SAYS CONLEY CONFESSED SLAYING

Chief Expects Arrests In Vice Probe

MEN NAMED BY GIRL ARE SOUGHT

Chief Beavers Declares New and Startling Arrests Are Near. Alleged Procuress Held

With the principals in the sensational vice case, Hattie Smith, a 17-year-old girl victim; Mrs. Lena Barnhart, a flashily-dressed woman, alleged white slave procuress; Lige Murray, negro ally, and Clyde Cox, the youth who was arrested in the hotel raid, all bound over to the higher courts, the police Thursday turned the full flare of a searching investigation directly on the hotels and alleged immoral resorts, with the result that new arrests and startling developments were expected during the day.

Chief Beavers Thursday morning declared that his crusade would include the men principals in the vice system as well as the women.

A number of names were given him by Hattie Smith. He will use these as a start along this line of his investigation, and sensational results are expected.

Girl Tells Story in Court.

The remarkable case came to a close Wednesday afternoon when the Smith girl told in court her story. She did not mince nor choose words. Looking at Recorder Broyles squarely, she told of her ruin.

It was in a soda fountain on Cone Street, near James, that she first saw the Barnhart woman, she said. Often she stopped in the soda fountain and usually the woman was there, talking with men or preparing to go riding with them in an automobile, she said.

"One day about two weeks ago I asked who she was. She seemed so popular, was dressed so nicely and had so many friends that I just wanted to know who she was. On the same day one of the men asked me to go for an automobile ride with him. I said I would. When we went to the automobile the Barnhart woman was on the front seat. We went for a ride along the Paces Ferry Road.

"When we returned to Atlanta the woman asked me to go with her to the Carnegie Library. Then she suggested my going with her to the Cumberland Hotel, where she said she would give me an apartment and I could live like a lady.

Given New Name.

"The life she painted attracted me. I said I would go with her. She suggested that she go to the hotel first and arrange for me a room. I followed and found that room 43 had been assigned Lucile Evans, my new name.

"Later I went out on the streets and was picked up by an automobile party that carried me to my home on Marietta Street. Thursday night I went back to the woman at the Cumberland Hotel and made an engagement with Clyde Cox, who was arrested with me Sunday night.

"The following night, Friday night, I met a man named Brower, who said he was from Washington. I went with him to the Britain Hotel. He registered as Mr. and Mrs. Brower. The next morning I received a telephone call from Mrs. Barnhart to meet her at the Empire Life Building. I rode over in a taxicab, so as to be there on time. We went from there to the Cumberland. Mrs. Barnhart offered to pay for my room at the Cumberland until I could get something to do."

Judge Broyles severely scored Mrs. Barnhart. He ordered the officers to take her child away and have it provided for in the Home for the Friendless. Her bond was fixed at $500. The other bonds were $100.

CALIFORNIAN IS JILTED BY MAIL

Romance Ended, He Writes Beavers to Recover Picture From Atlanta Hairdresser.

From far-off California Thursday came the wail of a sad heart shattered by a fair Atlanta enchantress.

Chief Beavers received a letter in which W. N. Stetzer, a resident of Long Beach, complained at length and with many deep sighs plainly between the lines that Miss Bessie Williman, whose letterheads showed her to be the proprietor of a hairdressing establishment and barber shop on Peachtree Street, had beguiled him with the beauty of her photographs and then had suddenly dropped him without a word of explanation.

He had become acquainted with her, he said, through an advertisement for a husband she inserted in a Long Beach paper. He replied and sent his photographs. She answered and sent hers.

He wrote again. Then came the hiatus in their correspondence. He heard nothing more from her.

"You will think it unreasonable for me to write to you," he said in his letter to Chief Beavers, "but I now have reason to doubt her sincerity. She has letters and photographs of mine. They are my property and I feel that I must call upon you to recover them for me."

Thus was the romance ended.

Despondent Society Girl Shoots Self in Jacksonville Home

JACKSONVILLE, July 10.—Miss Inez Seebring, a 17-year-old society girl, daughter of W. R. Seebring, an extensive real estate operator and granddaughter of W. H. Seebring, former Mayor of Jacksonville and a Confederate general, to-day is at the DeSoto Sanitarium with a bullet wound in her head, following an attempt to kill herself last night at her home.

Worry over the recent death of her mother is said to have led to her act. Her father had her at Atlantic Beach for two weeks in hopes that the gayeties of seashore life would dispel her melancholia. She came home late yesterday afternoon and, after talking to a girl friend, retired to her room, where she shot herself. She has only slight chances of recovery.

Hoke Smith Wins Fight for Mrs. Ham; Nomination O. K.'d

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The Senate to-day confirmed the appointment of Mrs. H. W. J. Ham as postmistress at Gainesville, Ga. Mrs. Ham succeeds Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, who was postmistress at Gainesville several years.

The appointment of Mrs. Ham is a victory for Senator Hoke Smith. He has been opposing the appointment of A. S. Hardy, who was Congressman Bell's suggestion for the place.

Senator Smith was opposed to Hardy because Hardy had taken an active stand against Smith and President Wilson in politics.

50 Grocers Freed From Prosecution

BIRMINGHAM, July 10.—The Government to-day allowed about 50 members of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association to be dropped from further prosecution in the contempt hearing going on before Judge W. I. Grubb, of the Federal Court, on charges of violating a decree handed down in 1911.

District Attorney Street made a lengthy address in court to-day before the defense began its testimony, showing what he expected the defense to controvert. The Government contends that acts were committed which were likely to restrain trade.

PRICE FACES GULLS IN OPENER

Mobile Cashes Two Runs in First Inning When Locals Play Bush League Ball.

PONCE DE LEON PARK, July 10.—The Crackers opened here this afternoon with the Gulls on a series that is likely to decide for all time the leadership of the league. Price and Cavet were the pitchers selected to do the work.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Stock was thrown out by Smith. McGill was safe at the opening peg when Agler played ping-pong with the grasser. D. Robertson died on an easy roller to Agler, McGill moving up to the midway. Price's hand was all butter for O'Dell's grounder and on the error the former Cracker landed safely at the opening cushion, while McGill trotted over to third. O'Dell pilfered bag No. 2, and when Chapman made a horrid heave McGill cashed and O'Dell hustled to the difficult cushion. Schmidt grounded to Alperman who booted the pill and O'Dell dented the dish with a tally. Paulet kindly fouled to Chapman. NO HITS, TWO RUNS.

Long ballooned to O'Dell. Welchonce leaned against the pill for a double to right. Alperman peppered a one-timer to right and Welchonce pulled up at third. Bailey lifted to Clark and on the sacrifice Welchonce scored. Clark made a wild chuck home to head off Welchonce and Alperman ambled all the way to third. Smith did the Casey in the pinch. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SECOND INNING.

Clark jammed a single over Smith's head. Campbell's best was a hoist that Bisland was under. Cavet sent a roller to Price, who relayed to Bisland, forcing Clark at second. Stock raised a dinky pop to Smith. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Bisland died on a grounder over the O'Dell-Robertson route. Agler gladdened the hearts with a single to right. Cavet and Robertson did all that was necessary with Chapman's puny roll, but Agler hustled to second on the out. Price dropped a pretty bunt down the third base line and beat it out for a hit, Agler going to third. Long drew transportation, and the cushions were intoxicated. Welchonce grounded to Cavet and Long was forced at the midway, Stock getting the putout. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

McGill had a good eye and waited out four bad ones. Long pulled down Robertson's good-looking welt. O'Dell took the easy road to first on four bum chucks and McGill moved up one notch. Schmidt sent a sky-scraper into Bailey's waiting digets. Paulet forced O'Dell at second, Bisland to Alperman. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Saves Girl; Year Goes; Reward, Cold Stare

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Andrew P. Talmadge, of Washington, last summer jumped overboard, clothes and all, and rescued a young woman after she had gone down the second time. In the rescue he was obliged to put his arm about her. She gave him an awful glare, but he attributes it to excitement.

To-day he met the young woman on the street, and instead of beaming a smile of gratitude, she turned her head haughtily and did not speak.

Rome Fears Water Famine; Wants Rain

ROME, July 10.—The city of Rome, with its 17,000 inhabitants, faces a real water famine. The situation is so critical that the authorities are alarmed.

Only one-quarter of an inch of rain has fallen in Rome since June 7, and so much extra water has been used on gardens and lawns that the supply of city water is about exhausted.

To-day Mayor Yancey issued a proclamation calling on the people to co-operate with the city authorities in an effort to prevent a water famine.

NEGRO MADE BOAST OF KILLING A GIRL, AGENT DECLARES

Attorneys for Frank Will Put Main Reliance of Defense on the Startling Affidavit Made by W. H. Mincey and Now in Their Possession.

That Jim Conley, negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, made a virtual confession to him that he attacked and killed Mary Phagan is the startling allegation made in an affidavit by William H. Mincey, until recently a solicitor for the American Insurance Company, of 115½ North Pryor Street.

It became known Thursday that this affidavit, which is in the hands of the defense, will be the principal reliance, aside from the alibis which have been established for Frank, in bringing an acquittal of the accused man and obtaining a conviction against the negro.

No other evidence, in all of the more than two months' investigation of the mystery, has been so damning and so direct. The defense has practically only to establish the creditability of Mincey to assure itself of victory.

Said He Had Killed Girl.

This sensational information is the first hint that the public has had that the negro was alleged to have made a confession of the crime. Up to this time the detectives have said that Conley has denied all connection with the killing itself.

"I've killed a girl to-day; I don't want to kill nobody else," are the words that Mincey swore Conley spoke to him the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered in the pencil factory.

Mincey at the time of which his affidavit relates was selling life insurance in the negro districts. He knew Conley and had been after him several times to take out life insurance, according to the story he told in the office of Attorney Rosser.

Conley Was Drunk.

On the afternoon of the murder of Mary Phagan he met Conley near Electric and Carter Streets. Conley was sitting down with his head in his hands, apparently intoxicated.

"How about that insurance?" Mincey says he asked Conley.

"Get away from here. I don't want no insurance," Conley is said to have replied.

Mincey says in his affidavit that he urged Conley further and that the negro appeared to be angry.

"I tell you I don't want no insurance; I'm in trouble. I don't want you to bother me," Mincey swears Conley retorted.

Mincey asserts that he stayed to argue with Conley and that the negro finally said:

"You go away. I'll be in jail in a few days and I won't want any insurance."

Negro Was Enraged.

His satrtling confession of murder is alleged to have come when he became enraged at Mincey's continued importunities.

The negro jumped to his feet and advanced toward Mincey menacingly, according to the affidavit.

"I've killed a girl to-day; I don't want to kill nobody else!" Mincey declared Conley shouted at him.

Mincey thought little of the remark at the time, regarding Conley's remarks as mere braggadocio or an exaggeration of some negro fight in which he had been involved. When he read of the Phagan murder he recalled the remarks of Conley.

Goes to Factory.

On the Tuesday following the strangling of the little girl he went to the factory. He talked to E. F. Holloway, the day watchman, and asked him how many negroes were employed there. Holloway replied that there were seven or eight.

"You should have every one of them arrested at once," Mincey told

SWEARS CONLEY BOASTED OF SLAYING

W. H. Mincey, Insurance Agent, Makes Startling Affidavit for Frank Defense.

him. And then he told of his meeting with Conley. Holloway replied that Conley had not been in the factory that day, no one knowing at the time that the negro had hidden himself in the boxes to the right of the stairway on the first floor.

The shock of the tragedy had not yet worn off, and all was confusion in the building. Because no one suspected that Conley had been in the factory on the Saturday of the crime, a fact which Conley later admitted when under the third degree of the detectives, little attention was paid to Mincey's story at the time.

Says Police Wouldn't Listen.

He states that he went to the police station and was told that they did not want his story. He saw Conley and identified him as the negro with whom he talked on the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered.

When Conley himself broke down and admitted that he had been hiding on the first floor, Mincey's sensational story took on the highest significance. He returned to the factory and repeated the details of his former statement. An interview was arranged with a lawyer acquaintance not connected with the case in any way. This attorney heard his story and took him to Attorney Rosser, where the statement was taken in sworn form.

"We do not want your statement unless you can swear to the truth of every word of it," he was told. He then dictated the affidavit which is now in possession of the defense.

Mincey was a solicitor for the American Insurance Company until about two weeks ago. He left this firm to teach school. He is said to be employed in Chattanooga, but will return to testify at the trial of Leo Frank July 28. He lived at 128 Davis Street until last October and then moved to another part of the city.

Defense Has Faith in It.

Uncovering for the first time the bulwark of defense which Frank's lawyers have built up around him, as well as containing the first report of a confession from Conley, the affidavit signed by Mincey at once takes its place as the most important document or piece of evidence that has entered into the case.

"Yes, we have the affidavit," admitted one of the lawyers for the defense Thursday afternoon. "We have had it for some time. We place the utmost reliance in it. We believe this man is telling the truth. It forms one of the strongest foundations for our belief in the guilt of Jim Conley."

C. J. Graham, of the law firm of Graham & Chpapell, announced on Thursday that the hearing on the writ of habeas corpus for Newt Lee had been set by Judge Ellis for Saturday forenoon at 10 o'clock. He said that he would subpena 50 witnesses to appear at the hearing, among them Leo M. Frank and Jim Conley.

Frank's attorneys will fight his appearance at the hearing and the State is expected to try to prevent Conley from testifying. Solicitor Dorsey is strongly opposed to the freeing of Lee until after the trial of Frank, and has declared that he will use every effort to thwart the movement of Lee's attorneys.

BARROW COUNTY BILL PASSED BY HOUSE

Measure Approved 136 to 35 Despite the Hardeman Opposition. Crowded Galleries Cheer.

The bill creating the new county of Barrow, to be made up of sections of Walton, Gwinnett and Jackson, with Winder as the county seat, passed the House to-day by a vote of 136 to 35.

The measure came from the Constitutional Amendments Committee with a unanimous recommendation for its passage, but it was not put through the House until after a genuine display had been indulged in.

The fight against Barrow was led by Hardeman, of Jefferson, who attacked it by moving to postpone action upon it until next session. Had that motion prevailed, the bill would have been killed, beyond hope of resurrection.

Barrow County has been looked upon generally as apt to win out. It has been before the Legislature before, and many members who voted for it to-day explained their votes by saying that they voted upon the merits of the proposition entirely, which were evident enough to the Constitutional Amendments Committee to get a unanimous favorable report therefrom.

The impression is that Barrow will pass the Senate and go to the people for ratification in the next general election.

During the voting on the bill, the galleries were packed with citizens from the territory affected, and when the vote was announced the result brought great applause.

The first general bill of the session, passed Thursday morning by the House, was House Bill No. 9, which perfects the insurance laws covering the reinsuring in other companies by concerns wishing to retire from business in the State. It was introduced by Wohlwender, of Muscogee, and Cook, of Chattahoochee. Some little opposition was expressed, and 30 minutes was consumed in debate.

GARRISON PLANS TO ABANDON 100 ARMY POSTS

War Secretary Calls Them Useless, Demoralizing, Wasteful. Ready to Fight Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The most radical and dramatic move in army administration since Elihu Root reorganized it a decade ago has been determined by Secretary of War Garrison. He intends to fight Congress on the question of maintaining 100 or more "absolutely useless" army posts in the interior.

He intends to withdraw troops from at least 75 per cent of them in the interest of economy and efficiency, and next Wednesday will start on a five weeks' tour of the posts to crystallize the details of the policy he announced to-day.

Scores "Pork Barrel" System.

Secretary Garrison is disgusted with the "wasteful and extravagant way in which the army is being conducted," and lays it all to the system of maintaining army posts as part of the "pork barrel" into which every member of Congress dips his fingers. There are at present 157 posts in the country, an average of one post to every 250 soldiers in the army. Every State is represented.

The Secretary of War has made a preliminary investigation, which has proved to him that the maintenance of all these posts, of which he believes that 100 are unnecessary, is not only demoralizing to the army, but the most extravagant way of wasting Government money ever devised.

Plans to Block Congress.

If Congress obstructs his policy of unifying the posts, the Secretary of War intends to use his executive powers of withdrawing troops from those posts which he believes are unnecessary. He declares he has absolute power in this direction, and, with the President's consent, could concentrate the entire army in Washington if he so desires. He intends to use this power in fighting Congress should the latter determine to nullify his policies of post concentration.

Mr. Garrison will be accompanied by Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, and Quartermaster General Aleshire.

The plan of centralizing the army has been under consideration for several years. General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, on his last visit to Atlanta, stated that if the plan was ever put into effect Fort McPherson would become one of the largest posts in the country.

Demands will be served to-day for a nine-hour day with pay for ten hours, and reinstatement of nine discharged workmen. Some of the men have been on strike for a week.

The first violence occurred late Wednesday, when five men were injured in a riot. One of them, J. W. Bell, of Chicago, is dying in a hospital.

Beavers in Speech Warns Policemen to Keep Out of Dives

Chief of Police Beavers caused a stir Thursday morning when he went before the day watch and addressed the men on their conduct. His talk resulted from the recent scandal in which several policemen were found guilty of visiting a resort in the rear of 127 Auburn Avenue.

"Any man who hangs around a negro dive has no place on the police force of Atlanta," the Chief said, addressing the men. "If you get positive evidence that any of your brother officers are engaged in discreditable practices and frequenting disreputable places, it is your duty to report it."

The Chief will make a similar speech to the night and morning watches.

New York Dressmaker Describes Petticoatless Mode and Harem Skirt From Paris.

NEW YORK, July 10.—"The prudes can not stop them—they are here. That is, they are in Paris, which means that American women of fashion will bring them home with them this fall and winter," said Mme. Bernard, Fifth Avenue modiste, who has just arrived from abroad with the first harem skirt and the silhouette gown.

The former resembles Turkish trousers, which have succeeded the slit skirt, and the latter is a new French creation of lace and pleated tulle, worn with tights of silk of white or flesh pink, with no suggestion of a petticoat unless it be of filmy material.

"The slit skirt has been the most graceful and attractive made for women which has been worn in many years, so all of the great fashion leaders of Paris declare," said Mme. Bernard. "The harem skirt is an adaptation of the slit skirt with the tendency to the full and natural figure about the hips, which is the dernier cri.

"Turkish trousers, properly adapted, are an ideal costume for the modern woman of fashion. The ones I saw in Paris are the most fascinating and bewitching frocks I have ever seen.

"The silhouette gown, which is built on Grecian lines, is extremely beautiful, provided the figure is graceful. It is like looking at a beautiful woman through a fleecy sunlit cloud.

"The gown is so arranged at the hem that by means of a slit up the front—to the knees—and by pulling the diaphanous pleated tulle and lace criss-cross about the ankles a sort of trouser effect is obtained which only shows when the wearer moves about."

Fights Insurance Suit Under Suicide Clause

COLUMBUS, GA., July 10.—A suit of M. L. Richardson, administrator of the estate of F. M. Richardson, who was shot and killed October 25, 1912, against the Prudential Life Insurance Company, to collect a $2,000 policy, is being heard in City Court.

When the father, M. L. Richardson, demanded payment, the insurance company refused to settle, claiming that the insured committed suicide.

A similar suit for $2,000 is pending against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

Society Leaders, in Masks, See Risque Paris Play 'I Love It'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 10.—Wearing of masks by society women who attend racy theatrical productions, but who are ashamed to let their relatives and friends know of it, has come into vogue here.

A large number of women from court circles are daily attending the risque French show, "I Love It," but all wear masks for fear of the censure of their husbands and of Queen Mary, who has forbidden any of the ladies of her court from entering the Middlesex Theater, where the production is on.

Clergymen are beseeching the censor to close up the theater, declaring it will debase all who see it because of its gross imorality.

Fly Pests Cost U. S. $157,800,000 a Year

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Figured out in money, to say nothing of the loss in human life, the cost to the United States annually of supporting its fly population amounts to $157,800,000, say Government experts who have been making a study of the results of the germ-spreading activities of these insects.

It is estimated that the fly is responsible for an expenditure of $50,000,000 for the handling of tuberculosis cases, attributable to germs spread by the pests, while $70,000,000 represents the cost of typhoid fever cases originating in the same way.

CRAWFORD WILL FIGHT HANGS ON EXPERTS

Attorneys for Widow of Capitalist Declare Poison Evidence Will Be Shattered.

A positive statement from Dr. F. H. Harris, of the State Board of Health, that Joshua Crawford died of morphine poisoning instead of pneumonia, the announced cause of his death by the attending physician, Dr. J. W. Hurt, was the sensational development in the Crawford $250,000 will case Thursday.

Dr. Harris was called to the stand at noon. Attorney Reuben Arnold, for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, the widow, to whom all the estate was left, pinned him to the assertion.

For the first time in his career, he said, he deviated from his custom of merely mentioning possibilities or probabilities.

"There was absolutely no trace of pneumonia or any disease of the lungs," said Dr. Harris. "Morphine poisoning very likely produced death."

Statement Unshaken.

Dr. Harris was on the stand for very nearly an hour, but his statement was unshaken.

No announcement would be made by the attorneys for the heirs-at-law, who number more than thirty, but it was confidently understood they would not rest the case with the introduction of Dr. Harris, but would have other experts, and probably members of the family to take the stand in an effort to substantiate the evidence of Dr. Harris.

Attorney Arnold stated that the evidence of Dr. Harris would be torn to pieces when he put Dr. J. W. Hurt on the stand to tell of administering morphine and opium to Crawford in an effort to stop the violent fits of coughing and near congestion of the lungs, with which he suffered in the last month of his life.

Widow Not in Court.

He intimated also that he would introduce experts to prove that the quantities of opium and morphine found in Crawford's stomach by Dr. Harris were not sufficient to produce death, nor more than a normal dose administered by the average physician.

Mrs. Crawford, the widow, was not in the courtroom Wednesday when the poison theory was advanced by Dr. Harris, and it was doubtful whether she would attend the hearing Thursday.

Heirs-at-law to the estate and their friends attended in large numbers, and despite the fact it is a strictly civil procedure and no court official is presiding, it had all the appearance and interest of a sensational criminal trial.

BOYS SAVE MOTHER AND GIRL FROM DROWNING IN PICNIC BATHING ACCIDENT

Heroic work of two little boys, Mizell and J. C. Williamson, of 7 Gray Street, saved their mother, Mrs. J. C. Williamson, and a young woman, Miss Maud Stradley, of 322 Simpson Street, from drowning in Center Hill pond Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Williamson has a class of little girls at the Tabernacle Baptist Church Sunday school, which she had taken for an outing to Center Hill. Her sons, ages 13 and 12, respectively, were in the party.

Ventured Out Too Far.

Mrs. Williamson and Miss Stradley went in wading. The water was muddy and they could not see the bottom, but the water was so shallow and the bottom so smooth that they ventured farther from the shore, though neither of them could swim. They were walking several feet apart when the girls on the bank saw them go under.

Panic followed. The women in the water fought with desperation, oblivious to the fact that opening their mouths to scream was admitting the fatal water. The girls on the bank called and shouted, and the two boys rushed up to see their mother and Miss Stradley go down in the throes of drowning.

Boys Fine Swimmers.

As they stripped part of their clothes, J. C., the younger, exclaimed:

"I'll save my mother or die with her."

Before the boys could reach the struggling women they had sunk for the second time. When they came up they screamed no more, and they fought with feeble efforts.

The boys had learned to swim in Piedmont Park lake and they hurried to the rescue with the speed of experts. Before the women had gone down for the third time J. C. had grabbed his mother by the hair and Mizell had taken hold of Miss Stradley.

Made Brave Struggle.

It was soon evident, however, that all danger was not passed. The women were too heavy for the little fellows. There were shouts of encouragement from the bank, but the odds were against the victims.

The moment the accident occurred someone had run for Policeman Williamson. He was some distance away and it had taken some time to reach him—seconds in reality, but it seemed hours to the watchers.

As the boys were making for the shore with their burdens he rushed up.

He did not stop to remember that he was a poor swimmer, neither did he discard any of his clothes, but plunged in.

Human Life Line Formed.

Another tragedy threatened when he reached the deep water. Policeman Williamson sank as the women had. When he came up he saw that it was vain for him to attempt to render aid. The boys were making progress toward the shore, so he struck out for the shallow water.

When he secured a footing he watched and gave instructions to the boys. Holding hands, a human life line was made by the girls and all pulled ashore.

The boys were exhausted and the two women unconscious.

Mrs. Williamson is confined to her bed, but her condition is reported not serious. She is merely suffering from a reaction from the shock. Miss Stradley is up and all right except for a slightly sore throat.

Cotton Men Confer With Roads on Bill Of Lading Problem

Representatives of all the important railroads in the Southeast conferred with cotton exporters, compressors and buyers at the Ansley Hotel Thursday morning on the new rules of the steamship companies governing exportation of cotton.

The steamship companies have announced that they will make notations of any damage on the through bills of lading. This, the banks say, makes the bills not negotiable. The railroads also fear that claims for damage will be made against them in such instances, and in such event they will be obliged to make the same notations on their bills at the interior points where the shipments originate.

Whether to do this or refuse to issue through bills of lading is the question which is of vital importance to the movement of cotton this season.

MILITANT 'JEKYL AND HYDE' IS ARRESTED

Arsonite, Meek Wife by Day, Confesses She Did $200,000 Fire Damage at Night.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LIVERPOOL, July 10.—A remarkable confession of a dual life, which in some respects equals "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, was made here to-day by a woman. Mrs. Edith Rigby, wife of a rich and prominent doctor, admitted to the police that she has been a member of militant suffrage arson squad for six months without her husband's knowledge.

Every night she would slip from her home and set fire to buildings, plant bombs or send threatening letters to those opposing the cause. She told the police that she had caused at least $200,000 damage through her own executions.

Gentle Wife by Day.

Her husband opposes suffrage and she had to carry on her campaign of vandalism clandestinely. By day she appeared a gentle, dutiful wife, with no thought of "votes for women." But at night she went forth with violence in her heart. She was arrested.

After being taken to the police station Mrs. Rigby dramatically confessed burning down the mansion of Sir W. H. Lever, Bart, in Lancashire, when over $100,000 damage was done.

Ready to Give Her Life.

"I burned Sir William Lever's home because I understood that King George was to visit there," cried Mrs. Rigby. "I scattered the suffragette placards. I burned other buildings. I risked my life night after night in the manufacture of bombs. But I would give my life for the cause. I would give up my husband and my children—everything. I place the suffrage cause above everything—perhaps above religion."

In her excitement the woman became hysterical and bitterly denounced the government.

Clara Giveen, a member of the arson squad of the militant suffragettes, who was sent to prison for incendiarism, was released to-day because of illness brought on by a food and water strike.

FARMERS' UNION GETS RECRUITS IN JENKINS

Campaigners Inject Enthusiasm at Millen Meeting — Two New Locals Formed.

MILLEN, July 10.—That the farmers of Georgia are rallying to the standard of the Farmers' Union as never before is demonstrated at every meeting at which President C. S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes, State president of Tennessee, are the principal speakers.

At Sylvania Tuesday two new unions were organized. Many names were added to the rolls of the old unions.

At Millen, the county seat of Jenkins, there was a large gathering in the beautiful new courthouse Wednesday.

After the speaking every man who was not a member of the union joined. The enthusiasm was such as to guarantee the success of the union in Jenkins County.

No town in Georgia or elsewhere has grown faster in the past ten years than Millen. It is almost four times as large as it was ten years ago. Why?

The explanation is given by President Barrett. "If there are any better farms, if there are any better farmers, they must be in Georgia," he said, "for I know there are none better in any other country."

The crops in this section are good; in fact, they are above the average, and there will be no hard times in this section of Georgia.

Mayor Reluctantly Pays for Crematory

Mayor Woodward Thursday signed checks for $125,000 as first payment on the crematory built by the Destructor Company of New York, but he is not satisfied with the contract.

"The price of $276,000 should have been reduced $100,000," he said. "By my fight we got a cut of $16,000. Claimed interest of $11,000 on deferred payments finally was waived. Chief of Construction Clayton forced them to add extras which, they say, have amounted to $6,000. The city has drawn 2 per cent interest on the $125,000 during the fight. The total saving is $34,000."

Continental visitors have left a number of hotels where American girls insisted on dancing the turkey trot, the tango, the bunny hug and the Texas tommy.

BALKAN TOLL OF DEATH PLACED AT 65,000

Estimates, Believed Exaggerated, Show Heavy Losses in War Between Former Allies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Bulgaria has been defeated and humbled by Servia, Greece and Montenegro and is on her knees begging for peace.

Czar Ferdinand personally telegraphed to Czar Nicholas to-day accepting any terms Russia makes to bring about peace in the Balkans.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, July 10.—According to estimates compiled here to-day from official and unofficial dispatches from the Balkans, at least 65,000 men have been killed in the fighting between Bulgarians on one side and Servians, Greeks and Montenegrins on the other.

It is a certainty, however, that these figures are exaggerated, as the Servian and Greek losses have invariably come from Bulgarian sources, while estimates of Bulgarian casualties have emanated from Athens, Uskub or Belgrade.

Another Great Battle Raging; 75,000 Engaged.

SOFIA, July 10.—Another desperate battle with enormous losses of life on both sides is raging north of Kotchana between Bulgars and Serbs who attempted to cross the border into Bulgaria.

The Servians had a double object—first, to march upon the Bulgarian capital; second, to get behind the Bulgarian lines and cut off the retreat of the two southern divisions to Kustendil, the Bulgarian base of operations.

According to official advices from the front, the battle is being fought between Kotchana and Egri Palanka, along a small river. It is estimated that about 75,000 men are engaged. The battle lines are stretched over an area of ten miles.

Both sides are supported by artillery. The Servians also have a heavy force of cavalry. Bulgarian reinforcements have been sent over the Sofia-Uskub Railroad.

Czar Urges Bulgars to Settle With Roumania.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Russia is pressing Bulgaria to settle its differences with Roumania over Roumanian territorial expansion without further delay. Foreign Minister Sazonoff declared to-day that it would be national suicide for each of the Balkan States to keep on fighting.

The opinion here is that Greece will emerge from the present war with the greatest laurels.

Bulgaria Is Ordered to Sue for Peace by Powers.

PARIS, July 10.—A joint note from the main European powers was to-day forwarded to Sofia demanding that Bulgaria immediately secure the peace terms of Servia and Greece. Belief prevails here in military and diplomatic circles that Bulgaria will be badly defeated by the other three States in the Balkan League if the war is allowed to go to a conclusion.

If Bulgaria is compelled to sue for peace she will lose much of the spoils of the first Balkan war. Greece will retain Salonika and a big strip in Southern Macedonia, while the Servian frontier will be extended over a large area of northern Macedonia.

Bulgars Give Grounds For War, Turks Assert.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 10.—Bulgarians are committing depredations against the Turks, which furnish cause for a declaration of war, it was announced here to-day by the Ottoman government.

Bulgarian troops stationed along the Littoral of the Sea of Marmora have burned two Turkish towns to prevent their falling into the hands of a Greek army which is marching eastward from Salonika.

Bryan and Envoy of Japs in Conference

WASHINGTON, July 10.—An informal discussion of certain features of the situation between the United States and Japan was held by Viscount Chinda, Japanese Ambassador, and Secretary of State Bryan to-day. The American reply to the recent Japanese rejoinder is not entirely completed.

Mr. Bryan expects to transmit the document to Viscount Chinda either to-morrow or Saturday.

Savannah-to-Florida Road Plan Indorsed

Favorable report on the bill providing for construction with convict labor of a highway 100 miles long from Savannah to the Florida border at St. Marys River, in Camden County, was authorized Wednesday by the Penitentiary Committee of the Georgia Legislature. Representative Slater, of Bryan County, is its author.

The new road is intended to be part of the national highway system.

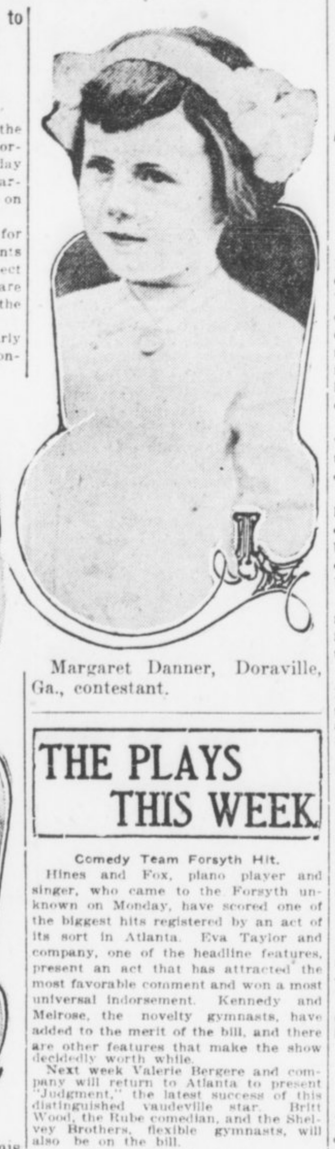
CONTESTANTS TO RIDE PONIES NEXT SUNDAY

Children and Parents Invited to Meet Managers in Grant Park to Discuss Race.

Parents of the contestants and the contestants themselves are very cordially invited to Grant Park Sunday afternoon when the ponies, some harnessed and others saddled, will be on hand.

There will be rides and drives for all the children, and for the parents there will be an opportunity to inspect the prizes for which their children are working and a chance to meet the contest manager.

The contest manager is particularly anxious to meet the parents and confer with them as the race enters upon its last lap. But nineteen working days remain in the contest, and the children will need the co-operation of their parents to the fullest extent. How to help the boys and girls in the race will be the topic which the contest manager and the parents will discuss.



Herbert Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, a hustling contender.

Margaret Danner, Doraville, Ga., contestant.

The office force of The Georgian and American contest department is busy totaling the bonuses which the contestants have earned through the five-club offers, and the first $30 offer. This is proving even a greater task than anticipated, and it is impossible to give the contestants' full standings as yet.

Meanwhile another bonus offer is in effect. Liberal amounts of extra votes are offered for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions turned in before 10 o'clock the night of July 19.

Subscriptions of any length—two years, a year, six months, three months or even a month—may be combined to make up these totals.

Legislators Favor Girls' Home Plan

Unanimous approval of the Penitentiary Committee was won Wednesday by Representative Jones, of Coweta, and Representative Mills, of Butts, for their bill appropriating $75,000 for a State home for wayward girls. The measure will be reported immediately, with recommendation for passage.

While no site is mentioned in the bill, the Penitentiary Committee discussed the advantages of Milledgeville.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Men

Send Name and Address To-day—You Can Have It Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope, to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men, and I am convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow-men to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop drugging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest acting restorative, up-building SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, 4276 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain, ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it entirely free.

FIFTH REGIMENT BOYS MIX PLAY AND WORK

Atlanta Soldiers Having Great Time at Instruction Camp on St. Simons Island.

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, GA., July 10.—The soldier boys of the Fifth Georgia Regiment, who arrived here Wednesday from Atlanta, have taken complete charge of St. Simons. Today the boys, somewhat weary of the more or less arduous duties of pitching camp, are having the time of their lives splashing in the surf and wandering around the island.

Thursday night the first big dance will be held and Friday military tactics and instruction will be the order of the day.

Next Saturday the Fifth will be the host of Governor John M. Slaton, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, members of the Governor's staff and General R. K. Evans and Colonel Barth, U. S. A.

The distinguished guests have announced their intention of camping in tents just like real soldiers during their two days' stay here.

A special committee from the Brunswick Board of Trade and from the City Council will meet the party at the depot and escort it to the St. Simons boat.

The Fifth will remain in camp at St. Simons for ten days.

In the Governor's party on the visit to St. Simons will be Governor and Mrs. Slaton, Colonel and Mrs. Frederic J. Paxon, General J. VanHolt Nash and daughter, Miss Nash; General and Mrs. R. K. Evans, Colonel C. H. Barth, Colonel and Mrs. George M. Hope, Colonel A. H. VanDyke and daughter, Miss VanDyke; Colonel William B. Stovall, Colonel H. P. Meikleham, Colonel Ben J. Fowler.

The party will be joined by Colonel and Mrs. Z. H. Clark, of Moultrie, at Fitzgerald, and Colonel and Mrs. John D. Walker, of Sparta, at Cordele.

Slaton Last Hope of Man to Hang Friday

Failing in their attempt to get the Prison Commission to recommend a commutation of sentence for Oscar Dewberry, the negro sentenced to hang in the Fulton County Jail Friday, Attorneys Calhoun and Powell made an appeal to Governor Slaton Thursday afternoon.

Dewberry was convicted of killing a white boy in Decatur Street. Persistent efforts were made to have the Prison Commission to recommend commutation. Governor Brown was appealed to without success.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Comedy Team Forsyth Hit.

Hines and Fox, piano player and singer, who came to the Forsyth unknown on Monday, have scored one of the biggest hits registered by an act of its sort in Atlanta. Eva Taylor and company, one of the headline features, present an act that has attracted the most favorable comment and won a most universal indorsement. Kennedy and Melrose, the novelty gymnasts, have added to the merit of the bill, and there are other features that make the show decidedly worth while.

Next week Valerie Bergere and company will return to Atlanta to present "Judgment," the latest success of this distinguished vaudeville star. Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, and the Shelvey Brothers, flexible gymnasts, will also be on the bill.

Grand Popular Place.

The Grand just now is a decidedly popular place, because the management, in response to the pulse of the people, has instituted a policy of motion pictures that is a revelation to the patrons of "movies."

Excellent programs of exclusive first-run pictures and Edison's talking pictures are presented daily from 2:30 until 10:30 at night, and usually to crowded gatherings.

Bijou Has Good Show.

Will Stanton and Rosalie May, at the Bijou this week, as the stars in "Along Broadway," have made one of the biggest hits of the season. Mr. Stanton's impersonation of a cabaret drunk is a capital piece of acting and keeps the house in a continuous uproar of laughter. Rosalie May, Mr. Stanton's partner, is a clever little woman. The violin solos of Miss Marjorie Calvert never fail to receive an enthusiastic reception, and the same can be said of the clever dancing of Ingalls, Duffield and Ingalls.

Preacher Floyd Official.

ROME.—A Baptist preacher has been elected a member of the Floyd County Commissioners. He is the Rev. C. L. Conn, pastor of the North Broad Street and West Rome Baptist Churches. The Rev. Mr. Conn was elected to succeed the late R. S. Hamrick.

SLOGANS EXPLAIN WHY ATLANTA FOLKS BOOST

Designs Submitted in Georgian's Half-Million Club Contest Express City's True Spirit.

Thursday's entrants in the $25 prize slogan contest reveal more than ever that Atlanta's true individuality is the inspiration for the slogans. Any city can boost, but none can boost like Atlanta, as the slogans clearly show.

The pretty girl idea has taken a strong hold on the contestants. One submitted by Robert M. DeFassell, Atlanta Athletic Club, makes the face of a pretty girl the emblem of the "500,000 club." Its caption expresses the lure of romance:

"Miss Atlanta, 'Boost-er.' 500,000 by 1920."

The whole country has been impressed with the aggressive and forceful methods of Police Chief J. L. Beavers. Taking advantage of this William E. Muirhead suggested for a button a face of Chief Beavers with the words: "500,000 by 1920. Get 'Em or Bust."

Contest Open All Week.

Slogans received as late as Saturday will be eligible for the prize. On that day the committee of judges—John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor—will meet and decide the winner. The lucky one will be announced in Hearst's Sunday American.

Here are some of the clever ideas that came to the contest editor through the mails:

"The Atlanta Spirit, Atlanta's Boost.

"A Half-Million Souls, Atlanta's Boast"—J. F. Harbour, 41 North Pryor Street.

"Atlanta, My Criterion. 1913-1920, 200,000—500,000"—Lewis J. Ball, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"500,000 by 1920. Atlanta Offers You Opportunity, Peace and Plenty"—Mrs. A. O. Woodward, South Atlanta.

"Atlanta, the Dixie Flyer.

"Will Care for Half a Million Souls and Higher"—Mrs. M. J. Rossman, Greensboro, Ga.

"For 500,000 Souls We'll Win in a Canter.

"Talk, Hustle, Boost for Atlanta"—Lucile Hiatt, 14 Killian Street.

"Here's to 500,000 by 1920, With Atlanta Spirit and Atlanta Pluck."—E. F., Covington, Ga.

"Progress, Prosperity, Pride, Population. Boost Atlanta Club. 500,000 by 1920."—Mrs. B. J. Harrison, 180 Lake Avenue.

"Atlanta 1920 Census Booster. Lend a Hand. Make It Grand. Five Hundred Thousand."—R. S. Thomson, 16 Bedford Place.

Submitting a button design with skyscrapers and airships and a park drive, Roy Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, suggests:

"Atlanta Booster Club. Boost Atlanta. 500,000 Population by 1920."

"Half-Million City, 1920. Be a Booster."—J. M. Swift, 240 Crew Street.

Design submitted by Robert M. De Lassell.

W. R. Menkee and Harold Runge, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, urge a button on which is a picture of a gate, with the words:

"Atlanta, Gate City. 500,000 Population 1920."

Prosperity in Atlanta.

"Health, Prosperity For You in Atlanta. Ask Me Why."—H. B. Tuller, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

"Atlanta, the Nation's Queen. Biggest, Brightest, Best Means Atlanta."—Mrs. Homer Hones, 54 Flat Shoals Avenue.

"Join the Half-Million Club and Boost Atlanta."—Isadore Bleich, 17 Kennedy Street.

"Atlanta, the Last Word in Cities."—Myrtle Maxwell, 708 South Boulevard.

"Me For Half-Million Atlanta. On the Job All the Time."—M. M. Welch.

"Atlanta Always Ahead."—Nate A. Gordon, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"Ashes to Billions."

"From Ashes to Billions Against All Competition. Onward Her Watchword."—Foley W. Vaden, Jackson, Ga.

"A Half-Million We Want and a Half-Million We'll Get."—Sam L. Sugarman, 351 Central Avenue.

"Bigger, Busier Atlanta. Why Not 500,000?"—T. J. Harrington, 35 North Pryor Street.

"Watch Me Pull. Atlanta, 500,000, 1920."—W. J. Hicks.

"For Atlanta—Half-Million and Then Some."—E. W. Ray, Acworth, Ga.

"We're for Smoke."—H. Shaw, 258 Lawton Street.

"Atlanta, the City That Satisfies."—A. M. Moseley, 45 Williams Street.

"Atlanta! Get the habit!
Half-million! We must have it.
Atlanta spirit has caught many.
Half-million in 1920."

Elks Club in Macon May Abolish Buffet

MACON, July 10.—The conviction of C. B. Wright, the secretary of the Elks Club, on the charge of violating the prohibition law, may mean the abolition of the buffet feature of the Macon lodge. Many of the members believe that the buffet should be discontinued, if it is ultimately upheld that the Elks are violating the law in operating it.

Though defended by the ablest lawyers of the city, Secretary Wright was found guilty by a jury.

Wright to-day was fined $700.

Firm Asks $100,000 On Fire Signal Delay

CHICAGO, July 10.—Alleged negligence in forwarding a fire alarm signal in Kansas City, Mo., on July 12, 1912, was made the basis for a $100,000 damage suit against subsidiaries of the Western Union Telegraph Company by Morris & Co., meat packers.

The Morris complaint alleges that a heavy fire loss was caused at its Kansas City plant because of delay in transmitting the fire alarm signal.

GOVERNOR AGAIN CITES NEED OF ECONOMY

Makes It Plain at Dinner That He Will Not Countenance Extension of Deficit.

Governor Slaton again made it plain in an after-dinner address at the Capital City Club Wednesday night that he will insist upon rigid economy in the Legislature until Georgia's present systems of finance and taxation are radically reformed.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley, of the House Appropriations Committee, was host. The dinner was given in honor of the House committee and the Executive. It was informal, and was given for the purpose of getting the committee and the Governor in close and intimate touch.

The Governor pointed out that the estimated deficit in the State treasury now, based upon appropriations made by the last Legislature, amounts to the amazing sum of $776,170.

To Curb Expenditures.

He said he could not see his way clear to an extension of that deficit, if it were within his power to prevent it. He held that it is the State's duty—its honorable duty—to wipe out the deficit entirely, and to that end he invited the help and co-operation of the committee. The Governor said the two items that should be watched closest are the common schools and the pensions.

"The matter of Georgia meeting its obligations promptly is a matter of business, not sentiment," said the Governor. "We must keep our outgo within our income!"

Tax Reform Urged.

The Governor stressed the necessity of tax equalization, reiterating his oft-stated position in that direction.

The committee evidently took the Governor's remarks in good part, for on all sides expressions of determination to help him and hold up his hands were heard.

All the talks were in happy vein, and it was the impression that the Governor and the Committee on Appropriations understood each other very well, indeed, when the dinner was over.

Besides the Governor and the House Committee on Appropriations, Speaker Burwell, Chairman Aikin and Vice Chairman Cole, of the Ways and Means Committee, and a number of newspaper men attended Mr. Wheatley's dinner.

J. Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, was prevented by sickness from being present.

Dress Linen Prices 5 to 10 Per Cent Up

NEW YORK, July 10.—According to a member of the linen trade back from abroad, prices there now are from 5 to 10 per cent higher than when the last heavy purchases were made in November. In the local market staple color dress linens, especially blues and pinks, are scarce. Dealers have advanced prices on several staple numbers.

The substantial business in novelty dress linens this season has led dealers to believe that ratines will be in good demand next season also. The fact that these goods are being shown extensively in cotton is regarded as an indication of their stability.

LEGISLATORS CONSIDER $100,000 GEORGIA EXHIBIT AT CANAL FAIR

COL. T. S. JONES.

State Commission Hard at Work to Persuade Legislature to Appropriate Fund.

Georgia will have one of the most complete and "jam-up" State exhibits at the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco if members of the State Commission and others interested get what they want—$100,000—from the present Legislature.

The first gun in the big campaign was fired Thursday when Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton County, and other legislative boosters for the Cracker State presented a resolution in the House providing for an appropriation as authorized by the 1912 Legislature. The decision to wage an active campaign for the $100,000 was made Tuesday at a meeting of the State Exposition Commission.

Colonel T. Sambola Jones, of Louisiana, United States Commissioner for the exposition, who arrived in Atlanta Tuesday, will fire the second gun of the campaign Monday at noon when he will address both the House and Senate in joint session to urge the adoption of the resolution.

State Building Urged.

"We hope," said Colonel Jones, "that the Governor and his staff or a committee of distinguished citizens of Georgia will visit San Francisco to select a site for the proposed State building which this State should have, by all means, to house its exhibits and to care for the thousands of Georgians who will visit San Francisco in 1915.

"It is our plan also to have moving pictures of Georgia's participation in the exposition, showing every movement from the selection of the site for the building to the great Georgia Day, including the formal dedication of the building.

"These pictures will be sent all over the country and will constitute a living record of an event of which Georgians will ever be proud."

Mr. Weldon, chairman of the State Commission named by Governor Brown last year, was equally enthusiastic.

Big Display Planned.

"We are going after that appropriation with a vim," said he, "and we believe we will get it. Georgia must be represented—well represented—at this the greatest exposition that ever has been held.

"The commission proposes to have a strong display of Georgia's agricultural and mineral resources, as well as an exhibit showing her manufacturing activities. The State is one of the richest in the Union in natural resources and deserves to have a creditable exhibit at San Francisco."

A. M. Moon, of Adamsville, and O. H. Starnes, of Center Hill, are congratulating themselves to-day on their remarkable escape from injury when their automobiles collided in the Adamsville road last night. Both machines were demolished and their occupants hurled several feet. Beyond a few bruises, though, neither man was hurt.

Noise of the collision attracted a farmer. He telephoned to county police headquarters. Officers placed Moon and Starnes under arrest on charges of reckless speeding.

Moon operates a market in Decatur Street, while Starnes keeps a grocery in Marietta Street.

Gag for Gossips Is Favored by Judge

A TRIED AND PROVED GUARANTEE

Man Bought a Bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, Then Took It Back and Asked for His Money and Got It.

A man recently tried out the guarantee which all druggists give with every bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. He bought a bottle and then went back to the drug store and said the medicine hadn't helped him.

This druggist just reached into his cash register and took out a half dollar, the price of the bottle of Liver Tone, and handed it back to the gentleman. But he didn't take the money. He owned up that he was just trying the guarantee and, as a matter of fact, he had found Dodson's Liver Tone the best remedy for constipation and biliousness he had ever tried. "Why," he said, "my wife wouldn't be without a bottle in the house for anything. It's the best thing in the world for the whole family, and the medicine that I prefer to take or to give to my children for a lazy liver."

All druggists sell Dodson's Liver Tone and guarantee it to start the liver without violence. It is taking the place of calomel everywhere. If you buy a bottle and don't find this pleasant-tasting vegetable liquid the best thing to start a lazy liver, he will hand your money back with a smile.

PUBLIC TO PAY IF TRAINMEN WIN WAGE FIGHT

"Are You, Not Railorads, Willing to Grant Increase?" Is Question, Forbes Declares.

By B. C. FORBES.

Another section of railroad workers have voted to strike, demoralizing traffic over the eastern half of the country, unless demands for wage increases are granted. First the engineers, then the firemen, and now the trainmen have taken this course of action.

* * *

Where are strike threats to end? Arbitrators found the engineers and the firemen entitled to better pay. The railroads were willing to grant concessions in these cases, but they declare the trainmen have no grounds for insisting upon another advance, seeing that their wages were raised in 1910. Yet, there is a feeling in railroad circles that arbitrators will seek the usual line of least resistance and effect a compromise.

* * *

Railroad managers are asking: "If employees know that every time they threaten to starve the people they will be granted higher wages, why should they not go on making fresh demands? They can not lose anything by repeating the performance of putting a pistol to the heads of the railroads and the public—and they have learned by experience that they are tolerably certain to gain something when arbitration is agreed upon."

* * *

That arbitration will be adopted this time is a foregone conclusion. The customary result will likely follow—substantial concessions, entailing heavier burdens upon the public.

* * *

Now, the point raised by the railroads IS important. Where are the demands of railroad employees to end? WHY should they end? Human nature is human nature, and if the men know that by asking a lot they can depend upon receiving something, well, the temptation to ask is apt to prove irresistible. It is easier to preach than to practice self-denial. Are we not all striving to obtain the most we can for our labors? The railroads are at this moment trying to secure better rates for carry freight, are they not?

* * *

Experience may have justified the pessimistic attitude the railroads are taking toward arbitration. But will arbitrators ALWAYS grant concessions regardless of circumstances, regardless of the merits or demerits of the men's demands?

* * *

I do not pretend to have a labyrinth of pigeon-holes, each containing a ready-made solution for some complicated problem. Some writers can solve every difficulty in less than a column. They know just what should be done under every circumstance. I don't. And this problem of adjusting demands of highly-organized workers, especially railroad workers, is one of baffling, unusual difficulty.

* * *

Federal and State Arbitration Boards, as recommended by the commission that arbitrated the railway engineers' dispute, have much to commend them in the case of public and quasi-public service workers upon the uninterrupted continuance of whose labors the people at large are dependent for the necessities of life.

* * *

But it seems to me that the greatest need of all is that the public—you, your next-door neighbor, and all the rest of us—should become thoroughly acquainted with what higher and still higher wages mean TO US. The railroads will not say whatever 'increase in wages the trainmen may be granted. YOU and I will pay. The railroads have not one dollar that you and I did not contribute. They have only one source of revenue—the public.

* * *

Therefore, the question to ask is not, "Should the railroads raise wages?" but "Should WE pay railway workers higher wages?" For WE foot the bill.

* * *

If we conclude, after learning all about the rates of pay these men receive, that they are getting less than we earn ourselves, that we ought to contribute more to their weekly envelopes, that they cannot live as comfortably as the average workers of similar skill, then let us make our decision known. Once it is clearly realized that the public, not soulless corporations, must meet the bill, must give up out of their pockets every additional dollar paid over to these workers, then public sentiment will govern rates of wages and govern them equitably.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

Representative Clements, of Irwin County, owns the identical spot of ground upon which President Jefferson Davis was captured, after the surrender of General Lee and the flight of the Confederate administration from Richmond.

The arrest of Davis was effected in a little clump of woods, about two acres in extent, near the Clements homestead, and it has been preserved, just as it was then, ever since the war. In the family of Mr. Clements it has always been considered a sacred place.

When Mr. Clements' father died he left a request that this spot of ground be "kept in the hands of Southern people." He was a lieutenant in the Confederate army, and idolized Jefferson Davis. He aided in the fallen chieftain's escape, and only consented to his surrender when it became plain that further resistance was worse than useless.

Mr. Clements is contemplating, in order that his father's last wishes may be complied with, asking the State of Georgia to accept title to this spot where Davis was arrested, and to appoint some kind of commission or committee to take it in charge.

He has worked out no definite plan—he merely wishes to give the property to the State, with the understanding that the State will protect it, preserve it and keep it, as his father wished, in the hands of "Southern people."

Not a stick of timber has been cut from the land since the day Jefferson Davis was arrested thereon, and many trees that were mere saplings then now are great oaks and pines.

Representative Shelby Myrick, of Chatham, is one of the very hardest worked men in the House.

He heads the big Committee on Constitutional Amendments, and that committee likely will be worked overtime this session.

Myrick is one of the very best lawyers in the House, and is a gentleman of extreme affability and effectiveness. In other words, he is both able and affable.

Mr. Myrick's committee already has returned one county to the House with a favorable report, and the chances seem bright for the creation of the same by the Legislature. The proposition—Barrow County—has been thoroughly thrashed out in the committee, and the House is apt to take the committee's findings as righteous and just.

Speaker Burwell picked for the constitutional amendment committee from among the best legal talent he could locate in the House, and when he made Mr. Myrick the chairman of that committee he paid him a high but deserved compliment.

A meeting of the legislative committee of the Georgia Anti-Saloon League was held at Wesley Memorial Church in Atlanta Tuesday night, several members of the House and Senate being present.

It was decided not to introduce the Tippins bill or any substitute for it at this session of the Legislature, but temperance legislation instead will take the shape of a bill intended to gather the fruits of the Webb-Kenyon bill against interstate shipments of liquor recently passed by Congress.

Whether the Legislature will enact any liquor legislation whatever this session is problematical, as there has been so far no particular agitation of the matter.

Representative George F. Paulk, of Berrien, will introduce in the House soon a bill to establish a branch school for the deaf in South Georgia.

The bill will ask for a branch school convenient to the 150 deaf [illegible] in South Georgia who are unable to avail themselves of the education offered by the Cave Spring School, on account of its inaccessibility.

The bill will not specify any particular location, but will leave that to be settled by a committee appointed by the Legislature or Governor. No large appropriation for buildings will be asked, but the town where the school will be located will be expected to provide temporary buildings, at least.

Representative Crawford Wheatley's dinner to the House Appropriations Committee Wednesday evening at the Capital City Club had much more behind it than the mere matter of a compliment to his committee, although, of course, it was a most delightful and engaging compliment.

Its direct purpose was to bring as intimately together as possible the committee and Governor Slaton.

Mr. Wheatley, who is the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, believes that Governor Slaton is exactly right in his ideas with respect to the State's income and outgo. The Governor is known to have determined that the present Legislature shall keep the lid on appropriations, and not exceed the revenue anticipated under the present system of taxation. He has made it very plain that he will exhaust the executive resources, if necessary, in undertaking to do that.

Mr. Wheatley is determined to uphold the Governor at every turn, if it be within his power, and to that end already has had numerous conferences with his excellency.

In order to facilitate the work and to make all features of it as pleasant and as cordial as possible, Mr. Wheatley arranged his dinner last night—and it may be said that it was, in every sense of the crowds, a complete success.

It is safe to say that the Governor will find the House Committee on Appropriations standing right behind him in his work of reforming the State's finances, and if the committee takes that stand, it may be accepted as a further fact that the entire House will fall in line promptly and willingly.

General Agricultural Committee No. 2 of the House has a large grouch toward General Agricultural No. 1.

General Agricultural No. 1 had a hog cholera bill before it Wednesday, and was so impressed with the importance of the thing that it invited General Agricultural No. 2 to sit with it in joint session and hear the arguments. G. A. No. 2 readily consented to this and sat through two mortal hours of talk about hogs and things.

When the time came to vote on the bill, however, G. A. No. 1 moved to put G. A. No. 2 out of the room, leaving the voting entirely to G. A. No. 1. To this G. A. No. 2 objected vehemently.

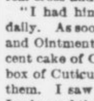
Rather than get out, G. A. No. 2 moved to adjourn—and the motion carried!

The hog cholera bill, therefore, still is up in the air, and G. A. No. 2 has a big grouch toward G. A. No. 1.

ECZEMA LOOKED AWFUL ON FACE

Started with Watery Pimples. Itched and Burned Badly. Awful Sore. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Boy Now Well.

R. F. D. No. 2, Fredericks Hall, Va.—"My little son was very bad off with the eczema on his face. It started with watery pimples and it itched and burned so badly that he wanted to scratch it all the time and he made an awful sore on his face. I would sit and hold his hands a lot of the time to keep him from scratching it. He didn't sleep any scarcely. The eczema looked awful while on his face. I was afraid it would last for life. He was real cross and fretful.



"I had him treated and he grew worse daily. As soon as I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I sent and got a twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and a fifty cent box of Cuticura Ointment and began using them. I saw a difference in a short time. I only used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment a few weeks before he was a well boy." (Signed) Mrs. Kate B. Pleasants, Dec. 12, 1912.

Although the Cuticura Soap and Ointment are most successful in the treatment of affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hands, they are also most valuable for everyday use in the toilet, bath and nursery, because they promote and maintain the health of the skin and hair from infancy to age. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

☞ Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Tifton Slaying Case Now Rests With Jury

TIFTON, July 10.—The trial of I. B. Hall, who shot and killed Dennis W. Hall on May 10, which began with the opening of Tift Superior Court Wednesday, went to the jury this morning.

Four complete panels were exhausted and the fifth venireman of the fifth panel was called before a jury was secured.

Six witnesses were examined for the State, but the defendant relied upon his own statement, in which he told of his quarrel with the slain man, claiming that he acted in self-defense.

Mail Clerk on Trial; Suspected for Year

J. R. Jackson, former railway mail clerk, accused of theft of mails on a Georgia Railway train the night of March 27, 1912, was tried Thursday before Judge Newman in the United States District Court.

The letter alleged to have been taken by Jackson contained a five-dollar bill and three $1 silver certificates.

Government officials state Jackson was suspected of the theft for more than a year before being accused.

New Haven Road Is Blamed for 6 Deaths

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The New Haven Railroad wreck June 12 at Stamford, Conn., when six passengers were killed and 22 injured, was due to the negligence of the railroad in putting in charge of the train an engineman inexperienced and uninstructed in this class of work, according to the report of Interstate Commerce Commissioner McChord to-day.

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van De Water.

CHAPTER II.

IT is not strange that men do not understand women when woman so often does not understand herself. Mary Danforth did not know what instinct kept her from mentioning to her parents her encounter with Gordon Craig in the subway train. That is, she did not tell them that she knew the name of the man whose pocket had been picked. She mentioned casually that she had seen through the window of her car a thief remove a purse from a pocket of another passenger on a local train and that she had vainly tried to attract the victim's attention to the theft.

"How strange that you should have seen it, and that the other people did not," remarked Mrs. Danforth. "You have quick eyes, my dear."

Mary laughed. "They were not as quick as the pickpocket's fingers," she said lightly.

"People ought to be careful how they carry their valuables," remarked her father sententiously. "New Yorkers should know enough to be on the lookout for thieves. Yet every few days you read in the papers of some careless chap who has been robbed."

The Discussion Ends.

There the discussion ended. Mary did not think it necessary to tell her father that the man of whom she had spoken was not a New Yorker. She was quite sure that Craig himself would not speak of the incident to her father, even should he present the letter of introduction of which he had told her. She wondered when he would present this, and if her father would mention the stranger to her. Why should he? There were dozens of business acquaintances whom he met weekly and whose names she did not even know. He was a man who did not bring the office and its concerns into his home. She almost wished that she had told a part of it. It was too late now to do so. Once she made an effort to bring the conversation back to the incident; then appreciated with embarrassment that were she now to give an accurate account of the encounter her parents would think it strange that she had not done so before. So she turned the talk again into other channels.

Dinner over, she asked to be excused, explaining that she must "cram" for examinations.

"Must you work late to-night?" queried her mother, sympathetically. "I think it is a shame the way in which you girls have to work to get through the High School. Now, when I was young——"

"Yes, yes, mother, I know!" interrupted Mary, with more asperity than was habitual with her. She was still weary and nervous, but as she saw the shade of wounded feeling that swept across her mother's face she regretted her sharp speech and, stooping swiftly, kissed the pale cheek.

"Forgive me for being so cross, mother," she said gently. "I am hot and tired, and, I fear, a bit grouchy."

"That's all right, Mary," said her father good-naturedly. "Your mother and I understand, and we are proud of the way you have worked. In spite of the fact that High School studies are a bit strenuous, you'll find that the training has been a fine thing for you later in life if you ever have to face the world alone. But I hope you won't have to," he added hastily.

His eyes dwelt happily on the graceful girl before him. She was an only child, and her father always said that she was the best daughter that any couple ever had. He had insisted that she take a course of study that would enable her to support herself if necessary. Every woman ought to have some way of earning her own living, he had declared. Mary reminded him of it to-night, smilingly.

"I'm Going to Insist."

"Well, dad," she teased, "you say you hope I will never have to support myself, and yet I am almost ready to consider myself a competent secretary, stenographer and typewriter. Then what are you going to do with me if I do not take a position?"

"I am going to insist that you keep in practice, but you shall not go to work as long as I live. I want you at home with mother and me. When I die it will be time enough for you to hustle."

"I pray that won't be for years to come," said the daughter, as she ran her fingers caressingly through his gray hair. "Not because I am afraid of work—but because we need and love you—mother and I."

John Danforth looked fondly at his daughter. "Well," he said with a tender smile, "I've lived right up to my income so far, and now I want to be spared long enough to lay aside something for you two—for no man ever had a better wife and daughter."

Mary studied late that night. As she fell asleep she smiled tenderly as her memory recalled the expression of pride with which her father had made this speech.

"Dear old dad," she murmured drowsily. "I love to see that look on his face."

Perhaps a sudden change in the weather, making the air dry and cool, caused life to seem brighter to Mary Danforth the following day, for she returned from school in a happy and hopeful frame of mind. Her mother came to her room late in the afternoon with the news that her father had "just telephoned that he was bringing a business acquaintance home for the evening."

"He says he's a stranger here," added the mother, "and as he's a bit lonesome, father asked him up to dine. He did not tell me his name."

The girl felt a wave of color sweep to the roots of her hair, and she turned away hastily to hide it.

"Perhaps it might be as well to tell Norah to have a salad course to-night, since dad's bringing a stranger home," she remarked casually, "and let's have the new china used, too—shan't we?"

"Certainly," said her mother. So calm was her child's manner that the parent would have been surprised could she have heard her whisper excitedly when she was again alone in her room:

"It is surely Gordon Craig!" Then, as the girl caught a glimpse of her smiling face in her mirror, she blushed again.

Confessions of a Medium

A Striking Expose of Fakery in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the partment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

YOU have watched the crowds in front of the fortune tellers' booths in Coney Island. Of course, you have never been one of those who have been "taken in." But you may have watched the others as they stood amazed at the wonderful "second sight" of Professor Bondaloo, or whatever his title happens to be.

As he sits blindfolded he describes exactly the articles in the crowd, tells the amount of coins and the dates thereon; tells the colors of dresses; reads the titles of magazines; adds complicated figures on the blackboard, and thoroughly mystifies his beholders.

They little know that the Professor instead of being imported from Mandalay, India, probably hails from that far-distant land of East Fourteenth Street or the Bowery, and is known in the winter and in private life by some "imported" name.

The assistant, after beseeching you to come closer, still closer, in order not to lose a single syllable that drops like pearls from the lips of the X-ray visioned man, then announces that the great professor will tell you your name for 10 cents to-day only.

When you go inside you are led to the Professor's sister, or cook, or something, who asks you to cross her palm with silver, which means a quarter, or a half, or even a dollar, according to how gullible you may appear.

She then proceeds to tell you the color of your prospective wife's cousin's hair, and seems to have forgotten that you came in to find out what your parents christened you.

How He Did It.

I am not at this time going to take up the fortune-telling mystery; but I shall content myself with pointing out how I accomplished the wonderful "second sight" or clairvoyance, as it is better known, to the astonishment of far more intelligent minds than my own.

Come with me, then, as I enter a handsome private home on Morningside Avenue. Gathered there are about forty-three or forty-four eminent scholars to study the mysterious power of Ali Ben Hassan, who has been educated in English in Robert College, at Constantinople, and who has but recently come to this country.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the apartment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

My guide goes to the back of the room and says, "I speak, Ali. Have you your second sight? Please tell me what this is?"

Very quickly I answer, "There appears to me a hat."

"Right. Hear me now. Please watch me carefully. See this? I ask you to describe it."

A Watch.

"You hold in your hand a watch."

"Now what kind? Be quick, please."

"It is of silver."

"What is the number? Look carefully. Are you ready? Tell us then."

"The number is 62,810."

And so on the questions and answers went, and everything correct to the minutest detail. A doctor who was present proclaimed the results marvelous—that Ali Hassan was a unique specimen for scientific research. Several motions were made, seconded and carried unanimously, that the results of the experiment be sent to various psychical societies and leaflets be printed with a full and detailed description and mailed to leading authorities in this country and abroad.

Really, when I doffed my turban and sank down to a good hearty laugh with my "guide" later on, I once again had occasion to lament on the credulity of my neighbors. The second sight of all All Ben Hassan consisted of nothing but a good memory on the part of myself, an amateur investigator into the frauds of mystery.

My friend and I had arranged a code, as follows: Our questions would tell the answer to what they were asking, by the manner in which they were worded. The first letter in each sentence spelled out the answer; but if we had gone no further, this might easily have been detected. So we turned the alphabet topsy-turvy and made H stand for A, T stand for B, S stand for C and so on. For instance, look at the first question that was put to me:

The Solution.

"I" being the first word uttered, suggested "H." "Have" in the second sentence, suggested "A." "Please in the third sentence, suggesting "T"—the three together making "hat."

I can not even begin to show you the further details of the code, which went still deeper, and covered every possible article, description, date, color, metal, etc. We had even gone so far as to vary our code by different signals, and had single words mean fixed things. So that if, perchance, some one began to get the system, we would throw him off the scent. For instance, the second variation made "Say what stone this is" meant diamond. "Please tell me what this stone is" meant emerald, and so on. "Say what country is represented here' would indicate America, while "Please tell me what country is represented here" would indicate Spain.

There is no doubt but the memorizing of these codes is remarkable, and on that basis may be paid for. But I cannot understand why thousands will continue to believe that a strange, unseen power is possessed by these so-called clairvoyants who flourish and grow rich on money defrauded from the credulous pleasure-seekers who frequent the resorts.

One more incident on clairvoyancy: Some time after the All Ben Hassan episode, a number of those who had been present were invited to investigate that wonderful gentleman again at a friend's home in Brooklyn. One of the scholars had sufficiently awakened by this time to declare that he thought it was possible the manner in which the questions had been asked had suggested their answer. At this most of the others arose in anger and laughed scornfully at the man who could show himself so skeptical in the face of such conclusive evidence. The "guide" was very much aroused and said he feared this statement would cause All to refuse to talk again. (This manner of procedure is generally followed when someone gets on the trail.) Nevertheless, to prove that the charge was preposterous, All would allow anyone to ask the questions and he would answer them!

Therefore, to the amazement of all, this was done, and the results were more bewildering than before. There was no doubt of it. All Ben Hassan was gifted with a remarkable supernatural sight. But the explanation is even simpler here than in the first incident. We were prepared for all emergencies. I had previously connected in the folds of my turban the end of a slender speaking tube that came close to my ear and extended from another room and was painted in the color of the wall. Hidden in the next room was another confederate, who looked through an opening in the draperies, held a powerful opera-glass to his eyes, and whispered the answers sweetly through the tube in my ear!

New Residents in Towns

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

TACT, judgment and discretion are needed in order to make friends and acquaintances in a new place. Of course, when going to live in a strange town, where one has a few friends, cards may be sent, with the address, to the friends who reside in the town, as soon as one is settled, thus giving them an opportunity to call.

It may be that a bride is making her new home in a town where her husband's friends live. They have received cards for the wedding, or announcements of the marriage, and after they have called and their visits have been returned an interval of dullness may follow. If a few little hospitalities have been offered they may be returned in a simple way.

A new resident must not make advances, must not seem in haste to make acquaintances, must not make first calls on old residents, or send invitations of any sort to them until there has been an exchange of visits and some mark of hospitality has been shown by older residents.

It is well for a new resident to make allowances for an occasional breach of courtesy from well-intentioned persons. These have been known to send invitations to strangers within their gates without the preliminary of a formal call. This has been from carelessness, or the lack of knowledge of the laws of etiquette. A new resident, who may receive an invitation of a general nature from an old resident who has not called, need not stand too strictly on ceremony if by so doing the opportunity may be lost of meeting some pleasant friends. But a second oversight of that sort, from the same hostess, should not be overlooked, and one may well wait on one's dignity for the delinquent hostess to call.

Rules which apply in cities are altogether different from the rules in country neighborhoods or small towns. In a large city it is not the custom ever to make a first call on a new resident or near neighbor, unless a friend in common has requested one to do so. In the country, or in small places, old residents call on a newcomer if it is believed that an exchange of calls would be agreeable.

First calls should be returned within a week or ten days at least.

A THRILLING SHORT STORY

WITHOUT—ice and frozen snow, the bitter cold of a Russian winter. Within—the heavy scent of hothouse flowers, a soft rustle of silk as Natascha Alexandrovna waited breathlessly for the words that would decide her brother's fate.

They brought little comfort.

"I am distressed to be obliged to refuse your request," the general replied coldly, "but if your brother chooses to consort with revolutionaries he must take the consequences."

"He is only a boy, and the woman bewitched him," she urged, her heart sinking as he rose, saying coldly, "It is useless to press the matter further. I am powerless."

"Powerless!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "You, the all-powerful chief of police! You, who have so often assured me of your friendship! A word from you would set Boris free, and you refuse to speak it."

"Orders have been given that even I can not disobey," unmoved by her wrath as he had been by her distress.

"Then can nothing be done to save him?"

Vladimir Mirskoff looked at her for a moment, then, "There is a way, but you may not care to take it."

"Not care, when it is a question of saving my brother! Tell me quickly."

"A plot is being laid for the wholesale assassination of government officials, and a new form of deadly explosive has been smuggled across the frontier by a woman who, try as we may, we can not identify. If you could give us the name of one of the leaders Boris is free."

"You surely do not imagine that I could tell you," she exclaimed indignantly.

"No; but your admirer, Paul Goveski, can. He has friends among the Liberals."

"And you dare suggest that I should make him betray his friends?"

"It is the only way to save Boris from Siberia. I am powerless unless I have the name of one of these revolutionaries to give in exchange. After all, why should you have any scruples concerning men who preach murder as a trade?"

She wrung her hands in an agony of doubt, but before she could reply a servant entered to announce that his excellency Count Paul Goveski desired to know if madame would receive him.

"No, no. Say I am engaged; I can not see him."

"On the contrary," interposed Vladimir, "you must see him. Fate has sent him here to save your brother."

Natascha looked at him imploringly, then said, "I will receive the count," and as the man left the room, "Promise me Paul Goveski shall not suffer for his friendship with these men."

"Certainly," he replied. "Where may I wait for your answer?"

"In my boudoir," holding aside a curtain before a door.

"Remember, your brother's liberty, perhaps his life, rests in your hands," he whispered, and vanished almost as she turned to greet the Count.

"I trust I am not too early," he said, bending to kiss her hand. "You had my letter? I am all impatient for the answer."

"You do me honor," she replied, sinking into a chair. "Believe me, I am indeed grateful."

A Protestation.

"It is your love, not gratitude, I want," he pleaded. "Surely you have seen how I adore you. I would die to serve you."

"So others have said. I wonder how much such protestations are worth from you."

"Only try me and see."

"You tell me you love me," she said slowly. "There is no love without trust. What if I ask for a proof of that?"

"Ask what you will. I can deny you nothing."

"It will place your life in my hands."

"It is there already," Paul replied softly, bending over her. "I can not live without you."

"Rumor calls you Nihilist, conspirator," she said lightly, with a bewitching smile. "A woman's curiosity is proverbial. Is it true, and who are your confederates?"

He stepped back and gazed at her in astonishment too great for words. Then, "Madame, do you know what it is you are asking?"

"Why, certainly; a proof that you trust me."

"But this concerns others than myself. It is impossible."

"I thought so," scornfully; "strange how all men are alike, ready enough with words—unfortunately, I prefer deeds,' rising as if to bring the interview to an end.

"But not such as this?" he pleaded. "To betray those who have trusted their lives in my keeping would be a poor way of showing my love."

But she stood silent, her fingers nervously twisting the lace of her dress.

Paul Goveski watched her keenly, then going to an escritoire wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, folded it, and came slowly back, saying gravely, "Here is the name of our leader. The proof you have asked of my love."

Then, as she took it, he continued, coldly: "And now, madame, I bid you farewell. You have said love can not exist without trust, and so have given me the answer I came to seek."

"You are going?" she exclaimed, incredulously.

"Yes; love bought by dishonor is valueless," and with a low bow he walked to the door.

She flung aside the paper and, passing swiftly across the room, barred his way, saying brokenly: "No, no; you must not go like this. I did not really mean it. Forgive me," looking up at him beseechingly, with tear-laden eyes. For the question that had tormented her for so long was answered; she knew now that she loved him—that to lose him would be much worse than death itself.

"Then you were not really in earnest?" the sternness melting from his face.

"No," she protested eagerly, "I only wished to try. The paper shall be burned unread."

"I knew I could trust you," he replied joyfully. "Natascha, dearest, I, too, was but jesting. The name I wrote was my own." He stopped, for her face was deadly white and her eyes dilated with terror as she gazed past him into the room.

Turning, he saw Vladimir Mirskoff reading the fatal paper with a quiet smile of satisfaction on his face.

The chief of police carefully refolded the paper, saying, "Paul Goveski, I regret to be obliged to arrest you, but this leave me no choice."

"Indeed he is innocent," cried Natascha, imploringly. "It was only a jest."

A Last Appeal.

"A singularly unfortunate one."

"Why try to undo the effect of your work?" asked Paul, scornfully.

"No wonder you despise me," she said humbly. "Listen, Boris has been sent to Siberia unless I could obtain from you the name of one of the leaders in this plot. They are only assassins and deserve no mercy. But you showed me the baseness of the part I was playing. Indeed, I would have burnt that paper. Say you believe me?"

But her appeal left him unmoved, and his voice was as cold and hard as the ice in the streets outside as he his friends, would repent at the last moment? Never." Then addressing himself to Vladimir, "I suppose it is useless to tell you I have never belonged to any revolutionary society in my life? I suspected madame was being made a tool of, and wished to find out; that was all."

"Quite useless, and I should advise you think of a more plausible tale for your defense." Then to his hostess, "Madame, I wish you good evening."

But Natascha had regained her self-control. She was fighting against desperate odds for all that made life worth the living. Entreaty was useless. If the man before her was to be forced to relinquish his prey, other means must be used, and suddenly the inspiration came.

Turning to Vladimir, she said very quietly: "You spoke of a woman who had concealed a deadly explosive for charging bombs. What if I were to tell you her name?"

"Then you may ask what you will."

"My price is Boris's freedom and the destruction of that paper."

"You, a woman, to betray another woman!" cried Paul. "I refuse to be saved at such a price."

Twice Balked.

"And I refuse to pay it," added Vladimir, decidedly.

Natascha looked at him in dismay. "Refuse?"

"Yes. Why buy what I can have for nothing? Sent to prison as a suspect, you will soon tell me all I want to know."

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Paul, and Natascha glanced at him gratefully as she said, "I will tell you now," opening one of the glass doors of the cabinet containing her famous collection of china fruit. "I am the woman, and here are the bombs."

The man stared at her, too surprised to speak, then Vladimir said stiffly, "Is this also some jest, madame?"

"It is deadly earnest," and, taking a china orange from its shelf, she held it carefully in both hands. "What is there to arouse suspicion in the fad of a society lady for collecting china fruit, and what safer place in which to store bombs than a drawing room frequented by the chief of police?"

"Enough of this fooling," he said, roughly. "I do not believe you," and he made a step toward her.

"Stop!" she cried, holding out the orange on the palm of her hand. "If you move I will convince you of the truth of my tale, only you are not likely to live to acknowledge your error."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Return that paper. Write an order for my brother's release and passports for the three of us by the midnight train to Paris."

"I refuse."

"Then as it is a choice between Siberia and death, I shall drop this at your feet, and there will be no one left to explain the accident that wrecked the house of Natascha Alexandrovna and involved the highly esteemed chief of police in so terrible a fate." Then, turning to Paul, "Have I not chosen well?"

"Yes; a thousand times sooner death with you than life if we are parted." And the look in his eyes told her that the peril in which they stood had blotted out all misunderstandings, but she only said calmly:

The Victory.

"Does your excellency still refuse?"

"I will do what you require," he yielded sullenly. "Put that thing away."

"When you have fulfilled my conditions. Give Paul Goveski his paper."

Vladimir complied, and Paul watched it burn while Natascha continued: "Now write an order for Boris' release and make out our passports." Then, when he had done so, "In return, if you give me your word to do nothing till midday to-morrow, I will leave my china fruit exactly as they are. You can search the house, and think what a sensation such a discovery will make, and how your cleverness will be applauded."

"I give it." And if looks could kill, she would have fallen dead at his feet.

"Then I need detain you no longer. But another time, your excellency, when you wish to make a tool of a woman, beware lest you burn your own fingers."

"You have got the better of me now," he replied, turning to go, "but sooner or later my turn will come, and then—" The pause that followed was more expressive than words.

As the sound of his footsteps died away, Natascha placed the orange on a table and burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, exclaiming, "To think that two men could be so easily deceived!"

"Natascha, what do you mean?" Paul asked.

"It was your danger inspired me. I was desperate," she replied, taking the orange in both hands and giving it a slight twist, when the two halves fell apart, and she held them out for her lover to see they were empty of all save air. "If only I could see Vladimir's face to-morrow when he finds those deadly bombs are no more dangerous than this china orange!"

Alas, That Poor Egg!

"Waiter!" From the table by the window the voice of an elderly gentleman rose in accents wrathful. "Waiter!"

"Yes, sir," replied the much harassed one, hastening forward.

The elderly gentleman, overcome by his emotions, made several vain efforts at articulate utterances. Then:

"Take this egg away!" he roared. "Take it away!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter obligingly, as he glanced wistfully at the offending article. "And—and what shall I do with it, sir?"

"Do with it?" The outraged customer rose menacingly from his chair. "Do with it?" he bellowed fiercely. "Why, wring its neck!"

True Business Instinct.

Topham's was the smartest emporium for miles around. You had to be the last word in "go" before a situation was obtained in that establishment. Keen business men filled every post.

One afternoon when trade was in full swing an unfortunate customer fell down the first floor stairs.

"Help!" he groaned in agony. "I do believe I've broken my leg!"

A shopwalker immediately flew to his side.

"Broken your leg, sir?" he inquired sympathetically. And then, in sharp, clear tones: "Cork legs! Third counter to the right, sir! Forward, Miss Davis!"

Up-to-Date Jokes

A man-of-war was lying off Gibraltar, and permission was given to the men to go ashore for the day. The sailors amused themselves in various ways, among others by riding about on donkeys; and their want of experience in this line caused much merriment. An officer, observing one of the men sitting very far back on the animal, instead of in the usual position, called out:

"I say, Jeck, get up more amidships!"

With an injured air he replied: "Well, sir, this is the first craft that ever I commanded in my life, and it's hard indeed if I can't ride on the quarterdeck if I like."

Bismarck was on one occasion pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place.

"He is a remarkable fellow," said the proud father. "He speaks seven languages."

"Indeed!" said Bismarck, who had not a high opinion of linguistic acquirements. "What a wonderful head waiter he would make."

Stolen Fruit Not Sweeter.

A benevolent old man invited a number of small boys from the slums to spend a day at his beautiful old-world country home, and among the many good things which he provided for them was a bountiful and wondrous feast of strawberries and cream.

As the day drew to a close, wishing to impress the lads with a lesson, their benefactor asked:

"Now, suppose, instead of being invited here to eat my strawberries, you had come and helped yourself when nobody was looking, would you have enjoyed the fruit so much?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! And why not?" asked the old gentleman, inspired with a new faith in young Britain's honesty.

"'Cause, sir," came the sad but prompt reply, "we wouldn't 'ave 'ad no cream with 'em!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T TRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 18 years of age. As I was walking on the street the other day I saw a girl whom I hadn't seen before, but I loved her very much the moment I saw her.

What I want to know is how to get friends with that girl.

ALBERT.

Love at sight is such a pretty dream it is a pity to spoil it by getting acquainted.

You are 18—the age to be devoted to making a man of yourself. Bend your energies in that direction, and let love alone for a few years. Under no circumstances should you attempt to form an acquaintance with a girl you happen to meet on the street.

CERTAINLY NOT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am very much in love with a boy. I am 17 and he is 18. He has kissed me a great many times, but now he has stopped writing me, and I have not heard from him for some time. I cried all last night about him.

Would you write him?

NANCY.

You have been very foolish, and his coldness is no more than what you should expect.

Do not write him, and the next time you have a lover, refuse to be so generous with marks of your affection. I trust this experience will prove to you that you are too young to have a lover.

Do You Know---

Failing in her plan to end her life, after seven different attempts in as many months, Laura Griffith, of Atlantic City, has developed a more cheerful view of life, and has signed on as a bareback rider with a circus. As a persistent fatalist, Laura, who is about 18 years old, holds the record. She has tried the poison cup, the glittering dagger, and the more prosaic method of taking a running start and butting her head against a telephone pole. So regularly was she admitted to the city hospital during the past year that a cot was labeled "Laura Griffith" and was held in readiness for her at all hours of the day and night.

Should the measure now before the French Parliament become law it will not be the first occasion on which it has been attempted to make gambling illegal in France. In the thirteenth century St. Louis interdicted all gambling, even prohibiting the manufacture of dice, and Louis XIV was responsible for no fewer than 20 anti-gambling ordinances. But the monarch gave a bad example to his subjects, since every variety of card game known at the time was eagerly and openly played at Versailles.

Five brothers and sisters, named Harris, whose united ages total 438 years, met at a birthday party at Radnage, Bucks. Their ages are 96, 92, 88, 82 and 80, an average of more than 87. Five other members of the same family, who have died, were aged 93, 89, 88, 87 and 77.

Mr. Smith has been totally blind for 20 years, but has succeeded in taking his degree at Oxford. The GHOST BREAKER

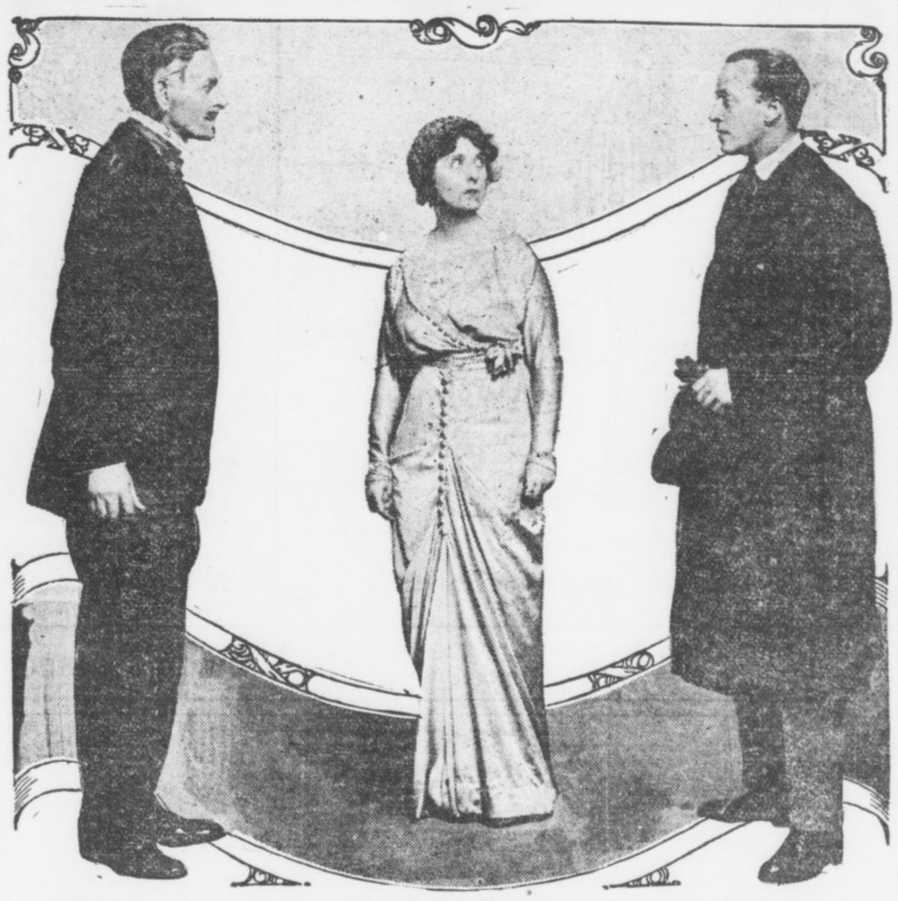
THE PRINCESS INTRODUCES JARVIS TO THE DUKE



"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I am bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Spooks!" grinned Jarvis, appreciatively. He was beginning to be glad he had come. But he saw no answering gleam in the young woman's sober face.

"Call it anything you like," she replied soberly, "but the castle is haunted—just the same. My grandfather was one of the wealthiest nobles in Spain. He died suddenly, leaving everything to my father, his only son and heir. When my father went to take possession of his estate in Segurn the town was full of weird stories of uncanny happenings. The castle was deserted—every one had fled and all told of something in armor that stalked the halls at night. My father laughed at the silly natives and said he would go into the castle and show them how foolish their fears were. He went—and," the girl's voice trembled slightly, "and he was never seen again."

"Hm!" ejaculated Jarvis, with interest. "What happened to him?"

The Princess shook her head and her dark eyes grew very large. "No one knows. He disappeared—vanished utterly—without the slightest clew. Since then two others have disappeared."

"Well, why don't you keep out of there?" he demanded, half seriously. "What's the idea of teasing that spook, anyway?"

"But now my brother has gone in and they haven't heard from him!" Her eyes filled with tears. "That's why I haven't heard from him—why he hasn't answered my cables."

The Treasure.

With true chivalry the young man slightly turned his eyes away that he might not see the tears.

"Now, that's it!" he declared briskly. "You want me to go in and find your brother."

"Yes, that's it!" she cried eagerly. "Save my brother, but," she added quickly, "you must know about this locket. It tells where to find the treasure."

Jarvis ran his other hand through his hair and stared at the trinket in bewilderment. They were coming too fast for him, as he had said.

"Treasure! What is treasure?"

"My grandfather is known to have converted all his wealth into Spanish gold," she explained, "to finance a colonization scheme in Cuba. It amounted to about a million dollars in your money."

The knight whistled. "A million! Eh? How long ago did this happen?"

"Fifteen years ago—and nobody has found it."

Jarvis apparently arranged all these facts in his mind and then inquired:

"Why did you come to America?"

The Princess held up the locket. "A part of the story was that a plan had been made, showing just where the treasure was secreted, but this plan could never be found. Quite by accident, I recently learned that this plan had been hidden in the back of this locket, and the locket, I discovered, had been sold and was in America. It was to find this locket that I left my brother and came to America. It was this locket that you saw last night."

"Then my work is," Jarvis summed up, "to find your brother and solve the mystery? All right! We'll explain to the Duke that you are taking me to Spain for no other reason than to solve this mystery. Let me see—in America we have Roosevelt, the trust-breaker; Farley, the strike-breaker—and why not, 'Jarvis, the ghost-breaker?' "

"Why, yes," smiled the Princess, uncertainly. She could not always tell when he was serious. "It might—why not? Carlos would believe almost anything of the Americans."

Her Secret.

"And will you tell him," he asked wickedly, "that you have made me a—er—what is it?—a vassal?"

Again the rich color sought the lady's dark face.

"I think not," she decided, shyly. "Not just yet."

He smiled at her confusion and pressed his advantage.

"By the way, your—er—just how should a vassal address his Princess?"

Dona Maria appeared to give the matter some consideration.

"Highness is correct," she told him, with some hesitation.

Jarvis studied this over before he pursued his quest for further information.

"Your Highness, a vassal doesn't really amount to much, does he? No—I thought he was a piker," he added ruefully.

"A piker?" queried Her Highness, puzzled. "You mean he carries a pike?"

"No, no—a piker is a tin horn."

"Tin horn?" echoed Dona Maria, more mystified than ever.

"Well," Jarvis began, desperately—habitual use of slang plays the mischief with classical synonyms—"a—a sort of pawn in this game of chess—along with you kings and queens and castles and—things. For instance," the light of fun returned, "could a perfectly good, honest, reliable, hard-working vassal work his way up and get to be a Duke—or a lord or—something like that?"

Dona Maria laughed softly. "You're an ambitious vassal, aren't you? I'm afraid you wouldn't be satisfied with being less than a king."

"A king, prince or—a bandit," he returned, meaningly.

"A bandit? And why a bandit?"

"A king might demand—a prince request—a bandit seize."

Dona Maria looked blank. "Seize what?"

The vassal drew a quick breath. "That which a mere vassal may only admire," he fairly blurted out.

Dona Maria was saved the necessity or reminding him that he was still a vassal by a knock which she seemed to expect.

"Sh-h, he is here. What shall I call you?"

The Duke Arrives.

"Warren, Mr. Warren," he whispered, glumly. He felt that he would without straining himself cultivate a man's size dislike for the exalted cousin.

The Princess opened the door. "Come in, cousin," she said sweetly. His Grace of Alva entered, but fairly shied like a spirited horse at the sight of the stranger.

"Oh, I'm intruding," he exclaimed, in a manner which said plainly: "What the dickens are you doing here? Get out!" This convinced Jarvis that he would eventually come to dislike the exalted cousin by the running foot.

"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I'm bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

Jarvis nodded easily. "Glad to know you."

"I am honored," returned the Duke, his manner plainly indicating that the honor was the other way around. "Interesting task you have undertaken. May I ask if that is your regular profession?"

His tone was a mixture of the condescendingly paternal and an aristocratic sneer, which those of first families consider the thing in dealing with their untitled inferiors. He did not mean to be especially offensive to the young man—it was merely the way he had been brought up.

"That is my business," replied Jarvis, outwardly unruffled. "Solving mysteries—looking up the family skeleton—hunting out spooks—what we call in America a 'ghost breaker.' "

"A strange calling," mused the Duke, eying the young man keenly. "Really, I never heard of anything more extraordinary."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

The scene of the story is laid in the Vanderlip Hotel, New York City. The Princess Maria Theresa of Segura, a beautiful Spanish woman, is suddenly awakened in her suite by the sound of pistol shots. She hears a man running down the hall. He crashes against her door, breaking the lock, and enters. She sees he is a tall, good-looking young man, dressed in evening clothes. He is carrying a revolver in his right hand, and blood is dripping from a wound in his left. He begs the Princess to hide him. She, moved by some indescribable impulse, decides that she will. She directs him to an inner room, and a few minutes later, when the hotel detective knocks on the door, she tells him she is all right and sends him away. The young man, who is Warren Jarvis, of Kentucky, comes out of his hiding place, and the Princess, for the first time, notices his wound. She is moved to sympathy and showers him with questions as to what has occurred. Jarvis tells her about a Kentucky feud between his family and another named Markham. He says he left Kentucky to avoid the feudists, but encountered one of them in the hotel, which explains the shots. The Princess declares she will help him, and then asks the stranger question, "Are you afraid of ghosts?" Jarvis laughs, but grows solemn when the Princess tells him she has dangerous work for him to do. She makes him swear allegiance, and creates him her "vassal." Then she tells him to get her trunk, which is going to be shipped to a steamship on which she sails to Spain the following day. First Jarvis tells her to telephone to his servant, Rusty Snow, a negro. The servant is instructed to procure passage for himself and Jarvis in the ship. Jarvis then prepares to get into the trunk, but first begins to question the Princess about herself.

Now go on with the story.

Julius' Happy Day

"IT'S perfectly awful and I don't understand it!" said Julius' mother, applying a very dainty handkerchief to her eyes.

"Disgraceful!" said Julius' father, emphatically.

Julius stood with a hangdog look, his eyes on the dusty stubbed footgear that had started out earlier in the day as carefully blacked shoes. There was a tear in his blouse and several rents were in his trousers and a general atmosphere of disrepute clung to him.

"He seems perfectly possessed," went on his mother, "to escape to the alley and hobnob with those young ragamuffins who make it their headquarters! Goodness knows, I wish we could move away from here! I had Arthur over especially to play with him! What did you do with Arthur?"

"Aw!" said Julius, with a growl. "I ditched him early! He's no good, honest, ma—he's a sissy!"

"Meaning that he is a gentlemanly, well-bred boy!" flashed Julius' mother. "You see?" to Julius' father, in despair.

His Games.

"What manner of amusements interested you in the alley?" inquired his father judicially of Julius.

"Aw," said Julius, "I met Fatty an' he said the gang was up in the barn where Lilkins keeps his horses, an' we went there and played train robbers till Slicker, he fell down the hole where the hay comes down, an' I fell down, too, an' Lilkins he comes in an' says we've broken the back of his best horse by falling on it, through the hole, and he'll be darned if——"

"Julius!"

"Well, you ast me, didn't you?" demanded Julius indignantly. "Anyhow, he said he'd be—that—if he'd stand for it, an' Fatty he yells like everything because he hasn't any parents an' lives with his aunt, and she's away workin' all day. So Lilkins can't do anything to him, I guess.

"An' I told Lilkins he didn't dast, 'cause we wouldn't buy any more groceries from him if he did, an' I wuzn't doing anything anyhow. An' it was an awful old horse. An' then Ginger—his father has a plumbing shop three blocks down—he said they was a pony in his barn, and we went and hitched it to a cart and then we drove."

"Drove!" shrieked Julius' mother. "With all the automobiles on the streets and everything! Where did you drive?"

"I dunno," said Julius. "We had a nice drive. We went clear over on the west side across the river. Only a policeman he said he'd arrest us if we kept stopping in the middle of the street to fix the harness. We had to tie it together. An' a lot of automobiles got backed up behind us and they were fierce, the way they talked! Ginger, he sassed them back.

"'Who d'you think owns this horse?' he said to 'em when they told us to get out of the way. 'Guess it's got a right on the road if it does eat oats instead of gasoline, smarty!' An' I saw the Mrs. Kingman you know in her electric——"

"Oh!" moaned Julius' mother. "To have the Kingsmans see my child in the grasp of a policeman and with those little ragged——"

"A man he got mad," Julius proceeded, "because the pony ate some bananas from the back of his push cart an' Fatty threw a stone at him and he caught me and shook me something fierce an' another policeman he said, 'Now, go on out of here, you kids, quick, before I run you in!' An' a boy on a bicycle got in our way coming home an' it was his fault, because we yelled at him and Ginger thought the pony'd broke his leg, but it was only skinned. It was a second-hand bicycle anyhow and we got away because the pony went faster than the boy could walk. I guess he'd skinned his leg, too.

No Bell.

"The street car that hit us only pushed us sideways and tipped us over an' it was the motorman's fault, because he didn't ring no bell. Anyhow, I didn't hear any. An' Ginger's father was awful mad. He was waiting for us. He said the pony's people only rented room in the barn an' it would be a wonder if they didn't sue him for damages. What's damages? I don't know what he did to Ginger, but Ginger yelled awful an' I came away then any how.

"An' it wasn't my fault that Mrs. Button's clothesline broke when I ran through her yard an' hit it. They didn't tie it up tight enough. An' the girl was mad when she saw the clothes all down! Honest, I didn't do nothin' father!"

"Julius," said his father, with awful sternness, "you march straight upstairs to bed, this minute!"

"Wh-what do you think?" quavered Julius' mother in despair as her son disappeared.

"I think," said Julius' father, with a broad grin, "that Julius had a good time for once in his life. However, it might be well to unload his superabundant activity on a summer resort farm this summer. Let's look up one somewhere."

The Bishop's Story.

Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak fourteen years before in London and remembered only one thing he said.

"He told me that fourteen years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head and was picked up dead.

"He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received this reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because as she passed my window in her fall I heard her say, "Now for a bump!" ' "

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Christine Norman's Rules for the "Too-Thin" Woman

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

CHRISTINE NORMAN is exactly the sort of girl you would be if you could choose—pretty, sweet, gracious, alert, honest with herself and sympathetic with all of life. And if you have seen "Peg o' My Heart" you would never guess it!

In that play she has to play the part of a girl whose cold, self-centered, unsympathetic nature makes life a burden for the dear little Irish cousin we all love—and all honor to the histrionic ability of the girl who portrays coldness and snobbishness so convincingly that the interviewer's heart sank at the thought of a chat with her. Exit the girl of the play, and enter Christine Norman and joy to the heart of the interviewer at the same time.

Miss Norman's manner is as wholesome and unaffected as her own pretty pink and white room, and her mind is as interestingly many sided as the vast array of vastly differing books that are so prevalent all about her room.

"Now, how could I have a beauty secret?" she laughed. Look at her pictures and you will sympathize with my thought that Heaven and the good fairies had been so kind that "beauty secrets" were scarcely needed.

"However, I have a very original trouble for these days," she went on, cheerily. "I have the unusual horror of getting too thin! Once I did become terribly thin—and I had to go on the milk cure, nothing but milk for seven weeks, and quarts and quarts a day all that time. Even now whenever I start losing I proceed to drink eight glasses of milk a day. Honestly now, aren't curves much prettier than angles? And when cubist types go out of style and women want to get back to normal I recommend the milk cure to their attention.

An Easy Cure.

"A milk cure is an easy thing for me to take, because I am not a particularly carnivorous animal. I believe firmly in eating vegetables in great quantities and eating very sparingly of meat. A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal for hot weather diet.

"But I really don't believe in extremes—enough sleep—eight hours for a woman who is using up her supply of energy in the strain of brain work; enough nourishing food, with chocolates most earnestly omitted; enough fresh air, enough play, and, above all, enough reading to keep you in touch with big thoughts, new ideas in the world's progress. With enough of all these things, sanely blended and leavened with ambition to find out what you can do and energy to do it, we ought all have the beauty of clean, sane health, at any rate, ought we not?"

Answering question with question, I queried: "But for the beauty that allures the eye, don't you think we can all cultivate a bit of that over and above our natural dower?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Norman, "I think we can, and we should, too. Now, after she is about 22, almost any woman's facial muscles begin to sag a bit. If she can afford a dollar a week, I think every woman should ge to a good massesuse and have those muscles trained upward again. If not, I think one treatment and a careful observation of methods are well worth while. Then the purchase of a jar of good cold cream, and the woman can start muscle building on her own account.

"Some people think it so foolish, almost immoral, to try to save beauty. Now, would these very people wear suits that needed pressing and sponging and braid sewed on? Well, I think we should keep or bodies in at least as good trim as our clothes—clean and in the pink of well-cared-for condition.

Easily Acquired.

"Then if we are as sensible about learning what to do with our looks as we are about proudly developing any talent we happen to have, a reputation for beauty's charming sister—attractiveness—ought to be easily acquired. I know a very pretty girl who sometimes looks attractive quite accidentally, but only sometimes. She simply does not know whether her hair should be parted over her left eye or worn pompadour. She has no idea whether her hats should have tall quills in front or droopy bows at the back. A mirror, a little common sense and proper independence of fads would teach her the simple solution to what ought not be a puzzle at all.

"But truly, I don't think we can be a beautiful race until we give the generations beauty to inherit. Heredity to give you strength and power and beauty is the greatest beauty secret of all I am sure. Because with a fine heredity a healthy body is almost assured, and a fine mind and a strong character will be present too, and with these things the finest type of beauty will be easy to realize. Surely you think so, too?" concluded Christine Norman, lifting a rose-flushed face lit with great earnest eyes and pulsing with vitality that makes of her red-gold hair a beautiful aureole.

And surely we all must think that the finest type of beauty is a thing we all may strive toward—a healthy body glowing with spirit and soul.

I have the usual horror of getting too thin.

When I start losing I proceed to drink seven glasses of milk a day.

Curves are prettier than angles.

I believe firmly in eating vegetables in large quantities and meat sparingly.

A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal.

I think every woman should go to a good masseuse.

NO CHANCE FOR FRANK AS 1914 TURTLE BOSS

By Jo Williams.

MEMPHIS, July 10.—Stick a pin here. Charley Frank will not manage the 1914 Memphis club. Whether Bill Bernhard will be returned or not is a matter yet to be determined. The moral cinch is, however, that if a change is made it will in no way concern the present president-manager of the New Orleans Pelicans. It is quite probable that Frank will not be back at New Orleans next season, but as to his assuming charge of the Turtles there is about as much truth in the report as there are red corpuscles in a Bermuda onion.

Perhaps the foregoing needs explanation. When the Pelicans hit the larded lane some five weeks ago, that ubiquitous person, "One in the know," hustled through with the information that Frank, tiring of his New Orleans investment, had made arrangements with the Memphis club president whereby he was to succeed Bernhard at the close of the current campaign.

The yarn originated in Birmingham. Immediately and without undue hesitation it was given the well-known and emphatic pooh-pooh, locally. Yet it refused to wither and fade away, as is the tragic wont of the average canard. Mique Finn strengthened it by offering to wager a Stetson that the rumored change would come to pass. Mique refused to state where he got his tip. "Just linger around and ye shall receive the ocular proof," was the Celt's evasive retort.

Finn and his downtrodden slaves of baildom spent an off day in this city, and right away the Frank vs. Bernhard affair was revived.

* * *

WHEREUPON, Mr. Coleman, who is connected with the local club in the vague capacity of majority stockholder, president, traveling secretary and general overseer of players and premises, clutched the occasion to unburden himself of large quantities of free and forensic speech, a peculiarity not uncommon with ball magnates. Among other things, Mr. Coleman delivered: "So far I have not given the advisability of changing managers a thought. I can not say just now whether or not Bernhard will be with us again next season. He may and he may not. But one thing is certain. Charley Frank will not be Bill's successor, if one is named. There is absolutely no chance, and those interested in the matter may rest assured that my word is final. Where and from whom the ridiculous yarn originated is a mystery to me. The report that I have been negotiating with Frank for weeks in regard to a change is a fabrication of the veriest sort. Neither Frank nor myself has ever discussed the matter. Indeed, I doubt if Frank himself ever dreamed of returning here. The Dutchman will never manage a Memphis ball club as long as I am in charge."

So much for the "well-founded report."

$4,000 Offered by Sutton for E. Brown

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Larry Sutton, scout for the Brooklyn National League club, who has been in Nashville for the past ten days looking over Southern League players, announced last night that he had made an offer of $4,000 to the Montgomery club for Pitcher Elmer Brown for delivery at the end of this season.

Sutton was so impressed with the masterly game pitched by E. Brown against the Vols last week that he immediately opened negotiations for the brilliant Billiken slabman. His first offer was $3,500, but he willingly met the above price of $4,000, which was set by Manager Dobbs.

"Elmer Brown is not only by long odds the best pitcher I have seen in the Southern League this year," said the Brooklyn scout, "but he is one of the most promising boys I have seen in many seasons."

Up to the time of Sutton's departure for Cincinnati the deal for Brown had not been closed, but it was stated by Sutton that he had urged President Ebbets, of the Dodgers, to lose no time in landing the mainstay of the Montgomery pitching staff.

Here is a Home Treatment that Overcomes even Worst Cases.

Lupus or Any Other Skin Disease Will Go Skulking Away If You Use S. S. S.

A tiny pimple spreads to the side of the face and often covers the cheeks and bridge of the nose. It is very destructive to the tissues of the skin. No external treatments will overcome it, as the cause of lupus is from impurities in the blood supply. The only known method of cure is to get the blood supply under the control of S. S. S., the famous blood specific. Its action is quite remarkable and has direct influence upon the network of small blood vessels and glands in the skin.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and insist upon having it. HUGGINS BEST OF PLAYERS IN TENN. TOURNEY

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 10.—The finals in the Tennessee State championship tennis tournament now in progress in this city are expected to be reached Friday afternoon. In that case the championship match between the winners of the tourney and Carlton Y. Smith, of Atlanta, present State champion, will be fought out Saturday. Local sharks predict that the match will narrow down to either Huggins or Smith of Nashville as the winner of the present tourney.

Charles Rodgers of Knoxville former champion, was eliminated Wednesday afternoon by Huggins in two straight sets, 7-5, 6-1. Rodgers had previously defeated Cleage of Knoxville, and Foster, also of this city.

Chattanooga has only one entry, Alex Guerry, while Nashville is represented by Parrish, Caldwell, Huggins and Smith.

Some excellent matches have been pulled off thus far during the tourney, Smith of Nashville defeated Wester of Kansas City in a beautiful match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

By defeating Rodgers and Lowry of this city, both crack players, Huggins is favorite as the winner. Much interest has been manifested in the tourney and large crowds have been in attendance each day.

PASTIMING.

When you pay your money to see a stunt athletic,
And you sit upon a sunny bleacher seat,
And you see a stunt that's awfully pathetic,
It is time for you to raise your voice and bleat.

When the players spend the afternoon in stalling,
And in wishing that the game had not begun,
And the manager persists in vainly bawling,
The rooter's life is not a happy one.

We note by the papers that several hundred persons clamored outside the Cracker club's office to get their money back on Fourth of July. This shows that the birth rate has increased to 120 per hour.

If the Atlanta management is endeavoring to make itself unpopular there is evidence that said management is headed in that direction at the rate of approximately 8,000 miles per hour.

In an indirect way we note that Tom O'Rourke has been affected by the recent heat. Tom has agreed to become manager of Carl Morris.

When one reads the report that one wrestler choked another half to death, one deplores the fact that he stopped so soon.

If those surgeons who cut out Marty O'Toole's appendix will only cut out his wildness, one Fred Clarke will be much obliged.

If the Athletics could only play the Yanks all season their average would be .996¾ or thereabouts.

Joe Jackson still leads the American League in batting. This is due to the fact that he never has ruined his eyesight reading literature.

FODDER FOR FANS

Rube Marquard, of the Giants, is pitching in his old-time form again. He twirled the Giants to their fourteenth consecutive victory, allowing but four hits. The best any of the Cubs got off him was a two-bagger.

CRACKER STAKE WILL BE RUN FRIDAY NIGHT

IN the belief that "Tex" Richards will be no match for the other Motordrome stars in a long race, Manager Noon Hudson has scheduled a big 7-mile feature for Friday night. It will be the final heat of the Cracker Sweepstakes. Manager Bill Smith, of the Atlanta club, will start the race and it will go seven miles, which is further than any race has gone in Atlanta this year.

A 5-mile race about marks the limit of a motorcycle sprinter's distance. He can stand up for five miles pretty well. After that time there is no chance. Machines and bodies give down under the strain.

In races over five miles it takes a different sort of rider. And in this long-distance stuff Shields and Lockner ought to star. They are two of the greatest endurance stars in the world. They proved it when they won the famous 24-hour race, the most grueling contest ever staged at a motordrome. Of course, it was a team event and the men were on and off the track at all times, but it was the most awful test of endurance to which a motor rider was ever put. This 7-mile stuff ought to suit Lockner and Shields to perfection.

Of course, Richards does not necessarily have it all his own way, even in the shorter races. McNeil's J. A. P. went out again Tuesday night, this time with a couple of bolts missing from his magneto. And Graves' new Excelsior did not prove to be running right.

McNeil swears that never before did he have such luck as this season. He claims all 1913 honors as the Jinx Kid; but he alleges that he has never before been the victim of so many mischances. He believes he has changed his luck at last, and at any rate he has taken every possible precaution against accidents.

RINGSIDE NOTES

It looks very much as if Los Angeles fans are to see a heavyweight bout some time next month. Tom McCarey, coast promoter, is trying to stage a Gunboat Smith-Arthur Pelky match, and has already secured Smith's consent for such a fight. McCarey is now dickering with Tommy Burns, manager for Pelky.

Jeff O'Connell, the veteran featherweight, who recently was defeated by Matty McCue, will meet Freddie Enock in a six-round battle at Aurora, Ill., on July 17.

* * *

Kid Pusky, local featherweight, is after a match with any 122-pounder in Atlanta. Pusky is particularly anxious to get on with Kid Young or Charlie Lee. J. P. Ellis, manager of Pusky, says he will give either boy a $100 side bet. Ellis can be reached at 30 Clifton Street, Kirkwood, Ga., phone Decatur 226.

* * *

Reports from New Orleans state that Frankie Russell and Johnny Lore are in great shape for their twenty-round tussle in the Pelican City Sunday afternoon. Russell and Lore recently met in a ten-round battle, with the latter having a slight shade.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion of the world, says he will be ready to defend his title on Labor Day. His stomach, which has been bothering him for several weeks, is again in shape. His opponent will probably be Kid Williams, and the pair will most likely don the gloves in Tom McCarey's arena at Vernon, Cal.

* * *

A return bout, this time of ten rounds, between "Muggsy" McGraw and Addie Brennan would draw a capacity house. McGraw is now taking boxing lessons from Jim Corbett, former heavyweight champion.

* * *

The National Sporting Club of London, where Bombardier Wells is a big favorite, hunted the British Isle for an easy opponent for the Englishman and found him in the person of Patsy Mahoney. Of course, Wells won.

Wonder what Billy Nolan, the bounced manager of Willie Ritchie, thinks of the lightweight's easy victory over Joe Rivers. It sure was a glorious Fourth for Willie.

* * *

Leach Cross is still on the coast, undecided whether to remain there in hopes of getting on with Willie Ritchie or to jump over to New York for some easy ten-round money. McCarey is trying to get the champion for a Labor Day date with the Easterner. Should Ritchie refuse, Joe Rivers may get the match.

* * *

Marcel Thomas, the French welterweight, is in Philadelphia trying to get on with some boys of his division. The lack of good 142-pound boys on this side makes it hard to find a suitable opponent for him.

* * *

Eddie Campi has asked McCarey to match him with the winner of the Williams-Ledoux bout on July 15. Campi has already defeated Ledoux.

* * *

Tom Tortorich is still after Willie Ritchie's signature to a set of articles to meet Jack Britton. He has offered $20,000 for the title go.

UNCLE SAM TO HELP TOURING BALL TEAMS

By James Clarkson.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The United States Government has decided to take recognition of the fact that the Chicago White Sox and New York Giants are going to take a tour of the world during the fall and winter months. A letter to that effect has reached President Comiskey's office.

Now, when you come to study a little, than means a whole lot to the interested parties of that wonderful tour, on which the performers of Comiskey's world-famous White Sox and John McGraw's always fighting Giants are to show to the other civilized nations of the world what a wonderful pastime baseball really is.

Callahan Called on Bryan.

When the White Sox played in Washington during their Eastern invasion early in June, Manager Jimmy Callahan called on William Jennings Bryan. The call was for the express purpose of interesting the Secretary of State in the contemplated trip of the baseball outfit. Colonel Bryan has never been much of a student of baseball—in fact, he inquired of the surprised Callahan whom the White Sox represented. He also wanted to know where McGraw's Giants hailed from. He forgot to ask whether or not all of McGraw's men were huge of size.

Wilson Approves of Plan.

After the short interview Callahan left the Secretary's office, and while he was treated courteously, he was none too favorably impressed. He had an idea. "If I could only see the big boss—President Wilson—I might be able to get better satisfaction," thought Cal. To make a long story very short, Cal was accorded the interview with the President and the Executive informed him that he would not only do all in his power to make the trip a success, but that he believed in it and he personally hoped it would terminate as expected.

Bryan Writes to Callahan.

Yesterday we learned from Commy that he had recently received a letter from Secretary Bryan. When asked what news the letter brought, if any, Commy stated that Mr. Bryan had written him most cordially concerning the proposed trip. Furthermore, he requested Commy to send him, as soon as possible, the itinerary of the trip. Once he gets that, he has promised to notify the American Consuls in the various cities to be visited to give all the help possible to the visit of the Sox-Giant combine. So, after all, it will be seen that Cal's short visit to President Wilson last month was not merely a press stunt. "With the old U. S. Government in favor of the trip and throwing favors in our way, we should show a lot of speed in the foreign lands," said Cal yesterday when referring to the Bryan letter.

Bryan's Commoner Is Made Monthly Paper

LINCOLN, NEB., July 10.—Secretary of State Bryan has announced that with the current issue the Commoner, which he established in 1901, will cease publication as a weekly, and will be issued monthly. The resignation of Richard L. Metcalfe, appointed Governor of Panama, has left the Commoner without an editor.

Under the new arrangement Mr. Bryan says he will be able to give attention to more editorial writing. The Commoner's size will be doubled. C. W. Bryan will continue in direct control.

Crackers Should Wallop Gulls

Finn's Team in Hopeless Slump

By Percy H. Whiting.

NOW comes the tug of war! The Mobile Gulls are here for three games with the Crackers. The Gulls are in a slump. Of their last twelve outs they have lost eight.

Every game the locals can take away from Mike Finn's team is all clear profit.

It is reported that the Gulls are crabbing at each other and quarreling with umpires, opposing players and even with the genial Mike Finn himself.

Their hearts are "broke."

Of course, they are a scrapping club, even in a rout, and they will fight along and win many a game. But if ever the Crackers had a chance to make money off the league leaders now is the time.

* * *

THE Gulls' slump will never stop this side of fourth or fifth place. Mark the prediction. For they've quit and they are quarreling among themselves.

In a recent interview Finn stated that he would not strengthen the club.

"How can we?" Finn is reported to have said, "We have no money to strengthen with."

True it is that the Gulls, after making an amazing showing, aren't drawing at all. They don't have any attendance on the home grounds. The Gulls' fans believe their team is sure to win a pennant and they have quit caring a hang.

If ever proof were needed that Mobile is a hopeless baseball town it is forthcoming now. The town has quit worse than the team. In fact, it was the quitting of the fans, the lack of financial support and the knocking over defeats that finally got the Gulls' on the run.

* * *

NOT since the year Newt Fisher won a pennant with an $11-team has any club that cost as little gone as high as the 1913 Gulls.

Finn probably established a precedent in perfecting a league-leading team with the cash expenditure of $2,000.

After the close of last year's race, Demaree was forwarded to the New York Giants for $10,000. Remaining on the twirling staff were Campbell, Berger and Cavet. For $5,000 Robertson was secured from the Indianapolis club, while Hogg was obtained for a small sum. Thus the twirling staff was rounded for a few shekels.

In the infield, Paulette, Starr and O'Dell were returned. Stock was shunted from the Giants in the Demaree trade. Thus the infield was perfected without an expenditure of a cent. The outfield, consisting of Jacobson, Robertson and Clark, was secured for a pittance. Jacobson was returned by the Giants at the beginning of the season for the price of recall in 1912. Robertson was grabbed from the Giants on an optional agreement, costing $500. Clark was the property of the Gulls, farmed out to the Texas League, and cost Mickey nothing. When Jackson was put out, McGill, gathered in the Gull fold at the opening of the season for the signing, was recalled from Pensacola. The catchers were grabbed without loosening a kopeck from the coffers, as Larry Brown was a free agent and Schmidt was obtained via the same route.

IF the Crackers can tear a hole in the shattered Gulls and do some damage to the Billikens next week they will pull out for the South with the prospects bright. They will have a hard trip ahead of them, but they will be right up in the running. Of course, the Southern trip is likely to mean a big slump. But when the club gets home again it ought to be near enough to the top to win a pennant.

The Crackers are back in there fighting again and that means trouble for any opposition.

JENNINGS STILL AN IDOL WITH DIAMOND FANS

By Sid C. Keener.

BACK in the days of 1907-1908-1909, Hughey Jennings was being lauded as the smartest of baseball generals. All around the circuit there was praise for the skipper of the Detroit Tigers. In a single season he developed a sixth-place it on top for three successive years in the American League.

But while the Tigers were prospering and folks spoke kind words to Hughey, he always replied:

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me. They're winning the games and I'm just one of them. You don't see me punching out a hit in the pinch or fooling the batter when he must be fooled."

He Had the Dope.

After three straight years of success and prosperity, the tide turned. They don't herald Jennings the greatest of all greats. In the eyes of the fans, Hughey is not such a brainy fellow any more.

But Jennings' statement came true. The remarks he gave out when the Tigers were winning the pennants can be renewed and show why the Tigers aren't the same terrors of the league.

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me!"

Why aren't the Tigers winning pennants like they did in 1907-1908-1909? The answer comes by comparing the team that won for the Tigers those years and the team Hughey Jennings is directing to-day.

The Old Stars Not There.

There's quite a difference in the class of the Detroit tribe now.

Among the important missing athletes are: Wild Bill Donovan, George Mullin, Tyrus Cobb, Eddie Summers, Davy Jones, Matty McIntyre, Jim Delehanty, Claude Rossman, Eddie Killian, Herman Schaefer, Charley O'Leary and possibly a few more.

In the places of these athletes who were stars of the first magniture at that time, are Bobby Veach, "Lefty" High, Oscar Vitt, Bill Louden, Texas Hall, John Dubuc, Zamloch, Clauss, House and a few more.

Jennings hasn't a pitcher who can go through a season and win 25 games and lose but 4, as "Wild Bill" did in 1907. Further, Eddie Summers, who used to beat the Athletics almost every time he pitched; Killian, who could halt the White Sox and Red Sox, and George Mullin, who won almost every time he took the hill, are gone and forgotten.

Even commanding a team that is down in the second division, Hughey Jennings remains an idol in baseball. His general character and make-up; his style of coaching; his personality; his way of arguments, not roughing and fighting with the umpires, continually have made Jennings such an idol.

He Used Smooth System.

It was the Jennings system that made Hughey popular with everybody. When he entered the American League he brought with him a new style. It was common on the diamond to see Fielder Jones, Clark Griffith, Jimmy Collins, Joe Cantillon and that kind rush up to the ump and kick up a rowdy fuss on every close decision.

Also, it was an every-day sight to see some managers bawl out the players during the course of the game. Jennings had a different system. He accepted the verdicts from the field official with an "All right, boys; let it go at that," and when one of his side turned a bad play, Hughey simply used to pat him on the back and say a kind word on the ball field.

Bisland Horns Into Hero Class

His Hit Wins Game for Crackers

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN these piping days when pennant aspirations are beating strongly in human and other breasts, a hero is born each day. To-day the laurel, the bay, the Richard K. Fox belt, or whatever insignia is proper for a Casabianca of the ball lot goes to Mr. Bisland, shortstopper of considerable renown. If the winning streak of the Crackers continues much longer, Bill Smith will have to search around for new hero material or crown the bat boy. For within the past two weeks there is hardly a Cracker who has not felt the touch of the accolade.

Mr. Bisland horned into the Leonidas class in the most approved and dramatic fashion. He was placed there by the generous and gentle Rube Kissinger, who figured that Wally Smith had been acclaimed enough and it was time to let another's heart warm to the shouts of an admiring populace.

* * *

THE hero stuff was pulled in the fourth inning of yesterday's pastiming, which was about as good a spot as any. The battle with the Memphii had rocked along for three sessions without any tangible results. Kissinger was working his usual cool, heady game, and the Crackers did not look particularly formidable against his hurling.

In the fourth, though, things happened. Tommy Long opened with a measly pop back of first base, which Bill Abstein couldn't grab, and when the ball carromed with reverse English the right fielder scampered on for a two-base hit. Welchonce, to display his batting versatility, eased a bunt down the third base line and beat it out.

Alperman then cracked sharply to third. Ward messed the ball, but, to the surprise of the stands, Welchonce remained true and faithful to the first cushion and wouldn't budge, evidently thinking the ball had been caught on a line. How he thought so is the eighth wonder, but let it go at that. Alperman reached first, but as Welchonce was also there one of them had to move back to the bench.

Rudderham eeny-meeny-miny-moed and picked Welchonce for this duty. Bailey followed by striking out, but Alperman had swiped second during the whiffing.

As the formidable Smith approached the pan, Kissinger and Seabough held pow-wow and passed the third sacker.

* * *

BISLAND strode haughtily, but not too confidently, to the plate. Inasmuch as he hadn't registered in the hit column since the morning game of July 4, the fans were not altogether cheerful.

On the first one over, though, he hit high and far into right field, and Baerwald, who had been playing close to center, couldn't reach the pill. All those ahead of Bisland scampered in, and so did he when the peg to get him at third went to the grandstand. The laurel was immediately brought on.

With the single exception of Mr. Bisland's being present with the punch at the proper moment, the game was featureless, though Dent hurled in improved form. The score was 5 to 2.

EARL MACK ACCEPTS 31 CHANCES IN SINGLE GAME

RALEIGH, N. C., July 10.—Earl Mack, son of Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, is believed to have made a new world's record for chances accepted in a ball game here yesterday between the Raleigh and Durham clubs of the Carolina League. Mack accepted 31 chances, 29 put-outs and two assists, without the least sign of an error. The game went for 18 innings and was won by Raleigh, 4 to 3. Young Mack is manager and first baseman of the Raleigh club.

"RED" DONAHUE DYING.

PHILADELPHIA, July 10.—Frank ("Red") Donahue, one-time pitcher of the Phillies, St. Louis Nationals and later Cleveland and Detroit clubs of the American League, is slowly dying at his home in this city of tuberculosis.

U. S. TEAM MEETS GERMANS IN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND, July 10.—The American and German tennis representatives clash to-day in the second round of the Dwight F. Davis international lawn tennis cup matches. Although the weather has not been at all favorable for tennis, Harold H. Hackett, captain of the United States teams, says the American players are in good form. The Germans are complaining of the climate. Yesterday's draw is looked upon as being favorable to the American players.

Froitzheim is Germany's strongest singles player, so it is considered just as well for the American team that he should meet Maurice E. McLaughlin, America's champion, in the first day's play. The showing made by Kreutzer, of Germany, in the all English championship, hardly justifies the belief that he can beat R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia.

Although the Americans are the favorites for the doubles match, they must be in the best form to beat Germany's doubles representatives, Rahe and Kleinscroth.

BUD ANDERSON WON'T BE ABLE TO BOX FOR MONTHS

LOS ANGELES, July 10.—With Bud Anderson in the hospital and not likely to be in a condition to go into the ring for several months, the prospects for a local lightweight match simmers down to a Cross-Rivers battle apparently. Of course, the Harry Trendall match with Cross appears all but closed, and it will be a good one but for a date a little later in the season. Rivers and Cross would be the biggest drawing card possible.

FRANK GOALBY SOLD TO ROANOKE UNDER OPTION

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Frank Goaldby, former second baseman of the Vols, has been sold to the Roanoke club under an optional agreement. He may be recalled at any time his services are needed. Goalby, in a recent series in Mobile, was badly spiked in the hand by Dave Robertson, and will not leave to join the Roanoke club until the wound heals. His fielding while with Nashville was brilliant, but his batting was very weak.

MAJORS BID FOR PLAYER; $15,000 FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, July 10.—Outfielder Larry Chappelle, of the Milwaukee club, will be sold at auction here July 15. Only a few of the big league clubs have already bid for the youngster. Both Chicago clubs, Detroit, Brooklyn, Cincinnati and Cleveland are in the market. It is said that $15,000 has been offered for the youngster.

PAT GRAHAM, EX-CRACKER, SIGNED BY CHATTANOOGA

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 10. Catcher Stanley Graham, formerly of Atlanta, was signed by Manager Elberfeld yesterday. He replaces Fitzgerald, who will be returned to Detroit.

JIMMY ARCHER INJURES FINGER; OUT FOR WEEKS

NEW YORK, July 10.—Jimmy Archer, the crack catcher of the Cubs, who was disabled by a foul tip from Chief Meyers' bat in Tuesday's game, was more seriously injured than at first supposed. It was thought he had merely suffered from a split finger, but when a surgeon got to work on the backstop he found that the middle finger of the right hand not only was split, but also dislocated at the middle joint.

It will be several weeks before Archer will again get into the game.

RAIN STOPS MOTORCYCLE RACE; BIG EVENT THURSDAY

NEW YORK, July 10.—Rain stepped in and halted the twenty-mile championship motorcycle race at the Brighton Beach Motordrome here last night before the riders had covered two miles. Ray Veditz was leading when the race was declared off.

The team of Chappelle and Fisher is the favorite in the 100-mile race to be held here to-night.

FARMERS WIN BY CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Mutual Producing and Distributing Societies Get Credit for Vast Increase in Crops.

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM.
Ohio State Senator, Member of American Agricultural Commission, and Secretary of the Production Group.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 10.—Thus far we have passed 60 days studying the various principles underlying the success of European agriculture. By dividing into sections and groups we have covered every phase of agriculture and studied the best methods pursued in every country in Europe.

Without question, co-operative credit and co-operative producing and distributing societies have accomplished a great deal for European farmers during the last 25 years. The reaching of scientific agriculture colleges in short course schools and on farms during the growing season has had much to do with the vast increase in crop production. Encouragement by the various Governments has been another important factor.

Interest in Every Country.

In every country visited a strong realization of the importance of agriculture is manifested. While methods differ in various countries the same underlying principles are found everywhere.

Highly important principles are the conservation and utilization of every natural resource, the scientific application of manures and chemical fertilizers and the great systems of co-operative credits, which in reality make all the other principles operative.

I have visited Italy, Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. In each of these countries we found some special lines of work more advanced than in the other countries. But when we group these special lines and attempt to apply them to our own country we find one thing lacking in America, namely co-operative organizations.

The intensive methods of farming employed in Italy are applicable to many sections of country. The Goverment policy of helping farmers to own their own homes is bringing many Italians back from America.

Swiss Farmers in Union.

In Switzerland more than one-third of all farmers belong to co-operative organizations that are banded into a central organization entitled the Swiss Farmers' Union, which can control the Government policy. Through these organizations the farmers sell all their products and buy all their necessities.

Co-operative credit and distribution societies have played an important part in the rapid development of Germany's agriculture during the past 40 years. Germany produces more than twice as much to the acre as the United States does and from land that has been farmed for centuries. It is now up to us to double our production.

Denmark has made a world-wide reputation through her co-operative exporting societies by guaranteeing every egg and every pound of butter and bacon. Each egg is stamped with the date when laid and the producer's number is recorded in the National Federation's register. Any complaint may be traced directly back to the real producer. Here again farmers have the controlling voice in Government and Denmark is prospering immensely.

Holland's Cheese Fame.

Holland, as a dairy country, has attained fame for her fine cheeses. Her Government exacts a high standard of excellency by rigid enforcement of the pure food laws.

In France the work of the Ministry of Agriculture through co-operative credit and production societies is rapidly coming to the front. When the final report of this commission is made the French methods of co-operative credit will receive deserved consideration.

In America we need long-time credit, conservation of the soils, fertility and improved methods of distribution.

WILSON CURRENCY BILL IS ATTACKED

Measure Gives Politicians Control Over $10,000,000,000 Banking Power, Says Financier.

DULUTH, MINN., July 10.—George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial Bank of Chicago, the second largest bank of the nation, to-day assailed as revolutionary the Wilson administration currency bill in a speech before the Minnesota Bankers' Association.

"We are confronted with a plan," he asserted, "which proposes to compel the banks to turn over to a political committee virtual control of about $10,000,000,000 of banking power, the result of 50 years' conscientious labor on the part of officers of 7,500 National banks in the United States."

His chief objection was based upon what he termed the political control over such great banking power. He saw demoralizing influences in the proposed plan of decentralization of money and credits. While he believed in Federal supervision, he said it should be regulatory, not administrative.

"I claim," he concluded, "that the amount of bank notes issued should be determined by the requirements of business rather than by guess."

Acid in Oconee Kills 10,000 Pounds Fish

ATHENS, July 10.—Judge Brand has issued a temporary injunction restraining the Empire Chemical Company from pouring waste acid in a branch that empties into the Oconee River, a few miles below Athens. Ten thousand pounds of dead fish have been taken from the river. People living along the banks find the odors almost unbearable. State Game Warden Jesse Mercer has been summoned to investigate.

The temporary injunction will hold until June 26, when a hearing will be given the company.

ANDERSON, IND., July 10.—William Brown, Jr., 27, of Ingalls, Ind., to-day confessed he killed Constable Albert Hawkins, of this city, who was found dead on the sidewalk in Ingalls last night with his throat slashed and his jaw crushed.

A charge of murder has been placed against young Brown. He claims he committed the deed in self-defense, using a pocketknife when Hawkins threatened him with arrest.

ATLANTANS SCORE TAX ON FUTURES

Chamber of Commerce Files Protest With U. S. Senators on Cotton Tariff Amendment.

A protest against the passage of the amendment to the tariff bill pending in the United States Senate has been made by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The measure taxes cotton futures dealings.

The protest was made at a meeting of the Atlanta body Wednesday afternoon. Letters were sent to the two Georgia Senators and to Congressman William Schley Howard, urging them to oppose the "rider."

F. M. Inman was chairman of a special committee which handled the matter. He made the report recommending that the chamber go on record against the bill. Other members of the committee were T. A. Nicolson, J. S. Akers and E. S. Ehney.

Objection to the bill was based on the charge that it would eliminate the cotton exchange, would throw the farmers into the hands of the spinners, thus forcing the price of cotton down.

The members of the committee held that it would do away with the cotton merchant who deals directly with the farmer and country merchant, in that it would prevent him from using future contracts.

Products Exhibit Committee Named

Negotiations toward renting or buying a home for Atlanta-made goods reached the committee stage Wednesday when the Chamber of Commerce appointed Brooks Morgan, V. H. Kriegshaber, Bolling Jones and J. K. Orr to decide whether buying, leasing, or renting with the privilege of purchasing presented the best advantages.

The three propositions were embraced in offers considered Wednesday. It was intimated the committee favored leasing with the option of purchasing.

Big Sewer the Gate To a Gambling Den

PITTSBURG, PA., July 10.—A well-equipped gambling den beneath the street the main entrance to which was a big city sewer was raided by the police late last night. Twenty-two men were captured as well as a large amount of money and gambling paraphernalia.

When the police swooped down on the players consternation reigned, but as there was only one manner of egress or exit, the entire crowd was captured.

REORGANIZATION IS ASSURED AT STATE FARM

Board to Ask Assembly for Funds to Retain $30,000 Federal Appropriation.

GRIFFIN, GA., July 10.—The board of directors of the State Experiment Station Wednesday voted to comply with the suggestions of National Inspector Allen and to petition the Assembly for an appropriation sufficient to carry on all physical work of the station. With this in view, a committee, consisting of J. J. Flint, J. D. Price, J. H. Mobley, J. W. McWhorter and R. J. H. DeLoach, was appointed.

Should the Legislature provide funds, the $30,000 Federal appropriation will be used exclusively in making scientific experiments from which increased knowledge may be gained by the farmers, as the national department specifies.

Director DeLoach also announced his intention of reorganizing the station for experimental farm work rather than for a model farm. A new feature will be a department of animal husbandry, of which Professor Perry VanEwing, recently connected with experimental farms in Ohio and Kansas, will be the head. The appointment was made Wednesday.

Dr. E. W. Allen, inspector of the National Agricultural Department, presented his plan of reorganization and the terms of the National Government in regard to the $30,000 appropriation.

Those present at the board meeting were J. D. Price, Chancellor D. C. Barrow, Judge J. J. Flint, J. W. McWhorter, J. H. Mobley, R. C. Neely, J. W. Andrews, F. R. Mann, M. G. Gamble, W. H. Henderson and Dr. E. W. Allen, of the National Department of Agriculture.

Alert Friends Turn 'Surprise' on Pair Wedded 'Secretly'

When Miss Myrtle McLean, of 250 Bass Street, and Gordon Hanson, of 168 Davis Street, stole away to the minister's Wednesday night they thought themselves the only persons in on the secret. Arrangements for their marriage in November had been made, but they decided to steal a march and surprise their friends.

Much to their surprise, however, a number of friends surprised them by appearing suddenly and offering congratulations. There was nothing to do but confess.

The marriage was performed by the Rev. John F. Purser, 204 Lee Street.

38 BABIES GIVEN FREE MILK EACH DAY

All Work in Campaign Is Done by Committee Members to Cut Expenses.

Thirty-eight babies, whose mothers are unable to purchase proper food for them, are being supplied daily with pure, fresh milk, bought from the fund raised by the Atlanta Mothers' Congress. Every day brings names of new babies who require assistance from the milk fund.

The campaign is being waged at a minimum expense, all the work being done by members of the committee. A committee of young girls has been of great aid.

A check for $25 was received Thursday morning from a prominent Atlanta woman, this being the second check for that amount contributed by a society leader.

Milk bottles, placed in the downtown stores, to receive contributions from the public, are each day adding a small sum to the fund, and individuals are mailing donations to Mrs. John Rowlett, chairman of the committee. Still, more money is needed.

"No one realizes the great field that is open in Atlanta for this work," declared Mrs. Rowlett at her home, 186 East Pine Street, Thursday. "There are hundreds of babies who do not get proper nourishment. So far but few contributions have come in. We need money if the work is to be continued."

ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS

One Thing We Do Not Claim For It

That it is a new discovery—it is not. There is nothing new about it except the wonderful new cures it is making daily. The medicine itself has been in use over a half century, and to introduce and keep before the public a family remedy for 50 years is no little task. The reason we have been able to do it is because the merit is there. It has only been accomplished by a strict adherence to the original formula, using only the very best roots, herbs, barks and gums that nature affords for the relief of the many distresses the human flesh is heir to.

To-day we find but few physicians who claim that minerals are just as good and efficient as are the roots, herbs, etc. You know that epsom salts will act, but the mere fact of acting does not mean cure, and is not what constitutes the remedial virtue of ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS; but it is the perfect combination of nature's remedies that enter its composition for the relief of Indigestion, Constipation, Intestinal and Gastric Disorders, Torpidity of the Liver, Colic, Cramp Colic, Pains in Back, Hips, Shoulders and Sides, Neuralgia, Ovarian Pains, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Rheumatism and all Nervous Complaints.

Now, we want to know every reader of this paper that is suffering with any of the above troubles. We guarantee to help you. Come to see us at Coursey & Munn's, where we are demonstrating this great tonic. If you live out of town, send us an order and we will return your money if you are not satisfied. $1.00 a bottle, $5.00 for 6 bottles. Coursey & Munn's, corner Broad and Marietta.

COTTON LOSES EARLY ADVANCE

Fear of High Temperatures in Texas and Liverpool Buying Cause Sharp Rise.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Old positions were well sustained at the opening of the cotton market to-day and started off 3 points higher, while new crop months were to 2 points lower than Wednesday's final.

New positions were affected by cloudy weather in the eastern half of the belt, suggesting possible showers. Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm. Liverpool bought considerable cotton on the weather prospects. Brokers representing large spot houses were good buyers of new crop positions. The buying was general and offerings light. After the market shaded a few points from the initial range prices rallied some 3 to 5 points from the previous close, where prices were firmly maintained throughout the early session, with the exception of July, which fell back to 12.17, last night's closing quotation.

Strength of Liverpool was attributed chiefly to short covering on fear of an American advance on high temperatures over the triple holiday there.

The official weather for yesterday showed temperature average 102 in Oklahoma and 100 in Texas, with six station recording 100, seven stations 102, seven stations 104 and one station 106. Today's early record shows it is cooler in Oklahoma, and Sherman, Tex., reports drizzling rain.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 2 to 5 points from the final quotations of Wednesday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 12.17; August, 12.17; October, 11.54; January, 11.42.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New Orleans: July, 12.41; August, 12.01; October, 11.56; January, 11.56.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Liverpool came in as due, and quoted spots 5 points higher; sales 8,000 bales. Cables reported the market sustained by short covering before the holidays, fearing advance in New York on the circulation of reports of high temperatures. Liverpool will be closed to-morrow and Saturday on account of the King of England's visit there.

Houston, Tex., reports receipt of the first bale of new cotton from Lyford, Cameron County, Texas. This compares with July 1 last year.

Weather developments overnight were as predicted and favorable. Cooler with showers in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee. Cloudy over entire belt, except in southern half of Texas, where it is fair.

Indications are for generally cloudy weather with more extended showers in Oklahoma and the Central and Eastern States; cooler in the Central belt; generally fair and warm in central and south Texas. Several points in the Central States reported rain this morning.

The market declined at the start, but was soon brought up by the strength of July New York and also on some support in October, which position, New York says, will likely be affected by the very small stock there. It looks as if the intention is to advance the market.

The into-sight for the week looks around 24,000 bales, against 25,293 bales last year. We compare with mill takings of 195,000 bales for this week last year.

FIFTH HEAT PROSTRATION.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, July 10.—Around the opening there was some selling by ring speculators, but it was soon apparent there was some cotton wanted from strong sources and a wave of short covering followed, some of which was said to come from Wall Street. Contracts were scarce, especially in October. The buying, it is said, was based on fear of high temperatures in the Southwestern belt and the continued talk of boll-weevil in Texas. Cables from Liverpool stated that the strength there was caused by short covering in fear of high temperatures over the holidays. Some of the larger spot interests were noticeable buyers of new crop. The South was put down as selling, also some of uptown crowd. The market is narrow and is influenced easily either way just now. Agitation in Washington is having a tendency to restrict business and no serious change in prices is looked for pending this legislation.—Anderson.

"If the tax of 50 cents per bale becomes a law the cost of hedging will fall upon the merchant or producer, probably the latter, but as a matter of fact, it is doubted if merchants would be able to hedge at all in any market because the law eliminates the speculator who is theoretically on the opposite side of the hedge.

"A cost of 13 points to trade would kill speculation on American exchanges and kill straddle operations between New York and Liverpool. The English market without straddlers would not be large enough to take care of American hedging, so the only opportunity for a merchant to have a hedge order executed would be when it meets another hedge order the other way.

"Any one familiar with future markets know that these orders would seldom meet, consequently, the law would really kill all opportunity to hedge. Such a situation would drive out all the smaller merchants, leaving the business in the hands of a few rich spot dealers who would have the Southern producer in a merciless grip."—Clevenburg.

Reports of serious boll-weevil damage in Texas, together with timidity on the part of sellers because of the local situation, was responsible for the strength of the market yesterday.

* * *

McFadden and Gwathmey brokers were the leading buyers yesterday, mostly of October, which feels the threat of a depletion in stocks more than any other month. Baruch and Wall Street covered some shorts.

* * *

Sentiment is not unfriendly to the market, traders figuring that with contracts scarce any unfavorable reports will cause a further advance.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas—Panhandle and south clear; central and east cloudy; numerous rains. Oklahoma—North and west clear; balance cloudy; local rains."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Hayward & Clark: "The weather map is very favorable; it shows cloudy over entire belt, except fair in southern half of Texas. Distinctly cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas, with fine rains in Arkansas and parts of Tennessee. Some scattered showers elsewhere. Indications are for cloudy, with scattered showers, and cooler in the central belt.

* * *

Houston, Tex., wires: "First bale received from Lyford, Cameron County, South Texas, and will be sold at auction to-day."

* * *

Cotton summary of The New Orleans Times-Democrat: "The steadiness of yesterday's cotton market was explained in two widely divergent ways. The man who believes that cotton on its merits can take good care of itself said that shorts were experiencing difficulty in obtaining tenderable supplies; that the short interest is still large enough to give trouble, and that the position of the actual bale being a strong one is responsible for reactions upward even when favorable weather would seem to be aiding the bearish cause.

"The man who believes artificial support is responsible for the market's continued show of strength said that talent and trade alike bought new crop deliveries yesterday because the action of the market suggested that July longs were beginning to put the screws to shorts and further strength in July would probably influence new crop deliveries to climb temporarily to higher levels.

"Of course, the weather artists were much in evidence. One faction promised heat waves in the West. Another exploited the comparative records as proof that current temperatures are not excessively high. Still another turned prophet and promised showers and cooler weather in the West."

COTTON SEED OIL.

STOCKS GO UP ON GOOD WAR NEWS

Trade Witnesses a Stampede at Noon — Record Corn Crop Important Factor.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Canadian Pacific, which led the stock market in its downward movement yesterday, turned about today and led an upward trend of prices at the opening. Canadian Pacific opened at 211½ for a gain of ⅝, but soon was selling at 213¾, which was 2⅞ higher than Wednesday's closing.

Union Pacific showed the best strength it has exhibited since the present movement began. Union Pacific climbed to 146 for a net gain of nearly 2 points. United States Steel common advanced 1 point on good buying.

The market was largely influenced by London, Paris and Berlin and a considerable share of the buying at the opening came from the other side. This was inspired by a report from St. Petersburg that the Balkan war probably would be ended this week.

Among other gains were Amalgamated Copper ⅝; Southern Pacific ½; Reading ½; Chino Copper ½; Illinois Central ½; American Car and Foundry ½; St. Paul ⅝ and Erie ⅜.

Wall Street took an optimistic view of the railroad situation the belief prevailing that the trainmen on the eastern lines will not strike, but are maneuvering to force an amendment to the Erdman arbritration law.

The curb was strong.

American in London were strong.

The advance in stocks is due to short covering and a dispatch from St. Petersburg saying that the Balkan war would soon end.

For a time after the opening the market witnessed a stampede and before the advance ceased gains of 1 to nearly 3 points were recorded. Shortly after the first hour, however, recessions appeared, but prices held above yesterday's close. Union Pacific advanced ⅜ to 145⅝. Reading reached 157, a gain of ⅜. Lehigh Valley, Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania were up ½. Coper declined ¼. Other issues remained unchanged to a fractional advance. Great Northern preferred issued a 1¾ dividend.

Call money loaned at 2 percent.

Trading was quiet in the last hour. Prices were practically unchanged from the mid-day level. Canadian Pacific sold around 212¼, for a net advance of nearly 2 points on the day. Amalgamated Copper was fractionally higher. Steel sold at 52⅝ and Union Pacific sold around 145⅛.

The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

Memphis Wins and Loses in Rail Rate Pine Lumber Cases

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Rates on pine lumber over the Illinois Central from Jackson, Miss., to Memphis, Tenn., were held by the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day to be unreasonable in so far as they exceed 10 cents per 100 pounds.

Lumber, staves and barrel headings rates to Memphis from points East of the Mississippi and South of Vicksburg, except over the New Orleans, Mobile and Chicago Railroad, were found to be unreasonable if they exceed 11 cents per 100 pounds for a one-line haul and 12 cents for a two-line haul.

Proposed advances of 3 per cent in rates on lumber over the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad in Mississippi and Louisiana to Memphis, Tenn., were allowed.

STOCK GOSSIPS

With the prospects of a 3,000,000,000-bushel corn crop, it looks as if the railroads would have all they can carry this fall and winter. it looks as if President Wilson would avert the railroad strike. Expect a traders' market for the present, but prefer to buy stocks on breaks rather than sell on rallies.—Potter.

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Moderate profits should appeal to the daily trader for the present. Information channels are pessimistic. Trading movements in the general list, with a somewhat better demand for the leading stocks, may be seen to-day."

* * *

The market responds well to favorable news, due to the large outstanding short interest and the limited supply of stocks. Prospects of a corn crop of record-breaking proportions and the ending of the Balkan war are factors of the utmost importance. Last, but not least, the present level of prices is very low, the returns to the investors are attractive, and the chances for a considerable appreciation in values in a reasonable time are good.—Potter.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Wheat traders were inclined to construe the Government report as bullish when considered in all its details. There were a number of sharp operators, however, who took a bearish view of it, and talked lower prices. It is the general belief that the final returns on all wheat will show around the same as last year, which, with the carry-over, should make a larger supply than last year.

"Corn specialists took the Government report as bullish although to accredit is two-tenths of 1 per cent under last year. This was offset by the condition being the highest since 1900. The crowd were regarded as short and the commission house holdings nave been reduced of late.

"Oats traders were surprised at the showing of the crop report, it being larger than expected. Most operators took a bearish view of it, and said that with the crop within less than three weeks of harvest they look for a yield of 1,000,000,000 bushels."

* * *

General liquidation is on in oats and this, together with pressure of new oats from the country, will, in my opinion, carry the market several cents lower.—Roycroft.

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: Wheat—The country continues to market the new crop of winter wheat very freely. As long as Europe continues to buy liberally the effect of hedging operations is materially lessened. We believe there is a large outstanding short interest, and are inclined to look for a fair rally.

Corn—This morning's map was generally clear with some high temperatures again in the Southwest. The figures given in yesterday's Government report indicate a crop larger than the trade generally was looking for, but there has been considerable scattered liquidation and short selling during the past few days. We are inclined to think the report will not prove a depressing influence.

Oats—The Government report was about as expected and therefore will not prove an influence. New buying power is extremely limited, but there has been a great deal of liquidation, and while prices may gradually work lower, we do not look for any sharp break at the moment.

Wheat—No. 2 red	86½@87
Oats—No. 2	40 @41

CHICAGO, July 10:—The strength shown by the wheat market at Chicago this morning when prices advanced ⅜ to ¾c was a reflection of the higher prices at Liverpool, coupled with the bullish construction placed on the Government report of yesterday. The best prices were shaded ⅛ to ¼c soon after they were made by "hedging" sales. Argentina shipments for the week are estimated at only 400,000 bushels, compared with 1,552,000 bushels for the corresponding period last year. Northwestern receipts, while a few cars larger than for the same day in 1912, were small.

Corn was a shade better in sympathy with wheat, as the weather is favorable.

Oats were ½c lower for September and a fraction lower for July.

Provisions were lower.

Cattle trade was easier than yesterday, although prices were quotably steady. Arrival of nearly 11,000 Southern lambs direct to packers gave trade in the sheep house a 15 to 25c lower appearance.

Deserted, She Asks Work, Not Charity

Mrs. Emory Batta, who appealed to Matron Mary Bohnefeld for assistance in finding employment after being deserted by her husband, denies the published report that she is penniless and tramped the streets 48 hours without anything to eat.

Though her husband is said to have taken $500 of their savings Mrs. Batta declared Wednesday that she simply appealed to Matron Bohnefeld to help her get work, not for charity.

Poultry Business Is Indebted to Fanciers Fifty Years Ago

Fancier Has Done the Slow and Plodding Work Which Has Taken Years to Accomplish.

How often we hear people say, "Oh, I do not want anything to do with the fancy part of the chicken business; I am out for utility and I just do not want to have anything to do with the fancy part of the business." Some persons seem to have about the same aversion to the fancy that the small boy does to having his hands and face washed.

They seem to think that that sounds mighty practical and will help to keep them from getting mixed up with the fellows who are always talking about shows and prizes and all such things. Oh, yes, they want good stock, but nothing fancy. The fancier can get along without the utility man just about as well, if not better, than the utility man can get along without the fancier. In reality, they need each other. Where would the utility man be to-day if the fancier had not gotten in his great work for the poultry industry. Just think of it, the fancier has given the country all the pure breeds of poultry from which the utility people have taken their foundation stock that has made them what they are to-day. He brought the Brahmas, Cochins, Langshans and Leghorns from other countries. He really manufactured the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Reds frome other breeds and gave them to us in a shape that has made them of the greatest value to the farmer and market poultryman. Where is there a utility man or farmer who would be willing to blot out all these breeds and go back to where we were 50 years ago? He has given us such a variety that the most exacting along any line of utility work can be supplied with about what his needs require. There is the Brahma or Cochin if a strictly meat breed is desired; or the Leghorn, Minorca or Spanish, strictly for eggs. For the farmer who would like a combination, they have furnished him with the Wyandotte, Plymouth Rock and Red.

So you see it is a question of simply paying your money and taking your choice. The fancier has done the slow and plodding work which has taken years to accomplish, giving it to the utility man all ready to work with.

Of course, the farmer may let the barrs on the Rock get a little irregular, or the comb on the Leghorn become a little top-heavy, the Reds a little mealy in color, yet, in spite of all these little irregularities they maintain their valuable qualities and serve the utility part to a marked degree. The fancier invented the trapnest that egg-production might be increased from an average of 75 eggs annually to 150 or better for the laying breeds; or, for the general-purpose breeds for that matter. He has led the van in giving better houses for the hens that they might produce eggs in winter as well as in summer. The fancier has furnished the country with the best appliances for the economical handling of poultry in great numbers. Take, for example, the incubator; it has been really the solving of the commercial poultry problem of this country. Just think of the hundreds of thousands of chickens and ducks that are annually turned out of these machines to fill the great markets of our cities and towns. Machines holding as high as 60,000 eggs at a filling. Just think of it, 4,000 hens to do the work of that one machine, which is looked after by the attention of one man not over an hour each day. The poultry fancier has made possible the diffusing of the best in poultry literature to one and all. The great poultry and farm journals which the country supports were made possible by him, and, in fact, are largely supported by the fancier. The utility man takes advantage of all these helps; in fact, looks to them largely for his guidance.

Then we must not lose sight of the beauty part of it. For there is no one, we believe, so completely engrossed in the making of money that he does not enjoy the beautiful in nature. Most of us make our money for the purpose of spending it in the pursuit of pleasure and happiness.

Why not double this pleasure by having the pleasure right along with the making of the money. Flocks of pure-bred poultry of any variety should be a pleasure for any one to handle; on the other hand, a lot of mongrels could hardly be an incentive to any one, much less a pleasure.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Seeking to Locate $100,000 Concern

Manufacturers Search for Plant. East Alabama St. Sale Reported. Permits for 14 Bungalows.

Real estate agents began looking Thursday for a site with railroad frontage on which to locate the Sox Duplex Cinder Deflector Company, a concern organized recently with $100,000 capital and Henry Schaul as president.

This manufacturing company will make a patented device for keeping cinders out of Pullman and day cars, with Atlanta as headquarters, and an expensive plant will be installed. David Sox is the inventor, and it is said that his device has been adopted by a number of railroads.

While the exact amount to be expended on site and plant has not yet been determined, it is estimated that $100,000 will be necessary.

Alabama Street Sale Reported.

Report in real estate circles Thursday had it that Luther Z. Rosser and J. H. Porter had bought the East Alabama Street property of Colonel Robert J. Lowry at $35,000, or about $1,000 a front foot.

This property is 57 East Alabama Street and has a frontage of 35 to 40 feet. It is improved with a three-story brick building.

Messrs. Rosser and Porter have been associated in a number of interesting deals, notably the purchase of 301 Peachtree Street and the property on North Pryor Street of the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company.

A petition has been in circulation for the repaving of East Alabama Street, and property values are expected to take a rise with the improvements. J. Livingston Wright has a parcel east of 57 which he holds for $1,200 a foot.

Williams Street Subdivision.

Twenty-four residence lots will be put on the market August 1 by the A. J. & H. F. West Real Estate Agency. These are in the Atwood tract of six acres on Williams Street, between Tenth and Fourteenth Streets. The land is now being platted.

Small Sales Made.

W. A. Cook, of Senoia, has sold to J. M. Lankford, through J. F. Culpepper, of the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency, 44 Plum Street, for $2,200. The above agency has sold a farm tract on Mt. Perian Road, near Pace's Ferry Road, for $875; two lots in Clairemont Park, Decatur, for $2,200, and three lots in the Peachtree Highlands subdivision for $3,700.

R. W. Milner, formerly a traveling salesman, and J. W. Reeves, formerly a building contractor, have been added to the sales force of this agency.

Whitehall Street Transfer.

George A. Boynton has transferred to Martha A. Boynton a 46 by 110 footp arcel on Whitehall Street and to Haygood Boynton a 98 by 100 foot property on the north side of Woodward Avenue, 100 feet east of Crew Street. The Whitehall lot is 159 feet northeasterly of Garnett Street.

Wide Range of Sales.

Realty men say they have seldom seen more interesting bonds for title and warranty deeds going to record. Among the papers are the following conveyances:

W. B. B. Richards, administrator of the estate of the late William C. Richards, to R. W. Davis, lot on the south side of West Fourteenth Street, 284 by 150, for $4,269.

The L. S. Huntley Company to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Peachtree Road, 368 feet northeast of the junction of the Peachtree and Roswell Roads, 48 by 140, $1,575, and to same, the adjoining lot to the southwest, same size, for the same price.

R. I. Barge to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Ormond Street, 160 feet west of Grant Street, 50 by 141, $2,500.

Charles A. Davis to M. I. Hute and Mrs. Luella Skinner, lot on the west side of Peachtree Road, 1,040 feet northeast of Piedmont Road, 100 by 685, $4,500. Transferred to C. M. Love et al.

Mrs. Eugenie Balch to Mrs. Mamie Cohen, 265 Crew Street, 50 by 200, $3,650.

Lois and Nellie Hollingsworth to M. Friedman, lot at the northwest corner of Highland Avenue and Fortune Street, 90 by 120, $4,300.

James E. Brown Company to National Stock Yards Commission Company, lot on the east side of Marietta Street, 67 feet south of Lee Avenue, 74 by 222, $12,607, and to same, southeast corner of Lee and Marietta, 67 by 149, $5,200.

The total of these transactions is $35,176. A few are trades made some time ago, with papers just going to record, but most of them are of recent date.

Successful Auction Sale.

John S. Owens and Gid Hanna are to-day $2,500 better off than they were this time Wednesday, having made this amount on an auction sale at the corner of Park Avenue and Bryan Street, Grant Park section. Less than a year ago they bought a tract for $4,900 and the total in the auction was $7,295. The buy was made from Mrs. Lizzie Hollingsworth through William A. Vernoy, the latter of whom had charge Wednesday. J. W. Ferguson & Son were the auctioneers.

Mr. Hanna and Mr. Owens attributed the success of the sale to effective advertising, the value of the property and plenty of good lemonade.

Lots 1 and 2 were bought by H. A. White for $775 each; lot 3, by J. T. Wallace, for $875; lot 4, by John A. Fritz, for $1,390; lot 5, by Frank Whitley, for $830, and the house and lot, by George B. Beauchamp, for $2,650. Mr. Whitley refused a good profit on his lot immediately after his purchase.

"We could have sold 50 lots if we had had them," declared Mr. Vernoy after the sale.

Renting Meet Postponed.

Renting agents called together in the office of Charles P. Glover will meet Friday afternoon at 3:30, two previous meetings having been postponed. The "single listing system" of houses will be discussed.

New Pharmacy College.

The Courtland Street section between Harris and Cain Streets is soon to have a new college of pharmacy, when Dr. George F. Payne, the proprietor, completes plans for remodeling two double frame houses which he has just bought. Dr. Payne acquired this property from W. I. Webb through G. M. McKinnon, paying $20,000, or nearly $260 a front foot. The lot is on the east side of the street and the dimensions are 77 by 275 feet.

Ponce DeLeon Activity.

Seldom during the year, say the realty agents, is there any trouble disposing of residences on Ponce DeLeon Avenue. This is true alike of the closer-in homes, not far from Peachtree, and the homes near or in Druid Hills. Claude E. Sims, for instance, is doing his share of selling. He reports the sale for Dr. John B. Daniel to J. H. Leversredge, of Montgomery, Ala., of 666 Ponce DeLeon, 50 by 180, for $13,000, and of 532 Ponce DeLeon, only two blocks to the west, to Dr. William Asher for R. C. Taylor, for $10,000. The latter is 55 by 232.

Druid Hills Sale.

Although few homes are offered for sale in Druid Hills, buyers can always be found. O. D. Gorman, Jr., a successful trader with Smith & Ewing, has just picked up a profit in the sale of 510 Briarcliff Road to Mrs. J. J. Morris, for $12,500. This lot is 50 by 150 feet and contains a two-story nine-room brick veneer house. The transaction was handled through the Martin-Ozburn Realty Company.

Exchange of Properties.

H. M. Carlton has traded with a client of R. W. Evans, of the Cheatham Brothers' agency, for 219 East North Avenue, 45 by 150, for $4,900, giving in part payment a vacant lot on Ashby Street, 50 by 300 feet, valued at $1,000.

Auburn Avenue at $58.

Chauncey Smith has bought from a client of John D. Babbage a lot on the south side of Auburn Avenue, between Yonge and Jackson Streets, for $1,500, or at the rate of not quite $58 a front foot. The lot is 26 by 149 1-2.

Who Is Responsible for Such Creatures as David Lamar?

Who but the Big Men, Who Are Willing to Learn from "Vermin" How They, the Rich Men, May Buy the People's Representatives and Thwart the People's Will?

(Copyright, 1913.)

You read the story of David Lamar, known as "the Wolf of Wall Street," whose meteoric career in Atlanta in 1892 is still remembered by many persons here.

He told the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee at Washington the other day that he had called up big men with plenty of money, pretended that he was Congressman This or Congressman That, and offered to stop legislation that the people demanded.

It would seem that this man's life has been one of perpetual scheming. While in Atlanta his business dealings were of such character that he was arrested, indicted and forced to seek other fields.

Of recent years it appears, this individual, Lamar, has been busy telling big men in New York how he could prevent interference with this trust, or that railroad combination, or some other piece of financial dishonesty.

He used different names, and probably used different voices talking on the telephone. He made fools of some of the big men, and they now FEEL FOOLISH as the story comes out.

It is rather a disgusting story, of meanness, lying and attempted cheating, with possible blackmail attached. Some of the most unpleasant words in the dictionary describe Mr. Lamar very accurately.

But words just as disagreeable would describe as accurately the men of money and power who listened to Lamar, and listen to others like him.

If the big men whom this country and its citizens have made rich were not willing to bribe legislators, not willing to defeat the people's will by underhand methods, NOT WILLING TO USE THEIR DISHONESTLY GOT MONEY TO BUY DISHONEST LEGISLATION, there would not be such men as David Lamar urging the buying of disreputable public officials especially adapted to the doing of very dirty political work.

Lamar and the vermin like him are not very important.

The important man is the man of money, power and position, the man who has no excuse for being a bribe-giver, a cheater of the people, the man who listens at the telephone eagerly while "the vermin," representing themselves as dishonest Congressmen, offer for a consideration to cheat the public and rob the public and help dishonesty and buy legislation.

The big men who do not deny that they trusted Lamar, that they talked to him on the telephone and heard what he had to say, have not made a full explanation of their conduct, or a satisfactory explanation.

The ordinary citizen would not listen to a man who called on the telephone to tell him how he might rob his neighbor's house.

Why does the big man of Wall Street listen patiently and attentively while "the vermin" tell him how he can rob the people of their legislation, cheat the people of their will and add by continued bribery to the fortune already acquired?

A Great Victory for Southern Women

The Georgia House of Representatives is to be congratulated in that it had the common sense and decency to extend the use of its hall to the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association, now in session in the Capital of the State, even though it was necessary in doing so sharply to rebuke rank stupidity and lack of judgment in the Senate.

The cause of woman suffrage in Georgia is in its infancy, perhaps, but already it is sponsored by a number of the most intelligent and progressive women of the State.

Unquestionably, the cause will wax stronger and stronger, as time runs on, and neither narrowness nor bigotry—even in a Georgia Senate—will serve to stop it!

The original purpose of these Georgia women evidently was not to force the issue of woman suffrage upon the Georgia Legislature at this time. They merely were seeking a suitable place to hold two night sessions. They turned to the State Capitol, AS THEY HAD A RIGHT TO DO, in seeking that place.

The Senate, however, with that shortsightedness characteristic of stupidity, declined to extend the courtesy asked of it—and thereby it made the cause of woman suffrage an ISSUE before the people of Georgia—the people WHO MAKE and UNMAKE LEGISLATURES, AS THEY PLEASE!

In these circumstances, the vote of the House extending the use of its Hall to the suffragists can not be viewed otherwise than as a distinct VICTORY for the Woman Suffrage Association of Georgia.

It was, in a way, the very first and pioneer victory for the cause in the South—made emphatic and extraordinarily noticeable by the foolish and silly action of the Senate.

The Georgian now ventures this prediction: Before the membership of the present Legislature is entirely dust, woman suffrage will be an established POLICY AND PRINCIPLE of every State in this Union!

Those men in Georgia, farsighted and fair-minded enough to see it NOW, then will have cause to rejoice.

Those who now thrust themselves in front of a movement destined to be as irresistible as the flow of the tide, will be overwhelmed.

The cause of woman suffrage has been strengthened rather than weakened in Georgia by the unwise, unpatriotic and unworthy action of the State Senate.

That the House promptly and emphatically repudiated that Senate action, speaks well for ITS sense of justice and right.

Man and Wife Should Decide Own Differences

No Person Capable to Give Counsel to Couple Regarding Difficulties

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.
(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

No human being is capable of giving safe and sane counsel to a married man or a married woman respecting domestic differences. It is a matter which should be decided between the two.

When any third person intervenes, a judge of the court is the proper party.

Intimate Friends.

The most intimate friends of a family are not capable of saying where the fault lies in the majority of cases.

Even when a wife seems to be indifferent to her family and to her husband, and even when a husband seems to be unappreciative of his home, there may be causes for either offense undreamed of by those who believe themselves to be close friends.

There are men who seem to the world at large the most perfect specimens of domestic nobility, honor and probity, yet who are impossible as companions and life comrades for women of refinement and sensitive feeling, and there are women who pass in the world's eyes as angels of goodness who are possessed of unpleasant traits enough to drive any normal man to drink or insanity if he is compelled to live with them.

Wife Begged for Divorce.

The real character, the real disposition of any human being, is never known or understood until we have spent a year at least in steady association under the same roof.

The following letter reveals nothing of the writer's character. It reveals nothing of the wife's nature.

Therefore it is impossible to give any opinion of value regarding the case. Even were it possible, the writer of this does not wish to advise or counsel individuals save in the general way of character building which is the real work of the race.

The correspondent says:

"I am a married man with two children and earning a good salary, but separated for some years, owing to not being able to get along in harmony. Recently my wife called upon me and implored that I commit infidelity in order that she may secure a divorce from me, as she has an opportunity to marry. I agreed to do so if she would compromise by giving me one of the children, but she absolutely refuses, offering as an excuse that she is too deeply attached to them. I maintain if she loves this other man she would sacrifice one of the children or both of them to me, as I have a good home and nice surroundings, although I do not say she has not the same advantages, still I feel I could rear them up better under my influence and meet the future better than under this other man.

Willing to Sacrifice All.

"My wife is 25 years old, and, as this is comparatively young, I do not want to destroy her happiness. If I am in the wrong I would willingly sacrifice my side of the issue and grant her the divorce, but before I do I would like to hear your opinion."

All that can be said in reply is this: That children should be placed under the care of people who are the best fitted by character and moral worth and good behavior to bring them up.

Blood ties have nothing to do with the matter.

Paternal or maternal love, as that word is generally used, has little to do with the moral aspect of the case.

Women who gossip, who are disorderly, who are weak-willed, and who allow their children to see all these traits daily have no right to bring up their own children, no matter how they love them.

Small Part of Parenthood.

Fathers who are living immoral lives, who are associating with rough or coarse-minded people, or who use coarse language and who have never been taught self-control have no right to associate with their children, because they are making an impress on the wax-like nature of a child—an impress which will harden with time and become a blighting memory and probably a bad habit.

The time will come under the new science of eugenics which is being introduced when a censor will be appointed to study the domestic conditions in every family, and there will be laws which will protect children from the influence of the weak, the disagreeable and the incompetent homekeepers, as well as from the brutal and immoral.

Bringing children into the world is a small part of parenthood. To the writer of the letter quoted above no counsel can be given. It can only be said that the man of the best moral character, the best disposition and the best habits has the right to influence the lives of these children.

How to Keep Cool

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

My doctor said to me, said he: "In weather like this here
You must eschew the luscious stew,
The lush saute, the rich ragout,
And pie and cake and pudding, too,
And whisky, wine and beer,
In point of fact, you must not eat
Eggs, oysters, vegetables or meat.

"Dark clothing magnifies the heat, light clothes attract the light.
Beware of red—it heats the head;
Blue hues a poisonous radiance shed.
By sunset you'll be surely dead
Unless your clothes are right.
Don't let this warning be forgotten—
Beware of linen, wool and cotton.

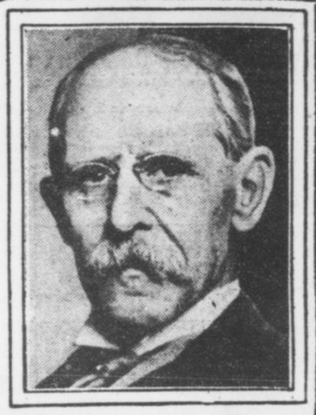
"Don't lash your blood to frothy foam by any exercise,
But don't sit still or you'll distill
A subtle toxin which will fill
Your veins with fermentation till
Your temperature will rise.
Don't breathe—it makes the pulses leap.
Don't stir about, nor rest, nor sleep."

* * * * * * * * * * *

By packing me in ice and salt they brought me 'round at last.
"Why he's not dead," the interne said,
"Is what I can't get through me head.
For when they chucked him on that bed
He sure was going fast."

Now here's a tip for which I paid a very painful price:
DON'T EVER OVERHEAT YOURSELF BY FOLLOWING ADVICE!

Education Is the Cure for Feeble-mindedness in the Child; but It Must Be Begun in Time.



What Sight More Pitiful Than a Child Who Goes Into the Battle of Life with Its Mind—Its Only Hope—Disabled?

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

The great study of modern times is that of the peculiarities, the workings and the weaknesses of the human mind. This involves the entire future of the race of man.

I have been learning something about a new science, or what aspires to be a science, which has this for its object and which is called by its disciples "clinical psychology" (clinical from a Greek word for bed, implying that the subject of attention is a person who is ill, and psychology "science of the mind"), the whole phrase meaning practical study of mental illness.

No Sight Is So Pitiful.

This is something of supreme interest to parents, because those who are particularly, if not exclusively, the subpects of investigation by clinical psychologists are children.

There is no sight in this world more pitiable than that of a feeble-minded child. It is his MIND that has placed man in the proud position which he occupies at the head of the Kingdom of Life on our planet; it is by virtue of his mental powers alone that he has achieved all his triumphs; they only have brought him up from his original brotherhood with the ape; in the further development of his mind lies the only hope that he can have of still greater progress in the future; each individual, as he faces the struggle of life, must depend upon the strength of his mentality, and that the more in proportion as the struggle increases in intensity. What, then, can excite a compassion equal to that aroused by the spectacle of a human child which, as the result of causes that might be avoided, enters the battle of life lamed, crippled, disabled, palsied, impuissant, in that which constitutes its only hope, its only real strength—its mind?

Makes Instant Appeal.

The reason the new science that I have mentioned makes an instant appeal to any person having the good of his kind at heart is that it comes with the assurance that the terrible evil of feeble-mindedness may be eliminated. If it did not promise that, if it presented itself merely as another form of curious investigations having little or no practical application, it would attract only the inquisitive, seeking for novel subjects of thought. But when it says to unhappy parents, "Right education is capable of developing the dormant mental energies of your child; only begin in time, and know what you are about," then its call must be listened to everywhere.

It is this supreme word "education" which I find on every page of what I have been reading of the work and the aims of the clinical psychologists. The body can be educated out of many of its illnesses, and so can the mind. It is not worth while to stop over any discussion of the question whether, as some put it, "the mind has a body," or, as others would say, "the body has a mind." We all know what is meant when a person is said to be "feeble-minded," and the one thing of pressing, immediate importance is the question whether, either by medical or hygienic treatment, or by mental or psychological methods, or by both working together, the evil can be remedied.

Mental Hygiene.

I read this extremely interesting statement from Professor J. E. W. Wallin:

"Irrespective of whether the cause is chiefly physical or mental, it is being recognized by a number of the leading present-day psychiatrists" (those who study mental diseases) "that drug treatment for the majority of the insane, whether juvenile or adult, is secondary to the educational treatment. Instead of merely prescribing physical hygiene for the insane, leading alienists are now prescribing mental hygiene. The cure is being conceived in terms of a process of re-education. Moreover, so far as concerns the mentally unstable child in the schools, the chief reliance is obviously on hygienic and educational guidance."

Key to the Mind.

There you see in almost every line the magic word "education." We can all understand that. We must accept this term in a virtually new sense.

We must cease to regard it as simply signifying a process by which a certain, very limited, amount of knowledge is instilled or forced into the mind of a child, and we must come to consider it as the key to the mind itself, and the means, when wisely used, of opening and developing the mental powers, even when they seem to be absent or defective.

Education is not a sausage-stuffer; it is a ladder by which man mounts toward the summit of his destiny. And when the feeble are helped upon its rungs, they are stimulated and inspired with new strength at every step upward.

FAIR WOMAN

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

A WOMAN is easy to understand;
This is the secret, second hand:

When you pat her on the cheek
With your envelope each week,
Saying "Here's the money, dear,"
As you pinch her shell-like ear;
When she show'rs you with caresses,
Planning on new hats and dresses,
When she calls you her Greek god,
Though you know you have a pod,
She's happy.

When she meets you at the door
In the morn at three or four,
Trying with small fists to hit you,
Threatening to pack and quit you;
When she throws a dish or two
Clear across the room at you,
When she swings—and not in vain—
With your heavy walking cane,
She's out of sorts.

That is the secret, second hand,
A woman is easy to understand.

NEGRO MADE BOAST OF KILLING A GIRL, AGENT DECLARES

That Jim Conley, negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, made a virtual confession to him that he attacked and killed Mary Phagan is the startling allegation made in an affidavit by William H. Mincey, until recently a solicitor for the American Insurance Company, of 115½ North Pryor Street.

It became known Thursday that this affidavit, which is in the hands of the defense, will be the principal reliance, aside from the alibis which have been established for Frank, in bringing an acquittal of the accused man and obtaining a conviction against the negro.

No other evidence, in all of the more than two months' investigation of the mystery, has been so damning and so direct. The defense has practically only to establish the creditability of Mincey to assure itself of victory.

Said He Had Killed Girl.

This sensational information is the first hint that the public has had that the negro was alleged to have made a confession of the crime. Up to this time the detectives have said that Conley has denied all connection with the killing itself.

"I've killed a girl to-day; I don't want to kill nobody else," are the words that Mincey swore Conley spoke to him the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered in the pencil factory.

Mincey at the time of which his affidavit relates was selling life insurance in the negro districts. He knew Conley and had been after him several times to take out life insurance, according to the story he told in the office of Attorney Rosser.

On the afternoon of the murder of Mary Phagan he met Conley near Electric and Carter Streets. Conley was sitting down with his head in his hands, apparently intoxicated.

"How about that insurance?" Mincey says he asked Conley.

"Get away from here. I don't want no insurance," Conley is said to have replied.

Mincey says in his affidavit that he urged Conley further and that the negro appeared to be angry.

"I tell you I don't want no insurance; I'm in trouble. I don't want you to bother me," Mincey swears Conley retorted.

Negro Was Enraged.

Mincey asserts that he stayed to argue with Conley and that the negro finally said:

"You go away. I'll be in jail in a few days and I won't want any insurance.'

His satrtling confession of murder is alleged to have come when he became enraged at Mincey's continued importunities.

The negro jumped to his feet and advanced toward Mincey menacingly, according to the affidavit.

"I've killed a girl to-day; I don't want to kill nobody else!" Mincey declared Conley shouted at him.

Mincey thought little of the remark at the time, regarding Conley's remarks as mere braggadocio or an exaggeration of some negro fight in which he had been involved. When he read of the Phagan murder he recalled the remarks of Conley.

On the Tuesday following the strangling of the little girl he went to the factory. He talked to E. F. Holloway, the day watchman, and asked him how many negroes were employed there. Holloway replied that there were seven or eight.

"You should have every one of them arrested at once," Mincey told

JILTED, HE SEEKS HELP FROM CHIEF

Californian Writes Beavers to Recover Love Letters and Photo He Sent Hairdresser.

From far-off California Thursday came the wail of a sad heart shattered by a fair Atlanta enchantress.

Chief Beavers received a letter in which W. N. Stetzer, a resident of Long Beach, complained at length and with many deep sighs plainly between the lines that Miss Bessie Williman, whose letterheads showed her to be the proprietor of a hairdressing establishment and barber shop on Peachtree Street, had beguiled him with the beauty of her photographs and then had suddenly dropped him without a word of explanation.

He had become acquainted with her, he said, through an advertisement for a husband she inserted in a Long Beach paper. He replied and sent his photographs. She answered and sent hers.

He wrote again. Then came the hiatus in their correspondence. He heard nothing more from her.

"You will think it unreasonable for me to write to you," he said in his letter to Chief Beavers, "but I now have reason to doubt her sincerity. She has letters and photographs of mine. They are my property and I feel that I must call upon you to recover them for me."

Thus was the romance ended.

Miss Williman is now not Miss Williman at all, for while her Western admirer was pining for her letters she took unto herself a perfectly good Atlanta husband.

She laughingly admitted at her shop at 56 Peachtree Street Thursday afternoon that the letter to Chief Beavers were true, but she explained that it all had been done in a joke. A friend of hers, she said, had inserted the advertisement in the Long Beach paper and scores of replies had come.

Hoke Smith Wins Fight for Mrs. Ham; Nomination O. K.'d

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The Senate to-day confirmed the appointment of Mrs. H. W. J. Ham as postmistress at Gainesville, Ga. Mrs. Ham succeeds Mrs. Helen D. Longstreet, who was postmistress at Gainesville several years.

The appointment of Mrs. Ham is a victory for Senator Hoke Smith. He has been opposing the appointment of A. S. Hardy, who was Congressman Bell's suggestion for the place.

Senator Smith was opposed to Hardy because Hardy had taken an active stand against Smith and President Wilson in politics.

Slaton Declines to Reprieve Dewberry; Negro Hangs Friday

Governor Slaton expressed concurrence Thursday afternoon in the findings of the Prison Commission which refused to recommend a commutation for the negro, Oscar Dewberry, sentenced to hang Friday in the Fulton County Tower. As a result the last hope of the doomed man's attorneys has been swept away.

Dewberry was convicted of the murder of Horace Dodson, a white boy, on Decatur Street in May, 1912. To the last he has protested innocence. His lawyers say he will go to the gallows with a denial of guilt on his lips.

They made their final plea to the Governor Thursday afternoon. A special appointment was made by Attorney Lowndes Calhoun, chief of counsel representing the negro. The negro said he had reviewed the evidence presented to the commission and was forced to concur.

It was the first capital case in which Governor Slaton has had to act.

ERRORS COST LOCALS GAME

Price Pitches Fair Ball, But His Support Is Wretched in the Pinches.

PONCE DE LEON PARK, July 10.—Costly errors cost the Crackers the opening game of the series with the Gulls here this afternoon, Mickey Finn's team carrying off the honors by a 6 to 2 score. Price pitched a fair game and would have probably gotten away with a victory had not his team-mates been very much butter-fingered.

THE GAME.

FIRST INNING.

Stock was thrown out by Smith. McGill was safe at the opening peg when Agler played ping-pong with the grasser. D. Robertson died on an easy roller to Agler, McGill moving up to the midway. Price's hand was all butter for O'Dell's grounder and on the error the former Cracker landed safely at the opening cushion, while McGill trotted over to third. O'Dell pilfered bag No. 2, and when Chapman made a horrid heave McGill cashed and O'Dell hustled to the difficult cushion. Schmidt grounded to Alperman who booted the pill and O'Dell dented the dish with a tally. Paulet kindly fouled to Chapman. NO HITS, TWO RUNS.

Long ballooned to O'Dell. Welchonce leaned against the pill for a double to right. Alperman peppered a one-timer to right and Welchonce pulled up at third. Bailey lifted to Clark and on the sacrifice Welchonce scored. Clark made a wild chuck home to head off Welchonce and Alperman ambled all the way to third. Smith did the Casey in the pinch. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

SECOND INNING.

Clark jammed a single over Smith's head. Campbell's best was a hoist that Bisland was under. Cavet sent a roller to Price, who relayed to Bisland, forcing Clark at second. Stock raised a dinky pop to Smith. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

Bisland died on a grounder over the O'Dell-Robertson route. Agler gladdened the hearts with a single to right. Cavet and Robertson did all that was necessary with Chapman's puny roll, but Agler hustled to second on the out. Price dropped a pretty bunt down the third base line and beat it out for a hit, Agler going to third. Long drew transportation, and the cushions were intoxicated. Welchonce grounded to Cavet and Long was forced at the midway. Stock getting the putout. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

THIRD INNING.

McGill had a good eye and waited out four bad ones. Long pulled down Robertson's good-looking welt. O'Dell took the easy road to first on four bum chucks and McGill moved up one notch. Schmidt sent a sky-scraper into Bailey's waiting digets. Paulet forced O'Dell at second, Bisland to Alperman. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Alperman was the candy kiddo with a screaming three-cushion soak to far away centerfield. Bailey did the usual: sent up a dinky pop that McGill smothered. Smith was on the job with a one-timer to right that brought Alperman home with the tying count. Campbell made easy work of Bisland's soarer. On a pessed ball Smith went to third. Agler flied to Campbell. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

FOURTH INNING.

Bisland and Agler took care of Clark. Campbell fanned. Cavet raised a foul to Chapman. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Chapman died an easy death, Stock to Robertson. Price fouled to Schmidt. Long was an easy out for O'Dell and Robertson. Atlanta was retired on four pitched balls. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

FIFTH INNING.

Stock out, Bisland to Agler. McGill died over the same route. Robertson was sent back to the bench on a grasser that Price handled to Agler. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Welchonce bit to O'Dell and was safe when Robertson let the pill get away from him. Alperman grounded to Paulet who tossed to Stock, forcing Welchonce. Bailey lined to Stock and Alperman was doubled off first, Robertson getting the second put out. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

SIXTH INNING.

O'Dell lifted to Chapman in front of the pan. Bisland scooped up Schmidt's offering and Agler finished the job. Paulet hoisted to Welchonce. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

Smith died on a lightening fast play, Stock to Robertson. Bisland fouled to Schmidt. Agler peppered a one-timer to left. Agler wasn't fast enough to beat Schmidt's peg to Stock on a well-planned pilfer trip. ONE HIT, NO RUNS.

SEVENTH INNING.

Clark slammed a single to left. Campbell dropped a beauty sacrifice in front of the plate and died, Chapman to Agler. Time was called here on account of rain, but after a five-minute wait the battle proceeded. Cavet singled to felt and Clark tallied. Bailey let the ball get through him and Cavet, too, scored. Stock beat out a puzzling grounder to Smith for a hit. On a wild pitch Stock took second. McGill kindly popped to Alperman. Robertson lined to Agler. TWO HITS, TWO RUNS.

Chapman drove a liner to McGill. Price whiffed. Long singled past Paulet. Welchonce smashed a single to center and Long went to third. On an attempt to double steal Long was killed off at the plate, Schmidt to Stock to Schmidt. The entire Atlanta team kicked over the decision. TWO HITS, NO RUNS.

EIGHTH INNING.

O'Dell doubled down the third base line. Schmidt bunted one down the third base line and when Wally Smith threw the ball over Agler's head O'Dell dented the dish and Schmidt went all the way to second. Paulet sacrificed, Price to Agler. Clark grounded to Smith and was out to Agler. Campbell popped to Bisland. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

Alperman flied to Campbell. Bailey was easy money for Stock and Robertson. Smith popped to Stock. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

NINTH INNING.

Cavet drove a liner to the score board for three sacks. Stock raised to Long, who held Cavet at third. McGill singled to center and Cavet scored. Robertson grounded to Agler and McGill was forced at second to Bisland. Agler played a lone hand with O'Dell's daisy cutter. TWO HITS, ONE RUN.

Bisland out, Cavet to Robertson. Agler fanned. Chapman flied to Clark. NO HITS, NO RUNS.

MEN NAMED BY GIRL ARE SOUGHT

Chief Beavers Declares New and Startling Arrests Are Near. Alleged Procuress Held

With the principals in the sensational vice case, Hattie Smith, a 17-year-old girl victim; Mrs. Lena Barnhart, a flashily-dressed woman, alleged white slave procuress; Lige Murray, negro ally, and Clyde Cox, the youth who was arrested in the hotel raid, all bound over to the higher courts, the police Thursday turned the full flare of a searching investigation directly on the hotels and alleged immoral resorts, with the result that new arrests and startling developments were expected during the day.

Chief Beavers Thursday morning declared that his crusade would include the men principals in the vice system as well as the women.

A number of names were given him by Hattie Smith. He will use these as a start along this line of his investigation, and sensational results are expected.

Girl Tells Story in Court.

The remarkable case came to a close Wednesday afternoon when the Smith girl told in court her story. She did not mince nor choose words. Looking at Recorder Broyles squarely, she told of her ruin.

It was in a soda fountain on Cone Street, near James, that she first saw the Barnhart woman, she said. Often she stopped in the soda fountain and usually the woman was there, talking with men or preparing to go riding with them in an automobile, she said.

"One day about two weeks ago I asked who she was. She seemed so popular, was dressed so nicely and had so many friends that I just wanted to know who she was. On the same day one of the men asked me to go for an automobile ride with him. I said I would. When we went to the automobile the Barnhart woman was on the front seat. We went for a ride along the Paces Ferry Road.

"When we returned to Atlanta the woman asked me to go with her to the Carnegie Library. Then she suggested my going with her to the Cumberland Hotel, where she said she would give me an apartment and I could live like a lady.

Given New Name.

"The life she painted attracted me. I said I would go with her. She suggested that she go to the hotel first and arrange for me a room. I followed and found that room 43 had been assigned Lucile Evans, my new name.

"Later I went out on the streets and was picked up by an automobile party that carried me to my home on Marietta Street. Thursday night I went back to the woman at the Cumberland Hotel and made an engagement with Clyde Cox, who was arrested with me Sunday night.

"The following night, Friday night, I met a man named Brower, who said he was from Washington. I went with him to the Brittain Hotel. He registered as Mr. and Mrs. Brower. The next morning I received a telephone call from Mrs. Barnhart to meet her at the Empire Life Building. I rode over in a taxicab, so as to be there on time. We went from there to the Cumberland. Mrs. Barnhart offered to pay for my room at the Cumberland until I could get something to do."

Judge Broyles severely scored Mrs. Barnhart. He ordered the officers to take her child away and have it provided for in the Home for the Friendless. Her bond was fixed at $500. The other bonds were $100.

SWEARS CONLEY BOASTED OF SLAYING

W. H. Mincey, Insurance Agent, Makes Startling Affidavit for Frank Defense.

him. And then he told of his meeting with Conley. Holloway replied that Conley had not been in the factory that day, no one knowing at the time that the negro had hidden himself in the boxes to the right of the stairway on the first floor.

The shock of the tragedy had not yet worn off, and all was confusion in the building. Because no one suspected that Conley had been in the factory on the Saturday of the crime, a fact which Conley later admitted when under the third degree of the detectives, little attention was paid to Mincey's story at the time.

Says Police Wouldn't Listen.

He states that he went to the police station and was told that they did not want his story. He saw Conley and identified him as the negro with whom he talked on the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered.

When Conley himself broke down and admitted that he had been hiding on the first floor, Mincey's sensational story took on the highest significance. He returned to the factory and repeated the details of his former statement. An interview was arranged with a lawyer acquaintance not connected with the case in any way. This attorney heard his story and took him to Attorney Rosser, where the statement was taken in sworn form.

"We do not want your statement unless you can swear to the truth of every word of it," he was told. He then dictated the affidavit which is now in possession of the defense.

Mincey was a solicitor for the American Insurance Company until about two weeks ago. He left this firm to teach school. He is said to be employed in Chattanooga, but will return to testify at the trial of Leo Frank July 28. He lived at 128 Davis Street until last October and then moved to another part of the city.

Defense Has Faith in It.

Uncovering for the first time the bulwark of defense which Frank's lawyers have built up around him, as well as containing the first report of a confession from Conley, the affidavit signed by Mincey at once takes its place as the most important document or piece of evidence that has entered into the case.

"Yes, we have the affidavit," admitted one of the lawyers for the defense Thursday afternoon. "We have had it for some time. We place the utmost reliance in it. We believe this man is telling the truth. It forms one of the strongest foundations for our belief in the guilt of Jim Conley."

C. J. Graham, of the law firm of Graham & Chpapell, announced on Thursday that the hearing on the writ of habeas corpus for Newt Lee had been set by Judge Ellis for Saturday forenoon at 10 o'clock. He said that he would subpena 50 witnesses to appear at the hearing, among them Leo M. Frank and Jim Conley.

Frank's attorneys will fight his appearance at the hearing and the State is expected to try to prevent Conley from testifying. Solicitor Dorsey is strongly opposed to the freeing of Lee until after the trial of Frank, and has declared that he will use every effort to thwart the movement of Lee's attorneys.

BARROW COUNTY BILL PASSED BY HOUSE

Measure Approved 136 to 35 Despite the Hardeman Opposition. Crowded Galleries Cheer.

The bill creating the new county of Barrow, to be made up of sections of Walton, Gwinnett and Jackson, with Winder as the county seat, passed the House to-day by a vote of 136 to 35.

The measure came from the Constitutional Amendments Committee with a unanimous recommendation for its passage, but it was not put through the House until after a genuine display had been indulged in.

The fight against Barrow was led by Hardeman, of Jefferson, who attacked it by moving to postpone action upon it until next session. Had that motion prevailed, the bill would have been killed, beyond hope of resurrection.

Barrow County has been looked upon generally as apt to win out. It has been before the Legislature before, and many members who voted for it to-day explained their votes by saying that they voted upon the merits of the proposition entirely, which were evident enough to the Constitutional Amendments Committee to get a unanimous favorable report therefrom.

The impression is that Barrow will pass the Senate and go to the people for ratification in the next general election.

During the voting on the bill, the galleries were packed with citizens from the territory affected, and when the vote was announced the result brought great applause.

Lower House Adopts Wohlwender Measure After Half an Hour of Debate.

The first general bill of the session, passed Thursday morning by the House, was House Bill No. 9, which perfects the insurance laws covering the reinsuring in other companies by concerns wishing to retire from business in the State. It was introduced by Wohlwender, of Muscogee, and Cook, of Chattahoochee. Some little opposition was expressed, and 30 minutes was consumed in debate.

GARRISON PLANS TO ABANDON 100 ARMY POSTS

War Secretary Calls Them Useless, Demoralizing, Wasteful. Ready to Fight Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The most radical and dramatic move in army administration since Elihu Root reorganized it a decade ago has been determined by Secretary of War Garrison. He intends to fight Congress on the question of maintaining 100 or more "absolutely useless" army posts in the interior.

He intends to withdraw troops from at least 75 per cent of them in the interest of economy and efficiency, and next Wednesday will start on a five weeks' tour of the posts to crystallize the details of the policy he announced to-day.

Scores "Pork Barrel" System.

Secretary Garrison is disgusted with the "wasteful and extravagant way in which the army is being conducted," and lays it all to the system of maintaining army posts as part of the "pork barrel" into which every member of Congress dips his fingers. There are at present 157 posts in the country, an average of one post to every 250 soldiers in the army. Every State is represented.

The Secretary of War has made a preliminary investigation, which has proved to him that the maintenance of all these posts, of which he believes that 100 are unnecessary, is not only demoralizing to the army, but the most extravagant way of wasting Government money ever devised.

Plans to Block Congress.

If Congress obstructs his policy of unifying the posts, the Secretary of War intends to use his executive powers of withdrawing troops from those posts which he believes are unnecessary. He declares he has absolute power in this direction, and, with the President's consent, could concentrate the entire army in Washington if he so desires. He intends to use this power in fighting Congress should the latter determine to nullify his policies of post concentration.

Mr. Garrison will be accompanied by Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, and Quartermaster General Aleshire.

The plan of centralizing the army has been under consideration for several years. General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, on his last visit to Atlanta, stated that if the plan was ever put into effect Fort McPherson would become one of the largest posts in the country.

Demands will be served to-day for a nine-hour day with pay for ten hours, and reinstatement of nine discharged workmen. Some of the men have been on strike for a week.

The first violence occurred late Wednesday, when five men were injured in a riot. One of them, J. W. Bell, of Chicago, is dying in a hospital.

Beavers in Speech Warns Policemen to Keep Out of Dives

Chief of Police Beavers caused a stir Thursday morning when he went before the day watch and addressed the men on their conduct. His talk resulted from the recent scandal in which several policemen were found guilty of visiting a resort in the rear of 127 Auburn Avenue.

"Any man who hangs around a negro dive has no place on the police force of Atlanta," the Chief said, addressing the men. "If you get positive evidence that any of your brother officers are engaged in discreditable practices and frequenting disreputable places, it is your duty to report it."

The Chief will make a similar speech to the night and morning watches.

New York Dressmaker Describes Petticoatless Mode and Harem Skirt From Paris.

NEW YORK, July 10.—"The prudes can not stop them—they are here. That is, they are in Paris, which means that American women of fashion will bring them home with them this fall and winter," said Mme. Bernard, Fifth Avenue modiste, who has just arrived from abroad with the first harem skirt and the silhouette gown.

The former resembles Turkish trousers, which have succeeded the slit skirt, and the latter is a new French creation of lace and pleated tulle, worn with tights of silk of white or flesh pink, with no suggestion of a petticoat unless it be of filmy material.

"The slit skirt has been the most graceful and attractive made for women which has been worn in many years, so all of the great fashion leaders of Paris declare," said Mme. Bernard. "The harem skirt is an adaptation of the slit skirt with the tendency to the full and natural figure about the hips, which is the dernier cri.

"Turkish trousers, properly adapted, are an ideal costume for the modern woman of fashion. The ones I saw in Paris are the most fascinating and bewitching frocks I have ever seen.

"The silhouette gown, which is built on Grecian lines, is extremely beautiful, provided the figure is graceful. It is like looking at a beautiful woman through a fleecy sunlit cloud.

"The gown is so arranged at the hem that by means of a slit up the front—to the knees—and by pulling the diaphanous pleated tulle and lace criss-cross about the ankles a sort of trouser effect is obtained which only shows when the wearer moves about."

Fights Insurance Suit Under Suicide Clause

COLUMBUS, GA., July 10.—A suit of M. L. Richardson, administrator of the estate of F. M. Richardson, who was shot and killed October 25, 1912, against the Prudential Life Insurance Company, to collect a $2,000 policy, is being heard in City Court.

When the father, M. L. Richardson, demanded payment, the insurance company refused to settle, claiming that the insured committed suicide.

A similar suit for $2,000 is pending against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

Society Leaders, in Masks, See Risque Paris Play 'I Love It'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 10.—Wearing of masks by society women who attend racy theatrical productions, but who are ashamed to let their relatives and friends know of it, has come into vogue here.

A large number of women from court circles are daily attending the risque French show, "I Love It," but all wear masks for fear of the censure of their husbands and of Queen Mary, who has forbidden any of the ladies of her court from entering the Middlesex Theater, where the production is on.

Clergymen are beseeching the censor to close up the theater, declaring it will debase all who see it because of its gross imorality.

Fly Pests Cost U. S. $157,800,000 a Year

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Figured out in money, to say nothing of the loss in human life, the cost to the United States annually of supporting its fly population amounts to $157,800,000, say Government experts who have been making a study of the results of the germ-spreading activities of these insects.

It is estimated that the fly is responsible for an expenditure of $50,000,000 for the handling of tuberculosis cases, attributable to germs spread by the pests, while $70,000,000 represents the cost of typhoid fever cases originating in the same way.

CRAWFORD WILL FIGHT HANGS ON EXPERTS

Attorneys for Widow of Capitalist Declare Poison Evidence Will Be Shattered.

A positive statement from Dr. F. H. Harris, of the State Board of Health, that Joshua Crawford died of morphine poisoning instead of pneumonia, the announced cause of his death by the attending physician, Dr. J. W. Hurt, was the sensational development in the Crawford $250,000 will case Thursday.

Dr. Harris was called to the stand at noon. Attorney Reuben Arnold, for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, the widow, to whom all the estate was left, pinned him to the assertion.

For the first time in his career, he said, he deviated from his custom of merely mentioning possibilities or probabilities.

"There was absolutely no trace of pneumonia or any disease of the lungs," said Dr. Harris. "Morphine poisoning very likely produced death."

Statement Unshaken.

Dr. Harris was on the stand for very nearly an hour, but his statement was unshaken.

No announcement would be made by the attorneys for the heirs-at-law, who number more than thirty, but it was confidently understood they would not rest the case with the introduction of Dr. Harris, but would have other experts, and probably members of the family to take the stand in an effort to substantiate the evidence of Dr. Harris.

Attorney Arnold stated that the evidence of Dr. Harris would be torn to pieces when he put Dr. J. W. Hurt on the stand to tell of administering morphine and opium to Crawford in an effort to stop the violent fits of coughing and near congestion of the lungs, with which he suffered in the last month of his life.

Widow Not in Court.

He intimated also that he would introduce experts to prove that the quantities of opium and morphine found in Crawford's stomach by Dr. Harris were not sufficient to produce death, nor more than a normal dose administered by the average physician.

Mrs. Crawford, the widow, was not in the courtroom Wednesday when the poison theory was advanced by Dr. Harris, and it was doubtful whether she would attend the hearing Thursday.

Heirs-at-law to the estate and their friends attended in large numbers, and despite the fact it is a strictly civil procedure and no court official is presiding, it had all the appearance and interest of a sensational criminal trial.

BOYS SAVE MOTHER AND GIRL FROM DROWNING IN PICNIC BATHING ACCIDENT

Heroic work of two little boys, Mizell and J. C. Williamson, of 7 Gray Street, saved their mother, Mrs. J. C. Williamson, and a young woman, Miss Maud Stradley, of 322 Simpson Street, from drowning in Center Hill pond Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Williamson has a class of little girls at the Tabernacle Baptist Church Sunday school, which she had taken for an outing to Center Hill. Her sons, ages 13 and 12, respectively, were in the party.

Ventured Out Too Far.

Mrs. Williamson and Miss Stradley went in wading. The water was muddy and they could not see the bottom, but the water was so shallow and the bottom so smooth that they ventured farther from the shore, though neither of them could swim. They were walking several feet apart when the girls on the bank saw them go under.

Panic followed. The women in the water fought with desperation, oblivious to the fact that opening their mouths to scream was admitting the fatal water. The girls on the bank called and shouted, and the two boys rushed up to see their mother and Miss Stradley go down in the throes of drowning.

Boys Fine Swimmers.

As they stripped part of their clothes, J. C., the younger, exclaimed:

"I'll save my mother or die with her."

Before the boys could reach the struggling women they had sunk for the second time. When they came up they screamed no more, and they fought with feeble efforts.

The boys had learned to swim in Piedmont Park lake and they hurried to the rescue with the speed of experts. Before the women had gone down for the third time J. C. had grabbed his mother by the hair and Mizell had taken hold of Miss Stradley.

Made Brave Struggle.

It was soon evident, however, that all danger was not passed. The women were too heavy for the little fellows. There were shouts of encouragement from the bank, but the odds were against the victims.

The moment the accident occurred someone had run for Policeman Williamson. He was some distance away and it had taken some time to reach him—seconds in reality, but it seemed hours to the watchers.

As the boys were making for the shore with their burdens he rushed up.

He did not stop to remember that he was a poor swimmer, neither did he discard any of his clothes, but plunged in.

Human Life Line Formed.

Another tragedy threatened when he reached the deep water. Policeman Williamson sank as the women had. When he came up he saw that it was vain for him to attempt to render aid. The boys were making progress toward the shore, so he struck out for the shallow water.

When he secured a footing he watched and gave instructions to the boys. Holding hands, a human life line was made by the girls and all pulled ashore.

The boys were exhausted and the two women unconscious.

Mrs. Williamson is confined to her bed, but her condition is reported not serious. She is merely suffering from a reaction from the shock. Miss Stradley is up and all right except for a slightly sore throat.

Cotton Men Confer With Roads on Bill Of Lading Problem

Representatives of all the important railroads in the Southeast conferred with cotton exporters, compressors and buyers at the Ansley Hotel Thursday morning on the new rules of the steamship companies governing exportation of cotton.

The steamship companies have announced that they will make notations of any damage on the through bills of lading. This, the banks say, makes the bills not negotiable. The railroads also fear that claims for damage will be made against them in such instances, and in such event they will be obliged to make the same notations on their bills at the interior points where the shipments originate.

Whether to do this or refuse to issue through bills of lading is the question which is of vital importance to the movement of cotton this season.

MILITANT 'JEKYL AND HYDE' IS ARRESTED

Arsonite, Meek Wife by Day, Confesses She Did $200,000 Fire Damage at Night.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LIVERPOOL, July 10.—A remarkable confession of a dual life, which in some respects equals "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," was made here to-day by a woman. Mrs. Edith Rigby, wife of a rich and prominent doctor, admitted to the police that she has been a member of militant suffrage arson squad for six months without her husband's knowledge.

Every night she would slip from her home and set fire to buildings, plant bombs or send threatening letters to those opposing the cause. She told the police that she had caused at least $200,000 damage through her own executions.

Gentle Wife by Day.

Her husband opposes suffrage and she had to carry on her campaign of vandalism clandestinely. By day she appeared a gentle, dutiful wife, with no thought of "votes for women." But at night she went forth with violence in her heart. She was arrested.

After being taken to the police station Mrs. Rigby dramatically confessed burning down the mansion of Sir W. H. Lever, Bart, in Lancashire, when over $100,000 damage was done.

Ready to Give Her Life.

"I burned Sir William Lever's home because I understood that King George was to visit there," cried Mrs. Rigby. "I scattered the suffragette placards. I burned other buildings. I risked my life night after night in the manufacture of bombs. But I would give my life for the cause. I would give up my husband and my children—everything. I place the suffrage cause above everything—perhaps above religion."

In her excitement the woman became hysterical and bitterly denounced the government.

Clara Giveen, a member of the arson squad of the militant suffragettes, who was sent to prison for incendiarism, was released to-day because of illness brought on by a food and water strike.

FARMERS' UNION GETS RECRUITS IN JENKINS

Campaigners Inject Enthusiasm at Millen Meeting — Two New Locals Formed.

MILLEN, July 10.—That the farmers of Georgia are rallying to the standard of the Farmers' Union as never before is demonstrated at every meeting at which President C. S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes, State president of Tennessee, are the principal speakers.

At Sylvania Tuesday two new unions were organized. Many names were added to the rolls of the old unions.

At Millen, the county seat of Jenkins, there was a large gathering in the beautiful new courthouse Wednesday.

After the speaking every man who was not a member of the union joined. The enthusiasm was such as to guarantee the success of the union in Jenkins County.

No town in Georgia or elsewhere has grown faster in the past ten years than Millen. It is almost four times as large as it was ten years ago. Why?

The explanation is given by President Barrett. "If there are any better farms, if there are any better farmers, they must be in Georgia," he said, "for I know there are none better in any other country."

The crops in this section are good; in fact, they are above the average, and there will be no hard times in this section of Georgia.

Mayor Reluctantly Pays for Crematory

Mayor Woodward Thursday signed checks for $125,000 as first payment on the crematory built by the Destructor Company of New York, but he is not satisfied with the contract.

"The price of $276,000 should have been reduced $100,000," he said. "By my fight we got a cut of $16,000. Claimed interest of $11,000 on deferred payments finally was waived. Chief of Construction Clayton forced them to add extras which, they say, have amounted to $6,000. The city has drawn 2 per cent interest on the $125,000 during the fight. The total saving is $34,000."

'No American Dances' Sign in Swiss Hotels

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND, July 10.—"No American dances allowed here" is a sign confronting tourists at nearly all the high-class Swiss hotels. The managers declare the notices had to be put up because of complaints from English, French and other foreign tourists, with the exception of Americans.

Continental visitors have left a number of hotels where American girls insisted on dancing the turkey trot, the tango, the bunny hug and the Texas tommy.

BALKAN TOLL OF DEATH PLACED AT 65,000

Estimates, Believed Exaggerated, Show Heavy Losses in War Between Former Allies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Bulgaria has been defeated and humbled by Servia, Greece and Montenegro and is on her knees begging for peace.

Czar Ferdinand personally telegraphed to Czar Nicholas to-day accepting any terms Russia makes to bring about peace in the Balkans.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, July 10.—According to estimates compiled here to-day from official and unofficial dispatches from the Balkans, at least 65,000 men have been killed in the fighting between Bulgarians on one side and Servians, Greeks and Montenegrins on the other.

It is a certainty, however, that these figures are exaggerated, as the Servian and Greek losses have invariably come from Bulgarian sources, while estimates of Bulgarian casualties have emanated from Athens, Uskub or Belgrade.

Another Great Battle Raging; 75,000 Engaged.

SOFIA, July 10.—Another desperate battle with enormous losses of life on both sides is raging north of Kotchana between Bulgars and Serbs who attempted to cross the border into Bulgaria.

The Servians had a double object—first, to march upon the Bulgarian capital; second, to get behind the Bulgarian lines and cut off the retreat of the two southern divisions to Kustendil, the Bulgarian base of operations.

According to official advices from the front, the battle is being fought between Kotchana and Egri Palanka, along a small river. It is estimated that about 75,000 men are engaged. The battle lines are stretched over an area of ten miles.

Both sides are supported by artillery. The Servians also have a heavy force of cavalry. Bulgarian reinforcements have been sent over the Sofia-Uskub Railroad.

Czar Urges Bulgars to Settle With Roumania.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Russia is pressing Bulgaria to settle its differences with Roumania over Roumanian territorial expansion without further delay. Foreign Minister Sazonoff declared to-day that it would be national suicide for each of the Balkan States to keep on fighting.

The opinion here is that Greece will emerge from the present war with the greatest laurels.

Bulgaria Is Ordered to Sue for Peace by Powers.

PARIS, July 10.—A joint note from the main European powers was to-day forwarded to Sofia demanding that Bulgaria immediately secure the peace terms of Servia and Greece. Belief prevails here in military and diplomatic circles that Bulgaria will be badly defeated by the other three States in the Balkan League if the war is allowed to go to a conclusion.

If Bulgaria is compelled to sue for peace she will lose much of the spoils of the first Balkan war. Greece will retain Salonika and a big strip in Southern Macedonia, while the Servian frontier will be extended over a large area of northern Macedonia.

Bulgars Give Grounds For War, Turks Assert.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 10.—Bulgarians are committing depredations against the Turks, which furnish cause for a declaration of war, it was announced here to-day by the Ottoman government.

Bulgarian troops stationed along the Littoral of the Sea of Marmora have burned two Turkish towns to prevent their falling into the hands of a Greek army which is marching eastward from Salonika.

Bryan and Envoy of Japs in Conference

WASHINGTON, July 10.—An informal discussion of certain features of the situation between the United States and Japan was held by Viscount Chinda, Japanese Ambassador, and Secretary of State Bryan to-day. The American reply to the recent Japanese rejoinder is not entirely completed.

Mr. Bryan expects to transmit the document to Viscount Chinda either to-morrow or Saturday.

Savannah-to-Florida Road Plan Indorsed

Favorable report on the bill providing for construction with convict labor of a highway 100 miles long from Savannah to the Florida border at St. Marys River, in Camden County, was authorized Wednesday by the Penitentiary Committee of the Georgia Legislature. Representative Slater, of Bryan County, is its author.

The new road is intended to be part of the national highway system.

CONTESTANTS TO RIDE PONIES NEXT SUNDAY

Children and Parents Invited to Meet Managers in Grant Park to Discuss Race.

Parents of the contestants and the contestants themselves are very cordially invited to Grant Park Sunday afternoon when the ponies, some harnessed and others saddled, will be on hand.

There will be rides and drives for all the children, and for the parents there will be an opportunity to inspect the prizes for which their children are working and a chance to meet the contest manager.

The contest manager is particularly anxious to meet the parents and confer with them as the race enters upon its last lap. But nineteen working days remain in the contest, and the children will need the co-operation of their parents to the fullest extent. How to help the boys and girls in the race will be the topic which the contest manager and the parents will discuss.

Herbert Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, a hustling contender.

Margaret Danner, Doraville, Ga., contestant.

The office force of The Georgian and American contest department is busy totaling the bonuses which the contestants have earned through the five-club offers, and the first $30 offer. This is proving even a greater task than anticipated, and it is impossible to give the contestants' full standings as yet.

Meanwhile another bonus offer is in effect. Liberal amounts of extra votes are offered for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions turned in before 10 o'clock the night of July 19.

Subscriptions of any length—two years, a year, six months, three months or even a month—may be combined to make up these totals.

Legislators Favor Girls' Home Plan

Unanimous approval of the Penitentiary Committee was won Wednesday by Representative Jones, of Coweta, and Representative Mills, of Butts, for their bill appropriating $75,000 for a State home for wayward girls. The measure will be reported immediately, with recommendation for passage.

While no site is mentioned in the bill, the Penitentiary Committee discussed the advantages of Milledgeville.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Comedy Team Forsyth Hit.

"Hines and Fox, piano player and singer, who came to the Forsyth unknown on Monday, have scored one of the biggest hits registered by an act of its sort in Atlanta. Eva Taylor and company, one of the headline features, present an act that has attracted the most favorable comment and won a most universal indorsement. Kennedy and Melrose, the novelty gymnasts, have added to the merit of the bill, and there are other features that make the show decidedly worth while.

Next week Valerie Bergere and company will return to Atlanta to present "Judgment," the latest success of this distinguished vaudeville star. Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, and the Shelvey Brothers, flexible gymnasts, will also be on the bill.

Grand Popular Place.

The Grand just now is a decidedly popular place, because the management, in response to the pulse of the people, has instituted a policy of motion pictures that is a revelation to the patrons of "movies."

Excellent programs of exclusive first-run pictures and Edison's talking pictures are presented daily from 2:30 until 10:30 at night, and usually to crowded gatherings.

Bijou Has Good Show.

Will Stanton and Rosalie May, at the Bijou this week, as the stars in "Along Broadway," have made one of the biggest hits of the season. Mr. Stanton's impersonation of a cabaret drunk is a capital piece of acting and keeps the house in a continuous uproar of laughter. Rosalie May, Mr. Stanton's partner, is a clever little woman. The violin solos of Miss Marjorie Calvert never fail to receive an enthusiastic reception, and the same can be said of the clever dancing of Ingalls, Duffield and Ingalls.

Preacher Floyd Official.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Men

Send Name and Address To-day—You Can Have It Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope, to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men, and I am convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow-men to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop drugging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest acting restorative, up-building SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, 4276 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain, ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it entirely free.

FIFTH REGIMENT BOYS MIX PLAY AND WORK

Atlanta Soldiers Having Great Time at Instruction Camp on St. Simons Island.

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, GA., July 10.—The soldier boys of the Fifth Georgia Regiment, who arrived here Wednesday from Atlanta, have taken complete charge of St. Simons. Today the boys, somewhat weary of the more or less arduous duties of pitching camp, are having the time of their lives splashing in the surf and wandering around the island.

Thursday night the first big dance will be held and Friday military tactics and instruction will be the order of the day.

Next Saturday the Fifth will be the host of Governor John M. Slaton, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, members of the Governor's staff and General R. K. Evans and Colonel Barth, U. S. A.

The distinguished guests have announced their intention of camping in tents just like real soldiers during their two days' stay here.

A special committee from the Brunswick Board of Trade and from the City Council will meet the party at the depot and escort it to the St. Simons boat.

The Fifth will remain in camp at St. Simons for ten days.

In the Governor's party on the visit to St. Simons will be Governor and Mrs. Slaton, Colonel and Mrs. Frederic J. Paxon, General J. VanHolt Nash and daughter, Miss Nash; General and Mrs. R. K. Evans, Colonel C. H. Barth, Colonel and Mrs. George M. Hope, Colonel A. H. VanDyke and daughter, Miss VanDyke; Colonel William B. Stovall, Colonel H. P. Melkleham, Colonel Ben J. Fowler.

The party will be joined by Colonel and Mrs. Z. H. Clark, of Moultrie, at Fitzgerald, and Colonel and Mrs. John D. Walker, of Sparta, at Cordele.

Slaton Last Hope of Man to Hang Friday

Failing in their attempt to get the Prison Commission to recommend a commutation of sentence for Oscar Dewberry, the negro sentenced to hang in the Fulton County Jail Friday, Attorneys Calhoun and Powell made an appeal to Governor Slaton Thursday afternoon.

Dewberry was convicted of killing a white boy in Decatur Street. Persistent efforts were made to have the Prison Commission to recommend commutation. Governor Brown was appealed to without success.

SLOGANS EXPLAIN WHY ATLANTA FOLKS BOOST

Designs Submitted in Georgian's Half-Million Club Contest Express City's True Spirit.

Thursday's entrants in the $25 prize slogan contest reveal more than ever that Atlanta's true individuality is the inspiration for the slogans. Any city can boost, but none can boost like Atlanta, as the slogans clearly show.

The pretty girl idea has taken a strong hold on the contestants. One submitted by Robert M. DeFassell, Atlanta Athletic Club, makes the face of a pretty girl the emblem of the "500,000 club." Its caption expresses the lure of romance:

"Miss Atlanta, 'Boost-er.' 500,000 by 1920."

The whole country has been impressed with the aggressive and forceful methods of Police Chief J. L. Beavers. Taking advantage of this William E. Muirhead suggested for a button a face of Chief Beavers with the words: "500,000 by 1920. Get 'Em or Bust."

Contest Open All Week.

Slogans received as late as Saturday will be eligible for the prize. On that day the committee of judges—John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor—will meet and decide the winner. The lucky one will be announced in Hearst's Sunday American.

Here are some of the clever ideas that came to the contest editor through the mails:

"The Atlanta Spirit, Atlanta's Boost.

"A Half-Million Souls, Atlanta's Boast"—J. F. Harbour, 41 North Pryor Street.

"Atlanta, My Criterion, 1913-1920, 200,000—500,000"—Lewis J. Ball, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"500,000 by 1920. Atlanta Offers You Opportunity, Peace and Plenty"—Mrs. A. O. Woodward, South Atlanta.

"Atlanta, the Dixie Flyer.

"Will Care for Half a Million Souls and Higher"—Mrs. M. J. Rossman, Greensboro, Ga.

"For 500,000 Souls We'll Win in a Canter.

"Talk, Hustle. Boost for Atlanta"—Lucile Hiatt, 14 Killian Street.

"Here's to 500,000 by 1920, With Atlanta Spirit and Atlanta Pluck."—E. F., Covington, Ga.

"Progress, Prosperity, Pride, Population. Boost Atlanta Club, 500,000 by 1920."—Mrs. B. J. Harrison, 180 Lake Avenue.

"Atlanta 1920 Census Booster. Lend a Hand. Make It Grand. Five Hundred Thousand."—R. S. Thomson, 16 Bedford Place.

Submitting a button design with skyscrapers and airships and a park drive, Roy Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, suggests:

"Atlanta Booster Club. Boost Atlanta. 500,000 Population by 1920."

"Half-Million City, 1920. Be a Booster."—J. M. Swift, 240 Crew Street.

Design submitted by Robert M. De Lassell.

W. R. Menkee and Harold Runge, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, urge a button on which is a picture of a gate, with the words:

"Atlanta, Gate City. 500,000 Population 1920."

Prosperity in Atlanta.

"Health, Prosperity For You in Atlanta. Ask Me Why."—H. B. Tuller, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

"Atlanta, the Nation's Queen. Biggest, Brightest, Best Means Atlanta."—Mrs. Homer Hones, 54 Flat Shoals Avenue.

"Join the Half-Million Club and Boost Atlanta."—Isadore Bleich, 17 Kennedy Street.

"Atlanta, the Last Word in Cities."—Myrtle Maxwell, 708 South Boulevard.

"Me For Half-Million Atlanta. On the Job All the Time."—M. M. Welch.

"Atlanta Always Ahead."—Nate A. Gordon, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"Ashes to Billions."

"From Ashes to Billions Against All Competition. Onward Her Watchword."—Foley W. Vaden, Jackson, Ga.

"A Half-Million We Want and a Half-Million We'll Get."—Sam L. Sugarman, 351 Central Avenue.

"Bigger, Busier Atlanta. Why Not 500,000?"—T. J. Harrington, 35 North Pryor Street.

"Watch Me Pull. Atlanta, 500,000, 1920."—W. J. Hicks.

"For Atlanta—Half-Million and Then Some."—E. W. Ray, Acworth, Ga.

"We're for Smoke."—H. Shaw, 258 Lawton Street.

"Atlanta, the City That Satisfies."—A. M. Moseley, 45 Williams Street.

"Atlanta! Get the habit!
Half-million! We must have it.
Atlanta spirit has caught many.

Elks Club in Macon May Abolish Buffet

MACON, July 10.—The conviction of C. B. Wright, the secretary of the Elks Club, on the charge of violating the prohibition law, may mean the abolition of the buffet feature of the Macon lodge. Many of the members believe that the buffet should be discontinued, if it is ultimately upheld that the Elks are violating the law in operating it.

Though defended by the ablest lawyers of the city, Secretary Wright was found guilty by a jury.

Wright to-day was fined $700.

Firm Asks $100,000 On Fire Signal Delay

CHICAGO, July 10.—Alleged negligence in forwarding a fire alarm signal in Kansas City, Mo., on July 12, 1912, was made the basis for a $100,000 damage suit against subsidiaries of the Western Union Telegraph Company by Morris & Co., meat packers.

The Morris complaint alleges that a heavy fire loss was caused at its Kansas City plant because of delay in transmitting the fire alarm signal.

GOVERNOR AGAIN CITES NEED OF ECONOMY

Makes It Plain at Dinner That He Will Not Countenance Extension of Deficit.

Governor Slaton again made it plain in an after-dinner address at the Capital City Club Wednesday night that he will insist upon rigid economy in the Legislature until Georgia's present systems of finance and taxation are radically reformed.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley, of the House Appropriations Committee, was host. The dinner was given in honor of the House committee and the Executive. It was informal, and was given for the purpose of getting the committee and the Governor in close and intimate touch.

The Governor pointed out that the estimated deficit in the State treasury now, based upon appropriations made by the last Legislature, amounts to the amazing sum of $776,170.

To Curb Expenditures.

He said he could not see his way clear to an extension of that deficit, if it were within his power to prevent it. He held that it is the State's duty—its honorable duty—to wipe out the deficit entirely, and to that end he invited the help and co-operation of the committee. The Governor said the two items that should be watched closest are the common schools and the pensions.

"The matter of Georgia meeting its obligations promptly is a matter of business, not sentiment," said the Governor. "We must keep our outgo within our income!"

Tax Reform Urged.

The Governor stressed the necessity of tax equalization, reiterating his oft-stated position in that direction.

The committee evidently took the Governor's remarks in good part, for on all sides expressions of determination to help him and hold up his hands were heard.

All the talks were in happy vein, and it was the impression that the Governor and the Committee on Appropriations understood each other very well, indeed, when the dinner was over.

Besides the Governor and the House Committee on Appropriations, Speaker Burwell, Chairman Aikin and Vice Chairman Cole, of the Ways and Means Committee, and a number of newspaper men attended Mr. Wheatley's dinner.

J. Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, was prevented by sickness from being present.

Dress Linen Prices 5 to 10 Per Cent Up

NEW YORK, July 10.—According to a member of the linen trade back from abroad, prices there now are from 5 to 10 per cent higher than when the last heavy purchases were made in November. In the local market staple color dress linens, especially blues and pinks, are scarce. Dealers have advanced prices on several staple numbers.

The substantial business in novelty dress linens this season has led dealers to believe that ratines will be in good demand next season also. The fact that these goods are being shown extensively in cotton is regarded as an indication of their stability.

LEGISLATORS CONSIDER $100,000 GEORGIA EXHIBIT AT CANAL FAIR

COL. T. S. JONES.

FRANK WELDON.

State Commission Hard at Work to Persuade Legislature to Appropriate Fund.

Georgia will have one of the most complete and "jam-up" State exhibits at the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco if members of the State Commission and others interested get what they want—$100,000—from the present Legislature.

The first gun in the big campaign was fired Thursday when Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton County, and other legislative boosters for the Cracker State presented a resolution in the House providing for an appropriation as authorized by the 1912 Legislature. The decision to wage an active campaign for the $100,000 was made Tuesday at a meeting of the State Exposition Commission.

Colonel T. Sambola Jones, of Louisiana, United States Commissioner for the exposition, who arrived in Atlanta Tuesday, will fire the second gun of the campaign Monday at noon when he will address both the House and Senate in joint session to urge the adoption of the resolution.

State Building Urged.

"We hope," said Colonel Jones, "that the Governor and his staff or a committee of distinguished citizens of Georgia will visit San Francisco to select a site for the proposed State building which this State should have, by all means, to house its exhibits and to care for the thousands of Georgians who will visit San Francisco in 1915.

"It is our plan also to have moving pictures of Georgia's participation in the exposition, showing every movement from the selection of the site for the building to the great Georgia Day, including the formal dedication of the building.

"These pictures will be sent all over the country and will constitute a living record of an event of which Georgians will ever be proud."

Mr. Weldon, chairman of the State Commission named by Governor Brown last year, was equally enthusiastic.

Big Display Planned.

"We are going after that appropriation with a vim," said he, "and we believe we will get it. Georgia must be represented—well represented—at this the greatest exposition that ever has been held.

"The commission proposes to have a strong display of Georgia's agricultural and mineral resources, as well as an exhibit showing her manufacturing activities. The State is one of the richest in the Union in natural resources and deserves to have a creditable exhibit at San Francisco."

Two Near Death in Auto Crash; Nabbed On Speeding Charge

A. M. Moon, of Adamsville, and O. H. Starnes, of Center Hill, are congratulating themselves to-day on their remarkable escape from injury when their automobiles collided in the Adamsville road last night. Both machines were demolished and their occupants hurled several feet. Beyond a few bruises, though, neither man was hurt.

Noise of the collision attracted a farmer. He telephoned to county police headquarters. Officers placed Moon and Starnes under arrest on charges of reckless speeding.

Moon operates a market in Decatur Street, while Starnes keeps a grocery in Marietta Street.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—"Women who meet in the corner grocery and other places to exchange neighborhood news are a menace to the community," declared Judge James L. Pugh in Police Court here.

A TRIED AND PROVED GUARANTEE

Man Bought a Bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, Then Took It Back and Asked for His Money and Got It.

A man recently tried out the guarantee which all druggists give with every bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. He bought a bottle and then went back to the drug store and said the medicine hadn't helped him.

This druggist just reached into his cash register and took out a half dollar, the price of the bottle of Liver Tone, and handed it back to the gentleman. But he didn't take the money. He owned up that he was just trying the guarantee and, as a matter of fact, he had found Dodson's Liver Tone the best remedy for constipation and biliousness he had ever tried. "Why," he said, "my wife wouldn't be without a bottle in the house for anything. It's the best thing in the world for the whole family, and the medicine that I prefer to take or to give to my children for a lazy liver."

All druggists sell Dodson's Liver Tone and guarantee it to start the liver without violence. It is taking the place of calomel everywhere. If you buy a bottle and don't find this pleasant-tasting vegetable liquid the best thing to start a lazy liver, he will hand your money back with a smile.

"The best show in Atlanta" is the verdict of the patrons of the Bonita Theater. The fact is, the Bonita will have none but the best, and when a company does not come up to the standard, the engagement is cut short and the wires are put to work. The music is good, the girls are pretty, and the dancing will make you pat your foot and sway your body with the graceful movements of the show girls. The Bonita has the best.

PUBLIC TO PAY IF TRAINMEN WIN WAGE FIGHT

"Are You, Not Railorads, Willing to Grant Increase?" Is Question, Forbes Declares.

By B. C. FORBES.

Another section of railroad workers have voted to strike, demoralizing traffic over the eastern half of the country, unless demands for wage increases are granted. First the engineers, then the firemen, and now the trainmen have taken this course of action.

* * *

Where are strike threats to end? Arbitrators found the engineers and the firemen entitled to better pay. The railroads were willing to grant concessions in these cases, but they declare the trainmen have no grounds for insisting upon another advance, seeing that their wages were raised in 1910. Yet, there is a feeling in railroad circles that arbitrators will seek the usual line of least resistance and effect a compromise.

* * *

Railroad managers are asking: "If employees know that every time they threaten to starve the people they will be granted higher wages, why should they not go on making fresh demands? They can not lose anything by repeating the performance of putting a pistol to the heads of the railroads and the public—and they have learned by experience that they are tolerably certain to gain something when arbitration is agreed upon."

* * *

That arbitration will be adopted this time is a foregone conclusion. The customary result will likely follow—substantial concessions, entailing heavier burdens upon the public.

* * *

Now, the point raised by the railroads IS important. Where are the demands of railroad employees to end? WHY should they end? Human nature is human nature, and if the men know that by asking a lot they can depend upon receiving something, well, the temptation to ask is apt to prove irresistible. It is easier to preach than to practice self-denial. Are we not all striving to obtain the most we can for our labors? The railroads are at this moment trying to secure better rates for carry freight, are they not?

* * *

Experience may have justified the pessimistic attitude the railroads are taking toward arbitration. But will arbitrators ALWAYS grant concessions regardless of circumstances, regardless of the merits or demerits of the men's demands?

* * *

I do not pretend to have a labyrinth of pigeon-holes, each containing a ready-made solution for some complicated problem. Some writers can solve every difficulty in less than a column. They know just what should be done under every circumstance. I don't. And this problem of adjusting demands of highly-organized workers, especially railroad workers, is one of baffling, unusual difficulty.

* * *

Federal and State Arbitration Boards, as recommended by the commission that arbitrated the railway engineers' dispute, have much to commend them in the case of public and quasi-public service workers upon the uninterrupted continuance of whose labors the people at large are dependent for the necessities of life.

* * *

But it seems to me that the greatest need of all is that the public—you, your next-door neighbor, and all the rest of us—should become thoroughly acquainted with what higher and still higher wages mean TO US. The railroads will not say whatever 'increase in wages the trainmen may be granted. YOU and I will pay. The railroads have not one dollar that you and I did not contribute. They have only one source of revenue—the public.

* * *

Therefore, the question to ask is not, "Should the railroads raise wages?" but "Should WE pay railway workers higher wages?" For WE foot the bill.

* * *

If we conclude, after learning all about the rates of pay these men receive, that they are getting less than we earn ourselves, that we ought to contribute more to their weekly envelopes, that they cannot live as comfortably as the average workers of similar skill, then let us make our decision known. Once it is clearly realized that the public, not soulless corporations, must meet the bill, must give up out of their pockets every additional dollar paid over to these workers, then public sentiment will govern rates of wages and govern them equitably.

THE EXAMINATION.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

Representative Clements, of Irwin County, owns the identical spot of ground upon which President Jefferson Davis was captured, after the surrender of General Lee and the flight of the Confederate administration from Richmond.

The arrest of Davis was effected in a little clump of woods, about two acres in extent, near the Clements homestead, and it has been preserved, just as it was then, ever since the war. In the family of Mr. Clements it has always been considered a sacred place.

When Mr. Clements' father died he left a request that this spot of ground be "kept in the hands of Southern people." He was a lieutenant in the Confederate army, and idolized Jefferson Davis. He aided in the fallen chieftain's escape, and only consented to his surrender when it became plain that further resistance was worse than useless.

Mr. Clements is contemplating, in order that his father's last wishes may be complied with, asking the State of Georgia to accept title to this spot where Davis was arrested, and to appoint some kind of commission or committee to take it in charge.

He has worked out no definite plan—he merely wishes to give the property to the State, with the understanding that the State will protect it, preserve it and keep it, as his father wished, in the hands of "Southern people."

Not a stick of timber has been cut from the land since the day Jefferson Davis was arrested thereon, and many trees that were mere saplings then now are great oaks and pines.

Representative Shelby Myrick, of Chatham, is one of the very hardest worked men in the House.

He heads the big Committee on Constitutional Amendments, and that committee likely will be worked overtime this session.

Myrick is one of the very best lawyers in the House, and is a gentleman of extreme affability and effectiveness. In other words, he is both able and affable.

Mr. Myrick's committee already has returned one county to the House with a favorable report, and the chances seem bright for the creation of the same by the Legislature. The proposition—Barrow County—has been thoroughly thrashed out in the committee, and the House is apt to take the committee's findings as righteous and just.

Speaker Burwell picked for the constitutional amendment committee from among the best legal talent he could locate in the House, and when he made Mr. Myrick the chairman of that committee he paid him a high but deserved compliment.

A meeting of the legislative committee of the Georgia Anti-Saloon League was held at Wesley Memorial Church in Atlanta Tuesday night, several members of the House and Senate being present.

It was decided not to introduce the Tippins bill or any substitute for it at this session of the Legislature, but temperance legislation instead will take the shape of a bill intended to gather the fruits of the Webb-Kenyon bill against interstate shipments of liquor recently passed by Congress.

Whether the Legislature will enact any liquor legislation whatever this session is problematical, as there has been so far no particular agitation of the matter.

Representative George F. Paulk, of Berrien, will introduce in the House soon a bill to establish a branch school for the deaf in South Georgia.

The bill will ask for a branch school convenient to the 150 deaf [illegible] South Georgia who are unable to avail themselves of the education offered by the Cave Spring School, on account of its inaccessibility.

The bill will not specify any particular location, but will leave that to be settled by a committee appointed by the Legislature or Governor. No large appropriation for buildings will be asked, but the town where the school will be located will be expected to provide temporary buildings, at least.

Representative Crawford Wheatley's dinner to the House Appropriations Committee Wednesday evening at the Capital City Club had much more behind it than the mere matter of a compliment to his committee, although, of course, it was a most delightful and engaging compliment.

Its direct purpose was to bring as intimately together as possible the committee and Governor Slaton.

Mr. Wheatley, who is the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, believes that Governor Slaton is exactly right in his ideas with respect to the State's income and outgo. The Governor is known to have determined that the present Legislature shall keep the lid on appropriations, and not exceed the revenue anticipated under the present system of taxation. He has made it very plain that he will exhaust the executive resources, if necessary, in undertaking to do that.

Mr. Wheatley is determined to uphold the Governor at every turn, if it be within his power, and to that end already has had numerous conferences with his excellency.

In order to facilitate the work and to make all features of it as pleasant and as cordial as possible, Mr. Wheatley arranged his dinner last night—and it may be said that it was, in every sense of the crowds, a complete success.

It is safe to say that the Governor will find the House Committee on Appropriations standing right behind him in his work of reforming the State's finances, and if the committee takes that stand, it may be accepted as a further fact that the entire House will fall in line promptly and willingly.

General Agricultural Committee No. 2 of the House has a large grouch toward General Agricultural No. 1.

General Agricultural No. 1 had a hog cholera bill before it Wednesday, and was so impressed with the importance of the thing that it invited General Agricultural No. 2 to sit with it in joint session and hear the arguments. G. A. No. 2 readily consented to this and sat through two mortal hours of talk about hogs and things.

When the time came to vote on the bill, however, G. A. No. 1 moved to put G. A. No. 2 out of the room, leaving the voting entirely to G. A. No. 1. To this G. A. No. 2 objected vehemently.

Rather than get out, G. A. No. 2 moved to adjourn—and the motion carried!

The hog cholera bill, therefore, still is up in the air, and G. A. No. 2 has a big grouch toward G. A. No. 1.

ECZEMA LOOKED AWFUL ON FACE

Started with Watery Pimples. Itched and Burned Badly. Awful Sore. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Boy Now Well.

R. F. D. No. 2, Fredericks Hall, Va.—"My little son was very bad off with the eczema on his face. It started with watery pimples and it itched and burned so badly that he wanted to scratch it all the time and he made an awful sore on his face. I would sit and hold his hands a lot of the time to keep him from scratching it. He didn't sleep any scarcely. The eczema looked awful while on his face. I was afraid it would last for life. He was real cross and fretful.

"I had him treated and he grew worse daily. As soon as I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I sent and got a twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and a fifty cent box of Cuticura Ointment and began using them. I saw a difference in a short time. I only used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment a few weeks before he was a well boy." (Signed) Mrs. Kate B. Pleasants, Dec. 12, 1912.

Although the Cuticura Soap and Ointment are most successful in the treatment of affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hands, they are also most valuable for everyday use in the toilet, bath and nursery, because they promote and maintain the health of the skin and hair from infancy to age. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for shaving and scalp.

Tifton Slaying Case Now Rests With Jury

TIFTON, July 10.—The trial of I. B. Hall, who shot and killed Dennis W. Hall on May 10, which began with the opening of Tift Superior Court Wednesday, went to the jury this morning.

Four complete panels were exhausted and the fifth veniremen of the fifth panel was called before a jury was secured.

Six witnesses were examined for the State, but the defendant relied upon his own statement, in which he told of his quarrel with the slain man, claiming that he acted in self-defense.

Mail Clerk on Trial; Suspected for Year

J. R. Jackson, former railway mail clerk, accused of theft of mails on a Georgia Railway train the night of March 27, 1912, was tried Thursday before Judge Newman in the United States District Court.

The letter alleged to have been taken by Jackson contained a five-dollar bill and three $1 silver certificates.

Government officials state Jackson was suspected of the theft for more than a year before being accused.

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van De Water.

CHAPTER II.

IT is not strange that men do not understand women when woman so often does not understand herself. Mary Danforth did not know what instinct kept her from mentioning to her parents her encounter with Gordon Craig in the subway train. That is, she did not tell them that she knew the name of the man whose pocket had been picked. She mentioned casually that she had seen through the window of her car a thief remove a purse from a pocket of another passenger on a local train and that she had vainly tried to attract the victim's attention to the theft.

"How strange that you should have seen it, and that the other people did not," remarked Mrs. Danforth. "You have quick eyes, my dear."

Mary laughed. "They were not as quick as the pickpocket's fingers," she said lightly.

"People ought to be careful how they carry their valuables," remarked her father sententiously. "New Yorkers should know enough to be on the lookout for thieves. Yet every few days you read in the papers of some careless chap who has been robbed."

The Discussion Ends.

There the discussion ended. Mary did not think it necessary to tell her father that the man of whom she had spoken was not a New Yorker. She was quite sure that Craig himself would not speak of the incident to her father, even should he present the letter of introduction of which he had told her. She wondered when he would present this, and if her father would mention the stranger to her. Why should he? There were dozens of business acquaintances whom he met weekly and whose names she did not even know. He was a man who did not bring the office and its concerns into his home. She almost wished that she had told a part of it. It was too late now to do so. Once she made an effort to bring the conversation back to the incident; then appreciated with embarrassment that were she now to give an accurate account of the encounter her parents would think it strange that she had not done so before. So she turned the talk again into other channels.

Dinner over, she asked to be excused, explaining that she must "cram" for examinations.

"Must you work late to-night?" queried her mother, sympathetically. "I think it is a shame the way in which you girls have to work to get through the High School. Now, when I was young——"

"Yes, yes, mother, I know!" interrupted Mary, with more asperity than was habitual with her. She was still weary and nervous, but as she saw the shade of wounded feeling that swept across her mother's face she regretted her sharp speech and, stooping swiftly, kissed the pale cheek.

"Forgive me for being so cross mother," she said gently. "I am hot and tired, and, I fear, a bit grouchy."

"That's all right, Mary," said her father good-naturedly. "Your mother and I understand, and we are proud of the way you have worked. In spite of the fact that High School studies are a bit strenuous, you'll find that the training has been a fine thing for you later in life if you ever have to face the world alone. But I hope you won't have to," he added hastily.

His eyes dwelt happily on the graceful girl before him. She was an only child, and her father always said that she was the best daughter that any couple ever had. He had insisted that she take a course of study that would enable her to support herself if necessary. Every woman ought to have some way of earning her own living, he had declared. Mary reminded him of it to-night, smilingly.

"I'm Going to Insist."

"Well, dad," she teased, "you say you hope I will never have to support myself, and yet I am almost ready to consider myself a competent secretary, stenographer and typewriter. Then what are you going to do with me if I do not take a position?"

"I am going to insist that you keep in practice, but you shall not go to work as long as I live. I want you at home with mother and me. When I die it will be time enough for you to hustle."

"I pray that won't be for years to come," said the daughter, as she ran her fingers caressingly through his gray hair. "Not because I am afraid of work—but because we need and love you—mother and I."

John Danforth looked fondly at his daughter. "Well," he said with a tender smile, "I've lived right up to my income so far, and now I want to be spared long enough to lay aside something for you two—for no man ever had a better wife and daughter."

Mary studied late that night. As she fell asleep she smiled tenderly as her memory recalled the expression of pride with which her father had made this speech.

"Dear old dad," she murmured drowsily. "I love to see that look on his face."

Perhaps a sudden change in the weather, making the air dry and cool, caused life to seem brighter to Mary Danforth the following day, for she returned from school in a happy and hopeful frame of mind. Her mother came to her room late in the afternoon with the news that her father had just telephoned that he was bringing a business acquaintance home for the evening.

"He says he's a stranger here," added the mother, "and as he's a bit lonesome, father asked him up to dine. He did not tell me his name."

The girl felt a wave of color sweep to the roots of her hair, and she turned away hastily to hide it.

"Perhaps it might be as well to tell Norah to have a salad course to-night, since dad's bringing a stranger home," she remarked casually, "and let's have the new china used, too—shan't we?"

"Certainly," said her mother. So calm was her child's manner that the parent would have been surprised could she have heard her whisper excitedly when she was again alone in her room:

"It is surely Gordon Craig!" Then, as the girl caught a glimpse of her smiling face in her mirror, she blushed again.

Confessions of a Medium

A Striking Expose of Fakery in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the partment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

YOU have watched the crowds in front of the fortune tellers' booths in Coney Island. Of course, you have never been one of those who have been "taken in." But you may have watched the others as they stood amazed at the wonderful "second sight" of Professor Bondaloo, or whatever his title happens to be.

As he sits blindfolded he describes exactly the articles in the crowd, tells the amount of coins and the dates thereon; tells the colors of dresses; reads the titles of magazines; adds complicated figures on the blackboard, and thoroughly mystifies his beholders.

They little know that the Professor instead of being imported from Mandalay, India, probably hails from that far-distant land of East Fourteenth Street or the Bowery, and is known in the winter and in private life by some "imported" name.

The assistant, after beseeching you to come closer, still closer, in order not to lose a single syllable that drops like pearls from the lips of the X-ray visioned man, then announces that the great professor will tell you your name for 10 cents to-day only.

When you go inside you are led to the Professor's sister, or cook, or something, who asks you to cross her palm with silver, which means a quarter, or a half, or even a dollar, according to how gullible you may appear.

She then proceeds to tell you the color of your prospective wife's cousin's hair, and seems to have forgotten that you came in to find out what your parents christened you.

How He Did It.

I am not at this time going to take up the fortune-telling mystery; but I shall content myself with pointing out how I accomplished the wonderful "second sight" or clairvoyance, as it is better known, to the astonishment of far more intelligent minds than my own.

Come with me, then, as I enter a handsome private home on Morningside Avenue. Gathered there are about forty-three or forty-four eminent scholars to study the mysterious power of Ali Ben Hassan, who has been educated in English in Robert College, at Constantinople, and who has but recently come to this country.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the apartment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

My guide goes to the back of the room and says, "I speak, Ali. Have you your second sight? Please tell me what this is?"

Very quickly I answer, "There appears to me a hat."

"Right. Hear me now. Please watch me carefully. See this? I ask you to describe it."

A Watch.

"You hold in your hand a watch."

"Now what kind? Be quick, please."

"It is of silver."

"What is the number? Look carefully. Are you ready? Tell us then."

"The number is 62,810."

And so on the questions and answers went, and everything correct to the minutest detail. A doctor who was present proclaimed the results marvelous—that Ali Hassan was a unique specimen for scientific research. Several motions were made, seconded and carried unanimously, that the results of the experiment be sent to various psychical societies and leaflets be printed with a full and detailed description and mailed to leading authorities in this country and abroad.

Really, when I doffed my turban and sank down to a good hearty laugh with my "guide" later on, I once again had occasion to lament on the credulity of my neighbors. The second sight of all Ali Ben Hassan consisted of nothing but a good memory on the part of myself, an amateur investigator into the frauds of mystery.

My friend and I had arranged a code, as follows: Our questions would tell the answer to what they were asking, by the manner in which they were worded. The first letter in each sentence spelled out the answer; but if we had gone no further, this might easily have been detected. So we turned the alphabet topsy-turvy and made H stand for A, T stand for B, S stand for C and so on. For instance, look at the first question that was put to me:

The Solution.

"I" being the first word uttered, suggested "H." "Have" in the second sentence, suggested "A." "Please in the third sentence, suggesting "T"—the three together making "hat."

I can not even begin to show you the further details of the code, which went still deeper, and covered every possible article, description, date, color, metal, etc. We had even gone so far as to vary our code by different signals, and had single words mean fixed things. So that if, perchance, some one began to get the system, we would throw him off the scent. For instance, the second variation made "Say what stone this is" meant diamond. "Please tell me what this stone is" meant emerald, and so on. "Say what country is represented here" would indicate America, while "Please tell me what country is represented here" would indicate Spain.

There is no doubt but the memorizing of these codes is remarkable, and on that basis may be paid for. But I cannot understand why thousands will continue to believe that a strange, unseen power is possessed by these so-called clairvoyants who flourish and grow rich on money defrauded from the credulous pleasure-seekers who frequent the resorts.

One more incident on clairvoyancy: Some time after the Ali Ben Hassan episode, a number of those who had been present were invited to investigate that wonderful gentleman again at a friend's home in Brooklyn. One of the scholars had sufficiently awakened by this time to declare that he thought it was possible the manner in which the questions had been asked had suggested their answer. At this most of the others arose in anger and laughed scornfully at the man who could show himself so skeptical in the face of such conclusive evidence. The "guide" was very much aroused and said he feared this statement would cause Ali to refuse to talk again. (This manner of procedure is generally followed when someone gets on the trail.) Nevertheless, to prove that the charge was preposterous, Ali would allow anyone to ask the questions and he would answer them!

Therefore, to the amazement of all, this was done, and the results were more bewildering than before. There was no doubt of it. Ali Ben Hassan was gifted with a remarkable supernatural sight. But the explanation is even simpler here than in the first incident. We were prepared for all emergencies. I had previously connected in the folds of my turban the end of a slender speaking tube that came close to my ear and extended from another room and was painted in the color of the wall. Hidden in the next room was another confederate, who looked through an opening in the draperies, held a powerful opera-glass to his eyes, and whispered the answers sweetly through the tube in my ear!

New Residents in Towns

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

TACT, judgment and discretion are needed in order to make friends and acquaintances in a new place. Of course, when going to live in a strange town, where one has a few friends, cards may be sent, with the address, to the friends who reside in the town, as soon as one is settled, thus giving them an opportunity to call.

It may be that a bride is making her new home in a town where her husband's friends live. They have received cards for the wedding, or announcements of the marriage, and after they have called and their visits have been returned an interval of dullness may follow. If a few little hospitalities have been offered they may be returned in a simple way.

A new resident must not make advances, must not seem in haste to make acquaintances, must not make first calls on old residents, or send invitations of any sort to them until there has been an exchange of visits and some mark of hospitality has been shown by older residents.

It is well for a new resident to make allowances for an occasional breach of courtesy from well-intentioned persons. These have been known to send invitations to strangers within their gates without the preliminary of a formal call. This has been from carelessness, or the lack of knowledge of the laws of etiquette. A new resident, who may receive an invitation of a general nature from an old resident who has not called, need not stand too strictly on ceremony if by so doing the opportunity may be lost of meeting some pleasant friends. But a second oversight of that sort, from the same hostess, should not be overlooked, and one may well wait on one's dignity for the delinquent hostess to call.

Rules which apply in cities are altogether different from the rules in country neighborhoods or small towns. In a large city it is not the custom ever to make a first call on a new resident or near neighbor, unless a friend in common has requested one to do so. In the country, or in small places, old residents call on a newcomer if it is believed that an exchange of calls would be agreeable.

First calls should be returned within a week or ten days at least.

A THRILLING SHORT STORY

WITHOUT—ice and frozen snow, the bitter cold of a Russian winter. Within—the heavy scent of hothouse flowers, a soft rustle of silk as Natascha Alexandrovna waited breathlessly for the words that would decide her brother's fate.

They brought little comfort.

"I am distressed to be obliged to refuse your request," the general replied coldly, "but if your brother chooses to consort with revolutionaries he must take the consequences."

"He is only a boy, and the woman bewitched him," she urged, her heart sinking as he rose, saying coldly, "It is useless to press the matter further. I am powerless."

"Powerless!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "You, the all-powerful chief of police! You, who have so often assured me of your friendship! A word from you would set Boris free, and you refuse to speak it."

"Orders have been given that even I can not disobey," unmoved by her wrath as he had been by her distress.

"Then can nothing be done to save him?"

Vladimir Mirskoff looked at her for a moment, then, "There is a way, but you may not care to take it."

"Not care, when it is a question of saving my brother! Tell me quickly."

"A plot is being laid for the wholesale assassination of government officials, and a new form of deadly explosive has been smuggled across the frontier by a woman who, try as we may, we can not identify. If you could give us the name of one of the leaders Boris is free."

"You surely do not imagine that I could tell you," she exclaimed indignantly.

"No; but your admirer, Paul Goveski, can. He has friends among the Liberals."

"And you dare suggest that I should make him betray his friends?"

"It is the only way to save Boris from Siberia. I am powerless unless I have the name of one of these revolutionaries to give in exchange. After all, why should you have any scruples concerning men who preach murder as a trade?"

She wrung her hands in an agony of doubt, but before she could reply a servant entered to announce that his excellency Count Paul Goveski desired to know if madame would receive him.

"No, no. Say I am engaged; I can not see him."

"On the contrary," interposed Vladimir, "you must see him. Fate has sent him here to save your brother."

Natascha looked at him imploringly, then said, "I will receive the count," and as the man left the room, "Promise me Paul Goveski shall not suffer for his friendship with these men."

"Certainly," he replied, "Where may I wait for your answer?"

"In my boudoir," holding aside a curtain before a door.

"Remember, your brother's liberty, perhaps his life, rests in your hands," he whispered, and vanished almost as she turned to greet the Count.

"I trust I am not too early," he said, bending to kiss her hand. "You had my letter? I am all impatient for the answer."

"You do me honor," she replied, sinking into a chair. "Believe me, I am indeed grateful."

A Protestation.

"It is your love, not gratitude, I want," he pleaded. "Surely you have seen how I adore you. I would die to serve you."

"So others have said. I wonder how much such protestations are worth from you."

"Only try me and see."

"You tell me you love me," she said slowly. "There is no love without trust. What if I ask for a proof of that?"

"Ask what you will. I can deny you nothing."

"It will place your life in my hands."

"It is there already," Paul replied softly, bending over her. "I can not live without you."

"Rumor calls you Nihilist, conspirator," she said lightly, with a bewitching smile. "A woman's curiosity is proverbial. Is it true, and who are your confederates?"

He stepped back and gazed at her in astonishment too great for words. Then, "Madame, do you know what it is you are asking?"

"Why, certainly; a proof that you trust me."

"But this concerns others than myself. It is impossible."

"I thought so," scornfully; "strange how all men are alike, ready enough with words—unfortunately, I prefer deeds," rising as if to bring the interview to an end.

"But not such as this?" he pleaded. "To betray those who have trusted their lives in my keeping would be a poor way of showing my love."

But she stood silent, her fingers nervously twisting the lace of her dress.

Paul Goveski watched her keenly, then going to an escritoire wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, folded it, and came slowly back, saying gravely, "Here is the name of our leader. The proof you have asked of my love."

Then, as she took it, he continued, coldly: "And now, madame, I bid you farewell. You have said love can not exist without trust, and so have given me the answer I came to seek."

"You are going?" she exclaimed, incredulously.

"Yes; love bought by dishonor is valueless," and with a low bow he walked to the door.

She flung aside the paper and, passing swiftly across the room, barred his way, saying brokenly: "No, no; you must not go like this. I did not really mean it. Forgive me," looking up at him beseechingly, with tear-laden eyes. For the question that had tormented her for so long was answered; she knew now that she loved him—that to lose him would be much worse than death itself.

"Then you were not really in earnest?" the sternness melting from his face.

"No," she protested eagerly, "I only wished to try. The paper shall be burned unread."

"I knew I could trust you," he replied joyfully. "Natascha, dearest, I, too, was but jesting. The name I wrote was my own." He stopped, for her face was deadly white and her eyes dilated with terror as she gazed past him into the room.

Turning, he saw Vladimir Mirskoff reading the fatal paper with a quiet smile of satisfaction on his face.

The chief of police carefully refolded the paper, saying, "Paul Goveski, I regret to be obliged to arrest you, but this leave me no choice."

"Indeed he is innocent," cried Natascha, imploringly. "It was only a jest."

A Last Appeal.

"A singularly unfortunate one."

"Why try to undo the effect of your work?" asked Paul, scornfully.

"No wonder you despise me," she said humbly. "Listen, Boris has been sent to Siberia unless I could obtain from you the name of one of the leaders in this plot. They are only assassins and deserve no mercy. But you showed me the baseness of the part I was playing. Indeed, I would have burnt that paper. Say you believe me?"

But her appeal left him unmoved, and his voice was as cold and hard as the ice in the streets outside as he his friends, would repent at the last moment? Never." Then addressing himself to Vladimir, "I suppose it is useless to tell you I have never belonged to any revolutionary society in my life? I suspected madame was being made a tool of, and wished to find out; that was all."

"Quite useless, and I should advise you think of a more plausible tale for your defense." Then to his hostess, "Madame, I wish you good evening."

But Natascha had regained her self-control. She was fighting against desperate odds for all that made life worth the living. Entreaty was useless. If the man before her was to be forced to relinquish his prey, other means must be used, and suddenly the inspiration came.

Turning to Vladimir, she said very quietly: "You spoke of a woman who had concealed a deadly explosive for charging bombs. What if I were to tell you her name?"

"Then you may ask what you will."

"My price is Boris's freedom and the destruction of that paper."

"You, a woman, to betray another woman!" cried Paul. "I refuse to be saved at such a price."

Twice Balked.

"And I refuse to pay it," added Vladimir, decidedly.

Natascha looked at him in dismay. "Refuse?"

"Yes. Why buy what I can have for nothing? Sent to prison as a suspect, you will soon tell me all I want to know."

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Paul, and Natascha glanced at him gratefully as she said, "I will tell you now," opening one of the glass doors of the cabinet containing her famous collection of china fruit. "I am the woman, and here are the bombs."

The man stared at her, too surprised to speak, then Vladimir said stiffly, "Is this also some jest, madame?"

"It is deadly earnest," and, taking a china orange from its shelf, she held it carefully in both hands. "What is there to arouse suspicion in the fad of a society lady for collecting china fruit, and what safer place in which to store bombs than a drawing room frequented by the chief of police?"

"Enough of this fooling," he said, roughly. "I do not believe you," and he made a step toward her.

"Stop!" she cried, holding out the orange on the palm of her hand. "If you move I will convince you of the truth of my tale, only you are not likely to live to acknowledge your error."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Return that paper. Write an order for my brother's release and passports for the three of us by the midnight train to Paris."

"I refuse."

"Then as it is a choice between Siberia and death, I shall drop this at your feet, and there will be no one left to explain the accident that wrecked the house of Natascha Alexandrovna and involved the highly esteemed chief of police in so terrible a fate." Then, turning to Paul, "Have I not chosen well?"

"Yes; a thousand times sooner death with you than life if we are parted." And the look in his eyes told her that the peril in which they stood had blotted out all misunderstandings, but she only said calmly:

The Victory.

"Does your excellency still refuse?"

"I will do what you require," he yielded sullenly. "Put that thing away."

When you have fulfilled my conditions. Give Paul Goveski his paper."

Vladimir complied, and Paul watched it burn while Natascha continued: "Now write an order for Boris' release and make out our passports." Then, when he had done so, "In return, if you give me your word to do nothing till midday tomorrow, I will leave my china fruit exactly as they are. You can search the house, and think what a sensation such a discovery will make, and how your cleverness will be applauded."

"I give it." And if looks could kill, she would have fallen dead at his feet.

"Then I need detain you no longer. But another time, your excellency, when you wish to make a tool of a woman, beware lest you burn your own fingers."

"You have got the better of me now," he replied, turning to go, "but sooner or later my turn will come, and then—" The pause that followed was more expressive than words.

As the sound of his footsteps died away, Natascha placed the orange on a table and burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, exclaiming, "To think that two men could be so easily deceived!"

"Natascha, what do you mean?" Paul asked.

"It was your danger inspired me. I was desperate," she replied, taking the orange in both hands and giving it a slight twist, when the two halves fell apart, and she held them out for her lover to see they were empty of all save air. "If only I could see Vladimir's face to-morrow when he finds those deadly bombs are no more dangerous than this china orange!"

Alas, That Poor Egg!

"Waiter!" From the table by the window the voice of an elderly gentleman rose in accents wrathful. "Waiter!"

"Yes, sir," replied the much harassed one, hastening forward.

The elderly gentleman, overcome by his emotions, made several vain efforts at articulate utterances. Then:

"Take this egg away!" he roared. "Take it away!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter obligingly, as he glanced wistfully at the offending article. "And—and what shall I do with it, sir?"

"Do with it?" The outraged customer rose menacingly from his chair. "Do with it?" he bellowed fiercely. "Why, wring its neck!"

True Business Instinct.

Topham's was the smartest emporium for miles around. You had to be the last word in "go" before a situation was obtained in that establishment. Keen business men filled every post.

One afternoon when trade was in full swing an unfortunate customer fell down the first floor stairs.

"Help!" he groaned in agony. "I do believe I've broken my leg!"

A shopwalker immediately flew to his side.

"Broken your leg, sir?" he inquired sympathetically. And then, in sharp, clear tones: "Cork legs! Third counter to the right, sir! Forward, Miss Davis!"

Up-to-Date Jokes

A man-of-war was lying off Gibraltar, and permission was given to the men to go ashore for the day. The sailors amused themselves in various ways, among others by riding about on donkeys; and their want of experience in this line caused much merriment. An officer, observing one of the men sitting very far back on the animal, instead of in the usual position, called out:

"I say, Jeck, get up more amidships!"

With an injured air he replied: "Well, sir, this is the first craft that ever I commanded in my life, and it's hard indeed if I can't ride on the quarterdeck if I like."

Bismarck was on one occasion pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place.

"He is a remarkable fellow," said the proud father. "He speaks seven languages."

"Indeed!" said Bismarck, who had not a high opinion of linguistic acquirements: "What a wonderful head waiter he would make."

Stolen Fruit Not Sweeter.

A benevolent old man invited a number of small boys from the slums to spend a day at his beautiful old-world country home, and among the many good things which he provided for them was a bountiful and wondrous feast of strawberries and cream.

As the day drew to a close, wishing to impress the lads with a lesson, their benefactor asked:

"Now, suppose, instead of being invited here to eat my strawberries, you had come and helped yourself when nobody was looking, would you have enjoyed the fruit so much?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! And why not?" asked the old gentleman, inspired with a new faith in young Britain's honesty.

"'Cause, sir," came the sad but prompt reply, "we wouldn't 'ave 'ad no cream with 'em!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T TRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 18 years of age. As I was walking on the street the other day I saw a girl whom I hadn't seen before, but I loved her very much the moment I saw her.

What I want to know is how to get friends with that girl.

ALBERT.

Love at sight is such a pretty dream it is a pity to spoil it by getting acquainted.

You are 18—the age to be devoted to making a man of yourself. Bend your energies in that direction, and let love alone for a few years. Under no circumstances should you attempt to form an acquaintance with a girl you happen to meet on the street.

CERTAINLY NOT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am very much in love with a boy. I am 17 and he is 18. He has kissed me a great many times, but now he has stopped writing me, and I have not heard from him for some time. I cried all last night about him.

Would you write him?

NANCY.

You have been very foolish, and his coldness is no more than what you should expect.

Do not write him, and the next time you have a lover, refuse to be so generous with marks of your affection. I trust this experience will prove to you that you are too young to have a lover.

Do You Know---

Failing in her plan to end her life, after seven different attempts in as many months, Laura Griffith, of Atlantic City, has developed a more cheerful view of life, and has signed on as a bareback rider with a circus. As a persistent fatalist, Laura, who is about 18 years old, holds the record. She has tried the poison cup, the glittering dagger, and the more prosaic method of taking a running start and butting her head against a telephone pole. So regularly was she admitted to the city hospital during the past year that a cot was labeled "Laura Griffith" and was held in readiness for her at all hours of the day and night.

Should the measure now before the French Parliament become law it will not be the first occasion on which it has been attempted to make gambling illegal in France. In the thirteenth century St. Louis interdicted all gambling, even prohibiting the manufacture of dice, and Louis XIV was responsible for no fewer than 20 anti-gambling ordinances. But the monarch gave a bad example to his subjects, since every variety of card game known at the time was eagerly and openly played at Versailles.

Five brothers and sisters, named Harris, whose united ages total 438 years, met at a birthday party at Radnage, Bucks. Their ages are 96, 92, 88, 82 and 80, an average of more than 87. Five other members of the same family, who have died, were aged 93, 89, 88, 87 and 77.

Among those recently ordained by the Bishop of Durham was the Rev. A. M. Smith, M. A., to the curacy of Houghton-le-Spring. Mr. Smith has been totally blind for 20 years, but has succeeded in taking his degree at Oxford. The Bishop of Durham appointed him to read the Gospel in the ordination service, which he did from his Braille Bible. His complete Braille Bible consists of nearly 6,000 pages, fills 39 volumes, and occupies a shelf seven feet long.

The GHOST BREAKER

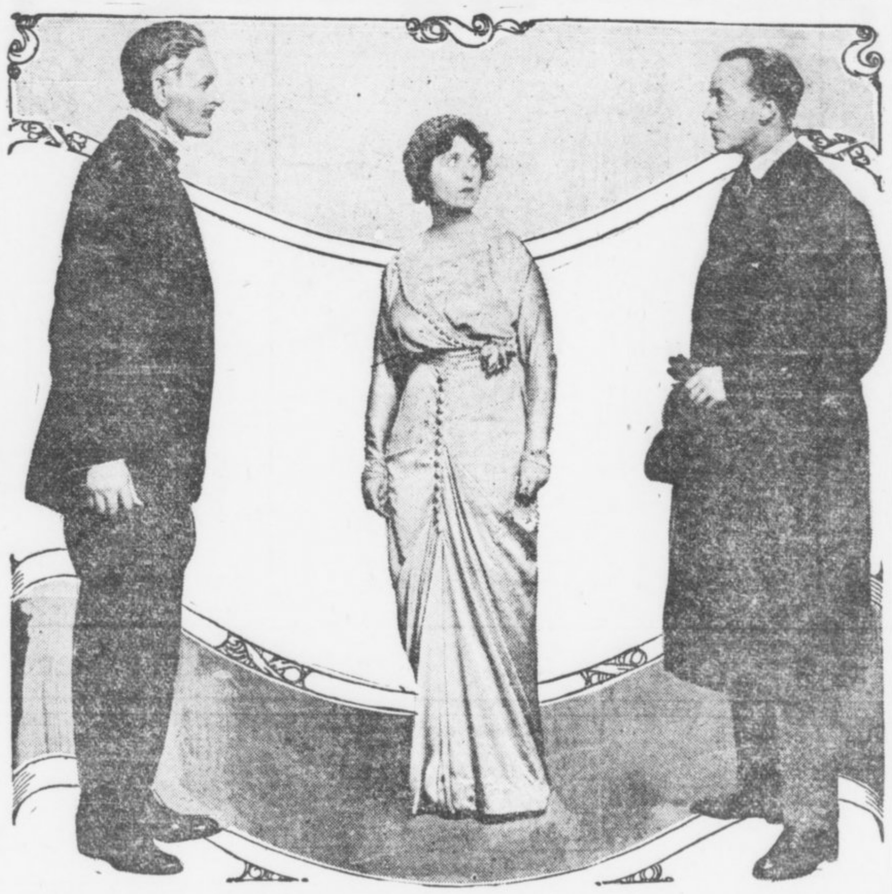
THE PRINCESS INTRODUCES JARVIS TO THE DUKE



"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I am bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Spooks!" grinned Jarvis, appreciatively. He was beginning to be glad he had come. But he saw no answering gleam in the young woman's sober face.

"Call it anything you like," she replied soberly, "but the castle is haunted—just the same. My grandfather was one of the wealthiest nobles in Spain. He died suddenly, leaving everything to my father, his only son and heir. When my father went to take possession of his estate in Segurn the town was full of weird stories of uncanny happenings. The castle was deserted—every one had fled and all told of something in armor that stalked the halls at night. My father laughed at the silly natives and said he would go into the castle and show them how foolish their fears were. He went—and," the girl's voice trembled slightly, "and he was never seen again."

"Him!" ejaculated Jarvis, with interest. "What happened to him?"

The Princess shook her head and her dark eyes grew very large. "No one knows. He disappeared—vanished utterly—without the slightest clew. Since then two others have disappeared."

"Well, why don't you keep out of there?" he demanded, half seriously. "What's the idea of teasing that spook, anyway?"

"But now my brother has gone in and they haven't heard from him!" Her eyes filled with tears. "That's why I haven't heard from him—why he hasn't answered my cables."

The Treasure.

With true chivalry the young man slightly turned his eyes away that he might not see the tears.

"Now, that's it!" he declared briskly. "You want me to go in and find your brother."

"Yes, that's it!" she cried eagerly. "Save my brother, but," she added quickly, "you must know about this locket. It tells where to find the treasure."

Jarvis ran his other hand through his hair and stared at the trinket in bewilderment. They were coming too fast for him, as he had said.

"Treasure! What is treasure?"

"My grandfather is known to have converted all his wealth into Spanish gold," she explained, "to finance a colonization scheme in Cuba. It amounted to about a million dollars in your money."

The knight whistled. "A million! Eh? How long ago did this happen?"

"Fifteen years ago—and nobody has found it."

Jarvis apparently arranged all these facts in his mind and then inquired:

"Why did you come to America?"

The Princess held up the locket. "A part of the story was that a plan had been made, showing just where the treasure was secreted, but this plan could never be found. Quite by accident, I recently learned that this plan had been hidden in the back of this locket, and the locket, I discovered, had been sold and was in America. It was to find this locket that I left my brother and came to America. It was this locket that you saw last night."

"Then my work is," Jarvis summed up, "to find your brother and solve the mystery? All right! We'll explain to the Duke that you are taking me to Spain for no other reason than to solve this mystery. Let me see—in America we have Roosevelt, the trust-breaker; Farley, the strike-breaker—and why not, 'Jarvis, the ghost-breaker?'"

"Why, yes," smiled the Princess, uncertainly. She could not always tell when he was serious. "It might—why not? Carlos would believe almost anything of the Americans."

Her Secret.

"And will you tell him," he asked wickedly, "that you have made me a—er—what is it?—a vassal?"

Again the rich color sought the lady's dark face.

"I think not," she decided, shyly. "Not just yet."

He smiled at her confusion and pressed his advantage.

"By the way, your—er—just how should a vassal address his Princess?"

Dona Maria appeared to give the matter some consideration.

"Highness is correct," she told him, with some hesitation.

Jarvis studied this over before he pursued his quest for further information.

"Your Highness, a vassal doesn't really amount to much, does he? No—I thought he was a piker," he added ruefully.

"A piker?" queried Her Highness, puzzled. "You mean he carries a pike?"

"No, no—a piker is a tin horn."

"Tin horn?" echoed Dona Maria, more mystified than ever.

"Well," Jarvis began, desperately—habitual use of slang plays the mischief with classical synonyms—"a—a sort of pawn in this game of chess—along with you kings and queens and castles and—things. For instance," the light of fun returned, "could a perfectly good, honest, reliable, hard-working vassal work his way up and get to be a Duke—or a lord or—something like that?"

Dona Maria laughed softly. "You're an ambitious vassal, aren't you? I'm afraid you wouldn't be satisfied with being less than a king."

"A king, prince or—a bandit," he returned, meaningly.

"A bandit? And why a bandit?"

"A king might demand—a prince request—a bandit seize."

Dona Maria looked blank. "Seize what?"

The vassal drew a quick breath. "That which a mere vassal may only admire," he fairly blurted out.

Dona Maria was saved the necessity or reminding him that he was still a vassal by a knock which she seemed to expect.

"Sh-h, he is here. What shall I call you?"

The Duke Arrives.

"Warren, Mr. Warren," he whispered, glumly. He felt that he would without straining himself cultivate a man's size dislike for the exalted cousin.

The Princess opened the door. "Come in, cousin," she said sweetly. His Grace of Alva entered, but fairly shied like a spirited horse at the sight of the stranger.

"Oh, I'm intruding," he exclaimed, in a manner which said plainly: "What the dickens are you doing here? Get out!" This convinced Jarvis that he would eventually come to dislike the exalted cousin by the running foot.

"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I'm bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

Jarvis nodded easily. "Glad to know you."

"I am honored," returned the Duke, his manner plainly indicating that the honor was the other way around. "Interesting task you have undertaken. May I ask if that is your regular profession?"

His tone was a mixture of the condescendingly paternal and an aristocratic sneer, which those of first families consider the thing in dealing with their untitled inferiors. He did not mean to be especially offensive to the young man—it was merely the way he had been brought up.

"That is my business," replied Jarvis, outwardly unruffled. "Solving mysteries—looking up the family skeleton—hunting out spooks—what we call in America a 'ghost breaker.'"

"A strange calling," mused the Duke, eying the young man keenly. "Really, I never heard of anything more extraordinary."

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

The scene of the story is laid in the Vanderlip Hotel, New York City. The Princess Maria Theresa of Segura, a beautiful Spanish woman, is suddenly awakened in her suite by the sound of pistol shots. She hears a man running down the hall. He crashes against her door, breaking the lock, and enters. She sees he is a tall, good-looking young man, dressed in evening clothes. He is carrying a revolver in his right hand, and blood is dripping from a wound in his left. He begs the Princess to hide him. She, moved by some indescribable impulse, decides that she will. She directs him to an inner room, and a few minutes later, when the hotel detective knocks on the door, she tells him she is all right and sends him away. The young man, who is Warren Jarvis, of Kentucky, comes out of his hiding place, and the Princess, for the first time, notices his wound. She is moved to sympathy and showers him with questions as to what has occurred. Jarvis tells her about a Kentucky feud between his family and another named Markham. He says he left Kentucky to avoid the feudists, but encountered one of them in the hotel, which explains the shots. The Princess declares she will help him, and then asks the stranger question, "Are you afraid of ghosts?" Jarvis laughs, but grows solemn when the Princess tells him she has dangerous work for him to do. She makes him swear allegiance, and creates him her "vassal." Then she tells him to get her trunk, which is going to be shipped to a steamship on which she sails to Spain the following day. First Jarvis tells her to telephone to his servant, Rusty Snow, a negro. The servant is instructed to procure passage for himself and Jarvis in the ship. Jarvis then prepares to get into the trunk, but first begins to question the Princess about herself.

Now go on with the story.

The Bishop's Story.

Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak fourteen years before in London and remembered only one thing he said.

"He told me that fourteen years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head and was picked up dead.

"He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received this reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because as she passed my window in her fall I heard her say, "Now for a bump!"'"

To Be Continued To-morrow.

Shoe Dealer: "It won't pay me to handle these shoes on such a small margin."

Commercial: "I know the profits are small, but, my dear sir, just look at the shoes and see how they are made."

"Humph! They are made very badly, miserable stuff, too—won't last a week."

"That's it, that's it. You'll sell five pairs of these shoes to one of any other maker's."

Julius' Happy Day

"IT'S perfectly awful and I don't understand it!" said Julius' mother, applying a very dainty handkerchief to her eyes.

"Disgraceful!" said Julius' father, emphatically.

Julius stood with a hangdog look, his eyes on the dusty stubbed footgear that had started out earlier in the day as carefully blacked shoes. There was a tear in his blouse and several rents were in his trousers and a general atmosphere of disrepute clung to him.

"He seems perfectly possessed," went on his mother, "to escape to the alley and hobnob with those young ragamuffins who make it their headquarters! Goodness knows, I wish we could move away from here! I had Arthur over especially to play with him! What did you do with Arthur?"

"Aw!" said Julius, with a growl. "I ditched him early! He's no good, honest, ma—he's a sissy!"

"Meaning that he is a gentlemanly, well-bred boy!" flashed Julius' mother. "You see?" to Julius' father, in despair.

His Games.

"What manner of amusements interested you in the alley?" inquired his father judicially of Julius.

"Aw," said Julius, "I met Fatty an' he said the gang was up in the barn where Lilkins keeps his horses, an' we went there and played train robbers till Slicker, he fell down the hole where the hay comes down, an' I fell down, too, an' Lilkins he comes in an' says we've broken the back of his best horse by falling on it, through the hole, and he'll be darned if——"

"Julius!"

"Well, you ast me, didn't you?" demanded Julius indignantly. "Anyhow, he said he'd be—that—if he'd stand for it, an' Fatty he yells like everything because he hasn't any parents an' lives with his aunt, and she's away workin' all day. So Lilkins can't do anything to him, I guess.

"An' I told Lilkins he didn't dast, 'cause we wouldn't buy any more groceries from him if he did, an' I'wuzn't doing anything anyhow. An' it was an awful old horse. An' then Ginger—his father has a plumbing shop three blocks down—he said they was a pony in his barn, and we went and hitched it to a cart and then we drove."

"Drove!" shrieked Julius' mother. "With all the automobiles on the streets and everything! Where did you drive?"

"I dunno," said Julius. "We had a nice drive. We went clear over on the west side across the river. Only a policeman he said he'd arrest us if we kept stopping in the middle of the street to fix the harness. We had to tie it together. An' a lot of automobiles got backed up behind us and they were fierce, the way they talked! Ginger, he sassed them back.

"'Who d'you think owns this horse?' he said to 'em when they told us to get out of the way. 'Guess it's got a right on the road if it does eat oats instead of gasoline, smarty!' An' I saw the Mrs. Kingman you know in her electric——"

"Oh!" moaned Julius' mother. "To have the Kingsmans see my child in the grasp of a policeman and with those little ragged——"

"A man he got mad," Julius proceeded, "because the pony ate some bananas from the back of his push cart an' Fatty threw a stone at him and he caught me and shook me something fierce an' another policeman he said, 'Now, go on out of here, you kids, quick, before I run you in!' An' a boy on a bicycle got in our way coming home an' it was his fault, because we yelled at him and Ginger thought the pony'd broke his leg, but it was only skinned, it was a second-hand bicycle anyhow and we got away because the pony went faster than the boy could walk. I guess he'd skinned his leg, too.

No Bell.

"The street car that hit us only pushed us sideways and tipped us over an' it was the motorman's fault, because he didn't ring no bell. Anyhow, I didn't hear any. An' Ginger's father was awful mad. He was waiting for us. He said the pony's people only rented room in the barn an' it would be a wonder if they didn't sue him for damages. What's damages? I don't know what he did to Ginger, but Ginger yelled awful an' I came away then any how.

"An' it wasn't my fault that Mrs. Button's clothesline broke when I ran through her yard an' hit it. They didn't tie it up tight enough. An' the girl was mad when she saw the clothes all down! Honest, I didn't do nothin' father!"

"Julius," said his father, with awful sternness, "you march straight upstairs to bed, this minute!"

"Wh-what do you think?" quavered Julius' mother in despair as her son disappeared.

"I think," said Julius' father, with a broad grin, "that Julius had a good time for once in his life. However, it might be well to unload his superabundant activity on a summer resort farm this summer. Let's look up one somewhere."

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Christine Norman's Rules for the "Too-Thin" Woman

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

CHRISTINE NORMAN is exactly the sort of girl you would be if you could choose—pretty, sweet, gracious, alert, honest with herself and sympathetic with all of life. And if you have seen "Peg o' My Heart" you would never guess it!

In that play she has to play the part of a girl whose cold, self-centered, unsympathetic nature makes life a burden for the dear little Irish cousin we all love—and all honor to the histrionic ability of the girl who portrays coldness and snobbishness so convincingly that the interviewer's heart sank at the thought of a chat with her. Exit the girl of the play, and enter Christine Norman and joy to the heart of the interviewer at the same time.

Miss Norman's manner is as wholesome and unaffected as her own pretty pink and white room, and her mind is as interestingly many sided as the vast array of vastly differing books that are so prevalent all about her room.

"Now, how could I have a beauty secret?" she laughed. Look at her pictures and you will sympathize with my thought that Heaven and the good fairies had been so kind that "beauty secrets" were scarcely needed.

"However, I have a very original trouble for these days," she went on, cheerily. "I have the unusual horror of getting too thin! Once I did become terribly thin—and I had to go on the milk cure, nothing but milk for seven weeks, and quarts and quarts a day all that time. Even now whenever I start losing I proceed to drink eight glasses of milk a day. Honestly now, aren't curves much prettier than angles? And when cubist types go out of style and women want to get back to normal I recommend the milk cure to their attention.

An Easy Cure.

"A milk cure is an easy thing for me to take, because I am not a particularly carnivorous animal. I believe firmly in eating vegetables in great quantities and eating very sparingly of meat. A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal for hot weather diet.

"But I really don't believe in extremes—enough sleep—eight hours for a woman who is using up her supply of energy in the strain of brain work; enough nourishing food, with chocolates most earnestly omitted; enough fresh air, enough play, and, above all, enough reading to keep you in touch with big thoughts, new ideas in the world's progress. With enough of all these things sanely blended and leavened with ambition to find out what you can do and energy to do it, we ought all have the beauty of clean, sane health, at any rate, ought we not?"

Answering question with question, I queried: "But for the beauty that allures the eye, don't you think we can all cultivate a bit of that over and above our natural dower?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Norman, "I think we can, and we should, too. Now, after she is about 22, almost any woman's facial muscles begin to sag a bit. If she can afford a dollar a week, I think every woman should go to a good massuesse and have those muscles trained upward again. If not, I think one treatment and a careful observation of methods are well worth while. Then the purchase of a jar of good cold cream, and the woman can start muscle building on her own account.

"Some people think it so foolish, almost immoral, to try to save beauty. Now, would these very people wear suits that needed pressing and sponging and braid sewed on? Well, I think we should keep or bodies in at least as good trim as our clothes—clean and in the pink of well-cared-for condition.

Easily Acquired.

"Then if we are as sensible about learning what to do with our looks as we are about proudly developing any talent we happen to have, a reputation for beauty's charming sister—attractiveness—ought to be easily acquired. I know a very pretty girl who sometimes looks attractive quite accidentally, but only sometimes. She simply does not know whether her hair should be parted over her left eye or worn pompadour. She has no idea whether her hats should have tall quills in front or droopy bows at the back. A mirror, a little common sense and proper independence of fads would teach her the simple solution to what ought not be a puzzle at all.

"But truly, I don't think we can be a beautiful race until we give the generations beauty to inherit. Heredity to give you strength and power and beauty is the greatest beauty secret of all I am sure. Because with a fine heredity a healthy body is almost assured, and a fine mind and a strong character will be present too, and with these things the finest type of beauty will be easy to realize. Surely you think so, too?" concluded Christine Norman, lifting a rose-flushed face lit with great earnest eyes and pulsing with vitality that makes of her red-gold hair a beautiful aureole.

And surely we all must think that the finest type of beauty is a thing we all may strive toward—a healthy body glowing with spirit and soul.

I have the usual horror of getting too thin.

When I start losing I proceed to drink seven glasses of milk a day.

Curves are prettier than angles.

I believe firmly in eating vegetables in large quantities and meat sparingly.

A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal.

I think every woman should go to a good masseuse.

Miss Christine Norman.

NO CHANCE FOR FRANK AS 1914 TURTLE BOSS

By Jo Williams.

MEMPHIS, July 10.—Stick a pin here. Charley Frank will not manage the 1914 Memphis club. Whether Bill Bernhard will be returned or not is a matter yet to be determined. The moral cinch is, however, that if a change is made it will in no way concern the present president-manager of the New Orleans Pelicans. It is quite probable that Frank will not be back at New Orleans next season, but as to his assuming charge of the Turtles there is about as much truth in the report as there are red corpuscles in a Bermuda onion.

Perhaps the foregoing needs explanation. When the Pelicans hit the larded lane some five weeks ago, that ubiquitous person, "One in the know," hustled through with the information that Frank, tiring of his New Orleans investment, had made arrangements with the Memphis club president whereby he was to succeed Bernhard at the close of the current campaign.

The yarn originated in Birmingham. Immediately and without undue hesitation it was given the well-known and emphatic pooh-pooh, locally. Yet it refused to wither and fade away, as is the tragic wont of the average canard. Mique Finn strengthened it by offering to wager a Stetson that the rumored change would come to pass. Mique refused to state where he got his tip. "Just linger around and ye shall receive the ocular proof," was the Celt's evasive retort.

Finn and his downtrodden slaves of baildom spent an off day in this city, and right away the Frank vs. Bernhard affair was revived.

* * *

WHEREUPON, Mr. Coleman, who is connected with the local club in the vague capacity of majority stockholder, president, traveling secretary and general overseer of players and premises, clutched the occasion to unburden himself of large quantities of free and forensic speech, a peculiarity not uncommon with ball magnates. Among other things, Mr. Coleman delivered: "So far I have not given the advisability of changing managers a thought. I can not say just now whether or not Bernhard will be with us again next season. He may and he may not. But one thing is certain. Charley Frank will not be Bill's successor, if one is named. There is absolutely no chance, and those interested in the matter may rest assured that my word is final. Where and from whom the ridiculous yarn originated is a mystery to me. The report that I have been negotiating with Frank for weeks in regard to a change is a fabrication of the veriest sort. Neither Frank nor myself has ever discussed the matter. Indeed, I doubt if Frank himself ever dreamed of returning here. The Dutchman will never manage a Memphis ball club as long as I am in charge."

So much for the "well-founded report."

$4,000 Offered by Sutton for E. Brown

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Larry Sutton, scout for the Brooklyn National League club, who has been in Nashville for the past ten days looking over Southern League players, announced last night that he had made an offer of $4,000 to the Montgomery club for Pitcher Elmer Brown for delivery at the end of this season.

Sutton was so impressed with the masterly game pitched by E. Brown against the Vols last week that he immediately opened negotiations for the brilliant Billiken slabman. His first offer was $3,500, but he willingly met the above price of $4,000, which was set by Manager Dobbs.

"Elmer Brown is not only by long odds the best pitcher I have seen in the Southern League this year," said the Brooklyn scout, "but he is one of the most promising boys I have seen in many seasons."

Up to the time of Sutton's departure for Cincinnati the deal for Brown had not been closed, but it was stated by Sutton that he had urged President Ebbets, of the Dodgers, to lose no time in landing the mainstay of the Montgomery pitching staff.

HERE'S SOME BATTLE, WHAT?

CHICAGO, July 10.—Marty Cutler is en route to-day to Clovis, N. Mex., where he boxes Carl Morris, the Oklahoma giant, July 16. The battle is scheduled to go fifteen rounds, and the winner will be proclaimed heavyweight champion of the Southwest.

Lupus Worst Form of Skin Diseases

Here is a Home Treatment that Overcomes even Worst Cases.

Lupus or Any Other Skin Disease Will Go Skulking Away If You Use S. S. S.

A tiny pimple spreads to the side of the face and often covers the cheeks and bridge of the nose. It is very destructive to the tissues of the skin. No external treatments will overcome it, as the cause of lupus is from impurities in the blood supply. The only known method of cure is to get the blood supply under the control of S. S. S., the famous blood specific. Its action is quite remarkable and has direct influence upon the network of small blood vessels and glands in the skin.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and insist upon having it. For illustrated book on skin diseases write The Swift Specific Co., 183 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga. HUGGINS BEST OF PLAYERS IN TENN. TOURNEY

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 10.—The finals in the Tennessee State championship tennis tournament now in progress in this city are expected to be reached Friday afternoon. In that case the championship match between the winners of the tourney and Carlton Y. Smith, of Atlanta, present State champion, will be fought out Saturday. Local sharks predict that the match will narrow down to either Huggins or Smith of Nashville as the winner of the present tourney.

Charles Rodgers of Knoxville former champion, was eliminated Wednesday afternoon by Huggins in two straight sets, 7-5, 6-1. Rodgers had previously defeated Cleage of Knoxville, and Foster, also of this city.

Chattanooga has only one entry, Alex Guerry, while Nashville is represented by Parrish, Caldwell, Huggins and Smith.

Some excellent matches have been pulled off thus far during the tourney, Smith of Nashville defeated Wester of Kansas City in a beautiful match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

By defeating Rodgers and Lowry of this city, both crack players, Huggins is favorite as the winner. Much interest has been manifested in the tourney and large crowds have been in attendance each day.

RIVERS HITS MILKMAN; NOW HE'S IN TROUBLE

VENTURA, CAL., July 10.—Joe Rivers, lightweight pugilist, must appear in court here July 16 to answer a charge of having broken the jaw of a milkman who recently disputed Rivers' right to the road while the pugilist was driving his motor car. Rivers' bond was fixed at $500.

PASTIMING.

When you pay your money to see a stunt athletic,
And you sit upon a sunny bleacher seat,
And you see a stunt that's awfully pathetic,
It is time for you to raise your voice and bleat.

When the players spend the afternoon in stalling,
And in wishing that the game had not begun,
And the manager persists in vainly hauling,
The rooter's life is not a happy one.

We note by the papers that several hundred persons clamored outside the Cracker club's office to get their money back on Fourth of July. This shows that the birth rate has increased to 120 per hour.

If the Atlanta management is endeavoring to make itself unpopular there is evidence that said management is headed in that direction at the rate of approximately 8,000 miles per hour.

In an indirect way we note that Tom O'Rourke has been affected by the recent heat. Tom has agreed to become manager of Carl Morris.

When one reads the report that one wrestler choked another half to death, one deplores the fact that he stopped so soon.

If those surgeons who cut out Marty O'Toole's appendix will only cut out his wildness, one Fred Clarke will be much obliged.

If the Athletics could only play the Yanks all season their average would be .996⅘, or thereabouts.

Joe Jackson still leads the American League in batting. This is due to the fact that he never has ruined his eyesight reading literature.

FODDER FOR FANS

Rube Marquard, of the Giants, is pitching in his old-time form again. He twirled the Giants to their fourteenth consecutive victory, allowing but four hits. The best any of the Cubs got off him was a two-bagger.

* * *

"Babe" Adams, of the Pirates' pitching staff, allowed the Phillies but one clean hit, while the Quakers used up four pitchers trying to beat Pittsburg. Their efforts were useless, for the Phillies were shut out.

* * *

By being beaten by the Reds the Brooklyn Dodgers reduced the gap separating them from the second division in the National League. But 14 points now separate the Dodgers from the Pirates, the latter being leaders of the second division.

* * *

The New York Yankees were the only Eastern team which did not win in the West yesterday.

Pitcher Frank Harrington, of the Lynn club, of the New England League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Reds for $4,000.

Dauss, of the Detroit Tigers, beats the Washington Senators as often as he goes against them. He has met the Senators three times and has beaten them three times.

Umpire Hank O'Day, veteran National League arbitrator, is seriously ill in a Chicago sanitarium.

* * *

Although Cleveland outhit Philadelphia, the latter won because of the Naps' conservative base-running.

Honus Wagner, the hard hitting shortstop of the Pirates, nearly cracked a rib laughing when he heard the report that he is all in as a regular. Honus says he will be back in his old form when his injured knee mends.

CRACKER STAKE WILL BE RUN FRIDAY NIGHT

IN the belief that "Tex" Richards will be no match for the other Motordrome stars in a long race, Manager Noon Hudson has scheduled a big 7-mile feature for Friday night. It will be the final heat of the Cracker Sweepstakes. Manager Bill Smith, of the Atlanta club, will start the race and it will go seven miles, which is further than any race has gone in Atlanta this year.

A 5-mile race about marks the limit of a motorcycle sprinter's distance. He can stand up for five miles pretty well. After that time there is no chance. Machines and bodies give down under the strain.

In races over five miles it takes a different sort of rider. And in this long-distance stuff Shields and Lockner ought to star. They are two of the greatest endurance stars in the world. They proved it when they won the famous 24-hour race, the most grueling contest ever staged at a motordrome. Of course, it was a team event and the men were on and off the track at all times, but it was the most awful test of endurance to which a motor rider was ever put. This 7-mile stuff ought to suit Lockner and Shields to perfection.

Of course, Richards does not necessarily have it all his own way, even in the shorter races. McNeil's J. A. P. went out again Tuesday night, this time with a couple of bolts missing from his magneto. And Graves' new Excelsior did not prove to be running right.

McNeil swears that never before did he have such luck as this season. He claims all 1913 honors as the Jinx Kid; but he alleges that he has never before been the victim of so many mischances. He believes he has changed his luck at last, and at any rate he has taken every possible precaution against accidents.

RINGSIDE NOTES

It looks very much as if Los Angeles fans are to see a heavyweight bout some time next month. Tom McCarey, coast promoter, is trying to stage a Gunboat Smith-Arthur Pelky match, and has already secured Smith's consent for such a fight. McCarey is now dickering with Tommy Burns, manager for Pelky.

* * *

Jeff O'Connell, the veteran featherweight, who recently was defeated by Matty McCue, will meet Freddie Enock in a six-round battle at Aurora, Ill., on July 17.

* * *

Kid Pusky, local featherweight, is after a match with any 122-pounder in Atlanta. Pusky is particularly anxious to get on with Kid Young or Charlie Lee. J. P. Ellis, manager of Pusky, says he will give either boy a $100 side bet. Ellis can be reached at 30 Clifton Street, Kirkwood, Ga., phone Decatur 226.

* * *

Reports from New Orleans state that Frankie Russell and Johnny Lore are in great shape for their twenty-round tussle in the Pelican City Sunday afternoon. Russell and Lore recently met in a ten-round battle, with the latter having a slight shade.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion of the world, says he will be ready to defend his title on Labor Day. His stomach, which has been bothering him for several weeks, is again in shape. His opponent will probably be Kid Williams, and the pair will most likely don the gloves in Tom McCarey's arena at Vernon, Cal.

* * *

A return bout, this time of ten rounds, between "Muggsy" McGraw and Addie Brennan would draw a capacity house. McGraw is now taking boxing lessons from Jim Corbett, former heavyweight champion.

* * *

The National Sporting Club of London, where Bombardier Wells is a big favorite, hunted the British Isle for an easy opponent for the Englishman and found him in the person of Patsy Mahoney. Of course, Wells won.

Wonder what Billy Nolan, the bounced manager of Willie Ritchie, thinks of the lightweight's easy victory over Joe Rivers. It sure was a glorious Fourth for Willie.

* * *

Leach Cross is still on the coast, undecided whether to remain there in hopes of getting on with Willie Ritchie or to jump over to New York for some easy ten-round money. McCarey is trying to get the champion for a Labor Day date with the Easterner. Should Ritchie refuse, Joe Rivers may get the match.

* * *

Marcel Thomas, the French welterweight, is in Philadelphia trying to get on with some boys of his division. The lack of good 142-pound boys on this side makes it hard to find a suitable opponent for him.

* * *

Eddie Campi has asked McCarey to match him with the winner of the Williams-Ledoux bout on July 15. Campi has already defeated Ledoux.

* * *

Tom Tortorich is still after Willie Ritchie's signature to a set of articles to meet Jack Britton. He has offered $20,000 for the title go.

SAGINAW, MICH., July 10.—Pitcher "Lefty" Schwenk, of the local South Michigan League team, has just hung up a record which is believed to be unequaled in recent years of organized baseball. In four days he pitched four complete games and finished another—36 innings—in which he struck out 33 men in the 36 innings and allowed 21 hits, which netted his opponents seven runs.

UNCLE SAM TO HELP TOURING BALL TEAMS

By James Clarkson.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The United States Government has decided to take recognition of the fact that the Chicago White Sox and New York Giants are going to take a tour of the world during the fall and winter months. A letter to that effect has reached President Comiskey's office.

Now, when you come to study a little, than means a whole lot to the interested parties of that wonderful tour, on which the performers of Comiskey's world-famous White Sox and John McGraw's always fighting Giants are to show to the other civilized nations of the world what a wonderful pastime baseball really is.

Callahan Called on Bryan.

When the White Sox played in Washington during their Eastern invasion early in June, Manager Jimmy Callahan called on William Jennings Bryan. The call was for the express purpose of interesting the Secretary of State in the contemplated trip of the baseball outfit. Colonel Bryan has never been much of a student of baseball—in fact, he inquired of the surprised Callahan whom the White Sox represented. He also wanted to know where McGraw's Giants hailed from. He forgot to ask whether or not all of McGraw's men were huge of size.

Wilson Approves of Plan.

After the short interview Callahan left the Secretary's office, and while he was treated courteously, he was none too favorably impressed. He had an idea. "If I could only see the big boss—President Wilson—I might be able to get better satisfaction," thought Cal. To make a long story very short, Cal was accorded the interview with the President and the Executive informed him that he would not only do all in his power to make the trip a success, but that he believed in it and he personally hoped it would terminate as expected.

Bryan Writes to Callahan.

Yesterday we learned from Commy that he had recently received a letter from Secretary Bryan. When asked what news the letter brought, if any, Commy stated that Mr. Bryan had written him most cordially concerning the proposed trip. Furthermore, he requested Commy to send him, as soon as possible, the itinerary of the trip. Once he gets that, he has promised to notify the American Consuls in the various cities to be visited to give all the help possible to the visit of the Sox-Giant combine. So, after all, it will be seen that Cal's short visit to President Wilson last month was not merely a press stunt. "With the old U. S. Government in favor of the trip and throwing favors in our way, we should show a lot of speed in the foreign lands," said Cal yesterday when referring to the Bryan letter.

Bryan's Commoner Is Made Monthly Paper

LINCOLN, NEB., July 10.—Secretary of State Bryan has announced that with the current issue the Commoner, which he established in 1901, will cease publication as a weekly, and will be issued monthly. The resignation of Richard L. Metcalfe, appointed Governor of Panama, has left the Commoner without an editor.

Under the new arrangement Mr. Bryan says he will be able to give attention to more editorial writing. The Commoner's size will be doubled. C. W. Bryan will continue in direct control.

Finn's Team in Hopeless Slump

By Percy H. Whiting.

NOW comes the tug of war! The Mobile Gulls are here for three games with the Crackers. The Gulls are in a slump. Of their last twelve outs they have lost eight.

Every game the locals can take away from Mike Finn's team is all clear profit.

It is reported that the Gulls are crabbing at each other and quarreling with umpires, opposing players and even with the genial Mike Finn himself.

Their hearts are "broke."

Of course, they are a scrapping club, even in a rout, and they will fight along and win many a game. But if ever the Crackers had a chance to make money off the league leaders now is the time.

* * *

THE Gulls' slump will never stop this side of fourth or fifth place. Mark the prediction. For they've quit and they are quarreling among themselves.

In a recent interview Finn stated that he would not strengthen the club.

"How can we?" Finn is reported to have said, "We have no money to strengthen with."

True it is that the Gulls, after making an amazing showing, aren't drawing at all. They don't have any attendance on the home grounds. The Gulls' fans believe their team is sure to win a pennant and they have quit caring a hang.

If ever proof were needed that Mobile is a hopeless baseball town it is forthcoming now. The town has quit worse than the team. In fact, it was the quitting of the fans, the lack of financial support and the knocking over defeats that finally got the Gulls on the run.

* * *

NOT since the year Newt Fisher won a pennant with an $11-team has any club that cost as little gone as high as the 1913 Gulls.

Finn probably established a precedent in perfecting a league-leading team with the cash expenditure of $2,000.

After the close of last year's race, Demaree was forwarded to the New York Giants for $10,000. Remaining on the twirling staff were Campbell, Berger and Cavet. For $5,000 Robertson was secured from the Indianapolis club, while Hogg was obtained for a small sum. Thus the twirling staff was rounded for a few shekels.

In the infield, Paulette, Starr and O'Dell were returned. Stock was shunted from the Giants in the Demaree trade. Thus the infield was perfected without an expenditure of a cent. The outfield, consisting of Jacobson, Robertson and Clark, was secured for a pittance. Jacobson was returned by the Giants at the beginning of the season for the price of recall in 1912. Robertson was grabbed from the Giants on an optional agreement, costing $500. Clark was the property of the Gulls, farmed out to the Texas League, and cost Mickey nothing. When Jackson was put out, McGill, gathered in the Gull fold at the opening of the season for the signing, was recalled from Pensacola. The catchers were grabbed without loosening a kopeck from the coffers, as Larry Brown was a free agent and Schmidt was obtained via the same route.

* * *

IF the Crackers can tear a hole in the shattered Gulls and do some damage to the Billikens next week they will pull out for the South with the prospects bright. They will have a hard trip ahead of them, but they will be right up in the running. Of course, the Southern trip is likely to mean a big slump. But when the club gets home again it ought to be near enough to the top to win a pennant.

The Crackers are back in there fighting again and that means trouble for any opposition.

JENNINGS STILL AN IDOL WITH DIAMOND FANS

By Sid C. Keener.

BACK in the days of 1907-1908-1909, Hughey Jennings was being lauded as the smartest of baseball generals. All around the circuit there was praise for the skipper of the Detroit Tigers. In a single season he developed a sixth-place it on top for three successive years in the American League.

But while the Tigers were prospering and folks spoke kind words to Hughey, he always replied:

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me. They're winning the games and I'm just one of them. You don't see me punching out a hit in the pinch or fooling the batter when he must be fooled."

He Had the Dope.

After three straight years of success and prosperity, the tide turned. They don't herald Jennings the greatest of all greats. In the eyes of the fans, Hughey is not such a brainy fellow any more.

But Jennings' statement came true. The remarks he gave out when the Tigers were winning the pennants can be renewed and show why the Tigers aren't the same terrors of the league.

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me!"

Why aren't the Tigers winning pennants like they did in 1907-1908-1909? The answer comes by comparing the team that won for the Tigers those years and the team Hughey Jennings is directing to-day.

The Old Stars Not There.

There's quite a difference in the class of the Detroit tribe now.

Among the important missing athletes are: Wild Bill Donovan, George Mullin, Tyrus Cobb, Eddie Summers, Davy Jones, Matty McIntyre, Jim Delehanty, Claude Rossman, Eddie Killifan, Herman Schaefer, Charley O'Leary and possibly a few more.

In the places of these athletes who were stars of the first magniture at that time, are Bobby Veach, "Lefty" High, Oscar Vitt, Bill Louden, Texas Hall, John Dubuc, Zamloch, Clauss, House and a few more.

Jennings hasn't a pitcher who can go through a season and win 25 games and lose but 4, as "Wild Bill" did in 1907. Further, Eddie Summers, who used to beat the Athletics almost every time he pitched; Killian, who could halt the White Sox and Red Sox, and George Mullin, who won almost every time he took the hill, are gone and forgotten.

Even commanding a team that is down in the second division, Hughey Jennings remains an idol in baseball. His general character and make-up; his style of coaching; his personality; his way of arguments, not roughing and fighting with the umpires, continually have made Jennings such an idol.

He Used Smooth System.

It was the Jennings system that made Hughey popular with everybody. When he entered the American League he brought with him a new style. It was common on the diamond to see Fielder Jones, Clark Griffith, Jimmy Collins, Joe Cantillon and that kind rush up to the ump and kick up a rowdy fuss on every close decision.

Also, it was an every-day sight to see some managers bawl out the players during the course of the game. Jennings had a different system. He accepted the verdicts from the field official with an "All right, boys; let it go at that," and when one of his side turned a bad play, Hughey simply used to pat him on the back and say a kind word on the ball field.

Bisland Horns Into Hero Class

His Hit Wins Game for Crackers

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN these piping days when pennant aspirations are beating strongly in human and other breasts, a hero is born each day. To-day the laurel, the bay, the Richard K. Fox belt, or whatever insignia is proper for a Casablanca of the ball lot goes to Mr. Bisland, shortstopper of considerable renown. If the winning streak of the Crackers continues much longer, Bill Smith will have to search around for new hero material or crown the bat boy. For within the past two weeks there is hardly a Cracker who has not felt the touch of the accolade.

Mr. Bisland horned into the Leonidas class in the most approved and dramatic fashion. He was placed there by the generous and gentle Rube Kissinger, who figured that Wally Smith had been acclaimed enough and it was time to let another's heart warm to the shouts of an admiring populace.

* * *

THE hero stuff was pulled in the fourth inning of yesterday's pastiming, which was about as good a spot as any. The battle with the Memphii had rocked along for three sessions without any tangible results. Kissinger was working his usual cool, heady game, and the Crackers did not look particularly formidable against his hurling.

In the fourth, though, things happened. Tommy Long opened with a measly pop back of first base, which Bill Abstein couldn't grab, and when the ball carromed with reverse English the right fielder scampered on for a two-base hit. Welchonce, to display his batting versatility, eased a bunt down the third base line and beat it out.

Alperman then cracked sharply to third. Ward messed the ball, but, to the surprise of the stands, Welchonce remained true and faithful to the first cushion and wouldn't budge, evidently thinking the ball had been caught on a line. How he thought so is the eighth wonder, but let it go at that. Alperman reached first, but as Welchonce was also there one of them had to move back to the bench.

Rudderham eeny-meeny-miny-moed and picked Welchonce for this duty. Bailey followed by striking out, but Alperman had swiped second during the whiffing.

As the formidable Smith approached the pan, Kissinger and Seabough held pow-wow and passed the third sacker.

* * *

BISLAND strode haughtily, but not too confidently, to the plate. Inasmuch as he hadn't registered in the hit column since the morning game of July 4, the fans were not altogether cheerful.

On the first one over, though, he hit high and far into right field, and Baerwald, who had been playing close to center, couldn't reach the pill. All those ahead of Bisland scampered in, and so did he when the peg to get him at third went to the grandstand. The laurel was immediately brought on.

With the single exception of Mr. Bisland's being present with the punch at the proper moment, the game was featureless, though Dent hurled in improved form. The score was 5 to 2.

EARL MACK ACCEPTS 31 CHANCES IN SINGLE GAME

RALEIGH, N. C., July 10.—Earl Mack, son of Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, is believed to have made a new world's record for chances accepted in a ball game here yesterday between the Raleigh and Durham clubs of the Carolina League. Mack accepted 31 chances, 29 put-outs and two assists, without the least sign of an error. The game went for 18 innings and was won by Raleigh, 4 to 3. Young Mack is manager and first baseman of the Raleigh club.

"RED" DONAHUE DYING.

PHILADELPHIA, July 10.—Frank ("Red") Donahue, one-time pitcher of the Phillies, St. Louis Nationals and later Cleveland and Detroit clubs of the American League, is slowly dying at his home in this city of tuberculosis.

MAJORS BID FOR PLAYER; $15,000 FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, July 10.—Outfielder Larry Chappelle, of the Milwaukee club, will be sold at auction here July 15. Only a few of the big league clubs have already bid for the youngster. Both Chicago clubs, Detroit, Brooklyn, Cincinnati and Cleveland are in the market. It is said that $15,000 has been offered for the youngster.

U. S. TEAM MEETS GERMANS IN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND, July 10.—The American and German tennis representatives clash to-day in the second round of the Dwight F. Davis international lawn tennis cup matches. Although the weather has not been at all favorable for tennis, Harold H. Hackett, captain of the United States teams, says the American players are in good form. The Germans are complaining of the climate. Yesterday's draw is looked upon as being favorable to the American players.

Froitzheim is Germany's strongest singles player, so it is considered just as well for the American team that he should meet Maurice E. McLaughlin, America's champion, in the first day's play. The showing made by Kreutzer, of Germany, in the all English championship, hardly justifies the belief that he can beat R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia.

Although the Americans are the favorites for the doubles match, they must be in the best form to beat Germany's doubles representatives, Rahe and Kleinscroth.

BUD ANDERSON WON'T BE ABLE TO BOX FOR MONTHS

LOS ANGELES, July 10.—With Bud Anderson in the hospital and not likely to be in a condition to go into the ring for several months, the prospects for a local lightweight match simmers down to a Cross-Rivers battle apparently. Of course, the Harry Trendall match with Cross appears all but closed, and it will be a good one but for a date a little later in the season. Rivers and Cross would be the biggest drawing card possible.

FRANK GOALBY SOLD TO ROANOKE UNDER OPTION

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Frank Goalby, former second baseman of the Vols, has been sold to the Roanoke club under an optional agreement. He may be recalled at any time his services are needed. Goalby, in a recent series in Mobile, was badly spiked in the hand by Dave Robertson, and will not leave to join the Roanoke club until the wound heals. His fielding while with Nashville was brilliant, but his batting was very weak.

The team of Chappelle and Fisher is the favorite in the 100-mile race to be held here to-night.

JIMMY ARCHER INJURES FINGER; OUT FOR WEEKS

NEW YORK, July 10.—Jimmy Archer, the crack catcher of the Cubs, who was disabled by a foul tip from Chief Meyers' bat in Tuesday's game, was more seriously injured than at first supposed. It was thought he had merely suffered from a split finger, but when a surgeon got to work on the backstop he found that the middle finger of the right hand not only was split, but also dislocated at the middle joint.

It will be several weeks before Archer will again get into the game.

FARMERS WIN BY CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Mutual Producing and Distributing Societies Get Credit for Vast Increase in Crops.

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM.
Ohio State Senator, Member of American Agricultural Commission, and Secretary of the Production Group.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 10.—Thus far we have passed 60 days studying the various principles underlying the success of European agriculture. By dividing into sections and groups we have covered every phase of agriculture and studied the best methods pursued in every country in Europe.

Without question, co-operative credit and co-operative producing and distributing societies have accomplished a great deal for European farmers during the last 25 years. The reaching of scientific agriculture colleges in short course schools and on farms during the growing season has had much to do with the vast increase in crop production. Encouragement by the various Governments has been another important factor.

Interest in Every Country.

In every country visited a strong realization of the importance of agriculture is manifested. While methods differ in various countries the same underlying principles are found everywhere.

Highly important principles are the conservation and utilization of every natural resource, the scientific application of manures and chemical fertilizers and the great systems of co-operative credits, which in reality make all the other principles operative.

I have visited Italy, Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. In each of these countries we found some special lines of work more advanced than in the other countries. But when we group these special lines and attempt to apply them to our own country we find one thing lacking in America, namely co-operative organizations.

The intensive methods of farming employed in Italy are applicable to many sections of country. The Goverment policy of helping farmers to own their own homes is bringing many Italians back from America.

Swiss Farmers in Union.

In Switzerland more than one-third of all farmers belong to co-operative organizations that are banded into a central organization entitled the Swiss Farmers' Union, which can control the Government policy. Through these organizations the farmers sell all their products and buy all their necessities.

Co-operative credit and distribution societies have played an important part in the rapid development of Germany's agriculture during the past 40 years. Germany produces more than twice as much to the acre as the United States does and from land that has been farmed for centuries. It is now up to us to double our production.

Denmark has made a world-wide reputation through her co-operative exporting societies by guaranteeing every egg and every pound of butter and bacon. Each egg is stamped with the date when laid and the producer's number is recorded in the National Federation's register. Any complaint may be traced directly back to the real producer. Here again farmers have the controlling voice in Government and Denmark is prospering immensely.

Holland's Cheese Fame.

Holland, as a dairy country, has attained fame for her fine cheeses. Her Government exacts a high standard of excellency by rigid enforcement of the pure food laws.

In France the work of the Ministry of Agriculture through co-operative credit and production societies is rapidly coming to the front. When the final report of this commission is made the French methods of co-operative credit will receive deserved consideration.

In America we need long-time credit, conservation of the soils, fertility and improved methods of distribution.

WILSON CURRENCY BILL IS ATTACKED

Measure Gives Politicians Control Over $10,000,000,000 Banking Power, Says Financier.

DULUTH, MINN., July 10.—George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial Bank of Chicago, the second largest bank of the nation, to-day assailed as revolutionary the Wilson administration currency bill in a speech before the Minnesota Bankers' Association.

"We are confronted with a plan," he asserted, "which proposes to compel the banks to turn over to a political committee virtual control of about $10,000,000,000 of banking power, the result of 50 years' conscientious labor on the part of officers of 7,500 National banks in the United States."

His chief objection was based upon what he termed the political control over such great banking power. He saw demoralizing influences in the proposed plan of decentralization of money and credits. While he believed in Federal supervision, he said it should be regulatory, not administrative.

"I claim," he concluded, "that the amount of bank notes issued should be determined by the requirements of business rather than by guess."

Acid in Oconee Kills 10,000 Pounds Fish

ATHENS, July 10.—Judge Brand has issued a temporary injunction restraining the Empire Chemical Company from pouring waste acid in a branch that empties into the Oconee River, a few miles below Athens. ATLANTANS SCORE TAX ON FUTURES

Chamber of Commerce Files Protest With U. S. Senators on Cotton Tariff Amendment.

A protest against the passage of the amendment to the tariff bill pending in the United States Senate has been made by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The measure taxes cotton futures dealings.

The protest was made at a meeting of the Atlanta body Wednesday afternoon. Letters were sent to the two Georgia Senators and to Congressman William Schley Howard, urging them to oppose the "rider."

F. M. Inman was chairman of a special committee which handled the matter. He made the report recommending that the chamber go on record against the bill. Other members of the committee were T. A. Nicolson, J. S. Akers and E. S. Ehney.

Objection to the bill was based on the charge that it would eliminate the cotton exchange, would throw the farmers into the hands of the spinners, thus forcing the price of cottor down.

The members of the committee held that it would do away with the cotton merchant who deals directly with the farmer and country merchant, in that it would prevent him from using future contracts.

Products Exhibit Committee Named

Negotiations toward renting or buying a home for Atlanta-made goods reached the committee stage Wednesday when the Chamber of Commerce appointed Brooks Morgan, V. H. Kriegshaber, Bolling Jones and J. K. Orr to decide whether buying, leasing, or renting with the privilege of purchasing presented the best advantages.

The three propositions were embraced in offers considered Wednesday. It was intimated the committee favored leasing with the option of purchasing.

Big Sewer the Gate To a Gambling Den

PITTSBURG, PA., July 10.—A well-equipped gambling den beneath the street the main entrance to which was a big city sewer was raided by the police late last night. Twenty-two men were captured as well as a large amount of money and gambling paraphernalia.

When the police swooped down on the players consternation reigned, but as there was only one manner of egress or exit, the entire crowd was captured.

REORGANIZATION IS ASSURED AT STATE FARM

Board to Ask Assembly for Funds to Retain $30,000 Federal Appropriation.

GRIFFIN, GA., July 10.—The board of directors of the State Experiment Station Wednesday voted to comply with the suggestions of National Inspector Allen and to petition the Assembly for an appropriation sufficient to carry on all physical work of the station. With this in view, a committee, consisting of J. J. Flint, J. D. Price, J. H. Mobley, J. W. McWhorter and R. J. H. DeLoach, was appointed.

Should the Legislature provide funds, the $30,000 Federal appropriation will be used exclusively in making scientific experiments from which increased knowledge may be gained by the farmers, as the national department specifies.

Director DeLoach also announced his intention of reorganizing the station for experimental farm work rather than for a model farm. A new feature will be a department of animal husbandry, of which Professor Perry VanEwing, recently connected with experimental farms in Ohio and Kansas, will be the head. The appointment was made Wednesday.

Dr. E. W. Allen, inspector of the National Agricultural Department, presented his plan of reorganization and the terms of the National Government in regard to the $30,000 appropriation.

Those present at the board meeting were J. D. Price, Chancellor D. C. Barrow, Judge J. J. Flint, J. W. McWhorter, J. H. Mobley, R. C. Neely, J. W. Andrews, F. R. Mann, M. G. Gamble, W. H. Henderson and Dr. E. W. Allen, of the National Department of Agriculture.

Alert Friends Turn 'Surprise' on Pair Wedded 'Secretly'

When Miss Myrtle McLean, of 250 Bass Street, and Gordon Hanson, of 168 Davis Street, stole away to the minister's Wednesday night they thought themselves the only persons in on the secret. Arrangements for their marriage in November had been made, but they decided to steal a march and surprise their friends.

Much to their surprise, however, a number of friends surprised them by appearing suddenly and offering congratulations. There was nothing to do but confess.

The marriage was performed by the Rev. John F. Purser, 204 Lee Street.

The latter has decided to officially adopt her little sister, Jessie, four and a half years old, who also was brought home by the Congressman.

Trades Unions Want Lake Open at Night

The Atlanta Federation of Trades adopted a resolution Wednesday night favoring the opening of Piedmont Park lake to bathers at night as well as day. A committee will take the matter before Council and urge that the lake be made available.

Hundreds are engaged in the day and can not get to the lake, members of the Federation say.

38 BABIES GIVEN FREE MILK EACH DAY

All Work in Campaign Is Done by Committee Members to Cut Expenses.

Thirty-eight babies, whose mothers are unable to purchase proper food for them, are being supplied daily with pure, fresh milk, bought from the fund raised by the Atlanta Mothers' Congress. Every day brings names of new babies who require assistance from the milk fund.

The campaign is being waged at a minimum expense, all the work being done by members of the committee. A committee of young girls has been of great aid.

A check for $25 was received Thursday morning from a prominent Atlanta woman, this being the second check for that amount contributed by a society leader.

Milk bottles, placed in the downtown stores, to receive contributions from the public, are each day adding a small sum to the fund, and individuals are mailing donations to Mrs. John Rowlett, chairman of the committee. Still, more money is needed.

"No one realizes the great field that is open in Atlanta for this work," declared Mrs. Rowlett at her home, 186 East Pine Street, Thursday. "There are hundreds of babies who do not get proper nourishment. So far but few contributions have come in. We need money if the work is to be continued."

ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS

One Thing We Do Not Claim For It

That it is a new discovery—it is not. There is nothing new about it except the wonderful new cures it is making daily. The medicine itself has been in use over a half century, and to introduce and keep before the public a family remedy for 50 years is no little task. The reason we have been able to do it is because the merit is there. It has only been accomplished by a strict adherence to the original formula, using only the very best roots, herbs, barks and gums that nature affords for the relief of the many distresses the human flesh is heir to.

To-day we find but few physicians who claim that minerals are just as good and efficient as are the roots, herbs, etc. You know that epsom salts will act, but the mere fact of acting does not mean cure, and is not what constitutes the remedial virtue of ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS; but it is the perfect combination of nature's remedies that enter its composition for the relief of Indigestion, Constipation, Intestinal and Gastric Disorders, Torpidity of the Liver, Colic, Cramp Colic, Pains in Back, Hips, Shoulders and Sides, Neuralgia, Ovarian Pains, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Rheumatism and all Nervous Complaints.

Now, we want to know every reader of this paper that is suffering with any of the above troubles. We guarantee to help you. Come to see us at Coursey & Munn's, where we are demonstrating this great tonic. If you live out of town, send us an order and we will return your money if you are not satisfied. $1.00 a bottle, $5.00 for 6 bottles. Coursey & Munn's, corner Broad and Marietta.

COTTON LOSES EARLY ADVANCE

Fear of High Temperatures in Texas and Liverpool Buying Cause Sharp Rise.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Old positions were well sustained at the opening of the cotton market to-day and started off 8 points higher, while new crop months were to 2 points lower than Wednesday's final.

New positions were affected by cloudy weather in the eastern half of the belt, suggesting possible showers. Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm. Liverpool bought considerable cotton on the weather prospects. Brokers representing large spot houses were good buyers of new crop positions. The buying was general and offerings light. After the market shaded a few points from the initial range prices rallied some 3 to 5 points from the previous close, where prices were firmly maintained throughout the early session, with the exception of July, which fell back to 12.17, last night's closing quotation.

Strength of Liverpool was attributed chiefly to short covering on fear of an American advance on high temperatures over the triple holiday there.

The official weather for yesterday showed temperature average 102 in Oklahoma and 100 in Texas, with six stations recording 100, seven stations 102, seven stations 104 and one station 106. Today's early record shows it is cooler in Oklahoma, and Sherman, Tex., reports drizzling rain.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 2 to 5 points from the final quotations of Wednesday.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Liverpool came in as due, and quoted spots 5 points higher; sales 8,000 bales. Cables reported the market sustained by short covering before the holidays, fearing advance in New York on the circulation of reports of high temperatures. Liverpool will be closed to-morrow and Saturday on account of the King of England's visit there.

Houston, Tex., reports receipt of the first bale of new cotton from Lyford, Cameron County, Texas. This compares with July 1 last year.

Weather developments overnight were as predicted and favorable. Cooler with showers in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee. Cloudy over entire belt, except in southern half of Texas, where it is fair.

Indications are for generally cloudy weather with more extended showers in Oklahoma and the Central and Eastern States; cooler in the Central belt; generally fair and warm in central and south Texas. Several points in the Central States reported rain this morning.

The market declined at the start, but was soon brought up by the strength of July New York and also on some support in October, which position, New York says, will likely be affected by the very small stock there. It looks as if the intention is to advance the market.

The into-sight for the week looks around 24,000 bales, against 25,293 bales last year. We compare with mill takings of 195,000 bales for this week last year.

FIFTH HEAT PROSTRATION.

CHATTANOOGA, July 10.—Frank Morton, who was overcome by the heat here late yesterday afternoon, is recovering. This was the fifth prostration during the present heat wave.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, July 10.—Around the opening there was some selling by ring speculators, but it was soon apparent there was some cotton wanted from strong sources and a wave of short covering followed, some of which was said to come from Wall Street. Contracts were scarce, especially in October. The buying, it is said, was based on fear of high temperatures in the Southwestern belt and the continued talk of boll-weevil in Texas. Cables from Liverpool stated that the strength there was caused by short covering in fear of high temperatures over the holidays. Some of the larger spot interests were noticeable buyers of new crop. The South was put down as selling, also some of uptown crowd. The market is narrow and is influenced easily either way just now. Agitation in Washington is having a tendency to restrict business and no serious change in prices is looked for pending this legislation.—Anderson.

"If the tax of 50 cents per bale becomes a law the cost of hedging will fall upon the merchant or producer, probably the latter, but as a matter of fact, it is doubted if merchants would be able to hedge at all in any market because the law eliminates the speculator who is theoretically on the opposite side of the hedge.

"A cost of 13 points to trade would kill speculation on American exchanges and kill straddle operations between New York and Liverpool. The English market without straddlers would not be large enough to take care of American hedging, so the only opportunity for a merchant to have a hedge order executed would be when it meets another hedge order the other way.

"Any one familiar with future markets know that these orders would seldom meet, consequently, the law would really kill all opportunity to hedge. Such a situation would drive out all the smaller merchants, leaving the business in the hands of a few rich spot dealers who would have the Southern producer in a merciless grip."—Stevenburg.

Reports of serious boll-weevil damage in Texas, together with timidity on the part of sellers because of the local situation, was responsible for the strength of the market yesterday.

* * *

McFadden and Gwathmey brokers were the leading buyers yesterday, mostly of October, which feels the threat of a depletion in stocks more than any other month. Baruch and Wall Street covered some shorts.

* * *

Sentiment is not unfriendly to the market, traders figuring that with contracts scarce any unfavorable reports will cause a further advance.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas—Panhandle and south clear; central and east cloudy; numerous rains. Oklahoma—North and west clear; balance cloudy; local rains."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Hayward & Clark: "The weather map is very favorable; it shows cloudy over entire belt, except fair in southern half of Texas. Distinctly cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas, with fine rains in Arkansas and parts of Tennessee. Some scattered showers elsewhere. Indications are for cloudy, with scattered showers, and cooler in the central belt.

* * *

Houston, Tex., wires: "First bale received from Lyford, Cameron County, South Texas, and will be sold at auction to-day."

* * *

Cotton summary of The New Orleans Times-Democrat: "The steadiness of yesterday's cotton market was explained in two widely divergent ways. The man who believes that cotton on its merits can take good care of itself said that shorts were experiencing difficulty in obtaining tenderable supplies; that the short interest is still large enough to give trouble, and that the position of the actual bale being a strong one is responsible for reactions upward even when favorable weather would seem to be aiding the bearish cause.

"The man who believes artificial support is responsible for the market's continued show of strength said that talent and trade alike bought new crop deliveries yesterday because the action of the market suggested that July longs were beginning to put the screws to shorts and further strength in July would probably influence new crop deliveries to climb temporarily to higher levels.

"Of course, the weather artists were much in evidence. One faction promised heat waves in the West. Another exploited the comparative records as proof that current temperatures are not excessively high. Still another turned prophet and promised showers and cooler weather in the West."

COTTON SEED OIL.

STOCKS GO UP ON GOOD WAR NEWS

Trade Witnesses a Stampede at Noon — Record Corn Crop Important Factor.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Canadian Pacific, which led the stock market in its downward movement yesterday, turned about today and led an upward trend of prices at the opening. Canadian Pacific opened at 211½ for a gain of ⅝, but soon was selling at 213¼, which was 2⅜ higher than Wednesday's closing.

Union Pacific showed the best strength it has exhibited since the present movement began. Union Pacific climbed to 146 for a net gain of nearly 2 points. United States Steel common advanced 1 point on good buying.

The market was largely influenced by London, Paris and Berlin and a considerable share of the buying at the opening came from the other side. This was inspired by a report from St. Petersburg that the Balkan war probably would be ended this week.

Among other gains were Amalgamated Copper ⅝; Southern Pacific ½; Reading ½; Chino Copper ½; Illinois Central ½; American Car and Foundry ½; St. Paul ⅝ and Erie ⅜.

Wall Street took an optimistic view of the railroad situation the belief prevailing that the trainmen on the eastern lines will not strike, but are maneuvering to force an amendment to the Erdman arbritration law.

The curb was strong.

American in London were strong.

The advance in stocks is due to short covering and a dispatch from St. Petersburg saying that the Balkan war would soon end.

For a time after the opening the market witnessed a stampede and before the advance ceased gains of 1 to nearly 3 points were recorded. Shortly after the first hour, however, recessions appeared, but prices held above yesterday's close. Union Pacific advanced ⅝ to 145¾, Reading reached 157, a gain of ⅜. Lehigh Valley, Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania were up ½. Coper declined ¼. Other issues remained unchanged to a fractional advance. Great Northern preferred issued a 1¾ dividend.

Call money loaned at 2 percent.

Trading was quiet in the last hour. Prices were practically unchanged from the mid-day level. Canadian Pacific sold around 212¼, for a net advance of nearly 2 points on the day. Amalgamated Copper was fractionally higher. Steel sold at 52⅝ and Union Pacific sold around 145¼.

The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

Memphis Wins and Loses in Rail Rate Pine Lumber Cases

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Rates on pine lumber over the Illinois Central from Jackson, Miss., to Memphis, Tenn., were held by the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day to be unreasonable in so far as they exceed 10 cents per 100 pounds.

Lumber, staves and barrel headings rates to Memphis from points East of the Mississippi and South of Vicksburg, except over the New Orleans, Mobile and Chicago Railroad, were found to be unreasonable if they exceed 11 cents per 100 pounds for a one-line haul and 12 cents for a two-line haul.

Proposed advances of 3 per cent in rates on lumber over the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad in Mississippi and Louisiana to Memphis, Tenn., were advised.

STOCK GOSSIPS

With the prospects of a 3,000,000,000-bushel corn crop, it looks as if the railroads would have all they can carry this fall and winter. It looks as if President Wilson would avert the railroad strike. Expect a traders' market for the present, but prefer to buy stocks on breaks rather than sell on rallies.—Potter.

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Moderate profits should appeal to the daily trader for the present. Information channels are pessimistic. Trading movements in the general list, with a somewhat better demand for the leading stocks, may be seen to-day."

* * *

The market responds well to favorable news, due to the large outstanding short interest and the limited supply of stocks. Prospects of a corn crop of record-breaking proportions and the ending of the Balkan war are factors of the utmost importance. Last, but not least, the present level of prices is very low, the returns to the investors are attractive, and the chances for a considerable appreciation in values in a reasonable time are good.—Potter.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Wheat traders were inclined to construe the Government report as bullish when considered in all its details. There were a number of sharp operators, however, who took a bearish view of it, and talked lower prices. It is the general belief that the final crop will be larger than wheat will show around the same as last year, which, with the carry-over, should make a larger supply than last year.

"Corn specialists took the Government report as bearish, although the acreage is two-tenths of 1 per cent under last year. This was offset by the condition being the highest since 1909. The crowd were regarded as short and the commission house holdings have been reduced of late.

"Oats traders were surprised at the showing of the crop report, it being larger than expected. Most operators took a bearish view of it, and said that with the crop within less than three weeks of harvest they look for a yield of 1,000,000,000 bushels."

* * *

General liquidation is on in oats and this, together with pressure of new oats from the country, will, in my opinion, carry the market several cents lower.—Roycroft.

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: Wheat—The country continues to market the new crop of winter wheat very freely. As long as Europe continues to buy liberally the effect of hedging operations is materially lessened. We believe there is a large outstanding short interest, and are inclined to look for a fair rally.

Corn—This morning's map was generally clear with some high temperatures again in the Southwest. The figures given in yesterday's Government report indicate a crop larger than the trade generally was looking for, but there has been considerable scattered liquidation and short selling during the past few days. We are inclined to think the report will not prove a depressing influence.

Oats—The Government report was about as expected and therefore will not prove an influence. New buying power is extremely limited, but there has been a great deal of liquidation, and while prices may gradually work lower, we do not look for any sharp break at the moment.

Wheat—No. 2 red ..... 86½@87
Oats—No. 2 ..... 40 @41

CHICAGO, July 10.—The strength shown by the wheat market at Chicago this morning when prices advanced ⅞ to ¾c was a reflection of the higher prices at Liverpool, coupled with the bullish construction placed on the Government report of yesterday. The best prices were shaded ⅛ to ¼c soon after they were made by "hedging" sales. Argentina shipments for the week are estimated at only 400,000 bushels, compared with 1,552,000 bushels for the corresponding period last year. Northwestern receipts, while a few cars larger than for the same day in 1912, were small.

Corn was a shade better in sympathy with wheat, as the weather is favorable.

Oats were ½c lower for September and a fraction lower for July.

Provisions were lower.

Cattle trade was easier than yesterday, although prices were quotably steady. Arrival of nearly 11,000 Southern lambs direct to packers gave trade in the sheep house a 15 to 25c lower appearance.

Deserted, She Asks Work, Not Charity

Mrs. Emory Batta, who appealed to Matron Mary Bohnefeld for assistance in finding employment after being deserted by her husband, denies the published report that she is penniless and tramped the streets 48 hours without anything to eat.

Though her husband is said to have taken $500 of their savings Mrs. Batta declared Wednesday that she simply appealed to Matron Bohnefeld to help her get work, not for charity.

Poultry, Pet and Live Stock

Poultry Business Is Indebted to Fanciers Fifty Years Ago

Fancier Has Done the Slow and Plodding Work Which Has Taken Years to Accomplish.

How often we hear people say, "Oh, I do not want anything to do with the fancy part of the chicken business; I am out for utility and I just do not want to have anything to do with the fancy part of the business." Some persons seem to have about the same aversion to the fancy that the small boy does to having his hands and face washed.

They seem to think that that sounds mighty practical and will help to keep them from getting mixed up with the fellows who are always talking about shows and prizes and all such things. Oh, yes, they want good stock, but nothing fancy. The fancier can get along without the utility man just about as well, if not better, than the utility man can get along without the fancier. In reality, they need each other. Where would the utility man be to-day if the fancier had not gotten in his great work for the poultry industry. Just think of it, the fancier has given the country all the pure breeds of poultry from which the utility people have taken their foundation stock that has made them what they are to-day. He brought the Brahmas, Cochins, Langshans and Leghorns from other countries. He really manufactured the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Reds frome other breeds and gave them to us in a shape that has made them of the greatest value to the farmer and market poultryman. Where is there a utility man or farmer who would be willing to blot out all these breeds and go back to where we were 50 years ago? He has given us such a variety that the most exacting along any line of utility work can be supplied with about what his needs require. There is the Brahma or Cochin if a strictly meat breed is desired; or the Leghorn, Minorca or Spanish, strictly for eggs. For the farmer who would like a combination, they have furnished him with the Wyandotte, Plymouth Rock and Red.

So you see it is a question of simply paying your money and taking your choice. The fancier has done the slow and plodding work which has taken years to accomplish, giving it to the utility man all ready to work with.

Of course, the farmer may let the barrs on the Rock get a little irregular, or the comb on the Leghorn become a little top-heavy, the Reds a little mealy in color, yet, in spite of all these little irregularities they maintain their valuable qualities and serve the utility part to a marked degree. The fancier invented the trapnest that egg-production might be increased from an average of 75 eggs annually to 150 or better for the laying breeds; or, for the general-purpose breeds for that matter. He has led the van in giving better houses for the hens that they might produce eggs in winter as well as in summer. The fancier has furnished the country with the best appliances for the economical handling of poultry in great numbers. Take, for example, the incubator; it has been really the solving of the commercial poultry problem of this country. Just think of the hundreds of thousands of chickens and ducks that are annually turned out of these machines to fill the great markets of our cities and towns. Machines holding as high as 60,000 eggs at a filling. Just think of it, 4,000 hens to do the work of that one machine, which is looked after by the attention of one man not over an hour each day. The poultry fancier has made possible the diffusing of the best in poultry literature to one and all. The great poultry and farm journals which the country supports were made possible by him, and, in fact, are largely supported by the fancier. The utility man takes advantage of all these helps; in fact, looks to them largely for his guidance.

Then we must not lose sight of the beauty part of it. For there is no one, we believe, so completely engrossed in the making of money that he does not enjoy the beautiful in nature. Most of us make our money for the purpose of spending it in the pursuit of pleasure and happiness.

Why not double this pleasure by having the pleasure right along with the making of the money. Flocks of pure-bred poultry of any variety should be a pleasure for any one to handle; on the other hand, a lot of mongrels could hardly be an incentive to any one, much less a pleasure.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Seeking to Locate $100,000 Concern

Manufacturers Search for Plant. East Alabama St. Sale Reported. Permits for 14 Bungalows.

Real estate agents began looking Thursday for a site with railroad frontage on which to locate the Sox Duplex Cinder Deflector Company, a concern organized recently with $100,000 capital and Henry Schaul as president.

This manufacturing company will make a patented device for keeping cinders out of Pullman and day cars, with Atlanta as headquarters, and an expensive plant will be installed. David Sox is the inventor, and it is said that his device has been adopted by a number of railroads.

While the exact amount to be expended on site and plant has not yet been determined, it is estimated that $100,000 will be necessary.

Alabama Street Sale Reported.

Report in real estate circles Thursday had it that Luther Z. Rosser and J. H. Porter had bought the East Alabama Street property of Colonel Robert J. Lowry at $35,000, or about $1,000 a front foot.

This property is 57 East Alabama Street and has a frontage of 35 to 40 feet. It is improved with a three-story brick building.

Messrs. Rosser and Porter have been associated in a number of interesting deals, notably the purchase of 301 Peachtree Street and the property on North Pryor Street of the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company.

A petition has been in circulation for the repaving of East Alabama Street, and property values are expected to take a rise with the improvements. J. Livingston Wright has a parcel east of 57 which he holds for $1,200 a foot.

Williams Street Subdivision.

Twenty-four residence lots will be put on the market August 1 by the A. J. & H. F. West Real Estate Agency. These are in the Atwood tract of six acres on Williams Street, between Tenth and Fourteenth Streets. The land is now being platted.

Small Sales Made.

W. A. Cook, of Senoia, has sold to J. M. Lankford, through J. F. Culpepper, of the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency, 44 Plum Street, for $2,200. The above agency has sold a farm tract on Mt. Perian Road, near Pace's Ferry Road, for $875; two lots in Clairemont Park, Decatur, for $2,200, and three lots in the Peachtree Highlands subdivision for $3,700.

R. W. Milner, formerly a traveling salesman, and J. W. Reeves, formerly a building contractor, have been added to the sales force of this agency.

Whitehall Street Transfer.

George A. Boynton has transferred to Martha A. Boynton a 46 by 110 footp arcel on Whitehall Street and to Haygood Boynton a 98 by 100 foot property on the north side of Woodward Avenue, 100 feet east of Crew Street. The Whitehall lot is 159 feet northeasterly of Garnett Street.

Wide Range of Sales.

Realty men say they have seldom seen more interesting bonds for title and warranty deeds going to record. Among the papers are the following conveyances:

W. B. B. Richards, administrator of the estate of the late William C. Richards, to R. W. Davis, lot on the south side of West Fourteenth Street, 284 by 150, for $4,269.

The L. S. Huntley Company to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Peachtree Road, 368 feet northeast of the junction of the Peachtree and Roswell Roads, 48 by 140, $1,575, and to same, the adjoining lot to the southwest, same size, for the same price.

R. I. Barge to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Ormond Street, 160 feet west of Grant Street, 50 by 141, $2,500.

Charles A. Davis to M. I. Hule and Mrs. Luella Skinner, lot on the west side of Peachtree Road, 1,040 feet northeast of Piedmont Road, 100 by 685, $4,500. Transferred to C. M. Love et al.

Mrs. Eugenie Balch to Mrs. Mamie Cohen, 265 Crew Street, 50 by 200, $3,650.

Lois and Nellie Hollingsworth to M. Friedman, lot at the northwest corner of Highland Avenue and Fortune Street, 90 by 120, $4,300.

James E. Brown Company to National Stock Yards Commission Company, lot on the east side of Marietta Street, 67 feet south of Lee Avenue, 74 by 222, $12,607, and to same, southeast corner of Lee and Marietta, 67 by 149, $5,200.

The total of these transactions is $35,176. A few are trades made some time ago, with papers just going to record, but most of them are of recent date.

Successful Auction Sale.

John S. Owens and Gid Hanna are to-day $2,500 better off than they were this time Wednesday, having made this amount on an auction sale at the corner of Park Avenue and Bryan Street, Grant Park section Less than a year ago they bought a tract for $4,900 and the total in the auction was $7,295. The buy was made from Mrs. Lizzie Hollingsworth through William A. Vernoy, the latter of whom had charge Wednesday. J. W. Ferguson & Son were the auctioneers.

Mr. Hanna and Mr. Owens attributed the success of the sale to effective advertising, the value of the property and plenty of good lemonade.

Lots 1 and 2 were bought by H. A. White for $775 each; lot 3, by J. T. Wallace, for $875; lot 4, by John A. Fritz, for $1,390; lot 5, by Frank Whitley, for $830, and the house and lot, by George B. Beauchamp, for $2,650. Mr. Whitley refused a good profit on his lot immediately after his purchase.

"We could have sold 50 lots if we had had them," declared Mr. Vernoy after the sale.

Renting Meet Postponed.

Renting agents called together in the office of Charles P. Glover will meet Friday afternoon at 3:30, two previous meetings having been postponed. The "single listing system" of houses will be discussed.

New Pharmacy College.

The Courtland Street section between Harris and Cain Streets is soon to have a new college of pharmacy, when Dr. George F. Payne, the proprietor, completes plans for remodeling two double frame houses which he has just bought. Dr. Payne acquired this property from W. I. Webb through G. M. McKinnon, paying $20,000, or nearly $260 a front foot. The lot is on the east side of the street and the dimensions are 77 by 275 feet.

Ponce DeLeon Activity.

Seldom during the year, say the realty agents, is there any trouble disposing of residences on Ponce DeLeon Avenue. This is true alike of the closer-in homes, not far from Peachtree, and the homes near or in Druid Hills. Claude E. Sims, for instance, is doing his share of selling. He reports the sale for Dr. John B. Daniel to J. H. Leversredge, of Montgomery, Ala., of 666 Ponce DeLeon, 50 by 180, for $13,000, and of 532 Ponce DeLeon, only two blocks to the west, to Dr. William Asher for R. C. Taylor, for $10,000. The latter is 55 by 232.

Druid Hills Sale.

Although few homes are offered for sale in Druid Hills, buyers can always be found. O. D. Gorman, Jr., a successful trader with Smith & Ewing, has just picked up a profit in the sale of 510 Briarcliff Road to Mrs. J. J. Morris, for $12,500. This lot is 50 by 150 feet and contains a two-story nine-room brick veneer house. The transaction was handled through the Martin-Ozburn Realty Company.

Exchange of Properties.

H. M. Carlton has traded with a client of R. W. Evans, of the Cheatham Brothers' agency, for 219 East North Avenue, 45 by 150, for $4,900, giving in part payment a vacant lot on Ashby Street, 50 by 300 feet, valued at $1,000.

Auburn Avenue at $58.

Chauncey Smith has bought from a client of John D. Babbage a lot on the south side of Auburn Avenue, between Yonge and Jackson Streets, for $1,500, or at the rate of not quite $58 a front foot. The lot is 26 by 149 1-2.

SWEARS CONLEY BOASTED OF SLAYING

W. H. Mincey, Insurance Agent, Makes Startling Affidavit for Frank Defense.

him. And then he told of his meeting with Conley. Holloway replied that Conley had not been in the factory that day, no one knowing at the time that the negro had hidden himself in the boxes to the right of the stairway on the first floor.

The shock of the tragedy had not yet worn off, and all was confusion in the building. Because no one suspected that Conley had been in the factory on the Saturday of the crime, a fact which Conley later admitted when under the third degree of the detectives, little attention was paid to Mincey's story at the time.

Says Police Wouldn't Listen.

He states that he went to the police station and was told that they did not want his story. He saw Conley and identified him as the negro with whom he talked on the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered.

When Conley himself broke down and admitted that he had been hiding on the first floor, Mincey's sensational story took on the highest significance. He returned to the factory and repeated the details of his former statement. An interview was arranged with a lawyer acquaintance not connected with the case in any way. This attorney heard his story and took him to Attorney Rosser, where the statement was taken in sworn form.

"We do not want your statement unless you can swear to the truth of every word of it," he was told. He then dictated the affidavit which is now in possession of the defense.

Mincey was a solicitor for the American Insurance Company until about two weeks ago. He left this firm to teach school. He is said to be employed in Chattanooga, but will return to testify at the trial of Leo Frank July 28. He lived at 128 Davis Street until last October and then moved to another part of the city.

Defense Has Faith in It.

Uncovering for the first time the bulwark of defense which Frank's lawyers have built up around him, as well as containing the first report of a confession from Conley, the affidavit signed by Mincey at once takes its place as the most important document or piece of evidence that has entered into the case.

"Yes, we have the affidavit," admitted one of the lawyers for the defense Thursday afternoon. "We have had it for some time. We place the utmost reliance in it. We believe this man is telling the truth It forms one of the strongest foundations for our belief in the guilt of Jim Conley."

C. J. Graham, of the law firm of Graham & Chpapell, announced on Thursday that the hearing on the writ of habeas corpus for Newt Lee had been set by Judge Ellis for Saturday forenoon at 10 o'clock. He said that he would subpena 50 witnesses to appear at the hearing, among them Leo M. Frank and Jim Conley.

Frank's attorneys will fight his appearance at the hearing and the State is expected to try to prevent Conley from testifying. Solicitor Dorsey is strongly opposed to the freeing of Lee until after the trial of Frank, and has declared that he will use every effort to thwart the movement of Lee's attorneys.

BARROW COUNTY BILL PASSED BY HOUSE

Measure Approved 136 to 35 Despite the Hardeman Opposition. Crowded Galleries Cheer.

The bill creating the new county of Barrow, to be made up of sections of Walton, Gwinnett and Jackson, with Winder as the county seat, passed the House to-day by a vote of 136 to 35.

The measure came from the Constitutional Amendments Committee with a unanimous recommendation for its passage, but it was not put through the House until after a genuine display had been indulged in.

The fight against Barrow was led by Hardeman, of Jefferson, who attacked it by moving to postpone action upon it until next session. Had that motion prevailed, the bill would have been killed, beyond hope of resurrection.

Barrow County has been looked upon generally as apt to win out. It has been before the Legislature before, and many members who voted for it to-day explained their votes by saying that they voted upon the merits of the proposition entirely, which were evident enough to the Constitutional Amendments Committee to get a unanimous favorable report therefrom.

The impression is that Barrow will pass the Senate and go to the people for ratification in the next general election.

During the voting on the bill, the galleries were packed with citizens from the territory affected, and when the vote was announced the result brought great applause.

INSURANCE BILL FIRST GENERAL ACT PASSED

Lower House Adopts Wohlwender Measure After Half an Hour of Debate.

The first general bill of the session, passed Thursday morning by the House, was House Bill No. 9, which perfects the insurance laws covering the reinsuring in other companies by concerns wishing to retire from business in the State. It was introduced by Wohlwender, of Muscogee, and Cook, of Chattahoochee. Some little opposition was expressed, and 30 minutes was consumed in debate.

Representative Sheppard announced that the Ways and Means Committee would not meet until next Tuesday, on account of a death in the family of Chairman Akin. A report will be made by the committee next Wednesday, Mr. Sheppard stated. Resolutions of sympathy for Representative Akin were adopted.

The following local bills were favorably reported, placed on a third reading and adopted:

By Paulk—Providing a Board of County Commissioners for Ben Hill County.

Rhodes and Lipscomb—To amend charter of Athens.

Moon and Hines—Providing for a city recorder for LaGrange.

The Rules Committee killed a resolution by Pharr, of Gwinnett, instructing the Constitutional Amendments Committee not to consider any new county bills at this time.

The University of Georgia Committee reported favorably on a bill providing for an agricultural, industrial and normal college to be located in South Georgia and to be a branch of the university.

GARRISON PLANS TO ABANDON 100 ARMY POSTS

War Secretary Calls Them Useless, Demoralizing, Wasteful. Ready to Fight Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The most radical and dramatic move in army administration since Elihu Root reorganized it a decade ago has been determined by Secretary of War Garrison. He intends to fight Congress on the question of maintaining 100 or more "absolutely useless" army posts in the interior.

He intends to withdraw troops from at least 75 per cent of them in the interest of economy and efficiency, and next Wednesday will start on a five weeks' tour of the posts to crystallize the details of the policy he announced to-day.

Scores "Pork Barrel" System.

Secretary Garrison is disgusted with the "wasteful and extravagant way in which the army is being conducted," and lays it all to the system of maintaining army posts as part of the "pork barrel" into which every member of Congress dips his fingers. There are at present 157 posts in the country, an average of one post to every 250 soldiers in the army. Every State is represented.

The Secretary of War has made a preliminary investigation, which has proved to him that the maintenance of all these posts, of which he believes that 100 are unnecessary, is not only demoralizing to the army, but the most extravagant way of wasting Government money ever devised.

Plans to Block Congress.

If Congress obstructs his policy of unifying the posts, the Secretary of War intends to use his executive powers of withdrawing troops from those posts which he believes are unnecessary. He declares he has absolute power in this direction, and, with the President's consent, could concentrate the entire army in Washington if he so desires. He intends to use this power in fighting Congress should the latter determine to nullify his policies of post concentration.

Mr. Garrison will be accompanied by Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, and Quartermaster General Aleshire.

The plan of centralizing the army has been under consideration for several years. General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, on his last visit to Atlanta, stated that if the plan was ever put into effect Fort McPherson would become one of the largest posts in the country.

Kentucky Car Strike Spreads; One Dying

LEXINGTON, KY., July 10.—Striking street carmen announced this morning that all employees of the Kentucky Traction Company and the Lexington Utilities Company will be called out to-morrow morning, tying up street and interurban car systems here.

Demands will be served to-day for a nine-hour day with pay for ten hours, and reinstatement of nine discharged workmen. Some of the men have been on strike for a week.

The first violence occurred late Wednesday, when five men were injured in a riot. One of them, J. W. Bell, of Chicago, is dying in a hospital.

Beavers in Speech Warns Policemen to Keep Out of Dives

Chief of Police Beavers caused a stir Thursday morning when he went before the day watch and addressed the men on their conduct. His talk resulted from the recent scandal in which several policemen were found guilty of visiting a resort in the rear of 127 Auburn Avenue.

"Any man who hangs around a negro dive has no place on the police force of Atlanta," the Chief said, addressing the men. "If you get positive evidence that any of your brother officers are engaged in discreditable practices and frequenting disreputable places, it is your duty to report it."

The Chief will make a similar speech to the night and morning watches.

Queen of Greece Cables for Chewing Gum for Troops

NEW YORK, July 10.—Solon G. Vlasto, editor of The Atlantis, to-day received a dispatch from Queen Sophia, of the Hellenes, asking for a shipment of chewing gum.

To make him more certain why chewing gum was so urgently needed, Miss Contostavlos, a lady in waiting to the Queen, cabled later:

"Chewing gum is against thirst."

Mr. Vlasto cabled $2,000 at once and is about to send the chewing gum.

New York Dressmaker Describes Petticoatless Mode and Harem Skirt From Paris.

NEW YORK, July 10.—"The prudes can not stop them—they are here. That is, they are in Paris, which means that American women of fashion will bring them home with them this fall and winter," said Mme. Bernard, Fifth Avenue modiste, who has just arrived from abroad with the first harem skirt and the silhouette gown.

The former resembles Turkish trousers, which have succeeded the slit skirt, and the latter is a new French creation of lace and pleated tulle, worn with tights of silk of white or flesh pink, with no suggestion of a petticoat unless it be of filmy material.

"The slit skirt has been the most graceful and attractive made for women which has been worn in many years, so all of the great fashion leaders of Paris declare," said Mme. Bernard. "The harem skirt is an adaptation of the slit skirt with the tendency to the full and natural figure about the hips, which is the dernier cri.

"Turkish trousers, properly adapted, are an ideal costume for the modern woman of fashion. The ones I saw in Paris are the most fascinating and bewitching frocks I have ever seen.

"The silhouette gown, which is built on Grecian lines, is extremely beautiful, provided the figure is graceful. It is like looking at a beautiful woman through a fleecy sunlit cloud.

"The gown is so arranged at the hem that by means of a slit up the front—to the knees—and by pulling the diaphanous pleated tulle and lace criss-cross about the ankles a sort of trouser effect is obtained which only shows when the wearer moves about."

Fights Insurance Suit Under Suicide Clause

COLUMBUS, GA., July 10.—A suit of M. L. Richardson, administrator of the estate of F. M. Richardson, who was shot and killed October 25, 1912, against the Prudential Life Insurance Company, to collect a $2,000 policy, is being heard in City Court.

When the father, M. L. Richardson, demanded payment, the insurance company refused to settle, claiming that the insured committed suicide.

A similar suit for $2,000 is pending against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

Society Leaders, in Masks, See Risque Paris Play 'I Love It'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 10.—Wearing of masks by society women who attend racy theatrical productions, but who are ashamed to let their relatives and friends know of it, has come into vogue here.

A large number of women from court circles are daily attending the risque French show, "I Love It," but all wear masks for fear of the censure of their husbands and of Queen Mary, who has forbidden any of the ladies of her court from entering the Middlesex Theater, where the production is on.

Clergymen are beseeching the censor to close up the theater, declaring it will debase all who see it because of its gross imorality.

U. S. Marshal Ready To Quit on Demand

Those who claim to know declare Frank L. Mayes, editor of The Pensacola Journal, will succeed McGourin.

Lee and Garretson said they would not go to Washington Monday to meet President Wilson and the Secretary of Labor.

Fly Pests Cost U. S. $157,800,000 a Year

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Figured out in money, to say nothing of the loss in human life, the cost to the United States annually of supporting its fly population amounts to $157,800,000, say Government experts who have been making a study of the results of the germ-spreading activities of these insects.

It is estimated that the fly is responsible for an expenditure of $50,000,000 for the handling of tuberculosis cases, attributable to germs spread by the pests, while $70,000,000 represents the cost of typhoid fever cases originating in the same way.

CRAWFORD WILL FIGHT HANGS ON EXPERTS

Attorneys for Widow of Capitalist Declare Poison Evidence Will Be Shattered.

A positive statement from Dr. F. H. Harris, of the State Board of Health, that Joshua Crawford died of morphine poisoning instead of pneumonia, the announced cause of his death by the attending physician, Dr. J. W. Hurt, was the sensational development in the Crawford $250,000 will case Thursday.

Dr. Harris was called to the stand at noon. Attorney Reuben Arnold, for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, the widow, to whom all the estate was left, pinned him to the assertion.

For the first time in his career, he said, he deviated from his custom of merely mentioning possibilities or probabilities.

"There was absolutely no trace of pneumonia or any disease of the lungs," said Dr. Harris. "Morphine poisoning very likely produced death."

Statement Unshaken.

Dr. Harris was on the stand for very nearly an hour, but his statement was unshaken.

No announcement would be made by the attorneys for the heirs-at-law, who number more than thirty, but it was confidently understood they would not rest the case with the introduction of Dr. Harris, but would have other experts, and probably members of the family to take the stand in an effort to substantiate the evidence of Dr. Harris.

Attorney Arnold stated that the evidence of Dr. Harris would be torn to pieces when he put Dr. J. W. Hurt on the stand to tell of administering morphine and opium to Crawford in an effort to stop the violent fits of coughing and near congestion of the lungs, with which he suffered in the last month of his life.

Widow Not in Court.

He intimated also that he would introduce experts to prove that the quantities of opium and morphine found in Crawford's stomach by Dr. Harris were not sufficient to produce death, nor more than a normal dose administered by the average physician.

Mrs. Crawford, the widow, was not in the courtroom Wednesday when the poison theory was advanced by Dr. Harris, and it was doubtful whether she would attend the hearing Thursday.

Heirs-at-law to the estate and their friends attended in large numbers, and despite the fact it is a strictly civil procedure and no court official is presiding, it had all the appearance and interest of a sensational criminal trial.

BOYS SAVE MOTHER AND GIRL FROM DROWNING IN PICNIC BATHING ACCIDENT

Heroic work of two little boys, Mizell and J. C. Williamson, of 7 Gray Street, saved their mother, Mrs. J. C. Williamson, and a young woman, Miss Maud Stradley, of 322 Simpson Street, from drowning in Center Hill pond Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Williamson has a class of little girls at the Tabernacle Baptist Church Sunday school, which she had taken for an outing to Center Hill. Her sons, ages 13 and 12, respectively, were in the party.

Ventured Out Too Far.

Mrs. Williamson and Miss Stradley went in wading. The water was muddy and they could not see the bottom, but the water was so shallow and the bottom so smooth that they ventured farther from the shore, though neither of them could swim. They were walking several feet apart when the girls on the bank saw them go under.

Panic followed. The women in the water fought with desperation, oblivious to the fact that opening their mouths to scream was admitting the fatal water. The girls on the bank called and shouted, and the two boys rushed up to see their mother and Miss Stradley go down in the throes of drowning.

Boys Fine Swimmers.

As they stripped part of their clothes, J. C., the younger, exclaimed:

"I'll save my mother or die with her."

Before the boys could reach the struggling women they had sunk for the second time. When they came up they screamed no more, and they fought with feeble efforts.

The boys had learned to swim in Piedmont Park lake and they hurried to the rescue with the speed of experts. Before the women had gone down for the third time J. C. had grabbed his mother by the hair and Mizell had taken hold of Miss Stradley.

Made Brave Struggle.

It was soon evident, however, that all danger was not passed. The women were too heavy for the little fellows. There were shouts of encouragement from the bank, but the odds were against the victims.

The moment the accident occurred someone had run for Policeman Williamson. He was some distance away and it had taken some time to reach him—seconds in reality, but it seemed hours to the watchers.

As the boys were making for the shore with their burdens he rushed up.

He did not stop to remember that he was a poor swimmer, neither did he discard any of his clothes, but plunged in.

Human Life Line Formed.

Another tragedy threatened when he reached the deep water. Policeman Williamson sank as the women had. When he came up he saw that it was vain for him to attempt to render aid. The boys were making progress toward the shore, so he struck out for the shallow water.

When he secured a footing he watched and gave instructions to the boys. Holding hands, a human life line was made by the girls and all pulled ashore.

The boys were exhausted and the two women unconscious.

Mrs. Williamson is confined to her bed, but her condition is reported not serious. She is merely suffering from a reaction from the shock. Miss Stradley is up and all right except for a slightly sore throat.

Cotton Men Confer With Roads on Bill Of Lading Problem

Representatives of all the important railroads in the Southeast conferred with cotton exporters, compressors and buyers at the Ansley Hotel Thursday morning on the new rules of the steamship companies governing exportation of cotton.

The steamship companies have announced that they will make notations of any damage on the through bills of lading. This, the banks say, makes the bills not negotiable. The railroads also fear that claims for damage will be made against them in such instances, and in such event they will be obliged to make the same notations on their bills at the interior points where the shipments originate.

Whether to do this or refuse to issue through bills of lading is the question which is of vital importance to the movement of cotton this season.

MILITANT 'JEKYL AND HYDE' IS ARRESTED

Arsonite, Meek Wife by Day, Confesses She Did $200,000 Fire Damage at Night.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LIVERPOOL, July 10.—A remarkable confession of a dual life, which in some respects equals "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, was made here to-day by a woman. Mrs. Edith Rigby, wife of a rich and prominent doctor, admitted to the police that she has been a member of militant suffrage arson squad for six months without her husband's knowledge.

Every night she would slip from her home and set fire to buildings, plant bombs or send threatening letters to those opposing the cause. She told the police that she had caused at least $200,000 damage through her own executions.

Gentle Wife by Day.

Her husband opposes suffrage and she had to carry on her campaign of vandalism clandestinely. By day she appeared a gentle, dutiful wife, with no thought of "votes for women." But at night she went forth with violence in her heart. She was arrested.

After being taken to the police station Mrs. Rigby dramatically confessed burning down the mansion of Sir W. H. Lever, Bart, in Lancashire, when over $100,000 damage was done.

Ready to Give Her Life.

"I burned Sir William Lever's home because I understood that King George was to visit there," cried Mrs. Rigby. "I scattered the suffragette placards. I burned other buildings. I risked my life night after night in the manufacture of bombs. But I would give my life for the cause. I would give up my husband and my children—everything. I place the suffrage cause above everything—perhaps above religion."

In her excitement the woman became hysterical and bitterly denounced the government.

Clara Giveen, a member of the arson squad of the militant suffragettes, who was sent to prison for incendiarism, was released to-day because of illness brought on by a food and water strike.

"President Wilson has achieved and even exceeded the high expectations of his friends. Before his term of office is over it is certain he will have left his mark on history."

'Cooling Period,' Is Rabbi's Divorce Cure

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 10.—"Cooling periods" three months from the finish of the trial to give remorse a chance to work and bring about a reconciliation were advocated to-day by Rev. J. Leonard Levy, of Pittsburg, as a remedy for the divorce evil.

Dr. Levy said in a paper read before the Conference of American Rabbis that Rabbis should demand two weeks' notice from those who wanted to be married so as to investigate their records.

FARMERS' UNION GETS RECRUITS IN JENKINS

Campaigners Inject Enthusiasm at Millen Meeting — Two New Locals Formed.

MILLEN, July 10.—That the farmers of Georgia are rallying to the standard of the Farmers' Union as never before is demonstrated at every meeting at which President C. S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes, State president of Tennessee, are the principal speakers.

At Sylvania Tuesday two new unions were organized. Many names were added to the rolls of the old unions.

At Millen, the county seat of Jenkins, there was a large gathering in the beautiful new courthouse Wednesday.

After the speaking every man who was not a member of the union joined. The enthusiasm was such as to guarantee the success of the union in Jenkins County.

No town in Georgia or elsewhere has grown faster in the past ten years than Millen. It is almost four times as large as it was ten years ago. Why?

The explanation is given by President Barrett. "If there are any better farms, if there are any better farmers, they must be in Georgia," he said, "for I know there are none better in any other country."

The crops in this section are good; in fact, they are above the average, and there will be no hard times in this section of Georgia.

Mayor Reluctantly Pays for Crematory

Mayor Woodward Thursday signed checks for $125,000 as first payment on the crematory built by the Destructor Company of New York, but he is not satisfied with the contract.

"The price of $276,000 should have been reduced $100,000," he said. "By my fight we got a cut of $16,000. Claimed interest of $11,000 on deferred payments finally was waived. Chief of Construction Clayton forced them to add extras which, they say, have amounted to $6,000. The city has drawn 2 per cent interest on the $125,000 during the fight. The total saving is $24,000."

'No American Dances' Sign in Swiss Hotels

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND, July 10.—"No American dances allowed here" is a sign confronting tourists at nearly all the high-class Swiss hotels. The managers declare the notices had to be put up because of complaints from English, French and other foreign tourists, with the exception of Americans.

Continental visitors have left a number of hotels where American girls insisted on dancing the turkey trot, the tango, the bunny hug and the Texas tommy.

BALKAN TOLL OF DEATH PLACED AT 65,000

Estimates, Believed Exaggerated, Show Heavy Losses in War Between Former Allies.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Bulgaria has been defeated and humbled by Servia, Greece and Montenegro and is on her knees begging for peace.

Czar Ferdinand personally telegraphed to Czar Nicholas to-day accepting any terms Russia makes to bring about peace in the Balkans.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, July 10.—According to estimates compiled here to-day from official and unofficial dispatches from the Balkans, at least 65,000 men have been killed in the fighting between Bulgarians on one side and Servians, Greeks and Montenegrins on the other.

It is a certainty, however, that these figures are exaggerated, as the Servian and Greek losses have invariably come from Bulgarian sources, while estimates of Bulgarian casualties have emanated from Athens, Uskub or Belgrade.

Another Great Battle Raging; 75,000 Engaged.

SOFIA, July 10.—Another desperate battle with enormous losses of life on both sides is raging north of Kotchana between Bulgars and Serbs who attempted to cross the border into Bulgaria.

The Servians had a double object—first, to march upon the Bulgarian capital; second, to get behind the Bulgarian lines and cut off the retreat of the two southern divisions to Kustendil, the Bulgarian base of operations.

According to official advices from the front, the battle is being fought between Kotchana and Egri Palanka, along a small river. It is estimated that about 75,000 men are engaged. The battle lines are stretched over an area of ten miles.

Both sides are supported by artillery. The Servians also have a heavy force of cavalry. Bulgarian reinforcements have been sent over the Sofia-Uskub Railroad.

Czar Urges Bulgars to Settle With Roumania.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Russia is pressing Bulgaria to settle its differences with Roumania over Roumanian territorial expansion without further delay. Foreign Minister Sazonoff declared to-day that it would be national suicide for each of the Balkan States to keep on fighting.

The opinion here is that Greece will emerge from the present war with the greatest laurels.

Bulgaria Is Ordered to Sue for Peace by Powers.

PARIS, July 10.—A joint note from the main European powers was to-day forwarded to Sofia demanding that Bulgaria immediately secure the peace terms of Servia and Greece. Belief prevails here in military and diplomatic circles that Bulgaria will be badly defeated by the other three States in the Balkan League if the war is allowed to go to a conclusion.

If Bulgaria is compelled to sue for peace she will lose much of the spoils of the first Balkan war. Greece will retain Salonika and a big strip in Southern Macedonia, while the Servian frontier will be extended over a large area of northern Macedonia.

Bulgars Give Grounds For War, Turks Assert.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 10.—Bulgarians are committing depredations against the Turks, which furnish cause for a declaration of war, it was announced here to-day by the Ottoman government.

Bulgarian troops stationed along the Littoral of the Sea of Marmora have burned two Turkish towns to prevent their falling into the hands of a Greek army which is marching eastward from Salonika.

Bryan and Envoy of Japs in Conference

WASHINGTON, July 10.—An informal discussion of certain features of the situation between the United States and Japan was held by Viscount Chinda, Japanese Ambassador, and Secretary of State Bryan to-day. The American reply to the recent Japanese rejoinder is not entirely completed.

Mr. Bryan expects to transmit the document to Viscount Chinda either to-morrow or Saturday.

Savannah-to-Florida Road Plan Indorsed

Favorable report on the bill providing for construction with convict labor of a highway 100 miles long from Savannah to the Florida border at St. Marys River, in Camden County, was authorized Wednesday by the Penitentiary Committee of the Georgia Legislature. Representative Slater, of Bryan County, is its author.

The new road is intended to be part of the national highway system.

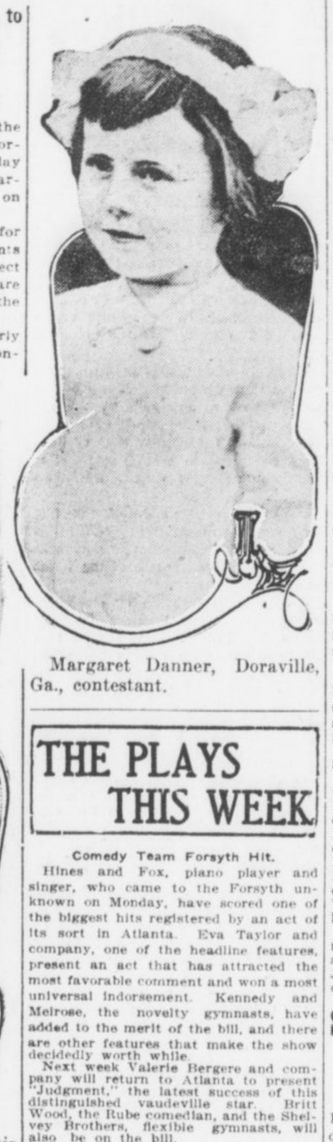
CONTESTANTS TO RIDE PONIES NEXT SUNDAY

Children and Parents Invited to Meet Managers in Grant Park to Discuss Race.

Parents of the contestants and the contestants themselves are very cordially invited to Grant Park Sunday afternoon when the ponies, some harnessed and others saddled, will be on hand.

There will be rides and drives for all the children, and for the parents there will be an opportunity to inspect the prizes for which their children are working and a chance to meet the contest manager.

The contest manager is particularly anxious to meet the parents and confer with them as the race enters upon its last lap. But nineteen working days remain in the contest, and the children will need the co-operation of their parents to the fullest extent. How to help the boys and girls in the race will be the topic which the contest manager and the parents will discuss.



Herbert Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, a hustling contender.

Margaret Danner, Doraville, Ga., contestant.

The office force of The Georgian and American contest department is busy totaling the bonuses which the contestants have earned through the five-club offers, and the first $30 offer. This is proving even a greater task than anticipated, and it is impossible to give the contestants' full standings as yet.

Meanwhile another bonus offer is in effect. Liberal amounts of extra votes are offered for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions turned in before 10 o'clock the night of July 19.

Subscriptions of any length—two years, a year, six months, three months or even a month—may be combined to make up these totals.

Legislators Favor Girls' Home Plan

Unanimous approval of the Penitentiary Committee was won Wednesday by Representative Jones, of Coweta, and Representative Mills, of Butts, for their bill appropriating $75,000 for a State home for wayward girls. The measure will be reported immediately, with recommendation for passage.

While no site is mentioned in the bill, the Penitentiary Committee discussed the advantages of Milledgeville.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Men

Send Name and Address To-day—You Can Have it Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope, to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men, and I am convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow-men to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop drugging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest acting restorative, up-building SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, 4276 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain, ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it entirely free.

FIFTH REGIMENT BOYS MIX PLAY AND WORK

Atlanta Soldiers Having Great Time at Instruction Camp on St. Simons Island.

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, GA., July 10.—The soldier boys of the Fifth Georgia Regiment, who arrived here Wednesday from Atlanta, have taken complete charge of St. Simons. Today the boys, somewhat weary of the more or less arduous duties of pitching camp, are having the time of their lives splashing in the surf and wandering around the island.

Thursday night the first big dance will be held and Friday military tactics and instruction will be the order of the day.

Next Saturday the Fifth will be the host of Governor John M. Slaton, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, members of the Governor's staff and General R. K. Evans and Colonel Barth, U. S. A.

The distinguished guests have announced their intention of camping in tents just like real soldiers during their two days' stay here.

A special committee from the Brunswick Board of Trade and from the City Council will meet the party at the depot and escort it to the St. Simons boat.

The Fifth will remain in camp at St. Simons for ten days.

In the Governor's party on the visit to St. Simons will be Governor and Mrs. Slaton, Colonel and Mrs. Frederic J. Paxon, General J. VanHolt Nash and daughter, Miss Nash; General and Mrs. R. K. Evans, Colonel C. H. Barth, Colonel and Mrs. George M. Hope, Colonel A. H. VanDyke and daughter, Miss VanDyke; Colonel William B. Stovall, Colonel H. P. Meikleham, Colonel Ben J. Fowler.

The party will be joined by Colonel and Mrs. Z. H. Clark, of Moultrie, at Fitzgerald, and Colonel and Mrs. John D. Walker, of Sparta, at Cordele.

Slaton Last Hope of Man to Hang Friday

Failing in their attempt to get the Prison Commission to recommend a commutation of sentence for Oscar Dewberry, the negro sentenced to hang in the Fulton County Jail Friday, Attorneys Calhoun and Powell made an appeal to Governor Slaton Thursday afternoon.

Dewberry was convicted of killing a white boy in Decatur Street. Persistent efforts were made to have the Prison Commission to recommend commutation. Governor Brown was appealed to without success.

He will allow none but whites to use the waters.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Comedy Team Forsyth Hit.

Hines and Fox, piano player and singer, who came to the Forsyth unknown on Monday, have scored one of the biggest hits registered by an act of its sort in Atlanta. Eva Taylor and company, one of the headline features, present an act that has attracted the most favorable comment and won a most universal indorsement. Kennedy and Melrose, the novelty gymnasts, have added to the merit of the bill, and there are other features that make the show decidedly worth while.

Next week Valerie Bergere and company will return to Atlanta to present "Judgment," the latest success of this distinguished vaudeville star. Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, and the Shelvey Brothers, flexible gymnasts, will also be on the bill.

Grand Popular Place.

The Grand just now is a decidedly popular place, because the management, in response to the pulse of the people, has instituted a policy of motion pictures that is a revelation to the patrons of "movies."

Excellent programs of exclusive first-run pictures and Edison's talking pictures are presented daily from 2:30 until 10:30 at night, and usually to crowded gatherings.

Bijou Has Good Show.

Will Stanton and Rosalie May, at the Bijou this week, as the stars in "Along Broadway," have made one of the biggest hits of the season. Mr. Stanton's impersonation of a cabaret drunk is a capital piece of acting and keeps the house in a continuous uproar of laughter. Rosalie May, Mr. Stanton's partner, is a clever little woman. The violin solos of Miss Marjorie Calvert never fail to receive an enthusiastic reception, and the same can be said of the clever dancing of Ingalls, Duffield and Ingalls.

Preacher Floyd Official.

ROME.—A Baptist preacher has been elected a member of the Floyd County Commissioners. He is the Rev. C. L. Conn, pastor of the North Broad Street and West Rome Baptist Churches. The Rev. Mr. Conn was elected to succeed the late R. S. Hamrick.

SLOGANS EXPLAIN WHY ATLANTA FOLKS BOOST

Designs Submitted in Georgian's Half-Million Club Contest Express City's True Spirit.

Thursday's entrants in the $25 prize slogan contest reveal more than ever that Atlanta's true individuality is the inspiration for the slogans. Any city can boost, but none can boost like Atlanta, as the slogans clearly show.

The pretty girl idea has taken a strong hold on the contestants. One submitted by Robert M. DeFassell, Atlanta Athletic Club, makes the face of a pretty girl the emblem of the "500,000 club." Its caption expresses the lure of romance:

"Miss Atlanta, 'Boost-er.' 500,000 by 1920."

The whole country has been impressed with the aggressive and forceful methods of Police Chief J. L. Beavers. Taking advantage of this William E. Muirhead suggested for a button a face of Chief Beavers with the words: "500,000 by 1920. Get 'Em or Bust."

Contest Open All Week.

Slogans received as late as Saturday will be eligible for the prize. On that day the committee of judges—John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor—will meet and decide the winner. The lucky one will be announced in Hearst's Sunday American.

Here are some of the clever ideas that came to the contest editor through the mails:

"The Atlanta Spirit, Atlanta's Boost.

"A Half-Million Souls, Atlanta's Boast"—J. F. Harbour, 41 North Pryor Street.

"Atlanta, My Criterion. 1913-1920, 200,000—500,000"—Lewis J. Ball, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"500,000 by 1920. Atlanta Offers You Opportunity, Peace and Plenty"—Mrs. A. O. Woodward, South Atlanta.

"Atlanta, the Dixie Flyer.

"Will Care for Half a Million Souls and Higher"—Mrs. M. J. Rossman, Greensboro, Ga.

"For 500,000 Souls We'll Win in a Canter.

"Talk, Hustle. Boost for Atlanta"—Lucile Hiatt, 14 Killian Street.

"Here's to 500,000 by 1920, With Atlanta Spirit and Atlanta Pluck."—E. F., Covington, Ga.

"Progress, Prosperity, Pride, Population. Boost Atlanta Club. 500,000 by 1920."—Mrs. B. J. Harrison, 180 Lake Avenue.

Elks Club in Macon May Abolish Buffet

MACON, July 10.—The conviction of C. B. Wright, the secretary of the Elks Club, on the charge of violating the prohibition law, may mean the abolition of the buffet feature of the Macon lodge. Many of the members believe that the buffet should be discontinued, if it is ultimately upheld that the Elks are violating the law in operating it.

Though defended by the ablest lawyers of the city, Secretary Wright was found guilty by a jury.

Wright to-day was fined $700.

The Morris complaint alleges that a heavy fire loss was caused at its Kansas City plant because of delay in transmitting the fire alarm signal.

GOVERNOR AGAIN CITES NEED OF ECONOMY

Makes It Plain at Dinner That He Will Not Countenance Extension of Deficit.

Governor Slaton again made it plain in an after-dinner address at the Capital City Club Wednesday night that he will insist upon rigid economy in the Legislature until Georgia's present systems of finance and taxation are radically reformed.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley, of the House Appropriations Committee, was host. The dinner was given in honor of the House committee and the Executive. It was informal, and was given for the purpose of getting the committee and the Governor in close and intimate touch.

The Governor pointed out that the estimated deficit in the State treasury now, based upon appropriations made by the last Legislature, amounts to the amazing sum of $776,170.

To Curb Expenditures.

He said he could not see his way clear to an extension of that deficit, if it were within his power to prevent it. He held that it is the State's duty—its honorable duty—to wipe out the deficit entirely, and to that end he invited the help and co-operation of the committee. The Governor said the two items that should be watched closest are the common schools and the pensions.

"The matter of Georgia meeting its obligations promptly is a matter of business, not sentiment," said the Governor. "We must keep our outgo within our income!"

Tax Reform Urged.

The Governor stressed the necessity of tax equalization, reiterating his oft-stated position in that direction.

The committee evidently took the Governor's remarks in good part, for on all sides expressions of determination to help him and hold up his hands were heard.

All the talks were in happy vein, and it was the impression that the Governor and the Committee on Appropriations understood each other very well, indeed, when the dinner was over.

Besides the Governor and the House Committee on Appropriations, Speaker Burwell, Chairman Aikin and Vice Chairman Cole, of the Ways and Means Committee, and a number of newspaper men attended Mr. Wheatley's dinner.

J. Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, was prevented by sickness from being present.

Dress Linen Prices 5 to 10 Per Cent Up

NEW YORK, July 10.—According to a member of the linen trade back from abroad, prices there now are from 5 to 10 per cent higher than when the last heavy purchases were made in November. In the local market staple color dress linens, especially blues and pinks, are scarce. Dealers have advanced prices on several staple numbers.

The substantial business in novelty dress linens this season has led dealers to believe that ratines will be in good demand next season also. The fact that these goods are being shown extensively in cotton is regarded as an indication of their stability.

LEGISLATORS CONSIDER $100,000 GEORGIA EXHIBIT AT CANAL FAIR

COL. T. S. JONES.

FRANK WELDON.

State Commission Hard at Work to Persuade Legislature to Appropriate Fund.

Georgia will have one of the most complete and "jam-up" State exhibits at the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco if members of the State Commission and others interested get what they want—$100,000—from the present Legislature.

The first gun in the big campaign was fired Thursday when Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton County, and other legislative boosters for the Cracker State presented a resolution in the House providing for an appropriation as authorized by the 1912 Legislature. The decision to wage an active campaign for the $100,000 was made Tuesday at a meeting of the State Exposition Commission.

Colonel T. Sambola Jones, of Louisiana, United States Commissioner for the exposition, who arrived in Atlanta Tuesday, will fire the second gun of the campaign Monday at noon when he will address both the House and Senate in joint session to urge the adoption of the resolution.

State Building Urged.

"We hope," said Colonel Jones, "that the Governor and his staff or a committee of distinguished citizens of Georgia will visit San Francisco to select a site for the proposed State building which this State should have, by all means, to house its exhibits and to care for the thousands of Georgians who will visit San Francisco in 1915.

"It is our plan also to have moving pictures of Georgia's participation in the exposition, showing every movement from the selection of the site for the building to the great Georgia Day, including the formal dedication of the building.

"These pictures will be sent all over the country and will constitute a living record of an event of which Georgians will ever be proud."

Mr. Weldon, chairman of the State Commission named by Governor Brown last year, was equally enthusiastic.

Big Display Planned.

"We are going after that appropriation with a vim," said he, "and we believe we will get it. Georgia must be represented—well represented—at this the greatest exposition that ever has been held.

"The commission proposes to have a strong display of Georgia's agricultural and mineral resources, as well as an exhibit showing her manufacturing activities. The State is one of the richest in the Union in natural resources and deserves to have a creditable exhibit at San Francisco."

Two Near Death in Auto Crash; Nabbed On Speeding Charge

A. M. Moon, of Adamsville, and O. H. Starnes, of Center Hill, are congratulating themselves to-day on their remarkable escape from injury when their automobiles collided in the Adamsville road last night. Both machines were demolished and their occupants hurled several feet. Beyond a few bruises, though, neither man was hurt.

Noise of the collision attracted a farmer. He telephoned to county police headquarters. Officers placed Moon and Starnes under arrest on charges of reckless speeding.

Moon operates a market in Decatur Street, while Starnes keeps a grocery in Marietta Street.

Gag for Gossips Is Favored by Judge

A TRIED AND PROVED GUARANTEE

Man Bought a Bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, Then Took It Back and Asked for His Money and Got It.

A man recently tried out the guarantee which all druggists give with every bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. He bought a bottle and then went back to the drug store and said the medicine hadn't helped him.

This druggist just reached into his cash register and took out a half dollar, the price of the bottle of Liver Tone, and handed it back to the gentleman. But he didn't take the money. He owned up that he was just trying the guarantee and, as a matter of fact, he had found Dodson's Liver Tone the best remedy for constipation and biliousness he had ever tried. "Why," he said, "my wife wouldn't be without a bottle in the house for anything. It's the best thing in the world for the whole family, and the medicine that I prefer to take or to give to my children for a lazy liver."

All druggists sell Dodson's Liver Tone and guarantee it to start the liver without violence. It is taking the place of calomel everywhere. If you buy a bottle and don't find this pleasant-tasting vegetable liquid the best thing to start a lazy liver, he will hand your money back with a smile.

PUBLIC TO PAY IF TRAINMEN WIN WAGE FIGHT

"Are You, Not Railorads, Willing to Grant Increase?" Is Question, Forbes Declares.

By B. C. FORBES.

Another section of railroad workers have voted to strike, demoralizing traffic over the eastern half of the country, unless demands for wage increases are granted. First the engineers, then the firemen, and now the trainmen have taken this course of action.

* * *

Where are strike threats to end? Arbitrators found the engineers and the firemen entitled to better pay. The railroads were willing to grant concessions in these cases, but they declare the trainmen have no grounds for insisting upon another advance, seeing that their wages were raised in 1910. Yet, there is a feeling in railroad circles that arbitrators will seek the usual line of least resistance and effect a compromise.

* * *

Railroad managers are asking: "If employees know that every time they threaten to starve the people they will be granted higher wages, why should they not go on making fresh demands? They can not lose anything by repeating the performance of putting a pistol to the heads of the railroads and the public—and they have learned by experience that they are tolerably certain to gain something when arbitration is agreed upon."

* * *

That arbitration will be adopted this time is a foregone conclusion. The customary result will likely follow—substantial concessions, entailing heavier burdens upon the public.

* * *

Now, the point raised by the railroads IS important. Where are the demands of railroad employees to end? WHY should they end? Human nature is human nature, and if the men know that by asking a lot they can depend upon receiving something, well, the temptation to ask is apt to prove irresistible. It is easier to preach than to practice self-denial. Are we not all striving to obtain the most we can for our labors? The railroads are at this moment trying to secure better rates for carry freight, are they not?

* * *

Experience may have justified the pessimistic attitude the railroads are taking toward arbitration. But will arbitrators ALWAYS grant concessions regardless of circumstances, regardless of the merits or demerits of the men's demands?

* * *

I do not pretend to have a labyrinth of pigeon-holes, each containing a ready-made solution for some complicated problem. Some writers can solve every difficulty in less than a column. They know just what should be done under every circumstance. I don't. And this problem of adjusting demands of highly-organized workers, especially railroad workers, is one of baffling, unusual difficulty.

* * *

Federal and State Arbitration Boards, as recommended by the commission that arbitrated the railway engineers' dispute, have much to commend them in the case of public and quasi-public service workers upon the uninterrupted continuance of whose labors the people at large are dependent for the necessities of life.

* * *

But it seems to me that the greatest need of all is that the public—you, your next-door neighbor, and all the rest of us—should become thoroughly acquainted with what higher and still higher wages mean TO US. The railroads will not say whatever increase in wages the trainmen may be granted. YOU and I will pay. The railroads have not one dollar that you and I did not contribute. They have only one source of revenue—the public.

* * *

Therefore, the question to ask is not, "Should the railroads raise wages?" but "Should WE pay railway workers higher wages?" For WE foot the bill.

* * *

If we conclude, after learning all about the rates of pay these men receive, that they are getting less than we earn ourselves, that we ought to contribute more to their weekly envelopes, that they cannot live as comfortably as the average workers of similar skill, then let us make our decision known. Once it is clearly realized that the public, not soulless corporations, must meet the bill, must give up out of their pockets every additional dollar paid over to these workers, then public sentiment will govern rates of wages and govern them equitably.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

Representative Clements, of Irwin County, owns the identical spot of ground upon which President Jefferson Davis was captured, after the surrender of General Lee and the flight of the Confederate administration from Richmond.

The arrest of Davis was effected in a little clump of woods, about two acres in extent, near the Clements homestead, and it has been preserved, just as it was then, ever since the war. In the family of Mr. Clements it has always been considered a sacred place.

When Mr. Clements' father died he left a request that this spot of ground be "kept in the hands of Southern people." He was a lieutenant in the Confederate army, and idolized Jefferson Davis. He aided in the fallen chieftain's escape, and only consented to his surrender when it became plain that further resistance was worse than useless.

Mr. Clements is contemplating, in order that his father's last wishes may be complied with, asking the State of Georgia to accept title to this spot where Davis was arrested, and to appoint some kind of commission or committee to take it in charge.

He has worked out no definite plan—he merely wishes to give the property to the State, with the understanding that the State will protect it, preserve it and keep it, as his father wished, in the hands of "Southern people."

Not a stick of timber has been cut from the land since the day Jefferson Davis was arrested thereon, and many trees that were mere saplings then now are great oaks and pines.

Representative Shelby Myrick, of Chatham, is one of the very hardest worked men in the House.

He heads the big Committee on Constitutional Amendments, and that committee likely will be worked overtime this session.

Myrick is one of the very best lawyers in the House, and is a gentleman of extreme affability and effectiveness. In other words, he is both able and affable.

Mr. Myrick's committee already has returned one county to the House with a favorable report, and the chances seem bright for the creation of the same by the Legislature. The proposition—Barrow County—has been thoroughly thrashed out in the committee, and the House is apt to take the committee's findings as righteous and just.

Speaker Burwell picked for the constitutional amendment committee from among the best legal talent he could locate in the House, and when he made Mr. Myrick the chairman of that committee he paid him a high but deserved compliment.

A meeting of the legislative committee of the Georgia Anti-Saloon League was held at Wesley Memorial Church in Atlanta Tuesday night, several members of the House and Senate being present.

It was decided not to introduce the Tippins bill or any substitute for it at this session of the Legislature, but temperance legislation instead will take the shape of a bill intended to gather the fruits of the Webb-Kenyon bill against interstate shipments of liquor recently passed by Congress.

Whether the Legislature will enact any liquor legislation whatever this session is problematical, as there has been so far no particular agitation of the matter.

Representative George F. Paulk, of Berrien, will introduce in the House soon a bill to establish a branch school for the deaf in South Georgia.

The bill will ask for a branch school convenient to the 150 deaf children in South Georgia who are unable to avail themselves of the education offered by the Cave Spring School, on account of its inaccessibility.

The bill will not specify any particular location, but will leave that to be settled by a committee appointed by the Legislature or Governor. No large appropriation for buildings will be asked, but the town where the school will be located will be expected to provide temporary buildings, at least.

Representative Crawford Wheatley's dinner to the House Appropriations Committee Wednesday evening at the Capital City Club had much more behind it than the mere matter of a compliment to his committee, although, of course, it was a most delightful and engaging compliment.

Its direct purpose was to bring as intimately together as possible the committee and Governor Slaton.

Mr. Wheatley, who is the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, believes that Governor Slaton is exactly right in his ideas with respect to the State's income and outgo. The Governor is known to have determined that the present Legislature shall keep the lid on appropriations, and not exceed the revenue anticipated under the present system of taxation. He has made it very plain that he will exhaust the executive resources, if necessary, in undertaking to do that.

Mr. Wheatley is determined to uphold the Governor at every turn, if it be within his power, and to that end already has had numerous conferences with his excellency.

In order to facilitate the work and to make all features of it as pleasant and as cordial as possible, Mr. Wheatley arranged his dinner last night—and it may be said that it was, in every sense of the crowds, a complete success.

It is safe to say that the Governor will find the House Committee on Appropriations standing right behind him in his work of reforming the State's finances, and if the committee takes that stand, it may be accepted as a further fact that the entire House will fall in line promptly and willingly.

General Agricultural Committee No. 2 of the House has a large grouch toward General Agricultural No. 1.

General Agricultural No. 1 had a hog cholera bill before it Wednesday, and was so impressed with the importance of the thing that it invited General Agricultural No. 2 to sit with it in joint session and hear the arguments. G. A. No. 2 readily consented to this and sat through two mortal hours of talk about hogs and things.

When the time came to vote on the bill, however, G. A. No. 1 moved to put G. A. No. 2 out of the room, leaving the voting entirely to G. A. No. 1. To this G. A. No. 2 objected vehemently.

Rather than get out, G. A. No. 2 moved to adjourn—and the motion carried!

The hog cholera bill, therefore, still is up in the air, and G. A. No. 2 has a big grouch toward G. A. No. 1.

ECZEMA LOOKED AWFUL ON FACE

Started with Watery Pimples. Itched and Burned Badly. Awful Sore. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Boy Now Well.

R. F. D. No. 2, Fredericks Hall, Va.—"My little son was very bad off with the eczema on his face. It started with watery pimples and it itched and burned so badly that he wanted to scratch it all the time and he made an awful sore on his face. I would sit and hold his hands a lot of the time to keep him from scratching it. He didn't sleep any scarcely. The eczema looked awful while on his face. I was afraid it would last for life. He was real cross and fretful.

"I had him treated and he grew worse daily. As soon as I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I sent and got a twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and a fifty cent box of Cuticura Ointment and began using them. I saw a difference in a short time. I only used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment a few weeks before he was a well boy." (Signed) Mrs. Kate B. Pleasants, Dec. 12, 1912.

Although the Cuticura Soap and Ointment are most successful in the treatment of affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hands, they are also most valuable for everyday use in the toilet, bath and nursery, because they promote and maintain the health of the skin and hair from infancy to age. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

☞Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

Tifton Slaying Case Now Rests With Jury

TIFTON, July 10.—The trial of I. B. Hall, who shot and killed Dennis W. Hall on May 10, which began with the opening of Tift Superior Court Wednesday, went to the jury this morning.

Four complete panels were exhausted and the fifth venireman of the fifth panel was called before a jury was secured.

Six witnesses were examined for the State, but the defendant relied upon his own statement, in which he told of his quarrel with the slain man, claiming that he acted in self-defense.

Mail Clerk on Trial; Suspected for Year

J. R. Jackson, former railway mail clerk, accused of theft of mails on a Georgia Railway train the night of March 27, 1912, was tried Thursday before Judge Newman in the United States District Court.

The letter alleged to have been taken by Jackson contained a five-dollar bill and three $1 silver certificates.

Government officials state Jackson was suspected of the theft for more than a year before being accused.

New Haven Road Is Blamed for 6 Deaths

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The New Haven Railroad wreck June 12 at Stamford, Conn., when six passengers were killed and 22 injured, was due to the negligence of the railroad in putting in charge of the train an engineman inexperienced and uninstructed in this class of work, according to the report of Interstate Commerce Commissioner McChord to-day.

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van De Water.

CHAPTER II.

IT is not strange that men do not understand women when woman so often does not understand herself. Mary Danforth did not know what instinct kept her from mentioning to her parents her encounter with Gordon Craig in the subway train. That is, she did not tell them that she knew the name of the man whose pocket had been picked. She mentioned casually that she had seen through the window of her car a thief remove a purse from a pocket of another passenger on a local train and that she had vainly tried to attract the victim's attention to the theft.

"How strange that you should have seen it, and that the other people did not," remarked Mrs. Danforth. "You have quick eyes, my dear."

Mary laughed. "They were not as quick as the pickpocket's fingers," she said lightly.

"People ought to be careful how they carry their valuables," remarked her father sententiously. "New Yorkers should know enough to be on the lookout for thieves. Yet every few days you read in the papers of some careless chap who has been robbed."

The Discussion Ends.

There the discussion ended. Mary did not think it necessary to tell her father that the man of whom she had spoken was not a New Yorker. She was quite sure that Craig himself would not speak of the incident to her father, even should he present the letter of introduction of which he had told her. She wondered when he would present this, and if her father would mention the stranger to her. Why should he? There were dozens of business acquaintances whom he met weekly and whose names she did not even know. He was a man who did not bring the office and its concerns into his home. She almost wished that she had told a part of it. It was too late now to do so. Once she made an effort to bring the conversation back to the incident; then appreciated with embarrassment that were she now to give an accurate account of the encounter her parents would think it strange that she had not done so before. So she turned the talk again into other channels.

Dinner over, she asked to be excused, explaining that she must "cram" for examinations.

"Must you work late to-night?" queried her mother, sympathetically. "I think it is a shame the way in which you girls have to work to get through the High School. Now, when I was young——"

"Yes, yes, mother, I know!" interrupted Mary, with more asperity than was habitual with her. She was still weary and nervous, but as she saw the shade of wounded feeling that swept across her mother's face she regretted her sharp speech and, stooping swiftly, kissed the pale cheek.

"Forgive me for being so cross, mother," she said gently. "I am hot and tired, and, I fear, a bit grouchy."

"That's all right, Mary," said her father good-naturedly. "Your mother and I understand, and we are proud of the way you have worked. In spite of the fact that High School studies are a bit strenuous, you'll find that the training has been a fine thing for you later in life if you ever have to face the world alone. But I hope you won't have to," he added hastily.

His eyes dwelt happily on the graceful girl before him. She was an only child, and her father always said that she was the best daughter that any couple ever had. He had insisted that she take a course of study that would enable her to support herself if necessary. Every woman ought to have some way of earning her own living, he had declared. Mary reminded him of it to-night, smilingly.

"I'm Going to Insist."

"Well, dad," she teased, "you say you hope I will never have to support myself, and yet I am almost ready to consider myself a competent secretary, stenographer and typewriter. Then what are you going to do with me if I do not take a position?"

"I am going to insist that you keep in practice, but you shall not go to work as long as I live. I want you at home with mother and me. When I die it will be time enough for you to hustle."

"I pray that won't be for years to come," said the daughter, as she ran her fingers caressingly through his gray hair. "Not because I am afraid of work—but because we need and love you—mother and I."

John Danforth looked fondly at his daughter. "Well," he said with a tender smile, "I've lived right up to my income so far, and now I want to be spared long enough to lay aside something for you two—for no man ever had a better wife and daughter."

Mary studied late that night. As she fell asleep she smiled tenderly as her memory recalled the expression of pride with which her father had made this speech.

"Dear old dad," she murmured drowsily. "I love to see that look on his face."

Perhaps a sudden change in the weather, making the air dry and cool, caused life to seem brighter to Mary Danforth the following day, for she returned from school in a happy and hopeful frame of mind. Her mother came to her room late in the afternoon with the news that her father had just telephoned that he was bringing a business acquaintance home for the evening.

"He says he's a stranger here," added the mother, "and as he's a bit lonesome, father asked him up to dine. He did not tell me his name."

The girl felt a wave of color sweep to the roots of her hair, and she turned away hastily to hide it.

Perhaps it might be as well to tell Norah to have a salad course to-night, since dad's bringing a stranger home," she remarked casually, "and let's have the new china used, too—shan't we?"

"Certainly," said her mother. So calm was her child's manner that the parent would have been surprised could she have heard her whisper excitedly when she was again alone in her room:

"It is surely Gordon Craig!" Then, as the girl caught a glimpse of her smiling face in her mirror, she blushed again.

Confessions of a Medium

A Striking Expose of Fakery in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the partment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

YOU have watched the crowds in front of the fortune tellers' booths in Coney Island. Of course, you have never been one of those who have been "taken in." But you may have watched the others as they stood amazed at the wonderful "second sight" of Professor Bondaloo, or whatever his title happens to be.

As he sits blindfolded he describes exactly the articles in the crowd, tells the amount of coins and the dates thereon; tells the colors of dresses; reads the titles of magazines; adds complicated figures on the blackboard, and thoroughly mystifies his beholders.

They little know that the Professor instead of being imported from Mandalay, India, probably hails from that far-distant land of East Fourteenth Street or the Bowery, and is known in the winter and in private life by some "imported" name.

The assistant, after beseeching you to come closer, still closer, in order not to lose a single syllable that drops like pearls from the lips of the X-ray visioned man, then announces that the great professor will tell you your name for 10 cents to-day only.

When you go inside you are led to the Professor's sister, or cook, or something, who asks you to cross her palm with silver, which means a quarter, or a half, or even a dollar, according to how gullible you may appear.

She then proceeds to tell you the color of your prospective wife's cousin's hair, and seems to have forgotten that you came in to find out what your parents christened you.

How He Did It.

I am not at this time going to take up the fortune-telling mystery; but I shall content myself with pointing out how I accomplished the wonderful "second sight" or clairvoyance, as it is better known, to the astonishment of far more intelligent minds than my own.

Come with me, then, as I enter a handsome private home on Morningside Avenue. Gathered there are about forty-three or forty-four eminent scholars to study the mysterious power of Ali Ben Hassan, who has been educated in English in Robert College, at Constantinople, and who has but recently come to this country.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the apartment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

My guide goes to the back of the room and says, "I speak, Ali. Have you your second sight? Please tell me what this is?"

Very quickly I answer, "There appears to me a hat."

"Right. Hear me now. Please watch me carefully. See this? I ask you to describe it."

A Watch.

"You hold in your hand a watch."

"Now what kind? Be quick, please."

"It is of silver."

"What is the number? Look carefully. Are you ready? Tell us then."

"The number is 62,810."

And so on the questions and answers went, and everything correct to the minutest detail. A doctor who was present proclaimed the results marvelous—that Ali Hassan was a unique specimen for scientific research. Several motions were made, seconded and carried unanimously, that the results of the experiment be sent to various psychical societies and leaflets be printed with a full and detailed description and mailed to leading authorities in this country and abroad.

Really, when I doffed my turban and sank down to a good hearty laugh with my "guide" later on, I once again had occasion to lament on the credulity of my neighbors. The second sight of all Ali Ben Hassan consisted of nothing but a good memory on the part of myself, an amateur investigator into the frauds of mystery.

My friend and I had arranged a code, as follows: Our questions would tell the answer to what they were asking, by the manner in which they were worded. The first letter in each sentence spelled out the answer; but if we had gone no further, this might easily have been detected. So we turned the alphabet topsy-turvy and made H stand for A, T stand for B, S stand for C and so on. For instance, look at the first question that was put to me:

The Solution.

"I" being the first word uttered, suggested "H." "Have" in the second sentence, suggested "A." "Please in the third sentence, suggesting "T"—the three together making "hat."

I can not even begin to show you the further details of the code, which went still deeper, and covered every possible article, description, date, color, metal, etc. We had even gone so far as to vary our code by different signals, and had single words mean fixed things. So that if, perchance, some one began to get the system, we would throw him off the scent. For instance, the second variation made "Say what stone this is" meant diamond. "Please tell me what this stone is" meant emerald, and so on. "Say what country is represented here' would indicate America, while "Please tell me what country is represented here" would indicate Spain.

There is no doubt but the memorizing of these codes is remarkable, and on that basis may be paid for. But I cannot understand why thousands will continue to believe that a strange, unseen power is possessed by these so-called clairvoyants who flourish and grow rich on money defrauded from the credulous pleasure-seekers who frequent the resorts.

One more incident on clairvoyancy: Some time after the Ali Ben Hassan episode, a number of those who had been present were invited to investigate that wonderful gentleman again at a friend's home in Brooklyn. One of the scholars had sufficiently awakened by this time to declare that he thought it was possible the manner in which the questions had been asked had suggested their answer. At this most of the others arose in anger and laughed scornfully at the man who could show himself so skeptical in the face of such conclusive evidence. The "guide" was very much aroused and said he feared this statement would cause Ali to refuse to talk again. (This manner of procedure is generally followed when someone gets on the trail.) Nevertheless, to prove that the charge was preposterous, Ali would allow anyone to ask the questions and he would answer them!

Therefore, to the amazement of all, this was done, and the results were more bewildering than before. There was no doubt of it. Ali Ben Hassan was gifted with a remarkable supernatural sight. But the explanation is even simpler here than in the first incident. We were prepared for all emergencies. I had previously connected in the folds of my turban the end of a slender speaking tube that came close to my ear and extended from another room and was painted in the color of the wall. Hidden in the next room was another confederate, who looked through an opening in the draperies, held a powerful opera-glass to his eyes, and whispered the answers sweetly through the tube in my ear!

New Residents in Towns

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

TACT, judgment and discretion are needed in order to make friends and acquaintances in a new place. Of course, when going to live in a strange town, where one has a few friends, cards may be sent, with the address, to the friends who reside in the town, as soon as one is settled, thus giving them an opportunity to call.

It may be that a bride is making her new home in a town where her husband's friends live. They have received cards for the wedding, or announcements of the marriage, and after they have called and their visits have been returned an interval of dullness may follow. If a few little hospitalities have been offered they may be returned in a simple way.

A new resident must not make advances, must not seem in haste to make acquaintances, must not make first calls on old residents, or send invitations of any sort to them until there has been an exchange of visits and some mark of hospitality has been shown by older residents.

It is well for a new resident to make allowances for an occasional breach of courtesy from well-intentioned persons. These have been known to send invitations to strangers within their gates without the preliminary of a formal call. This has been from carelessness, or the lack of knowledge of the laws of etiquette. A new resident, who may receive an invitation of a general nature from an old resident who has not called, need not stand too strictly on ceremony if by so doing the opportunity may be lost of meeting some pleasant friends. But a second oversight of that sort, from the same hostess, should not be overlooked, and one may well wait on one's dignity for the delinquent hostess to call.

Rules which apply in cities are altogether different from the rules in country neighborhoods or small towns. In a large city it is not the custom ever to make a first call on a new resident or near neighbor, unless a friend in common has requested one to do so. In the country, or in small places, old residents call on a newcomer if it is believed that an exchange of calls would be agreeable.

First calls should be returned within a week or ten days at least.

A THRILLING SHORT STORY

WITHOUT—ice and frozen snow, the bitter cold of a Russian winter. Within—the heavy scent of hothouse flowers, a soft rustle of silk as Natascha Alexandrovna waited breathlessly for the words that would decide her brother's fate.

They brought little comfort.

"I am distressed to be obliged to refuse your request," the general replied coldly, "but if your brother chooses to consort with revolutionaries he must take the consequences."

"He is only a boy, and the woman bewitched him," she urged, her heart sinking as he rose, saying coldly, "It is useless to press the matter further. I am powerless."

"Powerless!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "You, the all-powerful chief of police! You, who have so often assured me of your friendship! A word from you would set Boris free, and you refuse to speak it."

"Orders have been given that even I can not disobey," unmoved by her wrath as he had been by her distress.

"Then can nothing be done to save him?"

Vladimir Mirskoff looked at her for a moment, then, "There is a way, but you may not care to take it."

"Not care, when it is a question of saving my brother! Tell me quickly."

"A plot is being laid for the wholesale assassination of government officials, and a new form of deadly explosive has been smuggled across the frontier by a woman who, try as we may, we can not identify. If you could give us the name of one of the leaders Boris is free."

"You surely do not imagine that I could tell you," she exclaimed indignantly.

"No; but your admirer, Paul Goveski, can. He has friends among the Liberals."

"And you dare suggest that I should make him betray his friends?"

"It is the only way to save Boris from Siberia. I am powerless unless I have the name of one of these revolutionaries to give in exchange. After all, why should you have any scruples concerning men who preach murder as a trade?"

She wrung her hands in an agony of doubt, but before she could reply a servant entered to announce that his excellency Count Paul Goveski desired to know if madame would receive him.

"No, no. Say I am engaged; I can not see him."

"On the contrary," interposed Vladimir, "you must see him. Fate has sent him here to save your brother."

Natascha looked at him imploringly, then said, "I will receive the count," and as the man left the room, "Promise me Paul Goveski shall not suffer for his friendship with these men."

"Certainly," he replied. "Where may I wait for your answer?"

"In my boudoir," holding aside a curtain before a door.

"Remember, your brother's liberty, perhaps his life, rests in your hands," he whispered, and vanished almost as she turned to greet the Count.

"I trust I am not too early," he said, bending to kiss her hand. "You had my letter? I am all impatient for the answer."

"You do me honor," she replied, sinking into a chair. "Believe me, I am indeed grateful."

A Protestation.

"It is your love, not gratitude, I want," he pleaded. "Surely you have seen how I adore you. I would die to serve you."

"So others have said. I wonder how much such protestations are worth from you."

"Only try me and see."

"You tell me you love me," she said slowly. "There is no love without trust. What if I ask for a proof of that?"

"Ask what you will. I can deny you nothing."

"It will place your life in my hands."

"It is there already," Paul replied softly, bending over her. "I can not live without you."

"Rumor calls you Nihilist, conspirator," she said lightly, with a bewitching smile. "A woman's curiosity is proverbial. Is it true, and who are your confederates?"

He stepped back and gazed at her in astonishment too great for words. Then, "Madame, do you know what it is you are asking?"

"Why, certainly; a proof that you trust me."

"But this concerns others than myself. It is impossible."

"I thought so," scornfully; "strange how all men are alike, ready enough with words—unfortunately, I prefer deeds,' rising as if to bring the interview to an end.

"But not such as this?" he pleaded. "To betray those who have trusted their lives in my keeping would be a poor way of showing my love."

But she stood silent, her fingers nervously twisting the lace of her dress.

Paul Goveski watched her keenly, then going to an escritoire wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, folded it, and came slowly back, saying gravely, "Here is the name of our leader. The proof you have asked of my love."

Then, as she took it, he continued, coldly: "And now, madame, I bid you farewell. You have said love can not exist without trust, and so have given me the answer I came to seek."

"You are going?" she exclaimed, incredulously.

"Yes; love bought by dishonor is valueless," and with a low bow he walked to the door.

She flung aside the paper and, passing swiftly across the room, barred his way, saying brokenly: "No, no; you must not go like this. I did not really mean it. Forgive me," looking up at him beseechingly, with tear-laden eyes. For the question that had tormented her for so long was answered; she knew now that she loved him—that to lose him would be much worse than death itself.

"Then you were not really in earnest?" the sternness melting from his face.

"No," she protested eagerly, "I only wished to try. The paper shall be burned unread."

"I knew I could trust you," he replied joyfully. "Natascha, dearest, I, too, was but jesting. The name I wrote was my own." He stopped, for her face was deadly white and her eyes dilated with terror as she gazed past him into the room.

Turning, he saw Vladimir Mirskoff reading the fatal paper with a quiet smile of satisfaction on his face.

The chief of police carefully refolded the paper, saying, "Paul Goveski, I regret to be obliged to arrest you, but this leave me no choice."

"Indeed he is innocent," cried Natascha, imploringly. "It was only a jest."

A Last Appeal.

"A singularly unfortunate one."

"Why try to undo the effect of your work?" asked Paul, scornfully.

"No wonder you despise me," she said humbly. "Listen, Boris has been sent to Siberia unless I could obtain from you the name of one of the leaders in this plot. They are only assassins and deserve no mercy. But you showed me the baseness of the part I was playing. Indeed, I would have burnt that paper. Say you believe me?"

But her appeal left him unmoved, and his voice was as cold and hard as the ice in the streets outside as he his friends, would repent at the last moment? Never." Then addressing himself to Vladimir, "I suppose it is useless to tell you I have never belonged to any revolutionary society in my life? I suspected madame was being made a tool of, and wished to find out; that was all."

"Quite useless, and I should advise you think of a more plausible tale for your defense." Then to his hostess, "Madame, I wish you good evening."

But Natascha had regained her self-control. She was fighting against desperate odds for all that made life worth the living. Entreaty was useless. If the man before her was to be forced to relinquish his prey, other means must be used, and suddenly the inspiration came.

Turning to Vladimir, she said very quietly: "You spoke of a woman who had concealed a deadly explosive for charging bombs. What if I were to tell you her name?"

"Then you may ask what you will."

"My price is Boris's freedom and the destruction of that paper."

"You, a woman, to betray another woman!" cried Paul. "I refuse to be saved at such a price."

Twice Balked.

"And I refuse to pay it," added Vladimir, decidedly.

Natascha looked at him in dismay. "Refuse?"

"Yes. Why buy what I can have for nothing? Sent to prison as a suspect, you will soon tell me all I want to know."

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Paul, and Natascha glanced at him gratefully as she said, "I will tell you now," opening one of the glass doors of the cabinet containing her famous collection of china fruit. "I am the woman, and here are the bombs."

The man stared at her, too surprised to speak, then Vladimir said stiffly, "Is this also some jest, madame?"

"It is deadly earnest," and, taking a china orange from its shelf, she held it carefully in both hands. "What is there to arouse suspicion in the fad of a society lady for collecting china fruit, and what safer place in which to store bombs than a drawing room frequented by the chief of police?"

"Enough of this fooling," he said, roughly. "I do not believe you," and he made a step toward her.

"Stop!" she cried, holding out the orange on the palm of her hand. "If you move I will convince you of the truth of my tale, only you are not likely to live to acknowledge your error."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Return that paper. Write an order for my brother's release and passports for the three of us by the midnight train to Paris."

"I refuse."

"Then as it is a choice between Siberia and death, I shall drop this at your feet, and there will be no one left to explain the accident that wrecked the house of Natascha Alexandrovna and involved the highly esteemed chief of police in so terrible a fate." Then, turning to Paul, "Have I not chosen well?"

"Yes; a thousand times sooner death with you than life if we are parted." And the look in his eyes told her that the peril in which they stood had blotted out all misunderstandings, but she only said calmly:

The Victory.

"Does your excellency still refuse?"

"I will do what you require," he yielded sullenly. "Put that thing away."

"When you have fulfilled my conditions. Give Paul Goveski his paper."

Vladimir complied, and Paul watched it burn while Natascha continued: "Now write an order for Boris' release and make out our passports." Then, when he had done so, "In return, if you give me your word to do nothing till midday tomorrow, I will leave my china fruit exactly as they are. You can search the house, and think what a sensation such a discovery will make, and how your cleverness will be applauded."

"I give it." And if looks could kill, she would have fallen dead at his feet.

"Then I need detain you no longer. But another time, your excellency, when you wish to make a tool of a woman, beware lest you burn your own fingers."

"You have got the better of me now," he replied, turning to go, "but sooner or later my turn will come, and then—" The pause that followed was more expressive than words.

As the sound of his footsteps died away, Natascha placed the orange on a table and burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, exclaiming, "To think that two men could be so easily deceived!"

"Natascha, what do you mean?" Paul asked.

"It was your danger inspired me. I was desperate," she replied, taking the orange in both hands and giving it a slight twist, when the two halves fell apart, and she held them out for her lover to see they were empty of all save air. "If only I could see Vladimir's face to-morrow when he finds those deadly bombs are no more dangerous than this china orange!"

Alas, That Poor Egg!

"Waiter!" From the table by the window the voice of an elderly gentleman rose in accents wrathful. "Waiter!"

"Yes, sir," replied the much harassed one, hastening forward.

The elderly gentleman, overcome by his emotions, made several vain efforts at articulate utterances. Then:

"Take this egg away!" he roared. "Take it away!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter obligingly, as he glanced wistfully at the offending article. "And—and what shall I do with it, sir?"

"Do with it?" The outraged customer rose menacingly from his chair. "Do with it?" he bellowed fiercely. "Why, wring its neck!"

True Business Instinct.

Topham's was the smartest emporium for miles around. You had to be the last word in "go" before a situation was obtained in that establishment. Keen business men filled every post.

One afternoon when trade was in full swing an unfortunate customer fell down the first floor stairs.

"Help!" he groaned in agony. "I do believe I've broken my leg!"

A shopwalker immediately flew to his side.

"Broken your leg, sir?" he inquired sympathetically. And then, in sharp, clear tones: "Cork legs! Third counter to the right, sir! Forward, Miss Davis!"

Up-to-Date Jokes

A man-of-war was lying off Gibraltar, and permission was given to the men to go ashore for the day. The sailors amused themselves in various ways, among others by riding about on donkeys; and their want of experience in this line caused much merriment. An officer, observing one of the men sitting very far back on the animal, instead of in the usual position, called out:

"I say, Jeck, get up more amidships!"

With an injured air he replied: "Well, sir, this is the first craft that ever I commanded in my life, and it's hard indeed if I can't ride on the quarterdeck if I like."

Bismarck was on one occasion pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place.

"He is a remarkable fellow," said the proud father. "He speaks seven languages."

"Indeed!" said Bismarck, who had not a high opinion of linguistic acquirements. "What a wonderful head waiter he would make."

Stolen Fruit Not Sweeter.

A benevolent old man invited a number of small boys from the slums to spend a day at his beautiful old-world country home, and among the many good things which he provided for them was a bountiful and wondrous feast of strawberries and cream.

As the day drew to a close, wishing to impress the lads with a lesson, their benefactor asked:

"Now, suppose, instead of being invited here to eat my strawberries, you had come and helped yourself when nobody was looking, would you have enjoyed the fruit so much?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! And why not?" asked the old gentleman, inspired with a new faith in young Britain's honesty.

"'Cause, sir," came the sad but prompt reply, "we wouldn't 'ave 'ad no cream with 'em!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T TRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 18 years of age. As I was walking on the street the other day I saw a girl whom I hadn't seen before, but I loved her very much the moment I saw her.

What I want to know is how to get friends with that girl.

ALBERT.

Love at sight is such a pretty dream it is a pity to spoil it by getting acquainted.

You are 18—the age to be devoted to making a man of yourself. Bend your energies in that direction, and let love alone for a few years. Under no circumstances should you attempt to form an acquaintance with a girl you happen to meet on the street.

CERTAINLY NOT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am very much in love with a boy. I am 17 and he is 18. He has kissed me a great many times, but now he has stopped writing me, and I have not heard from him for some time. I cried all last night about him.

Would you write him?

NANCY.

You have been very foolish, and his coldness is no more than what you should expect.

Do not write him, and the next time you have a lover, refuse to be so generous with marks of your affection. I trust this experience will prove to you that you are too young to have a lover.

Do You Know---

Failing in her plan to end her life, after seven different attempts in as many months, Laura Griffith, of Atlantic City, has developed a more cheerful view of life, and has signed on as a bareback rider with a circus. As a persistent fatalist, Laura, who is about 18 years old, holds the record. She has tried the poison cup, the glittering dagger, and the more prosaic method of taking a running start and butting her head against a telephone pole. So regularly was she admitted to the city hospital during the past year that a cot was labeled "Laura Griffith" and was held in readiness for her at all hours of the day and night.

Should the measure now before the French Parliament become law it will not be the first occasion on which it has been attempted to make gambling illegal in France. In the thirteenth century St. Louis interdicted all gambling, even prohibiting the manufacture of dice, and Louis XIV was responsible for no fewer than 20 anti-gambling ordinances. But the monarch gave a bad example to his subjects, since every variety of card game known at the time was eagerly and openly played at Versailles.

Five brothers and sisters, named Harris, whose united ages total 438 years, met at a birthday party at Radnage, Bucks. Their ages are 96, 92, 88, 82 and 80, an average of more than 87. Five other members of the same family, who have died, were aged 93, 89, 88, 87 and 77.

Among those recently ordained by the Bishop of Durham was the Rev. A. M. Smith, M. A., to the curacy of Houghton-le-Spring. Mr. Smith has been totally blind for 20 years, but has succeeded in taking his degree at Oxford. The Bishop of Durham appointed him to read the Gospel in the ordination service, which he did from his Braille Bible. His complete Braille Bible consists of nearly 6,000 pages, fills 39 volumes, and occupies a shelf seven feet long.

"Spooks!" grinned Jarvis, appreciatively. He was beginning to be glad he had come. But he saw no answering gleam in the young woman's sober face.

"Call it anything you like," she replied soberly, "but the castle is haunted—just the same. My grandfather was one of the wealthiest nobles in Spain. He died suddenly, leaving everything to my father, his only son and heir. When my father went to take possession of his estate in Segurn the town was full of weird stories of uncanny happenings. The castle was deserted—every one had fled and all told of something in armor that stalked the halls at night. My father laughed at the silly natives and said he would go into the castle and show them how foolish their fears were. He went—and," the girl's voice trembled slightly, "and he was never seen again."

"Hm!" ejaculated Jarvis, with interest. "What happened to him?"

The Princess shook her head and her dark eyes grew very large. "No one knows. He disappeared—vanished utterly—without the slightest clew. Since then two others have disappeared."

"Well, why don't you keep out of there?" he demanded, half seriously. "What's the idea of teasing that spook, anyway?"

"But now my brother has gone in and they haven't heard from him!" Her eyes filled with tears. "That's why I haven't heard from him—why he hasn't answered my cables."

The Treasure.

With true chivalry the young man slightly turned his eyes away that he might not see the tears.

"Now, that's it!" he declared briskly. "You want me to go in and find your brother."

"Yes, that's it!" she cried eagerly. "Save my brother, but," she added quickly, "you must know about this locket. It tells where to find the treasure."

Jarvis ran his other hand through his hair and stared at the trinket in bewilderment. They were coming too fast for him, as he had said.

"Treasure! What is treasure?"

"My grandfather is known to have converted all his wealth into Spanish gold," she explained, "to finance a colonization scheme in Cuba. It amounted to about a million dollars in your money."

The knight whistled. "A million! Eh? How long ago did this happen?"

"Fifteen years ago—and nobody has found it."

Jarvis apparently arranged all these facts in his mind and then inquired:

"Why did you come to America?"

The Princess held up the locket. "A part of the story was that a plan had been made, showing just where the treasure was secreted, but this plan could never be found. Quite by accident, I recently learned that this plan had been hidden in the back of this locket, and the locket, I discovered, had been sold and was in America. It was to find this locket that I left my brother and came to America. It was this locket that you saw last night."

"Then my work is," Jarvis summed up, "to find your brother and solve the mystery? All right! We'll explain to the Duke that you are taking me to Spain for no other reason than to solve this mystery. Let me see—in America we have Roosevelt, the trust-breaker; Farley, the strike-breaker—and why not, 'Jarvis, the ghost-breaker?' "

"Why, yes," smiled the Princess, uncertainly. She could not always tell when he was serious. "It might—why not? Carlos would believe almost anything of the Americans."

Her Secret.

"And will you tell him," he asked wickedly, "that you have made me a—er—what is it?—a vassal?"

Again the rich color sought the lady's dark face.

"I think not," she decided, shyly. "Not just yet."

He smiled at her confusion and pressed his advantage.

"By the way, your—er—just how should a vassal address his Princess?"

Dona Maria appeared to give the matter some consideration.

"Highness is correct," she told him, with some hesitation.

Jarvis studied this over before he pursued his quest for further information.

"Your Highness, a vassal doesn't really amount to much, does he? No—I thought he was a piker," he added ruefully.

"A piker?" queried Her Highness, puzzled. "You mean he carries a pike?"

"No, no—a piker is a tin horn."

"Tin horn?" echoed Dona Maria, more mystified than ever.

"Well," Jarvis began, desperately—habitual use of slang plays the mischief with classical synonyms—"a—a sort of pawn in this game of chess—along with you kings and queens and castles and—things. For instance," the light of fun returned, "could a perfectly good, honest, reliable, hard-working vassal work his way up and get to be a Duke—or a lord or—something like that?"

Dona Maria laughed softly. "You're an ambitious vassal, aren't you? I'm afraid you wouldn't be satisfied with being less than a king."

"A king, prince or—a bandit," he returned, meaningly.

"A bandit? And why a bandit?"

"A king might demand—a prince request—a bandit seize."

Dona Maria looked blank. "Seize what?"

The vassal drew a quick breath. "That which a mere vassal may only admire," he fairly blurted out.

Dona Maria was saved the necessity or reminding him that he was still a vassal by a knock which she seemed to expect.

"Sh-h, he is here. What shall I call you?"

The Duke Arrives.

"Warren, Mr. Warren," he whispered, glumly. He felt that he would without straining himself cultivate a man's size dislike for the exalted cousin.

The Princess opened the door. "Come in, cousin," she said sweetly. His Grace of Alva entered, but fairly shied like a spirited horse at the sight of the stranger.

"Oh, I'm intruding," he exclaimed, in a manner which said plainly: "What the dickens are you doing here? Get out!" This convinced Jarvis that he would eventually come to dislike the exalted cousin by the running foot.

"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I'm bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

Jarvis nodded easily. "Glad to know you."

"I am honored," returned the Duke, his manner plainly indicating that the honor was the other way around. "Interesting task you have undertaken. May I ask if that is your regular profession?"

His tone was a mixture of the condescendingly paternal and an aristocratic sneer, which those of first families consider the thing in dealing with their untitled inferiors. He did not mean to be especially offensive to the young man—it was merely the way he had been brought up.

"That is my business," replied Jarvis, outwardly unruffled. "Solving mysteries—looking up the family skeleton—hunting out spooks—what we call in America a 'ghost breaker.' "

"A strange calling," mused the Duke, eying the young man keenly. "Really, I never heard of anything more extraordinary."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

The scene of the story is laid in the Vanderlip Hotel, New York City. The Princess Maria Theresa of Segura, a beautiful Spanish woman, is suddenly awakened in her suite by the sound of pistol shots. She hears a man running down the hall. He crashes against her door, breaking the lock, and enters. She sees he is a tall, good-looking young man, dressed in evening clothes. He is carrying a revolver in his right hand, and blood is dripping from a wound in his left. He begs the Princess to hide him. She, moved by some indescribable impulse, decides that she will. She directs him to an inner room, and a few minutes later, when the hotel detective knocks on the door, she tells him she is all right and sends him away. The young man, who is Warren Jarvis, of Kentucky, comes out of his hiding place, and the Princess, for the first time, notices his wound. She is moved to sympathy and showers him with questions as to what has occurred. Jarvis tells her about a Kentucky feud between his family and another named Markham. He says he left Kentucky to avoid the feudists, but encountered one of them in the hotel, which explains the shots. The Princess declares she will help him, and then asks the stranger question, "Are you afraid of ghosts?" Jarvis laughs, but grows solemn when the Princess tells him she has dangerous work for him to do. She makes him swear allegiance, and creates him her "vassal." Then she tells him to get her trunk, which is going to be shipped to a steamship on which she sails to Spain the following day. First Jarvis tells her to telephone to his servant, Rusty Snow, a negro. The servant is instructed to procure passage for himself and Jarvis in the ship. Jarvis then prepares to get into the trunk, but first begins to question the Princess about herself.

Now go on with the story.

Shoe Dealer: "It won't pay me to handle these shoes on such a small margin."

Commercial: "I know the profits are small, but, my dear sir, just look at the shoes and see how they are made."

"Humph! They are made very badly, miserable stuff, too—won't last a week."

"That's it, that's it. You'll sell five pairs of these shoes to one of any other maker's."

Julius' Happy Day

"IT'S perfectly awful and I don't understand it!" said Julius' mother, applying a very dainty handkerchief to her eyes.

"Disgraceful!" said Julius' father, emphatically.

Julius stood with a hangdog look, his eyes on the dusty stubbed footgear that had started out earlier in the day as carefully blacked shoes. There was a tear in his blouse and several rents were in his trousers and a general atmosphere of disrepute clung to him.

"He seems perfectly possessed," went on his mother, "to escape to the alley and hobnob with those young ragamuffins who make it their headquarters! Goodness knows, I wish we could move away from here! I had Arthur over especially to play with him! What did you do with Arthur?"

"Aw!" said Julius, with a growl. "I ditched him early! He's no good, honest, ma—he's a sissy!"

"Meaning that he is a gentlemanly, well-bred boy!" flashed Julius' mother. "You see?" to Julius' father, in despair.

His Games.

"What manner of amusements interested you in the alley?" inquired his father judicially of Julius.

"Aw," said Julius, "I met Fatty an' he said the gang was up in the barn where Lilkins keeps his horses, an' we went there and played train robbers till Slicker, he fell down the hole where the hay comes down, an' I fell down, too, an' Lilkins he comes in an' says we've broken the back of his best horse by falling on it, through the hole, and he'll be darned if——"

"Julius!"

"Well, you ast me, didn't you?" demanded Julius indignantly. "Anyhow, he said he'd be—that—if he'd stand for it, an' Fatty he yells like everything because he hasn't any parents an' lives with his aunt, and she's away workin' all day. So Lilkins can't do anything to him, I guess.

"An' I told Lilkins he didn't dast, 'cause we wouldn't buy any more groceries from him if he did, an' I wuzn't doing anything anyhow. An' it was an awful old horse. An' then Ginger—his father has a plumbing shop three blocks down—he said they was a pony in his barn, and we went and hitched it to a cart and then we drove."

"Drove!" shrieked Julius' mother. "With all the automobiles on the streets and everything! Where did you drive?"

"I dunno," said Julius. "We had a nice drive. We went clear over on the west side across the river. Only a policeman he said he'd arrest us if we kept stopping in the middle of the street to fix the harness. We had to tie it together. An' a lot of automobiles got backed up behind us and they were fierce, the way they talked! Ginger, he sassed them back.

"'Who d'you think owns this horse?' he said to 'em when they told us to get out of the way. 'Guess it's got a right on the road if it does eat oats instead of gasoline, smarty!' An' I saw the Mrs. Kingman you know in her electric——"

"Oh!" moaned Julius' mother. "To have the Kingsmans see my child in the grasp of a policeman and with those little ragged——"

"A man he got mad," Julius proceeded, "because the pony ate some bananas from the back of his push cart an' Fatty threw a stone at him and he caught me and shook me something fierce an' another policeman he said, 'Now, go on out of here, you kids, quick, before I run you in!' An' a boy on a bicycle got in our way coming home an' it was his fault, because we yelled at him and Ginger thought the pony'd broke his leg, but it was only skinned. It was a second-hand bicycle anyhow and we got away because the pony went faster than the boy could walk. I guess he'd skinned his leg, too.

No Bell.

"The street car that hit us only pushed us sideways and tipped us over an' it was the motorman's fault, because he didn't ring no bell. Anyhow, I didn't hear any. An' Ginger's father was awful mad. He was waiting for us. He said the pony's people only rented room in the barn an' it would be a wonder if they didn't sue him for damages. What's damages? I don't know what he did to Ginger, but Ginger yelled awful an' I came away then any how.

"An' it wasn't my fault that Mrs. Button's clothesline broke when I ran through her yard an' hit it. They didn't tie it up tight enough. An' the girl was mad when she saw the clothes all down! Honest, I didn't do nothin' father!"

"Julius," said his father, with awful sternness, "you march straight upstairs to bed, this minute!"

"Wh-what do you think?" quavered Julius' mother in despair as her son disappeared.

"I think," said Julius' father, with a broad grin, "that Julius had a good time for once in his life. However, it might be well to unload his superabundant activity on a summer resort farm this summer. Let's look up one somewhere."

The Bishop's Story.

Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak fourteen years before in London and remembered only one thing he said.

"He told me that fourteen years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head and was picked up dead.

"He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received this reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because as she passed my window in her fall I heard her say, "Now for a bump!" ' "

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Christine Norman's Rules for the "Too-Thin" Woman

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

CHRISTINE NORMAN is exactly the sort of girl you would be if you could choose—pretty, sweet, gracious, alert, honest with herself and sympathetic with all of life. And if you have seen "Peg o' My Heart" you would never guess it!

In that play she has to play the part of a girl whose cold, self-centered, unsympathetic nature makes life a burden for the dear little Irish cousin we all love—and all honor to the histrionic ability of the girl who portrays coldness and snobbishness so convincingly that the interviewer's heart sank at the thought of a chat with her. Exit the girl of the play, and enter Christine Norman and joy to the heart of the interviewer at the same time.

Miss Norman's manner is as wholesome and unaffected as her own pretty pink and white room, and her mind is as interestingly many sided as the vast array of vastly differing books that are so prevalent all about her room.

"Now, how could I have a beauty secret?" she laughed. Look at her pictures and you will sympathize with my thought that Heaven and the good fairies had been so kind that "beauty secrets" were scarcely needed.

"However, I have a very original trouble for these days," she went on, cheerily. "I have the unusual horror of getting too thin! Once I did become terribly thin—and I had to go on the milk cure, nothing but milk for seven weeks, and quarts and quarts a day all that time. Even now whenever I start losing I proceed to drink eight glasses of milk a day. Honestly now, aren't curves much prettier than angles? And when cubist types go out of style and women want to get back to normal I recommend the milk cure to their attention.

An Easy Cure.

"A milk cure is an easy thing for me to take, because I am not a particularly carnivorous animal. I believe firmly in eating vegetables in great quantities and eating very sparingly of meat. A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal for hot weather diet.

"But I really don't believe in extremes—enough sleep—eight hours for a woman who is using up her supply of energy in the strain of brain work; enough nourishing food, with chocolates most earnestly omitted; enough fresh air, enough play, and, above all, enough reading to keep you in touch with big thoughts, new ideas in the world's progress. With enough of all these things sanely blended and leavened with ambition to find out what you can do and energy to do it, we ought all have the beauty of clean, sane health, at any rate, ought we not?"

Answering question with question, I queried: "But for the beauty that allures the eye, don't you think we can all cultivate a bit of that over and above our natural dower?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Norman, "I think we can, and we should, too. Now, after she is about 22, almost any woman's facial muscles begin to sag a bit. If she can afford a dollar a week, I think every woman should go to a good masseusse and have those muscles trained upward again. If not, I think one treatment and a careful observation of methods are well worth while. Then the purchase of a jar of good cold cream, and the woman can start muscle building on her own account.

"Some people think it so foolish, almost immoral, to try to save beauty. Now, would these very people wear suits that needed pressing and sponging and braid sewed on? Well, I think we should keep or bodies in at least as good trim as our clothes—clean and in the pink of well-cared-for condition.

Easily Acquired.

"Then if we are as sensible about learning what to do with our looks as we are about proudly developing any talent we happen to have, a reputation for beauty's charming sister—attractiveness—ought to be easily acquired. I know a very pretty girl who sometimes looks attractive quite accidentally, but only sometimes. She simply does not know whether her hair should be parted over her left eye or worn pompadour. She has no idea whether her hats should have tall quills in front or droopy bows at the back. A mirror, a little common sense and proper independence of fads would teach her the simple solution to what ought not be a puzzle at all.

"But truly, I don't think we can be a beautiful race until we give the generations beauty to inherit. Heredity to give you strength and power and beauty is the greatest beauty secret of all I am sure. Because with a fine heredity a healthy body is almost assured, and a fine mind and a strong character will be present too, and with these things the finest type of beauty will be easy to realize. Surely you think so, too?" concluded Christine Norman, lifting a rose-flushed face lit with great earnest eyes and pulsing with vitality that makes of her red-gold hair a beautiful aureole.

And surely we all must think that the finest type of beauty is a thing we all may strive toward—a healthy body glowing with spirit and soul.

I have the usual horror of getting too thin.

When I start losing I proceed to drink seven glasses of milk a day.

Curves are prettier than angles.

I believe firmly in eating vegetables in large quantities and meat sparingly.

A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal.

I think every woman should go to a good masseuse.

NO CHANCE FOR FRANK AS 1914 TURTLE BOSS

By Jo Williams.

MEMPHIS, July 10.—Stick a pin here. Charley Frank will not manage the 1914 Memphis club. Whether Bill Bernhard will be returned or not is a matter yet to be determined. The moral cinch is, however, that if a change is made it will in no way concern the present president-manager of the New Orleans Pelicans. It is quite probable that Frank will not be back at New Orleans next season, but as to his assuming charge of the Turtles there is about as much truth in the report as there are red corpuscles in a Bermuda onion.

Perhaps the foregoing needs explanation. When the Pelicans hit the larded lane some five weeks ago, that ubiquitous person, "One in the know," hustled through with the information that Frank, tiring of his New Orleans investment, had made arrangements with the Memphis club president whereby he was to succeed Bernhard at the close of the current campaign.

The yarn originated in Birmingham. Immediately and without undue hesitation it was given the well-known and emphatic pooh-pooh, locally. Yet it refused to wither and fade away, as is the tragic wont of the average canard. Mique Finn strengthened it by offering to wager a Stetson that the rumored change would come to pass. Mique refused to state where he got his tip. "Just linger around and ye shall receive the ocular proof," was the Celt's evasive retort.

Finn and his downtrodden slaves of balldom spent an off day in this city, and right away the Frank vs. Bernhard affair was revived.

* * *

WHEREUPON, Mr. Coleman, who is connected with the local club in the vague capacity of majority stockholder, president, traveling secretary and general overseer of players and premises, clutched the occasion to unburden himself of large quantities of free and forensic speech, a peculiarity not uncommon with ball magnates. Among other things, Mr. Coleman delivered: "So far I have not given the advisability of changing managers a thought. I can not say just now whether or not Bernhard will be with us again next season. He may and he may not. But one thing is certain. Charley Frank will not be Bill's successor, if one is named. There is absolutely no chance, and those interested in the matter may rest assured that my word is final. Where and from whom the ridiculous yarn originated is a mystery to me. The report that I have been negotiating with Frank for weeks in regard to a change is a fabrication of the vertest sort. Neither Frank nor myself has ever discussed the matter. Indeed, I doubt if Frank himself ever dreamed of returning here. The Dutchman will never manage a Memphis ball club as long as I am in charge."

So much for the "well-founded report."

$4,000 Offered by Sutton for E. Brown

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Larry Sutton, scout for the Brooklyn National League club, who has been in Nashville for the past ten days looking over Southern League players, announced last night that he had made an offer of $4,000 to the Montgomery club for Pitcher Elmer Brown for delivery at the end of this season.

Sutton was so impressed with the masterly game pitched by E. Brown against the Vols last week that he immediately opened negotiations for the brilliant Billiken slabman. His first offer was $3,500, but he willingly met the above price of $4,000, which was set by Manager Dobbs.

"Elmer Brown is not only by long odds the best pitcher I have seen in the Southern League this year," said the Brooklyn scout, "but he is one of the most promising boys I have seen in many seasons."

Up to the time of Sutton's departure for Cincinnati the deal for Brown had not been closed, but it was stated by Sutton that he had urged President Ebbets, of the Dodgers, to lose no time in landing the mainstay of the Montgomery pitching staff.

Lupus or Any Other Skin Disease Will Go Skulking Away If You Use S. S. S.

A tiny pimple spreads to the side of the face and often covers the cheeks and bridge of the nose. It is very destructive to the tissues of the skin. HUGGINS BEST OF PLAYERS IN TENN. TOURNEY

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 10.—The finals in the Tennessee State championship tennis tournament now in progress in this city are expected to be reached Friday afternoon. In that case the championship match between the winners of the tourney and Carlton Y. Smith, of Atlanta, present State champion, will be fought out Saturday. Local sharks predict that the match will narrow down to either Huggins or Smith of Nashville as the winner of the present tourney.

Charles Rodgers of Knoxville former champion, was eliminated Wednesday afternoon by Huggins in two straight sets, 7-5, 6-1. Rodgers had previously defeated Cleage of Knoxville, and Foster, also of this city.

Chattanooga has only one entry, Alex Guerry, while Nashville is represented by Parrish, Caldwell, Huggins and Smith.

Some excellent matches have been pulled off thus far during the tourney. Smith of Nashville defeated Wester of Kansas City in a beautiful match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

By defeating Rodgers and Lowry of this city, both crack players, Huggins is favorite as the winner. Much interest has been manifested in the tourney and large crowds have been in attendance each day.

RIVERS HITS MILKMAN; NOW HE'S IN TROUBLE

PASTIMING.

When you pay your money to see a stunt athletic,
And you sit upon a sunny bleacher seat,
And you see a stunt that's awfully pathetic,
It is time for you to raise your voice and bleat.

When the players spend the afternoon in stalling,
And in wishing that the game had not begun,
And the manager persists in vainly bawling,
The rooter's life is not a happy one.

We note by the papers that several hundred persons clamored outside the Cracker club's office to get their money back on Fourth of July. This shows that the birth rate has increased to 120 per hour.

If the Atlanta management is endeavoring to make itself unpopular there is evidence that said management is headed in that direction at the rate of approximately 8,000 miles per hour.

In an indirect way we note that Tom O'Rourke has been affected by the recent heat. Tom has agreed to become manager of Carl Morris.

When one reads the report that one wrestler choked another half to death, one deplores the fact that he stopped so soon.

If those surgeons who cut out Marty O'Toole's appendix will only cut out his wildness, one Fred Clarke will be much obliged.

If the Athletics could only play the Yanks all season their average would be .996⅔ or thereabouts.

Joe Jackson still leads the American League in batting. This is due to the fact that he never has ruined his eyesight reading literature.

CRACKER STAKE WILL BE RUN FRIDAY NIGHT

IN the belief that "Tex" Richards will be no match for the other Motordrome stars in a long race, Manager Noon Hudson has scheduled a big 7-mile feature for Friday night. It will be the final heat of the Cracker Sweepstakes. Manager Bill Smith, of the Atlanta club, will start the race and it will go seven miles, which is further than any race has gone in Atlanta this year.

A 5-mile race about marks the limit of a motorcycle sprinter's distance. He can stand up for five miles pretty well. After that time there is no chance. Machines and bodies give down under the strain.

In races over five miles it takes a different sort of rider. And in this long-distance stuff Shields and Lockner ought to star. They are two of the greatest endurance stars in the world. They proved it when they won the famous 24-hour race, the most grueling contest ever staged at a motordrome. Of course, it was a team event and the men were on and off the track at all times, but it was the most awful test of endurance to which a motor rider was ever put. This 7-mile stuff ought to suit Lockner and Shields to perfection.

Of course, Richards does not necessarily have it all his own way, even in the shorter races. McNeil's J. A. P. went out again Tuesday night, this time with a couple of bolts missing from his magneto. And Graves' new Excelsior did not prove to be running right.

McNeil swears that never before did he have such luck as this season. He claims all 1913 honors as the Jinx Kid; but he alleges that he has never before been the victim of so many mischances. He believes he has changed his luck at last, and at any rate he has taken every possible precaution against accidents.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Kid Pusky, local featherweight, is after a match with any 122-pounder in Atlanta. Pusky is particularly anxious to get on with Kid Young or Charlie Lee. J. P. Ellis, manager of Pusky, says he will give either boy a $100 side bet. Ellis can be reached at 30 Clifton Street, Kirkwood, Ga., phone Decatur 226.

Reports from New Orleans state that Frankie Russell and Johnny Lore are in great shape for their twenty-round tussle in the Pelican City Sunday afternoon. Russell and Lore recently met in a ten-round battle, with the latter having a slight shade.

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion of the world, says he will be ready to defend his title on Labor Day. His stomach, which has been bothering him for several weeks, is again in shape. His opponent will probably be Kid Williams, and the pair will most likely don the gloves in Tom McCarey's arena at Vernon, Cal.

A return bout, this time of ten rounds, between "Muggsy" McGraw and Addie Brennan would draw a capacity house. McGraw is now taking boxing lessons from Jim Corbett, former heavyweight champion.

The National Sporting Club of London, where Bombardier Wells is a big favorite, hunted the British Isle for an easy opponent for the Englishman and found him in the person of Patsy Mahoney. Of course, Wells won.

Wonder what Billy Nolan, the bounced manager of Willie Ritchie, thinks of the lightweight's easy victory over Joe Rivers. It sure was a glorious Fourth for Willie.

* * *

Leach Cross is still on the coast, undecided whether to remain there in hopes of getting on with Willie Ritchie or to jump over to New York for some easy ten-round money. McCarey is trying to get the champion for a Labor Day date with the Easterner. Should Ritchie refuse, Joe Rivers may get the match.

* * *

Marcel Thomas, the French welterweight, is in Philadelphia trying to get on with some boys of his division. The lack of good 142-pound boys on this side makes it hard to find a suitable opponent for him.

* * *

Eddie Campi has asked McCarey to match him with the winner of the Williams-Ledoux bout on July 15. Campi has already defeated Ledoux.

Tom Tortorich is still after Willie Ritchie's signature to a set of articles to meet Jack Britton. He has offered $20,000 for the title go.

LEFTY SCHWENK PITCHES 36 INNINGS IN 4 DAYS

SAGINAW, MICH., July 10.—Pitcher "Lefty" Schwenk, of the local South Michigan League team, has just hung up a record which is believed to be unequaled in recent years of organized baseball. In four days he pitched four complete games and finished another—36 innings—in which he struck out 33 men in the 36 innings and allowed 21 hits, which netted his opponents seven runs.

UNCLE SAM TO HELP TOURING BALL TEAMS

By James Clarkson.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The United States Government has decided to take recognition of the fact that the Chicago White Sox and New York Giants are going to take a tour of the world during the fall and winter months. A letter to that effect has reached President Comiskey's office.

Now, when you come to study a little, than means a whole lot to the interested parties of that wonderful tour, on which the performers of Comiskey's world-famous White Sox and John McGraw's always fighting Giants are to show to the other civilized nations of the world what a wonderful pastime baseball really is.

Callahan Called on Bryan.

When the White Sox played in Washington during their Eastern invasion early in June, Manager Jimmy Callahan called on William Jennings Bryan. The call was for the express purpose of interesting the Secretary of State in the contemplated trip of the baseball outfit. Colonel Bryan has never been much of a student of baseball—in fact, he inquired of the surprised Callahan whom the White Sox represented. He also wanted to know where McGraw's Giants hailed from. He forgot to ask whether or not all of McGraw's men were huge of size.

Wilson Approves of Plan.

After the short interview Callahan left the Secretary's office, and while he was treated courteously, he was none too favorably impressed. He had an idea. "If I could only see the big boss—President Wilson—I might be able to get better satisfaction," thought Cal. To make a long story very short, Cal was accorded the interview with the President and the Executive informed him that he would not only do all in his power to make the trip a success, but that he believed in it and he personally hoped it would terminate as expected.

Bryan Writes to Callahan.

Yesterday we learned from Commy that he had recently received a letter from Secretary Bryan. When asked what news the letter brought, if any, Commy stated that Mr. Bryan had written him most cordially concerning the proposed trip. Furthermore, he requested Commy to send him, as soon as possible, the itinerary of the trip. Once he gets that, he has promised to notify the American Consuls in the various cities to be visited to give all the help possible to the visit of the Sox-Giant combine. So, after all, it will be seen that Cal's short visit to President Wilson last month was not merely a press stunt. "With the old U. S. Government in favor of the trip and throwing favors in our way, we should show a lot of speed in the foreign lands," said Cal yesterday when referring to the Bryan letter.

Crackers Should Wallop Gulls

Finn's Team in Hopeless Slump

By Percy H. Whiting.

NOW comes the tug of war! The Mobile Gulls are here for three games with the Crackers. The Gulls are in a slump. Of their last twelve outs they have lost eight.

Every game the locals can take away from Mike Finn's team is all clear profit.

It is reported that the Gulls are crabbing at each other and quarreling with umpires, opposing players and even with the genial Mike Finn himself.

Their hearts are "broke."

Of course, they are a scrapping club in a rout, and they will fight and win many a game. But the Crackers had a chance to knock money off the league leaders now is the time.

* * *

THE Gulls' slump will never stop this side of fourth or fifth place. Mark the prediction. For they've quit and they are quarreling among themselves.

In a recent interview Finn stated that he would not strengthen the club.

"How can we?" Finn is reported to have said, "We have no money to strengthen with."

True it is that the Gulls, after making an amazing showing, aren't drawing at all. They don't have any attendance on the home grounds. The Gulls' fans believe their team is sure to win a pennant and they have quit caring a hang.

If ever proof were needed that Mobile is a hopeless baseball town it is forthcoming now. The town has quit worse than the team. In fact, it was the quitting of the fans, the lack of financial support and the knocking over defeats that finally got the Gulls on the run.

* * *

NOT since the year Newt Fisher won a pennant with an $11-team has any club that cost as little gone as high as the 1913 Gulls.

Finn probably established a precedent in perfecting a league-leading team with the cash expenditure of $2,000.

After the close of last year's race, Demaree was forwarded to the New York Giants for $10,000. Remaining on the twirling staff were Campbell, Berger and Cavet. For $5,000 Robertson was secured from the Indianapolis club, while Hogg was obtained for a small sum. Thus the twirling staff was rounded for a few shekels.

In the infield, Paulette, Starr and O'Dell were returned. Stock was shunted from the Giants in the Demaree trade. Thus the infield was perfected without an expenditure of a cent. The outfield, consisting of Jacobson, Robertson and Clark, was secured for a pittance. Jacobson was returned by the Giants at the beginning of the season for the price of recall in 1912. Robertson was grabbed from the Giants on an optional agreement, costing $500. Clark was the property of the Gulls, farmed out to the Texas League, and cost Mickey nothing. When Jackson was put out, McGill, gathered in the Gull fold at the opening of the season for the signing, was recalled from Pensacola. The catchers were grabbed without loosening a kopeck from the coffers, as Larry Brown was a free agent and Schmidt was obtained via the same route.

* * *

IF the Crackers can tear a hole in the shattered Gulls and do some damage to the Billikens next week they will pull out for the South with the prospects bright. They will have a hard trip ahead of them, but they will be right up in the running. Of course, the Southern trip is likely to mean a big slump. But when the club gets home again it ought to be near enough to the top to win a pennant.

The Crackers are back in there fighting again and that means trouble for any opposition.

JENNINGS STILL AN IDOL WITH DIAMOND FANS

By Sid C. Keener.

BACK in the days of 1907-1908-1909, Hughey Jennings was being lauded as the smartest of baseball generals. All around the circuit there was praise for the skipper of the Detroit Tigers. In a single season he developed a sixth-place it on top for three successive years in the American League.

But while the Tigers were prospering and folks spoke kind words to Hughey, he always replied:

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me. They're winning the games and I'm just one of them. You don't see me punching out a hit in the pinch or fooling the batter when he must be fooled."

He Had the Dope.

After three straight years of success and prosperity, the tide turned. They don't herald Jennings the greatest of all greats. In the eyes of the fans, Hughey is not such a brainy fellow any more.

But Jennings' statement came true. The remarks he gave out when the Tigers were winning the pennants can be renewed and show why the Tigers aren't the same terrors of the league.

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me!"

Why aren't the Tigers winning pennants like they did in 1907-1908-1909? The answer comes by comparing the team that won for the Tigers those years and the team Hughey Jennings is directing to-day.

The Old Stars Not There.

There's quite a difference in the class of the Detroit tribe now.

Among the important missing athletes are: Wild Bill Donovan, George Mullin, Tyrus Cobb, Eddie Summers, Davy Jones, Matty McIntyre, Jim Delehanty, Claude Rossman, Eddie Killian, Herman Schaefer, Charley O'Leary and possibly a few more.

In the places of these athletes who were stars of the first magniture at that time, are Bobby Veach, "Lefty" High, Oscar Vitt, Bill Louden, Texas Hall, John Dubuc, Zamloch, Clauss, House and a few more.

Jennings hasn't a pitcher who can go through a season and win 25 games and lose but 4, as "Wild Bill" did in 1907. Further, Eddie Summers, who used to beat the Athletics almost every time he pitched; Killian, who could halt the White Sox and Red Sox, and George Mullin, who won almost every time he took the hill, are gone and forgotten.

Even commanding a team that is down in the second division, Hughey Jennings remains an idol in baseball. His general character and make-up; his style of coaching; his personality; his way of arguments, not roughing and fighting with the umpires, continually have made Jennings such an idol.

He Used Smooth System.

It was the Jennings system that made Hughey popular with everybody. When he entered the American League he brought with him a new style. It was common on the diamond to see Fielder Jones, Clark Griffith, Jimmy Collins, Joe Cantillon and that kind rush up to the ump and kick up a rowdy fuss on every close decision.

Also, it was an every-day sight to see some managers bawl out the players during the course of the game. Jennings had a different system. He accepted the verdicts from the field official with an "All right, boys; let it go at that," and when one of his side turned a bad play, Hughey simply used to pat him on the back and say a kind word on the ball field.

Bisland Horns Into Hero Class

His Hit Wins Game for Crackers

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN these piping days when pennant aspirations are beating strongly in human and other breasts, a hero is born each day. To-day the laurel, the bay, the Richard K. Fox belt, or whatever insignia is proper for a Casablanca of the ball lot goes to Mr. Bisland, shortstopper of considerable renown. If the winning streak of the Crackers continues much longer, Bill Smith will have to search around for new hero material or crown the bat boy. For within the past two weeks there is hardly a Cracker who has not felt the touch of the accolade.

Mr. Bisland horned into the Leonidas class in the most approved and dramatic fashion. He was placed there by the generous and gentle Rube Kissinger, who figured that Wally Smith had been acclaimed enough and it was time to let another's heart warm to the shouts of an admiring populace.

* * *

THE hero stuff was pulled in the fourth inning of yesterday's pastiming, which was about as good a spot as any. The battle with the Memphis had rocked along for three sessions without any tangible results. Kissinger was working his usual cool, heady game, and the Crackers did not look particularly formidable against his hurling.

In the fourth, though, things happened. Tommy Long opened with a measly pop back of first base, which Bill Abstein couldn't grab, and when the ball carromed with reverse English the right fielder scampered on for a two-base hit. Welchonce, to display his batting versatility, eased a bunt down the third base line and beat it out.

Alperman then cracked sharply to third. Ward messed the ball, but, to the surprise of the stands, Welchonce remained true and faithful to the first cushion and wouldn't budge, evidently thinking the ball had been caught on a line. How he thought so is the eighth wonder, but let it go at that. Alperman reached first, but as Welchonce was also there one of them had to move back to the bench.

Rudderham eeny-meeny-miny-moed and picked Welchonce for this duty. Bailey followed by striking out, but Alperman had swiped second during the whiffing.

As the formidable Smith approached the pan, Kissinger and Seabough held pow-wow and passed the third sacker.

* * *

BISLAND strode haughtily, but not too confidently, to the plate. Inasmuch as he hadn't registered in the hit column since the morning game of July 4, the fans were not altogether cheerful.

On the first one over, though, he hit high and far into right field, and Baerwald, who had been playing close to center, couldn't reach the pill. All those ahead of Bisland scampered in, and so did he when the peg to get him at third went to the grandstand. The laurel was immediately brought on.

With the single exception of Mr. Bisland's being present with the punch at the proper moment, the game was featureless, though Dent hurled in improved form. The score was 5 to 2.

Bryan's Commoner Is Made Monthly Paper

LINCOLN, NEB., July 10.—Secretary of State Bryan has announced that with the current issue the Commoner, which he established in 1901, will cease publication as a weekly, and will be issued monthly. The resignation of Richard L. Metcalfe, appointed Governor of Panama, has left the Commoner without an editor.

Under the new arrangement Mr. Bryan says he will be able to give attention to more editorial writing. The Commoner's size will be doubled. C. W. Bryan will continue in direct control.

EARL MACK ACCEPTS 31 CHANCES IN SINGLE GAME

RALEIGH, N. C., July 10.—Earl Mack, son of Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, is believed to have made a new world's record for chances accepted in a ball game here yesterday between the Raleigh and Durham clubs of the Carolina League. Mack accepted 31 chances, 29 put-outs and two assists, without the least sign of an error. The game went for 18 innings and was won by Raleigh, 4 to 3. Young Mack is manager and first baseman of the Raleigh club.

"RED" DONAHUE DYING.

PHILADELPHIA, July 10.—Frank ("Red") Donahue, one-time pitcher of the Phillies, St. Louis Nationals and later Cleveland and Detroit clubs of the American League, is slowly dying at his home in this city of tuberculosis.

MAJORS BID FOR PLAYER; $15,000 FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, July 10.—Outfielder Larry Chappelle, of the Milwaukee club, will be sold at auction here July 15. Only a few of the big league clubs have already bid for the youngster. Both Chicago clubs, Detroit, Brooklyn, Cincinnati and Cleveland are in the market. It is said that $15,000 has been offered for the youngster.

U. S. TEAM MEETS GERMANS IN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND, July 10.—The American and German tennis representatives clash to-day in the second round of the Dwight F. Davis international lawn tennis cup matches. Although the weather has not been at all favorable for tennis, Harold H. Hackett, captain of the United States teams, says the American players are in good form. The Germans are complaining of the climate. Yesterday's draw is looked upon as being favorable to the American players.

Froitzheim is Germany's strongest singles player, so it is considered just as well for the American team that he should meet Maurice E. McLaughlin, America's champion, in the first day's play. The showing made by Kreutzer, of Germany, in the all English championship, hardly justifies the belief that he can beat R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia.

Although the Americans are the favorites for the doubles match, they must be in the best form to beat Germany's doubles representatives, Rahe and Kleinscroth.

BUD ANDERSON WON'T BE ABLE TO BOX FOR MONTHS

LOS ANGELES, July 10.—With Bud Anderson in the hospital and not likely to be in a condition to go into the ring for several months, the prospects for a local lightweight match simmers down to a Cross-Rivers battle apparently. Of course, the Harry Trendall match with Cross appears all but closed, and it will be a good one but for a date a little later in the season. Rivers and Cross would be the biggest drawing card possible.

FRANK GOALBY SOLD TO ROANOKE UNDER OPTION

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Frank Goaldby, former second baseman of the Vols, has been sold to the Roanoke club under an optional agreement. He may be recalled at any time his services are needed. Goalby, in a recent series in Mobile, was badly spiked in the hand by Dave Robertson, and will not leave to join the Roanoke club until the wound heals. His fielding while with Nashville was brilliant, but his batting was very weak.

RAIN STOPS MOTORCYCLE RACE; BIG EVENT THURSDAY

NEW YORK, July 10.—Rain stepped in and halted the twenty-mile championship motorcycle race at the Brighton Beach Motordrome here last night before the riders had covered two miles. Ray Veditz was leading when the race was declared off.

The team of Chappelle and Fisher is the favorite in the 100-mile race to be held here to-night.

JIMMY ARCHER INJURES FINGER; OUT FOR WEEKS

NEW YORK, July 10.—Jimmy Archer, the crack catcher of the Cubs, who was disabled by a foul tip from Chief Meyers' bat in Tuesday's game, was more seriously injured than at first supposed. It was thought he had merely suffered from a split finger, but when a surgeon got to work on the backstop he found that the middle finger of the right hand not only was split, but also dislocated at the middle joint.

It will be several weeks before Archer will again get into the game.

FARMERS WIN BY CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Mutual Producing and Distributing Societies Get Credit for Vast Increase in Crops.

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM.
Ohio State Senator, Member of American Agricultural Commission, and Secretary of the Production Group.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 10.—Thus far we have passed 60 days studying the various principles underlying the success of European agriculture. By dividing into sections and groups we have covered every phase of agriculture and studied the best methods pursued in every country in Europe.

Without question, co-operative credit and co-operative producing and distributing societies have accomplished a great deal for European farmers during the last 25 years. The reaching of scientific agriculture colleges in short course schools and on farms during the growing season has had much to do with the vast increase in crop production. Encouragement by the various Governments has been another important factor.

Interest in Every Country.

In every country visited a strong realization of the importance of agriculture is manifested. While methods differ in various countries the same underlying principles are found everywhere.

Highly important principles are the conservation and utilization of every natural resource, the scientific application of manures and chemical fertilizers and the great systems of co-operative credits, which in reality make all the other principles operative.

I have visited Italy, Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. In each of these countries we found some special lines of work more advanced than in the other countries. But when we group these special lines and attempt to apply them to our own country we find one thing lacking in America, namely co-operative organizations.

The intensive methods of farming employed in Italy are applicable to many sections of country. The Goverment policy of helping farmers to own their own homes is bringing many Italians back from America.

Swiss Farmers in Union.

In Switzerland more than one-third of all farmers belong to co-operative organizations that are banded into a central organization entitled the Swiss Farmers' Union, which can control the Government policy. Through these organizations the farmers sell all their products and buy all their necessities.

Co-operative credit and distribution societies have played an important part in the rapid development of Germany's agriculture during the past 40 years. Germany produces more than twice as much to the acre as the United States does and from land that has been farmed for centuries. It is now up to us to double our production.

Denmark has made a world-wide reputation through her co-operative exporting societies by guaranteeing every egg and every pound of butter and bacon. Each egg is stamped with the date when laid and the producer's number is recorded in the National Federation's register. Any complaint may be traced directly back to the real producer. Here again farmers have the controlling voice in Government and Denmark is prospering immensely.

Holland's Cheese Fame.

Holland, as a dairy country, has attained fame for her fine cheeses. Her Government exacts a high standard of excellency by rigid enforcement of the pure food laws.

In France the work of the Ministry of Agriculture through co-operative credit and production societies is rapidly coming to the front. When the final report of this commission is made the French methods of co-operative credit will receive deserved consideration.

In America we need long-time credit, conservation of the solis, fertility and improved methods of distribution.

WILSON CURRENCY BILL IS ATTACKED

Measure Gives Politicians Control Over $10,000,000,000 Banking Power, Says Financier.

DULUTH, MINN., July 10.—George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial Bank of Chicago, the second largest bank of the nation, to-day assailed as revolutionary the Wilson administration currency bill in a speech before the Minnesota Bankers' Association.

"We are confronted with a plan," he asserted, "which proposes to compel the banks to turn over to a political committee virtual control of about $10,000,000,000 of banking power, the result of 50 years' conscientious labor on the part of officers of 7,500 National banks in the United States."

His chief objection was based upon what he termed the political control over such great banking power. He saw demoralizing influences in the proposed plan of decentralization of money and credits. While he believed in Federal supervision, he said it should be regulatory, not administrative.

"I claim," he concluded, "that the amount of bank notes issued should be determined by the requirements of business rather than by guess."

Acid in Oconee Kills 10,000 Pounds Fish

ATHENS, July 10.—Judge Brand has issued a temporary injunction restraining the Empire Chemical Company from pouring waste acid in a branch that empties into the Oconee River, a few miles below Athens. Ten thousand pounds of dead fish have been taken from the river. People living along the banks find the odors almost unbearable. State Game Warden Jesse Mercer has been summoned to investigate.

The temporary injunction will hold until June 26, when a hearing will be given the company.

ATLANTANS SCORE TAX ON FUTURES

Chamber of Commerce Files Protest With U. S. Senators on Cotton Tariff Amendment.

A protest against the passage of the amendment to the tariff bill pending in the United States Senate has been made by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The measure taxes cotton futures dealings.

The protest was made at a meeting of the Atlanta body Wednesday afternoon. Letters were sent to the two Georgia Senators and to Congressman William Schley Howard, urging them to oppose the "rider."

F. M. Inman was chairman of a special committee which handled the matter. He made the report recommending that the chamber go on record against the bill. Other members of the committee were T. A. Nicolson, J. S. Akers and E. S. Ehney.

Objection to the bill was based on the charge that it would eliminate the cotton exchange, would throw the farmers into the hands of the spinners, thus forcing the price of cotton down.

The members of the committee held that it would do away with the cotton merchant who deals directly with the farmer and country merchant, in that it would prevent him from using future contracts.

The three propositions were embraced in offers considered Wednesday. It was intimated the committee favored leasing with the option of purchasing.

REORGANIZATION IS ASSURED AT STATE FARM

Board to Ask Assembly for Funds to Retain $30,000 Federal Appropriation.

GRIFFIN, GA., July 10.—The board of directors of the State Experiment Station Wednesday voted to comply with the suggestions of National Inspector Allen and to petition the Assembly for an appropriation sufficient to carry on all physical work of the station. With this in view, a committee, consisting of J. J. Flint, J. D. Price, J. H. Mobley, J. W. McWhorter and R. J. H. DeLoach, was appointed.

Should the Legislature provide funds, the $30,000 Federal appropriation will be used exclusively in making scientific experiments from which increased knowledge may be gained by the farmers, as the national department specifies.

Director DeLoach also announced his intention of reorganizing the station for experimental farm work rather than for a model farm. A new feature will be a department of animal husbandry, of which Professor Perry VanEwing, recently connected with experimental farms in Ohio and Kansas, will be the head. The appointment was made Wednesday.

Dr. E. W. Allen, inspector of the National Agricultural Department, presented his plan of reorganization and the terms of the National Government in regard to the $30,000 appropriation.

Those present at the board meeting were J. D. Price, Chancellor D. C. Barrow, Judge J. J. Flint, J. W. McWhorter, J. H. Mobley, R. C. Neely, J. W. Andrews, F. R. Mann, M. G. Gamble, W. H. Henderson and Dr. E. W. Allen, of the National Department of Agriculture.

38 BABIES GIVEN FREE MILK EACH DAY

All Work in Campaign Is Done by Committee Members to Cut Expenses.

Thirty-eight babies, whose mothers are unable to purchase proper food for them, are being supplied daily with pure, fresh milk, bought from the fund raised by the Atlanta Mothers' Congress. Every day brings names of new babies who require assistance from the milk fund.

The campaign is being waged at a minimum expense, all the work being done by members of the committee. A committee of young girls has been of great aid.

A check for $25 was received Thursday morning from a prominent Atlanta woman, this being the second check for that amount contributed by a society leader.

Milk bottles, placed in the downtown stores, to receive contributions from the public, are each day adding a small sum to the fund, and individuals are mailing donations to Mrs. John Rowlett, chairman of the committee. Still, more money is needed.

"No one realizes the great field that is open in Atlanta for this work," declared Mrs. Rowlett at her home, 186 East Pine Street, Thursday. "There are hundreds of babies who do not get proper nourishment. So far but few contributions have come in. We need money if the work is to be continued."

ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS

One Thing We Do Not Claim For It

That it is a new discovery—it is not. There is nothing new about it except the wonderful new cures it is making daily. The medicine itself has been in use over a half century, and to introduce and keep before the public a family remedy for 50 years is no little task. The reason we have been able to do it is because the merit is there. It has only been accomplished by a strict adherence to the original formula, using only the very best roots, herbs, barks and gums that nature affords for the relief of the many distresses the human flesh is heir to.

To-day we find but few physicians who claim that minerals are just as good and efficient as are the roots, herbs, etc. You know that epsom salts will act, but the mere fact of acting does not mean cure, and is not what constitutes the remedial virtue of ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS; but it is the perfect combination of nature's remedies that enter its composition for the relief of Indigestion, Constipation, Intestinal and Gastric Disorders, Torpidity of the Liver, Colic, Cramp Colic, Pains in Back, Hips, Shoulders and Sides, Neuralgia, Ovarian Pains, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Rheumatism and all Nervous Complaints.

Now, we want to know every reader of this paper that is suffering with any of the above troubles. We guarantee to help you. Come to see us at Coursey & Munn's, where we are demonstrating this great tonic. If you live out of town, send us an order and we will return your money if you are not satisfied. $1.00 a bottle, $5.00 for 6 bottles. Coursey & Munn's, corner Broad and Marietta.

COTTON LOSES EARLY ADVANCE

Fear of High Temperatures in Texas and Liverpool Buying Cause Sharp Rise.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Old positions were well sustained at the opening of the cotton market to-day and started off 3 points higher, while new crop months were to 2 points lower than Wednesday's final.

New positions were affected by cloudy weather in the eastern half of the belt, suggesting possible showers. Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm. Liverpool bought considerable cotton on the weather prospects. Brokers representing large spot houses were good buyers of new crop positions. The buying was general and offerings light. After the market shaded a few points from the initial range prices rallied some 3 to 5 points from the previous close, where prices were firmly maintained throughout the early session, with the exception of July, which fell back to 12.17, last night's closing quotation.

Strength of Liverpool was attributed chiefly to short covering on fear of an American advance on high temperatures over the triple holiday there.

The official weather for yesterday showed temperature average 102 in Oklahoma and 100 in Texas, with six station recording 100, seven stations 102, seven stations 104 and one station 106. Today's early record shows it is cooler in Oklahoma, and Sherman, Tex., reports drizzling rain.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net decline of 2 to 5 points from the final quotations of Wednesday.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 12.17; August, 12.17; October, 11.54; January, 11.42.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: July, 12.41; August, 12.01; October, 11.56; January, 11.56.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Liverpool came in as due, and quoted spots 5 points higher; sales 8,000 bales. Cables reported the market sustained by short covering before the holidays, fearing advance in New York on the circulation of reports of high temperatures. Liverpool will be closed to-morrow and Saturday on account of the King of England's visit there.

Houston, Tex., reports receipt of the first bale of new cotton from Lyford, Cameron County, Texas. This compares with July 1 last year.

Weather developments overnight were as predicted and favorable. Cooler with showers in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee. Cloudy over entire belt, except in southern half of Texas, where it is fair.

Indications are for generally cloudy weather with more extended showers in Oklahoma and the Central and Eastern States; cooler in the Central belt; generally fair and warm in central and south Texas. Several points in the Central States reported rain this morning.

The market declined at the start, but was soon brought up by the strength of July New York and also on some support in October, which position, New York says, will likely be affected by the very small stock there. It looks as if the intention is to advance the market.

The into-sight for the week looks around 24,000 bales, against 25,293 bales last year. We compare with mill takings of 195,000 bales for this week last year.

FIFTH HEAT PROSTRATION.

CHATTANOOGA, July 10.—Frank Morton, who was overcome by the heat here late yesterday afternoon, is recovering. This was the fifth prostration during the present heat wave.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, July 10.—Around the opening there was some selling by ring speculators, but it was soon apparent there was some cotton wanted from strong sources and a wave of short covering followed, some of which was said to come from Wall Street. Contracts were scarce, especially in October. The buying, it is said, was based on fear of high temperatures in the Southwestern belt and the continued talk of boll-weevil in Texas. Cables from Liverpool stated that the strength there was caused by short covering in fear of high temperatures over the holidays. Some of the larger spot interests were noticeable buyers of new crop. The South was put down as selling, also some of uptown crowd. The market is narrow and is influenced easily either way just now. Agitation in Washington is having a tendency to restrict business and no serious change in prices is looked for pending this legislation.—Anderson.

"If the tax of 50 cents per bale becomes a law the cost of hedging will fall upon the merchant or producer, probably the latter, but as a matter of fact, it is doubted if merchants would be able to hedge at all in any market because the law eliminates the speculator who is theoretically on the opposite side of the hedge.

"A cost of 13 points to trade would kill speculation on American exchanges and kill straddle operations between New York and Liverpool. The English market without straddlers would not be large enough to take care of American hedging, so the only opportunity for a merchant to have a hedge order executed would be when it meets another hedge order the other way.

"Any one familiar with future markets know that these orders would seldom meet, consequently, the law would really kill all opportunity to hedge. Such a situation would drive out all the smaller merchants, leaving the business in the hands of a few rich spot dealers who would have the Southern producer in a merciless grip."—Clevenburg.

Reports of serious boll-weevil damage in Texas, together with timidity on the part of sellers because of the local situation, was responsible for the strength of the market yesterday.

* * *

McFadden and Gwathmey brokers were the leading buyers yesterday, mostly of October, which feels the threat of a depletion in stocks more than any other month. Baruch and Wall Street covered some shorts.

* * *

Sentiment is not unfriendly to the market, traders figuring that with contracts scarce any unfavorable reports will cause a further advance.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas—Panhandle and south clear; central and east cloudy; numerous rains. Oklahoma—North and west clear; balance cloudy; local rains."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Hayward & Clark: "The weather map is very favorable; it shows clearing over entire belt, except fair in southern half of Texas. Distinctly cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas, with fine rains in Arkansas and parts of Tennessee. Some scattered showers elsewhere. Indications are for cloudy, with scattered showers, and cooler in the central belt.

* * *

Houston, Tex., wires: "First bale received from Lyford, Cameron County, South Texas, and will be sold at auction to-day."

* * *

Cotton summary of The New Orleans Times-Democrat: "The steadiness of yesterday's cotton market was explained in two widely divergent ways. The man who believes that cotton on its merits can take good care of itself said that shorts were experiencing difficulty in obtaining tenderable supplies; that the short interest is still large enough to give trouble, and that the position of the actual sale is such a strong one is responsible for reactions upward even when favorable weather would seem to be aiding the bearish cause.

"The man who believes artificial support is responsible for the market's continued show of strength said that talent and trade alike bought new crop deliveries yesterday because the action of the market suggested that July longs were beginning to put the screws to shorts and further strength in July would probably influence new crop deliveries to climb temporarily to higher levels.

"Of course, the weather artists were much in evidence. One faction promised heat waves in the West. Another exploited the comparative records as proof that current temperatures are not excessively high. Still another turned prophet and promised showers and cooler weather in the West."

COTTON SEED OIL.

NEW YORK, July 10.—The market for cotton seed oil was moderately active to-day and higher with commission houses on both sides. Some of the buying was for short account and new speculative demand also was in evidence. The old crop situation remains light and compound trade continues good.

STOCKS GO UP ON GOOD WAR NEWS

Trade Witnesses a Stampede at Noon — Record Corn Crop Important Factor.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Canadian Pacific, which led the stock market in its downward movement yesterday, turned about today and led an upward trend of prices at the opening. Canadian Pacific opened at 211½ for a gain of ⅝, but soon was selling at 213¼, which was 2⅜ higher than Wednesday's closing.

Union Pacific showed the best strength it has exhibited since the present movement began. Union Pacific climbed to 146 for a net gain of nearly 2 points. United States Steel common advanced 1 point on good buying.

The market was largely influenced by London, Paris and Berlin and a considerable share of the buying at the opening came from the other side. This was inspired by a report from St. Petersburg that the Balkan war probably would be ended this week.

Among other gains were Amalgamated Copper ⅝; Southern Pacific ⅛; Reading ½; Chino Copper ½; Illinois Central ½; American Car and Foundry ½; St. Paul ⅝ and Erie ⅜.

Wall Street took an optimistic view of the railroad situation the belief prevailing that the trainmen on the eastern lines will not strike, but are maneuvering to force an amendment to the Erdman arbitration law.

The curb was strong.

American in London were strong.

The advance in stocks is due to short covering and a dispatch from St. Petersburg saying that the Balkan war would soon end.

For a time after the opening the market was witnessed a stampede and before the advance ceased gains of 1 to nearly 3 points were recorded. Shortly after the first hour, however, recessions appeared, but prices held above yesterday's close. Union Pacific advanced ⅜ to 145⅝, Reading reached 157, a gain of ⅝. Lehigh Valley, Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania were up ½. Copper declined ¼. Other issues remained unchanged to a fractional advance. Great Northern preferred issued a 1¾ dividend.

Call money loaned at 2 percent.

Trading was quiet in the last hour. Prices were practically unchanged from the mid-day level. Canadian Pacific sold around 212¼, for a net advance of nearly 2 points on the day. Amalgamated Copper was fractionally higher. Steel sold at 52⅝ and Union Pacific sold around 145¼.

The market closed firm. Governments unchanged; other bonds steady.

Memphis Wins and Loses in Rail Rate Pine Lumber Cases

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Rates on pine lumber over the Illinois Central from Jackson, Miss., to Memphis, Tenn., were held by the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day to be unreasonable in so far as they exceed 10 cents per 100 pounds.

Lumber, staves and barrel headings rates to Memphis from points East of the Mississippi and South of Vicksburg, except over the New Orleans, Mobile and Chicago Railroad, were found to be unreasonable if they exceed 11 cents per 100 pounds for a one-line haul and 12 cents for a two-line haul.

Proposed advances of 3 per cent in rates on lumber over the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad in Mississippi and Louisiana to Memphis, Tenn., were allowed.

STOCK GOSSIPS

With the prospects of a 3,000,000,000-bushel corn crop, it looks as if the railroads would have all they can carry this fall and winter. It looks as if President Wilson would avert the railroad strike. Expect a traders' market for the present, but prefer to buy stocks on breaks rather than sell on rallies.—Potter.

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Moderate profits should appeal to the daily trader for the present. Information channels are pessimistic. Trading movements in the general list, with a somewhat better demand for the leading stocks, may be seen to-day."

* * *

The market responds well to favorable news, due to the large outstanding short interest and the limited supply of stocks. Prospects of a corn crop of record-breaking proportions and the ending of the Balkan war are factors of the utmost importance. Last, but not least, the present level of prices is very low, the returns to the investors are attractive, and the chances for a considerable appreciation in values in a reasonable time are good.—Potter.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Wheat traders were inclined to construe the Government report as bullish when considered in all its details. There were a number of sharp operators, however, who took a bearish view of it, and talked lower prices. It is the general belief that the final returns on all wheat will show around the same as last year, which, with the carry-over, should make a larger supply than last year.

"Corn traders took the Government report as bearish, although the acreage is two-tenths of 1 per cent under last year. This was offset by the condition being the highest since 1900. The crowd were regarded as short and the commission house holdings have been reduced of late.

"Oats traders were surprised at the showing of the crop report, it being larger than expected. Most operators took a bearish view of it, and said that with the crop within less than three weeks of harvest they look for a yield of 1,000,000,000 bushels."

* * *

General liquidation is on in oats and this, together with pressure of new oats from the country, will, in my opinion, carry the market several cents lower.—Roycroft.

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: Wheat—The country continues to market the new crop of winter wheat very freely. As long as Europe continues to buy liberally the effect of hedging operations is materially lessened. We believe there is a large outstanding short interest, and are inclined to look for a fair rally.

Corn—This morning's map was generally clear with some high temperatures again in the Southwest. The figures given in yesterday's Government report indicate a crop larger than the trade generally was looking for, but there has been considerable scattered liquidation and short selling during the past few days. We are inclined to think the report will not prove a depressing influence.

Oats—The Government report was about as expected and therefore will not prove an influence. New buying power is extremely limited, but there has been a great deal of liquidation, and while prices may gradually work lower, we do not look for any sharp break at the moment.

Wheat—No. 2 red	86½@87
Oats—No. 2	40 @41

CHICAGO, July 10.—The strength shown by the wheat market at Chicago this morning when prices advanced ⅝ to ¾c was a reflection of the higher prices at Liverpool, coupled with the bullish construction placed on the Government report of yesterday. The best prices were shaded ⅛ to ¼c soon after they were made by "hedging" sales. Argentina shipments for the week are estimated at only 400,000 bushels, compared with 1,552,000 bushels for the corresponding period last year. Northwestern receipts, while a few cars larger than for the same day in 1912, were small.

Corn was a shade better in sympathy with wheat, as the weather is favorable.

Oats were ½c lower for September and a fraction lower for July.

Provisions were lower.

HOG PRICES WORK LOWER.

CHICAGO, July 10.—Hogs opened 10 to 15c under the high spot yesterday, 9.15 being about the limit, with the bulk at 8.90@9.10. The reaction, after the boom is logical, the break being facilitated by swelling supply and a stale stock of 5,700. There were 75,000 at eleven markets, against 69,000 last week. Cattle trade was easier than yesterday, although prices were quotably steady. Arrival of nearly 11,000 Southern lambs direct to packers gave trade in the sheep house a 15 to 25c lower appearance.

Deserted, She Asks Work, Not Charity

Mrs. Emory Batta, who appealed to Matron Mary Bohnefeld for assistance in finding employment after being deserted by her husband, denies the published report that she is penniless and tramped the streets 48 hours without anything to eat.

Though her husband is said to have taken $500 of their savings Mrs. Batta declared Wednesday that she simply appealed to Matron Bohnefeld to help her get work, not for charity.

Poultry, Pet and Live Stock

Poultry Business Is Indebted to Fanciers Fifty Years Ago

Fancier Has Done the Slow and Plodding Work Which Has Taken Years to Accomplish.

How often we hear people say, "Oh, I do not want anything to do with the fancy part of the chicken business; I am out for utility and I just do not want to have anything to do with the fancy part of the business." Some persons seem to have about the same aversion to the fancy that the small boy does to having his hands and face washed.

They seem to think that that sounds mighty practical and will help to keep them from getting mixed up with the fellows who are always talking about shows and prizes and all such things. Oh, yes, they want good stock, but nothing fancy. The fancier can get along without the utility man just about as well, if not better, than the utility man can get along without the fancier. In reality, they need each other. Where would the utility man be to-day if the fancier had not gotten in his great work for the poultry industry. Just think of it, the fancier has given the country all the pure breeds of poultry from which the utility people have taken their foundation stock that has made them what they are to-day. He brought the Brahmas, Cochins, Langshans and Leghorns from other countries. He really manufactured the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Reds frome other breeds and gave them to us in a shape that has made them of the greatest value to the farmer and market poultryman. Where is there a utility man or farmer who would be willing to blot out all these breeds and go back to where we were 50 years ago? He has given us such a variety that the most exacting along any line of utility work can be supplied with about what his needs require. There is the Brahma or Cochin if a strictly meat breed is desired; or the Leghorn, Minorca or Spanish, strictly for eggs. For the farmer who would like a combination, they have furnished him with the Wyandotte, Plymouth Rock and Red.

So you see it is a question of simply paying your money and taking your choice. The fancier has done the slow and plodding work which has taken years to accomplish, giving it to the utility man all ready to work with.

Of course, the farmer may let the barrs on the Rock get a little irregular, or the comb on the Leghorn become a little top-heavy, the Reds a little mealy in color, yet, in spite of all these little irregularities they maintain their valuable qualities and serve the utility part to a marked degree. The fancier invented the trapnest that egg-production might be increased from an average of 75 eggs annually to 150 or better for the laying breeds; or, for the general-purpose breeds for that matter. He has led the van in giving better houses for the hens that they might produce eggs in winter as well as in summer. The fancier has furnished the country with the best appliances for the economical handling of poultry in great numbers. Take, for example, the incubator; it has been really the solving of the commercial poultry problem of this country. Just think of the hundreds of thousands of chickens and ducks that are annually turned out of these machines to fill the great markets of our cities and towns. Machines holding as high as 60,000 eggs at a filling. Just think of it, 4,000 hens to do the work of that one machine, which is looked after by the attention of one man not over an hour each day. The poultry fancier has made possible the diffusing of the best in poultry literature to one and all. The great poultry and farm journals which the country supports were made possible by him, and, in fact, are largely supported by the fancier. The utility man takes advantage of all these helps; in fact, looks to them largely for his guidance.

Then we must not lose sight of the beauty part of it. For there is no one, we believe, so completely engrossed in the making of money that he does not enjoy the beautiful in nature. Most of us make our money for the purpose of spending it in the pursuit of pleasure and happiness.

Why not double this pleasure by having the pleasure right along with the making of the money. Flocks of pure-bred poultry of any variety should be a pleasure for any one to handle; on the other hand, a lot of mongrels could hardly be an incentive to any one, much less a pleasure.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Seeking to Locate $100,000 Concern

Manufacturers Search for Plant. East Alabama St. Sale Reported. Permits for 14 Bungalows.

Real estate agents began looking Thursday for a site with railroad frontage on which to locate the Sox Duplex Cinder Deflector Company, a concern organized recently with $100,000 capital and Henry Schaul as president.

This manufacturing company will make a patented device for keeping cinders out of Pullman and day cars, with Atlanta as headquarters, and an expensive plant will be installed. David Sox is the inventor, and it is said that his device has been adopted by a number of railroads.

While the exact amount to be expended on site and plant has not yet been determined, it is estimated that $100,000 will be necessary.

Alabama Street Sale Reported.

Report in real estate circles Thursday had it that Luther Z. Rosser and J. H. Porter had bought the East Alabama Street property of Colonel Robert J. Lowry at $35,000, or about $1,000 a front foot.

This property is 57 East Alabama Street and has a frontage of 35 to 40 feet. It is improved with a three-story brick building.

Messrs. Rosser and Porter have been associated in a number of interesting deals, notably the purchase of 301 Peachtree Street and the property on North Pryor Street of the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company.

A petition has been in circulation for the repaving of East Alabama Street, and property values are expected to take a rise with the improvements. J. Livingston Wright has a parcel east of 57 which he holds for $1,200 a foot.

Twenty-four residence lots will be put on the market August 1 by the A. J. & H. F. West Real Estate Agency. These are in the Atwood tract of six acres on Williams Street, between Tenth and Fourteenth Streets. The land is now being platted.

W. A. Cook, of Senoia, has sold to J. M. Lankford, through J. F. Culpepper, of the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency, 44 Plum Street, for $2,200. The above agency has sold a farm tract on Mt. Perian Road, near Pace's Ferry Road, for $875; two lots in Clairemont Park, Decatur, for $2,200, and three lots in the Peachtree Highlands subdivision for $3,700.

R. W. Milner, formerly a traveling salesman, and J. W. Reeves, formerly a building contractor, have been added to the sales force of this agency.

Whitehall Street Transfer.

George A. Boynton has transferred to Martha A. Boynton a 46 by 110 footp arcel on Whitehall Street and to Haygood Boynton a 98 by 100 foot property on the north side of Woodward Avenue, 100 feet east of Crew Street. The Whitehall lot is 159 feet northeasterly of Garnett Street.

Wide Range of Sales.

Realty men say they have seldom seen more interesting bonds for title and warranty deeds going to record. Among the papers are the following conveyances:

W. B. B. Richards, administrator of the estate of the late William C. Richards, to R. W. Davis, lot on the south side of West Fourteenth Street, 284 by 150, for $4,269.

The L. S. Huntley Company to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Peachtree Road, 368 feet northeast of the junction of the Peachtree and Roswell Roads, 48 by 140, $1,575, and to same, the adjoining lot to the southwest, same size, for the same price.

R. I. Barge to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Ormond Street, 160 feet west of Grant Street, 50 by 141, $2,500.

Charles A. Davis to M. I. Huie and Mrs. Luella Skinner, lot on the west side of Peachtree Road, 1,040 feet northeast of Piedmont Road, 100 by 685, $4,500. Transferred to C. M. Love et al.

Mrs. Eugenie Balch to Mrs. Mamie Cohen, 265 Crew Street, 50 by 200, $3,650.

Lois and Nellie Hollingsworth to M. Friedman, lot at the northwest corner of Highland Avenue and Fortune Street, 90 by 120, $4,300.

James E. Brown Company to National Stock Yards Commission Company, lot on the east side of Marietta Street, 67 feet south of Lee Avenue, 74 by 222, $12,607, and to same, southeast corner of Lee and Marietta, 67 by 149, $5,200.

The total of these transactions is $35,176. A few are trades made some time ago with papers just going to record, but most of them are of recent date.

Successful Auction Sale.

John S. Owens and Gid Hanna are to-day $2,500 better off than they were this time Wednesday, having made this amount on an auction sale at the corner of Park Avenue and Bryan Street, Grant Park section. Less than a year ago they bought a tract for $4,900 and the total in the auction was $7,295. The buy was made from Mrs. Lizzie Hollingsworth through William A. Vernoy, the latter of whom had charge Wednesday. J. W. Ferguson & Son were the auctioneers.

Mr. Hanna and Mr. Owens attributed the success of the sale to effective advertising, the value of the property and plenty of good lemonade.

Lots 1 and 2 were bought by H. A. White for $775 each; lot 3, by J. T. Wallace, for $875; lot 4, by John A. Fritz, for $1,390; lot 5, by Frank Whitley, for $830, and the house and lot, by George B. Beauchamp, for $2,650. Mr. Whitley refused a good profit on his lot immediately after his purchase.

"We could have sold 50 lots if we had had them," declared Mr. Vernoy after the sale.

Renting Meet Postponed.

Renting agents called together in the office of Charles P. Glover will meet Friday afternoon at 3:30, two previous meetings having been postponed. The "single listing system" of houses will be discussed.

New Pharmacy College.

The Courtland Street section between Harris and Cain Streets is soon to have a new college of pharmacy, when Dr. George F. Payne, the proprietor, completes plans for remodeling two double frame houses which he has just bought. Dr. Payne acquired this property from W. I. Webb through G. M. McKinnon, paying $20,000, or nearly $260 a front foot. The lot is on the east side of the street and the dimensions are 77 by 275 feet.

Ponce DeLeon Activity.

Seldom during the year, say the realty agents, is there any trouble disposing of residences on Ponce DeLeon Avenue. This is true alike of the closer-in homes, not far from Peachtree, and the homes near or in Druid Hills. Claude E. Sims, for instance, is doing his share of selling. He reports the sale for Dr. John B. Daniel to J. H. Leversredge, of Montgomery, Ala., of 666 Ponce DeLeon, 50 by 180, for $13,000, and of 532 Ponce DeLeon, only two blocks to the west, to Dr. William Asher for R. C. Taylor, for $10,000. The latter is 55 by 232.

Druid Hills Sale.

Although few homes are offered for sale in Druid Hills, buyers can always be found. O. D. Gorman, Jr., a successful trader with Smith & Ewing, has just picked up a profit in the sale of 510 Briarcliff Road to Mrs. J. J. Morris, for $12,500. This lot is 50 by 150 feet and contains a two-story nine-room brick veneer house. The transaction was handled through the Martin-Ozburn Realty Company.

Exchange of Properties.

H. M. Carlton has traded with a client of R. W. Evans, of the Cheatham Brothers' agency, for 219 East North Avenue, 45 by 150, for $4,900, giving in part payment a vacant lot on Ashby Street, 50 by 300 feet, valued at $1,000.

Auburn Avenue at $58.

Chauncey Smith has bought from a client of John D. Babbage a lot on the south side of Auburn Avenue, between Yonge and Jackson Streets, for $1,500, or at the rate of not quite $58 a front foot. The lot is 26 by 149 1-2.

Who Is Responsible for Such Creatures as David Lamar?

Who but the Big Men, Who Are Willing to Learn from "Vermin" How They, the Rich Men, May Buy the People's Representatives and Thwart the People's Will?

(Copyright, 1913.)

You read the story of David Lamar, known as "the Wolf of Wall Street," whose meteoric career in Atlanta in 1892 is still remembered by many persons here.

He told the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee at Washington the other day that he had called up big men with plenty of money, pretended that he was Congressman This or Congressman That, and offered to stop legislation that the people demanded.

It would seem that this man's life has been one of perpetual scheming. While in Atlanta his business dealings were of such character that he was arrested, indicted and forced to seek other fields.

Of recent years it appears, this individual, Lamar, has been busy telling big men in New York how he could prevent interference with this trust, or that railroad combination, or some other piece of financial dishonesty.

He used different names, and probably used different voices talking on the telephone. He made fools of some of the big men, and they now FEEL FOOLISH as the story comes out.

It is rather a disgusting story, of meanness, lying and attempted cheating, with possible blackmail attached. Some of the most unpleasant words in the dictionary describe Mr. Lamar very accurately.

But words just as disagreeable would describe as accurately the men of money and power who listened to Lamar, and listen to others like him.

If the big men whom this country and its citizens have made rich were not willing to bribe legislators, not willing to defeat the people's will by underhand methods, NOT WILLING TO USE THEIR DISHONESTLY GOT MONEY TO BUY DISHONEST LEGISLATION, there would not be such men as David Lamar urging the buying of disreputable public officials especially adapted to the doing of very dirty political work.

Lamar and the vermin like him are not very important.

The important man is the man of money, power and position, the man who has no excuse for being a bribe-giver, a cheater of the people, the man who listens at the telephone eagerly while "the vermin," representing themselves as dishonest Congressmen, offer for a consideration to cheat the public and rob the public and help dishonesty and buy legislation.

The big men who do not deny that they trusted Lamar, that they talked to him on the telephone and heard what he had to say, have not made a full explanation of their conduct, or a satisfactory explanation.

The ordinary citizen would not listen to a man who called on the telephone to tell him how he might rob his neighbor's house.

Why does the big man of Wall Street listen patiently and attentively while "the vermin" tell him how he can rob the people of their legislation, cheat the people of their will and add by continued bribery to the fortune already acquired?

A Great Victory for Southern Women

The Georgia House of Representatives is to be congratulated in that it had the common sense and decency to extend the use of its hall to the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association, now in session in the Capital of the State, even though it was necessary in doing so sharply to rebuke rank stupidity and lack of judgment in the Senate.

The cause of woman suffrage in Georgia is in its infancy, perhaps, but already it is sponsored by a number of the most intelligent and progressive women of the State.

Unquestionably, the cause will wax stronger and stronger, as time runs on, and neither narrowness nor bigotry—even in a Georgia Senate—will serve to stop it!

The original purpose of these Georgia women evidently was not to force the issue of woman suffrage upon the Georgia Legislature at this time. They merely were seeking a suitable place to hold two night sessions. They turned to the State Capitol, AS THEY HAD A RIGHT TO DO, in seeking that place.

The Senate, however, with that shortsightedness characteristic of stupidity, declined to extend the courtesy asked of it—and thereby it made the cause of woman suffrage an ISSUE before the people of Georgia—the people WHO MAKE and UNMAKE LEGISLATURES, AS THEY PLEASE!

In these circumstances, the vote of the House extending the use of its Hall to the suffragists can not be viewed otherwise than as a distinct VICTORY for the Woman Suffrage Association of Georgia.

It was, in a way, the very first and pioneer victory for the cause in the South—made emphatic and extraordinarily noticeable by the foolish and silly action of the Senate.

The Georgian now ventures this prediction: Before the membership of the present Legislature is entirely dust, woman suffrage will be an established POLICY AND PRINCIPLE of every State in this Union!

Those men in Georgia, farsighted and fair-minded enough to see it NOW, then will have cause to rejoice.

Those who now thrust themselves in front of a movement destined to be as irresistible as the flow of the tide, will be overwhelmed.

The cause of woman suffrage has been strengthened rather than weakened in Georgia by the unwise, unpatriotic and unworthy action of the State Senate.

That the House promptly and emphatically repudiated that Senate action, speaks well for ITS sense of justice and right.

Man and Wife Should Decide Own Differences

No Person Capable to Give Counsel to Couple Regarding Difficulties

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.
(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

NO human being is capable of giving safe and sane counsel to a married man or a married woman respecting domestic differences. It is a matter which should be decided between the two.

When any third person intervenes, a judge of the court is the proper party.

Intimate Friends.

The most intimate friends of a family are not capable of saying where the fault lies in the majority of cases.

Even when a wife seems to be indifferent to her family and to her husband, and even when a husband seems to be unappreciative of his home, there may be causes for either offense undreamed of by those who believe themselves to be close friends.

There are men who seem to the world at large the most perfect specimens of domestic nobility, honor and probity, yet who are impossible as companions and life comrades for women of refinement and sensitive feeling, and there are women who pass in the world's eyes as angels of goodness who are possessed of unpleasant traits enough to drive any normal man to drink or insanity if he is compelled to live with them.

Wife Begged for Divorce.

The real character, the real disposition of any human being, is never known or understood until we have spent a year at least in steady association under the same roof.

The following letter reveals nothing of the writer's character. It reveals nothing of the wife's nature.

Therefore it is impossible to give any opinion of value regarding the case. Even were it possible, the writer of this does not wish to advise or counsel individuals save in the general way of character building which is the real work of the race.

The correspondent says:

"I am a married man with two children and earning a good salary, but separated for some years, owing to not being able to get along in harmony. Recently my wife called upon me and implored that I commit infidelity in order that she may secure a divorce from me, as she has an opportunity to marry. I agreed to do so if she would compromise by giving me one of the children, but she absolutely refuses, offering as an excuse that she is too deeply attached to them. I maintain if she loves this other man she would sacrifice one of the children or both of them to me, as I have a good home and nice surroundings, although I do not say she has not the same advantages, still I feel I could rear them up better under my influence and meet the future better than under this other man.

Willing to Sacrifice All.

"My wife is 25 years old, and, as this is comparatively young, I do not want to destroy her happiness. If I am in the wrong I would willingly sacrifice my side of the issue and grant her the divorce, but before I do I would like to hear your opinion."

All that can be said in reply is this: That children should be placed under the care of people who are the best fitted by character and moral worth and good behavior to bring them up.

Blood ties have nothing to do with the matter.

Paternal or maternal love, as that word is generally used, has little to do with the moral aspect of the case.

Women who gossip, who are disorderly, who are weak-willed, and who allow their children to see all these traits daily have no right to bring up their own children, no matter how they love them.

Small Part of Parenthood.

Fathers who are living immoral lives, who are associating with rough or coarse-minded people, or who use coarse language and who have never been taught self-control have no right to associate with their children, because they are making an impress on the wax-like nature of a child—an impress which will harden with time and become a blighting memory and probably a bad habit.

The time will come under the new science of eugenics which is being introduced when a censor will be appointed to study the domestic conditions in every family, and there will be laws which will protect children from the influence of the weak, the disagreeable and the incompetent homekeepers, as well as from the brutal and immoral.

Bringing children into the world is a small part of parenthood. To the writer of the letter quoted above no counsel can be given. It can only be said that the man of the best moral character, the best disposition and the best habits has the right to influence the lives of these children.

How to Keep Cool

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

My doctor said to me, said he: "In weather like this here
You must eschew the luscious stew,
The lush saute, the rich ragout,
And pie and cake and pudding, too,
And whisky, wine and beer,
In point of fact, you must not eat
Eggs, oysters, vegetables or meat.

"Dark clothing magnifies the heat, light clothes attract the light.
Beware of red—it heats the head;
Blue hues a poisonous radiance shed.
By sunset you'll be surely dead
Unless your clothes are right.
Don't let this warning be forgotten—
Beware of linen, wool and cotton.

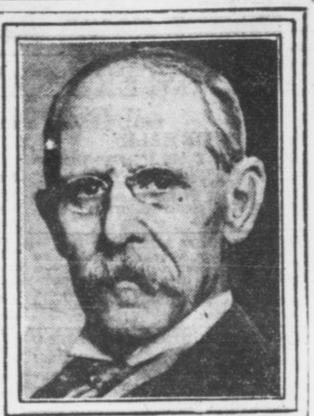
"Don't lash your blood to frothy foam by any exercise,
But don't sit still or you'll distill
A subtle toxin which will fill
Your veins with fermentation till
Your temperature will rise.
Don't breathe—it makes the pulses leap.
Don't stir about, nor rest, nor sleep."

* * * * * * * * * * *

By packing me in ice and salt they brought me 'round at last.
"Why he's not dead," the interne said,
"Is what I can't get through me head.
For when they chucked him on that bed
He sure was going fast."

Now here's a tip for which I paid a very painful price:
DON'T EVER OVERHEAT YOURSELF BY FOLLOWING ADVICE!

Education Is the Cure for Feeble-mindedness in the Child; but It Must Be Begun in Time.



What Sight More Pitiful Than a Child Who Goes Into the Battle of Life with Its Mind—Its Only Hope—Disabled?

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE great study of modern times is that of the peculiarities, the workings and the weaknesses of the human mind. This involves the entire future of the race of man.

I have been learning something about a new science, or what aspires to be a science, which has this for its object and which is called by its disciples "clinical psychology" (clinical from a Greek word for bed, implying that the subject of attention is a person who is ill, and psychology "science of the mind"), the whole phrase meaning practical study of mental illness.

No Sight Is So Pitiful.

This is something of supreme interest to parents, because those who are particularly, if not exclusively, the subpects of investigation by clinical psychologists are children.

There is no sight in this world more pitiable than that of a feeble-minded child. It is his MIND that has placed man in the proud position which he occupies at the head of the Kingdom of Life on our planet; it is by virtue of his mental powers alone that he has achieved all his triumphs; they only have brought him up from his original brotherhood with the ape; in the further development of his mind lies the only hope that he can have of still greater progress in the future; each individual, as he faces the struggle of life, must depend upon the strength of his mentality, and that the more in proportion as the struggle increases in intensity. What, then, can excite a compassion equal to that aroused by the spectacle of a human child which, as the result of causes that might be avoided, enters the battle of life lamed, crippled, disabled, palsied, impuissant, in that which constitutes its only hope, its only real strength—its mind?

Makes Instant Appeal.

The reason the new science that I have mentioned makes an instant appeal to any person having the good of his kind at heart is that it comes with the assurance that the terrible evil of feeble-mindedness may be eliminated. If it did not promise that, if it presented itself merely as another form of curious investigations having little or no practical application, it would attract only the inquisitive, seeking for novel subjects of thought. But when it says to unhappy parents, "Right education is capable of developing the dormant mental energies of your child; only begin in time, and know what you are about," then its call must be listened to everywhere.

It is this supreme word "education" which I find on every page of what I have been reading of the work and the aims of the clinical psychologists. The body can be educated out of many of its illnesses, and so can the mind. It is not worth while to stop over any discussion of the question whether, as some put it, "the mind has a body," or, as others would say, "the body has a mind." We all know what is meant when a person is said to be "feeble-minded," and the one thing of pressing, immediate importance is the question whether, either by medical or hygienic treatment, or by mental or psychological methods, or by both working together, the evil can be remedied.

Mental Hygiene.

I read this extremely interesting statement from Professor J. E. W. Wallin:

"Irrespective of whether the cause is chiefly physical or mental, it is being recognized by a number of the leading present-day psychiatrists" (those who study mental diseases) "that drug treatment for the majority of the insane, whether juvenile or adult, is secondary to the educational treatment. Instead of merely prescribing physical hygiene for the insane, leading alienists are now prescribing mental hygiene. The cure is being conceived in terms of a process of re-education. Moreover, so far as concerns the mentally unstable child in the schools, the chief reliance is obviously on hygienic and educational guidance."

Key to the Mind.

There you see in almost every line the magic word "education." We can all understand that. We must accept this term in a virtually new sense.

We must cease to regard it as simply signifying a process by which a certain, very limited, amount of knowledge is instilled or forced into the mind of a child, and we must come to consider it as the key to the mind itself, and the means, when wisely used, of opening and developing the mental powers, even when they seem to be absent or defective.

Education is not a sausage-stuffer; it is a ladder by which man mounts toward the summit of his destiny. And when the feeble are helped upon its rungs, they are stimulated and inspired with new strength at every step upward.

FAIR WOMAN

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

A WOMAN is easy to understand;
This is the secret, second hand:

When you pat her on the cheek
With your envelope each week,
Saying "Here's the money, dear,"
As you pinch her shell-like ear;
When she show'rs you with caresses,
Planning on new hats and dresses,
When she calls you her Greek god,
Though you know you have a pod,
She's happy.

When she meets you at the door
In the morn at three or four,
Trying with small fists to hit you,
Threatening to pack and quit you;
When she throws a dish or two
Clear across the room at you,
When she swings—and not in vain—
With your heavy walking cane,
She's out of sorts.

That is the secret, second hand,
A woman is easy to understand.

Arrests Near in Vice Probe

MEN NAMED BY GIRL ARE SOUGHT

Chief Beavers Declares New and Startling Arrests Are Near. Alleged Procuress Held

With the principals in the sensational vice case, Hattie Smith, a 17-year-old girl victim; Mrs. Lena Barnhart, a flashily-dressed woman, alleged white slave procuress; Lige Murray, negro ally, and Clyde Cox, the youth who was arrested in the hotel raid, all bound over to the higher courts, the police Thursday turned the full flare of a searching investigation directly on the hotels and alleged immoral resorts, with the result that new arrests and startling developments were expected during the day.

Chief Beavers Thursday morning declared that his crusade would include the men principals in the vice system as well as the women.

A number of names were given him by Hattie Smith. He will use these as a start along this line of his investigation, and sensational results are expected.

Girl Tells Story in Court.

The remarkable case came to a close Wednesday afternoon when the Smith girl told in court her story. She did not mince nor choose words. Looking at Recorder Broyles squarely, she told of her ruin.

It was in a soda fountain on Cone Street, near James, that she first saw the Barnhart woman, she said. Often she stopped in the soda fountain and usually the woman was there, talking with men or preparing to go riding with them in an automobile, she said.

"One day about two weeks ago I asked who she was. She seemed so popular, was dressed so nicely and had so many friends that I just wanted to know who she was. On the same day one of the men asked me to go for an automobile ride with him. I said I would. When we went to the automobile the Barnhart woman was on the front seat. We went for a ride along the Paces Ferry Road.

"When we returned to Atlanta the woman asked me to go with her to the Carnegie Library. Then she suggested my going with her to the Cumberland Hotel, where she said she would give me an apartment and I could live like a lady.

Given New Name.

"The life she painted attracted me. I said I would go with her. She suggested that she go to the hotel first and arrange for me a room. I followed and found that room 43 had been assigned Lucile Evans, my new name.

"Later I went out on the streets and was picked up by an automobile party that carried me to my home on Marietta Street. Thursday night I went back to the woman at the Cumberland Hotel and made an engagement with Clyde Cox, who was arrested with me Sunday night.

"The following night, Friday night, I met a man named Brower, who said he was from Washington. I went with him to the Brittain Hotel. He registered as Mr. and Mrs. Brower. The next morning I received a telephone call from Mrs. Barnhart to meet her at the Empire Life Building. I rode over in a taxicab, so as to be there on time. We went from there to the Cumberland. Mrs. Barnhart offered to pay for my room at the Cumberland until I could get something to do."

Judge Broyles severely scored Mrs. Barnhart. He ordered the officers to take her child away and have it provided for in the Home for the Friendless. Her bond was fixed at $500. The other bonds were $100.

Society Leaders, in Masks, See Risque Paris Play 'I Love It'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 10.—Wearing of masks by society women who attend racy theatrical productions, but who are ashamed to let their relatives and friends know of it, has come into vogue here.

A large number of women from court circles are daily attending the risque French show, "I Love It," but all wear masks for fear of the censure of their husbands and of Queen Mary, who has forbidden any of the ladies of her court from entering the Middlesex Theater, where the production is on.

Clergymen are beseeching the censor to close up the theater, declaring it will debase all who see it because of its gross imorality.

Kentucky Car Strike Spreads; One Dying

LEXINGTON, KY., July 10.—Striking street carmen announced this morning that all employees of the Kentucky Traction Company and the Lexington Utilities Company will be called out to-morrow morning, tying up street and interurban car systems here.

Demands will be served to-day for a nine-hour day with pay for ten hours, and reinstatement of nine discharged workmen. Some of the men have been on strike for a week.

The first violence occurred late Wednesday, when five men were injured in a riot. One of them, J. W. Bell, of Chicago, is dying in a hospital.

Fly Pests Cost U. S. $157,800,000 a Year

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Figured out in money, to say nothing of the loss in human life, the cost to the United States annually of supporting its fly population amounts to $157,800,000, say Government experts who have been making a study of the results of the germ-spreading activities of these insects.

It is estimated that the fly is responsible for an expenditure of $50,000,000 for the handling of tuberculosis cases, attributable to germs spread by the pests, while $70,000,000 represents the cost of typhoid fever cases originating in the same way.

50 Grocers Freed From Prosecution

BIRMINGHAM, July 10.—The Government to-day allowed about 50 members of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association to be dropped from further prosecution in the contempt hearing going on before Judge W. I. Grubb, of the Federal Court, on charges of violating a decree handed down in 1911.

District Attorney Street made a lengthy address in court to-day before the defense began its testimony, showing what he expected the defense to controvert. The Government contends that acts were committed which were likely to restrain trade.

Saves Girl; Year Goes; Reward, Cold Stare

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Andrew P. Talmadge, of Washington, last summer jumped overboard, clothes and all, and rescued a young woman after she had gone down the second time. In the rescue he was obliged to put his arm about her. She gave him an awful glare, but he attributes it to excitement.

To-day he met the young woman on the street, and instead of beaming a smile of gratitude, she turned her head haughtily and did not speak.

Forest Fire Zone Under Martial Law

MILL VALLEY, CAL., July 10.—Martial law was declared in Mill Valley to-day and troops were ordered to draft every able-bodied man for duty fighting forest fires that threaten to wipe out the town. The soldiers were expected to stop the exodus of men fleeing with their families.

Efforts were being made to get women and children to places of safety.

WILL FIGHT TESTIMONY STIRRING

Attorneys for Widow of Capitalist Declare Poison Evidence Will Be Shattered.

A positive statement from Dr. F. H. Harris, of the State Board of Health, that Joshua Crawford died of morphine poisoning instead of pneumonia, the announced cause of his death by the attending physician, Dr. J. W. Hurt, was the sensational development in the Crawford $250,000 will case Thursday.

Dr. Harris was called to the stand at noon. Attorney Reuben Arnold, for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, the widow, to whom all the estate was left, pinned him to the assertion.

For the first time in his career, he said, he deviated from his custom of merely mentioning possibilities or probabilities.

"There was absolutely no trace of pneumonia or any disease of the lungs," said Dr. Harris. "Morphine poisoning very likely produced death."

Statement Unshaken.

Dr. Harris was on the stand for very nearly an hour, but his statement was unshaken.

No announcement would be made by the attorneys for the heirs-at-law, who number more than thirty, but it was confidently understood they would not rest the case with the introduction of Dr. Harris, but would have other experts, and probably members of the family to take the stand in an effort to substantiate the evidence of Dr. Harris.

Attorney Arnold stated that the evidence of Dr. Harris would be torn to pieces when he put Dr. J. W. Hurt on the stand to tell of administering morphine and opium to Crawford in an effort to stop the violent fits of coughing and near congestion of the lungs, with which he suffered in the last month of his life.

Widow Not in Court.

He intimated also that he would introduce experts to prove that the quantities of opium and morphine found in Crawford's stomach by Dr. Harris were not sufficient to produce death, nor more than a normal dose administered by the average physician.

Mrs. Crawford, the widow, was not in the courtroom Wednesday when the poison theory was advanced by Dr. Harris, and it was doubtful whether she would attend the hearing Thursday.

Heirs-at-law to the estate and their friends attended in large numbers, and despite the fact it is a strictly civil procedure and no court official is presiding, it had all the appearance and interest of a sensational criminal trial.

Beavers in Speech Warns Policemen to Keep Out of Dives

Chief of Police Beavers caused a stir Thursday morning when he went before the day watch and addressed the men on their conduct. His talk resulted from the recent scandal in which several policemen were found guilty of visiting a resort in the rear of 127 Auburn Avenue.

"Any man who hangs around a negro dive has no place on the police force of Atlanta," the Chief said, addressing the men. "If you get positive evidence that any of your brother officers are engaged in discreditable practices and frequenting disreputable places, it is your duty to report it."

The Chief will make a similar speech to the night and morning watches.

Despondent Society Girl Shoots Self in Jacksonville Home

JACKSONVILLE, July 10.—Miss Inez Seebring, a 17-year-old society girl, daughter of W. R. Seebring, an extensive real estate operator and granddaughter of W. H. Seebring, former Mayor of Jacksonville and a Confederate general, to-day is at the DeSoto Sanitarium with a bullet wound in her head, following an attempt to kill herself last night at her home.

Worry over the recent death of her mother is said to have led to her act. Her father had her at Atlantic Beach for two weeks in hopes that the gayeties of seashore life would dispel her melancholia. She came home late yesterday afternoon and, after talking to a girl friend, retired to her room, where she shot herself. She has only slight chances of recovery.

Queen of Greece Cables for Chewing Gum for Troops

NEW YORK, July 10.—Solon G. Vlasto, editor of The Atlantis, to-day received a dispatch from Queen Sophia, of the Hellenes, asking for a shipment of chewing gum.

"Chewing gum is against thirst."

Mr. Vlasto cabled $2,000 at once and is about to send the chewing gum.

Negro Pugilist Not To Return to U. S.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVRE, FRANCE, July 10.—"I have determined never to return to the United States again. My home will be in Paris."

This statement was made by Jack Johnson, negro pugilist, under sentence for trafficking in white women, who eluded the United States authorities and arrived here to-day on the liner Corinthian.

NEGRO MADE BOAST OF KILLING A GIRL, AGENT DECLARES

Attorneys for Frank Will Put Main Reliance of Defense on the Startling Affidavit Made by W. H. Mincey and Now in Their Possession.

That Jim Conley, negro sweeper at the National Pencil Factory, made a virtual confession to him that he attacked and killed Mary Phagan is the startling allegation made in an affidavit by William H. Mincey, until recently a solicitor for the American Insurance Company, of 115½ North Pryor Street.

It became known Thursday that this affidavit, which is in the hands of the defense, will be the principal reliance, aside from the alibis which have been established for Frank, in bringing an acquittal of the accused man and obtaining a conviction against the negro.

No other evidence, in all of the more than two months' investigation of the mystery, has been so damning and so direct. The defense has practically only to establish the creditability of Mincey to assure itself of victory.

Said He Had Killed Girl.

This sensational information is the first hint that the public has had that the negro was alleged to have made a confession of the crime. Up to this time the detectives have said that Conley has denied all connection with the killing itself.

"I've killed a girl to-day; I don't want to kill nobody else," are the words that Mincey swore Conley spoke to him the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered in the pencil factory.

Mincey at the time of which his affidavit relates was selling life insurance in the negro districts. He knew Conley and had been after him several times to take out life insurance, according to the story he told in the office of Attorney Rosser.

Conley Was Drunk.

On the afternoon of the murder of Mary Phagan he met Conley near Electric and Carter Streets. Conley was sitting down with his head in his hands, apparently intoxicated.

"How about that insurance?" Mincey says he asked Conley.

"Get away from here. I don't want no insurance," Conley is said to have replied.

Mincey says in his affidavit that he urged Conley further and that the negro appeared to be angry.

"I tell you I don't want no insurance; I'm in trouble. I don't want you to bother me," Mincey swears Conley retorted.

Mincey asserts that he stayed to argue with Conley and that the negro finally said:

"You go away. I'll be in jail in a few days and I won't want any insurance."

Negro Was Enraged.

His satrtling confession of murder is alleged to have come when he became enraged at Mincey's continued importunities.

The negro jumped to his feet and advanced toward Mincey menacingly, according to the affidavit.

"I've killed a girl to-day; I don't want to kill nobody else!" Mincey declared Conley shouted at him.

Mincey thought little of the remark at the time, regarding Conley's remarks as mere braggadocio or an exaggeration of some negro fight in which he had been involved. When he read of the Phagan murder he recalled the remarks of Conley.

Goes to Factory.

On the Tuesday following the strangling of the little girl he went to the factory. He talked to E. F. Holloway, the day watchman, and asked him how many negroes were employed there. Holloway replied that there were seven or eight.

"You should have every one of them arrested at once," Mincey told

GARRISON PLANS TO ABANDON 100 ARMY POSTS

War Secretary Calls Them Useless, Demoralizing, Wasteful. Ready to Fight Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The most radical and dramatic move in army administration since Elihu Root reorganized it a decade ago has been determined by Secretary of War Garrison. He intends to fight Congress on the question of maintaining 100 or more "absolutely useless" army posts in the interior.

He intends to withdraw troops from at least 75 per cent of them in the interest of economy and efficiency, and next Wednesday will start on a five weeks' tour of the posts to crystallize the details of the policy he announced to-day.

Scores "Pork Barrel" System.

Secretary Garrison is disgusted with the "wasteful and extravagant way in which the army is being conducted," and lays it all to the system of maintaining army posts as part of the "pork barrel" into which every member of Congress dips his fingers. There are at present 157 posts in the country, an average of one post to every 250 soldiers in the army. Every State is represented.

The Secretary of War has made a preliminary investigation, which has proved to him that the maintenance of all these posts, of which he believes that 100 are unnecessary, is not only demoralizing to the army, but the most extravagant way of wasting Government money ever devised.

Plans to Block Congress.

If Congress obstructs his policy of unifying the posts, the Secretary of War intends to use his executive powers of withdrawing troops from those posts which he believes are unnecessary. He declares he has absolute power in this direction, and, with the President's consent, could concentrate the entire army in Washington if he so desires. He intends to use this power in fighting Congress should the latter determine to nullify his policies of post concentration.

Mr. Garrison will be accompanied by Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, and Quartermaster General Aleshire.

The plan of centralizing the army has been under consideration for several years. General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, on his last visit to Atlanta, stated that if the plan was ever put into effect Fort McPherson would become one of the largest posts in the country.

Trainmen Will Not Meet With Wilson To Discuss Strike

NEW YORK, July 10.—Intimation was given here to-day by W. G Lee, President of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, and A. D. Garretson pPresident of the Order of Railway Conductors, that they would not accept the arbitration of President Wilson and Secretary of Labor Wilson in the wage dispute of the trainmen on railroads east of Chicago, which threatens to precipitate 100,000 men in a strik.

Lee and Garretson said they would not go to Washington Monday to meet President Wilson and the Secretary of Labor.

Congress Prepares For Investigation Of Mulhall Charges

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Congress was busy with two lobby investigations to-day. While the Senate lobby inquiry committee continued to pry into the secrets of the wool lobby, the Garrett committee of the House, appointed by Speaker Clark yesterday, made plans for an inquiry into the Mulhall charges.

Clarence H. Brown, chairman of the hosiery manufacturers' legislative committee, testified that his committee was instructed in 1909 not to attempt to interfere with tariff rates.

"I never ever bought a cigar for a member of Congress," said Brown.

Mexico Buys 80,000 Rifles as 'Pacifiers'

SWEARS CONLEY BOASTED OF SLAYING

W. H. Mincey, Insurance Agent, Makes Startling Affidavit for Frank Defense.

him. And then he told of his meeting with Conley. Holloway replied that Conley had not been in the factory that day, no one knowing at the time that the negro had hidden himself in the boxes to the right of the stairway on the first floor.

The shock of the tragedy had not yet worn off, and all was confusion in the building. Because no one suspected that Conley had been in the factory on the Saturday of the crime, a fact which Conley later admitted when under the third degree of the detectives, little attention was paid to Mincey's story at the time.

Says Police Wouldn't Listen.

He states that he went to the police station and was told that they did not want his story. He saw Conley and identified him as the negro with whom he talked on the afternoon that Mary Phagan was murdered.

When Conley himself broke down and admitted that he had been hiding on the first floor, Mincey's sensational story took on the highest significance. He returned to the factory and repeated the details of his former statement. An interview was arranged with a lawyer acquaintance not connected with the case in any way. This attorney heard his story and took him to Attorney Rosser, where the statement was taken in sworn form.

"We do not want your statement unless you can swear to the truth of every word of it," he was told. He then dictated the affidavit which is now in possession of the defense.

Mincey was a solicitor for the American Insurance Company until about two weeks ago. He left this firm to teach school. He is said to be employed in Chattanooga, but will return to testify at the trial of Leo Frank July 28. He lived at 128 Davis Street until last October and then moved to another part of the city.

Defense Has Faith in It.

Uncovering for the first time the bulwark of defense which Frank's lawyers have built up around him, as well as containing the first report of a confession from Conley, the affidavit signed by Mincey at once takes its place as the most important document or piece of evidence that has entered into the case.

"Yes, we have the affidavit," admitted one of the lawyers for the defense Thursday afternoon. "We have had it for some time. We place the utmost reliance in it. We believe this man is telling the truth. It forms one of the strongest foundations for our belief in the guilt of Jim Conley."

C. J. Graham, of the law firm of Graham & Chpapell, announced on Thursday that the hearing on the writ of habeas corpus for Newt Lee had been set by Judge Ellis for Saturday forenoon at 10 o'clock. He said that he would subpena 50 witnesses to appear at the hearing, among them Leo M. Frank and Jim Conley.

Frank's attorneys will fight his appearance at the hearing and the State is expected to try to prevent Conley from testifying. Solicitor Dorsey is strongly opposed to the freeing of Lee until after the trial of Frank, and has declared that he will use every effort to thwart the movement of Lee's attorneys.

BARROW COUNTY BILL PASSED BY HOUSE

Measure Approved 136 to 35 Despite the Hardeman Opposition. Crowded Galleries Cheer.

The bill creating the new county of Barrow, to be made up of sections of Walton, Gwinnett and Jackson, with Winder as the county seat, passed the House to-day by a vote of 136 to 35.

The measure came from the Constitutional Amendments Committee with a unanimous recommendation for its passage, but it was not put through the House until after a genuine display had been indulged in.

The fight against Barrow was led by Hardeman, of Jefferson, who attacked it by moving to postpone action upon it until next session. Had that motion prevailed, the bill would have been killed, beyond hope of resurrection.

Barrow County has been looked upon generally as apt to win out. It has been before the Legislature before, and many members who voted for it to-day explained their votes by saying that they voted upon the merits of the proposition entirely, which were evident enough to the Constitutional Amendments Committee to get a unanimous favorable report therefrom.

The impression is that Barrow will pass the Senate and go to the people for ratification in the next general election.

During the voting on the bill, the galleries were packed with citizens from the territory affected, and when the vote was announced the result brought great applause.

INSURANCE BILL FIRST GENERAL ACT PASSED

Lower House Adopts Wohlwender Measure After Half an Hour of Debate.

The first general bill of the session, passed Thursday morning by the House, was House Bill No. 9, which perfects the insurance laws covering the reinsuring in other companies by concerns wishing to retire from business in the State. It was introduced by Wohlwender, of Muscogee, and Cook, of Chattahoochee. Some little opposition was expressed, and 30 minutes was consumed in debate.

Representative Sheppard announced that the Ways and Means Committee would not meet until next Tuesday, on account of a death in the family of Chairman Akin. A report will be made by the committee next Wednesday, Mr. Sheppard stated. Resolutions of sympathy for Representative Akin were adopted.

The following local bills were favorably reported, placed on a third reading and adopted:

By Paulk—Providing a Board of County Commissioners for Ben Hill County.

Rhodes and Lipscomb—To amend charter of Athens.

Moon and Hines—Providing for a city recorder for LaGrange.

The Rules Committee killed a resolution by Pharr, of Gwinnett, instructing the Constitutional Amendments Committee not to consider any new county bills at this time.

The University of Georgia Committee reported favorably on a bill providing for an agricultural, industrial and normal college to be located in South Georgia and to be a branch of the university.

BEAVERS' WAR ON VICE IS LAUDED BY WOMEN

Georgia Suffragists Adopt Resolution Indorsing Chief's Course in Atlanta.

Chief of Police Beavers' fight against vice was enthusiastically indorsed at the Thursday morning session of the convention of the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association. The following resolution, introduced by Mrs. Margaret T. McWhorter, was adopted:

The Georgia Woman Suffrage Association realizes the high civic ideals which actuate Chief of Police James L. Beavers, of Atlanta, and we wish to place ourselves on record as indorsing every move which he has taken for good government and clean morals, and especially do we commend his action in the matter of recommending the appointment of women probation officers for Atlanta; therefore,

Be it Resolved, That we convey to him our hearty congratulations and pledge to him the support and co-operation of the association in securing the appointment of these women officers, and also pledge our co-operation in any movement toward bettering civic conditions of Atlanta, which mean better civic conditions for the whole State, and be it further

Resolved, That The Atlanta Georgian, The Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Journal be requested to publish these resolutions.

Mrs. McWhorter's resolution invoked tremendous enthusiasm among the delegates to the convention, and the indorsement of the association was given to Chief Beavers without a dissenting vote.

The Georgian's Editorial Praised.

The association also gave its unofficial indorsement to an editorial appearing in Thursday's Georgian, which was read from the president's platform by Mrs. Susan Cunningham, of Decatur, formerly vice president of the Alabama Equal Suffrage Association. The editorial comments on the action of the Georgia Senate in refusing to allow the suffragists to meet in the Senate chamber, and congratulates the House for allowing the women to meet in its chamber.

Mrs. Cunningham referred to the editorial as inspiring and wonderful, and declared that it embodied the thoughts of the members of the association.

The recommendation of the committee that the association work for a constitutional amendment striking out the word "male" from the State Constitution was adopted.

Contrary to expectations, no members of the Atlanta Civic League appeared to fight for the control of the State organization. Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, State president, made but a brief reference to the trouble with the league members, headed by Mrs. Frances Whiteside.

She declared that the members of the Civic League had outlawed themselves from the State Suffrage Association because of non-payment of dues.

She declared that the contention of the leaguers that the State association had ceased to exist because no convention was held in 1912 was not borne out by the provisions of the constitution, which declare that the holding of a convention shall be at the discretion of the executive committee.

The routine committees of the convention were appointed by the president and probably will report at the Thursday afternoon session.

Leader Predicts Success.

Several of the members of the association delivered short talks at this morning's session. Mrs. Samuel Cunningham, of Decatur, head of the DeKalb County branch, declared that woman suffrage is coming just as surely as all good things are bound to come. She drew a round of applause when she declared that despite the assertions of opponents of the cause, the first thought of the true suffragist is of her home, and that the granting of the vote to woman would not impair her work as a wife and mother.

Mrs. H. Augusta Howard, who organized the State association and was its president for six years, told a pathetic story of the persecutions she was forced to undergo during the first few years of the movement in Georgia. Members of her family, she declared, took sides against her, and because of her loyalty to the cause, her two little children were taken from her.

She declared her belief in the ultimate triumph of womanhood over the narrowness and bigotry of man, and asserted that the weak will never be adequately protected until woman has a hand in the making of the laws.

Addresses also were made by Mrs. J. P. Scott, of Harrington, Kans., who has voted and served as a judge of election; Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, Mrs. Margaret McWhorter and others.

The final session of the convention will be held in the House of Representatives Thursday night. It will be featured by an address by Mrs. William A. Felton, of Cartersville, one of Georgia's most noted women, who will make her first public appearance as a suffragist.

Bryan's Commoner Is Made Monthly Paper

LINCOLN, NEB., July 10.—Secretary of State Bryan has announced that with the current issue the Commoner, which he established in 1901, will cease publication as a weekly, and will be issued monthly. The resignation of Richard L. Metcalfe, appointed Governor of Panama, has left the Commoner without an editor.

Under the new arrangement Mr. Bryan says he will be able to give attention to more editorial writing. The Commoner's size will be doubled. C. W. Bryan will continue in direct control.

Rome Fears Water Famine; Wants Rain

ROME, July 10.—The city of Rome, with its 17,000 inhabitants, faces a real water famine. The situation is so critical that the authorities are alarmed.

Only one-quarter of an inch of rain has fallen in Rome since June 7, and so much extra water has been used on gardens and lawns that the supply of city water is about exhausted.

To-day Mayor Yancey issued a proclamation calling on the people to co-operate with the city authorities in an effort to prevent a water famine.

New York Dressmaker Describes Petticoatless Mode and Harem Skirt From Paris.

NEW YORK, July 10.—"The prudes can not stop them—they are here. That is, they are in Paris, which means that American women of fashion will bring them home with them this fall and winter," said Mme. Bernard, Fifth Avenue modiste, who has just arrived from abroad with the first harem skirt and the silhouette gown.

The former resembles Turkish trousers, which have succeeded the slit skirt, and the latter is a new French creation of lace and pleated tulle, worn with tights of silk of white or flesh pink, with no suggestion of a petticoat unless it be of filmy material.

"The slit skirt has been the most graceful and attractive made for women which has been worn in many years, so all of the great fashion leaders of Paris declare," said Mme. Bernard. "The harem skirt is an adaptation of the slit skirt with the tendency to the full and natural figure about the hips, which is the dernier cri.

"Turkish trousers, properly adapted, are an ideal costume for the modern woman of fashion. The ones I saw in Paris are the most fascinating and bewitching frocks I have ever seen.

"The silhouette gown, which is built on Grecian lines, is extremely beautiful, provided the figure is graceful. It is like looking at a beautiful woman through a fleecy sunlit cloud.

"The gown is so arranged at the hem that by means of a slit up the front—to the knees—and by pulling the diaphanous pleated tulle and lace criss-cross about the ankles a sort of trouser effect is obtained which only shows when the wearer moves about."

BOYS SAVE MOTHER AND GIRL FROM DROWNING IN PICNIC BATHING ACCIDENT

Heroic work of two little boys, Mizell and J. C. Williamson, of 7 Gray Street, saved their mother, Mrs. J. C. Williamson, and a young woman, Miss Maud Stradley, of 322 Simpson Street, from drowning in Center Hill pond Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Williamson has a class of little girls at the Tabernacle Baptist Church Sunday school, which she had taken for an outing to Center Hill. Her sons, ages 13 and 12, respectively, were in the party.

Ventured Out Too Far.

Mrs. Williamson and Miss Stradley went in wading. The water was muddy and they could not see the bottom, but the water was so shallow and the bottom so smooth that they ventured farther from the shore, though neither of them could swim. They were walking several feet apart when the girls on the bank saw them go under.

Panic followed. The women in the water fought, with desperation, oblivious to the fact that opening their mouths to scream was admitting the fatal water. The girls on the bank called and shouted, and the two boys rushed up to see their mother and Miss Stradley go down in the throes of drowning.

Boys Fine Swimmers.

As they stripped part of their clothes, J. C., the younger, exclaimed:

"I'll save my mother or die with her."

Before the boys could reach the struggling women they had sunk for the second time. When they came up they screamed no more, and they fought with feeble efforts.

The boys had learned to swim in Piedmont Park lake and they hurried to the rescue with the speed of experts. Before the women had gone down for the third time J. C. had grabbed his mother by the hair and Mizell had taken hold of Miss Stradley.

Made Brave Struggle.

It was soon evident, however, that all danger was not passed. The women were too heavy for the little fellows. There were shouts of encouragement from the bank, but the odds were against the victims.

The moment the accident occurred someone had run for Policeman Williamson. He was some distance away and it had taken some time to reach him—seconds in reality, but it seemed hours to the watchers.

As the boys were making for the shore with their burdens he rushed up.

He did not stop to remember that he was a poor swimmer, neither did he discard any of his clothes, but plunged in.

Human Life Line Formed.

Another tragedy threatened when he reached the deep water. Policeman Williamson sank as the women had. When he came up he saw that it was vain for him to attempt to render aid. The boys were making progress toward the shore, so he struck out for the shallow water.

When he secured a footing he watched and gave instructions to the boys. Holding hands, a human life line was made by the girls and all pulled ashore.

The boys were exhausted and the two women unconscious.

Mrs. Williamson is confined to her bed, but her condition is reported not serious. She is merely suffering from a reaction from the shock. Miss Stradley is up and all right except for a slightly sore throat.

Cotton Men Confer With Roads on Bill Of Lading Problem

Representatives of all the important railroads in the Southeast conferred with cotton exporters, compressors and buyers at the Ansley Hotel Thursday morning on the new rules of the steamship companies governing exportation of cotton.

The steamship companies have announced that they will make notations of any damage on the through bills of lading. This, the banks say, makes the bills not negotiable. The railroads also fear that claims for damage will be made against them in such instances, and in such event they will be obliged to make the same notations on their bills at the interior points where the shipments originate.

Whether to do this or refuse to issue through bills of lading is the question which is of vital importance to the movement of cotton this season.

MILITANT 'JEKYL AND HYDE' IS ARRESTED

Arsonite, Meek Wife by Day, Confesses She Did $200,000 Fire Damage at Night.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LIVERPOOL, July 10.—A remarkable confession of a dual life, which in some respects equals "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, was made here to-day by a woman. Mrs. Edith Rigby, wife of a rich and prominent doctor, admitted to the police that she has been a member of militant suffrage arson squad for six months without her husband's knowledge.

Every night she would slip from her home and set fire to buildings, plant bombs or send threatening letters to those opposing the cause. She told the police that she had caused at least $200,000 damage through her own executions.

Gentle Wife by Day.

Her husband opposes suffrage and she had to carry on her campaign of vandalism clandestinely. By day she appeared a gentle, dutiful wife, with no thought of "votes for women." But at night she went forth with violence in her heart. She was arrested.

After being taken to the police station Mrs. Rigby dramatically confessed burning down the mansion of Sir W. H. Lever, Bart, in Lancashire, when over $100,000 damage was done.

Ready to Give Her Life.

"I burned Sir William Lever's home because I understood that King George was to visit there," cried Mrs. Rigby. "I scattered the suffragette placards. I burned other buildings. I risked my life night after night in the manufacture of bombs. But I would give my life for the cause. I would give up my husband and my children—everything. I place the suffrage cause above everything—perhaps above religion."

In her excitement the woman became hysterical and bitterly denounced the government.

Clara Giveen, a member of the arson squad of the militant suffragettes, who was sent to prison for incendiarism, was released to-day because of illness brought on by a food and water strike.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 10.—"Cooling periods" three months from the finish of the trial to give remorse a chance to work and bring about a reconciliation were advocated to-day by Rev. J. Leonard Levy, of Pittsburg, as a remedy for the divorce evil.

FARMERS' UNION GETS RECRUITS IN JENKINS

Campaigners Inject Enthusiasm at Millen Meeting — Two New Locals Formed.

MILLEN, July 10.—That the farmers of Georgia are rallying to the standard of the Farmers' Union as never before is demonstrated at every meeting at which President C. S. Barrett and L. M. Rhodes, State president of Tennessee, are the principal speakers.

At Sylvania Tuesday two new unions were organized. Many names were added to the rolls of the old unions.

At Millen, the county seat of Jenkins, there was a large gathering in the beautiful new courthouse Wednesday.

After the speaking every man who was not a member of the union joined. The enthusiasm was such as to guarantee the success of the union in Jenkins County.

No town in Georgia or elsewhere has grown faster in the past ten years than Millen. It is almost four times as large as it was ten years ago. Why?

The explanation is given by President Barrett. "If there are any better farms, if there are any better farmers, they must be in Georgia," he said, "for I know there are none better in any other country."

The crops in this section are good; in fact, they are above the average, and there will be no hard times in this section of Georgia.

Mayor Reluctantly Pays for Crematory

Mayor Woodward Thursday signed checks for $125,000 as first payment on the crematory built by the Destructor Company of New York, but he is not satisfied with the contract.

"The price of $276,000 should have been reduced $100,000," he said. "By my fight we got a cut of $16,000. Claimed interest of $11,000 on deferred payments finally was waived. Chief of Construction Clayton forced them to add extras which, they say, have amounted to $6,000. The city has drawn 2 per cent interest on the $125,000 during the fight. The total saving is $34,000."

Estimates, Believed Exaggerated, Show Heavy Losses in War Between Former Allies.

Bulgaria Looks to Russia to End War

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Foreign Minister Sazonoff announced to-day that Bulgaria, in order to prevent further bloodshed in the Balkans, had placed herself unreservedly in the hands of Russia.

It is believed that the war will speedily be brought to a close.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, July 10.—According to estimates compiled here to-day from official and unofficial dispatches from the Balkans, at least 65,000 men have been killed in the fighting between Bulgarians on one side and Servians, Greeks and Montenegrins on the other.

It is a certainty, however, that these figures are exaggerated, as the Servian and Greek losses have invariably come from Bulgarian sources, while estimates of Bulgarian casualties have emanated from Athens, Uskub or Belgrade.

Another Great Battle Raging; 75,000 Engaged.

SOFIA, July 10.—Another desperate battle with enormous losses of life on both sides is raging north of Kotchana between Bulgars and Serbs who attempted to cross the border into Bulgaria.

The Servians had a double object—first, to march upon the Bulgarian capital; second, to get behind the Bulgarian lines and cut off the retreat of the two southern divisions to Kustendil, the Bulgarian base of operations.

According to official advices from the front, the battle is being fought between Kotchana and Egri Palanka, along a small river. It is estimated that about 75,000 men are engaged. The battle lines are stretched over an area of ten miles.

Both sides are supported by artillery. The Servians also have a heavy force of cavalry. Bulgarian reinforcements have been sent over the Sofia-Uskub Railroad.

Czar Urges Bulgars to Settle With Roumania.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Russia is pressing Bulgaria to settle its differences with Roumania over Roumanian territorial expansion without further delay. Foreign Minister Sazonoff declared to-day that it would be national suicide for each of the Balkan States to keep on fighting.

The opinion here is that Greece will emerge from the present war with the greatest laurels.

Bulgaria Is Ordered to Sue for Peace by Powers.

PARIS, July 10.—A joint note from the main European powers was to-day forwarded to Sofia demanding that Bulgaria immediately secure the peace terms of Servia and Greece. Belief prevails here in military and diplomatic circles that Bulgaria will be badly defeated by the other three States in the Balkan League if the war is allowed to go to a conclusion.

If Bulgaria is compelled to sue for peace she will lose much of the spoils of the first Balkan war. Greece will retain Salonika and a big strip in Southern Macedonia, while the Servian frontier will be extended over a large area of northern Macedonia.

Bulgars Give Grounds For War, Turks Assert.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 10.—Bulgarians are committing depredations against the Turks, which furnish cause for a declaration of war, it was announced here to-day by the Ottoman government.

Bulgarian troops stationed along the Littoral of the Sea of Marmora have burned two Turkish towns to prevent their falling into the hands of a Greek army which is marching eastward from Salonika.

Bryan and Envoy of Japs in Conference

WASHINGTON, July 10.—An informal discussion of certain features of the situation between the United States and Japan was held by Viscount Chinda, Japanese Ambassador, and Secretary of State Bryan to-day. The American reply to the recent Japanese rejoinder is not entirely completed.

Mr. Bryan expects to transmit the document to Viscount Chinda either to-morrow or Saturday.

Savannah-to-Florida Road Plan Indorsed

Favorable report on the bill providing for construction with convict labor of a highway 100 miles long from Savannah to the Florida border at St. Marys River, in Camden County, was authorized Wednesday by the Penitentiary Committee of the Georgia Legislature. Representative Slater, of Bryan County, is its author.

The new road is intended to be part of the national highway system.

CONTESTANTS TO RIDE PONIES NEXT SUNDAY

Children and Parents Invited to Meet Managers in Grant Park to Discuss Race.

Parents of the contestants and the contestants themselves are very cordially invited to Grant Park Sunday afternoon when the ponies, some harnessed and others saddled, will be on hand.

There will be rides and drives for all the children, and for the parents there will be an opportunity to inspect the prizes for which their children are working and a chance to meet the contest manager.

The contest manager is particularly anxious to meet the parents and confer with them as the race enters upon its last lap. But nineteen working days remain in the contest, and the children will need the co-operation of their parents to the fullest extent. How to help the boys and girls in the race will be the topic which the contest manager and the parents will discuss.

Herbert Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, a hustling contender.

Margaret Danner, Doraville, Ga., contestant.

The office force of The Georgian and American contest department is busy totaling the bonuses which the contestants have earned through the five-club offers, and the first $30 offer. This is proving even a greater task than anticipated, and it is impossible to give the contestants' full standings as yet.

Meanwhile another bonus offer is in effect. Liberal amounts of extra votes are offered for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions turned in before 10 o'clock the night of July 19.

Subscriptions of any length—two years, a year, six months, three months or even a month—may be combined to make up these totals.

Legislators Favor Girls' Home Plan

Unanimous approval of the Penitentiary Committee was won Wednesday by Representative Jones, of Coweta, and Representative Mills, of Butts, for their bill appropriating $75,000 for a State home for wayward girls. The measure will be reported immediately, with recommendation for passage.

While no site is mentioned in the bill, the Penitentiary Committee discussed the advantages of Milledgeville.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Men

Send Name and Address To-day—You Can Have It Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope, to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men, and I am convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow-men to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop drugging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest acting restorative, up-building, SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, 4276 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain, ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it entirely free.

FIFTH REGIMENT BOYS MIX PLAY AND WORK

Atlanta Soldiers Having Great Time at Instruction Camp on St. Simons Island.

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, GA., July 10.—The soldier boys of the Fifth Georgia Regiment, who arrived here Wednesday from Atlanta, have taken complete charge of St. Simons. Today the boys, somewhat weary of the more or less arduous duties of pitching camp, are having the time of their lives splashing in the surf and wandering around the island.

Thursday night the first big dance will be held and Friday military tactics and instruction will be the order of the day.

Next Saturday the Fifth will be the host of Governor John M. Slaton, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, members of the Governor's staff and General R. K. Evans and Colonel Barth, U. S. A.

The distinguished guests have announced their intention of camping in tents just like real soldiers during their two days' stay here.

A special committee from the Brunswick Board of Trade and from the City Council will meet the party at the depot and escort it to the St. Simons boat.

The Fifth will remain in camp at St. Simons for ten days.

In the Governor's party on the visit to St. Simons will be Governor and Mrs. Slaton, Colonel and Mrs. Frederic J. Paxon, General J. VanHolt Nash and daughter, Miss Nash; General and Mrs. R. K. Evans, Colonel C. H. Barth, Colonel and Mrs. George M. Hope, Colonel A. H. VanDyke and daughter, Miss VanDyke; Colonel William B. Stovall, Colonel H. P. Meikleham, Colonel Ben J. Fowler.

The party will be joined by Colonel and Mrs. Z. H. Clark, of Moultrie, at Fitzgerald, and Colonel and Mrs. John D. Walker, of Sparta, at Cordele.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Comedy Team Forsyth Hit.

Hines and Fox, piano player and singer, who came to the Forsyth unknown on Monday, have scored one of the biggest hits registered by an act of its sort in Atlanta. Eva Taylor and company, one of the headline features, present an act that has attracted the most favorable comment and won a most universal indorsement. Kennedy and Melrose, the novelty gymnasts, have added to the merit of the bill, and there are other features that make the show decidedly worth while.

Next week Valerie Bergere and company will return to Atlanta to present "Judgment," the latest success of this distinguished vaudeville star. Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, and the Shelvey Brothers, flexible gymnasts, will also be on the bill.

Grand Popular Place.

The Grand just now is a decidedly popular place, because the management, in response to the pulse of the people, has instituted a policy of motion pictures that is a revelation to the patrons of "movies."

Excellent programs of exclusive first-run pictures and Edison's talking pictures are presented daily from 2:30 until 10:30 at night, and usually to crowded gatherings.

Bijou Has Good Show.

Will Stanton and Rosalie May, at the Bijou this week, as the stars in "Along Broadway," have made one of the biggest hits of the season. Mr. Stanton's impersonation of a cabaret drunk is a capital piece of acting and keeps the house in a continuous uproar of laughter. Rosalie May, Mr. Stanton's partner, is a clever little woman. The violin solos of Miss Marjorie Calvert never fail to receive an enthusiastic reception, and the same can be said of the clever dancing of Ingalls, Duffield and Ingalls.

Preacher Floyd Official.

ROME.—A Baptist preacher has been elected a member of the Floyd County Commissioners. He is the Rev. C. L. Conn, pastor of the North Broad Street and West Rome Baptist Churches. The Rev. Mr. Conn was elected to succeed the late R. S. Hamrick.

Slaton Last Hope of Man to Hang Friday

Failing in their attempt to get the Prison Commission to recommend a commutation of sentence for Oscar Dewberry, the negro sentenced to hang in the Fulton County Jail Friday, Attorneys Calhoun and Powell made an appeal to Governor Slaton Thursday afternoon.

Dewberry was convicted of killing a white boy in Decatur Street. Persistent efforts were made to have the Prison Commission to recommend commutation. Governor Brown was appealed to without success.

SLOGANS EXPLAIN WHY ATLANTA FOLKS BOOST

Designs Submitted in Georgian's Half-Million Club Contest Express City's True Spirit.

Thursday's entrants in the $25 prize slogan contest reveal more than ever that Atlanta's true individuality is the inspiration for the slogans. Any city can boost, but none can boost like Atlanta, as the slogans clearly show.

The pretty girl idea has taken a strong hold on the contestants. One submitted by Robert M. DeFassell, Atlanta Athletic Club, makes the face of a pretty girl the emblem of the "500,000 club." Its caption expresses the lure of romance:

"Miss Atlanta, 'Boost-er.' 500,000 by 1920."

The whole country has been impressed with the aggressive and forceful methods of Police Chief J. L. Beavers. Taking advantage of this William E. Muirhead suggested for a button a face of Chief Beavers with the words: "500,000 by 1920. Get 'Em or Bust."

Contest Open All Week.

Slogans received as late as Saturday will be eligible for the prize. On that day the committee of judges—John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor—will meet and decide the winner. The lucky one will be announced in Hearst's Sunday American.

Here are some of the clever ideas that came to the contest editor through the mails:

"The Atlanta Spirit, Atlanta's Boost.

"A Half-Million Souls, Atlanta's Boast"—J. F. Harbour, 41 North Pryor Street.

"Atlanta, My Criterion. 1913-1920, 200,000—500,000"—Lewis J. Ball, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"500,000 by 1920. Atlanta Offers You Opportunity, Peace and Plenty"—Mrs. A. O. Woodward, South Atlanta.

"Atlanta, the Dixie Flyer.

"Will Care for Half a Million Souls and Higher"—Mrs. M. J. Rossman, Greensboro, Ga.

"For 500,000 Souls We'll Win in a Canter.

"Talk, Hustle. Boost for Atlanta"—Lucile Hiatt, 14 Killian Street.

"Here's to 500,000 by 1920, With Atlanta Spirit and Atlanta Pluck."—E. F., Covington, Ga.

"Progress, Prosperity, Pride, Population. Boost Atlanta Club. 500,000 by 1920."—Mrs. B. J. Harrison, 180 Lake Avenue.

"Atlanta 1920 Census Booster. Lend a Hand. Make It Grand. Five Hundred Thousand."—R. S. Thomson, 16 Bedford Place.

Submitting a button design with skyscrapers and airships and a park drive, Roy Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, suggests:

"Atlanta Booster Club. Boost Atlanta. 500,000 Population by 1920."

"Half-Million City, 1920. Be a Booster."—J. M. Swift, 240 Crew Street.

Design submitted by Robert M. De Lassell.

W. R. Menkee and Harold Runge, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, urge a button on which is a picture of a gate, with the words:

"Atlanta, Gate City. 500,000 Population 1920."

Prosperity in Atlanta.

"Health, Prosperity For You in Atlanta. Ask Me Why."—H. B. Tuller, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

"Atlanta, the Nation's Queen. Biggest, Brightest, Best Means Atlanta."—Mrs. Homer Hones, 54 Flat Shoals Avenue.

"Join the Half-Million Club and Boost Atlanta."—Isadore Bleich, 17 Kennedy Street.

"Atlanta, the Last Word in Cities."—Myrtle Maxwell, 708 South Boulevard.

"Me For Half-Million Atlanta, On the Job All the Time."—M. M. Welch.

"Atlanta Always Ahead."—Nate A. Gordon, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"Ashes to Billions."

"From Ashes to Billions Against All Competition. Onward Her Watchword."—Foley W. Vaden, Jackson, Ga.

"A Half-Million We Want and a Half-Million We'll Get."—Sam L. Sugarman, 351 Central Avenue.

"Bigger, Busier Atlanta. Why Not 500,000?"—T. J. Harrington, 35 North Pryor Street.

"Watch Me Pull. Atlanta, 500,000, 1920."—W. J. Hicks.

"For Atlanta—Half-Million and Then Some."—E. W. Ray, Acworth, Ga.

"We're for Smoke."—H. Shaw, 258 Lawton Street.

"Atlanta, the City That Satisfies."—A. M. Moseley, 45 Williams Street.

"Atlanta! Get the habit! Half-million! We must have it. Atlanta spirit has caught many. Half-million in 1920."

—W. L. Mears.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 10.—A threatened downpour did not deter the members of the Benevolent and Protective Order of Elks holding their annual convention here from participating in one of the most picturesque parades ever seen on the streets of Rochester.

Elks Club in Macon May Abolish Buffet

MACON, July 10.—The conviction of C. B. Wright, the secretary of the Elks Club, on the charge of violating the prohibition law, may mean the abolition of the buffet feature of the Macon lodge. Many of the members believe that the buffet should be discontinued, if it is ultimately upheld that the Elks are violating the law in operating it.

Though defended by the ablest lawyers of the city, Secretary Wright was found guilty by a jury.

Wright to-day was fined $700.

Firm Asks $100,000 On Fire Signal Delay

CHICAGO, July 10.—Alleged negligence in forwarding a fire alarm signal in Kansas City, Mo., on July 12, 1912, was made the basis for a $100,000 damage suit against subsidiaries of the Western Union Telegraph Company by Morris & Co., meat packers.

The Morris complaint alleges that a heavy fire loss was caused at its Kansas City plant because of delay in transmitting the fire alarm signal.

GOVERNOR AGAIN CITES NEED OF ECONOMY

Makes It Plain at Dinner That He Will Not Countenance Extension of Deficit.

Governor Slaton again made it plain in an after-dinner address at the Capital City Club Wednesday night that he will insist upon rigid economy in the Legislature until Georgia's present systems of finance and taxation are radically reformed.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley, of the House Appropriations Committee, was host. The dinner was given in honor of the House committee and th... ...tive. It was informal, and ... the purpose of getting ... and the Governor in ... ...ate touch.

... pointed out that the ... in the State treasury ... appropriations made ... ...egislature, amounts to the ... sum of $776,170.

To Curb Expenditures.

He said he could not see his way clear to an extension of that deficit, if it were within his power to prevent it. He held that it is the State's duty—its honorable duty—to wipe out the deficit entirely, and to that end he invited the help and co-operation of the committee. The Governor said the two items that should be watched closest are the common schools and the pensions.

"The matter of Georgia meeting its obligations promptly is a matter of business, not sentiment," said the Governor. "We must keep our outgo within our income!"

Tax Reform Urged.

The Governor stressed the necessity of tax equalization, reiterating his oft-stated position in that direction.

The committee evidently took the Governor's remarks in good part, for on all sides expressions of determination to help him and hold up his hands were heard.

All the talks were in happy vein, and it was the impression that the Governor and the Committee on Appropriations understood each other very well, indeed, when the dinner was over.

Besides the Governor and the House Committee on Appropriations, Speaker Burwell, Chairman Aikin and Vice Chairman Cole, of the Ways and Means Committee, and a number of newspaper men attended Mr. Wheatley's dinner.

J. Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, was prevented by sickness from being present.

Dress Linen Prices 5 to 10 Per Cent Up

NEW YORK, July 10.—According to a member of the linen trade back from abroad, prices there now are from 5 to 10 per cent higher than when the last heavy purchases were made in November. In the local market staple color dress linens, especially blues and pinks, are scarce. Dealers have advanced prices on several staple numbers.

The substantial business in novelty dress linens this season has led dealers to believe that ratines will be in good demand next season also. The fact that these goods are being shown extensively in cotton is regarded as an indication of their stability.

LEGISLATORS CONSIDER $100,000 GEORGIA EXHIBIT AT CANAL FAIR

COL. T. S. JONES. FRANK WELDON.

State Commission Hard at Work to Persuade Legislature to Appropriate Fund.

Georgia will have one of the most complete and "jam-up" State exhibits at the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco if members of the State Commission and others interested get what they want—$100,000—from the present Legislature.

The first gun in the big campaign was fired Thursday when Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton County, and other legislative boosters for the Cracker State presented a resolution in the House providing for an appropriation as authorized by the 1912 Legislature. The decision to wage an active campaign for the $100,000 was made Tuesday at a meeting of the State Exposition Commission.

Colonel T. Sambola Jones, of Louisiana, United States Commissioner for the exposition, who arrived in Atlanta Tuesday, will fire the second gun of the campaign Monday at noon when he will address both the House and Senate in joint session to urge the adoption of the resolution.

State Building Urged.

"We hope," said Colonel Jones, "that the Governor and his staff or a committee of distinguished citizens of Georgia will visit San Francisco to select a site for the proposed State building which this State should have, by all means, to house its exhibits and to care for the thousands of Georgians who will visit San Francisco in 1915.

"It is our plan also to have moving pictures of Georgia's participation in the exposition, showing every movement from the selection of the site for the building to the great Georgia Day, including the formal dedication of the building.

"These pictures will be sent all over the country and will constitute a living record of an event of which Georgians will ever be proud."

Mr. Weldon, chairman of the State Commission named by Governor Brown last year, was equally enthusiastic.

Big Display Planned.

"We are going after that appropriation with a vim," said he, "and we believe we will get it. Georgia must be represented—well represented—at this the greatest exposition that ever has been held.

"The commission proposes to have a strong display of Georgia's agricultural and mineral resources, as well as an exhibit showing her manufacturing activities. The State is one of the richest in the Union in natural resources and deserves to have a creditable exhibit at San Francisco."

Two Near Death in Auto Crash; Nabbed On Speeding Charge

A. M. Moon, of Adamsville, and O. H. Starnes, of Center Hill, are congratulating themselves to-day on their remarkable escape from injury when their automobiles collided in the Adamsville road last night. Both machines were demolished and their occupants hurled several feet. Beyond a few bruises, though, neither man was hurt.

Noise of the collision attracted a farmer. He telephoned to county police headquarters. Officers placed Moon and Starnes under arrest on charges of reckless speeding.

Moon operates a market in Decatur Street, while Starnes keeps a grocery in Marietta Street.

A TRIED AND PROVED GUARANTEE

Man Bought a Bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone, Then Took It Back and Asked for His Money and Got It.

A man recently tried out the guarantee which all druggists give with every bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone. He bought a bottle and then went back to the drug store and said the medicine hadn't helped him.

This druggist just reached into his cash register and took out a half dollar, the price of the bottle of Liver Tone, and handed it back to the gentleman. But he didn't take the money. He owned up that he was just trying the guarantee and, as a matter of fact, he had found Dodson's Liver Tone the best remedy for constipation and biliousness he had ever tried. "Why," he said, "my wife wouldn't be without a bottle in the house for anything. It's the best thing in the world for the whole family, and the medicine that I prefer to take or to give to my children for a lazy liver."

All druggists sell Dodson's Liver Tone and guarantee it to start the liver without violence. It is taking the place of calomel everywhere. If you buy a bottle and don't find this pleasant-tasting vegetable liquid the best thing to start a lazy liver, he will hand your money back with a smile.

PUBLIC TO PAY IF TRAINMEN WIN WAGE FIGHT

"Are You, Not Railorads, Willing to Grant Increase?" Is Question, Forbes Declares.

By B. C. FORBES.

Another section of railroad workers have voted to strike, demoralizing traffic over the eastern half of the country, unless demands for wage increases are granted. First the engineers, then the firemen, and now the trainmen have taken this course of action.

* * *

Where are strike threats to end? Arbitrators found the engineers and the firemen entitled to better pay. The railroads were willing to grant concessions in these cases, but they declare the trainmen have no grounds for insisting upon another advance, seeing that their wages were raised in 1910. Yet, there is a feeling in railroad circles that arbitrators will seek the usual line of least resistance and effect a compromise.

* * *

Railroad managers are asking: "If employees know that every time they threaten to starve the people they will be granted higher wages, why should they not go on making fresh demands? They can not lose anything by repeating the performance of putting a pistol to the heads of the railroads and the public—and they have learned by experience that they are tolerably certain to gain something when arbitration is agreed upon."

* * *

That arbitration will be adopted this time is a foregone conclusion. The customary result will likely follow—substantial concessions, entailing heavier burdens upon the public.

* * *

Now, the point raised by the railroads IS important. Where are the demands of railroad employees to end? WHY should they end? Human nature is human nature, and if the men know that by asking a lot they can depend upon receiving something, well, the temptation to ask is apt to prove irresistible. It is easier to preach than to practice self-denial. Are we not all striving to obtain the most we can for our labors? The railroads are at this moment trying to secure better rates for carry freight, are they not?

* * *

Experience may have justified the pessimistic attitude the railroads are taking toward arbitration. But will arbitrators ALWAYS grant concessions regardless of circumstances, regardless of the merits or demerits of the men's demands?

* * *

I do not pretend to have a labyrinth of pigeon-holes, each containing a ready-made solution for some complicated problem. Some writers can solve every difficulty in less than a column. They know just what should be done under every circumstance. I don't. And this problem of adjusting demands of highly-organized workers, especially railroad workers, is one of baffling, unusual difficulty.

* * *

Federal and State Arbitration Boards, as recommended by the commission that arbitrated the railway engineers' dispute, have much to commend them in the case of public and quasi-public service workers upon the uninterrupted continuance of whose labors the people at large are dependent for the necessities of life.

* * *

But it seems to me that the greatest need of all is that the public—you, your next-door neighbor, and all the rest of us—should become thoroughly acquainted with what higher and still higher wages mean TO US. The railroads will not pay whatever increase in wages the trainmen may be granted. YOU and I will pay. The railroads have not one dollar that you and I did not contribute. They have only one source of revenue—the public.

* * *

Therefore, the question to ask is not, "Should the railroads raise wages?" but "Should WE pay railway workers higher wages?" For WE foot the bill.

* * *

If we conclude, after learning all about the rates of pay these men receive, that they are getting less than we earn ourselves, that we ought to contribute more to their weekly envelopes, that they cannot live as comfortably as the average workers of similar skill, then let us make our decision known. Once it is clearly realized that the public, not soulless corporations, must meet the bill, must give up out of their pockets every additional dollar paid over to these workers, then public sentiment will govern rates of wages and govern them equitably.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN

Representative Clements, of Irwin County, owns the identical spot of ground upon which President Jefferson Davis was captured, after the surrender of General Lee and the flight of the Confederate administration from Richmond.

The arrest of Davis was effected in a little clump of woods, about two acres in extent, near the Clements homestead, and it has been preserved, just as it was then, ever since the war. In the family of Mr. Clements it has always been considered a sacred place.

When Mr. Clements' father died he left a request that this spot of ground be "kept in the hands of Southern people." He was a lieutenant in the Confederate army, and idolized Jefferson Davis. He aided in the fallen chieftain's escape, and only consented to his surrender when it became plain that further resistance was worse than useless.

Mr. Clements is contemplating, in order that his father's last wishes may be complied with, asking the State of Georgia to accept title to this spot where Davis was arrested, and to appoint some kind of commission or committee to take it in charge.

He has worked out no definite plan—he merely wishes to give the property to the State, with the understanding that the State will protect it, preserve it and keep it, as his father wished, in the hands of "Southern people."

Not a stick of timber has been cut from the land since the day Jefferson Davis was arrested thereon, and many trees that were mere saplings then now are great oaks and pines.

Representative Shelby Myrick, of Chatham, is one of the very hardest worked men in the House.

He heads the big Committee on Constitutional Amendments, and that committee likely will be worked overtime this session.

Myrick is one of the very best lawyers in the House, and is a gentleman of extreme affability and effectiveness. In other words, he is both able and affable.

Mr. Myrick's committee already has returned one county to the House with a favorable report, and the chances seem bright for the creation of the same by the Legislature. The proposition—Barrow County—has been thoroughly thrashed out in the committee, and the House is apt to take the committee's findings as righteous and just.

Speaker Burwell picked for the constitutional amendment committee from among the best legal talent he could locate in the House, and when he made Mr. Myrick the chairman of that committee he paid him a high but deserved compliment.

A meeting of the legislative committee of the Georgia Anti-Saloon League was held at Wesley Memorial Church in Atlanta Tuesday night, several members of the House and Senate being present.

It was decided not to introduce the Tippins bill or any substitute for it at this session of the Legislature, but temperance legislation instead will take the shape of a bill intended to gather the fruits of the Webb-Kenyon bill against interstate shipments of liquor recently passed by Congress.

Whether the Legislature will enact any liquor legislation whatever this session is problematical, as there has been so far no particular agitation of the matter.

Representative George F. Paulk, of Berrien, will introduce in the House soon a bill to establish a branch school for the deaf in South Georgia.

The bill will ask for a branch school convenient to the 150 deaf children in South Georgia who are unable to avail themselves of the education offered by the Cave Spring School, on account of its inaccessibility.

The bill will not specify any particular location, but will leave that to be settled by a committee appointed by the Legislature or Governor. No large appropriation for buildings will be asked, but the town where the school will be located will be expected to provide temporary buildings, at least.

Representative Crawford Wheatley's dinner to the House Appropriations Committee Wednesday evening at the Capital City Club had much more behind it than the mere matter of a compliment to his committee, although, of course, it was a most delightful and engaging compliment.

Its direct purpose was to bring as intimately together as possible the committee and Governor Slaton.

Mr. Wheatley, who is the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, believes that Governor Slaton is exactly right in his ideas with respect to the State's income and outgo. The Governor is known to have determined that the present Legislature shall keep the lid on appropriations, and not exceed the revenue anticipated under the present system of taxation. He has made it very plain that he will exhaust the executive resources, if necessary, in undertaking to do that.

Mr. Wheatley is determined to uphold the Governor at every turn, if it be within his power, and to that end already has had numerous conferences with his excellency.

In order to facilitate the work and to make all features of it as pleasant and as cordial as possible, Mr. Wheatley arranged his dinner last night—and it may be said that it was, in every sense of the crowds, a complete success.

It is safe to say that the Governor will find the House Committee on Appropriations standing right behind him in his work of reforming the State's finances, and if the committee takes that stand, it may be accepted as a further fact that the entire House will fall in line promptly and willingly.

General Agricultural Committee No. 2 of the House has a large grouch toward General Agricultural No. 1.

General Agricultural No. 1 had a hog cholera bill before it Wednesday, and was so impressed with the importance of the thing that it invited General Agricultural No. 2 to sit with it in joint session and hear the arguments. G. A. No. 2 readily consented to this and sat through two mortal hours of talk about hogs and things.

When the time came to vote on the bill, however, G. A. No. 1 moved to put G. A. No. 2 out of the room, leaving the voting entirely to G. A. No. 1. To this G. A. No. 2 objected vehemently.

Rather than get out, G. A. No. 2 moved to adjourn—and the motion carried!

The hog cholera bill, therefore, still is up in the air, and G. A. No. 2 has a big grouch toward G. A. No. 1.

R. F. D. No. 2, Fredericks Hall, Va.—"My little son was very bad off with the eczema on his face. It started with watery pimples and it itched and burned so badly that he wanted to scratch it all the time and he made an awful sore on his face. I would sit and hold his hands a lot of the time to keep him from scratching it. He didn't sleep any scarcely. The eczema looked awful while on his face. I was afraid it would last for life. He was real cross and fretful.

"I had him treated and he grew worse daily. As soon as I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I sent and got a twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and a fifty cent box of Cuticura Ointment and began using them. I saw a difference in a short time. I only used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment a few weeks before he was a well boy." (Signed) Mrs. Kate B. Pleasants, Dec. 12, 1912.

Although the Cuticura Soap and Ointment are most successful in the treatment of affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hands, they are also most valuable for everyday use in the toilet, bath and nursery, because they promote and maintain the health of the skin and hair from infancy to age. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van De Water.

CHAPTER II.

IT is not strange that men do not understand women when woman so often does not understand herself. Mary Danforth did not know what instinct kept her from mentioning to her parents her encounter with Gordon Craig in the subway train. That is, she did not tell them that she knew the name of the man whose pocket had been picked. She mentioned casually that she had seen through the window of her car a thief remove a purse from a pocket of another passenger on a local train and that she had vainly tried to attract the victim's attention to the theft.

"How strange that you should have seen it, and that the other people did not," remarked Mrs. Danforth. "You have quick eyes, my dear."

Mary laughed. "They were not as quick as the pickpocket's fingers," she said lightly.

"People ought to be careful how they carry their valuables," remarked her father sententiously. "New Yorkers should know enough to be on the lookout for thieves. Yet every few days you read in the papers of some careless chap who has been robbed."

The Discussion Ends.

There the discussion ended. Mary did not think it necessary to tell her father that the man of whom she had spoken was not a New Yorker. She was quite sure that Craig himself would not speak of the incident to her father, even should he present the letter of introduction of which he had told her. She wondered when he would present this, and if her father would mention the stranger to her. Why should he? There were dozens of business acquaintances whom he met weekly and whose names she did not even know. He was a man who did not bring the office and its concerns into his home. She almost wished that she had told a part of it. It was too late now to do so. Once she made an effort to bring the conversation back to the incident; then appreciated with embarrassment that were she now to give an accurate account of the encounter her parents would think it strange that she had not done so before. So she turned the talk again into other channels.

Dinner over, she asked to be excused, explaining that she must "cram" for examinations.

"Must you work late to-night?" queried her mother, sympathetically. "I think it is a shame the way in which you girls have to work to get through the High School. Now, when I was young——"

"Yes, yes, mother, I know!" interrupted Mary, with more asperity than was habitual with her. She was still weary and nervous, but as she saw the shade of wounded feeling that swept across her mother's face she regretted her sharp speech and, stooping swiftly, kissed the pale cheek.

"Forgive me for being so cross, mother," she said gently. "I am hot and tired, and, I fear, a bit grouchy."

"That's all right, Mary," said her father good-naturedly. "Your mother and I understand, and we are proud of the way you have worked. In spite of the fact that High School studies are a bit strenuous, you'll find that the training has been a fine thing for you later in life if you ever have to face the world alone. But I hope you won't have to," he added hastily.

His eyes dwelt happily on the graceful girl before him. She was an only child, and her father always said that she was the best daughter that any couple ever had. He had insisted that she take a course of study that would enable her to support herself if necessary. Every woman ought to have some way of earning her own living, he had declared. Mary reminded him of it to-night, smilingly.

"I'm Going to Insist."

"Well, dad," she teased, "you say you hope I will never have to support myself, and yet I am almost ready to consider myself a competent secretary, stenographer and typewriter. Then what are you going to do with me if I do not take a position?"

"I am going to insist that you keep in practice, but you shall not go to work as long as I live. I want you at home with mother and me. When I die it will be time enough for you to hustle."

"I pray that won't be for years to come," said the daughter, as she ran her fingers caressingly through his gray hair. "Not because I am afraid of work—but because we need and love you—mother and I."

John Danforth looked fondly at his daughter. "Well," he said with a tender smile, "I've lived right up to my income so far, and now I want to be spared long enough to lay aside something for you two—for no man ever had a better wife and daughter."

Mary studied late that night. As she fell asleep she smiled tenderly as her memory recalled the expression of pride with which her father had made this speech.

"Dear old dad," she murmured drowsily. "I love to see that look on his face."

Perhaps a sudden change in the weather, making the air dry and cool, caused life to seem brighter to Mary Danforth the following day, for she returned from school in a happy and hopeful frame of mind. Her mother came to her room late in the afternoon with the news that her father had "just telephoned that he was bringing a business acquaintance home for the evening."

"He says he's a stranger here," added the mother, "and as he's a bit lonesome, father asked him up to dine. He did not tell me his name."

The girl felt a wave of color sweep to the roots of her hair, and she turned away hastily to hide it.

"Perhaps it might be as well to tell Norah to have a salad course to-night, since dad's bringing a stranger home," she remarked casually, "and let's have the new china used, too—shan't we?"

"Certainly," said her mother. So calm was her child's manner that the parent would have been surprised could she have heard her whisper excitedly when she was again alone in her room:

"It is surely Gordon Craig!" Then, as the girl caught a glimpse of her flushing face in her mirror, she blushed again.

Confessions of a Medium

A Striking Expose of Fakery in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the partment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

YOU have watched the crowds in front of the fortune tellers' booths in Coney Island. Of course, you have never been one of those who have been "taken in." But you may have watched the others as they stood amazed at the wonderful "second sight" of Professor Bondaloo, or whatever his title happens to be.

As he sits blindfolded he describes exactly the articles in the crowd, tells the amount of coins and the dates thereon; tells the colors of dresses; reads the titles of magazines; adds complicated figures on the blackboard, and thoroughly mystifies his beholders.

They little know that the Professor instead of being imported from Mandalay, India, probably hails from that far-distant land of East Fourteenth Street or the Bowery, and is known in the winter and in private life by some "imported" name.

The assistant, after beseeching you to come closer, still closer, in order not to lose a single syllable that drops like pearls from the lips of the X-ray visioned man, then announces that the great professor will tell you your name for 10 cents to-day only.

When you go inside you are led to the Professor's sister, or cook, or something, who asks you to cross her palm with silver, which means a quarter, or a half, or even a dollar, according to how gullible you may appear.

She then proceeds to tell you the color of your prospective wife's cousin's hair, and seems to have forgotten that you came in to find out what your parents christened you.

How He Did It.

I am not at this time going to take up the fortune-telling mystery; but I shall content myself with pointing out how I accomplished the wonderful "second sight" or clairvoyance, as it is better known, to the astonishment of far more intelligent minds than my own.

Come with me, then, as I enter a handsome private home on Morningside Avenue. Gathered there are about forty-three or forty-four eminent scholars to study the mysterious power of Ali Ben Hassan, who has been educated in English in Robert College, at Constantinople, and who has but recently come to this country.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the apartment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

My guide goes to the back of the room and says, "I speak, Ali. Have you your second sight? Please tell me what this is?"

Very quickly I answer, "There appears to me a hat."

"Right. Hear me now. Please watch me carefully. See this? I ask you to describe it."

A Watch.

"You hold in your hand a watch."

"Now what kind? Be quick, please."

"It is of silver."

"What is the number? Look carefully. Are you ready? Tell us then."

"The number is 62,810."

And so on the questions and answers went, and everything correct to the minutest detail. A doctor who was present proclaimed the results marvelous—that Ali Hassan was a unique specimen for scientific research. Several motions were made, seconded and carried unanimously, that the results of the experiment be sent to various psychical societies and leaflets be printed with a full and detailed description and mailed to leading authorities in this country and abroad.

Really, when I doffed my turban and sank down to a good hearty laugh with my "guide" later on, I once again had occasion to lament on the credulity of my neighbors. The second sight of all Ali Ben Hassan consisted of nothing but a good memory on the part of myself, an amateur investigator into the frauds of mystery.

My friend and I had arranged a code, as follows: Our questions would tell the answer to what they were asking, by the manner in which they were worded. The first letter in each sentence spelled out the answer; but if we had gone no further, this might easily have been detected. So we turned the alphabet topsy-turvy and made H stand for A, T stand for B, S stand for C and so on. For instance, look at the first question that was put to me:

The Solution.

"I," being the first word uttered, suggested "H." "Have" in the second sentence, suggested "A." "Please in the third sentence, suggesting "T"—the three together making "hat."

I can not even begin to show you the further details of the code, which went still deeper, and covered every possible article, description, date, color, metal, etc. We had even gone so far as to vary our code by different signals, and had single words mean fixed things. So that if, perchance, some one began to get the system, we would throw him off the scent. For instance, the second variation made "Say what stone this is" meant diamond. "Please tell me what this stone is" meant emerald, and so on. "Say what country is represented here" would indicate America, while "Please tell me what country is represented here" would indicate Spain.

There is no doubt but the memorizing of these codes is remarkable, and on that basis may be paid for. But I cannot understand why thousands will continue to believe that a strange, unseen power is possessed by these so-called clairvoyants who flourish and grow rich on money defrauded from the credulous pleasure-seekers who frequent the resorts.

One more incident on clairvoyancy: Some time after the Ali Ben Hassan episode, a number of those who had been present were invited to investigate that wonderful gentleman again at a friend's home in Brooklyn. One of the scholars had sufficiently awakened by this time to declare that he thought it was possible the manner in which the questions had been asked had suggested their answer. At this most of the others arose in anger and laughed scornfully at the man who could show himself so skeptical in the face of such conclusive evidence. The "guide" was very much aroused and said he feared this statement would cause Ali to refuse to talk again. (This manner of procedure is generally followed when someone gets on the trail.) Nevertheless, to prove that the charge was preposterous, Ali would allow anyone to ask the questions and he would answer them!

Therefore, to the amazement of all, this was done, and the results were more bewildering than before. There was no doubt of it. Ali Ben Hassan was gifted with a remarkable supernatural sight. But the explanation is even simpler here than in the first incident. We were prepared for all emergencies. I had previously connected in the folds of my turban the end of a slender speaking tube that came close to my ear and extended from another room and was painted in the color of the wall. Hidden in the next room was another confederate, who looked through an opening in the draperies, held a powerful opera-glass to his eyes, and whispered the answers sweetly through the tube in my ear!

New Residents in Towns

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

TACT, judgment and discretion are needed in order to make friends and acquaintances in a new place. Of course, when going to live in a strange town, where one has a few friends, cards may be sent, with the address, to the friends who reside in the town, as soon as one is settled, thus giving them an opportunity to call.

It may be that a bride is making her new home in a town where her husband's friends live. They have received cards for the wedding, or announcements of the marriage, and after they have called and their visits have been returned an interval of dullness may follow. If a few little hospitalities have been offered they may be returned in a simple way.

A new resident must not make advances, must not seem in haste to make acquaintances, must not make first calls on old residents, or send invitations of any sort to them until there has been an exchange of visits and some mark of hospitality has been shown by older residents.

It is well for a new resident to make allowances for an occasional breach of courtesy from well-intentioned persons. These have been known to send invitations to strangers within their gates without the preliminary of a formal call. This has been from carelessness, or the lack of knowledge of the laws of etiquette. A new resident, who may receive an invitation of a general nature from an old resident who has not called, need not stand too strictly on ceremony if by so doing the opportunity may be lost of meeting some pleasant friends. But a second oversight of that sort, from the same hostess, should not be overlooked, and one may well wait on one's dignity for the delinquent hostess to call.

Rules which apply in cities are altogether different from the rules in country neighborhoods or small towns. In a large city it is not the custom ever to make a first call on a new resident or near neighbor, unless a friend in common has requested one to do so. In the country, or in small places, old residents call on a newcomer if it is believed that an exchange of calls would be agreeable.

First calls should be returned within a week or ten days at least.

A THRILLING SHORT STORY

WITHOUT—ice and frozen snow, the bitter cold of a Russian winter. Within—the heavy scent of hothouse flowers, a soft rustle of silk as Natascha Alexandrovna waited breathlessly for the words that would decide her brother's fate.

They brought little comfort.

"I am distressed to be obliged to refuse your request," the general replied coldly, "but if your brother chooses to consort with revolutionaries he must take the consequences."

"He is only a boy, and the woman bewitched him," she urged, her heart sinking as he rose, saying coldly, "It is useless to press the matter further. I am powerless."

"Powerless!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "You, the all-powerful chief of police! You, who have so often assured me of your friendship! A word from you would set Boris free, and you refuse to speak it."

"Orders have been given that even I can not disobey," unmoved by her wrath as he had been by her distress.

"Then can nothing be done to save him?"

Vladimir Mirskoff looked at her for a moment, then, "There is a way, but you may not care to take it."

"Not care, when it is a question of saving my brother! Tell me quickly."

"A plot is being laid for the wholesale assassination of government officials, and a new form of deadly explosive has been smuggled across the frontier by a woman who, try as we may, we can not identify. If you could give us the name of one of the leaders Boris is free."

"You surely do not imagine that I could tell you," she exclaimed indignantly.

"No; but your admirer, Paul Goveski, can. He has friends among the Liberals."

"And you dare suggest that I should make him betray his friends?"

"It is the only way to save Boris from Siberia. I am powerless unless I have the name of one of these revolutionaries to give in exchange. After all, why should you have any scruples concerning men who preach murder as a trade?"

She wrung her hands in an agony of doubt, but before she could reply a servant entered to announce that his excellency Count Paul Goveski desired to know if madame would receive him.

"No, no. Say I am engaged; I can not see him."

"On the contrary," interposed Vladimir, "you must see him. Fate has sent him here to save your brother."

Natascha looked at him imploringly, then said, "I will receive the count," and as the man left the room, "Promise me Paul Goveski shall not suffer for his friendship with these men."

"Certainly," he replied, "Where may I wait for your answer?"

"In my boudoir," holding aside a curtain before a door.

"Remember, your brother's liberty, perhaps his life, rests in your hands," he whispered, and vanished almost as she turned to greet the Count.

"I trust I am not too early," he said, bending to kiss her hand. "You had my letter? I am all impatient for the answer."

"You do me honor," she replied, sinking into a chair. "Believe me, I am indeed grateful."

A Protestation.

"It is your love, not gratitude, I want," he pleaded. "Surely you have seen how I adore you. I would die to serve you."

"So others have said. I wonder how much such protestations are worth from you."

"Only try me and see."

"You tell me you love me," she said slowly. "There is no love without trust. What if I ask for a proof of that?"

"Ask what you will. I can deny you nothing."

"It will place your life in my hands."

"It is there already." Paul replied softly, bending over her. "I can not live without you."

"Rumor calls you Nihilist, conspirator," she said lightly, with a bewitching smile. "A woman's curiosity is proverbial. Is it true, and who are your confederates?"

He stepped back and gazed at her in astonishment too great for words. Then, "Madame, do you know what it is you are asking?"

"Why, certainly; a proof that you trust me."

"But this concerns others than myself. It is impossible."

"I thought so," scornfully; "strange how all men are alike, ready enough with words—unfortunately, I prefer deeds,' rising as if to bring the interview to an end.

"But not such as this?" he pleaded. "To betray those who have trusted their lives in my keeping would be a poor way of showing my love."

But she stood silent, her fingers nervously twisting the lace of her dress.

Paul Goveski watched her keenly, then going to an escritoire wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, folded it, and came slowly back, saying gravely, "Here is the name of our leader. The proof you have asked of my love."

Then, as she took it, he continued, coldly: "And now, madame, I bid you farewell. You have said love can not exist without trust, and so have given me the answer I came to seek."

"You are going?" she exclaimed, incredulously.

"Yes; love bought by dishonor is valueless," and with a low bow he walked to the door.

She flung aside the paper and, passing swiftly across the room, barred his way, saying brokenly: "No, no; you must not go like this. I did not really mean it. Forgive me," looking up at him beseechingly, with tear-laden eyes. For the question that had tormented her for so long was answered; she knew now that she loved him—that to lose him would be much worse than death itself.

"Then you were not really in earnest?" the sternness melting from his face.

"No," she protested eagerly, "I only wished to try. The paper shall be burned unread."

"I knew I could trust you," he replied joyfully. "Natascha, dearest, I, too, was but jesting. The name I wrote was my own." He stopped, for her face was deadly white and her eyes dilated with terror as she gazed past him into the room.

Turning, he saw Vladimir Mirskoff reading the fatal paper with a quiet smile of satisfaction on his face.

The chief of police carefully refolded the paper, saying, "Paul Goveski, I regret to be obliged to arrest you, but this leave me no choice."

"Indeed he is innocent," cried Natascha, imploringly. "It was only a jest."

A Last Appeal.

"A singularly unfortunate one."

"Why try to undo the effect of your work?" asked Paul, scornfully.

"No wonder you despise me," she said humbly. "Listen, Boris has been sent to Siberia unless I could obtain from you the name of one of the leaders in this plot. They are only assassins and deserve no mercy. But you showed me the baseness of the part I was playing. Indeed, I would have burnt that paper. Say you believe me?"

But her appeal left him unmoved, and his voice was as cold and hard as the ice in the streets outside as he his friends, would repent at the last moment? Never." Then addressing himself to Vladimir, "I suppose it is useless to tell you I have never belonged to any revolutionary society in my life? I suspected madame was being made a tool of, and wished to find out; that was all."

"Quite useless, and I should advise you think of a more plausible tale for your defense." Then to his hostess, "Madame, I wish you good evening."

But Natascha had regained her self-control. She was fighting against desperate odds for all that made life worth the living. Entreaty was useless. If the man before her was to be forced to relinquish his prey, other means must be used, and suddenly the inspiration came.

Turning to Vladimir, she said very quietly: "You spoke of a woman who had concealed a deadly explosive for charging bombs. What if I were to tell you her name?"

"Then you may ask what you will." "My price is Boris's freedom and the destruction of that paper."

"You, a woman, to betray another woman!" cried Paul. "I refuse to be saved at such a price."

Twice Balked.

"And I refuse to pay it," added Vladimir, decidedly.

Natascha looked at him in dismay. "Refuse?"

"Yes. Why buy what I can have for nothing? Sent to prison as a suspect, you will soon tell me all I want to know."

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Paul, and Natascha glanced at him gratefully as she said, "I will tell you now," opening one of the glass doors of the cabinet containing her famous collection of china fruit. "I am the woman, and here are the bombs."

The man stared at her, too surprised to speak, then Vladimir said stiffly, "Is this also some jest, madame?"

"It is deadly earnest," and, taking a china orange from its shelf, she held it carefully in both hands. "What is there to arouse suspicion in the fad of a society lady for collecting china fruit, and what safer place in which to store bombs than a drawing room frequented by the chief of police?"

"Enough of this fooling," he said, roughly. "I do not believe you," and he made a step toward her.

"Stop!" she cried, holding out the orange on the palm of her hand. "If you move I will convince you of the truth of my tale, only you are not likely to live to acknowledge your error."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Return that paper. Write an order for my brother's release and passports for the three of us by the midnight train to Paris."

"I refuse."

"Then as it is a choice between Siberia and death, I shall drop this at your feet, and there will be no one left to explain the accident that wrecked the house of Natascha Alexandrovna and involved the highly esteemed chief of police in so terrible a fate." Then, turning to Paul, "Have I not chosen well?"

"Yes; a thousand times sooner death with you than life if we are parted." And the look in his eyes told her that the peril in which they stood had blotted out all misunderstandings, but she only said calmly:

The Victory.

"Does your excellency still refuse?"

"I will do what you require," he yielded sullenly. "Put that thing away."

"When you have fulfilled my conditions. Give Paul Goveski his paper."

Vladimir complied, and Paul watched it burn while Natascha continued: "Now write an order for Boris' release and make out our passports." Then, when he had done so, "In return, if you give me your word to do nothing till midday tomorrow, I will leave my china fruit exactly as they are. You can search the house, and think what a sensation such a discovery will make, and how your cleverness will be applauded."

"I give it." And if looks could kill, she would have fallen dead at his feet.

"Then I need detain you no longer. But another time, your excellency, when you wish to make a tool of a woman, beware lest you burn your own fingers."

"You have got the better of me now," he replied, turning to go, "but sooner or later my turn will come, and then—" The pause that followed was more expressive than words.

As the sound of his footsteps died away, Natascha placed the orange on a table and burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, exclaiming, "To think that two men could be so easily deceived!"

"Natascha, what do you mean?" Paul asked.

"It was your danger inspired me. I was desperate," she replied, taking the orange in both hands and giving it a slight twist, when the two halves fell apart, and she held them out for her lover to see they were empty of all save air. "If only I could see Vladimir's face to-morrow when he finds those deadly bombs are no more dangerous than this china orange!"

Alas, That Poor Egg!

"Waiter!" From the table by the window the voice of an elderly gentleman rose in accents wrathful. "Waiter!"

"Yes, sir," replied the much harassed one, hastening forward.

The elderly gentleman, overcome by his emotions, made several vain efforts at articulate utterances. Then:

"Take this egg away!" he roared. "Take it away!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter obligingly, as he glanced wistfully at the offending article. "And—and what shall I do with it, sir?"

"Do with it?" The outraged customer rose menacingly from his chair. "Do with it?" he bellowed fiercely. "Why, wring its neck!"

True Business Instinct.

Topham's was the smartest emporium for miles around. You had to be the last word in "go" before a situation was obtained in that establishment. Keen business men filled every post.

One afternoon when trade was in full swing an unfortunate customer fell down the first floor stairs.

"Help!" he groaned in agony. "I do believe I've broken my leg!"

A shopwalker immediately flew to his side.

"Broken your leg, sir?" he inquired sympathetically. And then, in sharp, clear tones: "Cork legs! Third counter to the right, sir! Forward, Miss Davis!"

Up-to-Date Jokes

A man-of-war was lying off Gibraltar, and permission was given to the men to go ashore for the day. The sailors amused themselves in various ways, among others by riding about on donkeys; and their want of experience in this line caused much merriment. An officer, observing one of the men sitting very far back on the animal, instead of in the usual position, called out:

"I say, Jeck, get up more amidships!"

With an injured air he replied: "Well, sir, this is the first craft that ever I commanded in my life, and it's hard indeed if I can't ride on the quarterdeck if I, like."

Bismarck was on one occasion pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place.

"He is a remarkable fellow," said the proud father. "He speaks sevan languages."

"Indeed!" said Bismarck, who had not a high opinion of linguistic acquirements. "What a wonderful head waiter he would make."

Stolen Fruit Not Sweeter.

A benevolent old man invited a number of small boys from the slums to spend a day at his beautiful old-world country home, and among the many good things which he provided for them was a bountiful and wondrous feast of strawberries and cream.

As the day drew to a close, wishing to impress the lads with a lesson, their benefactor asked:

"Now, suppose, instead of being invited here to eat my strawberries, you had come and helped yourself when nobody was looking, would you have enjoyed the fruit so much?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! And why not?" asked the old gentleman, inspired with a new faith in young Britain's honesty.

"'Cause, sir," came the sad but prompt reply, "we wouldn't 'ave 'ad no cream with 'em!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T TRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 18 years of age. As I was walking on the street the other day I saw a girl whom I hadn't seen before, but I loved her very much the moment I saw her.

What I want to know is how to get friends with that girl.

ALBERT.

Love at sight is such a pretty dream it is a pity to spoil it by getting acquainted.

You are 18—the age to be devoted to making a man of yourself. Bend your energies in that direction, and let love alone for a few years. Under no circumstances should you attempt to form an acquaintance with a girl you happen to meet on the street.

CERTAINLY NOT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am very much in love with a boy. I am 17 and he is 18. He has kissed me a great many times, but now he has stopped writing me, and I have not heard from him for some time. I cried all last night about him.

Would you write him?

NANCY.

You have been very foolish, and his coldness is no more than what you should expect.

Do not write him, and the next time you have a lover, refuse to be so generous with marks of your affection. I trust this experience will prove to you that you are too young to have a lover.

Do You Know---

Failing in her plan to end her life, after seven different attempts in as many months, Laura Griffith, of Atlantic City, has developed a more cheerful view of life, and has signed on as a bareback rider with a circus. As a persistent fatalist, Laura, who is about 18 years old, holds the record. She has tried the poison cup, the glittering dagger, and the more prosaic method of taking a running start and butting her head against a telephone pole. So regularly was she admitted to the city hospital during the past year that a cot was labeled "Laura Griffith" and was held in readiness for her at all hours of the day and night.

Should the measure now before the French Parliament become law it will not be the first occasion on which it has been attempted to make gambling illegal in France. In the thirteenth century St. Louis interdicted all gambling, even prohibiting the manufacture of dice, and Louis XIV was responsible for no fewer than 20 anti-gambling ordinances. But the monarch gave a bad example to his subjects, since every variety of card game known at the time was eagerly and openly played at Versailles.

Five brothers and sisters, named Harris, whose united ages total 438 years, met at a birthday party at Radnage, Bucks. Their ages are 96, 92, 88, 82 and 80, an average of more than 87. Five other members of the same family, who have died, were aged 93, 89, 88, 87 and 77.

Among those recently ordained by the Bishop of Durham was the Rev. A. M. Smith, M. A., to the curacy of Houghton-le-Spring. Mr. Smith has been totally blind for 20 years, but has succeeded in taking his degree at Oxford. The Bishop of Durham appointed him to read the Gospel in the ordination service, which he did from his Braille Bible. His complete Braille Bible consists of nearly 6,000 pages, fills 39 volumes, and occupies a shelf seven feet long.

The GHOST BREAKER

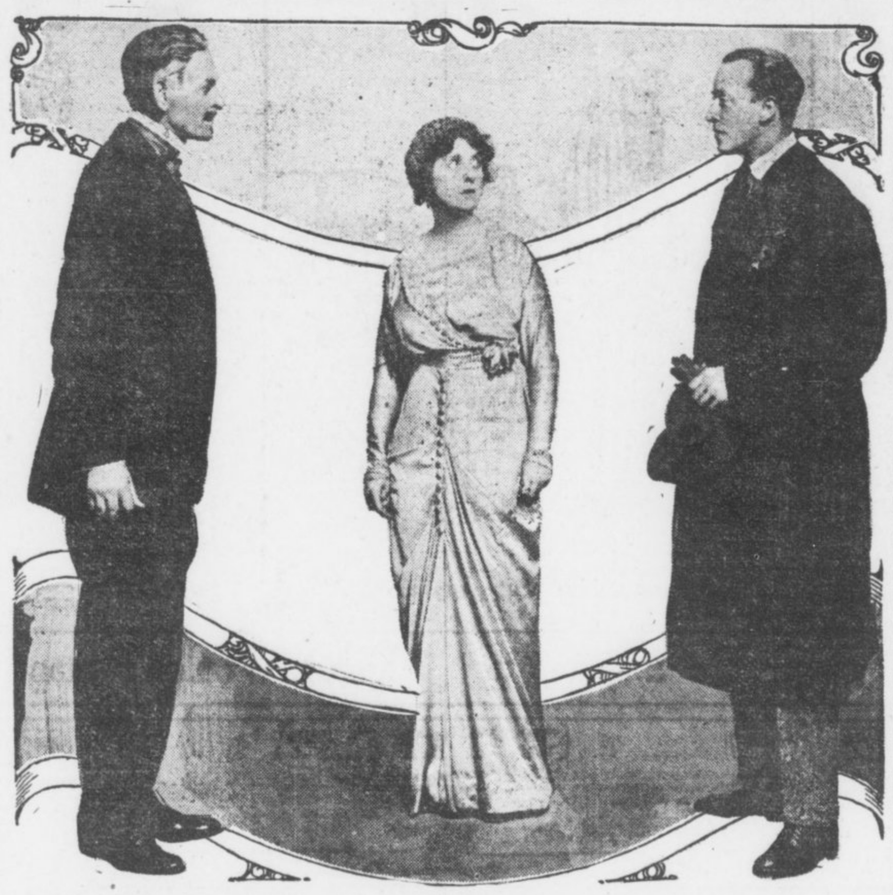
THE PRINCESS INTRODUCES JARVIS TO THE DUKE



"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I am bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Spooks!" grinned Jarvis, appreciatively. He was beginning to be glad he had come. But he saw no answering gleam in the young woman's sober face.

"Call it anything you like," she replied soberly, "but the castle is haunted—just the same. My grandfather was one of the wealthiest nobles in Spain. He died suddenly, leaving everything to my father, his only son and heir. When my father went to take possession of his estate in Segurn the town was full of weird stories of uncanny happenings. The castle was deserted—every one had fled and all told of something in armor that stalked the halls at night. My father laughed at the silly natives and said he would go into the castle and show them how foolish their fears were. He went—and," the girl's voice trembled slightly, "and he was never seen again."

"Hm!" ejaculated Jarvis, with interest. "What happened to him?"

The Princess shook her head and her dark eyes grew very large. "No one knows. He disappeared—vanished utterly—without the slightest clew. Since then two others have disappeared."

"Well, why don't you keep out of there?" he demanded, half seriously. "What's the idea of teasing that spook, anyway?"

"But now my brother has gone in and they haven't heard from him!" Her eyes filled with tears. "That's why I haven't heard from him—why he hasn't answered my cables."

The Treasure.

With true chivalry the young man slightly turned his eyes away that he might not see the tears.

"Now, that's it!" he declared briskly. "You want me to go in and find your brother."

"Yes, that's it!" she cried eagerly. "Save my brother, but," she added quickly, "you must know about this locket. It tells where to find the treasure."

Jarvis ran his other hand through his hair and stared at the trinket in bewilderment. They were coming too fast for him, as he had said.

"Treasure! What is treasure?"

"My grandfather is known to have converted all his wealth into Spanish gold," she explained, "to finance a colonization scheme in Cuba. It amounted to about a million dollars in your money."

The knight whistled. "A million! Eh? How long ago did this happen?"

"Fifteen years ago—and nobody has found it."

Jarvis apparently arranged all these facts in his mind and then inquired:

"Why did you come to America?"

The Princess held up the locket. "A part of the story was that a plan had been made, showing just where the treasure was secreted, but this plan could never be found. Quite by accident, I recently learned that this plan had been hidden in the back of this locket, and the locket, I discovered, had been sold and was in America. It was to find this locket that I left my brother and came to America. It was this locket that you saw last night."

"Then my work is," Jarvis summed up, "to find your brother and solve the mystery? All right! We'll explain to the Duke that you are taking me to Spain for no other reason than to solve this mystery. Let me see—in America we have Roosevelt, the trust-breaker; Farley, the strike-breaker—and why not, 'Jarvis, the ghost-breaker?'"

"Why, yes," smiled the Princess, uncertainly. She could not always tell when he was serious. "It might—why not? Carlos would believe almost anything of the Americans."

Her Secret.

"And will you tell him," he asked wickedly, "that you have made me a—er—what is it?—a vassal?"

Again the rich color sought the lady's dark face.

"I think not," she decided, shyly. "Not just yet."

He smiled at her confusion and pressed his advantage.

"By the way, your—er—just how should a vassal address his Princess?"

Dona Maria appeared to give the matter some consideration.

"Highness is correct," she told him, with some hesitation.

Jarvis studied this over before he pursued his quest for further information.

"Your Highness, a vassal doesn't really amount to much, does he? No—I thought he was a piker," he added ruefully.

"A piker?" queried Her Highness, puzzled. "You mean he carries a pike?"

"No, no—a piker is a tin horn."

"Tin horn?" echoed Dona Maria, more mystified than ever.

"Well," Jarvis began, desperately—habitual use of slang plays the mischief with classical synonyms—"a—a sort of pawn in this game of chess—along with you kings and queens and castles and—things. For instance," the light of fun returned, "could a perfectly good, honest, reliable, hard-working vassal work his way up and get to be a Duke—or a lord or—something like that?"

Dona Maria laughed softly. "You're an ambitious vassal, aren't you? I'm afraid you wouldn't be satisfied with being less than a king."

"A king, prince or—a bandit," he returned, meaningly.

"A bandit? And why a bandit?"

"A king might demand—a prince request—a bandit seize."

Dona Maria looked blank. "Seize what?"

The vassal drew a quick breath. "That which a mere vassal may only admire," he fairly blurted out.

Dona Maria was saved the necessity or reminding him that he was still a vassal by a knock which she seemed to expect.

"Sh-h, he is here. What shall I call you?"

The Duke Arrives.

"Warren, Mr. Warren," he whispered, glumly. He felt that he would without straining himself cultivate a man's size dislike for the exalted cousin.

The Princess opened the door. "Come in, cousin," she said sweetly. His Grace of Alva entered, but fairly shied like a spirited horse at the sight of the stranger.

"Oh, I'm intruding," he exclaimed, in a manner which said plainly: "What the dickens are you doing here? Get out!" This convinced Jarvis that he would eventually come to dislike the exalted cousin by the running foot.

"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I'm bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

Jarvis nodded easily. "Glad to know you."

"I am honored," returned the Duke, his manner plainly indicating that the honor was the other way around. "Interesting task you have undertaken. May I ask if that is your regular profession?"

His tone was a mixture of the condescendingly paternal and an aristocratic sneer, which those of first families consider the thing in dealing with their untitled inferiors. He did not mean to be especially offensive to the young man—it was merely the way he had been brought up.

"That is my business," replied Jarvis, outwardly unruffled. "Solving mysteries—looking up the family skeleton—hunting out spooks—what we call in America a 'ghost breaker.'"

"A strange calling," mused the Duke, eying the young man keenly. "Really, I never heard of anything more extraordinary."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

The scene of the story is laid in the Vanderlip Hotel, New York City. The Princess Maria Theresa of Segura, a beautiful Spanish woman, is suddenly awakened in her suite by the sound of pistol shots. She hears a man running down the hall. He crashes against her door, breaking the lock, and enters. She sees he is a tall, good-looking young man, dressed in evening clothes. He is carrying a revolver in his right hand, and blood is dripping from a wound in his left. He begs the Princess to hide him. She, moved by some indescribable impulse, decides that she will. She directs him to an inner room, and a few minutes later, when the hotel detective knocks on the door, she tells him she is all right and sends him away. The young man, who is Warren Jarvis, of Kentucky, comes out of his hiding place, and the Princess, for the first time, notices his wound. She is moved to sympathy and showers him with questions as to what has occurred. Jarvis tells her about a Kentucky feud between his family and another named Markham. He says he left Kentucky to avoid the feudists, but encountered one of them in the hotel, which explains the shots. The Princess declares she will help him, and then asks the stranger question, "Are you afraid of ghosts?" Jarvis laughs, but grows solemn when the Princess tells him she has dangerous work for him to do. She makes him swear allegiance, and creates him her "vassal." Then she tells him to get her trunk, which is going to be shipped to a steamship on which she sails to Spain the following day. First Jarvis tells her to telephone to his servant, Rusty Snow, a negro. The servant is instructed to procure passage for himself and Jarvis in the ship. Jarvis then prepares to get into the trunk, but first begins to question the Princess about herself.

Now go on with the story.

Julius' Happy Day

"IT'S perfectly awful and I don't understand it!" said Julius' mother, applying a very dainty handkerchief to her eyes.

"Disgraceful!" said Julius' father, emphatically.

Julius stood with a hangdog look, his eyes on the dusty stubbed footgear that had started out earlier in the day as carefully blacked shoes. There was a tear in his blouse and several rents were in his trousers and a general atmosphere of disrepute clung to him.

"He seems perfectly possessed," went on his mother, "to escape to the alley and hobnob with those young ragamuffins who make it their headquarters! Goodness knows, I wish we could move away from here! I had Arthur over especially to play with him! What did you do with Arthur?"

"Aw!" said Julius, with a growl. "I ditched him early! He's no good, honest, ma—he's a sissy!"

"Meaning that he is a gentlemanly, well-bred boy!" flashed Julius' mother. "You see?" to Julius' father, in despair.

His Games.

"What manner of amusements interested you in the alley?" inquired his father judicially of Julius.

"Aw," said Julius, "I met Fatty an' he said the gang was up in the barn where Lilkins keeps his horses, an' we went there and played train robbers till Slicker, he fell down the hole where the hay comes down, an' I fell down, too, an' Lilkins he comes in an' says we've broken the back of his best horse by falling on it, through the hole, and he'll be darned if——"

"Julius!"

"Well, you ast me, didn't you?" demanded Julius indignantly. "Anyhow, he said he'd be—that—if he'd stand for it, an' Fatty he yells like everything because he hasn't any parents an' lives with his aunt, and she's away workin' all day. So Lilkins can't do anything to him, I guess.

"An' I told Lilkins he didn't dast, 'cause we wouldn't buy any more groceries from him if he did, an' I wuzn't doing anything anyhow. An' it was an awful old horse. An' then Ginger—his father has a plumbing shop three blocks down—he said they was a pony in his barn, and we went and hitched it to a cart and then we drove."

"Drove!" shrieked Julius' mother. "With all the automobiles on the streets and everything! Where did you drive?"

"I dunno," said Julius. "We had a nice drive. We went clear over on the west side across the river. Only a policeman he said he'd arrest us if we kept stopping in the middle of the street to fix the harness. We had to tie it together. An' a lot of automobiles got backed up behind us and they were fierce, the way they talked! Ginger, he sassed them back.

"'Who d'you think owns this horse?' he said to 'em when they told us to get out of the way. 'Guess it's got a right on the road if it does eat oats instead of gasoline, smarty!' An' I saw the Mrs. Kingman you know in her electric——"

"Oh!" moaned Julius' mother. "To have the Kingsmans see my child in the grasp of a policeman and with those little ragged——"

"A man he got mad," Julius proceeded, "because the pony ate some bananas from the back of his push cart an' Fatty threw a stone at him and he caught me and shook me something fierce an' another policeman he said, 'Now, go on out of here, you kids, quick, before I run you in!' An' a boy on a bicycle got in our way coming home an' it was his fault, because we yelled at him and Ginger thought the pony'd broke his leg, but it was only skinned. It was a second-hand bicycle anyhow and we got away because the pony went faster than the boy could walk. I guess he'd skinned his leg, too.

No Bell.

"The street car that hit us only pushed us sideways and tipped us over an' it was the motorman's fault, because he didn't ring no bell. Anyhow, I didn't hear any. An' Ginger's father was awful mad. He was waiting for us. He said the pony's people only rented room in the barn an' it would be a wonder if they didn't sue him for damages. What's damages? I don't know what he did to Ginger, but Ginger yelled awful an' I came away then any how.

"An' it wasn't my fault that Mrs. Button's clothesline broke when I ran through her yard an' hit it. They didn't tie it up tight enough. An' the girl was mad when she saw the clothes all down! Honest, I didn't do nothin' father!"

"Julius," said his father, with awful sternness, "you march straight upstairs to bed, this minute!"

"Wh-what do you think?" quavered Julius' mother in despair as her son disappeared.

"I think," said Julius' father, with a broad grin, "that Julius had a good time for once in his life. However, it might be well to unload his superabundant activity on a summer resort farm this summer. Let's look up one somewhere."

The Bishop's Story.

Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak fourteen years before in London and remembered only one thing he said.

"He told me that fourteen years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head and was picked up dead.

"He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received this reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because as she passed my window in her fall I heard her say, "Now for a bump!"'"

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Christine Norman's Rules for the "Too-Thin" Woman

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

CHRISTINE NORMAN is exactly the sort of girl you would be if you could choose—pretty, sweet, gracious, alert, honest with herself and sympathetic with all of life. And if you have seen "Peg o' My Heart" you would never guess it!

In that play she has to play the part of a girl whose cold, self-centered, unsympathetic nature makes life a burden for the dear little Irish cousin we all love—and all honor to the histrionic ability of the girl who portrays coldness and snobbishness so convincingly that the interviewer's heart sank at the thought of a chat with her. Exit the girl of the play, and enter Christine Norman and joy to the heart of the interviewer at the same time.

Miss Norman's manner is as wholesome and unaffected as her own pretty pink and white room, and her mind is as interestingly many sided as the vast array of vastly differing books that are so prevalent all about her room.

"Now, how could I have a beauty secret?" she laughed. Look at her pictures and you will sympathize with my thought that Heaven and the good fairies had been so kind that "beauty secrets" were scarcely needed.

"However, I have a very original trouble for these days," she went on, cheerily. "I have the unusual horror of getting too thin! Once I did become terribly thin—and I had to go on the milk cure, nothing but milk for seven weeks, and quarts and quarts a day all that time. Even now whenever I start losing I proceed to drink eight glasses of milk a day. Honestly now, aren't curves much prettier than angles? And when cubist types go out of style and women want to get back to normal I recommend the milk cure to their attention.

An Easy Cure.

"A milk cure is an easy thing for me to take, because I am not a particularly carnivorous animal. I believe firmly in eating vegetables in great quantities and eating very sparingly of meat. A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal for hot weather diet.

"But I really don't believe in extremes—enough sleep—eight hours for a woman who is using up her supply of energy in the strain of brain work; enough nourishing food, with chocolates most earnestly omitted; enough fresh air, enough play, and, above all, enough reading to keep you in touch with big thoughts, new ideas in the world's progress. With enough of all these things, sanely blended and leavened with ambition to find out what you can do and energy to do it, we ought all have the beauty of clean, sane health, at any rate, ought we not?"

Answering question with question, I queried: "But for the beauty that allures the eye, don't you think we can all cultivate a bit of that over and above our natural dower?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Norman, "I think we can, and we should, too. Now, after she is about 22, almost any woman's facial muscles begin to sag a bit. If she can afford a dollar a week, I think every woman should go to a good masseuse and have those muscles trained upward again. If not, I think one treatment and a careful observation of methods are well worth while. Then the purchase of a jar of good cold cream, and the woman can start muscle building on her own account.

"Some people think it so foolish, almost immoral, to try to save beauty. Now, would these very people wear suits that needed pressing and sponging and braid sewed on? Well, I think we should keep or bodies in at least as good trim as our clothes—clean and in the pink of well-cared-for condition.

Easily Acquired.

"Then if we are as sensible about learning what to do with our looks as we are about proudly developing any talent we happen to have, a reputation for beauty's charming sister—attractiveness—ought to be easily acquired. I know a very pretty girl who sometimes looks attractive quite accidentally, but only sometimes. She simply does not know whether her hair should be parted over her left eye or worn pompadour. She has no idea whether her hats should have tall quills in front or droopy bows at the back. A mirror, a little common sense and proper independence of fads would teach her the simple solution to what ought not be a puzzle at all.

"But truly, I don't think we can be a beautiful race until we give the generations beauty to inherit. Heredity to give you strength and power and beauty is the greatest beauty secret of all I am sure. Because with a fine heredity a healthy body is almost assured, and a fine mind and a stroug character will be present too, and with these things the finest type of beauty will be easy to realize. Surely you think so, too?" concluded Christine Norman, lifting a rose-flushed face lit with great earnest eyes and pulsing with vitality that makes of her red-gold hair a beautiful aureole.

And surely we all must think that the finest type of beauty is a thing we all may strive toward—a healthy body glowing with spirit and soul.

NO CHANCE FOR FRANK AS 1914 TURTLE BOSS

By Jo Williams.

MEMPHIS, July 10.—Stick a pin here. Charley Frank will not manage the 1914 Memphis club. Whether Bill Bernhard will be returned or not is a matter yet to be determined. The moral cinch is, however, that if a change is made it will in no way concern the present president-manager of the New Orleans Pelicans. It is quite probable that Frank will not be back at New Orleans next season, but as to his assuming charge of the Turtles there is about as much truth in the report as there are red corpuscles in a Bermuda onion.

Perhaps the foregoing needs explanation. When the Pelicans hit the larded lane some five weeks ago, that ubiquitous person, "One in the know," hustled through with the information that Frank, tiring of his New Orleans investment, had made arrangements with the Memphis club president whereby he was to succeed Bernhard at the close of the current campaign.

The yarn originated in Birmingham. Immediately and without undue hesitation it was given the well-known and emphatic pooh-pooh, locally. Yet it refused to wither and fade away, as is the tragic wont of the average canard. Mique Finn strengthened it by offering to wager a Stetson that the rumored change would come to pass. Mique refused to state where he got his tip. "Just linger around and ye shall receive the ocular proof," was the Celt's evasive retort.

Finn and his downtrodden slaves of baildom spent an off day in this city, and right away the Frank vs. Bernhard affair was revived.

* * *

WHEREUPON, Mr. Coleman, who is connected with the local club in the vague capacity of majority stockholder, president, traveling secretary and general overseer of players and premises, clutched the occasion to unburden himself of large quantities of free and forensic speech, a peculiarity not uncommon with ball magnates. Among other things, Mr. Coleman delivered: "So far I have not given the advisability of changing managers a thought. I can not say just now whether or not Bernhard will be with us again next season. He may and he may not. But one thing is certain. Charley Frank will not be Bill's successor, if one is named. There is absolutely no chance, and those interested in the matter may rest assured that my word is final. Where and from whom the ridiculous yarn originated is a mystery to me. The report that I have been negotiating with Frank for weeks in regard to a change is a fabrication of the veriest sort. Neither Frank nor myself has ever discussed the matter. Indeed, I doubt if Frank himself ever dreamed of returning here. The Dutchman will never manage a Memphis ball club as long as I am in charge."

So much for the "well-founded report."

$4,000 Offered by Sutton for E. Brown

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Larry Sutton, scout for the Brooklyn National League club, who has been in Nashville for the past ten days looking over Southern League players, announced last night that he had made an offer of $4,000 to the Montgomery club for Pitcher Elmer Brown for delivery at the end of this season.

Sutton was so impressed with the masterly game pitched by E. Brown against the Vols last week that he immediately opened negotiations for the brilliant Billiken slabman. His first offer was $3,500, but he willingly met the above price of $4,000, which was set by Manager Dobbs.

"Elmer Brown is not only by long odds the best pitcher I have seen in the Southern League this year," said the Brooklyn scout, "but he is one of the most promising boys I have seen in many seasons."

Up to the time of Sutton's departure for Cincinnati the deal for Brown had not been closed, but it was stated by Sutton that he had urged President Ebbets, of the Dodgers, to lose no time in landing the mainstay of the Montgomery pitching staff.

Lupus or Any Other Skin Disease Will Go Skulking Away If You Use S. S. S.

A tiny pimple spreads to the side of the face and often covers the cheeks and bridge of the nose. It is very destructive to the tissues of the skin. No external treatments will overcome it, as the cause of lupus is from impurities in the blood supply. The only known method of cure is to get the blood supply under the control of S. S. HUGGINS BEST OF PLAYERS IN TENN. TOURNEY

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 10.—The finals in the Tennessee State championship tennis tournament now in progress in this city are expected to be reached Friday afternoon. In that case the championship match between the winners of the tourney and Carlton Y. Smith, of Atlanta, present State champion, will be fought out Saturday. Local sharks predict that the match will narrow down to either Huggins or Smith of Nashville as the winner of the present tourney.

Charles Rodgers of Knoxville former champion, was eliminated Wednesday afternoon by Huggins in two straight sets, 7-5, 6-1. Rodgers had previously defeated Cleage of Knoxville, and Foster, also of this city.

Chattanooga has only one entry, Alex Guerry, while Nashville is represented by Parrish, Caldwell, Huggins and Smith.

Some excellent matches have been pulled off thus far during the tourney, Smith of Nashville defeated Wester of Kansas City in a beautiful match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

By defeating Rodgers and Lowry of this city, both crack players, Huggins is favorite as the winner. Much interest has been manifested in the tourney and large crowds have been in attendance each day.

RIVERS HITS MILKMAN; NOW HE'S IN TROUBLE

VENTURA, CAL., July 10.—Joe Rivers, lightweight pugilist, must appear in court here July 16 to answer a charge of having broken the jaw of a milkman who recently disputed Rivers' right to the road while the pugilist was driving his motor car. Rivers' bond was fixed at $500.

PASTIMING.

When you pay your money to see a stunt athletic,
And you sit upon a sunny bleacher seat,
And you see a stunt that's awfully pathetic,
It is time for you to raise your voice and bleat.

When the players spend the afternoon in stalling,
And in wishing that the game had not begun,
And the manager persists in vainly bawling,
The rooter's life is not a happy one.

We note by the papers that several hundred persons clamored outside the Cracker club's office to get their money back on Fourth of July. This shows that the birth rate has increased to 120 per hour.

If the Atlanta management is endeavoring to make itself unpopular there is evidence that said management is headed in that direction at the rate of approximately 8,000 miles per hour.

In an indirect way we note that Tom O'Rourke has been affected by the recent heat. Tom has agreed to become manager of Carl Morris.

When one reads the report that one wrestler choked another half to death, one deplores the fact that he stopped so soon.

If those surgeons who cut out Marty O'Toole's appendix will only cut out his wildness, one Fred Clarke will be much obliged.

If the Athletics could only play the Yanks all season their average would be .996⅔, or thereabouts.

Joe Jackson still leads the American League in batting. This is due to the fact that he never has ruined his eyesight reading literature.

FODDER FOR FANS

Rube Marquard, of the Giants, is pitching in his old-time form again. He twirled the Giants to their fourteenth consecutive victory, allowing but four hits. The best any of the Cubs got off him was a two-bagger.

* * *

"Babe" Adams, of the Pirates' pitching staff, allowed the Phillies but one clean hit, while the Quakers used up four pitchers trying to beat Pittsburg. Their efforts were useless, for the Phillies were shut out.

* * *

By being beaten by the Reds the Brooklyn Dodgers reduced the gap separating them from the second division in the National League. But 14 points now separate the Dodgers from the Pirates, the latter being leaders of the second division.

* * *

The New York Yankees were the only Eastern team which did not win in the West yesterday.

Pitcher Frank Harrington, of the Lynn club, of the New England League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Reds for $4,000.

Dauss, of the Detroit Tigers, beats the Washington Senators as often as he goes against them. He has met the Senators three times and has beaten them three times.

Umpire Hank O'Day, veteran National League arbitrator, is seriously ill in a Chicago sanitarium.

Although Cleveland outhit Philadelphia, the latter won because of the Naps' conservative base-running.

Honus Wagner, the hard hitting shortstop of the Pirates, nearly cracked a rib laughing when he heard the report that he is all in as a regular. Honus says he will be back in his old form when his injured knee mends.

CRACKER STAKE WILL BE RUN FRIDAY NIGHT

IN the belief that "Tex" Richards will be no match for the other Motordrome stars in a long race, Manager Noon Hudson has scheduled a big 7-mile feature for Friday night. It will be the final heat of the Cracker Sweepstakes. Manager Bill Smith, of the Atlanta club, will start the race and it will go seven miles, which is further than any race has gone in Atlanta this year.

A 5-mile race about marks the limit of a motorcycle sprinter's distance. He can stand up for five miles pretty well. After that time there is no chance. Machines and bodies give down under the strain.

In races over five miles it takes a different sort of rider. And in this long-distance stuff Shields and Lockner ought to star. They are two of the greatest endurance stars in the world. They proved it when they won the famous 24-hour race, the most grueling contest ever staged at a motordrome. Of course, it was a team event and the men were on and off the track at all times, but it was the most awful test of endurance to which a motor rider was ever put. This 7-mile stuff ought to suit Lockner and Shields to perfection.

Of course, Richards does not necessarily have it all his own way, even in the shorter races. McNeil's J. A. P. went out again Tuesday night, this time with a couple of bolts missing from his magneto. And Graves' new Excelsior did not prove to be running right.

McNeil swears that never before did he have such luck as this season. He claims all 1913 honors as the Jinx Kid; but he alleges that he has never before been the victim of so many mischances. He believes he has changed his luck at last, and at any rate he has taken every possible precaution against accidents.

RINGSIDE NOTES

It looks very much as if Los Angeles fans are to see a heavyweight bout some time next month. Tom McCarey, coast promoter, is trying to stage a Gunboat Smith-Arthur Pelky match, and has already secured Smith's consent for such a fight. McCarey is now dickering with Tommy Burns, manager for Pelky.

* * *

Jeff O'Connell, the veteran featherweight, who recently was defeated by Matty McCue, will meet Freddie Enock in a six-round battle at Aurora, Ill., on July 17.

* * *

Kid Pusky, local featherweight, is after a match with any 122-pounder in Atlanta. Pusky is particularly anxious to get on with Kid Young or Charlie Lee. J. P. Ellis, manager of Pusky, says he will give either boy a $100 side bet. Ellis can be reached at 30 Clifton Street, Kirkwood, Ga., phone Decatur 226.

* * *

Reports from New Orleans state that Frankie Russell and Johnny Lore are in great shape for their twenty-round tussle in the Pelican City Sunday afternoon. Russell and Lore recently met in a ten-round battle, with the latter having a slight shade.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion of the world, says he will be ready to defend his title on Labor Day. His stomach, which has been bothering him for several weeks, is again in shape. His opponent will probably be Kid Williams, and the pair will most likely don the gloves in Tom McCarey's arena at Vernon, Cal.

* * *

A return bout, this time of ten rounds, between "Muggsy" McGraw and Addie Brennan would draw a capacity house. McGraw is now taking boxing lessons from Jim Corbett, former heavyweight champion.

* * *

The National Sporting Club of London, where Bombardier Wells is a big favorite, hunted the British Isle for an easy opponent for the Englishman and found him in the person of Patsy Mahoney. Of course, Wells won.

Wonder what Billy Nolan, the bounced manager of Willie Ritchie, thinks of the lightweight's easy victory over Joe Rivers. It sure was a glorious Fourth for Willie.

* * *

Leach Cross is still on the coast, undecided whether to remain there in hopes of getting on with Willie Ritchie or to jump over to New York for some easy ten-round money. McCarey is trying to get the champion for a Labor Day date with the Easterner. Should Ritchie refuse, Joe Rivers may get the match.

* * *

Marcel Thomas, the French welterweight, is in Philadelphia trying to get on with some boys of his division. The lack of good 142-pound boys on this side makes it hard to find a suitable opponent for him.

* * *

Eddie Campi has asked McCarey to match him with the winner of the Williams-Ledoux bout on July 15. Campi has already defeated Ledoux.

* * *

Tom Tortorich is still after Willie Ritchie's signature to a set of articles to meet Jack Britton. He has offered $20,000 for the title go.

In four days he pitched four complete games and finished another—36 innings—in which he struck out 33 men in the 36 innings and allowed 21 hits, which netted his opponents seven runs.

UNCLE SAM TO HELP TOURING BALL TEAMS

By James Clarkson.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The United States Government has decided to take recognition of the fact that the Chicago White Sox and New York Giants are going to take a tour of the world during the fall and winter months. A letter to that effect has reached President Comiskey's office.

Now, when you come to study a little, than means a whole lot to the interested parties of that wonderful tour, on which the performers of Comiskey's world-famous White Sox and John McGraw's always fighting Giants are to show to the other civilized nations of the world what a wonderful pastime baseball really is.

Callahan Called on Bryan.

When the White Sox played in Washington during their Eastern invasion early in June, Manager Jimmy Callahan called on William Jennings Bryan. The call was for the express purpose of interesting the Secretary of State in the contemplated trip of the baseball outfit. Colonel Bryan has never been much of a student of baseball—in fact, he inquired of the surprised Callahan whom the White Sox represented. He also wanted to know where McGraw's Giants hailed from. He forgot to ask whether or not all of McGraw's men were huge of size.

Wilson Approves of Plan.

After the short interview Callahan left the Secretary's office, and while he was treated courteously, he was none too favorably impressed. He had an idea. "If I could only see the big boss—President Wilson—I might be able to get better satisfaction," thought Cal. To make a long story very short, Cal was accorded the interview with the President and the Executive informed him that he would not only do all in his power to make the trip a success, but that he believed in it and he personally hoped it would terminate as expected.

Bryan Writes to Callahan.

Yesterday we learned from Commy that he had recently received a letter from Secretary Bryan. When asked what news the letter brought, if any, Commy stated that Mr. Bryan had written him most cordially concerning the proposed trip. Furthermore, he requested Commy to send him, as soon as possible, the itinerary of the trip. Once he gets that, he has promised to notify the American Consuls in the various cities to be visited to give all the help possible to the visit of the Sox-Giant combine. So, after all, it will be seen that Cal's short visit to President Wilson last month was not merely a press stunt. "With the old U. S. Government in favor of the trip and throwing favors in our way, we should show a lot of speed in the foreign lands," said Cal yesterday when referring to the Bryan letter.

Crackers Should Wallop Gulls

Finn's Team in Hopeless Slump

By Percy H. Whiting.

NOW comes the tug of war! The Mobile Gulls are here for three games with the Crackers. The Gulls are in a slump. Of their last twelve outs they have lost eight.

Every game the locals can take away from Mike Finn's team is all clear profit.

It is reported that the Gulls are crabbing at each other and quarreling with umpires, opposing players and even with the genial Mike Finn himself.

Their hearts are "broke."

Of course, they are a scrapping club, even in a rout, and they will fight along and win many a game. But if ever the Crackers had a chance to make money off the league leaders now is the time.

* * *

THE Gulls' slump will never stop this side of fourth or fifth place. Mark the prediction. For they've quit and they are quarreling among themselves.

In a recent interview Finn stated that he would not strengthen the club.

"How can we?" Finn is reported to have said, "We have no money to strengthen with."

True it is that the Gulls, after making an amazing showing, aren't draw ing at all. They don't have any attendance on the home grounds. The Gulls' fans believe their team is sure to win a pennant and they have quit caring a hang.

If ever proof were needed that Mobile is a hopeless baseball town it is forthcoming now. The town has quit worse than the team. In fact, it was the quitting of the fans, the lack of financial support and the knocking over defeats that finally got the Gulls on the run.

* * *

NOT since the year Newt Fisher won a pennant with an $11-team has any club that cost as little gone as high as the 1913 Gulls.

Finn probably established a precedent in perfecting a league-leading team with the cash expenditure of $2,000.

After the close of last year's race, Demaree was forwarded to the New York Giants for $10,000. Remaining on the twirling staff were Campbell, Berger and Cavet. For $5,000 Robertson was secured from the Indianapolis club, while Hogg was obtained for a small sum. Thus the twirling staff was rounded for a few shekels.

In the infield, Paulette, Starr and O'Dell were returned. Stock was shunted from the Giants in the Demaree trade. Thus the infield was perfected without an expenditure of a cent. The outfield, consisting of Jacobson, Robertson and Clark, was secured for a pittance. Jacobson was returned by the Giants at the beginning of the season for the price of recall in 1912. Robertson was grabbed from the Giants on an optional agreement, costing $500. Clark was the property of the Gulls, farmed out to the Texas League, and cost Mickey nothing. When Jackson was put out, McGill, gathered in the Gull fold at the opening of the season for the signing, was recalled from Pensacola. The catchers were grabbed without loosening a kopeck from the coffers, as Larry Brown was a free agent and Schmidt was obtained via the same route.

* * *

IF the Crackers can tear a hole in the shattered Gulls and do some damage to the Billikens next week they will pull out for the South with the prospects bright. They will have a hard trip ahead of them, but they will be right up in the running. Of course, the Southern trip is likely to mean a big slump. But when the club gets home again it ought to be near enough to the top to win a pennant.

The Crackers are back in there fighting again and that means trouble for any opposition.

JENNINGS STILL AN IDOL WITH DIAMOND FANS

By Sid C. Keener.

BACK in the days of 1907-1908-1909, Hughey Jennings was being lauded as the smartest of baseball generals. All around the circuit there was praise for the skipper of the Detroit Tigers. In a single season he developed a sixth-place it on top for three successive years in the American League.

But while the Tigers were prospering and folks spoke kind words to Hughey, he always replied:

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me. They're winning the games and I'm just one of them. You don't see me punching out a hit in the pinch or fooling the batter when he must be fooled."

He Had the Dope.

After three straight years of success and prosperity, the tide turned. They don't herald Jennings the greatest of all greats. In the eyes of the fans, Hughey is not such a brainy fellow any more.

But Jennings' statement came true. The remarks he gave out when the Tigers were winning the pennants can be renewed and show why the Tigers aren't the same terrors of the league.

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me!"

Why aren't the Tigers winning pennants like they did in 1907-1908-1909? The answer comes by comparing the team that won for the Tigers those years and the team Hughey Jennings is directing to-day.

The Old Stars Not There.

There's quite a difference in the class of the Detroit tribe now.

Among the important missing athletes are: Wild Bill Donovan, George Mullin, Tyrus Cobb, Eddie Summers, Davy Jones, Matty McIntyre, Jim Delehanty, Claude Rossman, Eddie Killian, Herman Schaefer, Charley O'Leary and possibly a few more.

In the places of these athletes who were stars of the first magniture at that time, are Bobby Veach, "Lefty" High, Oscar Vitt, Bill Louden, Texas Hall, John Dubuc, Zamloch, Clauss, House and a few more.

Jennings hasn't a pitcher who can go through a season and win 25 games and lose but 4, as "Wild Bill" did in 1907. Further, Eddie Summers, who used to beat the Athletics almost every time he pitched; Killian, who could halt the White Sox and Red Sox, and George Mullin, who won almost every time he took the hill, are gone and forgotten.

Even commanding a team that is down in the second division, Hughey Jennings remains an idol in baseball. His general character and make-up; his style of coaching; his personality; his way of arguments, not roughing and fighting with the umpires, continually have made Jennings such an idol.

He Used Smooth System.

It was the Jennings system that made Hughey popular with everybody. When he entered the American League he brought with him a new style. It was common on the diamond to see Fielder Jones, Clark Griffith, Jimmy Collins, Joe Cantillon and that kind rush up to the ump and kick up a rowdy fuss on every close decision.

Also, it was an every-day sight to see some managers bawl out the players during the course of the game. Jennings had a different system. He accepted the verdicts from the field official with an "All right, boys; let it go at that," and when one of his side turned a bad play, Hughey simply used to pat him on the back and say a kind word on the ball field.

Bisland Horns Into Hero Class

His Hit Wins Game for Crackers

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN these piping days when pennant aspirations are beating strongly in human and other breasts, a hero is born each day. To-day the laurel, the bay, the Richard K. Fox belt, or whatever insignia is proper for a Casablanca of the ball lot goes to Mr. Bisland, shortstopper of considerable renown. If the winning streak of the Crackers continues much longer, Bill Smith will have to search around for new hero material or crown the bat boy. For within the past two weeks there is hardly a Cracker who has not felt the touch of the accolade.

Mr. Bisland horned into the Leonidas class in the most approved and dramatic fashion. He was placed there by the generous and gentle Rube Kissinger, who hgured that Wally Smith had been acclaimed enough and it was time to let another's heart warm to the shouts of an admiring populace.

* * *

THE hero stuff was pulled in the fourth inning of yesterday's pastiming, which was about as good a spot as any. The battle with the Memphii had rocked along for three sessions without any tangible results. Kissinger was working his usual cool, heady game, and the Crackers did not look particularly formidable against his hurling.

In the fourth, though, things happened. Tommy Long opened with a measly pop back of first base, which Bill Abstein couldn't grab, and when the ball carromed with reverse English the right fielder scampered on for a two-base hit. Welchonce, to display his batting versatility, eased a bunt down the third base line and beat it out.

Alperman then cracked sharply to third. Ward messed the ball, but, to the surprise of the stands, Welchonce remained true and faithful to the first cushion and wouldn't budge, evidently thinking the ball had been caught on a line. How he thought so is the eighth wonder, but let it go at that. Alperman reached first, but as Welchonce was also there one of them had to move back to the bench.

Rudderham eeny-meeny-miny-moed and picked Welchonce for this duty. Bailey followed by striking out, but Alperman had swiped second during the whiffing.

As the formidable Smith approached the pan, Kissinger and Seabough held pow-wow and passed the third sacker.

* * *

BISLAND strode haughtily, but not too confidently, to the plate. Inasmuch as he hadn't registered in the hit column since the morning game of July 4, the fans were not altogether cheerful.

On the first one over, though, he hit high and far into right field, and Baerwald, who had been playing close to center, couldn't reach the pill. All those ahead of Bisland scampered in, and so did he when the peg to get him at third went to the grandstand. The laurel was immediately brought on.

With the single exception of Mr. Bisland's being present with the punch at the proper moment, the game was featureless, though Dent hurled in improved form. The score was 5 to 2.

Sports and Such

IT OCCASIONALLY HAPPENS that the races for the big league pennants are over when the halfway mark of the early July series is passed—and this looks like one of those occasions.

Even before the Fourth of July—as far back in the spring as could be definitely determined that Connie Mack's athletes were on the water wagon—it was generally conceded that the Athletics would win the American League championship. A glance at the standing of the clubs this morning will convince you that there are no urgent reasons for rearranging your dope.

About the same time it was also conceded that the Giants would win the National League row. Every one around here freely admitted it, but along about the first of June some of our best conceders were beginning to outline their alibis and try them out to have them already for accidents in the fall.

The events of the last week have taken a great weight off the minds of us prophets. The writer some five or six weeks ago casually remarked that the Phillies would blow as the Dodgers had done, and he was beginning to get a trifle scared. Now that they have tossed it they can probably be elliminated. For some reason or other the Phillies have never shown any resiliency in misfortune. The betting, when the park police are not looking, ought to be about 3 to 1 that they will never lead the league again before next spring.

The Giants are not in a position to lie down and take it easy—not to any extent. But McGraw has, by about 20 per cent, the best club in the league, and now that he has gained the lead there could be no excuse for his losing it, short of a railroad wreck—or another adventure out of his pugilistic class.

* * *

THE PHILLIES ARE somewhat like the Cleveland team in the American League, only more so. They have a splendid pitching staff, a smooth fielding machine, plenty of heavy artillery, and they ought to be formidable every step of the way. But for some reason or other they always peter out to a dreary finish.

* * *

THERE IS NOW SOME talk of matching Ad Brennan and Joe Tinker for the championship of the league. McGraw's claim for a return engagement on the ground that he was struck from behind has been thrown out, the difficulties in the way of getting a slam square on the beak from behind being manifold and manifest.

* * *

PROMOTER SPRINGER, of Vancouver, says that he has about cinched a fight between Freddie Welch and Champion Ritchie for September. The thought of the purse he must have offered to overcome the double reluctance of Welch and Ritchie to engage in anything as rough as boxing is appalling.

* * *

CHESS IS SURELY AN uncertain game. Here, while all of you thought that Chajes had a cinch, Dr. Adair beat him with a Ruy Lopez. Just think of it!

EARL MACK ACCEPTS 31 CHANCES IN SINGLE GAME

RALEIGH, N. C., July 10.—Earl Mack, son of Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, is believed to have made a new world's record for chances accepted in a ball game here yesterday between the Raleigh and Durham clubs of the Carolina League. Mack accepted 31 chances, 29 put-outs and two assists, without the least sign of an error. The game went for 18 innings and was won by Raleigh, 4 to 3. Young Mack is manager and first baseman of the Raleigh club.

MILWAUKEE, July 10.—Outfielder Larry Chappelle, of the Milwaukee club, will be sold at auction here July 15. Only a few of the big league clubs have already bid for the youngster. Both Chicago clubs, Detroit, Brooklyn, Cincinnati and Cleveland are in the market. It is said that $15,000 has been offered for the youngster.

PAT GRAHAM, EX-CRACKER, SIGNED BY CHATTANOOGA

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 10. Catcher Stanley Graham, formerly of Atlanta, was signed by Manager Elberfeld yesterday. He replaces Fitzgerald, who will be returned to Detroit.

U. S. TEAM MEETS GERMANS IN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND, July 10.—The American and German tennis representatives clash to-day in the second round of the Dwight F. Davis international lawn tennis cup matches. Although the weather has not been at all favorable for tennis, Harold H. Hackett, captain of the United States teams, says the American players are in good form. The Germans are complaining of the climate. Yesterday's draw is looked upon as being favorable to the American players.

Froitzheim is Germany's strongest singles player, so it is considered just as well for the American team that he should meet Maurice E. McLaughlin, America's champion, in the first day's play. The showing made by Kreutzer, of Germany, in the all English championship, hardly justifies the belief that he can beat R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia.

Although the Americans are the favorites for the doubles match, they must be in the best form to beat Germany's doubles representatives, Rahe and Kleinscroth.

BUD ANDERSON WON'T BE ABLE TO BOX FOR MONTHS

LOS ANGELES, July 10.—With Bud Anderson in the hospital and not likely to be in a condition to go into the ring for several months, the prospects for a local lightweight match simmers down to a Cross-Rivers battle apparently. Of course, the Harry Trendall match with Cross appears all but closed, and it will be a good one but for a date a little later in the season. Rivers and Cross would be the biggest drawing card possible.

FRANK GOALBY SOLD TO ROANOKE UNDER OPTION

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Frank Goaldby, former second baseman of the Vols, has been sold to the Roanoke club under an optional agreement. He may be recalled at any time his services are needed. Goalby, in a recent series in Mobile, was badly spiked in the hand by Dave Robertson, and will not leave to join the Roanoke club until the wound heals. His fielding while with Nashville was brilliant, but his batting was very weak.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Rain stepped in and halted the twenty-mile championship motorcycle race at the Brighton Beach Motordrome here last night before the riders had covered two miles. Ray Veditz was leading when the race was declared off.

The team of Chappelle and Fisher is the favorite in the 100-mile race to be held here to-night.

JIMMY ARCHER INJURES FINGER; OUT FOR WEEKS

NEW YORK, July 10.—Jimmy Archer, the crack catcher of the Cubs, who was disabled by a foul tip from Chief Meyers' bat in Tuesday's game, was more seriously injured than at first supposed. It was thought he had merely suffered from a split finger, but when a surgeon got to work on the backstop he found that the middle finger of the right hand not only was split, but also dislocated at the middle joint.

It will be several weeks before Archer will again get into the game.

FARMERS WIN BY CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Mutual Producing and Distributing Societies Get Credit for Vast Increase in Crops.

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM.
Ohio State Senator, Member of American Agricultural Commission, and Secretary of the Production Group.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 10.—Thus far we have passed 60 days studying the various principles underlying the success of European agriculture. By dividing into sections and groups we have covered every phase of agriculture and studied the best methods pursued in every country in Europe.

Without question, co-operative credit and co-operative producing and distributing societies have accomplished a great deal for European farmers during the last 25 years. The reaching of scientific agriculture colleges in short course schools and on farms during the growing season has had much to do with the vast increase in crop production. Encouragement by the various Governments has been another important factor.

Interest in Every Country.

In every country visited a strong realization of the importance of agriculture is manifested. While methods differ in various countries the same underlying principles are found everywhere.

Highly important principles are the conservation and utilization of every natural resource, the scientific application of manures and chemical fertilizers and the great systems of co-operative credits, which in reality make all the other principles operative.

I have visited Italy, Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. In each of these countries we found some special lines of work more advanced than in the other countries. But when we group these special lines and attempt to apply them to our own country we find one thing lacking in America, namely co-operative organizations.

The intensive methods of farming employed in Italy are applicable to many sections of country. The Goverment policy of helping farmers to own their own homes is bringing many Italians back from America.

Swiss Farmers in Union.

In Switzerland more than one-third of all farmers belong to co-operative organizations that are banded into a central organization entitled the Swiss Farmers' Union, which can control the Government policy. Through these organizations the farmers sell all their products and buy all their necessities.

Co-operative credit and distribution societies have played an important part in the rapid development of Germany's agriculture during the past 40 years. Germany produces more than twice as much to the acre as the United States does and from land that has been farmed for centuries. It is now up to us to double our production.

Denmark has made a world-wide reputation through her co-operative exporting societies by guaranteeing every egg and every pound of butter and bacon. Each egg is stamped with the date when laid and the producer's number is recorded in the National Federation's register. Any complaint may be traced directly back to the real producer. Here again farmers have the controlling voice in Government and Denmark is prospering immensely.

Holland's Cheese Fame.

Holland, as a dairy country, has attained fame for her fine cheeses. Her Government exacts a high standard of excellency by rigid enforcement of the pure food laws.

In France the work of the Ministry of Agriculture through co-operative credit and production societies is rapidly coming to the front. When the final report of this commission is made the French methods of co-operative credit will receive deserved consideration.

In America we need long-time credit, conservation of the soils, fertility and improved methods of distribution.

WILSON CURRENCY BILL IS ATTACKED

Measure Gives Politicians Control Over $10,000,000,000 Banking Power, Says Financier.

DULUTH, MINN., July 10.—George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial Bank of Chicago, the second largest bank of the nation, to-day assailed as revolutionary the Wilson administration currency bill in a speech before the Minnesota Bankers' Association.

"We are confronted with a plan," he asserted, "which proposes to compel the banks to turn over to a political committee virtual control of about $10,000,000,000 of banking power, the result of 50 years' conscientious labor on the part of officers of 7,500 National banks in the United States."

His chief objection was based upon what he termed the political control over such great banking power. He saw demoralizing influences in the proposed plan of decentralization of money and credits. While he believed in Federal supervision, he said it should be regulatory, not administrative.

"I claim," he concluded, "that the amount of bank notes issued should be determined by the requirements of business rather than by guess."

Acid in Oconee Kills 10,000 Pounds Fish

ATHENS, July 10.—Judge Brand has issued a temporary injunction restraining the Empire Chemical Company from pouring waste acid in a branch that empties into the Oconee River, a few miles below Athens. Ten thousand pounds of dead fish have been taken from the river. People living along the banks find the odors almost unbearable. State Game Warden Jesse Mercer has been summoned to investigate.

The temporary injunction will hold until June 28, when a hearing will be given the company.

A charge of murder has been placed against young Brown. He claims he committed the deed in self-defense, using a pocketknife when Hawkins threatened him with arrest.

ATLANTANS SCORE TAX ON FUTURES

Chamber of Commerce Files Protest With U. S. Senators on Cotton Tariff Amendment.

A protest against the passage of the amendment to the tariff bill pending in the United States Senate has been made by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The measure taxes cotton futures dealings.

The protest was made at a meeting of the Atlanta body Wednesday afternoon. Letters were sent to the two Georgia Senators and to Congressman William Schley Howard, urging them to oppose the "rider."

F. M. Inman was chairman of a special committee which handled the matter. He made the report recommending that the chamber go on record against the bill. Other members of the committee were T. A. Nicolson, J. S. Akers and E. S. Ehney.

Objection to the bill was based on the charge that it would eliminate the cotton exchange, would throw the farmers into the hands of the spinners, thus forcing the price of cottor down.

The members of the committee held that it would do away with the cotton merchant who deals directly with the farmer and country merchant, in that it would prevent him from using future contracts.

Products Exhibit Committee Named

Negotiations toward renting or buying a home for Atlanta-made goods reached the committee stage Wednesday when the Chamber of Commerce appointed Brooks Morgan, V. H. Kriegshaber, Bolling Jones and J. K. Orr to decide whether buying, leasing, or renting with the privilege of purchasing presented the best advantages.

The three propositions were embraced in offers considered Wednesday. It was intimated the committee favored leasing with the option of purchasing.

PITTSBURG, PA., July 10.—A well-equipped gambling den beneath the street the main entrance to which was a big city sewer was raided by the police late last night. Twenty-two men were captured as well as a large amount of money and gambling paraphernalia.

When the police swooped down on the players consternation reigned, but as there was only one manner of egress or exit, the entire crowd was captured.

REORGANIZATION IS ASSURED AT STATE FARM

Board to Ask Assembly for Funds to Retain $30,000 Federal Appropriation.

GRIFFIN, GA., July 10.—The board of directors of the State Experiment Station Wednesday voted to comply with the suggestions of National Inspector Allen and to petition the Assembly for an appropriation sufficient to carry on all physical work of the station. With this in view, a committee, consisting of J. J. Flint, J. D. Price, J. H. Mobley, J. W. McWhorter and R. J. H. DeLoach, was appointed.

Should the Legislature provide funds, the $30,000 Federal appropriation will be used exclusively in making scientific experiments from which increased knowledge may be gained by the farmers, as the national department specifies.

Director DeLoach also announced his intention of reorganizing the station for experimental farm work rather than for a model farm. A new feature will be a department of animal husbandry, of which Professor Perry VanEwing, recently connected with experimental farms in Ohio and Kansas, will be the head. The appointment was made Wednesday.

Dr. E. W. Allen, inspector of the National Agricultural Department, presented his plan of reorganization and the terms of the National Government in regard to the $30,000 appropriation.

Those present at the board meeting were J. D. Price, Chancellor D. C. Barrow, Judge J. J. Flint, J. W. McWhorter, J. H. Mobley, R. C. Neely, J. W. Andrews, F. R. Mann, M. G. Gamble, W. H. Henderson and Dr. E. W. Allen, of the National Department of Agriculture.

Much to their surprise, however, a number of friends surprised them by appearing suddenly and offering congratulations. There was nothing to do but confess.

The marriage was performed by the Rev. John F. Purser, 204 Lee Street.

38 BABIES GIVEN FREE MILK EACH DAY

All Work in Campaign Is Done by Committee Members to Cut Expenses.

Thirty-eight babies, whose mothers are unable to purchase proper food for them, are being supplied daily with pure, fresh milk, bought from the fund raised by the Atlanta Mothers' Congress. Every day brings names of new babies who require assistance from the milk fund.

The campaign is being waged at a minimum expense, all the work being done by members of the committee. A committee of young girls has been of great aid.

A check for $25 was received Thursday morning from a prominent Atlanta woman, this being the second check for that amount contributed by a society leader.

Milk bottles, placed in the downtown stores, to receive contributions from the public, are each day adding a small sum to the fund, and individuals are mailing donations to Mrs. John Rowlett, chairman of the committee. Still, more money is needed.

"No one realizes the great field that is open in Atlanta for this work," declared Mrs. Rowlett at her home, 186 East Pine Street, Thursday. "There are hundreds of babies who do not get proper nourishment. So far but few contributions have come in. We need money if the work is to be continued."

One Thing We Do Not Claim For It

That it is a new discovery—it is not. There is nothing new about it except the wonderful new cures it is making daily. The medicine itself has been in use over a half century, and to introduce and keep before the public a family remedy for 50 years is no little task. The reason we have been able to do it is because the merit is there. It has only been accomplished by a strict adherence to the original formula, using only the very best roots, herbs, barks and gums that nature affords for the relief of the many distresses the human flesh is heir to.

To-day we find but few physicians who claim that minerals are just as good and efficient as are the roots, herbs, etc. You know that epsom salts will act, but the mere fact of acting does not mean cure, and is not what constitutes the remedial virtue of ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS; but it is the perfect combination of nature's remedies that enter its composition for the relief of Indigestion, Constipation, Intestinal and Gastric Disorders, Torpidity of the Liver, Colic, Cramp Colic, Pains in Back, Hips, Shoulders and Sides, Neuralgia, Ovarian Pains, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Rheumatism and all Nervous Complaints.

Now, we want to know every reader of this paper that is suffering with any of the above troubles. We guarantee to help you. Come to see us at Coursey & Munn's, where we are demonstrating this great tonic. If you live out of town, send us an order and we will return your money if you are not satisfied. $1.00 a bottle, $5.00 for 6 bottles. Coursey & Munn's, corner Broad and Marietta.

LIVERPOOL BUYING STEADIES COTTON

Shorts Cover, Fearing High Temperatures and Boll Weevil in Texas—Sales Light.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Old positions were well sustained at the opening of the cotton market to-day and started off 3 points higher, while new crop months were to 2 points lower than Wednesday's final.

New positions were affected by cloudy weather in the eastern half of the belt, suggesting possible showers. Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm. Liverpool bought considerable cotton on the weather prospects. Brokers representing large spot houses were good buyers of new crop positions. The buying was general and offerings light. After the market shaded a few points from the initial range prices rallied some 3 to 5 points from the previous close, where prices were firmly maintained throughout the early session, with the exception of July, which fell back to 12.17, last night's closing quotation.

Strength of Liverpool was attributed chiefly to short covering on fear of an American advance on high temperatures over the triple holiday there.

The official weather for yesterday showed temperature average 102 in Oklahoma and 100 in Texas, with six station recording 100, seven stations 102, seven stations 104 and one station 106. Today's early record shows it is cooler in Oklahoma, and Sherman, Tex., reports drizzling rain.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 12.17; August, 12.17; October, 11.54; January, 11.42.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: July, 12.41; August, 12.01; October, 11.56; January, 11.56.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Liverpool came in as due, and quoted spots 5 points higher; sales 8,000 bales. Cables reported the market sustained by short covering before the holidays, fearing advance in New York on the circulation of reports of high temperatures. Liverpool will be closed to-morrow and Saturday on account of the King of England's visit there.

Houston, Tex., reports receipt of the first bale of new cotton from Lyford, Cameron County, Texas. This compares with July 1 last year.

Weather developments overnight were as predicted and favorable. Cooler with showers in Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee. Cloudy over entire belt, except in southern half of Texas, where it is fair.

Indications are for generally cloudy weather with more extended showers in Oklahoma and the Central and Eastern States; cooler in the Central belt; generally fair and warm in central and south Texas. Several points in the Central States reported rain this morning.

The market declined at the start, but was soon brought up by the strength of July New York and also on some support in October, which position, New York says, will likely be affected by the very small stock there. It looks as if the intention is to advance the market.

The into-sight for the week looks around 24,000 bales, against 25,293 bales last year. We compare with mill takings of 195,000 bales for this week last year.

FIFTH HEAT PROSTRATION.

CHATTANOOGA, July 10.—Frank Morton, who was overcome by the heat here late yesterday afternoon, is recovering. This was the fifth prostration during the present heat wave.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, July 10.—Around the opening there was some selling by ring speculators, but it was soon apparent there was some cotton wanted from strong sources and a wave of short covering followed, some of which was said to come from Wall Street. Contracts were scarce, especially in October. The buying, it is said, was based on fear of high temperatures in the Southwestern belt and the continued talk of boll-weevil in Texas. Cables from Liverpool stated that the strength there was caused by short covering in fear of high temperatures over the holidays. Some of the larger spot interests were noticeable buyers of new crop. The South was put down as selling, also some of uptown crowd. The market is narrow and is influenced easily either way just now. Agitation in Washington is having a tendency to restrict business and no serious change in prices is looked for pending this legislation.—Anderson.

"If the tax of 50 cents per bale becomes a law the cost of hedging will fall upon the merchant or producer, probably the latter, but as a matter of fact, it is doubted if merchants would be able to hedge at all in any market because the law eliminates the speculator who is theoretically on the opposite side of the hedge.

"A cost of 13 cents to trade would kill speculation on American exchanges and kill straddle operations between New York and Liverpool. The English market without straddlers would not be large enough to take care of American hedging, so the only opportunity for a merchant to have a hedge order executed would be when it meets another hedge order the other way.

"Any one familiar with future markets know that these orders would seldom meet, consequently, the law would really kill all opportunity to hedge. Such a situation would drive out all the smaller merchants, leaving the business in the hands of a few rich spot dealers who would have the Southern producer in a merciless grip."—Clevenburg.

* * *

Reports of serious boll-weevil damage in Texas, together with timidity on the part of sellers because of the local situation, was responsible for the strength of the market yesterday.

* * *

McFadden and Gwathmey brokers were the leading buyers yesterday, mostly of October, which feels the threat of a depletion in stocks more than any other month. Baruch and Wall Street covered some shorts.

* * *

Sentiment is not unfriendly to the market, traders figuring that with contracts scarce any unfavorable reports will cause a further advance.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas—Panhandle and south clear; central and east cloudy; numerous rains. Oklahoma—North and west clear; balance cloudy; local rains."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Hayward & Clark: "The weather map is very favorable. It shows cloudy over entire belt, except fair in southern half of Texas. Distinctly cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas, with fine rains in Arkansas and parts of Tennessee. Some scattered showers elsewhere. Indications are for cloudy, with scattered showers, and cooler in the central belt.

* * *

Houston, Tex., wires: "First bale received from Lyford, Cameron County, South Texas, and will be sold at auction to-day."

* * *

Cotton summary of The New Orleans Times-Democrat: "The steadiness of yesterday's cotton market was explained in two widely divergent ways. The man who believes that cotton on its merits can take good care of itself said that shorts were experiencing difficulty in obtaining tenderable supplies; that the short interest is still large enough to give trouble, and that the position of the actual bull who bought new crop deliveries yesterday because the action of the market suggested that July longs were beginning to put the screws to shorts and further strength in July would probably influence new crop deliveries to climb temporarily to higher levels.

"Of course, the weather artists were much in evidence. One faction promised heat waves in the West. Another exploited the comparative records as proof that current temperatures are not excessively high. Still another turned prophet and promised showers and cooler weather in the West."

STOCKS GO UP ON GOOD WAR NEWS

Trade Witnesses a Stampede at Noon — Record Corn Crop Important Factor.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Canadian Pacific, which led the stock market in its downward movement yesterday, turned about today and led an upward trend of prices at the opening. Canadian Pacific opened at 211½ for a gain of ⅝, but soon was selling at 213¼, which was 2⅜ higher than Wednesday's closing.

Union Pacific showed the best strength it has exhibited since the present movement began. Union Pacific climbed to 146 for a net gain of nearly 2 points. United States Steel common advanced 1 point on good buying.

The market was largely influenced by London, Paris and Berlin and a considerable share of the buying at the opening came from the other side. This was inspired by a report from St. Petersburg that the Balkan war probably would be ended this week.

Among other gains were Amalgamated Copper ⅝; Southern Pacific ½; Reading ½; Chino Copper ½; Illinois Central ½; American Car and Foundry ½; St. Paul ⅝ and Erie ⅜.

Wall Street took an optimistic view of the railroad situation the belief prevailing that the trainmen on the eastern lines will not strike, but are maneuvering to force an amendment to the Erdman arbitration law.

The curb was strong.

American in London were strong.

The advance in stocks is due to short covering and a dispatch from St. Petersburg saying that the Balkan war would soon end.

For a time after the opening the market witnessed a stampede and before the advance ceased gains of 1 to nearly 3 points were recorded. Shortly after the first hour, however, recessions appeared, but prices held above yesterday's close. Union Pacific advanced ⅝ to 145⅝. Reading reached 157, a gain of ⅝. Lehigh Valley, Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania were up ½. Coper declined ¼. Other issues remained unchanged to a fractional advance. Great Northern preferred issued a 1¾ dividend.

Call money loaned at 2 percent.

STOCK GOSSIPS

With the prospects of a 3,000,000,000-bushel corn crop, it looks as if the railroads would have all they can carry this fall and winter. It looks as if President Wilson would avert the railroad strike. Expect a traders' market for the present, but prefer to buy stocks on breaks rather than sell on rallies.—Potter.

* * *

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Moderate profits should appeal to the daily trader for the present. Information channels are pessimistic. Trading movements in the general list, with a somewhat better demand for the leading stocks, may be seen to-day."

* * *

The market responds well to favorable news, due to the large outstanding short interest and the limited supply of stocks. Prospects of a corn crop of record-breaking proportions and the ending of the Balkan war are factors of the utmost importance. Last, but not least, the present level of prices is very low, the returns to the investors are attractive, and the chances for a considerable appreciation in values in a reasonable time are good.—Potter.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Wheat traders were inclined to construe the Government report as bullish when considered in all its details. There were a number of sharp operators, however, who took a bearish view of it, and talked lower prices. It is the general belief that the final returns on all wheat will show around the same as last year, which, with the carry-over, should make a larger supply than last year.

"Corn specialists took the Government report as bearish, although the acreage is two-tenths of 1 per cent under last year. This was offset by the condition being the highest since 1909. The crowd were regarded as short and the commission house holdings have been reduced of late.

"Oats traders were surprised at the showing of the crop report, it being larger than expected. Most operators took a bearish view of it, and said that with the crop within less than three weeks of harvest they look for a yield of 1,000,000,000 bushels."

* * *

Terre Haute, Springfield, Peoria, Bloomington, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha all clear, 63 to 75 degrees; rain reported at Terre Haute yesterday afternoon. Canadian Northwest, partly cloudy, 50 to 72 degrees; Swift Current, rainfall .28; Edmonton, .46.

* * *

Buy September wheat and sell September corn at present for substantial profit.—Bell.

* * *

General liquidation is on in oats and this, together with pressure of new oats from the country, will, in my opinion, carry the market several cents lower.—Roycroft.

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: Wheat—The country continues to market the new crop of winter wheat very freely. As long as Europe continues to buy liberally the effect of hedging operations is materially lessened. We believe there is a large outstanding short interest, and are inclined to look for a fair rally.

Corn—This morning's map was generally clear with some high temperatures again in the Southwest. The figures given in yesterday's Government report indicate a crop larger than the trade generally was looking for, but there has been considerable scattered liquidation and short selling during the past few days. We are inclined to think the report will not prove a depressing influence.

Oats—The Government report was about as expected and therefore will not be influential. Near buying power is extremely limited, but there has been a great deal of liquidation, and while prices may gradually work lower, we do not look for any sharp break at the moment.

* * *

The Government figures of indicated crops, as properly analyzed, furnish no comfort for those who are anticipating a poor crop year.

The indications of July 1, when compared with the same official indication July 1, last year, shows a promise for corn of 159,000,000 bushels greater than last year and wheat 125,000,000 bushels more, while spring wheat promises 53,000,000 bushels less and oats 108,000,000 bushels less. Total wheat promise is 72,000,000 bushels more than forecast at this date a year ago.

To compare the July report with final results of last year, it is necessary to figure on the basis of the July 1 condition being maintained until harvest. Such a comparison would indicate a corn crop of 3,153,000,000 bushels, against 3,128,000,000 bushels last year. A wheat crop of 731,000,000 bushels, against 750,000,000 bushels last year, and oats 1,096,000,000 bushels, against 1,481,000,000 bushels last year.

The only shortage from last year's phenomenal crop is in oats, and this crop promises larger than the average for the last six years. In addition there is a heavy carry-over of oats.—Rycroft.

Wheat—No. 2 red	86½@87
Corn—No. 2	63½@64
Oats—No. 2	40 @41

CHICAGO, July 10.—The strength shown by the wheat market at Chicago this morning when prices advanced ⅝ to ¾c was a reflection of the higher prices at Liverpool, coupled with the bullish construction placed on the Government report of yesterday. The best prices were shaded ⅛ to ¼c soon after they were made by "hedging" sales. Argentina shipments for the week are estimated at only 400,000 bushels, compared with 1,552,000 bushels for the corresponding period last year. Northwestern receipts, while a few cars larger than for the same day in 1912, were small.

Corn was a shade better in sympathy with wheat, as the weather is favorable.

Oats were ½c lower for September and a fraction lower for July.

Provisions were lower.

Deserted, She Asks Work, Not Charity

Mrs. Emory Batta, who appealed to Matron Mary Bohnefeld for assistance in finding employment after being deserted by her husband, denies the published report that she is penniless and tramped the streets 48 hours without anything to eat.

Though her husband is said to have taken $500 of their savings Mrs. Batta declared Wednesday that she simply appealed to Matron Bohnefeld to help her get work, not for charity.

Poultry, Pet and Live Stock

Poultry Business Is Indebted to Fanciers Fifty Years Ago

Fancier Has Done the Slow and Plodding Work Which Has Taken Years to Accomplish.

How often we hear people say, "Oh, I do not want anything to do with the fancy part of the chicken business; I am out for utility and I just do not want to have anything to do with the fancy part of the business." Some persons seem to have about the same aversion to the fancy that the small boy does to having his hands and face washed.

They seem to think that that sounds mighty practical and will help to keep them from getting mixed up with the fellows who are always talking about shows and prizes and all such things. Oh, yes, they want good stock, but nothing fancy. The fancier can get along without the utility man just about as well, if not better, than the utility man can get along without the fancier. In reality, they need each other. Where would the utility man be to-day if the fancier had not gotten in his great work for the poultry industry. Just think of it, the fancier has given the country all the pure breeds of poultry from which the utility people have taken their foundation stock that has made them what they are to-day. He brought the Brahmas, Cochins, Langshans and Leghorns from other countries. He really manufactured the Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes and Reds frome other breeds and gave them to us in a shape that has made them of the greatest value to the farmer and market poultryman. Where is there a utility man or farmer who would be willing to blot out all these breeds and go back to where we were 50 years ago? He has given us such a variety that the most exacting along any line of utility work can be supplied with about what his needs require. There is the Brahma or Cochin if a strictly meat breed is desired; or the Leghorn, Minorca or Spanish, strictly for eggs. For the farmer who would like a combination, they have furnished him with the Wyandotte, Plymouth Rock and Red.

So you see it is a question of simply paying your money and taking your choice. The fancier has done the slow and plodding work which has taken years to accomplish, giving it to the utility man all ready to work with.

Of course, the farmer may let the barrs on the Rock get a little irregular, or the comb on the Leghorn become a little top-heavy, the Reds a little mealy in color, yet, in spite of all these little irregularities they maintain their valuable qualities and serve the utility part to a marked degree. The fancier invented the trapnest that egg-production might be increased from an average of 75 eggs annually to 150 or better for the laying breeds; or, for the general-purpose breeds for that matter. He has led the van in giving better houses for the hens that they might produce eggs in winter as well as in summer. The fancier has furnished the country with the best appliances for the economical handling of poultry in great numbers. Take, for example, the incubator; it has been really the solving of the commercial poultry problem of this country. Just think of the hundreds of thousands of chickens and ducks that are annually turned out of these machines to fill the great markets of our cities and towns. Machines holding as high as 60,000 eggs at a filling. Just think of it, 4,000 hens to do the work of that one machine, which is looked after by the attention of one man not over an hour each day. The poultry fancier has made possible the diffusing of the best in poultry literature to one and all. The great poultry and farm journals which the country supports were made possible by him, and, in fact, are largely supported by the fancier. The utility man takes advantage of all these helps; in fact, looks to them largely for his guidance.

Then we must not lose sight of the beauty part of it. For there is no one, we believe, so completely engrossed in the making of money that he does not enjoy the beautiful in nature. Most of us make our money for the purpose of spending it in the pursuit of pleasure and happiness.

Why not double this pleasure by having the pleasure right along with the making of the money. Flocks of pure-bred poultry of any variety should be a pleasure for any one to handle; on the other hand, a lot of mongrels could hardly be an incentive to any one, much less a pleasure.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Seeking to Locate $100,000 Concern

Manufacturers Search for Plant. East Alabama St. Sale Reported. Permits for 14 Bungalows.

Real estate agents began looking Thursday for a site with railroad frontage on which to locate the Sox Duplex Cinder Deflector Company, a concern organized recently with $100,000 capital and Henry Schaul as president.

This manufacturing company will make a patented device for keeping cinders out of Pullman and day cars, with Atlanta as headquarters, and an expensive plant will be installed. David Sox is the inventor, and it is said that his device has been adopted by a number of railroads.

While the exact amount to be expended on site and plant has not yet been determined, it is estimated that $100,000 will be necessary.

Alabama Street Sale Reported.

Report in real estate circles Thursday had it that Luther Z. Rosser and J. H. Porter had bought the East Alabama Street property of Colonel Robert J. Lowry at $35,000, or about $1,000 a front foot.

This property is 57 East Alabama Street and has a frontage of 35 to 40 feet. It is improved with a three-story brick building.

Messrs. Rosser and Porter have been associated in a number of interesting deals, notably the purchase of 301 Peachtree Street and the property on North Pryor Street of the Dougherty-Little-Redwine Company.

A petition has been in circulation for the repaving of East Alabama Street, and property values are expected to take a rise with the improvements. J. Livingston Wright has a parcel east of 57 which he holds for $1,200 a foot.

Williams Street Subdivision.

Twenty-four residence lots will be put on the market August 1 by the A. J. & H. F. West Real Estate Agency. These are in the Atwood tract of six acres on Williams Street, between Tenth and Fourteenth Streets. The land is now being platted.

Small Sales Made.

W. A. Cook, of Senoia, has sold to J. M. Lankford, through J. F. Culpepper, of the L. P. Bottenfield Real Estate Agency, 44 Plum Street, for $2,200. The above agency has sold a farm tract on Mt. Perian Road, near Pace's Ferry Road, for $875; two lots in Clairemont Park, Decatur, for $2,200, and three lots in the Peachtree Highlands subdivision for $3,700.

R. W. Milner, formerly a traveling salesman, and J. W. Reeves, formerly a building contractor, have been added to the sales force of this agency.

Whitehall Street Transfer.

George A. Boynton has transferred to Martha A. Boynton a 46 by 116 footp arcel on Whitehall Street and to Haygood Boynton a 98 by 100 foot property on the north side of Woodward Avenue, 100 feet east of Crew Street. The Whitehall lot is 159 feet northeasterly of Garnett Street.

Wide Range of Sales.

Realty men say they have seldom seen more interesting bonds for title and warranty deeds going to record. Among the papers are the following conveyances:

W. B. B. Richards, administrator of the estate of the late William C. Richards, to R. W. Davis, lot on the south side of West Fourteenth Street, 284 by 150 for $4,269.

The L. S. Huntley Company to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Peachtree Road, 368 feet northeast of the junction of the Peachtree and Roswell Roads, 48 by 140, $1,575, and to same, the adjoining lot to the southwest, same size, for the same price.

R. I. Barge to R. L. Brightwell, lot on the north side of Ormond Street, 160 feet west of Grant Street, 50 by 141, $2,500.

Charles A. Davis to M. I. Huie and Mrs. Luella Skinner, lot on the west side of Peachtree Road, 1,040 feet northeast of Piedmont Road, 100 by 685, $4,500. Transferred to C. M. Love et al.

Mrs. Eugenie Balch to Mrs. Mamie Cohen, 265 Crew Street, 50 by 200, $3,650.

Lois and Nellie Hollingsworth to M. Friedman, lot at the northwest corner of Highland Avenue and Fortune Street, 90 by 120, $4,300.

James E. Brown Company to National Stock Yards Commission Company, lot on the east side of Marietta Street, 67 feet south of Lee Avenue, 74 by 222, $12,607, and to same, southeast corner of Lee and Marietta, 67 by 149, $5,200.

The total of these transactions is $35,176. A few are trades made some time ago, with papers just going to record, but most of them are of recent date.

Successful Auction Sale.

John S. Owens and Gid Hanna are to-day $2,500 better off than they were this time Wednesday, having made this amount on an auction sale at the corner of Park Avenue and Bryan Street, Grant Park section. Less than a year ago they bought a tract for $4,900 and the total in the auction was $7,295. The buy was made from Mrs. Lizzie Hollingsworth through William A. Vernoy, the latter of whom had charge Wednesday. W. Ferguson & Son were the auctioneers.

Mr. Hanna and Mr. Owens attributed the success of the sale to effective advertising, the value of the property and plenty of good lemonade.

Lots 1 and 2 were bought by H. A. White for $775 each; lot 3, by J. T. Wallace, for $875; lot 4, by John A. Fritz, for $1,390; lot 5, by Frank Whitley, for $830, and the house and lot, by George B. Beauchamp, for $2,650. Mr. Whitley refused a good profit on his lot immediately after his purchase.

"We could have sold 50 lots if we had had them," declared Mr. Vernoy after the sale.

Renting Meet Postponed.

Renting agents called together in the office of Charles P. Glover will meet Friday afternoon at 3:30, two previous meetings having been postponed. The "single listing system" of houses will be discussed.

New Pharmacy College.

The Courtland Street section between Harris and Cain Streets is soon to have a new college of pharmacy, when Dr. George F. Payne, the proprietor, completes plans for remodeling two double frame houses which he has just bought. Dr. Payne acquired this property from W. I. Webb through G. M. McKinnon, paying $20,000, or nearly $260 a front foot. The lot is on the east side of the street and the dimensions are 77 by 275 feet.

Ponce DeLeon Activity.

Seldom during the year, say the realty agents, is there any trouble disposing of residences on Ponce DeLeon Avenue. This is true alike of the closer-in homes, not far from Peachtree, and the homes near or in Druid Hills. Claude E. Sims, for instance, is doing his share of selling. He reports the sale for Dr. John B. Daniel to J. H. Leversredge, of Montgomery, Ala., of 666 Ponce DeLeon, 50 by 180, for $13,000, and of 532 Ponce DeLeon, only two blocks to the west, to Dr. William Asher for R. C. Taylor, for $10,000. The latter is 55 by 232.

Druid Hills Sale.

Although few homes are offered for sale in Druid Hills, buyers can always be found. O. D. Gorman, Jr., a successful trader with Smith & Ewing, has just picked up a profit in the sale of 510 Briarcliff Road to Mrs. J. J. Morris, for $12,500. This lot is 90 by 150 feet and contains a two-story nine-room brick veneer house. The transaction was handled through the Martin-Ozburn Realty Company.

Exchange of Properties.

H. M. Carlton has traded with a client of R. W. Evans, of the Cheatham Brothers' agency, for 219 East North Avenue, 45 by 150, for $4,900, giving in part payment a vacant lot on Ashby Street, 50 by 300 feet, valued at $1,000.

Auburn Avenue at $58.

Chauncey Smith has bought from a client of John D. Babbage a lot on the south side of Auburn Avenue, between Yonge and Jackson Streets, for $1,500, or at the rate of not quite $58 a front foot. The lot is 26 by 149 1-2.

Who Is Responsible for Such Creatures as David Lamar?

Who but the Big Men, Who Are Willing to Learn from "Vermin" How They, the Rich Men, May Buy the People's Representatives and Thwart the People's Will?

(Copyright, 1913.)

You read the story of David Lamar, known as "the Wolf of Wall Street," whose meteoric career in Atlanta in 1892 is still remembered by many persons here.

He told the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee at Washington the other day that he had called up big men with plenty of money, pretended that he was Congressman This or Congressman That, and offered to stop legislation that the people demanded.

It would seem that this man's life has been one of perpetual scheming. While in Atlanta his business dealings were of such character that he was arrested, indicted and forced to seek other fields.

Of recent years it appears, this individual, Lamar, has been busy telling big men in New York how he could prevent interference with this trust, or that railroad combination, or some other piece of financial dishonesty.

He used different names, and probably used different voices talking on the telephone. He made fools of some of the big men, and they now FEEL FOOLISH as the story comes out.

It is rather a disgusting story, of meanness, lying and attempted cheating, with possible blackmail attached. Some of the most unpleasant words in the dictionary describe Mr. Lamar very accurately.

But words just as disagreeable would describe as accurately the men of money and power who listened to Lamar, and listen to others like him.

If the big men whom this country and its citizens have made rich were not willing to bribe legislators, not willing to defeat the people's will by underhand methods, NOT WILLING TO USE THEIR DISHONESTLY GOT MONEY TO BUY DISHONEST LEGISLATION, there would not be such men as David Lamar urging the buying of disreputable public officials especially adapted to the doing of very dirty political work.

Lamar and the vermin like him are not very important.

The important man is the man of money, power and position, the man who has no excuse for being a bribe-giver, a cheater of the people, the man who listens at the telephone eagerly while "the vermin," representing themselves as dishonest Congressmen, offer for a consideration to cheat the public and rob the public and help dishonesty and buy legislation.

The big men who do not deny that they trusted Lamar, that they talked to him on the telephone and heard what he had to say, have not made a full explanation of their conduct, or a satisfactory explanation.

The ordinary citizen would not listen to a man who called on the telephone to tell him how he might rob his neighbor's house.

Why does the big man of Wall Street listen patiently and attentively while "the vermin" tell him how he can rob the people of their legislation, cheat the people of their will and add by continued bribery to the fortune already acquired?

A Great Victory for Southern Women

The Georgia House of Representatives is to be congratulated in that it had the common sense and decency to extend the use of its hall to the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association, now in session in the Capital of the State, even though it was necessary in doing so sharply to rebuke rank stupidity and lack of judgment in the Senate.

The cause of woman suffrage in Georgia is in its infancy, perhaps, but already it is sponsored by a number of the most intelligent and progressive women of the State.

Unquestionably, the cause will wax stronger and stronger, as time runs on, and neither narrowness nor bigotry—even in a Georgia Senate—will serve to stop it!

The original purpose of these Georgia women evidently was not to force the issue of woman suffrage upon the Georgia Legislature at this time. They merely were seeking a suitable place to hold two night sessions. They turned to the State Capitol, AS THEY HAD A RIGHT TO DO, in seeking that place.

The Senate, however, with that shortsightedness characteristic of stupidity, declined to extend the courtesy asked of it—and thereby it made the cause of woman suffrage an ISSUE before the people of Georgia—the people WHO MAKE and UNMAKE LEGISLATURES, AS THEY PLEASE!

In these circumstances, the vote of the House extending the use of its Hall to the suffragists can not be viewed otherwise than as a distinct VICTORY for the Woman Suffrage Association of Georgia.

It was, in a way, the very first and pioneer victory for the cause in the South—made emphatic and extraordinarily noticeable by the foolish and silly action of the Senate.

The Georgian now ventures this prediction: Before the membership of the present Legislature is entirely dust, woman suffrage will be an established POLICY AND PRINCIPLE of every State in this Union!

Those men in Georgia, farsighted and fair-minded enough to see it NOW, then will have cause to rejoice.

Those who now thrust themselves in front of a movement destined to be as irresistible as the flow of the tide, will be overwhelmed.

The cause of woman suffrage has been strengthened rather than weakened in Georgia by the unwise, unpatriotic and unworthy action of the State Senate.

That the House promptly and emphatically repudiated that Senate action, speaks well for ITS sense of justice and right.

Man and Wife Should Decide Own Differences

No Person Capable to Give Counsel to Couple Regarding Difficulties

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.
(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

NO human being is capable of giving safe and sane counsel to a married man or a married woman respecting domestic differences. It is a matter which should be decided between the two.

When any third person intervenes, a judge of the court is the proper party.

Intimate Friends.

The most intimate friends of a family are not capable of saying where the fault lies in the majority of cases.

Even when a wife seems to be indifferent to her family and to her husband, and even when a husband seems to be unappreciative of his home, there may be causes for either offense undreamed of by those who believe themselves to be close friends.

There are men who seem to the world at large the most perfect specimens of domestic nobility, honor and probity, yet who are impossible as companions and life comrades for women of refinement and sensitive feeling, and there are women who pass in the world's eyes as angels of goodness who are possessed of unpleasant traits enough to drive any normal man to drink or insanity if he is compelled to live with them.

Wife Begged for Divorce.

The real character, the real disposition of any human being, is never known or understood until we have spent a year at least in steady association under the same roof.

The following letter reveals nothing of the writer's character. It reveals nothing of the wife's nature.

Therefore it is impossible to give any opinion of value regarding the case. Even were it possible, the writer of this does not wish to advise or counsel individuals save in the general way of character building which is the real work of the race.

The correspondent says:

"I am a married man with two children and earning a good salary, but separated for some years, owing to not being able to get along in harmony. Recently my wife called upon me and implored that I commit infidelity in order that she may secure a divorce from me, as she has an opportunity to marry. I agreed to do so if she would compromise by giving me one of the children, but she absolutely refuses, offering as an excuse that she is too deeply attached to them. I maintain if she loves this other man she would sacrifice one of the children or both of them to me, as I have a good home and nice surroundings, although I do not say she has not the same advantages, still I feel I could rear them up better under my influence and meet the future better than under this other man.

Willing to Sacrifice All.

"My wife is 25 years old, and, as this is comparatively young, I do not want to destroy her happiness. If I am in the wrong I would willingly sacrifice my side of the issue and grant her the divorce, but before I do I would like to hear your opinion."

All that can be said in reply is this: That children should be placed under the care of people who are the best fitted by character and moral worth and good behavior to bring them up.

Blood ties have nothing to do with the matter.

Paternal or maternal love, as that word is generally used, has little to do with the moral aspect of the case.

Women who gossip, who are disorderly, who are weak-willed, and who allow their children to see all these traits daily have no right to bring up their own children, no matter how they love them.

Small Part of Parenthood.

Fathers who are living immoral lives, who are associating with rough or coarse-minded people, or who use coarse language and who have never been taught self-control have no right to associate with their children, because they are making an impress on the wax-like nature of a child—an impress which will harden with time and become a blighting memory and probably a bad habit.

The time will come under the new science of eugenics which is being introduced when a censor will be appointed to study the domestic conditions in every family, and there will be laws which will protect children from the influence of the weak, the disagreeable and the incompetent homekeepers, as well as from the brutal and immoral.

Bringing children into the world is a small part of parenthood. To the writer of the letter quoted above no counsel can be given. It can only be said that the man of the best moral character, the best disposition and the best habits has the right to influence the lives of these children.

How to Keep Cool

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

My doctor said to me, said he: "In weather like this here
You must eschew the luscious stew,
The lush saute, the rich ragout,
And pie and cake and pudding, too,
And whisky, wine and beer,
In point of fact, you must not eat
Eggs, oysters, vegetables or meat.

"Dark clothing magnifies the heat, light clothes attract the light.
Beware of red—it heats the head;
Blue hues a poisonous radiance shed.
By sunset you'll be surely dead
Unless your clothes are right.
Don't let this warning be forgotten—
Beware of linen, wool and cotton.

"Don't lash your blood to frothy foam by any exercise,
But don't sit still or you'll distill
A subtle toxin which will fill
Your veins with fermentation till
Your temperature will rise.
Don't breathe—it makes the pulses leap.
Don't stir about, nor rest, nor sleep."

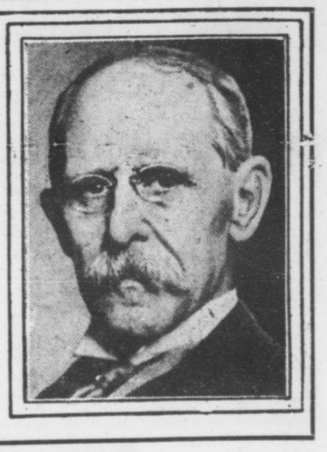
* * * * * * * * * * *

By packing me in ice and salt they brought me 'round at last.
"Why he's not dead," the interne said,
"Is what I can't get through me head.
For when they chucked him on that bed
He sure was going fast."

Now here's a tip for which I paid a very painful price:
DON'T EVER OVERHEAT YOURSELF BY FOLLOWING ADVICE!

Education Is the Cure for Feeble-mindedness in the Child; but It Must Be Begun in Time.

What Sight More Pitiful Than a Child Who Goes Into the Battle of Life with Its Mind—Its Only Hope—Disabled?



By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE great study of modern times is that of the peculiarities, the workings and the weaknesses of the human mind. This involves the entire future of the race of man.

I have been learning something about a new science, or what aspires to be a science, which has this for its object and which is called by its disciples "clinical psychology" (clinical from a Greek word for bed, implying that the subject of attention is a person who is ill, and psychology "science of the mind"), the whole phrase meaning practical study of mental illness.

No Sight Is So Pitiful.

This is something of supreme interest to parents, because those who are particularly, if not exclusively, the subpects of investigation by clinical psychologists are children.

There is no sight in this world more pitiable than that of a feeble-minded child. It is his MIND that has placed man in the proud position which he occupies at the head of the Kingdom of Life on our planet; it is by virtue of his mental powers alone that he has achieved all his triumphs; they only have brought him up from his original brotherhood with the ape; in the further development of his mind lies the only hope that he can have of still greater progress in the future; each individual, as he faces the struggle of life, must depend upon the strength of his mentality, and that the more in proportion as the struggle increases in intensity. What, then, can excite a compassion equal to that aroused by the spectacle of a human child which, as the result of causes that might be avoided, enters the battle of life lamed, crippled, disabled, palsied, impuissant, in that which constitutes its only hope, its only real strength—its mind?

Makes Instant Appeal.

The reason the new science that I have mentioned makes an instant appeal to any person having the good of his kind at heart is that it comes with the assurance that the terrible evil of feeble-mindedness may be eliminated. If it did not promise that, if it presented itself merely as another form of curious investigations having little or no practical application, it would attract only the inquisitive, seeking for novel subjects of thought. But when it says to unhappy parents, "Right education is capable of developing the dormant mental energies of your child; only begin in time, and know what you are about," then its call must be listened to everywhere.

It is this supreme word "education" which I find on every page of what I have been reading of the work and the aims of the clinical psychologists. The body can be educated out of many of its illnesses, and so can the mind. It is not worth while to stop over any discussion of the question whether, as some put it, "the mind has a body," or, as others would say, "the body has a mind." We all know what is meant when a person is said to be "feeble-minded," and the one thing of pressing, immediate importance is the question whether, either by medical or hygienic treatment, or by mental or psychological methods, or by both working together, the evil can be remedied.

Mental Hygiene.

I read this extremely interesting statement from Professor J. E. W. Wallin:

"Irrespective of whether the cause is chiefly physical or mental, it is being recognized by a number of the leading present-day psychiatrists" (those who study mental diseases) "that drug treatment for the majority of the insane, whether juvenile or adult, is secondary to the educational treatment. Instead of merely prescribing physical hygiene for the insane, leading alienists are now prescribing mental hygiene. The cure is being conceived in terms of a process of re-education. Moreover, so far as concerns the mentally unstable child in the schools, the chief reliance is obviously on hygienic and educational guidance."

Key to the Mind.

There you see in almost every line the magic word "education." We can all understand that. We must accept this term in a virtually new sense.

We must cease to regard it as simply signifying a process by which a certain, very limited, amount of knowledge is instilled or forced into the mind of a child, and we must come to consider it as the key to the mind itself, and the means, when wisely used, of opening and developing the mental powers, even when they seem to be absent or defective.

Education is not a sausage-stuffer; it is a ladder by which man mounts toward the summit of his destiny. And when the feeble are helped upon its rungs, they are stimulated and inspired with new strength at every step upward.

FAIR WOMAN

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

A WOMAN is easy to understand;
This is the secret, second hand:

When you pat her on the cheek
With your envelope each week,
Saying "Here's the money, dear,"
As you pinch her shell-like ear;
When she show'rs you with caresses,
Planning on new hats and dresses,
When she calls you her Greek god,
Though you know you have a pod,
She's happy.

When she meets you at the door
In the morn at three or four,
Trying with small fists to hit you,
Threatening to pack and quit you;
When she throws a dish or two
Clear across the room at you,
When she swings—and not in vain—
With your heavy walking cane,
She's out of sorts.

That is the secret, second hand,
A woman is easy to understand.

ARRESTS NEAR IN VICE PROBE

Crawford Died of Poisoning, Expert Says

WILL FIGHT TESTIMONY STIRRING

Attorneys for Widow of Crawford Declare Poison Testimony Will Be Shattered.

A positive statement from Dr. F. H. Harris, of the State Board of Health, that Joshua Crawford died of morphine poisoning instead of pneumonia, the announced cause of his death by the attending physician, Dr. J. W. Hurt, was the sensational development in the Crawford $250,000 will case Thursday.

Dr. Harris was called to the stand at noon. Attorney Reuben Arnold, for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, the widow, to whom all the estate was left, pinned him to the assertion.

For the first time in his career, he said, he deviated from his custom of merely mentioning possibilities or probabilities.

"There was absolutely no trace of pneumonia or any disease of the lungs," said Dr. Harris. "Morphine poisoning very likely produced death."

Statement Unshaken.

Dr. Harris was on the stand for very nearly an hour, but his statement was unshaken.

No announcement would be made by the attorneys for the heirs-at-law, who number more than thirty, but it was confidently understood they would not rest the case with the introduction of Dr. Harris, but would have other experts, and probably members of the family to take the stand in an effort to substantiate the evidence of Dr. Harris.

Attorney Arnold stated that the evidence of Dr. Harris would be torn to pieces when he put Dr. J. W. Hurt on the stand to tell of administering morphine and opium to Crawford in an effort to stop the violent fits of coughing and near congestion of the lungs, with which he suffered in the last month of his life.

Widow Not in Court.

He intimated also that he would introduce experts to prove that the quantities of opium and morphine found in Crawford's stomach by Dr. Harris were not sufficient to produce death, nor more than a normal dose administered by the average physician.

Mrs. Crawford, the widow, was not in the courtroom Wednesday when the poison theory was advanced by Dr. Harris, and it was doubtful whether she would attend the hearing Thursday.

Heirs-at-law to the estate and their friends attended in large numbers, and despite the fact it is a strictly civil procedure and no court official is presiding, it had all the appearance and interest of a sensational criminal trial.

Trainmen Will Not Meet With Wilson To Discuss Strike

NEW YORK, July 10.—Intimation was given here to-day by W. G. Lee, President of the Brotherhood of Trainmen, and A. D. Garretson pPresident of the Order of Railway Conductors, that they would not accept the arbitration of President Wilson and Secretary of Labor Wilson in the wage dispute of the trainmen on railroads east of Chicago, which threatens to precipitate 100,000 men in a strik.

Lee and Garretson said they would not go to Washington Monday to meet President Wilson and the Secretary of Labor.

Society Leaders, in Masks, See Risque Paris Play 'I Love It'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 10.—Wearing of masks by society women who attend racy theatrical productions, but who are ashamed to let their relatives and friends know of it, has come into vogue here.

A large number of women from court circles are daily attending the risque French show, "I Love It," but all wear masks for fear of the censure of their husbands and of Queen Mary, who has forbidden any of the ladies of her court from entering the Middlesex Theater, where the production is on.

Clergymen are beseeching the censor to close up the theater, declaring it will debase all who see it because of its gross imorality.

Congress Prepares For Investigation Of Mulhall Charges

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Congress was busy with two lobby investigations to-day. While the Senate lobby inquiry committee continued to pry into the secrets of the wool lobby, the Garrett committee of the House, appointed by Speaker Clark yesterday, made plans for an inquiry into the Mulhall charges.

Clarence H. Brown, chairman of the hosiery manufacturers' legislative committee, testified that his committee was instructed in 1909 not to attempt to interfere with tariff rates.

"I never even bought a cigar for a member of Congress," said Brown.

Fly Pests Cost U. S. $157,800,000 a Year

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Figured out in money, to say nothing of the loss in human life, the cost to the United States annually of supporting its fly population amounts to $157,800,000, say Government experts who have been making a study of the results of the germ-spreading activities of these insects.

It is estimated that the fly is responsible for an expenditure of $50,000,000 for the handling of tuberculosis cases, attributable to germs spread by the pests, while $70,000,000 represents the cost of typhoid fever cases originating in the same way.

Negro Pugilist Not To Return to U. S.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVRE, FRANCE, July 10.—"I have determined never to return to the United States again. My home will be in Paris."

This statement was made by Jack Johnson, negro pugilist, under sentence for trafficking in white women, who eluded the United States authorities and arrived here to-day on the liner Corinthian.

SUFFRAGISTS LAUD WAR ON VICE

Beavers Praised by Delegates to State Convention—Mrs. McWhorter His Champion.

Chief of Police Beavers' fight against vice was enthusiastically indorsed at the Thursday morning session of the convention of the Georgia Woman's Suffrage Association. The following resolution, introduced by Mrs. Margaret T. McWhorter, was adopted:

The Georgia Woman's Suffrage Association realizes the high civic ideals which actuate Chief of Police James L. Beavers, of Atlanta, and we wish to place ourselves on record as indorsing every move which he has taken for good government and clean morals, and especially do we commend his action in the matter of recommending the appointment of women probation officers for Atlanta; therefore,

Be it Revolved, That we convey to him our hearty congratulations and pledge to him the support and co-operation of the association in securing the appointment of these women officers, and also pledge our co-operation in any movement toward bettering civic conditions of Atlanta, which mean better vicic conditions for the whole State, and be it further

Resolved, That The Atlanta Georgian, The Atlanta Constitution and The Atlanta Journal be requested to publish these resolutions.

Mrs. McWhorter's resolution invoked tremendous enthusiasm among the delegates to the convention, and the indorsement of the association was given to Chief Beavers without a dissenting vote.

The Georgian's Editorial Praised.

The association also gave its unofficial indorsement to an editorial appearing in Thursday's Georgian, which was read from the president's platform by Mrs. Susan Cunningham, of Decatur, formerly vice president of the Alabama Equal Suffrage Association. The editorial comments on the action of the Georgia Senate in refusing to allow the suffragists to meet in the Senate chamber, and congratulates the House for allowing the women to meet in its chamber.

Mrs. Cunningham referred to the editorial as inspiring and wonderful, and declared that it embodied the thoughts of the members of the association.

The recommendation of the committee that the association work for a constitutional amendment striking out the word "male" from the State Constitution was adopted.

Contrary to expectations, no members of the Atlanta Civic League appeared to fight for the control of the State organization. Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, State president, made but a brief reference to the trouble with the league members, headed by Mrs. Frances Whiteside.

She declared that the members of the Civic League had outlawed themselves from the State Suffrage Association because of non-payment of dues.

She declared that the contention of the leaguers that the State association had ceased to exist because no convention was held in 1912 was not borne out by the provisions of the constitution, which declare that the holding of a convention shall be at the discretion of the executive committee.

The routine committees of the convention were appointed by the president and probably will report at the Thursday afternoon session.

Leader Predicts Success.

Several of the members of the association delivered short talks at this morning's session, Mrs. Samuel Cunningham, of Decatur, head of the DeKalb County branch, declared that woman suffrage is coming just as surely as all good things are bound

Beavers in Speech Warns Policemen to Keep Out of Dives

Chief of Police Beavers caused a stir Thursday morning when he went before the day watch and addressed the men on their conduct. His talk resulted from the recent scandal in which several policemen were found guilty of visiting a resort in the rear of 127 Auburn Avenue.

"Any man who hangs around a negro dive has no place on the police force of Atlanta," the Chief said, addressing the men. "If you get positive evidence that any of your brother officers are engaged in discreditable practices and frequenting disreputable places, it is your duty to report it."

The Chief will make a similar speech to the night and morning watches.

Despondent Society Girl Shoots Self in Jacksonville Home

JACKSONVILLE, July 10.—Miss Inez Seebring, a 17-year-old society girl, daughter of W. R. Seebring, an extensive real estate operator and granddaughter of W. H. Seebring, former Mayor of Jacksonville and a Confederate general, to-day is at the DeSoto Sanitarium with a bullet wound in her head, following an attempt to kill herself last night at her home.

Worry over the recent death of her mother is said to have led to her act. Her father had her at Atlantic Beach for two weeks in hopes that the gayeties of seashore life would dispel her melancholia. She came home late yesterday afternoon and, after talking to a girl friend, retired to her room, where she shot herself. She has only slight chances of recovery.

Queen of Greece Cables for Chewing Gum for Troops

NEW YORK, July 10.—Solon G. Vlasto, editor of The Atlantis, to-day received a dispatch from Queen Sophia, of the Hellenes, asking for a shipment of chewing gum.

To make him more certain why chewing gum was so urgently needed, Miss Contostavlos, a lady in waiting to the Queen, cabled later:

"Chewing gum is against thirst."

Mr. Vlasto cabled $2,000 at once and is about to send the chewing gum.

BOYS RESCUE DROWNING MOTHER

Picnic Party at Center Hill Sees Tragedy Averted by Wee Heroes.

Heroic work of two little boys, Mizell and J. C. Williamson, of 7 Gray Street, saved their mother, Mrs. J. C. Williamson, and a young woman, Miss Maud Stradley, of 322 Simpson Street, from drowning in Center Hill pond Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Williamson has a class of little girls at the Tabernacle Baptist Church Sunday school, which she had taken for an outing to Center Hill. Her sons, ages 13 and 12, respectively, were in the party.

Ventured Out Too Far.

Mrs. Williamson and Miss Stradley went in wading. The water was muddy and they could not see the bottom, but the water was so shallow and the bottom so smooth that they ventured farther from the shore, though neither of them could swim. They were walking several feet apart when the girls on the bank saw them go under.

Panic followed. The women in the water fought with desperation, oblivious to the fact that opening their mouths to scream was admitting the fatal water. The girls on the bank called and shouted, and the two boys rushed up to see their mother and Miss Stradley go down in the throes of drowning.

Boys Fine Swimmers.

As they stripped part of their clothes, J. C., the younger, exclaimed:

"I'll save my mother or die with her."

Before the boys could reach the struggling women they had sunk for the second time. When they came up they screamed no more, and they fought with feeble efforts.

The boys had learned to swim in Piedmont Park lake and they hurried to the rescue with the speed of experts. Before the women had gone down for the third time J. C. had grabbed his mother by the hair and Mizell had taken hold of Miss Stradley.

Made Brave Struggle.

It was soon evident, however, that all danger was not passed. The women were too heavy for the little fellows. There were shouts of encouragement from the bank, but the odds were against the victims.

The moment the accident occurred someone had run for Policeman Williamson. He was some distance away and it had taken some time to reach him—seconds in reality, but it seemed hours to the watchers.

As the boys were making for the shore with their burdens he rushed up.

He did not stop to remember that he was a poor swimmer, neither did he discard any of his clothes, but plunged in.

Human Life Line Formed.

Another tragedy threatened when he reached the deep water. Policeman Williamson sank as the women had. When he came up he saw that it was vain for him to attempt to render aid. The boys were making progress toward the shore, so he struck out for the shallow water.

When he secured a footing he watched and gave instructions to the boys. Holding hands, a human life line was made by the girls and all pulled ashore.

The boys were exhausted and the two women unconscious.

Mrs. Williamson is confined to her bed, but her condition is reported not serious. She is merely suffering from a reaction from the shock. Miss Stradley is up and all right except for a slightly sore throat.

ATLANTANS SCORE TAX ON FUTURES

Chamber of Commerce Files Protest With U. S. Senators on Cotton Tariff Amendment.

A protest against the passage of the amendment to the tariff bill pending in the United States Senate has been made by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The measure taxes cotton futures dealings.

The protest was made at a meeting of the Atlanta body Wednesday afternoon. Letters were sent to the two Georgia Senators and to Congressman William Schley Howard, urging them to oppose the "rider."

F. M. Inman was chairman of a special committee which handled the matter. He made the report recommending that the chamber go on record against the bill. Other members of the committee were T. A. Nicolson, J. S. Akers and E. S. Ehney.

Objection to the bill was based on the charge that it would eliminate the cotton exchange, would throw the farmers into the hands of the spinners, thus forcing the price of cotton down.

The members of the committee held that it would do away with the cotton merchant who deals directly with the farmer and country merchant, in that it would prevent him from using future contracts.

WILSON CURRENCY BILL IS ATTACKED

Measure Gives Politicians Control Over $10,000,000,000 Banking Power, Says Financier.

DULUTH, MINN., July 10.—George M. Reynolds, president of the Continental and Commercial Bank of Chicago, the second largest bank of the nation, to-day assailed as revolutionary the Wilson administration currency bill in a speech before the Minnesota Bankers' Association.

"We are confronted with a plan," he asserted, "which proposes to compel the banks to turn over to a political committee virtual control of about $10,000,000,000 of banking power, the result of 50 years' conscientious labor on the part of officers of 7,500 National banks in the United States."

His chief objection was based upon what he termed the political control over such great banking power. He saw demoralizing influences in the proposed plan of decentralization of money and credits. While he believed in Federal supervision, he said it should be regulatory, not administrative.

"I claim," he concluded, "that the amount of bank notes issued should be determined by the requirements of business rather than by guess."

MEN NAMED IN SLAVERY QUIZ NOW SOUGHT

Chief Beavers Declares New and Startling Arrests Are Near. Alleged Procuress Held

With the principals in the sensational vice case, Hattie Smith, a 17-year-old girl victim; Mrs. Lena Barnhart, a flashily-dressed woman, alleged white slave procuress; Lige Murray, negro ally, and Clyde Cox, the youth who was arrested in the hotel raid, all bound over to the higher courts, the police Thursday turned the full flare of a searching investigation directly on the hotels and alleged immoral resorts, with the result that new arrests and startling developments were expected during the day.

Chief Beavers Thursday morning declared that his crusade would include the men principals in the vice system as well as the women.

A number of names were given him by Hattie Smith. He will use these as a start along this line of his investigation, and sensational results are expected.

Girl Tells Story in Court.

The remarkable case came to a close Wednesday afternoon when the Smith girl told in court her story. She did not mince nor choose words. Looking at Recorder Broyles squarely, she told of her ruin.

It was in a soda fountain on Cone Street, near James, that she first saw the Barnhart woman, she said. Often she stopped in the soda fountain and usually the woman was there, talking with men or preparing to go riding with them in an automobile, she said.

"One day about two weeks ago I asked who she was. She seemed so popular, was dressed so nicely and had so many friends that I just wanted to know who she was. On the same day one of the men asked me to go for an automobile ride with him. I said I would. When we went to the automobile the Barnhart woman was on the front seat. We went for a ride along the Paces Ferry Road.

"When we returned to Atlanta the woman asked me to go with her to the Carnegie Library. Then she suggested my going with her to the Cumberland Hotel, where she said she would give me an apartment and I could live like a lady.

Given New Name.

"The life she painted attracted me, I said I would go with her. She suggested that she go to the hotel first and arrange for me a room. I followed and found that room 43 had been assigned Lucile Evans, my new name.

"Later I went out on the streets and was picked up by an automobile party that carried me to my home on Marietta Street. Thursday night I went back to the woman at the Cumberland Hotel and made an engagement with Clyde Cox, who was arrested with me Sunday night.

"The following night, Friday night, I met a man named Brower, who said he was from Washington. I went with him to the Brittain Hotel. He registered as Mr. and Mrs. Brower. The next morning I received a telephone call from Mrs. Barnhart to meet her at the Empire Life Building. I rode over in a taxicab, so as to be there on time. We went from there to the Cumberland. Mrs. Barnhart offered to pay for my room at the Cumberland until I could get something to do."

At this juncture the Cumberland Hotel register was introduced and the name of Lucile Evans was found under three separate dates. She said she had also secured rooms at the Childs Hotel, but she could not recall the name under which she had registered.

Proprietor Kistner, of the Cumberland, testified that both the women had conducted themselves properly while at his hotel, and that he could find no cause for ejecting them.

When Mrs. Barnhart was placed on the stand she said:

Woman Scored by Court.

"This girl said that her parents had driven her away from home and that she was penniless and had no place to stay. Out of the kindness of my heart I carried her to the Cumberland. She came into my apartment and I gave her a nightgown and kimono.

"My attitude toward her was that of a benefactress. I did not encourage her to do wrong—I would not have done so. I suspected she was not straight, but even at that I felt sympathy for her."

Judge Broyles severely scored the woman. He ordered the officers to take her child away and have it provided for in the Home for the Friendless. Her bond was fixed at $500. The other bonds were $100.

McNab Given Praise In Caminetti Report

SAN FRANCISCO, July 10.—Although Judge Vanfleet, of the United States District Court, on Tuesday removed the "stinger" from the Federal rGand Jury's report, in which President Wilson and Attorney General McReynolds were criticised for their part in the Diggs-Caminetti affair, he permitted some praise for John L. McNab to stand in the amended report.

"Mr. McNab is of the type needed in positions of public trust, and the Department of Justice has lost one of its best officials," the report reads.

Saves Girl; Year Goes; Reward, Cold. Stare

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Andrew P. Talmadge, of Washington, last summer jumped overboard, clothes and all, and rescued a young woman after she had gone down the second time. In the rescue he was obliged to put his arm about her. She gave him an awful glare, but he attributes it to excitement.

To-day he met the young woman on the street, and instead of beaming a smile of gratitude, she turned her head haughtily and did not speak.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Men

Send Name and Address To-day—You Can Have it Free and Be Strong and Vigorous.

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope, to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men, and I am convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow-men to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop drugging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest acting restorative, up-building SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, 4276 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain, ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it entirely free.

to come. She drew a round of applause when she declared that despite the assertions of opponents of the cause, the first thought of the true suffragist is of her home, and that the granting of the vote to woman would not impair her work as a wife and mother.

Mrs. H. Augusta Howard, who organized the State association and was its president for six years, told a pathetic story of the persecutions she was forced to undergo during the first few years of the movement in Georgia. Members of her family, she declared, took sides against her, and because of her loyalty to the cause, her two little children were taken from her.

She declared her belief in the ultimate triumph of womanhood over the narrowness and bigotry of man, and asserted that the weak will never be adequately protected until woman has a hand in the making of the laws.

Addresses also were made by Mrs. J. P. Scott, of Harrington, Kans., who has voted and served as a judge of election; Mrs. Mary L. McLendon, Mrs. Margaret McWhorter and others.

The final session of the convention will be held in the House of Representatives Thursday night. It will be featured by an address by Mrs. William A. Felton, of Cartersville, one of Georgia's most noted women, who will make her first public appearance as a suffragist.

Products Exhibit Committee Named

Negotiations toward renting or buying a home for Atlanta-made goods reached the committee stage Wednesday when the Chamber of Commerce appointed Brooks Morgan, V. H. Kriegshaber, Bolling Jones and J. K. Orr to decide whether buying, leasing, or renting with the privilege of purchasing presented the best advantages.

The three propositions were embraced in offers considered Wednesday. It was intimated the committee favored leasing with the option of purchasing.

Unanimous approval of the Penitentiary Committee was won Wednesday by Representative Jones, of Coweta, and Representative Mills, of Butts, for their bill appropriating $75,000 for a State home for wayward girls. The measure will be reported immediately, with recommendation for passage.

While no site is mentioned in the bill, the Penitentiary Committee discussed the advantages of Milledgeville.

The latter has decided to officially adopt her little sister, Jessie, four and a half years old, who also was brought home by the Congressman.

Representative Slater, of Bryan County, is its author.

The new road is intended to be part of the national highway system.

BARROW COUNTY BILL PASSED BY HOUSE

Measure Approved 136 to 35 Despite the Hardeman Opposition. Crowded Galleries Cheer.

The bill creating the new county of Barrow, to be made up of sections of Walton, Gwinnett and Jackson, with Winder as the county seat, passed the House to-day by a vote of 136 to 35.

The measure came from the Constitutional Amendments Committee with a unanimous recommendation for its passage, but it was not put through the House until after a genuine display had been indulged in.

The fight against Barrow was led by Hardeman, of Jefferson, who attacked it by moving to postpone action upon it until next session. Had that motion prevailed, the bill would have been killed, beyond hope of resurrection.

Barrow County has been looked upon generally as apt to win out. It has been before the Legislature before, and many members who voted for it to-day explained their votes by saying that they voted upon the merits of the proposition entirely, which were evident enough to the Constitutional Amendments Committee to get a unanimous favorable report therefrom.

The impression is that Barrow will pass the Senate and go to the people for ratification in the next general election.

During the voting on the bill, the galleries were packed with citizens from the territory affected, and when the vote was announced the result brought great applause.

Carnegie Library Adds 3 Assistants

Three new assistants to the Carnegie Library staff were appointed at a meeting Tuesday of the Board of Trustees. They were Misses Catherine Walker, Isabel Stevens and Emily Kemp.

TWO SETBACKS GIVEN STATE IN FRANK CASE

MISS MATTIE SMITH.

Girl whose story tends to divert suspicion to Conley in Phagan case.

Miss Hattie Smith's Story and Finding of Envelope Point Suspicion to Conley.

Two serious setbacks were given the prosecution in the Phagan murder mystery late Wednesday. The first came in the story told to Solicitor Hugh M. Dorsey by Miss Mattie Smith, a former employee of the National Pencil factory, in which Jim Conley's statement that he saw her at the factory at about noon the day of the crime was specifically denied, and further discredited by her assertion that she saw a negro lounging on the first floor among the boxes near the stairway about 9:30. This goes to disprove Conley's story that he did not reach the factory until after 10 o'clock and serves to point suspicion more directly at him.

The second reverse to the theories of the prosecution was contained in a revival of the story of the finding of part of Mary Phagan's envelope on the first floor near the spot where Conley admits he had been sitting the afternoon the girl was killed. As was generally known at the time, one corner of the envelope bearing Mary Phagan's number was discovered by one of the detectives working on the case.

If the envelope is accepted as genuine evidence, it must reasonably be construed to mean that the Phagan girl went to the factory Saturday noon, visited the office of Frank, and then descended the stairs to the first floor, where the negro Conley was hidden in the darkness.

The finding of the envelope bears out the theory that the original motive in the crime was robbery. Conley was known to be constantly in debt and in need of money. Of his own accord he told of asking Frank not to permit another negro to take money out of his salary for a debt. He admittedly was drunk the day Mary Phagan was killed.

As the defense has pictured the probable incidents of the tragedy, Conley saw Mary Phagan enter the factory after her money. In a few minutes he saw her coming downstairs with her pay envelope in her hand or in her mesh bag. The attack followed, and the body of the girl was thrown down the elevator shaft to the basement.

GARRISON PLANS TO ABANDON 100 ARMY POSTS

War Secretary Calls Them Useless, Demoralizing, Wasteful. Ready to Fight Congress.

WASHINGTON, July 10.—The most radical and dramatic move in army administration since Elihu Root reorganized it a decade ago has been determined by Secretary of War Garrison. He intends to fight Congress on the question of maintaining 100 or more "absolutely useless" army posts in the interior.

He intends to withdraw troops from at least 75 per cent of them in the interest of economy and efficiency, and next Wednesday will start on a five weeks' tour of the posts to crystallize the details of the policy he announced to-day.

Scores "Pork Barrel" System.

Secretary Garrison is disgusted with the "wasteful and extravagant way in which the army is being conducted," and lays it all to the system of maintaining army posts as part of the "pork barrel" into which every member of Congress dips his fingers. There are at present 157 posts in the country, an average of one post to every 50 soldiers in the army. Every State is represented.

The Secretary of War has made a preliminary investigation, which has proved to him that the maintenance of all these posts, of which he believes that 100 are unnecessary, is not only demoralizing to the army, but the most extravagant way of wasting Government money ever devised.

Plans to Block Congress.

If Congress obstructs his policy of unifying the posts, the Secretary of War intends to use his executive powers of withdrawing troops from those posts which he believes are unnecessary. He declares he has absolute power in this direction, and, with the President's consent, could concentrate the entire army in Washington if he so desires. He intends to use this power in fighting Congress should the latter determine to nullify his policies of post concentration.

Mr. Garrison will be accompanied by Major General Leonard Wood, chief of staff, and Quartermaster General Aleshire.

REORGANIZATION IS ASSURED AT STATE FARM

Board to Ask Assembly for Funds to Retain $30,000 Federal Appropriation.

GRIFFIN, GA., July 10.—The board of directors of the State Experiment Station Wednesday voted to comply with the suggestions of National Inspector Allen and to petition the Assembly for an appropriation sufficient to carry on all physical work of the station. With this in view, a committee, consisting of J. J. Flint, J. D. Price, J. H. Mobley, J. W. McWhorter and R. J. H. DeLoach, was appointed.

Should the Legislature provide funds, the $30,000 Federal appropriation will be used exclusively in making scientific experiments from which increased knowledge may be gained by the farmers, as the national department specifies.

Director DeLoach also announced his intention of reorganizing the station for experimental farm work rather than for a model farm. A new feature will be a department of animal husbandry, of which Professor Perry VanEwing, recently connected with experimental farms in Ohio and Kansas, will be the head. The appointment was made Wednesday.

Dr. E. W. Allen, inspector of the National Agricultural Department, presented his plan of reorganization and the terms of the National Government in regard to the $30,000 appropriation.

Those present at the board meeting were J. D. Price, Chancellor D. C. Barrow, Judge J. J. Flint, J. W. McWhorter, J. H. Mobley, R. C. Neely, J. W. Andrews, F. R. Mann, M. G. Gamble, W. H. Henderson and Dr. E. W. Allen, of the National Department of Agriculture.

ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS

One Thing We Do Not Claim For It

That it is a new discovery—it is not. There is nothing new about it except the wonderful new cures it is making daily. The medicine itself has been in use over a half century, and to introduce and keep before the public a family remedy for 50 years is no little task. The reason we have been able to do it is because the merit is there. It has only been accomplished by a strict adherence to the original formula, using only the very best roots, herbs, barks and gums that nature affords for the relief of the many distresses the human flesh is heir to.

To-day we find but few physicians who claim that minerals are just as good and efficient as are the roots, herbs, etc. You know that epsom salts will act, but the mere fact of acting does not mean cure, and is not what constitutes the remedial virtue of ROBINSON'S BLACK BITTERS; but it is the perfect combination of nature's remedies that enter its composition for the relief of Indigestion, Constipation, Intestinal and Gastric Disorders, Torpidity of the Liver, Colic, Cramp Colic, Pains in Back, Hips, Shoulders and Sides, Neuralgia, Ovarian Pains, Diarrhoea, Dysentery, Rheumatism and all Nervous Complaints.

Now, we want to know every reader of this paper that is suffering with any of the above troubles. We guarantee to help you. Come to see us at Coursey & Munn's, where we are demonstrating this great tonic. If you live out of town, send us an order and we will return your money if you are not satisfied. $1.00 a bottle, $5.00 for 6 bottles. Coursey & Munn's, corner Broad and Marietta.

BALKAN TOLL OF DEATH PLACED AT 65,000

Estimates, Believed Exaggerated, Show Heavy Losses in War Between Former Allies.

Bulgaria Looks to Russia to End War

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Foreign Minister Sazonoff announced to-day that Bulgaria, in order to prevent further bloodshed in the Balkans, had placed herself unreservedly in the hands of Russia.

It is believed that the war will speedily be brought to a close.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, July 10.—According to estimates compiled here to-day from official and unofficial dispatches from the Balkans, at least 65,000 men have been killed in the fighting between Bulgarians on one side and Servians, Greeks and Montenegrins on the other.

It is a certainty, however, that these figures are exaggerated, as the Servian and Greek losses have invariably come from Bulgarian sources, while estimates of Bulgarian casualties have emanated from Athens, Uskub or Belgrade.

Another Great Battle Raging; 75,000 Engaged.

SOFIA, July 10.—Another desperate battle with enormous losses of life on both sides is raging north of Kotchana between Bulgars and Serbs who attempted to cross the border into Bulgaria.

The Servians had a double object—first, to march upon the Bulgarian capital; second, to get behind the Bulgarian lines and cut off the retreat of the two southern divisions to Kustendil, the Bulgarian base of operations.

According to official advices from the front, the battle is being fought between Kotchana and Egri Palanka, along a small river. It is estimated that about 75,000 men are engaged. The battle lines are stretched over an area of ten miles.

Both sides are supported by artillery. The Servians also have a heavy force of cavalry. Bulgarian reinforcements have been sent over the Sofia-Uskub Railroad.

Czar Urges Bulgars to Settle With Roumania.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ST. PETERSBURG, July 10.—Russia is pressing Bulgaria to settle its differences with Roumania over Roumanian territorial expansion without further delay. Foreign Minister Sazonoff declared to-day that it would be national suicide for each of the Balkan States to keep on fighting.

The opinion here is that Greece will emerge from the present war with the greatest laurels.

Bulgaria Is Ordered to Sue for Peace by Powers.

PARIS, July 10.—A joint note from the main European powers was to-day forwarded to Sofia demanding that Bulgaria immediately secure the peace terms of Servia and Greece. Belief prevails here in military and diplomatic circles that Bulgaria will be badly defeated by the other three States in the Balkan League if the war is allowed to go to a conclusion.

If Bulgaria is compelled to sue for peace she will lose much of the spoils of the first Balkan war. Greece will retain Salonika and a big strip in Southern Macedonia, while the Servian frontier will be extended over a large area of northern Macedonia.

Bulgars Give Grounds For War, Turks Assert.

CONSTANTINOPLE, July 10.—Bulgarians are committing depredations against the Turks, which furnish cause for a declaration of war, it was announced here to-day by the Ottoman government.

Bulgarian troops stationed along the Littoral of the Sea of Marmora have burned two Turkish towns to prevent their falling into the hands of a Greek army which is marching eastward from Salonika.

Bryan's Commoner Is Made Monthly Paper

LINCOLN, NEB., July 10.—Secretary of State Bryan has announced that with the current issue the Commoner, which he established in 1901, will cease publication as a weekly, and will be issued monthly. The resignation of Richard L. Metcalfe, appointed Governor of Panama, has left the Commoner without an editor.

Under the new arrangement Mr. Bryan says he will be able to give attention to more editorial writing. The Commoner's size will be doubled. C. W. Bryan will continue in direct control.

CONTESTANTS TO RIDE PONIES NEXT SUNDAY

Children and Parents Invited to Meet Managers in Grant Park to Discuss Race.

Parents of the contestants and the contestants themselves are very cordially invited to Grant Park Sunday afternoon when the ponies, some harnessed and others saddled, will be on hand.

There will be rides and drives for all the children, and for the parents there will be an opportunity to inspect the prizes for which their children are working and a chance to meet the contest manager.

The contest manager is particularly anxious to meet the parents and confer with them as the race enters upon its last lap. But nineteen working days remain in the contest, and the children will need the co-operation of their parents to the fullest extent. How to help the boys and girls in the race will be the topic which the contest manager and the parents will discuss.

Herbert Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, a hustling contender.

Margaret Danner, Doraville, Ga., contestant.

The office force of The Georgian and American contest department is busy totaling the bonuses which the contestants have earned through the five-club offers, and the first $30 offer. This is proving even a greater task than anticipated, and it is impossible to give the contestants' full standings as yet.

Meanwhile another bonus offer is in effect. Liberal amounts of extra votes are offered for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions turned in before 10 o'clock the night of July 19.

Subscriptions of any length—two years, a year, six months, three months or even a month—may be combined to make up these totals.

Two Near Death in Auto Crash; Nabbed On Speeding Charge

A. M. Moon, of Adamsville, and O. H. Starnes, of Center Hill, are congratulating themselves to-day on their remarkable escape from injury when their automobiles collided in the Adamsville road last night. Both machines were demolished and their occupants hurled several feet. Beyond a few bruises, though, neither man was hurt.

Noise of the collision attracted a farmer. He telephoned to county police headquarters. Officers placed Moon and Starnes under arrest on charges of reckless speeding.

Moon operates a market in Decatur Street, while Starnes keeps a grocery in Marietta Street.

MILITANT 'JEKYL AND HYDE' IS ARRESTED

Arsonite, Meek Wife by Day, Confesses She Did $200,000 Fire Damage at Night.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LIVERPOOL, July 10.—A remarkable confession of a dual life, which in some respects equals "The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, was made here to-day by a woman. Mrs. Edith Rigby, wife of a rich and prominent doctor, admitted to the police that she has been a member of militant suffrage arson squad for six months without her husband's knowledge.

Every night she would slip from her home and set fire to buildings, plant bombs or send threatening letters to those opposing the cause. She told the police that she had caused at least $200,000 damage through her own executions.

Gentle Wife by Day.

Her husband opposes suffrage and she had to carry on her campaign of vandalism clandestinely. By day she appeared a gentle, dutiful wife, with no thought of "votes for women." But at night she went forth with violence in her heart. She was arrested.

After being taken to the police station Mrs. Rigby dramatically confessed burning down the mansion of Sir W. H. Lever, Bart, in Lancashire, when over $100,000 damage was done.

Ready to Give Her Life.

"I burned Sir William Lever's home because I understood that King George was to visit there," cried Mrs. Rigby. "I scattered the suffragette placards. I burned other buildings. I risked my life night after night in the manufacture of bombs. But I would give my life for the cause. I would give up my husband and my children—everything. I place the suffrage cause above everything—perhaps above religion."

In her excitement the woman became hysterical and bitterly denounced the government.

Clara Giveen, a member of the arson squad of the militant suffragettes, who was sent to prison for incendiarism, was released to-day because of illness brought on by a food and water strike.

Atlanta Geologist to Explore Everglades

Warren E. Hall, District Chief of the United States Geological Survey, with headquarters in Atlanta, will depart Thursday night for the Everglades of Florida, where he will make investigations for the Survey to help determine the feasibility of draining the swamps.

Mr. Hall expects to be gone several months.

38 BABIES GIVEN FREE MILK EACH DAY

All Work in Campaign Is Done by Committee Members to Cut Expenses.

Thirty-eight babies, whose mothers are unable to purchase proper food for them, are being supplied daily with pure, fresh milk, bought from the fund raised by the Atlanta Mothers' Congress. Every day brings names of new babies who require assistance from the milk fund.

The campaign is being waged at a minimum expense, all the work being done by members of the committee. A committee of young girls has been of great aid.

A check for $25 was received Thursday morning from a prominent Atlanta woman, this being the second check for that amount contributed by a society leader.

Milk bottles, placed in the downtown stores, to receive contributions from the public, are each day adding a small sum to the fund, and individuals are mailing donations to Mrs. John Rowlett, chairman of the committee. Still, more money is needed.

"No one realizes the great field that is open in Atlanta for this work," declared Mrs. Rowlett at her home, 186 East Pine Street, Thursday. "There are hundreds of babies who do not get proper nourishment. So far but few contributions have come in. We need money if the work is to be continued."

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van De Water.

CHAPTER II.

IT is not strange that men do not understand women when woman so often does not understand herself. Mary Danforth did not know what instinct kept her from mentioning to her parents her encounter with Gordon Craig in the subway train. That is, she did not tell them that she knew the name of the man whose pocket had been picked. She mentioned casually that she had seen through the window of her car a thief remove a purse from a pocket of another passenger on a local train and that she had vainly tried to attract the victim's attention to the theft.

"How strange that you should have seen it, and that the other people did not," remarked Mrs. Danforth. "You have quick eyes, my dear."

Mary laughed. "They were not as quick as the pickpocket's fingers," she said lightly.

"People ought to be careful how they carry their valuables," remarked her father sententiously. "New Yorkers should know enough to be on the lookout for thieves. Yet every few days you read in the papers of some careless chap who has been robbed."

The Discussion Ends.

There the discussion ended. Mary did not think it necessary to tell her father that the man of whom she had spoken was not a New Yorker. She was quite sure that Craig himself would not speak of the incident to her father, even should he present the letter of introduction of which he had told her. She wondered when he would present this, and if her father would mention the stranger to her. Why should he? There were dozens of business acquaintances whom he met weekly and whose names she did not even know. He was a man who did not bring the office and its concerns into his home. She almost wished that she had told a part of it. It was too late now to do so. Once she made an effort to bring the conversation back to the incident; then appreciated with embarrassment that were she now to give an accurate account of the encounter her parents would think it strange that she had not done so before. So she turned the talk again into other channels.

Dinner over, she asked to be excused, explaining that she must "cram" for examinations.

"Must you work late to-night?" queried her mother, sympathetically. "I think it is a shame the way in which you girls have to work to get through the High School. Now, when I was young——"

"Yes, yes, mother, I know!" interrupted Mary, with more asperity than was habitual with her. She was still weary and nervous, but as she saw the shade of wounded feeling that swept across her mother's face she regretted her sharp speech and, stooping swiftly, kissed the pale cheek.

"Forgive me for being so cross, mother," she said gently. "I am hot and tired, and, I fear, a bit grouchy."

"That's all right, Mary," said her father good-naturedly. "Your mother and I understand, and we are proud of the way you have worked. In spite of the fact that High School studies are a bit strenuous, you'll find that the training has been a fine thing for you later in life if you ever have to face the world alone. But I hope you won't have to," he added hastily.

His eyes dwelt happily on the graceful girl before him. She was an only child, and her father always said that she was the best daughter that any couple ever had. He had insisted that she take a course of study that would enable her to support herself if necessary. Every woman ought to have some way of earning her own living, he had declared. Mary reminded him of it to-night, smilingly.

"I'm Going to Insist."

"Well, dad," she teased, "you say you hope I will never have to support myself, and yet I am almost ready to consider myself a competent secretary, stenographer and typewriter. Then what are you going to do with me if I do not take a position?"

"I am going to insist that you keep in practice, but you shall not go to work as long as I live. I want you at home with mother and me. When I die it will be time enough for you to hustle."

"I pray that won't be for years to come," said the daughter, as she ran her fingers caressingly through his gray hair. "Not because I am afraid of work—but because we need and love you—mother and I."

John Danforth looked fondly at his daughter. "Well," he said with a tender smile, "I've lived right up to my income so far, and now I want to be spared long enough to lay aside something for you two—for no man ever had a better wife and daughter."

Mary studied late that night. As she fell asleep she smiled tenderly as her memory recalled the expression of pride with which her father had made this speech.

"Dear old dad," she murmured drowsily. "I love to see that look on his face."

Perhaps a sudden change in the weather, making the air dry and cool, caused life to seem brighter to Mary Danforth the following day, for she returned from school in a happy and hopeful frame of mind. Her mother came to her room late in the afternoon with the news that her father had "just telephoned that he was bringing a business acquaintance home for the evening."

"He says he's a stranger here," added the mother, "and as he's a bit lonesome, father asked him up to dine. He did not tell me his name."

The girl felt a wave of color sweep to the roots of her hair, and she turned away hastily to hide it.

"Perhaps it might be as well to tell Norah to have a salad course to-night, since dad's bringing a stranger home," she remarked casually, "and let's have the new china used, too—shan't we?"

"Certainly," said her mother. So calm was her child's manner that the parent would have been surprised could she have heard her whisper excitedly when she was again alone in her room:

"It is surely Gordon Craig!" Then, as the girl caught a glimpse of her flushing face in her mirror, she blushed again.

Confessions of a Medium

A Striking Expose of Fakery in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the partment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

YOU have watched the crowds in front of the fortune tellers' booths in Coney Island. Of course, you have never been one of those who have been "taken in." But you may have watched the others as they stood amazed at the wonderful "second sight" of Professor Bondaloo, or whatever his title happens to be.

As he sits blindfolded he describes exactly the articles in the crowd, tells the amount of coins and the dates thereon; tells the colors of dresses; reads the titles of magazines; adds complicated figures on the blackboard, and thoroughly mystifies his beholders.

They little know that the Professor instead of being imported from Mandalay, India, probably hails from that far-distant land of East Fourteenth Street or the Bowery, and is known in the winter and in private life by some "imported" name.

The assistant, after beseeching you to come closer, still closer, in order not to lose a single syllable that drops like pearls from the lips of the X-ray visioned man, then announces that the great professor will tell you your name for 10 cents to-day only.

When you go inside you are led to the Professor's sister, or cook, or something, who asks you to cross her palm with silver, which means a quarter, or a half, or even a dollar, according to how gullible you may appear.

She then proceeds to tell you the color of your prospective wife's cousin's hair, and seems to have forgotten that you came in to find out what your parents christened you.

How He Did It.

I am not at this time going to take up the fortune-telling mystery; but I shall content myself with pointing out how I accomplished the wonderful "second sight" or clairvoyance, as it is better known, to the astonishment of far more intelligent minds than my own.

Come with me, then, as I enter a handsome private home on Morningside Avenue. Gathered there are about forty-three or forty-four eminent scholars to study the mysterious power of Ali Ben Hassan, who has been educated in English in Robert College, at Constantinople, and who has but recently come to this country.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the apartment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

My guide goes to the back of the room and says, "I speak, Ali. Have you your second sight? Please tell me what this is?"

Very quickly I answer, "There appears to me a has."

"Right. Hear me now. Please watch me carefully. See this? I ask you to describe it."

A Watch.

"You hold in your hand a watch."

"Now what kind? Be quick, please."

"It is of silver."

"What is the number? Look carefully. Are you ready? Tell us then."

"The number is 62,810."

And so on the questions and answers went, and everything correct to the minutest detail. A doctor who was present proclaimed the results marvelous—that Ali Hassan was a unique specimen for scientific research. Several motions were made, seconded and carried unanimously, that the results of the experiment be sent to various psychical societies and leaflets be printed with a full and detailed description and mailed to leading authorities in this country and abroad.

Really, when I doffed my turban and sank down to a good hearty laugh with my "guide" later on, I once again had occasion to lament on the credulity of my neighbors. The second sight of all Ali Ben Hassan consisted of nothing but a good memory on the part of myself, an amateur investigator into the frauds of mystery.

My friend and I had arranged a code, as follows: Our questions would tell the answer to what they were asking, by the manner in which they were worded. The first letter in each sentence spelled out the answer; but if we had gone no further, this might easily have been detected. So we turned the alphabet topsy-turvy and made H stand for A, T stand for B, S stand for C and so on. For instance, look at the first question that was put to me:

The Solution.

"I" being the first word uttered, suggested "H." "Have" in the second sentence, suggested "A." "Please in the third sentence, suggesting "T"—the three together making "hat."

I can not even begin to show you the further details of the code, which went still deeper, and covered every possible article, description, date, color, metal, etc. We had even gone so far as to vary our code by different signals, and had single words mean fixed things. So that if, perchance, some one began to get the system, we would throw him off the scent. For instance, the second variation made "Say what stone this is" meant diamond. "Please tell me what this stone is" meant emerald, and so on. "Say what country is represented here' would indicate America, while "Please tell me what country is represented here" would indicate Spain.

There is no doubt but the memorizing of these codes is remarkable, and on that basis may be paid for. But I cannot understand why thousands will continue to believe that a strange, unseen power is possessed by these so-called clairvoyants who flourish and grow rich on money defrauded from the credulous pleasure-seekers who frequent the resorts.

One more incident on clairvoyancy: Some time after the Ali Ben Hassan episode, a number of those who had been present were invited to investigate that wonderful gentleman again at a friend's home in Brooklyn. One of the scholars had sufficiently awakened by this time to declare that he thought it was possible the manner in which the questions had been asked had suggested their answer. At this most of the others arose in anger and laughed scornfully at the man who could show himself so skeptical in the face of such conclusive evidence. The "guide" was very much aroused and said he feared this statement would cause Ali to refuse to talk again. (This manner of procedure is generally followed when someone gets on the trail.) Nevertheless, to prove that the charge was preposterous, Ali would allow anyone to ask the questions and he would answer them!

Therefore, to the amazement of all, this was done, and the results were more bewildering than before. There was no doubt of it. Ali Ben Hassan was gifted with a remarkable supernatural sight. But the explanation is even simpler here than in the first incident. We were prepared for all emergencies. I had previously connected in the folds of my turban the end of a slender speaking tube that came close to my ear and extended from another room and was painted in the color of the wall. Hidden in the next room was another confederate, who looked through an opening in the draperies, held a powerful opera-glass to his eyes, and whispered the answers sweetly through the tube in my ear!

New Residents in Towns

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

TACT, judgment and discretion are needed in order to make friends and acquaintances in a new place. Of course, when going to live in a strange town, where one has a few friends, cards may be sent, with the address, to the friends who reside in the town, as soon as one is settled, thus giving them an opportunity to call.

It may be that a bride is making her new home in a town where her husband's friends live. They have received cards for the wedding, or announcements of the marriage, and after they have called and their visits have been returned an interval of dullness may follow. If a few little hospitalities have been offered they may be returned in a simple way.

A new resident must not make advances, must not seem in haste to make acquaintances, must not make first calls on old residents, or send invitations of any sort to them until there has been an exchange of visits and some mark of hospitality has been shown by older residents.

It is well for a new resident to make allowances for an occasional breach of courtesy from well-intentioned persons. These have been known to send invitations to strangers within their gates without the preliminary of a formal call. This has been from carelessness, or the lack of knowledge of the laws of etiquette. A new resident, who may receive an invitation of a general nature from an old resident who has not called, need not stand too strictly on ceremony if by so doing the opportunity may be lost of meeting some pleasant friends. But a second oversight of that sort, from the same hostess, should not be overlooked, and one may well wait on one's dignity for the delinquent hostess to call.

Rules which apply in cities are altogether different from the rules in country neighborhoods or small towns. In a large city it is not the custom ever to make a first call on a new resident or near neighbor, unless a friend in common has requested one to do so. In the country, or in small places, old residents call on a newcomer if it is believed that an exchange of calls would be agreeable.

First calls should be returned within a week or ten days at least.

A THRILLING SHORT STORY

WITHOUT—ice and frozen snow, the bitter cold of a Russian winter. Within—the heavy scent of hothouse flowers, a soft rustle of silk as Natascha Alexandrovna waited breathlessly for the words that would decide her brother's fate.

They brought little comfort.

"I am distressed to be obliged to refuse your request," the general replied coldly, "but if your brother chooses to consort with revolutionaries he must take the consequences."

"He is only a boy, and the woman bewitched him," she urged, her heart sinking as he rose, saying coldly, "It is useless to press the matter further. I am powerless."

"Powerless!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "You, the all-powerful chief of police! You, who have so often assured me of your friendship! A word from you would set Boris free, and you refuse to speak it."

"Orders have been given that even I can not disobey," unmoved by her wrath as he had been by her distress.

"Then can nothing be done to save him?"

Vladimir Mirskoff looked at her for a moment, then, "There is a way, but you may not care to take it."

"Not care, when it is a question of saving my brother! Tell me quickly."

"A plot is being laid for the wholesale assassination of government officials, and a new form of deadly explosive has been smuggled across the frontier by a woman who, try as we may, we can not identify. If you could give us the name of one of the leaders Boris is free."

"You surely do not imagine that I could tell you," she exclaimed indignantly.

"No; but your admirer, Paul Goveski, can. He has friends among the Liberals."

"And you dare suggest that I should make him betray his friends?"

"It is the only way to save Boris from Siberia. I am powerless unless I have the name of one of these revolutionaries to give in exchange. After all, why should you have any scruples concerning men who preach murder as a trade?"

She wrung her hands in an agony of doubt, but before she could reply a servant entered to announce that his excellency Count Paul Goveski desired to know if madame would receive him.

"No, no. Say I am engaged; I can not see him."

"On the contrary," interposed Vladimir, "you must see him. Fate has sent him here to save your brother."

Natascha looked at him imploringly, then said, "I will receive the count," and as the man left the room, "Promise me Paul Goveski shall not suffer for his friendship with these men."

"Certainly," he replied. "Where may I wait for your answer?"

"In my boudoir," holding aside a curtain before a door.

"Remember, your brother's liberty, perhaps his life, rests in your hands," he whispered, and vanished almost as she turned to greet the Count.

"I trust I am not too early," he said, bending to kiss her hand. "You had my letter? I am all impatient for the answer."

"You do me honor," she replied, sinking into a chair. "Believe me, I am indeed grateful."

A Protestation.

"It is your love, not gratitude, I want," he pleaded. "Surely you have seen how I adore you. I would die to serve you."

"So others have said. I wonder how much such protestations are worth from you."

"Only try me and see."

"You tell me you love me," she said slowly. "There is no love without trust. What if I ask for a proof of that?"

"Ask what you will. I can deny you nothing."

"It will place your life in my hands."

"It is there already," Paul replied softly, bending over her. "I can not live without you."

"Rumor calls you Nihilist, conspirator," she said lightly, with a bewitching smile. "A woman's curiosity is proverbial. Is it true, and who are your confederates?"

He stepped back and gazed at her in astonishment too great for words. Then, "Madame, do you know what it is you are asking?"

"Why, certainly; a proof that you trust me."

"But this concerns others than myself. It is impossible."

"I thought so," scornfully; "strange how all men are alike, ready enough with words—unfortunately, I prefer deeds," rising as if to bring the interview to an end.

"But not such as this?" he pleaded. "To betray those who have trusted their lives in my keeping would be a poor way of showing my love."

But she stood silent, her fingers nervously twisting the lace of her dress.

Paul Goveski watched her keenly, then going to an escritoire wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, folded it, and came slowly back, saying gravely, "Here is the name of our leader. The proof you have asked of my love."

Then, as she took it, he continued, coldly: "And now, madame, I bid you farewell. You have said love can not exist without trust, and so have given me the answer I came to seek."

"You are going?" she exclaimed, incredulously.

"Yes; love bought by dishonor is valueless," and with a low bow he walked to the door.

She flung aside the paper and, passing swiftly across the room, barred his way, saying brokenly: "No, no; you must not go like this. I did not really mean it. Forgive me," looking up at him beseechingly, with tear-laden eyes. For the question that had tormented her for so long was answered; she knew now that she loved him—that to lose him would be much worse than death itself.

"Then you were not really in earnest?" the sternness melting from his face.

"No," she protested eagerly, "I only wished to try. The paper shall be burned unread."

"I knew I could trust you," he replied joyfully. "Natascha, dearest, I, too, was but jesting. The name I wrote was my own." He stopped, for her face was deadly white and her eyes dilated with terror as she gazed past him into the room.

Turning, he saw Vladimir Mirskoff reading the fatal paper with a quiet smile of satisfaction on his face.

The chief of police carefully refolded the paper, saying, "Paul Goveski, I regret to be obliged to arrest you, but this leave me no choice."

"Indeed he is innocent," cried Natascha, imploringly. "It was only a jest."

A Last Appeal.

"A singularly unfortunate one."

"Why try to undo the effect of your work?" asked Paul, scornfully.

"No wonder you despise me," she said humbly. "Listen, Boris has been sent to Siberia unless I could obtain from you the name of one of the leaders in this plot. They are only assassins and deserve no mercy. But you showed me the baseness of the part I was playing. Indeed, I would have burnt that paper. Say you believe me?"

But her appeal left him unmoved, and his voice was as cold and hard as the ice in the streets outside as he his friends, would repent at the last moment? Never." Then addressing himself to Vladimir, "I suppose it is useless to tell you I have never belonged to any revolutionary society in my life? I suspected madame was being made a tool of, and wished to find out; that was all."

"Quite useless, and I should advise you think of a more plausible tale for your defense." Then to his hostess, "Madame, I wish you good evening."

But Natascha had regained her self-control. She was fighting against desperate odds for all that made life worth the living. Entreaty was useless. If the man before her was to be forced to relinquish his prey, other means must be used, and suddenly the inspiration came.

Turning to Vladimir, she said very quietly: "You spoke of a woman who had concealed a deadly explosive for charging bombs. What if I were to tell you her name?"

"Then you may ask what you will."

"My price is Boris's freedom and the destruction of that paper."

"You, a woman, to betray another woman!" cried Paul. "I refuse to be saved at such a price."

Twice Balked.

"And I refuse to pay it," added Vladimir, decidedly.

Natascha looked at him in dismay. "Refuse?"

"Yes. Why buy what I can have for nothing? Sent to prison as a suspect, you will soon tell me all I want to know."

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Paul, and Natascha glanced at him gratefully as she said, "I will tell you now," opening one of the glass doors of the cabinet containing her famous collection of china fruit. "I am the woman, and here are the bombs."

The man stared at her, too surprised to speak, then Vladimir said stiffly, "Is this also some jest, madame?"

"It is deadly earnest," and, taking a china orange from its shelf, she held it carefully in both hands. "What is there to arouse suspicion in the fad of a society lady for collecting china fruit, and what safer place in which to store bombs than a drawing room frequented by the chief of police?"

"Enough of this fooling," he said, roughly. "I do not believe you," and he made a step toward her.

"Stop!" she cried, holding out the orange on the palm of her hand. "If you move I will convince you of the truth of my tale, only you are not likely to live to acknowledge your error."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Return that paper. Write an order for my brother's release and passports for the three of us by the midnight train to Paris."

"I refuse."

"Then as it is a choice between Siberia and death, I shall drop this at your feet, and there will be no one left to explain the accident that wrecked the house of Natascha Alexandrovna and involved the highly esteemed chief of police in so terrible a fate." Then, turning to Paul, "Have I not chosen well?"

"Yes; a thousand times sooner death with you than life if we are parted." And the look in his eyes told her that the peril in which they stood had blotted out all misunderstandings, but she only said calmly:

The Victory.

"Does your excellency still refuse?"

"I will do what you require," he yielded sullenly. "Put that thing away."

"When you have fulfilled my conditions. Give Paul Goveski his paper." Vladimir complied, and Paul watched it burn while Natascha continued: "Now write an order for Boris' release and make out our passports." Then, when he had done so, "In return, if you give me your word to do nothing till midday tomorrow, I will leave my china fruit exactly as they are. You can search the house, and think what a sensation such a discovery will make, and how your cleverness will be applauded."

"I give it." And if looks could kill, she would have fallen dead at his feet.

"Then I need detain you no longer. But another time, your excellency, when you wish to make a tool of a woman, beware lest you burn your own fingers."

"You have got the better of me now," he replied, turning to go, "but sooner or later my turn will come, and then—" The pause that followed was more expressive than words.

As the sound of his footsteps died away, Natascha placed the orange on a table and burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, exclaiming, "To think that two men could be so easily deceived!"

"Natascha, what do you mean?" Paul asked.

"It was your danger inspired me. I was desperate," she replied, taking the orange in both hands and giving it a slight twist, when the two halves fell apart, and she held them out for her lover to see they were empty of all save air. "If only I could see Vladimir's face to-morrow when he finds those deadly bombs are no more dangerous than this china orange!"

Alas, That Poor Egg!

"Waiter!" From the table by the window the voice of an elderly gentleman rose in accents wrathful. "Waiter!"

"Yes, sir," replied the much harassed one, hastening forward.

The elderly gentleman, overcome by his emotions, made several vain efforts at articulate utterances. Then:

"Take this egg away!" he roared. "Take it away!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter obligingly, as he glanced wistfully at the offending article. "And—and what shall I do with it, sir?"

"Do with it?" The outraged customer rose menacingly from his chair. "Do with it?" he bellowed fiercely. "Why, wring its neck!"

True Business Instinct.

Tophan's was the smartest emporium for miles around. You had to be the last word in "go" before a situation was obtained in that establishment. Keen business men filled every post.

One afternoon when trade was in full swing an unfortunate customer fell down the first floor stairs.

"Help!" he groaned in agony. "I do believe I've broken my leg!"

A shopwalker immediately flew to his side.

"Broken your leg, sir?" he inquired sympathetically. And then, in sharp, clear tones: "Cork legs! Third counter to the right, sir! Forward, Miss Davis!"

Up-to-Date Jokes

A man-of-war was lying off Gibraltar, and permission was given to the men to go ashore for the day. The sailors amused themselves in various ways, among others by riding about on donkeys; and their want of experience in this line caused much merriment. An officer, observing one of the men sitting very far back on the animal, instead of in the usual position, called out:

"I say, Jeck, get up more amidships!"

With an injured air he replied: "Well, sir, this is the first craft that ever I commanded in my life, and it's hard indeed if I can't ride on the quarterdeck if I like."

Bismarck was on one occasion pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place.

"He is a remarkable fellow," said the proud father. "He speaks seven languages."

"Indeed!" said Bismarck, who had not a high opinion of linguistic acquirements. "What a wonderful head waiter he would make."

Stolen Fruit Not Sweeter.

A benevolent old man invited a number of small boys from the slums to spend a day at his beautiful old-world country home, and among the many good things which he provided for them was a bountiful and wondrous feast of strawberries and cream.

As the day drew to a close, wishing to impress the lads with a lesson, their benefactor asked:

"Now, suppose, instead of being invited here to eat my strawberries, you had come and helped yourself when nobody was looking, would you have enjoyed the fruit so much?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! And why not?" asked the old gentleman, inspired with a new faith in young Britain's honesty.

"'Cause, sir," came the sad but prompt reply, "we wouldn't 'ave 'ad no cream with 'em!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T TRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 18 years of age. As I was walking on the street the other day I saw a girl whom I hadn't seen before, but I loved her very much the moment I saw her.

What I want to know is how to get friends with that girl.

ALBERT.

Love at sight is such a pretty dream it is a pity to spoil it by getting acquainted.

You are 18—the age to be devoted to making a man of yourself. Bend your energies in that direction, and let love alone for a few years. Under no circumstances should you attempt to form an acquaintance with a girl you happen to meet on the street.

CERTAINLY NOT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am very much in love with a boy. I am 17 and he is 18. He has kissed me a great many times, but now he has stopped writing me, and I have not heard from him for some time. I cried all last night about him.

Would you write him?

NANCY.

You have been very foolish, and his coldness is no more than what you should expect.

Do not write him, and the next time you have a lover, refuse to be so generous with marks of your affection. I trust this experience will prove to you that you are too young to have a lover.

Do You Know---

Failing in her plan to end her life, after seven different attempts in as many months, Laura Griffith, of Atlantic City, has developed a more cheerful view of life, and has signed on as a bareback rider with a circus. As a persistent fatalist, Laura, who is about 18 years old, holds the record. She has tried the poison cup, the glittering dagger, and the more prosaic method of taking a running start and butting her head against a telephone pole. So regularly was she admitted to the city hospital during the past year that a cot was labeled "Laura Griffith" and was held in readiness for her at all hours of the day and night.

Should the measure now before the French Parliament become law it will not be the first occasion on which it has been attempted to make gambling illegal in France. In the thirteenth century St. Louis interdicted all gambling, even prohibiting the manufacture of dice, and Louis XIV was responsible for no fewer than 20 anti-gambling ordinances. But the monarch gave a bad example to his subjects, since every variety of card game known at the time was eagerly and openly played at Versailles.

Five brothers and sisters, named Harris, whose united ages total 438 years, met at a birthday party at Radnage, Bucks. Their ages are 96, 92, 88, 82 and 80, an average of more than 87. Five other members of the same family, who have died, were aged 93, 89, 88, 87 and 77.

Among those recently ordained by the Bishop of Durham was the Rev. A. M. Smith, M. A., to the curacy of Houghton-le-Spring. Mr. Smith has been totally blind for 20 years, but has succeeded in taking his degree at Oxford. The Bishop of Durham appointed him to read the Gospel in the ordination service, which he did from his Braille Bible. His complete Braille Bible consists of nearly 6,000 pages, fills 39 volumes, and occupies a shelf seven feet long.

The GHOST BREAKER

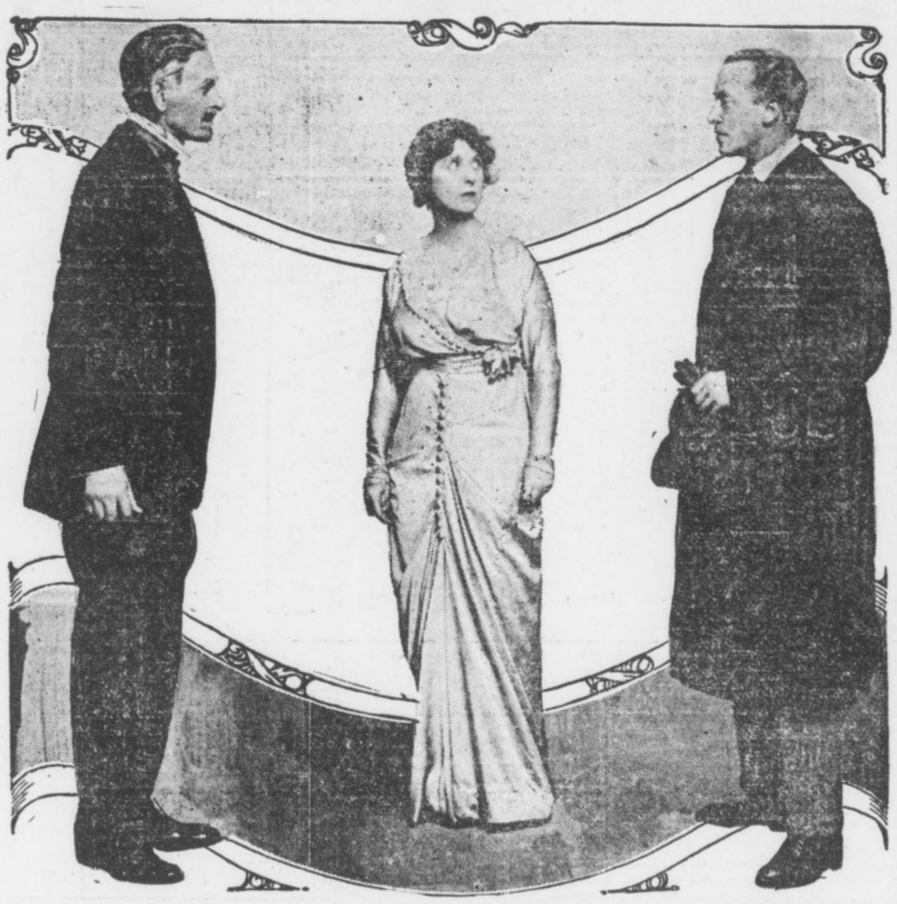
THE PRINCESS INTRODUCES JARVIS TO THE DUKE



"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I am bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Spooks!" grinned Jarvis, appreciatively. He was beginning to be glad he had come. But he saw no answering gleam in the young woman's sober face.

"Call it anything you like," she replied soberly, "but the castle is haunted—just the same. My grandfather was one of the wealthiest nobles in Spain. He died suddenly, leaving everything to my father, his only son and heir. When my father went to take possession of his estate in Segurn the town was full of weird stories of uncanny happenings. The castle was deserted—every one had fled and all told of something in armor that stalked the halls at night. My father laughed at the silly natives and said he would go into the castle and show them how foolish their fears were. He went—and," the girl's voice trembled slightly, "and he was never seen again."

"Hm!" ejaculated Jarvis, with interest. "What happened to him?"

The Princess shook her head and her dark eyes grew very large. "No one knows. He disappeared—vanished utterly—without the slightest clew. Since then two others have disappeared."

"Well, why don't you keep out of there?" he demanded, half seriously. "What's the idea of teasing that spook, anyway?"

"But now my brother has gone in and they haven't heard from him!" Her eyes filled with tears. "That's why I haven't heard from him—why he hasn't answered my cables."

The Treasure.

With true chivalry the young man slightly turned his eyes away that he might not see the tears.

"Now, that's it!" he declared briskly. "You want me to go in and find your brother."

"Yes, that's it!" she cried eagerly. "Save my brother, but," she added quickly, "you must know about this locket. It tells where to find the treasure."

Jarvis ran his other hand through his hair and stared at the trinket in bewilderment. They were coming too fast for him, as he had said.

"Treasure! What is treasure?"

"My grandfather is known to have converted all his wealth into Spanish gold," she explained, "to finance a colonization scheme in Cuba. It amounted to about a million dollars in your money."

The knight whistled. "A million! Eh? How long ago did this happen?"

"Fifteen years ago—and nobody has found it."

Jarvis apparently arranged all these facts in his mind and then inquired:

"Why did you come to America?"

The Princess held up the locket. "A part of the story was that a plan had been made, showing just where the treasure was secreted, but this plan could never be found. Quite by accident, I recently learned that this plan had been hidden in the back of this locket, and the locket, I discovered, had been sold and was in America. It was to find this locket that I left my brother and came to America. It was this locket that you saw last night."

"Then my work is," Jarvis summed up, "to find your brother and solve the mystery? All right! We'll explain to the Duke that you are taking me to Spain for no other reason than to solve this mystery. Let me see—in America we have Roosevelt, the trust-breaker; Farley, the strike-breaker—and why not, Jarvis, the ghost-breaker?"

"Why, yes," smiled the Princess, uncertainly. She could not always tell when he was serious. "It might—why not? Carlos would believe almost anything of the Americans."

Her Secret.

"And will you tell him," he asked wickedly, "that you have made me a—er—what is it?—a vassal?"

Again the rich color sought the lady's dark face.

"I think not," she decided, shyly. "Not just yet."

He smiled at her confusion and pressed his advantage.

"By the way, your—er—just how should a vassal address his Princess?"

Dona Maria appeared to give the matter some consideration.

"Highness is correct," she told him, with some hesitation.

Jarvis studied this over before he pursued his quest for further information.

"Your Highness, a vassal doesn't really amount to much, does he? No—I thought he was a piker," he added ruefully.

"A piker?" queried Her Highness, puzzled. "You mean he carries a pike?"

"No, no—a piker is a tin horn."

"Tin horn?" echoed Dona Maria, more mystified than ever.

"Well," Jarvis began, desperately—habitual use of slang plays the mischief with classical synonyms—"a—a sort of pawn in this game of chess—along with you kings and queens and castles and—things. For instance," the light of fun returned, "could a perfectly good, honest, reliable, hard-working vassal work his way up and get to be a Duke—or a lord or—something like that?"

Dona Maria laughed softly. "You're an ambitious vassal, aren't you? I'm afraid you wouldn't be satisfied with being less than a king."

"A king, prince or—a bandit," he returned, meaningly.

"A bandit? And why a bandit?"

"A king might demand—a prince request—a bandit seize."

Dona Maria looked blank. "Seize what?"

The vassal drew a quick breath. "That which a mere vassal may only admire," he fairly blurted out.

Dona Maria was saved the necessity or reminding him that he was still a vassal by a knock which she seemed to expect.

"Sh-h, he is here. What shall I call you?"

The Duke Arrives.

"Warren, Mr. Warren," he whispered, glumly. He felt that he would without straining himself cultivate a man's size dislike for the exalted cousin.

The Princess opened the door. "Come in, cousin," she said sweetly. His Grace of Alva entered, but fairly shied like a spirited horse at the sight of the stranger.

"Oh, I'm intruding," he exclaimed, in a manner which said plainly: "What the dickens are you doing here? Get out!" This convinced Jarvis that he would eventually come to dislike the exalted cousin by the running foot.

"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I'm bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

Jarvis nodded easily. "Glad to know you."

"I am honored," returned the Duke, his manner plainly indicating that the honor was the other way around. "Interesting task you have undertaken. May I ask if that is your regular profession?"

His tone was a mixture of the condescendingly paternal and an aristocratic sneer, which those of first families consider the thing in dealing with their untitled inferiors. He did not mean to be especially offensive to the young man—it was merely the way he had been brought up.

"That is my business," replied Jarvis, outwardly unruffled. "Solving mysteries—looking up the family skeleton—hunting out spooks—what we call in America a 'ghost breaker.'"

"A strange calling," mused the Duke, eying the young man keenly. "Really, I never heard of anything more extraordinary."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

The scene of the story is laid in the Vanderlip Hotel, New York City. The Princess Maria Theresa of Segura, a beautiful Spanish woman, is suddenly awakened in her suite by the sound of pistol shots. She hears a man running down the hall. He crashes against her door, breaking the lock, and enters. She sees he is a tall, good-looking young man, dressed in evening clothes. He is carrying a revolver in his right hand, and blood is dripping from a wound in his left. He begs the Princess to hide him. She, moved by some indescribable impulse, decides that she will. She directs him to an inner room, and a few minutes later, when the hotel detective knocks on the door, she tells him she is all right and sends him away. The young man, who is Warren Jarvis, of Kentucky, comes out of his hiding place, and the Princess, for the first time, notices his wound. She is moved to sympathy and showers him with questions as to what has occurred. Jarvis tells her about a Kentucky feud between his family and another named Markham. He says he left Kentucky to avoid the feudists, but encountered one of them in the hotel, which explains the shots. The Princess declares she will help him, and then asks the stranger question, "Are you afraid of ghosts?" Jarvis laughs, but grows solemn when the Princess tells him she has dangerous work for him to do. She makes him swear allegiance, and creates him her "vassal." Then she tells him to get her trunk, which is going to be shipped to a steamship on which she sails to Spain the following day. First Jarvis tells her to telephone to his servant, Rusty Snow, a negro. The servant is instructed to procure passage for himself and Jarvis in the ship. Jarvis then prepares to get into the trunk, but first begins to question the Princess about herself.

Now go on with the story.

Julius' Happy Day

"IT'S perfectly awful and I don't understand it!" said Julius' mother, applying a very dainty handkerchief to her eyes.

"Disgraceful!" said Julius' father, emphatically.

Julius stood with a hangdog look, his eyes on the dusty stubbed footgear that had started out earlier in the day as carefully blacked shoes. There was a tear in his blouse and several rents were in his trousers and a general atmosphere of disrepute clung to him.

"He seems perfectly possessed," went on his mother, "to escape to the alley and hobnob with those young ragamuffins who make it their headquarters! Goodness knows, I wish we could move away from here! I had Arthur over especially to play with him! What did you do with Arthur?"

"Aw!" said Julius, with a growl. "I ditched him early! He's no good, honest, ma—he's a sissy!"

"Meaning that he is a gentlemanly, well-bred boy!" flashed Julius' mother. "You see?" to Julius' father, in despair.

His Games.

"What manner of amusements interested you in the alley?" inquired his father judicially of Julius.

"Aw," said Julius, "I met Fatty an' he said the gang was up in the barn where Lilkins keeps his horses, an' we went there and played train robbers till Slicker, he fell down the hole where the hay comes down, an' I fell down, too, an' Lilkins he comes in an' says we've broken the back of his best horse by falling on it, through the hole, and he'll be darned if——"

"Julius!"

"Well, you ast me, didn't you?" demanded Julius indignantly. "Anyhow, he said he'd be—that—if he'd stand for it, an' Fatty he yells like everything because he hasn't any parents an' lives with his aunt, and she's away workin' all day. So Lilkins can't do anything to him, I guess.

"An' I told Lilkins he didn't dast, 'cause we wouldn't buy any more groceries from him if he did, an' I wuzn't doing anything anyhow. An' it was an awful old horse. An' then Ginger—his father has a plumbing shop three blocks down—he said they was a pony in his barn, and we went and hitched it to a cart and then we drove."

"Drove!" shrieked Julius' mother. "With all the automobiles on the streets and everything! Where did you drive?"

"I dunno," said Julius. "We had a nice drive. We went clear over on the west side across the river. Only a policeman he said he'd arrest us if we kept stopping in the middle of the street to fix the harness. We had to tie it together. An' a lot of automobiles got backed up behind us and they were fierce, the way they talked! Ginger, he sassed them back.

"'Who d'you think owns this horse?' he said to 'em when they told us to get out of the way. 'Guess it's got a right on the road if it does eat oats instead of gasoline, smarty!' An' I saw the Mrs. Kingman you know in her electric——"

"Oh!" moaned Julius' mother. "To have the Kingsmans see my child in the grasp of a policeman and with those little ragged——"

"A man he got mad," Julius proceeded, "because the pony ate some bananas from the back of his push cart an' Fatty threw a stone at him and he caught me and shook me something fierce an' another policeman he said, 'Now, go on out of here, you kids, quick, before I run you in!' An' a boy on a bicycle got in our way coming home an' it was his fault, because we yelled at him and Ginger thought the pony'd broke his leg, but it was only skinned. It was a second-hand bicycle anyhow and we got away because the pony went faster than the boy could walk. I guess he'd skinned his leg, too.

No Bell.

"The street car that hit us only pushed us sideways and tipped us over an' it was the motorman's fault, because he didn't ring no bell. Anyhow, I didn't hear any. An' Ginger's father was awful mad. He was waiting for us. He said the pony's people only rented room in the barn an' it would be a wonder if they didn't sue him for damages. What's damages? I don't know what he did to Ginger, but Ginger yelled awful an' I came away then any how.

"An' it wasn't my fault that Mrs. Button's clothesline broke when I ran through her yard an' hit it. They didn't tie it up tight enough. An' the girl was mad when she saw the clothes all down! Honest, I didn't do nothin' father!"

"Julius," said his father, with awful sternness, "you march straight upstairs to bed, this minute!"

"Wh-what do you think?" quavered Julius' mother in despair as her son disappeared.

"I think," said Julius' father, with a broad grin, "that Julius had a good time for once in his life. However, it might be well to unload his superabundant activity on a summer resort farm this summer. Let's look up one somewhere."

The Bishop's Story.

Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak fourteen years before in London and remembered only one thing he said.

"He told me that fourteen years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head and was picked up dead.

"He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received this reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because as she passed my window in her fall I heard her say, "Now for a bump!"'"

"That's it, that's it. You'll sell five pairs of these shoes to one of any other maker's."

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Christine Norman's Rules for the "Too-Thin" Woman

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

CHRISTINE NORMAN is exactly the sort of girl you would be if you could choose—pretty, sweet, gracious, alert, honest with herself and sympathetic with all of life. And if you have seen "Peg o' My Heart" you would never guess it!

In that play she has to play the part of a girl whose cold, self-centered, unsympathetic nature makes life a burden for the dear little Irish cousin we all love—and all honor to the histrionic ability of the girl who portrays coldness and snobbishness so convincingly that the interviewer's heart sank at the thought of a chat with her. Exit the girl of the play, and enter Christine Norman and joy to the heart of the interviewer at the same time.

Miss Norman's manner is as wholesome and unaffected as her own pretty pink and white room, and her mind is as interestingly many sided as the vast array of vastly differing books that are so prevalent all about her room.

"Now, how could I have a beauty secret?" she laughed. Look at her pictures and you will sympathize with my thought that Heaven and the good fairies had been so kind that "beauty secrets" were scarcely needed.

"However, I have a very original trouble for these days," she went on, cheerily. "I have the unusual horror of getting too thin! Once I did become terribly thin—and I had to go on the milk cure, nothing but milk for seven weeks, and quarts and quarts a day all that time. Even now whenever I start losing I proceed to drink eight glasses of milk a day. Honestly now, aren't curves much prettier than angles? And when cubist types go out of style and women want to get back to normal I recommend the milk cure to their attention.

An Easy Cure.

"A milk cure is an easy thing for me to take, because I am not a particularly carnivorous animal. I believe firmly in eating vegetables in great quantities and eating very sparingly of meat. A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal for hot weather diet.

"But I really don't believe in extremes—enough sleep—eight hours for a woman who is using up her supply of energy in the strain of brain work; enough nourishing food, with chocolates most earnestly omitted; enough fresh air, enough play, and, above all, enough reading to keep you in touch with big thoughts, new ideas in the world's progress. With enough of all these things sanely blended and leavened with ambition to find out what you can do and energy to do it, we ought all have the beauty of clean, sane health, at any rate, ought we not?"

Answering question with question, I queried: "But for the beauty that allures the eye, don't you think we can all cultivate a bit of that over and above our natural dower?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Norman, "I think we can, and we should, too. Now, after she is about 22, almost any woman's facial muscles begin to sag a bit. If she can afford a dollar a week, I think every woman should ge to a good masseusse and have those muscles trained upward again. If not, I think one treatment and a careful observation of methods are well worth while. Then the purchase of a jar of good cold cream, and the woman can start muscle building on her own account.

"Some people think it so foolish, almost immoral, to try to save beauty. Now, would these very people wear suits that needed pressing and sponging and braid sewed on? Well, I think we should keep or bodies in at least as good trim as our clothes—clean and in the pink of well-cared-for condition.

Easily Acquired.

"Then if we are as sensible about learning what to do with our looks as we are about proudly developing any talent we happen to have, a reputation for beauty's charming sister—attractiveness—ought to be easily acquired. I know a very pretty girl who sometimes looks attractive quite accidentally, but only sometimes. She simply does not know whether her hair should be parted over her left eye or worn pompadour. She has no idea whether her hats should have tall quills in front or droopy bows at the back. A mirror, a little common sense and proper independence of fads would teach her the simple solution to what ought not be a puzzle at all.

"But truly, I don't think we can be a beautiful race until we give the generations beauty to inherit. Heredity to give you strength and power and beauty is the greatest beauty secret of all I am sure. Because with a fine heredity a healthy body is almost assured, and a fine mind and a strong character will be present too, and with these things the finest type of beauty will be easy to realize. Surely you think so, too?" concluded Christine Norman, lifting a rose-flushed face lit with great earnest eyes and pulsing with vitality that makes of her red-gold hair a beautiful aureole.

And surely we all must think that the finest type of beauty is a thing we all may strive toward—a healthy body glowing with spirit and soul.

I have the usual horror of getting too thin.

When I start losing I proceed to drink seven glasses of milk a day.

Curves are prettier than angles.

I believe firmly in eating vegetables in large quantities and meat sparingly.

A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal.

I think every woman should go to a good masseuse.

Miss Christine Norman.

Pa Shows Some Sense, at That

NO CHANCE FOR FRANK AS 1914 TURTLE BOSS

By Jo Williams.

MEMPHIS, July 10.—Stick a pin here. Charley Frank will not manage the 1914 Memphis club. Whether Bill Bernhard will be returned or not is a matter yet to be determined. The moral cinch is, however, that if a change is made it will in no way concern the present president-manager of the New Orleans Pelicans. It is quite probable that Frank will not be back at New Orleans next season, but as to his assuming charge of the Turtles there is about as much truth in the report as there are red corpuscles in a Bermuda onion.

Perhaps the foregoing needs explanation. When the Pelicans hit the larded lane some five weeks ago, that ubiquitous person, "One in the know," hustled through with the information that Frank, tiring of his New Orleans investment, had made arrangements with the Memphis club president whereby he was to succeed Bernhard at the close of the current campaign.

The yarn originated in Birmingham. Immediately and without undue hesitation it was given the well-known and emphatic pooh-pooh, locally. Yet it refused to wither and fade away, as is the tragic wont of the average canard. Mique Finn strengthened it by offering to wager a Stetson that the rumored change would come to pass. Mique refused to state where he got his tip. "Just linger around and ye shall receive the ocular proof," was the Celt's evasive retort.

Finn and his downtrodden slaves of balldom spent an off day in this city, and right away the Frank vs. Bernhard affair was revived.

* * *

WHEREUPON, Mr. Coleman, who is connected with the local club in the vague capacity of majority stockholder, president, traveling secretary and general overseer of players and premises, clutched the occasion to unburden himself of large quantities of free and forensic speech, a peculiarity not uncommon with ball magnates. Among other things, Mr. Coleman delivered: "So far I have not given the advisability of changing managers a thought. I can not say just now whether or not Bernhard will be with us again next season. He may and he may not. But one thing is certain. Charley Frank will not be Bill's successor, if one is named. There is absolutely no chance, and those interested in the matter may rest assured that my word is final. Where and from whom the ridiculous yarn originated is a mystery to me. The report that I have been negotiating with Frank for weeks in regard to a change is a fabrication of the veriest sort. Neither Frank nor myself has ever discussed the matter. Indeed, I doubt if Frank himself ever dreamed of returning here. The Dutchman will never manage a Memphis ball club as long as I am in charge."

So much for the "well-founded report."

$4,000 Offered by Sutton for E. Brown

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Larry Sutton, scout for the Brooklyn National League club, who has been in Nashville for the past ten days looking over Southern League players, announced last night that he had made an offer of $4,000 to the Montgomery club for Pitcher Elmer Brown for delivery at the end of this season.

Sutton was so impressed with the masterly game pitched by E. Brown against the Vols last week that he immediately opened negotiations for the brilliant Billiken slabman. His first offer was $3,500, but he willingly met the above price of $4,000, which was set by Manager Dobbs.

"Elmer Brown is not only by long odds the best pitcher I have seen in the Southern League this year," said the Brooklyn scout, "but he is one of the most promising boys I have seen in many seasons."

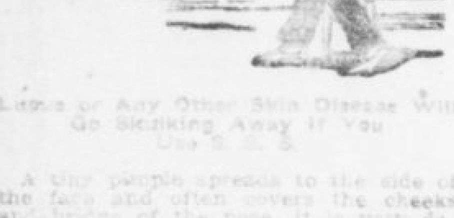
Up to the time of Sutton's departure for Cincinnati the deal for Brown had not been closed, but it was stated by Sutton that he had urged President Ebbets, of the Dodgers, to lose no time in landing the mainstay of the Montgomery pitching staff.

HERE'S SOME BATTLE, WHAT?

CHICAGO, July 10.—Marty Cutler is en route to-day to Clovis, N. Mex., where he boxes Carl Morris, the Oklahoma giant, July 16. The battle is scheduled to go fifteen rounds, and the winner will be proclaimed heavyweight champion of the Southwest.

Lupus Worst Form of Skin Diseases

Here is a Home Treatment that Overcomes even Worst Cases.



Lupus or Any Other Skin Disease Will Go Slinking Away if You Use S. S. S.

A tiny pimple spreads to the side of the face and often covers the cheeks and bridge of the nose. It is very destructive to the tissues of the skin. No external treatments will overcome it, as the cause of lupus is from impurities in the blood supply. The only known method of cure is to get the blood supply under the control of S. S. S., the famous blood specific. Its action is quite remarkable and has direct influence upon the network of small blood vessels and glands in the skin.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and insist upon having it. For illustrated book on skin diseases write The Swift Specific Co., 182 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga. Do not allow some zealous clerk to larrup the atmosphere with eloquence over something "just as good" as S. S. S. Beware of all substitutes.

HUGGINS BEST OF PLAYERS IN TENN. TOURNEY

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 10.—The finals in the Tennessee State championship tennis tournament now in progress in this city are expected to be reached Friday afternoon. In that case the championship match between the winners of the tourney and Carlton Y. Smith, of Atlanta, present State champion, will be fought out Saturday. Local sharks predict that the match will narrow down to either Huggins or Smith of Nashville as the winner of the present tourney.

Charles Rodgers of Knoxville former champion, was eliminated Wednesday afternoon by Huggins in two straight sets, 7-5, 6-1. Rodgers had previously defeated Cleage of Knoxville, and Foster, also of this city.

Chattanooga has only one entry, Alex Guerry, while Nashville is represented by Parrish, Caldwell, Huggins and Smith.

Some excellent matches have been pulled off thus far during the tourney. Smith of Nashville defeated Wester of Kansas City in a beautiful match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

By defeating Rodgers and Lowry of this city, both crack players, Huggins is favorite as the winner. Much interest has been manifested in the tourney and large crowds have been in attendance each day.

RIVERS HITS MILKMAN; NOW HE'S IN TROUBLE

VENTURA, CAL., July 10.—Joe Rivers, lightweight pugilist, must appear in court here July 16 to answer a charge of having broken the jaw of a milkman who recently disputed Rivers' right to the road while the pugilist was driving his motor car. Rivers' bond was fixed at $500.

PASTIMING.

When you pay your money to see a stunt athletic,
And you sit upon a sunny bleacher seat,
And you see a stunt that's awfully pathetic,
It is time for you to raise your voice and bleat.

When the players spend the afternoon in stalling,
And in wishing that the game had not begun,
And the manager persists in vainly bawling,
The rooter's life is not a happy one.

We note by the papers that several hundred persons clamored outside the Cracker club's office to get their money back on Fourth of July. This shows that the birth rate has increased to 120 per hour.

If the Atlanta management is endeavoring to make itself unpopular there is evidence that said management is headed in that direction at the rate of approximately 8,000 miles per hour.

In an indirect way we note that Tom O'Rourke has been affected by the recent heat. Tom has agreed to become manager of Carl Morris.

When one reads the report that one wrestler choked another half to death, one deplores the fact that he stopped so soon.

If those surgeons who cut out Marty O'Toole's appendix will only cut out his wildness, one Fred Clarke will be much obliged.

If the Athletics could only play the Yanks all season their average would be .996¾ or thereabouts.

Joe Jackson still leads the American League in batting. This is due to the fact that he never has ruined his eyesight reading literature.

FODDER FOR FANS

Rube Marquard, of the Giants, is pitching in his old-time form again. He twirled the Giants to their fourteenth consecutive victory, allowing but four hits. The best any of the Cubs got off him was a two-bagger.

"Babe" Adams, of the Pirates' pitching staff, allowed the Phillies but one clean hit, while the Quakers used up four pitchers trying to beat Pittsburg. Their efforts were useless, for the Phillies were shut out.

* * *

By being beaten by the Reds the Brooklyn Dodgers reduced the gap separating them from the second division in the National League. But 14 points now separate the Dodgers from the Pirates, the latter being leaders of the second division.

The New York Yankees were the only Eastern team which did not win in the West yesterday.

Pitcher Frank Harrington, of the Lynn club, of the New England League, has been sold to the Cincinnati Reds for $4,000.

Dauss, of the Detroit Tigers, beats the Washington Senators as often as he goes against them. He has met the Senators three times and has beaten them three times.

Umpire Hank O'Day, veteran National League arbitrator, is seriously ill in a Chicago sanitarium.

Although Cleveland outhit Philadelphia, the latter won because of the Naps' conservative base-running.

Honus Wagner, the hard hitting shortstop of the Pirates, nearly cracked a rib laughing when he heard the report that he is all in as a regular. Honus says he will be back in his old form when his injured knee mends.

CRACKER STAKE WILL BE RUN FRIDAY NIGHT

IN the belief that "Tex" Richards will be no match for the other Motordrome stars in a long race, Manager Noon Hudson has scheduled a big 7-mile feature for Friday night. It will be the final heat of the Cracker Sweepstakes. Manager Bill Smith, of the Atlanta club, will start the race and it will go seven miles, which is further than any race has gone in Atlanta this year.

A 5-mile race about marks the limit of a motorcycle sprinter's distance. He can stand up for five miles pretty well. After that time there is no chance. Machines and bodies give down under the strain.

In races over five miles it takes a different sort of rider. And in this long-distance stuff Shields and Lockner ought to star. They are two of the greatest endurance stars in the world. They proved it when they won the famous 24-hour race, the most grueling contest ever staged at a motordrome. Of course, it was a team event and the men were on and off the track at all times, but it was the most awful test of endurance to which a motor rider was ever put. This 7-mile stuff ought to suit Lockner and Shields to perfection.

Of course, Richards does not necessarily have it all his own way, even in the shorter races. McNeil's J. A. P. went out again Tuesday night, this time with a couple of bolts missing from his magneto. And Graves' new Excelsior did not prove to be running right.

McNeil swears that never before did he have such luck as this season. He claims all 1913 honors as the Jinx Kid; but he alleges that he has never before been the victim of so many mischances. He believes he has changed his luck at last, and at any rate he has taken every possible precaution against accidents.

RINGSIDE NOTES

It looks very much as if Los Angeles fans are to see a heavyweight bout some time next month. Tom McCarey, coast promoter, is trying to stage a Gunboat Smith-Arthur Pelky match, and has already secured Smith's consent for such a fight. McCarey is now dickering with Tommy Burns, manager for Pelky.

* * *

Jeff O'Connell, the veteran featherweight, who recently was defeated by Matty McCue, will meet Freddie Enock in a six-round battle at Aurora, Ill., on July 17.

* * *

Kid Pusky, local featherweight, is after a match with any 122-pounder in Atlanta. Pusky is particularly anxious to get on with Kid Young or Charlie Lee. J. P. Ellis, manager of Pusky, says he will give either boy a $100 side bet. Ellis can be reached at 30 Clifton Street, Kirkwood, Ga., phone Decatur 226.

* * *

Reports from New Orleans state that Frankie Russell and Johnny Lore are in great shape for their twenty-round tussle in the Pelican City Sunday afternoon. Russell and Lore recently met in a ten-round battle, with the latter having a slight shade.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion of the world, says he will be ready to defend his title on Labor Day. His stomach, which has been bothering him for several weeks, is again in shape. His opponent will probably be Kid Williams, and the pair will most likely don the gloves in Tom McCarey's arena at Vernon, Cal.

* * *

A return bout, this time of ten rounds, between "Muggsy" McGraw and Addie Brennan would draw a capacity house. McGraw is now taking boxing lessons from Jim Corbett, former heavyweight champion.

* * *

The National Sporting Club of London, where Bombardier Wells is a big favorite, hunted the British Isle for an easy opponent for the Englishman and found him in the person of Patsy Mahoney. Of course, Wells won.

Wonder what Billy Nolan, the bounced manager of Willie Ritchie, thinks of the lightweight's easy victory over Joe Rivers. It sure was a glorious Fourth for Willie.

* * *

Leach Cross is still on the coast, undecided whether to remain there in hopes of getting on with Willie Ritchie or to jump over to New York for some easy ten-round money. McCarey is trying to get the champion for a Labor Day date with the Easterner. Should Ritchie refuse, Joe Rivers may get the match.

* * *

Marcel Thomas, the French welterweight, is in Philadelphia trying to get on with some boys of his division. The lack of good 142-pound boys on this side makes it hard to find a suitable opponent for him.

* * *

Eddie Campi has asked McCarey to match him with the winner of the Williams-Ledoux bout on July 15. Campi has already defeated Ledoux.

* * *

Tom Tortorich is still after Willie Ritchie's signature to a set of articles to meet Jack Britton. He has offered $20,000 for the title go.

LEFTY SCHWENK PITCHES 36 INNINGS IN 4 DAYS

SAGINAW, MICH., July 10.—Pitcher "Lefty" Schwenk, of the local South Michigan League team, has just hung up a record which is believed to be unequaled in recent years of organized baseball. In four days he pitched four complete games and finished another—36 innings—in which he struck out 33 men in the 36 innings and allowed 21 hits, which netted his opponents seven runs.

WHITE SOX BUY TOM DALY.

UNCLE SAM TO HELP TOURING BALL TEAMS

By James Clarkson.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The United States Government has decided to take recognition of the fact that the Chicago White Sox and New York Giants are going to take a tour of the world during the fall and winter months. A letter to that effect has reached President Comiskey's office.

Now, when you come to study a little, than means a whole lot to the interested parties of that wonderful tour, on which the performers of Comiskey's world-famous White Sox and John McGraw's always fighting Giants are to show to the other civilized nations of the world what a wonderful pastime baseball really is.

Callahan Called on Bryan.

When the White Sox played in Washington during their Eastern invasion early in June, Manager Jimmy Callahan called on William Jennings Bryan. The call was for the express purpose of interesting the Secretary of State in the contemplated trip of the baseball outfit. Colonel Bryan has never been much of a student of baseball—in fact, he inquired of the surprised Callahan whom the White Sox represented. He also wanted to know where McGraw's Giants hailed from. He forgot to ask whether or not all of McGraw's men were huge of size.

Wilson Approves of Plan.

After the short interview Callahan left the Secretary's office, and while he was treated courteously, he was none too favorably impressed. He had an idea, "If I could only see the big boss—President Wilson—I might be able to get better satisfaction," thought Cal. To make a long story very short, Cal was accorded the interview with the President and the Executive informed him that he would not only do all in his power to make the trip a success, but that he believed in it and he personally hoped it would terminate as expected.

Bryan Writes to Callahan.

Yesterday we learned from Commy that he had recently received a letter from Secretary Bryan. When asked what news the letter brought, if any, Commy stated that Mr. Bryan had written him most cordially concerning the proposed trip. Furthermore, he requested Commy to send him, as soon as possible, the itinerary of the trip. Once he gets that, he has promised to notify the American Consuls in the various cities to be visited to give all the help possible to the visit of the Sox-Giant combine. So, after all, it will be seen that Cal's short visit to President Wilson last month was not merely a press stunt. "With the old U. S. Government in favor of the trip and throwing favors in our way, we should show a lot of speed in the foreign lands," said Cal yesterday when referring to the Bryan letter.

Crackers Should Wallop Gulls

Finn's Team in Hopeless Slump

By Percy H. Whiting.

NOW comes the tug of war! The Mobile Gulls are here for three games with the Crackers. The Gulls are in a slump. Of their last twelve outs they have lost eight.

Every game the locals can take away from Mike Finn's team is all clear profit.

It is reported that the Gulls are crabbing at each other and quarreling with umpires, opposing players and even with the genial Mike Finn himself.

Their hearts are "broke."

Of course, they are a scrapping club, even in a rout, and they will fight along and win many a game. But if ever the Crackers had a chance to make money off the league leaders now is the time.

* * *

THE Gulls' slump will never stop this side of fourth or fifth place. Mark the prediction. For they've quit and they are quarreling among themselves.

In a recent interview Finn stated that he would not strengthen the club.

"How can we?" Finn is reported to have said, "We have no money to strengthen with."

True it is that the Gulls, after making an amazing showing, aren't drawing at all. They don't have any attendance on the home grounds. The Gulls' fans believe their team is sure to win a pennant and they have quit caring a hang.

If ever proof were needed that Mobile is a hopeless baseball town it is forthcoming now. The town has quit worse than the team. In fact, it was the quitting of the fans, the lack of financial support and the knocking over defeats that finally got the Gulls on the run.

* * *

NOT since the year Newt Fisher won a pennant with an $11-team has any club that cost as little gone as high as the 1913 Gulls.

Finn probably established a precedent in perfecting a league-leading team with the cash expenditure of $2,000.

After the close of last year's race, Demaree was forwarded to the New York Giants for $10,000. Remaining on the twirling staff were Campbell, Berger and Cavet. For $5,000 Robertson was secured from the Indianapolis club, while Hogg was obtained for a small sum. Thus the twirling staff was rounded for a few shekels.

In the infield, Paulette, Starr and O'Dell were returned. Stock was shunted from the Giants in the Demaree trade. Thus the infield was perfected without an expenditure of a cent. The outfield, consisting of Jacobson, Robertson and Clark, was secured for a pittance. Jacobson was returned by the Giants at the beginning of the season for the price of recall in 1912. Robertson was grabbed from the Giants on an optional agreement, costing $500. Clark was the property of the Gulls, farmed out to the Texas League, and cost Mickey nothing. When Jackson was put out, McGill, gathered in the Gull fold at the opening of the season for the signing, was recalled from Pensacola. The catchers were grabbed without loosening a kopeck from the coffers, as Larry Brown was a free agent and Schmidt was obtained via the same route.

* * *

IF the Crackers can tear a hole in the shattered Gulls and do some damage to the Billikens next week they will pull out for the South with the prospects bright. They will have a hard trip ahead of them, but they will be right up in the running. Of course, the Southern trip is likely to mean a big slump. But when the club gets home again it ought to be near enough to the top to win a pennant.

The Crackers are back in there fighting again and that means trouble for any opposition.

JENNINGS STILL AN IDOL WITH DIAMOND FANS

By Sid C. Keener.

BACK in the days of 1907-1908-1909, Hughey Jennings was being lauded as the smartest of baseball generals. All around the circuit there was praise for the skipper of the Detroit Tigers. In a single season he developed a sixth-place it on top for three successive years in the American League.

But while the Tigers were prospering and folks spoke kind words to Hughey, he always replied:

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me. They're winning the games and I'm just one of them. You don't see me punching out a hit in the pinch or fooling the batter when he must be fooled."

He Had the Dope.

After three straight years of success and prosperity, the tide turned. They don't herald Jennings the greatest of all greats. In the eyes of the fans, Hughey is not such a brainy fellow any more.

But Jennings' statement came true. The remarks he gave out when the Tigers were winning the pennants can be renewed and show why the Tigers aren't the same terrors of the league.

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me!"

Why aren't the Tigers winning pennants like they did in 1907-1908-1909? The answer comes by comparing the team that won for the Tigers those years and the team Hughey Jennings is directing to-day.

The Old Stars Not There.

There's quite a difference in the class of the Detroit tribe now.

Among the important missing athletes are: Wild Bill Donovan, George Mullin, Tyrus Cobb, Eddie Summers, Davy Jones, Matty McIntyre, Jim Delehanty, Claude Rossman, Eddie Killian, Herman Schaefer, Charley O'Leary and possibly a few more.

In the places of these athletes who were stars of the first magniture at that time, are Bobby Veach, "Lefty" High, Oscar Vitt, Bill Louden, Texas Hall, John Dubuc, Zamloch, Clauss, House and a few more.

Jennings hasn't a pitcher who can go through a season and win 25 games and lose but 4, as "Wild Bill" did in 1907. Further, Eddie Summers, who used to beat the Athletics almost every time he pitched; Killian, who could halt the White Sox and Red Sox, and George Mullin, who won almost every time he took the hill, are gone and forgotten.

Even commanding a team that is down in the second division, Hughey Jennings remains an idol in baseball. His general character and make-up; his style of coaching; his personality; his way of arguments, not roughing and fighting with the umpires, continually have made Jennings such an idol.

He Used Smooth System.

It was the Jennings system that made Hughey popular with everybody. When he entered the American League he brought with him a new style. It was common on the diamond to see Fielder Jones, Clark Griffith, Jimmy Collins, Joe Cantillon and that kind rush up to the ump and kick up a rowdy fuss on every close decision.

Also, it was an every-day sight to see some managers bawl out the players during the course of the game. Jennings had a different system. He accepted the verdicts from the field official with an "All right, boys; let it go at that," and when one of his side turned a bad play, Hughey simply used to pat him on the back and say a kind word on the ball field.

Bisland Horns Into Hero Class

His Hit Wins Game for Crackers

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN these piping days when pennant aspirations are beating strongly in human and other breasts, a hero is born each day. To-day the laurel, the bay, the Richard K. Fox belt, or whatever insignia is proper for a Casablanca of the ball lot goes to Mr. Bisland, shortstopper of considerable renown. If the winning streak of the Crackers continues much longer, Bill Smith will have to search around for new hero material or crown the bat boy. For within the past two weeks there is hardly a Cracker who has not felt the touch of the accolade.

Mr. Bisland horned into the Leonidas class in the most approved and dramatic fashion. He was placed there by the generous and gentle Rube Kissinger, who figured that Wally Smith had been acclaimed enough and it was time to let another's heart warm to the shouts of an admiring populace.

* * *

THE hero stuff was pulled in the fourth inning of yesterday's pastiming, which was about as good a spot as any. The battle with the Memphii had rocked along for three sessions without any tangible results. Kissinger was working his usual cool, heady game, and the Crackers did not look particularly formidable against his hurling.

In the fourth, though, things happened. Tommy Long opened with a measly pop back of first base, which Bill Abstein couldn't grab, and when the ball carromed with reverse English the right fielder scampered on for a two-base hit. Welchonce, to display his batting versatility, eased a bunt down the third base line and beat it out.

Alperman then cracked sharply to third. Ward messed the ball, but, to the surprise of the stands, Welchonce remained true and faithful to the first cushion and wouldn't budge, evidently thinking the ball had been caught on a line. How he thought so is the eighth wonder, but let it go at that. Alperman reached first, but as Welchonce was also there one of them had to move back to the bench.

Rudderham eeny-meeny-miny-moed and picked Welchonce for this duty. Bailey followed by striking out, but Alperman had swiped second during the whiffling.

As the formidable Smith approached the pan, Kissinger and Seabough held pow-wow and passed the third sacker.

* * *

BISLAND strode haughtily, but not too confidently, to the plate. Inasmuch as he hadn't registered in the hit column since the morning game of July 4, the fans were not altogether cheerful.

On the first one over, though, he hit high and far into right field, and Baerwald, who had been playing close to center, couldn't reach the pill. All those ahead of Bisland scampered in, and so did he when the peg to get him at third went to the grandstand. The laurel was immediately brought on.

With the single exception of Mr. Bisland's being present with the punch at the proper moment, the game was featureless, though Dent hurled in improved form. The score was 5 to 2.

Sports and Such

IT OCCASIONALLY HAPPENS that the races for the big league pennants are over when the halfway mark of the early July series is passed—and this looks like one of those occasions.

Even before the Fourth of July—as far back in the spring as could be definitely determined that Connie Mack's athletes were on the water wagon—it was generally conceded that the Athletics would win the American League championship. A glance at the standing of the clubs this morning will convince you that there are no urgent reasons for rearranging your dope.

About the same time it was also conceded that the Giants would win the National League row. Every one around here freely admitted it, but along about the first of June some of our best conceders were beginning to outline their alibis and try them out to have them already for accidents in the fall.

The events of the last week have taken a great weight off the minds of us prophets. The writer some five or six weeks ago casually remarked that the Phillies would blow as the Dodgers had done, and he was beginning to get a trifle scared. Now that they have tossed it they can probably be eliminated. For some reason or other the Phillies have never shown any resiliency in misfortune. The betting, when the park police are not looking, ought to be about 3 to 1 that they will never lead the league again before next spring.

The Giants are not in a position to lie down and take it easy—not to any extent. But McGraw has, by about 20 per cent, the best club in the league, and now that he has gained the lead there could be no excuse for his losing it, short of a railroad wreck—or another adventure out of his pugilistic class.

* * *

THE PHILLIES ARE somewhat like the Cleveland team in the American League, only more so. They have a splendid pitching staff, a smooth fielding machine, plenty of heavy artillery, and they ought to be formidable every step of the way. But for some reason or other they always peter out to a dreary finish.

* * *

THERE IS NOW SOME talk of matching Ad Brennan and Joe Tinker for the championship of the league. McGraw's claim for a return engagement on the ground that he was struck from behind has been thrown out, the difficulties in the way of getting a slam square on the beak from behind being manifold and manifest.

* * *

PROMOTER SPRINGER, of Vancouver, says that he has about cinched a fight between Freddie Welch and Champion Ritchie for September. The thought of the purse he must have offered to overcome the double reluctance of Welch and Ritchie to engage in anything as rough as boxing is appalling.

CHESS IS SURELY AN uncertain game. Here, while all of you thought that Chajes had a cinch, Dr. Adair beat him with a Ruy Lopez. Just think of it!

EARL MACK ACCEPTS 31 CHANCES IN SINGLE GAME

RALEIGH, N. C., July 10.—Earl Mack, son of Connie Mack, manager of the Philadelphia Athletics, is believed to have made a new world's record for chances accepted in a ball game here yesterday between the Raleigh and Durham clubs of the Carolina League. Mack accepted 31 chances, 29 put-outs and two assists, without the least sign of an error. The game went for 18 innings and was won by Raleigh, 4 to 3. Young Mack is manager and first baseman of the Raleigh club.

"RED" DONAHUE DYING.

MAJORS BID FOR PLAYER; $15,000 FOR CHAPPELLE

MILWAUKEE, July 10.—Outfielder Larry Chappelle, of the Milwaukee club, will be sold at auction here July 15. Only a few of the big league clubs have already bid for the youngster. Both Chicago clubs, Detroit, Brooklyn, Cincinnati and Cleveland are in the market. It is said that $15,000 has been offered for the youngster.

PAT GRAHAM, EX-CRACKER, SIGNED BY CHATTANOOGA

CHATTANOOGA, TENN., July 10. Catcher Stanley Graham, formerly of Atlanta, was signed by Manager Elberfeld yesterday. He replaces Fitzgerald, who will be returned to Detroit.

U. S. TEAM MEETS GERMANS IN TENNIS CHAMPIONSHIP

NOTTINGHAM, ENGLAND, July 10.—The American and German tennis representatives clash to-day in the second round of the Dwight F. Davis international lawn tennis cup matches. Although the weather has not been at all favorable for tennis, Harold H. Hackett, captain of the United States teams, says the American players are in good form. The Germans are complaining of the climate. Yesterday's draw is looked upon as being favorable to the American players.

Froitzheim is Germany's strongest singles player, so it is considered just as well for the American team that he should meet Maurice E. McLaughlin, America's champion, in the first day's play. The showing made by Kreutzer, of Germany, in the all English championship, hardly justifies the belief that he can beat R. Norris Williams, of Philadelphia.

Although the Americans are the favorites for the doubles match, they must be in the best form to beat Germany's doubles representatives, Rahe and Kleinschroth.

BUD ANDERSON WON'T BE ABLE TO BOX FOR MONTHS

LOS ANGELES, July 10.—With Bud Anderson in the hospital and not likely to be in a condition to go into the ring for several months, the prospects for a local lightweight match simmers down to a Cross-Rivers battle apparently. Of course, the Harry Trendall match with Cross appears all but closed, and it will be a good one but for a date a little later in the season. Rivers and Cross would be the biggest drawing card possible.

FRANK GOALBY SOLD TO ROANOKE UNDER OPTION

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Frank Goaldby, former second baseman of the Vols, has been sold to the Roanoke club under an optional agreement. He may be recalled at any time his services are needed. Goalby, in a recent series in Mobile, was badly spiked in the hand by Dave Robertson, and will not leave to join the Roanoke club until the wound heals. His fielding while with Nashville was brilliant, but his batting was very weak.

RAIN STOPS MOTORCYCLE RACE; BIG EVENT THURSDAY

NEW YORK, July 10.—Rain stepped in and halted the twenty-mile championship motorcycle race at the Brighton Beach Motordrome here last night before the riders had covered two miles. Ray Veditz was leading when the race was declared off.

The team of Chappelle and Fisher is the favorite in the 100-mile race to be held here to-night.

JIMMY ARCHER INJURES FINGER; OUT FOR WEEKS

NEW YORK, July 10.—Jimmy Archer, the crack catcher of the Cubs, who was disabled by a foul tip from Chief Meyers' bat in Tuesday's game, was more seriously injured than at first supposed. It was thought he had merely suffered from a split finger, but when a surgeon got to work on the backstop he found that the middle finger of the right hand not only was split, but also dislocated at the middle joint.

It will be several weeks before Archer will again get into the game.

FIFTH REGIMENT BOYS MIX PLAY AND WORK

Atlanta Soldiers Having Great Time at Instruction Camp on St. Simons Island.

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, GA., July 10.—The soldier boys of the Fifth Georgia Regiment, who arrived here Wednesday from Atlanta, have taken complete charge of St. Simons. Today the boys, somewhat weary of the more or less arduous duties of pitching camp, are having the time of their lives splashing in the surf and wandering around the island.

Thursday night the first big dance will be held and Friday military tactics and instruction will be the order of the day.

Next Saturday the Fifth will be the host of Governor John M. Slaton, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, members of the Governor's staff and General R. K. Evans and Colonel Barth, U. S. A.

The distinguished guests have announced their intention of camping in tents just like real soldiers during their two days' stay here.

A special committee from the Brunswick Board of Trade and from the City Council will meet the party at the depot and escort it to the St. Simons boat.

The Fifth will remain in camp at St. Simons for ten days.

In the Governor's party on the visit to St. Simons will be Governor and Mrs. Slaton, Colonel and Mrs. Frederic J. Paxon, General J. VanHolt Nash and daughter, Miss Nash; General and Mrs. R. K. Evans, Colonel C. H. Barth, Colonel and Mrs. George M. Hope, Colonel A. H. VanDyke and daughter, Miss VanDyke; Colonel William B. Stovall, Colonel H. P. Melkleham, Colonel Ben J. Fowler.

The party will be joined by Colonel and Mrs. Z. H. Clark, of Moultrie, at Fitzgerald, and Colonel and Mrs. John D. Walker, of Sparta, at Cordele.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Comedy Team Forsyth Hit.

Hines and Fox, piano player and singer, who came to the Forsyth unknown on Monday, have scored one of the biggest hits registered by an act of its sort in Atlanta. Eva Taylor and company, one of the headline features, present an act that has attracted the most favorable comment and won a most universal indorsement. Kennedy and Melrose, the novelty gymnasts, have added to the merit of the bill, and there are other features that make the show decidedly worth while.

Next week Valerie Bergere and company will return to Atlanta to present "Judgment," the latest success of this distinguished vaudeville star. Britt Wood, the Rube comedian, and the Shelvey Brothers, flexible gymnasts, will also be on the bill.

Grand Popular Place.

The Grand just now is a decidedly popular place, because the management, in response to the pulse of the people, has instituted a policy of motion pictures that is a revelation to the patrons of "movies."

Excellent programs of exclusive first-run pictures and Edison's talking pictures are presented daily from 2:30 until 10:30 at night, and usually to crowded gatherings.

Bijou Has Good Show.

Will Stanton and Rosalie May, at the Bijou this week, as the stars in "Along Broadway," have made one of the biggest hits of the season. Mr. Stanton's impersonation of a cabaret drunk is a capital piece of acting and keeps the house in a continuous uproar of laughter. Rosalie May, Mr. Stanton's partner, is a clever little woman. The violin solos of Miss Marjorie Calvert never fail to receive an enthusiastic reception, and the same can be said of the clever dancing of Ingalls, Duffield and Ingalls.

ECZEMA LOOKED AWFUL ON FACE

Started with Watery Pimples. Itched and Burned Badly. Awful Sore. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Boy Now Well.

R. F. D. No. 2, Fredericks Hall, Va. — "My little son was very bad off with the eczema on his face. It started with watery pimples and it itched and burned so badly that he wanted to scratch it all the time and he made an awful sore on his face. I would sit and hold his hands a lot of the time to keep him from scratching it. He didn't sleep any scarcely. The eczema looked awful while on his face. I was afraid it would last for life. He was real cross and fretful.

"I had him treated and he grew worse daily. As soon as I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I sent and got a twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and a fifty cent box of Cuticura Ointment and began using them. I saw a difference in a short time. I only used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment a few weeks before he was a well boy." (Signed) Mrs. Kate B. Pleasants, Dec. 12, 1912.

Although the Cuticura Soap and Ointment are most successful in the treatment of affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hands, they are also most valuable for everyday use in the toilet, bath and nursery, because they promote and maintain the health of the skin and hair from infancy to age. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

SILHOUETTE GOWNS TO BE WORN IN U. S. SOON, FASHION EXPERT SAYS

Two examples of the new silhouette gown and in the center first evolutionized Harem costume.

New York Dressmaker Describes Petticoatless Mode and Harem Skirt From Paris.

NEW YORK, July 10.—"The prudes can not stop them—they are here. That is, they are in Paris, which means that American women of fashion will bring them home with them this fall and winter," said Mme. Bernard, Fifth Avenue modiste, who has just arrived from abroad with the first harem skirt and the silhouette gown.

The former resembles Turkish trousers, which have succeeded the slit skirt, and the latter is a new French creation of lace and pleated tulle, worn with tights of silk of white or flesh pink, with no suggestion of a petticoat unless it be of filmy material.

"The slit skirt has been the most graceful and attractive made for women which has been worn in many years, so all of the great fashion leaders of Paris declare," said Mme. Bernard. "The harem skirt is an adaptation of the slit skirt with the tendency to the full and natural figure about the hips, which is the dernier cri.

"Turkish trousers, properly adapted, are an ideal costume for the modern woman of fashion. The ones I saw in Paris are the most fascinating and bewitching frocks I have ever seen.

"The silhouette gown, which is built on Grecian lines, is extremely beautiful, provided the figure is graceful. It is like looking at a beautiful woman through a fleecy sunlit cloud.

"The gown is so arranged at the hem that by means of a slit up the front—to the knees—and by pulling the diaphanous pleated tulle and lace criss-cross about the ankles a sort of trouser effect is obtained which only shows when the wearer moves about."

Elks Club in Macon May Abolish Buffet

MACON, July 10.—The conviction of C. B. Wright, the secretary of the Elks Club, on the charge of violating the prohibition law, may mean the abolition of the buffet feature of the Macon lodge. Many of the members believe that the buffet should be discontinued, if it is ultimately upheld that the Elks are violating the law in operating it.

Though defended by the ablest lawyers of the city, Secretary Wright was found guilty by a jury.

The Morris complaint alleges that a heavy fire loss was caused at its Kansas City plant because of delay in transmitting the fire alarm signal.

GOVERNOR AGAIN CITES NEED OF ECONOMY

Makes It Plain at Dinner That He Will Not Countenance Extension of Deficit.

Governor Slaton again made it plain in an after-dinner address at the Capital City Club Wednesday night that he will insist upon rigid economy in the Legislature until Georgia's present systems of finance and taxation are radically reformed.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley, of the House Appropriations Committee, was host. The dinner was given in honor of the House committee and the Executive. It was informal, and was given for the purpose of getting the committee and the Governor in close and intimate touch.

The Governor pointed out that the estimated deficit in the State treasury now, based upon appropriations made by the last Legislature, amounts to the amazing sum of $776,170.

To Curb Expenditures.

He said he could not see his way clear to an extension of that deficit, if it were within his power to prevent it. He held that it is the State's duty—its honorable duty—to wipe out the deficit entirely, and to that end he invited the help and co-operation of the committee. The Governor said the two items that should be watched closest are the common schools and the pensions.

"The matter of Georgia meeting its obligations promptly is a matter of business, not sentiment," said the Governor. "We must keep our outgo within our income!"

Tax Reform Urged.

The Governor stressed the necessity of tax equalization, reiterating his oft-stated position in that direction.

The committee evidently took the Governor's remarks in good part, for on all sides expressions of determination to help him and hold up his hands were heard.

All the talks were in happy vein, and it was the impression that the Governor and the Committee on Appropriations understood each other very well, indeed, when the dinner was over.

Besides the Governor and the House Committee on Appropriations, Speaker Burwell, Chairman Aikin and Vice Chairman Cole, of the Ways and Means Committee, and a number of newspaper men attended Mr. Wheatley's dinner.

J. Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, was prevented by sickness from being present.

He tore it to shreds and scattered it on the floor in front of the couple.

"BEST SHOW IN TOWN" AT BONITA THEATER

"The best show in Atlanta" is the verdict of the patrons of the Bonita Theater. The fact is, the Bonita will have none but the best, and when a company does not come up to the standard, the engagement is cut short and the wires are put to work. There is a difference in the class of shows produced at the Bonita and other houses using the same kind of attractions. The music is good, the girls are pretty, and the dancing will make you pat your foot and sway your body with the graceful movements of the show girls. The Bonita has the best.

PUBLIC TO PAY IF TRAINMEN WIN WAGE FIGHT

"Are You, Not Railorads, Willing to Grant Increase?" Is Question, Forbes Declares.

By B. C. FORBES.

Another section of railroad workers have voted to strike, demoralizing traffic over the eastern half of the country, unless demands for wage increases are granted. First the engineers, then the firemen, and now the trainmen have taken this course of action.

* * *

Where are strike threats to end? Arbitrators found the engineers and the firemen entitled to better pay. The railroads were willing to grant concessions in these cases, but they declare the trainmen have no grounds for insisting upon another advance, seeing that their wages were raised in 1910. Yet, there is a feeling in railroad circles that arbitrators will seek the usual line of least resistance and effect a compromise.

* * *

Railroad managers are asking: "If employees know that every time they threaten to starve the people they will be granted higher wages, why should they not go on making fresh demands? They can not lose anything by repeating the performance of putting a pistol to the heads of the railroads and the public—and they have learned by experience that they are tolerably certain to gain something when arbitration is agreed upon."

* * *

That arbitration will be adopted this time is a foregone conclusion. The customary result will likely follow—substantial concessions, entailing heavier burdens upon the public.

* * *

Now, the point raised by the railroads IS important. Where are the demands of railroad employees to end? WHY should they end? Human nature is human nature, and if the men know that by asking a lot they can depend upon receiving something, well, the temptation to ask is apt to prove irresistible. It is easier to preach than to practice self-denial. Are we not all striving to obtain the most we can for our labors? The railroads are at this moment trying to secure better rates for carry freight, are they not?

* * *

Experience may have justified the pessimistic attitude the railroads are taking toward arbitration. But will arbitrators ALWAYS grant concessions regardless of circumstances, regardless of the merits or demerits of the men's demands?

* * *

I do not pretend to have a labyrinth of pigeon-holes, each containing a ready-made solution for some complicated problem. Some writers can solve every difficulty in less than a column. They know just what should be done under every circumstance. I don't. And this problem of adjusting demands of highly-organized workers, especially railroad workers, is one of baffling, unusual difficulty.

* * *

Federal and State Arbitration Boards, as recommended by the commission that arbitrated the railway engineers' dispute, have much to commend them in the case of public and quasi-public service workers upon the uninterrupted continuance of whose labors the people at large are dependent for the necessities of life.

* * *

But it seems to me that the greatest need of all is that the public—you, your next-door neighbor, and all the rest of us—should become thoroughly acquainted with what higher and still higher wages mean TO US. The railroads will not say whatever 'increase in wages the trainmen may be granted. YOU and I will pay. The railroads have not one dollar that you and I did not contribute. They have only one source of revenue—the public.

* * *

Therefore, the question to ask is not, "Should the railroads raise wages?" but "Should WE pay railway workers higher wages?" For WE foot the bill.

* * *

If we conclude, after learning all about the rates of pay these men receive, that they are getting less than we earn ourselves, that we ought to contribute more to their weekly envelopes, that they cannot live as comfortably as the average workers of similar skill, then let us make our decision known. Once it is clearly realized that the public, not soulless corporations, must meet the bill, must give up out of their pockets every additional dollar paid over to these workers, then public sentiment will govern rates of wages and govern them equitably.

* * *

Our impulse is to side always with the worker and against the employer. But in the case of the railroads, you and I are in reality the employers. When I side with the men we side against ourselves. Mind you, it may be only common justice that we should so side. The trainmen now threatening to strike may be entirely entitled to higher wages. It may be our duty to put our hands in our pockets a little deeper in their behalf. But let us realize what we are doing when we favor higher wages. Do not let us delude ourselves that somebody else is to pay the extra remuneration.

* * *

Once we have a public thoroughly enlightened as to what wage advances mean and on whom the burden falls, then threats that are not warranted will fail. On the other hand, workers that are underpaid will be able to gain a fairer hearing, even if they have no deadly weapon to level against their employers.

SLOGANS EXPLAIN WHY ATLANTA FOLKS BOOST

Designs Submitted in Georgian's Half-Million Club Contest Express City's True Spirit.

Thursday's entrants in the $25 prize slogan contest reveal more than ever that Atlanta's true individuality is the inspiration for the slogans. Any city can boost, but none can boost like Atlanta, as the slogans clearly show.

The pretty girl idea has taken a strong hold on the contestants. One submitted by Robert M. DeFassell, Atlanta Athletic Club, makes the face of a pretty girl the emblem of the "500,000 club." Its caption expresses the lure of romance:

"Miss Atlanta, 'Boost-er.' 500,000 by 1920."

The whole country has been impressed with the aggressive and forceful methods of Police Chief J. L. Beavers. Taking advantage of this William E. Muirhead suggested for a button a face of Chief Beavers with the words: "500,000 by 1920. Get 'Em or Bust."

Contest Open All Week.

Slogans received as late as Saturday will be eligible for the prize. On that day the committee of judges—John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor—will meet and decide the winner. The lucky one will be announced in Hearst's Sunday American.

Here are some of the clever ideas that came to the contest editor through the mails:

"The Atlanta Spirit, Atlanta's Boost.

"A Half-Million Souls, Atlanta's Boast"—J. F. Harbour, 41 North Pryor Street.

"Atlanta, My Criterion. 1913-1920, 200,000—500,000"—Lewis J. Ball, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"500,000 by 1920. Atlanta Offers You Opportunity, Peace and Plenty"—Mrs. A. O. Woodward, South Atlanta.

"Atlanta, the Dixie Flyer.

"Will Care for Half a Million Souls and Higher"—Mrs. M. J. Rossman, Greensboro, Ga.

"For 500,000 Souls We'll Win in a Canter.

"Talk, Hustle. Boost for Atlanta"—Lucile Hiatt, 14 Killian Street.

"Here's to 500,000 by 1920. With Atlanta Spirit and Atlanta Pluck."—E. F., Covington, Ga.

"Progress, Prosperity, Pride, Population. Boost Atlanta Club. 500,000 by 1920."—Mrs. B. J. Harrison, 180 Lake Avenue.

SEARCHING SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS IN GEORGIA

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Representative Clements, of Irwin County, owns the identical spot of ground upon which President Jefferson Davis was captured, after the surrender of General Lee and the flight of the Confederate administration from Richmond.

The arrest of Davis was effected in a little clump of woods, about two acres in extent, near the Clements homestead, and it has been preserved, just as it was then, ever since the war. In the family of Mr. Clements it has always been considered a sacred place.

When Mr. Clements' father died he left a request that this spot of ground be "kept in the hands of Southern people." He was a lieutenant in the Confederate army, and idolized Jefferson Davis. He aided in the fallen chieftain's escape, and only consented to his surrender when it became plain that further resistance was worse than useless.

Mr. Clements is contemplating, in order that his father's last wishes may be complied with, asking the State of Georgia to accept title to this spot where Davis was arrested, and to appoint some kind of commission or committee to take it in charge.

He has worked out no definite plan—he merely wishes to give the property to the State, with the understanding that the State will protect it, preserve it and keep it, as his father wished, in the hands of "Southern people."

Not a stick of timber has been cut from the land since the day Jefferson Davis was arrested thereon, and many trees that were mere saplings then now are great oaks and pines.

Representative Shelby Myrick, of Chatham, is one of the very hardest worked men in the House.

He heads the big Committee on Constitutional Amendments, and that committee likely will be worked overtime this session.

Myrick is one of the very best lawyers in the House, and is a gentleman of extreme affability and effectiveness. In other words, he is both able and affable.

Mr. Myrick's committee already has returned one county to the House with a favorable report, and the chances seem bright for the creation of the same by the Legislature. The proposition—Barrow County—has been thoroughly thrashed out in the committee, and the House is apt to take the committee's findings as righteous and just.

Speaker Burwell picked for the constitutional amendment committee from among the best legal talent he could locate in the House, and when he made Mr. Myrick the chairman of that committee he paid him a high but deserved compliment.

A meeting of the legislative committee of the Georgia Anti-Saloon League was held at Wesley Memorial Church in Atlanta Tuesday night, several members of the House and Senate being present.

It was decided not to introduce the Tippins bill or any substitute for it at this session of the Legislature, but take the shape of a bill intended to gather the fruits of the Webb-Kenyon bill against interstate shipments of liquor recently passed by Congress.

Whether the Legislature will enact any liquor legislation whatever this session is problematical, as there has been so far no particular agitation of the matter.

Representative George F. Paulk, of Berrien, will introduce in the House soon a bill to establish a branch school for the deaf in South Georgia.

The bill will ask for a branch school convenient to the 150 deaf children in South Georgia who are unable to avail themselves of the education offered by the Cave Spring School, on account of its inaccessibility.

The bill will not specify any particular location, but will leave that to be settled by a committee appointed by the Legislature or Governor. No large appropriation for buildings will be asked, but the town where the school will be located will be expected to provide temporary buildings, at least.

Representative Crawford Wheatley's dinner to the House Appropriations Committee Wednesday evening at the Capital City Club had much more behind it than the mere matter of a compliment to his committee, although, of course, it was a most delightful and engaging compliment.

Its direct purpose was to bring as intimately together as possible the committee and Governor Slaton.

Mr. Wheatley, who is the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, believes that Governor Slaton is exactly right in his ideas with respect to the State's income and outgo. The Governor is known to have determined that the present Legislature shall keep the lid on appropriations, and not exceed the revenue anticipated under the present system of taxation. He has made it very plain that he will exhaust the executive resources, if necessary, in undertaking to do that.

Mr. Wheatley is determined to uphold the Governor at every turn, if it be within his power, and to that end already has had numerous conferences with his excellency.

In order to facilitate the work and to make all features of it as pleasant and as cordial as possible, Mr. Wheatley arranged his dinner last night—and it may be said that it was, in every sense of the crowds, a complete success.

It is safe to say that the Governor will find the House Committee on Appropriations standing right behind him in his work of reforming the State's finances, and if the committee takes that stand, it may be accepted as a further fact that the entire House will fall in line promptly and willingly.

General Agricultural Committee No. 2 of the House has a large grouch toward General Agricultural No. 1.

General Agricultural No. 1 had a hog cholera bill before it Wednesday, and was so impressed with the importance of the thing that it invited General Agricultural No. 2 to sit with it in joint session and hear the arguments. G. A. No. 2 readily consented to this and sat through two mortal hours of talk about hogs and things.

When the time came to vote on the bill, however, G. A. No. 1 moved to put G. A. No. 2 out of the room, leaving the voting entirely to G. A. No. 1. To this G. A. No. 2 objected vehemently.

Rather than get out, G. A. No. 2 moved to adjourn—and the motion carried!

The hog cholera bill, therefore, still is up in the air, and G. A. No. 2 has a big grouch toward G. A. No. 1.

FARMERS WIN BY CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Mutual Producing and Distributing Societies Get Credit for Vast Increase in Crops.

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM.

Ohio State Senator, Member of American Agricultural Commission, and Secretary of the Production Group.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 10.—Thus far we have passed 60 days studying the various principles underlying the success of European agriculture. By dividing into sections and groups we have covered every phase of agriculture and studied the best methods pursued in every country in Europe.

Without question, co-operative credit and co-operative producing and distributing societies have accomplished a great deal for European farmers during the last 25 years. The reaching of scientific agriculture colleges in short course schools and on farms during the growing season has had much to do with the vast increase in crop production. Encouragement by the various Governments has been another important factor.

Interest in Every Country.

In every country visited a strong realization of the importance of agriculture is manifested. While methods differ in various countries the same underlying principles are found everywhere.

Highly important principles are the conservation and utilization of every natural resource, the scientific application of manures and chemical fertilizers and the great systems of co-operative credits, which in reality make all the other principles operative.

I have visited Italy, Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. In each of these countries we found some special lines of work more advanced than in the other countries. But when we group these special lines and attempt to apply them to our own country we find one thing lacking in America, namely co-operative organizations.

The intensive methods of farming employed in Italy are applicable to many sections of country. The Goverment policy of helping farmers to own their own homes is bringing many Italians back from America.

Swiss Farmers in Union.

In Switzerland more than one-third of all farmers belong to co-operative organizations that are banded into a central organization entitled the Swiss Farmers' Union, which can control the Government policy. Through these organizations the farmers sell all their products and buy all their necessities.

Co-operative credit and distribution societies have played an important part in the rapid development of Germany's agriculture during the past 40 years. Germany produces more than twice as much to the acre as the United States does and from land that has been farmed for centuries. It is now up to us to double our production.

Denmark has made a world-wide reputation through her co-operative exporting societies by guaranteeing every egg and every pound of butter and bacon. Each egg is stamped with the date when laid and the producer's number is recorded in the National Federation's register. Any complaint may be traced directly back to the real producer. Here again farmers have the controlling voice in Government and Denmark is prospering immensely.

Holland's Cheese Fame.

Holland, as a dairy country, has attained fame for her fine cheeses. Her Government exacts a high standard of excellency by rigid enforcement of the pure food laws.

In France the work of the Ministry of Agriculture through co-operative credit and production societies is rapidly coming to the front. When the final report of this commission is made the French methods of co-operative credit will receive deserved consideration.

In America we need long-time credit, conservation of the soils, fertility and improved methods of distribution.

Big Sewer the Gate To a Gambling Den

PITTSBURG, PA., July 10.—A well-equipped gambling den beneath the street the main entrance to which was a big city sewer was raided by the police late last night. Twenty-two men were captured as well as a large amount of money and gambling paraphernalia.

When the police swooped down on the players consternation reigned, but as there was only one manner of egress or exit, the entire crowd was captured.

81 Drunken Pupils At Passaic in Year

PASSAIC, N. J., July 10.—During the past year 81 drunken pupils, between the ages of ten and fifteen, were found in the public schools here, according to the report of Truant Officer Herman F. Weber.

Cotton Markets

NEW YORK, July 10.—Old positions were well sustained at the opening of the cotton market to-day and started off 3 points higher, while new crop months were to 2 points lower than Wednesday's final.

New positions were affected by cloudy weather in the eastern half of the belt, suggesting possible showers. Futures and spots in Liverpool were firm. Liverpool bought considerable cotton on the weather prospects. Brokers representing large spot houses were good buyers of new crop positions. The buying was general and offerings light. After the market shaded a few points from the initial range prices rallied some 3 to 5 points from the previous close, where prices were firmly maintained throughout the early session, with the exception of July, which fell back to 12.17, last night's closing quotation.

Strength of Liverpool was attributed chiefly to short covering on fear of an American advance on high temperatures over the triple holiday there.

The official weather for yesterday showed temperature average 102 in Oklahoma and 100 in Texas, with six station recording 100, seven stations 102, seven stations 104 and one station 106. Today's early record shows it is cooler in Oklahoma, and Sherman, Tex., reports drizzling rain.

Following are 11 a. m. bids in New York: July, 12.17; August, 12.17; October, 11.54; January, 11.42.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: July, 12.41; August, 12.01; October, 11.56; January, 11.56.

COTTON GOSSIP

Reports of serious boll-weevil damage in Texas, together with timidity on the part of sellers because of the local situation, was responsible for the strength of the market yesterday.

* * *

McFadden and Cwathmey brokers were the leading buyers yesterday, mostly of October, which feels the threat of a depletion in stocks more than any other month. Baruch and Wall Street covered some shorts.

* * *

Sentiment is not unfriendly to the market, traders figuring that with contracts scarce any unfavorable reports will cause a further advance.

* * *

Dallas wires: "Texas—Panhandle and south clear; central and east cloudy; numerous rains. Oklahoma—North and west clear; balance cloudy; local rains."

* * *

NEW ORLEANS, July 10.—Hayward & Clark: "The weather map is very favorable; it shows cloudy over entire belt, except fair in southern half of Texas. Distinctly cooler in Oklahoma and Arkansas, with fine rains in Arkansas and parts of Tennessee. Some scattered showers elsewhere. Indications are for cloudy, with scattered showers, and cooler in the central belt.

* * *

Houston, Tex., wires: "First bale received from Lyford, Cameron County, South Texas, and will be sold at auction to-day."

* * *

Cotton summary of The New Orleans Times-Democrat: "The steadiness of yesterday's cotton market was explained in two widely divergent ways. The man who believes that cotton on its merits can take good care of itself said that shorts were experiencing difficulty in obtaining tenderable supplies; that the short interest is still large enough to give trouble, and that the position of the actual bale being a strong one is responsible for reactions upward even when favorable weather would seem to be aiding the bearish cause.

"The man who believes artificial support is responsible for the market's continued show of strength said that talent and trade alike bought new crop deliveries yesterday because the action of the market suggested that July longs were beginning to put the screws to shorts and further strength in July would probably influence new crop deliveries to climb temporarily to higher levels.

"Of course, the weather artists were much in evidence. One faction promised heat waves in the West. Another exploited the comparative records as proof that current temperatures are not excessively high. Still another turned prophet and promised showers and cooler weather in the West."

Deserted, She Asks Work, Not Charity

Mrs. Emory Batta, who appealed to Matron Mary Bohnefeld for assistance in finding employment after being deserted by her husband, denies the published report that she is penniless and tramped the streets 48 hours without anything to eat.

Though her husband is said to have taken $500 of their savings Mrs. Batta declared Wednesday that she simply appealed to Matron Bohnefeld to help her get work, not for charity.

Stock Markets

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 10.—Canadian Pacific, which led the stock market in its downward movement yesterday, turned about today and led an upward trend of prices at the opening. Canadian Pacific opened at 211½ for a gain of ⅝, but soon was selling at 213¼, which was 2⅜ higher than Wednesday's closing.

Union Pacific showed the best strength it has exhibited since the present movement began. Union Pacific climbed to 146 for a net gain of nearly 2 points. United States Steel common advanced 1 point on good buying.

The market was largely influenced by London, Paris and Berlin and a considerable share of the buying at the opening came from the other side. This was inspired by a report from St. Petersburg that the Balkan war probably would be ended this week.

Among other gains were Amalgamated Copper ⅝; Southern Pacific ½; Reading ½; Chino Copper ½; Illinois Central ½; American Car and Foundry ½; St. Paul ⅝ and Erie ⅝.

Wall Street took an optimistic view of the railroad situation the belief prevailing that the trainmen on the eastern lines will not strike, but are maneuvering to force an amendment to the Erdman arbitration law.

The curb was strong.

American in London were strong.

The advance in stocks is due to short covering and a dispatch from St. Petersburg saying that the Balkan war would soon end.

For a time after the opening the market witnessed a stampede and before the advance ceased gains of 1 to nearly 3 points were recorded. Shortly after the first hour, however, recessions appeared, but prices held above yesterday's close. Union Pacific advanced ¾ to 145⅝, leading reached 157, a gain of ⅝. Lehigh Valley, Southern Pacific and Pennsylvania were up ⅛. Copper declined ¼. Other issues remained unchanged to a fractional advance. Great Northern preferred issued a 1½ dividend.

Call money loaned at 2 percent.

STOCK GOSSIPS

With the prospects of a 2,000,000,000-bushel corn crop, it looks as if the railroads would have all they can carry this fall and winter. It looks as if President Wilson would avert the railroad strike. Expect a traders' market for the present, but prefer to buy stocks on breaks rather than sell on rallies.—Potter.

The New York Financial Bureau says: "Moderate profits should appeal to the daily trader for the present. Information channels are pessimistic. Trading movements in the general list, with a somewhat better demand for the leading stocks, may be seen to-day."

Grain Markets

CHICAGO, July 10.—The strength shown by the wheat market at Chicago this morning when prices advanced ⅞ to ⅞c was a reflection of the higher prices at Liverpool, coupled with the bullish construction placed on the Government report of yesterday. The best prices were shaded ⅛ to ¼c soon after they were made by "hedging" sales. Argentina shipments for the week are estimated at only 460,000 bushels, compared with 1,552,000 bushels for the corresponding period last year. Northwestern receipts, while a few cars larger than for the same day in 1912, were small.

Corn was a shade better in sympathy with wheat, as the weather is favorable.

Oats were ⅛c lower for September and a fraction lower for July.

Provisions were lower.

LIVERPOOL GRAIN MARKET.

LIVERPOOL, July 10.—Wheat opened ¼d higher; at 1:30 p. m. the market was ¼d to ⅝d higher. Closed ⅝d to ¾d higher.

Corn opened unchanged to ¼d lower; at 1:30 p. m. the market was unchanged to ⅛d lower. Closed ⅜d higher.

Grain Notes

The Chicago Inter Ocean says:

"Wheat traders were inclined to construe the Government report as bullish when considered in all its details. There were a number of sharp operators, however, who took a bearish view of it, and talked lower prices. It is the general belief that the final returns on all wheat will show around the same as last year, which, with the carry-over, should make a larger supply than last year.

"Corn specialists took the Government report as bearish, although the acreage is two-tenths of 1 per cent under last year. This was offset by the condition being the highest since 1906. The crowd were regarded as short and the commission house boklings have been reduced of late.

"Oats traders were surprised at the showing of the crop report, it being larger than expected. Most operators took a bearish view of it, and said that with the crop within less than three weeks of harvest they look for a yield of 1,000,000,000 bushels."

Terre Haute, Springfield, Peoria, Bloomington, St. Louis, Kansas City and Omaha all clear, 63 to 75 degrees; rain reported at Terre Haute yesterday afternoon. Canadian Northwest, partly cloudy, 60 to 72 degrees; Swift Current, rainfall .28; Edmonton, .46.

Buy September wheat and sell September corn at present for substantial profit.—Bell.

* * *

General liquidation is on in oats and this, together with pressure of new oats from the country, will, in my opinion, carry the market several cents lower.—Roycroft.

* * *

Bartlett, Frazier Co. says: Wheat—The country continues to market the new crop of winter wheat very freely. As long as Europe continues to buy liberally the effect of hedging operations is materially lessened. We believe there is a large outstanding short interest, and are inclined to look for a fair rally.

Corn—This morning's map was generally clear with some high temperatures again in the Southwest. The figures given in yesterday's Government report indicate a crop larger than the trade generally was looking for, but there has been considerable scattered liquidation and short selling during the past few days. We are inclined to think the report will not prove a depressing influence.

Oats—The Government report was about as expected and therefore will not prove an influence. New buying power is extremely limited, but there has been a great deal of liquidation, and while prices may gradually work lower, we do not look for any sharp break at the moment.

Memphis Wins and Loses in Rail Rate Pine Lumber Cases

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Rates on pine lumber over the Illinois Central from Jackson, Miss., to Memphis, Tenn., were held by the Interstate Commerce Commission to-day to be unreasonable in so far as they exceed 10 cents a 100 pounds.

Lumber, staves and barrel headings rates to Memphis from points East of the Mississippi and South of Vicksburg, except over the New Orleans, Mobile and Chicago Railroad, were found to be unreasonable if they exceed 11 cents a 100 pounds for a one-line haul and 12 cents for a two-line haul.

Proposed advanced of 3 per cent in rates on lumber over the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley Railroad in Mississippi and Louisiana to Memphis, Tenn., were allowed.

Bad Odors, Impure Food and Water Main Causes for Sickness

A Few Practical Poultry Pointers That Will Help You, so Take Note.

The main causes for sickness in poultry are bad odors, impure food and water, decaying matter within reach, old bones, tin cans not rinsed out and rubbish of all kinds. These should be removed at once. A box of lime in the henhouse is a splendid deodorizer. Try it.

Keep a good supply of green stuff growing at all times. Sow one thing this month and another the next, and so on, or rather "sow on."

There is nothing so decidedly essential to the health of both the old and the young chickens as a good supply of green bulky food.

Skunks bothering poultry and eggs may be obliterated by breaking a small hole in a fresh egg and inserting a very small bit of strychnine; paste a little tough paper over the hole and put it under the roost. As Mr. Skunk prefers eggs to chickens or anything else, you are pretty sure to get him.

A Buff Orpington, very light or dark in color, is not necessarily of impure blood. Any breed is likely to show off some color specimens, but these should not be used as breeders.

Rough or scaly legs can be cured by anointing them with a mixture of half and half lard and kerosene. It should be applied freely at least twice a week until removed. Better still, keep your stock free from the trouble by thorough cleanliness about the house, yards, etc.

Drain out or fill the filthy old frog pond where the hens have been drinking and supply them with clean fresh water. They will be much healthier and you and your family will, too.

Eggs for market should be kept in a cool place as gathered each day until the time to send them off. If you have a cellar or pit under ground keep them in that upon bricks on the ground. Extreme heat tends to spoil eggs very rapidly.

Scatter the feed for the chickens under the plum trees if you have such. In the feeding they will gather up many insect pests which work upon the fruit and trees. Digging about the trees will cause them to hunt about the roots for worms. Shaking the tree at feeding time will dislodge many an insect and diseased plum which the hens will destroy.

Overcrowding the young stock is the cause of much trouble and loss. There are very few poultry yards in which the young stock is not crowded more or less. Crowding means bad air in the houses or coops and distemper or roup is the result, with sorehead and pip thrown in. As the chick grows so rapidly we fail to realize how much more room they really need. Let us supply it before it is too late. A severe culling of the poorer specimens for the market is an additional remedy.

Judge Marshall:

Can you tell me what causes some hens to pull the feathers off their mates about the heads and necks? Some of mine do that until the hens are a perfect sight to look at. I would like to know the cause and a remedy if you could give one.

We get much good out of The Georgian poultry department and are always ready to read it. I am yours truly, J. C. CARTER.

Sparta, Ga.

ANSWER.—Feather pulling, as it is commonly called, is a mighty bad habit, and is caused by different things. Too close confinement in a yard without green stuff, not enough exercise or things to keep them out of mischief; sometimes a lack or need of meat, or something a little salty. If you will hang up a piece of salt bacon for them to peck at, or a little fresh meat. When the first offender is noticed it is the part of wisdom to take her away from the rest of the flock at once, as it is a habit that is very likely to be taken up by many of the flock.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Realty Men Busy On Mansion Plans

Legislative Action Expecetd Soon. Luckie Street Stores Completed. More Insurance Money.

Real estate men are watching closely the deliberations of the State Legislature on the proposal to sell the Governor's Mansion at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Cain Streets. Action has been taken looking toward the appointment of committees to report on this proposition, and something of a definite nature is expected soon.

In the meantime several locations for the Governor's Mansion have been decided on—that is, real estate men will offer them.

Two years ago the State had offers varying from about $330,000 cash to upward of $450,000. Some of these propositions were for straight sale, some for lease and some for exchange.

Luckie Street Stores Finished.

Charles H. Black has practically completed three stores in a two-story building in the triangle formed by the convergence of Luckie, Hayden and Harris Streets, at a cost of $17,500. These were taken under contract to the owner, J. M. Hawkins.

Wednesday's Auction Sale.

Gid Hanna and William A. Vernoy, who are offering five building lots and a six-room slate roof house in the Grant Park section Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, are expecting a large crowd out. They have plastered the city with dodgers and have advertised in other ways. The lots are at the corner of Park Avenue and Bryan Street, and the agents have supplied lemonade for the attendants. J. W. Ferguson & Son will be the auctioneers.

More Insurance Money.

For some time the insurance companies of the East have been lending a great deal of money on policies, which has decreased their reserve funds to such an extent that it has been impossible to lend as much as formerly on real estate. Now it is announced that policy loans having dropped down somewhat, there will soon be more money to lend on land.

Charles H. Black, of Turman, Black & Calhoun, received a notice to this effect from a firm which his concern represents in Atlanta. Mr. Black declares that the insurance companies have great faith in Atlanta property, and of late the let-up has been due to a lack of funds.

Residences for Sale.

Joseph Richardson is completing a residence at East Lake and has accordingly put the home at 595 Piedmont Avenue on the market. The latter property is at the corner of Third Street.

The residence at 123 East Eleventh Street is also for sale. This is between Piedmont Avenue and Piedmont Park. It is a two-story house on a lot with 103 feet frontage. The price is $10,500.

The cottage at 713 Gordon Street, on a lot 50 by 210 feet, is for sale at $3,000, on terms of $300 cash and $20 a month.

Who Is Responsible for Such Creatures as David Lamar?

Who but the Big Men, Who Are Willing to Learn from "Vermin" How They, the Rich Men, May Buy the People's Representatives and Thwart the People's Will?

(Copyright, 1913.)

You read the story of David Lamar, known as "the Wolf of Wall Street," whose meteoric career in Atlanta in 1892 is still remembered by many persons here.

He told the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee at Washington the other day that he had called up big men with plenty of money, pretended that he was Congressman This or Congressman That, and offered to stop legislation that the people demanded.

It would seem that this man's life has been one of perpetual scheming. While in Atlanta his business dealings were of such character that he was arrested, indicted and forced to seek other fields.

Of recent years it appears, this individual, Lamar, has been busy telling big men in New York how he could prevent interference with this trust, or that railroad combination, or some other piece of financial dishonesty.

He used different names, and probably used different voices talking on the telephone. He made fools of some of the big men, and they now FEEL FOOLISH as the story comes out.

It is rather a disgusting story, of meanness, lying and attempted cheating, with possible blackmail attached. Some of the most unpleasant words in the dictionary describe Mr. Lamar very accurately.

But words just as disagreeable would describe as accurately the men of money and power who listened to Lamar, and listen to others like him.

If the big men whom this country and its citizens have made rich were not willing to bribe legislators, not willing to defeat the people's will by underhand methods, NOT WILLING TO USE THEIR DISHONESTLY GOT MONEY TO BUY DISHONEST LEGISLATION, there would not be such men as David Lamar urging the buying of disreputable public officials especially adapted to the doing of very dirty political work.

Lamar and the vermin like him are not very important.

The important man is the man of money, power and position, the man who has no excuse for being a bribe-giver, a cheater of the people, the man who listens at the telephone eagerly while "the vermin," representing themselves as dishonest Congressmen, offer for a consideration to cheat the public and rob the public and help dishonesty and buy legislation.

The big men who do not deny that they trusted Lamar, that they talked to him on the telephone and heard what he had to say, have not made a full explanation of their conduct, or a satisfactory explanation.

The ordinary citizen would not listen to a man who called on the telephone to tell him how he might rob his neighbor's house.

Why does the big man of Wall Street listen patiently and attentively while "the vermin" tell him how he can rob the people of their legislation, cheat the people of their will and add by continued bribery to the fortune already acquired?

A Great Victory for Southern Women

The Georgia House of Representatives is to be congratulated in that it had the common sense and decency to extend the use of its hall to the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association, now in session in the Capital of the State, even though it was necessary in doing so sharply to rebuke rank stupidity and lack of judgment in the Senate.

The cause of woman suffrage in Georgia is in its infancy, perhaps, but already it is sponsored by a number of the most intelligent and progressive women of the State.

Unquestionably, the cause will wax stronger and stronger, as time runs on, and neither narrowness nor bigotry—even in a Georgia Senate—will serve to stop it!

The original purpose of these Georgia women evidently was not to force the issue of woman suffrage upon the Georgia Legislature at this time. They merely were seeking a suitable place to hold two night sessions. They turned to the State Capitol, AS THEY HAD A RIGHT TO DO, in seeking that place.

The Senate, however, with that shortsightedness characteristic of stupidity, declined to extend the courtesy asked of it—and thereby it made the cause of woman suffrage an ISSUE before the people of Georgia—the people WHO MAKE and UNMAKE LEGISLATURES, AS THEY PLEASE!

In these circumstances, the vote of the House extending the use of its Hall to the suffragists can not be viewed otherwise than as a distinct VICTORY for the Woman Suffrage Association of Georgia.

It was, in a way, the very first and pioneer victory for the cause in the South—made emphatic and extraordinarily noticeable by the foolish and silly action of the Senate.

The Georgian now ventures this prediction: Before the membership of the present Legislature is entirely dust, woman suffrage will be an established POLICY AND PRINCIPLE of every State in this Union!

Those men in Georgia, farsighted and fair-minded enough to see it NOW, then will have cause to rejoice.

Those who now thrust themselves in front of a movement destined to be as irresistible as the flow of the tide, will be overwhelmed.

The cause of woman suffrage has been strengthened rather than weakened in Georgia by the unwise, unpatriotic and unworthy action of the State Senate.

That the House promptly and emphatically repudiated that Senate action, speaks well for ITS sense of justice and right.

Man and Wife Should Decide Own Differences

No Person Capable to Give Counsel to Couple Regarding Difficulties

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.
(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

NO human being is capable of giving safe and sane counsel to a married man or a married woman respecting domestic differences. It is a matter which should be decided between the two.

When any third person intervenes, a judge of the court is the proper party.

Intimate Friends.

The most intimate friends of a family are not capable of saying where the fault lies in the majority of cases.

Even when a wife seems to be indifferent to her family and to her husband, and even when a husband seems to be unappreciative of his home, there may be causes for either offense undreamed of by those who believe themselves to be close friends.

There are men who seem to the world at large the most perfect specimens of domestic nobility, honor and probity, yet who are impossible as companions and life comrades for women of refinement and sensitive feeling, and there are women who pass in the world's eyes as angels of goodness who are possessed of unpleasant traits enough to drive any normal man to drink or insanity if he is compelled to live with them.

Wife Begged for Divorce.

The real character, the real disposition of any human being, is never known or understood until we have spent a year at least in steady association under the same roof.

The following letter reveals nothing of the writer's character. It reveals nothing of the wife's nature.

Therefore it is impossible to give any opinion of value regarding the case. Even were it possible, the writer of this does not wish to advise or counsel individuals save in the general way of character building which is the real work of the race.

The correspondent says:

"I am a married man with two children and earning a good salary, but separated for some years, owing to not being able to get along in harmony. Recently my wife called upon me and implored that I commit infidelity in order that she may secure a divorce from me, as she has an opportunity to marry. I agreed to do so if she would compromise by giving me one of the children, but she absolutely refuses, offering as an excuse that she is too deeply attached to them. I maintain if she loves this other man she would sacrifice one of the children or both of them to me, as I have a good home and nice surroundings, although I do not say she has not the same advantages, still I feel I could rear them up better under my influence and meet the future better than under this other man.

Willing to Sacrifice All.

"My wife is 25 years old, and, as this is comparatively young, I do not want to destroy her happiness. If I am in the wrong I would willingly sacrifice my side of the issue and grant her the divorce, but before I do I would like to hear your opinion."

All that can be said in reply is this: That children should be placed under the care of people who are the best fitted by character and moral worth and good behavior to bring them up.

Blood ties have nothing to do with the matter.

Paternal or maternal love, as that word is generally used, has little to do with the moral aspect of the case.

Women who gossip, who are disorderly, who are weak-willed, and who allow their children to see all these traits daily have no right to bring up their own children, no matter how they love them.

Small Part of Parenthood.

Fathers who are living immoral lives, who are associating with rough or coarse-minded people, or who use coarse language and who have never been taught self-control have no right to associate with their children, because they are making an impress on the wax-like nature of a child—an impress which will harden with time and become a blighting memory and probably a bad habit.

The time will come under the new science of eugenics which is being introduced when a censor will be appointed to study the domestic conditions in every family, and there will be laws which will protect children from the influence of the weak, the disagreeable and the incompetent homekeepers, as well as from the brutal and immoral.

Bringing children into the world is a small part of parenthood. To the writer of the letter quoted above no counsel can be given. It can only be said that the man of the best moral character, the best disposition and the best habits has a right to influence the lives of these children.

How to Keep Cool

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

My doctor said to me, said he: "In weather like this here
You must eschew the luscious stew,
The lush saute, the rich ragout,
And pie and cake and pudding, too,
And whisky, wine and beer,
In point of fact, you must not eat
Eggs, oysters, vegetables or meat.

"Dark clothing magnifies the heat, light clothes attract the light.
Beware of red—it heats the head;
Blue hues a poisonous radiance shed.
By sunset you'll be surely dead
Unless your clothes are right.
Don't let this warning be forgotten—
Beware of linen, wool and cotton.

"Don't lash your blood to frothy foam by any exercise,
But don't sit still or you'll distill
A subtle toxin which will fill
Your veins with fermentation till
Your temperature will rise.
Don't breathe—it makes the pulses leap.
Don't stir about, nor rest, nor sleep."

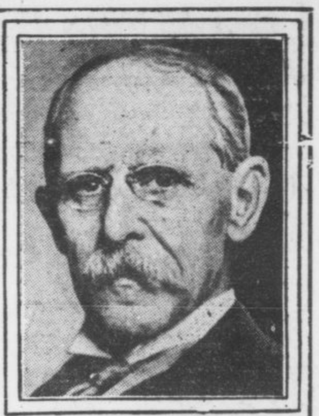
* * * * * * * * * * *

By packing me in ice and salt they brought me 'round at last.
"Why he's not dead," the interne said,
"Is what I can't get through me head.
For when they chucked him on that bed
He sure was going fast."

Now here's a tip for which I paid a very painful price:
DON'T EVER OVERHEAT YOURSELF BY FOLLOWING ADVICE!

Education Is the Cure for Feeble-mindedness in the Child; but It Must Be Begun in Time.

What Sight More Pitiful Than a Child Who Goes Into the Battle of Life with Its Mind---Its Only Hope---Disabled?



By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE great study of modern times is that of the peculiarities, the workings and the weaknesses of the human mind. This involves the entire future of the race of man.

I have been learning something about a new science, or what aspires to be a science, which has this for its object and which is called by its disciples "clinical psychology" (clinical from a Greek word for bed, implying that the subject of attention is a person who is ill, and psychology "science of the mind"), the whole phrase meaning practical study of mental illness.

No Sight Is So Pitiful.

This is something of supreme interest to parents, because those who are particularly, if not exclusively, the subpects of investigation by clinical psychologists are children.

There is no sight in this world more pitiable than that of a feeble-minded child. It is his MIND that has placed man in the proud position which he occupies at the head of the Kingdom of Life on our planet; it is by virtue of his mental powers alone that he has achieved all his triumphs; they only have brought him up from his original brotherhood with the ape; in the further development of his mind lies the only hope that he can have of still greater progress in the future; each individual, as he faces the struggle of life, must depend upon the strength of his mentality, and that the more in proportion as the struggle increases in intensity. What, then, can excite a compassion equal to that aroused by the spectacle of a human child, which, as the result of causes that might be avoided, enters the battle of life lamed, crippled, disabled, palsied, impuissant, in that which constitutes its only hope, its only real strength—its mind?

Makes Instant Appeal.

The reason the new science that I have mentioned makes an instant appeal to any person having the good of his kind at heart is that it comes with the assurance that the terrible evil of feeble-mindedness may be eliminated. If it did not promise that, if it presented itself merely as another form of curious investigations having little or no practical application, it would attract only the inquisitive, seeking for novel subjects of thought. But when it says to unhappy parents, "Right education is capable of developing the dormant mental energies of your child; only begin in time, and know what you are about," then its call must be listened to everywhere.

It is this supreme word "education" which I find on every page of what I have been reading of the work and the aims of the clinical psychologists. The body can be educated out of many of its illnesses, and so can the mind. It is not worth while to stop over any discussion of the question whether, as some put it, "the mind has a body," or, as others would say, "the body has a mind." We all know what is meant when a person is said to be "feeble-minded," and the one thing of pressing, immediate importance is the question whether, either by medical or hygienic treatment, or by mental or psychological methods, or by both working together, the evil can be remedied.

Mental Hygiene.

I read this extremely interesting statement from Professor J. E. W. Wallin:

"Irrespective of whether the cause is chiefly physical or mental, it is being recognized by a number of the leading present-day psychiatrists" (those who study mental diseases) "that drug treatment for the majority of the insane, whether juvenile or adult, is secondary to the educational treatment. Instead of merely prescribing physical hygiene for the insane, leading alienists are now prescribing mental hygiene. The cure is being conceived in terms of a process of re-education. Moreover, so far as concerns the mentally unstable child in the schools, the chief reliance is obviously on hygienic and educational guidance."

Key to the Mind.

There you see in almost every line the magic word "education." We can all understand that. We must accept this term in a virtually new sense.

We must cease to regard it as simply signifying a process by which a certain, very limited, amount of knowledge is instilled or forced into the mind of a child, and we must come to consider it as the key to the mind itself, and the means, when wisely used, of opening and developing the mental powers, even when they seem to be absent or defective.

Education is not a sausage-stuffer; it is a ladder by which man mounts toward the summit of his destiny. And when the feeble are helped upon its rungs, they are stimulated and inspired with new strength at every step upward.

FAIR WOMAN

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

A WOMAN is easy to understand;
This is the secret, second hand:

When you pat her on the cheek
With your envelope each week,
Saying "Here's the money, dear,"
As you pinch her shell-like ear;
When she show'rs you with caresses,
Planning on new hats and dresses,
When she calls you her Greek god,
Though you know you have a pod,
She's happy.

When she meets you at the door
In the morn at three or four,
Trying with small fists to hit you,
Threatening to pack and quit you;
When she throws a dish or two
Clear across the room at you,
When she swings—and not in vain—
With your heavy walking cane,
She's out of sorts.

That is the secret, second hand,
A woman is easy to understand.

WILL FIGHT HINGES ON EXPERTS

Attorneys for Widow of Crawford Declare Poison Testimony Will Be Shattered.

Sensational new evidence corroborating the statement of Dr. H. F. Harris, of the State oBard of Health, that Joshua E. Crawford died of morphine and opium poisoning, instead of pneumonia, was expected to be introduced by the attorneys for the heirs-at-law, when the hearing of the will contest was resumed before Colonel James N. Anderson, auditor, Thursday morning.

Dr. Harris, who had not completed his evidence when the hearing adjourned Wednesday took the stand Thursday morning for cross-examination by Reuben Arnold, attorney for Mrs. Mary Belle Crawford, 674 West Peachtree, Crawford's widow and named as sole heir in the estate valued at $250,000.

No announcement would be made by the attorneys for the heirs-at-law, who number more than thirty, but it was confidently understood they would not rest the case with the introduction of Dr. Harris, but would have other experts, and probably members of the family to take the stand in an effort to substantiate the evidence of Dr. Harris.

Attorney Arnold stated that the evidence of Dr. Harris would be torn to pieces when he put Dr. J. W. Hurt on the stand to tell of administering morphine and opium to Crawford in an effort to stop the violent fits of coughing and near congestion of the lungs, with which he suffered in the last month of his life.

He intimated also that he would introduce experts to prove that the quantities of opium and morphine found in Crawford's stomach by Dr. Harris were not sufficient to produce death, nor more than a normal dose administered by the average physician.

Mrs. Crawford, the widow, was not in the court room Wednesday when the poison theory was advanced by Dr. Harris, and it was doubtful whether she would attend the hearing Thursday.

Heirs-at-law to the estate and their friends attended in large numbers, and despite the fact it is a strictly civil procedure and no court official is presiding, it had all the appearance and interest of a sensational criminal trial.

Queen of Greece Cables for Chewing Gum for Troops

NEW YORK, July 10.—Solon G. Vlasto, editor of The Atlantis, to-day received a dispatch from Queen Sophia, of the Hellenes, asking for a shipment of chewing gum.

To make him more certain why chewing gum was so urgently needed, Miss Contostavlos, a lady in waiting to the Queen, cabled later:

"Chewing gum is against thirst."

Mr. Vlasto cabled $2,000 at once and is about to send the chewing gum.

McNab Given Praise In Caminetti Report

SAN FRANCISCO, July 10.—Although Judge Vanfleet, of the United States District Court, on Tuesday removed the "stinger" from the Federal rGand Jury's report, in which President Wilson and Attorney General McReynolds were criticised for their part in the Diggs-Caminetti affair, he permitted some praise for John L. McNab to stand in the amended report.

"Mr. McNab is of the type needed in positions of public trust, and the Department of Justice has lost one of its best officials," the report reads.

'Cooling Period,' Is Rabbi's Divorce Cure

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., July 10.—"Cooling periods" three months from the finish of the trial to give remorse a chance to work and bring about a reconciliation were advocated to-day by Rev. J. Leonard Levy, of Pittsburg, as a remedy for the divorce evil.

Dr. Levy said in a paper read before the Conference of American Rabbis that Rabbis should demand two weeks' notice from those who wanted to be married so as to investigate their records.

Saves Girl; Year Goes; Reward, Cold Stare

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Andrew P. Talmadge, of Washington, last summer jumped overboard, clothes and all, and rescued a young woman after she had gone down the second time. In the rescue he was obliged to put his arm about her. She gave him an awful glare, but he attributes it to excitement.

To-day he met the young woman on the street, and instead of beaming a smile of gratitude, she turned her head haughtily and did not speak.

Deserted, She Asks Work, Not Charity

Mrs. Emory Batta, who appealed to Matron Mary Bohnefeld for assistance in finding employment after being deserted by her husband, denies the published report that she is penniless and tramped the streets 48 hours without anything to eat.

Though her husband is said to have taken $500 of their savings Mrs. Batta declared Wednesday that she simply appealed to Matron Bohnefeld to help her get work, not for charity.

Knife Restores Mind, But Man Is Like Child

ROCHESTER, MINN., July 10.—With science as his mother, "J. C. R." the "Man of Mystery" was, it is believed, reborn. "J. C. R." is 46 as his birthdays go, but his mind is as the mind of a newborn infant.

The surgeon's knife that removed the clot from "J. C. R.'s" brain, it is believed lifted the veil that has clouded his mind since June, 1907, when he was stricken by an unaccountable illness at Waseca, Minn.

TWO WOMEN NEAR DEATH IN POND

Picnic Party at Center Hill Witnesses Tragedy Averted by Wee Heroes.

Heroic work of two little boys, Mizel and J. C. Williamson, of 7 Cray Street, saved their mother, Mrs. J. C. Williamson and a young woman, Miss Maud Stradley, of 322 Simpson Street, from drowning in Center Hill pond Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Williamson has a class of little girls at the Tabernacle Baptist Church Sunday school, which she had taken for an outing to Center Hill. Her sons, ages 13 and 12, respectively, were in the party.

Ventured Out Too Far.

Mrs. Williamson and Miss Stradley went in wading. The water was muddy and they could not see the bottom, but the water was so shallow and the bottom so smooth that they ventured farther from the shore, though neither of them could swim. They were walking several feet apart when the girls on the bank saw them go under.

Panic followed. The women in the water fought with desperation oblivious to the fact that opening their mouths to scream was admitting the fatal water. The girls on the bank called and shouted, and the two boys rushed up to see their mother and Miss Ctradley go down in the throes of drowning.

Boys Fine Swimmers.

As they stripped part of their clothes, J. C., the younger, exclaimed:

"I'll save my mother or die with her."

Before the boys could reach the struggling women they had sunk for the second time. When they came up they screamed no more, and they fought with feeble efforts.

The boys had learned to swim in Piedmont Park lake and they hurried to the rescue with the speed of experts. Before the women had gone down for the third time J. C. had grabbed his mother by the hair and Mizel had taken hold of Miss Stradley.

Made Brave Struggle.

It was soon evident, however, that all danger was not passed. The women were too heavy for the little fellows. There were shouts of encouragement from the bank, but the odds were against the victims.

The moment the accident occurred someone had run for Policeman Williamson. He was some distance away and it had taken some time to reach him—seconds in reality, but it seemed hours to the watchers.

As the boys were making for the shore with their burdens he rushed up.

He did not stop to remember that he was a poor swimmer, neither did he discard any of his clothes, but plunged in.

Human Life Line Formed.

Another tragedy threatened when he reached the deep water. Policeman Williamson sank as the women had. When he came up he saw that it was vain for him to attempt to render aid. The boys were making progress toward the shore, so he struck out for the shallow water.

When he secured a footing he watched and gave instructions to the boys. Holding hands, a human life line was made by the girls and all pulled ashore.

The boys were exhausted and the two women unconscious.

Mrs. Williamson is confined to her bed, but her condition is reported not serious. She is merely suffering from a reaction from the shock. Miss Stradley is up and all right except for a slightly sore throat.

Society Leaders, in Masks, See Risque Paris Play 'I Love It'

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 10.—Wearing of masks by society women who attend racy theatrical productions, but who are ashamed to let their relatives and friends know of it, has come into vogue here.

A large number of women from court circles are daily attending the risque French show, "I Love It," but all wear masks for fear of the censure of their husbands and of Queen Mary, who has forbidden any of the ladies of her court from entering the Middlesex Theater, where the production is on.

Clergymen are beseeching the censor to close up the theater, declaring it will debase all who see it because of its gross imorality.

Fly Pests Cost U. S. $157,800,000 a Year

WASHINGTON, July 10.—Figured out in money, to say nothing of the loss in human life, the cost to the United States annually of supporting its fly population amounts to $157,800,000, say Government experts who have been making a study of the results of the germ-spreading activities of these insects.

It is estimated that the fly is responsible for an expenditure of $50,000,000 for the handling of tuberculosis cases, attributable to germs spread by the pests, while $70,000,000 represents the cost of typhoid fever cases originating in the same way.

Products Exhibit Committee Named

Negotiations toward renting or buying a home for Atlanta-made goods reached the committee stage Wednesday when the Chamber of Commerce appointed Brooks Morgan, V. H. Kriegshaber, Bolling Jones and J. K. Orr to decide whether buying, leasing, or renting with the privilege of purchasing presented the best advantages.

The three propositions were embraced in offers considered Wednesday. It was intimated the committee favored leasing with the option of purchasing.

Big Sewer the Gate To a Gambling Den

PITTSBURG, PA., July 10.—A well-equipped gambling den beneath the street the main entrance to which was a big city sewer was raided by the police late last night. Twenty-two men were captured as well as a large amount of money and gambling paraphernalia.

When the police swooped down on the players consternation reigned, but as there was only one manner of egress or exit, the entire crowd was captured.

Wilson's Work Excels Hopes, Col. House Says

LONDON, July 10.—Colonel T. N. House, the intimate friend of President Wilson, at whose home in New York the President generally stays on his visits to the metropolis, is sailing to-morrow on the Latonia for Boston. In a talk with the representative of the Hearst papers he said:

"President Wilson has achieved and even exceeded the high expectations of his friends. Before his term of office is over it is certain he will have left his mark on history."

The latter has decided to officially adopt her little sister, Jessie, four and a half years old, who also was brought home by the Congressman.

MEN NAMED IN SLAVERY QUIZ NOW SOUGHT

Chief Beavers Declares New and Startling Arrests Are Kear. Alleged Procurer Held.

With the principals in the sensational vice case, Hattie Smith, a 17-year-old girl victim; Mrs. Lena Barnhart, a flashily-dressed woman, alleged white slave procuress; Lige Murray, negro ally, and Clyde Cox, the youth who was arrested in the hotel raid, all bound over to the higher courts, the police Thursday turned the full flare of a searching investigation directly on the hotels and alleged immoral resorts, with the result that new arrests and startling developments were expected during the day.

Chief Beavers Thursday morning declared that his crusade would include the men principals in the vice system as well as the women.

A number of names were given him by Hattie Smith. He will use these as a start along this line of his investigation, and sensational results are expected.

Girl Tells Story in Court.

The remarkable case came to a close Wednesday afternoon when the Smith girl told in court her story. She did not mince nor choose words. Looking at Recorder Broyles squarely, she told of her ruin.

It was in a soda fountain on Cone Street, near James, that she first saw the Barnhart woman, she said. Often she stopped in the soda fountain and usually the woman was there, talking with men or preparing to go riding with them in an automobile, she said.

"One day about two weeks ago I asked who she was. She seemed so popular, was dressed so nicely and had so many friends that I just wanted to know who she was. On the same day one of the men asked me to go for an automobile ride with him, I said I would. When we went to the automobile the Barnhart woman was on the front seat. We went for a ride along the Paces Ferry Road.

"When we returned to Atlanta the woman asked me to go with her to the Carnegie Library. Then she suggested my going with her to the Cumberland Hotel, where she said she would give me an apartment and I could live like a lady.

Given New Name.

"The life she painted attracted me, I said I would go with her. She suggested that she go to the hotel first and arrange for me a room. I followed and found that room 43 had been assigned Lucile Evans, my new name.

"Later I went out on the streets and was picked up by an automobile party that carried me to my home on Marietta Street. Thursday night I went back to the woman at the Cumberland Hotel and made an engagement with Clyde Cox, who was arrested with me Sunday night.

"The following night, Friday night, I met a man named Brower, who said he was from Washington. I went with him to the Brittain Hotel. He registered as Mr. and Mrs. Brower. The next morning I received a telephone call from Mrs. Barnhart to meet her at the Empire Life Building. I rode over in a taxicab, so as to be there on time. We went from there to the Cumberland. Mrs. Barnhart offered to pay for my room at the Cumberland until I could get something to do."

At this juncture the Cumberland

REORGANIZATION IS ASSURED AT STATE FARM

GRIFFIN, GA., July 10.—The board of directors of the State Experiment Station Wednesday voted to comply with the suggestions of National Inspector Allen and to petition the Assembly for an appropriation sufficient to carry on all physical work of the station. With this in view, a committee, consisting of J. J. Flint, J. D. Price, J. H. Mobley, J. W. McWhorter and R. J. H. DeLoach, was appointed.

Should the Legislature provide funds, the $30,000 Federal appropriation will be used exclusively in making scientific experiments from which increased knowledge may be gained by the farmers, as the national department specifies.

Director DeLoach also announced his intention of reorganizing the station for experimental farm work rather than for a model farm. A new feature will be a department of animal husbandry, of which Professor Perry VanEwing, recently connected with experimental farms in Ohio and Kansas, will be the head. The appointment was made Wednesday.

Dr. E. W. Allen, inspector of the National Agricultural Department, presented his plan of reorganization and the terms of the National Government in regard to the $30,000 appropriation.

Those present at the board meeting were J. D. Price, Chancellor D. C. Barrow, Judge J. J. Flint, J. W. McWhorter, J. H. Mobley, R. C. Neely, J. W. Andrews, F. R. Mann, M. G. Gamble, W. H. Henderson and Dr. E. W. Allen, of the National Department of Agriculture.

New York Dressmaker Describes Petticoatless Mode and Harem Skirt From Paris.

NEW YORK, July 10.—"The prudes can not stop them—they are here. That is, they are in Paris, which means that American women of fashion will bring them home with them this fall and winter," said Mme. Bernard, Fifth Avenue modiste, who has just arrived from abroad with the first harem skirt and the silhouette gown.

The former resembles Turkish trousers, which have succeeded the slit skirt, and the latter is a new French creation of lace and pleated tulle, worn with tights of silk of white or flesh pink, with no suggestion of a petticoat unless it be of filmy material.

"The slit skirt has been the most graceful and attractive made for women which has been worn in many years, so all of the great fashion leaders of Paris declare," said Mme. Bernard. "The harem skirt is an adaptation of the slit skirt with the tendency to the full and natural figure about the hips, which is the dernier cri.

"Turkish trousers, properly adapted, are an ideal costume for the modern woman of fashion. The ones I saw in Paris are the most fascinating and bewitching frocks I have ever seen.

"The silhouette gown, which is built on Grecian lines, is extremely beautiful, provided the figure is graceful. It is like looking at a beautiful woman through a fleecy sunlit cloud.

"The gown is so arranged at the hem that by means of a slit up the front—to the knees—and by pulling the diaphanous pleated tulle and lace criss-cross about the ankles a sort of trouser effect is obtained which only shows when the wearer moves about."

BALKAN TOLL OF DEATH PLACED AT 65,000

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

VIENNA, July 10.—According to estimates compiled here to-day from official and unofficial dispatches from the Balkans, at least 65,000 men have been killed in the fighting between Bulgarians on one side and Servians, Greeks and Montenegrins on the other.

It is a certainty, however, that these figures are exaggerated, as the Servian and Greek losses have invariably come from Bulgarian sources, while estimates of Bulgarian casualties have emanated from Athens, Uskub or Belgrade.

Another Great Battle Raging; 75,000 Engaged.

SOFIA, July 10.—Another desperate battle with enormous losses of life on both sides is raging north of Kotchana between Bulgars and Serbs who attempted to cross the border into Bulgaria.

The Servians had a double object—first, to march upon the Bulgarian capital; second, to get behind the Bulgarian lines and cut off the retreat of the two southern divisions to Kustendil, the Bulgarian base of operations.

According to official advices from the front, the battle is being fought between Kotchana and Egri Palanka, along a small river. It is estimated that about 75,000 men are engaged. The battle lines are stretched over an area of ten miles.

Legislators Favor Girls' Home Plan

Unanimous approval of the Penitentiary Committee was won Wednesday by Representative Jones, of Coweta, and Representative Mills, of Butts, for their bill appropriating $75,000 for a State home for wayward girls. The measure will be reported immediately, with recommendation for passage.

While no site is mentioned in the bill, the Penitentiary Committee discussed the advantages of Milledgeville.

Fights Insurance Suit Under Suicide Clause

COLUMBUS, GA., July 10.—A suit of M. L. Richardson, administrator of the estate of F. M. Richardson, who was shot and killed October 25, 1912, against the Prudential Life Insurance Company, to collect a $2,000 policy, is being heard in City Court.

When the father, M. L. Richardson, demanded payment, the insurance company refused to settle, claiming that the insured committed suicide.

A similar suit for $2,000 is pending against the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company.

GIRL TELLS VICE STORY IN FULL TO COURT

Chief Begins Search for Men Named by Victim of White Slave System.

Hotel register was introduced and the name of Lucile Evans was found under three seprate dates. She said she had also secured rooms at the Childs Hotel, but she could not recall the name under which she had registered.

Proprietor Kistner, of the Cumberland, testified that both the women had conducted themselves properly while at his hotel, and that could find no cause for ejecting them.

When Mrs. Barnhart was placed on the stand she said:

Woman Scored by Court.

"This girl said that her parents had driven her away from home and that she was penniless and had no place to stay. Out of the kindness of my heart I carried her to the Cumberland. She came into my apartment and I gave her a night gown and kimono.

"My attitude toward her was that of a benefactress. I did not encourage her to do wrong—I would not have done so. I suspected she was not straight, but even at that I felt sympathy for her."

Judge Broyles severely scored the woman. He ordered the officers to take her child away and have it provided for in the Home for the Friendless. Her bond was fixed at $500. The other bonds were $100.

Alert Friends Turn 'Surprise' on Pair Wedded 'Secretly'

When Miss Myrtle McLean, of 250 Bass Street, and Gordon Hanson, of 168 Davis Street, stole away to the minister's Wednesday night they thought themselves the only persons in on the secret. Arrangements for their marriage in November had been made, but they decided to steal a march and surprise their friends.

Much to their surprise, however, a number of friends surprised them by appearing suddenly and offering congratulations. There was nothing to do but confess.

The marriage was performed by the Rev. John F. Purser, 204 Lee Street.

Elks Club in Macon May Abolish Buffet

MACON, July 10.—The conviction of C. B. Wright, the secretary of the Elks Club, on the charge of violating the prohibition law, may mean the abolition of the buffet feature of the Macon lodge. Many of the members believe that the buffet should be discontinued, if it is ultimately upheld that the Elks are violating the law in operating it.

Though defended by the ablest lawyers of the city, Secretary Wright was found guilty by a jury.

Hundreds are engaged in the day and can not get to the lake, members of the Federation say.

SIDELIGHTS on GEORGIA POLITICS

by JAMES B. NEVIN

Representative Clements, of Irwin County, owns the identical spot of ground upon which President Jefferson Davis was captured, after the surrender of General Lee and the flight of the Confederate administration from Richmond.

The arrest of Davis was effected in a little clump of woods, about two acres in extent, near the Clements homestead, and it has been preserved, just as it was then, ever since the war. In the family of Mr. Clements it has always been considered a sacred place.

When Mr. Clements' father died he left a request that this spot of ground be "kept in the hands of Southern people." He was a lieutenant in the Confederate army, and idolized Jefferson Davis. He aided in the fallen chieftain's escape, and only consented to his surrender when it became plain that further resistance was worse than useless.

Mr. Clements is contemplating, in order that his father's last wishes may be complied with, asking the State of Georgia to accept title to this spot where Davis was arrested, and to appoint some kind of commission or committee to take it in charge.

He has worked out no definite plan—he merely wishes to give the property to the State, with the understanding that the State will protect it, preserve it and keep it, as his father wished, in the hands of "Southern people."

Not a stick of timber has been cut from the land since the day Jefferson Davis was arrested thereon, and many trees that were mere saplings then now are great oaks and pines.

Representative Shelby Myrick, of Chatham, is one of the very hardest worked men in the House.

He heads the big Committee on Constitutional Amendments, and that committee likely will be worked overtime this session.

Myrick is one of the very best lawyers in the House, and is a gentleman of extreme affability and effectiveness. In other words, he is both able and affable.

Mr. Myrick's committee already has returned one county to the House with a favorable report, and the chances seem bright for the creation of the same by the Legislature. The proposition—Barrow County—has been thoroughly thrashed out in the committee, and the House is apt to take the committee's findings as righteous and just.

Speaker Burwell picked for the constitutional amendment committee from among the best legal talent he could locate in the House, and when he made Mr. Myrick the chairman of that committee he paid him a high but deserved compliment.

A meeting of the legislative committee of the Georgia Anti-Saloon League was held at Wesley Memorial Church in Atlanta Tuesday night, several members of the House and Senate being present.

It was decided not to introduce the Tippins bill or any substitute for it at this session of the Legislature, but temperance legislation instead will take the shape of a bill intended to gather the fruits of the Webb-Kenyon bill against interstate shipments of liquor recently passed by Congress.

Whether the Legislature will enact any liquor legislation whatever this session is problematical, as there has been so far no particular agitation of the matter.

Representative George F. Paulk, of Berrien, will introduce in the House soon a bill to establish a branch school for the deaf in South Georgia.

The bill will ask for a branch school convenient to the 150 deaf children in South Georgia who are unable to avail themselves of the education offered by the Cave Spring School, on account of its inaccessibility.

The bill will not specify any particular location, but will leave that to be settled by a committee appointed by the Legislature or Governor. No large appropriation for buildings will be asked, but the town where the school will be located will be expected to provide temporary buildings, at least.

Representative Crawford Wheatley's dinner to the House Appropriations Committee Wednesday evening at the Capital City Club had much more behind it than the mere matter of a compliment to his committee, although, of course, it was a most delightful and engaging compliment.

Its direct purpose was to bring as intimately together as possible the committee and Governor Slaton.

Mr. Wheatley, who is the chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, believes that Governor Slaton is exactly right in his ideas with respect to the State's income and outgo. The Governor is known to have determined that the present Legislature shall keep the lid on appropriations, and not exceed the revenue anticipated under the present system of taxation. He has made it very plain that he will exhaust the executive resources, if necessary, in undertaking to do that.

Mr. Wheatley is determined to uphold the Governor at every turn, if it be within his power, and to that end already has had numerous conferences with his excellency.

In order to facilitate the work and to make all features of it as pleasant and as cordial as possible, Mr. Wheatley arranged his dinner last night—and it may be said that it was, in every sense of the crowds, a complete success.

It is safe to say that the Governor will find the House Committee on Appropriations standing right behind him in his work of reforming the State's finances, and if the committee takes that stand, it may be accepted as a further fact that the entire House will fall in line promptly and willingly.

General Agricultural Committee No. 2 of the House has a large grouch toward General Agricultural No. 1.

General Agricultural No. 1 had a hog cholera bill before it Wednesday, and was so impressed with the importance of the thing that it invited General Agricultural No. 2 to sit with it in joint session and hear the arguments. G. A. No. 2 readily consented to this and sat through two mortal hours of talk about hogs and things.

When the time came to vote on the bill, however, G. A. No. 1 moved to put G. A. No. 2 out of the room, leaving the voting entirely to G. A. No. 1. To this G. A. No. 2 objected vehemently.

Rather than get out, G. A. No. 2 moved to adjourn—and the motion carried!

The hog cholera bill, therefore, still is up in the air, and G. A. No. 2 has a big grouch toward G. A. No. 1.

Atlanta-Anderson Interurban Favored

Feasibility and desirability of an interurban line, 120 miles long, between Atlanta and Anderson, S. C., was discussed at a meeting of the Chamber of Commerce Wednesday afternoon.

T. F. Watkins and M. M. Mattison were presented as boosters of the Anderson end of the movement. The Atlanta men received the suggestions favorably and intimated they would take action.

League Is Sued For Wilson's Band Music

NEW YORK, July 10.—William B. Hornblower, as president of the Woodrow Wilson College Men's League, was sued in the Supreme Court for $730 due three bands who played for Wilson Marchers in the Presidential campaign.

Their claims have been assigned to the Musical Mutual Protective League.

Dr. Glenn to Head Cement Corporation

Dr. R. G. Glenn, former State School Commissioner, was elected president of the Piedmont Portland Cement Company at the annual meeting of the stockholders of the corporation Wednesday afternoon. J. H. Davis was chosen secretary and treasurer.

The mills of the company, among the largest in the State, are located at Portland, Ga. Dr. Glenn will have his offices in the general offices of the company in the Austell Building.

GOVERNOR AGAIN CITES NEED OF ECONOMY

Makes It Plain at Dinner That He Will Not Countenance Extension of Deficit.

Governor Slaton again made it plain in an after-dinner address at the Capital City Club Wednesday night that he will insist upon rigid economy in the Legislature until Georgia's present systems of finance and taxation are radically reformed.

Chairman Crawford Wheatley, of the House Appropriations Committee, was host. The dinner was given in honor of the House committee and the Executive. It was informal, and was given for the purpose of getting the committee and the Governor in close and intimate touch.

The Governor pointed out that the estimated deficit in the State treasury now, based upon appropriations made by the last Legislature, amounts to the amazing sum of $776,170.

To Curb Expenditures.

He said he could not see his way clear to an extension of that deficit, if it were within his power to prevent it. He held that it is the State's duty—its honorable duty—to wipe out the deficit entirely, and to that end he invited the help and co-operation of the committee. The Governor said the two items that should be watched closest are the common schools and the pensions.

"The matter of Georgia meeting its obligations promptly is a matter of business, not sentiment," said the Governor. "We must keep our outgo within our income!"

Tax Reform Urged.

The Governor stressed the necessity of tax equalization, reiterating his oft-stated position in that direction.

The committee evidently took the Governor's remarks in good part, for on all sides expressions of determination to help him and hold up his hands were heard.

All the talks were in happy vein, and it was the impression that the Governor and the Committee on Appropriations understood each other very well, indeed, when the dinner was over.

Besides the Governor and the House Committee on Appropriations, Speaker Burwell, Chairman Aikin and Vice Chairman Cole, of the Ways and Means Committee, and a number of newspaper men attended Mr. Wheatley's dinner.

J. Randolph Anderson, President of the Senate, was prevented by sickness from being present.

TWO SETBACKS GIVEN STATE IN FRANK CASE

Girl whose story tends to divert suspicion to Conley in Phagan case.

MISS MATTIE SMITH.

Miss Mattie Smith's Story and Finding of Envelope Point Suspicion to Conley.

Two serious setbacks were given the prosecution in the Phagan murder mystery late Wednesday. The first came in the story told to Solicitor Hugh M. Dorsey by Miss Mattie Smith, a former employee of the National Pencil factory, in which Jim Conley's statment that he saw her at the factory at about noon the day of the crime was specifically denied, and further discredited by her assertion that she saw a negro lounging on the first floor among the boxes near the stairway about 9:30. This goes to disprove Conley's story that he did not reach the factory until after 10 o'clock and serves to point suspicion more directly at him.

The second reverse to the theories of the prosecution was contained in a revival of the story of the finding of part of Mary Phagan's envelope on the first floor near the spot where Conley admits he had been sitting the afternoon the girl was killed. As was generally known at the time, one corner of the envelope bearing Mary Phagan's number was discovered by one of the detectives working on the case.

Bears Out Robbery Theory.

If the envelope is accepted as genuine evidence, it must reasonably be construed to mean that the Phagan girl went to the factory Saturday noon, visited the office of Frank, and then descended the stairs to the first floor, where the negro Conley was hidden in the darkness.

The finding of the envelope bears out the theory that the original motive in the crime was robbery. Conley was known to be constantly in debt and in need of money. Of his own accord he told of asking Frank not to permit another negro to take money out of his salary for a debt. He admittedly was drunk the day Mary Phagan was killed.

As the defense has pictured the probable incidents of the tragedy, Conley saw Mary Phagan enter the factory after her money. In a few minutes he saw her coming downstairs with her pay envelope in her hand or in her mesh bag. The attack followed, and the body of the girl was thrown down the elevator shaft to the basement.

Why Staple Was Pulled.

Conley later went to the basement, according to the theory, completed the murder, if the girl was not already dead, and returned to the first floor to find that Frank had left the building and locked the front door. This forced him to go back to the basement, pull the staple in the rear door and escape through this exit.

On the finding of the envelope nearly two months ago, the detective compared the number with that of Mary Phagan on the payroll. Then he had the office boy, whose duty it was to stamp the envelopes, stamp a new one with Mary Phagan's number. They compared identically.

Mattie Smith's story to the Solicitor Wednesday indicated that Conley's whole story of what happened Saturday morning, April 26, is an utter fabrication; that he could not have met Frank at Nelson and Forsyth Streets as he said he did and that instead he was in the factory at this time and saw all the persons who entered and left.

PUBLIC TO PAY IF TRAINMEN WIN WAGE FIGHT

"Are You, Not Railorads, Willing to Grant Increase?" Is Question, Forbes Declares.

By B. C. FORBES.

Another section of railroad workers have voted to strike, demoralizing traffic over the eastern half of the country, unless demands for wage increases are granted. First the engineers, then the firemen, and now the trainmen have taken this course of action.

* * *

Where are strike threats to end? Arbitrators found the engineers and the firemen entitled to better pay. The railroads were willing to grant concessions in these cases, but they declare the trainmen have no grounds for insisting upon another advance, seeing that their wages were raised in 1910. Yet, there is a feeling in railroad circles that arbitrators will seek the usual line of least resistance and effect a compromise.

* * *

Railroad managers are asking: "If employees know that every time they threaten to starve the people they will be granted higher wages, why should they not go on making fresh demands? They can not lose anything by repeating the performance of putting a pistol to the heads of the railroads and the public—and they have learned by experience that they are tolerably certain to gain something when arbitration is agreed upon."

* * *

That arbitration will be adopted this time is a foregone conclusion. The customary result will likely follow—substantial concessions, entailing heavier burdens upon the public.

* * *

Now, the point raised by the railroads IS important. Where are the demands of railroad employees to end? WHY should they end? Human nature is human nature, and if the men know that by asking a lot they can depend upon receiving something, well, the temptation to ask is apt to prove irresistible. It is easier to preach than to practice self-denial. Are we not all striving to obtain the most we can for our labors? The railroads are at this moment trying to secure better rates for carry freight, are they not?

* * *

Experience may have justified the pessimistic attitude the railroads are taking toward arbitration. But will arbitrators ALWAYS grant concessions regardless of circumstances, regardless of the merits or demerits of the men's demands?

* * *

I do not pretend to have a labyrinth of pigeon-holes, each containing a ready-made solution for some complicated problem. Some writers can solve every difficulty in less than a column. They know just what should be done under every circumstance. I don't. And this problem of adjusting demands of highly-organized workers, especially railroad workers, is one of baffling, unusual difficulty.

* * *

Federal and State Arbitration Boards, as recommended by the commission that arbitrated the railway engineers' dispute, have much to commend them in the case of public and quasi-public service workers upon the uninterrupted continuance of whose labors the people at large are dependent for the necessities of life.

* * *

But it seems to me that the greatest need of all is that the public—you, your next-door neighbor, and all the rest of us—should become thoroughly acquainted with what higher and still higher wages mean TO US. The railroads will not by whatever increase in wages the trainmen may be granted. YOU and I will pay. The railroads have not one dollar that you and I did not contribute. They have only one source of revenue—the public.

* * *

Therefore, the question to ask is not, "Should the railroads raise wages?" but "Should WE pay railway workers higher wages?" For WE foot the bill.

* * *

If we conclude, after learning all about the rates of pay these men receive, that they are getting less than we earn ourselves, that we ought to contribute more to their weekly envelopes, that they cannot live as comfortably as the average workers of similar skill, then let us make our decision known. Once it is clearly realized that the public, not soulless corporations, must meet the bill, must give up out of their pockets every additional dollar paid over to these workers, then public sentiment will govern rates of wages and govern them equitably.

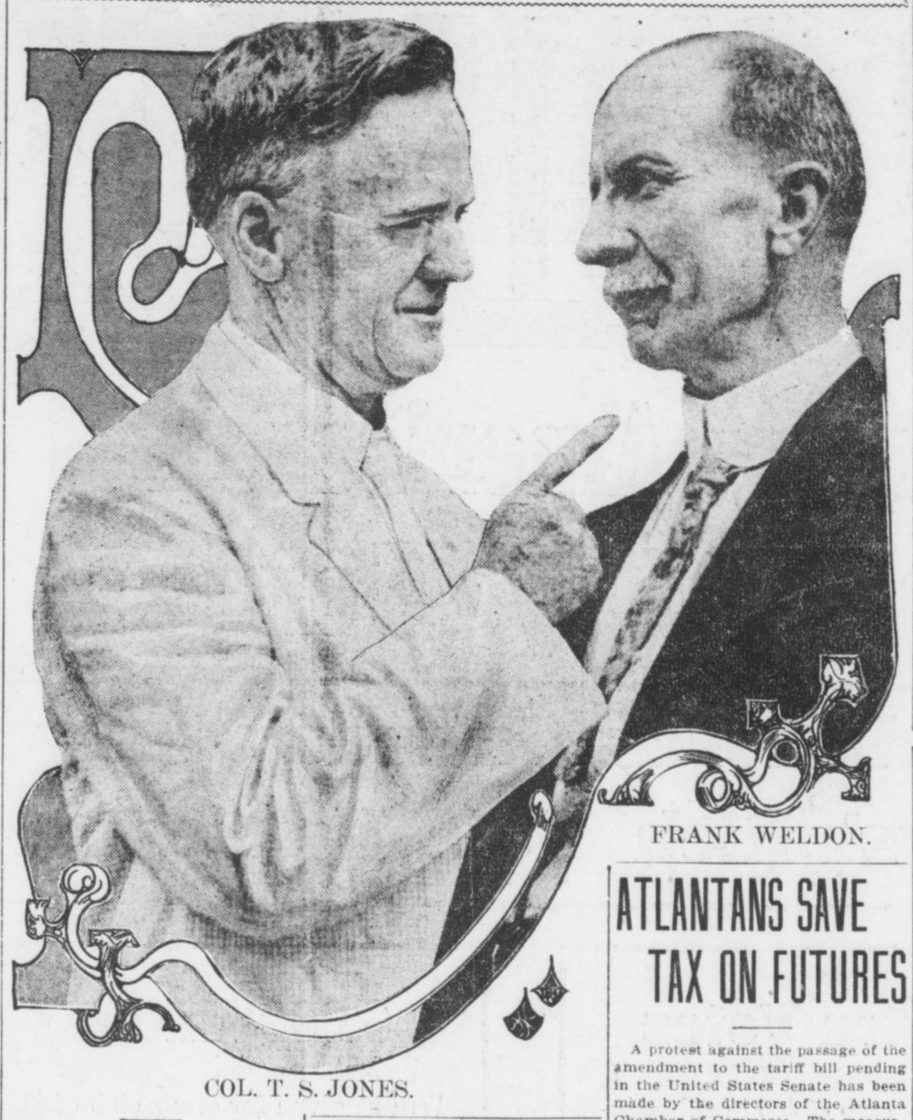
* * *

Our impulse is to side always with the worker and against the employer. But in the case of the railroads, you and I are in reality the employers. When I side with the men we side against ourselves. Mind you, it may be only common justice that we should so side. The trainmen now threatening to strike may be entirely entitled to higher wages. It may be our duty to put our hands in our pockets a little deeper in their behalf. But let us realize what we are doing when we favor higher wages. Do not let us delude ourselves that somebody else is to pay the extra remuneration.

* * *

Once we have a public thoroughly enlightened as to what wage advances mean and on whom the burden falls, then threats that are not warranted will fail. On the other hand, workers that are underpaid will be able to gain a fairer hearing, even if they have no deadly weapon to level against their employers.

LEGISLATORS CONSIDER $100,000 GEORGIA EXHIBIT AT CANAL FAIR



COL. T. S. JONES.

FRANK WELDON.

State Commission Hard at Work to Persuade Legislature to Appropriate Fund.

Georgia will have one of the most complete and "jam-up" State exhibits at the great Panama-Pacific International Exposition at San Francisco if members of the State Commission and others interested get what they want—$100,000—from the present Legislature.

The first gun in the big campaign was fired Thursday when Representative R. B. Blackburn, of Fulton County, and other legislative boosters for the Cracker State presented a resolution in the House providing for an appropriation as authorized by the 1912 Legislature. The decision to wage an active campaign for the $100,000 was made Tuesday at a meeting of the State Exposition Commission.

Colonel T. Sambola Jones, of Louisiana, United States Commissioner for the exposition, who arrived in Atlanta Tuesday, will fire the second gun of the campaign Monday at noon when he will address both the House and Senate in joint session to urge the adoption of the resolution.

State Building Urged.

"We hope," said Colonel Jones, "that the Governor and his staff or a committee of distinguished citizens of Georgia will visit San Francisco to select a site for the proposed State building which this State should have, by all means, to house its exhibits and to care for the thousands of Georgians who will visit San Francisco in 1915.

"It is our plan also to have moving pictures of Georgia's participation in the exposition, showing every movement from the selection of the site for the building to the great Georgia Day, including the formal dedication of the building.

"These pictures will be sent all over the country and will constitute a living record of an event of which Georgians will ever be proud."

Mr. Weldon, chairman of the State Commission named by Governor Brown last year, was equally enthusiastic.

Big Display Planned.

"We are going after that appropriation with a vim," said he, "and we believe we will get it. Georgia must be represented—well represented—at this the greatest exposition that ever has been held.

"The commission proposes to have a strong display of Georgia's agricultural and mineral resources, as well as an exhibit showing her manufacturing activities. The State is one of the richest in the Union in natural resources and deserves to have a creditable exhibit at San Francisco."

Two Near Death in Auto Crash; Nabbed On Speeding Charge

A. M. Moon, of Adamsville, and O. H. Starnes, of Center Hill, are congratulating themselves to-day on their remarkable escape from injury when their automobiles collided in the Adamsville road last night. Both machines were demolished and their occupants hurled several feet. Beyond a few bruises, though, neither man was hurt.

Noise of the collision attracted a farmer. He telephoned to county police headquarters. Officers placed Moon and Starnes under arrest on charges of reckless speeding.

Moon operates a market in Decatur Street, while Starnes keeps a grocery in Marietta Street.

Miner's Neck Broken When Earth Caves In

CARTERSVILLE, July 10.—John Baker, a white miner, lost his life at the Cherokee Cochre Company's mines near this city when several tons of dirt caved in on him, breaking his neck. He died a few minutes after being rescued. He was 31 years old and unmarried. The funeral and interment will be held to-morrow at his old home near Stilesboro.

Baker was an old-time fiddler of ability, and won many prizes at fiddlers' conventions.

ATLANTANS SAVE TAX ON FUTURES

A protest against the passage of the amendment to the tariff bill pending in the United States Senate has been made by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce. The measure taxes cotton futures dealings.

The protest was made at a meeting of the Atlanta body Wednesday afternoon. Letters were sent to the two Georgia Senators and to Congressman William Schley Howard, urging them to oppose the "rider."

F. M. Inman was chairman of a special committee which handled the matter. He made the report recommending that the chamber go on record against the bill. Other members of the committee were T. A. Nicolson, J. S. Akers and E. S. Ehney.

Objection to the bill was based on the charge that it would eliminate the cotton exchange, would throw the farmers into the hands of the spinners, thus forcing the price of cotton down.

The members of the committee held that it would do away with the cotton merchant who deals directly with the farmer and country merchant, in that it would prevent him from using future contracts.

CONTESTANTS TO RIDE PONIES NEXT SUNDAY

Children and Parents Invited to Meet Managers in Grant Park to Discuss Race.

Parents of the contestants and the contestants themselves are very cordially invited to Grant Park Sunday afternoon when the ponies, some harnessed and others saddled, will be on hand.

There will be rides and drives for all the children, and for the parents there will be an opportunity to inspect the prizes for which their children are working and a chance to meet the contest manager.

The contest manager is particularly anxious to meet the parents and confer with them as the race enters upon its last lap. But nineteen working days remain in the contest, and the children will need the co-operation of their parents to the fullest extent. How to help the boys and girls in the race will be the topic which the contest manager and the parents will discuss.

The office force of The Georgian and American contest department is busy totaling the bonuses which the contestants have earned through the five-club offers, and the first $30 offer. This is proving even a greater task than anticipated, and it is impossible to give the contestants' full standings as yet.

Meanwhile another bonus offer is in effect. Liberal amounts of extra votes are offered for clubs of $35, $25 and $15 in subscriptions turned in before 10 o'clock the night of July 19.

Subscriptions of any length—two years, a year, six months, three months or even a month—may be combined to make up these totals.

Savannah-to-Florida Road Plan Indorsed

Favorable report on the bill providing for construction with convict labor of a highway 100 miles long from Savannah to the Florida border at St Marys River, in Camden County, was authorized Wednesday by the Penitentiary Committee of the Georgia Legislature. Representative Slater, of Bryan County, is its author.

The new road is intended to be part of the national highway system.

FARMERS WIN BY CO-OPERATION IN EUROPE

Mutual Producing and Distributing Societies Get Credit for Vast Increase in Crops.

By JOHN CUNNINGHAM.
Ohio State Senator, Member of American Agricultural Commission, and Secretary of the Production Group.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

PARIS, July 10.—Thus far we have passed 60 days studying the various principles underlying the success of European agriculture. By dividing into sections and groups we have covered every phase of agriculture and studied the best methods pursued in every country in Europe.

Without question, co-operative credit and co-operative producing and distributing societies have accomplished a great deal for European farmers during the last 25 years. The reaching of scientific agriculture colleges in short course schools and on farms during the growing season has had much to do with the vast increase in crop production. Encouragement by the various Governments has been another important factor.

Interest in Every Country.

In every country visited a strong realization of the importance of agriculture is manifested. While methods differ in various countries the same underlying principles are found everywhere.

Highly important principles are the conservation and utilization of every natural resource, the scientific application of manures and chemical fertilizers and the great systems of co-operative credits, which in reality make all the other principles operative.

I have visited Italy, Hungary, Austria, Switzerland, Germany, Denmark, Holland, Belgium and France. In each of these countries we found some special lines of work more advanced than in the other countries. But when we group these special lines and attempt to apply them to our own country we find one thing lacking in America, namely co-operative organizations.

The intensive methods of farming employed in Italy are applicable to many sections of country. The Goverment policy of helping farmers to own their own homes is bringing many Italians back from America.

Swiss Farmers in Union.

In Switzerland more than one-third of all farmers belong to co-operative organizations that are banded into a central organization entitled the Swiss Farmers' Union, which can control the Government policy. Through these organizations the farmers sell all their products and buy all their necessities.

Co-operative credit and distribution societies have played an important part in the rapid development of Germany's agriculture during the past 40 years. Germany produces more than twice as much to the acre as the United States does and from land that has been farmed for centuries. It is now up to us to double our production.

Denmark has made a world-wide reputation through her co-operative exporting societies by guaranteeing every egg and every pound of butter and bacon. Each egg is stamped with the date when laid and the producer's number is recorded in the National Federation's register. Any complaint may be traced directly back to the real producer. Here again farmers have the controlling voice in Government and Denmark is prospering immensely.

Holland's Cheese Fame.

Holland, as a dairy country, has attained fame for her fine cheeses. Her Government exacts a high standard of excellency by rigid enforcement of the pure food laws.

In France the work of the Ministry of Agriculture through co-operative credit and production societies is rapidly coming to the front. When the final report of this commission is made the French methods of co-operative credit will receive deserved consideration.

In America we need long-time credit, conservation of the soils, fertility and improved methods of distribution.

SLOGANS EXPLAIN WHY ATLANTA FOLKS BOOST

Designs Submitted in Georgian's Half-Million Club Contest Express City's True Spirit.

Thursday's entrants in the $25 prize slogan contest reveal more than ever that Atlanta's true individuality is the inspiration for the slogans. Any city can boost, but none can boost like Atlanta, as the slogans clearly show.

The pretty girl idea has taken a strong hold on the contestants. One submitted by Robert M. DeFassell, Atlanta Athletic Club, makes the face of a pretty girl the emblem of the "500,000 club." Its caption expresses the lure of romance:

"Miss Atlanta, 'Boost-er.' 500,000 by 1920."

The whole country has been impressed with the aggressive and forceful methods of Police Chief J. L. Beavers. Taking advantage of this William E. Muirhead suggested for a button a face of Chief Beavers with the words: "500,000 by 1920. Get 'Em or Bust."

Contest Open All Week.

Slogans received as late as Saturday will be eligible for the prize. On that day the committee of judges—John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor—will meet and decide the winner. The lucky one will be announced in Hearst's Sunday American.

Here are some of the clever ideas that came to the contest editor through the mails:

"The Atlanta Spirit, Atlanta's Boost.

"A Half-Million Souls, Atlanta's Boast"—J. F. Harbour, 41 North Pryor Street.

"Atlanta, My Criterion. 1913-1920. 200,000—500,000"—Lewis J. Ball, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"500,000 by 1920. Atlanta Offers You Opportunity, Peace and Plenty"—Mrs. A. O. Woodward, South Atlanta.

"Atlanta, the Dixie Flyer,
"Will Care for Half a Million Souls and Higher"—Mrs. M. J. Rossman, Greensboro, Ga.

"For 500,000 Souls We'll Win in a Canter.

"Talk, Hustle. Boost for Atlanta"—Lucile Hiatt, 14 Killian Street.

"Here's to 500,000 by 1920, With Atlanta Spirit and Atlanta Pluck."—E. F. Covington, Ga.

"Progress, Prosperity, Pride, Population. Boost Atlanta Club. 500,000 by 1920."—Mrs. B. J. Harrison, 180 Lake Avenue.

"Atlanta 1920 Census Booster. Lend a Hand. Make It Grand. Five Hundred Thousand."—R. S. Thomson, 16 Bedford Place.

Submitting a button design with skyscrapers and airships and a park drive, Roy Chapman, 55 Loomis Avenue, suggests:

"Atlanta Booster Club. Boost Atlanta. 500,000 Population by 1920."

"Half-Million City, 1920. Be a Booster."—J. M. Swift, 240 Crew Street.

W. R. Menkee and Harold Runge, of the Western Union Telegraph Company, urge a button on which is a picture of a gate, with the words:

"Atlanta, Gate City. 500,000 Population 1920."

Prosperity in Atlanta.

"Health, Prosperity For You in Atlanta. Ask Me Why."—H. B. Tuller, of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company.

"Atlanta, the Nation's Queen. Biggest, Brightest, Best Means Atlanta."—Mrs. Homer Hones, 54 Flat Shoals Avenue.

"Join the Half-Million Club and Boost Atlanta."—Isadore Bleich, 17 Kennedy Street.

"Atlanta, the Last Word in Cities."—Myrtle Maxwell, 708 South Boulevard.

"Me For Half-Million Atlanta. On the Job All the Time."—M. M. Welch.

"Atlanta Always Ahead."—Nate A. Gordon, 110 Capitol Avenue.

"Ashes to Billions."

"From Ashes to Billions Against All Competition. Onward Her Watchword."—Foley W. Vaden, Jackson, Ga.

"A Half-Million We Want and a Half-Million We'll Get."—Sam L. Sugarman, 351 Central Avenue.

"Bigger, Busier Atlanta. Why Not 500,000?"—T. J. Harrington, 35 North Pryor Street.

"Watch Me Pull. Atlanta, 500,000, 1920."—W. J. Hicks

"For Atlanta—Half-Million and Then Some."—E. W. Ray, Acworth, Ga.

"Atlanta, the City That Satisfies."—A. M. Moseley, 45 Williams Street.

"Atlanta! Get the habit!
Half-million! We must have it.
Atlanta spirit has caught many.
Half-million in 1920."

Dress Linen Prices 5 to 10 Per Cent Up

NEW YORK, July 10.—According to a member of the linen trade back from abroad, prices there now are from 5 to 10 per cent higher than when the last heavy purchases were made in November. In the local market staple color dress linens, especially blues and pinks, are scarce. Dealers have advanced prices on several staple numbers.

The substantial business in novelty dress linens this season has led dealers to believe that ratines will be in good demand next season also. The fact that these goods are being shown extensively in cotton is regarded as an indication of their stability.

FIFTH REGIMENT BOYS MIX PLAY AND WORK

Atlanta Soldiers Having Great Time at Instruction Camp on St. Simons Island.

ST. SIMONS ISLAND, GA., July 10.—The soldier boys of the Fifth Georgia Regiment, who arrived here Wednesday from Atlanta, have taken complete charge of St. Simons. Today the boys, somewhat weary of the more or less arduous duties of pitching camp, are having the time of their lives splashing in the surf and wandering around the island.

Thursday night the first big dance will be held and Friday military tactics and instruction will be the order of the day.

Next Saturday the Fifth will be the host of Governor John M. Slaton, ex-Governor Joseph M. Brown, members of the Governor's staff and General R. K. Evans and Colonel Barth, U. S. A.

The distinguished guests have announced their intention of camping in tents just like real soldiers during their two days' stay here.

A special committee from the Brunswick Board of Trade and from the City Council will meet the party at the depot and escort it to the St. Simons boat.

The Fifth will remain in camp at St. Simons for ten days.

Bryan's Commoner Is Made Monthly Paper

LINCOLN, NEB., July 10.—Secretary of State Bryan has announced that with the current issue the Commoner, which he established in 1901, will cease publication as a weekly, and will be issued monthly. The resignation of Richard L. Metcalfe, appointed Governor of Panama, has left the Commoner without an editor.

Under the new arrangement Mr. Bryan says he will be able to give attention to more editorial writing. The Commoner's size will be doubled. C. W. Bryan will continue in direct control.

ECZEMA LOOKED AWFUL ON FACE

Started with Watery Pimples, Itched and Burned Badly. Awful Sore. Used Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Boy Now Well.

R. F. D. No. 2, Fredericks Hall, Va.—"My little son was very bad off with the eczema on his face. It started with watery pimples and it itched and burned so badly that he wanted to scratch it all the time and he made an awful sore on his face. I would sit and hold his hands a lot of the time to keep him from scratching it. He didn't sleep any scarcely. The eczema looked awful while on his face. I was afraid it would last for life. He was real cross and fretful.

"I had him treated and he grew worse daily. As soon as I heard of Cuticura Soap and Ointment I sent and got a twenty-five cent cake of Cuticura Soap and a fifty cent box of Cuticura Ointment and began using them. I saw a difference in a short time. I only used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment a few weeks before he was a well boy." (Signed) Mrs. Kate B. Pleasants, Dec. 12, 1912.

Although the Cuticura Soap and Ointment are most successful in the treatment of affections of the skin, scalp, hair and hands, they are also most valuable for everyday use in the toilet, bath and nursery, because they promote and maintain the health of the skin and hair from infancy to age. Cuticura Soap (25c.) and Cuticura Ointment (50c.) are sold everywhere. Liberal sample of each mailed free, with 32-p. Skin Book. Address post-card "Cuticura, Dept. T, Boston."

Men who shave and shampoo with Cuticura Soap will find it best for skin and scalp.

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van De Water.

CHAPTER II.

IT is not strange that men do not understand women when woman so often does not understand herself. Mary Danforth did not know what instinct kept her from mentioning to her parents her encounter with Gordon Craig in the subway train. That is, she did not tell them that she knew the name of the man whose pocket had been picked. She mentioned casually that she had seen through the window of her car a thief remove a purse from a pocket of another passenger on a local train and that she had vainly tried to attract the victim's attention to the theft.

"How strange that you should have seen it, and that the other people did not," remarked Mrs. Danforth. "You have quick eyes, my dear."

Mary laughed. "They were not as quick as the pickpocket's fingers," she said lightly.

"People ought to be careful how they carry their valuables," remarked her father sententiously. "New Yorkers should know enough to be on the lookout for thieves. Yet every few days you read in the papers of some careless chap who has been robbed."

The Discussion Ends.

There the disqussion ended. Mary did not think it necessary to tell her father that the man of whom she had spoken was not a New Yorker. She was quite sure that Craig himself would not speak of the incident to her father, even should he present the letter of introduction of which he had told her. She wondered when he would present this, and if her father would mention the stranger to her. Why should he? There were dozens of business acquaintances whom he met weekly and whose names she did not even know. He was a man who did not bring the office and its concerns into his home. She almost wished that she had told a part of it. It was too late now to do so. Once she made an effort to bring the conversation back to the incident; then appreciated with embarrassment that were she now to give an accurate account of the encounter her parents would think it strange that she had not done so before. So she turned the talk again into other channels.

Dinner over, she asked to be excused, explaining that she must "cram" for examinations.

"Must you work late to-night?" queried her mother, sympathetically. "I think it is a shame the way in which you girls have to work to get through the High School. Now, when I was young——"

"Yes, yes, mother, I know!" interrupted Mary, with more asperity than was habitual with her. She was still weary and nervous, but as she saw the shade of wounded feeling that swept across her mother's face she regretted her sharp speech and, stooping swiftly, kissed the pale cheek.

"Forgive me for being so cross, mother," she said gently. "I am hot and tired, and, I fear, a bit grouchy."

"That's all right, Mary," said her father good-naturedly. "Your mother and I understand, and we are proud of the way you have worked. In spite of the fact that High School studies are a bit strenuous, you'll find that the training has been a fine thing for you later in life if you ever have to face the world alone. But I hope you won't have to," he added hastily.

His eyes dwelt happily on the graceful girl before him. She was an only child, and her father always said that she was the best daughter that any couple ever had. He had insisted that she take a course of study that would enable her to support herself if necessary. Every woman ought to have some way of earning her own living, he had declared. Mary reminded him of it to-night, smilingly.

"I'm Going to Insist."

"Well, dad," she teased, "you say you hope I will never have to support myself, and yet I am almost ready to consider myself a competent secretary, stenographer and typewriter. Then what are you going to do with me if I do not take a position?"

"I am going to insist that you keep in practice, but you shall not go to work as long as I live. I want you at home with mother and me. When I die it will be time enough for you to hustle."

"I pray that won't be for years to come," said the daughter, as she ran her fingers caressingly through his gray hair. "Not because I am afraid of work—but because we need and love you—mother and I."

John Danforth looked fondly at his daughter. "Well," he said with a tender smile, "I've lived right up to my income so far, and now I want to be spared long enough to lay aside something for you two—for no man ever had a better wife and daughter."

Mary studied late that night. As she fell asleep she smiled tenderly as her memory recalled the expression of pride with which her father had made this speech.

"Dear old dad," she murmured drowsily. "I love to see that look on his face."

Perhaps a sudden change in the weather, making the air dry and cool, caused life to seem brighter to Mary Danforth the following day, for she returned from school in a happy and hopeful frame of mind. Her mother came to her room late in the afternoon with the news that her father had "just telephoned that he was bringing a business acquaintance home for the evening."

"He says he's a stranger here," added the mother, "and as he's a bit lonesome, father asked him up to dine. He did not tell me his name."

The girl felt a wave of color sweep to the roots of her hair, and she turned away hastily to hide it.

"Perhaps it might be as well to tell Norah to have a salad course to-night, since dad's bringing a stranger home," she remarked casually, "and let's have the new china used, too—shan't we?"

"Certainly," said her mother. So calm was her child's manner that the parent would have been surprised could she have heard her whisper excitedly when she was again alone in her room:

"It is surely Gordon Craig!" Then, as the girl caught a glimpse of her flushing face in her mirror, she blushed again.

Confessions of a Medium

A Striking Expose of Fakery in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the partment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

YOU have watched the crowds in front of the fortune tellers' booths in Coney Island. Of course, you have never been one of those who have been "taken in." But you may have watched the others as they stood amazed at the wonderful "second sight" of Professor Bondaloo, or whatever his title happens to be.

As he sits blindfolded he describes exactly the articles in the crowd, tells the amount of coins and the dates thereon; tells the colors of dresses; reads the titles of magazines; adds complicated figures on the blackboard, and thoroughly mystifies his beholders.

They little know that the Professor instead of being imported from Mandalay, India, probably hails from that far-distant land of East Fourteenth Street or the Bowery, and is known in the winter and in private life by some "imported" name.

The assistant, after beseeching you to come closer, still closer, in order not to lose a single syllable that drops like pearls from the lips of the X-ray visioned man, then announces that the great professor will tell you your name for 10 cents to-day only.

When you go inside you are led to the Professor's sister, or cook, or something, who asks you to cross her palm with silver, which means a quarter, or a half, or even a dollar, according to how gullible you may appear.

She then proceeds to tell you the color of your prospective wife's cousin's hair, and seems to have forgotten that you came in to find out what your parents christened you.

How He Did It.

I am not at this time going to take up the fortune-telling mystery; but I shall content myself with pointing out how I accomplished the wonderful "second sight" or clairvoyance, as it is better known, to the astonishment of far more intelligent minds than my own.

Come with me, then, as I enter a handsome private home on Morningside Avenue. Gathered there are about forty-three or forty-four eminent scholars to study the mysterious power of Ali Ben Hassan, who has been educated in English in Robert College, at Constantinople, and who has but recently come to this country.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the apartment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

My guide goes to the back of the room and says, "I speak, Ali. Have you your second sight? Please tell me what this is?"

Very quickly I answer, "There appears to me a hat."

"Right. Hear me now. Please watch me carefully. See this? I ask you to describe it."

A Watch.

"You hold in your hand a watch."

"Now what kind? Be quick, please."

"It is of silver."

"What is the number? Look carefully. Are you ready? Tell us then."

"The number is 62,810."

And so on the questions and answers went, and everything correct to the minutest detail. A doctor who was present proclaimed the results marvelous—that Ali Hassan was a unique specimen for scientific research. Several motions were made, seconded and carried unanimously, that the results of the experiment be sent to various psychical societies and leaflets be printed with a full and detailed description and mailed to leading authorities in this country and abroad.

Really, when I doffed my turban and sank down to a good hearty laugh with my "guide" later on, I once again had occasion to lament on the credulity of my neighbors. The second sight of all Ali Ben Hassan consisted of nothing but a good memory on the part of myself, an amateur investigator into the frauds of mystery.

My friend and I had arranged a code, as follows: Our questions would tell the answer to what they were asking, by the manner in which they were worded. The first letter in each sentence spelled out the answer; but if we had gone no further this might easily have been detected. So we turned the alphabet topsy-turvy and made H stand for A, T stand for B, S stand for C and so on. For instance, look at the first question that was put to me:

The Solution.

"I" being the first word uttered, suggested "H." "Have" in the second sentence, suggested "A." "Please in the third sentence, suggesting "T"—the three together making "hat."

I can not even begin to show you the further details of the code, which went still deeper, and covered every possible article, description, date, color, metal, etc. We had even gone so far as to vary our code by different signals, and had single words mean fixed things. So that if, perchance, some one began to get the system, we would throw him off the scent. For instance, the second variation made "Say what stone this is" meant diamond. "Please tell me what this stone is" meant emerald, and so on. "Say what country is represented here' would indicate America, while "Please tell me what country is represented here" would indicate Spain.

There is no doubt but the memorizing of these codes is remarkable, and on that basis may be paid for. But I cannot understand why thousands will continue to believe that a strange, unseen power is possessed by these so-called clairvoyants who flourish and grow rich on money defrauded from the credulous pleasure-seekers who frequent the resorts.

One more incident on clairvoyancy: Some time after the Ali Ben Hassan episode, a number of those who had been present were invited to investigate that wonderful gentleman again at a friend's home in Brooklyn. One of the scholars had sufficiently awakened by this time to declare that he thought it was possible the manner in which the questions had been asked had suggested their answer. At this most of the others arose in anger and laughed scornfully at the man who could show himself so skeptical in the face of such conclusive evidence. The "guide" was very much aroused and said he feared this statement would cause Ali to refuse to talk again. (This manner of procedure is generally followed when someone gets on the trail.) Nevertheless, to prove that the charge was preposterous, Ali would allow anyone to ask the questions and he would answer them!

Therefore, to the amazement of all, this was done, and the results were more bewildering than before. There was no doubt of it. Ali Ben Hassan was gifted with a remarkable supernatural sight. But the explanation is even simpler here than in the first incident. We were prepared for all emergencies. I had previously connected in the folds of my turban the end of a slender speaking tube that came close to my ear and extended from another room and was painted in the color of the wall. Hidden in the next room was another confederate, who looked through an opening in the draperies, held a powerful opera-glass to his eyes, and whispered the answers sweetly through the tube in my ear!

New Residents in Towns

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

TACT, judgment and discretion are needed in order to make friends and acquaintances in a new place. Of course, when going to live in a strange town, where one has a few friends, cards may be sent, with the address, to the friends who reside in the town, as soon as one is settled, thus giving them an opportunity to call.

It may be that a bride is making her new home in a town where her husband's friends live. They have received cards for the wedding, or announcements of the marriage, and after they have called and their visits have been returned an interval of dullness may follow. If a few little hospitalities have been offered they may be returned in a simple way.

A new resident must not make advances, must not seem in haste to make acquaintances, must not make first calls on old residents, or send invitations of any sort to them until there has been an exchange of visits and some mark of hospitality has been shown by older residents.

It is well for a new resident to make allowances for an occasional breach of courtesy from well-intentioned persons. These have been known to send invitations to strangers within their gates without the preliminary of a formal call. This has been from carelessness, or the lack of knowledge of the laws of etiquette. A new resident, who may receive an invitation of a general nature from an old resident who has not called, need not stand too strictly on ceremony if by so doing the opportunity may be lost of meeting some pleasant friends. But a second oversight of that sort, from the same hostess, should not be overlooked, and one may well wait on one's dignity for the delinquent hostess to call.

Rules which apply in cities are altogether different from the rules in country neighborhoods or small towns. In a large city it is not the custom ever to make a first call on a new resident or near neighbor, unless a friend in common has requested one to do so. In the country, or in small places, old residents call on a newcomer if it is believed that an exchange of calls would be agreeable.

First calls should be returned within a week or ten days at least.

In Desperate Straits .:. A THRILLING SHORT STORY

WITHOUT—ice and frozen snow, the bitter cold of a Russian winter. Within—the heavy scent of hothouse flowers, a soft rustle of silk as Natascha Alexandrovna waited breathlessly for the words that would decide her brother's fate.

They brought little comfort.

"I am distressed to be obliged to refuse your request," the general replied coldly, "but if your brother chooses to consort with revolutionaries he must take the consequences."

"He is only a boy, and the woman bewitched him," she urged, her heart sinking as he rose, saying coldly, "It is useless to press the matter further. I am powerless."

"Powerless!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "You, the all-powerful chief of police! You, who have so often assured me of your friendship! A word from you would set Boris free, and you refuse to speak it."

"Orders have been given that even I can not disobey," unmoved by her wrath as he had been by her distress.

"Then can nothing be done to save him?"

Vladimir Mirskoff looked at her for a moment, then, "There is a way, but you may not care to take it."

"Not care, when it is a question of saving my brother! Tell me quickly."

"A plot is being laid for the wholesale assassination of government officials, and a new form of deadly explosive has been smuggled across the frontier by a woman who, try as we may, we can not identify. If you could give us the name of one of the leaders Boris is free."

"You surely do not imagine that I could tell you," she exclaimed indignantly.

"No; but your admirer, Paul Goveski, can. He has friends among the Liberals."

"And you dare suggest that I should make him betray his friends?"

"It is the only way to save Boris from Siberia. I am powerless unless I have the name of one of these revolutionaries to give in exchange. After all, why should you have any scruples concerning men who preach murder as a trade?"

She wrung her hands in an agony of doubt, but before she could reply a servant entered to announce that his excellency Count Paul Goveski desired to know if madame would receive him.

"No, no. Say I am engaged; I can not see him."

"On the contrary," interposed Vladimir, "you must see him. Fate has sent him here to save your brother."

Natascha looked at him imploringly, then said, "I will receive the count," and as the man left the room, "Promise me Paul Goveski shall not suffer for his friendship with these men."

"Certainly," he replied. "Where may I wait for your answer?"

"In my boudoir," holding aside a curtain before a door.

"Remember, your brother's liberty, perhaps his life, rests in your hands," he whispered, and vanished almost as she turned to greet the Count.

"I trust I am not too early," he said, bending to kiss her hand. "You had my letter? I am all impatient for the answer."

"You do me honor," she replied, sinking into a chair. "Believe me, I am indeed grateful."

A Protestation.

"It is your love, not gratitude, I want," he pleaded. "Surely you have seen how I adore you. I would die to serve you."

"So others have said. I wonder how much such protestations are worth from you."

"Only try me and see."

"You tell me you love me," she said slowly. "There is no love without trust. What if I ask for a proof of that?"

"Ask what you will. I can deny you nothing."

"It will place your life in my hands."

"It is there already," Paul replied softly, bending over her. "I can not live without you."

"Rumor calls you Nihilist, conspirator," she said lightly, with a bewitching smile. "A woman's curiosity is proverbial. Is it true, and who are your confederates?"

He stepped back and gazed at her in astonishment too great for words. Then, "Madame, do you know what it is you are asking?"

"Why, certainly; a proof that you trust me."

"But this concerns others than myself. It is impossible."

"I thought so," scornfully; "strange how all men are alike, ready enough with words—unfortunately, I prefer deeds,' rising as if to bring the interview to an end.

"But not such as this?" he pleaded. "To betray those who have trusted their lives in my keeping would be a poor way of showing my love."

But she stood silent, her fingers nervously twisting the lace of her dress.

Paul Goveski watched her keenly, then going to an escritoire wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, folded it, and came slowly back, saying gravely, "Here is the name of our leader. The proof you have asked of my love."

Then, as she took it, he continued, coldly: "And now, madame, I bid you farewell. You have said love can not exist without trust, and so have given me the answer I came to seek."

"You are going?" she exclaimed, incredulously.

"Yes; 'love bought by dishonor is valueless," and with a low bow he walked to the door.

She flung aside the paper and, passing swiftly across the room, barred his way, saying brokenly: "No, no; you must not go like this. I did not really mean it. Forgive me," looking up at him beseechingly, with tear-laden eyes. For the question that had tormented her for so long was answered; she knew now that she loved him—that to lose him would be much worse than death itself.

"Then you were not really in earnest?" the sternness melting from his face.

"No," she protested eagerly, "I only wished to try. The paper shall be burned unread."

"I knew I could trust you," he replied joyfully. "Natascha, dearest, I, too, was but jesting. The name I wrote was my own." He stopped, for her face was deadly white and her eyes dilated with terror as she gazed past him into the room.

Turning, he saw Vladimir Mirskoff reading the fatal paper with a quiet smile of satisfaction on his face.

The chief of police carefully refolded the paper, saying, "Paul Goveski, I regret to be obliged to arrest you, but this leave me no choice."

"Indeed he is innocent," cried Natascha, imploringly. "It was only a jest."

A Last Appeal.

"A singularly unfortunate one."

"Why try to undo the effect of your work?" asked Paul, scornfully.

"No wonder you despise me," she said humbly. "Listen, Boris has been sent to Siberia unless I could obtain from you the name of one of the leaders in this plot. They are only assassins and deserve no mercy. But you showed me the baseness of the part I was playing. Indeed, I would have burnt that paper. Say you believe me?"

But her appeal left him unmoved, and his voice was as cold and hard as the ice in the streets outside as he his friends, would repent at the last moment? Never." Then addressing himself to Vladimir, "I suppose it is useless to tell you I have never belonged to any revolutionary society in my life? I suspected madame was being made a tool of, and wished to find out; that was all."

"Quite useless, and I should advise you think of a more plausible tale for your defense." Then to his hostess, "Madame, I wish you good evening."

But Natascha had regained her self-control. She was fighting against desperate odds for all that made life worth the living. Entreaty was useless. If the man before her was to be forced to relinquish his prey, other means must be used, and suddenly the inspiration came.

Turning to Vladimir, she said very quietly: "You spoke of a woman who had concealed a deadly explosive for charging bombs. What if I were to tell you her name?"

"Then you may ask what you will."

"My price is Boris's freedom and the destruction of that paper."

"You, a woman, to betray another woman!" cried Paul. "I refuse to be saved at such a price."

Twice Balked.

"And I refuse to pay it," added Vladimir, decidedly.

Natascha looked at him in dismay. "Refuse?"

"Yes. Why buy what I can have for nothing? Sent to prison as a suspect, you will soon tell me all I want to know."

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Paul, and Natascha glanced at him gratefully as she said, "I will tell you now," opening one of the glass doors of the cabinet containing her famous collection of china fruit. "I am the woman, and here are the bombs."

The man stared at her, too surprised to speak, then Vladimir said stiffly, "Is this also some jest, madame?"

"It is deadly earnest," and, taking a china orange from its shelf, she held it carefully in both hands. "What is there to arouse suspicion in the fad of a society lady for collecting china fruit, and what safer place in which to store bombs than a drawing room frequented by the chief of police?"

"Enough of this fooling," he said, roughly. "I do not believe you," and he made a step toward her.

"Stop!" she cried, holding out the orange on the palm of her hand. "If you move I will convince you of the truth of my tale, only you are not likely to live to acknowledge your error."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Return that paper. Write an order for my brother's release and passports for the three of us by the midnight train to Paris."

"I refuse."

"Then as it is a choice between Siberia and death, I shall drop this at your feet, and there will be no one left to explain the accident that wrecked the house of Natascha Alexandrovna and involved the highly esteemed chief of police in so terrible a fate." Then, turning to Paul, "Have I not chosen well?"

"Yes; a thousand times sooner death with you than life if we are parted." And the look in his eyes told her that the peril in which they stood had blotted out all misunderstandings, but she only said calmly:

The Victory.

"Does your excellency still refuse?"

"I will do what you require," he yielded sullenly. "Put that thing away."

"When you have fulfilled my conditions. Give Paul Goveski his paper."

Vladimir complied, and Paul watched it burn while Natascha continued: "Now write an order for Boris' release and make out our passports." Then, when he had done so, "In return, if you give me your word to do nothing till midday tomorrow, I will leave my china fruit exactly as they are. You can search the house, and think what a sensation such a discovery will make, and how your cleverness will be applauded."

"I give it." And if looks could kill, she would have fallen dead at his feet.

"Then I need detain you no longer. But another time, your excellency, when you wish to make a tool of a woman, beware lest you burn your own fingers."

"You have got the better of me now," he replied, turning to go, "but sooner or later my turn will come, and then—" The pause that followed was more expressive than words.

As the sound of his footsteps died away, Natascha placed the orange on a table and burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, exclaiming, "To think that two men could be so easily deceived!"

"Natascha, what do you mean?" Paul asked.

"It was your danger inspired me. I was desperate," she replied, taking the orange in both hands and giving it a slight twist, when the two halves fell apart, and she held them out for her lover to see they were empty of all save air. "If only I could see Vladimir's face to-morrow when he finds those deadly bombs are no more dangerous than this china orange!"

Up-to-Date Jokes

A man-of-war was lying off Gibraltar, and permission was given to the men to go ashore for the day. The sailors amused themselves in various ways, among others by riding about on donkeys; and their want of experience in this line caused much merriment. An officer, observing one of the men sitting very far back on the animal, instead of in the usual position, called out:

"I say, Jeck, get up more amidships!"

With an injured air he replied: "Well, sir, this is the first craft that ever I commanded in my life, and it's hard indeed if I can't ride on the quarterdeck if I like."

"Take this egg away!" he roared. "Take it away!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter obligingly, as he glanced wistfully at the offending article. "And—and what shall I do with it, sir?"

"Do with it?" The outraged customer rose menacingly from his chair. "Do with it?" he bellowed fiercely. "Why, wring its neck!"

"Broken your leg, sir?" he inquired sympathetically. And then, in sharp, clear tones: "Cork legs! Third counter to the right, sir! Forward, Miss Davis!"

Stolen Fruit Not Sweeter.

A benevolent old man invited a number of small boys from the slums to spend a day at his beautiful old-world country home, and among the many good things which he provided for them was a bountiful and wondrous feast of strawberries and cream.

As the day drew to a close, wishing to impress the lads with a lesson, their benefactor asked:

"Now, suppose, instead of being invited here to eat my strawberries, you had come and helped yourself when nobody was looking, would you have enjoyed the fruit so much?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! And why not?" asked the old gentleman, inspired with a new faith in young Britain's honesty.

"'Cause, sir," came the sad but prompt reply, "we wouldn't 'ave 'ad no cream with 'em!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T TRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 18 years of age. As I was walking on the street the other day I saw a girl whom I hadn't seen before, but I loved her very much the moment I saw her.

What I want to know is how to get friends with that girl.

ALBERT.

Love at sight is such a pretty dream it is a pity to spoil it by getting acquainted.

You are 18—the age to be devoted to making a man of yourself. Bend your energies in that direction, and let love alone for a few years. Under no circumstances should you attempt to form an acquaintance with a girl you happen to meet on the street.

CERTAINLY NOT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am very much in love with a boy. I am 17 and he is 18. He has kissed me a great many times, but now he has stopped writing me, and I have not heard from him for some time. I cried all last night about him.

Would you write him?

NANCY.

You have been very foolish, and his coldness is no more than what you should expect.

Do not write him, and the next time you have a lover, refuse to be so generous with marks of your affection. I trust this experience will prove to you that you are too young to have a lover.

Do You Know---

Failing in her plan to end her life, after seven different attempts in as many months, Laura Griffith, of Atlantic City, has developed a more cheerful view of life, and has signed on as a bareback rider with a circus. As a persistent fatalist, Laura, who is about 18 years old, holds the record. She has tried the poison cup, the glittering dagger, and the more prosaic method of taking a running start and butting her head against a telephone pole. So regularly was she admitted to the city hospital during the past year that a cot was labeled "Laura Griffith" and was held in readiness for her at all hours of the day and night.

Should the measure now before the French Parliament become law it will not be the first occasion on which it has been attempted to make gambling illegal in France. In the thirteenth century St. Louis interdicted all gambling, even prohibiting the manufacture of dice, and Louis XIV was responsible for no fewer than 20 anti-gambling ordinances. But the monarch gave a bad example to his subjects, since every variety of card game known at the time was eagerly and openly played at Versailles.

Five brothers and sisters, named Harris, whose united ages total 438 years, met at a birthday party at Radnage, Bucks. Their ages are 96, 92, 88, 82 and 80, an average of more than 87. Five other members of the same family, who have died, were aged 93, 89, 88, 87 and 77.

Among those recently ordained by the Bishop of Durham was the Rev. A. M. Smith, M. A., to the curacy of Houghton-le-Spring. Mr. Smith has been totally blind for 20 years, but has succeeded in taking his degree at Oxford. The Bishop of Durham appointed him to read the Gospel in the ordination service, which he did from his Braille Bible. His complete Braille Bible consists of nearly 6,000 pages, fills 39 volumes, and occupies a shelf seven feet long.

The GHOST BREAKER

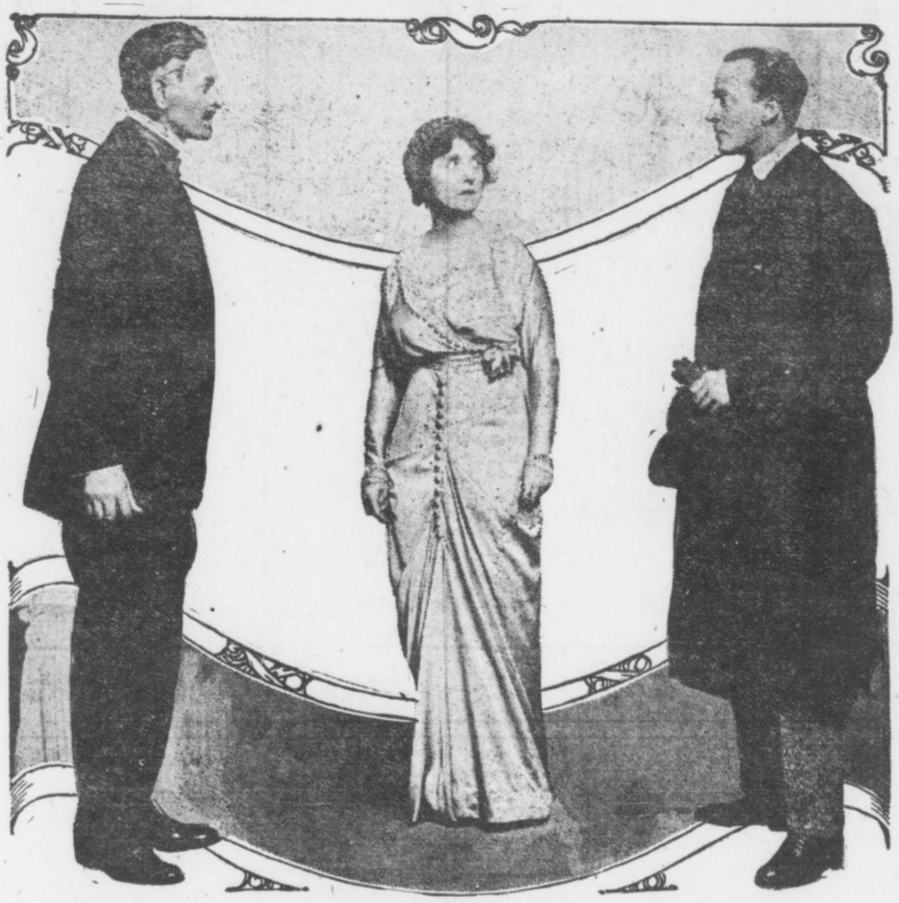
THE PRINCESS INTRODUCES JARVIS TO THE DUKE



"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I am bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Spooks!" grinned Jarvis, appreciatively. He was beginning to be glad he had come. But he saw no answering gleam in the young woman's sober face.

"Call it anything you like," she replied soberly, "but the castle is haunted—just the same. My grandfather was one of the wealthiest nobles in Spain. He died suddenly, leaving everything to my father, his only son and heir. When my father went to take possession of his estate in Segurn the town was full of weird stories of uncanny happenings. The castle was deserted—every one had fled and all told of something in armor that stalked the halls at night. My father laughed at the silly natives and said he would go into the castle and show them how foolish their fears were. He went—and," the girl's voice trembled slightly, "and he was never seen again."

"Hm!" ejaculated Jarvis, with interest. "What happened to him?"

The Princess shook her head and her dark eyes grew very large. "No one knows. He disappeared—vanished utterly—without the slightest clew. Since then two others have disappeared."

"Well, why don't you keep out of there?" he demanded, half seriously. "What's the idea of teasing that spook, anyway?"

"But now my brother has gone in and they haven't heard from him!" Her eyes filled with tears. "That's why I haven't heard from him—why he hasn't answered my cables."

The Treasure.

With true chivalry the young man slightly turned his eyes away that he might not see the tears.

"Now, that's it!" he declared briskly. "You want me to go in and find your brother."

"Yes, that's it!" she cried eagerly. "Save my brother, but," she added quickly, "you must know about this locket. It tells where to find the treasure."

Jarvis ran his other hand through his hair and stared at the trinket in bewilderment. They were coming too fast for him, as he had said.

"Treasure! What is treasure?"

"My grandfather is known to have converted all his wealth into Spanish gold," she explained, "to finance a colonization scheme in Cuba. It amounted to about a million dollars in your money."

The knight whistled. "A million! Eh? How long ago did this happen?"

"Fifteen years ago—and nobody has found it."

Jarvis apparently arranged all these facts in his mind and then inquired:

"Why did you come to America?"

The Princess held up the locket. "A part of the story was that a plan had been made, showing just where the treasure was secreted, but this plan could never be found. Quite by accident, I recently learned that this plan had been hidden in the back of this locket, and the locket, I discovered, had been sold and was in America. It was to find this locket that I left my brother and came to America. It was this locket that you saw last night."

"Then my work is," Jarvis summed up, "to find your brother and solve the mystery? All right! We'll explain to the Duke that you are taking me to Spain for no other reason than to solve this mystery. Let me see—in America we have Roosevelt, the trust-breaker; Farley, the strike-breaker—and why not, 'Jarvis, the ghost-breaker?'"

"Why, yes," smiled the Princess, uncertainly. She could not always tell when he was serious. "It might—why not? Carlos would believe almost anything of the Americans."

Her Secret.

"And will you tell him," he asked wickedly, "that you have made me a—er—what is it?—a vassal?"

Again the rich color sought the lady's dark face.

"I think not," she decided, shyly. "Not just yet."

He smiled at her confusion and pressed his advantage.

"By the way, your—er—just how should a vassal address his Princess?"

Dona Maria appeared to give the matter some consideration.

"Highness is correct," she told him, with some hesitation.

Jarvis studied this over before he pursued his quest for further information.

"Your Highness, a vassal doesn't really amount to much, does he? No—I thought he was a piker," he added ruefully.

"A pike?" queried Her Highness, puzzled. "You mean he carries a pike?"

"No, no—a piker is a tin horn."

"Tin horn?" echoed Dona Maria, more mystified than ever.

"Well," Jarvis began, desperately—habitual use of slang plays the mischief with classical synonyms—"a—a sort of pawn in this game of chess—along with you kings and queens and castles and—things. For instance," the light of fun returned, "could a perfectly good, honest, reliable, hard-working vassal work his way up and get to be a Duke—or a lord or—something like that?"

Dona Maria laughed softly. "You're an ambitious vassal, aren't you? I'm afraid you wouldn't be satisfied with being less than a king."

"A king, prince or—a bandit," he returned, meaningly.

"A bandit? And why a bandit?"

"A king might demand—a prince request—a bandit seize."

Dona Maria looked blank. "Seize what?"

The vassal drew a quick breath. "That which a mere vassal may only admire," he fairly blurted out.

Dona Maria was saved the necessity or reminding him that he was still a vassal by a knock which she seemed to expect.

"Sh-h, he is here. What shall I call you?"

The Duke Arrives.

"Warren, Mr. Warren," he whispered, glumly. He felt that he would without straining himself cultivate a man's size dislike for the exalted cousin.

The Princess opened the door. "Come in, cousin," she said sweetly. His Grace of Alva entered, but fairly shied like a spirited horse at the sight of the stranger.

"Oh, I'm intruding," he exclaimed, in a manner which said plainly: "What the dickens are you doing here? Get out!" This convinced Jarvis that he would eventually come to dislike the exalted cousin by the running foot.

"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I'm bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

Jarvis nodded easily. "Glad to know you."

"I am honored," returned the Duke, his manner plainly indicating that the honor was the other way around. "Interesting task you have undertaken. May I ask if that is your regular profession?"

His tone was a mixture of the condescendingly paternal and an aristocratic sneer, which those of first families consider the thing in dealing with their untitled inferiors. He did not mean to be especially offensive to the young man—it was merely the way he had been brought up.

"That is my business," replied Jarvis, outwardly unruffled. "Solving mysteries—looking up the family skeleton—hunting out spooks—what we call in America a 'ghost breaker.'"

"A strange calling," mused the Duke, eying the young man keenly. "Really, I never heard of anything more extraordinary."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

The scene of the story is laid in the Vanderlip Hotel, New York City. The Princess Maria Theresa of Segura, a beautiful Spanish woman, is suddenly awakened in her suite by the sound of pistol shots. She hears a man running down the hall. He crashes against her door, breaking the lock, and enters. She sees he is a tall, good-looking young man, dressed in evening clothes. He is carrying a revolver in his right hand, and blood is dripping from a wound in his left. He begs the Princess to hide him. She, moved by some indescribable impulse, decides that she will. She directs him to an inner room, and a few minutes later, when the hotel detective knocks on the door, she tells him she is all right and sends him away. The young man, who is Warren Jarvis, of Kentucky, comes out of his hiding place, and the Princess, for the first time, notices his wound. She is moved to sympathy and showers him with questions as to what has occurred. Jarvis tells her about a Kentucky feud between his family and another named Markham. He says he left Kentucky to avoid the feudists, but encountered one of them in the hotel, which explains the shots. The Princess declares she will help him, and then asks the stranger question, "Are you afraid of ghosts?" Jarvis laughs, but grows solemn when the Princess tells him she has dangerous work for him to do. She makes him swear allegiance, and creates him her "vassal." Then she tells him to get her trunk, which is going to be shipped to a steamship on which she sails to Spain the following day. First Jarvis tells her to telephone to his servant, Rusty Snow, a negro. The servant is instructed to procure passage for himself and Jarvis in the ship. Jarvis then prepares to get into the trunk, but first begins to question the Princess about herself.

Now go on with the story.

Julius' Happy Day

"IT'S perfectly awful and I don't understand it!" said Julius' mother, applying a very dainty handkerchief to her eyes.

"Disgraceful!" said Julius' father, emphatically.

Julius stood with a hangdog look, his eyes on the dusty stubbed footgear that had started out earlier in the day as carefully blacked shoes. There was a tear in his blouse and several rents were in his trousers and a general atmosphere of disrepute clung to him.

"He seems perfectly possessed," went on his mother, "to escape to the alley and hobnob with those young ragamuffins who make it their headquarters! Goodness knows, I wish we could move away from here! I had Arthur over especially to play with him! What did you do with Arthur?"

"Aw!" said Julius, with a growl. "I ditched him early! He's no good, honest, ma—he's a sissy!"

"Meaning that he is a gentlemanly, well-bred boy!" flashed Julius' mother. "You see?" to Julius' father, in despair.

His Games.

"What manner of amusements interested you in the alley?" inquired his father judicially of Julius.

"Aw," said Julius, "I met Patty an' he said the gang was up in the barn where Lilkins keeps his horses, an' we went there and played train robbers till Slicker, he fell down the hole where the hay comes down, an' I fell down, too, an' Lilkins he comes in an' says we've broken the back of his best horse by falling on it, through the hole, and he'll be darned if——"

"Julius!"

"Well, you ast me, didn't you?" demanded Julius indignantly. "Anyhow, he said he'd be—that—if he'd stand for it, an' Patty he yells like everything because he hasn't any parents an' lives with his aunt, and she's away workin' all day. So Lilkins can't do anything to him, I guess.

"An' I told Lilkins he didn't dast, 'cause we wouldn't buy any more groceries from him if he did, an' I wuzn't doing anything anyhow. An' it was an awful old horse. An' then Ginger—his father has a plumbing shop three blocks down—he said they was a pony in his barn, and we went and hitched it to a cart and then we drove."

"Drove!" shrieked Julius' mother. "With all the automobiles on the streets and everything! Where did you drive?"

"I dunno," said Julius. "We had a nice drive. We went clear over on the west side across the river. Only a policeman he said he'd arrest us if we kept stopping in the middle of the street to fix the harness. We had to tie it together. An' a lot of automobiles got backed up behind us and they were fierce, the way they talked! Ginger, he sassed them back.

"'Who d'you think owns this horse?' he said to 'em when they told us to get out of the way. 'Guess it's got a right on the road if it does eat oats instead of gasoline, smarty!' An' I saw the Mrs. Kingman you know in her electric——"

"Oh!" moaned Julius' mother. "To have the Kingsmans see my child in the grasp of a policeman and with those little ragged——"

"A man he got mad," Julius proceeded, "because the pony ate some bananas from the back of his push cart an' Patty threw a stone at him and he caught me and shook me something fierce an' another policeman he said, 'Now, go on out of here, you kids, quick, before I run you in!' An' a boy on a bicycle got in our way coming home an' it was his fault, because we yelled at him and Ginger thought the pony'd broke his leg, but it was only skinned. It was a second-hand bicycle anyhow and we got away because the pony went faster than the boy could walk. I guess he'd skinned his leg, too.

No Bell.

"The street car that hit us only pushed us sideways and tipped us over an' it was the motorman's fault, because he didn't ring no bell. Anyhow, I didn't hear any. An' Ginger's father was awful mad. He was waiting for us. He said the pony's people only rented room in the barn an' it would be a wonder if they didn't sue him for damages. What's damages? I don't know what he did to Ginger, but Ginger yelled awful an' I came away then any how.

"An' it wasn't my fault that Mrs. Button's clothesline broke when I ran through her yard an' hit it. They didn't tie it up tight enough. An' the girl was mad when she saw the clothes all down! Honest, I didn't do nothin' father!"

"Julius," said his father, with awful sternness, "you march straight upstairs to bed, this minute!"

"Wh-what do you think?" quavered Julius' mother in despair as her son disappeared.

"I think," said Julius' father, with a broad grin, "that Julius had a good time for once in his life. However, it might be well to unload his superabundant activity on a summer resort farm this summer. Let's look up one somewhere."

The Bishop's Story.

Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak fourteen years before in London and remembered only one thing he said.

"He told me that fourteen years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head and was picked up dead.

"He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received this reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because as she passed my window in her fall I heard her say, "Now for a bump!"'"

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Christine Norman's Rules for the "Too-Thin" Woman

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

CHRISTINE NORMAN is exactly the sort of girl you would be if you could choose—pretty, sweet, gracious, alert, honest with herself and sympathetic with all of life. And if you have seen "Peg o' My Heart" you would never guess it!

In that play she has to play the part of a girl whose cold, self-centered, unsympathetic nature makes life a burden for the dear little Irish cousin we all love—and all honor to the histrionic ability of the girl who portrays coldness and snobbishness so convincingly that the interviewer's heart sank at the thought of a chat with her. Exit the girl of the play, and enter Christine Norman and joy to the heart of the interviewer at the same time.

Miss Norman's manner is as wholesome and unaffected as her own pretty pink and white room, and her mind is as interestingly many sided as the vast array of vastly differing books that are so prevalent all about her room.

"Now, how could I have a beauty secret?" she laughed. Look at her pictures and you will sympathize with my thought that Heaven and the good fairies had been so kind that "beauty secrets" were scarcely needed.

"However, I have a very original trouble for these days," she went on, cheerily. "I have the unusual horror of getting too thin! Once I did become terribly thin—and I had to go on the milk cure, nothing but milk for seven weeks, and quarts and quarts a day all that time. Even now whenever I start losing I proceed to drink eight glasses of milk a day. Honestly now, aren't curves much prettier than angles? And when cubist types go out of style and women want to get back to normal I recommend the milk cure to their attention.

An Easy Cure.

"A milk cure is an easy thing for me to take, because I am not a particularly carnivorous animal. I believe firmly in eating vegetables in great quantities and eating very sparingly of meat. A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal for hot weather diet.

"But I really don't believe in extremes—enough sleep—eight hours for a woman who is using up her supply of energy in the strain of brain work; enough nourishing food, with chocolates most earnestly omitted; enough fresh air, enough play, and, above all, enough reading to keep you in touch with big thoughts, new ideas in the world's progress. With enough of all these things, sanely blended and leavened with ambition to find out what you can do and energy to do it, we ought all have the beauty of clean, sane health, at any rate, ought we not?"

Answering question with question, I queried: "But for the beauty that allures the eye, don't you think we can all cultivate a bit of that over and above our natural dower?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Norman, "I think we can, and we should, too. Now, after she is about 22, almost any woman's facial muscles begin to sag a bit. If she can afford a dollar a week, I think every woman should go to a good masseuse and have those muscles trained upward again. If not, I think one treatment and a careful observation of methods are well worth while. Then the purchase of a jar of good cold cream, and the woman can start muscle building on her own account.

"Some people think it so foolish, almost immoral, to try to save beauty. Now, would these very people wear suits that needed pressing and sponging and braid sewed on? Well, I think we should keep our bodies in at least as good trim as our clothes—clean and in the pink of well-cared-for condition.

Easily Acquired.

"Then if we are as sensible about learning what to do with our looks as we are about proudly developing any talent we happen to have, a reputation for beauty's charming sister—attractiveness—ought to be easily acquired. I know a very pretty girl who sometimes looks attractive quite accidentally, but only sometimes. She simply does not know whether her hair should be parted over her left eye or worn pompadour. She has no idea whether her hats should have tall quills in front or droopy bows at the back. A mirror, a little common sense and proper independence of fads would teach her the simple solution to what ought not be a puzzle at all.

"But truly, I don't think we can be a beautiful race until we give the generations beauty to inherit. Heredity to give you strength and power and beauty is the greatest beauty secret of all I am sure. Because with a fine heredity a healthy body is almost assured, and a fine mind and a strong character will be present too, and with these things the finest type of beauty will be easy to realize. Surely you think so, too?" concluded Christine Norman, lifting a rose-flushed face lit with great earnest eyes and pulsing with vitality that makes of her red-gold hair a beautiful aureole.

And surely we all must think that the finest type of beauty is a thing we all may strive toward—a healthy body glowing with spirit and soul.

I have the usual horror of getting too thin.

When I start losing I proceed to drink seven glasses of milk a day.

Curves are prettier than angles.

I believe firmly in eating vegetables in large quantities and meat sparingly.

A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal.

I think every woman should go to a good masseuse.

Miss Christine Norman.

NO CHANCE FOR FRANK AS 1914 TURTLE BOSS

By Jo Williams.

MEMPHIS, July 10.—Stick a pin here. Charley Frank will not manage the 1914 Memphis club. Whether Bill Bernhard will be returned or not is a matter yet to be determined. The moral cinch is, however, that if a change is made it will in no way concern the present president-manager of the New Orleans Pelicans. It is quite probable that Frank will not be back at New Orleans next season, but as to his assuming charge of the Turtles there is about as much truth in the report as there are red corpuscles in a Bermuda onion.

Perhaps the foregoing needs explanation. When the Pelicans hit the larded lane some five weeks ago, that ubiquitous person, "One in the know," hustled through with the information that Frank, tiring of his New Orleans investment, had made arrangements with the Memphis club president whereby he was to succeed Bernhard at the close of the current campaign.

The yarn originated in Birmingham. Immediately and without undue hesitation it was given the well-known and emphatic pooh-pooh, locally. Yet it refused to wither and fade away, as is the tragic wont of the average canard. Mique Finn strengthened it by offering to wager a Stetson that the rumored change would come to pass. Mique refused to state where he got his tip. "Just linger around and ye shall receive the ocular proof," was the Celt's evasive retort.

Finn and his downtrodden slaves of balldom spent an off day in this city, and right away the Frank vs. Bernhard affair was revived.

* * *

WHEREUPON, Mr. Coleman, who is connected with the local club in the vague capacity of majority stockholder, president, traveling secretary and general overseer of players and premises, clutched the occasion to unburden himself of large quantities of free and forensic speech, a peculiarity not uncommon with ball magnates. Among other things, Mr. Coleman delivered: "So far I have not given the advisability of changing managers a thought. I can not say just now whether or not Bernhard will be with us again next season. He may and he may not. But one thing is certain. Charley Frank will not be Bill's successor, if one is named. There is absolutely no chance, and those interested in the matter may rest assured that my word is final. Where and from whom the ridiculous yarn originated is a mystery to me. The report that I have been negotiating with Frank for weeks in regard to a change is a fabrication of the veriest sort. Neither Frank nor myself has ever discussed the matter. Indeed, I doubt if Frank himself ever dreamed of returning here. The Dutchman will never manage a Memphis ball club as long as I am in charge."

So much for the "well-founded report."

$4,000 Offered by Sutton for E. Brown

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Larry Sutton, scout for the Brooklyn National League club, who has been in Nashville for the past ten days looking over Southern League players, announced last night that he had made an offer of $4,000 to the Montgomery club for Pitcher Elmer Brown for delivery at the end of this season.

Sutton was so impressed with the masterly game pitched by E. Brown against the Vols last week that he immediately opened negotiations for the brilliant Billiken slabman. His first offer was $3,500, but he willingly met the above price of $4,000, which was set by Manager Dobbs.

"Elmer Brown is not only by long odds the best pitcher I have seen in the Southern League this year," said the Brooklyn scout, "but he is one of the most promising boys I have seen in many seasons."

Up to the time of Sutton's departure for Cincinnati the deal for Brown had not been closed, but it was stated by Sutton that he had urged President Ebbetts, of the Dodgers, to lose no time in landing the mainstay of the Montgomery pitching staff.

Here is a Home Treatment that Overcomes even Worst Cases.

Lupus or Any Other Skin Disease Will Go Skulking Away If You Use S. S. S.

A tiny pimple spreads to the side of the face and often covers the cheeks and bridge of the nose. It is very destructive to the tissues of the skin. No external treatments will overcome it, as the cause of lupus is from impurities in the blood supply. The only known method of cure is to get the blood supply under the control of S. S. S., the famous blood specific. Its action is quite remarkable and has direct influence upon the network of small blood vessels and glands in the skin.

Not one drop of minerals or drugs is used in its preparation. Ask for S. S. S. and insist upon having it. For illustrated book on skin diseases write The Swift Specific Co., 183 Swift Laboratory, Atlanta, Ga. Do not allow some jealous clerk to larrup the atmosphere of eloquence over something "just as good" as S. S. S. Beware of all substitutes.

CRACKER STAKE WILL BE RUN FRIDAY NIGHT

IN the belief that "Tex" Richards will be no match for the other Motordrome stars in a long race, Manager Noon Hudson has scheduled a big 7-mile feature for Friday night. It will be the final heat of the Cracker Sweepstakes. Manager Bill Smith, of the Atlanta club, will start the race and it will go seven miles, which is further than any race has gone in Atlanta this year.

A 5-mile race about marks the limit of a motorcycle sprinter's distance. He can stand up for five miles pretty well. After that time there is no chance. Machines and bodies give down under the strain.

In races over five miles it takes a different sort of rider. And in this long-distance stuff Shields and Lockner ought to star. They are two of the greatest endurance stars in the world. They proved it when they won the famous 24-hour race, the most grueling contest ever staged at a motordrome. Of course, it was a team event and the men were on and off the track at all times, but it was the most awful test of endurance to which a motor rider was ever put. This 7-mile stuff ought to suit Lockner and Shields to perfection.

Of course, Richards does not necessarily have it all his own way, even in the shorter races. McNeil's J. A. P. went out again Tuesday night, this time with a couple of bolts missing from his magneto. And Graves' new Excelsior did not prove to be running right.

McNeil swears that never before did he have such luck as this season. He claims all 1913 honors as the Jinx Kid; but he alleges that he has never before been the victim of so many mischances. He believes he has changed his luck at last, and at any rate he has taken every possible precaution against accidents.

Graves also believes he will have his new machine running perfectly by Friday night. He was deeply disappointed when the engine gave down Tuesday night, but like all men who work with gasoline engines, he took it philosophically and went to work making it right.

Thrilling races will be the order Friday night. The long race will be a tremendous test on men, machines and tires, and the long-deferred "spill" is more than likely to come.

LEFTY SCHWENK PITCHES 36 INNINGS IN 4 DAYS

SAGINAW, MICH., July 10.—Pitcher "Lefty" Schwenk, of the local South Michigan League team, has just hung up a record which is believed to be unequaled in recent years of organized baseball. In four days he pitched four complete games and finished another—36 innings—in which he struck out 33 men in the 36 innings and allowed 21 hits, which netted his opponents seven runs.

RIVERS HITS MILKMAN; NOW HE'S IN TROUBLE

VENTURA, CAL., July 10.—Joe Rivers, lightweight pugilist, must appear in court here July 16 to answer a charge of having broken the jaw of a milkman who recently disputed Rivers' right to the road while the pugilist was driving his motor car. Rivers' bond was fixed at $500.

PASTIMING.

When you pay your money to see a stunt athletic,
And you sit upon a sunny bleacher seat,
And you see a stunt that's awfully pathetic,
It is time for you to raise your voice and bleat.

When the players spend the afternoon in stalling,
And in wishing that the game had not begun,
And the manager persists in vainly bawling,
The rooter's life is not a happy one.

We note by the papers that several hundred persons clamored outside the Cracker club's office to get their money back on Fourth of July. This shows that the birth rate has increased to 120 per hour.

If the Atlanta management is endeavoring to make itself unpopular there is evidence that said management is headed in that direction at the rate of approximately 8,000 miles per hour.

In an indirect way we note that Tom O'Rourke has been affected by the recent heat. Tom has agreed to become manager of Carl Morris.

When one reads the report that one wrestler choked another half to death, one deplores the fact that he stopped so soon.

If those surgeons who cut out Marty O'Toole's appendix will only cut out his wildness, one Fred Clarke will be much obliged.

If the Athletics could only play the Yanks all season their average would be .996⅝ or thereabouts.

Joe Jackson still leads the American League in batting. This is due to the fact that he never has ruined his eyesight reading literature.

RINGSIDE NOTES

It looks very much as if Los Angeles fans are to see a heavyweight bout some time next month. Tom McCarey, coast promoter, is trying to stage a Gunboat Smith-Arthur Pelky match, and has already secured Smith's consent for such a fight. McCarey is now dickering with Tommy Burns, manager for Pelky.

* * *

Jeff O'Connell, the veteran featherweight, who recently was defeated by Matty McCue, will meet Freddie Enock in a six-round battle at Aurora, Ill., on July 17.

* * *

Kid Pusky, local featherweight, is after a match with any 122-pounder in Atlanta. Pusky is particularly anxious to get on with Kid Young or Charlie Lee. J. P. Ellis, manager of Pusky, says he will give either boy a $100 side bet. Ellis can be reached at 30 Clifton Street, Kirkwood, Ga., phone Decatur 226.

* * *

Reports from New Orleans state that Frankie Russell and Johnny Lore are in great shape for their twenty-round tussle in the Pelican City Sunday afternoon. Russell and Lore recently met in a ten-round battle, with the latter having a slight shade.

* * *

Johnny Coulon, bantamweight champion of the world, says he will be ready to defend his title on Labor Day. His stomach, which has been bothering him for several weeks, is again in shape. His opponent will probably be Kid Williams, and the pair will most likely don the gloves in Tom McCarey's arena at Vernon, Cal.

* * *

A return bout, this time of ten rounds, between "Muggsy" McGraw and Addie Brennan would draw a capacity house. McGraw is now taking boxing lessons from Jim Corbett, former heavyweight champion.

* * *

The National Sporting Club of London, where Bombardier Wells is a big favorite, hunted the British Isle for an easy opponent for the Englishman and found him in the person of Patsy Mahoney. Of course, Wells won.

* * *

Wonder what Billy Nolan, the bounced manager of Willie Ritchie, thinks of the lightweight's easy victory over Joe Rivers. It sure was a glorious Fourth for Willie.

* * *

Leach Cross is still on the coast, undecided whether to remain there in hopes of getting on with Willie Ritchie or to jump over to New York for some easy ten-round money. McCarey is trying to get the champion for a Labor Day date with the Easterner. Should Ritchie refuse, Joe Rivers may get the match.

* * *

Marcel Thomas, the French welterweight, is in Philadelphia trying to get on with some boys of his division. The lack of good 142-pound boys on this side makes it hard to find a suitable opponent for him.

* * *

Eddie Campi has asked McCarey to match him with the winner of the Williams-Ledoux bout on July 15. Campi has already defeated Ledoux.

* * *

Tom Tortorich is still after Willie Ritchie's signature to a set of articles to meet Jack Britton. He has offered $20,000 for the title go.

JIMMY ARCHER INJURES FINGER; OUT FOR WEEKS

NEW YORK, July 10.—Jimmy Archer, the crack catcher of the Cubs, who was disabled by a foul tip from Chief Meyers' bat in Tuesday's game, was more seriously injured than at first supposed. It was thought he had merely suffered from a split finger, but when a surgeon got to work on the backstop he found that the middle finger of the right hand not only was split, but also dislocated at the middle joint.

It will be several weeks before Archer will again get into the game.

WHITE SOX BUY TOM DALY.

HUGGINS BEST OF PLAYERS IN TENN. TOURNEY

KNOXVILLE, TENN., July 10.—The finals in the Tennessee State championship tennis tournament now in progress in this city are expected to be reached Friday afternoon. In that case the championship match between the winners of the tourney and Carlton Y. Smith, of Atlanta, present State champion, will be fought out Saturday. Local sharks predict that the match will narrow down to either Huggins or Smith of Nashville as the winner of the present tourney.

Charles Rodgers of Knoxville former champion, was eliminated Wednesday afternoon by Huggins in two straight sets, 7-5, 6-1. Rodgers had previously defeated Cleage of Knoxville, and Foster, also of this city.

Chattanooga has only one entry, Alex Guerry, while Nashville is represented by Parrish, Caldwell, Huggins and Smith.

Some excellent matches have been pulled off thus far during the tourney, Smith of Nashville defeated Wester of Kansas City in a beautiful match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

By defeating Rodgers and Lowry of this city, both crack players, Huggins is favorite as the winner. Much interest has been manifested in the tourney and large crowds have been in attendance each day.

FRANK GOALBY SOLD TO ROANOKE UNDER OPTION

NASHVILLE, TENN., July 10.—Frank Goaldby, former second baseman of the Vols, has been sold to the Roanoke club under an optional agreement. He may be recalled at any time his services are needed. Goaldby, in a recent series in Mobile, was badly spiked in the hand by Dave Robertson, and will not leave to join the Roanoke club until the wound heals. His fielding while with Nashville was brilliant, but his batting was very weak.

UNCLE SAM TO HELP TOURING BALL TEAMS

By James Clarkson.

CHICAGO, July 10.—The United States Government has decided to take recognition of the fact that the Chicago White Sox and New York Giants are going to take a tour of the world during the fall and winter months. A letter to that effect has reached President Comiskey's office.

Now, when you come to study a little, than means a whole lot to the interested parties of that wonderful tour, on which the performers of Comiskey's world-famous White Sox and John McGraw's always fighting Giants are to show to the other civilized nations of the world what a wonderful pastime baseball really is.

Callahan Called on Bryan.

When the White Sox played in Washington during their Eastern invasion early in June, Manager Jimmy Callahan called on William Jennings Bryan. The call was for the express purpose of interesting the Secretary of State in the contemplated trip of the baseball outfit. Colonel Bryan has never been much of a student of baseball—in fact, he inquired of the surprised Callahan whom the White Sox represented. He also wanted to know where McGraw's Giants hailed from. He forgot to ask whether or not all of McGraw's men were huge of size.

Wilson Approves of Plan.

After the short interview Callahan left the Secretary's office, and while he was treated courteously, he was none too favorably impressed. He had an idea. "If I could only see the big boss—President Wilson—I might be able to get better satisfaction," thought Cal. To make a long story very short, Cal was accorded the interview with the President and the Executive informed him that he would not only do all in his power to make the trip a success, but that he believed in it and he personally hoped it would terminate as expected.

Bryan Writes to Callahan.

Yesterday we learned from Commy that he had recently received a letter from Secretary Bryan. When asked what news the letter brought, if any, Commy stated that Mr. Bryan had written him most cordially concerning the proposed trip. Furthermore, he requested Commy to send him, as soon as possible, the itinerary of the trip. Once he gets that, he has promised to notify the American Consuls in the various cities to be visited to give all the help possible to the visit of the Sox-Giant combine. So, after all, it will be seen that Cal's short visit to President Wilson last month was not merely a press stunt. "With the old U. S. Government in favor of the trip and throwing favors in our way, we should show a lot of speed in the foreign lands," said Cal yesterday when referring to the Bryan letter.

Crackers Should Wallop Gulls

Finn's Team in Hopeless Slump

By Percy H. Whiting.

NOW comes the tug of war! The Mobile Gulls are here for three games with the Crackers. The Gulls are in a slump. Of their last twelve outs they have lost eight.

Every game the locals can take away from Mike Finn's team is all clear profit.

It is reported that the Gulls are clubbing at each other and quarreling with umpires, opposing players and even with the genial Mike Finn himself.

Their hearts are "broke."

Of course, they are a scrapping club, even in a rout, and they will fight along and win many a game. But if ever the Crackers had a chance to make money off the league leaders now is the time.

* * *

THE Gulls' slump will never stop this side of fourth or fifth place. Mark the prediction. For they've quit and they are quarreling among themselves.

In a recent interview Finn stated that he would not strengthen the club.

"How can we?" Finn is reported to have said, "We have no money to strengthen with."

True it is that the Gulls, after making an amazing showing, aren't drawing at all. They don't have any attendance on the home grounds. The Gulls' fans believe their team is sure to win a pennant and they have quit caring a hang.

If ever proof were needed that Mobile is a hopeless baseball town is forthcoming now. The town has quit worse than the team. In fact, it was the quitting of the fans, the lack of financial support and the knocking over defeats that finally got the Gulls on the run.

* * *

NOT since the year Newt Fisher won a pennant with an $11-team has any club that cost as little gone as high as the 1913 Gulls.

Finn probably established a precedent in perfecting a league-leading team with the cash expenditure of $2,000.

After the close of last year's race, Demaree was forwarded to the New York Giants for $10,000. Remaining on the twirling staff were Campbell, Berger and Cavet. For $5,000 Robertson was secured from the Indianapolis club, while Hogg was obtained for a small sum. Thus the twirling staff was rounded for a few shekels.

In the infield, Paulette, Starr and O'Dell were returned. Stock was shunted from the Giants in the Demaree trade. Thus the infield was perfected without an expenditure of a cent. The outfield, consisting of Jacobson, Robertson and Clark, was secured for a pittance. Jacobson was returned by the Giants at the beginning of the season for the price of recall in 1912. Robertson was grabbed from the Giants on an optional agreement, costing $500. Clark was the property of the Gulls, farmed out to the Texas League, and cost Mickey nothing. When Jackson was put out, McGill, gathered in the Gull fold at the opening of the season for the signing, was recalled from Pensacola. The catchers were grabbed without loosening a kopeck from the coffers, as Larry Brown was a free agent and Schmidt was obtained via the same route.

* * *

IF the Crackers can tear a hole in the shattered Gulls and do some damage to the Billikens next week they will pull out for the South with the prospects bright. They will have a hard trip ahead of them, but they will be right up in the running. Of course, the Southern trip is likely to mean a big slump. But when the club gets home again it ought to be near enough to the top to win a pennant.

The Crackers are back in there fighting again and that means trouble for any opposition.

JENNINGS STILL AN IDOL WITH DIAMOND FANS

By Sid C. Keener.

BACK in the days of 1907-1908-1909, Hughey Jennings was being lauded as the smartest of baseball generals. All around the circuit there was praise for the skipper of the Detroit Tigers. In a single season he developed a sixth-place it on top for three successive years in the American League.

But while the Tigers were prospering and folks spoke kind words to Hughey, he always replied:

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me. They're winning the games and I'm just one of them. You don't see me punching out a hit in the pinch or fooling the batter when he must be fooled."

He Had the Dope.

After three straight years of success and prosperity, the tide turned. They don't herald Jennings the greatest of all greats. In the eyes of the fans, Hughey is not such a brainy fellow any more.

But Jennings' statement came true. The remarks he gave out when the Tigers were winning the pennants can be renewed and show why the Tigers aren't the same terrors of the league.

"Give all the credit to the boys, not me!"

Why aren't the Tigers winning pennants like they did in 1907-1908-1909? The answer comes by comparing the team that won for the Tigers those years and the team Hughey Jennings is directing to-day.

The Old Stars Not There.

There's quite a difference in the class of the Detroit tribe now.

Among the important missing athletes are: Wild Bill Donovan, George Mullin, Tyrus Cobb, Eddie Summers, Davy Jones, Matty McIntyre, Jim Delehanty, Claude Rossman, Eddie Killian, Herman Schaefer, Charley O'Leary and possibly a few more.

In the places of these athletes who were stars of the first magniture at that time, are Bobby Veach, "Lefty" High, Oscar Vitt, Bill Louden, Texas Hall, John Dubuc, Zamloch, Clauss, House and a few more.

Jennings hasn't a pitcher who can go through a season and win 25 games and lose but 4, as "Wild Bill" did in 1907. Further, Eddie Summers, who used to beat the Athletics almost every time he pitched; Killian, who could halt the White Sox and Red Sox, and George Mullin, who won almost every time he took the hill, are gone and forgotten.

Even commanding a team that is down in the second division, Hughey Jennings remains an idol in baseball. His general character and make-up; his style of coaching; his personality; his way of arguments, not roughing and fighting with the umpires, continually have made Jennings such an idol.

He Used Smooth System.

It was the Jennings system that made Hughey popular with everybody. When he entered the American League he brought with him a new style. It was common on the diamond to see Fielder Jones, Clark Griffith, Jimmy Collins, Joe Cantillon and that kind rush up to the ump and kick up a rowdy fuss on every close decision.

Also, it was an every-day sight to see some managers bawl out the players during the course of the game. Jennings had a different system. He accepted the verdicts from the field official with an "All right, boys; let it go at that," and when one of his side turned a bad play, Hughey simply used to pat him on the back and say a kind word on the ball field.

Bisland Horns Into Hero Class

His Hit Wins Game for Crackers

By Fuzzy Woodruff.

IN these piping days when pennant aspirations are beating strongly in human and other breasts, a hero is born each day. To-day the laurel, the bay, the Richard K. Fox belt, or whatever insignia is proper for a Casablanca of the ball lot goes to Mr. Bisland, shortstopper of considerable renown. If the winning streak of the Crackers continues much longer, Bill Smith will have to search around for new hero material or crown the bat boy. For within the past two weeks there is hardly a Cracker who has not felt the touch of the accolade.

Mr. Bisland horned into the Leonidas class in the most approved and dramatic fashion. He was placed there by the generous and gentle Rube Kissinger, who figured that Wally Smith had been acclaimed enough and it was time to let another's heart warm to the shouts of an admiring populace.

* * *

THE hero stuff was pulled in the fourth inning of yesterday's pastiming, which was about as good a spot as any. The battle with the Memphii had rocked along for three sessions without any tangible results. Kissinger was working his usual cool, heady game, and the Crackers did not look particularly formidable against his hurling.

In the fourth, though, things happened. Tommy Long opened with a measly pop back of first base, which Bill Abstein couldn't grab, and when the ball carromed with reverse English the right fielder scampered on for a two-base hit. Welchonce, to display his batting versatility, eased a bunt down the third base line and beat it out.

Alperman then cracked sharply to third. Ward messed the ball, but, to the surprise of the stands, Welchonce remained true and faithful to the first cushion and wouldn't budge, evidently thinking the ball had been caught on a line. How he thought so is the eighth wonder, but let it go at that. Alperman reached first, but as Welchonce was also there one of them had to move back to the bench.

Rudderham eeny-meeny-miny-moed and picked Welchonce for this duty. Bailey followed by striking out, but Alperman had swiped second during the whiffing.

As the formidable Smith approached the pan, Kissinger and Seabough held pow-wow and passed the third sacker.

* * *

BISLAND strode haughtily, but not too confidently, to the plate. Inasmuch as he hadn't registered in the hit column since the morning game of July 4, the fans were not altogether cheerful.

On the first one over, though, he hit high and far into right field, and Baerwald, who had been playing close to center, couldn't reach the pill. All those ahead of Bisland scampered in, and so did he when the peg to get him at third went to the grandstand. The laurel was immediately brought on.

With the single exception of Mr. Bisland's being present with the punch at the proper moment, the game was featureless, though Dent hurled in improved form. The score was 5 to 2.

Sports and Such

IT OCCASIONALLY HAPPENS that the races for the big league pennants are over when the halfway mark of the early July series is passed—and this looks like one of those occasions.

Even before the Fourth of July—as far back in the spring as could be definitely determined that Connie Mack's athletes were on the water wagon—it was generally conceded that the Athletics would win the American League championship. A glance at the standing of the clubs this morning will convince you that there are no urgent reasons for rearranging your dope.

About the same time it was also conceded that the Giants would win the National League row. Every one around here freely admitted it, but along about the first of June some of our best conceders were beginning to outline their alibis and try them out to have them already for accidents in the fall.

The events of the last week have taken a great weight off the minds of us prophets. The writer some five or six weeks ago casually remarked that the Phillies would blow as the Dodgers had done, and he was beginning to get a trifle scared. Now that they have tossed it they can probably be eliminated. For some reason or other the Phillies have never shown any resiliency in misfortune. The betting, when the park police are not looking, ought to be about 3 to 1 that they will never lead the league again before next spring.

The Giants are not in a position to lie down and take it easy—not to any extent. But McGraw has, by about 20 per cent, the best club in the league, and now that he has gained the lead there could be no excuse for his losing it, short of a railroad wreck—or another adventure out of his pugilistic class.

* * *

THE PHILLIES ARE somewhat like the Cleveland team in the American League, only more so. They have a splendid pitching staff, a smooth fielding machine, plenty of heavy artillery, and they ought to be formidable every step of the way. But for some reason or other they always peter out to a dreary finish.

* * *

THERE IS NOW SOME talk of matching Ad Brennan and Joe Tinker for the championship of the league. McGraw's claim for a return engagement on the ground that he was struck from behind has been thrown out, the difficulties in the way of getting a slam square on the beak from behind being manifold and manifest.

* * *

Poultry, Pet and Live Stock

Bad Odors, Impure Food and Water Main Causes for Sickness

A Few Practical Poultry Pointers That Will Help You, so Take Note.

The main causes for sickness in poultry are bad odors, impure food and water, decaying matter within reach, old bones, tin cans not rinsed out and rubbish of all kinds. These should be removed at once. A box of lime in the henhouse is a splendid deodorizer. Try it.

Keep a good supply of green stuff growing at all times. Sow one thing this month and another the next, and so on, or rather "sow on."

There is nothing so decidedly essential to the health of both the old and the young chickens as a good supply of green bulky food.

Skunks bothering poultry and eggs may be obliterated by breaking a small hole in a fresh egg and inserting a very small bit of strychnine; paste a little tough paper over the hole and put it under the roost. As Mr. Skunk prefers eggs to chickens or anything else, you are pretty sure to get him.

A Buff Orpington, very light or dark in color, is not necessarily of impure blood. Any breed is likely to show off some color specimens, but these should not be used as breeders.

Rough or scaly legs can be cured by anointing them with a mixture of half and half lard and kerosene. It should be applied freely at least twice a week until removed. Better still, keep your stock free from the trouble by thorough cleanliness about the house, yards, etc.

Drain out or fill the filthy old frog pond where the hens have been drinking and supply them with clean fresh water. They will be much healthier and you and your family will, too.

Eggs for market should be kept in a cool place as gathered each day until the time to send them off. If you have a cellar or pit under ground keep them in that upon bricks on the ground. Extreme heat tends to spoil eggs very rapidly.

Scatter the feed for the chickens under the plum trees if you have such. In the feeding they will gather up many insect pests which work upon the fruit and trees. Digging about the trees will cause them to hunt about the roots for worms. Shaking the tree at feeding time will dislodge many an insect and diseased plum which the hens will destroy.

Overcrowding the young stock is the cause of much trouble and loss. There are very few poultry yards in which the young stock is not crowded more or less. Crowding means bad air in the houses or coops and distemper or roup is the result, with sorehead and pip thrown in. As the chick grows so rapidly we fail to realize how much more room they really need. Let us supply it before it is too late. A severe culling of the poorer specimens for the market is an additional remedy.

Judge Marshall:

Can you tell me what causes some hens to pull the feathers off their mates about the heads and necks? Some of mine do that until the hens are a perfect sight to look at. I would like to know the cause and a remedy if you could give one.

We get much good out of The Georgian poultry department and are always ready to read it. I am yours truly, J. C. CARTER.

Sparta, Ga.

ANSWER.—Feather pulling, as it is commonly called, is a mighty bad habit, and is caused by different things. Too close confinement in a yard without green stuff, not enough exercise or things to keep them out of mischief; sometimes a lack or need of meat, or something a little salty. If you will hang up a piece of salt bacon for them to peck at, or a little fresh meat. When the first offender is noticed it is the part of wisdom to take her away from the rest of the flock at once, as it is a habit that is very likely to be taken up by many of the flock.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Realty Men Busy On Mansion Plans

Legislative Action Expecetd Soon. Luckie Street Stores Completed. More Insurance Money.

Real estate men are watching closely the deliberations of the State Legislature on the proposal to sell the Governor's Mansion at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Cain Streets. Action has been taken looking toward the appointment of committees to report on this proposition, and something of a definite nature is expected soon.

In the meantime several locations for the Governor's Mansion have been decided on—that is, real estate men will offer them.

Two years ago the State had offers varying from about $330,000 cash to upward of $450,000. Some of these propositions were for straight sale, some for lease and some for exchange.

Luckie Street Stores Finished.

Charles H. Black has practically completed three stores in a two-story building in the triangle formed by the convergence of Luckie, Hayden and Harris Streets, at a cost of $17,500. These were taken under contract to the owner, J. M. Hawkins.

Wednesday's Auction Sale.

Gid Hanna and William A. Vernoy, who are offering five building lots and a six-room slate roof house in the Grant Park section Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, are expecting a large crowd out. They have plastered the city with dodgers and have advertised in other ways. The lots are at the corner of Park Avenue and Bryan Street, and the agents have supplied lemonade for the attendants. J. W. Ferguson & Son will be the auctioneers.

More Insurance Money.

For some time the insurance companies of the East have been lending a great deal of money on policies, which has decreased their reserve funds to such an extent that it has been impossible to lend as much as formerly on real estate. Now it is announced that policy loans having dropped down somewhat, there will soon be more money to lend on land.

Charles H. Black, of Turman, Black & Calhoun, received a notice to this effect from a firm which his concern represents in Atlanta. Mr. Black declares that the insurance companies have great faith in Atlanta property, and of late the let-up has been due to a lack of funds.

Residences for Sale.

Joseph Richardson is completing a residence at East Lake and has accordingly put the home at 595 Piedmont Avenue on the market. The latter property is at the corner of Third Street.

The residence at 123 East Eleventh Street is also for sale. This is between Piedmont Avenue and Piedmont Park. It is a two-story house on a lot with 103 feet frontage. The price is $10,500.

The cottage at 713 Gordon Street, on a lot 50 by 210 feet, is for sale at $3,000, on terms of $300 cash and $20 a month.

Who Is Responsible for Such Creatures as David Lamar?

Who but the Big Men, Who Are Willing to Learn from "Vermin" How They, the Rich Men, May Buy the People's Representatives and Thwart the People's Will?

(Copyright, 1913.)

You read the story of David Lamar, known as "the Wolf of Wall Street," whose meteoric career in Atlanta in 1892 is still remembered by many persons here.

He told the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee at Washington the other day that he had called up big men with plenty of money, pretended that he was Congressman This or Congressman That, and offered to stop legislation that the people demanded.

It would seem that this man's life has been one of perpetual scheming. While in Atlanta his business dealings were of such character that he was arrested, indicted and forced to seek other fields.

Of recent years it appears, this individual, Lamar, has been busy telling big men in New York how he could prevent interference with this trust, or that railroad combination, or some other piece of financial dishonesty.

He used different names, and probably used different voices talking on the telephone. He made fools of some of the big men, and they now FEEL FOOLISH as the story comes out.

It is rather a disgusting story, of meanness, lying and attempted cheating, with possible blackmail attached. Some of the most unpleasant words in the dictionary describe Mr. Lamar very accurately.

But words just as disagreeable would describe as accurately the men of money and power who listened to Lamar, and listen to others like him.

If the big men whom this country and its citizens have made rich were not willing to bribe legislators, not willing to defeat the people's will by underhand methods, NOT WILLING TO USE THEIR DISHONESTLY GOT MONEY TO BUY DISHONEST LEGISLATION, there would not be such men as David Lamar urging the buying of disreputable public officials especially adapted to the doing of very dirty political work.

Lamar and the vermin like him are not very important.

The important man is the man of money, power and position, the man who has no excuse for being a bribe-giver, a cheater of the people, the man who listens at the telephone eagerly while "the vermin," representing themselves as dishonest Congressmen, offer for a consideration to cheat the public and rob the public and help dishonesty and buy legislation.

The big men who do not deny that they trusted Lamar, that they talked to him on the telephone and heard what he had to say, have not made a full explanation of their conduct, or a satisfactory explanation.

The ordinary citizen would not listen to a man who called on the telephone to tell him how he might rob his neighbor's house.

Why does the big man of Wall Street listen patiently and attentively while "the vermin" tell him how he can rob the people of their legislation, cheat the people of their will and add by continued bribery to the fortune already acquired?

A Great Victory for Southern Women

The Georgia House of Representatives is to be congratulated in that it had the common sense and decency to extend the use of its hall to the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association, now in session in the Capital of the State, even though it was necessary in doing so sharply to rebuke rank stupidity and lack of judgment in the Senate.

The cause of woman suffrage in Georgia is in its infancy, perhaps, but already it is sponsored by a number of the most intelligent and progressive women of the State.

Unquestionably, the cause will wax stronger and stronger, as time runs on, and neither narrowness nor bigotry—even in a Georgia Senate—will serve to stop it!

The original purpose of these Georgia women evidently was not to force the issue of woman suffrage upon the Georgia Legislature at this time. They merely were seeking a suitable place to hold two night sessions. They turned to the State Capitol, AS THEY HAD A RIGHT TO DO, in seeking that place.

The Senate, however, with that shortsightedness characteristic of stupidity, declined to extend the courtesy asked of it—and thereby it made the cause of woman suffrage an ISSUE before the people of Georgia—the people WHO MAKE and UNMAKE LEGISLATURES, AS THEY PLEASE!

In these circumstances, the vote of the House extending the use of its Hall to the suffragists can not be viewed otherwise than as a distinct VICTORY for the Woman Suffrage Association of Georgia.

It was, in a way, the very first and pioneer victory for the cause in the South—made emphatic and extraordinarily noticeable by the foolish and silly action of the Senate.

The Georgian now ventures this prediction: Before the membership of the present Legislature is entirely dust, woman suffrage will be an established POLICY AND PRINCIPLE of every State in this Union!

Those men in Georgia, farsighted and fair-minded enough to see it NOW, then will have cause to rejoice.

Those who now thrust themselves in front of a movement destined to be as irresistible as the flow of the tide, will be overwhelmed.

The cause of woman suffrage has been strengthened rather than weakened in Georgia by the unwise, unpatriotic and unworthy action of the State Senate.

That the House promptly and emphatically repudiated that Senate action, speaks well for ITS sense of justice and right.

Man and Wife Should Decide Own Differences

No Person Capable to Give Counsel to Couple Regarding Difficulties

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.

(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

NO human being is capable of giving safe and sane counsel to a married man or a married woman respecting domestic differences. It is a matter which should be decided between the two.

When any third person intervenes, a judge of the court is the proper party.

Intimate Friends.

The most intimate friends of a family are not capable of saying where the fault lies in the majority of cases.

Even when a wife seems to be indifferent to her family and to her husband, and even when a husband seems to be unappreciative of his home, there may be causes for either offense undreamed of by those who believe themselves to be close friends.

There are men who seem to the world at large the most perfect specimens of domestic nobility, honor and probity, yet who are impossible as companions and life comrades for women of refinement and sensitive feeling, and there are women who pass in the world's eyes as angels of goodness who are possessed of unpleasant traits enough to drive any normal man to drink or insanity if he is compelled to live with them.

Wife Begged for Divorce.

The real character, the real disposition of any human being, is never known or understood until we have spent a year at least in steady association under the same roof.

The following letter reveals nothing of the writer's character. It reveals nothing of the wife's nature.

Therefore it is impossible to give any opinion of value regarding the case. Even were it possible, the writer of this does not wish to advise or counsel individuals save in the general way of character building which is the real work of the race.

The correspondent says:

"I am a married man with two children and earning a good salary, but separated for some years, owing to not being able to get along in harmony. Recently my wife called upon me and implored that I commit infidelity in order that she may secure a divorce from me, as she has an opportunity to marry. I agreed to do so if she would compromise by giving me one of the children, but she absolutely refuses, offering as an excuse that she is too deeply attached to them. I maintain if she loves this other man she would sacrifice one of the children or both of them to me, as I have a good home and nice surroundings, although I do not say she has not the same advantages, still I feel I could rear them up better under my influence and meet the future better than under this other man.

Willing to Sacrifice All.

"My wife is 25 years old, and, as this is comparatively young, I do not want to destroy her happiness. If I am in the wrong I would willingly sacrifice my side of the issue and grant her the divorce, but before I do I would like to hear your opinion."

All that can be said in reply is this: That children should be placed under the care of people who are the best fitted by character and moral worth and good behavior to bring them up.

Blood ties have nothing to do with the matter.

Paternal or maternal love, as that word is generally used, has little to do with the moral aspect of the case.

Women who gossip, who are disorderly, who are weak-willed, and who allow their children to see all these traits daily have no right to bring up their own children, no matter how they love them.

Small Part of Parenthood.

Fathers who are living immoral lives, who are associating with rough or coarse-minded people, or who use coarse language and who have never been taught self-control have no right to associate with their children, because they are making an impress on the wax-like nature of a child—an impress which will harden with time and become a blighting memory and probably a bad habit.

The time will come under the new science of eugenics which is being introduced when a censor will be appointed to study the domestic conditions in every family, and there will be laws which will protect children from the influence of the weak, the disagreeable and the incompetent homekeepers, as well as from the brutal and immoral.

Bringing children into the world is a small part of parenthood. To the writer of the letter quoted above no counsel can be given. It can only be said that the man of the best moral character, the best position and the best habits has a right to influence the lives of these children.

How to Keep Cool

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

My doctor said to me, said he: "In weather like this here
You must eschew the luscious stew,
The lush saute, the rich ragout,
And pie and cake and pudding, too,
And whisky, wine and beer,
In point of fact, you must not eat
Eggs, oysters, vegetables or meat.

"Dark clothing magnifies the heat, light clothes attract the light.
Beware of red—it heats the head;
Blue hues a poisonous radiance shed.
By sunset you'll be surely dead
Unless your clothes are right.
Don't let this warning be forgotten—
Beware of linen, wool and cotton.

"Don't lash your blood to frothy foam by any exercise,
But don't sit still or you'll distill
A subtle toxin which will fill
Your veins with fermentation till
Your temperature will rise.
Don't breathe—it makes the pulses leap.
Don't stir about, nor rest, nor sleep."

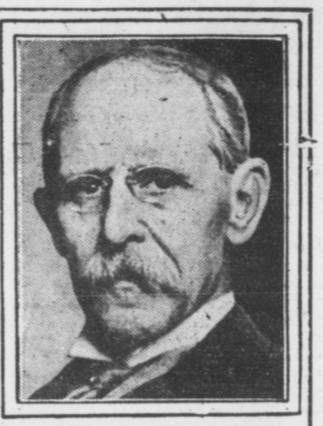
* * * * * * * * * * *

By packing me in ice and salt they brought me 'round at last.
"Why he's not dead," the interne said,
"Is what I can't get through me head.
For when they chucked him on that bed
He sure was going fast."

Now here's a tip for which I paid a very painful price:
DON'T EVER OVERHEAT YOURSELF BY FOLLOWING ADVICE!

Education Is the Cure for Feeble-mindedness in the Child; but It Must Be Begun in Time.

What Sight More Pitiful Than a Child Who Goes Into the Battle of Life with Its Mind—Its Only Hope—Disabled?



By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE great study of modern times is that of the peculiarities, the workings and the weaknesses of the human mind. This involves the entire future of the race of man.

I have been learning something about a new science, or what aspires to be a science, which has this for its object and which is called by its disciples "clinical psychology" (clinical from a Greek word for bed, implying that the subject of attention is a person who is ill, and psychology "science of the mind"), the whole phrase meaning practical study of mental illness.

No Sight Is So Pitiful.

This is something of supreme interest to parents, because those who are particularly, if not exclusively, the subpects of investigation by clinical psychologists are children.

There is no sight in this world more pitiable than that of a feeble-minded child. It is his MIND that has placed man in the proud position which he occupies at the head of the Kingdom of Life on our planet; it is by virtue of his mental powers alone that he has achieved all his triumphs; they only have brought him up from his original brotherhood with the ape; in the further development of his mind lies the only hope that he can have of still greater progress in the future; each individual, as he faces the struggle of life, must depend upon the strength of his mentality, and that the more in proportion as the struggle increases in intensity. What, then, can excite a compassion equal to that aroused by the spectacle of a human child which, as the result of causes that might be avoided, enters the battle of life lamed, crippled, disabled, palsied, impuissant, in that which constitutes its only hope, its only real strength—its mind?

Makes Instant Appeal.

The reason the new science that I have mentioned makes an instant appeal to any person having the good of his kind at heart is that it comes with the assurance that the terrible evil of feeble-mindedness may be eliminated. If it did not promise that, if it presented itself merely as another form of curious investigations having little or no practical application, it would attract only the inquisitive, seeking for novel subjects of thought. But when it says to unhappy parents, "Right education is capable of developing the dormant mental energies of your child; only begin in time, and know what you are about," then its call must be listened to everywhere.

It is this supreme word "education" which I find on every page of what I have been reading of the work and the aims of the clinical psychologists. The body can be educated out of many of its illnesses, and so can the mind. It is not worth while to stop over any discussion of the question whether, as some put it, "the mind has a body," or, as others would say, "the body has a mind." We all know what is meant when a person is said to be "feeble-minded," and the one thing of pressing, immediate importance is the question whether, either by medical or hygienic treatment, or by mental or psychological methods, or by both working together, the evil can be remedied.

Mental Hygiene.

I read this extremely interesting statement from Professor J. E. W. Wallin:

"Irrespective of whether the cause is chiefly physical or mental, it is being recognized by a number of the leading present-day psychiatrists" (those who study mental diseases) "that drug treatment for the majority of the insane, whether juvenile or adult, is secondary to the educational treatment. Instead of merely prescribing physical hygiene for the insane, leading allenists are now prescribing mental hygiene. The cure is being conceived in terms of a process of re-education. Moreover, so far as concerns the mentally unstable child in the schools, the chief reliance is obviously on hygienic and educational guidance."

Key to the Mind.

There you see in almost every line the magic word "education." We can all understand that. We must accept this term in a virtually new sense.

We must cease to regard it as simply signifying a process by which a certain, very limited, amount of knowledge is instilled or forced into the mind of a child, and we must come to consider it as the key to the mind itself, and the means, when wisely used, of opening and developing the mental powers, even when they seem to be absent or defective.

Education is not a sausage-stuffer; it is a ladder by which man mounts toward the summit of his destiny. And when the feeble are helped upon its rungs, they are stimulated and inspired with new strength at every step upward.

FAIR WOMAN

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

A WOMAN is easy to understand;
This is the secret, second hand:

When you pat her on the cheek
With your envelope each week,
Saying "Here's the money, dear,"
As you pinch her shell-like ear;
When she show'rs you with caresses,
Planning on new hats and dresses,
When she calls you her Greek god,
Though you know you have a pod,
She's happy.

When she meets you at the door
In the morn at three or four,
Trying with small fists to hit you,
Threatening to pack and quit you;
When she throws a dish or two
Clear across the room at you,
When she swings—and not in vain—
With your heavy walking cane,
She's out of sorts.

That is the secret, second hand,
A woman is easy to understand.

ALABAMA STIRRED BY GRAY DIVORCE SUIT

DRIVES HER AUTO INTO TREE ESCAPING CRASH

Couple have narrow escape as racing machine bears down upon them on upper Peachtree Street.

MRS. HARRIET COLE KEESE.

By sending her automobile crashing into a tree at the corner of Peachtree Street and Peachtree Circle at Fifteenth Street late Tuesday afternoon, Mrs. A. Rogers Keese, formerly Miss Harriet Cole, a prominent society girl and bride of less than a month, averted what would probably have been a serious accident.

Mrs. Keese was driving an electric brougham, the wedding present of her husband. Mr. Keese also was in the car.

They were en route from their Ansley Park residence down town. As the brougham approached Peachtree Street Mrs. Keese put on more speed to make the slight grade at this juncture.

Within ten feet of the turn Mrs. Keese espied a gas machine, traveling at high speed, approaching, and there was just one alternative to escape collision. Mrs. Keese swerved her new electric full into the big tree on the corner in front of the residence of Edward T. Brown.

Her car was badly damaged. Her husband and she were shaken up, but aside from this they received no injuries.

Georgia Farmer Exposes Sugar Lobby

POISON FOUND IN CRAWFORD'S BODY

SMITH BARES INTERESTS' SCHEME

Charges Ruse to Enlist Southern Farmers' Unions in Fight for Sugar Duty.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—That the sugar interests attempted to induce the Southern farmers unions to pull their chestnuts out of the fire in the matter of securing a duty on sugar, was the charge to-day of I. A. Smith, of Tennille, Ga., president of the Georgia Farmers' Union, before the Overman lobby investigating committee.

Smith described a meeting called in New Orleans by J. D. Bowen, of Texas, in which sugar men monopolized the meeting, named the committees and attempted to give an impression that the farmers' unions of the South were back of the demand for high duties on sugar and cotton manufactures. The meeting was called ostensibly to aid "the greater consumption of cotton."

Warned Georgia Senators.

Smith said Bowen paid Smith's expenses. The witness declared he wrote letters to Senator Bacon and Senator Hoke Smith, charging them to stay out of the Democratic caucus on the cotton tariff.

"It appeared there were more men there outside the farmers union than members," said Smith, speaking of the New Orleans meeting. He asserted he was a low tariff advocate and that when he heard D. V. Callcock and other sugar men advocate high tariff rates he decided he was with the wrong crowd. Smith declared that cotton manufacturers wanted the farmers' unions to fight their battles and he resented this.

Senator Overman read a newspaper statement that Smith approved of what was done at the New Orleans meeting. Smith denied this.

"Bad Crowd," Smith Asserts.

"When I got home I found out that I had been mixed up in a bad crowd," said Smith. "Bowen deceived me and was there in the interests of sugar men instead of cotton growers."

H. S. Mobley, of Prairie Grove, Ark., president of the Arkansas Farmers' Union, told the committee he was invited by J. D. Bowen to attend this same meeting at Bowen's expense. Mobley stated facts similar to those related by I. A. Smith.

"The New Orleans meeting has been generally condemned by Farmers' Unions as a fake meeting?" asked Senator Overman.

"Yes," replied Mobley.

Tells of Wool Lobby.

William Whitman, of Brookland, Mass., director in a dozen textile factories at Lawrence and New Bedford, Mass., Calhoun, S. C., and Pawtucket, R. I., which produce silk, cotton and woolen yarns and cloths, and which have a combined capacity of $20,000,000, was next called in company with Thomas A. Marvin and Winthrop L. Marvin, of Boston, to testify regarding the wool lobby.

Whitman said his factories had been unable to run full time largely because of market conditions and not because of labor difficulties. Witness was one of the most aggressive factory owners during the famous Lawrence strike, which began in one of his mills. He said the market had been bad since 1909, but is worse today than ever before. Whitman said, however, yearly increases in the capacity of the plants had been made.

Thirty aDay for Calls.

A. D. Baldwin, Cleveland, Ohio, the first witness to-day, is an attorney with sugar interests in Hawaii and represents Alexander & Baldwin, of New York and Honolulu. His salary is $30 a day while in Washington.

"I don't think I earn it," said Baldwin, who declared his activities had been limited to calling on about twenty Senators.

He said all of the cane sugar interests made common cause of their demands for a duty on sugar.

Atlanta Cool as Rest of U. S. Bakes; Showers Forecast

"Showers Wednesday night or Thursday," is the official forecast made by C. F. VonHerrmann, of the United States Weather Bureau in Atlanta.

Wednesday was the third successive cool day in Atlanta. The thermometer at noon registered only 86 degrees, despite the fact that a torrid heat wave is sweeping the Middle West. Maximum temperatures of Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday were below 90, and low humidity and moderate breezes collaborated to make all three days highly comfortable.

All Wednesday morning an eight-mile wind from the east kept the heat record down from 5 to 10 degrees below the average of the last month.

Trials Postponed For Legislators

MACON, July 9.—The postponement of thirty important criminal cases on account of the attendance of leading counsel upon the General Assembly as legislators, has been a feature of the special session of the Superior Court this week. Cases in which Senator W. D. McNeil and Representatives Wimberly and Fowler were listed as the attorneys were deferred until November.

Practically all of the 33 cases against women of the restricted district were continued until the fall term because of leave of absence granted to the attorney representing the defendants.

Rumor Miners Plan Riots Stirs Officials

CHARLESTON, W. VA., July 9.—Special officers are being sworn in to-day at Ohley, where there are persistent rumors that the striking miners have planned to resume rioting.

During the night several shots were fired, but without damage. Governor Hatfield issued an ultimatum to county officials, declaring that those who are unable to maintain law and order should resign.

SENSATION IN FIGHT OVER FORTUNE

Expert Testifies Pneumonia Was Not Cause of Death of Carrollton Capitalist.

That opium and morphine in large quantities were found in the stomach of the late J. B. Crawford and that his lungs showed no trace of his having died from pneumonia, was the sensational evidence of Dr. R. C. Harris of the State Board of Health, given at the hearing of the contest of the Crawford will involving $300,000 before Colonel J. A. Anderson, acting as auditor, Wednesday morning.

Dr. Harris, with the Coroner of Carrollton County, exhumed the body of Crawford at the family cemetery in that county, last June 12, four years after the funeral, and for the first time told in the courtroom Wednesday the result of the chemical analysis of the contents of the stomach and the tissues.

Albert Kemper, attorney for the heirs-at-law, said that while the present proceeding was strictly civil that it was not improbable a more exhaustive investigation of the poisoning story would be made and that indictments might be sought before the Grand Jury.

Crawford married his second wife, Mrs. M. B. Crawford, in February, 1909, and died in March of the same year. His physician, Dr. J. W. Hurt, who is also the Coroner's physician for Fulton County, gave pneumonia as the cause of death.

In a will that was probated by Mrs. M. B. Crawford she was named sole heir for the large estate. The heirs-at-law, numbering some twenty or thirty, contested the will and some angle of it has been in court since.

Reuben Arnold, Rosser & Brandon, Burton Smith and Hill & Wright, represent Mrs. M. B. Crawford. The heirs are represented by Colonel J. S. James, Albert Kemper and Thomas E. Scott.

To Probe Beating of A Federal Prisoner

ROME, July 9.—As the result of severe beating, Ed Knox, a Government prisoner, received at the Floyd County jail, Federal authorities will investigate.

Knox was incarcerated here, charged with illicit distilling. Two or three State prisoners, it is alleged, attacked him with a stick and beat him into insensibility and then robbed him of several dollars. Knox claims he would have been killed had not other prisoners interfered.

United States Commissioner Printup has referred the affair to Judge Newman.

6 Soldiers Killed in Wreck Near Manila

Corporal Louis Bettig and Privates Elmer Mertzinger, John Paul, Albert R. Wills, George Hughes and Boyd Maness, quartermaster's corps.

All the dead and injured are of the Ninety-fourth Coast Artillery. Thirty more of the men were injured.

BOY OF SIXTEEN MARRIES.

VANCOUVER, WASH., July 9.—A marriage license was issued to Alonzo Glenn McMullen and Miss Lucy Bernash, both of Vancouver. The written consent of Mrs. Jennie McMullen accompanied her son's application for a license, he being only 16 years old.

California Forest Fire Uncontrolled; Town Threatened

SAN FRANCISCO, July 9.—The forest fires that have been doing thousands of dollars damage and threatening some of the most popular of California's natural beauty spots, today were beyond control again and sweeping through Blithedale Canon toward Mill Valley, a town of 2,500.

The town appeared doomed and Mayor Price telegraphed Governor Johnson this morning, asking that the militia be sent to help the citizens fight off the blaze.

Tamalpas Tavern, the famous hostelry on Mount Tamalpas, was partially burned last night.

Arrests in Florida Vote Frauds Near

PENSACOLA, FLA., July 9.—Investigation of charges of fraud in the recent city primaries and general election for the selection of city commissioners probably will be concluded this afternoon, and it is expected that the arrest of prominent men, including officials, will occur to-night. More than 200 witnesses have been examined and sensational charges have been made against some of the city's most prominent men.

The investigation began before the County Solicitor last Thursday and evidence was presented showing that registration books had been tampered with, that men out of the State and some dead men voted, while a number of Greeks, not yet naturalized, were registered and voted.

Mixed Identity Case Puzzles Tampa Jury

TAMPA, July 9.—An odd case of mixed identity is the tangle in a trial now on in Criminal Court. Mrs. Florence Bartlett is charged with passing a forged check for $50 on M. Britwitz, signed Emma Duke.

Leon Haimer, clerk in Britwitz's store, followed her home and claims he never lost sight of her. Three other witnesses identify her positively as the woman who was in the store.

Mrs. Bartlett denies she was ever in the store, and has three witnesses who say they saw her in another part of the city when she was supposed to be in Britwitz's store.

New County Plan Is Beaten; Suit to Follow

MIAMI, FLA., July 9.—By a decisive vote Tuesday the residents of the north end of Dade County defeated the plan to divide the county for the creation of Broward County, with Fort Lauderdale as the county seat.

The division bill passed by the late Legislature left the decision with the people, and requiring a majority vote in each precinct in the proposed county.

Advocates of division will appeal to the Supreme Court on the contention that the Legislature could not pass a bill leaving final decision to the people wherein a minority could rule.

Doctor Not Held for Griffin Man's Death

CHATTANOOGA, July 9.—A no-true bill has ben returned by the Hamilton County grand jury against Dr. E. B. Anderson, of this city, who was bound over under bond following the death of Horace Hamilton, of Griffin, Ga., from an injection of phylacogen, administered by the physician.

D. S. Hamilton, of Griffin, father of the dead man, prosecuted the case. It attracted considerable interest in medical circles.

Bankrupt Grocer Blames 'Combine'

BIRMINGHAM, July 9.—L. Lassiter, a Montgomery grocer in bankruptcy, to-day testified at the hearing of the Southern Wholesale Grocers' Association, its officers and many members, being tried for contempt, that his failure was induced by inability to purchase from manufacturers because his name was not in the association's "green book."

Witnesses are being rapidly handled.

USE OF HALL GRANTED WOMEN

Senate, Which Denied Them the Use of Chamber, Ignores Bid to Sessions.

Suffragists Give Senate a Rebuke

Members of the Georgia Senate when they arrived at the Capitol Wednesday morning found the following handbills printed in large type on their desks:

"Negro politicians allowed the use of the Capitol, but Georgia women debarred."

Representative John Y. Smith of Fulton succeeded Wednesday in getting up his House resolution to permit the use of the Hall of Representatives to the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association Wednesday night and Thursday night, and it was passed in its regular order by a viva voce vote without a dissenting voice.

Thus ended one of the most interesting and spectacular fights ever waged inside the big State Capitol.

The Senate stood by its guns, however, and even after the House had extended the use of its hall to the suffragists, declined the invitation of the women to attend their sessions, by laying the invitation on the table without action.

It was evident early in Wednesday's session of the House that the Smith resolution would not come up under unanimous consent. This blocked it for a time, but, fortunately for the women, it came up later in its regular order, the calendar now being very short, and was placed before the House for consideration.

Vote Brings Applause.

At this point the heretofore well organized and compact opposition collapsed entirely, and the resolution went through without protest.

The announcement of the unanimous vote in the House brought forth great applause, both in the galleries and on the floor.

Speaker Pro Tem McMichael really started the ball rolling in the suffragists' direction when, arising to a question of personal privilege, he warmly denied the charge to the effect that on Tuesday he moved adjournment before the Smith resolution was reached because he wished the resolution not to be reached.

"I did not know the resolution was in order or I never would have moved to adjourn, and thus show a rank discourtesy to a number of Georgia women—such women as Mrs. Walter Lamar Hill, of Athens, and Mrs. William H. Felton, of Cartersville," said Mr. McMichael.

"I am not a suffragist, and I do not know that I ever shall be, but I never have shown a Georgia woman a discourtesy, and I shall not begin now. I shall vote to give them the use of this hall when I get a chance!"

Doesn't Believe in Suffrage.

Representative John A. Corn, of Towns, who blocked the resolution primarily under the unanimous consent rule, stated to a Georgian reporter that the only reason he did so was because he is opposed to woman's suffrage and "didn't believe in any such foolishness!"

After the House had acted favorably in the matter an invitation was extended the Senate to attend the sessions Wednesday night and Thursday night.

Led by Mr. Stark, of the Thirty-third District, who explained that he also "didn't believe in" woman's suffrage, the Senate, after taking half a dozen or more ballots, laid the invitation on the table without action. This, in effect, declined the suffragists' invitation.

CLUBMAN'S WIFE FREED JUNE 20

Decree Comes as Climax to Strenuous Experience of the Former Lieutenant Governor.

BIRMINGHAM, July 9.—Announcement in the City Court here to-day that Mrs. Henry B. Gray had been granted a divorce from her husband, Henry B. Gray, former Lieutenant Governor of Alabama under the Comer administration and prominent clubman of Birmingham, caused a whir of excitement in society circles, where the Grays have figured prominently for many years. The announcement of the divorce which was granted on June 20 came as a complete surprise to every one but the closest friends of the Grays.

Society was not the only party manifesting the keenest interest in the announcement of the granting of the divorce, however, for the story is the talk of the town to-day among all classes of people who have quietly watched developments ever since Henry B. Gray was tried in Recorder's Court and given a jail sentence of six hours for contempt of court several months ago.

Predictions have been made from time to time since this trial, which was one of the sensations of Birmingham, that divorce proceedings would follow, and to-day's announcement, while creating the keenest sort of interest, was really no surprise to the majority of people.

Sentenced for Contempt.

The contempt case for which Mr. Gray received a jail sentence at the hands of Recorder Clement Wood, present candidate for the presidency of the City Commission, was the culmination of a series of startling incidents which stirred Birmingham to the core.

Gray was caught, it was alleged, in a disorderly house, but managed to keep his identity concealed, it was alleged further, by getting another young man to make bond for him.

The case was on the verge of being passed over as one of the "ordinary" type when Recorder Wood suddenly appeared on the scene with "information," which, he claimed, was an effort on the part of Gray to "put one over him."

Accordingly he had Gray arraigned in court where he not only proceeded to fine him $100 on the charge of disorderly conduct, but gave him a severe lecture and sentenced him to jail for six hours for contempt.

Later it was charged that the police department, including Chief Bodeker, who was a personal friend of Gray, had shielded Gray in his unsuccessful attempt to conceal his identity and the matter was brought to the attention of the City Commission, which called a trial.

Police Chief Vindicated.

At the trial Recorder Wood made charges against Chief Bodeker, which were not sustained, however, as the commission gave to the Chief and his men a clean bill.

The incident was closed here for the time being, although it has created no little friction between city officials.

Recorder Wood, who was ousted from the bench by the commission recently, claims his action in the Gray case was one of the primary reasons for his dismissal, as President Exum, of the City Commission, who was a personal friend of Gray, tried first to get Wood to omit the jail sentence, and, failing in this, to keep it out of the papers.

Although Chief Bodeker disclaimed any knowledge of an attempt to shield Gray he, too, made efforts to have the sentence omitted and then to keep the matter out of the papers. His prediction, stated to a newspaper man at the time, that it would only result in divorce proceedings has come true.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Gray widely known throughout Alabama and, especially in Birmingham, where they are recognized members of the so-called "400." Mr. Gray was Lieutenant Governor under the Comer administration and was at one time president of the Peoples Savings Bank and Trust Company of this city.

CHATTANOOGA, July 9.—Prompt action by the fire department prevented a serious conflagration here to-day when flames were discovered in the woodworking plant of the Loomis & Hart Manufacturing Company.

MAN HELD HERE AS SCOTTDALE ROBBER

Safe in Mill Store Blown—Pal of Kirkwood Bandit Now Is Under Arrest.

J. J. Crawford, arrested by Atlanta officers Wednesday morning on the suspicion of having cracked the safe in the Scottdale Mills Store Company building and taken $300 in money, was released in the afternoon on evidence that the story he had told of his movements Tuesday night were true in every detail.

Crawford was taken from a Georgia Railroad train on his return from a visit to Scottdale. Later in the day he was taken to Decatur by Sheriff J. J. McCurdy, who investigated his story and released him.

Hoyt Garner, with whom Crawford stayed Tuesday night in Scottdale, also was arrested by Sheriff McCurdy and later released. This leaves the authorities with no one under suspicion for the robbery.

Crawford, at first rather vague in regard to the purpose of his visit in Scottdale, later told Detectives Black and Bullard that he went there to visit friends, a Mrs. Garner and her son. The detectives are at a loss to explain why he should be carrying a grip containing a blackjack, a glass cutter and two razors on a friendly visit of a few hours.

He admitted that he had known Walter Turpin, who blew the Kirkwood postoffice safe, since Turpin was released from the Federal Prison and that he had roomed next to the ex-convict at the Union Mission, 234 1-2 Marietta Street.

Visited Turpin at Jail.

He explained his visit to Turpin at the DeKalb County Jail on Tuesday by saying that a pair of his trousers had disappeared and he went to see if Turpin had taken them.

The burglar who blew the safe of the Scottdale store made no effort to steal anything other than the $300 in cash, which was in the safe. He escaped after an encounter with J. W. Meyers, the night watchman of the mills, who ran to the store upon hearing the explosion of the nitroglycerin.

The safe cracker effected an entrance into the store through the front window, after breaking the plate glass with a rock, covered with cloth to deaden the sound of the crash. At 3 o'clock he fired the first and only shot of explosive, blowing the door of the safe from its hinges and hurling it across the room.

Meyers was making his rounds in the mill nearby when he heard the explosion.

"The first thought that struck me," said Meyers, "when I heard the explosion was that safe robbers were at work. I listened a moment, but heard no other sounds. Then I slipped quietly out of the mill and started toward the store.

Covers Watchman.

"I crept around the corner of the mill, and as I neared the store I saw a man cautiously open the front door and slip out. He closed the door after him and stood for a moment, listening. Then he started to creep silently but hurriedly around the corner of the building, keeping in the shadows.

"I ran after him, shouting at him to halt, and tried to draw my revolver as I ran. The hammer of the weapon caught on my clothing, and I could not get the gun out of my pocket. I kept on running and yelling at the man, and he suddenly turned. In a moment his hand flew to his hip and he had me covered with a revolver. I had been unable to get my weapon out of my pocket, and I threw up my hands.

"He then threatened to kill me if I made any noise, and with his revolver pointing at my heart forced me to walk backward into the mill. As I entered the mill he acted as though he were coming in after me, but suddenly turned and darted around the corner. I ran out and saw him going in the direction of the railroad station."

200 MINERS STRIKE.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., July 9.—About 200 men employed at the mines of Seng Creek Coal Company went on strike to-day and are making attempts to get other miners out.

NEW EVIDENCE IN PHAGAN CASE FOUND

iGrl Called to Tell of Negro She Saw in Pencil Factory—Lee Stays in Jail.

A sensation in the Phagan murder mystery developed Wednesday afternoon when Solicitor Dorsey summoned Miss Mattie Smith under a special subpena to question her in regard to a negro she saw in the National Pencil Factory the morning of the Saturday that Mary Phagan was murdered.

Miss Smith told a Georgian reporter that she saw a negro there that morning and believed it was between 9 and 10 o'clock. She thought she might be asked to identify Conley. If she identifies the negro, it will disprove Conley's statement that he did not go to the factory until after he had met Frank Saturday.

Judge W. D. Ellis Wednesday morning postponed indefinitely the hearing on the application for a writ of habeas corpus to liberate Newt Lee, material witness in the Phagan murder mystery.

The action came as the result of an agreement reached between Graham & Chappell, attorneys for Lee, and Solicitor General Hugh M. Dorsey. It is believed to mark the end of all efforts to gain the negro's freedom before the trial of Leo M. Frank July 28.

The most unconcerned person in the courtroom was Newt Lee. He was brought before Judge Ellis by Deputy Sheriff Miner.

Lee Is Unconcerned.

"It don't make no difference to me whether I am inside or outside the jail," he said to a reporter. "It's just as the white folks say. I don't know what all this is that's going on. I know that my church offered to get me a lawyer. I guess this Mr. Chappell must be the one."

Chappell did not appear in the courtroom. Lee was represented by C. J. Graham, Chappell's law partner. Graham and Arnold had a conference half an hour before the hearing, and after it was announced that the judge would be asked for a postponement. Solicitor Dorsey arrived shortly before the hearing began and shortly afterward William M. Smith, attorney for Jim Conley, and Herbert Haas, associated with the defense, entered the courtroom.

Attorney Chappell was opposed in his move to obtain the liberty of Lee not only by the lawyers for the defense, but by those of the prosecution.

"I have advised against this action," said Solicitor Dorsey, "and I have no idea that it will be successful. The State will be able to prevent the liberation of the negro, as we regard him as a most important witness in our case against Leo Frank. By permitting him to go free would be taking serious chances of losing him as a witness when the case comes to trial."

Attorney Chappell desired to have Frank present at the hearing in order to repeat his former statements that so far as he knew there was no possibility that Lee could in any way have been connected with the crime.

Conley, who admitted to having assisted in the disposal of the body, was expected to deny that Lee had any connection with the crime to his knowledge.

DR. G. S. TIGNER ENDS HIS LIFE IN HOTEL

Ill Health Drives Well-Known Dentist to Suicide — From Prominent Family.

Dr. George S. Tigner, one of the best known dentists of Atlanta, killed himself early Wednesday morning in the bathroom of his apartments at the Hotel Imperial. Despondency over ill health is given as the reason.

Dr. Tigner, according to statements of his wife, retired Tuesday night about 10:30 o'clock in good spirits. When Mrs. Tigner arose Wednesday morning her husband was missing. A hasty search revealed the fact that the bathroom door was locked from the inside. When the door was taken down the body was found on the floor. The jugular vein had been severed.

Dr. Tigner was a member of one of the most prominent families of Georgia and at one time was president of the Georgia Dental Society. He is survived by his wife, formerly Miss Lula Singer, a niece of Hollis Boynton; his father, B. F. Tigner, of White Sulphur Springs, Ga.; three brothers, Frank C., of Columbus; Dr. Edward A., of Milledgeville, and J. Hope Tigner, of Atlanta; three sisters, Mrs. N. D. Boddie, of Chipley, Ga.; Miss Carrie and Miss Julia, of White Sulphur Springs.

The body will be taken to the old home at White Sulphur Springs.

At the Coroner's inquest, held in the Patterson Undertaking establishment at 10:30, a verdict of "death from knife wounds in the neck" was rendered.

Pigeon 'Homes' From Below the Equator

JEANNETTE, PA., July 9.—After 48 days of wandering, through the hottest part of the torrid and temperate zones, "Sunny Jim," a noted racing pigeon belonging to Steven Krupa, of this city, "homed" from Rio de Janeiro.

This feat establishes a record, in that no homing pigeon ever before "homed" from a point below the equator.

On several occasions Continental and American fanciers have shipped homing pigeons to distant points in Africa and South America, but for some unknown reason no bird has heretofore been able to make its way through the equatorial regions of extreme heat.

Limit Motherhood, Advises Lecturer

RACINE, WIS., July 9.—Mrs. J. Redding Cole, of Racine, in an address at the Chautauqua to-day, protested against Colonel Roosevelt's race suicide theories.

"Where," she said, "are we to furnish food for 2,000,000 underfed children? It may be immoral to curb the birth rate, but where is the morality in furnishing more children for the sweatshops to toil and hunger for the things they can not obtain?

"We are sick of the argument of Colonel Roosevelt. Motherhood must be limited if the child is to be fed and reared as the American child should. If that be treason, make the best out of it."

ATLANTA BANKS CALL OIL FIRM INSOLVENT

Receiver Asked for Kentucky Refining Company—Officers Accused of Speculations.

LOUISVILLE, KY., July 9.—Asserting that the Kentucky Refining Company is insolvent and charging that this condition is due to speculation, four Georgia banks last night joined in a petition in the United States District Court asking for the appointment of a receiver.

Debts which the company can not pay are placed in the petition at $442,766, and it is alleged that the officers have lost $132,000 for the company by speculating in cotton oil futures.

Big Factor in the Trade.

The Georgia banks interested are the Central Bank and Trust Corporation, of Atlanta; the Third National and the Atlanta National, of Atlanta; the Bank of Rockdale, Conyers, Ga., and the First National, of Madison, Morgan County, Georgia.

The Kentucky Refining Company has been prominent in cotton oil affairs several years. It operates a number of mills in Georgia and other Southern States. It buys large quantities of crude oil from many small mills.

Fifty Banks Interested.

A. P. Cole, vice president of the Central Bank and Trust Corporation, who filed the petition in Louisville, said Wednesday afternoon that the Georgia banks named are interested to the extent of less than $20,000 all told, the amounts ranging from $2,009 to $6,000 in each case.

According to Mr. Coles, between 50 and 60 banks throughout the country are interested, the principal creditors being in New York. Other heavy creditors are in Cincinnati, Louisville and Indianapolis, it is said.

Mr. Coles returned to Atlanta Wednesday morning.

SIDELIGHTS ON POLITICS

By JAMES B. NEVIN.

Far from believing the new county movements in Georgia dangerous, unnecessary, or in any way undesirable, Representative Ennis, of Baldwin, inclines to investigate carefully every one of them, and to favor those that appeal to his business sense and intelligence.

"As a preliminary proposition," said Mr. Ennis to-day, "I think the new county movements are all right. They are evidences to me that Georgia is growing and expanding every day, and the fact that people in unfavorably situated localities here and there are hampered in their progress because of their unfavorable location appeals to me.

"I try to put myself in the other fellow's place, and to think what I would desire done if I lived where he lives.

"I am informed that the tax values in the eleven new counties created within the past few years have increased an average of $1,000,000 per county. I understand that Comptroller General Wright's books show this to be true. Why, then, isn't that a pretty good way to increase our revenue, since increasing it is so necessary?

"Moreover, I incline to favor small counties rather than large ones. The small counties are better governed, as a rule, and certainly relief from petty annoyances are much more easily obtained when one has easy access to his county seat.

"To me a new county proposition is a business proposition, pure and simple, and nothing more. If it is good business for the county proposed, and good business for the State, I am for it—if it is not, I am against it.

"To be sure, I do not favor the indiscriminate creation of new counties. They should have reason and common sense behind them. At the same time, I do favor giving all those knocking at the doors of the State a square deal and a full and free hearing.

"I am satisfied that some of the propositions now pending in the Legislature have real merit behind them, and deserve to win out."

Both the Senate and the House waste much valuable time of the State backing and filing, doing and undoing clumsy things, and metaphorically stepping on their own toes forevermore.

Tuesday, in the House, not less than a dozen bills were, by unanimous consent, withdrawn from one committee only to be referred to another. Members are supposed to know that committees to which they wish their bills referred, and unless it be palpably improper, the Speaker generally gives bills the directions members wish.

Through lack of experience, however—or something—members of the present House forever are getting bills referred to the wrong committees—and the undoing of that work next day takes a lot of time.

Not only that, but bills introduced by unanimous consent come in one at a time, whereas a simple motion permitting all members desiring to introduce bills to do so at the same time would greatly facilitate matters. Three attempts were made to get such a motion through Tuesday, but every time it was objected to. The bills came along, one at a time, nevertheless!

Tuesday the House, through these awkward tactics, wasted not less than 30 minutes of time that might have been applied to something else—and to waste 30 minutes every day for 50 days makes, in the aggregate, a pretty big waste!

Governor John M. Slaton is the first Governor of Georgia to keep an automobile instead of the ancient and honorable laudau, drawn by a pair of thoroughbreds.

The executive stables have been made over into a garage for the Governor's machines, and he is whizzed every day to the Capitol in one of them.

Governor Slaton prefers an automobile to a carriage, but Governor Brown could not stand a buzz-buggy in his sight.

Only a few times was Governor Brown lured into one of the things, and then he never liked it a little bit!

Mr. Slater, of Bryan, got mad Tuesday and verbally walloped those members he accused of "eternally objecting to unanimous consent."

"These objections are frivolous and captious!" exclaimed the gentleman from Bryan, in the heat of debate. "They are unworthy and should not be interposed!"

"Huh!" stage-whispered Stewart, of Coffee, one of the prize objecters of the House, "Slater objects to objections—one just can't get along in this House without objecting to something."

And presently, when Slater undertook to get a bill up by unanimous consent, Stewart objected!

WHIPPING MAN WORTH $10.50 FINE, SHE SAYS

MRS. J. J. LEE.

Woman Thanks Judge for Light Penalty—Considers Herself Vindicated.

Mrs. J. J. Lee, who was fined $10.50 in police court Tuesday afternoon for horsewhipping T. D. Thompson, whom she accuses of slandering her, says she got her money's worth in the feeling that she had protected, to the best of her ability, her good name.

"It surely was worth $10.50 to thrash that man Thompson," she said Wednesday morning. "I went to court prepared to pay $50, and I thank Judge Broyles for letting me off with so small a fine. If I had had the money, I would have been willing to pay $500 for the satisfied feeling I now have."

Mrs. Lee declares that as far as she is concerned the matter is ended.

J. J. Lee, husband of Mrs. J. J. Lee, has issued a statement explaining Thompson's part in the affair. He expresses regret that the trouble could not be settled without notoriety.

"It is unfortunate that I am having trouble with my wife," writes Mr. Lee, "and when I requested Mr. Thompson to tell me what he knew as to the trouble at my home, as to how my wife had treated me and how I had treated her, he surprised me with a sensational statement as to my wife's character that was so new to me that I had him go to my lawyer's office."

Mr. Lee adds that his lawyer, after hearing Thompson's testimony, refused to take him as a witness. Then it was, he continues, that the sensational stories got to Mrs. Lee.

CHECK WASTE OF WATER, MAYOR TELLS AIDES

Scouts Fear of Famine, but Urges Economy at Meeting of the Department Heads.

Mayor Woodward Wednesday called city department heads to his office to urge economy in the use of city water on account of the breaking of the big pump at the river station. Chief Beavers said he would instruct his men to prevent waste of water by citizens. Zode Smith, general manager of waterworks, said there was no cause for alarm, but there was reason for economy in the use of water and need of fast repair work. He said that since the breaking of the pump Tuesday morning the reserve supply had gone down four inches, but even at this rate there would be no danger of a shortage for thirty days at the city's maximum consumption.

Weeks Needed for Repairs.

It is estimated that it will take from a month to six weeks to repair the Frank P. Rice 18,000,000-gallon pump. Mr. Smith said he would rush the work by having night shifts.

It was learned from the heads of the department that 1,000,000 gallons of water a day can easily be saved, most of it by the park and sanitary departments.

The two pumps in working order at the river station send to the reservoirs between 18,000,000 and 19,000,000 gallons a day. This falls several millions of gallons short, figuring leakage and waste, of the normal amount required by the city. But with the practice of economy by the city and citizens, Mr. Smith said the consumption could be reduced so as not to exceed the supply without particularly inconveniencing anyone.

Scouts Danger of Famine.

"There is no danger of a water famine," said Mayor Woodward, "and no reason why everyone should not use all the water needed. But water is so cheap in Atlanta that millions of gallons are wasted every day. Just stop the waste and we will never know the difference."

The most significant fact in the situation is that the city is up to its limit in pumping capacity at the river station. Should any more of the machinery break or an abnormal demand for water, such as a big fire, arise, a water shortage would be inevitable.

Boy of 13 Held for Killing His Playmate

Frank Barden, 13, Wednesday was ordered held on a charge of murder for killing his playmate, John Edgar, 14, when the two were playing "Mexican war" July 2. The hearing was before Justice of the Peace Edgar H. Orr.

Young Barden explained that he was demonstrating the use of a dirk knife when his playmate rushed upon the open blade. On his deathbed Edgar asked that Barden not be arrested. The prosecutor was the slain boy's father.

FIFTH REGIMENT CAMP PITCHED ON ISLAND

Atlanta Soldiers Arrive at Saint Simons—One Train Late in Reaching Brunswick.

BRUNSWICK, July 9.—The Fifth Georgia Infantry, Atlanta's own regiment, reached Brunswick on its two special trains this morning and crossed the sound to St. Simons Island this afternoon. The first section, carrying the First battalion, headquarters, band and hospital corps, with Colonel E. E. Pomeroy and his staff aboard, came in on time, arriving shortly after 6:30 o'clock.

The second section, with the other two battalions lost three hours en route, coming in at 9:30 o'clock. Meanwhile, the first section's baggage had been loaded on lighters for the St. Simons Island. The men on the second section rapidly attacked the breakfast, which lost nothing of its goodness for being more than three hours late.

On reaching St. Simons tents were pitched this afternoon and everything will be in readiness to-morrow for the regular Camp routine. There was no sickness and no accidents en route. The men anticipate a splendid encampment.

Fifth Marches to Station to Entrain.

Two trainloads of soldiers of Atlanta's regiment, the Fifth Infantry, Georgia National Guard, left at 7 o'clock and 8:30 o'clock Tuesday night for the annual encampment.

To the tune of "Good-bye, Dolly, I Must Leave You," mingled with the martial strains of "Dixie," the pride and pick of Atlanta's youth composing the two regiments marched from their armory, in command of Colonel E. E. Pomeroy, to the Union Depot.

Their route was up Edgewood Avenue to Pryor Street, up Pryor to Houston, west on Houston to Peachtree, south on Peachtree to Mitchell, east on Mitchell to Pryor, and north on Pryor to the Union Station.

During Tuesday morning and afternoon the soldiers loaded their own camping equipment and personal baggage in cars on sidetracks between the Whitehall Street Viaduct and the Union Station. These had been switched to the shed, and when the two regiments arrived everything was in readiness for the departure. The trains left over the Atlanta, Birmingham and Atlantic Railroad.

S. P. Cronheim, regimental quartermaster, was in charge of the baggage squads. F. H. Lichtenwalter, regimental commissary, had gone to St. Simons in advance to arrange for a food supply.

BEAVERS WIDENS WHITE SLAVE INQUIRY

Girl Held as Victim Promises to Make Startling Revelations at Court Hearing

Hattie Smith, who says she is a white slave victim and who already has made sensational disclosures of vice conditions in Atlanta, declared Wednesday she had much more to tell before her trial Wednesday afternoon.

On the girl's testimony the night clerk of the Brittain Hotel in West Mitchell Street was subpenaed to appear at the trial and tell of conditions of which the girl had testified.

She told detectives she was at the hotel with a man, and that she registered as his wife. An investigation of the hotel register by Detective Hollingsworth appeared to verify her story.

The manager of the Cumberland Hotel, another place named in the Smith girl's story of vice conditions, will be in court when the investigation is begun before Judge Broyles at 3 o'clock. He already has made an informal denial of her charges.

Barnhart Woman Defendant.

Lena Barnhart, whom Hattie Smith brands as a procuress and on whom she places the blame for her own ruin, will be a defendant when the case is called. Elijah Murray, a negro bellboy at the Cumberland, and Clyde Cox also are involved in the charges. Cox is out under bail.

As startling as were the revelations made by the Smith girl on her arrest Sunday night, she said that she would give names and addresses and would reveal more intimately the organized system for fostering vice that exists in Atlanta's underworld. She said she had determined to tell everything and that she would withhold no information the detectives desired. Some of the information she declared she had obtained from actual participation in the incidents of which she was to tell and the remainder from observation.

Crusade Against Clubs.

Simultaneous with the vice probe, Chief Beavers and Recorder Broyles are conducting a determined crusade against the locker clubs of the city which may be found violating the law. It is the opinion of the two that the presence of young girls in the clubs, where they are said to have the liberty of drinking with their male companions, can not but have a bearing on the vice question.

"The practice of allowing girls of tender years to drink in the locker clubs, I regard as the most serious phase of the whole locker club question," said Recorder Broyles after a conference with Chief Beavers Wednesday noon. The consultation was the first step in a sweeping investigation of the clubs of the city.

This conference follows the action of Judge Broyles Tuesday afternoon in the trial of Mrs. Lucy Ballue, who accidentally shot A. C. Thompson, a convict warden, in the parlors of the Owls' Club, when he directed a police investigation of that particular club.

Chief Beavers announces his purpose to obey the orders of the court to the letter, and the Owls' Club is expected to be put under fire at once.

Court Goes After Truth.

Judge Broyles sought to procure evidence from A. C. Thompson, asking him the direct question if he possessed a private locker in the Owls' Club and if his locker contained his private stock of whisky, but his counsel, Attorney George P. Whitman, and Attorney William M. Smith, counsel for Mrs. Ballue, both strenuously objected.

When they insisted that this had no bearing on the wounding of Thompson, the court remarked:

"Well, we're after the truth in this matter. We want to know something of the conduct of these locker clubs."

MACON, July 9.—Two negro boys, one under 10 years of age and the other just past that age, were tried in the Superior Court this week for murder. They are the smallest defendants ever charged with a capital offense in this county.

CAREY FOR PARK BOARD RULING "MOVIES"

Police Know Nothing of Controlling Recreation, He Says. Offers Suggestions.

Dan Carey, general manager of parks and playgrounds, gave out an interview Wednesday rapping the city's methods of regulating recreation in motion picture shows, dance halls and pool rooms. The gist of Mr. Carey's idea is that these institutions of leisure should be under the direction of the Park Department, under trained men who have made a scientific study of conditions, instead of being controlled by the police and other departments. He charges that proper regulation has been neglected.

The immediate insuiration for his statement is the movemetn on the part of a number of Coucilmen to kill the ordinance of Councilman George H. Boynton barring the wearing of tights and short skirts on the stages of theaters.

"Shows Are Recreation."

He said:

"The dance halls of the city, which are essentially a part of the recreation of the people, are regulated by the Police Committee of Council. Members of the Police Committee. I am confident, have never made a study of recreation. The same thing is true of the pool rooms and moving picture shows, and an investigation would doubtless show that there are other phases of our recreational life, either not being regulated at all, or being regulated by departments which look at them from the wrong viewpoint.

"There are several distinct dangers in moving picture shows. The first is physical—I mean the danger of fire; the danger to public health on account of the lack of proper ventilation; the danger to eyesight, because of imperfect aparatus; the danger from lack of proper cleaning.

Moral Danger, Too.

"The second danger is moral, which comes from the character of the pictures or the performance.

"The dance halls of Atlanta never have been regulated, except in inquiring into the character of the men who operated them and by occasional police supervision, bu tthe police are not educated to think along the lines of wholesome public recreation.

"The pool room situation is known to almost every one and we all know that pool rooms enter very largely into the recreation of the people. Some of them are very, very bad, and they are not beginning to do their duty in the way of wholesome recreation. All of these should be supervised by the Recreation Department."

Trumpetings of Pain Throw Zoo Into Panic Until Keeper Boyd Turns Dentist.

There was trouble out at Grant Park Tuesday.

Maude, the elephant, "took down" with the toothache.

For a time there was consternation in the zoo. Maude's trumpeting of pain gave all the animals the fidgets. Then Keeper Boyd opened the elephant's mouth, stuck his head in and located the trouble.

An old abscess, way back against one of Maude's molars, was again irritating her. Keeper Boyd administered half a gallon of toothache drops, but without effect. An hour later another examination was made. Then the real cause was revealed.

Maude is very fond of ice cream cones. Every child that passes the elephant's inclosure eating one of the delicacies is eyed greedily by the huge pachyderm. She sticks her snout out pleadingly and often is rewarded.

Lodged in the sore spot of the abscess in Maude's mouth was a small bit of the hard cone-crust. This was shown to Keeper Boyd through his magnifying glass. It proved to be the cause of the irritation. The operation of removal of the particle was a delicate one, as the elephant's mouth is as tender as that of a baby, yet with a fine pair of pinchers, it was successfully performed.

The application of another half-gallon of soothing liquid soon eliminated the trouble and Maude is again at her old stand, swaying back and forth, as she has done for the past twelve years, begging little boys and girls for ice cream cones.

$100,000 ASKED FOR EXHIBIT AT PANAMA FAIR

Georgia Commissioners Urge Legislature to Make Good Showing at San Francisco.

The Georgia Legislature will be asked to appropriate $100,000 for an exhibit at the San Francisco Exposition in 1915 that will show the United States the resources of the Cracker State.

The decision to ask the Legislature for $100,000 was made Tuesday after a meeting of the commission recently appointed by Governor Brown. Several hours were spent trying to find the minimum amount on which Georgia could make a good showing, and it was decided that nothing less than $100,000 would provide an exhibit in keeping with the State's importance. Many States of the Union have appropriated many times the amount the Georgia Legislature will be asked for.

Every member of the commission spoke in favor of a great Georgia exhibit at the fair, and after the meeting the commission called upon Governor Slaton to acquaint him with their decision. Robert F. Maddox and Judge T. S. Jones, of Louisiana, United States Commissioner for the Exposition, urged the appropriation.

Governor Slaton was not asked for a promise to support the request for $100,000, but it is generally understood that he is in favor of a Georgia exhibit at the fair.

The following commissioners attended Tuesday's session:

Frank Weldon, State-at-large, chairman; J. D. Price, Commissioner of Agriculture; Professor S. W. McCallie, State Geologist; R. C. Neely, of Waynesboro; W. W. Banks, Tifton; R. F. Maddox and J. R. Quincey, Douglas, and J. Hemlee Johnson, Jeffersonville.

KING IN PERIL OF KIDNAPING BY MILITANTS

Fears Bodily Injury and Takes Refuge Behind Special Guard. Pelted With Petitions.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

LONDON, July 9.—Such alarm has been caused by recent suffragette demonstrations aimed at King George that a special bodyguard was provided for His Majesty to-day to protect him from actual injury at the hands of the "wild women."

In the past week King George and Queen Mary have twice been held up in the street by militants, who hurled "votes for women" petitions at the head of His Majesty. On one occasion the report spread that an attempt had been made to assassinate the King and the women were roughly handled.

The Southport Pier was burned Monday because the King was to pass it, and the mansion of Sir William H. Lever, Baronet, in Lancashire, was destroyed because the King had promised to visit there. Scotland Yard is said to have evidence that the militant leaders have planned the most daring campaign imaginable to gain their ends, and it is hinted that this is actually the attempted kidnaping of His Majesty.

TIFTON, July 9.—When Mrs. I. B. Hall discovered a negro man hiding under her bed the negro attempted to escape through the hallway, but Mrs. R. E. Hall headed him off with a revolver, which she fired several times.

The negro then ran through three rooms and hid up a chimney, where neighbors, attracted by the shots, captured him.

BOARD "BREAKS" THREE POLICE; 3 SUSPENDED

Chief Satisfied With Results of Blind Tiger Inquiry—Says Drinkers Must Go.

With three policemen discharged from the force and three others suspended for 90 days by the Board of Police Commissioners Tuesday night, Chief of Police Beavers declared Wednesday morning that he is satisfied with the results of his investigation of the negro blind tiger at 127 Auburn Avenue and of drinking among policemen.

He declared the investigation of the department will continue until every policeman against whom there is even the shadow of suspicion shall have been investigated and the Commissioners given an opportunity to take action.

"I intend to run down all reports that policemen have been visiting blind tigers and drinking," the Chief declared, "and I shall continue the investigation until I have broken up the practice and gotten rid of all drinking members of the force."

Two of Accused Cleared.

The policemen who were discharged by the Commissioners were Robert A. Wood, J. P. Born and Max C. Folds, the latter recently acquitted of a charge of murder in the killing of a negro on Peters Street last December.

Patrolmen R. T. David, J. J. Jackson and Roundsman Bailey were suspended for 90 days, and Patrolmen J. E. McDaniel and L. W. Evans were exonerated and granted full pay for the time they were suspended by the Chief.

The action of the board was in direct opposition to the stand taken by Mayor James G. Woodward, who entered a vigorous protest against the discharge or suspension of the suspected officers.

"You can't believe a nigger against a white man," declared the Mayor, "and that is just what this board will have to do if they find these men guilty."

Believes Moon Blameless.

The Mayor intimated that he will urge Chief Beavers to bring charges against Plainclothes Officer Moon, who admitted on the witness stand that he drank whisky in Ola Bradley's blind tiger, at 127 Auburn Avenue, for the purpose of getting evidence. The Chief, however, is inclined to believe that Moon was only carrying out his instructions.

All of the accused men were represented by attorneys, among them J. Y. Smith, Colonel Harvey Hill, Aldine Chambers and William M. Smith. The specific charges against the six men against whom action was taken were that they visited the house and drank whisky with the inmates.

H. T. Adams, a member of the vice squad, who exposed the six patrolmen, testified that he had several times seen men and women entering Ola Bradley's place.

Saw Police in House.

"On the night of June 27," he said, "I saw Sergeant Bailey and Patrolman Wood in the house. A negro woman poured whisky out of a jug, and Bailey and Wood took it. We saw them with the liquor in their hands, but did not see them drink it."

He testified that he did not see Evans there.

Moon, Adams' partner in the inquiry, testified that he saw David, Bailey and Wood enter the house about midnight.

"David went in first," Moon said, "and I saw a negro girl pour something out of a jug into a glass and hand it to David. Ola Bradley came in about that time, and the girl poured something out for her."

Carrie May Cutwright, one of the inmates of the place, testified that she drank whisky which Officer Folds bought for her.

Woman Tells of Fight.

"Mr. Folds and another officer, whose name I don't know, had a fight one night because one called the other a liar," the woman said. "One night Mr. Folds put a ring on my finger and I lost it. He said it was all right about losing the ring."

Ola Bradley, the woman who ran the blind tiger, swore she did not sell whisky to any policemen, but that she never objected when one helped himself.

"I invited Mr. Wood and Mr. Bailey to come to the house to see the girls dance," she said, "and when they wanted something from the ice box, I never objected. Mr. Jackson took two bottles of beer from the ice box one night, bu he didn't pay for it."

Dies From an Injury Of Twenty Years Ago

GRIFFIN, July 9.—J. B. Cass, a railroad telegraph operator employed by the Central of Georgia Railway Company, is dead here as the indirect result of an accident of 20 years ago, when he jumped from a burning railroad bridge. His liver was then dislocated and entangled, and ever since it has caused him more or less worry.

On Sunday night Cass was stricken with paralysis, superinduced by the old injury.

Williamson Drives Out 'Blind Tigers'

GRIFFIN, July 9.—The little town of Williamson, near here, has launched a fight against blind tigers.

Complaints had been made from time to time, but no action was taken by Council until citizens under the leadership of Dr. J. C. Beauchamp banded together in a determined war against blind tigers and immorality of every kind. Since then the tigers have gone to other parts. Council is now co-operating in the crusade.

BOY JUDGES PONIES LIKE TRAINED EXPERT

Picks Out Best Three—Contestants Have Twenty-two Days More to Hustle for Prizes.

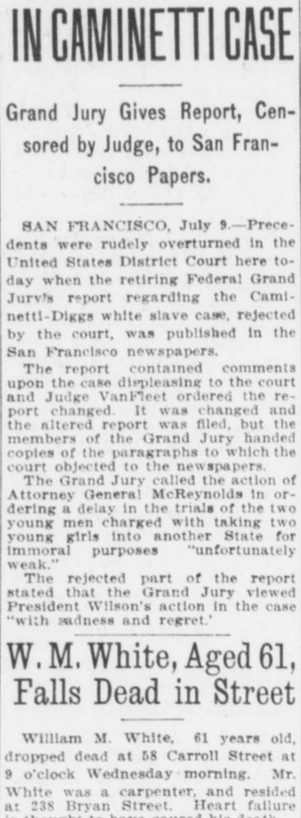
An even score of days remain in The Georgian and American Pony contest—that is, just twenty working days and two Sundays.

These should be crowded with endeavor on the part of the boys and girls racing for the twenty-two fine little animals which will be given away as soon after July 31 as the last mail of that date is in and the final results in all districts known.

At Grant Park, where the contestants picnicked July 4, one of the tiniest, and yet one of the most successful of the contestants went over the ponies like an expert judge of horseflesh. This ten-year-old lad "sized them up" from the side, from in front, and from behind. He examined their legs critically.

"Mamma," he said, "the black one has the most style, but I think the spotted one has the best face. That one over there is the largest and strongest. If I can't have one of these three, I'll be disappointed."

Estelle Sullivan, 4 West Peachtree Street.



Louise Chewning, 98 Formwalt Avenue.

There is only one way, however, in which the boys and girls can have their pick of the ponies, and that is, getting the most votes. The boy or girl who gets the most votes of any in all districts will have first choice. The others will have their choice in order standing, until the winner with the least number of votes gets the last pony—which is likely to be just as attractive and certainly will be just as serviceable, kind and well trained as the first one chosen.

The present attractive bonus offer closes July 19. Until 10 o'clock that night, there will be liberal amounts of extra votes given for every club of $35, $25 or $15 in subscriptions turned in by contestants.

All the contestants and their parents, particularly their parents, are invited to Grant Park Sunday afternoon. The ponies will be there, some harnessed and some saddled, and there will be rides for all the boys and girls. The contest manager is especially anxious to have the older folks see the Shetlands, and meet those who have the contest in charge to confer on ways and means of helping the children win the prizes.

COURT IS SCORNED IN CAMINETTI CASE

Grand Jury Gives Report, Censored by Judge, to San Francisco Papers.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 9.—Precedents were rudely overturned in the United States District Court here today when the retiring Federal Grand Jury's report regarding the Caminetti-Diggs white slave case, rejected by the court, was published in the San Francisco newspapers.

The report contained comments upon the case displeasing to the court and Judge VanFleet ordered the report changed. It was changed and the altered report was filed, but the members of the Grand Jury handed copies of the paragraphs to which the court objected to the newspapers.

The Grand Jury called the action of Attorney General McReynolds in ordering a delay in the trials of the two young men charged with taking two young girls into another State for immoral purposes "unfortunately weak."

The rejected part of the report stated that the Grand Jury viewed President Wilson's action in the case "with sadness and regret.'

REDMOND PICKED AS IRISH PREMIER

"Patriots" Take First Steps Toward Formation of a Parliament—Hot Fight Foreseen.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

DUBLIN, July 9.—John Redmond, the Irish leader who has spent his life working for home rule, has been tentatively selected by influential members of the Irish Nationalist party to be Premier of Ireland when autonomy is attained.

Home rule now is merely a matter of time, the bill having passed its third reading on its second passage in the House of Commons this week.

At a conference of "Irish patriots" here to-day first steps were taken toward the formation of a Parliament. The Nationalists hope to get back the old-fashioned House of Lords for the Senate.

There will be a strong opposition party in the Parliament and bitter political quarrels are in prospect when the Irish get to making their own laws.

It is understood that Mr. Redmondd has consented to accept the premiership.

The mother of the Davis girl, on learning of the marriage, had a warrant sworn out for Weller, but he fled to Fairburn, taking his girl wife with him. He was arrested there and returned here for trial.

FARMERS RALLY TO UNION HEAD IN SCREVEN

President Barrett Receives Hearty Welcome at Sylvania—Impetus Given Organization.

SYLVANIA, July 9.—Charles S. Barrett, national president of the Farmers' Union, and L. M. Rhodes, State President of Tennessee and chairman of the national board of directors of the union, are stirring the farmers of Georgia as they have never been stirred before in recent years.

Sylvania, the heart of Screven County, was alive with farmers, their wives, their sons and their daughters Tuesday to hear Barrett and Rhodes tell of the future of the farmers of Screven County and the Farmers' Educational and Co-Operative Union of America.

Screven Farmers Alive.

It did not require the presence of Barrett and Rhodes to awaken interest in the Farmers' Union in Screven County, as the farmers appear to be fully alive to the advantages of the organization.

The farmers of Georgia believe in Charlie Barrett and love him. He is one of them. No Governor ever met with a greater reception than did Barrett on his arrival in Sylvania. Crowds were gathered at the station when the train arrived, and the march to the hotel was impeded the entire distance by rugged, honest, good old farmers who were determined to meet and shake hands with their president.

Rhodes Wins Hearers.

After the masterful address of Chairman Rhodes he was next in popularity to President Barrett. A big, whole-souled farmer, talking tc brother farmers, Rhodes hit true to the spot with every word—and he is an orator, too. For more than an hour he fired volleys of truths and advice to the farmers that won them every one.

President H. C. Evans and Secretary D. B. Newton, of the Screven County Union, were about the busiest pair in Sylvania in many moons. But they are rejoicing in the fact that their union and Screven County are receiving praises from the national president and the chairman of the national board of directors on the splendid work they have done.

The impression prevails in Sylvania to-day that after this rally there will not be a half dozen farmers in Screven County out of the union in a month.

The congregation expects to dispose of the present edifice to erect a new church nearer the heart of Inman Park.

Morals of a Parrot To Be Saved by Law

ALTON, ILL., July 9.—Mrs. Geneva Littlepage has applied to Justice Gorman for a replevin writ to obtain possession of a parrot to save him from the baneful influences of a saloon.

"The bird never swore once in his life, and I can't bear the thought of his learning to curse," she told the justice.

Mrs. Littlepage said the parrot had been stolen and when she next heard of it the bird had been sold to a saloonkeeper for $10.

BOOSTER WOULD PUT FAIR FACE ON BUTTON

The two booster button designs offered by James P. Windsor, bank cashier.

Slogan-Maker Suggests Contest to Find Prettiest Girl for Atlanta Badge.

The contest editor was thrilled today when, looking through the "500,000 Club" slogans brought in by the last mail, he found a suggestion that a beauty contest be held and that the face of the prettiest Atlanta girl be placed on the "500,000 Club" buttons.

The idea comes from James F. Windsor, an assistant cashier of the American National Bank. He submitted a well executed design with a fair face upon it, and around the border were the words:

"Watch Atlanta—She'll Get You Yet. 500,000 by 1920."

In a second design Mr. Windsor was not less enthusiastic. In the border of the button hole his line is: "A Half-Million City by 1920." Then in the center the words: 'Grow With Atlanta. It's Great."

Judges Face Big Task.

Every mail brings in a larger and larger number of contestants. It's going to be no easy job for the judges, John W. Grant, Wilmer L. Moore and Walter C. Taylor, to say which is the best. But when the slogan is selected and announced in next Sunday's American the winner will receive a crisp check for $25.

Ther are no rules except that all slogans must be in by Saturday. Then when the buttons are made the winner can enjoy the glory of his accomplishment for months and months to come, for the buttons will be worn by thousands and thousands of Atlantans.

Just to show how widespread is the interest in the slogan contest and the "500,000 Booster Club," The Georgian will continue to print a number of the best suggestions as they come in.

Some Slogans Suggested.

Returns to Find Wife Is Remarried

Indiana Enoch Arden Wandered Away From Family During Mental Lapse—Was Thought Dead.

ANDERSON, IND., July ..—After having been mourned as dead by his family for many years, Mark McCandliss, who mysteriously disappeared from this city twelve years ago, suddenly returned, and, like Enoch Arden, found his wife married to another.

McCandliss appeared at the home of his wife's mother, Mrs. Martha Hackenberg, 1612 Halford Street. As it happened his two children, Marie and Dan McCandliss, were both at the home of their grandmother. Mrs. Hackenberg at once recognized her former son-in-law and pointed out his two children, who are now almost grown.

McCandliss said he had very little recollection of having left Anderson, and that for the last twelve years had wandered all through the United States.

Paints Masterpiece On 'Married Bliss'

ST. LOUIS, July 9.—One of the most-talked-of pieces of art in St. Louis hangs in the home of Dr. Robert E. Wilson, 4259 Lindell Boulevard, and was painted by Mrs. Wilson. The canvas is called "The Story of a Young Girl's Love," and covers the entire wall space in the parlor of this magnificent colonial home.

Mrs. Wilson's friends claim the painting illustrates her blissful married state.

BARRIER TO HALT WEEVIL PEST PLANNED

Senator Smith of South Carolina Sponsor for Scheme to Save Southeast Millions.

WASHINGTON, July 9.—Plans for barring the boll weevil from Georgia, most of Alabama, Florida, South Carolina and North Carolina and saving the cotton growers millions of dollars a year are being drafted by Senator Smith, of South Carolina, with the tentative approval of Secretary of Agriculture Houston.

The weevil has already swept over Texas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Arkansas, and is moving eastward into Alabama.

Senator Smith's plan is for the Federal Government, with State co-operation, to prohibit the growing of cotton in a belt which would separate the Atlantic Coast States from the Southwestern States.

As the boll weevil migrates only from cotton field to cotton field, the Senator believes this belt would save the States to the east of it from the pest.

According to investigation, the narrowest belt which Senator Smith urges where a barrier might be raised, would be in Alabama, between the mountains near the Tennessee line and the gulf. This would be 250 miles long and 50 miles wide.

Senator Smith's plan is to have the Federal Government compensate the farmers in this zone for not planting cotton. He yesterday consulted Senator Kern, the Democratic leader, and won his approval of a feasible plan.

Texas Bankers Are To Aid the Farmers

FORT WORTH, TEXAS, July 9.—Peter Radford, president of the Texas Farmers' Union, in a public statement says:

"In Texas cotton is the money crop, and the problem of marketing it intelligently has absorbed the attention of the leaders of economic thought for half a century. The crop is ofttimes mortgaged, and debt is such a hard taskmaster that the farmer, in order to escape it, rushes to the market with his products and down goes the price.

"To relieve the pressure the bankers are advancing the farmers $35 a bale at 6 per cent, payable when the cotton is sold. The title to the cotton rests with the farmer and he can sell when he pleases, and there is no longer occasion for disposing of his crop on a weak or glutted market.

GREEK PRINCESS GIVES GEMS TO WAR FUND

Dowager Queen Goes to the Front to Help Nurse Wounded Soldiers.

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

ATHENS, July 9.—The Dowager Queen of Greece, mother of King Constantine, left to-day for Salonika on a transport to help nurse the wounded Greeks in the military hospital there.

Many society women are volunteering to go to the front to act as nurses on the battlefield.

Princess Helene has given away half of her jewels to secure medical supplies for the Greeks.

Five priests of the Greek Catholic Church and the Metropolitan of Lahona were executed by Bulgarian soldiers on their retreat across the Struma River, before the advance of King Constantine's army, it was reported to-day in war dispatches from Salonika.

This followed the report that 700 Greeks were burned in a mosque near Kilkish by Bulgarian "irregulars."

Lahona was pillaged and partly destroyed and a number of Greek women were carried off by the retreating Bulgarians.

Servian King Stirs Soldiers to War Frenzy.

SERVIAN MILITARY HEADQUARTERS, USKUB, July 9.—A war proclamation addressed to the soldiers in the Servian army and signed by King Peter was read to the troops to-day amidst scenes of greatest enthusiasm.

A Servian column of 6,000 troops has been dispatched northward from Uskub to prevent the main Servian army from being cut off by General Kutinchetf's Bulgar army, which is moving northeastward along the Struma River toward Belgrade.

A shortage of provisions threatens the Servians.

Cholera Scourge Threatens Armies.

SOFIA, July 9.—An epidemic of cholera, resulting from the great numbers of unburied bodies lying upon the battlefields in Northern Macedonia, has broken out in the Bulgarian and Servian armies.

Generals Petroff and Kutinchetf, Kovatcheff and the other staff commanders in the field to-day opened negotiations with the Servian commanders for an armistice in order that the dead may be buried.

Two Sue Railroads For Heavy Damages

DALTON, July 9.—Alleging that a spark from a passing engine set fire to their warehouse, which, with the contents, was totally destroyed, the Barrett, Denton & Lynn Company has filed suit against the Southern Railway for $40,000 damages.

Another big damage suit, this one against the Western and Atlantic Railroad Company, was filed by Thomas D. Hawk, asking $50,000 damages from having lost a foot and hand when run over by a train on that road.

Sues for Whisky Seized by Police

HUNTSVILLE, July 9.—A law suit the outcome of which will be interesting to a great many people in dry towns has been instituted here by Jack Lamar against the Southern Express Company for 56 pints of liquor which was shipped to him by express and which was never delivered because it was seized by the police.

The whisky is still held by the police. Lamar claims that the company is responsible for its delivery to him.

THE PLAYS THIS WEEK

Forsyth Bill Pleases.

A variety bill of unusual quality is the offering at the Forsyth. There is nothing on the program that is a waste of time or in the slightest boring.

Eva Taylor and company present "After the Wedding." The many complications produce comedy situations that are thoroughly enjoyed. Hines and Fox continue to score a genuine hit and the other acts are all being well received.

Valerie Bergere and her own company in "Judgment," her newest sketch, will be the attraction next week, with six other Keith features.

Grand's Pictures Draw Big.

Edison's Talking Pictures with splendid first-run standard pictures continue to attract at the Grand continuously from 2:30 in the afternoon until 10:30 at night. This policy has been thoroughly indorsed and the house is being crowded practically all the time.

The talking pictures are now well known, and the daily change of program delights hundreds of people who have the motion picture habit.

Bijou Offering a Hit.

Will Stanton and Rosalind May, the stars in "Along Broadway," which is the offering at the Bijou this week, are two of the cleverest people who have been seen here this season and they are surrounded by a company of 30 musical comedy and vaudeville stars who are seldom ever seen even in the higher-priced theaters. HEFTY 6-FOOT 'BABY' OF HOUSE WEIGHS 175

He's almost but not quite 22 years of age.

Grover C. Edmondson is one of the most industrious members of the present Legislature. He always is on hand at roll call.

He's Also One of the 245,686 Grover Clevelands, Born During the Democratic Renaissance.

Grover Cleveland Edmondson, of Brooks, is the "baby" of the present House of Representatives, being almost but not quite 22 years of age.

Mr. Edmondson does not look very much like a baby, as he is 6 feet 2 inches in height, weighs 175 pounds and has a luxuriant shock of red hair.

Mr. Edmondson is one of the 245,686 Grover Clevelands scattered throughout the United States lately coming of age.

He was born about the time the former President came back into public notice as the triumphant standard bearer of a long suffering Democracy, and the gentleman from Brooks is mindful of the obligation of statesmanship that fact piles upon him.

Mr. Edmondson has introduced a bill providing for a constitutional convention, and he expects to push it vigorously so soon as it comes out of committee—if it ever does.

In the meantime his most pressing business is moving daily that the roll call be dispensed with, and that the reading of the journal be relegated to the afterawhile.

Mr. Edmondson really is a most industrious legislator, and invariably is on hand to answer the roll call, even if he does persistently move that it be dispensed with.

The gentleman from Brooks is genuinely popular with his colleagues and comes in for much good-natured "joshing" and petting—just as the "baby" of the House rightfully should.

ASSEMBLY WILL VIEW SCHOOL ON JULY 19

Augusta Inspection Trip Delayed. Many Appropriation Bills Introduced in House.

The Legislature will inspect the Augusta Medical College July 19, instead of July 16, as decided Tuesday. The change was made on the adoption of the Senate amendment changing the date.

A large number of appropriation bills were filed in the House Wednesday morning. Representative Blackburn, of Fulton, filed one appropriating $35,000 for a new building at the Georgia Tech; Wood and Bennett, of Walton, asked for $10,000 for the Fifth District Agricultural School at Walton, while Hammack, of Randolph, filed a bill appropriating $20,000 to the State Board of Entomology, $5,000 of which is for immediate use in the fight against cotton wilt or black root and the boll weevil.

Among the other bills was one by Cooper and Crawley, of Ware, providing for a state banking department.

McCarthy, Myrick and Shuptrine, of Chatham, introduced a bill requiring counties to pay the expenses of returning fugitives from justice from other States.

The Committee on Constitutional Amendments reported favorably the bill providing for the new County of Barrow.

The following committees of the House are scheduled to meet this afternoon: General Judiciary No. 1 at 3 o'clock, General Judiciary No. 2 at 3 o'clock, Penitentiary at 4, General Agricultural No. 1 at 3:30.

Situation Is Unique.

The record shows the House and Senate in direct opposition to each other in this matter, which is unique.

As a rule, one House will not reverse the ruling of the other in matters of this kind, but the House evidently was determined not to go on record in this particular matter in a way that might be construed as a direct slap in the face of a band of Georgia women, intelligently undertaking to put forward their honest views.

After the House adjourned Representative Smith was overwhelmed with congratulations from numerous suffragists in the gallery who had been watching things on the floor below.

Mr. Smith, although hampered and rebuffed by parliamentary practices embarrassing in the extreme, never gave up his contest until he had put the job over.

The suffragists were jubilant over their victory, even though it did come at the very last minute.

Had the House refused the petition asked Wednesday, the suffragists had determined to meet on the Capitol steps and to invite Governor Slaton to address them.

Governor Cant' Attend.

Had this plan been carried through, it would have necessitated the Governor's taking sides, either for or against the Legislature.

Representative John Y. Smith will address the meeting Wednesday night, welcoming the delegates to Atlanta.

Goverdnor Slaton was invited to attend, but a previous engagement to dine with Chairman Wheatley and the House Appropriations Committee prevented his accepting the same. The Governor stated that otherwise he would be pleased to accept.

The Stark Senate motion to table the invitation of the women was adopted 22 to 18, as follows:

Ayes—Brown, Burtz, Bush, Converse, Foster, Harrell, Huie, W. W. Jones, Johnson, Kea, Kelly, Olliff, Parrish, Peyton, Pope, Richardson, Rushin, Smith, Spinks, Stark, Sweat and Taylor.

Nays—Allen, Bulloch, Dickey, DuBose, Elkins, Hixon, Erwin, Longino, McGregor, McNeil, Miller, Moore, Perry, Searcy, Tarver, Turner, Tyson and Watts.

Held for Mail Theft.

TIFTON.—Frank J. Davis, a negro, has been arrested here on a charge of receiving another person's mail and appropriating a letter containing a check for $17.84, intended for J. T. Davis, a Tift County truck farmer.

ASSEMBLY ASKS HOKE SMITH TO MAKE TALK

Senate Concurs in House Resolution—Many New Bills, One Killing Third Degree.

The Senate concurred in House Resolution No. 36, by Representative Miller, of Bibb, inviting Senator Hoke Smith to address a joint session of the Legislature during his stay in Atlanta. Senator G. M. Huie, of the Thirty-fifth, and Senator J. T. Hixon, of the Thirty-seventh, were appointed to represent the Senate on the Committee of Notification.

House Resolution No. 17, providing for a deficiency in the 1913 appropriations to pay the salary of the clerk of the Insurance Department, was received and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Senator M. C. Tarver introduced a resolution providing that the Committee on Public Property be authorized to consider all applications for use of the Senate chamber.

Would Prevent Muddles.

This resolution, which Senator Tarver said was designed to prevent a recurrence of such a muddle as the request by the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association got the Senate into, was adopted without opposition.

New bills were introduced in the Senate and referred to the proper committees, as follows:

By Senator E. L. Smith—Constitutional amendment creating Hansell County.

By Senator R. L. Dickey—Amending section 4828 of the Civil Code, which prescribes the powers and duties of city court judges.

Would Abolish Third Degree.

By Senators W. M. Olliff and Lee Pope—Amendment to the code fixing the term of office of sheriff at four years, beginning and ending on January 1.

By Senator W. E. H. Searcy, Sr.—Bill to abolish the third degree.

By Senator A. H. Foster—Bill to appoint a committee to investigate the acquirement by the State of the A., B. & A. Railroad as the most feasible means of extending the Western and Atlantic Railroad to the sea; the committee to report at the present session of the Legislature.

NATIONAL BISCUIT COMPANY

SUIT DISCLOSES LOVE LETTER CHAMPION

Wife Gets Divorce on Strength of Correspondence—Numerous Marital Tangles Bared.

Atlanta's champion receiver of love letters was unearthed in Judge Bell's "divorce mill" Wednesday morning in the hearing of the suit of Mrs. Mary W. Bryan against her husband, Robert C. Bryan.

Mrs. Bryan testified that when cleaning house one day she found 150 letters, all of an amorous nature, hidden in her husband's trunk. All, she declared, were from a girl in Florida, and the dates on the first and the last letter were only about two months apart.

She was granted a decree by the jury, and the custody of their 3-year-old daughter was awarded to Bryan's father by agreement.

Wife Got Four Nickels.

Mrs. Maude Coan, applying for a divorce from her husband, James Clifton Coan, testified that from March, 1910, when they were married, to September, 1910, when they separated, he gave only four nickels to her support. She was given a decree.

Mrs. Lulu A. Baron testified that her husband, A. L. Baron, often told her she would look better dead than alive, and that she woke up one night and he was trying to choke her. She was granted a first verdict.

Probably the most unusual case of the present session of the court was that of Mrs. Lucy Bloomer, who applied for a divorce from Jacob Bloomer, with whom she said she had lived as his wife for fifteen years, though no marriage ceremony ever was performed. She admitted on the stand that though she had borne Bloomer's name and had introduced him as her husband, he had always disclaimed the marital relationship and had introduced her as his "hired woman."

The case was tried before Judge Ellis, who ruled that Mrs. Bloomer could not show that she was ever married to Bloomer, and was therefore not entitled to a divorce. Under his instructions the jury returned a verdict for the defendant, declaring that no marriage relation had ever existed between them.

Contractor Is Warned.

John T. Anglin, a railroad man, filed an answer to the petition for divorce of his wife, Mrs. Mamie Anglin, in which he charged her with infidelity, and named W. R. Jester, an Atlanta contractor, as co-respondent.

Jester took her auto riding and to ice cream parlors, he asserted, and when she returned home she wrote to Jester a letter in which she addressed him as "My Dear Darling."

Anglin charged that his wife, her father and Jester plotted for her to go to San Francisco to visit her mother, and then Jester met her there. Anglin swore he trailed Jester and his wife to Los Angeles, El Paso, Houston, New Orleans and Montgomery, and finally overtook them at Macon. There, he said, he gave Jester a beating. The case was held over until the next term of court.

Cut Off Water to Bring in Suburbs

MACON, July 9.—In the future the Waterworks Commissioners will not allow any extensions of the water mains beyond the city limits. For two years it has been the custom to lay mains for contiguous suburbs beyond the city limits, and these customers have been supplied at the same rate as consumers living within the city.

Now the out-of-city users of water will pay a much higher rate, and other similar connections are prohibited. This is expected to promote the movements now under way in several sections to incorporate with the city.

Elks' Lodge on Trial In Prohibition Case

MACON, July 9.—The Macon Lodge of Elks is on trial in the Superior Court to-day on a charge of violating the State prohibition law. The secretary and members of the governing board are the specific defendants.

Solicitor Ross, being an Elk, is disqualified and B. J. Dasher is prosecuting the case. All witnesses who are members of the order are excused from testifying, if they claim the exemption, on the theory that their evidence might tend to incriminate them. Seven lawyers, all volunteers, are conducting the defense.

Prof. H. P. Lykes, who for the past three years has been in charge of the animal husbandry department of the Georgia Experiment Station, has been appointed assistant dairy and poultry agent by the Southern Railway and will have headquarters in Atlanta.

He will devote his time to the lines of the Southern Railway in Georgia—the Georgia Southern and Florida Railway, the Augusta Southern Railroad, and the Tallulah Falls Railway.

Women Campers in Trousers Stir Town

LAKE HOPATCONG, N. J., July 9. Women campers on the lake shore have taken quite a fancy to male attire, and they are wearing khaki trousers almost universally.

Some of the less timid have gone so far as to appear in stores and other places in their trousers. Some of the more puritanical are discussing having measures taken to prevent their sisters from "parading" in anything but the accepted feminine attire.

One Woman's Story

By Virginia T. Van De Water.

CHAPTER II.

IT is not strange that men do not understand women when woman so often does not understand herself. Mary Danforth did not know what instinct kept her from mentioning to her parents her encounter with Gordon Craig in the subway train. That is, she did not tell them that she knew the name of the man whose pocket had been picked. She mentioned casually that she had seen through the window of her car a thief remove a purse from a pocket of another passenger on a local train and that she had vainly tried to attract the victim's attention to the theft.

"How strange that you should have seen it, and that the other people did not," remarked Mrs. Danforth. "You have quick eyes, my dear."

Mary laughed. "They were not as quick as the pickpocket's fingers," she said lightly.

"People ought to be careful how they carry their valuables," remarked her father sententiously. "New Yorkers should know enough to be on the lookout for thieves. Yet every few days you read in the papers of some careless chap who has been robbed."

The Discussion Ends.

There the discussion ended. Mary did not think it necessary to tell her father that the man of whom she had spoken was not a New Yorker. She was quite sure that Craig himself would not speak of the incident to her father, even should he present the letter of introduction of which he had told her. She wondered when he would present this, and if her father would mention the stranger to her. Why should he? There were dozens of business acquaintances whom he met weekly and whose names she did not even know. He was a man who did not bring the office and its concerns into his home. She almost wished that she had told a part of it. It was too late now to do so. Once she made an effort to bring the conversation back to the incident; then appreciated with embarrassment that were she now to give an accurate account of the encounter her parents would think it strange that she had not done so before. So she turned the talk again into other channels.

Dinner over, she asked to be excused, explaining that she must "cram" for examinations.

"Must you work late to-night?" queried her mother, sympathetically. "I think it is a shame the way in which you girls have to work to get through the High School. Now, when I was young——"

"Yes, yes, mother, I know!" interrupted Mary, with more asperity than was habitual with her. She was still weary and nervous, but as she saw the shade of wounded feeling that swept across her mother's face she regretted her sharp speech and, stooping swiftly, kissed the pale cheek.

"Forgive me for being so cross mother," she said gently. "I am hot and tired, and, I fear, a bit grouchy."

"That's all right, Mary," said her father good-naturedly. "Your mother and I understand, and we are proud of the way you have worked. In spite of the fact that High School studies are a bit strenuous, you'll find that the training has been a fine thing for you later in life if you ever have to face the world alone. But I hope you won't have to," he added hastily.

His eyes dwelt happily on the graceful girl before him. She was an only child, and her father always said that she was the best daughter that any couple ever had. He had insisted that she take a course of study that would enable her to support herself if necessary. Every woman ought to have some way of earning her own living, he had declared. Mary reminded him of it to-night smilingly.

"I'm Going to Insist."

"Well, dad," she teased, "you say you hope I will never have to support myself, and yet I am almost ready to consider myself a competent secretary, stenographer and typewriter. Then what are you going to do with me if I do not take a position?"

"I am going to insist that you keep in practice, but you shall not go to work as long as I live. I want you at home with mother and me. When I die it will be time enough for you to hustle."

"I pray that won't be for years to come," said the daughter, as she ran her fingers caressingly through his gray hair. "Not because I am afraid of work—but because we need and love you—mother and I."

John Danforth looked fondly at his daughter. "Well," he said with a tender smile, "I've lived right up to my income so far, and now I want to be spared long enough to lay aside something for you two—for no man ever had a better wife and daughter."

Mary studied late that night. As she fell asleep she smiled tenderly as her memory recalled the expression of pride with which her father had made this speech.

"Dear old dad," she murmured drowsily. "I love to see that look on his face."

Perhaps a sudden change in the weather, making the air dry and cool, caused life to seem brighter to Mary Danforth the following day, for she returned from school in a happy and hopeful frame of mind. Her mother came to her room late in the afternoon with the news that her father had "just telephoned that he was bringing a business acquaintance home for the evening."

"He says he's a stranger here," added the mother, "and as he's a bit lonesome, father asked him up to dine. He did not tell me his name."

The girl felt a wave of color sweep to the roots of her hair, and she turned away hastily to hide it.

"Perhaps it might be as well to tell Norah to have a salad course to-night, since dad's bringing a stranger home," she remarked casually, "and let's have the new china used, too—shan't we?"

"Certainly," said her mother. So calm was her child's manner that the parent would have been surprised could she have heard her whisper excitedly when she was again alone in her room:

"It is surely Gordon Craig!" Then, as the girl caught a glimpse of her smiling face in her mirror, she blushed again.

Confessions of a Medium

A Striking Expose of Fakery in Spiritualism, Clairvoyance, Etc.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the partment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

By Chas. D. Isaacson.

YOU have watched the crowds in front of the fortune tellers' booths in Coney Island. Of course, you have never been one of those who have been "taken in." But you may have watched the others as they stood amazed at the wonderful "second sight" of Professor Bondaloo, or whatever his title happens to be.

As he sits blindfolded he describes exactly the articles in the crowd, tells the amount of coins and the dates thereon; tells the colors of dresses; reads the titles of magazines; adds complicated figures on the blackboard, and thoroughly mystifies his beholders.

They little know that the Professor instead of being imported from Mandalay, India, probably hails from that far-distant land of East Fourteenth Street or the Bowery, and is known in the winter and in private life by some "imported" name.

The assistant, after beseeching you to come closer, still closer, in order not to lose a single syllable that drops like pearls from the lips of the X-ray visioned man, then announces that the great professor will tell you your name for 10 cents to-day only.

When you go inside you are led to the Professor's sister, or cook, or something, who asks you to cross her palm with silver, which means a quarter, or a half, or even a dollar, according to how gullible you may appear.

She then proceeds to tell you the color of your prospective wife's cousin's hair, and seems to have forgotten that you came in to find out what your parents christened you.

How He Did It.

I am not at this time going to take up the fortune-telling mystery; but I shall content myself with pointing out how I accomplished the wonderful "second sight" or clairvoyance, as it is better known, to the astonishment of far more intelligent minds than my own.

Come with me, then, as I enter a handsome private home on Morningside Avenue. Gathered there are about forty-three or forty-four eminent scholars to study the mysterious power of Ali Ben Hassan, who has been educated in English in Robert College, at Constantinople, and who has but recently come to this country.

With turban on my head and Oriental costume about me, I step from the taxicab that conveyed me and march into the dimly lighted room, accompanied by my American guide. I am led to the front of the apartment and seated on a high chair. I place my hands to my eyes, rub my temples, and then appear to fall into a trance, being but barely caught by my guide and propped up again. A member of the audience then volunteers to blindfold me, which is done very carefully, for I must not see with my eyes, but merely with my subconscious soul.

My guide goes to the back of the room and says, "I speak, Ali. Have you your second sight? Please tell me what this is?"

Very quickly I answer, "There appears to me a hat."

"Right. Hear me now. Please watch me carefully. See this? I ask you to describe it."

A Watch.

"You hold in your hand a watch."

"Now what kind? Be quick, please."

"It is of silver."

"What is the number? Look carefully. Are you ready? Tell us then."

"The number is 62,816."

And so on the questions and answers went, and everything correct to the minutest detail. A doctor who was present proclaimed the results marvelous—that Ali Hassan was a unique specimen for scientific research. Several motions were made, seconded and carried unanimously, that the results of the experiment be sent to various psychical societies and leaflets be printed with a full and detailed description and mailed to leading authorities in this country and abroad.

Really, when I doffed my turban and sank down to a good hearty laugh with my "guide" later on, I once again had occasion to lament on the credulity of my neighbors. The second sight of all All Ben Hassan consisted of nothing but a good memory on the part of myself, an amateur investigator into the frauds of mystery.

My friend and I had arranged a code, as follows: Our questions would tell the answer to what they were asking, by the manner in which they were worded. The first letter in each sentence spelled out the answer; but if we had gone no further, this might easily have been detected. So we turned the alphabet topsy-turvy and made H stand for A, T stand for B, S stand for C and so on. For instance, look at the first question that was put to me:

The Solution.

"I" being the first word uttered, suggested "H." "Have" in the second sentence, suggested "A." "Please in the third sentence, suggesting "T"—the three together making "hat."

I can not even begin to show you the further details of the code, which went still deeper, and covered every possible article, description, date, color, metal, etc. We had even gone so far as to vary our code by different signals, and had single words mean fixed things. So that if, perchance, some one began to get the system, we would throw him off the scent. For instance, the second variation made "Say what stone this is" meant diamond. "Please tell me what this stone is" meant emerald, and so on. "Say what country is represented here' would indicate America, while "Please tell me what country is represented here" would indicate Spain.

There is no doubt but the memorizing of these codes is remarkable, and on that basis may be paid for. But I cannot understand why thousands will continue to believe that a strange, unseen power is possessed by these so-called clairvoyants who flourish and grow rich on money defrauded from the credulous pleasure-seekers who frequent the resorts.

One more incident on clairvoyancy: Some time after the All Ben Hassan episode, a number of those who had been present were invited to investigate that wonderful gentleman again at a friend's home in Brooklyn. One of the scholars had sufficiently awakened by this time to declare that he thought it was possible the manner in which the questions had been asked had suggested their answer. At this most of the others arose in anger and laughed scornfully at the man who could show himself so skeptical in the face of such conclusive evidence. The "guide" was very much aroused and said he feared this statement would cause Ali to refuse to talk again. (This manner of procedure is generally followed when someone gets on the trail.) Nevertheless, to prove that the charge was preposterous, Ali would allow anyone to ask the questions and he would answer them!

Therefore, to the amazement of all, this was done, and the results were more bewildering than before. There was no doubt of it, Ali Ben Hassan was gifted with a remarkable supernatural sight. But the explanation is even simpler here than in the first incident. We were prepared for all emergencies. I had previously connected in the folds of my turban the end of a slender speaking tube that came close to my ear and extended from another room and was painted in the color of the wall. Hidden in the next room was another confederate, who looked through an opening in the draperies, held a powerful opera-glass to his eyes, and whispered the answers sweetly through the tube in my ear!

New Residents in Towns

By MRS. FRANK LEARNED

TACT, judgment and discretion are needed in order to make friends and acquaintances in a new place. Of course, when going to live in a strange town, where one has a few friends, cards may be sent, with the address, to the friends who reside in the town, as soon as one is settled, thus giving them an opportunity to call.

It may be that a bride is making her new home in a town where her husband's friends live. They have received cards for the wedding, or announcements of the marriage, and after they have called and their visits have been returned an interval of dullness may follow. If a few little hospitalities have been offered they may be returned in a simple way.

A new resident must not make advances, must not seem in haste to make acquaintances, must not make first calls on old residents, or send invitations of any sort to them until there has been an exchange of visits and some mark of hospitality has been shown by older residents.

It is well for a new resident to make allowances for an occasional breach of courtesy from well-intentioned persons. These have been known to send invitations to strangers within their gates without the preliminary of a formal call. This has been from carelessness, or the lack of knowledge of the laws of etiquette. A new resident, who may receive an invitation of a general nature from an old resident who has not called, need not stand too strictly on ceremony if by so doing the opportunity may be lost of meeting some pleasant friends. But a second oversight of that sort, from the same hostess, should not be overlooked, and one may well wait on one's dignity for the delinquent hostess to call.

Rules which apply in cities are altogether different from the rules in country neighborhoods or small towns. In a large city it is not the custom ever to make a first call on a new resident or near neighbor, unless a friend in common has requested one to do so. In the country, or in small places, old residents call on a newcomer if it is believed that an exchange of calls would be agreeable.

First calls should be returned within a week or ten days at least.

A THRILLING SHORT STORY

WITHOUT—ice and frozen snow, the bitter cold of a Russian winter. Within—the heavy scent of hothouse flowers, a soft rustle of silk as Natascha Alexandrovna waited breathlessly for the words that would decide her brother's fate.

They brought little comfort.

"I am distressed to be obliged to refuse your request," the general replied coldly, "but if your brother chooses to consort with revolutionaries he must take the consequences."

"He is only a boy, and the woman bewitched him," she urged, her heart sinking as he rose, saying coldly, "It is useless to press the matter further. I am powerless."

"Powerless!" she exclaimed, springing to her feet. "You, the all-powerful chief of police! You, who have so often assured me of your friendship! A word from you would set Boris free, and you refuse to speak it."

"Orders have been given that even I can not disobey," unmoved by her wrath as he had been by her distress.

"Then can nothing be done to save him?"

Vladimir Mirskoff looked at her for a moment, then, "There is a way, but you may not care to take it."

"Not care, when it is a question of saving my brother! Tell me quickly."

"A plot is being laid for the wholesale assassination of government officials, and a new form of deadly explosive has been smuggled across the frontier by a woman who, try as we may, we can not identify. If you could give us the name of one of the leaders Boris is free."

"You surely do not imagine that I could tell you," she exclaimed indignantly.

"No; but your admirer, Paul Goveski, can. He has friends among the Liberals."

"And you dare suggest that I should make him betray his friends?"

"It is the only way to save Boris from Siberia. I am powerless unless I have the name of one of these revolutionaries to give in exchange. After all, why should you have any scruples concerning men who preach murder as a trade?"

She wrung her hands in an agony of doubt, but before she could reply a servant entered to announce that his excellency Count Paul Goveski desired to know if madame would receive him.

"No, no. Say I am engaged; I can not see him."

"On the contrary," interposed Vladimir, "you must see him. Fate has sent him here to save your brother."

Natascha looked at him imploringly, then said, "I will receive the count," and as the man left the room, "Promise me Paul Goveski shall not suffer for his friendship with these men."

"Certainly," he replied. "Where may I wait for your answer?"

"In my boudoir," holding aside a curtain before a door.

"Remember, your brother's liberty, perhaps his life, rests in your hands," he whispered, and vanished almost as she turned to greet the Count.

"I trust I am not too early," he said, bending to kiss her hand. "You had my letter? I am all impatient for the answer."

"You do me honor," she replied, sinking into a chair. "Believe me, I am indeed grateful."

A Protestation.

"It is your love, not gratitude, I want," he pleaded. "Surely you have seen how I adore you. I would die to serve you."

"So others have said. I wonder how much such protestations are worth from you."

"Only try me and see."

"You tell me you love me," she said slowly. "There is no love without trust. What if I ask for a proof of that?"

"Ask what you will. I can deny you nothing."

"It will place your life in my hands."

"It is there already," Paul replied softly, bending over her. "I can not live without you."

"Rumor calls you Nihilist, conspirator," she said lightly, with a bewitching smile. "A woman's curiosity is proverbial. Is it true, and who are your confederates?"

He stepped back and gazed at her in astonishment too great for words. Then, "Madame, do you know what it is you are asking?"

"Why, certainly; a proof that you trust me."

"But this concerns others than myself. It is impossible."

"I thought so," scornfully; "strange how all men are alike, ready enough with words—unfortunately, I prefer deeds,' rising as if to bring the interview to an end.

"But not such as this?" he pleaded. "To betray those who have trusted their lives in my keeping would be a poor way of showing my love."

But she stood silent, her fingers nervously twisting the lace of her dress.

Paul Goveski watched her keenly, then going to an escritoire wrote a few words on a sheet of paper, folded it, and came slowly back, saying gravely, "Here is the name of our leader. The proof you have asked of my love."

Then, as she took it, he continued, coldly: "And now, madame, I bid you farewell. You have said love can not exist without trust, and so have given me the answer I came to seek."

"You are going?" she exclaimed, incredulously.

"Yes; love bought by dishonor is valueless," and with a low bow he walked to the door.

She flung aside the paper and, passing swiftly across the room, barred his way, saying brokenly: "No, no; you must not go like this. I did not really mean it. Forgive me," looking up at him beseechingly, with tear-laden eyes. For the question that had tormented her for so long was answered; she knew now that she loved him—that to lose him would be much worse than death itself.

"Then you were not really in earnest?" the sternness melting from his face.

"No," she protested eagerly, "I only wished to try. The paper shall be burned unread."

"I knew I could trust you," he replied joyfully. "Natascha, dearest, I, too, was but jesting. The name I wrote was my own." He stopped, for her face was deadly white and her eyes dilated with terror as she gazed past him into the room.

Turning, he saw Vladimir Mirskoff reading the fatal paper with a quiet smile of satisfaction on his face.

The chief of police carefully refolded the paper, saying, "Paul Goveski, I regret to be obliged to arrest you, but this leave me no choice."

"Indeed he is innocent," cried Natascha, imploringly. "It was only a jest."

A Last Appeal.

"A singularly unfortunate one."

"Why try to undo the effect of your work?" asked Paul, scornfully.

"No wonder you despise me," she said humbly. "Listen, Boris has been sent to Siberia unless I could obtain from you the name of one of the leaders in this plot. They are only assassins and deserve no mercy. But you showed me the baseness of the part I was playing. Indeed, I would have burnt that paper. Say you believe me?"

But her appeal left him unmoved, and his voice was as cold and hard as the ice in the streets outside as he his friends, would repent at the last moment? Never." Then addressing himself to Vladimir, "I suppose it is useless to tell you I have never belonged to any revolutionary society in my life? I suspected madame was being made a tool of, and wished to find out; that was all."

"Quite useless, and I should advise you think of a more plausible tale for your defense." Then to his hostess, "Madame, I wish you good evening."

But Natascha had regained her self-control. She was fighting against desperate odds for all that made life worth the living. Entreaty was useless. If the man before her was to be forced to relinquish his prey, other means must be used, and suddenly the inspiration came.

Turning to Vladimir, she said very quietly: "You spoke of a woman who had concealed a deadly explosive for charging bombs. What if I were to tell you her name?"

"Then you may ask what you will."

"My price is Boris's freedom and the destruction of that paper."

"You, a woman, to betray another woman!" cried Paul. "I refuse to be saved at such a price."

Twice Balked.

"And I refuse to pay it," added Vladimir, decidedly.

Natascha looked at him in dismay. "Refuse?"

"Yes. Why buy what I can have for nothing? Sent to prison as a suspect, you will soon tell me all I want to know."

"You scoundrel!" exclaimed Paul, and Natascha glanced at him gratefully as she said, "I will tell you now," opening one of the glass doors of the cabinet containing her famous collection of china fruit. "I am the woman, and here are the bombs."

The man stared at her, too surprised to speak, then Vladimir said stiffly, "Is this also some jest, madame?"

"It is deadly earnest," and, taking a china orange from its shelf, she held it carefully in both hands. "What is there to arouse suspicion in the fad of a society lady for collecting china fruit, and what safer place in which to store bombs than a drawing room frequented by the chief of police?"

"Enough of this fooling," he said, roughly. "I do not believe you," and he made a step toward her.

"Stop!" she cried, holding out the orange on the palm of her hand. "If you move I will convince you of the truth of my tale, only you are not likely to live to acknowledge your error."

"What do you want me to do?"

"Return that paper. Write an order for my brother's release and passports for the three of us by the midnight train to Paris."

"I refuse."

"Then as it is a choice between Siberia and death, I shall drop this at your feet, and there will be no one left to explain the accident that wrecked the house of Natascha Alexandrovna and involved the highly esteemed chief of police in so terrible a fate." Then, turning to Paul, "Have I not chosen well?"

"Yes; a thousand times sooner death with you than life if we are parted." And the look in his eyes told her that the peril in which they stood had blotted out all misunderstandings, but she only said calmly:

The Victory.

"Does your excellency still refuse?"

"I will do what you require," he yielded sullenly. "Put that thing away."

"When you have fulfilled my conditions. Give Paul Goveski his paper."

Vladimir complied, and Paul watched it burn while Natascha continued: "Now write an order for Boris' release and make out our passports." Then, when he had done so, "In return, if you give me your word to do nothing till midday tomorrow, I will leave my china fruit exactly as they are. You can search the house, and think what a sensation such a discovery will make, and how your cleverness will be applauded."

"I give it." And if looks could kill, she would have fallen dead at his feet.

"Then I need detain you no longer. But another time, your excellency, when you wish to make a tool of a woman, beware lest you burn your own fingers."

"You have got the better of me now," he replied, turning to go, "but sooner or later my turn will come, and then—" The pause that followed was more expressive than words.

As the sound of his footsteps died away, Natascha placed the orange on a table and burst into a fit of hysterical laughter, exclaiming, "To think that two men could be so easily deceived!"

"Natascha, what do you mean?" Paul asked.

"It was your danger inspired me. I was desperate," she replied, taking the orange in both hands and giving it a slight twist, when the two halves fell apart, and she held them out for her lover to see they were empty of all save air. "If only I could see Vladimir's face to-morrow when he finds those deadly bombs are no more dangerous than this china orange!"

Up-to-Date Jokes

A man-of-war was lying off Gibraltar, and permission was given to the men to go ashore for the day. The sailors amused themselves in various ways, among others by riding about on donkeys; and their want of experience in this line caused much merriment. An officer, observing one of the men sitting very far back on the animal, instead of in the usual position, called out:

"I say, Jeck, get up more amidships!"

With an injured air he replied: "Well, sir, this is the first craft that ever I commanded in my life, and it's hard indeed if I can't ride on the quarterdeck if I like."

Bismarck was on one occasion pressed by a certain American official to recommend his son for a diplomatic place.

"He is a remarkable fellow," said the proud father. "He speaks seven languages."

"Indeed!" said Bismarck, who had not a high opinion of linguistic acquirements. "What a wonderful head waiter he would make."

Alas, That Poor Egg!

"Waiter!" From the table by the window the voice of an elderly gentleman rose in accents wrathful. "Waiter!"

"Yes, sir," replied the much harassed one, hastening forward.

The elderly gentleman, overcome by his emotions, made several vain efforts at articulate utterances. Then:

"Take this egg away!" he roared. "Take it away!"

"Yes, sir," said the waiter obligingly, as he glanced wistfully at the offending article. "And—and what shall I do with it, sir?"

"Do with it?" The outraged customer rose menacingly from his chair. "Do with it?" he bellowed fiercely. "Why, wring its neck!"

True Business Instinct.

Topham's was the smartest emporium for miles around. You had to be the last word in "go" before a situation was obtained in that establishment. Keen business men filled every post.

One afternoon when trade was in full swing an unfortunate customer fell down the first floor stairs.

"Help!" he groaned in agony. "I do believe I've broken my leg!"

A shopwalker immediately flew to his side.

"Broken your leg, sir?" he inquired sympathetically. And then, in sharp, clear tones: "Cork legs! Third counter to the right, sir! Forward, Miss Davis!"

Stolen Fruit Not Sweeter.

A benevolent old man invited a number of small boys from the slums to spend a day at his beautiful old-world country home, and among the many good things which he provided for them was a bountiful and wondrous feast of strawberries and cream.

As the day drew to a close, wishing to impress the lads with a lesson, their benefactor asked:

"Now, suppose, instead of being invited here to eat my strawberries, you had come and helped yourself when nobody was looking, would you have enjoyed the fruit so much?"

"No, sir."

"Ah! And why not?" asked the old gentleman, inspired with a new faith in young Britain's honesty.

"'Cause, sir," came the sad but prompt reply, "we wouldn't 'ave 'ad no cream with 'em!"

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DON'T TRY.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a boy 18 years of age. As I was walking on the street the other day I saw a girl whom I hadn't seen before, but I loved her very much the moment I saw her.

What I want to know is how to get friends with that girl.

ALBERT.

Love at sight is such a pretty dream it is a pity to spoil it by getting acquainted.

You are 18—the age to be devoted to making a man of yourself. Bend your energies in that direction, and let love alone for a few years. Under no circumstances should you attempt to form an acquaintance with a girl you happen to meet on the street.

CERTAINLY NOT.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am very much in love with a boy. I am 17 and he is 18. He has kissed me a great many times, but now he has stopped writing me, and I have not heard from him for some time. I cried all last night about him.

Would you write him?

NANCY.

You have been very foolish, and his coldness is no more than what you should expect.

Do not write him, and the next time you have a lover, refuse to be so generous with marks of your affection. I trust this experience will prove to you that you are too young to have a lover.

Do You Know---

Failing in her plan to end her life, after seven different attempts in as many months, Laura Griffith, of Atlantic City, has developed a more cheerful view of life, and has signed on as a bareback rider with a circus. As a persistent fatalist, Laura, who is about 18 years old, holds the record. She has tried the poison cup, the glittering dagger, and the more prosaic method of taking a running start and butting her head against a telephone pole. So regularly was she admitted to the city hospital during the past year that a cot was labeled "Laura Griffith" and was held in readiness for her at all hours of the day and night.

Should the measure now before the French Parliament become law it will not be the first occasion on which it has been attempted to make gambling illegal in France. In the thirteenth century St. Louis interdicted all gambling, even prohibiting the manufacture of dice, and Louis XIV was responsible for no fewer than 20 anti-gambling ordinances. But the monarch gave a bad example to his subjects, since every variety of card game known at the time was eagerly and openly played at Versailles.

Five brothers and sisters, named Harris, whose united ages total 438 years, met at a birthday party at Radnage, Bucks. Their ages are 96, 92, 88, 82 and 80, an average of more than 87. Five other members of the same family, who have died, were aged 93, 89, 88, 87 and 77.

Among those recently ordained by the Bishop of Durham was the Rev. A. M. Smith, M. A., to the curacy of Houghton-le-Spring. Mr. Smith has been totally blind for 20 years, but has succeeded in taking his degree at Oxford. The Bishop of Durham appointed him to read the Gospel in the ordination service, which he did from his Braille Bible. His complete Braille Bible consists of nearly 6,000 pages, fills 39 volumes, and occupies a shelf seven feet long.

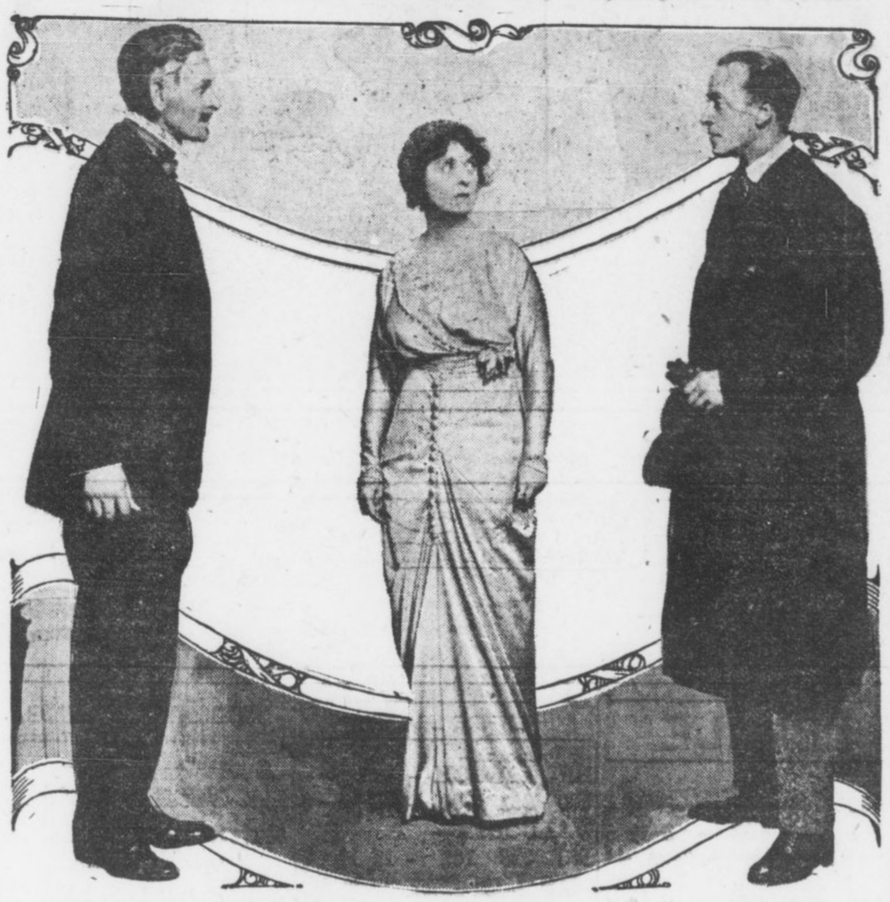
The GHOST BREAKER

By Charles W. Goddard and Paul Dickey

THE PRINCESS INTRODUCES JARVIS TO THE DUKE



"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I am bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

The Most Exciting Serial of the Year.

TO-DAY'S INSTALLMENT.

"Spooks!" grinned Jarvis, appreciatively. He was beginning to be glad he had come. But he saw no answering gleam in the young woman's sober face.

"Call it anything you like," she replied soberly, "but the castle is haunted—just the same. My grandfather was one of the wealthiest nobles in Spain. He died suddenly, leaving everything to my father, his only son and heir. When my father went to take possession of his estate in Segurn the town was full of weird stories of uncanny happenings. The castle was deserted—every one had fled and all told of something in armor that stalked the halls at night. My father laughed at the silly natives and said he would go into the castle and show them how foolish their fears were. He went—and," the girl's voice trembled slightly, "and he was never seen again."

"Hm!" ejaculated Jarvis, with interest. "What happened to him?"

The Princess shook her head and her dark eyes grew very large. "No one knows. He disappeared—vanished utterly—without the slightest clew. Since then two others have disappeared."

"Well, why don't you keep out of there?" he demanded, half seriously. "What's the idea of teasing that spook, anyway?"

"But now my brother has gone in and they haven't heard from him!" Her eyes filled with tears. "That's why I haven't heard from him—why he hasn't answered my cables."

The Treasure.

With true chivalry the young man slightly turned his eyes away that he might not see the tears.

"Now, that's it!" he declared briskly. "You want me to go in and find your brother."

"Yes, that's it!" she cried eagerly. "Save my brother, but," she added quickly, "you must know about this locket. It tells where to find the treasure."

Jarvis ran his other hand through his hair and stared at the trinket in bewilderment. They were coming too fast for him, as he had said.

"Treasure! What is treasure?"

"My grandfather is known to have converted all his wealth into Spanish gold," she explained, "to finance a colonization scheme in Cuba. It amounted to about a million dollars in your money."

The knight whistled. "A million! Eh? How long ago did this happen?"

"Fifteen years ago—and nobody has found it."

Jarvis apparently arranged all these facts in his mind and then inquired:

"Why did you come to America?"

The Princess held up the locket. "A part of the story was that a plan had been made, showing just where the treasure was secreted, but this plan could never be found. Quite by accident, I recently learned that this plan had been hidden in the back of this locket, and the locket, I discovered, had been sold and was in America. It was to find this locket that I left my brother and came to America. It was this locket that you saw last night."

"Then my work is," Jarvis summed up, "to find your brother and solve the mystery? All right! We'll explain to the Duke that you are taking me to Spain for no other reason than to solve this mystery. Let me see—in America we have Roosevelt, the trust-breaker; Farley, the strike-breaker—and why not, 'Jarvis, the ghost-breaker?' "

"Why, yes," smiled the Princess, uncertainly. She could not always tell when he was serious. "It might—why not? Carlos would believe almost anything of the Americans."

Her Secret.

"And will you tell him," he asked wickedly, "that you have made me a—er—what is it?—a vassal?"

Again the rich color sought the lady's dark face.

"I think not," she decided, shyly. "Not just yet."

He smiled at her confusion and pressed his advantage.

"By the way, your—er—just how should a vassal address his Princess?"

Dona Maria appeared to give the matter some consideration.

"Highness is correct," she told him, with some hesitation.

Jarvis studied this over before he pursued his quest for further information.

"Your Highness, a vassal doesn't really amount to much, does he? No—I thought he was a piker," he added ruefully.

"A piker?" queried Her Highness, puzzled. "You mean he carries a pike?"

"No, no—a piker is a tin horn."

"Tin horn?" echoed Dona Maria, more mystified than ever.

"Well," Jarvis began, desperately—habitual use of slang plays the mischief with classical synonyms—"a—a sort of pawn in this game of chess—along with you kings and queens and castles and—things. For instance," the light of fun returned, "could a perfectly good, honest, reliable, hard-working vassal work his way up and get to be a Duke—or a lord or—something like that?"

Dona Maria laughed softly. "You're an ambitious vassal, aren't you? I'm afraid you wouldn't be satisfied with being less than a king."

"A king, prince or—a bandit," he returned, meaningly.

"A bandit? And why a bandit?"

"A king might demand—a prince request—a bandit seize."

Dona Maria looked blank. "Seize what?"

The vassal drew a quick breath. "That which a mere vassal may only admire," he fairly blurted out.

Dona Maria was saved the necessity or reminding him that he was still a vassal by a knock which she seemed to expect.

"Sh-h, he is here. What shall I call you?"

The Duke Arrives.

"Warren, Mr. Warren," he whispered, glumly. He felt that he would without straining himself cultivate a man's size dislike for the exalted cousin.

The Princess opened the door. "Come in, cousin," she said sweetly. His Grace of Alva entered, but fairly shied like a spirited horse at the sight of the stranger.

"Oh, I'm intruding," he exclaimed, in a manner which said plainly: "What the dickens are you doing here? Get out!" This convinced Jarvis that he would eventually come to dislike the exalted cousin by the running foot.

"Allow me to present Mr. Warren," the Princess intervened in her most gracious manner. "I'm bringing him from America to solve the mystery of the castle. My cousin, the Duke of Alva."

Jarvis nodded easily. "Glad to know you."

"I am honored," returned the Duke, his manner plainly indicating that the honor was the other way around. "Interesting task you have undertaken. May I ask if that is your regular profession?"

His tone was a mixture of the condescendingly paternal and an aristocratic sneer, which those of first families consider the thing in dealing with their untitled inferiors. He did not mean to be especially offensive to the young man—it was merely the way he had been brought up.

"That is my business," replied Jarvis, outwardly unruffled. "Solving mysteries—looking up the family skeleton—hunting out spooks—what we call in America a 'ghost breaker.' "

"A strange calling," mused the Duke, eying the young man keenly. "Really, I never heard of anything more extraordinary."

To Be Continued To-morrow.

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE.

The scene of the story is laid in the Vanderlip Hotel, New York City. The Princess Maria Theresa of Segura, a beautiful Spanish woman, is suddenly awakened in her suite by the sound of pistol shots. She hears a man running down the hall. He crashes against her door, breaking the lock, and enters. She sees he is a tall, good-looking young man, dressed in evening clothes. He is carrying a revolver in his right hand, and blood is dripping from a wound in his left. He begs the Princess to hide him. She, moved by some indescribable impulse, decides that she will. She directs him to an inner room, and a few minutes later, when the hotel detective knocks on the door, she tells him she is all right and sends him away. The young man, who is Warren Jarvis, of Kentucky, comes out of his hiding place, and the Princess, for the first time, notices his wound. She is moved to sympathy and showers him with questions as to what has occurred. Jarvis tells her about a Kentucky feud between his family and another named Markham. He says he left Kentucky to avoid the feudists, but encountered one of them in the hotel, which explains the shots. The Princess declares she will help him, and then asks the stranger question, "Are you afraid of ghosts?" Jarvis laughs, but grows solemn when the Princess tells him she has dangerous work for him to do. She makes him swear allegiance, and creates him her "vassal." Then she tells him to get her trunk, which is going to be shipped to a steamship on which she sails to Spain the following day. First Jarvis tells her to telephone to his servant, Rusty Snow, a negro. The servant is instructed to procure passage for himself and Jarvis in the ship. Jarvis then prepares to get into the trunk, but first begins to question the Princess about herself.

Now go on with the story.

Julius' Happy Day

"IT'S perfectly awful and I don't understand it!" said Julius' mother, applying a very dainty handkerchief to her eyes.

"Disgraceful!" said Julius' father, emphatically.

Julius stood with a hangdog look, his eyes on the dusty stubbed footgear that had started out earlier in the day as carefully blacked shoes. There was a tear in his blouse and several rents were in his trousers and a general atmosphere of disrepute clung to him.

"He seems perfectly possessed," went on his mother, "to escape to the alley and hobnob with those young ragamuffins who make it their headquarters! Goodness knows, I wish we could move away from here! I had Arthur over especially to play with him! What did you do with Arthur?"

"Aw!" said Julius, with a growl. "I ditched him early! He's no good, honest, ma—he's a sissy!"

"Meaning that he is a gentlemanly, well-bred boy!" flashed Julius' mother. "You see?" to Julius' father, in despair.

His Games.

"What manner of amusements interested you in the alley?" inquired his father judicially of Julius.

"Aw," said Julius, "I met Fatty an' he said the gang was up in the barn where Lilkins keeps his horses, an' we went there and played train robbers till Slicker, he fell down the hole where the hay comes down, an' I fell down, too, an' Lilkins he comes in an' says we've broken the back of his best horse by falling on it, through the hole, and he'll be darned if——"

"Julius!"

"Well, you ast me, didn't you?" demanded Julius indignantly. "Anyhow, he said he'd be—that—if he'd stand for it, an' Fatty he yells like everything because he hasn't any parents an' lives with his aunt, and she's away workin' all day. So Lilkins can't do anything to him, I guess.

"An' I told Lilkins he didn't dast, 'cause we wouldn't buy any more groceries from him if he did, an' I wuzn't doing anything anyhow. An' it was an awful old horse. An' then Ginger—his father has a plumbing shop three blocks down—he said they was a pony in his barn, and we went and hitched it to a cart and then we drove."

"Drove!" shrieked Julius' mother. "With all the automobiles on the streets and everything! Where did you drive?"

"I dunno," said Julius. "We had a nice drive. We went clear over on the west side across the river. Only a policeman he said he'd arrest us if we kept stopping in the middle of the street to fix the harness. We had to tie it together. An' a lot of automobiles got backed up behind us and they were fierce, the way they talked! Ginger, he sassed them back.

"'Who d'you think owns this horse?' he said to 'em when they told us to get out of the way. 'Guess it's got a right on the road if it does eat oats instead of gasoline, smarty!' An' I saw the Mrs. Kingman you know in her electric——"

"Oh!" moaned Julius' mother. "To have the Kingsmans see my child in the grasp of a policeman and with those little ragged——"

"A man he got mad," Julius proceeded, "because the pony ate some bananas from the back of his push cart an' Fatty threw a stone at him and he caught me and shook me something fierce an' another policeman he said, 'Now, go on out of here, you kids, quick, before I run you in!' An' a boy on a bicycle got in our way coming home an' it was his fault, because we yelled at him and Ginger thought the pony'd broke his leg, but it was only skinned. It was a second-hand bicycle anyhow and we got away because the pony went faster than the boy could walk. I guess he'd skinned his leg, too.

No Bell.

"The street car that hit us only pushed us sideways and tipped us over an' it was the motorman's fault, because he didn't ring no bell. Anyhow, I didn't hear any. An' Ginger's father was awful mad. He was waiting for us. He said the pony's people only rented room in the barn an' it would be a wonder if they didn't sue him for damages. What's damages? I don't know what he did to Ginger, but Ginger yelled awful an' I came away then any how.

"An' it wasn't my fault that Mrs. Button's clothesline broke when I ran through her yard an' hit it. They didn't tie it up tight enough. An' the girl was mad when she saw the clothes all down! Honest, I didn't do nothin' father!"

"Julius," said his father, with awful sternness, "you march straight upstairs to bed, this minute!"

"Wh-what do you think?" quavered Julius' mother in despair as her son disappeared.

"I think," said Julius' father, with a broad grin, "that Julius had a good time for once in his life. However, it might be well to unload his superabundant activity on a summer resort farm this summer. Let's look up one somewhere."

The Bishop's Story.

Here is a story told by the Bishop of London. When he was in Toronto recently a member of one of his audiences told him that he had heard him speak fourteen years before in London and remembered only one thing he said.

"He told me that fourteen years ago," said the Bishop, "I related the story of an old woman who fell from a three-story window in the East End, struck her head and was picked up dead.

"He added that I had said I went to her neighbor and remarked: 'I am afraid Mrs. Jones was not prepared,' and that I had received this reply: 'Oh, yes; I know she was, because as she passed my window in her fall I heard her say, "Now for a bump!" ' "

Beauty Secrets of Beautiful Women

Christine Norman's Rules for the "Too-Thin" Woman

By LILIAN LAUFERTY.

CHRISTINE NORMAN is exactly the sort of girl you would be if you could choose—pretty, sweet, gracious, alert, honest with herself and sympathetic with all of life. And if you have seen "Peg o' My Heart" you would never guess it!

In that play she has to play the part of a girl whose cold, self-centered, unsympathetic nature makes life a burden for the dear little Irish cousin we all love—and all honor to the histrionic ability of the girl who portrays coldness and snobbishness so convincingly that the interviewer's heart sank at the thought of a chat with her. Exit the girl of the play, and enter Christine Norman and joy to the heart of the interviewer at the same time.

Miss Norman's manner is as wholesome and unaffected as her own pretty pink and white room, and her mind is as interestingly many sided as the vast array of vastly differing books that are so prevalent all about her room.

"Now, how could I have a beauty secret?" she laughed. Look at her pictures and you will sympathize with my thought that Heaven and the good fairies had been so kind that "beauty secrets" were scarcely needed.

"However, I have a very original trouble for these days," she went on, cheerily. "I have the unusual horror of getting too thin! Once I did become terribly thin—and I had to go on the milk cure, nothing but milk for seven weeks, and quarts and quarts a day all that time. Even now whenever I start losing I proceed to drink eight glasses of milk a day. Honestly now, aren't curves much prettier than angles? And when cubist types go out of style and women want to get back to normal I recommend the milk cure to their attention.

An Easy Cure.

"A milk cure is an easy thing for me to take, because I am not a particularly carnivorous animal. I believe firmly in eating vegetables in great quantities and eating very sparingly of meat. A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal for hot weather diet.

"But I really don't believe in extremes—enough sleep—eight hours for a woman who is using up her supply of energy in the strain of brain work; enough nourishing food, with chocolates most earnestly omitted; enough fresh air, enough play, and, above all, enough reading to keep you in touch with big thoughts, new ideas in the world's progress. With enough of all these things sanely blended and leavened with ambition to find out what you can do and energy to do it, we ought all have the beauty of clean, sane health, at any rate, ought we not?"

Answering question with question, I queried: "But for the beauty that allures the eye, don't you think we can all cultivate a bit of that over and above our natural dower?"

"Oh, yes," said Miss Norman, "I think we can, and we should, too. Now, after she is about 22, almost any woman's facial muscles begin to sag a bit. If she can afford a dollar a week, I think every woman should go to a good massesuse and have those muscles trained upward again. If not, I think one treatment and a careful observation of methods are well worth while. Then the purchase of a jar of good cold cream, and the woman can start muscle building on her own account.

"Some people think it so foolish, almost immoral, to try to save beauty. Now, would these very people wear suits that needed pressing and sponging and braid sewed on? Well, I think we should keep or bodies in at least as good trim as our clothes—clean and in the pink of well-cared-for condition.

Easily Acquired.

"Then if we are as sensible about learning what to do with our looks as we are about proudly developing any talent we happen to have, a reputation for beauty's charming sister-attractiveness—ought to be easily acquired. I know a very pretty girl who sometimes looks attractive quite accidentally, but only sometimes. She simply does not know whether her hair should be parted over her left eye or worn pompadour. She has no idea whether her hats should have tall quills in front or droopy bows at the back. A mirror, a little common sense and proper independence of fads would teach her the simple solution to what ought not be a puzzle at all.

"But truly, I don't think we can be a beautiful race until we give the generations beauty to inherit. Heredity to give you strength and power and beauty is the greatest beauty secret of all I am sure. Because with a fine heredity a healthy body is almost assured, and a fine mind and a strong character will be present too, and with these things the finest type of beauty will be easy to realize. Surely you think so, too?" concluded Christine Norman, lifting a rose-flushed face lit with great earnest eyes and pulsing with vitality that makes of her red-gold hair a beautiful aureole.

And surely we all must think that the finest type of beauty is a thing we all may strive toward—a healthy body glowing with spirit and soul.

I have the usual horror of getting too thin.

When I start losing I proceed to drink seven glasses of milk a day.

Curves are prettier than angles.

I believe firmly in eating vegetables in large quantities and meat sparingly.

A luncheon of vegetables, salad and fruit is my ideal.

I think every woman should go to a good masseuse.

Miss Christine Norman.

HOLLIDAY LEADS JORDAN IN RACE FOR LOVING CUP

FOR the first time since The Hearst Sunday American and Atlanta Georgian started its great contest to determine the most popular player in the Empire State League, Valdosta fans have been put on the defensive. "Goat" Holliday, the star first sacker on the Waycross team, with hundreds of votes yesterday, surged, galloped and jumped into the lead in this paper's contest for the beautiful loving cup—the greatest tribute the fans can bestow on a player.

Waycross fans are sending in coupons at a wonderful rate. The hero of the Waycross team has had his name written oftener in the past few days than the President of the United States. And is not the most popular player in the Empire State League fully as great in the eyes of the fans as the President in this great League?

Jordan Off Stride.

Otto Jordan was off his stride yesterday—in the voting, we mean. But it is a sure bet that his followers will come to his rescue before long and again put him on top. They probably have been so used to seeing him in the lead that they took it easy for a day, while the Holliday fans were just waiting for such an opening. However, the lead held by the Waycross player is but slight, in fact, but a few hundred votes separate the first five men in this hot race.

It was just a couple of days ago when Champlin, the Thomasville player, was second. Now he is fourth, but to-morrow night might find him on top. The contest is certainly a wonder for excitement and the Popularity Editor is one busy man these days.

Votes Pile in for Walter.

While votes were piling in for Holliday yesterday a certain young gentleman, Will Walter, of Brunswick, hopped into third place with both feet and is now on the heels of the two leaders. This man really received the most votes yesterday, but he was so far behind that he was unable to make his jump into the lead and send the entire contest topsy-turvy. He has an excellent chance, though, to be there any day now, and we would advise his followers to keep up their great work.

Baby Wilder, the Cordele twirler; Manchester, of Americus; Pat Murphy, and Harry Champlin, of Thomasville; "Wild Bill" Clark, manager of Waycross, and W. Morse, of Valdosta, were others who received a large number of votes yesterday.

One Grand Contest.

Yes, this is one grand contest for every one but the Popularity Editor. The votes are simply pouring in and he is having a fine time revising the standing of the leaders.

This does not mean, however, that the fans are to quit now. Keep up your good work and put your player into the lead. Every player in the list published below has a good chance if his admirers will only get busy.

Clip the coupon in this paper. Get your friends to help you. When you have a large batch of votes, fill them in and mail them to the Popularity Editor, Atlanta Georgian, Atlanta, Ga. If you are not a member in this contest join at once. It's not too late. A little hustling will put your favorite right in the hunting. Vote today.

MATTY PILOTS PITCHERS NOW IN NATIONAL

By Damon Runyon.

IN the gloaming of his baseball years, "Old Ironsides," otherwise known as Chris Mathewson, finds himself in the peculiarly public position of leading the pitchers of the National League. When he tore off Brooklyn on Saturday afternoon the great checker expert brought his number of victories up to fifteen, as we figure it, against four defeats.

There are one or two younger and more agile hurlers ranked ahead of the Hadji of the Polo Grounds in the percentage table, but they are fellows like Burke, of St. Louis, with a single victory assessed with a defeat. Edward Konetchy, of St. Louis, has a perfect average, having appeared as a hurler in one game, and winning same, but as a pitcher Edward is one of our best known first basemen.

Ying Ling, the Chinese laundry ticket, had evaded the ignominy of defeat up to the Fourth, and had compiled four victories, but "Old Ironsides" is now the real pitching pilot of Tom Lynch's circle, which is a terrible thing at his time of life.

Mathewson has appeared in about twenty-two games. He saved two or three, for which he receives no credit. He is now doing more and better work than any other member of the Giant staff. His judicious conservation of his pitching arm is indicated by the fact that he has allowed more hits than any slabman in the league, with the exception of young Griner, of St. Louis, who has been whaled for 172 blows out of 19 appearances.

However, "Old Ironsides" still possesses that amazing faculty of putting the ball where he wants to that gave him the name of "King Control." He has dished out less than a dozen bases on balls, which puts him in a class by himself in that respect.

* * *

IT'S a tough year for the grizzled veterans of the mound. Over in the American League Eddie Plank, the Mathewson of the sidewinders, is considered the pitching leader of the Johnson organization, even though young Boehling, of Washington, tops him in the percentage table.

* * *

THE evil Fates have slipped William Dahlen, the abhorred Black Spot, and pronounced a Dutch Cuss on Brooklyn. The Jinx that used to live in Philadelphia has taken up a residence in Flatbush. When the subject of conversation is hard luck the iniquitous Dahlen is entitled to raise his voice above all others.

Charley Stengel, Bill Fisher and Bob Fisher have all been swept from the Dodger line-up in a few brief hours. Zach Wheat was already in the hospital when the others began to arrive, and Napoleon Rucker was said to be concealing a sore shoulder from public gaze, although he worked Saturday.

The Brooklyn catching staff is now a smoking ruin of a once imposing institution, while the Brooklyn outfield is stripped to the bone—meaning no offense to Messrs. Callahan, Moran, Hummer and Benny Meyers, at that. If you can imagine Murphy, Burns and Fletcher suddenly eliminated from the Giant line-up by accident, with the catching staff reduced to Mullaney, and with Christy Mathewson not at his best, then you can realize to some extent what has happened to the Dodgers.

* * *

CHARLEY M'DONALD, the Boston Braves' third baseman, who is just now leading the National lLeague in hitting, is in a way a protege of John J. McGraw. The Giant chief recommended the slugging youngster to Garry Herrmann, of the Cincinnati Reds, who bought him from the Dallas club, of the Texas League, and carried him along last year and part of this season. Then George Stallings took the boy at the waiver price on a tip from the newspaper men following the Giants the last time the New York club was in Boston.

McGraw first saw McDonald a couple of years ago at Marlin, the training ground of the Giants, when the third baseman and another member of the Dallas club named Thebo joined the Giants to get into physical condition for the Texas League season. McGraw had three ball clubs playing exhibition games in Texas that season, and he used McDonald and Thebo on one team. He had no permanent place for McDonald himself, but his strong recommendation of the youngster to Herrmann indicated that McDonald had made a good impression on him.

McDonald seems to be another Heine Zimmerman in point of hitting. In 1911, with the Dallas club, he hit .324 in 144 games although he displayed no unusual slugging ability with Cincinnati last season.

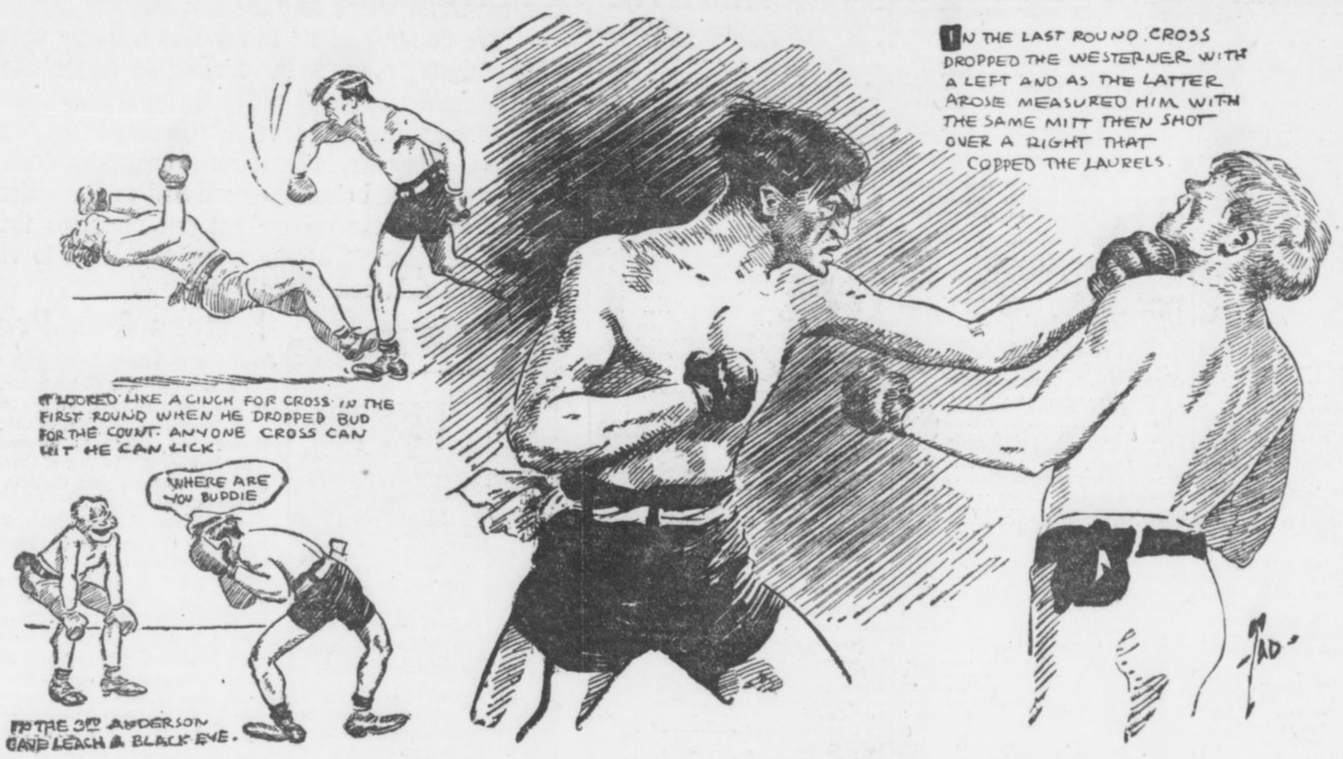
HOW THE CROSS-ANDERSON FIGHT LOOKED To TAD



RICHARDS WINS AGAIN; LONGER RACES FRIDAY

HAVING failed to "bust" the speed trust at the Atlanta Motordrome, said "rust" consisting of Wilmer Richards, aided and abetted by his Indian motorcycle, No. 23, by any scheme of importing machines or teaming up against him, the Atlanta Motordrome will try staging longer races.

On Friday night the feature race will be the Cracker Sweepstakes, named in honor of the local ball club. The exact conditions of this event have not been decided upon, but the final heat will be the longest ever run on the local track.

The idea of lengthening out the race is to give the endurance riders a chance. It is apparent that in the sprints only McNeil and Graves have a chance with Richards. Tuesday night McNeil lost a ker-plunker out of the flip-flop thatd isticates his Simms magneto and couldn't ride his Jap, while Graves' new motor developed the asthma, complicated with a catarrhal cough, and it wouldn't run either. So it was all Richards, and he romped in the Sweepstakes and the Purse, though they managed to keep him pocketed in both events long enough to produce some thrilling stuff.

Friday night Richards will find that sprinting ability is at a discount and endurance the thing. He will find the Twenty-Four-Hour Twins, Shields and Lockner, right up in the hunt, along with Renel and possibly a couple of others.

The riding in the Sweepstakes finals Tuesday night, up to the last couple of laps, was the most sensational that has been seen. For lap after lap the four riders swept around the track at terrific speed, with hardly a half-inch separating them. One swerve carried George Lockner up on the perpendicular boards, where he rode for an eighth of a lap, getting down again all right and staying in the chase, despite that terrifying experience.

The following is the summary:

WALTHOUR SWEEPSTAKES.

(Heats, 3 miles; final, 5 miles.)

First Heat—Billy Shields, first; Harry Swartz, second; Jock McNeil, third. Time, 2:16 3-5.

Second Heat—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second; George Renel, third. Time, 2:07 3-5.

Third Heat—Morty Graves, first; Henry Lewis, second; Harry Glenn, third. Time, 2:19.

Final—Tex Richards, first; George Lockner, second; Morty Graves, third. Time, 3:28 3-5.

MOTORDROME PURSE.

Heats, 2 miles; final, 4 miles.)

First Heat—George Renel, first; Henry Lewis, second; Freddie Luther, third. Time, 1:28 2-5.

Second Heat—George Lockner, first; Jock McNeil, second; Harry Swartz, third. Time, 1:32 3-5.

Third Heat—Tex Richards, first; Morty Graves, second; Billy Shields, third. Time, 1:29 2-5.

Final—Tex Richards, first; George Renel, second; George Lockner, third. Time, 2:57.

FOUR RIDERS ARE ARRESTED FOR SPEEDING ON TRACK

NEWARK, N. J., July 9.—Two officials and four riders were arrested after the finish of the five-mile motor-paced race at the Stadium Motordrome here last night. The riders arrested were Fred Hill and E. F. Root, both of Boston; Fred West, of San Francisco, and John King, of Newark. The latter pair rode the motorcycles that paced Hill and Root.

Inglis M. Uppercut, owner of the track and president of the Detroit Cadillac Motor Car Company, who furnished bail for the riders and officials, declared to-day that he would carry the case to the highest courts before giving up the attempt to hold motorcycle races.

An ordinance passed after the killing of seven persons when Eddie Hasha's machine plunged from the track here last September prohibits the exhibition of motorcycles for speed.

Four Ready to Battle Ritchie

Two Chicago Boys After Title Go

By Sol Plex.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 9.—You'd naturally think that with all of the battling that the merry old lightweight class did on the big holiday the air would be a bit cleared and that most of the arguments that made these battles possible would be wiped off the slate. Most of them are, but we are immediately presented with some new ones, and they are just as biting and as full of possibilities as were all the discussions previous to the July 4 battles. Just duck your head into a bunch of fight fans when they are fanning and ask the simple question: "Who's left now for Willie Ritchie to fight?" and you can get about as fine an argument as you ever expected in this life. It's worth trying, anyway, especially if you haven't any other use for your time.

* * *

CHICAGO fight fans never will get over the idea that two young men of this town by the lake haven't a grand chance with the Californian whose classic brow is now adorned with the mythical crown. Until Ritchie whips either Jack Britton or Packey McFarland, either or both, there always will be arguments here that he isn't really the greatest of them all at 133—or is it 134 pounds now?—and that Chicago never was treated fairly by the opponents for the champ. At least that's the way the local followers of the game, stanch to a man to either the North Sider or the man from Garfield Boulevard are arguing.

* * *

BRITTON disposed of Charley White's pretensions for the time being at least. The decision went against White, and though it might not have been a good one, as the astute Nate Lewis says, it is a decision nevertheless and already is in the record books for all time. Britton has a host of friends around town who believe he is really the greatest of them all at 133 pounds, and even the recollection of the shade that Packey McFarland got over him in ten rounds in New York doesn't chill their enthusiasm. There always is the weight alibi for them on that affair.

AND Packey McFarland's friends? Why, they simply wave you off and walk away if you attempt to say that Willie is to be mentioned on the same day with Packey. They simply won't have it that the coast lad has one chance in ten of whipping the pride of the yards, and it is well to be careful how far you attempt to carry your end of the argument, too. The question of weight isn't a strong one to bring up with them, either. And if you try to say that Packey, while great at ten rounds, doesn't fancy the marathon route they have on the coast, you are just as apt to get into trouble.

* * *

AFTER sizing up the situation how is one going to get away from the Leach Cross end of the argument, either? How can any one figure him out of the running after his wonderful victory over the meteoric Bud Anderson—a victory so one-sided and decisive as to leave not the slightest doubt in anybody's mind? Cross deserves the highest praise for the remarkable showing he made in this battle, coming back as he did after a terrible slump some months ago, during which time it looked as if every man in the country who got a chance would whip one over on him.

* * *

DON'T forget that Freddie Welsh, the English champion, is very much in the running, too. Nobody has any right to count him out of it simply because he is a Briton and comes from a country that hasn't produced a good heavyweight since Charley Mitchell's day. We can not see nineteen out of twenty of the British fighters, but here's one that stands out a mile or so, and if he ever gets a chance at the topliners he's going to prove it, too.

* * *

SO, from the general appearance of things at the present time, if Willie Ritchie anticipates following up his great work and giving some of the other chaps a crack at his crown there are at least four of them who are capable of giving him the merriest kind of a game. Surely Leach Cross is the card out there now, Packey always has been, Welsh ought to be, and Britton might be made one.

RINGSIDE NOTES

Ad Wolgast has again put his name on the fighting map. Tom Jones, the ex-lightweight champion's manager, says he will give Willie Ritchie a $5,000 side bet if the present title-holder will give his protege a return match. There are still many fans who would like to see the pair get together again.

James Coffroth is hot after a match between Leach Cross and "Harlem" Tommy Murphy for his Frisco arena. Leach, however, is holding Coffroth up for $10,000 win, lose or draw. The Eastern boy's large demand will probably block the match.

Charlie White will probably be seen in action in New Orleans soon. Promoter Tortorich has offered White a match with the winner of the Johnny Lore-Frankie Russell match at the Pelican City Sunday. Nate Lewis, manager of White, is considering the proposition.

Promoter Tom McCarey expects to close a return bout between Jack White and Johnny Dundee for this month. The pair clashed at the Vernon arena about three weeks ago and put up a corking mill. Joe Levy, manager of Rivers, is also handling White.

A right cross seems to be Willie Ritchie's most deadly wallop. It was this punch that defeated Ad Wolgast and also put Joe Rivers out. Fans are wondering what the effect the punch would have on Leach Cross.

Frankie Conley, the veteran bantamweight, is still traveling around the country picking up small purses. Frankie was billed to box in Houston, Texas, on July 4, but the authorities refused to stand for the bout and arrested both principals.

* * *

Jim Flynn threatens to retire from the boxing game. The Pueblo fireman says he will make his last fight against Gunboat Smith at New York in August. Flynn certainly has had an interesting career in the ring.

Tommy Walsh, well-known boxing promoter, fight manager and referee, writes that he is going to take George "Knockout" Brown, the Chicago middleweight, to the coast. Walsh thinks the K. O. party would make a strong hit over the derby route. He is willing to send his protege against Klaus, McGoorty or any of the other tough 158-pounders.

* * *

Charley Ledoux is picking out a pretty tough customer when he tackles Kid Williams at Los Angeles, Cal., on July 15. Williams has already defeated Eddie Campi and has held Johnny Coulon to a draw at New York. On the other hand, Campi recently shaded Ledoux in a 20-round go at McCarey's arena.

* * *

Terry Nelson, Meyer Pries, Kid Young and Mike Saul are still waiting for the next boxing show to be staged here. All are hungry for a fight as well as some square meals.

* * *

Danny Morgan, manager of Britton, says he will let Jack fight any lightweight in the world, the winner to meet Ritchie in a championship bout. The talkative manager does not bar any of them. "Welsh, Cross, Murphy and Wolgast all look alike to us," says Daniel.

COULON WILL BE READY TO BOX ON LABOR DAY

CHICAGO, July 9.—"I sure will fight on Labor Day," declared Johnny Coulon, the bantamweight champion, who is at his home here to-day. The title-holder is slowly regaining his strength, following his week's stay in a local hospital where he was treated for stomach trouble.

YEARNING.

Oh, to be a yachtsman
And with the yachtsmen roam,
And, while the breeze disturbs the seas,
To punish lots of foam!

Oh, to be a yachtsman,
Or else a yachtsman's brother,
And while the spray is wild and gay
To say: "Let's have another!"

Oh, to be a yachtsman
When waves are mad and free,
And to the crowd remark aloud
"The next one is on me!"

Oh, to be a yatchsman
When spray is in the air,
And watch the brine while I recline
Upon a rocking chair!"

Oh, to be a yatchsman
And scorn the bounding billows,
And talk of sport while I resort
To several sofa pillows!

Oh, to be a yatchsman!
A merry life is his.
He sits beside a flowing tide
And says: "Another fizz!"

As we understand it, Joe Rivers' code in life runs thusly: "It is better to give than to receive."

As far as punishment is concerned, Mr. Rivers is one of our best little givers, but as a receiver he is null and void.

If Duke Kahanamoku were only a ball player Hugh Jennings would buy him up in one 1-500th of an hr.

Looking over Mr. Jennings' list of athletes, one is led to suspect that he is a disciple of one of those new-fangled languages.

If Mr. Poe had lived at this late date he might have been a Tiger instead of a poet. Mr. Jennings then could boast of managing a House, a Dauss and a Souse at one and the same time.

Freddie Welsh once won a decision over Willie Ritchie, but the guy who takes candy from a baby can't always do it after said infant grows up.

We think just as little of Mr. Ritchie's pugilistic ability as we ever did, but we have learned that he is one game guy. And, as Henry James might say, yagot tahandit to a game guy.

Artie Hofman has been sold to Nashville, leading one to suspect that Fred Clarke has a fearful grudge against him.

FABLE.

Once upon a time there was a college ball player on whom Connie Mack did not have a mortgage.

Having picked McLoughlin to win that tennis affair, we shall now pick Cincinnati to win the world's series. There is nothing like being consistent.

If we read aright from Benton Harbor, Doc Roller and Charlie Cutler are liable to be sued for plagarizing Humid Kalia Pasha's stuff.

It is said that the heat in Benton Harbor during said wrestling match was terrific. This accounts for the fact that a crowd of otherwise sane citizens became excited.

Even a horse has a sense of shame. For instance, one of them dropped dead on the Porter race track.

Leach Cross practices dentistry only in New York, but he could not refrain from knocking one of Anderson's teeth out. Leaches, that's a business man.

There was a man in our town
Who always picked the winner,
To buy himself a dinner.
And yet he never won enough

New Ring Star in Papke's Town

McMahon After Go With Smith

By Ed W. Smith.

CHICAGO, ILL., July 9.—Illinois has another fighting champion, but doesn't know it. At least this is what Tom McMahon, of Spring Valley, says, and he is in deadly earnest about it, too. Tom himself is the man referred to, and he believes that he has a good chance with any of the heavyweights. As a matter of fact, he has more than held his own with Gunboat Smith in a ten-round contest, and cites the fact that Smith has been diplomatically dodging and backing ever since a return encounter was suggested.

* * *

TOM passed through the city the other night on his way to his home town to take a little rest from the arduous campaigning that he has been going through in the East during the last nine months. You've heard of Spring Valley, haven't you? It's the town made famous by the Billy Papke wallop and remained on the athletic map until one day Bill decided that the place was hardly big enough for him and moved on to Kewanee. Not much of a change, you suggest? Perhaps not, but at any rate, it removed Spring Valley's most valuable advertisement, and now Tom purposes putting S. V. back on the map. McMahon is under the management of Jimmy Dime, of Newcastle, Pa., and during his Eastern campaign always was known as a Pittsburg man because he fought so often there at Dime's Club. He wants the whole thing changed now.

* * *

TALKING of his career in a modest way Tom said that Smith never had a thing on him, and that while one of the Gunboat's "Long Toms" loosened a whole jawful of teeth during their engagement it didn't matter much, as Tom has a new set now that are unloosable. "They've promised to give me a match with Smith some time during the fall," Tom said. "I've hopes that they'll keep their promise, but I don't care to box any more till September, as I intend to remain all summer at home. I may go through with a July 15 match at Peru with Marty Cutler, but I don't know yet."

* * *

TOM is a likable young fellow and looks as if he possessed tremendous power in that big frame of his. He weighs at the present time exactly 200 pounds, fully clothed, but says that it would not take much work to fit him for an encounter. His best fighting weight is 180, which Tom thinks is fully enough; if a man is only good enough. Billy Papke is Tom's friend, and during the latter's sojourn in France got Tom a match with Bombardier Wells. But there was only $1,000, and a single steamship ticket in it for Tom, hence he decided to remain at home. Tom isn't sorry for this, although he thinks he could have whipped Wells about as easily as did some of the others.

* * *

AND speaking of Wells brings to mind the fact that he is rematched with Georges Carpentier, the French star, for a contest some time in the near future. The match was made at a dinner given by the new editor of Sporting Life of London and was attended by many of the sporting celebrities of the big city. The idea was mainly to so jolly the French star and his manager that they would sign articles for a return engagement. It had the desired effect, for the men signed.

* * *

INTERESTING indeed are some of the English impressions of Carpentier. Here is what "B. B." in Sporting Life says of him in part: "I can not remember a more extraordinary, a more impelling, personality in boxing than Carpentier. For something of a paradox is he; a Frenchman—and be it noted, a boy, not yet twenty years of age—who is cold, all phlegm; absolutely unemotional, though outside the ring he has all the charm and grace and vivacity of his countrymen. He has a manager, one Francois Descamps, a voluble, excitable, bubbling person, so much quicksilver; the two are the greatest opposites I have bumped against. It would seem that it were ordained that the two were hitched together so as to strike a contrast altogether astonishing—Carpentier, a boxer, a fighter, if you will, pale, tense, Descamps, pinked with color, debonair, laughing; above all, a manager to the fingertips."

JOE RIVERS NO QUITTER, SAYS WILLIE RITCHIE

SAN FRANCISCO, July 9.—"Is Rivers a quitter? Did he dog it? Was he knocked out?" interrogated Lightweight Champion Willie Ritchie, in a statement this afternoon, when told of reports that the Los Angeles boy showed the white feather in their bout on July 4.

"Well, you can say for me that when Rivers took that right in the jaw and that punch in the stomach in the eleventh round he was out," said Ritchie. "And he stayed out until after the count of ten. Rivers did not leave the ring for six or eight minutes. When, soon after the knockout I went to his corner to console him, he was still out. He did not know who I was.

* * *

"QUITE a minute later in the dressing room Rivers came to me and said, 'You beat me fair and square, Willie. You are the lightweight champion. You are the greatest fighter in the world.'

"Anyone who says Rivers quit doesn't know what he is talking about. He put up a hard, game fight."

While Ritchie has made no definite plans for the future, it is likely he will accept a brief theatrical engagement lasting about four weeks and then will be off to the mountains for about a month. He will draw $720 a week.

* * *

RITCHIE has not the slightest idea who his next opponent will be. He expects that an effort will be made to match him with Leach Cross, and if the inducements are right, will accept.

Freddie Welch, the English champion, also is after him and as Vancouver, B. C., promoters have offered the champion a big guarantee to meet the Briton there early in September, Welch stands more than an even chance of getting the first crack.

Closed Bank's Affairs To Be Investigated

WASHINGTON, July 9.—Acting Comptroller of the Currency Kane contemplates no delay in learning whether criminal proceedings should be instituted against officials of First-Second National Bank of Pittsburg, closed by his order several days ago.

Two lines of inquiry will be pursued at once—to learn whether the bank published a false statement of its condition July 5, the other to find whether the bank has been making "dummy" loans.

Duel Fatal to Cuban General; Fear Riots

Special Cable to The Atlanta Georgian.

HAVANA, CUBA, July 9.—General Armando Riva, chief of the Cuban national police, who was shot during a political argument on the plaza Monday night, died to-day. A charge of murder was lodged against General Ernesto Asbert, Governor of the Province of Havana, and two others.

Troops were placed in all the principal streets for fear of an outbreak of political riots after news of Riva's death became public.

De La Barra's Place Given to Secretary

Special Cable to The American.

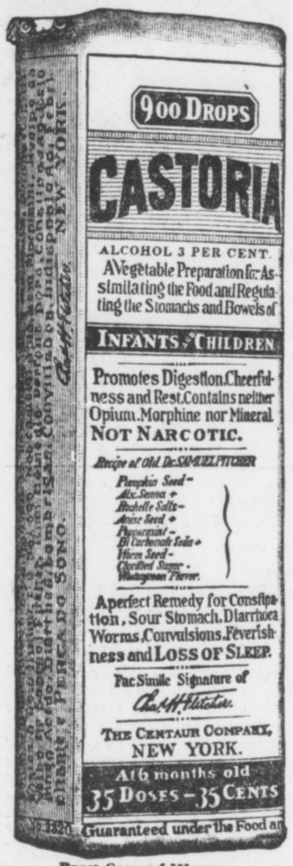
MEXICO CITY, July 9.—The portfolio of Foreign Affairs in the Mexican Cabinet to-day was offered to Frederico Gamboa, the post having been made vacant by the resignation of Francisco De La Barra. Gamboa was formerly Undersecretary for Foreign Affairs.

Senor De La Barra plans to leave for Italy next week. He will meet Porfirio Diaz, former dictator, while abroad.

Save the Babies.

INFANT MORTALITY is something frightful. We can hardly realize that of all the children born in civilized countries, twentytwo per cent., or nearly one-quarter, die before they reach one year; thirtyseven per cent., or more than one-third, before they are five, and one-half before they are fifteen!

We do not hesitate to say that a timely use of Castoria would save a majority of these precious lives. Neither do we hesitate to say that many of these infantile deaths are occasioned by the use of narcotic preparations. Drops, tinctures and soothing syrups sold for children's complaints contain more or less opium, or morphine. They are, in considerable quantities, deadly poisons. In any quantity they stupefy, retard circulation and lead to congestions, sickness, death. Castoria operates exactly the reverse, but you must see that it bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher. Castoria causes the blood to circulate properly, opens the pores of the skin and allays fever.



Exact Copy of Wrapper.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. A. F. Peeler, of St. Louis, Mo., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in many cases and have always found it an efficient and speedy remedy."

Dr. Frederick D. Rogers, of Chicago, Ill., says: I have found Fletcher's Castoria very useful in the treatment of children's complaints.

Dr. William C. Bloomer, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: In my practice I am glad to recommend your Castoria, knowing it is perfectly harmless and always satisfactory.

Dr. E. Down, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria in my practice for many years with great satisfaction to myself and benefit to my patients."

Dr. Edward Parrish, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria in my own household with good results, and have advised several patients to use it for its mild laxative effect and freedom from harm."

Dr. J. B. Elliott, of New York City, says: "Having during the past six years prescribed your Castoria for infantile stomach disorders, I most heartily commend its use. The formula contains nothing deleterious to the most delicate of children."

Dr. C. G. Sprague, of Omaha, Neb., says: "Your Castoria is an ideal medicine for children, and I frequently prescribe it. While I do not advocate the indiscriminate use of proprietary medicines, yet Castoria is an exception for conditions which arise in the care of children."

Dr. J. A. Parker, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Your Castoria holds the esteem of the medical profession in a manner held by no other proprietary preparation. It is a sure and reliable medicine for infants and children. In fact, it is the universal household remedy for infantile ailments."

Dr. H. F. Merrill, of Augusta, Me., says: "Castoria is one of the very finest and most remarkable remedies for infants and children. In my opinion your Castoria has saved thousands from an early grave. I can furnish hundreds of testimonials from this locality as to its efficiency and merits."

Not Whether to Go to COLORADO But How to Get There!

That is the question. Everybody who can beg, borrow or steal the time for a vacation is going to Colorado this year.

Old Pike's Peak is flashing her wireless to every city and home. People are dreaming of camping tents in deep ravines and quaint summer homes on the mountainside. Men and women, young and old, are going by the thousands this year. And they all want to know the best way to get there. The best, surest and most comfortable route to Colorado is

Union Pacific
STANDARD ROAD OF THE WEST

—the road on which your vacation starts when the train starts—the road that makes Colorado an overnight trip and brings it within the reach of every home. Perhaps you have never thought of this before. Colorado has seemed to you so far away that only the fortunate people of leisure could go. Now the Union Pacific has brought it down to an overnight trip. And, such a trip! Such dinners! Such beds! Such open carriages, where you sit out-of-doors in the cool shade and Nature unrolls for you such a daylight and moonlight film as was never shown in any theatre!

This wonderful road is the only line to Colorado having the advantages of double tracks. Automatic Electric Block Safety Signals and dustless Sherman gravel all the way. On this route millions and millions of dollars have been spent for your luxury — this certainly is the only way to go.

STOCK 'CHANGE NECESSITY IN BUSINESS

Public Misjudges Wall Street Because It Does Not Explain Its Transactions.

By B. C. FORBES.

The New York Stock Exchange is not a den of wickedness. Its members are not a pack of financial wolves. The machinery of the Stock Exchange is absolutely necessary for the nation's welfare. No commercial country could be without a marketplace for securities, the tokens of wealth.

• • •

The public has misjudged the Stock Exchange largely because the Stock Exchange laid itself open to misjudgment. It did not try to put itself in the right light. It allowed itself, without protest, to be misunderstood.

• • •

But it is now anxious to receive fair play, to have its functions known, to let the public see inside it, so to speak.

• • •

I hear that the suggestion made in this column that a commission of brokers, office managers, bankers and others in close touch with the public and with investors be appointed is likely to be favorably acted upon without delay. The governors of the Stock Exchange by so doing would prove that they are in earnest in seeking to increase the usefulness of the institution and bring it thoroughly into harmony with public sentiment.

• • •

Several Governors have a dread that if corporations be subjected to additional regulations in regard to listing their securities many of them will object and refuse to seek the privileges of the institution.

• • •

The main reason why an increasing number of companies have kept away from the Stock Exchange is that the public has ceased to regard a Stock Exchange security as superior to an unlisted one. The listing of a stock has ceased to be viewed as a guarantee of its legitimacy. So disgraceful has been the handling of certain listed stocks that investors have lost faith in the ability of the Exchange authorities to enforce decency.

• • •

MAKE THE PRIVILEGE OF LISTING WORTH WHILE, MAKE IT A GUARANTEE OF FULL PUBLICITY, MAKE IT COVETED, MAKE IT STAND FOR SOMETHING, AND THEN INVESTORS WILL DRAW A SHARP DISTINCTION BETWEEN LISTED AND UNLISTED SECURITIES. THEY WILL LOOK UP TO THE STOCK EXCHANGE INSTEAD OF DOWN UPON IT.

• • •

How to bring about this transformation will be the problem of the proposed commission and the Governors. The Hughes Commission made several valuable recommendations, which have been adopted. A commission such as now outlined could go more deeply into the subject. It could make practical suggestions. It could look at the question both from the outside and the inside.

• • •

The small investor is the person to be attracted, to be cultivated, to be encouraged to patronize sound stocks and bonds. He is destined to become the backbone of American finance. His is the custom to be most coveted. On his treatment at the hands of corporations and brokers hang momentous issues.

• • •

Give him a square deal, safeguard him from needless losses, shield him from fraud, give him a good return on his capital, whet his interest in the welfare of business and the future of American finance—the future, even, of the whole Republic—will be immeasurably brightened. The small investor will then become a bulwark against destructive legislation, against all forms of confiscation. He will stand for and fight for justice. He will repel ruinous demagoguery.

• • •

George W. Perkins, in a letter to The Odd Lot Review, expresses forceful views on this subject. He writes in part:

Practical public ownership, that's what I would term it. A steady improvement in the average distribution of the nation's wealth—that is my view of the significance of the activity of the small investor. It is decidedly encouraging to see that the corporation activity of the country is being shared by an always increasing group of the population. To me it appears that the movement has only begun.

The time is coming when every man with even a few hundred dollars saved will put his surplus over the amount needed for an emergency into standard securities.

The progress of this movement means a great deal more than a mere increase in the number of a shareholders per corporation. It is an exceedingly important economic indication. If the problems are allowed to work themselves out in a natural way there will be no need for Governmental interference. To my mind, the steady increase in the number of stockholders in the corporations foreshadows genuine public ownership—not of the type in which the entire business and industrial system of the country is to be thrown into the political arena to the tender mercies of the spoilsman, but a practical method of distributing the natural prosperity.

The solution of the problem is to have the whole nation interested in the success of the great sound industrial and railroad enterprises.

• • •

What part is the New York Stock change that is coming. Is it to sink change that is coming? Is it to sink into obscurity? Is it to allow itself to die from inanition? Or is it to adjust itself to the evolution already under way and become a mighty power for progress along correct economic, financial and investment lines?

HEAVY BUYING OF JULY CAUSES GAIN

Report of Boll Weevil in Texas and High Temperatures Send Shorts to Cover.

NEW YORK, July 9.—Business at the opening of the cotton market was active and first prices were 3 to 8 points higher than last night's close. In addition to firm cables and liberal sales of spots at Liverpool the local market was influenced by reports that the boll weevil as made its appearance in every cotton growing county in Texas, while prospects for moderate temperatures over the belt were brighter.

The weather conditions overnight were favorable. Good beneficial rains fell over Arkansas, North Mississippi and Tennessee to-day, where needed. The buying continued aggressive, however, during the first hour, chiefly inspired on the rumor that Theodore Price is out with a bullish circular. Trading, however, was light. Offerings were light, resulting in prices advancing some 1 to 5 points over the initial level. Later an active selling movement dominated the market, causing a rapid decline. August, after displaying phenomenal strength, dropped from 12.13 to 12.03, within 3 points of the previous close. December declined from 11.41 to 11.34. The entire list during the late forenoon was 1 to 5 points over Tuesday's final.

During the afternoon session the market developed a steady tone, based on continued report of the boll weevil. There is a fear on the part of the bear element to sell in the face of the uncertainty just now as to what development from climatic conditions. The high temperatures prevailing in many sections are causing alarm. This resulted in light offerings, causing July to jump to 12.19; August, 12.13; October 11.53, and December to 11.46. The entire list held firm throughout the late session.

At the close the market was steady with prices at a net gain of 11 to 13 points from Tuesday's final.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New York: July, 12.09; August, 12.08; October, 11.45; January, 11.32.

Following are 10 a. m. bids in New Orleans: July, 12.42; August, 12.04; October, 11.52; January, 11.52.

HAYWARD & CLARK'S DAILY COTTON LETTER

NEW ORLEANS, July 9.—Weather developments overnight were particularly favorable. There was some danger of temporary heat spells in the northern belt, but these prospects have changed overnight in favor of showers and cooler weather, except in the southern half of Texas, where temperatures will remain stationary. Partly cloudy weather prevails and indications are for showers toward the end of the week extending into the Central and Eastern belt.

COTTON GOSSIP

NEW YORK, July 9.—"A prominent Texas spot man here learned for the first time yesterday that the Clarke amendment taxes contracts made in Liverpool $50 the same is in New York or New Orleans and immediately got busy with Washington.

"I think much of the apparent apathy on the part of Southern spot merchants in regard to the bill is due to their belief that they can hedge as usual in Liverpool, so they don't worry about the fate of American exchanges. I believe it would be advisable for everybody to acquaint spot merchants in their neighborhood with the fact that the amendment tax and trade in both domestic and foreign exchanges. When they realize that in order to hedge, either they or the producer must pay 50 cents a bale, and they will probably wake up and begin working to have the bill defeated."—Clevenberg.

• • •

Dick Bros. were good sellers after the call.

• • •

"Gwathmey was the principal buyer of new crop of the call. The market was steady on light offerings and fair demand on talk of boll weevil in Texas being more numerous than since 1909. The map was favorable."—Anderson.

• • •

Atlanta, Ga., wires: "We think the prospect of improvement in crop conditions during July is decidedly favorable. We had a good rain yesterday, which our reports lead us to believe was quite general in the State. Cotton was not suffering, but occasional showers will be decidedly beneficial. The only thing that can be said against the plant now is that about 50 per cent of it is small in size, but this small cotton, as well as the larger size, looks healthy and strong, has a good tap root and we believe by the first of August will be a strong, vigorous plant, capable of taking on a full August crop. We feel very hopeful over the situation."

A commercial agent of a prominent Eastern railroad summarizes his report by stating: "As a whole, it may be said that the crop goes into July in the best state of cultivation in many years with a thrifty, healthy plant that is in condition to stand more than the usual summer vicissitudes and with the acreage up to the record."

• • •

Dallas, wires: "Texas clear and hot; Oklahoma generally fair and warm."

• • •

NEW ORLEANS, July 9.—Hayward & Clark: "The weather map is very favorable; showers and cooler in Oklahoma and North Texas; part cloudiness, rain over the entire belt. Scattered showers, no excessive temperatures. Indications point to part cloudy weather with scattered showers over the belt; cooler in the Northern half of Texas and Oklahoma, Arkansas and Tennessee, and making for more rain in the Central States by Saturday."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat says: "While hot weather is normal in July, talk of heat spells yesterday was reflected in a very steady new crop market. Bulls said high temperatures are feared because of clouds, and, maybe more, was needed another year, and any development that suggests the presence of yield reducing factors is bound to work new crop shorts. On the other hand, bears said the old crop market is tethered to a practically cornered position, and may be advanced at will by the men who own the long interests. For this reason even a suggestion of excessive heat will answer the purpose of the bull faction.

"Tuesday the cotton belt was practically free of rain. The weather was hot everywhere, and particularly hot in the West, but the temperature records of other years, as a rule, were not more favorable than the current records, and the crop this year is, in the main, getting plenty of moisture. Delay in the arrival of the first new bale is worrying the old crop bears a little, but spokesmen for the bear party say that there is likely to be less delay in the development of a movement of important proportions this year, after the first new bale turns up, than is usually the case. But spokesmen for the bull party say the world really needs a good grade cotton, therefore, will absorb the new receipts with eargerness.

"Meanwhile, cotton is being delivered on July contracts in very small volume, and those remaining shorts who do not desire to make delivery do not yet see the road that will lead them out of their troubles."

CANADIAN PACIFIC FEATURES STOCKS

Continental Sales Cause Drop. Financial Situation Causing Hesitancy.

By C. W. STORM.

NEW YORK, July 9.—Canadian Pacific slumped off sharply at the opening of the stock market to-day, on account of Continental selling induced by the growing seriousness of the Balkan situation. There were heavy sales of Canadian Pacific in Amsterdam and Berlin.

After opening at 212⅜ for a loss of 1⅜, Canadian Pacific sold down to 211¼ for a net decline of 2¾ from last night's final. Among the other declines were Southern Pacific ½; United States Steel common, ¼; Union Pacific, ⅝; Reading, ⅜; New York, New Haven and Hartford, ⅛; American Can, ¾; Amalgamated Copper, ¼; Anaconda Copper, ¼; California Petroleum, ½; Great Northern preferred, ⅛; Norfolk and Western made a fractional gain.

The curb was dull, but steady.

Americans in London were quiet and the few dealings in them were by professionals.

The market was exceptionally weak and irregular during the forenoon, based on various news developments. These rumors forced Canadian Pacific down to 209½, a decline of 4½. Copper was off ⅝, Lehigh Valley ⅝, and Steel, Northern Pacific and Southern Pacific drooping from ⅛ to ⅝. All the other issues continued wavering. The tone continued dull. Call money loaned at 2 per cent.

Heavy selling of Canadian Pacific continued and just after noon this stock went to 208⅛, establishing a new low record. This was a decline of 6¼ from Tuesday's highest and decline of 5½ from last night's final. The previous low record was 210¼ on June 11. The high price of the year was 266¾, made January 9.

Canadian Pacific rallied to 210 in the last hour, but dropped below that figure again in the final fifteen minutes. Union Pacific touched 143⅝, for a net loss of ⅜ on the day. Steel was unchanged from the mid-day price, selling at 51⅜. Reading rallied fractionally. The tone was quiet and the movements with the exception of Canadian Pacific were without feature.

The market closed dull; governments unchanged; other bonds dull.

MILLER-COTTER COTTON LETTER.

MEMPHIS, July 9.—Liverpool is evidently sustained by big spot; business is hopeful. On this side some little capital was made of high temperatures in Texas and presence of the boll weevil; neither is yet a factor, but in the present dullness any little thing serve as an excuse for few points fluctuation.

The pending tax bill overshadows everything else, and it is proposed to tax orders going to Liverpool, which cuts off that market for spot hedges.

CHICAGO, July 9.—Wheat showed a weak feeling this morning because of the increase in offerings and the lack of new buying power. Northwestern receipts were three times greater than the corresponding period a year ago, but cables were higher. Crop reports show but little change.

Corn was about unchanged. Crop reports are more favorable.

Oats were a fraction lower in sympathy with corn, coupled with better thrashing returns.

Provisions were stronger in sympathy with the better feeling in the hog market.

Wheat closed for the day with losses of ⅛ to ¼c.

Corn was off ¼ to ⅝.

Oats were ½ to ¾c lower.

Provisions showed but little change.

Bad Odors, Impure Food and Water Main Causes for Sickness

A Few Practical Poultry Pointers That Will Help You, so Take Note.

The main causes for sickness in poultry are bad odors, impure food and water, decaying matter within reach, old bones, tin cans not rinsed out and rubbish of all kinds. These should be removed at once. A box of lime in the henhouse is a splendid deodorizer. Try it.

Keep a good supply of green stuff growing at all times. Sow one thing this month and another the next, and so on, or rather "sow on."

There is nothing so decidedly essential to the health of both the old and the young chickens as a good supply of green bulky food.

Skunks bothering poultry and eggs may be obliterated by breaking a small hole in a fresh egg and inserting a very small bit of strychnine; paste a little tough paper over the hole and put it under the roost. As Mr. Skunk prefers eggs to chickens or anything else, you are pretty sure to get him.

A Buff Orpington, very light or dark in color, is not necessarily of impure blood. Any breed is likely to show off some color specimens, but these should not be used as breeders.

Rough or scaly legs can be cured by anointing them with a mixture of half and half lard and kerosene. It should be applied freely at least twice a week until removed. Better still, keep your stock free from the trouble by thorough cleanliness about the house, yards, etc.

Drain out or fill the filthy old frog pond where the hens have been drinking and supply them with clean fresh water. They will be much healthier and you and your family will, too.

Eggs for market should be kept in a cool place as gathered each day until the time to send them off. If you have a cellar or pit under ground keep them in that upon bricks on the ground. Extreme heat tends to spoil eggs very rapidly.

Scatter the feed for the chickens under the plum trees if you have such. In the feeding they will gather up many insect pests which work upon the fruit and trees. Digging about the trees will cause them to hunt about the roots for worms. Shaking the tree at feeding time will dislodge many an insect and diseased plum which the hens will destroy.

Overcrowding the young stock is the cause of much trouble and loss. There are very few poultry yards in which the young stock is not crowded more or less. Crowding means bad air in the houses or coops and distemper or roup is the result, with sorehead and pip thrown in. As the chick grows so rapidly we fail to realize how much more room they really need. Let us supply it before it is too late. A severe culling of the poorer specimens for the market is an additional remedy.

Judge Marshall:

Can you tell me what causes some hens to pull the feathers off their mates about the heads and necks? Some of mine do that until the hens are a perfect sight to look at. I would like to know the cause and a remedy if you could give one.

We get much good out of The Georgian poultry department and are always ready to read it. I am yours truly, J. C. CARTER.

Sparta, Ga.

ANSWER.—Feather pulling, as it is commonly called, is a mighty bad habit, and is caused by different things. Too close confinement in a yard without green stuff, not enough exercise or things to keep them out of mischief; sometimes a lack or need of meat, or something a little salty. If you will hang up a piece of salt bacon for them to peck at, or a little fresh meat. When the first offender is noticed it is the part of wisdom to take her away from the rest of the flock at once, as it is a habit that is very likely to be taken up by many of the flock.

REAL ESTATE AND CONSTRUCTION NEWS

Realty Men Busy On Mansion Plans

Legislative Action Expecetd Soon. Luckie Street Stores Completed. More Insurance Money.

Real estate men are watching closely the deliberations of the State Legislature on the proposal to sell the Governor's Mansion at the southwest corner of Peachtree and Cain Streets. Action has been taken looking toward the appointment of committees to report on this proposition, and something of a definite nature is expected soon.

In the meantime several locations for the Governor's Mansion have been decided on—that is, real estate men will offer them.

Two years ago the State had offers varying from about $330,000 cash to upward of $450,000. Some of these propositions were for straight sale, some for lease and some for exchange.

Luckie Street Stores Finished.

Charles H. Black has practically completed three stores in a two-story building in the triangle formed by the convergence of Luckie, Hayden and Harris Streets, at a cost of $17,500. These were taken under contract to the owner, J. M. Hawkins.

Wednesday's Auction Sale.

Gid Hanna and William A. Vernoy, who are offering five building lots and a six-room slate roof house in the Grant Park section Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock, are expecting a large crowd out. They have plastered the city with dodgers and have advertised in other ways. The lots are at the corner of Park Avenue and Bryan Street, and the agents have supplied lemonade for the attendants. J. W. Ferguson & Son will be the auctioneers.

More Insurance Money.

For some time the insurance companies of the East have been lending a great deal of money on policies, which has decreased their reserve funds to such an extent that it has been impossible to lend as much as formerly on real estate. Now it is announced that policy loans having dropped down somewhat, there will soon be more money to lend on land.

Charles H. Black, of Turman, Black & Calhoun, received a notice to this effect from a firm which his concern represents in Atlanta. Mr. Black declares that the insurance companies have great faith in Atlanta property, and of late the let-up has been due to a lack of funds.

Residences for Sale.

Joseph Richardson is completing a residence at East Lake and has accordingly put the home at 595 Piedmont Avenue on the market. The latter property is at the corner of Third Street.

The residence at 123 East Eleventh Street is also for sale. This is between Piedmont Avenue and Piedmont Park. It is a two-story house on a lot with 103 feet frontage. The price is $10,500.

The cottage at 713 Gordon Street, on a lot 50 by 210 feet, is for sale at $3,000, on terms of $300 cash and $20 a month.

Who Is Responsible for Such Creatures as David Lamar?

Who but the Big Men, Who Are Willing to Learn from "Vermin" How They, the Rich Men, May Buy the People's Representatives and Thwart the People's Will?

(Copyright, 1913.)

You read the story of David Lamar, known as "the Wolf of Wall Street," whose meteoric career in Atlanta in 1892 is still remembered by many persons here.

He told the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee at Washington the other day that he had called up big men with plenty of money, pretended that he was Congressman This or Congressman That, and offered to stop legislation that the people demanded.

It would seem that this man's life has been one of perpetual scheming. While in Atlanta his business dealings were of such character that he was arrested, indicted and forced to seek other fields.

Of recent years it appears, this individual, Lamar, has been busy telling big men in New York how he could prevent interference with this trust, or that railroad combination, or some other piece of financial dishonesty.

He used different names, and probably used different voices talking on the telephone. He made fools of some of the big men, and they now FEEL FOOLISH as the story comes out.

It is rather a disgusting story, of meanness, lying and attempted cheating, with possible blackmail attached. Some of the most unpleasant words in the dictionary describe Mr. Lamar very accurately.

But words just as disagreeable would describe as accurately the men of money and power who listened to Lamar, and listen to others like him.

If the big men whom this country and its citizens have made rich were not willing to bribe legislators, not willing to defeat the people's will by underhand methods, NOT WILLING TO USE THEIR DISHONESTLY GOT MONEY TO BUY DISHONEST LEGISLATION, there would not be such men as David Lamar urging the buying of disreputable public officials especially adapted to the doing of very dirty political work.

Lamar and the vermin like him are not very important.

The important man is the man of money, power and position, the man who has no excuse for being a bribe-giver, a cheater of the people, the man who listens at the telephone eagerly while "the vermin," representing themselves as dishonest Congressmen, offer for a consideration to cheat the public and rob the public and help dishonesty and buy legislation.

The big men who do not deny that they trusted Lamar, that they talked to him on the telephone and heard what he had to say, have not made a full explanation of their conduct, or a satisfactory explanation.

The ordinary citizen would not listen to a man who called on the telephone to tell him how he might rob his neighbor's house.

Why does the big man of Wall Street listen patiently and attentively while "the vermin" tell him how he can rob the people of their legislation, cheat the people of their will and add by continued bribery to the fortune already acquired?

A Great Victory for Southern Women

The Georgia House of Representatives is to be congratulated in that it had the common sense and decency to extend the use of its hall to the Georgia Woman Suffrage Association, now in session in the Capital of the State, even though it was necessary in doing so sharply to rebuke rank stupidity and lack of judgment in the Senate.

The cause of woman suffrage in Georgia is in its infancy, perhaps, but already it is sponsored by a number of the most intelligent and progressive women of the State.

Unquestionably, the cause will wax stronger and stronger, as time runs on, and neither narrowness nor bigotry—even in a Georgia Senate—will serve to stop it!

The original purpose of these Georgia women evidently was not to force the issue of woman suffrage upon the Georgia Legislature at this time. They merely were seeking a suitable place to hold two night sessions. They turned to the State Capitol, AS THEY HAD A RIGHT TO DO, in seeking that place.

The Senate, however, with that shortsightedness characteristic of stupidity, declined to extend the courtesy asked of it—and thereby it made the cause of woman suffrage an ISSUE before the people of Georgia—the people WHO MAKE and UNMAKE LEGISLATURES, AS THEY PLEASE!

In these circumstances, the vote of the House extending the use of its Hall to the suffragists can not be viewed otherwise than as a distinct VICTORY for the Woman Suffrage Association of Georgia.

It was, in a way, the very first and pioneer victory for the cause in the South—made emphatic and extraordinarily noticeable by the foolish and silly action of the Senate.

The Georgian now ventures this prediction: Before the membership of the present Legislature is entirely dust, woman suffrage will be an established POLICY AND PRINCIPLE of every State in this Union!

Those men in Georgia, farsighted and fair-minded enough to see it NOW, then will have cause to rejoice.

Those who now thrust themselves in front of a movement destined to be as irresistible as the flow of the tide, will be overwhelmed.

The cause of woman suffrage has been strengthened rather than weakened in Georgia by the unwise, unpatriotic and unworthy action of the State Senate.

That the House promptly and emphatically repudiated that Senate action, speaks well for ITS sense of justice and right.

Man and Wife Should Decide Own Differences

No Person Capable to Give Counsel to Couple Regarding Difficulties

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX.
(Copyrighted, 1913, by the Star Co.)

NO human being is capable of giving safe and sane counsel to a married man or a married woman respecting domestic differences. It is a matter which should be decided between the two.

When any third person intervenes, a judge of the court is the proper party.

Intimate Friends.

The most intimate friends of a family are not capable of saying where the fault lies in the majority of cases.

Even when a wife seems to be indifferent to her family and to her husband, and even when a husband seems to be unappreciative of his home, there may be causes for either offense undreamed of by those who believe themselves to be close friends.

There are men who seem to the world at large the most perfect specimens of domestic nobility, honor and probity, yet who are impossible as companions and life comrades for women of refinement and sensitive feeling, and there are women who pass in the world's eyes as angels of goodness who are possessed of unpleasant traits enough to drive any normal man to drink or insanity if he is compelled to live with them.

Wife Begged for Divorce.

The real character, the real disposition of any human being, is never known or understood until we have spent a year at least in steady association under the same roof.

The following letter reveals nothing of the writer's character. It reveals nothing of the wife's nature.

Therefore it is impossible to give any opinion of value regarding the case. Even were it possible, the writer of this does not wish to advise or counsel individuals save in the general way of character building which is the real work of the race.

The correspondent says:

"I am a married man with two children and earning a good salary, but separated for some years, owing to not being able to get along in harmony. Recently my wife called upon me and implored that I commit infidelity in order that she may secure a divorce from me, as she has an opportunity to marry. I agreed to do so if she would compromise by giving me one of the children, but she absolutely refuses, offering as an excuse that she is too deeply attached to them. I maintain if she loves this other man she would sacrifice one of the children or both of them to me, as I have a good home and nice surroundings, although I do not say she has not the same advantages, still I feel I could rear them up better under my influence and meet the future better than under this other man.

Willing to Sacrifice All.

"My wife is 25 years old, and, as this is comparatively young, I do not want to destroy her happiness. If I am in the wrong I would willingly sacrifice my side of the issue and grant her the divorce, but before I do I would like to hear your opinion."

All that can be said in reply is this: That children should be placed under the care of people who are the best fitted by character and moral worth and good behavior to bring them up.

Blood ties have nothing to do with the matter.

Paternal or maternal love, as that word is generally used, has little to do with the moral aspect of the case.

Women who gossip, who are disorderly, who are weak-willed, and who allow their children to see all these traits daily have no right to bring up their own children, no matter how they love them.

Small Part of Parenthood.

Fathers who are living immoral lives, who are associating with rough or coarse-minded people, or who use coarse language and who have never been taught self-control have no right to associate with their children, because they are making an impress on the wax-like nature of a child—an impress which will harden with time and become a blighting memory and probably a bad habit.

The time will come under the new science of eugenics which is being introduced when a censor will be appointed to study the domestic conditions in every family, and there will be laws which will protect children from the influence of the weak, the disagreeable and the incompetent homekeepers, as well as from the brutal and immoral.

Bringing children into the world is a small part of parenthood. To the writer of the letter quoted above no counsel can be given. It can only be said that the man of the best moral character, the best disposition and the best habits has the right to influence the lives of these children.

How to Keep Cool

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE.

My doctor said to me, said he: "In weather like this here
You must eschew the luscious stew,
The lush saute, the rich ragout,
And pie and cake and pudding, too,
And whisky, wine and beer,
In point of fact, you must not eat
Eggs, oysters, vegetables or meat.

"Dark clothing magnifies the heat, light clothes attract the light.
Beware of red—it heats the head;
Blue hues a poisonous radiance shed.
By sunset you'll be surely dead
Unless your clothes are right.
Don't let this warning be forgotten—
Beware of linen, wool and cotton.

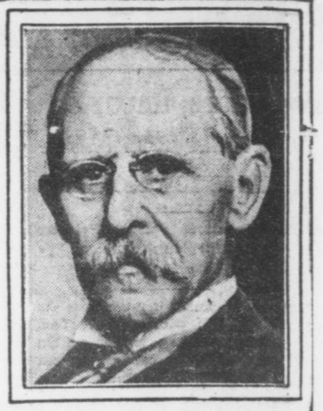
"Don't lash your blood to frothy foam by any exercise,
But don't sit still or you'll distill
A subtle toxin which will fill
Your veins with fermentation till
Your temperature will rise.
Don't breathe—it makes the pulses leap.
Don't stir about, nor rest, nor sleep."

* * * * * * * * * *

By packing me in ice and salt they brought me 'round at last.
"Why he's not dead," the interne said,
"Is what I can't get through me head.
For when they chucked him on that bed
He sure was going fast."

Now here's a tip for which I paid a very painful price:
DON'T EVER OVERHEAT YOURSELF BY FOLLOWING ADVICE!

Education Is the Cure for Feeblemindedness in the Child; but It Must Be Begun in Time.



What Sight More Pitiful Than a Child Who Goes Into the Battle of Life with Its Mind—Its Only Hope—Disabled?

By GARRETT P. SERVISS.

THE great study of modern times is that of the peculiarities, the workings and the weaknesses of the human mind. This involves the entire future of the race of man.

I have been learning something about a new science, or what aspires to be a science, which has this for its object and which is called by its disciples "clinical psychology" (clinical from a Greek word for bed, implying that the subject of attention is a person who is ill, and psychology "science of the mind"), the whole phrase meaning practical study of mental illness.

No Sight Is So Pitiful.

This is something of supreme interest to parents, because those who are particularly, if not exclusively, the subpects of investigation by clinical psychologists are children.

There is no sight in this world more pitiable than that of a feeble-minded child. It is his MIND that has placed man in the proud position which he occupies at the head of the Kingdom of Life on our planet; it is by virtue of his mental powers alone that he has achieved all his triumphs; they only have brought him up from his original brotherhood with the ape; in the further development of his mind lies the only hope that he can have of still greater progress in the future; each individual, as he faces the struggle of life, must depend upon the strength of his mentality, and that the more in proportion as the struggle increases in intensity. What, then, can excite a compassion equal to that aroused by the spectacle of a human child which, as the result of causes that might be avoided, enters the battle of life lamed, crippled, disabled, palsied, impuissant, in that which constitutes its only hope, its only real strength—its mind?

Makes Instant Appeal.

The reason the new science that I have mentioned makes an instant appeal to any person having the good of his kind at heart is that it comes with the assurance that the terrible evil of feeble-mindedness may be eliminated. If it did not promise that, if it presented itself merely as another form of curious investigations having little or no practical application, it would attract only the inquisitive, seeking for novel subjects of thought. But when it says to unhappy parents, "Right education is capable of developing the dormant mental energies of your child; only begin in time, and know what you are about," then its call must be listened to everywhere.

It is this supreme word "education" which I find on every page of what I have been reading of the work and the aims of the clinical psychologists. The body can be educated out of many of its illnesses, and so can the mind. It is not worth while to stop over any discussion of the question whether, as some put it, "the mind has a body," or, as others would say, "the body has a mind." We all know what is meant when a person is said to be "feeble-minded," and the one thing of pressing, immediate importance is the question whether, either by medical or hygienic treatment, or by mental or psychological methods, or by both working together, the evil can be remedied.

Mental Hygiene.

I read this extremely interesting statement from Professor J. E. W. Wallin:

"Irrespective of whether the cause is chiefly physical or mental, it is being recognized by a number of the leading present-day psychiatrists" (those who study mental diseases) "that drug treatment for the majority of the insane, whether juvenile or adult, is secondary to the educational treatment. Instead of merely prescribing physical hygiene for the insane, leading alienists are now prescribing mental hygiene. The cure is being conceived in terms of a process of re-education. Moreover, so far as concerns the mentally unstable child in the schools, the chief reliance is obviously on hygienic and educational guidance."

Key to the Mind.

There you see in almost every line the magic word "education." We can all understand that. We must accept this term in a virtually new sense.

We must cease to regard it as simply signifying a process by which a certain, very limited, amount of knowledge is instilled or forced into the mind of a child, and we must come to consider it as the key to the mind itself, and the means, when wisely used, of opening and developing the mental powers, even when they seem to be absent or defective.

Education is not a sausage-stuffer; it is a ladder by which man mounts toward the summit of his destiny. And when the feeble are helped upon its rungs, they are stimulated and inspired with new strength at every step upward.

FAIR WOMAN

By WILLIAM F. KIRK.

A WOMAN is easy to understand;
This is the secret, second hand:

When you pat her on the cheek
With your envelope each week,
Saying "Here's the money, dear,"
As you pinch her shell-like ear;
When she show'rs you with caresses,
Planning on new hats and dresses,
When she calls you her Greek god,
Though you know you have a pod,
She's happy.

When she meets you at the door
In the morn at three or four,
Trying with small fists to hit you,
Threatening to pack and quit you;
When she throws a dish or two
Clear across the room at you,
When she swings—and not in vain—
With your heavy walking cane,
She's out of sorts.

That is the secret, second hand,
A woman is easy to understand.
