A. A. Curtis, of 558 East Hunter street, is held by the police without a promise of bond for running into an automobile and killing Samuel Goldstein, a well known real estate dealer, at Washington and Crumley streets Friday afternoon. He will be arraigned before the city recorder Saturday afternoon at 12:30 o'clock.

The accident happened when Mr. Goldstein was stepping from the car to go to his home, 215 Washington street, for lunch. It was witnessed by several persons standing on the platform of the street car and on the street in the vicinity. Curtis is said to have been driving a new car and the street car was in his automobile when the accident happened. Mr. Goldstein stepped from the car and was struck by the automobile.

The automobile, without apparently making any speed, ran into the rear of the car and dashed him to the pavement. A fracture of the skull and internal injuries were sustained. Passengers on the street car and the street car driver were unharmed. An ambulance and sent the victim of the accident to the Atlanta hospital, where he died a short while after his arrival. The man was unconscious when picked up and never regained his senses before death.

Following the accident, it was given to the police to stop the machine in time to prevent the collision. He denied to Assistant Chief of Police J. L. Jett that he had driven the car. He drove his car about a block after running into the real estate man and then got out and came back to offer what assistance he could.

It was the first time that he had driven the car this year. Curtis said he was driving the car when he was showing it to a prospective customer. He said that when he heard the car slow down until he heard the collision, he drove his car about a block after running into the real estate man and then got out and came back to offer what assistance he could.

That Dangerous Cotton Tax.

It is reliably, though unofficially, reported at Washington that Democratic leaders in the Senate have practically agreed to effect a change in that section of the tariff bill which places a tax of fifty cents a bale on contracts for future cotton delivery.

Business men everywhere, and particularly in the South, will hope that there may be not merely a change but an outright abolition of this unjust and dangerous provision. The proposed tax has no rightful place in a tariff measure. It will accomplish no worthy end.

The effect of this useful system is obviously toward maintaining a fair price for cotton, for the dealer compelled to incur all the risks of his business with no safeguard.

Hope for Bird Protection.

Everyone interested in the world-wide movement for the protection of valuable birds is pleased to learn of the brightened outlook for helpful legislation of this character at the present session of Congress.

But when this particular provision of the tariff measure was taken under consideration by the Senate finance committee, it was so amended as practically to destroy its usefulness.

When the supporters of the bird protection movement realized what had happened, however, they redoubled their efforts and brought to bear such a pressure of intelligent opinion that the Senate has referred the ill-advantaged amendment to the committee for reconsideration; and now there is reason to hope that the amendment will be stricken out.

This may be regarded as a minor issue and, as compared with the larger ends of tariff revision, it is. It should not be permitted to encumber or delay the essential purposes of the bill.

Open-Air Schools.

The international congress on school hygiene which is now in session at Buffalo, N. Y., makes the interesting suggestion that the United States government place at the disposal of the various States "as many of the discarded battleships and cruisers as possible to be anchored according to their size in rivers or at the seashore and to be utilized by the respective communities for open-air schools for children of hospital sanatoria for adults."

Whether such a plan would be thoroughly practical or not, it is a plan which would be thoroughly practical if the Italian government has already allotted three of its outdoor war vessels to this purpose.

SAVING THE BABIES

By Frederic J. Haskin

The great interest in eugenics which is sweeping over the country has developed an interest in everything pertaining to the production of healthy babies.

The object of this restaurant is to place within the reach of the expectant mother of that vicinity the means of keeping herself in good health while her child is born.

According to recently compiled reports made under the direction of Miss Mabel Parker, who for five years has been operating, chiefly through her own energies, a milk station for babies on the west side of New York City, north of 100th street.

These figures clearly prove that the efforts to save babies through the use of the National Children's bureau, fully 35 per cent of the deaths of children under one year of age are due to the fact that the mother is unable to nurse.

It cannot give the degree of nourishment demanded for the future welfare of the child. So generally is this need recognized that the National Children's bureau has issued a pamphlet which sets forth the diet now given definite instruction upon this subject.

In a dietary list for prospective mothers lately issued by the New York state board of health, soups and fresh fish of all kinds are mentioned as the first foods to be eaten sparingly and only once a day.

Paris was the first city to open a free restaurant for expectant mothers. The need of the French nation for such a service has led the government to make every effort, not only to increase the number of such restaurants, but also to provide for the production of strong, healthy children.

In Germany a nursing mother can receive proper provision of food at the expense of the state, and a number of institutions will provide her with food under government authority and with small formalities, for months before confinement.

In every city are mothers who have money enough to provide themselves with proper food, but not the time or inclination to prepare it for themselves.

It is in the United States this work is comparatively new, although much attention is being given to it.

The Conning Tower

By FRANKLIN P. ADAMS

A type of verse too often seen in print, a kind of verse I perfectly detect, is that wherein the bard with feeble pen Proclaims how easy 'tis to spiel his stint.

Now I who find no trouble, none at all, in piling cononances Ossa-high (These very lines took ninety seconds flat, What even in my talk am wont to fall Into the fully-rhymed periods—why, I Would never think of writing, verse like that!

Discussion in Sennate the other day ran on the high cost of tennis balls. It was suggested by Mrs. Inez Haynes Gillmore that Luther Burbank cross the rubber ball with the cottonwood tree, the orchard to be in proximity to a court. It is Old Bill Irwin's idea, however, that a touch of pine might give the plant a fine mushroom-like growth, address Sam Merwin, "cross-court it with a peach, for mixed doubles."

Before I start my avowed sobriety I must ask the reader to understand me. I am a hardened drinker of soft drinks. I am a social drinker, you might say. In my bouts with Percy Marshall I have a world of speed, but no control. And I am writing this under my physician's advice—the humane physician he is, too. So I call this a human document, trusting you will grab my meaning. It is humorous, a bit of wordplay, I made it but to prove I could. I am not naturally or spontaneously comic.

I will remember the first time I got soft-drunk. It was seven years old. It was Dotty day in Chicago and another boy and I had a lemonade stand in front of our house, as the route to the track was that way. We brewed eight gallons of the heavenly stuff and sold six. That left a gallon for each of us. My partner could not drink over a quart, but I drank the rest with ease. It was the talk of our block and for some weeks I was almost as big a hero as Bob Garretts who had been first from school. Beyond a soothing from my mother because I had furnished the sugar and lemons and my partner had supplied the water for the stand, I had no other recollection of the event. As a matter of fact, I thought I was getting the better of the bargain—the water seemed so much bulkier than the sugar and lemon.

Speaking of diaphanous gown, a "Telegram" want ad is for a visible typewriter, late model.

A railroad man of our acquaintance says he has one. "She's 'n't visible until about ten-thirty in the morning, which," he says, "is late enough."

Illustrator's Arise Aid. Sir: Mr. John, who helps out Owen Johnson in "McClure's," illustrates the gentle scene of the story with a girl wearing a hat, though the story has the girl without a hat. In the Saturday Evening Post Old Bill offers a picture of a man at a debutante's dance, in a sack suit, standing by a cello, etc., though Corra Harris says it's a vase of roses.

Sir: As to these, now, illustrators—page 14, chapter XIX, "The After-Fried Log," is "If you behead that beard?" But May Wilson Preston, picturing the said behead, in the illustration in the Saturday Evening Post, has him as clean-shaven as the ad for a shaving soap. The name of the hair restorant "The Heroic of Cleanliness" I get down, but data on the length of time it takes to grow a beard.

"WHOM ARE YOU?" SAID CYRIL. (From the Boston Herald.) The Braves get First Baseman Schmidt and Pitcher Jack Quinn. What's mostly bothering them is whom will be given in return to Rochester.

"Rivety Rivety-ty." It's nearly twelve o'clock And we've listened straight since half-past eight To "Rivety-rivety-ty." A Maine motorloger lumps this sign in Carratuck: "Spongesack and Shoes Repaired." A Brooklyn clothing store's window ad suggests the ultimate.

"Closing out—Entire Line." Elihu Root in a recent speech declared that after all it said and done it is not governments but peoples that must maintain peace, and that war will never be done away with "so long as people fail to exercise proper self-restraint and the courtesy that the peace of the world demands." In America must learn to recognize the peace of the world as a policy of peace with insight. We cannot continue a policy of peace with insight.

There is much good sense in that. Peace between nations, like peace between individuals, depends upon sympathy and understanding, and these come from the practice of forbearance, kindness, courtesy. As individuals resent injury to their honor and integrity so do nations, and so have of times been injured by the selfishness and the narrowness of the inferiority and that all the virtues are not inherent in one country and in one age. Peace must rest finally upon a sense of brotherhood, and this depends upon recognition of the civilities and decencies of human intercourse.—St. Paul Preceptor Press.

UP AGAINST IT

By DR. FRANK GRANT

It is a terse Americanism, and expresses in solid, idiomatic language a solid "utter fact." "Up Against It."

There's an army of them right in this city, an army of soldiers that battle for sustenance, as other fighting in the last ditch, and saw and talked with one the other day. She was a mere child, then twenty-two. Her clothes were not new. Her neck was thin, her cheeks thin, her eyes, it seemed, too large.

"I am still trying to get a job," she said. "Oh! I'm pretty good. I have always had a strength as I had. You see, when I don't eat regularly it tells on me. Where the Salvation Army's done some days I only get one meal. And then I walk from where I room to the business places downtown. It's a long way. I get awful tired. My landlady is awful good to me. She's waiting till I get my job. Gee! It seems to be up against it."

He had come to the city to study music. Oh! the heart-breaking condition of them that hope to live by their music! For every singer in a church choir, twenty to thirty on a Sunday, twenty stand by for the place. For every artist in the theater chorus, twenty have been turned away to tramp further. For every clerk in the stores there are three in line waiting, an against it.

It is the thing line of civilization. It is the thin red line we have thrown out to meet the common enemy, Hunger. Late at night I have seen them on the benches in the parks, sitting with a newspaper over the knee. I have always talked with a newspaper. They are so much eager to approach than successful people. I have always talked with them. They are so much man. Their souls seem more visible than the souls of the prosperous.

When the Salvation Army's drums are beating and horns blowing they congregate. That is my favorite church. Surely if the Messiah is anywhere He may be found there.

You can see them in the saloons. A glass of beer can be got for five cents. It is the little bit of light in the darkness of the night. They are not all tramps. There are mothers up against it, holding babies, looking all night into the darkness, as if into the eyes of Faustus.

There are hard-working fathers who have plodded all day searching for what means more to them than the salvation—a job.

There are boys, for whom human fingers lie in wait. There are girls, for whom human fingers lie in wait. There are little children. I saw two, a little boy and a little girl, sitting on a bench, looking for scraps of food through a garbage can, looking for scraps of food. Those who have never been up against it do not know what a tragic world this is.

Motion Picture Dresses

(Answers, London.) Every frequenter of the motion picture theater must have been struck, at some time or another, by the luxuriance of the stage setting of most of the society dramas—the magnificence of the decoration of the richness of the furnishing, and the costliness of the dresses worn by the performers.

Few, however, have ever had a clear conception of the vast cost of these things appreciate the pains taken by the big film producing companies to get the best of everything.

Take, for instance, the costumes of the principle actresses. The capriciousness of the stage setting of most of the "creations" in military and modes. When Miss Miriam Nesbit and Miss Mary Fuller were last out with their wardrobe company, they paid a visit to Paris for the purpose of purchasing a stock of such things for future Edison production, and in two days shopping in the city they had expended more than $100,000.

Miss Lottie Grissom, the Lubin star actress, recently played in a film necessitated no fewer than fourteen changes of costumes, each costing on an average about $75, and she needs, when on tour, "over a trunk for her wardrobe."

Miss Gene Gaudier wears one set of furs in the Edison pictures that cost $4,000, and she has other sets almost equal in value. Miss Ada Nelson is employed with being the most expensively dressed actress in the pictures. Frequently her costumes in the pictures are in which the specialties will cost as much as $300 apiece.

It is to be thought that as the actual dresses worn by the performers are not seen by the public, but only the photographic representations of them, that only one month more of imitation stuff would do as well as the real articles.

But, as a matter of fact, this is far from being the case. The reverse holds good. To get a really first-class photograph, first-class "properties" must be provided.

I scarcely studied folks at all; I just sort of judged better. Think and thin and short and tall. But since misfortune's got my las I'm looking deeper than the skin. And, while I don't much care to brag, I'm fair at judging what's within.

You'll never see me try to touch A high silk tie for 50 cents; I stand more chance to get so much From some one's curly fall or dent. And as for getting handsome, why, Give me a battered back street place And I'll pass rows of mansions by— They give no chance to run your face.

In other days I used to look Much more, I think to clothes than folk. (Just as if trumpet vines had to bloom From some one's curly fall or dent.) I've learned you can't gauge sympathy From some one's curly fall or dent. The meek and lowly folk for me— The folks that's felt misfortune's lash!

POULTRY, PIGEONS AND LIVE STOCK

Scarcity of Eggs and Poultry

BOTH eggs and poultry are probably scarcer this season than has ever been known before in the South...

The high price of meat throughout the United States has caused a great demand for both poultry and eggs...

Every early hatched pullet that can be had should be forced and put in laying condition as early as possible...

The man who has a large number of fowls to sell will find himself with something worth having...

Therefore it will have some effect on the market, and the people who have sufficient quantity of fowls to take care of their own needs...

Little do we realize or stop to think what it means to have a short crop of poultry and eggs...

With a big cotton crop in sight, at a great price, the poultry will be had for good fowls this winter...

Yours very truly,
