given over the struggle against greed. After all, Mary was only a woman, despite her cleverness, and with all a woman's timidity. Here was sport for men.

"Three ways would be right," Griggs answered. "One to me, one to you and one to be divided up among the others."

Garson brought his fist down on the table with a force that made the glasses jingle.

"You're on," he said, strongly.

"Fine!" Griggs declared, and the two men shook hands. "Now, I'll get——"

"Get nothing!" Garson interrupted. "I'll get my own men. Chicago Red is in town. So is Dacey, with perhaps a couple of others of the right sort. I'll get them to meet you at Blinkey's at 2 to-morrow afternoon, and, if it looks right, we'll turn the trick to-morrow night."

"That's the stuff," Griggs agreed, greatly pleased.

But a sudden shadow fell on the face of Garson. He bent closer to his companion, and spoke with a fierce intensity that brooked no denial.

"She must never know."

Griggs nodded understandingly.

"Of course," he answered. "I give you my word that I'll never tell her. And you know you can trust me, Joe."

"Yes," the forger replied somberly. "I know I can trust you." But the shadow did not lift from his face.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Wedding Announcement.

Mary dismissed Garson presently and betook herself to her bedroom for a nap. The day had been a trying one, and, though her superb health could endure much, she felt that both prudence and comfort required that she should recruit her energies while there was opportunity.

She was not in the least surprised that Dick had not yet returned, though he had mentioned half an hour. At the best, there were many things that might detain him, his father's absence from the office, difficulties in making arrangements for his projected honeymoon trip abroad—which would never occur—or the like. At the worst, there was a chance of finding his father promptly, and of that father as promptly taking steps to prevent the son from ever again seeing the woman who had so indiscreetly married him.

Yet, somehow, Mary could not believe that her husband would yield to such paternal coercion. Rather, she was sure that he would prove loyal to her whom he loved, through every trouble. At the thought a certain wistfulness pervaded her, and a poignant regret that this particular man should have been the one chosen of fate to be entangled within her mesh of revenge.

THE FIVE FRANKFORTERS

A Novelization of the Play of the Same Name Now Running in New York

"What is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

Instinctly Jacob had come closer to Charlotte. He knew well what was this "business" they were about to discuss.

"My nephew will take care of her," said Solomon firmly, "your presence is not necessary here. We know your views." And Solomon never guessed the riot of feeling beneath Jacob's calm exterior—nor what that feeling might threaten to his own well-laid plans.

"Will you come with me?" Jacob's voice thrilled with all the tenderness he must never put into words.

"But you are quite sure you ought not to be here?" Charlotte asked.

Jacob looked with all the stern fatalism of his race, at the men who were to gamble with a girl's happiness, then he turned with gentle tenderness to his fair-haired cousin.

"Quite sure," he said.

Charlotte shyly held out her hand to her cousin, and the Duke caught the other hand in his own, and as he softly voiced his 'Au revoir" he put his lips again to that little right hand.

Was It an Omen?

Was it an omen that as Jacob drew the girl away down the long shady alley of the great hedges, he held his cousin's left hand? And who can tell what the little Princess Evelyn thought as she watched this other pair of cousins strolling beneath her tower window?

The Duke stood at the great hedge gate and watched the little white figure until it was dim and far. There was a long pause. Even Solomon hesitated to speak, when Dame Fate showed such remarkable ability to play his game for mi.

At last Duke Gustavus broke this silence so fraught with meaning for him: "If you plese, gentlemen"—

"Your Highness," said Amschel, hopefully; "you are quite sure you wouldn't rather have lunch earlier and talk business afterward?"

The Duke was a bit amused; "O, no!" said he.

"Oh, well, it was only a suggestion." But just at this hungry juncture, luncheon seemed more essential to our country gentlemen than financing all the reigning princes in the empire.

Solomon spoke: "Your highness, we have considered the question of a loan to you. May I ask how you purpose to invest such a sum as $12,000,000 florins?"

"O, we shall find good use for it, you may be sure. Speaking generally, I shall devote it to the improvement of my circumstances."

Gustavus' tons showed the atriest amusement at his own bankrupt condition. Why trouble himself? Was not the place of Providence and these very Jews of Frankfort to see that royal treasuries do not collapse for lack of proper support?

"Now, supposing that our firm would advance such a sum as you suggest," said Solomon, "what is the nature of the security you could offer us?"

What Has Gone Before.

Having backed heavily the peace of Europe Nathan Rothschild is disconcerted to find that Napoleon has burst forth again, and all the banker's outpouring of gold for national development in England will be endangered. The banker hastens to Waterloo. There are the English, who have guaranteed to him that the peace of Europe shall be maintained. From a height above the field of battle Rothschild sees the whole of it. Rothschild sees that the wealth of the world lies in London, his for the taking if he can be first on the ground with the news of the battle. He hurries to London, and next morning appeared on the Exchange. That night he went to bed $10,000 000 richer.

Seven years later a great banker left Vienna, another Naples, another Paris and another London, and traveled to a little old house in Jews' Lane, in Frankfort-am-Main. It was a gathering of the house of Rothschild. Perhaps some king was very hard pressed for money. "Little Jacob" opposes Solomon's plan to marry Charlotte off to the Duke of Taunus. He is backed up by Frau Gudula. The Duke makes love to Charlotte.

Now Go on With the Story.

nature of the security you could offer us?"

"Security? Would it be customary to offer security in a matter of this kind?"

Gustavus did not often trouble his royal self with the details of such an every day matter as mere business.

"It is usual," said Amschel, dryly. He was still considering the way in which his suggestion as to luncheon had been received.

The Duke looked at Fehrenberg as at a master. "Well, we could pledge a part of my revenue—of my taxes"——

"I must remind your Highness that you have already anticipated the next five years' income," said Fehrenberg. "But, gentlemen, the produce of the duchy could be enormously increased by a careful and prudent administration."

"Such as I will give it when he is my son-in-law," thought Solomon.

Fehrenberg went on, unconscious of how he was drawing the net closer and closer about the loving hearts of two unconsidered cousins—Jacob and Evelyn.

"There are extensive forests—some coal and mineral springs"——

A Brilliant Idea.

The Duke had a brilliant idea. He broke in: "Cannot I give you my personal security?"

And here was the cue for Solomon to make his great suggestion. The time had come when the die must be cast.

The brothers stirred uneasily—they knew what was coming. Amschel spoke: "Pardon me, I should like to leave you now."

"I don't understand," said Gustavus. And in truth he did not. What turn were matters taking?

Ceremony was beyond Amschel.

"At this point I beg to cetire," he said plaintively. "I apologize—but I won't stay."

"Carl, with suave elegance, followed him; but the Duke and Solomon managed to retain Count Fehrenberg and Nathan, the impassive English brother, as seconds in the duel of wits that was about to follow.

There was an elaborate tensity in the atmosphere. The air, that great medium for carrying all "wireless" messages, conveyed in its taut stillness some foreboding to the four men who were about to pay fate, of what this moment might mean to many lives.

Gustavus was nervously toying with Evelyn's crimson rose. At a moment like this he vaguely sensed the presence, the influence, of his girlish cousin. "I am getting inquisitive."

You Are Bankrupt.

"Your Highness," began Solomon with solemn intensity; "you give me your permission to be quite candid? You are on the verge of bankruptcy. One thing, I believe, and one thing only, can save you, and that is"——

Here even Solomon hesitated.

"Yes, yes?" impatiently.

"A judicious marriage."

Gustavus laughed in evident relief. "We have thought of that, haven't we, Fehrenberg? We looked about for an alliance of that kind, but we could find nothing suitable!"

He considered the beauty of the glowing red rose for a moment, and then, with a sudden access of feeling, buried his lips in his flaming crimson heart. Little Evelyn, little Evelyn, the time has come when all your good fairies must guard you!

"What would your Highness consider suitable?" asked Solomon with grave insistence.

The Duke laughed, but was there an undercurrent of bitterness flowing beneath the nonchalance of that laugh? "Youth, charm, beauty—and—and a great deal of money!"

Still more gravely, Solomon made answer:

"I can offer you these qualities."

The Duke was evidently amused.

"YOU can! I am overwhelmed by the versatility of your enterprise! Where have you found a lady of my rank so admirably fitting?"

Then Solomon voiced a truth so deep that even he who spoke scarcely realized the depth of its sacred import.

"Your Highness, the conception of equality is not the same to-day as it was yesterday. Times change. Your Highness is not one of those who refuse to advance with the times."

Lifting the Cloud.

Always there is a little time of lifting cloud before the storm breaks. Gustavus laughed.

"If you compliment me you will make me suspicious." A line of his Virgil came to his mind: "I fead the Greeks even when they come bearing gifts."

Nathan broke in: "Solomon—your Highness—I thing we should reconsider our proposal"——

"Before I hear what it is," exclaimed Gustavus, impatiently. "Come, Baron, what have you on your mind?"

"I propose that you should marry my daughter, Charlotte."

Duke Gustavus of Taunus rose. His sword clattered against the stone rim of Cupid's fountain. Evelyn's red rose slipped from his fingers and fell unheeded at his feet. Perhaps he could soon trample on that blood-red rose and crush it. Perhaps, but the second sped on.

"Sir! Fehrenberg, you hear? What do you say to that?"

Fehrenberg answered with the stiffness of his utter horror and amazement:

"Your Highness, court etiquette has not considered such an emergency. I have never heard of a precedent for such a proposal."

"I admit I am a little taken back. But you might have chosen a moment when I would have requested you to leave my house instantly as the most convenient conclusion to our conversation."

Solomon answered the Duke:

"Sir, in the choice of the right moment lies the success of the game."

"Are you a gambler?" the Duke asked with slow earnestness.

"All games are not games of chance. I do ont trust to luck, but to calculation."

Knowledge of the World.

"And you calculated on my being driven into accepting your proposal by my dread of bankruptcy?"

"I calculated on my knowledge of the world enabling you to consider its advantage impartially."

"Oh, I appreciate the advantages," said Gustavus with slow scorn of himself who could be bought, scorn of the man who sold in his turn.

"Advantages to both our families,' said Solomon.

"Sir, you tempt me to speak without reserve. You make me think of a highwayman gone mad; who says to me: 'Stand! Take my money! It is yours. Refuse it at your peril!' Such audacity is magnificent, but a little unusual."

He looked at the red rose that lay on the ground, and then picked it up very gently and threw it in the clear waters of the Fountain of Cupid. Alas for the Princess Evelyn! Alas for Jacob! "Yet your persistence commands a certain admiration and attention."

Solomon bent over the Duke, who had sunk to a seat on the fountain's edge. "And your Highness will come to a decision? This is the great moment. If your Highness will but say 'Yes' now, the agreement shall be signed at noon to-morrow and the money handed to you at once."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Natural History Lessons

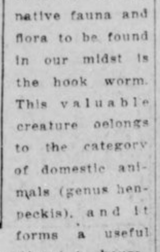
No. 1---The Hook Worm

By DOROTHY DIX.

AMONG the most interesting of the native fauna and flora to be found in our midst is the hook worm. This valuable creature belongs to the category of domestic animals (genus henpeckis), and it forms a useful and indispensable adjunct to households where no maid is kept.

The hook worm is indigenous to the United States, and it flourishes most plentifully in cities, only a few rare and scattering specimens of it having ever been found in the country. Scientists differ concerning its history, but a consensus of the best authorities indicates that its origin was contemporaneous with the coming in of the fashion of frocks that button up the back, and that the great original hook worm was discovered by a fat woman with short arms.

From this small and humble beginning sprang the millions of hook worms that now pervade the land and make glad the waist places of swell dressers by pulling together belts that do not meet by four inches. Thus do we see how marvelously nature provides for all contingencies.



In appearance the hook worm is an elongated and tubular - looking animal with two feet, two antennae (technically known as hands), and two eyes situated near the top of its head, which is not infrequently bald. Also it has a tongue, which it shoots off with great rapidity and volubility upon occasions.

Apparently the eyesight of the hook worm is very poor, as it is unable to see a button unless it is the size of a silver dollar, and it cannot distinguish an invisible loop from a chance to tear a hole with a hook in the back of an imported dinner gown.

Likewise the hook worm is very awkward and clumsy in the way in which it manipulates its antennae, it having been estimated that it makes 11,406,851 different motions and dabs and fumbles in trying to insert a perfectly plain hook in a perfectly obvious eye.

These faults of the hook worm are accounted for, however, by scientists on the theory that it is still an imperfectly developed animal, and it yet lacks about seventeen additional hands and four more pairs of eyes in order to perform satisfactorily the function for which it was created. Doubtless these will be acquired in the process of evolution, and our great-great-great-great-great-granddaughters may rejoice in the possession of hook worms with a full complement of faculties that will be able to do their appointed tasks and fasten up a French confection before you could say "Scat!"

Little is known of the habits of the hook worm, as, although it is a domestic animal, it absents itself from the house all day, only returning at night to be fed. Its period of greatest activity is just before dinner and theatre time, when it gets busy and may be heard making weird and profane noises.

The hook worm is exclusively a lady's pet; men seeming to have no use for the animal, though they are so highly esteemed by women. It should be stated in this connection, though, that opinion among women is equally divided as to whether it is best to catch a hook worm when he is young and break him in to your own style of fastenings, or to tie up with a hook worm that has been thoroughly trained by some deceased lady who was addicted to lingerie shirt waists. Much is to be said in favor of each side of the question; but, alas! there are many problems in life, and even the young hook worm who is conscientiously bent on doing his duty sometimes gets in bad, for in his excess of zeal he displays a skill that sets the woman who owns him to guessing.

The hook worm has a very limited vocabulary, the only two expressions that it has ever been heard to use being "Helen Blazes" and a word that is muffled and indistinguishable, but that sounds as if it started with a big, big D.

Daysey Mayme and Her Folks

By FRANCES L. GARSIDE.

"WHEN engaged in washing dishes," a woman of exalted ideals advised in a woman's magazine, "fix not your mind upon the sordidness of the task. Rise above it by looking with appreciative eyes at the delicate tints in the china, its pure transparency, the softness of its curves. Learn the history of Dresden, Limoges and Sevres, and the task becomes an intellectual joy."

Daysey Mayme Appleton read, and what she read sank in to come out the next morning when she found herself confronted with the task of washing greens.

A young man, of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, was coming and he had expressed the yearning that comes to all in the spring to have greens for dinner.

She had bought a peck in the belief that there would be enough left to last a week, and when she poured out cold water preparatory to washing them she fixed her mind on all that they represented: Springtime, freshening showers, the sunlight, the singing of the birds, blue skies, the drowsy humming of insects and fragrant zephyrs that stirred the leaves to dancing motion.

She washed and washed and rewashed, digging back into her brain for some knowledge of botany. "That is a scutate," she said, taking a leaf through seven waters, "and this is a reticulate, and here is a beautiful example of the pinnated.'

She took the leaves through the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth waters, unconeciously thinking less each time of the tender zephyrs that had stirred the leaves to dancing, the bright sunlight and the gentle showers. There was an accumulation of sand that proved her task was only begun, and she washed the greens through four more waters. Her back ached, she stood first on one foot and then on the other; her hands began to feel as if they belonged to the washerwoman, and her spirits began to droop.

When she submerged the greens into the twelfth water her soul was submerged with them and it never rose again to the plane of exaltation advised by the woman of lofty ideals in the magazine. At last her task was completed and she put the greens over to boil and there seemed a Great Plenty, and when she dressed to meet the man of whom she could not have thought more if he had been hand-painted, they boiled and boiled and boiled, looking a little less every time she lifted the lid.

"It's a whole peck of greens," she said with a sob at the dinner table an hour later, putting before her Best Beloved a dish in the center of which was a little green mess no bigger than a bug that had been stepped on.

Being Kind to Children

"IT doesn't pay to be too kind to children," said Gritzen.

"Why?" asked the motherly woman.

"Well, I'll give you an illustration. We had a man come to dig our garden. I know well how it hurts to dig. An innocent man can do enough digging in three hours to lame himself for three weeks. We were all glad to see the man come, and he seemed to be a very good sort of fellow. He was fond of children. He said our twins would not bother him at all.

"William and Theodore hustled into their overalls and went out to watch the man, delighted to have him for a companion. The conversation for the first half-hour was something like this:

"'Me afraid of snakes?' said the man. 'Well, I should say not! I eat 'em.'

"'Do you like 'em?' asked Theodore.

"'Oh, no; I just eat 'em to show that I can.'

"'Don't they make your stomach ache?' asked William.

"'Not a bit. If they did I would just swallow a little fire and burn 'em up.'

"'Well, ain't you really afraid of 'em?'

"'Me? Afraid? Ha, ha! That makes me laugh.'

"'Well, ain't you?'

"'No; I'm used to 'em. I'm a circus man. Did you ever see the man in the cage with the lions at the circus?'

"'Yes; I saw a circus once, and there was a man right in the cage with the lions!'

"'I'm that man. Nothing can scare me. But I've quit the circus business for a little while. I took to diggin' just for a change.'

"After an hour or so the conversation was more like this:

"'Here, you rapscallion! Move your foot!'

"'What for?'

"'What for? I want to dig there. I'm not supposed to dig your feet. Here, let them things alone!'

"'What for?'

"'Because your father will want to be able to find them. Stop throwing that dirt. Don't you hear your mamma knocking on the window pane at you? Here, who done that? I'll have to tell your mamma on you. You kids are a nuisance! Get out of here!'

"It's all right being nice to children for a while, but, you see, they can stand it a lot longer than you can!" concluded Gritzen.

Probably Right.

School children know a great deal more than they used to. In fact, some of them, in their own opinion, at least, are quite capable of tutoring their tutors.

"Those kiddies I teach are as knowing as an encyclopedia," said a teacher a week or two ago.

"In what way?" asked his friend.

"Well," replied the scholastic person, "the other day I set a problem in arithmetic: 'A rich man dies and leaves a million dollars. One-fifth is to go to his wife, one-fifth to his son, one-eighth to his brother, and the rest to the hospitals. What does each get?'"

"Yes?" inquired the friend, not very interested.

"Back came the reply from the smallest boy in the class: 'A lawyer, sir.'"

: Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women :

By LILLIAN LAUFFERTY.

"BEAUTY is exactly like a spring that wells up clear and sparkling from a pure source," said Willette Kershaw to me.

Slowly and gropingly I was finding my way back to sunshine and the simple facts of every day after the final curtain had fallen on the five artistic plays at the Princess Theater, in New York, and "Any Night" was a memory instead of a presentation of a shamefully bitter reality. But it was a potent, poignant memory, and the sweet, wistful-eyed girl sitting with me in the quiet office had just presented a death-in-life portrait of Mary Magdalen of to-day.

"Take the sad, sodden consumptive I have just portrayed; she has the same features; she is really a different phase of the Fancy I had just been in "Fancy Free." But the butterfly Fancy is saved, her wings are not trailed in the mud, and even though she is not a fine, deep, spiritual creature, she is still a woman, with the joy-of-living in her veins—so she is sweet and pretty. And the other creature, with a different story written on her eyes and mouth, is almost repulsive to look upon."

"I have never posed as a beauty. The only facts in my appearance that please me are hair and eyes—so I take very good care of them—and of the source of the fountain."

Her Secret.

"Ah, do tell me how you care for the beauty you—don't think you possess," said I, eagerly. Willette Kershaw is so genuinely girl—so dainty and attractive in the well-bred simplicity of simple blue serge and black and white hat that she seems an ideal model for Miss Sweet and Twenty to follow over the road to Springtime loveliness.

"It is not much of a secret—and yet so few seekers after beauty seem to have heard of it," said Miss Kershaw, whimsically. "It is just keep clean! Wash and wash and keep very, very clean—clean in body and mind and soul, until you fairly exhale a perfume of sweet, sane, cleanliness. Plenty of water for my hair, and plenty of cold water to bathe tired eyes. That is how I keep my pet assets in good condition. And I don't neglect the lesser favorites."

Miss Willett Kershaw in Two Charming Poses.

The clear eyes looked at me with the grave sweetness that makes you feel that this slip of a girl knows life and the facts thereof. Not a trace of make-up of any sort gave to Miss Kershaw the appearance of being anything she was not.

"No," said this observing young woman in answer to my interrogatory glance, "I do not make up for street use. Apart from questions of good taste it is not pretty. And I can't see why nice girls want to take their ideas of beauty from women they would never know. They would not deliberately copy the lack-luster, don believe anything-worth-while-will-ever-happen-again expression that a woman who has given all the world for nothing naturally comes to have. Then why copy her artificial complexion?

"Cleanness and simplicity," I mused. "To you these make beauty."

"These and being in tune with life," answered the girlish star. "If a girl is bitter and discontented—for just cause or merely because she is deliberately cultivating the bitterness in her nature, she gets down-drooping lips, a pinched expression around her nostrils, and, worst of all, her eyes lose all power to radiate magnetism and charm.

The Bitter Side.

"I speak from experience," she went on, in a hushed, hurt little voice in which I could hear the vibration of deep tenderness. "My mother was killed in a railroad accident. That was a time of anguish and bitterness. I hated the sun for shining. I could have murdered the birds for singing. I almost felt a desire to take the life of any happy human being I met. I almost went mad because I let my sorrow turn my whole nature to bitterness.

"Probably there is in all the world scarcely one girl who has come to be 20 without knowing life's hurts. Think of the young girls you know whose faces have a sad and wistful expression whenever they relax and stop playing the game of keeping up appearances.

"Perhaps bitter experiences are best of all, as Elbert Hubbard has said. They are if you use experience instead of letting it use you up.

"I'd like to tell all girls that bitterness and paint spoil the face with about equal thoroughness. And the two in conjunction! They just destroy every claim to beauty.

"Life is pretty impersonal. I found that out when I was in the 'Brown of Harvard's' company, that the indignant Harvard students abused because the star (Mr. Woodruff) wore the Harvard athletic H, to which, of course, he had no right. I could not be resentful nor bitter over their treatment of me; it was just what they considered the wrongful use of a sacred old custom that they were protesting against.

"Well, life is like that—impersonal—she is not abusing you; she is just going ahead, and if you get in the way you will get hurt. So you have to learn that, and take things impersonally—and keep in tune."

"Oh, a trouble's a ton, or a trouble's an ounce,
And a trouble is what you make it;
And it isn't how much you are hurt that counts,
But only—how did you take it?"

I quoted.

"Exactly," assented the pretty philosopher. "If you keep clean and sweet and simple, and in tune with life, the fountain of beauty must sparkle in the clear sunlight."

High Society.

A new-rich dowager, only recently removed from the environs of a Western packing house, has afforded much amusement while clambering up the slippery rounds of the social ladder. One day, after she had returned from circumnavigating the globe, she essayed to entertain a drawing room with a boastful account of her travels. She had been everywhere, and her flow of English was augmented by frequent wavings of her bediamoned hands and forceful noddings of her tiaraed head.

"Did you see the Dardanelles?" asked a sprightly debutante.

"And the Himalayas?" inquired another fair young bud.

"I dined with them in Paris," replied the dowager, triumphantly.

And she wondered why everybody smiled.

His First Mistake

ONE of the first tasks they set the new curate, who was handicapped by youth and inexperience, was to investigate the bona fides of a "widow woman" who had applied to the church for help. He departed nervously on his errand and knocked, as ill luck would have it, at the wrong door.

"How long has your poor husband been dead, my good woman? What number of children have you? Are any of them working? If so, what amount of money are they earning altogether?" were the questions he fired, like shots from a revolver, at the slatternly woman who answered his summons. "I presume I am addressing Mrs. Harriet Smith?" he added, noticing, with alarm, that she looked angry.

"No, you ain't," answered the woman, snappishly. "My name is Seline Jackson, my bairns go to school, and my 'usband's doin' what is necessary to a plateful of steak and onions at this very moment. Would you like to know anything else? Where I was born? When I was christened? At what age I started courtin'? Perhaps," she concluded, sarcastically, rolling her tattered sleeve up above the elbow, "you'd like to see my vaccination mark before you go?"

But the bashful curate, redder in the face than a poppy, was already in full flight.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION

Severe Case of a Philadelphia Woman—Her Symptoms.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"I had a severe case of nervous prostration, with palpitation of the heart, constipation, headaches, dizziness, noise in my ears, timid, nervous, restless feeling and sleeplessness.

"I read in the paper where a young woman had been cured of the same troubles by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I threw away the medicines the doctor left me and began taking the Compound. Before I had taken half a bottle I was able to get up and in a short time I was able to do all my work. Your medicine has proved itself able to do all you say it will and I have recommended it in every household I have visited."—Mrs. Mary Johnston, 210 Siegel Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

Another Bad Case.

Ephrata, Pa.—"About a year ago I was down with nervous prostration. I was pale and weak and would have hysteric spells, sick headaches and a bad pain under my shoulder-blade. I was under the care of different doctors, but did not improve. I was so weak I could hardly stand long enough to do my dishes.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me well and happy and I have begun to gain in weight and my face looks healthy now."—Mrs. J. W. Hornberger, R. No. 3, Ephrata, Pa.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential), Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

POULTRY, PET AND LIVE STOCK

Past Failures Are Stepping - Stones To Future Success

Be Sure There Will Not Be a Repetition of Disaster. Pointers in Poultry.

EDITED BY JUDGE F. J. MARSHALL

Experience is one of the best old teachers we have. The mistakes we made last year should be stepping-stones to better ones this year. Whenever you get into a hole and are able to get out again, fill the hole up before you leave it, to be sure that there will not be a repetition of the disaster.

Do not sell off your best stock at any price, unless you are sure you can buy something better at a fair price. This thing of selling off all the best eggs and stock will soon deplete any breeder's stock in trade. And that is just what many breeders are doing—just because they have the demand and can not resist the temptation to sell.

Hens that have access to the wood ash pile will pick out the small bits of charcoal, eagerly hunting for them. This is a gentle hint that where they do not have access to it, it should be supplied. Charcoal is one of the best things to ward off indigestion that can be used.

Douglass mixture is a strong iron tonic mixture supposed to be valuable for hens which have been laying heavily all spring and seem to be somewhat prostrated during the late springtime. It is made by adding one-half pound of copperas to one gallon of soft water; when dissolved, add one-half ounce of sulphuric acid. The mixture should be kept in a stone or glass vessel. Use a tablespoonful to the drinking water for a dozen hens.

In the matter of small things, do not try to follow too closely the methods of others. You can profit by the experience of others, but you can improve upon the details as you go along.

In procuring strong, fertile eggs for hatching, less forcing feeds should be used than when you are striving to produce all the market eggs possible and are not particular about the fertility. Milk is excellent for laying hens. Feed green cut bone sparingly to breeding hens. A constant supply of fresh green stuff is essential.

The foundation factors in the poultry business are: First, love of the work; second, a determination to succeed; third, attention to details, leaving nothing undone.

It is a very convenient and profitable plan to have two yards for each lot of fowls, so that one may be plowed and sowed down to green stuff while the other is being occupied. It can be used while the second is being sowed to green stuff.

Small Eggs.

Judge Marshall: I have a small lot of Plymouth Rock hens, raised in 1912. I have them now in a pen. They have laid a good many eggs, but the eggs are very small. I consider the eggs too small to set. The hens are healthy and large and hearty. What is the cause of the eggs being so small? Very truly, A. J. E. SMITH.

Madison, Ga., May 8, 1913.

ANSWER—There are several reasons why your hens may lay the small eggs. They may be from a class of hens which have been producing small eggs naturally, or they may be from stock that has been inbred for years. Some people think nothing of keeping the roosters they raise each year with the old hens and the pullets raised that year, which is the very worst kind of inbreeding and has a bad effect upon the stock raised from them. They are weak in constitution and lay small, insignificant looking eggs. Then, again, there is such a thing as getting your hens too fat—that is, all filled up with fat inside—which very frequently, but not always, causes the hen to lay small eggs.

Hatching chickens during the late summer or fall, when they do not fully mature before cold weather, very often causes them to produce small eggs during the first period of their laying. The matter of feed has something to do with the size of eggs. Hens that are fed too long upon restricted rations, with but little variety and little or no green stuff, beefscrap and such things, do not develop their eggs as they should.

Not knowing the conditions connected with your hens, I throw out these suggestions for you to gather your own conclusions.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Derricks Arrive For Healey Bldg.

Work on Skyscraper Can Now Proceed—Preparing for Ivy St. Grade—Other Notes.

Two immense steel cranes, intended to lift girders into place for the Healey Building, have arrived and were lowered Monday morning into the great hole where the foundation of Atlanta's latest skyscraper is to be. These are the derricks which were delayed so long that they set the Healey Building work back several weeks.

Just as soon as the parts of the derricks can be assembled the actual work of raising the Healey Building will start, which should be by Tuesday. Everything else is ready, and hands are anxious to take up the job again.

Adjustments on Ivy Street.

Property owners along Ivy Street, where regrading is in progress, have begun to meet the new conditions. Gude & Co. applied Monday morning at the Building Inspector's office for a permit to underpin the Wellington Apartments, at the corner of Ivy and Houston Streets, so that this structure can be adjusted to the new level.

Decatur Land Boom.

Faith in Decatur land has of late found considerable expression in a sweeping publicity campaign carried on by Atlanta real estate agents. Among local advertisers who have extensive interests in the DeKalb suburb are Edwin P. Ansley, who is developing Winona Park; L. P. Bottenfield, who has a subdivision of 235 lots in Claremont Park; the E. Rivers Realty Company, who are offering fourteen lots; Charlton Barrett, developer of Decatur Heights; Foster & Robson, agents for the Wash Houston property; William S. Ansley and Cliff W. Ansley, who have long handled Decatur properties, and the W. E. Treadwell Company, who have installed a Decatur department, with J. M. Worsham in charge.

West Harris Street Sale.

D. W. Hale and Mrs. Mabel H. Moody have bought from a client of the Adair & Holt real estate agency a lot on West Harris Street, adjoining the northwest corner of Harris and Spring Streets, for $20,000. The frontage is 50 feet and the lot contains a ten-room double house.

The Adair & Holt agency have announced other sales aggregating $11,962.

Sales Aggregate $16,700.

Real estate men report a continued demand for lots in various sections. The Holmes & Luckie Realty Company have announced sales aggregating $16,700 in the Hedgerose Heights and Howell Mill Road subdivisions.

Whitehall Street Conveyance.

Mrs. J. W. Goldsmith, Jr., has sold, through the Turman, Black & Calhoun real estate agency, to G. R. Maddox and others 390 Whitehall Street for $12,000, or at the rate of $240 a front foot. This lot is 50x196, and north of Whitehall Terrace. It is improved with a small dwelling.

Turman, Black & Calhoun have sold for W. M. Cook and others to a client three lots on DeKalb Avenue and Wall Street for an aggregate of $2,500.

Ponce DeLeon Avenue Sale.

Mrs. M. F. Huggins has sold to Mrs. Kate G. Ryder, through J. F. Mayfield, of the Harris G. White agency, 346 Ponce DeLeon Avenue for $13,000. This is a ten-room two-story brick veneer residence on a 38x231-foot lot.

A Treaty Japan Has Steadily Dodged

The Japanese Have Not Lived Up to the Treaty They Are NOW Invoking in Their Own Behalf

Japan, we now know, has not only protested specifically against the California alien land bill on the ground that it is contrary to the treaty of 1911, but on the more general basis that it is an offense as between nations and not in harmony with the traditions and friendship existing between the Mikado's Government and that of the United States.

The reply of our Government is that there is no violation of treaty, and that the broader question of offense is a proper subject for diplomatic negotiations.

But with how clean hands can the Japanese Government complain of a violation of treaty?

If, under its terms, Japanese subjects have irrevocable rights to own and lease land in the United States, there must also be an equivalent. Citizens of the United States must have the right to own and lease land in Japan. Have they? The Japanese Parliament passed such a law, but IT HAS NEVER BEEN PROMULGATED. It has never been put into force by imperial decree. It is a dead letter.

That law, even as it stands, is not an equivalent such as Japan is claiming in the United States. An American corporation, for instance, cannot acquire lands or any other rights in Japan, even under the statute, unless a special charter is issued and the application approved by the Minister of Home Affairs.

The law reserves to the Japanese Government the right to exclude aliens and alien corporations from any place the Home Minister may deem advisable. The law excepts Hakodate, Nagasaki, Formosa and many other places where Americans might want to go.

JAPAN HAS NOT LIVED UP TO THE TREATY IT IS NOW INVOKING IN ITS OWN BEHALF.

As for the broader and more serious protest against an "offense between nations," this newspaper has already pointed out that the sovereignty of the United States is thereby challenged more than the sovereignty of Japan.

For eighteen years, until quite recently, the State of New York maintained a law prohibiting aliens from holding land. Indeed, that law was repealed only at the just-closed session of the Legislature and the repealing measure signed by Governor Sulzer.

IN ALL THOSE EIGHTEEN YEARS NO NATION OBJECTED TO THAT LAW AS A NATIONAL AFFRONT.

Any such objection would have been an international ABSURDITY.

It is the sovereign right of the United States to determine who shall and who shall not be citizens, and each State has its own right to determine whether individuals not citizens shall own land in it.

To challenge these sovereign rights is to step out of the domain of international law and custom into the arena.

Bryan's Still-Water Statesmanship

What shall one say when the registered pilot of the ship of state refuses to face anything but fine weather and a smooth sea?

Mr. Bryan is not willing to superintend the foreign relations of the United States if there is going to be any serious trouble about them. He says: "I made up my mind before I accepted the office of Secretary of State that I would not take the office if I thought there was to be a war during my tenure."

Now that Mr. Bryan's mind is thoroughly made up about it, he says he feels sure there will be no storm while his discriminating hand is on the helm.

These assurances may reveal a tender heart in Mr. Bryan, But they expose the incompetence of his executive character and the shallowness of his political thought. The implication is that wars are simply sinful and that they occur only when unjust or unamiable men are put by unhappy accident into places of power.

Mr. Bryan has lived and prospered so well by the mere facility of his tongue that he seems to have lost all sense of those real and passionate contradictions of human interest and honor that spring out of settled rights and moral convictions and that can not be disposed of by any form of words.

Imagine, for example, what would happen if Mr. Bryan's free and unlimited coinage of fine words were to be applied to such an issue as that raised by the suggestion that the "national honor" of Japan requires the admission to American citizenship of hordes of Orientals on equal terms with Germans or Frenchmen.

IMAGINE, IF YOU CAN, THE MEEK SUBMISSION OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE TO A JUDGMENT OF HAGUE LAWYERS THAT THIS COUNTRY OUGHT TO CONSENT TO BE ORIENTALIZED WITHIN THE NEXT TWENTY YEARS!

The plain truth is, of course, that nations, as they are now constituted, can not keep clear of war for a single year save as "strong men, armed," who keep their palace that their goods may be in peace. Brave and foreseeing men have indeed a right to look forward to a day when nations that now confront each other with menaces may be so transformed in their social and economic substance that all marked antagonisms of interest shall be canceled and dissolved.

BUT IN THE MEANTIME IT IS NOTHING LESS THAN A GRAVE MISFORTUNE THAT THE CHIEF SPOKESMAN OF THE UNITED STATES IN ITS FOREIGN RELATIONS SHOULD BE A STILL-WATER STATESMAN, WHO DECLINES IN ADVANCE TO FACE THE POSSIBILITY OF A STORM, AND WHO RELIES SOLELY UPON RAPTUROUS PHRASES TO MEET DANGEROUS EMERGENCIES.

Rev. John E. White on "Marriage in a Hurry"

By REV. JOHN E. WHITE.
Pastor Second Baptist Church.

A YOUNG lady of Georgia went to Vienna to complete her musical education in the great conservatory there. She met her fate in the person of a splendid young Austrian. The distance from her home in Georgia and the impatience natural to love's young dream seemed to make it impossible for the marriage to take place in due and ancient form at the bride's home. Desiring to proceed with the wedding ceremony in Vienna, after a full correspondence with the bride's family, a stubborn obstacle presented itself in their path.

Our Hurry-Up System.

The Austrian Government interposed a startling amount of legal red-tape with reference to the bride. It was required that legal evidence be transmitted through the Austrian Consul at Savannah that the young lady in question was of marriageable age, health record, moral character, and that her father was a citizen in good standing—all to be certified to in writing and attested by Government officials and ministers of religion.

Fortunately the young lady had no difficulty in complying with the Austrian marriage laws. The Germans are a long-headed people. They have discovered that the marriage altar is a national strength or a national weakness.

This discovery has not yet been made in Georgia and in this country. If statesmen had planned for it a more efficient hurry-up system for marriage than ours could not have been devised. There are enough forces of self-interest brought into play to facilitate matrimony in Georgia to constitute a practical conspiracy to get as many people married as possible.

The State and County laws of license make it profitable to the officers to issue licenses.

Over the doors of the office of Ordinary in Fulton County might be written the motto: "Marriage for Revenue Only," without serious offense. Justices of the Peace profusely welcome the touch of romance and the tingle of silver which brighten their dusty offices.

The preacher and the preacher's wife ardently believe in people getting married, and not for reasons too numerous to mention. So from the man who sells rice and cow-bells to the liveryman and the instalment furniture shop there is a chorus of "Hurry up, John, and hurry up Mary, and get off."

If the young foreigner had met his fate in Georgia, our hurry-up system, which asks no questions, and trusts to matrimonial luck, with a spur on both heels, would have convinced him that the people of this country were looking for a chance to marry off their young ladies quite regardless of whom they married.

So we have the fiddler to pay. Hurry-up marriages demand hurry-up divorce courts. The serious vows of wedlock, their sacred sanctions and solemn responsibilities, so vitally concerning the welfare of society and the happiness of souls, are bound to lack impressiveness since they are left almost entirely to a passing mention in the wedding ceremony which the average bride and bridegroom in this country wants hurried up and over with.

People are not likely to stick together through thick and thin if their marriage is cheaply conceived and unimpressively consummated.

"Hold Up, There!"

Another penalty but recently regarded as mentionable is the gross inattention to physical fitness. What brides can not be expected to know parents should insist on knowing.

The perpetuation of disease through the blood channels of the race begins at the unguarded marriage altar.

If we believe what the physicians are testifying, the marriage altar is society's "bloody angle," when it ought to be the open sesame of health, happiness and the growing, of a stronger and purer race.

The demand for a "Hold up, there!" can not be long postponed. The only voice that can utter it effectively is the voice of the State.

The talk among ministers about organization for the purpose of refusing to perform a wedding ceremony except on conditions is practically useless. The Legislature must impose the necessary conditions with proper penalties attached.

Parents are perfectly ready to be protected, but are helpless to protect themselves. Proper marriage laws would educate public opinion against the matrimonial speed mania. Jacob could be trained to wait at least three months for his Rachel, and Rachel would not have to have her Jacob on a week's acquaintance.

It ought not to be possible for anybody's best man to swear successfully that the bride is 18 years old because the bridegroom told him so. The Ordinary is protected by the lie that is sworn to. The preacher is protected by the certificate of the same lie which has received the seal of the Ordinary.

Georgia is behind every other Southern State, except South Carolina, in the looseness with which marriage licenses are issued and in the practical absence of any requirements of vital statistics.

June is coming and our hurry-up system will celebrate itself.

Qualities That Popularize Men With Women and Women With Men

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX
Copyright, 1913, by Journal-American-Examiner.

JUST what are the qualities which make men popular with women and women with men? This query ofttimes puzzles wise heads to answer.

Some of the ugliest men physically have been great Lotharios; and women without marked beauty have been heart winners.

Men with no decided talents; men of no social prowess; men without money; men with shadowy records, have all succeeded with women where other and seemingly more attractive and certainly more desirable men have failed.

A bigamist who was under engagement of marriage to thirty girls, when he married two of them, says his success resulted from "always talking to women about themselves."

That is the secret of most friendships and all love affairs, and the explanation of most divorces lies in the fact that the man or woman ceases to talk about the virtues and charms of the other.

That is why beautiful women seldom make men happy, and why plain women frequently fascinate and hold.

It is not a peculiarly feminine trait, this love of hearing oneself analyzed and made the leading topic of discussion—it is merely HUMAN.

Might Gain Fiancees.

Men claim to be above it, but in truth they are delighted to be the absorbing subject of conversation when a woman is the converser. Any girl, however devoid of physical charm, if she possesses refinement and tact, can win the man she admires if she understands the art of keeping him entertained about himself and gives him to understand in a subtle manner that his characteristics, his aims, his desires and interests are matters of continual observation and study to her. The woman who undertakes such a course of action must be modest, however, and in no way thrust herself upon the man's notice. She must not be bold or self-assertive, for these are repulsive qualities to a man.

She must simply utilize her opportunities and be patient. A man, on the contrary, can make his opportunities to see a woman, and when he uses boldness and self-assertion in his suit she is all the better pleased, so long as he continues to occupy her time by talking about her, with only occasional references to himself and other people.

Therefore, it is not difficult to understand how, while an earnest woman might be slow in succeeding in her wish to win and hold the regard of one man, a busy, trifling man might accumulate thirty fiancees with ease and celerity.

Yet, on the other hand, woman has more latitude than man for conversation of this kind. A man is perfectly willing a woman should discuss his faults, and delights in having her analyze his sins and weaknesses (before marriage), with occasional laudations of his virtues; while a woman limits him to the recounting of her charming qualities and to anxious solicitude for her welfare.

The only fault she allows him to refer to is her ability to break hearts, or her cruelty to men who adore her, or her delicate physical organization. Most lovers talk of the charms of their sweethearts during courtship. Few husbands make the virtues of their wives a topic of conversation in the family circle—hence the divorce court is busy.

Few lovers are so tactless as to devote many minutes to lauding the virtues or charms of other women to their sweethearts.

Accuse Wives of Jealousy.

But, many husbands enjoy this topic of conversation, and accuse their wives of jealousy if they seem uninterested.

The successful bigamist surely would know better than to pursue such a course; so while better men have been losing their wives and sweethearts he has been winning an embarrassment of riches.

The way to win a woman lies through praise of her.

The way to lose her through praise of other women.

False Economy

Which Is the Better Business Policy, He Asks, the Spending of $60,000,000 for Our Navy or War Costing This Country $2,000,000,000?

By JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES

A BUSINESS man who refused to spend $100 in order to save $1,000 would be regarded among business men as miserly and incapable.

The representatives of a rich nation who would refuse to spend fifty or sixty million dollars within two years to save an expenditure of two thousand million dollars ought inevitably to be classed as stupid, miserly and unpatriotic. The comparision is perfect with the conditions of to-day.

War with Japan is not only possible, but it is not improbable within the present month.

If we have war with Japan the experts who know and not merely the gossips who speculate are a unit in the belief that within a few weeks Japan could easily capture the Phillipines, the Hawaiian Islands and the Sandwich Islands.

Might Land an Army.

It is also agreed that Japan might land an army by trasports through Puget Sound upon American soil, make a demonstration against our beautiful City of San Francisco and invest the Panama Canal for bombardment or surrender.

The value of these island possessions are insignificant as compared with the after expense. This nation could not afford and certainly would not afford to suffer this indignity at the hands of the Japanese soldiers and sailors. If it took the last dollar of our money and the last contingent of our soldiers the United States would be compelled to vindicate its honor and its prestige by recapturing what Japan should win and fortify against us.

There is not a statistician of war who does not believe that this gigantic effort would cost our country between one thousand and two thousand million dollars.

The records of the Russian-Japanese war vindicate the belief that this is not an extravagant estimate of the cost.

Two thousand million dollars is a prodigious sum even in the day of magnificent figures in money.

These two thousand million dollars, plainly stated, would represent just exactly what the stupid, selfish, unpatriotic and mercenary statesmanship of our recent Congresses have cost this country.

Japan Would Be Silent.

There is no escaping the arraignment. If the naval programs which have been presented to Congress within the last ten years by men who are paid by the Government to tell the Government what is needed for the national defense had been adopted, as they ought to have been, by the representatives of the people there would have been a navy large enough to make this war, which is now probable, not only improbable, but impossible.

Japan would never have voiced a comparative ultimatum and certinly never have ventured upon a war against such a navy as our programs had required.

The men who have been responsible by their blindness and parsimony for our debilitated navy and our unpreparedness in national defense must inevitably be held responsible for the record—responsible for war and its expense and its humiliation.

It is useless and weak for the men to plead that they did not know and could not foresee.

It was their business as statesmen, looking beyond the present moment, to know the probabilities of the future. Their intelligence has been appealed to by information and by argument from experts and veterans so as to leave them no excuse save obstinacy not to have understood and to have foreseen.

The narrow selfishness of local and district legislation and the desire for personal preferment will always be held as the explanation of the unpatriotic and parsimonious policy which has crippled our navy and made possible the humiliation that seems to be at hand.

The only possible reparation which these blind and stingy statesmen can make to the country and to the people is to stand ready to vote now for prompt and liberal expenditures for the national defense.

"Pork Barrel" Politics.

They must do more than this. They must realize that the present instance, which follows fast upon an incident that occurred two years ago, may be and probably will be followed by a similar incident at a near-coming time.

And, whether or not the present difference with Japan should be composed or should result in a prodigiously expensive war, the representatives of the American people in Congress can only vindicate their stupendous folly and narrowness of the last decade by voting in succeeding years for a naval program which will make impossible the shameful conditions and the frowning menace of to-day.

Hereafter the American Congressman who votes to squander millions upon the pork barrel and his own re-election and refuses to expend the necessary millions for his country's peace and its defense must be branded as incompetent and treasonable and sent back to the people who were foolish enough to send him to Washington.

By WIGHTMAN F. MELTON.
of Emory College, Oxford, Ga.

THE Pharisees are not all dead yet.

Bob and his sister Polly, in a crowd, walked all the way home from Sabbath school, a full quarter of a mile, each with an arm around the other. While passing over the little bridge they kissed with a smack that was heard above the rippling of the brook.

Bob and Polly had not been home ten minutes when their invalid mother was heard to shriek, "If you grown children do not stop quarreling you will kill me dead!"

Bob and Polly are Pharisees and simpletons.

A Baalam on Broadway, or in Bowery, who, through a megaphone, proclaims his love for his mother, is not to be trusted by her or by any one else. If she has any sense or decency herself she will, upon hearing him, pluck him gently by the sleeve and say, "Don't do that, my boy! Come home and whisper it in my ear or speak it to me with your eyes or manifest it with some little deed of kindness or act of courtesy."

Baalam is a Pharisee and a fool!

Schnickman, at the club, loudly and repeatedly declared that his wife was the sweetest, prettiest little woman in the world. He offered to bet $25 that he loved her better than any other husband ever loved a wife.

Schnickman was cashier at the ice plant. One night he absconded with the funds. A week later his wife and babies disappeared.

On entering Schnickman's house his bondsmen and the officers found a closet full of empty jugs and bottles. In the dining room they found a buggy whip that showed much use. Schnickman kept no horse and was never known to drive one.

Schnickman is a Pharisee and a villain!

When the old prophet Elijah, thinking there were none righteous left on earth, went up on Mount Horeb, as he was commanded, he stood to hear his Lord's condemnation of a way-way world.

Elijah was probably surprised when God's wrath was not proclaimed in the tempest, or in the earthquake, or in the thunderlight.

After these noisy things had passed by a still small voice informed Elijah that there were yet seven thousand Israelites whose lips had not kissed Baal.

The Still-Small-Voice was no Pharisee.

Mother-love ever expresses itself "Sweet and low, sweet and low," like the wind of a Western sea, while her little one, her pretty one, sleeps.

Mother is not a Pharisee.

Love may get itself expressed in the odor of a violet or in the dream of a kiss or in the memory of a silent sunset.

True lover never blusters.

True love is not loud.
