It's a mighty short way to pipe joy

if you go via Prince Albert—tobacco that answers every question any man can hand out! You can jam it in your old jimmy pipe or roll it into a makin's cigarette and it will produce more real and true happiness than any brand at any price you ever bucked up against. Now, let's all get together, and repeat slowly and distinctly:

PRINCE ALBERT

can't bite your tongue, and can't parch your throat, because it is made by a patented process that removes the bite and the parch. No other tobacco ever was or can be made like P. A. And P. A. tastes as good as that sounds!

So the warm tip is: Get the jimmy pipes out of the dark corners, out of the rafters, where you've hidden them for fear of more tongue bites. Get 'em out and fire up with P. A., for you can go to it fancy-free from sun-up right down the line to the pillow-period!

And the sooner you know this little thing personally, the more joy's you'll be.

Prince Albert is sold everywhere in tippy red bags, 5c; tidy red tins, 10c; pound and half-pound tin humidors—and that classy pound crystal glass humidur with sponge-moistener top that just beats the band for keeping P. A. fine like silk. You buy one quick.

The Atlanta Journal.

Atlanta, Georgia. Journal Building, 1 North Forsyth Street. Entered at the Postoffice in Atlanta as Mail Matter of the Second Class. Daily, Sunday, Semi-Weekly.

JAMES R. GRAY, President and Editor. Telephone: 40 and 2000. Circulation Department: 40 and 2000. Ad. and News Departments: 40 and 2000.

Patience is the long road that leads to success. Easy-going men often go the wrong way.

And still the guns pound and the shells rain, and the end of the war isn't in sight yet.

Fathers of the Famous.

One of those illustrious and ingenious persons whom Shakespeare calls a "snapper-up of unconsidered trifles" has been a great name to discover in what year of their fathers' lives famous men were born. He reports among the first fruits of his research that Confucius' father was seventy-one, Aristotle's eight, Benjamin Franklin's fifty-one, Washington's thirty-eight, Henry Ward Beecher's thirty-eight, John C. Calhoun's fifty-five, Aaron Burr's forty, Bismarck's forty-four, Edwin Booth's thirty-seven, Sam. U. Bowler's forty-seven, George Bancroft's forty-five, Balzar's fifty-five, Thomas Carlyle's thirty-eight, Salmon P. Chase's forty-three, Culver's fifty-one, W. M. Davis's thirty-seven, Thomas A. Edison's forty-three, Jefferson Davis's fifty-two, Darwin's forty-three, Descartes's thirty-nine, Goethe's thirty-nine, Oliver Goldsmith's thirty-eight, Washington Irving's fifty-two, Thomas Jefferson's thirty-five, Doctor Johnson's fifty-three, Lord Kelvin's thirty-eight, Krupp's forty-two, Robert E. Lee's fifty-one, Lincoln's thirty-one, James Russell Lowell's thirty-seven, Lord Macaulay's thirty-two, Governor Morris's fifty-four, Newton's thirty-six, Admiral Nelson's thirty-six, Francis Parlan's thirty-eight, Wendell Phillips' forty-one, William Pitt's fifty-one, Pope's forty-seven, Sir Walter Raleigh's fifty-six, Solomon's fifty-two.

One may draw from this interesting record whatever conclusion he will. He may take it seriously, and evolve a new theory of eugenics; or lightly, and chuckle at the curious industry of the compiler. Due inquiry doubtless would show that the fathers of famous men were particularly fond of cream tartar; or, if the student had an aversion to that pastry, he could find an equally impressive mass of evidence to prove that the fathers of famous men abhorred cream tartar.

Facts, it has been said, rule the world. Just the contrary, facts are merely a lot of half fellows well met, all things to all men. Or, perhaps, it were truer to say that facts are like the elephant which the three blind men happened upon one day. The blind man who felt the elephant's squirming trunk was sure he had found a huge snake; the one who felt its ivory tusks was convinced that he held a spear; while the one who tugged at its leg wore a beard half of a tree. The most interesting of all facts is that we sense only a phase of any fact. That is the case whether we consider a grain of sand or the solar system, whether we ponder the mysteries of life and death or the predictions of the fathers of famous sons for cream tartar.

The youth who flies high doesn't stop to worry about where he's going to light.

The easy-going tail lands a lot more money than the average race horse.

Little Things to Large Account.

From little fishes mighty fortunes grow. Of the twenty-nine million dollars' worth of sea food canned or otherwise preserved in this country each year, more than twenty per cent is made up of sardines; and one of the essentials of this thriving industry is an oil produced from what was treated not many years ago as a worthless residue of the South's cotton crop. "Thousands of persons," says the Manufacturers Record, "who enjoy the appetizing American sardines are unaware that the oil in which they are packed is not olive oil, but one of the valuable and beautiful products of what cotton ginners once regarded as a nuisance and a waste." The Record interestingly adds:

"The oil surrounding the sardines in their cans is but one of the telltale evidences of the effect of application of chemical science to the once-deplored surplus cotton-seed, an effect summarized at the recent meeting of the American Chemical Society at New Orleans as putting about $125,000,000 additional into the hands of Southern cotton growers in a normal year, or, in other words, adding from $10 to $12 to the value of every bale of cotton grown, and at the same time making possible a manufacturing industry with an annual output valued, as to its primary products alone, at not less than $150,000,000 and employing directly 15,000 persons."

It is the peculiar mission of science to discover what is neglected places and to turn little things to large account. What chemistry has accomplished for the cotton industry, chemistry and other branches of science are steadily accomplishing in divers fields of agricultural and industrial affairs. We are accustomed to quote "Knowledge is power," and then forget that the saying is of practical and ever-renewed significance.

One get-out-and-bustle man is better than a dozen of the sit-and-wait-for-it-to-turn-up brand. He's a wise prophet who can induce others to forget his predictions.

The Federal Reserve Report.

Because of its national scope, the report just issued by the Federal Reserve Board concerning business conditions and prospects is especially significant. Improvements in this or that community are continually being announced, but the Reserve Board's statement is a digest of developments throughout the Union.

Each of the twelve cities where a reserve bank is located is the business center of its outlying region and reflects the condition of its entire territory. It is an official report from these cities that the Federal Reserve Board bases its interesting conclusions. Improvements are more pronounced at some centers than at others, but the important fact is that substantial measure of improvement is noted everywhere. The revival of industry and trade is not confined to any one section; it is nation-wide.

In New England the advance is apparently slower than elsewhere but it is none the less evident. In the New York district, there is unmistakable optimism, and in Philadelphia the processes of recovery are well under way.

The South is moving swiftly forward as shown by the cheering reports from Richmond, Atlanta and Dallas. "Improving conditions and promise of continued betterment," is the word from Richmond. "Increased activity of sound and conservative nature in all lines," is the summary from Atlanta. "The feeling through the entire business, agricultural and live stock section is encouraging," says Dallas.

So from St. Louis, Kansas City, Cleveland, Chicago, Minneapolis and San Francisco, the reports without exception are cheering. There is no disposition to over-estimate the forward tendencies, on the contrary there is a tone of conservatism in all the reports. But the prevailing note is confidence and deep-rooted assurance.

As a matter of fact, there's very little common sense in the world—most of it is uncommon.

Uncertainties in Mexico.

From Washington dispatches it is clear that our Government will not recognize any of the Mexican factions until the affairs of that country are on a far more certain basis. Secretary Bryan is quoted as saying that the subject of recognition has not even been formally proposed, though it is understood that Carranza has submitted a program of his intentions. The United States is eager to give all reasonable aid in restoring peace and order to its unfortunate neighbor, but it will be slow in extending diplomatic sanction.

None of the warring factions has yet proved itself capable of control. Villa, who once appeared to be the strongest personality in the field, has suffered heavy reverses, and only by some rare stroke of prowess or fortune can he recover his lost ground. Zapata's following seems limited to loosely knit bands of adventurers, and he himself gives no token of broad leadership. Carranza, the head of the dismembered Constitutional party, has had experience in civic affairs and, with proper support, might succeed in establishing something like a dependable government. But he is so notoriety and testy that even his closest adherents are doubtful of what he may do in an hour of trial.

No Mexican so far has shown himself equal to the country's problems, and no group has won decisive military advantage. In these circumstances, the United States can only wait upon developments. The fact is, of course, that official recognition will not be extended to any regime which is not legally established by the will of a majority of the people. It was on that principle that Huerta was not recognized, our Government making it clear at the time that it would countenance no adventurer who bought personal power at the expense of constitutional safeguards and popular rights.

Editorial Echoes

If you were a Japanese wouldn't you feel that there was a very real 'white peril' in view of what the white nations had done to China wouldn't you feel some suspicion of their unselfish designs? Dr. Shailer Mathews of Chicago, returning from a visit to Japan, is assured of the peaceable intent of the Japanese government. What he is asking of Americans is to put themselves in the place of the Japanese and try to get their viewpoint. It would be an international tragedy if two nations should become increasingly suspicious of each other to the breaking point, without any substantial ground for their suspicions—Kansas City Times.

Mr. Huerta has warned us in his suave way against any interference on our part with Mexico. We have no thought of interfering, but if we had, Mr. Huerta's warning would be quite unavailing. He has done his share to increase the burdens of the Mexican people, to make their national problems harder to solve. He should now bear in mind that a misuse of the harbor of refuge accorded to exiled Mexicans in this country will be attended by many dangers. He can no longer count that his sudden appearance here, at the time of great activities among the scientific and conservative juntas of our Southwestern states is not devoid of political significance.—New York Times.

German submarine sailors are not to blame. The German sailor goes where the German admiral directs. To punish him, when a prisoner, other than a prisoner of war, is abominable. When the German army retaliates, the British statesmen follow like sick pigs. If the German submarine warfare is outlawed, it is the German government, not the German sailor, who is to blame. England made a spectacle of herself when she began the extraordinary punishment of German submarine prisoners.—Augusta Chronicle.

American Vitality Once More.

YEAR, two ages, a great deal of attention was being directed to the subject of an alleged decline of American vitality. Statistics were assembled, showing that while the death-rate in the population was rising, the death-rate in the death-rate at ages above forty-five was actually increasing; and the conclusion was drawn that, while a reduction of infant mortality and death-rate below the age of sixteen had been brought about by efforts directed to these ends, there must be a deterioration in American conditions of life or means of living, to account for the increase of mortality from the ordinary organic diseases of middle life. Nor could this conclusion be completely refuted, until it was shown that, for some time, and that if a greater proportion of the population was to be found in the more advanced ages, a greater proportion of the total deaths would be found in these later age-groups. For the statistics show, in any of these later age-groups by itself—the group of people between forty-five and fifty—the death-rate in the group was greater than had hitherto been.

Nevertheless, as we pointed out at the time, the conclusion—though it might possibly be true—was questioned by the statistics itself. The points we made against it were essentially, two. First, that an increase in the death-rate above that of the earlier days would have disappeared much sooner, if in the older time would have continued longer, but on the contrary to the survival for many years of some lives longer than the average, which the earlier days would have given much sooner. Second, the death-rate in a given age-group is affected not only by the conditions of life, but by the composition of the group. When these considerations are borne in mind, it is difficult to see how any careful thinker could have concluded that there was any decline whatever in American vitality, in the sense in which the words are currently—and naturally—used. It is a matter of fact, that a more moderate and cautious note has been customary of late on this subject among the spokesmen of the "Life Extension" movement. This is true, at all events, of the two leaders, Dr. E. C. Pritchard and Dr. L. D. Davis. Dr. Louis I. Dublin, the other on "Fertile Health Examinations," by Dr. Eugene L. Frank—read at the recent American Association for the Advancement of Science, and printed in the April number of the Popular Science Monthly.

Not that the position has been abandoned, or even explicitly modified; only that the emphasis has, it seems to us, been considerably shifted. And in Dr. Dublin's case, it is to the facts themselves, a portion which is of peculiar interest. "In a recent paper," says Dr. Dublin, "the writer has pointed out some of the conditions of present-day life which he believed to be the cause of the degenerative diseases from the so-called 'degenerative' diseases." What he referred to particularly in that paper was "the loss of vigor of the body, the loss of vitality, the loss of modern conditions of industry." "In the present paper," he continues, "I wish to refer to another element which is apparently at work, and which he has previously noted. It is not clear that the presence of this 'other element' makes it imperative to revise the whole conclusions of the writer. If, to be sure, the figures of increase of mortality were of sufficient magnitude, it might be said, offhand, that the immigration factor depends the latter, in many an appeal addressed to us in the name of 'American vitality.' For our own part, we see no reason whatever in this connection, that the conditions of life, as factors above mentioned—the factor of survival and the factor of changing composition—is insufficient to account for the increase of mortality, and the increase of advanced life. On the contrary, we think it highly probable that they more than account for the increase, leaving a substantial balance over to the credit of immigration conditions and the water of the New York Evening Post.

It is not assuming a great deal to suppose, without stating any reasons, that the immigration factor is sufficient to cover the results of the influx of immigrants from Southern Europe, and leave over a considerable margin for the increase of the death-rate of conditions here at home? The question is of real and practical importance; for on the answer to it, and to similar questions, depends the latter, in many an appeal addressed to us in the name of 'American vitality.' Train Your Observation.

BY H. ADDINGTON BRIDGE. (Author of "The Study of Personality," "Psychology and Personality," "The Psychology of the Individual.") Friend, do you appreciate that one of the greatest drawbacks to efficiency in any business or profession is the lack of observation? Do you know that the average man is so blind to many of the objects on which their gaze falls? And they are needlessly blind.

Write it is undoubtedly true that people are born with varying degrees of observational power. It is equally certain that everybody can be trained to utilize his natural endowment to an extent undreamed of by his ordinary conditions and surroundings.

A striking proof of what training can do in this respect is found in the case of the Houdini, the celebrated conjurer. One of his most impressive feats—alleged "mind reading"—depended for its success on the rapidity and accuracy with which a large number of objects could be identified. This is the case with the Houdini. The elder Houdini first put down a single domino, and asked his son to name the total number of spots on it. He then threw four, then two dominoes were used, then three, then four, and so on. After a time both father and son found it possible, at the end of a few minutes, to name the number of spots on as many as twelve dominoes. Whenever they further developed their observational powers, the number of dominoes was increased. Every day they made it a practice, when walking along the street, to cast an attentive glance into some window containing a great variety of objects. One glance was all that was necessary. The objects were to be named, and the names were to be written down on the store to verify their observation. Unbelievable as it may seem, at the end of a month of this kind of training, the father and son were able to name, at a glance, the number of spots on a great variety of objects. Something of the same sort might well be done by all of us, and it is especially to be recommended to persons who are in the habit of neglecting their natural faculties. It is because training of the observational power is neglected in early life that so many people are deficient in their observational faculties. It is not too late to begin to make amends, and conscientious use of some device similar to that practiced by the Houdinis will be found of great developmental value.

THE ALASKAN OPPORTUNITY

By Fredrick J. Haskin, IV.—FORESTS.

IT WILL probably be a surprise to most Americans to learn that lumber was shipped from Alaska to the states last year. Alaska's mines are celebrated, her fisheries have been thoroughly explored, and the beginning is being made of her timber as a farming country; but her forests are almost unknown.

The few shipments of lumber that left Alaska last year, however, do not represent any large export trade in this commodity. The interesting fact at present is that Alaska contains enough timber to build all of her own railroads and open her coal mines and erect her cities. One-seventh of all the timber on our national forest make the two Alaska ranges, the Chugach and the Tongass. These two forests contain seventy-eight billion feet of timber and are capable of supplying seven hundred million board feet annually for all time.

For the past few years the cut of Alaskan timber has averaged about fifty million board feet, used in local building, mining and to erect canneries and make fuel for the mines. But every step in the coming development of Alaska will require timber. This is one industry that must grow if any others do.

The Alaskan forests are like no others in the world. Most of Alaska is too high and too cold for forest growth. But along the southern and western coasts there is a low, warm belt, where over 100 inches of rain fall every year. Here, beginning at the water's edge and extending inland for 100 miles, there is a forest of the oldest and densest forests on the continent. Sitka spruce, western hemlock, and red cedar are the principal species. The trees are as much as six feet in diameter and 150 feet tall. They have never been cut, and forest fires are almost unknown. The forest is a growth of moss and brush so dense that one may walk for miles without setting foot upon bare soil. All of this undergrowth is an immense spongy mat, filled with water which wells up at every step. Fire is impossible.

The southern and western coasts of Alaska are cut by innumerable bays and inlets fringed with islands. It is this coastal country upon which the forests are located. Thus the Tongass, although only 800 miles in length, contains about 15,000 miles of coast. These are the only national forests in the United States which are paralleled wholly by boat. Practically all of the timber is cut in this half mile of the water's edge. The loggers do their work in thirty-five foot motor boats. Five of these vessels are kept constantly busy. Storms from the coast often sweep the forest ashore, not only because of the distance but also because of the mosquitoes and the bears, which represent the two greatest dangers to the Alaskan fauna, and are the terrors of the coastal country.

When they want to kill a man at one of the mining camps in that region of Alaska during the summer, they strip him and put him in a motor boat with a crew of five. No guard with a rifle would be surer death than the clouds of mosquitoes without. As for the bears, they are incredibly numerous. One day I saw a bear in a motor boat. He was so close that I could see his teeth. He was so close that I could see his teeth. He was so close that I could see his teeth.

Lumbering operations on these Alaskan forests are singularly easy and a unique method. These forests are cut by a method known as the "float" method. The logs are floated down the water's edge in double-quick time. They are then floated in great rafts, usually of 100 logs, and are towed to the sawmills. Nowhere else in the world, perhaps, can timber be so easily cut and floated.

SEEKING PUBLICITY

BY DR. FRANK CRANE.

DOWN in the University of Pennsylvania there is a live man; he is called Professor Scott Nearing. He is a man of the highest ability, and he is a man who has a head for the matter with him. He is a man who has a head for the matter with him. He is a man who has a head for the matter with him.

It was not Wharton and his dead lump of money that was blasted; it was Nearing who was alive and whose think-works were functioning. The committee recommended that some safe man, like Mr. Root, and Mr. Knox be invited to come in and talk to the students, as an antidote to the threatened Nearingism.

The public, in reviewing this incident, observes a raft, floats it to a convenient beach and there sets it up for operation. A steel cable is carried a thousand feet or more up into the woods where the best timber cuts. Then it is wound on a revolving drum, and the great logs are "maked" to the water's edge in double-quick time. They are then floated in great rafts, usually of 100 logs, and are towed to the sawmills. Nowhere else in the world, perhaps, can timber be so easily cut and floated.

KEEP DOWN THE COTTON ACREAGE

(From Southern Farming of Atlanta, Ga., May 1, 1915.) Cotton is now selling right here in our own state at the lowest price since the war. The exchanges of the world, the prices for delivery here, are down and over the year end are still higher. Does not this indicate that the cotton crop of 1915, even if there is a full production throughout the United States, will be 10 to 15 per cent at the best? If this is so, are we not justified in planning to limit the use of cotton acreage, if not more? The sense in reducing the acreage if the crop is going to be worth 10 or 15 cents a bale.

Demand has forced prices of cotton at this time to 10 cents or better. At the depths of the depression last year, the price was 5 cents. The reason why the present price is so high is because of the shortage of cotton. The demand for cotton is so great that the price is so high. The demand for cotton is so great that the price is so high.

Crackers Meet Barons at Ponce de Leon Today; Won Last From Pelicans

Infield Errors Ruin the Pelts

Blumh and Thomas Crack Badly in Last Game With Steady Men — Hiett Hurts Smith Ball

NEW ORLEANS, May 3.—The Pelicans looked like anything but pennant contenders in the last game of the series with the Crackers here yesterday, and Bill Smith's team had little trouble in getting away with the big end of the proportion, 4 to 1.

Infield errors were in a large measure responsible for the downfall of the Pelicans. Red Blumh, who ordinarily looks and acts like one of the best fielding first basemen in minor league baseball, was badly off form, while Thomas, too, was having the worse day he has shown since joining the club. Besides these two, Tim Hendrix kicked in with a several errors or a tactical blunder when he flung any philanthropy into his baseball about and believed that he was eradicating herod from the pastime.

Errors were in a considerable measure responsible for the defeat of the Pelicans at that Hiett, who did the hurting for the victors, was steady at all times, and to it that the Pelicans were crushed substantially all along the line. He allowed but four hits, and made three errors, these were allowed to materialize into a total of six runs, including the triple and counted on Sylvester's infield, from them on the locals could do nothing with his shoete.

The Crackers counted in the first round when Lee reached first on Thomas' miff of his high fly, took second on an infield out, and came over on Sid Smith's whetting single over second. Williams singled, and stole second to count on a single, and then the second round was by the Crackers. Potts got in the fifth, Hendrix in the sixth, and Rely's throw, Hiett singled. Lee scored Potts with a single over third, and Hiett counted on a high fly over by Thomas on Williams' grounder.

The Crackers showed steady improvement in the series with the Pelicans. They were easy victims in the first game with Tom's pitching. The second game was lost after a hard struggle. Hiett and Rely were the only ones in comparative ease, making an even break on the parties.

The Spotlight

BY GRANTLAND RICE.

"Old King Cole was a merry old soul—
A merry old soul was he—
But he never was caught in a tree, close match
When he shined one back of a hare,
And never came up to a mangle stool
And a-voing for a lolly rag,
A lolly rag and a-voing from ball and topped Theadmirabletoastrap."

"How," queries a trothing fanatic, "do you pronounce Kauff?" The "u" is elastic—as in J-u-m-p.

As owner Robert B. Ward observed Benny Kauff rising lightly for a flying jump from Brooklyn to New York he is said to have rubbed a coronal of mounds around his bakery before that too was enticed out of his cage reach.

At the same moment Mr. Ward is said to have admitted that he made a clerical error or a tactical blunder when he flung any philanthropy into his baseball about and believed that he was eradicating herod from the pastime.

DICKING THE SPOTLIGHT.
Hereafter Rube Marquard should refrain from establishing any extraordinary stunts. Three years ago he won 19 straight and then was hammered to a pulp the rest of the year; last season he won a 21 inning battle and was then toppled 12 times in a row. This spring he opened with a no-hit affair and has been thrashed to the loss ever since.

If the Rube breaks or ties another record he is liable to have his back carried away with a drive through the box.

A PAIR OF COLLAPSES.
When the Red Sox were picked to center in with the American League pennant they were figured to have the greatest pitching staff in baseball. They had no winning edge on the rest of the league in other ways. So far this pitching staff has fattered badly, and if Wood and Gregg remain useless, as the case now looks, the Red Sox team will be wiped away and the race will turn into a free-for-all, pay-as-you-enter, catch-as-catch-can, anybody's pennant.

In fact, the whole dome has been so badly shot up at this writing that it is difficult to tell what happened yesterday, much less what might happen tomorrow or next month.

The second pitching collapse has been even more startling than the first. McGraw believed that with Tresear, Mathewson, Marquard and Egan, the Philadelphia team would be the one to lead the race.

Yet there has never been a time since he took up the giant case, some 12 or 13 years ago, when the first dozen games have furnished such a moth-eaten pitching.

QUICK RETURNS.
No entry ever finished first by playing it safe in a field of class. There are times when one can't always tell, but as a general rule he can make a fairly certain guess.

ADD POPULAR SONGS.
"I wonder if they'll sing 'Bye Bye Kauff."
"I don't know where I'm going, but I'm on my way."—Patrick Moran.

AS THE CASE NOW STANDS.
If one had to make a survey of what has happened so far in the National League and offer a guess based upon form and stuff shown to date, the National League flag might be a matter of Braves vs. Phillies, with the Braves having the edge.

So far Giants, Dodgers, Cubs, Reds and Pirates have failed to show any of the stuff that the Phillies have been displaying. The best ball in either circuit, and the Braves, while still playing along, have managed to stay around, with their pitching staff still back-in the course of a short while Stallings will have Evers back in, with Rudolph, James and Tyner ready to work at top speed. With this happening, with the latting power added by Sherwood Magee, it will be hard to hold the Braves in check.

They are not bustling as they did last August and September. But if they are crowded after the next two weeks there will be a return of the attack to report that they have already shown they have a much harder time of it now than they had a year ago, and this, with their best men, they can soon back on, will leave them even keener favorites than they were back in March before the first gun was fired.

The Phillies, being under a new regime, may refuse to break and scatter as they have done in the past. This is perhaps a trifle too far ahead to be listed among the authentic incidents of the season.

Crackers Open Long Home Stay

Molesworth's Barons Here to Meet Locals in Four Games at Ponce de Leon

After a brief visit of four days with the Pelicans, the Crackers return home today to inaugurate one of the longest home stays of the season. The bunch will be here continuously through May 25, when they leave to open with the Lookouts in Chattanooga on their first of the northern division in the meantime, they meet the Barons, the Lookouts, the Braves and the Pelicans at Ponce de Leon.

The trip just finished ended with results as satisfactory as could have been expected. An even break in four games with the Pelicans in New Orleans is a good record. Furthermore one of the two lost was dropped after a game on Hill night, which showed that the boys were working right on up to the finish. The first game was lost because of the fact that the Birds murdered Ed Dem's hitting in cold blood, and by the time he was traveling at top speed, the issue was never in doubt after the first three innings.

Today's game marks the first visit of the Barons to Ponce de Leon. Manager Molesworth is bringing along an excellent first two series played. In the opening series here with the Pelicans last season, Charlie Carroll, Roy Kilan, Omar Harbridge, Dave Roth and Dick Robertson, and Clyde McBride were regular last season, and Tommy Clark and Calmer Wallace were with the outfit a part of last season, but were hardly considered as regulars.

The Barons chief aim in his outfit, at two other players who are well known to local fans in Edson Hemingway at third and Dale Sloan in the outfield. This pair played with Nashville last year, Sloan having spent the 1912 season in this league also as a member of the Montgomery Birkens. Jimmy Magee is playing the Clarks in either Manning or Doubling in the opener, while Manager Molesworth is expected to use either Harbridge or Johnson.

Crackers Open Long Home Stay

The Crackers begin a stay which will carry them over a period of some three weeks at Ponce de Leon this afternoon. Tomorrow this stay all of the clubs of the northern division will be encountered in the contest in that Birmingham Barons will be taken on the second series of the season, one round having been fought out with them in Birmingham a little more than a week ago.

By the time this home stay has been completed, Manager Smith will have had full opportunity to size up his chances for helping to make the team a contender in the contest in that Birmingham Barons will be taken on the second series of the season, one round having been fought out with them in Birmingham a little more than a week ago.

However, the work of the club for the past two weeks has been a most decided improvement over what it showed during the first two series played. In the opening series here with the Pelicans last season, Charlie Carroll, Roy Kilan, Omar Harbridge, Dave Roth and Dick Robertson, and Clyde McBride were regular last season, and Tommy Clark and Calmer Wallace were with the outfit a part of last season, but were hardly considered as regulars.

CAPTAIN WM. S. BENSON IS NATIVE OF GEORGIA

New Chief of Naval Operations Spends His Boyhood in This State

In the appointment of Captain William Shephard Benson to the position created by the late congress of chief of naval operations, Atlanta in common with the rest of the state has a subject for congratulation. For Captain Benson is a Georgian.

He was born in Georgia, where his boyhood was passed in the stony area that marked the close of the Civil war. He was ten years old when the war ended, and seventeen when he was appointed to the naval academy as a midshipman from this state. He entered Annapolis in 1875 and was graduated in 1877.

Since then he has served as junior officer on the old Hartford; on the Essex; on the Constitution; last cruise in the Brooklyn navy yard; on the Alliance and the Baltic; on the latter of which he took part in the famous expedition to rescue Greely, the polar explorer. On board the Dolphin in 1888 he made his first voyage around the world, and in 1891 he was named commandant of midshipmen at Annapolis, which position he held when he received his new appointment last week.

An able naval operations Captain Benson will be second only in importance to the active head of the navy department and his duty will be to advise the secretary of the navy in all matters pertaining to the efficiency of the various fleet and shore stations.

MORE INCENDIARY FIRES STARTED IN VANCOUVER
All Bridges in City Are Being Guarded to Prevent Further Damage

VANCOUVER, British Columbia, May 2.—The tenth fire which broke out yesterday on the Granville street bridge, all the bridges of the city were guarded today to prevent further loss by fires which the authorities declare to be of incendiary origin.

(By Associated Press.)
WASHINGTON, May 2.—The cruiser Brooklyn of Boston was today ordered to the Orient to relieve the Saratoga (flagship of the Atlantic fleet). The Saratoga will be brought home for overhaul.

OSBORNE WILL TESTIFY AGAINST GIRL ACCUSER

New York Lawyer Will Seek to Prove He Never Courted Rae Tanager

(By Associated Press.)
NEW YORK, May 2.—Franklin D. Sanford, on trial charged with perjury as a result of his identification of James W. Osborne as the man who visited a hotel in Plainfield, N. J., with Miss Rae Tanager last October, was ready to restate his testimony in his own defense in the federal court today. After Bulth and Rose Tanager have testified for the defense, the prosecution expects to call several witnesses in rebuttal to tell of the whereabouts of Mr. Osborne at the time Rae Tanager alleged he was in her company.

Mr. Osborne, it was stated today, will be one of the first rebuttal witnesses. The prosecution, it was understood, will attempt to show that on the day when Miss Tanager said she saw him in New York he was in Providence, R. I., trying a case before a court.

Hotel Clerk Believes
J. W. Osborne Is the Man
NEW YORK, May 2.—Frank D. Sanford, the aged hotel clerk on trial, on a perjury charge in connection with the identification of James W. Osborne, a well-known criminal lawyer, as the man who visited Miss Rae Tanager at a Plainfield, N. J., hotel last October, related that identification on the stand today.

“I have looked at Mr. Osborne in court here and the more I have looked at him the more I am convinced that he is the man,” said the witness. “I did not do it for pay, and I have not committed any perjury.”

CANADIAN LIUTENANT IS KILLED IN BATTLE
MONTREAL, May 2.—Lieutenant Andrew Leslie Bell, 2nd Battalion, who was killed in action with the Canadian contingent in France, according to the latest casualty list, was the only son of Andrew Bell, of Dunsmuir, B. C., Montreal and Toronto. He was born in Montreal twenty-three years ago. After taking his degree in civil engineering at St. Andrew's college, Toronto, he went to the western states, but on the outbreak of the war he returned back to Toronto and enlisted with the Tenth Royal Grenadiers.
