GENERAL CARRANZA AT QUITS HIS OFFICE UNDER THIS CONTINUING ORDER

Reported Troubles of Chief With Own Leaders Brings the Mexican Situation Into New Light

MOVES TO ISOLATED FORTRESS FOR SAFETY

Occupation of Mexico City by Carranza Forces Postponed Pending Reorganization of the Cabinet

(By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, June 19.—Differences between General Carranza and General Obregon, his principal commander, disensions in the cabinet and Carranza's removal of his headquarters to the isolated safety of the fortress of San Juan de los Rios, all reported to Washington today brought the Mexican situation into a new focus.

Carranza is said to face a situation that may culminate in a factious Mexican political situation, in the dictation of his commanding general, Alvaro Obregon, and other high officials.

Official advice today revealed that four of Carranza's cabinet ministers had resigned and that General Obregon was insisting on their retention as well as the dismissal of members to whom they were opposed.

Word also came to the American government that General Obregon, the Villa commander in Sonora, objected vigorously to the possible landing of American marines on the coast of the Yucatan valley, indicating that he would regard such action as a hostile invasion.

Occupation of Mexico City by Carranza troops and the resignation of Gonzalez has postponed pending the cabinet reorganization.

Official news here has no complete indication as yet as to the meaning of the cabinet crisis, but over-night it was said that a new cabinet which may have an important effect on the Mexican situation.

FOUR MEMBERS RESIGN. Latest advice were that four of the cabinet ministers had resigned. Obregon had insisted in a telegram to Carranza that they be retained and that if they were not, he would resign his office.

It is now reported that in the re-organized cabinet Carranza will retain Obregon. If he dismisses the other three, it is said, he will resign.

President Wilson intends to wait several weeks for the formal declaration of self more clearly before any definite steps are taken in the new policy announced in his recent message.

German Shoots Air Craft Full of Holes but is Finally Brought Down

(By Associated Press.) PARIS, June 19.—The following official account of an engagement between a German and a French aviator was given out in Paris today:

"An enemy aviator having been observed over our duty field at Avesnes, Thann in Upper Alsace, one of our aviators, Sergeant Cook, wing and mounted in 30 minutes to a height of 10,000 feet.

"The German replied with his machine gun, and one of his bullets struck the cylinder of the French machine. The French aviator again ascended to a position above the German, and fired three bands of cartridges. During the third round the German aviator was seen by the French aviator to suddenly drop into the air.

"The French aviator came down under control. On the ground he examined his machine. He found that bullets fired by his antagonist had perforated his cylinder, cracked the steel at the back of the motor, and rattled his wheels. The Frenchman himself was slightly wounded in the neck.

REPORT ON SALOON AND CLUB LICENSES MONDAY

Police Committee Will Recommend 152 Beer Saloons and 19 Locker Clubs

The police committee will report favorably to council Monday afternoon on the applications for renewal of license of 152 near-beer saloons and nineteen locker clubs.

While no organized fight on the granting of the licenses is expected from council, interest is added to the favorable report of the committee by the fact that a mass meeting has been called for today by the Men and Religion Forward movement to protest against the licensing of the saloons and clubs by the city.

About fifty of the saloons applying for a new license carry with the saloon application a request for pool room permits.

There is some opposition in council to the practice of allowing near-beer saloons and pool rooms to operate jointly, and Mayor Woodward has indicated that he will veto any permits granted for the joint operation of saloons and pool rooms.

The mayor in a message to council and in other statements has recommended the separation of pool rooms and saloons.

It is expected there will be rather formidable opposition to several of the locker clubs, but no general fight is against all of them, or against all of the saloons.

Several years ago a sweeping fire that started near this corner took in the whole vicinity and left nothing much behind it but ashes. Since then the corner has been partial to fires.

ANNISTON, Ala., June 18.—Home-coming week will be celebrated during the coming week by the surviving alumni of Central college, one of the famous institutions in the little town south of us, as a tribute to the memory of Dr. John Dodson, its president and founder, former superintendent of education in Alabama, author and scholar.

The exercises will be held on historic ground, around the old Oxford college building, where Colonel John Triple accompanied with his fifty-first regiment of Confederate volunteers, and where Miss Todd, the star of Alabama Lincolnton, presented a hand-made battle flag, which could not be accepted until the black border was removed. The Morgan oak under which this presentation took place still stands, and hard by are the ruins of an old Confederate furnace, as well as many marks of Stoneman's famous rail.

Former graduates and undergraduates of this noted educator will gather in Oxford to attend the "Dodson" home-coming celebration, and to place flowers on the grave of him who gave all the years of his life to the cause of education.

Texas Wins Brilliant Victory After Long Uphill Battle. Was Down Until the Thirty-Third Hole—Finished Strong, Great Gallery Saw Match

MORNING ROUND. Dexter 5x5-48-42-37x Whitney 5x5-55-44-38-76x

The southern amateur golf championship switched back and forth so rapidly between Nelson Whitney and Charlie Dexter...

But on the next hole Mr. Dexter made some change in his line. Whitney did not fall in the woods with his midiron...

Suddenly something exploded with a noise similar to a large gun, followed by a crashing sound like a 45-centimeter shell...

The next hole Dexter won, putting in one up, and Whitney smiled. It was a good thing for him to do...

Whitney's second shot was a long putt for 15 feet, which would have halved the hole...

Magnates Talk Of Cutting Pay

CHICAGO, June 19.—It is learned here today that the more radical proposals of economical measures among the higher class minor league magnates have proposed a combined movement to reduce salaries and even to curtail the playing season sharply this year.

The movement would require action by the "big" as the five larger minor leagues are called—the International League, the Southern association, the Pacific Coast league, the Western league and the American association.

Through a proposed meeting of the presidents of these organizations was discussed, it is said, at the American association session here early this week, President Chivington said today he had heard nothing of it.

Mr. Howe, the donor of this trophy, in addition to being a golf enthusiast, is an athlete in other lines as well. He formerly played football and baseball at Vanderbilt, and has always taken an active interest in all kinds of sports.

He is president of the Southern Ice company and has been making his home in Atlanta for the past few years.

Begin Play in Home Tourney

Now that the bustle and excitement attendant upon the big southern championship tournament at East Lake has subsided, local golfers will settle down to the more serene activities involved in club tournaments.

The first round will be completed by the Wednesday following the qualifying rounds, and the second three days later. The semi-finals will have to be finished by the next Wednesday, and the final by Saturday, two weeks from the qualifying date.

Gulls Win Last Game of Series With Crackers

Mobile Crew Away to Early Lead Is Never Headed, Schmidt Uses Three Hurlers, While Locals Employ Two, Calhoun Hits Homer

By Innis Brown

By dint of some hard hitting, a bunch of loose play on the part of the Crackers, frequent manipulation of hurlers and a display of nerve on the part of Charlie Schmidt, the Gulls managed to wriggle past the Crackers for a victory in the last of the five-game series between the two at Ponce de Leon Saturday afternoon.

From the time that "Marty" Calhoun hopped onto one of Carl Thompson's fast ones, which down the second round, until Roy Moran lifted a short fly to Dohard for the third out in the ninth, the Gulls were the leaders.

Then the Crackers proceeded to repair their damages. Lee singled to left and Manning bounded in hotly, sending Jenkins to the showers. Kaufman sacrificed and Jenkins sent the two runners over with a long triple that cleared Miller's head in center by several feet.

But the tie was short-lived. The Gulls tore back into Thompson again in the fifth. Dohard shot one between left and center that looked good for at least three bags, and possibly a homer, but Lee fagged it and came near cutting the runner down.

Then the Crackers started a rally that threatened seriously to wipe out the lead held by the Gulls. Blain O'Leary knocked Jenkins' grounder to Karr. Korchagin walked, but the Crackers proceeded to issue two balls to Kelly, who had replaced Thompson on the mound for safety.

On Labor day there will also be held at East Lake a handicap meet, the winners of the July races being remembered.

Two Trapshots Win Trophies

Two trophies were won Saturday afternoon at the weekly shoot of the Gate City Gun club at their range near Brookwood. The first prize, a leather cartridge belt, was won by Joseph R. Cottrhan, who broke 40-14 straight.

TENTH HOLE—Whitney got a low ball and struck the top of the bunker and around the bunker, striking the edge of the bunker. In order to get the ball into the green, Whitney was forced to take a shot which was a fair way from the hole. He used his mid-iron through the leaves and carried it within four feet of the green. # NEW ORLEANS SCRIBE TAKES RAP AT UMPIRE CHESNUTT

Judging from the rough and stormy passage which Scott Chesnutt is having these days, it begins to appear that Scott's combination of an oratorical delivery, grand opera voice, and dictatorial manner is not taking very well with the players and managers of the league. On the return of the Cracker ers here a short time since Bill Smith announced that Chesnutt had put some of the worst stuff that he had ever seen in this league. However, Bill was back from a trip that left none of his players and managers with a tendency to mollify some of his charges. But it appears that the proverbial grain of truth had been liberally distributed and that there was really real merit in Smith's charge.

Telling of the circumstances which led up to the scene attendant upon Chesnutt's chasing the Cracker manager from a game in New Orleans during the late series there, one Crescent City scribe has the following to say: "Take your things and get right out of here, Bill Smith, and get out now, or I'll come over there and put you out!"

"Above in the way Scott Chesnutt, who would be lieutenant governor of Alabama had enough people voted for him, replied to Manager Smith's suggestion that Hamner step aside and permit Perry Baugh's arbiter to take a fast one flush on the chest. "Bill Smith didn't obey Umpire Chesnutt, and for some reason or other, the lumps did not put Smith out. He found an easier way—called two husky hall boys. Of course Smith went a fast one flush on the chest, but he did so persons occupying seats down the third base line are probably convinced 'sprigged' with it is not one of those 'peeps' as any price' guru.

Manager Smith was not the only man on the field Umpire Chesnutt mounted during the afternoon. He started to go in for two new balls as is required by the rules to start a game of the ball, and then he was told to get out of the game. Chesnutt's attention to the fact, and Scotty realizing he had been tricked, shook his head in a manner indicating he would get even with somebody before the game ended.

Chesnutt didn't get real good chance until the sixth inning when a foul tip hit Catcher Hamner as he stepped aside and let that bank of cheese get 'em." Smith shouting from the bench. Smith's wrath was evidently what Chesnutt was waiting for. He got up immediately and wound up by allowing a good one of his cool ones in as pinch hitter for him.

The amusing part of the Chesnutt-Smith argument occurred when the arbiter walked over to the Atlanta bench with his mark in his hand. If he intended stepping on the manager, Bill's mug

Tires

Facts don't blow out" —Mr. Squeezee

The people who built the Pyramids did a job that has never been beaten. From foundations to cap-stones they were constructed to endure. There was no overweight anywhere and no part was too weak or too light to match the other parts. Hence the lasting qualities of the Pyramids. Diamond Tires are built, as the Pyramids were built, to last. Every part is made to wear just as long as the other parts endure. Consequently Diamond Squeezee Tread Tires made a record in 1914 that has never been matched. Send for our book of letters from dealers who sold Diamond Tires in 1914. The League of Peace.

There was a wholesome matter-of-factness to the conference of statesmen, jurists, educators and business leaders who met at Philadelphia last week to project plans for an International League of Peace. They ventured upon no quixotic scheme to end the present war by honeyed "persuasion," as Mr. Bryan has proposed. They recognized that this struggle must be fought to a decision, or that if mediation is to be employed, it must come at the request of one of the belligerents and with the consent of the others.

The plans, suggested largely by former President Taft and endorsed by the conference, contemplate a league of nations each of which shall subscribe to the following agreement:

"First, all justifiable questions arising between the signatory Powers, not settled by negotiations, shall, subject to the limitations of treaties, be submitted to a judicial tribunal for hearing and judgment, both upon the merits and upon any issue as to its jurisdiction of the question.

"Second, all other questions arising between the signatory Powers not settled by negotiation shall be submitted to a council of conciliation for hearing, consideration and recommendation.

"Third, the signatory Powers shall jointly use forthwith both their economic and military forces against any one of their number that goes to war, or commits acts of hostility, against another of the signatories before any question arising shall be submitted as provided in the foregoing article.

"Fourth: Conferences between the signatory Powers shall be held from time to time to formulate and codify rules of international law, which, unless some signatory shall signify its dissent within a stated period, shall thereafter govern in the decisions of the judicial tribunal mentioned in Article I."

The third clause of these resolutions is, perhaps, the most significant; for it looks to some system of international police to enforce the judgments of the world court. Unless there are ready means of dealing with outlaws among nations as with outlaws among individuals, outlawry will continue to burst forth in spite of all compacts and tribunals. No treaty was ever more binding in a moral sense than that which guaranteed the neutrality of Belgium, but under the spur of military ambition it was kicked aside as "scrap paper."

Whether the proposal of the Philadelphia conference will find a hearty response after the war is over remains to be proved. Whether these broad ideas can be reduced to practical details is yet to be determined. It is well, however, that so earnest and thoughtful a beginning has been made; and we may hope that in the tragic sundown of the present struggle, the world will turn to some star of enduring peace.

Ty Cobb continues to prove that a champion may hold his own.

The Loyal Swiss.

Switzerland stands out as a little island of security and concord in a surging ocean of war. Its people are of different races, German, French and Italian; but there are no hypens among them. "The German Swiss of Schaffhausen," writes a correspondent, "are not for Germany; the French Swiss of Geneva are not for France; the Italian Swiss of Ticino are not for Italy; and this in spite of the fact that these outlying cantons are almost surrounded by Germany, France and Italy, respectively."

There is a tendency throughout the United States to bring the schools into closer touch with the people's common life. The idea that a school building must be used only a few hours a day and only a part of the year is giving place to a more practical and more humanistic policy. This is true not only of the larger cities but also of rural districts. Country schoolhouses are being used as gathering places for parents as well as children, and are serving as means of enrichment for both social and intellectual life.

Awakening to the Needs Of the National Defense.

Secretary Garrison remarked more than a year ago that the great need of the American army was that the American public should realize the army's needs. Especially is that true of our national defenses today. The people should face the fact that neither their army nor navy is now adequate to protect the country against a powerful foe, and thus admonished they should insist as a matter of prudent patriotism that Congress remedy these shortcomings without delay.

There are hopeful evidences that the rank and file are at last awakening to this grave duty. Business organizations are urging it; peace conferences are recognizing it; educational leaders are stressing it. This does not mean that the country is in a beligerent mood; on the contrary, it is peculiarly calm and self-contained. It earnestly desires a peaceful outcome of pending issues, but it is also mindfully aware of its interests and honor and thinks more intently than ever upon their safeguarding. This is a wholesome spirit, and one to which Congress should respond.

The United States army is dangerously short of men and officers and equipment, particularly as regards the coast defense. Its personnel is admirable and so is its equipment as far as it goes. But every competent observer declares that they do not go far enough. Except for the National Guard, there is no provision for a reserve force, and the National Guard itself is not duly encouraged. The time has come, as a conservative authority urges, "when every regiment of the regular army and of the militia should be raised to its full strength, when the deficiency in field guns, rifles and ammunition for the equipment of an adequate defense force should be made up as rapidly as possible, and when the most vital shortage of all, the shortage of trained men fit to be the officers of our citizen army, should receive vigorous and practical attention."

The navy likewise should be developed to a point commensurate with the country's safety and needs. In auxiliary craft, such as battle cruisers, mine layers and sweepers, submarines and aeronautical service, the American navy is woefully lacking. In summing up our naval resources for combating attack by a first-class power, Rear Admiral Fiske recently said, "We have a smaller number of dreadnaughts, pre-dreadnaughts and destroyers than the enemy could bring; no battle cruisers, no effective scouts, one airship recently constructed, for only three good aeroplanes, not yet ready; two mine depot ships, one mine layer and twelve mine sweepers; about forty-five submarines of all kinds and ages, distributed over the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, Panama, Hawaii and the Philippines; and an inadequate merchant marine from which to get auxiliaries."

Congress cannot fail, in justice to the nation, to supply the navy's needs generously and promptly.

There is one sure way of getting action from Congress, and that is for the people themselves to realize their vital stake in the matter of national defenses. The army's needs are their needs, the navy's needs are their needs. Preparedness will be to their interest, and unpreparedness to their jeopardy. The United States should not enter upon any scheme of militarism in the Prussian sense of that term, but it should be ready to defend its rights, its principles and its character if by any misfortune these should be attacked.

Apparently Italy's ability isn't confined to grand opera and barrel organs.

Naval officers doubtless appreciate the irony of breaking wine on the outside of a ship when she is christened, and afterwards prohibiting it inside.

Using the Schoolhouse.

With a typically New England sense of thrift, Boston is putting its public school; plant to wider and wider use. The Transcript reports that seven social and educational centers for the benefit of adults are now conducted in various parts of the city, and that "organizations, ranging from orchestras to classes in manual training have been formed and successfully maintained." It appears moreover that academic courses are in popular demand at these evening sessions, the men asking for instruction in such subjects as American government, economics and the means to personal efficiency, while the women are interested in music, art and household management. So substantial have been the results thus accomplished, that the municipality expects to make a liberal appropriation for the continuance and extension of this service.

There is a tendency throughout the United States to bring the schools into closer touch with the people's common life. The idea that a school building must be used only a few hours a day and only a part of the year is giving place to a more practical and more humanistic policy. This is true not only of the larger cities but also of rural districts. Country schoolhouses are being used as gathering places for parents as well as children, and are serving as means of enrichment for both social and intellectual life.

The Peril of Grade Crossings.

State Senator John D. Walker, of the Twentieth district, proposes to introduce at the forthcoming session of the Legislature a bill looking to the elimination of railroad crossings on the public highways of Georgia. There is tragic evidence of the need for such a law. Always a menace to life, grade crossings have become especially dangerous with the increase of automobile travel. Appalling accidents will continue to occur until some adequate regulation is adopted and put into effect.

It is important, of course, that any such measure take due account of the railroads' rightful interests. The costs involved should be apportioned equitably among the railway companies and the counties and municipalities concerned; and the reform should be effected gradually in order that the expense may not be crushing. As to the details of Senator Walker's bill, we are not informed; but, presumably it hews to these broad lines of practical justice. Particularly assuring is the fact that it assigns the administration of the proposed law to the State Railroad Commission. The Commission may be trusted to proceed wisely and fairly in working out this problem, if it is given the authority to act.

Though it would be impracticable to abolish all the grade crossings forthwith (there are several thousand in Georgia), a fair beginning could be made with those which are most perilous. Thus in the course of a few years, the improvement would be State-wide, without having imposed a serious burden on any interest. Legislation to this end should appeal to the railway companies no less to the public; it should appeal to their sense of efficiency and good business. The primary consideration, however, is the protection of human life, and on that high principle alone a justly designed bill to abolish or safeguard grade crossings deserves support.

Hope may bud when it is cloudy, but it blooms only in sunshine.

"New cabinet formed in Portugal." Must have been a Bryan in the old one.

America's Financial Supremacy.

The American dollar is today the world's standard of monetary value. While the currencies of all other nations have depreciated under the stress of war as never before, that of the United States stands unimpaired. Reckoned in terms of the dollar, the British pound has declined at least two per cent, the French franc five per cent, the German mark fourteen per cent, and the currency of Austria and Russia nearly twenty-five per cent each. European money buys less and less, while the purchasing power of American money is undiminished and relatively greater than ever.

There could be no sounder or more striking evidence of this country's financial strength and prestige. The Old World is desperately hoarding its gold. The United States has gold in abundance. The European nations have ceased to produce the necessities of life except in a limited and feeble way. The United States is ripening vast harvests and is turning forth huge quantities of manufactured goods. Thus Europe is forced to buy abroad, and the United States is prepared to sell.

The result of these conditions is seen in the fact that American interests are shipping across the sea approximately ten million dollars' worth of merchandise each day. Our favorable balances of foreign trade for the fiscal year now drawing to a close is little short of one billion dollars, and by June the thirtieth it will reach if it does not pass that stupendous figure. This means that we have sold a billion dollars more of goods than we have bought, and that the world's tide of gold has been turned toward our shores. It means that the United States is beginning the world's greatest creditor nation, and that the dollar is king of the world's finance.

Another disagreeable thing about the weather—people are always wanting to talk about it.

Every time you avoid doing wrong you increase your inclination to do right.

Editorial Echoes

At this season in former years there was discussion in financial circles as to the prospective withdrawals of money by the West from this center to pay harvest hands and "move the crops." "Tight money in the autumn" was the usual thing, and often it became so "tight" and commanded such high rates as to force disastrous liquidation in the Wall street markets. There is not a whisper heard now on this subject. With nearly $200,000,000 surplus reserve in the banking institutions of this city, a favorable foreign trade balance averaging $3,000,000 for every working day, and gold flowing into the country in a steady stream, money is easy as the traditional "old shoe." More important than all is the existence of the new banking system with its safeguards against possible restriction. Hence the equanimity with which the banking community looks forward to "moving" the largest crops ever harvested. "Tight money" has passed into history.—New York Herald.

Of the acting Secretary of State the Honorable Robert Lansing it is said that "he is only fifty-one." The "only" is well put in. In Europe the big work today is being done by men of more than sixty. Kitchener, Joffre and French are all past that age, and the Kaiser is winning victories with the veterans of the war of 1870, some of whom have white beards and are close to seventy. In the great war age will not be denied.—New York Sun.

Honduras plantations are being ravaged by locusts, which fly in such dense masses that they obscure the sun. The Honduran planters doubtless enjoy resting in the shade of the locusts more than the Spartan Diogenes enjoyed fighting in the shade of the Persian arrows which darkened the sky at Thermopylae.—Courier Journal.

WIRELESS IN WAR

BY FREDERICK J. HASKIN

The Italian navy entered the European conflict with a better equipment for communication than have any of the other belligerents. An Italian admiral is able to transmit his orders orally to the captains of ships within a certain range by means of a wireless telephone which has been quickly developed by Marconi within the past few months. The Italian navy has officially adopted the new instrument. The British admiralty is preparing to do so. One of the advantages has already been brought to this country, and wireless telephonic communication established between New York and Philadelphia.

The facilities for direct and rapid communication in the present war are among the most striking developments. The advantages of wireless messages over the older systems of telegraphy and telephony are obvious, and this method of communication is likely to be greatly improved during the present war. Marconi has already expressed to the kings of England and Italy his confidence in being able ultimately to transmit an audible speech across the Atlantic ocean by multiplying the power and slightly modifying the design of the instruments which have already proved practical on the Italian ships. The development of this system will result in the telephonic communication of the messages, as in wireless telegraphy, invaluable as that system is proving under the present conditions.

The unrecognized advance in wireless telegraphy, which has been quietly wrought during the past few years, is the invention of the German wireless telegraph stations, which, within twenty-four hours after the declaration of war, of comparatively little importance, the cutting down of interior telephone and telegraph lines, and the telephonic communication of the advancement of troops in former wars had little influence in this one. Wireless messages are being used everywhere. The control of the wireless stations of the world is now more important than the supremacy of the sea. In fact, oceanic supremacy depends almost entirely upon complete wireless connections.

Germany recognized this fully at the beginning of the conflict, and she has firmly established herself in lines of communication which enabled her to be in daily contact with even her most remote possessions. The coming of the war has not only increased the value of this system, but has also made it a more important conquest than the destruction of the strongest vessels of the German navy. Six months ago, a perfect network of wireless communications, centering in the United States and less stations in South Africa, South America, China and the South seas.

The communications with Africa were by way of a station located in the mountains of Swaziland, the Winduk in German Southwest Africa, and to Dar-es-Salaam in German East Africa. It is claimed that the rebellion was started in Africa by messages passing through Winduk. Plans for the invasion of Rhodesia and Uganda were being formulated through the station in Dar-es-Salaam and this station also enabled Germany to keep in touch with conditions in South America. The Anglo-English invasion of the Cameroons severed this communication, and have checked the Germans to Africa.

At Tsing-Tau and in the Bismarck Archipelago, Germany had other powerful wireless stations. The capture of Tsing-Tau by the Japanese and the conquest of the Bismarck Archipelago by the Australians have interrupted the German communication in this part of the world. Germany had also erected a powerful wireless station upon Nanuetok Island, which was designed to facilitate communication with this country. To avoid political complications the United States has assumed charge of this station, and only permits the transfer of neutral messages.

Notwithstanding these drawbacks, Germany still prides herself on her system of wireless communications which have made possible her daring victories on the ocean and her bold aerial exploits. It is understood that the interior wireless system of Germany was the most completely organized in the world. For six months ago, plans were made for constructing a wall of wireless stations around her entire boundaries, which is now being completed. The German wireless stations have aided materially in directing the attacks of the great Zeppelins.

Aerial warfare is made more effective by wireless communication.

FOOD MUST LOOK GOOD

It is not enough to have the food on your table "pure and wholesome." In order for food to attain fully its purpose of providing nourishment, it must be served in an appetizing form. The desire to eat it, if it does not do this, is a matter of digestion will not set properly in motion. And unless the digestive process works smoothly, malnutrition is the result, and the result is a loss of interest in the food placed before one plays an important part in the assimilation of that food as been proved by a number of interesting experiments on animals and human beings. These were made possible by conditions which allowed the experimenters to observe the movements of the digestive tract.

Some dogs studied in these experiments had openings in their throats so large that food swallowed by them did not pass to the stomach, but was regurgitated. Other openings permitted an inner view of the stomach. It was found that when the dogs were given appetizing food, an active flow of gastric juice into the stomach within five minutes after they had started eating. On the other hand, when food was permitted to reach the stomach there was no flow of gastric juice.

"That man says he wants his picture to look perfectly natural," said the photographer's assistant. "Make it as handsome as possible," replied the proprietor. "But he insists that he doesn't want his picture to flatter him."

"He won't think it flatters him. He'll think that at last somebody has managed to catch the wog he really looks like."

A New York man was crossing the Atlantic with an army officer who suffered greatly from seasickness. On entering the stateroom one particularly rough day, he found the officer tossing in his berth, muttering and moaning. He appeared to be in a very bad way. "Boooping over to catch his words, the friend heard him say: "Sergeant... major... brigadier general... captain... lieutenant... major... lieutenant... What are you saying?" asked the friend, in some alarm, as the sufferer looked pitifully up at him after his last gasping "a-a-a-h."

It was little Teddy's first term at school, and his mother was sitting on the bench under the school wall. The little boy was getting along with his studies and was doing very well. "What do you think of school, my dear?" asked the mother. "I like it," said the child. "I want till it's time to go home," was Teddy's matter-of-fact reply.—Harper's Magazine.

communication. Wireless transmission between planes is hindered by the fact that even the most compact apparatus now in use is bulky, and therefore an impediment upon an aeroplane. Still, most of them are prepared to send messages for a mile or two. The operation of the antennas, which catch the Hertzian waves conveying the message, is now receiving attention. Stretching wires between the wings has been tried satisfactorily. The latest development is the use of a wire which can be quickly unrolled to trail behind the machine like the tail of a kite. The German Zeppelin has the advantage of being able to operate in the fact that additional weight does not impede its progress, and they can therefore carry over long distances capable of transmitting messages over long distances. This facilitates their control from boundary stations even when out some distance.

The greatest drawback to wireless telegraphy is its lack of secrecy. Every station, and every department maintains secret codes, but the possibilities of leakage have expanded. Furthermore, when a message cannot be intercepted it can be greatly hindered by a hostile party. The operator who desires to intercept a message tunes his instrument to a level with it. He is usually able to determine whether the cipher used is German or Russian, and can then send out from his own machine a jumble which will greatly confuse the message into which it is thrown.

Notwithstanding these difficulties, the wireless is performing a wonderfully effective service. It is now being used almost exclusively in the conveyance of diplomatic communications. Even the messages between the British and the United States have been exceeded ten thousand words in length have been first put into the wireless code used by the state department, then recorded in the code of the state department and translated into the German language, or vice versa, without any important error being made.

All of the operations of the British fleet are directed by wireless. No person outside of the British admiralty knows just where the fleet is, but the movement of every vessel is directed daily by wireless. He issues his orders through the large force of wireless operators who are engaged day and night in transmitting messages from the admiralty to the fleet. Each ship is also able to hold wireless communication with the other vessels of the fleet.

Wireless communication between vessels is aided by the submarine signal service recently invented by Prof. A. R. Fessenden, of Boston. This is a steel disk, twenty-two inches in diameter, attached to the side of the vessel. It is connected with a small electric battery, the instrument being really an enclosed electric "buzzer." When used above the water the sound would be unbearable, but when submerged, the faintest whisper like a far away siren is audible upon the deck of a vessel equipped with it.

This instrument transmits messages dependably for two or three miles, but inventors are working upon a system of sound magnifying tubes which will enable a vessel to double its range. Most of the United States submarines have been equipped with this new device. During a test given recently outside of Newport Harbor, the submarine was able to receive signals for sixteen miles, and to hear distinctly at seven miles.

Wireless telephony or radio-telephony, as used in the Italian navy, is still in its infancy, but tremendous developments are to be expected within the next few months. It is now being applied in France, and is expected soon to direct the army maneuvers which are now controlled by wireless telephony.

Every French army division is now equipped with its own instrument for setting up a wireless station upon the field. The equipment includes transmitting apparatus, a battery, and aerial towers. The towers are small enough to be carried by a human porter, while the larger ones are transported by specially designed motor cars. These aerial towers, which are daily necessities to some other communication station which transmits them along the necessary relay to the Eiffel tower in Paris, the most powerful wireless station in the world. Return messages are directed back from the war-controlling centers, and little effort would be noted if every wire in the world shared the fate of the German cables after the wireless messages across the globe, enabling the lonely operator on the Antarctic circle to keep as closely in touch with the army upon the Russian frontier as if he were receiving every word "extra" published.

Whatever the dogs were not hungry or if the food given to them was not appetizing. The same phenomenon was observed in the case of people in whom disease had caused external opening into the stomach. When palatable food was chewed, secretion of saliva and gastric juice began at once. But the chewing of tasteless and unpalatable food was not followed by the secretion of these juices.

The application of these observations to household economy is obvious. This helps to explain why so many people suffer from indigestion, their food not being served in an appetizing way. And the facts stated point to the way to increased health through paying more attention to the niceties of the eating process. The flowers on the table, the arrangement of the dishes, the relationship of the food—these are the things that many people seem to think of.

Helping to render food pleasing to the taste and savory to the mouth, they promote the secretion of saliva, which is essential to the proper beginning of the digestive process. Especially are they of importance when through illness, the appetite is poor.

Then, indeed, the serving of food made tempting looking by these simple artifices may mean the restoring of a return to health which otherwise may seem hopeless.

QUIPS AND QUIDDITIES

"Two neighbors had a long litigation about a well spring, which they both claimed. The judge, after sitting out with the case, at last said: "What is the use of making so much fuss about little water?"

"Your honor will see the serious nature of the case," replied one of the lawyers, "when I inform you that the parties are both milkmen."

SWIMMING APPARATUS.

The importance of learning to swim is emphasized in the Cincinnati public schools. Most of the public schools are equipped with bath pools in which swimming exercise is being made obligatory. The time boys are taught to swim by a unique device which has lately been installed.

An oval track is attached to the ceiling from which flexible trolleys are suspended in such a manner as to permit them to run around a course. A rope and a belt are attached to each. The boys who are to be taught to swim fasten the belts to their bodies and are swung into the water when they reach the various strokes under the direction of an instructor who stands at one side of the pool. The belt supports them, so that it is impossible for them to sink, and the trolleys move steadily around the course. Every boy who has tried this new apparatus has learned to swim quickly, and often in a single lesson because he has not been relieved, he can give his undivided attention to mastering the strokes.

Overland Makes Another Great Announcement

Following Their Recent Startling Report Comes Another Which Says That a New, Big, Powerful Car Will Be on the Market at $1,000 Soon

But a few days have elapsed since the widely-overland company started the public announcement of the price of the new car at $1,000. Following the usual sources of information the report that the new car will be on the market at $1,000 soon is about ready to place on the market a big, new, powerful car in the class.

The officials at the big Toledo plant maintained in connection with this new car. This is evidenced by the fact that the usual sources of information are about ready to place on the market a big, new, powerful car in the class.

Mr. N. Willis, president of the Overland company, evidently has his mind on the subject of maintaining this policy. When interviewed on this subject he would not make any further statement other than that the new car would make up in its own way for the long car which has been associated with the Overland name.

Hupp Dealers Hold Session

Three hundred and fifty of the leading Hupp dealers throughout the country met at a large number of sessions during the annual Hupp convention. This year all the sessions were held at a lake resort, the Hupp Hotel, near the city of Detroit. The sessions were held from June 15 to June 18, and were a great success. New Body Types 1916 Hudsons Arriving In Atlanta by Express

There Will Be Seven Different Body Types on Hupp and Price Will Be Lowered Considerably

Two chief points of interest in connection with the new Hudsons are the price, which is $115 lower than last year's, and the number of body types which make up the line, there being seven. The principal ones, of course, are the touring car, the sedan, the two-door, the five-passenger, and the seven-passenger, with 18-inch wheel base. The others include roadster, all-year touring car, all-year coupe, five-passenger sedan, and seven-passenger limousine.

Through numerous improvements and refinements which have been made in construction and finish throughout the car, it is practically the same in its general appearance as the previous model. The design of the motor remains the same, though the engine is about 29 per cent more powerful than that of last year.

The additional power is obtained by increasing the diameter of the valves to 3.5- to 3.8-4 inches and by increasing the clear diameter of the valves to 3.5- to 3.8-4 inches and by increasing the clear diameter of the valves to 3.5- to 3.8-4 inches.

A new starting and lighting system of two units replaces the single unit which has been used last year. The new system, employing current from the storage battery, is continued.

A new feature is an enclosed silent chain instead of an exposed belt for driving the fan. As heretofore, clutch and transmission are assembled in price with the motor. Four additional gears have been added to the clutch, which now has 17 discs, running in all additional springs facilitate the smooth action of the clutch.

The rear axle remains the same, with silent spiral bevel driving gear, and the rear spring suspension is unchanged from the long, understung, semi-elliptic type used last year.

Harley Is Fast No Danger of Forging to Front Too Many Autos

New Records in Racing and Popularity Set by Machine, Ambition of Great Engineer

The amazing growth of the motor car industry is a source of never ending surprise to the public—both the motoring public and the great outside public. Every day the question is asked: "Where does all the money come from to pay for these automobiles?" And always the answer is "When will the point of total saturation be reached?"

What is getting to be a familiar headline to those who are interested in motorcycle racing is "Harley-Davidson wins again." The Harley-Davidson has proven its remarkable reliability and sustained speed previously unheard of in a stock machine in making the unparalleled performance that it has attained in the last 90 days.

At Venice, Calif., they won the international grand prize of 300 miles where they made a record of 1:20 minutes for the four winning first and second places. This was won by Otto Walker with Parkhurst second, both on Harley-Davidson.

At Oklahoma City in a 150-mile race they won the Harley-Davidson first and second places, averaging 44 1/4 miles to the hour.

At Phoenix, Ariz. over a course made famous by Barney Oldfield, the Harley-Davidson again won first and second with Joe Walters and Parkhurst averaging 42 miles to the hour.

This has truly been a Harley-Davidson year in every sense of the word. In spite of the present depressed conditions, the sales throughout the United States and especially in the South have been remarkable. The factory has been compelled to add on extra men and to open the plant for a considerable period in their orders.

Autoists Search Old Death Valley

In an effort to verify the report of the findings of an immense body of ore in the heart of Death Valley, California, O. K. Parker, a well known engineer of Los Angeles, with a party of assistants, has just left that city to tour through Death Valley by motor car.

According to statements of several prospectors, recently returned from Death Valley, large quantities of molybdenite, an ore very little known in metallurgy, have been discovered in that section. Molybdenite, by a new process of refining, can be incorporated in steel to make the latter infinitely stronger and lighter than any metal heretofore discovered by metallurgists.

It is expected and seems to be practically certain that the new process of refining, can be incorporated in steel to make the latter infinitely stronger and lighter than any metal heretofore discovered by metallurgists.

Little Change In Batting List

Lord Retains Lead of League. Lee Tops Cracker—Paulst Is Premier Slugger

But little change has been made in the comparative standings of the leading hitters of the Southern League during the past week. Brian Lord of the Crickets continues to lead the procession with a mark of .315. Press Crutchers, second sacker for the Crickets is runner-up with an average of .275. While Paulst comes third just one point behind Crutchers. The entire field is finding the going rather rough these days, as just an even dozen, including one pitcher is hitting .300 or better.

Yes, Tyrus Is Still Leading

During the past week Tyrus Cobb slumped somewhat in his stick work, but he is still far enough ahead of the rest to suffer one or two more bad weeks, and still lead the procession of the American league unless some of the hitters put on an extra strong spurt. Tyrus still has a margin of one point over the 400 mark, and he has pulled ahead of Joe Jackson who has pulled into second place.

Jake Daubert Holds to Lead

Dodger Captain Six Points Ahead of Luderus—Four Giants Hitting Over .300

With an average of .370 for games played through Wednesday of the past week Jake Daubert, captain and first baseman of the Brooklyn Dodgers, still heads the list of hitters in the National League. Jake has been picking up steadily for the past three or four weeks, and last week reached the top and appears likely to stay there, barring an peculiar coincidence plays first for the Phillies, is the runner-up with .354.

Tiger Slugger Carries Chance to Register Largest Number of Hits as Major Leaguer

PHILADELPHIA, June 19.—Sam Crawford, Tyrus Cobb's slugging partner, is out to break all records for number of hits made, and, barring accidents, is almost certain to surpass the marvelous records of Hank Wagner and Larry Lajoie. Crawford has little chance to equal the marks made by Wagner, Lajoie, Cobb, Anson, Kelly, Keeler, Delehanty and Brothers' two average over a long stretch of years, but the Detroit slugger is likely to register more hits before he retires than any player in the game.

PHILADELPHIA, June 19.—North side fans need not be surprised if two new players are added to the club before it returns from its long journey. Manager Tinker is in the habit of taking a couple of slugging athletes out from all indications the deals will be put through. Joe will see what position he can fill to replace Tinker, but it is not to be known just how far Tinker will go in his search for new players. Tinker has taken such a turn that he cannot afford to wait on them to show any improvement. Tinker is hitting as well as his usual level.

Chandler Was Months Ahead of the "New Models"

THIS is "announcement" time, it seems. You are being told about "new models" and lower prices. Well the new models and the lower prices had to come, for the Chandler pointed the way months ago—not with a cheapened car but with a car that had made good for thousands of owners, at a price that made the industry gasp.

CHANDLER $299.50. The Pioneer Light-Weight Six. The Chandler announced its New Season's car in January, at a price of only $299.50. That price was hundreds of dollars under the price of any other car of really similar character.

"The Road Cruiser"

Ready—the 1916 Hudson

Yacht-Line Body—Ever-Lustre Finish—$200 Less

This new-type Hudson has won a remarkable following. It has brought to all men new ideals of a class car, changing the entire vogue. It has trebled our output, forced immense factory additions, compelled 31 makers to follow our footsteps. Within 20 months, this lightweight Hudson has been adopted by 15,000 motorists.

Now comes another $200 reduction. Now comes the Yacht-Line Body, with new grace, new luxury, new roominess and comfort. Now comes the fulfillment of your dreams—a finish of lasting lustre. Today this favorite class car starts a brilliant new career.

Remember Its History

Two seasons ago this new-type Hudson came out at $1,750. Its announcement startled Motordom. Its price was pronounced impossible in a high-grade Six. Its lightness—under 3,000 pounds—was scoffed at as incompatible with strength.

But the car was a Hudson, and Hudson standards are high. Howard E. Coffin was its designer, and he stands foremost in his field. He and his whole corps had spent two years in testing and perfecting it. And men were waiting for a class car which would cut down operative cost.

So our first month's output was sold before anyone saw the car. When the car appeared men flocked by thousands to it. And for one whole year thereafter Hudson buyers waited weeks for cars.

Now Come Graceful Yacht Lines

Now our designers have spent another year on this car. There was no way to improve the chassis. Fifteen thousand cars, covering millions of miles, had failed to develop one fault. Every part and detail had been refined to the limit.

So in this third model they gave their time to the body. They worked out this stately body, with its graceful, sweeping yacht lines.

Every broken line is eliminated. The top

Then a $200 Reduction

The next season the price—which seemed so impossible—was reduced to $1,550, because of multiplied output. Thirty-one improvements were made in the car, including still lighter weight. Another year's work by our engineering corps showed in its refinement.

This model was soon 4,000 cars oversold. We shipped 1,000 cars by express. It became at once the largest-selling car in the world with a price above $1,200.

That changed the whole trend in motor car designing. It became evident at all that the day of overtax was ended. Men would not stand for excess in weight, size or operative cost. All cars were built lighter, most prices were reduced. And in 31 factories this new-type Hudson became the pattern car.

line of the body and the doors is leather bound.

And they created this luxurious tonneau. The sides are higher than before, the rear seat is much wider, so it doesn't crowd three adults. The car seats seven, with all the room that anybody wants. And the extra tonneau seats disappear when not wanted, doubling the tonneau room.

You have never seen a body so impressive and graceful as this Yacht-Line Hudson body.

Now Comes the Ever-Lustre Finish

And now comes for the first time what you have dreamed of—a lustrous finish which stays new. It is the greatest innovation of the year.

In our new factory addition we have built mammoth ovens, with capacity for hundreds of bodies. Now our body finish is baked on in many separate coats. Each coat of finish is now applied under pressure which fixes it as never before. After each coat the body goes to an oven where it is baked for hours, then rubbed. This is done with every coat—an exclusive Hudson process.

The result is a body that stays new. The finish is smooth and brilliant. It resists sun and rain, washing, rubbing, mud. Experienced motorists who have seen bodies grow old and dull will consider this Ever-Lustre finish the most welcome improvement in years.

We combine it with enameled leather upholstery—better than has ever appeared in a car at this price. And with deep, hair-filled cushions, which means enduring luxury as well. This year's new body features mean much added cost. But it means a revolution in finish, in comfort and appearance.

Now Comes the $1350 Price

The Vogue of Simplicity

Howard E. Coffin saw years ago that the trend was toward simplicity. Now everybody knows it. Excess and waste are unpopular. Good taste now calls for satisfaction without show.

This Hudson has become the class car. Its owners, in large part, are men who have paid two and three times its price. Hudson typifies the ideals of the times. This fact is conspicuous, wherever you look about.

All questions regarding this new-type car have been answered on the road. There are 15,000 Hudsons of this type in use. In two years men have driven them many million miles. And every owner vouches that the car is staunch, enduring, faultless, as well as economical.

Hudson now embodies all that any man can want. It is the fine car of the modern type. Only those men who still take pride in some form of excess will find any car more appealing.

Like No Other Car

Bear in mind that Hudson is like no other car. There are many models of this type, but there are scores of ways—important ways—in which Hudson is unlike them. Let us point them out. This is a Howard E. Coffin creation, a finished product, unique and unapproached.

GENERAL INSURANCE ACT HAS BENEFITED PUBLIC

Protection Afforded Against "Wild Cat" Schemes, Says General Wright

Since the passage of the general insurance act by the general assembly of 1912, declares insurance Commissioner William A. Wright in his annual report just made public, the people of Georgia have been given long-needed protection against "wild cat" promotional schemes involving so-called "income" and "interest-bearing" certificates issued by mutual and co-operative or assessment industrial insurance companies.

Prior to the passage of the general insurance act and after the passage of an act of 1909 which legalized the issuance of the class of certificates named above, the insurance department had no jurisdiction over such concerns and the result was that the sale of the certificates brought financial loss to many citizens of Georgia.

The report Insurance Commissioner Wright makes the following comment on the satisfactory operation of the general insurance act of 1912: "The act above referred to has been in operation for something over two years, and as anticipated by its authors and supporters, has very largely clarified the insurance situation in this state."

Under its wise provisions, this department has been vested with authority to protect the public from wildcat promotional schemes which have been flourished in this state in the absence of any law for the protection of credulous investors.

"No provision of this statute has been of more immediate benefit to the public than the section which I drafted dealing with what is known as 'income or interest-bearing' certificates. The act is a success in Georgia, and undoubtedly encouraged in this state many promotional schemes over which the insurance department had absolutely no jurisdiction.

"These new certificates caused a financial loss to many citizens, not only of this but of other southern states, by their aggressive terms, as well as by a decision of the supreme court, not recognizing the validity of a company's certificate. Since the passage of the act under the operation of the act, the sale of these certificates has been prohibited, and no further certificates have been issued without the supervision of the insurance department.

"A commissioner Wright's report shows that during 1914 the 1914 life and fire and marine insurance companies doing business in Georgia collected premiums amounting to $1,440,196, and $1,000,000, respectively, which was a 10 per cent increase over the previous year. Last year the 1914 life insurance companies operating in Georgia collected premiums amounting to $1,026,629, and $1,000,000, respectively, which was a 10 per cent increase over the previous year. Revenue collected through the insurance department last year, same being the same as insurance companies and agents of companies and agents, amounts to $21,164,642.

"An appointment examined a number of insurance companies and took over a number of law companies for liquidation under court orders. Commissioner Wright recommends amendments to the fraternal societies act which he feels certain will resolve the act more effectively.

CARPENTERS ARE BENT ON WAGE INCREASE

(By Associated Press) CHICAGO, June 19.—Mayor Thompson's attempt to mediate in the building trades strike, as he did successfully in the street car strike, failed today when James IKelly, president of the national organization of carpenters, returned to his home in Indianapolis. Mr. Kelly found that carpenters were opposed to any settlement not having an advance in wages as an understood basis. The union men claim to have and of their 18,000 members already are getting seventy cents an hour, demand for which would raise the strike more than a month ago.

BECKER'S LAWYER THINKS HE WILL BE SET FREE

Bases Belief on Statement to Be Made to Governor Whitman

NEW YORK, June 19.—Charles Becker's plan to Governor Whitman for executive clemency will be made soon and will contain a statement which Martin F. Mantion, his counsel, said here today could not only save his life but set him free. Becker is under sentence to die in the electric chair during the week of July 15 for the murder of Herman Rosenthal.

Manton outlined Becker's plans as far as they have matured, upon his arrival here today from Ossining after an interview in the death house with his client.

Becker, with virtually no recourse left except executive clemency, Mantion agreed to have his lawyer place such a plea before the governor, Mantion said. If clemency is denied, Mantion said, Becker would go to the chair still protesting his innocence and, in all probability, leaving behind no written statement.

What Becker's plea for mercy will contain, and what part the convicted man's wife will play in the final fight for his life, were topics Mantion said he could not discuss.

COTTON CROP OUTLOOK DISCUSSED BY RAVENEL

Former Atlantian's Opinion Quoted Recently in the New York Commercial

St. Julien Ravenel, formerly of Atlanta, and well known here, discussed the cotton crop outlook in the New York Commercial recently in the following interview, which will be read with interest here: "General opinion in the south among well posted men seems to be that with favorable climatic conditions the cotton crop will not be over 13,000,000 bales, but should be the weather be bad, the yield may not exceed 10,000,000 bales. This was the report brought back by St. Julien Ravenel, with Rensselaer, Lyon & Co., who is in the market from an extended trip through the belt. Mr. Ravenel says these estimates of yield are based on the fact that the cotton crop in all crop, namely reduced acreage, curtailed use of fertilizer and inferior grade of what fertilizer is used.

Mr. Ravenel estimated that the reduction in acreage will be nearer 20 per cent than 25 per cent average throughout the belt. His very reliable estimates of reduction in fertilizer, placed at 40 per cent, while the grade is lower by reason of smaller percentage of ammonia and potash, usually, for an indication of reduced use of fertilizer the case of Georgia in a case in point. That state has used only 700,000 tons of fertilizer this season compared with 1,200,000 last year.

PIG BREEDING SHOWS DECLINE IN IRELAND

DUBLIN, June 19.—The decline of pig breeding in Ireland, states a report from the Irish department of agriculture, is due in large part to the want of "housing accommodation" for the animals in the new cottages, and the growing disinclination of laborers' families to look after them. The shrinkage in the number of pigs amounts to 20 per cent. In Ulster, the report states, it is the

Crippled Peddler Left Ams House To See the World

Bill Watley, Who is Scarcely Able to Walk, Has Since Traveled As Far West As Frisco. Lives on 15 cents a Day

"I'm no pauper," he said, moving his crutch to make room for his questioner. "No more poor house for me. I can make 50 to 75 cents a day, and I never fall below a quarter. Since I left out there in 1906, I've been as far west as San Francisco, and I mean to go to New York."

"Out there," is his description of Fulton county's almshouse. He says the "out" from anything—sights and sounds of the city, people, work, even the privilege of being hungry and of getting your next meal by hook or crook.

It was so much "outside" and away from every real thing that it couldn't hold him.

The records show that about 1905 William Watley told the poor house good-bye, and hasn't been back since. But something the statistics don't show is how he left. He had a crutch under one arm, he toiled along painfully, with the whole left side of him dragging, and his speech was thick and indistinct.

Paralysis had left him an utter invalid. But it couldn't keep him in the poor house.

Anyone else as badly broken and despondent by sickness as William Watley is, would be lying on the flat of his back and looking for other people to feed him.

But this poor pencil-peddler is a rare breed of human being. He simply doesn't know what it is, to give up—he can't be beaten.

Just leaving the almshouse was merely a beginning for him. You would think that a livelihood, even the most pined, would be his whole ambition and that to attain that would take a courage and a wit on his part deserving of the topmost praise. But he hadn't more than got free of the almshouse and mixed with people here and seen what there is in Atlanta, than he decided he needed to see other cities.

He can't read or write, he talks with a very great effort, and finds it hard to make himself understood, and he doesn't like to simply drag himself forward. But he's been through half the states of the union. With just money enough to pay his way to Chattanooga, he left Atlanta, and stayed in the Tennessee city, selling pencils, until he had railroad fare to another nearby place. He finally got to Washington, and all the capital city had to show, and worked his way back to Atlanta.

Selling pencils is his whole means of a livelihood; and it's real peddling, and not begging. He never asks anyone to give him money.

For a little while longer he settled down here; then the thought came to him that he should see the great, free west, and he set out, not a single misgiving, not a single fear, thoroughly confident he could get along anywhere, and yet he is the most hopeless of cripples.

It is merely because of his undaunted spirit that he is able to drag himself along all.

He went to New Orleans and he also stopped over in Hattiesburg, which, by the way, he says is the only decent town in the south besides Atlanta; then, he struck out for the real heart of the west. All in the world he had was courage and hope—a cripple, disabled, untaught, not even knowing his letters, but as brave a traveler as ever took the long road.

He went into Texas, into Mexico, into Arizona, then on to California, saw San Francisco, sold everybody pencils, looked on the Pacific, thought a while of shipping to the far east, then thought better of it and turned his face homeward.

Two years ago he arrived back in Atlanta, and since then, he has done little or no wandering. But he hasn't yet seen enough of the world; he isn't at all satisfied to sit down and become a stay-at-home. The spirit of the adventurer is still strong in him; and before long his crutch will be tapping out on strange roads.

Last week he received an interviewer on the Houston street ventilator of the candler building. He removed his crutch for the visitor to sit down, and very promptly entered into his story.

He told of the almshouse and how he couldn't for the life of him live there; he told of his travels, of what a good town Hattiesburg is and what better one New Orleans is; he explained how one night, out west, he was robbed of all he had and woke up the next morning with a bunch of pencils. What did he do? He sold more pencils and got more money.

Then, he brought his journey to an end back in Atlanta, and told how things are going with him now.

"Oh, I'm doin' fine," he said. "I never make less than a quarter a day, and I can live on 15 cents. You can keep going on that. And save money, too."

He got up, struck his crutch under one arm, and began to move painfully down the street, holding out to pass—by his bunch of pencils.

"So long," he called back. "See you in New York."

Vacation Hint Given By City Physician

IN going for your health this summer, be sure that you are not going away to get sick.

It is the advice of Dr. Claude Smith, city physician. He says that among the cases of typhoid fever in Atlanta last summer a number were instances where the patients contracted fever on their vacations and brought it home with them.

"Georgia," he added, "is of course filled with the best of resorts. Throughout the south you'll find places that are ideal for resting. But you should always make sure your summer resort is sanitary. The Atlanta board of health is thinking of making up a list of resorts near Atlanta, and of saying just what their healthful qualities are.

In my opinion, one of the greatest health problems during the summer is keeping well while you are away from home."

War Medal For Georgia Soldier Who "Killed 3,000 Men"

On the left, at the top, is Grady Powell, of Lincoln county, Ga., who is now serving with the Canadian field artillery and who was wounded recently at Ypres. For his bravery he may be given a commission in the British army. He estimates that he has fired 6,000 shots from the field gun under his direction, and that he has killed 3,000 men. On the right, at the top, is one of the Krupp siege mortars used with such telling effect by the Germans. On the left, at the bottom, is a British field gun of the type with which Grady Powell says he has killed 3,000 men. The pictures printed here are copyright by Underwood & Underwood.

THE VICTORIA CROSS in all probability will be awarded Grady Powell, the Georgia boy from Lincoln county, for his bravery in the recent fighting at Ypres where he estimates that he killed 3,000 of the attacking Germans, and it is possible that he will be given a commission in the British army.

Powell was serving one of the big guns of the Canadian artillery and, in all, he fired 6,000 shots, half of which, he says, must have found their mark.

In a light-hearted letter to an uncle living near Lincoln, Ga., he told all this and mentioned the fact that he had been wounded and was then in the military hospital at Chichester, England.

Since the arrival of this letter, a communication has been received from the British war office asking for information about Powell—where he was born, the names of his parents, and a great deal of other personal data and explaining that the information is requested because of a promotion the Georgia boy is to be given.

From the tone of this letter it seems that Powell probably will get a commission in the British army for the brave way in which he stood by his guns in the bitter fighting at Ypres where the Canadians were the center of the German attack. It is almost certain he will get the Victoria Cross. This honor was mentioned in another letter, and was taken account for granted.

After a short while in training camp, his battery was ordered to France and got there just in time to stand off the Germans when they started their drive to the coast. The Canadians showed better in this fighting than the British troops have in any other engagement, and Powell was right in the thick of it. The letters from the British war office are evidence that his bravery was exceptional.

Later on he was wounded by a piece of exploded shell cutting its way round his forehead. The shell dropped just behind his gun and blew him 15 feet into the air.

In a letter to his uncle, Capt. John H. Flanagan, a farmer living near Lincoln, which was printed in The Journal's Sunday magazine, last week, Powell said: "I have been lying in the hospital and trying to decide how many notches to file in my gun. Here's what it is: I have fired about 6,000 shots (I have that pretty accurate), and each shot, when it bursts, splits 35 round lead bullets about the size of a pigeon egg. Then, of course, there are the fragments of the shell, making at the very least 150 little missiles of lead for the Germans. This makes three millions of shots, any one of which would entitle me to file another notch on my gun. But, let's say I only got one

Eight Languages In Little Shop On Viaduct Place

English, Turkish, Arabic, French, German, Spanish, and Greek Spoken. Owner is From the Far City of Smyrna

"WE SPEAK" Greek, Turkish, Arabic, Italian, Spanish.

This sign is on the window of a delicatessen shop on Viaduct place.

Roast beef can be served in Greek. Stew, in Turkish. Ham sandwiches, in Arabic. Dill pickles, in German. Spaghetti, in Italian; Omelets, in Spanish.

The shop was opened by a man who lived once in Smyrna under the rule of the Turks. He was working with him a brother-in-law, born on the same street in Smyrna.

Among the waiters in the shop is an Italian from Palermo, Sicily; a Greek, from Athens, Greece.

The owner of the shop of all languages is named B. Cohen. Years ago, he and his brother-in-law, Morris, of the same family name, left Smyrna, for New York.

Morris, who was in charge at the shop one morning last week, said:

"I left Smyrna because I didn't want to serve in the army. My father and mother live there now. My brother has been compelled to enlist as a Turkish soldier."

"When I came to America I knew no English, but I knew a trade. I was a blacksmith. I got a job without any trouble in New York and then I came to Atlanta."

"There is no place fit to live, but America." As he said this he was slicing a hunk of roast beef into strips for sandwiches. He paused and tapped the handle of the knife on the meat. "I only want to go back long enough to see my people, but never to live."

"In Smyrna," he went on, "Turkish was my native tongue. I learned something of French and Spanish, because in that country where I was born, we count and so on it helps you to know many languages. My brother-in-law, who owns the shop here, speaks Arabic; we have others who speak German and Italian, and we all know English."

According to Morris there are a good many shoe-makers on Tryon street who are from Smyrna and some who are from Spain.

"There are a number of people in Atlanta," he said, "who have lived under Turkish rule. Some of us, like myself, have traveled much in the Holy Land and America is to me really the only land of Holiness."

Then, he stopped talking to serve a wooden platter—full of cold meat to a customer.

Tired People Ask For Beds At Grady

THE superintendent of the Grady hospital said recently:

Atlanta seems to have more than its share of old, worn-out people, who appear to have no friends and no way to take care of themselves. People are constantly coming to us who want to be admitted as patients, although they are not sick. They are simply old and worn-out and want some place where they can lie down and can get regular food.

Their condition is very tragic. They have slowly reached the age and the conditions of weakness where they shouldn't have to work any longer and where someone who is younger and vigorous should care for them.

But unfortunately they are without any staff for their old age. They have grown to be weak and tottering and have no prop or stay. The hospital can't take them in because we scarcely have room for the sick people. Many of these unfortunate are not eligible for admission to the almshouse. In fact, there is no place in the world for them.

"I don't know of any unhappier condition than such helplessness, weary, old age."

Turtle Uses Glass Discs As Mirror

DALTON, Ga.—Fred Nations, an employe of the municipal water plant, found a large turtle in a water meter box, the aquatic quadruped being about as big as a man's—green head. When caught, the turtle had managed to remove the glass discs off the meter, and was using them bedaubed with mud on one side, as mirrors before which he made his toilet.

Since it is in the meter box, the turtle found little to occupy his attention, so he learned the art of spinning the hands of the meter. He could make it register faster than can the water commissioners, which as all who saw him conceded, was a fairly creditable performance for a turtle.

It took only one look for the board of water commissioners to telegraph a hurry order for enough mirrors to supply every meter in the city, but the order was hastily cancelled when it was seen that the turtle got equally as much fun in making the meter run backward, as forward.

KING OF DARK TOWN

THE PAVN-BROKER'S COFFIN AND THE TREE OF HEAVEN

WHILE he was in Petrograd, Russia, this winter, Dr. Dean F. Wins, of Atlanta, who is serving in the American Red Cross, saw two pictures of him—one was the Speedway, the other was Decatur street.

No part of the south has become more famous than this street of fish and pawn shops.

Living on Butler; Just off Decatur, is a frog-eyed negro who's the king of his community.

Not far up Decatur street is a pawnshop that can't get rid of a coffin.

And further up is a Tree of Heaven

Frog Bell, the King

"BELL" repeated the keen, thin, sly grin in the doorway. "Frog Bell?"

And he closed around using his shoulder blade as a pivot against the doorpost.

Frog!

His high voice squeaked back through the murk of smoke that left the long room dusty and vague and made the figures at the pool tables like shadows.

"Frog!" A deeper voice echoed the call.

From the tobacco mist a rolling figure, using the salt of a seaman, emerged slowly into the daylight and showed an average-looking Decatur street negro, except for the peculiar set of his eyes and his mouth.

Years ago "Frog" had looked a fully developed case, and recovered, something almost unheard of. The distorted effects of mouth and eyes that he brought from the hospital ward, gave him his name.

Lounging against the doorpost of Kline's, half a block from Butler on Decatur, he stood now in the sunshine, with the murky interior of the poolroom behind him, and the figures of the negroes there showing mistily. Frog stood in the good light of the day, and smiled the smile that is known all an end down Decatur—the humorous, good-natured parting of those twisted lips; the half-closing of his rather queer, but twinkling eyes; the crazing of his face into a thousand wrinkles.

Without any introduction he would have seemed an unusual negro. But word had preceded him from police court itself had Frog is the ruler of all that part of Darktown conversing at Butler and Decatur.

For 29 years he has lived in a stone's throw of that corner, and gradually built up a following. Before prohibition he tried to lessen the drunkenness, when cocaine was added to the drink, he started a crusade on the snowbirds, and now he is having a word to say against idleness.

Once an order was issued from police court that certain of the lawless crowd of Decatur street should report daily to Frog, as though he were an official probation officer.

Any negro in trouble go to this twisted-face man of their own color, and he gives them a wise man's advice. He is the dominant figure of the black people on Decatur street, he is their adviser, their guide, and the good friend of the police. He prevents crime, he helps to catch the criminal.

He is remarkable, this fellow of the queer contorted face who lounged now in the doorway of Kline's.

A man slouched by with vacant eyes.

"Coke," said Frog, putting in a word the fellow's trouble. "We still gets it down here, home. But not like we used to. There seems to be some that peddle, and them with the habit will go to him so quick you might think their mother was dead. A few seem to be doing out, and I think we'll be rid of the coke snuffers before long."

"I don't drink like they used to, and it's quiet on Saturday night. Decatur street is gettin' better, nothing like it was three years ago. I think in another year 'er'll have it in pretty good shape."

"Are you trying to reform the street?" I asked him.

"No, sir, just tryin' to make it like it ought to be."

The Pawned Coffin

"EVERYTHING'S going out and nuthin's coming in."

Up and down pawn shop rows this wall. Everyone is pawning and no one is buying. The dealers are beginning to figure that by the time the war ends and the world gets flush again, they'll have every known human commodity in their collection, each with its own story of poverty or crime.

Every day now the collection of pawned articles piles higher. One dealer has 29 pianos stored in the basement of his Decatur street shop, and, on top of two, stretches a coffin. He has had that coffin three years, and he doesn't seem any nearer to selling it. The thing really has begun to hang round the neck of his store like a lodestone.

There are, however, a suggestion of death and of the end of human hopes and efforts. Every time he goes down into the basement, it seems to stare at him, and to say mutely that his day is coming. Neglected it may be now, but it will find its use.

Long lines of banjos strung together on ropes hang from the ceiling in every shop on the "row," piles of traveling bags, which give up touring, touring, crowd the corners, and filling the show cases are miscellaneous wares dice with holy books, and the tools of an artisan are next to what seems once to have been a burglar's kit.

Not long ago, the shop now haunted by the coffin, had, in addition to the narrow black box, a baby's carriage and a complete outfit for safe wrecking. It looked as though a mourner, a parent, and a burglar, had each visited the place.

It isn't the peculiarity of the things pawned, however, that bothers the "row" today; it's the number. Formerly stuff hocked Monday was redeemed the next Saturday.

"Now looks as though the pawnbrokers might as well get a gun and go to war."

M. R. Fienman, who knows the "row" here, in New York, and all the other big cities, crossed his legs last week in his shop just across from police station.

"Business let 'em," he said. "All the money goes out and nuthin' comes in. I guess we make nuthin' of interest. Sales is the only way we can get a profit. I don't want to make any more."

The Tree of Heaven

A "TREE OF HEAVEN," black-limbed, wrinkle-leaved, sooty bark, and gnarled, leans out over Decatur street from the second-story gutter of the brick building marked La A. Young Men's Library association.

A few doors to the left is a saloon, and a few doors to the right is a twin-drinkin' shop. Just beneath the few gnarled drooping leaves are peddlers, shoe blacks and the passing crowds of Decatur.

For a footing, the stumpy "Tree of Heaven" has only an inch or two of earth in the gutter. "It has fairly grown into the building. Even seeing it at close range fails to show how it has found an abiding place in that queer spot. At first it seems simply to be growing out of the crack of the building. But there are a few handfuls of earth in the gutter which have sufficed to hold and to nourish the dwarfed tree.

It is about 15 feet in height, though it grows straight up instead of up and down, and it is a good many years old. Shortly after the building quit being a library, and the saloons and the street peddlers began to cluster at its feet, the tree took growth in the gutter of the second story club above it.

It was in 1887 that the Young Men's Library association occupied the grimy cluster of brick on Decatur street just below Fryer street. After that the building was put to many purposes, and finally was used chiefly as a courtroom by former Justice of the Peace L. M. Landrum. It was in his life time that the tree first took root in the earth that had accumulated in the gutter, and since then, every occupant of the building has agreed that the plant should be given a fighting chance.

If it could live, let it live. If it had to die, then peace be with it.

This unlucky "Tree of Heaven" serves no good purpose; does nothing, in fact, but clog the gutter and excite the surprise of people who see it as they pass and wonder where it finds root.

But since it took an abiding chance, why not give it a free hand? That is how everyone reasoned.

In such surroundings on Decatur street it seems out of place and of heaven and a building with the inscription: "Young Men's Library association."

30-Day-Old Goat Rivals the Big Lion at Grant Park for Public Notice

Little Girl, Seeing the Peacock's Spread Tail Wanted To Know: "What Sort of Animal Is that?" Thousand Bags of Peanuts Eaten Each Sunday. All Manner of Ties to Be Seen

GRANT PARK, on Sunday, is the most varied and interesting spot in Atlanta. It runs over with children, more peanuts are eaten there than at any other place in the world, the little lake swarms with boats, now and then the lion is accommodating enough to roar, but among all the animals the most interesting is a month-old goat.

The promenade before the animal cages was almost deserted. The crowd, by common consent, was moving toward the fenced-off paddock of lissams and deer. Children were held up on the picket fence, and grown people leaned over at a companionable figure. A small cloud of dust arose, and the little goat all undaunted, scrambled to his feet.

During all Sunday afternoon people lissamed before the enclosure, held out bits of grass for the goat to nibble, and tried to stroke his dancing little body.

He is no bigger than your dog, with just the hint of round, knobby horns growing out of his tough little skull. But his rascals and curvets and lunges, as though Mother Nature had given him a spoonful more than his share of life.

The crowd grew thicker.

"Hey, Daddy," said a little voice, from somewhere down among the knees of the folks, "pick up me." And then, one finger pointed toward the little goat: "I see somethin' funny."

A neighbor, of the same age, balanced on the top of the fence, was trying to squelch down into the paddock.

"Hey, you old goat," said the neighbor.

At the same time a sunny-faced, broad, merry-looking woman took it all in with a smile.

"I think," she said, "the goats are the nicest things out here."

JUST up from the paddock of the goats, on the way back to the animal house, was an enclosure, with green grass inside and a peacock standing on a snob of ground, looking the other way, with its tail spread into a semi-circle of Vanity.

A little girl dressed in a boy's Buster Brown suit, her hair bobbed and little socks coming up to the calves of her white twinkling legs, danced down the path. Her eyes were the size of 25-cent pieces, and there was the flush of joy and excitement and wonder in her cheeks.

With one arm stretched out she stopped dead still, and pointed to the fanfare of feathers.

"Mother," she cried, "mother. What sort of animal is that?"

It was a few steps from there to the zoo, where the poor old lion was about laid out with the heat, and one of the cubs was folded in a knot looking like a sick cat.

But at the door a heated argument was going on which showed that, however the animals looked, their blood-thirsty qualities were still held in high esteem by some members of the community.

A little four-year-old boy and a negro nurse who couldn't have been more than six, were the parties to the discussion. Just a few minutes before, the lion, tormented by the heat, had let out a weak roar.

But it hadn't sounded weak to the little boy, who held the animal house at the time and his hand had risen straight up.

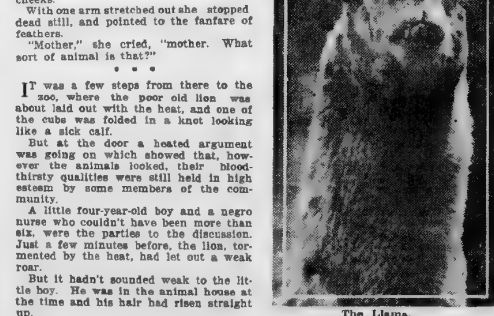

"Aw, come on," said the nurse, "we'll run by."

"The little boy shook his head.

"All right," said the nurse, "I won't give you nothin' I'm goin' to buy on the little boy just dug his heel in the dirt."

"Well, good-bye," said the nurse, and maneuvered to get out of sight.

But the little boy didn't budge. Five minutes later, with the nurse utterly defeated, the two went around the animal house by the back way where they couldn't even see the lion.

The boats was yelling out numbers, and people were buying peanuts and cold cream, and the man at the peanut stand estimated that he had already sold 1,000 bags.

One rather lean, leathery-faced woman, with her hands folded in her lap and her expression that of content, was sitting on one of the benches stretching in a long line near the water.

"An' our family's well but me," she said, "I ain't had no health." And, as

The Man Who Remembered

By Angus Perkerson

A SMALL man was sitting in a big chair, turning through the leaves of a file.

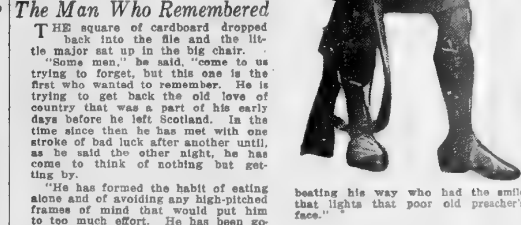

Each square of cardboard he lifted, looked at, and shoved over, was the record of an unfortunate human being.

He was sifting these compendiums of everyday misery for the unusual and striking exceptions. Out of the plain hunger and sickness he was attempting to select the spectacular shipwreck—the resistance men and the adventurers.

The man turning through the leaves of the file was Major W. A. French, of the Salvation Army Home on Whitehall street; the record before him of human filoniam and Islam was a list of the hungry men who come to the Home for lodging and food.

"Here!" he said, "this is a likely one." And he stopped with the piece of yellow card between his fingers.

He held the cheap, stiff square of paper so that the black side was to the left, and he sat a long time without saying anything. What was the human instance—the suffering or the sad—explains by the notations on the other side? I leaned over, and the major coughed.

The Man Who Remembered

THE square of cardboard dropped back into the file and the little major sat up in the big chair.

"Some men," he said, "come to us trying to forget, but this one is the first who wanted to remember. He is trying to get back the old love of country that was a part of his early days. He's a real patriot. It is the time since then he has met with one stroke of bad luck after another until, now, he's in a real tight spot. He has come to think of nothing but getting by."

He has formed the habit of eating alone and of avoiding any high-spiced frames of mind that would put him to too much effort. He has been going with the wind and drifting here and there, but he has been going to get to the best thing he does just drift. That has been his idea of life.

It hasn't occurred to him for years that such a thing as patriotism or self-denial exists. But a month ago something woke up an unused corner of his brain. He was reading about the war when he came to a story of a Scotch regiment and how it died with one man showing the fear of death.

"The thing may have been written out of whole cloth, and even if there was some truth in it, the details must have been imaginary. As you know, none of the war officers are sending out any more accounts of how regiments are shot to pieces."

"But whether it was a lie or not, it got next to this man. He is a Scotchman, and here was reading about a man trying like me, while he was living like a dog. He seldom even dressed cleanly. Just enough food to keep him from starving. He began to think: 'Why can't I feel like that? Why have I got to be a dirty dog rambling around from place to place, doing nothing and wanting to die nothing?'"

"All this happened down in Columbia, where the old fellow had drifted in from some place further back. He stayed a week longer tormenting himself with his own thought: 'Why can't I get back? Why can't I be like the same man since a patriot I had as a Scotch lad in the old country?'"

"With a clean collar, shoes worn until you could see his toes, he eased in here one morning, and asked us for God's sake to help him get a clean suit and money enough to reach Canada."

"You know why? That damn's going to enlist in the new Canadian army because he got himself worked up to the point where he intends to quit being a tramp and give the German a chance to kill him."

"In a few days he'll have the clothes, then he'll breeze out and work his way by short stages over the border."

The Drifter

THE major frowned over the card between his forefinger and thumb, frowned like one who's found something distasteful.

"Here we've got a drifter," he said, "the most hopeless proposition in the world. This man is a cotton-picking worker. He hasn't intelligence, hasn't industry, and hasn't health. When he came in I asked where he'd worked last."

"Dallas, Texas," he said.

"How long did you work?" I asked.

"Five days," he said.

"Why did you quit?" I asked.

"Just wanted a change," he said.

THE major was shaking his head, eyeing the card as you would eye a poor fellow, brave in his misfortune, head up, shoulders back, and, yet, without a chance in the world.

"He runs his race," said the major, "and still you can't make him believe it. He thinks he's still got a chance. If he's a railroad man from up in Indiana, and he came here thinking he could get a job. Every day he dies out and goes round the railroad yards. But he's 52 years old, a man of his age hasn't got a chance with the railroad now. He won't admit it, he doesn't realize it, he doesn't believe it. He thinks right now he'll get a job Monday, maybe, but the truth is he'll never work another day for the railroads."

How Men Bear the Burden

THE major had shuffled all the cards together again, the old and the young, the shiftless and the adventurous, crammed together in one box, and leaned back.

"We got over nationality here," he said. "For a good long time we've had a Russian who fought at Port Arthur against the Japs, and now, among the borders are a Finlander, Englishman, Scotchman, and plain Americans (Danish). We find that the northerners (the hardest—the Swedes and the Danes)—they are a brooding people anyway, and when they're down, they're in the doleful of melancholy and not apt to get up again. The English and Scotch, as you know, are stubborn, never admit they are defeated and meaning to keep on trying all the while. The French and the Italians are despairing one moment, and happy the next, and Americans—they're just what you are."

LEADERSHIP IN SPANISH BISHOP CANDLER ADVISES YOUNG MEN OF SOUTH

By Bishop Warren A. Candler.

THE Monroe Doctrine, which most American citizens believe should be maintained at all cost by the government of the United States, is the declaration upon the part of our country that our national welfare is vitally involved in the political status of the Latin-American republics south of us, and that we have serious responsibilities with respect to any aggressions upon them by European powers.

It is rather remarkable that while the government of the United States has maintained so long and so insistently "the Monroe doctrine," our trade with our Latin neighbors has been no greater. One of the results of the war in Europe has been the awakening of both them and us to the importance of cultivating henceforth more intimate commercial relations with one another. Pan-American sentiments are in the air and Pan-American plans are receiving daily discussion. In Latin American statesmen and the leaders in our own country did not proceed far in the consideration of these matters before they discovered that a pre-requisite for profitable trade between the United States and the countries south of us is the establishment of banking institutions by our financiers through which the processes of exchange can be operated with facility and convenience. By such means both England and Germany have secured much South-American trade for many years past. The war in Europe having interrupted these currents of commerce, the South American peoples have turned their eyes toward us for what European nations have supplied heretofore.

The wisest mind is able to see the vast importance of the commercial opportunity which has thus come to our country under present conditions. Unfortunately it must be equally apparent that we are not ready to make the most of it. With inexhaustible natural resources and a vast territory in which an infinite variety of products are abundant, we have been able, in the past, to live prosperously by domestic trade between the different states of our own country; and, by consequence, we have been somewhat indifferent to foreign trade. We have lived inside the barbarous wall of a high protective tariff until we have been negligent of our commercial relations with our nearest neighbors. We have not sought their trade very zealously, and we have not studied carefully their customs nor learned to communicate with them in their own language. But the time has come when all this must be changed, and our most pressing want just now is men who are qualified to meet the demands of the situation which confronts us. Recently, when a proposition was under public discussion looking to the establishment of a central bank in the United States authorized to open branches in the Latin-American Republics, President Vanderlip, of the National City Bank of New York, pointed out our serious lack of capable men for such an enterprise. In an interview with the newspaper correspondents he pointed out some of the difficulties which would stand in the way of the successful operation of this scheme; and he is reported to have said:

"In the first place, the fundamental difficulty is in getting men. It is not hard to get trained business men for branch banks as anything I know of, and when you add to that the difficulty of getting a trained banker who can speak Spanish and ask him to go to the other half of the globe, you will find it is almost utterly impossible. There is no definite and concrete proposal for any change in the banking relations in the conference so far as I have heard. The conference, however, will do us much good. I remember attending a Pan-American conference in the Elaine regime as a newspaper reporter, and have always found that they brought men closer together and made them more friendly."

"Yet banking institutions must be founded on hard business, and when you cannot get the right men to represent your branch abroad you are certainly not going to send any untrained men to do it." In these few, but strong words, Mr. Vanderlip sets forth the prime obstacle in the way of all departments of our trade with Latin-America, as well as the chief difficulty in the way of the proposed scheme of a central bank with branches in the lands to the South. We have not the prepared men required. Few of even the educated young men of our country speak the Spanish language, and most of our colleges and universities do not give the Spanish language a fair stand in their courses of study. Our institutions of learning manifestly study of French and German, and give Spanish a secondary place. This should not be so, and our Southern institutions especially should not deal thus with the matter. They should offer full courses in the Spanish language, and then go further in offering courses setting forth the history, customs, and conditions of the Latin-American countries.

For obvious reasons Southern men have many advantages for pursuing business in the Spanish-speaking countries to the south of us; and our Southern institutions should proceed to prepare with all speed and thoroughness men for such work. Both interest and duty coincide in this urgently important matter.

We should not look towards Latin-America with an eye for gain only; we should endeavor to discern and discharge our duties also towards our Spanish-speaking neighbors. We should fulfill the part of a strong, rich brother with respect to them. We do not deserve to win their commerce if we do nothing for their moral and intellectual well-being. But we can neither gather gains from them nor carry good to them without trained men who speak their language and understand sympathetically their spirit. Such men our colleges and universities must prepare with the least possible delay.

The trustees of Emory University did a wise thing when, at their recent meeting in Oxford, they made provision to enlarge and improve the courses in Spanish offered by the school of liberal arts. This progressive policy has not been inaugurated too soon, and the university is fortunate in being able to secure for the Spanish chair a capable man qualified by previous residence in Cuba to teach not only the language, but impart knowledge of the customs and intellectual life of the Latin-American peoples to the students whom he will instruct. Our colleges and universities should not only prepare men for service in Latin-America, but they should offer also such courses as will be calculated to draw students from Latin-America to these institutions. In view of the mildness of our climate students from the lands south of us would naturally prefer attending a really great institution in the central South to going to a school in the rigorous climate of the North.

Why not seize the present moment to make Atlanta a great educational center to which large numbers of Latin-American students may be attracted? To make such a center here will cost a considerable sum of money, but not to make it will cost more. This matter involves the future of Atlanta and the South, and it is a matter of vital importance to all of us who have ever engaged the thought and effort of our people.

A WOMAN TO DIRECT ATLANTA'S RAILWAY TRAFFIC

MISS DITA MAY WEST.

IT WAS no trouble at all," said a pretty Miss West, as she talked last week of how she once directed at least 100 or more trains a day entering or leaving Atlanta. In the little office on the top of the dingy, battered signal station, just where the West End car turns off from Peters street, she worked eight hours a day giving trains "their orders." In the phraseology of the railroad, Miss West was in charge of the "block" on this section of the line, and her duty was to signal when the trains should enter and leave. In plain words, she had the "sailing" of all the passengers and all the freight of two roads in her keeping. Those two lines were the Central and the West Point, and the estimate that at least 100 trains a day passed through the "block," obedient to her directions, is very conservative.

"But it wasn't the least bit dangerous and it wasn't the least bit difficult to do," insisted Miss West last week. (Then, she stopped to give her full name and her address: Miss Dita May West, of 319 East Georgia avenue.) "I simply kept a record of all the trains that passed, and there was scarcely any possibility of letting one into the switch before another was out of the way." "But just the same, you directed all these trains entering or leaving Atlanta?" "Yes, of course," she granted. "But it wasn't anything. It was just a question of giving directions with the semaphore, and keeping a tab on the trains." "And, yet, few women do such work?" "I know of only one other," she admitted. "The work at the Peters street station now is done by a woman. But still I don't think there's anything heroic or very trying about it. The worst part is being stuck up in that lonesome little office, seeing nothing but trains, thinking nothing but trains, just trains, trains. I got so my sleep used to be full of engines and semaphores, and it was a joy to see anything human and able to talk." After being "train director" at the little dingy station where the street car turns off from Peters street, Miss West did the same work at East Point, where she had even larger duties. But the system of this block was changed so that when trains entered or left heavy levers had to be thrown into place. The work became physically tiresome for a woman. Miss West then accepted a telegraphic position with the A. B. & A. "Isn't it all very romantic?" she was asked, "that looking after trains, and knowing that you are the boss, and that all those people who have gone traveling are more or less in your keeping?" "She paused a minute and smiled. "Well," she confessed, "I'd like to see it was, and I'd like to think it was. But, really, it's just hard work."

Gainesville-Washington Air Route

A PIGEON station has been established in Gainesville, Ga., by H. Terrell, from which homing pigeons fly to Washington, D. C. Recently a number of these birds made the flight in less than 12 hours. The Gainesville (Ga.) News says: "If you have never seen these birds start on their homeward flight you have missed something. It even pays for having to get up at a most distressing hour, for Mr. Terrell never starts the pigeons on their journey later than 5:15 a. m. The leader of one drove of pigeons which he liberated at his home on Broad street, at 5:15, arrived in Washington at 3:45, flying 449 miles in less than 12 hours. Bird fanciers of Washington ship them to him in coops of twenty, which he keeps from one to thirty days, owing, of course, to weather conditions. Thirty days, however, is as long as he keeps them, for they do not leave so readily and don't make Mr. Terrell fly after that time. At 5:10 Sunday morning Mr. Terrell liberated 200, and they lit out after leaving the coops; they circled in the air until they got high enough to see the sun. As the American Indian at night gets his bearing from Luna, they start their flight from the King of Day. They circled to a distance of several hundred feet upward and then took a northeasterly direction, and from our point of observation they seemed to about center the public square. Mr. Terrell wired the fanciers at Washington the time the birds left and Monday received a reply that they had arrived O. K. Some of the younger birds were late in getting in—but all returned in good condition. It is said that the owners of these pigeons wager large sums on the return of the birds and the number of hours it takes to make the trip. But their intention is to breed birds with records, for like registered dogs, squabs from pigeons with flight records sell for a neat sum.

"Elberton's Frenchman" Writes of War

EC. PODEVIN, who once lived in Elberton, Ga., is now an interpreter with the British army. He has written the following letter to the Elberton (Ga.) Star: "Dear Sirs: White the German shells I leave alone the place I live in at present, I hurry up to drop you these lines, for you never know around here where you will be the next day and it is a real case of saying 'don't postpone until tomorrow what you can do today.' "When I left your city two years ago I told you I would never forget the nice way I had been treated by all of you. This is true, believe me, and more than once comes back to my mind fond recollections of the two years I spent amongst the good people of Elberton. "In spite of my narrow escapes, I have succeeded up to now to 'go through' German bullets, shells, bombs, etc., without the slightest scratch, and yet, you can trust me that I have not 'ducked' at any. May be that my day is not far. If so I will be glad to give my life for such a good cause as we are fighting for and it is without fear that I am looking ahead."

"I would be glad to have you remind me to all my dear Elberton friends and tell them that if with God's help I get through that awful slaughter all right, I hope it will be my privilege to see them again some day and tell them how the 'Frenchman of Elberton' has fought for his country. Believe me always, dear Sir, "Yours very sincerely, "E. C. PODEVIN. "P. S.—As you can see, I am, for the time being, attached as interpreter to the British expeditionary force. Useful even in war time to know English and French."

A Bit of Courtin' Overheard at Fairburn

WHEN overheard a bit of courtin' last Sunday that is too good to keep. Some young fellow in order to get away from the eyes of the crowd, broke into our back yard and humped himself and sweethearts upon our well curbed, close to our ears. To tell you all he said would take more space than we are allotted for this letter. We think that he had about reached the critical or psychological moment for un-helling his heart, when as usual with those verdant, youthful fellows, his belt refused to unbuckle, and this in substance was why he stammered, and her answer: "Er Miss Effie, would you be sorry if I were to fall head foremost in this well and get drowned?" "Why, yes, I would hate to see all this good cool water spoiled before singing breaks up." Dear readers, did you ever see a "cooter" sometimes called a terrapin, slip off a log in a mill pond into the water? If so, you can see that young fellow slip off our well curb and as quickly assist his would-be-soul-mate from her lofty perch and escort her back to the crowd, and proceed to loose himself. (We learned afterwards that he is a school professor in a small town down the river.)—Fairburn (Ga.) News

30-Day-Old Goat Rivals Lion at Park

(Continued from Page Two.) she described the details of her troubles, her face beamed more and more. Young men wearing all manner of neckties, were walking up and down, and had his neck clothed in a black stock that would have done a hundred years ago, and right behind him came another wearing the Italian style of shirt, cut low in the neck, and very poetic. He had the build of a butcher, but in dress, at least, he seemed to have the poetic soul. The policeman on duty walked by and smiled benignly. "There's never any trouble here," he said. "Never any disorder. Grant Park is the best place in Atlanta for women and children. Sometimes a kid falls in the lake. But it isn't deep, and we always get him out." A sober group was passing and one man was saying: "You can't rely on people now like you used to could." And another was commenting: "I like to be right by the lake, don't you?" And a third, a sweet young voice, was exclaiming: "It was raining, but he begged mamma, and mamma let me go." That's Grant Park.

How I Hived a Swarm of Bees Bare-Handed

By William Garrard

WITHOUT being stung once, Ernest F. Deacon, of 78 Mansfield avenue, general agent for the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance company, recently captured a swarm of bees on the roof of the Central club, 2-12 North Forsyth street, by scooping them up with his bare hands and dumping them into a box.

Ernest F. Deacon, Scooping Up Bees With His Bare Hands.

These bees were first seen by a traffic policeman on Peachtree street. They were flying 20 feet in the air down the center of the street toward the middle of town. Up seventeen stories, over the roof of the Healey building they went, and then, in a straight line flew to the roof of the Central club.

Deacon was able to live the bees with his bare hands without being stung, because when they are swarming they can't sting. "They're too fat then," he explained. "You see, just before the bees swarm out of the old hive they load the greatest possible quantity of honey into their honey sacs for food until they make a new hive, build comb in it, and install fresh stores of honey. They're so full of this stored up honey while swarming that they can't twist their bodies sufficiently to stick their stings into you. Besides, being well fed and contented like a person is after a fine meal, they don't think of stinging. So you can handle out handfuls of them just as easily as if they were shoebottoms instead of bees. Provided you don't get nervous and squeeze one of them. There's a sting in him, somewhere, and if you squeeze him 'll come out and get into you." Deacon was asked why bees swarmed out of their old hives this time of the year and few swarmed as they appeared at some place perhaps not half as good as the one they left—the roof of a better club, for instance. "They swarm," he answered, "because the parent hive becomes over populated to such an extent that all hands are cramped; it gets hot, honey is spattered all around; young bees are hatching every minute—the old ones get sick and tired of all this, and get laid out, headed by the old queen. She lays some queen eggs, however, in several large cells, to provide mothers for the bees she leaves behind her; the swelling up of one of these queen egg cells is the signal to get out and swarm. Generally, after the old queen leads out the prince swarm, as the first one is called, a young queen hatches in about eight days and leads out a second swarm, leaving the next queen to become the mother of the hive.

Some times a colony will cast as many as five or six swarms in this way." Deacon said that beating tin pans to start bees was a relic of the dark ages; there's nothing to it, he said. The old-time belief was, he explained, that noise from the pan would drown the peculiar humming noise made by the queen in flight—the bees, becoming confused, would then cluster around and settle, trying to find the queen whom they can't hear. "But there's nothing to that," said Deacon. "Pans didn't make those bees beat on the roof of the Central club; they just thought that'd be a nice place to light, and they lit. The spraying of a fine stream of water into the swarm while it is in the air, however, sometimes causes it to settle and cluster." Deacon says the bees he captured on the roof are doing fine in his back yard, and he expects to have honey by the gallon this summer.

CONFERRING HEALTH AND BEAUTY

BY MRS. HENRY SYMES

COIFFURES for the SUMMER PARTY

Artistic Double Bandeau

HAIRDRESSING is very important at all times, but every woman spends extra minutes and energy to make the most of her hair when she is dressing for a party. That is, of course, every woman who cares anything about her appearance. She realizes that in the manner in which her hair is arranged will mean success or failure to her features, her gown and her general attractiveness.

While a staid display of ornaments is not to be considered the use of unobtrusive pins or combs is quite in keeping with good taste. In order that the style of hair-dressing chosen shall be effective, it is advisable to wave the hair first of all. From experience, you no doubt know that wavy hair is particularly easy to arrange, as it is soft and fluffy and falls readily into uneven, graceful lines. To obtain the wavy hair, divide it into small strands, twist each strand and then wind it over a curler. By twisting the hair first, you will get a much deeper and, therefore, a greater wave. Should you experience difficulty in curling your hair or in keeping it curled, use quinine and oil on it. The reappearance of the quaint styles has revived high hair-dressing. But right here let me advise against adopting the style if it does disagreeable things to the features. It is not difficult to arrange the coiffure in the manner shown in the the back portion over the head, twist it into a strand and pin it at the crown of the head, or tie it into position. Comb out the strand, smooth it with the hands and then roll it toward the front and pin the resulting roll on the head. At the front of the roll insert the pearl spikes—a sharp word, but not so harmful as it sounds. Do not fail to pin the back hairs into place, so that these untidy wavy will not be annoyed by an untidy arrangement of your hair.

Along with the high hair-dressing, the side curls have appeared. These can be worn with the high or low arrangement of the hair. Very few women could make such bewitching curls of their own hair, but false curls can be procured and pinned on very securely. The girl displaying side curls in the photograph is wearing her hair drawn back loosely from the face and rolled into a bun, which is drawn to reach from ear to ear. A decorative pin is worn at either side of the bun and serves to hold the curls in place. Another manner in which the loose curls might be used would be to first arrange the hair high on the head, just as described in the preceding paragraph, and then attach a cluster of loose curls to the knot and let them fall in cascade fashion.

The new ornament which strongly simulates a feather is sure to find favor with the woman who has always liked feather ornaments in her hair. To reveal its general lines, the hair has been arranged quite simply. It has been pulled back loosely from the face and rolled in order to bring out the contour of the head. The ornamental comb is slipped into the hair just at the point where the hair has been rolled under.

Among the ornaments which are worn by many women are the old-fashioned backcombs. Maybe you have one stored away with your hair-looms. Bring it out. Sit before your mirror and arrange your hair in a knot at the back of your head and then insert the comb and see if you don't like the effect.

Most suitable to be tucked into a high forehead is the artistic double bandeau. The one pictured is of silver, studded with emeralds. The section which extends from the front to back is adjusted first, being pinned securely to the knot at the back of the head and held flat in front by the second circuit, which is pinned underneath the knot. It is quite necessary that the hair be pulled down in a soft line over the forehead before the bandeau is slipped on. It may be impossible for many photograph. First of all, brush the hair down over the face and back, divide it in front and make a side or middle part. You can then divide the hair at the ear lines and pin up the front section separately. Then comb women to purchase such an expensive ornament for their heads, but a very satisfactory equivalent—at least, one that gives the same effect—is a narrow band of black velvet or black moire ribbon. In fact, the blackness of the ribbon brings out the whiteness of the brow. The ribbon bandeau is most frequently worn when the hair is arranged to resemble the bobbed cut. Many women are having their hair cut to adopt this boyish fashion, but such a step is really unnecessary by parting the hair at the side and being sure to tuck all ends in safely; the bobbed or Dutch cut is simulated. The hair should present a sleek appearance when arranged in such a fashion, and in order to make it so, one can use brilliantine on the hair. Of course, the hair will take the trouble to break it for ten or fifteen minutes every night. Don't merely brush it as a whole, but divide it into strands and treat each strand separately. The brushing will remove the dust and dirt collected during the day. It will increase the circulation of the blood through the scalp and will distribute the natural oil evenly. My parting advice to you is to let simplicity be your guide when selecting your hair ornaments and style for arranging your hair. Extreme fashions in coiffures should be avoided just as seriously as extreme fashions in dress because they are adaptations in general use.

ADVICE ON SOCIAL CUSTOMS

Mrs. Charles Adams most cordially invites his friends to bring to her their Social Problems and Questions by letter at any time.

If a personal reply is desired, a self-addressed stamped envelope should be inclosed.

SETTLING THE MONEY

QUESTION

HARK YE, young brides and grooms, this little chat is for you today, and for those of the older set who are about to listen. It is the same old story of the money question. You have probably returned from your honeymoon, when "money was no object," and are about to settle down in the dearest house in the world with your dear wife or husband ever, and you awake to the realization that money, or rather the proper disposition of money, is one of the most important questions to be settled at the outset of your matrimonial careers. Some young people—in fact more and more so years ago—men and girls become more business-wise—plan the distribution of their income before they are really married. If more engaged couples would attend to a systematic consideration of the financial problem there would surely be fewer disillusionments after marriage.

DRY SHAMPOO

Yolk of egg 1 pint of water, use it for the mixture thoroughly and apply it with a brush to the scalp and hair with several washings.

CURLING FLUID FOR THE HAIR

It is made of a tablespoonful of bruised quinine leaves in water. The water is poured over the seeds and the whole allowed to stand for a few days. The resulting mixture may then be used with a few drops of essence of violet. The hair is moistened with the said liquid.

HOMEMADE TALCUM POWDER

For a talcum powder give us the formula we will be glad to send you. Either of the following formula will be made at home:

Rice flour 10 ounces
Cocoa 10 ounces
Starch 10 ounces
Sift thoroughly and sift twice through a fine bolting silk. Perfum as desired.

HYGIENIC TALCUM POWDER

Prepared talcum 10 grams
Powdered starch 10 grams
Sifted rice flour 10 grams
Sifted or boiled silica 10 grams
Sifted silica 10 grams

EYES ARE WEAK

My dear Mrs. Symes, I have frequent flowing of tears from the eyes. I can do nothing to stop it. Would you please suggest a remedy for this trouble?

I doubt whether the eyebrow pencil would cause watering of the eyes. There is evidently some strain or you have weak tear ducts. It is best in such a case to consult an oculist at once.

SHORT NAILS

My dear Mrs. Symes, I have had my nails cut from cutting my finger nails too short. I have a very bad case of the "short nail" disease. I have a very bad case of the "short nail" disease. I have a very bad case of the "short nail" disease.

INCLOSING A STAMP

My dear Mrs. Adams, I have a question when it is proper to inclose a stamp for an answer to a question. I have a question when it is proper to inclose a stamp for an answer to a question.

INTRODUCTIONS

My dear Mr. Adams, In an introduction, should both parties be introduced to the guests? When leaving, should both parties be introduced to the guests?

A girl never tells a man that she is glad to meet him, or that she is glad to see him, or that she is glad to have him, or that she is glad to have her mother, or to another girl.

LATE FOR CHURCH

My dear Mr. Adams, Will you please tell me if it is proper to be late for church? If so, how long is it proper to be late?

If you can enter the church precipitately while the offering is being taken, or otherwise it is better to be informed upon that special topic and to the hymn to avoid confusion.

OVERCOMING SHYNESS

My dear Mr. Adams, I am a young business man and have a great deal of shyness. How can I overcome it? I am a young business man and have a great deal of shyness.

The only way to overcome shyness is to stop thinking of yourself and to think of the people you are with. Try to enter your conversation upon the young woman whom you are with, and then find out what her favorite topic of conversation is and talk about that. It may be mutual friends, a book, dress, etc. Make it a point to be informed upon that special topic and to above all, forget yourself.

KEEPING BOARDERS

My dear Mr. Adams, I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness. How can I overcome it? I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness.

Keeping boarders or roomers is a very delicate matter. It is a very delicate matter. It is a very delicate matter.

NAMES FOR A SERVING CLUB

My dear Mr. Adams, I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness. How can I overcome it? I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness.

How would "Daughters of the City" be a good name for a serving club? I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness.

GARB FOR USHERS

My dear Mr. Adams, I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness. How can I overcome it? I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness.

The ushers at an evening wedding wear a regulation evening dress and white kid gloves. I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness.

NECESSITY OF CHAPERON

My dear Mr. Adams, I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness. How can I overcome it? I am a young woman and have a great deal of shyness.

It will look far better to have a chaperon than to go alone, especially if the boys and girls are young and there is to be a supper afterward.

A tonic containing iron will often tone up the complexion and give a natural color. Lemon juice in a glass of hot water taken before breakfast is also good.

This fresh rosewater bleach will be of great benefit to every complexion. It is made of the following ingredients: Rosewater 1/2 pint, lemon juice 1/4 pint, glycerine 1/4 pint, water 1/2 pint. Mix thoroughly and apply two or three times a day until the skin is removed.

A bitter feud, engendered over an heirloom, "the diamond from the sky," found its origin in a quarrel between the late Judge Lamar Stanley and his cousin, Judge Lamar Stanley. ### Young Hen at Monroe Has Everything But the Cluck

Looks After a Lot of Orphaned Kiddies, Scratches for Them, Mothers Them, and Is Learning To Talk

HEN BENJAMIN SORRELLS, of this city, who is of unquestioned veracity, tells the News man a very interesting, unusual story, about a hen which has occurred in his henyard at his home in the city. Some few days ago a hen, the mother of six chickens, died and a young, half-grown pullet, that has never laid an egg—took the little orphan chicks in charge and has covered and protected them, scratched for them and brought for them. Mr. Sorrells said at first it appeared difficult for the young hen to get the clucking qualities but finally she did get the trick, so to speak, and is keeping it up splendidly. He further says that the young, mother hen is doing an even better part by the little chicks than their own mother. Mr. Sorrells is the oldest citizen of Monroe and affirms that he has never seen anything in his life to equal it. He further stated that he had a hen in his yard that laid almost daily an egg that was treacherous in size, carrying two yolks of yellow.—Monroe (Ga.) News.

Coughs Up Doll After Three Years

A PECULIAR incident that happened in Lake City, Fla., last Friday was the coughing up of a metal doll, which had been swallowed three years ago by Georgia Garner, a winsome little maid of nine years. Three years ago when with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Garner, she lived in Atlanta the little girl swallowed the doll but did not remember doing so, only remembered having played with it and from that time has had a severe cough, which at times caused such alarm to the hearts of her parents that they had successfully had a number of different physicians to examine her, fearing she might be suffering from tuberculosis, the examination in each instance resulting in a diagnosis which eliminated the possibility of tuberculosis, at the same time none of the physicians could account for the trouble which stopped instantly upon the coughing up of the power doll about one inch long.

Chimney Swift is a Bird of Mystery

MUCH has been learned about bird migration but much yet remains to be learned, and the following is one of the most curious and interesting of the unsolved problems. The chimney swift is one of the most abundant of the best known birds of eastern United States. With troops of fledglings joining their winged prey as they go, they are flying in tall chimneys, and flocks drift slowly south joining with other bands, until on the northern coast of the Gulf of Mexico they become an irritable host. Then they disappear. They drop into the water or liberate in the mud, as was believed of old, but observation has not been complete. In the last week in March a joyful twittering far overhead announces their return to the Gulf coast, but the birds still the late arriving five months is still the swift's secret.—St. George (Ga.) Outlook.

Five Sets of Triplets Born to Kansas Couple

M. R. AND MRS. FRANK SCOTT, of Highland, Kan., are raising a home with lots of land. They will need five although they have married but ten years, they had 19 children, and 13 are living. They hold records for triplets, having five sets of triplets, and also two sets of quadruplets. All the 19 living boys are under five years of age. Mrs. Scott once boarded a train with her baby and one first class ticket. The conductor informed her that she had paid for her entire Sunday school class one ticket, and it was not until she showed him the family Bible, with the birth dates recorded, that he believed it was only her family, and permitted her to occupy five double seats while paying for one.—Muskegon (Okla.) ### Woman Attacked By Swarm of Bees MISSAILE, Ky.—Mrs. Allen Jeff, of Hillsboro, Tennessee, drove into a swarm of bees, which settled upon her and stung her frightfully upon the face, back and arms. Ben Johnson, a negro, saw the light and rushed to her assistance, drove the swarm and got Mrs. Jeff and her out of it. She was taken to Hillsboro, and her injuries were considered very serious. The fact was that she was resting comfortably.

Farmers' Club Has Met For 40 Years

CHARLES, Ga.—Very few communities in Georgia take rank with the section surrounding Buharie in Barrow county in point of production, progress and culture. This is not due wholly to a soil rich in plant food, but is the result of enterprise and intelligence of the farmers. Perhaps the most potent factor in keeping up this activity is the ancient Buharie Farmers' club which has met regularly once a month for 40 years.

Mixed Letters Cause Trouble

THIS is a true story. Here's how the whole thing happened. We pass it along as it was handed to us by the young lady herself, and our readers may watch for the denouement, either in the engagement columns of the big dailies, or possibly a clipping from the Police Gazette, telling of the assassination of one of two parties, neither living more than sixty miles from Eaton— or perhaps a bloodless duel according to the French code of honor somewhere within the confines of Baldwin, or Bibb or Putnam.

In extenuation of his act Fat alleged that Jackson owed him his wages for the past two weeks and when he refused to pay up had excited the indignation of the menial."

Snake With Legs at Wrightsville, Ga.

REMARKABLE things are happening out on friend Eli Smith's farm near Wrightsville, Ga. Some time ago a snake with legs fell into an old abandoned well from which he was extricated, sustaining little or no injury. And now Eli comes with a remarkable snake story. His 11-year-old son, while heeling in a field one day last week killed a foot-long snake of the "coosowhip" specie, and when his snakeship was "good and dead," the boy began a partial examination of the reptile, when he discovered that he had two short legs sticking out of his tail. The boy reported the "find" to his father, who, too, made an examination and can vouch for the truthfulness of the statement.—Wrightsville (Ga.) Herald.

M. R. GEORGE BEAN'S new horse which he swapped for last week broke out of his lot Tuesday evening and ran into the railroad. Some time ago he was found about twenty feet out on trestle, lying down. They tied his feet and placed boards under him and dragged him out to terra firma. The horse was only slightly injured.—Sylvania (Ga.) Telephone.

Kansas—Law to prohibit the use of face powder, hair dye, or bleach, the plucking of ears and wearing of earrings. Colorado—Law to compel citizens to go to roost before 7 p. m. daily. Arriving that built driven along the roads at night shall wear Habbas. Massachusetts—Bachelors to pay annual tax of $5. Prohibiting the wearing of whiskers by doctors and dentists. Nebraska—Law of compelling the national guard to do ninety days' work each year on the roads and bridges of the state. Requiring dealers in stock food to get a license of $5 per annum. Texas—Compelling churchgoers to leave their artillery on the outside of the church buildings. Illinois—Forbidding the giving of tips to barbers, porters, hat-scratchers, etc. Taxing bachelors thirty years of age $50 per annum. ### Warming Given To All Parents

A COLEMAN boy was drowned in the tank wad down the Southern railroad last Tuesday afternoon, but Dr. Wilkins succeeded in bringing him to life again. Parents should think their children out of the well, as it is deep and very dangerous.—Eastman (Ga.) Herald.

Grandma Williams Scrubbed on Sunday

A LITTLE incident happened in the city last Sunday that was a little out of the ordinary. Grandma Williams, who lives in the suburbs of the city, thinking it was Saturday, did a big day's washing and scrubbing. Some one passing told her it was Sunday, and she said she "thought it was Saturday."—Nicholls (Ga.) Journal.

Wears Pair of Shoes 19 Years

UNCLE JEFF BUTLER was in town a few days ago wearing a pair of shoes that he has had for 19 years. He has worn them from their coming during the nineteen.—Bowdon (Ga.) Bulletin.

One up-town Ball Lot Is All That Is Left To Atlanta

Hole In Ground On Edgewood Ave. Is the Last Relic. Famous Names, Like Peachtree Blues, Are Passing Away

THE only uptown ball-lot left in Atlanta is the hole in the ground on Edgewood avenue just beyond where Edgewood and Gilmer streets run together.

It used to be that there were vacant spots tucked about here and there in the very busiest parts of the city, where newboys would mix with play.

The fact of the matter is that back-lot baseball is dropping out of notice here. Every born-and-raised citizen of Atlanta can remember the unoccupied spots in the business sections and out in the residence parts that were sacred to baseball.

The privilege to play on these lots was handed down from generation to generation; and along with this right went the names and the ideas and the uniforms of the teams. The Peachtree Blues, for instance, were an institution in Atlanta. There are dozens of men here who can remember to have played on teams by that name. The old Peters lot, where All Saints church is now, was the home ground of the famous Blues.

Other baseball institutions almost as lasting as the Blues numbered probably a score or more. But with the passing of the back-lot ball grounds, these famous old names are disappearing.

Right now, baseball in Atlanta as it used to be, is played nowhere much except in the dug-out place on Edgewood avenue. If you drop by there any afternoon at the right time you'll find a crowd of boys, mostly newboys, turning the rocky, weed-strewn place into a playground.

They furnish the old familiar contrast, low-headed boys knocking the stuffing out of a baseball and yelling their lungs out right at the edge of a business street. People a few steps away worrying over useless money troubles, and the tow-heads forgetting everything but one thing—baseball.

This surviving member of what was once a whole host of back-lot playgrounds is on the same side as the Atlanta Telephone building. It is just a rocky, weedy, hole in the earth. But it serves its purpose.

Caddies, from the golf links at East Lake, Druid Hills, Ansley Park and Brookwood, have started something new on the few bits of vacant ground that remain available for play purposes. They are building small golf courses and instead of playing baseball games, are having tournaments.

One such course as this has been built at the old show grounds on Jackson street.

In the way of organized play, Atlanta every year is becoming better equipped. What has been lost in back-lots has been more than made up in city playgrounds.

Back in the early days, when the virgin woods crowded close to the edge of Crossett and telephones were first being used in Ashley county, a rumor started that Crossett was to have a saloon—not in the town, of course, but somewhat near.

Clark Buchner, manager of the lumber company at that time, went to Hamburg, the county seat, and learned that although no license had been issued, the saloon men were on their way to Hamburg. He hurried to the telephone. By his order, given over the wire, lumber was rushed to a street corner in Crossett and a crew of carpenters was put to work on the erection of a little building, 14 by 16 feet in size. By telephone, Mr. Buchner kept in constant touch with the work through the day.

At 4 o'clock he hung up the receiver with a smile of satisfaction. Ten minutes later the saloon men arrived at Hamburg and presented a petition for a license.

"You can't build a saloon within three miles of Crossett," Mr. Buchner objected. "The state law will not permit it. We have a church there."

"But we left there only two hours ago and there was no church there," replied the astounded petitioners.

"We have built one since you left," said Mr. Buchner. "There's the telephone. Find out for yourself."

And they did. Small, it is true, was the structure the men had rushed to completion in a few hours, but still it was a church. For a time it was large enough to accommodate the congregations which gathered weekly. Later an addition was made. When the growth of the town made a larger church necessary the little building was used for a time as a school building, and later as a shop and printing office.

When Monroe Saw a Venus

MESSE, STONE, WOOD, SNOW, HALE, DAY, KNIGHT and SHEATS, all prominent Wood citizens were standing on the street corner the other day when here comes along a visiting Venus, diked out in the riddlest rags of the season, short skirt, half hose and all. Stone turned to Wood and Wood turned to Stone. Stone turned to Hale and Hale turned to Snow. Day turned to Knight and Sheats turned to cover!—Monroe (Ga.) Tribune

Cat Gets Rabbits to Replace Kittens

NORFOLK, Ala.—In the home of a Norfolk county farmer, there is a pet cat to which the farmer's children are devoted. Several days ago she gave birth to four kittens. They were her first born. The farmer thought four were plenty for one cat to raise, and he was living being as high for cats as for people, so he took the two smallest kittens out to the creek and drowned them.

For a while pussy was disconsolate, mewling as all mother cats will mew when bereft. But she did not stay disconsolate long. The farmer noticed pussy had ceased to grieve and glanced in the box where she was raising her young, living being as high for cats as for people. Imagine his surprise when he found Mrs. Cat had added to the circle two young rabbits, just about as old as her own children. The rabbits seemed to be perfectly at home and were nursing side by side with their foster brother and sister. Pussy had gone to a neighboring field and robbed the nest, or burrow, or whatever a rabbit home is called, of two little molly cotton tails. What Mother Rabbit thinks of the rabbit-sucking has not been learned.

White Rats Rout Brown Ones In Rhodes Building

Make Traps and Cats Unnecessary. Build a Home in the Wall, Have Weekly House-Cleaning, Take Morning Baths

A FILM office in the Rhodes building is using a flock of white rats to drive off the brown ones. Largely by accident, two white mice were brought to the office, and they began a war on their dark-skinned brothers.

The two original mice had, in a short while, twenty-eight offspring; and this "white" army began to hunt the brown rats from the most remote corners of the office. No cat or trap could have been so relentless.

A hole has been broken in the tile that lines the wall of the office, and the white rats make their home there. Sometimes, growing tired of one place, they move into desk drawers, or nest in filing cases. But for the most part they are constant to the hole in the broken tile, and they show a great deal of care in housekeeping.

Joe Mercantette, manager of the Consolidated Film & Supply Co., where white rats took the place of cats and traps, is authority for their housekeeping habits. He says they have set aside Monday as cleaning day, and that early in the morning of that day they drag from their hole in the wall all the strings and other miscellany dear to the heart of a rat, which they had labored to store up there. They clean the hole out thoroughly, then they start in to fill it up again.

Another of the cleanly habits of the white rats is a morning bath. A pan of water is set down in front of the hole, and the twenty-eight rats, each in his turn, has his cold water plunge.

The "white" army are fed regularly, and never nibble at the posters and moving picture film with which the office is stored. Brown rats, on the other hand, like nothing better than a gaudy piece of poster or a reel or two of film.

Joe Mercantette's experiment may prove one of the great discoveries of the moving picture business. White rats that drive off the brown ones and refuse themselves even to taste of film, are money savers.

You would appreciate this if you knew the quantity of moving picture film distributed yearly through Atlanta. The whole south gets its moving picture supply from this city. The mere express charges on the film shipped to Atlanta last year were over $300,000. And yet, three years ago there were only one or two film-distributing companies in this city.

Mrs. Godbee Hopes For Freedom

"EVERYONE is kind to me. Prison life is as nearly all right as it is possible for prison life to be."

So said Mrs. Edna Godbee, last week, one of the four white women serving life sentences at the prison farm at Milledgeville. All Georgia remembers the scene she appeared in the post office at Millen, Ga., and shot down her divorced husband, Judge Godbee, and the wife who recently had married. Mrs. Godbee rarely sees strangers or gives out statements to the newspapers. But in this instance she made an exception.

"Life long ago lost most of its charm for me," she said. "I had little to live for except my daughter, Sarah Godbee, and my two sons, King and Frank. My daughter's letters give me new hope."

Down in Burke county, Sarah Godbee, lacking just a year of graduation with distinction, has been teaching a country school. But now that school has closed, she is near her mother.

"Everybody I see and everybody I hear about is a friend to me," went on Mrs. Godbee, "tender, sympathetic and there is nothing more that I can ask of the prison officials, the prison officials, Judge Davidson, Mr. Rainey and all others whom I have met are most considerate. Warden Maxwell and his wife are kind."

"Of course, there is hardly any way for me to illustrate what I have suffered. I only know that years can make no difference to me, that my life has been lived."

"Yes, I have my hopes for release. Just how soon and through what course of action I am not in position to say."

"I find it hardest here after the evening meal is over and everybody retired. It is inconvenient for me to read, and anyhow it would be hard on my eyes. Frequently I long for some companionable fellow to chat away the hours with."

"My purpose here is to live strictly according to the prison rules. I have no other desire than to abide by the restrictions of the law."

"I could go on and tell you a long, long story, much that the world never knows about, but maybe it is best for me to amuse myself, for it would do no good. All I can say is that I am deeply grateful for the cheering messages I receive, appreciative of the many expressions of sympathy and good wishes."

And so Mrs. Edna Godbee stays at the state prison farm at Milledgeville, taking part in the work around the building, directing the sewing, doing considerable work with her own hands in planting flowers, in beautifying the premises, and trying to make the best of fate.

Hobo Drinks Water at Dalton

DALTON, Ga.—After being shut up in a hot box car without food or drink for about thirty-six hours, a hobo was released here recently, only after insistent drumming on the door of the car had brought him rescue.

The hobo could hardly speak when he was liberated, and he lost no time in setting his beak under a nearby water spout at the depot here. After drinking up a few gallons, and then liberally sipping a couple of quarts of water, he told his tale of woe.

He had climbed in the car at Calhoun and had gone to sleep. When he awoke he found the car securely fastened, and he couldn't get the door open inside the car, he had found nothing to eat except a few sacks of fertilizer, and every drop of liquid in the car was represented by the bearded, cold perspiration that broke out on his brow.

The Little Picture Lady

ONE of the most beautiful photographs ever made of an Atlanta child was that of Elizabeth Helen Jones, six-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Wiley Jones, of Decatur, printed some time ago in The Journal, in which the little girl was posed as the "Age of Innocence," the painting by Sir Joshua Reynolds. This photograph, by Thurston Hatcher, created interest, because the sweetness and innocence of the child expressed all the beauty of the painting.

Since then this "little lady of the picture" has posed for a number of photographs, but of them all the one here showing her simply as herself, is perhaps the best.

The little girl has golden, curly hair and dark brown eyes, which is a rather unusual combination. Her cheeks are dimpled, her color is fresh, and there is about her all the simple, innocent beauty of childhood. The pose in which she is shown here is one that the painters might very well copy.

Like the little son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Yessay Rainwater, unusual photographs of whom were printed recently in The Journal, this little girl's beauty has attracted much attention. Many have wanted to paint or to photograph her. But just now she is busy learning to read and to write and get ready for school next year. She isn't at all concerned about her personal beauty.

Carload of Herbs From Commerce

MR. GEORGE W. FERTIG shipped this week a consignment of crude drugs weighing 3,200 pounds. These roots and herbs are gathered up by Mr. Fertig and shipped north, and he derives quite a revenue from the business. But it takes a man with push and grit to do it, and Mr. Fertig has a good per cent of each in his general makeup. Camden county is coming to the front slowly but surely. Great oaks from Little across grow.
