

LEGISLATURE MEETS TIGHTEN PROHIBITION

Generally Conceded That Filibuster Is Unlikely and That Bills Will Be Passed With Reasonable Promptness

APPROPRIATIONS AND W. & A. BILLS TO COME UP Cotton Warehouse Measure, Money Sheet and Railroad Legislation Are Expected to Demand Most Attention

The first extraordinary session of the Georgia legislature since the famous session of 1903, called by Governor Hoke Smith to abolish the convict lease system, will convene at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock. Until a few weeks ago it was freely predicted that because of the hard fight and filibuster, which the anti-prohibitionists were sure to put up, the extraordinary session would continue for at least fifty days and perhaps longer. Now it is generally conceded on all sides that there is little likelihood of a filibuster, and that some kind of prohibition bills, further strengthening the existing laws on the subject, are certain to be enacted with reasonable promptness. That the session is likely to develop more importance as the November date for the assembling of the citizens' convention in Georgia approaches, is evident from the efforts being made by the allies to persuade President Wilson that it is to issue a decree postponing a decision of the question indefinitely. In allied quarters here it is denied that France is unympathetic with Great Britain, Russia and Japan in the present case. The view is advanced among diplomats of the allies here that China is being influenced indirectly by Germany in this case. The political situation in the far east will be again disturbed and a possible revolutionary outbreak in China with the resultant suspension of ammunition shipments from Japan to Russia, Russian armies felt it severely when the Japanese-Chinese negotiations were at a critical state last winter and Japan was heading her war operations against Germany. Germany's attitude toward the change of government in China, which would provide better protection to the pawn, shrimps and cotton industries, and the provisions to the automobile tax law, which will provide a better method of collecting these taxes, will have a direct bearing upon the subjects enumerated in the government's program, and it is expected that there will be a large number introduced.

Wilson Wedding Date Is Rumored To Be Nov. 15

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—President Wilson and Mrs. G. Edith Wilson, who were in an Annapolis hotel and visited the naval academy and the state capital, are expected to be invited to the wedding of the foot-guards between the navy and North Carolina, at 6 o'clock. Reports circulated in official quarters of an announcement that the president's wedding date was to be made tonight proved erroneous. It also was said that Monday night may be decided upon for the wedding, but this, too, is unverified. The president's future wedding White House, near the city of Washington, on the night of the president will address the Manhattan club of New York, on Wednesday.

Kaiser Charged With Fomenting Strife in China

Allies' Diplomats Say Germany Seeks to Stir Up Revolution So Japan's Attention Will Be Drawn From Europe

(By Associated Press.) WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—Great Britain and Russia, as well as Japan, it is believed here tonight, have made unceasing efforts to smother the aid of the United States to prevent the establishment of a monarchy in China instead of the present republican form of government.

Conversations between Secretary Lansing and ambassadors of these powers failed to elicit from the Washington government any expression of approval or disapproval of the proposed change in China. The United States takes the position that it cannot with propriety express an opinion on the internal concerns of a sovereign state and that the Chinese should be left free to work out their problem.

Germany represented to the state department by the allies that the change involved a possible upset of the political equilibrium of the far east, since a revolution was certain to follow such a change. In China, it was pointed out, in view of the disturbed political condition of the world, might prove embarrassing to the United States. Official sentiment has not crystallized definitely here as to the merits of the change. It is noted that the administration view is held that a decision can be postponed with no disadvantage to China; but the opinion also is held that a monarchical form of government with a liberal permanent constitution would aid in the development of national unity in China.

That the allies are likely to develop more importance as the November date for the assembling of the citizens' convention in Georgia approaches, is evident from the efforts being made by the allies to persuade President Wilson that it is to issue a decree postponing a decision of the question indefinitely. In allied quarters here it is denied that France is unympathetic with Great Britain, Russia and Japan in the present case. THIS LITTLE WOMAN GAINS 35 POUNDS ON THREE BOTTLES

Another Thin, Frail, Nervous and Pain Racked Woman Is Restored to Health and Happiness by Tanlac -- Only Weighed 105 Pounds; Now Weighs 140

"Honestly I am getting so fat I am really ashamed to tell you how much I have gained," said Mrs. Nettie McGary, who lives at 1842 Highland avenue, Nashville, Tenn., when several days ago by the Tanlac representative.

"Actually it has gotten to be a regular joke for I have gotten so stout that my clothes are too small for me, and every dress I wore last winter will have to be made over again," she continued, "and the change in my general appearance is so wonderful that my friends and neighbors are all wondering what I have been doing with myself. When they ask me, I just tell them I have been taking Tanlac, and it is a fact for I have just finished my third bottle, and have gained 35 pounds."

"When I began to take the medicine, I only weighed 105 pounds, and now I weigh 140, and never felt better in my life."

"I always enjoyed very good health, and was usually very energetic, but gradually developed into a very bad form of stomach trouble. This trouble began pulling me down, and I finally got so I could not eat anything at all, and my nerves were so affected that I had to avoid sweets of all kinds, and always after eating I would suffer for hours."

"I was also very nervous and dizzy, and was easily annoyed, and I could not walk any distance without resting. My kidneys must have been affected also, for I had several pains in my sides and back."

"My sister, Mrs. Minnie Hall, came to see me one day, and she looked as well as I asked her what she had been taking. She told me Tanlac, and there to go to give it a trial."

"Acting on her advice I bought a bottle and have been taking it regularly since. Of course, I expected it to help me, but if anyone asked me that there would have helped me like Tanlac, I would not have believed them."

"The medicine seemed to be just the very thing I needed, for it just filled me with new life and energy from my very first dose. In only a few days my appetite returned, and I began to enjoy my meals and everything seemed to agree with me, and nourish me."

"I am no longer nervous and dizzy-headed like I was, and can now sleep like a child. In fact, I feel just like a person who had been made all over again. I hope every suffering woman will hear about it."

"Commenting on Mrs. McGary's remarkable statement, Mr. J. Willis, Southwestern Distributor of Tanlac, is accustomed to strange and unusual occurrences, and the public opinion was filled with sensation after attention from day to day, but in spite of this, the story of this frail little pain-racked, nervous woman, almost driven up to day, was wasted away from day to day, would hardly be believed if these papers did not have the name, Tanlac, and give an exact address to prove the extraordinary statement in this case."

"The patient, who is well-known in Nashville, told the interesting history of her own free will and accord, and many of her friends and neighbors are in possession of these facts."

"After all, there is nothing really unusual about Mrs. McGary's case, as thousands of other women, hundreds of thousands, are now using the medicine and are testifying daily to the marvelous benefits they have derived from its use."

"Tanlac is sold in Atlanta exclusively by the J. W. Pharmacy Co. (Adv.)"

CHILD GETS SICK, CROSS, FEVERISH, IF CONSTIPATED

Look at tongue! Then give fruit laxative for stomach, liver, bowels.

"California Syrup of Figs" can't harm children and they love it.

A laxative today saves a sick child tomorrow. Children simply will not take the time from play to empty their bowels, unless they become clogged up with waste, liver gets sluggish; stomach sour.

Look at the tongue, mother! If coated, or your child is listless, cross, feverish, or any other restless, doesn't eat heartily, full of cold or has sore throat, or any other children's ailment, give a little "California Syrup of Figs." It is perfectly harmless, and in a few hours all this constipation, poison, sour bile and fermenting waste will gently move out of the bowels, and you have a well, playful child again. A thorough "inside cleaning" is oftentimes all that is necessary. It should be the first treatment given in any sickness.

Beware of counterfeit fig syrups. Ask your druggist for a 50-cent bottle of "California Syrup of Figs," which has full directions for babies, children of all ages and for grown-ups plainly printed on the bottle. Look carefully and note that it is made by the California Fig Syrup Company. (Adv.)

SEVERE RHEUMATIC PAINS DISAPPEAR

Rheumatism depends on an acid muscle and joint, affecting the liver, kidneys and skin. This acid gas enters the blood through some defect in the digestive processes, and remains there because the liver, kidneys and skin are too torpid to carry it off.

Headache, Saraparilla, the old-time treatment of rheumatism. It acts on the liver, kidneys and skin, which it purifies, and through the blood it improves the digestion.

Get Hood's Saraparilla today. Sold by all druggists. (Adv.)

KING EIGHT

Improved Five-Passenger Model
(Motor bore and stroke, 2 3/8 x 5)
IMMEDIATE DELIVERY

MORE power, numerous engine refinements, and finer body finish, make this car a superlative value. Only a greatly increased output permits the fixing of such a moderate price for a car of this quality. Thousands of these cars are now in successful operation the world over, and it was this model that made the famous official high gear tests on the Pacific Coast--two rough trips of over 800 miles each sealed in "high," both with perfect scores.

Remember, there are more KING EIGHT-CYLINDER cars in operation than any other make except one. The KING is the pioneer popular-priced eight--one year ahead of all competition, and this Company possesses a knowledge of Eight-Cylinder construction which makers in our wake can learn only through experience.

The new KING color is Salon green. Body and hood of that color, with black radiator, fenders and running boards. Wheels, black with gold stripe. A ride in this car will mark a new epoch in your motoring experience--and spoil you for other car types.

PROSPERITY ERAS HERE, SAYS SHOE MANUFACTURER

John Hanan, Head of Famous Shoe House, Pays Visit to Atlanta

John Hanan, one of the leading shoe manufacturers of the world, head of the famous shoe house of Hanan and son of New York, is in Atlanta, en route north from Florida, where he has been to the country, and then to a winter residence at Miami.

Mr. Hanan talked interestingly and encouragingly of the shoe business and general industrial and financial conditions in the United States as he sat Saturday morning in the private office of Isaac Lipstien, president of the Carlsen Shoe company.

Mr. Hanan says that the price of shoes will not be cheaper as the supply of leather is becoming shorter every day and the price is naturally increasing.

"The scarcity of leather," he said, "is in part attributed to the war. The European nations are buying 60 million pairs."

DR. J. WADE CONKLIN FINDS A CURE FOR PELLAGRA

One of Atlanta's deepest students of the life of Dr. J. Wade Conklin, pastor of the Unitarian church, will make a fifteen-minute talk on "The Making of a City" to the Ad Men's club at their regular luncheon at the Analey hotel Thursday at 1 o'clock.

Harvey, La.—Mrs. E. W. Spruiell of this place, writes: "I suppose it will be a great pleasure to you to know that you cured my child. She had pellagra very bad and the doctor said she never would get well. She is well of pellagra and looks fine."

"You may use this letter as a testimonial if you wish. Great benefit have you done my daughter, Minnie Abrams. There is no longer any sign that pellagra can be cured. Don't delay until it is too late. It is your duty to contribute to the successful campaign. The symptoms—hands red like sun-burn, skin peeling off, sore mouth, lips, throat and tongue a flaming red, with much mucus and choking, indigestion and nausea, either diarrhoea or constipation."

Having had so many requests to re-publish in pamphlet form the series of articles by Thomas W. Loyless, that have appeared in The Augusta Chronicle during the past five or six weeks on the above subject, the same has been done, and will be ready for distribution on November 5th, and as long as they last—which will be only a few days.

A limited number are offered the public at about the COST OF PRODUCTION AND POSTAGE—10 CENTS PER COPY. But the Chronicle cannot undertake to fill orders for less than five (5) copies each. These will be mailed to the direct to one address, or to any list of names that may be furnished.

For either purpose, the articles as they now appear completely revised, "bottled down" and added to—26 pages in pamphlet form, printed on book paper illustrated, wire-stitched—will be found desirable.

NOTE SPECIAL OFFER—If you are not already a subscriber to The Chronicle and wish to try the paper for six months ($5.00 worth), 25 of the Watson-Watson pamphlets will be sent to you absolutely free, at 50 with a year's subscription—$6. The Chronicle begins the publication of a "midnight edition" next week, and the paper will be put IN YOUR TOWN the morning of publication, or your money refunded. They do say there's going to be "some" politics in Georgia next year; and the 130-year-old Augusta Chronicle is going to have its "say"—don't forget that. You are liable to get your money's worth before summer begins. If you SUBSCRIBE NOW, your paper will be dated from January 1, 1916.

The Colonial Aspect of the War.

So absorbing have been the European aspects of the war that its developments in remoter parts of the world have lost their due proportion in the public's interest. In Flanders and France the issue still wavers, as it does also in Galicia, in Russia, on the Austro-Italian front and in the thundering Balkan arena. But in Africa and the Orient, where the fortunes of the striving Powers are deeply concerned, decisive events have occurred.

In Europe, Germany is entrenched on the enemy's soil both in the west and east and on the road to Constantinople. But her colonial possessions have been lost, almost in their entirety. A great outlying empire which it was the dream of her statesmen to uphold and the purpose of her navy to preserve has slipped from her grasp—whether irrevocably or not, only the future can show. At the beginning of the war her colonies comprised more than a million square miles with a population of nearly fifteen million subjects. Four-fifths of these holdings were in Africa. They included German Southwest Africa, larger than Spain and Italy combined; Kamerun and Togoland on the west coast which extend in area all of France and the British Isles; and German East Africa which is approximately the size of our Atlantic States from Maine to Florida.

With the exception of East Africa and Kamerun all this territory is now in the enemy's hands, and the surrender of East Africa is considered foregone. Furthermore, Germany has lost the Caroline, Solomon and Marshall Islands, and, what is especially important, her great commercial and naval base at Kiautschow on the China sea. The fact that the Allies hold these great areas of Germany's outlying possessions will figure largely in the terms of the peace settlement. Even should the Teuton intrenchments in France and Belgium and Russia and Serbia remain unshaken, the Allies would occupy in these colonial regions a vast dead man's money territory than Germany would. Because of her overcrowded condition at home and her need of overseas markets to sustain her industries, Germany's colonies are of the utmost importance to her.

And speaking of peace rumors and the like, how is Judge Gary of steel fame going to explain?

Industry and Sanitation.

Industrial concerns that are wise enough to see the relation between economic and human interests are learning the value of sanitation. Unhealthful conditions in either the working or living quarters of labor are being remedied because they are foolishly extravagant as well as morally wrong. The latter reason ought to suffice, but the former drives the truth home to even the dullest perception. Efficient work requires good health, and it is more important to keep men in fit condition than to keep machinery in repair.

A writer in the New York Sun notes that the recent visit of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., to the Colorado Fuel and Iron Company's mines revealed the fact that not a little of the discontent which led to the deplorable outbreaks in that region was attributable to the insanitary dwellings and modes of food supply existing there. It is said, too, that the turbulent and dangerous conditions at Wheatley, Cal., last year were fomented by the State Commission of Immigration and Housing to be due very largely to the insanitary dwellings and environment of the hop pickers. After investigating other labor camps, the Commission, we are told, "established a model camp and from the practical data obtained issued a pamphlet containing rules for camp sanitation, photographs and drawings for sanitary bank houses, that served the Commission to make propaganda through practical workers under its engineers." As a result of the widespread improvements thus brought about the continual unrest and not infrequent warfare that afflicted the district has ceased.

These are instances of exceptional reform for exceptional ills. More notable, because more normal, are the efforts of industrial concerns in various parts of the country, the South no less than other sections, to make working quarters attractive as well as healthful. This policy is not based on mere sentiment and certainly it ought not to assume a patronizing or paternalistic aspect. It is simply a matter of good sense and simple justice. Through child labor laws, compulsory school attendance, a well enforced system of public sanitation and other measures for social well-being, the State should see to it that common rights are protected and common interests conserved. But beyond this some of law lies a broad field of competence and opportunity for far-sighted men and corporations.

The writer who described the Kaiser as addressing a "gang" of his generals probably had in mind some gang-like exploits.

The Overhead Rights Of the W. and A. Terminals.

ONE of the weightiest matters with which the special session of the Legislature will deal is the establishment of a commission to devise satisfactory terms for the next lease of the Western and Atlantic railroad. On the character of those terms depends very largely the future value of the State's richest possession. Whether the Western and Atlantic is to grow in usefulness and in revenue, whether its latent resources are to be developed or left dormant, its vital interests protected or exposed, depends primarily on the foresight and thoroughness with which the new lease is prepared; and since the present lease expires in December, 1919, there is no time to be lost in working out the great problems involved. For this purpose, a commission that can give the subject detailed and earnest inquiry is essential.

In creating such a commission, the Legislature naturally will indicate the broad policies to be pursued. There is one item on which its instructions should be specific. It should specify that in any plans or negotiations which may be considered, the State shall reserve the overhead rights of its railway terminal property in Atlanta. It is altogether probable, of course, that a competent commission of its own accord would recognize the wisdom of reserving such rights, but in a matter so fundamentally important the Legislature should leave no doubt. It should declare explicitly in the Western and Atlantic commission act that hereafter the State shall be privileged to deal as it sees fit with that part of its terminal site which is not essential to railway operations.

This can be done without in any wise complicating the new lease or impairing the road's rental value. It must be done now if the State's future interests and opportunities are to be conserved. It must be done now in order that the way may be clear to utilize, for constructive purposes, space that is now sacrificed to smoke and grime. Having reserved its rights in this regard, the State then can determine how best to use them, whether to delegate them to the city for improvements that would benefit State and city alike, or lease them to private interests, or undertake developments on its own account. The thing of paramount and immediate importance is to see to it that the rights are reserved.

In this matter Atlanta's welfare is vitally concerned, but no more so than the State's. The fact is, the State's interests and the city's are so closely related at this point that they must be treated as a unit if they are to be treated intelligently. The conditions that are a nuisance and a drawback to Atlanta are a source of waste and loss to the State. Improvements that will rid Atlanta of its sewer of smoke will increase the value of the Western and Atlantic property and assure the State a larger income. If the areas between the Forsyth and Washington streets viaducts is bridged over, thus transforming a chasm of grime into a center of beauty and service, the value of the adjacent property will increase enormously and the State's tax revenue therefrom will multiply in proportion.

Atlanta stands ready to construct a plaza over this railroad cut without a dollar's cost to the State. She will improve the State's property, increase the facilities of the State's road by removing grade crossings in the center of the city, and add vast sums to the State's tax revenue, all at her own expense. She can afford to do this in order to be relieved of the biggest nuisance and eyesore that an American city ever tolerated, but the benefits that the State will receive free will be as valuable as those for which Atlanta is willing to pay.

Other plans than the plaza have been suggested as a solution of this problem, though in the opinion of competent architects and engineers the plaza is the most feasible and expedient. However that may be, the State must reserve the overhead rights of its terminal property if this space is to be turned to any profitable or useful account. The particular ways and means of improvement can be left for future determination. But the privilege of making improvements must be guaranteed under the terms of the new Western and Atlantic lease. The Legislature, therefore, should settle this all-important question without delay by stipulating in the W. and A. commission bill that the right to build overhead structures shall belong to the State.

There is plenty of occupation on the Mexican border for the innocent bystander.

Saturday's news is favorable to monarchs. J. P. Morgan and King George are both resting well.

The discouraging part of peace rumors is that they may be as slow in materializing as the original war rumors.

War to the Finish.

Peace proposals have no more chance at the present stage of the war than Noah's dove would have had in the very torrent and tempest and whirlwind of the flood. None of the great issues on which the struggle began has been decided, and until they are waged to a definite conclusion there will be no ground for substantial, abiding peace either in Europe or the rest of the world. A patched up settlement today would mean only another and, perhaps, a more terrible war in the near future. This is not simply a contest of armies; it is a contest of systems and ideals. It must be determined on that broad basis or not at all.

Aside from this general consideration, stands the specific fact that while the Teutonic Powers are now at the limit of their strength and, as some observers believe, near the limit of their endurance, the Allies have not yet reached the maximum of their resources. It is inconceivable, that the Allies would conclude terms of peace with an enemy who is now entrenched on their soil but against whom they are bringing continually greater pressure and whom they have far hopes of dislodging if not overthrowing.

Furthermore, England, France, Russia, Italy and, more recently, Japan all have bound themselves not to enter into any peace negotiations except in common. Germany must crush them all before she can hope to bring any one of them to terms; and as yet none of them shows a sign of collapse. Berlin and Vienna naturally would welcome an end of the war at this juncture and on their own terms. But the Allies are in the field to the finish.

What Georgia needs is preparedness against the boll weevil.

It's a slow day when there's no new peace rumor.

Prosperity for Rank and File.

The weight of a word depends mainly on who says it. Judge Elbert H. Gary, chairman of the United States Steel Corporation, said in a recent address: "The business men of this country have reason to be thankful for present conditions, which are very prosperous." In the statement itself there is nothing to arrest attention, but it has impressed the public because it came from a man who is among the foremost leaders in American business, one who knows broadly and precisely whereof he speaks. From such a source, the phrase "very prosperous" is significant.

Facts themselves, however, bear the most eloquent witness to prosperity; not only the gigantic figures of our foreign trade and the huge measure of our harvests but also the rising fortunes of those innumerable streams of lumber activity and enterprise which feed the vast tides of national progress. War orders have proved a wonderful stimulus to our industries. They may have been the beginning of the business improvement now so widespread and pronounced. But by no means are they the end of that improvement. From the greatest manufacturer to the smallest shopkeeper, from the greatest city to the smallest town, forces of renewal and enrichment are afoot. Business is good and is growing continually better in its minutest as well as its biggest aspects. The prosperity now developing is not for a few but for millions.

Those Mexican battles are merely for some movie show.

Carranza can watch the changing European cabinets with something like amusement.

Editorial Echoes

Enos, where the Allies have effected a landing on the Turkish mainland, while no larger than Strumitsa, is important not only strategically as one of the Aegean terminals of the railway to Adrianople and Constantinople, but has figured quite prominently in the principal exporting cities of Turkey, but of late years sand banks have so accumulated in the harbor as to make it accessible only to small coasting ships, and in consequence the neighboring port of Dedegatch, now in Bulgarian hands, has won much of its trade. Most persons, however, will remember Enos as one of the towns which gave name to the famous "Enos-Midia line," which the great Powers set as the western boundary of Turkey after the war of 1911-12, but which was nullified during the second Balkan war.—Public Ledger.

Thirty years ago we used to work on a paper where the editor kept a spindle on which he would hang things to be used as fillers. This was called time copy. Much of this time copy was devoted to articles about the Turks, and particularly their Sultan. It was popular stuff, and never got the editor in trouble. Gradually, however, it has undermined the Sultan's popularity and the man who was once the hero of many a tale of the Arabian Nights is now fairly well discarded in the civilized world. In the newspaper offices now, good roads are filling the same useful and distinguished place which once was the Sultan's own!—Emporia Gazette.

The discovery of a letter fixing the original of Squeers reminds me that Dickens sometimes modeled his incidents as well as his characters from life. The inscribed stone in "Pickwick," for instance, had a French original, with which Dickens may have been acquainted. In 1758 a stone was dug up at Mountmartin inscribed thus:
Ic—Hic—Hem—Idem—es.
Various savants quarreled over the question of whether it had formed part of an altar to Bacchus or the tomb of an early martyr, until the sacristan of a neighboring church elucidated the mystery. The inscription ran: "Ic le chenin dieu des." ("Here is the road of asses")—London Evening Standard.

VISITING THE WAR BRIDES. V.—Hopewell.

BY FREDERICK T. HASKELL.
HOPWELL, Va., Oct. 28.—You approach the new city of Hopewell through a waste of timber and a broom hedge. You are amazed to see this wilderness extensively laid off in wide avenues and boulevards, marked off by freshly painted signs. There is not a house in sight. It looks as though someone had planned a large city and then neglected to erect so much as a chicken coop.

Suddenly the mystery is explained. A tremendous battery of hundred-foot chimneys, belching smoke, looms above the plain to the right, while to the left is a whole city of paper and wood, corrugated iron steadily marching into the forest under an army of hammers. The next minute you are in the midst of America's largest match-making town. The city of thirty thousand that grew in a year from the tarrows of a cornfield—the "war bride," El Dorado, which is nowhere west of the Mississippi, but right here in the Old Dominion, home of first families and conservative traditions.

The first families of Hopewell will afford considerable bewilderment to the future genealogist. Greeks and Italians seem to have a strong grip on the feed house and spinning business, and a good many signs are everywhere of the old-fashioned Negroes who swarm everywhere, while among the workers in the powder mills are probably samples of every race that come by way of Ellis Island.

Hopewell is a muddled network of narrow streets, shrouded in a mist of mud, lined with paintless wooden shacks, which house overalls and straw shoes, to men, but with an astounding preponderance of dance halls, cabarets, moving picture shows, restaurants and saloons. Through every tongue and nostril pour the streets, few of which are more than a double or a triple street, the noise and confusion of a city that is always bringing more, the tattoo of a thousand hands rapping houses and the clatter of the mill, the murrain of the great mills that brought it all into being.

Hopewell has naturally scandalized those strongholds of aristocratic respectability, Richmond and Petersburg, and perhaps she has made them a bit envious. She is not, however, the den of vice and disorder she has been represented, and that she well might be, considering her population and her government by remote control. Wine, women and some are here, to be sure, but with the assistance of the strong company police force, the Hopewellians are gradually cutting out the wine and continuing themselves to some—chiefly of the mechanical variety.

Hopewell is split in two by a wide and busy railroad yard where it seems to be a miracle that men are not killed every day. On the one side lies the retail and residential section, and on the other side the powder plant, a city in itself. The casual visitor is not welcome to visit this part of Hopewell. The fact is, he is lonely intimidated by the presence of a ten-foot wire fence and a large force of armed men.

Back of this fence, 10,000 laborers are making $2,000,000 a month producing powder for the European war, and also the largest gun cotton plant in the world, and also the largest nitrate and sulphuric acid factory. It has every appearance of being built with permanence. It is universally believed the plant was located here by the Government of Washington because of its strategic advantage of having a munition factory located in the southern part of the country on the James River, which reaches a deep water channel clear to the sea.

Next to the powder business, real estate seems to be the most flourishing product of the Hopewell boom. The whole story, in the case of the Rev. Daniel Day, a retired Methodist minister. Some six years ago he bought a tract of 100 acres of land and built on it what is now Du Pont City, a part of Hopewell. He was broken in health and wanted to live in quiet. He was a fanatical figure in Petersburg, going about in a long, linen duster and a straw hat, selling vegetables among his friends.

Then came the munition boom, and the peace-loving Day found his farm an island in a sea of swirling activity.

WINTER HYGIENE.

BY H. ADDINGTON BRUCE.
WITH the approach of winter many people make changes in their mode of living adverse both to their physical and their mental health. Also they develop certain mental attitudes that likewise are injurious.

One particularly common mistake is to dwell in anticipation on the discomforts and inconveniences accompanying the inevitable fall in temperature that characterizes winter in northern climes.

All sensations are intensified by thinking about them, and by feeling them in anticipation. One is certain to feel badly to them when they are actually experienced.

Some people, indeed, develop in this way a veritable phobia, or abnormal dread, of winter. When they can afford it, they flee toward the tropics at the first sting of the north wind.

If their bank accounts are too thin to allow them to dodge the cold of winter by a southern sojourn, they become "stunt-in." They wear heavy clothing, turn on the steam heat, and shut tight their windows. By thus doing they may, it is true, keep warm. But the chances are that they will also become physically run-down and mentally inert.

Also the organ needs exercise in the winter just as essential to health and efficiency in the winter as it is in the summer. The organism at all times of the year requires a good supply of oxygen. And the steam-heated apartment, house office, or factory, in which the windows are kept closed, chokes the organism of this blood-enriching substance.

Quips and Quiddities

A happily married woman, who had enjoyed thirty-three years of wedlock, and who was the grandmother of four beautiful little children, had an amusing old colored woman for a cook.
One day when a box of especially beautiful flowers was left for the mistress, the cook happened to be present, and she said to her husband and you all the pretty flowers you gets, Missy?
"Certainly, my husband, Mammy," proudly answered the lady.
"Honey!" exclaimed the cook, "he suddenly ain holdin' out well."
"There's nothing like seashore life for promoting matrimony," the hostess, promoting arrangements," said Mayor Riddle, of Atlantic City.
"A very pretty girl said to me the other day:
"I am going to get married, and I am convinced that most men could do without overcoats, except in rare weather, provided they wear the kind of clothing indicated by Dr. Curtis, walk briskly, and keep their minds off the thermometer."
Exercise, furthermore, by promoting the circulation of the blood and the assimilation of food, is itself a warmth in the winter, as it is in the summer.

The man or woman who exercises faithfully every day, who fortifies the system by plenty of oxygen and sufficient food, and keeps the mind fixed on other subjects than the weather, will never be taken unawares in getting comfortably and healthily through the coldest of winters.

This Week In Atlanta Movies

FILMDOM'S BRIGHTEST STARS

1. Geraldine Farrar in "Carmen" at the Grand Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. 2. Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb" at the Vaudeville November 5. 3. Theda Bara in scene from "Carmen" at the Strand Monday and Tuesday. 4. Art Acord in "Buck Farris" film at Alamo No. 1, Friday. 5. Jean Sothern and William E. Shay in scene from "The Two Orphans" at Alamo No. 2, Tuesday.

WITH two Gernias and many other feature films on the program, the screen offerings this week should be the finest that ever came to Atlanta.

The immortal Geraldine Farrar appears in "Carmen" at the Grand theater Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. This is a Laskey production, and it is a masterpiece. Theda Bara appears at the Strand Monday and Tuesday in a William Fox production of "Carmen" never before shown in Atlanta. Special music by the Strand orchestra will accompany the picture.

The most epoch-making announcement in Atlanta's moving picture world is made today on this page—Triangle films will be shown at the Vaudeville on November 5. These are the films that New York pays $2 and $3 to see. The Vaudeville will be closed until November 5 for remodeling and redecoration.

At the Alpha "Doc" Baker, the man with the big voice, sings all the week, and "Neal of the Navy" and "The Diamond from the Sky," the two great serials appearing in The Atlanta Journal which were formerly shown at the Vaudeville, will continue to be shown at the Alpha. Governor Hunt of Arizona appears at the Georgia in "A Western Governor's Humanity." Carter de Haven stars in "The College Orphan" at the Gem at Marietta, Ga.; "Evidence" starts the week at the Alamo No. 2; Hobart Henley appears in "The Measure of Leon DeBray" at the Savoy.

At the Victoria Betty Nanson stars in "The Celebrated Scandal;" the Regent shows "Capital Punishment;" the Alpha in West End has "The Woman in the Box" among its offerings. Vivian Rich is featured in "The Wasp" at the Alamo No. 1.

ALL STAR WEEK AT ALPHA

SHOWS MANY NEW FEATURES.

Beginning this week "Neal of the Navy" and "The Diamond from the Sky," formerly at the Vaudeville, will be shown at the Alpha theater. Every Tuesday will be "Neal of the Navy" day; chapter nine, entitled "The Yellow Peril," will appear this Tuesday. "Diamond from the Sky" is Friday. Beginning this Friday "Miss Own People," chapter twenty-seven. With these two serials added, the Alpha program assumes an all-star aspect. Not the least of its attractions will be the famous "Doc" Baker, the man with the big voice. "Doc" will sing and show many of his lightning character changes at every performance. Both "Neal of the Navy" in which Lillian Lorraine and William Courtleigh star, and "The Diamond from the Sky," appear in The Atlanta Journal. "Diamond" is in The Journal's Sunday magazine section. In spite of the fact that these films are serials, they are so arranged that the individual showings are complete and satisfying pictures in themselves.

In addition, the Alpha will continue to show "The Broken Coin," starring Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. Monday will continue to be "Broken Coin" day; this Monday the offering is a thriller, "The Underground City." Sydney Poppers comedy, "Almost a Knockout," completes the excellent program for Monday.

Tuesday "Foot, But Dishonest," one of the funniest "K-O" comedies ever shown, accompanies "Neal of the Navy." Wednesday appears "The Millionaire Paupers" featuring Gretchen Lederer and Leon Chaney in three reels of excellent five drama. This picture is re-run.

"A Fight to a Finish," with Marie Walcamp as its star appears Thursday, while J. Warren Kerrigan, the great favorite, appears in "A Life at Stake," Friday in addition to "The Diamond from the Sky."

It really is an all-star bill for the week.

ALLURING GERALDINE FARRAR

IN "CARMEN" AT THE GRAND.

Alluring Geraldine Farrar, whose dim interpretation of the role of "Carmen" has been declared by Atlanta critics to be even more wonderful than her opera version, will be seen in the great Laskey production of Carmen at the Grand on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. The last three days of the week the Grand will present dainty Marguerite Clark in "Still Waters," an original drama of eleven life, produced by the Famous Players.

Despite the fact that in account of the immensity of the Farrar picture it has been shown elsewhere at the Knickerbocker, Manager H. C. Fourney announces that there will be no increase in prices when the picture is presented at the Grand. With approximately 2,500 splendid seats in the house, the Grand expects to be able to accommodate all of the thousands of Atlanta admirers of the great star. During the three days the Farrar picture will be shown the gallery will be opened for colored people.

The cast to support Miss Farrar was selected from the most prominent and capable artists in the country. Wallace Reid plays Don Jose; Pedro de Cordoba, leading the band of gipsy musicians, is seen as the treasurer, while William Elmer, Aina King, Jennie Macpherson and other specialties are seen in strong roles.

Manager H. C. Fourney, of the Grand, in speaking of the coming appearance of Farrar, said:

"Convincing proof of the greatness of the picture is shown in the criticisms of the Atlanta papers when the film was shown at the Lyric. The Atlanta Journal pronounced the picture a triumph for Farrar and said that in Carmen Farrar reached the zenith of fame. The verdict of all who saw the play according to William Gurrard in The Journal was, "It is the finest motion picture that has ever been shown in Atlanta."

"Unlike many of the large photograph productions," said The Journal, "Carmen does not tire or drag for a single instant. The play is in five reels but the spectators are swept along so breathlessly by the rapid and compelling action of the plot and the immortal, fiery acting of Farrar, that the last scene comes with a shock of lightning."

"Even her most ardent Atlanta admirers were delightfully surprised at the way Farrar proves in the photograph, that she is a consummate actress without the aid of her wonderful voice. It is a wonderful picture."

Marguerite Clark, the dainty little actress who has won the hearts of the motion picture public by her marvelous artistry in recent productions of the Famous Players Film company, is being starred by that feature concern in "Still Waters." This rare combination of comedy and drama is the baroness attraction at the Grand Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

THEDA BARA IN GORGEOUS

"CARMEN" AT THE STRAND.

At last Atlanta can see Theda Bara, the inimitable, in the role of Carmen. Monday and Tuesday the masterpiece of the William Fox studios will be shown at the Strand theater for the first time in this city.

This is a marvelous picture; nearly a year was required to complete it in its perfection, and its cost staggered beyond. Greater than all else, though, is the superb acting which Bara produces a Carmen of passion and lure such as has never been before.

Here is what the Strand, the home of Fox photoplays, says of this "Carmen": "It marks an era and chronicles an epoch. It has no prototype in auspicious and colossal magnitude, scenic treatment, properties, cast, costumes, lavish expenditures or extraordinary treatment. It stands singular supreme and indisputable among the achievements of the silent stage."

The famous Strand orchestra, whose music always adds much to all the films, will be augmented Monday and Tuesday by fourteen pieces which will play the operatic music of "Carmen" as the plot unravels on the screen. Yet, despite the costliness of this production, the Strand will show it at regular prices.

William Fox's adaptation of Prosper Merimee's novel has little in common with the familiar conventional, operatic and dramatic versions of "Carmen." It borrows nothing of tradition and tradition in conception or execution. The services of more than 5,000 persons were called on for its production.

The true romance of the old Spanish plaza before the band organists took the place of the gipsy, Merimee's "Carmen" throughout. A band of real gipsies were cast from their mountain retreats to lend verity. Edward Velazquez, noted Spanish artist, was brought to America from Seville to supervise the technical and architectural details of the Spanish cities which Mr. Fox created at his studios. Colonel Antonio Rivero, of the Spanish army, drilled the hundreds of picturesque dragons. An Andalusian bull came to America to lunge and charge in the American Plaza on exact replicas of the famous bull ring of Seville. Picadores, banderilleros and matadors accompanied the animal, and artists to display their skill, courage and daring on the film.

More than twenty acres of land were required to erect "Carmen's" Cordova and Seville. Through the streets of these cities roam pretty griffettes and proud grandees; dark beauties of the tambourine and castanet, orange-sellers, chocolate-vendors, soldiers, gypsies. The azure baths of Cordova, where Don Jose first encountered the audacious first Carmen, are accurate in construction and beauty.

Emily Wehlen appears Wednesday and Thursday in a notable Metro drama, "Her Reckoning" or "Tables Turned." Friday is a Pathe Gold Rooster play, "The Menace of the Mute," and Saturday Valetta Suratt returns in "The Soul of Broadway," a William Fox production which is one of the most spectacular films ever made. Miss Suratt's gipsy gown is marvelous in its abundance and their beauty.

GOLD ROOSTER PLAY FRIDAY AT STRAND

"The Menace of the Mute," Pathe's Gold Rooster playlet to be released this coming week and shown at the Strand theater Friday, is the second of the Arnold Daly feature, and may be considered an advance upon its predecessor, "An Affair of Three Nations." The suspense is greater and the tense moments are very well worked up. Ashley Miller has done excellent work in the direction, and the cast is high class in every particular. Arnold Daly as "Ashton-Kirk" does some impressive work, and he is ably seconded by Sheldon Lewis of "Clutching Hand" fame, Louise Rutter, Martin Sainnie, Charles Laiter and William Harrigan.

The story deals with the theft of certain valuable plans of a submarine from an inventor; and the persistent effort of his son to find them and bring the criminal to justice. "Ashton-Kirk," a wealthy young man whose hobby is the solving of mysteries, is called in upon the case and eventually finds the burglar. The quest is complicated by the fact that two dangerous and unscrupulous men, one of them a mute, are also after the plans and murder the original thief.

FAIR BEVERLY BAYNE IN NEW METRO DRAMA

Admirers of Beverly Bayne, the beautiful actress whose articles on "The Fine Art of Dress," appear daily in The Journal, will be delighted to know that this captivating favorite of the screen will now be seen again with Francis X. Bushman in Metro feature production. They have just completed the wonderful five-act photo drama, "Fenington's Choice." The picture, the interiors for which were made at the studios of the Quality Pictures corporation in Hollywood, Cal., is a screen masterpiece, and most of the action, intensely human, is laid in the Canadian northwest. Miss Bayne is every bit as happy as the movie fans that she is back with Mr. Bushman again.

The prize contest will run for five weeks, beginning Monday and ending Saturday, December 4. As the Georgian theater puts it:

"Everybody gets something in our profit-sharing voting contest. Contestants will be allowed to sell $1.00 worth of admissions for $1.00 at the Georgian theater, receiving 1,500 votes the first two weeks, then 1,200 votes the next two weeks, then 1,000 votes the last week on each $1.10 order sold. Votes will also be given with cash admissions, one vote for each penny spent.

"Two hundred and seventy dollars in gold will be divided into three periods: November 1 to 15, $50, $25, $15; November 15 to 27, $50, $25, $15; November 27 to December 4, $50, $25, $15. The three candidates turning in the largest number of votes each period will receive $50, $25 and $15, respectively. All prizes will be awarded on the last night by the judges.

The Georgian's bill is a crackerjack. "The Coquette," a four-part Kalem drama, appears Monday; Tuesday Ethel Grandin stars in "The Village Outcast," a Kalem production in two parts, accompanied by "Diana of the Farm," a Kalem comedy.

Wednesday Governor Hunt, of Arizona, himself appears in "A Westerner's Humility," a Chanfour and three parts. "Arline," a comedy, and "A Family Picnic," comedies, will be shown Thursday. Vaudeville Will Show Triangle Plays Nov. 8

Vaudeville Theater Closes Its Doors Tomorrow to Reopen, Temporarily Fitted Up for Triangular Nights

Tomorrow the Vaudeville theater will close its doors for the first time in six years, a week from tomorrow, on Monday, November 8, the Vaudeville will reopen in a blaze of gorgeousness with Triangle photoplays—the plays that are packing New York and Chicago theaters at $2 a seat.

During the week interior decorators and designers will make over the Vaudeville, putting it in Triangle decorations. For the Vaudeville has cancelled all of its old contracts, and will show Triangle films exclusively. It will receive only theater in Atlanta showing these marvelous films and one of the select few in the whole of the United States.

In taking this radical and progressive step toward bringing the best of the motion picture world, regardless of price, to Atlanta, John and Gus Evans, proprietors of the Vaudeville, believe that they are not taking a chance, but are betting on a certainty. What might be a risk in some places, they believe will be a certain success in Atlanta.

When the huge Triangle film company was organized in New York, and when it calmly announced that it was going to produce films such as were never seen before, for which $2 and $3 admission would be charged at the best metropolitan theaters, people laughed and only told it to the marines. But the Triangle corporation went ahead and organized and signed up most of the legitimate stage stars at very fancy salaries, produced "The Lamb" and "My Valet" and other wonderful films and then put these before the New York public at the Knickerbocker theater at $2 and $3 a seat. And did the public stay away, frightened by these prices? Not on your life! The public went, stupor-struck, it is true, at first. They saw that the pictures were good. They saw that they were getting as much for their money as the "legitimate" stage offered them. So they packed the Knickerbocker at $2 and $3 a seat, and the Triangle company then put its productions on at the same price in Philadelphia, Boston and Chicago," said John Evans.

"I went to New York and saw these Triangle pictures and signed up a contract for them at unheard of prices for Atlanta. No moving picture theater here had ever before signed a contract at any such price. But I have seen in the Atlanta people; I knew they would pay to see a picture that is worth the price. I am certain one of the best." "So I will open the Vaudeville theater Monday, November 8, with Douglas Fairbanks in "The Lamb" and Raymond Hitchcock in "My Valet," and five Atlanta an opportunity to enjoy "Triangle nights" in the Vaudeville theater."

MANY THEATERS HAVE J. P. SEEBURG PLAYERS

Wonderful Automatic Orchestras Are Installed All Over Georgia by Atlanta Co.

More than two-thirds of the leading picture theaters of Georgia are now equipped with the J. P. Seeburg motion picture player, the wonderful combination pipe organ, piano and orchestra introduced in this section by Eugene Wilder, the president of the Automatic Player Piano company, of 50 North Pryor street.

Some months ago Mr. Wilder accepted the sightless wholesale representation of the great Chicago concern, and by personal effort has placed the really wonderful instruments in many cities in Georgia and in adjoining cities in other states. He has started an active campaign for all the south, and at the head of his own selling force expects to increase the new business before the year.

Seeburg motion picture player instruments have been placed in eight of the Atlanta picture houses, the Grand, the Alamo, the Georgian, the Selecta, the Regent, the Bellwood, the Albia and the Bishop, and there are orders in for new types of these instruments for three other local houses. Among the theaters in Georgia using the Seeburg instrument are the Grand at Lorraine; the Kille and Lyric at Athens, the Colonial at Milledgeville, the Hightower at Dublin, the Odessa and Polly at Savannah, the Palace and the Mason at Macon, the Grand at Columbus, the Strand at Augusta and the Maxine at Commerce.

The Seeburg instrument is the last word in automatic music for picture theaters. It is equipped with full pipe organ, with human voice and orchestra effects, and has become as important in the successful operation of a picture theater as feature films. Mr. Wilder left Atlanta Saturday for Chicago to hurry orders that have been placed for instruments that are to arrive music in a number of cities in Georgia and the immediate southern states.

A corps of skilled experts take care of the erection and upkeep of the human orchestras and add to Atlanta and other successful enterprises that keeps Atlanta in front in modern business activity.

No Easy Job

It is no easy matter for an uneducated American to become nearsighted, bow-legged, hard of hearing and stupid at will. That is what Cyril Humphrey is doing for the sake of the great American serial, "The Diamond From the Sky" in his role as the English baronet, Lord Marwick Shrylla. He is continually blundering into all sorts of messes, and no regular Englishman could give a better impression of doing for the sake of the clever actor.

Lasky Presents GERALDINE FARRAR in the Immortal Masterpiece CARMEN CARMEN'S LIPS ARE NOT TOO BASHFUL TO COMMENT ON THE ATLANTA PRESS: THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION: "She will never grant the full beauty of grand opera's most celebrated star until she has embodied her on the screen in the witchery of 'Carmen.'" "Gloria Farrar scored a triumph in the Lasky photoplay of 'Carmen.'" "It is the finest motion picture that has ever been shown in Atlanta." "The verdict of all who saw the wonderful play." "Talks many of the large photoplay productions, 'Carmen' does not drag or tire for a single instant. The plot is in five reels, but the spectators are kept along as breathlessly by the rapid and compelling action of the plot and its immortal, fiery acting of Farrar, that the last scene comes with a shock of surprise." THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: "The first appearance of Geraldine Farrar in the stories is of peculiar interest in Atlanta, where she has sung so often and has won so many friends; and the audience who went to see her in 'Carmen' were not disappointed." "Miss Farrar is the only prima donna of the Metropolitan, perhaps, who could successfully step into the shoes of the immortal 'Carmen'." "Those who saw Miss Farrar's 'Beverly' and 'Marian' and, above all, her 'Tosca'—know her as an actress of the first rank. But they found her film 'Carmen' more amazing than them all." "Audience of Miss Farrar as an actress will find it well worth a visit." "See the Immortal Fiery Acting of Farrar" November 4, 5 and 6; Thu., Fri. and Sat. Atlanta Building Permits for October Showed a Gain of 17 Per Cent Over October, 1914—Apartment Permit Issued—Vacant Frontage and House in Exchange—Residence and Vacant Lot Sales—Business Recorded—Other Notes

Atlanta building permits for the month of October at 17 per cent over the same month last year. The $35,000 permit for the Argard apartment house, in Inman Park, was issued Saturday. This brought the month's total up to $183,251, against a total of $151,588 for October, 1914; a gain for this month of $31,663.

While building is a good way from normal yet, it is showing a steady increase. Material dealers report a large business in Georgia towns where cotton is being used to absorb cottonseed.

Cousins Business Review
By W. S. Cousins, Editor The American Banker
Extraordinary Increase in Stock Transactions Compared With Previous Years—Bond Dealers Unable to Supply the Demand for Prime Investments—Western Business Looking Up—Steel Report Optimistic

COMPARISONS of this year's sales record on the New York stock exchange for the first nine months of the year for an equivalent trading period the average turnover of 1915 is more than double that of 1914. From January 1, 1914, to July 31, when the exchange was ordered closed, the number of shares dealt in was 4,511,347, a monthly average of 6,444,945. From January 1, 1915, to October 27 of this year the record is 136,268,700, a monthly average of nearly 14,000,000 shares.

Transactions in bonds, insofar as the stock exchange list is concerned, do not show such wide diversities as the first seven months of 1914, or until the closing of the exchange, the average monthly turnover of bonds was $10,725,855, as compared with a ten-month average of $68,707,220 in 1915. The average high rate of the 40 "statistical" bonds for this year is $4.76 and the low is $4.25, as compared with $4.25 and $5.45, respectively, in 1914, and $2.31 and $5.45, respectively, in 1913. It should be noted, however, that bond sales on the exchange are but one of the many important avenues for the distribution of this class of securities. Municipal issues, with the exception of the New York City water bonds, are not listed on the "big board." No account can here be taken either of the many millions of dollars' worth of American and European government bonds, or of the large public subscriptions to the "external credit loans" of the European countries.

The latter is a phase of the financial situation which few investors have as yet realized. Many people are distinctly unaware of the fact that in addition to the allied credit loan, American capital has been placed at the disposal of the governments of Switzerland, Germany, Italy and Russia, as well as to a number of the South American republics. This is a novel experience for the people of this country, but one which is a novel experience for the people of this country, but one which is a novel experience for the people of this country.

Investment bankers from the important financial centers report that the history of big corporations has been a steady one of expansion. Instances it has been found that high-grade securities that in many cases have been held for a long time by investors, are now being sold. The bond houses have accordingly turned their attention to securing a supply of moderate-sized securities to meet the demand for such securities, thus giving the market a stronger tone and a decidedly active appearance. Special issues of bonds are attracting much attention, both from private investors and of the banks and financial institutions generally.

The financial district in the early part of the week awaited anxiously the third quarterly report of the United States Steel Corporation which was made public on Tuesday afternoon. Though disappointing to those who have been predicting quarterly earnings of from forty-five to fifty million dollars, the record of the corporation for the third quarter is the marvelous work that is now being enjoyed by the iron and steel industry. The steel corporation earned nearly thirty-nine million dollars in the third quarter, a record for the industry, as compared with twenty-eight million in the second quarter, and twenty-two million in the third of 1914. After allowing for fixed charges and the dividend on the preferred stock, there was left a surplus of over thirteen million dollars, an exceptionally favorable showing in this respect.

A strong sidelight on the rising tide of property in the steel trade was the net earnings for the month of September, which amounted to $13,923,771; this is the largest monthly net earnings since 1911. In fact, the recovery in activity and the increase in earnings of the steel corporation in the past year have been extraordinary. Probably never in the history of big corporations has there been such a remarkable transition in its earning power from comparative poverty to such a remarkable gain as has been shown since the first of the current year. Whereas a year ago the income of the steel corporation was on a sharply declining scale, it is now on a steadily increasing scale, and it is moving even faster in the other direction for the same reason. A veritable flood of orders for the steel that is going into ammunition making and war orders, as well as the orders for big corporations, has been the cause of this phenomenal improvement. In the October quarter of last year net earnings dropped to $2,276,000 and the directors reduced the common stock dividend to a 22-cent basis, compared with a previous annual rate of $3 per share. This is the largest dividend since 1911, and it is a sign of the other direction for the same reason. A veritable flood of orders for the steel that is going into ammunition making and war orders, as well as the orders for big corporations, has been the cause of this phenomenal improvement.

There is no doubt about the fact that the industry is in a state of general business in all sections of the west. The past three weeks have brought larger gains in sales by manufacturers and jobbers than any previous time this year. Those who have been complaining of "slowness" now take a cheerful view of the situation and report increased sales. Sentiment is decidedly better, which has assisted in making the tone healthier. Activity in the steel trade and the advance in grain prices have had the most to do with bringing about this better feeling. There is a steady flow of goods being heard from and, with larger orders, there is a visibly greater distribution of merchandise.

The bank situation favors this movement. The city of Chicago has made an approximate increase of $70,000,000 in deposits between September 2 and October 30; this has never been known to occur before in recent history. It has swelled the total deposits in Chicago to $1,200,000,000. The increase in deposits is a sign of the fact that there has not been the case at all this year. Such deposits of other banks are now about $260,000,000 larger than at this date of last October, and $200,000,000 above two years ago.

CONFERENCE AT ROME TO CLOSE GREAT YEAR

Many New Members Have Been Added and Several
New Churches Erected

BY REV. LOUIS J. WINTER.
The North Georgia conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, will hold its forty-ninth session in the city of Rome, beginning November 19, and probably lasting about the usual six days of conference sessions. In other parts of the session generally lasted a week, but with the characteristic disposition to save time these years, the sessions are more than a week, and are held on five days. It ought to be added that this session has been accomplished, not by neglecting any of the business of the conference nor by doing any of it hurriedly, but by better methods of work. For instance, many reports that used to be read in open conference are now referred without reading to appropriate boards and committees and thus much time is saved. Bishop Collins Denny, whose home is in Richmond, Va., will preside. This will be his third session, a fact which is without precedent in the history of the conference. No other bishop ever presided over three successive sessions of the body before.

The old Georgia conference was divided into the North Georgia and South Georgia conferences in 1864. The first session of the North Georgia conference was held in Atlanta in 1867. Since that time the conference has met in Rome four times, 1889, 1890, 1894 and 1901.

A FLOODED CONFERENCE.
The conference had a peculiar experience at its session in Rome in 1890. The rains were very heavy in late November, and about the second day of the session the waters rose and a part of the city was flooded. Some of the members had the unusual experience of having the water all around and under the homes where they were stopping. Fortunately the rains subsided, the water abated and no serious damage was done to the city or the conference.

Methodism has had a good year in the hands of the conference. The Atlanta district has had many accessions to the church statistics showing more than a thousand added on profession of faith. Early in the year the pastors inaugurated a personal canvass campaign, in which they were aided by the members of the several churches, and the result was quite satisfactory. Other districts, notably the Gainesville district, have shared in the large ingathering. St. Paul church in Atlanta is said to be the largest church in southern Methodism. And there have been many material improvements in the territory covered by the conference. In Madison the new church, elegant in all its appointments, inside and out, has been built under the pastorate of Rev. J. E. King, at a cost of more than $20,000.

It is thought by many that the conference will provide for the appointment of several evangelists to hold revival meetings in connection with the pastors, and at points where special effort may seem to be necessary for reaching those who are out of the reach of the regular services of the church. There are men with special gifts as revivists, and there is a marked demand for men of this sort, and it is hoped that an arrangement can be made by which such men can be given access to the fields where they are most needed and can be most useful. This is an old and somewhat perplexing question in the Methodist church and one that has caused not a little discussion. Many good men have believed that evangelists were needed; other good men have doubted the wisdom of appointing them.

The work of the session promises to be largely routine, as there are no great measures or issues that promise or threaten any heated debates or divisions. The only notable exception to this remark is a matter that has produced some warm discussion heretofore. The law of the church limits the term of the pastorate on a charge to four years. Two years ago the conference adopted a memorial to the general conference praying that body—which is the law-making body for the Methodist church—to enact a law forbidding the bishop to appoint any preacher presiding in other words, limiting the term of office to individual cases to a maximum. The general conference failed to enact the law asked for, but there is a strong sentiment in the conference against the continuance of any preacher in the presiding eldership longer than four years.

WORK OF THE CABINET.
Of course the operation of the business of an annual conference in which everybody is interested in the appointments, preachers, people and the public are all interested in them, and the interest is no doubt increased by the fact that they are not announced until they have been agreed upon by the bishop and the presiding elders meeting behind closed doors, and not until the very last hour of a conference session.

It is one of the unwritten laws of Methodism that these appointments shall not be revealed until the bishops meet to read them out. It is contended that no appointment is legally made until it is thus announced in the cathedra. This custom or law has been a puzzle and a despair to outsiders, especially newspaper men. The latter get the messages of presidents and governors and many public documents and they are given to the public with the understanding that they are not released until a certain date, but the appointments of the preachers at an annual conference are among the few things that gentlemen of the press cannot have in advance.

CHANGES DUE THIS YEAR.
Of course there will be changes in the appointments of preachers at session in Rome. A number are certain, some are probable, and not a few are possible. There are eleven presiding elders; five of these have served their districts the full term of four years. These are: Dr. B. P. Allen of the Athens district; Rev. W. T. Irvine of the Dalton district; Rev. T. J. Christian of the Elberton district; Dr. Fletcher Walton of the Griffin district; Rev. L. E. Lawrence of the Lagrange district. The presiding elders must receive new appointments, and in placing them other changes must be effected, with the result that there will be at least ten changes in appointments. It is possible, of course, that these presiding elders may be placed in other districts, but it is not probable that all of them will receive such appointments another year. It is more probable that some of them will be made vacant and other changes placed on districts.

"In the character of Patsy, Mr. Crockett has drawn a heroine as piquantly unconventional as she is beguiling. It is a stirring tale, told with a contagious zest, and Patsy herself is beguiling."—Brooklyn Times.
Mr. Crockett has written a story original in plot and incident. 'Patsy' may very well be called the best of this author's books. The scene is laid in the old smuggling days, and while there is plenty of action and adventure, Mr. Crockett here steers clear from recording imaginary happenings which do not strike the reader as plausible or possible."—The Outlook.

Committees were appointed and tables have been already pledged by a number of persons interested in making the occasion a success from every standpoint. Tables can be reserved by phoning Miss Emma Scott at the seminary. In addition the alumnae will present a play before Christmas, the proceeds to be devoted to the most worthy cause.

Eastern Star Concert

The East Atlanta chapter, No. 108, of the Eastern Star, will give a concert Tuesday evening in the Masonic hall, corner Flat Shoals and Glenwood avenues, at 8 o'clock. A small admission will be charged.

Signs of The Times

ATLANTA'S citizenship, especially the women of the city, are responding beautifully to the call issued by the Chamber of Commerce and the Southeastern Fair Association, aided by the Atlanta Federation of Women's clubs, for homes for the Corn Club Boys and the Canning Club Girls who will invade the city in a mighty host on November 17-18. Many letters and telephone messages have been sent out; all meeting with that ready and most cordial response that is characteristic of hospitable Atlanta at all times. The fact that the entertainment offered these boys and girls this year is far greater and better than in former years, is something that is noteworthy. Dr. Soule and his corps of professors from the State university have offered to give lectures each day at Lakewood park on fundamental truths regarding agriculture, and it is already an established fact that these lectures will afford more educational advantage to these young people than months devoted in their country schools or in practical demonstration on their farms. This is one of the greatest movements of its kind accomplished by the above organizations, and the recognition by the people of Atlanta that this is true, is being shown by their hearty co-operation in offering entertainment for them in their homes.

To Bride Elect

Among other affairs to be given for Miss Johnson will be a miscellaneous shower at which Mrs. W. E. Johnson will give a handkerchief shower in compliment to her sister.

Miss Frances Daniel will entertain a business party.

Mr. L. R. Sims will be hostess at an informal dinner party at her home in the Knight apartments.

Except the Cadillac, What Other Car Could Cold Reason Choose Today?

Just put aside your natural enthusiasm for the wonderful performance of the Cadillac Eight. Forget, if you can, your admiration for its beauty, your longing for its comfort, your confidence in its goodness...

Cold reason says, buy an up-to-date car for your pocketbook's sake. Cars depreciate fast enough anyway, so avoid the car of a dying type, whose former chief advocates have already discarded it.

Cold reason says, let the other fellow do the experimenting. It requires more than a desire for more business to perfect a new product in any line. What one concern took years to develop is not likely to be equalled by newcomers in a few months' time.

So cold reason says buy a car with V-Type motor or pay the penalty in depreciation. And buy a car of proved dependability or run the risk of probable dissatisfaction.

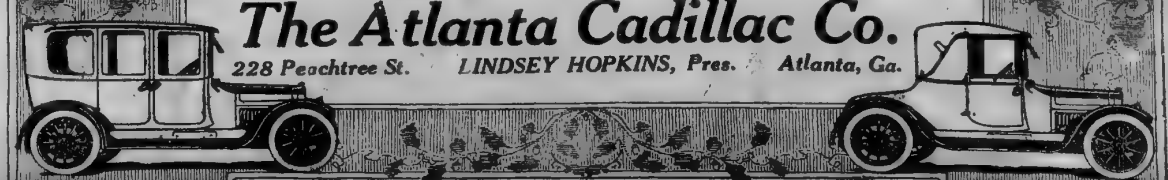

In the three types of the new Cadillac Eight Cylinder Closed Cars, shown in the accompanying illustration, the finest example of closed car designing is offered—masterpieces of the coach builders' art, that are as remarkable for dignity and grace of style as for luxurious comfort in appointments.

Drama League The weekly meeting of the Drama League will occur Tuesday at the Georgian Terrace at 7 o'clock. Owing to the recent illness of Mr. Leiminger, the reading of L'Alphonse will be deferred. Madama Van de Zande is the beautiful Belgian singer who is at present a refugee in Atlanta. Following the spirit of these songs, Mrs. Boyd will change her reading, deferring the play by Lord Dunsany to a late date, and reading, instead, a playful and powerful little war play, 'Across the Border,' by British dramatist, Dix, which deals with war in a non-partisan spirit, especially as it is judged by the master of the house in a word beyond.

War's Way With the Women

THE many friends in the south of Miss Katherine Glover, who was formerly connected with The Atlanta Journal and who has returned within the past month from the war zone, will be interested in the following extracts from an article describing her personal experience in Europe which appeared in the current number of Today's Magazine for Women:

Picture a country of gentle, rolling hills, smiling and plentiful, with summer crops in the fields, farm houses under cozy red roofs that seemed to shelter peace and contentment. That was Germany the morning I came upon her.

I rubbed my eyes and fancied war was only a ugly dream. Then as the train sped on I saw all through those green fields working with hoe and heavy plough or gathering the crops, the stooping forms of women. If there were an occasional man he was either very old or a half grown boy.

Suddenly at a station I came upon a troop of soldiers, strapping, bronzed men, in uniforms that had seen service in the field. And when we were there to say good-by, with faces on which months of war had left the traces, tense, rigid, clinging to their stern men, their eyes tearless, but tragic with endurance. They stood staring like statues when the train moved on and the last hoarse "auf wiedersehen" of the men died in the starting noise of the wheels.

I very soon saw that reading of war at home in an easy chair was a very different thing from reading it in the face of the actual things; from seeing the red finger prints it has laid on a smiling land; from feeling the hate it has engendered in the hearts and speech of once simple, neighborly folk.

In Berlin the streets were swarming with people, who seemed almost as gay as they sat chatting at the tables of the little cafes bordering the sidewalks; as they went in and out of shops or stopped at windows to gaze at trifles.

And then, for as many soldiers as one saw in those crowds, there were women in black, vivid in their newness, with faces turned to marble and eyes seeming to rove restlessly, seeing nothing, and feeling, if one had doubted for a moment, those women told the tale of war.

For days whenever I closed my eyes those black-garbed women would flood by in unbroken procession, with their still haunting faces. For nights I could not sleep for seeing visions of men battered and crippled, the broad wrecks of war. The hideous reality of it all was so close and so oppressive that I felt I should smother in the midst of it.

Then, little by little as I saw side by side with the horrors, something of the courage of the ordinary people, and sensed something of the unseen thing for which they felt, right or wrong, they were fighting; when I saw women giving up all that was dearest for the sake of a belief in the justice of their cause, then I could lose my low, low vision on the mere wreaths of destruction.

Perhaps, too, the mind dulls a little with the very accustomedness of things that are at first a shock. Otherwise the people of the countries through these desolating months. How the women live, they who were the backbone of the nation's action, none of the urge of the swift and terrible drama, nor the vision of the glory of valiant deeds and the reward of proud restoration, it is to keep their hands so busy that their minds are dulled to thought.

There is an unaccountable work to be done in a country at war, work left suddenly by men trained to emotion, excited by the war, and made that the machinery of war brings into being.

As surely as it calls the roll of men, war also calls the roll of women and they answer in a voice no less firm. If there are no men in Germany and France and in our conductors on their cars, women are there as volunteers; if recruits are needed in the banks, it is to be run the shops, in all lines of industry, women are ready to meet the unaccountable need. In a few months time these women of the warring countries have become an accepted part of the scheme of things, whereas in times of peace they had knocked for entrance to the posts they now occupy they would have been turned away as incompetents.

War plays many curious tricks. Since the first call to arms was sounded, Germany has become one great communal family group under the paternal surveillance of the state. All individual effort is welded together in the great national effort. There is practically no such thing as private charity in Germany, as in the other belligerent countries. There are great soup kitchens where the women see to the feeding of the hungry, and in these bureaus to distribute work, there are nurseries where women called to unuseful occupations can leave their children to be cared for, and all these things are managed by women, but under the direction of the state. Money supplied by the great government, supplemented in some cases by private funds.

In the vast family system that has been created, even the food of the country has been counted almost grain by grain and apportioned to the number of inhabitants of the communities.

Plainsmen Score Win Over Georgia Eleven

middle of the field. Pendergrast kicked out of bounds on Georgia's 10-yard line. Georgia's captain in three times, no tackle noticed. The kick didn't go more than 20 yards and Pendergrast took it back to Georgia's 20-yard line. He has Auburn's chance again and Bizzozzi and Stead immediately cut loose loose rippin' plunges. Stead took over in about four tries and the score was 12 to 0.

Then the real feature of the whole game occurred--Auburn's Gibraltar came out on a brilliant end run. By a series of forward passes, Georgia managed to work the ball well into Auburn's territory and on a brilliant end run, Bizzozzi carried it far into the left corner of the field. He was stopped, but one yard from the line. It was first down and Georgia had our tries in which to make that one yard. The standstill was howling with joy and it looked like a cinch. First Powell hit the line, then Paddock rammed it, then Neville caught it and there was nothing doing at all, at all. Auburn's line shivered the attack like concrete barriers, even when they were for a yard or so long. And when Neville tried for the fourth and last time, only to fail, well, it just naturally took the pep out of everybody!

Georgia was beaten then and she knew it. What matter that before the game ended, the Red and Black again advanced within 5 yards of the line? Hope went out of Georgia hearts when that Auburn team refused to be steamrolled for ever so long as it took to get short feet. It is doubtful if Georgia had scored after with a pair of shorties and a sentinels' man.

From the spectators' standpoint, the game looked sensational, but it was not that game, because by a good spirit. True, there were injuries--Hack Wynne had to be carried off the field in the first half because an old injury to his left knee was hurt again. But there were very little else to be said.

An entertaining diversion occurred in the fourth quarter when one of the Georgia men, he is understood--threw a block of wood at the Auburn cheerleaders. It got him right in the head and drew blood. Then there was much commiseration on the part of the Georgia cheerleaders, both squads of roots yelled for each other and it was quite touching for a bit.

Generals Hold Hoosiers to Tie

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 30.—McIntosh, aided by perfect interference, wiggled the length of the field on the first kick off, scoring Indiana's only touchdown in the game with Washington and Lee here today, which resulted in a 7 to 7 tie. In the second period, the Virginians, by a series of well executed forward passes, tied the score. Norcross Ends Middles Beaten By N. C. Aggies NORCROSS, Ga., Oct. 30.—The Norcross ball team closed its season last Monday by beating the crack Roswell team, 4 to 1.

Buzzard threw a good game, considering that he had not had time to warm up before the game started. Robertson kicked his usual good game, but was never in but one close place and is never at his best in the trenches.

Nap Rucker intended to attend the game to look at his cousin's play, as he expects to take him to the big leagues later in his own 25-yard line. The team is under obligations to Marvin Rucker for helping win several of the games.

Frank "Pood" Robertson, after having helped pitch the Columbus team to victory in the South Atlantic, won 9 straight games for his home team on their own turf. He pitched a game for Elberton, Ga., against the fine Washington team, and won it 3 to 1.

Wingo, who hit himself in the ninth inning that won the game.

Turner and Floyd started particularly, with Wiggs ready with the punch when needed. In the line Reyer, Cody and Putnam shone, while young Adams at end played a heroic game, laying out several men by his hard tackles and spilling play after play behind Tennessee's line.

Wiggins, gaining most of the Volunteer's ground by their line play. Both were forced from the game with injuries, but Luck returned in the second half. May also made several nice gains.

Curry, punting for Vanderbilt, gained ground on exchanges with Hatcher of Tennessee. Cody tried two drop kicks from the thirty-five yard line, failing on both. Vanderbilt kicked goal after every touchdown.

Dodge Expects To Leave Vols

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 30.—With Roy Williams leading the fell of candidates for Bill Roberts' old berth as manager of the Nashville club, Dolly Stark, who has been in the club since he was in Texas circuit, and Johnny Dodge, a coaching Clyde Shropshire to trade him for the club's return to the Nashville circuit, are the 1916 Volunteers will have a brand new infield next season.

Dodge arrives in New Orleans this week to join the Winter league colony, and probably will become a member of the Braves' team when they start on November 7.

"I have been sent to the Pacific Coast league," said Dodge Tuesday, "and have been promised the return of my club. I have been asked the club to let me go to the coast for some time and expect to be transferred over there next season."

Dodge is wintering here and announces that he will play in the New Orleans league with the Braves and opens November 7. There is some uncertainty as to which team the Volunteer leader will join. It is expected, however, that he will appear in a Braves uniform as managers of the other clubs have promised to help Manager Elbey bolster up his team.

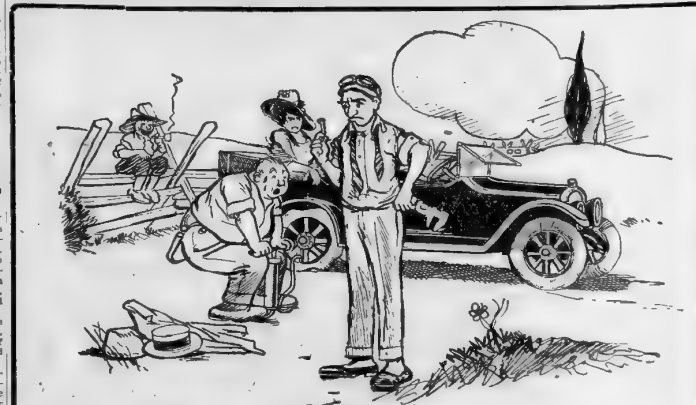

Coffey Wants Return Match

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—Jim Coffey, the Dublin Ginn, who has championed aspirations received a serious setback when he was notified by the club that round by Frank Moran, is not ready to join the down-and-out club. Coffey is anxious for return match with his conqueror and appears in a fair way of being accommodated.

"I am not opposed to giving Coffey satisfaction," said Moran. "I have no fear of the outcome, and if the public has the right with the Smith in the other bout I stand ready to convince the fans of the reality of my superiority." "However, Coffey has a fair chance that he is really serious in his contention that he was not defeated fairly. He must go out and fight a few of the heavies hanging around to re-establish his reputation. He must show conclusively that he is entitled to another chance, certainly I shall not stand in his way. Any man out there who has a championship, I shall sidestep nobody in my effort to acquire this end."

James J. Johnston, manager of the Garden A. C., said he was trying to re-match Moran and Coffey for some date in December. Johnston believes public interest justifies such a move. He should like to see a heavyweight championship take on a few of his heavyweight contemporaries meanwhile.

What interests more car owners is the knowledge that Kor-Ker stops slow leaks—and slow leaks mean: First, under-inflation, and second, blow-outs. Kor-Ker preserves the tubes—adds to the mileage of tires and occupies only 6% space.

W. C. ANDREWS MAKES DEBIT AS POST B'S PRESS CHAIRMAN

Writes Interesting Letter Telling of the Activities of the Atlanta T. P. A's--Tells the Good Travelers Do

It is a fact that the members of Post B conferred upon me the esteemed honor of electing me their press chairman.

Well that has been now--let me account for it in a few words. I have been a member of the Atlanta T. P. A. for some time and have been active in its work. I have written many articles for the Atlanta Journal and have been a member of the Atlanta T. P. A. for some time.

The first thing I did, after my appointment, was to go to the dictionary and look up the definition for all this talk of "debiting" and "press chairman." I found that a "debit" is a sum of money paid out of an account and that a "press chairman" is a person who is in charge of the press of an organization.

When I set out on my duties, I found that the members of Post B were very kind and helpful. They have given me many suggestions and have helped me in many ways. I have been able to do a great deal of good for the organization and for the city.

I have been able to get many new members and to help the organization in many ways. I have been able to do a great deal of good for the organization and for the city.

J. R. STAMPS LEFT VERY INTERESTING WILL

W. O. Stamps Visited Newnan Saturday to Probate Father's Will

W. O. Stamps, of Fain & Stamps, left Saturday for Newnan, Ga., to look after the probate of the will of his father, J. R. Stamps, who died in Atlanta on last Monday. Mr. Stamps was buried at his old home at Roscoe, Ga., Tuesday.

This will is a very interesting document. It was made thirty-five years ago, when W. O. Stamps was only ten years old. All the witnesses to it are dead. It made Mrs. J. R. Stamps eccentric and she has been dead for several years.

To the boy, W. O. Stamps, it bequeathed a saddle, bridle and a mule. The mule was long since dead and the saddle and bridle also have accumulated to time.

Mr. Stamps left large holding of land about Roscoe, Ga., some of which he received an land grants from the state of Georgia and they never passed from him since.

On account of the death of Mr. Stamps, the firm of Fain & Stamps was closed on Monday and Tuesday of last week. The accompanying W. O. Stamps upon the funeral party to Roscoe were B. H. Messer, W. S. Gaston and Cliff Edwards and Allen Edwards.

J. K. ORR SAYS MACON FAIR IS BEST EVER

Paid Visit There Last Week and Saw Jesse Bates' Fine Exhibit

J. K. Orr, head of the J. K. Orr Shoe Company, returned Friday from a visit to the state fair at Macon.

"I have been visiting fairs for thirty years," said Mr. Orr, "and the present state fair at Macon is the finest fair I have ever seen in Georgia. It is a wonderful showing of our prosperity. This is especially true of the exhibits of agricultural products and cattle. They have, it seems to me, down there hogs as big as cows and cows almost as big as elephants. This fair would be a credit to any state."

"Jesse Bates, our Macon traveler, has a splendid exhibit of our all-cotton shoes at the fair. They attracted a great deal of attention and were of special interest to all farmers who saw them."

"CREDIT LOSSES ARE DEVOURING THE COUNTRY" SAYS SAM. JONES

Head of Big Manufacturing Firm Says Credit System in This Country Must Undergo Great Revolution

A radical change in the methods of doing business in the United States was declared to be imperative by Sam. Jones, in his speech at the Credit Men's luncheon on last Thursday. Mr. Jones said a revolution in this respect was essential in order to protect the business of the country from the immense credit losses which annually afflict it. He declared that this loss was a more potent factor in the destruction of the country than any other.

"In this country," said Mr. Jones, "goods are shipped by wholesalers and manufacturers on open accounts on 30, 60 or 90 days time. When the time for payment is at hand, the matters are disagreements about receiving certain items of goods, whether the goods are satisfactory and fact many items of importance enter at this late into the settlement of the transaction. In England, however, goods are shipped to the dealers and as soon as the goods are received and checked the dealer sends to the jobbers or manufacturers his note or his acceptance for the amount of the goods. This note is everything about the transaction is closed while it is yet fresh. These acceptances and notes are then taken to the exchange where they are sold. They are bought by private investors. The bank selling them is thus not deprived of the use of its money for a long time when accounts are not paid. It is a more active use of the notes or acceptances in furtherance of its own business. The seller has no further connection with the dealer in regard to this particular transaction. The notes and their acceptances are collected through the banks for the purchasers thereof."

"I venture to say that if we had some such system in this country, the credit losses would be reduced to one-sixth, one-tenth, or even I might say one-thirtieth of the amount in this country due to losses from credit extension. The amount of agricultural products and cattle of credit losses amounted to $385,000,000 in the United States. Add to this $150,000,000 which the business of the country expends for the service of credit men, and we have then a little over $535,000,000 which the business of the country loses and in the effort to remedy as far as possible the credit losses, the country expends $25,000,000,000 of such bonds, or enough money to run the European war for five years. See what a monster is this credit loss which has fastened itself upon the business of the country. I think that we as credit men should bestir ourselves to do something about it. We should revolutionize our system, but I think it should be done and that the credit men of our country can begin upon it none too soon."

Previous to Mr. Jones' speech, the credit men indulged in an informal and lively discussion of the question of whether it was a custom among the Atlanta credit men to exact interest on past due accounts; and if such was the custom, what success was had in following it.

Credit Men to Hold Quarterly Meeting Nov. 11

Will Have as Guest Secretary of National Association, Big Crowd Expected

The second quarterly meeting of the Atlanta Association of Credit Men will be held on Thursday, November 11, very likely at the Piedmont Driving club. The guest of honor on this occasion will be J. H. Tregoe, of New York, secretary and treasurer of the National Association of Credit Men, who is now traveling through the southeast on his annual visit to the various credit men's associations in this territory.

Mr. Tregoe has been secretary and treasurer of the national association for five years and is one of the ablest experts on credit matters in the entire country. He will receive a hearty welcome from the credit men here and a big crowd will be on hand to hear the message he brings from the national association.

Additional speakers will be announced later. Reports will be heard from all officers and committee chairmen. The meeting promises to be one of the biggest and most enthusiastic gatherings the credit men have held in some time.

OTHER STATES SEEKING ATLANTA-MADE SHOES

"That the fame of Atlanta shoes has spread to other states was shown last week by two orders received by the J. K. Orr Shoe company. One was an order from Pittsburg, Kan., for a good bill of the famous all-cotton shoes for next spring. The second order was an opening bill that came from Ironton, Ohio. "This opening bill was bought from the catalogue sent the firm by our company," said Mr. Orr. "The merchant made his selection of shoes and sent us payment for them. New York exchanges we think that this merchant must have been reading the Atlanta Journal as we are now covering territory either by salesman or by mail solicitation."

PROSPERITY BRINGS MANY NEW MEMBERS TO TRAVELERS ASS'NS

All Organizations of Traveling Salesmen Get Stimulus of New Growth From Revived Business Conditions

The general prosperity prevailing throughout Georgia and the southeast is not only bringing the salesmen large volumes of orders but is also benefiting them in another very material way. It is adding large numbers of new members to the traveling organizations, namely: the Travelers' Protective Association, the United Commercial Travelers and the Travelers' Social and Protective associations. These orders are benevolent and protective associations and offer many benefits both social and pecuniary to their members. During last year their membership grew practically none at all. In fact, in many cases it lost, due to the hard times then prevailing, but with the coming of high priced cotton and prosperity, these organizations have again begun to grow. The Atlanta Council No. 18 is conducting a class through the mystic rites of the order same at every initiation meeting. So far as the general condition of the U. C. T. A. in the jurisdiction which comprises Georgia and Florida is concerned, the membership is increasing steadily. Only recently it is, W. L. Walker, grand secretary, together with other well known officers, instituted a new council at Miami Fla.

I may say that the Georgia T. P. A. is stronger than it has ever been and is increasing in membership faster than ever has," said J. H. Andrews, secretary of Post B of Atlanta, and former secretary of the Georgia division of the U. C. T. A. "I am sure that the Georgia jurisdiction is now far ahead in new members of what it was this time last year. I may say that since the state convention, Post B has secured eighty-five new members. There have been also good increases secured by the posts at Savannah, Macon, Rome and Columbus. I am sure that all of the posts have made increases, some of course more than others, but the net result will show a big gain in new members at the convention in the spring."

Dennis Fleming, president of the Travelers' Social and Protective Association, reports that the headquarters at Albany, Ga., that this new organization is making great strides in new membership since the return of old time prosperity.

A. M. ROBINSON COMPANY
REMODELS FIRST FLOOR

Will Complete Installation of New Dry Goods Department There This Week

For more than a week a big force of carpenters has been busy at the A. M. Robinson company, getting ready the first floor for the installation of the new dry goods department which has recently been inaugurated under the direction of C. J. Williamson. Mr. Williamson recently spent several weeks in New York making purchases for his department. He returned enthusiastic over the success he had had in securing a fine line of goods.

The spacious first floor of the Robinson company will be devoted exclusively to dry goods. All the modern conveniences in dry goods fixtures are being incorporated in the remodeling of the first floor, and the installation of this department will be completed this week. For a number of years the Robinson company have carried certain specialties in dry goods, but the new department marks a forward step in the history of this progressive firm by which it will hereafter be able to serve its customers from a dry goods stock complete in every respect.

Mr. Williamson has just returned from a trip through south Georgia during which he visited a number of his old customers, telling them of the changes he has in store for them. "I called on sixteen of my old friends," said Mr. Williamson, "and I found them all well. I certainly received the glad hand and they were all delighted to hear of the new dry goods stock which we are now installing."

JENKINS WRITES OF RETURNED PROSPERITY
Tells of Cheering One of His Fellow Travelers on the Way

Editor Firing Line: I have been requested to write again for this issue, and I would be a pleasure, but I have dropped out from that line of work. Yet I remember my friends and friends of the past. We are beginning to get in touch with some of that prosperity you have been telling us about. I trust it will hold on with a bulldog tenacity and brighten every dark spot on this winter. While in Savannah recently I met an old traveling friend who had not been received. Said he, "Everything looks bright, and I feel as one in the midst of a new world with nothing green about me. My Christian friends desert me. They just believe in the old line. I want to know, Jenkins, is there any loyalty or faith in the Christian faith?" I have tasted some of life's bitterness, but I answered the old gentleman as best I could. "The Lord knows what is best for us, and as our shepherd can lead us into pastures that are best for us, we should not question or doubt this. Trust Him and follow on. It may be He sees the best pasture for us, and that the best water for us are the raging waves of trouble and sorrow. He will in time still these waters that we may enjoy His and lie down beside them."

Very truly,
W. M. JENKINS

The Hirschberg company reports large sales of their Beacon flashlights. "It was only about two years ago that flashlights were put upon the market in any large quantities," said I. A. Hirschberg, of this firm. "But now they have come into general use. The electric flashlight takes the place of the old lantern which was inconvenient, which smoked, was dangerous, and which had to be kept lighted in a wind. On the other hand the flashlight is always ready for use, is clean, and gives a clear, steady light which is unshaken by either wind or rain."

W. R. Howard, So. Representative, Reports All His Travelers Making Good Money

W. R. Howard, southern representative of the Vanophone company, returned Friday morning from Macon, where he went with the Ad men to visit the Georgia State fair. Mr. Howard was a member of the Ad Men's party that accompanied Governor Harris and his staff to Macon. While he was in Macon, Mr. Howard visited the Vanophone exhibit at the fair, which is in charge of Joe S. Wilson.

"Mr. Wilson certainly has arranged a splendid exhibit of vanophones," said Mr. Howard, "and they are attracting a great deal of attention. Mr. Wilson reports that a number of travelers have visited the exhibit and stated that they saw the Vanophone ad in the Firing Line and the good proposition offered therein to traveling men."

"I may say that the travelers we have put upon the road as the result of the Firing Line ads are all doing fine in fact, they are having unusual success. Practically all of them are averaging from $35 to $40 a week from their commissions, and this merely as a side line. All of them state that the Vanophone proposition is one of the best that has been offered to the traveling men in a long time."

MATHEWS MAKES WISE HOLIDAY TRADE COMMENT

Says Thoughtful Merchant Will Not Put Off Buying Holiday Goods Any Longer

"More and more our buyers are now taking an interest in their purchases of holiday goods," said J. C. Matthews, of Montana Brothers. "The wise buyers have already placed their orders for their stock or have made arrangements to do so within the next few weeks. It should be remembered that the supply of imported dolls, and toys is strictly limited and cannot last. The best of the domestic goods will be picked over soon. Many domestic factories inform us that they are over sold and will not be able to furnish any more goods until at least the first of the year. In fact, it is now pretty late for the wholesalers to be getting goods from the jobbers for the holiday trade. It seems to me then that every merchant who expects to handle holiday goods should place his order at once."

Car Skidded Into Ditch—He Leaned Arm Against Radiator—Skin Off

R. H. Bickerstaff, traveler for McCord-Stewart company, is telling some of the woes that a traveling salesman has who exports an automobile about his rainy weather such as prevailed recently.

"The big pencil with which the All-Star Stamp company is in the habit of recording its orders last week was lost and the office was in great confusion," Miss Sara, the traveling manager, after a frantic search finally located the pencil behind a high stack of papers. "National Sufficiency" And The Way To It

Here is a very sound and excellent chunk of wisdom from a New Yorker by the name of William A. Searle, Secretary of the Rome, N. Y., Chamber of Commerce. He is writing on what he calls "National Sufficiency" and says these wise words:

Whatever other lessons Europe's war can teach, we must admit that Germany has given proof of national organization of a kind unequalled in history. This was expected from a purely military standpoint. Yet the war has disclosed in Germany an almost equal measure of organization industrially.

The one big, compelling fact is Germany's exhibition of national sufficiency. And national sufficiency is one step in advance of national efficiency.

Such national sufficiency means more than mere wealth. It means more than the ability to produce. It means the power to defend that production and wealth. National sufficiency is no less than a guaranty of uninterrupted opportunity to increase and grow in power and prestige.

Various means may take the co-operation necessary to insure for America its strongest possible position. In many communities, large and small, in this country the chambers of commerce and boards of trade have been trying to educate the people to the loyalty and sound reasoning of the "trade at home" idea. This is fundamental.

A city, as a first consideration, should build itself substantially in all directions, with a variety of industries and home occupations. In this way a setback in one line will not cripple the entire community.

The "made in U. S. A." propaganda is a companion of the "trade at home" idea, and is based on the same principle of co-operation. Trade, like charity, should begin at home. The same spirit animates the local citizen to do his trading in another city, as is manifest in the American who feels that simply because an article is imported it is better than the one of domestic make. The practice of loyalty to native city and native country along these lines will add greater strength to the Nation.

If patriotism be termed love of country, loyalty may be defined as the expression of patriotism in the pursuit of business equally with the taking up of arms.

Make every industry in the country stronger by a better understanding between its capital and labor; in the same way, bring the various elements of every community together in the way of "trading at home," in the broadest sense of this term; bind each part of the country with every other by a consistent practice of using goods "made in U. S. A."—in all three of which the underlying principle is the same—and the effect will be National solidarity of an impregnable sort. Ultimately it spells National sufficiency, and sufficiency is near to supremacy.

That's what we call horse sense. How about it for Atlanta and Georgia?

Stock Market Was Active and Strong From the Outset, Through Receding Fractionally at Intervals Under Heavy Profit Taking Sales

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—There was a continuance today of the brisk demand for railway and other investment shares, which marked yesterday's activity, though receding fractionally at intervals under heavy profit taking sales.

United States Steel was again the cynosure of speculative attention, opening at a half point and its maximum since 1912. Later it made a further gain to 48 1/4, but that group was selling orders stopped the rise. Steel advanced over that price was reported after the session's close.

LARGEST RECEIPTS EVER KNOWN CAUSED DECLINE

Wheat Closed 7-8 to 1 Cent Down—Corn, Oats and Pork Off—Lard and Sides Up

CHICAGO, Oct. 30.—Record-breaking receipts led to a good deal of bear pressure today on wheat. Largely in consequence the market which closed unsettled was 7-8 to 1 cent lower than on December 1, 1914, and lower at 1.01 1/2.

It was fully apparent before the end of the session that the big movement of primary terminals was the chief factor for the bulls in wheat. According to figures which were posted about an hour after the opening, the receipts for the week at the leading domestic centers exceeded in size any former total.

GREATER ACTIVITY AND STRENGTH IN RAILROADS

Rumors of Price Negotiations Abroad Caused Weakness in the War Stocks

NEW YORK, Oct. 30.—Further reason in speculative and greater activity in the market for railroad investment shares furnished the contrasting features of the week in the stock market. Rumors of peace negotiations abroad, as well as rumors of a less in the more conspicuous war stocks, some of which were lower by 20 to almost 50 points from their recent high levels, but with substantial recoveries in the latter stages.

Inquiry for rails began with a movement in Erie, which ascended to highest prices in three or four years. Accumulation of Erie Common was so large as to excite comment and seemed to emanate from substantial banking quarters. The advance in these issues was soon followed by a demand for other rails, especially Canadian Pacific and its affiliated properties.

Few Thrills Are Snipped By Censor's Scissors From Atlanta Films

THEDA BARA in "Carmen" at the Strand, Monday and Tuesday

"The reason Atlanta is the most sensible moving picture town in the country. The censorship board here is neither pedagogic nor puritanical. It sees the pictures from the viewpoint of the people, and rejects only the really bad films."

This opinion was expressed last week by the manager of one of the largest moving picture houses in Atlanta.

To all the trade Atlanta is known as the town that keeps the most open mind on pictures. Philadelphia and Cincinnati are straight-laced by comparison.

The pictures suppressed by the censorship boards of those two cities show a list of pictorial stories that "drew" by the hundreds in Atlanta.

Moving picture devotees here see films that dozens of other cities never glimpse. Yet, the number of harmful pictures exhibited in Atlanta has been reduced to the lowest possible minimum.

The censorship board, adopting the attitude of the national censors, suppresses immoral or terrifying scenes but avoids cavelling at details or substituting personal for public opinion.

"We simply act for the people. As far as we can we stand in the place of the people," said W. L. Percy, chairman of the Atlanta board of censors. "We don't represent one class or one sex. We don't express our own prejudices or those of any group of people. We consider every picture from as broad and fair viewpoint as we can."

"Our duty is to protect the public against the gross, the immoral, and the frightful."

That is what the board has done, and at the same time has prohibited fewer pictures than the censors of any large city. Atlanta's method of censorship is being taken as a model by other

THE accompanying pictures of Theda Bara in "Carmen," which will be shown the first two days of this week at the Strand, are proof that censorship in Atlanta is not the squeamish, cavilling sort. Such vivid, interpretations as Theda Bara's "Carmen" have aroused the Puritanical prejudices of other cities. But Atlanta has learned how to suppress immorality, yet allow "all the pictures to be shown."

film is cut out or doubtful scenes are flashed. "I think moving pictures of right character are next in educational value only to the schools. And I am sure the producers are trying constantly to improve the quality of their films." "But doesn't the public demand principally sex plays?" he was asked. "No," he answered, "there are probably 400 or 500 people here who prefer that sort of picture. But they are a small minority."

Shipload of Dolls Sails for This Port

By Angus Perkinson

THEY are to sail at once from Hamburg," said the doll doll, whispering to her neighbor, because dolls never like to be overheard talking. "I think some of my kin people are to be on board, maybe a brother or a sister."

The doll doll said the last few words in an uncertain voice as though she were about to cry. She was made by Fraulein Kruse, who is very famous because her dolls are like children who have suddenly been turned into bisque or into cloth. This was in the German town of Nuremberg, from which all the men are gone now.

A Mother Kruse has put her children together and painted their faces in a way that makes them real she has cried and her tears have dropped on the dolls—for she has thought of the men of Nuremberg who have gone away.

All "her babies" are related, and the cloth ones are brothers and sisters. That is why the doll who is packed in a basement show case on Whitehall street seemed about to cry last week. There aren't any other dolls like her in Atlanta, and she has so wanted a little brother or a little sister to talk with in the basement room where nothing is like it was at Nuremberg.

A soft twilight was shed by the windows where their home of glass stood—the mellowness of light that you see in the evening along the Rhine. It was quiet, because no customers were poking about and asking prices. And the man who looks after the dolls was in another corner of the basement room, fixing up a big lamp.

"I heard you're to have both brothers and sisters on board, and that they are to come here." The bisque doll with a head that is almost unbreakable, but isn't quite, spoke in a way that showed her heart is softer than the most fragile Dresden. "And I hope," she whispered, "there'll be bisque dolls, too."

"Everyone is to have kin people on board." A character doll, with a very round stomach over which a sweater is drawn tightly, spoke up from his corner where he was squeezed against the glass but didn't object, because he is good-natured.

"The war hasn't mattered about dolls. When the men of Nuremberg were killed, the women and children kept making us. We're to be a bigger family than ever this Christmas."

He was going to say something else, but he didn't. The manager was returning. With suspicion he looked at the dolls because he has an idea they talk behind his back.

Up and down in front of the show-case he walked and looked very hard at the cloth doll, who never even blinked, and then at the bisque and lastly at the doll with such a round stomach. "Oh," she said, as though he were echoing the round-stomach doll, "there'll be German dolls and American dolls. War won't make any difference with Atlanta's Christmas."

"We've just had word the British will allow a Christmas ship to leave Hamburg soon, and that from the hold to the top deck German dolls will be packed. In three weeks, bisque and cloth babies and character ones, made by men who are dead now and by their wives and their children, will arrive here."

"We already have some, and a good many toys. See." He turned his back squarely upon the dolls (a knowing person could have heard them utter a sharp sigh of offense) and picked up from the counter a battleship with a wooden torpedo at its end, and should the wooden torpedo hit the red peg in the battleship's side, the dreadnaught is about to sink.

A traction engine, with a boiler and an alcohol lamp to furnish heat, actually ran by steam. It launched a headway under its own power. An electric cook stove baked as though it were the big one in the kitchen at home. A sewing machine went busily over a piece of cloth, and sand crabs automatically loaded a car and sent it sliding down hill. Steam guns and forts looked ominous. Drums were piled in a heap.

The manager himself seemed a little bewildered.

"Where on earth we are going to put it all when the ship from Hamburg comes in, I don't know," he said. "Then he smiled. "I will tell the kids could come here and see these."

There was almost an audible whispering behind him. He turned quickly, and nearly caught the dolls talking. An exclamation was checked at the lips of the bisque, and the cloth ones and the character ones stopped themselves just in time.

Next to meeting their relatives who are coming over on the Christmas ships, nothing stirs them so as the thought of meeting children.

At this moment hundreds of dolls in Atlanta are living in anticipation of the night when they shall be stuffed into toy-cases hardly big enough to hold them, and shall wake in the morning as somebody's Christmas babies.

Cotton Picker Finds Possum in His Bed

A NEGRO cotton picker occupying a tenant house on the farm of Mr. C. E. Sanders of near Point had an exciting experience a few nights ago that he probably will not forget so long as his mental faculties possess the least capability of exercise. In the night he was awakened by the squirming of some object possessed with a great deal of activity that was occupying the bed with him, and with a yell he bounded from the bed. His wife followed with an equal display of agility. Both were convinced that a snake had sought to share their abode of rest and slumber, but when a light was secured the intruder was a visitor was found to be a small opossum, one of two that the negro had captured a day or two previously and had been keeping in a box about the place.—Denton (Ga.) Atlanta's Riverside Drive

Shepperd's Dell on Columbia Highway.

SUCH a driveway as the accompanying pictures illustrate can be built along the Chattahoochee river. The pictures are of the Columbia river highway beginning at Portland, Ore. The smooth road, like a white ribbon; the hills and bluffs on one hand; the gleam of water on the other, can be reproduced in Fulton county. "We have equal opportunities. Why should we not duplicate Portland's achievement?" asked W. T. Winn, chairman of the public works committee of the county commissioners. He visited Portland in September, and brought back the photographs which are like a pictorial forecast of Atlanta's river highway. "The highway we plan would begin at Johnson's Ferry bridge on the Chattahoochee," he said. It would extend to the Campbellton road 12 to 15 miles. "The high bluffs of the Chattahoochee are like the Hudson palisades; we have here the exact possibilities of the Columbia river highway, the talk of every good roads' enthusiast on the Pacific coast. "The expense of building Atlanta's riverside drive would be comparatively little. "I think the county, by the use of a steam shovel, five or six men, and a few carts, can grade the riverside drive in a year's time without interfering with important work now on the country's program of road improvement or new waterways. "The highway we plan would be authorized in the next two or three years. "No road has been written of more than the Columbia highway. No city has been advertised further through a single roadway than Portland. And Atlanta, by constructing a drive along the Chattahoochee, can obtain equal results. "With the drive completed, automobiles could reach Johnson's Ferry road by Peachtree; then to the river, along the drive to the Campbellton road, and back to Atlanta by way of East Point, a distance of about 40 miles. Or, if a longer ride was desired, the return could be made by the East Point road only to

Football Must Be Stopped--Candler

By Bishop W. A. Candler

THE newspaper printed the other day the following list of actions injuries inflicted upon students by intercollegiate football games in a single day.

"Moscow, Idaho.—Floyd Gilbert, captain of the Grangeville High school football team, is dead from a broken neck. "Galesburg, Ill.—William Feisch, captain of the Knox college football team, is in a serious condition as the result of an injury to his spine. "New Orleans—Pierre Ducos, 17, halfback of the Jefferson college team, is dead and all the remaining games of this year's schedule have been canceled by the faculty. "St. Louis, Mo.—Bryan Scott, Knox college football player, was believed to be dying today from an injury to his spine. One vertebra was fractured and his spine was dislocated. If he lives, physicians say he will be paralyzed completely in his arms and partly in his legs. In trying to tackle an opposing player he struck his head against the knees of the man who was carrying the ball. "Rock Island, Ill.—Keith Doohey, veteran team member, has a broken shoulder and will be patient in a local hospital for some time. "Appleton, Wis.—Two broken ribs and injuries to his thigh and kidneys are keeping Irving Curay, a freshman of Lawrence university, in a hospital. His condition is critical. "Bryan, Tex.—Willie Paschal Withers, quarterback on the Bryan High School football team, sustained a broken arm during a practice game on the Bryan Baptist academy grounds yesterday afternoon."

It is probable that the list includes only a part of the injuries sustained by students in games, played that day in the United States; but these are enough to condemn the whole wretched business of intercollegiate football. And this sort of thing goes on from year to year. Why is it not stopped? There are several answers to this question.

(1.) There is money in the game. Gambling and gate receipts explain why many defend these sports that kill. Just as the evils of the race-track have been hard to overcome, the sins of the ball park are corrected with difficulty. All sorts of pretexts were put forth in defense of horse racing, but no good reason was ever offered for the continuance of the evil, and now it has nearly, or quite, disappeared from the country. In like manner the apologists for these deadly games urge flimsy pleas in their defense, but no good cause has been, or can be, shown for their continuance. Divest them of the gambling and gate receipts involved in them, and no reasonable man will defend them for a moment.

(2.) The coaching profession, with lucrative salaries for a work of sport, has sprung up out of intercollegiate athletics. The coach in some institutions receives a larger salary than does the president of the college. The students supply the money for the coach, and he gives intercollegiate athletics from the same motive which impelled the Silver-Smiths of Ephesus to raise the cry "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Why should he be over-concerned about the maiming of many students and the killing of some? Naturally he stands for the craft by which he gets his living.

(3.) The authorities of some institutions use intercollegiate athletics for advertising purposes. They claim that many boys choose the schools which they attend; that their parents have little or nothing to do with the matter. Wherefore they adopt a policy which appeals to the folly of sporting parents, rather than to the sober judgment of parents who desire education for their sons. Thus students are turned into placards for these institutions,—just as negro boys are dressed in grotesque apparel and sent through the streets of cities to advertise a certain class of second-rate shops or fourth-rate mercantile establishments. This is a rather ignoble use to which to put students, but it is cheap advertising for the schools because parents pay the bills.

To obtain such advertising the authorities of these institutions are willing that risks upon the lives and limbs of their students be incurred, knowing that a certain class of mis-

They Don't Flirt; They Only Talk

Order, Please!

Boston's Suggestion That the Men Be Caged Is Not Applicable to Atlanta. Here They Are Sociable, Not Flirtatious.

Top, Miss Estelle Bullard, of 78 Williams Street. Bottom, Miss Blanche Stott, of Moreland Avenue. Pretty waitresses who agree Atlanta men "just talk; not flirt."

"An Atlanta man must talk. He just means to be sociable, and a flirtation is the last thing in his mind. He walks up, sits down, smiles around at everybody, and says: 'Hello, as he would at home. "Men here simply bring their home habits into a restaurant. That's all. The pretty waitress was summing up the characteristics of the Atlanta business man at his twenty-minute luncheon downtown. She smiles across the counter of a cafe in an office building. "But don't they expect a mild flirtation along with the coffee and roast beef?"

She shook her head. "No. The Atlanta man isn't like that. And if he was I'm sure we'd soon put the notion out of his head. "You have no idea how kind he is. He likes to talk. He can't get out of that sociable habit. "People in Atlanta are like folks in a little town. They're just that neighborly."

"When a big insurance man or his poorest clerk comes in and says, 'Feeling well?' he doesn't mean to be personal, he really wants to know how you are. "When he's finished, he says: 'That was fine. Much obliged. And you feel you've been doing him a favor, and not holding him up.' "A new waitress from Chicago paused in her work of piling dishes in the bigger restaurant down the street. "A man here," she said, "would talk to the queen of Holland. He says 'hello' to the girl who's waiting on him, as though he knows her all his life. But I've found out he means no harm. I don't know what I'll do if I ever go back to Chicago. If you speak to a stranger there he calls the police. "I've worked in a good many towns. But I've never known any as good-natured as these. People here smile like actors in a back-on-the-farm play. I've never had a man to get real cross, even when I brought him sour cream for his coffee."

"I think they all have better digestions than in big towns. An Atlanta man strolls in, asks you what the folks at home are, wonders what he wants to eat, decides after awhile, eats it as though he knows her all his life, tells you good-bye, thanks you, and strolls out."

It really must be different in other parts. Boston is a blue-eyed, golden-haired tyrod was frankly flatter, while a hand just emerging from a corner of the stage was about to drop a cage over her. "Beneath the red heading was a box with geographical views of the girl stenographer. "Boston was quoted as saying: 'Put the girl in the office in a cage to protect them from the old sinners who employ her. "New York said: 'Put the employer in a cage to protect him from the girl who has a position in his office. "Chicago said: 'Put both employer and employe into cages if you want to avoid trouble. "And Philadelphia concluded: 'Put the cages around the salesmen and business men and you will prevent unhappiness. "But Atlanta says: 'We need no cages for anyone whatsoever. In Atlanta men are just sociable. It is like to say 'howdy-do' to the waitress; he has a neighborly, friendly greeting for his stenographer; he asks the Chicago waitress remarked: 'If I were to meet a European crown head he would hold out his hand and say: 'Howdy-do.'" guided parents are too blind to see through the trick. This method to advertise might be regarded as necessary, or by some esteemed as wanting the conscientiousness which should characterize an educator; but what of that, if it pays? Now the remedy for the evil is in the hands of parents. It is time that fathers resumed the authority and responsibility for their children. It would be just as safe to send a sick boy to a drug store with permission to take any medicine he pleased as to allow a fellow youth to pick the college which he will attend. The student of an institution of learning for a boy is too serious a matter to be left to an inexperienced and immature mind, especially one who was reared above culture, and youth wise enough to choose his college would be too wise to need one. Certainly a boy who judges a constitution by its "teams" and games shows unmistakable inability to form a sound opinion on the subject. "Let parents understand that by intercollegiate athletics their sons are paying more for collegiate education than would be secured without these games, and that this increased price for education instead of securing a higher quality of culture really results in a poorer quality. Let them understand that from their pockets are extracted more money to make up for the cost of these games, and that the increased price for education instead of securing a higher quality of culture really results in a poorer quality. Let them understand that in addition to the increased cost of a college course, they are contributing to the lives and limbs of their sons and supporting without reason the selfish. When parents get the indisputable facts fixed in their minds,

Sun Baths On Top of Downtown Buildings

A CULT of sun-worshippers has sprung up in Atlanta. In a breech cloth and nothing else, the members worship their divinity from the tops of office buildings.

They choose Sunday morning as the time for their devotion, and continue their exercises three to four hours.

The purpose is not religious, but physiological. Dr. Victor E. Keller, a specialist in bone affections, learned through hospital work in Boston of the restorative effect of sun baths.

He placed a cot on the roof of the Spear building, overlooking Five Points, and bathed weekly in the sun until his skin is not brown.

"Jack" Stewart, of the Century club, organized by Arnold Broyles, and including as its third member, John McCullough, has joined the "sun-worshippers."

He has bathed now in sun rays near East Lake, until his body is a deep brown. This winter he will take the baths on the roof of the Healy building.

The mild winter, says Dr. Keller, will permit of bathing here in the sun the year round. Protect yourself from the wind, and you'll not suffer from cold.

The method of sun-bathing is to lie on a cot, exposing the naked body to the sun's rays.

mania for intercollegiate athletics will disappear in far less time than has been required to spread the disease over the land, and many educators will be glad that a reformation has been accomplished which they have lacked the courage to achieve. In their innermost souls the authorities of many institutions of learning wish intercollegiate athletics abolished, but they are not ready to do so until it has become as popular as it is pernicious and perilous.

One of one day's injuries, as reported in the daily press, is enough to condemn for all time these sports that kill. Games that maim and kill and demoralize cost more than they are worth—immeasurably more. Certainly these games are not worth the candle, especially when they snuff out the light of a precious young life.

How many victories won on the ball field by the Grangeville High school would be an adequate offset to the killing of Floyd Gilbert? How many pennants would pay sufficiently for the death of the boy from Jefferson college who was killed in New Orleans? What compensation would be paid for the brilliant boy who died in Decatur a few weeks ago?

Did "Lost Race" Once Dwell in Georgia?

An ancient people who developed a civilization equal to that of the Aztecs, are believed to have made Georgia their home before the coming of white men, and to have built themselves villages and temples. Excavations being made in the Nacoochee valley may lead to a further search for traces of the copper-colored people who constructed huge burial and temple mounds.

Relics of Georgia's Former Inhabitants Are Being Transferred to New York and Washington for Exhibition.

NEW evidence is being found that an ancient civilization existed in Georgia. The tombs of a forgotten race are being unearthed, and relics of the days when they built temples and villages in Georgia are being discovered.

These ancient people were not Indians, but they must have borne a likeness to the Aztecs who perfected civilization in Mexico while Christian (?) Europe was still half pagan.

No one knows who these temple-builders were, or how they looked. But it is believed they had light skins, and were members of a race who have passed now from the earth.

The North American Indian is not their descendant. Nor is it possible that mariners from Europe could have reached the American coast years before Columbus. Evidence is that a race of which history tells nothing lived and built villages and set up laws and made progress in the arts and sciences.

Europe then must have been wrapped in the twilight of medievalism. Our progenitors were members of half-savage tribes. But here in Georgia their civilization was at work.

The people who passed away in a manner no one can explain, were living apparently in peace, and were beginning to discover the arts and sciences.

Near Cartersville they built a village and surrounded it with a great moat to give protection; they erected a temple and the mound on which it stood can be seen now with a path that the priests used.

Irrigation fens were attempted, and there is evidence that large streams being dammed and turned aside to fertilize fields or to provide ponds.

All this was long before Columbus dreamed of a new world over the sea, and set sail into the west. It was before the genius of Europe began to assert itself; before the Greeks taught the worship of beauty; possibly, it preceded the glories of Egypt.

The search into Georgia's past has merely begun, and only the faintest traces have been found of the While Europe Was Still Pagan, a True Form of Civilization Is Believed Then to Have Existed in Georgia.

BIT BY BIT they hope to trace the history of Georgia's "lost race," and to present a clear picture of the forgotten civilization that existed here.

Stones carved with figures like Egyptian hieroglyphs have been discovered near burial mounds in Georgia, and perhaps in time they may be deciphered, like the puzzling Egyptian records.

This is the hope of investigators. It is believed that the archaeologists will find in Georgia a fruitful field. Nowhere are the burial tombs in greater number or the relics more significant.

These tombs, like the mounds in north Georgia, relate to the Indians. But relics of a preceding race also have been found.

Geological investigation has extended to Georgia's emergence from the sea; bones have been preserved of the gigantic animals that lived here in pre-historic days; and the rock and earth formation prove that a strip of Georgia is one of the oldest parts of the world.

But only recently a search was begun for the people who lived here before the Indians. The state of Georgia, except for private efforts, has had no part in such investigation.

Even now the relics that are being unearthed in north Georgia are not being retained here as records of the state's early history, but are being sent for exhibition and safe-keeping to Washington and New York. Altogether, forty-two bodies were removed from the mounds in the Nacoochee valley, and the skulls were sent to the Smithsonian institution.

The mounds near Cartersville will be opened next and any relics pointing to a former civilization will be sent to Washington.

The state of Georgia has neglected such research, and has provided no place where precious relics of a former age and a former civilization could be kept.

It has been left to the government to discover the "lost race" that once dwelt here.

Indian skulls and implements found in the west which are similar to relics being discovered in Georgia by experts

"lost race" that dwelt here. Who were they? What was the land of their birth? And how did they disappear as though swept off the earth by God's hand?

Cotton, Europe, politics, and the humdrum of daily life are Georgia's 1918 thoughts. Speculation has not gone back beyond the Christian era and wondered who dwelt then in Georgia.

The temple mounds, the tombs, the ancient relics have gone undiscovered, unpressed, until now the government begins researches.

In the burial mounds of the Nacoochee valley, government agents have been at work for the last few months searching for traces of Georgia's former inhabitants. They have discovered Indian bodies and implements there. But such discoveries are merely a beginning.

Who built the temple mound at Cartersville? What race dug the great moat that surrounded a whole village? Who fashioned the stone idols discovered near there? Answers to such questions are being sought by the government archaeologists.

Jane Dixon Discovers New Cause Of Divorce

By Jane Dixon

"THE reason for divorce among a large class of people is the former position of the wife in the business world, where she gained a taste for independence and lost a part of her confidence in men.

"Her condition as a wage-earner didn't lessen the woman's independence. But she grew used to money sufficient for her wants, and the narrow allowance after marriage became a constant annoyance to her. But most all she had learned from observation as member of an office force that the butterfly disposition is more or less general among men.

"This is what a business woman said to me last week:

"One of our night engagements at the office by the husband, and the wife who formerly was a business woman thinks it's time for a divorce," concluded my informant.

Gold fish are being cherished here in place of canaries. The European war cruelly crippled the supply of the yellow birds from the mountains of Germany, where they are raised with perfection of color and song. Atlanta owners are so now, attention is turned to the little golden fish.

"I know of one Atlanta woman who owns an aquarium of one hundred gold fish," said a dealer here last week. "She has most of them named, and she says that when she calls Fritz, Fritz's little yellow snout pokes above the water; or Reginald, and Reginald's little brown eyes blink at her.

"Nothing is easier to raise than gold fish. Give them running water, and they'll live in peace and fruitfulness. From an shipment of 100 gold fish received in Atlanta two years ago and sent to a pond near here, $1,000 worth of little gold fish have since been sold."

"It is the most interesting family in Atlanta."

That was what the soft-voiced, smiling-eyed lady said.

"There are five little girls, starting off at three years, and progressing a year."

"The home of these five little girls is in West End, and their mother is old-fashioned. People like her at first sight. She reminds you of lavender and the color of modesty and courtliness, and the five little girls are being brought up exactly like her.

"One of the first rules adopted for them was: They shall be taught dancing lessons."

"What you will explain the mother, dancing is the cause of too much familiarity now. My little daughters shan't dance."

"There are children in Atlanta who know no more of the Bible and religion than if they lived in some remote part of China. It is astonishing. They are never taken to church, never to Sunday school. Religion is a forgotten topic in the lives of these children, and growing up utter heathen in the heart of Atlanta."

The school teacher who said that to me is very conservative and never hyperbolic.

"We can't very well teach the Bible in the public schools," she continued. "How could we reconcile the manner of teaching to the differences here in religious belief? But it does seem that some way could be found to give the Biblical instruction to such children."

Swamp Robins Near Macon Were Sidney Lanier's Music Teachers

THE wild, weird quality of Sidney Lanier's music, which made him known when his poetry was neglected, is explained in the following article by Henry E. Harman, of Atlanta, whose verses have been likened to the poet's.

Bringing with him his flute, Lanier used to roam the marshlands around Macon, and there listened to the notes of the swamp robin until he could duplicate, for northern audiences, all its strange melody—could bring to the north music "fresh from the dewy summertime of the south."

He looked out over the Marshes of Glynn, near Brunswick; and, where others had seen only commonplace and dullness, he saw the beauty of sky and air and sea. He stood in the early morning at Fernandina; and, oppressed with poverty and sickness, conceived his wonderful poem "Sunrise." He looked on the green hills, and dreamy summer; then looked upward and found a trace of man's kinship to God.

This is told with unusual sympathy in the following article by Mr. Harman:

By Henry E. Harman

TIME and the world are tardy paymasters. So long have both dealt with the adjustment of compensation for genius and greatness that both are wary in making settlement until they are absolutely sure what rewards should be meted out to every claimant. As a rule no bright stars loom out when genius dies, but when it was, Lanier learned to have fixed compensation, brilliant luminae blaze in the sky, so every one may see.

It is poor consolation for a struggling genius to trudge through a lifetime, singing his songs from the byways, with no one to listen. The stars from the multitude, when he is long since dead, and the glitter of his marble monument in the afternoon sun, are none of his heartaches, nor will these buy bread for his hungry children. Greatness and genius must be measured by an exacting rule, ere the Goddess of Reward can place the crown upon the head where it justly belongs.

Of these truths we have no finer example than that exhibited in the life of Sidney Lanier. His was a life of struggle, with the bare recognition of his genius and genius that shone about him. The man, like others of his type, must have been conscious of his poetic power. After all the poet is the best critic of poetic expression. His inborn instinct, taste and temperament, tell him the difference between finished and unfinished verse. It may not be his trained eye that catches a glimpse of the sparks of genius, as they tingle from poetic lines, but his soul responds to these as they appear, or rejects the passages that are unappreciated.

Lanier's life, therefore, must have been all the sadder because of his very consciousness of the excellent work he was doing and the tardy recognition he received at the hands of the restless, unsympathetic public. But for his music he would have been practically unknown during his brief career. The playing of his beloved flute was so artistic and beautiful that the listening crowd clapped its hands in applause and made him a well known figure in Brooklyn, New York and Baltimore, where his musical talents were most observed and appreciated. He had gone out into the marshlands around Macon and listened to the silver notes of the swamp robin. Its notes of intense beauty enthused his very soul. Bringing his flute, master of the art, he would have been able to duplicate the swamp robin's song and when he played this strange music to his northern audiences, music fresh from the dewy summer time of the south, the people who listened were enthused with its wild, weird notes. And for his music the master was honored and made for himself a place among great people which was pleasing to a nature like his.

But during his lifetime Lanier's great work in his poetry—was signally neglected and unappreciated. In various magazines had appeared his now famous lyrics, but no one applauded them—no one even gave them passing notice. The deep-pointment must have cut deep into the poet's soul, for the singer was cognizant how much inspiration he had poured into these simple, but matchless songs. When he went to Brunswick and his less vastness of space which always lured the soul. Thousands had looked upon this same picture for hundreds of years, but to these thousands the picture was commonplace, dull and rude. It required the poetic eye to see its charm and the poetic pen of Sidney Lanier to change this commonplace marsh into one of the most wonderful pictures of beauty in the English language, for the Marshes of Glynn will live with the best of all modern poems.

He went in the early morning to the shore at Fernandina, saddened not only with the poverty which had followed his every footstep, but now burdened with that darker enemy of disease, which was closing in upon the little remnant of vitality which was left him. The sun came up out of the calm ocean, flooded the back lying marshes and live oak forests with light and warmth and out of this morning of sorrow grew his wonderful poem of "Sunrise." Into its lines he wove the web and woof of his clear sighted, mystical thing, whose activities his immortalises the poem and endears it forever to every lover of the Master's songs.

The poetry of Sidney Lanier is more distinctly southern than that of any other of our singers. The secret of his greatness comes from his love of and his living near to nature. Like the great Audubon the summer woods to him were like a woman's face, and through whose aisles came the music of bird and beetle and the sorrowful song of the wind. To him the sea was one of the most beautiful things. That one immortalises the poem and endears it forever to every lover of the Master's songs.

into his famous poem "Symphony," and in the light there came to him those mystic phantasies and the poet's touch, an absent hand which painted in "An Evening Song."

"Look off, dear Love, across the sallow sands. And meet my meeting of the sun and sea. How long he lies in sight of all the lands. Ah! longer, longer, we. Come forth, sweet stars, and comfort heaven's heart; Glimmer, ye waves, round else unlighted sands. O night! do you our sun and sky apart. Never our lips, our hands."

The moral trend in Lanier's poetry was largely controlled by its artistic craftsmanship. The average student of his work, enthused by its artistic beauty, forgets, in a measure, the strong thread of religious sentiment and purity which pervades what he wrote. And yet after reading, there settles upon the reader the reader that calm, dispassionate moral influence, as an uplift for good, which time nor change can displace. In a few lines embodied in one of his Johns Hopkins lectures he fixes his truth:

"Let any sculptor hew out the most ravishing combination of tender curves and spheric softness that ever stood for woman; let it up to have a certain fullness that hints of the flesh; if the brow be insincere; if in the minutest particular the physical beauty suggests a moral ugliness—that sculptor—unless he be portraying a moral ugliness for a moral purpose—may as well give over his marble for carving stones."

This passage from his lecture on Art sets up his moral standard for poetic beauty, a standard which the poet maintains in every line of his work. In the Marshes of Glynn he paints the picture of sinuous beauty, which critics have condemned and yet this passage is as

Life just Isn't What It Was

Two boys with a little work of green walnuts, hulling them in the back alley, is one of the grandest experiences of this mortal career. There is not much of such joy these days. The boys now haven't the time and patience to build a wagon, pull it to the woods and fill it with big nuts. We haven't seen boys so happy for many a day as those two boys hulling the green walnuts; and then, when they are hulled, to spread them out on the kitchen or shed roof was an event so crowded with anticipation that it filled the coming winter days with golden summer. A man of cracked walnuts of an evening, about which the children would gather before going to bed, was an excellent custom whose memory will ever remain a delight.

We fear the boys of today are not as enterprising and diligent as they were 40 or 50 years ago. These solid wheels of the wagon, those creaky axles, that frail and awkward bed, was a greater achievement in those days than a twin-engine is in these degenerate times.—Americus (Ga.) Progress.

Snipe Hunting

The old game of "snipe hunting" was revived for a time Wednesday night when a crowd of store boys went to the foot of the Lindale mountain with Grady Turley as bagger.

The fun was all at young Turley's expense. He started the evening and ran through the day. For one and a half hours Turley patiently and wisely held the bag down in a deep ditch on his knees, while the boys who were supposed to be driving in the "snipe" were firing in vain with all kinds of giggles and smoking good cigars that the kind-hearted Turley had himself purchased.

After the hour and a half, with the patience of Job, Turley gave up the ghost. He whistled and whistled for the snipe drivers, only to receive no answer. Then he journeyed breathlessly homeward.

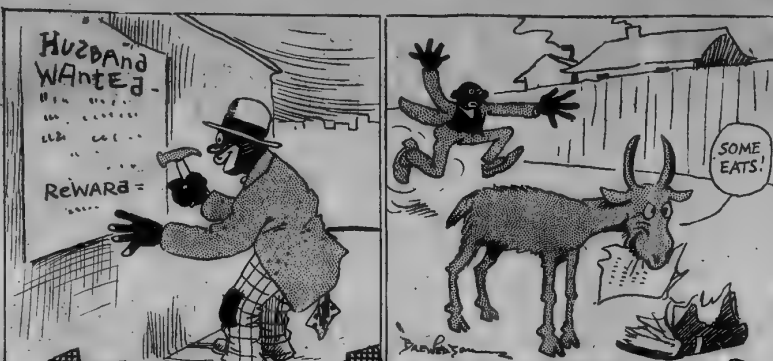

On the road home he met with John Wood, and related to him the fruitless experience and declared that he believed the boys were lost in the darkness. When asked as to his catch he solemnly and sorrowfully exclaimed that he did not catch a single thing.

Turley now declares that he has been fully initiated into the loyal order of snipe hunters, and is ready to do service in initiating some one else, and that he has just got to do so.—Rome (Ga.) Herald.

War Letters

WAR LETTERS written near Atlanta were found last week in an old mattress by Mrs. B. F. Henslee, says the Thomson (Ga.) Progress.

"Among the letters were several from W. B. Henslee, a Confederate soldier, to his wife. They were postmarked fully after the war. Near Atlanta, Aug., 1864. No postage stamps were used, but in the upper left hand corner the words '10 cents' were stamped. The envelope was of common 'war' wrapping paper, and were tied together with twine."

JUDGE JOHNINGS'S POLICE MATINEE!

By Ward Greene
Buckaluck's Marriage Bureau.

Now de fust man ter come wuz er nigger name Gum. (You know dat con, face lak de moon). He walks in an' look den he sh' shak er foot. (I tells it to you an' I b'lieves it an' true). — A Long Story.

A MAN of enterprise was Robinson Sims, known to the elect in shady circles as "Buckaluck." He conducted a campaign in Dartmouth the other day to marry his daughter off.

Now, according to the works of Mrs. Humphrey Ward and Old Cap Collier, there have been many scheming matrons who waged crafty intrigues sub rosa to procure proper husbands for their debutante daughters. But such was not the method of Buckaluck. Buckaluck was open and above-board first, last and all the time.

"Ias gwiner marry you off, gal," he is reputed to have told the flower of his family one day. And straightway he bled him a sign painter and had prepared a huge placard which read:

Husband Wanted!
Apply Within.

Suet Jim saw the sign. Until that moment matrimony had been quite hither in the thoughts of Suet Jim. Now it suddenly appealed to him as a whimsey of peculiar attractiveness. Forsooth, he would adventure it!

He did. It was a marvelous coincidence and a circumstance of rare misfortune for Suet Jim that but the moment before, Buckaluck's daughter had also seen the sign.

Buckaluck's daughter was a maid of spirit. She was as quick to act as her father, and a much better hitter in the pinches. When Suet Jim entered the front door, Buckaluck was being tossed out the rear by his little girl. As she turned, ready and willing to meet all comers, who weighed in under two hundred pounds, Suet Jim stepped briskly forward and in honeyed tones, remarked:

"I seen yo' ad outside an' Ias been and begin to get right away from there, for Miss Buckaluck, if one may so speak of the lady, was well in a blue dress when it came to receiving callers.

All of which, related before the recorder the next day by policemen who had arrested the angry girl, was received with much relief by the court.

"And where," said his honor at the conclusion of the tale, where, may I ask, are Buckaluck and Suet Jim?"

"The old man is home in bed with three busted ribs, your honor," said the officer, "and the last we saw of that nigger Jim he was overhauling an express train in the direction of Birmingham."

The Danger Mark.

Dey got some sperrits dese days dat shelly am de stuff. Lessways dat's what dey tell me, dey say it ain't no bluff; One engineer drunk half er pint an' den cut up real rough.

THE trouble with Grady Shields was with his imagination. He had too much of it. Inspired by such a pleasant little symbol as a skull and cross-bones, it was apt to run away with him, envying dire things.

That was the reason Gravy lay on the ground in Delia Dibble's backyard and moaned loudly. When a policeman appeared Gravy informed the officer that the wings of death hovered over him and that unless immediately aided was forthcoming, he was indeed a goner.

"Ias been p'izeed, boss," Gravy told internes at the hospital. After much probing and puzzling, the doctor told Gravy he was a liar. When Delia appeared on the scene and had Gravy arrested.

"Judge, hit wuz disorway," Gravy informed the court. "I was ramblin' long back er Miss Dibble's house an' er bottle settin' on de back porch fatch mah eye. He wuz mighty nigh to judge, an' when I grab dat jug, I say ter mahself, 'Gravy, les see whut sorter dram dis am, boy.' Judge, one swig er dat juice wuz fine! But when I turn her towa-d de light, dar wuz er p'izen mark on de side, big ez er barrel. An' right den an' dar I knowed his wuz all up wid ole Gravy!"

"Judge, I do p'ieve dat nigger's tellin' de truth," broke in Delia Dibble at this juncture. "Must er been five minutes ater dat I come out on de back porch an' an' an' somebody done drunk all mah mad medicine!"

"What kind of medicine was it?" asked the judge suspiciously.

"Some er dis new-fangled medicine, Judge. I done read in de paper whar er lady up in Knoxville took er shot er dat stuff an' say she could whup er grizzly bar. So I say ter mahself dat's de stuff fo' me! An' I put dat p'izen mark on her so niggers lak de Gravy ain't tech it!"

"Seems to me I've seen something about that myself," said the recorder meditatively, as he dismissed the charges against Gravy Shields.

A Little Too Far.

Hit ain't his colah matters most. Goats kin be brown or white, Be thing whut makes me skittish an' His keersless appetite! —Reveries of a Burhead.

EXODUS KING was an aged darkey with a sincere respect for the Scriptures and the religion of his fathers. Therefore, it was a matter of some surprise when Exodus was arrested on such an inhuman charge as cruelty to animals.

The beast in question was a goat. It was alleged that Exodus had flouted the goat wretchedly with a chair and was only stopped from branding the innocent creature by the intervention of a cop.

In court Exodus was not prone to deny these indictments. He admitted that in fact, with out repeated threats to "do fo' dat goat de fust time him an' me meet up in de big road."

Furthermore, added Exodus, "dat goat am de debil house ter life. Dis ole nigger's good chur'zman. Got me er Bible whut I read ab'ry night. An' when I come in de do' yastiddy evenin', Judge, whutever reckon I see? Dat goat done chew up fo', five chesers an' commence on de food. Soet, dat, I me so bad I lay after him wid de leavin'."

Then Exodus made his great mistake. Had he only been content to let his case rest where it was, all might have gone well. But the old man's imagination, stimulated by the attention he was getting, began to run riot.

"Judge," continued Exodus impressively, "dat ain't de wuz. When I gone ter pick up dat Bible, come ter fin' out de goat wuz eatin' right on one place in de New Testament—de Lawd's supper! I tell you dat goat am de debil sho' nough!"

"Exodus," said the recorder mournfully, "have you ever read the story of Ananias? You should do so. And I think you'll have plenty of leisure for reading in the next thirty days in jail."

Pair of Scissors Are 75 Years Old

MR. W. S. GAINES is the possessor of an old pair of shears made by his father more than seventy-five years ago. They are in a splendid state of preservation, and will do service for a century or more yet, although they are rather heavy, weighing possibly a pound or more.—Eiberton (Ga.) Star.

Eleanor's Tragic Story

ONE DAY, as a little girl and boy were out playing, their older sister called them to carry a package to the postoffice for her.

That day the wind was blowing very hard, and while they were looking at the picture inside the package, the paper on which the address was written blew away.

They could not find the name, but John said he knew it was to Mr. J. H. Simmons, Milan, Ga., and he would go down to Smith & Co. and get it wrapped up again.

Mary said it was not to Milan but to Miss Ellen Stimpkin Miller, Ga.

John said he was going to do what he thought was right. About a week afterward, as they sat around the fire, the postman came and handed Eleanor a package.

She opened it and read a note, which said:

Dear Miss Brown: Though I have not the pleasure of knowing you, I was pleased on receiving your picture, and am sending you mine by return.

Sincerely,
J. H. Simmons.

the whole story, and what do you suppose was the result?

Robins Were Lanier's Teachers

pure as the sea-washed sands about which he wrote:

"Sinuous southward and sinuous northward the shimmering band
Of the sand beach festoons the fringe of the marsh to the folds of the land.

Inward and outward to northward and southward the beach lines linger and curl
As silver wrought garment that clings to and follows the firm sweet limbs of a girl."

In Alfred Lyall's splendid life of Tennyson a wonderful picture is painted of the threatening cloud of religious doubt which came over the English singer and hurried his otherwise moral vision. He questioned the worth of prayer, altars, churches, creeds, sacrifices, and all tears of penitents since the world began. If there be a great God of mercy who is there painted in the heart of man the never-fading instinct to sin—chattering away from right to what is always wrong—why this sin inheritance in every human soul? If there be a great God of tenderness why the endless grief with which the world is filled—the poverty, want and destitution; suffering men, women and children; pest of hunger, disease and crime; the cries, the groans and the sobs of the friendless—why all of this in a beautiful world made and governed by a spotless God?

Our poet of the marshes and the sea never questioned the orthodoxy of a fundamental religion which afforded a wonderful world with its wonderful beauty and teaching. He gazed on the beauty of the external world; the green hills, the dainty summer, the wood music and the laughing sea;—then he looked within—at the beauty of the soul and found a trace of man's kinship to God—a trace of immortality. Faint echoes of this he heard in loud, mysterious music; he felt it and lived it in the single love which holds two hearts as one. Like the still lagoon, cut off from its mother, the sea, hears the thunder of waves upon the distant shores, and feels its imprisonment and separation, so his soul was cognizant of its kinship to immortality and the vision was an clear as never to obscure the moral beauty of his verse.

But there was another side to the life of Sidney Lanier which made him the most tolerant of men and the bravest under the most trying conditions. Great moral strength and the most catholic spirit formed a major part of his wonderful nature. This side of Lanier is clearly told in one of his letters in which he says:

"The man who is to write or to read the poetry of the future, yet he shall be strong enough to handle hell; he shall play ball with the earth, and abet his stature may be no more than a boy's he shall still be taller than the great redwoods of the California; his height shall be the height of great resolution, and love and faith, and beauty and knowledge, and sublimation; his head shall be forever among the stars."

There is the breadth and scope of the man's outlook, which ample spirit he has so beautifully expressed in the famous passage from "The Marshes of Glynn."

Tolerant plains, that suffer the sea and the rains and the sun,
Ye spread and span, like the catholic man, who hath mightily won
God out of knowledge and good out of infinite pain
And sight out of blindness and purity out of a stain.

Sidney Lanier's spirit was the spirit of restlessness, that clear mark of genius, which the lives of so many poets have verified. Shelly, Keats and Byron, Rossetti, William Morris and our own immortal Poe all for his power and were helpless to resist. First a teacher, then the law lecturer, an art, writer of a guide book on Florida, finally a settled musician and a writer of songs, carry out the main trend and experience in his activities, through a poverty stricken life of many disappointments.

But above all disappointments a clear note of hope rang out above the din of earthly noise and fixed his eye and ear on a kind of realized immortality. This trend of hopefulness, under the duress of financial trial, we find running through all of his letters, especially those to his wife. Somehow, amid the deepest gloom, he was able to see a ray of light ahead. I sometimes think Lanier was cognizant of his poetic and musical talent and that this knowledge, unconsciously, lifted him upon a plane akin to immortality.

When God made childhood he took of the sunshine and the clear light of stars, the coloring of flowers and their perfume, the faith of all ages and built a creature of birds. Into these he wove a soul of love and innocence and trust and behold we have the creator's finest work.

The owner of the marshes was never a child, a child in faith and trust and innocence, and, withal, a child in hopefulness, even amid the pitiless gloom of life into which he was so often drawn.

Stringed Bands Are More Than Autos

A STRINGED band that can play the latest Hawaiian love songs is necessary now in the pursuit of a wife.

A few years ago, candy in 5-pound quantities sufficed. Then an automobile became an essential. Now, Milton Reed, who has played professional baseball in the big leagues and finished last season in Atlanta, has introduced the custom of never, unless attended by a band.

With the troubadour at his back, he rings the bell; and as the door opens, says: "Here we are."

The owner of a seven-passenger car could do no more than merely step across the threshold, at the same time murmuring:

Milton Reed stays where he is and waves a hand to the musicians. They play a prologue that combines all the woe of a best and happiest greetings—the very apotheosis of the old: "How are you?"

Then, he enters; and, instead of a tact remark concerning the weather, he nods back at the musicians, and they break into a light, gossipy air beyond all introductory words.

It is time then to tell of the mutual friends who they know. He raises one hand and the musicians begin a rhapsody from one of the lighter operas; and all the unnecessary exchange of undesired information is avoided.

So runs the evening through, with the musicians there to furnish substitute for the commonplace of mere talk.

Not to the pitfall of banqueting is to be absolutely an old-fashioned wooer.

George, the 50-50 Horse

GEORGE is a horse. He pulls the water-wagon in Athens, and the Athens Herald says he's the best-natured horse in the world. But he has his peculiarities.

George likes bananas, chewing gum, tobacco, and apples. If the driver tries a chew, George stops, and he won't go a step farther until he has his share. It's the same way about apples and soft drinks.

It's George's opinion that he does just as much work as the driver and is entitled to just as large a part of the good things of life. He doesn't intend to pull the water-wagon unless the driver sees fit to give him.

"We tried to find out his age the other day," says the Herald, "but George was too modest. We asked John Short, and John said the horse was as old as he was. But we don't believe it's possible for a horse to live that long."

AS OMAR

Under the moon she swore her love for Omar, and morning saw them on their different ways—Shireen to the harem of the Shah, Omar into the wide world.

The years passed, eighteen long, long years. They had brought with them sorrow. Harems are strict at times. Shireen had been thrown into the desert because the girl born to her was not the Shah's.

Always in her wandering she sought tidings of Omar. He had settled in the busy city of Maishapur. There he made tents at odd times and poems through the good hours of the day and the evening.

With that half-fantastic, half fairy-tale freedom of Eastern stories, the play brings the 3-year-old daughter of Shireen into Omar's keeping, and he raises her as his own daughter.

One fanciful instance follows fast on the heels of another. Omar falls into prison through a kind deed done to a Christian. But good fortune almost equals the bad. He learns that the little girl of three years taken into his house as adopted child, is his own by blood. And he is happy no matter what his fate be.

It seems until the very last he is to be done to death (though what lagging fancy to let the story conclude so.) All is ready for the end, then Shireen, still beautiful after all the years, finds the way for his release. They are reunited. They are happy.

The sketch given here is a bare, colorless, bone and sinew affair. It leaves out all the picturesqueness, the poetry, the glamor, and the size; the glint of the moon, the streets, the mosques, the rose-garden air, the ad-

A play can be foretold and explained. But such a spectacle as "Omar the Tent Maker" needs a poetry of phrase to cause conception of its extent and its effect.

Lines from the "Rubaiyat" will have their place in the play:

"A Book of Verses underneath the Bough,
A Jug of wine, a loaf of bread, and thou
Beside me singing in the wilderness—
Oh, wilderness were paradise enow."

THE story of Omar the Tent Maker, is the story of Omar, the poet. It tells in purple and gold of his love and his wanderings. Of all the season's spectacles at the theater this will be the most gorgeous—this play made up of a poem and the half-mythical life of a poet, this imaginative biography of Omar Khayyam, writer of the "Rubaiyat."

The play begins with a prologue, and it runs through three acts to an epilogue; really it is a prologue and four acts. And to equip the stage for Omar's three days at the Atlanta theater, beginning Monday, four carloads of scenery (a circus outfit) have arrived.

Ninety folk are in the cast, and to give some further idea of its hugeness, $42,000 was spent on the production.

It is the story of Omar Khayyam done with a gorgeous touch, and given the name of "Omar the Tent Maker." Because of a common atmosphere of the east, it recalls "Kismet," but it is said to be done with much more splendor.

Through each scene moves the imagery, and the pearls and the roses, or else the beggar and his rags, that seem hardly themselves beyond the Arabian Nights. It is color put on with great thickness and high tints. But harmonizing and holding all together is excellent taste.

G. B. Post and Louise Grayler

"Omar, the Tent Maker," as it will be told at the Atlanta theater, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, begins with the story of Omar Khayyam come to study the Holy Word of the Prophet from the lips of Imam Mowaffak. And we see the picture of Omar making love songs, as the others on their lessons, of Omar in the taverns as the others pray in the mosque.

One thing held him in the Holy Mowaffak's rose-scented garden. The daughter of the master was dark-haired and lovely, and she was called Shireen. And thus the days passed and there was happiness and dreams, and then, the bolt from Heaven.

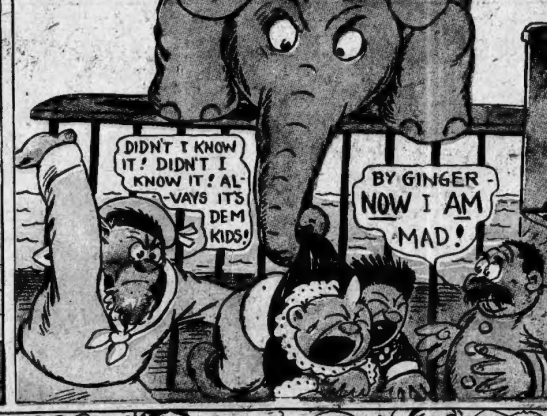

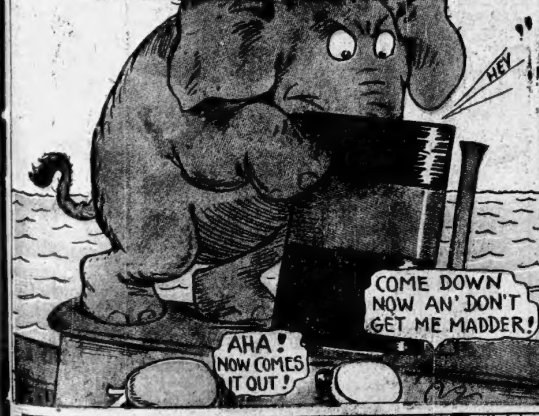

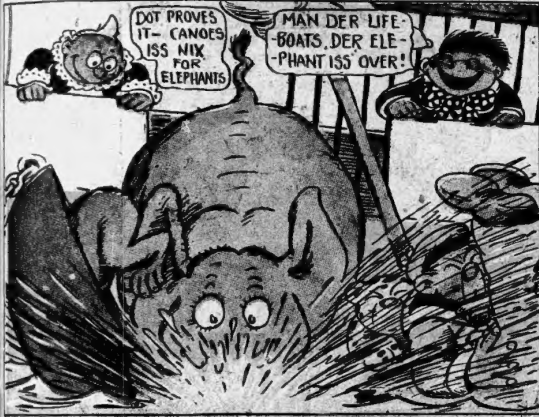

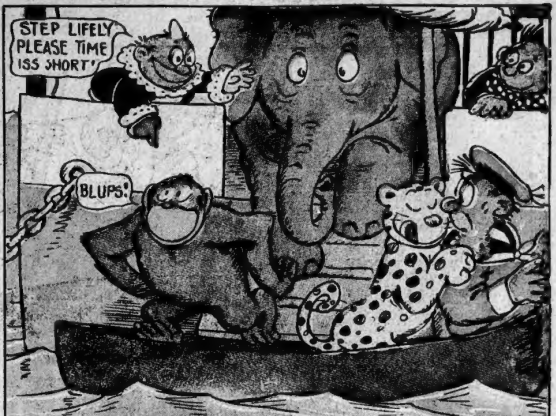

The Shah of Shahs had sent for the beautiful Shireen. She was to be one of his many wives. She must obey.
